As I said at Nasik, I fail to understand the shuddhi, tabligh and proselytization as they are carried on today. I cannot understand a man changing the religion of his forefathers at the instance of another. But that is my personal conviction. No one need stop shuddhi, tabligh or proselytization at my instance. My own duty is clear. I must go on purifying myself and hoping that only thereby would I react on my surroundings. It is my unshakable conviction that penance and self-purification are the only means for the protection of Hinduism. Do any amount of sangathan, only let not that sangathan be of the evil forces, let it be only of the forces of good...

You say I am partial to the Mussalmans. So be it, though the Mussalmans do not admit it. But my religion will not suffer by even an iota by reason of my partiality. I shall have to answer my God and my Maker if I give anyone less than his due, but I am sure that He will bless me if He knows that I gave someone more than his due. I ask you to understand me. If my hand or heart has done anything more than was anyone’s due, you should be proud of it, rather than deplore it. It should be a matter of pride to you as Hindus to think that there was amongst you at least one mad Gandhi who was not only just to the Mussalmans, but even went out of his way in giving them more than their due. Hinduism is replete with instances of tolerance, sacrifice and forgiveness. Think of the sacrifice of the Pandavas, think of the forgiveness of Yudhishtira. Should it be a matter for sorrow for you, that there is at least one man who has tried to carry out the precept of Hinduism to the letter?...

If there is anything in the charge that you are wearing khadi just to please me, and for show, I say for God’s sake do not do so. I am not a Mahatma. If I am one, the Mahatmaship is but the expression of some shakti. Pray do nothing for my sake. I shuddered when someone proposed that though I was silent I should exhibit myself for darshan. I assure you the words ‘darshan’ and ‘Mahatma’ stink in my nostrils. I am unworthy of giving darshan. Even like you I am a vessel of clay, liable to all the affections and passions that flesh is heir to. How can I be fit to give you darshan? One and only one darshan is necessary, viz., that of the nameless, formless, indefinable Absolute. Try, if you can, to see Him everywhere, in a poor man’s hut as in a palace, in a latrine as well as in a temple. Have, if you will, the darshan of khadi and visualize its immense potentialities. Dismiss the mortal frame called Gandhi from your mind. Its darshan will be of no avail.

---

1 Power

Young India, 10-3-1927

127. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

[Before February 21, 1927]

Haste is waste. Let me do a few places thoroughly rather than many places indifferently. You will have to remember that I have to do continuous travelling throughout the year. My capacity and energy are limited. I must therefore have three forty-five minutes for three meals, one forty-five minutes for bath, etc., and two forty-five minutes for a quiet walk in the morning and evening. I must be made to retire at 9 p.m., and I must have three hours for attending to correspondence and editing, and I must have half an hour for sleep during day. If you can give me these hours, I fancy that I shall not only bear the strain of travelling but go on almost indefinitely and shall improve in health.

The Bombay Chronicle, 22-2-1927

128. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised

SHOLAPUR,

February 21, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter from Delhi. I note your remarks about Guru-

---

1 Sight of a person, place or thing considered holy
2 Released on February 21, 1927 from Madras by the Free Press
kuls. I have not yet [got] Ramachandra’s letter. I am not at all sorry you have gone to the Gurukul. The Gurukuls are an honest attempt. I want you to discuss these things fully with Ramdevji and others. You will influence them when you speak to them with a loving heart. We must measure people with their own measure and see how far they come up to it. You do not need this caution. But seeing that you have set a rigorous standard for yourself and you are in a strange environment, I am anxious for you not to lose your balance even by a hair’s breadth.

I have too much pressure today to write more.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.]

Satis Babu has lost his eldest son. Write to him care Khadi Pratishthan, Sodepur, Calcutta.

26th Belgaum 8th Bombay
5th Bombay 9th-14th Ashram
6th, 7th Akola (Manilal’s marriage)

From the original: C.W. 5206. Courtesy: Mirabehn

129. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

Monday [February 21, 1927]

CHI. MANILAL,

I have your letter. I do not want Sushila to make a resolve; I do not know her that well. But you should acquaint yourself with her people. They are a cultured family. All of them wear khadi. I agree it is difficult for you to wear khadi. It will not be difficult for Sushila as long as she keeps up her Indian style with sari and other things. A presentable khaddar dress can be had at a reasonable price. People dressed in khadi are to be found now even in distant Edinburgh.

1 From the reference to Manilal’s wedding and the message to Panditji in this and the succeeding two letters, it appears that all the three were written on the same date.
It is not my attempt to make recluses of you or Sushila, but I certainly intend to make you disciplined householders. If I wanted to make you monks I would not have bothered about getting you married. I would not disapprove if you sought your pleasure within limits. In spite of all this you are free and should act as you please; I do not want to exercise the least pressure.

Jamnalalji has not turned a recluse, only he has given up a number of pleasures. You are quite grown-up and I do not look upon you as a child.

I have been taking steps after consulting you about everything. Do let me know if you wish for any change in the marriage ceremony or for some merriment. I have suggested and acted as I thought fit but I want to be as agreeable to you as I can while following my own code of conduct. I know marriage is a turning point in the life of a young man and woman. I am also aware that parents should not interfere in it. Do not think yourself to be under any kind of pressure. Do I need to be more frank? Do I have to give any more reassurance?

Nanabhai has invited Panditji, so he should come with you. Both of you can meet me by taking the Tapti Valley route; thereby you can also save some time. But do what both of you find convenient.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1119. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

130. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

Monday [February 21, 1927]\(^1\)

BHAI NANABHAI,

I have your letter. The wedding may take place at 10-30. Evening would never suit me.

Why should you offer a dress to Manilal? The dress he will have on, won’t that do? However, I would not hurt your feelings.

Tell Chi. Sushila that she must cultivate the habit of writing letters. Once she starts writing she will not be short of topics.

---

2. Vide the preceding item.
I have written for Panditji’s coming over.

You need not send biscuits from there. I have collected plenty of them on my way. Vijayalakshmi may pack a tin for me when I reach there.

Does she still want to have Manilal stay with her for some days? If she does I would send him there a few days ahead or he may stay on for some days after the marriage. You already have my tour programme.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1121. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

131. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

Monday [February 21, 1927]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have your letter.

For the present take such work from Parasram as he can do.

Ask Panditji to be ready. He should take a train from Sabarmati on the 5th morning to save time and money, and join me at Jalgaon by taking the Tapti Valley route. It will do if Manilal also takes the same train. But they may, if they want to, travel via Bombay. Panditji should write to Nanabhai about the preparations to be made. The marriage ceremony is to be performed on Sunday at 10-30 a.m.

I was under the impression that Ganesh’s Christian name was John. Because of this and because I had forgotten the name Ganesh, I wrote John.¹ Give him this new letter in which I refer to him by the name of Ganesh. And if the fellow can take a joke and would not mind his name being forgotten, give him the one which carries the name of John too. Otherwise destroy that letter.

Now I do not have to worry about Rukhi.

I feel we must not let the common mess close, though those who want to, may drop out of it. Self-Cooking and common mess must he carried on together.

We are bound to devote the minimum amount necessary for the tannery and the [water] lift. The funds for cow-protection have to be used for the tannery. I remember a resolution to this effect adopted at Wardha. If not we will pass one on the 11th. We must take up that activity which involves no risk of loss.

For the lift too we shall collect the amount needed. But I shall decide about it after I reach there on the 9th.

The amount from Mirabehn comes in regularly. All of it is to be spent at the Ashram. Since a year is over, we can now utilize the amount. Only you have to be careful that we do not suffer any loss on account of an error in accounts or some other slip.

Are you now in a position to meet the demand for lifts and to set them up? I have deliberately omitted to publish anything [about the lift]. Write to me if you want it to be publicized so that I can prepare an article for the next issue. Let me know what I may write. Have you now trained people to work the lift? I believe I must mention the minimum weight of the animal that should go with each. Why can we not use an old buffalo? Why not a good or pliant bull? There should be no error in our calculations. I am afraid, we might have to depute our men in all places for quite some time. But it will be all right if you have given thought to all this.

The same applies to hides and skins. Let me have a copy of the pamphlet about this. I will publish it after examining it.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

A special letter for the Ashram is enclosed.

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 7762. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

132. LETTER TO ASHRAM MEMBERS

Silence Day, February 21, 1927

I see from the letters I get that attendance at the prayer is irregular and thin. A general slackness is also creeping into the spinning.

Spinning and prayer are the two beacons for us. If we do not keep an eye on them, we will be able to do no credit either to the Ashram or to ourselves. It is one thing not to do them after deciding right from the beginning that we would not engage in either of them, and another to omit doing them after undertaking them. In my opinion, he who approves of neither can achieve nothing at the Ashram, since we regard them both as essential religious activities. Those who, while approving of them, grow lax in their practice will develop a general laxity. If we wish to learn to insist on truth and to experience the strength it gives, we must never omit to perform the two aforesaid rites. Both require faith on our part. To a certain extent we can adduce rational arguments in support of both, but in the last resort faith alone can satisfy us. One sometimes feels that nothing is gained by attendance at prayers, that one is unable to concentrate attention, one feels a sense of lethargy, and so on. These things cannot be reasoned out; they can be dispelled only by faith. The Gita recommends faith alone when it speaks of dispassionate action. An effort is never wasted. It is an act of faith to believe in the ultimate triumph of truth in the face of failures, and to follow truth dispassionately. We should have the same attitude to spinning as to prayer. It is not for me to calculate how this much spinning would benefit me or the country. One may not see any immediate benefit from spinning but one must stick to one’s belief that it is going to bring some benefit. The point is to learn to stick to our resolve. The two external and common activities of prayer and spinning are likely to develop this tenacity. If we are lax in these activities, when shall we learn to stand firm on truth?

I therefore appeal to all, young and old, not to neglect these two activities.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8053. Courtesy: Raojibhai N. Patel

133. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

SHOLAPUR,

Monday, Maha Vad 5 [February 21, 1927]

SISTERS,

I have your letter.

I find that carding and other work has been going on well. If you persevere in the same way, you will make good progress within a short time.

The effect of regular work is like that of regular food. It nourishes the soul. But, even as over-eating spoils one’s health, so excessive work at a time wears out one’s spirit.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
We are in Sholapur today. It is a big city. There are five mills here. The biggest of them belongs to Morarji Gokuldas. His grandson Shantikumar is still a youth so far as age goes, but he has a great soul. He loves khadi and wears only khadi. I do not mean that this is his greatest virtue. He is sympathetic, generous, humble, devoted to God and truthful. He has the virtue that his name indicates, i.e., he is calmness incarnate. I am very glad that such a jewel amongst men is found in a multi-millionaire family. I was not acquainted with his wife. Yesterday, while I took my meal, I made her sit down by me and talked to her to my heart’s content. I suggested to her that she should take to public work like her husband. I cited all of you as an example to her. Was I right in doing so or was it only my conceit? You alone know whether all of you are devoted to service. Anyhow that is what escaped my lips. It is up to you to justify my statement.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3640

134. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

[February 21, 1927]

CHI. JAMNALAL,

I have your letter. I am returning herewith both the letters from Ghanshyamdas. Because I have faith in his word I am not afraid that he would marry again.

I want you to come to Belgaum on 25-26 and also to present yourself at the Ashram on the 11th. There is much work to be done at both the places. It would be worth the while if you could stay at the Ashram from the 9th to 13th. You may also stay with me at the time of the Gurukul [Convocation] when Ghanshyamdas too proposes to be present. It depends more on your own convenience in view of the other things you have to attend to.

What is Kamala doing? I am worried on her account. This does not mean you too should start worrying. She could perhaps settle down if we could arrange for her education. Let her learn as much English as she likes.

\footnote{Vide the succeeding item.}

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2882

135. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Silence Day [February 21, 1927]¹

CHI. ANASUYABHEN,

I expected a letter from you but there is none. I had also expected a letter from Miss Haussding but there is none from her either. I am a little worried about her.

We are in Sholapur today. Shantikumar is looking after us very well. It is getting quite hot here.

Jamnabehn has arrived from Barsi (Bardoli). There is no time for writing more.

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 32833

136. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

SHOLAPUR,
Monday [February 21, 1927]²

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

I have two letters from you. Because I trust your word I am not afraid of your reconsidering it. I trust you also in the matter of the Assembly. But in view of the prevailing atmosphere there it is difficult to remain absolutely independent.

On the question of sangathan I hold the same views that I have expressed. Organization is certainly not the remedy for the case, ¹ From the contents it is evident that the letter was written on this date, a silence day, when Gandhiji was at Sholapur.

² Gandhiji was in Sholapur on this date.
particulars of which you have sent to me. Here the remedy is either tapascharya or individual courage. As long as we remain cowards no wonder our women fall into the hands of the lecherous. I know of a Hindu prince in whose territory no young girl was safe and the husband and the father used to be helpless. But then this is a complicated problem. Please do come to the Gurukul if you can. I wish to have you with me for a fortnight; we cannot dispose of such matters in a day. In the meanwhile whatever my advice do what your inner voice bids you.

Blessings to your son and daughter-in-law.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Place</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>22 Gulbarga</td>
<td>4 Poona</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23 Pandharpur</td>
<td>5 Bombay</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24-25 District Satara</td>
<td>6-7 Akola</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26 Belgaum</td>
<td>8 Bombay</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27—March 3 Ratnagiri</td>
<td>9-14 Ashram</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

From the Hindi original: C.W. 6144. Courtesy: G. D. Birla
ON TOUR,
GULBARGA,

February 22, 1927

DEAR SIR PURUSHOTTAMDAS,

As it appears to be more convenient for you to handle English letters I am sending you this in English.

Though I have myself yet written nothing about currency matters, perhaps you are aware that I have been closely following the agitation, that is, as closely as I can, in spite of incessant travelling. I have been studying the question carefully and carrying on an active correspondence with experts chiefly Messrs Madon and Wadia. The latter has sent me a draft bill which I understand he has circulated among the members of the Assembly. Will you please let me know whether that Bill meets your approval?

If a pure gold standard is established, free mints opened, and a Reserve Bank established, does not the question of ratio disappear altogether? Will not things right themselves? Whereas if the ratio is fixed at 1 to 15 and all questions about gold, currency, mints and Reserve Bank shelved or decided in accordance with the recommendation of the Commission, will it not be worse than the existing state of things?

Yours sincerely,

M. K. G.

SIR PURUSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS

BOMBAY

From a copy: C.W. 7825. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

1 Member of Hilton-Young Commission, the Royal Commission on Indian Currency and Finance
2 Against the fixation of the rupee at 1s 6d gold (as recommended by the Hilton-Young Commission) instead of at 1s 4d gold (as proposed in the addressee’s dissenting minute)
139. LETTER TO B. F. MADON
GULBARGA,
February 22, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your latest letter for which I thank you. What do you say to this letter? At the time of replying please return the enclosure.

I note what you say about Mr. Shroff.

Do you not think that there is considerable force in what Prof. Wadia says, namely, that the ratio question should not be separated from the permanent question of standard; or do you say that since there is a statutory definition of the rupee in terms of gold, we should be entirely satisfied if the ratio is satisfactorily settled and the other recommendations\(^1\) of the Commission either shelved or given effect to just as they are. In other words, if you had the choice what will you do?

Have the ratio fixed at 1 to 15 and the status quo retained in all other respects?

Or the ratio fixed at 1 to 50 and gold Bullion standard with the Reserve Bank mentioned in the Commission established?

Or a pure gold standard established, mints reopened for coining gold mohors freely and a central bank given such as Prof. Wadia suggests, leaving the ratio undisturbed by any statutory action?

Have you read Messrs Wadia and Joshi’s draft Bill?

From a microfilm: S.N. 12900

140 LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR
GULBARGA,
Maha Vad 6 [February 22, 1927]\(^2\)

PRIEST OF DHEDS AND BHILS,

Please do come, and do bring Dheds and Bhangis along with

\(^1\) Embodied in Gold Standard and Reserve Bank of India Bill introduced in the Legislative Assembly on January 25, 1927

\(^2\) In 1927, Gandhiji was in Gulbarga on this date.
you. Please inform Jugatram or whoever is to be informed so that he may make the necessary arrangements. If they carry their food and bed with them as also a lota and a rope and are prepared to sleep on the ground, they need not give any prior intimation.

We have just reached Gulbarga by the train we took at Sholapur. And I have got some time to write letters; I am stealing a few moments to indulge in a little fun with you, and also finish off some work by the way.

Hail, Thakkar Bapa, high priest of the lowly ones!

Whatever you would have from BAPU

[PS.]

‘Bapu’ is certainly better than ‘Mahatma’.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2711

141. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

Tuesday, [February 22, 1927]

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA.

I have your letter. I cannot decide about your competence to work in Jamshedpur. I have no experience of your knowledge of the English language. If you are confident of your ability for this work, you should go to Jamshedpur, look about yourself, and then make the final decision. As to the Ashram, you can come over at any time you please. There is plenty of work to do. But then you must be prepared to run around anywhere, and must also acquire sufficient experience of the technique of spinning. How far have you studied English?

Blessings from BAPU

[PS.]

Tour Programme:

24-25 Satara  5 Bombay
26 Belgaum  6-7 Akola
27-March 3 District Ratnagiri  8 Bombay

1 A vessel, without handle or spout, for carrying water

2 From Gandhiji’s tour programme
4 Poona 9-14 Ashram

On the night of the 17th I shall entrain at Surat for Hardwar. I am not stopping over at Delhi; but it is on my way to Hardwar. I have to stay at the Gurukul for three days.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2354

142. SPEECH AT GULBARGA

February 22, 1927

[Addressing] both the Hindus and Mussalmans gathered in the vast courtyard of the famous Sharana Basappa Temple which still bore the marks of the mob-fury of 1924.1 Gandhiji said:

My heart burns with agony when I see young men, dressed in foreign caps and clothes. It is surprising that they do not see that, whilst the rupees that they spend on foreign caps are wasted, the annas that they need spend on khadi caps all go to the pockets of the poor. The man who shuts his eyes to the poor of his land and seeks to befriend the poor of the world must be mad indeed. God will find him guilty of arrogating to himself His function. The Hindu who recites his Gayatri regularly and the Mussalman who says his namaz five times a day are doing so in vain, if they have no corner in their hearts for the poor of their land. This is the message I would leave with the Hindus and Mussalmans of this place.

Much as I would like to pour out my agony before you, I know that it will be a cry in the wilderness. I therefore daily send out my prayer to God: ‘Lord, do somehow deliver us from this conflagration.’ But I should be untrue to my creed if as a believing and satyagrahi Hindu I disguised from you the feelings within me. When I went into the temple I was shown the spot where the idol was removed and the Nandi2 was desecrated. I tell you the sight pained me. You may call me an idolator if you will. I see God everywhere and in everything. I tell you God would never approve of those acts of desecration. Whilst in Yeravda Jail, I read Maulana Shibli’s Life of the Prophet, I also read Usva-e-Sahaba and can say that those who did

1 This was published under the title “Two Speeches”.
2 Vide “Notes”, 28-8-1924.
3 Sacred bull
the acts were wrong, that Islam never sanctions such things and they were guilty before God and man. When I heard of these things I was convinced that the matter had passed out of human hands. If there were men who devoted all their time and energy to the cause of Hindu-Muslim unity I at least was one of them, but when my efforts did not seem to bear any fruit I threw myself on God. When the saints and godfearing people of Islam saw that there was discord and strife after the passing away of the Prophet, they dissociated themselves from them, migrated to Egypt, Persia and other lands and there retired into seclusion and sent up their prayers to God. It is these saints that have kept Islam alive. How often have I wished to retire thus into seclusion! And though I know that history will take note of my efforts as those of one who was a servant of God, who committed Himalayan blunders but who had also the courage to confess them and repent for them, I know that today I can do no better than be silent on this question.

But if you will not listen to me in that matter, you certainly will not disdain to think of the millions of the poor amongst you. Do you know that many of the spinners in Bihar, Bengal and the Punjab out of the 50,000 spinners in India for whom the A.I.S.A. finds employment, are Mussalmans? Have you read the heart-rending tales of woe of some of them? One of the workers in Gujarat asked a Mussalman woman aged 65 as to why she bothered to spin when spinning brought her only an anna per day. She said the fact that there was someone to give her an anna in return for the yarn she spun convinced her that there surely must be God somewhere. Fight, therefore, as much as you wish, but when a man like me appeals for help, pray forget your quarrels and your hostilities and do something for the cause he pleads.

Young India, 10-3-1927
143. LETTER TO K. RAJAGOPALACHARI

ON TOUR,
February 23, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I enclose the discharge document fair copied and duly signed by me.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Enclosure 1

SIT. K. RAJAGOPALACHARI
KHADAR STORES
GANDHI STREET
TIRUPATI
(CHITTORE DISTRICT)

From a photostat: G.N. 5670

144. SPEECH AT PANDHARPUR

[February 23, 1927]

At Pandharpur the people in charge of the temple had somehow got the report that Gandhiji was going there with a European friend and they were terribly exercised as to what they should do if Gandhiji insisted on entering the temple with the friend as he did at Banaras. They must have been relieved to find that there was no such friend in our party. But Gandhiji made a pointed reference to this matter in his speech. He said:

I am sorry that neither the Buddhist friend who was with me at Banaras nor the ‘untouchable’ girl I have adopted is with me. But you may be sure that I should not have visited the temple without them if they had been with me. Had I left them out, I should have been guilty of insulting Vithoba Himself. I would not mind even an atheist entering our temple, for I know that God can take care of Himself. Who is there in the world who can insult the God in the image? But

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 Gandhiji was at Pandharpur on this date; vide “Letter to G. D. Birla”, 21-2-1927.
the lady friend who was with me is a Buddhist and therefore a Hindu. If she had no right to enter the temple, who else can have it? I have visited many places of pilgrimage and I have been pained to see hypocrisy and cupidity there. It is necessary first to purify the drunken and dissolute worshippers in charge of some of these temples. If the things continue as they are today, if we do not bestir ourselves and go through the necessary penance and cleansing and self-purification, I tell you that not even the 22 crores of Hindus can keep Hinduism alive. The Himalayas are spotlessly snow-white in virtue of the spotless glory of the countless sages who laid down their lives performing penance in their caves. Only such penance can save us and our religion from perdition today.

Young India, 10-3-1927

145. HONOURABLE COMPROMISE

Sir Mahomed Habibullah and his colleagues are to be congratulated upon having secured a settlement that is honourable to both parties. It is not the best that could be conceived, but it is the best that was possible. I doubt if any other deputation could have done more. The Class Areas Bill, which brought about the Conference and round which the battle raged, is dead and gone. The Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastri, who when the deputation sailed for South Africa was of all members the most communicative and had warned us not to expect much, did not conceal at the end of the labours of the Conference his satisfaction at the result. A perusal of the settlement warrants the satisfaction.

But like all compromises this one is not without its danger points. The dropping of the Class Areas Bill is balanced by repatriation, re-emerging as re-emigration. If the name is more dignified, it is also more dangerous. Repatriation could only be to India. Re-emigration can be to any country. The following sentence in the settlement clearly points to that interpretation: “The Union Government therefore will organize a scheme of assisted emigration to India or other countries where Western standards are not required.” This assisted emigration to other countries I hold to be dangerous, for there is no knowing what may happen to the poor ignorant men going to an unknown land, where they would be utter strangers. Such countries as would take them would only be either Fiji or British Guiana. Neither has a good name in India. It is decidedly a disadvantage to have been party to assisted emigration to any other part of the world.

The good point about this assisted emigration is that whereas before the settlement the repatriates lost their domicile, the re-emigrants now retain it and lose it only if they absent themselves so long as to warrant the inference that there is no intention on their part to return to South Africa. How many assisted emigrants can hope to refund the assistance in money they might have received or how many can hope to return with their families is a different question. The non-forfeiture clause is clearly designed not so much to guarantee a substantial right as not to hurt national self-respect.

The annexure, containing a summary of “conclusions reached by the Round Table Conference on the Indian question in South Africa”, is a remarkable document betraying in every paragraph a heroic attempt to reconcile conflicting interests and sentiments. The industrious reader will have no difficulty in discovering hopeful paragraphs. I shall therefore content myself with drawing attention to a paragraph that is fraught with grave danger. The Union Government is “to take special steps under the Public Health Act for an investigation into the sanitary and housing conditions in and around Durban, which will include the question of the limitation of sale of municipal lands subject to restrictive conditions”. I do not know what is aimed at in this paragraph, but my suspecting mind—and my suspicion is based upon previous bitter experience of interpretations, warranted and unwarranted, that a strong party places upon agreements with a weak party to the latter’s disadvantage—conjures up all kinds of frightful consequences arising from this proposed committee and limitation. Already the Durban Corporation has been invested with powers which it has utilized for the suppression of its Indian citizens. So far as I know a committee can bring to light nothing that is not known to the Corporation or the Government. The appointment of an advisory committee of Indians may be simple padding. The Health Committee may bring in a hysterical report, as a previous committee to my knowledge has done, and limitations may be put upon the purchase of municipal lands by Indians which may cramp the Indian community residing in Durban. Nor do I like the paragraph which seems to imply that provincial Governments are at liberty to take any action they might against the Indian settlers without reference to the Central Government.

But the compromise is acceptable in spite of the dangers referred to by me, not so much for what has been actually achieved as for the almost sudden transformation of the atmosphere in South Africa from one of remorseless hostility towards Indians to that of a generous toleration and from complete social ostracism to that of admission of Indians to social functions. Mr. Andrews sends me a glowing account of the utmost cordiality with which the Indian members of the Deputation were received alike by the Government and the people, how local Indians were able to gain entry to the most fashionable hotel in Cape Town without any let or hindrance and how the Europeans in South Africa were flocking to him to know all about the Indian Deputation and the Indian question. If this atmosphere of goodwill and sociability is kept up and encouraged, the settlement can be used as a solid foundation for erecting a beautiful temple of freedom for the Indian settlers in South Africa. But the success of the settlement very largely depends upon the selection of the Consul or the Commissioner who will be selected to represent the Government of India. He must be a person of eminence, great ability and great strength of character, and in my opinion, he must be an Indian. They very fact of his being an Indian will strike the imagination of the European population and raise the Indian settlers in European estimation. He will reach the heart of Indians in a way no Englishman, not even perhaps Mr. Andrews, can, and if a man can be selected who will command the equal esteem of the Union Government we need not fear the future. Such a man in my humble opinion is Mr. Srinivasa Sastri. I cannot conclude this hasty survey of the settlement without placing on record my deepest conviction that the happy result is predominantly due to the ceaseless and prayerful labours of that godly self-effacing Englishman, Charlie Andrews.

Young India, 24-2-1927

146. NOTES

A SIMPLE SUGGESTION

During my tour I observe that at some of the meetings volunteers thoughtlessly begin distribution of papers, such as copies of address, etc., just after the guest has arrived and the address has begun to be read. They do not realize that this creates a fresh disturbance in already noisy and restless meetings. If papers are to be distributed, they should be distributed before the proceedings commence. It is not even realized that if papers are distributed, they should be distributed to all who want them. In mass meetings such distribution is impossible unless thousands of copies are available. In my opinion this would mean an utterly useless waste of public money. Whatever is absolutely necessary will surely be printed by local papers and the public should be satisfied with what the papers give. If they are unable to follow the proceedings without the papers it would not be a bad plan to sell such papers when there would be no question of favouritism. All those who wish to possess copies can have them for a trifling charge to cover printing expenses and a small addition so as to form a contribution, however small, to the expense of organizing meetings.

STEWARDS OF THE NATION

Much trouble, time and money can be saved by a little forethought. As it is, I often notice a reckless waste of public funds in connection with these meetings. Let organizers of all meetings, but especially of khadi meetings, realize that we are the poorest country in the world, millions of whom are semi-starved, if only because their earnings are less even than three pice per day. Let organizers therefore understand, as stewards for the nation, it is their duty to spend public funds like misers and never to spend a pie without thought and without necessity. Organizers of khadi meetings should further realize that every pice collected is a pice meant for the starving millions and so one pice means often a day’s earning for a widow. They must not therefore spend where they need not. For instance, they spend money on paper decorations. This is no time for decorations. Let them save as much as they can by avoiding all decorations save only those which may be required to attract people’s attention. In that case they can think of several artistic things which cost nothing or very little. Thus they can have flags and buntings out of waste khaddar. We are now going in for extensive tailoring in connection with khaddar sales. There is always much waste material in a tailor’s shop which he throws away. Now every part of this waste can be used for buntings which unlike paper buntings can be preserved for further use.
WRITE YOUR ADDRESSES

Flowers may be avoided altogether and yarn garlands may be presented. Yarn must not be damaged by being tied into knots. It can be presented in its natural condition so that it can be subsequently used for weaving or any similar purpose. Money can also be saved by avoiding the printing of addresses. The best calligraphist among the organizers can write out the address on simple handmade paper and the paper can be nicely sewn on to a piece of khaddar, or if a little volunteer boy or girl would embroider the letters on a piece of khaddar it would be still better, the thread for embroidery, too, being hand-spun. Such work will be at once artistic and even valuable. I have stolen the idea from the remarkable way in which Babu Mahendra Prasad’s daughter Rama had embroidered for her father the address presented by the Chapra Municipality of which he is Chairman. It cost the Municipality nothing and I have become possessor of a work of art which will adorn the museum which Adhyapak Malkani has brought into being in the Gujarat National College.

AVOID SILVER CASKETS

Expensive caskets are not required, for I have no use for them nor have I any room to keep them in. Latterly I have been putting to auction every expensive casket received by me and handing the proceeds to the All-India Deshbandhu Memorial Fund. Although these auctions have invariably proved profitable in that they have fetched much more than their intrinsic value it will not be proper to present caskets for the purpose of securing fancy prices. It will be a good exercise for organizers if they must give their khaddar addresses in caskets to find out something cheap, local and artistic.

NOT A PLEASURE TRIP

Well has Gangadharrao said that mine is not a pleasure trip, but a business tour during which I expect to do substantial business for my principal Daridranarayana. Every function therefore should be in fitting with that setting. I have observed that often more local men travel with me than are necessary for the purpose of the mission and that motor-cars are hired without due regard to economy. Every item of expenditure should be previously and carefully thought out. Unless we do so we shall not raise into being an efficient, economical organization calculated to serve the starving millions and we shall be guilty of the same charge, no matter on however small a scale, of extravagance that we legitimately bring against the Government. Kitson burners should be avoided whenever possible. I notice, too, a lavish expenditure on feeding. Those who travel with me do not do so to be entertained. It is enough to provide clean lodging and clean food. Indeed I often feel like copying for the whole of my company the excellent example of Mr. Bharucha who always insists on carrying his own food with him. We spend much too much money and time upon food. It grieves me to see people sending for parcels of fruit from Bombay or Calcutta. Much of this expense is wholly unnecessary. Some fruit is no doubt an essential part of my dietary and unless obtainable locally, something has no doubt to be imported. But I am sure that the expense incurred in bringing fruit can at least he reduced by 75 per cent. ‘But,’ argue over-zealous friends, ‘why should not people who love you express their regard in some such loving acts of service? They will not spend money otherwise, nor will they give you all the money that they spend for your personal comfort. Let them therefore have the joy of spending some little money for you.’ The argument is no doubt flattering, but wholly unconvincing.

Transmutation Into Service

If those who love cannot transfer their love to the thing for which I stand, their love is blind and of little value. I do not know if one should live to provide mere enjoyment for friends. Friendship means loving mutual service, and sometimes it is a positive disservice to indulge one’s friends and to expose them to temptations. And if there are friends who would spend lavishly for providing luxuries for me, but would not spend for the cause I espouse, it is my clear duty to resist such luxuries. Friends to be friends must first provide me with necessaries of life before they think of indulging me with luxuries; and khaddar work is a vital necessary of life for me, more vital than food. Reception Committees please note.

Auction of Garlands

The foregoing paragraphs were written, or rather dictated at the halts before we reached Ahmednagar at which latter place, there was an imposing meeting where there were several addresses presented, the Municipal address being in a beautiful silver cylinder. The representatives of each body brought also expensive flower garlands. Mr. Firodia who presented the inevitable purse excused himself for its smallness by saying that Ahmednagar was a famine-ridden tract. When therefore I began my reply\(^1\) I could not help noticing the contrast between the palatial surroundings, the expensive ceremonial and the statement of famine conditions. I told the audience that what was true of Ahmednagar was true of the whole of India. Was not India a famine-ridden land? But the fact did not prevent accumulation of wealth on the part of a few. We the city-dwellers lived upon the exploitation of the famine-stricken villagers and the Khaddar movement was in tended somewhat to redress the wrong and to make some slight return to the millions whom we were exploiting. I therefore suggested that the acknowledgment of the fact that Ahmednagar was a famine area made it doubly the duty of its well-to-do citizens to give more rather than less. I told them also that it would ill become me to accept for myself such caskets and rich floral tributes. I told them further that believing as I did that plants were as much endowed with life as we were ourselves, I did not like the unnecessary plucking of a single flower. But in a place like Ahmed-nagar my dislike was heightened by the reminder that I was a self-chosen representative of the very famine-stricken millions whom Mr. Firodia had mentioned. Every rupee spent upon unnecessary things meant a deprivation of the livelihood of 16 famishing women and I therefore suggested that they should auction the silver casket as also the flowers, and if my remarks went home they would pay not the market value of the casket and the flowers but they would pay for the sentiment that the things would carry with them. The auctioning was entrusted naturally to the Chairman of the Municipality, Khan Bahadur Dorabseth. The casket was knocked down to Sheth Magniramji the local philanthropist for Rs. 1,001 and the garlands and the bouquets were auctioned separately under the same able management and they fetched in all Rs. 502. The result of my appeal went beyond the meeting and the citizens seemed to catch the spirit of my address to them, and the purse of Rs. 1,700 for which Mr. Firodia had apologized went up to nearly Rs. 6,000 apart from a brisk sale of khadi at the meeting. Future organizers beware! I warn them that they need not present me with flowers and rich caskets, but if they do I shall assume that they are presented for the purpose of being auctioned and in order that their contribution to the poor people’s fund may be substantially increased.

\(^1\) Vide “Speech at Ahmednagar”, 18-2-1927.

Tilak Swaraj Fund

During the Maharashtra tour at one or two meetings I was asked what had become of the crore collected for Tilak Swaraj Fund. The questioners had every right to put this question even though they might not have contributed a pie to the Fund. A public fund becomes public property and therefore every member of the public is entitled to know in detail the administration of such funds. I therefore answered the question fairly exhaustively. The gist of my answer will bear repetition although the question has been answered in these pages already.

The accounts have been published regularly by the All-India Congress Committee. Copies of the audited accounts can be had at any time from the Congress Secretaries or the Treasurers. Every pie has been accounted for. There is no doubt that in some instances those to whom funds were entrusted were not faithful to the trust, but that is as much as to say that the Congress like all human institutions is an imperfect body having in its fold all sorts of men. I know of no institution in the world which does not have dishonest agents. The Congress is no exception. But I can say this that no loss has been sustained beyond what a most careful merchant suffers. The little loss that had been sustained is due not to negligence, but has occurred inspite of vigilant inspection and auditing. It should be further borne in mind that the Congress has had in Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and in Sheth Jamnalal Bajaj an incorruptible working Secretary and an incorruptible working Treasurer respectively. Moreover 75 per cent of the funds were administered locally by local representatives who had assisted in raising the funds and who were trusted by the people. Lastly, the largest amounts were mostly earmarked and controlled by the donors, subject no doubt to the conditions that they were to be used only for purposes coming within the programme of non-co-operation and the accounts were to be open to inspection by Congress agents. Personally, I have absolutely no regret about having raised the Fund and my conscience is clear as to its administration.

---

1 Vide “Speech on Tilak Swaraj Fund, Pachora”, 8-2-1927.
Everything that was humanly possible to guard against fraud, maladministration or misappropriation was done. The Fund has served an immense national purpose. The tremendous organization that came into being all of a sudden could not have been created without this great national Fund to which both rich and poor contributed so handsomely.

ALL-INDIA COW-PROTECTION ASSOCIATION

The Secretary acknowledges further receipt of yarn as under:

MEMBERS’ YARN (YARDS)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No.</th>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Place</th>
<th>Yarn (yards)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Nathabhai Dahyabhai Patel</td>
<td>Sojitra</td>
<td>12,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>T. M. Kanal</td>
<td>Haliyal</td>
<td>24,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Punabhai Mamaiya</td>
<td>Karachi</td>
<td>16,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>V. G. Joglekar</td>
<td>Hadvi</td>
<td>24,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Patelukhana Rama Rao</td>
<td>Ramachandrapur</td>
<td>6,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>N. Bhavanishanker Rao</td>
<td>Bangalore</td>
<td>9,640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Ishvarlal Thakordas Nanavati</td>
<td>Surat</td>
<td>24,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Nos. 5, 6, 8 and 10 have advanced their totals to 24,002, 24,000, 22,000 and 14,940 respectively.

Young India, 24-2-1927

147. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[Before February 25, 1927]

[CHI.] NARANDAS,

I have just got another letter from you.

About the Bhandar I have sent you a telegram to go over to Belgaum. You will be there on the 25th itself. I shall come only on the 26th.

Let me have your opinion about supplying spinning-wheels to Panch Talawdi. It would of course be convenient to run the department through Amreli [office]. Why no figures about the Kotak Bhandar? They were not there last time too.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7711. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Inferred from the contents
148. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

[After February 26, 1927]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. Did you not have my letter telling you about my meeting with your father-in-law? Your father intends by the end of March to send you, Vidyawati and, if possible, Chandramukhi too to the Ashram.

Step up your study of the Ramayana and the Gita and never give up spinning. Recite Ramanama while plying the wheel.

Tulsi Maherji met me for the second time.

The region I am now touring is very lovely. It is called Konkan and forms part of Maharashtra; moreover, I am touring this district for the first time.

I have given my tour programme in my letter to your father.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3327

149. LAST PILGRIMAGE OF A MUMUKSH

We refer to the demise of a saintly individual as his last pilgrimage. The wise have regarded this world as an inn or a traveller’s lodge; there for a while we stay and then walk on. The Gita says that the body is a dharmakshetra. Shri Ranchhoddas Dharshi has gone from this kshetra. I knew him quite intimately. He lived in Karachi in recent years. He was a great devotee of Shrimad Rajchandra. Ranchhodbhai had perfect faith in the latter’s teachings. I have seen him shedding tears of joy even at the mention of Raychandbhai. All those who knew him and came in touch with him will certainly feel grieved at his demise. As for himself, he has departed after fulfilling his mission. He always worked unobtrusively in the public life of Karachi. He did not care for fame; his only desire was to work. He

1 ibid,

2 Seeker of moksha, i.e., freedom from phenomenal existence as the goal of life

3 Field of dharma had full faith in khadi and carried on the khadi work in Karachi with great enthusiasm. May his soul rest in peace and the members of his family be consoled.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 27-2-1927

150. LETTER TO LAURA I. FINCH

February 27, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Your letter has been redirected to me from Sabarmati. As I am constantly on the move, you will pardon my dictating this letter. Both you and Mrs. Blair whom I know very well would be welcome at the Ashram whenever you both go there. For the most part I expect to be there between 9th and 14th of March. I should be delighted to give you personal welcome if you come during that time.

I would suggest you and Mrs. Blair carrying a mosquito net, not that there are many mosquitoes at the Ashram but it is wise to be forearmed especially as we do not stock mosquito-curtains at the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 12815

151. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Malvan,
February, 28 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have two letters from you.

I have no doubt in my mind that a vow is like a rudder—a life regulator. And just as a rudderless ship is lost, so is a life without a vow a lost life. For after all a vow means a religious determination to carry out a decision for self-restraint even at the cost of one’s life. I should therefore welcome your desire to take what is perhaps the supremest vow for a man or a woman. But if it is taken let it be taken after the maturest deliberation. It would be wrong on my part to prevent you from taking the vow, if you are clear about the necessity of taking it. Not to take the vow is to trust one’s little self. To take it is to distrust oneself and to trust only God. I know where I should have been if I had not taken the vows I have.

But there is the other side, i.e., Andrews’s. He says: “I do not know that the voice within is always the voice of God. What I may hold to be right today may be found to be wrong tomorrow. I must therefore hold myself free to do the will of God as I discover it from moment to moment.” This attitude has answered his purpose. I should be undone. I see a fallacy behind A’s argument. He does not. So it sustains him. Fallacy, error and the like are relative terms. What is good for one may not be good for all even though Truth is one for all time. The difficulty lies in our hopeless ignorance of Truth. Cruel God has enabled us to see that Truth is one and nothing else is; but He has disabled us for knowing its content.

If therefore you feel the call within to take the vow and if you feel it will make you feel freer, you shall take it. Nothing need be done in haste.

You must keep your health. Of course you will always starve when you feel the slightest touch of fullness or indigestion. Even weakness is preferable to apparent strength if it is accompanied by indigestion or even a feeling of fullness.

You must not worry about your Hindi. You are doing all you can. The rest must lie in the hands of God. A change may be necessary after we meet. The fact evidently is that you must not combine two things—learning Hindi and teaching charkha. It evidently exhausts you. And you have not been helped to the extent you needed. However the experiences you have gained are inestimable and I am satisfied.

I have only now got Ramachandra’s letter. I must see what can be done when I am there.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU
I have no time even for revising this important letter.

From the original: C.W. 5207. Courtesy: Mirabehn.

152. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

MALVAN,
Maha Vad 11 [February 28, 1927]

SISTERS,

This is the last letter I write to you, for next Monday I should be on my way back home.

In my tours I always address women’s meetings. Consequently I keep learning new things about women. I realize that women hold the key to swaraj. But who will awaken them? Many women have little to do. Who will make them industrious? Mothers spoil their children from birth. Who will prevent them? They load their children with ornaments and clothes of all kinds. They get their girls married quite young. They give them in marriage to old men. When I look at the jewels on women, I feel very annoyed. Who will explain to them that real beauty lies in the heart and not in these ornaments? I can write on many such matters. But how can all this be set right? It can be done only when a brilliant and dynamic Draupadi rises from amongst women. You have to try and get the necessary qualifications. Make up your mind about it and then have patience. One can achieve nothing by being in too great a hurry.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3641

153. LETTER TO N. M. KHARE

MALVAN,
Monday [February 28, 1927]

BHAI PANDITJI,

Please go through the letter from Nanabhai which I have forwarded to Chi. Manilal. If you can find the time, please go there a day in advance and satisfy Nanabhai. We must have the minimum rituals. Please make it a point that the ceremony does not stretch beyond an hour. Though of course you should do all that ought to be done. Please have two copies of the [marriage] vow, one for each of them. We shall not have to solemnize such marriages. We cannot refuse if other friends want it. Hence this procedure and so on. Please think over it and try to make it as solemn and sacred as possible. Consult Kaka; we might add to or amend it if necessary.

I think we should start the ceremony with prayers and devotional songs and also conclude it in like manner. Consult Kaka about this too; if we decide to do so, what bhajans we should have, what slokas we should recite in our prayers, etc. Not the usual prayers that we offer daily but if you can find out some which would specially suit the occasion.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 250. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare

154. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

[February 28, 1927]¹

CHI. MANILAL,

This should reach you on Wednesday.

Maganlal writes to me that you would board the train in Bombay. You have to leave there on Friday. On Saturday morning I shall be in Poona. Leaving there at 10, I shall join you at Kalyan. I have a meeting at Poona in the morning.

Herewith letters from Nanabhai and Sushila, for your information. I think you should honour their wish to have you at Akola for some days. Vijayalakshmi would naturally want to know you; she is your mother-in-law.

You should not be angry nor should you worry over what Sushila writes about jewels and dresses; I have tried to encourage all the good traits she has cultivated. But I have not bound her to anything. You will influence her the way you would like to, and take such liberties as you please with her consent.

The vow to be taken at the time of the marriage ceremony is available with Panditji. I wish you would get it in advance, think over it and understand it. May you be always ready to observe the vow and may God grant you the strength for it.

¹ From the reference to Panditji; vide the preceding letter.

I know marriage begins a new life. Therefore though I do not get the time to write to you more often or at greater length, I am always thinking about you.

Even if you stay over at Akola I must leave on Monday. I have plenty of work waiting for me at Ashram.

Make a note of whatever you want to ask me or tell me, because after this meeting we may perhaps not meet again, may be never in our lives. In the month of March, when you will proceed to South Africa, I do not know where I may be wandering. I see therefore that whatever you have to ask should be done mainly on the train. On Sunday we shall be busy with the wedding ceremony. Of course there may not be much fuss. There would be a solemn atmosphere on the day and also peace all round. But I am a busy man and it is quite likely that we shall get little time to ourselves.

In his letter Nanabhai asks for Panditji to go there a day in advance. Panditji may do so if he can. Just the same I am dropping a line to Nanabhai assuring him that this should not be necessary. He [Panditji] should however spare a day if possible.

Bring with you two copies of the Gita, two of the [Ashram] Bhajanavali and a couple of taklis.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1124. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

155. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

[February 28, 1927]

BHAISHRI NANABHAI,

I have your letter. You may not need Panditji to go there in advance. All the same I have written to him that he should reach a day earlier if he could.

You must not put up any kind of elaborate decorations or other fanfare. Please spend as little as possible on pandals, etc. It would look well to have the marriage ceremony in the open; it would be enough if there is shade.

There is a religious atmosphere about your house, no doubt; but

---

1 From the reference to Panditji; vide the preceding item.
I wish it is particularly so during these days.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I have written to Manilal to spend a few days at Akola if he can. If he does it might become necessary to let them have a separate room. Perhaps it is essential that immediately after marriage they live together for some days.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1129. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

156. LETTER TO SUSHILABEHN I. MASHRUWALA

Monday [February 28, 1927]

CHI. SUSHILA.

So at long last I have a letter from you written with much nervousness. I wish you could get into the practice of writing to me without shrinking.

On Sunday Manilal and you, Nanabhai and Vijayalakshmi, myself and Ba will have to observe fast till the marriage ceremony is over, i.e., up to about 12 noon. Devote all that time to contemplating on dharma and to understanding the significance of marriage. People are now totally oblivious of the fact that marriage is not a license, it is a discipline. A person—man or woman—has recourse to marriage to regulate, to circumscribe the desire one feels. This is the distinction between man and beast. Thus though pursuit of pleasure results from marriage, the Shastras suggest that the couple should gradually shake off its hold over them. Even those relationships which are formed for pleasure, the Shastras try to use for the attainment of moksha. They enjoin them to this end. So much so that seekers have described the relationship between the individual self and the Supreme Self on the analogy of marital union. The concept of purity underlies conjugal love just as much as the communion of an individual with God. Thus marriage can become a great help in rendering social service. May your marriage prove so.

I am trying to let you have in advance a copy of the marriage

1 From the reference to the marriage vow; vide “Letter to N. M. Khare”, 28-2-1927; also “Letter to Manilal Gandhi,” 28-2-1927.
vow. If you get it ponder over it. May God grant you the strength to fulfil it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1125. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

157. SPEECH AT LANJE

February 28, 1927

I do not know whether I should pity you or myself for keeping you waiting until this hour. But you know we have done what the yogi of the Gita does. “The night of sleep of the ordinary mortals is a day of wakefulness for the yogi.” I congratulate you on your yoga, but you will better deserve my congratulations if you show that you are true yogis by contributing for the poor, and by purchasing our khadi.

Young India, 10-3-1927

158. SPEECH AT RATNAGIRI

[March 1, 1927]

After describing Ratnagiri as a place of pilgrimage for the whole of India, as it was Lokamanya’s birth-place, and after a feeling reference to Sjt. V. D. Savarkar, Gandhiji said:

You know Lokamanya’s swaraj mantra. I do not think there has been any follower of Lokamanya who has tried to carry out the mantra more than I. There may be many whose efforts are equal to mine, but no one can claim to have put forth greater effort. For I know that not only is swaraj our birthright, but that it is our sacred duty to win it. For in so far as we are removed from swaraj we are removed from manhood. A proper manifestation of all our powers is impossible without swaraj. And the swaraj that Lokamanya had in view was not the swaraj for Ratnagiri people or for Maharashtrians, but for the whole of India, poor as well as rich, and swaraj has no meaning for

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 Gandhiji reached Lanje after midnight.
3 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
4 From the “Weekly Letter” in Young India, 10-3-1927
the poor unless they have enough to eat. Why should we not serve our mills, you ask. Sheth Narottam Morarji, the owner of the Sholapur mills is a friend of mine, and I was the guest of his son who showered his affection on me. But does that mean that I must use cloth from the Sholapur mills and serve that “poor” Sheth Narottam and his son? Even they will not say that I would be serving the poor by using their cloth.

I have been told everywhere that Konkan is poor. If you are poor, the situation must be unbearable for you. You say that poor people from your parts go to Bombay and earn a living there. Do you know the price that they have to pay for that living? They live in hovels without light and air, a few feet by a few feet, where several men and women are huddled together without regard for their bodily cleanliness or decency. Are you ready to send your mothers and sisters to live under such conditions? Do you not agree that the women that go to the Bombay mills are your mothers and sisters and the men your brothers? Are you prepared to see your brothers and sisters take to a life of drunkenness and shame and return home and spread the infection of their vices? Is it worth while paying this terrible price for the eight annas they manage to earn there?

Our cattle are destroyed because we do not know true cow-protection and our villages are ruined because we do not know true economics and sociology. The charkha can stop that ruinous process. Do you know the daily income per head of our country? Our economists say that it is one anna and six pies, though even that is misleading. If someone were to work out the average depth of a river as four feet from the fact that the river was six feet deep in certain places and two feet in others, and proceeded to ford it, would he not be drowned? That is how statistics mislead. The average income is worked out from the figures of the income of the poor man as also of the Viceroy and the millionaires. The actual income will therefore be hardly three pice per head. Now if I supplement that income by even three pice with the help of the charkha, am I not right in calling the charkha my cow of plenty? Some people attribute superhuman powers to me, some say I have an extraordinary character. God alone knows what I am. It is also possible to disagree about the efficacy of satyagraha, but I do not think there is any reason for disagreement on these obvious facts about the charkha. If someone convinces me today that there is no poverty in India, that there are few in India who starve for want of even a few pice a day, I shall own myself to have been mistaken and shall destroy the spinning-wheel.

---

1 Shantikumar; vide “Letter to Ashram Women”, 21-2-1927.

I ask you therefore to bear in mind what you mean when you say that Konkan is poor. If you are really poor there is nothing like the wheel which can cure your impoverishment and which is a safeguard for the honour of your women. Seek ye first the charkha and its concomitants and everything else will be added unto you. How can you disregard a thing which is of such a national and universal character? Does it behove the followers of Lokamanya to deride or reject the wheel?

But you will ask, as a youth who sought to heckle me asked, “If Lokamanya liked this thing, why did he not ask the country to take it up?” Well, I cannot be taken in by your question. Whether or not Lokamanya had khadi in mind when he defined swadeshi, surely his swadeshi cannot but include khadi. I am but the heir of Lokamanya, and if I do not add to the patrimony he has left me, I would not be a worthy son of a worthy father. I pondered well over Lokamanya’s message, applied my many years experience to it and came to the conclusion that Lokamanya’s message must mean khadi. Do you know what he used to do? I am telling you of an incident that happened a short time before his death. When Maulana Shaukat Ali approached him as regards the Khilafat question, Lokamanya said to him: “I shall put my signature to whatever Gandhi signs, for I trust to his better knowledge in this matter.” Supposing therefore Lokamanya had not khadi in mind when he advised swadeshi, what does it matter? Supposing we were manufacturing spectacles here and someone were to say, “We cannot use them, Lokamanya did not advise the use thereof”, would it be proper? We would dismiss him as a literalist, Vedavadarata as the Gita would describe him. As the literalist interpreter of the Vedas does not grasp the infinite meaning of the Vedas, even so these literalist interpreters of Lokamanya’s message miss its infinite power.

But someone comes and says, “When Mussalmans are converting us who is going to listen to your khadi?” Have you, I ask, become so impotent that you will be Mussalmans because someone compels you to embrace Islam? If you have true dharma in you, no one dare violate it. But I want to protect even our dharma by means of khadi. For khadi means the service not only of Hindu but of Mussalman women. A Maulvi in Bengal went and asked some of those women not to spin, on the ground that the khadi movement was a Hindu movement. They listened to him for a couple of days, but the third day they came asking for cotton. For what could they do? They could not go on starving and the Maulvi had no food to offer them. The learned author of the Mahabharata has described Vishvamitra, the sage, as ready to eat what was forbidden to him and even to steal, when he was oppressed by the pangs of hunger. One cannot say what a hungry man or woman would not stoop to. I therefore tell you that you must take to khadi if only to alleviate the poverty and safeguard the honour of your women.

I am asked to take part in the shuddhi movement. How can I, when I wish that its Muslim and Christian counterparts should also cease? It is unthinkable that a man will become good or attain salvation only if he embraces a particular religion—Hinduism, Christianity or Islam. Purity of character and salvation depend on the purity of heart. I therefore say to the Hindus, “Do whatever you like, but don’t ask a man like me, who has come to his conclusions after the maturest thinking, to take up what he cannot.” Man’s capacity is after all limited. I can do what is within my power, not what is beyond it. I cannot do a hundred or even half a dozen things at a time. I would think myself blessed even if I can do one thing well at a time. If you agree with me that the charkha is the best sangathan that is possible, give me as much help as you can render.

Young India, 17-3-1927

159. DISCUSSION WITH V. D. SAVARKAR

March 1, 1927

Sjt. Savarkar asked Gandhiji to clear his attitude about untouchability and shuddhi. Gandhiji cleared some of the misrepresentations and said:

We cannot have long talk today, but you know my regard for you as a lover of truth and as one who would lay down his life for the sake of truth. Besides, our goal is ultimately one and I would like you

---

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”, Gandhiji had called on V. D. Savarkar who was ailing at his residence in Ratnagiri.
to correspond with me as regards all points of difference between us. And more. I know that you cannot go out of Ratnagiri and I would not mind finding out two or three days to come and stay with you if necessary to discuss these things to our satisfaction.¹

Young India, 17-3-1927

160. LETTER TO P. A. WADIA

ON TOUR,
MAHAD,
March 2, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Here is the result of my correspondence with Mr. Madon. There seems to be much force in Mr. Madon’s reasoning. I send you a copy of my letter to Mr. Madon. I shall anxiously await your reply. I now fancy that I am getting enough material to enable me to come to a decision.

I reproduce my itinerary for ready reference:

4th to 5th March Poona, care Swarajya Office, 6, Sukrawar Peth
6th to 7th Akola, care Nanabhai Mashruwala
8th to 14th Ashram, Sabarmati
15th to 17th Bardoli Taluk
18th to 21st Gurukul Kangri (District Bijnor)
22nd to the end of the month in Karnatak and also upto 4th April Karnatak.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Enclosure 1

PRO. P. A. WADIA
HORMAZD VILLA
MALABAR HILL
BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 12903

¹ Savarkar replied: “I thank you, but you are free and I am bound, and I don’t want to put you in the same case as I. But I will correspond with you.”
161. RAMACHANDRA LIFT

After having advertised the Ramachandra Lift in these pages I have been purposely silent about it all these weeks because it was necessary to ensure a continuous supply of these lifts on the cheapest terms possible before further notice could be taken of this ingenious invention. I have much pleasure now in informing the reader that Sjt. Ramachandra Aiyer has placed himself entirely at the disposal of the Ashram, made over his patent rights to the Ashram subject to a certain royalty being paid to him for every lift up to 1,000 lifts. Lifts can now be had on the following terms:

Cost of the lift f.o.r. Sabarmati:
For 30 ft. depth, Rs. 125; for 35 ft. depth, Rs. 132; for 40 ft. depth, Rs. 139 and so on; Rs. 7 extra for every additional 5 ft. depth.
These quotations are for such lifts as contain buckets up to 32 gallons. For buckets of greater sizes special quotations will be offered.
(Prices are subject to market fluctuations and may vary without notice.)

For local governments, zamindars, native States and co-operative societies who are willing to introduce the lift in their jurisdictions on a large scale) special quotations will be supplied on application for orders of 50 lifts or over at a time. A reduction in the prices will be made according to saving in the charges for packing, despatching, etc.

When sending orders, the intending purchaser should supply the maximum depth of the well as measured from the silt to the point of discharge, and mention the size of bucket required.

All orders must accompany 50 per cent cash and for the balance, the articles will be sent per V.P.P. The delivery of the lift will be made nearly a month after the receipt of money in order of precedence.

There is no profit made by the Ashram, only cost price up to delivery is charged. The lift that has been now at work at the Ashram has proved entirely satisfactory and the problem at the Ashram is what use to make of the superfluous bulls. An illustrative catalogue giving full details has been printed. Anyone requiring further information can have the catalogue on sending to the Ashram Manager one anna postage stamp. All those who corresponded with Sjt. Ramachandra Aiyer or with me may now have their lifts on complying with the foregoing terms.

Young India, 3-3-1927
162. IS INDIA PROHIBITIONIST?

An English friend who is anxious to undertake prohibition work for India writes:

I know that what everyone will say to me is that the Indians themselves have shown no overpowering desire for prohibition and that as they have not organized any movement for this, it is interference on our part to move in the matter. Moreover of all the Councils only one or two have declared for prohibition. Already people are saying this to me. I always point them to the Non-co-operation movement when the volunteers picketed the liquor shops. But when they say that was five years ago and they have shown no great enthusiasm lately, what is the answer?

The puzzle the friend asks me to solve is not new. The question is bound to occur to one who does not know the history of the total prohibition movement in India. And a stranger coming in our midst is bound to ask himself, ‘If India wants total prohibition, why does she not agitate for it as she does for many other things?’ One observes that people do not agitate when they feel absolutely helpless. It is our helplessness which prevents us from agitating beyond having resolutions by temperance societies and sometimes petitions to the Legislative bodies. The cry for swaraj came out of a realization of growing helplessness in matters of paramount importance to our well-being. Take the military expenditure. Everyone recognizes that much of it is a criminal waste of money collected from the starving millions. Instead of agitating for reduction in military expenditure, we agitate for swaraj, the argument being that nothing is possible without swaraj. Who can say that there is no great deal of truth in the argument? When in 1920 we felt that we were getting swaraj, we took the law into our own hands, we successfully picketed the liquor shops and the Government was frightened to notice an immediate fall in the liquor revenue. Liquor dealers trembled in their shoes and for a moment it appeared as if the drink evil had gone. Unfortunately the party of non-violence had not attained sufficient control over the people. Violence broke out. It was discovered that pickets did not everywhere carry out the instructions to create a blockade without resort to violence or threats to use it. The picketing had therefore to be suspended.

1 The reference is to Muriel Lester; vide “Letter to Muriel Lester”, 17-3-1927.

But the history of 1920-21 shows in unmistakable terms what India would do if she had the power and what she did do when she thought that she had it. Let it be further borne in mind that millions of Indians are teetotallers by religion and by habit. Millions therefore cannot possibly be interested in keeping up the nefarious liquor traffic. Thus in so far as it can be said that there is no agitation in India in favour of total prohibition, absence of agitation is due not to want of desire on the part of the people to secure total prohibition, but it is due to a consciousness of helplessness and to the certain knowledge that it is an integral part of the struggle for swaraj.

The very fact that it is necessary for any Englishman to defend liquor revenue on the grounds that there is no agitation among us for total prohibition, makes out an irresistible case for swaraj. For, it shows utter ignorance of Indian conditions where the opinion is honestly held. There is no agitation on the part of the people against malaria and scores of other diseases. Is that any reason for taking no measures for eradicating malaria and other diseases? In order to deal with a known evil, no agitation should be necessary for taking prompt measures. The drink and the drug evil is in many respects infinitely worse than the evil caused by malaria and the like; for, whilst the latter only injures the body, the former saps both body and soul. The drink revenue, military expenditure and the Lancashire’s exploitation of India through its calico, constitute the threefold wrong done by British rule to India. When Englishmen realize that it is sinful to trade upon the drink habit of the poor labourers of India, that it is sinful to dump down English and other foreign calico on the Indian soil when India’s starving millions can easily produce during their spare hours all the cloth needed for her requirements, and when they realize that it is sinful to impose a terrific military burden upon India under the ostensible purpose of defending her borders but in reality for the sake of holding her people under subjection against their will, it would be a complete demonstration of change of heart, and co-operation on a basis of absolute equality will become a real possibility. The only agitation therefore that India can carry on is to end the system which makes these wrongs possible, which is the same thing as saying that the agitation for swaraj is the agitation for the removal of these wrongs. This removal is the acid test, in my opinion, of English sincerity.

Young India, 3-3-1927

163. ANCIENT WISDOM

Here is wisdom sent to me by the friend whom I have already introduced to the readers of these columns:

That which is incomplete becomes complete.
The crooked becomes straight.
The empty becomes full.
The worn-out becomes new.
He who obtains has little.
He who scatters has much.
That is why the self-controlled man holds to unity and brings it into manifestation for men.
He looks not at self, therefore he sees clearly.
He asserts not himself, therefore he shines.
He boasts not himself, therefore he has merit.
He glorifies not himself, therefore he endures.
The Master indeed does not strive, yet no one in the world can strive against him.
The words of the Ancients were not empty words.
“That which is incomplete becomes complete.”

Young India, 3-3-1927

164. CO-OPERATIVE KHADI PURCHASE

Sjt. K. A. Nair writes as follows:¹
I commend this ingenious device for the adoption of khadi lovers. This method enables one to buy khadi without having to pay for it at once. But the unfortunate member of this co-operative club, as it may be called, whose name comes last in the raffle gains no advantage from his investment save that he will have learnt the art of buying khadi in a thrifty manner. The club will be his savings bank and at the end of a year he is in a position to buy all his khadi worth Rs. 24 without feeling the pinch. If the arrangement can be extended to a longer period, as it well may be by easy adjustment, all can receive the same advantage. But perhaps the attraction lies in the uncertainty of advantage and in the trifling nature of the disadvantage. The success of this scheme lies entirely in the honesty of the members. For, if the member who has received his Rs. 24 worth of khadi ceases to pay his contributions, the remaining ones become the losers. Therefore if this scheme has to work inexpensively and yet effectively, the membership must be necessarily restricted and confined only to those who know one another and are also perhaps working in a common institution or office so as to minimize the risk of loss by death or dishonesty. I hope that the example set by Sjt. Nair and his friends will be copied by others.

¹ The letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent, a member of the All-India Spinners' Association had organized a raffle, with 12 members, each paying Rs. 2, monthly, for twelve months, all agreeing that the winner each month will be given khadi cloth worth Rs. 24 according to his taste from a Khadi Bhandar instead of Rs. 24 in cash.

Young India, 3-3-1927

165. SPEECH AT VAISYA VIDYASHRAM, SASAVANE

[March 3, 1927]

I had come entirely unprepared for these tokens of love,— love not only for me, but for the poor, and my greatest joy is due to the shape these tokens have taken. The donation of Rs. 63-3-0 reminds me of a sacred donation that I received from the late Swami Shraddhanand for my work in South Africa and which represented the value of the labour of love rendered by his brahmacharis. It is worth more than millions to me and it makes my responsibility for utilizing the funds all the greater. Your yarn also is worth its weight in gold, for what is the value of gold, but the price of labour spent in obtaining it? Is your labour any the less? And it is more sacred

---

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 From the “Weekly Letter” in Young India, 10-3-1927
3 The inmates of the Vidyashram, an institution for imparting vocational training to unmarried Vaisya boys, had presented to Gandhiji 1,60,000 yards of hand-spun yarn, a piece of hand-woven cloth, Rs. 501 collected from the Vaisya community and Rs. 190 from the neighbouring village.
4 Being the value of ghee, sugar, milk and wheat which the boys had denied themselves for one week for Deshbandhu Fund inasmuch as it has been all done in the spirit of sacrifice.

The rest of the speech was as a Vaisya talking to Vaisya boys.

With brahmacharya as your shield and buckler you should find no difficulty in entering any walk of life, and if you will follow the vocation natural to you—agriculture, cow-protection, and commerce—in the right way, you will serve both your community and the country. But beware that your pursuit of these professions may not become synonymous with exploitation as it is today. If you desire to take off the sinister aspect of greedy commerce, you will have to make it centre round the charkha. There are exploiters enough on this earth. If we also follow suit, we shall have to seek for our victims on other planets. Khadi is the only wholesome national trade that we can pursue and as Vaisyas I ask you not to neglect it.

There were garlands . . . but Gandhiji did not auction them. Nor did he make any appeal for collections. He said:

I had not come on a business visit here. But you have given me more than enough.

Young India, 17-3-1927

166. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[Before March 4, 1927]¹

Besides these I want a takli with a case to be presented to the bride and the groom. Manilal does not spin on the takli; so Sushila alone is to be given one. Ask Manilal if he would ply one so that I may give one to him also. Please send two. Manilal should himself bring along these articles when he comes.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Please look after Professor Jugalkishore.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7765. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

¹ Only the concluding paragraph of this letter is available.
² From the reference to wedding gifts for Manilal who was to leave for Akola on 4-3-1927.
167. SPEECH AT VAISYA VIDYASHRAM GYMNASIUM

[March 4, 1927]

In the morning Gandhiji performed the installation ceremony of the image of Maruti as part of their gymnasium. He said:

I install this image of Maruti here, not merely because Maruti had the strength of a giant. Even Ravana had that strength. But Maruti had the strength of soul, and his physical strength was only a manifestation of his spiritual strength which in its turn was the direct fruit of his exclusive devotion to Rama and his brahmacharya. May you therefore be like Maruti of matchless valour born out of your brahmacharya and may that valour be dedicated to the service of the Motherland.

Young India, 17-3-1927

168. SPEECHES AT POONA

[March 4, 1927]

[Concluding his Maharashtra tour Gandhiji addressed a public meeting at Reay Market. He said:]

Hanuman tore open his heart and showed that there was nothing there but Ramanama. I have none of the power of Hanuman to tear open my heart, but if any of you feel inclined to do it, I assure you will find nothing here but love for Rama whom I see face to face in the starving millions of India.

Gandhiji . . . [addressed a students’ meeting] at about midnight. The cry for “English, English” was there . . . Gandhiji, pained as he was by it, acceded to the demand because of his overflowing love for the students. He said:

If I cannot make myself understood to Poona students, it is my misfortune, the misfortune of my country, and shall I say your misfortune?

But he acceded to the students’ clamour for English only so far as he had to express his regret for being late at the meeting . . . When he saw that he had succeeded

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 Another name of Hanuman
3 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
4 From The Bombay Chronicle, 11-3-1927
in gaining their ear, he delivered the message itself in Hindi. He said:

It is possible that my message if delivered in English might get more silver from you, and it is probable that you might understand me better. But I hold my message to be far superior to myself and far superior to the vehicle through which it is expressed. It has a power all its own, and I hope it will produce an impression on the youth of India. Whether it will produce an impression in my lifetime or not, I do not care, but my faith is immovable, and as the days roll on and as the agony of the masses becomes prolonged, it will burn itself into the heart of every Indian who has a heart to respond to the message. You must understand, that at a time of my life when I should be enjoying my well-earned rest, I am not going about from one end of the country to the other for nothing. It is because I feel within myself with increasing force every day the strength of my conviction that I must try until the end of my days to reach it to as many ears and hearts as possible.

The rest was a brief history of the charkha movement, which he had conceived as early as 1908 before he had actually seen a charkha, and the duty of the student world to those at the cost of whose moral and material ruin they were receiving their education.

You may, if you will, go on receiving that education, but do at least make a decent return for it. I know you have not taken to khadi, not because you are perverse, but because you lack the conviction that there is anything like the stupendous problem of poverty and unemployment, whose existence I have been declaring from the housetops. The King of Siam refused to believe Lord Curzon when he said to him that he was coming from a country where rivers were frozen for a part of the year. I assure you I am describing to you conditions I have seen with my own eyes when I say that 30 million people in our land have to go without a decent meal a day.

The rest of the speech was on brahmacharya, a thing that comes uppermost to Gandhiji’s lips whenever he finds himself amongst students. Rubbing the thing home into them, he said:

It is as easy as it appears to be difficult, for brahmacharya is a quality of the soul; and your souls are not dead but slumbering. They are only waiting to be aroused. It seems difficult to arouse them because we have become unbelievers. It will be easy as soon as you have faith, for with faith comes God’s grace. Then it no longer remains a matter of effort and trouble, but of joy and peace. I tell you this as I have known the joy of it.

Young India, 24-3-1927

169. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

Sunday [March 6, 1927]

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have come to Akola for a day to marry Manilal to a niece of Kishorelal Mashruwala. I leave for the Ashram tonight. I hope you are making steady progress.

Arrangements are being made to send you as much as possible out of the 50,000 you ask. The hawking commission is not possible. It is paid under the rules only to professional hawkers for their maintenance. If we stretch the rule, we should be overwhelmed. The rules were framed to encourage hawking for a livelihood.

I do hope that you are all now past the danger zone.

How is Tarini?

I am at the Ashram from 8th to 14th March, and then 15-17 Bardoli, 19-21 Gurukul Kangri, District Bijnor, and then I proceed to Karnatak where perhaps it is better to locate me in Belgaum though I shall be wandering far and near.

With love to you all,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1631

170. LETTER TO MIRABHEN

March 7, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your two letters.

This is early morning. I am sitting in a third-class carriage at Bhusaval with Ba, Sushila, Manilal’s wife, Manilal, Ramdas, Mahadev and Panditji who came to perform the marriage ceremony. The wedding was of the simplest character—no presents were accepted, no

\[1\] From the reference to Manilal’s wedding expense incurred.

To gain one more day, I decided to travel during my silence. I am travelling third class because I must not spend on second class for Manilal and his wife and I do not want to cut myself off from the new addition the very first day of her joining the family. And as I have about six days of rest at the Ashram in front of me, and as this is an easy third-class journey, I do not mind it; on the contrary I like it.¹

I shall read your corrections in the autobiography when I reach the Ashram. I had anticipated your many corrections in the chapters that had not been previously seen by you.²

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5208. Courtesy: Mirabehn

171. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA AND OTHERS

Monday [March 7, 1927]³

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA, CHANDAN, TARA, VASANT,

I have your letters. Every day I think of writing to you, but where could I get the time? Now Navajivan is as good as a letter from me to everyone; you have to be content with it. This too I write on a train, on my way to the Ashram.

I agree you had to go to Rajkot though I did not like your running away. It would have been much better if you could have stayed on at the Ashram. Now let me know what you do there about your studies, etc.

Manibehn writes to me that Chi. Prabha has started spinning. How nice if she would do regular spinning and carding and wear khadi.

¹ “From now onwards Bapu travelled third class more and more frequently and finally it became an unbreakable rule.” (Mirabehn)
² “Certain chapters had been published in Young India without my seeing them, because of postal difficulties, and I had to correct them afterwards for the book.”
³ Gandhiji travelled from Akola to Ahmedabad on March 7, 1927; vide also the preceding item.
When are you likely to return? I shall be at the Ashram till the 14th. You girls should all write to me. Write clear bold letters and in ink.

Write to me everything, when you get up, what you read, whether or not you take walks, etc. Does Vasant feel any more exhaustion? There she must be keeping better health than at the Ashram. Never let slip whatever good you have acquired in the Ashram.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 4905. Courtesy: Hari-ichchha Desai

172. SILENCE DAY NOTE TO MANILAL GANDHI

[March 7, 1927]

Now that I have got you married and introduced you [to your wife] it is for you to take the initiative and run your own house. Go and sit near Sushila. See what clothes she has got, find out her wishes and then make a note of what she needs. This will break the ice and things will get moving. Or you may try some other approach. Or shall I ask her to come near you and . . .? tell the others to move away?

From the Gujarati original: G.N. 4718

173. UNTOUCHABILITY, WOMEN AND SWARAJ

I gladly publish Suhasini Devi’s letter1 which the reader will find in another column. Whilst the versatile President2 of the Congress is well able to defend himself, I am inclined to think that my fair correspondent has over-generalized from her own very brief experience. No statistics are needed to demonstrate the vast strides that the movement for the removal of untouchability has made. The barrier is breaking down everywhere. The higher classes are to be met

---

1 Evidently written soon after Manilal’s marriage
2 As in the source
3 In this she had complained that concrete action regarding removal of untouchability was not being taken to the extent it was demanded in the Congress resolutions.
4 S. Srinivasa Iyengar
with in every province ministering to the wants of the suppressed classes in the shape of conducting schools and boarding-houses for their children. It was this phenomenon that the President evidently had in mind when he made the reference in his address. There is however infinitely more yet to be done than has been already accomplished.

The question of breaking down the feminine prejudice is most difficult. It is in reality a question of female education. And in this it is a question not merely of education of girls but it is one of the education of married women. I have therefore repeatedly suggested that every patriotic husband should become the wife’s own teacher and prepare her for work among her less fortunate sisters. I have also drawn attention to the implications of the suggestion. One of them is for husbands to cease to treat their wives as objects of their enjoyment but to regard them as co-partners in their work of nation-building. We cannot have Rama without Sita. And Sita got her real schooling under the gentle care of her partner during those terrible years of exile and probation. Well, we are all exiles in our own land and need to imitate Rama and Sita to the best of our abilities and opportunity. And in this connection, I cannot help drawing Suhasini Devi’s attention to the fact that Sjt. Iyengar has not only broken down the barrier of untouchability for himself but has carried his wife and family too with him in the reform which perhaps he himself would have thought impossible only ten years ago.

The question of inter-dining must be kept distinct from that of untouchability. Exclusion in culinary matters permeates the whole of Hindu society. To confuse it with untouchability is to retard the progress of the latter movement which is aimed at removing the ban on the social service to which the so-called untouchable has as much right as any other human being and on the same terms as the others receive it.

There is, too, confusion regarding swaraj. The term swaraj has many meanings. When Sjt. Iyengar says that removal of untouchability has nothing to do with swaraj, I presume he means that its existence can be no hindrance to constitutional advance. It can surely have nothing to do with diarchy or greater and effective powers being given to the legislatures. Removal of untouchability is a social question to be handled by Hindus. Why should it prevent the Mussalman and the Parsi in common with the Hindu from having the power to regulate the military expenditure, to determine the ratio or to achieve total prohi-bition or to impose a prohibitive tariff on foreign cloth and protecting the indigenous industries? Real organic swaraj is a different question. That freedom which is associated with the term swaraj in the popular mind is no doubt unattainable without not only the removal of untouchability and the promotion of heart unity between the different sections but also without removing many other social evils that can be easily named. That inward growth which must never stop we have come to understand by the comprehensive term swaraj. And that swaraj cannot be had so long as walls of prejudice, passion and superstition continue to stifle the growth of that stately oak.

Young India, 10-3-1927

174. PRAVARTAK YOUNG BENGAL SANGH AND KHADI

There is no province at the present moment so sorely affected as Bengal. Some of its best young men are rotting in jails without knowing why. Even in the Congress camp there is division. After Deshbandhu the Provincial Congress Committee has not been able to reconcile itself to a single leadership. It is no wonder. There could be only one Deshbandhu.

But in spite of all this, constructive work is going on in Bengal almost without a stop. The number of selfless young men who are engaged in that work is daily growing. The Pravartak Sangh of Bengal whose headquarters are in Chandranagar and which is guided by Sjt. Motilal Roy has been steadily increasing its activity in the production and sale of khadi. But hitherto khadi in the Sangh has been a subsidiary activity—a little one among big ones. But Moti Babu is now determined to make it the centre of his system. I had a long talk about it myself with him when he said that the conviction was being forced upon him that it was not possible to render true service to the masses except through the spinning-wheel as the centre piece. Messrs Banker and Lakshmidas visited Chandranagar after me and they gave me a glowing account of the enthusiasm of the Sangh, about the wheel and its work at Kutubdia. They told me too how eager Moti Babu was to learn the latest improvements in carding and spinning. The Sangh is a comparatively old institution. Its original inspiration is derived from the recluse of Pondichery and has a number of selfless devoted workers in Bengal.
From their khadi figures before me for January, I find that at their production centre they manufactured over Rs. 700 worth of khadi and their sales amounted to over Rs. 3,400 during that month. If the Sangh could concentrate its energies on khadi production, it could soon rival Khadi Pratishthan and Abhoy Ashram without in any way interfering with either. For the field for both production and sale is unlimited provided that each new organization explores and takes up a new field. It is impossible for any single organization to cope with a mighty province like Bengal.

Young India, 10-3-1927

175. WANTED WORKERS

One hears loose talk about village organization, about work in the villages. Paper schemes also for village organization are now and again presented to the country and sometimes elegantly printed and often indifferently written. When questioned the authors tell us frankly that they have not tried their schemes, they have not got the resources, or the time or the inclination; but they think that any idea that occurs to them they are in duty bound to put before the country, however ill-digested or impracticable it might be. Some of the authors get angry when they find that their schemes do not even get a start. But there is one scheme which has been now before the country for some years and which its authors have tried to work first individually, then collectively and which is now being worked through an ever-growing organization called the All-India Spinners’ Association. The spinning programme which has been demonstrated to be comparatively a success can be indefinitely extended if workers of the right type can be had.

During the Maharashtra tour, I have been taken to villages where there is almost continuous famine and where people are supposed to be without enough work and without enough to eat. Some of the villages are deserted for six or eight months during the year. The villagers go to Bombay, work under unhealthy and often immoral conditions, then return to their villages during the rainy season bringing with them corruption, drunkenness and disease. If the right type of workers go to these villages with the message of the wheel and with a patience that will not be exhausted and a faith that will not be moved, not one of the villagers need leave their homes. For it is not merely the wages earned by the spinners that are to be counted but it is the whole reconstruction that follows in the wake of the spinning-wheel. The village weaver, the village dyer, the village washerman, the village blacksmith, the village carpenter, all and many others will then find themselves reinstated in their ancient dignity, as is already happening wherever the spinning-wheel has gained a footing.

Who then can become a village worker? For the work that is required of him each worker should have a thorough knowledge both theoretical and practical of the science of spinning; he should therefore know the different varieties of cotton; he should know the method of picking cotton suitable for hand-spinning. For mill-spinning cotton is picked anyhow. For hand-spinning if cotton is properly picked it will save an immense amount of labour and the yarn also will be stronger. He should know how to gin and should know the varieties of hand-gins used in Indian villages. He should know carding and he should know the different carding-bows in use. He should be able to tell the different staples of cotton and should be able to spin a given number of counts. He should be able to test the strength and evenness and counts of yarn. He should know a good charkha from a bad one and should be able to put dilapidated charkhas under repair. He should be able to straighten an incorrect spindle. If the worker is to live a model life in his village, he must know also the laws of civic sanitation and provide an object-lesson in sanitation to the villagers. He should know the domestic treatment of diseases of daily occurrence. He should know simple accountancy. Above all he must lead a pure and chaste life, if he is to make his mark amongst the villagers and gain their confidence. Naturally a village worker must find happiness in a simple and frugal life. Let no one think that I have sketched what is an impossible requirement. I have not. The technique though it reads formidable is by no means so for a patient student. Purity of character must be a foregone conclusion in any of this work. And no village worker can help falling a prey to some disease or other if he does not know and observe in his own person the laws of sanitation and does not know domestic treatment of simple diseases. The spinning organization is capable of accommodating any number of workers who can satisfy the simple test laid down above.

Young India, 10-3-1927
176. THE SOUTH AFRICAN SETTLEMENT

I publish this not so much for its intrinsic merit as for a sample of how a thinking settler in South Africa views the Settlement.

Young India, 10-3-1927

177. BURMA AND CEYLON

A correspondent whose studious habits are evidenced by his letter itself writes thus:

Some of the following may strike you as idle academic questions, but the mention of India and Burma in the letter of your correspondent, who objects to Hindustani being our inter-provincial language, published in Young India of 10-2-1927, along with your reply\(^1\) (in which however you do not refer to Burma), gives me the excuse to put you these questions which I have long been thinking of doing:

1. Do you believe that Burma can properly be a partner with India in the future swaraj, or do you think it better that Burma should have a separate nationality? (As Burmese opinion itself is divided on the question, yours may guide both it and the Indian.)

2. Have you ever been to Burma in the course of your many past tours of your country? If not, do you intend paying a visit to Burma in the future and when?

3. Don’t you think it fit that Ceylon should be a partner with India in a future Swarajic Federation on account of their closer racial, linguistic and religious ties that exist between India and Burma—provided of course that the Ceylonese are willing to it (and they seem very likely)?

4. Do you think that Hindustani has any appreciable vogue in Burma, though it has been a Congress province now for some years (since 1908?), or that Hindustani will be acceptable to the Burmese?

5. Ditto of Ceylon and the Ceylonese.

Well, these questions coming from me who have never been to Burma or Ceylon myself and can boast of no personal connections there may surprise you, but my interest in them is that of a cosmopolitan, which I take you also to be. I therefore hope you will answer them at your early convenience, especially as I know that many Burmese and Ceylonese as well as Indians are

---

\(^1\) Not reproduced here. The correspondent had expressed satisfaction over the settlement, but pointed out that owing to the “bitter experience of the way such agreements have fared in the past one is apt to view it with the gravest suspicion.”

\(^2\) Vide “National Language”, 10-2-1927.
greatly interested in them, and are curious to know your views

I have been to Burma and know that part of the world sufficiently to enable me to answer with confidence the question put by the correspondent. I cannot say the same thing of Ceylon, which in spite of my desire, I have not yet been able to visit. I have no doubt in my mind that Burma cannot form part of India under swaraj. British India is an artificial description reminding us of foreign, that is, British domination and therefore its boundary is contracted or expanded at the will of those who hold us in bondage. Free India will be an organic whole and will include those only who desire to remain as its free citizens. Therefore free India will have its geographical, ethnic and cultural limits. A free India will therefore recognize the differences in race and culture of the Burmese, and while it will extend the hand of fellowship and help to the Burmese nation, it will recognize its right to complete independence and help it to regain and retain it in so far as it lies in India’s power. Needless to say that therefore in my scheme there is no demand upon the Burmese to learn Hindi or Hindustani. I expect those who are within the real Indian border to learn Hindustani because they are the children of a common land and heirs to a common culture and are bound together by various other considerations and their provincial dialects contain so many common words.

About Ceylon I cannot speak with equal confidence. Although we have a common culture with Ceylon and although it is predominantly inhabited by Indians from the South, it is a separate entity. And as I have no imperial aspirations for India of my imagination, I should be content to regard Ceylon as an absolutely independent State; but I should not hesitate to accept Ceylon as part of free India if the Islanders express their wish to be so in an unmistakable language.

Young India, 10-3-1927

178. LETTER TO MAMA D. SARAIYA

Saturday, Fagan Sud 9 [March 12, 1927]¹

CHI. MAMA²

I was sorry to learn you were rather unwell. But you should no more expect pujya Gangabehn to look after you. She is spiritually inclined and it is your duty to help her in her quest. I wish you would ¹ The addressee died in 1927.

² Daughter of Gangabehn Vaidya appreciate this and cheerfully let her go.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2818. Courtesy: Purushottam D. Saraiya

179. A MESSAGE

SABARMATI,
March 13, 1927

God is Truth. The way to Truth lies through Ahimsa (non-violence).

M. K. GANDHI

The Immortal Mahatma

180. READ, REFLECT AND WEEP

I have intentionally given this heading to the article below:

It is anonymous, but a priest of Dheds is not a common sight. This proud priest of the Dheds, therefore, has, under the pretext of concealing his name, told us in effect that there may be many workers for the Dheds but only Thakkar Bapa can be regarded as their priest. The article is long, but the reader should not get tired. If he has the slightest sympathy for the cause, he would not be able to leave it in the middle, once he has started reading it. Love of the poor flows in every line of it. If we let but a few drops of it moisten our hearts, our sufferings would end and so would those of the depressed classes.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-3-1927

1 Not reproduced here. Written under a pseudonym, “Priest of Dheds”, the article discussed the problems of untouchables in the villages of Gujarat.
181. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

CHI. MIRA,

I have all your letters. This is my last of the few days at the Ashram. We shall soon meet and hence no occasion to give you a long love letter. You must regain your lost health. In spite of all your bitter experiences and little progress in Hindi I am certainly not sorry for your having gone there.

It is impossible for me to be there earlier than 19th for I finish a Submerged Classes Conference only on 17th. I would gladly have given up a day at the Ashram if I could have altered the dates of the Conference. But that was not to be thought of. I have now suggested that Ba or Mahadev should open the exhibition in Hardwar unless they will have someone else.

I do hope the wheel has arrived from Calcutta.

Did I tell you I had gained five more lbs. in weight? On the day I reached here, I was nearly 108 lbs. This is very good. I shall be weighed again this evening.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5209. Courtesy: Mirabehn

182. LETTER TO KSHITISH CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

DEAR KSHITISH BABU,

I am so glad—I have sent you a wire today heartily approving your decision. But you must keep your health and make Sodepur a health resort, by proper drainage and what not. Do please continue to write to me. Have you sent a travelling charkha to Mirabai, Gurukul Kangri, Bijnor District? I wrote to you long ago about it. If you have not, please send it by V.P.P. immediately.

Here are my dates:

19-21 Gurukul Kangri, 27-4th April Karnataka,
Dist. Bijnor headquarters Belgaum

1 From Bapu’s Letters to Mira
2 Gurukul Kangri
DEAR FRIEND,

I had your two wires to which I sent a reply at Lyallpur. I then received another wire today. I am helpless. I must keep an appointment which involves thousands of poor men and women. I could have intercepted you on the way but I thought that you should see the Ashram before seeing me. Pray make yourself at home at the Ashram and examine everything critically and have a heart-to-heart chat with my co-workers. You can then meet me near Bardoli at the Conference\(^1\) I am taking in on the 16th or at Bardoli itself on the 17th. You can reach it via Surat. Mr. Banker will telegraph your wishes and I shall arrange for a friend to meet you at Surat and he will bring you to me wherever I may be on the Tapti Valley Railway.

I am sorry for all the trouble you are being put to. But my programme is so rigid that I dare not interfere with it.

I hope you are strong and fit and that you will have no inconvenience at the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

---

\(^1\) The Raniparaj Conference at Sathvav and Vedchhi on March 15 and 16, 1927
184. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

[On or after March 14, 1927]

DEAR SATIS BABU,

What a joy Kshitish Babu’s decision! I have telegraphed my approval and warned him against being ill in Sodepur.

I am glad Tarini is getting better.

How about Hemaprabha Devi and the boy? I shall feel relieved when you can really tell me that you are all yourselves again.

I shall inquire about the commission.

With love to you all,

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

[PS.]

19-21 Gurukul Kangri, 25-26 Kolhapur
   Dist. Bijnor 27-4th April Belgaum
23 Bombay 5-12 Madras

From a photostat: G.N. 1632

185. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

March 15, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your two letters. There might be one more tomorrow. I see even Sethi has been failing you.

The purpose of writing this letter is to ask you to send Mrs. Row the letters she wants. Here is her letter. You know her. She was at the Ashram for a day. She is the wife of the celebrated Dr. Row and the daughter of a celebrated Sanskrit scholar. She is herself too a good Sanskrit scholar. The rest you can gather from her letter. Please write to her directly. You may wait if you like till we meet.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5210. Courtesy: Mirabehn

1 Vide the preceding item.
2 The source has “March”.

VOL. 38 : 2 JANUARY, 1927 - 3 JUNE, 1927  201
186. LETTER TO G. A. NATESAN
March 15, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

It would delight my heart to be your guest during my stay in Madras. I am in Rajagopalachari’s hands. Please arrange what you like with him.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 2235

187. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI
Tuesday [March 15, 1927]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I write this from a jungle. I must have three hours. I have already had three hours’ silence. Go through the enclosed letter and do send him the essay on spinning in exchange for the spindle. The spindle has arrived there; Krishnadas knows about it. Send him a report about it. If it is a good spindle we should have it [made] at a reasonable cost. You should not keep the spindle if it is not perfect. But you should point out its defects and help him. The man seems to be all right. Please let me know if in the first instance, I should not refer such letters to you. I shudder to think of the load of your work. I am therefore anxious to spare you as much work as possible.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7760. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

188. LETTER TO KISHORELAL MASHRUWALA
March 15, 1927

CHI. KISHORELAL,

I have your letter. Bhai Kasandas’s scheme is very good but he does not have competent women workers. Bombay is not the field for such work.

Is it not a wonder that you are well? How are you now?

1 From the addressee’s endorsement: “Date of receipt, 16-3-1927”
2 Karsandas Chitalia
Manilal and Sushila are well. I left the Ashram yesterday. 5th-17th Bardoli, 19th-21st Gurukul Kangri, and on Friday Bijnor.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 10722. Courtesy: Gomatibehn Mashruwala

189. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

MADHI,

[March 15, 1927]

BHAI HARIBHAU,

I have your letter. I get news about your health regularly. Now you have been released. That’s good. If you cannot recoup enough strength you had better drop your trip to Bharatpur.

Ghanshyamdasji’s letter shows his candour. It is enclosed herewith.

How is Janakibehn now?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 6142. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

1 Gandhiji was in Madhi, Mandvi taluk, Surat district, on this date; vide the succeeding item.
190. SPEECH AT MADHI, MANDVI TALUK

March 15, 1927

Many thoughts occur to me on entering this taluk. I forget my misery by poking fun at you, but it is a sign of my pain that I resort to that. There was a day when not only Gujarat but the whole of India respected Surat district, and its contribution to the swaraj effort was considered to be the best, from the point of view of monetary help, silent work as soldiers’ and work in the field of education and for the service of Antyajas. There was a friendly competition between two districts. Even now I have memories of that friendly strife in which Bardoli had excelled itself, What a contrast between that day when Bardoli had become famous in the world, and today? If we go to Bardoli today, we would see only a few white caps and a few Antyajas. We would be reminded of the tragic events in Sarbhan and wonder if we would ever get swaraj. And how can I ever forget the pledge we had taken, the oath the forty-eight men had taken with God as their witness and, relying on their word, the ultimatum I had sent to the Viceroy? And now I have to come here to inaugurate this Ashram, The lesson we should draw from this is that we should not lose heart, should not lose faith till death and should not retreat—that is the significance of the starting of this Ashram. It is not a matter of pride that we have started it with money from the Gujarat Provincial Committee. If you wish that an Ashram should be established here, then you should not be reluctant to give the necessary money. You should raise the money and then ask me for men. It is a wrong procedure to get money from the Provincial Committee for work here. Anyone who depends only on the blood in his brain for his work is bound to fail. One should rely on the blood in every part of one’s body. Instead of functioning as our brain, the Provincial Committee has become our feet, and we let ourselves be dragged behind it. This is an unhappy state of affairs.

When I see national schools and depressed communities in any place, I am reminded of Gujarat. I wonder, then, if Gujarat is not out of the competition. But I am an optimist, and see rays of hope even in the face of countless disappointments. One such ray, of course, is this modest Ashram, for there are still earnest workers to run it. May it prosper, and may Bardoli, broken in spirit, and Surat in ruins, shine again and shed lustre on Gujarat and the country.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 20-3-1927
191. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[Before March 16, 1927]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

Kaka Saheb had suggested that the Managing Committee should see all relevant letters so as to know my views on various matters. This is right and so henceforth I shall write separately on business matters so that everyone can go through the correspondence. Again I find you as uncharitable as before. I agree it is unavoidable since you are not aware of it. Shake off this attitude. You will be able to do so if you try. You must participate in the work of the School Committee. If you wish to be nominated to the Education Committee, it can be done. Do not stand on prestige. More when I get your letter. Try to pacify Ramachandra. You should have a better appreciation of the difficulties of the lift.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7761. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

192. SPEECH AT RANIPARAJ CONFERENCE, VEDCHHI

March 16, 1927

Gandhiji asked:

Those who pledged themselves to wear khaddar, raise their hands—all. Those who pledged themselves to abjure drink—all. Those who have kept their vows—all. Those who have broken their vow—none.

The earlier part [of his speech] was by way of appeal to the money-lender and the liquor-seller, the Bania and the Farsi, to reform their ways, as the latter part was one of congratulation to the Hillmen and urging them to carry on self-purification more extensively. There was a quaint appeal about the way in which he commended to them the new appellation of “Hillmen”.

Why should you be called “black” people? We are all black, the God who coloured our skin being the same, and his brush being the same. You will be called Hillmen from today. Be you brave as the lions and tigers in the hills, so that none may cheat you, or oppress you, or violate your purity. The denizen of the forest is either a wise man, a rishis or a dacoit or a beast of prey. You are neither of the last two, so you have to become rishis. And there is no lack of opportunity for you. None of the wicked temptations of the towns lie in your way. You are fitted by nature to live on fruit and root and to eat in order to live, not to live in order to eat, and therefore best fitted to teach us that healthy way of living. Learn our sacred lore and with your innate purity of heart tame the lion and the tiger, as did the rishis of old. To the women I would say just a word. I am glad you have taken to khaddar, I now want you to give up your ugly ornaments which disfigure your limbs, are receptacles of dirt, and badges of slavery.

---

1 From the date of receipt endorsed by the addressee
2 This was published under the title “In a Gold Mine”.

Young India, 24-3-1927

193. MR. SPEAKER’S DONATION

It was not without regret that I had to withhold the pleasure from the readers of sharing the news contained in the following correspondence between Sjt. Vithalbhai Patel and myself. . . .

IV

20, AKBAR ROAD, NEW DELHI,
March 9, 1927

MY DEAR MAHATMAJI,

I have decided, as you are already aware, to remit to you as before such amount as I think I can reasonably save every month from my salary for the purpose mentioned in my letter to you on the subject in the month of April last. I propose to continue this arrangement as far as possible during the whole period of my office as President of the Assembly.

I enclose herewith a cheque for Rs. 2,000 representing such savings till the end of February.

Yours sincerely

V. J. PATEL

But they direct their use in any manner they choose. Vithalbhai desires to constitute of such donations a special fund and leave its

---

1 I, II and III are not reproduced here. For III, vide “Letter to Vithalbhai J. Patel”, 25-7-1926.
2 In fact, May; letter No. I in the correspondence; vide Appendix “Vithalbhai Patel’s Letter to Gandhiji”, 10-5-1926.
administration in the hands of men of known standing. If the object is to be attained, the board of trustees should, whilst it ought to be completely national, be representative of as many parties as it is possible to bring at a common board. I therefore invite criticism and suggestions from those who approve of the plan. I have no desire to take sole charge of the funds or to use them only for the purposes to which my life is devoted. I know that I shall be best fulfilling the purpose of Vithalbhai’s great gift by seeking the co-operation of as many as would help.

Young India, 17-3-1927

194. NO AND YES

“Comrade” Saklatwala is dreadfully in earnest. His sincerity is transparent. His sacrifices are great. His passion for the poor is unquestioned. I have therefore given his fervent open appeal1 to me that close attention which that of a sincere patriot and humanitarian must command. But in spite of all my desire to say ‘Yes’ to his appeal, I must say ‘No’ if I am to return sincerity for sincerity or if I am to act according to my faith. But I can say ‘Yes’ to his appeal after my own fashion. For underneath his intense desire that I should co-operate with him on his terms, there is the emphatic implied condition that I must say ‘Yes’ only if his argument satisfies my head and heart. A ‘No’ uttered from deepest conviction is better and greater than a ‘Yes’ merely uttered to please, or what is worse, to avoid trouble.

In spite of all the desire to offer hearty co-operation, I find myself against a blind wall. His facts are fiction and his deductions based upon fiction are necessarily baseless. And where these facts are true, my whole energy is concentrated upon nullifying their (to me) poisonous results. I am sorry, but we do stand at opposite poles. There is however one great thing in common between us. Both claim to have the good of the country and humanity as our only goal. Though therefore we may for the moment seem to be going in opposite directions, I expect we shall meet some day. I promise to make ample amends when I discover my error. Meanwhile however, my error, since I do not recognize it as such, must be my shield and my solace.

1 Saklatwala’s “Open Letter to Mahatma Gandhi” was released in Bombay on March 8 and was published in The Hindustan Times, 17-3-1927. For excerpts from it, vide Appendix “Extracts from Shapurji Saklatvala’s Open Letter”, 17-3-1927.
For unlike “Comrade” Saklatwala, I do not believe that multiplication of wants and machinery contrived to supply them is taking the world a single step nearer its goal. “Comrade” Saklatwala swears by the modern rush. I whole-heartedly detest this mad desire to destroy distance and time, to increase animal appetites and go to the ends of the earth in search of their satisfaction. If modern civilization stands for all this, and I have understood it to do so, I call it satanic and with it the present system of Government, its best exponent. I distrust its schemes of amelioration of the lot of the poor, I distrust its currency reform, I distrust its army and navy. In the name of civilization and its own safety this Government has continuously bled the masses, it has enslaved the people, it has bribed the powerful with distinctions and riches and it has sought to crush under the weight of its despotic regulations the liberty-loving patriots who would not be won over either by flattery or riches. I would destroy that system today, if I had the power. I would use the most deadly weapons, if I believed that they would destroy it. I refrain only because the use of such weapons would only perpetuate the system though it may destroy its present administrators. Those who seek to destroy men rather than their manners adopt the latter and become worse than those whom they destroy under the mistaken belief that the manners will die with the men. They do not know the root of the evil.

The movement of 1920 was designed to show that we could not reform the soulless system by violent means, thus becoming soulless ourselves, but we could do so only by not becoming victims of the system, i.e., by non-co-operation, by saying an emphatic ‘No’ to every advance made to entrap us into the nets spread by satan.

That movement suffered a check but is not dead. My promise was conditional. The conditions were simple and easy. But they proved too difficult for those who took a leading part in the movement.

What “Comrade” Saklatwala believes to be my error and failure I regard to be the expression of my strength and deep conviction. It may be an error but so long as my conviction that it is truth abides, my very error must, as it does, sustain me. My retracing my steps at Bardoli I hold to be an act of wisdom and supreme service to the country. The Government is the weaker for that decision. It would have regained all lost position if I had persisted after Chauri Chaura in carrying out the terms of what was regarded as an ultimatum\(^1\) to the Viceroy.

My "Comrade" is wrong in saying that the South African movement was a failure. If it was, my whole life must be written down as a failure. And his invitation to me to enlist under his colours must be held to be meaningless. South Africa gave the start to my life’s mission. Nor do I consider it to be wrong to have offered, during the late War, the services of my companions and myself, under my then convictions, as ambulance men.

This great M.P. is in a hurry. He disdains to study facts. Let me inform him that the khadi movement is not on the wane. It did last year at least twenty times as much work as during 1920. It is now serving not less than 50,000 spinners in 1,500 villages besides weavers, washermen, printers, dyers and tailors.

Mr. Saklatwala asks what khaddar stands for. Well, it stands for simplicity not shoddiness. It sits well on the shoulders of the poor and it can be made, as it was made in the days of yore, to adorn the bodies of the richest and the most artistic men and women. It is reviving ancient art and crafts. It does not seek to destroy all machinery but it does regulate its use and check its weedy growth. It uses machinery for the service of the poorest in their own cottages. The wheel is itself an exquisite piece of machinery.

Khaddar delivers the poor from the bonds of the rich and creates a moral and spiritual bond between the classes and the masses. It restores to the poor somewhat of what the rich have taken from them.

Khaddar does not displace a single cottage industry. On the contrary, it is being daily recognized that it is becoming the centre of other village industries. Khaddar brings a ray of hope to the widow’s broken-up home.

But it does not prevent her from earning more if she can. It prevents no one from seeking a better occupation. Khaddar offers honourable employment to those in need of some. It utilizes the idle hours of the nation. The esteemed comrade quotes with pride the work of those who offer more lucrative employment. Let him know that khaddar does that automatically. It cannot put annas into the pockets of the poor without putting rupees into the pockets of some.

---

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Viceroy”, 1-2-1922.
Whereas those who begin their work in the cities, though they are no doubt doing good work, touch but the fringe of the question. Khaddar touches the very centre and therefore necessarily includes the rest.

But the whole of the impatient communist’s letter concentrates itself upon the cities and thus ignores India and Indian conditions which are to be found only in her 7,00,000 villages. The half a dozen modern cities are an excrescence and serve at the present moment the evil purpose of draining the life-blood of the villages. Khaddar is an attempt to revise and reverse the process and establish a better relationship between the cities and the villages. The cities with their insolent torts [sic] are a constant menace to the life and liberty of the villagers.

Khaddar has the greatest organizing power in it because it has itself to be organized and because it affects all India. If khaddar rained from heaven it would be a calamity. But as it can only be manufactured by the willing co-operation of starving millions and thousands of middle-class men and women, its success means the best organization conceivable along peaceful lines.

If cooking had to be revived and required the same organization, I should claim for it the same merit that I claim for khaddar.

My communist comrade finds fault with my work among the labourers in Jamshedpur because I accepted an address in Jamshedpur not from the Tatas but from the employees. His disapprobation is due, I expect, to the fact that the late Mr. Ratan Tata was in the chair. Well, I am not ashamed of the honour. Mr. Tata appeared to me to be a humane and considerate employer. He readily granted, I think, all the prayers of the employees and I heard later that the agreement was being honourably kept. I do ask and receive donations for my work from the rich as well as the poor. The former gladly give me their donations. This is no personal triumph. It is the triumph of non-violence which I endeavoured to represent, be it ever so inadequately. It is to me a matter of perennial satisfaction that I retain generally the affection and the trust of those whose principles and policies I oppose. The South Africans gave me personally their confidence and extended their friendship. In spite of my denunciation of British policy and system I enjoy the affection of thousands of Englishmen and women, and in spite of unqualified condemnation of modern materialistic civilization, the circle of European and American friends
Lastly about labour in the cities. Let there be no misunderstanding. I am not opposed to organization of labour, but as in everything else, I want its organization along Indian lines, or if you will, my lines. I am doing it. The Indian labourer knows it instinctively. I do not regard capital to be the enemy of labour. I hold their co-ordination to be perfectly possible. The organization of labour that I undertook in South Africa, Champaran or Ahmedabad was in no spirit of hostility to the capitalists. The resistance in each case and to the extent it was thought necessary was wholly successful. My ideal is equal distribution, but so far as I can see, it is not to be realized. I therefore work for equitable distribution. This I seek to attain through khaddar. And since its attainment must sterilize British exploitation at its centre, it is calculated to purify the British connection. Hence in that sense khaddar leads to swaraj.

The Mahatma I must leave to his fate. Though a non-cooperator I shall gladly subscribe to a bill to make it criminal for anybody to call me Mahatma and to touch my feet. Where I can impose the law myself, i.e., at the Ashram, the practice is criminal.

Young India, 17-3-1927

195. LETTER TO MURIEL LESTER

(ON TOUR.)

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI, 1

March 17, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I get your letters regularly. You asked me how to answer the conundrums that your fellow passengers had put before you regarding India’s alleged indifference about total prohibition. As, in my travels, I had not your address, I could not write to you, but I wrote a leading article 2 in Young India based upon your letter, which I hope you saw and which contained the answer you wanted. If you need anything more, you will please refer to me.

I am glad you are being assisted by Tarini Sinha.

I am looking forward to your letter giving me a description of

---

1 Permanent address
2 Vide “Is India Prohibitionist?”, 3-3-1927.
your experiences at the India Office. I am quite sure that the steps you are taking to equip yourself for the task are the proper and necessary steps. They alone can give you the knowledge, experience and confidence required for the struggle that is in front of you.

I have read your interview with The Observer. It was reproduced in one of the Indian dailies. I certainly agree with you that if you had not given that interview it would have been better. But, if the reporter has correctly reported you what does it matter even if it contains some erroneous deductions. It would be terrible if at every step we hesitate because of the possibility of erroneous judgement.

From a photostat : G.N. 6565

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

196. M. K. GANDHI

ON RETURN FROM VEDCHHI,
Thursday, [March 17, 1927]

CHI. TARA,

It was very good that you came to the Ashram. The training the women get at the Ashram at present is not being provided anywhere in the world. Do whatever work you can while taking care of your health. Look after the children well, as if they were your own children. Keep Vimu with you if she agrees. I do not know where you have decided to stay. If you are going to stay in the hostel, Vimu will have to live away from you. Take particular care of her even if she lives away. It would be great if she could by some means come under your influence.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati : G. N. 4186

197. CONVOCATION ADDRESS AT GURUKUL KANGRI

March, 19, 1927

The Gurukul was Swamiji’s best creation and though he is physically not with us he lives amongst us in his Gurukul. It was his

1 Inferred from the fact that Gandhiji returned to Bardoli from Vedchhi on March 17, 1927 which was a Thursday.
2 Delivered on the occasion of its silver jubilee. This is from a report by Mahadev Desai.
most original contribution to education, inasmuch as when we had lost our heads over Western education he decided that we should think and act and educate ourselves in the Vedic way. Swamiji will live with us so long as his Gurukul lasts and the Gurukul will last so long as there is a single graduate of the Gurukul prepared to serve it with truth and self-sacrifice, and with the courage which was Swamiji’s and which is a synonym for forgiveness. Then there is brahmacharya on which Swamiji laid the greatest emphasis and without which all your education will come to naught. Avoiding lustful contact with women is not the last word on brahmacharya. It is only the beginning and the perfection is reached when the brahmachari refuses to be ruffled or angry, no matter what provocation is offered him. For anger is the destruction of virya, the vital essence.¹

I appeal to you to carry on the work, by forgetting which you will forget Swamiji and by killing which you will kill Swamiji. Remember Abdul Rashid has not murdered Swamiji, he has made him a martyr. The day you forget the Swami’s mission will be his day of death. The Swami was a great lover of untouchables. All who love him are in duty bound to carry on his mission. It will be a great misfortune if the Swami’s beloved cause is given up because of lack of funds or workers.

Continuing, Mr. Gandhi said that Malaviyaji has pleaded more strongly for khaddar than he could do, but he too wanted to appeal as khaddar helped the solution of the problem of untouchability. Khaddar and charkha provided food to the teeming millions, mostly the depressed classes. Hence khaddar and the removal of untouchability were interwoven and could not be separated.

If you want to save our ancient civilization and if you feel it a duty to save the villagers from destruction, then take up the message of khaddar from village to village.

Concluding, Mr. Gandhi said:

Truth is the bedrock of happy live. Be true to yourselves and the country.

Young India, 31-3-1927

198. SATYAGRAHA WEEK

April 6 is nearing. I assume that at that time efforts will be made at every place to sell khadi. I draw the attention of the citizens of Ahmedabad to the following note² sent by the Khadi Bhandar on Ritchie Road in Ahmedabad announcing reduction of prices during the period:

¹ What follows is from The Leader, 23-3-1927
² Bit reproduced here
I hope a good many citizens will buy this khadi. Everyone should remember that this reduction will be in force only from April 6 to April 13.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 20-3-1927

199. SPEECH ON SHRADDHANAND MEMORIAL FUND, GURUKUL KANGRI

March 19, 1927

We khadi workers make our collections in handkerchiefs, yours you would do in buckets. . . .

If I have criticized the Arya Samaj, I am also anxious to give my tribute of praise for its work. And those who give hearty praise have a right to criticize too. Of all religious and political bodies that have come into being of late years the Arya Samaj has made probably the greatest contribution to bridge the gulf between the classes and the masses that had been widening ever since the advent of the British in India. No institution is perfect, and I could, if I would, point out some of the defects of the Gurukul. But there is no questioning the fact that it has rendered substantial service to the country. Whenever I see a Punjabi youth capable of reading and writing Devanagari, I immediately conclude that he must have had his training in one of the Gurukuls. They have done more than any other institutions in these parts to revivify Sanskrit learning and Aryan culture.

Young India, 31-3-1927

1 From a report by Mahadev Desai
200. SPEECH AT NATIONAL EDUCATION CONFERENCE, HARDWAR

March 20, 1927

It is the duty of every Indian student to learn Sanskrit. It certainly is the duty of the Hindus, but it is also the Muslims’ because, in the final analysis, their forbears too were Rama and Krishna and they ought to know Sanskrit in order to know them. However, to maintain contacts with the Muslims, it is also the duty of Hindus to learn the former’s language. Today we run away from each other’s languages because we have become mad. Take it for a certainty that an institution which teaches fear and hatred of others surely is not a national institution.

Gandhiji said that national institutions should produce messengers of Hindu-Muslim unity. Institutions producing fanatical Hindus and Muslims were worth destruction. Educational institutions were not meant to produce bigoted persons. He was sure that there was no reason for disappointment and still the cause could prosper if self-reliant and self-sacrificing teachers were available.²

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 27-3-1927

201. SILENCE-DAY NOTE TO MIRABEHN

[March 21, 1972]³

I can’t decide. You must be guided by your own inner promptings. I asked you before agreeing. But it is quite all right. There is nothing in that agreement. You can discuss the pros and cons as if no agreement was reached and then decide. I do not want you to. But Jamnalalji does. You will go for having contact with him and there will be nothing but Hindi there to speak. But I would leave it to you. If you have positive disinclination you will certainly not go. It is a 2-months course.

¹ Delivered as President of the Conference, held under the auspices of Gurukul Kangri
² This paragraph is from The Leader, 23-3-1927
³ Scribbled on the back of a letter to Mirabehn dated 19-3-1927, apparently this is a silence-day note written before Mirabehn left the Bhagwadbhakti Ashram at Rewari on March 21, for further Hindustani studies. Vide also 1st footnote to “Letter to Ashram Women”, 22-3-1927.
202. SILENCE DAY NOTE TO CHAND TYAGI

March 21, 1927

I wanted to talk to you at night but you were not there. At 10 I entered upon my silence.

What do you wish to do? If nothing worries you here and you find you are at peace, you should propagate what you believe in and thereby serve the country.

... ... ...

You can go to the Ashram whenever you wish. Nowadays I do not stay there. I do not know, therefore, if you would like to go there.

You can also write to me any time you wish.

From the Hindi original: C.W. 4276. Courtesy: Chand Tyagi

203. LETTER TO MAMA D. SARAIYA

HARDWAR,
Fagan Vad 3, 1983 [March 21, 1927]

CHI. MAMA,

I was glad to read your letter. One should say you have acted nobly if you relieved Gangabehn without rancour and as a matter of dharma, and I am sure you will have peace hereafter because your mind would have regained its equanimity. We ought to be only too glad to have some of our dear ones spiritually inclined and regarding the entire world as their own family.

I hope you are now better. Please write to me again. Cultivate the habit of writing tidy letters and in ink.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2819. Courtesy: Purushottam D. Saraiya

---

1 As in the source
204. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

Hardwar

Fagan Vad 3, 1983 [March 21, 1927]

BHAISHRI FULCHAND,

Your letter about Rs. 2,000 has been referred to me. I have not a cowrie left with me. Whatever had been saved has been spent, so I shall have to go abegging once again.

I have written to them to send you the amount this time, whatever their difficulty. But what about later?

Now you will have to get your budget approved by me. You—i.e., you and Devchandbhai—should have the influence to raise the funds needed to run the Parishad. If this cannot be done, how long can we hold on?

Budgets for all the other centres should also receive prior approval. You should show to Nanabhai the budget for your school in particular. He should inspect the school and I shall try to raise the amount that he approves of. I am always thinking of affiliating all the national schools to the Vidyapith, because it is now becoming difficult to ask for separate funds. Of course we do collect from a great many donors in the name of khadi. I had hoped to accomplish something at the Parishad; but it did not come off. So now we have to think anew since it has been postponed to August. So get your budget first sanctioned by me before you put in your next demand. Ultimately each [institution] will have to stand on its own as in the rest of the country. Or we shall have to draw up some special scheme for education in Maha Gujarat. You should contact Nanabhai and consider all

23-24 Bombay
25-26 Kolhapur
27 Belgaum

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2833. Courtesy: Sharadabehn Shah

205. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

The matters. We may be said to have taken up three tasks, viz., the khadi movement, work among the Antyajas and national education in general.

I see all the three combined in khadi; education it certainly covers. I have not yet discovered any final solution for the Antyaja problem. I write all this for your co-workers to think over. You should write to me for clarifications, which might solve some of your problems.

Chi. Chhaganlal will go through this before delivering it to you, so that they will all know where I am at the moment.

Blessings from

BAPU

206. ANTED WORKERS

HARDWAR,

_Silence Day [March 21, 1927]_

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter which I am forwarding to Chi. Kishorelal. He is a man of truth and aspires for moksha. You and I ought to reconsider a matter about which he has doubts. You and I should, therefore, endeavour to convince him that the step you propose to take is not contrary to dharma. What Chi. Mama has written can be considered good, provided she has not done it in anger. It is all right if you take the step after mature deliberation. In that case Mama too will be perfectly at peace. If the move disturbs her it would not at all be wrong to suspect some flaw in it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8824. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

207. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

_Monday [March 21, 1927]_

BHAI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

I have your letter.

When I get the money it will help the charkha movement. I am very glad that pujya Malaviyaji is being progressively drawn to the charkha. I shall want large amounts for the charkha work. With his help I can raise larger funds.

1 From the tour programme
Bhaiji and Rameshwarji have decided to donate money for the construction of reservoirs of water for the Antyajas; it will be spent as directed by them.

I did not know Parasram collected scraps of paper. I have warned him against this fault. He will write to you. He had no wrong motive. He is a simpleton but I can get work out of him. He wishes to live with pujya Malaviyaji and Rabindranath for some days. I have asked him to try on his own to get himself admitted to their service.

In my opinion the following rules of conduct must be observed to safeguard one’s health while staying in Europe:

1. We should not take food to which we are not used.
2. In Europe they eat six or seven times a day, but we must not eat more than thrice. Do not get addicted to taking chocolate or other such things between meals.
3. They eat even at 1 o’clock at night. But we must eat nothing after 8 in the evening. When visiting people and places we are, it is believed, expected to take tea, etc. This is not true.
4. One should go walking at least six miles daily. One should walk both in the morning and in the evening.
5. It is not right to wear too many clothes, secret being that one must not feel cold. Walking shakes off cold.
6. It is not at all necessary to put on European dress.
7. One should try to get acquainted with the poor people of Europe; walking helps such acquaintance. When there is time at your disposal, it is better to walk.
8. Do not persuade yourself for a moment that since you have gone to Europe you have got to do something. Attempt only what clean and spontaneous efforts can accomplish.
9. Your stay in Europe will, I feel, result in at least one good thing. You can certainly build up your body.
10. May God save you from mental debauchery; very few Indians escape it. While their way of living is natural to them, it only helps to intoxicate us.
11. The practice of reading the Gita and the Ramayana must in no case be given up. If you have not been doing it already, the sooner you begin the better.

I am sure you did not expect advice in such minute detail. This I am giving because I have great faith in the goodness of yourself and your brothers. Few rich people possess your goodness and humility. I seek an intense growth in these qualities and I want to put them to use in the service of the nation. I have no faith in the principle of *shatham prati shathyam*¹. Therefore, wherever I see purity, truth and non-violence, etc., even in the smallest degree, I start collecting the treasure with the care of a miser, and it makes me happy.

You can ask for any further advice.

23-24 Bombay 27- April 4 Belgaum
25-26 Kolhapur 5-12 Madras

Yours,

Mohan das

[P.S]

Please acknowledge receipt.

From the Hindi original: C.W. 6146. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

---

208. ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

[March 21, 1927]²

[QUESTION:] 1. Do you feel it unbearable to live under the present political thraldom or not?

[ANSWER:] I do.

2. If so, are you yourself individually prepared to get rid of it and gain political freedom or not?

I am.

3. Is there any objection to suppose that "your being prepared" means that you have acquired two spiritual qualities, viz., soul-force and love of freedom?

You may suppose so.

4. Does not "preparation for the attainment of freedom" mean making the Indians endowed with the qualities and power necessary for such attainment which you respectively have acquired?

It does mean.

5. Is not intellectual and moral education necessary for acquiring such qualities?

It is.

¹ ‘Roguery towards a rogue’
² Vide the succeeding item.
6. If so, what are the ways of educating the whole nation and how much time will it take to do it?

Through spinning.

7. Is not the creation of a feeling of thorough disgust for political subjection extremely necessary?

It is.

8. If so, what may be in your opinion the percentage of people having such a feeling among the three hundred millions of Indians?

Difficult to estimate.

9. To create the consciousness of bondage is it not necessary to have the knowledge of the past glory of the motherland and to feel real restlessness on account of the present painful condition?

It is.

10. Is it possible to create soul-force in the absence of the said knowledge or the said restlessness?

Hardly.

11. Do acquisition of soul-force and the possession of the power to suffer any pains boldly and calmly constitute the chief pillars of your spiritual activities or not?

To an extent, yes.

12. Where, under what circumstances and how are the people to make use of their soul-force for wresting power from the rulers?

Throughout the country by non-violent non-co-operation.

13. What kind of intellectual, moral and physical preparation is necessary on the part of the people for the accomplishment of these two objects, viz., civil disobedience and refusal to pay Government taxes?

Hand-spinning gives them an idea of non-violence and self-confidence.

14. If our preparedness be looked upon as being complete, i.e., 16 annas, what proportion of the preparedness in terms of annas is necessary, in your opinion, on the part of your followers or the general public to bring about the attainment of freedom?

Eight annas one pie.

15. Is the public so prepared today? If not how much time do you think, it will take to be so prepared?

Not yet; unable to prophesy.

16. What percentage of people in the country knows the fact that there is a unique personality like Mahatma Gandhi in India?

I have no idea.
17. If it is taken for granted that one among a thousand may know it, how many persons per hundred thousand may have, in your opinion, the knowledge of Mahatmaji’s ideas of freedom and his activities?

1/1000th of those that know.

18. It seems that there is complete darkness with respect to such knowledge; if the darkness is to be dispelled, how long will it have to be done?

As long as is necessary.

19. Do you say that it is impossible to attain swaraj even if, in the absence of unity between the Hindus and Muslims, people of both communities should feel the miseries of political bondage to be unbearable and should struggle to be free from it, and even if a feeling should arise in both the communities that life without freedom is worse than death?

I do not, if both feel as you suggest.

20. Do you say that a painful consciousness of the unbearable political condition has not the power to bring into being the union of the communities belonging to two different cultures?

It has the power.

21. The religious persecution of the Hindus by the Mohammedans was the principal cause which contributed to the attainment of freedom in the days of Shivaji and people belonging to different castes became united to free themselves from religious persecutions. Readers of history do know the fact that the establishment of maths by Ramdas proved very useful in this respect. Is it not the fact that the freedom which the people want today is for freeing themselves from the political, industrial and commercial oppression?

Yes; indeed.

22. Whether untouchability goes away or not, whether the Hindu- Moham- medan disunion disappears or not, if, in spite of the existence of these two things, we could have two thousand persons maddened with the desire for freedom and endowed with soul-force, will you say that these men will not be able to gain the freedom of the country?

These two thousands will sweep away disunion and untouchability and bring swaraj.

23. If 1,400 civilians can hold such a vast country like India under subjugation will you say that the said two thousand persons endowed with the said qualities will not be able to take back India?

Vide answer 22.

24. In short, do you say that it is not possible to attain swaraj even if the one emotion of feeling a strong disgust for bondage and regarding life without liberty to be unbearable, pervades the whole of India?

Mere emotion will never bring swaraj.
25. If it is seen that the said emotion is quite indispensable and that it would lead to the attainment of swaraj, can it be created by your present lectures on khaddar? My lectures on khaddar are converting that emotion into energy.

_The Hindustan Times_, 30-4-1927

209. LETTER TO G. K TILAK

_IN MOVING TRAIN,_

_March 21, 1927_

DEAR FRIEND.

Your letter has been following me all this time. As you had taken considerable pains over your questions, but as I must not take them in _Young India_, I send you replies\(^1\) herewith. You may publish them if you like.

_Yours sincerely,_

M. K. GANDHI

_The Hindustan Times_, 30-4-1927

210. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

_Silence Day [March 22, 1927]_\(^1\)

SISTERS.

Parting this time was particularly painful as I was anxious to talk to you about things and to have your views on many more. But who after all is free? We are in God's hands and we dance as He makes us to. If we acted according to our own desires we would come to grief. And so I do not worry although my wish was not fulfilled. We shall meet again when He wills. Till then we shall communicate by means of letters.

This is what I would like you to do just now:

1. Acquire a methodical and sound knowledge of ginning, carding and spinning--so good that you may be able to teach others.

---

\(^1\) A pleader of Barsi

\(^2\) _Vide_ the preceding item.

\(^3\) From the reference to Mirabehn who left for Rewari Ashram on March 21; _vide_ the succeeding item.
2. Look after the common kitchen and make it an ideal place. For the present I do not want any one of you to give all your time to that work, but since this duty is yours by birth and training, I entrust to you the responsibility of seeing that the cooking is well done and that the kitchen is clean.

These two tasks are just the right ones for you. Are they not?

Mirabai will leave today for Rewari Ashram,¹ where Jamnalalji’s daughter is staying.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati G.N. 3642

211. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

_ON THE TRAIN, AFTER BHARATPUR_

_March 22, 1927_

CHI. MIRA,

The parting today was sad, because I saw that I pained you. And yet it was inevitable. I want you to be a perfect woman. I want you to shed all angularities. All unnecessary reserve must go. Ashram is the centre of your home, but wherever you happen to be must be your home. Without being a burden on people with whom we come in contact, we must get the things we need from them. We must feel one with all. And I have discovered that we never give without receiving consciously or unconsciously. There is a reserve which I want us all to have. But that reserve must be a fruit of self-denial, not sensitiveness. Yours is due to sensitiveness. This must go. I thought I would draw your attention. But I saw that I should have waited. However, the thing is done.

Do throw off the nervousness. You must not cling to me as in this body. The spirit without the body is ever with you. And that is more than the feeble embodied imprisoned spirit with all the limitations that flesh is heir to. The spirit without the flesh is perfect, and that is all we need. This can be felt only when we practise detachment. This you must now try to achieve.

This is how I would grow if I were you. But you should grow along your own lines. You will therefore reject all I have said in this that does not appeal to your heart or head. You must retain your individuality at all cost. Resist me when you must. For I may judge you wrongly in spite of all my love for you. I do not want you to impute infallibility to me.

¹ For further Hindustani studies

23-24 Bombay, Laburnum Road
24-26 Kolhapur
27 onwards Belgaum

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.]

You left money, etc. It has been sent to you.

From the original: C.W. 5211. Courtesy: Mirabehn.

212. SPEECH AT SANTA CRUZ, BOMBAY

March 23, 1927

Replying, Gandhiji began to address the gathering in Gujarati when he was requested to speak in Hindi as there was a large section of Madrasis and others, who could not understand Gujarati. Gandhiji, however, took votes and according to the majority began to speak in Gujarati but assured the minority that their claim would not be neglected. He said:

The fear entertained by Mr. J. K. Mehta is well-founded and I am really going to hit as hard as a man with non-violence as his creed can do for the wide difference between the amount given at Santa Cruz six years ago and the one given today. It was only on account of the pressing invitation of Mr. Mehta that I agreed to come here instead of going to Rewari as was originally fixed. You perhaps know that though I am not neglecting the cities I have been going to the villages very often these days because India resides not in her handful of towns but in villages. Even there it is not difficult to collect Rs. 3,000. You will perhaps be surprised to learn that the villages in Maharashtra and Bihar contributed a lakh and a quarter each during my last tour there. And khaddar too is spreading fast and wide in villages. I shall quote figures which will prove, in spite of all the odd

1 In reply to a welcome address by Jaisukhlal K. Mehta, Chairman, Bombay Suburban District Congress Committee
2 Rs. 3,000; against 52,000, six years earlier
rumours that khaddar is extinct, that khaddar is produced 20 times more than it was being manufactured in 1920, i.e., in the beginning of the movement. In 1926, khaddar worth at least Rs. 20 lakhs was manufactured and at least 50,000 women scattered in 1,500 different villages of the country were given work of spinning for which they were paid over Rs. 9 lakhs. But this position is not at all satisfactory. It does not satisfy me. I have found that khaddar is rarely seen in Bombay and other cities. In Bombay in 1921, the case was quite different. I can account for the present slackness on two grounds that either those who were wearing khaddar before have changed their opinion or that they were playing a false part in 1921.

Although this is not the occasion on which I can speak either on non-co-operation or Hindu-Muslim unity, I should state clearly that my faith in those things is as great and as firm as it ever was. I should say it is greater. If I want swaraj and swaraj of the type I have been struggling for all along the last few years, I cannot help feeling that Hindu-Muslim unity is absolutely necessary. But as one who can know human nature, I have found that the whole atmosphere is changed. But it is not so with khaddar. The result of the khaddar work is not disappointing. I have found that people are not tired of it. And for this we need not rely on newspapers which as a matter of fact are read only in cities. I have found no newspapers in Hardwar and yet Rs. 2 lakhs were easily collected there. That place is not like Bombay which seems to me to be an offshoot of England.

The money that I have been collecting at present goes to the All-India Deshbandhu Das Memorial Fund which is to be spent in village organization. The fitting memorial to the late Deshbandhu would be a thorough organization of villages and I dare say that charkha is the only way to organize the villages of India. I can give you an example of the Ranipuraj community of the Surat District where through the message of the charkha the community in about 104 villages has been thoroughly organized.¹ The illiterate women of that community have given up wearing heavy ornaments and all of them—men, women and children wore pure khaddar. It is for work among such classes and villages that money is wanted. I am the self-appointed barrister of the millions of poor people—Daridran-arayanas—of India and in their name I appeal to you the richer classes to contribute the greatest amount for the great movement of khaddar.

¹ Vide "Speech at Madhi, Mandvi Taluk", 15-3-1927

_The Bombay Chronicle, 24-3-1927_

213. FROM HIS TREASURE CHEST

I cull the following from gems the friend whom I have already introduced to the reader sends for my day of silence:

> The tongue of man reveals so imperfectly the secret mysteries of God, that words would have been to us rather a hindrance than a consolation.

_BROTHER GILES_

> Settle yourselves in solitude and you will come upon God in yourselves.

_TERESA_

> Thou needst not call Him to thee from a distance, thy opening and His entering are but one moment. It is harder for Him to wait, than for thee.

_MASTER EXKHART_

_Young India, 24-3-1927_

214. FACE TO FACE WITH THE PAUPER

The following\(^1\) is a free translation made by Mahadev Desai of an accurate account vividly told in the pages of Navajivan by a khadi worker of pauperism in parts of Bardoli taluk which is supposed to be one of the most fertile places of Gujarat. The account is written in the form of a story ‘the writer bids fair to become the people’s poet of a very high order. Its artistic beauty adds to its intrinsic worth I commend it specially to the attention of the sceptic.

_Young India, 24-3-1927_

215. KANGRI GURUKUL

Kangri Gurukul was the body in which the soul of Shraddhananji resided, no matter where its temporary earthly tabernacle wandered from time to time, and Shraddhanandji lives so long as the Gurukul lives. The best memorial therefore that can be erected to the memory of the deceased martyr is to perpetuate the Gurukul. No doubt the really permanent memorial will have to come through the character of the professors and the scholars of the Gurukul and through their determination to retain in it the predominance of ancient teaching and conduct based on it. Shradhanandji used with ample justification to plead that his Gurukul was a national institution in the non-co-operation sense long before the birth of Non-co-operation. He believed that to belong to a Government educational institution was to subscribe to the predominance of Western influence whether we willed or no. He did not object to assimilating what was useful of the West on his own terms and in his own time. To be a fitting memorial of the Swami the Gurukul must therefore keep its complete independence of the Government. And it is a matter of no small satisfaction that the Gurukul in spite of its independence of Government aid or influence continues to grow in numbers as I hope too it does in character, in the spirit of its revered founder.

---

\(^1\) Not reproduced here

But if the memorial depends for its real existence ultimately on the character of the scholars and the professors it has to depend presently upon financial support from the public. Acharya Ramadeva has issued an appeal for three lakhs of rupees. I understand that nearly two lakhs are already subscribed. The scene I witnessed when the appeal was made in that huge pandal on the Gurukul ground on the 19th instant was a never-to-be forgotten sight. People—men and women—vied with one another in pouring their rupees and notes into the buckets with which volunteers moved about among the visitors. There were hardly any coppers to be seen. I heartily commend this appeal to the attention of the public. I have stated my differences with the Arya Samaj and its doctrines. They abide. I have my differences about the conduct of Gurukul. But I am not blind to the services of the Arya Samaj and the necessity of Gurukuls. They have revivified religion, if they have also limited its growth. Every reform has that tendency in it. The wise sift the good from the bad and conserve what is good. The Gurukuls has much in it to conserve and those who would want it to be better than it is have but to prove their friendliness before they seek to introduce changes for its betterment. I have therefore no hesitation in identifying myself with the appeal for funds. There should be no delay or difficulty in making up the modest sum required.

Young India, 24-3-1927

1 Vide Appendix “Shraddhanand Memorial”, 3-3-1927.
2 Vide “Speech on Shraddhanand Memorial Fund, Gurukul Kangri”, 19-3-1927.
216. PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION OF “SELF-RESTRAINT v. SELF-INDULGENCE”

That the first edition was sold out practically within a week of its publication is a matter of joy to me. The correspondence that the series of articles collected in this volume has given rise to shows the need for such a publication. May those who have not made self-indulgence a religion, but who are struggling to regain lost self-control, which should under normal conditions be our natural state, find some help from a perusal of these pages. For their guidance the following instructions may prove useful:

1. Remember if you are married that your wife is your friend, companion and co-worker, not an instrument of sexual enjoyment.
2. Self-control is the law of your being. Therefore the sexual act can be performed only when both desire it and that too subject to rules which in their lucidity both may have agreed upon.
3. If you are unmarried you owe it to yourself, to society and to your future partner to keep yourself pure. If you cultivate this sense of loyalty, you will find it as an infallible protection against temptation.
4. Think always of that unseen Power which though we may never see we all feel within watching and noting every impure thought and you will find that Power ever helping you.
5. Laws governing a life of self-restraint must be necessary different from a life of self-indulgence. Therefore you will regulate your society, your reading, your haunts of recreation and your food. You will seek the society of the good and the pure.
   You will resolutely refrain from reading passion-breeding novels and magazines and read the works that sustain humanity. You will make one book your constant companion for references and guidance.
   You will avoid theatres and cinemas. Recreation is where you may not dissipate yourself but recreate yourself. You will therefore attend bhajan mandalis where the word and the tune uplift the soul.
   You will cat not to satisfy your palate but your hunger. A self-indulgent man lives to eat; a self-restrained man eats to live. Therefore you will abstain from all irritating condiments, alcohol which excites the nerves, and narcotics which deaden the sense of right and wrong. You will regulate the quantity and times of your meals.

1 This was published under the title, “Self-control”.

6. When your passions threaten to get the better of you go down on your knees and cry out to God for help. Ramanama is my infallible Help. As extraneous aid take a hip-bath i.e., sit in a tubfull of cold water with your legs out of it, and you will find your passions have immediately cooled. Sit in it for a rew minutes unless you are weak and there I danger of a chill.

7. Take brisk walking exercise in the open air early in the morning and at night before going to bed.

8. “Early to bed and early to rise, makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise,” is a sound proverb. 9 o’clock to bed and 4 o’clock to rise is a good rule. Go to bed on an empty stomach. Therefore your last meal must not be after 6 p.m.

9. Remember that man is a representative of God to serve all that lives and thus to express God’s dignity and love. Let service be your sole joy and you will need no other enjoyment in life.

Young India, 24-3-1927

217. TO A READER OF ‘‘YOUNG INDIA’’

I do not propose to publish your letter in defence of the purdah. I am of opinion that the purdah in India is recent institution and was adopted during the period of Hindu decline. In the age when proud Draupadi and spotless Sita lived there could be no purdah. Gargi could not have held her discourses from behind the purdah. Nor is the purdah universal in India. It is unknown in the Deccan, Gujarat and the Punjab. It is unknown among the peasantry and one does not hear of any untoward consequences of the comparative freedom which women in these provinces and among peasantry enjoy. Nor will it be just to say that the women or men in the other parts of the world are less moral because of the absence of the purdah system. “A reader of young India” seeks to defend everything that is ancient. Whilst I hold that the ancients gave us a moral code which is not to be surpassed, I am unable to subscribe to the doctrine of their infallibility in every detail. And who shall say what is really ancient? Are all the hundreded and eight Upanishads of equal sanctity? It seems to me that we must test on the anvil of reason everything that is capable of being tested by it and reject that which does not satisfy it even though it may appear in an ancient garb.

Young India, 24-3-1927

218. ‘IN SEARCH OF KNOWLEDGE’

Thus writes Sjt. S. D. Nadkarni:

In October 1921, to a correspondent asking the question, “Is your ‘soul-force’ attainable by the masses?”, you replied: “They have it already in abundance. Once upon a time an expedition of French scientists set out in search of knowledge and in due course reached India. They tried hard to find it, as they had expected, among the learned ones, but failed. Unexpectedly they found it in a parish home” (Young India, 27-10-1927, p. 342).

I had then thought in my innocence that you were referring to some real incident you had read of; and so being as curious as the French expedition itself, I approached you for details. You kindly answered my query personally, saying that you thought the article made it sufficiently clear that it was a purely imaginary account.

Thereafter in 1925, at a meeting with the Christian missionaries in Calcutta you said: “I am not able to say that here in this fair land ... man is vile. He is not vile. He is as much a seeker after truth as you and I are, possibly more so. This reminds me of a French book translated for me by a French friend. It is an account of an imaginary expedition in search of knowledge. One party landed in India and found Truth and God personified in a little pariah’s hut” (Young India, 6-8-1925, p. 274).

Now, if you are not going to deal with the topic in the further reminiscences of your life, I should be obliged if you could tell us through Young India (or communicate to me personally) the names of the book and its author, and say who translated it for you, and when and where. Is the translation published and available? I wish to ascertain whether the book is one of the two referred to in Yule and Burnell’s Hobon-Jobson (s. v. pariah) as

---

2 As in the source
3 Vide “Speech at Meeting of Missionaries”, 28-7-1925.
“Bernardin de St. Pierre’s preposterous though once popular tale, La Chaumiere Indienne (i.e., ‘The Indian Cottage’), whence too the misplaced halo of sentiment which reached its acme in the drama of Casimir Delavigne, and which still in some degree adheres to the name (‘pariah’).” (There is no question, of course, of my agreeing with the English critics’ judgment of the French authors).

I wish I could give Mr. Nadkarni the full information he wants. I forget the name of the story. The book was specially translated for me by an Anglo-French friend when he was staying with me at Tolstoy Farm near Johannesburg about 1910. I had intended to publish it but my treasure of books has suffered the same fate as my other treasures. I lost many valuable books and manuscripts during transit in 1915 and this precious translation was among them. But some of my readers will probably give the information Mr. Nadkarni desires. I have a recollection that the gifted author of the book makes his otherwise admirable story end in a girl of the pariah home marrying a Christian, as if the home where his scientists found knowledge was not complete without a love affair and without a marriage that must tear the girl away from her surroundings and make her less useful for the service of her neighbours.

Young India, 24-3-1927

219. INTERVIEW TO “THE BOMBAY CHRONICLE”

BOMBAY,

March 24, 1927

QUESTION: Comrade Saklatvala has asked you to be the leader of Trade Union movement in India. What is your answer to that call?

ANSWER: I do not consider that I am qualified for leadership.

But Mr. Saklatvala says that you are the best qualified man for the work.

It flatters my pride but it does not convince me.

How do you say that the Government is weakened by your Bardoli decision?¹

Had I continued the campaign, Bardoli people would have been done, and our cause would have suffered. There would have been much more tension than there is today. The fact is that the people were not prepared for non-violence and the campaign would have ended in a widespread terrorism. The Government know that Non-cooperation is not dead. They dread nothing so much as non-co-operation. They know how to deal with a violent outbreak but they don’t know how to deal with non-violence and non-co-operation. The Bardoli decision was an orderly and deliberate withdrawal, not a panicky rout. The weakening of Government prestige that had taken place at the time of the so-called ultimatum, still continues. It is open to us to undertake a forward movement at any time we choose. The awe of the Government is gone for ever.

¹ Vide “No and Yes”, 17-3-1927

The general consensus of opinion is that your reply to Comrade Saklatvala ought to have been a little more detailed. Do you propose giving him any more reply?

In my opinion I have given a sufficient reply. I could not treat each and every subject in detail. If there is any obscurity about my reply I should be prepared to remove it.

You have said in your reply that you have your own independent ways of organizing labour. Can you explain that viewpoint a little further?

Yes, I should organize labour by efforts from within. It is not so much discontent with capital that I want to inculcate as discontent with themselves. I want real co-operation between labour and capital. I shall convince the labourers that in many things they are to blame themselves instead of blaming the capitalists. As in the political so in the labour movement, I rely upon internal reform, i.e., self-purification. Such reform will command equitable treatment from employers. Throughout my experience both in South Africa and India, I have always laid the greatest stress on the principle that labourers must evolve strength from within. Then capital will become a real servant of labour. I seek to achieve co-operation between capital and labour, in the same way as I seek to bring co-operation between India and England.

Regarding the Muslim proposal for joint electorate, Mahatma Gandhi said that the joint electorate was a happy sign and augured well. He was not willing to hazard any detailed opinion before considering the question in all its aspects. He said the proposed All-India Convention should finally settle the matter.

[Q:] Do you intend visiting any foreign country in the near future?

[A:] I have no such intention at the present moment.

But what about China?

I cannot say anything definitely just yet, but I know I am not visiting China this year.

Did the khaddar message impress the pilgrims and sadhus at Hardwar?
It is very difficult to say. In fact, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviyaji had been trying his best to enlist the sympathy of those pilgrims and sadhus for khaddar propaganda. He is more in tough with them than I am. He is staying at Hardwar for 10 days during the mela and he will be doing all he can to interest the sadhus in the khaddar movement.

Would you arrange more conferences with them to secure their services for khaddar and prohibition work and also for the removal of untouchability?

Of course, the sadhus can do a lot in all those things but at present I have no idea whether I shall arrange any special conferences with them. Pandit Malaviyaji has taken the initiative in the matter and he will exercise greater influence on them than I can.

What specific methods of propaganda would you suggest to hasten prohibition in India? What do you think of renewing peaceful picketing with proper safeguards?

If picketing with proper safeguards is possible I shall welcome it at any moment but I do not know whether it can be renewed at present. Picketing requires an atmosphere of peacefulness but the question is whether that kind of atmosphere really exists in the country. I am personally ready to start picketing the moment I acquire confidence in a peaceful atmosphere, which I don’t possess at present.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 25-3-1927_

---

220. SPEECH AT SARVAJANIK JIVADAYA KHATA¹, GHATKOPAR

_March 24, 1927_

Accompanied by Sir Chunilal Metha, the Finance Member to the Government of Bombay, and Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel of Ahmedabad, Gandhiji paid a visit to the Sarvajanik Jivadaya Khata at Ghatkopar on Thursday morning. . . . After Gandhiji was shown round the stables of the institution and the cattle, . . . the Secretary of the institution . . . accorded a sincere welcome. . . .

[Replying,] . . . Gandhiji expressed his immense pleasure and congratulated the Committee for the Jivadaya Khata. Since he undertook the cow-protection work at Belgaum in 1925, he had longed to pay a visit to the institution, but he had not been able to do so because of his preoccupations. His tour in 1925 had given him many opportunities to study the subject of the protection of milch cattle.

---

¹ An institution founded in 1923 to prevent milch cattle being slaughtered and to supply pure milk to the citizens of Bombay cattle in India and he had come to the conclusion that slaughter of milch cattle could not be effectively prevented unless those who wanted to do so took to hide industry. The question of industry was very important in view of the fact that hides worth about nine crores were exported from India every year. It was not a sin even for Hindus to trade in hides and Gandhiji hoped to find a tannery in the Sarvajanik Jivadaya Khata when he visited it next. Concluding, Gandhi advised the Committee of the institution to give up breeding buffaloes and concentrate all their resources on breeding cows.

Mahatmaji said that if he were Governor of Bombay he would have those stables removed to a distance of 20 miles and given not 10 but thousands of acres of land with ample grass meadows. He argued the establishment of a leather factory attached to the association stables in order to run an institution on economic lines. The association should also link itself to agricultural institutions so that the manure might be utilized most profitably.1

_The Bombay Chronicle, 25-3-1927_

221. INTERVIEW TO A.P.I. ON MAHARASHTRA TOUR

POONA2, _March 24, 1927_

I never shared the fears of some of my friends that Maharashtra would receive the message of charkha-spinning coldly. So far as collections were concerned, they went beyond my expectations as my estimates were only one lakh, while total collections came to Rs. 1,20,000 excluding khadi sales which were quite as good as in Bihar.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 25-3-1927_

222. SPEECH AT BOYS’ MEETING, KOLHAPUR3

_March 25, 1927_

The little boys of the school had all been waiting in the sun with the handsome purse they had collected and they had the lesson of fearlessness from Gandhi’s lips:

_Fearlessness is the foundation of all education, the beginning and not the end. If you do not build on that foundation, the edifice of all your education will topple over._

And to send the lesson home to them he told them the story of Prahlada and exhorted them to declare the truth courteously and bravely without regard for the consequences as the twelve-year-old Prahlada did.

_Young India, 31-3-1927_

---

1 This paragraph is from _The Hindustan Times, 26-3-1927_
2 At Poona Railway Station on way to Kolhapur
3 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.

VOL. 38 : 2 JANUARY, 1927 - 3 JUNE, 1927  235
223. SPEECH TO CHRISTIANS, KOLHAPUR

March 25, 1927

At Negala, Mahatmaji was given a cordial welcome by the Christian community. The Principal of the Girls' Christian High School in his welcome address assured Mahatmaji that the Christian community was one with him in all his activities. In his reply, Mahatmaji said:

My experience tells me that the Kingdom of God is within us, and that we can realize it not by saying “Lord, Lord,” but by doing His will and His work. If therefore we wait for the Kingdom to come as something coming from outside, we shall be sadly mistaken. I am glad you are with me in my programme. I may assure you then that whatever I do is done with the object of that realization. Untouchability, you say, you would like to see removed as much as I. Well, then, I may tell you that you cannot remove untouchability without whole-heartedly taking up khadi work, for that work includes removal of untouchability, and goes beyond it. Do you know that there are thousands of villages where people are starving and which are on the brink of ruin? If we would listen to the voice of God, I assure you we would hear Him say that we are taking His name in vain if we do not think of the poor and help them. Mr. Sam Higginbottom, a Christian missionary friend, came to see me the other day to discuss this very thing. Fortunately he met me just in that area where the spinning-wheel and khadi had done their work. I ask you to go and visit such parts, and if you cannot do so, to take my word for it, that there is no better subsidiary occupation for the poor than khadi. If you cannot render the little help that they need, it is no use talking of service of God and service of the poor. Please go to the exhibition and see things for yourselves, and try to identify yourselves with the poor by actually helping them.

Young India, 31-3-1927

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.
2 This paragraph is from The Bombay Chronicle, 29-3-1927
3 Khadi Exhibition; Gandhiji had inaugurated it earlier during the day.
224. SPEECH AT KOLHAPUR

March 25, 1927

The Diwan saw him during the day, and he had a long talk with him. Gandhiji asked him if there was anything like a ban on khadi in Kolhapur State. There may have been something like it, he said, but there was nothing now.

Have I your permission then to say to the people at the public meeting in your name that people may go to the palace and all State offices and attend functions dressed in khadi?

The Diwan had no objection, and Gandhiji declared the thing at the public meeting and thanked him for the assurance. He said:

Do not have any illusion about khadi. It is not that khadi invests the wearer with any sort of saintliness. It is the duty of everyone who has the good of the poor at heart to wear it. Even an adulterer and a prostitute may wear it. This is how I would approach them. ‘As to our conduct,’ I would say to them, ‘you are answerable to God. But whether you are able to mend your ways or no, you can certainly wear khadi and do some service to the poor. He who wastes money on liquor is a sinner. He who wastes money on tobacco is a smaller sinner, if you will. The one who wastes money on foreign cloth is as great a sinner as the second if not the first, and the one who uses Indian mill cloth has neither virtue nor vice to his credit or debit. But the khadi-wearer has distinctly something to his credit inasmuch as he serves both the poor and his country. Khadi immediately takes him up from a lower level and makes him the friend of the poor.’

Young India, 31-3-1927

225. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

[Before March 26, 1927]\(^1\)

MY DEAR CHILD,

I have your pathetic letter. I was wondering why there was nothing from you so long. Now I know. It distresses me to find you in such a dilapidated condition. I am writing this in the midst of distractions. I have not a moment to spare. I therefore send you my

---

\(^1\) From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
\(^2\) From the reference to his South India tour it seems that this was written before Gandhiji became ill.
love and prayerful blessings. I am in the South in April. I must make a desperate effort to meet you during the tour.

When Maria returns I must see what can be done for spinning.

With love to you all,

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat.Courtesy: National Archives of India; also My Dear Child, p. 87

226. DISCUSSION WITH DR. WANLESS

[March 26, 1927]

That is an instance where the doctors fortunately succeeded in prevailing upon Gandhiji. There have been instances in which they have failed. For Gandhiji, who in many respects is an ideal patient, as many doctors have certified, also at times becomes the despair of his doctors. The doctor immediately after the collapse prescribed undisturbed bodily rest, including cessation from spinning.

Well, then, take my blood-pressure, before spinning and after spinning, and if you can convince me that after spinning it has gone up to an alarming extent, I shall accept your advice. On the contrary, I assure you spinning is a positive relaxation, it soothes the nerves. And then, doctor, you must know that mine is a code of life far different from yours. For instance, you would prescribe all sorts of medicines. Now I have laid down a course of life, which, in certain respects, I may not change. So if you give me a medicine which is composed of five ingredients I would take it, provided you agree to my forgoing my meal which may under no circumstances exceed five articles a day. So you must either convince me that the medicine is more essential for my health than the diet, or must reconcile yourself to administering no medicine. Then there is another thing. Spinning is a thing I cannot live without. If I must eat and live I must spin. And what a glorious death it would be if you came and found me spinning and collapsing in the midst of it. You would abuse those about me to your heart’s content, if you insisted on your discipline as a doctor, but if you are

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 From The Bombay Chronicle, 28-3-1927 and Young India, 31-3-1927
3 For the medical opinions, vide Appendix “Medical Opinions”, 29-3-1927.
good you will say it has been a welcome death. You must know that I would be conscience-stricken and make myself most miserable if I continued to live on and was not able to spin. Yes, I may stop reading, writing and even spinning, provided I stop feeding too. Will you permit me that?

No, doctor, I may not implicitly obey you, unless you can claim infallibility.

“If we could claim it,” rejoined the doctor with justice, “we should not be administering drugs, but be oracles sitting in temples.”

No wonder Dr. Wanless frankly said that no treatment was necessary excepting rest for an indefinite period.

Young India, 14-4-1927

227. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

[After March 26, 1927]

DEAR SATIS BABU,

Well, it is not much use inquiring about you now that I am myself in the mire. I am trying to pull myself out. But if God wills otherwise what is my trial worth? Anyway I do not expect to go beyond 13th April, 1928. I have nothing new to say or give. I may collect more, give a little more guidance and patch here and patch there. But really the clock has struck for me. To reduce the message to execution is left for you. You have therefore to live and work. If I survive I shall not be of much use for active work evidently. Let us see: “Thy will be done, not ours, oh Lord!” What is the use then even of peeping into the future? Just for the moment I appear to be as fit as a fiddle. And so I amuse myself by sending love messages to friends I can think of and have no time to talk to.

My love to you and Hemaprabha Devi.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1635

---

1 It appears that this letter was written after Gandhiji fell ill.
228. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

Sunday [On or before March 27] 1927

CHI. MANI,

I have been waiting for your letter. I know you have been deliberately refraining from writing. But now there is no need for it. How far have you progressed in Sanskrit? And would you now be ranked first in carding and spinning?

No news from Karachi. How is your health?

I am improving every day. There is no cause for anxiety.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—Manibehn Patelne, pp. 54-5

229. NATIONAL WEEK AND GUJARAT

I hope that Gujaratis will heartily respond to the appeal made by Shri Vallabhbhai Patel on behalf of the Gujarat Provincial Congress Committee in connection with the National Week. One can say that collecting a sum of Rs. 1 lakh is child’s play for Gujarat. This amount, moreover, is required for work among the suppressed classes, which include Antyajas and the Raniparaj community. From now on, we will describe Antyajas too as dalit. The term was first used by Swami Shraddhanand. Swami Vivekananda chose an English word having the same meaning. He described the untouchables not as “depressed” but as “suppressed” and quite rightly. They became, and remain, what they are because they were suppressed by the so-called upper classes. The Hindi word for this is dalit. Among all the suppressed classes, the untouchables are the most suppressed. The Rani (Kali) paraj community is also suppressed, and so are other communities, like Oghra, etc. It is the object of the Provincial Committee to serve all these communities to the best of its resources. This

1 From the reference to Sanskrit, spinning, carding and khadi; vide “Letter to Manibehn Patel”, 28-3-1927.
2 The source has these words in English.
3 ibid.
is constructive work which will win swaraj; it is a philanthropic activity and is a part of dharma. I hope, therefore, that everyone will enthusiastically respond to this appeal and the sum of one lakh will be collected in no time, and also that honest people will come forward and enroll themselves immediately as volunteers for this work.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 27-3-1927

230. PROGRESS OF KHADI

I have not been able to publish Lakshmidas’s letters describing his tour, for I have had no time at all to read and arrange them properly. A good number of useful letters from him have accumulated. I have decided to spare time somehow and publish some of the material. I give below1, from among these letters, those describing the activities of the Chandranagar Pravartak Sangh and the Khadi Pratishthan Kala Shala.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 27-3-1927

231. CONDITIONS OF COW-PROTECTION2

It has been a matter of sorrow for me to have taken up the burden of cow-protection during the ending years of my life. But there need be no sorrow when burdens come not of one’s seeking but when they seek one irresistibly. And so has been for me the case with cow-protection.

Recently at Ghatkopar, Bombay, I had the occasion to visit the institution3 of the humanitarian society ably managed by its secretary Sjt. Nagindas. It is now conducting an experiment in dairying with the laudable object ultimately of replacing the illmanaged and disease-breeding private dairies of Bombay which are situated in the heart of the city and where there is no exercise ground for the cattle, and where the best cattle are prematurely given to the butcher’s knife.

1 Not translated here
2 This was written on or before March 28, 1927; vide “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”, 28-3-1927.
3 Vide “Speech at Sarvajanik Jivadaya Khata, Ghatkopar”, 24-3-1927.
But though the institution is ably managed, it has some inherent defects to which upon its invitation I had to draw the Society’s attention. Incidentally I ventured to lay down the conditions of cow-protection which are well worth repeating:

1. Every such institution should be situated out in the open where it is possible to have plenty, i.e., thousands of acres, of open ground capable of growing fodder and giving exercise to the cattle. If I had the management of all the goshalas, I should sell the majority of the present ones at handsome profits and buy suitable plots in the vicinity except where the existing places may be needed for mere receiving depots.

2. Every goshala should be turned into a model dairy and a model tannery. Every single head of dead cattle should be retained and scientifically treated and the hide, bones, entrails, etc., should be used to the best advantage. I should regard the hide of dead cattle to be sacred and usable as distinguished from the hide and other parts of slaughtered cattle, which should be deemed to be unfit for human use or at least for Hindu use.

3. Urine and dung in many goshalas are thrown away. This I regard as criminal waste.

4. All goshalas should be managed under scientific supervision and guidance.

5. Properly managed every goshala should be and can be made self-supporting, donations being used for its extension. The idea is never to make these institutions profit-making concerns, all profits being utilized towards buying maimed and disabled cattle and buying in the open market all cattle destined for the slaughterhouse.

6. This consummation is impossible if the goshalas take in buffaloes, goats, etc. So far as I can see, much as I would like it to be otherwise, not until the whole of India becomes vegetarian, can goats and sheep be saved from the butcher’s knife. Buffaloes can be saved if we will not insist upon buffalo’s milk and religiously avoid it in preference to cow’s milk. In Bombay on the other hand, the practice is to take buffaloes’s milk instead of cow’s milk. Physicians unanimously declare that cow’s milk is medically superior to buffalo’s milk and it is the opinion of dairy experts that cow’s milk can by judicious management be made much richer than it is at present found to be. I hold that it is impossible to save both the buffalo and the cow. The cow can be saved only if buffalo-breeding is given up.
The buffalo cannot be used for agricultural purposes on a wide scale. It is just possible to save the existing stock, if we will cease to breed it any further. It is no part of religion to breed buffaloes or for that matter cows. We breed for our own uses. It is cruelty to the cow as well as to the buffalo to breed the latter. Humanitarians should know that Hindu shepherds even at the present moment mercilessly kill young male buffaloes as they cannot profitably feed them. To save the cow and her progeny—and that only is a feasible proposition—the Hindus will forgo profits from the trade concerning the cow and her products, but never otherwise. Religion to be true must satisfy what may be termed humanitarian economics, i.e., where the income and the expenditure balance each other. The attainment of such economies is just possible with the cow and the cow only with the assistance of donations for some years from pious Hindus. It should be remembered that this great humanitarian attempt is being made in the face of a beef-eating world. Not till the whole world turns predominantly vegetarian is it possible to make any advance upon the limitations I have sought to describe. To succeed to that extent is to open the way, for future generations, to further efforts. To overstep the limitation is to consign the cow for ever to the slaughter-house in addition to the buffalo and the other animals.

Hindus and the humanitarian societies in charge of goshalas and pinjrapoles, if they are wisely religious, will bear the foregoing conditions of cow-protection in mind and proceed immediately to give effect to them.

Young India, 31-3-1927

232. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA MUKERJEE

March 28, 1927

MY DEAR SATIS BABU,

I know you are thinking of me. To say “don’t” would be cruel. But to say “pray” would be just. Ill or well, living or dying, should not matter to you or to me. Anxiety would not add one moment to my allotted time. Nothing is yet fixed as to what I am to do next. I am allowing myself to be guided by the doctors as much as is possible for me to do.
“Take no thought for the morrow” is a beautiful saying recorded of Jesus. बुध दुल्हर तम जूत्वा लाभालाभी नराजजोरि has a powerful appeal for me at the present moment. The underlying thought is the same in both the sayings.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a copy C.W. 9171. Courtesy: K. P. S. Malani

233. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

NIPANI,

March 28, 1927

CHI. MAGANLAL,

You must not be alarmed at my illness. You should remove the inconveniences to Bhai Bomanji and do nothing more. He needs the commode and other things upstairs.

Mrityunjaya promised to observe discipline, relying on which I suggested that Vidyavati and Prabhavati may be accommodated within the Ashram precincts. Do we not ourselves live there? I trust Mrityunjaya’s word as much as I trust other persons’. He is a very polite and truthful boy. He has all of Rajendra Babu’s qualities. But you may, of course, accommodate him somewhere else if you want to.

Why is the Vijapur case hanging fire? We will not give any interest. How can we? Does Deshpande Saheb decline to work?

Now you must write out the thing for Sir Gangaram.

I am writing to Chhotelal. Write what you can about cow-protection. Let us add no more buffaloes to our stock. Read my article¹ in Young India.

Purushottamdas has expressed an altogether different opinion about the Ramachandra lift. Please consider his arguments with patience. I hope you have arranged for the spindle and have written to Apte. You must have sent over the essay on spinning.

It is good that you gave up your vow of taking salt-free food. Sharadabehn says she would do four hours’ spinning and carding, and whatever sewing there may be as also help in the kitchen as much

¹ Bhagavad Gita, II. 38: “Pleasure and pain, gain and loss, victory and defeat—treating them alike.”
² Inferred from the contents
³ Vide “Conditions of Cow-protection”, 28-3-1927.
It is good that you gave up your vow of taking salt-free food. Sharadabehn says she would do four hours’ spinning and carding, and whatever sewing there may be as also help in the kitchen as much as she can. Now let me know how much she has been able to carry out.

If I can hold on till June I want to come over for the Parishad I can do so even earlier.

Kaka must have himself read to you my letter to him. I have letters in this connection from Kaka and the other teachers. Kaka has withdrawn his attack on hearing of my indisposition. I wish you would all take decisions on merits. You should attach no importance to my illness. You will not find it in my writing. Today it is just an illness, tomorrow there may be death. Why think about it? Or let us make our decisions after reckoning on the inevitability of death. So that it is no special factor to be considered.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]
My programme has not yet been settled.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9126. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri
234. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

NIPANI,
Silence Day [March 28, 1927]

DEAR SISTERS,

Do not worry if I tell you that I have been ill. Today it is only a small illness. In a few years life itself will pass away. But what does it matter? The Gita clearly teaches us and we too see daily ourselves that those who are born die and those who die are born again. Everyone repays his debt more or less and passes away.

I don’t say this lightly, but quite seriously. If it were not for human passion there will be no disease. A person who has no passion has also to die. But he drops gently down like a ripe fruit. I hope and pray that I should drop like that. I ever have this hope and wish. But who knows? Passions I still have and they play their part. The state of complete freedom from passion can be realized only through personal experience.

Devote yourselves entirely to your duties. Youth is given to us to conquer passions. We should not allow it to pass away fruitless. Safeguard your purity. Do not give up the spinning-wheel. As far as possible do not leave the Ashram either.

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3643

235. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

NIPANI,
Silence Day, March 28, 1927

CHI MANI,

Don’t waste a thought on my illness. We take no note of the years passing by. Now, like advancing age, is not disease too written into men’s destiny, prone as they are to passion? Some pass away in the natural course; but go all of us must. Where then is the sense in lamenting over it?
There is yet no telegram about you; I expect one any time. Be prepared. What is your progress in Sanskrit? I hope your carding and spinning can now be regarded as all right, can they not?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Though this is written on the same day as the letter1 to Ashram Women, it will reach you later because it is past the time of clearance.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—Munibehn Patelne, p 54

236. LETTER TO RADHA

March 28, 1927

CHI. RADHA,

Did you forget you were forbidden to fall ill? Do not tell me that those who live in glass-houses should not throw stones at others. Well, I had my own illusions and I over-worked myself, for which God has laid me low. But what had you been kicking against? Now forget it, we are faced with the fact of your illness. Well, then, learn to be cheerful in spite of it.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

237. LETTER TO PYARELAL NAYYAR

March 28, 1927

I hope you are not ruffled to hear that I have had an attack. An attack may prove fatal. The present one should be regarded as a clear notice: If not today, then some other day—I have stipulated the period till the 13th of April, 1928. But then one who has escaped a catastrophe may live for a hundred years. If we live we will spin and if we cannot spin we will refuse to live. Isn’t that all right?

1 Vide the preceding item.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

238. LETTER TO JAMNALAL

March 28, 1927

[CHI.] JAMNALALJI,
You ought not to have been upset. The light is bound to go out one day; now it has only dimmed. It is all the same to us whether it dims or dies away. That which gives light must grow faint and go out.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

239. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

March 28, 1927

CHI. KAKA,
You seem to be working the wrong way. I may put it thus: the relation continues to be like that between master and maid. You did not think of your earlier resolves; did not consider the earlier letter nor did you wait for Maganlal to come. I have letters from all the teachers. Much of what I have said to you applies to them as well. I shall accept whatever you decide after consulting Maganlal. Don’t let my illness come in the way. Make no tentative decision. There should be no violence if you reach a decision on merits. Regard the Ashram and the school as belonging to you all and do what you please without taking my presence into account.

Don’t worry on my account. You can all be regarded as wise, so I do not have to cheer you up. Now what is there to follow except death? Let that too come by the 13th of April, 1928. This interval is not too short for the attainment of swaraj in my lifetime. I am growing more and more convinced that only the reign of the spinning-wheel will bring swaraj; dedicate your lives to establishing it, if you all have the faith I have.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
240. LETTER TO VELANBEHN

March 28, 1927

Here is one sick person asking another why the latter has fallen ill. Now never mind if you have fallen ill. I hope you are cheerful as ever; or are you not? In our ignorance we might say we cannot prevent or control diseases. But can it not be said that being cheerful in spite of ill health rests entirely with us? So never lose spirit, though ill, and always remember Rama.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

241. LETTER TO ASHRAM CHILDREN

March 28, 1927

BOYS AND GIRLS.

You are all students of the Gita, and this study should always weigh with you. If therefore you are alarmed at the news of my illness you should look to the Gita for assuagement. I am stuck after I finished translating the second chapter. I am therefore dwelling with delight on that chapter. You too should do the same—the body cannot escape due chastisement. What is there to lament over life and death? Those who die are to be born again and those who live are destined to die. Why then be glad about life and lament over death? Yes, there is one thing to remember. Having known this we should discover our duty and then stick to it till the end. You for your part have found out your goal in life, by reasoning perhaps or through faith. Now beware of slipping. You will then continue to play as usual without being affected by news of my collapse, not to speak of just being laid up. If anyone talks of my total collapse you should prove it to be incon-sequential by carrying on your task. May I expect this from you?

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
242. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

NIPANI,
Silence Day [March 28, 1927]

CHI. MANILAL AND CHI. SUSHILA,

I have got letters from you both. I must say I was pained. The slightest deviation from truth pierces me like a dart. I can forgive Sushila’s slip considering her a child with no self-mastery, but there was no excuse for you to have slipped. Now what is done is done—make no more promise to me; it is enough if you keep whatever you have already made.

Don’t worry on account of my illness. There is certainly no need for you to be here. You can serve me best by always being faithful in your own duties. Fleeting are the bonds of flesh; they will not endure. Why lament over this, why brood over it?

With a wish that both of you should be noble and illustrious,

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G.N. 4714. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

243. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Silence Day [March 28, 1927]¹

Do not be scared by the news of my illness. Being scared is forbidden for all. You must go on doing your work as if nothing had happened to me.

I visited Chi. Mama². She is terribly worn in body. She can recover only if God so wills. It will be good if on completion of one year, you visit your relatives and do some heartsearching. Chi. Mama will feel happy. Go and see her and give her what advice you think proper. Also hear what Kishorelalbhai may have to say.

¹From the reference to Gandhiji’s illness and the addressee’s daughter’s critical condition this letter appears to have been written at the end of March, 1927. The last Monday in the month was March 28.

²Mama D. Saraiya, addressee’s daughter, who died soon after; vide “Letter to Gangabehn Vaidya”, 10-4-1927.
CHI. GANGABEHN,

Do not be scared by the news of my illness. Being scared is forbidden

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 11382; also C.W. 8826

244. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

NIPANI,

Silence Day [March 28, 1927]¹

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. Do not be worried in the least by anything you may hear about me². I am watching what happens. I shall not write more.

You must have received the bangles.

For the present, Devdas has gone to Amaravati with Janakibehn³. I have told him to go to you whenever he desires.

I hope your health is improving.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

---

¹ The addressee received the letter on March 30, 1927. The Monday prior to this was March 28, when Gandhiji was at Nipani.
² Gandhiji had developed high blood-pressure and had been advised complete rest.
³ Janakidevi Bajaj
245. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

NIPANI,
Silence Day [March 28, 1927]

CHL ANASUYABEHN,

Do not get frightened. Today the cart has fallen into a ditch, tomorrow it will break. Sooner or later that will happen. Why need we fear it? Remain engrossed in your work. It will be enough if we ceaselessly strive to reach what we believe to be our ideal and do not give it up even if we break in the effort. I am being looked after quite well. You need not therefore worry on that account. It is not yet decided where I should stay and what regimen I should follow. It will be in a day or two. If Shankerlal arrives there he will read this, otherwise send the letter wherever he is. Worrying will not help in the least.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G.N. 11571

246. LETTER TO E. STANLEY JONES

NIPANI,
March 30, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

My answer to your letter is ‘yes’. It means the discovery of God’s laws. God has laid me low for the moment. But He is infinitely merciful.

My apologies to Mrs. Jones. I have not forgotten her letter.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhiji

From a photostat: C. W. 11343. Courtesy: Mrs. Eunice Jones Mathews

1 Inferred from the reference to Gandhiji’s ill health and his stay at Nipani.
2 Gandhiji took ill on March 24 and was advised rest by doctors in a hill station.
247. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

[End of March 1927]

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA.

I got the letter you wrote before you left. I hope you have arrived safe.

I had sent a radio set for you, but before it could reach you your steamer had left the wharf. I had it sent within the time fixed by you.

One who has failed to keep one’s word should become more resolute. You could not keep your promise, so now you have resolved not to make any. Remember this is not the way to rise; it only leads to one’s fall. May God help you . . .

From the Gujarati original: G.N. 4715. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

248. LETTER TO CHAND TYAGI

[After March 31, 1927]

It does not matter if you omit to give a stamp[ed receipt] when the party agrees. There should be no rudeness, that is all.

From the Hindi original: C.W. 4277. Courtesy: Chand Tyagi

249. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[April 1, 1927]

CHI. MIRA.

Your letter and also wire. You must not be perturbed. The crash was bound to come some day. You must forget me in the body. You can’t have it for ever. You must do the work in front of you. I must

---

1 The addressees were to sail for South Africa immediately after their marriage.
2 The rest of the letter is not available.
3 In reply to his letter of March 31
4 From the postmark
5 In reply to Mahadev Desai’s telegram dated March 27, 1927 from Nipani, which read: “Bapu has narrowly escaped attack of apoplexy. High blood-pressure still continues. Doctors ascribe it to overwork, nervous exhaustion and advise complete rest, cancellation all programmes, hot months at any rate. Leaving for Belgaum twenty-eighth.”
not write more for fear of offending the doctor and those around me. I am taking as much rest as I think I need. But I cannot pamper the body overmuch. You must promise not to worry. Merge yourself in your work.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.]

Movement uncertain yet.

SHRIMATI MIRABEHN
BHAGWADBHAKTI ASHRAM
RAMPURA
REWARI

From the original: C.W. 5213. Courtesy: Mirabehn

250. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

AMBOLI,
Friday, April 1, 1927

HIGH PRIEST OF THE LOWLY,

My health has tied me down to the bed; yesterday therefore I could go through your [draft] speech from one end to the other. A person like me could learn a little from it but it is my humble opinion that as a presidential address it will not do. I do not write this in exercise of any right of “veto” that you have conferred on me. I am only arguing with you as a friend.

The speech gives no evidence of a sense of proportion. We seem to have lost it. Another reason is that it violates the implicit understanding with the Rana Saheb. A third reason is that the speech does not suit the kind of audience we are going to muster.

I say there is no sense of proportion because this speech does not take into account the past convention. There is a breach of our implicit understanding with the Rana Saheb that there should be no personal criticism, etc. And the speech will be neither appreciated nor read by the sections whom we are at the moment trying to rouse. If you follow Gulliver’s Travels and conceive an imaginary country in which to apply your correctives, you could say all that you have said; or if you emulate Aesop you could have a bird of your choice perched on every tree in Saurashtra to expound your doctrines through their chatter. And then you could have instructed us while you amused us. Or like Vyasa you may create sub-human and super-human characters, reject the past, compile a history of mankind and then give us a miniature Mahabharata of Saurashtra.

We needs must train a new class of audience for the speech that you have drafted or that has been drafted for you. Our first task therefore will be to annul the constitution adopted at Bhavnagar. I may perhaps agree to this. And then we should call a conference of such select people as would be competent to appreciate and also act upon the thoughts contained in your speech. We should place before them your suggestions and have them implemented.

I would therefore make the following suggestions: You should call a small committee and place your ideas before them. You may then lay the foundation of your speech as was the practice followed by the Congress in the past. Speeches by Wedderburn, Webb, Bradlaugh and others used to be placed before Pherozeshah, Gokhale and others for approval. In this way a tradition was maintained. This state of affairs, I know, came down to the times of Sinha. Your speech belongs to that tradition. I do not suggest that it is of no use; we want a new society to make use of it. You cannot address such speeches to peasants.

Whatever happens to me the Conference must be held in June. I suggest that at the same time we should decide upon the constitution of the Conference and first put our own house in order. And then start immediately a new era by convening the newly constituted Conference. But I cannot explain all this in a letter. I think there is no sense in discussing individual points when I am recommending a radical revision of your draft.

Though of course I write this, at the moment I am so weak I cannot invite any one of you to come here soon. You should therefore confer with Devchandbhai, Fulchand and Amritlal and do whatever you have to. I would also invite Patwari, Pattani Saheb and Shukla Saheb to this meeting. I would acquaint myself with everyone’s opinion and do what appears good for us. But then that is how I think. If you go ahead you should also obtain Vallabhbhai’s advice. Whatever you do let it be based on solid foundations.

Wishing success in all your noble efforts,

BAPU
You can ask me anything when you write to me; whether it does any good can be judged by you or God.

Friday—Belgaum
[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

251. DISCUSSION WITH DR. JIVARAJ MEHTA:

April 3, 1927

GANDHIJI: How long may I accept the hospitality of a Chief who has been kindness itself? And apart from the climate, I can be as restful at Sabarmati as at any other place. It is not the heat that matters, though I am confident of dodging even that heat by various devices. And if we are to identify ourselves with the poor, surely we should understand that a vast mass of our people live and work and toil in excessive heat of the sun, and never think of going for a change when an illness overtakes them.

The argument is unanswerable though the doctor who concerns himself mainly with physiological considerations may brush it aside. But Gandhiji has had always the good fortune of having as his friends doctors who, at least so far as he is concerned, are prepared to consult not merely the needs of his body, but the needs of his soul, and try to suit their advice as regards keeping of the body to his mental and spiritual predilections.

GANDHIJI: If then I am merely to vegetate, I must be content to recuperate in my own place.

DR. MEHTA: But you will not vegetate. Your rest is work itself, for it will set you up and make the body stand another spell of strain.

But that rest I can have at Sabarmati.

Yes, you may have it, and yet the heat might affect the blood-pressure, and retard recovery.

1 As in the source. The letter was apparently written in Belgium but Amboli address was given at the top for the addressee’s benefit.
2 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”; as a result of this discussion Gandhiji agreed to go to Nandi Hills.
3 From a report in The Bombay Chronicle, 2-4-1927 and The Hindu, 6-4-1927
4 Chief of Savantwadi at whose bungalow Gandhiji was staying in Amboli
If you can find me some sort of work at the hill-station you propose, or if there is near prospect of my taking up the thread of my interrupted programme, I might reconcile myself to Bangalore or some such place.

Work is there enough for you and always. I am not going to cut you off from your normal activity. The strain you were putting yourself to was abnormal. As soon as you begin to feel better people may see you, offer the purses they may have collected, workers may present you reports of work, and receive suggestions and advice from you. All I want you to do is to continue to direct, without taking any actual share in the work yourself. You do as much light reading as possible, and write your autobiography but not attend to piles of correspondence.

I am glad. But what is light reading? Reading that does not tax me, isn’t it?

Young India, 14-4-1927

252. DISCUSSION ON NATIONAL WEEK AT AMBOLI

April 4, 1927

Two days before the National Week’ Ghandhiji asked how we intended to spend the week at Amboli. Twelve hours’ continuous plying of the charkha, said I. That was far from satisfying him. He said:

Twelve hours’ is all right, I shall also contribute my hour. But you must go to Savantwadi and hawk khadi there during the week, you must try to go to the untouchables’ quarters, inquire about their welfare, see if they have schools, wells, etc. Even when Devdas and you go to Savantwadi, I shall see that the wheel is kept turning.

Young India, 21-4-1927

253. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 4, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

Though you absolve me from having to write to you I cannot deny myself the joy of writing to you every Monday. Writing love letters is a recreation, not a task one would seek an excuse to shirk. I am better though still weak.

---

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 April 6 to 13
Dr. Mehta came all the way from Bombay to examine the body. He is emphatically of opinion that all touring should be given up for some months to come. He does not forbid reading in the bed or even occasional letters to friends. If I take full rest he thinks that I would regain most of the lost strength but never be strong enough to undertake the exacting tours such as the one that came to an abrupt end on the 25th ultimo. We shall see. If the tour is finally cancelled, I must take my rest at the Ashram. I shall come to a decision today or tomorrow. The probability is that it will be cancelled. Even so I shall not move out before Tuesday next week.

But why are you having these attacks? Is it mere spiritual agony or has the climate also anything to do with it? If you need a bracing climate you must move out. How do you find the climate there?

It was quite right not to have gone to Bharatpur. If Shanta is there, please give the enclosed to her.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5214. Courtesy: Mirabehn

254. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

Silence Day, Chaitra Sud 3 [April 4, 1927]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I am eager to know Sir Gangaram’s experience of farming.

I like your co-operation with the teachers, but only if it is sincere and spontaneous. If it has come about owing to my illness there will again be some snags. I yearn for such involuntary co-ordination as there is between one eye and the other. This is possible only if we look upon all people as our own. Experience tells us that a team of good men is better than a mere conglomeration of good results. Disinterested action consists in the faith that everything will ultimately lead to good results.

Did you do anything about penetrating the villages?

Take immediate action with regard to the water problem.

1 “The struggle in the heart was going on.” (Mirabehn)
2 From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary
How is the dairy working? Examine coolly Bhai Purushottam’s arguments against the Ramachandra lift, before you dispose of them. I shall be there soon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7763. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

255. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

AMBOLI, NEAR SAVANTWADI, KONKAN,
Monday [April 4, 1927]¹

CHI. JANAKIBEHN,

Devdas had to leave you but I did not like it. I could see, however, he could not help it. Maybe now he can return in a few days.

How are you now? Have you been regaining strength? Any complaints?

Is Chi. Kamala studying anything? Do not write to me yourself but get Kamala to write to me a long letter.

None should worry about my health. At any rate now I am keeping well. The old are on the verge of death, are not they? Therefore under this or that pretext they must leave their old abodes and inhabit new ones if they please. But if they would rather leave the cage altogether they might soar in the air and enjoy freedom. But then our case is similar to that of a prisoner who, owing to his long detention, comes to be attached to his cell. We do not wish to give up the body because we identify ourselves with it. I do not know what I wish. As far as my reason goes I do not find it worth caring for. But poor reason is helpless before delusion. The truth will be known when the end comes.

Who is at present attending on you?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2880

¹ From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary
256. LETTER TO RAMDAS

April 4, 1927

Not for one moment should we forget the fact that we are poor. It appears you have come to realize it.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

257. LETTER TO ASHRAM CHILDREN

April 4, 1927

CHILDREN,

Look here, make the Satyagraha Week\(^1\) a success. Those who cannot be interested in the Gita, those who have no ear for the music of the spinning-wheel, do not at all understand life. Since we ourselves are the fountains of delight, we should know how to derive it from tunes which would bring us felicity. Therein lies real art. It is servile to seek delight from without; true happiness lies in evoking delight from within. If we cannot impart this knowledge to you now, all of us would be adjudged not as teachers but as mere barbers. How can anyone call you unworthy disciples?

I am fine.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

258. LETTER TO HEMAPRABHA DEVI DAS GUPTA

Silence Day [April 4, 1927]\(^2\)

DEAR SISTER,

No letter from you these many days; please write to me if you have the strength. Such letters are no nuisance to me, they do me good.

\(^1\) April 6 to 13
\(^2\) Gangadharrao had left for Mysore State before the 10th.
I am all right. Ba, Mahadev, Devdas, Krishnadas and others are with me. Rajaji and Gangadharrao too are here. It’s a quiet place.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1662

259. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

April 6, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

This is from a sick-bed. I had hoped to see you in Bangalore and press my suit. But it cannot be for some time yet. I have no reply to my wire which I hope you did get. You will break the heart of Indians in South Africa if you do not go.¹ Mrs. Sastri should certainly go with you.² I do not know that it is an advantage to have both host and hostess as brilliant talkers in English. You will be her interpreter or you can take for her one of the gifted Tamil graduate girls of whom you have so many. She will be her companion, teacher and interpreter. What did Queen Victoria do when she was hostess to the Shah of Persia who knew no English? And you can make it clear to Lord Irwin that you would want to be here when the Royal Commission comes. Lastly, there will be no fear of pinpricks whilst Lord Irwin is Viceroy. He knows you so well. I urge you to reconsider your decision and go even if it is for a year. You alone can inaugurate the working of the compact, you alone can set the tone.

May God guide you.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Letters of Srinivasa Sastri, p. 164

¹ As the first Agent of the Government of India
² Mrs. Sastri did not accompany Mr. Sastri.
LETTER TO S. D. SATAVEKAR

AMBOLI, SAVANTWADI STATE,
April 6, 1927

BHAI SATAVEKAR,

I am confined to a sick-bed. I could therefore easily get the time to read your book on brahmacharya. I liked the book. For years I have regarded you as a devotee of truth; hence this letter.

1. Do you regard the asanas [postures] as an infallible means to brahmacharya?

2. If this is true does it not mean that a man who practises asanas retains his vital fluid under all circumstances? Does it also mean that such an aspirant becomes free from passion? You are perhaps aware of a certain process in Western medicine by which a man can retain the fluid but is not freed from passion. This method is followed by those who propose to enjoy sex without losing the fluid. Do our systems mean this thing when they speak of becoming urdhvaretas? If it were so, the state of the urdhvareta would be detrimental to pure brahmacharya. And then there would be a lurking danger of harm in retaining semen with the help of the asanas. A friend from Delhi writes to me saying that with the help of asanas he has attained brahmacharya to such an extent that he can take any kind or quantity of food and enjoy almost all pleasures without losing his vital fluid. I did not continue further correspondence with him as I was not impressed by his letter. Another friend writes to say that with the help of pranayama, asanas and the like the final stage of brahmacharya can be attained within six months. Him I know. He is a simple straightforward man with no guile. And he goes on insisting that I should practise asanas and the like. I have not yet acted on his advice but your book has moved me. I came in contact with many students and I cannot satisfy them all by my own experiments. Besides restrictions of diet, etc., all my experiments are purely psychological. I write this as it appears to me that a section of the student community has fallen so low that asanas and the like can [alone] be of any help to them.

1 Breath-control
3. Do you have personal experience of what you write about brahmacharya in plants, etc.? You would be aware that Western scholars of natural sciences nowadays write against brahmacharya. I have refuted their arguments with the help of my little experience and by the exercise of whatever talents I have. But it is essential that these Western treatises are examined by our own experts since they greatly influence our young men.

4. I have also gone through your book Suryabhedan Vyayam. Do you think there is no harm if a man like me takes that exercise merely with the aid of the book?

5. Am I right if I find a slight difference between your method and the rules laid down in the commentaries on the Rigveda and the other texts for interpreting the hymns?

I shall be in Amboli till the 18th of this month.

Yours,

Mohanad Gandhi

From a photostat of the Hindi: S.N. 12771

261. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

AMBOLI [via] BELGAUM,

Satyagraha Day [April 6, 1927]

BHAISHRI FULCHAND.

I have written to you but have had no reply.

Please see that my capacity to raise funds has gone down considerably owing to my failing health. I had made some provision but it is not available at the moment.

Had I not had the attack I could have somehow coped with the situation.

I had asked Mahadev to write to Devchandbhai about the speech [drafted] by Bhai Amritlal Bapa. It has to be examined carefully. I think the [Kathiawar] Political Conference and the charkha movement should be kept apart. Let it be like this. There are three heads of expenditure which can be arranged as follows:

---

1 Non-germination or passivity in germination in plants and limiting copulation to periods of ‘heat’ in animals
1. Entrusting khadi activity to the Charkha Sangh as it will survive me and carry on in whatever manner it can.

2. The schools and the Antyaja work be handed over to the Vidyapith which too will survive me.

And an independent activity for Kathiawar.

We have not yet been able to make separate arrangements to run these three programmes on their own. I can therefore make only these suggestions. Khadi activities can also be entrusted to the Gujarat Khadi Mandal. This can be finalized after we have a discussion with Bhai Lakshmidas. Besides these three, no other programme is, at present, likely to engage my attention. I see however that there ought to be an independent institution for those pursuing other interests and the Political Conference may serve this purpose. But then these are the sick thoughts of a sick man.

You should contact Devchandbhai and others and find out a way after cool deliberation. If you want to see me you should all come at your own expense; that too a fortnight hence. I think at the moment I have not the strength to discuss the matter at length.

God willing, I hope to keep the appointed date in the month of June. But I can say nothing definite just now.

What you do, do unhesitatingly and dispassionately like voluntary trustees.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Most probably on the 19th I shall be taken from Belgaum to Nandi Hills, near Bangalore, where we are to reach on the 20th.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2856. Courtesy: Sharadabehn Shah
262. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

AMBOLI,
Chaitra Sud 5 [April 6, 1927]

BHAISHRI VALJI.

I have gone through the letter from murabbi Revashankarbhai; what he says is right. You have got to know the rules to be observed at meetings and those governing the institution. A copy of the resolutions passed must immediately be sent to the Treasurer. Are there your initials... to the other members also... the resolution itself. Now you should send to Revashankarbhai... copies of the resolutions adopted at Wardha as also of those passed at the general meeting.

It would also be right to send copies to members of the Committee.

Write to the newly-elected members requesting them to send in their acceptance.

How is Champa pulling on? A copy of the resolutions, etc., should have appeared in Navajivan. I forgot to give you the hint because I left in a hurry. But then would you not take up the burden of all this worry?

Hari-ichchha and others may live rent-free. Consult Maganlal about accommodating them and then ask them to come over. If you find they cannot be accommodated with anyone we will have to wait for a while.

Blessings from

Mohan das

[PS.]

I have already written to Revashankarbhai to pass on the money.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7391. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

---

1 Respected
2 Illegible in the source
3 ibid.
4 ibid.
263. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Chaitra Sud 5 [April 6, 1927]¹

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have been getting your letters. There is absolutely no breach of vow in your going to Chi. Mama. A visit on such an occasion was naturally expected. Now you should return to your place in the Ashram only after Chi. Mama is completely at rest. You should make Chi. Mama learn this formula: It is none of our concern whether the body falls or lasts, the soul cannot depart. Why should we bother about the body? We should be satisfied with thought of the immortal self.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am fine.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8825. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

264. WHAT SHALL I DO?

The Satyagraha Week has come again. By the time this appears in print, one day of the precious week will have gone. I would urge the reader not to fritter away the week by asking the question, ‘What shall we do?’, but to make the best possible use of it by asking, ‘What shall I do?’ There was a time when we could usefully ask and did ask the other question. And if each one will do his or her duty to the fullest measure possible, we shall soon be able to ask, ‘What shall we do next?’

The foundation of satyagraha as of nation-building is undoubtedly self-purification, self-dedication, selflessness. Let each one ask oneself: ‘How then can I purify myself in terms of the nation?’ Rectitude of private character is surely the beginning of the structure. If my private character is foul, I am like “a sounding brass and tinkling cymbal”. If then I am not right inside, I must this very instant purge myself and be a fit vessel for dedication. Government cannot help me or interfere with me here. I must be the sole author of my making or unmaking.

¹ The addressee’s daughter Mama was ill and passed away in 1927. Vide “Letter to Damodar Lakshmidas” and “Letter to Gangabehn Vaidya”, 10-4-1927.

Having ensured a pure personal character I must ask the next question, what shall I do as a national servant? If a Hindu, I hate the Mussalman or a person of another faith, I must at once make an honourable peace with him. If I regard any single person as an untouchable, I must blot the sin from my heart and hug the one whom I have hitherto in my arrogance or ignorance regarded as untouchable and as a token I must render him some personal service, be it only going to his quarters and calling the children together and playing with them. In these things again, I need no support from the Government and yet in doing these things whole-heartedly I have surely brought swaraj nearer for the effort and rendered myself fitter for joint service whenever the occasion arises.

Is there a drink shop near me? I must try to wean an erring brother from going to the house of his own destruction. We began this work gloriously in 1921. Our violence brought it to an inglorious end. Individual effort in this matter is still possible even though the atmosphere for wholesale mass action is for the moment wanting.

And last but not least, I must do my share of spinning, if I have but faith in its capacity to serve the poorest, so graphically described in Markham’s words reproduced¹ in last week’s Young India. I must hawk Khadi. If I have the power, I must induce my neighbour to spin for the sake of Daridranarayana and if he or she wears foreign cloth, I must induce him or her to discard it.

Shri Vallabhbhai has approached, during this National Week, the Gujaratis living in Kathiawar, Gujarat and in foreign countries for donations for the benefit of the suppressed classes in Gujarat. His appeal is for one lakh of rupees to support the activities being carried on at present for the uplift of the depressed classes in Gujarat. I would like to enrol myself as Vallabhbhai’s volunteer and move from house to house, begging bowl in hand, to plead with my dear friends to fill it, and also persuade them to enrol themselves as volunteers for the collection, and persuade also school-going girls and young women to do likewise, with the permission of their parents, and help in swelling the contents of Vallabhbhai’s purse.²

¹ Under the title, “Whom Khadi Stands for”; vide Appendix ibid, 31-3-1927.
² This paragraph is taken from Navajivan, 10-4-1927.
This is by no means an exhaustive list. I have simply given an indication of the enormous possibilities of individual effort. Let each one find out for himself or herself the best way of service during this week of privilege. The seeker will be amazed to discover in the search after individual action, the immense possibilities of silent, sustained and fruitful common action. Let not the immensity of a common programme daze or paralyse us. What is true of the individual will be tomorrow true of the whole nation if individuals will but refuse to lose heart and hope.

Young India, 7-4-1927

265. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

April 7, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your sweet letter. You will see that the tour is cancelled for the time being. I assure you that I shall take no rash steps and try my best to give the system rest. Pray do not worry on my account. Do you, Hemaprabha Devi, the boy and Tarini get well?

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.]

Amboli till 18th instant and then Mysore

SIT. SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA HOME VILLA
GIRIDIH

From a photostat: G.N. 1566

266. LETTER TO NANALAL KAVI

April 7, 1927

The poet says that Damayanti, though innocent, was charged with stealing. It was her bad luck. Something like it has happened to me. I took pains and fondly wrote out a harmless little letter praising you, which you did not like. Every morning I ask forgiveness of God even for any unconscious faults. Won’t you please pardon me this unintentional slip, for which I apologize to you? Unless you forgive me I will not stop begging pardon.

1 Damayanti in the Mahabharata was accused of stealing because the fish handed over to her for cooking would come to life the moment she touched them.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

267. LETTER TO GOKALBHAI
April 7, 1927

I have your letter. You were certainly right in not reading out my message. A message which the addressee does not like must not be read out. It would have been better if you had not published it in the other journals. You would have missed nothing by withholding it. Moreover a poet’s anger, I think, makes him into a milch cow. I will swallow all his displeasures but even from a distance I will utilize his talents. Please do not worry; pass on the enclosed letter to him.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

268. LETTER TO NANABHAI
April 8, 1927

I always had faith in pranayama, asanas and the like. But I could not try any of them for want of a proper guru. Luckily now I am on a sick-bed so I get something to read and ruminate. I am further inclined towards asanas on reading Satavalekar’s articles on the subject. Being a disciple of Nathuram Sharma, you have, I expect, some experience in this subject. I knew him, but he did not impress me. Some four or five members of our family came under his influence. But being inconspicuous I could not learn asanas, etc., from him. Now I would like to know about your experience of the same. Have you studied this? If you have, have you kept up the practice? Please, if you don’t mind, tell me all you know about this.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

1 On the occasion of poet Nanalal Kavi’s birthday
2 Whose kicks one may suffer with gratitude
3 Vide the preceding item.
269. LETTER TO AMRITLAL

April 8, 1927

BHAISHRI AMRITLAL,

You must have seen my letter to Amritlal Bapa. I want you to look into it. After all, his speech has been drafted by you. I want this matter to be settled purely on the basis of principle. We must not let my personal feelings interfere with it. And if it is a question of my feelings I am all for what suits the atmosphere in Kathiawar and is ultimately good for its people. I am for khadi because I see advantage in it; but how could it prove beneficial if the climate is against it? Oxygen is vital for our breathing but what is it to the trees? And you all are the life of Kathiawar. If I cannot convince you all about a thing, either I should not do it at all or do it in a different way.

I am aware of your ability. I very much appreciate some of the things you do. I count you among those serving the motherland. You have courage which you should exercise to encourage others and contend with me, if you have to, without hesitation. Do what you want to do, not what I want you to. That alone will be the right thing. Surely we cannot shine in borrowed feathers.

At the moment I can take no interest in activities other than khadi or similar constructive work. Being thus engaged, if I have any more to live, it might some day occur to me to offer battle within the limits of satyagraha and if the struggle does not come off in my own lifetime it will be taken up by such of my successors as can do it.

Bloody revolutions just do not appeal to me. I never wish to kill even a venomous snake, not to speak of a venomous man. I know the world has gone in for bloody revolution too for winning freedom. I wish to spend all my life trying to prove its futility. I take delight in this only and so I never lose patience. All the ways that occur to me are but ways of peace. That for me is the straight and therefore the shortest path. You should lend me your support only if it appeals to you and to those who look to you for guidance; otherwise, it is best to leave me alone as it has been said: “One’s own dharma is superior to”, etc. Lying in a sick-bed, I get more time to think and therefore I am trying to clarify our views and my own.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

1 Vide “Letter to A. V. Thakkar”, 1-4-1927.
2 Bhagavad Gita, III. 35
270. LETTER TO HIRALAL AMRITLAL

April 8, 1927

Of course it was only to collect funds that I had been to Santa Cruz.¹ We cannot expect to produce khadi there, it can only be sold there. There may well be some difference of opinion in respect of auctions. I see nothing wrong in auctions, the institution in itself is certainly without blemish; nor is there anything bad in the purpose for which it was held. Then why oppose it?

I would suggest that a serious student like you should not draw hasty conclusions. And a pure activity like khadi deserves closer study.

Visit the Ashram, look around for yourself, speak to Narandas, Maganlal and Shankerlal, see what Lakshmidas has been doing and then come out with your suggestions.

Vandemataram from

M OHANDAS

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

271. LETTER TO SHAMBHULAL

April 8, 1927

I see that I can at the moment have my heart nowhere but in khadi work. It may perhaps be a mistake on my part.

There is the illusion of silver in mother of pearl, and of moisture in the sunbeams. This is absolutely unreal, yet none can avoid the error.²

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

¹ Vide “Speech at Santa Cruz”, 23-3-1927.
² Ramacharitamanasa I. 117
CHI. NARANDAS,

I have not been writing to you at all, but I keep myself informed all the time about your activities.

I had preserved one of your letters drawing my attention to the expenditure on khadi work in Gujarat. I intended to discuss it with Lakshmidas and you. But that could not be. Let us see if we can take it up some time. I believe your contention is that in enabling the spinners to earn Rs. 29,000 as wages we have spent more than an equal amount and that this is too much. Does this amount also include the expenditure incurred on our work amongst the Raniparaj community? The answer to this question should be that at this stage the work on khadi includes awakening and educating the masses. If this is really so, it is part of our policy; and so long as this policy is followed sincerely we should bear with it as an experiment. But this is only my view. If you enlighten me on this point I shall discuss it with Lakshmidas in case he meets me sooner or when all three of us meet.

2. At the present moment, at any rate, I am afraid, I have no time or energy to raise separate funds for khadi work in Kathiawar. I, therefore, think that we should entrust it to the Charkha Sangh and carry on such work as can be done subject to its rules and regulations. In this connection I have written to Bhai Fulchand. You may also think over it. Perhaps it had better be merged with the work in Gujarat. As it is, I only see this much, that it cannot be carried on as an independent unit. You may, if you want to, discuss the matter with Lakshmidas, in case he is there, and with Shankerlal. In the meanwhile you may look after and promote the work in Kathiawar according to facilities available in the Ashram and keep me informed. We should be careful and see that whatever work has been or is being done is not undone.

3. Of late you have not been publishing in Young India facts and figures [about khadi]. Figures of production, at any rate, ought to appear. You should also keep sending any interesting details about the yarn you receive from the members.

