therefore to give me and my comrades the same credit for honesty of intention and action that you would claim for yourself and your colleagues and with such a mind reconsider your position and if you feel sure of its correctness try to convince me of the error of my way. Why do you say I want to impose my views on the Government? Argument is not an imposing. The Congress does seek to convert the Government to its views by reason, negotiation and even by direct action, i.e., self-suffering, so long as the Congress is sure of the correctness of its own position. Is not this what every citizen or organization has done all the world over? The congress has indeed struck a new path. It has replaced the method of armed rebellion by self-suffering. If you believe in this profession of the Congress, surely you would welcome the coming in of a method that more becomes man’s dignity than the old law of the jungle.

But whether you feel with me as to the method or not I invite you still to try negotiation with the Congress and especially with me as its representative whom you gave no chance of even knowing the Government side of the case. Remember the door was shut by you and not by me. Open it in a gentlemanly manner and you will find me eager to enter in.

My regards to Lady Willingdon. She must not be angry with me that I am causing worry to her husband. I do not want to. If at all, she must be angry with you in that in your anger or distrust, you banged the door in the face of a poor old man who knocked and was denied entrance.

I am,

Your sincere friend,

M. K. GANDHI

243. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

January 15, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

You have given a fine description of your visit to Kashi. The fact that the Master’s pupils are carrying on his work in a worthy manner should make all of us happy. You should now resume your visits among Chharas. If you can cultivate close contacts with them and influence them, it will be a great achievement.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 220. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

244. LETTER TO PADMA

January 15, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

Vasumati behn told me that you had not fully recovered. Write to me and give me detailed news about your health. Where is Sarojinidevi at present? And how is she? Do you get any news about Father? Do you write to him? Tell me what work you do every day.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6128. Also C.W. 3480. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

245. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

January 15, 1932

BHAI VALJI,

How are you both? Has the health of either improved a little? How is Kamalnayan? Ask him to write to me. Has he made any progress in his studies? Does he feel satisfied? I hope you wander

1 Vishnu Digambar Paluskar, addressee’s music teacher
2 An ex-criminal tribe of central Gujarat who gave some trouble to the Ashram people
3 Addressee’s mother

382 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
about a great deal there. Remember that you have gone there not to read but to improve your health. As you wander in the midst of Nature, you will daily find in her something new to read.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7417. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

246. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
January 15, 1932

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

You may now write long letters to me. Do write. What progress have you made with regard to the spinning-wheel? Have you completed the writing of the Ramayana? Are you writing on any other subject? Has the body been built up? Has your mind become clear and tension free? Has the land been purchased? Who are the other persons with you there? Is the work at Tadikhet going on?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33023

247. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

January 17, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

You will know about us from my letter¹ to Mirabehn. If I know who are still in the Ashram, I can write to them. We are eager to hear from you. You can write at any time. If you have not written already write as soon as you get this letter.

I have already written twice².

This is the third time. The letter which I wrote to you asking you to send me a few things was in addition. How is Radha? Write to me about the health of all the others. Blessings to all.

¹ Vide the following item.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

How is Punjabhai? Where does he stay?

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8201. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

248. LETTER TO MIRABEHN
January 17/18, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I have the things sent by you. The sandals are too flimsy to last beyond a month or two, that is to say, the soles will be worn out. Sole leather is therefore a necessity. If you cannot procure it, I shall have to fall back upon rubber soles.

Are the Privats still there? Please give or send my love to them. You will send my love also to the Rollands.

We are both still keeping well. My food is the same as outside except that I have added curds for the evening meal. There is daily at least two hours' walk divided between morning and evening. I have not yet gone beyond 200 rounds of yarn. But I feel that by next week I shall have finished my arrears of sleep. I must be sleeping altogether nine hours during 24 hours. I am doing a fair amount of reading. I had expected an Ashram mail by this time. Do not send me the other carding-bow just yet.

Love.

BAPU

January 18, 1932

[PS.]

I must apologize. I discovered today that you had packed the bow in the matting.¹

From the original: C.W. 6211. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9677

¹ Vide also “Letter to Mirabehn”, 12-1-1932
249. LETTER TO JAISHANKAR P. TRIVERDI

January 18, 1932

BHAI TRIVERDI¹,

I got the two lots of fruit and vegetables which you sent. Please don’t send any more now. Both of us get these things here if we want them. It would be better from every point of view that you should use your time and money for more important work. You may rest assured that, if I want anything, I will not hesitate to ask you for it. Surely you know this! I had met Manu² in Villeneuve. Send him my blessings.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1001

250. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

January 19, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I was very eager to meet all of you. Mridu had informed me about your health. I hope you have fully recovered now. Mridu is doing well, I hope. What does Chi. Bharati do?

Sardar and I are well.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11135. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

251. LETTER TO CHILDREN, KINGSLEY HALL

January 20, 1932

DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS,

I often think of you and the bright answers you gave to my questions when that afternoon we had sat together.³

I never got the time whilst I was at Kingsley Hall to send you a note thanking you for the gifts of love you had sent me. That I do now from my prison. I had hoped to transfer these gifts to the Ashram

¹ Prof. J. P. Trivedi of Poona Agriculture College
² Manshankar, addressee’s son
³ Vide “Discussion with Children”, 19-9-1931

VOL.54: 13 OCTOBER, 1931 - 8 FEBRUARY, 1932 385
children about whom you should ask aunty Muriel¹ to tell you something. But I was never able to reach the Ashram.

Is it not funny that you should receive a letter from a prison! But though inside a prison I don’t feel like being a prisoner. I am not conscious of having done anything wrong.

My love to you all.

Yours,

Whom you call uncle,

GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 1016-a

252. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

January 20, 1932

CHI. MANIBEHN,

I am glad that you teach the children in the kindergarten. You should write to me from time to time and tell me your experience, which children are well-behaved and which are undisciplined, what difficulties you have to face, etc. Narahari² teaches in Nasik and you teach in the Ashram. This is very good co-operation between you two.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5963

253. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON³

January 21, 1932

MY DEAR CHILD,

Your account of the meeting with the ailing sister⁴ is touching. Give my love to her when you visit her again.

I hope