1 Vide “Letter to Fulchand K. Shah”, 6-4-1927.
As I have now resumed working gradually, you need not spare me. Do write to me and ask me whatever you want to.

I had a talk with Chi. Purushottam and we are in correspondence. I could not speak to you about this; but the boy seemed to have a pure heart. Surely, God will look after him.

How is Kanu getting on?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9141. Courtesy: Jamnadas Gandhi

273. A LETTER

April 8, 1927

Certainly I do wish that we got out of narrow caste circles. The significance of dharma does not lie in clinging to the caste system; it is strictly confined to varnashrama. One never hears of hundreds of varnas. But I do not insist on this point.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
274. LETTER TO DAMODAR LAKSHMIDAS

AMBOLI, via BELGAUM,

Chaitra Sud 9 [April 10, 1927]

BHAI DAMODAR LAKSHMIDAS,

Bhai Kishorelal conveyed to me the news of Chi. Mamabai’s demise. We cannot help grieving owing to the bonds of flesh. But when looking at it from Mamabai’s standpoint, I realize that she has been released from pain.

I am not well enough acquainted with you but I would, if I may, advise you to cherish and remain faithful to her memory, abstaining from another alliance.

You have the great responsibility of the children. Make arrangements for them in consultation with pujya Gangabehn and do what you can to advance their interests. Ask any help you want of me and, needless to say, I shall do whatever I can.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2817. Courtesy: Purushottam D. Saraiya
275. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIYDA

Sunday [April 10, 1927]

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I am not unhappy at Chi. Mama’s passing away. The poor girl was in agony. And it was good that you were with her at the last hour. I have written to [your] son-in-law. We are left with the problem of what we should do about the children. The question now is whether or not you should accept custody of the children if he leaves them in your care and offers their maintenance. Please think over this. I am sure you have not been upset.

I have been getting your letters. I may say I am keeping well. During the last two days I have been walking a little.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8827. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

276. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

BOMBAY,

April 10, 1927

CHI. RAMDAS,

I received your letter of complaint only today on my arrival in Bombay. A detailed letter may never get written because of my procrastination, so I write a brief one right away. You still continue to regret that you have no formal education. You must get over it. In my programme of action it is of least importance. If you come, you can be of help in innumerable ways. You can even work on a salary if you so wish. I would make use of you in spinning and weaving and make you independent. I would also use you for the service of the country. But there are many other jobs apart from these. There is the work of the press, of the school, of Hindi. Many people, big and small, are helping me. I am sure that you too can join them. But I wish that you should do only what gives you satisfaction.

Chi. Jamnadas has returned from England.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Motanan Man, p. 34

1 From the reference to Mama’s death, vide the preceding item.
277. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 11, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. Of course you were quite right in delivering your whole soul to me. I quite agree with you that we have to evolve an organization and that therefore there should be method about the business. But in your affection for me perhaps there is a trace of impatience with the people who organized the tours. However, all will profit by the warning received. I am taking all the necessary rest amid these very lovely surroundings and shall have more when I am taken to Mysore. Rest is not to be taken at the Ashram. Dr. Mehta insisted on a cool place' being selected. And I am to remain where I was to tour during April.

You can see from the handwriting that I am getting stronger day by day. I had quite a fair walk yesterday. So much for myself.

I like this idea of your riding. It should brace you and enable you too, to go to the villages and see something of rural life. Have they provided you with a proper saddle? You should try to follow all the shades of village Hindi. I am not going to be satisfied till you have mastered Hindi so well as to be able to follow and speak the villagers’ Hindi. Do not be frightened. It will come because of your love of your work. I shall not be impatient. But, for your work a thorough knowledge of Hindi is a necessity. You will therefore seek every occasion for speaking and knowing it. Insist on understanding all that goes on about you.

Here is a letter for you from Noorbanu whom you must recognize, the fat, fair lady. She recently gave over to the Ashram several thousand rupees worth of her jewellery. She and her husband are just now living at Mahabaleshwar. They have just come in to see me. Do write to her in reply. Their address is Mahabaleswar College, Mahabaleshwar. Mrs. Noorbanu Pyareali is her full name.

I am anxious to know how the new wheel is working. Have you good wheels there?

1 Nandi Hills, near Bangalore; vide “Discussion with Dr. Jivaraj Mehta”, 3-4-1927.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Do you get good fruit for yourself?
With love,

BAPU

[PS.]

Mahadev and Devdas have gone out to hawk khadi.

From the original: C.W. 5215. Courtesy: Mirabehn

278. LETTER TO S. D. SATVALEKAR

AMBOLI,
Monday [April 11, 1927]

BHAI SATVALEKAR,

I have your two letters and the books; let me thank you for it.

Please continue to send me the issues of Vaidika Dharma.

I have with me many young men as well as women. On my part I have made great efforts to keep them in good health while they observed brahmacharya. Only disciplines like asanas have yet to be tried. Could you suggest to me some methods, as I am afraid, they cannot very well be learnt merely with the help of books and illustration. . . .

Please send over to the Ashram two copies [each] of Suryabhedan Vyayam and Brahmasarya, which will be paid for by the Ashram. If you agree to it I wish to bring out a Gujarati translation after assimilating and revising the two works.

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12771

1 From the addressee’s reply to the letter
2 Page 2 is missing in the source. Only pages 1 and 3 are available.
279. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

[April 11, 1927]

SISTERS,

You have absolved me [from writing to you]. But how can I take advantage of it unless I have to? My health is not so bad now that I cannot write to you. Yesterday I even walked a good distance. To write to you is therefore not much of a strain.

Have any of you decided to supervise the common kitchen by turns? Lakshmibehn had definitely expressed willingness to do so. If no one else has done it so far at least she should do it. If there is any defect in the common kitchen the fault will be that of all. Will it not? You may free yourselves from kitchen work when the men have acquired as much skill as you have at present, but certainly not till then.

Please find enclosed Mirabai’s letter. Give it to Chi. Maganlal. I send it as it is worth reading.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3644

280. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 13, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I must write on this fasting day to acknowledge your letter containing extracts from Beethoven. They are good spiritual food. I don’t want you to forget your music or your taste for it. It would be cruel to forget that to which you owe so much, and which has really brought you to me.

1 From the reference to supervision of the common kitchen and to Gandhiji’s “walking a good distance”. Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 11-4-1927.
2 Wife of Khare, the musician; she had experience in running a common kitchen at the Gandharva Mahavidyalaya, Bombay.
3 “As far as I can remember, I quoted extracts from Romain Rolland’s Life of Beethoven, and one thing I gave was, Beethoven’s motto, ‘Through Suffering, Joy’.” (Mirabehn)
4 For an account of this, vide Appendix “From the Preface to Bapu’s Letters to Mira”, after 31-3-1927.
Please thank the Maharajji and all the friends for the kind invitation. But for the present I must go to Nandi Hills in Mysore. I know that I should be quite happy there if I could come.

We have kept the week here in a royal style. One wheel has been kept going 16 hours daily. The output has been more than 3,000 rounds of 4 ft. each daily. Almost all kept the fast on 6th and 13th.

I shall expect here still more letters from you.

Kaka has sent a copy of your translation of Rolland’s letter. The translation is very good indeed. The original could not be better.

I am glad you met the Commissioner, etc. You are getting your deserts—those of one adopted by a scavenger. You must forget what you have been. You have to realize what you are. These poor officials really do not know where they are when they see you. They cannot forget your antecedents and naturally get perplexed. You have to put them at ease. When the present King—so tradition says—was enlisted as a sailor he was treated as such and had in common with the rest black coffee and black bread for breakfast. This was the least part of the affair. He was taken for a common sailor. So one day will you be taken for a common village girl. That would be your pride and mine.

With love,

BAPU

---

From the original: C W. 5216. Courtesy: Mirabehn

281. LETTER TO SUREN德拉

Wednesday [April 13, 1927]

CHI. SUREN德拉,

I have your letter. If you get leave thence do go to Nathji and to Wardha. Undoubtedly the study of hygiene is most essential. This would include asanas and breath-control which, I think, would need a guide. I would like you to practise them. Nathji has some experience in this field. He does not seem to have much faith in it. Having discussed it with a few people I was led to believe that asanas, etc.,

---

1 National Week
2 Kalelkar
3 From the reference to sending the addressee to S. D. Satavalekar; vide “Letter to S. D. Satavalekar”, 14-4-1927, where Gandhiji says: “I shall try and send you a good student.”
were of no avail in curing the sick. I have not personally reached this conclusion. If you want to learn them I would send you to Pandit Satavalekar. There is a swami in Hardwar who also has promised to train an ashramite if one goes to him. I have not met him though Mahadev has. Nowhere have I found the purity that I would expect but then we want to associate only to the extent of learning the asanas, etc. Write to Nathji and obtain his opinion.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9414

282. FAITH v. REASON

An M.B.B.S. from Mandalay sends a string of questions of which the first is:

You once expressed your opinion in the pages of Young India that faith begins where reason ends. Then I expect you will call it faith, if a person believes in a thing for which he can give no reasons. Is it not then clear that faith is believing unreasonably? Do you think it is truth or justice if anybody believed in anything unreasonable? I think it is folly to believe in that way. I do not know what your barrister mind will call it. If you think like me I hope you will call faith as nothing but folly.

If the worthy doctor will excuse my saying so, there is in his question a clear failure to understand my meaning. That which is beyond reason is surely not unreasonable. Unreasonable belief is blind faith and is often superstition. To ask anybody to believe without proof what is capable of proof would be unreasonable, as for instance asking an intelligent person to believe without proof that the sum of the angles of a triangle is equal to two right angles. But for an experienced person to ask another to believe without being able to prove that there is God is humbly to confess his limitations and to ask another to accept in faith the statement of his experience. It is merely a question of that person’s credibility. In ordinary matters of life we accept in faith the word of persons on whom we choose to rely although we are often cheated. Why may we not then in matters of life and death accept the testimony of sages all the world over that there is God and that He is to be seen by following Truth and Innocence (non-violence)? It is at least as reasonable for me to ask my correspondent to have that faith in this universal testimony as it would be for him to ask me to take his medicine in faith even though many a medicine-man might have failed me. I make bold to say that without faith this world would come to naught in a moment. True faith is appropriation of the reasoned experience of people whom we believe to have lived a life purified by prayer and penance. Belief therefore in prophets or incarnations who have lived in remote ages is not an idle superstition but a satisfaction of an inmost, spiritual want. The formula therefore I have humbly suggested for guidance is rejection of every demand for faith where a matter is capable of present proof unquestioned acceptance on faith of that which is itself incapable of proof except through personal experience.

The correspondent’s next question is:¹

In Young India of December 9, 1926,² there appeared a press-cutting that one Doctor Harold Blazer, who chloroformed his daughter because he felt that his own end was near and there was no one to care for her when he was gone, was fully acquitted. Dr. Blazer’s counsel, Mr. Howry declared: “Blazer did a right and moral thing by keeping the poor girl [for whom he had cared for thirty-two years] from becoming a charge on others.” To this you expressed your opinion that Dr. Blazer was wrong in taking the life of his daughter because it betrayed want of faith in the humanity of those round him and that there was no warrant for him to suppose that the daughter would not have been cared for by others.... I would request you to think over it again, for I think this is not an ordinary matter. For it is evident that you have got no scruples to put a useless burden on society simply because you have got enough faith in the society to shoulder the burden. For God’s sake please excuse us from believing in that useless, nay, extremely harmful, faith. Such a faith of yours, I sincerely believe, is very harmful to the best interests of India.... If after many more years of faithful service of India, you become ... absolutely useless to society, will you like the society to feed you because you have got still life left in you or because you served so well? ...

I do believe that whilst the jury was right in acquitting Dr. Blazer, considered from the strictly moral point of view Dr. Blazer was wrong. My correspondent in his utilitarian zeal has overlooked the frightful consequences and implications of the doctrine he lays down. Indeed his doctrine would belie his own profession. What would he say if a young practitioner chloroformed to death a patient whom he, the junior practitioner, considered to be incurable and therefore a useless burden to society and whom another as a senior subsequently found to be a case quite capable of cure? Is it not the boast of medical science to treat no case as finally incurable? As for myself, well, I do expect my countrymen to support me when I become a useless and burdensome article, assuming of course that I shall still want to live. What is more, I have full faith in my countrymen supporting me if that event comes to pass. I wonder whether my correspondent will have all the lepers, the blind, the deaf, one fine night to be chloroformed to sweet, everlasting sleep. And yet Damien was a leper and Milton was a blind poet. Man is not all body but he is something infinitely higher.

¹ Only excerpts are reproduced here.
² Vide “The Greatest Good of All”, 9-12-1926.

The correspondent’s third question is: 1

In the same article, i.e., “The Greatest Good of all”, you wrote that a votary of ahimsa cannot subscribe to the utilitarian formula. He will strive for the greatest good of all and die in the attempt to realize the ideal . . . . May I conclude then that you will prefer to be bitten by a poisonous snake and die rather than kill the same in trying to save yourself? If I am right in my conclusion, . . . that way you will be doing the greatest possible harm to India by trying to save a harmful living creature and by dying willingly in trying to realize the ideal of your so-called greatest good of all . . . . You admit that you are an imperfect mortal. So it is impossible for you to benefit the whole world. It is even impossible for you to benefit the whole of India in all possible ways. Therefore it is quite reasonable to be contented with the greatest good of the greatest number rather than pretend to do the greatest good to all without exception the good and the wicked, the useful and the useless, man, animal, etc., etc.

This is a question I would fain avoid answering, not because of want of faith but because of want of courage. But I must not conceal my faith even though I may not have the courage to act up to it when it is put on its trial. Here then is my answer. I do not want to live at the cost of the life even of a snake. I should let him bite me to death rather than kill him. But it is likely that if God puts me to that cruel test and permits a snake to assault me, I may not have the courage to die, but that the beast in me may assert itself and I may seek to kill the snake in defending this perishable body. I admit that my belief has not yet become so incarnate in me as to warrant my stating emphatically that I have shed all fear of snakes so as to befriend them as I would like to be able to. It is my implicit belief that snakes, tigers, etc., are God’s answer to the poisonous, wicked, evil thoughts that we harbour. Anna Kingsford saw in the streets of Paris tigers in men already taking shape. I believe that all life is one. Thoughts take definite forms. Tigers and snakes have kinship with us. They are a warning to us to avoid harbouring evil, wicked, lustful thoughts. If I want to rid the earth of venomous beasts and reptiles, I must rid myself of all venomous thoughts. I shall not do so if in my impatient ignorance and in my desire to prolong the existence of the body I seek to kill the so-called venomous beasts and reptiles. If in not seeking to defend myself against such noxious animals I die, I should die to rise again a better and a fuller man. With that faith in me how should I seek to kill a fellow-being in a snake? But this is philosophy. Let me pray and let my readers join in the prayer to God that He may give me the strength to live up to that philosophy. For philosophy without life corresponding is like a body without life.

1 Only excerpts are reproduced here.

I know that in this land of ours we have enough philosophy and but little life. But I know also that the laws governing the conduct of man have still to be explored and the condition of exploration is imperative and unalterable. We shall explore them only by dying, never by killing. We must become living embodiments of Truth and Love, for God is Truth and Love.

Young India, 14-4-1927

283. CIVILIZATION AND CULTURE

Dr. Martin Hurlimann, a Sanskrit scholar of Zurich, sends the following instructive translation of selections¹ from the writings of Heinrich Pestalozzi who died just a century ago and was according to Dr. Hurlimann “one of Europe’s greatest educationists as also one of the greatest among fighters for Menschlichkeit and Menschenwürde, i.e., humanity and dignity of man but not understood on the Continent and almost unknown to the rest of the world”.

Young India, 14-4-1927

¹ Not reproduced here
284. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AMBOLI,
April 14, 1927

DEAR BROTHER,

Your letter has given me boundless joy. The news will cheer our people and Andrews. And Europeans will be glad to have to do with one whom they have come to know and respect. For me your letter is a great relief. And for your health God will take care of it. Freedom from the turmoil into which our country has landed itself will refresh your tired nerves whilst at the same time you will be doing inestimable service to the country. The present confusion does not admit of much hurry and calculated interference. It will settle itself in due time.

Mrs. Sastri will be of great help to you in South Africa and her presence will mean much to our dumb sisters there.

I expect to reach Nandi Hills on Wednesday next. You will please come whenever you can and like.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

V. S. Srinivasa Sastri Papers (Correspondence No. 470). Courtesy: National Archives of India

285. LETTER TO S. D. SATAVALEKAR

AMBOLI,
April 14, 1927

BHAI SATAVALEKAR,

I thank you for your prompt reply. I shall try and send you a good student. From the consideration you have been showing me I see that you are treating me as a fellow-seeker. I shall certainly try to become one. I read your book on the Isopanishad and was extremely pleased.

I shall write to Bhai Bapulal¹ in connection with Brahmacharya and Suryabhedan Vyayam. He must not suffer any financial loss.

¹ Bapulal Kuberdas Patel of the Arya Samaj, Anand, Kheda District, publisher of the addressee’s books
I am acquainted with Kuvalayanandji. I had sent a young boy to him who being weak was not taught pranayama and other disciplines but was instead treated with medicines. Despite the prevailing climate I have not lost hope regarding the practice of brahmacharya, etc. There will rise from our midst a true aspirant who will clear the prevailing atmosphere. As yet I have come across no such aspirant. My own tapascharya is hopelessly imperfect. I have been observing external, physical brahmacharya for nearly 30 years. I have, however, not freed myself from passion; I am trying to. I think complete control of all the five sense-organs is essential for the observance of perfect brahmacharya. It will not suffice to have control over the six-fold passion; it has to be rooted out. I believe in every word of the verse: “The yearning too departs when he beholds the Supreme.” The world is prone to hero-worship. The unhealthy climate prevailing around will soon clear when such a person emerges. Let us work with all our faith for the advent of such a person amidst us. And have not you yourself said that if the message of the Upanishads, etc., is eternally true—and so it is—even today we can come across Uma, Hemavati and Yaksha and, God willing, we shall. I too have read about rubbing in semen and consuming it. I regard this as a demoniac practice. There may be some truth in it but the experiment deserves no consideration, because we want the brahmacharis to master their senses. Preserving and retaining the vital fluid is a means to an end and not an end in itself. Consuming semen does not bring about freedom from passion; it might to some extent remove the debility consequent upon ejaculation. This is what the Western method achieves. ‘The root cause of seminal discharge lies in the rising of passion, [And] we aim at annihilating all passion.

That is why I enquired about the asanas, etc, Now I understand that asanas, etc., are a stage on the way [to brahmacharya] and it may be deemed necessary for the aspirant to pass through them.

Have I made myself clear?

I have understood what you say in your book about the asanas for retaining semen. Your cautions put one on guard. Even for a

1 Desire, anger, avarice, delusion, pride, envy
2 Bhagavad Gita, II. 59
3 The addressee had referred to an ancient Sanskrit text which says that semen from involuntary ejaculation should be rubbed between the breasts or the brows, or consumed orally.
THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

married man I see no harm in the siddha and other asanas. With the help of siddhasana a married man’s semen may possibly be retained, the secretion however does not stop. How many men can we come across today who go to their wives purely for the sake of progeny? If the term ‘calming down’ can be used of passion etc., a married man may calm down his passion with the help of siddha and other asanas. But then it is another thing if his aim is absolute eradication of desire.

I was relieved to find that you do not reject the Puranas. I was afraid you would be disdainful of the ancient Puranas. Indeed I am convinced that at a time when people were growing sceptical the authors of the Puranas aroused in them a love for dharma with their rich poetic appeal. Our Shastras need to be re-interpreted as you are doing, in the light of modern knowledge and for the young people of today.

When I am settled somewhere I would like to give you the trouble of coming over to me so that we can compare notes.

I am now reading the Kenopanishad after which I shall take up your Mahabharata Samalochana¹.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: S.N. 12771

286. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

NANDI HILLS, MYSORE²

Chaitra Sud 13 [April 14, 1927]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I do think of you very often. How are you getting along now? When will you be going to the Ashram? How is Vidyavati? Whether or not I write to you, you must write regularly to me. I think I am slightly better now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3329

¹ A treatise, the first three parts of which had then been published
² This address was given for the addressee’s reply. Gandhiji left Amboli for Nandi Hills on April 18; vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 18-4-1927.
287. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

Saturday [On or before April 16, 1927]

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I know that no letter from you is in itself a letter. But there is no reason at all to feel anxious. I am taking good care of my health. I heed the advice of the doctors to the extent possible. I am taking rest and will continue to do so. I shall not be in a hurry to plunge into work. We have to start from here on the 18th and leave Belgaum on the 19th. This is what Raja and Gangadharan have said. They both have gone to Bangalore. I shall know in two or three days where I am to go for rest. This place too is no doubt good.

You are having good experience. Continue writing to me as before and send me the note about your travels so that I may know where you will be on which day.

You and Lakshmidas will be taking care of yourselves. Convene a meeting of the council after my programme is settled. In the meantime do not allow any work to be postponed.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

There is a letter from Lakshmidas. I am not writing to him separately. His suggestion has already been carried out.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32713

288. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA

NANDI HILLS, MYSORE, ¹

Chaitra Purnima [April 16, 1927]

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA,

I have the letter written by all of you, sisters. I am steadily improving. I often think of you all. I on my part tried hard to bring you all to the Ashram. You may go if you still wish to. You can all live where you like, but spin a lot, study a lot and move about a lot. The body and the mind ought to be fit. Write to me.

¹ Gandhiji arrived at Nandi Hills on April 19, 1927. The Saturday preceding that date was April 16.

² This address was given for the addressee’s reply. Gandhiji left Amboli for Nandi Hills on April 18; vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 18-4-1927.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA DESAI
C/O SUNDERJI GOVINDJI DESAI
IN THE OLD HOUSE OF RATILAL MANIAR
RAJKOT

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 4906. Courtesy: Hari-ichchhabehn Kamdar

289. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Saturday [On or after April 16, 1927]

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Herewith a letter from Bhai Damodardas. It is a good one. Think and decide about the children now.

I am keeping good health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8830. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya. Also G.N. 11386

290. DISCUSSION WITH CHIEF OF SAVANTWADI, AMBOLI

[April 17, 1927]

His Highness and the Rani came to see Gandhiji on the day before we left Amboli. They were as usual very nice and asked if it was not too late to persuade Gandhiji to stay a little longer at Amboli. Gandhiji said he wished very much he could continue his stay in that scented spot surrounded by picturesque scenery, in fact, he was distressed to leave it, but he could not help it as he wanted to combine rest with work. And then Gandhiji proceeded to ask the questions I had not asked the other day.

GANDHIJI: Mahadev has been telling me all the good things he has been hearing about you. One of these I should like to be verified

1 From the reference to the addressee’s daughter’s children. Mama the addressee’s daughter, had passed away in the beginning of April, 1927; Vide “Letter to Gangabehn Vaidya”, 10-4-1927. The Saturday after April 10 was April 16.
2 From Mahadev Desai’s article, “A Popular Prince”
3 Gandhiji left Amboli on the 18th; vide the succeeding item by you. Is it true that you draw Rs. 2,000 only from the public revenue for your private purse?

H. H. OF SAVANTWADI: Not Rs. 2,000, but Rs. 2,500; but expenses incurred on all State occasions are met from the State revenue.

That is all right. Now you will stay at Amboli during the summer months. Will the expenses be borne by the State?

No, they will be borne by me.

And I hear you are keeping with you a number of orphans. You find their expenses too out of your purse?

Yes, Gandhiji. But they are not all orphans. Some of them are. They come of poor but respectable families. There are many more applications but I am sorry I cannot afford to have more.

Well, yours is the only instance I know of a ruling prince drawing a fixed allowance from the public revenue.

No, you might expect to see many more. The Mysore Maharaja draws a fixed allowance.

Then it is lucky that after having stayed under your roof I am going to enjoy the hospitality of one like you.

Yes, and Gwalior did not draw anything from the State Treasury.

That is to say?

He had his private income and lived on that.

But what is private income but earned from the State itself?

And now turning to the Rani, who, by the bye, is a princess of the Baroda family, Gandhiji said:

Yes, I know one as simple as you, the Maharani Regent of Travancore. I was fascinated by her simplicity, her dress could not be simpler, and I looked in vain for an ornament on her person, except the mangalamala. The furniture in her room was as severely simple as could be. I was introduced to the young Maharaja whom it was difficult to recognize as such. But there the comparison ends. They do not live on paltry wages like you.

The Rani smiled thankfully, whilst Gandhiji continued:

And I was not surprised at the small quantity of khadi that you purchased, knowing as I did that your means were limited and that you must live within your income. And now that I know that like His Highness you also mix very much among your people, may I suggest that you will enhance your power of service by mastering the art of spinning?

---

1 Vide “All About Travancore”, 26-3-1925.

The spinning-wheel was all the while going on. The Rani nodded assent, and the Chief said: “That’s not all the khadi we have. We purchased some at the last year’s Khadi Exhibition, and we shall get more from you whenever we want.” All this while His Highness dressed in a short coat and knickers was squatting on the floor.

Young India, 28-4-1927

291. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 18, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letters.

You must not put yourself under over-strain. If the teaching overtaxes you, it must be reduced and so the learning. You may make it clear to the people about you as to your physical capacity. On no account must you lose your health. Do you get proper fruit and milk?

I am getting on famously. For the last two days I have been taking walks both morning and evening without suffering any harm., As you know I have replaced one fruit with a vegetable and am taking bhakhari.

We leave Amboli today and leave Belgaum tomorrow if all goes well. Nandi Hills, Mysore, will be the address for the next two months.

I shall not leave this place without much regret. The spot itself is delightful. But what has attached me to this place is the exceptional character of the Chief. From all the accounts received by me he appears to be an ideal Chief. He draws a fixed sum from the State revenue for his personal expenses. He mixes freely with his people. He has visited every one of his 125 villages. He lives an abstemious life and his wife is worthy of him. I have met him often and his frank and easy manners have pleased me. Hence it is that I like this place so much. But we can’t do always the things we like. We shall be leaving inside of a few hours.

I expect a report of the new charkha.

They seem to have worked wonders at the Ashram. Keshu having spun over 15,000 yards in 24 hours.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5217. Courtesy: Mirabehn
292. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Silence Day, Chaitra Vad [1, April 18, 1927]¹

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter. May all your devout wishes be fulfilled and may God grant you the strength to observe your vows.

Your attitude towards the children is correct. If Damodardas entrusts custody of the children to you, you being in the Ashram, it would be your duty to look after them. But it must suit the Ashram too. Discuss the issue with Kaka. It is a different matter if your heart refuses to do so. In such cases one does not know instantaneously what one’s dharma is.

Today we leave this place for Nandi Hills. Now on you should write to that address. I presume you will for the time being stay with Kaka, so I send this to his address.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8828. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

293. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day, Chaitra Wad 2 [April 19, 1927]²

SISTERS,

I am sending this letter to your secretary in the absence of Gangabehn. In Gangabehn’s absence you should appoint an acting president. Your work should now be so perfectly regulated that it goes on automatically as in other institutions. In order that this may happen, a leader is absolutely necessary. A leader should have fewer powers but greater responsibilities; she should always be thinking of the good of the institution, and try to increase its capacity for service.

It appears that your observance of the National Week was quite successful. It was good that you cleaned the latrines. As time passes you should take up more and more responsibilities, provided always

¹ The source has Chaitra Vad 2, which was April 19. But Gandhiji left for Nandi Hills on April 18, which corresponded to the duplicate Chaitra Vad 1.
² The year is determined from the reference to Gangabehn being the president of Ashram women’s Mandal.
that you have the strength.

Maintain your contact with women who do outside work. You must also be in touch with Rajibehn and Champavatibehn. Write to me, if you know, how Rajibehn is getting on with her work.

My health appears to have improved. To this end I am making a simple experiment. If it proves successful, it will have many uses. But I do not want to take your time now by telling you more about it. I will perhaps tell you about it next week.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3645

294. LETTER TO KUVALAYANAND

NANDI HILLS, MYSORE,
April 19, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter to Baba Saheb Soman offering to come to Mysore at once if necessary and in any case after 26th if required. I would like you to come to Nandi Hills as soon as possible after 26th. If you will kindly send a wire, arrangements will be made to bring you to Nandi Hills from the nearest station.

The growing self-abuse among the students has, as you know, attracted me to the yogic asanas, as possible cure of the evil habit. In the course of my reading I saw that asanas were recommended as a remedy for the cure of many other ills. During my illness I read Pandit Satavalekar’s writings. And I thought that I would experiment with myself. Copious laudatory notices of shirshasana drew me to it. And for the last five days I have been trying shirshasana for a few seconds each time. I do it in the morning before the meal twice at intervals of two minutes. The practice is preceded by neti, cleansing the nostrils by means of strips of thin cloth. I remain absolutely passive during the practice of the asana. Sjt. Gunaji assists to lift the body and sustain it on the head. The same thing is repeated at 9 p.m. before retiring. The last meal—milk and fruit is taken at 5 p.m. I have noticed no ill effects. On the contrary, I feel fresher and stronger and am able to take short walks. My appetite has improved. Now the question is whether shirshasana thus passively practised is likely to ease the blood-pressure or to increase it. I take it that neti can do no harm at all in any case. My blood-pressure is at present 180 by auscultation. During the five days the pressure has not increased. Will you advise me to continue the practice or discontinue pending your arrival?

Please wire if you want me to discontinue. I do not want the asanas to be blamed through any hasty action on my part.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

---

295. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL G. BANKER

*Silence Day, [After April 19, 1927]*¹

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter. It is all right that you did not come. I hope you are looking after your health. Right now it is like one guilty person blaming another. However, if you feel inclined, you may come for the sake of having the combined benefit of the climate and work so that all of us can be warned by my mistake. But do what you think appropriate.

I would be very happy if Jamnalalji...²

Blessings from

BAPU

---

296. ALL-INDIA COW-PROTECTION ASSOCIATION

I had fully intended to report the proceedings of this business Association, which is known by the few, whose origin was practically accidental and which ever since its origin has been trying in the face of odds to solve the very difficult problem of cow protection in terms of religious economics. A meeting of the managing committee of the Association as also its general meeting were held together at the ¹ From the contents it is evident that the letter was written after Gandhiji reached Nandi Hills on April 19, 1927; vide also “Letter to Shankerlal Banker”, 16-5-1927 and “Letter to Anasuyabehn Sarabhai”, after 5-6-1927.

---

² Two sentences that follow are not legible in the source.
Ashram on the 11th March last. But through my hurried departure and subsequent illness, the proceedings have remained unreported. The following resolution\(^1\) was however passed unanimously at this meeting:

Inasmuch as a resolution was passed at the last meeting of the managing committee of the Association (at Wardha) to the effect that a sum not exceeding one lakh rupees might be spent for conducting a model dairy and a model tannery, it is hereby resolved that the said experiment be conducted by and under the supervision of the managing committee of the Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati, in accordance with the objects of the All-India Cow-protection Association, and to that end a sum not exceeding one lakh rupees, earmarked for the purpose, be donated to the managing committee of the Ashram out of the funds of the Association, with instructions to that committee to furnish an account of the progress of the experiment from time to time.

The following office-bearers of the managing committee of the All-India Cow-protection Association were elected at the meeting:

Chairman—M. K. Gandhi
Treasurer—Sheth Revashanker Jagjivan Jhaveri
Secretary—Valji Govindji Desai

I had hoped during my tour to collect, from lovers of the cow, funds for the Association. The resolution contemplates the expenditure of one lakh of rupees. But the Association has not more than 15,000 rupees in its possession. The resolution has been taken in the hope that the Association will receive sufficient donations from the public. Now that I must be confined to my rooms for some time to come, I appeal to those who are interested in and approve of the method adopted by the Association for the protection and preservation of India’s cattle, to send in their mite, without a personal appeal. Everything received will be acknowledged in these columns. Readers know that the terms of membership of the Association are Rs. 5 or 24,000 yards of well-twisted self-spun yarn per year. I expect, however, substantial donations from those who believe in the method and

\(^1\) Proposed by Jamnalal Bajaj management of the Association.¹

I hope that cow-protection workers will not let Jamnalalji bear the burden of collecting this fund.

To look after the dairy, an experienced gentleman named Parnerkar has been appointed. An Indian tanner who has taken training in America has been entrusted with the tannery work. I hope to publish shortly an account of the work done by them. I suggest to cow-protection workers that they should visit the Ashram and see for themselves the work being done in both the fields.

Young India, 21-4-1927

297. TRUTH IS ONE

A Polish Professor writes:

I am reading with intense joy your fascinating articles in Young India and wish to impress upon you the truth that they are the source of power not only for your own country but for the world. And as you have such a wide spiritual experience, may I ask you one question to be answered if possible in Young India? It is a very important fundamental question to which an answer from you would have a great value. Do you admit that there is in human thought some absolute certainty, as for instance as to God and prayer, where we might be said to have reached perfect unchangeable truth? Do you also confess that some particular experience led you to change your first opinion, for instance, as to the right of killing certain dangerous animals? Now my fundamental question is, on what particular points do you change your opinion? And what guarantee can these changes leave as to the unshaken truth of what remains certain? How can we distinguish opportunistic change of opinion from the permanence of an absolute certainty in essentials? Can you define in what things we may change and what kind of things remain unchangeable? Is independence of each country or people one of those absolute truths, or is there some innate incapacity in some nations for self-government and in others an innate capacity for governing such incapable nations, as the Germans profess to have a capacity for governing other nations and thus justify their ruling ambition?

I have taken the liberty of altering a word here and there in this letter for the purpose of making the writer’s meaning clearer than it appears to be to me in the original. Without in any shape or form endorsing the claim to the powers that the writer ascribes to me, I would in all humility endeavour to answer his questions. My own conscious claim is very simple and emphatic. I am a humble but very earnest seeker after truth. And in my search, I take all fellow-seekers in uttermost confidence so that I may know my mistakes and correct them. I confess that I have often erred in my estimates and judgments. As for instance, whereas I thought from insufficient data that the people of Kheda were ready for civil disobedience, I suddenly discovered that I had committed a Himalayan miscalculation and saw that they could not offer civil disobedience inasmuch as they had not known what it was to tender willing obedience to laws which might be even considered irksome but not immoral. Immediately I made the discovery, I retraced my steps. A similar error of judgment was committed by me when I presented what has been described as the Bardoli ultimatum.\(^1\) I had then believed that the country, that is the people, had been awakened and touched by the movement, had understood the utility of nonviolence. I discovered my error within twenty-four hours of the delivery of the ultimatum and retraced my steps. And inasmuch as in every case I retraced my steps, no permanent harm was done. On the contrary, the fundamental truth of non-violence has been made infinitely more manifest than it ever has been, and the country has in no way been permanently injured.

¹ What follows is from Navajivan, 24-4-1927.

But I am not aware of having changed my opinion about the necessity of killing certain dangerous animals in certain circumstances specifically mentioned in my articles\(^2\). So far as I am aware of my own opinions, I have ever held the opinion expressed by me in those articles. That however does not mean that the opinion is unchangeable. I claim to have no infallible guidance or inspiration. So far as my experience goes, the claim to infallibility on the part of a human being would be untenable, seeing that inspiration too can come only to one who is free from the action of pairs of opposites, and it will be difficult to judge on a given occasion whether the claim to freedom from pairs of opposites is justified. The claim to infallibility would thus always be a most dangerous claim to make. This however does not leave us without any guidance whatsoever. The sum total of the experience of the sages of the world is available to us and would be for all time to come. Moreover, there are not many fundamental truths, but there is only one fundamental truth which is Truth itself.

---

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Viceroy”, 1-2-1922.

\(^2\) Under the caption “Is This Humanity?”.

296
otherwise known as Non-violence. Finite human being shall never know in its fulness Truth and Love which is in itself infinite. But we do know enough for our guidance. We shall err, and sometimes grievously, in our application. But man is a self-governing being, and self-government necessarily includes the power as much to commit errors as to set them right as often as they are made. I do not know whether this will satisfy my correspondent. But whether it does or not, I have no power in me to give him a more satisfactory answer. After all each one must be a law unto himself, the invariable condition being that he must then walk in the fear of God and therefore continually keep on purifying his heart. A man to be a man must be twice-born as Hindus would say, reborn as Christians would say.

The concluding questions of the correspondent are easily answered. In fact, the answers can be inferred from the foregoing remarks. I do think that independence of each country is a truth in the same sense and to the same extent that independence of each man is. There is, therefore, no inherent incapacity for self-government in any country or nation and therefore no inherent capacity for governing other nations. No doubt my correspondent honestly thinks that Germans profess to have a God-given capacity for ruling over other nations. But if there are German imperialists, there are also humble German democrats, who are content if they can quietly govern themselves.

Young India, 21-4-1927

298. KHADI STORES

The following list of khadi stores in the four provinces of Tamil Nadu, Kerala, Maharashtra and Bihar will be read with interest. I propose to publish a list of similar stores in the other provinces as soon as they are available. The list is a sign of the very substantial progress made by khadi since 1920. Measured by what we seek to achieve, the progress no doubt leaves much to be desired. 110 stores in four provinces should, when khadi becomes current like grain or ghee, read 110 stores in a city like Bombay alone and then they would not be too many. And why should it be surprising or unthinkable to have khadi as universal as grain or ghee? Or, if such universality for khadi must be unthinkable, why should it be unthinkable to have, say twenty years hence, as many shops for Australian butter and American wheat as we have today for our own ghee and wheat? If it is patriotic enough to buy foreign cloth because it is cheaper or more pleasant to the eye, why will it not be patriotic enough, when that time comes, to buy cheaper foreign butter and foreign wheat, even though our ghee manufacturers and wheat-growers may become idle and starve for want of other occupations to take the place of the lost ones? These are reflections presented for the edification of wearers of foreign cloth.

1 Not reproduced here

But what is the lesson these stores teach us, khadi organisers? In my opinion, by honest and able organization, we can create a universal demand for khadi,

(a) if those who are engaged in khadi production will pay attention to the manufacture of stronger and more even yarn equal at least to the mill-spun yarn;
(b) if they will also study the tastes of the people and produce sufficient variety of khadi;
(c) if by efficiency in other directions they bring down the price of khadi;
(d) if those who are engaged in the distribution of khadi will gain greater knowledge of the tastes of the people and will learn the art of selling;
(e) if both the producers and the sellers will realize that they must give the maximum of efficiency with the minimum of wages and that self-sacrifice is the one imperative condition of successful organization of khadi on a universal basis.

I note that private depots assume names after their owners or some other name. For greater convenience, I would suggest their having one name—simple Khadi Bhandar or Vastralaya, with A.I.S.A. or Congress or Private as the case may be in parenthesis. Where there are more than one in the same place they may have consecutive numbers. This is desirable so long as khadi has to be organized and nursed and so long as the various depots are either directly owned by the A.I.S.A. or are certified by and affiliated to it.

Young India, 21-4-1927
299. LETTER TO TARINI P. SINHA

April 21, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I shall use your Bureau if I find occasion for it.

What is the use of putting me down on your correspondents’ list if you don’t expect me to do any work at all? Personally I am averse to ornamental list of anything. The sooner we get out of this habit the better for us. After all your work if it is substantial and earnest is bound to tell whether you have the prop of ornamental figures or not. Since the whole burden of this Bureau will, I expect, fall upon your shoulder, I thought that I should warn you against repeating the vicious custom of having any fictitious list of correspondents or members.

Yours, etc.,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 12486

300. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised

NANDI HILLS, MYSORE,

April 25, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your four letters of which three were received together yesterday.

You must have got the wire of departure sent to you from Belgaum on 19th.

One of your letters yesterday prompted me to send you a peremptory wire asking you to come to Nandi. But I restrained myself. The other two letters were less gloomy. But even so, if the separation becomes unbearable, you must come without waiting for an answer or any prompting from me. The love of the people round you should really strengthen you and keep you there. Your letter describing the affection of the people there is most touching and it

1 In reply to his letter of March 27 from London, where he had set up an Indian Information Bureau would be a matter for sorrow if you cannot be at peace with yourself there. But no one can suddenly change one’s nature and if your effort to compose yourself there becomes fruitless, you should tell the friends there so plainly and come away here without the slightest hesitation. On no account should there be a breakdown there. You must not try your nerves to the breaking point.

This is the sixth day here. I am not yet acclimatized. I have not retained the energy and the strength I felt at Amboli, but doctors assure me that Nandi must in the end be more beneficial than Amboli. They say that this is an ideal place for blood-pressure men. There is no cause whatsoever for worry or anxiety.

Since you were so worried about the forgetfulness about the two fasts, it was well that you fasted. There is no doubt that fasting is a good thing even physically whenever there is a nervous strain. It would certainly have been well, if I had fasted before the collapse came. The strain of that day was terrific. But this is wisdom after the event. We may profit by that stupid mistake of mine. I call it stupid because I was aware of the strain and of the merit of fasting in such circumstances. But the Devil is ever after us and catches us at our weakest. He found me weak and wanting and trapped me. Your fast therefore does not worry me. Only you will know when to take it and how to take it.

You must develop iron nerves. It is necessary for our work.

God be with you.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5218. Courtesy: Mirabehn

301. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

NANDI HILLS, MYSORE,
April 25, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have not written to you for some time now. I have been having your letters.

Please have no anxiety on my behalf. I am having all the

1 "I had forgotten to fast on the first and last days of the National Week which begins on the 6th and ends on the 13th of April." (Mirabehn) attention and care that can possibly be given. I have the best medical advice here. The weather is bracing and cool. I shall not plunge into active work thoughtlessly or without medical advice. If your health permits you to come, do please come. But you must not on any account tax your system. The elevation here is over 4,800 feet. There is an abrupt rise of 2,000 feet. It is an exceedingly dry place and without vegetation around.

Your letters have been silent about Hemaprabha Devi. Is she all right now? And how is your boy (I forget his name) and how is Tarini?

With love to you all,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1567

302. LETTER TO MURIEL LESTER

ASHRAM, SABARMATI, 1
April 25, 1927

I have your letter of the 29th March. I must dictate this letter as I must keep as much on my back as possible.

I see you want me to give you the name of an Indian friend who could lay the foundation stone for your new hall. The only one I can think of and thoroughly recommend and whom I know personally very well is Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. His address is: Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Clinique Stephani, Montanas Sierre, Switzerland. And you must write to him. Use this letter and draw him. He will come if you want him and you will be pleased to have him. He is one of the truest men I know in India. I am writing to him.

I do not like your resolution at all. Here is the text that I would recommend. I know it will be difficult for you to pilot my text. But really that alone will answer if it is backed by corresponding action.
The resolution you have given is very vague and will be accepted by the Government of India without any difficulty. For, they will say that they do not thwart any action which the Indian people by their accredited representatives may desire to carry through. They will say, ‘we have transferred this department to them. Let them adjust the finances as they like.’ Do you see what I mean? Our case is that the

1 Permanent address
Government is not sincere, that the people have really no hand in the matter, and that the transfer of excise revenue to the elected representatives is itself proof of the Government’s insincerity. Education is a transferred subject and the financial assistance given to them is from the excise revenue. The Government have thus created a tie. If the accredited representatives shut up liquor shops, they must starve education or impose fresh taxation upon a people who are in no way able to bear the weight even of existing taxation. The remedy, therefore, is, if the position stated above is correct, for the Government to keep the excise department themselves and carry the prohibition policy through and recoup themselves for the loss of revenue by cutting down the military budget. They have as much right to raise revenue through liquor as they would have to raise revenue through legalized prostitution. If this is your position independently of me and if you can support the position by your own study of facts, figures and other literature, your resolution would run thus:

In the opinion of this meeting it is wrong for the people of this country to be party to the maintenance of the liquor traffic in India and that therefore it was wrong on the part of the Government to have made the liquor revenue of India a ‘transferred’ (provincial) subject and consequently a principal source of revenue on which the spending departments of education and development have to depend, thereby rendering it practically impossible for the Ministers responsible for these departments to undertake a policy of prohibition. In the opinion of this meeting the Government of India should have retained the Liquor Revenue as a Central subject and carried out a policy of complete prohibition, the loss of revenue thus sustained being made up for, by retrenchment in the ever-growing and largely unnecessary military expenditure. This meeting therefore calls upon the Government to take the steps necessary to enforce the wish expressed in this resolution.

You may lick the resolution into shape in any manner you like so long as you retain the substance of it unimpaired. I fear that you will find it difficult to carry through the resolution of this character. But really it is the only thing worth having. And if you find that there is no atmosphere yet in England for such a drastic resolution—and I admit that it is drastic—merely put your case before the educated public, and wait for the resolution. The resolution given to you by your friends gives a wrong lead and you know how difficult it is to undo the mischief done by a thing wrongly begun.

I am getting better though I must still take extra-ordinary care to give myself as much rest as is possible both for body and mind.

Yours sincerely,

MISS MURIEL LESTER
CHILDREN’S HOUSE
BOW
LONDON E. 3

From a photostat: S.N. 12475

303. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Silence Day [April 25, 1927]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter.

I am relieved to learn that Purushottam is now improving.

I could not very well follow your telegram. I am however sending a wire telling to contact Vallabhbhai.

The replies you have given to various people are all right. I shall let you know if they have now anything to write to me and in case they do so.

I shall write to Bhai Shankerlal about the suggestion from Dastane.

I am not at all satisfied with the accounts of the dairy. There are 21 errors and we must not pass over them. Please revise the accounts and let me have the figures. Go to Parnerkar and draw his attention to these errors. If Maganlal has come there, have another discussion with him. How could so many mistakes and such grave ones escape his notice? Even if they were not grave, their number is certainly alarming. When you send me the revised figures, put the wrong ones alongside. Pursue this matter to its end.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7710. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Parnerkar joined the Ashram in March 1927 and the figures about the dairy appeared in Navajivan dated 8-5-1927. Also vide “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”, 27-4-1927.
304. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Sunday [After April 25, 1927]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. I have already replied to you but the reply may not have been clear.

My own reason refuses to work in this matter. You may therefore use your reason and come to a decision leaving the responsibility to me. About Gariyadhar, do what you think best on the whole. As regards the Panch Talavadi matter, if your reason does not approve of either Maneklal or Chhaganlal, pay them their due salaries and ask them to stand on their own feet. About Vajeram, do what you think proper. Draw the money that you may need from the khadi account in the Ashram. If the total amount exceeds Rs. 1,000, ask me.

I will continue to be concerned so long as you two brothers do not give me a satisfactory explanation as regards the accounts of the dairy. For, it is a question of adhering to truth. If you think it necessary, I will correct what I have written in Navajivan about it. Therefore, look carefully in the matter and let me know. Purshottam must have fully recovered.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33877

1 In his letter to the addressee dated April 25, 1927, Gandhiji says he was “not at all satisfied with the accounts of the dairy”; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 25-4-1927. The reference to the dairy accounts here clearly indicates that this was written on a later date.
305. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

NANDI DURG,
Silence Day, Chaitra Vad 9, April [26]¹, 1927

CHI. MANI,

I have your letter. The last sentence in it is incomplete, and there is no signature or date either. This shows undue haste. Sweet are the fruits of patience, as our proverb says. Mango trees do not yield overnight, says another. In English one would say haste makes waste.
It was very nice of you to have made a dhoti for Father from your own sari. If you continue this practice and if Dahyabhai and Yashoda too follow suit, how nice it would be.

There is no reason to think that the Karachi job will not be offered to you. But if it is not, there are other places ready to receive you. These can only be considered when I hear something definite from Karachi.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—Manibeihn Pateline, pp. 55-6

306. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

SISTERS,

It looks as though you gave me permission to stop writing to you, because you yourselves did not wish to write to me. Or is it because there is confusion in your Mandal for want of a new president, even as chaos may prevail in a country when there is no king?

Whatever it is, how can I possibly eat and drink and move about and not think of you? None of you gives me any news about Gangadevi. I take it, therefore, that she is now restored to normal health. Do not fail to tell me if any of you fall ill.

There are at present men as well as women in the Ashram. But

¹ The source has “25”.
² Year inferred from the contents suppose, some day, only women are left, and robbers attack the Ashram. Have you ever thought about what you would do in such a case? If you have not thought about it, please do so now and let me know. Do not imagine that such an occasion will never arise. It does arise many a time in our small villages. It happens often in South Africa.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3646

307. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Silence Day, Chaitra Vad 9 [April 26, 1927][1]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

You should not at all hesitate to write detailed letters; you should also put any question you want to.

Consult Jamnalalji about the expenditure and do whatever you can. You may wind up anything that you cannot cope with.

After Kashi reads the enclosed letter you may pass it on, if you like, to Nimu or to Mani; I am not writing separately to everyone. Send Chi. Prabhudas to Ranavav soon. I am improving steadily.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Let Bhai Fulchandji have at your convenience what amounts he asks for. Herewith his letter.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9125. Courtesy: Chhaganlal Gandhi

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have your letter. Do as you please about Bhuvarji. You must have noticed that he does not get along with Sitla Sahai. I got the notes from the Working Committee. I wish everything is settled amicably. I am at the moment concerned about the safety of our persons and property. I think it is not right for us to hire the services of a watchman. I can understand having paid assistants from outside the Ashram for other jobs. But just as we have to offer our own prayers so we shall achieve our aim only when we are able to take care of ourselves. Or we shall have to have recourse to the practice [of employing watchmen], in which case our experiments with truth and non-violence would suffer. We cannot have a watchman who commits violence [against the intruders] nor can we let him suffer violence [at their hands]. If there is to be violence we should inflict it ourselves and also suffer it ourselves. Women and children too should acquire this strength. Just see what an absurd result we get if we visualize a magnified picture of the reports that have reached me. Let us decide, on the basis of merit, our course of conduct since we have not yet lost control of the situation. The East India Company built fortresses and employed mercenaries simply because they had to submit to the circumstances. Should we be swayed by circumstances or should we have them under our sway? I think we should train workers who would keep an all-night vigil. They will have to think of some means of winning over the thieves without having to act in a way contrary to dharma. Let them stay awake at night and sleep for eight hours in the day. Sailors do it without their health being affected by it. They may take turns at this task. But then you may look upon this as a sick man’s wonderings. Being at a distance, I am building castles in the air. But you should all think over this individually and collectively and find out a remedy to your liking. But do come to some final decision in the matter. We ought to know who the intruders were this time. We ought to be able to follow their trail since there were so many of them. Those that were injured can be traced. I shall agree with you even if you all came to the conclusion that we should wind up all our activities, because ultimately it is up to all of you there to run the show. Now we must immediately have our accounts audited. You can invite Nathji’s auditors or those of the Charkha Sangh or anyone else you like, but it should no more be left pending consideration. Ask the auditors to examine the accounts minutely and critically and to make any suggestions they would like to. Chi. Narandas should sit with them so that he can help them with information.

1 From the reference to intruders into the Ashram; vide “Letter to Ashram Women”, 26-4-1927.

This letter is for all of you. I am improving though not very fast. Yesterday I walked a lot so that I could take rest today.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

Supplement

PS.

After writing this, I read in the other letter from you about the arrangements, etc. So according to our practice, the enclosed letter should be addressed to Chhaganlal, shouldn’t it? It is all right if the changes have all been introduced after due deliberations.

I have noted what you say about Sir Gangaram. The description fails to make a favourable impression on me. It is all to the good that you could learn something about agriculture. Ours is an absolutely unique way. Our aim is to ensure that we follow our dharma till the end.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PPS.]

How are Rukhi, Radha?

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7766. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

309. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

_Tuesday, April 26, 1927_

CHI. MIRA.

I must write as often as I can for the time being, I shall anxiously await your reply to yesterday’s letter. You must cheer up.

If there are carpenters there you should get the travelling wheel mended. Where you can yourself do the mending you should do it yourself. You may ask the friends there for the necessary tools or buy some. They are always handy.

I am feeling stronger than yesterday. Subbiah is waiting for the post.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5219. Courtesy: Mirabehn

310. LETTER TO KSHITISH CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

NANDI HILLS, MYSORE,
April 26, 1927

DEAR KSHITISH BABU,

Though I have not written to you during my illness, I have often thought of you and the Pratishthan. I am getting on fairly well and can do a moderate amount of letter-writing, etc. Do please tell me how you are getting on and how the climate of Sodepur agrees with the workers there.

I send you an extract from Mirabai’s letter about the travelling charkha. I too have found the parts to be weak. It will be no disadvantage if it is made stronger even though the weight increases a bit. The axle bearings should be metallic and the uprights should undoubtedly be strong. The spokes too should be more rigid than they are. However, you will see what can be and should be done. Mirabai is a most thoughtful worker. Her well meant criticism should be taken for what it is worth.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 8032

311. LETTER TO R. B. GREGG

NANDI HILLS,
April 26, 1927

MY DEAR GOVIND,

Do not be alarmed. Though I reply to your letter so promptly, it is not by way of courtesy, but for pleasure; for, I do not yield to you in my zeal for dietetic reform. Only my lot having been during the last 20 years cast in a rigid mould, I have not been able to wriggle out of it in spite of my intense desire to prosecute dietetic research. But now that nature had laid me low, the appetite which was never eradicated, but was only under suppression, has become active and I go for everything in this direction with avidity.

Now to the point. For the last two days I have made one important change prompted by a fellow crank. He suggested my taking the juice of fresh neem leaves by mixing it with milk. He says my case is not one of blood-pressure but of flatulence. Blood pressure there certainly is; but I am inclined to agree with this friend, that blood-pressure is a temporary effect of flatulence which is the root cause, and he thinks I could deal with the latter by taking the juice of neem leaves with my meals. These leaves are bitter. He says they contain the necessary vitamins. I am watching their effect now. Your letter was received yesterday and the change I have made today is to take unboiled milk. This was suggested by some medical friends at Amboli. But I was not responsive. But your letter has evoked the necessary response. My hosts have brought some goats on to this hill and they are milked under supervision. Milk was therefore brought this morning fresh from the udders. It was mixed with neem leaves juice and hot raisin water was added to the milk. This in accordance with your letter gives me the vitamins from the milk and in accordance with that friend gives me the vitamins from the neem leaves. I am therefore at the present moment omitting fresh vegetables because I am not yet satisfied that these vegetables are necessary especially as I am taking those bitter leaves and unboiled milk. At what point are vitamins destroyed when you boil leafy vegetables? What is the virtue of vitamins? What is the quantity of leafy vegetables one should take in order to get the required measure of vitamins? What quantity of unboiled milk will give the vitamins required? Is it true that mere heating the milk does not destroy vitamins? Or they are only destroyed when milk is brought to the boiling point?

I have tried the nuts in the manner you suggest. I had them reduced to butter. The pulp was as fine as butter. I had almonds turned into milk. But I could not cope with it, no matter how far you pulverized the nuts. They must, it appears, pass through the double process of digestion like all non-flesh foods. It is only animal food which does not tax the large intestines. Before nuts, therefore, can attain the digestibility of milk, the first process of digestion must be gone through outside the human system. I was told when I was in London, that melted nuts had that effect. I do not know how far this is true. I want to succeed in non-milk experiment because I am convinced that milk, apart from mother’s milk, is not human food, nor is cooking essential. A perfect food therefore for human needs has yet to be found. From the spiritual stand-point, I have a horror of animal milk, and that it is goat’s milk I am taking does not lessen the horror. It merely enables me to respect the letter of my vow, though I know that the spirit of it is hardly kept if not already broken. I have reconciled myself to goat’s milk under the delusive belief that I must have for my work on the earth in this body and so I cling to it at the expense of my innermost conviction. He, therefore, who can wean me from milk, will be in a way a deliverer. There are spiritual experiences which I know have been interrupted because of my taking milk. When I was living rigidly on sun-baked fruits and sun-baked nuts without using fire and this was for several years—the animal passion was not merely under conscious subjection and control, but it was, so far as my memory serves me, thoroughly absent and I believe that I had almost entirely conquered it. All that has been changed since my return to milk diet. I can no longer claim that immunity. I can only say in all humility that though I am conscious of that passion, I can keep it under subjection and appear before the world a respectable human being from whose lust no woman need fear. But it cost me all my strength to keep the brute in me under disciplined subjection and control. I am positive that a full-grown man does not need all that effort to keep his passions under check. On the contrary, the energy that set free when the passions are kept under control can, if he wishes, be transferred into unconquerable power for the good of mankind.
But somehow or other, I fancy that I shall never attain that freedom, that personal swaraj, so long as I have to struggle against the effect of the highly exciting unnatural food; whereas, nuts are fine muscle builders without being stimulants in the sense in which I have used them. Now you can understand why I reply to your letter so promptly.

It is a great pity that you have not yet got rid of your piles. No mere dietetic change will give you relief. Medicine will be only a palliative. I am making explorations into which I must not enter now, because, I am merely on the threshold of them. I am collecting round me friends who have experimented. I shall give you a report if I see any signs of real success. It hurts me however to think that you did not have an operation for want of means. Dr. Ansari is a first-class surgeon. I could send a note to him if you don’t know him. He will, I am sure, gladly perform the operation and put you either in his own house or in some place where you will have to pay nothing. You could also have the operation performed by one of the cleverest of surgeons in India, that is, Dr. Dalal in Bombay. There are not one but more than one hospitals that I know will admit you with greatest pleasure. You may not know that Dr. Dalal operated on me, Devdas, Mrs. Jamnalalji and, last but not the least, Andrews. You have only to let me know what arrangements you would like and they shall be made. Do not hesitate please to write to me of your discoveries about the spinning-wheel and machinery. Of course I am interested in your scholastic researches, and, as a matter of fact, this enforced rest gives me just the time to read letters and to reflect upon topics in which both you and I are interested. From the length of the dictated letter you can infer that I am not badly off though I need to lie on my back as much as possible. There is no difficulty about dictating letters and even sitting up for a time to write as I did yesterday, it being my silence day.

With love to you all,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhi

R. B. Gregg, Esq.
Care of S. E. Stokes, Esq.
Kotgarh, Simla Hills

From a photostat: S.N. 12571

312. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[After April 26, 1927]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

This time the thieves in the Ashram seem to have been more bold. We have to decide how to deal with them—whether we would like to shift to the nearby villages, or, we would like to fight the

---

1 The contents of this letter closely match those of the letter to the addressee dated April 26, 1927; vide “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”, 26-4-1927. The nature of reference to the auditing of accounts suggests that this was written on a later date.
thieves, or, would do both. We will never seek the help from the Government. If we wish to deal with it ourselves, we will have to make arrangement for lights. In that case, we have no option but to have the electricity. It is the cheapest source and is our... We have to use the engine for water and perhaps the same may be used for electric lights.
For the protection of the guards, we will have to make special arrangement. The situation remains the same even if we ourselves do the work of guards. We have taken up so many activities here that we cannot do without taking steps for their protection or we will have to wind up all the activities... We have to see how long we can adhere to ahimsa in spite of our activities....

I am not able to take any decision on behalf of everyone. One man alone cannot do that. Whatever decision you all take jointly will be the best. I will only say that it is necessary for us to take a prompt decision in the matter.

I am reminding you again about the auditor. Inspect the sales depot. There is a risk here. We have to take into consideration that too.

Nurbanu has come here. It is more than a month since she decided to sell off her ornaments. She says that there is no change in it. So they are to be sold off if there are any buyers.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32916

313. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

NANDI DURG,
Chaitra Vad [11, April 27, 1927]¹

BHAISHRI FULCHAND,

I have your letter. Cholera has broken out in an epidemic form in Porbandar and Bhai Amritlal Thakkar is afraid we cannot hold the convention in June. Is it true? He has another reason, viz., my ¹ A few words are illegible at each of these places.

² ibid.
³ ibid.
⁴ The source has Chaitra Vad 10, which however was a kshaya (skipped) date.
indifferent health and I too agree with him. Please let me know the various aspects of the situation.

I have forwarded to Chi. Chhaganlal the letter about funds for the school, asking him to send the amount as and when possible. I also understand from your letter that you have no intention of coming under the Vidyapith and that, if your present requirements are met with, you will later on manage yourself somehow.

I have been writing to Narandas about the khadi work.

Now about the Satyagraha Dal.

There will never be too many satyagrahis; my blessings therefore even to those who would try to become one. But are we likely to gain any special advantage by forming a Dal? There could be recruiting for an immediate task on hand. Will the Dal be useful as a stand-by when an occasion comes up? Or if we have such an organization, it should, I am convinced by experience, be engaged in some constructive activity. In the event of a struggle, we can draw from it the required number of workers and the rest can come and join of their own accord. What will these 18 persons do as long as there is no occasion to launch a struggle? Of course they do carry on their spinning; when I speak of constructive activity I mean that which would keep them occupied all the time. All these 18 persons have their own business to attend to. At the moment they have no social activity to take up collectively.

Who will build up faultless character? How is it defined? You for one know well that the Satyagraha Ashram exists just for it. And even there, who could certify faultless character?

Satyagraha and the satyagrahis are like the sun and its rays, you cannot hide them under a bushel, they cannot be unmade by your refusing to recognize them.

Everywhere today I see occasions for satyagraha; but where are those who would offer it? Those that would are ever ready. They are preparing themselves and when they have the confidence they will never wait for my permission or anyone else’s.

In spite of all this cautioning, I would ask you to let all that you have done stand as it is. It would not have mattered had you not worked it up, but where the intention is noble there is no room for disappointment or for undoing what has been done.

1 Vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Gandhi”, 26-4-1927.
Think of something that would strengthen the bond among the workers. As for my criticism in the first instance you should think it over yourself and then make such additions and alterations as you think right.

When we meet we shall again discuss it further.

This Dal is certainly not in response to those who are pressing us to take up political activity. Their point of view too deserves to be understood. It is a different thing that you and I are not interested in it. They maintain that even today we should carry on a movement, as far as we can, over all the issues that are believed to have a political aspect. Satyagraha may or may not come off, but let us at least present a petition regarding our present miseries. If nothing more, let us come together for discussions since we are allowed to. If nothing else, let us at any rate exchange views and so on.

This line of thought cannot certainly be dismissed; we too had been thinking this way in the past. Your Dal does not answer this expectation. You should find out some simple way for them, or help them find it. One of the ways to do this is to willingly leave the organization of the Political Conference to them and help them with it as much as you can.

As I write, more comes to my pen. But if I set out to “print” all of it I would tire my hand and my doctor will warn me that my blood-pressure may rise.

You should therefore strike the ‘t’s and dot the ‘i’s in what I have written today. And if you cannot, you should get me to do it on some other occasion.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 2866. Courtesy: Sharadabehn Shah
BHAISHRI MAMA,

I have your letter. It appears the Godhra Ashram has at present a good number of students. But then you also could be said to have done good work. You must have noticed however that the Ashram children did more spinning in that way. Did you read Ramachandran’s report of Jamia Millia?

It may be said the boys there did absolutely no spinning for six years. Just a knowledgeable, affectionate teacher who had faith in it has changed the entire atmosphere of the Ashram. Many such stories come to me. I do not write all this as criticism of you but only to strengthen your faith if I may.

But I do not want to tell you things, I want to hear what you have to say. How do you feel about Ramanandji’s work? What about that of the Punjab? Did you cope with that task?

Everyone believes I should be all right. The doctors here say that I have no illness as such, but that I must have long rest. The weather here is fine. The view cannot compare with the one at Chinchpokli.

If it were your responsibility, what would you do about the nuisance of prowlers round the Ashram? Think long before you answer.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3847

1 The source has Chaitra Vad 10, which however was a kshaya date.
315. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised April 27, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your cheerful letter. If you can realize every word of what you have written, all your trouble is over and also my anxiety. We really live through and in our work. We perish through our perishable bodies, if instead of using them as temporary instruments, we identify ourselves with them. The more I observe and study things, the more convinced I become that sorrow over separation and death is perhaps the greatest delusion. To realize that it is a delusion is to become free. There is no death, no separation of the substance. And yet the tragedy of it is that though we love friends for the substance we recognize in them, we deplore the destruction of the insubstantial that covers the substance for the time being. Whereas real friendship should be used to reach the whole through the fragment. You seem to have got the truth for the moment. Let it abide for ever.¹

I do not know how Krishnanandji came to think that I was coming there in June. What I did say—I think in letter was that I would like to come as early as I could. I note your warning. There is little chance of my being able to leave the place before June, if then.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5220. Courtesy: Mirabehn

316. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN

April 27, 1927

An illness comes on with a steed’s speed and goes away at a snail’s pace. If only you girls had allowed me to starve on that day instead of getting fruits and other things ready for me, I would not have fallen ill. You should show your affection not by feasting me but by making me fast. Even if I come asking for food after doing a lot of work, I must be told, ‘Now be patient, rest for a while. We will let

¹ “I had grasped the truth with my intellect, but the heart lagged behind for still many years after this.” (Mirabehn)
you have a little milk and maybe an orange.' You can say this to me nicely. Don’t you know I often deal with Rasik and Manu in this way? Who would call me cruel on this account? Why must I be my sole guardian? Why can’t you girls be to me what I am to Manu? Now when you return, be kind to me in this way.

_Blessings to all the sisters from_

_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

_317. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI_

_Wednesdays [April 27, 1927]_

I have your letter. Herewith find the letters from Ganesh and Ramachandra. Answers to these are also enclosed. Let me know if From the Gujarati original: C. W. 8701. Courtesy: Radhabejn Chaudhri ut what Ramachandra writes.

The statistics about cows and buffaloes will prove useful.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

_318. UNTOUCHABILITY AND UNREASON_

A correspondent from Mahad writes:

It gives me much sorrow to let you know that there was a riot on the 20th of March last between touchables and untouchables at Mahad. There was held a conference of the Colaba District depressed classes on the 19th and 20th ultimo. The meeting was quite successful. But whilst the crowd was dispersing, Mr. A. V. Chitre of the Social Service League of Bombay told the people as they were thirsty and as the sun was very hot that they could go to the public tank and drink water. There were some who tried to dissuade the men from going to the tank. But Dr. Ambedkar the president decided to march the men to the tank. Even the police inspector could not feel the gravity of the situation, and instead of stopping the crowd from proceeding to the tank, went with them. The tank is situated in the midst of the Brahmin locality. As however no

---

1 From the reference to the statistics about cows and buffaloes printed in Navajivan, 8-5-1927 one was aware that the untouchables were going to the tank there was no disturbance, and hundreds of them quenched their thirst at the tank with cries of “Hara Hara Mahadev”. Meanwhile the touchables came to the scene and they watched the incident with rage. The crowd of untouchables then went back to the pandal for their meals. Within an hour of this the Mahad public was suddenly awakened by the wild cry Gurava and they were told that the untouchables were thinking of entering the temple of Vireshwar.

It was a false cry; but in no time the temple was filled by an infuriated mob of touchables who had sticks in their hands. The poor untouchables had no intention whatsoever of going to the temple. But the touchables finding no untouchable attempting to enter the temple practically ran amuck, went to the bazaar and began to beat any untouchable they came across in the street. All the while this beating was going on on the part of the touchables, not one untouchable offered any resistance. A few touchables who sympathized with the untouchables tried to protect them; but the furious mob would not be checked. They even rushed into the huts of shoe-makers and such others and beat them severely. The helpless untouchables ran wildly for help; but none was offered by the shopkeepers. The untouchables who were in the pandal were derided by the touchables for not coming out in the open to fight. There were nearly 1,500 of the former in the pandal and if they had offered to fight there would have been a great calamity and Hinduism would have been disgraced. Dr.
Ambedkar justified the advice that he had given on the strength of the resolution that was passed in the Bombay Legislative Council and on the opinion expressed by the Mahad Municipality that the untouchables were lawfully entitled to take water from public tanks and wells.

I have omitted from the correspondent’s letter several passages giving further details. But the letter appears to me to be genuine and does not in any way appear to be an over-estimate. Assuming then that the incident is correctly reported there can be no question about the unprovoked lawlessness on the part of the so-called higher classes.
For, it should be remembered that it was not the drinking of water at the tank which had brought together the “touchables” to the temple but the false report that the untouchables were wanting to enter the temple. But one can hardly expect sanity to exist side by side with unreason. Untouchability itself has no reason behind it. It is an inhuman institution. It is tottering and it is sought to be supported by the so-called orthodox party by sheer brute force.

The so-called untouchables have brought the question a step nearer solution by their exemplary self-restraint under most provoking circumstances. Had they retaliated it would have been perhaps difficult to distribute the blame. As it is, the blame is all on the side of the “touchables”. Brute force will not sustain untouch-ability. It will bring about a revulsion of feeling in favour of the suppressed classes.
It is a sign of the times that there were at least some “touchables” who tried to defend the poor untouchables. One could wish that there were many more in Mahad. Silent sympathy on such occasions is not of much use. Every Hindu, who considers the removal of untouch-ability to be of paramount importance, should on such occasions prove his sympathy by publicly defending the suppressed classes and having his own head broken in defending the helpless and the downtrodden.

I cannot help thinking that Dr. Ambedkar was fully justified in putting to test the resolutions of the Bombay Legislative Council and the Mahad Municipality by advising the so-called untouchables to go to the tank to quench their thirst. No incident of this character should pass by unnoticed on the part of associations like the Hindu Mahassabha interested in this reform. Let them investigate the statements made by my correspondent and if they can be substantiated, let them condemn the action of the “touchables”. There is nothing like the growth of enlightened public opinion for eradicating everything evil, which untouchability undoubtedly is.

Young India, 28-4-1927

319. SASTRI AS FIRST AMBASSADOR

Very considerable relief will be felt by the Indian settlers in South Africa over the announcement that the Right Hon’ble V. S.
Srinivasa Sastri has consented to become India’s first Agent-general in that sub-continent, if the post is finally offered to him by the Government of India. It is a great sacrifice that Sastri and the Servants of India Society have made. It is an open secret that left to himself he was not inclined to undertake the responsibility and to leave his work in India. But he has yielded to the pressure of friends, especially when it was urged upon him that he alone could successfully inaugurate the working of the Agreement in bringing about which he played not an inconsiderable part. We know from the cables that were sent from time to time from South Africa that the Europeans were anxious that he should accept the honour. Sjt. Srinivasa Sastri had by his eloquence, transparent sincerity, sweet reasonableness, and extreme earnestness won the esteem and respect of the Union Government and the Europeans in South Africa during the short time that he was there as a member of the Habibullah Deputation. I know how nervously anxious our countrymen in South Africa were that he should become the first Agent. It was impossible for Sjt. Srinivasa Sastri whom God has endowed with a generous nature not to respond to such a unanimous call from South Africa. It is almost a foregone conclusion that the appointment will be duly made and very shortly announced.

The first Agent-general will have his work cut out for him. Both the Union Government and our countrymen have no doubt high expectations of India’s first ambassador. The Union Government no doubt think that being an Indian and a person of great distinction he will make their path smooth with the Indian community in connection with any measures that they may take. In other words, they will expect him to be their sympathetic interpreter both to the Indian community and to the Government of India. Our countrymen equally surely expect him to insist upon an honourable and even a liberal interpretation and fulfilment of the Agreement. It is any time a delicate task to please rival claimants, more so now in South Africa where the clash of conflicting interests is simply bewildering. But I know that if anybody can hold the scales absolutely even and thus give satisfaction to all parties concerned, Sjt. Srinivas Sastri is certainly the one to be able to do so. I feel certain that the Union Ministers do not expect the new Agent to surrender an inch of what is justly due to the Indian community. All he can be expected to do is to persuade the Indian settlers not to go behind and travel beyond the Settlement1 of 1914, for some time to come at any rate, until they have proved themselves entitled, by exemplary self-restraint and behaviour, to an enlargement of the position attained by the Agreement of 1914. Our countrymen in South Africa, if they intend to make the Agent’s position fairly easy and their own position secure, will not expect him to work wonders. It will be wrong to look forward to a complete transformation of the old position, because an honourable Agreement has been arrived at and because a great countryman is going to South Africa to see to the fulfilment of that Agreement. They must remember that the Rt. Hon. Srinivasa Sastri is not going there as their counsel briefed to attend to every individual grievance. To smother him with detailed individual grievances would be to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. He goes there as a trustee for India’s honour. He goes there to safeguard the rights and liberty of the general body of Indian settlers. He will be there to see that no fresh restrictive legislation is embarked upon by the Union Government and that the existing restrictive laws are administered liberally and with due regard to the vested rights. Any individual grievance therefore that he might be called upon to tackle will have to be in terms of the position I have set forth, that is to say, it will have to be illustrative of some general principle of wide application. Unless therefore the Indian community exercises prudential restraint upon themselves in approaching him for redress of their individual grievances, they will make the Agent’s position intolerable and even useless for the high purpose for which it is intended. Indeed such an ambasador’s usefulness lies not so much in work appertaining to his official capacity as to the indirect service he can render by his sociableness, and by his character, which leaves its impress upon anything and anybody that it comes in contact with officially or otherwise. And if our countrymen desire to make use of the great qualities of head and heart that Sjt. Sastri posseses, they will bear in mind the limitations I have endeavoured to set forth.

1 Vide “The Indians’ Relief Act, 1914”, after 5-6-1914.

I understand that if Sjt. Sastri goes, Mrs. Sastri too will accompany him. This will be a great gain to the settlers. Let the Indian sisters in South Africa gather round Mrs. Sastri and surround her with every affection. They will find in her an invaluable instrument of social service. She will act as a leaven in their midst to raise the general tone among the many thousand Indian sisters who are scattered throughout South Africa.

Young India, 28-4-1927

320. A TERRIBLE CONTRAST

A friend having for the first time seen New Delhi and the Assembly Hall in March last writes:

I was the other day for the first time in the Assembly Hall and it was for the first time then that I saw New Delhi also. I could see how millions must have been poured into the construction of New Delhi to make it so imposing. The Assembly Hall too presents an equally imposing appearance. But as I came out of the Assembly Hall, I saw dilapidated huts which turned out to be the labour camp where I thought must be living the coolies working at the construction of New Delhi....

1 Only extracts are reproduced here.

The contrast between the palaces built in New Delhi for wealthy people and the miserable huts allotted to the people whose labour was responsible for the palaces was too terrible for contemplation....

How, I thought to myself, could the members of the Assembly day after day miss the horrible contrast which I could see even during the few moments that I was in New Delhi? . . .

I have said nothing to any of the members. But could you not do anything in this matter? I have said nothing because I could influence no one; but you may think it worth while doing something. You are a friend of the poor and might be able to secure some relief. Anyway I could not help disburdening myself to you.

I have summarized the main contents of the letter which my fair correspondent has written in Hindi. The criminal disparity that exists between the condition of labour and that of capital is no new thing in modern times. The discovery made by the friend reminds one of the discovery said to have been made centuries ago by Gautama Buddha. It was no new thing he saw. But the shock received by the sight of old age, disease and other miseries of life transformed his life and materially affected the fortunes of the world. It is well that this lady has received her first shock. If she and the other cultured women of India, who have received their education at the expense of the very poor people of whom the correspondent writes so pathetically, will dive deeper and make some slight return to these poor people by making common cause with them, some alleviation in their distressful condition will not be long in coming. Every palace that one sees in India is a demonstration not of her riches but of the insolence of power that riches give to the few, who owe them to the miserably requitted labours of the millions of the paupers of India. We have a Government which is based upon and which only exists by the exploitation of the toiling millions.

A friend sent me the other day a cutting from an English newspaper which considered Rs. 1,500 for an Englishman to be not enough for his wants in India, and it warned Englishmen from venturing out to India if they could get not more than Rs. 1,500 per month. There is no need to quarrel with that standard. From the writer’s own standpoint, Rs. 1,500 per month is demonstrably inadequate because he regards club life, a motor-car, migration to a hill-station during the hot months, education of children in England to be the necessary minimum. All one can say and one must say about this standard is, that if it is the indispensable minimum, it is a standard too expensive for India to afford; and however beneficial in the abstract may the services of English officials be demonstrated to be, if the toiling millions are to live, they must get along without these beneficial services for the simple reason that the benefit is beyond the reach of their pockets. I suppose it is possible to demonstrate that if the millions of India could be translated to some bracing Himalayan plateau, they would be able to double the length of their days on earth. But it is a proposition which they will laugh out of court as beyond their reach.

What the lady observed in New Delhi is but a tiny symptom of an ever-growing and deep-seated disease which is daily destroying the lives of thousands of people. It is quite possible to imagine that if an energetic member of the Assembly moved a resolution calling upon the Government to provide better housing accommodation for the labourers, the resolution would be carried, that it would not be vetoed and that the Government would gladly give effect to it at the expense of millions poorer still than these labourers. I am sure that this is not what the fair friend really desires. What she desires in common with every Indian who knows anything of the country is a radical change in the system of government which is top-heavy and which under its intolerable weight is crushing day after day the poor inhabitants of this country who are groaning at the bottom. I have pointed the way out of this difficult situation times without number. I do not know another.

Young India, 28-4-1927

321. NOTES

KHADDAR AND PREM MAHAVIDYALAYA

Acharya Gidwani has been slowly but surely revolutionizing the mentality of the boys learning in Prem Mahavidyalaya at Brindaban.
In the course of a letter he says:

I do not boast of my khaddar work in this Mahavidyalaya; but I can safely assure you that you will not be disappointed when you see it. Beginning with gentle pressure I have arrived at a stage when every teacher and student

324

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
wears khaddar without grudging and everyone spins on takli for 45 minutes daily. Carding is done by turns and weaving is taught to select students. Dyeing has been started. About Rs. 2,000 worth of khaddar has been sold through the Prem Mahavidyalaya during the session, and everyone in Muttra and the neighbourhood looks upon the Prem Mahavidyalaya as a stronghold of shuddha khaddar. Two tailors have been busy sewing exclusively khaddar for months in the Mahavidyalaya and will continue doing so.

I congratulate Acharya Gidwani and his staff and students. His performance reminds me of a similar performance reported in these columns with reference to the Jamia Millia of Delhi. These two instances and more can be quoted to show that where there are earnestness and faith there is no difficulty about response from students. I have said repeatedly that it is the easiest thing to popularize khaddar and hand-spinning in schools if the teachers have faith combined with knowledge and perseverance. I know of no school where these three conditions being fulfilled there has been failure.

Young India, 28-4-1927

322. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

NANDI HILLS,
April 28, 1927

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

It was a treat to receive your letter. But you will remember that you owe me a medical visit—can’t call it professional because a professional visit will carry with it Rs. 1,000 per day if not more, now that you have been twice to Europe since the promise of a visit. And, is not each European visit supposed to add to the capacity of doctors and lawyers and therefore also their daily fees? Meanwhile, I shall bear your instructions in my mind. My chief difficulty is how to control the mind and not to let it think, unless I develop dementia. If you say I may not reduce my thoughts to writing or not even give utterance by speech even in the shape of conversation, I can somewhat understand; but I do not know how I can prevent the doings of Hindus and Mussalmans from making me think furiously. Nor do I know how to prevent the growing starvation of millions acting upon my mind. I do not need to read papers and get information to make me continuously think of these things. The only way to prevent me from thinking of these things is for Hindus and Mussalmans to behave like human beings rather than sub-human animals and for all of us... who get more than our share of our daily bread to think of the vast majority of the teeming millions and for their sakes to discard foreign cloth and for their encouragement to spin during every idle moment.

If it is really a fact that high blood-pressure is due to an overwrought brain, I seriously contend that the only way to remove this tension would be to prescribe a starvation cure. Deep down in me I do feel that a prolonged fast is the only radical cure because during the 21 days fast, I could see that after 10 days I had ceased even to think of the outside world. The starvation had created that temporary mental adjustment. Whilst I am eating even if it was possible the mind refuses not to think. But under starvation the mind will co-operate in ceasing to think and worry. And, if in spite of the care that I am myself taking and in spite of the army of medical friends who see me and examine me, in spite of the quacks whose opinion I voluntarily seek and in spite of the undivided attention of devoted nurses, blood-pressure refuses to yield and weakness persists, I shall certainly risk causing temporary pain to many friends and impose a fast upon myself either to end or to mend this vegetating and vexing state. But there is no cause for any alarm. It seems that the pressure will go down. For the last two days I am feeling stronger than when I came to Nandi. The highest pressure during last week was 188. On Tuesday last it was found to be 180. This was the first decline yet noticed after the collapse.

This hill is 4,850 feet, therefore, not so high as Ooty nor so cold; but it is cool enough and Doctor Mehta considers that I should not [go] to a higher altitude. Others again say that higher the altitude the better it is for . . . When doctors differ what is a poor patient to do? Some day when you are free I shall certainly expect you when we shall talk not merely of my health but about several other things of infinitely greater importance.

Please give my love to all who think of me and accept it for yourself.

Yours sincerely,

From the photostat: S.N. 14119 & 12949

1 From September 17 to October 8, 1924.
2 The source is blank here.
323. LETTER TO SHANKARAN

NANDI HILLS,
April 28, 1927

MY DEAR SHANKARAN,

Your letter is a tonic for me. You are realizing all my expectations. I am delighted that the kitchen is in a perfect state now. Who is your right-hand man? How is Giriraj doing? Are you keeping perfect health? Your kitchen must become a treasure store of health of mind, body and spirit. There must be all about it and for all times a sweetness, restfulness and peacefulness which should be capable of being detected by any passer-by. Everything in its place, everything clean, no foreign smells of a multiplicity of condiments, only the natural smell of simple edibles and workers working harmoniously, contentedly and smilingly in their own persons showing perfect health. Do you know that the rishis of old were poets, philosophers, cooks, scavengers all rolled into one? Nalaraja was a wise ruler, an ideal husband and a finished cook. Every occupation may become disgraced by bad associations and every occupation can become a stepping-stone to salvation when it is undertaken by a wise man.

Yours,

From a photostat: S.N. 14120

324. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised April 28/29, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

Your latest letter is still more cheerful. I hope this mood will last. I very nearly sent you a card in Hindi today. But it was too late. This [is] written after the receipt of the post, but also after its departure which precedes the receipt

I have made a slight change in the food here which is approved by a distinguished doctor who is living nearby. I am now taking raw milk and adding now and then juice of a few neem leaves and have omitted chapatis and vegetables for the time being. I may revert to the latter two if it becomes necessary. There is now noticed a decline in the blood-pressure for the first time since the collapse. I am feeling altogether better.

The rest through Mahadev.

With love,

BAPU

29th Morning

You should certainly translate Rolland’s book. But if you are at peace with yourself now your permanent attainment of internal peace is far more important than anything else. You like the people there. You can therefore give them much and take also. I would like you if you can to grow to your full height there before you leave. My suggestion then is that you should set apart religiously an hour daily for translation and make such progress as you can. Meanwhile, God might open the way for me to stay there for the necessary time and the facts may be revised in consultation with Mahadev. Or when you feel that your work there is finished you can come wherever I am if I do not come there soon enough. But you shall decide what to do. I have told you you are free to come here whenever you like. Only do not please regard the translation work more important than what you are doing there. If a man is to be judged by his deeds and not by whatever the sanest man of the age may from a distant study of him say of him then the lives of co-workers will be the best judgement on me. You understand what I mean, do you not?

I fancy I have forgotten to answer a question you asked in one of your letters. Undoubtedly the interpretation of your vow is that your last meal should be finished before 7 p.m. or dusk whichever the vow is. You are therefore right in your interpretation. The rule regarding vows is when in doubt interpret against yourself, i.e., in favour of greater restriction.

BAPU

[PS.]

Please tell Lady Slade’ I am thankful for her concern about me.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5221. Courtesy: Mirabehn

1 Addressee's mother
325. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

Friday [April 29] 1927

CHI. MANI,

I have your letters. It would be very good indeed for you to take your meals at the Ashram mess. Read my letter\(^1\) to Shankaran on the subject. You have done well to take charge of Champa\(^3\).

How is your health now?

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—Manibehn Patelne, p. 55

326. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Chaitra Vad 13 [April 29, 1927]\(^4\)

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Read this letter and then send it immediately to Nimu.

Let me know what you and Kashi feel. Ramdas is getting good training. At present, he is very much interested in it. Let us see what happens later on.

I am not at all inclined to send Prabhudas to Almora. I am trying to bring him here. He will get everything here.

I even feel like sending him to Mathuradas in Panchagani. It is better not to do anything in haste. These days, it is neither hot nor cold, so he could go for a couple of days.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original 32858

---

1 Vide “Letter to Shankaran”, 28-4-1927.
2 ibid.
3 Dr. Pranjivandas Jagjivan Mehta’s daughter-in-law
4 From Mathuradas’s presence at Panchagani where he went in the year 1927. Chaitra Vad 13 in 1927 corresponded to April 29.
327. LETTER TO JAGJIVANDAS NARAYANDAS MEHTA

NANDI HILLS,
April 30, 1927

Do a fine job of what you take up as a trust. You should give up the work at Lathi if you are doubtful about it or cannot cope with it.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 69

328. LETTER TO SUMANT MEHTA

April 30, 1927

SUJNA BHAISHRI,

I have your letter. Indeed you have presented an abstract discussion. Well, I like that too, but at the moment you are in the land of Narasinh Mehta; so I am reminded of his morning hymn.

For the present let us vie with each other in getting well quick. Please convey my congratulations to Bhai Raichura on the privilege of serving you. Vandemataram to Sharadabehn.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

329. LETTER TO NIMU

April 30, 1927

CHI. NIMU,

Next year you will be married, and begin a new life. I want you and Ramdas to get ready and prepare yourselves for it. I write this to you after I have written to Ramdas. I have long since been corresponding with Ramdas. Go through the enclosed extract from Ramdas’s letter.

I wish both of you would devote your lives to service; Ramdas does wish to. You should earn your livelihood too from it, as Maganlal does and many others too. I wish you two could become an ideal couple, for which you should begin your efforts from now on.
Whatever time you can spare from your household duties you may devote to khadi work, for which you too would be paid. I have been doing it in two cases; one of Chi. [Kishorelal] and Gomatibehn and the other of Thakkar and his wife. But you can surpass them both. The job that you are required to do will be easy but you will get the satisfaction that you can earn on your own, and one should always try to prove that one can. You can run your home along with this occupation, and, I think, you can also look after your children when you have them. Thousands of husbands and wives from poor families earn their living in this way. You know yourself the cases of Dudabhai and Danibehn, of Ramjibhai and Gangabehn. We shall also remain poor alongside of them. Only then shall we be fit to realize God.

For accomplishing this you ought to improve your ginning, carding and spinning. Side by side, you must improve your knowledge of Gujarati and pick up some book-keeping. You can find time for all this. You must improve your health too. Sanskrit and so on are of course to be there.

* * *

Consider all this and write to me frankly what you think about it. Write to me as a daughter would speak to her mother without reserve, or like two friends opening their hearts to each other. Write to me what you want to do without bothering about my likes. Tell me frankly about anything in my letter that you do not approve. Nothing can be accomplished by force; something will be by what you willingly undertake to do.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

330. LETTER TO SITARAM PURUSHOTTAM PATWARDHAN

April 30, 1927

In my article about buffaloes I have said nothing about destroying them; on the contrary an attempt should be made to raise their breed. Where the need for a thing is real it will surely be

1 As in the source
2 Alias Appal protected. What I mean is that cow-protection alone can be part of dharma. It includes compassion for other animals. But these are not being destroyed. There is no need to take up the stupendous task of stopping their destruction. And if we are able to protect the cow, all else that needs to be done will be accomplished automatically. It is not the purport of my writing to ignore the buffalo. I only indicate the limit of our ability. Even the villages ought to have something in the nature of a tannery, a dairy. In other words, the tanning process in the villages needs to be improved. There is need for some sophistication in the manner of skinning. There should be some expert experimenting with regard to the cow; there has to be knowledge of the methods of increasing their yield. It is our misfortune that today we can only carry this knowledge from the town to the country. At the moment we are not even aware of this science. I mean, we shall be able to do nothing before those who have learnt it in the West evolve it anew with an appreciation of the local environment and in an assimilable form. So, for the time being, we shall only be experimenting, the point being that an industry which is today handled mainly by ignorant men for earning a livelihood should be taken up by the educated class, keeping in view our country’s welfare, as is being done in the case of spinning and weaving. Efforts in the direction have now been initiated in the Ashram.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

331. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

[April 30, 1927]¹

CHI. RAMDAS,

I have your letter. It is very good that you have started.

The letter from Khushalbhai is nice; please let me know what you wrote in reply to him. Service does include one’s interest. One who serves with a pure heart is always provided for by God. It certainly is an inexhaustible source of learning. No sincere worker has ever starved. Maganlal and others have lost nothing, on the contrary they have ennobled their lives and attained their goal.

¹ The concluding paragraph of the letter appears in the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary under this date.

If you feel that you lack aptitude for doing a thing, this shortcoming can certainly be removed by trying hard. Experience will bring all the knowledge one needs. There will be no difficulty whatever in raising a grand edifice on the foundations of noble character.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6856

332. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Chaitra Vad 14 [April 30, 1927]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

We all deliberated a lot this morning about Prabhudas. Along with other places you are thinking of, keep in mind Nandi too. However, Rajaji and others are of the opinion that it would be better if no sick person is sent there. I do not put Prabhudas in the category of such persons. For him, it is better if we take a decision soon. Why cannot he go to Doctor in Dholwad? Gangabehn will look after him also. And at Panchgani, there is the facility of Mathuradas’s room and he could stay with him. Instead of my asking Mathuradas, it is better if you ask him. He will be a little confused if I ask him. Or, instead of going there, he should come here. Gangadharrao says that he can go to Hubli. It is at a height of 3000 ft. Prabhudas has seen the place. Pundalik is there. So he would not need any other companion. Out of all these places, choose one. I find it somewhat difficult to accept Almora. Jamnadas himself needs looking after. What is the good of putting two sick persons together. An added reason for my preference for Panchgani is the possibility of Pyarelal being there. Write to me whatever decision you take or send me a telegram.

Mathuradas’s address is: Panchgani Castle

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32872

1 The contents of the letter indicate that Gandhiji wrote the letter from Nandi Hills where he was convalescing in 1927. Reference to Mathuradas Trikumji’s presence at Panchgani also confirms the year as 1927; vide “Letter to Mathuradas Trikumji”, 17-6-1926 and vide “Letter to Mathuradas Trikumji”, before 17-9-1927, Chaitra Vad 14 in 1927 corresponded to April 30.
333. LETTER TO LAJPAT RAI

NANDI HILLS,
April 30, 1927

DEAR LALAJI,

I got your letter and the Trust papers. Let me congratulate you on your decision. This amount, I am afraid, will not be sufficient; we will require yet more funds, for which we must wait.

Yours,
M. K. GANDHI

[From Hindi]
Lala Lajpat Rai —Ek Jeevani, p. 468

334. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Saturday [April 30, 1927]¹

CHI. MIRA,

Well, I have nothing to say today. I only write so that you may know that nowadays I am rather worried about you. God will take care of you. Do you understand what I say?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 5222. Courtesy: Mirabehn

¹ The English original is not traceable; vide also “Letter to Lajpat Rai”, 1-5-1927.
² From the postmark
335. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

Wednesday [After April 30, 1927]¹

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. I have got your point for not coming to Nandi. My objection to your going to Almora was . . .² for want of a man. Now Jethalal is coming and if he keeps good health, you can go without any compunction.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32973

336. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[April-May 1927]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your wire.

You still should not overlook the precautions which are necessary. We must ensure our safety. Women should have no fear of any kind. Do not give up till you find out who the thieves are. Do not even entertain the idea that you would look for them when they strike again. We can be said to have served dharma as we know it, to the best of our ability only when we learn to solve our problems ourselves.

Herewith a letter from Kediyaji about cow-protection. Acknowledge it. If you feel it is necessary to deposit it with Revashankerbhai, do so and take from him whatever money you need or, keep the letter as it is and send a credit note to Revashankerbhai.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : S.N. 32882

¹ From the contents, the letter appears to have been written after the one to Chhaganlal Gandhi, addressee’s father, dated April 30, 1927; vide the preceding item.
² A few words here are illegible in the source.
³ From the reference to thefts in the Ashram and precautions suggested; vide “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”, 26-4-1927.
337. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Thursday [April-May 1927]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL.

It is time for the post so I would not write more. My advice is that you get the attached letter printed. Form yourselves into batches, go to all the suspected villages, organise meetings and read out the letter there.

Those women who are scared should be assured of their safety immediately.

No one can go on leave at present. Those who are already on leave should come back. It is your duty to pursue this work, to the exclusion of all other activities.

Take Vallabhbhai’s advice. We will not lodge a complaint. However, we can take advice from those who are known to the police. Can not we make an arrangement with the police that they do not arrest the culprits but keep an eye on them?

I am writing whatever occurs to me. Do whatever you feel should be done. Send me all the details. I am better.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : S.N. 32881

338. LETTER TO LAJPAT RAI

May 1, 1927

DEAR LALAJI,

The afore-mentioned letter was written last night. I did not fully reveal my feelings. My congratulations were not without a tinge of criticism. Let me now say it out.

The idea is laudable but your method of implementing it has its own flaws. Your wife and children should not become the trustees.

1 From the reference to thefts in the Ashram; vide 1st footnote to the preceding item.

2 The English original is not traceable.

3 Vide “Letter to Lajpat Rai”, 30-4-1927.
Your trustees should be those who entirely agree with your thoughts and are prepared to suffer the severest hardships to see them materialize. If your wife, daughter and son have these qualities they can be the trustees, though they are related to you.

Now I have told you the whole truth and thank God He gave me the strength to do so. Without it I would not have been able to do my duty which, as a friend, I ought to do.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

[From Hindi]

Lala Lajpat Rai —Ek Jeevani, p. 468

339. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

May 2, 1927

YOUR WIRE. NANDI HAS SUITED BEYOND EXPECTATION. YESTERDAY’S EXAMINATION SHOWED NORMAL BLOOD-PRESSURE. TAKING TWO LONG WALKS DAILY GROWING STRONGER AND WRITING. LOVE.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 5223. Courtesy: Mirabehn

340. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised NANDI HILLS,

May 2, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I wrote to you a postcard in Hindi just to tell you that I was thinking constantly of you and to see whether you could read and understand my Hindi. Do not be alarmed. I do not propose to write to you always in Hindi. But if you can follow my Hindi, I do want now and then to write my extra letters in Hindi, i.e., if you like the idea, not otherwise.

Now for your disturbing wire. I wonder what in my letters has prompted it. You can have no notion of the energy I have already regained. I have written for Navajivan four articles this week. For Young India I wrote three last week. I am really doing almost the normal work for the papers now. And I do a fair amount of love letters.

1 Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 30-4-1927.

But all this is nothing compared to the result of medical examination yesterday. The pressure dropped from 188 to 155, and 155 to 160 is the normal for my age. I have been walking for the last three days over one mile per day in two periods each extending to 30 minutes. This is more than Amboli. So there is now no anxiety about my health. There can be no question now of leaving Nandi. It would be foolish to think of leaving it till my previous strength is attained, if it can be at all or till the season for Nandi ends which it does about July.

I observe from your wire that in spite of your previous letter of attainment of peace, the pendulum has swung back and that you are again perturbed. This does not surprise me. If our lucid moments were lasting, nothing further will remain to be done. Unfortunately or fortunately, we have to pass through many an ebb and flow before we settle down to real peace.

I have therefore left you free to do as you please. Better certainly if you can keep your peace and stay. Equally certainly come away if you cannot keep your peace. Only, in any decision you come to, please eliminate the question of my health. For if you come, you would find little difference between me as you saw me in Kangri and me as I am now. Dive deep into yourself then and find out if you can where you are and act accordingly irrespective of what I would like you to do. Or put it another way. I would like you to do what your inner spirit tells you to do.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5224. Courtesy: Mirabein
341. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

NANDI DURG,
Silence Day, May 2, 1927

CHI. MANI,

Father writes to say that you look pulled down. How is it? Our body must be strong and radiant. An ideal virgin is expected to be at the top in every respect.

If you have not to go to Karachi, I would like to send you instead of Champavati to Delhi. There are many girls there and lots of work. And the climate of Delhi is excellent. I expect a wire from Karachi soon.

Let me know if any of the women in the Ashram are afraid of thieves.

Was Radha badly hurt? Did she have a fright? I don’t have the time now to write to her separately.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro: Manibehn Patelne, p. 56

342. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day, Vaishakha Sud 2 [May 3, 1927] 2

SISTERS,

I have now received plenty of hand-made paper. Even though the size of the paper is a little smaller than what you ask for, I believe you will prefer hand-made paper. Our chief duty today, of course, lies in regard to cloth; because from it our starving masses obtain their bread. There are not many who make this paper. Yet as long as we find something that is made in our country, and it is good, we must procure and use it.

It is very good that you have set apart some money for postage. It does not matter if the amount is small; but keep regular accounts so

1 When the thieves came to her house
2 Year is determined from the reference to the menace of thieves at the Ashram.
that those of you who can, may learn thereby how to keep accounts.

I find your progress in another direction also praiseworthy. Last week I raised the problem of protecting yourselves against thieves.¹ Do not lightly brush it aside. I wish you to falsify the epithets ‘weak’, ‘timid’ and so on that are specially used about women. They do not apply to all women of course. Who would say the women of Raniparaj are ‘timid’? How can you call them weak? The women of the West, of course, take part these days in everything. I do not mean to say that they should be imitated; but at least they have been falsifying many of the assumptions of men. The Negro women of Africa are not at all ‘timid’. Perhaps there is no such epithet in their language to be applied to them. In Burma, it is the men who appear timid and as it were the weaker sex. Women themselves carry on business of all kinds.

I raised the problem of thieves, not to frighten you, but to make you think calmly about it. In the Ashram we all wish to realize that we have a ‘soul’. Now the soul is neither male nor female; neither young nor old. The scriptures as well as our own experience tell us that these are the attributes only of the body. The same soul pervades you and me. How then can I protect you? Is it not by learning the art of how to protect oneself? Only then can I teach you.

There is enough for you to think over here. If I feel inclined, I will take up the subject once again.

If any of you wish to write to me, do so without hesitation. I learn that Valjibhai has frightened all of you. Do not get frightened.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3647

¹ Vide “Letter to Ashram Women”, 26-4-1927.
343. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

NANDI DURG,

Vaishakha Sud 3, May 4, 1927

CHI. MANI,

Tell Gangadevi that she should follow the doctor’s instructions and take moong water if she likes. I cannot suggest any treatment unless I see her. Who is this new physician? Since when has he been visiting the Ashram?

Which of the sisters have volunteered for night patrol duty?

My health is improving. Write to me regularly. How do you do?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Ask Vasumatibehn to write to me.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro: Manibeihn Patelne, p. 57

344. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

Thursday [May 4, 1927]¹

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have been wanting to write to you for a good many days, but can do so only now. Hardly a day passes when I do not talk about you or think of you.

You had asked Pyarelal to find out about Nandi. In my opinion Nandi will not suit you. It is not a place where you can stay throughout the year. The weather changes greatly within 24 hours. And the variations are too great in winter and summer. All provisions have to be secured from the plains. The season is over by June. So I think only Panchgani would suit you.

It is another question how long we should occupy the bungalow at Panchgani. This season is already past. So it is all right to spend the monsoon there. Then perhaps it will be better for you to go to Mahabaleshwar. From October onwards the weather there is said to be very good. If we have to undergo the same sort of thing next year also we have time enough to decide what to do.

¹ From Bapuni Prasadi

Revashankarbhai lives in Solan. I have asked him to let me know how things are there.

My health is gradually improving. Hence there is nothing to write on that score.

I can see that Taramati will not write unless she is provoked. Tell her in my opinion she is lazy. I want her fully to benefit physically, mentally and spiritually by her stay at Panchgani. Dilip appears to be deriving the fullest benefit from staying there.

This morning Pyarelal started out on his way to join you. I now have your wire, and so I have sent a telegram to Pyarelal at Bangalore to stop him.

From your letter it appears that I alone was responsible for detaining Pyarelal. I wanted to keep him with me for a few days. After your telegram yesterday he asked my permission to leave and I gave the permission.

Now I will wait for your letter. And I will do whatever is proper.

You had wished that I should stay at Panchgani. But that was not possible. Work demanded that I should be in this province. Once my health is normal I shall certainly finish the work. True, it will be done in a somewhat novel manner.

Are you reading anything?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

345. MAN’S INHUMANITY TO MAN

In another column will be seen an extract from Navajivan of a most disgraceful case of calculated inhumanity of a medical man towards the dying wife of a member of the suppressed class in Kathiawar village. Sjt. Amritlal Thakkar who is responsible for giving the details of the case has withheld the names of the place and parties for fear of the poor suppressed class schoolmaster being further molested by the medical man. I wish, however, that the names will be disclosed. Time must come when the suppressed class people will have to be encouraged by us to dare to suffer further hardships and tyranny. Their sufferings are already too great for any further sufferings to be really felt. Public opinion cannot be roused over grievances that cannot be verified and traced to their sources. I do not know the rules of the Medical Council in Bombay. I know that in other places a medical practitioner, who refused to attend before his fees were paid, would be answerable to the Council and would be liable to have his name removed from the Council’s list and be otherwise subject to disciplinary action. Fees are no doubt exactable; but proper attendance upon patients is the first duty of a medical practitioner. The real inhumanity, however, if the facts stated are true, consists in the practitioner refusing to enter the untouchable’s quarters, refusing himself to see the patient, and refusing himself to apply the thermometer. And if the doctrine of untouchability can ever be applied in any circumstances, it is certainly applicable to this member of the profession which he has disgraced. But I am hoping that there is some exaggeration in the statement made by Sjt. Thakkar’s correspondent and, if there is none, that the medical practitioner will himself come forth and make ample amends to the society which he has so outraged by his inhuman conduct.

Young India, 5-5-1927

346. KHADI FOR UTKAL

Three months ago Sjt. Shankerlal Banker and Lakshmidades Purushottam travelled in Orissa examining the khadi work going on in that land of paupers. And now Sheth Jamnalal Bajaj has also been touring in that province. Lakshmidades’s notes have been published in Navajivan. Jamnalalji has sent the summary of his impressions which I commend to the workers in Utkal and all khadi lovers.

Young India, 5-5-1927

1 Not reproduced here. It described the “semi-starved” condition of the people and recommended hand-spinning and hand-weaving to raise their economic, social and spiritual standards.
347. TELEGRAM TO G. D. BIRLA

NANDI,
May 5, 1927

GHANSHYAMDAS BIRLA
BIRLA HOUSE
GIRGAUM
BOMBAY

WISHER YOU SUCCESS TERMS MY LAST LETTER. AM DAILY
GETTING STRONG. BLOOD-PRESSURE NORMAL SINCE SUNDAY.
NO CAUSE ANXIETY. GOD BLESS YOU.

GANDHI

From the original: C.W. 7876. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

348. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

[May 5, 1927]

MY DEAR SATIS BABU,

I may be said to be out of the wood now, blood-pressure having become normal. I am taking fair walks morning and evening and doing a moderate amount of writing and reading.

But I see you are not yet free and Nikhil seems to be causing anxiety. May God bless the boy.

I am going to take all the rest that may be thought necessary.
With love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1569

1 From the reference to Gandhiji’s “blood-pressure having become normal”; vide the preceding item.
349. TELEGRAM TO SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM

May 5, 1927

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM
SABARMATI

IN VIEW FREQUENT RAIDS ADVISE CANCELLATION VACATION LEAVE. ALL WHO CAN SHOULD REMAIN ASHRAM. IF NECESSARY WOMEN SHOULD BE ACCOMMODATED NIGHT CHHATRALAYA. SEND ME DAILY REPORTS. AM PERFECTLY WELL.

BAPU

From a microfilm: S.N. 11786

350. LETTER TO DEVCHAND PAREKH

NANDI HILLS, MYSORE,
May 5, 1927

BHAISHRI DEVCHANDBHAI,

Yes, I am still bed-ridden, but now I can work more or less. I am of course thinking about [the work] there.

It seems advisable to have a committee appointed for khadi work in Kathiawar, constituted as below:

Devchandbhai—President
Harakhchand, Jaisukhlal—Secretaries
Fulchand, Manilal Kothari, Jivarambhai Kutchwada, Narandas and Ramdas.

I have acted on behalf of Narandasbhai without consulting anyone else. If you agree to this please dispose of the matter soon.

You are short of funds. But I have already written’ asking for an amount to be sent to Fulchand if it can be arranged at the Ashram. But today I have a letter saying there are no more funds at the Ashram and so they can send you nothing. You may, if you can, have a loan from Vallabhbhai payable to holder, but only if you can return the amount. I might have managed it, if I were there. But now I am helpless.

Vandemataram from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5720

351. LETTER TO TARINI P. SINHA

NANDI HILLS,
May 6, 1927

MY DEAR TARINI,

I was delighted to have your letter. Yours has been a protracted illness. I hope, however, that you will soon regain your original vigour. You will not overtax yourself with your resumed studies.

Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1568

352. LETTER TO HONORARY SECRETARY, AYURVEDIC CONFERENCE

[Before May 7, 1927]

DEAR FRIEND,

Owing to my sudden illness, I have not been able to reply earlier to your letter of the 17th ultimo. The remarks quoted by you and ascribed to me in the Minority Report¹, which of course I have not seen, are substantially correct but they have been torn from their context. In the speech, the report of which I have not read, from which I suppose the remarks quoted by you have been taken, I was drawing a distinction between Ayurveda and Ayurvedic physicians of today and I do hold the opinion that they do not do justice to the profession they seek to represent. But these remarks should not be used in support of any proposition designed to prevent Government’s assistance being given for Ayurveda research. I believe that Ayurveda is a field for much research work. For want of research scholars, unlike Western medicine, it has practically come to a standstill.

¹ In Ceylon
² Of the Commission on Ayurvedic medicine

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Therefore, I should not discountenance aid being given to Ayurveda research under given circumstances and to honest and industrious men who love research work and who have the necessary qualifications. I should add that the remarks attributed to me were made at the ceremony of laying the foundation of an Ayurvedic College. Had I been averse to any aid being given to Ayurvedic work, I should certainly have declined to lay the foundation of an Ayurvedic College at Calcutta, to open the Tibbia College in Delhi and very recently, to open an Ayurvedic Hospital at Ahmednagar.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

The Hindu, 7-5-1927

353. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

May 7, 1927

MY DEAR BROTHER,

Thank God the tension is over.1 It is a pleasure to write to you. You are going under the best of auspices. May your way be uniformly smooth and may God give you all the strength and wisdom you will need.

Here is Andrews’s latest letter. If you care, I would like you to cable you will soon join him. Or on receiving a line from you, I would cable if you like.

The Viceroy’s letter is very good indeed.

If you at all find the time, please ascend the hill once more.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

V. S. Srinivasa Sastri Papers (Correspondence No. 477). Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 The reference is to Sastri’s decision on going to South Africa.
354. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 7, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I had your sweet wire and your letter. Fall it was.¹ But I was not ruffled. I knew that you fell but to rise. When moments of exaltation become a permanent part of our lives, we need little further. Therefore I was not unprepared for the fall in the barometer. You will come when you must. Only you will do nothing without fullest deliberation.

I now walk almost my usual pace. The round I took four days ago has now been doubled. Progress is steady. You do not expect me each time now to say I am getting on. You will know when there is an interruption.

Pray never rely upon the newspapers. You get your information first hand.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5225. Courtesy: Mirabehn

355. LETTER TO HEMAPRABHA DEVI DAS GUPTA

NANDI HILLS,
Saturday [May 7, 1927]²

DEAR SISTER,

I have both your letters. I can understand your grief at the death of Anil. But you should add to your spiritual strength as a result of this. Continuous grief wears out one’s strength. One can add to one’s strength by putting one’s sorrows to good use, and it is best utilized by intensifying our desire to serve. It is therefore my constant prayer that one should devote every moment of one’s life to service. One can practise it in two ways: first, by reading good books and meditating on them; secondly, by constantly engaging oneself in altruistic activities.

¹ “In spite of the intellectual realization the heart had already failed me.” (Mirabehn)
² From the reference to Nikhil’s health; Vide “Letter to Satis Chandra Das Gupta”, 5-5-1927.
As for asceticism, it is this that weakens our attachment to worldly objects and strengthens our love of things spiritual. One attains asceticism by reasoning, while one succeeds in practising it by persistent effort. For this very reason one may describe practice as sustained effort.

Nikhil still seems to have a weak heart; what, in the opinion of the doctors, is the reason for this?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1649

356. COW v. BUFFALO OR COW-CUM-BUFFALO?

A worker in the cause of cow-protection writes from Konkan:

In your recent article\(^2\) giving the conditions of cow-protection you said that the question of the protection of the cow should not be mixed up with that of the protection of the buffalo. At the back of this suggestion seems to be the fact that the buffalo bull is not useful for agricultural purposes. But in Konkan he is fairly useful. It is the buffalo bull which draws the municipal refuse carts, which works water pumps and even draws the plough, especially when there is a heavy downpour disabling the bullock and most of the agriculture in Konkan is being done under monsoon conditions. The buffalo bull has therefore his place in Konkan.

The Konkan cow does not yield more than one pound of milk, whereas the buffalo yields 5 to 10 lb. It may be possible, after systematic breeding, to make the cow yield more and richer milk, but the buffalo needs no special culture at all. Does not therefore the buffalo in Konkan at any rate need as much protection as the cow? Please correct me if I am wrong.

The buffalo, I admit, has no place on the ghats where the temperature is higher, fields are bigger and water scarce. He needs much water both to drink and bathe in. Konkan is the place for him.

Your tannery and dairy are for cities. For the villages you must suggest some more practical ways and means. Let every village possess a studbull, maintain him partly from the common fund and partly from contributions from those who make use of him. This can be done everywhere and it will improve the stock. Could you not suggest similar other remedies?

---

1. The original Gujarati was published in Navajivan, 8-5-1927. This is a translation by Mahadev Desai.
These are appropriate questions. My article was not intended to throw the buffalo by the board, it suggested the stopping of buffalo-breeding in her own interest. In other words it meant freedom of the buffalo from its bondage. We have domesticated the cow for our own uses and therefore it has become part of our religion to protect her. It was my object to show that in trying to breed the buffalo, as we do the cow, we might lose both.

The Konkan example does not affect my proposition. We must, of course, make use of the existing stock of buffaloes, and let it be done in parts like Konkan. But our duty is clear. We must not increase our responsibility by breeding the buffalo where we can do with the cow alone. We must therefore content ourselves with the use of cow’s milk only. It should not be necessary in a city like Bombay to use buffalo’s milk in preference to cow’s milk. An endeavour should be organized on a large scale to cheapen the supply of pure cow’s milk, and to improve the milk yield of the cow. It is possible too to make cow’s milk richer. All these things have been developed into a science in Europe, especially in Denmark. Cows in those countries yield richer and more milk than our buffaloes. I have heard from vaidyas that buffalo’s milk lacks and can never be made to have the hygienic and health-giving properties that cow’s milk possesses. Pious people have told me that cow’s milk is satvic (possessing finer qualities) whereas buffalo’s milk is tamasic (gross). I do not know how far this is true. I am trying to ascertain the truth through the proper channel. But it does seem to me, that all that the buffalo can give and even more, the cow also can or can be made to give. If this is true, why should man, having regard to his own needs, make himself responsible for breeding the buffalo? And having regard to the need of the buffalo, why should we needlessly keep her in bondage? Or to put it more simply, why should we press her into our service?

The fact that some people make a pecuniary gain out of buffalo-breeding can have no place in this religious discussion in which we have in view the good of all. In thinking solely of the narrow interest of the self or of the moment, we have ruined ourselves, i.e., our country and our religion. We can be a nation, only when we try to think in terms of the wider interests of the country. If we cannot even think in those terms, it is no use talking of religion. From the national point of view, the good of the country is the supreme consideration. From the religious point of view the good of all living beings from the cow down to the ant is the supreme consideration.¹

Let the reader now turn to the table given elsewhere in this issue. The table relates to the income from and expenditure on the cattle maintained at the Satyagraha Ashram. The names are those of different cows. The manager in his covering letter says:

It is by no means the rule that the buffalo yields more than the cow. Some of the cows in the table yield a net profit, some just pay their way and some are boarders. These last we shall prevent from breeding and propose to take light work from them. A sterile cow has already been trained to do some work. The buffalo calves sell cheap, whereas some calves of the cow are worth Rs. 100 each. Two or three have taken the place of the horse with the result that we have dispensed with our horse-carriage.

The Ashram has decided to have no more buffaloes. We may not draw large deductions from the table, but it is certainly obvious that if the cow is fed properly she compares favourably with the buffalo in her yield, she does not cost more, and her calves are much more useful.

I propose to publish in Navajivan the results of the further experiments that are being conducted in the Ashram.

The Konkan friend is not right when he says that the dairy and the tannery are useful only in and for the city, and have no place in the villages. The cow has become a costly proposition even in the villages. It is as essential to keep proper accounts of her yield and to improve her stock and her milk in villages as in cities. And the skinning of dead cattle and the prompt and skilled treatment of the hides is more essential in villages than in cities, and that is the work to be done in tanneries. It is a painful fact that in our present condition we have to cultivate the science of tanning in the cities and then take it to the villages. For one thing it is impossible to conduct big experiments in the villages, and cattle that are slaughtered in the cities come from the villages. If we can therefore conduct experiments in dairying and tanning from the religious and national point of view in the cities, we can easily give the benefit of them to the villages, and the cattle wealth of India which is at the present day being destroyed because of our ignorance will be saved, and man and animal will both be less unhappy than now.

Young India, 19-5-1927

¹ Vide also “Letter to Sitaram Parushottam Patwardhan”, 30-4-1927.
357. WHAT CAN PERSEVERANCE NOT ACHIEVE?

In the West we sometimes see a man performing club-swinging continuously for twenty-four hours. These shows are held to demonstrate how far a man’s endurance can go. Thousands of spectators give money and fill the theatres to see that. I have my own doubts whether these kinds of shows are of any use.

But readers will recall that something like this, though with a different, i. e., religious motive was organized in the Ashram during the National Week. Some youths insisted on plying the charkha continuously for twenty-four hours, forgoing their usual sleep. The letter written by the one who spun the largest quantity of yarn is interesting and, therefore, I give it below:

Those who welcome any manifestation of enthusiasm by the young or have faith in the charkha yajna will feel happy to read this letter. Those students who happen to read this letter should learn a lesson from it. It is good to have interest in games, but it is better still to have the same interest in philanthropic work. They should also observe that such uninterrupted work is quite within the capacity of those who safeguard their health and observe brahmacharya. It is an abuse of one’s education to use it for earning money. Education proves its worth when used for the service of others. Moreover, a student needs to have faith also. Reason will certainly help a little to understand that India’s poverty can be banished through a simple thing like the charkha. But, in the end, it is only faith which will sustain the student’s love of it. I realize every moment, from what I see of students, that without faith education is of little use.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 8-5-1927

1 Not translated here
358. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised Sunday [May 8, 1927]¹

CHI. MIRA,

I hope you are getting all the letters I have been writing to you of late. Probably one letter every other day on an average.

I have your further letter. But I see it¹ will be some time before you regain your balance. I do not mind the ups and downs so long as you retain the elasticity. My own opinion is this: it will be perfectly natural for you to come to me wherever I am after finishing your allotted task, whenever that happens. An ordinary person may not give up a self-imposed programme. But if you become highly emotional and your nerves remain under tension, you should come even though your course may not be finished.

Naturally I am anxious for you to finish your course. I should not like to have to think that it was beyond you. But your health is more precious to me than your studies or any other preparation.

You must not think of coming to me for my health. For it is good and I cannot be looked after better even if you came. If I needed your nursing, I should wire for you. But such an event will not happen, if only because I have got into the habit of taking nursing from anybody and I train new nurses to my requirements. There are more nurses than I need here. So if you come in the hope of doing some personal service, you would feel idle and yawning.

Now for the necessity of personal touch. My own opinion is that it is necessary in the preliminary stages. And then the touch comes through joint work. You come in daily touch with me by doing my work as if it was your own. And this can, must and will outlast the existence of this physical body of mine. You are and will be in touch whether I am alive or dead. And that is what I want you to be. You have come to me not for me but for my ideals in so far as I live them. You now know how far I live the ideals I set forth. It is now for you to work out those ideals and practise them to greater perfection than has been given to me to do. He or she who does that will be my first heir

¹ From Bapu’s Letters to Mira
² The source has “you”.

VOL. 38 : 2 JANUARY, 1927 - 3 JUNE, 1927 353
and representative. I want you to be the first if only because you studied me from a distance and made your choice. And when in the course of the work, God brings us physically together, it is well, but it is well also when he keeps us apart in pursuance of the common object.

But this is counsel of perfection. Having listened to it and understood it, you are free to do as you choose. If you cannot contain yourself, you must come and not feel that I shall be displeased. I should be displeased if you did violence to yourself and became prostrate.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5226. Courtesy: Mirabehn

359. LETTER TO GANGARAM

NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE),
May 8, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I got your letter too late to enable me to write to you so as to reach you. It was impossible for me to travel to Bombay because medical orders are peremptory—as peremptory as your own —and seeing that the medical orders were prior in point of time, they had to be obeyed.

I have really begun now to despair of your ever teaching me. You promised to turn my Ashram ground into a paradise if I sent you a map and all the details of past successes and failures. Well, I have given you all the information, I sent you my best man and the Ashram ground still awaits the magic touch. All the information about the poverty of the masses that you can give me can never be first hand because all you can tell me is stories of witnesses. You have not tasted the sweets of poverty. And, what is a millionaire, a successful engineer and a business man to teach one who knows the sweet, as well as the bitter, of poverty and who has come in direct touch with the masses about the latter’s poverty? Thirdly—but I must not say anything about the third thing at the present moment.

Your connecting my bad health with a breach of promise which I never made to you or to anybody is in keeping with your lavishness in promising a poor man like me all kinds of El Dorado. I am not aware of having made you any promise that I shall never take part in politics and what is more, I have not taken part in politics as yet. But I do promise that if favourable opportunity occurs, I should not hesitate to plunge into them. For the present I am content to sit at the wheel and sing the praises of God in that He gives me strength enough to perform that little bit of service to the masses of India in whose exploitation you are taking such a prominent part be it ever so unconsciously.

I do not expect any reply to this letter whilst you are in the West. When you do come to India I shall be glad to receive a further instalment of your promises with the certain knowledge that you will continue to break them as heretofore and like the wolf that swore at the lamb turn against me and accuse me of breaking promises never made by me. I shall take all such rebuke in good grace as in spite of your arrogation of universal knowledge, I have great regard for the qualities of your heart.

Yours sincerely,

SIR GANGARAM, KT. C.I.E., M.V.C.
CARE SIR PURUSHOTTAMADAS THAKURDAS
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 12577

360. LETTER TO REV. JOHN HAYNES HOLMES

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹
May 8, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter of the 4th April last.

When the interim volume is published, I shall see that no efforts are made to obtain orders outside of India.

I am unable to tell you when the autobiography will be finished. I have to write from day to day. I have mapped out no fixed plan. I write every week as the past events develop in my mind on the day allotted for writing the weekly chapter. I am now dealing with events of 1903-4 and I have to cover the stormy period in South Africa extending to the middle of 1914 and the equally stormy 12 years of

¹ Permanent address

VOL. 38 : 2 JANUARY, 1927 - 3 JUNE, 1927 355
India. If therefore there is really any demand for these chapters in America or Europe, it will be advisable to publish them in volumes as they are being published here. If the MacMillan Company do not propose to publish the autobiography in instalments, it will be impossible to prevent sales outside India assuming of course that there is a natural as distinguished from stimulated desire in the West for reading these chapters.

Yours sincerely,

REV. JOHN HAYNES HOLMES
12, PARK AVENUE AND 34TH STREET
NEW YORK CITY (U.S.A.)

From a photostat: S.N. 13971

361. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
Sunday [May 8, 1927]¹

CHI. MATHURADAS,

Pyarelal is on his way to join you. You will receive this letter the day offer his arrival. I could not send the letter with him. I have sent Pyarelal because he felt that he had got to go back there for accounts, etc. Your decision to carry on without him is fine if it does not mean any harm to your health. We must be grateful that your health has improved to that extent. But do not hesitate to write to me any time you feel the need for help. I think it would be good to spend the present monsoon there. Panchgani is definitely better than Deolali. It is said to be particularly good in the rainy season. It would be all right spending the winter near Bombay after you have fully recovered. But the doctors would know better.

You must have received my previous letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

¹ From Bapuni Prasadi

356 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
362. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Monday [May 9, 1927]

CHI. MIRA,

I had two letters again. How is it that letters bearing different dates are received the same day in different packets?

I have nothing more to say today. I am glad you have completely regained your balance.

My idea about the translation is that you should make it at first without reference to any other translation and then for your difficulties turn to the English version. It is right for you to be diffident but I have no misgivings and I do not want you to lose your originality by concurrent reference to any aid save that of a dictionary. Mark the passages you may not understand and refer to the other translations subsequently as I am doing with the Gita.

What has brought Valunjker and Gangubai? Remember me to them. I am glad for your sake that they are there. With love,

Yours

BAPU

From the Original: C.W. 5227. Courtesy: Mirabehn

---

1 From Bapu’s Letters to Mira
CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

I have your letter. Stop worrying about me. I am improving in health. I shall stay in Nandi Durg as long as the doctors consider it necessary. Afterwards I shall go to Bangalore because in June Nandi is quite cold, while Bangalore is moderately so. Left to myself I do not want to travel. But when it cools down a little and when I have improved my health, I should like to stay quietly in two or three places in Madras and Karnataka in order to collect funds. No one sees any harm in short comfortable journeys in which I do not have to address people. I have consulted many doctors but no one imposes restrictions such as those you suggest. And if I may not speak, may not think and may not do anything at all, then for what purpose do you intend to save my life? I have not so far developed such powers that I can lie in bed and serve by sheer silent thought. Asking me to care for my health much more than the others generally do amounts to misusing me. Dr. Mehta has not forbidden me from writing for Young India and Navajivan. The only thing that everyone says is that I should not work at the same tempo as before. And I cannot do that. Certainly, I must do as much as I comfortably can. What is more, Dr. Mehta believes that if I do not work as much as I can, I shall be completely bed-ridden.

It is because of this I wish that none of you should worry too much about me. I shall write to Panditji about Saklatwala. What is his address in England?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32795

---

1 From the last paragraph of the letter, inquiring the address of Saklatwala to whom Gandhiji wrote on May 10 (vide “Letter to Shapurji Saklatvala”, 10-5-1927), this letter appears to have been written before that date.
364. LETTER TO A. RANGASWAMY AIYENGAR

NANDI HILLS,
May 10, 1927

DEAR RANGASWAMI AIYENGAR,

In accordance with the instructions of the Working Committee, I am sending herewith draft rules in connection with Article VII (iv) b.1

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Encl. 1.

SRIJUT A. RANGASWAMY AIYENGAR
GENERAL SECRETARY, A.I.C.C.
DESHABANDHU BUILDINGS
MOUNT ROAD, MADRAS

[ENCLOSURE]

DRAFT RULES

1. Every person choosing under Article VII of the Constitution to send the subscription in yarn shall send 2,000 yards of evenly spun yarn of his or her own spinning to the All India Spinners’ Association office, Sabarmati, to reach on or before the 28th February every year in advance for the full year.

2. Members joining in the middle of the year shall send the full quota for the year at the time of application for admission. No one who has failed to send his yarn subscription on or before the 28th February, or in case of members joining in the middle of the year, no one who has not paid in the full quota of 2,000 yards shall be entitled to exercise any of the privileges of membership referred to in Sec. (iv) of Art. VII.

3. The yarn shall be hanked in 4 ft. circumference and sent up at the member’s cost to the A.I.S.A. office, Sabarmati with such parti-culars filled in as may be prescribed in the forms issued from that office.

1 Of the Congress constitution; vide 1st footnote to “Speech at Congress Session, Gauhati”, 27-12-1926 and “Khadi Franchise”, 9-6-1927.

Presumably this was sent for the A.I.C.C. meeting scheduled to be held in Bombay on May 15 and 16, 1927; vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Gandhi”, 19-5-1927.
4. On any member being found to the satisfaction of the President of a Provincial Congress Committee to be infringing the rule of habitual wear of khaddar, he may at his discretion report him to the President of the Congress; and he shall thereupon forfeit for the rest of the year the right to vote or be elected at the election of representatives or delegates or any committee or sub-committee of any Congress organization whatsoever or to take part in any meeting of the Congress or Congress organization or any committee or sub-committee thereof.

5. Subject to the above rule, if at any meeting a question is raised that any member is not entitled to vote or to be elected or to take part in any proceedings thereof, on the ground that he does not habitually wear khaddar, the statement of the member himself shall, except where it is manifestly untrue to the knowledge of the Chairman, be accepted without further proof in regard to the question so far as that meeting is concerned.

From a copy: A.I.C.C. File No. 194, 1927. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

365. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[May 9, 1927]

CHI. MAGANLAL

If we are not financially strong enough to provide money to Fulchand for the conference, write to him frankly to that effect. Tell Vallabhbhai to give him a loan if it is possible and make sure that he accepts the loan only if he is capable of repaying it.

The documents are to be given to Ramachandra as they are. They are to be given to him only to fulfil his requirements. I believe it is necessary to pay off the debts due to West. We have to write to him that the debts will be paid off gradually as the goods are sold. How can Ramachandra himself pay? The right over the patent is ours. I have understood the dealing to be his way that we have to deal with the situation if West claims money from Ramachandra. I have accordingly convinced Ramachandra. If you want me to write to him to this effect, I will do so

I have a letter from Shankerlal about handing over the charge to 1 As suggested in the source. References in “Ramachandra Lift”, 3-3-1927, also indicates that the letter may have been written on this date.

Jamnalal. I will take action on it immediately. Do not hesitate in the least to write to me or ask me anything. My health is no doubt good.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32911

366. LETTER TO SHAPURJI SAKLATVALA

NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE),
May 10, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Shrimati Anasuyabai has sent me your letter herself and your joint letter to her, Gulzarilal and Desai. I have read them both carefully. I had your own letter also. I could not reply to you earlier for want of your address.

As soon as I heard from Anasuyabai, I put myself in Communication with Motilalji. I am daily expecting his reply. You shall know it as soon as I receive it. I thank you for the confidence you repose in me and it will be a joy to me if I can render any personal service to you; but I am afraid my longing and ability to render service have to stop there.

So far as our ideals are concerned, we stand apart. Whilst Anasuyabai and Banker as also Gulzarilal and Desai are absolutely free agents, they have exercised their choice of accepting my guidance in framing their labour policy and administration. I must therefore shoulder my share of the responsibility for what is happening about labour in Ahmedabad. I have certainly advised them to keep Ahmedabad labour aloof from the other labour movements in India so long as Ahmedabad labour chooses to remain under their guidance. My reason is exceedingly simple. Labour in India is still extremely unorganized. The labourers have no mind of their own, when it comes to matters of national policy or even the general welfare of labour itself. Labourers in various parts of India have no social contact and no other mutual ties. It is provincial and even in the same city it is highly communal. It is not everywhere wisely guided. In 2 The addressee was of the opinion that the energies of all leaders should be harnessed towards an early inauguration of labour and industrial organizations all over the country.

1 Gulzarilal Nanda, sometime Home Minister, Government of India
many places it is under selfish and highly unscrupulous guidance. There is no absolute cohesion amongst provincial labour leaders, and there is little discipline among sub-leaders. The latter do not uniformly tender obedience to their provincial chiefs. Leaders in different provinces have no single policy to follow. In these circumstances, an all India union can only exist on paper. I hold it to be suicidal therefore for Ahmedabad to think of belonging to it. My own conviction is that Ahmedabad is rendering a service to labour all over India by its abstention, or as I call it self-restraint. If it can succeed in perfecting its own organization, it is bound to serve as a model to the rest of India and its success is bound to prove highly infectious. But I am free to confess that there is as yet no assurance of success in the near future. The energy of the workers is sorely tried in combating disruptive forces that ever continue to crop up. There is the Hindu-Muslim tension; there is the question of touchables and untouchables in Hinduism, etc. Add to this extreme ignorance and selfishness among the labourers themselves. It is a marvel to me that labour in Ahmedabad has made the progress it has during the last 12 years of its corporate existence. If then Ahmedabad remains isolated it does so not selfishly, but for the sake of labour as a whole.

One word as to the policy. It is not anti-capitalistic. The idea is to take from capital labour's due share and no more, and this not by paralysing capital but by reform among labourers from within and by their own self-consciousness; not again through the cleverness and manoeuvring of non-labour leaders, but by educating labour to evolve its own leadership and its own self-reliant, self-existing organization. Its direct aim is not in the least degree political. Its direct aim is internal reform and evolution of internal strength. The indirect result of this evolution, when, if ever it becomes complete, will naturally be tremendously political. I have not therefore the remotest idea of exploiting labour or organizing it for any direct political end. It will be of itself a political power of first-class importance when it becomes a self-existing unit. Labour, in my opinion, must not become a pawn in the hands of the politicians on the political chess-board. It must by its sheer strength dominate the chessboard. And that can only happen if I can retain the intelligent and voluntary co-operation of the workers in Ahmedabad and if our joint effort ultimately succeeds. This is my dream. I hug it because it gives me all the consolation I need; and the policy I have outlined, you will recognize, is a direct outcome of my implicit belief in and acceptance of non-violence. It may be all a delusion; but it is as much a reality with me as life itself so long as I do not see it as delusion but see it as the only life-giving force. You will now see why I cannot, even if I had the power, respond to your appeal for dividing the funds collected by me in accordance with your suggestion. But I may tell you that I have not even the power. The funds have been collected purely for khadi work and it would be criminal misappropriation on my part to divert them to any other use.

This letter may not please you. I shall be sorry if it does not. But I regard you as a fellow-seeker after Truth and if my reading of you is correct, there is no reason why my having told you the whole truth and nothing but the truth should not please you immensely. It is not given to all of us to agree with one another on all our opinions; but it is given to every one of us to tender the same respect for the opinions and actions of our fellows as we expect for our own.

Yours sincerely

M. K. GANDHI

SAKLATVALA, ESQ.

From a photostat: S.N. 12491

367. LETTER TO ISABEL BAMLET

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹

May 10, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you.

For me the problem of life is not quite so simple as it appears to you. I am sure you do not want me to enter into the reason for my conclusions. You believe in God’s guidance and so do I. Let me walk as He may seem to me to guide me.

I may without using your name make the main contents of your letter as a text for an article' in the pages of Young India edited by me. I suppose you will have no objection.

¹ Permanent address

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

I. BAMLET, ESQ.
C/O IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA
CALCUTTA

From a photostat: C.W. 4443. Courtesy: Mrs. Carlisle Bamlet

---

368. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

NANDI DURG,

_Silence Day, Vaishakha Sud 9 [May 10, 1927]_

SISTERS,

What you say about thieves is correct. For the present, it is enough if you try to forget that you are “weak”. You should on no account make the mistake of taking me to mean that men should give up their duty of protecting [women]. Because woman tries to come into her own, man should not think that she has already become capable of protecting herself; a man, who by thinking so, fails to protect women, is nothing but a shameless coward. He may be regarded as less than a man. Man has kept woman in subordination and in a state of dependence; so it is his duty to protect her. We are trying in the Ashram to make both men and women vigilant and self-reliant. But our goal is still far off. Till then my trying to awaken and put courage into your heart is one thing and men’s duty towards you is another thing. So as long as there is one man alive in the Ashram, you should regard yourselves as fully protected.

There is no news of Surajbehn in your letter.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3648

---

1 _Vide* “Notes”, 12-5-1927, sub-title, “Most Economical”._

2 Year is fixed from the reference to thieves.
369. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

NANDI HILLS, MYSORE,
Vaishakha Sud 10 [May 11, 1927]¹

CHI. MANILAL AND CHI. SUSHILA,

Your letter has not reached me but I have seen the one you wrote to Ramdas who perhaps forgot to send over the one to me.

I am glad that both of you are getting along well. I always wish you will help each other in your progress.

I am improving steadily. I have already written to you that I had a wire sent to you as you wished but your steamer had by then sailed. Verses from the Gita are being regularly sent to you. Please meditate on them as often as you can.

Sjt. Srinivasa Sastri will arrive there soon. Try to keep in touch with him as much as you can and render him any help he may want.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

It appears I shall have to be in these parts for two or three months more. If you propose to address a letter direct to me, send it to Bangalore. We will have to come down from these hills in the month of June.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1132. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

¹ Year inferred from contents
370. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

Wednesday, May 11, 1927

I have your letter. It is not satyagraha in the true sense of the word if people outside the State of Gondal agitate against the ban on entry of newspapers into the State. People not belonging to the Gondal State can offer satyagraha there only when the cause of Gondal subjects is common to all the States and if success in the Gondal case would mean an improvement in all the other States. Moreover offering satyagraha against a ban on entry of journals is like killing a buffalo for the sake of a thong or like citing scriptures for eating carrots while swallowing whole camels. Even if the satyagraha in Gondal is to be offered by the State subjects they ought to have a stronger reason.

The Wadhwan well case is slightly stronger no doubt, but before you take it up you should be prepared to bear the loss of the school. You should try some preliminary remedies, e.g., you should carry on negotiations, bring in the good offices of intermediaries, give the matter sufficient publicity. You ought to prove that the ban is due solely to ill will. In short, a satyagrahi’s case has to be self-proven. If there is any scope for doubt, if the other party has anything to say, a satyagrahi should hold his patience for the nonce. If you look at all the occasions when I had offered satyagraha you will be able to see this condition as well as others.

You have rightly laid down the limit that satyagraha cannot be offered without my permission. Observe this limit steadfastly, and obtain my written approval before starting anything. This will be good for you and the principle of satyagraha will not be compromised by your action.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
371. NOTES

EVILS OF MACHINE-MILLING

Mr. Andrews, who is working himself almost to death in the interest of the Indian settlers of South Africa, cannot forget things that he has at heart in India itself. Having read Mahadev Desai’s account of the Bihar tour, he cabled some time ago:

Tell Mahadev delighted accounts Bihar tour. Give love Rajendraprasad. Suggest your emphasizing hand-milling. Have witnessed evils rice mills, including destruction of vitamins. Warn public against unauthorized cables from South Africa.

The reader can see that the foregoing cablegram was sent in order that I may warn the public against accepting everything that comes from South Africa, unless it bears Andrews’s own hallmark. But I hardly think that the caution is required. Naturally the public here will discount anything sensational that may come from South Africa, unless it is duly countersigned. But let us hope that the Rt. Hon’ble Srinivasa Sastri will soon be on his way to South Africa, when all cause for alarm or anxiety will be set at rest. Without, therefore, dilating upon the South African part of the cable, I return to the rice mills, whose evils have distressed him so much as to prompt the cabling of his opinion. The reader will appreciate Andrews’s anxiety when I inform him that he has to live whilst in India in the midst of rice mills. For whereas when he first went to Shantiniketan near Bolepur, there was no rice mill in Bolepur, at the present moment several such mills are working in that once quiet place. He often spoke to me about the din, the dust and the smoke and the fraudulent trafficking that has been going on in Bolepur since the advent of rice mills, and spoke also of the deprivation of a useful cottage industry by reason of the installation of these mills. There can be no doubt that hand-husked rice is infinitely superior to mill-husked rice. Medical men can, however, speak on the evil with greater authority than I can. The moral evil of those mills stares one in the face, as soon as one goes to places where these mills have found a place. In spite, however, of my knowledge of the evil of this growing destruction of cottage industries, had I not been bed-ridden, I should not have undertaken the task that Andrews out of his good nature and out of the abundance of love that he has for India suggests that I should do. For
I regard myself as an economical worker, fully cognizant of my own limitations. In trying to revive hand-spinning I feel that I am touching the root of the evil, that it is enough to occupy all my energy, and that if that movement becomes successful, as I am daily becoming more and more convinced that it will, the undulated evils of rice mills, to which Andrews draws attention, and others which can be named will automatically disappear. Let us not make the mistake of thinking that what has happened in India about the spinning-wheel, and what is now happening about other cottage industries, such as hand-milling of rice, need cause no harm to national life, because such things have happened in the West without the West having come to grief. In the first place it is yet too early to say positively that the destruction of village life in the West has been either a benefit to it, or to mankind in general. In the second place, and this is more pertinent, assuming that the new life that has come into being in the West is calculated to benefit mankind, let us understand that whereas in the West the villagers whose industry was destroyed readily found another occupation, and were, therefore, somehow provided, with us only an infinitesimal portion of those whom the erection of these mills deprives of their occupation is otherwise provided, and that the vast majority are left idle and penniless. Let not the reader also rush to the conclusion that the hand-spinning movement is an indiscriminate onslaught upon machinery. This movement is intended to displace only such machinery worked by power as is harmful to the moral and material welfare of the starving millions. The fact is that we are too much obsessed by the glamour of the West, and the ready-made literature that is poured down upon us from week to week. We forget that what may be perfectly good for certain conditions in the West is not necessarily good for certain other, and often diametrically opposite, conditions in the East. Free Trade which may have been good enough for England would certainly have ruined Germany. Germany prospered, only because her thinkers, instead of slavishly following England, took note of the special conditions of their own land, and devised economics suited to them. And both England and Germany will have to revise their policy in economics immediately the nations that are now being exploited by them come to their own, and refuse to be exploited. The civilization of both is based upon the exploitation of other lands. Let us remember that even if we have desire, we have not the power to exploit any single nation on earth.
Hence if we are to live as an independent nation, we must evolve economics and conditions suited to our growth.

MOST ECONOMICAL

A friend, who fell ill about the same time as I became incapacitated, writing out of sympathy, and herself in search of it, says in her letter:

I had time to philosophize and there was one thought I was working at ever since I lost my voice. And I have discovered that there is no necessity for living, and that Fate in giving us death early is most economical. For thereby she economizes the power that abides in us whereas we waste it by living when living becomes manifestly unnecessary. I spun the thought out until I felt exhausted, and I said to myself, “After all what is the good? The call somehow or other has not come. And so I must be wasted till there is nothing more left to be wasted.”

What a comforting thought it is to think of death, whenever it comes, as a wise plan in the economy of Nature? If we could realize this law of our being and be prepared for death as a welcome friend and deliverer, we should cease to engage in the frantic struggle for life. We shall cease to want to live at the cost of other lives and in contempt of all considerations of humanity. But to philosophize, as this friend has done, is one thing; to realize at the required moment the truth of the philosophy is totally another. Such realization is impossible without a due conception of the definite and grave limitations of the body and an abiding faith in God and His unchangeable Law of Karma.

Young India, 12-5-1927

372. YOUNG AT 75

An English friend writes:

I want just to tell you of a letter and photographs I have had from a dear old Swiss peasant woman of over 70, who spins and weaves away up in the mountains above Villeneuve. She writes in answer to letters that she has had of mine, and then she says (in French dialect),

“We are commencing the winter and the snows are coming down to keep us company for many months. I shall have plenty of time to occupy myself with my loom. And I have now got an order for two pieces at 59 metres,

1 For Gandhiji’s reply: vide “Letter to Isabel Bamlet”, 10-5-1927
so I shall need the time, as I get tired easily in these days” (at 75 years old!). Her life is a perfect example of the full, yet peaceful and contented existence, which should be the lot of all peasantry. In the summer she works in the fields, with just a few odd hours of spinning and weaving put in here and there when the days are wet, and in the winter when the land is under snow, she works away at her wheel and her loom all day. Take this hand industry away from her, and she would be lost in complete misery. As it is, she is the happiest and sweetest-natured person on the mountainside. Why? Because she alone, of all the peasants in that place, has retained the old industry, and she alone has a full and true life. I enclose you one of the little photographs which shows her sitting on a log of wood caressing one of her goats, which may give you some slight idea of her dear old face. The younger woman is her daughter-in-law.

I have the beautiful photograph which I am unable to reproduce in Young India, but the imaginative reader will have no difficulty in filling in the picture. The point of the letter however is that even in that machine-ridden country, there are people who find their true peace in this, at one time universal, home industry of the wheel and the loom. And if this old woman, who for her industry is young at 75, finds her solace, not her livelihood, in the wheel and the loom, how much greater is their need in this land where very few women reach the age of 75, where the majority needlessly are old at 50, and where millions of women need not merely the solace of an innocent cottage industry to occupy their idle hours but who need it even more to keep the wolf from the door?

‘If that is so, why do not the millions take to the home industry, even as the dear old Swiss sister does, and find from it their solace and their food? What is there to prevent them from doing so?’, asks the ignorant scoffer. But somewhat similar was the question put by a burly, rough-looking Englishman to Surendranath Bannerjea in 1889 or 1890 when he was haranguing an English audience. This worthy member of the firm of John Bull and Company asked the then uncrowned king of Bengal, if what the latter said was true that India desired freedom, what prevented her from taking it, how was it that they, members of this numerous and powerful firm, never heard of breaking of window-panes, let alone heads, as they the members were wont to do when they could not get what they wanted? So far as my memory serves me right, the papers recorded no answer from the orator. There was only a ‘hear, hear’ from the audience. But what the honest Englishman said to Surendranath may be safely repeated even today, and we know that such a question will be no answer to the cry for freedom. We may not know how to win it. Knowing the way we may not have the power or the will to adopt it. Nevertheless the cry for freedom is both just and natural. Be it ever so ineffective, it is the first step to freedom.

In the instance of the starving millions the scoffers forget in their ignorance that the millions have not even the wish to cry out for work or bread. Hence we join the English historian in calling them “dumb millions”. We (including the scoffers) have to be their voice. We have to teach the dumb millions the first lesson. We, not they, are responsible for their awful poverty and ignorance. They don’t know what they want or need. They are living corpses.

Who shall dare say to the untouchables that if they want their freedom, who prevents them from taking it? God is long-suffering and patient. He lets the tyrant dig his own grave, only issuing grave warnings at stated intervals.

We would say, and justly, that though the taunt of the Englishman could be theoretically justified, it would ill become Englishmen to beg the question in that manner, when anyone of us, though feeling helpless, is yet expressing the natural desire for freedom. So will it ill become us, middle-class men and women, to hurl the taunt put by me in the mouth of the imaginary scoffer in answer to the crying need of the millions—a need which they may not even feel but which a few of us feel for them. The way to answer the need is to multiply the number of such representatives who would not only be the mouth-piece of the dumb millions but would adopt corresponding measures by themselves taking up the wheel, by throwing away foreign fineries, by wearing khadi and by not resting till every idle hour of the nation is usefully occupied. Then, but not till then, shall India’s women be young, happy and godfearing at 75, even as the Swiss sister of 75 is represented to be.

Young India, 12-5-1927

373. FOR SUBSCRIBERS, SOUTH INDIA FLOOD RELIEF

The following letter was received by me last year, and has been lying with me ever since. One of the signatories Diwan Bahadur M. O. Parthasarathi Aiyengar unfortunately died sometime after signing the letter. The contents of the letter and the distinguished names\(^1\) attached to it speak for themselves. I heartily endorse the appeal\(^2\). But before I can formally give effect to it, it is necessary to ascertain the wishes of the donors. In answer to the appeal issued in these columns and Navajivan, some sent their donations to the Satyagraha Ashram, some to the Navajivan office, and some to the office of the Gujarat Provincial Congress Committee. The funds were sent from time to time to Sjt. Rajagopalachari upon requisition. Audited accounts were published by him in the papers. The catastrophe was so sudden that it appealed to the imagination of the philanthropic public and a liberal response was made to the various appeals that were issued. The result was that practically everywhere there was a surplus. The agencies created were unable to spend the full amount with due regard to the proper discharge of their duties. As the signatories to the following letter inform me, the other agencies have disposed of the surplus in some beneficial manner or other. I have not been in a hurry to use up the surplus of the amounts received in answer to the appeal made in these columns. It is deposited in banks and is bearing interest. India is unfortunately a land of almost perpetual famines, and the chief activity of the All-India Spinners’ Association at the present moment is directly to deal with such causes of famine as are within the power of man to control. Man cannot control and regulate floods beyond a certain limit. They will take their toll in spite of the exercise of all the ingenuity that man may be capable of. But floods always leave a legacy behind, which man can and is bound to deal with. In a similar manner man cannot bring water beyond a certain point when the rains fail. But man can produce conditions whereby people who are willing to work can find work enough to buy food with, when Nature leaves enough scope for transferring grain from one place to another. It is exactly these causes that the All-India Spinners’ Association is endeavouring in a humble manner to deal with through its growing army of workers. The method adopted is to establish spinning centres in places where there is the greatest need for work during off-seasons. The largest amount of such work is being done, as is now well known, in South India. And the letter I have reproduced is a recommendation

1 Not reproduced here

\(^1\) S. Srinivasa Iyengar; S. Ramanathan, Secretary, A.I.S.A., Tamilnad and Kerala; C. Rajagopalachari; K. Kelappan; M. O. Parthasarathi Aiyengar; M. Krishna Nair, M.L.C., Ex-Diwan of Travancore and T. Rangachariar

\(^2\) To give the unspent balance of South India Flood Relief Fund for khadi work in South India through A.I.S.A.
for the use of this surplus of the Flood Relief Fund through this agency. When I made an appeal for directing the funds for use in Orissa, no subscriber objected and several wrote to me approving of the suggestion. I now invite the subscribers, if they wish, to signify their own opinion. In the absence of any opinion to the contrary from them within a fortnight of the publication of this note, I propose to utilize the surplus in the manner suggested by the distinguished signatories. Needless to say I have consulted all my co-workers, and they approve of the suggestion.

Young India, 12-5-1927

374. THE SKELETONS OF ORISSA

According to my theory, if khadi work cannot be made a success in Utkal, it cannot be made a success anywhere. Yet, strange though it may appear, nowhere have the khadi workers experienced a greater difficulty in organizing hand-spinning than there. The eyes of the living skeletons of Utkal are unlit by a single ray of hope. What interest can the means of livelihood have for one who has despaired of life itself? Those who have taken to spinning in Utkal are men who still retain some hope of life. The khadi worker there has not yet been able to touch the vast majority who have lost all hope. The people are dying under our very eyes. We could see it clearly if only we had the eyes to see. We would then take up spinning for sacrifice and give away all our hoarded money for khadi work, or in case we had none, we would cut down our luxuries and superfluous expense and devote the savings to the same end.

It is only if we ourselves spin that we will be able to create the spinning atmosphere necessary to quicken these skeletons to life. But a spinning atmosphere by itself cannot do more than merely touch the fringe of the problem. Progress depends upon funds. No yajna can be complete without dakshina1. And it is clear to me as daylight that spinning is the one true yajna today and to contribute funds for its advancement is the only dakshina. For those who have not yet realized this simple truth, the following letter¹ will serve as an eye-opener.

1 Offering

Young India, 12-5-1927

375. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 12, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

Again I have your two letters delivered the same day. I am so glad you seem to have settled down. But whenever you feel unsettled, you will not hesitate to tell me about it, as you now know from experience that I shall be patient. I am most anxious that you should not appear to be what you are not. I must take you as you are and help you to be what you should be. That I can only do if I give you no cause to fear me. That is why I told you once I wanted to be not merely in the place of father but mother also to you.

You will not leave the D.C. alone so long as he entertains your letter. Answer politely all his doubts and queries. Tell him if you know the difference between the Persian wheel which we have and the Ramachandra lift as also why spinning is not merely one of the industries but is the key industry of the nation.

There seems to be still some misunderstanding about my coming there. I am anxious to be there for two reasons. I want to see the place about which I have heard so much and I want to be with you. But the time I do not know. I am not likely to leave the South yet for four months, I fear. But it is no use forecasting events. I should be enough for me to be able to say that I long to be there just as much as I long to be at Sabarmati. Please gently tell Krishnanandji this thing.²

Let Valunjker write to me. You should get hold of the correct spelling of his name. Let him write it [in] the Hindi character. Are they making a long stay there?

¹ Not reproduced here. Written by Laxmidas Purushottam, it was a similar appeal as that of Shankerlal Banker; vide “Khadi for Utkal”, 5-5-1927.
² Vide also “Letter to Mirabehn”, 27-4-1927.
I am well.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5228. Courtesy: Mirabehn

376. LETTER TO H. KALLENBACH

NANDI HILLS (NEAR BANGALORE),
May 13, 1927

LOWER HOUSE,

As I lie in bed and look up old undisposed of correspondence and revive old and sacred memories, I chance upon your letter of 27th February sent with Andrews’s letter from your home at Inanda, and I revive so many pleasant and sacred memories. Every letter that you have written during the last two years—and you have not written many—has been a despondent letter, distrustful of yourself; but as long as I live I am not going to lose faith in you. I am hoping that some day as before you will have a fatigue of the exciting things that give you momentary pleasure and that you will at least come to India to meet an old friend and renew many old acquaintances. You have made a provisional promise to do so next September or October. Do come if you can and then stay as long as you like or as little as you like.

I am glad you are having short spells of Andrews’s company. I have not come across a humbler or more godfearing man throughout my varied experience.

You don’t want me to say anything about my illness; because I see you do get Young India and read it. I am at the present moment taking my cure in a little hill in the State of Mysore where an army of devoted volunteers and many of my closest co-workers are looking after me. Mrs. Gandhi and Devdas are with me. The names of others would mean nothing to you. So I do not give them. But when you do come, you will see them all and recognize them as having been with me on this hill.

This loss of strength came in the twinkling of an eye. Latterly I had put such terrific strain upon the brain that I was afraid of a crisis and it came just when I was arranging to have a lighter programme. But God seemed to say, ‘I shall demolish your pride before you recognize your mad method and show you that you were utterly wrong in rushing as you have been doing, thinking that it was all well because it was for a good cause. You fool, you thought that you would work wonders. Have your lesson now and learn whilst there is yet time that God alone is to wonder-work and He uses whom He pleases as His instrument.’ I am taking the chastisement I hope in due humility and if He raises me from this sick-bed, I am making Him promises that I shall reform my ways and shall seek still more strenuously to know His will and do it.

I hope you are keeping in touch with Manilal. He has got a girl with a strong character as his wife. She is the best girl I could possibly have found for him. Chance put her my way. She belongs to a godly family. Remember you are one of the trustees for Phœnix and I look to you to discharge your trust.

Sastri will be in South Africa probably within a month of your receipt of this. I have had long chats with him about you and your associations with Gokhale. Do try to be close to him and bring all our old companions in touch with him.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 12350
DEAR FRIEND.

I have your letter for which I thank you. I did receive the cablegram from the Chinese Students’ Association and whilst I was touring in Bihar. So far as I recollect, I sent them a letter also acknowledging the cablegram. What is however more to the purpose, I took immediate action by writing in Young India. And there was agitation against the despatch of Indian troops but as you are aware, we have no power.

I am now writing to the Association to the address sent by you.

Yours sincerely,

P. J. REDDY, ESQ.
HON. SECRETARY
HINDUSTHAN ASSOCIATION OF CENTRAL EUROPE
KNESEBECKSTER 8-9
CHARLOTTENBURG 2
BERLIN

From a photostat: S.N. 12489

378. LETTER TO CHINESE STUDENTS’ ASSOCIATION

DEAR FRIENDS.

I understand from Sjt. Reddy that you did not know whether I received your cablegram sent by you some time ago, and whether I took any action upon it. You had given no address so far as I recollect in your cablegram; but I have a recollection that I sent you an acknowledgement to the place from which your cable was sent. What is more to the purpose, I took immediate action and wrote strongly in Young India which I had taken for granted you regularly read. There was persistent agitation against the dispatch of Indian troops from almost all the Indian public bodies. But I am sorry to have to confess that Indian public opinion is not powerful enough to carry in such matters weight with the Government. It has to be recognized that we are after all a fallen nation struggling to rise and therefore beyond wishing nations like you all success in their endeavour to attain full freedom, we can do very little indeed to help.

Yours sincerely,

CHINESE STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION
BERLIN

From a photostat: S.N. 12498

379. LETTER TO H. CLAYTON

NANDI HILLS,
May 13, 1927

DEAR MR. CLAYTON,

Mr. A. V. Thakkar of the Servants of India Society has sent me a cutting from The Times of India of the 4th instant containing the report of a debate in the Corporation in which you are reported to have said in reference to Mr. Thakkar’s investigation as follows:

Proceeding, the Commissioner said he was not going into the question of general administration. Mr. Horniman had referred to the investigations of Mr. Thakkar. Now, he (the speaker) had great admiration for Mr. Thakkar. During the last ten years every opportunity was given to that gentleman to make inquiries and once in conjunction with Mr. Gandhi. The result was that Mr. Gandhi reported that the class of witnesses was so unreliable that he could not believe one single allegation made by them!

I shall be glad if you will kindly tell me whether you are reported correctly, and I shall thank you if you will kindly let me have a copy of the report which I am said to have made. I do remember an interview or interviews with the late Mr. Turner in connection with the complaints of Bhangis. But I have no recollection of my having made either in conjunction with Mr. Thakkar or otherwise any enquiry of the type suggested in the paragraphs quoted above.

I must thank you for the kind enquiries that you made about me when Dr. Mehta visited me at Amboli. As you know I am now taking my rest at the above hill which is a higher elevation than Amboli, therefore cooler.

Yours sincerely,

H. CLAYTON, ESQ.
COMMISSIONER
MUNICIPAL CORPORATION
BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 12909

380. LETTER TO R. B. GREGG

NANDI HILLS,
May 13, 1927

MY DEAR GOVIND,

I have your typed letter. Though typewritten letters are undoubtedly easier to read, I have still a weakness for hand written letters. This however does not mean that I want you to write to me in your own hand. Your typewritten letters are quite as welcome as the handwritten ones and for the time being I have myself mostly to rely upon shorthand and the typewriter.

I have not yet got the book on vitamins. If you had given me the name of the book and the author, I would have tried to procure it in Bangalore which I am sure has very good bookshops.

I shall look forward to your manuscript on khadi. I won’t discuss now the theory you have sketched in your letter.

Almonds I treated in two ways. I had them roasted and pounded through a nutmill into pulp and took this in the shape of butter. I had them also soaked overnight in water, the skin was removed and then it was pounded very fine, mixed with water and turned into milk. This milk was warmed and raised to boiling point and then eaten. Even this I could not digest. This was however now nearly eight or nine years ago—after the attack of dysentery. I have not dared to try the experiment again and after taking to goat’s milk. But I should gladly make the experiment on my own responsibility if I had no other undertakings and should try it in spite of the other undertakings under skilled supervision.

With love to you all,

Yours sincerely,

R. B. Gregg
Kotgarh

From a photostat: S.N. 14122

381. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

Nandi Durg,
Vaishakha Sud 12, May [13], 1927

Chhi. Mani,

I have your letter. You both did well to volunteer your services for patrolling the Ashram at night. I wish you did it to the full extent of your physical capacity (even if as assistants to some other person). Fear is a mere figment of our imagination; there is nothing real about it. It vanishes as a result of facing it often enough and by the grace of God. When the thieves realize that even our paid watchman will not beat them up but would suffer beating at their hands and that the volunteers belong to a different class altogether and are ordinary householders, they will cease to trouble the Ashram folk. I am sure that someone of you will employ soul-force some day and win them over by love. But there is no doubt that this is like placing one’s hand in a pit occupied by a snake. Someone will be beaten up or even killed. What man is there who is not afflicted by disease? Men, women and children, all fall a victim to it. How often was Radha knocked down? What happened to Rukhi? How many girls were taken to the Hospital at Juhu? If we can stand it, why should we not also take a beating from thieves and others, with courage? This idea may be strange for those who expect to be protected by the police but not for us at the Ashram.

I received the slivers prepared by you just as I was spinning and tried them at once. The thread did not break even once, and today I have found out a way to determine the strength just by myself and no sliver has yet given me a thread comparable to that from you. I have come across no sliver better than yours. Equally good slivers might have come my way only once or twice before. But I do not think anybody can make better slivers than yours. Indeed after once having tried my hand at yours, it may be difficult to spin with any other. I wish and hope that you will be first in the first class in writing a good hand and in spinning as well as carding.

1 The source has “12”.

380 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

I had a letter from Karachi yesterday. Your appointment appears to have been delayed on account of Narandas’s absence. So they have asked for a month’s time. I wrote that if they really wanted you, I would wait for a month longer, but they should do nothing just by way of courtesy or just to get you there, i.e., merely to oblige us. I also asked for a reply by wire. I would like you to go only to a place where you are really wanted; only this would be seemly. We are in no hurry. Meanwhile you have to become perfect in every department of your studies.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—Manibehn Patelne. pp. 60-1

382. LETTER TO JETHALAL

NANDI DURG, MYSORE,
Vaishakha Sud 12 [May 13, 1927]

BHAISHRI JETHALAL,

I have your letter. If you persevere, you will succeed in your efforts. In this age such efforts do not bear quick fruit, but hereafter you must observe this one rule. Whatever the vow, once you take it, you must keep it. You may pile up all the barricades you need for safeguarding [your vow] and for protecting yourself [against breach]; one of the essential and fundamental safeguards is this. During the period of your vow, the two of you should live absolutely apart from each other and under no circumstances allow yourself any privacy. If you have neither the inclination nor the strength to keep a vow, you may not take it, but having taken once you must abide by the necessary conditions. You should go through Pandit Satavalekar’s book on brahmacharya. His address is Oundh (District Satara). A copy of the book has already come to the Ashram, from where you

1 Year inferred from the contents can borrow it for reading.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1356

383. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

NANDI HILLS,
May 14, 1927

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I must dictate. Writing regularly with my own hand causes too much strain and it is not possible to sit up long. This, however, does not mean that I am not getting stronger, but the strength comes very slowly. And I do not want to be in arrears with such correspondence as I would like to attend to.

I prize your first letter as a gift. It shows you in all your greatness and goodness.

You are living for your children. I envy them. But Krishna’s wedding must not be after Jawahar’s type. It must be as humble as Sarup’s. Otherwise I must apply for a warrant of attachment. Or, if I feel I must enter into collusion with Krishna.

I read the public printed report from beginning to end. And I have now read the confidential report. Both are worthy of Jawaharlal. I appreciate the view he presents about foreign propaganda. But somehow or other I still feel that our way lies differently. I feel that we will not get the support of Europe beyond a certain point, because after all most of the European States are partners in our exploitation, and if my proposition is correct, namely, that we must resist this exploitation in every shape and form, we shall not retain European sympathy during the final heat of the struggle. However, for the moment my view is merely academic. And you will vote Congress funds as you please.

1 Krishna (Mrs. Hutheesing)
2 Vijayalakshmi (Mrs. Pandit)
3 About the doings of the “Oppressed Nations’ Conference”
The idea of Jawaharlal presiding has an irresistible appeal for me. But I wonder whether it would be proper in the present atmosphere to saddle the responsibility upon him. It seems to me to be a thankless task. All discipline has vanished. Communalism is at its height. Intrigue is triumphant everywhere. Good and true men are finding it difficult to hold on to their position in the Congress. Jawahar’s time will be simply taken away in keeping the Congress house tolerably pure and he will simply sicken. Till your letter came, I had no thought of interfering this year in the choice of the President. My instinct still goes that way. But, being out of touch, I may be taking too gloomy a view of the situation. You know better. And seeing that you are taking your head, and I suppose heart also, to Bombay, you will know the situation at first hand and guide me. There will be still time enough to move.

I return Krishna’s copy of Jawahar’s confidential report as also the first page of his letter. I have only just received papers regarding Saklatvala which I shall go through in due time.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 12576

384. LETTER TO DR. B. S. MOONJE

NANDI HILLS,

May 14, 1927

DEAR DR. MOONJE,

I was looking forward to a copy of your address. I have now received the same with your covering letter for both of which I thank you.

Acharya Gidwani wrote to me preparing me for the receipt of your address. I had not read it but he told me that you had imputed to me a view of untouchability which I have never held or expressed. And, when he told me so, I wrote to him saying that if you had done any such thing, it would not surprise me as your philosophy admitted of any means for beating an opponent with. I have now read your address and I see that it confirms Acharya Gidwani’s opinion. I suppose it is unnecessary to tell you that the view you ascribe to me is not mine. For, it is conceivable to me that you did not know my repeated declarations that I do not regard untouchability as is now practised as a part of Hindu religion, and that if I could persuade myself that it was, I should disown Hinduism. But this very palpable misrepresentation of my view does not affect our friendship. For, mistaken though I regard your philosophy to be, love of the country is good enough bond between you and me. Some day of course I expect to convert you [to] my view that it is a good policy even to treat an opponent fairly and justly. And my conversion of you will be my contribution to the shuddhi movement.

Of course you want to know my opinion about your address. I congratulate you upon your frankness and fearlessness; but the substance of your address makes no appeal to me. Your address is a powerful and eloquent plea on behalf of Islam not as its best exponents know it, but as you know it, and if I do not know better my own Hinduism, I do not know what I should do. You have also put yourself to immense pain in demonstrating that untouchability is an integral part of Hinduism, a view which I repudiate and have always repudiated in toto. Happily for me, my Hinduism does not bind me to every verse because it is written in Sanskrit, because it is supposed to be a part of some of our scriptures. If your portraiture of events is true and if your view of Hinduism is also true, the outlook is only gloomy both for Hinduism and for the country. But let me tell you with all deference that in spite of your literal knowledge of the Shastras, yours is a distorted view of Hinduism. I claim in all humility to have lived Hinduism all my life. But I can’t convert you by argument. And I know you will sweep me off my feet with a mere gesture if I endeavour to convert you by means of lathi blows. I shall therefore be content with what I know to be the Hindu way and wait patiently for my opportunity.

Yours sincerely,

DR. B. S. MOONIE
NAGPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 14613
385. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

NANDI,

Vaishakh Sud 13 [May 14, 1927]

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. Writing to persons like you is no strain. Lately I have changed my way of working. Instead of writing myself, I dictate letters lying down. That way I am able to attend to more letters. Write to Pattani Saheb regarding the bungalow and give him your last date. If you wish, I shall write to him. It is better to spend November-December only there. If all is well you may come down in January. If you really wish to write about tuberculosis in Gujarati, go to a medical college when you are ready and study the subject without any desire for a degree. Do you know that that is what Dr. Anna Kingsford did? She also had tuberculosis. While studying the subject, she discovered something altogether new. She cured her disease by taking to vegetarian diet. It is another matter that the cause of her disease was different. You can also discover something.

Now for Pyarelal. If you send away Pyarelal in a hurry, you will earn a severe rebuke. I had decided for Pyarelal the programme that he should be with you and do his work. Pyarelal is learned, yet is reticent. Because of his undue timidity, he is not able to give of his best. That is why I had given him the responsibility of writing regularly while he stayed with you. In one of your letters you had mentioned that Pyarelal was feeling bored. That is not true. As soon as he came here, Pyarelal sought my permission to go back. But I detained him because I wanted to have a leisurely talk with him and to cure his mental troubles. Do not send back Pyarelal because you want to make the experiment of carrying on without help. Discuss the matter further with Pyarelal and then write to me as you consider fit.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 From Bapuni Prasadi
386. LETTER TO CHINAI

NANDI DURG,

Vaishakha Sud 13 (May 14, 1927)

BHAISHRI CHINAI,

I have your letter. Even before this I got the news from Bhai Kalyanji and Pragjibhai. Your letter however throws more light. I congratulate you on the fortitude you displayed in receiving the blows without either returning them or running away. I have no doubt that your action will bring benefit to you as well as to the people. We should entertain no doubt about it just because we cannot ourselves see its good results.

I shall now answer your questions. It cannot be stated categorically whether or not one may participate in the activities of the Hindu [Maha]sabha. Those who are capable of having their own ideals implemented may surely do it, or those who are in agreement with the ideology of their local leaders will join them anyway. I find nothing wrong with the Hindu [Maha]sabha’s aims and ideals. There can be nothing wrong in organizing a community. Abolition of untouchability is everyone’s dharma.

Shuddhi is a very wide term. A part of what it connotes may be acceptable to us, some of it may be rejected. I think their manifesto gives no rigid definition of shuddhi. People therefore have to make their own individual choice after considering the activities carried on in their respective province or city. As a matter of fact you have therefore to act as directed by your own inner self in view of the local situation. There is no absolute dharma that you must attend all the meetings convened by the Mahasabha, nor are you bound by dharma to take active part in any meeting which you happen to attend. Dharma consists in undertaking an act only if it is likely to advance what one regards as one’s dharma. I would have no objection to taking part in a procession launched by the Hindu [Maha]sabha if it is done with a pure motive and not expressly with the intention to create trouble. If we get news of a riot we should certainly exercise our strength, such as it is, in bringing about peace. It is everyone’s dharma to make every pious effort to stop riots breaking out. I employ the adjective “pious” with a purpose because in this age of cowardice men are presumed to be observing their dharma of peace by remaining indifferent merely with a view to saving their own skin. Thus by pious efforts, I mean, no one is required to check the riots at the cost of his dharma. If there is an attack on my temple coming up and I just disappear or if I am advised to run away, neither I nor the person who counsels flight can be said to have been trying to stop the riot.

Social boycott can be justified in principle. I have however never seen a clear reason for a social boycott of Muslims; nor is a general social boycott possible, as far as I can see.

Please do write to me if you need further elucidation. I hope your pain has subsided; that Raiji too must be all right by now. One of your doubts remains to be cleared. There is absolutely no reason to believe that the Government has a hand in the functioning of the Hindu [Maha]sabha. The Government, nonetheless, is wont to make use of every sabha or samiti with a view to consolidating their own position, as it does with the Hindu [Maha]sabha, the Muslim League and even the Congress.

Let Bhai Kalyanji and Bhai Pragji too read this letter so that I need not write to them separately.

Blessings from Mohanadas

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2684

387. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakha Sud 13 [May 14, 1927]

CHI. GANGABEHN,

A long-awaited letter from you after many days. It is good that you visited the Kanya Gurukul. When you write to Champavatibehn, please ask her to keep me informed about the institution. I am pleased that none of your girls is scared of the thieves. I wish that we while at the Ashram do not live in fear.

If Surajbehn invites you to have a look at the Shraivakashram at Palitana, do go and visit it when you get the time. I think, however, that you were absolutely correct in expressing your unwillingness to stay there. I would wish you to gain self-confidence and be better trained, and your convictions to be more firm before you decide to serve individually.
Surendraji’s candour can never fail to have a good effect. Those of the girls who come to know him have improved, and I wish you to utilize his presence more. I regard Surendra as an unblemished brahmachari.

It is very good that you have taken Ramanama into your heart. This name alone averts all ills.

I am steadily improving. For the present I propose to make it a practice to dictate my letters instead of writing them myself because of the temptation to deal with too many letters and also to conserve my energy.

Ba sends her blessings.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3135

388. CABLE TO LOUISE DIEL

[On or after May 14, 1927]

TRUE ART CONSISTS IN MASSES LEARNING SELF-PURIFICATION
SELF-RESTRAINT. MAY GERMAN MASSES COPY THIS ART OF LIFE.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 12500

389. APPEAL TO SOUTH AFRICAN INDIANS

The Rt. Hon. Srinivasa Sastri has yielded to the pressure of friends in accepting the office of the first Ambassador for India in South Africa, at the sacrifice of his cherished wishes, solely with the object of serving you. It rests with you to make the best use of his services and his presence amongst you. You cannot do so unless you fulfil the following conditions:

1. You will not expect too much.

2. You will not try to seek relief in purely individual cases through him.

1 In reply to Louise Diel’s cable received on May 14, 1927, which read: “We celebrate 60th birthday of Kaete Kollwritz, great German artist of masses. Please cable message to address.”

2 The Gujarati original, from which this was translated, was published in Navajivan, 15-5-1927.
3. You will not swerve from truth in your dealings with him. To be false to him would be to be false to yourselves.
4. You will remain completely united.
5. You will put your own house in order and purify yourselves.

You will not assume that all your grievances will disappear with the coming of the Rt. Hon. Sastri as first Agent. He will have done enough if he succeeds in seeing that no new restrictive legislation is passed against you, that the operation of the old restrictive enactments is not made unnecessarily harsh and that the spirit of the new Agreement is carried out by the Union Government.

The Rt. Hon. Sastri is going there as the representative, not of individuals, but of India as a whole. He is going there to uphold the prestige of India. Therefore you will not run to him for relief in every individual case. If you do, you will make the mistake of expending a pound for the matter of a penny.

Our strength depends solely on truth. No matter how you behave in your business dealings, you will never in the interests of the community think of swerving from the path of truth in your dealings with the Rt. Hon. Sastri. In attempting to deceive him you will be working your own ruin.

We here constantly receive reports of dissensions amongst you. If you go on creating different and conflicting interests, e.g., the rights of the rich as distinguished from those of the poor, the rights of the North Indians as distinguished from those of the South Indians, of the Colonial-born as distinguished from those of the merchants, of the latter from those of the indentured, of the Transvaal Indians as distinguished from those of the Cape Indians and Natal Indians, you will lose the little that you have gained. If you want to better the position of the whole community, you will always stand united.

We are ultimately to win by our own endeavour which does not mean sharp practice, but self-purification, which again means reform from within and purging ourselves of evil customs and superstitions, educating our children, and contributing money for education as well as other measures of social reform. In this work of self-purification, the Rt. Hon. Sastri’s profound experience as an educationist and reformer should be very helpful, and the presence of Mrs. Sastri should be an inspiration to our women.

You will never get such another opportunity in the near future of ameliorating your condition. In my opinion it was impossible to find a worthier, abler and more impartial representative than the Rt. Hon. Sastri. Let us believe that the Hand of God has brought about this happy consummation. It rests with you entirely to benefit or not by the chance which God has in his mercy given you. May He show you the right path.

Young India, 19-5-192

390. NOTE

RAMACHANDRA LIFT

The lift has now been in use in several parts of Gujarat since the management of it was taken over by the Satyagraha Ashram. With reference to one that was recently put up in Palanpur, Sheth Amritlal Raychand Jhaveri writes:

I print the substance of the Gujarati letter received by me as preliminary evidence of the successful working of the lift, and in order to invite the opinion of others who have already got the Ramachandra lifts. I should not have concerned myself about it but for its very great humanitarian aspect. However, I am anxious to move cautiously. I have heard some criticism about the lift and I invite all the testimony for and against the lift. Up to now all the criticism that I have received has made no appeal to me; but if there is any criticism worth noticing I shall not hesitate to take the reader into confidence. I need not repeat that the spirit of this enterprise is not commercial in any sense of the term. Mr. Ramachandra Iyer has sold his patent rights for a royalty of Rs. 25 per lift up to 1,000. This was due to him as he has incurred considerable debts and as he must live. But beyond that, nothing but actual expenses are added in counting the cost.... Those who desire to see the lift at work may visit the Ashram for the purpose.

Where the only object is absolute religious activity and pursuit of truth, there is no reason to hide anything. The object of the appreciation printed above is thus clear. If the lift has the merits described above then all must take advantage of it. We started with only one lift in the Satyagraha Ashram and have now provided four lifts. Out of these three are in working condition; but I do not

---

1 The letter is not reproduced here.
2 What follows is from Navajivan, 15-5-1927.
consider this to be sufficient proof. If those who have bought the equipment are satisfied, and if they feel that because of this there is some saving of cattle as well as money, then nothing can be said against it. It can be said that experience gained so far is in favour of the Ramachandra lift.

Young India, 26-5-1927; also Navajivan, 15-5-1927

391. TELEGRAM TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

NANDI,
May 15, 1927

MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
PANCHGANI CASTLE
PANCHGANI

DETAIN PYARELAL PENDING RECEIPT LETTER POSTED TODAY.¹

BAPU

From the original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library.
Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

392. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

NANDI HILLS,
May 15, 1927

DEAR BROTHER,

I must dictate this letter. I forgot to mention one thing to you. I think I gave you the name of Umar Hajee Ahmed Jhaveri, one of the most truthful men I have met in my life. If he has thought ill of a person, I have known him to tell him so and apologize. He is the brother of the very first Indian merchant who went to South Africa, the late Abubakar Ahmed. Umar Hajee Ahmed has considerable property in Durban and has a plot of land with handsome buildings in a central place in Church Street, Pretoria. This property was the only property registered in the name of an Indian in the Transvaal. It became a point of honour with us to insist upon that property remain-

¹ Presumably the reference is to the preceding item, which might have been posted late.
ing in the ownership of Indians. Mr. Jhaveri was telling me that there was some dispute about it. I don’t remember the exact circumstances in which the matter stands at present, though of course the past history I know well. This is a matter that might come before you. You will then recall the fact that I mentioned it to you. This is no individual matter but one of national concern. There is correspondence about this between General Smuts and myself. You will see all the papers if the case ever comes before you.

I saw Dr. Malan’s cable. It was splendid. I am glad you are going so early as 8th June. Poor Andrews is being torn to pieces, and you will not reach South Africa a moment too soon.

The Natal Provincial Council’s vote is indeed a bad beginning. But in the Cape Parliament the Natal vote counts for little. I have no doubt that you will have no difficulty with the Natal members some of whom are good, and all of them, unlike as in the Transvaal, the Orange and even the Cape, are proud of the British connection. But, probably, you already know all such things.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 12351

393. LETTER TO C. NARAYANA RAO

NANDI HILLS,
May 15, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Owing to my illness your letter has remained unanswered all this long time. Do you still desire to leave the Excise Department? And are you prepared to go to the Ashram and submit to its discipline without any pay? Though you do not know cooking, it will be necessary for you to take part in the kitchen work. What you do not know will be taught to you. If you are admitted you will be expected to learn Hindi. You will be expected to get up at 4 o’clock in the morning and from 4 o’clock till 7.30 in the evening you will be expected to take some part in the joint work at the Ashram. Of course necessary leisure for ablutions, etc., is provided. Thus you will see that before 8 o’clock in the evening you will have little time for doing private reading. There will be an hour’s rest during the day; but after strenuous labour, you will hardly feel up to reading anything. Thus strictly speaking there is no such thing as 8 hours’ day in the Ashram for volunteers who come under the Ashram discipline. You will be expected to retire to bed at 9 o’clock at night. In fact one motto at the Ashram is that work for the common good is prayer and work is devotion to God. If you feel that you can go through the Ashram discipline, please let me know and I shall forward your letter to the Manager of the Ashram with a recommendation to admit you. Whether you may be finally admitted or not will depend upon the Managing Committee who has full control over everything in the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,

C. NARAYANA RAO, ESQ.
EXCISE DEPARTMENT
BEJIPURAM
(BERHAMPOR P. O.)

From a photostat: S.N. 12564

394. LETTER TO N. H. TELANG

NANDI HILLS,
May 15, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Owing to my sickness I have not been able to do anything further in connection with your letter. If you join the training class, your own expenses will be paid, provided, of course, that you enter into an agreement after the training is finished to serve the All-India Spinners’ Association. If you show considerable aptitude, it is possible that you will get a pass certificate before the ordinary time and might then be admitted to the service at once. If you are prepared to take the training in the circumstances, I do not anticipate much difficulty about your admission.

Yours sincerely,

N. H. TELANG, ESQ.
TEACHER
A. V. SCHOOL
BALAPUR

From a microfilm: S.N. 12567-A
395. LETTER TO BENARSIDAS CHATURVEDI

NANDI HILLS, BANGALORE,
May 15, 1927

CHI. BENARSIDASJI,

I have your letter. Before I got it, I had no knowledge of all that had been written from the Ashram. You are no doubt aware that I am lying ill in bed. I can only guess why such a letter came to be written from the Ashram. Thus, as I have found Totaramji very systematic in all his work, this letter too must have been written at his instance. If this is true you have no reason to feel unhappy about it. As for me, I have full faith in your truthfulness. But when a particular job...¹ a man should willingly act in conformity with the common rules.

Whatever the best man does. . .²

Again you may not be aware that a managing committee has now been formed in the Ashram and all business is transacted through it. And it has relieved me of all my responsibilities after I fell ill. Consequently it is implied that I should claim or exercise no prerogative. If I have not been able to satisfy you even after writing all this please write to me what else I should do.

What are you doing these days? What means have you adopted for earning your livelihood?

My health is now improving.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2576

396. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised

NANDI HILLS, BANGALORE,
May 16, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. You may be declared to be a discharged patient now I suppose and so I have eased down a bit in my sending you love letters.

¹ As in the source
² Bhagavad Gita III. 21; the whole verse reads: “Whatever the best man does is also done by other men; what example he sets, the world follows.”
I am making steady progress. Bangalore doctors came today and they found the blood-pressure to be only 150 and the general condition quite good. They now want me to eat more. I shall see what is possible in that direction. I have been obliged to omit bread and vegetable because I thought them to be too heavy. I must now make another attempt. But there is no doubt about my getting better.

I see you are making headway with your work. How many women are there and how many girls? How many men and how many boys? Give me, when you can, a general idea of the Ashram and its inmates.

I do not know if anybody has told you that at Sabarmati of late we have been having much too much attention from thieves. Once our watchman suffered bad injuries in a scuffle with them. That woke me to a sense of our duty. And I thought that this work of guarding was as much our duty as a common kitchen. I therefore suggested that we must become our own watchmen and watchwomen and that we should seek not to beat the thieves out of the Ashram, but try to wean them from their error if they could be got at and that we should risk being beaten by them. The suggestion has been adopted and there are now over thirty volunteers including five women. This is a good beginning.

The common kitchen is daily improving. Shankaran has proved an ideal chief and chef. There are over twenty dining at the kitchen. All this will delight your heart when you return.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5229. Courtesy: Mirabehn
397. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Vaishakha Sud Purnima [May 16, 1927]

SISTERS,

I am very glad to know that you are not afraid. A person who knows that God is the Protector of all, why need he fear? By saying that God is the Protector of all, I do not mean that none would be able to rob or harm us. If this happens, it is not a reflection on the capacity of God to protect us; it is an indication of our lack of faith in Him. The river is ever ready to give water to all. But if one does not approach it with a pot in which to fetch water, or avoids it thinking its water poisonous, how can that be the fault of the river? Fear is a sign of lack of faith. But faith cannot be developed by means of reasoning. It comes gradually through reflection, meditation and practice. To develop such faith, we pray to God, recite bhajans, read good books, seek the company of the good and take to sacrificial spinning at the wheel. He who has no faith will not even touch the spinning-wheel.

I am getting better.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I did not notice all this space on the rear side. We know we are all poor, so how can I now throw away this space?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3649

398. LETTER TO TARA MODI

NANDI DURG,

Vaishakha Sud 15 [May 16, 1927]

CHI. TARA,

I do get news about your health. How did your health give way? Why should you get hysteria? Write me a detailed letter if you have the strength. If you have to fast, I am not going to worry at all because 1 Year is fixed from the reference to the scare from robbers at the Ashram.

I am more and more convinced that when no other medicine works, fasting is a sure remedy. Fasting does no harm, but don’t try it if you don’t have the courage.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1697. Courtesy: Ramniklal Modi

399. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

Purnima [May 16, 1927]¹

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter. I am steadily regaining the vigour. Do not worry in the least. I will try to take complete rest.

It would be good not to saddle Jamnalalji with more responsibility for the present. Whatever the problems, I shall be able to take quick decisions and perhaps you too will be able to explain to me. I am afraid Jamnalalji might fall ill. I like Rajaji’s suggestion. If you can work in the Nandi Hills for two months, the work can get done quickly and conveniently. Houses are plentiful and so it would be no trouble for me at all. Please consider and if you feel the need come over. It would be good if you too could have some peace.

I had a fairly long discussion with Bhai Dhirajlal at Bombay. He talked to me quite frankly and openly. He wants to have training at Bardoli and then work in Bombay. He does not seem to have found a clear direction yet. But it is just as well that he should spend a little time at Bardoli or Sabarmati.

I have received Anasuyabehn’s letter. She will definitely be coming to the Nandi Hills. It will not cause any trouble or congestion for me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32723

¹ The date has been inferred from Gandhiji’s stay at Nandi Hills from April 19 to June 5, 1927. Purnima during this period corresponded to this date. 424
400. LETTER TO GANGADEVI SANADHYA

NANDI DURG,
Vaisakha 15 [May 16, 1927]

DEAR SISTER,

You have not recovered as yet. How is it? Quite some time has gone by. Do you not wish even to change the treatment? Totaram should write to me all the details. You need not bother to write.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2548

401. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

NANDI HILLS,
May 17, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

When my illness is fast becoming a thing of the past yours seems to be obstinate. Whilst it remains so, you must not stir out. But why does it persist like that? Are you undergoing any treatment there? What exactly is the food you are taking? I ask this question as Mr. Gregg has sent me a book containing the latest researches on food and its relation to health. One thing does appear to me, however apart from the book. May it be that your vegetarian food does not agree with your body that has been built up upon flesh foods? While the change may not have done any visible harm, may it have undermined the constitution or may it be that the change of diet does not serve for rebuilding a shattered constitution? So it happened in my case. I went on famously on fruit and nut alone for more than six years. But after that severe attack of dysentery I could not rebuild the body without milk to which in some shape or other the constitution was used up to 45 years or rather 40 years. You know my rigid predilection, bordering on fanaticism, for vegetarianism. But my fanaticism exhausts itself with my own person for the simple reason that it is a matter of lifelong habit and of deep religious conviction. But religious conviction is a matter personal to every individual. Therefore, even being a vegetarian, I never enforce my conviction on friends but leave them free to do as they choose, even when they are under my influence, as I did for instance for Prabudas, Chhaganlal’s son. I had an English friend living with me in Durban. He had become a vegetarian under my influence. After some time he became ill. I could see that he could not get on well without his usual diet. I begged of him to procure meat from outside and become well. I could not introduce it in my own home. I want you to seriously consider the question therefore. You have to think not only of yourself but of Nikhil also and even Hemprabha Devi if she is still as bad as you are and Tarini if he is a vegetarian. If you are eating pulses, they are of course a fatal thing for weak persons and those with sedentary habits. You saw with what agitation Andrews cabled to me all the way from South Africa about milled rice. And my concern about your food became enhanced upon reading the book sent by Mr. Gregg.

\footnote{1 Wife of Totaram Sanadhya, a Fiji-returned immigrant, an inmate of the Sabarmati Ashram}

If there is any particular book on Buddhism that you require please tell me and I shall try to procure it.

The paragraph about yoga in Navajivan was unfortunate. I did think of yoga practices, but only from two sides, their reputed helpfulness in restoring health and in aiding brahmacharya, the latter for the sake of helping the student world whose mind is cut up to pieces under dissipating practices, and the former with reference to my own health. Having read a book on brahmacharya, during my illness and having heard copious references to use of asanas I began further research. I do not hope to get much help for acquiring greater purity. Not that I do not need all that I can get, but I do not feel that I shall get it through these practices. One who considers himself proficient in yoga told me that in their final stages Raja Yoga, Hatha Yoga and Karma Yoga were one and the same and that it was only in the final stage that conquest of passions in every shape and form was at all possible; and that in Hatha Yoga the final stage was difficult of attainment and required extensive practice. I was not surprised to hear this. For, I knew it before I was so authoritatively told. For that conquest therefore I have only to continue along the path I have so long followed. But I am taking gentle exercise by way of some of these asanas and am eager to take more as I become stronger. You need not therefore think any more about the yoga practices. Some day in order to remove expectations and misunderstandings, I propose to write about this thing in the pages of Young India. If I make any discovery about the simple use of asanas for regaining health, I shall certainly write to you.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1570

402. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

NANDI,

Tuesday [On or after May 17, 1927]

CHI, ANASUYABEHN,

I had desisted from replying to your last letter hoping that you would soon be arriving here. Meanwhile however I have had letters from Saklatwala. Hence this letter to you. I also enclose his letters as well as a copy of my letter to him.

My health is certainly good. The doctors say my blood-pressure is a little low. It has certainly not gone up.

Rajaji arrived here today. I take it you will now be arriving soon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32786

403. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

NANDI DURG,

Viashakh Vad 2 [May 18, 1927]

CHI, MATHURADS,

I have your telegram. I am relieved. If you are able to walk 20 furlongs at a stretch without getting tired and without a rise in temperature, we can say that you have turned the corner.

Talwalkar is an honest and industrious man and he thinks that in

---

1 From the reference to the Saklatwala papers which Gandhiji received on May 14, 1927, during his stay at Nandi Hills for recuperation of health. The first Tuesday after May 14 was the 17th.

2 The addressee received this letter on May 20, 1927. Vaishakh Vad 2 in 1927 corresponded to this date.
the treatment of tuberculosis he has no rival. I do not have the same regard for his ability as I have for his good nature. That is why I have not told you anything about him. But I know him very well. He treated Kaka and Uttam Chand—whom you do not know. And at present it appears that both of them have recovered. That is what the two of them think too. I know that others also have faith in him. His treatment consists essentially of injections in which he has profound faith. I do not think he has talked to you about the injections. But I can talk to him if you wish. But I think that if he wants to give you injections and you want to take them you will have to stay at Ahmedabad.

You must have met Nargisbehn and others.
My health is gradually improving.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

404. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

NANDIDOORG, 1
May, 18, 1927

BHAISHRI 5 KHUSHALBHAI, 2

I received your letter. I was very pleased.

Please do write to Ramdas and tell him whatever you think he ought to do. I believe khadi work to be both a business and a form of national service. When the use of khadi has become widespread, the very men who have now taken possession of the Mulji Jetha Market 3 and send crores of rupees abroad and make profits of lakhs for themselves, will compensate the thirty-three crores of Gods of India 4 to the tune of crores of rupees and retain lakhs for themselves. And, in

1 In the Mysore state. Gandhiji was resting here after he had a mild stroke in the last week of March of 1927.
2 Gandhiji’s cousin, father of Gandhiji’s nephews Chhaganlal, Maganlal and Narandas who helped him in his numerous other activities. The figure ‘5’ in old style letters expressed reverence for the person addressed.
3 A busy cloth trade centre in Bombay
4 That is, the people of India whom Gandhiji regarded as the Gods of ancient Indian mythology this way, both the Gods and the cloth merchants will prosper. Today, these cloth merchants are making their profits, as they believe them to be, at the expense of the Gods. I do wish that Ramdas, and to the extent possible Nimu, should take full part in helping the change that is currently taking place in cloth trade, transforming it from an immoral trade into a moral one. But that wish is of secondary importance to me. The more important thing is the freedom of Ramdas and Nimu. I myself am content telling them what I think, and will be satisfied with whatever course of action they adopt. You have as much right as I naturally have to take a share in promoting their good. You are as much in place of a respected elder to them as I am. I, therefore, wish that you should guide them. It is your right and also your duty to do so. It would of course be very good if we both held the same views. But I would see no harm even if our views differed. Sincerely held differences of views conduce to our good. I hold that we harm each other’s good by suppressing our views out of false regard for each other. Therefore, please do tell Ramdas whatever you think.

I was glad to learn from your letter that Chi. Navin is now coming round to the right path.

Jai Shrikrishna from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

405. LETTER TO MULCHAND AGRAWAL

NANDI DURG,
Vaisakha Krishna 2 [May 18, 1927]

BHAI MOOLCHANDJI,

I have your letter. You have started khadi work, for which I thank you. Nowadays owing to my illness, Jamnalalji is handling the work of the Charkha Sangh. I shall pass your letter to him. He is due here in a day or two.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 761

1 The reference is to Bhagavad Gita. Chapter III, verses 10 and 11, in which Shri Krishna says that Brahma created the people to nourish the Gods through such offerings, the Gods in turn nourishing peoples so that both might prosper.
I see an Associated Press telegram in the papers, in which Mr. Manchershah Awari is reported to have said, that he had my consent and full sympathy for his movement of civil disobedience with regard to the Arms Act and the Explosive Substances Act, designed for the release of the Bengal detenus.

If my recollection is correct, either the Associated Press representative has misunderstood Mr. Awari, or the latter has misunderstood me. I have no recollection of having given my consent in advance to Mr. Awari’s proposed launching out on civil disobedience in any connection whatsoever. It is really contrary to my practice to give such consent in advance. I did discuss the theory of civil disobedience with Mr. Awari, for whose patriotic spirit and self-sacrifice I have great regard. I drew his attention to the grave limitations of civil disobedience. He spoke, and rightly, with great warmth and concern about the Bengal detenus, and I remember having said, that if some movement in the shape of civil disobedience could be conceived and successfully launched, it would be a great thing. I hold that view even at the present moment. For I regard the indefinite detention of the Bengal patriots without any trial of any sort as a grave injustice. And if I have remained dumb, it is not because I do not feel the wrong as keenly as the closest friends of the detenus, but because I do not desire to make a fruitless exhibition of my powerlessness. A public worker has to learn to endure with fortitude what he cannot cure. And bedridden though I am, if I could think of any feasible civil plan for securing the release of these prisoners, I should embark upon it without the slightest hesitation. But I confess that I have none in view. My own personal opinion is that there is no atmosphere in the country for civil disobedience. We have fallen upon evil times. The atmosphere today is one not of non-violent disobedience but of very violent and suicidal disobedience.

I have no knowledge whatsoever of what is being done in Nagpur. I can pronounce no judgment upon Mr. Awari’s movement. I have given no consent for the movement. I had intended to say not one word about the movement, and it would have been well if Mr. Awari had not dragged in my name. If he thought that his movement had my consent, he should have laid the whole of his plan in a concrete form before me and secured it in writing. If I had approved of it and if I could not have taken an active part myself, I would at least have backed it with all the force at my command through these columns. He must now thank himself if my disclaimer harms his movement in any way.

And let it be a warning in future to everyone concerned against using my name in connection with any movement without my previous consent in writing. Indeed it is necessary for workers to become self-reliant and dare to prosecute their plans if they so desire without hankering after the backing of names of persons supposed to be great and influential. Let them rely upon the strength of their own conviction and the cause they seek to espouse. Mistakes there will be. Suffering even avoidable there must be. But nations are not easily made. There will have to be rigid and iron discipline before we achieve anything great and enduring, and that discipline will not come by mere academic argument and appeal to reason and logic. Discipline is learnt in the school of adversity. And when zealous young men will train themselves to responsible work without any shield, they will learn what responsibility and discipline are. And out of this army of candidate leaders, will arise one real leader, who will not have to plead for obedience and discipline but who will command it as a matter of course, because he will have been tried in many a skirmish and will have proved his right to undisputed leadership.

Young India, 19-5-1927

407. HORRIBLE PRACTICES

Mr. Andrews in the course of a letter from Durban says:¹

I know the temple at Umbilo, which may really be called a suburb of Durban. Even years ago, when the temple was erected, I had my misgivings. Bitter experience has taught me that all temples are not houses of God. They can be habitations of the devil. These places of worship have no value unless the keeper is a good man of God. Temples, mosques, churches are what man makes them to be. I am therefore not surprised at the painful and horribly superstitious practices going on in this so-called temple. The origin of these practices is easy enough to trace. There are three classes of Indians in South Africa. The free Indian trader has nothing to do with these practices.

¹ Not reproduced here. The correspondent had referred to the evil practices of self-torture like “fire-walking” festivals by Indians at Umbilo temple and to a page of pictures of such things in The Natal Advertiser.
Nor have the large number of Colonial-born Indians who have received in the face of terrible odds a tolerably liberal education. The third class is the indentured Indian, now become free. He is drawn naturally from the poorest class here. Nothing has ever been done by the Government or the employers or by the free Indian community to help these unfortunate men and women out of their ignorance and superstition. The result is that they are preyed upon by superstitious and even evil-minded men who pose as priests and holy men. They mutter a few Sanskrit verses whose meaning they do not know and which they horribly mispronounce, and resort to all kinds of awe-inspiring practices. And what can be better than a temple, where simple people congregate and where every kind of superstition derives a halo from associations attributed to temples? I think that the common law of South Africa is wide enough to deal with these practices if the Government desires to put them down.

The fact is, unfortunately, that the prejudice against Indians in South Africa is not ascribable to these practices, nor is it directed against the men who are victims of this barbarism. It is directed chiefly against the free trading class who have nothing to do with these practices. And therefore these practices have gone without any notice or comment. And if they are now being noticed, it is in order to prejudice the European mind against the Habibullah Agreement and against what little relief is sought to be given by it to the Indian settlers. It should also be borne in mind that these practices are by no means common amongst Indians throughout South Africa. They are confined only to the part of the coast of Natal where indentured Indians are to be found in their largest numbers. If therefore the Government intend to put these practices down, they can do so under the common law with ease, and they can be dealt with also through municipal bye-laws. I am sure, that if action is taken, not a voice will be raised against it in the name of religion falsely so called for sheltering these practices. No cultured Indian will have anything to do with them, and the ignorant people who witness these tortures with awe will not dare to defend them in a court of law. What we can do here is to encourage cultured Indians in South Africa to fight the superstition. They should, without seeking Government intervention, work in the midst of the poor people, and wean them from these barbarisms, and advise them to help the Government, if they choose to prosecute those who take part in those practices, thus showing their desire not to reproduce in South Africa all that is bad in our life, but to reproduce only that which is good in our civilization. It is our duty to advise and encourage our countrymen in South Africa to do nothing that will give a handle to the agitation against them.

Young India, 19-5-1927

408. LETTER TO SATCOWRIPATI RAY

NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE),
May 19, 1927

DEAR SATCOWRI BABU,

I got your letter day before yesterday after that day’s mail was closed. I could not possibly over-take your letter yesterday.

You have my deepest sympathy with you in your troubles. But I have much fear it is out of my power to help you in the direction desired by you. All the same please let me have a full description of your property, where it is situated, what is its extent, whether there are any buildings on it and if there are, their dimensions. Possession of this information will be useful for me. But your case is not out of the ordinary, I know many who are passing through the same difficulty. It is also one of the things we have to go through in our march towards our goal. And I want you to bear your troubles with philosophic calmness as I know you will do.

But why do you say insolvency is not to be thought of? Honest insolvency is no crime if a borrower [borrows] in good faith for investing in a prosperous enterprise. Suppose that through no fault of my own the enterprise fails and the loaner knew that I had no other means of repayment. Surely if he is impatient, insolvency is the only honourable course left open for me even if I desired as I should to repay the loan in spite of insolvency. For, insolvency would be the only way of my doing further business. As a lawyer you know the genesis of insolvency law. It was created to protect honest but unlucky enterprise and to encourage trade and enterprise. No doubt the golden rule is not to borrow. But so few of us follow the golden rule. The next best therefore is not to accept a defeat but to seek the protection of the insolvency court and open a new leaf, and if successful, in the next enterprise, repay of one’s own free will the original loaner. There are such celebrated instances of men having deliberately become insolvent and then repaid their creditors. In my own practice, I advised one of my nearest clients, who because he had taken part in the satyagraha movement, was forced into the insolvency court. I called a meeting of the debtors. They were unbending. I challenged them to do their worst. The consequence was insolvency. But after the insolvency, the client paid the creditors in full to their agreeable astonishment. They apologized and they showed their sincerity by giving him afterwards unlimited credit which they had no occasion to regret. I therefore strongly advise you to meet the creditors, place the position frankly and fearlessly before them and tell them that you will repay if you earned. If they don’t listen, let them make you insolvent, or if the insolvency law here admits of voluntary surrender you may even surrender voluntarily. Then you will have breathing time and then if you do not want to resume practice, you will join the Khadi Service. Khadi Service will never give you Rs. 25,000. But if the movement goes forward with a leap, khadi will become a commercial proposition, and when it does become that, there will be a moderate amount of money in it also. This may seem to be all far-fetched; not so to me. I regard khadi as a far sounder proposition even from a commercial standpoint than the least that can be made by our merchant princes. After all sound commerce is of slow growth. But my confidence in khadi is such that, though it is of slow growth, in the long run, it will prove to be the shortest route to healthy commercial prosperity of individuals as it certainly will be of the nation.

I do not want you to succumb therefore under the influence of false pride or a false sense of honour. I want you to be a pattern for others, and therefore please follow my advice and get rid of the burden which is evidently bearing you down. Then make a firm resolution not to borrow a single farthing henceforth. Public workers must not borrow. And insist upon your numerous family dependants to work for their livelihood and let them all work for khadi, and if they don’t want to do that, the male members may make their own choice; females may grumble but will submit to the inevitable. This regulation of family obligations is also a necessary corollary to national uplift. We must break through this family crust if we are to grow to our national height. These falsely assumed obligations I know are hampering the progress of individuals and the nation in a way very few things are doing. It is wrong, I almost want to say immoral, to support men and women who have some capacity for work. Even a rich nation, if it made' an attempt to support one half of its members without taking any work from them, it will go to the dogs. But we are doing infinitely worse and still expect to become a strong, self-relying and self-respecting nation; it is an impossible proposition.

---

1 A. M. Kachhallia; vide “Representation at Meeting of Chachalia’s Creditors” 22-1-1909.

Do let me know your final decision and do not hesitate to write to me as often as you like. It will be a terrible thing if you are lost to public work.

Yours sincerely,

SATCOWRIpatI Ray, EsQ.
27, Kalidas Patitundu Lane
Kalighat
Calcutta

From a photostat: S.N. 12579

409. LETTER TO S. SRINIVASa AIYENGAR

NANDI HILLS,
May 19, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I must dictate in order to conserve my energy.

I appreciate your considerate telegram. I haven’t enthused over it because of the wretched atmosphere about us. Our best resolutions come to naught because we seem to have lost the power of taking the people with us. Of what use will be our resolutions if the people continue savagely to break one another’s heads? But I have said of you that where others have failed, you may owing to your invincible faith succeed. I wish therefore all strength to your elbow and shall rejoice if you succeed in putting an end to this disgraceful civil war and make men out of beasts that we have become at present.

I am making steady progress and trying to follow your movements as carefully as I can.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,

SIT. S. SRINIVASa AIYENGAR
Mylapore

From a photostat: S.N. 14124

---

1 The source has “Even rich nations if they made”.
2 Reporting a unanimous resolution on Hindu-Muslim question by the A.I.C.C. on May 15 and 16 at Bombay
410. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakha Krishna 3 [May 19, 1927]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

You write it would be better if Manibehn stayed [at the Ashram] instead of going over to Karachi. God alone knows whether or not she would have the opportunity to go. But if she is not to go there, still she has to be sent out somewhere because I wonder if she has yet developed any attachment to the Ashram. The girl is extremely candid and honest; so wherever she is, she is sure to do the work, but it is for you all to create in her affection and interest. Do keep her there if you can. And if this is possible [for the time being], I need not arrange to send her elsewhere. I would let the [chance] at Karachi materialize if it is to happen. But She can also be called back from there after a short period. I am [glad] that the [Ashram] women have [taken up] the mess. Please congratulate them all and tell them that they must fulfil with credit what they have undertaken.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9187. Courtesy: Chhaganlal Gandhi

411. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakha Krishna 3 [May 19, 1927]²

BHAISHRI PULCHAND,

Your letter. It has always been my view that we should on no account bring in the British Government to mediate in the affairs of the native States. But we cannot say that this principle is to be followed on every occasion, because as I expect a man who would neither ask for nor want the mediation of the British to possess the strength to resist oppression peaceably or otherwise or acquire the capacity to suffer it silently. But a man who is unable to fight, who cannot put up with oppression and either enlists the aid of the British or loses his manhood by abject submission to oppression should certainly seek the help of the British.

¹ Year inferred from contents
² ibid

According to my concept of the Kathiawar Political Conference, there is no question of seeking British help; and hence if it works in accordance with my idea, it would consist of only the simple unsophisticated people offering non-co-operation and satyagraha and wearing only khadi.¹

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2854. Courtesy: Sharadabehn Shah

412. LETTER TO SHAPURJI SAKLATVALA

_NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE),_
_May 20, 1927_

Here is an extract from Pandit Motilalji’s letter in answer to mine. Please tell me what you would have me to do further in the matter.

_Yours sincerely,_

Enclosure 1
SHAPURJI SAKLATVALA, M.P.
HOUSE OF COMMONS
LONDON S.W. 1
FROM DEAR FRIEND.

From a Photostat : S. N. 12504

¹ Vide also “Letter to Fulchand K. Shah”, 11-5-1927.
413. A LETTER

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹
May 20, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. Besides the writings mentioned by you, there is a monograph by the late Rev. Joseph Doke, also by Dr. P. J. Mehta, and by H. S. L. Polak besides other writings collected by G. A. Natesan and copies of Young India since 1922, and my booklet called Indian Home Rule². Most of these publications I think can be secured from G. A. Natesan of the Indian Review, Madras. Young India is edited by me and is published at Ahmedabad. Ethical Religion is not an original book. It is a translation of an adaptation in Gujarati of an American publication called Ethics of Religion by Salter which I read years ago. In its translated form I have not read it. It will be therefore risky to derive a knowledge of my belief through that book. If you desire any further information, you will [not] hesitate, please ask for it.

I thank you for your enquiry about my health which is steadily improving.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14125

414. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakha Krishna 4 [May 20, 1927]

CHI. VASUMATI,

Your letter. Even if you have nothing to write, you will not be excused from writing once a week. At least I can certainly hope to see the improvement in your handwriting. And if you find nothing to write, just say what you did on that day (or on the previous day).

Blessings from

BAPU

VASUMATI DHIMATRAM NAVALRAM PANDIT
KELAPITH

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 474. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

¹ Permanent address
² Vide “hind Swaraj”, 22-11-1909.
415. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Friday, May 20, 1927

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

I have your letter. You will have got copies of my letters to Saklatwala.

I certainly like the idea of opening a school for Antyaja girls and I know very well that you have stayed back only for that reason.

My health is picking up. I have increased the duration of my walks. I have begun taking a little bread and butter. I have given up one fruit and instead introduced some green vegetable in my diet. I shall observe the result.

Jamnalal and Rajendrababu arrived here today.

Look after your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32823

416. LETTER TO GEORGES MIGNON

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹

May 21, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you.

You may publish in your magazine the chapters of my writings called “My Experiments with Truth”. Their rights of publication in book form in French have already been given to M. Emil Roniger. You will please therefore confine your translation to its publication in your magazine. I take it you will kindly send me copies of your magazine that may contain the translation from time to time.

Yours sincerely,

M. GEORGES MIGNON
EDITOR OF “EXTREME-ASIE”
SAIGON

¹ Permanent address

From a photostat: S.N. 12505

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
417. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

NANDI HILLS,
May 21, 1927

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

I was grieved to hear of your illness. I hope you will soon recover. Why not come here to regain your strength? The climate here as you know is very nice.

Somehow or other the resolution of the A.I.C.C. does not fill me with immediate hope, much less, enthusiasm. The hope deep down which is born of implicit faith is there. But it receives no added impulse from the resolution. For, I feel the few who have a detached mind and who are keeping their heads cool, can produce at present no impression upon those who are fighting or those who are at the back of the fighters. I don’t know if you think that you have any influence. I see nothing but devilry going on under the garb of religion. Not until we learn to become men and therefore instead of breaking heads for the vindication of supposed rights, we learn to refer to arbitration matters even of attacks upon our rights supposed or real and until we cease to think of Government interference, shall we have real peace or real swaraj. Anything short of that gives me no satisfaction. My only hope therefore lies in prayer and answer to prayer.

Yours sincerely,

DR. M. A. ANSARI
1, DARYAGANJ
DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 14126

418. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

NANDI DURG,
May 21, 1927

CHI. MANI,

I have your letter.

You have surely heard the song with this first line “Never give up, even if you lose your life”. That is to say, we may lose our life but never lose heart. And where is the sense in admitting defeat as regards spinning, for instance, and writing a good hand, especially when I am by your side to encourage you? “Stone upon stone a dam is built and drop by drop the lake filled up.” Nothing is impossible for the industrious. So do not lose heart. By regular spinning you are sure to increase your speed and you will improve your hand by constant practice in writing clear and bold letters. I know of a great many people who have thus improved their handwriting. You have done well in taking up the work of the Ashram stores. Now do not give it up but do it perfectly. Never mind if you don’t have to keep accounts, but you should acquaint yourself with the general principles. If this work takes up so much of your time that you cannot spin for two hours every day, you may spin for a shorter period but with concentration. It is better to spin for a short time with application than to spin longer and impatiently; for you will thus spin stronger and more uniform yarn and that too faster.

1 On Hindu-Muslim unity; vide “Letter to S. Srinivasa Aiyengar”, 19-5-1927

VOL. 38 : 2 JANUARY, 1927 - 3 JUNE, 1927 413

Do keep me informed about Gangadevi.

Yours,

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—Manibehn Patelne, p. 62

419. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

NANDI DURG,
May 21, 1927

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I have read your letter to Jamnalal and also those to Chhaganlal. I understand about Ramachandra and Ganesh. Do what all of you think proper.

It occurs to me that there is one thing I should write to you about. Ramachandra and Ganesh are both good and honest persons. Such persons should be retained if possible. But while they are retained, we must be firm with them as well as gentle. We should not have the slightest hesitation in pointing out their faults. That is what I mean by firmness. You must frankly tell Ramachandra: ‘You exaggerate. You are hasty and hot-tempered and never willing to see your own faults. You can stay here only by recognizing those faults and overcoming them. It is no use appealing to Gandhi, because he has delegated all powers to us.’ If he stays on even after such frank talk, he should be allowed to stay and if he wishes to go, he should be allowed to go, whatever the inconvenience caused thereby. You must also tell Ganesh frankly: ‘We suspect that you do not wish to teach the others the craft you know. We can carry on only if you teach others and train them. If not, you are free to go. But we shall not drive you away if you should wish to continue here even after you have trained somebody. You will continue to receive the help you are having today. We want you to stay. But you can stay only on our conditions.’ In other words, firmness lies in telling a person what we think about him. We should be gentle in conveying this and it should not be an expression of hasty judgment. Gentleness also means an effort to see whatever good may be seen in a fault. But ultimately, we can proceed correctly and carry on our work only when we have fully expressed our view about a fault of which we are convinced. Then alone can we consider ourselves true satyagrahis. I see that relations among people are not smooth. At present there is hesitation in frankly expressing our views on the faults of others which are clear to us. If that veil of hesitation is removed, much of the work can become easy. This is intended only by way of guidance.

I am returning the letter from Ramachandra in case it is of use to you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Museum and Sangrahalaya

420. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

NANDI DURG,
Vaisakha Krishna 5 [May 21, 1927]

BHAI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

Jamnalalji is here since a couple of days ago. He has conveyed your message to me. I can think of nothing further to write to you than what I have already done. Regarding an audience with the Emperor I think you should not try for one. You should not, however, refuse it if the Secretary of State for India or the Prime Minister proposes to arrange it. As far as I know I think political matters are not discussed with the British Monarch. Only formal greetings are exchanged. Do meet the ministers and talk with them whatever you want to. Observe closely the British jails and also visit the poorer districts of London with some knowledgeable person and study the condition of the poor. Once or twice, on a Saturday evening, stand near the pubs of the poor and the bars of the rich and watch their doings.

I am improving day by day.

I wrote to pujya Malaviyaji long ago. I expect no reply from him as answering letters is contrary to his nature. But he does send a telegram in reply to one. I am going to write to him again all the same.

I hope you are well.

Yours,

M OHANDAS

From the Hindi original: C.W. 6147. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

421. HE SHOULD BE DISMISSED

I have now got the name and the address of the doctor, the account of whose inhuman treatment of an Antyaja woman was given to us by Shri Amritlal Thakkar.¹ Now an inquiry is being made into the case and in the mean time I do not see any necessity of disclosing his identity. A well-known doctor friend writes :²

My reason for publishing this letter is that the inhuman treatment of the Antyaja woman was such as no one can possibly condone. I do not believe that if the doctor is a private practitioner, the only alternatives before us are to grieve over the incident in helpless silence, if we wish to follow the path of non-violence, or, if not, give the doctor a thrashing. A thrashing is not likely to make the doctor change his ways. Antyaja brethren will not benefit in any way, and we will probably fail either to do justice to the doctor or win redress for the cruel ill-treatment of the woman. One who follows non-violence need not feel helpless. The path of non-violence is neither for the coward nor for the stupid. It is for those who are ever

¹ Vide “Man’s Inhumanity to Man”, 5-5-1927.
² The letter is not translated here.
vigilant. The law of violence concerns the body and its requirements, while the law of non-violence appeals to the heart. Through non-violence we can arouse religious consciousness among the people, which means cultivating bold and true public opinion. If the true spirit of compassion were alive in the village in which this incident occurred, such cruelty would never have been possible. The poor doctor was only an agent. The spirit of cruelty was in the atmosphere and that is why he had the courage to demand two rupees in advance and, though he got the money, felt afraid that he would be polluted by touching the Antyaja woman, even for treating her. It is the duty of men who follow the path of non-violence to be always vigilant and educate public opinion so as to create an atmosphere in which men like the doctor would find no encouragement for the evil in them.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 22-5-1927

422. THE COW AND THE BUFFALO

A votary of non-violence writes:¹

When writing the article on the cow and the buffalo, I had assumed that no clarification was called for about the matter of swaraj to the buffalo. When we domesticate an animal, we deprive it of its freedom, however good our intention in domesticating it may be. Hundreds of Englishmen feel happy in the belief that they rule India with a good motive and, even if we reject that rule, they think us to be fools and do not relinquish what they consider to be their duty of ruling over us. But if a judge were appointed between us, this statement by us would suffice: ‘How can these self-appointed protectors of ours understand our sufferings. Only the All-seeing God and we ourselves know them. And we of course say that our good lies in being released from our bondage.’ Similarly, if the buffalo could speak and if an impartial judge were appointed between her and us and the buffalo entered a similar plea, and I do believe she would do so—the verdict would be in her favour. And so I said that by giving up our fancy for rearing buffaloes, we would not be forsaking her, that is, would not be doing her any harm, but would be granting her freedom. There is no question in this of our disowning an accepted responsibility. We must accept responsibility for those buffaloes which we have reared, but, if I am right in my view, no duty like that which we have accepted in regard to the cow, of adopting ways and means of increasing and improving the progeny of the cow, devolves upon us in regard to the buffalo. Hence it is not necessary to regard the protection of the buffalo as included in our special duty of cow-protection. If people accept my suggestion, it will naturally be our duty to collect together all the buffaloes we have reared in regions where the cow and the bullock cannot, but only the buffalo can be maintained, and provide for the protection of her male progeny as well.

¹ The letter is not translated here. Referring to Gandhiji’s article “Cow V. Buffalo or Cow-cum-Buffalo?”, 8-5-1927, the correspondent had asked what Gandhiji had meant by granting swaraj to the buffalo.

It was not my intention to suggest that there should be separate dairies and tanneries for villages, but the fact is that in the existing circumstances, it is only after making experiments in the cities that we can take to villages the science of cattle-rearing, of extracting the maximum quantity of milk from the cow without torturing her, and that of tanning her hide and so on. Such is our pitiable condition at present. In these days, when village pasture lands have disappeared and oilcake, hay, etc., have become dear, the villagers maintain their cattle with great difficulty. We rest content with whatever use the illiterate tanner can make of the hide. The bones, etc., are wasted. As a consequence, this living wealth perishes and, if the cattle do not die, they live on as skeletons, often become a burden to the owner and in the end, land in slaughter-houses in Bombay and other cities. I know that, in these circumstances, important changes need to be adopted, but I am at present unable to say how to bring them about, what methods we should adopt from the West, and so on. This whole thing is at the moment in an experimental stage. If I have been able to explain what needs to be done, it is for every individual worker to experiment on his own and discover how to do it. There was a time when appropriate changes could be effected in our civilization and people accepted the need for such changes. As long as these conditions of progress were accepted, so long, we can say, our civilization was living. Now we believe that whatever is written in a book which is published as a Shastra and which finds its way into our hands is the Lord’s word and cannot be altered in any way. We must get out of this horrible mental death. We can see with our own eyes that there have been changes in our ways of thought and life in every age. Accepting this truth, cultured workers should enter the villages with confidence in themselves. It is necessary for all of them to accept certain general principles; there will be differences in the methods of implementing them. That is inevitable and should be welcomed. From that we shall find the best ways of implementing those principles. From this point of view, the question whether we should introduce Western machines and, if so, to what extent, becomes secondary. The general principle is that we should produce or make whatever we can in the villages themselves, and while we can do with the indigenous razor, should not bother to introduce the German Krupp razor because it is regarded as superior. If, however, we cannot make the sewing needle in the village, we should not set our face against the easily available and cheap needle from Austria. I see nothing wrong in accepting from any quarter whatever is good and is worth accepting and which we can assimilate.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 22-5-1927

423. LETTER TO ISABEL BAMLET

NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE),
May 22, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. When I say the problem is not so simple as it appears to you, I mean two things. It is not enough merely to take the name of God or believe in this thing or the other or even in this man or the other; but it is necessary ever to wait upon God and find out what His will is. I have found this to be a most difficult, though very agreeable, task. It is often a question, and a very delicate one, when what we may consider to be His will is really His and not ours. Thus we come to what St. Paul has said: “Work out your own salvation.”

The second difficulty is that all religions have more or less similar formulae, and all have produced, and continue to produce, good, true and godfearing men and women.

In the circumstances, it is not a simple matter for a humble student of all the faiths of the world to find out by prayer which is the truest religion. But it is not difficult to say, as I do say, that all religions are more or less God-given and that therefore one must work out one’s own salvation in the religion of one’s own forefathers; for, a 1 Vide “Letter to Isabel Bamlet”, 10-5-1927.

seeker after Truth finds out that all religions melt and become one in God Who is one and the same for all His creatures.

I shall bear your caution in mind if I write anything in Young India. I shall certainly not make use of your name.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

MRS. ISABEL BAMLET
C/O THE BRISTOL HOTEL
CALCUTTA

From a photostat: C.W. 4442. Courtesy: Carlisle Bamlet

424. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

NANDI HILLS,
May 22, 1927

MY DEAR BHRRR AND PROUD FATHER,

I must dictate this although it is a love letter, as I better conserve my energy if I dictate stretched on my bed. There is nothing however to be concerned about my health, as I am making steady progress though it will be some time before I regain the strength that I lost in the twinkling of an eye. It may not be possible to regain all that I have lost; but the doctors are of opinion that much of it, it is perfectly possible to get back.

Please give my congratulations to Sohaila and Professor Muhammed Habib. Though I cannot be with you in the body, I shall be with you in the spirit. I wish them both a happy life of useful service to the country. Sohaila must remember that she is not going to be married to become a mere doll and become lost to the country. But she would be expected, like her grey-headed young father, who is daily getting younger, to serve the country with the same devotion that her young father is doing; and if her husband is at all lukewarm, to touch him with her spirit and make him joint partner in such service, as he would be joint partner in all the joys and sorrows of life. It is no use my even wishing that there should be no sorrow and all joy. It would be a flat and dull picture without any beautiful shades. There may be joys but they must be relieved by occasional sorrows. So my wish and hope is that God will give them a fair measure of joys of life if He must also give them doses of sorrows to remind them that He is not to be forgotten in the midst of life’s joys.
I was wondering what you were doing and how you fared in Rangoon. You have kept me without a letter now for a very long time. I suppose it is all deliberate and out of considerateness for a bed-ridden friend. Raihana also has followed suit. But you should know that neither your letter nor hers can possibly be a tax on my energy.

Give my love to the bride and the bridegroom and all the friends and members of the family who may have gathered there to celebrate the coming event and accept the same for yourself and Mrs. Abbas.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DEAR MISS SCHLESIN,

As you know I am just now bed-ridden and I must therefore dictate my reply to your letter of the 20th April just received. It is difficult to recall what I wrote in all my letters to you. So far as my memory serves me, there is not a single letter of yours which has gone by without an acknowledgement. There are many compliments which I do not and cannot appropriate; but the one about my being a prompt correspondent, I can ever claim in spite of your different experience. For, everybody else of my acquaintance has paid me the compliment of being a prompt correspondent, that is of course comparatively to many others.

I have no letter of yours dated 4th January. But I have one dated 3rd January in my file. I do not think that I gave you, if I did at all, a detailed reply to that letter. It was received at the Ashram on the 3rd February. It was then redirected to me during my tour. Soon after, I became incapacitated.

Mr. Stanley Jones’s book¹ I read but only cursorily as during the tour I was able to do very little of reading. Indeed, it was not even possible for me to look at the many books that came to me. This I did

¹ Permanent address
² The Christ of the Indian Road
as it was accompanied by a letter from Mr. Stanley Jones whom I knew very well. I do not remember his suggestion and I have not his book by me.

I quite agree with you that karma and the cross may well go together. If you have followed the pages of Young India, you must have noticed that last year I read the New Testament every Saturday to the students of our National College. I did stumble over the words “without a cause”\(^1\), and in explaining it I simply rejected the thing as redundant. But I was agreeably surprised on turning to Moffat’s and Weymouth’s translations which I had by me to make the discovery that you made. In reading all religious works, I have learnt one thing. Never to take them literally, but understand the drift and catch the drift also by means of what is to me an infallible canon of interpretation, and reject those which cannot stand the test of Truth and Ahimsa. I know that even in spite of this canon of interpretation difficulties do arise; but they are solved if one has patience and if one has a living faith in God.

I am sending your letter to Mr. Jones as I have no doubt he will like to see your argument. I am not likely to meet him in the near future as I shall be for some months still in the South. Your letters should be addressed to the Ashram as usual.

The autobiography is not yet complete. Ganesan cannot send you a copy of the autobiography. The three parts that have been completed are in course of publication in book form. But for the present, you have to rely upon the numbers of Young India which contain the chapters to date. You may borrow the volumes from Manilal or you should wait till the three parts are published in book form. You may know that before I commenced the autobiography I finished the history of the South African Passive Resistance. The original is in Gujarati. Its translation is now being published in instalments by Ganesan. I am afraid it will be some time before the whole history is available in English.

Do see Mr. Sastri, India’s first Agent for South Africa. He is an extremely fine man. As you know he is Gokhale’s successor. He knows all about you and is himself eager to see you.

\(^1\) St. Matthew, v. 22. The words found in the Authorized Version are omitted in the Revised and later versions.
I am getting better. Of those you know Mrs. Gandhi and Devdas are with me.

Yours sincerely,

MISS SCHLESIN
BOX 2284
JOHANNESBURG
(SOUTH AFRICA)

From a photostat: S.N. 12353

426. LETTER TO REV. STANLEY JONES

NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE),
May 22, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Here is a letter from Miss Schlesin, a dear friend in South Africa. You will be interested in it. Please return it after perusal.

I must ask you to tell Mrs. Jones again that the pamphlet addressed to boys and girls on purity of life is still being hatched in my mind and I have not despaired of being able to write out something or rather dictate something from this sick-bed.

I am now gradually regaining the lost strength.

Yours sincerely

Enclosure 1

REV. STANLEY JONES
SITAPUR, U.P.

From a photostat: S.N. 14127

427. LETTER TO DEVESHVAR SIDDHANTALANKAR

NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE),
May 22, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have carefully preserved your letter of 29th January in the hope some day of being able to write to you. It was received during my tour and I was not able to read the cuttings till during the last three days. Lying on my sick-bed I have been gradually overtaking my correspondence and I have now gone through the cuttings. They are valuable. In some places your translation does not do justice to the original. But the pains you have taken to be just leads me to hope that the mistake is due to inadvertence.
The extracts you have collected certainly makes one sink. I am not a critical student of religious books including the Koran. I have read these books with sympathy and with a view to deriving religious consolation. The effect therefore produced upon your mind by the passages collected by you was naturally not produced upon my mind. The commentary you have given upon the text, “there should be no violence in religion,” is quite new to me and gives a different meaning from the one which the text bears without the commentary. I would however like to consult Mussalman friends about it. But after all the careful thought I have given to the passages extracted by you, I adhere to the conclusion that Islam is not a religion of the sword; but it is like all other great religions a religion of peace. I say so for this reason. I have met numerous Mussalmand who no more think of slaying men of different faiths than you or I do. And these Mussalmand are by no means scoffers. They are devout followers of their faith. The long line of Sufis whose veneration for the Koran cannot be questioned owe their illuminating philosophy of peace and love to the Koran. I have read Maulana Shibli’s \textit{Life of the Prophet} as also portions of his Al \textit{Kalam}. I have read also his \textit{Leaves from the Lives of the Companions of the Prophet}. The sum-total of the impression left on my mind by these writings is of an elevating character. I hope you do not wish to suggest that Maulana Shibli and such other writers on Islam have written what they did not believe and in order to throw dust in the eyes of others. All this does not however mean that I regard the life of the Prophet to have been perfect or that the Koran itself is a perfect book. Like all other religious books including our own, there are passages which cause difficulty. But the difficulties caused in reading the Koran are not greater than those caused by reading books of other faiths. Christianity, I surmise, admittedly is a religion of peace; but the Old Testament which is part of Christian teaching is full of blood and thunder, and the history of early Christianity is also by no means creditable to the Christians.

You ask me to quote from the Vedas passages alike to those in the Koran. You have yourself admitted the reference to the \textit{dasyus}. The gloss you put upon the passages relating to \textit{dasyus} may be quite all right; but that is precisely how sympathetic commentators of the Koran explain similar passages. \textit{Dasyus} do not consider themselves to be wicked.

\footnote{The source has “my”.
}
Everybody justifies his description of practices by imputing wickedness to those whom he distrusts. General Dyer himself surely believed that English men and women were in danger of losing their lives if he did not take the measures he did. We who know better call it an act of cruelty and vengeance. But from General Dyer’s own standpoint, he is justified. Many Hindus sincerely believe that it is a proper thing to kill a man who wants to kill a cow and he will quote scripture for his defence and many other Hindus will be found to justify his action. But strangers who do not accept the sacredness of the cow will hold it to be preposterous to kill a human being for the sake of slaying an animal. Guru Nanak who undoubtedly read the Koran and is reported even to have gone to Mecca, returned with lofty regard for Islam. Kabir did likewise. So did Dadu. I cannot therefore help thinking that it is a fruitless and undesirable effort to show that the Koran is a wicked book and that followers of the Koran are still more so. I suggest that the better method is to find out the good points and the beauties of these writings which have transformed the lives of those who have believed in them. It is unsafe and even dangerous to judge Islam and Mussalmans by the conduct of many of those who are misrepresented here in India and then to seek to ascribe their conduct to the teachings of the Koran. In order to defend the general trend of the Koran in favour of peace I am not required to disprove any atrocity by a single Mussalman or to explain away the few misdeeds that I see going on before me. But my liberal estimate of the Koran thus enables me to extend to the Mussalmans the justice that I would have extended to fellow-Hindus. It is an easier task to sympathize with the different religions of the world than to pick up one and seek to prove it as the only true religion and then set about demolishing all the rest.

I have entered into a long reply to your letter because I believe you to be a seeker after Truth. If you want any further explanation from me, I shall gladly give it.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DEVESHWAR SIDDHANTALANKAR
NAINI (U.P.)

From a microfilm: S.N. 12383

1 The source has “to kill men who want to kill a cow”.
2 1469-1538; religious reformer and founder of Sikhism
3 Mystic poet and saint of medieval India; disciple of Ramananda
428. LETTER TO NARMADA

NANDI DURG,

Vaishakha Krishna 6 (May 22, 1927)

CHI. NARMADA,

I had replied to your letter but I had sent it to your school address because I did not know your full name and address. You must have received that letter.

I did not know you were to be married so soon. I hope you would continue your studies and that you would not give up the noble patriotic feelings that you had expressed to me and also conveyed through your letter and that your husband would let you cherish them. Never give up khadi and the spinning wheel....

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4755

429. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 23, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

Throughout the week I have not written to you though I have received more than one letter from you. And for the most part for the present I propose not to write more than once per week. I want to conserve my energy for the work for Young India, Navajivan and Gita. I am doing now at least five times as much as I used to on the Gita. I want if possible to finish the translation before the end of August. And during this rest I would like to give more attention to Young India and Navajivan without feeling in any way responsible for filling the columns. But of course I shall write oftener if necessary or if you again have those moods returning. But you will not now.

I am so glad you resisted the bhang. It is as bad almost as liquor. In any case you will remember what I wrote\(^1\) over the betel leaf offered by Hakimji—never to eat a single thing without knowing it and its quality. In case of doubt always refrain and refer to me if you will.

\(^1\) Illegible

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
necessary. I understand from Jamnalalji to whom I mentioned the matter that Maharajji himself took it. Unfortunately many religiously-minded people take for feeling exalted. The exaltation is all false I know. However, you have done your duty by mentioning the thing to him. The things must take their own course now.

Jamnalalji showed me your Hindi letter to him. It was quite good. The writing was very good. J. leaves for Bombay tomorrow.

I am looking forward to your translation of Rolland’s letter to you.

I have resumed bread or bhakhari and a vegetable for the midday meal. Today is the fifth day. Nothing untoward so far. I am walking too, better.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.]

The accompanying for Gangu.

From the original: C.W. 5230. Courtesy: Mirabehn

430. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

NANDI,
Silence Day, Vaishakha Vad 7 [May 23, 1927]

SISTERS,

You have taken on yourselves the management of the store. I regard it as a great step forward. Now stick diligently to the work. God will help you to succeed. There are plenty of other such duties that you can undertake by which you can bring credit to the Ashram. But I am in no hurry about it. Since your minds are pure, you will gradually take up many new duties of your own accord. Concentrate for the present upon making the management of the store a complete success. Do not neglect even the smallest detail connected with it. You must of course learn how to keep accounts. Do not imagine that it is difficult. It is very easy to keep and understand accounts. Addition may be difficult. If one does not know the multiplication tables or addition, one would certainly experience some difficulty. But addition comes with practice. Learn addition, subtraction, multiplication and simple division, whichever it is that you do not know. All this does involves a little trouble, but once you have mastered these processes the rest is all very easy. If one has the will, one may even find it interesting.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3650

431. LETTER TO ASHRAM CHILDREN

Monday, May 23, 1927

Bal remembers that God was the first brahmachari. The idea seems extremely beautiful to me. A perfect brahmachari must be perfectly pure. Who else but God can be so? But we must try to become pure like Him. All Shastras proclaim that that is possible. There is nothing but joy in trying to become like Him. It is my experience that we do not get even one-tenth-millionth part of that joy from the things of this world which are supposed to give us pleasure. Hundreds of yogis have said the same thing from their experience. Have faith in their experience and try to observe brahmacharya to the best of your ability.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

432. LETTER TO RADHA

May 23, 1927

I was glad to know that you were not frightened by that lump of earth. It was good that it did not cause you any great hurt. But what even if it had? If at all, such a lump of earth will hurt only the body. The body is like a glass bangle. The glass bangle which is the human body is of no account whatever in the eternity of Brahman, as life of a glass bangle is of none in comparison with the human life-span of a hundred years. What does it matter if it perishes today or tomorrow, or if it develops a crack? The intellect grasps this idea very easily, but one will never know fear if it sinks into one’s heart. Such a person would never do wrong. He would oppress no one. We should return to this thought whenever faced with any danger, and, in order that it may come to us unfailingly at such times, we should constantly meditate on it.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

433. LETTER TO V. L. PHADKE

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakha Krishna 8 [May 24, 1927]

BHAISHRI MAMA,

I have your letter discussing the problem. It is well written indeed, but you will see that I have written no word about Surat and Baroda in Navajivan. There was a purpose in this. If I were to say that mischievous elements deliberately indulge in hooliganism that would have on them the opposite effect [to that intended]. I even go to the extent of believing that if the newspapers write nothing about the disturbances, they will subside by themselves. But not all newspapermen want it, so it will not come to be. But let those of us who know remain silent. Let those who want to fight do it. If we happen to be present there and feel like sacrificing ourselves and if we have the strength let us do it. That’s enough. And if we can sacrifice ourselves with a detached mind, let us be confident that its result will definitely be good.

If you ask for your article to be returned you can have it; I have, therefore, saved it till now. If I do not hear from you, I shall destroy it, after waiting for a while.

I am steadily improving.

Blessings from

BAPU

MAMASAHEB PHADKE
ANTYAJA ASHRAM
GODHRA

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3817
434. A PRAYER

May 24, 1927

Oh Lord! Give us the strength to follow what we sincerely believe to be dharma and while doing so to bear, with love and patience, people’s censure, abuse, assault, death, penury or any other evil.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

435. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE)

May 25, 1927

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL.

I had your letter whilst I was on the sick-list and unable to do much correspondence. I am still convalescing and am able to do only a moderate amount of work; but I am making steady progress.

You have been there a long time now; but I know you have not wasted it. I hope however that Kamala will become completely restored when you return. If her health requires a longer stay, I presume that you will remain there.

I read most carefully your public report as also your private confidential report about the doings of the Oppressed Nations’ Conference. I myself do not expect much from this league, if only because its free activity depends upon the goodwill of the powers that are partners in the exploitation of the oppressed nations and I feel that the members of the European nations that joined the league will not be able to sustain the last heat. For, they will not be able to accommodate themselves to what they would consider to be an injury to their self-interest. On our side there is danger of our people again looking to external forces and external aid for salvation instead of seeking to achieve it by evolving internal strength. But this is mere academic opinion. I am not at all carefully following European events. You are on the spot and you may see an altruistic improvement in the atmosphere there which I miss altogether.

1 In a letter to Chhaganlal Gandhi, Gandhiji advised him to say this at prayer-time every day.
There is some talk of your being chosen as President for the coming Congress. I am in correspondence with Father about it. The outlook here is not at all happy in spite of the unanimous resolution of the A.I.C.C. on the Hindu-Muslim question. I do not know whether the process of breaking heads will in any way be checked. We have lost hold upon the masses, and it seems to me that if you became President, you will be lost for one year at any rate to the masses. That, however, does not mean that Congress work has to be neglected. Someone has got to do it; but there are many who are willing and eager to do that work, maybe, due to mixed motives, even selfish motives; but they will keep the Congress going on somehow or other. The institution will always be, at their wish, at the disposal of those who may be qualified for mass work and may have gained control over the masses. The question then is how your services can be best utilized. What you yourself think, you should do. I know you are capable of taking a detached view and you will say quite unselfishly like Dadabhai or MacSwiney “put the crown on my head”, and I have no doubt that it will be so put. I do not myself see the way so clear as to make me force the crown on you and plead with you to wear it. Father will be writing to you also by this mail, if he has not done so already. I am sending a copy of this to him.

It might be as well for you to cable your wishes. I am likely to be in Bangalore till the end of July. You may therefore send your cable directly to Bangalore, or to be absolutely certain send it to the Ashram and it will be repeated to me wherever I may be.

With love to you all,

Yours,

M. K. Gandhi

From a photostat: S.N. 12572; also A Bunch of Old Letters, pp. 54-5

436. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

NANDI HILLS,
May 25, 1927

DEAR MOTILALJI,

Jamnalalji delivered your letter to me and he told me you were sending a long letter. Ever since the receipt of your first letter, I have been constantly thinking over the matter. The President is here and he broached the subject yesterday. I mentioned Jawaharlal’s name. He had not thought of it. He, however, preferred Ansari and I told him that if Dr. Ansari could be induced to accept the honour, there was an end to all talk about Jawaharlal and that I thought it would be good luck if Dr. Ansari could be induced to shoulder the burden. However, I have written to Jawaharlal and I send you a copy of my letter\(^1\) to him. It expresses my opinion to date. At first I thought I would let you send my letter so that you could stop it if you liked; but I then thought that after all there was no harm in my letter going to Jawaharlal before you had seen it. You could add whatever you liked to my letter so as to enable Jawaharlal to form a correct judgement.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14614

437. LETTER TO H. CLAYTON

NANDI HILLS,
May 25, 1927

DEAR MR. CLAYTON,

I am extremely grateful to you for your prompt and exhaustive reply to my letter of the 13th instant. I have carefully gone through the cutting from the Municipal Corporation Proceedings of 1918; but I see nothing wrong there to warrant the suggestion that I made any inquiry or that I made any report to the late Dr. Turner. As I was interested in everything connected with untouchability and as I was closely in touch with the Servants of India Society, so far as I recollect, I went with Mr. Thakkar at his instance to see the chawls and see the unfortunate people. On hearing that I had gone, Dr. Turner sent me a message and I gladly met him and told him what I had been doing in the chawls. You will not call this an inquiry by me or a report. If I had conducted an inquiry, it would have naturally taken a proper shape, I would have taken the evidence of men in writing, I would have seen the officials who were charged with corruption and made a proper written report. As it was, I happened to be in Bombay at the time in the course of my touring and Mr. Thakkar took me to the chawls as other people took me to many other places. I do not think that this

\(^1\) Vide the preceding item.
visit of mine and my conversation with Dr. Turner should for ever be used to damage Mr. Thakkar’s reputation as a careful investigator.
However, I want to turn this account to a useful purpose. I do not propose at this stage to say anything in the papers. But I am in correspondence with Mr. Thakkar. I am taking the liberty of sending a copy of your letter to him making suggestions to him so that this matter of alleged corruption might be once for all set at rest.

I quite agree with you that there should be no unfounded accusations made against anything or person and no general accusations made against the Corporation staff without adequate evidence to support them. With your permission, after finishing the correspondence with Mr. Thakkar, I hope to revert to the subject-matter of my letter.

Thanking you for your enquiry about myself. I am making fair progress and I shall certainly be delighted when I next pass through Bombay to meet you to revive the pleasant recollections of our meeting in Godhra.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 12911

438. LETTER TO TOTARAM SANADHYA

NANDI DURG,
Vaisakha Krishna 9 [May 25, 1927]

BHAI TOTARAM,

I have your letter. Now I understand the true nature of Gangadevi’s disease. Other things may well continue but she must be taken out. She cannot walk by herself. Therefore, either some boys should take her out in a chair for half an hour in the open air or even a wheel chair may be used. The wheel chair can be managed by one or two boys only. She can also lie down in it. Rest is imperative but so is open air. You should not hesitate to arrange for this. Ba seldom writes to anyone nor am I in the habit of mentioning her in my letters.
Nevertheless she always remembers everyone.

Gangadevi should take it that my blessings always include Ba’s.

I am very pleased by the fortitude shown by both of you and I know it is an example for all of us. May God grant you peace, as ever.
My health is improving.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2529

439. HIGHLY UNSATISFACTORY

I wish it was possible for me to tender the Government of Bengal congratulations upon the release of Sjt. Subhas Chandra Bose. The release has been granted, not because public opinion demanded it, not because Government considered the Chief Officer of the Calcutta Corporation to be guiltless, nor because they considered that he had been sufficiently punished for a crime of which neither he nor the public has any knowledge, but because their own medical officers considered the distinguished prisoner to be seriously ill, so seriously ill as to cause fear about his life. If Sjt. Subhas Chandra Bose is a danger to society or to the life of anybody, and if he is a man of determination as he is reputed to be and even believed by the Government to be, he is no less dangerous because he is seriously ill. Why should the Government be afraid of his dying in their prison? Surely it is not customary with them to release every prisoner who becomes dangerously ill. And if it was right to discharge him for his illness, why was he not discharged when he first showed signs of tuberculosis? Papers have been for a long time full of information about the alarming character of his disease. His brother repeatedly warned the Government about the prisoner’s illness.

It is, I venture to suggest cowardly to fling a dying man in the face of his relatives and wash oneself of the guilt of his death. This release brings us no nearer to the solution of the question of imprisonment or indefinite detention, without trial, of prisoners whom Government choose to suspect. The Bengal Regulation remains where it was. More or less healthy detenus must continue to rot, and are now deprived of the support of an agitation which was kept at a fairly high pitch because a powerful man was under detention. No doubt some sort of agitation will still continue for the release of the other detenus. But there is every fear of its lacking strength. Indian nature is grateful for the smallest mercies. It is easily satisfied. And the public will condone the detention of the other prisoners for the release of Sjt. Subhas Chandra Bose, forgetting that the release is due not to any relenting on the part of the Government but due to Nature’s supreme intervention.

It may seem cruel, but I must confess that I would far rather not have any release at all than have a release on false issues, which merely complicate the main issue and make it more difficult to deal with than before; for behind the agitation for the release of the detenus is the great question of the liberty of the citizens and the question of extraordinary powers exercised over the lives of people by an utterly irresponsible Government. The one consolation that the public can derive from this painful affair is, that Sjt. Subhas Chandra Bose up to the very last moment manfully declined to accept the humiliating conditions from time to time proposed by the Government for his discharge. Let us hope and pray that he will be soon restored to health and that a long life of service will be vouchsafed to him.

Young India, 26-5-1927

440. AN APPEAL TO INDIAN HUMANITY

In another place will be found a substance of the observations made in the columns of Navajivan by Sjt. Kishorelal Mashruwala. He is a worker of long standing and was up to recently Registrar of the Gujarat Vidyapith, and it was only due to illness that he was obliged to relinquish the post. He is one of the most thoughtful among the silent workers we have in India. He weighs every word he writes or utters. I mention these qualifications of his; for I am anxious that his reflections should not be dismissed out of consideration as so many writings nowadays have to be.

The story of the abuse of the helpless women of the Raniparaj community is a blot upon the nation. Sjt. Kishorelal Mashruwala has made his appeal to the Parsis, and from his standpoint, rightly too. For it is the Parsis who will be better able, if anyone is, to influence the Parsi men who are said to be corrupting innocent womanhood. But I am painfully aware of the fact that it is not the Parsis alone who hold so cheap the honour of poor sisters. Indians belonging to the other faiths, placed in similar circumstances, have been known to behave exactly as the Parsi canteen-keepers are reported to be doing. But that is no justification whatsoever for the inhuman crimes of the latter. The lust for money, which drives these adventurers to a trade which they know saps the manhood of the otherwise fine forest-dwellers miscalled Kaliparaj, i.e., black people, tempts them to the worse crime of defilement.

The British Government or rather the Government of India and the Baroda State must be held primarily responsible for the tragedy described by Sjt. Mashruwala; for it is they, who for their wretched revenue allow liquor shops to be opened or to exist in the midst of these simple people. These people have never asked for these shops, and even if they had, it would be still criminal to open liquor shops for them, even as it would be to allow a little child to play with fire because he desires it. But a reformer does not stop before commencing action to philosophize or to distribute blame through golden scales. He begins his reform wherever the opportunity offers itself. And now that the corruption has been brought to light, it behoves Parsi reformers to go to the delinquents and appeal to their sense of honour and try to wean them from the crime of violating the womanhood of the simple, innocent and guileless Raniparaj, even if they cannot also be weaned from trafficking in liquor.

Unfortunately, there is much truth in the taunt levelled at us as a nation, that we have not sufficient regard for the honour of our women. It is no use false patriotism seeking cover under tu quoque argument; nor must we mix up sexual immorality, in which depraved men and women of equal status indulge of their own free but unbridled will, with the instances of crime quoted by Sjt. Kishorelal Mashruwala.

Immoralities of the first kind are bad enough and do incredible harm to mankind; but the crimes like those of the Parsi canteen-keepers are infinitely worse and have not yet, thank God, received the tacit endorsement of fashionable society. In the instances quoted by Sjt. Kishorelal Mashruwala, the canteen-keepers are in the position of trustees, and it is insufferable that they should induce ignorant women in whose midst they are living to become instruments of their criminal lust. It is this kind of indifference to the honour of ignorant sisters who come under the influence or protection of the so-called better class men, which has been justifiably criticized, and which we must, if we want to become a self-respecting and independent nation, outgrow at any cost. The honour of the least among our sisters must be as dear to us as that of our blood-sisters.

Young India, 26-5-1927
The Council of the All-India Spinners’ Association has, owing to the necessity of prolonged rest that I must take from active and routine work, relieved me of the burden of directing the affairs of the Association and appointed Sheth Jamnalal Bajaj as officiating Chairman. Whilst, therefore, I still nominally remain President of the Association, the whole burden of directing its affairs will now fall upon Jamnalalji, and correspondents will henceforth, whenever they find it necessary, write to him rather than to me. The proper course certainly is to write to the working Secretary Sjt. Shankerlal Banker to whom naturally Jamnalalji will have to refer all correspondence before coming to any decision. This does not mean that I shall take no interest in the affairs of the Association. On the contrary, whenever in the opinion of the Council or the officiating Chairman or the Secretary, any matter should be referred to me, it will come before me for guidance and advice. But the Council’s decision and the arrangements I have come to with it are that I should not worry myself as hitherto over details and over every individual matter trifling or otherwise. They have taken an undertaking from me to refrain from doing so and to throw the burden on them and leave it for them to refer to me matters which they may consider to be important enough for referring to me. The test of a living organization is that it depends upon no single individual, however important, however able he may be. A living organization goes on irrespective of persons. The endeavour of the members of the Council is to make the Association a living and efficiently working organization. I trust, therefore, that khadi workers and khadi lovers will fall in with the new arrangement and render all the help they can to the Council in working this growing organization to the fullest extent possible.

AN EXAMPLE TO COPY

The State of Jaora seems to be noted for its dyeing and printing. I understand that His Highness the Nawab Saheb is interested in the khadi movement and, in order to make khadi more attractive by putting it through the dyeing and printing processes and thus to encourage it, he has exempted khadi from any tax. I congratulate the State on this praiseworthy step, and hope that other States will grant favoured treatment to this great and growing national enterprise which is fraught with tremendous economic benefit to the starving millions.

VIVEKANANDA AND SPINNING

A correspondent sends me interesting extracts from Vivekananda’s answers to his American questioners. I take the following from them on spinning:

Speaking of Indian village life he says: ‘In some places the common village girl with her spinning-wheel says: ‘Do not talk to me of dualism, my spinning-wheel says, So’ham, So’ham, I am He, I am He.’ What is the value of these machines and sciences? They have only one result; they spread knowledge. You have not solved the problem of want, but only made it keener. Machines do not solve the poverty problem; they simply make men struggle the more. Competition gets keener.... The value of everything is to be decided by how far it is a manifestation of God.

Young India, 26-5-1927

442. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

NANDI HILLS,
May 26, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter and I have one from Kshitish Babu also. You already have seen my note¹ in Young India. I had assumed when Jamnalalji who was here told me that I should write a paragraph in Young India about the new arrangement that all the members of the Council had agreed to it. The original idea was to have my resignation in its entirety. The resolution already passed adopts the middle course. I thought that my ceasing to be the President of the Association would be too hasty and might damage the cause, and it was not warranted by anything in my health. But I thought that it was quite a good idea to relieve me of the responsibility of routine work and let the Council evolve independently of me, whilst my advice and guidance were available wherever necessary.

Personally, I think that the tour had nothing to do with the collapse. It was the very exacting nature of the work that I myself voluntarily undertook. No one pressed me to go through the hurricane touring. I let the co-workers think and thought myself that my constitution would somehow or other stand the pressure that was put upon it, and do you know that the collapse came upon the very last day of this severe trial? For, I had intended to turn over a new leaf after finishing the Maharashtra tour and had given due notice\(^1\) to Rajagopalachariar that I would no longer be hurried and was looking forward to finishing the rest of the tours during the year in easy stages. If the collapse had not occurred, I would have thought in my pride that I could tax my constitution to any extent. Nature took her vengeance and she did it so gently that, as Dr. Wanless put it, “it was Nature’s first fairly severe warning”. He thinks, many other doctors think and I think also that, if I regain, as I think it is possible to do, a fair measure of the strength I lost in the twinkling of an eye, I should be able to do a moderate amount of touring. Doctors even think that it might do good, though the condition is imperative that there must be daily rest; no hurry; no bustle; no working to time and order; only one meeting per day, and not much speaking even then and so on. I am trying to adjust my mind to this new mode of life. If I succeed, it may be possible to prolong the life and still do a moderate amount of work. Please, therefore, do not worry about what has happened. Later on, I may even resume the routine work.

¹ On All-India Spinners’ Association; vide the preceding item.

You should regularly give me a weekly letter and tell me how you and all the others are faring. As for myself, I am making steady progress daily. In a month’s time, I might be able to do a little of gentle touring in Madras Presidency in order to take charge of the purses already collected.

With love, Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1571; also from a microfilm: S.N. 19777

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to C. Rajagopalachari”, before 21-2-1927.
443. LETTER TO JANE HOWARD

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,\(^1\)

May 26, 1927

DEAR MISS HOWARD,

I was delighted to receive your letter giving me details about the late Mr. Howard and yourself. Of your connection with him and your selfless devotion, I knew nothing. It does one’s soul good to read the account you have sent me, for which I am most grateful to you.

I hope you are now getting your Young India regularly; if not, you will please let me know. Do please write to me from time to time. I am obliged to dictate this letter as I am just now on the sick-list.

With loving regards from Mrs. Gandhi and myself,

Yours sincerely,

MISS JANE HOWARD
ROSEMARY
50, PANDORA ROAD
MALVERN
JOHANNESBURG

From a photostat: S.N. 12354

\(^1\) Permanent address
444. LETTER TO FRANCISCA STANDENATH

ASHRAM, SABARMATI, 1
May 26, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter now after a long time. I always think of you. You need not be anxious about my health. I am making steady progress. The collapse, though it was temporary, left me very weak. I am however able to attend to a moderate amount of work daily.

I shall look forward to your account of your meeting with Mr. Ranchhodlal Amritlal.

I note what you say about the two publications. We should not however mind them. We cannot prevent people from holding what views they like. We have to respect other people’s opinions even though they may not be to our liking even as we expect them to respect ours.

Yours, sincerely,

MRS. FRANCISCA STANDENATH
GRAZ (IN STYRIA)
TRAUTMANSDORFGASSE 1
(AUSTRIA)

From a photostat: S.N. 12493

445. LETTER TO SRI PRAKASA

NANDI HILLS,
May 26, 1927

MY DEAR SRI PRAKASA,

I was delighted to receive your letter redirected to me from the Ashram. Your yarn is passable, and you should enlist yourself as a member of the Spinners’ Association without any misgivings.

In the hot days, I can understand the takli giving you trouble. It would then be best to do it at dawn when you can see the thread clearly without artificial light at all. At that time there is even in the driest climate a certain humidity which makes the slivers more workable. And, at the time of doing the takli, if you are doing it in quiet, you can recite all your Bhagavad Gita or any other favourite

1 Permanent address
Herewith receipt for Rs. 265-3-0 which they have sent me from the Ashram.

I am glad you have decided to make khaddar wear and spinning compulsory in the Vidyapith.

I hope you have not abandoned the idea of passing some time at the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure 1

From a microfilm: S.N. 19776

446. LETTER TO R. B. GREGG

NANDI HILLS,
May 27, 1927

MY DEAR GOVIND,

The occasion for writing this letter is supplied by your capital letter of the 17th instant to Maganlal of which he has sent me a copy.

Your suggestions are all perfect, if the premises can be accepted by us. Probably Maganlal has not even thought of what I am about to tell you; though I shouldn’t be surprised if he has also thought of the same thing, for I think that he has assimilated the inwardness of the spinning movement. What I want to state is this: the movement is bound to fail if we expect to succeed by adopting the same methods, or very nearly the same methods with necessary adaptations, as the adversary, if such a term can be properly used under a plan of life which admits of no enemies. In my opinion, we have to devise other ways of making the movement a living and universal force at least so far as India is concerned. The adversary believes in the latest appliances and therefore is bound to adopt the methods of those who are adepts in using those appliances; but in the spinning movement, modern appliances are largely discarded and the few that are retained are used in a different way. Typewriters, shorthand assistance and the like are taken in our movement as a temporary measure. Immediately one goes to the villages, these become a hindrance rather than a help. If the movement has to depend upon first-class stenography, it will fail before long. For, it cannot make any headway under those conditions beyond the cities. It cannot succeed even if it has to depend upon the English language for its spread. And so you find that at the Ashram, in the Association office and even here we are managing with most... indifferent stenography. Even if we advertised, we shall probably not get the best stenographer, because he will know that there is room only for half a dozen stenographers in the movement, and then we shall have to pay not 100 or 125, which is the most I think that is being paid, but we should have to pay anything between 200 and 400 for getting the assistance such as you have in mind. I should quite agree with you if you argue that even that salary would be economy even if only one man has to be obtained. Experience, however, shows that it is not possible to retain the services of such a man unless you are prepared to allow him to become the master and to dictate his own terms in every respect. Thus it would be useless to have an able stenographer who has no faith in the movement, who would disdain to wear khadi and who would require polished furniture before he will settle down to work. The spinning movement, so far as I can see, will never afford the high wages that are demanded by good men in such a line of business. Do you know that if in khadi service we offer high wages even to one man, there is immediately and naturally a ferment throughout the rank and file and they would all begin to compare their low wages to the high wages given even to one single man? The proper working of the spinning movement is still being evolved. It is in a state of flux, and it will be some time before it can be said to be stabilized. It is a movement which has to grow from within. It is a movement which requires a fair measure of continuous sacrifice from those who have become accustomed to city life. The class of men and women required for the movement have got to be trained and brought up. They cannot therefore be had by advertising. The reason why we have not got efficient stenography is because no endeavour has been made to train stenographers. It is quite possible for instance to make of Chhaganlal, Mahadev, Krishnadas, Pyarelal and many others whom I can name first-class stenographers. But it was considered not worthwhile doing so. It would have been like throwing away a rupee for a pice, and so we are managing with fourth-rate stenographers hoping that if they assimilate the spirit of the movement they will distinguish themselves in the work they have undertaken by coming up to the highest level. I have entered into this elaborate argument—very badly expressed because it is for the first time that I am reducing to writing this thought about the movement—because I am anxious that you who are saturated with the spirit of the spinning movement should understand all that is at the back of my mind and then give me the benefit of your criticism. If I have not expressed myself clearly, as I am afraid I have not, do not please hesitate to ask me for further explanation and by an interchange of a few letters, probably, I shall be able to express myself more clearly than I have done. But of course apart from what I have said above, there is much to be said for your view.

Young India and Navajivan are not all I want them to be. There are reasons for it into which however I need not enter just now. Some are avoidable and some are unavoidable. I hope to be able to cope with those that are avoidable.

I got the book on vitamins. I read it through as soon as I got it. It is a good book. But it failed to convince me. The subject of vitamins has still, so far as I can see, to be investigated. The author’s statement does not appear to me to be the final word. Their ruling out all the nuts and the pulses in preference to meat foods goes against the grain and is contrary to all I have read in the vegetarian literature. If what the authors have said be the final word about them, it is a severe blow to vegetarianism. But the authors could not possibly have sufficient data about the effect of nuts and pulses to enable them to come to a just decision. Accurate observation about the efficacy or the inefficacy of vegetable protein foods can only be made on an extensive scale in India, where alone one meets thousands of born vegetarians. Their diet and their habits have to be scientifically observed and analysed before safe deductions can be drawn; and then, too, there are so many disturbing factors. Climate, harmful customs and suchlike have to be taken into account before using the values of foods taken by them. I am therefore taking all the statements in that book with a great deal of caution. The late A. F. Hills was President of the Vegetarian Society in London. He was a good man. I do not know the extent of his scientific knowledge. But he indulged in bold speculations about diet. He carried on a series of experiments himself. He wrote a number of articles on what he called “vital food”. He divided foods into three or four divisions: one for those whose occupation was pre-dominantly body-labour; another for those whose occupation was predominantly intellectual; third for those whose occupation was predominantly spiritual and the fourth for those who were not in a healthy condition. His reasoning used to appeal to me in those days. I do not know whether it would now if I read all his writings afresh. I followed also keenly the controversy going on in the medical profession in those days about food values, and I know that one army of doctors defended white bread for all they were worth, and another army suggested that white bread was the staff of death and that the brown bread alone was the staff of life. There was even a Bread Reform League with Miss Yates as its energetic Secretary. I used to come in close contact with the lady. But I learnt even then that either side was fanatical, either produced statistics and analysis of various types of bread. No one had sufficient data for its absolute conclusions. For they could not set a large number of men, who would for the sake of their observations, live purely on brown bread and water or white bread and water. I remember one example that was given by a doctor. I think it was Dr. Allinson. He said he put one of his dogs upon white bread for one month and it died; and another upon brown bread for one month and it lived. The irresistible inference was that white bread was the staff of death and brown bread was the staff of life. He did not state whether both the dogs were kept under restraint the whole of the time, nor did he state whether both the dogs started with the same stamina. Let me confess that in those days, that is nearly 40 years ago, I sided with Dr. Allinson and I swallowed his testimony about the dogs and used to eat nothing but brown bread, and in the brown bread variety also, largely Allinson’s brown bread;
because, the worthy doctor took care to emphasize the necessity of taking Allinson’s brown bread, for that alone contained the whole wheat-meal ground to the necessary fineness. He was a good man. I read all his writings. Even in 1914, I consulted him when I was suffering from pleurisy when I constantly refused to take even milk.
Probably the worthy doctor is still alive. All the same I came to discount, as experience ripened, most of the argument of the type I have mentioned. The upshot of all this is to tell you that I have not made many changes in my food beyond what I reported to you. I still take unboiled milk. I dilute it with water. The milk that comes fresh from the goats is poured over boiling water; that gives the necessary warmth to the milk and addition of water makes it lighter. I am taking yet a little bread or a little bhakhari made of home-ground wheat, and I am taking one green vegetable. The authors of the book say that addition of soda destroys the vitamins in the vegetables. But without soda, the vegetables refuse to be soft. I have therefore decided to add soda to the vegetable. It is difficult to digest it unless it is thoroughly cooked. Uncooked green cabbage, my system rejects. You will have observed that all the four vitamins are to be found in milk. They are to be found also in the fruits I am taking and therefore I do not lose much by adding soda at the time of cooking cabbage or Indian marrow. There is no difficulty about the cooking of spinach without soda and so whenever I get spinach, soda is not added. There is no occasion for worry about my health; for, I seem to be getting better though slowly. No food will give me personal satisfaction unless I can revert to fruits and nuts. But it seems to me that I shall have to close this earthly life without getting that personal satisfaction.

Yours sincerely,

[PS.]
Forgive me this very long letter. I did not know it was going to be so long.

From a photostat: S.N. 12574

447. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

NANDI DURG,
Krishna 11 [May 27, 1927]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have heard what you wrote about Ramachandra to Mahadev. I have nothing to say about it at this moment. Since you have handed over my letter to him, watch its effect. Talk over the matter with Jamnalalji when he comes there and do what is necessary. Then if there is anything for me to write, let me know.

Govindji’s letter is very nice. I have conveyed to him the thoughts it raised in me. Herewith a copy of my reply.2 Read it yourself and let Narandas too read it. If he has not read the original letter, let him do so. If any ideas occur to you on reading my reply, write to me. If there is in it anything that you do not understand, please let me know. We would obviously be imperfect in a field where we do not at all wish to compete with the other party. But where we do so or where we claim to specialize, we should try and be as perfect as possible. There will be no difficulty in publishing in Navajivan or Young India any material that you think should appear, if you send it to me and if I approve it. If you let me have a draft of an advertisement of books that ought to be taken notice of in Young India or Navajivan, I shall do what is necessary.

1 Inferred from the contents
2 Vide the preceding item.
I had prepared a note about Henry but I held it back after I had your letter and Jamnalalji’s. Now get it from Swami and examine it; and, if you think it can be included, after making the necessary changes, send it to me. If it is not to be included at all, nothing need be done.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7767. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

448. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

NANDI HILLS,
May 28, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your two letters as also your telegram. In order not to delay replying for two days I am resorting to dictation. I do not want to break the rule as far as possible of not writing letters myself except during silence. Both your letters are precious. I now understand the Ashram much better than I ever did before. It is almost like having been there myself and seen it. So characteristic is your account, and it is usefully supplemented by Valunjker’s letter.

You did well in not entering into the comparative merits of respective parties, and I do hope that you will remain unmoved even if you hear comparisons that may not please you. Those who enter into comparisons do so honestly. That it is improper to enter into such comparisons they do not know. And what is the use of being ruffled by listening to an expression of views honestly held?

This use of bhang is a disturbing factor, and if it is not checked in time, it will prove the undoing of that institution. But you are again right in not insisting on the reform. You have not gone there as a supervisor or an inspector to make reforms. You have gone there to perfect your study of Hindi and in so doing to give such service as you can and as may be acceptable. And that brings me to your Hindi. You have been quickened into action yourself. Of course our formula has been Hindi first, everything else after. I had felt that the formula was being somewhat overlooked. In my letters whilst you were in Delhi, I had emphasized this thing when you were discussing the various limitations of the Delhi Gurukul. But I thought that to bring the formula up and further in my letters would be undesirable, and I knew that you were yourself on the watch and would pull yourself up if you found yourself napping. This you have now done, and I am glad and quite satisfied. Of course there are innumerable things you can do usefully wherever you are placed. And the test of the possession of the religious sense really consists in one’s being able to pick out the ‘rightest’ thing out of many things which are all ‘right’ more or less. This is the meaning of a verse in the Bhagavad Gita which says: “Better even to die doing one’s duty, however lowly it may be, than doing some other’s however grand it may be.” And so, I have myself not a shadow of doubt that you will be entitled to pass by many things which you can easily do, if the one thing for which you have left Sabarmati has at all to be sacrificed or neglected. And, if there or at any other place, you become an unwelcome visitor because of your insistence upon that one thing, that is sufficient warning for you to leave the place. And when you feel that imperative call, you will simply not listen to any other suggestion. But that burning overpowering desire must come from within. I must not goad, I will not goad. I shall be entirely satisfied with what progress you can make, no matter how slow it is. You will do your Hindi in the way that you think is best, and if you find that it is more conducive to your peace of mind to have several other occupations side by side with Hindi, you will take them up. Do not therefore please continuously think of what I would like, but do what you think you can easily, without impairing your health, of both body and mind; and in the execution of your plan when you want my assistance or advice, you shall fall back upon it immediately, as for instance about going to Brij Kishan. Your telegram leads me to think that now there is no occasion for you to leave that Ashram. But you evidently do not know that Brij Kishan has not been keeping well and has therefore been sent to Mussoorie. But if you desire to go to Delhi, I doubt not that you could go to Brij Kishen’s house although he himself is not there. And of course there are many places where you can be sent for your Hindi, if Bhagwadbhakti Ashram does not give you all you want in the shape of Hindi,

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5231. Courtesy: Mirabehn

---

1 XVIII. 7
MY DEAR GULZARILAL,

I was delighted to hear from you. Whilst lying on my bed, I have constantly thought of so many like you in whom I am deeply interested and from whom, I expect many large and big things if only God will give them the requisite health for the task before them.

Your description of a truly religious life is accurate. I have not a shadow of a doubt that this blessed state of inward joy and freedom from anxiety should last in the midst of the greatest trials conceivable. It admits of no exception whatsoever. Naturally, it is unattainable except by the very fewest. But that it is attainable by human beings, I have also no doubt. That we do not find in history evidence regarding the existence of any such person merely proves to me that all the record that we have has been prepared by imperfect beings, and it is impossible for imperfect beings to give us a faithful record of perfect ones. The same may be said of our own experiences. We have to be very nearly perfect in order to meet perfect souls as you have described. Nor need you think that I have laid down an absurd proposition inasmuch as it is incapable of being recorded, or being experienced by the average man. To raise such a doubt would be begging the question, for we are here picturing to ourselves extraordinary mortals, though mortals nevertheless, and surely extraordinary powers are required to find out these extraordinary mortals. This statement is true even of much lesser things, things almost ridiculous, and yet very difficult of accomplishment, such, for instance, as the discoveries of Sir J. C. Bose or the finest paintings. Both these, we average beings will have to take on trust. It is only the privileged few who have got the special faculty for understanding and appreciating either those discoveries, or those paintings. These do not appear to us to be incredible and we are able to accept them on faith only because in favour of these we have the testimony of a larger number of witnesses than we can possibly have for the things of permanent value, such as human perfection of the utmost type. Therefore the limitation that you have accepted is quite a workable thing for the time being. For, even inside the limitation, there is ample scope for widening the field for the progress of the state of being and remaining unruffled in the face of the onslaught of sorrows and trials, which before regeneration would have paralysed us.

I am glad you have intensified your devotions. I do not know what you are reading at present. And I do not know whether I told you that we must arrive at a time when we do not need the solace of many books but that we make one book yield us all we want. In the last stage, of course, when life becomes one of perfect surrender and complete self-effacement, the support of even one book becomes unnecessary. At the present moment, though I am reading many things, the Bhagavad Gita is becoming more and more the only infallible guide, the only dictionary of reference, in which I find all the sorrows, all the troubles, all the trials arranged in the alphabetical order with exquisite solutions. I think I did tell you that the Song Celestial was the best rendering I had come across of the Bhagavad Gita. But if you do not know Sanskrit, I know that a knowledge of Sanskrit to enable you to understand the Bhagavad Gita is easily within your power. You can almost in a month’s time know enough Sanskrit to understand the original text. For, though the English rendering is grand and though you might be able to get some Hindi or Urdu translation also, of course there is nothing like the original. The original will enable you to give your own meaning and gloss to the text. That book is not a historical record, but it is a record of the concrete experiences of its author, whether it was really Vyasa or not I am not concerned. And if it is a record of anybody’s experience, it must not be beyond us to be able to test the truth of it by repeating the experience. I am testing the truth almost every day in my life and find it never failing. This of course does not mean that I have reached the state described, for instance, at the end of the Second Chapter. But I know that the more we carry out the prescription given in it, the nearer do we answer the description given of the perfect state.

I hope you are keeping good health. I am of course making steady progress.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: C. W. 9641. Courtesy: Gulzarilal Nanda
450. LETTER TO DHAN GOPAL MUKERJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI, 1
May 28, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your kind letter with your subscription for Young India. If you do not get it regularly, please report it to the manager and let me have a line also.

Please do not have any anxiety about my health. I am taking all the necessary care and am giving myself as much rest as it is possible to give.

Yours sincerely,

DHAN GOPAL MUKERJI, ESQ.
THE TOWN HALL CLUB
123, WEST 43RD STREET
NEW YORK

From a photostat: S.N. 12507

451. LETTER TO MAHARAJA OF NABHA

NANDI HILLS,
May 28, 1927

DEAR FRIEND.

I have your letter of the 20th instant. I do not know why you considered my letter of the 1st January to be insulting. I can only give you my assurance that no insult was intended.

The paragraph you have copied in your letter, I do not understand.

You are wrong in inferring that the letter of 1st January was either dictated or prompted by Pandit Motilalji. I had left the Congress before the session was over, and I did not know that Pandit Motilalji was in Calcutta on the 1st January. But whether he was or not, he certainly knew nothing even of the fact that I was writing to you. I simply felt that I would be doing a friendly turn by writing to you as I did.

1 Permanent address

VOL. 38 : 2 JANUARY, 1927 - 3 JUNE, 1927 451
I know nothing about the Lakhna Raj case. Your letter was the first information to me about even the existence of Lakhna Raj. That there was any case in connection with it, I had no knowledge whatsoever.

I venture to think that your description of Pundit Motilalji is, to say the least, ungentlemanly. He may be all the things you have said of him, but the code of honour prevalent in good society debars one from impugning before a stranger the character of any man, whoever he may be. And, after all, I am a perfect stranger to Your Highness. In spite of your imputations on the character of Pundit Motilalji he remains for me a high-souled, able, self-sacrificing patriot enjoying in the country a position not attained by many public workers. As it happens at the present moment, his politics are not my politics. But if they were mine, I should certainly deem it an honour to allow my judgement to be influenced and tested by his.

Yours sincerely,

His Highness The Maharaja Of Nabha
Dehra Dun (U.P.)

From a photostat: S.N. 12581

452. LETTER TO DR. M. S. KELKAR

Nandi Hills,
May 28, 1927

Dear Doctor,

I have your letter. Though I do not propose to trouble you to come over here, I would like you definitely, if you can, to write out what you will have me do, and I shall incorporate as many of your suggestions as it is possible for me.

I cannot get distilled water in Nandi. I know that it can be made by oneself. But I have not got the proper tubes and utensils for it here. When I go down to Bangalore, I shall see whether I can procure distilled water.

As it is, I take raw milk diluted with boiling water. This seems to agree with me better. I am taking 30 ounces of raw milk and about two ounces of whole-meal flour turned into bhakhari to which is added a little butter, soda and salt. I take also one vegetable well boiled and added to it a tea-spoonful of fresh butter from goat’s milk. I add to the morning milk the juice of 10 full-grown leaves of neem.
tree. I sleep well and I do about four hours’ dictation daily, one hour’s writing and at least one hour’s reading. This is fair amount of work for a patient who is convalescing. In addition to this, I have half an hour’s fairly brisk walk in the morning and half an hour in the evening. And I retire at 9 in the night and get up at 4 in the morning. Of course the morning and the evening prayers are there. I do also deep-breathing morning and evening. I sleep about an hour and half during the day with an earth bandage on the head. Now you may make any suggestions you like.

Now about yourself. I am really most anxious to help you. But, in spite of all the goodwill in the world, I have not been able to enthuse over your treatment. I think it is wrong to say that all the patients I placed at your disposal were those who had passed through many doctors and had almost been given up. You had Prabhudas, you had his grandfather, you had Gomatibehn, you had Navin, and many others whose names I can recall if I tax my memory. Your insistence upon eggs and your great partiality for astrology are two serious drawbacks. I respect your insistence upon eggs. But they don’t suit my religious sense. I respect also your partiality for astrology. But I cannot get rid of my scepticism about it. Therefore I can only make a limited use of your attainments.

I wonder whether you have studied the use of asanas as part of treatment of disease. My attention has been recently drawn to them. But as you have a fair knowledge of physiology, I would like you, in the light of that knowledge, to examine the claims made on behalf of the various asanas. Have you also studied the newest researches made about vitamins?

Yours sincerely,

DR. M. S. KELKAR
342, SADASHIV PETH
POONA CITY

From a photostat: S.N. 14131
453. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakha Krishna 12 [May 28, 1927]

CHI. VASUMATI,

Your letter to hand. It may well be that they are working without getting results. But what I got from your diary you could not have given even through many letters. Therefore even if it relates only to a day prior to that on which you write to me, do let me have your diary. It is good that you regularly write to Ramdas.

My health is improving.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 471. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

454. LETTER TO TARA MODI

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakha Krishna 12 [May 28, 1927]

CHI. TARA,

Your letter. I learn from Surendra’s letter that you have grown very weak. Strength which is lost will come back only gradually. Need I tell you to have patience? Moreover, the presence of Nathji is for you a soothing balm. I write this not with the expectation of any reply from you but only to bring you peace, if I can. Ramniklal will write, if necessary; if you want to convey anything to me, tell him about it. But on no account should you write yourself. I find from my own experience that good fresh milk, that is, pure milk if available there, is easier to digest, when mixed with boiling water. Moreover, all doctors here agree that if a cow is free from disease, if its udders are washed, if the container is clean and the milkman washes his hands well with hot water before milking the cow, such fresh milk when taken without boiling is more nourishing and easier to digest. If it is boiled, the vitamins are destroyed.

We have already a long tradition of drinking slow-boiled milk. So if it is available, give it a trial.

Ba sends her blessings.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1696. Courtesy: Ramniklal Modi
BHAI LAKSHMIDAS,

May 28, 1927

Your letter. I have read Bhai Jethalal’s letter. We have been doing khadi work in the native States. But I have always had a fear that when the impact of khadi begins to tell on foreign cloth, it will be attacked from all quarters; I doubt whether at that time we shall be able to carry on our work in the native States. If our tapascharya is prolonged and sincere, we might perhaps survive such attacks. Now the question naturally arises what stand we should take in the native States during this transitional period. My inner voice tells me that we should plainly reject [their favour] if it means giving undertakings which would compromise our honour. How can we give in writing anything that would seem like ignoring Pathik and Ramnarayan? We should talk to them politely and try to persuade them. ‘We propose to do only khadi work in your territories. That too as a matter of business. We have no wish to interfere in the affairs of your State.’ This we shall state, if you like, in writing. ‘We wish to do khadi work in your State merely from the business point of view. But we do not want this to be interpreted to mean that even outside your State we will have nothing to do with politics or that we have no line of thought on the subject. We have no political affiliations with Pathik and others, but we do not wish to by-pass them in any way; nor do we regard them as traitors. But we do not wish to be instrumental in harming them in their relations with you.’ I think we should boldly say something to this effect. If we do not act in some such way khadi will lose its power. If the Government takes away khadi work from us and gets it done arbitrarily through its own machinery, shall we be able to attach all the power to khadi that we do today? In short, we would swallow many a bitter pill for the sake of khadi. We may put up with personal insults, but even khadi work may not be carried on under such circumstances as would compromise our principles. The fact is that under such circumstances, khadi work simply cannot be done. Perhaps you are not aware that an attempt was made to get the Charkha Sangh registered. The Charkha Sangh is an independent limb of the Congress enjoying the power to secede from the parent body. The officials agreed to register it if this spiritual bond were broken. We decided against getting the Charkha Sangh registered and declined to snap that bond.

Well, I am dictating this from a height of 5,000 feet; you may therefore look at it in the right perspective after making the necessary allowances. I write not for being acted upon, but only because it may help you in finding some solution. I have discussed this matter with Jamnalalji to some extent. He will soon be at the Ashram when you too should see him and do what you all wish to. But then “the master’s advice must be left at the door”.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

456. WELCOME DONATION FOR CAUSE OF SUPPRESSED CLASSES

A telegram has been received from Shri Vallabhbhai saying that a generous gentleman has donated Rs. 50,000 for the benefit of the suppressed communities, and another has donated Rs. 2,500. I saw in the papers that the name of the first donor is Mansukhlal Chhaganlal. It seems that the other has not thought it proper to let his name be known. I congratulate both these gentlemen. My conviction grows stronger day by day that such thoughtful donations are alone religious charities. It is a happy sign that the desire to make donations for religious causes is still alive among us. But we hardly know what is religion. I have often said that in this age much adharma is done in the name of dharma. On the one hand, therefore, we have to nurse the religious sentiment of the people and, on the other, we have to point out the right way for the exercise of that sentiment. Good intentions by themselves do not take one to heaven. There is a saying in English that the path to hell is paved with good intentions. There is much truth in this. Many thieves steal with good motives. Many are those who tell lies with good motives. Even a religious person like Yudhishtira makes the mistake of uttering a falsehood with a good motive, and for that he had to suffer the stink of hell. We see ourselves that numerous murders are committed with good motives. Hence, good intentions by themselves are unavailing. They should be accompanied by good deeds, and that is possible only if we have right knowledge. It would

1 A Gujarati proverb be good, therefore, if religious-minded men and women follow the example of these two donors, find out religious causes and support them.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 29-5-1927

457. MEANS OF COW-PROTECTION

Shri Pragji Mavji, manager of the pinjrapole in Nasik, makes the following suggestions in a letter¹ which he has written:

In these suggestions there is not much that is new and has not been said in Navajivan. But I have printed them to show how a devoted servant of mother cow and experienced manager of a pinjrapole supports the suggestions which have been made earlier in these columns. The letter also contains some useful information. For instance, the information about the use which contractors make of dead cattle, if these are handed over to them, is such as will shock us. Such wicked things happen because, in the name of religion, people themselves do not make use of the dead animals but hand them over to others. The suggestion in regard to bones needs some modification. Burying bones as they are does not produce manure; they have to be ground into powder. The flesh and intestines need not be buried. Intestines are used even now for making leather strips, strings for musical instruments and catguts, and the fat obtained from flesh is used in great quantities for lubricating machinery. So there remains very little to be buried in its natural form. But this concerns the future.

If we accept in principle that by making in goshalas and pinjrapoles all those things against the use of which we have no religious objection, we can save the maximum number of cattle, other discoveries will follow.

The reproach to cow-protection workers implied in the last suggestion deserves attention. Every such worker should bear in mind that there is a greater need for workers who will devote themselves to active work of service and make themselves proficient in their field of work than for preachers who go round exhorting others.

But, along with this letter², I have before me a press-cutting containing a long interrogatory addressed to me on the question of

¹ Not translated here
² What follows is the translation as found in Young India, 3-11-1927.
cow-protection. The underlying suggestion obviously seems to be that the methods of cow-protection advocated by me are not consistent with my profession of Hinduism. For in his introductory remarks to his questions the writer has tried to make light of the basic principle of cow-protection that I have formulated, viz., that what is economically wrong cannot be religiously right. In other words, if a religion cuts at the very fundamentals of economics it is not a true religion but only a delusion. My critic on the other hand believes that this view is opposed to the teachings of our ancient scriptures. I, at least, am not aware of a single text in opposition to this view nor do I know of any religious institution that is being maintained in any part of the world today in antagonism to the elementary principles of economics. As for Nature, anyone who has eyes can see, that it always observes the principle that I have stated. For instance, if it has implanted in its creation the instinct for food it also produces enough food to satisfy that instinct from day to day. But it does not produce a jot more. That is Nature’s way. But man, blinded by his selfish greed, grabs and consumes more than his requirements in defiance of Nature’s principle, in defiance of the elementary and immutable moralities of non-stealing and non-possession of other’s property and thus brings down no end of misery upon himself and his fellow-creatures. To turn to another illustration, our Shastras have enjoined that the Brahmin should give knowledge as charity without expecting any material reward for it for himself. But they have at the same time conferred upon him the privilege of asking for and receiving alms and have laid upon the other sections of the community the duty of giving alms, thus uniting religion and economics in a common bond of harmony. The reader will be able to find further instances of this kind for himself. The religious principle requires that the debit and credit sides of one’s balance-sheet should be perfectly square. That is also the truest economics and therefore true religion. Whenever there is any discrepancy between these two it spells bad economics and makes for unrighteousness. That is why the illustrious author of the Gita has defined yoga as “balance” or “evenness”. But the majority of mankind do not understand this use of economics to subserve religion; they want it only for amassing “profits” for themselves. Humanitarian economics, on the other hand, for which I stand, rules out “profits” altogether. But it rules out “deficit” no less for the simple reason that it is utterly impossible to safeguard a religious institution by following a policy of dead loss. That is the reason why in spite of our 1,500 goshalas we have not only failed to protect the cow, but its slaughter is day by day on the increase. If in spite of this we delude ourselves into the belief that we have done our duty by the cow by establishing these homes for cattle, and remain smugly self-satisfied there, whatever comfort it may give us, it won’t bring us one whit nearer the goal of cow-protection, whereas it can be demonstrably shown that by adopting the policy that I have suggested we can easily realize this goal. It does not require much effort to see that but for the fact that the cow yields us milk, the duty of cow-protection would not have come into being at all. There are a host of other innocent animals besides the cow in the world but nobody has ever thought of setting up their protection as a religious obligation, and if somebody had attempted it, it would have simply remained a dead-letter. We have use for the cow. That is why it has become religiously incumbent on us to protect it.

To turn now to the questionnaire drawn up by my critic, I will embody the questions in my answers without reproducing them separately:

1. Every goshala or Pinjrapole should have a tannery adequate to its needs attached to it. In other words, the manager in charge of every such institution should have a thorough knowledge of the immediate steps necessary for utilizing the remains of dead cattle. If this is done, the question, viz., how many heads of cattle should a particular goshala contain, won’t arise at all.

2. I do not know what the rate of mortality of cattle in goshalas is, nor is it relevant to my proposition. So long as there is a single head of cattle in a goshala, its manager ought to know how to dispose of its remains after it is dead, just as he is expected to know how to look after it while it is alive.

3. Such humanitarian institutions for the protection of cattle as I have described should normally take charge of the remains of the cattle that might die in the village. Therein lies the interest of the cattle, the depressed classes and the general public alike. In villages where there are no goshalas or the concomitant tanneries, some local person who believes in cow-protection should take it upon himself to get the carcasses removed to the nearest tannery or get the preliminary processes performed upon it and send the useful parts there.

4. The establishment of such tanneries as I have described does not require much capital outlay. Only some initial expenditure would be needed to train up workers for this work.

5. It is true that at present the leather prepared from slaughtered hides is superior in quality to that prepared from dead hides. But during the late War the Government of India spent enormous sums of money to improve the quality of leather from dead hides; and tannery experts have told me that dead hides can be tanned into as good leather as leather from slaughtered hides. I myself am conducting experiments in this direction. In Cuttack, Sjt. Madhusudan Das has been doing the same for a number of years and with success as he tells me. The Calcutta Government Research Tannery is also at present engaged in similar experiments.

But the tragedy of it today is that we annually export crores worth of hides to foreign countries, and by ignorantly using leather goods made from the hides of slaughtered cattle, become indirectly participators in the sin of their slaughter.

It rests in our hands entirely to prevent the export of hides of our dead cattle to foreign countries. And this we can easily do by bringing the export trade in hides under our control through the establishment of tanneries on altruistic lines. We cannot only save nine crores of rupees annually to our country but by employing that sum properly save a countless number of cattle.

I need hardly say that the humanitarian tanneries that I have suggested would also be utilizing the bones and other useful parts of the dead cattle. In fact it is more necessary than ever.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 29-5-1927

458. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

CHI. MIRA,

May 29, 1927

I sent you a fairly long reply to your two letters and wire. I have not heard in continuation of your wire. This dictation enables me to overtake much work without tiring me, as I can do the dictation lying down. It is likely that in the course of a few days, we shall remove to Bangalore, as it is getting very windy here and the climate seems to be too bracing for me. I must not yet take brisk walks. You may therefore safely write your letters now addressed to Bangalore. Coomara Park will very probably be the address. You will say Bangalore City because there are two watertight divisions, Cantonment and City, and unless ‘City’ is mentioned, the letters first go to the Cantonment as they do all over India where there is also a Cantonment.

There is nothing new to report so far as health is concerned. I think I did tell you that I had reverted to bhakhari and a vegetable.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5232. Courtesy: Mirabehn

459. LETTER TO NARGIS CAPTAIN

NANDI HILLS,
May 29, 1927

Do not compliment me on my promptness in acknowledging your letter. Only it facilitates my work and therefore recovery if I do what little I can from day to day and have no arrears weighing upon my mind.

Letters like the one you have sent me I rarely publish. The rule is to publish such letters when there is something in them which requires a public discussion. The letter you have sent me is really too personal for publication and there is no warrant for printing it except to gratify my own pride. There is therefore no question of my advertising you just yet or putting Dr. Scarpa in a false position by bringing in his name in the pages of Young India and in connection with an Italian letter.

I see that your letter is three letters rolled into one. Please tell Perin and Khurshed that you are not there to encourage their laziness. It will be time for them to cease to work and let you work for them when they cease to eat and let you eat for them. There is a verse¹ in the Gita whose paraphrase is: Those who eat without working are thieves, except of course patients like myself. For myself I have still only progress to report. It is getting colder here day by day. This is the rainy season here though the rains have not yet properly set in.

Yours,

From a photostat: S.N. 14129

¹ III. 12
MY DEAR GOVIND,

I have your very important letter. It crossed mine. I cannot appropriate the credit you give me for gentle criticism of your handwriting. What I wanted to say was that although I liked handwritten letter, there was no occasion for you to revert to writing your letters for my sake and that you should continue type-writing as you believe in it, and as I know it does result in economy of time. Nor do I consider your handwriting to be bad. It might be clearer. But fortunately for my friends I have my own writing as the criterion and that being so, I know very few whose writing is worse than mine, and yet because of my dislike of typewriters, if I could possibly write with my own hand, I will inflict that illegible hand in preference to having my letters typed or typing them myself. The reason underlying is this. If I have any concern for my friends, I should endeavour to write a better and more legible hand. Typewriter is a cover for indifference and laziness. Moreover I believe in the dictum —handwriting reveals the writer. Typewriting certainly results in economy of time. But whilst I admit that time is money, I do not admit that money is everything, and therefore I can conceive innumerable occasions when economy of time would be misplaced. And the inroads that the typewriter is making have all but destroyed the magnificent art of calligraphy. I wonder if you have seen old handwritten manuscripts when people used to pour forth their very soul into their work. But I must not stray away from the subject on which I want to write.

Your suggestions about selecting a few untouchable boys and making them ideal farmers does great credit to your heart. But it betrays your ignorance of the situation. Even if half-a-dozen untouchables could be trained as you suggest, that will in no way bring us nearer the solution of the problem of untouchability. To petrify on this matter—Hindu mind will immediately say, we shall touch every untouchable who qualified as these six men have. You perhaps know that there have been many and many pariah saints, but their sainthood has not saved this suppressed class. The orthodox mind again argues the pariah saint becomes so because of his past karma and he naturally commands our respect. When the others do likewise, they will also command the same respect. It is this immoral deduction from the theory of karma which has got to be combated at every step and the Hindu mind has got to be educated by fierce penance and understanding that the theory of karma is not intended to kill all reform and all efforts, but that it is intended for mankind to work out all evil karma and he who does not do so is not entitled to belong to the human species. The Hindu mind has therefore to be educated to regard intrinsically as equals the lowest, the fallen and the downtrodden and to give them a helping hand so as to make them level with the rest. And why, apart from the question of untouchability, should not the most promising young men be sent out to become accomplished farmers and try the experiment suggested by you? Surely you do not wish to imply that the touchables in their pride will not care to learn farming with a view to utilizing human excreta as manure. If that is your argument, it would be wrong to expect untouchables to handle work which others would consider as degrading. As you know at the Ashram, we have untouchable boys. We do not even ask them to do the sanitary work. The initiative is taken by the so-called high-caste men; for, on such points the so-called untouchables would be very touchy. I am having that experience everywhere. Underlying your suggestion, therefore, is the question not of untouchability but of improved farming methods along simple lines. But I have simply not handled this question energetically because I believe in the doctrine of one thing at a time. There is much scattered work here, so much laziness, so much blind imitation, so little concentration that it is necessary to hammer away at one very simple but fairly universal thing, and if that succeeds, the rest can follow. And agriculture is an industry which can only be improved when it receives state assistance. In an ill-governed country, I think with Thoreau that the citizen who resists the evil government must ignore property rights. And without assurance of settled ownership, it is impossible to do much in the way of agriculture. I do not want to elaborate this thing. I have said sufficient to enable you to fill in the rest. Whilst your suggestion does not seem to me to be feasible so far as the untouchables are concerned and difficult of accomplishment, even as a general scheme the extract sent by you is valuable and I propose as soon as I find space to reproduce it in Young India so that those who are at all inclined in the direction might take the matter up.

I did not get the larger volume about vitamins. What I got was Food and Health. But that book also gives enough information about vitamins. Dr. Kellogg’s writings I know. I have read his book, and if it has not been lost as many of my books have been, it must be in the Ashram library. However, you seem to know him personally, and I shall look forward to what he has to say. Have you put the whole case before him and asked whether he can suggest an effective vegetarian substitute for milk in the case of patients?

Yours sincerely,
R. B. GREGG, ESQ.
KOTGARH
SIMLA HILLS

From a photostat: S.N. 14132

461. LETTER TO T. N. SARMA

NANDI HILLS,
May 29, 1927

MY DEAR SARMA,

I remember your visit at Calcutta and the conversation that you had over your Ashram. I am sorry about your wife’s illness. I am likely to descend this hill in the course of a few days and go down to Bangalore for completing the cure. When I am in Bangalore do come whenever you wish and we shall have a chat.

All you say about Hanumantarao is quite true. He was a man among men. Let us make him live in us and through us by following him closely, in his self-sacrifice, self-effacement, love of truth, ahimsa and devotion to duty.

Yours sincerely,
SJT. T. N. SARMA
199, EAST PARK ROAD
BANGALORE CITY

From a photostat: S.N. 14133

462. LETTER TO SAM HIGGINBOTTOM

KUMARA PARK,
BANGALORE,
May 29, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

A correspondent in Mysore has sent me the following which is being distributed fairly liberally. Before I say anything about the writing, will you kindly tell me whether you are correctly reported and whether the extracts reproduced do you full justice.

I had your letter of kind enquiry for which I thank you. I am making steady progress. I am likely to be in these parts yet for a while. It will therefore be better to send your answer directly to the address noted at the top.

Yours sincerely,

DR. SAM HIGGINBOTTOM AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTE
ALLAHABAD

From a photostat: S.N. 14134

463. LETTER TO K. T. PAUL

NANDI HILLS,
May 29, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am likely in the course of a few days to go down to Bangalore and take the rest of the cure there. Do come whenever you can and I shall be delighted to see you whether I am on the Hill or in Bangalore. You will know at once from the papers when I have gone to Bangalore. In any case you can’t come to the Hill without taking Bangalore on your way.

I am aware that so many friends have prayed for my recovery. unknown friends has been that God may, if He spares me My counter-prayer in answer to all the prayers of known and, make me worthy of those loving prayers.

I am making fair progress.

Yours sincerely,

K. T. PAUL, ESQ.
THOTTAM
SALEM

From a Photostat: S.N. 14135
464. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

NANDI,
Vaishakha Vad [14, May 29, 1927]¹

SISTERS.

There has been no letter from you this week. Have you received any letters from Mirabehn? I find from her letters that she has been working hard among both men and women. There is in her letters something about which I would like you to know. She writes that the women with whom she comes into contact are all extremely good, but at the same time terribly ignorant. They do not know even the simplest things. If Mirabehn talks to them of the spinning-wheel, they are surprised. They cannot of course understand that spinning is necessary in the interests of the poor. Their idea of religion is visiting the temple. They hardly know what ‘service’ is. It may be that some of this is a result of Mirabehn’s lack of experience. But we are all aware of the general ignorance of our women. It is men who are mainly responsible for this. The only remedy lies, doesn’t it, in their awakening. But the responsibility for bringing about that awakening rests upon you. All of you should prepare yourselves for the work according to your abilities.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3651

¹ The source has Vaishakha Vad 13, which however was a Kshaya date.
465. LETTER TO JUGALKISHORE

May 29, 1927

I hope you will get from this work all the intellectual and spiritual nourishment you need. I have no doubt that once you have mastered the elements of this science you will get thoroughly interested in it. Learning the elements of anything is always difficult and irksome. It is so with the delightful art of music too. We all know about mathematics. The same is the case of this grand and noble science of the charkha. I call it grand because the more closely we study it the more we discover in it. And we need as much skill to attain proficiency in it as in any other major craft. I call this noble because it touches millions of people. I know of no other science save agriculture which has such universal application. Therefore I wish your devotion to this task is strengthened.

I have understood your nature. You keep away from a thing so long as your head and heart do not accept it fully and this is quite right. Write to me about your experiences.

[From Hindi]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
466. LETTER TO RANI VIDYAVATI

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakh Krishna 14 [May 29, 1927]

DEAR SISTER,

I have your letter. I was very happy. The receipt for the money has been sent from the Ashram. The solution to your difficulties with regard to the spinning-wheel has also been suggested. If even then the spinning-wheel cannot be worked write again to the Ashram and also to me.

It was a meritorious act on your part to have collected funds for cow-protection. I hope that all women will give attention to this work.

Yours sincerely,

Mohanandas Gandhi

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

467. LETTER TO GANGA DEVI

NANDI DURG,
Vaishakh Vad 14 [May 29, 1927]

DEAR SISTER GANGA DEVI,

I have received your letter. It makes me anxious that you are still so weak. If you feel hungry, you should increase the quantity of milk. We get good milk there. Hence it will be all right to take it even unboiled. Along with milk, I also take the juice of ten neem leaves. It does not spoil the taste of milk. Try it for a couple of days.

Blessings from

Bapu

From the Hindi original: Benarsidas Chaturvedi Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 The year has been inferred from Gandhiji’s stay at Nandi Durg.
DEAR FRIEND,

I wish your meeting every success. The Rt. Hon’ble Srinivasa Sastri embarks upon his arduous mission under the best of auspices. He takes with him the goodwill of all India, and both the Europeans and our countrymen in South Africa are looking forward to his advent. I know that if any man can possibly produce harmony between the Europeans and the Indian settlers, it is certainly Sjt. Srinivasa Sastri. May God give him all the wisdom and all the strength he will need in South Africa.

Yours sincerely,

THE SECRETARY
THE IMPERIAL INDIAN CITIZENSHIP ASSOCIATION
PETIT BUILDING
359, HORNBY ROAD
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 12355

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. I have said my say. I understand your reasoning and value your determination. However, I send you the book on Food and Health. As a chemist you will understand it better than I can. Personally, I challenge many of the authors’ conclusions. But my challenge is based upon prejudice. I attack their data on insufficiency of evidence; but I have no data myself to support my challenge. I know the healthier condition of widows.

So far as Nikhil is concerned, he need never go to Calcutta. If Hemaprabha Devi can be happy at the Ashram, she can live with Nikhil there and husband his strength. Or, she can stay in Patna, and she can be in Wardha also with quarters all to herself.
I must finish Madras and would really like to go through the other provinces also if I can do them gently and in a leisurely fashion leaving ample margin for rest and having no more than one meeting per day or even per two days. Not to do Madras, if I can at all manage it, would be criminal as there is already nearly three lakhs of rupees collected and locked up and people will not part with it unless I present myself to receive it. I can therefore combine rest and work. It becomes fairly cool in the Madras Presidency in the month of July. The whole of June will be spent in resting. The Mysore tour will be easy, because Mysore is on a higher level. It is a plateau of 3,000 feet above the sea level and the climate at this time of the year is exceptionally mild. Then there are other parts of the Madras Presidency too which are quite cool. And Karnatak is perfect after June. You need have therefore no worry whatsoever, and, of course, I shall be taking soundings as the tour progresses. What is more, the ever kind and the ever vigilant Nature will give warning betimes of any danger that may be lurking. And then, in spite of all the extraordinary precautions, she will one day send her messenger who like a thief in the night will steal in some day and unperceived by anybody administer the dose which will send me to long sleep.

Yours,

BAPU

SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
HOME VILLA
GIRIDHI
(BIHAR)

From a photostat: G.N. 1572

470. LETTER TO C. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARIAR

NANDI HILLS,
May 31, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Either Jamnalalji committed a blunder or the interviewer. There is absolutely no chance even if I become obdurate of my being able to resume my tour in the middle of June. Let alone the doctors, I have myself no such confidence. Nandi has done me good. But there is much leeway yet to be made up. I get easily tired and I cannot move about with ease. A month more is the very least I shall require. What I feel is that I shall not be able to venture out much before the third week of July.

Rajagopalachari is not just now here. He has gone to Bangalore to find and prepare quarters for me there as the weather here is now becoming too bracing for me. He is the jailor in charge and it is he who has to dispose of me finally, so far as this Presidency is concerned. But in so far as I have any control over my movements, I would certainly love to be your guest if Salem is on the list at all. And, if it is not on the list, you can easily have it on the list by collecting a fat purge for the dumb millions from among your innumerable friends in Salem.

I never know that the European Association at Calcutta had passed such an original resolution as you have described.

Yes, I do feel, without being able to assign any justification for the feeling, that behind all the seeming anarchy, order is being evolved and that we shall not for ever remain a damned country.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. C. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARIAR
FAIRYFALLS VIEW
KODAIKANAL OBSERVATORY P. O.
KODAIKANAL HILLS
From a photostat: S.N. 12586

471. LETTER TO KHANCHAND AIDAS R. KOBE

NANDI HILLS,
May 31, 1927

DEAR FRIEND.

I have your letter of the 15th April last redirected to me for which I thank you and the donors. You have not mentioned any particular cause to which the collection should be devoted. Unless, therefore, I hear from you to the contrary, it will be used for khadi, untouchability or cow-protection work whichever may be most in need according to the judgement of the Managing Board of the Satyagraha Ashram. Please let me have a line in reply.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. KHANCHAND AIDAS R. KOBE
From a microfilm; S.N. 14139
472. LETTER TO TARUN CHANDRA SINHA

NANDI HILLS (MYSORE STATE),
May 31, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. At the present moment I can only ask you to read the reprint of the articles I wrote in Young India. The reprint is called Self-restraint v. Self-indulgence. It can be had at the Young India office, Ahmedabad. And if you propose to get the book and read it, you may correspond with me after you have read it and tell me whether you have found any help. Meanwhile I can only pray that God may give you the right guidance and strength of mind to do the right thing.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. TARUN CHANDRA SINHA
SHUSUNG P.O.
(MYMENSING DISTRICT)
BIHAR

From a photostat: S.N. 14136

473. LETTER TO BASANTA KUMAR RAHA

NANDI HILLS,
May 31, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. As I do not know whether the English letter is written by you or for you, I shall have a translation of this letter enclosed with this.

It is not because I do not want to comply with your proposal but because I have no fitness for becoming anybody’s guru, being myself in search of one. After all a person who sets out to become anybody’s guru, if he is a sincere man, must have confidence in himself. The relation of a teacher and disciple is not a mechanical one but it is organic. The only suggestion, therefore, that I can make to you is that if you cannot be satisfied with personal effort and struggle, you can have the guru of your imagination; but then it won’t be my conscious self; for I should be utterly incapable of giving you unerring guidance which a true guru is supposed to give and you may draw what comfort it is possible for you to do from the imaginary picture. I am sorry that I can give you no other or further comfort. The best thing one can do however is to kneel down to God above and ask Him to give the required guidance. He is the only source of light and of peace.

Yours sincerely,

BABU BASANTA KUMAR RAHA
BARNES JUNCTION
DISTRICT JALPAIGURI (BENGAL)

From a photostat: S.N. 14137

474 A LETTER

NANDI HILLS,
May 31, 1927

DEAR SIR,

I have your letter of the 21st instant. I am afraid, your notions of business and mine seem to be so diametrically opposite, that it is not possible at the present moment to find a meeting ground, and after all, our depots, it seems to me, cannot be of any service to you.

Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 14138

475 LETTER TO JAIRAMDAS DAULATRAM

NANDI HILLS,
May 31, 1927

MY DEAR JAIRAMDAS,

I have your letter. I understand your difficulties and your struggles as I have always done and have therefore sympathized with you even whilst I have been powerless to give you any help or guidance. Personally, as I have implied in my letter to the President, I have not much faith in patched-up compromises brought about by mutual fear. And then, the contracts made by us, polished patriots, have no effect upon the masses, who either act under the impulse of the moment or under the guidance of mischief-makers. We, the so-called representatives of the people, build airy houses of our own imagination. But I suppose the imaginary is real to the one who sees it as such, and what is real is imaginary to him. A shadow is the real dog to the one who only sees his own self through the clear water and bleeds himself to death by straining every nerve in barking at his own shadow.

When you are sufficiently sick of the business and tired, do come and pass a few days with me. I descend from this hill in the course of the week and shall be in Bangalore at least for one month.

Yours sincerely,

S. J. T. J. AIRAMDA DALATRAM, M.L.C.
HYDERABAD (SIND)

From a photostat: S.N. 14140

476. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

[End of May 1927]¹

CHI. TUSI MAHER,

I have your letter. I am sorry to read of your illness. You need not have been over-enthusiastic. All that we do must be done with a detached mind. And nothing done in this way will be beyond our capacity and therefore affect our health. You should spare no pains so long as you are not attached to results. To exert oneself beyond that is to ruin one’s health and undo the work done. That was the cause of my breakdown. I did not observe even a nominal limit to my capacity during and after my tour of Maharashtra. Now I am paying the penalty ten times over. Had I added even of a quarter of the last two months (spent in rest) to the Maharashtra tour, the programme would have been completed smoothly and possibly I would have been spared this illness. For me the shore is in sight but you have just set out on your voyage. Taking a lesson from my case you should calm down and do quietly whatever you can. Milk and ghee may be taken without any qualms if considered necessary for recouping your strength. Haven’t I said that a friend who gives up milk and ghee is himself responsible for the risk incurred and that if he cannot sustain his body with this abstinence he must forthwith return to the milk and ghee diet.

¹ From the reference to Gandhiji’s tour of Maharashtra and to the passage of “two months” since his “breakdown”
I expect to have another letter from you before you reply to this.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6531

477. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

NANDI HILLS,
June 1, 1927

DEAR BROTHER,

In a few days’ time you will be on the waters and at the end of the month you will be in South Africa. My thoughts and my prayers will be with you throughout your stay in that subcontinent. This appointment is to me a unique event. I must not let myself say one word more. May God keep you and bless you.

Do let me have a line whenever you can. I hope you got the important letter¹ I addressed you at Madras just after we last met.

Yours sincerely,

THE RT. HON’BLE V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI
CARE OF SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY SANDHURST ROAD, GIRGAUM
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 12356

478. LETTER TO H. HARCOURT

NANDI HILLS,
June 1, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter of 1st May last for which I thank you. I have no recollection of the terms of the challenge I issued or your reply to the challenge.² And it would be very difficult for me now, especially when I am convalescing far away from the Ashram, to refresh my memory as to the terms of the challenge by referring to the papers of 1921-22.

² In his letter, Harcourt had said that he had replied in a note to a challenge addressed to Government by Gandhiji.

VOL. 38 : 2 JANUARY, 1927 - 3 JUNE, 1927 475
I have enquired about your pamphlet. I now understand that the pamphlet was seen by one of my companions; but, as it was seen a long time after its receipt by him and as I was in the midst of my work which hardly left me time to see any pamphlet, he did not bring it to my notice. I am sorry that it remained without acknowledgement. I have now sent for it. I have leisure enough during my convalescence to look at your pamphlet; and if I trace it, I shall certainly read it and let you have my views upon it.

I am sorry that you had to remain in suspense for such a long time with reference to the two matters about which you had a right to expect from me at least an acknowledgement and it is contrary to my habit to leave such things unacknowledged.

Yours sincerely,

H. HARcourt, ESQ.
119, GIPSY HILL
LONDON S.E. 19

From a photostat: S.N. 12494

479. LETTER TO J. P. BHANSALI

June 1, 1927

How can I put obstacles in your way or in the way of anyone else who, prompted by a religious motive, undertakes a religious effort. But I wish to place a suggestion before you. Fasting concerns the body. Hence, though it has an important place in one’s spiritual development, relatively it is a small thing. It is a means and serves a useful purpose only when the mind is behind it. I know that your mind cannot but be behind your fast, otherwise you could not have fasted for so many days. Nevertheless please think more deeply over the matter and reconsider it. Do you fast for some sort of self-purification? Do you weigh afterwards the benefits of your fasts? Or are you indifferent towards them? If you are, how do you justify your fasts as spontaneous acts? The desire for fruit is implicit in describing a fast as meant for self-purification. This is not an unworthy desire; it is a worthy one. In interpreting what is meant by the desire for fruit, one must use discrimination. One’s duty is to be a mumukshu. A mumukshu is one who aspires after moksha. The true meaning of renunciation of the desire for fruit is that one who renounces it knows that the fruit does follow. He does not mind if he himself does not enjoy that fruit. Absence of the desire for fruit makes a man courageous and helps to maintain the purity of the means.

1 Sidelights on the Crisis in India by H. Harcourt and Chhotu Ram; Harcourt was a member of the Indian Civil Service and Deputy Commissioner of Gurdaspur and Chhotu Ram was Minister for Agriculture in the Punjab Government.

But I have written more than I should. My aim was merely to caution you. That was my duty. But do as your inner voice tells you.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

480. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

BHAJ GHANSHYAMDASJI,

Jyaishtha Shukla 2 [June 1, 1927]

Your letter to hand. While I am dictating this letter Mahadev reminds me that you had sent word through Jamnalalji that I should write to you in English. But I propose to write nothing that needs be conveyed to anyone. I am, therefore, having this letter written in Hindi.

I have the letter you wrote from the steamer. I have already written two letters to your Geneva address. They must have reached you. I am steadily improving. I write regularly to pujya Malaviyaji. No sooner had I written to him this week than a lengthy telegram arrived from him, telling me that his health was now better but weakness persisted. He is at present in Bombay. It won’t be right to say I do not take care of my health. I do take all the precautions that I think are necessary to preserve my health. Pujya Malaviyaji does not do it as I have complained on many occasions and he took no rest even after solemnly promising to do so. He has great faith in the treatment of vaidyas and believes that he keeps and can keep well by taking their pills and powders. And so strong is his self-confidence that in spite of his weakness and ill health he is determined to live at least up to seventy-five. May God carry him through his resolve. Who can try to persuade him? I have written to him in a lighter vein but with as much severity as can be combined with courtesy. The truth is that man’s wisdom is determined by his past karma. In such matters there is very little scope for human effort. It is our duty to try and we ought to do it but there comes in the life of every man a time when all effort appears futile and luckily God gives us no fore-knowledge of the end so as to avoid the frustration. Why then worry over the inevitable? The affairs of the nation depend neither upon Malaviyaji nor upon Lalaji¹ nor upon me. All are but instruments; moreover I think a good man’s efforts bear fruit only after his death. It is not correct as Shakespeare says, “the evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones”. Evil does not endure. Rama is still in our midst and we cherish his memory. Ravana and his wickedness are no more. Not even the wicked utter his name. Who knows what Rama was in his own age? The poet certainly says that in his own lifetime even Rama did not escape recriminations. But now all his imperfections have, with his body, turned to ashes and we worship him as an incarnation of God. And the Kingdom of Rama is much wider now than it ever was while he lived in the body. When I write this I don’t mean to philosophize or persuade you to suppress your feelings. But I emphasize that we should never grieve over the death of one whom we regard as a saint. And we must have the firm belief that a saint’s deeds begin to work or, say, truly bear fruit only after his death. The achievements which were regarded as great in his own time are only infinitesimal compared to the influence they will have in times to come. Yet it is certainly our duty to emulate to the best of our ability the good deeds of those whom we regard as saints of our age.

1 Year inferred from the contents

Regarding your health I would suggest if you have no faith in allopathy, and you need not have it, that you should visit the institutions of Louis Kuhne and Just when you go to Germany. Their treatment with open air and water has benefited hundreds of people. Contact the Vegetarian Society both at London and Manchester. There are always some nice, serious-minded people to be found there who will be courteous and considerate. Of course, you will come across some faddists and fanatics too. You said milk was not available on the steamer. Next time you should carry Horlick’s Malted Milk. It is pure milk-powder. The chemists say that this dehydrated powder contains all that milk does. You can try it.

Yours,

Mohandas

From the Hindi original: C.W. 6148. Courtesy. G. D. Birla

¹ Lala Lajpat Rai
481. A LETTER

[After June 1, 1927]\(^1\)

This is a simple example of how to see action in non-action. With a spinning-wheel or the Gita or the Ramayana in one’s hand one can never say that one has no work to do. Till we are so content in our minds that we feel thus, we are bound to be restless for one reason or another. You ought to get over such restlessness; I have always expected that of you. You should finish with lightning speed whatever task falls to you in the natural course of events.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary.Courtesy: Narayan Desai

482. LETTER TO MANILAL NATHUBHAI DOSHI

[After June 1, 1927]\(^2\)

I got your letter. Brahmacharya is to be observed in three ways— in mind, in speech and in body. As long as the mind feels the slightest evil desire, there is always a danger of the desire for indulgence being aroused. The evil desires of the mind are not controlled in a moment; their control, being the aim of man’s highest effort, takes ages to attain. It is logical to believe that a person who conquers the evil desires in him in this life has succeeded in doing so by reason of the efforts in many lives rather than merely through his efforts in this life. If in our conscious moments the body is about to violate brahmacharya, it is our duty at that time to commit suicide and destroy the body. Hence one cannot be too vigilant towards one’s body; anyone who cannot be so vigilant has yet to learn the first lesson of brahmacharya. Brahmacharya in speech is practically included in bodily brahmacharya, for, though it is the mind that inspires speech, in itself speech is a bodily function. There remains the mind. As one acquires greater control over the mind, one finds it easy to keep the body under control without having to struggle to do so, but until the mind is completely subjugated, there is a chance of involuntary emission. We should not be frightened at such emission. It is the mind we should fear. Involuntary emission is Nature’s warning

---

\(^1\) In the source these two letters follow the entries for June 1, 1927
\(^2\) ibid.
to us that the mind has not been subjugated. We see that even lustful men remain complacent because they do not have involuntary emissions. They feel pleased with themselves because of their freedom from such emissions. But, truly speaking, their being self-satisfied in this manner is their fall. In America they employ means which prevent involuntary emissions while the mind remains filled with lustful thoughts. But to regard such a man as a brahmachari amounts to murdering the language. Hence, though safeguarding of the vital fluid is the external form of brahmacharya, one cannot definitely say that its preservation is necessarily a manifestation of brahmacharya. Nevertheless, there is no doubt that it is an essential aspect of complete brahmacharya. My point in writing this is that, if there is involuntary emission despite our continuous and sincere struggling to avoid it, despite our vigilance and after we have neglected to adopt no measure which can possibly help us to avoid it, we need not get frightened or lose heart and feel that we have committed a great sin; rather we should look upon it as kind Nature’s warning and look deeper into ourselves. We should find out where evil desires are lurking in the mind and strive harder still to banish them. The effort is its own reward. If we have been cheating ourselves and mentally indulging our secret desires, we should make sure that we run away from those activities or associations which cause our downfall or make us weak. It should not matter if, in doing so, one ruins one’s business or loses one’s wealth and passes for a fool among the people.

It is necessary to be almost completely free from sensuous desires in order to be blessed by the vision of God; the desires that still remain will be destroyed only by that vision. There is no sure means which can help us to have this vision. No one else can bring us to it. Truly speaking, the Shastras and those learned in them can only recount their experiences, and, if we lack faith, their experience may awaken faith in us; but no one else can make the necessary effort on our behalf. I can, therefore, tell you only this: do not give up your struggle for a single moment. To get a vision of God is the highest aim of human effort. Add up, therefore, all the struggles that human beings are ready to undertake to get certain things in this world and add up all those efforts; it is necessary, in order to get a vision of God, to make an effort a myriad times more difficult than the sum of all those struggles of human beings in this world. If one does not gain that vision, even after such an effort, one will be free to raise questions; there will be some justification for lack of faith then. But, till then, we must not give up our faith and our struggle.

The example of Mansukhlal which you have cited is inappropriate. He possessed much knowledge of the Shastras, and he struggled [for self-control] but he had not become free from desire, neither did he make such a claim. Hence the fact that he felt a desire for a thing like a water-melon during his last hours is not enough reason to fill us with despair or to justify our disparaging him. We should not deceive ourselves and believe, living in these evil times and in this world full of difficulties, that we can easily become free from desires, nor should we entertain such expectations even of a person whom we believe to be good lest we get a shock or doubt his goodness when we have a contrary experience of him. We should remember that the soul’s power is unlimited. He whose desires have totally perished is practically fit to be God. Let us not believe that good men with whom we come in contact have gained such fitness and thereby reduce God’s measuring rod to the littleness of our finger.

If we see any person standing even on the first notch on that yardstick, we should feel happy and hope that, if one person can become fit enough to stand on the first notch, all of us can, if we but try, acquire the strength to stand on the second notch, and strive on in that hope.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

483. HOW TO PROTECT THE COW

I gladly publish these notes¹ from Sjt. C. V. Vaidya. Those, who believe in the methods advocated in these columns for cow-protection, will be glad to find, that a scholar of Sjt. C. V. Vaidya’s repute is in substantial agreement with those methods. The distinction that the learned writer draws between pinjrapole and goshala need not cause any anxiety or difficulty. My own opinion is, that either may be also the other, so long as separate accounts are kept and separate methods of feeding and housing the disabled and the working animals are adopted. Legislation and the State aid advocated by Sjt. Vaidya need not at present distract our attention. For there is immense scope for private effort, building public opinion in favour of the proposed methods and showing their workability in practice. We are so far behind, indeed, that we have not even enough trained workers to conduct dairies and tanneries along the lines suggested by Sjt. Vaidya. There are at least 1,500 pinjrapoles and goshalas according to the figures in my possession, which can, without much further donation, but by efficient management, test the usefulness of the methods. Their adoption will simply revolutionize the management of these institutions and put life into these, today for the most part, lifeless bodies. These pinjrapoles and goshalas, as they are at present being conducted, are more a salve to our conscience than a protection to the cow. The learned writer’s categorical statement, that during the Vedic and the Brahmana period cow-slaughter was countenanced and beef was eaten, will be hotly contested by Pandit Satavalekar, who has been a close student of Vedic lore for the past 35 years, and by Acharya Ramadeva who claims to be a historian and to have critically studied the ancient history of Bharatavarsha. But with the historical portion practical men and women will not concern themselves. They will perhaps be content like me to hope that our ancestors in the Vedic times knew better than to seek to gain merit by sacrificing innocent animals or to satisfy their palate by eating beef.

¹ Not reproduced here

Young India, 2-6-1927

484. CHOICE BEFORE US

A correspondent sends me a cutting from the Press giving most gruesome facts about the growing infantile crimes and illicit gratification among girls in the New World.

A boy of four years is reported to have shot his mother, because she forbade him to play with matches. When the police confronted him, he was in no way taken aback. He threatened “to shoot them too”, and when questioned by the Coroner, he grew so impatient with him that he picked up a knife from among the exhibits lying in front of him and rushed to strike him. It is said, that hardly a day passes in America without some crime being committed by a boy or a girl, and in most American colleges there are said to be suicide clubs or crime societies, and the more horrible part of the account shows that many girls, even of exclusive colleges, have become so lawless as to run away in pursuit of illicit adventures.

It is difficult, in an age in which newspapers, in order to provide sensational food for their readers, invent stories when they have no facts to weave narratives from, to believe without reservation reports such as I have condensed. But whilst one may make ample allowance for exaggeration, there is no doubt that infantile crime and lawlessness among boys and girls are sufficiently extensive in the New World to make us beware of a civilization which must be held responsible for these crimes and lawlessness. That life in the West goes on—and it may be said progressively after a fashion—in spite of these infantile crimes, may be granted. And it may also be granted that the wise people of the West are not only not unaware of the evil, but that they are manfully struggling to overtake it. Nevertheless we have to decide whether we shall indiscriminately copy this civilization. We may well pause in the face of the awful revelations that come to us from the West from time to time, and ask ourselves, whether after all it is not better to hold by our own civilization and seek, in the light of the comparative knowledge that is available to us, to reform it by removing its known excrescences. For, there is no doubt, that if the West has its terrific problem arising out of its own civilization, we have no less grave problems of our own to deal with.

It is perhaps unnecessary, if not useless, in this connection to weigh the merits of the two civilizations. It is likely that the West has evolved a civilization suited to its climate and surroundings, and similarly, we have a civilization suited to our conditions, and both are good in their own respective spheres. This may be safely said that the crimes and the lawlessness described by me are almost impossible with us, and I hold that this is due to our pacific training and the restraining influence in the midst of which we are brought up. Cowardliness which often springs from pacific training, and obsequiousness which comes from the restraint that is handed down from generation to generation, have somehow to be avoided, if the ancient civilization is not to perish before the mad modern rush. The distinguishing characteristic of modern civilization is an indefinite multiplicity of human wants. The characteristic of ancient civilization is an imperative restriction upon and a strict regulating of those wants. The modern or Western insatiableness arises really from want of a living faith in a future state and therefore also in Divinity. The restraint of ancient or Eastern civilization arises from a belief, often in spite of ourselves, in a future state and the existence of a Divine Power. The record condensed above is a warning if we will take it, against a blind imitation of the West, which one sees so often in the city life of India and especially among the educated classes. Some of the immediate and brilliant results of modern inventions are too maddening to resist. But I have no manner of doubt that the victory of man lies in that resistance. We are in danger of bartering away the permanent good for a momentary pleasure.

Young India, 2-6-1927

485. THE WHEEL OF LIFE AND THE VEDAS

Pandit Satavalekar of Aundh wrote in 1922 a booklet in Hindi called चक्ष्य में ज्ञाती i.e., Charkha in the Vedas, and favoured me with a copy whilst I was resting in the Yeravda jail. I glanced then through its pages and with interest, but asked myself what good would it be to us in this age of so-called advancement to know that the charkha was to be found in the Vedas. Everybody knows that our remote ancestors spun and wove in their cottages even as they did so many other things. But we no longer do them. So I said to myself. The booklet, I hastily concluded, was not of much practical value and I laid it aside. On the sick-bed I have again an opportunity of turning, so far as my strength permits, to quiet studies. Another book of Pandit Satavalekar (of which more hereafter) has attracted me to his writings, and he has now favoured me with another copy of the booklet in question. I observe that it has undergone a second edition. I have read it this time more carefully, and I find that the mantras cited by the author from the Vedas demonstrate not merely the fact that our ancestors in those times were spinning and weaving, but they present, perhaps, a novel way of looking at the wheel. Here is what may be called the key mantra for spinners and weavers from Rig-Veda (X. 53-6) quoted by the author:

\begin{quote}
\text{रेणु सम्यक रजसों मनुष्यं स्मरणो ज्ञातीत्;}
\text{पञ्जो रश्मिया कुत्तान || अनुवादण वयत्}
\text{रूपं भौतिक जन्य दैव्यं ज्ञात नं || अदृ १५३ १६}
\end{quote}

I give a free rendering as follows:

Having spun the thread and given it a shining colour, weave it without knots, and so guard the pathways which the enlightened have chalked out, and thinking well, lead posterity unto the divine light, or (according to the author’s rendering) bring forth divine progeny. This truly is the work of poets.

If the translation is at all correct—and the author has not merely given his own rendering but has reproduced Griffith’s translation also in his booklet—the mantra proves not merely the existence of spinning and weaving in the Vedic times, but that it was the calling of the noblest men and women as well of the humblest. It was one of the pathways which wisdom hath prepared and to guard which was the work of poets. Little did I know, when I humbly presented the charkha to our Poet as a sacrificial rite, that I had behind me the authority of what is understood to be the oldest Veda. I commend the mantra to all those who are engaged in reviving this ancient and sacred industry and art. Let them thoughtfully recite this mantra whilst doing their sacrificial spinning. Let them treasure it in their hearts and keep their faith unshaken even in the face of disappointments and reverses in their forward march.

I cannot resist quoting another beautiful mantra from the booklet:

यो यज्ञो विश्वतस्तुभिस्तत एकाः देवनेंभरावतः ||
इमे वर्णिता पिताः व आयुः प्रक्षिप्य व पवयेत्साते तते || ऋ क १०। १३०। १

This is again from the Rig-Veda (X. 130-1). It means:

Hundred and one artists are working at the sacrifice which through the myriad threads overspreads the earth. Here are the elderly guardians. They watch the processes saying, “Weave on here, do this right there.”

Thus we see that spinning and weaving was regarded as a sacrifice even in those ancient days and commanded the protecting care of the elders. The author shows abundant evidence that both spinning and weaving were done by men as well as women. In fact the industry was as universal as farming. He shows too that the sartorial art was well advanced in those times. There were different dresses prescribed for different occasions as also for different states. If the farmer had his langoti, royalty had its robe. There is mention of colours, fringes and gold borders. The author has also shown that some of the most beautiful metaphors have been taken from the language of spinners and weavers.

I must resist the temptation to quote more extracts from this thoughtfully written booklet. There is a mantra which proves that the

---

1 Rabindranath Tagore
2 Loin-cloth
soldiers of those days were not above doing these processes; that the bridegroom’s garment was always made by the bride as is still the custom in Assam.

There is one thing, however, the author leaves to other research scholars in the Vedic lore to discover. So far as he has been able to study the Vedas, he has not found a single equivalent for cotton as he has for wool and silk. He is, therefore, unable to say whether in those days our ancestors had only woollen and silken garments or whether they had already discovered the cotton fibres.

Young India, 2-6-1927

486. LETTER TO HELENE HAUSSDING

NANDI HILLS,
June 2, 1927

I have your sweet little note. But it is disturbing to think that you are not yet well. If your recovery is dependent upon mine, well then you must already have recovered, because you had two letters from me telling you that I was on the road to recovery. I hope you got those two letters. But though I am on the road to recovery, I have to take care of myself and take plenty of rest. I, therefore, do most of my correspondence lying down and through dictation. Hence this typewritten letter.

You know my theory of the disease, don’t you? I regard it as a result of some conscious or unconscious sin as I call or breaches of Nature’s laws. When you lose mental equanimity, be it ever so little, it sets up terrible agitations in the body, and these latter produce visible effects upon it. I know that I am not free from these affections or perturbations as I would call them and I had the collapse. I do not flatter myself with such unctuous pleas as overwork, terrific strain, etc., in order to drown my conscience. On the contrary, I know that overwork and terrific strain are just as apprehensible, even though they may be in a good cause, as a drinking-bout or visiting cinemas. The results of both are the same. And, if I have attained equanimity, I should unerringly know when to work, when not to work and should be able to have the same control over the mind as I should have over the body. But I confess I have not. The mind continuously gives me [the] slip and outruns me. What wonder then that I am still convalescing? But all this confession is merely a preface to tell you that you must not hug your disease to yourself and from your philosophic height blame the doctor, the weather, the food and everything and everybody else but yourself. Let us call a spade a spade.

Yours,

MISS HELENE HAUSSDING
GERMANY

From a photostat: S.N. 12510

487. LETTER TO M. M. GIDWANI

NANDI HILLS,
June 2, 1927
DEAR FRIEND,

It was good of you to have sent your article for Young India entitled “The Present Situation”. But I am afraid that it will not be of much use for the readers of Young India. That it will lead popular education is an admitted fact. But the only question is how to do it and who shall do it. And Young India is published either to suggest new lines of thought or to show practical methods of working out plans and policies already accepted. I return your article lest you may want it.

Yours sincerely,

PROF. M. M. GIDWANI, M. A.
EDITOR,
“SINDHUDESH”
KARACHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 14142

488. LETTER TO GOSIBEHN

NANDI HILLS,
June 2, 1927
I am glad I have at least succeeded in drawing you. I have ward to your letter especially after Perin had prepared me for It. I am glad also of the confession. But a good confession results in a change of ways. But I see you have not yet become a Gujarati scholar, nor evidently did those excellent copy-books sent by grandfather produce any impression upon you. But here I cannot judge. If I did, it would be like pot calling the kettle black. In spite of schoolmasters having put copy-books before me, I write a hand much worse than yours.

I thought that Nargis had sent A.E.’s book The Interpreters. It came before your letter. I think that very book was sent to me through Jaijee when I was in Yeravda. But alas! I was discharged before I could read the book through. There is not much danger of a sudden discharge now. I shall therefore read it and tell you what I think of it.

We remove to Bangalore on Sunday. You must all come there. There is going to be a Khadi Exhibition in July. I am writing to Mithubehn about it, and if you could come for that exhibition, you could all become stall holders and take the Bangalore public by storm.

I am gaining strength slowly.

Yours,

SHRIMATI GOSIBEHN
OMRA HALL, PANCHGANI
From a photostat: S.N. 14143

489. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

NANDI HILLS,
June 3, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. It fills me with both sorrow and joy; sorrow because for the time being at any rate that Ashram has fallen in my estimation, and joy because you are so gentle and yet so brave. You become a shield both for yourself and Gangu. That you committed the initial mistake of accepting the invitation to witness the bhang preparation dwindles into insignificance in the face of your subsequent firmness combined with gentleness. Your acceptance of the invitation was as good or as bad as acceptance of an invitation to watch the manufacture of brandy in a brewery. But that acceptance itself was due to your great anxiety to please Maharajji and not out of any unpardonable or improper curiosity. On reading your letter, my first thought was to wire to you for you, Valunjker and Gangu to leave the Ashram at once. I then said to myself that that would be wrong especially when you had proved your presence of mind and bravery in the face of a wretched situation. I therefore decided to write to you and give you my reflections and then let you act as you thought proper in the circumstances.
I regard the scene you have described as highly improper, even immoral, on the part of those who sought to tempt you and almost force the vile stuff down your throat and poor Gangu’s, and then as you turned your backs upon them, to sprinkle the dirty water was more like a scene in a tavern than in a \textit{brahmacharya} Ashram, where service of God and man is supposed to be the goal and where \textit{brahmacharya} is strictly enjoined. Your fast was good for your purification. It has washed you clean of the initial mistake, and if they will take it, it is a gentle warning to the managers of the Ashram. It seems to me, however, that you should follow up the action by having a firm conversation with the Rao Saheb and other inmates, and, if you wish it, with the Maharajji himself. Whereas in a previous letter\footnote{Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 28-5-1927.} I told you that it was no business of yours to rid the Ashram of the bhang habit, now in view of the developments described by you, it becomes your duty either to end the bhang or to end your presence there. I regard it to be next to impossible, both for men and women, to remain without sensual agitations whilst they are under the influence of bhang even though they may be able to exercise outward bodily control, though from my own experience of it, it seems to me that when I was under the influence of bhang any man or woman could have played fast or loose with me. And now that your eyes have been opened, it would be improper to lend any countenance to that Ashram unless they are sincerely ready to reform their ways. You may not co-operate with the Ashram even to gain a kingdom or even if it was the only place where you could finish your Hindi course. You may tell them that you are not there to impose your views, but as a friend you were bound to draw their attention to the evil which had forced itself upon your attention, and that unless the evil was eradicated—and that too not for your sake but out of conviction—you could not remain there to receive personal courtesies and personal favours in the shape of Hindi teaching. If therefore they could not see eye to eye with you about the evil of bhang, you would still be friends with them but you couldn’t possibly remain in the Ashram, nor Valunjker and Gangu who are also under the same discipline as you. You may read this letter to whomsoever you like. Discuss first with Valunjker—for, he is a wise man—the propriety of the step I have suggested, see what he has to say, see also what Gangu has to say. She is like a simple glorious child. But wisdom often comes out of the mouths of babes and her intuition may be better than our reasoned judgement. And then if you feel like referring to me, do so by all means. If you wish to consult Jamnalalji, you may write to him also. I am sending him your letter and a copy of this so that you don’t have to say much to him. Do nothing in a hurry, nothing in a huff, certainly nothing in anger; but take whatever step you wish after humble prayer and with the greatest deliberation.

I am perfectly at ease having dictated this letter. Such experiences, when they come to us unsought, are precious trials that God sends to those who would listen to the “still small voice” within. If I have read more into your letter than you meant and have been guilty of any injustice to the people at the Ashram, you will not

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5233. Courtesy: Mirabehn

490. LETTER TO K. VYASA RAO

NANDI HILLS,
June 3, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have carefully gone through your pamphlet Foundations of Swaraj, as also your manifesto. About the manifesto, I cannot say anything because I do not know the facts. About the pamphlet, I am sorry to say it was a deep disappointment to me. You have lost yourself in the exuberance of your own language. You have not taken the trouble of studying a movement, not by any means insignificant so far at least as its extent is concerned, and have set about demolishing a picture of your own imagination. You have not cared to understand the implications of soul-power or the implications of the spinning-wheel. The other chapters betray a most superficial study of questions handled by you. I understood from you that you had 25 years’ experience of public service at your back. It is a matter of deep sorrow to me that so many years of study should have brought forth such little fruit. Please do not be flattered by the testimonials that you have received about your other book from distinguished newspapers. I know nothing about the other book. But if it is based upon the same preparation that is betrayed by the pamphlet you left with me, it could not be up to much. A good command over a language is often a hindrance rather than a help when that facility for expression is not backed by deep thinking and industrious research.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SIT. K. VYASA RAO
CHENGALVARAYA MUDALI STREET
TRIPLICANE
MADRAS

From a photostat: G.N. 84; also S.N. 14144

491. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

ANDI HILLS,
JUNE 3, 1927

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

What a wonderful and poetic love letter you have sent me! I would wonder if my letter to Father crossed yours or whether this letter of yours is prompted by the reminder sent in my letter to Father. Not only must I not write much myself, but I must not even dictate for any length of time. I don’t want therefore to chat with you long. But let me hasten to tell you that if you can be happy and comfortable in the Ashram, I would love to have you in spite of your not doing any work with your hands. Spinning by the hand is after all a test, an emblem, an earnest of what is within, and I know that you have all that substance within you. What does it matter that through no present fault of your own, you are simply physically incapable of spinning. The work done by the spirit within is infinitely precious, more precious than the formal spinning done by many without the heart in it. Come therefore when you like to the Ashram as your very home and I shall certainly take all that your voice can give me. But I should prize your presence even if you had not that rich melodious voice. What I prize is your goodness, which can act without speaking. It is like the fragrance of a sweet flower. It does not need any movement and yet the fragrance is all pervading and unmistakable, and it survives for a while even after the flower is withdrawn. How much longer must the fragrance of goodness last even after the body is withdrawn? But be absolutely sure that you will like the Ashram and that your body can sustain the Ashram life.

Do you write to Mira? If not, do please now. Her address is Bhagavadbhakti Ashram, Rampura, Rewari (Dt. Gurgaon).

With love to all.

Yours,
BAPU

MISS RAHANA TYABJI
SOUTH WOOD
MUSSOORIE

From a photostat: S.N. 9602

492. LETTER TO SECRETARY, A.I.S.A.

NANDI HILLS,
June 3, 1927

THE SECRETARY
ALL-INDIA SPINNERS’ ASSOCIATION
MIRZAPUR
AHMEDABAD

DEAR SIR,

Whilst there remains any uncertainty about the legality of the resolution about Jamnalalji being officiating Chairman of the Council, the process I suggest in my capacity as President is that anything that is required to be done should first receive the approval of Jamnalalji as if he was legally the officiating Chairman and then his decision should be submitted to me for formal and final approval. That will save me from my having to critically examine the merits of each matter.

With reference to the ten thousand rupees supplied to the Maharashtra Agency in anticipation of sanction, I entirely approve. And so do I approve the proposal to pay the Karnatak Agency the collections already made by me at Nipani, Belgaum and elsewhere.

I think it is quite the proper thing to hold a meeting of the Council in Bangalore at the time of the forthcoming Exhibition or earlier, whichever date may suit you, Jamnalalji and others.

I descend to Bangalore on Sunday. I understand that there is very ample accommodation in the State House placed at my disposal.

Yours faithfully,

From a microfilm: S.N. 19778
493. LETTER TO DR. M. S. KELKAR

NANDI HILLS,
June 3, 1927

DEAR DOCTOR,

Your letters are always interesting and instructive. Do I gather that you would prefer my giving up wheat-meal or oatmeal, salt, soda and vegetables altogether and confine myself to milk, water and fruit? Am I right in thinking that you consider raw milk better than boiled milk?

Yes, I well remember your talk about sterile eggs and their culture. I shall enquire here myself; but if you have any literature on the subject, I would like to study it. Without further consideration I am prepared to say that I would put sterile eggs, as you have described them to be, under the same category as milk. I am therefore open to receive further instruction about them and their culture.

You must some day try to convince me about the value of astrology; for, I do not deny the possibility of its being a true science. But I do not regard the investigation and use of every science as beneficial to mankind.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14145

494. LETTER TO GANGUBEHN

June 3, 1927

Brahmacharya, etc., can be practised only by an inner urge and by cultivating spiritual energy. This energy again can only be cultivated by constant application. There are two means of such application. One, discriminating and meditative study of good books, and two, efforts to practise the noble principles one has learnt. Learning without practice goes waste and serves only to turn one’s head. Whatever therefore one has learnt one should immediately reduce to action. Therefore, a woman wanting to practise brahma-charya should take to non-violence, truth, non-possession, etc. She should thus zealously guard herself against the slightest untruth, against violence in thought, word or deed and should strive to give up all possessions. The scriptures tell us that courage and contentment are also to be cultivated. Courage should mean both inward and outward courage and it should be practised as soon as its implications are clearly understood. So is the case with contentment. We should not be upset if someone abuses us, maligns us or calls us fools. This is a sign of contentment. We should remain contented even if we do not get food when hungry or we do not get clothes when we shiver. And as long as we do not practise what we have learnt we should not take a new lesson. We must apply ourselves to a greater understanding of what we have learnt, and think of nothing else. This also is a part of the dharma of brahmacharya because the latter is the high watermark of discipline.

[From Hindi]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

495. LETTER TO S. D. SATAVALEKAR

June 3, 1927

I have almost finished reading the current issue of Vaidika Dharma. I wish to make some comments about the article on brahmacharya in the issue. You have interpreted brahmacharya only as preservation of the vital fluid and mentioned manly pursuits like hunting and so on in that context. Visiting foreign lands and founding colonies have also been mentioned. In my humble view this involves unsound logic. The first fallacy consists of narrow definition. The brahmacharya which you have explained by first quoting a mantra from the Atharva-Veda, viz., the gods overcame death by the strength of brahmacharya, and by practising it man also can overcome death, cannot be restricted to mere preservation of the vital fluid. The other is the fallacy of too wide definition. Brahmacharya need not be associated with acts of valour, etc. We see this in the world today. If the mere preservation of semen is the object of brahmacharya, it can be attained, as I have said in one of my letters, in a few minutes by a surgical operation. This operation does not make a man impotent; but allows him to indulge in sexual pleasures without losing his vital fluid. Such a man does not lose by way of manly adventures either. I am sure, however, that you will not call this brahmacharya.

The brahmacharya which you seek is attainable only by the subjugation of sexual and other desires. The preservation of the vital fluid, although important, is only a bye-product. Its direct and primary objective is nothing less than communion with the Brahman. This is the only desirable and legitimate adventure on the path of brahmacharya. Why should a man take to the uphill task of conquering desires for the sake of brahmacharya, when manly adventures like vanquishing the enemy or undertaking foreign expeditions can be achieved by thousands of people without practising brahmacharya? And nobody does it, as I can vouchsafe from my fairly wide experience. Where can we find braver warriors than the German and the English soldiers? They are regularly provided with prostitutes. Hundreds, if not thousands, of innocent girls are sacrificed to the sexual hunger of these soldiers. No one despises these brave Kshatriyas who defend the country; on the other hand, educated and civilized men and women dote on these soldiers. I am not employing epithets like Kshatriyas, etc., on my own or to explain my meaning. In my view they are no warriors at all. I do not consider them defenders of the country. Dharma declines when we sing praises of these men. But under modern civilization there is nothing but praise for these people.

Now let us come to the Indian scene. Pathans, Sikhs and Gorkhas are the three acknowledged martial races. There is a similar provision of prostitutes for them as in the case of the German and other soldiers. They have an honoured place, you know, in the Empire. If you look at the ancient lores, adultery has been tolerated in the case of Kshatriyas. I write all this because I wish that the people should derive full benefit from your profound studies of the Vedas and other ancient scriptures. This will be possible by putting the scriptures in the crucible of modern conditions, by objective observation and intense churning. I can write a lot on this subject, but this should do to indicate to you the burden of my theme. Another reason for my brevity is that I have little energy. I have great respect for your learning and truthfulness, which has impelled me to write so much.

[From Hindi]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

EXTRACTS FROM SHAPURJI SAKLATVALA’S OPEN LETTER

DEAR COMRADE GANDHI,

We are both erratic enough to permit each other to be rude in order to freely express oneself correctly instead of getting lost in artificiality of phraseology....

During my conversation with you at certain periods you did not seem to take a definite attitude with regard to the value of organization of labour and peasants. You emphatically argued that the charkha movement was making organization. I emphatically deny it.... For centuries together, millions of men and women in India have been boiling rice, utilizing similar quantities of rice and water and conducting cooking operations.... All these operations surely have not produced any organization and the work of spinning can never do so any more than the work of cooking....

Before 1900, leaders who . . . worked to build up hopes of salvation . . . were popular leaders as Gladstone was to the British, Bismarck to the Germans, or Parnell to the Irish or Dadabhai or Pherozeshah and Surendranath to the Indians. By the year 1900 the masses of men got tired and sick and their hearts began to burn with fire. The change came on very rapidly and universally and only such individuals as expressed the burning fire of the heart and the revolt of the suffering human beings were taken as leaders. The first task of these was to express boldly and fearlessly the unexpressed voice of the people. The second task of these leaders was . . . to make it absolutely impossible for the old order to continue to function. The third task was to reconstruct and arduously and slowly to build up a new life. Ireland produced a De Valera. He did No. I and 2 and his people are now bravely carrying on his task No. 3. Russia has produced Lenin. He did No. 1 and 2 and though his life was short, he led his people on the right path regarding No. 3. Turkey produced Kemal. He did No. I and 2 and is fortunate enough to be kicking and vigorous to carry on his task No. 3. China produced Sun-Yat-Sen. He completed No. I and 2 and after his death his well-organized and well-disciplined followers are carrying on task No. 3. In Italy, though in contrary direction, Mussolini plays the same individual part, India at that moment announced to the world her leader to be Gandhi. You performed No. 1 but you abandoned task No. 2 and so task No. 3 is out of the question and we are so overwhelmed with the disastrous defect at the second stage of your struggle that our lot today is harder than before. . . .

You have created an influence over our countrymen in the lowest strata of society wider and deeper than anybody else. However, what is your real object? If your purpose is to give your share in the national and political work, your approach to the people should be on terms of absolute equality and your task must be to inspire confidence into them. From this point of view you must stop allowing people to address you as a Mahatma.

Then there is one thing that I witnessed at Yeotmeal which has hurt me greatly and I had some slight evidence of it before. Your work regarding the removal of untouchability is grand in its aspiration and is not bad in its success as it is generally carried on. However I strongly object to your permitting my countrymen and countrywomen to touch your feet and put their fingers to their eyes. Such touchability appears to be more damnable than untouchability. You are ruining the mentality and the psychology of these villagers for another generation or two. You are preparing the country not for mass civil disobedience but for servile obedience and for a belief that there are superior persons on earth and Mahatmas in this life at a time when in this country the white man’s prestige is already a dangerous obstacle in our way. Politically this career of yours is ruinous and from a humanitarian point of view its degenerating influence appears to me to be a moral plague....

What I want of you is that you be a good old Gandhi, put an ordinary pair of khaddar trousers and coat and come out and work with us in the ordinary way. Come and organize with us (as you alone by yourself have failed) our workers, our peasants and our youths, not with a metaphysical sentimentality but with a set purpose a clear-cut and well-defined object and by methods such as by experiment are making success for all human beings.

Therefore before I go, I should like you to get up one morning as from a dream and to say “Yes” and many of us can soon be put together in a good team and set about putting an end to so many deplorable conditions of life in India about which none of us has any doubt.

I remain,
Yours fraternally,

S. SAKLATVALA

The Hindustan Times, 17-3-1927

APPENDIX II

SHRADHANAND MEMORIAL

An appeal signed by Pandit Malaviyaji and Lala Lajpat Rai says:

It is decided that, except the appeal for 2_ lakhs for the Gurukul Kangri which had already been issued by the Punjab Arya Pratinidhi Sabha, only one appeal should be issued on behalf of the Hindu community as a whole for Rs. 10 lakhs, 5 lakhs of which should be kept as a permanent endowment and 5 lakhs should be used immediately as follows: 1_ lakhs for the uplift of the depressed classes (achhutoddhar); 1 _ for carrying on the work of shuddhi and 1 _ for promoting Hindu sangathan. The Trustees shall select such agencies of the Hindu Mahasabha, Sanatan Dharma Sabha and the Arya Samaj, including the Bharatiya Shuddhi Sabha and the Dalitodhar Sabha of Delhi to carry out the objects of the Trust as they may consider fit from time to time, subject to such general conditions for the submission and audit.
of accounts as they may lay down; but the work of sangathan shall be carried out through the Hindu Mahasabha alone. The interest of the five lakhs of the permanent fund will also be spent on the three objects named above in the proportion stated. It has also been decided that at least half the total amount raised in a province shall be spent within that province, and this applies to the interest of the permanent endowment fund also.

It has been also resolved that steps be taken to acquire the house in which Swami Shraddhanandji was murdered with the object of converting it into Swami Shraddhanand Memorial Bhavan.

Every donor is free to earmark his donation for any of the purposes named above. The donations will be strictly used for that purpose or purposes only for which a donor has given it.

All donations should be remitted to the Manager, The Punjab National Bank Ltd., Delhi, to be credited to the Shraddhanand Memorial Fund. When remitting money, remitters are requested to send to the Bank a complete statement of the names and addresses of donors, and the amounts subscribed by each donor and also his instructions, if any. They are also requested to send a copy of such statements to the Secretary, Shraddhanand Memorial Fund, Delhi.

To ensure that all subscriptions are duly credited to the Fund, a formal receipt for the amount subscribed will be sent to the donors by the Secretary, Shraddhanand Memorial Fund. If such a receipt is not received by a donor within fifteen days of payment, it is requested that the donor should inform the Secretary of the fact.

We owe it to the memory of the revered Swamiji that the sum of ten lakhs for which the appeal has been issued by the Hindu Mahasabha, should be fully subscribed at the latest by the 30th of April next,

We are of opinion that all efforts should be concentrated on raising the All-India Memorial and that all movements for local or sectional memorials should be deferred until the All-India Memorial Fund is fully subscribed.¹

¹ The appeal ends here. The concluding paragraph is editorial comment.

APPENDIX III

MEDICAL OPINIONS²

Mr. Gandhi has had a mild stroke of apoplexy. He must not be allowed his usual correspondence for a week. His speaking and travelling programmes should be indefinitely postponed. Absolute rest and freedom from his regular activities should ² These were published under the title “What Doctors Say”.

498

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
be enjoined for an indefinite period. Mr. Gandhi is advised to cancel his travelling and speaking programmes during the hot weather.

W. J. WANLESS

Mahatma Gandhi is now threatened with an impending danger of apoplexy due to high blood-pressure condition as a result of continuous overwork. He must have absolute rest in a cool climate for some time to come. He is also advised to cancel all his present programmes till his condition decidedly improves.

G. V. ANKLIKER, M.D. AND C. R. KOKATNUR, M.D.
The Bombay Chronicle, 29-3-1927

APPENDIX IV

WHOM KHADI STANDS FOR

'THE MAN WITH THE HOE'

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face,
And on his back the burden of the world.
Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
Staid and stunned, a brother to the Ox?
Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back his brow,
Whose breath blew out the light within his brain?

* * *

Oh, masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
Is this the handiwork you give to God,
This monstrous thing distorted and soul-quenched?
How will you ever straighten up this shape,
Touch it again with immortality,
Give it the upward looking and the light:
Rebuild in it the music and the dream?

—Edward Markham

Young India, 31-3-1927

APPENDIX V

FROM THE PREFACE TO “BAPU’S LETTERS TO MIRA”

In order that the reader may have a clearer background, I will explain briefly the outline of events in my life which led me to Bapu. Having been brought up in an English country home, I was familiar with rural life, besides which there was, inherent in me from the beginning, a profound love of Nature. At the age of 15, I first heard the music of Beethoven. Forthwith my spirit within was awakened to a living sense of the Divine Power, and prayer to God became a reality. Through Beethoven’s music I was led to Romain Rolland, and through Romain Rolland to Bapu. These were not just easy stages. On the contrary, turmoil, darkness, hope, despair—all had to be passed through before the pure Light of Truth broke in upon my troubled soul and led me to my destination.

All along a power was impelling me. I did not understand it for a long while, but, by the time I came to know of Romain Rolland, this force was becoming apparent to me, and from the time of our first meetings at Villeneuve, an extraordinary sense of mellow happiness possessed me. I felt something was coming. I had not the slightest idea what. I only knew that all would be well. Even when Romain Rolland talked to me about Bapu, and said a little book he had written about him was in the Press, I did not realize more than that I must read the book. Then the day came when the book was published. I went to the publisher’s shop in the Latin Quarter of Paris, where I was then staying. The whole shop window was full of a little book with an orange coloured cover on which was printed in black ‘Mahatma Gandhi’. I bought a copy, took my lodging and began to read. I could not put it down. I read and read, and as I read the dawn in my heart glowed brighter and brighter, and by the time I had finished, the Sun of Truth was pouring his rays into my soul. From that moment I knew that my life was dedicated to Bapu. That for which I had been waiting had come, and it was this.

I straightaway went to London and booked a passage to India at the P. & O. office. I also sought out and devoured all the literature I could; writings of Bapu, writings of Tagore, English and French translations of the Bhagavad Gita; and even the Upanishads and Vedas I peeped into. But very soon I began to realize that I was a fool to think that I could rush to Bapu like this. I was wholly unfit spiritually and physically, and I must first put myself through a severe training. I accordingly went back to the P. & O. office and changed my reserved berth for one a year later.

I now set about things in a thorough and systematic way. First I studied the rules and regulations of the Sabarmati Ashram in every detail. Then I began changing my diet item by item, until I reached pure vegetarian food. I started sitting cross-legged on the floor. Ten minutes at a stretch was all I could do in the beginning, but with steady practice I became perfectly at ease. I commenced lessons in Urdu and of course learnt carding, spinning and weaving. This had to be in wool, but gave me good practice. At the same time study of the literature continued. In the midst of this training news came in the papers that Bapu had gone on a 21 days’ fast for Hindu-Muslim unity. As the days went by, the papers began saying that Bapu would probably not survive. I prayed to God in anguish. The days dragged on. But I never slackened in my training because, even if Bapu were to pass away in his physical form, I knew I must go to India to serve his cause. It seemed an eternity, but at last the 21 days were over and the news came that the fast had been safely broken.

Up to now I had not written a word to Bapu. But on the successful completion of the fast, my heart was so full of thankful joy that I just had to write.

Bapu’s Letters to Mira, pp. 3-5
1. LETTER TO SECRETARY, A.I.S.A.

NANDI HILLS,
June 4, 1927

DEAR SIR,

With reference to your letter of the 31st ultimo, I have already said that the Karnatak Agency may be supplied with funds in anticipation of the Council’s approval provided of course that Jamnalalji has approved. Regarding Maharashtra what Jamnalalji says should be done. But I suggest that Sjt. Dastane should be fully satisfied about the wisdom of the decision. He would see the wisdom of consolidating what has already been undertaken.

Let Satis Babu’s letter be circulated. His insistence shows the necessity of holding the Council meeting as early as possible.

Yours faithfully,
BAPU

From a microfilm: S.N. 19779

2. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

NANDI HILLS,
June 4, 1927

MY DEAR BROTHER,

I remain unaffected by the effusion which the Chronicle has passed on to you and you to me. Of course you do not expect absolute smooth sailing. Such imbecile opposition you will have. But I know that you will stand unmoved. You will have the solid backing of the vast majority of the Indian population.

I sent you a little note two three days ago, which I hope was duly delivered to you. May God guide your footsteps.

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 12358

1 Vide “Letter to V. S. Srinivasa Sastri”, 1-6-1927
3. LETTER TO S. D. NADKARNI

NANDI HILLS,
June 4, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I am glad that you are moving our friends on your side to open a local public temple to the so-called untouchables. I hope that the forthcoming meeting will pass the contemplated resolution unanimously, and if they do, they will be doing justice more to themselves than to whom we have so long held under suppression. My opinion is our temples have been forsaken by God. Because of our ungodly treatment of a portion of our countrymen, God has made Himself untouchable, unapproachable and unseeable. God will re-enter our temples only when we have opened not merely our temples but our hearts to these fellow-countrymen and fellow-religionists.

Though your letter for Young India does not seem to me to rise to the height of some of the former communications you have been good enough to send me, I propose to publish it as soon as I can, if only for the well-meaning and well-meant hits at me which I know are intended to travel far beyond me, in the hope that they will produce some impression.

I hope my message will be in time for the meeting. I got your letter only last evening and I am sending you the message by the return post.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

S. D. NADKARNI, ESQ.
KARWAR
(N. KANARA)

From a photostat: S.N. 14617

1 In reply to a letter written on behalf of the workers of Karwar, seeking Gandhiji’s opinion on the question of “untouchables and temple entry”.
2 To Vithoba
3 Published under the caption “On Behalf of Untouchables”, in Young India, 30-6-1927; vide also “Our Shame”, 30-6-1927.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
4. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

June 4, 1927

You will have to struggle. Manliness consists in struggling. It is such struggling that moulds us. Hence be fearless and fight on. Never lose heart, and, if the enemy succeeds in throwing you down though you may have fought with all your strength, do not get dejected in the least. Be on your feet again and resume the fight. When we do not share responsibility for our defeat, we have no cause at all for shame, for then our defeat is no defeat. You should be very vigilant so that you may not have involuntary emission during sleep, and, if you feel the desire aroused at any hour during the night, you should without a moment’s delay, get out of bed immediately and drink some cold water, then sit in cold water and pour a jugful of cold water over the genitals. Often we become calmed down by walking about for a while and repeating Ramanama. Moreover, whenever we are unoccupied we should recall to mind perfect brahmacharis like Bhishma1 and others, that is to say, we should think of their strength of mind. If these seem too distant in time, we should reflect on the lives of Andrews, Pearson, Kitchin and others. If even these seem too remote, at any rate we have with us the five—Vinoba, Balkrishna, Surendra, Chhotelal and Krishnadas. We can cite other examples from India; you should tell yourself that you can certainly do what they can. You should also reflect from time to time on daily readings from the Gita; that too can give us great peace of mind.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

5. LETTER TO SHARADABEHN KOTAK

June 4, 1927

What you write about the problem of thieves is quite right. My putting the question to you did not mean that I expected you to be able to find the solution immediately. It was intended to make all the women think. Men must do their duty of protecting women. But after 1 A character in the Mahabharata who early in life took a vow of celibacy and observed it throughout his long life.

---

all men’s bodies are, like those of women, as brittle as glass bangles, though perhaps the male bangles are harder and can bear stronger blows. What women should do when those bangles are broken, is a question which they themselves should consider. There is the same atman in woman as in man. It is not affected by differences of caste, sex or country. The wide-awake atman in a heroic woman can be a thousand times more powerful than the slumbering atman in a wicked man. Hence, in the competition for displaying spiritual consciousness and strength of soul, all people—the maimed and the crippled, the strong and the weak, men and women, the old and the young and children—can participate on equal terms if they wish. Even a dense dark night obstructs only our natural eyes, but if we have developed divine eyes, what can a dense dark night or a long-handled sickle or a large baton do to us? And if, on such a dark night a giant of a man carrying a terrible weapon comes and stands before one of us—the others having either gone to sleep or been killed or run away—if at that time we do not remember the name of Rama, then our having chanted it morning and evening will have been in vain. It is in the hope that it may come to us at such a dreadful time and help us that we unfailingly repeat Ramanama morning and evening even though we may feel lazy, or be tired or sleepy. It is possible that after long practice, that name will come to our lips spontaneously every time we need it, will even be engraved in our hearts.

The women of the Raniparaj community are certainly more fearless than we. They will go anywhere during night time. They do not depend on being protected by men. It is, however, true that they have other fears, but my statement is only about fear of thieves and the like. It is not true to say that the Kaniparaj women do not care about their chastity. It is not proper either, to believe that only those who care for their chastity are afraid. The fear which afflicts us in the Ashram has nothing to do with outrage of modesty. If we take count of cases of rape in the world, we shall discover that such incidents are very rare. A woman’s virtue is violated through both the man and the woman acting voluntarily, and if a woman is self-controlled and pure in mind, violation of her virtue is impossible. This is true in two senses. One is that the Shastras proclaim, and it must be believed, that the body of one whose mind is pure in every way is protected by the mind itself, just as Sita’s mind protected her body. As you know, Ravana could not outrage Sita’s modesty, and the reason was not that he did not possess brute strength, but that he knew that if he tried to assault her his body would be burnt to ashes that very moment; and so he tried to win her consent through all manner of means, deceptions and threats, but they were of no avail in the face of Sita’s strength of mind. And the second meaning is that, if a woman’s mind is pure, her virtue is not violated and she is not stained by sin, even though she may have been raped. Neither will the world reproach her, nor will there be anything against her from the point of view of dharma. A pure woman, therefore, should never be afraid of her modesty being violated. On the contrary, she may remain confident that, if her mind is steadfast, her body will always remain inviolate. Forest-dwellers everywhere are less often overcome by evil desires than city-dwellers. They have not even the time to fall a prey to such thoughts. I do not mean to say that they all remain pure through their own voluntary effort. It is easy for them to live pure lives as it is easy for us to be vegetarians. Wherever there is immorality in the forests, both the man and the woman fall through their own free will.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary: Courtesy: Narayan Desai

6. CABLE TO BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION

[On or after June 4, 1927]

BIAS

Johannesburg

Strongly Advise Joint Action.

Gandhi

From a photostat: S.N. 12357

---

1 In reply to a cable dated June 3, 1927, received on June 4 from A. I. Kajee; it read: “Transvaal Indians secession from Congress destroys solidarity our community. Mass meeting Johannesburg Sunday. Extremely necessary you cable immediately to association against such action.”

2 Telegraphic address
7. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

NANDI DURG, MYSORE,
[Before June 5, 1927]¹

BHAI RAMESHWARJI,

Your letter to hand. I am steadily improving. There is no cause for worry. You did right in informing me of the death of Shankar Rao’s son. I have sent a letter of consolation to him and his wife. What can I write to bring you peace of mind? Let us believe that the one aim of our life is to control our senses; it is the highest human achievement and therefore attainable with difficulty. By constant effort we can conquer our passions. You should be engaged in some noble work, mentally as well as physically. Only when the mind is uncontrolled does it fall a prey to passion. Why not make a painstaking study of the Gita? And why not learn Sanskrit to understand the original work? When you have not got to be at the shop or when you have to be there and have nothing to do, why not ply the charkha or the takli? Just as man cuts through solid mountains with persistent effort, so can he cut through the barrier of passion. Therefore you should always be diligent.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 205

8. “SWEET MUSIC IN SPINNING-WHEEL”

I have published this article² as I have received it. It is one of those received in response to the public request, made by Shri Karsandas Chitaliya, for articles on the spinning-wheel. He gave me last year the one which he had considered to be the best and preserved. I had intended to publish it on some occasion and I do so now.

This article is dated September 21, 1921. Those days were different from these. In the intoxicating atmosphere of that age, many people used to sing praises of the spinning-wheel. If, therefore,

---

¹ Gandhiji descended from Nandi Hills to Bangalore on June 5, 1927.
² Not translated here
“Vanavasi” still sees Navajivan and reads this note, I would ask whether he could say today what he did in 1921. Or does he also feel about the spinning-wheel as others do who were in love with it in 1921 but dislike it today? If that is so, let him send in his criticism too. If it is well written, I am prepared to publish it, for I do not wish to preserve a single certificate for the spinning wheel which is not genuine. If the spinning-wheel survives, it will be on its own merits. Even if I get many people to write poems in praise of it and publish them, it will make no progress unless it has intrinsic merit. If it has such merit, any spinner’s experiences narrated in his rustic language will suffice to support the cause. Every reader of Navajivan knows that at present the cause of the spinning-wheel is being advocated in rustic language. It is making slow but steady progress.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 5-6-1927

9. NATIONAL EDUCATION

A friend writing from Nairobi about national education says what may be briefly stated thus: National education has failed to show any progress because students are not given an education which would train them to be self-reliant. The difficulty would be removed if agriculture is also taught along with charkha. As in the life of the people so also in the school, agriculture should have the first place while Charkha should have the second.

We have considered this criticism in the columns of the Navajivan before. But since people generally do not remember what they read in the newspapers, it is necessary to reconsider such questions whenever they are raised. There is no reason for the belief that national education has ceased to make any progress, or that its pace has become very slow. And to the extent that it has really become slow the responsibility is that of the teachers. I have already said so many times and it is something which can be proved. Where the teachers have had perseverance, faith and intelligence coupled with character, national schools are still going strong. We have had occasions to refer to this fact many times.

Though the teachers are responsible for this slowness, they are not to be entirely blamed for it. They were themselves the product of an alien Government and a system of education designed to produce slaves, and had broken away from it with great difficulty. They gave whatever help they could and then roped out. The existing national schools must first show their inner strength and brilliance before national education can march further ahead, and I am sure they could do it if they are going to last. Government schools do not impart an education calculated to make the students independent; yet they exist because they have blinded our vision with their dazzle. Besides, they hold out for some students the lure of lucrative jobs carrying four to five hundred rupees a month at the end of their studies. And the students think as they do about a lottery: “One of us is surely going to win the prize. Who knows, I may be that lucky one!” National education does not hold out any such allurement.

Let us now examine the suggestion made by the correspondent. It is true that agriculture occupies a place of importance in our economic life. But it has not disappeared; it is still there. We have got to revive it. There is in it scope for improvement. But improving agriculture is beyond the capacity of those who are engaged in national education. We can do nothing to improve it without the help of the State. It will need lakhs of rupees which will have to be spent merely on the preliminary experiments. I am sure that this cannot be done without swaraj, for Government laws relating to agriculture should be in accord with the economic conditions of the country. There should be model farms at numerous places throughout the country for the dissemination of agricultural knowledge and the peasants and farmers should be provided various facilities to enable them to do their work more efficiently. All these things are lacking today in India. But in South Africa, Australia and other countries where there are popular Governments wedded to the welfare of the people, the peasants do enjoy all these advantages. Therefore, the next best thing the national educationists have—is the charkha, as is admitted by the above correspondent. And the institutions which have adopted charkha as the medium of national education can accommodate all the youths wishing to go in for national education, and can train them to become self-reliant. Bu their knowledge of the Charkha must be both comprehensive and scientific. Such youths are being trained gradually, and as the movement for khadi advances national education will also expand and extend over a larger and larger field.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 5-6-1927
10. SPEECH AT CHIKBALLAPUR

June 5, 1927

FRIENDS,

I thank you for your purse and address. I thank the Reception committee and the people of Chikballapur for having made my stay at Nandi so comfortable. You have spent lavishly at your expense in order to anticipate every one of my wants. I shall never forget this kindness. But I must also say that the only reason for my stay in Mysore is to be able to give you my message on behalf of the poorest of the land, your labourers, and I hope that the message of the spinning-wheel would receive an abiding place in your hearts. I shall only be satisfied when I hear that you produce your own khaddar and wear your own khaddar. I hope that in Chikballapur you have no untouchability. I regard untouchability as a blot on Hinduism. I find no authorities in Hinduism for treating a portion of our countrymen as untouchable. I hope you will remember this. I thank you once more for all your kindness.

The Hindu, 6-6-1927

11. LETTER TO GANGADHAR SHASTRI JOSHI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 5, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

You were good enough to send me a copy of your letter to Dr. Gananath Sen regarding his rendering of certain Ayurvedic terms. I wonder if Dr. Sen ever sent you any reply.

As you seem to be a close student of Ayurveda, could you please tell me

(a) in what way Ayurvedic treatment is superior to the Allopathic treatment?

(b) Is there any progressive research work being done either in Ayurvedic materia medica or in any other branch of medicine or surgery in terms of Ayurveda?

(c) Have you or any other Ayurvedic physician investigated the

1 En route to Bangalore meaning of or tested the prescriptions contained in hridroga shweta kushta-nashan sukta—kushta-nashan suktas reproduced in the current number of the Vaidika Dharma edited by Pandit Satavalekar of Oundh? If you have not the magazine, I shall be glad to send it to you.

Yours sincerely,

DR. GANGADHAR SHASTRI JOSHI
TILAK MAHAVIDYALAYA
POONA

From a photostat: S.N. 14147

12. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Jeth Sud 6 [June 5, 1927]

DEAR SISTERS,

Your letter.

I have come down to Bangalore today and am not fatigued. Doctors examined me; they say that I shall be all right within a month’s time.

What Ramaniklalbhai says is quite true. There are many books that are worth reading. Let him choose what he likes. After all everything depends upon the interest that one who reads to others can create in his listeners. None of you should pass over any portion of the book which you do not understand. You should ask for the meaning again and again, if necessary, till you understand it. Many other things besides become clear if you understand even one thing thoroughly. I like the bangles made by Manibehn Patel out of khadi cloth. I have suggested that the bangles should be made, not of khaddar, but of yarn. The *raksha*¹ is also a kind of bangle and it is always made of yarn. One can put as much art and colour into a yarn bangle as one likes. And I am sure that the innocent pleasure one gets from wearing a thing prepared with careful art by one’s own hand can never be had by putting on even a jewel-studded bangle costing thousands of rupees.

Tell Mirabehn that if she desires to study, she should go to Jekibehn regularly and not merely when it pleases her to do so.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3652

¹ Thread that a sister ties round the wrist of her brother on Coconut Day
13. LETTER TO KUMI

BANGALORE,

Jeth Sud 6 [June 5, 1927]

CHI. KUMI,

Your letter to hand. I share your unhappiness. But I can offer no consolation except to ask you to bear with it. Chi. Harilal’s last letter is worse than even his previous ones. You and I should look upon him as a sick man and take no notice what he writes. I believe he will return to his senses some day. I do hope neither of you two sisters thinks that I have said anything anywhere about you and him. I do not remember having said anything about the plight you are in to anyone except Harilal himself. And I am amazed at what he writes about Chanchi. I have looked upon you all girls as my daughters. Haridasbhai had discussed with me at length the question of Chanchi’s betrothal. Where could we have found a more sober girl however much we tried? I do not know if Harilal is still sore about my attitude to the marriage. It is true I was against an early marriage. But have I no business to tell you even this? There is no question of my defending myself against Harilal’s attack. But if you so much as feel that I have done something that adds to your unhappiness, please do not let such a thought ever cross your mind. Just for this reason I write all this. I do not worry because you sisters are both brave. I have already made arrangements to take Manu to the Ashram and keep her there. I would advise her to be sent immediately. If Bali reads Harilal’s letters, let her read this letter too. But if you have taken the precaution of not letting her read his letters, there is no need to let her read this one either. But if she has read them, ask her not to be unhappy on account of Harilal’s letter.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12193
14. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE CITY,
[After, June 5, 1972]¹

CHL. ANASUYABEHN,

Your letter. We will have to resist the temptation of the T.S. money if the mill owners will not let us use it. I do not believe that my writing to Mangaldas will help. The better course would be for you to have frank talks with him and other mill owners and find out what their feelings are in the matter. If you like I shall write to Gordhanbhai. We must work even for the mill-hands with detachment. What can we do if they do not in any way understand what is good for them.

Money for the Antyaja school should come only from Antyaja work. If it is necessary to collect funds for others that can be done but we do not want to reduce the workers to destitution or beggary. They have money. They should spend that money on the education and other needs of their children. I know it is difficult to get them to do so. For them raising funds is easy. But we have begun our work knowing full well that it will be difficult. Having sacrificed everything, if we fail, it is not failure but success. Because in that failure lies our well-being and that of others. So after doing whatever we can if some schools close down, it cannot be helped.

Shankerlal will have to pay a visit here. If you come along too at that time we can talk things over and you may feel somewhat reassured.

I reached Bangalore on Sunday. My health is good. The house is not crowded.

Blessings form

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32794

¹ From the contents of the letter. Gandhiji reached Bangalore on June 5, a Sunday.
15. SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, BANGALORE

[After June 5, 1927]

Ever since our arrival, a number of people have been gathering here every evening to take part in our evening prayers . . . and one evening at the close of the prayer, Gandhiji had to address them a few words of appeal and advice. He said:

I want you to be patient with me. That is to say, you will not crowd round me or follow me when I go out for my evening walk. I am a patient and I have yet to recover my voice. I have yet to recover my strength and I have come here to rest myself. After I get better I hope to do what little service I can to the people of Mysore. You will therefore give me all the rest I need and not disturb my quiet walks. This is so far as I am concerned. As for you, I may say that all of you, no matter to what faith you belong, are welcome to take part in the prayer. But there are one or two conditions. The first is that you should come with a prayerful mind, a prayerful heart and a prayerful attitude. Everyone—Hindu, Muslim, Christian, no matter to what faith he belongs—can participate in the prayer. After the repetition of the verses is done, we chant Raghupati Raghava Rajaram, Patitapavana Sitaram, in which all who have a voice may join, so that our prayer may gather volume, and please God if there is a God who listens to our prayers. There is another condition. You know what Patita Pavana Sitaram means. We pray to God who saves the fallen and the downtrodden. I would therefore ask you to come in khadi, for khadi links you with the fallen and the downtrodden. As a visible token of your desire to help them I ask you all—men, women and children, young and old, of whatever faith—to come dressed in khadi. That is the least little that you can do to be fit to repeat the prayer:

Raghupati Raghava Rajaram
Patitapavana Sitaram

It is a prayer in which everyone may join, not only the Hindus but Muslims, Christians and others, for it is an invocation not to a king, but the King of kings, the God of gods, whom we all adore.

Young India, 16-6-1927

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
16. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

[June] 6 [1927]

RECEIVED WIRE. SUBJECT: JAMNALALJI’S OPINIONS
SUGGEST GOING WITH VALUNJKER GANGU SABARMATI.
VALUNJKER TEACHING HINDI REGULARLY PENDING
OTHER ARRANGEMENT. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5235. Courtesy: Mirabehn

17. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 6, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have been regularly receiving your letters. But it is well for you to know that one letter was received after the letter following it. How that letter could have been delayed for two days and where, it is difficult for me to know. Do you post the letters yourself or who does?

Do please write as often as you like. I am interested in knowing the progress of events there. I shall write beyond the Monday letter only when necessary.

If all goes well after the experiences you have gone through, I shall be delighted. But how it can after you have found the principal parties shifting their ground and prevaricating, I do not know. But you have my full letter and I shall await your reply to it. No more compromise with bhang. But you will come to decision yourself with due regard to all the circumstances as they may present themselves to you.

We moved to Bangalore yesterday. And though there was some strain, not of the journey but at a place near Nandi where I had to stop

1 In reply to her telegram which read: “Wrote June 3 suggesting I leave owing unpleasant discoveries. Since then rapid developments. Exposures telegraphed Jamnalalji recommending come immediately investigate situation. Will await his coming. Afterwards advisable I leave immediately. Please telegraph advise where go. All well. Love.”

2 Vide the succeeding item.
and whose people had made all the arrangements for my comfort, the blood-pressure had not increased at all nor did I notice any other effect of the strain. The doctors came yesterday and they said I should be quite all right in a month’s time and able to do the ordinary touring though not at breakneck speed.

I have already given the address here—Kumara Park, Bangalore City.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.]

Just as I was closing this I got your wire. I was prepared for it. I have wired saying that subject to Jamnalalji’s opinion you should go with Valunjker and Gangu to Sabarmati and learn Hindi with Valunjker, pending other arrangement. Now that Gangu is attached to you so much, I want you to keep her under your wings so long as it is necessary. There are several other places I have mentioned to you already but I am not in a hurry to come to a decision. If Valunjker and Gangu are not to be with you, it might be as well for you to pass a few days with me before settling down anywhere else for finishing your Hindi. You may have acquired enough confidence now to finish your Hindi even at the Ashram. What in my opinion you need is someone who would talk to you in Hindi only. But I shall he largely guided by your instinct.

You are having the richest experiences of your life. Turn to verse 9 of the 6th chapter, Gita:

“The equiminded one is the same to the good as well as evil. . . .” We have to love them all in spite of the sad discoveries. But love and equal treatment are expressed and can be expressed only in service. ‘You are bad but I love you just as when I thought you were good.’ Life’s work is summed up in attaining that state.

Rock of ages cleft for me
Let me hide myself in Thee
With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5234. Courtesy: Mirabehn

1 Vide the preceding item.

2 As in the source
MY DEAR CHARLIE,

This will reach you the same time that Sastri reaches South Africa. Though in one way his arrival will somewhat ease the terrible strain which you are undergoing, I can say that in the initial stages, his arrival will also add to your burdens. For you will be wanting to protect him from both the Indian malcontents and Europeans.

I had your cablegram to one portion of which, that is, with reference to Pragji, I sent you a reply. You have been this time so grandly economic in sending me cablegrams, and have I not shown my appreciation by dealing with your warning about rice-mills and destruction of vitamins?

At first I thought I would deal with that part of your cablegram which referred to Sastri’s table allowance. But I saw at once that this was one of your nervous mistakes—if that is a proper expression to describe what you know I mean. That cablegram was not from Charlie the man of God, but from C. F. Andrews the man of calculation whose calculation had told upon his brain and brought on all kinds of imaginary fears due to his nervousness. After all have we not hit upon Sastri for his character and learning and for his simplicity and hatred of all pomp and ceremonial? Just as if you become a Grandee and sought to win over people by entertaining them at fashionable hotels and moved about in first class motor-cars you would lose all the magnificent influence which you have gained in South Africa, so I am sure will Sastri lose all his influence if he began to give lavish entertainments with a view to gaining friends not for himself but for his cause. After all will it not be better that he appears in reality as a representative of a poor, exploited continent than that he should appear as an agent of a mighty foreign and expensive Government dependent for its lavishness upon the impoverishment of dumb millions? Is not his agency of the Government subordinate to his agency of the Man within him?

I recall the controversy that was carried on in the public Press in 1889 or 1890 in London in connection with the expensive upkeep of the Bishop of London with his palace. I remember also the sensation that was created when the Bishop came out with his balance-sheet in which he showed on the expenditure side the cost of liveried servants, a carriage in pair, etc., which he justified because he had to move among and affect the lives of lords and kings. If I recollect rightly, this publication of the balance-sheet and the defence exposed the Bishop to further ridicule. Imagine Jesus wearing robes resplendent with diamonds and pearls and holding dinners served in golden plates with the choicest old wines and viands with a view to comforting epicures and millionaires of his age. But I must stop here. I think I have given you enough tonic for steadying your nerve and refreshing you.

Though I seem to be on the road to recovery, the head still remains silly and becomes refractory under the slightest pressure. However, I pray and grin and bear it. He gave me all the needed strength for all these years. He might humble my pride by reducing me to helplessness.

Yours,

From a photostat: S.N. 12347

19. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

BANGALORE CITY,

June 6, 1927

CHI. MANILAL AND CHI. SUSHILA,

So far your letters have been coming regularly. It would be good if you kept this up.

This letter should go to you by the same steamer by which Sastriji arrives there.

The translation of the Gita is now proceeding five times faster, so that you will now have a lot of feeding. You should both ask me whatever you do not understand.

My health continues to improve. I arrived in Bangalore yesterday. Nandi is now too cold for me. I shall be here for a month at least. Thereafter, I hope, I shall get to move about a little. Look after Sastriji.

If Sushila learns type-composing and if God keeps her well she will be of much help to you. I too wish she should be.

If you earnestly study each and every problem there, you will acquire the knowledge that I expect of you.

Let not your expenses or style be such as to rouse envy. Could this by any chance be the reason why the men do not stick to you?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1133. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

20. MESSAGE ON V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

[June 7, 1927]

I wish your meeting every success. The Rt. Hon. Srinivasa Sastri embarks upon his arduous mission under the best of auspices. He takes with him the goodwill of all India, and both the Europeans and our countrymen in South Africa are looking forward to his advent. I know that if any man can possibly produce harmony between the Europeans and the Indian settlers, it is certainly Sjt. Srinivasa Sastri. May God give him all the wisdom and all the strength he will need in South Africa.

The Bombay Chronicle, 8-6-1927

21. LETTER TO FIROZA P. S. TALEYARKHAN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 7, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I was delighted to receive your letter. I came down here on Sunday. Do please come any day you like except Mondays when I am silent. Four O’clock is the best time for me. I hope you are feeling better.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

FIROZA P. S. TALEYARKHAN
3, RESIDENCY ROAD
BANGALORE

From the original: C.W. 9170

1 The message was read out on this date at a public meeting in Sir Cowasji Jehangir Hall, Bombay; Sarojini Naidu presided.
22. LETTER TO RUSTOMJI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE CITY,
June 7, 1927

BHAISHRI RUSTOMJI,

Your letter of the 3rd I got today. And it is just today that I learn from the papers that Manchershah has been sentenced to four years and that he has not yet given up his fast. Bhai Manchershah is a very good boy and also a very stubborn one. He does not listen to me as to you. When I was in Nagpur last, I had a long talk with him. I had asked him not to be impatient, but I found he was the type who would listen to none. Parents must give up all hopes of [controlling] their children when the latter grow up. Everyone acts in accordance with his karma. Parents should speak to their grown-up children as to friends and if the latter pay no heed they should keep quiet. I too have grown-up sons. I put up with the fact that my eldest son does not listen to me nor do I grieve over it. I write this hoping it would console you. I am sorry I can do nothing more than asking you to keep your peace. Why do you think yourself helpless? One who trusts in God is not helpless, one who relies on man is truly helpless.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12820

23. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
Jeth Sud 8, 1983 [June 7, 1927]

DEAR HARIBHAU,

I have your letter in Hindi.¹ I am dictating this in Gujarati as I can finish the letter quicker.

I understand that the work of mobile sales is going on well there. The experience everywhere is the same. This would show that people do love khadi, but only as a step-sister. As for Mysore, I have received the authentic papers and I shall send you the copies. What is the condition on which a reply to the question will be sought from Sir Prabhashankar Pattani? The reply will come when we ask for it. Is that what you would want too?

¹This sentence is in Hindi.
Mahadev does not remember to have received a reply to the letter you wrote to the ruler of Gwalior.

Do not worry about Chi. Martand.

Are you now fully recovered?

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Haribhau Upadhyaya Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

24. A LETTER [Before June 8, 1927]

Yours is not pure love. The woman is married. If you wish to serve that woman and her husband in any way, you must give up every connection with her. If, for that purpose, you have to leave Broach, you should do that too. It is your moral duty to do so. If you save yourself from the adharma that is now being widely practised in the name of love, you will earn admiration for your great courage.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

25. TELEGRAM TO SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM June 8, 1927

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM
SABARMATI

TELL JAMNALALJI MIRABEHN WIRES MAHARAJ OTHERS FLED KASHMIR. HE SHOULD STILL GO AND PATIENTLY INVESTIGATE THINGS ASHRAM NOTWITHSTANDING ABSENCE PRINCIPALS SENDING HIM FULL LETTER REWARI. IF JAMNALALJI GONE POST THIS NEED NOT REPEAT BY WIRE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5232. Courtesy: Mirabehn

1The source contains this letter before the entries for June 8, 1927.
26. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

. . . Sud 9 [June 8, 1927]¹

CHI. JAMNALAL,

Your telegram. I sent you a telegram² which you must have received at the Ashram. I have a shocking report from Mirabehn about the incident of water.³ Since you must have learnt about it all, I make suggestions only for future. Although Maharajji and others have already left, you should closely investigate whatever calls for investigation. We have got to write something about whatever facts we come across. We must caution the parents, and also the people. If the men and women who stay there are innocent and can understand things they ought to be asked to go away. If you want you may detain Mirabehn for some time to help the innocent residents. You need not stay there for long. If Mirabehn has to leave the place, I think it would be all right if Valunjker and Gangubehn stayed with her. Gangubehn appears to have taken well to Mirabehn; it seems she will learn a lot from her. Now the question is where these people should go. If Gangubehn has not to stay with her, Mirabehn might wish to go with me for some time. Thus she may have a little more peace of mind and to some extent devote herself to her studies. But if you too think that she should stay with Gangubehn and others, at the moment I can think of only Sabarmati or Wardha. Consider any other idea that you may have.

My health continues to improve.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 10605

¹ The source is illegible here.
² From the succeeding item
³ Vide the preceding item.
⁴ The reference to bhang water; vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 23-5-1927 and 3-6-1927.
27. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 8, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letters and telegram. I remain unperturbed. We have simply to deal with this corruption as a surgeon deals with eruptions which are symptomatical of some deep-seated internal disease. I have written separately to Jamnalalji. I did feel that your letters were being tampered with. But I considered that also to be good because, if they have disturbed your outgoing and incoming post, they have learnt something from it.

I have suggested to Jamnalalji that even though the principal parties have gone, you should continue your investigations and probe the disease to its source. There may be some simple folks who are mere dupes. If their eyes can be opened, you should open them, and they should be advised to leave the Ashram not upon some pretext or another but upon the clearest possible statement of the discovery of corruption. And, in whatever you do, let Jamnalalji’s be the final judgment. He is shrewd, penetrating, fearless and just; and he has greater experience than you have of that institution and of men and things in general in India. So it is wise to be guided by his judgment. If it is finally decided that you should leave at once, I can only think of Sabarmati or Wardha, if you have Valunjker and Gangubehn with you. After your last letter I feel more and more that Gangubehn should not be torn from you. Whether it is an institution or whether it is an individual, we have the same code of conduct. She requires the same care and attention as the whole problem of swaraj would, provided that it becomes the clear duty for the moment to attend to the individual, and it seems to me just now that you are a windfall for Gangubehn and you may prove her salvation.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5237. Courtesy: Mirabehn
28. LETTER TO MURIEL LESTER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 8, 1927

I have your beautiful and strong letter. It pains me to think that there was no one who would give you the proper resolution. However you have now got it and you will let me know how you are faring with it.

Thanks to the prayers of innumerable friends known and unknown to me, I seem to be getting better and stronger and hope to be fairly in harness next month. I am taking care of myself for I want you to succeed in your anti-drink campaign so that I can come there and reap the fruits of the work you are now doing. But the implications of your success are enormous. And if I had no faith in God and His utter goodness, I should despair of a comparatively unknown worker in the slums reaching the high and the mighty of the land and changing their hearts. May you have all the strength for so doing.

I am glad you have written to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, and I do hope that he will be able to do the work.

Yours sincerely,

MISS MURIEL LESTER
KINGSLEY HALL
POWIS ROAD
BOW
E. 3 LONDON

From a photostat: S.N. 12508Í
DEAR FRIEND,

Mr. K. T. Paul has just handed your letter personally to me.
Here is my answer to your enquiry:

TRUTH and LOVE have been jointly the guiding principle of my life. If God who is indefinable can be at all defined, then I should say that God is TRUTH. It is impossible to reach HIM, that is, TRUTH, except through LOVE. Love can only be expressed fully when man reduces himself to a cipher. This process of reduction to cipher is the highest effort man or woman is capable of making. It is the only effort worth making, and it is possible only through ever-increasing self-restraint.

Ever at youth’s service,

BASIL MATHEWS, ESQ.,
EDITOR, “WORLD’S YOUTH”
3, RUE GENERAL DUFOUR
GENEVA

From a photostat: S.N. 12514
30. LETTER TO HENRY A. ATKINSON

As at Satyagraha Ashram,1 Sabarmati (India),
June 8, 1927

Dear Friend,

Mr. K. T. Paul was able only yesterday to hand me personally your letter of 5th September last. He told me that you were likely to visit India during the cold weather this year. If so, I might have the pleasure of being able to discuss your proposal more fully when we meet. At present, I shall only say that the idea of a religious conference somehow or other does not appeal to me as religious enough. I say this in all humility.

Yours sincerely,

Dr. Henry A. Atkinson
70, Fifth Avenue
New York

From a photostat: S.N. 12515

31. LETTER TO HARRY F. WARD

As at the Ashram, Sabarmati,2
June 8, 1927

Dear Friend,

I thank you for your letter of the 11th March last. I have your articles which I shall go through as soon as I can. As you may have known I had a collapse two months ago during my tour and I am now convalescent.

The Chinese visit has been indefinitely postponed.

I have no recollection of the book on Non-violent Coercion3 having been received by me from you. Had the receipt come to my knowledge, I should have acknowledged it. But it is likely that it was received and not brought to my notice, if at the time I was travelling. I shall now enquire; but in any case, you need not trouble to send me

1 Permanent address
2 Permanent address
3 By Case
another copy because that book was sent to me, I cannot now recall by whom, two years ago, and I read it with interest.

Please remember me to Mrs. Ward.

Yours sincerely,

HARRY F. WARD

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
BROADWAY AT 120TH STREET
NEW YORK

From a photostat: S.N. 12516

32. LETTER TO KUVALAYANAND

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 8, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your prompt reply. I shall try to increase the quantity of butter.

The pranayama causes no difficulty, and as a rule, I take all the deep breath without a break.

I did not notice the effects you ascribed to savasana. May it not be that the prescribed period is too short, that is two minutes? I did feel refreshed when I used to lie flat on my back for nearly 15 minutes.

Nor did I notice any positive effect of sarvangasana. Would you advise increasing the angle or increasing the period for the pose at the present angle?

I forgot to mention the massage. It has been continued without interruption. But the abdominal and heart massage has been omitted for some time. The abdominal was omitted for fear that continued massage might weaken the intestinal muscles and may render it a habit always to have that massage for inducing proper motion. The heart massage I left off feeling it to be unnecessary arguing to myself, perhaps wrongly, that the massage could not possibly reach the heart which is floating in a solid case of ribs and flesh. Now that you have thought of the massage and specifically mentioned the abdominal and the heart, I shall resume the massage. But in your next letter, you will please give me your answer to my doubt.

Yours sincerely,

SRIMAT KUVALAYANANDJI
KUNJAVANA
LONAVLA

From a photostat: S.N. 12592

33. LETTER TO KUMI

June 8, 1927

I read your letter and Harilal’s letters. Harilal’s letters neither surprise nor pain me. He was born during what I regard, relatively, as my period of indulgence. By that time I had already tasted non-vegetarian food and intended to eat it more often when I was independent. The company which I kept was also not good, though I did not realize it. All such things cannot but affect children invisibly, and, therefore, myself and Ba, to the extent that she was a willing partner in indulgence, are responsible for the condition in which Harilal lives today. Why, then, blame Harilal? And you too should not blame yourself. It is certainly bad of him to make this charge against Chi. Bali. . . . ¹ Personally, I believe that Harilal will wake up from his deep slumber and reform himself. But that may be because of my attachment as a father, or possibly my faith as a human being makes me say so. Be that as it may, we can only wish that God should give him good sense.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

¹ As in the source
34. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
[June 8, 1927]

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

Your letter to hand. Glad to learn you are well. No more need now to give up milk. Regarding the body as a means of [serving] the people and as the gateway to moksha, it becomes duty of every servant [of society] and seeker of moksha to take the care of his body with all possible efforts as required by his dharma. I can understand how, during illness you felt the wicked passion crystallized into an image and later the divine power too appeared similarly. But it should be realized that both are mental projections. And true dharma consists in not even expecting such an experience. Divine revelation is not a miracle but the reward of tapascharya and the endless spiritual joy that this experience brings is the real truth. All else is unreal. And this is the true meaning of disinterested service. When in trouble one need not give one’s prayer to be saved from pain, yet it is certainly no better than patiently enduring the pain. Indeed, why should we desire happiness? When pain comes or happiness, it should all be the same to us. We should not strive for happiness nor furnish the trappings of pain. In all circumstances we should do our duty as we see it from time to time.

I hope you got my earlier letter. The help received from the Maharaja and the other officials is a matter of satisfaction.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6530

1 A part of this letter is available in photostat S.N. 10604. It was presumably written on the same date as S.N. 10605 i.e., “Letter to Jamnalal Bajaj”, 8-6-1927.
35. NOTE

KHADDAR WORK IN NELLORE DISTRICT

Deshabhakta Konda Venkatappayya sends the following remarkable notes about the progress of khadi in the Nellore District of Andhra. There is much in the notes which can be copied by every municipality and other khadi associations.

Young India, 9-6-1927

36. ASHRAM TANNERY

It is possible for me now to inform readers that they can get from the Sabarmati Satyagraha Ashram Tannery Department well-prepared dead-cattle hide. Sandals, belts and such other things are already being made but not yet in quantities large enough for executing all the orders that may be received. But it is possible now to meet a fair demand for prepared dead-cattle hide in three colours, black, dark-brown and yellow, and two qualities at Rs. 1-8-0 and Rs. 1-4-0 per pound. Those who are interested in making this experiment a success and who desire to use only dead-cattle hide should correspond with the Manager, Satyagraha Ashram Tannery Department, for all further information. Till the Ashram is ready to execute orders for boots, shoes and other prepared leather articles, I suggest the purchase of dead-cattle hide which is now available at the Ashram, and getting what they want prepared through their own shoe-makers. It is easier, cheaper and more expeditious for people to get used to buying hide as they buy khadi, and to get articles prepared for themselves as they get their clothes prepared from the khadi they purchase. It is not easy to open many tanneries. It would be a proper division of labour to take the work of manufacture off the hands of tanneries, if the work of taking possession of all the raw hide of dead cattle with a view to replacing the hide of slaughtered cattle is to be done with expedition.

Young India, 9-6-1927

1 Not reproduced here
37. KHADI FRANCHISE

Sjt. Srinivasa Iyengar, who is endeavouring with might and main to signalize his year of office as President of the Congress by achieving, if human effort can, Hindu-Muslim unity and by doing many other things, asked me when he kindly visited me at Nandi, whether I would relent in the matter of the obligation on every member of a Congress organization habitually to wear khadi. I told him that there was nothing for me to relent about. At Gauhati I was not insistent on the present clause. When asked, I merely gave my opinion that experience had shown that either the khadi clause should go altogether, or it should be stiffened to mean habitual as distinguished from ceremonial wear. I have seen nothing since to alter that opinion.

But if the members do not desire any discipline, or desiring discipline they do not want the clause about habitual khadi wear, and if they would laugh the khadi clause to scorn and break the rule on every occasion that offered itself to them, the clause should be undoubtedly removed. In a popular institution, it must be the opinion of the majority that must count. But I have always held that when a respectable minority objects to any rule of conduct, it would be dignified for the majority, and would conduce to the good of the Congress, for the majority to yield to the minority. Numerical strength savours of violence when it acts in total disregard of any strongly-felt opinion of a minority. The rule of majority is perfectly sound, only where there is no rigid insistence on the part of the dissenters upon their dissent, and where there is on their behalf a sportsmanlike obedience to the opinion of the majority. No organization can run smoothly when it is divided into camps, each growling at the other and each determined to have its own way by hook or by crook. I had therefore no hesitation in telling the President, that he should assist the removal of the clause about khadi if that clause could not gain willing submission from the minority.

This, however, is totally different from the question of my opinion. Any appeal to me to change my opinion, as has been done so often before, would be, to say the least, unfair to me. I must be allowed to retain my opinion as to the khadi clause or as to the method of running the Congress organization. All I can say is that my opinion should have no greater weight than the opinion of any other member of the Congress. My own opinion is emphatically that it will be wrong for the Congress, if it is to have an organic connection with the starving millions, to break this one and only bond between the classes and the masses. But I know that there is another school of thought in our country which rejects khadi as any token of a bond between the classes and the masses, and regards it as a mere mahatmaic freak or fad. That school is entitled to the same respect for its opinion as I venture to claim for my own. The President and the other members of the Congress have really to decide the question upon its merits, and ask themselves what is good for the Congress and fearlessly decide accordingly.

After all khadi is a force to be reckoned with, if it has come to stay. If it has staunch, true and self-sacrificing workers to back it, and if it has intrinsic value, it will prosper even though the Congress should in its wisdom give it up as part of the franchise, or even give it up altogether. The Congress will be the first to recognize anything that becomes a living force in the country. It may legitimately ignore it till it has proved its vitality. There may be and there are no doubt many things which are good in themselves. But a vast popular organization like the Congress cannot possibly take up things merely because they are good. It can only take up things that are good, provided they have popular backing. Without such backing the Congress would cease to be representative of the people and would merely represent a body of reformers or faddists.

Let the members of the Congress therefore come to a decision untrammelled by my opinion or anybody else’s. If their experience tells them that khadi has no backing in the country, if they think that it has nothing to do with the masses, they should unhesitatingly repeal the offending clause.

I have repeatedly held, that in every matter of urgency the All-India Congress Committee has not only the power but is bound to deal with the urgency as if it was itself the Congress, and run the risk of its decision being overturned at the next ordinary session of the Congress. A special session becomes necessary only when on any matter of urgency opinion is sharply divided, or when on any such matter public opinion requires to be educated, or lastly, when a popular demonstration on an intensive scale on any given question is required. In every other circumstance, and in every other matter of urgency, I venture to think that the All-India Congress Committee will be abdicating its function if it does not give its decisive opinion and act upon it.

Young India, 9-6-1927

38. STUDENTS IN CONFERENCE

The Secretary of the sixth Sind Students’ Conference sent me a printed circular asking for a message. I received a wire also asking for the same thing. But being in a somewhat inaccessible place, both the circular letter and the telegram were received too late for me to send a message. Nor am I in a position to comply with numerous requests for messages, articles and what not. But as I profess to be interested in everything connected with students as I am somewhat in touch with the student world all over India, I could not help criticizing within myself the programme sketched in the circular letter. Thinking that it might be helpful, I reduce some of it to writing and present it to the student world. I take the following from the circular letter which by the way is badly printed and contains mistakes which are hardly pardonable for a students’ society:

The organizers of this Conference are endeavouring their utmost to make this Conference as interesting and instructive as possible.... We intend organizing a series of educational discourses and we request you to give us the benefit.... The problem of female education here in Sind deserves a special consideration.... We are not blind to the other necessities of students. Sports competitions are being organized and along with elocution competitions they will, it is hoped, make the Conference more interesting. Nor have we eliminated drama and music from our programme. . . . Pieces in Urdu and English will also be staged.

I have not omitted a single operative sentence that would give one an idea of what the Conference was expected to do, and yet one fails to find a single reference to things of permanent interest to the student world. I have no doubt that the dramatic and musical and gymnastic performances were all provided on a “grand scale”. I take the phrase in inverted commas from the circular. I have no doubt also that the Conference had attractive papers on female education. But so far as the circular is concerned there is no mention of the disgraceful deti-leti (dowry) practices, from which the students have not freed themselves and which in many respects makes the lives of Sindhi girls a hell upon earth and of parents of daughters a torture. There is nothing in the circular to show that the Conference intended to tackle the question of the morals of the students. Nor is there anything to show that the Conference was to do anything to show the students the way to become fearless nation-builders. It is a matter of no small credit to Sind that it is supplying so many institutions with brilliant professors, but more is always expected from those who give much. And I, who have every reason to be grateful to Sindhi friends for giving me fine co-workers for the Gujarat Vidyaptith, am not going to be satisfied with getting professors and khadi workers. Sind has got its Sadhu Vasvani. It can boast of a number of great reformers. But the students will put themselves in the wrong, if they will be contented with appropriation of the merit gained by the sadhus and reformers of Sind. They have got to become nation-builders. The base imitation of the West, the ability to speak and write correct and polished English, will not add one brick to the temple of freedom. The student world, which is receiving an education far too expensive for starving India and an education which only a microscopic minority can ever hope to receive, is expected to qualify itself for it by giving its life-blood to the nation. Students must become pioneers in conservative reform, conserving all that is good in the nation and fearlessly ridding society of the innumerable abuses that have crept into it.

These conferences should open the eyes of students to the realities before them. They should result in making them think of things which, in the class-room adapted to its foreign setting, they do not get an opportunity of learning. They may not be able in these conferences to discuss questions regarded as purely political. But they can and they must study and discuss social and economic questions which are as important to our generation as the highest political question. A nation-building programme can leave no part of the nation untouched. Students have to react upon the dumb millions. They have to learn to think not in terms of a province, or a town, or a class, or a caste, but in terms of a continent and of the millions who include untouchables, drunkards, hooligans and even prostitutes, for whose existence in our midst every one of us is responsible. Students in olden times were called brahmacharis, that is, those who walked with and in the fear of God. They were honoured by kings and elders. They were a voluntary charge on the nation, and in return they gave to the nation a hundredfold strong souls, strong brains, strong arms. Students in the modern world, wherever they are to be found among fallen nations, are considered to be their hope, and have become the... self-sacrificing leaders of reforms in every department. Not that we have no such examples in India; but they are far too few. What I plead for is that students’ conferences should stand for this kind of organized work befitting the status of brahmacharis.

Young India, 9-6-1927

39. WHAT WE ARE LOSING

The readers of Young India are familiar with Mr. Gregg’s name. He is studying in a very concrete manner and with a passion worthy of a patriotic son of the soil the many questions affecting this land. His studies and experiments in hand-spinning continue unabated. He is experimenting in education of the children of backward classes. He is interested in the welfare of these classes. And in that connection, he is studying the question of agriculture. Having watched the economic and highly hygienic disposal of night-soil at the Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati, he is now studying that question in a methodical manner. In the course of a letter suggesting the establishment of an experimental farm he says:

> The special feature of the farm would be its use of night-soil as fertilizer, burying it as is done at the Satyagraha Ashram, or treating it as do the farmers of China and Japan. The whole body of sweepers in the entire area from which the collections would be made would need to be carefully organized and gradually trained into the best ways of handling the stuff.

> In a very short time, such a farm would become wonderfully productive in either grain, cattle-fodder, fruit or certain kinds of vegetables, all of which could be sold in the same locality, thus avoiding transportation charges in the marketing and yielding a fair profit for the further development of the scheme or the education and betterment of the whole sweeper community of the city or district. Such use of the night-soil would be an enormous saving of very valuable manurial material which is now not only almost entirely wasted, I believe, but a source of much illness and consequent economic loss to the entire community, through the breeding of flies and the carrying of all sorts of germs and filth.

Mr. Gregg then continues:

Young India, 9-6-1927

---

1. As described in Farmers of Forty Centuries by F. H. King, quoted at length by Gregg

2. Not reproduced here
MY DEAR GHANSHYAMDASJI,

This is the fourth letter I am writing to you after your departure from Bombay. Jamnalalji has sent me your cablegram. Hence this letter in English. I must not yet try to write letters myself. In order to conserve my energy, therefore, I am dictating most of my correspondence, whether in English, Hindi or Gujarati.

Malaviyaji is with me today. He is on his way to Ooty to recoup himself. He came this morning and was to have left this evening; but on my telling him that the day after tomorrow is the Mysore Maharaja’s birthday and suggesting that he should go to Mysore to give his blessings before proceeding to Ooty, he has sent a telegram to the Dewan. He has suspended his journey forward and will probably leave for Mysore tomorrow. Of course, I have been in regular correspondence with him and he has been replying by wires. He is looking much pulled down, but he is as hopeful as ever about everything. There is nothing wrong with his body. It is simply weakness caused by ceaseless wear and tear. He promises to take about a month’s rest in Ooty. He has Dr. Mangal Singh with him, and, of course, a cook. Govind was with him as far as Bombay but has been obliged to go to Allahabad as he could not get a postponement of his ‘crow case’.

I wonder if I suggested to you that you should see Miss Muriel Lester who is working in the slums of London. She was in India for some time last year. She was at the Ashram for one month. She is a most enthusiastic and able worker. She is working in the cause of total prohibition and is trying to cultivate public opinion there. Her address is: Miss Muriel Lester, Kingsley Hall, Powis Road, Bow, E. 3.

I hope that your health has improved and likewise Lalaji’s. I descended from Nandi last Sunday. I am making fair progress. Doctors here are of opinion that I will be able to resume a moderate amount of touring next month.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From the original. C.W. 7877. Courtesy: G.D. Birla
41. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

KUMARA PARK, BANALORE,
June 9, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. I would suggest your not disturbing the arrangement as per Young India announcement. Poor Shankerlal! He got so frightened over your letter that he began referring every matter to me. I have consoled him and told him that he need not do so, and that, in any case, he should first consult Jamnalalji and, after getting his opinion, he might refer matters to me so that I might not have to go through all the details. I am now awaiting his letter. But I know he will be more at ease if he has your letter signifying your approval of the arrangement pending the next meeting of the Council.

I endorse all you say about labour and the Congress. If labour was to be properly organized and not exploited for political purposes, it would certainly be a most desirable thing for the Congress to take charge of labour. And I presume Rajendra Babu’s approval goes no further than that. But at the present moment we have not got in the Congress men of the stamp required for constructive organization. The whole thing is mere talk.

I hope you got the book I sent to you on Food and Health. I descended to Bangalore on Sunday last and I am feeling better. I am taking more food. The tour will begin with Mysore, which itself will take perhaps a fortnight. And Mysore is a big plateau, 3,000 ft. high, therefore the climate throughout the Mysore State is very moderate.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1573

42. LETTER TO M. K. SAHASRABUDDHI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 9, 1927

MY DEAR SAHASRABUDDHI,

Your postcard addressed to Sabarmati was redirected here and received by me only yesterday. I remember you well and I did talk about you to Narmada, when I was in Alibagh. But I do not remember having suggested to anybody that you should leave your studies and join the Ashram at Sabarmati. I do not know how Narmada or anybody else could possibly have gathered the impression that I want you to give up your studies. But now that you have written to me, which I did not want you to do, so that I could know you better, please let me know what you are studying at present and what you propose to do after your studies are finished.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. SAHASRABUDDHI, ESQ.
KALAMBA ROAD, ALIBAGH (DISTRICT COLABA)

From a microfilm: S.N. 14148

43. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE CITY,
Jeth Sud 10 [June 9, 1927]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have another nice letter from you. The experiment of keeping a diary has borne fruit. Ramdas appears to be undecided about coming here. I hear from him but he says nothing about coming here. I came down to Bangalore on Sunday itself. Compared to Nandi it is warm here but the doctors think it should suit my health. I am not likely to move at least for one month. Thereafter I hope to go around a little.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9344

44. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
Jeth Sud 11 [June 10, 1927]¹

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. There is no mosquito menace where we have been put up. The place is very good and it is pretty cold. And I feel that I am improving day by day. So there is no question of leaving.

¹ The postmark bears the date “June 12, 1927”. Jeth Sud 11 corresponded to June 10 in 1927
You know the purpose of my staying here. That purpose would not be served at Panchgani. I am staying here in the hope of completing the khadi work planned for the South. And while staying here, I am doing something or other for this place. It gives me satisfaction that your health is gradually improving. Do keep seeing your sisters.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bhai Mathuradas Trikumji
Panchgani Castle
Panchgani

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

45. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

June 11, 1927

TO Mirabehn
Satyagraha Ashram
Sabarmati

You should come if at all uncomposed. Love.

Bapu

From a copy: C.W. 5238. Courtesy: Mirabehn

46. LETTER TO S. T. SHEPPARD

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
June 11, 1927

Dear Mr. Sheppard,

I thank you for your letter of the 8th instant.

I am sorry I have to inform you that the copyright for the publication in the West of the Autobiography in book form was given at the instance of the Rev- John Haynes Holmes some months ago to the Macmillan Company of New York.

You are quite right in having the impression that I have never before reserved copyright in any of my writings. But Mr. Holmes induced me to depart from the rule on the ground that without the transfer of the copyright, no European publishing house would care to publish the Autobiography and that its publication might be of some little assistance in the West.

I thank you for your enquiry about myself. I am making steady progress and am permitted by the doctors to attend to a moderate amount of correspondence, etc.

Yours sincerely,

S. T. SHEPPARD, ESQ.
“The TIMES OF INDIA” OFFICE
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 12808

47. LETTER TO H. CLAYTON

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 11, 1927

DEAR MR. CLAYTON,

I thank you for your letter of the 6th June.

I note the care with which you seem to have gone into the allegations. I hope to write further as soon as I have heard from Mr. Thakkar.

I shall take care to prevent publication of any portion of the minutes of the Committee meeting referred to in your letter and of which you have favoured me with a copy.

Yours sincerely,

H. CLAYTON, ESQ.
COMMISSIONER,
MUNICIPAL CORPORATION
BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 12913

48. LETTER TO SAM HIGGINBOTTOM

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 11, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your prompt reply.

In the circumstances mentioned by you, I will not make any use of the publication referred to in my previous letter.
Whist I agree with you that all religious doctrine has an economic aspect and that economic law is as much God’s law as religious laws, I profoundly differ from your application of the doctrine. It can easily be shown that transmigration has nothing to do with poverty. The present system of caste has certainly something to do with it. The treatment of women again can be shown to have no connection with poverty. But if you can spare the time, I would certainly value an article or two from your pen giving your views about cattle and their treatment and your argument in proof of your belief that the three things mentioned by you are “in combination, the primary and fundamental causes of India’s poverty”. If you think that there is room for correcting your opinion about the fundamental causes of India’s poverty we may discuss the causes through private correspondence. I know you to be a well-wisher of the country and a searcher after truth. I know also that you have great capacity for serving India. I am therefore most anxious to take all the advantage I can of your love of the country and your great knowledge in the interest of a cause which is common to us both. I am therefore anxious that so far as it is possible, there should be agreement between us about the fundamental cause of the great and growing poverty of India.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 12915

49. LETTER TO MANAGER, AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSION

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 11, 1927

DEAR SIR,

I understand from a friend that your mission knows a method whereby poultry can be so bred as to yield eggs that are sterile from the commencement of their being laid. I have never known this. But as my informant is a medical man and insistent upon the accuracy of the statement made by him, I ask you to enlighten me if you will.

Yours faithfully,

THE MANAGER
THE AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSION
SANGLI

From a photostat: S.N. 14149
50. LETTER TO J. BHIMA RAO

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
June 11, 1927

Dear Friend,

I have your letter. If you will read the columns of Young India you will find that the reference to Sir M. Vishveshwarayya’s administration as Ramarajya is a joke and that tribute to the Chief of Savantwadi is a personal tribute. I do not see how on the strength of the acknowledgement of the undoubted good qualities of one Chief, princes can possibly sustain misrule or justify the principle of absolute autocracy. I do not therefore think that the point you have raised requires an elucidation in the pages of Young India.

Yours sincerely,

J. Bhima Rao, Esq.
The Swadeshi Perfumery Works
Jamkhandi House
Bangalore City

From a microfilm: S.N. 14150

51. LETTER TO OTTAMA BHIKKHU

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
June 11, 1927

Dear Friend,

Your letter remained unacknowledged as I was not yet ready to lay myself out for receiving visitors, and then it remained buried in my file. As I am now attending more diligently to the correspondence, I have come upon your letter. I shall be pleased to meet you any time you come to Bangalore up to the end of this month. I do not see visitors before 3 o’clock. Any day except Monday between 3 and 4-30 would be suitable time to see me.

Yours sincerely,

Ottama Bhikkhu, Esq.
Nair Building
Lamington Road
Bombay

From a photostat: S.N. 14151
52. LETTER TO R. SUBRAMANIAM

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 11, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I hope you don’t want me to deal with the subject matter of it in Young India. Do you suppose that insurance agents are carrying on their business for serving the public? And why should my remark wound the feelings of insurance agents because I regard insurance as a trap. There was no reflection meant upon the American in the remark I made. If the agent is alive, as I hope he is, and if he sees the paragraph, he will himself have a hearty laugh over it and feel flattered that he was able by his sweet tongue to beguile me into taking a policy. There was nothing wrong about his having induced me. But if he posed as philanthropist and not merely as a business man bent upon making some money for himself and his principals, he would immediately put himself in the wrong.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. R. SUBRAMANIAM
SUN LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF CANADA
MADRAS

From a photostat: S.N. 14152

53. LETTER TO GOPALDAS

BANGALORE,
June 11, 1927

BHAI GOPALDASJI,

I have your letter. To me restricted widow-marriage is a question of compassion. Corruption is to be found even where widows remarry—as amongst us—but this is an irrelevant point. The point to be considered is this: Is it right to impose upon woman a restriction which man would not accept for himself? A girl who does not understand the meaning of marriage is married off and later loses her so-called husband. Can such a girl be called a widow? All such

1 In the serial instalment of Autobiography published in Young India, 9-6-1927.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI questions relating to the plight of widows are a matter of dharma, of compassion and while solving them we should not call up and confront the conditions obtaining in some other countries, but consider only what our dharma points to. Looking at it from this angle, I think that it is the duty of the Hindu society to get all child-widows married

Yours,

54. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 12, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your several letters. They make sorry reading. But it is profitable. Your going there had a purpose behind it.

Jamnalalji wired\(^1\) as per enclosed. I therefore sent you on Saturday at Sabarmati a wire\(^2\) asking you to come here, if you at all felt uncomposed. For that was the meaning I read into Jamnalalji’s wire. I am assuming always that you will act naturally and take me literally whenever I sent letters or wires regarding yourself. I cannot guide you if I have to guess your requirements and you have to guess my wishes. So you will do exactly as you think necessary for you progress.

I do not think you need worry about your being in the Ashram without having finished your Hindi, if otherwise you would be there. Gangu is a great consideration. If she has your company without taking up much of your time it does not matter. But you know best what should be done. She need not interfere with your studies. On the contrary, she may be a kind of a help as you must speak to her in Hindi always. It gives you compulsory practice in speaking. But that is my way of looking at the thing.

As for your vow regarding food, do not prolong the vow without reconsideration in the light of past experiences. You may for the present live according to the spirit of the vow, i.e., take nothing merely for taste or pleasure but do not hesitate to add to the number,

\(^2\) Vide “Telegram to Mirabehn”, 11-6-1927.
I am saying just now nothing about Rewari Ashram as I am in the dark about the latest events. Krishnanandji never wrote. His suggestion that I should see the necessity of taking bhang is original.

The doctor saw me today (Sunday) and was satisfied with the progress made.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5240. Courtesy: Mirabehn

55. LETTER TO SATCOWRI RAY

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June, 12, 1927

DEAR SATCOWRI BABU,

I have your long and full letter. Please do not apologize. If I cannot render concrete service, I can at least give you the consolation of a friend whose whole heart is with you in your trouble. I shall treasure the detailed information you have given me for future use if chance throws itself my way. But I shall be unable to raise for you the sum you need to tide over your difficulty. Meanwhile I would advise you strongly to concentrate your attention upon building up your practice. I see no way out of it just at present, I know it is bad, but we do not always get things that we like or that are good. Practice evidently is just now your swadharma, and therefore the best for you. But will you not make up your mind that no matter how much practice you get, you will no longer spend on marriages? Whether it will come in my life or not, the time is coming when men like you will have again to give up practice, give up hearth and home and plunge into the struggle for liberty. Let this practice therefore be a trust for you. But you and your family should live as the poorest of our people, and therefore you should bring up your daughters now to grow up without thinking of marriage, and when they are to be married, they are to be married without any expense whatsoever. Do you know that during the past two years, I have been helping to marry several couples without the expense of even Rs. 10 you might say,

\[1\] One’s own duty

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Two of these were my relations, one my son, another my grand-daughter. The others were daughters or sons of friends and co-workers, all having lived before like you and me. In order to hearten you, I must mention them. Vallabhbhai was a barrister with a first-class practice. His son was married the other day at the Ashram with nothing but the simple religious ceremony. No dinner was given and not one single piece of ornament was given to the bride. The other case was that of Dastane, the erstwhile leading lawyer of Bhusaval. His daughter was given to a co-worker. She had no ornament except a few yards of yarn of my own spinning round her neck. Dastane had a few friends who imposed themselves on him when he gave his daughter in marriage, and who had to be fed for one or two days. I do not think that they were more than 10, if that number. He had many more friends. But he had warned them against attending. Naturally he had sent no invitations. I could give other similar instances. In our struggle for freedom these social reforms have really become extremely necessary.

I evidently did not make myself sufficiently understood about making a living from khadi. I did not suggest that you should set up your own khadi business at present. What I suggested was that you might come into the khadi service, become a technical expert and so indispensable to that service. But that service could not give you more than Rs. 100 or 125 at the outside per month. It must remain a poor service. And what I meant about the members of the family was that all young men and women might do something or other in connection with khadi so that all would feel that they were contributing to the family till. Several workers are trying to remodel their life in accordance with this pattern. But I say that this may be too much for you, and if it is too much, that is no reflection upon you. After all mental adjustments cannot take place at will, and mental adjustments take practical shape only after they have saturated our being and become part of it, I have therefore thrown out the suggestions. Let them work their way in your mental laboratory.

And whilst you are following out your practice, I would like you to study, even if it is as a matter of recreation, the technique of khadi by passing a few days in the Khadi Pratishthan, Sodepur, and a few days in Abhoy Ashram, Comilla. Visit their branches, study how things go on there. And if you get a little bit of leisure, go to the Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati, study the history of each family living there, see what the women are doing alongside of men, cross-examine them and find out whether they are really happy with their altered condition. Then see Rajagopalachari’s Ashram, see what Gangan- dhar Rao is doing in Karnataka in his own estate. And when you have done this, you will have some notion of what I mean. It is really difficult to express all that you have in you in words. Language is a limitation, and a terrible limitation of one’s thoughts, and therefore a very poor vehicle for expressing them.

Lastly, if at all you feel like it, do come down to Bangalore where I am yet to rest up to the end of the month and pass a few days with me.

I note what you say about Subhas Bose. I am following him as closely as I can through the papers. If you see him, please tell him that I often think of him. I did send him a telegram immediately on his release. I am anxious to know whether he got it. I don’t want any reply from him. I simply mention this as you have been good enough to volunteer news about him which I appreciate.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 12587

56. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDA S PODDAR

BANGALORE,

Jyaishtha Shukla 13 [June 12, 1927]¹

BHAI RAMESHWARDA S,

Your letter to hand. Diligence should not be taken to mean working beyond one’s strength; it only means keeping the body and the mind constantly occupied with such work as they can normally cope with. An irregularity about bowel movement is hard to bear. There is no doubt fasting is the first remedy for it. But this treatment should be attempted only under the supervision of someone who knows about it. If you wish to be treated I shall see if I can send you to one or two friends who offer this treatment. You must not be lethargic about this matter. So write to me soon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 203

¹ Inferred from the contents; vide also “Letter to Rameshwardas Poddar”, before 5-6-1927.
SISTERS.

Your letter.

You once wrote to me that all of you take turns in leading the prayers by reciting the Sanskrit verses. I have still to congratulate you upon this practice. I hope your pronunciation of Sanskrit words is correct. Of course as far as we are concerned God does not take into account whether His name is uttered correctly or incorrectly. He only cares for the language of the heart. If the heart is pure, even indistinct babbling is reckoned at one hundred per cent. While on this topic I wish to relate some of the pleasant experiences I am having here.

Mysore is a part of Karnatak, which gave us Kaka Saheb. The women here know both music and Sanskrit very well. I heard them singing in Nandi. I heard both songs and recitation of Sanskrit by two women here the day before yesterday. They sang the substance of the Ramayana in Sanskrit correctly pronounced. I think there were more than a hundred verses. I could not detect a single flaw in their recitation. One of them is still a student. She knows also the meaning of the verses.

But why should I write about this to you? I regard the work you are doing there now as more important than studying Sanskrit. If you become fearless, remain pure, turn out to be good workers and learn to live and work together, it will mean an education superior to any other. If, in addition, study of Sanskrit goes with it, it will be sweeter even than honey.

I suppose Gangabehn and others get my letter or a copy of it to read.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3653

---

1 Year is determined from the reference to Nandi Hills. The source has Jeth Sud 14, but in this month, Jeth Sud 13 fell on Sunday as well as on Monday.
DEAR FRIEND,

Day before yesterday I passed through the Imperial Dairy and some students showed me some of your beautiful animals. I had the pleasure of knowing about you and your interest in cattle through Sir Harold Mann’s communications. You may be aware that I am deeply interested in the cattle problem and therefore in cattle-breeding, dairying, tanning, etc. And whilst I am convalescing and have to be in Bangalore yet for a fortnight, I would like to visit the dairy every day if my health permits and pass there about half an hour learning all that can be learnt during that time. I wonder if it is possible for you to instruct someone in charge to give me the assistance I need and which I should value. I would esteem too any literature that you can provide me with and that you think I should read. I have already initiated through experts supplied to me by Sir Harold Mann a dairying experiment at Sabarmati. I would value too the privilege of a talk with you on this subject if you can spare the time for me. I know you are an almost next-door neighbour. I have often passed by your bungalow on my strolls. I am allowed to see visitors between 3 and half-past four, and if you are at home during that time, any day, I should do myself the honour of calling to see you.

Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM SMITH, ESQ.
IMPERIAL DAIRY EXPERT
BANGALORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 12916
59. TELEGRAM TO SECRETARY, CHITTARANJAN HOSPITAL

[Before June 15, 1927]

WISH EVERY SUCCESS CELEBRATION.

GANDHI

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 16-6-1927

60. LETTER TO SECRETARY, INDIAN INFORMATION CENTRE

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE, June 15, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. In the circumstances mentioned by you, I shall not resist you any longer. You may put my name down as one of your correspondents.

If you are an honorary and self-appointed agency why not call yourself the honorary Indian interpretation centre? For you claim to give not merely information about India but interpret so far as you can the Indian mind to the public there. And this you do, not as an agency paid from or by India but as an agency self-created for the love of the thing itself.

Yours sincerely,

TARINI PRASAD SINHA, ESQ.
SECRETARY,
THE INDIAN INFORMATION CENTRE
7, TAVISTOCK PLACE, LONDON W.C. 1

From a photostat: S.N. 12502

---

1 Dr. K. S. Roy
2 Of the Hospital Day
61. LETTER TO J. FRIEND LODGE
Kumara Park, Bangalore,
June 15, 1927

Dear Friend,

I have your letter for which I thank you. I send you the autograph herewith. The name of the photographer is Mahulikar, Ritchie Road, Ahmedabad.

Yours sincerely,

J. Friend Lodge, Esq.
‘Sunset’ Bustleton
Phila.

From a photostat: S.N. 12520

62. LETTER TO SRI PRAKASA
Kumara Park, Bangalore,
June 15, 1927

My dear Sri Prakasa,

I have your letter. Your fear may give place to the confidence that the notice sent by you about the Vidyapith will be published in Young India.

One cheque that I received some days ago was already acknowledged. I wrote to you on 26th May. Did you send any cheque after?

Yours sincerely,

Sjt. Sri Prakasa
Sevashram
Benares Cantt.

From a microfilm: S.N. 14153
63. LETTER TO DR. THOMPSON

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 15, 1927

DEAR DR. THOMPSON,

I understand from the Rev. Mr. Hickling that you were to be back on the 11th instant. I hope you have now returned and left Mrs. Thompson in the enjoyment of good health.

For myself, I seem to be making steady progress. I am eating better and have been able to double the distance I used to walk at Nandi. The pressure seems to have become normal at 150. If you are at all coming to Bangalore, I know you will not mind looking me up.

But the real purpose for writing this letter is to ask you whether I should now send my son Devdas to you. His general health has very considerably improved. Except for once, he had no nose-bleeding. If Devdas understood you correctly he tells me you told him that on your return you wanted to see and examine him more carefully. He can come there any day that is convenient to you if, that is to say, you think that he should come. After the 29th he will be wanted in Bangalore continuously for some time.

Yours sincerely

DR. THOMPSON, ESQ.
CHIKBALLAPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 14154

64. LETTER TO GULZARILAL NANDA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 15, 1927

MY DEAR GULZARILAL,

I have your letter and your draft to the Secretary. You may send the letter. I do not want to suggest any alterations or improvements in it; but I will just state what I think about the whole thing and the extent to which we may rely upon mill-owners’ help and to which they are themselves at the present stage likely to go.

So far as the Rs. 12,500 are concerned, I am afraid, we shall not get them unless Kasturbhai, who is insistent even to the extent of demanding his own quota back, as he might well do, invites the other donors to do likewise. So far, therefore, as these funds are concerned, the way to work lies in that direction. The ultimate decision will be taken by the mill-owners on side issues and on personal likes and dislikes. These aberrations we shall always have with us and we must suffer them with becoming calmness.

But the more important point for consideration is the principle which should guide us in our relations with the mill-owners, or, more generally speaking, capitalists. At the present moment, we shall do well to be satisfied with doing the right without expecting reciprocity and therefore without expecting any pecuniary help from the capitalists. Inch by inch labour will have to make its position good and better its conditions independently of outside support. The outside support may be divided into two parts: from the capitalists directly concerned, in this instance, therefore the mill-owners, and secondly, from the general sympathetic public. The second support we shall get more quickly and without in any way endangering our interests. The support from capitalists directly concerned will come when labour has vindicated itself and has almost attained the position of being able to dictate its own terms. It will be then and not till then that we shall get willing help from capital. If my diagnosis is correct, we must then so order our affairs as to undertake just such work as we can do irrespective of outside assistance. When its needs are to be supplemented, we should go to the independent outsiders and never go to the interested outsiders; but we do not need to refuse the help from the last source when it comes voluntarily. And we must always be able to so shape our course as to feel independent of all outside help. Our concentration therefore must be in educating labour from within and out of means chiefly supplied by labour itself. This, in my opinion, is the shortest and the simplest way of serving labour. It will undoubtedly cause in the initial stages great difficulty, great embarrassment and labour itself will be irresponsible. But that is the very reason why we should persist in what we know to be the best course. Any other way, labour becomes pauperized and demoralized as one sees happening all over India. Applying the principle to the present case, my solution would be to carry on such negotiations with the mill-owners as may be consistent with the dignity and self-respect, but to be prepared to do without the assistance that is being received now. You must still find ways and means of continuing the schools. See what resources there are within ourselves. Put the whole question before the members of the Union, and at the same time canvass for subscriptions amongst private friends and then appeal to the public also. I do not anticipate much difficulty in getting public help. And, in any appeal that may be made to the public, the circumstances necessitating the appeal now should be briefly stated. This will involve some criticism of the mill-owners; but that is inevitable. I wonder if I have made my position absolutely clear. If I have not, please do not hesitate to write to me again.

Yours sincerely,

GULZARILAL
AHMEDABAD

From a photostat: S.N. 14155

65. LETTER TO J. W. PETAVEL

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 15, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I see with much pleasure you will not give in, and if you will continue to hammer away, it is likely that some day I shall be able to see eye to eye with you and then do what you want me to.

I have now got your book. I shall go through the portions referred to by you.

Yours sincerely,

J. W. PETAVEL, ESQ.
BAGBAZAR, CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 14156

66. LETTER TO SECRETARY, A.I.S.A.

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 15, 1927

I have your letter. I have gone through the agenda. I cannot think of any addition. The agenda seems to me to be exhaustive.

The draft rules for agencies seem to me to be quite good. I cannot think of any improvement just now. I do not want to concentrate upon the work and tax my brain. But they read all right. If anything arising out of them is referred to me at the meeting in any definite form, I shall be able to give my opinion. It will be premature to ask the several khadi centres to communicate with the Central office only through the respective agencies. That would be an ideal to be reached but after we are better organized and the necessity for acting through agencies is generally recognized.

At the present moment we are trying to evolve organized order out of disorganized work. We have therefore to act after the style of a family in which the paterfamilias is referred to by the respective members without any intervention. But in order to establish the custom of dealing through agencies, we may refer all the communications we received to the agents wherever necessary and we may also refer all new correspondence to the agents. And thirdly we may ask the agents to interest themselves in the several centres in their jurisdiction even though they may not be invited by respective centres. The agents may thus create between the centres and themselves a living bond so that instead of referring to head office, the centres will of their own accord refer to the agents. We may for the moment frustrate the end we have in view, if we impose the condition from above. Also wherever any centre is recalcitrant and is causing trouble and insists upon dealing with the head office or not at all, we may impose the condition of coming through the agent.

As to the Council, I suggest the following without having given much thought to the thing:

The Council should meet quarterly. At least a week’s clear notice should be received by every member. The week to count from the date of each member receiving notice at his registered address. The agenda should contain just the items to be considered and where, in the opinion of the Secretary, papers are necessary to be sent, he may do so, and at the foot of the agenda he may have a general notice to the effect that any member who wants to have any information about any item on the agenda will be supplied with the information by the Secretary upon request. In extraordinary emergencies the sanction of the members may be ascertained by correspondence whether telegraphic or postal. Any such decision should be brought before the next ordinary meeting of the Council. Where even this is not possible the Secretary and the Chairman may on their own responsibility dispose of matters and in those involving financial obligation, disburse not more than, say, Rs. 5,000.

It would be certainly convenient for you to come a day or two before the meeting. There should be however enough time to give also in the meeting and after the meeting. In any event, all the members will be in Bangalore up to the third of July at least. I am assuming that I shall not be asked to be present at the meeting more than it is absolutely necessary. Though even now I do considerable amount of work which is all done at my convenience with considerable rest during intervals, I am making steady progress. I note and doctors advice also that the less concentrated the work the better it is for me, and in no case should there be concentrated work.

The Madras Flood Relief money can now be transferred. Chhaganlal and Swami are being advised. I suggest that the deposits should not be disturbed but should be adjusted on maturity so as not to forfeit the interest.

About Mithubehn’s letter, I am asking Rajagopalachari about it. In my opinion, she should be paid as from the Exhibition Committee. For, the Committee should be the best judge as to who should come and who should not come. In this instance, the Committee having invited Mithubehn will most probably tell her that her expenses will be defrayed by them.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 19781
67. LETTER TO GANGU

[After June 15, 1927]¹

CHI. Gangu,

Your letter. You write good Hindi. You will soon be avoiding the mistakes you now make.

You should bear no resentment even in your heart against Lakshmibehn for what she said. Doing the Vatapooja² was as much right for her as not doing it was for you. You have no faith in these things; therefore it would have been useless for you to join; it might have looked like weakness or even hypocrisy. We should have the same tolerance for other people’s conduct and beliefs as we may expect from them towards our own.

You need not be unhappy if Chi. Maganlal did not give you the charkha. If you ask him he will surely tell you the reason. Even if we are not satisfied with the explanation, still we must not feel aggrieved. We must not hastily conclude that a person’s attitude or act is all wrong just because he himself or the elders cannot give us a satisfactory explanation of it. Only by living in society can we learn to tolerate difference of opinion and the pairs of opposites such as happiness and unhappiness. And as you want to dedicate yourself to service and observe brahmacharya, you must fully acquire the qualities of forbearance and tolerance. Mirabehn thinks you need to improve your spinning, ginning, etc. In spinning the thread . . .³

Manibehn has been a brahmcharini till now, and proposes to remain one and she is making positive efforts towards it. The other has entered married life but is aware of the nobility of brahmacharya and endeavours to observe it herself. You must not suppress your feelings just because I write all this. Do write to me whatever you think. I shall try to point out the pitfalls ahead on your way. Take from this whatever you find acceptable and go ahead.

From a microfilm of the Hindi : S.N. 12324

¹ This letter appears to have been written after Gangu left Rewari Ashram for Sabarmati along with Mirabehn in 1927. The Vatapooja fell on June 15.
² Worship of the banyan tree by married women on the full moon day of Jyaishtha.
³ As in the source
68. HINDU-MUSLIM UNITY

When the President of the Congress\(^1\) wired that a unanimous resolution on the Hindu-Muslim question was reached by the All-India Congress Committee\(^2\), I could not enthuse over the information. The wire told me enough about the contents of the resolution. When the President paid me a visit at Nandi\(^3\), he asked me whether I would write on it. I told him I did not think I could write anything helpful. A few days after the visit I got a message from a friend. Its purport was: “You are responsible for the mischief that is going on in our midst. If you had not dragged the Hindus into the Khilafat agitation, the recent tragic events would not have happened. But you alone can now save us.”

In translating the message I have softened the bitterness of the language of the original. It seems to me to call for a reiteration of my belief about Hindu-Muslim unity.

I do not repent of my part in the Khilafat agitation. It was a duty I discharged towards my Mussalman countrymen. The Hindus would have been wrong, if they had not helped their brethren in their distress. However ugly the present look of things may be, future generations of Mussalmans will recall with gratitude this great act of friendship on the part of Hindus. But the future apart, as I believe in the proverb that virtue is its own reward, I should always defend my action on the Khilafat question. I therefore received the friend’s message of rebuke with perfect calmness.

But I wish I could fulfil his expectations and assist immediately and materially in bringing about peace. For I am just as strong a believer as ever in unity and the necessity for it. If it could be achieved by giving my life, I have the will to give it and I hope I have the strength for it. I should with the greatest joy undertake an indefinite fast, as I very nearly did at Delhi, in 1924,\(^4\) if it would melt and change the stony hearts of Hindus and Mussalmans. But I have no sign from God within to undertake the penance. If a penance is itself an act of purification, it has also to be preceded by an equal measure

---

1. S. Srinivasa Iyengar
2. On May 15 and 16, 1927, at Bombay
3. The reference is to Nandi Hills near Bangalore where Gandhiji was resting from April 19 to June 4 after he had fallen ill on March 26, 1927.
4. From September 17 to October 8.
of initial purification. I am obviously not pure enough for that supreme penance.

If the reader does not see me now often refer to the question in these pages, it is because the sense of humiliation has gone too deep for words. It matters little to me whether the perpetrators of shameful deeds are Hindus or Mussalmans. It is enough to know that some of us are blasphemy a patient God and doing inhuman deeds in the sacred name of religion. I know too that neither assassination nor fratricidal acts can possibly save religion. Religion worth the name can only be saved by purity, humility and fearlessness of the uttermost type among its professors. It is the only shuddhi and only propaganda.

Hence has the resolution of the All-India Congress Committee left me unmoved. For I know that we have not yet changed our hearts.
We have not shed fear of one another. Any compromise that is unaccompanied by these two conditions must be a mere make-shift.

Moreover, I feel that any agreement between the component parts of the nation must be voluntary and must remain so for all time.
It must not, if it is conceived in terms of swaraj, depend for its final ratification or enforcement upon a legal enactment. Ratification by our respective organizations must be held to be final and binding.
Enforcement must depend upon the honour of the leaders of respective parties and ultimately, in the absence of reliance on nonviolence, on the arbitrament of civil war fought decently or indecently as the case may be. It is a sign of weakness, not of fitness for swaraj to go to the foreign ruling power to arbitrate between us or to enforce the peace between us at the point of the bayonet.

If we the so-called leaders have no control over our fighting elements, our agreement must be held to be unreal and useless. Before we think of real swaraj, we must gain control over the masses. We must learn to behave ourselves. The agreement had no effect on Delhi, and to our eternal shame the government has been the keeper of the peace on Bakr Id.

My creed of non-violence is an extremely active force. It has no room for cowardice or even weakness. There is hope for a violent man to be some day non-violent, but there is none for a coward. I have therefore said more than once in these pages that if we do not know

1 Reconversion to Hinduism; literally, ‘purification’ how to defend ourselves, our women and our places of worship by the force of suffering, i.e., non-violence, we must, if we are men, be at least able to defend all these by fighting. It is unmanly to ask or expect the Government to ensure the peace between rival parties or to defend our women against ourselves. And while we remain so unmanly it is hopeless to expect swaraj. In well-ordered societies, governments merely undertake the police work. But the recent elaborate preparations at Delhi or Lahore were no part of police work.
Differences we shall always have. But we must learn to settle them all, whether religious or other, by arbitration. Before the rules we must be able to present a united front and demonstrate to the world our capacity for regulating our own manners if we would have swaraj.

If, however, we have no leaders whom we can elect as arbitrators who would give wise and impartial decisions, or, if we are too unruly and barbarous to wait for and abide by decisions of arbitrators of our choice, we must fight till we are exhausted and come to our senses.
The Government will no doubt always intervene, whether we will or no, either to keep the public peace or to preserve its safety. But it will weaken us the least, if the rival factions will courageously and straightforwardly refrain from courting the protection or assistance of Government. Why should a murderer in such warfare be defended?
Let him seek the gallows. Let breakers of places of worship come forth boldly and say, we have done this for the sake of religion, punish us if you like! Let those who kill innocent passers-by deliver themselves to the police and say, we have done it all for God’s sake!
All this may read heartless. But I have merely endeavoured to suggest a way that is straighter and less weak than the one we have hitherto adopted.

And if we cannot, after the manner of civilized men, resort to voluntary arbitration or, after the manner of brave barbarous races, fight out differences without seeking the intervention of British justice or bayonets, all we may expect to get in the shape of reforms is an increased agent’s share in the bureaucratic Government; in other words, an increasing share in the exploitation of the dumb millions.
Let us take care that any agreement we may come to does not reduce us to that unenviable condition.

Young India, 16-6-1927
69. NOTES

SARDAR KHRAK SINGH

It must be a matter of joy to every patriot to find Sardar Kharak Singh once more free to take up national work outside the prison walls. By his indomitable will and refusal to bend himself to authority in order gain his freedom he had risen in the estimation of his countrymen. May he have long years of service to the country in its fight for freedom.

HAVE I BOYCOTTED ANDHRA?

When Deshabhakta Konda Venkatappayya saw me at Nandi and again at Bangalore, he told me that as Andhra was not on the tour list for the year, many Andhra friends had enquired of him whether I had boycotted Andhra. My old love of the Andhra people and the happy memories of my connection with them will not let me boycott Andhra, even if I wish to, though some of the Andhra workers do sometimes vex one into wishing to boycott the province till they set themselves right. They are fine men. They have got the patriotic spirit. But some of them are workers only so-called. They are all leaders and when everybody wants to lead there is nobody to serve, no one to obey and in the exercise of that false independence the people are neglected. I hope the workers to whom these remarks may apply will not say to themselves or to me that they are no worse than other provinces. It would be a wrong way of looking at the right thing. After all Andhra men and women who at one time gave promise of being the first in the field for real civil disobedience must not be satisfied with being as bad as the rest. Those who seek to compete for civil disobedience have to prove their capacity for exemplary obedience, restraint and discipline. Andhra, which might have easily been first in khadi and every one of its departments, has yet to come up to the mark. But I must not exhaust the whole of my battery of criticism. I must reserve it for my forthcoming visit, as I had never given up the idea of visiting Andhradesh. As a suitable month could not be set apart this year, the idea was to reserve Andhra for next year unless I could give it, as it was then thought, the first fortnight of December. God has however upset all my plan and the whole of the programme for the second half of this year has been dislocated. And if I am at all fit and well and there is no accident I would like to be in Andhradesh not for a few days but for a month or two next year. I have therefore told Konda Venkatappaya that if the people will still have me, I would like to visit Andhra early next year and combine rest with work. I must not be expected to rush through space and programmes as before. Let the workers also realize that I shall be devoting the stay in Andhra to khadi work alone.

Untouchability work is no doubt part of my being. But that work is largely included in khadi work. For, it is designed to level up those who occupy the lowest rung of the ladder with those who are at the top. It is the cotton thread which beginning in the humblest cottage of India and reaching the highest in the land can alone indissolubly bind the two and make them feel akin. I know that the Andhra workers are very ambitious. Let their ambition percolate down to the lowest stratum of society and all will be well.

A WELCOME STEP

A correspondent from Holakere in Mysore writes:

I am highly glad to inform you that the people belonging to Lambani community of my taluk have completely abstained from drinking today and other liquors since a month and a half. It was in the Lambani Conference held in this town at the end of last April that they had taken an oath not to touch any liquor, prostrating themselves before the evening sun. Since then they have not swerved from their oath. If anyone of that community is seen near a toddy shop, he is strictly dealt with by the Naik, Yajaman and Karabhan of that hamlet. Their women carry to us every day the glad news, there are no broils at their hovel and that they lead a very peaceful life. This is an instance to show that your movement of purification had entered our State even before your entering it.

I congratulate the Lambani community upon the great step they have taken, and hope that they will not slide back like many who did so after the exultation of 1921 had subsided. Let me invite the attention of the leaders of the community to the case recorded in these pages1 of the Raniparaj2 people of whom those abstainers who took to the charkha as a means of occupying their time and attention not only had no hankering after liquor but were able to double their savings. For, they not only saved what was spent upon the drink but they also added to their income by saving in the cost of clothing. It is the universal experience of temperance reformers that if the people who

---

1 In Young India, 26-5-1927, under the title “Among Raniparaj People”
2 Literally, ‘hill-people’ as renamed by Gandhiji; formerly known as Kaliparaj, which meant ‘black people’.
take pledges do not usefully occupy their time, the hankering returns and it becomes too strong to resist the temptation. I hope too that other villages will follow the example of Holakere and that when I am enabled to begin my tour in Mysore, I shall receive, side by side with glowing accounts which I have been promised of the progress of khadi, accounts also of eradication of the drink habit.

Young India, 16-6-1927

70. RANIPARAJ INQUIRY COMMITTEE

Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel has lost no time in embarking upon the work of the Committee that was only recently appointed at the Raniparaj Conference\(^1\). The following extracts\(^2\) from the interim report of the second tour of the Committee will be read with interest:

The Committee visited eighteen villages recording statements of witnesses from 47 villages in the Chikhli and Bulsar Talukas and is in the State of Bansda. It reflects credit upon the Bansda State that the Committee is able to give a glowing account of the interest that the Maharaja Saheb of Bansda is taking in his people. But all the good that is undoubtedly being done by His Highness to his people is really undone so long as he considers it necessary to derive an income from the drink traffic. No doubt the fact that the three neighbours adjacent to the Bansda territory, that is, the British, the Gaekwad and Dharampur have no prohibition makes it difficult for Bansda to carry out the policy of successful prohibition. But great things can not be done without great sacrifice and great measures. Bansda can not only lead the way by declaring out and out prohibition, but can then agitate for prohibition in the neighbouring States. The chief thing is to be prepared to sacrifice the drink revenue. An immediate beginning can be made by deciding not to use that revenue for any purpose, however laudable it may be, save for that of carrying on an intensive anti-drink propaganda amongst the tribes given to drink. For, there is no doubt that any State that seriously wants its people to give up the evil habit cannot be satisfied merely with making it legally impossible to indulge in the evil habit, but to find out the cause of the habit and to educate the people to give it up. In the end, no State need suffer by depriving itself of the drink revenue. The inevitable outcome of any

---

\(^1\) Held on March 16, 1927.

\(^2\) Not reproduced here
policy of prohibition carried out side by side with constructive work of the nature suggested by me must result in an ever increasing prosperity of the people and therefore of the State. India is the most promising country in the world for carrying out total prohibition for the simple reason that addiction to drink is not considered respectable or fashionable and is confined only to a certain class of people.

Young India, 16-6-1927

71. LETTER TO SONJA SCHLESIN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 16, 1927

DEAR MISS SCHLESIN,

Here is a letter from Dr. Jones which perhaps you would like.

I hope you had my long letter, and I do hope also that you will make it a point to see Mr. Sastri. When are you coming here? I wish you could also go to Phoenix and see Manilal and his wife.

Yours sincerely,

MISS SCHLESIN
POST BOX NO. 2284
JOHANNESBURG

From a photostat : S.N. 12360

1 A Jewish girl who was Gandhiji’s private secretary for many years in South Africa
2 Stanley Jones
3 Dated May 22, 1927.
4 V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, Agent-General of India in South Africa
DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. Your suggestion is undoubtedly interesting. But I do not understand why you fall foul of the charkha which the millions can easily take up; whereas your suggestion requires technical knowledge and character at its back. Your friends of the West have made a god of literacy. I wonder what Jesus, whom you call the “Lord Christ”, would say if he came in flesh and saw the people of the West crazy over a knowledge of letters, wealth and passing the best part of their time and life in seeking happiness from the external. Supposing that every person of education gave mechanically half an hour to teaching every untouchable, of what avail will it be to him or to the untouchables? And why are you so much enamoured of the material progress of Japan? I do not know whether the material has gone side by side with the moral progress. I have no wish to judge the Japanese. I have not even the data for doing so even if I wished. But neither literacy nor wealth without the moral backing has any attraction for me. And do you know why I swear by the charkha? I do because not merely the untouchables but millions of other people in India are starving because they have no work and because now they have even become too lazy to work. I am therefore presenting the charkha to the starving millions as there is no other simple productive work which can be presented to the millions; and I present it to the educated and the well-to-do people of India as an example for the rest.

I have the highest regard for my missionary friends, and that very regard makes me warn them in season and out of season against misinterpreting the message of the Bible. You tell me, “you have

---

1 Permanent address
2 Dated May 2, 1927
3 W. B. Stover had written: “I suggest that instead of the charkha every day, you set the example and put the challenge to all of educated India, to choose someone of illiterate India, and spend a half hour a day is teaching this illiterate person. I would suggest that the teacher and the one taught be of different castes. This idea carried to any great extent throughout the land would bring almost a revolution in the thinking of the people.”
4 Stover had written: “Japan has attained the highest literacy.”
taken the Lord Christ for your leader and guide. There is none better.” You do not mind my correcting you. I regard Jesus as a human being like the rest of the teachers of the world. As such He was undoubtedly great. But I do not by any means regard him to have been the very best. The acknowledgement of the debt which I have so often repeated that I owe to the Sermon on the Mount should not be mistaken to mean an acknowledgement of the orthodox interpretation of the Bible, or the life of Jesus. I must not sail under false colours.

Your letter is sincere and I felt that I could not better reciprocate your sincerity than by putting before you frankly my position.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

W. B. STOVER, ESQ.

MOUNT MORRIS

ILLINOIS, U.S.A.

From a photostat : S.N. 12521

73. LETTER TO DR. M. S. KELKAR

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 16, 1927

DEAR DOCTOR,

I see that mental distance between you and me is really growing. I can sympathize neither your salic [sic ] in astrology nor in black magic. They may both be substantial sciences; but they are sciences which I think we should avoid. As a matter of fact I do not attach so much value to things pertaining to the body as the wish to exhaust every available means for sustaining' the body or for keeping it in order as it has only a very limited importance in the scheme of life. I apply also equally limited means and therefore continually exclude those means which may seem to me to be of doubtful moral value. So then, if I err at all, I shall err on the right side. Excess care of the body and explorations into astrology—and what not—for the sake of that caretaking means going further away from his Maker, and seems like putting the shadow before the substance. I would not trouble you to travel with me.

Doctors here consider that 150 is normal blood-pressure for me

1 The source has “subsisting”.

VOL. 39 : 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927 65
and they have no misgivings whatsoever about my being able to resume moderate touring next month. I am certainly getting daily stronger physically.

Yours sincerely,

DR. M. S. KELKAR
C/O J. G. GADRE
NEW BHATWADI
BOMBAY 4

From a photostat : S.N. 14157

74. LETTER TO A. A. PAUL

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 16, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter and the pamphlet which I know I shall be interested to read.

I do not know when I shall be in Madras, I hardly think on the 23rd of July. But in any case I do not know whether I shall have gained sufficient strength during the year to conduct the retreat for hours' length as I was expected in the programme you had sent me before the breakdown in my health. The whole of the Southern tour is undergoing a radical transformation. I do not think Mr. Rajagopachari has yet been able to reshape it.

Yours sincerely,

A. A. PAUL, ESQ.
7. MILLER ROAD
KILPAUK, MADRAS

From a microfilm : S.N. 14158

75. LETTER TO MANECKBAI BAHADURJI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 16, 1927

I have your letter. Do please continue to write giving me all the titbits of Panchgani, of your own beautiful nest, telling me all about the birds that come and go.

Bangalore is the finest and cleanest place I have seen as yet in India. I have no doubt, it too has its dark corners. But I have not seen them as yet. And I suppose I shall not be able to see them either, because I am taken for my walks only to beautiful places. And its climate at least at this time of the year is certainly glorious. It is cool and yet not too cold. Its flowers also are very beautiful and various.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. MANECKBAI BAHADURJI
OMRA HALL
PANCHGANI

From a photostat : S.N. 14159

76. LETTER TO A. RANGASWAMI IYENGAR

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 16, 1927

MY DEAR RANGASWAMI,

I have your letter enclosing extract from the Rev. Mr. Holme's letter for which I thank you.

I have also your letter about the forthcoming special meeting of the All-India Congress Committee. I do not suppose you expect me to take any notice of this letter. I presume it is a multiplex copy sent pro forma to all the members of the Working Committee.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. A. RANGASWAMI IYENGAR
DESHBANDHU BUILDINGS
MOUNT ROAD
MADRAS

From a microfilm : S.N. 14160
MY DEAR GOVIND,

I have your letter. Of course I can agree with every work of what you have said about typewriters and typists. There is nothing inconsistent between your letter and my presentation. I simply told you why there had been seeming indifference about getting the very best typists.

But the advertisement idea does not commend itself to me. We have so many limitations that people who know us will not care to apply, and if strangers in search of employment but not knowing what we are do apply, it would be a waste of time for them and us to trouble them. I am writing this from bitter experience. But I again entirely agree with you that there is certainly within limitations scope for educated Indians to find themselves in khadi work. And that process is gradually going on. There is much more that I can write on this subject. But it is unnecessary to tax you on details. I was long with my previous letter because I was anxious to discuss some principles.

I am entirely at one with you that Maganlalji should have all the assistance he needs and that whatever assistance we take should be of the best type available; and if I felt that advertising in the manner you suggest would do it, I should go in for it. And, in any case, Maganlal can certainly advertise. There is no principle at stake, nor is there any question of much expense.

I know that you never implied that there was anything wrong in handling human excreta and I also know that you yourself did the thing yourself in the Ashram. What I told you was that the untouchables themselves would feel as I suggested. That would be wrong I know. But I simply mentioned the difficulty. They will take up the kind of work you suggest only after some of us have done, and done it successfully.

I don’t know whether it was your prompting or not, but I have got a new edition of Dr. Kellogg’s book on diet. It is a big volume and it is lying in front of me. It is enough to make one giddy even to contemplate reading that volume especially when I have mortgaged

---

1 In letter dated May 27, 1927.
every available minute for the work I have on hand and which I feel I must do. I shall therefore profit more by the correspondence lessons that you are giving me out of your experience on dieting than by reading the big book.

The new shorthand idea appeals to me. And if someone at the Ashram will go in for it, I would not mind spending the money. You will therefore press the suggestion on the people at the Ashram.

With love to you all,

Yours,

R. B. GREGG, ESQ.
C/O S. E. STOKES, ESQ.
KOTGARH
SIMLA HILLS

From a photostat : S.N. 14161

---

78. LETTER TO MIRZA M. ISMAIL

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 16, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I esteem your letter enclosing copy of your address to the Mysore Representative Assembly. I shall go through the whole of it as soon as I get a few moments. But I have already gone through the portion kindly marked by you referring to the untouchables. It gave me great joy.

I had also your letter about the birthday greetings.

I hope to be able to visit Mysore before the 15th of next month and pay my respects to the Maharaja Saheb.

Yours sincerely,

MIRZA M. ISMAIL, ESQ.
‘LAKE VIEW’
MYSORE

[PS.]

I now learn that the marking was done here.

M. K. G.

From a photostat : S.N. 14162
79. LETTER TO DR. B. S. MOONJE

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 16, 1927

DEAR DR. MOONJE,

I am sincerely sorry for having given you offence. I was certainly not unbalanced when I wrote to you. I have really believed that it was part of your philosophy to beat an opponent in views with any stick that came your way. Indeed I can give you names of those who have valiantly defended that philosophy. But I shall not argue with you. If we meet, I shall give you chapter and verse for the belief I have held about you. But of course I like your energetic contradiction. For I can only like repudiation of a philosophy which I have considered to be morally indefensible and utterly false. Only my philosophy has room for holding in respect those who have a false philosophy but who do not know that it is false. You have quoted Jamnalalji in your support. I hardly think he will assist you. But I will preserve your letter and ask him about it.

Now for your question. I have certainly said that untouchability as practised today in Hinduism is the darkest blot on it. But that is different from saying that it is part of Hindu religion as you have made me say. For you will find in my writings an emphatic statement to the effect that untouchability is no part of Hindu religion, and that if it was, I should renounce Hinduism. Indeed, you will find in the cutting you have sent me the following sentence: “I find no authority whatsoever in Hinduism for treating any portion of the human family as untouchable.” I have called it an excrescence.

Yours sincerely,

DR. B. S. MOONJE
NAGPUR CITY

From a photostat: S.N. 14616
DEAR FRIEND,

I now understand all you say about the abdominal massage and massage of the heart. Of course it has been continued ever since I wrote to you. I simply wanted to clear what I did not understand. I have told you that in the physical application of these exercises, I propose to go by faith in you. Whilst I shall present my doubts to you so long as I do not understand your explanations, they shall be final for me.

I want to give the practice of these yogic exercises a full trial, if only because I regard them of all the methods of medical treatment to be the freest from danger.

After I wrote my letter of the 8th, I took a forward step which I hope you would not consider hasty. On re-reading your notes, I saw that you expected me to go up to 30 degrees angle. So, after writing to you, I immediately broadened the angle but limited the duration to five minutes in accordance with the instructions. But I have my own doubts as to the angle being 30, because I have not yet secured an accurate measuring instrument. Not being satisfied with the raising of the cot, I looked about for a plank which I have now secured. The cot has a wooden surface. I spread on it not a mattress but a padded rug, and I take the sarvangasan on it with the help of the board. It is now infinitely better than the previous exercises. Mahadev has been measuring the thing, and he thinks that the angle at which I take it is nearer to 50 than 30. I am not satisfied that it is anything like 50. Be that as it may. I am feeling no discomfort. Today will be the 4th day, and the duration is only five minutes. Blood-pressure is taken every Sunday, and if I find that the pressure has at all gone up, I shall ascribe the rising to the angle and drop the exercise till I hear from you in reply to this. And I shall drop it, in any case, if you think that I have gone too far.

There is another passive exercise which I have been taking, not very regularly but fairly regularly, which I used to take when I was convalescing after dysentery and when I was physically much weaker than I am today. And it is to raise the legs at right angles to the trunk and keep them for two or three minutes there; that is for removing any fatigue there may be after the walk; and then, I have the legs in that straight condition bent as much as can be bent without any strain whatsoever towards the head, whilst the trunk is lying on the bed. This I take to strengthen the muscular exercise for the abdomen. I think I even mentioned to you that this was given to me by Dr. Kelkar whom, I understand, you know. And he has been writing to me to press that exercise on me. Both these things, keeping the legs straight and at right angles to the trunk and gently bending the legs towards the head seem to me to do good. There is no fatigue left and there is felt after the bending exercise a forward movement about the bowels.

---

1 In reply to his letter dated June 14

I am still not taking tepid water and salt in the morning; for, the enema continues and I am now able to retain the water for half an hour. But I do take a tumbler full of water by the nose. Less than half of the quantity is spilt in the process of drinking through the nose. So I think about four ounces of cool water I take in this way just after the mouth wash.

The walking exercise in the morning and in the evening continues, 40 minutes each time. But the distance covered is greater than when I began after coming to Bangalore. It is nothing less than two miles every time.

I have not yet dared to go beyond two teaspoonfuls of melted butter. Milk has been increased, I think I told you, from 30 to 40 ounces and bhakhari\(^1\) or oatmeal two ounces remain.

I enclose your original notes which you need not return because I shall remember the contents. You will please send me any further instructions you may think desirable.

Yours sincerely,

SRI MURTU KUVALAYANANDJI
KUNJAVANA
LONAVLA

From a photostat : G.N. 5048; also S.N. 12596

\(^1\) Thick cake prepared from wheat flour
81. LETTER TO KANTI GANDHI

BANGALORE,

Jeth Vad 2 [June 17, 1927]

CHI. KANTI,

I got your letter. You want my permission to go and see Chi. Harilal. A son need not seek his grandfather’s permission to see his father. No one can stand in the way of a son’s wishes. You have now come of age, and that is another reason why there should be no question of my giving you permission.

All I can do is to explain to you your responsibility, and this is my advice in regard to your seeing Chi. Harilal. I believe he is present following a wrong path. He leads an immoral life. He has become an addict. He has forgotten his dharma, and, therefore, he is not fit to exercise his right as a father. I regard him as suffering from a kind of disease. His disease is not physical but spiritual, and spiritual disease is more dreadful than a physical ailment. It is not, therefore, your duty to go to him to comfort him; on the contrary, it is your duty to keep away from him. You, I and his friends and well-wishers should employ spiritual non-co-operation against him. If you have intended to go to him to reform him I regard your idea as worthy of support, and in that case I would facilitate your going. But just now it seems that you wish to go because of that letter. I feel, therefore, that your going to him will mean your encouraging him in his intention. Moreover, if you wish to go to him in order to reform him, you are not yet, from a practical point of view, fit and sufficiently mature to undertake such a task. From that point of view, you are yet a child. You are still studying. It is my desire, and also my effort to see that as you study, you should so develop your soul that you may acquire the power to do what I could not in regard to Harilal, and you should so impress him that the moment he sees you he would abjure his evil habits. I have been bringing up both you brothers with that aim in view. If you have the capacity, you will be able to benefit from such education. I would, therefore, advise you to write to Harilal and tell him firmly that he gives up his addictions and his immoral life and is able to support you all, or until you are able by the power of your tapascharya 1 to awaken him from his slumber, you cannot go and see him. I do not, however, insist that you should forthwith accept my

1 Self-suffering as moral discipline advice. So far, Harilal used to admit his weaknesses, and has been saying that he would try to shake them off; but now he has started writing letters against me in the papers. I have not seen those letters, but I know their purport. Harilal says that it is I who have forsaken my dharma, not he, and that I have been propagating the Buddhist faith. And he holds that such propaganda is harmful to people’s welfare and, therefore, regards it as an evil. His rebellion, he says, is against that evil. And he intends to take you brothers away from under my undesirable influence at the first opportunity. As such are his views, you are likely to be assailed by doubts. If you have the slightest doubt whether my ideas are right or Harilal’s, I think you should not be led away by my ideas. Hence this is my further advice to you that should humbly consult the teachers under whom you have studied or those among the elders with whom you have come in contact in the Ashram and who command your confidence. Put all your problems before them and act as they advise. If you ask me to solve your problems, I too will help. The Gita which all of us study daily, which you have been learning by heart and trying to understand with great devotion, says that we should get our problems solved with the help of those whom we regard as our elders by earnestly questioning them with humility. We should have faith in them, accept what they say as true and act accordingly. I wish, and I advise you, that you should do what I have suggested. Do not reach a hasty decision. Do not act with childish immaturity. Try to understand what your duty at the present moment is, and act with courage and determination in accordance with that duty. Consider, not what you would like to do, but what you should do. You may show this letter to anyone you may wish to consult. I shall wait for your reply. Let me know how both of you are.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C. W. 7703. Courtesy: Kanti Gandhi
82. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 18, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. If you can at all bear the strain of travelling, the weather here should suit you remarkably for, it is superb at this time of the year. But you must not undergo any strain or risk. You should come only if the doctor advises.

I am glad everything is now being removed to Sodepur. Let the boys go to Wardha by all means. But the distance to Ahmedabad need not put them off, if they will be happier at Sabarmati, as perhaps they are likely to be. Wardha has not the convenience that Sabarmati in some respects has, especially when Jamnalalji is not there as he will not be now for some time.

With love to you all,

Yours,
BAPU

SJT. SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
HOME VILLA
GIRIDIH

From a photostat: G. N. 1574

83. LETTER TO MANORAMA DEVI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 18, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your pathetic letter. It is evident it is not written by yourself. As you seem to know some English you may write to me in your own English whatever you like; better still write in Bengali. I don’t understand it myself, but I have Bengali assistants here permanently with me. And tell me what your age is; what you propose to do with your parents? Have you their consent to leave them? Are you keeping good health? Will you travel alone if permission is given to you to come to the Ashram? Do you know Sjt. Gopabandhu Das? And if you do, will you please see him and let him write to me? And even if you do not know him, will you make it a point to see him? He is well known in Orissa. He is President of the Congress Committee.
and he was at one time member of the Legislative Council. He is to be found either at Cuttack or at Puri. Who is your friend who has written the letter for you? I would like to help you. But before I know how I can help you, it is necessary for me to have all the particulars.

Yours sincerely,

Srimati Manorama Devi
Chandisahi
Cuttack (Orissa)

From a photostat: S. N. 12578

84. LETTER TO FIROZA P. S. TALEYARKHAN

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
June 18, 1927

Your note was received last night; but it was handed to me only just now. I am sorry you have been laid up. I was wondering why you had not come in as you had intended to do. Of course I shall be delighted to see you whenever you come. And do please bring Lady Banerjee with you. Of course you know the hour and you won’t mind if there are other visitors sitting or coming in at the time. Then you could come any day without notice. But please do not strain yourself to come if you are at all unwell. I shan’t misunderstand your not coming. We are both convalescing and, in any case, now that I know who you are there need be no formality whatsoever.

Yours sincerely,

Srimati Firoza P. S. Taleyarkhan
3, Residency Road
Bangalore

From a photostat: S. N. 14163

85. LETTER TO PRINCIPAL, SANGLI INDUSTRIAL AND AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
June 18, 1927

Dear friend,

I thank you for your very full letter. Only one further inquiry I would esteem it a favour if you would answer. Is there any difference in the ratio of nutrition between fertilized and sterile eggs? In your school, do you also teach cattle-breeding and dairying?

Yours sincerely,

THE PRINCIPAL
SANGLI INDUSTRIAL AND AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL
SANGLI

From a photostat: S. N. 14164

86. QUARRELLING IN THE NAME OF RELIGION

A gentleman has sent me newspaper cuttings regarding the dispute which occurred in Udaipur State between Shwetambars\(^1\) and Digambars\(^2\) and suggested that I should go through them and give my opinion about it. For one thing, in my present state of health I cannot spare enough time to read so many newspapers carefully, and, even if I had the necessary time and energy, it is not my practice to form an opinion on any matter—no one should, I believe—from what one reads in the papers. I, therefore, do not know which party is at fault, or more at fault. However, I shall express the thoughts which occurred to me after a fairly close reading of the cuttings.

The language of the writers indicates their partisan spirit. Each side blames the other and considers itself innocent.

I found no essential differences between this dispute and the writings about it, on the one hand, and the Hindu-Muslim quarrel and the writings about it on the other. There is more bitterness in the latter and the language of the writings is more venomous, but the difference is only of one degree.

The fact is that we have forgotten the very meaning of religion. Everyone fights to prove that his own view is the right one. There is no trace of any desire to understand what religion means, in what it consists, by what marks it can be recognized, and how it can be preserved.

We have a right to expect more wisdom from the Jains; they are votaries of syadvada\(^3\) and claim themselves to be the only followers of the path of compassion. They should display tolerance; that is, be liberal towards others who hold different views. We should know that

---

\(^1\) Sects of Jains
\(^2\) ibid.
\(^3\) The doctrine of the plurality of truth
other people will be attached to what they regard as truth quite as much as we will to what we regard as truth. Even when we feel that our opponent is at fault, we should not get angry with him but should act towards him with charity.

As I read these articles, however, I felt that even in Jain homes and temples texts of syadvada and compassion merely decorate old books and no other significance. I realize this in experience again and again. Where the doctrine of compassion is followed in action, it seems to be limited to feeding ants and preventing people from catching fish. I have also observed that if, in displaying compassion in this manner, cruelty is shown to human beings, that is regarded as dharma.

Raychandbhai often said that when Jainism was embraced by Vaniās, it was interpreted in a Vania spirit, and knowledge and courage, which should be the signs of compassion, vanished almost completely; compassion became synonymous with cowardice and thus came to be despised.

Moreover, dharma and wealth are eternal enemies; but the Goddess Lakhmi took up her abode in Jain temples and the result was that religious issues, instead of being solved through tapascharya, came to be settled in courts of law through argument by lawyers. That is, those who could pay more could get a point of religious principle interpreted in their favour.

This picture may appear somewhat exaggerated, but it is not so. I know the Jains. I know them and the principles of their religion as intimately as I do Vaishnavism and Vaishnavas. Some in their anger believe me to be a Jain. Others in their love wish that I should became a Jain. Some Jains are pleased by my partiality for a few members of their community. I have learnt much from their books. My contact with many Jain friends has helped me much. All this has prompted me to write what I have done above thereby awaken those Jains who love their religion.

Why should there be hatred between Shwetambers and Digambars? Their religious principles are the same. The few differences which exist are easy enough to tolerate. They are such as can be resolved to the satisfaction of both parties, like the differences between the followers of the advaita and the dvaita doctrines.

There are numerous monks and nuns among Jains, and they

---

1 Members of a community traditionally engaged in business and commerce
2 Identity of the individual self with the universal Self 3 Separateness of the individual self from the universal Self have plenty of spare time. Why should they not engage themselves in real tapascharya? Why should they not acquire the highest knowledge? Why should they not seek to impart to others the benefit of their experience?

Jain youths seem to be engrossed in earning wealth like their elders. Why should they not, though living the life of householders, become like tapasvis\(^1\), generous-hearted and the very embodiment of the purest spirit of compassion?

I was asked to give my opinion about the Palitana\(^2\) affairs, and now I am asked my opinion about the sorry dispute in Udaipur. The correspondents on this occasion, too, are young friends. This time I have given an opinion which probably they never expected. I do not distinguish between Hindus and Jains. I can establish the unity of Hinduism, that is, the Vedic doctrine, with Jainism, with the help of syadvada itself. For myself personally, I established long ago the unity of all religions with its help. The dispute between Shwetambaris and Digamaris cannot be settled through newspapers nor in a court of law. Both parties should atone for their errors and purify themselves, or one party should do that on behalf of both. Those who cannot do even this should stop talking about religion, be humble and keep silent.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 19-6-1927

87. SWADESHI v. FOREIGN

A friend from Kathiawar writes as follows:\(^3\)

Many readers will immediately see the fallacies in this letter. Even so, since one often hears similar views expressed by others, it is necessary to explain again the meaning of swadeshi as clearly as one can. Moreover, we suffer a great deal through an abuse of the idea of swadeshi. If many of the activities which are being carried on in the name of swadeshi were stopped and the effort spent on true swadeshi, we should achieve our goal much earlier.

\(^1\) Those who practise tapascharya

\(^2\) A Jain centre of pilgrimage in Saurashtra

\(^3\) The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had criticized Gandhiji’s view that foreign articles which could not be manufactured in India and which were useful should be readily accepted. For Gandhiji’s views vide “The Cow and the Buffalo”, 22-5-1927.
I am sure that I have become more and not less scrupulous in following the vow of swadeshi. I have been following it, as I had conceived it in 1920, and am following it even more scrupulously today. We may certainly accept a foreign needle, since it is a useful article and can be assimilated. By accepting it, we harm no industry or craft in the country and its acceptance, therefore, does not throw anyone out of employment. On the contrary, the needle provides work to hundreds, work which benefits the country. Foreign cloth may be good in quality, and cheaper, may even be offered free; even then, it should be rejected, for its acceptance has ruined crores of our countrymen. We had been producing cloth in our own villages, and have found no other work in place of that industry. We committed a great sin in abandoning it. Its abandonment resulted in starvation, and that led to an increase in disease, crime and immorality. If ever the time comes when the people of this country will have another, more honest occupation [than spinning and weaving] and when the cotton cannot be grown on the soil of this land or when the cultivators themselves will prefer to grow another, more profitable crop, then the vow of swadeshi cloth may serve no useful purpose. If future generations, reading the literature of this age, regard this vow as an immutable principle and even at that time apply the principle of swadeshi to cloth, they will show themselves foolish and will be acting like people who drown themselves in their ancestral well instead of swimming across it. My reason cannot conceive of such a time ever coming. Whether it comes or not, there can be no two opinions that in our present condition khadi is the purest form of swadeshi and we can even say that now there are no two opinions about it.

Raw materials worth crores of rupees are produced in this country and, thanks to our ignorance, lethargy and lack of invention, exported to foreign countries; the result is, as Shri Madhusudan Das has pointed out, that we remain ignorant like animals, our hands do not get the training which they ought to and our intellects do not develop as they should. As a consequence, living art has disappeared from our land and we are content to imitate the West. As long as we cannot make the machines required for utilizing the hide of dead cattle, worth nine crores, available in our country, I would be ready to import them from any part of the world and would still believe that I was scrupulously keeping of the world and would still believe that I scrupulously keeping the vow of swadeshi. I would believe that I would be only discrediting that vow by refusing, out of obstinacy, to import those machines. Similarly our country produces a great many things with medicinal properties, and those come back to us in the form of a variety of drugs or other articles. It is our duty to import any machines, and obtain any help, which will enable us to utilize these things in our own country.

Swadeshi is an eternal religious duty. The manner of following it may, and ought to, change from age to age. The principle of swadeshi is the soul and khadi is its body in this age and in this country. If in the course of time this body perishes, swadeshi will assume a new body but the soul dwelling in it will be the same. Swadeshi is service, and if we understand its nature we shall simultaneously benefit ourselves, our families, our country and the world. Swadeshi is not intended to serve self-interest but is pure altruism, and hence I call it a form of yajna. It certainly benefits ourselves, but there is no room in it for hatred of others. There can be no absolute duty of not importing anything at any time; only, we may not import anything which may harm the country. Nor can it be accepted as an absolute principle that everything that belongs to or is produced by one’s own country is good. Anything, whether indigenous or foreign, which is good and serves our interest, should be readily accepted, and likewise anything, indigenous or foreign, which is bad and harmful should be rejected. The country produces a huge quantity of liquor, but all of it deserves to be shunned. There is no reason to believe that, if the whole country gives up drinking, those engaged in the liquor trade will be ruined. Their present business harms themselves and the country and they will not starve if they lose it; there will be other, better occupations which they can follow.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 19-6-1927
DEAR SIR,

With reference to the collections made in Benares, it is quite correct to state that they were all made for the Gandhi Ashram, Benares. They should therefore have the whole amount not as a loan but as a grant. It ought to appear in our books because the collection was responsibly made. It should be entered as ear-marked for Gandhi Ashram, Benares, and there would be no need to get the sanction from the Council for the grant.

As to Laxmi Behn and Harjivan, my opinion is that the whole things should be left to Rajendra Babu to manage, such help being given to him as he may require for facilitating the execution of his decision. This thing may be further discussed when we meet.

As to Gulbarga collection, I am conferring with Gangadharrao. But the position generally is this. Whilst it is convenient for us to know from which province collections have been received, all these collections are on behalf of the Association. If the idea is that the whole of the Maharashtra collections should be necessarily spent for Maharashtra, and that other provincial collections should be similarly treated, the doctrine is untenable. And I made it clear during the tour at all the places where the question was raised that whilst the places at which the amounts were collected will be borne in mind at the time of considering the allocation of funds, the Association could not undertake necessarily to spend funds in the place where they have been collected. It is therefore a matter of little importance what description is given to the entry of Gulbarga collections in our books. Theoretically, it is open to the Association to spend the whole of the Maharashtra collection, say in Orissa and vice versa. That it would be gross abuse of authority and that such abuse would break the Association is also true. But I mention this merely to illustrate my meaning and to show that so far as ledger entry is concerned, it is a matter of no moment where a particular collection comes from.

Yours sincerely,

THE SECRETARY
ALL-INDIA SPINNERS’ ASSOCIATION
AHMEDABAD

From a microfilm : S.N. 19782
89. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 19, 1927

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

I have your two letters. I am glad you have opened your heart to me. The very act of doing so often soothes one. Do not therefore apologize for writing at length and in whatsoever manner the spirit moves you. I am glad you have got the permission from mother for taking to simpler dress. I would like you to open out your heart to both father and mother as you have done to me. Never mind their laughing you out or smothering you with ridicule or putting you down even in anger. You will take it all in good part and with a smile on your lips. They have a right to do all those things. And when they recognize in you, in spite of ridicule, anger, etc., a seriousness and determination which shall not be moved, they will let you do what you like. How often have not young men and women built castles in the air only to be destroyed later. Why should you expect people to regard you as an exception? If you are an exception, you will stand ridicule, contempt and worse, and come out better through the ordeal.
After all God must put us through the test.

I share your grief over your having to give up that dress on which mother has lavished so much time and so much love. But love is its own reward. And parents do not regret the trouble they have taken after things which their children outgrow. Let all those things of yours go to Sohila when mother is satisfied that you will never be likely to want them.

Mira has left Rewari and before she migrates to Wardha for perfecting her Hindi, she has come to Bangalore where she will be for a few days.

I have not got the poetic language to describe the weather here, but it is really fine at this time of the year in Bangalore. Of course we have not the Himalayas here. But I suppose you know Bangalore better than I do. I am still progressing.

With Love,

Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9603
90. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 19, 1927

I have your brief letters. But I can read through them your grief as well as your victory over it. You are used to all kinds of charges and innuendoes. Sastri is now there. So after you have been there a month or so with him, I expect you will be returning. How I wish you were with me in Bangalore. You would have then been my door-keeper and enjoyed the glorious weather here. As it is Rajagopalachari and Gangadharrao are the gate-keepers. I see very little of them. They put in their appearance only to bring any visitors and take them out. I know nothing about their trials and their attempt to shield me. As Rajagopalachari himself has written in his latest story, “Illnesses of rich men or great men have a charm and romance all their own.” One needs to be really a pauper to understand the chastening effects of illness. I am not going to give you any of the innumerable painful titbits from this end. You have enough of them all there. This is therefore merely to assure you that you are ever in my mind.

Yours sincerely,

---

From a photostat : S.N. 12362

---

1 “The Blind Girl of Vellalapatti” in Young India, 23-6-1927
91. LETTER TO HARINDRANATH CHATTOPADHYAYA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 19, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Have you not unconsciously made a mistake and written to me when you should have written to the Poet? Or, have you really thought that I know the literary men and artists of Europe? If you have, it is then a case of distance lending enchantment to the scene. I have hardly any correspondence even with M. Romain Rolland. I do not think that I have written more than two letters to him. The European correspondents are all common readers of Young India. I do not even remember their names, and they will not be the persons whom you have in view. Now, please tell me what you will have me to do.

Yours sincerely,

H. CHATTOPADHYAYA, ESQ.
KODIALBAI.P.O.
MANGALORE

From a photostat : S.N. 12773

92. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 19, 1927

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I must still dictate, though this dictating is not to be regarded as any indication of weakness of body. I am simply literally following doctor’s advice in order to store up energy for future use. Whether energy is being thereby stored or not remains to be known.

I have your telegram. If you could have braved the travelling through the hot parts, you would certainly have been amply rewarded and forgotten the heat of central India. I wonder whether chamber work could not be done outside Allahabad. Pherozeshah used to drag clients after him. Of course it was cruel. I wonder whether for reasons of health you would not be justified in putting clients to the trouble of following you to a cool place.

Things, as they are shaping in the Congress, confirm the opinion

1 In reply to his letter dated June 11
that it is not yet time for Jawaharlal to shoulder the burden. He is too high-souled to stand the anarchy and hooliganism that seem to be growing in the Congress, and it would be cruel to expect him to evolve order all of a sudden out of chaos. I am confident, however, that the anarchy will spend itself before long and the hooligans will themselves want a disciplinarian. Jawaharlal will come in then. For the present, we should press Dr. Ansari to take the reins. He won’t control the hooligans. He will let them have their way; but he may specialize in the Hindu-Muslim question and do something in the matter. It will be quite enough work for him in the coming year to solve the almost insoluble problem.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 12867

93. LETTER TO MATHURADAS

BANGALORE,

Jeth Vad 5 [June 20, 1927]¹

Bhai Mathuradas,

I have your letter. May your resolve to observe brahmacharya endure for ever and God give you the strength for it. Has this vow been taken with the willing consent of your wife? If it is, its observance will be easier.

Do not admit defeat about khadi; this work is a kind of tapascharya. We do not give up our faith in truth, or forsake its practice or its propagation, even if the whole world habitually speaks untruth; in this age and in the circumstances in which we are placed, we should act in the same manner in regard to khadi. What are you doing there now, and how do you carry on your work?

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3763

¹ Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this day in 1927.
94. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

BANGALORE,

Jeth Vad 5 [June 20, 1927]

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I get your letters regularly. I feel happy. Whether the cause of this regularity is the regret I expressed in Bombay or the new broom in the form of Sushila is a question which only you two can answer. If my regret is the cause, may the memory of that regret remain fresh with you for ever, and if the new broom is the cause, let it never grow old.

My letter is late by a week. I will be more careful hereafter. Your regularity will keep me careful. When elders become old, the young can keep them vigilant. Perhaps you know that, had Gorakh not proved stronger than Machchhendra, the latter would have fallen. If you do not know about this, ask me; I will explain the story in my next letter, and shall have a good subject to write upon.

I am very glad to hear that Sushila has put on weight. Has her deafness decreased somewhat? It is also good news she has started type-composing. She can become capable of managing a press. A girl of 17 or 18 can train herself in no time. The burden of household chores on her should not increase. For that, if you keep your food requirements simple as you used to do formerly, a great deal of time will be saved. Food should be cooked only once and that too should be very simple, so that the kitchen may not occupy all one’s time. Manilal knows all this art, if, that is, he has not forgotten it. A woman is not born merely to cook meals. Since cooking must be done, both [husband and wife] should take a hand in it. If they do and work in a spirit of service, they can easily discover many ways of saving time.

You may take as much as you can digest from all this that I have written and leave the rest.

I shall certainly try to write a letter by every mail, but remember that the translation of the Gita which I have given you must also be counted among my letters. That translation is intended for people like you, and now it is being done at a faster rate.

Let me know if you do not understand or like its language, so

---

1 A disciple who saved his Guru Machchhendra, when the latter seemed to have yielded to the attraction of worldly life.
that I may be more careful and may revise that part which you find not easy to understand. This will help me as much as it will help you.

I am glad to know that you continue to read the Gita. You have sent your photograph to Ramdas. It does not seem that you have sent one here.

I shall respect your wish that no one else should read your letters, but they contain nothing private. Everyone naturally wants to hear news of you; if, therefore, you wish that no one should read your letters, you should from time to time write a letter to Chhaganlal which all people in the Ashram may read. All the same, I have respected your wishes and not passed on your letters to others.

[PS.] I am quite well. By the time this reaches you,

I shall have already resumed my tour.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 4721

95. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

BANGALORE,

_Jeth Vad 5 [June 20, 1927]_¹

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. You, me and everyone else would have been put to shame if, after having gone there, you had missed home as Shanti did. We have been taught to feel at home wherever we are. Since you have liked the place, your health should improve there.

Do not move about more than you can endure. What do you do for your food? Where do you bring it from? What fruits do you get? And what is the arrangement for milk? Let me also know with whom you keep company there and about all other things that may occur to you. Just as it is useless to think about the past, it is useless to think of the future. ‘One step enough for me’ is an advice based on experience. What shall we gain by knowing the future? In other words, why do we not merge the future and the past in the present? The present, after all, is nothing but an extension of the past. To think of the distant future when at every minute changes are unfolding before our eyes, is like building castles in the air and only fools build castles in the air. The present means our duty of the moment. If we know what is our duty of the moment and direct all our efforts to its fulfilment, it is the highest form of valour. Unhappiness is born out of imagining a rosy future and lamenting about the past. So, one who takes care of the present and fulfills his duties has conquered the cycles of birth and death.

¹ From the combination of place-name, Gujarati day and month in the dateline as also the contents; vide “Letter to Victor Mohan Joshi”, 21-6-1927. _Jeth Vad 5_ in 1927 corresponded to June 20.

I have written to Victor Joshi today. If Chhotelal is there, give him this news. I am not writing a separate letter to him because before this reaches there, he would have left and if he has not, he would read this.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32972

96. LETTER TO LAKSHMIKANT

BANGALORE,
Jyaishtha Krishna 6 [June 20, 1927]

Bhai LakshmiKantiji,

I got both your letters. I wanted to have a talk with pujya Malaviyaji and therefore could not reply to your previous letter immediately. I think you should not have written an open letter. The problem of caste-reform is very serious and difficult. It calls for great patience. Malaviyaji bears no ill will towards you. After having talked to him I am convinced that there was a difference between your way of working and his. Pujya Malaviyaji desires reform of Hindu society; he also wants the narrow caste restrictions to be liberalized but he believes that reforms cannot be effected just by the pioneering efforts of one man. But then he is making all possible efforts if only according to his own method. He would never think of annoying you.

Now here is my view. Whatever you did was right. Reformers should carry on their mission without cutting themselves off from Hindu society, bearing no malice and with perfect love of the Hindu religion, and while doing so, put up with all the hardships that might come in their way. Those who violate social conventions in the course of their activities must submit to the sanctions laid down by society and have a liberal attitude towards society while suffering them. This is what is called satyagraha. It is not for a social reformer to first disregard society’s laws and then to feel sore about having to suffer punishment for this disregard. I hear if you go through some formal atonement you can be re-admitted to the caste. I am against submitting to such atonement. We atone for what we regard as sin. What you have done is no sin. It is therefore needless, even improper, to atone for it. But if you are not prepared to suffer excommunication you can return to your caste by going through the prescribed atonement. I was pained to see in your open letter a reference to Islam which looked like a threat. Every man follows his own faith not because he wants to oblige others but because he considers religion as the lifeline without which life appears impossible to him. If the tenets of Hinduism are to bring you moksha, there is no ground to revolt against it even if all the Hindus of this country were to oppose you.

1 Victor Mohan Joshi. However, Gandhiji’s letter to him is dated June 21, 1927, not June 20 as suggested here. Vide “Letter to Victor Mohan Joshi”, 21-6-1927.

From a microfilm of the Hindi : S.N. 12674

97. A LETTER

[Before June 21, 1927]

I have your letter. Books like the Bhagavata seem to have been written to meet the requirements of many different kinds of men. It is possible that immoral people will seek in it support for their immorality. If a man reads the Bhagavata with the desire to find God on every page of the work, any evil that may be present in his mind will disappear. The right course appears to be to give up reading a book which fills us with bad thoughts. The Bhagavata is not a historical work. It does not give an account of a historical Krishna. Krishna is the atman and the Gopis are the many senses. They are obedient servants of the self-controlled atman and dance before it as it wills.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

1 The source has this letter before the entries for June 21, 1927.
98. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 21, 1927

MY DEAR BHRRRR,

Better late than never. I have your letter at last. Why should marriage ceremonies cost so much time, trouble, money, and make even 70-year-young people look old for all the time and trouble taken over marriages of their children? What is there extraordinary in a marriage to elate parents and their children and almost make them mad with joy? Is it not an everyday occurrence like birth, youth, old age and death itself? They are all necessary changes attendant upon life. But of course all this is philosophy after the event. If I had a marriage in prospect, perhaps, I should write differently. But even if I intended to be married, there does not appear to be in existence a parent mad enough or sane enough to give me his girl in marriage. I can therefore safely deliver lectures to young people and old people who take pleasure in wasting their time and money over marriages. However I shall forgive all this extravagance, if Sohaila properly puts down her husband when he endeavours to restrain her freedom, and by sheer force of exemplary character breaks down the wretched purdah in Lucknow and the neighbourhood; and of course the propaganda of khaddar is the least I expect her to do.

I am still gathering strength and I am not likely to leave the South for another two months. It must therefore be some time before I shall have the pleasure of hugging you and touching your silvery beard and chatting on all matters important and unimportant. Raihana must be allowed to grow in her own way.

With love to you all,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 9559

---

1 This was a form of greeting used by Gandhiji and Abbas Tyabji for each other.
99. LETTER TO DEBENDRA NATH MITRA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 21, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I must apologize to you for entirely forgetting to give you my suggestions regarding agriculture. My impression is that unless improvements which are within the means of the poor are taken to their very farms as they were in South Africa, success will be slow. My recent studies more and more demonstrate to me the necessity of the State taking virtual control of all the cattle. It seems to me that unless the cattle problem is properly tackled, they will either be killed out mercilessly or we shall be. And while things are allowed to take their course, we are both being ground down. Destruction of uneconomic cattle, I hold to be impractical and criminal in our country. We must therefore take charge of the uneconomic cattle and find ways and means of supporting them as economically as possible, getting what return we can out of their manure and out of their hide, bone, etc., after they die. We should cease to allow a single calf to come into being except through proper bulls. Your farm should therefore, in my opinion, contain facilities for proper dairying and tanning and there should be series of experiments to find out the relative value of manure in connection with the feed of unused and unuseful cattle. I do not know whether you followed the series of articles that were published in Young India on the cattle problem. There are of course other things I might mention; but they require legislation and [are] therefore outside your jurisdiction and control.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. DEBENDRA NATH MITRA
GOVT. AGRICULTURAL FARM
FARIDPUR (EAST BENGAL)

From a microfilm : S.N. 12917
100. LETTER TO LAJPAT RAI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 21, 1927

DEAR LALAJI,

I do not know whether this letter will reach you. I simply passed on to you about the trust what I felt. I know that you will do whatever is proper. I surely do not need any explanation.

I hope you are gaining strength day by day and taking rest without being concerned with the events that may be going on about you. I would like you to do what Asquith did in the midst of the War. He took, when his health threatened to break down, a fortnight’s cruise in the Mediterranean and cut himself off from all communications. We may not afford to take any such cruise, but we can afford to retire unto ourselves untouched by the environment.

Yours sincerely,

LALA LAJPAT RAI
NATIONAL LIBERAL CLUB
WHITEHALL PLACE
LONDON S. W. 1

From a photostat : S. N. 14166

101. LETTER TO VICTOR MOHAN JOSHI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 21, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Chhotalalji tells me you were grieved that I had not gone to Almora up to now. When you give me sufficient inducement about khadi work, you will find me taking my convalescence in Almora instead of Bangalore. Meanwhile, you have Prabhudas there, and whatever service may be rendered to him will be rendered to one who bids fair to become if he is spared by God a faithful servant of the nation.

Yours sincerely,

VICTOR MOHAN JOSHI
ALMORA

From a photostat : S. N. 14167

1 Vide “Letter to Lajpat Rai”, 1-5-1927.
102. LETTER TO DR. BIDHAN CHANDRA ROY

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 21, 1927

DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

I have your letter. I shall deal with the appeal¹ in the columns of Young India. I would suggest your going from door to door and making collections. There is really no other way. If I could at all come there, I should join you.

I cannot invite you and Basanti Devi to come here because I am still half-bedridden and not moving about. In the month of July the doctors expect that I shall be able to do a little travelling. But it won’t enable me to put forth energy that I should have to if I invited you and took you from place to place. For that you will have to give me strength when I come to Bengal if I am ever enabled to do.

How is Basanti Devi getting on? She and Mona and Baby are all playing me false. Tell them I shall have my revenge one of these days. I am here at least up to the end of the month.

Yours sincerely,

DR. BIDHAN CHANDRA ROY
36, WELLINGTON STREET
CALCUTTA

From a photostat : S. N. 14168

¹ Vide “Chittaranjan Seva Sadan”, 30-6-1927.
103. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
Jeth Vad 7 [June 21, 1927]

BHAISHRI VALJI,

I have just now received a telegram from Swami to the effect that your mother fell dead while she was walking with you. I can offer only felicitations on such a holy death. We should all pray for such a death. Her bodily presence with us was a source of support and comfort, and if we feel grieved for the loss of that feeling, our grief would be nothing but selfishness.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From Gujarati: C. W. 7392. Courtesy: Valjibhai Desai

104. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day, Jeth Vad 7, [June 21, 1927]

SISTERS,

Received your letter.

That I praised the bangles made of yarn does not mean that all of you should start wearing them. Such innovations will endure only if they proceed from the heart. And I wish that none of you should do anything merely for fear of not conforming.

Now I visit daily a milk-producing centre. It gives rise to various thoughts in my mind—one of which I shall put down here. Just as you have undertaken the work of the store, so also you can help to run these milk centres. Thousands of cattle perish daily owing to our ignorance and idleness. I find that this is work that can be done as easily by women as by men. The sturdy cowherd-women of Kathiawar appear before my mind’s eyes. We are already farmers, weavers and sweepers; we need to be cowherds too.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3654

1 Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date in 1927.
2 The source has June 23, 1927, presumably the date of receipt. The source again has Jeth Vad 6 which, in 1927, was kshaya, not reckoned. Jeth Vad 7, June 21, 1927 was a Tuesday.
BHAISHRI BHANSALI,

I liked your letter very much because you had opened your heart in it. Manibehn has today given me the news that your seven-day fast is progressing well. A seven-day fast is child’s play for you. I had not, therefore, felt worried over it at all. But I see an error in the argument you have advanced about the reason for the fast. The best thing is not to do a thing about doing which we have a doubt. If we have started doing a thing, and then we get a doubt about it, true expiation consists in abandoning it that very moment. Any other atonement which excludes this is useless. If your demand for a new house was wrong, you cannot atone for that error by means of a fast. If you see no error in that demand, atonement is not called for at all. If you have even the slightest doubt about having committed an error, to seek to cover it up by means of a fast amounts to committing a second error, because by undertaking a fast we banish the thought of error from our mind and we ought not to do this. Expiation such as fasting is a form of self-punishment and punishment can be only for a thing which we cannot undo. If we abuse someone or beat him, we cannot take back the abuse or the beating. We may, therefore, inflict on ourselves punishment like a fast; such punishment brings about self-purification, and also restrains us from making a similar mistake again. But suppose that we have stolen someone’s money. At the time of doing so, we felt that there was nothing wrong in it but later on we got a doubt about what we had done and felt afraid lest we had done a wrong; then, at that very moment, we ought to return the money to the owner and threafter, if we so wish, we may undergo self-punishment such as a fast. Returning the money is like returning a loan and hence that does not amount even to punishment. You may perhaps argue why you should return the goods so long as you are not sure that stealing is bad, and tell yourself that you will return them when you decide that it is indeed bad. Many sins are, and have been committed in the world through such reasoning. Being moral requires that wherever there is a doubt, we should decide against our own interest. But we may go a step further and suppose that, so long as we have a doubt about stealing being wrong, we shall also have a doubt about the desirability of returning the money. Even then, in such circumstances a fast certainly is not a means of resolving such a doubt. On the contrary, the fast may prove an obstacle in our effort to discover the truth.

1 From the reference to the addressee’s seven-day fast

Here I have only analysed the ethical principle for your benefit. I myself have no doubt whatever in your case. You had a right to ask for a roomier house in a quiet part, for the inmates of the Ashram regard your living in the Ashram as conducive to its progress. The best place for the experiments which you have been making is the Ashram, and such experiments are an inseparable part of its life. Hence any facilities which you consider necessary for those experiments and which others accept as necessary should be provided to you if the financial condition of the Ashram permits them, and it is because this was the position that a house has been got ready for you. Moreover, if hereafter it is felt that such an arrangement ought not to have been made, you can move into another small house that may be vacant. On that score, too, we need have no fear. Moreover, Lilabehn may get more accustomed to the conditions there and come to like living in simplicity, and you may become so detached that the atmosphere round you will not affect you at all; then you yourself will decide to leave that house and ask for another. And if I see that you or Lilabehn has become weak, I shall not, as an elder and guardian, hesitate to speak to you about it. If I shrink from doing so, I shall fall from my dharma. Thus you are safe in every way. I could have explained all this in my reply to your very letter. It even occurred to me to do so. But I did not think it advisable to do that and stop your fast abruptly. I was also afraid that I might shock you by advancing such an argument when you were about to start your fast. Hence I deferred writing this. Now you are in a position to appreciate my argument objectively, since the fast is now out of the way. There is a sound reason behind my plea. If you remain complacent because of the fast and believe that there is no reason now to feel doubtful about the propriety of having put up a new building, that would not be right. The truth is that it is our duty to feel doubtful about the propriety of every one of our indulgences, and it is complacency to feel no such doubt. If we do not feel doubtful in this manner, we shall never be able to practise complete renunciation. Hence this caution. I have also something to say about the other portions of your letter, but this is enough for the present. I shall attend to those portions when I have the time. The matter is certainly not urgent.
     Please have no hesitation in writing to me whatever you wish.

     M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati : S.N. 12194

106. LETTER TO SATAVALEKAR

June 21, 1927

It is the common experience that brahmacharya is not essential for the conservation and development of bodily strength and so on. Hence there is the danger of overlooking the importance of brahmacharya in tracing the close association between brahmacharya and physical strength. We have fallen lower than the asuri\(^1\) countries. The reason for it is the having fallen from our own position we are not able to attain another either. We are afraid of accommodating all that the asuri tradition implies, whereas we lack the strength to translate into action the daivi\(^2\) traditions. It is for this reason that attempts are being made in the country today to bring in the asuri traditions—this is what I see everywhere. But these traditions simply cannot work. The people cannot digest them. And as they are lax in following the daivi tradition, they stand where they are. Hence I believe that since we follow the daivi tradition our acts must be pure and we must somehow save ourselves from copying the asuri tradition.

[From Hindi]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

107. LETTER TO DEVI WEST

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 22, 1927

MY DEAR DEVI,

I have your letter. I am getting better though I am still weak and convalescing at a cool place.

Yes. Manilal is still at Phoenix looking after Indian Opinion. His wife is now helping him. He tells me she has already learnt the compositor’s work. She is a good girl and you would have liked her if

\(^{1}\) Demoniac
\(^{2}\) Divine
you had seen her. Manilal is very devoted to her and both of them seem to be very happy. Manilal has all new men now on his staff.

Yes. Mirabai\(^1\) is still with me. At the present moment, she is even at Bangalore where I am. She has come to be with me for a few days. Then she goes to a branch of the Ashram for perfecting her Hindi.

How do you occupy your time there? Devdas is with me, and Ramdas is at his post in a khadi workshop.

I am sorry you do not see Young India. I am now asking the manager to put you on the free list. Do you not get Indian Opinion? If you do not, you should write to Manilal without any hesitation to send you a copy. But if you would rather not write, I would do so gladly on hearing from you. You ought to have been getting both India Opinion and Young India. I should have myself enquired about the latter, but I took it for granted that you saw the paper.

With love,

Yours sincerely,

BHAI
MISS DEVI WEST
22, GEORGE STREET
LOUTH
LINCOLNSHIRE (ENGLAND)

From a photostat : S.N. 12506

108. LETTER TO H. HAR COURT

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 22, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I wrote to you in my last letter\(^2\) that I will send for the copy of your book\(^3\) you had kindly sent me. I have now got it and having the leisure of a convalescent, I went through the book from end to end. I read it with interest. I liked your humorous touches especially with reference to the complainant who the accused said in his evidence had

\(^1\) Mirabehn
\(^2\) Vide “Letter to H. Harcourt”, 1-6-1927.
\(^3\) Sidelights on the Crisis in India by H. Harcourt and Chhotu Ram; Harcourt was a member of the Indian Civil Service and Deputy Commissioner of Gurdaspur and Chhotu Ram was Minister for Agriculture in the Punjab Government.
struck the latter’s fist with his nose. I have remembered that joke well because you have unwittingly summed up my own belief. I have certainly run up my nose against many a fist, and have hitherto come out unhurt. I have found in my experience that when instead of putting up your nose for the man with the fist to play with, you try to ward off his play by holding it back, you really get the knock-out blow. But I must not try to present you my philosophy of life if the method I stand for can possibly be described by such a dignified word.

But I would say one word with reference to your estimate of me. I ask you to believe me when I assure you that I endeavoured to see myself in your looking-glass. But I have failed to recognize myself in it. I do not wonder at the picture you have drawn of me. I hope that I do not entertain any elongated notions about myself. But I cannot help expressing my grief that a man so sincere like you should have failed to study an honest movement which somehow or other caught the imagination of thousands upon thousands of men and women who had hitherto been left untouched, with more attention than you evidently felt called upon to give. Many English friends are now beginning to see that my movement was an honest attempt through non-co-operation to bring about hearty co-operation of equals, instead of an enforced and superficial co-operation between parties one of which regarded itself as superior to the other.

I shall await your letter telling me what your challenge was. And if I find it to be still capable of being taken up, and find myself equally capable of taking it up, you may depend upon me responding to it.

Yours sincerely,

H. HARCOURT, ESQ.
119, GIPSY HILL
LONDON S.E. 19

From a photostat : S.N. 12523

---

1 In his letter dated July 12 Harcourt wrote: “The challenge I referred to was yours and addressed to my countrymen in general. I tried to reply but I have no copy now” (S.N. 12531).
MY DEAR DEVADHAR,

I thank you for your letter. I did read about your election in the papers. It was a foregone conclusion. I therefore did not send you my congratulations. And though in the opinion of the outside world, it is an honour conferred upon you, I know as well as you do that for you it is a matter of greater responsibility and greater opportunity for service. You call me a friend and supporter of the Society. I regard myself as some friend and supporter of the Society. I regard myself as something much more. I have never considered myself as anything but a member of the Society. Though I am not officially a member [and] am not taking any active part in its activities, [this] does not cause me the slightest worry. My abstention is my quota of service. When a member of a numerous family cannot see eye to eye with the rest although his heart is with them, he serves the family best by non-interference, always wishing that his head may be where his heart is so that he can render active service. Has it not been said that those also serve who wait and pray? You have therefore a right to command my service whenever you think that with my limitations it can be of any use to you.

I do not expect to be a Sabarmati before the end of August, for doctors here tell me I shall be able to do a certain amount of touring from next month, and if I can do so, I shall want to finish as far as I can the Southern tour that was mapped out and over which immense trouble was taken by Rajagopalchari and Gangadharrao Deshpande. If I must regard your headquarters as Poona, it is just as easy for you if not easier to come to Bangalore as to go to Sabarmati. And I am here till about 10th of July. You can come here therefore if you at all can and will. I shall always have my grievance against Mrs. Devadhar, for she is under promise to come to Sabarmati and stay there a few days, a promise she has never yet fulfilled.

With love,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. G. K. DEVADHAR
SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY
POONA

From a photostat : S.N. 14169
110. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 22, 1927

I have your letter from Geneva. I hope you have received all my previous letters including the last one which was in English. I see that you are observing things with your customary keenness. I hope however that you will form no hasty conclusions as so many of our superior men have often done. All is not gold that glitters. The converse of it is also equally true. All is not dirt that appears dirty. And how often do we not see the two co-existing, riches and poverty, virtue and vice, Jekyll and Hyde, God and Satan? The combination that you have described of wine-drinking, womanizing, etc., with physical strength, orderliness, common honesty and ardent patriotism is not to be denied. The fact seems to me to be that one virtue does not lead at any rate all at once to all the other virtues, and a particular quality ceases to be a virtue when it solidifies into a custom. Vegetarianism with us is really no virtue. We are vegetarians by custom. It would be a sacrifice for us a large majority of vegetarians to be otherwise. But vegetarianism in Europe will be a virtue. It would be an active force in the life of a European vegetarian, and if he is a seeker of truth that one reform will lead him to many others. Foreign visitors to India have remarked upon our general domestic happiness and family affection. This quality is part of our being. A father loves his children and children render willing obedience to parents without much effort on either side. People in Europe have found by experience that it is necessary for them to extend the family idea and regard the society to which they belong as a nation. Hence patriotism there is not a virtue which needs to be cultivated. Want of it would be noticed as a strange thing and would lead to excommunication of the type familiar in Europe. They have also understood the doctrine of honesty being the best policy and so up to a point, you will find that quality abundantly in evidence. With us patriotism has got to be cultivated. We have in practice not gone beyond family affection as a nation. But I shall not elaborate this point further as I must keep an appointment which I have put off to finish this letter.

It will be an agreeable surprise to me if you succeed in enlisting 500 paying subscribers for Young India. It would be further proof of European interest in what Young India stands for.

I am making steady progress. And doctors are of opinion that I should be able to resume touring on a moderate scale early next month.

Yours sincerely,

GHANSHYAMDAS BIRLA
C/O THOMAS COOK & SONS
LUDGATE HILL
LONDON

From a photostat: S.N. 14170

111. LANCASHIRE BLOCK

The long delay which took place in the publication of the Tariff Board report was almost a certain indication of the rejection of any recommendation for granting further protection to the great mill industry. The Government will not offend Japan by discriminating against it and favouring Lancashire. And it dare not displease Lancashire by applying it any protective duty. For Lancashire is the Government in substance; and to grant India effective protection against Lancashire would be almost like committing suicide.

This question of protection for the mill industry against Lancashire and other foreign competition is a question of life and death for India as it is supposedly one of life and death also for Lancashire. To realize the truth of this statement, one has merely to look at the table of imports. Imports from Lancashire are by far the largest of all the other imports, nearly half of all British imports. Lancashire has risen on the ashes of India’s greatest cottage industry and it is sustained by the exploitation of the helpless millions of this land. The indigenous mill industry is really regarded as an interloper, and if it could be decently squashed in the interest of Lancashire, it would be suppressed without ceremony. The stupendous interest of Lancashire is allowed to override every moral consideration. The existence of that industry harms both Lancashire and India. It has reduced India to pauperism, and India’s pauperism reduces Lancashire to moral bankruptcy.

The mill-owners of India will never be able to vindicate their position in the face of this almost insurmountable obstacle, unless they courageously make common cause with the people and force protection from the Government. It is the country’s right. If a country has the right to determine the composition of its inhabitants, and to exclude those whom it considers to be detrimental to its existence, it has a greater right to determine the composition of the goods that it would permit to be imported within its borders and to exclude those that it may consider to be harmful to its population.

There can be no doubt that foreign cloth is the most harmful among all our imports. The mill industry may for a time flourish somehow, it may also show a temporary prosperity by various manipulations or by favourable accidents; but unless it secures effective protection against all foreign cloth, it is bound to go under sooner or later, and certainly much sooner than one expects. Some day or other there is bound to be a real sustained mass awakening, whether mad and undisciplined but organized in its own madness, or (as I hope), disciplined and organized non-violently. And when it comes the indigenous mill industry, unless it is recognized as their own by the masses, will perish in the flames that must overtake foreign cloth. It is time for the mill-owners to make common cause with khadi and wrest protection from an unwilling Government. There is room enough for years to come for both, if the province of each is now marked out and rigidly respected. It is then possible for them to prosper in spite of Government aloofness and even insidious opposition. But this presupposes intelligent sacrifice on the part of the mill-owners, a vital combination amongst them and an iron determination to carry through their programme.

I was glad to notice an authoritative repudiation of the rumour that a cut in the wages of the mill-hands was contemplated as a reply to the Government’s decision. It would have been suicidal. What is wanted at this time is not antagonizing labour, but making common cause with labour and regarding mill-hands as much proprietors of the mills as the shareholders and agents. If the shareholders supply the capital, the labourers supply the muscle for the conversion of capital into cloth. A combination, therefore, between the mill-owners, the mill-hands and the masses would be an irresistible combination which the Government dare not ignore. Will the mill-owners have enough foresight, courage and patriotism for the task? The 1s. 6d. ratio, it was contended (with a great degree of force in the contention), was a hit against that great industry and a gift to Lancashire. The resolution on the Tariff Board report is another such hit and therefore another gift to Lancashire. I wonder whether this last hit will stir the mill-owners to right action. No petition, no resolution in the Legislative Assembly will be of any use unless it is backed by effective mass action, and, in my humble opinion, it is not possible to conceive of any milder mass action than I have ventured to suggest.

Young India, 23-6-1927
112. NOTES

THE FORTHCOMING TOUR

If the progress I am supposed to be making continues to the end of the month, Drs. Subbarao and Krishnaswami Rao who have been kindly attending on me tell me that I should be able to resume a moderate amount of touring taken in easy stages. In view, therefore, of the possible resumption, I would like the workers and all concerned to bear in mind that I shall not be able to sustain the strain to which I seemed to be equal up to the end of March. Processions and noises must be abandoned and people should be repeatedly warned against crowding round me shouting and touching my feet; nor may I be expected to visit institutions in the places to which I may be taken. One meeting and informal discussion with workers is about all I shall be able to manage per day. It is, I know, ungracious to use Chikballapur as my illustration to show how not to do it. The people of Chikballapur have been extraordinarily kind to me personally. A friend who noticed the exquisite attention paid to me at Nandi Hills by the representatives who used to come from Chikballapur from time to time to see that everything was supplied and in order, and who noticed the loving attention of the volunteers all drawn from representative families of Mysore, could not help remarking that it was wonderful manifestation of selfless love that the people of Mysore exhibited, in that I had done nothing, specially for the people of Mysore, I had hardly even seen the country except for the flying visits to Bangalore. I could not help endorsing the spontaneous remark made by this friend. It was so true. The reception committee of Chikballapur left no stone unturned to anticipate my wants and supply them at considerable sacrifice of time and money. I would therefore gladly have avoided using Chikballapur for an unfavourable illustration.

But what happened there was so typical that I must not omit to mention it. Although there was to be no procession, and I was to be taken quickly and quietly to the place of the meeting which was to be perfectly noiseless, the leaders and the people lost their heads when they saw my car, and though the sun was beating hot, Mr. Hamza Husain Saheb, who is the chairman of the general reception committee and who was escorting me, had to submit to the pain of seeing the hood taken off and the motor carried in procession at a snail’s pace. Officiating Dewan and ex-Police Commissioner though he was, he knew that at this moment he was connected with a representative of India’s paupers, and as such had meekly to submit to the risk of all the good that Nandi had done to his charge being undone. I pleaded with the leaders whom I had seen in Nandi and who were near the car to restrain the enthusiasm and quickly take the motor to the meeting place. “We shall soon reach it”, was the only reply I could get. The meeting, too, was none too orderly, and on the top of that, though the majority of the audience did not understand English, the address was read to me in that language in spite of my repeated warning in these pages that it would be more in keeping with the surroundings, at least at meetings where poor people gather in thousands, to conduct proceedings in their mother tongue supplying me when necessary with a translation in Hindi. But this much must be said for Chikballapur. Its mistakes too were due to affection. I was told that they never had a popular meeting of this character before. They naturally did not wish to damp the enthusiasm of the people. They lost their heads themselves for the moment, being caught in the wave of enthusiasm, and for the Hindi translation possibly they had not a single person in Chikballapur knowing Hindi. But let the other local reception committees profit by the unavoidable mistakes of Chikballapur. Let them have previous rehearsals in checking their enthusiasm. Let them translate it into purchases and hard work at the spinning-wheel. That would be an intelligent, profitable and national application of the energy created by the enthusiasm, and it would not only gladden their guest but will also strengthen his body, mind and soul.

\footnote{Vide “Speech at Chikballapur”, 5-6-1927.}

INDECENT ADVERTISEMENTS

Lying on my back and trying at times, in obedience to medical instructions, to take my mind off serious reading, I chance upon advertisement sheets of newspapers. They are sometimes painfully instructive. I see often in respectable papers advertisements of a lewd nature. The headings are deceptive. In one case, the heading was “Books Relating to Yoga”. On looking at the contents of the advertisement, I discovered hardly one book out of ten having any reference to yoga; all the rest had reference to sex, suggesting that young men and women may indulge in sexual pleasures without coming to grief, promising to divulge secret remedies. I came upon worse things which I do not propose to copy in these pages. Hardly a newspaper is free from liquor advertisements, and advertisements regarding medicines designed to debase and corrupt youthful minds.
The editors and the proprietors who are themselves known to be pure and opposed to drink, to smoking and such other evils, are at times found not to be averse to deriving an income from advertisements which are obviously intended to spread the evils which they shun. The argument sometimes advanced is that it is not possible to conduct a newspaper on any other condition. But is it necessary to conduct newspapers at any cost? Is the good that they do so great as to outweigh the evil that mischievous advertisements cause? We have a journalists’ association. Is it not possible through it to cultivate a uniform code of morals among them and to create a public opinion that would make it impossible for a respectable journal to violate the prescribed code?

Young India, 23-6-1927

113. TELEGRAM TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

    BANGALORE,
    June 23, 1927

RAMESHWARDAS

DHULIA

DIFFICULT PROVIDE FASTING TREATMENT FOR YOU AND MEDICAL TREATMENT FOR YOUR WIFE SAME PLACE. CAN YOU SEPARATE? WILL YOUR WIFE UNDERGO OPERATION IF NECESSARY BY MALE DOCTOR? SEND FULL REPLY BY POST.

BAPU

From a photostat : G.N. 739

114. LETTER TO HELENE HAUSSSDING

    KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
    June 23, 1927

MY DEAR SPARROW,

    I have your postcard. I am grieved to learn that you were still ailing at the time of writing. But I hope that by the time this reaches you, you will be at least just as healthy as I seem to have become. You must not prolong your sickness beyond certain limits and those limits have been crossed already.

    For your edification, I send you a free rendering by Krishnadas of an article contributed by a fellow passenger of yours. I wonder if she has correctly reported the conversation ascribed to you.

The weather in Bangalore is extremely nice. I expect to be here yet for about 20 days by which time doctors expect I should be able to move about without difficulty.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 12524

115. LETTER TO J. W. PETAVEL

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 23, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I hope you duly received my previous letter¹. You sent me your book at an opportune moment. Whilst I am convalescing, I have nothing to do but read what little I can and dictate a few letters and a few articles. I therefore took up your book with a view to learn the central fact of your programme, policy or teaching whatever it might be described as. I have just finished it and I am now dictating this letter. I am sorry to say that the book has not made any appeal to me. What is true in it, I began doing in 1909-10 when for the satyagrahis of the Transvaal a friend gave me the use of 1,100 acres of land which he and I called Tolstoy Farm. There we were doing exactly what you have suggested. Boys and their relatives everyone was expected to work, and boys had some tuition, plenty of work and plenty of play. If they were examined today some of them might perhaps say they would have preferred all play and no work, and the more modest ones might say they would have preferred more play and less work. But I was unable to advance any claim on behalf of that colony which you advance on behalf of yours. I wish that your claim could be sustained.

I very carefully studied the association’s appeal to busy people. The picture suggested by your diagram No. 1 of the future, I fear, for a long time to come will remain a mere picture. c.d. may in course of time be magnified into C.D. But it will be absorbed as it is being absorbed now by A.B.

You have headed three chapters, “A Lesson from Switzerland”, “Belgium” and “America”. On going through the chapters, I find nothing of what these three countries are doing except a bare mention. I am not wiser about the Swiss method, no wiser about the Belgian or the American method. And your advice to copy the rapid locomotion of America, makes me giddy even to read it. I suppose, if you succeed (say) in converting Calcutta into a second New York with moving platforms and fourfold railways, etc., etc., and take me there to witness the marvellous performance, I should fall dead at the very sight of the thing. I have numerous, I was going to say innumerable, American friends. But they have all assured me that there is beneath the untold wealth of America, degradation, superstition and vice incarnate and the inequalities between A.B. and B.C. are enormous and that B.C. is being successfully exploited by A.B., in many cases B.C. not even knowing how. As I think of your chapter on America, I recall what Stead wrote many years ago, “If Christ Came to Chicago”. And if my present informants have not misled me, what Stead wrote now nearly 40 years ago is truer today than when he wrote that biting article.

¹ Dated June 15, 1927.

Of the Belgian and the Swiss examples I can say nothing; for, I know nothing. And you have given neither facts nor figures. Your book reminds me of what Ruskin wrote somewhere and which may be thus paraphrased : If men become machines and if bone and muscle could be removed from these machines, they could be flattened into bricks of a required size and these human bricks could then be consolidated into a majestic pyramid and made to do anything that the controller of these bricks desired. But unfortunately or fortunately you have to deal not with machines but with bony, intelligent muscle each having its own individuality and each pulling its own way. I wonder if your lineal cities, co-operative schemes, garden suburbs and transformed educational methods all drawn up with exactness and printed in beautiful type will change society in the manner you expect without devising some means of appealing to the soul within. I conclude with what I have said before of successful policy so that a practical man like me may learn something.

Yours sincerely,

CAPTAIN J. W. PETAVEL, ESQ.

BAGHBAZAAR

CALCUTTA

From a photostat : S.N. 14171
DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter¹. I send you the enclosed for what it may be worth.

You have tempted me with a bribe². But a bribery being an unlawful thing, is always given in cash; whereas you have asked me to accept a credit note. However I rely upon cashing the note on presentation whether by me in person or by my successor in office as the representative of Daridranarayana.

Yours sincerely,

PS.

[All] letters pass through one or two hands before they [come] to me for signature. One of the . . .³ me for letters of recommendation. As far as possible I avoid giving letters of recommendation to anybody. If there is any truth in the information given to me, I hope you will protect your and India’s honour. I delayed the posting of the letter in order to find from the voice within what my course of duty was in the light of the information. This morning I felt I must send the letter with the enclosures and pass on to you the information in the hope that you would take it in spirit in which it is offered and not think ill of the informant or me. The former has no malice against you.

May God be with us all.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat : S.N. 12773

¹ Dated June 22. The addressee had requested for a letter of introduction from Gandhiji for use in Europe.
² The addressee had promised that on his return when he founded the National Theatre, “the language of the plays shall be Hindi and that of the scenes or costumes, khaddar”.
³ The source is not legible here.
117. LETTER TO P. K. CHARLU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 24, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter, and also a copy of your journal. I have glanced through its pages. I am unable to congratulate you upon it. There is great deal of hasty ventures of this kind. I personally think that publication of magazines is being overdone and such overpublication can do no good to the nation. I fail to see from your magazine that you have a special message to give. What is really wanted at the present moment is silent and steady work. I am a believer in the proverb that example is better than precept. I wish indeed that I could even now wean you from proceeding further with your venture.

I had the privilege of meeting your father in 1896 when I was in Madras.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. P. K. CHARLU
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
“DHARMA”
6, SUNKURAMA CHETTY STREET, G. T.
MADRAS

From a microfilm : S.N. 14172

118. LETTER TO P. RAJAGOPALA IYER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 24, 1927

MY DEAR RAJAGOPALAN,

I have read the report you have sent. It is good work you are doing. Do not try to do too much at a time, but go forward step by step, and never enter depth beyond your capacity, pecuniary, physical, mental and spiritual; your progress will then be even substantial and never-failing. You should survey the villages that may be within five miles radius of your place and where the people are receptive, poor because they are idle part of the year, [and] present the charkha to them not by mere speech but by demonstration. Never offer a higher wage than the maximum fixed by the Spinners’ Association, and if the people do not accept your message, do not worry, but do not give up hope. If your faith persists and your action corresponds to the faith, you will find a response sooner or later from the surrounding villages. I take it you are doing at your Ashram hand-ginning, carding and spinning and that nothing is being slurred over but everything done as perfectly as possible.

Please continue to send me a brief monthly report for my personal information. I do not propose to take any notice of it at the present moment in Young India. Let the institution take root.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. P. RAJAGOPALIER
PALAYUR
Via MUTHUPET

From a microfilm: S.N. 19783

119. LETTER TO SAROJINI NAIDU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 25, 1927

MY DEAR MIRABAI,

I have your love letter. I hope Padmaja lying on a sofa was a case of a spoilt babe wanting to be fondered by her mother and not of sickness or fatigue. It is time for her to outgrow her illness and weakness and engage in some stern work and relieve us old people of the burden. Then you may talk of my right to take real rest.

If Dr. Ansari is not to lead us next year, we must find some other man or woman. There are many forces just now working against Motilalji. The burden will be too great for him to shoulder. I do not share the view that we must have a Hindu for the coming year. On the contrary, for the very purpose in view there is no other man than Dr. Ansari. He alone can pilot a Hindu-Muslim pact through the Congress. His selection will command universal acceptance. Hindus will render him loyal obedience and the fact of the Congress being predominantly Hindu will not—cannot—be disputed by a Mussalman being in the Chair. Think it over and if you have any doubt, wire your

---

1 President of the Congress in 1925
2 Vide also “Letter to Motilal Nehru”, 19-6-1927.
departure for Bangalore to discuss the question. I duly sent a wire today.

With love,

Yours,

“WIZARD”

SHRIMATI SAROJINI DEVI
TAJ MAHAL HOTEL
BOMBAY

From a photostat : S.N. 12868

120. LETTER TO SHAH CHAMANLAL DUNGAJI
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 25, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I had already intended to deal in the pages of Young India with the question discussed by you. Do you want me to make public use of your letter and the facts contained in it, especially the fact that cows or bullocks are every day slaughtered for providing food for lions and tigers?

What is your authority for saying that I am against legislation altogether regarding cow-slaughter prohibition? I would like you to show me the statement ascribing to me the opinion which I have never held. What I have said what I adhere to is that such legislation ought not to be embarked upon even in a Hindu State if an intelligent majority of the Mussalmans oppose it. I have also added that legislation alone will not save the cow. But I propose to deal with this subject fairly fully in the pages of Young India, which I expect you will see.¹

If you are desirous of discussing the subject more fully with me, all the friends who are interested in the question may come any day at 4 p.m. except Monday. To avoid delay, I suggest your making an appointment beforehand so that I should be ready to talk to you precisely at the appointed time.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SHAH CHAMANLAL DUNGAJI
PRESIDENT
SHRI GORAKSHAKA MANDALI
BANGALORE CITY

From a microfilm : S.N. 12918

¹ Vide “The Cow in Mysore”, 7-7-1927.
DEAR MR. SMITH,

I have carefully gone through both your papers. They are interesting and useful for a sceptic. I am a confirmed believer, but ill-equipped, ignorant man. I therefore want you to draw up for me and persons like me—of this there is a respectable number—a tangible business scheme which will enable the reader to immediately put it into practice, if he has skilled assistance and money. Could you therefore please give me such a scheme un-embellished with argument? It would give plan and specifications, an estimate of the cost of plants, machinery, etc., and the probable working cost of and returns from the enterprise.

I have been thinking deeply over what you and your men so kindly showed me at the Imperial Dairy Institute. I have several questions to ask. But for the present, I would like to say that in order to make the institution answer Indian requirements, it needs an addition of two things.

There seems to be no facility for studying methods of castration. The raising of the standard of the breed all over India seems to me to be impossible until the promiscuous herding of cows with bulls is done away with. Castration seems to be the only remedy. The indigenous method is hideously cruel.

Secondly, it seems to me that a dairy to satisfy Indian requirements has necessarily to become a tannery also. Countries of the West have found a short cut to economic success by killing cattle which they consider to be a burden. We in India have to deal with the economics of the cattle question subject to the limitation that cattle have to be supported even when they give inadequate or no return for their upkeep. Hence I feel that a dairy scheme, which does not provide for and against this necessary limitation, must be faulty from an economic standpoint. Whether the Imperial Institution can be expanded to cover these points or not, is not for me to say. But could you give me any guidance or recommend any literature on these points?

2 Vide Appendix “Gandhiji at the Imperial Dairy, Bangalore”, 23-6-1927.

And generally what books will you suggest my studying in order to enable me the better to digest the information I have gathered during the few days’ visit to the Dairy? If you have any literature in connection with the activities of the Imperial Dairy, and if it is saleable, I should like to buy it.

I cannot conclude this letter without thanking you for all the facilities you kindly gave me in connection with my visits to the Dairy.

Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM SMITH, ESQ.
IMPERIAL DAIRY EXPERT
BANGALORE

From a microfilm : S.N. 12927

122. LETTER TO K. KELAPPAN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 25, 1927

MY DEAR KELAPPAN,

I have been often thinking of you and wondering what you were doing. And now to my delight I have your letter. I cannot advise you how you should go about. If you cannot raise money in Kerala for the time being, I feel that money can be supplied if you can produce absolutely reliable workers who will be prepared to render service at a sacrifice. If you have such young men, prepare the list with qualifications and the scheme of work and then you can bring that scheme and discuss it with me. Ultimately of course it will have to be under the control of a board.

So far as a grant from the Municipality is concerned there will be no hesitation in accepting and even asking for it.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 14618
I draw the attention of readers to the following letter:

I had received this letter as far back as in February. I had preserved it intending to publish it when I had time for it; then came my illness and there was more delay.

The correspondent’s object is praiseworthy. I am of the view that all Indian languages should be written in the Devanagari script, and I do not except the Dravidian languages and Urdu from this. But I see difficulties in getting people to carry out this suggestion. So long as there is hostility between Hindus and Muslims, no Muslim will write Urdu in the Devanagari script. I am not suggesting that the Persian script should be given up, my idea is that common books in Urdu should be written in the Devanagari script. At present, however, even this is bound to remain a mere idea. But, without waiting for unity of hearts to be established between Hindus and Muslims, Gujarat, Bengal and other provinces can make a start if they wish to.

All good causes cannot be taken up by one person. Even if anyone tried to take them up, he would only render himself ridiculous. Someone else, therefore, should make this cause his own and devote all his time and energy to it.

However, readers of Navajivan can certainly prevail upon me to act upon one of the suggestions made by this correspondent. If a majority of them approve of Navajivan being printed in the Devanagari script, I would immediately discuss the matter with my co-workers. I do not have the courage to take the initiative about this without knowing readers’ views. I attach greater importance to propagating my ideas about problems over which I have reflected for many years and which I regard as very urgent, than to the popularizing of a script. Navajivan has taken many risks in the past, but all of them were for the sake of fundamental principles. I would not take the risk of affecting the circulation of Navajivan for the sake of the Devanagari script.

Among readers of Navajivan there are many women, as also some Parsis and Muslims. I am afraid that all of them would find it difficult, if not impossible, to read the Devanagari script. If my view is not translated here. The correspondent had suggested that Gandhiji should advocate the adoption of Devanagari as the common script for languages of North India and himself publish the Gujarati Navajivan in that script.
correct, I cannot print Navajivan in that script. Since popularizing this script is not my special field of work, I feel that I cannot take the risk of making a start in this regard. Even if the Gujarati Navajivan were published in the Devanagari script, the need for Hindi Navajivan would remain, for its readers cannot follow Gujarati.

But the correspondent’s suggestion is worth being adopted and deserves the support of newspapers, etc. It is also worth ascertaining the views of Navajivan’s readers about it, and that is why I have published his letter. I would advise him not to rest content with writing the letter but, if he has the necessary time, to dedicate his life to propagation of his idea.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 26-6-1927

124. PHILANTHROPI ST DOCTOR

ANTYAJAS FIRST

I give below almost the whole of a letter which Shri Amritlal Sheth¹ has written to me describing how Doctor Lala Mathurdas visited Wadhwan and cured the eye diseases of hundreds of sufferers.

In former times, vaids² practised only for service. They got enough for their livelihood from what the rich paid them, but that was not looked upon as their fee. They believed that vaids’ duty was to treat the patients for their diseases, and that God would provide for their livelihood. These days, and that God would provide for their livelihood. These days, like others the vaids, the hakims³ and the doctors, all the three classes, by and large, practise to make money. But philanthropic doctors like Lala Mathurdas prove that all among them are not of that type.

The Arya Samaj has accepted the service of Antyajas as their special field of work; it is, therefore, not at all surprising that this good doctor felt very happy in serving them. The workers in Wadhwan deserve commendation for giving priority to Antyajas. As for Lala Mathurdas, what commendation can I offer him? The account given in the following letter proves that the satisfaction he felt in serving others is his best reward. I publish Shri Amritlal’s letter in the hope

¹ A Congress worker of Saurashtra; founder-editor of Janmabhumi, a Gujarati daily published from Bombay. The letter is not translated here.
² Physicians practising the Ayurvedic system of medicine
³ Physicians practising the Unani system of medicine that other doctors, vaids and hakims will follow this example of service.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 26-6-1927

125. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

BANGALORE,
June 26, 1927

MY DEAR MALKANI,

Your letter cuts me to the quick. I do not mind what happens to the Mahavidyalaya but I do mind what happens to a man. I had considered you to be good, strong and immovable under the greatest stress. You have been weighed and found wanting. This desertion in indecent haste is to me inexplicable. I am sorry also for Thadani. He forgot the ordinary gentlemanly behaviour in his hurry to do good.

You may show this to him. May God help you and me.

Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat : G.N. 875 & S.N. 12599

126. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Sunday Night, Jeth Vad 12 [June 26, 1927]

DEAR SISTERS,

Received your letter and the attendance book. Please do continue to send me the attendance book. I get to know many things from it.

I have been able to get a great deal of news from Manibehn. Whatever the odds, carry on the work in the store. We regard the Ashram as our family, and through it we try to learn to look upon our country and the whole world as one family. Therefore as in a family, so in the care of the store we should share one another’s responsibilities.

1 Dated June 20, 1927. The addressee had intimated that he had joined the Sindh National College, Hyderabad (Sind), leaving the Gujarat Mahavidyalaya of the Gujarat Vidyapith, having sent his resignation to J. B. Kripalani, its Principal.

2 N. V. Thadani, Principal, Sindh National College

3 The year is inferred from the reference to the death of Valji Desai’s mother.
Do not let my suggestions, like that for serving the cow, frighten you. I shall go on writing whatever occurs to me. Accept what you like, what is within your abilities, and do it when you have an opportunity.

Only the meritorious will meet with a death like that of Valjibhai’s mother.

Blessed is the son, blessed the mother, and blessed the Ashram where such a death took place. I am also reminded of Vrajlalbhai’s sacred death.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3655

127. A LETTER

[Before June 27, 1927]

Just as it is useless to brood over the past, even so, it is useless to speculate about the future. “One step enough for me”, says the voice of wisdom. What does it avail us to know the future? Or why not merge both the past and the future into the present? The present or the past does have a future. And when change confronts us from moment to moment, to think of some remote future is building castles in the air. And only a fool builds castles in the air. The present means our duty at this moment. If we put all our strength into doing our duty, as we know it at this moment, we shall have made the highest human effort. Sorrow springs from dreaming of the future and from lamenting the past. Hence one who concerns himself with the present and does his duty has neither birth nor death.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

---

1 The source has this letter after the entries for June 21, and before those for June 27, 1927.
128. LETTER TO TARA MODI

BANGALORE,

Jeth Vad [13, June 27, 1927]

CHI. TARA,

I was very glad to read your letter. I refrained from writing to you merely in order to save you the trouble of reading my letter. But you are always before my mind’s eye. I wish to see you strong and healthy in body and mind. Anyone who observes a difficult vow like yours in the prime of youth should never fall ill. But it may take ages to acquire such purity of heart. If one has holy merit acquired in previous births, one’s heart will change the moment one wishes that it should change. We should try patiently till it does and not lose heart.

It is my firm faith and experience that one whose thoughts spontaneously and constantly flow towards the atman can never know sickness. My experience is very limited indeed, but one can judge the whole from a part.

For the present, continue the treatment which you are following and get well. Write to me everything you know about the person who is treating you, his experience, etc., etc. Do not be in a hurry to start walking; do as he directs you.

Write to me when you have the strength and inclination for it.

My health continues to improve. Manibehn and Chi. Keshu have come from the Ashram in connection with the Exhibition. It is likely that the others will come tomorrow.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1940. Courtesy: Ramniklal Modi

---

1 From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary
2 The source is not legible here.
129. LETTER TO DR. M. S. KELKAR

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 28, 1927

MY DEAR DR.,

I have your letter. Of course when I refer to the increase of distance between us, it will only mean the distance in our methods of thinking, never in feeling. My regard for you cannot possibly be diminished no matter however much I may differ from you and your viewpoint. Of course I know that you are as much a seeker after Truth as I am. My impression is that you have your conclusions on very inadequate data, and to found a science upon your astrological observations, on what is now termed as black magic, you require overwhelming evidence of an absolutely unimpeachable character. So far as I know from discussions with you, I do not think you have such data for claiming finality about your conclusions or even to warrant preliminary inference. Do you not think that we have got to be far more exacting about things which men equally earnest as ourselves have rejected after trial?

Are you prepared for a fee to go to Dhulia and treat two patients, husband and wife? And, if you are, please tell me what you would charge? The husband is suffering from habitual constipation and it seems to me to be a case for fasting. About the wife’s disease I have no sufficient knowledge.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14174

130. LETTER TO MRS. BLAIR

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 28, 1927

DEAR MRS. BLAIR,

You are so good. Whenever there is 1, you never fail to send it to me. I hope that those who have given their names 2 will persist to the 1 Vide “Telegram to Rameshwardas Poddar”, 23-6-1927.

2 The source has a blank here.
3 To spin at least half an hour a day; vide “Notes”, 7-7-1927, sub-heading, “Desh-bandhu Day at Darjeeling”.

VOL. 39 : 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927 121
end. Of course it is quite the proper thing to spin wool in Darjeeling. The chief thing is to do hand-spinning. I expect you some day at the Ashram. Of course I am still convalescing, and have to do what little I can in the South.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. BLAIR
MALL VILLA 3
DARJEELING

From a microfilm : S.N. 14175

131. LETTER TO JAMINI BHUSHAN MITRA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

June 28, 1927

DEAR JAMINI BABU,

I have your letter. The policy of the Association is to dis-countenance the starting or manning of separate khadi organizations except for good grounds. Of course you might have sufficient reasons. But I do not know. In any case, it will be necessary for you to approach the Association through the Bengal Agent who, as you know, is Satis Babu. You have first of all to satisfy him. Lastly, perhaps you do not know that owing to my illness I have not been able to take an active interest in the proceedings of the Association. I would therefore suggest carrying on your further correspondence in this matter with the Secretary of the Association at Ahmedabad. Whenever there is any necessity, of course he does refer to me.

I am forwarding your letter to Satis Babu in order that there may be no waste of time.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. JAMINI BHUSHAN MITRA
KHALISPUR ASHRAM
P.O.B. KHALISPUR
(KHULNA)

From a microfilm : S.N. 19784

122  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
June 28, 1927

No matter what Chi. Shankar does, you should not feel sorry. How can the poor fellow help it? What should he do—keep pace with you, obey Kaki or be in tune with the wind that blows about him? Day by day, I find myself experiencing merely the bondage of human existence. Man has freedom only to attain moksha. In whatever else he does, he becomes more and more dependent on others. You can easily check up on this. Then you will not bother about Shankar and Kaki.

What wonder if Bal longs for Kaki’s company? She alone is the medicine for him. If we decide not to take Kaki into the Ashram we should offer him his choice. He either stays with Kaki at Belgaum or wherever she would or in the Ashram with anyone we ask him to stay with. I have not yet decided that Kaki must come to the Ashram. I have had no reply as yet to my letter to her. I have been waiting for it a long while.

I welcome Gangubehn staying with you and coming in contact with Gangubehn and keeping it up. Gangubehn appears to be an absolutely innocent girl. I would like it very much if Gangubehn formed a separate group of the women in the Ashram. She should start it gradually and those who want to associate with her may do so. I like, as an ideal thing, even a married couple living apart in the Ashram. It appears difficult to implement the idea at present. But if we once accept an ideal, we can ultimately live up to it. Rather than discussing the ideal, at present, if only all the women who live scattered about come to live together and find it workable we shall have scored a great victory.

The path of non-violence is the most difficult of all. Truth is not a path, it is the goal. There is only one path—that of non-violence—to reach there, so how could it be easy? So far we have not yet attained non-violence in thought. When we see our duty clear as daylight, we sometimes lack the strength to carry it out. In view of this let us be as careful as possible in our thought and action and live happily. If what the Gita conveys is correct I get this same meaning out of it while translating it. . . .* Not to find fault in others is to see one’s own. Those we see in others were once in us too and, in a sense, are still

---

1 As in the source
there. In the process of forgetting the difference of mine and thine, Surdas and others called themselves rogues' and so on.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

133. LETTER TO SURENDRAN

BANGALORE,
Jeth Vad 14 [June 28, 1927]'

CHI. SURENDRAN,

I got your letter. I have written a long letter to Kaka Saheb. I do not understand why he worries. Lakshmidas has not so far sent me his new ideas about khadi propaganda. I have written to Kishorelal about asana exercises, and he will write to me after discussing the matter with Nathji. I should like you to send me your experiences of the institutions you visited. For instance, what did you see in Saswad? And in Supa? What did you notice elsewhere worthy of acceptance by us? We wish, if we can, to accept whatever is good in others; we should, therefore, rejoice whenever we see something good and emulate it. If we happen to notice any shortcomings, we should tolerate them, since we too always expect the world to tolerate our shortcomings.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : S.N. 9409

134. LETTER TO NAJUKLAL N. CHOKSI

BANGALORE,
June 28, 1927

BHALI NAJUKLAL,

I have your letter as also Chi. Moti’s. Neither her elders nor you have been able to cure Moti of her lethargy. Let us now see whether her offspring succeeds in doing that. I hope you have recovered your health completely. It is some satisfaction to know that you have not been infected by Moti. I say this because the experience of the world is that when two persons live together one of them cannot but be

1 Mo sama kaun kutila khala kami
2 Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date in 1927.
influenced by the other. Hence either Moti will be infected by you—it is clear that she has not been—or you will be infected by her. I am all the time afraid that you will be infected by her. Write to me when the delivery is expected, and even otherwise write from time to time. For some time yet I shall remain hereabouts.

Blessings from

BAPU

BHAISHRI NAJUKLAL CHOKSI
SEVASHRAM
BROACH

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12140

135. LETTER TO RAJKISHORI MEHROTRA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 28, 1927

CHI. RAJKISHORI,

I wrote two letters to you but got no reply. Now that I have your letter, I write this. Let me know how you are observing your vow. And how are the boys? How is your health? What have you been reading these days? Letters can be received at this address up to 10th July, after which they should be addressed to the Ashram.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 6659. Courtesy: Parashuram Mehrotra

136. LETTER TO BANARASIDAS CHATURVEDI

BANGALORE,
June 28, 1927

BHAI BANARASIDASJI,

Your letter, I cannot understand why there was no reply at all from the Ashram. I am looking into it. It appears that I shall not be able to go to the Ashram for nearly two months. There would be nothing wrong if I happened to get your letter during my illness.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2572
DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. I am sorry to have to report to you that the blood-pressure taken on last Sunday week had been found to have risen from 150 to 160. The doctors could not make out why the increase had taken place. I then gave them an ocular demonstration of what I had been doing in the way of sarvangasana, as also halasana, as you have termed the practice I described to you. They urged me to stop the two practices for the time being. I therefore stopped them. Otherwise too, as I said in my previous letter, I would have stopped sarvangasana if the pressure had gone up, till I had taken your advice. Last Sunday the blood-pressure was taken again, and it was found to have gone down by five degrees. I suppose, therefore, it is best for me to continue the suspension of the two practices for a while. In any event, they will remain suspended till I hear from you.

Everything else continues as before, that is, walks, deep-breathing, the shavasana and the massage. I am able to take butter also without difficulty. It has been now increased to three tea-spoons. I do not propose to go beyond this, unless you consider that it is necessary to increase the quantity. Milk stands at 30 ounces. I am now weighing the bhakharis I take, and the quantity I take weighs three ounces in a cooked condition. In view of the tendency of the system towards an increase in blood-pressure on the slightest provocation, do you want me to start bhujangasana? So far as physical strength is concerned, there is no difficulty about undertaking any of these practices. And personally I am unable to understand why some of these asanas should increase the blood-pressure, although they do not apparently affect the system otherwise. I suppose they do not increase blood-pressure in men enjoying normal health. It would be well if you could say which asanas are positively harmless, so far as blood-pressure is concerned.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat : G.N. 5050

1 Dated June 22, 1927
2 In the draft (S.N. 14176), the words “for the time being” were put at the end of the next sentence.
I have your straightforward letter. Of course, you have addressed it to the Editor but I shall not reply to it in Navajivan because the question you have raised is not likely to occur to many. I suspect from your letter that your study of the Gita is not deep enough. There is no difference, between nishkama karma and tatastha karma. You take it for granted that a benevolent act is an unattached one. But non-attachment and benevolence are two distinct qualities. In this world one sees attachment in benevolence everywhere and hence numberless sins have been, are being and will be committed in the name of benevolence. The reason why the Gita is dear to me is that the divine author has seen this distinction through experience and has in the course of his work endeavoured to explain it minutely and repeatedly in varying words and also in identical terms. It was certainly no selfish act on my part to have helped the vegetarian movement, but despite this fact I looked upon it as my own rather than God’s; and where personal attachment develops there is no impartiality and no detachment. Today I clearly see my attachment and desire in having been emboldened to deploy my client’s money for that work because I regarded that work as my own. Khadi work certainly is benevolent. Suppose I have some money belonging to you and of course I intend to return it to you. I may even be able to return it forthwith. Now if I am carrying on khadi work without personal attachment, I would never use your money. It should be my dharma to carry on the business of khadi only with the money specifically received for it. And as long as that work can be carried on without attachment and desire, I would not make use of any other money. Now you must have seen how in that case I lost my impartiality. Had I used my own money, there would have been no difficulty. Staying impartial does not mean withholding help. Where one feels one should help and if one has the capacity, one should certainly do so; one should not however press into service another’s resources without his permission. And even in seeking such permission one ought to be discreet. I had

---

1 In which the correspondent had asked why Gandhiji had described his action in donating Badri’s money for the cause of vegetarianism as neither unattached nor impartial.

2 Desireless work

3 Work done without attachment
the late Bhai Badri’s permission though I do not regard it as such. He was not capable of thinking independently and giving his opinion. He had given his consent merely because of his faith in me. And that too in the distinct belief that I would never allow his money to be misused. Under such circumstances it was my dharma not to risk his money to the slightest extent. If you do not understand me after all this, do ask me for further clarification.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

139. LETTER TO JAGMOHAN DAHYABHAI
June 29, 1927

A healthy mother’s milk contains all the elements that a child needs. Mother’s milk is a complete food for the child. Hence there is absolutely no need to give it fruit juices. Sometimes we see such need because the mother is subject to passions and yields to temptations of the palate or may be she has a disease and therefore her milk is not quite wholesome and nourishing. I can therefore offer you only this advice: if the child keeps healthy and if you see his strength growing day by day, you need give it nothing besides milk but if you find it whining or growing thin or if mother’s milk is not enough in quantity, you can certainly give it small quantities of orange or grape juice.

The sentence I have quoted from my book does not hold in the case of a child of two or three months. But when a child begins to sit, can exert itself sufficiently and when its gums have become strong, it should get used to green fruits in case it needs more than mother’s milk. In short, we should first let it have milk and then start on fruits.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

140. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH
[After June 29, 1927]¹

I would advise you and Devchandbhai not to insist on running the administration of the Conference. And if both of you are interested in any other work in addition to the work of khadi, the ¹ The source has this letter after the entries for June 29, 1927.

Antyajas, national education, etc., or any other equally constructive activity, and if you are competent to take it up, do retain charge of the administration and do whatever is right. Speaking for myself, I have no interest at present in political activities apart from cow-protection and so on, nor do I find myself up to it. I therefore simply watch it from a distance. If someone says something about politics I discuss it a little with him. When I cannot avoid writing about it I scribble off something. In other respects I remain completely untouched.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

141. OUR SHAME

Sjt. S. D. Nadkarni is a clear writer, and has a very large heart for the so-called untouchables. I publish in another column, without any alteration, a letter from him, in which he has poured out his feeling for the suppressed classes. And he has rightly used me as a peg, on which to hang his indictment of the touchables. Leaving aside, however, myself out of account, it seems to me that his deep feeling has overpowered the sense of logic which as a rule does not fail him. I venture to think, that terrible as the case for untouchables is, it had no place either in the discussions of the All-India Congress Committee at Bombay, or at the Unity Conference at Delhi, when only the question of Hindu-Muslim unity alone was on the anvil. It would have been just as logical to discuss at these meetings the question, say, of the woes of child widows, terrible as these are, as it would have been to handle the question of untouchability. But the slight illogicality of the letter must not be allowed to blur the very important question so forcibly presented by Sjt. Nadkarni. I entirely agree with him, that if there is no swaraj without Hindu-Muslim unity, much less is there swaraj without the removal of the shame of Hinduism, which untouchability certainly is. I am unconcerned with the question, what place untouchables will have in any political constitution that may be drawn up. Every one of the artificial props, that may be set up in the constitution, will be broken to bits, if we Hindus do not wish to play the game. The reasoning I have given against separate electorates and against separate treatment in the constitution is equally applicable in the case of untouchables. This removal of untouchability is not to be brought about by any legal enactment. It will only be brought about, when the Hindu conscience is roused to action, and of its own accord removes the shame. It is a duty the touchables owe to the untouchables.

\[Dated \ May \ 28, \ 1927\]

Let them not wait till the Suppressed Class Leagues and Touchable-Untouchable riots open their eyes to the needs of the most needy among us Indians.

This is a terrible sentence occurring in the concluding portion of the letter. It is impossible to deny the force behind it. It reminds me of the conversation that took place between the late Hari Narayan Apte and myself just before Gokhale died. It was at the Servants of India Society’s quarters in Poona, that I was pleading for work amongst the so-called higher classes, rather than agitating amongst the suppressed classes after the fashion of some missionaries, and creating unrest among them. I was new to the work. I had not drunk deep of the ocean of miseries, in which the suppressed classes were being drowned, as the late Hari Narayan Apte had. In my philosophical prudence I asked this reformer, burning with the shame of the wrongs heaped upon the suppressed classes by the suppressing classes, whether he would incite suppressed classes against us. Instantly and indignantly came the reply:

Certainly, if I could, I would make them rebel against us today, and wrest from us by force what we will not give them voluntarily and as a matter of duty.

Much progress has been achieved in the matter of this reform. But infinitely more remains to be done. Most reforms have been preceded by bloodshed. There seems to arrive a point, at which patience of the downtrodden is exhausted, and taking the law into their own hands and maddened with grief and rage they make short work of the tyrant, and in their turn repeat, on an opportunity occurring, all the mistakes of the tyrant. Though, therefore, I share now to the fullest extent, I hope, the indignation that filled Hari Narayan Apte, I must work in the hope that the so-called higher class Hindus will, whilst there is yet time, retrace their steps, and render to the suppressed classes the justice which has become long overdue, and in the further hope that, should the former not repent, the suppressed classes will know better than to rise in revolt against the wrongdoers. I must continue to work in the hope that they will vindicate themselves and their Hinduism by going through a process of conscious suffering and self-purification, and thus proving themselves superior Hindus to those who are today disgracing themselves and Hinduism before man and God. Every individual Hindu, who feels as Sjt. Nadkarni does for the untouchables, can meanwhile make common cause with them by himself or herself becoming untouchable by sharing their sorrows and their trials.

Young India, 30-6-1927

142. CHITTARANJAN SEVA SADAN

Dr. Bidhan Chandra Roy, the celebrated physician of Calcutta and one of the trustees of the All-Bengal Deshbandhu Memorial Trust, has issued an appeal for five lakhs of rupees for the Seva Sadan. It will be remembered that this institution is situated on the ground which Deshbandhu in his lifetime had made over to the trustees. The ground was partly encumbered. It was redeemed out of the memorial funds that were collected immediately after Deshbandhu’s death, and for over a year, a well-equipped and well-managed hospital and a dispensary have been going on there. The total number of the cases treated at the outdoor during the year was 22,000, new cases being 7,023. The total number of indoor patients was 579 with only 23 beds. The trustees now propose to add 32 beds. There can be no doubt that the institution supplies a felt want, and that it needs expansion. Expansion means more money. Those, who revere the memory of Deshbandhu, and who appreciate the necessity of rendering aid to the ailing, will not lose time in responding to the appeal issued on behalf of the Board of Trustees. A full report of the institution, containing a certified account of income and expenditure, and an analysis of cases treated at the institution, accompanies the report, which can be had from Dr. Biddhan Chandra Roy, 148, Russa Road South, Calcutta. Subscriptions can be sent to the Secretary, Deshbandhu Memorial Trust, 36, Wellington Street, Calcutta, or to the account of Deshbandhu Memorial Trust, Central Bank of India, Limited, 100, Clive Street, Calcutta.

Young India, 30-6-1927
143. BANGALORE KHADI EXHIBITION

Sjts. C. Rajagopalachari and Gangadharrao Deshpande are making great preparations to make the forthcoming Khadi Exhibition at Bangalore a thorough success. They are aiming not at quantity but quality, and so they have purposely restricted the scope. It is to be therefore not an all-India, but a South India Exhibition. But they are inviting from all the provinces the assistance that may be necessary in order to complete the technical demonstration, and in order to make the Exhibition an instructive object lesson. Those, therefore, who would learn all about the technique of khadi from hand-ginning to hand-weaving, and study the instruments used in the processes and to see them at work by skilled hands, will not fail to attend the Exhibition. It is a happy augury for the future of khadi in Mysore that the State has given a donation of Rs. 500/- towards the expenses of the Exhibition, and that the Director of Industries has become a member of the Exhibition Committee. Indeed the economic and the philanthropic side of khadi is so overwhelmingly important that it is a wonder that Rajas and Maharajas have not given the movement the support that it deserves. Everybody agrees that millions of villagers require a supplementary occupation. Scores of paper schemes are being hawked about the country for achieving village reconstruction. But not one scheme has the universal application that khadi has. And so far as I am aware, not one scheme is being tried on the scale that khadi is being tried. It is not a small achievement to be able to show that the khadi scheme is at work in at least 1,500 villages.

That khadi has a political side to it need not frighten a single person, even though he may be an official. Indeed many learned politicians laugh at khadi, when any political consequence is ascribed to it; and they would be right if the word ‘political’ was used in connection with khadi in the same sense that it is used in connection with Councils. Khadi has a political consequence precisely in the same sense that education has, co-operative schemes have, temperance reform has. It is impossible to avoid the political effect of any progressive measure that a nation may adopt. The Viceroy, and the Rajas, Maharajas and everybody must, if they are not traitors to the country, take an active part in promoting Hindu-Muslim unity, and yet nobody has ventured to laugh at the idea of Hindu-Muslim unity having a tremendous political consequence; nor have I known anybody keeping himself aloof from the movement for promoting that unity on the ground that it has a tremendous political consequence. Indeed the full success of khadi and therewith its political effect depend upon the support of all, politicians and non-politicians, the prince and the pauper, the zamindar and the ryot. Every attempt is therefore being made to keep khadi above political turmoil. It is not an emblem of revolt; but it is an emblem of self-assertion, self-reliance and determination to abolish artificial distinctions between rich and poor, between capital and labour, and establish a living bond between the two. I am hoping, therefore, that the forthcoming Exhibition will receive the solid support of all classes of people, including the numerous European settlements in the cantonment of Bangalore. That large population will be equally welcome with the rest. Indeed in my talks with the European friends, who have kindly visited me during my convalescence at Nandi and at Bangalore, I have not hesitated to present the message of khadi, that is the message of India’s starving millions, for their acceptance.

One word to the fashionable people of Bangalore. I observe a teacher of Trichinopoly has been pleading for the adoption of a minimum in sartorial matters. I observed, also, that Sjt. Srinivasa Sastri the other day at a public meeting remarked upon what might almost be called the over-dress of the fashionable people of Bangalore. And I have noticed on the part of those who believe in khadi a timid hesitation to adopt it in the face of the Bangalore fashion. I plead for the necessary courage to set aside fashion, which can only be sustained at the expense of our starving neighbours. By all means let monied people have tasteful ornamentation, whether in dress or in other surroundings; but I do plead for an observance, as between themselves and their starving brethren, of a due sense of proportion, such as is always observed in well ordered society. India’s minimum is a langoti requiring less than 1/6th of a square yard. Let our fashion have some correspondence to this minimum. Let not those, who would raise this minimum, and multiply India’s wants in order to wake her up to action, think that they would achieve the end by first multiplying their own wants at the expense of the poor, and without in the same proportion enabling and inducing the latter to raise their standard of living. One universal and effective and immediate way to enable and induce these millions to raise their standard of living is for the fashionable middle class to adopt khadi, and thereby put a few coppers into their pockets. Many in Bangalore have given pecuniary contributions to khadi work. But this is not enough. Khadi cannot make real progress, unless there are people to wear it. I therefore ask the people of Bangalore and neighbouring districts not merely to visit the Exhibition, and give the movement pecuniary support, but also to identify themselves with the poor by adopting khadi for their dress.

Young India, 30-6-1927

144. NOTES

IN JUSTICE TO HER MEMORY

The Modern Review\(^1\) has a paragraph on what occurs in The Story of My Experiments with Truth, Chapter 19, Part III,\(^2\) on Sister Nivedita. After quoting my remarks, The Modern Review has:

The mention of “the splendour that surrounded her” without any other details conveys a wrong idea of Sister Nivedita’s mode of living. The fact is, at the time when Mr. Gandhi saw her, she was the guest of Mrs. Ole Bull and Miss Josephine MacLeod at the American Consulate, and, as such, was not responsible for the “splendour”. Her ascetic and very simple style of living in a tumbledown house in Bossepara Lane, Baghbazar, is well known to all her friends and acquaintances.

We do not know whether Mr. Gokhale spoke to Mr. Gandhi in English and actually used the word “volatile” to describe her; for what has appeared in Young India is translated from the Gujarati Navajivan. But whoever may be responsible for the use of the word ‘volatile’ has wronged her memory. Sister Nivedita had her defects, as in fact even the greatest of mankind had and have, but volatile she was not in any sense of that word. As English is not our vernacular, we have consulted two dictionaries on our table to find out its exact meaning as applied to human beings. The Pocket Oxford Dictionary defined it to mean “of gay temperament, mercurial”. In Webster’s New International Dictionary the explanation given is, “light-hearted; airy; lively; hence, changeable; fickle”. Sister Nivedita was a very serious-minded person, noted for her constancy and steadfast devotion to the cause of Hinduism and India.

The reference to “her overflowing love for Hinduism” is quite just and accurate.

I gladly reproduce this correction. For I never knew the fact, till I saw the note in The Modern Review that I had met the deceased not at her own place but at a guest’s. The reader has to recognize my

---

\(^1\) Of July, 1927
\(^2\) Published in Young India, April 14, 1927

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
painful limitations. My reading is so poor that I have not read, much though I should like to have, the lives even of those who have contributed to the making of modern India. My only consolation is that the poverty of my reading is not due to any laziness on my part, but a life of ceaseless action and full of tempest from early youth left not time for much reading. Whether on the whole I have lost or gained thereby is to me a debatable question. But if it is a gain, it has been achieved in spite of myself. I can therefore claim no credit for it.
And if in the story that I am writing from week to week,¹ I deal with men and women, I do so only in so far as such reference is necessary for showing the working of my mind, so far as I can, in my search for Truth. I am therefore leaving out innumerable instances in life, which would be certainly otherwise interesting, as also references to several men and women. And it will be unjust to those whom I am obliged to refer in the story and to me, if the reader concludes that the estimate that I may give about persons is my final statement or true in fact.
Such references should be regarded merely as the impression left upon my mind at the time to which they may relate. I introduced Sister Nivedita, Swami Vivekananda, Maharshi Devendranath and others in the story simply to illustrate my desperate search, and to illustrate the point, that even then my political work in South Africa was an integral part of that search, which was never once subordinated to the political work. It has therefore given me pleasure to reproduce the paragraph in The Modern Review at the very first opportunity after reading it.

As to the use of the word “volatile”, though the translation is not mine, I cannot dissociate myself from its use, because as a rule I revise these translations, and I remember having discussed the adjective with Mahadev Desai. We both had doubts about the use of the adjective being correct. The choice lay between volatile, violent and fanatical. The last two were considered to be too strong. Mahadev had chosen volatile and I passed it. But neither he nor I had the dictionary meaning in view.

What word Gokhale used I cannot recall. The word used in the original writing is tej. I have a full recollection of the conversation between Sister Nivedita and myself. But I do not propose to describe

¹ The reference is to Ganghiji’s autobiography, chapters of which were being published in Navajivan from November 29, 1925 and in Young India from December 3, 1925.
it. No fault in the translation of the original can possibly damage the memory of one who loved Hinduism and India so well. It will ever be cherished with gratefulness.

Young India, 30-6-1927

145. KASHI VIDYAPITH

The readers of Young India know that the Kashi Vidyapith is one of the very few national institutions still alive. I have much pleasure in publishing the following sent to me by the Registrar of the Kashi Vidyapith.

Young India, 30-6-1927

146. MESSAGE TO “FORWARD” 2

June 30, 1927

If we would be worthy of swaraj and of the sacrifice of Deshbandhu, we must show some tangible work of construction in terms of the nation. Khadi holds the field till something better and equally universal can displace it. And if khadi and the spinning-wheel be considered beneath dignity and notice, we stand in danger of being considered beneath notice by the Mother.

The Hindu, 1-7-1927

---

1 Not reproduced here; it gave the date of reopening of the Vidyalaya, subjects taught, minimum qualifications for admission, etc.
2 For its “Deshbandhu Number”
147. LETTER TO P. R. SUBRAMANIA SASTRI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
June 30, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Sjt. Rajagopalachariar has shown me your letter of the 29th instant. I am not yet fit enough to meet people for holding sustained discourse. Whilst therefore if you desire to come, you will be welcome any day between 4 and 5 p.m. I shall not be able to engage in any long conversation with you. If you have anything original to say, I would suggest your writing it as briefly as possible on one side of an ordinary note paper and sending it do me.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. P. R. SUBRAMANIA SASTRI
55, MALLESWARAM
BANGALORE

From a photostat : S.N. 14177

148. LETTER TO T. ADINARAYANA CHETTIAR

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 1, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

It is a most dangerous thing to expect me to send replies by return post. It is by mere accident that I am able to deal with your letter immediately on receipt.

I do hope that you will be able to make further progress with the resolutions you refer to, namely, remarriage of virgin widows and post-puberty marriage. These two, I consider, to be elementary reforms and they are the least that Hindus owe to Hinduism and India and their womenfolk.

I hope your conference will not forget the suppressed classes and the spinning-wheel.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. T. ADINARAYANA CHETTIAR
XIII ARYA VAISYA CONFERENCE
SALEM

From a microfilm : S.N. 14179

1 This was sent as a message to the Arya Vaisya Conference which began at Salem on July 2.
149. LETTER TO SAROJINI NAIDU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 1, 1927

I hope you got my letter. This is only to send you Andrews’ cable’. I know that you are six inches taller, if such a thing may be said of a mere woman, for the triumph of the principle for which you stood up so bravely in South Africa. You have every reason to be proud.

Yours,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat : S.N. 12363

150. LETTER TO HARINDRANATH CHATTOPADHYAYA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 1, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I shall look forward to the end of June 1928.

As you have not told me anything about the lady you have in view, I can only give you general information. The Ashram is, you might almost say, a workshop. Men and women are engaged in doing some work or other, all activities centred round ginning, carding, spinning and weaving, and both men and women, boys and girls take their due share in these activities. There is, no doubt, literary training in a proper school conducted in the Ashram. But vocational training is not sacrificed to literary training. One might almost therefore fancy that literary training is subordinated to the vocational. English is taught, it might almost be said, under compulsion. We don’t encourage the teaching of English there, and the rule of first exacting a knowledge of Sanskrit and Hindi before going to English is more or less adhered to. If, therefore this lady does not know Hindi, or wants to do everything through English, or is fond merely of literary pursuits, at the Ashram, she would be like fish out of water. Now if you want to know the details about the Ashram, you will please tell me and I shall pass on your letter to the proper quarters for reply.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 12775

1 Dated June 25; it read : “Malan faithfully loyal towards settlement, rejected hostile amendments. Thank God worst strain over. Tell Sarojini.”
151. LETTER TO J. W. PETAVEL

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 1, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your two letters. Isn’t it funny that in spite of both of them being long, I find nothing there touching the direct question that I have put? Surely, it is the easiest thing possible for you to tell me what is Belgium doing, what is Switzerland doing? What are you doing as distinguished from writing?

I add another question. I have nearly 80 acres of ground on which we are nearly 200 souls, men and women and children, and therefore parents with their children. We are doing a little bit of agriculture and we are doing dairy work, etc. Tell me what we should do to fall under your scheme.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 14178

152. LETTER TO B. F. BHARUCHA

[Before July 2, 1927]

What will you see by going to Nagpur? It is not necessary for me to explain to you that a satyagrahi cannot break the Arms Act. From the outset, the meaning of civil disobedience has been violation of such laws as are opposed to niti (ethics), so that there can be violation of jakati laws (tariff or taxation laws). There cannot be violation of laws that forbid thefts. Similarly, the man who carries on a peaceful campaign cannot carry a sword or a rifle with the object of being arrested or with any other purpose. At Lucknow, where Maulana Mahomed Ali and I were going round, we found volunteers with naked swords and we made them give up their swords. At Bezwada Maulana Mahomed Ali and I made volunteers give up their big sticks, though no permit or licence was necessary to carry them.

The man who is out to die or to give up his life, how can he hold

1 This is part of a Gujarati letter the original of which is not available. Vide “Limitations of Satyagraha”, 14-7-1927.
2 This letter was read by the addressee at an emergent meeting of Nagpur Nagar Congress Committee held on July 2.
a sword? Anything may happen after altering the aspect of the campaign, giving up the name of satyagraha or withdrawing the epithet shanti. But under cover of words such as shanti, satyagraha, etc., how could there be promulgation of ashanti or asatya? Ere this, I had seen your support to the Nagpur campaign and even then I felt pained. But it is hardly possible to correct even our friends immediately they err. I have written even this much because of your reference in your letter that you were proceeding to Nagpur to see what was going on there.

The Hindu, 4-7-1927

153. MESSAGE TO PEOPLE OF SOUTH INDIA

[July 2, 1927]

In a letter addressed to the men and women of South India, Mahatma Gandhi says:

It has been a matter of deep grief to me that owing to the collapse of my health, I was unable to enter upon the tour in South India on the appointed date. God willing, I hope to commence the tour some time in July though the original programme will have to be considerably modified and reduced. Meanwhile, however, I hope that those who have not yet taken to khadi will do so for the sake of the starving millions; for, whoever buys one yard of khadi puts the whole of the cost of it into the pockets of the poor people of this famine-stricken land, more than half of it going directly into the pockets of those to whom every pie means so much money to buy the necessaries of life.

The Hindu, 2-7-1927

---

1 Released on this date by the Associated Press of India from Bangalore
154. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 2, 1927

DEAR MOTILALJI,

So I can’t have you in Bangalore, it appears. It will be cruel to have you follow me somewhere down South to melt there. But if you come even about the end of this month, I might be at some pleasant place in Mysore, because the whole of Mysore is Nature’s favoured spot in India’s plains.

About the time that Sarojini Devi wrote to you, she wrote to me also, and sent a peremptory telegram asking me to support her request, and even to “issue orders”. But I knew beforehand what you would say to the proposal kindly meant, but thoughtlessly made. I wrote to her almost in the same strain as you, and suggested that Dr. Ansari was the only possible president. I told her also that I did not at all believe that his occupancy of the presidential chair would in any way diminish the weight of any settlement arrived at by the Congress. In my opinion, if Dr. Ansari is chosen, a reasonable settlement has a better chance of being adopted by the Congress.

You did tell me about the appearance of Tara. What with Chand and Tara, there must be perpetual illumination in the house; and the appearance of Suraj to support Chand and Tara is, let us hope, a question merely of time. I shall readily forgive Sarup for never thinking of writing to me if she brings up her Suns and Moons and Stars for the service of the Motherland. I hope both the mother and the baby are making steady progress.

I make my first appearance tomorrow to open a Khadi Exhibition which has been arranged in Bangalore in order to keep my chief warders Gangadharrao and Rajagopalachari occupied. They are doing a brisk trade in khadi and are not ashamed to exploit their prisoner’s illness.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S. N. 12598

1 In reply to his letter dated June 25. Motilal Nehru had written: “Your letter arrived just after I had posted my reply to Sarojini who was instigated by Jinnah and the Maharaja of Mahmudabad to offer the Crown to me in supersession of both Ansari and Jawahar.”

2 Second daughter of Sarup (Vijayalakshmi Pandit); literally, ‘star’

3 First daughter of Sarup; literally, ‘moon’

4 Literally, ‘sun’
155. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

BANGALORE,
Ashadh Sud 3 [July 2, 1927]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letter. You have done well in going to the Ashram. Take good care of your health. Health permitting, help if you can in the work of the store which the women have taken upon themselves. My health is steadily improving. There is still room for improvement in your handwriting. It will improve if you write carefully and slowly for some time. Speed will come by and by. It is the same with this as with spinning. It is difficult to ensure strength in the yarn after first learning to spin fast; on the contrary, speed will increase of itself after one has learnt to spin strong yarn.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 587. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

156. LETTER TO SANTOJI MAHARAJ

BANGALORE,
Ashadh Sud 3 [July 2, 1927]

SHRI SANTOJI MAHARAJ,

I have carefully preserved your questions, and with God’s grace I shall try to answer them now. I enclose the question with this answer so that you may not have to take the trouble of recalling them and I may not have to copy them. I have numbered them serially, and there should be, therefore, no confusion.

1. Only he can interpret the Gita correctly who tries to follow its teaching in practice, and the correctness of the interpretation will be in proportion to his success in living according to the teaching. The Gita was not composed as a learned treatise. It may be a profound one, but in my view the realization of its profound quality depends on the depth of one’s sincerity in putting its teaching into practice. I have read Lokamanya Tilak’s and Shankaracharya’s commentaries and tried to understand them as well as I could. I am not qualified to pronounce judgement on their learning. If we accept the point of view

1 Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date in 1927.
I have suggested, the question of expressing an opinion on their learning does not arise. The Gita is related to the Vedas and the Upanishads, for it gives the essence of both.

2. The Gita teaches that one should cultivate the state of samatva¹ and explains with every manner of argument the means of doing so, namely, bhakti² accompanied with jnana³, that is, service of every living creature without thought of reward.

3. The godly heritage, according to the Gita, is that which helps one to attain self-realization. The sign of having acquired such heritage is the weaknig of one’s attachments and aversions, and the means of acquiring it is cultivation of bhakti for the Lord.

4. As far as I have been able to read and understand the teachings of our sacred writers of past times, I don’t think there is any difference of view.

5. A Brahmin and a Bhangi⁴ [let us suppose] are stung by a scorpion. I see that a vaid has arrived to help the former, and another has been sent for. The vaid simply does not look towards the Bhangi who has been crying for help. Both the vaid and the Brahmin hear his cries. If the Brahmin has learnt to regard all beings with an equal eye, he would ask the vaid to treat the Bhangi first. If I were the vaid, I would run to the Bhangi, suck out the poison from the wound and apply to him whatever other remedies I knew. Having done that, I would offer my service to the Brahmin, if he required it, and then attend to my other work. To cultivate an equal eye towards all beings means to serve all people in the world with equal regard.

6. It is not true at all that the Lord teaches in the Gita that one may kill one’s kinsmen. When Arjuna got ready to fight for what he believed to be a just cause, and was overcome with ignorant attachment and weakness, through which he made a distinction between kinsmen and others, the Lord cured him of his attachment and weakness. We can only guess what reply Krishna would have given if Arjuna had protested and said he did not wish to kill at all, whether his opponents were kinsmen or others. It is my humble view, however, that the Gita was not composed to give a direct answer to that question.

¹ Equanimity in all circumstances and equality towards all things
² Devotion
³ Knowledge
⁴ Member of a caste traditionally associated with scavenging work
7. I have felt that there is a greater spirit of universality and liberalism in the sanatana Vedic dharma.

8. The question, which is the chief religious work, one can answer only for oneself. For me it is the Gita. One distinction at any rate among such works is based on the subjects they deal with, namely, those which lay down codes of conduct and others which state and explain the nature of Godhead. If the question refers to anything more than this, I have not understood it.

9. The difference between the rules of conduct enjoined by the various religions will change from age to age, and as knowledge and the spirit of liberalism grow such differences will diminish.

10. I think this question is involved in question 9. But I shall say this way of further explanation. We should believe that the practices and modes of conduct which we find represented in the Koran, the Bible, the Vedas and other works were the best in those times and lands. If our reason cannot accept them in this age, it is our dharma to change them or abandon them altogether. Only fundamental principles are immutable.

11. In acting towards other people and understanding their faiths one should follow the principle of regarding others as oneself.

12. I think it almost impossible to decide which out of the many interpretations of religious works represents undiluted truth. That is why the Gita has convincingly argued that samanvaya is the best. God alone represents perfect truth. Imperfect man, therefore, should humbly believe that as one’s truth is dear to one, so others’ truths are bound to be dear to them. Hence everyone should follow his own path and others should not hinder him from doing so. People will then follow, of their own accord, that path which is found from experience to be the smoothest.

13. Till we come across a person of experience and of perfect purity in conduct, we should observe the rules of conduct and discipline enjoined in the religious work which we have accepted as our scripture, read it regularly, reflect over it and put its teachings into practice. Those who cannot do even this are ignorant people. Such of them as cannot observe purity in conduct have a protector only in God. I believe in the assurance given in the Gita that even people of

---

1 The dharma based on the Vedic tradition
2 Synthesis
this class are saved somehow. Words certainly have a meaning, but there ebbs and floods in the meaning of words as if they had a life of their own.

14. As I understand the problem, without a belief in reincarnation it would be almost impossible to prove that the world is governed by justice. Moreover, one soul cannot have [full] experience of the world within the span of one life, which is but a moment in a vast cycle of time. I can practically say that I have direct proof every moment of the truth of the belief in reincarnation.

15. Virtue and sin exist in the same sense that light and darkness, happiness and suffering, truth and untruth, do. However, just as there is an unknowable and indescribable Reality beyond the categories of existence and non-existence, so also there is something beyond virtue and sin of which this body can have no experience. The descriptions given in Buddhist writings or in those of the Nyaya and the Sankhya schools of philosophy are not unalterable, but these too, can be understood and accepted from the respective viewpoints.

16. For the development of man’s reasoning faculty, the right influences are certainly essential. To put it scientifically, every society solves the problem in every age for itself.

17. Violence means injuring a creature through bodily action or speech or in thought, with the intention of injuring it. Non-violence means not injuring any creature in this manner. The doctrine of non-violence propounded in Vedanta literature, as far as I have understood it, seems to me all right. But I cannot say myself whether I have understood the Vedanta teaching correctly, nor can I claim that my study of the Vedanta is deep.

18. For being able to observe brahmacharya, one must keep the mind, speech and body constantly engaged in morally pure activity. We can, therefore, say in a general way that a brahmachari should do the opposite of what householders given to the enjoyment of pleasures do. It is my experience that desires in the mind are closely connected with the kind of food one eats, but I know that such desires arise even when one’s food is pure and small in quantity. We may, therefore, say that right food is a great help for the observance of brahmacharya, but that it is not all. The purest food is fruit, which has naturally ripened, eaten in solitude. I have no doubt about this at all. The chief thing is that, if the palate could be controlled, the observance of brahmacharya would become quite easy. We commit two errors in saying that knowledge has reference to the mind and food is connected with the body, which is a material object. The body of a living human being is not altogether inert. And the thing which we call mind and which learns from experience is as closely connected with the body as light is with the sun. A dead body is one from which the mind has gone; such a body does not eat or drink. Thus, it is the mind which eats through the body, and likewise it is through the body that really speaking it acquires knowledge.

19. The universal Soul in which all the souls exist is God. The living creature which does not know that universal Soul and looks upon itself as separate from other creatures is what we call jiva. That universal Soul, though dwelling in all, is not directly experienced; that is its beauty, its miracle, its maya. The true end of human effort consists in crossing that maya and knowing that universal Soul, which is the one source of all. It is not a thing which can be experienced in a manner our reason can understand; how, then, can there be any means of experiencing it? But anyone who has the strength to forget the “I” in him and make himself a cipher can have a glimpse of this universal Soul, though he cannot help someone else to have it too. Such a person is so dazzled by the mere glimpse, and so utterly spellbound, that he merges in it. He feels no desire and no need to describe his supreme bliss to anyone.

20. I have somehow found something for myself by combining all the suggestions made by the authors of Shastras. It is, therefore, quite difficult for me to say which path is acceptable. Shankara is dear to me, and so are Ramanuja, Madhav, Vallabha and others—I have relished delicacies from all, but have not been able to satisfy my hunger through what I got from any of them.

21. It may now be seen that the reply to this question is contained in the replies to the preceding questions. Yajna, dana, tapas, are obligatory duties, but that does not mean that the manner of performing them in this age should be the same as in ancient times. Yajna, dana, etc., are permanent principles. The social practices and the concrete forms through which they are put into practice may

---

1 Individual soul
2 Mystery
3 Sacrifice
4 Gift-giving, charity
5 Austerity
change from age to age and country to country. In my view, for example, the supreme \textit{yajna} for this country and in this age is the spinning-wheel. The right gift which a seeker of \textit{moksha} in this country and this age may make is to dedicate his all, body, intellect and possessions, to the service of the country. And, likewise, the right \textit{tapas} for this country and this age consists in burning with agony at the suffering of countless untouchables and others who are starving for want of food or because of famines. Anyone who performs these three important duties certainly becomes purified and he may even have a vision of God’s cosmic form which Arjuna had.

22. \textit{Saguna}\(^1\), \textit{nirguna}\(^2\), etc., belong to the speech of human beings trying to express their imperfect knowledge which is sheer ignorance. In truth God is beyond description. Even to call Him \textit{nirguna} is an utterly vain attempt to describe Him. Since, however, He is a slave of His devotees, He can be described not with a thousand but with an infinite number of epithets, all of which can be applied to him from the point of view of the respective devotees, and it is His supreme mercy that He tolerates them all. There is no error, therefore, in saying that He exists as all bodies, all sense-organs and all other things. We may thus confess our inability to describe Him.

23. I wish to say in all humility that my fasts and other ordeals are inspired by the desire to see God face to face. I fast in order that, even if I go without food altogether, I may have a glimpse of God such as I have described in these answers. But one cannot force oneself to undertake a fast. One must have fitness even for a fast. I am constantly striving for such fitness. But it is possible that I may not acquire it in this life and may even die ingloriously.

This completes the list of your questions. If you have any other questions to ask besides these, do ask them. You will notice a certain positiveness in some or all of the answers. Please do not put it down to presumption or pride. If I did not write what I have done, I would be guilty of untruth, for it would mean concealing my real beliefs through false humility. If, therefore, you see impropriety in my positiveness, kindly forgive me for that.

The revered Malaviyaji Maharaj is here. I have discussions with \(^1\) With attributes

\(^2\) Without attributes him on all manner of religious issues. I will tell him of your desire too.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12323

157. HONOURABLE LABOUR

Cotton is produced in Viramgam, Lakhtar and other areas and, though the steam engine has been introduced in these areas, it has not been possible to dispense with the human machine and therefore, extracting cotton from the pods and similar work is being done by men and women. This is work which cannot be done by one person, it must be taken up by large number. If, therefore, the Machine Age comes to stay, machines for extracting cotton are bound to be introduced in these areas. At present, however, the work of extracting cotton from the pods is fortunately or unfortunately—according to one’s point of view—done by men and women. I, therefore, put a few questions to a friend who does this work. He says in reply.¹

If, fifty or sixty years ago, any person like me had put similar questions about spinning, he would have received literally the same reply as this; for at that time the spinning-wheel was a sign not of poverty but of culture and respectability, and the rich used to spin willingly as a matter of duty, just as they do now the work of extracting cotton from the pods and do not mind accepting money for it, though such work is a means of livelihood for the poor. As long as the rich had not given up spinning, the poor were safe and spinning did not disappear as an occupation. Such universal occupations are a duty as much as they are occupations, and they last only so long as the rich keep them up, for they offer no opportunities for making millions or for speculation. They remain alive only if the rich have regard for the welfare of society as a whole. When social concern ceases to be a motive, everyone strives to be a millionaire and looks for an occupation which may help him to be one. The varnashrama²

¹ Not translated here. The correspondent had explained that the work was regarded as honourable and was done by everyone, rich and poor.
² The division of society into four varnas or castes and of the individual’s life into four ashramas or stages dharma was conceived and accepted as part of Hinduism so that people may not yield to such wicked temptations which degrade them spiritually. This dharma now survives only in name and its real nature is forgotten. Everywhere we see only its distortions. A dharma which was conceived as a means of regulating occupations is now confined to restrictive practices about eating and marrying. How can I persuade people that in the revival of the spinning-wheel lies the revival of varnashrama, of pure dharma and, if I may say without being guilty of exaggeration, of dharma in its entirety?

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 3-7-1927

158. THE DILEMMA OF A STUDENT

A simple-hearted student writes:

I have read your letter advising me to become a khadi worker, with the greatest attention. I do want to take up some which will enable me to serve the country. But I have yet to decide whether I should be a khadi worker or take up another form of service. I have not yet felt that khadi work can be a means for inner progress. For the present, I spin just to do my duty to society, knowing as I do that spinning is necessary both for our economic amelioration and for the attainment of freedom. Eventually, of course, I will choose the work which satisfies me the most. For the moment, however, my aim is to acquire as much knowledge as possible and to prepare myself for service.

As for brahmacharya, what can I write about it? I can only pray to God to give me the strength to fulfil my desire to observe the vow of brahmacharya.

I do not understand why you give equal importance both to the acquisition of knowledge and craft work in schools. I have felt that in trying to do both things at the same time we fail to do either of them well.

We do have to learn some craft. But would it not be better if it were taught after the intellectual part of our training is over? Spinning I do not regard as craft work, but as a duty one owes to society. Everyone must therefore spin. But I feel that weaving, agriculture and carpentry may well be postponed till after the academic studies are over. Each of them is an independent subject of study complete in itself, and it would be enough if a year or more is allotted to it separately.

The way things are being attempted here harms both intellectual development and proficiency in craft work. To do craft work for three hours, to spin in spare time, and to study all those subjects which are taught in other schools, to do one's own reading, and then to take part with others in the necessary community chores—all this is indeed very difficult to do.

The amount of reading laid down for the boys cannot be lessened. It is necessary for them to learn all the subjects. How are we justified then in burdening the boys with extra work when they have to learn so many subjects besides doing their own reading? If they do not get enough time to fulfil even the assignments set to them, how can they be expected to do their own personal reading and thinking? I find that as teaching advances, it becomes ever more necessary to do extra-curricular reading and there is no time for it.

I have spoken of these difficulties to the teachers. There have also been discussions about it, but I am not satisfied. I think they have not sufficient appreciation of our difficulties. Will you please give the points I have raised some consideration and explain to me where I err?

There are two important points raised in this letter. The reader need not be told that it is a reply to my letter. I thought that instead of sending a private reply to the correspondent I had better discuss it in the Navajivan so that it may be of use to other students who have similar difficulties. I had therefore kept it pending these three months.

The distinction made here in inner progress and the service of society is also made by many others in India. I consider this distinction is due to an error of thought. I believe, and it is also my experience, that all that is against the progress of the soul is also against the true interest of society in general. The progress of the soul can best be achieved, according to me, through the service of society. Service is the same as yajna. Service which comes in the way of the progress of the soul is to be shunned and renounced.

There is a school of thought which says that service may also be rendered at times through lying. But everybody knows that lying degrades the soul and it makes it fall its high state. Therefore, service through lying should never be thought of. Really speaking, the idea that lying can also serve as a means of service is just a delusion. Its result may seem beneficial to society for a while, but it can be proved that eventually it does more harm than good.

But, then, the charkha does good to society, to the world, and therefore to the soul also. This does not mean that a spinner can ipso facto realize the progress of the soul. He who spins for earning a few coppers gets only a few coppers. But he who spins with the object of realizing his soul may attain liberation through it. As has been said, he too becomes fit for liberation who offers water for the thirsty in the spirit of devotion. Of those who repeat the Gayatri mantra either for show or for money, the first falls while the other goes on farther than the fulfilment of his desire for money. Liberation is reached wherever the objective is of the highest and purest, and is backed by similar action.

In fact, the knowledge of Brahman, i.e., the Ultimate Reality, is necessary in order to know what is the highest objective and the highest action. To try to achieve proper fitness for khadi work with the object of the progress of the soul is no small matter. A khadi worker who wants also the progress of the soul must be free from all likes and dislikes. This covers almost all that needs to be said on this question. We have not yet had even a single khadi worker who would be content to receive just enough for his maintenance and settle down to work in unfavourable surroundings in a remote village far away from a railway station. I would expect such a worker to know Sanskrit and music, and have a fairly good knowledge of the essentials of all the important religions. He can put to good use those arts that he knows. But he can serve contentedly even if he knows nothing except the science of charkha.

In order to dispel the darkness and misery of age-long indolence, superstition, hunger and distrust, we need men of austerity who have got to the very door-step of liberation. Even a slight practice of this dharma wards off great calamity\(^1\) and hence is easy. But its perfect implementation is as arduous as the austerities of a man thirsting for self-realization.

I do not mean to suggest that one should give up one’s studies and devote oneself immediately to khadi work. I suggest that a student who has courage, strength and faith should take a vow from today onwards that he will become a khadi worker when he has finished his studies. If he makes this resolve one can consider that his service in the cause of khadi has already begun, because he will then choose whatever he decides to learn with the object of acquiring the necessary capacity for this particular type of work.

\(^1\) A reference to the Bhagavad Gita, II, 40
Let us now examine the second difficulty. The correspondent says:

I do not understand why you give equal importance to the acquisition of knowledge and the learning of craft work at the same time.

I have been asked this question time and again ever since I returned to India, and I have always given the same answer to it, i.e., they must be given an equal importance. It used to be so in olden times. The student went to the teacher with a bundle of sacrificial sticks in his hands which indicated his readiness to work and his humility. The former consisted of fetching wood from the forest and water for the use of the guru. The student also learned something about agriculture, cow-keeping etc.

Today this is not so, and that is one of the reasons why there is so much hunger, injustice and vice in the world. Literacy, i.e., learning of books, acquisition of intellectual knowledge and useful manual work in various crafts are not different, though they may seem so. Efforts to separate them and break the link that binds them together results in the misuse of knowledge. The intellectual side of it is like husband and manual labour like his wife. The bond between the two is indissoluble. Divorced from manual labour this husband is today acting like a libertine. He casts his evil eye here, there and everywhere and yet remains unsatisfied and in the end falls down tired and spent.

Indeed, if a comparison has to be made between the two, the first place will have to be given to manual work, for a child does not use his intelligence first but his hands and feet. Gradually, he learns to use his eyes and ears and begins to understand things only when he is four or five years of age. But this does not mean that with greater power of understanding he can neglect his body. If he does so he will destroy both the body and the mind. The intellect finds its expression in action by the body. Today the exercise of the body has come to be confined merely to gymnastics. Formerly this need was satisfied by useful labour. There is no suggestion that boys should not play games or take part in sports, etc. But there should not be any great need for games merely for health’s sake. Rather, there should be rest and relaxation of both the body and the mind. There is no place for indolence in education. Whether learning a craft or acquiring knowledge of the three R’s, education must always be interesting. If a boy gets bored either with reading and writing or craft work, the fault does not lie with him but with the method of education and the teacher.

While this letter was lying with me, I chanced to read a book about a new educational experiment being undertaken in England. An institution has been set up there which will start centres imparting literary education along with training in craft work. Among the list of the sponsors of this institution I find the names of almost all the eminent British educationists. Their aim is to change the present trend in education and impart to the children both literary education and training in crafts. More such centres will be started at places with plenty of open space around them so that arrangements could be made for their training in crafts. This will enable the boys to earn something while learning. The editor of the book says that this will probably lengthen the period of literary education, but he also states that it will do no harm; on the contrary, it will do good to the students. When a student starts to earn he realizes the value of money honestly earned and acquires respect for all forms of knowledge imparted to him.

I think the experiments that I carried out in South Africa confirm this view. To the extent that I could see how to carry them out and actually did carry them out they succeeded well.

Very little time is required to go over lessons or do extra-curricular reading if the method of teaching is good. Of course, students do need some time to do what they like—to read as they please or even to while it away in idleness. I learnt a while ago that this is what they call shavasana in the yogic science. Shavasana means to lie down like a corpse with the feet outstretched and with the body and mind completely relaxed and at ease. Of course, even here the repetition of Ramanama should go on with every breath, but it should not disturb one’s rest. For a brahmachari every breath is but a repetition of the Lord’s name.

But if what I say is correct how is it that this student and his other friends who are not untruthful or vain and who are ready to work hard to reach their goal do not experience its truth?

The tragedy with us is that all of us teachers have been born and have grown up in an age when the accent is on literary education, and training in crafts is very much neglected. And yet, some of us have detected this fatal flaw. Efforts are being made to correct it, but it is not yet clear how the correction can be made. Besides, the little that we have understood we have not yet the power to implement. Those who can teach Raghuvamsa or Ramayana or Shakespeare have not either the training or the aptitude to teach carpentry or weaving. They have not the same knowledge of weaving as they have of Raghuvamsa; and when they have, they have not the same interest in it. No wonder that, on account of this imperfection in our teachers, we find it difficult to produce the right type of students—students who will be equally at home both in literary learning and in crafts and who will at the same time character. Therefore, in this period of transition our imperfect and ill-equipped teachers and hardworking students must have both patience and faith. With faith one can cross the seas and storm even the most impregnable forts.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 3-7-1927
159. LETTER TO WILLIAM SMITH

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 3, 1927

DEAR MR. SMITH,

I thank you for your two letters and very carefully prepared notes and the Italian pamphlet illustrating the principle and use of castrating forceps.

I have now gone through your notes, and if you are free on Tuesday next at 4 p.m. I shall be delighted to see you.

Could I publish your valuable notes in the pages of Young India or make other public use of them?

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 12919

160. SPEECH AT OPENING OF KHADI EXHIBITION,
BANGALORE

July 3, 1927

FRIENDS,

You have extended to me a very great privilege by asking me to perform the opening ceremony at this function. It is a matter of great grief to me that I shall be unable to make my opening speech myself. You will agree with me that I ought not to take an undue advantage of the liberty given to me by Dr. Subba Rao and those medical friends who have been helping me. I want therefore to go as gently as possible and not to put an undue strain upon my constitution. I therefore reduced the few ideas that I have to present to you in connection with this Exhibition to writing. Mr. Tathachary will read a translation in the mother tongue of this province and then Mr. Rajagopalachari will read to you the English original. I am sorry that in this province you will not take the trouble of learning what is the lingua franca of India or should be. I have been obliged always, whenever I have come down to the South, to remark upon this deficiency. You have now a Hindi Prachar Office also in Bangalore and I do hope that at no distant time as I expect you will come up to Tamil Nadu and Andhra Desha in Hindi as in khadi and so make up your deficiency with reference to ignorance in Hindi. Had I seen in front of me only my Mussalman brethren I know that I could have spoken to them in Hindi. They are preserving the prestige of the lingua franca but the Hindus are lagging far behind in the South. I hope that you will run a close race with the Mussalman brethren in Mysore and make up your deficiency in Hindi. With these few words I shall call upon my friend to read the Kanarese translation.

VOL. 39 : 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927 155

After the reading of the Kanarese version of Mahatmaji’s address was over, Mr.
C. Rajagopalachari read in clear terms the following address of Gandhiji in English:

FRIENDS,

It is a matter of great pleasure to me to meet you in this lovely city and find in our midst our veteran leader, Poojaniya Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviyaji. Hindu tradition makes me always feel embarrassed to take a leading part in any function at which he is present. For ever since my return to our beloved country, I have looked up to him as to an elder brother. But what I feel to be a call of duty enables me somewhat to overcome the embarrassment.

On this my first permitted appearance on a public platform since my illness, let me thank His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore and its people for the great kindness and consideration shown to me during my prolonged convalescence. Your lavish hospitality has made illness itself attractive. But it has grieved me to observe, as I did in the appeal issued by my friends for enlisting your support for khadi, that they had endeavoured to exploit my illness by suggesting that if you all supported khadi by subscribing to funds and adopting it for your dress, my recovery would be quicker. I would ask you to dismiss this consideration from your minds altogether. If khadi makes no appeal to your reason and has no place in national economy, it must be suppressed in spite of my weakness for it. In great national causes, personal affections must be discounted as disturbing factors. And if I have become so soft as to become enervated for want of support for my whims and fancies, or may be, even follies, it is surely better for the nation that I should become and remain so ill as to be unfit for further mischief.

The Exhibition, which it will be my privilege presently to declare open, is a right and proper kind of appeal. It is carefully designed so as to give you an ocular demonstration of what khadi meant and what it has already achieved. If its careful study conquers your reason, but in spite of the conviction of your reason, you find yourselves too weak to translate its dictates into action, then, indeed, let your affection for me give you heart and courage to overcome your weakness. For I stand before you as a self-chosen representative of the dumb, semi-starved, because workless, millions of India whom the late Deshbandhu Chittaranjan Das appropriately called Daridranarayana. Every pice you contribute to the support of khadi, every yard of khadi you buy, means so much concrete sympathy shown by you for these millions.

Let me then summarize the conclusions of workers in the service of Daridranarayana which you may test for yourselves if you will patiently study the literature that you will find on the Exhibition stalls as also the results of khadi activity which you will find demonstrated at those stalls. The Prize Essay on Hand-spinning by Messrs S. V. Puntambekar and N. S. Varadachari traces for you the history of the ruin of the only national and universal cottage industry of India as also the possibilities of its revival. You will find it proved there that in this country there are millions of peasants who have no occupation for at least four months in the year, and that the only possible occupation for them in their own cottages in nothing but hand-spinning. Many good and well-intentioned people have suggested most ambitious and attractive schemes of village reorganization. But I make bold to say that not one of these schemes is at present in operation and that it is not possible to enforce any of them, at least during the lifetime of this generation; whereas, the spinning-wheel has been making its silent but slow progress throughout the length and breadth of India. Its revival dates from 1920 during which year, in spite of the forest of white caps one saw in the principal streets of cities, in reality there was not to be found khadi more than one lakh at the outside. But the carefully prepared report of the All-India Spinners’ Association for the last year will show you that during the year 1926 alone over Rs. 23 lakhs worth of khadi was produced throughout India and that the sales amounted to Rs. 28 lakhs. Capital investment by the Association amounts to over Rs. 18 lakhs. Fifty thousand spinners worked during the year under review for the production of this khadi. These spinners, before they took to hand-spinning, had no other earnings or occupation during the time that they gave to spinning. Their earnings have ranged from one pice to two annas per day according to the time they gave and the skill they put in it. The very fact that fifty thousand women were eager to do this work for what may appear to us to be a miserable wage should be sufficient workable demonstration that hand-spinning is not an uneconomic, profitless or unpractical proposition. In many instances women walk four miles to receive their cotton. Round hand-spinning as the centre have been built up many other occupations. Weavers, dhobis, dyers, printers and carders who had either died out or were dying out have found in the revival of hand-spinning a new hope. One new weaver and one new carder comes into being against ten spinners and their wages are anything between four annas and one and a half rupees per day. 1,500 villages are being thus served by an army of more or less educated workers whose salary ranges from Rs. 100 to Rs. 150 per month. Not less than 1,000 such young men and some young women find an honest livelihood in this national service. The spinners and other workers include Brahmans, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, Sudras, the so-called untouchables, Mussalmans, Christians, Parsis, Sikhs, in fact every caste and creed. Besides the paid workers, there are several absolutely unpaid volunteers too engaged in this work of reconstruction. In Satis Chandra Das Gupta and Profulla Chandra Ghosh, Bengal has given to this service two of Acharya Ray’s most brilliant pupils. Satis Chandra Das Gupta had built up Acharya Ray’s chemical works. Profulla Chandra Ghosh had been assistant assayer in the Government Mint. Both left their lucrative posts to give themselves to khadi. Several distinguished lawyers, even doctors, some of whom you know personally, have given up their profession and taken to this work. And it is slowly dawning upon the merchant class that khadi is a service which does demand their mercantile ability. You will, perhaps, now understand why I have called this hand-spinning movement the greatest co-operative effort of modern times. And if six years’ progress, insignificant as it may appear compared to the mighty result in view, is an indication of the future, God willing, at no distant time we shall find our villages, which at the present moment seem to be crumbling to ruins, becoming hives of honest and patient industry.

The Exhibition will enable you to understand all the processes that cotton goes through before it reaches you as khadi. For you will see ginning, carding, sliver-making, spinning and weaving demonstrated before you. You will see also the very simple tools and machinery which are being used for these processes. The charts will tell you the output of these little machines, most of which can be easily made in our villages.

I must not also omit to draw the attention of fashionable, artistic and moneyminded members of my audience to the will-filled stall where you will see handsomely worked and embroidered fine khadi in the preparation of which nearly 400 girls in Bombay are earning anything between six annas and one and a half rupees per day. It is an organization conducted by Rashtriya Stri Sabha of Bombay, which, among other self-sacrificing ladies, includes the grand-daughters of the Grand Old Man of India, Dadabhai Naoroji, and a sister belonging to the great Petit family.

Madhusudan Das was a brilliant lawyer in Cuttack. The poverty of Orissa woke him from his dreams and he saw that necessary as work with plough and oxen in our fields was, we should soon be reduced to the status of the bovine species unless we added to our agriculture some industry which called forth the cunning of the hand, and he has himself become a finished artisan.

But I must not any longer stand between you and the feast for your eyes and intellect that has been prepared by the Exhibition Committee. May it enable you to appreciate the priceless value of khadi as a central fact in village organization and may it induce you to establish between yourselves and the poor villagers a living bond by sending those of you who have the leisure and the inclination to villages to deliver the message of the spinning-wheel, and all of you at least by adopting khadi for your dress and household use! In the work of God, as I venture to suggest it is, the harvest is indeed rich but the labourers are few. Every one of you can, if you will, add to the number.

I have much pleasure in declaring the Exhibition open, and I pray to God that He may bless the work, if it is commendable in His sight and the workers be found worthy.

This over amidst impressive silence, Mahatmaji spoke the following few words in conclusion:

FRIENDS,

I shall presently perform the opening ceremony by uncovering a model charkha prepared at the Industrial Shop of the Department of Industries in Mysore. Mr. Gangadharrao Deshpande, in his opening speech inviting me to perform the ceremony, drew your attention to the great help that is being rendered by the State and especially the Department of Industries to this movement. They have prepared many such charkhas. You will see in the Exhibition Court a variety of charkhas, old spinning-wheels, which are still to be found in a more or less dilapidated condition in Mysore and the evolution that a spinning-wheel has gone through during these six years. The charkha that I shall have the privilege of presently exposing to your view is by no means the best in the scale of evolution. But we thought it was in the fitness of things that an article made in Mysore should be first exposed to view.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya will lead you to the Exhibition Court. He has kindly consented to do this work for me in order to spare me the strain of going through the Exhibition Court. He will also continue the present proceedings this evening at 5-30 when he will give you what his heart prompts him to give you on what he has seen in the Exhibition Court, and what he has gathered during these six years about khaddar and I do hope that you will all come and listen to the message that he might have to deliver to you. You will not attempt whilst he takes the leaders to the court to crowd round, otherwise it will not be really possible to study what is to be studied in the Exhibition. It is designed to be really a study for those who want to understand what his khadi movement stands for and what it has been able to do. It is not a mere ocular demonstration to be dismissed out of our minds, immediately we have gone out of the Exhibition Court. It is not a cinema. It is actually a nursery where a student, a lover of humanity, a lover of his own country may come and see things for himself. I invite sceptics to go there and pause not a few moments, but to go there and pause a few hours and I promise that he will find himself amply rewarded and possibly his scepticism also will be dismissed. I invite the candid critic also to go there and I have no doubt that he will find imperfections, he will find those charts not drawn in artistic fashion, but he will find heart put into those charts.
They give you facts and figures which are compiled by students who want only to serve truth and nothing but the truth. You will find there always an understatement but not an overstatement. With these words I have much pleasure to uncover the charkha and I hope that you will all support this movement as it deserves.

Amidst great applause Mahatmaji then uncovered a charkha raised to the seat of Gandhiji by Mr. Deshpande.

The Hindu, 4-7-1927
161. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 4, 1927

CHI. MIRA.

I had expected a letter from you today. But there is nothing as yet. There is just a slight chance of one more post. I hope you were not overcrowded in the train, that there was no difficulty at Guntakal. After you went there was a wire from Vallunjkar asking Mahadev to suggest your breaking journey at Golanad to see Kakasaheb, himself and Gangu. But you were gone and I did not think it worth while wiring in the hope (very distant) of catching you before you could leave Bombay.

How well you put it? You were parting but to come nearer. It was quite true. You did well in coming and equally well in leaving when you did.

Remember my parting words. You are not to kill yourself or ruin your health in trying to finish Hindi in two months. Let us hope that you will finish it. But it does not matter in the least if you cannot. Yours is but to try. Again do not take the vow to use only Hindi in Wardha unless you feel practically driven to it. Nothing hangs by it. You need not consider what I would like. In matters like this there should be no question of considering my opinion or wishes. After all it is a question of choosing the best way of doing Hindi. The way that suits you is the best for you and no other.

With love,

BAPU

[PS.] The opening ceremony went off yesterday without any difficulty. I stood the strain well. The doctors came afterwards and they were satisfied to find no alteration in the pulse. I hope you left your constipation here.

B.

1 In Bapu’s Letters to Mira, Mirabehn explains: “I had now left Bhagavadbhakti Ashram, Rewari, and was spending a short time at Sabarmati after having been to see Bapu at Bangalore, and before going to Vinoba’s Ashram at Wardha for continuing my Hindi studies.”

2 The superscription in this and other letters to Mirabehn is in Devanagari.
Immediately after handing this for the post I got your expected beautiful letter. It is perfectly intelligible. There are very few mistakes. Continue to write as often as you like.

From the original: C.W. 5243. Courtesy: Mirabehn

162. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Silence Day [July 4, 1927] ¹

CHI. MIRA,

I have sent the Monday letter to Sabarmati. But if you leave for Wardha before getting it, you should not miss your Monday mail at Wardha either; hence this epistle.

I had expected your letter today but it has not come; it must tomorrow.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Don’t worry. The letter addressed to Sabarmati is in English.

[PPS.]

I have just had your Hindi letter. It is beautiful.

From the Hindi original: C.W. 5242. Courtesy: Mirabehn

163. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day, Ashadh Sud 5 ² [July 4, 1927]

SISTERS,

I thought of you yesterday. Exhibitions and such other activities are really more the work of women than of men. No one was able to decorate his or her stall better than Mithubehn. It is just what one would expect; because all the twenty-four hours she keeps thinking how khadi can be made more lovely. Under her guidance,

¹ In Hindi
² From the postmark
³ The source has Ashadh Sud 6, which is evidently a slip. The letter was written on the day following the opening of the Exhibition.
starting with a few, now about four hundred girls work on khadi and earn their livelihood, or wear only khadi spun by themselves.

Manibehn has been able to bring credit to herself and to the Exhibition by means of her carding bow.

As so many Ashram people have now arrived, the recitation of the Gita in the mornings has been started. Today Manibehn recited the fourth chapter. She had recited the first chapter too. Her intonation is good. Indeed all of you should learn to read the Gita in the proper way and understand its meaning. Just as a woman is not accomplished unless she is a good cook, so also a woman who does not know the Gita cannot be said to be accomplished.

Who is in charge of the store at present?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3656

164. LETTER TO MANU H. GANDHI

Ashadh Sud 5, [July 4, 1927]¹

CHI. MANU,

I have your letter. Keep on writing in that manner. We all think of you but Ba misses you very much. She often says, ‘When shall I see Manu ?’ But that is in the hands of God. We shall meet when He ordains. Do you learn bhajans, etc., there? Hariichchhabehn², Tarabehn and others are there. Do you ever meet them?

There is a Khadi Exhibition here today. Manibehn’ cards cotton there. Kanti Parekh has also come. He also cards cotton. Keshubhai spins cotton. There are so many others. It has a good collection of khadi. If you were here, I would have shown you everything. But can we poor travel such a distance [only for this purpose]?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 5053. Courtesy: Manu S. Mashruwala

¹ The letter evidently belongs to 1927. Gandhiji was in Bangalore where the Khadi Exhibition was held; vide also “Speech at Opening of Khadi Exhibition, Bangalore”, 3-7-1927 and “Letter to Ashram Women”, 4-7-1927.

² Harichchha Kamdar

³ Manibehn Patel, daughter of Vallabhbhai Patel
DEAR MR. PETIT,

The enclosed is a copy repeated at Bangalore of a cable¹ received from Andrews at Sabarmati. It speaks for itself. It will be a great calamity if Mr. Sastri’s health breaks down, or if he has to undergo financial worries. Personally, I think that the Government of India will not be able to meet the special requirements in the present case. It would be wrong to set an awkward precedent, and yet, if Mr. Sastri’s mission is to succeed, he must have ample funds enabling him to move from place to place and find decent accommodation. Future agents won’t need triple accommodation. But Mr. Sastri has to break new ground and he has therefore to exploit not merely his official position for reducing the discordant elements to harmony but he has got to exploit his own special gifts to that end. His more solid work therefore will be extra-official. In order to be able to do this, he must have funds. South Africa like India is a place of distances. Between Cape Town and Durban it is nearly 1,400 miles by rail, and in each place he must have accommodation of his own. If he went to hotels, he would be inaccessible to the majority of the Indians who are poor.

I do not think we can state all these things in the press and make a public appeal for funds. The only legitimate thing therefore to do is for the Imperial Citizenship Association to place at Mr. Sastri’s disposal a fairly large sum. No time should be lost. I have not a shadow of a doubt that such an expense would be a fair charge upon the funds of the I.C.A.

I suggest that Rs. 25,000/- may be at once transferred to him to be used as he may think necessary for his own personal convenience. He can be trusted to use the amount judiciously and to refund what he may not need.

For the sake of speedy despatch, I am sending a copy of this letter to the members of the Committee whom I know and who I think will be interested in the subject matter.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

J. [B.] PETIT, ESQ.
IMPERIAL CITIZENSHIP ASSOCIATION
BOMBAY

From a photostat : S.N. 12365

166. LETTER TO JOSHI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 5, 1927

MY DEAR JOSHI,

I believe you are on the Committee of the Imperial Citizenship Association. The enclosed speaks for itself. If you agree with the view I have set forth in the letter, you will please expedite business.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 12365

167. LETTER TO K. S. NATARAJAN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 5, 1927

DEAR MR. NATARAJAN,

I enclose herewith a copy of my letter to Mr. Petit. I do not need to add anything except to ask you please to expedite the despatch of funds, if you agree with the substance of my letter to Mr. Petit.

Yours sincerely,

K. S. NATARAJAN, ESQ.
“INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER”
FORT
BOMBAY

From a photostat : S.N. 12365

1 Vide item 97 above.
168. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 5, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your two letters. Last was received only yesterday.

Your letter about the business of the Council was placed before the Council. Jammalalji and Shankerlal will write to you fully. I have not attended any of the meetings except the first one which I simply opened without any remarks and retired. I think the Council has confirmed the original proposal to relieve me from all administrative work. I remain the president; but Jammalalji becomes the officiating chairman of the Council. And I think that this is the best thing to do. This spares me the trouble of having to go into every detail of administration.

Your suggestion that the Council meeting should be held at different centres has been adopted.

Not vital changes should be made in the constitution for five years according to the original intention. To change officers every year, and especially the secretaries, would be a dangerous thing. Secretaries should be helped by fresh suggestions. But as we are really a business house, administrative control should be continuous, if we are to make the house stable. And, personally, I think that it is impossible to get a secretary more energetic, more conscientious than Shankerlal.

Your letter about Hemprabha Dev’s latest developments provides food for deep reflection. Let there be nothing done in a hurry.

The suggestion about maintenance is startling and I would like a long time in order that it may soak into me. We must meet before anything is done. Supposing that I am free from the Southern tour about the end of August or middle of September and go through it without any mishap, would you have me to undertake the Bengal tour in gentle stages? Please do not be anxious about me; for, I shall do nothing in haste and I shall watch myself as the tour progresses. Nobody wants to run avoidable risks. Both Rajagopalachari and Gangadharrao are taking elaborate precautions to avoid the slightest strain. Chikballapur was for them also a good lesson.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 19786

166 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Chi. Manilal and Sushila,

I got your cable. You must have received my reply to it. You must have got my letters even before my reply to the cable. But I sent the cable as I thought that would make both of you happier, especially Sushila. If Manilal alone were there, I would not have spent money on a cable and would have rebuked him for wasting money on one. But considering that Sushila was in foreign country, that she has never been abroad before now and that, therefore, she would be happy to hear from me, I thought it proper to send a cable. I am glad to know that both of you would like to receive letters from me, but at the same time I should like to make it clear that, if you do not receive one, you should not suppose that my failure to write was due to indifference or carelessness. It may be that I cannot find the time to write because of pressure of work, or that I miss writing because I do not remember the date on which the mail leaves. If I am ill, you will have somehow heard about it. But now I shall be more careful about writing.

Sushila should forget her attachment to her parental home. We ought always to remember our parents, but it is not possible to live for ever with them. A son cannot do so. How, then, is it possible for a daughter? Her home is with her husband. Sushila should, therefore, understand that her home is where Manilal is and learn to live like Savitri. She should protect herself and also protect Manilal. In both of you maintaining simplicity, truthfulness, compassion and patriotism, despite the many temptations surrounding you, in your observing self-restraint as befits you and protecting each other’s body and character lies the success of your marriage.

Sushila’s physical strength does not seem to have increased in proportion to the increase in her weight. There is only one way of increasing it: that she should eat nothing but wholesome food, and only as much as can be digested, and take as much physical exercise in the open air as she can without getting exhausted, and that both of you should refrain, as much as possible, from sexual indulgence. I am a living example before you of how much even mental indulgence

1 From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary
2 Who wrested the soul of her husband back from the God of Death. The story is told in the Mahabharata.
168

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

tells on the body. I failed to wake up for thirty years, and reap the fruits of that to this day. My body is comparatively good. I have, it may be said, suffered from very few illnesses. Still, I know that had I waked up earlier, my body would have been as strong as adamant. My capacity to serve would also have been far greater than it is. There was none to awaken me or to keep me vigilant. I am there to awaken you both and keep you on your guard. Learn from my experience.

I keep good health. As a khadi exhibition is on here these days and as there is to be a meeting of the Charkha Sangh, Jamnalalji, Mithubehn, Jamnabehn, Maganlal, Keshu, Anasuyabehn, Shankerlal and others have come here. In a day or two the nest will be empty again.

You send your letters needlessly to Amreli. If you write the word ‘personal’ on your letters, no one will read them, but why do you wish that no one in the Ashram should read them? It would be all right if you wish that no one should read those letters of yours in which you consult me about your moral problems, but what can be there in ordinary letters that no one should read?

We all saw your photograph which Jamnalalji has received. The photograph which you have sent for me or Ba has not yet reached us. It must be on the way. Our time is wasted in inquiring about it without knowing to what address it was sent.

I hope you receive the translation of the Gita regularly.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 4724

170. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 6, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

Your telegram is disturbing. No letters yet received. I shall anxiously await further news. May God keep you.

Yours,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5244. Courtesy : Mirabehn
171. LETTER TO A. FENNER BROCKWAY

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 6, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your confidential letter of the 13th June last with the enclosures. I appreciate the honour you have done me by sending me your draft Bill, and I beg to tender my thanks to those members of the Independent Labour Party who have worked at the Bill.

I am however unable to give any effective advice or guidance as my work for the present lies in a different direction. I am devoting the whole of my energy to developing internal strength. I have therefore very little time left for studying the question what form the final constitution should take. I do not in any shape or form discount the importance of that question. But I know my own limitations, and so, as far as possible, I help the movement towards arriving at a suitable constitution by non-interference and sympathetic watch. But I take it that you have circulated the draft Bill among many other public men in India and invited their opinion. If at any time I feel that I can do any useful work in this connection, I shall not hesitate to correspond with you.

Yours sincerely,

A. FENNER BROCKWAY, ESQ.
14, GREAT GEORGE STREET
LONDON S.N. I

From a photostat : S.N. 12530

172. LETTER TO GIRIRAJ KISHORE

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 6, 1927

MY DEAR GIRIRAJ,

I have your letter. I like your heart searching. There is always one danger in this process. A man who is not self-possessed becomes morose and imagines all kinds of things about himself. This is the state of a hypochondriac. Do you know what that would means in the medical world? It means a person who imagines every disease to be in himself of which he reads a description. Whilst, therefore, it is the most proper thing to rid oneself of any weakness of which one is conscious there must be nothing imagined and there should be no brooding. Instead of saying to yourself, ‘I am wretched, so evil and I shall never be good’, the proper formula is, ‘I will be good; for, God is good and merciful; He will make me good.’ The first formula is weakening and the second is invigorating.

Your statement that an ideal cook is he who feels about the diners as a mother does for her children is perfect. It is of course difficult to feel like that; but by practice everything becomes easy. Be patient with everybody, return a kind answer to every enquiry and give up the last chapati and the last spoonful of dal, even though there may be nothing left for you and those who may be the last to dine being waiters. You may prepare something for yourself to satisfy hunger. This may mean additional time. Never mind it. And, therefore, cooks and waiters should never have any fixed appointments after the completion of kitchen work. There must always be wide margin left for emergencies.

You must not regard yourself as unfit for the work. A man who wants to do work for society and in society, that is, in company with others, has to have practically the same qualities whether it is in the kitchen or in the sanitary yard or in the weaving shed, and no man becomes a worthy human being unless he has gone through these purifying fires. I, therefore, want you to compose yourself completely, and find your satisfaction in your work, dealing with every emergency that may arise. I know that all this is easy enough to say. It is not so easy to practise. Nevertheless all our learning and everything we do has to be done in order to arrive at this equableness. I hope, therefore, you will never accept defeat.

Do please write to me whenever you like. Always try to cultivate a compact style. But if you cannot say what you want to, briefly, I do not mind even your long letters. But it will be a good practice for you after having written your long letter to reduce it to a quarter and see whether you cannot say the same thing in quarter length.

Yours sincerely,

GIRIRAJ KISHORE
ASHRAM
SABARMATI

From a photostat: S.N. 14180
173. LETTER TO JAI RAMDAS DAULATRAM

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 6, 1927

MY DEAR JAI RAMDAS,

I need you badly if you can possibly spare yourself from Council work. Malaviyaji and I have been considering the advisibility of establishing an All-India Anti-untouchability Association. Jamnalalji, Rajagopalachari, Shankerlal, Rajendra Babu and others think likewise. There is no man to take up the work so suitable like you. Jamnalalji thinks that I must press you to come out at any cost. I won’t do that. But I thought I must place this proposition before you, and if the inner voice prompts you, then indeed I want you. But if you think you can better utilize your abilities for the service of the country by being in the Council, I have nothing to say. Just think the matter over well and let me know. If you come to a firm opinion which you can transmit to me by wire, you may even wire.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. JAI RAMDAS DAULATRAM, M.L.C.
HYDERABAD (SIND)

From a microfilm : S.N. 14619

174. LETTER TO LILIAN EDGER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 6, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Krishnadas has handed your letter to me and the yarn sent with it. The yarn is not at all bad. It can of course be more even. I do not think that age is a bar. I know many as old as you who have taken to spinning and who have become very good spinners. No doubt it requires much patience in the beginning.

You have asked me whether the small quantities that you spin can be of any help to the poor. I say unhesitatingly, “Yes.” This does not mean that the yarn you may be sending will be separately woven into khadi and sent to the poor. That is not what we are doing with the yarn contribution we are receiving. But what we are doing is to convert such yarn into khadi, and utilize the proceeds of the sale of that khadi for providing spinning and other ancillary work to the poor.
people. This is the very best help can be rendered to them.

I quite agree with you that it is difficult for individuals to distribute their charity judiciously. The vast majority of street beggars are mere professional idlers when they are not much worse, and those who have money to spare do an ill-service to these beggars and to the country by giving them money, food or clothing. We have found by experience that we do no service by distributing amongst poor people khadi prepared from yarn contributions. The chief need is neither food nor clothing but work which they can do in their cottages. But where it becomes necessary to provide clothing side by side with work, we do not hesitate to do so. But that happens only in rare cases. The chief value, in my opinion, of any person spinning by way of sacrifice lies in the work itself, and in the promotion of the work atmosphere that is created in the country and in the promotion of a tangible feeling for the poorest in the land.

Now for your questions:

1. It is wrong to draw the thread and the twist. The thread must be drawn whilst the spindle is revolving rapidly round its own centre. This movement ensures the proper twist. Drawing of the yarn and the movement of the spindle go on simultaneously so that there is no difficulty about continuously drawing the thread with ease. And whilst the thread is being drawn the sliver is held fairly tight between the fingers so that the twist does not reach the thread up to the very end which is held between the fingers.

2. Wax has to be used occasionally for the mal, that is the chord that goes round the wheel and the spindle.

3. Oil has not to be used very often. The ordinary machine oil can serve the purpose. But in the absence of that, a drop of the ordinary cooking oil is quite serviceable. An occasional drop on the axle where it touches the uprights and on the holders which hold the spindle makes for smooth movement.

4. It will be better to wind off after an hour’s spinning. Those who can spin very rapidly unwind every 20 minutes. When in unwinding the thread tangles, you know that the cone has not been made tight. If your yarn is well-twisted, you can wind it round the spindle each time fairly tight and the cone should feel hard to the touch and not at all soft.

5. When the chord breaks and if you cannot twist a chord out of your own yarn, you can use any bazaar twine of the diameter of your chord.
Lastly, if you will become a good spinner and if you will spin for sacrifice, it is really necessary for you to watch someone who spins well. Wherever you may be whether in Kashi or Darbhanga, there is no difficulty about your getting proper assistance.

Wishing you every success in your effort,

Yours sincerely,

MISS LILIAN EDGER
CARE OF POST MASTER
SRINAGAR (KASHMIR)

From a microfilm: S.N. 19785

175. LETTER TO SECRETARY, HINDI SAHITYA SAMMELAN

BANGALORE,
Ashadh Shukla 7 [July 6, 1927]

DEAR SIR,

I got your telegram yesterday. I hope you have my reply. You must have my earlier letter too. I am pained by your telegram. In my humble opinion, it was not decent to hold out a threat of legal action. I have said on several occasions and also reiterated in my letter that if you think the work accomplished here as the Sammelan’s property, well, it can be settled by arbitration. I can understand that it will be your duty to go to a court of law if you hold that it would be in the interest of the Sammelan to obtain the court’s verdict. If you deem it proper to go to the court, do not blame Pandit Harihar Sharma. Whatever changes in work have been brought about by him had my sanction. I have always thought that it was I who through the Sammelan conducted the work in the South. I always thought that by entrusting this work to the Sammelan I have only enhanced its prestige and that in case of a disagreement the Sammelan would not move to take charge of the work nor obstruct me from carrying it on according to my own plans. I still desire your co-operation in this work but if you think that the funds collected by Jamnalalji and those by Panditji in the South were all to be handed over to the Sammelan, I am sorry the matter can be decided only by arbitration or in a court of law.

Yours,

From a microfilm of the Hindi: S.N. 11817
176. A LETTER

[Before July 7, 1927]

Your questions are really very good but among the readers of Young India and Navajivan few would be eager for a casuistical enquiry into this question. I shall therefore rest content with answering you alone.

Sir Jagadish Chandra Bose’s theory is not new. Our Shastras recognize the presence of life in plants as in human beings. Certainly therefore the statement that life lives on life is established by facts. And this is the one reason why the body is regarded as an appendage of the atman and its absence essential for the supreme state of the atman. Although all life must be embodied only through some sort of violence, the question still remains what form of life should comprise life’s food. Human physiology as well as the experience of the wise shows that the right food for us is the fruit ripened on the tree and suchlike. The pure seeker will not use even fire. We may not reach this ideal state, yet it is our duty to strive for it as far as we can, and in this our endeavour meat-eating can have no place. [Feeding on] plant life should be the limit for us.

2. I can say from my own experience and that of others that there is absolutely no danger of tuberculosis and such other diseases resulting from vegetarian diet even in countries like England. Today thousands of Englishmen are vegetarians, [though] usually they do take eggs.

3. Vegetarian restaurants make use of egg and milk; they neither serve nor cook meat. They place eggs and milk in the same category and agree that it would be better to give up both as neither is a vegetable. This is my opinion too. Barring mother’s milk during infancy man has no right to take milk. I shall say something about this in Young India. You will find it in the course of the autobiography. Till now it was my belief that every egg could be hatched. Now I learn from experts that a hen lays eggs even without mating and that such eggs cannot be hatched. These eggs are as much without life and therefore as unobjectionable as milk. Now I am wondering whether eggs may not have a place in a vegetarian diet since milk is included. But this much I do know that from the

---

1 From the reference to the discussion about milk in the “Autobiography” (Pt. IV, Ch. VIII), which appeared in Young India, 7-7-1927 standpoint of brahmacharya eggs are to be eschewed as are many vegetables too. But this is a digression. Today I am considering eggs purely from the point of view of vegetarian diet.

I congratulate you on writing in Hindi.

Yours,

From a photostat of the Hindi : S.N. 12325

177. NOTES

DESBANDHU DAY AT DARJEELING

The reader will be glad to share the following with me from Mrs. Blair from Darjeeling:

It may perhaps interest you to know that the Darjeeling Mahila Samiti held a meeting on June 15th in memory of the great patriot, the late Mr. C. R. Das, at which Shrimati Urmila Devi spoke. Her subject was the wearing of khadi and the obligation on those, who wished to help the poor of their country, to spin at least half an hour a day. On the following Wednesday, 22nd instant, nine of the members in the presence of Shrimati Urmila Devi promised to spin at least half an hour a day. Later on they may feel worthy to become members of the A.I.S.A.\(^1\) At present they are going to spin wool in order to be able to give warm clothes in the winter to the Baby Clinic and the Hospital.\(^2\)

It is a good thing that the ladies of Darjeeling observed the anniversary of Deshbandhu in the manner described by Mrs. Blair. I hope that the nine ladies who have given their names will persist in their effort. We have in this country a habit of making promises in a fit of enthusiasm, keeping them for a time, and then forgetting them altogether. I hope that these members will be steadfast enough to continue their sacrificial spinning so long as a single Indian has to starve for want of work in his or her own home. One knows the fashion of saying, “If they have no work, why do they not emigrate, why do they not go to the tea plantations, why do they not go to the cities where labour is in demand, and earn as much as eight annas?” I have in these pages often demonstrated the falsity of this argument. Millions cannot leave their homes, even if they wish to. And it would be a calamity if they all did. Coal at the pit’s mouth in Newcastle is probably to be had for nothing, or very little. But such cannot be the case in Bombay. If Bombay must use Newcastle coal, it has to pay for transport. Similarly work to be had in Bombay will be of no use to the millions, who cannot, will not and must not leave their cottages and fields. Work has got therefore to be transported to their cottages, and inversely as in the case of coal at Newcastle, the work transported to cottages is less paying than work in Bombay in terms of coin. But in terms of mental satisfaction, and grain or vegetable, the work obtained in the cottages is far more profitable than that obtainable in Bombay.

\(^1\) All-India Spinners Association

ADI KARNATAKAS

All the readers of Young India may not know who Adi Karnatakas are. They are the suppressed classes of Karnatak. Just as at the Raniparaj Conference, friends of the Raniparaj altered the name Kaliparaj to the more appropriate name Raniparaj, so the suppressed classes all over India have been not unnaturally taking for themselves names which have no bad odour about them. In this spirit the suppressed classes in Karnatak describe themselves as Adi Karnatakas. And so I notice under that heading two paragraphs in the address of the Dewan of Mysore to its Representative Assembly. One observes from these paragraphs, that exceptional facilities have been created for the education of the members of these classes, and methods have been adopted to suit their special circumstances. Among these methods are scholarships, exemptions from schools fees, a free supply of clothes and school requisites, free hostels; and over and above the right of admission to all schools, 605 special schools have been provided for them. There are altogether 16,575 students of this class receiving tuition in Mysore.

An attempt is being made to organize a co-operative agricultural scheme with due provision of land, live-stock and direction.

The paragraphs end with the following suggestion:

These people ought to be the strength of our strength. Shall we let them become our weakness? They have a rankling sense of wrong which only kindness can heal. The aim should be to “Hinduize” them more and more, for they belong to the Hindu community, and to offer them every facility to remain within the fold. They will be a mighty accession to the strength of our body politic; if not, they will be an equally heavy subtraction from it. Alienated, they will introduce an additional element of heterogeneity which will further complicate the already difficult problems of administration. No possible means of amelioration should be neglected, and every friend of Hindu society, every lover of Mysore, should supplement the efforts of Government with all his strength.

This suggestion is a gentle warning both to the Christian missionary and the Mussalman missionary not to try to wean these suppressed classes from Hinduism, but if they at all wish to interfere, to act so that they may become better Hindus. If the suggestion is acted upon by the parties concerned, it will be a substantial contribution towards the attainment of real peace in the land.

Young India, 7-7-1927

178. THE COW IN MYSORE

I have received letters from Cow-protection Societies in Mysore, protesting against my letter¹ to the Mysore Cow-protection Committee appointed by the State. My letter was in answer to a questionnaire issued by that Committee. Extracts from that letter published in the Madras Press led the Cow-protection Societies in question to think that I was totally against legal prohibition of cow-slaughter under any circumstances whatsoever. I was surprised to receive these letters, and I wondered whether, in a moment of inadvertence, I had ever said that there should never be any legislation against cow-slaughter. I therefore asked for a copy of my letter from the Cow-protection Committee, which they have kindly sent me. As the letter represents my considered opinion, and as it has been given some importance by the Committee and has caused misunderstanding among the public of Mysore interested in this every important question, I reproduce the whole of it below :²

Neither the discussion with the members of the several Cow-protection Societies, nor the correspondence before me warrants any alteration of the opinion expressed in this letter. The reader will observe that I have nowhere said that there should never be any legislation against cow-slaughter. But what I have said is that there should be no prohibition of cow-slaughter by legislation without the consent of the intelligent majority of the subjects adversely affected by it. Therefore, the Mysore State will be perfectly justified, and, indeed, bound to undertake legislation prohibiting cow-slaughter, if it has the

¹ Vide “Letter to Cow-Protection Committee, Mysore”, 11-1-1927.
² Not reproduced here
consent of the intelligent majority of its Mussalman population. The members of the Cow-protection Societies that met me assured me that the relations between Hindus and Mussalmans in Mysore were cordial, and that a majority of Mussalmans in Mysore were as much in favour of legislative prohibition as Hindus, and I was glad to be assured by them that many Europeans, especially missionaries, were in favour of such prohibition. So far, therefore, as the question of legislation in Mysore is concerned, if the statements made to me are correct, the way is clear for legislative prohibition. But let me reiterate what I have pointed out in my letter, and what I have emphasized so often in these columns, namely, that legislative prohibition is the smallest part of any programme of cow-protection. The trend of the letters received by me, and the activity of most Cow-protection Societies, however, show, that they would be satisfied with mere legal prohibition. I wish to warn all such societies against staking their all on legislation. We have already too much of it in this law-ridden country. People seem to think that when a law is passed against any evil, it will die without any further effort. There never was a grosser self deception. Legislation is intended and is effective against an ignorant or a small evil-minded minority; but no legislation which is opposed by an intelligent and organized public opinion, or under cover of religion by a fanatical minority, can ever succeed. The more I study the question of cow-protection, the stronger the conviction grows upon me, that protection of the cow and her progeny can be attained, only if there is continuous and sustained constructive effort along the lines suggested by me. There may be, probably there is, room for supplementing or amending the constructive programme sketched by me. But there is no room for doubting the absolute necessity of a vast constructive programme if India’s cattle are to be saved from destruction. And the preservation of cattle really means also a step towards the preservation of the starving millions of India’s men and women who have also been reduced to the condition of her cattle. The Indian States undoubtedly can in this as in many such matters give the lead to the rest of India. And among the States, probably, there is none better fitted, or better able, to make the right beginning than Mysore. It has, from all accounts received by me, a popular prince, an enlightened public opinion, no Hindu-Mussalman question, and a sympathetic Dewan. Mysore has also the Imperial Institute of Dairying and Animal Husbandry, and Mr. William Smith, the Imperial Dairy Expert, is himself stationed at Bangalore. The State has, therefore, all the materials necessary for evolving a constructive policy. Add to this the fact that Nature has endowed Mysore with a glorious climate. The title a Hindu king dearly cherishes is that of defender of the cow and the Brahmin. The cow means not merely the animal, the giver of milk and innumerable other things to India, but it means also the helpless, the downtrodden and the poor. Brahmin means the representative of divine knowledge and experience. But today, alas! Hindu princes are powerless, and in many cases even indifferent, if not unwilling, to ensure this full protection. Unless the States and the people co-operate with one another to control and regulate the breeding of cattle, the production of milk supply, and the disposal of dead cattle, for the benefit of the people as a whole, the cattle of India will be bred but to die an unnatural death at the hands of the butcher, notwithstanding all the legislation that may be passed against cow-slaughter. The ignorance of Nature’s Law will be accepted as no excuse when men and women of India appear before the Throne of Judgment.

I was shocked to learn from the members of the Cow-protection Society that beef slaughtered in Bangalore and in Mysore was given to the animals in the State gardens, that beef was much cheaper than any other meat, and that the Adi Karnatakas, who claimed to be and were recognized as Hindus, and who knew the Ramayana and the Mahabharata as well as any other Hindu, were addicted to beef-eating. If all this is true, the better-placed Hindus are clearly to blame for such a state of things. If the Adi Karnatakas do not respect the sanctity of the cow, it is because they know no better. But what is to be said of the Hindus who have so criminally neglected their brethren as to omit to acquaint them with a fundamental truth of Hinduism?

Young India, 7-7-1927

179. WHAT IS A POLITICAL ASSOCIATION?

I read the following in The Hindu of the 25th June last:

Under Rule 23 (1) of Government Servants’ Conduct Rules, Government have, I understand, prohibited Government servants from subscribing to the Khadi Fund, which is in aid of the All-India Spinners’ Association. The reasons for this prohibition are stated to be, (1) that it is an association, established with the consent of the All-India Congress Committee, as an integral part of the Congress organization, (2) that it declares itself prepared to receive and acknowledge yarn subscriptions for membership of the Congress and (3) that therefore it must be regarded as a political association.
If the information supplied by the special correspondent of The Hindu is correct, the ruling of the Madras Government appears to me to be a case of perverted judgement, and a gross interference with the private liberty of its servants. If it is intended merely as an attack upon khadi or the All-India Spinners’ Association, I have no doubt that both will survive the shock. And if it is an invitation to the All-India Spinners’ Association to sever its connection with the Congress, I should be extremely sorry if I discovered that the Association had done anything to deserve such an invitation. The Association is proud of its being an integral part of the Congress organization, and it will deem it an honour and a privilege to work under the Congress banner, so long as that venerable national institution regards it as worthy of its patronage. But if by merely owning the parentage and patronage of the Congress an institution becomes a political association, the interpretation would involve most awkward consequences, which I hope no self-respecting Government servant will tolerate.

There are many schools for suppressed class children run in several provinces under the Congress aegis, and with Congress funds, to which Government servants also have been known to contribute without any secrecy. Was it wrong for them to do so? And are schools for ‘untouchables’ political bodies, because they are run with Congress funds and by Congressmen? Provincial Congress Committees have been known to open famine relief funds, and invite subscriptions to which Government servants have subscribed. Was it a breach of Government Servants’ Conduct Rules? These relief committees were and the suppressed class committees are integral parts of the Congress organization. Are they, therefore, political associations? The Congress may open hospitals as an integral part of the Congress organization and its activity. Will the hospitals therefore become political associations? Khadi is at the present moment an integral part of the Congress franchise. Is it a crime therefore for Government servants to wear it? Is it not possible for the Congress to have its political, its social, its moral, its economic, medical, sociological and such other departments, all integral parts of that organization, and yet wholly self-governing and wholly independent each of the others? Every Congressman regrets that the Congress, although among all the national bodies it is the most influential and the most important, is not yet able to command men and money enough to organize every department of national life. But as time goes on, and as it is able to draw to it men of the right stamp, as well as money, it will certainly touch every part of our national life. It would be ridiculous then to say that all its non-political activities became tainted with politics, and were therefore taboo to the Government servants. And if the Government dared to issue such a boycott, it would prove to be its own death warrant.

I am painfully conscious of the fact that the Congress is a long way off from attaining that height. But when it does, the Government, will be absorbed by it, and there will be nobody to resent, resist, or interfere with the Congress influence. That the Government has been able—assuming that the information given in The Hindu is correct—to regard the All-India Spinners’ Association as a political association, shows that the Congress influence is at a discount at the present moment, that the public voice is ineffective, and that therefore it is open for the Government to issue any ruling, no matter how insulting or how ridiculous it may be. I can only hope that there will be Government servants courageous enough to disregard this monstrous ruling and openly help the Spinners’ Association which in spite of the Government order, I submit, is entirely a non-political body, and was in so many words intended by the Congress to be and to remain, for the reasons stated in the resolution which brought the Association into being. Here are the words of the resolution which is part of the constitution of the All-India Spinners’ Association:

> Whereas the time has arrived for the establishment of an expert organization for the development of hand-spinning and khaddar, and whereas experience has shown that such development is not possible without a permanent organization, unaffected and uncontrolled by politics, by political changes or political bodies, an organization called the All-India Spinners’ Association is hereby established with the consent of the All-India Congress Committee, as an integral part of the Congress organization, but with independent existence and powers.

Two things stand out unequivocal and emphatic in this preamble, namely, that it is unaffected and uncontrolled by politics, political changes, or political bodies, and that it has an independent existence and powers. How such an association could be called a political association, simply because it is an integral part of the Congress, and also because like a bank it has accepted the agency of the Congress for the collection of yarn subscription, passes comprehension. But acts of governments are often incomprehensible. It would have been more honest, if the reported action of the Madras
Government had taken the form of a straight order to its servants to have nothing to do with the All-India Spinners’s Association on the simple and intelligible ground, that it does not like the penetration of the charkha into the villages and the consequent progress of khadi and all that it means.

Young India, 7-7-1927

180. WORK BEFORE PINJRAPOLES

Sjt. Y. M. Parnerkar, whose services have been engaged on behalf of the All-India Cow-protection Association, has sent me notes of his impressions gathered from his visit to Kathiawar where he went in search of good cows. In the hope that his plea for the expansion of pinjrapoles into model dairies and cattle-breeding farms on a moderate scale and under skilled management will not fall upon deaf ears, I condense them below.

One thing that strikes most a lover of cattle when he visits Kathiawar, the home of the well-known Gir animals, is the enormous number of charitable institutions, run as retiring places for desabled cattle, chiefly cows. They are known as pinjrapoles. When they were first started there was not the deep poverty that faces us today. It was then a matter of little importance, whether they were economically managed or not. But today the condition is altered. No such institution can now hope for long to stand well, unless it is put on a sound financial basis. The longevity of pinjrapoles could only be guaranteed if they became self-supporting. It was found that nearly eight lakhs of rupees per year were spent as recurring expenses only in Kathiawar on these institutions. Yet it is difficult, if not impossible, to secure even a few good cows in home for the best milk-producing cow in all India. This tract, once overflowing with milk, produces now hardly any pure and hygienic cow’s milk. The once warlike race of Kathis is now deteriorating for want of proper nourishment, notwithstanding plentiful grazing facilities for cattle-breeding. Bullocks for agricultural labour are imported by the cultivators from outside. The buffalo is overpowering the cow in the production of milk and ghee, and so driving her off the stage. Time has come for the best brains of the country to take up this very important problem.

There can be no two opinions on the point that the duty of the gosevak does not end with merely saving the cow from the butcher’s knife, but he has to stop the deterioration and try to raise the standard of milk production. It could be said that the surest way of saving the cow from going to the slaughter-house is to make it so expensive that the butcher cannot afford to purchase it. This could only be done, when the cow finds a good place among the paying heads in a dairyman’s or a cattle-breeder’s ledger. The productive power of an average Indian cow has gone down so low that it is difficult for a business man to take up the work. The problem has therefore to be handled on a religious or national basis.

The work can be accomplished by the existing pinjrapoles. They have capital, buildings, and above all, public sympathy. What is needed is good management and enterprise. When a pinjrapole maintains about 100 or 200 retired cattle, it can add a few good cows that will support themselves and leave a margin for the other heads. If the cows are well kept, regularly bred to good bulls, and the calves well cared for, during a short period these should become places where the dairyman can purchase his foundation stock, the agriculturist may get his draft cattle, the fancy cattle-keeper the use of a good bull, the needy man his sick animals well treated, the ignorant cow-owner guidance in the best way of maintaining his live-stock, and what is more important, all from the child in the cradle to the old man on the deathbed may get pure milk and its nourishing products at moderate rate.

Young India, 7-7-1927

181. AGES-OLD PROBLEM

A sannyasi from Almora writes as follows:

In replying to a correspondent, you have said in Young India of 14th April last that, even if you were attacked by a snake, you would not wish to kill it. In my opinion, this would be improper; for in the first place, you would be thereby killing yourself, and secondly, by letting such a venomous reptile free, you would be instrumental in causing injury to others. Take another instance. If the owner of a house, in which a snake has entered, removed the snake without killing it from his house, it is sure to enter some other house and injure its inmates. Surely, the responsibility for the injury, it may fatal, to the inmates of the other house, done by the snake that was let off, will be on the head of him who has under a false notion of pity let the snake off. There are many other reptiles, beasts and insects who injure human beings or spread disease. Surely, if the destruction of this life be considered himsa, then it is infinitely less than the destruction wrought by these creatures. Let it be granted that when a man kills for his own sake, it is himsa; but it cannot be when destruction is resorted to for the sake of saving many other precious lives. After all, the quality of an act is determined by the motive prompting it, and when the motive for destruction is the higher good, such destruction becomes a duty and ceases to be himsa. I would like you to answer this argument in the pages of Young India.

The Sannyasi’s argument is ages old. There is no doubt that there is very considerable force in it. Had it not been so, destruction would not have gone on as it has from ancient times. Few men are wantonly wicked. The most heinous and the most cruel crimes of which history has record have been committed under cover of religion or equally other noble motive. But in my opinion, we are no better off for the destruction that has gone on even under the highest sanction, that is, or religion. No doubt destruction in some form or other of some life is inevitable. Life lived upon life. Hence only is the highest bliss attainable ascribed by seers to a state, in which life is possible without the necessity of a perishable case, for whose sustenance destruction becomes at all necessary. And it is possible for man whilst in the body to hope to attain that state, only if he confines himself to the least possible destruction, such as is caused in his taking of vegetable life. The freer he is, consciously and deliberately, from the necessity of living upon the destruction of other life, the nearer he is to Truth and God. That all mankind is not likely to accept what may appear to be an unattractive existence does not affect the validity of my argument. Men, who lead this life of utter selflessness and of pity for the meanest creature that lives, enable us to understand the power of God, and serve as leaven to lift up humanity, and light its path towards its goal. We have no right to destroy life that we cannot create. It seems to me to be atheistical to think that God has created some life only to be destroyed by man, either for his pleasure or for sustaining a body, which he knows, is after all doomed to death any moment. We do not know what part the many so-called noxious creatures play in the economy of Nature. We shall never know the laws of Nature by destruction. We have records of men, whose love has travelled beyond their kind, living in perfect safety even in the midst of ferocious beasts. There seems to be so much affinity between all life, that tigers, lions and snakes have refrained from harming men, who have shed all fear of them and will approach them as friends.

The argument that if I do not destroy a snake known to be venomous, he will cause the death of many men and women is deceptive. It is no part of my duty to set about seeking out all the venomous creatures and destroying them. Nor need I take it for granted, that if I do not destroy a snake I encounter, it is bound to bite the next passer-by. I must not be the judge between the snake and my neighbours. I have sufficiently discharged my duty to my neighbours if I do unto them as I would that they should do unto me, and if I do not expose them to any greater risk than I do myself, and if I do not better my own condition in any way whatsoever at their expense. I may not therefore leave the snake in my neighbour’s compound as is very often done. The utmost I can do is to leave the reptile as much out of harm’s way as possible, and warn my neighbours about its appearance in the neighbourhood and its disposal by me. I am aware that this is no comfort for my neighbours, nor any protection, but we are living in the midst of death, trying to grope our way to Truth. Perhaps it is as well that we are beset with danger at every point in our life; for, in spite of our knowledge of the danger and of our precarious existence, our indifference to the Source of all life is excelled only by our amazing arrogance.

I am not satisfied with the answer given to the sannyasi. His letter, which is written in Hindi, shows that my correspondent is himself a fellow seeker after Truth. Hence only have I felt the call to answer his query in public. My own position is pitiable. My intellect rebels against the destruction of any life in any shape whatsoever. But my heart is not strong enough to befriend those creatures which experience has shown are destructive. The language of convincing confidence, which comes form actual experience, fails me, and it will continue to be so, so long as I am cowardly enough to fear snakes, tigers and the like. I have entered upon the reply with the greatest diffidence. But I felt that it would be wrong not to declare my belief for fear of losing caste and being regarded as a dangerous animal myself. I was once so regarded by friends in South Africa. We were all sitting at a table, and discussion turned upon the very topic I have here discussed. They were English missionary friends. They did not mind my views about transmigration, cow-protection, vegetarianism, though they all appeared to be very crude to them. But they could not help betraying their disgust, which was written in their faces, when I said that I would not, if God gave me the courage, kill a snake, 1 even if I knew that not to kill would be certain death for me. Disgust was hidden by the suppressed laughter which accompanied, “O! You are a dangerous man then!”

Young India, 7-7-1927

182. LETTER TO B. F. BHARUCHA

[After July 7, 1927] 2

I have your letters. I shall now reply to them as far as I can; but for a completely satisfactory reply you must run down here, as you usually do. Take it that the replies I give are for your benefit only. If, however, you wire me asking for my permission to publish my replies, I am not going to decline it; just the same I should like to say that you have committed a blunder in publishing any last letter 3. I had not written either to disturb the satyagrahis or to check them, but merely for information and as a warning to you. When you solicited my permission, I thought you approved the substance of my letter and that you intended to stop the struggle and therefore you wanted to make use of my letter. Instead, you did just the opposite. If you had not understood my reply or if you did not approve of it there was absolutely no need to communicate it to the satyagrahis. I cannot understand how and why a rift was created among them. But it is no use crying over spilt milk.

Now that’s all over. But I must say this: It is your duty and of other friends who regard the Nagpur struggle as a satyagraha to continue it. If you must have the sanction of the Congress, you must strongly refute my views and obtain its sanction. And know that I am not going to take it amiss if you do so. And if you obtain the sanction of the Congress I shall not be sorry; instead, I shall congratulate you. But let me strike a note of caution that before you do anything, make sure that you have correctly understood my views. The answers to your other questions are as follows:

1. It was not my duty to offer unsolicited criticism of the Nagpur satyagraha.

1 Vide also “Satyagraha in South Africa”, 22-11-1925.
2 The source has this letter after the entries for July 7, 1927.
3 Vide “Letter to B. F. Bharucha”, before 2-7-1927.
2. I did not think it proper to say anything beyond refuting what Awari had written about my approval.

3. I do not understand on what matter I should have consulted Bhai Awari.

4. How do you hold me responsible for the resolutions that came up in the All-India Congress Committee? I had nothing to do with them. I do happen to be a member of the Working Committee, but my condition is that my presence should not be expected in any committee. If you ask me why I should agree to be on the Committee when I attend none of its meetings I must admit I have no defence or if I have any the President would be able to put it forward.

5. Now you will know that I had no hand in appointing Vallabhbhai; in fact the latter had told me that he had no idea of it. He could not disregard the Committee’s insistence. Do you not yourself claim as much as Vallabhbhai does to understand my principles? But if I am to decide whose claim is stronger I can do so only at the time of my death, because how can I tell right today to what extent Vallabhbhai or you will be able to follow my ideas at some critical moment? But assuming that I myself were present at the Committee [meeting] and were against [the use of] arms, I would nevertheless find no inconsistency if I went to Nagpur at the Committee’s insistence. I would go, explain my ideas and after having known the facts, make a report. If someone can convince me that resorting to arms can come within the scope of satyagraha should I not let him do so? How can one pronounce judgment without knowing the facts? Then if you would ask me why I wrote that letter to you, let me tell you that it is a common practice for friends to exchange ideas, that it is only rational to be willing to modify one’s own ideas in the process, if possible. For instance today I do believe that God exists but I do not refuse to listen to the agnostics.

7. Won’t you now agree that the answer to your seventh question is included in my answer to your sixth? If you do not, then let me know to that I shall find time and answer it again.

8. I think this too is covered by my answers to the earlier questions.

9. When you say that the calm atmosphere necessary for satyagraha is not there, you make an observation applying to the

1 Manchersha Awari
2 Answer to Question 6 is missing.
But there are a number of other conditions for satyagraha and when I talked of the general atmosphere in the country, you sought to limit your view to the local atmosphere. Here again you misunderstand my article.

10. If I tell the Congress President who has proffered help that a certain satyagraha is no satyagraha, although you are associated with it, what is there to be embarrassed about? Certainly you are no stranger to the well-known dictum: “There are as many ideas as there are heads.”

11. I have a number of other ideas which the Congress President, Patel, Bharucha, Mahadev and Ba do not know and even I myself do not know. Do not therefore be unhappy when you come across some of my hitherto unknown ideas. And whatever regrets I felt on account of your support, I withdraw so that I may relieve you of yours.

12. I do want swaraj.

13. There is absolute need of self-protection.

14. For that my weapon is satyagraha. Because I realized the futility of weapons fashioned out of such gross material as wood, iron, electricity, etc., I invented the invisible substance of satyagraha and sought refuge in it. But that does not mean that everyone should have recourse to the same invisible weapon. Others may well obtain swaraj and defend it with arms.

In my scheme of swaraj there is a place for such weapons too, but it is of no use to me, as it cannot go with satyagraha.15. I think the answer to this question is covered by my answer to the fourteenth question.

16. The answer to this question too is practically covered by my answer to the fourteenth but, for the sake of clarity, I would say that those who do not understand satyagraha or in spite of their understanding it cannot digest it, will definitely take up material weapons and they have a right to do so. The State will have to provide training for it.

You ask to be excused for your long article. Now this is violence like the Western practice of deliberately committing an offence and then seeking to get out of it by formal apology. If you must apologize for writing a long letter, why write one at all? But you wrote it all the same and also apologized. We are at present under Western domination. Submitting to your violence, therefore, I forgive you because my satyagraha is none the worse for it. If you feel sorry you will not be excused; not only that but I shall have to launch satyagraha against you. If you can convey my message to Awari, send him word to eat, drink and be merry. His going to the jail has not pained me in the least. I regard him as a man of courage. But I also know that he is immature. There is no limit to his goodness as to his stubbornness. I put up with his lack of understanding and his haughtiness and praise his goodness, his courage and his patriotism.

1 Vide “Nagpur Satyagraha”, 19-5-1927.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

183. SPEECH TO ADI KARNATAKA BOYS, BANGALORE ¹

Before July 8, 1927

The students of the Bangalore State Hostel for Adi Karnataka Boys were brought over the other day to Kumara Park by Sjt. Shankarnarayan Rao . . . [Gandhiji was told:] “We have 145 boys now, but propose to take in more by cutting down Re. 1 monthly that is given them as pocket money. But the boys are opposed to the proposal.” . . . Gandhiji who was requested to address a few words of advice immediately laid his finger thereon and said:

I was distressed, my boys, to find that you were forgetting your simple habits, and were reluctant to part with your pocket money for the sake of your brethren. I assure you that my father gave me no pocket money, and in no other part of India boys of the middle class are treated like you. But the State does not house and feed and educate you in order that you may learn idleness and forget simplicity and self-help. You must learn to wash your own clothes, cook your own food, and do all your work yourselves. And may I tell you? As I look at you I feel as though you were all foreigners. Can you tell me why?

The best amongst the students immediately answered: “Because we are wearing foreign cloth.”

That is very good. Now there is no reason why you should not be wearing khadi, every one of you. I tell you I could give you for one-fourth the price much cleaner caps than you are wearing now. The circumstance that your superiors or your teachers do not wear khadi need not deter you. You will not drink liquor, or eat beef or carrion, because your parents or other Adi Karnatakas do so. You will on the contrary give up all these things, and insist on your Superintendent providing you with khadi clothes, telling him that in case they are dear you would gladly curtail part of your cloth rations. You must know that there in the country millions of children who do not get the education that you get, who do not get not only the pocket money you get, but not even enough food that your pocket money could buy them. I want you for their sake to wear khadi and to learn to spin. Go to the Exhibition and see what it has to teach you.

¹ From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”

Young India, 14-7-1927

184. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 8, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letters. There seems to be one missing still. Absence of further telegraphic news from you I take to mean good news.

Do stay as long as you wish and certainly till you are quite restored to health. Health must be kept.

With love,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5246. Courtesy : Mirabehn

185. SPEECH AT KHADI EXHIBITION, BANGALORE *

July 8, 1927

Distribution of prizes over, amidst an impressive silence, Mahatma spoke as follows:

FRIENDS,

Perhaps the best demonstration that you can all give of your interest in these proceedings is as soon as this function is over for you to proceed to the Exhibition Court and empty the stalls. Rajagopalachari read to you the figures of six days’ sale with some degree of pride and satisfaction. I must confess to you that when I think of your own capacity, eight thousand rupees’ purchase brings no satisfaction whatsoever to me. When in my imagination I picture to myself so many shops, cloth shops in Bangalore and when I look at the dresses that most men and women in Bangalore wear, eight thousand rupees seem to me be a mere fleabite. But khadi workers know their difficulties. They realize every moment of the progress of this movement how uphill the task is and so when compared to their experience of khadi exhibitions elsewhere, they find a little rise in the sale barometer, they derive satisfaction. Such really is the kind of satisfaction that Rajagopalachari has derived. But I felt it would be wrong on my part if I did not draw the attention of you all who are living in this beautiful land to the work that lies before you, if you will do it.

* At its closing ceremony; the Exhibition began on July 3.

Ours is not a city civilization and if there are any dreamers who think that some day or other we shall implant on our soil the city civilization of the West, being a dreamer of a type myself, I warn the dreamers against the slightest hope in our own generation and for some generations at least to come of such dreams being realized. Just think for one moment what our country is: 700,000 villages, in a vast continent, 1,900 miles long, 1,500 miles broad, and these villages even according to Western pandits handed down to us from times immemorial. America is a new continent. They have millions of acres of land lying absolutely fallow and a sparse population. There were no villages when the people from old England went to America, when Columbus went to America, not of the type you find here, and they brought into being a new civilization. It may be that it is the most perfect of its kind for that soil, but what is good for the virgin soil of America need not, cannot, in my opinion is not, good for this ancient soil, watered by its mighty rivers, protected by the highest mountain peaks, and inhabited by people, the most conservative on the face of the globe, having traditions of their own, habits and customs which cannot be eradicated on the spur of the moment. Then I say that if you think that you will import the city civilization from the West and eradicate your villages you can do so on one condition, the condition of Chengizkhan, fabled in history. I do not know what Chengizkhan did or did not do. But if history gives [the truth] about him then I know that before you can implant the civilization from America onto this soil you will require at least several hundred Chengizkhans who will mercilessly kill off the villagers, pick out the sturdiest men and women whom these Chengizkhans can bend to their iron brutal will and use the human species as if they were so many brutes and beasts, then indeed such a dream can be realized. But if you want to keep your villages intact, if you want to assimilate the best that we may learn from the West, then indeed here is work enough for you, to men and women in Bangalore and Mysore and Karnataka, the Southern Peninsula and the few who have come from the North also.

I do not know whether you have been touched as I have been by the sight of these prize-winners who do not know the distinctions between Brahmin and non-Brahmin, Hindus and Mussalmans, rich and poor. They have also one thing in common, namely, the poverty of this land and those who belong to rich families have cast in their lot with those who are the poorest in front of us. I do not know whether you take the same interest, whether you have the same knowledge that you have of racing language. If in this assembly representing the poorest of India, if in spite of these you had prize-winners from the football ground, racing ground or the cricket field, I know what some of you will feel, I know how enthusiastic you will feel. But I do not know that you understand the language of spinners and carders. I do not know whether in spite of your having gone to the Exhibition you really understand the hidden meaning of these processes. If you do, then I know that you will have the same feeling that is welling up in my breast at this moment, when I feel impelled to speak out my mind to you in spite of my weak health.

At this stage Mahatmaji was visibly moved and there were tears in his eyes. He paused for a few minutes . . .

I pray to God that He may give you strength and wisdom to understand the meaning of this Exhibition and this demonstration.

I have not many more words to say and you will forgive me if you find me breaking down in the midst of my delivery of the message to you. I am really too full of this thing and it is difficult in spite of the ability I too possess to control myself and to hide my feelings and speak to you purely the common language of reason.
But sometimes emotion and sentiments overpower me and I wish God gave me the power that I daily yearn for to open out my heart to you so that can read not the language that tongue can speak but the language that the heart can speak. May God bless you and may God bless the prize-winners and may He bless this function. I thank you all for attending.

_The Hindu, 9-7-1927_
186. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 9, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter after the wire. You must have received my usual weekly letter. I sent also a postcard to Wardha but that was merely to tell you that I had sent the main letter to Sabarmati. I am glad you decided to stay on and to get the doctor’s report. If we knew all the laws of nature or having known, had the power to obey them in thought, word and deed, we would be God Himself and not need to do anything at all. As it is, we hardly know the laws and have little power to obey them. Hence disease and all its effects. It is, therefore, enough for us to realize that every illness is but a breach of some unknown law of nature and to strive to know the laws and pray for power to obey. Heart prayer, therefore, whilst we are ill, is both work and medicine.

I went through another day’s strain yesterday and stood it extremely well, better even than last Sunday. I am in no hurry to have your Hindi letters.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5247. Courtesy: Mirabehn

187. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

July 9, 1927

MY DEAR MALKANI,

Your letter. A broken bottle may somehow be held together but can it ever regain the quality of unbreakability that might have been ascribed to it by its owner? I have not yet got over the shock of your fall. You do not know how I have sworn by you. You were among the very few of my unbreakables.

But I must bury the past. I shall try. Whether you should return to the Mahavidyalaya or not I do not know. Let Kripalani judge. The blow was so stunning that I did not think it fit to write to Kripalani or Nanabhai nor have they said anything to me.

1 Vide “Letter to N. R. Malkani”, 26-6-1927.
2 Nrisinhaprasad (Nanabhai) Kalidas Bhatt who was at the time the Kulanayak (Vice-Chancellor) of the Gujarat Vidyapith
But it is quite clear that you may not now leave the Sind show without ample notice to Thadani. Your repentance is good and proper. Nothing however need be done in haste now. Please keep yourself in touch with me. Discuss your repentance with your wife and mother-in-law. Let them too realize what the return means.

I am here for some time yet.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat : G.N. 876

188. SPEECH AT AMATEUR DRAMATIC ASSOCIATION, MYSORE

[July 9, 1927]

The week began with Gandhiji’s attendance at the special dramatic performance—“Kabir”—organized by the Amateur Dramatic Association of Pandit Taranath. . . . The whole idea was to popularize Hindi and khadi. Whilst, therefore, Gandhiji summed up his criticism in just one phrase,—“Kabir in a modernized form”,—he paid to all concerned a tribute of praise which was well deserved. He thanked them for the threefold pleasure of “having given to the self-appointed representative of Daridranarayana a purse not to be counted”, of listening in South India to “Hindi exquisitely pronounced and rendered” and of seeing the majority of actors dressed in khadi, and said:

The actors have realized the pain I feel when I do not see a single countryman of mine in khadi, be he a prince or a peasant, a lawyer, a doctor or a business man, be the person a man or woman, belonging to the highest or the lowest strata of society. I am hoping for a day when all will follow this common dharma of our motherland, and I hope that what has been acted will be translated into life by the actors and be a permanent part of them and us. I assure you that among the pleasant recollections that I shall carry with me, if God permits me to leave Karnataka alive, the memory of this evening will not be the least pleasant.

Young India, 21-7-1927

---

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 According to Mahadev Desai’s Diary
189. TWO SCALES

Writing about a girl, who had been married by her thoughtless parents while she was still a child and had never come to know her husband, and who had later become “a widow”, I had expressed the view that I would not regard her as married at all, and that, apart from the question whether she should be regarded as married or not, it was the duty of her parents to get her married again.

Reading about this view in newspapers, a gentleman has written a long letter to me in Hindi to the following effect:

The reasons which you advance to justify the remarriage of child widows will also apply to other widows. Would you, then, encourage all widows to remarry? I would urge that we should prohibit even widowers from remarrying and should not in any case permit widows to remarry.

Men have committed through the ages a great many sins with the help of arguments such as these. I have come across meat-eaters who argue that, since man is obliged to eat meat in the region of the North Pole where the land is snow-bound all through the year, it is not sinful to eat meat in this country too, despite the heat here.

We easily find arguments to justify sinful practices. Widowers will not refrain from remarrying, but under cover of the argument that they should, we are urged to withhold justice from widows. Those who have made us unfit for swaraj now tell us: “You will get swaraj when you are fit for it.” We who have suppressed and degraded the untouchables say: “Let reform themselves and then mix with us.”

Like a dishonest Vania, men keep two scales, one for buying and another for selling things with. They feel their own weaknesses, huge as hills, to be as small as mustard seed and regard the weaknesses of others, small like grains, to be as big as hills.

If men use reason, they will see that they have no right to suppress widows. Enforced widowhood is not virtue but sin. It covers up a disease which breaks out with the opportunity for contact with a man. If a grown-up woman who has become a widow does not even feel the desire to remarry, she deserves to be revered by the whole world, she is a pillar of dharma. But one who wishes to remarry and refrains from doing so out of fear of society or is restrained by law, has already remarried in thought. She deserves not reverence but compassion and should be free to remarry. In former times she was free. Following custom slavishly, so-called high-caste Hindus turned this voluntary dharma into a law and introduced coercion in dharma.

Justice required that, so long as widowers have the right to remarry, widows too should have it. Certain restrictions are necessary for the protection of society, but they should be the same for both men and women and should command the willing consent of all thinking women as of all thinking men.

We should not forget the difference between child-widows and other widows. It is the duty of parents and of society to get the former married again, but they have no such duty towards other widows. In that case, all that is necessary is to remove the present restraint enforced by custom or law. In other words, if such widows wish to remarry they should be free to do so.

The only restraint over the remarriage of grown-up widowers and widows can be that exercised by public opinion. That public opinion is now flowing in the opposite direction. Where, however, respect for dharma, discipline and self-control is widespread, very few men and women will violate them. As things are, people who respect them are exceptions rather than the rule. A rich old man of sixty feels no shame in marrying a girl of ten or twelve, the marriage being the third in his life, and society tolerates this. When on the other hand, a helpless widow of twenty wishes to remarry because she cannot observe self-control, despite her efforts, she is despised by society. This is not dharma but adharma \(^1\).

It is useless and irrelevant to point to immorality and like evils prevailing in other countries as an argument against the removal of this coercion, this adharma. Even if all widows, from child-widows to widows of sixty, were as pure as the immaculate Sita, I would say that if any of them wanted to remarry nobody had the right to stop them from doing so. Society may plead with them with love, but it has no right to restrain them by force.

If we apply to others the yardstick which we use for ourselves, the world would be freed of the threefold suffering and dharma would prevail once again.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 10-7-1927

\(^1\) The opposite of dharma
A LETTER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 10, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for sending the copies of resolutions passed at the public meeting of the Mussalmans of the Ambala city on the first instant. In your letter you have specially invited my attention to Resolution No. 5 and requested immediate action. Perhaps you are unaware that I have recently gone through a very serious illness and that I am still lying on a convalescent bed and that I am under medical orders not to undertake much activity. I read no North Indian newspapers at all. The only paper I may be said to read is The Hindu of Madras, and I cast an occasional glance at a Bombay English daily. This gives me no information about what is in the Hindu papers. I have seen in these papers no offensive reference to the Prophet or Islam or the Muslims. If you have Press cuttings containing the references complained of in Resolution No. 5, I would thank you to send them if only as a loan if necessary. I shall undertake to study them and return them after perusal. I will certainly give my opinion upon them. So far as the judgment in the Rangila Rasul case is concerned, you will permit me to say that the whole of the agitation in respect of it is unfortunate and unjustified. I do not seek to justify the judgment but all that is said against Justice Dilip Singh is in my opinion highly improper. If he has misread the law, as he well might have, the remedy is not a condemnation of the Judge as a man but the true remedy is to appeal against the judgment or if the law itself is defective to agitate for its amendment.

I am no defender of the author of Rangila Rasul. It may be a new thing to you. I had the opportunity of reading that pamphlet some years ago, and I commented upon it very severely in the columns of Young India. Probably you do not know this fact. You may not also know that the author of Rangila Rasul is not the only misguided mischief-maker. I have seen Muslim writings just as offensive as Rangila Rasul. So far as I am aware there is nothing to choose between this class of writers, whether Hindu or Mussalman, and both are equally worthy of condemnation. But the remedy against this

1 Vide “Letter to M. Abdul Gani”, 11-8-1927.
2 An Urdu pamphlet
3 Vide “Notes”, 10-7-1924 and “Notes”, 10-7-1924. evil, so far as I am concerned, is not through a court of law, certainly not through violence, but through cultivation of healthy Hindu-Muslim opinion which will make the publication of sheets inflaming religious passions against one another an impossibility. But I am aware that my views are just now out of fashion. I, therefore, hold my silence so far as it is possible to do so. I could not ignore your letter, and delicate though my health is, I felt that I should send you a fairly full reply which I have done as lover of, and believer in, Hindu-Muslim unity and as your friend and brother if it is possible for you so to regard me. I have not written this letter for publication but it is written for you to share it with those who may wish to know my opinion and who desire to promote Hindu-Muslim unity. I have no desire to be drawn into a newspaper controversy or even into a profitless discussion by correspondence. If my letter makes no appeal to your reason I would urge you to dismiss it from your mind and throw it into the waste paper basket. For your information I may tell you that I am no longer a Bar-at-Law. I am a poor scavenger and spinner.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 12384

191. LETTER TO J. B. KRIPALANI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 10, 1927

MY DEAR PROFESSOR,

I sent you a telegram yesterday in reply to your letter to Mahadev. I have purposely refrained hitherto from writing to you anything about Malkani. He wrote to me announcing his resignation.1
It very nearly broke me to pieces. For, I regarded Malkani to be one of my unbreakables.2 What would happen to the Vidyapith did not affect me but that a man had fallen shook me to the marrow. It is good that he has repented but you will be entirely justified in not taking him back. For his part, it would be another wrong if he felt Thadani as unceremoniously as he left us. His wanting to be taken back, therefore, after three months or earlier if Thadani can spare him appears to me quite justified. That if he is truly repentant he must not remain at the Sind College permanently, I have no doubt. Nor must he feel hurt if he cannot be accepted by you. You will, therefore, come to a decision upon his solely from the point of view of the Mahavidyalaya. And if you think that the other professors would rather not have him I would not press for his reinstatement. It would embarrass him and it would put out the dissenting professors. If you therefore decide to have him, there should be a wholehearted unanimity.

1 Vide “Letter to N. R. Malkani”, 26-6-1927.

Yes. I have been getting some information about the new Vinayamandir. I was delighted to find so good an attendance. I did not expect that response. I hope that it would be a progressive success and that those who are responsible for its creation would never desert it, whether it continues to draw a large number of students or whether it declines.

I wish you would have a radical operation for piles if Dr. Dalal is now ready.

Kikibehn continues to favour me with a little letter from time to time. You are not to expect me there before October as far as I can judge at present.

Yours sincerely,

ACHARYA KRIPALANI
GUJARAT VIDYAPITH

From a photostat : S.N. 12603
192. SPEECH AT ALL-KARNATAKA HINDI CONFERENCE,
BANGALORE

July 10, 1927

The All-Karnataka Hindi Sammelan held its session this afternoon at the Majestic Theatre before a vast concourse of people. At about 3 p.m. Mahatmaji arrived and conducted the proceedings of the day. He then distributed the diplomas to the successful candidates at the last Hindi examination, one of whom was a lady who had obtained a I Class. After distribution of prizes Mahatmaji, before speaking in Hindi, wanted to know how many would like the speech to be in English. The audience to a man raised their hands and Mahatmaji smiling next asked them by the same means to signify whether they wanted Kanarese translation to which also there was assent even from the ladies’ gallery. He then spoke in Hindi and his speech was translated to the audience by Mr. Gangadharrao Deshpande. After dealing with the usefulness of the movement, Mahatmaji [said:]

India is divided into two parts today, and the portion north of the Vindhya has no heart relations with the southern portions. It is the duty of the South to learn the language of the North which is far larger. When I find it easy to travel from Sind to Bengal with the little bit of my knowledge of Hindi, it is impossible in these parts to get along without English. Unless you learn Hindi, you will not break through the Vindhya that stands between the South and the North. I do not want you to ignore your vernaculars—you may be as proud of them as I am of mine—but if we would be Indians and not merely Gujaratis, Bengalis, Tamilians or Karnatakas, we ought to learn Hindi. It is not difficult to learn. Those who have learnt it have not taken more than six months studying two hours a week. I appeal to you to devote that brief period to the service of the motherland.

Different from the question of a lingua franca is that of a common script. Whereas knowledge of Hindi enables you to come in contact with people of the North and send out your hearts to them, adoption on your part of Devanagari as the script for your vernaculars enables the people in the North to come in close contact with you.

Now is the question of funds. I am glad that South India has begun to contribute towards the expenses of the Prachar. But a yearly

---

1 This was the first All-Karnataka Hindi Conference. It began on July 9 and ended on July 10. Gandhiji attended this Conference on the last day.

2 This paragraph has been taken from The Hindu, 12-7-1927.
expenditure of Rs. 10,000 is necessary for the work, and I appeal to you to find that amount from South India.

Young India, 21-7-1927

193. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[July 10, 1927]

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. You will follow the doctor’s directions accurately. There need be no hurry about Wardha. You can do your Hindi just as well there. No Wardha until you feel quite free and secure. Dr. Harilal Desai is quite a sound man and very careful.

Do not strain yourself to write to me in Hindi. By all means do, whenever you feel like it. You will use the mosquito net without any hesitation. Do not be in a hurry to move about quickly.

I had another meeting today, this time for Hindi. I stood it quite well.

With love,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5245. Courtesy : Mirabehn

194. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 11, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

No letter from you today but there is your welcome telegram which is more than a letter because it gives me news today. What an important part regularity of bowels plays in one’s system? It is clear too that frequent fasting for purely health reasons is a desirable thing. But I do not need to emphasize the point with you.

My address up to 16th August is Bangalore. I shall be going out now and again for a day or two. But Bangalore is to be headquarters till the 16th August.

With love,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5248. Courtesy : Mirabehn

1 From the reference in the last paragraph to Hindi conference, vide the preceding item.
195. LETTER TO GOPALRAO

Silence Day, July 11, 1927

Your letter. You will, of course, have to consider what Kakasaheb says.

You want to enjoy the full bliss of brahmacharya immediately but this cannot be done. If you are content with forgoing marriage then do not marry. If not, make arrangements for getting married. You are no stranger to the difference between contentment and bliss.

The idea of merging into each other if you find an ideal wife is itself a great illusion. Many have been deluded by it and it will be no wonder if you too are lost. If you will escape it till the end, that would be a matter for wonder.

Having seen us all married people, if you are convinced that it is not worth while following suit—and convinced you ought to be—give up for the present the desire to taste the joy of brahmacharya and ponder over the joylessness of marriage, if you have observed it. Continue to think on this line—‘God alone knows what bliss there is to be enjoyed in brahmacharya, but because there is no joy in marriage, I am not going to marry at all.’

Here is an argument on a lower level:

‘I would not say I don’t want to marry. Indeed, under certain circumstances I may marry. But today my country is in bondage; plight of the women is miserable. As I am engaged in this work, how can I marry? I must take this vow that until we attain the swaraj of my conception, I shall not marry even if Rambha’ were to solicit me.’ Try to think in this way if you can. Formulate your definition of swaraj. I suggest a simple one: ‘The day when the spinning-wheel spreads throughout India and there is complete boycott of foreign cloth.’ If you find this hard to work upon, write out one you like and vow not to marry until that is attained and put up a copy in your room where everyone can see it. Send one to Kakasaheb and one to me.

If you can do neither try this thought. ‘I do have a desire to marry and it cannot be suppressed. But I will not marry a girl of my caste as I would not marry my own sister. I will insist on breaking the barriers of caste. The girl must know Sanskrit, Marathi, Hindi and Gujarati; she should not hanker after money; if her parents are alive

---

1 A celestial nymph
we must have their consent. She must have absolute love of khadi; she must appreciate and have faith in my other ideals and love the untouchables, be strong of body and prepared to live in some remote village and be willing to honour the well-known discipline of brahmacharya in marriage.’ If you cannot do even this, know that you will not be able to observe brahmacharya and therefore marry at the first opportunity. If you resolve to observe the above discipline, write down the vow and proceed as before.

But then what I have suggested to you is only the way of worshipping a Deity conceived with form and attributes. Observance of brahmacharya for the sake of attaining inviolate brahmacharya is like worshipping One without attributes. It is difficult for all of us.

I have pointed out to you the path that I myself took. I have just been tasting a droplet of the subtle bliss of brahmacharya from out of its physical advantages. My intellect has none the less realized its bliss but you should know all the same that I have not actually experienced it.

If anyone can truly describe what that bliss is, Vinoba, Surendranath and others, who, I believe, observe inviolate brahmacharya, may perhaps be able to. I could give you only a partial account of the [bliss of] brahmacharya which knows what sense-pleasures and marriage mean. Only the perfect can give a perfect account.

It is possible that you will not be satisfied by this too. If you would not find here the answer to your question you will now understand why it is so. Neither Kakasaheb nor I, in fact no one who has known married life, is competent to answer your question from personal experience. For these same reasons we, being embodied, are able to describe only partially the joy of moksha. Since there is no speech without a body, moksha is and will ever remain indescribable. Likewise, only an inviolate brahmachari can describe the path of pure brahmacharya or we should plod on in life, keeping in view the descriptions given by the Shastras.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai
196. LETTER TO NAJUKLAL N. CHOKSI

BANGALORE,
Monday, July 11, 1927

BHAISHRI NAJUKLAL,

I got your postcard. God provides man with a means to learn from his fall. You two have it through the birth of a son, but Moti, if she wills, can so use it as to fulfil the true end of her life. You are, moreover, a teacher by vocation. I shall wait and see how you bring up the child born to you. Let Moti read this.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Preserve this postcard.
From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12141

197. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 12, 1927

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

In the abstract, there can be no doubt that you have a right to wear whatever you like and to see or be seen by any friends you like. But when it comes to reducing an abstract right to concrete practice, innumerable things present themselves for consideration. And my advice is that in everything you do, you should possess confidence enough to bear down all opposition and to be able to convince everybody around you of the justice of your action. Do you reason with mother with the same frankness that you show in your letters to me? But let me give a concrete suggestion. Do you permit me to discuss your letter with both father and mother? Can I send them your last letter? I destroy all your letters after replying. The last one I am preserving till I receive your answer. From what I know of them and the manner in which they have brought up their children, it seems to me that they are most considerate, liberal-minded parents and will not interfere with the independence of their grown-up children. Your recent letters have therefore been a surprise to me. I therefore say nothing further just now and await your reply.

Meanwhile I ask you not to worry about things over which you may have no control. If you cannot have your way about your dress or choice of friends or dealings with them, know that there are many in the same condition in which you are, and that there is no person on this earth who has really got the liberty to do what he or she likes. Some restraint on liberty is demoralizing and some is uplifting. No restraint is demoralizing which one submits to, not out of fear, selfishness or the like, but out of consideration for, or affection for others. I cannot conceive your yielding to fear under any circumstance whatsoever.

I heard some very fine music yesterday. It went on for full one hour whilst I was spinning. I thought of your voice the whole of that time, and fine as both were yesterday, I observed that yours was in no way inferior, and to me, it even appeared to be superior. But that may be due to my partiality for you. Anyway you have a voice that would certainly sing away others’ cares. Invoke it for dispelling your own.

With love,

BAPU

MISS RAIHANA TYABJI
SOUTHWOOD
MUSSOORIE
U.P.

From a photostat: S.N. 9604

198. LETTER TO J. W. PETAVEL

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 12, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have carefully gone through the nine sides of your bank-note-size paper and I am not only none the wiser for it, but it has made confusion worse confounded. I do not yet know what Belgium and Switzerland are doing. I never told you\(^1\) that the two colonies that I established in South Africa have failed. On the contrary, they succeeded as far as they went. I simply gave you the information in order to tell you that because those colonies succeeded to an extent, I could not draw the large deductions that you did from your untried

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to J. W. Petavel”, 23-6-1927.
For the Ashram, you have told me nothing new. And when you tell me that I must present something that will give in an hour what I promise in eight hours, we come to a standstill. I know no scheme that will give 300 millions of people two annas per hour. I have worked out your scheme to the best of my ability and it has failed me. Nor am I in a position to agree with you that it is possible to make something out of the modern craze for accumulation of wealth and destroying time and distance. Where, therefore, you see meeting ground, I see absolutely none. Both your non-co-operation scheme and co-operation scheme appear to me to be unworkable and unintelligible. I cannot therefore give you room in the pages of Young India.

The certificates that you have secured from Sir Ashutosh and others make no impression upon me because I have always fought shy of certificates so much so that I destroyed what I used to hold myself. And as I feel that I have got the ability of testing schemes on their own merits, certificates are to me sometimes a hindrance and every time a superfluity.

Before you can draw me to your scheme, two things are necessary. Show we something actually at work, and show me that it is capable of indefinite multiplication and yet producing the same results as I am doing for mine. I am showing my scheme at work in 1,500 villages and I can only wish that it was multiplied so as to reach 700 thousand and still the result will be constant. I want you to bear in mind that in corresponding with me you are corresponding with a practical man who has a horror of chimeras and who will not be dazzled by specious-looking things written or printed on paper.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 14181
199. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN
Silence Day, Ashadh Sud 13 [July 12, 1927]¹

SISTERS,

Received your letter.

Manibehn will tell you how many women took part in Exhibition, and what they did. Here it is enough to say that one of them was expert in keeping accounts while some others were equally expert in selling khaddar. They have received silver and gold medals. A blind woman spun exceedingly well at the Exhibition. She was the centre of attraction for all. One of the women was first in spinning fine, strong yarn and won a gold medal. Manibehn upheld the good name of the Ashram. Her carding drew the attention of all.

There was Hindi Sammelan here. Here also one of the women was first. Some of the women here are making very good efforts to learn Hindi.

All this awakening is proceeding beautifully in this State. I have already written to you how some of the women here sing sweet bhajans at evening prayers too. On Saturday one of them played the vina for me. She herself composes the bhajans. They say she is very skillful in playing the vina.

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3657

200. SPEECH TO MYSORE STUDENTS, BANGALORE
[July 12, 1927]²

FRIENDS,

I thank God for being able to speak to you though in a low tone and for enabling me to speak to you in Hindi. You know perhaps that I speak with my friends in Hindi and in own mother tongue Gujarati. I know however that in your schools and colleges and when you meet your friends and students you talk only in English. You have cultivated it as a habit and to me it appears it is a bad habit. I do not object to your learning English for the sake of acquiring knowledge or for the sake of earning your livelihood but I object to your giving so much importance to English and giving a low place to your national language, Hindi. I do not think it is right on your part to use in your conversation with your friends and relatives any other language than your national language or your mother tongue. Have love for your own language.

¹ The year is inferred from the reference to the Khadi Exhibition and the Hindi Sammelan held at Bangalore.
² From Young India, 21-7-1927 and The Bombay Chronicle, 13-7-1927

I have to make request to my student friends. In the measure in which you learn English learn the national language and leave the glamour of the foreign tongue. I am grateful to you for this address presented to me in Hindi printed in Devanagari script. In order to serve our Daridranarayana in our land you have given me a purse and I am grateful to you all. You have all, in your love, collected so much for me but it is no wonder. Wherever I go I meet such sincere love and service from you students of India. That is your dharma, that is your duty. I ask why would you not help this fund? How much are you spending for your education and how many cities are there in the whole of Hindustan and how much money is being thrown away there? But do you know where those who live in cities get their money from? It is from the villages where there is only sorrow and where Daridranarayana lives. The money that you all spend for your education is all coming to you from your villages and you are being educated out of this sorrowful source. Twenty five crores of rupees are going for the evils of the country as drink and can you who live in the cities, can you not give two pies for your poor brothers and sisters in those villages? Let these two pies be your prayaschitta¹. Today, I see you all in foreign clothes and caps. Our sisters there are all in foreign cloth. Do not say they are made in Mysore, do not forget that the yarn is made outside your own country. Let me say this to you today. Go to the khadi depots and buy the caps for four annas or five annas and discard these costly caps and buy khadi and wear. That would be a service truly rendered.

Today we have lost the real significance of the term vidyarthi². In ancient days when all knew its meaning it stood for brahmacharis and brahmacharinis and it stood for Brahmajnanam³. It stood for

---
¹ Expiation or atonement
² Student
³ Knowledge of the Ultimate mukti', our own mukti, the mukti or liberty for the country, for the liberty of the individual. Today I ask you how many of you are true brahmacharis and brahmacharinis? Do you know anything about the controlling of the senses and training of the mind in the true path of bhakti and service? Do you know what our forefathers were doing? If you really know the duties of true brahmacharis, if you are really vidyarthis in the real sense of the term, then there would not be the suffering in our land that we now see. Our ancient rishis, pious maulvis and Christians have left us rich and precious treasures, to enjoy them and to become useful to others, whereby we must think of God every moment of our living life. We must leave off our coarse desires if we desire true mukti. I do not say that in youth you must all leave your amusements and pleasures and practise yoga, but I want that you recognize your duties, and do them as becomes real students and pupils of Brahmajnanam. The youths of today were not as the brahmacharis of old in health, they visit theatres, drink and eat wrong things and take pride in giving enjoyment to the senses. If your bodies are not strong your minds would also be affected and when your minds are affected you cannot have a knowledge of God and your duty. You cannot have the will power to control yourself, you lose your vigour and energy and you become weak and slow. I have heard that some students take coffee as many as seven or eight times a day. I want my young friends to remember I was also a student once. I ask them to answer me why they should not drink pure water or milk when they are thirsty and eat food when they are hungry? Why should they go on poisoning their bodies with all sorts of things? I hope you will see the true significance of what I say to you today. Think of the ideal of brahmacharya, ponder over it in your wisdom and act upon it with conviction. In the Bhagavad Gita emphasis is laid on sacrifice; in the Koran and in the Bible it is the same; he who does not make any sacrifice is not really a man. Think of this term sacrifice and examine it in the present state of our country. I pray to God that He will give you strength and wisdom to understand the word sacrifice and make sacrifice yourselves. I pray to God that He may give you the wisdom to think of the poor of the country in the villages far away from the cities and towns that you are building in their blood and the sacrifice

1 Freedom from phenomenal existence
2 Sages
3 Muslim scholars
of their lives, on their miseries and the miseries of their families and children. Think of God for half an hour every day, spinning the charkha and weaving your cloth. Think of all these when you are thinking of God every day for half an hour. May He give you the wisdom to know how you can save the poor of your land. This is all I have to say to you today.

_The Hindu, 13-7-1927_

201. SPEECH AT INDIAN INSTITUTE OF SCIENCE, BANGALORE

_July 12, 1927_

I was wondering where do I come in? There is no place here for a rustic like me who has to stand speechless in awe and wonderment. I am not in a mood to say much. All I can say is that all these huge laboratories and electrical apparatus you see here are due to the labour—unwilling and forced—of millions. For Tata’s thirty lakhs did not come from outside, nor does the Mysore contribution come from anywhere else but this _begar_ world. If we were to meet the villagers and to explain to them how we are utilizing their money on buildings and plants which will never benefit them, but might perhaps benefit their posterity, they will not understand it. They will turn a cold shoulder. But we never take them into our confidence, we take it as a matter of right, and forge that the rule of “no taxation without representation” applies to them too. If you will really apply it to them, and realize your responsibility to render them an account, you will see that there is another side to all these appointments. You will then find not a little but a big corner in your hearts for them, and if you will keep it in a good, nice condition, you will utilize your knowledge for the benefit of the millions on whose labour your education depends. I shall utilize the purse you have given me for _Daridranarayana_. The real _Daridranarayana_ even I have not seen, but know only through my imagination. Even the spinners who will get this money are not the real _Daridranarayana_ who live in remote corners of distant villages which have yet to be explored. I was told by your professor that the properties of some of the chemicals will take years of experiments to explore. But who will try to explore these villages? Just as some of the experiments in your laboratories go on

---

1 From _The Hindu_, 13-7-1927
2 Forced labour
for all the twenty four hours, let the big corner in your heart remain perpetually warm for the benefit of the poor millions.

I expect far more from you than from the ordinary man in the street. Don’t be satisfied with having given the little you have done, and say, ‘We have done what we could, let us now play tennis and billiards.’ I tell you, in the billiard room and on the tennis court think of the big debt that is being piled against you from day to day. But beggars cannot be choosers. I thank you for what you have given me. Think of the prayer I have made and translate it into action. Don’t be afraid of wearing the cloth the poor women make for you, don’t be afraid of your employers showing you the door if you wear khadi. I would like you to be men, and stand up before the world firm in your convictions. Let your zeal for the dumb millions be not stifled in the search for wealth. I tell you, you can devise a far greater wireless instrument, which does not require external research, but internal—and all research will be useless if it is not allied to internal research—which can link your hearts with those of the millions. Unless all the discoveries that you make have the welfare of the poor as the end in view, all your workshops will be really no better than Satan’s workshops, as Rajagopalachari said in a joke. Well I have given you enough food for thought, if you are in a reflective mood, as all research students ought to be.

In concluding, he [said that] they must keep the lamp of their love for the motherland and her children always bright, trim, and steady. And as they did that, so they deserved the knowledge and the advantage they were deriving from the Institute.¹

Young India, 21-7-1927

¹ This paragraph is from The Hindu, 13-7-1927.
202. MESSAGE TO “THE SEARCHLIGHT” ¹

July 13, 1927

Those who want a message from me must not be surprised to receive the same message again and again; for, I have nothing new. Let the editor, the proprietor and the staff of The Searchlight as also the readers do their quota of work for the millions, that is, let them wear nothing but khadi; let them exclude all foreign cloth from their use; let them give as much as they can towards khadi work; and let them spin at least for half an hour good, even and weavable yarn and make a present of it to the All-India Spinners’ Association in the name of and on behalf of Daridranarayana. To know whether this message has at least been read by those concerned, I suggest their sending me contribution and telling me whether they have accepted and are acting in accordance with the message. If they do not appreciate the message, let them send me a postcard stating their objections and reasons.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat : S.N. 14182

203. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 13, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

Just as I am about to go to a place, I received your letter and wire. So you are off on Saturday. I note what you say about Gangu. God be with you.

Love,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5249. Courtesy : Mirabehn

¹ For its anniversary number of July 15
204. LETTER TO J. Z. HODGE

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 13, 1927

DEAR MR. HODGE,

It was a delight to receive your letter¹ from Edinburgh and to find that my little friends had now become big friends and were getting on quite nicely.

When I receive the papers you refer to from Sir Daniel Hamilton, I will certainly study them with care and let him know my conclusions.

I am making fair progress. Please remember me to Mrs. Hodge.

Yours sincerely,

J. Z. HODGE, ESQ.

C/O NISBES
31, WARENDER PARK TERRACE
EDINBURGH

From a photostat : S.N. 12509

205. LETTER TO SHAPURJI SAKLATVALA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 13, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter of the 16th June last through Bharucha. I understand and appreciate the viewpoint elaborated in your letter, and it would give me much pleasure if I can do anything whatsoever to assist you in coming to a settlement with the Tatas.² But I know my limitations and I would like you to recognize them. All I can do is to work through Panditji which I am doing.

Yours sincerely,

SHAPURJI SAKLATVALA, ESQ., M.P.

HOUSE OF COMMONS
LONDON S.W. 1

From a photostat : S.N. 12532

¹ Dated June 1, 1927. Introducing Sir Daniel Hamilton, the addressee had requested Gandhiji to help him in spreading the co-operative movement in India.

² The reference is to “Saklatvala’s forced resignation of his post in the Tata firm in London”.

VOL. 39 : 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927 213
DEAR FRIEND,

I am ashamed that your letter of 30th June last year has remained undealt with by me throughout all this time. You however had acknowledgments from time to time. I am not disposed to blame my assistants in connection with the delay. Some of it was unavoidable and some could have been avoided but for the letter having been mislaid. I however understand that my reply will not yet be too late.

I should be inclined to agree with the advice received by you from an English friend and quoted at the end of your letter. If there was really no better way, there was certainly nothing wrong in your having written to me. For, part of my public work consists in sharing, where I cannot solve, difficulties such as you have mentioned. I can appreciate all you say about the good qualities of Englishmen and even add to what you have said in your letter. But in spite of the ample food I have received during the past seven years for reflection, my opinion of the system not only remains unaltered [but] has received further confirmation. And the Excise Department is among the blackest spots in the system. I could not therefore be reconciled to your being in if I can in any way help you to be out of it. Your letter attracts me to you. I would like to have you in some of the departments of national service which I am more or less controlling. And if you can get some privilege leave, I would like you to overtake me wherever I may be so that I can see you face to face and discuss all the questions you have raised in your letter. I am in Mysore up to the 15th of August and my headquarters will be Bangalore till that time. I expect to be away from time to time from Bangalore, but within the Mysore State and therefore not more than a few hours’ journey from Bangalore where the keeper of the house I am staying will direct you.

Meanwhile, I can answer one of your questions straightaway. If you have the real call from within you will be not only right but it will be your duty to resist all the pressure that can be brought to bear upon you for marriage. If you can control your carnal appetites, I

1 The addressee had written: “The failure of your movement with subsequent Hindu-Muslim tension . . . has no doubt given you sufficient food for reflection.”
have no doubt that the obligations which you feel you have towards the members of your family impose the restraint upon you.

If you intend to come and see me, please bear in mind that whilst it will be possible, all other conditions being satisfied, to find enough for the support of your family, you will have to be free to be posted wherever duty calls you and even to move about from place to place, and if you do not know Hindi, you will be expected to learn it.

Yours sincerely,

D. C. BOSE, ESQ.
55, CORNWALLIS STREET
CALCUTTA

From a photostat : S.N. 12601

207. LETTER TO S. RAMANATHAN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 13, 1927

MY DEAR RAMANATHAN,

Mr. Mahadeva Iyer of Shermadevi Gurukul is here. I never knew that you have anything to do with this Gurukul. But Mr. Mahadeva Iyer tells me that you are vitally interested in it. When V. V. S. Iyer was alive he wrote to me and spoke to me about the inter-dining controversy that was then going on. Mahadeva Iyer has briefly described to me the happenings after Iyer’s death. Will you please let me know what connection you have with this Gurukul and what is now wanted by the party which Mahadeva Iyer describes as hostile to him or to the Gurukul?

I hope you have got over your fever.

Yours sincerely,

SJIT. S. RAMANATHAN
ERODE

From a microfilm : S.N. 12930
208. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 13, 1927

DEAR MOTILALJI,

Here is a characteristic letter from “Comrade’ Saklatvala. The facsimile of the stamped letter he sends seems to make out a very strong moral claim for him. I do not need to say anything more; for I know that whatever language he uses you will press his claim for all its worth.

I have another letter from Jawaharlal. There is nothing new in it.

Yours sincerely,

PANDIT MOTILAL NEHRU

‘ANAND BHAWAN’

ALLAHABAD

From a photostat : S.N. 14183

209. LETTER TO S. RAMACHANDRAN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 13, 1927

MY DEAR RAMACHANDRAN,

The accounts I hear concerning you are not at all satisfactory. You have made it difficult for people to talk to you because you become excited and you suspect everybody. Without any permission from the Ashram, you stayed an unduly long time at Banaras and have now proferred an explanation which it is very difficult to justify unless you have received previous permission from the authorities at Banaras. In the circumstances, it seems to me to be useless to keep you any longer at the Ashram. The Ashram must do without you, and, in any case, there is not that demand for the lift¹ which would warrant your being kept at the Ashram.

Although you have parted with your patent rights, if you think that the patent can be worked to better advantage by you, I am quite prepared to advise the return of the patent to you, provided you arrange to pay the expenses incurred by the Ashram on your behalf. If you have anything to discuss with me, you are at liberty to come over to wherever I may be for the time being, but, of course, you will find your own expenses. You will not ask the Ashram people to find them.

¹ The Ramachandran animal power lift, a contrivance devised by the addressee for drawing water from wells with the help of a single male buffalo; vide “A Boon to Cultivators”, 28-10-1926.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. S. RAMCHANDRAN
LIFT WORKS
ASHRAM, SABARMATI
(B.B. & C.I.R.)

From a photostat of C.W. 11165. Courte sy: Ramdas Chaitanya

210. A LETTER

Ashadh Shukla 14 [July 13, 1927]

Tulsidas has left nothing unsaid about the greatness of His name. The Dwadasha mantra, the Ashtakshara, etc., bring peace to the victim of infatuation, and one should rely upon whatever mantra brings one peace. But for one who has never experienced peace and is in quest of it, Ramanama will certainly prove a parasmani. God has been given a thousand names which only means that he can be called by any name and that his qualities are infinite. That is why God is also beyond nomenclature and free from attributes. But for us mortals the support of His name is absolutely essential to fall back upon and in this age even the ignorant and the illiterate can have recourse to an Ekakshara mantra in the form of Ramanama. In fact, uttering Ramanama covers the Ekakshara and there is no difference between ‘Om’ and ‘Rama’. But the value of reciting His name cannot be established by reasoning, it can only be experienced if one does it with faith.

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi: S.N. 12797

1 The source places this along with the other letters belonging to 1927.
2 Om namo Bhagavate Vasudevaya
3 Om namo Narayanaya
4 Philosopher’s stone
5 Om
211. SPEECH AT MAHILA SAMAJ, BANGALORE

July 13, 1927

_Daridranarayana_ is insatiable and there is room enough in his belly for all the money and the ornaments you can give. The ornaments are your _streedhan_ and you have a right to dispose it of as you like. Your real ornaments are your virtues, and you will be doing real service to the poorest of the land by disposing of part of your jewellery.

Young India, 21-7-1927

212. INTERVIEW TO MR. AND MRS. BJERRUM

[Before July 14, 1927]

Among the new missionary friends is a Danish couple Mr. and Mrs. Bjerrum . . . Gandhiji was at his wheel when the friends came.

MR. BJERRUM : This is a new wheel different from the ones we saw at the Exhibition.

GANDHIJI : Yes, it is a travelling charkha. When you fold it, it looks like a medicine chest, and a medicine chest it is for our poor people.

After giving their pleasant impressions of the Exhibition, Mr. Bjerrum began to talk of the students of his college. “The dress of most of our students is Europeanized,” he informed Gandhiji not without some sorrow.

GANDHIJI : It is a great pity that Christianity should be mixed up with foreign dress and foreign ways of eating and drinking.

MRS. BJERRUM : It is indeed. But don’t you think a change has already begun?

GANDHIJI : Well, a change in thought is certainly coming over, but not a corresponding change in conduct.

And with this he narrated some of his experiences with the friends of the Y.M.C.A. of Calcutta.

MR. BJERRUM : May we know what form in your opinion missionary work should take if the missionaries are to stay in India?

[GANDHIJI] : Yes. They have to alter their attitude. Today they tell people that there is no salvation for them except through the

---

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 ibid.
Bible and through Christianity. It is customary to decry other religions and to offer their own as the only that can bring deliverance. That attitude should be radically changed. Let them appear before the people as they are, and try to rejoice in seeing Hindus become better Hindus and Mussalmans better Mussalmans. Let them start work at the bottom, let them enter into what is best in their life and offer nothing inconsistent with it. That will make their work far more efficacious, and what they will say and offer to the people not as patrons, but as one of them, not to oblige them but to serve them and to work among them.

MR. BJERRUM : Thank you. We are going to Denmark next year and would like to take some message from you.

[GANDHJI] : The external is always an expression of the internal, and if the people of Denmark would serve us, let them teach us their life-giving industry of co-operative dairy and cattle-breeding.

Young India, 14-7-1927

213. REFORM OF PINJRAPOLE

It has been my privilege during my convalescence at Bangalore to pay regular visits to the Imperial Animal Husbandry and Dairy Institute, and to take there, what may be called, regular lessons. Mr. William Smith, who is the Imperial Dairy Expert and Head of this Institute, and his assistants have most carefully shown me the working of the Institute and the different departments into which it is divided. I trust I shall make use of the knowledge thus gained in conducting the dairying experiment at the Satyagraha Ashram on behalf of the All-India Cow-protection Association. As a result of several discussions with Mr. Smith I asked him kindly to prepare for me notes on the working of pinjrapoles and on methods of cattle-improvement in our villages, which he very kindly and promptly undertook to do. I am already in possession of two valuable notes. I give below his note on pinjrapoles.

Some of the existing pinjrapoles with more or less permanent and assured incomes are fairly well managed, and do provide a comfortable refuge for a certain number of cattle which have to be economically useful in their old age. In many of these institutions it is however not an uncommon thing, when trade is bad and subscriptions are slow in coming in, to find cattle being kept in these places in a state of starvation which must mean great suffering to the animals and which eventually kills them. In cases like this instead of being a refuge for the animals the goshala becomes a cow-killing institution, the method of killing being a cruel death by starvation. In at least six cases have I seen the cattle in goshalas being starved to death. The first thing then to be done with the existing pinjrapoles is to see they do not under any circumstances whatever admit to their shelters a larger number of animals than they can feed properly, house comfortably and take care of until they die a really natural death.

All the larger pinjrapoles with an assured income, and which can command capital, should in my opinion be divided into three departments, the whole being managed by a trained dairy farm manager.

1. The refuge department where old and economically useless cattle excluding buffaloes should be comfortably fed and cared for until they die naturally.

2. A dairy department where all cows sent to the pinjrapole to escape slaughter and capable of breeding and all other cows capable of bearing calves and yielding milk should be fed, housed and milked as a commercial dairy herd with careful milk-recording, and the milk sold to the best advantage. The very best class of stud bulls should be used in this herd and all calves carefully reared, males not good enough for issue as stud bulls to be castrated and those considered good enough for breeding either transferred to the stud department or issued to villages as breeding bulls. All female stock to be reared as milkers and breeders. When the home-bred progeny of this department gets too numerous for the pinjrapole to deal with, they could be sold to reputable Hindu owners on the distinct understanding that they are to be returned to the refuge department of the pinjrapole when too old to work or milk.

3. A stud department where the very best of the right class of breeding bulls should be kept as stud for the use of the breeders in the district. The service of these animals could be given free for all cows passed by the expert manager as suitable for breeding with the pinjrapoles stud animals and careful records of all servings kept. This department might also undertake the castration of all unsuitable animals in the district free of charge.

It is not necessary to take any specific steps to improve the quality of buffaloes. India cannot afford to keep any class or bovine which does not possess dual purpose qualities, i.e., milk in the case of the female and draught in the case of the male. Generally speaking the male buffalo is unsuitable for field or cart work, and consequently unless the males, except those required for stud purposes, are slaughtered at birth, they remain an incubus in the country. The majority of the people in India do not approve of the killing of any kind of animals, and in any case it is not an economic proposition to rear and kill these animals for beef, as the value of this class of meat in India is far below cost of production.

The buffalo exists and increases in India owing to the poor milking quality of the cows, and the aim of all cattle breeding propaganda ought to be so to increase the milk-yielding capacity of all classes of cows, that they will not only provide sufficient milk to rear a strong, healthy calf, but in addition to this give as much milk as pay the cost of their feed. If and when we attain to this standard there will be no need for the buffalo which will be automatically eliminated by economic forces. The existing conditions prevailing in many parts of India today, where a cultivator keeps two or three cows to rear bullocks from and one or two buffaloes to provide milk and ghee for his household, cannot continue. It is too costly and there is no reason whatever why the cows now kept for breeding should not in the future rear their calves and provide in addition all the milk and ghee required by the household. Our cattle have little or no beef value and we cannot afford to keep cows for draught cattle production and buffaloes for milk. The cow alone can and must do both duties. For these reasons the pinjrapole societies should confine themselves to caring for and improving the cow. Agriculture in India depends upon the efficiency of the cow as a bullock-producer not the buffalo; and the health of the people can be maintained and improved by the milk of the cow. In a sense the buffalo is an interloper introduced because of the poor milking qualities of the cow.

If all pinjrapoles employed really qualified men capable of managing the pinjrapoles on the foregoing lines, they could undoubtedly do a great work for India.

The reader will observe from the foregoing that Mr. Smith has written with a knowledge of the existing pinjrapoles. He told me that he had visited many of them. In his opinion the pinjrapoles should serve the purpose not merely of being a home for aged and otherwise disabled cattle, but also for protecting the cow, and educating the people in the art of such protection. To that end they must have a properly equipped model dairy and a stud department. I add to these conditions a tannery department. I discussed with Mr. Smith the question of adding tanneries. The idea appeared attractive to him, but being a specialist he naturally did not want to travel beyond his province. Mr. Smith’s cautious remarks about the buffalo are worthy of attention. He has not, and he cannot be expected to have, the same feeling about animal slaughter, but he recognizes that in India any proposition suggesting slaughter of useless animals would be just as much out of place as a proposition for the destruction of aged and disabled parents would be anywhere. He has, therefore, endeavoured to enter into the Hindu feeling as much as possible, and suggested means of protection and conservation of cattle consistently with Indian traditions. I hope that managers of pinjrapoles will study the suggestions made in Mr. Smith’s important note and make the necessary alterations in their management, which, I am certain, can be made with very little extra cost in the beginning, and with much profit in the end. I must deal in a future issue with the other material Mr. Smith has kindly placed at my disposal.

Young India, 14-7-1927

214. AN ALL-INDIA SCRIPT

A Gujarati correspondent wrote some time ago to Navajivan a letter advising that I should print Navajivan in Devanagari script, so as to give a practical demonstration of my belief in the necessity of there being one script for all India. Although it is my firm conviction that there should be one script for all the Indian languages, and that that script can only be Devanagari, I could not follow the correspondent’s advice for the reasons stated in my note in Navajivan, and which I need not reiterate here. But there is no doubt that we ought to seize the opportunity that the great national awakening gives us, of not merely popularizing the idea but of doing something concrete in that direction. The Hindu-Muslim madness no doubt stands in the way of a thorough reform. But before the acceptance of Devanagari script becomes a universal fact in India, Hindu India has got to be converted to the idea of one script for all the languages derived from Sanskrit and the Dravidian stock. At the present moment we have Bengali script in Bengal, Gurmukhi in the Punjab, Sindhi in Sind, Oriya in Utkal, Gujarati in Gujrat, Telugu in Andhradesha, Tamil in Tamilnad, Malayalam in Kerala, Kanarese in Karnatak, not to speak of Kaithi in Bihar and Modi in the Deccan. If all these scripts could be replaced by Devanagari for all practical and national purposes, it would mean a tremendous step forward. It will help to solidify Hindu India and bring the different provinces in closer touch. Anyone who has any

1 Vide “Village Cattle Improvement”, 4-8-1927.

2 Vide “Navajivan in Devanagari Script”, 26-6-1927.
knowledge of the different Indian languages and scripts knows to his cost what time it takes to master a new script. For the love of his country, no doubt, nothing is difficult, and time spent in mastering the different scripts, some of which are very beautiful, is in no way idly spent. But this spirit of abandon is not to be expected of millions. National leaders have to make things easy for them. Therefore, we must have an easily adaptable universal script for all India, and there is nothing so adaptable and readymade as Devanagari script. There is, or there used to be, an all-India organization for this very purpose. I do not know what its activities are at present. But if the work has to be done, either the original association should be strengthened, or a new one formed for this purpose. The movement should in no way be confused with the spread of Hindi or Hindustani as the lingua franca. The latter work is going on very slowly, but steadily. Use of one script will facilitate the spread of one language. But the functions of the two run parallel only up to a point. Hindi or Hindustani is not designed to replace the provincial languages, but is intended to supplement them, and to be used for inter-provincial contact. And till the Hindu-Muslim tension lasts it takes the form either of Urdu written in the Persian script, and containing a preponderance of Persian or Arabic words, or Hindi written in Devanagari, and containing a preponderance of Sanskrit words. When the hearts of the two meet, the two forms of the same language will be fused together, and we shall have a resultant of the two, containing as many Sanskrit, Persian, Arabic or other words as may be necessary for its full growth and full expression.

But one script is undoubtedly designed to displace all the different scripts so as to render it easy for people belonging to different provinces to learn provincial languages. The best way of achieving the purpose is first to make the learning of Devanagari script compulsory at least for Hindus in all the schools, as it is in Gujarat, and secondly to print the important literature in different Indian languages in Devanagari script. Such effort has already been made to a certain extent. I have seen Gitanjali printed in Devanagari script. But the effort requires to be made on a large scale, and there should be propaganda carried on for the spread of such books. Though I know that it is out of fashion just now to suggest anything along constructive lines that may bring Hindus and Mussalmans together, I cannot help repeating what I have said in these columns and elsewhere, that Hindus must learn Urdu if they will come nearer their Mussalman brethren, and Mussalmans must learn Hindi if they will come nearer their Hindu brethren. Those who have faith in real unity between Hindus and Mussalmans need not be disconcerted by the present terrible expression of mutual hatred. Their faith, if it is of any value, must make them actively but unobtrusively perform, whenever possible, all acts of mutual toleration, affection and courtesy, and learning of one another’s language is the least that one can do in that direction. Is it not better for Hindus to learn through the many ably-written Urdu books by devout Mussalmans what Mussalmans think of the Koran and the Prophet, and for Mussalmans to learn through equally well-written Hindi books by devout Hindus what Hindus think of the Gita and Krishna than that the respective parties should learn all the bad things that might have been said about their respective religious books and their inspirers through their ignorant or fanatical detractors?

Young India, 14-7-1927

215. LIMITATIONS OF SATYAGRAHA

An innocent paragraph, occurring in a letter¹ in reply to one covering other subjects, has led to what I venture to call a thoughtless misrepresentation of satyagraha and its author. The paragraph is part of a private letter written in Gujarati to Mr. Bharucha. It is no thesis on satyagraha, and like every letter it contains many things understood between the writer of the original letter and that of the reply. It was not meant for publication. But when Mr. Bharucha telegraphed asking for permission to publish the paragraph, I had no hesitation in wiring permission. It appears from the newspaper report before me that the speakers at the Nagpur meeting suggested that I should have explained at the time the Nagpur Satyagraha was launched out what I have explained in my letter to Mr. Bharucha. I must dissent from the view. Had Mr. Awari not ascribed to me endorsement of his campaign, I should not even have written the article I did in repudiation. Where I cannot help, it is my rule not to hinder by any unnecessary or uncalled for interference on my part. Instead, therefore, of giving an exhaustive opinion on what I then knew of Nagpur Satyagraha, I confined myself to a repudiation and an opinion on the general atmosphere of violence prevalent in the country. And I cannot help saying that it was an unlawful use to make of my private letter for suspending Nagpur Satyagraha, if those who were permitted to see the letter did not accept the reasoning contained in it. Moreover, when they decided to make public use of the letter, they owed it to me to have made clear to them the points which they could not understand, or which appeared to them to be inconsistent with my previous writings. They owed it to the enthusiastic young men in Nagpur neither to damp their zeal nor to disconcert them by hurling in their midst an opinion which the receivers did not understand and did not accept. For myself I do not consider it to be any part of my duty to express an opinion upon the many insane things that are going on in this country, for I am humble enough to recognize that what may appear to me to be insane need not appear so to those who are doing those acts, and may even be in reality an epitome of wisdom. Though, therefore, things are being done in the name of satyagraha in several places, I have not felt called upon to say one word about them. And I do suggest to the young men in Nagpur and to all concerned that they are not in any way bound to receive the permission of the Congress to offer satyagraha or any other resistance to any unjust act so long as they do not use the Congress name. And if they are really of opinion that the Nagpur Satyagraha was justified, that it was really satyagraha, it would amount to a desertion on the part of their commander and other comrades in jail not to immediately re-embark upon their campaign, unless they think with me that what they thought was satyagraha was not so in fact.

¹ Vide “Letter to B. F. Bharucha”, before 2-7-1927.

Having cleared the ground so far, let me now try to remove the confusion that the well-meaning friends who have undertaken to criticize the letter in question have created about satyagraha. I do maintain that the Arms Act could not be broken in terms of satyagraha in the way it was in Nagpur. Let it be remembered that the bone of contention between the “Republican Army” of Nagpur and the Government was not the Arms Act but the unjust and lawless detention of many patriotic young Bengalis. It was in every way wrong, therefore, to select the Arms Act for civil disobedience. Several speakers have read into my letter a meaning which I hold it does not bear and was never intended to bear. As long ago as 1917 or 1918, I said that amongst the many black deeds of the Government, disarmament was the blackest. And out-and-out believer in non-violence though I am, I hold that it is right of any Indian who wishes to bear arms to do so under lawful permission. I do submit that an Arms Act is now and will ever be a necessity of good government. I do not believe in the inherent right of every citizen to possess as many arms as he chooses without a licence. On the contrary, I hold it to be absolutely necessary for good government that the State should have the authority to prohibit the holding of arms except under prescribed conditions. I can also conceive the possibility of satyagraha being offered against an unjust Arms Act or its unjust administration, as I can justify satyagraha against an unjust Arms Act for preventing thefts or other crimes. But I do maintain that just as satyagraha cannot be offered against an unjust Crimes Act by committing the specific crimes, so can satyagraha not be offered against an unjust Arms Act by carrying arms.

Let us also appreciate the distinction between satyagraha and civil disobedience. All civil disobedience is a part or branch of satyagraha, but all satyagraha is not civil disobedience. And seeing that the Nagpur friends have suspended what they were pleased to call satyagraha or civil disobedience, let me suggest for their information and that of others how satyagraha can be legitimately offered with reference to the Bengal detenus. If they will not be angry with me or laugh at me, let me commence by saying that they can offer satyagraha by developing the power of the people through khadi, and through khadi achieving boycott of foreign cloth. They can offer satyagraha by becoming precursors of Hindu-Muslim unity, by allowing their heads to be broken whenever there is a quarrel between the two, and whilst there is no active quarrel in their parts by performing silent acts of service to those of the opposite faith to theirs. If such constructive methods are too flat for them, and if they will be satisfied by nothing less than civil disobedience in spite of the violence of thought, word and deed raging round us, I suggest the following prescription of individual civil disobedience, which even one man can offer, not indeed in the hope of securing immediate release of detenus, but certainly in the hope of the individual sacrifice ultimately eventuating in such release. Let a batch, or only one person, say from Nagpur, march on foot to the Government House in Calcutta, and if a march is irksome or impossible then let him, her, or them beg enough money for train fare from friends, and having reached Calcutta let only one satyagrahi march to the Government House and walk on to the point where he or she is stopped. There let him or her stop and demand the release of detenus or his or her own arrest. To preserve intact the civil nature of this disobedience the satyagrahi must be wholly unarmed, and in spite of insults, kicks or worse must meekly stand the ground, and be arrested without the slightest opposition. He may carry his own food in his pocket, a bottleful of water, take his Gita, the Koran, the Bible, the Zend Avesta or the Granth Sahib, as the case may be, and his takli. If there are many such real satyagrahis, they will certainly transform the atmosphere in an immensely short time, even as one gentle shower transforms the plains of India into a beautiful green carpet in one single day.

The question will legitimately be asked, ‘If you really mean what you say, why don’t you take lead, never mind whether anyone follows you or not?’ My answer is: I do not regard myself as pure enough to undertake such a heroic mission. I am trying every moment of my life to attain the requisite purity of thought, word and deed. As it is, I confess that I am swayed by many passions. Anger wells up in my breast when I see or hear about what I consider to be misdeeds. All I can humbly claim for myself is that I can keep these passions and moods under fair subjection, and prevent them from gaining mastery over me. But the standard of purity that I want for any such heroic measure is not to have such passions at all and yet to hate the wrong. When I feel that I have become incapable even of thinking evil, and I hold it to be possible for every God-fearing man to attain that state, I shall wait for no man’s advice, and even at the risk of being called the maddest of men, I shall not hesitate to knock at the Viceregal gate or go wherever God leads me, and demand what is due to this country which is being ground to dust today.

Meanwhile let no man mock at satyagraha. Let no man parody it. If it is at all possible, leave satyagraha alone, and the whole field is open for unchecked action. On a chartless sea in which there is no lighthouse a captain dares whither he wills. But a captain who knowing the existence of a lighthouse and its position, sails anyhow, or takes no precaution for knowing the lighthouse from deceiving stars, will be considered unfit for his post. If the reader can bear with me, let him understand that I claim to be the keeper of the lighthouse called satyagraha in the otherwise chartless sea of Indian politics. And, therefore, it is that I have suggested that those who make for satyagraha will do well to go to its keeper. I can, therefore, merely rely upon the indulgence of fellow-workers for recognition of my office.

Young India. 14-7-1927
216. THE GOOSE AND THE GANDER

TO THE EDITOR, “YOUNG INDIA”

DEAR SIR,

You affirm that swaraj is impossible without the removal of untouchability, even as it is impossible without Hindu-Muslim unity. I would link up the two impossibilities and say that Hindu-Muslim unity is impossible without the removal of untouchability—in other words, that Hindu-Muslim unity is impossible without Hindu unity. I hope you grant this proposition. Andrews is one of those who seem to have realized the truth of it.

But be that as it may, allow me to point out one little difficulty in your otherwise most helpful entitled “Our Shame” in which you so generously notice my letter to you printed in the same issue (June 30th). If, because Hindu-Muslim unity is necessary for swaraj, special political provision is to be made for the Mussalmans, as was done by you in your scheme published in Young India for 19-2-1925 or as is done in the latest communal Pact, viz., that of the A.I.C.C. which, be it noted, purports to be a general communal settlement, and not merely a Hindu-Muslim arrangement as you think—then why leave the suppressed class in the cold, when you grant that its unity with the rest of the nation is as necessary for swaraj as Hindu-Muslim unity? We leave the woes of our child-widows out of these schemes and pacts, because (1) these widows are not a community, (2) there is legislation to help them, and (3) most of us (rightly or wrongly) do not look upon the amelioration of their condition as the sine qua non of swaraj. If legal enactments are useless for Touchable-Untouchable unity, they must be equally so for Hindu-Muslim unity. But what do we find in actual practice? In the name of swaraj and Hindu-Muslim unity, the needs (real or supposed) of the most clamant but not the most needy community alone are attended to in our Acts, Pacts and Schemes. And that is excused on the plea that special provision for any community is a necessary evil.

Well, I say, if special provision is a necessary evil, tolerate it where it is most necessary, i.e., in the case of the suppressed class, who, as you have already recognized, have a much stronger case for special treatment than the Mussalmans,—and not merely where it is most vociferously demanded, as in the case of our Islamic countrymen. If communal representation is to be allowed in some form or other, in spite of its known evils, then allow it in all cases impartially, even at the risk of a reductio ad absurdum. Else mention no community at all in your scheme, but let equal opportunities for all citizens

1 Vide “Hindu-Muslim Question”, 19-2-1925.
(and not communities), alike in the matter of education, the public services, and representation on elective bodies, be the guiding inviolable principle of your constitution.

I hope you will advise our Congress Executive to guide themselves along either of these two ways, the only logical ways as they appear to a humble student of and worker for his nation. For ourselves there is no question which of the two we would prefer. Have you not, at my instance, committed yourself to the latter, which I may call the Rational Nationalist way, in Young India for 20-8-1925, p. 292? You have, and therefore I pray that you advise the Congress Committee who are charged with the drafting of a constitution for the future government of this country, and who have made a public appeal for suggestions towards it, not to go in for any unhealthy compromise between the oil and water of the two ways, but to stick to one of the two, preferably the latter. For Reason and Justice’ sake avoid invidiousness, the original sin of the Pact of 1916.

I am

KARWAR (N. KANARA),

Yours, etc.,

July 4, 1927

S. D. NADKARNI

I entirely agree with my correspondent that if there is a special provision in any future swaraj constitution in one case, there will have to be in every other similar case, whether there is clamour in connection with it or not. I have in my recent article on Hindu-Muslim unity given my deliberate opinion against any legal enactment with reference to any understanding that might be arrived at between Hindus and Mussalmans. No special legislation without a change of heart can possibly bring about organic unity. And when there is a change of heart no such legislation can possibly be necessary. My effort which takes the form of prayer in our present helpless condition is mainly devoted to procuring that change of heart. And what is true of Hindu-Muslim unity is more true of the suppressed class. No protective legislation will help them unless the so-called higher class Hindus cleanse themselves, and are eager to do justice to the suppressed class. And when they have cleansed themselves no such legislation is necessary. At the present moment law enables them to use public schools and public wells, but the so-called

1 Vide “Notes”, 20-8-1925.
2 Lucknow Pact, an agreement between leaders of the Congress and the Muslim League by which the Congress conceded separate Muslim electorates 3 Vide “Hindu-Muslim Unity”, 16-6-1927.
high class Hindus successfully prevent their use by them. What, therefore, I would advise all fellow-reformers in this direction is to concentrate attention upon bettering in a concrete condition the lot of the suppressed class by providing schools, wells, and temples for them, and reformers themselves using all these in preference to those from which the suppressed classes may be excluded.

Young India, 14-7-1925

217. SPEECH IN REPLY TO MUNICIPAL ADDRESS, TUMKUR

July 14, 1927

FRIENDS,

I thank you for this address but I wish it had not been presented to me in English. I see before me so many of my Mussalman and Hindu brothers and sisters and if you would have used either your own mother tongue or used the national language, Hindi, they would have heard and understood and I would have been pleased to receive that address. I hope you realize that it is they, the masses, that should understand the significance of all this. They must understand this and understand one another well. They are brothers and they are the right and left eye of our motherland. To make them understand we must use the language they understand very well.

I am pleased to see that many of you are clad in khadi. But I want you not only to wear khadi today for this function only but to continue to use it always, all your life and make your brothers and sisters in the villages also, when you go to them, use khadi. A khadi vastralaya is going to be opened here for you today. I want you all to go there and empty the depot. I am aware that our khadi work is increasing in your place. I pray to God that He may bless you with the strength and wisdom to continue that work. I hope you realize that you must all help in this cause for the sake of the poor of the country.

I want to speak to you one word today. I want to know how many amongst you who have gathered today are Adi Karnatakas? Many of your brothers and sisters have not come here. To you and to those who have not come I will say this. Much is being done for the uplift of your community. In your Mysore Parliament (the

---

1 Gandhiji’s speech in Hindi was rendered into Kanarese by Gangadharrao Deshpande.
2 Some in the audience raised their hands.
Representative Assembly), the Dewan has dwelt upon this in this address. I am also glad to hear that His Highness takes a great interest in the cause of the downtrodden of your province. I feel for your position. We have to consider ourselves Panchamas as prayaschitta for what we have done to a portion of our own brothers and sisters.

But I want to speak to you, the representatives or members of the Adi Karnataka community here. Wherever I go I have seen them in the grip of very bad habits, as eating the flesh of cow and mutton. They must know they belong to the great Hindu fold and that they must not eat cow’s flesh. Many friends, many true and good men, in order to promote love and brotherliness among the communities of India have given up this habit. Hundreds of my friends, Mussalmans and Englishmen, have given up this habit. Many a high-placed Mussalman, I know, does not countenance the slaughter of cows. In your own State you have a society to protect cows and there is a movement to prevent their slaughter. I am glad your ruler is interested in this movement. In great numbers you have assembled here today but what is the number of cows that are living and how many are slaughtered? Mr. William Smith of the Dairy Farm in Bangalore has stated that there was much animal slaughter in Mysore State, it is much more than necessary. But I want to know why you do that at all?

We are an agricultural people and we are as a nation dependent upon our cattle from ancient times. When I was in the Nandi Hills my friends supplied me with good milk but I know the difficulty of good milk supply that is to be observed everywhere in our land. How many children there are in our land and can we say that we have enough good pure cow’s milk for them all? In our own interest, in the interest of our country I want to appeal to them not to indulge in this habit of flesh-eating.

You have stated in your address that you are going to get water-supply and electricity.

Whilst I congratulate you on this, I may tell you that I expected you to give me assurances in other matters. Can you assure me that the children in the town will be ensured a liberal supply of clean and cheap milk? You have not told me that you have done all you can for cow-protection, short of legislation prohibiting it. You have told me that you have a population of 15,000, but you have omitted to give me the strength of your livestock. There was a time in our land, when the wealth and prosperity of the people was measured by the number of children in the family and the head of cattle that it possessed. I assure you that you could have an ideal dairy here for much less than three lakhs you will spend on water works or even less than Rs. 50,000 that you will invest in electricity. For much less money you can have a dairy so as to make it possible for people to have milk as easily as water. Have you persuaded your Panchamas to give up beef and liquor? And what have you done for hygiene and sanitation? The West has come in for much blame from me, but its hygiene and sanitation are object-lessons for us. To me, the test of a people’s knowledge of sanitation is the condition of their latrines, and I am told that the state of things here is scandalous. The most orthodox and learned amongst us do not scruple to infringe the laws of sanitation, though all scriptures say that every infringement of a law of health or hygiene or sanitation is a sin. I ask you to study this question deeply and to aim at being ideal scavengers. So long as you do not take the broom and the bucket in your hands, you cannot make your town and cities clean.¹

Do you know what great advance in these matters the cities of the West have made? You must copy them and keep your own place clean and healthy if you want your citizens to have a clean and healthy life. I have gone to so many cities but I am not satisfied in this matter. You must all cultivate the habit of cleanliness and sanitation and you must all help to be scavengers of your town if you want to live without disease and dirt. . . .

Lastly I will say one work. For the poor of the country, I appeal to you to take to spinning at the charkha. Do not say you have no time. If you are rising from your bed at seven in the morning I request you, I beg of you to rise at five and give the two hours for spinning at the charkha.

Well, I tell you that the spinning-wheel I am placing before you is a symbol of industry, and lazy people cannot work it. Time is wealth, and the Gita says the Great Annihilator annihilates those who waste time.²

Two hours a day at the charkha would do a very great deal for the country and its poor millions. I have come to you today to ask this

¹ These paragraphs have been taken from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter” in Young India, 4-8-1927.
² ibid.
of you. I thank you all for this reception and address. May God bless you.

_The Hindu, 18-7-1927_

218. SPEECH AT PRANI DAYA SANGHA, TUMKUR

_July 14, 1927_

FRIENDS,

I thank you for address and purse. It also gives me pleasure to receive your address in your own mother tongue. You gave me an English translation of it but I have not read it. Instead, I have listened to the reading of your beautiful Kanarese and I understood much because, Kanarese, Tamil, Telugu and every other vernacular in the country are as sisters to our national language, Hindi. This morning in reply to your Municipal Address I have spoken at length on cow-protection and I hope and wish you will remember my appeal on behalf of the poor cows of our country. Perhaps you might know there is a big Sangha for the purpose in Belgaum and they have asked me to be its president. We have also a similar society at Sabarmati Ashram. The money you have given me today wuld go to that society for the protection of cows. But, I want you in Mysore to do in Mysore itself what we are doing there. You will have known of our work in the pages of _Young India_ and _Navajivan_. I want you to do that work. You must do it here and you must all do it. For remember, friends, that whether it is khadi work or cow-protection work it is not going to be accomplished by one man alone. Also remember that in the protection of your cattle lies the wealth of your country. Cow is the mother of the land and if you understand the full significance of the term ‘mother’ you will realize the importance of cow-protection in the progress and welfare of our motherland. I thank you once more your kindness.

_The Hindu, 18-7-1927_

---

1 Gandhiji spoke in Hindi.
FRIENDS,

In order to serve the poor of the country you have given me a purse and address for which I thank you all. You know that this service of the poor is very vast, the poor men—Daridranarayana has a big body, the biggest stomach. This Daridranarayana lives in the heart and the breath of the lowest and the poorest in the village huts. He lives far away from the towns, in the interior of your villages, he does not have even one single meal a day and yet you are raising your cities and towns from his money, from his toil and his earnings. You don’t get money from outside, from foreign trade; you only send it outside by your trade. Do you know how much cotton trade is being carried on, and how much cotton is being grown here; its cost in Egypt for instance and its cost here? It has been said that when a country sends out its raw materials to a foreign country there is no improvement for that country. There is one way however for some improvement of this grinding poverty and that is by khadi work. You may not send out your cotton. You may spin it and weave it into cloth and wear it. I know it is for this purpose you have given me this purse but you could have given more. If I were well I would at this moment go amongst you with the charkha and appeal to you to spin along with me always. Some of you, many of you today have worn khadi. I am thankful that you have given some money to the poor weavers but I ask you if you are going to wear it always? If not your giving me this purse is of no value. If you are to help the poor, if you are to perform your dharma irrespective of caste or creed, if you think and hope that your motherland should prosper, if you think of God, then wearing khadi is your duty, it is your dharma. Will you do it?

In yesterday’s meetings at Tumkur I have pleaded with my Panchama brethren not to take cow-flesh or eat any flesh whatsoever. I will not say further today to my Panchama brethren here. Do not eat cow’s flesh, do not drink, live a clean and pure life without sin and disease. I am glad you have a hall called after Lokamanya Tilak. I hope you will remember the life of that great son of India, and act up to his principles. Friends, I thank you all.

The Hindi, 18-7-1927

---

1 Gandhiji spoke in Hindi.
220. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

[Before July 16, 1927]

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have not been writing to you at all these days but I do remember you every day. I still need rest. Hence I write or dictate letters only when it cannot be avoided.

Even this I write on business. Pyarelal is needed in the Ashram at present. For some years now a worker from Madras called Shankaran has been staying at the Ashram. He is a very nice man. He is now here with me. He knows Hindi fairly well. He of course knows English. He is very intelligent in work. Till now he has had the sole charge of the kitchen. He had gone to Madras to see his mother. On being asked he showed willingness to replace Pyarelal. If you agree to have Shankaran instead of Pyarelal, then Pyarelal can be sent to the Ashram. If I have your letter saying yes, I will send Shankaran to you. When he gets into the routine there, Pyarelal can leave. But if for some reason you find that it cannot be done, do not hesitate to write to me. Show this letter to Pyarelal if you are in a position to relieve Pyarelal and also tell him that he has not written to me for a long time. Write to me about your health. Let me know how you find the monsoon there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati origin al: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courte sy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

221. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, TUMKUR

July 16, 1927

FRIENDS,

I thank you for all your purses and addresses. Mr. Hamza Hussain suggested to me before I took seat that I should talk to you in English. But I am not going to follow that suggestion. There are so many here to whom if I speak in English it would be disrespectful, for how many of you have taught your ladies English? Or is it that you want to test me whether I know English? (Laughter) If so, I may tell you I demand fees and you will have to pay a very heavy fee for wanting to examine me. Perhaps you may say that the purse you have given me is a fee by itself. No. I know you have given me the purse because you want to serve the poor of the country not by actual food but by khadi work. You may not know how many poor people there are. Do you know how very big is the stomach of Daridranarayana of our land? Whatever you give him is not enough. You may not know him but he lives far away in the villages, out of sight of your cities and towns; you do not know him because so many of you, so many of the ladies here have all come in foreign cloth. Do you know that every rupee’s worth of Manchester cloth that you buy increases the _daridrya_ of our land? When the people in the villages and huts are starving is it just that you should send away your wealth out of your land to distant Manchester? I want you all today to think well on this matter and I want you to feel this in your heart deeply. If you really feel the sense of grinding poverty of this land I want you to come to the conclusion that you ought not to go on wearing foreign cloth. Make a resolve today to do your bit by wearing khadi and by contributing your help to its cause, the cause of the poor. I may inform you with pleasure that when I appealed for help on behalf of this cause the ladies in the Mahila Seva Samaj at Bangalore threw away their jewels and ornaments. They knew that their chief ornament is their heart and that they are no true ornaments that adorn the body outside.

1 The addressee received the letter on July 16, 1927.
2 Gandhiji spoke in Hindi

Before I close, I want to say one word. I am very grateful to you all, particularly the Reception Committee of Tumkur who have made my stay here quite comfortable. I thank you once more for your excellent arrangements. The Headmaster of your High School told me they have started a poor boys’ fund and that they have resolved to call it by my name. You know, my friends, I am very poor myself and so I am a relative to all the poor. If I could, I could put into that fund at least one single pie but I have not got a pie which I can call my own. What I eat, what I wear is all yours and long since my earning has been given up. So I cannot give the fund a pie of my own. I know however you can all give something to that fund. There are so many very poor students in our country. They all need your help. I hope you will all help the poor students of your place at least and make the fund a useful one. Do not spend out of it any sum for entertainment or other purposes but make it really serve the purpose for which it was started. I thank you once more and bid you goodbye.

_The Hindu, 18-7-1927_

---

1 Poverty
222. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 17, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have been away for two days, and there was no telegram yesterday. But I take it that as per your previous telegraphic information you left Sabarmati for Wardha yesterday.

The negative participle should always go with the verb, when the verb is to be negative and when the subject has to be qualified by a long phrase, the qualifying phrase should precede the subject. Hence your original sentence which read:

अब कोई नहीं बातचीत करने के लिये अन्दर आयेगी शould read as follows:

अब बातचीत करने के लिये कोई अन्दर नहीं आयेगी!

Whilst you can say कोई सुधार', कुछ is better. कुछ means ‘a little’, कोई means ‘someone’. But sometimes कोई is used in the place of कुछ. The safer thing, however, is to use कुछ whenever you mean a little or some. You cannot say कोई दृष्ट; you must say कुछ दृष्ट.

Do tell me for my information whatever improvement you would suggest about spinning, prayer, kitchen, etc. I would then be able to correct you if you have come to a hasty judgment; or if I accept your judgment, I might suggest the improvement.

One earns the right of fiercest criticism when one has convinced one’s neighbours of one’s affection for them and one’s sound judgment, and when one is sure of not being in the slightest degree ruffled if one’s judgment is not accepted or enforced. In other words, there should be love, faculty for clear perception and complete toleration to enable one to criticize.

You have used the word भावनात्मक in connection with Bhansali to mean ‘emotional’. But here as emotional is used disparagingly, भावनात्मक will not do. You can say भावनात्मक for Andrews by way of compliment. The word perhaps you want to use for Bhansli is स्वणावस्य meaning, living in the dreamland and missing the reality, or you mean soft-brained. He is a man of very lofty emotion. But I am getting concerned about him. More than one person has drawn my attention

1 Ab koi nahin batchit karneke liye andar aayenge.
2 Ab batchit karneke liye koi andar nahin aayenge meaning ‘now no one will come in to talk.’
3 Koi sudhar meaning ‘a little improvement’
4 Kuchh doodh meaning ‘some milk’
to his becoming over-emotional. If you have acquired any influence with him, do open up a brief correspondence and tactfully discuss him with himself. But you will do what you like. I do not want to add to your tasks.

Tomorrow I go to Mysore and return from Mysore on the 23rd. Here is a copy of my programme which will be carried out if my health permits it. But you should continue to send your letters to Bangalore. The difference would be only that of one day wherever I am. And as the programme is only tentative, it is better not to run any risk.

With love,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5250. Courtesy : Mirabehn

223. LETTER TO A. I. KAjee

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 17, 1927

MY DEAR KAjee,

I was delighted to receive your letter after a long absence. It is difficult to give you guidance from this distance over differences with the Transvaal. I am, however, hoping that Mr. Sastri’s arrival has smoothed matters over.

As soon as I got the cablegram from Johannesburg, I sent a reply which I hope was duly received. Do please keep me informed of further developments.

I am glad that Manilal and his wife are happy and are both rendering national service.

Yours sincerely,

A. I. KAjee, ESQ.
SOUTH AFRICAN INDIAN CONGRESS
175, GREY STREET
DURBAN
(NATAL)

From a photostat : S.N. 12361
224. LETTER TO VIJAYPAL SINGH

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 17, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I mentioned almonds and grapes by way of example. Undoubtedly local fruits and nuts would be that best. But so far as the nutritive value is concerned, nothing is lost in taking the fruits sun-dried in other climates except, perhaps, the vitamins which can be easily supplied by adding fresh lemons. For we, poor people, groundnuts, coconut and the green which are to be had everywhere are perhaps an ideal diet. But I speak without any definite experience. I, therefore, dissuade people from being entirely guided by me in making dietetic experiment. But, if those who have independent experience and have some scientific training would conduct experiments in order to find physical and spiritual values of different fruits, they would no doubt render service in a field which is capable of limitless exploration.

In fasting for health’s sake, copious draughts of water are necessary. I used salt and soda as neat water created nausea. For my fasts previous to the one in Delhi, I had nothing but water of which because of nausea, I was able to drink very little. I have a friend who only the other day fasted for full 40 days and drank fresh water only copiously, and he kept excellent health.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. VIJAYPAL SINGH, B.A., LL.B, M.L.C.
‘PREM BHAWAN’
MEERUT

From a photostat: S.N. 14184

225. LETTER TO OTTAMA BHIKKHU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 17, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. I wish that I could visit Burma. But if I keep up what little strength I have regained, it would be required for overtaking the interrupted programme during the year. I do not know what will be in store for me thereafter.

VOL. 39: 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927  239
With reference to the secession of Burma from India, Burmese should certainly have my sympathy if they wished to secede. I would certainly not want them to sever their connection if they find it beneficial. At the present moment, I feel that India, in co-operation with the British, is exploiting Burma. That our cultures have a common origin has a strong appeal for me in favour of its absorption into India. But that absorption should come naturally and after both of us have become conscious of our strength. But I confess that I am speaking without much experience. I must, therefore, be content with a statement of the general principle that the benefit of Burma should be the sole consideration in deciding whether it should be an autonomous sovereign State or a province of India. I must not prejudice your case one way or the other by taking the matter up in Young India. That I can only do after visiting Burma if God provides that opportunity for me and studying the problem on the spot. I do not propose to publish your letter.

Yours sincerely,

OTTAMA BHIKKHU
MAHA BODHI SOCIETY
4-A, COLLEGE SQUARE
CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S. N. 14185

226. LETTER TO NARGIS CAPTAIN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 17, 1927

I have your letter. I wish I could go to Panchgani and see the little villages you describe. But that cannot be as I have already commenced gentle touring, and if does not disturb my health, it will now continue practically to the end of the year. What I should like to do is of course that some of you sisters should take this responsibility of touring off my shoulders and do it yourselves. But since you will not do it, how can poor lay man like me help going about begging from place to place?

Mithuben, Ratanben and Jamnaben are here, and they will be here for a few days longer. Mithuben has sold quite a lot of fashionable khadi.
I don’t know which book you mean about me. Nobody to my knowledge has written inside of two or three months.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S. N. 14186

227. LETTER TO K. J. NARAYANAN NAMBUDDIPAD
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I suggest to you that our untouchability is not due to the distinction between rich and poor. But it seems to me to be due to the arrogance of those who are learned in booklore towards those who are not, and it has gone to the uttermost limit of calculated cruelty. I am both pained and surprised that you should defend what is perhaps the greatest wrong done under cover of religion.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. K. J. NARAYANAN NAMBUDDIPAD
VADAKKANCHERI P.O.
(COCHIN STATE)

From a microfilm: S. N. 14620

228. SPEECH IN REPLY TO MUNICIPAL ADDRESS,
BANGALORE1

July 17, 1927

FRIENDS,

I thank you for the address you have given me on behalf of your Municipal Council. I am sorry I cannot speak loud enough so that every one of you might hear me. You have dwelt on what you are doing as members of the Municipal Council in your address. I am very much pleased with your work and I congratulate you on it. I must thank you for having introduced compulsory education in your city for your youths and I must also congratulate you for your having in your beautiful city such big roads and lights. It appears to me from what you have stated in your address that your municipal work is on right lines and that your record is one that would afford satisfaction to 1 Gandhiji spoke in Hindi.

I might tell you the true germ of swaraj lies in municipal work, and I want you to recognize it.

I have been amongst you for some time but because I could not go out on account of health, I could not personally find out your municipal work especially in regard to public health. But I take it, it is generally good. I have been told that your upper classes and middle classes are healthy. If so, I want to ask you a question. Have you got poor people in your city? If you have, I want to ask you as members of the Municipality whether you have kept their houses healthy and tidy? Do you take any interest in their houses? In your address you have not told me of the state of your scavengers, nor have you informed me anything as to how you supply good milk to your children, the old and the sick of your town. You have many merchants and traders who pay you taxes but have you ascertained anything about them? Are they selling good flour and rations to the poor who come from the villages to purchase from them? Your market gets supplied with things from distant villages and you purchase them as you like but have you stopped to enquire of their conditions in their distant homes in the villages? I cannot gather anything from your address as to how many drunkards there are in your city and how many wanton sinners there are and what steps you have taken to prevent them from poisoning your city life. I want also to know what the state of your cows and cattle is and what you as a municipal body have been doing in this direction. Can you answer these questions? If so, I can talk to you still more. But if you cannot, I want you, I request you to consider all these questions and think of them always in your active municipal work.

I must say I am very grateful for your Municipality for giving a place to the charkha. To me, it seems that you are thinking of your poor. By this, I am sure you are aware that if you want to keep the land from getting poorer, if you want to help the poor sisters and brothers of your place, charkha is the only way. I feel truly grateful to you for this. I am also glad that you are supplying khadi to your employees. There are so many of you here today who know that if you have to help in the only way you could it is by purchasing khadi. Have some consideration for the poor, take the cloth they weave for you and let them be sure of their wages and your purchase. I pray to God that the city which gave me health may grow ever more in wealth. You have all given me of your love and I thank you all for this. May God bless you and your Municipality with a great future.

The Hindu, 18-7-1927
229. SPEECH TO LABOURERS, BANGALORE

July 17, 1927

FRIENDS,

You have given my your addresses in the national language, Hindi, in the Mysore mother tongue, Kanarese, and also in Tamil and you have also given me a purse to serve the poor people of your country. I am deeply grateful to you all for this. Your offering for the cause of the poor does not bring to me any wonder because I have been a labourer myself for the past 35 years. Ever since I went to South Africa, I have known the woes of labour intimately. Having experienced some of them myself I also know that help in these matters seldom comes from outside. We must help ourselves and then only God will help us. That has been my experience. In South Africa when this burden of suffering was weighing heavily we found out that nobody could help us so well as we ourselves and we went on making our own efforts steadily and always on the right path. Then only relief came to us. In Ahmedabad also it was the same experience. The labourers did not set fire to property, they did not bully the employers, they harmed nobody and they went on fighting their cause in all just ways and right paths. They carried on in peace and suffering; they told their masters: “We are groaning under suffering, and you are happy, may you live more happily.” This went home and truth triumphed. This is the spirit of the silent and bold path of suffering; it is called ‘satyagraha’. It means that you take your stand on truth and never swerve from the path of right in fighting your cause. It means success of truth, it means self-help. Remember that you must help yourselves. This path is open to every one of you, young and old.

You have stated in your address that conditions in your mills are more hard than in other mills. I do not know if it is true, but if it is, then I am sorry to hear of it. But I know one thing, and that is, your director is the son-in-law of my friend, Chandavarkar, and he would be very sympathetic to you. He invited me to the mills and agreed to any suggestions to be made. I sent Mr. Rajagopalachari who came to you and ascertained the matter. This was at the time of your strike. Since then I do not know what your state is but whatever it is, always remember that you must help yourselves in this and that you must learn to depend upon your own selves. I want to ask you if you can do so. You are quarrelling amongst yourselves, you do not make any co-operative and united effort, you have not all thought about bettering your conditions in real earnest, many of you waste your time. You do not feel that the sorrow of one of you is the sorrow of you all. You go to drink and you go to play cards or gamble. You should not do that if you have to better your conditions, if you have to help yourselves as men. You must be aware of all this. You have given me this purse and it is because you know there are millions who are much poorer than you, more hungry than you. You must know that you must help these poor souls. You must not forget that the cloth you produce in your own mills is not for you or for your people but for trade purposes. It is for the benefit of your people but for trade purposes. It is for the benefit of your masters and it is not for protecting the poor of your land, to help them get a morsel of food in the villages. You must wear khadi and help poor men and women who weave it for you. It is you who must help them first, for the rich do not come as quickly. You must help them by wearing and purchasing khadi.

1 Of the Malleswaram Labour Union of the Maharaja Mills. Illustrating the case of a dismissed labourer, the address mentioned “the unfortunate position of labour in Mysore State, the indifference of Government and lack of public sympathy for labour movement in general”. Gandhiji’s speech in Hindi was rendered into Kanarese by Gangadharrao Deshpande.

I know that the present troubles arise because the mill-owners and the shareholders consider they are one and that you workers are separate. It is only on the day they are going to consider that the workers also are one of them, that their interests are also the labourers’ interests, on that day it is that this problem is going to be solved. When this recognition comes the mills would prosper for there would be no division of interests as between capital and labour. This day must come for that is dharma. But till that day comes it is your duty to go on fighting for your cause but fight for it as dharma and never swerve from the path of right and justice. Think well on what I have said to you today. Do not think there is any other path of bettering your condition or achieving success for efforts. There is no other path than dharma or the path of righteousness. Never forget this. May God bless you all in your efforts with strength and success.

_The Hindu, 18-7-1927_
CHI. MIRA,

I sent you a letter yesterday. I therefore do not want to say much today.

You have done well in explaining your position fully to Valunjkar and it is a correct position. You must be free to do the work that comes to your lot. Nor must Gangu hang on to your skirt. She must be taught to grow independently. But seeing that she wants to come under your influence you will handle her lovingly and give her what you can.

You will not experiment there with your health but eat what you need. Order the quantity of fruit you need as you used to at the Ashram and if anybody sends any fruit to you keep what you need and send the rest to the kitchen, i.e., Vinoba. Do not think that the others need it because you need it. You do not need the jowari that the others need. That fruit happens to be a delicacy as well as food is perhaps unfortunate. It is enough if we learn to take delicacies too as we would medicine in their proper measure and then we may harden our hearts and eat them although the others may not get them. The dangers surrounding this position are too patent to require mention. People have accommodated themselves to even vices under the plea of necessity. But we need not be afraid of such awkward consequences, if we would keep a ceaseless watch over ourselves. There are dangers every way we turn. But we must obey our fundamental natures be the cost what it may.

This has been a longer letter than I had wanted it to be.

With love,

BAPU

[PS.]

I am quite well.

From the original: C.W. 5251. Courtesy: Mirabehn
231. LETTER TO J. B. KRIPALANI

July 18, 1927

MY DEAR PROFESSOR,

Nanabhai tells me you have threatened to leave (almost?) if the Vidyapith does not take back Malkani. This attitude is wrong. You cannot manufacture charity by threats. And why would the Vidyapith be uncharitable if it cannot see its way to take Malkani back? Seeing that there is much opposition to his being taken back, it would be a mistake to press his reinstatement. Please revise your opinion.

In any event I have not seen the last of Malkani. I am carrying on correspondence with him and about him. For me Malkani’s error is a national tragedy. His reinstatement is a most insignificant thing. How to put together the broken bits of Malkani and to find him again a man is the sole question with me. And I am giving the thing best of myself.

With love,

BAPU

From a photostat : S.N. 12609

232. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

Silence Day [July 18, 1927] 1

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I wrote you a letter about Pyarelal. Could it be that you have not received it? I have detained Shankaran here. There has not been any letter from you for a long time. All of us are going to Mysore today. We shall be there for three days. By the 23rd we shall be back here (Bangalore).

Blessings from

BAPU

SJT. MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
CASTLE HILL
PANCHGANI

From the Gujarati origin al: Pyarelal Papers . Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courte sy: Belade vi Nayyar and Dr. Sushil a Nayyar

1 The postmark has “July 19, 1927” The silence day, i.e., Monday, sell on July 18.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
233. LETTER TO J. B. PETIT

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 19, 1927

DEAR MR. PETIT,

I thank you for your prompt attention to my letter¹ about Mr. Sastri. Of course, in my opinion, nothing has to be said against the Government. The point raised by you is, I think, debatable. What the service regulations come to is that no servant of the Crown should receive a single farthing from those whom he has to serve. But it seems to me that a Viceroy who, for example, may wish to do good to India beyond his province and receives aid from his friends and relatives in England will not be debarred from openly receiving such aid. I have no doubt whatsoever about the Government playing the game² in the matter of Mr. Sastri. The point of my letter went deeper. I hold that the Government may not go beyond a certain point. However, I do not wish to labour the point any further.

Yours sincerely,

JEHANGIR B. PETIT, ESQ.
PETIT BUILDING
359, HORNBY ROAD
FORT
BOMBAY

From a photostat : S.N. 12367

¹ In reply to his letter dated July 16 in which it was stated that “the [Imperial Citizenship] Association cannot finance Mr. Sastri”. It also enclosed for Gandhiji’s reference M. Habibullah’s letter to J. B. Petit dated July 12, 1927. Habibullah had written : “There can of course, be no question of any unofficial organization being required to assist the Government or their Agent financially. . . . He is to get a salary of £2,500 per annum which is exactly the amount given to a Cabinet Minister in South Africa, a sumptuary allowance of £500 per annum, a house which will be rented and furnished by Government, a car also purchased by Government—a maintenance allowance for the car of £200 per annum. For the house he will have to pay rent calculated at 10 per cent per annum of his salary, and 10 per cent per annum calculated on the capital outlay of the furniture for the use of the furniture. He will, so far as we are aware, have to pay no income tax . . . I am sure you will agree that these terms cannot be described as niggardly.”

² Dated July 5, 1927
³ There were proposals to increase the allowances.
MY DEAR THADANI,

I have your letter. You have entirely missed my point. I did not even know that your college was national merely in name. My complaint was not that Malkani went from a national college to a Government college. My complaint would have had the same force, if Malkani, instead of going from the Mahavidyalaya to a Government college, had deserted the Mahavidyalaya for a selfless expedition to the North Pole in search of knowledge, or say, had gone to Kashi Vidyapith or Bihar Vidyapith both of which are direct offspring of non-co-operation and with both of which I am more or less connected. And I should have considered the conduct of Sriprakash Babu and Rajendra Babu, respectively, as ungentlemanly if they had seduced Malkani behind the back of the authorities of the Mahavidyalaya as you have done. And I have felt it so keenly in this case because of my high opinion about Malkani. Many other professors deserted the Mahavidyalaya before Malkani. In their case, I felt nothing, because I had staked nothing on them. I do not know whether I have yet made my point clear. I know no distinction between Sind and Gujarat or any other province. If Malkani had been posted in Sind and was seduced by someone in Gujarat, I should have said and felt the same thing, again because of the personal factor that it was Malkani who had allowed himself to be seduced.

I do not underrate your difficulties; I do not underrate your cause; but what I feel is that you adopted a questionable method for achieving your purpose. You will not build up the morals of the Sindhi youth by undermining those of Malkani. Malkani standing at the helm of his sinking ship in Gujarat, himself starving, his wife and mother-in-law looking daggers at him, and his friends howling at him in indignation for his madness, would have been an ideal professor for your boys and a noble lesson for India. I wonder if I am still clear to you. Do not for one moment consider that the fact that it is Gujarat Mahavidyalaya that will come to grief that has weighed with me. My life has been a witness of many such institutions arising and falling with some of which I have myself been intimately connected. For me, their worth has consisted in their having thrown up heroes and thus finished their task. It may interest you to know that the Senate of the Vidyapith has been convulsed over Malkani’s letter recalling his resignation. Many professors who were always more or less against Malkani offered strenuous opposition to Malkani’s reinstatement. The question was referred to me and I sent in my opinion that Malkani could not be reinstated in the face of that opposition. It will be awkward for his as also for the professors and bad for the Mahavidyalaya. The question of the Mahavidyalaya therefore is settled so far as Malkani is concerned. But the question of Malkani himself still remains a running sore. I have already given my opinion that he cannot undo one wrong by doing another, and that therefore he may not now leave you in the lurch without your being able to replace him. But if you would know my opinion, it is decidedly this: that Malkani should not remain in your institution a minute longer than is absolutely necessary, that you should set about finding a substitute without the least delay, that you should set a time-limit for your search, and that after the expiry of the time-limit, whether you have found a substitute or not, Malkani should leave you and either do what he likes, or let me do with him what I like. I may inform you that I have not yet got over the shock. Bardoli never disturbed my sleep; but Malkani does. You will be entitled to say that I deserve no pity if I would depart from the lesson of the Gita by which I swear and have such unwarranted faith in men. I shall accept your judgment and plead in justification that I cannot surmount my fundamental nature all of a sudden. Please share this with Malkani.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. N. V. THADANI
HYDERABAD (SIND)

From a photostat : S.N. 12606
DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter and the medal. Here are the answers to your questions:

1. I do not think that there is any moral obligation for a man to take out an insurance policy for the sake of his creditors. But it is enough that he strains every nerve to pay his creditors while there is life in him. Of course, the great thing is never to incur debts on any account whatsoever. Having thus dealt with the ethics of insurance, I must warn you against throwing up your policy merely on the strength of my opinion. There is nothing wrong or sinful in your keeping up the insurance policy unless the consciousness of wrong comes upon you apart from my opinion. I would therefore dissuade you from hastily giving up the policy. There must be a definite living faith in God and complete reliance upon Him before one gives up what are generally regarded as legitimate things like insurance policy. Many other things should precede this sort of renunciation.

2. I think you were quite right in attending the marriage ceremony. It should be a warning against hasty promises.

3. I should draw a sharp distinction between kirtans¹ and theatricals. The question of theatricals is very serious, and as you seem to know all about the lives of actors, it may be as well for you to avoid the profession. But I am myself not on sure ground here. The theatre is as old as mankind. How far it has tended to make men better, I don’t know. I have not studied its history. You must, therefore, not accept me as a guide. Either use your own judgment or go to those who can guide you with confidence and about whose purity of life you have no doubt. This covers the fourth question also.

5. In the male the sexual act is a giving up of vital energy every time. In the female that giving up process commences only with parturition.

6. M. Bureau does not refer to wet dreams at all. They are undoubtedly harmful. He merely refers to the conversion of the excess of nutrition into seminal fluid in the male. But it requires to be husbanded and reserved for reproduction when the latter is desired, or

¹ Devotional songs

235. LETTER TO K. S. KARANTH

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 19, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter and the medal. Here are the answers to your questions:

1. I do not think that there is any moral obligation for a man to take out an insurance policy for the sake of his creditors. But it is enough that he strains every nerve to pay his creditors while there is life in him. Of course, the great thing is never to incur debts on any account whatsoever. Having thus dealt with the ethics of insurance, I must warn you against throwing up your policy merely on the strength of my opinion. There is nothing wrong or sinful in your keeping up the insurance policy unless the consciousness of wrong comes upon you apart from my opinion. I would therefore dissuade you from hastily giving up the policy. There must be a definite living faith in God and complete reliance upon Him before one gives up what are generally regarded as legitimate things like insurance policy. Many other things should precede this sort of renunciation.

2. I think you were quite right in attending the marriage ceremony. It should be a warning against hasty promises.

3. I should draw a sharp distinction between kirtans¹ and theatricals. The question of theatricals is very serious, and as you seem to know all about the lives of actors, it may be as well for you to avoid the profession. But I am myself not on sure ground here. The theatre is as old as mankind. How far it has tended to make men better, I don’t know. I have not studied its history. You must, therefore, not accept me as a guide. Either use your own judgment or go to those who can guide you with confidence and about whose purity of life you have no doubt. This covers the fourth question also.

5. In the male the sexual act is a giving up of vital energy every time. In the female that giving up process commences only with parturition.

6. M. Bureau does not refer to wet dreams at all. They are undoubtedly harmful. He merely refers to the conversion of the excess of nutrition into seminal fluid in the male. But it requires to be husbanded and reserved for reproduction when the latter is desired, or transmutation into spiritual energy. This is my conviction. Whether M. Bureau means it or not, I can’t say, because I have not the book with me at the time of answering.

¹ Devotional songs

So long as your friends know that any gift that they may make to you will go for some public purpose, there is no harm in accepting it if it pleases them better to serve the public cause by making gifts to their friends. There is, however, no doubt that it is best to dissuade friends from such practice.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. K. S. KARANTH
C/O G. N. POI, ESQ.
NIHALCHAND BUILDING
NEW QUEENS ROAD
GIRGAUM
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 14187

236. LETTER TO DR. M. S. KELKAR
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 19, 1927

DEAR DOCTOR,

I thank you for your kind and thoughtful warning. I am simply going by the advice of the doctor here who constantly examines me. He is in charge of the Victoria Hospital and is reputed to be very clever and very careful. However, I am taking the tour in easy stages. But I quite agree with you that if I could bury myself in some seaside place, it would be better. However, your letter puts me further on my guard. I shall watch myself and not hesitate to still further restrain myself, if necessary.

I am keeping in touch with Uttam Chand, and I know that he is making fair progress and so also Kakasaheb. Their recovery will certainly be directly traceable to your treatment, and I am so glad that Gangabehn is also making steady progress.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14188
DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. My present life is no reaction of the past. Probably, my condemnation of my past life is an exaggeration. It should be remembered that the condemnation is according to the measure of standard I have evolved for myself. Life of perfect restraint had a fascination for me, even whilst I indulged myself with my wife. But though the spirit was willing the flesh was weak. I was able to control the flesh only by much patient effort, and God definitely helped me first by frequently sending me away from my wife and secondly by throwing circumstances in my way which made it necessary to restrain my lust even for the sake of meeting those circumstances. I do not think that I sinned against my wife more than the average man. But such comparisons are totally wrong and should never be held to justify sinning. Everyone must set up his code for himself and regulate his life in strictest accordance with it. After all, sin is a mental state. And, whilst a man who commits a particular sin will certainly receive his due punishment from Nature, if he is not conscious of that sin, he won’t blame himself. But I being conscious of the same sin dare not justify myself and hold myself free from blame, because my ignorant brother commits it through ignorance, and therefore does not blame himself, and is probably not blamed by the society either. I think this covers all the points raised by you.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SURAJ PRASAD MATHUR
TEACHER, SIR HARCOURT BUTLER HIGH SCHOOL
HELEN LODGE
SIMLA

From a photostat : S.N. 14189
DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and the pains you have taken to answer my questions. Do you claim cheapness, simplicity and efficacy for Ayurvedic medicine as we find it at present? After my own fashion, I have been interested in its success ever since 1891, and have even spent what little I was capable of and induced friends to spend on behalf of Ayurvedic physicians. But so far, I have found it to be neither cheap nor simple nor efficacious. Some of the prescriptions are most complicated. Ayurvedic physicians have been known to charge as much as men with medical degrees. I know Ayurvedic physicians who charge today even as much as Rs. 1,000 per day. The best of them are beyond the reach of the poor. And what I have also unfortunately found is that a very large number of patients have gone to the physicians with Western degrees after having found Ayurvedic treatment to be inefficacious. I am aware of the converse also having happened. But the scales seem to me to weigh in favour of Allopathy. My own desire has been and is now also to find Ayurveda practice successful, if only because I am probably fanatically vegetarian and because I have a horror of Allopathy for many reasons I need not go into. Even for simple home treatment, having studied something of both Ayurvedic and Allopathic drugs, I have been obliged to use Allopathic drugs instead of Ayurvedic. For instance, I have found nothing so efficacious as quinine for malaria or iodine for simple pains or Condy’s fluid as a disinfectant. I must not, however, worry you with my own experience. If it is not troublesome, will you kindly illustrate in what way Ayurveda aims at purifying the whole system rather than affording only temporary relief? As time permits me, I shall go through the pamphlets you have kindly sent me. I shall also await the views from the friends to whom you have shown my letter. You will please write to me if you do not receive the relevant texts from Pandit Satavalekar.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. GANGADHAR SHASTRI JOSHI
9/2, SADASHIV PETH
POONACITY

From a photostat : S.N. 14190
DEAR SATIS BABU,

Your letter arrived the same day as Dr. Ray who gave me doleful news about Pratishthan. He said that you were not at all fit for work, and that you were yet going back to Calcutta because your presence was needed at Sodepur. He added that Kshitish Babu was being over-worked. Knowing his pessimism, I have discounted the news he has given me. But I suppose the substance is true. You will, therefore, tell me all about the work there. But I want your assurance that, whatever may be the nature of the work, you are not going to put an undue strain upon yourself. Of course, you will laugh at this and retort “physician heal thyself”. But I really believe that I do conserve my energy to the best of my ability. And, then, I have a solid wall of protection from so many sentinels. That I have not been able to avoid illnesses is a matter of humiliation for me. I should have been able to do so. But as I have said so often, I woke up too late in life to be able to have a disease-proof constitution. Up to the age of nearly 30, according to my notions of economy, I wasted myself whenever opportunity offered itself. The real building up began after that time, and then too, knowledge came in dribblets. This is only one though the main reason for breakdowns in my life. I want all co-workers to learn to avoid my mistakes. But of course all this is wretched philosophizing. You know what I want to say. Do not be anxious about khadi or the Pratishthan which is one and the same thing. Let us give the best of what we have, work in uttermost humility, and then say after the manner of Janaka, “What does it matter if khadi lives or perishes?”

With reference to the Bengal tour, you will not want me to come to Bengal unless you are yourself able to bear the strain. Of course you will not discuss this thing publicly till you know how the present trial tour shapes. I must confess that I am not over-well or over-strong. But the doctor who is attending on me is a clever and a careful man, and he tells me that there is nothing wrong with blood-pressure or with anything else and that I am quite all right.
The Hindu-Muslim thing would be unbearable if I begin to think about it. But of whatever happens there, please keep me well-informed.

I have not written separately to Hemprabha Devi in order to conserve my energy. She is ever in my thoughts.

With love,

Yours,

From a microfilm: S.N. 19787

240. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day, Ashadh Vad 5 [July 19, 1927]

SISTERS,

I have to write many letters today. But how can I miss writing to you?

I wish to hit two targets at one stroke. Now this is a rendering of an English saying which literally means to kill two birds with one stone. Such sayings come into vogue where violence is common in every walk of life. My rendering too is not faultless. But indeed we could hit a target without intending to hurt anyone.

My twofold purpose is to write my usual letter to you and to include in it my reply to Chi. Vasumati. She asks, “You say that women should know how to read the Gita as well as they should know how to roll chapatis. How is this possible? It will take a lot of time to learn.”

It does indeed take time. But what can one not achieve with perseverance? A task can be accomplished if one devotes some time, if not a great deal, to it. It is difficult to learn cooking after you are grown up. Even then you can learn it with persistent efforts. If our women cannot pronounce Sanskrit well, the fault is not theirs. It is one’s parents’ fault, or if one is married it is the fault of one’s husband or of his people. But what is the use of putting the blame on others? Let us see how we can remove the defect now. In the Ashram we look for our own defects and then try to remedy them. Of course we should not overdo learning to pronounce Sanskrit correctly. We should carry out our other duties in the Ashram, and while doing so, try also to improve our pronunciation as much as we can. The only point I wanted you to know was that in Karnatak many women pronounce Sanskrit more correctly than even men in Gujarat.

1 The year is inferred from the reference to Karnatak.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3658

241. LETTER TO JETHALAL GANDHI

BANGALORE,
Ashadh Vad 5 [July 19, 1927]

Bhai Jethalal,

I got your letter and the booklet about snatakas which you have published. I could read the booklet only today. I can see that you have put great labour into it. The booklet is useful. I will find use for it in Young India and Navajivan too.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Sabarmati Snataka Vibhag, Book 6, No. 4, Shishir, 1984, p. 34

1 Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date in 1927
2 Graduates
242. SPEECH TO STUDENTS, MYSORE

July 19, 1927

MR. PRINCIPAL, PROFESSORS, SISTERS AND FRIENDS,

You have honoured me with an address. You have likewise with a purse of Rs. 700 for the service of the Daridranarayanas of this land. I thank you sincerely for both. I am sorry I am not able to express to you here all that I feel, all that I want to say. I am not able to return in the least measure the overwhelming kindness that you have shown me in cities and villages alike. In a gathering like this, no student should even be anxious that I should speak in English. Some of those present will not understand me if I speak in English. I have doubtless great attachment for English. If our object is to serve our motherland adequately, and if we desire that there should be greater affinity and harmony between the various classes, it is not to be achieved by spreading the knowledge of English. I have, therefore, a favour to ask of the students. That is also my message to them. They should cultivate a knowledge of Hindi, and devote themselves to the service of the motherland. My association with the students of our country dates back to 10 years, since my return to India. I know the hardship and the difficulties of the students. I have been seeing them every day. I also know their weak points. It has been my privilege to have a corner in their hearts. They have not hesitated to open their hearts to me, to tell me even what they had concealed from their parents. I do not know how I could bring them peace, or what message I could give them. I share in their sorrows, and I have been striving to alleviate their hardships. But in this world, we have to look only to God for help. None other could render any effectual help. There is no sin equal to that of disbelieving in Him, in denying Him. Amongst the students of today the spirit of atheism is gaining ground. I am deeply grieved that things should be so. Whenever I see Hindu students, I ask them to think of God, to pray, to repeat Ramanama. They ask me where is God, where is Rama and such other questions. When I see Mussalman youths and ask them to read the Koran, and to live the life enjoined therein, they also ask me similar questions. The education which leads to the negation of God cannot make for the service of the country nor of humanity. In your address, you have referred to my service to my country. Whatever I have been doing is done with a sense of my duty to God. And this I consider to be the right thing. God is not seated in the skies, in the heavens, or elsewhere. He is enshrined in the heart of everyone—be he a Hindu, Mohammedan, Christian or Jew, man or woman.

1 Gandhi ji’s speech in Hindi was rendered into Kanarese by Gangadhar Rao Deshpande.

I consider that real service of the country and of God consists in serving the poor humanity, whom Deshbandhu Das rightly designated the Daridranarayana. Such service however must be whole-hearted. When I see students, my heart goes out to them. If your hearts are not free from taint, neither the colleges, nor the libraries, nor this environment will avail you. His heart is pure who, seeing one in distress, will himself feel distressed. In our country, one-tenth of the population have not as much as one meal a day. Have our students any idea of this? Having knowledge of this they are spending their time and money on cinemas, theatres, etc. Is this fair? Is this the way to serve the country? The education you are receiving in colleges is not for the poor of the country. Such education could serve its purpose only when it leads them to the service of the suffering millions. I therefore tell you that the real service of God consists in the service of humanity. For this end, wear khadi, and spin for half an hour a day. In your address you refer to my efforts to revive the charkha. If you merely praise me in the addresses, but do nothing yourselves to encourage spinning, it would be nothing short of fulsome flattery. I do not want to take more of your time. I have elsewhere spoken about the duties of students,¹ and you can read them. I always pray to God that He prosper you, the youth of India, that He speed you in the service of the country. God bless you all.

The Hindu, 21-7-1927

243. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

AS AT KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 20, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter about prayer. The letter is beautiful. I like also the caution that you have uttered for yourself. Love means infinite patience, and exactly in the measure that we become impatient of our own weaknesses, we have to be patient with regard to the weaknesses of our neighbours. We easily enough see their weaknesses; but we have absolutely no knowledge of their striving to overcome them. However, I have forwarded your letter to the Ashram and asked Chhaganlal to read it to the Managing Board and see what can be done. One thing must not be over looked. That the prayer meetings at the Ashram are not what they should be—full of fragrance and reality—is really due to my own shortcomings of which neither you nor anybody else can have any notion whatsoever. The value of prayer dawned upon me very late in life, and as I have a fair capacity for imposing discipline upon myself, I have by patient and painful striving been able now for some years to conform to the outward form. But do I conform to the spirit? My answer is: No. Whilst it is true that life would be insipid for me without the prayer, I am not absorbed in the message of the prayer at the prayer times. The mind wanders whither it would in spite of incessant striving. If I could but lose myself in the prayer like the great Ali, you will not have to make the complaint that you have rightly registered in your letter. You will not now wonder why I am patient with those who are slack even in attending to the external form. I therefore tremble to impose any iron rule upon the people. Knowing my own weakness, I sympathize with theirs, and hope that if I grow, they must grow with me. You will now understand more than ever what I have so often said to so many people: I must be measured not by what I appear personally, but by how I appear in the lives of the people at the Ashram. The Ashram, especially when I am withdrawn from it, is really the only infallible guide to a knowledge of me.

¹ Vide “Speech to Mysore Students, Bangalore”, 12-7-1927.

It is time for me now to keep an appointment.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 5252. Courtesy: Mirabehn
244. LETTER TO LIES BURZAS

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 20, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I was pleased to receive your note through Sparrow.

The more I live the more real the doctrine of oneness of life becomes to me. But the difficulty of practising the doctrine is also growing with me instead of diminishing. Realization of the doctrine seems to be impossible unless we could reduce the ‘I’ in us to a complete cipher.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S. N. 12525

245. LETTER TO HELENE HAUSSDING

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 20, 1927

MY DEAR SPARROW,

I have your letter. I see that you make a distinction between a letter and a postcard. I do not. But tell me why is a postcard not a letter except, of course, for the Postal Department. But seeing that we do not belong to that department, and that so far as we could we should as poor people use the cheapest method of exchanging our views, a postcard should be as good a letter if it could be made to contain all that you wish to say.

I must still continue to dictate my letters. Although I can be said to be a discharged patient, the memory of my being a patient is still very fresh and very definite.

Krishnadas has gone to Bihar in connection with A.I.S.A.’s work, as also to see his guru, and possibly his parents, and he will then go to the Ashram to finish the literary work that is weighing upon his head.

You ask me “if the diseases are due to our own transgressions, that transgression is to be laid at the door of a blind-born baby”. I thought that being a Buddhist you believed in transmigration and

1 In reply to the addressee’s letter dated June 23, 1927
2 Helene Haussding
3 Dated June 25, 1927
previous existence just as fully as in the present. For me, I implicitly believe that every birth means the birth of a new soul. Birth and death to me, therefore, are almost interchangeable words and two modes of expressing the same state. If you will closely analyse the doctrine of transmigration, you will answer for yourself, also the question “why is the air laden with microbes?”

‘Pearl’¹ and ‘Lal’ and others whom you know but casually, and whose names you won’t be able to recall, much less to pronounce, are with me just now and will be for a few days longer. My headquarters still remain Bangalore and will remain so practically to the end of August.

I am forwarding your letter to Krishnadas. Here is a letter to the friend.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat : S. N. 12526

246. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 20, 1927

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I have both your letters. Events have moved fairly fast between the dates of my letter and of the arrival of your letters. Sarojini Devi suggested under pressure from Mahmudabad² and Mr. Jinnah that I should press Father to accept the Presidential chair for the coming year. I totally dissent from her view and told her that Dr. Ansari was the only possible President, though even he will be able to do precious little.

Things are going from bad to worse, and it is quite plain that we have not yet drunk the last dregs. But I regard all this rising of the poison to the surface as a necessary process in national up-building. It is quite true that what was burrowing under the surface has now broken through the crust and allows itself to be seen by the naked eye.

¹ Not known. The addressee had written: “The knowledge of your love always gives him new strength to prune his plumage for new flights and fights. I am only echoing Pearl’s thoughts, words...”
² The source has “Muhammadabad”.

VOL. 39 : 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927 261
I saw the other day in the daily press portraits of yourself, Kamala, Krishna and Indu, or was it you three without Indu, I now forget. You all seem to have grown fuller in the face and all over. I hope that the appearance coincides with the reality.

Though I am not yet physically quite strong, I have resumed the interrupted tour with considerable modifications and in gentle stages. I will not have resumed it but for the fact that collections were locked up and could not be freed unless I presented myself for receiving them.

Shankerlal and Anasuyabehn are just now with me in addition to the party mentioned by me in my previous letter.

From a photostat: S. N. 12611

247. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

AS AT KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 20, 1927

I have not written to you for the last two mails, nor is there anything particular to say to you just now. But you will be glad to learn that for the first time during my 12 years in India after my return from South Africa, I had what may be called a fairly prolonged real contact with Pandit Malaviyaji. Instead of going to Ooty, he remained in Bangalore as long as it was possible for him to do in view of the Reserve Bank Committee meeting at Calcutta. Of course all the time we were under the same roof, and we had discussions on many things. We reached one definite conclusion, and it was that there should be, just like the All-India Spinners’ Association, and All-India Cow-protection Association, a definite body called ‘All-India Untouchability Association’ brought into being with a definite constructive programme for the uplift of the suppressed classes. I have no time just now to discuss the outlines of the scheme. But I am now looking for an efficient secretary to believe in the work and who would give his whole heart to it to the exclusion practically of every other activity. A further stage will be reached as soon as I can find such a secretary.

Jamnalalji showed me your circular letter to friends. I see how your mind is working in that atmosphere. I would warn you against using the same scales and weights for two different materials. Eyes are well adapted for examining and inspecting a drawing-room furniture. Do they serve the same purpose for examining the furniture in the
I have resumed gentle touring. I do not know whether I have been wise in resuming it so early. But I am daily taking a measure of my capacity.

If Lalaji\(^1\) is with you, please give him my love and tell him that there shall be a violent quarrel between him and me if he does not give himself full rest and return with full vigour for tackling the work that lies in front of him.

Yours,

From a photostat: S. N. 14192

248. SPEECH AT HINDI BHASHA SEVA SAMAJ, MYSORE\(^2\)

July 20, 1927

After distributing the certificates to the successful students . . . Mahatmaji delivered his address in Hindi. The address was translated into Kannada by Desabhakta Gangadharrao sentence by sentence.

Mahatmaji observed that their President, Mr. M. Venkatakrishnaiya, was called by them all “the grand old man of Mysore”. The expression “grand old man” was doubtless dear to him. But he would ask them to call Mr. Venkatakrishnaiya the aged grandfather of Mysore, vṛiddhapitamaha, as Mr. Gangadharrao called, or they might call him by any other better name in Hindi, Sanskrit or Kannada. The address they had presented him had a message behind it. It was that Hindi should become the common language of India, that the people living in India, of whatever community, should all become united as a nation. Today they had not a language which was the language of all their countrymen. Their hearts too were not united. There were differences between Brahmins and non-Brahmins, between Hindus and Mussalmans, and in the Hindu fold itself there were the untouchables who have been kept aloof, as though they were not part of it. Their hearts, instead of being united, had been drawn away from each other. The object of a common language for the whole country was to unite them all. When they were all thus united by this bond of a common language they would all understand the meaning of “grand old man”. Let them imagine for a moment that they were living in the time of the Pandavas. If aged Bhishma came there, and they all said that the “grand old man” came, how ludicrous it would be. They must ever remember Bhishma and his vows. Whenever they thought of Bhishma, every one of them would be thrilled with certain courage and heroic spirit, and everyone would be reminded of Bhishma’s vows, and would receive an awakening. If they but put themselves in mind of Bhishma every morning, he was sure they would develop courage and heroism, so essential for national regeneration.

\(^1\) Lajpat Rai

\(^2\) At its second Hindi convocation

Mahatmaji expressed his gratification that in Mysore Hindi prachar had made such splendid progress. He thanked the pracharaks for giving tuition to as many as 700 pupils in the course of 11 months. Mr. Jamna Prasad did not desire that a gathering like the present should be called a convocation. He dreaded the use of the expression “convocation”. For his own part, he did not see why it should not be called a “convocation”. It meant simply a congregation and conversation. But through their association with English education, such an occasion had come to be regarded as some grand function. If they all made up their minds to spread Hindi, to learn Hindi themselves, and to show their sympathy, it would be a great thing, and this day would be remembered always.

In conclusion, Mahatmaji observed:

My appeal to you is that you should all give your mind to the spread of Hindi by providing the necessary funds and encouragement. You should not depend for funds from outside. There is no need for it. For this work, you must collect funds that may be necessary for one, two or more years. I believe it is possible to collect the funds needed at this gathering. I wish the progress would be greater in the future, and more abiding. To those who are the happy recipients of certificates I say, use the knowledge of Hindi for the service of the country. I thank you all for honouring me with the address, and for giving me the opportunity to participate in the function.

The Hindu, 22-7-1927

249. SPEECH IN REPLY TO ADDRESSES, MYSORE

July 20, 1927

Mahatmaji, in the course of his joint reply to the several addresses presented to him, said that their love for him was so great that to save his time and to afford him relief, they had arranged to present them all together. He was thankful to them for it. It pleased him to learn that His Highness’s Government had shown their sympathy for the khaddar movement, and had agreed to the abolition of octroi on khadi imported into the city. All the addresses had alluded to the khadi and charkha

By the Mysore City Municipal Council, the Mysore District Board, the Mysore Congress Committee, the Dattatreya Gorakshana Mandali, the Kaniyars and other citizens of Mysore. Gandhiji’s reply in Hindi was rendered into Kanarese by Gangadharrao Deshpande.
movements. He was pleased to note that the people of Mysore liked khadi and the charkha, but his experience told him that he was not to be deceived by such praise as they showered in the addresses, for they had not gone far beyond the region of praise and entered the practical region.

He was delighted to see the beautiful city of Mysore with its palaces and mansions, is broad and well-kept roads, gardens and parks. This was one side of the view. When he considered the other side, the poor in the city and in the villages steeped in misery and pain, his heart was touched. He wished to see the day when the Maharajas in India and their advisers showed love and pity to the poor, who were grovelling in poverty and misery, so that the gulf between them, between the rich and the poor, may be bridged. It was not that he hated palaces and mansions, or gardens and parks. It was his desire to see that in India, the rich and the poor were united at heart. It was to bridge the gulf that was between them, it was to bring about contact between the rich and the poor that his efforts were directed these seven years. The gulf could not be bridged by such works as the Bhadravati Works and the gold mines of Kolar. The Bhadravati Works and the gold mines were doubtless necessary. The mines of contact between the rich and the poor was possible only by means of the hand-spun yarn. They might know that the bridge between Rishikesh and Gangotri called the Lakshmanjhula was constructed out of hand-spun yarn. Let none despise it. When once they worked at the charkha, they would see that it was what he represented it to be. He was overjoyed to learn that His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore also worked at the spinning-wheel and had thereby set an example to his people.

To the Kaniyars he said that he shared their grief. As long as Hindu society, observed Mahatmaji, kept even one Hindu outside its pale, he would also consider himself as a Panchama. He could not conceive of swaraj without the removal of the taint of untouchability.

He would, however, ask the Kaniyars why it was that they should think they were better than the Panchamas, and why they should desire to be included in the four varnas. His understanding of the Shastras told him that no one varna was superior to another. His impression was that the Brahmin was superior to the others when he maintained his own dharma, which was that of service. The Kshatriyas were likewise superior in their own dharma, of protecting the weak against the strong. There was no superiority by those of one varna preying upon those of the others. The Kaniyars should follow the example of Yudhishtira who, until his dog was allowed to enter swarga, would not enter it. Until the Adi Karnatakas also secured their proper place in Hindu society, they should not be anxious for their own rights. He was glad that the Kaniyars did not eat beef and drink intoxicating liquors.

As regards the question of temple-entry, Mahatmaji said that they as much right to enter the temples as he himself or any other Hindu had. It grieved him to learn that the Kaniyars were kept out of temples. They had however to bear their difficulties patiently. Mahatmaji assured the Kaniyars that His Highness the Maharaja and Government had been doing their utmost to improve the condition of the Kaniyars. One thing which they, along with other Hindus, ought to do was tapascharya and thereby attain atma shuddhi. The Hindu Shastras told them that even Brahma was able to undertake the task of creation by means of tapascharya. Parvati, the consort of Parameshwara, got him for her husband by tapascharya. The Kaniyars likewise could wrest all their rights by tapascharya.

In reply to the address of the Gorakshana Mandali, Mahatmaji said he was pleased to learn that in Mysore Hindus and Muslims were living in perfect amity and concord. It pleased him also to learn that the majority of the Muslims were also with the Hindus on the question of the prevention of cow-slaughter. He congratulated both the communities and wished that all the communities in India would follow the example of Mysore and maintain cordiality of relationship with each other. He had already stated his views on the question of legislation for cow-protection. In those States in which the majority of the Muslims were with the Hindus, the State, observed Mahatmaji, was justified in legislating for the prevention of cow-slaughter. So long as those who espoused the cause of cow-protection did no constructive work for preventing cow-slaughter, they could not be said doing any useful work. He had been trying to tell them why it should be done. As without knowledge mukti was not possible, so in the matter of cow-protection, mere blind devotion would not do. In his writings and speeches, he had discussed the question and they should all study them.

In conclusion, Mahatmaji thanked the various bodies for the addresses presented to him that day. He appealed to the ladies to buy khaddar and to show their interest in hand-spinning. The meeting terminated, as it had commenced, with national songs.

The Hindu, 25-7-1927

250. NOTES

THE LATE SIR GANGA RAM

The death of Sir Ganga Ram removes from our midst an able and practical agriculturist, a great philanthropist and a friend of the widow. Though advanced in years, Sir Ganga Ram had the energy of youth. His optimism was equal to the obstinacy with which he held on to his views. I had the privilege of coming in fair contact with him recently. And though we could not agree on several matters, I recognized in him a sincere reformer and a great worker. And although, with all the respect due to his age and experience, I expressed my dissent from many of his views with energy and insistence, his affection for me, whom he regarded comparatively to him as a young man of but yesterday, grew with my opposition to some of his extraordinary views on Indian poverty. He was so eager for long discussions with me, and so hopeful of weaning me from the error of my ways, that he offered to take me to England at his own expense, and promised to drive all the nonsense out of my head. Though I could not accept the offer which he had seriously meant, I wrote to him on the eve of his departure, promising to see him and undertaking to convert him to the creed of the spinning-wheel, which he thought was fit only to be burnt as firewood. The reader may well imagine my grief therefore over the news of his sudden death. But it is a death which we could all wish to have. For he went to England not on a pleasure trip, but on what he considered to be a peremptory duty. He has therefore died in harness. India has every reason to be proud of having a man like Sir Ganga Ram as one of her distinguished sons. I tender both my congratulations and condolences to the family of the deceased reformer.

CONGRESS PRESIDENT FOR 1928

The election of Dr. Ansari as President of the National Assembly for the coming year is a foregone conclusion. There is no one on the national horizon to challenge the election. Dr. Ansari is as good an Indian as he is a Mussalman. He has been never suspected of fanaticism. He has been continuously Joint Secretary of the Congress for years. His recent efforts to promote union are well known. And as a matter of fact, had I not stood in the way at Belgaum, Shrimati Sarojini Devi at Cawnpore and Sjt. Srinivasa Iyengar at Gauhati, Dr. Ansari would have been elected on any of these occasions. For his name was on everybody’s lips when these elections took place. But special reasons postponed Dr. Ansari’s claim, and it now seems that fates had conspired to postpone the election so that he might come in when he was most wanted. If any possible scheme of Hindu-Mulsim unity is to be found acceptable to both the parties, Dr. Ansari undoubtedly is the man to pilot such a scheme through the Congress. I respectfully dissent from the view that in a Congress which is predominantly Hindu, a Hindu should be the President, so that such a scheme might be claimed to have whole-hearted acceptance by the Hindus. On the contrary, nothing can be more auspicious for the inauguration of such a scheme than that, in spite of the poisonous atmosphere prevailing in the country, a national association containing a preponderating majority of Hindus should unanimously and whole-heartedly elect a Mussalman as its President. That fact by itself would be an earnest of the Hindu desire for such unity. And of all the Mussalman nationalists, there is no Musalman more respected than Dr. Ansari by the Mussalmans in general. It is, therefore, in my opinion, in every way desirable, that Dr. Ansari should guide the National Congress during the coming year. For it is not merely the passing of a scheme that is wanted, but a proper working of it is, perhaps, more necessary than its acceptance by the two parties. And assuming that a scheme acceptable to both is passed, ceaseless watch will be required during the coming year as to its operation. Dr. Ansari is the most fitted for this work. I hope, therefore, that all the provinces will unanimously recommend Dr. Ansari’s name for the highest honour that is in the gift of the National Assembly.

KHADI INUDAIPUR

Some time ago the daily Press published the news that khadi workers in Bijolia were arrested and that the manager of the khadi organization there was required to give an undertaking that he would give notice to the authorities of any person coming to him. On receiving this information Sheth Jamnalalji proceeded to Udaipur to ascertain the true situation. Having seen the authorities in Udaipur and then having gone to Bijolia, Jamnalalji came to Bangalore for attending the meeting of the Council of the All-India Spinners’ Association, and the South India Khadi Exhibition. During the Bangalore visit, he told me that it was quite true that two khadi workers had been arrested in Bijolia, and that they were arrested not for doing khadi work, but under the suspicion that they were meddling with the politics of the State. The authorities assured Jamnalalji that they not only did not wish to interfere with khadi work, but that they welcomed khadi workers, and that they were even prepared to give khadi work substantial help under well-defined conditions. Jamnalalji then saw the local authorities in Bijolia, and it has now been arranged, that no undertaking is to be taken from the khadi workers, it being understood between Jamnalalji and the local authorities, that the khadi workers will not directly or indirectly take part in or interfere with the politics of the State, and that they will confine themselves merely to the organization of the people for khadi production and sales. Jamnalalji had no hesitation in giving the undertaking for the simple reason that it has been the uniform and invariable practice of the Charkha Sangh to confine its work in the Indian States purely to khadi work.

Young India, 21-7-1927
251. STARVING MUNICIPAL BOARDS

The brief address, that Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel delivered before the First Conference held in Gujarat of its Municipalities and Local Boards, is worthy of study by everyone interested in the efficient working of Municipalities, Local Boards and District Boards. It is packed with facts as startling as they are disturbing. On the one hand, he says, the responsibilities of these bodies have been increased by conferring on them larger rights, and on the other, the means of discharging those responsibilities have been somehow or other curtailed. Himself being President of one of the first class Municipalities of India, he has a long record of municipal service behind him. Even the Government have been obliged to give his administration of Ahmedabad Municipality unstinted and unmixed praise. He has slaved for his Municipality as few persons have done. Like Phirozeshah Mehta, having accepted the chair, he has held the work of his office to be far more important for him than any other national work, no matter how urgent or greater in extent it might be. Having made the choice of his dharma, he has preferred it, even though a superior has often called for the exercise of his singular abilities and powers of application. His address, therefore, needs to be studied carefully by everyone concerned. He backs his assertions with concrete facts which anybody may challenge. He thinks that the 157 Municipalities of the Bombay Presidency are economically in straightened circumstances. In some cases, he says, the salaries of municipal teachers are in arrears. Their incomes are really inadequate for the work before them. Their sanitary measures have to be held in abeyance for want of funds. Compulsory education schemes are shelved for similar reasons. He adduces in support of many of his statements his own painful experience, and he severely criticizes the Government’s niggardly policy in connection with Municipalities.

The President is as unsparing of the citizens as he is of the Government. He exclaims:

Citizens of our cities regulate their lives as if they were living not in cities but in villages, and therefore, many houses have no sanitary accommodation or receptacle reserved for collection of rubbish. They do not hesitate to keep their cattle anyhow, though living in crowded quarters. Shepherds bring their droves of cattle and plant them in the midst of cities with the greatest unconcern. Generally speaking, people are indifferent about observing simple rules of health and sanitation. They neither know how to observe them for themselves or for the sake of their neighbours. It is common experience to see them shoving rubbish on to their neighbour’s yards. They do not hesitate to throw from their heights rubbish or water on to the streets heedless of the passers-by. They would spit anywhere, they would perform their natural functions anywhere. The condition of villages is no better. Rubbish-heaps meet your gaze on approaching them. Village ponds become stinking cess-pools, and soaking dirt near village wells is a common feature.

Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel says, and most people would agree with him, “that it would be criminal to look to the Government for help in such matters”.

I suppose that he has purposely refrained from touching in his address upon the petty intrigues that go on in Municipalities, and make the work of the real worker and reformer almost an impossibility. Some of the foremost workers tried, but to meet severe disappointment. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru in Allahabad, Babu Rajendra Prasad in Patna found intrigue to be too trying for them. Deshbandhu Chittaranjan Das strove manfully against heavy odds, and the responsibility nearly crushed him. The fact is that the municipal voter has not yet become alive to a sense of his civic responsibility. He does not regard himself as in any way responsible for the well-being of all the citizens. Our educational system is not designed to give an object-lesson in corporate responsibility. Municipal councillors therefore need feel responsible to no one.

In the heyday of Non-co-operation, I ventured to suggest that if the people had really developed a sense of civic responsibility, three-fourths of the municipal work could be done without Government’s assistance or patronage. I showed by taking facts and figures of municipal work in Mehmadabad, that the citizens could manage their municipal work with half the cost without having a statutory Municipality. And I showed too that a statutory Municipality became a necessity only when the councillors had no co-operation from the people, or when they wished to force their reform schemes down the throats of unwilling citizens. They needed in a small place like Mehmadabad no elaborate machinery to light their streets, to clean their latrines, and their roads, and to manage their schools, and there could be no questions of police, if the citizens were all good and pure, or if they had a citizen-guard for guarding peaceful citizens against thieves, loafers or hooligans. Those men who are real servants of the people, would become municipal councillors for the sake of service and not for the sake of gaining fame or engaging in intrigues and finding employment for their needy friends or relatives. What is wanted, therefore, is zealous education of the people on the part of workers, not merely by means of speeches, but through silent social service rendered without the slightest expectation of reward, even in the shape of thanks, but on the contrary, with every expectation of receiving the execration and worse of a public enraged over any attempt to make it give up its superstitions or insanitary habits. I know of a poor sanitary inspector, who was very nearly lynched for his zeal in impartially getting hold of all the culprits who with criminal indifference dirtied the streets of the town, whose sanitation the poor man was paid to guard.

Young India, 21-7-1927

252. ‘G’ WARD D. C. C. KHADI BHANDAR

Sjt. M. N. Padweker of ‘G’ Ward District Congress Committee, Bombay, draws my attention to the omission from the list of khadi bhandars published in these columns of this bhandar. I hasten to rectify the unintended omission. Such omissions are bound to occur whilst the All-India Spinners’ Association is trying to secure an exhaustive list of khadi bhandars within its knowledge.

In his letter, the writer says:

The shop was about to be closed for want of good sales; but the energetic efforts of some of the workers, who took up hawking khadi on Sundays and holidays, the only days they could spare being employed for their maintenance on week days, have saved it. In Bombay, this is the only shop which endeavours to take khadi to every door; and the workers are quite confident that in the near future this bhandar will have taken the message of khadi to every house in the city and suburbs.

I wish the workers every success.

Young India, 21-7-1927
253. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

MYSORE,
July 21, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. I shall try to secure Shanti’s room for you if it is at all possible.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 5253. Courtesy: Mirabehn

254. LETTER TO S. V. KAUJALGI

AS AT KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 21, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Owing to the touring, I have not been able to overtake it. I have shown it to Gangadharrao, and I see that though you are both servants of the country, you are temperamentally so hopelessly different or seem to me.

I have not resumed the tour with full confidence. I simply felt that what little strength I had gathered might be carefully used for finishing in a mild form the programme that had already been mapped out and for realizing the khadi collections. The tour was undertaken also purely in the interest of khadi. I had neither the desire nor the capacity for doing general propaganda work in the existing state of the country. For me, khadi is my propaganda. For if that one thing can be shown to be a thorough success, everything else will follow. My idea is that we must have at least one constructive item made a demonstrable success on a wide scale. As it is, the people seem to have lost confidence in themselves, and have made up their minds that they can succeed in no constructive effort.

Gangadharrao is a wholehogger like myself for khadi. I would, therefore, let him take me to those parts which may be promising either for khadi production, or for sale, or for collections for khadi. I would therefore not ask you to join me in the tour, but would expect you to give Gangadharrao or khadi work such help as you can be way writing to friends in the places I may visit.

Mysore will take me up to the end of August, and if I feel at all strong enough, I shall do the Tamil Districts after. For Karnatak, I am not likely therefore to be ready, if at all this year, before the middle of October. But I should know definitely only after the Mysore tour is finished. I am asking everywhere for reduction of the programme to a minimum and avoidance of places which can be avoided.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. S. V. KAUJALGI
BIJAPUR

From a Photostat: S. N. 12612

255. LETTER TO Y. M. PARNERKAR

MYSORE,
July 21, 1927

DEAR PARNERKAR,

I have secured the forms that are kept in the Palace Diary at Mysore for some guidance to us. I enclose them herewith. I had a chat with Maganlal to the effect that we should have an accurate record of all the observations that we may make. These forms may help you to draw up something necessary. Of course I would like our forms to be kept in Hindi or Gujarati.

Yours sincerely,

Encl. 1

From a microfilm: S. N. 12920
256. LETTER TO K. P. PADMANABHA IYER

AS AT KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 21, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Do you recommend the diet mentioned in your letter on the strength of extensive experiences and experiments? And, if you do, I would like you to give me an idea of the experiments you have made. Have you considered the real values of banana and tender coconut-milk? Is it not a fact that banana and coconut contain little or no protein; whereas, milk contains comparatively a fair amount of protein? And is it not also a fact that coconut fat is less digestible because less assimilable than animal fact, that is, ghee? Could you recommend coconut-milk in the place of cow’s milk for babies?

Yours sincerely,

SJT. K. P. PADMANABHA IYER
SUB ASST. SURGEON
A. E. DISPENSARY
PUDUKKOTTAI
VIA TUTICORIN

From a photostat: S. N. 14193

257. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

MYSORE,

Ashadha Vad 7, Thursday [July 21, 1927]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL.²

It seems Chi. Maitri suffers from bad health from time to time. She may need immediate treatment. If necessary, show her to the doctor.

Ramachandra has left. Even then, do not hesitate to lay off those who are still there. Jamnalalji and Maganlal would have arrived there. So, do whatever is necessary and do not worry and save money.

¹ From the combination of place-name, Gujarati day and month and Thursday in the dateline, the year appears to be 1927. In no other year was Gandhiji at Mysore on Ashadha Vad, corresponding to a Thursday. In 1927, it corresponded to July 21.
² The letter is in a different hand but the subscription is by Gandhiji.
Take proper care of your ear. I would like you to spend two months in Almora. At present, I have little time either for writing or dictating letters.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32874

258. SPEECH TO ADI KARNATAKAS, MYSORE

[July 21, 1927]

I am both happy and unhappy to meet you. I am happy because I have had occasion to purify myself by having met you, but I am unhappy that for health and other reasons I have to reconcile myself to staying in palaces, although I know full well the miserable conditions in which you live. Truth or God whose votary I am tells me every moment that my place is not in palaces but among you. But this may be a temporary fit of desire for renunciation. It may be that the moment I leave these surrounding I will forget you and your cottages, but it is also possible, and let me hope that a day will come, when God will give me the strength to do the thing I prize so much. Today I have just come to assure you that there is an ever-increasing band of workers interested in and striving for your welfare. I congratulate the Brahmin lady who has dedicated herself to your service. It is my firm faith that in the near future Hinduism will be purged of the stain of untouchability. There is no one high or low in the sight of God, and he who considers himself superior to another is described by the Shastras as foolish. But so far as you are concerned, I am quite sure that your salvation is in your hands. How can you, being Hindus, whose duty it is to protect the cow, eat beef and carrion? It is because it is cheap, I am told. Well, nothing is cheap that holds religion cheap, nothing is dear that holds religion dear. I tell you I find it difficult to persuade the orthodox to mix with you, for they tell me, that you are given to beef-eating, liquor and the like. If you will therefore cleanse yourselves you will make work easy for me. Don’t retort that the touchables are no better. They are no better, I know, but they may not listen through their pride, you need not imitate them. You have to raise yourselves. You therefore have to purify yourselves. And if you do, no power on earth can stop your onward march.

Young India, 4-8-1997

1 From a report in The Hindu, 25-7-1927
259. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI

BANGALORE,
Ashadh Vad 8, Samvat 1983, July 21, 1927

CHI. KUSUM,

About Haribhai what shall I write to you? You are not alone in your loss. Many others share the grief. But one must bear one’s grief. Everyone departs at the appointed time. We too shall do that. I need not have written even this to you, for Bhai Najuklal tells me that you have shown great courage. And that befits one who has been trained by Haribhai, because you were more his pupil than his wife.¹

What do you wish to do now? I do not know if your parents are alive. Let me know your position. If you wish to live in the Ashram, let me know that too. Write to me without any reservations.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—Kusumbehn Desaine, p. 3

260. LETTER TO NAJUKLAL N. CHOKSI

[July 22, 1927]

BHAISHRI NAJUKLAL,

I got your letter. Before that, I had received Dr. Chandulal’s telegram and had sent a reply to it. It must have been received there.

Please hand over the enclosed letter² to Chi. Kusum. Let me know all the facts about her. I hope Chi. Moti and the child keep well.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. N. 12140-A

¹ Vide also “Death of a Satyagrahi”, 7-8-1927.
² Vide the preceding item.
261. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR
Ashdh Vad 10 [July 23, 1927]

BHAI RAMESHWARDAS,

Your letter. I am writing to Nanasaheb Deo. The venture just undertaken is highly commendable. Nanasaheb will write to me if any help from Vinoba or Kakasaheb is needed for this work.

Keep Ramanama firm in your heart.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 184

262. SPEECH AT FAREWELL MEETING, MYSORE
July 23, 1927

In the course of his speech, Mahatmaji thanked the citizens of Mysore for their contribution and proceeded to observe that their leading citizen, Sowcar D. Banumaiya, had given Rs. 1,501 and to him he had given his word that his contribution would be used only for the poor in this State. It was his desire and that of his co-workers that whatever was collected in Mysore should if possible be spent in Mysore. It was however the usual thing, where there was not an adequate number of the poor, or where there was no scope for encouraging the manufacture of khadi, to spend the amount collected in another part of the country, where poverty was acute, and where they could not raise any fund. For example, in Utkal Province, where the people were extremely poor and miserable, and where consequently they could not raise any fund, funds raised elsewhere had to be spent on khadi work and thereby for feeding the poor of Utkal.

Bombay and Cutch had subscribed large sums, but not a pie could be spent in Bombay. All that was collected there was spent elsewhere. He had collected lakhs of rupees from his Marwari friends in Marwar, but they were not spent there.

They must bear in mind one thing, that South India and North India are not separate, and that in South India, Andhra, Tamilnad and Karnataka are not separate. They should never think that there is no sort of connection or relationship between these, or between North India and South India. They should all make effort for the prosperity of Karnataka. It was not merely for Karnataka, but for the progress and prosperity of the whole country.

As regards the sums raised in the town, and especially that one on the way to Krishnarajasagara, viz., Rs. 51 given at the Tuberculosis Sanatorium, he saw the patients there and they had left a deep impression on his mind. To use Pandit Malaviyaji’s expression, their gift was suddha cowrie given with a pure heart. He had no idea they would offer him anything, and when such pure gift came up [of] its own accord there was a heavy responsibility on those entrusted with it. That was not the only suddha cowrie he had received. He had been daily praying to God that not a pie should be mis-spent, that every pie may be utilized for the cause. The accounts may be examined not merely by the donors, but by the public, and mistakes and mis-handling pointed out. If they slept away, if they gave no thought to it, those that handled the fund today might die, and there would be none to look to its administration or to carry on the work.

1 Vide “Letter to Rameshwardas Poddar”, before 5-6-1927 and 12-6-1927.

In India there were many institutions, many charitable institutions existing for promoting dharma. The funds of not a few of these were used for personal ends. If the public knew their responsibility such things should be impossible. Mahatmaji appealed to one and all to see the amount raised for the cause of the charkha was properly spent. In order, however, to ensure the success of the undertaking, they needed men who had a conscience and a sense of their duty and responsibility.

There is no lack of efficiency among the people of Karnataka. You have a distinguished engineer, you have distinguished musicians, you have a distinguished artist, and many others that I could name in various other spheres. I want you now to produce a distinguished spinning expert. You have three khadi shops here. I wish you had need for them and even more, but today I know, and this meeting is an eloquent proof of it, that there is no need for three shops. Even many of you who are sympathetically inclined towards khadi are not wearing it. Have therefore instead of those three, one efficient khadi shop and organize it properly. There are many institutions where the charkha has been introduced. I was told that His Highness’ bodyguards were spinning, but I also know how inefficiently this work is going on. In all those institutions and for the bodyguards you must engage a spinning expert. Bad yarn, like bad music, is good for nothing. I would like to assure those who would serve Daridranarayana that there is music, art, economy and joy in the spinning-wheel. I have seen quite a number of institutions in Mysore—the Princess Krishnarajamanni Sanatorium where I expected nothing, but where the patients insisted on my receiving their genuine token of love for the poor millions; the home for the blind and the 1 This and the preceding paragraphs are from The Hindu, 25-7-1927.

---

2 Dr. M. Vishveshvarayya
3 Venkatappa
mute of which the blind inmates have entertained me to soulful music these two days; the home for the destitute and the infirm as also your school for Adi Karnataka boys. These are proofs of the Maharaja’s humanitarian spirit, but I may tell you that you have to extend it still further. The blind and the infirm have, thanks to our charitable instincts, not to go without food. But there are millions of our villagers, who cannot go out to beg, who solely depend on a fraction of an acre of land each, and who have often to go without food. We are responsible for their starvation and their poverty. In Mysore which is the home of humanitarian and philanthropic institutions I would urge to have some provision for the toiling, starving millions.

You are doubly fortunate. You have a glorious climate and wonderful natural scenery, and you have a ruler, who from all accounts is good and benevolent and always thinking of the welfare of his people. In a State like this there should not be a single beggar or a single man suffering from starvation and impoverishment. I saw the Krishnarajasagara dam today and was delighted to see that wonderful engineering feat of Sir M. Vishveshvarayya, the second I am told of its kind in the world. In a home of such great enterprises I beg of you to make some provision for Daridranarayana. I thank you for the love you have showered on me, and I pray that I may be worthy of it.

Young India, 11-8-1927

263. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 24, 1927

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I have your beautiful letter. Let nothing be done in a hurry. I wrote four days ago at length to Thadani and asked him to share the letter with you.¹

Gujarat Vidyalaya at present is out of the question. But if you will place yourself in my hands of course, I have many uses for you. But that is neither here nor there. Discuss everything firmly and calmly with everyone who has the slightest influence over you and then see where you stand. You know what lasting association with me means. Though you may never have to mount the gallows, you must be prepared to mount them as you would mount a throne or a professorial chair.

¹ Vide “Letter to N. V. Thadani”, 19-7-1927

Thadani did not understand my previous letter at all, or my letters to you. I do not know how my last letter to him will fare.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G. N. 877; also S. N. 12616

264. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

July 24, 1927

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I have your letter which I was daily expecting.

I understand your situation. You must finish the contract with Thadani first. You have now taken up Sindhi Sahitya Sabha and of course you could not possibly refrain from the flood relief service. When you are free from these obligations you should write to me. Let there be no haste this time. You should discuss the thing fully with your wife and mother-in-law. If while you are testing yourself, you feel more attracted to any work there rather than being at my beck and call, you shall be absolved. If you come back to me, you should do so because you cannot do otherwise. After all you will give a good account of yourself wherever you are. Only I had my eye on you as one of the ‘chosen few’. But that is not a forced growth. Being in that state must give the greatest satisfaction to the soul. I would therefore like you to test yourself through and through before you return to me. It won’t be a bed of roses. Though I have many plans, I do not know where I should put you, even if you came to me today. All I know is that I should put you where there is the greatest heat.

You may share this letter with as many friends as you like.

I am sorry for Thadani. I know that he won’t misunderstand me long. My bitter language was not from anger but from love.

Please ask Jairamdas if he is in need of funds. Have you many workers for the flood relief? I see that where we have not enough true workers, funds are useless.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G. N. 873
MY DEAR RAIHANA,

I have your letter. As you think that the matters between you and Mother are fixed up, I am not writing to her or to Father, but look to you to smooth your way, which you will do if you know your own mind and adhere to it with firmness though with greatest gentleness.

We are not bound to patronize any industry whatsoever. But when in satisfying our vital wants we are bound to patronize some industry, we naturally patronize that which supports our neighbours who need our help most. This answers your question.

With love,

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G. N. 9605

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter of the 11th instant. I hope that “your prayer to lead me to true light” will be answered.

What passage in Young India made you think that I considered the treatment I received from the Congress in 1901 was “beggarly”? Anyway I certainly did not expect nor had any right to expect better treatment than I received from everyone. I do not recall the introduction you refer to, but I have referred elsewhere to the fatherly treatment I received from Surendranath Banerjea. Sir Dinsha Wacha had a perfect right to stop me as he did. It would be intolerable if every youngster, because he has rendered some slight service, claimed the privilege which old and tried servants of the nation should have. Gokhale’s name you will find repeatedly mentioned in these chapters for the simple reason that he singled me out for his special attention, not because I think that deserved it or because he alone gave me my due when others failed. Can you not see that I have endeavoured to show in the chapters that the connection between Gokhale and myself was spontaneous even as it is between husband and wife? It would be a sorrowful thing for the world if a woman, because she happens to attract a particular person and not others, were to consider that she has been slighted by the others and her merit recognized only by one man. Can you not see that these things illustrate the mysterious working of nature, and that these affections can only be somewhat accounted for by the doctrine of previous birth and previous connection?

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

K. T. CHAKRAVARTI
CHITTAGONG

From a photostat: S. N. 12615

267. A LETTER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 24, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am certainly sorry that General Dyer is suffering from paralysis. I do not think that his paralysis has any necessary connection with his action in Jallianwala Bagh. Have you considered the impliction of such beliefs? After all people whom we consider to be good and pure have also been known to have suffered from serious diseases. My own case is in point. My dysentery, appendicitis and this time a mild attack of paralysis must have been known to you. I should be very sorry if some good Englishmen were to think these diseases were due to my fierce opposition as it must appear in their estimation to the English Government. Though I believe that every disease is a direct result of some transgression of Nature’s laws either in this birth or the previous, we have got no data to know invariably the transgressions which led to these diseases.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: S. N. 14194
268. LETTER TO KHURSHID

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 24, 1927

This one line to acknowledge your letter. I was thinking why I have not heard from any of you. How I wish you were with me during this trip because this is a most beautiful country. There is much art here to be seen, and very fine music.

You will tell me what happens ultimately about your getting a post as a music teacher in an Indian State.

I am keeping good health.

Yours sincerely,

MISS KHURSHID
NEPEAN SEA ROAD
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S. N. 14195

269. LETTER TO KUVALAYANAND

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 24, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am taking all the care I can of the body and the tour is taken as gently as possible. I quite agree with you that if I had not moved at all, perhaps, it would have been better. But as the doctor here encouraged me, I felt that I had no right to postpone the tour. After all one has got to take risks in this life and know... a body which must perish one day. And, if any mishap occurs, I shall certainly not blame the yogic exercises in the slightest degree but I shall blame myself for having tried an experiment which was fraught with some danger.

The exercises continue as before. Do please come whenever you can.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S. N. 14196

1 The source has a blank here.
270. LETTER TO SUNDER LAL MATHUR

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 24, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Any clean earth, black or red, but clay will do. The mud poultice should be taken at least for seven days continuously and if it does good, you may continue it till you feel that you have had enough. For dyspesia, a complete fast with copious draughts of water is a fine thing even while earth bandages continue. And if you have the fast, you should clean the bowels once a day by means of enema.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SUNDER LAL MATHUR, B.A., LL.B
Vakil
PIRGHAIB
MORADABAD (U. P.)

From a photostat: S. N. 14197

271. LETTER TO J. W. PETAVEL

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 24, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I shan’t get tired of you, because it is not an easy thing to tire me out; but soon you will have to give me up as a bad case. For even your latest letter does not give me the bread I want.

Which is the brilliant successful model colony referred to in your article? I wish I could persuade you to write less and do more. I have told you what I am doing at Sabarmati. It seems to me to be along the lines suggested by you without the American . . .¹ which is your ideal but not mine. You seem to me to build on insufficient data. For instance, what is the use of your telling me that Germans grow 70,000 grains out of one grain, whereas, we in India grow 70 out of one. For, what applies to Germany does not apply to India and will not for generations to come. I wish too that I could cure you of the habit of stringing together all the distinguished names you can think of, without regard to the relevancy of such stringing. Will you not, like a scientist, appeal to cold reason testing every fact for yourself and enabling the reader to test your tests? Surely you should by this time know that authorities are not required in support of sound propositions except by way of some little stimulation, and they are worse than useless when they are invoked in aid of propositions of doubtful value.

¹ The source has a blank here.

If I was the editor-in-chief of your magazine, nine-tenth of what I read in the specimens you sent me I should score out, and I would require you to rewrite fortifying it with concrete facts, and then I would perhaps still further condense it. Just think what a saving of time it would mean for the busy reader and saving of expense in printer’s ink, compositors’ and proof-readers’ salaries, etc., and the matter thus printed would pass muster even in scientific scale and if it was reasonable, it would sell like hot cakes.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 14198

272. SPEECH AT CIVIC AND SOCIAL PROGRESS ASSOCIATION, BANGALORE

July 24, 1927

FRIENDS.

I have heard of the work of your Association and I am very much pleased. You have today given me an opportunity to learn of your activities and I am gratified to find that one of the prominent among them is the effort that you are making towards the betterment of your Adi Karnatakas here. Though one of the chief ways of achieving the progress of your city is by means of an association such as yours, I can tell you, there is no other punya karma¹ than this work of uplifting your own brothers and sisters known as Adi Karnatakas. But as you yourselves have stated in your address, you have done much in this direction, but much more, very much more remains to be done. You know fully well, the work would never be complete, would never be perfect so long as there is a temple in this land which shuts out your Adi Karnataka brother, and so long as there is one person amongst you who would not allow the Adi Karnataka to approach him as a brother.

¹ Gandhiji’s speech in Hindi was rendered into Kanarese by Gangadharrao Deshpande.

² Meritorious deed

Of course you know the condition of the poor Adi Karnataka and you also know that it is not part of the Hindu dharma to eat the flesh of the cow. On the other hand protection of the cow is enjoined on all by the Hindu dharma. And you who know of this, have you taught this to your brethren in the villages? Ignorance of this Hindu dharma had bred evil habits amongst them who are also Hindus, but they must be made to understand that you are really anxious to help them better their lives according to Hindu dharma. You must all open your hearts to make them understand that. You must do your duty by them if you are true members of the society to which you belong.

Do not think that you have only one duty, the duty to your country to perform. There is also the duty to society and these two are interdependent. You cannot perform the one and neglect the other. You cannot hold them as apart from each other. You will realize that in the uplift of your brethren, in the reform of your social evils, in making your society a real force in the country and in establishing communal harmony, perfect and long-lasting friendship between Hindus and Mussalmans—in all these lies also your duty to country. Thus you will realize that both duties are one for you and if you are to serve your country you must also serve the society to which you belong.

Having realized this you will have to turn your attention to the crying evils of early-marriage system. Do not call it dharma or a thing supported by Shastras that you can marry a little girl fonding on the knee, that it could be straightway married and asked to become a housewife. And yet, I have known many of my friends, learned lawyers and doctors, educated and enlightened men marry girls before they were thirteen. (Laughter) Friends, it is no laughing matter, it is a matter for shame and tears. I tell you, there is no sadder evil in our society than this. You must think of this seriously and not with laughter. Our youth must resolve that they would not marry girls before they are fifteen. It is they who must help in this task of reform. You must all help in this cause, both young and old.

You have doubtless heard of the great name of Ganga Ram'.

1 Vide “Notes”, 21-7-1927.
This great man has done great things in the Punjab by his engineering skill, as your great man, Sir Vishveshvarayya has done here in Mysore. But greater than all these is the work he has done for the cause of widow remarriage. Like that you must also do your bit to help in this cause of the widow. But I ask who is a widow? A widow is a person held in high veneration amongst us but can you say that widowhood has come to a girl of 14 and 15 because she has lost her husband? If a parent, due to poverty or other causes, married his girl of 13 who loses her husband next year or immediately, can you say that she is a widow and that she has to suffer all the miseries of life ever after? Day after day this question has been arresting our attention very vitally and we cannot ignore it or afford to remain indifferent. Do not perpetuate suffering. When you men have got the right to marry again, why do you deny it to your ladies? You must recognize that you have got to restore this right and I ask, will you do this and serve your society most truly?

On last word. I have known that societies like yours confine their activities to the cities. This must not be. You must extend your work beyond your cities, to the villages and hamlets. I ask you to remember this. May God bless your society and its noble efforts.

_The Hindu_, 25-7-1927

---

273. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

_July 25, 1927_

CHI. MIRA,

I have your long letter but none too long for the matters covered by it.

You will guard yourself against the scorpions. Earth should be kept always ready at hand in a receptacle and often exposed to the sun. You should use plenty of it and whenever possible let it directly touch the skin if it is not bruised. It may be renewed every few hours if the pain persists.

Now about the monthly sickness. You perhaps know that observing seclusion is not compulsory at the Ashram. But I am not sure as to what should be exactly done. The women have really to help. For they alone can say what is needed. The untouchability is, I fancy, really due to man’s inability to curb his beastly lust. Untouchability merely as to the act probably did not serve the purpose but when it was complete and became a religious observance, perhaps it came to be respected by man. I wonder how man behaves in the West during this sickness and also how the Mussalman behaves in such circumstances. For the time being you should continue your search and read some literature bearing on it if there is any. If you can correspond with some of your people in the matter, do. And now that you are about this, I shall try to gather what information I can.

I understand what you say about the prayers, etc. I shall wait.

The strain of Mysore was quite bearable.

With love,

BAPU

From a original : C.W. 5254. Courtesy : Mirabehn

274. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day, Ashadh Vad 12 [July 25, 1927]¹

SISTERS,

I wish to devote this letter to the subject of attendance at classes. I find great irregularity in your attendance. In the Ashram, social life and lessons in social service begin with these women’s classes. Therefore, just as we do not give up taking our daily food except when we are ill or because of some extraordinary circumstance, so also we may be absent from the classes only for unavoidable reasons. You have taken a vow to attend the classes regularly. Then how can you break that vow? As the body can be sustained only by observing the rules of bodily health, an institution or society can be sustained only by observing social rules. Will you not, therefore, promise me that you will not absent yourselves except for reasons which no one can question?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3659

¹ The year is inferred from the reference to Gandhiji’s examining the Ashram women’s attendance register.
275. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Silence Day [July 25, 1927]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have received your two letters. Study as much as you like, but take good care of your health.

I think you intend to call on Haribhai’s widow, Chi. Kusum. If you do so, find out what her condition is. I have written a letter to her. What is her wish? Are her parents alive? How old is she, and what is her financial condition? Is she self-controlled or overcome with grief? If you know the background to her marriage, let me know it. If not, try to learn it. I had intended to know about it from Haribhai himself, but he is gone.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : C.W. 616. Courtesy : Vasumati Pandit

276. LETTER TO KUNVARJI PAREKH

Silence Day [July 25, 1927]

CHI. KUNVARJI,

I write this postcard only to tell you that I think of you every day. I get no time to [write]. Ramdas gives me news about you. I hope your mind is at peace.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati S.N. 9703

---

1 From the reference to Haribhai’s demise
2 Vide “Letter to Kusumbehn Desai”, 22-7-1927.
3 From the S.N. Register
DEAR FRIEND,

Sjt. Rajagopalachariar has shown me your letter. I thank you for the warning about the management of Khadi Funds. I do not know what happened to the Khilafat Funds, except that the banker with whom the funds were placed failed. But I may state that I never had anything to do with the management of the Khilafat Fund. For the Khadi Funds, I am certainly responsible. There is a Council of the All-India Spinners’ Association which is entrusted with these Funds and their management. Seth Jamnalal Bajaj who is a very well-known merchant of long standing and a director of several important concerns is the treasurer of the Association. Sjt. Shankerlal Banker who is the son of late Ghelabhai Banker of the Bank of Bombay is the Secretary. The moneys are kept in well-known banks. Proper books of account are kept and they are audited by chartered accountants from time to time. There are inspectors appointed to inspect the accounts of subordinate organizations. Everything that is humanly possible to safeguard the Funds and their proper distribution is being done.

I enclose herewith a copy of the printed report published by the All-India Spinners’ Association in which you will find the audited accounts also. If, after perusal of the report or even before, you have any suggestions to make for further safeguarding the Funds, I shall be thankful to receive them.

With reference to my appeal at the Mahila Samaj for ornaments and calling them streedhan, I do hold very strong views. Ever since I have been in India, and even in South Africa, I have not hesitated to induce sisters both Indian and European to part with their jewellery. As long ago as 1906, I remember the late Surendranath Banerjea having also appealed to the ladies at Lahore, and I remember too that ornaments were showered upon him. I do not feel that in my appeal I am doing anything out of the way. Indeed yours is the first note of

---

1 In reply to his letter dated July 21 in which the addressee had asked “if any committee had been appointed to manage the Khadi Funds”. He had also criticized Gandhiji’s views on streedhan.

2 Vide “Speech at Mahila Samaj, Bangalore”, 13-7-1927.
dissent I have yet had. In fact, many well-to-do friends have been glad of my appeal, and some of them even took me to their homes when I was appealing on behalf of the Tilak Swaraj Fund and asked me to appeal to their womenfolk to part with their ornaments, their intention being to wean the latter from a craving for hoarding and wearing costly jewels. I have been often publicly thanked for having succeeded to some slight extent in introducing simplicity in the households of the rich people of the land. Never has any pressure been brought to bear upon the sisters. In every case where wives have parted with their jewellery, I have presumed the co-operation of their husbands. I have never accepted from little girls anything unless their parents or guardians were consenting parties. Nevertheless, I have believed that it is wrong on the part of husbands to arrogate to themselves the right of dictating what their wives shall or shall not do with their jewellery. It is the one thing which is in their exclusive possession, and I think that they should have the freest right to dispose of them how they will. But this is my own personal opinion and has nothing to do with what has actually happened in practice.

Do you think that because some people, who in their enthusiasm parted with their foreign cloth and allowed them to be burnt, now repent, I should also repent with them for having asked them to do what they did in a moment of lucidity and what it was their sacred duty to have done. If you do, I must again respectfully dissent from you. I had not only no compunction when I made an appeal for burning of foreign cloth, very costly in many instances, but I have not the slightest trace of repentance in me for having got the response I did. I always look forward to that act of burning as one of the many sacred acts I have been privileged by God to be party to.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. M. CHENGIAH CHETTY
CHAMARAJPET
BANGALORE CITY

From a microfilm: S. N. 12618

1 Perhaps a slip for “I always look back on”
278. LETTER TO RAJKISHORI MEHROTRA

BANGALORE,
July 26, 1927

CHI. RAJKISHORI,

Your postcard. Keep up this practice of writing. What are you reading these days? What is your daily routine? How is your health? I am in Bangalore up to August. I am recouping strength.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C. W. 4963. Courtesy: Parashuram Mehrotra

279. LETTER TO JETHALAL JOSHI

BANGALORE,
Ashadh Krishna 13 [July 26, 1927]

BHAJ JETHALALJI,

Your letter. I see no harm—in fact there would be advantage—in chanting the Gayatri mantra while plying the takli, especially when there is sacrificial spinning, i.e., as gesture of sympathy for the poor.

Your wife should visit her father’s place clad in khadi only and if her parents urge her to give up khadi, she should gently convince them. Her parents’ displeasure, she should bear with calm. If she has neither this courage nor the strength to bear her parents’ displeasure she should, as long as it might be necessary in order to please them, wear whatever clothes they give her.

You need not take the vow of having only one meal a day. It is wrong and also harmful to eat at one time a quantity equal to two meals. Of course one should give up the evening meal and eat sparingly at the other meals.

Let me know what present occupation is and also what else you are equipped to do, your educational qualifications and so on. Perhaps you can get good milk from the Ashram. Make enquiries there. Milk from the Ashram cannot be delivered at your residence.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 1355
280. A LETTER

July 26, 1927

Your letter.

If your wife has fallen, I would hold you too responsible for it. You were separated from her. The girl would not have been keen on marrying you nor would she have consented to your separation. If she could not live without sex and went astray, why blame her? When a man errs, his wife puts up with it with suppressed anger. If the son which your wife has borne is not yours, you can sever relationship with her. But I feel you must yourself support the woman. If she abandons you or chooses to live with the other man, you have to bear it. You are not obliged to live with your wife out of a sense of shame. If you intend to live with her, pitying her for falling because you had gone away, that too would not be regarded as immoral. But you can take this step only when the woman has repented for her action and she is going to be happy in your company. If, however, she has become absolutely depraved, it is your duty to abandon her.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

281. SPEECH AT UNITED THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BANGALORE

[July 26, 1927]

The first desideratum was a knowledge of Hindi for those who aspired to be ministers to the masses of the country. I confess that it is the fault of the previous generation who committed us to the medium of English. But you must break the barrier, if you would reach the masses beyond the Vindhy range. As regards the service that can be or should be rendered by you, I don’t think I need speak much, for you have made my task easy by endorsing my mission of the spinning-wheel. You have mentioned the depressed classes, but there is a vast mass of men who are more depressed than the so-called 1 From Mahadev Desai’s article “Talks with Missionaries”. The motto of the college, “Go ye not to be ministered unto, but to minister unto other people”, served as the text of the talk.

2 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
depressed classes, and who constitute the real India. The vast network of railways touches but a fringe of these masses, and if you will travel somewhat outside the railway beat you will visualize them. These railway lines running north to south and east to west are arteries which drain away the wealth of the masses—Lord Salisbury used the word “bleed”—and no return is made to them. We in the cities become partners in the blood-sucking process, which phrase, however bad it may be, truly depicts the state of things. I have something of this class. I have brooded over their wants, and if I was a painter I could draw a picture of them with their blank eyes, without a spark or lustre or life in them. How are we to minister to them? Tolstoy gave the picturesque phrase, “Let us get off the shoulders of our neighbours.” If everyone performs that single operation he would have rendered all service God requires of him. It is a startling proposition, and as you are in a place where you are learning the art of ministry, you must work it out. Build up the premises one on another and see what you arrive at. If you discover any other method than I have suggested of getting off the backs of those poor people, let me know. I am a learner myself, I have no axe to grind, and wherever I see a truth, I take it up and try to act up to it.

A missionary friend from America wrote to me suggesting literary education for the masses instead of the charkha.\(^1\) Well, I felt sorry for him, especially because he had written the letter from the fulness of his heart. I do not think even Jesus knew much of letters, and if the early Christians cultivated literary knowledge, it was in order to perform their ministry better. But I suppose there is no passage in the New Testament in which there is even the slightest emphasis placed on mere literary education as the first condition for people to come to their own. Not that I discount literacy. It is a question of emphasis. It is like a good thing misplaced just like matter which is misplaced becomes dirt. And whenever I see wrong emphasis being placed on a good thing, my soul rises up against it. Before a child has knowledge of letters, it must be fed and clothed and taught the art of feeding itself. I do not want it to be spoon-fed, but self-reliant. Let you children first know the use of their hands and feet. So I say the first condition is to take to them the message of the spinning-wheel.

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to W. B. Stover”, 16-6-1927.

I did not like the expression “patronizing khadi” used by you. It has a bad odour. Will you become patrons or servants? So long as khadi is patronized it will be a fad or fashion, but when it becomes a passion it will be the symbol of service. The moment you begin to use khadi, you begin to serve. During my 35 years’ constant contact with the poor I have found the art of service incredibly simple. It is not learnt in colleges and schools. The spirit of service can be learnt anywhere. Again here it is a question of emphasis. The art itself is as simple as the process whereby Saul became Paul\(^1\). The change came over him with a flash, and immediately there is a change of heart in you, you become ministers. May God help to clear this for you.

Young India, 11-8-1927

---

282. SPEECH AT MYTHIC SOCIETY, BANGALORE

July 26, 1927

FRIENDS,

I do not know whether you can all hear me. I am sorry I cannot raise my voice. I thank you sincerely for your address and garlands and for having brought me to this Temple of Peace. I must confess I feel like a fish out of water, for I have long been out of touch, that touch with literature which this Society rightly expects. For one long unbroken period of 35 years my lot has been cast in less peaceful spheres which have kept me out all literary studies, much as I should have valued it. Except for the short time that I was in prison, I had no other time to turn to literature. I have seen your journal and I congratulate you on your work. You have stated you are interested in research work and I see that your research work has been thorough-going.\(^2\)

I suggest that some one of you should make researches to find out what led to the curse of untouchability to descend upon this land. I wish that the learned men of Mysore, amongst whom there are some of the finest scholars, could find out authorities to show that untouchability could be no part of the Hindu religion, and that our remote ancestors through whom we received the inspiration of the Vedas and who gave us the rich heritage of the Upanishads never believed in untouchability, even as I don’t, and that it is merely a vicious excrescence upon Hinduism. And I tell you that if you can do so, among the many services you have already rendered this will not be by any means the least. Workers like myself say on their own authority that this thing is no part of Hinduism. I am no scholar and have to read the Shastras in the original, by my Hindu soul rises up in revolt against such an abomination. However, I look to you scholars and research students to arm workers like myself with authoritative declarations that would command the attention of pundits, and to furnish workers with evidence so forceful and masterly as would dissolve the orthodox opposition. It should be the proud privilege of your Society to furnish workers with authoritative texts which they could not get anywhere else, and fortify them in their work.

---

\(^2\) This paragraph has been taken from The Hindu, 27-7-1927.

Young India, 18-8-1927
283. LETTER TO J. P. BHANSALI

[After July 26, 1927]¹

I have your letter intended for Young India. At first I laughed over it and dictated a brief note on it and sent it to be typed for Young India. But today I woke up to find myself sorry at the thought of your letter and my laughter disappeared because I see in it a lack of restraint and understanding. I cannot now recall your expressing a difference of opinion with me. I know there were discussions between us but I had thought that in the end you were convinced. But if that is not so, the certificate you grant me in your letter is out of place, and your letter suggests that the mental weakness you mention has been with me from the moment we knew each other. The publicity you have given to my mental weakness does not pain me. But I am hurt because you kept your knowledge of it from me till today and because I see that some matters have been twisted in your letter. Moreover, a telegram from Ahmedabad today says that many activities are at a standstill because of unusually heavy rain and if Young India cannot come out this time the matter already sent is enough to fill the next issue. Nature has, therefore, provided me with enough respite to await your reply. Where you blame me for scribbling away in haste, I do not see even a trace of hurry, but since your letter has hurt me I do feel that I should be in no hurry to write about it. I understand from your last letter that you did not, as usual, hasten to meet me because of your mother’s illness. I want you therefore to call on me if her condition has improved. If you feel that you are not likely to misunderstand me at any point, I do not think you need see me. Write to me if you hold the latter view or send me a telegram, so that I shall certainly publish your letter.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

¹ The source has this letter after the entries for July 26, 1927.
284. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

[Before July 27, 1927]\(^1\)

CHI. MATHURADAS,

Shankaran brings you this letter. I expect him to give you as much satisfaction as Pyarelal did. If Pyarelal wishes he may visit me here before going to the Ashram.

It is a great comfort to me that you are enjoying good health. My going there is of course out of the question. But the air here is not much inferior to what you have there. Taramati should write to me. Dilip will have started romping around.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

285. LETTER TO J. P. BHANSALI

[July 27, 1927]\(^2\)

Your letter (or ultimatum?) to hand. My letter appears to have crossed yours. I urge you not to act in haste. You do not think you are in a hurry because you are impatient to start your fast. However, I do feel that you are in too great a hurry. If you accept the moral position at any rate that when you take such a step you should do so in my presence, please withdraw your ultimatum. I have received three strong letters urging me to dissuade you from undertaking this fast. One is from Bhai Kishorelal, another from Ramniklal and the third from Mirabehn. Mirabehn met you after a long interval, became very sad on seeing you and found your countenance “queer”. She found even your talk “queer” and felt that you had become extremely “emotional”. All these words in quotes are hers. The letter was in Hindi but she had used the English words in it. I suggested to her that she write to you directly.\(^3\) I have received her reply also and she says that she dare not go to that extent lest she should hurt you. In spite of my reporting all these three opinions, if I were near you and you could persuade me, I would grant you permission to undertake the fast

---

\(^1\) The addressee received the letter on July 27, 1927

\(^2\) Vide the succeeding item.

\(^3\) Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 17-7-1927.
and also bless you. But since I am so far away, I must also let these three letters make their impact on my mind. Your letter appears to contradict your own earlier letter because you were till now hoping for my permission, and I presumed that you would not undertake the fast if you do not have it. But in your last letter you say nothing about my permission, you no more expect it but seek my blessings. If you are hoping for my permission, I shall not be able to grant it. How could I permit what I do not consider right? Personally I think even if you have my permission for your course of action, both you and I must obtain the permission of the Managing Committee. If there is anyone who can be free to do such things after obtaining such permission, it is perhaps myself because, being the founder of the Ashram and initiator of the new and vital experiments in satyagraha, I may be expected to have such privilege, but I do have some doubt in this regard too. Even I should not have the right to take any steps that might harm the institution once it has been founded. I was mindful of this also when I had undertaken the seven days’s fast. And even about that, there was some talk.

I have indulged in so much autobiography in order to make you see your duty. I am one of those who believe that there is a place for a fast like yours in certain situations. But I see clearly from this distance that yours is not such a situation and how can I bless a thing which I regard as improper? Hence if you would be persistent I can only say that I shall bear with your persistence and acquiesce in the inevitable unwillingly and painfully. Before you take any step, discuss the matter with the Managing Committee with a calm mind and also with those whom you regard as your personal friends. Consider your duty towards Lilabehn; if she consents to your step, I would not value her consent; but if she opposes, I would value it greatly because you have sheltered her. If you can and will withdraw your ultimatum and give me an assurance that without my permission you will never embark on a fast, I am ready, at present through correspondence and personally if necessary and when an occasion offers, to discuss the ethics of fasting and whatever points you have raised in your earlier letter. I wish our friends and the Managing Committee to read this letter and you should give it to them for reading. May God help you.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
286. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 27, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. Of course you know that Wardha is but a branch of Sabarmati. But Wardha has to specialize for discipline and Vinoba is developing it without troubling me and without being hampered by me. Nor has Wardha the same changes to face or new experiments to make as Sabarmati has. And then Sabarmati has no one mind uncontrolled by outside force to change it as Wardha has. But for all practical purposes, Sabarmati and Wardha must be considered as one and indivisible.

But now your mind must be freed for the next two months from even having to think of these places. Your sole concern during these precious two months is to concentrate on your work and on your health.

I have an ultimatum from Bhansali that he proposes to commence his long fast as from the 6th of August. I have warned him against it and implored him not to undertake it at least till I have gone to the Ashram and had an opportunity of discussing the thing with him. The letter goes today. I have mentioned your opinion also about his proposed fast and about his appearance. I hope he will listen to my entreaty.

What food are you taking daily?

With love,

BAPU

SRIMATI MIRABAI
SATYAGRAHASHRAM
WARDHA

From the original : C.W. 5225. Courtesy : Mirabehn
287. LETTER TO FRANCISCA STANDENATH

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 27, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am glad you have come in such close touch with the friends to whom I gave an introduction note for you. I have regarded them as among the best of the wealthy people of my acquaintance.

From your letter I suspect that you regard cotton-spinning as the only spinning. But it is not so. Wool-spinning is also important, though nothing like cotton-spinning, for the simple reason that millions live on the plains and hardly require woollen clothing. By all means do cotton-spinning when you can; but why not wool-spinning in the absence of cotton-spinning. And then the woollen yarn may be woven for your own use. You must know that I myself do use hand-spun wool without the slightest compunction. Even as I am dictating this letter, I have covered myself with a woollen blanket, hand-spun of course. It is fairly cold where I am recuperating. I am asking Swami Anand to send your some hand-spun wool, and I am also asking him to send you a blanket piece which you can either use as a blanket or for making blouses, etc. It won’t be smooth to the touch, but then you won’t need to wear it next to the skin.

I note that you are persevering in your study of Sanskrit and other languages.

Whenever you can spare some money, you should both come to India, if only for a season and see things for yourself. You will then perhaps get a true perspective and probably be enabled to modify some of the exaggerated notions you might have about India in general and the Ashram and myself in particular. I am anxious that you should know things as they are, or at least as they appear to you at close quarters and not as they seem to you from a distance.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 12527

\(^1\) n reply to her letter dated July 26
\(^2\) Ranchhodlal Amritlal Thaker and Bhogilal Thaker
288. LETTER TO TARINI PRASAD SINHA

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 27, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am asking Young India office to send the Manchester Guardian copy of Young India to Mr. Dickes personally.

As to the suggested change, I have not yet felt the force of Mr. Dickes’ remarks. With me it is a matter of “experiments with truth”. But not knowing the use of English words so well as an Englishman, I would like Mr. Dickes, if he can find time, to explain more fully his reasoning.

As to what Mr. Dickes calls the “God stunt”, I can only say in all humility that it is a precious fact with me much truer than the fact that I am writing to you.

Will you please pass this letter on to Mr. Dickes?

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 12529

289. LETTER TO SHAPURJI SAKLATVALA

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 27, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I should love to respond, as I know you would like me to, to your earnest call; but I see that we look at things differently. Pray do not think that my labour work unlike khaddar work is merely confined to Ahmedabad. If labour elsewhere will accept my guidance, I would certainly organize it all over. But I am content with guiding Ahmedabad and hope that if Ahmedabad proves successful, it will be copied by the whole of India.

There is no analogy between the khaddar movement and the labour movement. If khaddar like labour were conducted by several distinct organizations, probably I would be compelled to restrict my activities to those organizations only that would listen to me. I have no magical power for bringing labour organization out of disorganization. The organic touch with labour all over India I have because

1 The addressee had passed on to Gandhiji a suggestion of E. W. Dickes that the title of The Story of My Experiments with Truth be changed into “The Story of My Schooling with Truth”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
wherever I go labour flocks round me. But that touch is not strong enough to enable me to organize it after my own fashion. I give you my assurance that the moment I feel that I can usefully come in, I shall not hesitate to offer my services to the all-India organization.

About the Khaddar Fund, I can only say you have written without knowledge. Even law will prevent me from using the Khaddar Fund for any other than the advertised purpose even if my conscience becomes elastic enough to permit me to use it otherwise.

I read the other day in the papers that you had a slight operation performed on you and that you were already on the road to recovery. I hope that you have now fully recovered.

I wrote to you only the other day about your own personal affairs which shall not escape my attention.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 12533

290. LETTER TO C. V. VAIDYA
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 27, 1927

DEAR MR. VAIDYA,

I must thank you for your delightful letter with its humorous touches. I am not sending it to Pandit Satavalekar, but drinking in the facts, or what is a better term, your opinions—for are not facts stated but opinions,—all for myself.

In the course of my practice, I have so often envied the poor judges who, if they were honest, I knew, must have been hard put to it for coming to a just decision. And in spite of knowing this thing, I have become a self-constituted judge and much trying on account of my ignorance of the originals to know the correct interpretation or practice of the Vedas or practice of our remote forefathers. Of course I don’t go so far remote as to the monkeys as Darwin would have as our remote ancestors. And I am safe from destruction in the midst of the war of opposite opinions by my sane belief that it is our right irrespective of the interpretation of the written Vedas or the practice of our ancestors to regulate our practice in the light of modern research and the behest of our own conscience.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. C. V. VAIDYA
POONA CITY

From a microfilm: S.N. 12621

VOL. 39 : 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927 303
291. LETTER TO S. RAMANATHAN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 27, 1927

MY DEAR RAMANATHAN,

I have both your letters. I hope you are now completely restored.

Mr. Mahadeva Iyer has been coming to me since my return from Mysore almost every day, and I have been giving a few minutes daily to him. If I find anything useful to say, I shall write to you again.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. S. RAMANATHAN
A. I. S. A.
ERODE

From a microfilm: S.N. 12933

292. LETTER TO NARGIS CAPTAIN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 27, 1927

I know why you have not written to me all these long long days. But all the same I have got to write to you. I saw your letters both to Jammabehn and Mithubehn. I had long chats with the latter, and I see that whilst she is most lovable and a woman having immense capacity for work and service, she has an awful temper and a highly suspicious nature. She has developed, what seems to me to be utterly groundless, suspicion of Yashwantprasad whom she has come to regard as her determined enemy. This makes it practically impossible for Jamnabehn to work with her. On the whole, therefore, it seems to me that it would be better to leave her alone in the development of fashionable khadi which has made her speciality and to which she gives the whole of her time. After all her accounts are perfect in the sense that every penny received and spent is accounted for. The account-keeping is not in the orthodox style. That I suppose is now being done. The accounts can also be regularly audited. And so long as she does that, there is no reason why her work should not be treated as an independent branch of the Stree Sabha. You may all still hold yourselves ready for services whenever she wants them. I say you all because Mithubehn does not want interference from anybody except when she requires it. I sympathize with her in this attitude because with her highly suspicious nature of which she has no knowledge, she cannot take up any other attitude if she is to work in peace. I endeavoured to show her that Yeshwantprasad had no axe to grind and that he was interested in her work because Jannabehn was in it, and every one of you appreciated his help. But I could not remove her suspicion. On the contrary, she reiterated it and said that like hers my eyes would in course of time be opened to Yeshwantprasad’s intriguing nature as she called it. This is unfortunate. But we have to make the best of it. Unfortunately the women of India have not before now worked in an organized fashion. It will therefore be some time before they can do so. As a matter of fact even the men of India are not yet able to run many successful organizations without friction and without mutual suspicion. I do not want you to overtax yourself about this matter. But if you can send for Mithubehn and others and, seeing that they accept you as their commander-in-chief, pull them all by the ear and make them work together, it would be very nice.

I see that since your return home, you have not kept first class health. But you must really be strong. I shan’t be satisfied till you have gone to Kashmir. Though I have never seen it, I have heard a lot about it. It is highly likely that the bracing air of Kashmir will suit you admirably.

Do write to me and tell me all about your health. How I wish you could have come here. The weather is really superb and quite cool for us, but of course it may not be for you.

MRS. NARGIS CAPTAIN

COMRA HALL

PANCHGANI

From a photostat : S.N. 14199
293. LETTER TO S. V. KAULALGI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 27, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I see my letter has hurt you. But I do not know what else I could have done in the circumstances. The verse you have quoted is perfect. As a woman I should feel pride in nestling myself in the bosom of my husband. As a creeper I should be faithful to the immovable tree which lies near me and affords me protection and feel pride in circling myself round it. And as a leader or president of the Spinners’ Association I should be false to my trust if I do not depend upon those co-workers whom I ever find near me and ready to do the work entrusted to them. Is it not the essential condition of the very existence of the three named by the poet in the verse quoted by you? Come near me, woo me and I shall be a faithful wife. Be like an immovable tree near me, and I shall circle round you. Merge yourself in khadi work and lead me by the nose. But if you will not occupy any of the three positions, then I shall accept you with quiet resignation as a candid critic offering explanations to the Press. You shall still remain a friend and fellow-worker, and I shall demand from you such quota of service as, in my opinion, you can render.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 19790

294. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

BANGALORE,
Ashadh Krishna 14 [July 27, 1927]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

Your letter. Let me know what is being arranged for you. I had always held that you could never fall ill. And now I learn from your letter that you too have fallen ill. What was it? I am keeping well. These days I also do a bit of touring but Bangalore will remain my headquarters till the end of August.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3320

1 Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date in 1927.
295. LETTER TO T. PARAMASIVA IYER
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 29, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and warning. But I am none the wiser for your letter. I shall try to read what you have written about Bhadravati.

What however briefly is your objection to Krishnarajasagara? What do you think can be the motive prompting him to falsehoods, etc., which you ascribe to Sir M. Vishveshvarayya? Everything I have heard about his character is entirely in his favour. Outside Karnatak he is known as a very patriotic man. Personally I am totally opposed to him in his ambition for Americanizing India. Nor do I share his dream about supplying electric power to every village in India. But this fundamental difference does not blind me to his great abilities and his great services. I would therefore require positive unchallengeable proof to dislodge him from the position he occupies in my estimation.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. T. PARAMASIVA IYER
RETIRED JUDGE
‘THE WHITE HOUSE’
BANGALORE CITY

From a microfilm : S.N. 12623

296. LETTER TO S. D. NADKARNI
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 29, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I do not propose to publish your letter suggesting the adoption of Devanagari as the all-India script. I have denied myself the pleasure of publishing a similar and more elaborate letter from Kakasaheb Kalelkar because it would merely lead to confusion. The reform of Devanagari, however desirable it may be, is a side issue. If we can but induce leaders of thought to adopt Devanagari as a common script its reform wherever necessary is bound to come.

Personally I like your suggestion for dropping the horizontal caps as I would call them. Kakasaheb goes one better and suggests the Gujarati script which is really reformed Nagari. But I have suppressed Kakasaheb’s proposal because it would simply lead to an interminable controversy and take the mind of thinking India away from the main issue. Whilst I believe that the reformation of Devanagari in some shape or other is necessary, I am only indifferent to it at present. It would be a tremendous saving of national energy and a move on the part of different linguistic provinces towards one another to adopt one script however imperfect it may be.

For your information I give you the reason for not printing Navajivan in Devanagari. Navajivan has its own work cut out. In order to make good its message it has submitted to a curtailment of its subscription list. You may not know that at one time it and Young India had each nearly 30,000 subscribers. But today it has come down to less than 7,000. I do not mind its coming to zero for enforcement of the mission for which the papers were brought into being. Adoption of Devanagari was not part of that mission. I have a large number of women readers and Parsis and Mussalmans who can struggle even through Gujarati type with some labour. They find it difficult even to understand the moderate number of Sanskrit words that have got to be used in editing Navajivan. If I adopt Devanagari all these would be helpless and give up Navajivan and me in sheer disgust. Amongst what may be called the upper ten, I have, I fear, very few readers of Navajivan.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. S. D. NADKARNI

KARWAR
(N. KANARA)

From a photostat: S.N. 12625

297. LETTER TO T. R. MAHADEVA IYER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

July 29, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

In my opinion you will be justified and you are bound after due notice to the public and especially to the donors to hand over the Gurukula property both movable and immovable to those who have declared themselves the committee of management, if the committee will not agree to arbitration.

The answers I have given to your questions are not to be considered as legal opinion in any sense. They are merely answers that common sense has dictated to me. And though I have no objection whatsoever to your publishing the answers, I would much rather that they were not, because I have no desire to be drawn into a public controversy over any of the answers.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. T. R. MAHADEVA IYER
TAMIL GURUKULA
SHERMADEVI

From a microfilm: S.N. 12935

298. LETTER TO T. T. SHARMAN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 29, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter together with a copy of your Weekly. It seems to me to be perfectly useless for me to send anything for your paper and I cannot read it and therefore know nothing of its contents. I do not remember ever to have written anything for any paper whose policy and principles I did not know and whose conductors were equally unfamiliar to me. I hope you will therefore please excuse me, and I am sure in my present state of health you will not want me to have a friend to translate for me your paper and give so much of my time to it.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. T. T. SHARMAN
EDITOR
“VISVAKARNATAKA”
BANGALORE CITY

From a microfilm: S.N. 14201
299. LETTER TO N. SANKARA IYER

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
July 29, 1927

Dear friend,

I thank you for the extract from Tchekov story and the information about mill khaddar. I know that several mills are openly selling what is called mill khaddar. I am working through the khaddar organizations to minimize the effect of this deception.

Yours sincerely,

Sjt. N. Sankara Aiyer
14, Patkar’s Building
Bandra,
Bombay No. 20

From a microfilm : S.N. 19791

300. LETTER TO RADHA SUNDER DAS

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
July 29, 1927

Dear friend,

I have your letter. I am sorry that your application has not been favourably received. But you must be neither despondent nor enraged against those who have rejected your application. These things must always happen. And it would be wrong to suppose that because our applications are not accepted injustice has been done. Please keep me informed of your progress and movements.

Yours sincerely,

Sjt. Radha Sunder Das
Suri P.O.
Birbhum District

From a microfilm : S.N. 19792
MY DEAR HARIBHAU,

I have your letter. No apology is needed for not writing in Hindi. But I shall certainly be glad at the end of six months from now to find you writing in Hindi.

I did not take part in any of the proceedings of the A.I.S.A. Council meeting here. Nor had I seen the resolution of which you have sent me a copy. I have promised Jamnalalji and other members of the Council faithfully not to intervene in anything that they may do except when they ask me.

Whatever you think is not proper in the resolution I would like you to write to Jamnalalji or to Mr. Banker. But I quite agree with you that the workers ought not to be hampered by unnecessary restrictions. I do not think there is any desire on the part of the Council to put any obstruction in the way of the young men.

With reference to the Rs. 2,500 loan I did not understand that it was to be used for buying the Gandhi Shikshanamala but that it was to be used for paying off Mr. Kanitkar’s debts and that the books were to be held as security for the amount of the loan. Nor did I contemplate that if there were any profits made from the sale of the books they were to go to A.I.S.A. So far as I recollect our conversation I did not contemplate making any profits. But if there were any, they should go towards the upkeep of the Swarajya which after all is as much Mr. Kanitkar’s concern as any other. You may make use of this letter in your communication with Jamnalalji, and if necessary, the resolution will be altered accordingly at the next meeting of the Council. But, even as the resolution stands, I do not think that for your purposes it needs any alteration.

Instead of calling the copies “a security”, they have called the transaction “a sale” which in effect is one and the same thing, and the question of profits is a very distant hope.

The pronote required should of course be sent without delay by you even if you wish for any alterations in the resolution.

I do not think that the charge against the Council of lukewarmness towards Maharashtra is correct. That you have to suffer is true and that perhaps makes workers sensitive and makes them expect from the Council what it really cannot do. But the suffering will only make you all the fitter for service if the suffering does not weaken the principles of the sufferers.

Regarding Lokamanya’s reminiscences you are asking me to put an extra tax upon the very limited energy that I have got and which I require for my present work. Nothing that I may write can possibly remove the impression that might have been created with reference to my attitude towards Lokamanya or his life-work. That can only be removed by my uniformly correct conduct, and the question of conduct can only be determined after my death. If, therefore, I write anything at all I should certainly not do so in the hope of the reward that you hold out before me.

About the unemployment, I don’t know what I can do from here beyond saying that you should send all the likely names to the Technical Department. Personally I think that every willing worker can be accommodated in the Khadi Service. But I cannot give that faith to all the co-workers. And for such practical work, therefore, it is best for the present to treat me as dead. If I come to life again and plunge into practical work, you will certainly come to me. But, for the present, you have to go to Mr. Banker. Frame a policy and then see whether many can be accommodated. Do not give up the hope or the work on behalf of the unemployed fit men because you can no longer rely upon me.

About the co-operation with mill-owners, it is really for them to co-operate with us. Our co-operation therefore just now consists in cheapening khadi, making it stronger and in helping the mill-owners to get all the Government aid they can.

Have I made myself clear? I shall make note of Annapurnabai’s vrat. Please write to Mr. Banker for a formal receipt of your policy.

I shall look forward to Mr. Joglekar’s pocket looms.

Yours sincerely,

S J H G PATHAK
283, SADASHIV PETH
POONA CITY

From a microfilm : S.N. 19793

1 Vow

312 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
302. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI

BANGALORE,
July 29, 1927

CHI. KUSUM,

I had been waiting for your letter. Chi. Vasumati had given me some information. Now your letter completes the picture.

I cannot think of any better arrangement than that you should take charge of Haribhai’s pupils and they should look after you. But whether you can take up this work, you alone know best. I see that you were as much Haribhai’s pupil as his wife. You and your well-wishers will know only by experience how far your mind has become trained. We do not always understand our mind.

I see from the letters of Chi. Vasumati and Bhai Chhaganlal Joshi that your marriage was largely your own choice. It was your own strong wish that you should marry Haribhai. You can show in many ways that your choice was worthy. A girl who selects as her husband a man who is much older than herself marries not his body but its master. Haribhai’s body has passed away. But he himself is still you, and will remain with you as long as you wish.

Ask me anything you wish to. I shall be here in Bangalore till the end of this month.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—Kusumbehn Desaine, p. 4
Gandhiji opened the discussion by claiming himself to be a friend of the missionaries, ever since his close contact with them in South Africa.

Though I have been a friend, I have always been a critic, not from any desire to be critical, but because I have felt that I would be a better friend if I opened out my heart, even at the risk of wounding their feelings. They never allowed me to think that they felt hurt, they certainly never resented my criticism.

Then he referred to his first speech before the missionaries in India on swadeshi, since which twelve years had rolled away and with them much of the mists also.

The first distinction I would like to make, after these prefatory remarks, between your missionary work and mine, is that while I am strengthening the faith of the people, you are undermining it. Your work, I have always held, will be all the richer, if you accept as settled facts the faiths of the people you come to serve—faiths which, however crude, are valuable to them. And in order to appreciate what I say, it becomes perhaps necessary to re-read the message of the Bible in terms of what is happening around us. The world is the same, but the spirit ever broadens intensively and extensively, and it might be that many things in the Bible will have to be re-interpreted in the light of discoveries—not of modern science—but in the spiritual world in the shape of direct experiences common to all faiths. The fundamental verses of St. John do require to be re-read and re-interpreted. I have come to feel that like us human beings words have their evolution from stage to stage in the contents they hold. For instance the contents of the richest word—God—are not the same to every one of us. They will vary with the experience of each. They will mean one thing to the Santhal and another to his next door neighbour Ravindranath Tagore. The sanatani may reject my interpretation of God and Hinduism. But God Himself is a long-suffering God who puts up with any amount of abuse and misinterpretations. If we were to put the spiritual experiences together we would find a resultant which would answer the cravings of human nature. Christianity is

1 From Mahadev Desai’s article, “Talks with Missionaries”
2 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
1,900 years old, Islam is 1,300 years old, who knows the possibility of either? I have not read the Vedas in the original, but have tried to assimilate their spirit and have not hesitated to say that though the Vedas may be 13,000 years old—or even a million years old, as they well may be, for the word of God is as old as God Himself—even the Vedas must be interpreted in the light of our experience. The powers of God should not be limited by the limitations of our understanding. To you who have come to teach India, I therefore say, you cannot give without taking. If you have come to give rich treasures of experiences, open your hearts out to receive the treasures of this land, and you will not be disappointed, neither will you have misread the message of the Bible.

Interesting questions and answers followed, which I summarize below:

Q. What then are we doing? Are we doing the right thing?

A. You are trying to do the right thing in the wrong way. I want you to complement the faith of the people instead of undermining it. As the Dewan of Mysore said in his address to the Assembly, the Adi Karnatakas should be made better Hindus, as they belong to Hinduism. I would similarly say to you, make us better Hindus, i.e., better men or women. Why should a man, even if he becomes a Christian, be torn from his surroundings? Whilst a boy I heard it being said, that to become a Christian was to have a brandy bottle in one hand and beef in the other. Things are better now, but it is not unusual to find Christianity synonymous with denationalization and Europeanization. Must we give up our simplicity, to become better people? Do not lay the axe at our simplicity.

There are not only two issues before us, viz., to serve and to teach, there is a third issue, viz., evangelizing, declaring the glad tidings of the coming of Jesus and his death in redemption for our sins. What is the right way of giving the good news? We need not undermine the faith but we may make people lose their faith in lesser things.

That lands me into the region of interpretation. Whilst I must not enter into it. I may suggest that God did not bear the Cross only 1,900 years ago, but He bears it today, and He dies and is resurrected from day to day. It would be poor comfort to the world if it had to depend upon a historical God who died 2,000 years ago. Do not then preach the God of history, but show Him as He lives today through you. In South Africa I met a number of friends, and read a number of books—Pearson, Parker and Butlerall giving their own interpretations, and I said to myself I must not bother myself with these conflicting interpretations. It is better to allow our lives to speak for us than our words. C.F. Andrews never preaches. He is incessantly doing his work. He finds enough work and stays where he finds it and takes no credit for bearing the Cross. I have the honour to know hundreds of honest Christians, but I have not known one better than Andrews.

But what about animistic beliefs? Should they not be corrected?

Well, we have been working amongst the so-called ‘untouchables’ and backward classes, and we have never bothered ourselves with their beliefs, animistic or otherwise. Superstitions and undesirable things go as soon as we begin to live the correct life. I concern myself not with their belief but with asking them to do the right thing. As soon as they do it, their belief rights itself.

You speak of simplicity. But what are we to do in this age of motor-cars? You could not have come here without a motor-car!

Well, a motor-car is not a necessity. I certainly did not need it to come here. If God wants you to be useful he should find the means to make you useful. Motor-cars do not mean the sum of our spiritual experience. There was no motor-car in Jesus’ or Mahomed’s time, and yet they did not need them for their work. I do not hold them to be essential for real progress. We need to be humble. And humility and simplicity are not mere outward expressions. When Paul speaks of humility he means heart-humility. A true Christian has little need to speak. He goes about his Father’s business. May I cite my own case? Speeches were the least part of my work in South Africa. Most of the 16,000 people who rose like one man and joined me had not even seen me, much less heard me speak.

How can we help condemning if we feel that our Christian truth is the only reality?

That brings me to the duty of tolerance. If you cannot feel that the other faith is as true as yours, you should feel at least that the men are as true as you. The intolerance of the Christian missionaries does not, I am glad to say, take the ugly shape it used to take some years ago. Think of the caricature of Hinduism, which one finds in so many publications of the Christian Literature Society. A lady wrote to me the other day saying that unless I embraced Christianity all my work would be nothing worth. And of course that Christianity must mean what she understands as such! Well, all I can say is that it is a wrong attitude.

Young India, 11-8-1927
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I hope you will not mind my dictating what is a reply to a personal letter.

You are not the only girl with the difficulties mentioned by you. But if you have patience, perseverance in your ideals and humility, you will have no difficulty in conquering your parents’ pressure. For, after all, they have to go by the ordinary experience and the ordinary experience is that both young men and young women have often entertained lofty ideas in moments of enthusiasm which they are not able to carry out to the end. I myself know many such instances. Parents are therefore cautious and chary of taking seriously their children’s lofty ideals. If your parents insist upon your marriage how could they permit you to go to the Sabarmati Ashram? And then I must warn you against drawing a flattering picture of the Ashram. It is a place for toilers, those who believe in the necessity and the moral value of labouring with their hands and feet. Then English is rarely spoken there. Knowledge of Hindi is an absolute necessity.

I know the standard of Bethune College girls. If you have learnt to consider what is provided in that college and what the girls provide themselves with there to be your necessaries, you are hardly likely to be satisfied with the simplicity of the Ashram life. But in spite of my warning, if you still feel drawn to the Ashram and your parents permit you, I shall send your name to the Managing Board.

In your next letter please give me some more particulars about you. Give me your age, the occupation of your father and such other things that you think I should know.

Yours sincerely,

SHRIMATI KAMALA DAS GUPTA
1, AKHIL MISTRY LANE
CALCUTTA

From a microfilm : S.N. 12626
305. LETTER TO DR. B. S. MOONJE

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
July 30, 1927

DEAR DR. MOONJE,

I was relieved to have your letter giving a full description of your accident. Thank god that the injury received is not permanent. What a miraculous escape you all had!

Please tell your grandson that his singular escape without injury should mean great things for the country and that he must from now prepare to dedicate his life for the service of the country with the fullest determination to do better than his grandfather and his old contemporaries like myself.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14202

306. LETTER TO E. S. PATWARDHAN

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
July 30, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Owing to my illness and movement I have not been able to overtake your letter for a long time for which please excuse me. Had I been up and doing as I used to before the collapse, I should have done something regarding your difficulty. But now I am really powerless. As you know I have given up practically all administrative work. I am simply attending to the correspondence, editing and absolutely necessary touring in slow stages. Jamnalalji is the officiating Chairman of the Association and I would like you to approach him and convince him.

I did discuss the whole of your affairs with him before the collapse. Though he was here recently for the meeting of the Council of the Association, I took no part in the proceedings of the meeting and discussed no administrative measures with Jamnalalji. I had indeed hoped to study the Vidyalaya and your difficulties much more than before. But my incapacitation upset this as well as other similar plans. I hope you will therefore forgive me.
The enclosure will be sent on Monday by registered post.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. EKNATH SRIPAD PATWARDHAN
PRAMUKH
TILAK MAHAVIDYALAYA
MAHAL, NAGPUR

From a microfilm: S.N. 19794

307. LETTER TO V. V. DASTANE

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
July 30, 1927

MY DEAR DASTANE,

I have your letter. I am sorry that I did not see you. If I was what I was before the collapse I would certainly not have turned away a single aspirant for khadi service merely on the ground of want of accommodation. But Jamnalalji and Shankerlal must manage according to their abilities and their self-confidence. You must discuss the pros and cons with them. I shall do likewise but my doing will be in a leisurely fashion. Of course you must not suffer any loss of confidence if it is at all possible. But if we are really helpless, we must not pretend to be brave. Above all we must be true.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. V. V. DASTANE
A.I.S.A. (MAHARASHTRA BRANCH)
PIMPARALA P.O.

From a microfilm: S.N. 19795

308. SPEECH AT CHAMARAJENDRA SANSKRIT PATHASHALA,
BANGALORE

July 30, 1927

I appreciate the honour you have done me in giving me a Sanskrit address. I hold that every Hindu boy and girl must acquire a knowledge of Sanskrit, and that every Hindu should have enough knowledge of Sanskrit to be able to express himself in that language whenever an occasion arises.

I was pained to hear that there were pundits in the Mysore State who fought shy of teaching Sanskrit to Sudras and Panchamas. I do not know how far the contention that the Sudras have no right to learn Sanskrit and hence to read the Vedas is supported by the authority of scriptures, but as a sanatani Hindu I am firmly of opinion that even if there is any authority we must not kill the spirit of our religion by a literal interpretation of the texts. Words have, like man himself, an evolution, and even a Vedic text must be rejected if it is repugnant to reason and contrary to experience. Thus so far as I understand the Shastras I think that there is no authority in them for untouchability as we understand it today, and my experience of the so-called untouchables in different parts of India has shown me that man to man the ‘untouchable’ is in no way inferior to his ‘touchable’ brother either intellectually or morally. I know suppressed class people who are leading as clean and moral lives as any one of us, and I have seen Adi Karnatak boys who read and recite Sanskrit verses as well as any of the Brahmin boys and girls here. I am grateful therefore that you should have thought fit to invite a man of such radical views in your midst, and even to vote an address to him, and to approve of those views in the address. I am glad to see so many Brahmins plying their taklis, but I want you not to confine yourselves to making your sacred threads out of the yarn. The yajnopavits of course will continue to be of takli yarn, but you will make your clothes also from that yarn or charkha yarn. I tell you I was pained to see boys and girls dressed in foreign clothes reciting verses from scriptures. To say the least, it struck me to be incongruous. The external is in no way the essence of religion, but the external oft proclaims the internal, and whenever therefore I go to a Sanskrit college or an institution where Aryan culture is taught, I look forward to being reminded of the simple and sacred surroundings of our ancient rishis. I am sorry that you have not fulfilled my expectation, and I appeal to the teachers and the parents of these children to make the children true representatives of ancient culture.

Young India, 18-8-1927

1 Sacred thread worn by the Hindus
309. NATURE’S ‘WRATH’

Nature never acts in anger. Its laws work unfailingly, like good clock. No changes ever occur in them. In fact Nature has not even reserved the right to change them, nor does it need to do so. Nature is perfect, and her laws too are perfect.

But we do not know these laws and, therefore, when they surprise us by their working we describe them as Nature’s wrath. She has just shown such wrath against Gujarat. How can I, staying in far-away Bangalore, form a true idea of this miniature pralaya? My only means of knowing its magnitude are the reports appearing in newspapers and one wire from Vallabhbhai and another from the Ashram.

God alone knows whether this flood is a punishment for some sins of ours or some event which, on certain conditions being fulfilled, may give us some needed benefit. We would do well to regard it as a punishment for our sins. There is not only no great difference between moral sins and economic sins, but on the contrary the two kinds of sins are closely related. Among the three classes of sins, telling lies, dirtying the river-water and raising an opium or tobacco crop in the fields in place of wheat there is only a difference of degree, none of kind. It is not true that one who tells a lie suffers spiritually but he who dirties the water does not, or that the soul of him who raises an opium crop prospers. As our discrimination improves, we understand the nature of our sins better.

If, however, we wait doing nothing till we know our sins better and take no steps to relieve the people’s losses which we see with our naked eyes, we would be reckoned fools.

Vallabhbhai has started a fund on behalf of the Provincial Committee, and Manilal Kothari is going round to meet people to collect contributions to it. There was a telegram from him to say that philanthropic rich men have already contributed Rs. 30,000. Let people contribute as much as they can. Though it avails little to try to mend a rent in the sky, if everyone helps to the best of his ability the

---

1 The universal flood which is believed to end a cycle of creation. Gandhiji here refers to the unprecedented floods in Gujarat in July 1927.
2 Gujarat Provincial Congress Committee
3 A Congress worker of Saurashtra who worked for many years as Secretary of the Gujarat Provincial Congress Committee
4 A Gujarati saying people cannot but feel cheered by the sympathy thus shown. The Committee will try to reach as many people as it can. As yet, it is not even likely to have an idea of how many people have suffered, or how much they have suffered and in what manner. Some details, which I do not know at the moment of writing this (on August 1) will have become known by the time this appears in print. On knowing them, those who have paid nothing as yet should pay something and so contribute to this essential relief-work.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 7-8-1927

310. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 1 [1927]

CHI. MIRA,

I have your beautifully written Hindi letter. Your time table seems to be crowded. There is no breathing time between different periods. I suppose it is the same with all. It is quite capable of execution, if one concentrates and does not fuss or waste in idle thought or talk.

You know the plight of Gujarat. Rain has done very great damage and the Ashram too has come in for its due share. I have a telegram too that Kantilal who was keeping accounts was drowned in the river. It appears to be a case of suicide. I have no definite particulars yet.

I shall be absent from Bangalore for four days from tomorrow, returning Friday evening.

No more this time.

With love,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5256. Courtesy : Mirabehn
MY DEAR BROTHER,

I was thankful for your first letter from South Africa. The hopeful note cheers me.

The Transvaal, I see, is causing you some anxiety. But I have every hope that the people there will ultimately listen to you.

I notice your appeal for social workers. You won’t get many from this end. I know Devadhar contemplates sending or even taking a batch. But my own feeling is that it is essentially work for local volunteers. But whether it is done by local volunteers or workers imported from here, the work is worth doing and has got to be done. The Government of India, the Natal Government and the planters are not a little to blame for the mischief. The tone having been once set, it is tremendously difficult to set another all of a sudden. All strength to your elbow.

Do please keep your health.

Andrews cabled about your expenses.¹ I am not going to weary you with what was done here. But I am informed that you will have all the assistance you need. I personally feel quite at ease. It is not the style of living that is going to count in your case, it is your internal strength that is going to count and is counting already.

I am keeping well and am likely to be in the South practically to the end of October. I shall not be leaving Mysore before the end of the month.

With love,

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original : C.W. 9229. Courtesy : S. R. Venkataraman

¹ Vide “Letter to J. B. Petit”, 5-7-1927.
312. LETTER TO SECRETARY, HINDI SAHITYA SAMMELAN

BANGALORE,
August 1, 1927

DEAR MR. SECRETARY,

A copy of your letter to Pandit Harihar Sharma, dated Shravan Krishna 10¹, has been sent to me. Sharmaji has gone to Rameshwaram.

Some time ago² I wrote to you in reply to your telegram and letter but having had no response from you I presume you did not get my reply.

In case that reply has not reached you let me repeat what I said in it. Whatever changes have come about in the Madras Hindi Prachar Office have been publicly approved by me. Sharmaji is not at all responsible for them. You will certainly not look upon Sharmaji as your paid employee. Our differences over the ownership of the office is an old story. I had made clear this point to you also in Wardha. If you deem it proper, this dispute can be settled by arbitration. If you think resorting to arbitration would not be in the interest of the Sammelan, you can take whatever legal action you will against me alone.

Yours,

From a microfilm of the Hindi : S.N. 12777

313. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

Silence Day, August 1, 1927

CHI. RAMDAS,

I have read your letter to Devdas. Write to me whatever you notice about Kanti and Rasik, but I don’t want you to worry about it. We should not worry about a task which has not fallen to our lot even if it is urgent or personal. This is what the Gita and our dharma teach us. Either one should regard nothing as personal or only that which is with one on hand and devote oneself to it. One should not worry even about one’s own father if he is far away and should have faith in God

¹ Corresponding to July 23, 1927, according to the Vikram calendar followed in North India
² On July 6, 1927
that He is the protector of all and He employs whomever He wishes as His instrument. This rule holds good even when one’s father is close by and someone else is engaged in attending on him and one has some other work to do. What applies to the father also applies to a brother, a nephew, the wife, a son and others. You are in the Ashram only to learn your job and to pick up whatever you can from its atmosphere. While doing so you may see or hear many other things. But your duty requires you only to pass on this information to some responsible person. It is only in this way that we can live in peace in society. We cannot afford to sit in judgment upon the world.

You have good experience of the Divine wrath there.¹ Write to me about it. Let me know all about your health too.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

314. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN
Shravan Sud 4 [August 1, 1927]

SISTERS,

This time the post has been irregular. The mail due on Monday was received here only yesterday. I hope none of you was frightened on account of the torrential rains and the flood. Such calamities occur only to test whether we have learnt the lessons of life. What would it matter if the Ashram or for that matter Ahmedabad itself was washed away by the flood in spite of our best efforts? The wonder is that so much has remained safe in spite of such torrential floods. But after all, who knows whether we gain more by saving or by losing? It may be that what has been saved has really been lost and what has been lost has really been saved. But everyone likes to be saved, and we are thankful to God when we are saved. Actually, one should thank God for everything that happens. That is what is meant by samatva.

But think of the loss of Kantilal.² How can we bear this grief? That also we must bear however difficult it is. One’s intellect works in accordance with one’s karma. If it is true that Kantilal has committed suicide, I can guess the reason, I think. But we need not worry about the reason. We should make up our minds that we ourselves will never commit suicide. The kind of people who commit suicide either worry too much about the world, or try to hide their faults from the world. We should never pretend to be what we are not, or try to do what is clearly beyond us.

¹ Torrential rains; vide the succeeding item.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3660

315. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

Silence Day [August 1, 1927]1

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. You may give the money lying in Bombay for Gujarat2 if you so wish. I personally feel that it should be used only for the South. A letter to that effect has also been published in Young India. For Gujarat we can find as much money as is needed. But now that you have taken the step, it may be difficult to retrace it. I hope you find Shankaran satisfactory. He is a good worker. That is the impression he has given all of us.

Blessings from

BAPU

SJT. MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
PANCHGANI CASTLE
PANCHGANI

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 From the postmark
2 For flood-relief work

326 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
316. SPEECH TO LAMANIS, ARSIKERE JUNCTION

August 2, 1927

You must all wear khaddar; it is made by your people, and the cost goes to feed them. You must all completely give up drinking and flesh-eating. Also you must listen to me and follow my words, if you are really true in your love and affection for me. You must understand that when once a girl is married among your community, she must not be taken away again by someone of you and remarried according to your pernicious old custom. This is against all Hindu dharma.

Turning to the Lambani women, Gandhiji said they must not unnecessarily burden themselves with heavy ornaments as they were now doing.

The Hindu, 5-8-1927

317. TELEGRAM TO REVASHANKAR ZAVERI

August 3, 1927

_BOMBAY_

YOUR TELEGRAM RECEIVED HERE TOO LATE. PLEASE TELL SIR PURUSHOTTAMDAS\(^2\) ALREADY ISSUED APPEAL FOR FUNDS THROUGH ‘NAVAJIVAN’ AND ‘YOUNG INDIA’

GANDHI

From the original: Purushottamdas Thakurdas Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

\(^1\) At the station yard, in reply to the welcome address in Lambani presented on behalf of the Mysore Provincial Lambani Sangh

\(^2\) Purushottamdas Thakurdas
318. LETTER TO C. V. VAIDYA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 3, 1927

DEAR MR. VAIDYA,

I highly appreciate your letter. I know that you have the instinct of the judge and had been a judge in Gwalior for a long time. But your letter has whetted my curiosity, and I must make time to study your volumes. Are they in Marathi or in English? You must pardon my gross ignorance even of our good authors of whom I have long known you to be one. But fate has never left me any time for doing this kind of reading.

Are the authorities in favour of your conclusion—that our forefathers in the Vedic times ate beef—collected in those volumes?

Yours sincerely,

SJT. C. V. VAIDYA
SADASHIV PETH
POONA CITY

From a photostat: S.N. 12629

319. LETTER TO DR. GURUDAS ROY

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 3, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am perfectly confident that you can do without any European clothing in England and Scotland provided that you take sufficient stock of hand-spun woollen clothing. It may be found a little more costly if you go in for very fine Kashmir woollen hand-spun. You may not know that Pandit Motilalji when he was preparing to go to Europe as a member of the Skeen Committee had an entirely hand-spun outfit including his cardigan jackets. You can get very warm and very cheap hand-spun Nepali blankets.

As to the quantity, it is very difficult for me to prescribe. But if I were you, I should take half a dozen blankets. I presume you will wear

---

1 In reply to his letter of July 3, 1927 (S.N. 12627)
2 Appointed with Sir Andrew Skeen as president to investigate the question of establishment of an Indian Sandhurst trousers. You can get suitable woollen stuff for trousers, etc. I suggest your consulting Satis Babu of Khadi Pratishthan, and if he cannot furnish you with an outfit, I know that the Khadi Bhandar of Bombay can, because that Bhandar has provided many England-going Indians with proper outfits. Khadi Pratishthan’s address you know—170, Bow Bazaar Street, Calcutta. The address of the Khadi Bhandar is Princess Street, Bombay. All your underclothings may well be cotton khadi.

Yours sincerely,

DR. GURUDAS ROY
BALAGARH P.O.
HOOGLY DISTRICT
BENGAL

From a photostat S.N. 14205

320. LETTER TO V. V. DASTANE

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 3, 1927

MY DEAR DASTANE,

I have your letter. I like the idea of Malaviyaji touring Maharashtra in the interest of khadi. But I do not want you to trouble him just now. He is himself in a weak state of health, and we must not be party to putting any strain upon it. Then again the workers do not now need the stimulation of further awakening and spectacular meetings. You have hardly yet time to consolidate the energy set free during my tour. You have to build up and put on a solid basis all the different centres that have been brought into existence. Watch the work in the different centres and put Pimparala itself on a solid foundation. All this means that you should be free from having to organize any big tours at present. And, thirdly, if Professor Kale, the Kesari people and others who have hitherto stood aside from khadi are inclined to view it with favour, let that sentiment silently grow. It does not need any encouragement from you or me; but it is bound to be encouraged by any solid achievement we may show in the shape of larger production, regular silent improvement in quality, reduction in prices and steady employment of young men. You must learn not to live on stimulants. Do you not agree?

Yours sincerely,
321. LETTER TO A. RANGASWAMY IYENGAR

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
August 3, 1927

My dear Rangaswamy,

I do not know whether you want any reply from me to your circular letter about the Nagpur Satyagraha. But if you do, I can think of adding nothing to my recent article¹ in Young India. If, beyond what is contained in that article, any further information is required, or if the Committee has any further questions to ask me, I shall gladly answer them. But this letter need not be part of the record if my opinion can for my own sake be dispensed with.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14206

322. LETTER TO R. B. GREGG

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
August 3, 1927

My dear Govind,

I have your letter. I am dictating this during my tour which I am taking in very slow stages without putting any undue strain upon my health which seems to be steadily getting better.

I shall look forward to a typed copy of your work and I shall certainly go through it and let you have my opinion on it and suggestions if there are any to make.

You certainly do not need to explain to me why you could not pay for the proposed operation. I can easily arrange for it. But why do you want to postpone it till December? Is it not better to spare yourself from Kotgarh for a fortnight or so and get the operation done now or as soon as I can get an appointment from Dr. Dalal? I shall write to him after hearing from you.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14208

¹ Vide “Nagpur Satyagraha”, 19-5-1927.
MY DEAR KRISHNADAS,

I had your letter that you left on leaving Bangalore. There was nothing in it that needed a reply. I have now seen your letter to Subbiah and was delighted to hear that you were successful in Muzaffarpur. In the letter you left, you promised to write again from Darbhanga. That letter has still not arrived. I am anxious to know that you are keeping quite well and fit and to know all about Guruji’s health.

This I am dictating from Hassan where we arrived yesterday evening. We reach Bangalore again on the 5th instant and resume tour on the 9th, still confining it to Mysore. I shall not leave Bangalore finally before the end of the month. But you will know if there is any change.

You must have heard all about the awful rains in Gujarat. The Ashram also came in for a bit of loss. Poor Kantilal who was keeping books in the Ashram was drowned. It seems to have been a case of suicide; but I am still awaiting full particulars.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. KRISHNADAS
CARE OF SIT. SATIS CHANDRA MUKERJEE LAL BAGH
DARBHANGA
BIHAR

From a photostat : S.N. 14204
324. LETTER TO SHANKER

HASSAN,
August 3, 1927

MY DEAR SHANKER,

I have your postcard. I see you have already made yourself quite at home there. You will cover yourself well if you find it very cold there. The climate however is very bracing and is bound to agree with you.

Do write to me regularly.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SHANKER
C/o Mathuradas Trikumji
Panchgani Castle
Panchgani

From a microfilm : S.N. 14207

325. LETTER TO SECRETARY, JUBILEE COMMITTEE

HASSAN,
August 3, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I am much obliged to you for the invitation to the Maharaja Silver Jubilee Commemoration¹. I hope that the function will be worthy of the occasion.

Yours faithfully,

THE SECRETARY
JUBILEE COMMITTEE
BANGALORE CITY

From a microfilm : S.N. 14209

¹ On August 8, 1927
FRIENDS,

You have given me addresses of welcome and you have given me a purse, and I thank you for the same. I am also pleased to hear of your khadi work and your invitation to open your Khaddar Co-operative Society. I must also thank you for your work in the uplift of the Adi Karnatakas. In doing so, let me remind you that this great work cannot be fully accomplished merely by the establishment of a school, etc. You must do the work in your heart. You must get rid of the untouchability-feeling from your thoughts. You must know that there is no sanction in the Shastras for such thinking. When you get that feeling of brotherliness, when you get that oneness of feeling between you all, Hindus and Mussalmans, and both sexes, when you get that feeling by using khadi, every one of you, then only our condition, and the condition of our country is going to improve and not until then. That is the force of khadi and, in establishing your Khadi Co-operative Society, you must all co-operate in this great task. That task is to give food to the starving poor of your place, for, when you take khaddar and make others purchase it, the weavers who wove and the spinners who spun are sure of their wages and of their food. Are you going to help this cause?

I am appealing to you for your help. I once more express my satisfaction at your efforts to establish an institute for the Adi Karnatakas on the lines of the Tuskegee Institute of Booker T. Washington. Friends, now, the need is for many such institutions all over the country. The names of General Armstrong and Booker T. Washington are very great names of service and sacrifice; I want you to understand and realize the amount of their work. I want our educated friends to realize this. I want them also to realize that when they are propagating intellectual culture, they must also inculcate the principle of dignity of labour as is done in those institutions. Please remember this. I thank you all for your reception.

The Hindu, 5-8-1927

---

1 In reply to welcome addresses presented by the District Board and Hassan Municipality
327. EXHIBITION SALES

Sjt. Sitaram Shastri wires:

Cloth exhibited Andhra branch stall, Bangalore Exhibition, worth Rs. 4,085; sales—retail Rs. 1,750, wholesale Rs. 1,516.

Masulipatam Satyanarayana informs:

Exhibition Stall : Cloth worth Rs. 3,051, sales—retail Rs. 980, wholesale Rs. 966.

That means 80 per cent, and 63 per cent, of the stock, which is indeed very good.

Young India, 4-8-1927

328. INDIAN SHIPPING

The ceremony performed by Sjt. Vithalbhai Patel at the launching of Jalabala, the Scindia Steam Navigation Company’s new ship, does not evoke any feeling of national pride or rejoicing. It only serves as a reminder of our fallen state. What is the addition of one little ship to our microscopic fleet? The sadness of the reminder is heightened by the fact that our mercantile fleet may at any moment be turned into a fleet warring against our own liberty or against that of nations with which India has no quarrel and with whose aspirations India may even have every sympathy, as for instance, China. There is nothing to prevent the Government from commandeering any one of the ships belonging to the swadeshi companies for carrying soldiers to punish China for daring to fight for liberty. There is no wonder, therefore, that Vithalbhai Patel, who in spite of his being the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly cannot cease to be an ardent nationalist, recalled the history of the calculated destruction of India’s mercantile marine. He pointed out to his audience that “there was a time when first-rate vessels built, owned, manned and managed by Indians used to carry the rich products of India to distant lands.” “A combination of circumstances,” which the speaker did not think it worth while to mention, “made it extremely difficult for Indians to pursue it, killed that industry outright, and subsequently made it extremely difficult for Indians to revive their past glory.” Sjt. Vithalbhai went on: “It is again interesting to note that shipping companies were started during the last 50 years in India, but they were all wiped out of existence by the rate war and other methods, about which the less said the better.”

But even as a patient derives comfort, if anything gives him a little hope and a little energy, and the whole family joins him rejoicing over the acquisition of slight unexpected strength, so did Vithalbhai Patel derive joy and hope from the launching of this new enterprise of the Scindia Steam Navigation Company. Let us hope that Jalabala will be a precursor of many other steamers and that in the near future it would be possible to revive the old ship-building trade of India, and for some patriot to perform the ceremony of launching an India-built ship on Indian waters free of the fear of its being used for warring against ourselves or any other nation and free from the greed of exploitation of any other country.

Young India, 4-8-1927

329. CULTURAL SPINNING

An English friend sends me a cutting from the Scotsman of 21st April. It is entitled “Value of Rhythm”. It is an account of a spinning demonstration at the Easter Conference held at Edinburgh under the auspices of the Institute of Handicraft Teachers. Dr. John Gunn presided at the meeting. The lecture demonstration was given by Mr. William Kirkness F.S.A. (Scot). I quote below verbatim the interesting report¹ from the Scotsman:

Young India, 4-8-1927

330. VILLAGE CATTLE IMPROVEMENT

This week I give Mr. Smith’s note² on a co-operative scheme for the improvement of village cattle. The pinjrapole scheme published in the issue of July 7th³ is capable of being enforced almost immediately, because the machinery is ready and only requires supplementary improvement, whereas the proposed scheme for the villages outside the ghee-producing tract and remote from cities is comparatively difficult of operation. But real improvement has to begin from these numerous villages, which, on account of economic pressure and the ignorance of people in cattle-breeding, helplessly become centres for slaughter-houses to draw upon. If a careful student were to study the movement of cattle that find themselves in the numerous slaughter-

---

¹ Not reproduced here. The lecturer spoke highly of the value of spinning in the education of temperamental children.

² Not reproduced here

³ By Y. M. Parnerkar; vide “Work before Pinjrapoles”, 7-7-1927 houses of India, he will find that agents who know no principle save that of making money as fast as possible and anyhow purchase cattle from these remote villages for the slaughter-houses. A gosevak is not easily made, certainly never for the wishing. He has to study his art as much as an engineer or a lawyer or a doctor, and has to take more pains than any of them. Mr. Smith’s scheme should, therefore, be studied by those who desire the welfare of cattle and of Indian villages, with a view to putting it into operation in select villages. There is nothing sacrosanct about the scheme. It serves as a model for one who knows nothing about cattle-breeding or co-operative schemes. Nor need a non-co-operator be frightened of it, because of the mention of Government co-operative department. There is no such thing as national non-co-operation at the present moment. When it was in vogue, it did not touch all Government departments. There were non-co-operators who did not taboo co-operative societies, and I know several today who call themselves non-co-operators although they belong to active co-operative organizations. But a gosevak who does not wish to take advantage of a statutory co-operative society may still utilize the scheme. Indeed I do not know that on the whole it would not be better to do without seeking the shelter of a statutory society. He may take the advice of the co-operative department if it will whole-heartedly give it to him, and may also make use of studs if any are available. The chief thing is to make a beginning in the matter of the education of villagers in cattle improvement. The proposed scheme is a help in that direction. Mr. Smith promises a double increase in the value of cattle and the yield of milk if the scheme is properly worked.

Young India, 4-8-1927
Proud Gujarat is laid low and she who has hitherto filled the beggar’s bowl is now obliged to take the bowl herself. I have had up to now nothing to go by except the newspaper reports. Though Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel was preparing me for the worst through his private wires he was unable to give details. I give below his telegram just received on my return from Hassan:

Most part Gujarat North of Narmada and Kathiawar devastated. People rendered homeless. Cattle and belongings washed away. Total damage in crores. Loss of life small except in Baroda. Kheda district is worst with 100 inches of rain. Borsad still isolated. Piteous appeals for help coming from all parts of Gujarat and Kathiawar. Public meeting was held on August 2nd, Relief Committees formed. Three lakhs for food relief Ahmedabad district and ten lakhs for advancing loans reconstruction of houses to be raised. Provincial relief to be separately conducted under Prantik Samiti. Relief centres have been opened under Amritlal Thakkar, Lakshmidas Purushottam and Narahari Parikh respectively at Anand, Nadiad and Mehadabad. Maganlal Gandhi will reach Borsad and establish communications. Other centres are also being reached and relief operations started. Amritlal Sheth is trying to reach areas of Kathiawar and is organizing relief. The immediate problem is one of saving life by the timely supply of foodstuffs. Local resources are inadequate. Pray issue a general appeal to all India for succour without delay.

Sjt. Fulchand Shah sends a detailed wire from Nadiad about Kheda. Dr. Chandulal of Broach sends an angry wire asking me what I intend doing towards the relief of the distress in Gujarat. I have been dumbstruck by the newspaper reports. Those who know anything of the devastating floods in the South can somewhat realize what a howling wilderness parts of Gujarat must have become. Kheda owes its fertility to the industry of its resourceful farmers. It is no joke for them to find the whole of their crops washed away and their fields stinking with the stench of the carcasses of their valuable and splendid cattle.

I know that no human effort can possibly make up for the loss of crores worth of crops, cattle and belongings, together with rich manure washed away into the ocean, but human sympathy can do much to relieve the mental agony of the people who have lost their all.

1 Gandhiji returned from Hassan on 4th evening.
I do hope that all who see this appeal and who can will send their mite towards relief.

Sjt. Patel is a seasoned soldier and has no other occupation than that of service. He has got an efficient agency of workers under him. Donors need, therefore, have no fear of wasteful expense or misappropriation. Properly audited accounts will be published, and all sums received will be acknowledged in the columns of Young India and if necessary Navajivan. Relief work will be done by him in collaboration with other agencies that may be brought into being. The chief thing is to send help. Let the donor choose his favourite and most trusted agency, but let him make sure that he sends not the least but the most he can.

Young India, 11-8-1927

332. LETTER TO H. HARCOURT

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your warm letter. You may not know that I expressed before the trying judge the same sentiments that you express, namely, that my viewpoint not being accepted, the Government was bound to arrest and imprison me. The challenge to Government to do either the one or the other was for me the only honourable course, and, in my opinion, the only alternative to violent rebellion on the part of those who rightly or wrongly feel oppressed. But the largest part of my life has been devoted and is still being devoted to finding points of contact rather than difference. But experience has abundantly proved to me that to every honest man there come in his life occasions for parting of ways which I have termed “Non-co-operation”.

Yours sincerely,

H. HARCOURT, ESQ.
119, GIPSY HILL
LONDON S.E. 19

From a photostat : S.N. 12535

In reply to the addressee’s letter dated July 12, 1927
333. LETTER TO G. A. PATKAR

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 4, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Your idea of starting a fund is praiseworthy; but I am afraid it will not work. It is not a small thing for one who draws a salary of Rs. 50 to save Rs. 5 out of it every month, and I have found even amongst those who can afford, very few steadily paying. Nor, when the capital required is collected in the manner you suggest, is it an easy thing to start industries. The starting of industries requires more than mere capital. And, thirdly, my own time which owing to my failing health is limited is entirely absorbed by the industry of khadi, and if your friends would be content to pay their quota to this national industry, I shall be pleased to receive it, but not for any other industry.

Yours sincerely,

S. J. T. G. A. PATKAR
BOMBAY

From a photostat : S.N. 14211

334. LETTER TO SWAMI

[After August 4, 1927]

Yours two letters. One is about relieving you and the other about the floods in Gujarat.

I do not know and I believe that your request to be relieved has nothing to do with your quarrel with Kaka. If I have to grant you the discharge, I cannot do it until I go over there, because I must, as is my practice, first get to know the main persons there. Only then could I know what to do. I would know nothing about Bhai Mohanlal. If you have full confidence, I have no objection to your shouldering the responsibility of the work while taking up the other job and moving wherever you like. If the responsibility is not yours, I can be carefree only when I come to know Bhai Mohanlal and put him in charge or 1 From the reference to heavy floods in Gujarat and to Vallabhbhai’s appeal published in Young India of this date

2 D. B. Kalelkar

VOL. 39 : 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927
appoint someone else as superintendent. I think neither course is possible at the moment. Even the trust matter is uncertain at present.

Since you are coming here in connection with your work, we shall discuss the matter further then. Kaka is all right. I had gone out on tour for three days but did not take Kaka with me. You may rest assured from my side about Kaka because I am not the one to coerce. I shall try to give full weight to the idea suggested by you if you come and explain it to me; if you do not come at all I shall try to put it across to the extent I have understood it. If you are suggesting that I have no right to direct Kaka, I will not accept that view. I sensed some such hint in your letter. I cannot quite agree with the meaning you seem to attach to friendship. I too had interpreted it somewhat like that in my nonage. If my assumption that you put a similar interpretation on it is correct, I also know that it is contrary to dharma. I have written somewhere in Navajivan itself that in this world there can be no friend except God and that we are all bullocks together; in that some are more close to each other, some less so. But then I have digressed into a new subject. In short, it is enough it I could satisfy you by being as agreeable as I could.

Now my view about the collection from Malabar is that it should not be used in Gujarat. I think it would be upright to act as if the amount had been spent up when the time-limit of the notice I had issued expired. That it has not been spent up is mere chance. That we act differently when pressed by circumstances and through weakness is another thing. I merely give my opinion. But if you or Vallabhbhai do not approve of that view, please do correct me. There is no place for delicacy1 in such matters, and certainly none among us.

Now about my going over there. While reading your letter I felt I should start soon. Not even three quarters of an hour has passed after reading it, but the swoon is over now. I am no longer fit to travel. I know my body well enough. I still have enough strength to be left alone to think and do my work, but the ability to talk to a group, to guide and to explain things to a succession of people coming to me, to humour them, to get angry with them and to get work out of them has all but left me. After all it may possibly return. At present the ability to lie down and sleep is on the increase. In this condition, I think it is not possible for me to go over there, sit in the Ashram and rally volunteers. Moreover, I believe one cannot do work without running around and I never had the knack of taking work from new people while sitting in one place without moving about. If we cannot get volunteers in response to Vallabhbhai’s appeal, we had better realize our limitations. If more funds come in, let them remain unused; we may offer them to those others who could do better work than we; on the other hand if we know that we still command respect enough to collect more money but not the strength to rally workers we should sit quiet, not squander our influence by asking for funds. You may not be aware that everyone in Malabar had surplus money left with him not because of lack of volunteers but because when everything is uprooted people work in a different way and do not even think of the losses. There is no power in the world which would meet the wants of crores of people. All of us can therefore do only some patchwork. And I think we ought to do that. While doing so if we can ensure that the rogues and thieves do not get at the money or that the protectors do not become looters, we shall have acquitted ourselves as well as taking a dip in the Ganga. Such floods suggest that what we say in our childhood is veda vakya —this is God’s play with bat and ball. One day there is sure to come a flood bigger than the present one. Even then some will survive who will not brood over the dead but will be able to laugh and multiply the race. Do not deduce from this that I wish to say that it would not matter if we became cruel or if we did nothing. Absolutely not. However, I must say we need not take upon ourselves the responsibility for all this destruction. But we must make our contribution to the extent possible to relieving the misery arising from this destruction and rest content. I do not at all approve of the argument that at this time we should organize an army of volunteers and awaken Gujarat once again. When the time comes, and the understanding is there and if it has been decreed that we become the instruments, anything may or may not happen now, Gujarat will wake up and so will the whole of India. But this is for me a matter of faith more or less. It is out of place here even to think of it. We should not shirk doing whatever we can in regard to this emergency.

---

1 The source has this in English.

I can think of nothing more.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

---

1 Published in Young India, 4-8-1927
2 A Gujarati proverb meaning the highest achievement
3 Scriptural utterance
CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. I understand and do not mind the distinction you draw between Wardha and Sabarmati. I am glad you have written to Bhansali. There is nothing further about the Ashram beyond what I wrote to you.

The learning of Hindi must not be a strain upon you. You must not do it as a task. Immediately it gets on your nerves, you must let it go. I have told you that I have infinite patience and I shall certainly not take you to task if you can’t finish your programme in two months’ time. The work must give you pleasure, and it must be left off as soon as it fatigues you.

If I knew what work is to be given to you as soon as you go to the Ashram, I would certainly tell you; but I do not know it myself. I quite agree with your argument against teaching English, and I shall certainly avoid giving that work. So far as I can see at present, it will be some work to be done in company. For, I want you to be accustomed to different temperaments and working under circumstances no matter how adverse they may be. But if you have any choice, by no means tell me. My own habit is never to tax myself about things which I need not decide at the moment. But if you will begin to think of it from now, by all means do, and discuss with me through your letters. In no case would I have given you anything without first consulting you. I shall certainly want to know your choice whether now or after you have gone to the Ashram.

It is quite right your not having written to the Rao Saheb until you had the inspiration. There is no hurry, and so long as the proper language does not come you need not write at all.

I just returned from touring this morning to find your letter. The touring will be resumed on the 9th instant. Then probably I shall be away for nearly 10 days. But it would be safer to send your letter to Bangalore. I said Bangalore City before, but I find that Bangalore brings your letters two hours earlier. Kumara Park is not served from the City office but from the Central office.

With love,

Srimati Mirabai
Wardha

From the original : C.W. 5258. Courtesy : Mirabehn
336. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

[August] 5 [1927]¹

MIRABAI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM

WARDHA

LETTER DUTY POSTED.² ALL WELL. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5257. Courtesy : Mirabehn

337. LETTER TO MAHARAJA OF MYSORE

BANGALORE,

August 5 [1927]³

DEAR FRIEND,

Next Monday⁴ will be perhaps next to your coronation the happiest day in your life. In what manner should I send you my felicitations? Not by mere words of good wishes however well meant they may be. But I feel that I could not as a true friend do less than suggest your doing for your poorest subjects what you seem so successfully to have done for the middle class, the town-dwellers. You may not be able to do anything striking so soon as Monday next. But is it impossible to do away with the drink traffic? It is ruining the people.

It has been a matter of deep joy to me to learn wherever I have gone nothing but praise of your benevolence and purity. The drink curse under a rule so good appears to be so out of tune.

But I must not turn what is meant the heart-wish of a friend into a lecture. May you be long spared to give happiness to your people and to make yours a model State in every sense of the term.

I shall pray on Monday for a due fulfilment of all your noblest wishes.

I am,

Your Highness's

¹ From the postmark
² Vide the preceding item.
³ Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date in 1927
⁴ August 8, 1927 was the 25th anniversary of the Maharaja’s coronation. A formal message, vide the succeeding item, also appeared in the Press.
Pray do not feel bound to acknowledge this note.

THE MAHARAJA OF MYSORE

From a photostat: S.N. 12630

338. MESSAGE ON SILVER JUBILEE

[August 5, 1927]

It has been a most agreeable thing for me to find that no one has ever had a word to say against the Maharaja Saheb. I have almost wondered whether the friends round me have conspired to keep all evil reports from me. May all the good I have heard of the Maharaja be and for ever remain wholly true. I join the people of Mysore in wishing His Highness many a long year of useful service to the State and its people.

From a photostat S.N. 12630

339. ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS BY MOOLCHAND AGRAWAL

[August 5, 1927]

[Q.] 1. Do you believe in the distinct existence of Trinity—Nature, Soul and God?

[A.] I do believe but the word “distinct” sticks in the throat, for though the three are separate in name they are one in substance.

2. Whether soul is one or numerous? Has it entirely its separate existence or is it a portion of the Great Atman—God?

Souls seem to be many; but underneath the seeming variety, there is an essential oneness.

3. If it is particle [of God] it ought to be all-knowing, quite free from all evils and should possess all the qualities of God, as a particle of fire, water or gold possesses all the talents of the whole from which it is separated.

In its essence the soul is free from all evil, but torn from its source it partakes of evil and all other limitations even as drop of water torn from its source and found as part of a dirty pool seems for the time being to partake of the pool’s dirt.

4. We often see that a man does evil deeds. Whence that evil comes?

1 Presumably written on the same date as the preceding item
2 Vide the succeeding item.
We should be satisfied to know that there is evil in the world and that it has got to be avoided. If we knew its origin we should be God Almighty. But at the present we are in the unfortunate position of that drop of water in the dirty pool, and whilst we are doers of evil deeds, we must suffer the consequences thereof.

5. In the world we see different men. Those who work and do right deeds are gifted; those who do wrong or bad deeds are punished and have to suffer. This is all in accordance with the theory of karma. When one suffers—as a peasant or a labourer in India does at present, he suffers through his own past deeds, that is the Will of God. Why should we interfere in the Will of God by helping him so that he may not suffer?

If the Indian peasant was isolated and was seated on some mountain top, we shall not be perhaps responsible for his state. But seeing that he is part of the same society that we are, we cannot divest ourselves of responsibility for his even state as that drop of water in the pool cannot. Why God suffers this evil to exist, I am thankful to feel that He alone knows.

6. Instead of devoting our energies for the good of others should we not devote our energies in acquiring knowledge or earning money for ourselves or at the most for our relatives and neighbours and that too because they may help us in time of need?

Precisely for the reason that we may help our relatives, must we help all others whom in our ignorance we refuse to recognize as relatives. We are like the drop of water. It enjoys even that dirty existence by the help of its neighbours at the farthest end; for, its near neighbours have to depend upon theirs and so on to the end.

7. Yourself as well as others define “swarajya” as control over the self, reformation, betterment or improvement of the self, and also it is evident, that if one controls and improves or reforms himself, the society or the nation will be reformed by itself as the nation is a composition of individuals.

It is a correct statement; self-rule is home-rule.

From a photostat : G.N. 765
340. LETTER TO MOOLCHAND AGRAWAL

BANGALORE,
Shravan Shukla 8 [August 5, 1927]¹

BHAI MOOLCHANDJI,

I do not think it necessary to answer your queries² in Young India. Ask me any other questions if you want to.

Yours,
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi : G.N. 765

341. LETTER TO W. LUTOSTAWSKI

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 6, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

You will now see my reply to your questions in Young India,³ and if you have any further questions, please do not hesitate to ask.

I like your three rules about preservation of health. The two I understand thoroughly. For, I myself don’t believe in worry and always try to snatch moments for sleep and possess a fair capacity for going off to sleep almost at will. Fasting too I understand. But I do not as you seem to have been doing. You say you fast for 10 or 15 days before each voyage. This requires explanation. 10 or 15 days before each voyage. This requires explanation. 10 or 15 is a very vague number. For, 10 days or 15 days make a great difference for a fasting man, at least such is my experience. And what is this fasting? Do you take nothing during the fast except water, not fruit, not milk? Have you record of your weight before and after fast? How often have you taken these fasts? What is your weight now, and what is the meaning of each voyage? What is its duration? Do you fast, for instance, if you have to be at sea for one day only? You say you take one meal about midday at a time of intense activity. What does that meal consist of? And, do you take no fruit, no milk, no other drink except water either in the morning or in the evening? Then, again you say you fast only when you have too much weight. Do you then say

¹ Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date in 1927.
² Vide the preceding item.
³ Vide “Unity in Variety”, 11-8-1927.
that you have always too much weight before each voyage? And why do you ever have too much weight if you are a spare eater as you evidently seem to be? When you are not intensely active, how many meals do you take?

Then you say that you use at least 20 quarts of water to clear your bowels every day, until the water is returned clean and transparent and this you do when you have too much weight. What do you mean by use of water? Is it enema, or do you drink 20 quarts, even whilst you are taking your one meal per day? If you drink it, do you work it out through the kidneys or through the bowels? The experience of myself and all my friends who have fasted for long lengths of time is that when we have fasted for long lengths of time is that when we have fasted the water has to pass through the kidneys, ever through the bowels unless we have taken the enema. As you may know I am deeply interested in all experiments in fasting and dietetics whether merely for health or spiritual growth.

Yours sincerely,

PROF. W. LUTOSTAWSKI
JAGIELLONSKA 7 m. 2, WILNO
(POLAND)

From a photostat : S.N. 12513

342. TELEGRAM TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

[On or after August 6, 1927]

JAMNALALJI
SATYAGRAHASRAM
SABARMATI
CONSIDER YOUR ATTENDANCE HINDI SAMMELAN MEETING
ALLAHABAD FOURTEENTH INSTANT ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY.
YOU SHOULD CANVAS OTHER MEMBERS.

BAPU

From a photostat : S.N. 15172

1 From a note in Gujarati in the source, it is evident that this was sent at the same time as the following two telegrams.
343. TELEGRAM TO SAROJINI NAIDU

[On or after August 6, 1927]

SAROJINIDEVI
TAIMAHAL
AM CONSTANT COMMUNICATION VALLABHBHAI CONSULTING HIM ABOUT NECESSITY MY PRESENCE.

GANDHI

From a photostat : S.N. 15173

344. TELEGRAM TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

[On or after August 6, 1927]

VALLABHBHAI

SAROJINI DEVI SAYS I SHOULD GO THERE FOR MORAL SUCCOUR. IS MY PRESENCE ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY? AM STILL USELESS FOR ACTIVE WORK OR LONG DISCUSSIONS CONFERENCES.

BAPU

From a photostat : S.N. 15173 A

345. DEATH OF A SATYAGRAHI

Perhaps all readers of Navajivan may not be familiar with the name of Shri Harilal Maneklal Desai. He died a few days ago in Broach. A friend who lived with him says in a letter that his face was lit up with an expression of joy till the very end.

Shri Harilal resigned from the Baroda High School at the time of the Non-co-operation movement. He was the French teacher there. From then until his death he retained unwavering faith in non-co-operation. He strove to the best of his ability to follow truth as he understood it, and so I called him a satyagrahi. His humility was an ornament to his love of truth. He toured with me for a while in the early days of the Non-co-operation movement and I was struck at that time by his clean method of work, his thoroughness and alertness. During those days it was he who replied to many of the letters I received, and helped me in other ways. During that period of my

---

1 In reply to her telegram received on August 6, 1927, which read : “Dear Bapu even risking your health do visit Gujarat. Your presence essential. Give moral succour and solace in terrible distress. All friends join me this request.”
association with him, I could see that he took great pains to understand satyagraha and non-co-operation. He started khadi work in Kapadwanj by his unaided efforts and made a success of it. During the last years of his life, he helped the Broach Education Society and did whatever teaching work came his way. Among the names which I have mentally noted of those who can be relied upon to plunge into a civil disobedience movement if such an auspicious occasion arises, Haribhai’s was one. Cruel fate has now erased that name. A satyagrahi, however, does not feel sorry even for this. A satyagrahi friend helps even in death as much as he does when alive. “To live on in death” is the great mantra which inspires his life.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 7-8-1927

346. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 7, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I must be very brief this time, for I have much writing in front of me. The Gujarat floods and visitors occupy my time.

I have discussed with Kakasaheb what Valunjker told you. Kakasaheb says he never intended to give the impression that with Valunjker he was ready and willing to establish an ashram for women and do educational work among them. He loves that work but does not consider himself to be yet ready for it.

With love,

BAPU

[PS.]

Later—I have your letter. The Monday letter was duly posted. May it be that you have inferred from the date of the letter that it was not Monday’s? This passes as a Monday letter. The date you will see is Sunday’s, because it was written last night as nowadays I often do after taking silence. This I do to avoid continuous strain on Mondays. Of course you must not read so as to strain your eyes.

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5259. Courtesy : Mirabehn
DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter and I am glad you have written to me.

I am indeed aware of the unfortunate controversy over the book Rangila Rasul. You may not know that probably long before you knew the book or its contents, it came into my hands and I denounced it in strong language in the columns of Young India. This happened three years ago. I have not the Young India file before me. But the book is not a recent publication. If you are not a regular reader of Young India I shall be glad to ask the manager to send you the reference.

I have taken no part in the present controversy because I think that the Mussalman agitation is almost altogether wrong. Their denunciation of the judge is uncalled for. Agitation for an amendment of the law is absolutely proper. But whether there is agitation or not the Government will be bound to strengthen the law.

So far as the merits are concerned, there at least an equal number of equally scurrilous anti-Hindu writings as anti-Islamic. All this has been stated by me in clear language in the pages of Young India.

I do not read all the newspapers. The Hindu-edited newspapers have not appeared to me to have vigorously or at all supported the action of the author of Rangila Rasul or in any other way disrespectful to the Prophet. I shall thank you to let me have the newspapers you have in mind. Or, is you will give me the number and names of the newspapers, I shall send for them myself.

I am sorry to know that you think that the communal taint has affected me. So far as I know myself, I can give my assurance that I am the same to my Mussalman brethren that I was in 1920, and it is my constant prayer to God that I may be and remain the same up to the end of my life.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

GULZAR MOHAMAD ‘AQUIL’, ESQ.
HATI GATE
BATALA (DISTRICT GURUDASPUR)
PUNJAB

From a microfilm : S.N. 12385

1 Justice Dilip Singh; vide also “A Letter”, 10-7-1927.
348. LETTER TO WILLIAM SMITH
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 7, 1927

DEAR MR. SMITH,

I thank you for your letter about the Italian method of castration enclosing a letter from the Superintendent, Imperial Cattle-breeding Farm, Karnal.

I shall see if I can prepare something for you that may be fit for publication. But I hope you will not mind delay; for, as you know I have not much time at my disposal. But I am asking the manager to let me have accurate details and figures.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 12921

349. LETTER TO Y. M. PARNERKAR
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 7, 1927

MY DEAR PARNERKAR,

I enclose herewith two letters for your file and note. When you can get the time I would like you to give me notes containing the information enabling me to prepare the article of the kind Mr. William Smith wants.

I hope that you are now thoroughly acclimatized and that both of you are keeping well and fit.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. PARNERKAR
DAIRY
ASHRAM
SABARMATI

From a microfilm : S.N. 12922

350. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 7, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. You must take only that service from Dr. Ray which he can freely give from his heart. Khadi has ultimately to stand on its own merits and legs. It is well if we can get real co-operation from our great men. But it must be well also if we do not. We must rely upon the eternal truth that nothing on this earth that is intrinsically sound and is represented by a living force can possibly die.

Your difficulties I can understand well. And if I had a bagful of coins I could send them to you by express parcel in order to relieve your pecuniary distress; but I have not much hope of getting anything either. What I am able to collect in these parts will have to be used for development here. Therefore the only way to give pecuniary help to Bengal is for me to go to Bengal when you are ready and tour to collect.

This year is to go without, and the programme here will have to be carried over to next year, almost up to the end of March with an interval of a fortnight at the Ashram for Ramdas’ marriage. I therefore want you to become accustomed to think that you must manage our business, as it may now be called, with what capital we have. Therefore, I would like you, Kshitish Babu and others who are associated with you to confer together and evolve a programme which will save you from all worry and trouble. Once we recognize our limitations we shall cease to fret.

From your letter, I gather that there will be no office in Calcutta proper and that all your work would be done as from Sodepur. Will there be a store in Calcutta, or not even that? Personally, I would not mind if you thought that there should be no store in Calcutta, that is to say, that there should be none if it was not self-supporting.

I am still keeping fit. I shall be in and about Bangalore up to the 28th of this month, if there is no peremptory call from Gujarat owing to the floods. Pressure is being put upon me to go there. But till Vallabhbhai wants me, I shall resist the pressure. For I know that I can do nothing by my mere presence if I cannot do active work.

Yours,

BABU SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
KHADI PRATISHTHAN
SODEPUR

From a microfilm : S.N. 19797
SISTERS,

Today I must be brief, I lack both time and subject.

I have been forgetting to answer your inquiries about Manibehn’s return. Most probably she will leave soon after the 20th and, stopping at Poona and Bombay for a day each, she will go to Broach and from there to the Ashram.

We are having a difficult time at the Ashram at present. All of you should continue to be brave. Our responsibilities are very great. If we always have Rama in our hearts, no harm can ever befall us.

Kakasaheb who is here is keeping well.

Blessings form

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3662

352. LETTER TO J. B. PETIT

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 9, 1927

DEAR MR. PETIT,

You will forgive me for troubling you once more. Probably Andrews has cabled to you that he is returning on the 20th instant. I see that the Corporation has voted an address. I have suggested in my article in Young India¹ that it should be made the occasion of a public demonstration on a wide scale. For, not only does Andrews deserve all the honour that we can show to him but the occasion will bear a political significance in South Africa and will strengthen Mr. Sastri’s hands if the presentation of the address becomes not a humdrum function but an enthusiastic popular demonstration.

The main purpose of this letter is to suggest that the Imperial Citizenship Association should present him with a solid purse to be utilized by him for educational and kindred work in South Africa. You might have seen Mr. Sastri’s appeal for social...² All this is in conjunction with Mr. Andrews. No doubt our people in South Africa

¹ From the reference to lack of time, vide also “Letter to Mirabehn”, 7-8-1927.
² Vide “Welcome Good Samaritan”, 11-8-1927.
³ The source has a blank here.
must find the means; but both their capacity and will are limited. Anything sent from here will encourage the workers there and strengthen Mr. Sastri’s hands. And the reason why I suggest the presentation of the purse in a public manner to Mr. Andrews is that its demonstrative value may be emphasized. Indeed, in my articles I have even suggested the Corporation instead of giving a costly casket should vote a purse, that is of course if it is permissible under its rules.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Natarajan.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhi

From a photostat: S.N. 12369

353. LETTER TO K. S. NATARAJAN

Kumara Park, Bangalore,
August 9, 1927

Dear Mr. Natarajan,

I enclose herewith a copy of my letter to Mr. Petit for your consideration. The letter speaks for itself.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhi

Sjt. K. S. Natarajan

Bombay

From a photostat: S.N. 12369
354. LETTER TO KONDA VENKATAPPAYYA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 9, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Mahadev has not been able to place before me the papers you refer to as yet; for, he has found me too busy. The inks I shall test and let you know my impression. How is your daughter getting on both in health and studies? She must some day come to the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. KONDA VENKATAPPAYYAGARU
GUNTUR
From a microfilm : S.N. 14212

355. LETTER TO E. S. PATWARDHAN

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 9, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am sending it to Sheth Jamnalalji and asking him to go into the matter carefully and do whatever he thinks just and possible. Beyond that I must not influence him.

Yours sincerely,

E. S. PATWARDHAN, ESQ.
PRESIDENT
TILAK VIDYALAYA
NAGPUR

From a microfilm : S.N. 14215
DEAR JAMINI BABU,

I have your letter. I appreciate the confidence you repose in me. But the attitude you have adopted is wrong. Even if I was well, I should be powerless to do anything single-handed. But I am still more powerless seeing that I could take no part in the administrative work. Surely, you and Satis Babu know each other much better than you and I. And if you cannot convince Satis Babu, how shall I be able to help? But if you think that Satis Babu is prejudiced against you, you should have self-confidence enough to be able to convince the Secretary of the Association and the members of the Council other than Satis Babu of his prejudice. I can give you this assurance that Mr. Shankerlal Banker in the first instance and the other members of the Council in the second will consider all you might have to say quite impartially and independently of Satis Babu. There is also Dr. Ray and he will surely listen to you as much as to Satis Babu. For I know what affection he has for you. For my own part I must also add that Satis Babu will not do any conscious injustice to you. As a matter of fact, he wrote to me a kind letter about you and nothing will please me better than to find that you have met Satis Babu and become satisfied that he has no prejudice against you. After all he has no ends of his own to serve by putting obstacles in your way. He has exchanged a life of ease, comfort and honour for one of deprivation, pains, sorrows and self-effacement. If I am wrong you may correct me. It grieves me that self-sacrificing workers cannot hold together and work away for a cause which is common to them all.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. JAMINI BHUSHAN MITRA
KALISPUR ASHRAM
P.O. BALIKHOLA
KHALISPUR
KHULNA (BENGAL)

From a microfilm : S.N. 19798
357. LETTER TO SWAMI

August 9, 1927

Your latest telegram. I have sent a reply by wire which you must have received. Your telegram and your letter are full of your love and your sorrow. I expect nothing else of you.

It is my duty to restrain excess of love. I could not see from the figures you sent me that we are at the moment in a position to produce Rs. 25,000. I understand that at present we can somehow balance the two sides.

But if we have a saving of Rs. 25,000, does it not prove that we must be making a huge profit somewhere or that we do not pay enough to our workers?

It may or may not be as you say. None the less I do feel that if we have the capacity to make this donation it could be done only anonymously. If our small institution could make such a large donation, it would have an impact on others and this may arouse jealousy, obviously it could not be emulated. Generally, a donation is announced so that others may follow suit. Else it is merely showing off.

For us being in good shape means not being able to give away anything at all. I see from your report that the tenements of our workers are in a state of disrepair. If our resources permit we should utilize what we can spare for repairing their houses so that they would not be a burden on the public funds. I would regard that as our substantial contribution.

No one here has understood fully the meaning of your telegram. If you thought that the workers, etc., would accept minimum wages and pay up the remainder as monthly instalments, I would suggest that as they save up progressively, those savings should be utilized for the benefit of the Dheds and Bhangis and something permanent can thus be achieved. I believe all will receive the help urgently needed and they will find their feet. If we have earned our money honestly, I wish you to make the purest use of it.

But you may, if you like, treat all this as needless fuss. I might have scribbled a lot without knowing things. You are free to do

1 Suggesting that Rs. 25,000 be set apart for flood relief by Navajivan and offering to defer his retirement for two years so that the institution need not suffer financially anything in consultation with Vallabhbhai, Jamnalalji and others and I shall approve of whatever you do. I shall be quite content if you regarded the above ideas as emotional outburst of one of the press workers and treat them accordingly.

It may be that you would be bound for two years; but I like that. Whatever I send you now is sent only after being shown to Kaka. And that will be the case hereafter. Take it that he has approved, what he has not objected to.

Had I not had on my hand today grave matters beyond my capacity, I would have written much more.

[From Gujarati]

From a manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

358. AN APPEAL

BANGALORE,
August 10, 1927

FRIENDS.

This is addressed to the Gujarati-speaking Hindus, Mussalmans, Parsis and Christians if any. The other citizens will have the opportunity of subscribing to a fund which I am hoping will be soon started.

This appeal is in connection with the heavy floods of Gujarat the like of which have not occurred within living memory. I hope therefore that all Gujaratis, men and women, will contribute to this fund as much as they can. The funds will be sent to Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel, the President of the Ahmedabad Municipality and of the Gujarat Provincial Congress Committee.

The appeal is being taken up by Messrs Chimanlal Bhogilal Desai, Raojibhai Patel and Chhotalal Kothari. Every subscriber is requested to give his or her name against the sum subscribed so as to facilitate accurate publication of the list in the pages of Young India or Navajivan.

To organized relief in times of distress. Let those Gujaratis who are not wanted for work in Gujarat or who can be spared turn their attention to the places where help may be most needed. The distress of Gujarat must not blind the Gujaratis to the need of the other provinces. The present distress must be utilized to make us less provincial and more national. We must feel one with the least and the remotest of the thirty crores of God’s creatures who inhabit this land.

---

1 End of page 2. In the photostat volume, two pages (numbered 3 and 4) are interpolated after page 2 and the original page 3 has been renumbered 5. But these two pages, which seem to be part of another appeal, are reproduced below.

M. K. G.

359. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 10, 1927

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

I have your bomb-shell. I had as long chats with Panditji over it as it was possible for us both to have. Your draft statement does not shock me. The atmosphere about us is so debilitating and irresponsible that the tallest of us becomes dazed for the moment. The suffocation has clearly overtaken you. It is no fault of yours. And as I could say to Khwaja in spite of his going back upon his brilliant professions that I could love him, so I can literally say of you in spite of what is admittedly a lapse. I say “admittedly” because you still believe in Non-co-operation, but the situation demands, in your opinion, a different conduct and you deceive yourself into the belief that the different conduct would hasten Non-co-operation. I don’t believe it. But I can’t impart my belief or unbelief to you. You must act up to whatever is natural for you.

But I have this suggestion. Keep those views to yourself. You are in no way called upon to publish them. For, if I am no politician, you are still less. When swaraj is established, you won’t want to belong to the diplomatic service, nor to the military. You would fight shy of the law department. You would be content, if you are placed in charge of the medical service and given a free purse for all your researches, intelligent or otherwise, even as I would aspire after nothing more serious or important than the spinning department, if hand-spinning has not become universal by that time. The law, diplomacy, military and the rest, we shall leave to Motilalji and company; and if Panditji thinks that Shaukat Ali would be good company, he may throw at him the military departments.

If my reading is correct, you and I, but you more than I, will not be expected to contribute to the discussion over Assembly and Councils programme, constitution making and what not or better still, what rot. I, therefore, think that you will commit no crime against God or Indian humanity, if you announce to the world that you have no opinion on these matters which must be left to specialists and politicians. I am sure you have not made the mistake of supposing that I have sponsored your election\(^1\) because I considered you to be a brilliant political thinker or anything near that state. The country has acclaimed your election with one voice because you are a true and good Mussalman, you are a lover of your country, there is no camouflage in you, you know your limitations, you keep your head about you, but because above all, Hindu-Muslim unity is a passion with you, and you entertain ideas about it which you would gladly share with your country and which you are impatient to share with it, and enforce them even if it be at the point of the bayonet. Your election is a demonstration, in spite of the madness raging round us, that the country is thirsting for domestic peace, and that it is sick over dishonesty, fraud, immorality and violence committed in the sacred name of religion. I therefore ask you to tear your statement to pieces. Keep that opinion to yourself, accept the election with grace, dignity and thankfulness, and announce that you have no political policy of your own to place before the country, that so far as that is concerned, you will take up a strictly judicial and impartial attitude and act merely as a chairman of meetings guiding deliberations, keeping order and enforcing decisions of majorities, that you have accepted the election with the sole intention of guiding the country your year of office, by all the power at your command, to domestic peace. For, you owe it to the country as a Mussalman and a staunch nationalist to vindicate the religion of the Prophet and the honour of the country by giving all the talents you have for securing a domestic peace honourable to all parties. Nobody expects more of you. And, if you meddle in anything else, you will be travelling outside your province.

I have not telegraphed to you; for, I thought I would save a few rupees of the poor spinners. That I have left to Panditji who is better able to patronize the telegraph department. You made him your carrier, and I give myself the same honour by letting him carry my reply. And in the face of this reply, you dare not refuse the crown of thorns that is offered to you by a grateful country, and you dare not

\(^1\) For the Congress presidency publish your statement, however precious your views are. If you wish to place them before a few friends gathered together in a drawing-room enjoying hookah, you may certainly enliven the company with your views. But beyond the four walls of such a drawing-room, your views may not travel.

This letter gives you sufficient indication of my health and ill-health. Health you may gather from the length of the letter and the views expressed therein. Ill-health you are entirely to infer from the fact that much against my will I have been obliged to dictate what is purely a personal and affectionate letter of an old friend.

You need not apologize for not coming. If I find myself on the brink of the precipice, I shall not hesitate to telegraph for you, nor; if I undertake a fast more prolonged than 21 days. And I know that whatever engagement may be, you will leave them to see a friend patient if only to say good-bye to him or to wean him from his mad fasting career. Meanwhile by all means continue to make your thousand per day on condition that a certain respectable percentage of your ill-gotten gains is reserved for the poor spinners, if only by way of penance.

May I expect a reassuring telegram from you?

When you meet Hakimji, please warn him against forgetting me altogether.

Yours sincerely,

D.R. M. A. ANSARI
NO. 1, DARYAGANI
DELHI

From a photostat : S.N. 12870

360. LETTER TO T. R. MAHADEVA IYER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 10, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

You must excuse me for not being able to write to you earlier. I waited purposely for one or two days as Dr. Varadarajulu was coming.
I have now discussed the situation with him also. He tells me that the people in the Malay Peninsula are also with the Committee and he really thinks that I need not bother myself about the matter as in course of time the possession of the property was bound to revert to the Committee. My own opinion is that where there is a large number of people who want to observe caste restrictions, they should be able to send their children to the gurukul with the option to them to feed them separately. But if the majority of those who are in power do not favour the view and wish to have a rigid rule excluding all who wish to observe caste restrictions you should gracefully and instantaneously give up possession. If what Dr. Varadarajulu says is true, namely, that you have no effective opinion behind you, it appears to me to be useless to go to arbitration. If you will give up possession at once, you are at liberty to use this letter in order to justify your step.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. T. R. MAHADEVA IYER
NO. 1, KRISHNAMACHARI ROAD
NUNGUMBAKAM CATHEDRAL P.O.
MADRAS

From a microfilm : S.N. 12936-A

361. LETTER TO S. SRINIVASA IYENGAR

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 10, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

We had a fine family gathering yesterday—three Brahmins against two non-Brahmins or in modern language three co-operators against two non-co-operators, myself being in each case in a minority. But strangely enough, the party forgot differences of opinion and differences of varna and came to the unanimous opinion that you should be advised, asked and pressed to send a nice little love letter to Mr. R. K. Shunmugam Chetty asking him to see you at once for a personal chat. This decision was taken because we felt that you being a Brahmin, President of the Congress, and a leader of the Swaraj Party had an advantage over the poor non-Brahmin member of the Party, and we also felt, apart from Mr. Chetty, that you will honour our decision without any ado, in spite of a certain amount of delicacy about sending any such letter.

I do not need to give you the contents of the discussion; for, you will have them all from Mr. Satyamurti, and you will not expect a fellow-patient to enter into any explanation or discussion. If Panditji who is in better health and in the best of spirits wishes to inflict upon you an explanation and a discussion instead of issuing orders as chief of the Swaraj Party and ex-President of the Congress, he may do so. For my part, I shall simply expect you to write the love letter in your best style and with the diplomatic reserve of the English diplomat.

I was disturbed when I saw a brief paragraph about your illness. Your telegram reassured me, and I hope that this will find you fit enough to undertake the fatiguing journey in front of you.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. S. SRINIVASA IYENGAR
MYLAPORE
MADRAS

From a photostat : S.N. 14213

362. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

BANGALORE,
Shravan Shuddha 12[August 10, 1927]¹

BHAISHRI VALJI,

In our circle you are the only student of the Vedas. Today I am sending you an issue of Vaidik Dharma. Go through it carefully and let me have your opinion about it. Is the view correct that in Vedic times respectable people did not favour eating meat, and especially beef, and that animals were not killed in sacrifices? If you think that it is, what have you to say about the contrary view expressed by Shri Vaidya²?

I should like to have from you regular news about the dairy, the tannery, etc.

I hope you are keeping good health.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati : C. W. 7393. Courtesy : Valjibhai Desai

¹ Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date in 1927.
² C. V. Vaidya, Sanskrit scholar and Indologist
363. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Wednesday, August 10, 1927

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I cannot make out from your letter whether Purushottam has left his job or not. You will be truly able to influence your pupils only when you all give your spare time to manual work and handicrafts and the pupils realize that you enjoy doing it. If you say you do not get time, I shall retort that you do not find time because you have no real interest in it. I can certainly understand that our students too wish to earn money. The fact remains that we ourselves do not face poverty and are not labourers in the true sense. Again, it is not that accumulation of property is distasteful to all of us. We can only say that it should be so and that we are trying to make it so. How can the students rise above this position? Hence, before the students stop dreaming of the future, the Ashram ought to make great headway. Indeed the fact is that though, comparatively, our sacrifices and efforts appear illustrious actually both are as good as nothing. It may be that we are not to blame for it and that circumstances are responsible for it. But we must not on that account ignore it.

I have discussed your letter with Kakasaheb today. Whenever we get time, we do engage in such discussions. Since Kaka will write more about this, I shall not. I shall concede this much that as long as Kakasaheb is the Vice-president of the managing committee, the moral responsibility will be his. Therefore, although far away, you have a right to obtain his opinion. We are both considering whether Kaka will be able to do his duty of pronouncing an opinion. But Swami, who in this matter enjoys authority over both of us, is far away. We must also consider what he thinks.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai
364. ANOTHER KHADI BHANDAR

The Honorary Secretary of the Khaddar Co-operative Society Limited of Shimoga writes to say that among the khadi bhandars of Karnataka should be included the khadi bhandar run by this Society at Shimoga. The bhandar was only recently opened. I gladly mention this bhandar. But I warn all the new ventures that they must be run on business lines and by those who know something of the techniques of khadi sales. Not everyone can run a khadi bhandar successfully, not even everyone who has been in charge of a cloth shop. A manager of a khadi bhandar should know the different varieties of khadi, and should know how to distinguish between genuine khadi and imitations. He should also know the art of presenting khadi to the public in an inviting manner, and above all, he has to be scrupulously honest. I invite other bhandars like the Shimoga Bhandar to send in their names with full particulars to the Secretary, All-India Spinners’ Association, Ahmedabad.

Young India, 11-8-1927

365. INDIAN SETTLERS IN SOUTH AFRICA

India’s first Ambassador has not allowed the grass to grow under his feet. He is busily sowing seeds of true union by a seasonable word now addressed to the Europeans and now to the Indian settlers, and he seems to be having fair success with both. Europeans gracefully acknowledge his splendid worth and exquisite impartiality. Indians gratefully recognize the immense strength of character which backs every word that this great son of India utters.

He has now appealed to them to produce an army of social workers in the cause of public health and sanitation. Let us hope that his appeal will not fall upon deaf ears, and that well-to-do and educated Indians will respond as zealously as they did when C. F. Andrews appealed to them for assistance for the scavenging work he did during the outbreak of smallpox in Durban some months ago. Agent though he is of the Government, if Reuter’s report is correct, Sjt. Sastri did not spare it over its criminal indifference about the sanitary and social welfare of the indentured Indians. For the neglect of sanitation amongst the indentured Indians, three parties are really responsible—the Government of India, the employers, and the Local Government. If the Government of India had insisted upon a minimum standard, and if the employers had taken a human interest in the employees and the Local Government had considered the indentured Indians as future citizens of South Africa, they would have learnt, during their five years’ indenture, habits of modern sanitation. For during the five years of indenture they had to live like soldiers in barracks and they could have been made to conform to any reasonable sanitary regulations that might have been framed, even as they were made to conform to labour regulations which were often even harsh and severe. But this is past history. There is no more indentured emigration now.

The questions is now to make of the existing Indian population model citizens, and if the Government and the Indian settlers co-operate, it is not at all impossible to set a better tone, and create a healthy Indian public opinion that would not tolerate any insanitation or ugliness. Let the Indian settlers do their part of forming sanitation brigades, cleaning up latrines and streets and instructing ignorant people in the elementary laws of sanitation, even as they did in 1897 in Durban. Sjt. Sastri’s work will be fruitless unless he is willingly, intelligently and whole-heartedly helped by the Indian settlers. They must conform to the wholesome maxim of law that those who seek justice or equity must come with clean hands. Let the settlers be clean in body, mind and soul, and thus make the best use of the golden opportunity they have of having an Ambassador who has got the ability to serve them and who has in a remarkable measure the ear of the European inhabitants of South Africa.

Young India, 11-8-1927

366. THE HAVOC IN GUJARAT

The destruction wrought by the heavy floods in Gujarat appears to be of an unprecedented character. The meagre accounts I have seen in the Press supplemented by two telegrams from Vallabhbhai Patel and one from the Ashram gave me but a faint idea of the enormous damage done by the flood. I am handicapped, too, as I am writing this in an out-of-the-way place in Mysore where newspapers reach very late. When communications are thoroughly established, the total extent of the damage done will probably be found to be much heavier than the estimates made by responsible workers. Benevolent and wealthy gentlemen of Bombay and Gujarat have been as prompt in their work of mercy as Nature has been furious in her work of destruction. Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel has already issued an appeal. I hope that there will be a liberal response to the appeal. A private telegram tells me that Sir Purushottamdas Thakordas has also, as is his wont on such occasions, started relief work. On occasions of such calamities when deepest emotions are stirred, many relief agencies are brought into being to render help. They must be all welcome. Not one agency can hope to overtake the whole work of relief over such a vast area. However, it will be the duty of several agencies to co-operate with one another, so as to avoid overlapping and so as to make every rupee go to the longest length and every grain of wheat find its way to the neediest hands. Let those whom God has blessed with ability to give remember the proverb: “He gives twice who gives the quickest.”

Young India, 11-8-1927

367. WELCOME GOOD SAMARITAN

Someone gave C. F. Andrews the affectionate title of Dinabandhu. It certainly fits him. His overpowering ambition in life is to be friend of those in need, and the way he helps is by utter self-effacement. It is fitting therefore that the first city in India should have voted an address to be presented on his return which takes place on the 20th instant. I have no doubt that the address will be worthy of the occasion. But in the abundance of their affection let the members of the Corporation not forget, that Dinabandhu Andrews is not a monied man. He has almost literally nowhere to lay his hand on. He has no cupboard, no treasure chest, no house of his own. For his very few belongings he needs a caretaker. He never keeps anything for himself. Anybody may take away his box with its contents. When in South Africa, Pearson and I used to despair of him ever taking care of himself or things which could be called his own. To present him with a rich casket or any casket at all would be a cruelty to him.

But if the Corporation would spend any money it would be proper to vote a purse for him to be used for his life mission. He appreciates affection. But he is never so awkward as when he receives thanks and honours and wonders why he should be thanked or honoured at all. But however awkward he may feel, let the honour to be done to him be not a hole-and-corner affair. For whilst it is undoubtedly due to him for his magnificent work in South Africa, it will also serve the purpose of reciprocating the goodwill that has been created in South Africa, and would be a demonstration of the fact, that in his work he carried with him the weight of opinion of all India, and that he was no less an ambassador for India than Sjt. Sastri.

Young India, 11-8-1927

368. UNITY IN VARIETY

The Polish professor\(^1\) whose earnest questions I endeavoured to answer a few months back, having read my answer\(^2\), sends me the following further questions:

1. Men are not equal. Do you also admit that there is a vast inequality between nations?
2. If this is true, do you think that representative elective bodies, called parliaments, which have brought Europe to the Great War, are really suitable for India?
3. Do you think that India may become one nation in a similar sense as Italy or France?
4. Is it right to suppose that the future of Asia depends on this unification of India, which alone could overrule the materialistic tendencies of Japan and China?
5. Is this not the real alternative for Asia, either superficial Europeanization as in Japan, or going back to ancient Aryan tradition which seems to be the rule for great Indian masters?
6. Has this recalling of original Aryan tradition also an importance for Europe?
7. Do you not see in European civilization, with all its faults, a new power which goes beyond all Hindu experience?
8. Is there, in all India, a single little town, like many French little towns, in which everybody is really free to follow his aspirations, all people are well-to-do, all have a very high level of education and sociability, and representatives of opposite tendencies meet in friendly intercourse? I know such towns in France and also in England. I wonder whether such a thing exists in India.

My correspondent has stated only a half-truth when he says, “Men are not equal”. The other half is that they are equal. For,

\(^1\) W. Lutostawski
\(^2\) Vide “Truth is One”, 21-4-1927.
though they are not all of the same age, the same height, the same skin, and the same intellect, these inequalities are temporary and superficial, the soul that is hidden beneath this earthy crust is one and the same for all men and women belonging to all climes. It would therefore be, perhaps, more accurate to say, that there is a real and substantial unity in all the variety that we see around us. The word “Inequality” has a bad odour about it, and it has led to arrogance and inhumanities, both in the East and the West. What is true about men is also true about nations, which are but groups of men. The false and rigid doctrine of inequality has led to the insolent exploitation of the nations of Asia and Africa. Who knows that the present ability of the West to prey upon the East is a sign of Western superiority and eastern inferiority? I know that the East meekly, and all too hastily, submits to this pernicious doctrine, and then makes an ineffectual attempt to imitate the West. There is, after all, a world of truth in the poetic statement, “Things are not what they seem.”.

The second question does not seem to follow from the first. And seeing that I reject the doctrine of inequality in the sense used by the writer, I am unable to admit that the representative elective bodies are really unsuitable for India. But for the reasons, which I have stated in the Indian Home Rule and which in the main I have found no occasion during the past 20 years to revise, I should be extremely sorry, if India entirely copies the Western model. Representative elective bodies were not unknown to India before the European advent. But the contents of the words “representation” and “election” were, so far as I can see, far different from the European.

In my opinion, India is today one nation, even as Italy or France is; and this I maintain in spite of a vivid and painful knowledge of the fact, that Hindus and Mussalmans are murdering one another, that Brahmns and non-Brahmins are preparing for a similar battle, and that both Brahmns and non-Brahmins exclude from their purview the classes which both have left no stone unturned to suppress. But I have known similar quarrels in families and in other nations. It has often seemed to me that a family connection is necessary to establish a good ground for a quarrel. But it flatters me to be able heartily to endorse the proposition that the future of Asia depends upon a proper and demonstrable unification of India.

I do not, however, think that the alternative to superficial Europeanization consists in a complete reversion to the ancient Aryan tradition. I hold with that great thinker, the late Justice Ranade, that there is no such thing as a literal complete revival of ancient tradition possible, even if it were desirable. In the first place, no one knows authoritatively what the ancient Aryan tradition was or is. It is difficult to state unerringly the period which can be described as the “Golden Age” and then to give a categorical description of that age. And I am humble enough to admit that there is much that we can profitably assimilate from the West. Wisdom is no monopoly of one continent or one race. My resistance to Western civilization is really a resistance to its indiscriminate and thoughtless imitation based on the assumption that Asiatics are fit only to copy everything that comes from the West. I do believe that if India has patience enough to go through the fire of suffering and to resist any unlawful encroachment upon its own civilization which, imperfect though it undoubtedly is, has hitherto stood the ravages of time, she can make a lasting contribution to the peace and solid progress of the world.

I gladly admit that a new power for good is slowly but surely arising in the West. Whether it will transcend all Hindu experience or not, I do not know. But I should welcome every fresh contribution to the enrichment of humanity, no matter where it comes from.

Lastly, I am unable to say anything about the glowing tribute that the learned professor pays to the self-contained French and English little towns. I know so little about English towns, and still less about the French. I own I have my doubts. But I know that if the professor could stand the almost forbidden exterior of Indian villages, I would undertake to take him to some of them where he would see a culture of a high order, and though he will miss the literary polish he will not miss the human heart and the human touch, and where, if he can accommodate himself to the strange Indian ways about exclusive eating and drinking, he will see amazing tolerance of opposite ideas and friendliest intercourse of the mind and the soul. Let me also remind the professor that the English and the French prosperity and amenities which such prosperity brings depend upon, what I must again repeat and what I would gladly avoid if I could, namely, exploitation.

Young India, 11-8-1927
I extract the following interesting paragraphs from an article headed “War” in the March number of the Brotherhood:

Last time the women and children were only starved—it was done by a process cunningly disguised as “economic pressure”—but next time they are to be gassed to death. Aeroplanes will drop penetrating poisons which will exterminate civil population—Edison says that it should not be difficult to dispose of London’s millions in three hours. In every civilized country the chemists are at work searching for some particularly deadly poisons. In England, says Truth, our Government is busy experimenting with improvements in poison gas and killing animals at the rate of two a day in the process. It obtained in one year 689 cats, guinea pigs, goats, mice, monkeys, rabbits and rats, and killed 618 of them with poison gas in search of improvements.

Some idea of the horrors of the next war may be gathered from the fact that the range of guns has been doubled since the Armistice¹, and that machine guns are now available which fire 1,500 shots a minute. An automatic cannon will fire one and a quarter pound shells at the rate of 120 a minute, and there is a sixteen-inch gun which hurls a missile weighing more than a ton for a distance of twenty-seven miles. The Chemical Warfare Service in America has discovered a liquid three drops of which applied to any part of the skin will cause a man’s death. One aeroplane, carrying two tons of this liquid, could kill the whole population over miles of territory. General Swinton, of the British Army, says: The great future weapon of war will be deadly germs. We have since the war discovered and developed germs which, dropped down upon cities and armies, will slaughter a nation in a day.

If anyone is ever in danger of becoming unduly optimistic, let him remember that we spent in 1924 forty millions in education, a hundred and twenty one millions on armaments, and three hundred and sixteen millions on drink. The business of scientific killing is very expensive, and I told that enough nitrogen was thrown away in one small and indecisive battle in France to save India from a famine. The great world powers are still pouring out an incredible amount of their treasure upon armaments, although history so plainly teaches that increasing armaments do nothing but increase the likelihood of wars. Peace-loving America voted eighty-five million dollars for aviation expansion in a few minutes, and no one took the slightest notice of this forward movement in the race for armaments. The irony of the situation is, that while Great Britain is spending nearly twice as much money on armaments today as she spent in 1913, the victorious nations have relieved Germany of the burden of such expenditure, so that, in competing with her in industry and commerce they work under a severe handicap of their own creation.

¹ Of 1918

I add to this the following from the Lancet (June 18, 1927):

> Since the arrival of the British troops, there have been many cases of influenza and pneumonia, but the question of venereal disease has been the most clamant one, and in spite of every possible precaution the number of those affected has steadily increased. . . . Numbers of prostitutes from North and South have flocked to Shanghai, most of them being Chinese (60 per cent), Russians (30 per cent), and Japanese (5 per cent). The majority of the brothels are in the French Concession and in Chinese districts bordering on municipal roads. The high venereal rate has give the Command much concern, and no stone is left unturned in the effort to lower it.

And yet there are intelligent men who talk, and gullible men who subscribe to the talk, of the “humanizing influence” of war!

Young India, 11-8-1927

370. WHEN SCIENCE AND ART ARE REAL

A friend sends me an extract from Anton Tchekov’s stories which is worth reproducing. The extract runs as follows:

> I have a very definite opinion on this subject, I assure you. To my mind, all these schools, dispensaries, libraries, medical relief societies, under present conditions, only serve to aggravate the bondage of the people. The peasants are fettered by a great chain, and you do not break the chain, but only add fresh links to it.

> What matters is, not that Anna died in childbirth, but that all these Annas, Mavrass, Pelagea’s toil from early morning till dark, fall ill from working beyond their strength, all their lives tremble for their sick and hungry children, all their lives are being doctored, and in dread of death and disease, fade and grow old early and die in filth and stench.

> Their children begin the same story over again as soon as they grow up, and so it goes on for hundreds of years, and millions of men live worse than beasts—in continual terror, for a mere crust of bread. The whole horror of their position lies in their never having time to think of their image and semblance. Cold, hunger, animal terror, a burden of toil, like avalanches of snow, block for them every way to spiritual activity—that is, to what distinguishes a man from the brutes and what is the only thing which makes life worth living.

You go to their help with hospitals and schools, but you do not free them from their fetters by that. On the contrary, you bind them in closer bonds, as by introducing new prejudices, you increase the number of their wants, to say nothing of the fact that they have got to pay Zemstvo for blisters and books and so toil harder than ever.

Yes, I am against medicine. It would be necessary only for the study of diseases as natural phenomena, and not for the cure of them. If one must cure, it should not be diseases, but the cause of them. Remove the principal cause,—physical labour—and then there will be no disease.

I do not believe in a science that cures disease. When science and art are real, they aim not at temporary and private ends, but at eternal and universal—they seek for truth and the meaning of life, they seek for God, for the Soul, and when they are tied down to the needs and evils of the day, to dispensaries and libraries, they only complicate and hamper life.

Scientific men, writers, artists are hard at work. Thanks to them, the conveniences of life are multiplied from day to day. Our physical demands increase, yet truth is still a long way off, and man still remains the most rapacious and dirty animal; everything is tending to the degeneration of the majority of mankind and the loss for ever of fitness for life.

I have not read the original story, but I suppose physical labour which the author refers to as the principal cause of diseases is not wholesome farm labour or any such labour, but the grinding toil which for the sake of eking a miserable livelihood the peasants of his experience must have been obliged to undergo. It would be interesting to know the original Russian word which has been rendered by the translator as “physical labour”.

The most telling passage in the extract is perhaps that which distinguishes real science and art from the ephemeral. Who can deny that much that passes for science and art today destroys the soul instead of uplifting it and instead of evoking the best in us panders to our basest passions?

Young India, 11-8-1927
371. TEST OF FIDELITY

A study of the chart of membership of the All-India Spinners’ Association discloses a painful fact. Out of 1,980 members of the A Class, 1,255 have been found to be unsteady in their fidelity to their promise regularly to send their yarn quota. Let no one think that if it was an insignificant monetary contribution rather than that of self-spun yarn, the result would have been very different. Somehow or other people are neglectful in the performance of self-imposed duties, whose breach does not carry with it an immediate punitive consequence. But unless a nation contains a large enough number of men and women who would carry out their voluntary obligations, although their breach may not entail any felt punishment, it can make slow progress. Forfeiture of rights of membership of an organization which carried with it no pecuniary or other earthly loss is lightly regarded by the members, and some even consider that by belonging to such an institution they confer on it a patronage which should be treasured by the institution in question. But I warn the members, if there are any, against harbouring such notions about the All-India Spinners’ Association. To belong to the Association should be considered a rare privilege, because by contributing half an hour’s free and intelligent labour capable of being easily performed by any ordinary man, woman or child, a member becomes a partaker in the tremendous aggregate effect of the contributions. I would therefore urge the defaulting members to be as punctual in sending their quota as they would be in keeping the time for catching their train or attending their offices. Let them remember that apart from the intrinsic value of spinning, there is no less value in cultivating regularly a daily remembrance of the condition of the dumb millions and a daily concentration over drawing an even strong thread as much for themselves as for the rest of the 300 millions of India. I understand that each one of the members has been sent a reminder. Let the defaulters please realize that each reminder costs at least half an anna over and above the salaries of men employed in attending to the writing and despatch of reminder cards. It has been suggested that some postpone sending their quota till several months’ contributions are collected, so as to save postage. The saving of postage is a proper consideration. But those who would save postage should send their contributions in advance. To spin 12,000 yards in a month’s time is not a very great strain as must be abundantly clear to every reader of these pages. And if after having sent one lot in advance, the spinners continue to give 30 minutes regularly to the wheel, they will never be in arrears, and they will never feel the strain of the work, no matter how busy they may be otherwise. And if punishment has any appeal to them, let them remember that at the end of the first five years of the existence of the All-India Spinners' Association, it will descend surely and swiftly upon them, when the time comes for revising the constitution and conferring further privileges upon members.

Young India, 11-8-1927

372. NOTES
TRUE SACRIFICE

Two young men only the other day presented themselves before me and placed into my hands Rs. 10 being the commission they had earned in terms of the rules of the All-India Spinners’ Association for hawking khadi. They were entitled to keep this money themselves. But they did not wish to retain this commission; for they felt the force of the argument that there were millions who were much worse off than themselves. The young men went away promising to bring me more such refunds.

Whilst I mention this instance in appreciation of the self-sacrifice of these young men, no khadi-hawker is to infer from it that he is also expected to refund his commission, in other words, that every khadi-hawker is expected to hawk without any charge. I know that it is not possible for everyone to do so, and khadi work requires as many honest, industrious and intelligent hawkers as can be had. To recommend for all the standard that the two young men have chosen for themselves would be to restrict the number of khadi-hawkers, whereas the object is to attract as many young men for the work as possible.

After all the commission to be had out of khadi sales is not much and is not easily earned because it is not possible to command sales of khadi simply by exhibiting it for sale. I know that hawkers have to go from door to door often even without any response whatsoever, and seeing that the commission is given only on actual sales, khadi-hawking means earning one’s bread by the sweat of one’s brow. Let the example of these young men therefore spur those who are doing nothing for khadi to some effort, and let the example result in adding to the number of hawkers without their being expected to refund their hard-earned commission. There are no doubt many young men and young women who have plenty of leisure and do not need any pecuniary reward. They may follow the example of these young men and offer their services for hawking. Let would-be khadi-hawkers however understand that they cannot get khadi to hawk unless they are able to produce certificates of character, and are able to furnish security for the amount of khadi they may receive for sale.

1 The source has “for”.

VOL. 39 : 4 JUNE, 1927 - 1 SEPTEMBER, 1927 375

FATIGUE TEST IN SPINNING

Satish Babu who after prolonged convalescence has returned to the Pratishthan works at Sodepur writes:

One of the spinners here was encouraged to sit for continuous spinning. He worked one day whole time for carding and making slivers. He was ready with the slivers at night, and sat for spinning from 9 p.m. to 7 p.m. the next day. He took three hours’ respite, two hours for sleeping and one hour for eating, etc. In 19 active hours he spun 10,500 yards of 18 counts yarn including reeling. He may show better record in future.

It would be interesting to know the test of the strength and the evenness of this great quantity of yarn spun in 19 out of 22 consecutive hours.

VIRTUE OF TESTING YARN

Ever since the introduction of the system of testing self-spun yarn received by the All-India Spinners’ Association there has been steady improvement in its quality. Following are some of the very striking results obtained:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>NAME</th>
<th>COUNT</th>
<th>STRENGTH</th>
<th>EVENNESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Sjt. V. K. Vishvanathan, Kerala</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Before test</td>
<td>26</td>
<td>31</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After test</td>
<td>32</td>
<td>95</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shri S. M. Padmavatibai, Shimoga</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Before test</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After test</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>89</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dr. M. Venkatrao, Gadag</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Before test</td>
<td>21</td>
<td>40</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After test</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>79</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sjt. Motilal Roy, Chandranagar</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Before test</td>
<td>39</td>
<td>47</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After test</td>
<td>33</td>
<td>78</td>
<td>95</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Sjt. Dayaljibhai Shivji, Gujarat

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>NAME</th>
<th>COUNT</th>
<th>STRENGTH</th>
<th>EVENNESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Shri Gangabai Kunte, Bombay</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>98</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sjt. Ishvarlal Patel, Bombay</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>92</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dr. A. P. Kothari, Bombay</td>
<td>22</td>
<td>96</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sjt. Jogendra Chatterjea, Sodepur</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>96</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shri. Lakshmibai Gokhale, Bombay</td>
<td>33</td>
<td>95</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sjt. Govindbhai B. Patel (Juvenile)</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>87</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vithal Leladhar (Juvenile)</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The following are some names in whose case the test has been found to be uniformly good, the yarn being any day equal to the strongest mill yarn:

A friend writes:

I know you have several times alluded to what is mistakenly called ‘mill khaddar’, but apparently the mill-owners are still unable to resist the temptation of the name. The worst offender in this respect is . . . who openly quotes and advertises mill khaddar. This is for your information, and what action you may like to take in preserving the purity attached to the name khaddar.

What the correspondent says is unfortunately but too true. And I have been painfully aware of it. I had hoped that the mill-owners would give up the undesirable practice. But it was hoping against hope. Wherever I have gone people have drawn my attention to this unpatriotic conduct on the part of some mill-owners. The only comfort I have derived from the usurpation by the mill-owners of the name ‘khaddar’ is, that it is proof of the popularity of khaddar among the masses upon whose ignorance the mill-owners are playing. For I know that wherever the buyers have discovered the deception, they have cursed themselves and the mill-owners. The only remedy against this deception is for the buyers to beware, and for khadi lovers to educate the people so as to enable them to distinguish between real khaddar and its imitation.

HAND-SPINNING IN ALMORA

A correspondent sends me an interesting report of the progress that hand-spinning of wool has made in the schools conducted by the District Board of Almora. The following should prove both interesting and instructive to those who believe in the introduction of takli spinning in municipal schools.¹

The elections of 1925 to the Almora District Board returned the Swarajists in a majority. Since then the Swarajist members have in various ways tried to give a national stamp to the institution, particularly its educational side. The most important work in that direction has been the introduction of national songs, national sentiments, khadi uniform and wool-spinning into the village schools.

The village teachers of a number of District Board schools purchased wool at their own cost and thus spinning came into being. The Board, seeing the popularity of these voluntary and spontaneous efforts, constituted a spinning and weaving sub-committee and granted Rs. 3,000 at the beginning of 1926 for purchasing wool to be spun at District Board schools in the district. Some nineteen maunds of wool was purchased and distributed throughout the district in village schools. . . . The boys everywhere welcomed the takli or katuna, and the village schoolmasters did their best to make wool-spinning successful. . . . The Board deserves congratulations for giving this support, in spite of the opposition of conservatives. . . . The Board has ordered spinning classes to be held after school hours as the curriculum has no provision for this type of education. In order to enthuse the masses and to encourage the village students, several katua dangals (spinning matches) have been arranged at different centres of the district during fairs. Prizes (including khadi, khadi caps, national flags and national books) have been awarded to the best spinners. This feature has been very much appreciated by the people and has been of great educative and demonstrative value. Seeing the spinning of young schoolboys, the villages have been conscience-stricken and at many places the long-forgotten art of spinning is undergoing a revival. The villagers at several places have established their own looms to weave their hand-spun wool-yarn. So the spinning in schools is touching the masses as well. . . .

Our experiments in wool-spinning convinced us that there was nothing better than katua or takli for wool-spinning—simple, light, inexpensive and practical. So Katua or takli is reigning supreme in the Board’s schools as well. A small boy can make his own katua without any trouble or expense and play it at any time or any place whenever or wherever he likes. . . .

If this experiment is continued and spinning is properly supervised, it can not only become self-supporting but be even profitable. For if hand-weaving is not also done by the boys, spun wool should find a ready market; or it can be woven on behalf of the Board or the school concerned, and the woven stuff either used by the boys themselves or sold in the open market.

¹ Only excerpts are reproduced here.

Young India, 11-8-1927

373. WORTHY OF EMULATION

Shrimati Annapurnabai Ghare who contributed during the last chaturmas one lakh yards of yarn to the All-India Spinners' Association has again taken the same vow as last year, and is religiously at the wheel every day for fulfilling it. This means 833 yards per day for four months. If she is an average spinner, she would have to give to her yajna at least three hours per day to be able to spin good yarn. Will the other sisters copy the example? The yajna no doubt requires faith in the wheel and love for the unseen millions.

Young India, 11-8-1927

374. LETTER TO M. ABDUL GANI

AS AT BANGALORE,
August 11, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. Probably before you knew even the existence of Rangila Rasul, I wrote very strongly against it in the pages of Young India. This was 3 years ago. I have taken no part in the present controversy because I do not approve of the tremendous agitation that has been got up after the judgment in the Rangila Rasul case. I think that the attack upon the judge is unfortunate. He may have committed an error of judgment, but surely has betrayed no prejudice. I understand he condemned the pamphlet in unmeasured terms. He simply thought that the law itself was not enough to bring the author of the pamphlet under its purview. The agitation for altering the law is sound, but the alteration will take place with or without agitation if the law is found to be defective.

Yours sincerely,

M. ABDUL GANI
KURNOOL

From a photostat : S.N. 12386-A
375. LETTER TO A. BAQUI

AS AT BANGLORE,
August 11, 1927

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am glad you have written to me about the Rangila Rasul agitation. Yours is the fourth letter of its kind. The Rangila Rasul pamphlet I saw nearly three years ago, and it gave me deep pain. I expressed it all in the pages of Young India. The agitation that is going on at present has appeared to me to be altogether unjustified and quite on wrong lines. If I wrote at all, I should have to write in condemnation of the agitation, although I should reiterate the opinion about the pamphlet itself. The attack against the judge is very unfortunate. I could not associate myself with a demand for his resignation or a demand for the release of the writers who insulted the judge. The only part of the agitation that is in my opinion correct is the demand for alteration of the law, if it is inadequate for the punishment of offenders against the religious sentiments of any class of people. But that agitation does not require all the bitterness that has been imported into it. Even without a whirlwind agitation, the Government is bound to set the law right if it is defective.

The correspondents mentioned by me have written to me to say that the Hindu Press has associated itself with the degrading sentiments of the Rangila Rasul. I have never seen such writing in any of the Hindu-edited papers that I get and read here. I have asked these correspondents to refer me to the writings mentioned by them. But I have had no acknowledgment from them. Have you seen any such writings mentioned by them? If so, please pass them on to me. I should certainly like to take some action on them.

I hope the College is doing well.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

A. BAQUI, ESQ.
KOATH P.O.
DISTRICT SHAHABAD (BHAR PROVINCE)

From a microfilm: S.N. 12387-A

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
MY DEAR SPARROW,

I have your letter. You agitate yourself unnecessarily over the translation that was sent to you. Surely you have humour enough to take all such stuff lightly. I merely passed it on to you so that you might see what is written by your fellow-passenger about you. Why should we take notice of such writings especially when strangers write? So far as I am concerned, your repudiation is quite enough. I am not going to send your repudiation to the Press. I don’t suppose that anybody now remembers the writing.

Are you now perfectly all right? I am doing a little bit of touring now and feel quite fit though not yet as strong as before the collapse. Krishnadas has just gone on Association’s business to Bengal and incidentally to see his Guruji as also his parents. I am forwarding your letter to him which I know will delight him.

I want your assurance that you will never worry about it. All the nasty things that may be said about you need not worry you; for, after all the chief thing with which we should be concerned is to know what the inner voice tells us about ourselves.

With love,

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 12511

DEAR FRIEND,

I was trying to make time to reply to your letter undated enclosing papers about Bhadravati and Krishnarajasagar, and now I have got your second letter sending me more cuttings. But that was not what I wanted. I wanted you to give me, if you could spare the time, a very brief note containing unchallengeable facts and figures which a busy man like me could go through easily and act upon.\textsuperscript{1} I should have another breakdown if I attempted to study the papers you have sent.

I have read the article you had referred me to in your very first letter. It did not carry conviction and it did not appear to me to have been written dispassionately.

The quotation from Mr. Sastri’s letter seems to me to be irrelevant. Whilst he congratulates you upon your sustained interest in the welfare of the State even after retirement, he is silent as to his own opinion on the Bhadravati works.

I do not return to Bangalore before the 21st instant. If I could find a little time I would be glad to make your acquaintance. Will it be too much for me to suggest that on my return, you should try to see me, and if I am not busy when you come, I shall certainly be delighted to meet you.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. T. Parameshwara Iyer
Retired Judge
White House
Chamarajpet
Bangalore City

From a microfilm: S.N. 12631

\textit{378. LETTER TO KRISHNADAS}

\textit{DAVANGERE,} \textit{August 11, 1927}

MY DEAR KRISHNADAS,

I now understand what you have done about Ram Binode. I think the whole arrangement is quite satisfactory. But apart from my own opinion, it pleases me to know that both you and Rajendra Babu are satisfied with Ram Binode’s conduct and that you have no suspicions about his honesty.

I take it that you will have seen Suresh Babu, probably visited Comilla, and I would like you if you have not the thing in mind to go to Sodepur and visit the works and see Satis Babu and Hemprabha \textsuperscript{1} Vide “Letter to T. Paramasiva Iyer”, 29-7-1927. Though the addressee’s name is spelt differently in the two letters, it is evident from the contents that they are addressed to the same person.

Devi in particular so as to enable you to tell me from a personal visit how they are looking and how far Sodepur has progressed. You may also discuss with Suresh Babu and Satis Babu the opinion cited by you in your letter about khaddar. There is no doubt that middle men do get something. There is nothing wrong in it. But there is no doubt too that the spinning and weaving wages go direct into the pockets of the artisans whom we have in mind.

We are today in Davangere and we shall be away for 10 days in this district, reaching Bangalore on the 21st instant. Mysore State will be finally left on the 28th instant.

From a photostat: S.N. 14216

379. LETTER TO JAYANTI

August 11, 1927

CHI. JAYANTI.

Your letter. The flood has disturbed all time[-schedules]; so it is not possible that my blessings would reach you on your birthday itself. But take it that they have reached you on that very day. May you live long and become a pure worker and may your exalted hopes bear fruit! One thing you and all other pupils should do is to make your handwriting beautiful like pearls. This can be done easily. Just as singing out of tune is not music, so too bad handwriting is no writing. I am not competent to proffer this advice because I know that my own handwriting is no good. But just as a drowning man’s warning not to go to a particular spot is heeded by the wise, I hope all of you wise pupils will take this warning from me. Words must be written separately. There must be some space between the lines. A line ought to run straight and every letter must be delineated as an artist draws a picture.

Now about the Ramayana. I would certainly pay more respect to Tulsi’s Ramayana as a religious work. Valmiki’s may excel in art, but I have not the slightest doubt that Tulsidas is richer in devotional spirit. Moreover, at present Valmiki’s Ramayana is available in Sanskrit only. I have so far come across no Gujarati translation which re-creates the interest of the original. You must know that neither of the works is historical. True, Valmiki has portrayed a few historical men and women, but these are not clearly defined. I firmly believe that one cannot infer historical facts from them. But in the case of Tulsidas the question of historicity does not arise. We might say that he adapted Valmiki to suit his own age, but while doing so, having come under the spell of bhakti, he took such liberties as he wished to and thereby he has done no harm but only done good to Hindu society. With the passage of time men and women of divine glory become gods and goddesses and are ultimately worshipped as such. This will always happen and that is right. A man being embodied can never worship God in any other form. It being so, whatever Tulsidas writes about Lord Ramachandra are only his own feelings. Tulsidas has portrayed God as beyond description, as inapprehensible by mere sense-organs and as also beyond attributes. If therefore we cannot swallow the killing of Vali, we should leave aside that passage or believe that while depicting it Tulsidas acted only in conformity with the beliefs of his own age and could not transcend them. As man progresses, his idea of God necessarily becomes subtle and pure, inevitably so. Therefore, we should regard the Ramayana rather as a devotional work than a historical record and while we read its fiction part we should ignore whatever we find contrary to morality. Tulsidas himself describes his work Ramacharitamanasa as full of faults. He gives a different reason for it but that he has regarded it as not without fault should suffice for us. Moreover, in his well-known verse beginning, “God created the world full of animate and inanimate objects with good qualities as well as bad”, Tulsidas has taught us the art of looking at things. Since all human action is partly good and partly bad, we should, like the proverbial swan, take in the essence in the form of good qualities and leave alone the defects that spoil it. This is the golden rule that should apply to the reading of all books. We should humbly ask the teacher what we do not understand and we should leave aside what nevertheless we fail to understand; we should however never let our reason be clouded or our mind be corrupted. Whatever appears contrary to truth, non-violence and so on, should be rejected as unauthoritative although it may have been printed in an avowedly scriptural work.

Although this letter is written for you alone, regard it as meant for all of you and let them read it; and let the seniors too read it. For, I do not remember having written my thoughts on the Ramayana so clearly and concisely anywhere else, though I have explained them often here and there.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

1 Which is supposed to separate and drink the milk from a mixture of milk and water
380. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

August 11, 1927

You have no reason at all to be anxious on account of Kantilal. You must have known of the step I have taken. I have already written to you that you should never worry about a matter which does not concern you. A further hint we can read in yet another verse: “therefore what is unavoidable thou shouldst not regret.”

You will find this verse in the second chapter. It means, you should not grieve over that which you cannot control. Thus the Lord assuaged Arjuna’s grief. Generally, we act contrary to this. We weep when someone passes away. We are plunged in sorrow if our house is burnt to ashes; the flood almost robbed us of our sense, but death, fire, floods, etc., are inescapable. What is the use of grieving over them? But this statement does not mean that we should become hard-hearted. We should undertake such remedies as we can to put out a fire, to retrieve the loss caused by floods and to save the dying, but we should not let those events affect us in any other way. Now I have to take it that you cannot come here and that is right; but come when you are free and feel like it. Just come to me wherever I might happen to be.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

1 Bhagavad Gita, II. 27
381. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

DAVANGERE,
Shravan Sud 13 [August 11, 1927]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letter only yesterday—that is, after seven days. I am glad that you sent me information about Chi. Kusum. If you come to know anything more, let me hear. I have of course written a letter to Kusum. I have not so far received a reply to it. All of you must have been put on your mettle at the time of the floods. I was glad to hear this time that you maintain good health. Keep it up.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : C.W. 586. Courtesy : Vasumati Pandit

382. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AS AT BANGALORE,
August 12, 1927

I do not know that you would want to know Mr. Andrews’ opinion about your work. But he has thought it worth while to spend money on cabling the following to me:

Sastri’s success unprecedented. Governor-General admirably supporting, also Ministers and officials.

It is difficult to trust Andrews with any monies for telegraphic charges, and yet I cannot summon sufficient courage to swear at him for this cable news. I am not going to make use of it for the Press. I never had any doubt about your success. All I want to be sure of is your health.

I see you are already telling the public that your term of office will not go beyond one year. Anyway I have your assurance that you will not run away even for the Commission if your presence is indispensable there at the end of the year which is fast spinning away its course.

There was too a good letter from Miss Schlesin from which I as tempted to quote, but I restricted the temptation and destroyed the 1 Gandhiji was in Davangere on this date.

2 Vide “Letter to Kusumbehn Desai”, 29-7-1927.
letter. Ere this reaches you, if she kept her promise, she must have seen you.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

THE Rt. HON. V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI
AGENT-GENERAL
SOUTH AFRICA
DURBAN

From a photostat : S.N. 12370

383. LETTER TO BAL KALELKAR

August 12, 1927

It is not enough merely to say that you do not like Kaka-saheb turning a recluse. When I wrote to you that one’s son attaining the age of 16 becomes one’s friend, I also meant that you had acquired the capacity to think independently and one who thinks independently should be able to give strong reasons for one’s opinions whether to convince himself or others. He must give reasons why he likes one thing and does not like another. Having developed such faculty from their very childhood some men have become great such as the sage Dayananda, Chaitanya, Ramakrishna Paramahamsa and other historic figures. Let us leave aside Hinduism and consider sannyasa independently. Sannyasa is a mental state and it is reflected in a man’s actions. But if another man imitates these actions without the mental state, that will not be sannyasa. In this way, we all and the entire world have, to some small extent, to live a life of sannyasa and those who don’t do so writhe in triple agony. Sannyasa means abandonment of worldly pleasures. Complete abandonment constitutes complete sannyasa. Even a householder has always to observe some restraint or other. He who does not has to suffer; he becomes a burden to the earth and falls a prey to diseases of many kinds. Thus we can see that restraint or renunciation should grow with our progress in life and it is man’s duty to develop restraint as much as he can. If you accept the above argument that restraint is a good thing, you will have to grant that for doing a good thing a husband need not seek his wife’s consent or vice versa. There is only one way of maintaining the sanctity of the marital tie, namely, husband and wife should both be willing partners in sensual pleasures. One who wants to progress abstaining from sensual pleasures should have the right to do so. Else there will be no progress in the householder’s order, and this would halt the advancement of the whole world. Will you not, at least now, admit that Kakasaheb has a right to practise this kind of sannyasa? That renunciation will not harm Kaki or anyone else but actually it will be in her own interest. I believe that the religion of non-violence springs from the fact that the advancement of one promotes the advancement of all, and the fall of one implies the fall of all. We have therefore been enjoined to show compassion to every living being. If Kaki or you, through ignorance or infatuation, halt Kakasaheb’s inclination towards sannyasa, it will harm, rather than benefit, you, him and society. After realizing the need for renunciation and attaining the strength for it, if Kakasaheb still holds himself back to please Kaki or you, he would be stifling his humanity. Would you let that happen? Please ponder over what I have written to you and then write to me whatever occurs to you.

1 Due respectively to nature, fate and spiritual causes

I have to examine one more idea which you have expressed in your letter. You seem to differentiate between devotion to father and devotion to mother, but actually both are one. And a son may not discriminate between them. But the devotion of a wise son cannot be blind. Suppose a father is a drunkard, the mother is a woman of restraint and the father asks the son to help him with drinks. The mother entreats the son not to give such help. The son submits to his mother and does not help his father. Such a son has discharged his duty of being devoted to his mother and his father, though in doing so he hurts his father. This example does not point to the difference between the two devotions but explains the nature of intelligent devotion. This same argument would now apply to you. If Kakasaheb practises mental renunciation, it will promote the well-being of all of you. Kaki does not like this because of her ignorance and infatuation. If you accept that Kakasaheb’s renunciation is right, your devotion to your parents would tell you to help Kakasaheb and to entreat Kaki to agree to his resolve and even if she does not consent you should agree and have faith that ultimately Kaki too will appreciate this duty.

I can understand your desire to live with Kaki, but it is a delusion. In your letter you have already approved of brahma-charyashrama or sannyasa during the student days. In the olden times pupils used to leave their parents’ homes and stay with their preceptors. In the Ashram we try to bring back that state; you should help in this effort. One must learn to live with contentment and restraint while one’s parents are away. I admit that the teachers do not yet have so much restraint, so much knowledge and so much love that pupils could easily forget their parents, but you know that we want to revive a thing that is dead. The teachers are trying hard and intelligent pupils ought generously to help them in their endeavours. Wherever the teachers are not able to fill the place of parents you should bear with them and cultivate patience. If even a few among you begin to do so, we shall be able to improve the Ashram.

Write to me always with the same frankness with which you wrote your first letter. True modesty consists in laying open one’s heart before one’s elders without reserve. We may make our language sweet and polite but if we try to repress our thoughts and hide them, we may commit a serious fault. Besides that would not be modesty at all.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

384. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, DAVANGERE
August 12, 1927

Gandhiji said that khadi would in part rebuild the villages that were destroyed by modern industrialism and that it was the duty of prosperous merchants in cotton centres to help towards the revival of spinning. The khadi movement stood for even distribution of the good things of the world. Khadi represented dharmik political economy, whereas industrialism was rakshasik or Satanic economics. For it stood for the accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few.

I am going to do my best to prevent this Satanic economics from destroying us. I want all of you—Hindus, Mussalmans, Parsis, Christians, and all—to help me in this work.

He dealt with cow-protection in which the people of Davangere were keenly interested and for which they had an efficient organization called the Prani Daya Sangha. He said that well-conducted dairies and good tanneries for hides of dead cattle were absolutely necessary for true cow-protection in India.

We should not depend as Hindus for carrying out the dharma of

1 In reply to welcome addresses presented by the local Municipality and the citizens cow-protection on compelling the Mussalmans to co-operate with us. We should be able to stand on our own legs and save the cattle. If we did not sell by reason of poverty and ignorance our cattle for slaughter, we can do more than by any such compulsion. The cooperation of the Mussalmans should be secured by love.

Dealing with the municipal address Gandhiji said that no programme of sanitation can succeed unless young and old, boys and girls were taught how to use and keep the latrines clean.

The Hindu, 15-8-1927

385. SPEECH TO ADI KARNATAKAS, DAVANGERE

August 12, 1927

All these professions are noble, and I wish you to flourish in them. Playing on your pipes you can produce tunes which carry men nearer to God. The weavers’ and the shoemakers’ professions are as essential for your livelihood as for India, and I propose to address a few remarks to both. I ask the weavers to eschew foreign and even mill yarn. Ever since the growth of the mill industry in India, the handloom weavers are daily diminishing in numbers so that today their number is scarcely half of what it was some years ago. The objective of the mill industry is to monopolize all the weaving if possible and in consequence to rob the hand-weaver of his occupation. That was what industrialism did in Europe, but whereas the unemployed hand-weavers and hand-spinners found other employment there, they found none here and were reduced to destitution. I want you therefore to specialize in your profession, especially in weaving hand-spun yarn, and make your wives and children self-spinners so that you will have a colony of self-contained families.

I come to the shoemakers now. Here too as with the weavers there are things you may do and may not do. Just as the weaver may not touch foreign or mill yarn, the shoemakers must refuse to handle hide of slaughtered animals, and have hides of dead cattle cleaned and tanned by them. If it can be any encouragement to you, I may tell you that I have once done the shoemaker’s work and can do it even today, and in our Ashram we have a tannery which takes charge of

---

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. In their address the Adi Karnatakas had said that they were mostly pipers, weavers, and shoemakers.
dead cattle’s hides, tans them and sells them to shoemakers. I could provide you with such leather if you want. I want you to be not only shoemakers and earn your livelihood, but to be cow-protectors and earn merit. Being Hindus we should all hold the cow dear, and I want you to join me in the noble work of cow-protection. But how am I to make you understand this? Being Hindus you deny Hinduism every day.

I want you to take His Highness the Maharaja’s Jubilee message to heart. A portion of it is distinctly addressed to you. Whilst a spirit of brotherhood should prevail as between the citizens of the State, His Highness emphasized:

I pray that a similar spirit may extend itself to the dumb creation, and that we may see animals, and especially those we hold sacred, treated with ever increasing consideration for feelings which they cannot express.

Let us realize all the implications of that pregnant prayer. It is not so much an exhortation addressed to those who abstain from meat and beef, as to those like you who have no regard for the cow. It is equally intended for the Mussalmans and Christians, and if you feel anything like grateful to His Highness for his benevolent rule, I want you to abjure cow-slaughter and beef.

Young India, 25-8-1927

386. LETTER TO J. P. BHANSALI

Saturday, August 13, 1927

BHAISHRI BHANSALI,

I got your letter. You must have got my telegram. I have a letter from Shri Chhaganlal Joshi. I gather from it that my letter made you unhappy and a little angry. Recall what you had written earlier to me. You had actually welcomed my criticism and my opinion and the fact that I had not sent you the former during your fast had hurt you. In your letter to Mirabehn you say that you want to realize God through renunciation, samadhi, etc. “Never is this steadiness of mind destroyed by excessive possessions or fear of calamities.” This is the state you should cultivate. If someone vents his anger upon you and calls you an ignorant fool, even then you should forgive him. But this merely by way of preface.

1 Yogic trance
My aim in writing this letter is to tell you that you should preserve calm while this question is being settled. You should understand that the managing committee, too, wishes to come to a decision on moral issues. That does not necessarily mean that you should leave the Ashram if it does not give its consent to your intended fast. I certainly cannot guess what decision the managing committee will arrive at. I do not at all insist that it should do what I wish that it should. I shall forward your letters to it. Take no decision in haste.

You say in your letter to Mirabehn that your letter to me was not an ultimatum. While handing it over to me, Mahadev at any rate told me that it was an ultimatum. On going through it, I too read an ultimatum in it. Do not read too much in the word “ultimatum”. It only means a firm decision. In your letter you have really asked for my blessings, not for my permission. But now stick to your decision that you will take the next step after seeing me. I believe that we shall be carrying on this correspondence now to reach a decision on a moral issue.¹

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : S. N. 12962

_387. SPEECH AT HARIHAR²_

_August 13, 1927_

It is said that if God made man in His image, man made God in his own, and it is no wonder that what we see in our temples, at the present day, are lifeless images of us, lifeless devotees. If we would make them living images of God, we must transform our lives, we must end our communal squabbles, and we must befriend the suppressed, and live pure lives. Hari is the Protector in the Hindu Trinity, and Hara is the Destroyer. When God finds that the rich oppress the poor, instead of taking them under their protecting wings, He then assumes His fearful aspect of Hara, and deals destruction all round. When the rich and the poor identify themselves with one another, then will Hari

¹ Vide also letters dated after July 26 and July 27 to the addressee and “Letter to Mirabehn”, 27-7-1927.
² From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The venue was opposite Harihareshwara temple. and Hara unite, and it is my ambition to establish a real living image of Harihareshwara by presenting a charkha to the country. The charkha is the symbol of sacrifice, and sacrifice is essential for the establishment of the image of the deity.

_Voung India_, 25-8-1927

388. TO VOLUNTEERS

A calamity such as that which has befallen Gujarat can be put to good or bad use. From such terrible floods godfearing men learn humility, simplicity, compassion and similar virtues. They realize that one would do well, in this transitory world, to live with as much self-denial and self-control as one can. The wicked go out stealing at such times, rob people and indulge their evil propensities in all manner of ways.

Very often money given for help is also misused. A large number of volunteers is required for distributing relief over a large area. If they are greedy, they pocket the money which is entrusted to them. It would be foolish to expect Gujarat to be completely free from such malpractices. But it can certainly be expected of volunteers that they will have no greedy thoughts and, working wholly in a spirit of service, will win credit for themselves.

Volunteers are subject to weaknesses of another kind. They do not steal like thieves; but they feel some pride in being volunteers and, though in fact they are servants of the people, expect service from others as if they were their benefactors. They look after themselves before they help others and get angry with people who do not carry out their instructions promptly. I hope that every volunteer will keep himself free from such weaknesses.

The volunteers should know that even the poor are contributing, at some personal sacrifice, towards the fund which is being collected. I am certain that we shall not be short of money. If, however, the money is not properly used, all our work will have been wasted.

Moreover, we should also guard against the danger of the really poor getting nothing and the assertive getting a lion’s share. I have already had heartening reports of instances of persons not accepting help though they were in real difficulty, but I know from my previous experience that there are always people who will grab at whatever help is offered. It is as necessary that we do not, out of false compassion or fear or weakness, give to people who do not need help as that we should see at any cost that help reaches those who really need it.

At a time of such terrible calamity, one becomes very generous and is inclined to give help to anyone who asks for it. I do not think that such undiscriminating help really benefits the people. The common rule is that everyone should bear the hardships which befall him. If all of us shoulder our own burdens, we would find very few in this world who are really helpless. But large numbers become a burden on others in various ways: they enjoy a greater share than is theirs by right, and that is why we see a great number of helpless and poor people in the world. Hence in a situation like the present one actual help and in the largest quantity has to be given only for a few days, and that consists in providing food and clothing for some time to those who need them. Afterwards, what is necessary is to help everyone to find a means of livelihood; there should be no need, by and large, of giving money to those who are sound in limbs.

After the mahapralaya a new creation comes into being. This flood may not be that, but it is of the same kind. If, therefore, the volunteers can take up reform work, if they have knowledge and patience, they can even create a new world. They can persuade people to sacrifice, as in a yajna, their baneful habits and can spread new ideas about building houses. The villages which have been completely ruined should be reconstructed according to a plan instead of being rebuilt somehow. Villages which suffer from frequent floods should be shifted and rebuilt on new sites. This work, however, cannot be accomplished by one person. It requires the services, by way of advice and active work, of leading social workers, of men and women of wisdom. It also requires the sincere co-operation of the administration.

My appeal, however, is addressed to Vallabhbhai and to bodies of workers of his type. More it is beyond my capacity to suggest at present.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 14-8-1927
CHI. MIRA,

August 14, 1927

I have your letter. Today is Sunday, and I am at an out-of-the-way place called Shimoga, where I have to pass four more nights visiting surrounding places during these days. I will have left this place by the time this reaches you. I hope now the riddle of the missing letter has been solved. I now know that even if I write the Monday letter on Sunday night after taking the silence, I should mark it Monday. But I want you to shed this anxiety about my letters. If they come, it is well. But it should be well also if they do not come, when you have the assurance that if anything untoward happens to me, you would be bound to know it by wire. That the contents of one letter may be lost or delayed in transmission need cause no worry, because I should remember and be able to reproduce anything of importance.

The Gujarat work is evidently being done in a most orderly manner. Of course if you had been there, you would have thrown yourself in the fray, but those also are as good as having thrown themselves in the fray who stand watchful at their post however remote it may be from the scene of a calamity.

What you describe of Vinoba is just like him. But my sympathy is with the orthodox resisters. This monthly untouchability is an old custom not altogether harmful, certainly not altogether superstitious. And it is difficult to draw distinctions between married and unmarried women in such matters. I have looked upon the restriction as a check upon man’s lust. The confinement of the sick woman to a wretched miserable room, rags for dress, etc., is horrible, barbarous and can have no justification. But the sentiment of segregation during the monthly sickness should not be violently disturbed. I want you, therefore, to see the other side and not merely barely tolerate the attitude of people like Mogheji, but regard it with due respect as you would have them to regard your own opposite attitude. I am therefore hoping that Vinoba has been managing the thing gently and that he has not carried the orthodox inmates with him by sheer force of affection without producing a genuine conviction. And, even if they have willingly withdrawn their opposition, I would advise you to put a voluntary restraint upon yourself during the monthly sickness. You may share this letter with Vinoba if you like so that he may understand my argument. Remember that my own opinion is the same as yours. My only plea is for respectful and intelligent toleration, and remember also that when you tolerate in this manner, you do not “suppress” yourself. Self-suppression comes and is necessary where blind superstition has to be tolerated. It should not be “revolting” to you to accept such untouchability. On the contrary, you should impose it on your self or accept it with grace and cheerfulness without thinking that the orthodox party is in any way unreasonable.

Now about future work: I accept your description of yourself as being illiterate. But I do not want you to remain so for ever. It should be not too late to do much to remove illiteracy. I should be satisfied if you could develop a taste for removing illiteracy, and to this end, you may take up a decent little grammar book and master it through and through. Similarly, for arithmetic. You should take up a very simple arithmetic book. If you think that constitutionally you will be unfit for both or either, I will say nothing and in any case I do not propose this addition during these two months which are fast running out, but I should like you to take these up later if they can be taken up as recreations.

To start with work in the kitchen will certainly be very nice, if only in order to discipline yourself in controlling your temper and suit yourself to all kinds of people. In practice, we have found kitchen work to be the most trying of all.

I know that you have brought me boundless love. Everything else without it would have been perfectly useless, and with it everything needful will be easy. But I am not going to speculate about the work. When you have finished your course there, I know that the way will be open both before you and me with sufficient clearness.

Bhansali has sent me copy of his reply to you. Do keep up the correspondence.

With love,

BAPU

[PS.]

This is Sunday. Monday’s letter will be separate.

From the original: C. W. 5260. Courtesy: Mirabehn
390. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

August 14, 1927

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

At last you have come after working wonders in South Africa. I hope you have brought with you fair health.

I am writing this in an out-of-the-way place in Mysore. Here is my time-table. You will probably want to come to me at once. If you leave Bombay on 21st you can reach Bangalore on 23rd morning via Guntakal. You could of course overtake me at the places mentioned for 24, 25, 26. They are no distance from Bangalore.

I had your cable about Gujarat. Well, it seems to have been a divine purification. For, all the accounts I have received go to show that the people in the deluge area have risen to the occasion. But as yet it is too late to say what permanent effect it is going to have.

More when we meet.

With love from us all—Ba, Mahadev, Rajagopalachari, Gangadharrao, Devdas, Kaka, etc., etc.

MOHAN

From a photostat : S. N. 12371
MY DEAR KAJEE,

I continue to receive your useful letters. I am delighted that you are so happy over Sastriji’s activities there. I am only hoping that the community will make the rightest use of him. I know that the community will not get another opportunity of redressing its grievances.

The judgement\(^1\) of the Natal provincial division of the Supreme Court does not cause me any surprise. A dealer’s licence has always been distinguished from a manufacturer’s licence. For instance a carpenter surely must be able to sell furniture of his own making without the necessity of the dealer’s licence. If he is required to take out a licence, it will then be an artisan’s licence.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

A. I. KAJEE, ESQ.
SOUTH AFRICAN INDIAN CONGRESS
175, GREY STREET, DURBAN (NATAL)

From a photostat : S. N. 12372

---

\(^1\) The reference is to the case of a Pathan trading as “Empire Furniture Manufacturing Co.” versus the Durban Corporation in appeal against the refusal to renew his licence. The court had held that they had the right to interfere only in matters of retail or wholesale dealers and as this was a case of manufacturing licence they could not intervene.
DEAR MISS SCHLESIN,

I have your letter of 24th June. Herewith receipt for £21 s. 10. If you still remember your Gujarati, you will make out the Gujarati writing.

The cause of my illness so far as I can see it is the very terrific strain I put upon the body and the brain, addressing numerous meetings almost every day and motoring from place to place. The day on which the breakdown occurred was one of very high tension, and little rest on the previous night. This is also the doctor’s diagnosis. I feel however that I should have been able to prevent it. And if I had taken a complete fast on the day of the tension, I might have avoided it. As it was, I had put myself on half diet during those days.

The first volume of what you call the autobiography will be sent to you. The history of passive resistance struggle was published three years ago, but the English translation is not available. It is being published my Mr. Ganesan in quarterly instalments in his magazine Current Thought. It would be ultimately published, I expect, in book-form. But it will take time. Yo can have the Gujarati copy if you will make up your Gujarati.

My food at present is 30 ounces goat’s milk with honey and any fruit that is available and generally home-made bread like Jewish passover cake unleavened. I take no nuts. Diet is restricted to five articles, that is to say, milk, grapes, oranges and bread will count as four articles, and if I add figs it will be the fifth.

I never knew that you had £150. I thought you had only £40. I shall await your impressions of the visit to Manilal and his wife.

I shall see your handiwork when Mr. Andrews returns and if he has not given it away or lost it. Whether you could get over the shock of your having me described as with one garment or not, your surmise

---

1 March 26, 1927; vide “Discussion with Dr. Wanless”, 26-3-1927.
was quite correct that a poor man could not consistently possess a tray such as you have described. You have unconsciously altered the sense of my letter by mere atrocious reading. For, I did not suggest as you make me suggest that I could identify myself with the poor by merely wearing one garment. But I do say that even that little thing is something. To understand the logic of such a step is probably expecting too much of you now. For, there was a time when you appreciated my change of dress I adopted in Durban for almost identical considerations. I look forward to your description of your visit to Mr. Sastri.

I quite agree with you that, if we are to do anything, our womenfolk should have the same facilities that men have for education, etc. And you will be interested to know that at the Ashram here we have over 40 women of all ages excluding little girls. They have a special class every day, and in my opinion they are making very wonderful progress. The utmost freedom is enjoyed by them at the Ashram.

Yours Sincerely,

Enclosure

From a photostat: S. N. 12373
393. LETTER TO S. GANESAN

AS AT BANGALORE,
August 14, 1927

MY DEAR GANESAN,

I have your two letters. Krishnadas is just now in Bihar. I am asking him to let you have the revised manuscript. I am glad that you seem to have tided over your difficulties.

I note the announcement with reference to your publishing scheme. It seems to read all right.

I hope that you will on no account embark on any speculative venture. Let everything be deliberate and well-calculated.

I understand that you have already published Mahadev’s writings. But you do not seem to have sent any copy here.

I suggest your removing from your advertisement the reference to giving the Ashram 25% of profits.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. S. GANESAN
18, PYCROFTS ROAD
TRIPLICANE
MADRAS

From a microfilm : S. N. 19799

394. LETTER TO KRISHNADAS

SHIMOGLA,
August 14, 1927

MY DEAR KRISHNADAS,

Here are two letters from Ganesan. You may now send him the revised manuscript he wants. I understand that he has already published Mahadev’s writings which he had announced though he had not sent a copy here as yet.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. KRISHNADAS
110, HAZRA ROAD
CALCUTTA

From a microfilm : S. N. 19800
395. LETTER TO A. A. PAUL

SHIMOGA,

August 14, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter with enclosures. I am writing this from Shimoga though you may send your reply, if any, addressed to Bangalore which will be my headquarters till the 29th instant.

I like your scheme for inter-religion fellowship. I have not been able to read it with sufficient attention to be able to offer any useful criticism. The first reading of it appeals to me.

I shall be at your disposal when I am in Madras for all the time that Sjt. Rajagopalachariar may be able to spare for you and during that time we can discuss the scheme. You would also then have made some further advances as you will have held your committee meeting on the 22nd.

As I had finished dictating this letter, I got your letter of the 11th instant. I am glad that international fellowship is well on its way to formation in Poona. I know Professor Wadia well through correspondence.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S. N. 19801
396. LETTER TO M. F. KHAN

AS AT BANGALORE,
August 14, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have now found time to read your dialogue “What the little ones can do”. It shows where your heart lies. But, whilst I do not regard myself to be a judge of art, as a journalist, I can say that the dialogue does not make interesting reading. There is no plot about it.

The verses quoted by you are interesting, and I might be able to make use of them. Please give me the name of the author.

Yours sincerely,

M. F. KHAN, ESQ.
PALAM ROAD
FRAZER TOWN
BANGALORE

From a microfilm : S. N. 19802

397. LETTER TO DEVCHAND PAREKH

SHIMOGA,
August 14, 1927

I have replied to your telegrams. I have got your letters too. I can understand your importunity, but I am convinced I must not leave my present station. Personally I believe my going over there¹ would do some harm instead of doing any good. I can visualize the one loss resulting from Vallabhbhai putting aside his own powers and I can imagine others too. Even if I go over, we cannot collect all the funds, as you seem to think we can. Nor should we overdo our attempts to accomplish this task at this time. Marwaris should work through him alone who commands your confidence and I would regard that as proper. Confidence is certainly based on honesty and fitness too. They would not credit either me or you all who are my companions with as much ability as they expect in a businessman—and why should they? Bhai Amritlal is doing his work separately, and he has himself gained the confidence of certain people by dint of his ability and service. They would give him funds as long as he does something and I would regard that as right. You should adopt the same attitude in the case of the Hind Sevak Samaj. Our duty is to serve wherever we can reach easily.

¹ Gujarat

You write that if I were to engage you on relief work you will get engrossed in it and discontinue the Conference work. I do not like this line of thought. How absurd that you would take up a job if I ask you to, else you would hold the Conference! At such a moment if you say that you must hold the Conference, you ought to do so—whatever I may think or in whatever other work I may wish to engage you—and when you wish to serve, why should you wait for signal from me? Why don’t you join Bhai Amritlal’s group? Or if he cannot cover the whole of Kathiawar, why do you not cover the remaining part? Of course, you can have the funds from Vallabhbhai after submitting your scheme to him; you can have it also from the Hind Sevak Samaj. It is Vallabhbhai’s duty to cover those parts which are not served by others. If the satyagrahis, that is, Fulchand’s army, wait for my orders, it will hurt me deeply and I shall regard them as unfit to launch satyagraha. How can those who miss opportunities of service launch satyagrah, that is civil disobedience? The fitness to go to jail should be backed by a proof of services rendered and self-purification. My permission and my authority relate to the launching of civil disobedience. I would not restrain anyone from offering satyagraha in the form of service or self-purification.

I have nothing to say about the Conference.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai
398. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

August 14, 1927

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

Your letters still arrive after many wanderings.

I should get faithful account of Sastri’s visit, but have not received one so far.

Sushila has asked a question about social service. Any work which we do for people’s welfare and with sincere motives is social service. If in your family life you merely aim at enjoyment and do not think of society, that will be serving self-interest; if, on the other hand, you adopt simplicity for the sake of society, take care not to set a bad example to others and, when buying anything, consider whether it is morally right or wrong to do so, then that is social service. Going further, if your aim in helping in the press work is merely to save money, that is service of self. If, however, your aim is to learn that work and spend the money saved by your work for some public purpose, if it is that you should bring out the paper even at the cost of hardship to yourself, that is social service. Go a step further still; if, finding that your neighbour is ill, you sacrifice your comforts in order to nurse him and learn nursing work, that is social service. From these examples you can think of any number of others and extend the field of social service within the limits of your capacity. If, tired of India, Manilal lives in South Africa to enjoy the pleasures which that country offers, that is selfishness. If, believing that the paper conducted by his father was good and that his country stood to gain by his continuing to run it, he lives and forces you to live in exile without the aim of amassing wealth, he is rendering a great social service and you, too, are making a contribution to it.

Today we have come to a far-off place in Mysore State. About sixty miles from here is a waterfall like the Inanda Falls, but much bigger than that, which we are all going to see tomorrow. Devdas has stayed back in Bangalore. He will arrive here this evening with others. We shall remain here and collect contributions for about four days and then return to Bangalore. At the end of this month, we shall cross the boundary of Mysore State and enter Tamilnad.

My health continues to improve. I do not think we shall get back to the Ashram by the end of December. We positively wish to return in January, since Vasantapanchami falls at the end of that month and Ramdas’ wedding has been fixed for that day. Whether Nimu turns out to be as wise as Sushila and gives Ramdas a life-companion exactly like yours and makes him a prisoner is still to be seen. Nimu of course is wise, but are there not degrees even of wisdom? How much distance is there between you two and who is better of the two, only the future will tell. For myself, I wish that both of you should reach the summit and that all the four of you should strengthen one another’s moral character and stand foremost in the yajna of service. Ramdas has gone out to help in flood relief work.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G. N. 4725

399. SPEECH AT SHIMOOracle

August 14, 1927

There is sympathy, there is the suitable atmosphere, there is faith. What I now want is expert knowledge to fructify that faith. I know it from experience that where knowledge has not been combined with faith, faith has quickly evaporated, and glorious beginnings have ended in smoke. I want you, lawyers and businessmen, to bring to bear all the expert knowledge, that you do in your own departments, also in the new department that you are favouring. Study the economics and master the technique of spinning, and build up with the aid of experts in the various branches of cloth-production an organization equal to the splendid administrative machinery that the State has brought into being.

Young India, 25-8-1927

---

1. The traditional beginning of the vernal season
2. In reply to the addresses presented by the local Municipality and the citizens at a meeting held in the Jubilee Grove
400. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Monday, August 15, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

So you have the missing letter at last. Poor Mahadev!\(^1\)

You must not damage your eyes even for the sake of Hindi. What you need most however is conversation without restraint. Make your own dictionary as you proceed. Or annotate your printed dictionary. But of course I do not consider the London specialist’s to be the last word about your eyes. Often the simplest remedies escape the specialist and he comes to the conclusion that as no alteration in the lens will answer, nothing else will. However, this can wait. When you return to the Ashram, you should let Haribhai examine you. He is reputed to be a good man for eye defects.

Your letter to Bhansali was not too strong. I liked its style.

If my letter of yesterday was not clear, you will of course write.

With love,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5261. Courtesy : Mirabehn

---

\(^1\) Mahadev Desai inadvertently addressed the letter to Sabarmati instead of Wardha. Explaining this, in his letter to Mirabehn, dated September 12, he had written : “So many letters addressed to the Sabarmati Ashram the same day, and one only to Wardha!”
401. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day [August 15, 1927]

SISTERS,

Received your letter. Today we are in a place far off from Bangalore. It is less cold, but more green here. It is somewhat like Amboli.

Although I appear to be at work here, my thoughts hover round the Ashram and Gujarat. This is not a virtue, but a defect, since it shows undue attachment. What more could I have done had I been in the Ashram? How can I help Gujarat? And yet my soul is restless. You should guard yourselves against such attachment. But remember the conditions in which non-attachment is possible. He alone can remain untouched who is always absorbed in the performance of his duties. The stone may be indifferent, But we regard it as insentient. We on the contrary are sentient. It is only when we remain indifferent to our environment, because of complete absorption in our immediate duties, that we may be held to have succeeded in life. Such steadiness of mind does not come about suddenly. I have explained to you my own defeats clearly, so that you may learn to avoid them.

My language today is slightly difficult. If a word or an idea is difficult to grasp, you must make an extra effort to understand it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3661
402. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

Silence Day, 1927

I had your card but not the promised letter. What type of work are you doing in Matar and who are your co-workers? Maintain your peace of mind, no matter what work you do.

I wrote to your uncle that Manibehn would come to him when he had learnt to ply the takli while sitting in his chair. He wrote in reply to say that Manibehn was a crank. I sent a rejoinder that, being a crank herself, she lived in company with another crank.

What is the name given to Yashoda’s son?

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. MANIBEHN PATEL MATAR

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—Manibehn Patel, p. 53

---

1 The precise dates of this and the following letter are not ascertainable. But from the reference to the addressee’s work in Matar, to Yashoda’s son (born in May 1927) and to V. J. Patel who had “gone there with high hopes of being useful”, it is presumed that they belong to the period when there were floods in Gujarat. They are, therefore, placed on the Silence Day after “The Havoc in Gujarat”, 11-8-1927.

2 Vithalbhai J. Patel
403. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

Silence Day, 1927

CHI. MANI,

Your letter. Keep a record of your experiences of life in villages for future use. Never be impatient, despondent or uneasy. I have many questions to ask you but not now; I shall ask you when we meet or when your present task is finished. Write to me regularly. Do preserve your health.

I hope you met uncle.¹ He has gone there with high hopes of being useful. May these be realized.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—Manibehn Patelne, p. 64

404. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

SHIMOGA,

Shravan Krishna 2 [August 15, 1927]²

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL JOSHI,

I send you Shri Bhansali’s letters along with this. You must have seen my telegram and letter³ to him. You and others in the Committee should read these letters carefully and think over them. After doing so, hand them back to Shri Bhansali. The letter addressed to me, you may either file in the office or return to me.

Think over this matter quite impersonally. I believe that Shri Bhansali will keep the promise, given to me in a letter which he wrote before this, that he would await my return there; nevertheless, we must consider this thing for the future. My opinion is that we should not permit Shri Bhansali to fast, and that, if hefasts despite this, we can put up with it. We tolerate many things in the Ashram, but would not permit them if our permission was sought. There are also many things for which we would not give permission and which we would not

¹ Vithalbhai J. Patel; he was then Speaker of the Central Legislative Council. He came over to Nadiad when the province was ravaged by floods, and undertook an extensive tour of the flood-stricken areas.
² Gandhiji was in Shimoga on this date in 1927.
³ Dated August 13, 1927.
tolerate. We should think in which category to place this idea of a fast. All of you should consider the point and do what you think proper. I cannot guide you from here, because in order to express an opinion it is necessary that I must talk things over with Bhai Bhansali and let the effect of the talk sink into my mind. Moreover, before you decide anything you should hold talks with Shri Bhansali in private and also in the presence of the Committee. Try to know the deepest thoughts of Lilabehn, and write to me if you like. There is no need for the slightest hurry to take a decision in this matter. If Shri Bhansali cannot keep his promise in the present letter and if, since I have suggested a reference to the Committee, you let me hear from you after a talk with the Committee and if he asks for the Committee’s decision before my return, you will have to give it. But it is necessary in any case that he look to the convenience of the Committee. I also believe that we cannot decide this matter without consulting the absent members of the Committee too. This is so because, on the one hand, dharma suggests that even if we are not able to keep pace with an aspirant for moksha and a seeker after knowledge like Bhansali and we disapprove of a step contemplated by him, we should let him proceed, that is to say, we must keep him in the Ashram; on the other hand, dharma tells us that it is perhaps our obligation not to tolerate his proposed step in the Ashram even if we consider it not as immoral but merely as thoughtless and dangerous. We have thus to discover the point of balance between social conformity and individual freedom, and we cannot do this in a hurry. Explain our difficulties to Shri Bhansali and request him to respect our honest efforts, if for no other reason, at least in order that he may then more easily have the vision for which he is so eager. Keep me informed about this from time to time and, if necessary, even send me a telegram.

If Lala Mohanlal of Lahore is there and if he has been quietly and honestly doing physical work, let him do so and live there till I arrive. But this is my opinion only. Having observed his behaviour or having regard to the other arrangements in the Ashram, if you think that you cannot keep him, ask him to leave. Give him the accompanying letter.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : S.N. 12965
I cannot help writing to you today.

I do not like to interfere much in your course of thinking or way of work because you arrange your thoughts with great care. But very often the experience of elders helps even one who arranges one’s thoughts carefully. I sometimes get into an argument with you with a view to helping you. I think we needs must stay in society in order to build up our character and we have even to bear with our leaders’ temper. New principles do not come up every day before a philosopher; but conflicts of duty do crop up every day—ponder over the difference between the two. It is when duties conflict that a soldier obeys his general and he puts his own reason aside. The intelligence of one who always indulges in its exercise obstructs his self-realization. When a leader is not deliberately immoral, it is non-violence to submit to his intelligence. Non-violence is humbler that even a mango tree. It is said that a mango tree bends as it grows up. When non-violence grows fully, it acts like a cipher. Instead of attempting to prove its own point, non-violence lets everyone else prove his. Hence it has been sung : “When non-violence is established, in its vicinity all hatred is given up.”

You will lose nothing by subordinating yourself to Maganlal. Both yourself and Maganlal will benefit by submitting to his mistaken orders, whatever they be, because we have in doing so accepted a principle. Your subordinating yourself to him will be a means of correcting his error. I have experienced this thing myself many times. I have corrected the errors of my associates by subordinating myself to them and who knows how many errors of mine my associates daily correct by subordinating themselves to me? But what if they were to analyse my errors before me every day and annoy me? If that were so, where would they and I be today?

Think deeply over this letter. Do not again come back impatiently running to me. I wish and I pray that you may have peace.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

1 Yogasutra by Patanjali
406. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

August 15, 1927

These smaller floods come to warn us. There will surely be the final deluge. None need doubt it. The magic of this illusory world makes a man forget all his sorrows. This is doubtless an advantage but that man wins who, mindful of the deluge and persuaded of the transience not only of himself but of the world, lives his life in a detached way. To gain this mastery constitutes man’s highest achievement. Truly speaking, all of us are condemned to death the moment we are born, and yet why do we all—the young, the old and the children—drown ourselves in sensual pleasures? It is obvious that we do revel in them, but we should ask it with all the more earnestness. Then, one day, the answer even today: “Oh man, give up all trace of passion.” But as long as the call does not come from the heart, the poor intellect is ineffectual.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

407. LETTER TO DEVESHWAR SIDDHANTALANKAR

AS AT BANGALORE,

August 16, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your long letter and the reprint of your articles. I shall try to find time for re-reading the articles.

I shall appreciate your English writing. I do not know whether I stated in my previous letter that the English I wanted not for myself but for circulation amongst Mussalman and other friends, who claim to know the Koran and Islam intimately. My own reading I don’t regard as in any way deep or learned. It was purely for my own satisfaction.

You seem to think that the dasyus do not give the same meaning in the Vedic times that the word Kaffir does in Islam. Not to go back to historical times, I would like you to look at the history that is being enacted in our midst. Do not thousands of Hindus regard Mussalmans as enemies to be converted or destroyed because they are

1 Vide “Letter to Deveshvar Siddhantalankar”, 22-5-1927.
Mussalmans? Do not many cultured Indians hate the British people as wicked? If somebody wrote a learned treatise today describing the relations between ourselves and the British and had not a boundless spirit of charity, would he not describe the British a dasyus or atatayis fit only to be destroyed at sight, and if that treatise [should] survive some periodic upheaval and afterwards become religious literature, posterity is likely to indulge in the same error that we do and say that those atatayis and dasyus of these times were not political exploiters but were wicked people as you now interpret the term wicked people, or would you say even now that the British as a people, are really wicked? Or take another instance: I know as the author of non-co-operation that many so-called non-co-operators hated co-operators as if they were wicked monsters and if the former had been allowed, they would have drawn these poor co-operators and certainly would have made short work of them. Supposing that some very learned non-co-operator of the type I described wrote a treatise, he would of course describe co-operators as wicked men. Would you accept that verdict or take to a free fight like the one that took place between Shwetambars and Digambars, first cousins as they might be called. Was not each wicked in the sight of the other? The fact is that immediately you accept the doctrine of slaying people whom you consider to be wicked, you really surrender the whole case and come under the same category as the writer or the writings on the Koran. I do not need to cite any history in support of what I am saying but I can supplement it if necessary.

I have considered you to be an honest seeker. I have contrary opinions to what you have given about Nanak Dev and Kabir. But this is after all a small matter. If I do reach your pamphlet, I shall gladly give you illustrative passages where I thought your translation was not just.

It is curious that Professor Sahgal did not write the Hindi letter which I certainly received. I knew the name from the letter. Yet unfortunately that letter I destroyed after replying. The only possible mistake is that somebody else might have written on his paper and in his name. But this is merely nothing and by the way I pass it on to you as a piece of information.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 12388
408. THE GUJARAT FLOODS

GOOD IF TRUE

On reading the reports of flood relief operations as well as Swami Anand’s article in Navajivan I hesitated, and still hesitate, to believe in the examples there given of the people’s heroism, solidarity and humanity, as false praise, exaggeration and self-deception are the order of the day in the country. But I have no reason to disbelieve these reports. Exaggeration, untruth and the like are studiously eschewed in Navajivan. The Swami knows this ever since the paper was started, and indeed it is this policy of the paper which induces him to interest himself in and work for it.

Therefore so long as I have not any reason to consider the Navajivan reports as erroneous, I must take them to be true. And I tender my congratulations to Gujarat and the Gujaratis. For a moment one is almost tempted to welcome a disaster which has been the occasion for the people to display such virtues.

Catastrophes and calamities will now and then overtake the country. Wealth may be in our possession today and be lost tomorrow. We construct houses and make farms and gardens, and when these are destroyed, we can remake them. The distress will soon be forgotten.

But what if Gujarat along with the distress also forgets the virtues which she has realized in herself on the present occasion? We are everywhere familiar with momentary fits of heroism and renunciation. If Gujarat’s present heroism proves to be only a temporary fit, the lesson of the floods will have been lost upon her. Let the Gujaratis, men as well as women, beware.

Let us convert the virtues of courage, patience and humanity in us, of which we have had a sudden glimpse, into a possession forever. Hindus and Mussalmans embraced one another as brothers. The higher classes sheltered and succoured the suppressed like blood-brothers. If we now give up these relations as only suited for the days of adversity, our last state will be worse than the first, and we will have passed in vain through this calamity, which is really the throes of a

1 Translated by Valjibhai G. Desai from the Gujarati which, however, was published in Navajivan, 21-8-1927
2 Dated August 7, 1927. Vide “Notes”, 25-8-1927, sub-title “Too Good to Be True”.
new birth. And such calamities there will be, so long as we have not experienced a true rebirth.

Gujarat’s doings on this occasion amount in my view to pure swaraj. If the virtues now manifested by the people become a permanent feature of their daily life, Gujarat may be said to have acquired the fitness for, as well as the power to win, swaraj.

The havoc worked by the floods was of a most unprecedented character; before which even Dyerism pales into insignificance. Dyer killed or wounded a thousand or twelve hundred men. No one can tell the heavy toll of life exacted of the immense property destroyed by the floods. But we did not abuse the floods. We practised satyagraha against them. We purified ourselves. We did constructive work. We achieved Hindu-Muslim unity. We removed untouchability. We became self-reliant. We placed our all at the disposal of our brothers and sisters. We did not wait for a leader. Instead of falling back before the enemy, we bravely faced him, and set to work as if nothing had happened. If we had feared the floods, if we had wasted precious time in abusing them, if we had engaged in violent struggle with them, we would only have multiplied our troubles.

All honour to Gujarat for the proof she has given of her greatness.

BUT WHAT ABOUT ME?

But has a Gujarati, who is away from the scene of danger and of achievement, the right thus to bestow praise and tender congratulations?

I received three wires and a letter asking me to come and lead the relief operations in Gujarat. The letter was Swami Anand’s and the wires were from Sarojini Devi, Chandulal, whom I mistook for Dr. Chandulal, and Devchand Parekh.

But I did not give myself to anxiety. I was fully confident of Gujarat’s self-reliance, I had not the shadow of a doubt that monetary help would be forthcoming in an adequate measure. I whole-heartedly trusted Vallabhbhai to do the needful. I was in touch with him by wire. I wired to him informing him of the insistent calls I had received and asking him to let me know if he thought my presence necessary. Vallabhbhai at once wired me in reply, that though the distress of the people was beyond words, it was not advisable for me to come over to Gujarat in the present state of my health; that my effort to make Gujarat self-reliant and the organization I had helped to set up therein... the people simply need to be independent of both the money-lender and the publican, of the first by ceasing to want credit and of the second by ceasing to drink.

A Travesty

‘The voluntary repatriation’ described by Dr. Malan, the Union Minister\(^1\), is anything but voluntary. It is stimulated, aided or induced. And if the process continues unchecked, it may presently become compulsory. A large number of men repatriated are said to be colonial-born. No colonial-born Indian to whom India is only a geographical expression will voluntarily repatriate himself. Again it is not voluntary repatriation when an agency is set up, probably paid by results, to collect repatriation recruits and when these recruits are detained in compounds pending repatriation. It seems to me that this detention in compounds is likely to be declared illegal if it is tested in a court of law. For detention without a guard would be useless. And placing a guard over free and innocent men would amount to wrongful confinement. I know of no regulation in 1914 that permitted the Government to detain such men in guarded camps. If repatriation is to be voluntary it must be free from the pestering attention of recruiting agents and there should be no detention in depots or camps.

The True Guru

In confirmation of my note on the definition of a guru, a correspondent sends the following interesting information:

In connection with your definition of a guru, I am reminded of the beautiful lines of the poet-saint Ramadas. He said:

\[बिबंबंक ऐसा गुरु। पिन्ता ऐसा शिष्य चतुरु।

जीवा ऐसा भित्र उदारु। भूलनवथीं पिलेया॥\]

‘You cannot find a better guru than viveka or the power of discriminating from untruth, right from wrong or good from evil. There is no better disciple than chitta or mind, and no nobler friend than one’s jeeva or soul.’ In fact, Ramadas points out that man need not go outside himself in search of a guru. ‘Be guided by your power of discrimination, derived from your implicit faith in God, keep your mind under control of such a power and nobly sacrifice the self.’ This in essence is the advice of the Maharashtrian saint.

Young India, 24-6-1926

\(^1\) Of South Africa
thing, new as I would be to the work, I should only make an exhibition of ignorant vanity.

And I am not here enjoying a holiday. According to my lights I am not here occupied in grappling with the fatal disease which is eating into the vitals not only of Gujarat but of India as a whole, a disease which is beyond all comparison very much more powerful and insidious than a week’s deluge. It would not only be not meritorious but on the other hand a clear breach of duty on my part to give up this work for something else that is more tempting. We have the charge often levelled against us that we are apt to lose our heads in times of danger. To the extent that this is true, we must get rid of this shortcoming.

None of us, especially no leader should allow himself to disobey the inner voice in the face of pressure from outside. Any leader who succumbs in this way forfeits his right of leadership. There is much truth in the homely Gujarati proverb that “the person concerned can see things in the earthen pot and his neighbour cannot see them even in a mirror”. I have not been able to see that it was my duty on the present occasion to run up to Gujarat.

The insistent calls I have received are evidence of a wrong attachment which we must surmount at all costs. I am nothing but a mere lump of earth in the hands of the Potter. Truth and Love — ahimsa—is the only thing that counts. Where this is present, everything rights itself in the end. This is a law to which there is no exception. It would be very bad indeed that Gujarat or India should look up to me and sit with folded hands. Let her worship Truth and Love, look up to that divine couple, employ servants like myself so long as they tread the straight and narrow path and check them when they swerve from it.

If I had come over to Gujarat, perhaps she would not have done what she has done and is still doing.

Invalided leaders or public servants should give up the hankering after active leadership or service. There is no place for a sick man in these operations for relief, which require only such persons as are able-bodied, can run up from place to place, and have the power of enduring hunger and thirst, heat and cold. Those who do not reach this standard would only act as a drag on a quickly marching army.

Finally, a servant of the people should never fear or give way to bitterness if he finds himself a victim of misunderstanding, whether unintentional or wilful. The acts of men who have come out to serve or lead have always been misunderstood since the beginning of the world and none can help it. To put up with these misrepresentations and to stick to one’s guns come what might—this is the essence of the gift of leadership. Misunderstandings have been my lot ever since I entered public life, and I have got inured to them.

In short, let Gujarat ever be, as it has been on the present occasion, self-reliant and self-helpful and proceed from achievement to achievement. Men like myself will come and go, but let Gujarat go on forever.

TO CO-WORKERS

A few words more to co-workers.

1. I take it that none of the workers will allow their pride to come in the way of their heartily co-operating with their compatriots.

2. Anyone who works for name and fame on an occasion like this incurs sin.

3. There should be the fullest co-operation between the various agencies at work.

4. Where Government offers help on our own terms we should freely accept it, as it does not involve any breach of the principle of non-co-operation. But all hair-splitting is out of place where the question is one of serving the people and serving them in time and to the fullest extent possible. If the money in the hand of the Government is available for good use, we should unhesitatingly ask for it and accept it.

5. Let us not forget that organizations are meant for the service of the people, and not the people for the service of the organizations.

6. I see that there are three agencies at work, the Provincial Congress Committee under Vallabhbhai, the Saurashtra Sevasamiti under Amritlal Sheth and the Servants of India Society under Sjt. Devadhar. Possibly there are others. But in any case we must prevent any overlapping and insure the closest co-operation among the agencies. Workers who have not still reported themselves should join the centre of work which is nearest to them or which they like best. Anyone who remains aloof either from angularity or from pride will dig his own grave. The people will fail to benefit by his services and will think lightly of him.

7. It would be really terrible if anyone in disregard of existing organizations tries to start a fresh one. Seeing that time lost can never be regained, everyone should take his place at the point which he can reach the soonest.

Young India, 18-8-1927

409. BACKWARD CLASSES

Our woes are numerous. We have suppressed classes and we have also backward classes. The distinction between the two is that the suppressed classes as a rule include only the so-called “untouchables”, whereas, the backward classes refer to those who are mentally and morally behind the other classes. I have made the acquaintance of one such class in Mysore. They are the Lambanis. Since the Belgaum Congress\(^1\) one of them who has received a fair education has been exerting himself for their uplift. They had even a Conference last year and the State contributed a small sum towards its expenses. These appear originally to have come from Gujarat. They are otherwise recognized as gypsies. Their dialect corresponds to Gujarati. The address\(^2\) which they gave me whilst I was passing Arsikere on my way to Hassan was written in Devanagari. The majority of the words in it were Gujarati. The curious student will see the specimens from the address reproduced in Navajivan. He will not fail to notice even the Gujarati grammar in the language of the address. The customs of these people I find described as follows in the address of the President of the Conference:

I am told that the Lambanis are otherwise known as Vanjaris; and that they were the grain-carriers of India when it had no good roads and railways; they worship to this day their queen Durga, a wealthy Lambani lady of the 13th century, who brought grain from Nepal, China and Burma, and saved many lives in a continuous famine that raged for twelve years in India; their chief God is Balaji and Goddess Tulaja Bhavani, and their principal feast is Gokulashtami, the day of the birth of Shri Krishna. They long respected cows and Brahmins, and to this day they abjure animal food and liquor at death dinners; they cremate the married dead and bury the unmarried. They were as a rule a robust and well-built class, and peaceful and well-behaved.

But, alas! their carrying trade has practically ceased since the opening of roads and railways. Some of them now deal in cattle; some have settled as

---

\(^1\) Of 1924

\(^2\) Vide “Speech to Lambanis, Arsikere Junction”, 2-8-1927.
husbandmen, a few live by driving carts, a few others spin coarse hem tag and sell grass and fuel and work as labourers; some are under police surveillance, some are reputed to be robbers, cattle-lifters, kidnappers of women and children, manufacturers of false coin and distillers of illicit liquor. But these sinners can be reclaimed and should be reclaimed.

I understand that workers in their midst are now carrying on propaganda to combat the evil customs. Like all backward classes the Lambani womenfolk are heavily laden with cheap and tawdry ornaments devoid of all art. Like the Raniparaj, the reform amongst these people has gone side by side with the introduction of the spinning-wheel. The yarn which they presented to me of their own spinning was fairly good and fine. These Lambanis number roughly 45,740 in Mysore State alone, and there are many also in British Karnatak. There is work here for many a reformer.

Young India, 18-8-1927

410. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

BHADRAVATI,
August 18, 1927

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I expect that you received my letters1. I should like to have your reply.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

Reply to :
C/o Sjt. S. Srinivasa Iyengar,
Amjad Bagh,
Luz, Mylapore,
Madras.

From a photostat : G.N. 879

1 Of July 9 and 24
Your kind invitation, your purse and the iron casket remind me very strongly of my visit to Jamshedpur. But one thing that strikes me most here is that the whole undertaking is from top to bottom a self-contained one. The originator is a Mysorean, the staff and labourers are mostly Mysorean, at any rate entirely South Indians. That is a thing of which you and India may will be proud. You have given the lie to the statement made in some quarters that India has intellect but no practical genius. I hope and pray that the Iron Works may grow and add to the prosperity of the State from day to day. In a country rich in mineral resources we have a place for such undertakings and it is our duty to use these resources for the welfare of the people. I am sorry Sir M. Vishveshwarayya is not here, but his telegram of cordial welcome shows that his spirit is here.

A word now to you workers here, just as I did to those at Jamshedpur. There is as I have said need for your undertaking, but there is greater need for the work for which you have given your purse. Undertakings such as yours are necessary for the middle class and the rich, but you may not afford to neglect the helpless poor. There are two ways in which you can help—by contributing money for khadi, and by wearing it yourselves. Just as your works would have to stop if there was no market for iron, even so the khadi movement would be unprogressive if you did not wear the product of the poor man’s labour. I appeal to the capitalist not to neglect the poor, whilst he may go on with his undertaking. In conclusion I hope that the relations between the officials and the workmen are sweet and friendly, and that care is taken to keep the liquor house and the gambling den miles away from your quarters.

Young India, 1-9-1927

---

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
412. APPEAL TO TAMIL NADU

August 18, 1927

God willing, I expect to enter upon the long-deferred tour in Tamil Nadu in the beginning of September. Had there been no programme already fixed, I would have prolonged the rest and not undertaken any touring. But under Dr. Subbarao’s advice, I took the risk of trying gentle touring in Mysore and though I am by no means as strong as I felt five months ago, the result of the tour in Mysore emboldens me to take up the Tamil Nadu tour.

But it will be impossible to keep to the original programme which was both intensive and extensive. It is necessary now to reduce the engagements in each place to the minimum as also the number of places to be visited. I have therefore asked Mr. Rajagopalachariar to confine the tour to principal centres in the hope that the neighbouring places that may have been omitted will bring their purses and send as many villagers as possible to the centers to be visited. It is a matter of no small grief to me that I cannot personally deliver the message of the wheel at all the places that had been fixed. But I can only do what is humanly possible. Indeed, if it was possible, I should love to visit every one of the seven hundred thousand villages of the motherland. But I have humility enough to recognize my very grave limitations and be content with what little God permits me to do.

I seek the co-operation, however, of all the lovers of khadi in order that its life-giving message can reach the remotest village. I hope that those who have the means will give, for and in the name of Daridranarayana, the most that they can, so that the organization which is slowly but surely growing in our villages and the revival the spinning-wheel has brought about may not die a lingering death.

I appeal to the Reception Committees in the places which are to be visited to cut down all unnecessary items, especially those of show, and also reduce the demonstrative expenditure to a minimum. Let every pie that the Committee may have to spend on ceremonial be saved and gained for the cause of the voiceless millions.

The Hindu, 19-8-1927

1 Released from Chikmagalur on this date
DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter with very carefully written articles on untouchability. I have expected them to be up to your usual standard. I gave them for type-copying at once so that I could send the typed copies for any correction that you may want to make. But before sending them I had intended to read the articles, which I have now done, and whilst, as I have said, they are very carefully written, they are neither original nor as closely reasoned as I have known your writings to be. I haven’t the time to give you a detailed criticism; but I would just point out the defect in your definition, which, in any case, seems to me to be ponderous.

Untouchability is no ‘avoidance‘ but it is being untouchable on account of certain characteristics of birth. In the other paragraph you have not kept close to the sub-heading which from the opening paragraphs one expects to be accurate and exclusive.

In the second article the texts do not seem to disprove untouchability, but seem to attack an excessive observance of it. If you will deal with the Shastras, it is really necessary to enter upon a deeper examination. When did the idea of untouchability arise and what is its extent? I wonder if you have read Pandit Satavalekar’s treatise on this subject. In a way it is fairly exhaustive.

If you will write for Young India on this subject in a learned way, I would like you to study it more carefully, if you have the time, and produce something original, or write something popular and original ridiculing the extravagance of the practice as it obtains today—extravagance both in the manner and the extent of its application, even assuming that there is a warrant for untouchability in Hinduism pure and undefiled. I return your articles.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 12632
414. LETTER TO K. P. PADMANABHA IYER

AS AT BANGALORE,
August 19, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You have told me nothing new. My question was simple, whether you had made any experiments yourself, and, if so, with what result. You have instead of answering that question given me a thesis of which I was not in need. People write to me giving me advice on all sorts of matters of which they have no personal knowledge. I had thought that you had perhaps some knowledge, being a qualified man.

I have read almost all the Western books on food reform. They are good only up to a point. Many of the observations have to be taken with the greatest caution, because of our different habits of life. The results obtained by experiments under Western conditions will not be the result necessarily to be obtained here. And then, I have also noticed that the experiments are not in every case faithfully described. Many data are omitted. The majority of us whether in the medical line or any other do not take a scientific interest in our professions, our only concern being to make money or somehow to get on in life. Hence is there an utter dearth of original research work.

Being unable now to make experiments myself, I would gladly receive aid from the experience of others. But it must be real experience and not book knowledge.

Perhaps the typed matter is your only copy, and I therefore return it to you.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 12633

415. LETTER TO T. W. KALANI

AS AT BANGALORE,
August 19, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You should omit all novel-reading, and you should repeat Ramanama. Learn Bhagavad Gita if possible in the original. Take a cold bath every day. Sleep out in the open air. You should retire to bed early and get up early in the morning at 4 o’clock and pray to God that He may give you strength to resist all evil thoughts. Do not brood over discharges when they occur. Find out each time the reason, and avoid the reason next time. Tell your father of the disease and tell him that it is perfectly useless for you to go to London till you have conquered these discharges and your thoughts.

Before you think of perfecting your English I would advise you to take to Hindi and Sanskrit and when you have got your mastery over both, you may certainly proceed further with your English.

Yours sincerely,

T. W. KALANI
OLD SUKKUR
(SINDH)

From microfilm : S.N. 19775

416. LETTER TO N. SETHURAMAN

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 19, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I do not think that a husband has any right to impose his own views on his wife or a parent on his grown-up children. But he is not obliged to provide things for them in which he himself does not believe. But if his wife has her own private means as she well may either from gifts given by the husband or his parents or the money she might have brought from her own parents, she has a perfect right to make what use she likes of these monies. So far as children of tender age are concerned, I am unable to say by way of general rule as to who should regulate their lives in the event of difference between husband and wife. Probably it is a matter of mutual accommodation. Finally it is the law of love that should govern relations in a family life and no hard and fast rules can really be laid down for mutual conduct. What may be perfectly justified in one case may not be wholly justifiable in every other case apparently similar.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. N. SETHURAMAN

THIRUKKANNANGUDI

KIVALUR. S.I. RLY.

From a photostat : S.N. 19803

417. A LETTER

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

August 19, 1927

DEAR FRIEND.

I have your letter. All my sympathies are with you. Your last state is simply due to excessive self-abuse. The vital fluid is evidently now passed even without stimulation. My advice to you is not to go to your wife at all at least for one year and not till you have acquired mastery of yourself, whether it is inside of the year or even beyond. You must not hesitate to tell your parents the reason for your abstention. When they understand how you have weakened yourself and become diseased, if they are at all wise, they will know the reason and trouble you no more in your attempt to rebuild your constitution. You must learn cooking for yourself, so that you may regulate your diet. Give up cycling. Walk to your college, seek the company only of good boys. Do not be in a hurry to pass your examination. Take your own time. Retire to bed early, and at that time of retiring, think good thoughts and pray to God for help with an implicit faith that there is a high power ruling our destination and responsive to our innermost cravings for betterment. Take gentle walks before retiring to bed, but without overfatiguing yourself. Jump out of the bed as soon as you are awake no matter when, and do not go to bed again before the next bed time unless you fell so giddy that you must sleep, in which case you will take as much sleep as may be necessary. Repeat the practice from night to night till you have won long sweet undisturbed sleep from 9 to 4. At 4 o’clock you will get up, have your mouth washed, and even a full bath if you can get your bowels to move at that time.
and are not too weak to have the bath so early, and then read the Bhagavad Gita or any other religious book or simply utter Ramanama for an hour or at least for five minutes if you cannot concentrate longer and for five minutes you will [pray], whether with or without concentration, always trying to concentrate. After this religious practice, you will take at least half an hour’s walk out in the open. And then a cup full of fresh milk, boiled without sugar and you may have some fresh fruit if it is available, otherwise twenty dried raisins. Wash the raisins and chew them well. You will take no other food till 10 o’clock or 12 o’clock or whatever the time is when you may take a little chapati and some clean boiled vegetable without salt and nothing more. In the evening, before dark the same quantity of milk as in the morning and chapati with or without vegetable. If you don’t take vegetable, you may take raisins or fresh fruit. If you do not know how to make chapati, you must learn it. Any green vegetable can be taken. Not starchy ones if possible. But when you cannot get green stuff, you may have potatoes or any other starchy vegetable and add to it fresh lemon’s juice. Don’t take any sugar or condiments. Keep your bowels in good order. And at the time of retiring at night take an earth bandage.

If you have discharges either in night or in the day time you must immediately have a cold hip-bath. On no account must you practise self-abuse. On the approach of the least sensation, you must get up and walk briskly keeping your fist closed so tight as if you were about to hit anybody. Sit at the spinning-wheel for half an hour at least concentrating yourself on your work to God and do the spinning in a proper humble sacrificial spirit. It will compose you. Make a fixed determination to rebuild yourself and undo the past. Do not brood over the past and forget it and do not feel dejected if you have discharges, but resolutely refuse to be party to those discharges. Keep your mind ever occupied with nobler things and away from yourself.

Yours sincerely,

R. B. T.

BENARES

From a photostat: S. N. 19804

1 The source has “have”.
DEAR FRIEND,

Here are the answers to your questions:

1. In my opinion State aid should not be asked and should not be given except on the following conditions:

   Every school in which the head master is or teachers are prepared to learn carding and spinning and submit to an examination should receive Rs. 5 per month as an increase in the existing salary of the head master or the teacher in question, provided that he guarantees manufacture of five tolas of yarn of at least 6 counts per boy or girl per month, the increase to be drawn only upon certificates by the inspector of the required amount of yarn and a capital expense of annas four per boy or girl for spinning outfit.

   Note: Unless some such provision is made, my experience is that expense incurred over the introduction of hand-spinning in schools becomes a mere waste. And it would be wrong to introduce spinning in schools unless there is a staff of qualified inspectors and itinerant teachers for teaching these school-masters, and, if necessary, in the preliminary stages even the boys and girls.

2. Spinning should be made compulsory only in such primary and middle schools where the majority of municipal or local board voters consent. Compulsion would be useless where there is no public opinion in favour of hand-spinning.

3. The unfortunate experience just now is that boys take to spinning more quickly than girls. Therefore, I would make no distinction, and it is wrong to introduce the idea amongst boys and girls that spinning is essentially meant for girls and not for boys. It is to be treated as a national duty and it is to be prized for its cultural advantages so far as the boys and girls are concerned.

4. The question of cotton-growing tracts is irrelevant to the consideration of introducing spinning in schools and cotton trees (that is, the devkapas variety) can be planted anywhere.

5. As I do not know the incidence of the education cess in Mysore, I am unable to answer the question.
6. Public sympathy and support can only be obtained by propaganda on behalf of the Industrial Department just as was done and is still being done in the matter of co-operation. Hand-spinning is really the greatest aid to co-operation.

7. As there are weaving sheds in the Adi Karnataka workshop conducted by the Government, all yarn manufactured in the schools should be sent to these sheds for weaving and a stipulated price should be paid by these institutions to the schools manufacturing yarn.

If you are serious about this matter and are convinced as to the absolute necessity of spinning becoming universal, you should give some attention to the study of the technique of hand-spinning, which you can easily do in a month’s time if you devote a whole month to it, or in three months’ time if you devote at least one hour per day before taking up questions. Merely putting questions in the Assembly and throwing the blame or the burden upon the Government is to damage the cause. For, after all the Government can only respond to the atmosphere around it. And Government after all is what the people make it. It has no power or capacity apart from the people.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. B. GOPALCHAR
R. A. MEMBER
TIRTHAHALLI
SHIMOGA DISTRICT

From a microfilm : S. N. 19805
419. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Shravan Vad 8 [August 20, 1927]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. How old is Haribhai’s widowed sister and how well educated? How about her constitution? Please let me have these and other facts about her. There was a letter from Kusum from Broach. She appears to be calm. Why did you have to stop studying with the help of Shri Mrityunjaya?

Did you not begin studying Gujarati some time ago? How much Gujarati does Uttamchand’s wife know? We should not undertake a task beyond our capacity.

I should like to have the daily diary completed for the remaining period. What I get from it, I do not get from the letters.

I am all right. Our Mysore tour will end on the 29th.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 592. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

420. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Silence Day, [After August 20, 1927]

CHI. VASUMATI,

Received your letter. It is good that you have started teaching. I did not mean that you should teach Gujarati only to the extent that you know it. I want much greater knowledge of perfect Gujarati. I expect a deeper study of grammar. But let that be. Teaching too is service for you. And everything done in a spirit of service yields fruit. Keep up your health. How have you arranged about your food?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. N. 9365

---

1 The year is inferred from the reference to the end of the Mysore tour.

421. REMARKS IN BELUR TEMPLE VISITORS’ BOOK

August 20, 1927

I was thankful to be able to visit this glory of Indian architecture (sculpture?). I wish the temple could be thrown open to the so-called untouchables on precisely the same terms as to other Hindus.

The Hindu, 22-8-1927

422. SPEECH AT BELUR TEMPLE ¹

August 20, 1927

Who would not be drawn to this wonderful temple of Indian art? But a representative of Daridranarayana like myself may not indulge in that feast of eyes. All my time and my energy are consecrated to the service of the poor, and I confess that I should not have come to this place if Keshavdas had not promised a purse of Rs. 500.

Young India, 1-9-1927

423. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, ARSIKERE ²

August 20, 1927

We do not know what Shri Krishna’s life means for us, we do not read the Gita, we make no attempt to teach it to our children. The Gita is such a transcendental book that men of every creed, age and clime may read it with respect, and find in it the principles of their respective religions. If we thought of Krishna on every Janmashtami day and read the Gita and resolved to follow its teachings, we should not be in our present sorry plight. Shri Krishna served the people all his life; he was a real servant of the people. He could have led the hosts at Kurukshetra, but he preferred to be Arjuna’s charioteer. His whole life was one unbroken Gita of karma. He refused proud Duryodhana’s sweets and preferred humble Vidura’s spinach. As a child he was a cowherd and we still know him by the name of Gopala. But we, his worshippers, have neglected the cow today; the Adi Karnatakas slaughter cows and eat beef, and our infants and invalids have to go without cow’s milk. Krishna knew no sleep or idleness. He kept sleepless vigil of the world, we, his posterity, have become

¹ From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
² From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The meeting was held at the Travellers’ Bungalow.
indolent and forgotten the use of our hands. In Bhagavad Gita Lord Krishna has shown the path of bhakti—which means the path of karma. Lokamanya Tilak has shown that whether we desire to be bhaktas, or jnanis, karma is the only way, but that karma should not be for self but for others. Action for one’s own self binds, action for the sake of others delivers from bondage. What can be the altruistic action which can be universally done, by Hindus, Mussalmans, Christians, by men, women and children? I have tried to demonstrate that spinning alone is that sacrificial act, for that alone can make us do something in God’s name, something for the poorest, something that can infuse activity in their idle limbs. Lord Krishna has also taught that to be a true bhakta we should make no difference between a Brahmin and a scavenger. If that is true, there can be no place for untouchability in Hinduism. If you are still hugging that superstition, you can cleanse yourself by getting rid of it on this the sacred day of Krishna’s birth. He who swears by the Gita may know no distinction between Hindu and Mussalman for Lord Krishna has declared that he who adores God in a true spirit by whatsoever name adores Him. The path of bhakti, karma, love as expounded in the Gita, leaves no room for the despising of man by man.

Young India, 1-9-1927

---

424. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 21, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letters. The longest Mysore tour is finished and next week I commence the Tamil land. The address will now be Madras. Mahadev will give it¹. I leave for Madras on 30th morning. The post will be received here up to 29th instant.

I am not surprised at your fight with the devils. For us imperfect people this constant duelling is our only test and spur to action. So long as these fellows do not get the better of us in the end, all is well. Of course, I want to know you and see you as you are and only then will you be what you ought to be.

You shall certainly not stay there a day beyond the stipulated time and then the Hindi will have to take care of itself. But even during the remaining period, I do not want you to get sick over it. I would not mind even if you threw away every Hindi book and simply picked up what was possible without an effort. There should be no violence about this Hindi learning. Of course I would like you not to forget Urdu writing. But in all these things let there be no overstraining.

¹ C/o S. Srinivasa Iyengar, Amjad Bagh, Mylapore, Madras

Yes, Vinoba is an extraordinary man. His weeping is an intense longing to be with the Maker. Do cultivate him as much as you can, draw him out when you can. You may not have opportunity of coming in close contact with him again. Ask him any questions you like.

About Gangu you may not worry. It is quite enough that you are still allowed by her to guide her. It does appear to me that she should live altogether apart from Valunjkar and stand on her own legs.

With love,

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 5263. Courtesy : Mirabehn

425. LETTER TO JAMNADAS

BANGALORE,

Silence Day [August 22, 1927]

CHI. JAMNADAS,

I got your letter. It is good that you wrote. I rather wish that you should write. Perhaps I can give you some peace of mind by replying to your letters.

I even understand your reasoning. I can now prescribe for you only one medicine: having placed before me all difficulties and shortcomings, you should have faith in me and cheerfully submit to my orders. If you see any error or defect in them, you should let the sin of that or the responsibility for that rest on my head. A soldier who knows his duty carried out scrupulously his general’s orders, even when he sees the latter’s error. He who has faith in his leader sees no error in him even when the world sees one. The first attitude is acquired by practice, the second is the fruit of tapascharya done in this or a previous life. In the first, it is reason which is active in the second the heart.

1 From the reference to the end of Gandhiji’s Mysore tour; vide also the succeeding item.

I wrote about you to Nanabhai last week itself. The problem of money will be solved. If there are delays, bear them as inevitable. Have a frank talk with Nanabhai and do what he advises you. This is my order at the moment.

Come here whenever you wish to. Ask for money from the Ashram. Don’t forget to take care of your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I shall be in Bangalore till the end of this month.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8595. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

426. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day [August 22, 1927]

SISTERS,

We returned here yesterday after completing our longest tour in Mysore. I am to leave Mysore by the end of this week, i.e., on Tuesday, the 30th instant. So letters which can reach me latter than Monday should be addressed to Madras. I do not know our exact address at Madras.

It is very good that you are going to contribute to the Flood Relief Fund by doing such work as sewing. Get the women labourers at the Ashram also to co-operate in this work. I do not mean that they should sew. But if they like, they can contribute a day’s wages. It will be enough for the present if you get to know them on this pretext. If they are not willing, they need give nothing. If we realize even now that we have so far failed to enter into their life your contacts with them will increase in the future. We have to develop in ourselves the quality which enables us to look upon all as equals, as laid down in the Gita.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3663
I have both your letters. As Kaka has gone to see the gold mines today, I could not show them to him. He will write to you as soon as he returns and thereafter he or I shall return the letters to you. Mahadev will write to you in addition to this, if necessary.

It was right that you wrote to me. It would have hurt me had you not written to me. I destroyed that letter as it was not worth preserving. My idea in destroying it was that the fewer the people who read it the better it would be.

I already knew the first part of what you wrote. That is to say, I knew the matter up to Maganlal’s fast\(^1\). What was news to me was the breach of pledges by both even after the fast as also the experience of Ramdas. Indeed that has aroused my suspicion but my opinion is not based on it. It is based solely on the frequent violation of truthfulness. Even if one who commits such a breach is good in other respects, the Ashram which lays stress on satya cannot accommodate him. Moreover, the Ashram provides maintenance to a great extent. It is not our duty nor do we have the right to extend that maintenance to one who cannot serve the Ashram. The reason for this decision is therefore only the proved faults of Chi. Kashi in telling lies. But it is only if all of you can come to the same decision calmly that you should give effect to my advice. I am and am not in a hurry. I am not because in these matters we must act with full circumspection. I am in a hurry to the extent that once a decision is taken it is adharma to delay putting it into effect.

The Managing Committee ought certainly to read and understand this letter. It may, if it wants to, ask me anything. Certainly get from me whatever you need to in order to reach a decision.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Balwantrai Mehta”, after 2-9-1927.
Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi

August 22, 1927

I write this separately for your convenience.

It is regrettable that you and Maganlal have not yet made it up with each other but I also see that it is inevitable. Since all of you have taken a clear pledge twice, neither of you can leave the place and be separated from each other. Neither you nor anyone else can sever the bond of marriage or spiritual relationship which has come to be formed between you. This is a moral issue. That a man can free himself from all bonds by abandoning morality is, however, a different matter.

That being so, we have to consider just how your relations can become cordial. We are all married people. We should consider how husband and wife behave with each other and should order our conduct accordingly. You should meet Maganlal’s angry red eyes with calm affection and vice versa. If such mutual give-and-take is not possible, do as Ba did. When I opened the door for Ba, she asked me to pause and think and made me feel ashamed of myself and although she was ready to go out, she retracted her steps. Keep on repeating, “We can never be separated” like Govardhanbhai’s Kumud. Thereafter, God alone knows how He will dispose of whichever of you is Pramadadhana, whether through death or otherwise. He stages a new play every day, so that He does not have to draw upon Govardhanbhai. Have faith in Him.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

---

1 Govardhanram Madhavram Tripathi, author of Sarasvatichandra, a Gujarati novel.
2 Heroine of Sarasvatichandra
3 Another character from Sarasvatichandra to whom Kumud was married
429. LETTER TO GANGABEHN

August 22, 1927

I have your letter; Kakasaheb too read to me the one you wrote to him. I can understand your wish to tour with me and at the same time serve Kakasaheb, but I shall not encourage you in it.

1. Kakasaheb ought not to stand in need of so much service and Chandrashankar should make up for your absence. If that is not possible Kakasaheb should become too dependent.

2. If Ba needs the services of anyone, she should go to the Ashram. If one who serves me needs to be served by someone else such a one’s service will not be service at all and I must give up such service.

3. Instead of benefiting by tours you would only suffer harm. With me one has to move from place to place, no studies will therefore be possible. It will be good indeed if I have with me some woman attendant, but she should have completed her studies. I see if Manibehn too remains longer, she would stand to lose. Her studies have already suffered. Deep in her heart she desired to stay. She is yet a child. As she had come here on business, she was allowed to stay.

You should of course be engrossed in your studies. When Kakasaheb gets settled, you may certainly stay with him, serve him and learn from him.

Now you should give up your reserve and learn reading and writing from anyone who can teach and offers to do it.

Self-knowledge can be had only from saints. Reading and writing should be learnt from wherever it is available. Hence give up your idea that you will learn only if a certain person will teach you. A girl full of passion would certainly entertain such an idea. You cannot have it at all. But I do understand that you feel shy of disclosing your ignorance. You should certainly shed such shyness. As Rasik knows Sanskrit well, why should I not learn it from him? And to us all other boys should be like Rasik.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
430. LETTER TO ANANDIBAI

August 22, 1927

CHI. ANANDIBAI,

Women must learn as part of elementary education at least their own mother tongue, Hindi if it is not their mother tongue, enough Sanskrit to be able to understand the drift of the Bhagavad Gita, elementary arithmetic, elementary composition, elementary music and child-care. Along with this, I think they should know well the processes up to the weaving from cotton. When a woman receives this education she should have an environment that will shape her character and enable her to see clearly the evils in society and to avoid them. I have not mentioned religious education separately as it is acquired by practice and would be covered by general reading. Truly speaking, it is a part of the elevating company of a teacher. This is about girls. The education of a widow or a married woman is of course a different matter.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

431. LETTER TO SHARDA

Shravan Vad 10, August 22, 1927

CHI. SHARDA,

I have your letter. Life is full of difficulties. If we can, like the weaver, patiently unravel tangled yarn, only then can we weave the pattern of our life properly.

You should know that if the Managing Committee or Maganlal refuses to accommodate your brother in the Ashram that is after full deliberation and you should remain calm and not get angry with any of them. The Ashram is not an institution for correcting the delinquent, but is one for giving good people education for service and for preparing a field for service. The Ashramites will be committing a sin if they believe that they are perfect; “good” only means those who are like them. They would not admit people who fail when measured by that yardstick. If we would turn the Ashram into a home for the disabled, it must have an altogether different set-up. You yourself can imagine this position. And once it is turned into a home for the disabled, which disabled person may not be admitted to it? A little thought will convince you that we shall not then be able to start and run dairies, tanneries, etc., but the whole pattern will have to change. Remember one thing. You have abandoned those family relationships which run counter to other larger relationships. Your father and your brother are a father and a brother to the same extent as those of comparable age in the Ashram or outside. Towards these you will have the same attitude as towards your own father or brother. Knowing this you should not grieve because your brother cannot join the Ashram. Will your brother be willing to go to some orphanage? Would he go to the Bardoli Ashram? I am not sure whether he will be admitted there, but as Bhai Jugatram is conducting a number of experiments there, he may perhaps fit into them. But even if by chance Bhai Jugatram keeps him, there will be the question of his maintenance. Will your father pay it? Consider the whole question calmly and objectively and write to me without reserve.

\footnote{The addressee had complained to Gandhiji that the Ashram would not admit her brother who had been turned out of the house by their father.}

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai
432. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

Silense Day [August 22, 1927]

CHI. MATHURADAS

Pyarelal has arrived in great mental distress. It is just as well that Shankaran willingly agreed to go there and I pulled away Pyarelal to relieve congestion at the Ashram. Now he has to be treated. I shall do that. You shall not worry on that account. His suffering has been caused by separation. He cannot bear to be away from me. He puts up with it from a sense of duty but it upsets him. Hence I shall keep him with me for the time being. I did expect that Shankaran would satisfy you. It is good that he has adjusted himself there. Your health must be gradually improving.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Now my stay in Mysore is almost over. We shall start touring Tamilnadu on the 30th. Mahadev will give you the address. Till the 9th the address will be: c/o S. Srinivasa Iyengar, Mylapore, Madras.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 The addressee got the letter on August 24, 1927 the silence day; i.e., Monday, prior to that was on August 22.
433. LETTER TO TRAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

Shrauan Vad 10 [August 22, 1927]

CHI. TARAMATI,

I have your letter after many months. This is a real letter, because you have put down in it words as they came to you without anyone’s help. If Mathuradas makes you write or corrects your writing I would consider it his letter. Am I concerned with your grammatical mistakes? I am only concerned with your feelings.

I wish all the three of you to take full advantage of the climate there. You yourself should get into the habit of walking more. You must make the body as strong as possible. You must also get into the habit of mixing with people and talking to them freely. That you serve the sick to the best of your capacity is certainly noble work. You must keep in close touch with Nargisbehn. Dilip must have grown beyond recognition.

I am quite well. The body has not quite regained the former vigour, but it serves for work. It is given by God and He will take from it such work as He wills.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

434. FAREWELL MESSAGE TO STUDENTS

[After August 22, 1927]

I am not going to be satisfied with the students’ performance merely by their donations to khadi, etc., no matter how great they are. I want them for the country body and soul. That would be some, not much, return for what they are receiving.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

---

1 From the postmark dated August 24, 1927. Shravan Vad 10 in 1927 corresponded to this date.

2 The source has this after the entries for August 22.
435. LETTER TO KUVALAYANAND

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 23, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

My stay in Mysore comes to an end on the 29th. I leave for Tamil Nadu on the 30th, and for some time my headquarters will be Madras (Sjt. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, Amjad Bagh, Luz, Mylapore, Madras).

But this is written to send under your care Punjabhai, a worker in the Ashram. He has been suffering for some time from indefinable abdominal pains. You will hear from him the whole of the history of his case. Punjabhai is an abstemious man, will go through any rigour. I have considered his case to be specially adapted for yogic treatment. I, therefore, commend him to your attention.

Punjabhai does not know anybody in the place. If he can be accommodated at your Ashram, that would be ideal; but if he cannot, you will perhaps be able to tell him where he could stay. He must be a paying patient, because he has some means of his own and does not wish to become a burden upon anybody. At the Ashram also he pays for his own expenses. There need be therefore no hesitation about taking your charges.

I am keeping my strength and doing the tour without feeling the strain.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

436. LETTER TO T. R. KRISHNASWAMI IYER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 23, 1927

MY DEAR KRISHNASWAMI,

I have your letter. I am sorry to have to tell you that I have not yet tried the oils for the simple reason that I have been away, and I don’t want to carry the bottles about with me and doctor myself on the journey.

The idea of cotton cultivation is good. But it has to be conceived not in the interest of the buyers of cotton for the foreign market or even for the mills, but for the convenience of the spinners. Therefore cultivation has to be grown on particular portions of every holding just as indigo was grown on 3/20th of every holding in Champaran. It was a magnificent thing, only it was designed solely for the planter.
And then you have to find out what variety should be grown, how tree-cotton would fare and so on. If, therefore, you will interest yourself in this, you have to study the whole of the question of cotton cultivation in all its phases. Such experiments have been made at the Ashram, and you may know further on the subject by correspondence with the Director of the Technical Department of the All-India Spinners’ Association, Sabarmati.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SIT. T. R. KRISHNASWAMIER, SABARI ASHRAM
OLVAKOT

From a photostat : G.N. 6832.

437. LETTER TO KAMALA DAS GUPTA

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 23, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I know that many girls are now tending might be considered too simple. Let me however make my meaning clear. I do not by any means consider simplicity as synonymous with shabbiness, shoddiness or slovenliness; nor need a devotee of simplicity be devoid of a sense of taste or decency. What I have found is that the simplest things are the neatest possible and this neatness that comes from simplicity can be the common heritage of all mankind instead of the manufactured taste which has become the exclusive property of the monied few.

If you are sincere about your desire to go to the Ashram and earnest and yet gentle in your effort, you will certainly bear down the opposition of your parents. Until you can secure the permission of your parents, you can mentally live the Ashram life.

And why do you say that there is no way for Indian girls for leading a simple and pure life? Just think of the millions of the poor girls. They can’t afford to look elegant even for getting suitable matches; nor is it true that here in India all the girls are bound to marry. But the fact is that the vast majority want to marry, and in middle classes society to which we belong, the fashion is to think that girls are born only to marry. But I know that there are many girls who are now trying to remain unmarried. They have their parents’ cooperation also. But it is a hard struggle in which they are engaged.

What made you think that I was stopping the writing of the autobiography? It is continuing.

I am in Bangalore up to the 29th instant. My address after will be: Care of Sjt. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, Amjad Bagh, Luz, Mylapore, Madras.

I would like you to see Sjt. Satis Chandra Das Gupta and his wife Srimati Hemprabhadevi of Khadi Pratishthan at Sodepur. They both know the Ashram. They have lived there for some time. They will tell you all about it. You must not be in a hurry even though your parents may leave you free to go to the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 12634–A

438. LETTER TO T. R. MAHADEVA IYER

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 23, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

Herewith a copy of a letter received by me. I think that you should give up possession now without any ado whatsoever.

Please let me know your decision so that I may write to them.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 12938
439. LETTER TO KRISHNADAS

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

August 23, 1927

MY DEAR KRISHNADAS,

I have your letter. I have sent you a telegram in order to save you suspense. There is a moral undertaking to give the English manuscript to Ganesan. He should therefore have it. But the terms are quite proper. I shall discuss them with him and deliver the manuscript after coming to terms. I shall vary them if necessary for his accommodation.

You have still the Bengali manuscript. So you will have to fix up something there.

We leave here on the 30th morning for Vellore.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 19771

440. LETTER TO DR. SATYAPAL

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

August 23, 1927

DEAR DR. SATYAPAL,

I have your letter. I understand what you say, but I do not appreciate your attitude towards Lalaji. There are many matters on which I do not agree with him, but his sincerity, his love of the country are undeniable. His self-sacrifice and unbroken record of service entitle him to our respect and affection and make him indispensable for any public work in the Punjab. You may know that even in the heyday of Non-co-operation, I used to say this very thing and used to tell co-workers that without Lalaji, I could and would do nothing in the Punjab and that my business was to convert Lalaji and that the Punjabis had a right to defer to Lalaji rather than accept the views of one like myself who was comparatively a stranger to them. If I were you therefore, I should go again and again to him and strive with him but not strive against him.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat : S.N. 19774

1 Of Seven Months with Gandhi

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
441. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

[After August 23, 1927]

CHI. MANI,

I have your letter. Over a remark of mine, Mahadev showed me your letter without waiting for your permission to do so. No one should expect Mahadev to keep any secrets from me. It is beyond his power. Once we form a habit it becomes beyond our power to do something different. This conformity is worthy of being cultivated in regard to a good habit. One who meditates with a pure mind on non-violence ultimately becomes unable to commit violence, not physically but psychologically. Thought is itself the root of action. If there is no thought, there can be no action.

What if our separation has hurt me and still hurts me as much as it hurts you? You chose shreyas. And so did I. Therein alone lies your good and mine and everyone else’s. It should be the end of all education to make shreyas also desired. Hence if you believe that living in the Ashram will benefit you, learn to like it. In this cheat neither yourself nor me. When you come to like to live only in the Ashram, know that I shall be fully prepared to put you in another place. You should write to me without reserve. It may be that I may not understand or that in reply I may lecture you. One should learn to put up with one’s elders’ lecturing.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy : Narayan Desai

---

1 The source has this after the entries for August 23.
2 Mahadev Desai had read to Gandhiji a long letter written to him by the addressee regarding her embarrassment in living in the Ashram.
3 The better (as against the more pleasant)
442. LETTER TO A GUJARATI STUDENT

[After August 23, 1927]

It is quite proper that fasting has been extolled among us. But what kind of fasting is it? There is a religious dictum to the effect that the man who starves his body but leaves his mind uncontrolled is a hypocrite. We have ultimately to control the mind even in fasting. Fasting or not fasting is the same thing for a man who has conquered his mind. But conquest of the mind is so difficult. We can control the mind only by repeatedly controlling the body. My salutation to those who adopt this discipline of fasting and do so for self-purification.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

443. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

[August 24, 1927]

PANDIT MOTILAL NEHRU

ALLAHABAD

YOUR WIRE. ANSARI’S STATEMENT UNFORTUNATE. BEING INTERIOR MYSORE HAVE BEEN WITHOUT TOUCH PAPERS. IF ANSARI SPONTANEOUSLY RETIRES SITUATION WILL CERTAINLY EASE. AM NOT SURE WHETHER I SHOULD ISSUE STATEMENT. RETURNING BANGALORE TOMORROW MORNING.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 12873

1 The source has this after the entries for August 23.
2 In reply to his telegram of August 23; vide Appendix “Telegram from Motilal Nehru”, 23-8-1927.
3 Vide “Letter to Dr. M. A. Ansari”, 26-8-1927.
444. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

August 24, 1927

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

I have your letter and raksha. It is tied round my wrist while I write this.

This time the loss is so tremendous that if it is found necessary to seek aid for the workers from the co-operative society, I cannot object. Do whatever you all feel is proper. Aid can certainly be had from the Relief Committee¹. See Vallabhbhai. Help can also be sought from the Bombay Committee.

I will leave Mysore State on the 30th. My address thereafter will be c/o Srinivasa Iyengar, Luz, Madras. I will let you know if there is a change of plan.

Manibehn left for the Ashram yesterday. Andrews will come to see me on Saturday. Today we are in a village in Tamilnadu.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32825

445. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Wednesday, [After August 24, 1927]

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

On reaching here, I received your letter. And I am now relieved of my worry. You should never hesitate to write. I can set right what is going wrong only when you write and tell me. There was only one interpretation possible of your letter. Even if by the Relief Committee you had meant the Bombay Committee, there is no comparison between the carelessness of the Bombay Committee and that of the Baroda Committee. It appears that the Relief Committee² is doing its work quite satisfactorily. It may have been lethargic about our work and possibly did not investigate the state of affairs thoroughly enough. But we should not lose our patience. For that reason, when no institution pays any heed [to the condition of workers] we may criticize the injustice it perpetrates. If the whole thing is over and done with, it is well and good. Even so, stick to my advice. Sooner or later,

¹ Gujarat Flood Relief Committee
² The Gujarat Flood Relief Committee.
we have to make workers independent and self-reliant. It is our duty to make them skilled in their work—we do not want them to remain helpless or make beggars of them. It is a difficult task. One does not get immediate credit for such work. We might even be shunned. All such risks are inherent [in such work] but we have to bear with them. It is our duty to act according to what we think we ought to do.

I am well. Do not pay any attention to what appears in the papers.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : S. N. 32810

446. SPEECH AT KRISHNAGIRI

August 24, 1927

MY CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I have to thank you for the address you have presented to me; also for the two purses. You have asked me to perform the unveiling of the portrait of the late Deshbandhu Chittaranjan Das. I thank you for the honour you have done me by asking to perform the ceremony and I do so with the greatest pleasure. I hope that his life and work will be an inspiration for us. All. It can be said of him that he gave his life for the sake of his country, and he himself lived and died for it. This is not a meeting in which I can speak to you at length. There is too much noise and it will be cruelty on my part to inflict a speech on you. It does me a great deal of good and gives me a good deal of pleasure to see to many smiling faces about me. But when I see in those faces what you and I will never see, the faces which have not even the ability to smile, my heart sinks within me; and when we contemplate God residing in those people without smiling faces, we recognize in him Daridranarayana. It is for the sake of Daridranarayana that you have given these purses and so far as I have been able to see and think there is the conviction growing upon me that the only way you can render service to Daridranarayana is through the spinning-wheel. We are suffering from the chronic disease which can be called want of work and the only work you can

---

1 In reply to addresses by the Union Board, the citizens and the co-operative society find for the millions in the seven lakhs of villages is the spinning-wheel. But even the spinning-wheel has no force and no application unless you and I can make up our minds to discard all foreign cloth. You have done well in being exceedingly brief in your address. My faith in the other items of the constructive national programme is just as firm as in khadi. I know that the horizon before us is very black. But in spite of that horizon being black, there is hope. I reiterate my faith in the possibility and necessity of Hindu-Muslim unity. I reiterate also my belief that unless we Hindus rid ourselves of the curse of untouchability Hinduism will be waning.

I consider that total prohibition is the sacred duty of the State. In my opinion it is long overdue. If there is any country in the world which is immediately ripe for total prohibition, it is undoubtedly India; and if all of you unitedly demand total prohibition, prohibition can come without the slightest difficulty.

I was glad to receive this address from the co-operative society. May I humbly suggest to the co-operative society that their work, good as it is, is wholly incomplete and excludes the necessity of the population, unless they include the spinning-wheel and khadi in their programme. I am also glad that students have collected a small purse separately. They have done so at almost every place I visited. It gives me hope, because I regard their purse as an earnest of their determination to serve the poorest of their countrymen; and let me tell them from my experience that service to the country would be impossible unless they lead purse and abstemious lives.

I am glad to see so many sisters at this meeting. May I remind the men about me of the duty we owe to our sisters? We have been guilty of gross indifference, to put it mildly, towards our sisters. If we desire true national regeneration, we will have to reconsider many of our ideas about the status of women. Child marriage and child widowhood, wherever existing and in whatever form, are great evils in society. Surely it is a matter entirely resting within ourselves, and we shall have to answer both before God and the world if we do not wake up betimes and reform our own lives. In this vast assembly, I know everybody has not contributed to the purse. I want for this work every pie that can be willingly and intelligently given to me. I want the poorest, man and woman, boy and girl, to give whatever they can for the purse. As I have said in the beginning, let us know that there are men and women poorer than we are. I would earnestly ask you to preserve complete silence while the volunteers go about collecting money. Those only should give who believe in the message of the spinning-wheel. But those who do not want to give, may remain in their places till collections are over. May God bless all those who are here and also those in whose name we propose to work.

_The Hindu, 27-8-1927_

447. STUDENTS AND THE “GITA”

The other day, in the course of a conversation, a missionary friend asked me, if India was really a spiritually advanced country, why it was that he found only a few students having any knowledge of their own religion, even of the _Bhagavad Gita_. In support of the statement, the friend who is himself an educationist told me that he had made it a point to ask the students he met whether they had any knowledge of their religion or of the _Bhagavad Gita_. A vast majority of them were found to be innocent of any such knowledge.

I do not propose to take up at the present moment the inference that because certain students had no knowledge of their own religion, India was not a spiritually advanced country, beyond saying that the ignorance on the part of the students of religious books did not necessarily mean absence of all religious life or want or spirituality among the people to which the students belonged. But there is no doubt that the vast majority of students who pass through the Government educational institutions are devoid of any religious instruction. The remark of the missionary had reference to the Mysore students, and I was somewhat pained to observe that even the students of Mysore had no religious instruction in the State schools. I know that there is a school of thought which believes in only secular instruction being given in public schools. I know also that in a country like India, where there are most religions of the world represented and where there are so many denominations in the same religion, there must be difficulty about making provision for religious instruction. But if India is not to declare spiritual bankruptcy, religious instruction of its youth must be held to be at least as necessary as secular instruction. It is true that knowledge of religious books is no equivalent of that of religion. But if we cannot have religion we must be satisfied with providing our boys and girls with what is next best. And whether there is such instruction given in the schools or not, grown-up students must cultivate the art of self-help. about matters religious as about other. They may start their own class just as they have their debating and now spinners’ clubs.

Addressing the Collegiate High School students at Shimoga, I found upon enquiry at the meeting that out of a hundred or more Hindu boys, there were hardly eight who had read the Bhagavad Gita. None raised his hand in answer to the question, whether of the few who had read the Gita there was any who understood it. Out of five or six Mussalman boys all raised their hands as having read the Koran. But only one could say that he knew its meaning. The Gita is, in my opinion, a very easy book to understand. It does present some fundamental problems which are no doubt difficult of solution. But the general trend of the Gita is in my opinion unmistakable. It is accepted by all Hindu sects as authoritative. It is free from any form of dogma. In a short compass it gives a complete reasoned moral code. It satisfies both the intellect and heart. It is thus both philosophical and devotional. Its appeal is universal. The language is incredibly simple. But I nevertheless think that there should be an authoritative version in each vernacular, and the translations should be so prepared as to avoid technicalities and in a manner that would make the teaching of the Gita intelligible to the average man. The suggestion is not intended in any way to supplement the original. For I reiterate my opinion that every Hindu boy and girl should know Sanskrit. But for a long time to come, there will be millions without any knowledge of Sanskrit. It would be suicidal to keep them deprived of the teachings of Bhagavad Gita because they do not know Sanskrit.

Young India, 25-8-1927

448. NOTES

INSOLENT REMINDERS

The trial of two young men in Madras, one a Hindu aged about 30 and the other a Mussalman aged 25, on a charge of having attempted to disfigure a statue in Mount Road, Madras, of General Neill of the Mutiny fame, has a deep significance. Their attempt reminds one of the abortive effort made in Lahore during the heyday of Non-co-operation to have the Lawrence statue, or at least the highly offensive inscription “the pen or the sword”, removed. The Lahore attempt was on the part of the general populace. The Madras attempt was confined to two young men who went about their work with quiet determination and without any fuss. The following statement made by the accused according to The Hindu report will be read with great interest:

The first accused stated that he was born in Tinnevelly but lived in Madura. He knew what kind of punishment he would get before doing this act. They were prepared to undergo anything for this. From his study of history he knew that Neill had done much harm to the country, and thought that his statue should not be there, and he (the accused) determined to destroy it. They had brought the hammer and the axe as they came from their place. They did not bring the hammer and axe for this particular purpose. After coming to Madras they went round the city for sight-seeing in the course of which they saw the statue. They remembered his history and so attempted to destroy it this morning. But the statue was neither bronze nor marble as they thought. As it was copper only some parts broke. After that the sergeant took them to the police station. For that offence they were prepared to take any punishment His Worship might think fit to impose.

Asked as to whether they pleaded guilty, they said that they were guilty “if they were bound by the law of the Government”, but in their own opinion they “do not feel guilty”.

It is impossible to withhold sympathy from these brave young men, alike for the motive which prompted the act and for the dignity with which they approached their trial. The report before me adds that the accused were unrepresented and did not even cross-examine the prosecution witness. There seems to be no doubt that as national consciousness grows, the resentment over the insolent reminders, which such statues are, of abused British prowess and British barbarity will grow in strength. A wise Government, however powerful it may be, will remove every such offensive reminder, and not goad infuriate public opinion into acts which, however regrettable and reprehensible they may be in themselves, will be held justifiable as a fitting answer to the criminal indifference to legitimate national sentiment. And every abortion of attempts to remove these running sores only adds to the bitterness, and widens the gulf that separates us and the British. Surely the Municipality of Madras which owns the statue should remove it.

TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE

Swami Anand has collected, in the issue of Navajivan of 7th August 1927, information about the heroic deeds of people all over Gujarat. In the sketches are given instances of Hindus and Mussalmans helping one another as if they had never quarrelled, also of suppressed and suppressors living together under the same roof and sharing the same food, people saving one another at great personal risk. Whilst I was reading the sketches I was wondering if they could be all true. Then I remembered that it was Navajivan I was reading, and unauthentic stories were inadmissible in its columns, and that Swami himself was, if it was possible, more careful than I about admitting anything doubtful. The sketches show from Bhavnagar to Broach—a wide enough area of distress—stories of unexampled self-help, self-reliance and mutual help. As Swami well remarks, for the moment the ‘people exhibited every quality that makes a nation great and self-governing’. There was no fear, no panic, but grim determination to battle with death. If the account is true,—I must still be cautious—it reflects the highest credit on all concerned. All were leaders and all were led. It was a spontaneous organization that came into being on the advent of distress.

The thing for the leaders to see to is, whether the lessons of the mighty deluge can be made permanent. Will the Hindu-Muslim friendship outlast the immediate need? Will the yoke of the suppressed be lifted for ever? Will the self be used to subserve the benefit of all in everyday transactions? Will the pre-deluge avarice remain under check in the face of the charity that is freely flowing Gujarat-ward? Will the stewards in charge of relief funds resist the temptation to steal or misappropriate trust funds? Will there be no feigning of distress and no needless applications for relief?

The answers to these many such questions can only be satisfactorily given, if the many leaders who are now operating will be good as gold. That would mean real change of heart and real penitence and purification. It is said that there is always, after a deluge of any magnitude, a reformation of life among the survivors. It may be that, extensive as the calamity was, it may not be classed as a real deluge warranting a sweeping reformation. Mankind is notoriously too dense to read the signs that God sends from time to time. We require drums to be beaten into our ears, before we would wake from our trance and hear the warning and see that to lose oneself in all is the only way to find oneself. Will Gujarat show enough advance to regard the recent floods as an all-sufficing warning to us to write a new and brilliant chapter in the history of this afflicted land of ours? Posterity will have every reason to distrust the contemporary accounts of heroism, self-reliance and mutual help, if the people of Gujarat are unable to show any lasting and demonstrable reformation.

Young India, 25-8-1927
449. THE LAW OF CONTINENCE

A friend sends me relevant extracts from The Science of a New Life by Dr. Cowen. I have not read the book. But the advice contained in the extracts is certainly sound. I have omitted from the extracts certain paragraphs about food which are not of much value to the Indian reader. Let no one desirous of leading a pure and chaste life think that the practice of it is not worth pursuing because the expected result is not attained in a moment. And let no one expect perfection of body after successful practice of continence even for a long time. The majority of us who endeavour to follow the rules laid down for observing continence labour under three handicaps. We have inherited imperfect bodies and weak wills from our parents, and by an incorrect life we find ourselves to have further debilitated both our bodies and wills. When a writing advocating purity of life attracts us, we begin the reformation. Such reformation is never too late. But we must not expect the results described in such writings; for those results are to be expected only from a regulated life from early youth. And the third handicap we labour under is that in spite of the exercise of all the artificial and outward restraint we find ourselves unable to restrain and regularize our thoughts. And let every aspirant after a pure life take from me that an impure thought is often as powerful in undermining the body as an impure act. Control over thought is a long, painful and laborious process. But I am convinced that no time, no labour and no pain is too much for the glorious result to be reached. The purity of thought is possible only with a faith in God bordering on definite experience.

Young India, 25-8-1927

1 Not reproduced here
450. THE BLIND SPINNERS

On reading an account of the blind spinner at the recently held Khadi Exhibition in Bangalore, a correspondent has sent me the following beautiful lines by Helen Hunt Jackson:

Like a blind spinner in the sun
I tread my day;
I know that all the threads will run
The appointed way;
I know each day will bring its task
And, being blind, no more I ask.
I do not know the use or name
Of what I spin;
I only know that someone came
And laid within
My hand the thread and said, ‘Sir you
Are blind, but one thing you can do,’
Sometimes the threads so rough and fast
And tangled fly,
I know wild storms are sweeping past,
And fear that I
Shall fall, but dare not fly to find
A safer place, since I am blind.
I know not why, but I am sure
That tint and place,
In some great fabric to endure
Past time and race,
My threads will have; so from the first,
Though blind, I never felt accurst.

What a transformation there would be in our country, if all who can—who cannot?—will spin with the faith of the blind spinner. Can we not feel that every thread we spin will have place “in some great fabric to endure”?

Young India, 25-8-1927
I have your letters. Pray do not worry about the possibility of my straining myself to write to you. When I write I do so because I must, and what I must do always gives me pleasure in the doing. When I become an instrument to pure and sensitive that it would react and respond to every circumstance around it, I shall cease to write or speak and yet my thoughts will work their way to hearts of those who need my guidance or assistance. But till that time is reached, I must make use of the less reliable and imperfect instrument of the pen and the tongue.

I still feel that you have unnecessarily excited yourself over the segregation. Why do you call it compulsory? For you it would be an act of purest love on your part. You know 14 Romans. There Paul, himself not a vegetarian, says to his congregation, “If meat offend thy brother abstain from it.” I am quoting from memory, therefore the words may not be the same, but the substance is the same. You will segregate yourself not because you feel yourself impure in any sense of the term, but you will do so for the sake of your neighbours and for the sake of those women who believe in segregation from a right motive. I do not know that I have made my meaning sufficiently clear. The whole point is this. There are certain things not in themselves immoral which we do for the sake of others and there are certain other things which being in themselves immoral we will not and must not do for the sake of the whole world. If self-imposed segregation appears to you as immoral, you must not do it even to please me. If however there is nothing immoral in it, then you will do it for the sake of your neighbours whom you will rightly consider to be ignorant to that extent. In the theory of it I am wholly at one with you. For a virgin, there should be no segregation whatsoever. Monthly sickness is no sickness for her. And while it comes, she takes note of it and changes her occupation but not her mentality. And even for married women after the necessity for precaution is understood by them, ceremonial segregation should have no meaning. I think I told you that so far as I am concerned, I never respected the rule even with reference to Ba herself. And when I began to see things clearer, I never felt the call to have the rule observed. Radha and Rukhi certainly and all the other girls so far as I am aware do not observe it. Amina does not. Gomatibehn does and everybody respects her wishes even to the extent that when the women who do not observe it for themselves have the monthly sickness, they do not go near Gomatibehn. If then self-segregation appears to you to be a task, you need not observe it. But if you do not, you should observe it as a pleasurable duty for the sake of others and in any case, it is not now a matter of any practical value so far as you concerned; for, your next sickness probably does not come in Wardha at all. Or if it does, it is a question only of once whilst you are there. At Sabarmati nobody will want you to observe it. Amina does not observe it for anybody including Gomatibehn, nor is she expected to, much less will you be expected to observe it, even for Gomatibehn when she is there. So far as I know she has herself never asked anybody to observe it for her and in her presence. She is satisfied with the observance of it for herself. If the matter is still not clear you must continue to write and meanwhile to act as may seem proper to you.

---

1 The reference is to I Corinthians, viii. 13: “Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh, while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.”

Now about grammar and arithmetic. I understand and appreciate all you say. But, for the work in hand, a knowledge of figures and grammar as a science and as an aid to a knowledge of languages are necessary. You will therefore do both to the extent that you can tackle without feeling giddy. If you find that it is impossible for you take kindly to simple arithmetic and comparative grammar, we must do without it.

Andrews is coming here tomorrow. You must have known he arrived last week. If you have not already written to him, do please write now. Here is the further programme. But you will send your letters Care Sjt. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, Amjad Bagh, Luz, Mylapore, Madras, till I ask you to do otherwise.

I was weighed on Tuesday and my weight was lbs. 113\(\frac{1}{2}\). This is really very good. Up to now I have fared quite all right. It remains to be seen now how I shall take the Madras climate. It is almost like Bombay, a trifle hotter, but just as moist.

With love,

BAPU
452. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,
August 26, 1927

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

I had your telegram. I hope you got my reply. Your published statement\(^1\) is certainly an improvement on the original. But I cannot help thinking that it would have been better if you could have stayed your hand. But I fully recognize that you had no business to do so when the inner voice told you otherwise.

After having waited all these days, I felt that I should write just a brief thing for Young India. I send you a copy of the statement. If you think that I should not publish it, please wire. This letter should be in your hands at the latest on Monday. If I receive a wire from you disapproving of the statement, I shall cancel it. If the letter does not reach you before Tuesday, please wire direct to the Manager, Young India Office, Ahmedabad, asking him to withhold publication of the note. I am instructing the Manager not to publish the note if a countermanding wire is received from you. So much regarding the \(^1\) According to Ansari’s letter of August 12, he had “asked the Councillors to unite and to confess to themselves that they are co-operating in the Councils and not non-co-operating” (S.N. 12872).

---

publication of my opinion'.

Whether the note is published or not, I feel that the suggestion made in it is the only proper course for you to adopt, unless of course, you feel strongly that those who enter the Councils must take up office and otherwise adopt the policy adumbrated in your statement, and that if you accept the Presidentship, you must actively work to that end. I recognize that you cannot take up an impartial attitude, if you must become an avowed propagandist of your own policy.

Three or four days ago when I had a long telegram from Motilalji, I thought that in view of your statement, spontaneous retirement on your part was perhaps the best way of dealing with the difficult situation that had arisen. But I now feel that consistently with your views about the necessity of communal unity, you may not now retire. But I feel equally that if you are to make a Herculean effort for bringing about unity, you have to forget Council politics, adopt an attitude of absolute neutrality and act merely as an impartial chairman regulating proceedings of the Congress, All India Congress Committee, and the Working Committee, but not guiding or shaping the political programme and if you accept my suggestion, I think it would be necessary for you to make a very brief statement making it clear that whilst you adhere to the opinion expressed in your statement, you will not seek to impose that view upon the Congress but that you will confine your own activity solely to the promotion of communal unity.

Yours sincerely,

DR. M. A. ANSARI
1. DARYAGANJ, DELHI

From a photostat : S.N. 12874

---

1 This was not published.
2 Vide “Telegram to Motilal Nehru”, 24-8-1927.
453. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

KUMARA PARK, BANGALORE,

August 26, 1927

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I had your letter as also your telegram. To the latter I sent a reply¹ from Krishnagiri which I hope was duly received. Having been in the interior of Mysore and continuously touring, I am considerably in arrears.

I have at last decided to issue a small note on Dr. Ansari’s statement. Having championed his election I thought that I could not observe absolute silence. I shall watch the movement of the barometer and wherever I can do anything or write anything to purpose, I shall not hesitate.

So far I am not inclined to favour Jawaharlal’s election, that is, assuming that Dr. Ansari retires. It is highly probable that he will take up the attitude suggested by you and me and merely become an impartial chairman. Nothing more will then remain to be done. If, however, a fresh election does become necessary, I shall watch events and Reuter’s cable will inform you of the result. Please however send me your address in London so that I may write or cable in case of need. But I want you to leave India with a light heart, as I know you will do without any coaxing from me. Evidently we have not yet reached the freezing point.

I am fixed up in the South almost for the rest of the year. I send you herewith a copy of my programme up to the end of September though it will be safer probably to use the Sabarmati address from where telegrams are quickly repeated and letters as quickly redirected.

I hope you will have a nice time in Europe and return in time with Jawaharlal before the Congress week. You will please ask Indu whether she ever thinks of her old Indian friends and among them a frequent visitor to Anand Bhawan who would drink nothing but goat’s milk and will eat all the choicest fruits leaving none even for little children.

Yours sincerely,

PANDIT MOTILAL NEHRU

ALLAHABAD

¹ Vide “Telegram to Motilal Nehru”, 24-8-1927.
I am enclosing copy of my Young India notes. I have sent a copy to Dr. Ansari too for approval.

M. K. G.

From a photostat : S.N. 12875

454. PROBLEM OF CHILDREN OF MIXED UNIONS

An Indian living in the city of Mabuki in French Africa has written a painful letter, the substance of which is as follows:

There is a very large number of children of mixed unions in this country. Both Hindus and Muslims are responsible for their birth. Coming here for trade, they live with any Negro women whom they choose. They do not look after the children which are born to these women. The children grow up somehow. When the traders who contract such unions return to India, they leave behind these women and their issue, making no provision even for their maintenance. When a person like me tries to look after their maintenance and wishes to establish an institution for that purpose, no one helps him. Will you not kindly tell us what is my duty and that of other Indians like me towards these children of mixed unions? Do you believe that by supporting children born of sin we only encourage sin and, therefore, we owe no duty towards them? If you do, consider this: These children will certainly get someone or other to look after them; God will not let them perish helplessly. If that is so, will they not grow up to be our enemies, and if they do, can anyone blame them? Can it not be said, rather, that those who bring such progeny into the world and leave it uncared for, bring into existence the instruments of their own and their community’s destruction?

I have with my own eyes seen in Delagoa Bay and other cities the conditions described by this correspondent, and I have heard still more from clients and friends. There is no doubt that it is a painful state of affairs. Muslim friends display human feeling in such matters. Hindus become extremely hard-hearted in the name or under the pretext of religion. Muslims do not seem to consider it morally wrong to live with women professing other faiths than still form them. Thus they are not afraid of gratifying their desires but shrink from accepting responsibility for the consequences. They feel it pollution to have to live with their own progeny, so that in the end they hand over the children either to Muslims or to Christians or, likely enough, just run away without entrusting them to anyone or leaving a single pie for their maintenance. The Negroes of Africa are simple-minded and ignorant and, therefore, do not know what their rights are. This state will certainly not last for ever. Some of them are bound to get education; they will then fight with hatred in their hearts, tell the poor women of their rights, incite their children to fight for legitimate or illegitimate causes and, though they themselves observe no distinction between morality and immorality, will have the sympathy of the world on their side in their fight illustrating the law that, no matter how strong a person is, he will sooner or later meet his match.

There are many straightforward ways of preventing such a situation from arising. The best course, certainly, is that a trader who cannot observe self-control should take his wife with him. If he goes alone and forms a union with a Negro woman, he should behave decently, treat her with love and accept the responsibility of providing for the children which may be born to her. He should understand that, under the law, he is bound to provide for the maintenance both of the woman and her children. But a lustful and shameless man has no thought of right and wrong and no sense of what is due to others; he lives like a man bereft of his senses, intoxicated with lust. How is he, therefore, likely even to read such articles? Even if he reads them, he will certainly not heed them. Hence social reformers like this correspondent should consider what their duty is. I am afraid society will have no choice but to shoulder the burden of the consequences of sin so long as there are wicked men and women in it, just as it eagerly reaps the benefit of the virtue of virtuous men and women. There is no man or woman who is completely free from sin; we are all a band of sinners. But society condones the sins of those who observe a certain decency in their conduct and regards them as virtuous people, whereas it looks upon those who cross the bounds of that decency as wicked. Thus society’s definitions of the wicked and the virtuous are dictated by practical considerations. In God’s court, however, all of us will be treated as sinners and will be punished in accordance with the nature of our sins.

Being in such a sorrowful plight, society must shoulder the burden of children of mixed unions. Accordingly, reformers living in Africa have two courses open to them: one which seeks the help of courts and another which is independent of such help. They have a right to adopt both. The second course consists in a reformer seeking the help of other like-minded citizens and, without raising disputes about religion, establishing an institution to look after such progeny. If the fathers of the children desire to take charge of them and bring them up in their own faiths and if they are ready to pay the institution the expenses incurred on the children up to the day of their removal, the children should be handed over to them. Whenever the parents can be contacted, they should be requested to pay for the maintenance of the children and, if they refuse to pay though they have the means with which to pay, due legal steps should be taken against them. Side by side with this, efforts should also be made to bring about moral reform. If anyone who lives with a Negro woman is married and has a wife living in India, he should be persuaded to call her to Africa. But the friend who has written the letter says:

1Our countrymen do not wish to start any such institution. In my view, 75 per cent of the money earned in this land comes from immoral sources and, therefore, it is not spent on worthy causes. It is wasted in drinking or paying doctors’ bills or Government taxes, or in all three ways.

Even if this is a true picture of the state of affairs, I advise this friend to work patiently and quietly.

[From Gujarati]

_Navajivan_, 28-8-1927

455. WHO MAY TAKE ‘DIKSHA’?

In the Jawra State there is a married woman of the Oswal community named Gulabbai. She has got a pamphlet printed in Hindi and has distributed copies of it to people. It seems from it that her husband, who is still young, has left his house with the intention of taking _diksha_, and written as follows to his sixteen-year-old wife:

_The desire to take _diksha_ has grown upon me during the past two years or so. I have been trying my best to obtain the permission of family members. Even after coming here, I wrote five or six letters, but I have not received the permission. Now I have decided to take _diksha_ on my own responsibility._

This young man has a mother who is sixty years of age. In reply

---

1 _Initiation; vow of asceticism_ to my request for more particulars, the gentleman who sent me this pamphlet has given the following information. I translate the letter, which is in Hindi, into Gujarati:

Gulabbai has had ordinary education. She can read and write Hindi. A friend drafted for her the pamphlet which expresses her feelings as she described them to him, and she has got it printed. She herself went to the press, accompanied by her brother, and got it printed. The husband can read and write Hindi fairly well. Financially the family’s condition is difficult. No one has given him diksha so far.

I hope that no one will give diksha to this young man, and also that he himself will realize his duty. A Buddha or a Shankaracharya may take diksha at a young age, and his action will be admired by the people. If, however, every young man decides to follow the example of these great men, instead of shedding lustre on dharma and themselves they will disgrace both. When people take diksha in these days, we see nothing but cowardice in their action, and this is why even sadhus, instead of being men of light and power, are a majority of them weak and ignorant like us. Taking diksha is an act of courage, and it is the result either of very holy influences on a person in his or her previous life or wisdom born of experience in this life. A man who decides to take diksha without thinking of what will happen to his old mother and young wife should be so disinterested towards the world that the people round him cannot but see and understand his detachment. It does not seem that this young man who desires to take diksha is equipped for it in any such manner.

However, young men who feel very eager to take diksha, why should they not expand the meaning of the term diksha? In these times, we see few people who observe even the householder’s dharma properly. It requires no small measure of courage to live, while being a householder, as if one had taken diksha. The real test lies in living so. I know many who have taken diksha; they frankly admit that they have not overcome sloth nor subdued the five senses. By taking diksha, these people have only acquired better means of meeting their needs of food and clothing. To live with one’s family in poverty and meet its needs contentedly and preserving one’s purity, following truth, looking upon all women other than one’s wife as either a mother or a sister, to be moderate even in enjoying conjugal pleasure, to study scriptures and other holy books and to serve the country to the best of one’s ability—this is diksha of no mean order. Diksha means self-dedication. This is not achieved through outward show; it is a state of the mind and, though certain outward modes of living may be necessary to express it, they are valued only if they are true signs of inward purity and detachment. Without these, such outward modes are mere forms without life in them.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 28-8-1927

456. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

BANGALORE,
August 28, 1927

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I have no time today to write myself. I am dictating this letter while I am having my meal. After I sent the cable to you, I have not missed a single mail. Mr. Andrews is here. I shall write more by the next mail.

Sushila’s health must improve.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 4738

457. SPEECH TO VOLUNTEERS, BANGALORE

BANGALORE,
August 28, 1927

The prayer over, each came one by one and received at Gandhiji’s hands a copy of the Bhagavad Gita with his autograph. . . . There was considerable tremor in Gangadharrao’s voice as he interpreted the blessings sentence by sentence in Kannada.

It is not by accident that things happen in this world. Why should we have met at this particular hour [4 a.m.], and on this particular day, and why should the Gita of all other books have been selected to be presented to you? Why, too, should we have read the third chapter of the Gita on this occasion? It was not for you that we selected this chapter; today was the day on which we read the third chapter. But some agency conspired to combine all these things, and

1 From Mahadev Desai’s article, “The Leave-taking”
we will see that it has been all in the fitness of things. A true servant gets up before sunrise, performs his ablutions and starts the day with prayer. Take it that your life of service begins from this auspicious hour. The exclusive devotion that you bestowed on me was only an occasion for the larger life of service that you are entering today. And the Bhagavad Gita provides you with a Code of Conduct. Whenever you are in trouble, doubt, depression or despair, you will turn to the Code and the Compendium. And what can be a better inspiration for you than Chapter III that we read this morning? It lays down that God created man, and at the same time imposed on him the duty of yajna or sacrifice. Both these words are derived from roots meaning that which purifies, and the Lord also said that “by sacrifice shall you propagate your kind”. Sacrifice thus means service, and the Gita says that he who works only for himself is a thief. “Sacrifice ye for the gods, and pleased they will give you the reward of your sacrifice”, says the Gita. To proceed a little further, sacrifice means laying down one’s life so that others may live. Let us suffer, so that others may be happy and the highest service and the highest love is wherein man lays down his life for his fellows. That highest love is thus ahimsa which is the highest service. There is an eternal struggle between life and death, but the sum-total of life and death does not mean extinction but life. For life persists in spite of death. We have an ocular demonstration, positive proof of the unquestioned sovereignty of ahimsa, and this triumph of ahimsa is possible through sacrifice. There is thus no higher law than the law of yajna, the law of service, which is the law for the volunteer. Even for those whom you love most, even for me, you may not hate anyone else. If you do, it will not be love or service, but infatuation. If you have served me out of infatuation, this service will not be of avail. But I know you have not done so. You did not know me except by hearsay. You had never seen me, and you have during these four months never even come near me to receive a word of thanks from me. Yours was genuine selfless service. And let this service be to you an incentive to serve the cause I have been serving—the cause of Daridranarayana. And as I read in today’s chapter a clear indication that the spinning-wheel affords us in India the highest instrument of universal service, I have placed the spinning-wheel before the country, and whenever your interest in the wheel flags you will turn to the Gita and replenish your faith. I know none of you, but I know full well the service you have rendered. It is not for me to reward you for it, it is beyond my power, and it is well that it is so. God alone can give the reward, and it is His covenant that He always rewards service truly and selflessly rendered.

Young India, 8-9-1927

458. SPEECH AT OPENING OF GYMNASIUM, BANGALORE

August 28, 1927

FRIENDS,

I feel grateful for the opportunity you have given me for performing this auspicious ceremony of opening your gymnasium. I am also thankful to the donor of the gift to you. He has chosen the right expression to his desire of keeping alive the memory of his son by giving you this gymnasium. That only shows he is anxious that the youth of the country should become strong and healthy. I know that in a land where engineers like Sir M. Vishveshvarayya had come forth to serve the motherland there would be engineers like Mr. Venkatasubba Rao to come forward to build this gymnasium. You know very well that just as the intellect requires exercise and development the body also requires exercise. But only a few have realized this and many giant intellects go about the country in enfeebled bodies. It does not appear to me that this is the right way of education. It is not right that they should neglect their bodies. It gives me much pleasure that you are alive to this necessity of affording your young men physical exercise. I have known your young men serving in the cause of khadi and I am glad they know of the importance of physical exercise. I am also glad that as you are trying to exercise your intellect outside your schools, you would be trying to give your bodies sufficient exercise in service outside your gymnasium. I hope that every one of you educationalists in your home would pay particular attention to this. I hope also that you would devote attention to physical exercise for your girls. Lastly I should like to remind you that walking daily in the morning hours is one of the good exercises you might adopt.

Before I declare the gymnasium open I should like to remind you also of the necessity of developing your spiritual side as you are going to develop your physical bodies. You know that in this gymnasium you are going to perform your physical exercises where Sri Hanuman is presiding and that under his direction you are going to develop your bodies. But the bodily strength of Sri Hanuman is only a second thing. The first is his spiritual strength, the great strength that he possesses on account of his brahmacharya. I hope you will remember this great spiritual strength that comes from brahmacharya. Have that vrata and may God bless you to develop into strong spiritual and physical sons and daughters of your motherland.

1 Shri Krishnaswami Vyayama Shala at National High School

The Hindu, 29-8-1927

459. SPEECH AT TEXTILE LABOUR UNION, BANGALORE

August 28, 1927

FRIENDS,

You have given me addresses and a purse and I am thankful. I know of your difficulties, particularly in meeting here today and I am sorry that many of your Union members could not be present. But I know also that though many of you could not be present you have told them all of my work and the purpose for which I am in your midst. You have said in your address that you have given up drinking. That means you have realized the importance of your lives, that you have recognized the value of your relationship with your family, your country and your duty. In expressing my gratification at this I must ask you to leave the other evil habits like gambling, etc. You can do so only if you utilize the time in your improvement, and in educating yourselves. For, you must realize your duties and your rights as mill-workers and you can do so only by educating yourselves. Do not forget this as you will not forget your future or your ambitions, as labourers among your employers. For this you must cultivate good habits. You must rise early and pray to God for strength. You must know that this blessing is necessary and this could not be had by evil habits. You have given me a purse and it means to me that you realize there are many many poorer brethren than you. If so I only ask you to help these poor brothers and sisters of yours, to take the cloth spun and woven by them. If you wear khadi you will be really helping them. You could help them still more if you spin yourselves and make your relatives at home spin more. I can tell you that the workers in our place, Ahmedabad, are doing this and are helping in this great task. You can also understand that in the days of your strikes you cannot do better than spin and earn your living. This is an important thing and I ask you to remember this. Before I take leave of you, workmen, I have one word to tell you. It is usually said that morals among workers are not very high or strict. I want every one of you to realize and hold every woman other than your wives as your own mothers and sisters. You must be morally very strong for therein lies your destiny. I hope you will not forget this. May God bless you with wisdom and strength.

1 Of Binny Mills

470 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

The Hindu, 29-8-1927

460. SPEECH TO ADI KARNATAKAS, BANGALORE

August 28, 1927

Soon after the function at the Labour Union was over, Mahatmaji and party motored to the Adi Karnataka Colony on the New Mysore Road. Many hundreds of Adi Karnatakas has assembled to receive Mahatmaji, many of them being women. They entertained the distinguished visitors with a few simple songs after which Mahatmaji said:

"ADI KARNATAKA" FRIENDS,

I am pleased to see you all today and I want to tell you two things. You should not eat flesh and you should not kill cows. This is against your dharma, the Hindu dharma and you are all Hindus. If you tell me you have got to carry on your trade in leather, then I ask you to do that using leather of only dead animals. Do not drink and commit sins. Wear khaddar and save your poor sisters and brothers. Do not forget this.

The Hindu, 29-8-1927

461. SPEECH AT CITIZENS’ MEETING, BANGALORE

August 28, 1927

FRIENDS,

I am unable to raise my voice and therefore I request you to keep silent. For the last five months I have been staying here recouping my health but I am still not able to raise my voice sufficiently high. Friends, you have given me several addresses this evening and I thank you all and I thank you for the help you have all given me. I can never forget your manifold kindness and I pray God to bless you all. Friends, you know after all I am a servant and I have to say very little. What I have to say to you this evening I have written it down for you to know. Of course it is in English, but let me tell you that using this medium of communication is not a thing to be proud of. I would rather you all knew Hindi, and that I had written it in Hindi, but I do not know when that time is going to come to us.

---

1 At Lal Bagh

From His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore and his officials down to the people at the lowest rung of the ladder you have by the wonderful and unmerited affection bestowed upon me so closely bound me to you that to say thank you for the addresses and the purse that you have given me today seems to be a cold, almost insulting, formality. Though to the great benefit of my health I have stayed in your midst for over four months, your affection makes it difficult for me to be reconciled to the impending separation from you. The only return that is within my power to make to the Maharaja Saheb and you, his people, for the kind hospitality extended to me when I was so much in need of it is to make you co-sharers of my innermost thoughts about the well-being of this beautiful State.

It has done my soul good to watch the wonderful progress you have made in many directions. I have seen your educational institutions in Bangalore as well as in many other places that I was privileged to visit. I have seen the institutes specially designed for Adi Karnatakas. I have understood somewhat the workings of your Municipal administration. I saw with wonder and admiration Krishna- rajasagar and the Bhadravati Iron Works, the two great monuments of Sir M. Vishveshvarayya’s zeal and skill. (Cheers) I saw by deputy, for want of time, also Sivasamudram. These great undertakings have an undoubted place in your march towards economic progress. Wherever I have gone I have noticed cordial relations between the officials and the people. You have no Hindu-Muslim quarrels. You are unaffected by the misdoings in the North. I tender His Highness the Maharaja and you my hearty congratulations upon all these good things and many others that I could relate. And I consider it to have been my good fortune that I happened to be in this fair land at the time of the celebration of the Silver Jubilee of the beneficent rule of the Maharaja to share your rejoicings and to witness the manifestation of genuine regard shown by the people for His Highness.

But great though this progress is, it would be wrong to be satisfied with it. It seems to me to be confined to the middle class and not to take enough note of the peasantry, the backbone of Mysore as it is of the rest of India. The purses given to me everywhere for khadi demonstrate the faith of the citizens of Mysore in the message of the spinning-wheel and khadi. My wanderings in the different parts of Mysore have convinced me that it has a big future if the State and the people work out the spinning-wheel in a scientific spirit. I assure you, it requires a detailed organization and expert knowledge no less than the building and working of the great undertakings like the Bhadravati Iron Works; the difference is only that of degree. And even as the latter must fall to pieces if they do not receive skilled and vigilant attention, so must the spinning movement fall to pieces if it is not backed by expert knowledge and ceaseless effort. Do not let this great movement die for want of skilled and careful nursing. Hand-spinning raises the income of the peasantry by at least 20 per cent with an outlay which would be considered ridiculous compared to what has been required for some of the great enterprises, which are naturally the pride of Mysore. If you universalize the spinning-wheel, the benefit filtrates at a bound down to the poorest peasants. It creates an indissoluble bond between them and you, and it gives an honourable occupation to the peasantry during their leisure time which is estimated to be at least four months during the year. And it is a matter of great joy to me to find that the Department of Industries and the Co-operative Department are putting forth their effort in this direction. For, there is no industry greater than this and no co-operative effort complete without the organization of the spinning-wheel and all it means. And every one of you can extend your co-operation to the villagers if you will but use khadi for your clothing material.

But the spinning-wheel though it is the centre of rural prosperity is not all. If our cattle become an economic drag upon us, we cannot live. I do not know whether you have all noted the noble appeal made by His Highness the Maharaja in his reply to the jubilee address on behalf of the dumb creation. Let me reproduce the beautiful words:

I pray that a similar spirit (of brotherhood) may extend itself to the dumb creation and that we may see animals, and especially those we hold sacred, treated with ever increasing consideration for feelings which they cannot express.

I read in this passage a delicately expressed wish that His...
Highness’s Mussalman, Christian and Adi Karnataka subjects should voluntarily protect the cow and her progeny from destruction. But in my humble opinion this question of cattle protection is not to be solved without hard thinking and harder labour. I feel convinced that it is possible to make cow-slaughter an economically unsound proposition. Today it is undoubtedly an economically sound proposition. This is an evil which no private agency can fully cope with. It is pre-eminently a matter for the State. It requires education of the people, in cattle-breeding, dairying and selection of breeding bulls. In my humble opinion, it is the duty of the State to protect the cattle-wealth of the country by a firm and enlightened treatment of the whole subject. I hold it to be one of the primary concerns of a State to see that its children and its people are provided with wholesome, cheap milk. I entirely associate myself with the remark made by Blatchford that the price and quality of milk should be standardized as much as are those of postage stamps. I do not suppose that many of you know what happens to the hide of dead cattle of Mysore. If you study the question as I have done, you will have many a painful revelation. Is it not a matter for shame that our foot-wear should be made of slaughtered hide and our dead-cattle hide should be exported from India to the tune, as I am told, of nine crores per year? Here there is work for an army of trained chemists to give the art of tanning its proper and legitimate status to the profit of themselves and the country. Again, only the State can deal with this very important branch of the cattle question.

But I must hurry forward to the next point to which I want to draw your attention. And here too I fall back upon the Maharaja’s utterance. Here are his words:

I pray that we may all be assisted in years to come to work together in a spirit of brotherhood for the same good end, so that with efficient administration, increased facilities for agriculture, industry and commerce, and equal opportunities for all, we may devote our common energies to raising Mysore to a level with the foremost countries of the world. It is my earnest desire that this spirit of brotherhood should be extended to the continuous improvement of the conditions of those who are less fortunate than ourselves, remembering that all communities alike are members of my people and children of our country.

The State cannot enforce brotherhood if the people don’t believe in it. I was pained, as was the revered Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviyaji, to learn that there were in this State erudite Sanskrit Pundits who will not teach the Vedas to Adi Karnatakas and who uphold the doctrine of inherent untouchability. If I could be convinced that untouchability, as we believe it today, is an integral part of Hinduism, I should not think twice before renouncing Hinduism. But I venture to state before my Hindu bretheren that though I have endeavoured, in my humble way, to understand Hinduism and live up to the letter and the spirit of it, I have found no warrant in it for the curse of untouchability. We sin before God and man to consider a single human being as untouchable because he is born under particular surroundings.

Closely allied with the question of untouchability is that of drink. The curse of drink could be driven out of this fair land if only the so-called higher classes would brother the so-called low classes. But here again, I know to my cost, having worked in the cause of prohibition for years, that without State aid much is not possible. Ignorant poor people will drink if drink is made accessible to them. If there is any spot on earth where total prohibition is easy of accomplishment, it is India, for the simple reason that the drink habit, thank God, has not yet acquired any respectability. It is still considered to be a degrading habit. I have met in my tours thousands of Adi Karnatakas. I met a party of Lambanis, I put them straight questions. There was not one hand raised in defence of drink, and the vast majority have undertaken to abjure both beef and drink. May God give them strength to keep their promise. But I urge you and the State to help them. Difficulties there are in the way, but man is made to face, battle with and conquer them.

Lastly, let me plead for child widows and child wives. They are also unhappily for us and to our shame made part of dumb creation. Our enlightenment or education will be counted as dust if this infamy is not removed wherever it may exist. Here is work for your Civic and Social Progress Association.

You will not consider me to be ungrateful for having invited your attention to what I think should be done in order to make Mysore a real model State so as to entitle it to be called Ramarajya. It is not as if the shortcomings to which I have drawn attention do not exist in other parts of India. Alas, they do exist and some of them perhaps in an intenser form than here. But it has been my privilege to notice greater progress in Mysore than elsewhere in many things, and it has therefore created a desire for still greater.

More is expected of those who give much. I have found so much good in this State that I almost fancy that if you and the Maharaja together will it, you can make this State Ramrajya.

_The Hindu_, 29-8-1927

462. FAREWELL SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, BANGALORE

_August 28, 1927_

After the meeting\(^1\) was the prayer which had become an institution during our stay at Kumara Park. The last day’s meeting was a treasurable experience for the presence of Mr. Andrews, and the Bjerrums who sang “When I survey the wondrous Cross”, which Gandhiji said transported him to Pretoria where he heard the wonderful hymn sung for the first time, and also for the parting talk that Gandhiji gave to the congregation. “How many of you have been coming here regularly?” asked Gandhiji, and most of them raised their hands.

I am glad you have been coming. For me it has been both a joy, and a privilege, inasmuch as I have felt its elevating influence. I ask you to keep it up. You may not know the verses, you may not know Sanskrit and the hymns, but Ramanama is there for all, the heritage handed down from ages. And I tell you why I ask you to continue this congregational prayer. Man is both an individual and a social being. As an individual he may have his prayer during all the waking hours, but as a member of society he has to join in the congregational prayer. I for one may tell you that when I am alone I do have my prayer, but I do feel very lonely without a congregation to share the prayer with me. I knew and even now know very few of you, but the fact that I had the evening prayers with you was enough for me. Among the many memories that will abide in my heart after I leave Bangalore, not the least will be the prayer meetings. But I shall have my congregation at the next place I reach, and forget the wrench. For one who accepts the brotherhood of man and fatherhood of God should find a congregation wherever he goes, and he may not hug or nurse the feeling of parting or separation. Please therefore keep up the prayer. You can form your own congregation in your own places, and as a last resource one’s family can become one’s congregation.

---

\(^1\) From Mahadev Desai’s article, “The Leave-taking”

\(^2\) _Vide_ the preceding item.
well enough. Do meet every evening at this hour, learn a few hymns, learn the Gītā, do the best and the most you can for the purpose of self-purification.

Young India, 8-9-1927

463. TELEGRAM TO NON-BRAHMIN CONFERENCE ¹

BANGALORE,

[On or before August 29, 1927]

JUST READ LETTER. NON-BRAHMINS SHOULD CERTAINLY JOIN THE CONGRESS IN A SPIRIT OF SERVICE AND GOODWILL.

The Bombay Chronicle, 30-8-1927

464. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 29, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letters.

I read your message to Andrews. And we had a hearty laugh over his not understanding the word स्वर. To him it meant a Bengali sweet.

You will certainly have the three days all to yourself when you return to Sabarmati and the other times you want. You will confer with Maganlal and arrange your hours as may seem best. Only you must go slow and leave margin between periods especially in the initial stages.

You must have got my dictated letter² about segregation. Please do not give me up but tackle me again and again till you fully understand my meaning. And then too do not as I like but as you like.

Are you talking to Krishnadas in Hindi? I have not told you that your Hindi has been comparatively free from errors. The few I detect, I get no time to correct.

Andrews leaves with me tomorrow but he goes to Madras

¹ Released by the Associated Press of India under the date-line “Bombay, August 29”. The Secretary of the Special Non-Brahmin Provincial Conference sent on the 29th the following reply: “Thankful for your advice. We join Congress to Non-Brahminize and thus democratize it.”

dropping me at Vellore. I wonder if you ever got your beautiful map back!

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5265. Courtesy: Mirabehn

465. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day, Bhadarwa Sud 2 [August 29, 1927]¹

SISTERS,

I have your letter drafted by Ramaniklalbhai.

You have not caught my point. There were several things implied in my letter. It is always so in letters. If they were all made explicit, this is what it would come to:

When we are engaged in a particular task, we should not think of other fields of service so long as they are not urgent. If we do, it must be regarded as moha². Here I am doing a necessary piece of service as well as a sick man can do it. If at such a time I thought of Gujarat flood relief or of the Ashram problems and how I would solve them if I were there, it would be moha. If you were in such a condition, it would be true of you too. There is no question of one’s being great or small. You are engaged there in doing service in your own way. Suppose I fall ill, very ill, or suppose there were floods here, as heavy as those in Gujarat, it would be madness for you to entertain a needless thought (of running down here), even though you are not considered as wise as I. That would not mean that you would have no feeling or sympathy for me or for the sufferers in the Madras floods. Sympathy there will be and must be, in which your feeling for others finds expression. But if you become restless about it, it is moha, and should be avoided. It is of course a different question to decide when it becomes one’s dharma to rush to the help of another at the sacrifice of one’s own duty. To do flood relief work, most of the members left the Ashram. That was clearly our duty. And yet, for those who could not go, there was no need to feel restless. Ask me if you still do not understand what I say.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3666

¹ The year is inferred from the reference to Gujarat floods.
² Infatuation
466. INTERVIEW TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

BANGALORE,
August 29, 1927

Mahatma Gandhi, interviewed, by an Associated Press representative regarding the Viceroy’s proposal to convene a conference, said that he was not over-enthusiastic about the official initiative in solving the Hindu-Muslim question but welcomed co-operation from any quarter in this matter.

The Tribune, 31-8-1927

467. LETTER TO SUMATI MORARJI

Bhadarva Sud 3 [Tuesday August 30, 1927]

CHI. SUMATI,

I am very happy to learn that you are ordering the Navajivan specially for yourself and that you have taken down the spinning-wheel from the loft and have started plying it. There is no need to tell you that it is very advantageous to do regularly whatever we do. The spinning-wheel may not arouse any interest. But if you ply it with the knowledge that it is for the sake of the poor, then it is bound to interest you. How can anyone who has pity in his heart help being interested in it?

Read Navajivan carefully. Do write to me if you have any doubts or questions.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: G. N. 1347

---

1. Released from Bangalore on this date, which was Monday.
2. From the contents, it appears that this letter was written earlier than the letter of May 13, 1928 to Shantikumar Morarji, addressee’s husband. Bhadarva Sud 3 in that year fell on Monday and corresponded to September 17, which cannot be accepted for the reason given above. In the year 1927 it fell on a Tuesday and corresponded to this date.
MR. PRINCIPAL, STUDENTS AND FRIENDS,\(^1\)

At the outset I would like to express my very deep sorrow over the domestic affliction\(^2\) that has befallen your Principal. I heard of it as soon as I reached here. I appreciate, Mr. Principal, the very courteous consideration that you have shown by not merely allowing this function to take place under your roof but also, in spite of your overwhelming grief, gracing this function by your presence and presiding at it. I ask you to regard me as a partner in your grief.

I thank all the students and others for the address that has been presented to me this afternoon and the purse for the Khadi Fund. This demonstration of your personal affection for me and your identification with the poorest of the land does not surprise me now, because it has become a common feature wherever I go throughout the length and breadth of our beautiful country. It has been a matter of the greatest joy to me and consolation in the face of many difficulties to find that the student world throughout India has a warm corner for me in their heart. The students have lightened my burden to a very great extent. But I cannot suppress from me the feeling that in spite of this personal affection that the students have shown to me everywhere and even identification with the poorest of the land, the students have yet to cover a vast amount of ground. For, you are the hope of the future. You will be called upon, when you are discharged from your colleges and schools, to enter upon public life to lead the poor people of this country. I would, therefore, like you, students, to have a sense of your responsibility and show it in a much more tangible manner. It is a remarkable fact and a regrettable fact that in the case of the vast majority of students, whilst they entertain noble impulses during their student days, they disappear when they finish their studies. The vast majority of them look out for loaves and fishes. Surely, there is something wrong in this. There is one reason which is obvious. Every educationist, everyone who has had anything to do

\(^1\) This appeared under the title “What Students Can Do?” and with the introductory words: “The following is a verbatim report of Gandhiji’s address to the students of Vellore.”

\(^2\) From The Hindu, 2-9-1927

\(^3\) ibid.

\(^4\) De Boer, the Principal of Voorhee’s College, had lost his child.
with the students has realized that our educational system is faulty. It does not correspond to the requirements of the country, certainly not to the requirements of pauper India. There is no correspondence between the education that is given and the home life and the village life. But that is I fear a larger question than you and I can deal with in a meeting of this character.

Taking things as they are, we have to consider what is possible for the students to do and what more can we do in order to serve the country. The answer that has come to me and to many, who are eager to see that the student world gives a good account of itself, is that the students have to search within and look after their personal character.
Purity of personal life is the one indispensable condition for building a sound education. And my meetings with thousands of students and the correspondence which I continuously have with the students in which they pour out their innermost feelings and take me into their confidence show me quite clearly that there is much left to be desired.
I am sure that all of you understand thoroughly what I mean. In our languages, there is a beautiful word, equivalent for the word student, that is, brahmachari. Vidyarthi is a coined word and a poor equivalent for brahmachari. And I hope you know what the word brahmachari means. It means searcher after God, one who conducts himself so as to bring himself nearest to God in the least possible time. And all the great religions of the world, however much they may differ, are absolutely one on this fundamental thing that no man or woman with an impure heart can possibly appear before the Great White Throne.
All our learning or recitation of the Vedas, correct knowledge of Sanskrit, Latin, Greek and what not will avail us nothing if they do not enable us to cultivate absolute purity of heart. The end of all knowledge must be building up of character.

An English friend in Shimoga, whom I did not know before, came up to me and asked me why it was, if India was really a spiritually advanced country, he did not observe in the students a real yearning after knowledge of God, why was it that the students, many of them, did not even know what the Bhagavad Gita was1. I gave what appeared to me an honest explanation and excuse for this discovery of his. But I do not propose to give that explanation to you nor seek to excuse this very great and grave defect. The very first and earnest request that I would make to the students before me here is that each

1 Vide “Students and the Gita”, 25-8-1927.
one of you should search within and wherever you find that my remarks are justified you will begin to reform and rebuild yourself, and those of you who are Hindus, and the vast majority are Hindus I know, will endeavour to understand the very simple, beautiful, and to me soulful message of the Gita. The experience, and I think I can say the experience without a single exception, of those who have really carried on this search after truth to render their hearts pure is that it is an utterly impossible effort, unless it is accompanied by a heart prayer to the Almighty. Whatever, therefore, we do, do not lose faith in God. I cannot reason out the thing for you, because really speaking, it is a fact which transcends reason. But I want you to cultivate a spirit of real humility and not summarily reject the experiences of so many teachers, rishis and others of the world and not regard them as so many superstitious men. And if you will but do this, all the rest that I want to say will be as clear as crystal to you. This will be to me the test of your sincerity of profession. If you have real faith in God, you cannot but feel for the humblest of His creation. And whether it is the spinning-wheel and khadi, or untouchability, total prohibition, or social reform in connection with child widows and child wives and many other similar things, you will find that all these activities are derived from the same source. I was therefore glad to find that you sympathize with and approve of the spinning movement, the struggle against untouchability and other things with which I am identified. I accept your assurance that henceforth you will do better in regard to khadi.

It is really the easiest thing in the world for you to make your choice once for all and say to yourself that you shall use henceforth nothing but khadi since it puts a few coppers into the pockets of those who need them most. In this one institution alone, I understand, you are more than 1,400. Just think what the 1,400 by giving only half an hour to spinning can add materially to the wealth of the country. Think also what 1,400 can do on behalf of the so-called untouchables, and if all the 1,400 young men were to make a solemn resolve, and they can do so, that they are not going to have anything whatsoever to do with child wives, imagine what a great reform you will make in society around you. If the 1,400 amongst you, or a respectable number even, devote your leisure hours or part of your Sundays to going amidst those who are given to drink and in the kindliest manner possible steal into their hearts, imagine what service you will render to them and to the country. All these things you can do in spite of the existing faulty education. Nor do you require much effort for doing these things except that you have got to change your heart, and to use a current expression in the political world, alter the “angle of vision”.

And I want you to turn this occasion to advantage, and you will do so if only you will consider the solemn circumstance under which we have met this evening and by reference to which I started my address. A mere man of the world would be justified, and he will be justified by the world, if he excused himself from attending a function of this character on account of domestic affliction. Surely there is something noble and majestic when a man instead of brooding over such sorrows, transmutes them into service for God and humanity. Every such act enables us to understand the essential oneness of humanity. May God enable you to understand the words that I have spoken to you. I thank you once more for your address and the purse and all that you have said.

Young India, 8-9-1927

469. LETTER TO T. R. MAHADEVA IYER

CAMP VELLORE,
August 31, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I can only repeat what I have said, that in my opinion it is better for you to give up possession. You will be morally in the right in giving up possession right, if those who feel are of your opinion are duly informed before you give up possession. Not to give notice and remain in possession is, in my opinion, indefensible. So far as I have been able to understand the intentions of the Committee, they are averse to going to arbitration on matters about which they have no moral qualms and no legal difficulty.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm : S.N. 12941
MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I thank you for the addresses and the purse containing Rs. 2,001 and odd. It is really with Vellore that the khadi tour in Tamil Nadu commences. Last week I went to Krishnagiri\(^1\) and Hosur which are also in the Tamil province; but that may pass as part of the Mysore programme. Coming to Vellore, I am reminded of my first visit to this place accompanied by Maulana Shaukat Ali. And when I cast back my memory upon those times and now look at this assembly today, I cannot help feeling sad—sad not because you have in any way misbehaved yourselves but because of what is going on in the North. As a matter of fact my sadness is considerably reduced when I, on enquiry, discover that in your midst at any rate you have no such quarrels as are going on there, to disturb the even tenor of your life. My irrepressible optimism is strengthened by living in your midst and discovering that you stand untouched and unruffled by the misdoings of our countrymen in the North. For my hope will last as long as my faith in God lasts and even though Hindus and Mussalmans all over India were to fly at one another’s throats, which God forbid, I hope that I shall still have the same strength that I possess today to declare in my own person that the day is coming when Hindus and Mussalmans will stand shoulder to shoulder, fight for their country’s freedom and remain united for ever as brothers. I want you people of Vellore, men and women, to share that faith with me. I have no doubt that posterity will laugh at our barbarity and ask themselves how foolish and how mad we must have been that in the name God we should cut each other to pieces. But as you know I hold of equal importance with Hindu-Muslim unity the question of khaddar and the spinning-wheel. To spin for the sake of Daridranarayana and to use nothing but khadi for the same reason is as much an act of pleasing God as it is that Hindus and Mussalmans should remain united together. Just as Hindu-Muslim unity binds the two together so does the thread that is spun on the spinning-wheel bind the millions of paupers of India to us, the middle class. At the present moment it is true that we do not cut their throats but it is equally true that in a sense

\(^{1}\) At Gandhi Maidan. C. Rajagopalachari translated the speech into Tamil.

\(^{2}\) Vide “Speech at Krishnagiri”, 24-8-1927.
we suck from the villagers their very life-blood. We are both directly and indirectly responsible for sucking the life-blood from the villagers. It is we the middle class people who are responsible for the condition of perpetual starvation to which the villagers have been reduced today. As traders we are directly responsible for that condition because instead of trading in the cloth manufactured by their sacred hands we worshipped Moloch, soiled our fingers with foreign goods and began to sell foreign cloth. I regard this as an act of treachery against those starving voiceless millions. And the rest of the middle classes are indirectly responsible for that starvation because they did not resist their temptation of buying the flimsy cloth that our neighbours offered to them in lieu of our own sacred cloth. And your purse I regard as but a slight token of your desire for repentance for the sins that we have committed. But I assure you that the penance will not be complete till all the traders have retraced their steps, given up trading in foreign cloth and they as well as others have taken to khaddar, however coarse it may be, and however expensive it may be. Real repentance counts no sacrifice too much. And how I wish that while leaving this the first place of my tour in Tamil Nadu I could go with the confidence that you have got the same sense of sorrow and grief for our starving countrymen and women and have the same consciousness of our sins towards them that I have. My remarks are as much applicable to the sisters to my right as they are to the men in front of me and my left. You the women of Vellore will not deserve to be daughters of the same land that was hallowed by the sacred feet of Sita. We men and women of India take the sacred name of Sita as among the seven satiś early in the morning. If we do not follow the simplicity and the purity of Sita, what right have we got to take her name? It should be just as natural to us to wear khaddar produced in our villages as it is, thank God, for us to cook our own food and eat it in preference to the richest dishes that may be cooked in hotels and offered free of charge.

I attach the same importance to the question of untouchability. We Hindus are staking our religion and our reputation so long as we continue to regard a single human being as untouchable by birth. As human beings they have as much right to enter our temples, to send their children to our schools and to help themselves with the same water from the same tanks which we use. I hope that if there is in this audience anyone who still hugs the belief in untouchability, he or she will revise that belief and understand there is no warrant whatsoever.
for the curse in Hinduism.

Of equal importance, or almost equal importance, is the question of drink. I said almost equal importance not because the question of temperance is by itself of less importance to the man who has got to give it up, but because it affects a smaller number of people than untouchability. Those of us who are not given to the habit of drinking should not be satisfied so long as there is a single neighbour who is prey to that evil. You should devise and adopt all the gentle means that may be at our disposal to wean our falling brethren from their bad habit. If I were you I would not be satisfied till there is total prohibition in the land. If I were you, I would make the position of the Minister intolerable so long as he does not take up this question seriously and in right earnest.

I must not take up more of your time now. We have some work before us. You have given me this beautiful casket. I have received those silver plates presented to me with the addresses of the District Board and Municipality. It is now known all over India that I have nowhere to keep such plates and caskets in and that by my vow I am debarred from owning any possession on this earth. I regard these articles as having been given to me in order to enable me to auction them in your presence and to get what more money I can for Daridranarayana. They will therefore be put before you for auction, and I hope that those of you who can afford it will try to outbid one another. But all may not have come with enough money to take part in the bidding. For them there is another course. I know that all men and women present at this meeting have not contributed to this purse. It is possible that some of you who have contributed have not given to the best of your ability. In order to give you an opportunity to give anything you may wish to, at this meeting, volunteers would presently go in your midst to make collections. I hope that those of you who can and believe in spinning and khaddar will not spare yourselves in giving. Sisters all over India are in the habit of giving their jewellery also. I want all those who can to give for the sake of Daridranarayana. A pie given with a willing heart is just as welcome as the gold mohur. I thank you once more for your gift and for your addresses.

The Hindu, 2-9-1927
471. IS IT MARRIAGE?

I give the following from a letter received by me while I was hardly able to attend to any correspondence, that is, during the first days of my recent illness. I have omitted the names of parties though the correspondent gives every detail.

During this marriage season there has been a heart-breaking marriage ceremony at Sadashivgad, Karwar. The bride is about 12 years and comes from a very poor family from Goa. The bridegroom is 60 years old. His first wife died about three years ago, leaving two children behind her out of eight or nine. The bridegroom is the founder of an English school. Last year he tried to secure a bride of tender age, but owing to the agitation in his community, the transaction was abandoned. This year he succeeded by offering rupees two hundred to the parents of the bride. What is to be done in the matter? Men like—1 who are social reformers of the place do not raise their little finger against this inhuman act.

There seems to me to be no reason to doubt the accuracy of the statement made in the letter from which I have given the foregoing condensation. I wish it were possible to say that this is only a rare instance. Instances of this character occur often enough to call for a drastic remedy. One remedy is undoubtedly to publish every such case and expose it and create a healthy strong public opinion against repetition of such crimes against womanhood. But local agitation whenever such immoral alliances are impending is no doubt the most effective. According to this correspondent, the first attempt on the part of this old progenitor of eight children was frustrated because of timely agitation. I wonder why such an agitation did not take place in the present instance. Surely many people in the locality must have known about the attempt to secure possession of a girl of tender age for the old widower. I wonder why agitation was not set on foot immediately to save the girl from a life of torture and misery. But in my opinion, if local public opinion can be mobilized it is not too late even now to help the girl wife. I gather from the correspondent’s letter that the widower seems to have been a kind of a philanthropist at one time. May he not be persuaded to put the girl away from him at the Seva Sadan or some such institution for education, and then, when she is of full age, be given the choice either of living with him or regarding the marriage bond as a nullity? But whether in the present moribund condition of society such a step is possible or not, there is no reason why young men of undoubted character should not form themselves into bands of mercy pledged by all just and legitimate means to prevent child marriage and to promote wherever possible remarriage of child widows. The two things appear to me to go hand in hand. These bands of mercy to be able to do effective work must localize their activity. They will find then that in the course of a few years, they would become an irresistible force. The majority of our towns have after all a very small population each, and it is not impossible to know when immoral bargains such as the correspondent has drawn attention to are contemplated, or to know the child widows of their respective towns. There is no doubt however that a great deal of tact and exemplary self-restraint will have to be exercised by these bands of mercy. The slightest impatience or violence on their part will cause revulsion against them and frustrate the very object they have in view.

1 As in the source

Young India, 1-9-1927

472. LEST WE FORGET

There is some danger of the calamities of Orissa and Sind being forgotten in the midst of the universal attention that the Gujarat floods have attracted. Probably the distress is more felt in Sind than in Gujarat and the most felt in Orissa, for it is the least organized and the poorest of our provinces. Gujarat has produced an army of workers whose numbers are already proving embarrassing to Sjt. Vallabhbhai. After all everywhere it is the merchant class that is freest with its purse and most able to organize relief in times of distress. Let those Gujaratis, who are not wanted for work in Gujarat, or who can be spared, turn their attention to the places where help may be most needed. The distress of Gujarat must not blind the Gujaratis to the need of the other provinces. The present distress must be utilized to make us less provincial and more national. We must feel one with the least and the remotest of the thirty crores of God’s creatures who inhabit this land.

Young India, 1-9-1927
473. TRUE ‘SHRADDHA’

A friend sends from Rangoon rupees twenty-five as donation for the propaganda of the spinning-wheel and writes:

My father died on the 18th April 1927 at Tanjore (South India) while I was there on a short leave. When I was confronted with the question of “Sixteenth Day Ceremony”, a slavish, meaningless imitation of shraddha, I resolutely refused to abide by the desire of my relatives simply because I have no belief in it as it prevails today. I do not believe in a departed soul waiting in Pitruloka or some such other unseen places for water or rice balls. Nor can I see any reason to attach any importance to the rites performed by a mercenary priest and in a language which is Greek both to me and the officiating priest. In short the whole affair seems to be a hoax designed to be practised on the religious susceptibilities of the people. But I can believe in shraddha as a thing offered in piety and devotion with a charitable intention. From a commonsense point of view the main principle and the original purpose of this ceremony ought to be charity. As you say in Young India dated 24-2-1927, “only two classes of people are entitled to charity and none else—the Brahmin who possesses nothing and whose business it is to spread holy learning, and the cripple and the blind.” Our great immortal sage, Thiruvalluvar has said : “A Brahmin is that sannyasi who has an overflowing love towards all living creatures.” Because I could not conceive of a man who has a better claim than you and a more charitable purpose than that of the spinning-wheel, I have sent you this amount. There is also another way of commemorating the memory of one’s own parents. The same sage Thiruvalluvar has again said : “The gratitude of a son to his father must consist in the son conducting himself in the world in such a way as to excite from the world the approbation that his father must have performed a great tapasya to beget this son.” I may add that I have this ideal at my heart.

I have omitted from the letter several personal references. Though I have performed shraddha ceremonies myself in my youth, I have not been able to understand their religious usefulness. This letter is not the first of its kind I have received. But not being able to understand the hidden meaning, if any, of the practices which are almost universal in Hinduism, I have hitherto refrained from dealing with them in these pages. The rule that the correspondent has chosen has however appealed to me. We do very often meekly submit to many conventional ceremonies although we may have no faith in them, and although they may have no meaning for us. Submission to convention in trivial matters in which there is no danger of deceiving others or oneself is often desirable and even necessary. But submission in matters of religion, especially where there is a positive repugnance from within and a danger of deceiving our neighbours and ourselves, cannot but be debasing. There are today many religious ceremonies, which, whatever meaning and importance they might have had in ages gone by, have neither importance nor meaning for the rising generation. There can be no doubt that it is necessary for this generation to strike out an original path by giving a new form and even meaning to many old ceremonies. The idea of keeping green and of respecting the memory of one’s parents is not to be given up. But it is hardly necessary on that account to retain the old conventions and forms, which have lost their reality and therefore ceased to have any influence on us. I therefore commend the example of the correspondent to those who are anxious to do only that which is right, and free themselves from self-deception.

Young India, 1-9-1927

474. HOW TO KEEP HEALTH

The Polish Professor with whom the reader is now familiar writing on my illness says:

As I have been reading in Young India about your illness and discussion with ‘jailors’, let me tell you of my own experience how to prevent such breakdowns. Within the last nine months—September to May—I have visited 40 towns all over Poland, and lectured for 100 days at the rate of 3-7 hours a day. At the age of 64, I feel as young as 40 years ago whenever I stand before the public. My rules are:

1. No worry whatever. There is an an Almighty God who takes care of all, and nothing happens without His permission. I am not His chief steward, only a very humble servant with a clearly defined task, and have to look at that task, that small part of universal becoming. If there is somewhere on earth an earthquake or a flood or a famine, no real harm can happen to immortal souls, nobody can suffer without some advantage to him designed by God, and everywhere God has His servants who help so far as He permits them. Therefore worry is weakness of faith, and my faith being infinite I cannot worry.

2. Much sleep in every moment when I am not at work, even for a few minutes many times a day. Before falling into sleep always praying: Lord Jesus enlighten me, give me strength and joy. With this prayer a clear image of joy, light, strength flowing into me. Such a sleep is prayer, is intercourse with the Highest and refreshing. When I wake up from such a sleep, I know exactly what I have to do, and I do it gladly.

The professor adds a third rule which is about fasting and diet. As it is incomplete, I have asked for further information before sharing it with reader. But there is no doubt that the two rules above mentioned about absence of worry and necessity for sleep are golden rules. There is nothing that wastes the body like worry and one who has any faith in God should be ashamed to worry about anything whatsoever. It is a difficult rule no doubt for the simple reason, that faith in God with the majority of mankind is either an intellectual belief or a blind belief, a kind of superstitious fear of something indefinable. But to ensure absolute freedom from worry requires a living utter faith which is a plant of slow, almost unperceived, growth and requires to be constantly watered by tears that accompany genuine prayer. They are the tears of a lover who cannot brook a moment’s separation from the loved one, or of the penitent who knows that it is some trace of impurity in him that keeps him away from the loved one.

The ability to sleep during odd moments seems to be a necessity in old age. Whilst the first rule is applicable to all, young and old, the rule about sleep is not to be copied by youngsters. It is the privilege only of babies and old people. And to induce such sweet innocent sleep, it is surely necessary to put oneself in tune with the Infinite at every step. This sleep is not to be mistaken for the sleep of the sluggard or the opium-eater. But it is ‘Nature’s sweet restorer’, a tonic for a brain that gets easily fagged in old age.

Young India, 1-9-1927
475. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

GUDIATHAM,
September 1, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I enclose herewith Jamini Babu’s letter which please destroy after perusal. It gave me great joy to find all the good coming out of Jamini Babu. I know you will handle him in the gentlest manner possible.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1575

476. LETTER TO KAILASNATH KATJU

GUDIATHAM (SOUTH INDIA),
September 1, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

My weakness of body is my excuse for dictating this letter. But for that weakness I would have gladly written myself. I thank you for your letter and the first instalment of your contribution to khadi. Your letter is so good and is likely to influence others. If you have no objection, I would like to publish that part of it which relates to khadi. But please do not hesitate to refuse permission if you would on any account not like the publication of the letter, whether with or without your name.

As for the black alpaca chapkan concerned, give me an order and I can have for you one made of very fine black khadi. It looks as good as alpaca. You may not know that in Madras many advocates and vakils wear khaddar chapkans even when they do not use khadi for other articles of dress and as it so happens, the khaddar chapkans, the poor practitioners find to be suitable because of their comparative cheapness. In your case I may not think of cheapness at all. If you give the order, I am not going to secure for you the cheapest but the most expensive and the most elegant.

Now a word about personal spinning. I quite agree with you that love of khaddar need not include personal spinning. But love of the starving millions does, for two reasons: first, because, personal spinning renews our daily bond with them. Secondly, by personally spinning each known member of society creates a spinning atmosphere which makes it easier for workers to induce the unwilling, because unbelieving, villagers to take to hand-spinning. I would like to add a third reason which I know you would not despise. Every yard of well-spun yarn adds to the wealth of the country, be the addition ever so infinitesimal. You know what the lawyers do so often whilst awaiting their turn in the law courts. They either play with their pencils or with their paper-tape or worse still open out their little pen-knives and fidget with the edges of the desks at which they are sitting. I wonder if I could induce you to take up the little takli which could be made of silver, gold or ivory if you like, and put in a delicate little cylinder. Takli-spinning is easily learnt. Will you take to it? It will be, I know, laughed at in the beginning; then it will cease to attract notice one way or the other and if you could go through the two stages and persist, it will be copied by others. I hope you do not resent my saying all this to you. You have given me an inch with hearty goodwill and you must not be surprised if I now ask for more.

Yes, indeed, I demanded great sacrifices from lawyers. But looking back to 1920 and ’21, I feel that I asked for nothing very extraordinary and I feel that I had a right to demand the largest measure of sacrifice from those to whose profession I once belonged.

The little ones now consider themselves too big to sit in my lap. Please, however, tell them that whenever I meet them again, am going to make them pay for still remembering me.

I am passing your cheque for Rs. 100/- to the Treasurer of the All-India Spinners’ Association.

Yours sincerely,

DR. KAILASNATH KATJU
9, EDMUNTON ROAD
ALLAHABAD

From a photostat : S.N. 13275
477. LETTER TO GULZAR MOHAMAD ‘AQUIL’ VELLORE,
September 1, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter of the 19th ultimo. I enclose herewith copy of the article in Young India. The exacts you have sent me do not in any shape or form do your point: that is to say, they do not show that Justice Dilip Singh was in any way prejudiced against Mussalmans or that he otherwise gave a decision which he did not believe to be absolutely correct. That other judges differed from him as to the interpretation of the law is nothing new in Indian experience or in the experience of the world. So long as the world lasts, there will be honestly different interpretations of the same laws. Indeed, one extract that you have collected clearly bears out my own opinion that Justice Dilip Singh was wholly unprejudiced. I still adhere to the opinion that much of the agitation over Rangila Rasul was uncalled for, unfortunate, avoidable. But as I have already intimated to you, I do not desire, unless I feel compelled, to take part in the controversy.

From a microfilm: S.N. 12390

478. LETTER TO S. G. VAZE
VELLORE,
September 1, 1927

MY DEAR VAZE,

It is curious your letter enclosing copy of the Servant of India came to me the very day that I read your signed article and the reference myself. The cutting was given to me by Andrews. When I read that cutting I thought of writing to you to tell you that whenever you expect me to deal with any question you should write to me. Much as I should like to, I really do not get much time to read any papers or books except to see a local newspaper for a few minutes daily. I remain somewhat posted with current events only because friends correspond with me on them. Now about the subject-matter of your letter.

Before it came I had discussed the East African among other

---

1 Evidently a slip for 'prove'
2 In letter dated August 7 questions with Andrews. It needs very delicate handling. I do not consider myself to be as competent to pronounce an opinion on the East African situation as I do on the South African. I had been given to write views on the East African question also not because of my being well posted with a knowledge of all the problems and local conditions but a long course of very serious study of the South African question has given me, so I fancy, the capacity for coming to a right decision. My own opinion is that we would be better without and representation in the East African legislature. Any representation that we might have will be exploited by the predominant European element for the purpose of robbing the sons of the soil of their just rights. I would, therefore, resist communal representation. If I can, I would retain for the Indian settlers the franchise on the same rights as the Europeans. But that can only be, if an educational qualification is accepted by the Europeans which they will resist because, they always in the colonies want the principle of “one man, one vote” to be established. What I am anxious for and what I would fight unto death for is our immigration and unrestricted rights to own landed property unlike as in South Africa and Rhodesia. We were the pioneers in South Africa. Our peasants, so far as I know, have done no harm to the Africans. We were, therefore, in large numbers, solely dependent upon their goodwill. In all fairness, therefore, Europeans have to reconvince us that having got the might on their side they may ride roughshod over our rights may be too true [sic] but then I should not compromise by a hair’s breadth on these two fundamental questions. At the present moment whilst my opinion is an . . . state so far as the political part of the question is concerned, I do not feel inclined to write to say anything in public unless on it becomes absolutely necessary. I know and it grieves me to know that our people in East Africa are not acting in the correct manner and that their leaders there are not selfless.

Yours sincerely,

S. G. Vaze, Esq.
SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY
POONA CITY

From a photostat: S.N. 13276

1 The source has a blank here.
MY DEAR MOTI BABU,

Though I have thought of you [more times] than I can count, I have not been able to make time for writing to you as I had nothing in particular to say to you. But today, by accident I find before me the fourth number of the Standard Bearer. I have according to my wont looked at the advertisements. Of course you know my ideas about advertisements and in a serious journal devoted to religious research and drawing inspiration from you, I should like omission of all advertisements, but in any case if there should be any, they should be a selected assortment. I was, therefore, distressed to find an advertisement for spermatone. The description of the medicine is not at all inviting and I do not know [whether] you know that such advertisements are partly responsible for enervating our youths. There are others, too, which I dislike but I have called attention to the most glaring one. You will now do what you think proper. I hope that khadi work is being developed as you had expected and that you are keeping well and further that you have no trouble from the authorities. I seem to have got over the collapse, at least for the time being and I have now seriously embarked upon a nearly four months’ tour in the South. What was done in Mysore I do not count as anything.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SIT. MOTILAL ROY
PRAVARTAK SANGH
CHANDRANAGAR

From a photostat: G.N. 11033

---

1 From the G.N. Register
2 Illegible in the source
3 ibid.
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

LETTER FROM BASIL MATHEWS

WORLD SERVICE TO ‘THE FRIENDS OF BOYS’ UNDER THE GUIDANCE OF THE WORLD’S COMMITTEE OF Y.M.C.A.

January 5, 1927

SIR,

To the boys of the world we addressed a general questionnaire in which we asked—“Who in your opinion is the greatest living man?” Trained educationists and leaders of youth in over fifty countries aided us in this worldwide inquiry into the mind of boys. The response of hundreds of boys from a large number of countries—Asiatic, European, American and African—showed that “they consider you the greatest man living”.

We are publishing a magazine for leaders of boys—The World’s Youth—which circulates in 59 countries. It would be of unmeasured significance to them and to the boys they serve, to have direct from yourself, through the medium of this journal, a personal message as to the general principle that has guided your life. We assure you that this is no mere journalistic stunt. We are making the request sincerely believing that your compliance will mean very much for the advancement of what we both hope for—a stronger, cleaner, more heroic youth throughout the world.

We are convinced that your intimate statement of 100 words or more will be a factor of profound influence in the lives of thousands of boys, and we will be glad to convey back to you responses we receive from them, in which we know you will be interested.

Yours faithfully,
BASIL MATHEWS

From a photostat: S.N. 12476

APPENDIX II

GANDHIJI AT THE IMPERIAL DAIRY, BANGALORE

... On being told that there are many dairies in Bangalore, Gandhiji has been visiting one of them, the Imperial Dairy, for some days, trying to understand every little detail of its working, inspecting the cattle, eliciting information about their yield, the expenses of their upkeep, the nutrition given to them, the treatment and annual value of their manure, etc., etc. All this he thinks he must do in order to do
... The short course of “lesson” that Gandhiji had in the Imperial Dairy, thanks to the courtesy of Mr. Smith, was made interesting as much by the readiness of those in charge to give Gandhiji the best they could, as by the presence of Pandit Malaviyaji during a couple of visits. After giving a couple of days to the dairy processes, Gandhiji was shown the different cattle which are under the close observation of the expert, who measures every ounce of the nutrition that goes into their bodies, and every ounce of their droppings, to arrive at conclusions about the digestibility of different foods, their milking results, and so on. Mr. Smith himself explained the most important and the most simple method of storing grass and fodder in silos. “It is going to solve the question of fodder for cattle,” he said, “It is most important and yet so simple, and because it is simple, people do not see its value.” The different concrete and pit silos were shown, Mr. Smith going into minute detail and trying to show how, with a little carefulness, and irrespective of weather, the agriculturist can provide for his cattle against times of scarcity. The interest with which he showed us his cows, and gave the history of some of them, spoke eloquently of his love for the cow. “I was born and bred among them,” said the good Scotchman with pardonable pride. “My father was a farmer and for twenty years examiner of students going in for the Dairy Diploma, and my mother attended to our home dairy herself. Let every agriculturist in India realize the value of cattle-breeding and cattle protection. Let us not export a single article of food for the cattle”—he might have added the cattle also—“and let us realize that the increased milking capacity of the cows does not affect the quality of the draught animals. On the contrary, put a number of bullocks before me, and I will show that the best of them are the progeny of the cows which have been your best milkers.”

On the last day Mr. Smith expressed his desire to have a photograph of Pandit Malaviyaji and Gandhiji with their best cow “Jill”, an Ayrshire and Montgomery crossbreed which has calved sixteen times, and given all these years an average yield of 10,000 lbs. of milk. She is naturally the pet of the Dairy. “She was born here, I was present at her birth,” said Mr. Smith, “and have watched her growth all these years. We have all kinds of cattle diseases here, but Jill has never had one.”

Young India, 23-6-1927 and 30-6-1927

---

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter” (23-6-1927); what follows is from his “Weekly Letter” (30-6-1927).
APPENDIX III

TELEGRAM FROM MOTILAL NEHRU

ALLAHABAD,
August 23, 1927

MAHATMA GANDHI
BANGALORE

ANSARI PUBLISHED SLIGHTLY MODIFIED BUT EQUALLY
OBJECTIONABLE STATEMENT DESPITE YOUR LETTER MY VERBAL AND WRITTEN ENTREATIES STOP ON ARRIVAL SIMLA FOUND
OFFICIALS MODERATES RESPONSIVISTS JUBILANT SRINIVASA
CHUCKLING WEAKER MEMBERS PARTY WAVERING STRONGER
MEMBERS INDIGNANT BUT ALL THINKING ANSARI’S STATEMENT APPROVED BY YOU AND ME STOP HAVE CONSEQUENTLY ISSUED MILDEST POSSIBLE STATEMENT POINTING OUT SUICIDAL
CHARACTER ANSARI’S STATEMENT AND APPEALING HIM FOLLOW
YOUR ADVICE STOP RETURNING HERE FOUND SAME
MISAPPREHENSION AND FEELING. SOME USEFUL
SELFOPINIONATED CONGRESSMEN LIKE SHIVAPRASAD GUPTA THINK RESIGNING CONGRESS STOP ASSEMBLY MEMBERS CONGRESS PARTY REPRESENTING ALL PROVINCES WERE DRAFTING MANIFESTO AGAINST ANSARI’S ELECTION WHEN I LEFT STOP
GENERAL DEMAND FOR JAWAHARLAL AS ONLY POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE DESPITE MY PERSUASIONS TO CONTRARY STOP MY STATEMENT WILL DISPEL MISAPPREHENSION ABOUT OUR APPROVAL AND LIKELY PROVOKE UNDESIRABLE CONTROVERSY STOP CONSIDER BEST POSSIBLE COURSE FOR ANSARI TO RETIRE AND INVITE FRESH ELECTIONS STOP GOING LUCKNOW
FOR TWO DAYS ADDRESS CHIEF COURT RETURNING HERE
TWENTYFIFTH LEAVING FOR BOMBAY TWENTYEIGHTH SAILING
THIRTYFIRST WIRE YOUR OPINION AND ACTION YOU PROPOSE IF ANY.

MOTILAL NEHRU

From a photostat : S. N. 12873
1. LETTER TO BAL KALELkar

ARNI,

September 2, 1927

CHI. BAL,

I got your letter and liked it very much. I could not reply immediately for want of time. I shall answer two of your questions. A brahmachari sacrifices all pleasures merely through faith or in obedience to his parents or a custom. There is obedience in his sacrifice, but not knowledge. And if he cannot bring himself to make for ever that sacrifice, he has freedom to enjoy pleasures within limits after completing his studies. A sannyasi makes the same sacrifice knowingly and willingly. He does not and cannot keep it open for him to return to pleasures after having abjured them. Both types of sacrifice are very essential to individuals as well as to society.

Now the second question. Non-violence means not harming anyone in thought, word or action out of ill will or selfishness. If we wish or do ill to any stranger in the interests of our parents, that is violence. We can see and prove with the help of our knowledge that wishing or doing ill benefits neither the world nor our parents. Hence I had written that it was my belief we discover nonviolence the moment we realize that its root is to be found in wishing well to the world as much as to ourselves. You will thus see that we can of course prove independently that one should wish well to the world, but if we abide by the dharma of non-violence the responsibility to wish well to the world as well devolves on us even in pursuance of that dharma. If we understand this from our very childhood, our reason would admit it and the heart too would like it. That is to say, if we continue for ever the sacrifice which we have undertaken in good faith during the stage of brahmacharya we become sannyasis. Shankaracharya did this in the past. Dayananda did it in our own age. That we all cannot do so is due to our shortcoming and that constitutes an obstacle to doing good to the world. But we cannot do such things merely by exercising our reasoning. But if, with the help of our intellect, we imprint it day after day on our hearts and if it gets so imprinted, the whole world will not, even if it tried, be able to stop us from sacrificing our all. If any special problems arise, do tell me. Read this to all the pupils if you can.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
2. SPEECH AT ARNI

September 2, 1927

You love to get a little bit of a rag, or cocoanut, or anything that you can get as prasadam from temples from which, alas, all holiness has fled. I would ask you to transfer that spirit of humility and devotion to khaddar which is spun and woven in the living temple of Daridranarayana. Our temples have their proper place in our religion and society only in so far they enable us to reach out the hand of fellowship to the starving millions of India. But these very temples will be the instruments of forging our shackles if they become impassable barriers between the masses and us. If you will wear khaddar in true spirit you will purify yourselves and the temples. I need not explain to you now, how the removal of untouchability necessarily follows from this proposition.

Young India, 8-9-1927

3. SPEECH AT ARCOT

September 2, 1927

I am very thankful for the cordial reception and for the purse you have given me, but I am not satisfied with this amount. I know that there are many in this gathering who have not contributed to the Fund which is intended for our poor brethren. You must encourage spinning by wearing khaddar. I am very glad to find here that the Hindus and the Mussalmans have met together in mutual co-operation unlike in the North where communal hatred is prevailing.

Yesterday when I had been to a Hindu temple on my way I was given the prasad by the gurukkal. I told him that I am a pariah and asked him whether he would allow a pariah inside the temple. He laughed at me and said that he would do it gradually. I appeal to all men and women who have assembled here to treat the so-called pariah as our equal and move with him freely.

Since I find no place to have this silver plate, I shall have it auctioned. Volunteers will come in your midst for collection and you

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 Temple priest can give whatever you please. As I have to go to another place I shall conclude my speech, once more thanking you for your gifts and addresses.

_The Hindu, 5-9-1927_

4. LETTER TO BALWANTRAI MEHTA

[After September 2, 1927]¹

I have your letter. You may rest assured that I shall not take a decision hastily. I am now conveying all my doubts to everyone who should know them and am seeking assistance in coming to a decision. I make no distinction between K and Devdas. It is no pleasure to me to entertain any suspicion about K. K. and K are in fact related to me as children. Hence it is not at all possible that I shall decide anything in haste.

Your argument does not appeal to me. You may know that I myself am a proof before you that sex does not discriminate between the young and the old. Even today I have to erect all sorts of walls around me for the sake of safety.

Despite this, I was in danger of succumbing a few years ago. Moreover, sexual desire does not bother about time either. Despite our belief that Bhai K’s ideas about _brahmacharya_, etc., were pure it is no wonder if ultimately he succumbed to desire. A young man whose case was almost similar confessed to me in Bangalore. He is regarded as a _brahmachari_. He is a darling of his family. No one can suspect him as things stand. He studies in the intermediate class. He has not been able to save himself from a widow who is related to him. He came to me saying, “Save me from this fever.” Despite having sworn to a friend, he fell again. Hence he sought refuge in me. What refuge could I provide? But that is a digression.

What I have learnt is this: K had closer relations with K and her family than warranted. Both were reprimanded and both were convinced. Both agreed not to have such intimacy. In spite of this, they were seen secretly meeting each other. So Maganlal went on a fast. Notwithstanding this, they again met secretly. If my information is correct, I cannot get over my doubt. And if K has committed this slip such a man can in no time succumb to temptations of money. But these are all my inferences based on a single premise. I cannot but have all sorts of doubt about a person who acts with deliberate dishonesty. I am still investigating. I am not unaware of Maganlal’s opinion which you quote. You are also aware that I have great confidence in his judgment. I shall write to him too.

¹ The source has this letter after the entries for September 2.

Now the question that either you or his father should reimburse the amount, if K has embezzled any, does not arise at all. I am considering only the ethical aspect of this question.

Whatever I shall now write for Navajivan cannot but reflect my doubt; hence if you let me have some draft I shall consider and publish it, if I can.

I have not made light of suicides. I know of only two occasions when suicide becomes a duty. There are many grounds for that opinion. A man who is helpless against indulgence and cannot control himself but has sense enough to bring about his end ought to do so. That would be his dharma. Likewise, when a beast of a man attempts to criminally assault a woman, it is her duty to save herself by committing suicide. Indeed I have very often quoted these two instances in the Ashram. And I think it is only proper. Even if K has committed all the three faults mentioned above, as far as the tenets of the Ashram are concerned the duty to commit suicide cannot be established nor that of running away. Atonement is the only duty in such a case but I know from the many letters K wrote to me that he has always opposed a number of rules observed in the Ashram.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

5. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

MADRAS,
September 3, 1927

MIRABEHN
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA
YOU MAY GO BOMBAY FOR EXAMINATION APPENDIX AND EYES. WIRE CONDITION.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5266. Courtesy: Mirabehn
6. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

MADRAS,

September 3, 1927

TO MIRABEHN
SAYTAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA

WIRE RECEIVED. DISTRESSED. GOD BE WITH YOU. EXPECT DAILY REPORTS. LOVE. ANDREWS JOINS.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5267. Courtesy: Mirabehn

7. SPEECH TO LABOUR, PERAVALLUR

September 3, 1927

FRIENDS,

I thank you for the address and the two purses. I congratulate you on having the club whose main object is to advance the cause of khadi. The ingenious manner in which you are advocating its cause is worthy of imitation by all of us. For a poor man it is the most convenient form of getting a loan free of interest. But as in most things in this also the honesty on the part of all members is an indispensable condition. As you know, having myself become a labourer and having worked with them in their midst and for them for over 35 years I am deeply interested in everything connected with labour. I do not propose just now to deal with the disabilities that labour is labouring under in India and here in particular. As a matter of fact I know nothing of your special hardship and special conditions. At the present moment what I wish to lay the greatest stress upon is what labour can do for itself.

The one curse with which it is afflicted from within is the terrible drink habit. If labourers do not get rid of it betimes they will be digging their own graves. When the drink habit possesses a man it turns him into a beast. He knows no distinction between the sister and his wife. I therefore advise you all to give up drink. I know what a severe temptation it is for a man who is once given to drink; but God has given man the capacity, if he will only use it, for conquering such defects and temptations. The other defect which I have found amongst the labourers is that they have no consciousness of the strength which is possessed by combination. Labourers must learn to consider that the welfare of all is the welfare of the individual. You must therefore cultivate amongst yourselves a real brotherly spirit. I have known that in many parts of India labourers squander their money in gambling. It is a vicious habit and you should give it up. The morale amongst the labourers in some parts of India is also not all as it should be. If as labourers we want to become a recognized force in the Indian society and in the political world also, it is absolutely necessary for us to recognize the binding tie of marriage and all the obligations that that tie imposes upon us. I have congratulated you upon having this club for the advancement of khadi. But instead of there being a hundred members in that club every one of you should belong to it. Remember that khadi binds us to those who are much poorer than yourselves. To throw away the foreign cloth or even your millmade cloth costs you nothing but the simple thought on behalf of the starving millions of people who are living in our villages. It has given me great pleasure to lay the foundation-stone\(^1\) which I have just laid over the place there. May God help you to do the things I have suggested to you. If you will but do these things, you will find that the majority of your difficulties will disappear without any further efforts.

1 Gandhi Club

The Hindu, 5-9-1927

8. SPEECH TO STUDENTS, MADRAS

_{September 3, 1927}_

You have called your purse a small purse, much smaller than you had expected to raise. I also endorse the sentiment that this purse\(^2\) is all too small for the students of Madras to present to me. And for what purpose? Not for buying a few collars or neckties for distribution among the modern students who may be in need—not intended for any small work. It is intended for the starving millions in 7,00,000 villages. And I am positive that you, the students, if you could possibly

---

\(^1\) Of the building of the Madras and Southern Maharatta Railway Employees’ Union at Perambur

\(^2\) Of Rs. 1607
realize the meaning of the starvation of these millions, you could raise a far larger sum. If you knew the conditions of these starving millions, as I do expect you to know, you would have raised a much larger sum. However, for your comfort, let me tell you that you have done no less than the students elsewhere. Not only does your purse not suffer in comparison with purses received by me from students elsewhere, but it comes to me with assurance that your Chairman has given, that your purse is a token of your association with the khadi work I am doing. And, coming as it does with that assurance, I hold your purse very precious indeed, and it has given me additional joy to know that the largest amount collected by any single worker was by a lady student.¹ I wish indeed that all the young ladies of India will beat all the young men of India in the competition of service of the motherland. Why should not women be the first in the field in matters of service? Your purse should carry with it a lesson to you as it does to me. The lesson that the purse carries to me is, that taking all these moneys from the student world, I should realize more fully my responsibility not only to you but to the starving millions. The lesson that it should carry to you is that having given your mite to this purse, you should study the condition of these millions of villagers, in order to fit you all the better for their service. And if you do so, you will make this painful discovery that your education is paid for out of the life-blood of these millions. I hope that every student here also knows that the fees he pays for his education do not, in any way whatsoever, pay for the cost of his education. I hope that the students also know and realize that the education is paid for out of the drink and drug revenue.

Now, consider for yourselves what you owe to these men who pay for your education. I suggest then that you should render ceaseless service to these starving millions and that you should not be satisfied till this gnawing poverty is banished from our land. And, I have told you that khaddar is the easiest and the only way. I ask you not to allow your minds to be befogged by all kinds of specious reasoning that will be advanced against the spinning-wheel and against khadi in these days of rush for machinery. I do not propose to go into all the arguments for the spinning-wheel and khadi, but I commend to your attention a small book that has been published by the All-India Spinners’ Association and which has been written by two students, ¹ Miss Ananda Bai of the Law College had collected Rs. 150.

Professor Puntambekar and Mr. N. S. Varadachari. You will find in that little book most of the arguments carefully marshalled, in order to show that khadi and khadi alone can become the only means of alleviating this universal misery of starving India. I want you to bear in mind the qualifications that I have introduced into the proposition with great care. Do not dismiss from your minds the words “universal” and “alleviation” and then raise an argument, which nobody has ever advanced, and then proceed to demolish it. And if you have understood this message of khadi, then you will not rest until you have discarded every inch of foreign cloth and substituted it by hand-woven and handspun cloth.

But, I have said that khadi is really the least part of your performance. It is the beginning of the service and the centre round which all other things can be built up. You will have to bring to bear, on this question of removing the awful distress among the villagers of India, an irreproachable character. You will never be able to put together the shattered fragments of society unless you have got this binding cement of character. I am sure that it will do your soul good to hear from me that students in Gujarat are, at the present moment, working wonders in those flood-stricken areas. They could not do so, if they had not love overflowing and outgoing to those people in distress, and character at the back of their service. Some of them have left off their studies and have gone into villages with pickaxes, shovels and baskets and have restored villages which were stinking with dead cattle and rotten grain to a habitable condition. They did not wait for the Panchama brethren to go to their assistance to remove these carcasses, but removed them themselves. And, I know, what has been possible for the few Gujarati students to do, it also possible of every one of you, boys and girls, to do, given the occasion. But I must not take up much of your time, nor tax myself unduly the very first day of my coming to Madras. There are many other things of which I should like to talk to you. I wish I had the time to give you that conversation. But I would like to make a little request to you. I gave to students in Vellore a fairly considered address,¹ and I understand that it has been reported almost verbatim in The Hindu. Probably some of you have already read it. But even if you have done so, I commend it to you for reading again carefully and I ask those who have not read it to get a loan of the paper or buy it and read it. You are the hope of ¹Vide “Speech at Voorhee’s College, Vellore”, 30-8-1927.

the future and I should love to think that students all over India should realize their duty to the country to which they owe not only their birth, but also their education, derived as it is from the life-blood of the downtrodden villagers. Whenever the devil presses you and you simply think of yourselves and not of your country, just remember this thing, which I have told you this evening. Remember the debt you are incurring from day to day whilst you are receiving your education, and may the memory of that debt keep you from every temptation.

_The Hindu, 5-9-1927_

9. AFTER THE FLOODS

From the letters which I received regarding the flood-relief work and from the reports in _Navajivan_ I observe that volunteers are doing their work conscientiously showing no signs of exhaustion. But I have formed the impression that all of us are not accustomed to doing physical work, that we feel aversion against certain types of work and that certain things are left undone or delayed or done with too much expense because we do not know how to do them. For example, I read the following in reports by some volunteers which are lying with me.

The wells in this place stink.

The basin at the top of the well in this place is about to crumble.

A buffalo has fallen into the well here and the water stinks with the smell of her rotting body. But the poor Bhangis still use it.

The grain which is rotting in this place gives off foul smell. The people dig up even that and eat it.

We found the Bhangis here lazy. They do not work even when asked.

I have given these statements from different letters and all of them are not in the words of the writers themselves. I have not, however, twisted the writer’s meaning in any of them.

I think that in our work we should not have one set of people to do the actual work and another to supervise. Our poor country can progress only if the supervisors and the workers are the same persons. The number of persons who issue orders should be the smallest possible. Of course we cannot do without overseers altogether, but we should bear in mind that their function is largely to keep watch against possible malpractices. Volunteers, too, need supervision. If no supervisor is appointed over a volunteer’s work, he should ask for one to be appointed. Even so, our aim should be to get out of this unhappy condition of supervisors having to be appointed. In any case, supervisors and others, all should carry hoes and spades with them. If these are not available, they should use their hands as much as possible.

1 Gandhiji uses the English word.

I would, therefore, expect to receive reports as follows: ‘In village ‘A’, the well emitted a foul smell. A bucket and rope were procured from the villagers and the well was cleaned up with the latter’s help. Some potassium permanganate was obtained from a hospital nearby and mixed with the well-water. We then tasted the water and satisfied ourselves that it was pure.

‘In village ‘B’ the basin platform round the mouth of the well was unusable, and so a hedge of thorny plants was put up round it with the help of villagers. This notice was put up on the hedge. ‘The platform is in bad repair. No one should go near it.’ There is another well in the village, and, therefore, there will be no hardship.

‘We found only one well in village ‘C’. Its basin was quite unusable. The village mason, therefore, was brought along and the basin repaired and made strong enough so that it could be used for the time being. The people have been advised to get it made stronger.

‘In village ‘D’ a buffalo had fallen into the well. We saw that she could not be pulled out even if we tried. There was not much water in the well. With the consent and help of the village people, the well was filled up. As I had never lifted a weight or held a spade, my shoulders are aching and the palms are sore. But the foul smell which could be felt even at a distance of several hundred yards has ceased. When I see now boys playing on the spot where the well stood, I completely forget my pain. And the experience of real appetite is an additional benefit.

‘We saw two wells in village ‘E’, the second being for the use of Bhangi friends. There was hardly any water in it. On inquiry, I was told that it usually contained only a small quantity of water, and that too full of dirt and mud. So I pleaded with the elders of the village. They agreed to let the Bhangis draw water [from the other well], but insisted on these conditions. ‘The women in our families will not yet accept your idea of mixing [with Bhangis]. You may, therefore, fix certain hours when they may draw water from the well.’ I welcomed even this, little as it was. I thanked them. I got together Bhangi boys and, with their help, filled up the well in a little while and left the place.

‘I found the Bhangis in village ‘F’ very lazy. I saw ankledeep slush mud round their wells. The refuse-heap was right near their dwellings. I tried hard to explain things to them, but in vain. I then asked for a spade. ‘There it is’, said one of them, and went away. Another said: ‘Why do you waste your labour, dear Sir? We don’t mind all this dirt and mud. We have always lived thus.’ I said: ‘I can’t bear the sight of these things. Persons like me work hard for you, plead with people not to treat you as untouchables. But what can we do if this is how you behave?’ The man said: ‘Yes, that is certainly true. But we cannot help the slowness in our improvement.’ I made no reply to this, but removed the mud, covered the ground with dry sand and single handed cleared out the refuse-heaps from near the dwellings. Occasionally a boy would come along, remove two spadefuls of the refuse and walk away. I called to mind the Gita teaching of disinterested service and left the place.’

The reader may think up more such imaginary reports, and should cherish the ambition to act in the manner suggested and demonstrate that these things can be done.

The substance of what one volunteer writes may be stated as follows:

You were alone so far, but you are two now, for Kakasaheb has joined you. Should we not get some benefit of your being together? Will not one of you write and explain how to create a new world after the pralaya?

I have been trying to see that Kakasaheb’s pen is active and dancing. Staying here, I cannot think of any suggestions to make about creating a new world. Those which occur to me do not seem worth putting down on paper. My appeal, therefore, to workers who are already active is this:

Instead of expecting us, invalids, to make suggestions from this distance, you who are on the spot should yourselves think out plans and execute them, limiting them to your villages. You should not wait for the whole of Gujarat to undertake reconstruction before you do so, but should effect what reforms you can in your own village if you can carry the local people with you. I give here a miscellaneous list of do’s and dont’s.
1. Do not build houses which look like slums.
2. Do not use tin-sheets.
3. Do not imitate America or England, for the climate there is different from ours.
4. Use only a minimum of stone and mortar.
5. In our country, we can build fine houses with straw, stalks, reeds and finely powdered, moistened earth.
6. The site must be cleaned and made level before a house is built.
7. There must be proper provision for ventilation.
8. If there is enough space, a separate shed should be provided for cattle. I saw an inexpensive and very hygienic arrangement for them, which consisted of an enclosure in which they were not tied but were left free. A strong fence of sticks or wire could be put up for the purpose. There should be a small shed in the enclosure where the cattle can rest when they feel inclined to do so.

MISCELLANEOUS

1. Do not give people black, foreign caps, even if received as gifts for them. A thing which is unacceptable in itself should not be received even as a gift. A vegetarian would not accept meat because it was offered to him free.

2. Our aim in life is not to live merely for the sake of living. It should be, rather, to live for a good end, to awaken the soul sleeping in this body which is its house. The difference between dharma and adharma is this: One who follows dharma will refuse to live if he has to violate certain restraints for that purpose. One who follows adharma accepts no such restraints. He will sell himself, his wife and children and his country in order that he may live.

3. A trader may save and may also destroy. The merchants of Gujarat are doing both without knowing it. I have been observing that there is a shower of foreign and mill cloth. Now that the immediate shock of the heavy floods is over, I caution them and the people. It is Gujaratis and Marwaris who are responsible for the presence of foreign cloth among us. Both these classes of merchants should consider. If I were asked to choose between the destruction caused by foreign cloth and that caused by excessive floods, I know which I should choose. Let the reader know that one kills the body; this can be borne and is inescapable. The other kind of destruction kills the soul and we can always escape it. Who will explain to Gujarat this profound difference between the two kinds of destruction? Man is always helpless in saving his body from destruction, and he is always free concerning the saving of his soul. That is why the various religions proclaim in the most emphatic words: “The atman is its own friend and its own foe.”

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 4-9-1927

10. SPEECH AT Y.M.C.A., MADRAS ¹

September 4, 1927

FRIENDS, ²

The Chairman has asked me to give you a religious discourse. I do not know that I have ever given a religious discourse, or to put it the other way, I do not know a single speech of mine or a talk of mine, within my own recollection, which has not been a religious discourse. I think, if I am not deceived, that at the back of every word that I have uttered since I have known what public life is, and of every act that I have done, there has been a religious consciousness and a downright religious motive. My acts may have appeared to my audiences, or to the readers of the words that I have written, political, economic and many other things. But I ask you to accept my word that the motive behind every one of them has been essentially and predominantly religious. And so is it to be this morning.

When I asked what I was expected to speak about, I was told that I was to speak what I liked. Well, the message came to me this morning as I was on my way to this meeting and I propose now to think before you aloud.

I had very precious moments with a missionary friend in Vellore. I had a heart-to-heart talk with the students of that place, and the next morning I was told something like this: ‘Your speech was very nice. You talked of the things of the spirit. But how is it that in

¹ Bhagavad Gita, VI. 5
² This was published under the caption “Two Speeches”.
³ From The Hindu, 5-9-1927
⁴ Vide “Speech at Voorhee’s College, Vellore”, 30-8-1927.
the middle of the speech like King Charles’ head with the renowned Mr. Dick, khadi came up? Can you explain what connection khadi can possibly have with spirituality? Then he went on, ‘You spoke about temperance; that delighted us and it was certainly spiritual. You spoke about untouchability, a very fine subject for an audience spiritually inclined or for a spiritually inclined man to speak about. But both these came in your speech after your message of khadi. It seemed to jar on some of us.’ I have given you the substance of the conversation in my own words but faithfully. I gave the answer that came to me at the time and this morning I want to amplify that answer.

It is quite true that I place khaddar first and then only untouchability and temperance. All these came at the end of the speech I gave to the students of Vellore, in which I made a fervent appeal for purity of life and told them that without purity of life all their learning would be as dust and probably a hindrance to the true progress of the world. Then I took up these three things and a few more by way of illustration. Throughout 35 years’ unbroken experience of public service in several parts of the world, I have not yet understood that there is anything like spiritual or moral value apart from work and action. I have often repeated to audiences like this that great verse which has always remained with me ever since I read it: “Not every-one that says unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter the Kingdom of Heaven but he who doeth the will of my Father who is in Heaven.”\(^1\) I have not reproduced that verse correctly but you know what that verse is and it is so true. I recall to my mind two brilliant instances of men in English public life who, in their own times, were regarded as very great reformers, and as pillars of spirituality. I am now talking to you of about 1889 and 1890 when many of you were not born. I used to attend temperance meetings in those days. I was interested in that reform. Those two pillars of spirituality were supposed to be great temperance workers, but they were workers with their speeches. They were always in demand when a harangue was required on temperance. I am sorry to have to inform you that I was a witness to their fall. Both of them were found out. They were no workers. The words God, Lord, Jehovah were on their lips always, but they simply adorned their lips, they were not in their hearts. They used the temperance platform for their own base ends. One of them was a speculator and the other was a moral leper. Perhaps you now understand what I want to say. In India also, I am not able to say that the temperance platform is always a spiritual platform or that the platform of untouchability must necessarily be a spiritual platform. I have known, I know now as I am talking to you, that both these platforms are being abused today in this very land by several people. Others are using them aright. The moral I want to submit to you is that every act may be done, conceived and presented from a spiritual standpoint or it may have none of it at all. I want to claim before you today that the message of the spinning-wheel and khadi is supremely a spiritual message; and it is supremely a spiritual message for this land that it has got tremendous economic consequences as also political consequences.

\(^1\) St. Matthew, vii. 21

Only the other day, an American friend, Prof. Sam Higginbottom, writing to me upon a subject in which both he and I are deeply interested, said,—I give you the substance of the letter—“I don’t believe in a religion bereft of economics. Religion to be worth anything must be capable of being reduced when necessary to terms of economics.” I entirely endorse that remark with a big mental reservation. Not that Mr. Higginbottom also had not that reservation. But I must not claim to speak for him. The mental reservation is this, that whereas religion to be worth anything must be capable of being reduced to terms of economics, economics, to be worth anything, must also be capable of being reduced to terms of religion or spirituality. Therefore in this scheme of religion cum economics there is no room for exploitation and for Americanization as the technical term is known. As a distinguished son of India put it—he is no other than Sir M. Vishveshvarayya—whereas an Englishman owns 30 slaves, or is it 36,—I speak subject to correction—an American owns 33 slaves. Personally, I think there is no room in true economics which is convertible with religion for the owning of slaves whether they are human beings, cattle or machinery. There is no room for slavery in economics. Then I suggest to you that you cannot escape khadi and it has the largest limit. Temperance takes in its orbit a certain number of people. It blesses the man who converts the drunkard to teetotalism, and it undoubtedly blesses the drunkard who is so converted by the word of the reformer. Untouchability takes in its orbit at the most seven crores of people of this unhappy land, and not every one of us can do untouchability work. You may certainly give the untouchable education; you may dig wells for him and build temples. But these would not make him touchable unless the so-called touchables will come down from their insolent heights and brother the untouchable. So you will see it is a somewhat complex problem for the man and woman in the street to handle. And as a man whose sole occupation in life is, be it ever so humble, to find out truth, I was searching for something that everyone can do without exception—everybody in this room—that something which would also remedy the most deepseated disease of India.

And the most deep-seated disease of India is undoubtedly not drunkenness, undoubtedly not untouchability, great as those diseases are and greater perhaps for those who are suffering from them; but when you examine the numerical content of this disease, you will find with me, if you take any census returns, or any authentic book on history, such for instance as Sir William Hunter’s history, or take the evidence of Mr. Higginbottom given before a Commission only two years ago—he said that the largest number of people in India were poverty-stricken, and Sir William Hunter says that one-tenth of the population in India is living barely on one meal a day consisting of a stale roti and a pinch of dirty salt which perhaps you and I will not touch—that state of things persists in India today. If you were to go into the interior, outside the railway track, you will find as I have found that the villages are being reduced to dungheaps, the villagers are not there, vultures are to be seen because they could not support themselves, and were reduced to carcasses.

India is suffering from meningitis, and if you will perform the necessary operation and make some return to those starving millions today, I say there is nothing but khadi for you. And if, as men spiritually inclined, you will think of those less fortunate than you are and who have not even enough to support themselves or clothe themselves, if you will have an indissoluble bond between them and yourselves, I say once more there is nothing for you but khadi. But it jars, and the reason why it jars is that this is a new thing and is a visionary thing, a day-dream as it appears to many. The missionary friend of Vellore, whom I spoke about, told me at the end of our conversation, “Yes, but can you stem the march of modern progress? Can you put back the hands of the clock, and induce people to take to your khadi and make them work on a mere pittance?” All I would say is that this friend did not know his India. From the Vellore meeting I went to two places, Arcot and Arni. I did not see much of the people there, I assure you, but saw the villagers less well clad than I am. I saw them not in their tens but in their tens of thousands. They were in their rage and their wages were practically nil for four months in the year. They gave me of their substance; I was hungrily looking at the thing they gave me. They gave me not pice; they gave pies.

Come with me to Orissa in November, to Puri, a holy place, and a sanatorium, where you will find soldiers and the Governor’s residence during summer months. Within ten miles’ radius of Puri you will see skin and bone. With this very hand I have collected soiled pies from them tied tightly in their rags, and their hands were more paralysed than mine were at Kolhapur. Talk to them of modern progress. Insult them by taking the name of God before them in vain. They will call you and me fiends if we talk about god to them. They know, if they know any God at all, a God of terror, vengeance, a pitiless tyrant. They do not know what love is. What can you do for them? You will find it difficult to change these delightful sisters (pointing to the ladies present) from their silk saris to coarse khadi woven by those paralytic and crude hands. Khadi is rough! It is too heavy! Silk is soft to be touched and they can wear nine yards of silk, but they cannot wear 9 yards of khadi. The poor sisters of Orissa have no saris; they are in rags. But they have not lost all sense of decency, but I assure you we have. We are naked in spite of our clothing, and they are clothed in spite of their nakedness. It is because of these that I wander about from place to place, I humour my people, I humour my American friends. I humoured two stripling youths from Harvard. When they wanted my autograph, I said, “No autograph for Americans”. We struck a bargain, “I give you my autograph; and you take to khadi”. They have promised and I rely on the word of an American gentleman. Many of them are doing this work—make no mistake about it, and they like it also.

But I cannot be satisfied, not till every man and woman in India is working at his or at her wheel. Burn that wheel if you find a better substitute. This is the one and only work which can supply the needs of the millions without disturbing them from their homes. It is a mighty task and I know that I cannot do it. I know also that God can do it. The mightiest and strongest matter is but a tiny affair for Him, when it pleases Him. He can destroy them all in the twinkling of an eye, as He has destroyed now thousands of homes in Gujarat and as He had destroyed thousands of homes a few years ago in South India. I carry this message of khadi and the spinning-wheel with the fullest faith in God, and therefore in His creation, man. You may laugh at me today. You may call this a sordid thing. If you like you may distrust me and say this is some political schemer who has come to place his khaddar before us, but he has got many things up his sleeve. You may misinterpret me and my message. You may say: ‘We are too weak to do these things and too poor’. I know it is possible for you to repel me by your arguments and make me speechless. But I shall not lose faith in you so long as I cannot lose faith in God. It is impossible for me to lose that faith, and therefore I cannot lose faith in the message of khadi and the spinning-wheel.

If I have not succeeded in opening out my heart to you, and if I have not succeeded in showing to you the rock-bottom spirituality of the message of khaddar, I don’t think I shall ever succeed in doing so. All I can say is I mean to succeed. My lips may not deliver the true message. God will do it all, in whose name I have delivered this message to you. God bless you.

Young India, 15-9-1927

11. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, MADRAS

September 4, 1927

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I thank you for the addresses that you have presented to me and the different purses. The general purse amounts to Rs. 13,235-2-6. Rs. 100 from Purasawalkam labourers, Rs. 52-0-11 from the staff of the Indian Industrial Company, Rs. 13 from Jam Bazaar, and additional collections from students Rs. 18. For all this I thank you. I wish that it was possible for me to speak on the various topics that engage the attention of the servants of the country at the present moment. Though I hold strong views on most of those questions, I do not propose at the present moment to deal with them. But let me reiterate my faith before this vast audience. I believe in non-violent non-co-operation as much as I ever did. So far as I can see, there is nothing but non-violent non-co-operation as an alternative to violence. My faith in the possibility and necessity of Hindu-Muslim unity is as strong as ever. But so far as I am concerned, I have nothing but heartfelt prayer for its early achievement. I ask this vast audience to pray for the success of the deliberations of the Hindu and Mussalman leaders that are to take place on the 6th instant and thereafter at Simla.

1 At Triplicane Beach
2 At Delhi
My faith in the necessity of removing untouchability, which is a blot upon Hinduism, is also as green as ever.

I have been watching with very considerable interest the agitation that is going on in your midst on the part of some of the youths for the removal of the Neill Statue. To me it is like a cloud no bigger than a man’s thumb. It is also like every other cloud capable of overspreading the Indian skies. I do hope that those who are owners of this statue will understand the significance of this movement although it appears to be trifling at the present moment. I appeal to the young men who are behind this movement, of whom I have no knowledge whatsoever, not to spoil a good case by a single, hasty and inconsiderate step.

You have invited the National Assembly to meet here in this great city during the year. Madras enjoys the unique reputation of having one of its most distinguished sons as President of this great Assembly. I cannot tell you how much I miss his presence this evening. It is up to you and up to every citizen of Madras to make the coming session of the Congress a brilliant success. I know that you have here, unfortunately, dissensions between Brahmins and Non-Brahmins. In view of the great task that lies in front of you, I beseech you, everyone, to see to it that these dissensions are removed so far as it is humanly possible to remove them and that they are not allowed to interfere with the preparations that you must make in order to ensure the success of the national gathering. I look forward to the time when we shall not think of Hindus, Mussalmans, Christians, Jews, Parsis, etc., or Brahmins, Non-Brahmins, untouchables, etc., as warring elements in our midst. But I look forward to the time—so long as these diversities must continue—when we shall all regard ourselves as branches of one great beautiful tree called the undivided and indivisible Indian Nation. And I wish that this so-called benighted city in the so-called benighted presidency should enjoy the honour of having brought about this desirable result.

And now I will come to the business that has brought me to Madras and that will send me to the end of this Southern Presidency. How I wish I could convince every one of you here that khadi is really calculated to become the best cement to bind all of us together. How I wish I could convince you that in all our little quarrels and squabbles we take little or no account of the voiceless millions whom for the time being we misrepresent. How I wish I could convince you that our obstinacy in not seeing the obvious results that must come from the adoption of khadi makes the progress of khadi itself so lamentably slow. And owing to the slowness of the progress of khadi, some of you turn against me and tell me that khadi has no vitality. And ignoring your obstinacy, you make the advance of khadi not only slow but you make the advance of the country itself almost impossible. And in your impatience to reach the common goal you refuse to see that you are yourselves the greatest obstacle in our march. You refuse to see the simple thing that is in front of you and then not finding any other activity you give way to unmanly despair. I ask you, for the sake of the country, for the sake of the toiling millions, for the sake of God, to shake yourselves free from this lethargy.

---

1 S. Srinivasa Iyengar

I wish that I had the courage to keep this great audience waiting to hear more of what is swelling up in my breast. I therefore conclude with the prayer to God who is watching over us all that He may give us the wisdom to see the path that lies in front of us and the courage to tread that path.

_The Hindu, 5-9-1927_

12. SPEECH ON “GITA”, MADRAS

_Sevenember 4, 1927_

I thank you for the address and the purse. The purse is doubly welcome to me as also the address after the knowledge that I have now gained that Mr. Sastri was the Headmaster of this school. I congratulate you on having given to the Servants of India Society, Mr. Gokhale’s successor, and to India one of her most brilliant and devoted sons. Your school professes to be a Hindu school, with emphasis on the word “Hindu”. I suppose therefore I have a right to expect something characteristic of the Hindu about all of you. If you will live up to your name you would be expected to show Hindu culture at its best in every one of your acts. I wonder if all of you are able to say that you have read the _Bhagavad Gita_. Those who have, will please raise their hands, honestly of course (about 10 persons raised their hands). Now it seems to me that in the very test I have applied the vast majority of you have failed. “If the salt loses its flavour wherewith shall it be salted?” I have given an English proverb, but there is a corresponding one which we know in the North and it is this: “When the ocean is on fire who will be able to quench the fire?” Will you not in all humility ask that question very seriously of every one of you? Will you not make a confession that you have been weighed and found wanting? Imagine a Christian High School and its Old Boys’ Association being unaware of the contents of the Bible! Imagine a Mahomedan High School and the Muslim Old Boys’ Association of that school not knowing the Koran, and don’t you feel with me that every Hindu boy and, for that matter, every Hindu girl, should know the book in the Hindu scriptures which is equal to and should be in the estimation of the Hindu, the Koran and Bible? I hope therefore that now that your eyes have been opened publicly you will immediately set about correcting yourself and understanding the message of the Gita. I would like to know how many of you know the elements of Sanskrit. Those of you who do know it, please raise your hands (A number of hands was raised). Thank you.

---

1 At Singarachari Hall, Hindu High School, Triplicane

Half, or perhaps a little more than half of you know Sanskrit. Then let me inform you that the Sanskrit of the Gita is incredibly simple. Those of you who know Sanskrit should tomorrow, if possible today, buy the Gita—and I understand you can get the book for a very small price—and begin to study the book. Have private Gita classes for yourselves. Those of you who do not know Sanskrit should study Sanskrit only for the sake of the Gita. If you have not got that much facility, then you should read Gita written in English or in Tamil, if there is a Tamil translation of it. I tell you that it contains treasures of knowledge of which you have no conception whatsoever. I suggest to you that at first you may begin to read the third chapter of the Gita. You will find there the gospel of selfless work expounded in a most convincing manner. Selfless work there is described characteristically by one beautiful word called yajna. If you will read the book with my eyes you will find charkha also described there. There is one passage which says that “He who eats without serving, without yajna, is a thief.” ¹ I want you not to go to the dictionary for finding out the meaning of the word yajna. Do not run away with the idea that by purchasing a few faggots of wood and then burning them with ghee to the accompaniment of certain hymns, you have performed yajna. That the word has had that meaning at one time, there is not doubt about it; and when it did bear the meaning, it had its use. You will find in another part of the Gita an injunction almost that you must bring your intelligence and your reason to bear upon the meaning of the Shastras. Applying my reason to find out the meaning of this beautiful word I come to the conclusion that the yajna that you, I and these sisters and the old boys and the little girls can perform—it must be a yajna of that character in order to follow the context of the Gita—is nothing apart from the spinning-wheel. But I do not want to give you a discourse on the spinning-wheel. What I desire to tell you is that, if you will search that book through and through, you will find there men-tioned in such simple words, brahmacharya, satya, ahimsa, abhayam and others which ought to be the primary qualities of everyman of God. The last word I leave with you is that you should read that book with a prayerful spirit, not in a carping spirit, and to obey the dictates of that book.

¹ III. 12

_The Hindu, 5-9-1927_

13. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

MADRAS,
September 5, 1927

TO MIRABEHN
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM
WARDHA

SORRY FEVER PROVING OBSTINATE. PRAY TAKE PRESCRIBED MEDICINE. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5268. Courtesy: Mirabehn

14. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

September 5, 1927

CHI. MIRA.

I have just got Jamnalalji’s wire. The fever seems to be proving obstinate. It is better for you not to object to the medicines that the doctors may prescribe. There are many delicate reasons why you may not object to medicines under the circumstances that face you today.
My fear is that probably your brain is overwrought. You may have brooded much over the segregation matter and your future plans at the Ashram. Our motto is ‘Be careful for nothing’. Anxiety is the mother of many diseases. But whatever the cause, let the physical effect be treated by physical remedies such as medicines, etc. Control of the mind and freedom from all care must be cultivated side by side. No anxiety please about speaking in Hindi to everybody there. My advice and expectations are always conditional. The condition being “consistently with capacity”. Of your own capacity you must be the final judge. On no account must health be placed in jeopardy. I suppose Krishnadas and Valunjker are nursing you. I assume that you are keeping altogether cheerful in the midst of this pain and trial.

May God be your Rock, Help, Strength and All.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5270. Courtesy: Mirabehn

15. LETTER TO AN INMATE OF THE ASHRAM

September 5, 1927

I have your letter. It was good you gave me all the details. I cannot doubt you.

We should observe a convention which does not run counter to morality. Brahmacharya is said to be protected by nine hedges. If you have not read of it, do so in Raichandbhai’s book. We neglect some of those hedges. I am responsible for this. Hence such neglect is only tentative. But we do observe the rule of never being alone in the company of even our own sister. I fully see the need for this. That protects both.

A brahmachari should be utterly humble and should not trust himself. There are two reasons for such diffidence. One is that he himself may thereby remain pure and the other is that the sister who comes in contact with him may not entertain lustful thoughts even in her dreams. All the world has a right to suspect a brahmachari and it ought to have this right. The world does not observe brahmacharya. The world believes that no one can conquer the passions which it cannot itself conquer and that is only right. Hence we should not be offended by the world’s suspicion. Know that all who stay there are included in the world.
Others have slipped through the liberty which you have taken innocently. In the beginning they were innocent. Even if you yourself have reached the stage at which you can never succumb to passion, you should still observe the restraints for the sake of others. We come across many who claim to observe brahmacharya. Could we allow them all to take such liberties?

I myself have not yet been able to conquer passions. Do you not know this? If I am not able to assure myself or the world about myself, you should be all the more careful about yourself.

Desire is a scorpion. One never knows when it will sting. It is ananga. So we cannot see it; we cannot catch it, even if we try. That is why a brahmachari has to remain ever vigilant.

What you write about Bhai Chhaganlal Joshi and others is not right. They are all making efforts. We do not live outside the world, nor do we wish to hate the passions in others; we only wish to be free from them ourselves and live on thus free.

You should therefore be vigilant. If you wish to ask me something more, do so.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

16. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day [September 5, 1927]

SISTERS,

I have your note.

You must have understood the point of my suggestion that you should develop contacts with the women labourers of the Ashram. Getting a couple of cowries from them for relief work is just an excuse. The chief purpose is that through such occasions you should establish a bond of fellowship with them. You should try to understand each other and should partake of each other’s joys and sorrows. I do not mean that you should spend much time over this. It is really a matter of change of heart. It should be your desire that they

---

1 Without body; in Indian mythology, sexual desire symbolized by a deity without a body. The body of the God of love perished in the fire from Siva’s third eye.

2 From the reference to taking interest in the women labourers at the Ashram have the same food as we, and the same clothes, that they too get everything we desire and obtain for ourselves. And we should put this into practice as far as we can.

You will be overwhelmed if you try to give what I am saying a wide meaning. Words have at least two meanings—a narrow one and a broad one. We should try to comprehend the broader meaning, but begin cautiously to put into effect the narrower one, so that we are not crushed by the immensity of the task.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3664

17. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

[After September 5, 1927]

There are of course many types of valour in the world. There should be an Indian type for an Indian Victoria Cross. If a Gango Teli moves with his bullock in endless circles and crushes oil for society and does it selflessly, is it not great valour? The devout Gango became famous obviously because he had courage. Why did not Ghelo the oilman attain fame?

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

18. LETTER TO NARAYAN MOreshwar KharE

Monday/Tuesday [September 5/6, 1927]

BHAI PANDITJI,

I have your letter.

Gangabehn informs me that one day when you missed the prayer because you had gone to sleep you fasted and have taken a vow that each time it happens again you will fast for the day. If that is so you have done right. However, along with the insistence on getting

---

1 In the source this letter appears after the entries for September 5.
2 Oilman
3 A proper name also meaning ‘silly’
4 From the contents, which suggest that the letter was written earlier than the letter of September 14, 1927 to the addressee up early you should also insist on going to bed early. Even for the sake of the children, we adults should inculcate this habit.

I am happy to know that the prayer is now going on well. I hope those who have resolved to attend it regularly will not absent themselves without reason. I feel that if this resolve is adhered to, it will have the most desirable results.

It is certainly necessary to observe the same kind of silence at the evening prayer as is observed at the morning prayer. One way to ensure this is that no one should talk till the prayer is over. I have myself not observed this rule. From now on I will. No one may come and sit down too early for the prayer. The prayer should begin not a moment later than the appointed time. Then there will be absolutely no need to detain anyone afterwards. As soon as one arrives for the prayer one should sit down in the proper posture and close one’s eyes. Children should also learn to observe these manners. No one should sell datun before the prayer is over. I also feel there is need to stop the plying of takli during the prayer. I blame myself for encouraging the takli. But it is necessary to stop plying it during prayer time. Of course if everyone is sitting with the eyes closed there can be no question of plying the takli. It is necessary that everyone should be calm and attentive when the Ramayana is being recited. It is a question whether to keep the eyes closed or not at that time. The person who is leading the prayer will of course keep his eyes open. Another person whose duty it is to seat the guests, if there are any, and shoo away stray dogs, should keep his eyes open. It is necessary that persons on this duty should be changed every week. After the prayer, you may give news of the Ashram if there is any or if need be take up some discussion. Read this out to everyone and after due deliberation accept whatever is worth accepting. After deciding what to take, frame rules accordingly and get them printed. Sell the printed copies of the rules whenever necessary. It will be useful for a few days to read out these rules at the prayer meetings. You should always keep a few copies of the rules handy at the meetings, so that when a new person comes, the gate-keeper can respectfully give him one. These are some external remedies for bringing about concentration at the prayer meetings. It is only to this extent that we as a society can and should enforce control. The remedy for gaining control of inner self is...¹ and purity of our leaders. If even one person with a pure heart can achieve concentration it is a rule admitting of no exception that its effect will be felt by everyone. It is a different thing that we always do not experience such effect. It is experienced by practice. The external remedies I have suggested will help us purify our inner selves if they are adopted with that purpose in view. Else we shall be dubbed hypocrites.

¹ A word is undecipherable here.

We have a collection of some very useful books, so pay close attention to the library. We should have a few copies made of the lists of contents of those books. The books which are useless, that is to say, which are not worth reading should either be discarded or burnt.
Books should be listed both language-wise and subject-wise and there should be lists of contents. The thing to do is to engage a person exclusively for the library. I feel that the work is so important that if no one from amongst us can be spared, then a person who is not interested in any other activity except the library work and who abides by our rules should be employed on a salary basis or else we should keep only those books which are of use to us and send the rest to the library of the Mahavidyalaya. This whole question needs consideration.
All of you should think over it. I shall discuss it with Kaka and others.
This work is both urgent and not so urgent. I have both aspects in my mind. I have been thinking over it for a long time. Discuss it with Valji too.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photos tat of the Gujarati C.W. 251

19. SPEECH ON PROHIBITION, MADRAS

September 6, 1927

FRIENDS,

I am supposed to talk to you this morning about prohibition. I don’t remember having talked to a select audience on ‘Prohibition’ in my life except at one time, although I can claim to be a staunch prohibitionist as I am a staunch khaddarite. My life has been so cast that I get little chance of talking on such matters to a select audience.
The one reason for that flaw in me is that I am a crank or I am supposed to be a crank, and therefore very often before a select

1 At Mani Aiyar Hall, Triplicane audience I feel like a fish out of water. All cranks are necessarily extremists and where others feel the necessity for caution and moderation and such like about things that matter in life, I feel as if I am nowhere, as if I have no place. When someone says to me that in this practical world I must go slowly, I become impatient and tell him, “How can you go slowly in the matter of prohibition? You won’t talk like that to a woman whose husband is drunkard.” I have lived in a family where the husband happened to be a drunkard. That was in Pretoria in 1893. The lady tried to make ends meet and was always in dread as to what would happen when her lord and master returned home. If I had told her that “In this practical world we must go slowly”, she would not have allowed me to continue as her cotenant. You may imagine me to be in that plight but not with one husband, not one but thousands of husbands. How can you ask me to wait? I become impatient, angry and, non-violent though I am, you will see fierceness in my eyes. I said the same thing to Mr. Anderson, the Secretary of the Temperance Association. I feel strongly about it. There are more things about which my feelings are strong and speech becomes useless for me. Those are really sacred things which I keep in my bosom and when opportunity offers itself I express my views strongly which the world cannot possibly mistake.

In this matter of prohibition we have some Englishmen with us, because they happen to be Missionaries or Christians. I do not know whether there are other Englishmen with us in this matter. They are all for some purpose too practical. They say we should realize the difficulties of Government. Why should I realize the difficulties of Government in this matter? The difficulties are purely financial and nothing else. There are three acid tests in this connection.

Not one Englishman has yet told me that prohibition is an impossibility in India except for finance. Everybody says: “Oh yes. You want to make India bear the burden of additional taxation by the introduction of prohibition, for the education of your children, etc.” I would like India to become a pauper rather than that India should have lakhs and lakhs of drunkards in her midst in order to educate her children, or I would have Indian children illiterate rather than have drunkenness in the land as the price of their education. But when I am called upon to become a party to additional taxation I say “Hands off”; because there are other ways in which you can make up this financial loss. I think Government made the initial blunder of considering abkari as a source of revenue. It should never have been considered a source of revenue and it is not to be a source of revenue.
And my grievance is definite and tangible that this source of revenue should have been left in charge of the transferred departments to meet the charges of education, sanitation, etc., so that our ministers have to fall back upon this immoral, sinful and hideous source of revenue.
There is nothing so sinful as this kind of revenue. It is difficult to contain myself and I have therefore to talk to you in a strained language.

I feel that so far as India is concerned she has a complete case for prohibition and not prohibition piece-meal in one or two districts.
I have read the speech of the Madras Excise Minister. I am sorry I have had to write something criticizing that speech in the coming issue of the Young India. The method of experimenting in one or two districts does not appeal to me. I shall not be surprised if he makes the experiment in one or two districts and if the experiment fails then it would be said that prohibition can never be tried and it can never be successful. You will try to do the right thing in the wrong manner and then denounce the right thing instead of the wrong manner. The country is in favour of prohibition. If it is a question of lakhs and lakhs of signatures in favour of prohibition it is merely a matter of organization. I have not found a single place where there has been really agitation against prohibition except when it is manufactured and financed also. There are States where territorial prohibition has been declared and where not a single man has come forward to say “we want a shop at least here.” In one of the States, Europeans, who consumed whisky and brandy, are exempted. But, we are in this matter terribly handicapped; we have as our rulers or Governors those who do not consider drink as a crime or immorality. I have myself English friends who laugh at me when I talk of prohibition. I have great regard for them. They seem to think that if they drink in moderation they would not lose their sense and would not become brutes. I have myself seen these friends not only losing their sense but becoming brutes. I have seen many friends losing self-control when they drink.
They are first-class men. But when they drink they become asses. It may be excusable to have spirituous liquor in countries near the North Pole. There is no need in this country at all for drink. Yet some agitation is going on here against prohibition. I had [from someone] a pile of anti-prohibition pamphlets published anonymously. They \[Vide\] “Total Prohibition”, 8-9-1927.

constituted a hymn in praise of liquor. Radical, scriptural and all sorts of authorities have been quoted in favour of drinking in moderation and the whole thing has been presented in such an insidiously attractive form that a man who has not his wits about him may easily become a convert to the drink habit.

If you are a fierce prohibitionist like myself and if you will agitate from one end of the country to the other for prohibition, you will certainly succeed. Let us not fall into the financial trap that is laid for us. Our position should be absolutely clear. It is not our purpose to find out finances. Those who committed the initial blunder must retrace their steps. There is also a way out of the financial difficulty. Cut out 25 crores from the crores you spend upon military expenditure. The military expenditure has been jumping from day to day. If you prepare a chart it would show a staggering growth of that expenditure. You can cut out a heavy slice from that expenditure. I must not go into the political history of the question. Whatever deficit that is found in connection with the abkari revenue should be made good out of military expenditure and no other. There should be no additional taxation on this score. The result will be that in 10 years’ time the revenue of the Government will increase enormously and that is the experience of countries where prohibition has been tried.

Do not believe the interested writings in newspapers that total Prohibition has been a failure in America. Scarcely an American who comes to India goes away without seeing me. These Americans and the literature published by the Prohibition League give the testimony that the sum-total effect of prohibition is to the good of the country although they have not been able to claim all the brilliant results that they had thought they would be able to have. There is no public opinion in America supporting the removal of prohibition. The Government is their own government and people are satisfied with the state of things there. The labourer leads a sober and honest life there. Is not that sufficient consideration for loss of revenue? Such a state of things exists in another part of the world, but not in India unfortunately. The experience of countries which have tried prohibition is that the people have become better and that the country has not been financially ruined. No ruin, no financial crisis will befall India if prohibition is introduced in India. It is the solemn duty of every one of us to see the use of drink wiped out of the land altogether if we possibly can. If I had the power and if I could have my way, I would do so today.

I come to picketing. I confess that some pickets were violent; but the real reason for Government not tolerating picketing was the loss of revenue. People in Bihar all on a sudden became teetotallers and they were faithful to the pickets. In Assam the same thing happened. The opium dens were closed for the time being. It was a thing too terrible for Government to contemplate. There was ample evidence to show that picketing was useful and necessary and it conferred immense benefit upon India. It showed the possibility of prohibition. In America prohibition has created a tremendous spiritual upheaval. But the task of creating that spiritual consciousness was great in America. But we in India have not the hundredth part of the difficulty that the Americans had to surmount. They had to surmount the American nature itself. Here it is not so for the atmosphere is favourable to prohibition. Therefore you need not go here cautiously. Arm-chair politicians who have no knowledge of the conditions of India do not distinguish between American and Indian life. They cannot see that we can attain prohibition if only you have the will and courage.

I make a distinction between opium and drink. Opium acts as an opiate and makes a man an idiot, whereas drink makes a man a beast. A woman would rather have her husband an idiot than a drunkard. I am willing to make an exception for the use of liquor or brandy for medicinal purposes. I make also the distinction between England and India. What is good enough for England is not necessarily good enough for India. If we allow this drink problem to continue, our posterity will curse us.

_The Hindu, 6-9-1827_

20. SPEECH AT HINDI PRACHAR OFFICE

_Gandhiji said it was superfluous for him to receive an address from the institution as he regarded it as his own._

Still I understand your view of the matter. This was till now a child being nourished and looked after by the generous people of the North. It has now become a youth who should look after himself and

---

1 In reply to addresses, one by the members of the Hindi Premi Mandal and another by the staff and workers of the Hindi Prachar Press.
become self-reliant. I meant that henceforward South India should collect enough money from here to make the institution self-supporting.

I appeal to the Marwaris, Gujaratis and other northern settlers here to regard this institution as their own and pay more attention to the work in all possible ways. Marwaris are businessmen by nature and I want them to instil that spirit in the workers of this institution and help to make this a prosperous and successful one. I would like them to go through the accounts which are open to the public and give necessary instructions, if any, for improvement.

Lastly I want to tell the pracharaks that they can do successful work in this, as in other works of this sort, only if they would lead ideal lives and possess sterling character. For workers of this kind the first essential quality required is firmness and determination to push on the work to a successful end. I am sure the pracharaks will all make this their life-mission if they have not already done so.

The Hindu, 6-9-1927

---

21. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

September 7, 1927

CHI. MIRA,

I anxiously wait for your wires and they come but not to present me with a clean bill.¹ But we must not grumble. Even illness must be turned to advantage and must be taken cheerfully. Your last wire has come just now to tell me that perhaps fever is under control. Let us hope it is. I often think of wiring to you but say to myself I have no right. But my prayers and my blessings are with you always.

“The same in happiness and misery!” is the teaching of the Gita.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5271. Courtesy: Mirabehn

¹ Mirabehn explains: “I had been having a severe attack of malaria. My temperature had been up to over 105.”
22. DISCUSSION WITH NEILL STATUE VOLUNTEERS,
MADRAS

September 6 and 7, 1927

We publish today, with the approval of Mahatma Gandhi, a full report of the Conference which the volunteers of the Neill Statue agitation had with Mahatma Gandhi during his stay in Madras on Tuesday and Wednesday. . . . The notes were taken by The Hindu representative and were revised by Mahatma Gandhi.

Some 20 members of the Tamil Nadu Volunteer Corps who are now engaged in the agitation for the removal of the Neill Statue from the City on Tuesday afternoon conferred with Mahatma Gandhi on the subject for over an hour. The conversations were not over and they were continued the next day.

Mr. D. Kulandai introduced himself as the leader of these young men and told Mahatma how he came into this movement. He said he was horrified at the barbarous sentences which were inflicted upon these youths by the Magistrate and he felt it necessary to give his help and advice as a Congressman and a Secretary of the District Congress Committee. He was not under any pledge and was not courting arrest.

GANDHIJI: Are there one or two who have been sentenced to two years’ R.I. in this connection?

The answer was in the affirmative and Mr. Kulandai added that as a result of their intervention the sentences were not too severe.

KULANDAI: So far 27 had gone to prison on this issue, two of whom are ladies. Most of those had taken part in what was called the Sword Satyagraha at Madura and the total strength of the corps was 200 drawn mainly from Madura and Ramnad districts.

Who conceived this plan of attacking Neill Statue?

And the reply was that Somayajulu and Srinivasavaradan were responsible.

That was after the failure at Madura?

A VOLUNTEER: It was not a failure at all. We went into the streets freely with our swords and we were not arrested. We have thus successfully broken the Arms Act.

Mahatma could not contain his laughter and told them not to delude themselves into thinking that it was a success.

When the Government saw what you were carrying were merely tin swords and you had no public backing, they left you alone in order not to give you any advertisement; and it is therefore no use in saying that because you were not arrested it is a success to your credit.
When the Government removes the Arms Act and makes it possible for every Indian to carry arms you will have achieved your object. But remember that it is not possible. Not even a Swaraj Government can do without an Arms Act. Some check there ought to be.

Therefore, I would like you to believe that the Madura Satyagraha has failed. It is much better to own our failures, if we are to succeed henceforward.

Mahatma next put one or two questions to one or two of other volunteers to test their understanding of the real spirit of satyagraha.

That is why I asked you to define satyagraha. Unless you take up the definition from Young India and learn it, you are not going to succeed in a satyagraha campaign. If you are saturated with the true spirit of satyagraha, I will be at your back and the whole of India will be at your back.

One thing of practical value, I must tell you in this connection. You must not expect public associations to guide you or to identify themselves with satyagraha at the present moment.

"Congress Committees included?" eagerly enquired one present.

Yes, at the present moment. I shall tell you why? The Congress has just now a very difficult task before it; and it cannot possibly handle these sectional movements. By sectional is not meant communal. If the Congress is called upon to help such movements, it will cut a sorry figure. The Congress has a status and a reputation to lose. Therefore it is much better for you young men not to expect the Congress or public bodies to immediately shoulder your movement.

You know the agitation in Cherala-Perala. I sympathized with it. I was keeping myself in touch with that movement. I had even gone to that place because I used to entertain a high regard for it; and addressed a large public meeting. At that time I had influence in the Congress which I do not possess now. Whatever I said then that the Congress should do, it automatically did and hardly any arguments were required. Even in those days I said to Cherala-Perala: “The Congress is not going to shoulder your agitation. The Congress when it is ready will initiate its own civil disobedience. But it cannot take on itself a movement, initiated by others, however great it may be or however ably it may be conducted. It can only look at it from a distance. It can take credit if the movement is successful and can never 1Vide “Chirala-Perala”, 25-8-1921.

---

share the discredit if it becomes unsuccessful.”

Mahatmaji then gave a chapter from his life in South Africa.

I was Secretary of the British Indian Association, brought into being by me. And when I embarked on satyagraha campaign there, I did not want to break up that Association, in which were all kinds of men, by making it a party to that agitation and thereby risking its reputation. From the moment I launched on the agitation, the British Indian Association was kept aloof from satyagraha. Therefore a new association was brought into being called Passive Resistance Association with a separate fund and separate officers. When the full victory was gained the British Indian Association took the credit. That was why I had been able to carry through the struggle without much difficulty. Difficulties there were. I was hammered almost to death. If I had made the blunder of dragging the British Indian Association into the agitation, I would have cut the Association into pieces and there would have been no South African victory. And I would have missed Mahatmaship.

So, you yourself must say to the Congress: ‘You may remain out, let us try our strength in this agitation. You may share the success that we may achieve but not the discredit if we fail.’ I met Mr. Satyamurti this morning and told him also that the Congress cannot possibly today adopt the movement. It will have to study the movement and the men. Let us not sully the fair name of the Congress by any hasty or ill-considered act. But I tell you this also: that when you have proved your mettle and your merit the Congress must be at your back. If the Congress is not at your back under these circumstances, I would be the first to denounce the Congress. In the mean time I want you to be absolutely honest to yourselves. Some persons told me, ‘Oh, oh, you don’t know what they are. They are doing this for getting something in order to live, as they cannot live otherwise’. Don’t try to guess who the informants are and don’t get angry. But falsify the accusation by your conduct.

A chit came at this stage giving the information that two of the youths who offered satyagraha had expressed their regret to the Magistrate and were let off with a fine.

“They are bogus volunteers,” shouted one present.

I don’t expect all of you to be sixteen annas in the rupee. Some wouldn’t be a pie and a few not even that. The apology of the two does not therefore disturb me. And if they were bogus men you have nothing to answer for.

KULANDAI: One difficulty I want to be cleared, Mahatmaji. Suppose the Government and the public know that the Congress is not supporting this movement, it is ten to one possible these boys will get more punishment and less support from the public. I went into this movement because, as I said, I was anxious as the Secretary of the District Congress Committee to save the honour and prestige of the Congress by not leaving these men in the lurch without sympathy or support.

I have already given in illustration of what I did in South Africa as Secretary of the British Indian Association.

KULANDAI: If the Government come to know that the Congress has no sympathy for this movement, all these boys would be clapped in jail. It does not matter.

KULANDAI: Not only that, they will not get any support from the public.

Therefore my plan is to make you independent and self-supporting. We shall not take the name of the Congress, not until we have succeeded. You may take a leaf out of the book of our conquerors. Take the East India Company. It was not owned by the Crown. The Crown came afterwards. Therefore I say that the movement should not be conducted in the name of the Congress and with the authority of the Congress. As individual Congressmen you may carry on the fight.

A satyagrahi never acts hastily, exhausts all other resources before he resorts to civil disobedience. It is only then that the word ‘civil disobedience’ can be used and not otherwise. Yours may be civil disobedience, but if you have been hasty and have not exhausted all the other steps, then I say you should suspend your movement. I give you that advice so that public opinion may be consolidated in your favour, and so that you may be real satyagrahis. You should allow the public to take all the steps possible in their own way to remove the statue; and watch the Government whether they would do anything in the matter. If they don’t, then launch on satyagraha.

If you ask my opinion of what you should do, I shall give it. I should say you are right in your agitation, provided you fulfil the conditions I pointed out. I feel very much for you. It was by accident that I learnt of you and your movement in The Hindu and I at once wrote what I thought proper in Young India.¹ Now that I have seen you and talked to you, I shall try to do more. But before I can do so, I want a guarantee that there is no dishonesty, no self-glorification at least about the leaders of the movement. The leaders may be cobblers or tailors, it does not matter. I want to make sure that our leaders are pure and above board and are not actuated by any expectation of any pecuniary reward. A satyagrahi must stand or fall on his own strength of will.

¹Vide “Notes”, 25-8-1927, sub-title “Insolent Reminders”.

36  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Don’t give me an answer now. I shall give you another opportunity of meeting me. You consider carefully what I have said and tell me when you come back what your plan is. I want you to give me a list of all the volunteers you have, their age, address and occupation; and I want Mr. Kulandai as Congressman to give his certificate, if necessary, about the honesty of the movement and about the trustworthiness of the men in it. If you do not satisfy me in this simple test, you cannot go forward. You have already done spade work. The Neill Statue has got to go some time or other. The success will depend on our own strength. There is no danger in your slowing down.

Repling to Mr. M. S. Subramania Iyer, Mahatmaji said:

The present method might be a satyagrahic act or a violent act. It all depends on the motive. The motive would decide the character of the act. Damage to or destruction of an inanimate object is not always a violent act.

PAVALAR: Do you advise, Mahatma, to suspend the movement?

Yes, if you have not the real strength. But please consider well and tell me what you think, tomorrow.

When the conversations were resumed on Wednesday afternoon, one of the volunteers read the following statement as representing their opinion as a result of the discussions they had that morning and the previous night in the light of the advice given by Mahatmaji:

We have carefully considered your advice given to us yesterday and we have also had a discussion with Mr. S. Satyamurti last night. We have since reconsidered the whole matter this morning. We realize that the situation is a difficult and complex one. We would therefore prefer your advising us as to what we should do now. We will follow your advice. We only crave leave to place before you our considered views for your favourable consideration. We are very anxious that the enthusiasm roused by this movement should not be allowed to fade. We recognize that in order to carry on this struggle to a successful issue we must exhaust all other means of getting the statue removed, must rouse public enthusiasm and organize ourselves. We are afraid that if the movement be suspended without adequate provision being made for keeping up the enthusiasm of the people for organizing the movement and for trying every available means of getting the statue removed the movement may die of inanition. We are anxious therefore that the enthusiasm now roused by the movement should be kept up by all legitimate and peaceful means and that if the movement is to be suspended it should be done as the result of your advice so stated publicly. Moreover, the suspension should be for the express purpose of resorting to this movement at the proper time on a more efficient scale, if necessary.

With a view to that we respectfully suggest that you should be pleased to give this movement a paragraph in Young India each week and speak about it in the course of your tour in Tamil Nadu. Moreover, we should like to have the strength of an assurance from you that at the proper time and if all other means fail you will yourself help us in this movement in all possible ways.

If these things secure your approval we agree for the suspension of the movement for three months as suggested by you. In the mean time we request you to use your influence with the local Congress leaders to give us the necessary help to keep up the agitation for the removal of the statue.

What is the necessary help?

Volunteer: Delivering lectures, enlisting volunteers and strengthening our financial position—these are the ways in which we expect Mahatmaji to help us.

What is the financial assistance for?

The volunteer replied that the volunteers, about a hundred of them, were scattered over Madura and Ramnad Districts. To encamp them, to feed and bring them to Madras money was required.

They are supporting themselves at present?

Volunteer: Yes.

Therefore no money is required for their support at present?

Answer to this question also was in the affirmative.

I should imagine that no money would be required in the future even?

Volunteer: We want money for propaganda work.

What propaganda work?

Volunteer: Convening meetings to get support for the enlistment of volunteers.

Supposing the Congress holds meetings, you wouldn’t require money. Your business really arises when you have to go to jail. The question of bringing volunteers to Madras is a small matter. You do not want all the thousand volunteers, even supposing you have that number, to arrive at Madras at the same time. You are going to court arrest only in twos at the most. A true satyagrahi who is courting arrest and who is even prepared to die for his cause would not want any train fare from you. He is sure to find the train fare himself. If he has not the money himself, other people in his place are sure to find it for him. As for propaganda work, you need not do it yourselves; others will do it for you.

You must really leave finance out of your consideration. Money when required will come to you. But you must not insist upon it. And you must do only what is in your capacity to do and no more. I am interested in your cause because it is an appealing one. I do not want that it should get discredited. That is why I gave you an hour yesterday and another today. I repeat that you must erase financial consideration out of your mind. Otherwise, the thing will break down.

If you want to continue this fight with determination, you must do it in the gentlest manner possible. You must be absolutely honest and self-disciplined; there must be no bluster or violence. You must rely on the innate strength of satyagraha. Some day it is sure to gather irresistible strength. If you think you have not the required strength or patience in you, leave it at once. You have done your part. You have laid the foundation. The struggle will go on and the statue will go because it seeks to perpetuate terrorism of the worst type. The best place for it is the sea. Barring that it must go to England or some lumber room.

The second thing I want to tell you is that by a suspension of the movement if you are afraid of getting disorganized and disunited, I do not want you to stop. But if you do not think so and after three months you would still hold together, you issue a manifesto that you have suspended the struggle saying therein we have been so advised and therefore we have done so. We now expect the Congress and all the public associations to take up this thing in hand and do whatever they can, to have this statue removed. When it has become sufficiently demonstrated that this kind of agitation won’t move the Government, it will be our turn to suffer. Then let it not be said against us that we have been hasty and that once having drawn attention to it, we did not give a chance for the removal of the statue. For these reasons we suspend satyagraha.

Then comes my part in the struggle. I cannot say I won’t lead the struggle; nor am I able to say I shall certainly do so. It will depend on how I feel at the time and how you yourselves have behaved in the mean time. In these matters I am guided by impulse—impulse is not the right word—I wish to say intuition, a sacred word. But all the support the Young India can give will be entirely yours. I shall do whatever I can to educate public opinion through its columns.

In answer to a question:

The final decision will rest with you and not with me. I would not absolve you from your own responsibility. You are the originators; I can direct your energy in proper channel and give you advice. But if you accept my advice and use my name, then you will understand you will do it on my terms. I have given them to you already. I shall reduce them to writing if you want. If there is a departure from those terms by a hair’s breadth even, I shall have nothing to do with it. The cause is good. It will be damaged if at the back of it are bad men. The movement must be a bona fide movement. If it is found that you speak one thing with your lips and mean another, I would not hesitate to denounce it.

To Satyamurti:

What do you say to this? Do you think that the Congress may or will take up this question in any way?

Satyamurti: I see no objection to the Congress taking it up. As far as I can ascertain from friends, the general feeling is that the movement must be supported. What we can do is that in the Corporation we can move resolutions and in the Legislative Council also. And I think we will. Besides that we will use the Press and the platform to create a feeling against the statue as representing terrorism as Mahatmaji put it. For this no financial responsibility need be taken by the young men. The Congress will find money. Is that right, Mr. Kulandai?

Kulandai: That is one view of the subject.

Satyamurti: Even about Congress doing it?

Kulandai: If this opportunity is lost the South Indian temperament is such that the whole thing will fizzle out. That is my own honest individual opinion. If the majority are for suspending it now and taking it up again after three months and if the Congress Committees will do the propaganda work as efficiently as they have been doing the work . . .

Satyamurti: That is for you, the Secretary of the District Congress Committee.

Kulandai: My own honest impression is that the moment we give it up, the movement is lost for ever. Three months means never. The enthusiasm evoked in this presidency over this matter is genuine and it should not be allowed to die out. It is not North Indian temperament, Mahatmaji.

I don’t consider that North India is any better than South India. We are chips of the same block. Absolutely no difference.

A VOLUNTEER: Our only fear is from the incident which took place two days back. Every one of us may not be an absolute satyagrahi. We don’t want demoralization to set in. We want to organize ourselves well, and we want to add more to our number by our further agitation and propaganda. We do not know who among us are real satyagrahis. We started the movement all on a sudden.

Therefore this is really a new ground for suspension.

VOLUNTEER: I do not want at the same time that the Government should be given rest. The agitation must go on in other ways to remove the statue. Ours is only a strategic retreat and no surrender. It is meant for us to go forward with redoubled vigour. We do not want to confess our inability because it would have a demoralizing effect.

This is a new situation. You are really now desirous of covering your weakness under my name.

VOLUNTEER: No, we are merely respecting Mahatmaji’s opinion and advice: and we follow it, lest Mahatmaji should denounce us and lose real satyagrahis.

You said it may be a strategic move. That means you are not at present a well-organized body of real satyagrahis. You may say that it is a discovery you made after conversation with me, and you want to postpone the movement irrespective of all other considerations in order to make up for this defect. There is room for that honest strategy in satyagraha. In making an announcement of your suspension, you can state that after conversations with me you were ill-prepared to satisfy the test that I laid down and recognizing that unless you could fulfil that test, the movement would not succeed, you proposed to postpone this thing for 3 months, during which time you proposed to equip yourselves well so as to satisfy the test and that you would afterwards reopen satyagraha, if in the mean time the offending statue was not removed. That would be the correct satyagraha state. Or do you say you are now ready?

VOLUNTEER: We want the Neill Statue to be removed. If the hundred volunteers we have with us are exhausted, the movement will automatically stop. But the statue may not be removed. Thus we would have failed in our purpose. We want a continuous stream of volunteers coming up until the statue is removed.

You suspend in order to ensure a continuous stream. Suspension therefore is required on that ground. On the other hand, if you feel that you must finish the one hundred or twenty, do so and let it not be said that your enthusiasm was allowed by suspension to cool down. But I must tell you again that in satyagraha there are occasions for suspension. Did I not suspend the Vykom Satyagraha?

You say there would be demoralization if you suspend satyagraha stating you are not ready now. There is no such thing as demoralization in satyagraha. A satyagrahi relies upon his own internal strength and not outside support. But I would feel shocked if at the end of three months you are not ready and if the statue is still there, as is bound to be there, because you know the Government will not easily and without a tremendous effort.

Don’t really suspend if have any fear of its fizzling out. If you want to suspend it, do it on this absolute frank admission that under the circumstances I have mentioned now, you want to suspend.

A VOLUNTEER: Why shall we not go forward?

Yes; I do not want to clamp the zeal of a single man among you. I am anxious to be cautious in this matter.

A VOLUNTEER: We want to ask you one question. That is whether Mahatmaji will give us his support?

Yes, I will support you so long as I find you on the straight road.

Another offer I will make, if you want. I have got complete notes of yesterday; and I believe today also notes are being taken. If you like, I will have them published. It is right for you to let the public know about it. If you don’t want the publication, I shall not do so. I tell you there is no harm in publishing what has happened here; and there is no secrecy about it. Shall I publish them?

VOICES: Yes, yes.

A VOLUNTEER: We shall leave it to your choice to continue the struggle or leave it.

If I were in your place I will suspend the movement making this confession that we are not fully equipped and strong. If you make that confession, you must suspends the movement.

PAVALAR: Some are afraid and some are not. They want your advice, Mahatmaji.

I have given the advice that if I were you, I would suspend.

A VOLUNTEER: Do you permit us to proceed with our struggle?
I don’t prohibit you; in that sense you have my permission.

A VOLUNTEER: You will bless the movement?

You have had my blessings; I shall bless you again.

ANOTHER VOLUNTEER: As for suspending the movement, if you advise us to suspend, we are prepared to suspend.

I cannot take any responsibility. You must not suspend in deference to anybody else. If you suspend, you will do so in response to your own inner voice.

VOLUNTEER: We don’t find our inner voice asking us to suspend.

Then go on.

VOLUNTEER: We shall continue the struggle in the manner in which we are doing at present. Meanwhile we request you to give your support. We will conduct the movement in perfect satyagraha spirit and well-disciplined. But if outsiders of their own accord come in our way and cause disturbance, we request Mahatmji not to blame us. Further, we want you to write in Young India.

In Young India, certainly.

VOLUNTEER: We request you to advise some local Congress leaders to do propaganda work.

I shall certainly advise them. I have discussed the whole thing with Mr. Satyamurti. I suppose he will tell them. I shall publicly advise Congressmen; and you will find it in the notes also to which I have referred. You go on fearlessly; only don’t have complications. Don’t countenance violence or untruth. Either will spoil the cause.

In reply to another volunteer:

You will give me the list of volunteers, with their age, address and occupation. I shall scan the list. You must publish the list also to make the public know who are the authorized satyagrahis. If anyone offers satyagraha he does at his own risk. If more men come into your hand, publish their names also. When you go to the statue don’t attract the public. Go there in the night, even dead of night, in order to avoid a crowd. Give, however, intimation to the police about the time you go there. If you come to know that the police give intimation of the time to the public or people whom they want to create mischief, then you would not inform the Police at all. Let not the public interfere with your work. If they want to take part, let them hold demonstration elsewhere, hold meetings, pass resolutions.

This closed the Conference and the volunteers withdrew.

The Hindu, 10-9-1927
MR. PRINCIPAL, STUDENTS AND FRIENDS

I thank you sincerely for all the gifts you have given me for Daridranarayana. This is not the first time I enter this Hall. It was in 1896 that I entered this Hall in connection with the struggle in South Africa. Dr. Subramania Aiyar of revered memory presided at the function. The reason why I recall this meeting is that I made the acquaintance of the students of India then for the first time. As you may know I am a matriculate, and therefore never had any college education worth the name in India. But when after the address was finished and the thanksgiving completed I went out to students who were lying in wait for me and took away from all the copies of the “Green Pamphlet” that I was then circulating throughout India, and it was for the sake of those students that I asked the late Mr. G. Parameshwaran Pillai, who be-friended the cause and me as no one else did, to print copies and circulate them. With supreme pleasure he printed 10,000 copies of the Pamphlet. Such was the demand on the part of the students for understanding the situation in South Africa and it pleased me immensely, and I said to myself, “Yes, India may be proud of her children and may base all her hopes upon them.” Since that time my acquaintance with students has been growing in volume and intensity. As I said in Bangalore, “more if expected from those who give much, and since you have given me the right to expect much

1 This was published under the caption, “Two Speeches”.
2 From The Hindu, 7-9-1927
3 Ibid
6 Vide “Speech at Citizens’ Meeting, Bangalore”. 28-8-1927.
more. I shall never be satisfied with all that you could give me! You have endorsed some of the work that it has been my privilege to do. You have mentioned with affection and reverence in your address the name of Daridranarayana and you, Sir (Principal), have—and I have no doubt with utmost sincerity—endorsed the claim that I have made on behalf of the spinning-wheel. Many of my distinguished and learned countrymen, I know, have rejected that claim, saying that the little bit of a wheel which was happily put away by our sisters and our mothers could never lead to the attainment of swaraj. And yet you have endorsed that claim and pleased me immensely. Though you, students, have not said as much in your address, yet you have said sufficient in it to warrant the belief that you have in your hearts a real corner for the spinning-wheel. Let not therefore this purse be the first and last demonstration of your affection for the spinning-wheel. I tell you it would be an embarrassment for me if it is the last demonstration of your affection; for I shall have no use for the money if the khadi that may be produced through the distribution of that money amongst the starving millions is not used by you. After all lip profession of faith in the charkha and the throwing of a few rupees at me in a patronizing manner won’t bring swaraj and won’t solve the problem of the ever-deepening poverty of the toiling and starving millions. I want to correct myself. I have said toiling millions. I wish that it was a true description. Unfortunately, as we have not revised our tastes about clothing, we have made it impossible for these starving millions to toil throughout the year. We have imposed upon them a vacation, which they do not need, for at least four months in the year. This is not a figment of my imagination, but it is a truth repeated by many English administrators, if you reject the testimony of your own countrymen who have moved in the midst of these masses. So then if I take this purse away and distribute it amongst the starving sisters, it does not solve the question. On the contrary it will impoverish their soul. They will become beggars and get into the habit of living upon charity. Heaven help the man, the woman or the nation that learns to live on charity! What you and I want to do is to provide work for those sisters of ours living protected in their own homes, and this is the only work that you can provide them with. It is dignified and honest work, and it is good enough work. One anna may mean nothing to you. You will throw it away in getting into a tram car and lazily passing your time instead of taking exercise for 2, 3, 4, or 5 miles as the case may be. But when it finds its way into the pockets of one poor sister it fructifies. She labours for it and she gives me beautiful yarn spun by her sacred hands, a yarn that has a history behind it. It is a thread worth weaving a garment out of, for princes and potentates. A piece of calico from a mill has no such history behind it. I must not detain you over this one theme, great as it is for me, and though it engrosses practically the whole of my time. This purse of yours will not be a help but a hindrance to me If it is not an earnest of your determination henceforth, if you have not it already, that you are not going to wear anything else but khadi.

Let me not be deluded into the belief that you believe in this gospel of khadi, because you give me the purse and because you applaud me. I want you to act up to your profession. I do not want it to be said of you—the salt of India—that you gave this money merely to bamboozle me, that you do not want to wear khadi and that you have no belief in it. Do not fulfil the prophecy that had been made by a distinguished son of Tamil Nadu and a friend of mine. He has said that when I die I will not need any other firewood to reduce my corpse to ashes but the wood that will be collected out of the spinning-wheels that I am now distributing. He has no faith in the charkha and he thinks that those who utter the name of the charkha do so merely out of respect for me. It is an honest opinion. It will be a great national tragedy if the khadi movement turns out to be that and you will have been direct contributors to the tragedy and participators in that crime. It will be a national suicide. If you have no living faith in the charkha, reject it. It would be a truer demonstration of your love; you will open my eyes and I shall go about my way crying hoarse in the wilderness: “You have rejected the charkha and thereby you have rejected Daridranarayana.” But save me and save yourselves the pain, the degradation and the humiliation that await us if there is any delusion or camouflage about this. This is one thing. But there are many things more in your address.

You have mentioned there child marriage and child widows. A learned Tamilian has written to me to address students on child widows. He has said that the hardships of child widows in this presidency are far greater than those of child widows in other parts of India. I have not been able to test the truth of this statement. You should know that better than I do. But what I would like you, young men around me, to do is that you should have a touch of chivalry about you. If you have that, I have a great suggestions to offer. I hope the majority of you are unmarried, and a fair number of you are also brahmacharis. I have to say a fair number” because I know students; a student who casts his lustful eyes upon his sister is not a brahmachari. I want you to make this sacred resolve that you are not going to marry a girl who is not a widow, you will seek out a widow girl if you cannot get a widow girl you are not going to marry at all. Make that determination, announce it to the world, announce it to your parents if you have them or to your sisters. I call them widow girls by way of correction because I believe that a child ten or fifteen years old, who was no consenting party to the so-called marriage, who having married, having never lived with the so-called husband, is suddenly declared to be a widow, is not a widow. It is an abuse of the term, abuse of language and a sacrilege. The word ‘widow’ in Hinduism has a sacred odour about it. I am a worshipper of a true widow like the late Mrs. Ramabai Ranade who knew what it was to be a widow. But a child nine years old knows nothing of what a husband should be. If it is not true that there are such child widows in the presidency, then my case falls to the ground. But if there are such child widows, it becomes your sacred duty to make the determination to marry a girl widow if you want to rid ourselves of this curse. I am superstitious enough to believe that all such sins that a nation commits react upon it physically. I believe that all these sins of ours have accumulated together to reduce us to a state of slavery. You may get the finest constitution that is conceivable dropping upon you from the House of Commons. It will be worthless if there are not men and women fit enough to work that constitution. Do you suppose that we can possibly call ourselves men worthy of ruling ourselves or others or shaping the destiny of a nation containing 30 crores so long as there is one single widow who wishes to fulfil her fundamental wants but is violently prevented from doing so? It is not religion, but irreligion. I say that, saturated as I am with the spirit of Hinduism. Do not make the mistake that it is the Western spirit in me that is speaking. I claim to be full to overflowing with the spirit of India undefiled. I have assimilated many things from the West but not this. There is no warrant for this kind of widowhood in Hinduism.

All I have said about child widows necessarily applies to child wives. You must be able surely to control your lust to this extent, that you are not going to marry a girl that is under 16 years of age. If I could do so I would lay down 20 as the minimum. Twenty years is early enough even in India. It is we who are responsible for the precocity of girls, not even the Indian climate, because I know girls of the age of 20 who are pure and undefiled and able to stand the storm that may rage round. Let us not hug that precocity to ourselves. Some Brahmin students tell me that they cannot follow this principle, that they cannot get Brahmin girls sixteen years old, very few Brahmins keep their daughters unmarried till that age, the Brahmin girls are married mostly before 10, 12 and 13 years. Then I say to the Brahmin youth, “Cease to be a Brahmin, if you cannot possibly control yourself.” Choose a grown-up girl of 16 who became a widow when she was a child. If you cannot get a Brahmin widow who has reached that age, then go and take any girl you like. And I tell you that the God of the Hindus will pardon that boy who has preferred to marry out of his caste rather than ravish a girl of twelve. When your heart is not pure and you cannot master your passions, you cease to be an educated man. You have called your institution a premier institution. I want you to live up to the name of the premier institution which must produce boys who will occupy the front rank in character. And what is education without character and what is character without elementary personal purity? Brahminism I adore. I have defended Varnashrama Dharma. But Brahminism that can tolerate untouchability, virgin widowhood, spoliation of virgins, stinks in my nostrils. It is a parody of Brahminism. There is no knowledge of Brahman therein. There is no true interpretation of the scriptures. It is undiluted animalism. Brahminism is made of sterner stuff. I want these few remarks of mine to go deep down into your hearts. I am watching the boys whilst I am pouring out my heart. I have not come to appeal to your intellects but to your hearts. You are the hope of the country and what I have said is of primary importance for you.

In response to the request of a Calicut professor I shall now proceed to say something about cigarette smoking and coffee and tea drinking. These are not necessities of life. There are some who manage to take ten cups of coffee a day. Is it necessary for their healthy development and for keeping them awake, for the performance of their duties? If it is necessary to take coffee or tea to keep them awake, let them not drink coffee or tea but go to sleep. We must not become slaves to these things. But the majority of the people who drink coffee or tea are slaves to them. Cigars and cigarettes, whether foreign or indigenous, must be avoided. Cigarette smoking is like an opiate and the cigars that you smoke have a touch of opium about them. They get to your nerves and you cannot leave them afterwards. How can a single student foul his mouth by converting it into a chimney? If you give up these habits of smoking cigars and cigarettes and drinking coffee and tea you will find out for yourselves how much you are able to save. A drunkard in Tolstoy’s story is hesitating to execute his design of murder so long as he has not smoked his cigar. But he puffs it, and then gets up smiling and saying, “What a coward am I,” takes the dagger and does the deed. Tolstoy spoke from experience. He has written nothing without having had personal experience of it. And he is much more against cigars and cigarettes than against drink. But do not make the mistake that between drink and tobacco, drink is a lesser evil. No. If cigarette is Beelzebub, then drink is Satan.

There is the Hindi Prachar office supported by people in the North. They have spent nearly a lakh of rupees and the Hindi teachers have been doing their work regularly. Some progress has been made but we have yet to make substantial progress. You can all learn Hindi in one year provided you give one hour a day. You can understand simple Hindi in six months. I can’t speak to you in Hindi because most of you do not know it. Hindi should be made the universal tongue in India. You should know also Sanskrit, for then you will be able to read Bhagavad Gita. As students of a premier Hindu institution, you ought to be taught Bhagavad Gita. I would expect Mussalman boys also to read in this institution.

A VOICE: No Panchama is admitted.

This is a discovery to me. This institution should be flung open to Panchamas and Mussalmans. I would de-Hinduize this institution if a Panchama has no entry here. (Hear! hear!) The fact that this is a Hindu institution is no reason why a Mussalman or a Panchama could not receive education here. I think it is high time that the trustees revise their constitution. This is a petition from me, and earnest and a very God-fearing Hindu, saturated with the spirit of Hinduism, not from a petty-fogging reformer, but from one who is trying to live the best in Hinduism. Mr. Principal, you will please convey this petition to the proper quarters, and it will be a great joy to me to hear during my sojourn in this presidency that my petition has been heard.¹ I thank you for listening to this message.

Young India, 15-9-1927

¹ The principal of the College in his vote of thanks said that attempts were being made to throw open the College to all classes of Indians.
I thank you for the address and purse for khadi. I am glad to find that you are taking interest in all that pertains to the Congress. And it pleases me to find your assurance that you are determined to do your share of work in making the forthcoming Congress a thorough success. The Reception Committee here has unanimously elected a tried servant of India to preside over the deliberations. He comes to his task with one great mission that he has set before himself. Dr. Ansari, Surgeon, and one of the best surgeons that India has produced, surgeon that he is, is bent upon healing the breach between Hindus and Mussalmans. I know that many Provincial Congress Committees gave their votes in favour of Dr. Ansari’s name in the right hope that his chairmanship of the Congress will result in healing the deep wounds. But let us not make the mistake of supposing that because we have elected him our task is fulfilled. A patient’s task is never fulfilled simply because he calls in for his assistance the wisest and best surgeon. He is expected to co-operate with his surgeon body and mind. He is expected to be faithful to the directions of the surgeon. We are the patients. Dr. Ansari is the surgeon whom we have invited. And if we do not co-operate with him in the great task that he has undertaken, the fault will not be his but ours. And since the greatest burden will fall upon the shoulders of those Congressmen who are in Madras and delegates that will flock in largest numbers from the South, it is a matter of great pleasure to me that you are determined to make this Congress a success. You have taken upon your shoulders a very great and grave responsibility. I understand that Sjt. Srinivasa Iyengar is daily in telegraphic communication with the secretary here betraying his care and anxiety about the forthcoming session of the Congress. It is for the men and women of Madras to lighten his labours and make his task easy. We must not expect our leaders to do everything for us. It is often heard against us as a reproach that we, the rank and file, will not put the shoulders to the wheel. I would like Madras to remove the reproach.

You have declared your faith in the spinning-wheel and khadi. You tell me in your address that if arrangements are made for... supplying you with cotton and for taking all the yarn that may be spun off your shoulders, you will be able to organize spinning and weaving of khadi. If you are serious about this matter you have to go one step further. You must form your own committee and find your own cotton. Every spinner in order to be a good spinner has got to learn carding and make his or her own sliver. You should aim at weaving all the yarn that is produced; that is the best and cheapest method of producing khadi. If you cannot weave khadi for yourselves and if you give good, strong, even and weavable yarn the All-India Spinners’ Association will certainly take up all the yarn that you can give.

I understand that this is a labour centre. To the fellow labourers I would say just one word. You must give up drink at any cost. And so must you gambling and vice. It is not a difficult task for the labourers to give up this great curse of drink which is sapping their vitality and morals. Indian labour has a bright future before it if it will only help itself. The best beginning in self-help is self-purification. Let the labourers also remember that there are millions who are, so far as finance is concerned, brothers infinitely worse than they are. And if they will but think of these brothers and sisters who are poorer and worse off than they are, they will at least adopt khadi. I know that all the men and the sisters here have not contributed to this purse. Volunteers will be presently going in your midst and if you desire to contribute something going in your midst and if you desire to contribute something please do so. No one need give a single pie unless she or he believes in khadi. The pies of the poor are just as welcome as the rupees of the rich if either is given with a willing heart.

There is a request made to me just now that I should talk about the Neill Statue Satyagraha. I have said what was in my mind at the meeting in the Beach.¹ I gave more than one hour yesterday and more than one hour today also to those volunteers who could come to discuss the matter with me. I have given them all the advice that I was capable of giving. You will find in a day or two the substance of the conversation in the papers; and the notes of this interview, as soon as I get them, will be revised by me and then there will be an authentic publication.² But this much I would like to declare here. The cause appeals to me most forcibly. I have not a shadow of doubt that that statue must be removed from that site. I have seen the inscription there with its false history.\(^1\) The statue there is a standing insult to the nation, and the volunteers deserve congratulation for having drawn attention to the existence of the statue by their suffering. But every cause or many causes in this world have been ruined by bad management and bad handling. The volunteers, if they continue the fight, will have to take care that no dirt creeps into their movement. If satyagraha is a very fine weapon to handle, it is also a very dangerous weapon. It becomes a dangerous weapon if the slightest uncleanliness touches it. Just at the tiniest drop of poison makes the most wholesome milk unfit for human consumption, so it is the slightest touch of impurity spoils the battle of satyagraha and damages both the cause and those who are connected with it. If there is the slightest violence on the part of satyagrahi or if there is the slightest departure from truth, they will damage themselves and the cause. Satyagraha abhors secrecy. It is the openes form of warfare I have ever known. Similarly, satyagraha abhors cowardice. And he who preaches satyagraha with any selfishness about him damns himself. Satyagraha is a weapon which can be handled without the slightest financial support—because it is the essence of suffering. The greater the amount of suffering voluntarily undertaken, the quicker and purer is the success. If therefore the satyagrahis approach their task well, understanding these conditions and limitations and if they will fulfil all these conditions, let them rest assured that success is doubtless theirs. If they do not possess these qualifications and if they have no faith in these conditions let them give up satyagraha. I shall count it as bravery on their part, if they give up satyagraha because they cannot fulfil its conditions. It also requires a certain measure of bravery to own up one’s mistakes or limitations and retrace one’s steps. But if they will fulfil the conditions I have stated just now, they have my blessings and they will deserve the blessings and encouragement of every patriot.

¹ Vide “Speech at Public Meeting, Madras”, 4-9-1927.

The Hindu, 8-9-1927

25. TOTAL PROHIBITION

I ask you to realize the fact that the alteration of the present Abkari Act with regard to making, manufacture and possession of liquor, etc., must necessarily, to a large extent, lead to harassing of the people. You must be prepared for such a harassment which is an inevitable concomitant of the policy of prohibition. I must count then upon your unstinted support. I do not want your support for picketing shops, to preach about the evils of drink and other kindred work. But I want your help in the matter of putting down illicit manufacture of liquor and kindred crimes.

This is an extract from the speech of the Madras Minister for Public Health and Excise reported in The Hindu. There is one more assistance the Minister has asked the people to render, i.e., submit to increased taxation. Of this I do not propose at present to say anything except that where the people are able, they should submit to further taxation on proof of necessity. No monetary cost is too great to pay for achieving total prohibition.

But at the present moment, I would confine myself to the extract quoted by me. I fear that the Minister has taken a wrong view of prohibition. In my opinion, it has not to be taken piece-meal. To be successful it should be taken as a whole. It is not a one-district question but it is an all-India question. I have not hesitated to give my opinion, that it was a wicked thing for the Imperial Government to have transferred this the most immoral source of revenue to the provinces and to have thus made this tainted revenue the one source for defraying the cost of the education of Indian youth.

But what pains me about the Minister’s speech is his superficial treatment of a question which affects the well-being of the masses. Surely he is not serious about his scheme if he expects the people to do his police work. And why does he frighten the people by saying that there must be harassment if prohibition is tried? Is there harassment of the people because theft or manufacture of gunpowder are classed as crimes? Is not unlicensed distillation even now a crime? What the Minister implies therefore is that the men who today hold licences to manufacture or sell liquor will after the prohibition distil surreptitiously and that therefore they will be harassed. There need be in this no harassment of the people.

But it betrays want of imagination and lack of sympathy with the people, if the Minister believes that as a prohibitionist he has nothing more to do but to declare prohibition and prosecute those who will break his laws. I venture to submit that prosecutions are the smallest and the destructive part of prohibition. I suggest that there is a larger and constructive side to prohibition. People drink because of the conditions to which they are reduced. It is the factory labourers...
and others that drink. They are forlorn, uncared for, and they take to drink. They are no more vicious by nature than teetotallers are saints by nature. The majority of people are controlled by their environment. Any minister who is sincerely anxious to make prohibition a success will have to develop the zeal and qualities of a reformer. He will then require precisely the help that the Madras Minister is reported to have scorned. In my humble opinion, he does need pickets and men and women who would “preach about the evils of drink” and do “other kindred work.” It is just in these very things that he will want an army of volunteers who will be associated with him in reforming the life of the drunkard. He will have to convert every drink shop into a refreshment shop and concert room combined. Poor labourers will want some place where they can congregate and get wholesome, cheap, refreshing, non-intoxicating drinks, and if they can have some good music at the same time it would prove as a tonic to them and draw them. These can, by judicious management and association of the people, become paying concerns for the State. He who will handle the problem of temperance will have to give a more serious study to it than the Minister seems to have done. Let him study the methods adopted in America and tried by the great temperance organizations of the world. This study will give but limited help. For the Western conditions are widely different from the Indian. Our methods too, will have, therefore, to be largely different. Whereas total prohibition in the West is most difficult of accomplishment, I hold that it is the easiest of accomplishment in this country. When an evil like drink in the West attains the status of respectability, it is the most difficult to deal with. With us drink is still, thank God, sufficiently disrespectful and confined not to the general body of the people but to a minority of the poor classes.

Young India, 8-9-1927

26. OUR CULTURE

GIFT FROM A PEASANT

I received while on tour the following from a poor peasant of U.P. It bears the date November 4, 1924. I have been all this time hoarding it among my papers. I give it here just as it was received. I do not even hold back the name, for there is not the slightest fear of 1 A Gujarati version of this was published in Navajivan, 11-9-1927.

Ramchandra being flattered. It is most likely that he does not even read Navajivan. Even if he does, I am certain that one who has sent me these beautiful verses of Tulsidas will not become swollen with pride.

GIFT FROM BORODADA

I received another equally priceless gift from the late Borodada\(^2\), which I always carry with me. He gave me the following verse, written out in his own hands, when I visited Santiniketan the last time before his death.

I shall give the meaning:

In the company of a saint, one’s suffering turns into welcome happiness, death into immortality and a dull person into a man of perfect illumination.\(^4\)

A supposedly uncultured peasant can, on occasion, quote verses from Tulsidas which fill one with the joy of knowledge and devotion, and another, a great poet, forgets his ego though he is a man of profound knowledge and seeks the company of saintly men. If the reader reflects over both these instances in a detached spirit, leaving out the reference to me, he will realize what our culture is and how we can make ourselves worthy of it.

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 8-9-1927

\(^1\) He who gathers up all objects of natural affection—mother, father, brother, son and wife, wealth, home, friends and family—like strands, and makes of them one strong rope to bind his soul to my feet; he who looks on all with an impartial eye and has abandoned all desire, and in whose heart is neither joy nor sorrow nor fear, such a saint abides in my heart like riches in the heart of an avaricious man. Saints like yourself are dear to me; it is only for their sake I am constrained to take on mortal form.

Those who worship the Personal and devote themselves to the good of others, and persevere in the ways of virtue and religious duty, and love the feet of the twice-born, are dear to me as my own life.

\(^2\) Dwijendranath Tagore, elder brother of Rabindranath Tagore

\(^3\) In May 1925

\(^4\) “A dull person into a man of perfect illumination” is a paraphrase. The literal meaning is: “Nothingness into fullness.”
27. SPEECH AT CONJEEVARAM

September 8, 1927

FRIENDS,

I thank you for the several addresses and also the purses. I congratulate the Municipality upon their efforts to reduce to practical shape the message of the spinning-wheel. I hope the boys and girls of the elementary school are learning spinning regularly and in a scientific manner. In many municipalities where this experiment has been tried, the spinning-wheels have practically remained idle because of want of personal interest on the part of councillors. And you will not make it a real success unless at least one or two of the municipal councillors will themselves become expert spinners and keep a vigilant watch over what is being done in these schools. I wish also to draw your attention to the experience of other municipal and non-municipal schools that it is not the wheel which can be successfully worked but it is the takli.

You ask me to tell you what more can be done to serve the poorest of the land. You, the parents of the children who go to the schools, can see to it that your children are dressed in khadi. You can successfully induce the municipal employees from the highest to the lowest to wear nothing but khadi. Several municipalities have successfully performed this operation.

One of the addresses asks me to do something to heal the widened breach between Brahmans and Non-Brahmins. I assure you that I should heal the breach today if I had the power. I have told both Brahmin and Non-Brahmin friends that I am prepared during my tour to discuss the thing with you and assist in arriving at a solution, if it is at all possible. It is a spectacle humiliating to both Brahmans and Non-Brahmins. And really our capacity for swaraj can only be tested by your ability successfully to handle such problems. Beyond stating that I am always willing to assist, it is not possible for me to make any concrete suggestions.

Yours is a city renowned for its holiness throughout India. But unfortunately as in other places here also holiness has become but an empty name. Though you do something for khaddar and something more in some other directions, it does not make the city holy. Holiness is made of sterner stuff. It means purity of conduct and purity of heart in the majority of its citizens. I wish to ask you to ask yourselves and answer the question whether you regard a single being as untouchable. Belief in untouchability and holiness are contradictory terms.

I received a letter today in this place asking me to dwell exclusively upon the question of child widows. Whilst it is not possible for me to deal with this great evil to the exclusion of every other, I am painfully conscious of the fact that you are not free from this evil. It is no credit to Hinduism that it has so many child virgin widows. If I had the power I the would certainly insist upon every parent getting married his child widow in his home. Child widow, again, is a contradiction in terms. Only a full grown woman who has been a consenting party to her marriage and who enjoyed the married life can become a widow.

Closely related to the question of child widows is the question of child marriages. It is an inhuman thing to give away in marriage a little girl under sixteen years. We do violence to our Shastras when we wrest from them a meaning which panders to our lust. Now, perhaps, you understand a little of what I mean by holiness. I hope that you, who are naturally and pardonably proud of this city, will bestir yourselves and take early and energetic steps to rid yourselves of the evils to which I have drawn attention. If you really feel for the poorest of the land as you claim to do in your address, you will not rest content until you have brought about total prohibition.

There is a note handed to me asking me to tell you something about the Tilak Swaraj Fund and the present Khaddar Fund for which you have given purses today. I gladly give you the information. So far as the Tilak Swaraj Fund is concerned, I may inform you that the audited accounts have been published and circulated on behalf of the All-India Congress Committee all over India. Anyone who is even now desirous of seeing how much was collected and how the fund was distributed, is entitled to get from the General Secretary a copy of the accounts. The manner of disbursements was in this way. A certain percentage went to the Central Fund in the hands of the All-India Congress Committee and the balance was kept with the respective provinces in which the amounts were collected. And the respective provinces have also, so far as I am aware, except in one or two instances, published audited accounts. You may also know that the largest amounts were collected in Bombay and these remained vested in a number of trustees specially appointed. Furthermore, very large amounts of this fund were earmarked and these earmarked funds were administered by those donors who gave the funds so earmarked. It is my conviction that no fund of that magnitude has been so cleanly administered as the Tilak Swaraj Fund.

But that does not mean there has never been any misappropriation of these funds. Look at every other human institution. The Congress has had its share of faithless servants. But my examination has disclosed the fact that in the Congress there has been as defalcation. This refers to the Tilak Swaraj Fund and you are able to achieve it because of the extraordinary care that was taken in the appointment of responsible officers. You had in Seth Jamnalalji a treasurer who was not only inviolable, but whose vigilance was surpassed by a single treasurer on the face of the earth. When I say this of Seth Jamnalalji, I assure you that I speak from personal experience.

Now about the Khadi Fund of which also Seth Jamnalalji is the treasurer and Shankerlal Banker is the Secretary. I am entirely satisfied that it is impossible to find two better men than these friends for the administration of this fund. And over and above them is a Board consisting of picked men, who believe in the message of the spinning-wheel. These funds are kept in banks of first-class credit. There is a periodical inspection all over India of provincial accounts; and the accounts also are periodically audited both in the provinces and at the centres. It is open to anyone whether he is a contributor or not to see these accounts. The method of distribution of this fund is to confine the purses that are being collected to the provinces in which they are collected. But the Board does not follow that absolute rule. For instance, we have collected large amounts in Bombay but almost nothing has been spent in Bombay itself. Though very little has been collected in Orissa large amounts were spent in organizing khadi work in Orissa. Similarly more has been spent in Tamil Nadu than has been hitherto collected. This is an absolute rule that wherever there is great distress and there is a chance of working in the distressed area through able and honest workers, funds are always made available.

I always invite enquiries and searching enquiries about the finances of public institutions and it was in appreciation of that fact that I entered into an elaborate explanation of the question that was handed to me. I wish the public take much more and abler interest in the financial administration of all trust funds. I am painfully conscious of the fact that in spite of the care that I am capable of devoting, it is not possible for me to do it unless I get vigilant assistance from the public to ensure absolute purity of the administration of numerous funds which the public have trusted me with. To ensure absolute correctness and purity of administration, without active and intelligent assistance of the public, is beyond the power of one single individual. I will gladly answer any further questions that may arise out of my explanation either now or by writing.

The Hindu, 10-9-1927

28. SPEECH TO ARUNDAHTIYAS, PERAMBUR

September 8, 1927

In replying to the address, Mahatmaji exhorted this community of cobblers to carry on their trade with dead cattle hide instead of with hide of slaughtered animals. Mahatmaji said he himself had made shoes and could make fairly good shoes even now. He could not however make such a beautiful pair as the one they had presented him with. Shoemaking was a respectable trade of which no one need be ashamed. He himself had now organized a tannery at Sabarmati where dead cattle hide was tanned.

Mahatmaji then asked the men to give up drink. Drink, he said, made beasts of men and was the enemy of the family. He also asked them to refrain from vices of all kinds. If they only followed his advice in some details of their daily conduct, their status would be raised automatically in society.

Finally, Mahatmaji asked the men to remember that there were millions of people in rural India much poorer than they. They should sympathize with them and help them by wearing khaddar. It was as wrong for them to wear foreign cloth, as it would be for him to buy foreign shoes without encouraging local shoemakers.

The Hindu, 12-9-1927

29. SPEECH TO GUJARATIS AND MARWARIS, MADRAS

September 9, 1927

I thank you for the purse and the address. I am satisfied with the purse that you have given me because it is a sacred work. There is a special bond between myself and Gujaratis for Gujarat is my birthplace. Ever since I came to India my connection with Gujaratis and Marwaris has been one of increasing affection. Swaraj will have come to India if only the two communities had realized their duties as merchants and had given some place to selfless work in the course of their business. One of the reasons why India is still a slave country is the importation of foreign cloth and in the trade of foreign cloth you have a prime share. Therefore when you give money for the service of Daridranarayana, whatever you give will be unsatisfactory because your work has a bearing on India’s povertystricken millions. You are taking away the money of the poor and the prayaschitta after the commission of the sin lies when you discharge your duties to those whom you took your money. So if you are going to perform the true dharma, I beg of you to take to khadi business. This is you work and not my work. Though I am myself born a Bania I have given up business. Therefore I have got to learn business from you. Moreover, the biggest business in India has now fallen into my hands and so if you take up this work from my hands, there will be no need to beg throughout the country. You have given me a welcome address in Hindi and I thank you for it. There is a Hindi Pracharak Sabha in South India. The money for it comes from North India now and then. In this work Marwaris have given large amounts of money. I beg of you now to make this your own work. You should not depend upon North India for finance and will have to do it actively yourselves.

---

1 Sandals made out of the hide of dead cattle were presented to Gandhiji and Kasturba.

There is another duty still for you, cow-protection. Gujaratis and Marwaris have taken a prominent part. I must tell you that the work cannot be done by money alone. You have got the Shastra knowledge about this and that is more necessary than money. If you do not open dairies and tanneries in the various parts of the country this work can never be done properly. You are traders in all parts of India. You should make friends with all the people of the country. Do not think of them as strangers. Think of them as sons and daughters of the same country. If you think one a Punjabi, another a Bengali, Marwari, Gujarati and so on, no good will result. May God give you wisdom and desire to serve!

_The Hindu, 10-9-1927_
30. SPEECH TO WOMEN, MADRAS

September 9, 1927

Mahatmaji first thanked the women of Madras for the welcome they had accorded in him and for the purse. Regarding the purse, he said he was not satisfied with the same. He also doubted whether all of them who had assembled there knew for what purpose they had given the purse, for if they had realized it they would have given much more. The money was not intended to be distributed among a hundred poor for charity but was going to be used for the relief of millions of starving people throughout India. He saw round him a large number of ladies with costly jewellery on their persons. They would no have realized that one bit of such jewellery would amount to a fortune to the starving millions. The toiling millions did not know what gold, diamonds, and silver were. Their jewellery was made of wood, stone and copper. Mahatmaji even doubted whether the women who had gathered around him had ever seen their sisters in the villages. He had a great mind to take some of them round those villages and show them the conditions in which some of their sisters lived. Then only they would realize the true significance of the movement he had set afoot, and the object of his mission. They had given a few hundreds of rupees but until they did some other things, that money would become useless. Millions of starving sisters were toiling all round the year and if more fortunate women had any affection for them they must wear khadi prepared by the poor people. Then they must show their self-sacrifice and spirit by spending at least half an hour a day and giving away the yarn. Mahatmaji said that he had been working for the relief of these poor millions and wherever he went he had received the full sympathy of all women. His work would be in vain if womenfolk of India did not co-operate with him. Referring to the welcome address, Mahatmaji said: It was a long one and he did not know whether all the women in the audience knew all subjects dealt with therein. They were all important ones and related only to the middle class people. He id not say that they must be disregarded on that account. He had no time to discuss all the subjects mentioned therein, but would say they had his entire sympathy. He would say only this thing that women had equal rights with men. Hindu Shastras made no differentiation between the sexes and had even symbolized God as Ardha-nareeshwara. The English saying that the wives were the better halves was quite true. India had produced many ideal women and among the seven great satis worshipped by Hindu woman evey morning to ward off her sins Sita stood foremost. That a better place was given to women was significant in the fact that people don’t call “Ram-Sita” but call “Sita-Ram”. Sita was an embodiment of self-sacrifice and dharma. Her sacrifices were

1 At Singrachari Hall in Hindu High School, Triplicane greater than those of Rama. If the Hindus were the true followers and worshippers of Sita and Rama they would not have allowed such disgraceful customs as were prevalent among their society. They would immediately try to purify their Hinduism. If they were determined to purify their society he would ask them first of all not to marry their daughters before they were 16 years old. The next thing they must do is to remarry young widows. It was a sin not to remarry such girls. Consent was necessary for a life contract and he believed that in early marriages there was no consent. He would then ask them to remove from their midst the custom of Devadasis. Such reforms as he had mentioned could effectively and easily be done by women’s associations and not by male workers however capable they might be.

Continuing, Mahatmaji said that he was gratified at the fact that Dr. Muthulakshmi Ammal was the Deputy President of the Legislative Council. Though he was himself a non-co-operator, he believed that Dr. Muthulakshmi Ammal would do many things in the Council on behalf of the women of India. He would only request her not to completely adopt Western methods. She must instil the Indian atmosphere in the Council and never forget the interests of women. India’s progress would be sure and certain if only the women of India worked for it.

In conclusion, Mahatmaji said then the greatest problem in India at the present day was the relief of poverty among the millions of toiling masses scattered in thousands of villages in India. If educated and more fortunate women did not realize their duties to their less fortunate sisters and do something for their relief India would never progress. He believed that the spinning-wheel would do much in this direction. It must become the centre of their activities. The khadi movement was a women’s movement and he hoped that they would take it up and relieve him of his duties. He prayed to God Almighty that He should give them courage and energy to take up this good work.

_The Hindu, 10-9-1927_

31. SPEECH ON C. R. DAS, MADRAS

_Saturday, 9 September, 1927_

FRIENDS,

I congratulate Mr. Satyamurti on having presented this portrait to the Mahajana Sabha and I congratulate the Mahajana Sabha upon having secured this very precious possession. If I may do so, I would like to congratulate myself also upon having received the honour of unveiling this portrait. But whilst I prize this honour, I cannot help confessing to you that I am somewhat embarrassed, embarrassed because I am unveiling the portrait of one who unveiled my own.
There is some lack of adjustment in this thing. Not that anybody is responsible for this accident; but it is there. Because Deshbandhu unveiled my portrait it was impossible to avoid me, seeing that I happened to be in Madras when the portrait was presented. So it is quite in the fitness of things considered in that light. But all the same, there are things over which we have no control and yet which mar all our dispositions. The fact that I have brought to your notice really mars my joy, it makes it difficult for me to pour out my heart in connection with Deshbandhu Das but I must struggle through my performance in the best manner I can.

I want to lift myself and yourself out of the political setting that has been given to this function. Deshbandhu’s name will always be remembered so long as time lasts and India lasts, as one of the liberators of India. There can be not a shadow of doubt about it. But Deshbandhu himself claimed and was entitled to far higher honour than that of being ranked as one of the liberators—though high that honour is. I came to know this secret of his life myself during his last days, about which you have just now heard as from his very magnificent letter that Mr. Satyamurti read to us. All this strength was really derived from his spirituality and I consider his spirituality even greater than his politics. He considered that his politics were dependent upon and were derived from his spirituality, as I have said more than once in connection with another liberator of India, now no more, Lokamanya Bala Gangadhara Tilak. I think it was in writing about him or speaking about him, I said it had been a misfortune of some of the greatest sons of India to sacrifice their cherished ambition in order to realize what to them was a lesser ambition for the motherland. Lokamanya Tilak, if he had not been born in these times and in India, would have been considered a literary giant but that would not have been enough. He would have been considered a religious scholar, a man capable of giving smriti and giving living interpretations of old faiths. But that which was his highest ambition became subservient to the political work that he saw before him and that greatest work became a matter of leisure hours. All the best his

---

1 The concluding paragraph of this letter of April 19, 1925; read: “No, my dear Satyamurti, I feel a broken man. I feel that my work is over and somebody is constantly calling me from the other side. I should love now to give up all this fight and worry and retire to seclusion. Surely the last few years—may be a very few—should be given to God. The work should be taken up by younger men—yours affectionately, C. R. Das.”
energy could possibly give was given to the political emancipation of India. And so it was with Deshbandhu. When I had the honour of making his acquaintance in Lahore, I remember his having engaged me always whenever we had done with the report on which we were both engaged, in spiritual discussions. We used to talk about and think of things of permanent interest in life. I remember his having said once or twice in my presence that he could not possibly do these things in the thorough manner in which he wanted to.

I confess that I did not know Deshbandhu then as I knew him during his last moments at Darjeeling. I came closest to him there and I look back upon those few days of my association with him among the precious treasures of my memory. But in Lahore I unwittingly did an injustice to him by my thinking for one moment that this spirituality of his was a mere pastime as I have known it to be of so many other distinguished sons of India. But as our friendship, may I say, ripened, I came closer to him and I felt that I occupied a little corner in his heart also. And yet there were some cobwebs. God had designed that those cobwebs should be removed before his eyes were closed. He could not tolerate the idea of a seeker of truth remaining under any illusion whatsoever or any misunderstanding whatsoever in connection with a man so good. I omit the word ‘great’ deliberately. Greatness without goodness counts for nothing in my estimation as I expect it counted for nothing in Deshbandhu’s estimation. So I was privileged to enter his heart, understand him through and through and understand the depth of his devotion.

Reckless sacrifice he had. Reckless courage also he had. But all this beautiful recklessness of his was really derived from his very deep spirituality. He himself told me when he was in Darjeeling that he would not be satisfied and consider his work over unless the spiritual treasures he had locked up in his heart had been also delivered to India. That ambition of his was not destined to be fulfilled through no fault of his. Perhaps you do not know his childlike simplicity. I was amazed; his own partner in life was amazed at that incredible simplicity of his heart. In his search for spiritual consolation he placed himself under one who has and had very little education as we understand the word education. But in order to find that real everlasting peace that a spiritual quickening gives, he was reckless and did not mind ridicule of his friends in going forward with that service. I cannot and dare not give you more details. I have given you just enough to share with me the belief that in Deshbandhu if we have lost a great man, one of the greatest of India’s patriots, we have lost also in Deshbandhu a very great spiritual teacher.

I have endeavoured to lift ourselves out of the political setting also because I know that if his spirit is brooding over our proceedings then I know that he shares to the fullest extent the ideas that I am expressing to you. It was another patriot of India, again now no more, who expressed this thought that a time comes in the life of every Indian when mere political battle jars on him and that he seeks to base everything on spiritual, livingly moral foundations. There is no distinction between spirituality and morality, if we rightly understand the latter term. Today somehow or other we have come to distinguish between the two and so I have added the adverb ‘livingly’ moral. This I heard several years ago; but ever since then, I have seen that utterance more and more exemplified in this manner.

I have introduced this thing for a deliberate purpose; and that purpose is: Let us have the political ambition that we live for the freedom of the country. Today it is impossible for an Indian worth the name even to exist without political ambition, because the political domination of India has unfortunately resulted in if not spiritual subjection, in spiritual inanity. And we have simply got the outer husk of spirituality; the kernel of it seems to have been entirely dried up. Let us not delude ourselves into the belief that this political ambition of us is going to serve this Karmabhumi, this Devabhumi as we flatter ourselves in calling Bharatavarsha. Let us not delude ourselves with the belief that this sacred land can ever be served by or can ever assimilate a political message unless it has got a spiritual foundation. It has got to be broadbased upon that foundation if it is to last and permeate the distant villages of India. That brings me to the appeal which the President of the Sabha made to me. I seemed to have neglected politics, he said. But he corrected himself. “No, he did not”. I accept that correction. I have not neglected politics. But having had the privilege of sitting side by side with Deshbandhu Das and having had the privilege of many conversations with Lokamanya and most of our leaders, I have understood the secret of achieving India’s freedom, a I fancy. In having done so, I bide my time in endeavouring to translate politics in terms of spirituality. I must restate my doctrine even at the risk of being misunderstood. When I was challenged I had no hesitation in saying that I would sacrifice India herself on the altar not of freedom but of truth. There is a catch about this thing. The catch consists in this, that freedom which is inconsistent with truth is no freedom whatsoever. But catch or no catch, when I wrote that,¹ I it jarred on some friends and it incensed some. But what could I do? I can only speak what I feel; or else I should be really worthless. So I have got to repeat really the beautiful language that Deshbandhu uttered on that occasion which was reproduced today, namely, that although he had boundless affection for me, he could only do what his soul could ascend to and not what I wished or asked². And no man can do more. I cannot do more—I know that. When my soul ascends to things which you are in the habit of calling political, I shall not wait for an invitation; and I shall lead the cause. But till then, I must be content to contemplate on the treasures that have been left to us by Deshbandhu and his predecessors—spiritual treasures—and must continue to hold the belief that all the politics that may have been handed down to us from the west will be turned to dust in India, good as they might be in the West, if we cannot possibly reduce them to terms of spirituality.

And I consider it a great privilege for me that as my stay in Madras is about to close, I have not only got this privilege of unveiling the portrait of one whose memory I hold dear and near to me, but that I have also in that connection got the privilege of interpreting as I know the mission for which Deshbandhu lived and for which he gave his life. I have much pleasure in unveiling the portrait.

_The Hindu, 10-9-1927_

32. SPEECH AT ST. THOMAS MOUNT, MADRAS

September 9, 1927

SISTERS AND FRIENDS.

I thank you for the addresses¹ that you have given me and the purse. I thank you also for saving my time, when I am pressed for it, by waiving your right to read all the addresses. I congratulate the

¹ Presumably the Young India passage reproduced in, vide “A Candid Critic”, January 20, 1927

² While unveiling a portrait of Gandhiji in the same Hall, C. R. Das had said:

“I followed Mahatma Gandhi because my soul ascended to his. But I shall refuse to agree to anything which my soul does not ascend to. I have the highest respect, nay veneration, for the Mahatma; but I shall never trample my soul under my foot. The Mahatma knew that and I believe he respected me for that.”

³ By the Jain community, the general public and the Podu Jana Oozhiyar Sangham (Social Service League)
Sangham and its beneficial public activities. I note that you are conducting some schools, doing sanitation work and even the lighting of your streets. This is undoubtedly public service in the right direction but I hope your work is through. Sanitation, until substantially done, has been known sometimes to do more harm than good. It is only things that are well done that produce permanent and beneficial services. I am glad too to find that you have taken up the work of the spinning-wheel I hope you will keep all the wheels going regularly. I hope too that you will keep them in good shape. There is no reason why everyone living in these parts should not be dressed in khadi.

If there are any here who are given to drink habit, I hope you will urge them to give it up. Those who do not drink I ask them to go to their neighbours who drink and gently wean them from that awful habit. I wish that you would initiate a movement which will not end till total prohibition is carried out in the land.

I was also glad to receive an address from the Jain friends. To them also I would suggest that at the present moment the widest application of the doctrine of ahimsa is possible only through the spinning-wheel. It has been conceived and calculated to benefit the remotest village and the neediest people in the land. What ahimsa, what love can be deeper and faster than that which takes in its sweep millions of starving people!

I am glad that all your addresses make reference to untouchability. I hope you will rid yourselves of that curse in the quickest time possible. No religion can possibly countenance the considering of a single human being as an untouchable from birth.

I have been recently drawing attention to child marriages and child widows. It is high time that parents understand their duties by their children. It cannot be a right thing to give away girls of tender years in marriage, nor can it be right to treat the child as a widow when her so-called husband dies. It is the bounden duty of every parent to give in marriage such child widows as may be in his family. We have also in the South the immoral and the inhuman institution of Devadasis. If we would respect our womanhood as we are expected to respect them in the name of Sita, we have to get rid of this blot upon our society.

As you are aware I have still to prepare to leave Madras tonight and you will not expect me therefore to say anything further upon the important subjects that will engage your attention. It is usual for me at such large meetings as these to give those who have not contributed to this purse and may be present here an opportunity, if they so desire and if they believe in khadi, of giving their mite.

_The Hindu_, 10-9-1927

33. INTERVIEW TO “THE HINDU”, MADRAS

September 9, 1927

Unless I am deceived, the khadi spirit has come to stay.

Thus Mahatma Gandhi summed up to _The Hindu_ representative impressions of his stay in Madras. . . .

Although the main theme of almost all my addresses in Madras has been khadi, if I am not deceiving myself, I have not noticed any weariness of spirit about the audience and everyone who has not appeared in khadi has invariably apologized. The financial response has also been satisfactory and khadi sales have been encouraging.

Of personal affection, I can have nothing to say. Even as long ago as 1896, Madras bestowed on me an affection for which I was wholly unprepared and entirely unworthy. That was my very first visit to Madras; and I knew nobody personally. Madras simply took me on trust.

I hope that the citizens of Madras will not postpone to the last minute the preparations for the coming Congress. They will give a practical demonstration of the wisdom as ascribed to the people of the South by Sir Brijendranath Seal, if before the session is held there is no Brahmin-Non-Brahmin quarrel. Of course, I expect the people here to give a good account of themselves in the matter of khadi during the Congress week.

The _Hindu_ representative next enquired about Mahatmaji’s views on Miss Mayo’s book1 which is agitating the public mind in India today; and Mahatmaji replied:

Under great stress and difficulty, I have just finished a long review of Miss Mayo’s book. I entered upon it with much reluctance; and I did so, as many correspondents pressed me to give my own opinion. I could really ill afford the time to read the book, but when I saw I could not escape having to give the opinion, I read it from page to page; and having read it I am glad that I did so, because I saw that it required a fairly exhaustive reply from me. As my writings have been profusely used by the lady, I owed it to the public and to her to express my frank opinion on her work.

---

1 Mother India

You will not expect me to anticipate the contents of the article¹ in Young India.

The Hindu, 10-9-1927

34. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

CUDDALORE,
September 10, 1927

MIRABAI
SATYAGRAHA ASHIRAM, WARDHA

THANK GOD. DELIVERANCE. LETTER REGARDING POONA NOT RECEIVED. DO² WHATEVER JAMNALALJI SAYS AND COMMANDS³ YOU. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 5273. Courtesy: Mirabehn

35. SPEECH AT Y.M.C.A., CUDDALORE

September 10, 1927

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,
I thank you for the address and also for the purse on behalf of the students for the Khadi Fund. Rev. Mr. Lange has invited me to speak to you on how the individual might grow so as to bring about his own advancement and of his surroundings or her surroundings and in doing so, told me that if I expected to address a meeting of saints, I would be sadly disappointed. As I had no such expectations, there is no occasion for me to be disappointed. But, had you been all saints, I assure you, I would have been deeply embarrassed. Being myself a very imperfect man—and this I say not in the language of courtesy, but in terms of truth—I can only address with any degree of usefulness an assembly of men and women similarly imperfect. But this I do own that I am constantly, minute after minute, striving after perfection and it gives me comfort to find myself in the assembly of ² The source has “to”.

³ The source has “commends”.

VOL. 40: 2 SEPTEMBER, 1927 - 1 DECEMBER, 1927 69
imperfect men and women who are similarly striving. It consoles me to find that many of them had succeeded in their striving and that therefore there is no reason why I should not succeed likewise, if my striving is prayerful and honest. And in the course of that striving, I fancy that I have made certain discoveries. And I am now endeavouring to the best of my ability to share the results of those discoveries with all I meet. And the one discovery that I have made is that really speaking, there is no distinction whatsoever between individual growth and corporate growth, that corporate growth is therefore entirely dependent upon individual growth and hence that beautiful proverb in the English language that a chain is no stronger than the weakest link in it. And if we realize in its fullness the truth of this homely saying, we would discover that no single lad in this assembly may hope to isolate himself from others and consider himself above them. When I recall my school days, I have a vivid recollection of boys who put on airs, because they were considered to be clever in their class. And some of them domineered over the rest because they had athletic skill and had physical powers. But I soon discovered also that their pride went before destruction. For the weaker ones, realizing their haughtiness, segregated them and regarded them as untouchables and so they really dug their own grave with their own hands. The first condition therefore of individual growth is utmost humility. And if we see at the present moment in our own land, some people in their insolence calling themselves superior and regarding others as below themselves in rank and regarding yet others as untouchables and unapproachables, those who are standing aloof from this strife are able to watch and see that these in their insolence are also digging their own graves. You will therefore see perfect correspondence between the individual and the corporation, and so I always say to students, young men and women, wanting to serve the country and to do big things: “First of all look after yourselves and make yourselves fairly good instruments of service.” I hold it to be utterly impossible for any young man and any young woman to serve society unless they start with a clean slate, that is, a pure heart. But to say that we should have pure hearts is really easily said, but it is not equally easy to achieve and so, we have in the Christian scheme of life what is called new birth. The corresponding term in Hinduism is dwija, i.e., twice born. The meaning that the term dwija has come to bear at the present moment is a prostitution of language. Even this new birth among the many Christians I have seen, has acquired the significance which, when the word was originally used, it never bore. That new birth does not come from any outward circumstance nor through lip profession. It is an inward change which is unmistakable. It is a change which the person himself notices and so do his neighbours. It is a transformation of the heart and it needs no lip declaration. And that absolute transformation can only come by inward prayer and a definite and living recognition of the presence of the mighty spirit residing within. We call this by the name of Bhakti Yoga and rendered in English it means union with God by means of devotion and that yoga is possible alike for the lad, ten years old, as for an old man on the brink of the grave and when that transformation has come as a matter of fact, there is no falling back. But there is very often a subtle self-deception about the person noticing such a transformation about himself or herself, and so in order to make it easy for ourselves we have accommodated ourselves to a term called backsliding. As a matter of fact, this so-called transformation in such cases never was a transformation but a hallucination and the recognition of this fact keeps a man or woman fresh and humble, when the boy or girl who begins to say I am transformed will be found to be self-deluded. Therefore, whenever we notice any such upward lift or tendency to do better, let us be sanguine but let us not cease to strive. Instead of saying to ourselves in our pride, ‘I have done with evil, I can never fall’, let us humbly say to ourselves, ‘I do not know, I must ever be on the watch.’ There is irrevocable promise from God to mankind that no single effort made towards one’s upliftment ever goes without its adequate result. But I am painfully conscious of the fact that I am saying these things to the young men before me without making my meaning clear. I am labouring under the load of the knowledge that I am almost speaking to the students in a foreign language, that is to say, not in the English language, but in an idiom which has become foreign to them. The very word God has lost its living touch and its living meaning.

I recollect a conversation I had with an extremely intelligent and somewhat learned young man only a few months ago and he said: “You so often talk and write about God but I must confess to you that I find no echo of what you say in my own heart.” An English friend connected with one of the most noted dailies of England sent me a message also very recently admiring my work about untouchability, temperance and social reform but detesting, as he calls it, God’s touch in the pages of Young India. And let me tell you that this English friend is not a mean man but he is a most morally upright man. He is also a philanthropist. Similarly this young Indian who is living at the present moment—because I am in constant touch with him—is ever striving after perfection. But both consider that all that counts in this world and all that is required is self-effort, nothing more, nothing less. As against this, I can only say that at least 40 years’ experience of conscious and upbroken striving shows to me that whilst self-effort is an absolute necessity, by itself it is an illusory thing. Without the living grace of the living God, all that effort is reduced to dust. I know instances of very dear friends of mine who were able by self-effort, as it appeared to them, to build themselves up, but they found, and I noticed, that because the effort was not touched by this living grace, they had become in an instant a living sepulchre. Before they knew where they were, subtle temptations surrounded them and they found themselves totally unprepared to resist them. And so, whether you understand my language or whether you do not, whether you understand the significance of the word God or whether you do not, I have really no other message for the young men and the young women of India. Do not be deceived by your own little intellect but do have some faith in the experiences of men living in all the climes of the world, in all the places of the world, proclaiming with one voice there is God. I tell you, I give you my assurance, that if you will be patient and exercise that faith, and believe in the definite presence of God within, in spite of yourselves, in spite of your intellect rebelling against your faith, in spite of your surroundings, believe in the presence of God, if you persist in that faith, you will find that some day it will become a living reality for you and it will be the surest shield of protection for you. If you want to know what faith like that can do for you, hear me. May God help you to understand somewhat of what I have been saying to you.

The Hindu, 12-9-1927

36. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, CUDDALORE

September 10, 1927

FRIENDS,

I thank you for all these addresses and the purses presented to me including the address I received from the Municipality this morning. Some friends disturbed my night’s rest and that of my \textsuperscript{1}Young India published this under the caption, “Three Speeches”. The first and the last paragraphs reproduced here are from The Hindu, 12-9-1927.

fellow-passengers and made life itself difficult for my co-workers. To those of them who are present here I should like to say a few words. They besieged the train practically at three stations where the train stopped for some time. They insisted upon my presenting myself at the window. I, on the other hand, insisted on not complying with their demands and so they became angry, terribly angry and the anger was vented upon those who were trying to protect me from all the terrible din and noise that they set up. Tired out, I was stretched on my bed but I was awake all the time at the pain of hearing these din voices. It was at times difficult to say whether the noise was the noise of affection or it was hooliganism, pure and undefiled. I know that these guards of mine would have been glad if I had got up and presented myself at the window. But it was really not possible for me to comply with the demand and I wish that those who were throwing their affection to me will be pleased not to disturb me, at least my night’s rest. I do not call that true love. It is blind love which harms those who bestow it and on whom it is bestowed. I would urge those blind lovers of mine to follow the beautiful motto that I saw as I was being brought to this place. “Love the poor and you will love Gandhi.” I give you my assurance that there is no poor man or poor woman in this vast audience than whom there are not millions much poorer in this land. I would like you to appreciate the fact that I am doing this tour under the greatest difficulties, I am doing this in spite of the warnings of some of my medical friends, but I feel I have taken this tour in obedience to the promptings of the inner voice. I have been instrumental in monies being collected in several places in this Presidency. These monies are made for the people about whom I just now talked to you. Every rupee collected means food for 16 poor spinners in villages. I tried to ascertain whether these purses collected in several places could be delivered to me without my going personally to those places to receive them, and found that it was not possible. Believe me as I do, that what I am doing is God’s work and I feel that even at the risk of my life I should endeavour to travel to those places to unlock those purses which have been put away in the safe. I would therefore urge you all and the whole of the public to cooperate with me in reserving the little energy that is left in me in order to enable me to fulfil this self-imposed task and it is for that reason that I have strictly prohibited my co-workers from making any appointments whatsoever for interviews in rest time that is given to me and which I so much need at every place visited by me. You will pardon me for my having entered upon what may appear to you to be a personal explanation. As a matter of fact it is nothing of the kind. It is a plea on behalf of the voiceless millions for whom I am collecting this money and that brings me to the taking up of the message, which I left this morning when I was addressing the young boys at the Y.M.C.A. meeting. I was this morning dealing with the growth of the individual and I said then that the growth of the individual, if it is real, must be reflected in the growth of the society of which the individual is a member. And every internal takes an external and outward manifestation. A seed that has a capacity of growth within itself immediately goes underneath the ground, sprouts outward into a beautiful tree in a short time. The seed that has no vitality in it and therefore no capacity for growth dies underneath the earth, and so with individual and nations. If they have capacity for growth, of real life and character within them, it must be manifested by some definite, visible, outward signs. And speaking along these lines, it was in 1918 that I made a discovery—or call it re-discovery—that is, India was really one compact society or one nation and if the component parts of the society, the individuals, were also actuated with one mind and if they had feelings for the lowest and the humblest among them, they must show some universal sign which could be adopted by every man and woman, girl or boy. Hence you find me tirelessly preaching the message of the spinning-wheel which I have considered the message of Daridranarayana, and asking you to give me all your best for the charkha.

But I must hasten to the important part of the Municipal address. You have drawn my attention to the existence of the dissensions between the Brahmin and the Non-Brahmins and asked me to find out a solution. As a Non-Brahmin myself, if I could remove the dissensions by forfeiting my life, I should do so this very moment. But God is a very hard taskmaster. He is never satisfied with hasty forfeitures of life. It is a sacrifice of the purest that He demands and so you and I have prayerfully to plod on, live out the life so long as it is vouchsafed to us to live it. I have said, only very recently in Madras, that whenever you want me to take part in your deliberations, or want me to advise you, you will find me at your disposal. I have no clear-cut solution for this difficult question. I confess to you that I do not even now know the points of differences between the two. I tried to draw out some Non-Brahmins, who came to me on Nandi Hills, and they promised to see me in my tour and place all the points of difference before me. I must confess to you that I am no wiser about the Brahmin side of the question. And wily as the Brahmins are, I admit they have not told me what the differences are, knowing fully well what my opinion would be about all these questions. As you are aware, though a Non-Brahmin myself, I have lived more with them and amongst them than amongst Non-Brahmin friends suspect me of having taken all my colourings from Brahmin friends. I have a shrewd suspicion that the Non-Brahmin friends consider that I am not to be accepted as a hope for a proper solution. And so I find myself in the happy position of being isolated by both the parties, a position which in the present state of my health suits me admirably. But all the same I give you my assurance that I for my part hold myself in readiness to be wooed by either party. And I assure you too that I shall not plead physical unfitness.

But I have for both the parties two counsels of perfection which I can lay before you. To the Brahmins I will say: ‘Seeing that you are repositories of knowledge and embodiments of sacrifice and that you have chosen the life of mendicancy, give up all that the Non-Brahmins want and be satisfied with what they may leave for you.’ But the modern Brahmin would, I know, summarily reject my Non-Brahmin interpretation of his dharma. To the Non-Brahmins, I say: ‘Seeing that you have got numbers on your side, seeing that you have got wealth on your side, what is it that you are worrying about? Resisting as you are, and as you must, untouchability, do not be guilty of creating a new untouchability in your midst. In your haste, in your blindness, in your anger against the Brahmins, you are trying to trample underfoot the whole of the culture which you have inherited from ages past. With a stroke of the pen, may be at the point of the sword, you are impatient to wreck Hinduism of its bed-rock. Being dissatisfied and properly dissatisfied with the husk of Hinduism, you are in danger of losing even the kernel, life itself. You, in your impatience, seem to think that there is absolutely nothing to be said about varnashrama. Some of you are ready even to think that in defending varnashrama I am also labouring under a delusion. Make no mistake about it. They who say this have not even taken the trouble of understanding what I mean by varnashrama.’

It is a universal law, stated in so many words by Hinduism. It is a law of spiritual economics. Nations of the West and Islam itself unwittingly are obliged to follow that law. It has nothing to do with superiority or inferiority. The customs about eating, drinking and marriage are no integral part of Varnashrama Dharma. It was a law discovered by your ancestors and my ancestors, the rishis who saw that if they were to give the best part of their lives to God and to the world, and not to themselves, they must recognize that it is the law of heredity. It is a law designed to set free man’s energy for higher pursuits in life. What true Non-Brahmins should therefore set about doing is not to undermine the very foundations on which they are sitting, but to clean all the sweepings that gathered on the foundation and make it perfectly clean. Fight by all means the monster that passes for varnashrama today, and you will find me working side by side with you. My varnashrama enables me to dine with anybody who will give me clean food, be he Hindu, Muslim, Christian, Parsi whatever he is. My varnashrama accommodates a pariah girl under my own roof as my own daughter. My varnashrama accommodates many Panchama families with whom I dine with the greatest pleasure— to dine with whom is a privilege. My varnashrama refuses to bow the head before the greatest potentate on earth but my varnashrama compels me to bow my head in all humility before knowledge, before purity, before every person where I see God face to face. Do not therefore swear by words that have, at the present moment, become absolutely meaningless and obsolete. Swear all you are worth, if you like, against Brahmins but never against Brahminism, and even at the risk of being understood or being mistaken by you to be a pro-Brahmin, I make bold to declare to you that whilst Brahmins have many sins to atone for and many for which they will receive exemplary punishments, there are today Brahmins living in India who are watching the progress of Hinduism and who are trying to protect it with all the piety and all the austerity of which they are capable. Them you perhaps do not even know. They do not care to be known. They expect no reward; they ask for none. Their work is its own reward. They work in this fashion because they must. It is their nature. You and I may swear against them for all we are worth, but they are untouched. Do not run away with the belief that I am putting in a plea for Brahmins, Vakils and Ministers and even Justices of the High Courts in India. I have not thought of them in my mind at all. What, therefore, both Brahmins and Non-Brahmins, and for that matter everybody who wants India to progress has to do, is to sweep his own house clean. I therefore suggest to Non-Brahmins who have not yet lost their heads, to think out clearly what it is that they are grieved over and make up their minds and fight for all they are worth to remove those grievances. I recognize however that I have this evening entered upon an academic discussion. Not knowing the merits of their quarrels, I do nothing else. But in my own humble opinion, I have indicated the lines of action for both and within the limits of your capacity, it is open to you to make use of them in any manner you like.

But in trying to grapple with this great problem do not forget the little things for which I am touring in Tamil Nadu. Little they may appear to you but I assure you, that they are great enough to engage the attention of every one of you. I simply summarize them for you without entering into the discussion.

Khadi I have already mentioned. Total prohibition, you can have today if you will act with one mind. Whilst we are quarrelling among ourselves, thousands upon thousands of our countrymen are selling themselves to the devil, they cannot get rid of the curse of drink. And we who witness all these damnations shall have to answer before God for our great criminal neglect of our neighbours. There was a Non-Brahmin lady only yesterday to ask you and ask all the people whom I shall have to see to rid society of the curse of the Devadasi institution. Think of the unmanly, unchivalrous manner in which men act towards their sisters. Do not forget these problems which are eating into the vitals of society in trying to fight out the dissensions between Brahmins and Non-Brahmins. And whether I look at Brahmins or Non-Brahmins and treat untouchables as a class of untouchables, I find this one common weakness and error that we, in our impatience, do not think of self-help and self-purification but simply resort to the process of mutual mud-slinging. Since I have no desire to take part in this mutual mud-slinging process, I simply come forward with the humble little things that I have spoken to you. Whatever you may do or may not do, I plead to you that you will not forget these things. I thank you once more for these addresses and purses and what is more for kindly listening to me. May God help you to understand the spirit in which the message has been delivered to you.

Young India, 22-9-1927
37. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Sunday [On or before September 11, 1927]¹

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter. This time your handwriting may be said to have improved a little. Good handwriting and correct spelling are not important in themselves. But if they are not important, they also do not require much time to improve. Try, therefore, to improve them both.

I understand about Damodardas. Now you don’t have to do anything in the matter. You should now devote yourself wholly to your studies and be satisfied.

My health is improving.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8821 Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya. Also G.N.

38. TEST FOR STUDENTS

I feel proud to read that students are making a fine contribution to flood relief work through physical labour. Our hopes of building a better future depend on them. If this foundation is weak, our efforts to put up a building will be wasted. I hope that no student, boy or girl, feels that he or she is unnecessarily sacrificing studies for this work. If they feel unhappy with such thoughts, their service will have been rendered out of weakness and unwillingly and it will be, in that measure, imperfect.

True education consists in such service. They will not have in a school or college the experiences which they are having in this kind of work. A student is a soldier. Just as a soldier’s duty consists in carrying out sincerely the orders of his superiors, so a student’s education consists in sincerely obeying his teacher’s instructions. There may be error in these instructions, but the student will not have to suffer punishment for any such error. If he carries out the ¹From the contents this letter appears to have been written before the letter to the addressee placed “before September 12, 1927.” The Sunday prior to this date was September 11; vide “Letter to Gangabehn Vaidya”, before September 12, 1927.

instructions with a pure mind, he will remain untouched by the error. He will, however, enjoy the fruits, undreamt of by him, of sincere obedience. The injunction to work without thought of the fruit of work does not mean that such work bears no fruit. It always achieves results. In carrying out the teacher’s instructions, the student is acting without any desire for the fruit of such obedience. His action has a happy reward in his spiritual progress. Everything done while carrying out the teacher’s instructions is done at his instance, and so, if there is error in his instructions, it will be he who will reap the fruit of such error. We need not consider here how and when he may have to do this, or whether he will have to reap such fruit at all.

My only aim just now is to express my happiness at the service rendered by students and to give them encouragement; while doing this, I took the opportunity to discuss in brief what, in my view, is the duty of students.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 11-9-1927

39. “WHAT SHOULD I DO?”

A gentleman asks:

I am trying to get into a railway compartment; someone inside holds the door fast, though there is room, and does not let me get in. What should I do in this situation?

There are three courses open:

1. To complain to the railway authorities on the station;
2. If one has strength enough and courage, to force open the door and get into the compartment and, if necessary, to fight with that passenger who thought he owned the railway;
3. If one has courage and spiritual strength to plead with the bully and, if he does not respond, to forgo one’s right and try to find a seat elsewhere. If one fails in that, one may let the train pass. One should have faith that this is for the good of that bully and of oneself. We have no right to ask when he will become reasonable.

All the three courses are legitimate, but the third one is purely of a spiritual character. The first two are practical, but they are not contrary to dharma.

I can imagine a fourth. Being a coward, one may be afraid of getting beaten up in a fight and may look for a seat elsewhere. This is adharma. It has, therefore, no place among the legitimate courses.
open to one. The second question is this:

I am travelling in a train. I get down at one station to drink water. In my absence, someone enters the compartment and occupies my seat. He refuses to vacate it. What should I do?

I think the answer to this is contained in the answer to the first question.

Such incidents are common during railway journeys. I have often been in such difficulties. On every occasion, I adopted the third course, and have never regretted having done so. In many cases, I remember, the bully’s heart had melted. Let not the reader think that people would recognize me because I was a mahatma and would therefore yield. Most of the experiences of which I have the memory belong to a time before I became a mahatma.

But there is one condition for adopting the third course. The person who adopts it should have a living religious faith and should not merely imitate the behaviour of another. If one feels angry with the bully, one should realize that one is not fit to adopt the third course. Dharma is a matter of the heart. If we try to imitate another, there is every possibility of our falling instead of following dharma. I have often observed Gujarat’s non-violence becoming timidity and cowardice. I, therefore, feel reluctant to discuss the third course, and there seems no need to discuss the first two. I do not need to explain that they are even and broad. The third is steep and narrow, and in climbing it we get out of breath, so that we can never discuss it too much. In Gujarat more than elsewhere, but generally in the whole of India, people are usually found to adopt the fourth course which is one of adharma, and so it is necessary to mention the first two. Anyone who adopts either of them may one day be taught to adopt the third, but I doubt if one who follows the fourth can learn the third.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 11-9-1927

40. REPLIES TO A STUDENT’S QUESTIONS

September 11, 1927

Q: 1. Which is the best education?
A: Knowledge of the Self.

2. What is the adornment of youth?

Brahmacharya.
3. What is the best characteristic of the people’s culture?
   Steadfast adherence to truth.

4. Wherein lies the ultimate fulfilment of life?
   In Self-knowledge.

5. What is life’s highest ideal?
   Satyagraha.

6. What is the most praiseworthy quality in a woman?
   Purity.

7. What is the most praiseworthy quality in a man?
   Purity.

8. Which is your favourite book?
   The Gita.

9. What is dearest to you?
   Truth.

   [From Gujarati]

   From a manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

41. SPEECH TO ADI DRAVIDAS, CHIDAMBARAM

   September 11, 1927

   SWAMI SAHAJANDANDA AND FRIENDS,
   As you have given me an advance copy of the address, I know what it contains. As you have rightly remarked in the address, Nandanar\(^1\) was one of the bright stars among the satyagrahis of India.
   I consider myself highly honoured to have had this privilege of laying the foundation of the doorstep of this temple. I consider it to be a great honour that the first act that I am called upon to perform after entering into Chidambaram is to lay the foundation-stone of the doorstep. I am hoping that this will be really a temple where we will be able to see God face to face as Nandanar himself did I pray that this may be a temple of freedom for everyone who would everyone who would visit this. But you should understand that Nandanar was trying to enter, by giving his life-blood, not in a temple built of stone and mortar only. Nandanar saw in the temple, which he was seeking to

\(^1\) At Nandanar School

\(^2\) An “untouchable” devotee who became one of the sixty-three Saivite saints of Tamil Nadu
enter, freedom in his own soul. And so by your own lives, the devotees of the temple will be expected to purify the inward atmosphere of which the visible stone and mortar should merely be the symbol. At the present moment I know many temples, whether they be dedicated to Vishnu or Siva, entered into and visited by thousands of the so-called Brahmmins, which are no temples of God. Let this temple not be an addition to those numerous temples which today disfigure this holy land. But if you want to do that; those who will be in charge of this temple will have to purify their hearts of all anger. I am glad therefore to notice that in your address you do not seem to seek to destroy Hinduism itself as I see is being done in many places in the present time. I appreciate your idea not to trample underfoot Hindu traditions whether they be bad or indifferent. But as you have decided to make use of the good faculty of discrimination, and as you seek not to destroy that which is good but only that which is bad, let me congratulate you upon your determination to win status by sheer force of merit. You rightly claim to be the descendants of the original inhabitants of this ancient land and if it belongs to any single individual as a matter of right, that right is certainly yours and yours foremost. You are therefore entitled to every consideration. It seems that you are bent upon gaining strength by reform within. Let me draw your attention to one or two points.

There is that drink evil, common almost to every Adi Dravida. You must therefore try your level best to rid the community of this drink evil. If I am not mistaken Adi Dravidas are also given to beef-eating. Hinduism is a tolerant religion. But tolerant though it is, it is intolerant of beef-eating on the part of its devotees. You must therefore agitate and agitate till every Adi Dravida has given up beef-eating and the slaughter of cows. Make this temple at once a seat of devotion, centre of learning and a centre from which the force should spread to every Adi Dravida and subsequently to every Hindu and still more subsequently to every Indian. You have said in your address that khaddar itself cannot be successful without the removal of the curse of untouchability.

Here there is a confusion of ideas. The real untouchability will never vanish from this land until khaddar is worn. Let me inform you that there are even now people in India who are poorer and more downtrodden than many Adi Dravidas. Are there not many Adi Dravidas that I have seen in the course of my tour suffering for want of food? But in many parts of India I can show you many who are not called Adi Dravidas but do not get even a single meal a day. This untouchability, of which you complain, has not to go so much as the untouchabilities of those dying millions. Their untouchability is in one way a far more serious affair than the one with which we are placed. So it pleases me to find mention made in your address to having a weaving institute for Adi Dravida boys and I appreciate your invitation to me to help this weaving institute. I shall do so with the greatest pleasure if you will fulfil the conditions that are imposed on every weaving institute which seeks my assistance. The first and the foremost condition I propose to mention to you is that in the weaving institute nothing but hand-spun yarn can be used. If you are serious about this, place yourself in correspondence with the Secretary, Mr. S. Ramanathan, who is in charge of the All-India Spinners’ Association in this part of the country. You will find him accessible at all times, ready to render any assistance that is in his power. He and I exist for that purpose. As you are about to make this temple a centre of devotion let me also commend to you the two things which are necessary for our children, i.e., the learning of Sanskrit and Hindi which may be helpful in life.

The Hindu, 12-9-1927

42. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, CHIDAMBARAM

September 11, 1927

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I thank you for all these addresses and the different purses. I thank you also for the delicate consideration with which you have saved the reading of all the addresses, as you are aware that I have to catch the train immediately after 7 o’clock and therefore speak against time. The saving of the time which therefore was caused by the saving of reading of the addresses is all the more appreciable. I tell you that it does not give me satisfaction when I have to go away from you in such a short time. Your fame had preceded my coming here through the beautiful story that Mr. C. Rajagopalachariar wrote through the pages of Young India. I know the fame of this place of yours. Ever since that time I know that Chidambaram must be a place of pilgrimage for me. I have never claimed to be the original satyagrahi. What I have claimed is the application of that doctrine on almost a universal scale. And yet it remains to be seen and demonstrated that it is a doctrine which is capable of application by thousands and thousands of people in all ways. I know therefore that mine is an experiment still in the making. And it therefore always keeps me humble and rooted to the soil. In that state of humility I always cling to every example of satyagraha that comes under my notice as a child clings to its mother’s breast. And so when I hear or read the story of Nandanar and his lofty satyagraha and his great success, my head bows before his spirit. All the day long I have felt elevated to be able to be in a place hallowed by the holy feet of Nandanar. It will not be without a wrench that I shall be leaving this place in a few minutes’ time. But it gave me great joy and I considered it to be a great honour that the very first act I was called upon to perform was to lay the foundation-stone of the gateway of the temple that has been erected in memory of the great saint. How I wish that it could be said about the people of Chidambaram that at least they knew no distinction between Brahmins and Panchamas. If the people of Chidambaram would rise to that lofty height they would have done nothing more than what the Gita expects every Hindu to do. In the eye of God there are no touchables or untouchables.
Brahmins are called Brahmins not for their superiority, not for their ability to lord it over others, but because of their ability to serve mankind by their knowledge and their ability to efface themselves in the act of service. Theirs is the privilege, theirs is the duty of serving their fellow-brethren. They cannot do so in its fullness unless they renounce every earthly reward. By his indomitable spirit and by his overwhelming faith in the infinite presence of God, Nandanar was able to bear down the haughty spirit of the haughty Brahmins and showed that he in spirit was infinitely superior to the persecutors who considered him the curse amongst mankind. But let the Panchamas, the Adi Dravida brothers and sisters, profiting by the example of Nandanar, live up to the spirit which they have inherited. Nandanar broke down every barrier and won his way to freedom not by freak, not by lustre, but by the purest form of self-suffering and did not swear against his persecutors. He would not even condescend to ask from his persecutors what were his dues. But he shamed them into doing justice by his lofty prayers and by the purity of his character, and, if I may commit it into human language, he compelled God Himself to descend and made Him open the eyes of his persecutors.
What Nandanar did in his time and in his own person, it is open to every one of us to do today. I wish that you, my hearers, will catch something of the spirit of Nandanar, and if so many of us could possibly imitate Nandanar and assimilate the spark of his spirit, we can make the land, a land again of holy people. I hope and pray that the temple with which the trustees have identified me today will keep green the memory of this great saint by keeping the atmosphere about the temple always pure. I would very much like to leave the atmosphere about this meeting at this stage filled with the spirit of Nandanar. But it would be wrong perhaps on my part if I do not say a few words showing how we can illustrate the spirit of Nandanar in our daily life.

In my humble opinion we cannot better translate that spirit than by clothing ourselves with khaddar in spirit. I am not saying we can imitate Nandanar by wearing khaddar merely. But I say that we must have the khadi spirit. Even a blackguard, even a prostitute will be expected to wear khaddar since he or she, the blackguard, must wear something as they eat wheat and rice in this country in common with us. But the khadi spirit means that we must know the meaning of what the wearing of khaddar carries with it. Every time that we take our khaddar garment early in the morning to wear for going out we should remember that we are doing so in the name of Daridranarayana and for the sake of saving the millions of India. If we have the khadi spirit in us we should serve ourselves with simplicity in every walk of life. Khadi spirit means illimitable patience. For those who know anything of production of khaddar know how patiently those spinners and weavers have to toil. Even so must we have patience while spinning the thread of swaraj. Khadi spirit means also equally illimitable faith. So must we have that illimitable faith in truth and non-violence ultimately conquering every obstacle in our way. Khadi spirit means fellow-feeling with every living being on earth. It means the complete renunciation of everything that is likely to harm our fellow creatures. And if we are to cultivate that spirit amongst the millions of our countrymen, what a land this India of ours would be!

I am well aware that khadi cannot compete with the other articles of commerce on their own platform and on their own terms. Even as satyagraha is a weapon unique by itself and not one of the ordinary weapons wielded by politicians so is khadi a unique article of commerce which will not and cannot succeed on terms common to other articles. If khadi is asked for in the khadi spirit that I have endeavoured to describe to you, khadi has illimitable capacities and it would outstand every other article that you see in India today. You will therefore perhaps understand why I do not appreciate all these khadi purses that you are giving me. I know that if you had a tenth of the faith in the khadi which I have, you will not give a few hundreds or few thousands of your plenty but you will satisfy me till there is no money required for khadi. I was really distressed this morning when I discovered that a friend who is conducting a khaddar store here, not for making money but for the love of khaddar, is incurring a loss of Rs. 200 year after year. Surely it is the A B C of patriotism, it is the A B C of your love for these starving millions, that you should all wear khaddar. I was equally distressed to find Swami Sahajananda just as I came here telling me that the reason why his boys and girls were not clothed in khaddar was because the persons responsible did not patronize khaddar and it is just the reverse of the khaddar spirit which I have just described to you. In the face of these facts, you will pardon me for saying that even the intrinsic value of these purses of yours suffers. Let me pass on to the drink evil.

You must ask those here, who are given to the drink habit, to give up this cursed drink and those who are not given to the drink habit should not remain satisfied, if they have any real love for their less unfortunate brethren, till they have been rid of this curse and total prohibition is established in this land. So must you get rid of this disgraceful and immoral Devadasi institution. You should be no party whatsoever to child marriages and harbouring child widows in your homes. It is time that we should make these elementary reforms in our society without the slightest delay. I thank you once more for all these addresses and the purses and the patience with which you have listened to me.

The Hindu, 13-9-1927

43. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Silence Day [After September 11, 1927]

CHI. GANGABEHN (VAIDYA),

I got your letter. There is nothing more to suggest regarding what you are doing. Your handwriting has improved. It will become steady with practice. There are still some errors in the language. Revise the letters after writing and have them corrected by others who

---

1 From the contents; vide the preceding item know more than you do. If you will be humble thus and particular about correctness of the language, it will improve gradually without any effort on your part. You will not have to spend a single minute for that.

“5..” should be written 500. A point is used to denote a nasal sound. A zero is indicated with a circle. Here is how you have written the numbers and how they should be written.

5. 500
1. 100
5. 50
5. 50
1. 10

Units should be placed under units, tens under tens and so on.

Blessing from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8823. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya. Also G.N. 11379

44. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

September 12, 1927

Unrevised

CHI. MIRA.

I could not help sending you a wire of thanksgiving yesterday. These have been somewhat anxious days. Though I have not written much nor telegraphed to you, my spirit has hovered about and watched over you. I knew that if I sent you a wire daily, you would like it but I thought that I must not. Letter-writing has been almost impossible these trying days. They leave me just enough time to attend to the programme before me. I have been pouring my soul out to the various audiences that leaves me little energy for anything else. On the top of that come the reading of Miss Mayo’s book and the heavy article on it.

But it has been matter of the greatest relief to me to know that Jamnalalji was with you. Thank God it all seems to be over now. It has been a good test.

And Ramanama! If that has become a living reality with you it is a great thing indeed. But you shall give me your experiences when you are stronger. I want them all and I want to know also why you have been delirious or hysterical. Of course often we do not know.

Now you will go gently. Take all the rest you need. Watch yourself and if any change in your food is necessary, make it. Find out the cause of the enlarged spleen. Stay in Poona as long as you like. Ask for the convenience you need. What you cannot mention to anybody else, you will mention to me. I am faring all right. Rajagopalachari protects me as much as any human being can. He wears himself out in trying to shield me. And I know that the strain is too much for him, but I do not interfere. If God wants this tour to be finished, He will keep those who must be, from all harm. You are therefore not to worry about me. Unless you think otherwise send this to mother.

With love,

BAPU

SHRI[MATI] MIRABEHN
C/O SETH JAMNALAL BAJAJ
KALBADEVI ROAD
BOMBAY

From the original: C.W. 5274. Courtesy: Mirabehn

45. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Silence Day [Before September 12, 1927]

CHI. GANGABEHN (VAIDYA).

I have your letter. Your Sanskrit writing is very good indeed. Your Gujarati writing too has improved.

I do not wish that you should spend more time in acquiring knowledge, but I would not consider such a desire on your part improper and would help you to fulfil it. If, comparing yourself with other women who are educated, you feel you lack and desire education like theirs, you have a right within limits to acquire it.

1 Mirabehn explains: “After the severe attack of malaria, I was on my way to Poona for recouping my health.”
2 From the reference to the addressee’s going for relief work; vide “Letter to Ashram Women”, 12-9-1927.
If, however, your atman has come to be completely at peace with itself, I would wish that you should give yourself wholly to any one activity you like. But this is a matter of the heart. One can do nothing but keep on trying until the heart agrees to give up such efforts.

I see that flood relief work will keep you busy for some time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8822. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

46. LETTER TO JETHALAL JOSHI

Bhadrapad Krishna 1 [September 12, 1927]¹

BHAI JETHALALJI,

Your letter. I would advise you to see the Secretary of the Ashram and there take up some work if you find any. There is little possibility of my coming to the Ashram during this year.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1354

47. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKER PATTANI

Monday, Bhadarva Vad 1 [September 12, 1927]²

SUJNA BHAISHRI,

I had duly received your letter about the problems of life. I have held my peace not to oblige you but because I must. I have understood what you write to me. If I can avoid it, I do not want to make a mistake. Since I did not want to pat myself on the back, I considered it proper to keep silent; but may I not say that you were the person responsible for that decision? But this is neither here nor there.

What I wanted to write to you was that you should take care of your health, because I expect many things from you. If you have not ¹ The year is inferred from the reference to Gandhiji’s inability to go to the Ashram, as also from the discussion about the work to be taken up by the addressee.

² The year is inferred from the reference to Mayavaram.
read my last speech concerning Mysore, I can send a copy, the hope being that you may carry out as many as you can of the suggestions made in it.

I am getting along as usual. I am writing this from Mayavaram. I am not sending you my itinerary. It will be all right if you write to me c/o the Ashram.

Do you work on the spinning-wheel?

What progress had Lady Pattani made in accepting pankora\(^1\) for her garments?

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 3214. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani

48. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Silence Day, Bhadarva Vad 1 [September 12, 1927]\(^2\)

DEAR SISTERS.

I should not say I have your letter—it was little more than a note. I learn that you have appointed Gangabehn Jhaveri as your President, since Kashibehn has gone to Rajkot. The fact that you can get as many presidents as you need is some proof of your ability to run your organization. It would be a better proof still when you respect your President with all your heart and when all of you work in perfect unison in running the organization. Menfolk have not as yet been able to manage such things well. When we look at the affairs of our Ashram we find that we are not yet trained well enough to carry on the administration of the Ashram without quarrelling among ourselves. So it is not surprising if you also have not attained that stage. But if you persevere, I am sure you will acquire the necessary capacity. Try your best to get rid of factions and cliques. Only by striving for better things can we make progress.

It is good that Gangabehn senior has gone away on relief work. My work continues to make progress, though slowly.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3667

---

\(^1\) A variety of coarse cloth

\(^2\) From the reference to Gangabehn Jhaveri becoming President of the Ashram Women
49. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

[About September 12, 1927]

CHI. GANGABEHN JHAVERI,

Even though I owe you no letter, I am writing this. It is good you have got the presidency. Show yourself worthy of it. Give all your attention to its duties. If difficulties crop up, overcome them with courage. Don’t be baffled by anything.

As I write this, I remember that as a matter of fact I owe you a letter. I did not, could not, reply to your question about Marathi. Take the help you need for learning Sanskrit, wherever available. Actually, since you know grammar, you can do a lot on your own. And the same is true about Hindi.

Improve your knowledge of Gujarati, Hindi and Sanskrit and then go ahead in reading. As for work, all other things come in after you have mastered the science of the spinning-wheel. That science of course includes ginning, carding, spinning, repairing the spinning-wheel, straightening the spindle, making a cord for connecting the wheel with the spindle, mounting the sadis on to the spindle, etc. The body, too, should be well developed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3126

50. LETTER TO MIRA BEHN

[September 13, 1927]

CHI. MIRA,

I have just a few moments for writing to you. There is no wire from you since Saturday. I therefore presume that you are quite well now and in Bombay. The Monday letter was sent to Bombay as per your instructions.

1 Vide the preceding item.

2 A small piece of fine cloth wound around the spindle to secure the position of the cord or to prevent the disc from moving back.

3 From the reference to the “Monday letter”. (which is the one dated 12-9-1927)
Your letter in your own hand after the illness was perfectly written and quite legible. In fact the writing was even better than usual.

Yes, the illness was a blessing. The weakness you will soon get over. If you go to Poona, you will take long walks and visit the dairy there in the company of one of our very best friends there. You will love Prof. Trivedi as you see him. You will befriend his boy Manu and you will see the Seva Sadan and the Society’s quarters. But that by and by.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5275. Courtesy: Mirabehn

51. LETTER TO KATHERINE MAYO

AS AT SABARMATI,
ON TOUR,
September 13, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

It was through Mr. Karl Placht that I received some time ago a copy of your book. Mother India, which he sent me with your permission. I really get little time to read any literature but as your book attracted much attention here and gave rise to very bitter and angry comment, and as many correspondents drew my attention to the fact that you had made copious references to my writings and urged me to give my opinion upon your book I made time to read it through. I am sorry to have to inform you that the book did not leave on my mind at all a nice impression. I have asked the Publishers of Young India to send you a copy of my review of your book. If you think that I have done any injustice to you take care to draw my attention to it I shall feel thankful to you. As I have not your address by me on my tour, I am taking the liberty of sending this to you through Mr. Karl Placht.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

MISS KATHERINE MAYO

From a copy: Katherine Mayo Papers. Courtesy: Yale University Library, New Haven, Connecticut, U.S.A.

52. LETTER TO VIJAY SINGH PATHIK

Bhadrapad Krishna 2 [September 13, 1927]

Bhai Pathikji,

I got your letter today. I had sent a reply to your last letter. I am surprised that you did not get it. There has been no change in my attitude. If there was I would not conceal it. You may come over here whenever you wish to. I shall be touring till the 10th of October, not farther than one day’s run from Madras. You will be able to locate me from Madras.

I have written nothing to the Government to save Abdul Rashid from the gallows. I have certainly asked Hindus to forgive him. What do you expect me to do for the Kakori case prisoners? What people should I appeal to?

Yours,
Mohanandas

From Bapu, maine kya dekha, kya samjha, p. 125

53. SPEECH AT MAYAVARAM

September 13, 1927

LADIES AND FRIENDS,

I thank for all these several addresses and the several purses. If you want me to make a fairly detailed reply to all the important points referred to in those addresses, it is necessary that you should keep perfect silence during the time when I am speaking.

At the outset I have to tender you the same apology that I tendered at Cuddalore; and that was to ask you, out of your generosity, to pardon me for my having been not accessible to all and sundry that came to me during my rest hours. If I could have had the strength, I would have loved to talk to the citizens in this town to

1 The year is inferred from the reference to Gandhiji’s tour programme and to Abdul Rashid, the assassin of Swami Shraddhanand.

2 An armed dacoity committed on August 9, 1925 near Kakori railway station when cash and currency were plundered from the guard’s van of a train going to Lucknow from Moradabad; one person was killed. The dacoity, it was alleged, had been committed by certain members of the Hindustan Republican Association of United Provinces, the object of which was the establishment of a ‘Federated Republic of the United States of India’. Of the 21 accused, two were acquitted, three were sentenced to death, one to transportation for life and the rest to terms of imprisonment varying from five to 14 years.
cross-question them and to understand their several viewpoints; but in the present weak state of my health, such a thing is not possible.

Some of you may perhaps recall than this is not my first visit to Mayavaram. I have a vivid recollection of 1915, when I had the privilege of talking to some of you on swadeshi.¹ But I must not detain you by recalling to you my pleasant recollections of that time.

I congratulate you on your work towards the uplift of the so-called ‘untouchables’. . . .

But I must this evening speak to you on a subject which is very dear to me, but on which I have not as yet spoken during this tour of mine. I would like to speak to you on that subject this evening because it was forced on my attention yesterday morning. I want to speak to you upon the sanitation of this place. Your municipality very kindly presented me an address in which you have mentioned some of my activities in which I am interested as a humanitarian, as a reformer. I reckon sanitation also as one of the important things which a humanitarian or a reformer must tackle. Within three or four minutes’ walk of the place where you have kindly housed me, I endeavoured unsuspectingly to go out for a walk thinking that it was a beautiful grove by the side of a lovely pond. A rustic bamboo foot bridge drew my attention to walk over it. I crossed it, turned to the right and walked with my companion but a few paces when you may imagine what I saw. What I saw was a sight too horrible to talk about; and the stench that was coming out of it was suffocating. I saw the water of that pond was being defiled in a disgusting manner, when, at the same time, a woman was filling her pot with that same water. And, in order to get the morning walk, I was obliged to go out for some distance in a motor-car. I felt deeply hurt; I felt as if I was wounded. It recalled to me the sights that I used to see in the principal streets of the Madras city itself in 1915. Surely there is something that is terribly wrong in this state of affairs. The first condition of any municipal life is decent sanitation and an unfailing supply of pure water. Do not for a moment consider that either of these two things require any great outlay of money. Both these things are capable of being secured without your having to spend any money at all, if only you have the will to secure them to the citizens. But it requires a vivid sense of your municipal duties. Membership of a municipal board must not be treated as a place of privilege. No man dare enter a municipality except in the spirit of a scavenger. But what I see so often in the papers is only wrangling over municipal elections and the fight between the Brahmins and the Non-Brahmins arising out of this wrangling. If you will only remember that you are the servants of the people of Mayavaram and not their masters and that you are entrusted with the solemn duty to keep the town in perfect sanitation for the benefit of the people, you will start with a shovel in your hand and set about keeping the water pure and preserving sanitation on the land given to the poor. You have got in your midst so many schools maintained by you; give them a holiday and ask the students of those schools to go about cleaning the streets and also telling the people themselves to keep the streets clean and the water pure. Surely our learning and all the lessons that we receive on sanitation in schools are useless, unless we reduce them to practice in our daily life; and I urge you not to say to yourselves that our people will not listen to these appeals and will not change their habits. The place where I was myself born had terribly impure dungheaps in the streets about fifty years back. But there came to that place an administrator; and, be it said to his credit, he was an Englishman. He removed the dungheaps in a day and there was no protest to his doing so from any of the people. Nor did he use his official authority to impose his imperious will on an unwilling people. But he reasoned with the people, bore down all opposition and carried out his reforms. I have cited this instance before you because I am a determined opponent of this British administration but we have yet got to learn much from the Britisher in the matter of sanitation. I ask you to shake off your lethargy, to take your courage in your hands; and you can easily carry out this reform.

¹Vide “Speech at Reception at Mayavaram”, May 1, 1915.

I must now proceed to the very long and well argued address presented to me on behalf of the ‘suppressed’ society. That address isolates itself from other addresses of the kind, in that it refers not so much to the social disabilities, as it does to the civil disabilities of that community. It casts very serious reflections upon the landlord class. It charges them with having reduced their class to serfdom. It charges the administration with having closed the door against their holding even menial offices. It complains of want of assistance from everybody, except [for] a few isolated instances. It says that, whereas their average income is never more than Rs. 40 a year, their expenses are never less than Rs. 120 per year. It complains that, being rooted to the soil, they have to remain without any occupation at all for a major portion of the year.

I do not know what truth there is in all these allegations. As it is, I can only give these friends of mine the consolation that I will endeavour to verify these statements in their address. Generally speaking, I may assure them of my fullest sympathy and I certainly associate myself with the remark that I notice in their address that they are the first holders of the land in this country.

But there is no cause for the spirit of despair that runs throughout the address. They, in common with the rest, cannot help profiting by the great awakening that has now come over the country. At the present moment, it is true that that awakening has taken a sad turn. In our blindness, we seem to think that each group, each section, each class, each caste should pull its way by itself without the one cooperating with the other. So we are torn by internal dissensions. But these dissensions are only temporary and are bound to die out; and, when the cloud is really lifted and the day dawns, the ‘suppressed’ classes are bound to partake in the rejoicings that will come in the wake. And in order to partake in the rejoicings at the time of the advent of that dawn, let them understand that, after all, everyone shall have ultimately to depend upon self-help. They have but to become conscious of their own strength which their numbers and their occupation give them; and they will become an irresistible force. Immediately they realize that they are slaves of nobody, and that, after all, without their labour, the lands they are cultivating will become a horrible wilderness, then the day is theirs.

But I would say to the landlord class, that if the allegations made against them in the address are true to any extent, it reflects the greatest discredit upon them. Let them not crush under their feet the shoulders on which they ride. Let them consider these labouring classes, who alone make their barren fields appear smiling with rich crops, let the landlord class consider these labourers as one of their own family and allow them to share in the happiness to which the labours of these people contribute so much. It is wrong, it is sinful to consider our own labourers as ‘untouchables’. Let us wipe out this shame.

But I have yet to talk to you of another shame. I saw some friends this afternoon from whose class the Devadasis are drawn. I saw some of these sisters also and I engaged them in a very serious conversation. And, as I was talking to them and understanding the hidden meaning of this thing, my whole soul rose against the system in its entirety. In calling them Devadasis we insult God Himself under the sacred name of religion; and we commit a double crime in that we use these sisters of ours to serve our lust and take, in the same breath, foul as it is, the name of God. To think that there should be a class of people given to this kind of immoral service and that there is another class of people in this country who perpetuate the continuance of such a system, makes one despair of life itself. And I assure you that, as I was talking to them, there was no evil in their eyes and that they were capable of as fine perceptions and as pure feelings as any other woman in the world. What difference can there be between them and our own blood-sisters? And if we will not allow our own blood-sisters for such immoral uses, how dare we then use these women for such purposes? Let the Hindus, who are connected in any way with this evil, purge themselves of it. The existence of such an evil in our society saps its foundations. The majority of these sisters, or all of them, have promised me to retrace their steps on certain conditions; and I promised them that I would make it convenient and possible for them to so retrace their steps. God willing, I shall fulfil my promise and let them also do their part. If they cannot fulfil those conditions, I shall blame not them, but the society in which their lot is cast. It is up to you to extend the hand of fellowship to these sisters. It is up to you to see that they are reclaimed from this life of shame. I know that, when again they have to face temptations, it may become a too irresistible force. But, if man will restrain his lust and if society should disapprove of this practice, it is surely possible that they will not go astray.

I thank you for giving me this very patient hearing. I know that you will excuse my straight talk to you this evening. Though, during the period of my stay here I have had every attention bestowed upon me by so many of the kind friends that were by my side, I must own that the two days of my stay here were sad days for me. This Devadasi problem which was brought to my notice yesterday and the state of insanitation that I personally observed, caused me intense grief; and in talking to you in the manner in which I did, I endeavoured to lighten my grief by making you share in it. I shall hope that you will share that grief and lighten my burden by following my suggestions.

As is usual at all these meetings, if you will continue to be silent, volunteers will go round to all of you making collections and you may pay them whatever you are willing to pay.
In answer to a question put to him by a member in the meeting at the time the volunteers were going round, Mahatmaji replied:

A friend has asked me, and very legitimately, how these purses that are being received are to be utilized. The usual custom is to utilize the purse collected in any province in that province itself. But, when it is collected in a very rich place as in Bombay, it is usual to spend it in a place where it is most needed. In the largest part of the country, all over India, all the money that is collected goes into the hands of spinners, carders and weavers. No one is called upon to leave his present occupation, if he has one, and to take to spinning or carding or weaving; so, it is only the poorest classes who are being served by the workers. It has not been as yet found possible to distribute the whole of the purses amongst the spinners, carders and weavers alone. The act of organizing the villages for weaving and spinning takes a portion of this money. It is impossible in a poor country like ours to get an army of workers who can afford to devote themselves to this act of organizing, without any remuneration being paid to them. Though we have in this movement scores of volunteers who not only do not get anything but themselves pay something towards this movement, it is not possible to get the 15,000 people, that we are now employing, for nothing. Roughly speaking, I may tell you that anything between twenty to twenty-five per cent of the total expenses is spent in the work of organization alone. The remaining seventy-five to eighty per cent of the money goes directly into the hands of the really famine-stricken poor as wages for the work that they do. And in this manner, throughout the length and breadth of India, 15,000 villages have been thus organized. Over 50,000 spinners all over India are at present getting each between one rupee and a rupee and a half a month\(^1\), whereas, before hand-spinning came, they were getting nothing at all. And, as ten spinners feed one weaver, at least 5,000 weavers are each getting between Rs. 15 and Rs. 20 a month and, side by side with all this, has been resuscitated the old art of printing which had all but died out. And hundreds of printers, dyers, laundrymen and others are earning now an honest livelihood. The object before the All-India Spinners’ Association is to reduce the organizing expenses from 25 per cent to somewhere about 15 per cent at least. Let me also inform you that 1,000 to 1,500 men, who are working to organize the villages, are living honest and useful lives; and I I repeat what I said elsewhere

\(^1\) The source has “day”.

98 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
that, if khadi becomes universal in India, it opens out a good source of livelihood to thousands of young men who are in want of employment. If it is possible to have achieved what had been done with but 15 or 20 lakhs of rupees, you may realize what will be possible if we get all the 60 crores of rupees that are now being paid for the cloth imported from outside the country.

_The Hindu, 15-9-1927_

54. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[After September 13, 1927]

CHI. MIRA,

I had four letters together yesterday and one I have today. I have so much confidence in Jamnalalji as a man and in Dr. Dalal as a surgeon and physician that I have no anxiety. Absence of wire from you means that no operation has been necessary as yet. You will buy the glasses that may be necessary.

Yes, the 9 o’clock silence is a great thing. It was Kaka’s suggestion. I had no hesitation about its adoption.

Subbiah is still on sick leave though he is now convalescent. He will take about a fortnight before he can rejoin me. Devdas came only today after leaving Subbiah at his father-in-law’s.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5276. Courtesy: Mirabehn

---

1 The source has “lakhs”.

2 In Mahadev Desai’s letter to Mira dated September 12, 1927, he says that Devdas was attending on Subbiah who was ill.

3 Explaining this Mahadev Desai in his letter dated September 8, 1927 wrote to Mira: “Bapu has decided to go into silence every evening at 9 p.m., that there may be no engagements and no interviews after that hour. The vow is tentatively for two months after which he will decide if it is to be continued for life. There are two exceptions, illness of self and others and travelling.”
55. LETTER TO O. G. VILLARD

AS AT SABARMATI,
September 14, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and copy of Miss Mayo’s book1. A friend of hers had already sent me a copy. I have now read it and written for Young India a fairly long review. I have asked the publishers to send you a marked copy of Young India. In the circumstances, I hope, you do not consider it necessary for me to write anything special. If, however, on reading my review you consider that there is any point requiring elucidation please let me know. I read your review with a great deal of interest.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD, ESQ.
20, VESSEY STREET
NEW YORK
From a photostat: C.W. 9228

56. LETTER TO N. M. KHARE

Wednesday, Bhadarva Vad 3 [September 14, 1927]2

BHAIPANDITJI,

I got your letter about prayers. Since Kaka has written al ready I do not write more. There is but one ideal behind our prayers. But we must act according to the limits of our capacity. We should deceive neither the people nor our own selves. If many do not arrive at 4 o’clock, let us give up our claim that we hold the prayer at that hour, and keep the time that suits all. But once this hour has been fixed, everyone ought to attend. Those who are devoted to the present hour of 4 o’clock should keep up their practice themselves, get up at four and engage themselves in any activity which they choose.

If all the people do not like the Ramayana, by all means discontinue it.

1 Mother India
2 From the similarity between the contents of this and the letter dated “Mayavaram, September 13, 1927” from Mahadev Desai to Khare
Do not think about what I like, but take people’s capacity into consideration and introduce whatever changes you wish. Do nothing in haste.

I see no advantage in extending the time for reading the Gita. At the most it takes five minutes to read three long chapters. I very much like the 14-day reading programme. But even in this matter, do what is agreeable to all of you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 252. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare

57. SPEECH AT KUMBAKONAM

September 14, 1927

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I thank you for all the addresses and purses. Apart from the usual addresses, I see here an address from the Hindi Prachar Office, Kumbakonam. I congratulate you on having a branch of the Hindi Prachar Office of Madras here. Had Hindi been more popular in this part of the country, you could not have me speak in English and translate it into Tamil but to speak in Hindi and translate it. I understand that though a fair sprinkling of students are learning Hindi, it is still to be supported so far as the finances are concerned, from the central office. I think as a matter of fact, in an important centre like this there should be far greater earnestness for the study of Hindi and that the whole of the financial burden should be borne locally. It is now commonly recognized by all lovers of the country that if we are to establish a closer contact between the North and the South, a knowledge of Hindi has to be cultivated, especially among the leaders of the country.

I was pleased and grateful to receive the purse from the students also. They were anxious that I should address them separately. But they gladly relieved me of that responsibility when they realized that it would be a great strain on me to address two meetings separately. I am conscious you are aware that in many places I am obliged to address more than one meeting. I have to do so whenever it becomes inevitable for a variety of reasons. But wherever I can decently avoid these obligations, I do so. And I do so because I am anxious to go through the appointed tour without any breakdown. But though I have not been able to address students separately, let them understand that my heart is always with them. I would like to impress upon the student world the necessity for having pure character. Without a pure character as a foundation, they would not be able to rise to the expectations that have been raised in the nation about the students. All the world over, whether today or in the distant past, the experience is that it is the rising generation that has been able to battle against the entrenched prejudices and superstitions. They are therefore to be found always in the forefront of reforms and the battle for freedom. For the rest, I would advise the students to study the different addresses that I have been giving to them wherever it has been possible during this tour.

To the Municipal and Taluk Board, I would respectfully commend the reply I made yesterday to the Municipal Council at Mayavaram. It was by accident that I happened to draw the attention of the Municipal Council to the terrible insanitation that I witnessed and as a matter of fact the remarks that I passed there are applicable to almost all the municipal councils in this presidency. Nevertheless my remarks do not lose any of their force, because the evil I draw attention to was almost universal. It is high time that municipal councillors understand the responsibility attached to the office. They must not be used as stepping-stones to fame or renown. In the course of having to advise different friends in different parts of India, it has been my painful duty to study the working of the many municipal councils, and I have discovered that much of their time is wasted in mutual recriminations and wranglings. I have noticed that in many municipalities corruption is rampant during election time, whereas every municipal councillor should consider himself a trustee and custodian of public health and public moral. I wish that the municipal councils take to heart blemishes that I have drawn their attention to and trust that they would make serious endeavour to remove those blemishes. This place is renowned for its holiness and learning. It is not difficult and it is not too much to expect to make this place a model so far as sanitation is concerned.

The mention of the learning that exists in Kumbakonam brings me to a subject on which I want to occupy a few minutes of your time. Unhappily at the present moment our learning—I mean the Sanskrit learning—has become synonymous with superstition. I understand that the very earnest remarks I made before the students in the Pachaiyappa’s Hall have given offence to the pundits of this place.
They have written to me asking for an appointment. I have sent them the message—I do not know whether it reached them—that though I can ill afford I shall be glad to receive them at 8 o’clock this night. But I would like to appeal with all the earnestness at my command that whatever I said to the students was said after fullest deliberation and I see nothing to alter a single word in that. As a Sanatani Hindu, as I call myself to be one, I say with great deliberation that untouchability as we practise today has no warrant in Hinduism and that it is a blot on Hindu society. I say in all humility but with equal firmness that if we, Hindus, do not take care to rid ourselves of this blot, Hinduism itself is in serious danger of being blotted out. A religion whose two great maxims are “Satyannasti paro dharmah”¹, “Ahimsa paramo dharmah”², a religion that is broadbased on fundamental truth and fundamental love, cannot possibly tolerate untouchability because one is born in particular surroundings. I say also with greatest emphasis that there is no warrant in this Hinduism that I have defined to you for child widowhood. Marriage, it is universally acknowledged, gives a status and a change in life. There can be no such thing as a sacred bond on the part of a girl of tender years who is only fit to sit in her mother’s or father’s lap. And if fathers, who are blind to all affection springing out of parental love, give away their daughters of tender years in marriage, it is not marriage except a stone being married to a man. Therefore I say that there is no such thing as a child widow because there is no such thing as child marriage.

I have no hesitation to repeat the advice that, if there are students who want to be married, they will be performing an act of charity towards the girls of India to seek out child widows when they have outgrown their childhood and they will be doing a service to the country if they make up their minds to end child widowhood by refusing child marriage. When a thing is manifestly immoral and repugnant to all reason and all sense of justice, it is wrong to seek shelter under Sanskrit texts of doubtful validity and doubtful authority. Shastras are given to elevate us and light our path towards perfection. Who can possibly offer a moral defence of the painful system of Devadasis and of the parent who would consign his daughter to a life of shame and infamy in the name of religion?

¹ “There is no religion higher than Truth.”
² “Ahimsa is the highest dharma.”
³ What follows is from The Hindu, 16-9-1927.
I have been told that I am tender when speaking before Christian audiences or Mussalman audiences, whereas I am not at all tender about Hindu religion and Hindu weaknesses. If it is a crime, I plead willingly guilty. About Christianity and Islam I do not claim to know as well as I claim to know Hinduism. Christians and Mussalmans, no matter how open I may be, are likely to misunderstand me but there is no such possibility in Hinduism and I have no fear of being misunderstood by my Hindu people. Therefore courtesy demands that I should be tender before Christian and Mussalman audiences, but it would be totally wrong on my part to be tender in speaking to Hindu audiences about Hinduism and Hindu blemishes. Even as a skilful surgeon knowing his patient and knowing his defects ruthlessly uses his knife to cure the wound, as a reformer, claiming to be saturated at least as well as the tallest among the Hindus, it would be totally wrong if I out of false courtesy and false tenderness do not put emphasis on the defects and weaknesses which are ruining the Hindu society. And I am thankful to be able to say that during a long course of public life I have not been often misunderstood by Hindus or Hindu audiences; but whether I retain the affection of my countrymen or whether I forfeit their affection, the path of duty is absolutely clear before me. Taking all the care that it would be humanly possible for me to take not to give unnecessary offence and not to cause unnecessary displeasure, I must continue to give out what I feel and speak with absolute truth and absolute fairness and so I suggest as humbly as I can to all the learned pundits in this place and to every thinking Hindu, man or woman, to reconsider their views and understand the bearings of untouchability, child-marriages, child widows and Devadasis and ask themselves whether there can be any warrant for all these in a religion inspired by rishis who went into endless austerities and based their faith upon the teachings of the Bhagavad Gita.

I must now come to the spinning-wheel. I am glad that you are, as much as you can, supporting the spinning-wheel. I am glad that there is no difference of opinion about the necessity of the spinning-wheel. You have got in your midst the Saurashtra weavers. Your capacity for khadi service is limitless. But it is not enough that you give me some money when I appear before you. It is not enough that some of you wear khadi on occasions; but it is necessary if you have real fellow-feeling for these starving millions of India, you all throw away you foreign cloth and take to khadi to ward off suffering and poverty. It is equally your duty to see that this curse of drunkenness is removed from this country. If we would but take personal interest in the welfare of our bretheren who are given to drink, you should insist upon total prohibition and, to my mind, the day is not far off when India would become dry.

As is usual in all meetings, volunteers will go in your midst and collect contributions from those who desire to contribute. It is usual also to auction all the jewellery and any costly thing that I might receive in the course of my journey and, I propose to auction the ring which I have got now. There was a silver plate which is from my kind host (Mr. Pantulu Aiyer) but unfortunately I have not brought it here.

_The Hindu_, 15-9-1927 and 16-9-1927

58. DISCUSSION WITH PUNDITS, KUMBAKONAM

September 14, 1927

Several leading pundits of this place had a Conference with Mahatma Gandhi last night. The pundits, it is understood, protested against the recent remarks of Mr. Gandhi about child widows and their marriage and the question of untouchability. They contended Mr. Gandhi’s statement that those customs had no sanction in the Hindu Shastras was incorrect and that they could cite authorities.

Mr. Gandhi explained to them the proper way of upholding Hinduism was not by quoting isolated texts but by acting through the inner voice of conscience. Nothing that was opposed to truth and love could be dharma according to Hindu Shastras. He appealed to them to co-operate with him in his work of conserving Hinduism against the destroying influences of evil customs and not to help the destruction of Hinduism by putting obstacles in the way of reform.

_The Bombay Chronicle_, 16-9-1927

59. DRAIN INSPECTOR’S REPORT

On the lips of the good vice becomes virtue,
And even virtue appears as vice in the mouth of the evil-minded:
this need not surprise us.
For, do not the mighty clouds drink the salt waters of the ocean and return it as sweet refreshing rain,
And does not the cobra, drinking sweet milk, belch it forth as the deadliest poison?
Rivers drink not of their own waters, the trees do not themselves eat the fruit which they bear.

Nor do the clouds partake of the grains they grow; even so the good devote their powers to the good of others.¹

Several correspondents have sent me cuttings containing reviews of, or protests against, Miss Mayo’s Mother India. A few have in addition asked me to give my own opinion on it. An enraged correspondent from London asks me to give him answers to several questions that he has framed upon the authoress’s references to me. Miss Mayo has herself favoured me with a copy of her book.

I would certainly not have made time, especially when I have only limited energy, and caution has been enjoined upon me by medical friends against overwork, to read the book during my tour. But these letters made it obligatory on me to read the book at once.

The book is cleverly and powerfully written. The carefully chosen quotations give it the appearance of a truthful book. But the impression it leaves on my mind is, that it is the report of a drain inspector sent out with the one purpose of opening and examining the drains of the country to be reported upon, or to give a graphic description of the stench exuded by the opened drains. If Miss Mayo had confessed that she had gone to India merely to open out and examine the drains of India, there would perhaps be little to complain about her compilation. But she says in effect with a certain amount of triumph, “The drains are India”. True, in the concluding chapter there is a caution. But her caution is cleverly made to enforce her sweeping condemnation. I feel that no one who has any knowledge of India can possibly accept her terrible accusations against the thought and the life of the people of this unhappy country.

The book is without doubt untruthful, be the facts stated ever so truthful. If I open out and describe with punctilious care all the stench exuded from the drains of London and say “Behold London”, my facts will be incapable of challenge, but my judgement will be rightly condemned as a travesty of truth. Miss Mayo’s book is nothing better,

¹.गणिता: सुभूतवन्दने दुर्गुणपुष्के
गुण दोषवंदने तत्तदने तो जिथ्यथन।
महामेघ: क्षाण गिरिजाति कुर्ले चारि मधुरे
फलमी वैसरी पौर्व संगमति गरले दु:सहहरए॥
पित्यावन्ति नाद: स्वप्नभेद नामिन्न: स्वयं न खादन्ति फलानि जुझां:।
नातिनिं सर्वं खलु बषिकाहि: परोपकारश सत्यं ज्ञानमूलम:॥

106 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
nothing else.

The authoress says she was dissatisfied with the literature she read about India, and so she came to India “to see what a volunteer unsubsidized, uncommitted and unattached, could observe of common things in daily human life”.

After having read the book with great attention, I regret to say that I find it difficult to accept this claim. Unsubsidized she may be. Uncommitted and unattached she certainly fails to show herself in any page. We in India are accustomed to interested publications patronized—“patronized” is accepted as an elegant synonym for “subsidized”—by the Government. We have become used to understanding from pre-British days, that the art (perfected by the British) of government includes the harnessing of the secret service of men learned, and reported to be honest and honourable for shadowing suspects and for writing up the virtues of the Government of the day as if the certificate had come from disinterested quarters. I hope that Miss Mayo will not take offence if she comes under the shadow of such suspicion. It may be some consolation to her to know that even some of the best English friends of India have been so suspected.

But ruling out of consideration the suspicion, it remains to be seen why she has written this untruthful book. It is doubly untruthful. It is untruthful in that she condemns a whole nation or in her words “the peoples of India” (she will not have us as one nation) practically without any reservation as to their sanitation, morals, religion, etc. It is also untruthful because she claims for the British Government merits which cannot be sustained and which many an honest British officer would blush to see the Government credited with.

If she is not subsidized, Miss Mayo is an avowed Indophobe and Anglophil refusing to see anything good about Indians and anything bad about the British and their rule.

She does not give one an elevated idea of Western standard of judgement. Though she represents a class of sensational writers in the West, it is a class that, I flatter myself with the belief, is anything sensational, smart or crooked. But the pity of it is that there are still thousands in the West who delight in ‘shilling shockers’. Nor are all the authoress’s quotations or isolated facts truthfully stated. I propose to pick up those I have personal knowledge of. The book bristles with quotations torn from their contexts and with extracts which have been authoritatively challenged.

The authoress has violated all sense of propriety by associating the Poet’s name with child marriage. The Poet has indeed referred to early marriage as not an undesirable institution. But there is a world of difference between child marriage and early marriage. If she had taken the trouble of making the acquaintance of the free and freedom-loving girls and women of Santiniketan, she would have known the Poet’s meaning of early marriage.

She has done me the honour of quoting me frequently in support of her argument. Any person who collects extracts from a reformer’s diary, tears them from their context and proceeds to condemn, on the strength of these, the people in whose midst the reformer has worked, would get no hearing from sane and unbiased readers or hearers. But in her hurry to see everything Indian in a bad light, she has not only taken liberty with my writings, but she had not thought it necessary even to verify through me certain things ascribed by her or others to me. In fact she has combined in her own person what we understand in India the judicial and the executive officer. She is both the prosecutor and the judge. She has described the visit to me, and informed her readers that there are always with me two “secretaries” who write down every word I say. I know that this is not a wilful perversion of facts. Nevertheless the statement is not true. I beg to inform her that I have no one near me who has been appointed or is expected to write down every word that I say. I have by me a co-worker called Mahadev Desai who is striving to out-Boswell Boswell and does, whenever he is near me, take down whatever he considers to be wisdom dropping from my lips. I can’t repel his advances, even if I would, for the relationship between us is, like the Hindu marriage, indissoluble. But the real crime committed against me is described by her at pages 387-8. She ascribes to the Poet “a fervent declaration that Ayurvedic science surpasses anything that the West can offer” (She has this time no quotation to back her statement.) Then she quotes my opinion that hospitals are institutions for propagating sin, and then distorts out of all recognition a sacred incident, honourable to the British surgeons and, I hope, to myself. I must ask the reader to excuse me for giving the full quotation from the book:

As he happened to be in the prison at the time, British surgeon of the

---

1 Rabindranath Tagore
Indian Medical Service came straightaway to see him. “Mr. Gandhi,” said the surgeon, as the incident was then reported, “I am sorry to tell you that you have appendicitis. If you were my patient, I should operate at once. But you will probably prefer to call in your Ayurvedic physician.”

Mr. Gandhi proved otherwise minded.

“I should prefer not to operate,” pursued the surgeon, “because in case the outcome should be unfortunate, all your friends will lay it as a charge of malicious intent against us whose duty is to care for you.”

“If you will only consent to operate,” pleaded Mr. Gandhi, “I will call in my friends, now, and explain to them that you do so at my request.”

So Mr. Gandhi wilfully went to an “institution for propagating sin”, was operated upon by one of the “worst of all”, an officer of the Indian Medical Service and was attentively nursed through convalescence by an English Sister whom he is understood to have thought after all rather a “useful sort of person.”

This is a travesty of truth. I shall confine myself to correcting only what is libellous and not the other inaccuracies. There was no question here of calling in any Ayurvedic physician. Colonel Maddock who performed the operation had the right, if he had so chosen, to perform the operation without a reference to me, and even in spite of me. But he and Surgeon-General Hooton showed a delicate consideration to me, and asked me whether I would wait for my own doctors who were known to them and who were also trained in the Western medical and surgical science. I would not be behind-hand in returning their courtesy and consideration, and I immediately told them that they could perform the operation without waiting for my doctors to whom they had telegraphed, and that I would gladly give them a note for their protection in the event of the operation miscarrying. I endeavoured to show that I had no distrust either in their ability or their good faith. It was to me a happy opportunity of demonstrating my personal goodwill.

So far as my opinion about hospitals and the like is concerned, it stands, in spite of my having subjected myself and my wards to treatment more than once by physicians and surgeons, Indian and European, trained in the Western school of medicine. Similarly I use motor-cars and rail-ways, whilst holding to my condemnation of them as strongly as ever. I hold the body itself to be an evil and an impediment in my progress. But I see no inconsistency in my making use of it while it lasts, and trying in the best manner I know to use it for its own destruction. This is a sample of distortion of which I have a personal knowledge.

But the book is brimful of descriptions of incidents of which an average Indian, at any rate, has no knowledge. Thus she describes an ovation said to have been given to the Prince of Wales, of which Indian India has no knowledge, but which could not possibly escape it if it had happened. A crowd is reported to have fought its way to the Prince’s car somewhere in Bombay.

The police tried vainly to form a hedge round the car moving at a crawl unprotected now through a solid mass of shouting humanity which won through to the railway station at last.

Then at the railway station while there were three minutes for the train to steam out, the Prince is reported by Miss Mayo to have ordered the barriers to be dropped and the “mobs” to be let in. The authoress then proceeds:

Like the sweep of a river in flood, the interminable multitude rolled in, and shouted and laughed and wept, and when the train started, ran alongside the Royal carriage till they could run no more.

All this is supposed to have happened in 1921 on the evening of November 22nd, whilst the dying embers of the riots were still hot. There is much of this kind of stuff in this romantic chapter which is headed “Behold a Light”.

The nineteenth chapter is a collection of authorities in praise of the achievements of the British Government, almost every one of which has been repeatedly challenged both by English and Indian writers of unimpeachable integrity. The seventeenth chapter is written to show that we are a “world-menace”. If as a result of Miss Mayo’s effort the League of Nations is moved to declare India a segregated country unfit for exploitation, I have no doubt both the West and the East would be the gainers. We may then have our internecine wars. Hindus may be eaten up, as she threatens, by the hordes from the North-West and Central Asia—that were a position infinitely superior to one of ever-growing emasculation. Even as electrocution is a more humaner method of killing than the torturous method of roasting alive, so would a sudden overwhelming swoop from Central Asia upon the resisting, insanitary, superstitious and sexuality-ridden Hindus, as Miss Mayo describes us to be, be a humane deliverance from the living and ignominious death which we are going through at the present moment. Unfortunately, however, such is not Miss Mayo’s goal. Her case is to perpetuate white domination in India on the plea of India’s unfitness to rule herself.

The picturesque statements that this clever authoress puts into the mouths of the various characters read like so many pages from a sensational novel in which no regard has to be paid to truth. Many of her statements seem to me to be utterly unworthy of belief and do not put the men and women to whom they are ascribed in a favourable light. Take for instance this statement put in the mouth of a prince:

“Our treaties are with the Crown of England,” one of them said to me, with incisive calm. “The princes of India made no treaty with a Government that included Bengali babus. We shall never deal with this new lot of Jacks-in-office. While Britain stays, Britain will send us English gentlemen to speak for the King Emperor, and all will be as it should be between friends. If Britain leaves, we, the princes will know how to straighten out India, even as princes should.” (Page 316)

However fallen Indian princes may be, I should want unimpeachable evidence before I could believe that there can be in India a prince so degraded as to make such a statement. Needless to say the authoress does not give the name of the prince.

A still more scandalous statement occurs on page 314 and reads as follows:

“His Highness does not believe,” said the Dewan, “that Britain is going to leave India. But still, under new regime in England, they may be so ill-advised. So His Highness is getting his troops in shape, accumulating munitions and coining silver. And if the English do go, three months afterward, not a rupee or a virgin will be left in all Bengal.”

The reader is kept in darkness as to the name of His Highness or of the enlightened Dewan.

There are many statements which Miss Mayo puts into the mouths of Englishmen and Englishwomen living in India. All I can say with reference to these statements is that if some of them were really made by the authors, they are unworthy of the trust reposed in them and they have done an injustice to their wards or patients as well as the race to which they belong. I should be sorry indeed to think that there are many Englishmen and Englishwomen who say one thing to their Indian friends and another to their Western confidants. Those Englishmen and English-women who may chance to read the sweepings gathered together by Miss Mayo with her muck-rake will recognize the statements I have in mind. In seeking to see an India degraded, Miss Mayo has unconsciously degraded the characters whom she has used as her instruments for proving her facts which she boasts cannot be “disproved or shaken”. I hope I have given sufficient prima facie proof in this article to show that many of her facts stand disproved even in isolation. Put together they give a wholly false picture.

Buy why am I writing this article? Not for the Indian readers but for the many American and English readers who read these pages from week to week with sympathy and attention. I warn them against believing this book. I do not remember having given the message Miss Mayo imputes to me. The only one present who took any notes at all has no recollection of the message imputed to me. But I do know what message I give every American who comes to see me: “Do not believe newspapers and the catchy literature you get in America. But if you want to know anything about India, go to India as students, study India for yourself. If you cannot go, make a study of all that is written about India for her and against her and then form your own conclusions. The ordinary literature you get is either exaggerated vilification of India or exaggerated praise.” I warn Americans and Englishmen against copying Miss Mayo. She came not with an open mind as she claims, but with her preconceived notions and prejudices which she betrays on every page, not excluding even the introductory chapter in which she recites the claim. She came to India not to see things with her own eyes, but to gather material three fourths of which she could as well have gathered in America.

That a book like Miss Mayo’s can command a large circulation furnishes a sad commentary on Western literature and culture.

I am writing this article also in the hope, be it ever so distant, that Miss Mayo herself may relent and repent of having done, I hope unconsciously, atrocious injustice to an ancient people and equally atrocious injustice to the Americans by having exploited her undoubted ability to prejudice without warrant their minds against India.

The irony of it all is that she has inscribed this book “To the peoples of India”. She has certainly not written it as a reformer, and out of love. If I am mistaken in my estimate let her come back to India. Let her subject herself to cross-examination, and if her statements escape unhurt through the fire of cross-examination, let her live in our midst and reform our lives. So much for Miss Mayo and her readers.

I must now come to the other side of the picture. Whilst I consider the book to be unfit to be placed before Americans and Englishmen (for it can do no good to them), it is a book that every Indian can read with some degree of profit. We may repudiate the charge as it has been named by her, but we may not repudiate the substance underlying the many allegations she has made. It is a good thing to see ourselves as others see us. We need not even examine the motive with which the book is written. A cautious reformer may make some use of it.

There are statements in it which demand investigation. For instance she says that the Vaishnava mark has an obscene meaning. I am a born Vaishnavite. I have perfect recollection of my visits to Vaishnava temples. Mine were orthodox people. I used to have the mark myself as a child, but neither I nor anyone else in our family ever knew that this harmless and rather elegant-looking mark had any obscene significance at all. I asked a party of Vaishnavites in Madras where this article is being written. They knew nothing about the alleged obscene significance. I do not therefore suggest that it never had such significance. But I do suggest that millions are unaware of the obscenity alleged to be behind it. It has remained for our Western visitors to acquaint us with the obscenity of many practices which we have hitherto innocently indulged in. It was in a missionary book that I first learnt that Shivalingam had any obscene significance at all, and even now when I see a Shivalingam neither the shape nor the association in which I see it suggests any obscenity. It was again in a missionary book that I learnt that the temples in Orissa were disfigured with obscene statues. When I went to Puri it was not without an effort that I was able to see those things. But I do know that the thousands who flock to the temple know nothing about the obscenity surrounding these figures. The people are unprepared and the figures do not obtrude themselves upon your gaze.

But let us not resent being made aware of the dark side of the picture wherever it exists. Overdrawn her pictures of our in-sanitation, child marriages, etc., undoubtedly are. But let them serve as a spur to much greater effort than we have hitherto put forth in order to rid society of all cause of reproach. Whilst we may be thankful for anything good that foreign visitors may be able honestly to say of us, if we curb our anger, we shall learn, as I have certainly learnt, more from our critics than from our patrons. Our indignation which we are bound to express against the slanderous book must not blind us to our obvious imperfections and our great limitations. Our anger will leave Miss Mayo absolutely unhurt and it will only recoil upon ourselves. We too have our due share of thoughtless readers as the West has, and in seeking to disprove everything Miss Mayo has written, we shall make the reading public believe that we are a race of perfect human beings against whom nothing can be said, no one can dare say one word. The agitation that has been set up against the book is in danger of being overdone. There is no cause for fury. I would here close this review which I have undertaken with the greatest reluctance and under great pressure of work with a paraphrase of a beautiful couplet from Tulsidas:

Everything created by God, animate or inanimate, has its good and bad side. The wise man, like the fabled bird which separating the cream of milk from its water helps himself to the cream leaving the water alone, will take the good from everything leaving the bad alone.

Young India, 15-9-1927

60. SPEECH AT VALANGAIMAN

September 15, 1927

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I thank you for the address and the purse. It is a matter of very great joy to find that this is the birth place of Mr. Srinivasa Sastri. As you very properly say, he is one of the greatest sons of India. I have been asked to announce to you that the library is to be opened very shortly. I have been asked also formally to declare that library open from this place. I do so with the greatest pleasure. And I hope that all the old and young men will contemplate that noble life and try as much as is possible for every one of you to follow him in his lofty patriotism, sense of duty and in his untiring zeal. Service to the cause of the country is his motto. May you also learn to be true servants of the country.

I observe that there is a fair Muslim population here. I hope that you have always peaceful relations amongst yourselves. We Hindus

1 कपिलेन गुप्ताचार्म लिखि कौन हसरहा सेत्र हेद गुण महं यथ परिहरि नारी किंकाराः। and Mussalmans must learn to love one another, because we are all children of the same mother.

I am glad that you all believe in khadi. You must to a step further and translate it into action. All of you should wear it. You see the old lady (sitting by his righthand side) spinning before you. There are thousands and thousands of old ladies much poorer than the one before you, who can eke out a living if all of us will wear khaddar. I thank you once more for your address.

The Hindu, 16-9-1927

61. SPEECH AT NATIONAL HIGH SCHOOL, MANNARGUDI

September 15, 1927

PRINCIPAL, BOYS AND GIRLS,

I thank you for giving me this address as also this purse. Since you told me that you impart instruction in this school in Hindu religion, I would like all the boys and girls to signify by raising their hands how many know the Bhagavad Gita. No hands should be raised deceitfully. How many of those who have raised their hands understand the Bhagavad Gita in the original properly. (Only one raised his hand.) Now you have answered me honestly and I congratulate you upon it. The first step to knowledge is an open confession of one’s ignorance. Having therefore congratulated you upon your open confession, let me also express my grief to you that so few of you have read the Bhagavad Gita and fewer still understand the meaning of it in the original. In my own opinion the Hindu boys and girls must commence with the reading of the Bhagavad Gita and therefore in a place where I am told that Hindu religion is taught, I should expect all hands to be raised in answer to the question that I had put. I can only hope that you will soon make up this defect. The South is better known more than any other part of India for the use of abundant vibhuti or chandan. And I see all of you either profusely smeared with vibhuti or having perfect geometrical tilakam on your foreheads with chandan. Whilst these marks may do much good up to a certain extent, without a proper backing behind these marks they are worthless. So far as I am aware, they do not, as they did when they were orginally invented, express the inner life. At the present moment it seems that the mere crust in the shape of these marks remains and the real kernel, the substance, has dried up. If you read the Bhagavad Gita and pronounce it with exquisite correctness and answer all the questions of grammar also correctly I should not be satisfied with that performance. When I told you that you should read the Bhagavad Gita, I meant also that you should translate its teaching in your own individual lives. The divine author of the Bhagavad Gita is said to claim it as the substance, the essence of all the Upanishads and of all knowledge and you will find in the Gita, a beautiful verse which really means that a man who simply conforms to the outward form and misses the inner is an imposter, a hypocrite and humbug. Therefore ask the boys, I would urge the Principal and the teachers of this school also, to see to it that the inner secret, the essence of Hinduism is expressed in its fullness in this school and if you will read the Bhagavad Gita with the eye of devotion and an eye of faith you will discover as I have discovered that there is no room for Hindu-Muslim dissensions or Brahmin and Non-Brahmin dissensions. You will also find in the Bhagavad Gita, no warrant whatsoever for untouchability, child marriages, child widows, prostitution in the name of religion, as is practised by our own sisters and daughters who go by the name of Devadasis. If you will carefully read the third chapter of the Gita you will also find abundant testimony in favour of the spinning-wheel. If the parents and teachers will only make diligent researches they will not allow so many boys and girls, I see before me, dressed in foreign cloth. If you will take care to study the Bhagavad Gita in the manner I have suggested, you will find easy solution for many ills of life. I shall be glad to learn from the Principal in future that you have adopted my suggestion and that every boy and girl not only could read and understand Bhagavad Gita but is trying his or her best to live up to its message.

The Hindu, 16-9-1927

62. SPEECH AT FINDLAY COLLEGE, MANNARGUDI

September 15, 1927

You state in your address that you read the Gospels daily even as I do. I cannot say that I read the Gospels daily, but I can say that I have read the Gospels in a humble and prayerful spirit, and it is well

1 This was published under the caption “Three Speeches”.
with you if you are also reading the Gospels in that spirit. But I expect that the vast majority of you are Hindu boys. I wish that you could have said to me that at least your Hindu boys were reading the Bhagavad Gita daily to derive inspiration. For I believe that all the great religions of the world are true more or less. I say “more or less” because I believe that everything that the human hand touches, by reason of the very fact that human beings are imperfect, becomes imperfect. Perfection is the exclusive attribute of God and it is indescribable, untranslatable. I do believe that it is possible for every human being to become perfect even as God is perfect. It is necessary for us all to aspire after perfection, but when that blessed state is attained, it becomes indescribable, indefinable. And I therefore admit, in all humility, that even the Vedas, the Koran and the Bible are the imperfect word of God, and imperfect beings that we are, swayed to and fro by a multitude of passions, it is impossible for us even to understand this word of God in its fullness, and so I say to a Hindu boy, that he must not uproot the traditions in which he has been brought up, as I say to a Mussalman or a Christian boy that he must not uproot his traditions. And so whilst I would welcome you learning the Gospel and your learning the Koran, I would certainly insist on all of you Hindu boys, if I had the power of insistence, learning the Gita. It is my belief that the impurity that we see about boys in schools, the carelessness about things that matter in life, the levity with which the student world deals with the greatest and most fundamental questions of life is due to this uprooting of tradition from which boys have hitherto derived their sustenance.

But I must not be misunderstood. I do not hold that everything ancient is good because it is ancient, I do not advocate surrender of God-given reasoning faculty in the face of ancient tradition. Any tradition, however ancient, if inconsistent with morality, is fit to be banished from the land. Untouchability may be considered to be an ancient tradition, the institution of child widowhood and child marriage may be considered to be ancient tradition, and even so many an ancient horrible belief and superstitious practice. I would sweep them out of existence if I had the power. When, therefore, I talk of respecting the ancient tradition, you now understand what I mean, and it is because I see the same God in the Bhagavad Gita as I see in the Bible and the Koran that I say to the Hindu boys that they will derive greater inspiration from Bhagavad Gita because they will be tuned to the Gita more than to any other book.

Young India, 22-9-1927
MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I thank you for your several addresses and purses on behalf of the Daridranarayana. I congratulate the Taluk Board on having given me an advance copy of the translation of its address in Hindi. I am looking forward to the time when everywhere I should be able to make myself understood through Hindi which is or should be the common language throughout India. At the present moment, as you know, there is almost a barrier between the North and the South. Public workers coming from the South find themselves at sea when they are face to face to speak in the North. I do not by any means suggest that Hindi should take the place of vernaculars but I do suggest that all public workers, leaders of public opinion, should know Hindi and should be able to express themselves wherever they go in the Hindi language. You all know that a committee from the North began its operation some six or seven years ago with a view to popularize Hindi in the South. Nearly one lakh of rupees have been spent by this committee, in order to teach Hindi to those who would learn it. The central office at Madras has received from the head office in Prayag the charter of self-government and it is now open to the leaders of public opinion, in the South, to extend the operation of this committee and make it self-supporting.

You have in all your addresses endorsed the work of the spinning-wheel and khadi that is being done throughout India. I had known long ago that Mannargudi was famous for its weaving and I should hope that in the near future there would be no weaver in Mannargudi who is not weaving hand-spun yarn. But the weavers cannot have enough well hand-spun yarn unless you go out in the villages and give work to so many who have so much idle time at their command from year to year. I saw this afternoon a band of workers living about 10 miles from Mannargudi, in a village called Palayur, where they are trying to introduce the spinning-wheel in the village and places surrounding it. They tell me that if they can secure sufficient workers, there is great scope in these villages for the introduction of the spinning-wheel. The remarkable address that I received at Mayavaram, on behalf of the peasantry had nearly six months during the year when they had no work to do. The address further gives a startling information that the income of the peasantry in this rich district of Tanjore was no more than forty rupees, whereas the expenses were at 120. Making due allowance for exaggeration in this statement, if there is an exaggeration, there is no doubt whatsoever that the peasantry is living from hand to mouth and is in need of supplementary occupation.

The same address proceeded to inform me that the vast masses of toiling millions were considered to be untouchables. And as such they were unworthy of the attention by the middle class people. In order to prevent this atrocious state of affairs, I ventured to present India with the spinning-wheel and khadi. We, the middle class people, take no interest in them, we do not care what happened to their spinning-wheel and what happened to their industry. And so by our criminal indifference we allowed that industry to die an unnatural death. I ask you to approach the spinning-wheel with a new point of view. I also ask you to utilize khadi in order to form an indissoluble bond between the peasantry and ourselves and I am aware that we shall not succeed in our endeavours so long as we consider these toiling millions as untouchables. I had the pleasures, not unmixed with pain, of listening to some of our learned Pundits, expounding the philosophy of untouchability, but I am happy to be able to say that these Pundits were open to conviction and open to arguments on behalf of these people.¹ Instead of brushing aside my arguments summarily, they were pleased to listen and grant that so far as the well-being of the people was concerned, the argument was all in my favour. If that much is admitted by all the Pundits of India, I should be indifferent to what interpretation they placed upon the Shastras. As a matter of fact for a layman like myself, it is quite enough for me to know that what is consistent with the highest good is the supreme Shastra and I should have no hesitation whatsoever in rejecting the Shastras which were inconsistent with our goal.

In connection with this I must mention the cause of the child widows. Let us not resort to mere arguments and babbling in the act of doing this simple justice to our little daughters. Let us be manly enough to regard every such child marriage as a nullity. So long as we allow a single child widow to remain unmarried when she reaches her proper age, we fail in our elementary duty to humanity. That really leads us naturally to a consideration of child marriages.

¹ Vide “Discussion with Pundits, Kumbakonam”, 14-9-1927
You will see that immediately you begin to think of these toiling millions of India and establish a loving bond between them and yourselves, it would be impossible for you to forget the drinkers. We the middle class people have been indifferent to those who are given to this cursed habit. In my humble opinion it is our duty to go out in the midst of these people and to try to redeem them from their ways. But I know how difficult it is for those brethren of ours to resist that temptation so long as there are toddy shops. It is therefore our bounden duty to secure total prohibition.

As is usual at all such meetings at the end of the proceedings volunteers go out with collection bags in order to collect contribution from those who have not contributed for the purses. Pies willingly given are just as welcome. This is essentially a matter of service of the poorest in the land. Every man or woman who is desirous to give should consider it his or her duty and privilege to be able to give to this cause. You may know, in answer to a question at Mayavaram, I explained\(^1\) the full working of the organization under which the spinning-wheel work is being carried on. I wish that you would take a lively interest in the progress of this organization and its administration and understand the dis posal of the money that is entrusted to it. But I may inform you that over fifty thousand sisters are being served today in at least fifteen hundred villages, throughout the length and breadth of India. Of this the largest number is being served in the South. Nearly 20 lakhs of rupees have been invested in carrying on this organization and nearly 1,500 workers are carrying on this organization. The whole of the finance part of it is audited at the centre and in the province. I invite all those who are interested in this to study its working in all its many branches. It is for this service that I invite everybody in this land to give the best of his or her subscription.

The Hindu, 17-9-1927

\(^1\) Vide “Speech at Mayavaram”, 13-9-1927
I had hoped on coming to Tanjore today to discuss the Brahmin-non-Brahmin question\(^1\) here and I had the pleasure of having a brief discussion with some of the friends this afternoon. I am not free nor is it necessary for me to discuss and place before you the contents of our discussion. But I was exceedingly glad of this discussion. I now understand the movement perhaps a little better than I did before the discussion. I have placed my humble view before those friends, of which they are at liberty to make what use they like. But throughout the discussion I saw a note of one thing which seemed to oppress these friends. They seemed to think that I had identified myself with the notion of inherited superiority and inferiority. I assured them that nothing was farther from my thought and told them that I would gladly explain my meaning of varnashrama\(^2\) more fully than I have done in order to remove the slightest misunderstanding as to this question of superiority. In my opinion there is no such thing as inherited or acquired superiority. I believe in the rock-bottom doctrine of Advaita\(^3\) and my interpretation of Advaita excludes totally any idea of superiority at any stage whatsoever. I believe implicitly that all men are born equal. All—whether born in India or in England or America or in any circumstances whatsoever—have the same soul as any other. And it is because I believe in this inherent equality of all men that I fight the doctrine of superiority which many of our rulers arrogate to themselves. I have fought this doctrine of superiority in South Africa inch by inch, and it is because of that inherent belief that I delight in calling myself a scavenger, a spinner, a weaver, a farmer and a labourer. And I have fought against the Brahmins themselves wherever they have claimed any superiority for themselves either by reason of their birth or by reason of their subsequently acquired knowledge. I consider that it is unmanly for any person to claim

---

\(^1\) For Mahadev Desai’s catechism on the subject, vide Appendix “Brahmin-Non-Brahmin Question”, November 24, 1927.

\(^2\) The organization of society into four castes, and the division of life into four stages.

\(^3\) The view that the atman, the self in man, is not distinct from the Brahman, the Absolute; literally, ‘non-dualism’.
superiority over a fellow-being. And there is the ampest warrant for the belief that I am enunciating in the Bhagavad Gita, and I am therefore through and through with every non-Brahmin when he fights this monster of superiority, whether it is claimed by a Brahmin or by anybody else. He who claims superiority at once forfeits his claim to be called a man. That is my opinion.

But in spite of all my beliefs that I have explained to you, I still believe in varnashrama dharma. Varnashrama dharma to my mind is a law which, however much you and I may deny, cannot be abrogated. To admit the working of that law is to free ourselves for the only pursuit in life for which we are born. Varnashrama dharma is humility. Whilst I have said that all men and women are born equal, I do not wish therefore to suggest that qualities are not inherited, but on the contrary I believe that just as everyone inherits a particular form so does he inherit the particular characteristics and qualities of his progenitors, and to make this admission is to conserve one’s energy. That frank admission, if we will act up to it, would put a legitimate curb upon our material ambitions, and thereby our energy is set free for extending the field of spiritual research and spiritual evolution. It is this doctrine of varnashrama dharma which I have always accepted. You would be entitled to say that this is not how varnashrama is understood in these days. I have myself said time without number that varnashrama as it is at present understood and practised is a monstrous parody of the original, but in order to demolish this distortion let us not seek to demolish the original. And if you say that the idealistic varnashrama which I have placed before you is quite all right you have admitted all that I like you to admit. I would also urge on you to believe with me that no nation, no individual, can possibly live without proper ideals. And if you believe with me in the idealistic varnashrama you will also strive with me to reach that ideal so far as may be. As a matter of fact the world has not anywhere been able to fight against this law. What has happened and what must happen in fighting against the law is to hurt ourselves and to engage in a vain effort; and I suggest to you that your fight will be all the more successful if you understand all that our forefathers have bequeathed to us and engage in fighting all the evil excrescences that have grown round this great bequest. And if you accept what I have ventured to suggest to you, you will find that the solution of the Brahmin and non-Brahmin question also, in so far as it is concerned with the religious aspect, becomes very easy. As a non-Brahmin I would seek to purify Brahminism in so far as a non-Brahmin can, but not to destroy it. I would dislodge the Brahmin from the arrogation of superiority or from places of profit. Immediately a Brahmin becomes a profiteering agency he ceases to be a Brahmin. But I would not touch his great learning wherever I see it. And whilst he may not claim superiority by reason of learning I myself must not withhold that meed of homage that learning, wherever it resides, always commands. But I must not go deeper into the subject before a large audience of this kind.

After all I must fall upon one sovereign remedy which I think is applicable for all the ills of life. And that is, in whatever fight we engage, the fight should be clean and straight, and there should not be the slightest departure from truth and ahimsa. And if we will keep our carriage safely on these two rails you will find that our fight even though we may commit a thousand blunders will always smell clean and will be easier fought. And even as a train that is derailed comes to a disastrous end, so shall we, if we be derailed off these two rails, come to a disaster. A man who is truthful and does not mean ill even to his adversary will be slow to believe charges even against his foes. He will, however, try to understand the viewpoints of his opponents and will always keep an open mind and seek every opportunity of serving his opponents. I have endeavoured to apply this law in my relations with Englishmen and Europeans in general in South Africa as well as here and not without some success. How much more then should we apply this law in our homes, in our relations, in our domestic affairs, in connection with our own kith and kin?

Young India, 29-9-1927

65. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

[Before September 17, 1927]¹

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have received your letter. Your idea of staying some more time in the mountains is good. But we must leave Pattani Saheb’s bungalow by the end of the year. Writing to him to give the bungalow on rent would simply mean not paying the rent. He will not ask for the bungalow to be vacated and he will not accept rent. Hence, even if it is desirable to stay in Panchgani you must look for another bungalow at least for now. But why should you not stay at Mahabaleshwar now? Or you can go to other hill stations such as Almora or Simla, where accommodation is available. Solan has suited Dhiru. Almora has suited Prabhudas. There are hill stations even on this side. Bangalore is an ideal place if the height of 3,000 is considered sufficient.

¹ From Gandhiji’s itinerary given at the end of the letter

Think about what we should do now and let me know. My health is all right.

17-22 Trichinapalli
22-27 Karaikudi
28-30 Madurai
October 1 Paramakudi
2-3 Virudunagar
4 Rajapalayam
5 Tinnevelly

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

66. SPEECH IN REPLY TO MUNICIPAL ADDRESS, TRICHINOPOLY

September 17, 1927

FRIENDS,

I seem to have come to the end of my resources. The programme in Trichinopoly is much stiffer than I can comfortably go through. But I cannot afford to disappoint those who have arranged so many functions. Dr. Rajan, as my medical adviser, has therefore devised a plan whereby I can go through the functions, with as little strain as possible and that is to observe complete silence at these functions, with apologies for my inability to speak to you, as I should like to if my health permitted. It is with much pleasure I have laid the 1 Gandhiji, who looked very tired, handed a written speech which C. Rajagopalachari read to the meeting. During Gandhiji’s tour in South India and Ceylon, he received purses for the Khadi Fund. He also made on-the-spot collections and auctioned articles presented to him at the meetings. For a detailed statement of these collections, vide Appendix “Khadi Collections in South India and Ceylon”, December 22, 1927.

foundation-stone of the market and I thank you for your address and commend my Mayavaram speech, to your attention.

67. APPEAL FOR INFORMATION

Shri Kantilal Harivallabhdas Parekh left the Satyagraha Ashram on the morning of Monday, the 25th July, 1927, and thereafter on the same day he was seen at several places in Ahmedabad. It is not known where he was on the 26th or the 27th; however, on Thursday the 28th some inmates of the Ashram saw him swimming, or rather being dragged by the current, in the Sabarmati. He is a good swimmer. In case he is hiding himself anywhere it will be an act of kindness if he himself or some acquaintance or relation of his gives some information about him. This good news will bring joy to his father and his old grandmother plunged in grief because of his absence.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 18-9-1927

68. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

September 18, 1927

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. I did write to Prafulla Babu. Here is Prafulla Babu’s letter. I do not remember having pressed him to rejoin the Pratishthan. I have written as much to him. Let him now decide whether he remains on the Trust Board or not.

I look to you, as you have put it, to conquer Suresh Babu and everyone else. It is the best thing to blame ourselves when people cannot get on well with us. Boundless charity necessarily includes all or it ceases to be boundless. We must be strict with ourselves and lenient with our neighbours. For we know not their difficulties and what they overcome.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

1 Vide “Speech at Mayavaram”, September 13, 1927.
I hope you have sent the amount to Abhoy Ashram.
From a photostat: G.N. 1576

69. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

TRICHINOPOLY,
Silence Day [September 19, 1927]¹

SISTERS,

I get your notes regularly. I keep an eye on your work from here. One who works according to one’s full capacity does all that can be expected of one. But in our work we should develop the Gita attitude which we want to have. That attitude is that, whatever we do, we do it selflessly in a spirit of service. The spirit of service means a spirit of dedication to God. One who does so, loses all idea of self. He has no hatred for anybody. On the contrary, he is generous to others. Even about the smallest piece of service you render, ask yourselves from time to time whether you have this same attitude.

Ramaniklalbhai raised a question on what I wrote to you about myself. You have not told me whether all of you understood what I said in reply. I wish that you would discuss what I write to you, and ask me about things to which you can find no answer.

My health continues to be good enough to let me carry on my work.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3665

70. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

Silence Day [September 19, 1927]²

CHI. GANGABEHN JHAVERI,

I have received your letter. Both my mind and my hand are ¹ Gandhiji was in Trichinopoly on this date.

² It appears from the contents that this letter was written after the letter to the addressee dated “About September 12, 1927”. The first silence day after this date was September 19 tired by incessant writing. So I will not write much. You have been appointed President. You have got that position against your will. Bring credit to it. It is another matter if senior Gangabehn takes back the office. But your duty is not to give up the responsibility at this difficult time. Bringing glory to it is not beyond your capacity.

I do not know if Radha attends the prayers these days. But I have written her a strong letter to do so.

You must keep writing to me about the conflicts going on in your mind. It will be no burden to me. I shall continue helping you in whatever way I can from here.

Let us conquer falsehood with truth, harshness with tenderness, anger with love, impatience with patience, pride with humility. You women have got a special opportunity now to turn these words into reality. Do not miss this auspicious hour. I have forgotten to inform the elder Gangabehn that I have written to Surendraji.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati G.N. 3122

71. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

Silence Day [September 19, 1927]

BHAI HARIBHAU,

Your letter. If Swami and Jamnalalji agree, you can count on me too. I cannot understand how Hindi Navajivan will be ready in time. But it is not for me to worry on that account.

How is Martand?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

On re-reading your letter I find that two points have been left unanswered. I shall write later about the article on khadi.

I might return to the Ashram in the month of January. It is a good idea to start an Ashram near Ajmer.

BAPU

BHAI HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

KHADI KARYALAYA
AJMER

From a copy of the Hindi: C.W. 6058. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyay

1 From the postmark

VOL.40 : 2 SEPTEMBER 1927, - 1 DECEMBER, 1927 127
DEAR HARIBHAU,

I have been able to read carefully your article about self-reliance in clothes only today. In my view it is not worth publishing. The readers are so raw that they do not make any comparison and are misled about a good thing by accepting what they like and discarding what they do not like. I think the article is not worth publishing because what you have shown as a disadvantage for the sales section is not a disadvantage. Rather, it is necessary and is a difficulty that helps the soul. If we want to do away with the sales section or make it less burdensome, we must lay great emphasis on self-reliance, expand it and find out its science. I have no doubt about it. Hence, give as much thought to this matter as possible and convey in public whatever experiences you have. But the sales section will have to be expanded to the same extent. Sales would always be needed for the cities. It would also be necessary for the other trade communities in the villages. It is not possible at all to improve the quality followed as a business. Ultimately, even the atmosphere of khadi would be preserved only by following this method. We cannot feel satisfied merely by that.

If you have not followed the meaning of what I have said write to me or ask me when we meet. I hope to be at the Ashram by the 1st of January, of yarn or have more varieties of khadi by the method of self-reliance. Both these things can and are being done as a business practice and would be so done in future as well. Moreover, honest, clever and industrious workers would also be produced only when these things are

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Haribhau Upadhyaya Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 From the contents; vide post-script to letter to the addressee dated September 19, 1927 (Preceding item).
73. TELEGRAM TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

TRICHINOPOLY,

[September] 20 [1927]1

JAMNALAL SETH

CARE RAMNARAYAN

MANGALDAS RD., POONA

TELL MIRABEHN IF STILL THERE NOT BE HASTY. AM PERFECTLY WELL. GOD’S VOICE OFTEN INDISTINGUISHABLE FROM ECHOES OF OUR FEAR. IN THIS RAPID MARCHING IN HEAT HER PRESENCE IN HER DELICATE HEALTH HINDRANCE. IF SHE WANTS COME DESPITE MY WARNING SHE IS WELCOME.

BAPU

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 68

74. LETTER TO DILIP KUMAR ROY

September 20, 1927

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter which has been forwarded to me from the Ashram (Sabarmati)2. You have evidently imagined that I was living in a London hotel with all the facilities for communication and access to literature and plenty of leisure, so that I had only to read your letter and do the needful. I do not wonder at your making the mistake of so imagining from your place (in Austria) outside the Indian setting. As it was, your letter was received when I was convalescing at Bangalore. Here am I, travelling almost from day to day and I do not know how to give you satisfaction. From your letter I gather that even if I wrote anything now it would be too late. If you think that you would still want something from me I would send for the manuscript, try to read it and write something. Personally I think that you need nothing from me. Much of the reputation that I enjoy in the West is really undeserved, and I often think that if I went to Europe or America, the 1 Gandhiji was in Trichinopoly on this date.

2 The addressee says in his book Among the Great that he had reported to Gandhiji from Vienna about the keen interest in him all over Europe and had suggested that Gandhiji visit Europe once.
people there would be soon undeceived about their many exaggerated notions of me. You would believe me when I tell you that I write this not from any sense of false self-depreciation but that is what I truly believe.

M. K. GANDHI

Golden Book of Dilip Kumar Roy, p. 121

75. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

TRICHINOPOLY,
[September 20, 1927]¹

I observe that my first speech in Trichinopoly² has been misunderstood abroad, and has caused anxiety to friends. I would like to assure my friends, however, that there is not the slightest cause for any anxiety. My statement, that I had come to the end of my resources, had a local reference, and it was therefore properly understood in Trichinopoly. What I wanted to say was that I had hitherto taken up engagements up to the limit and that I could not comfortably go through a heavier programme in Trichinopoly. This was a warning to friends in Trichinopoly and to the committees in the places yet to be visited, that they should not have a multiplicity of engagements. One meeting a day is about all that I would have attended so far as my heart is concerned. Doctor Rajan overhaul me completely, and neither he nor I have any anxiety. The blood-pressure stands at where it was in Bangalore. Otherwise too, I am feeling quite well, and, if I do not allow myself to be overworked, I have no misgivings about my ability to go through the settled programme. Friends about me are taking extraordinary precautions for my protection, and I am myself wide awake. I hope therefore that there would be no anxiety felt about my tour; and I would request newspaper reporters and editors not to send or publish any reports about my health before submitting them to me, or to those who are in charge of me.

The Hindu, 21-9-1927

¹ Released to the Press on this day
² Vide “Speech in Reply to Municipal Address, Trichinopoly”, 17-9-1927.
I thank you for what I thought was an address and the purse. I should like to know how many of you understood what I thought was an address, the thing that was read first in Sanskrit. Those who understood it, please raise your hands. Those who did not understand it, raise your hands. I was ill prepared for such a performance at a students’ meeting. Unfortunately, in our country, we have got altogether an overdose of humbug and spectacular effect and those who are responsible for this function should have erased all such things out of their proceedings which could not be understood by the vast majority here. (Applause.) This applause also seems to me to be entirely out of place. It is almost notice to me to stop talking, and next time there is applause, you will find that I will take it as notice to quit. Seriously speaking, students’ life ought to be regarded as a very serious affair, and since students should all be sportsmen, the serious side of life should be taken by them in a sportsmanlike way. In order to make ourselves, including myself whom I regard as still a student, serious in a sportsmanlike manner, I suggest that next time you all, since the majority of you are Hindus, learn Sanskrit, so that if a Sanskrit verse is recited you should all understand it.

I am afraid that if I examined you again in another matter, you will make the same sorry exhibition that you made just a moment ago. Students of a national college would, for instance, be expected to know Hindi, but hardly one per cent of you would raise your hands if I ask how many know Hindi.

You talk of past February and say that a stirring appeal was made to you by Mr. Rajagopalachari and Shankerlal Banker on the economics of khadi. A stirring appeal is one that stirs us to the depths of our hearts, but if I ask you to raise your hands, you will again make a sorry exhibition and show that very few of you are wearers of khadi. If my surmise is correct it is wrong on your part to say that the appeal made to you in February was a stirring appeal. Compared to other purses, I do not regard your purse as a small purse at all, but I accept

---

1 Only very few were raised.
2 Many were raised.
your humble suggestion that your purse is really not up to the mark, and if you had been really stirred to the depth of your hearts, you could have collected much more than you have done. Instead of my illness being regarded as an interruption in the course of your collections, you would have used the additional time gained for collecting additional moneys. My illness should really have given a point to the stirring nature of that appeal and you should have said to yourselves: “Now that this old man has become ill and he is really a capable organizer of khadi, let us put our shoulders to the wheel and make a double effort and therefore we shall double our subscriptions, put away our foreign cloth and all wear khadi.” Instead of this obvious result following from the appeal, you tell me that my illness sent you to sleep; but it is never too late to mend, never too late to learn. Colleges are not closed down for ever. You still remain students. I shall presently leave Trichinopoly, but khadi won’t have left Trichinopoly or India. Daridranarayana still knocks at your doors. Khadi still awaits development at your hands. The khadi purse, you don’t give me for my pleasure. You give it in the name of and for the sake of Daridranarayana. It has therefore a constant call on your purse. Let me then hope that you will not be remiss in your efforts on behalf of khadi, that you will make up your Hindi, because you have got a Hindi Prachark here and that you will make up your Sanskrit, and let me also commend to your attention the addresses that I have given to students in other places and let me ask you to understand the message in those addresses.

_The Hindu_, 21-9-1927

77. SPEECH AT Y.M.C.A., PUTTUR

September 20, 1927

THE CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

With you I also miss the presence of Mr. Hayward. I had the pleasure of meeting him and having a brief chat with him before he went. I am sorry I shall not be able to give you anything like a speech, but as I was coming to this meeting this morning, I asked myself what it was that I would wish the Y.M.C.A. in India to be. As you are aware,

---

1 God in the form of the poor
2 Teacher; literally, ‘one who spreads’
my association with Christian Indians is growing day by day. Ten years ago, I did not have the privilege of coming in such close contact with Christian Indians as I do nowadays, and I have noticed in coming in contact with so many Christian Indians and in contact with so many Christian Associations throughout the land that very often the word Christian is understood to mean European. I said to myself as I was driving here this morning how nice it would be if the Y.M.C.A. were not really synonymous with the Young Men’s European Association. The word “European” has not to me, as to many millions of people, perhaps the same meaning and content as the word Christian, and I feel that very often Christianity itself becomes a restricted thing when it is mixed up with Europeanism. It is not at all, in my humble opinion, necessary for a single Indian to cease to be Indian, because he calls himself Christian. To accept Christianity, or a change in one’s religion is acceptance of a new life; therefore, I should expect anyone who changes his religion with a true heart to broaden his own nationality. If he ceases to think of his neighbours, he is not likely to think of those beyond that limit of his neighbours. I say this to Christian and Muslim friends and all those whom I meet in India and who have made India their land, or to whom India is the land of their birth. Let these associations then be not forces of disruption, but forces for conserving all that is good, noble and honest in this land.

For the rest, I commend to your attention the remarks I made to the Y.M.C.A. in Madras. I thank you for having given me this opportunity of meeting you.

The Hindu, 21-9-1927

78. SPEECH AT WOMEN’S MEETING, TRICHINOPOLY

September 20, 1927

DEAR SISTERS,

It gives me much pleasure to be able to attend this meeting. I do not want to keep you for any length of time. I just want to say that you ought to take a leading part in the national movement that is going on at the present moment in India—I mean the khadi work and the message of the spinning-wheel. It is work that is designed to

1 The source has “stand best”. Perhaps Gandhiji had in mind the New Testament, Philippians, iv. 8.
2 On September 4, 1927 deliver India from the gnawing poverty which she is suffering from. In this distress millions of our sisters are sharers. They need not be in that distress, if you and I will do our duty. They starve because they have no work in their own villages. Time was when they had no need to starve, for one hundred years ago every hut in our villages had its own spinning-wheel. Whenever there was time left, our sisters living in villages used to spin yarn. Khadi that was woven out of this yarn was worn by all the people, rich and poor. One of then reasons why the spinning-wheel died out was that you and I left off wearing khadi. Now, the movement has been set afoot in order to reinstate the spinning-wheel in its original state, and the movement cannot be proceeded with, without your assistance. The assistance you can render is for all of you to discard your foreign saris and wear khadi. It is your duty and my duty to think of these poor people, but this work cannot proceed without money. You are therefore expected to contribute as much as possible, and all over India your sisters have been giving me their moneys and also their jewellery. I see that you state in your address that your jewellery is the result of your own thrift. I personally do not believe in it, for the jewellery has been given to you and not made out of your own moneys earned by your own labour, but your jewellery is undoubtedly streedhanam and I want you to share it with the poorest of your sisters. If you will have India the land of holiness, then you should all become like Sita, and the beauty of Sita lay not in her personal appearance and in her jewellery but in her heart. A woman is adorable, not for the jewellery she wears, but for the purity of her heart. I therefore urge you, if you believe that khadi will solve all the distress of India, to a certain extent, to part with the money that you have brought and your jewellery also, if you can give it to the cause. If you will go a step further, I would ask you also to spare some time to turn the spinning-wheel. It is a fine occupation for women in their leisure hours and it would be much better for you to pass your time in this useful occupation than idle talk. Now, you will give what you can to the volunteers who will go in your midst.

The Hindu, 21-9-1927

---

1 The source has “hamlet”.

2 A woman’s private property over which she exercises independent control
79. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, TRICHINOPOLY

September 21, 1927

Mahatmaji, in the course of his speech, recalled the satyagraha days when he visited Trichy which gave him some of his best co-workers. Unity, which prevailed then among all classes, had given place to dissensions and in spite of many vicissitudes the country had passed through, khadi had remained absolutely steady. It did not admit of dissensions, because khadi permeated the masses, who had nothing of these dissensions. Trichy would have contributed much more but that money would be valueless, if khadi, produced by the sacred hands of villagers, was not used by them. When khadi became universal, it would not be necessary to extend monetary assistance. That khadi required a bounty showed they were not doing their duty by the starving millions, on whom depend their sustenance.

Mahatmaji then referred to the fouling of river water and said that, on one side of the sacred Cauvery is Trichinopoly and on the other Srirangam. What he was about to say was not peculiar to Trichy. It was common all over India. He wished to draw their attention to this because Trichinopoly had got an army of workers who could, if they would, tackle this very difficult problem. Continuing, he said:

I had the pleasure of having a talk with the Chairman of the Srirangam Municipality yesterday and the young men of Vivekananda Ashram at Srirangam this morning. Everybody admits that the sanitation of Srirangam is not in a good condition at all. In my humble opinion, the insanitation is not due to want of funds, nor is the fouling of river water due to want of funds. It is purely due to our criminal apathy. We refuse to see the dirt that is daily growing in front of us. It really requires an army of volunteers who would understand the ABC of sanitation and who would educate the people at large in the elementary laws of sanitary science. It cannot be right to wash our dirt in the same river from which we take our drinking water. Our river banks should be places of recreation for all, young and old, banks on which we could with the greatest safety and ease recline ourselves but it is just the river banks which we make unfit, even for walking with bare feet. It has become abundantly clear by this time that cholera comes out of filthy habits and nothing else. Immediately you cease to drink dirty water and take necessary precaution there is no fear of cholera. I understand that when the great floods overtook the South, as it has overtaken Orissa at present, cholera broke out in Trichinopoly and Srirangam and it was an infliction from God Himself because we people drank the river water which was made dirty by ourselves. In my opinion we sinned against God and man when we did not take care to keep mother earth and our river water clean. We have poetry enough in ourselves to call earth “mother earth” and deify all rivers of India. What a sacrilege it is to dirty “mother earth” in the manner we are doing and to make the waters of all rivers, which we deify, filthy! It is really a simple matter for the youth of Trichinopoly and Srirangam to make up their minds to educate the people and to visit river banks from morning to morning till they have eradicated the evil from their midst. We do not need to become municipal councillors or have any appointment from any public body and the Government in order to do this work. Nor does it require a great deal of time. All that you need to do is merely to have a little bit of knowledge of sanitary science and a fixed determination to get rid of the evil which is undermining the health of the population. I hope therefore that you will all understand the humble message I have endeavoured to give you and do something to retrieve the honour of Trichinopoly and Srirangam and to make the Cauvery really sacred as we consider it.

Mahatmaji then referred to the eradication of the drink evil for which the young men had ample opportunities of service among the labouring population which was a great one here. Even as insanitation was undermining their health, the drink curse was undermining the health and morals of the labouring population. [Concluding, Gandhiji said:]

We have a real national awakening. It should express itself in all the necessary activities.

_The Hindu, 21-9-1927_

80 SPEECH IN REPLY TO CITIZENS’ ADDRESS, PUDUKOTTAH

_Sep 21, 1927_

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I thank you for your address and your purse and more so for your having refrained from reading the address. I need hardly assure you that I have read your address. You say that you have been long waiting for a visit from me and waiting is reciprocal. You tell me in your address that you believe in the message of the spinning-wheel and khaddar and you tell me also that you here are really specially in need of a message on spinning-wheel because of the poverty of the peasantry. I know from my experience of other parts of our country that what you state is literally true. You tell me also that your Legislative Council has passed a resolution making hand-spinning compulsory in your schools. I congratulate the Council upon having adopted that wise and very necessary resolution. How I wish that you and I and all translate our beliefs and resolutions into practice! To pass resolutions and to own beliefs is the easiest thing in the world; for, they cost the believers or the movers of resolutions nothing. But practice means organization, means learning how to do the thing and means going amongst people and a host of others. Now welcome rains have come and I assure you that I do not want to prolong my speech. I shall, however, close with a prayer that God will give you the strength and necessary wisdom to reduce your belief into practice. And if you have at all read my speeches during my Tamil Nadu tour I am sure you know what I would say if the rains did not threaten. For, the things that I have been talking in Madras and elsewhere are also common to you. Now that the rains seem to have stopped for a moment, I shall summarise some of them...

The Hindu, 23-9-1927

81. LETTER TO PRAGJI DESAI

[Before September 22, 1927]

BHAISHRI PRAGJI,

I got your letter. You have been giving good help to Sastriji. Whatever the likely decision in your case, you need not feel worried. I am sure Sastriji must be doing something on his own to help you. Now that you have joined Indian Opinion, you must have given up the idea of earning money there. Am I right? How is Medh faring? How is your health? Whatever happens, do not be tempted by the luxuries there, and keep away from untruth, secrecy and so on.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5042

---

1 Then Gandhiji spoke on prohibition, untouchability, sanitation, Brahmin-non-Brahmin question and funds for charkha.

2 From the text this appears to have been written prior to “Letter to Pragji Desai,” 23-9-1927 and “Letter to V. S. Srinivasa Sastri,” 22-9-1927.
82. “RANGILA RASUL”

In spite of the goading of correspondents, wise and otherwise, I have hitherto resisted the temptation to be drawn into the controversy that has arisen over this pamphlet. I have endeavoured patiently to deal with these correspondents by private correspondence. But of late the correspondence has increased beyond my capacity to deal with it privately. The last letter is from a Muslim professor in Bihar. He sends me a newspaper cutting containing a letter rebuking me in that even I had chosen to join in the conspiracy of silence observed by the leading Hindus in general. The professor wants me to “reply sharp”. I gladly do so in the hope that my correspondents will be satisfied with my good faith and understand the reason for my silence. As I do not read newspapers, save a local one, I know nothing about the “conspiracy of silence” by Hindu leaders. The newspaper I read most frequently just now is The Hindu and I do remember having seen in it a strong article against the Rangila Rasul. So far as I am concerned, long before many Mussalmans knew even of the existence of the pamphlet, it came into my possession. In order to test the veracity of my informant, I read it and wrote the following note¹ in Young India, dated 19th June, 1924:

Then followed protests from Arya Samajists enclosing viler writing against Arya Samajists and the great founder Rishi Dayanand, telling me that Rangila Rasul and such writings were in answer to the Muslim writings referred to above. I thereupon wrote the following second note² (Young India, 10th July, 1924):

Thus I had anticipated the Mussalman wrath. But in the present agitation the meeting-point ends there. I could not approve of the turn the agitation took. I regarded it as excessive and inflammatory. The attack against Justice Duleepsingh³ was uncalled for, undeserved and hysterical. The judiciary is by no means above being influenced by the Government, but it would be wholly unfit to render justice if it was open to popular attacks, threats and insults. So far as the Judge’s integrity was concerned, it should have satisfied any Mussalman that he condemned the pamphlet, as he did, in unmeasured terms. His reading of the section ought not to have been made a cause for virulent attack against him. That other judges have taken a different view from Justice Duleepsingh is irrelevant to the issue. Judges have been often known before now to have given honest and opposite interpretations of the same law. The agitation for strengthening the penal section may be wise. Personally I question the wisdom. Any stiffening of the section will react against ourselves, and will be utilized, as such sections have been utilized before, for strengthening the hold of British authority over our necks. But if Mussalmans or Hindus want to agitate for unequivocally bringing such writings under the criminal law, they have a right to do so.

¹ Not reproduced here; vide “Notes (subtopic - Inflammatory Literature)”, June 19, 1924.
² Not reproduced here; vide “Notes (subtopic - Half a Dozen and Six)”, July 10, 1924.
³ Judge of the Punjab High Court who had on appeal acquitted the author of the pamphlet, prosecuted and sentenced by the lower courts under Section 153-A of the Indian Penal Code.

I hold strong views about Government protection. Time was when we knew better and disdained the protection of law-courts in such matters. To stop anti-Muslim writings like the Rangila Rasul is the work of Hindus as to stop anti-Hindu writings is the work of Mussalmans. The leaders have either lost control over mud-flingers or are in sympathy with them. In any case Government protection will not make us tolerant of one another. Each hater of the other’s religion will under a stiffer law seek secret channels of making vicious attacks on his opponent’s religion, or writing vilely enough to provoke anger but veiled enough to avoid the penal clauses of the law. But then I recognize that at the present moment we are not acting as sane nationalists or as men of religion. We are seeking under cover or religion to wreak mad vengeance upon one another.

My correspondents, both Hindu and Mussalman, should understand that I am just now out of tune with the prevailing atmosphere. I recognize fully that I have no power over the fighters whether Hindu or Muslim. My solution for removing the tension is, I admit, not suited to the times. I therefore best serve the nation by holding my peace. But my faith in my solution is as immovable as my faith in the necessity and the possibility of real Hindu-Muslim unity. Though therefore my helplessness is patent, there is no hopelessness is me. And as I believe that silent prayer is often mightier than any overt act, in my helplessness I continuously pray in the faith that the prayer of a pure heart never goes unanswered. And with all the strength at my command, I try to become a pure instrument for acceptable prayer.

Young India, 22-9-1927
83. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

SABARMATI, 1
September 22, 1927

MY DEAR BROTHER,

I have now two letters from you to acknowledge. I am sorry you are still having trouble from the Transvaal friends. I hope, however, that you will not allow their defection to disturb your peace. I am watching things here and I would ask you not to worry over the notices that Aiyar and Co. may be able, now and then, to secure in the Press here of their activities. I suppose, I may safely say that no real stir will be made in India on the South African question unless I stir. That much credit, somehow or other, I still retain, and it is likely to survive your term of office. And so long as the Union Government continue to co-operate with you and do not reject your advances, I do not see what useful purpose can be served by my making a stir here.

The result of the Pragji and Medh 2 case is unfortunate. I think that they are right in rejecting the offer of a temporary certificate. I do not attach any importance to C.I.D. reports about Medh. If he did anything criminal they should prosecute him, but not use against him C.I.D. reports. He may not be a perfect human being, but I do not think that he is in any way worse than the average Indian there or, for the matter of that, here. The way I look upon the case is this. The understanding of 1914 3 was that there should be no colour bar, at least in theory. Therefore the Immigration Law, to read, does not show any colour bar. In practice six men were to be admitted annually on the ground of educational qualifications, and, so far as I recollect, the question of domicile was not to affect them. For, they carried their qualifications in their own persons. As I am writing from memory I am writing under correction. You will, however, examine the position for what it is worth. I do hope that a way will be found of accommodating them. I am glad you like Phoenix and I should feel happy if it could really become, on occasions, a resting place for you.

---

1 Permanent address
2 Two prominent Indians of Johannesburg who, on returning after a period of residence in India, had trouble in getting their domicile certificates renewed
3 The Smuts-Gandhi Agreement
Andrews described what might have been a serious accident as Kallenbach was driving you from Pretoria to Johannesburg at breakneck speed, and one of the tyres of his fashionable motor burst. I wish you could persuade Kallenbach to come to India, if only to see me and return to his business. Miss Schlesin has given me a fascinating description of her interview with you. When I was in Madras I tried to seek out Mrs. Sastri, but I learnt that she was at Lucknow.

With love,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Letters of Srinivasa Sastri, pp. 167-8

84. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, KANADUKATHAN

September 22, 1927

FRIENDS,

I thank you for this purse. I am both glad and sad to be in your midst. I want to have a heart-to-heart talk with you this evening. Being born in a Vaisya family, I suppose I may identify myself with you and claim to be a Chetti myself. I came in touch with your family life when I was in Rangoon with Dr. Mehta. I was at that time a youngster and as we walked through Mughal Street, he showed me the rows of verandahs and counters and pointed out people busily engaged practically the whole day long counting rupees on their wooden trays. He said that these were all Chettis and from their appearance and their verandahs I might make a mistake by thinking that these were all petty money-lenders. He said that they were not petty money-lenders but they were big money-lenders and some of them were fabulously rich. I had known some Chettis before this acquaintance with them in Rangoon and South Africa. I then knew some of them as my acquaintances but I did not know, as I knew in Rangoon, that you had monopolized practically the money-lending business in Rangoon. I then recall your acquaintance at close quarters in 1920 when I passed through Chettinad and made collections for Tilak Swaraj Fund. I well remember the extreme kindness that you showed me then and that

---

1 Extracts from Gandhiji’s speeches at Kanadukathan, Karaikudi, Amaravatipur and Devakottah were strung together by Mahadev Desai under the title “Message to Chettinad”, in Young India, 6-10-1927.

2 Actually 1921; vide “Speech at Kanadukathan”, September 22, 1921.
you are repeating now. But at that time mine was really a hurricane tour and I had no leisure to think of anything else or to enquire into anything else and I was swaraj-mad. I am still for that matter swaraj-mad but God has chastened me. My little tin-pot plan for swaraj was not very evidently His. And He has now further blessed me with physical illness which makes it impossible for me to go on in that hurricane fashion. Thus it is possible for me to study your life and understand you better, much better, than I was able in 1920. The best and only way I can return your extreme kindness is to give you the result of my somewhat summary study. That study has been helped by two letters that I have from unknown friends in Chettinad giving me a description of your life.

But before I enter upon that let me urge you to make khadi your own much more fully than you seem to have done. If you wish it, you have the power of financing the whole of the khadi movement in Tamil Nadu and for that matter in the whole of India. As I have said to my Marwari friends, the Chettis of the North, I can say to you also that if you wish it you can really finance the khadi movement purely out of your superfluity. With your marvellous shrewdness you can even organize khadi. And so you will forgive me if I tell you that all the purses that I have been receiving since this morning on my way to this place have not, in any shape or form, given me real satisfaction. Though the amount may be, I have not counted it, a few thousands, it is really but a drop in the ocean of your own wealth. If you really believe in khadi, if you have understood the message of the spinning-wheel then, but not till then, I want you to give not little out of your plenty but much out of your plenty.

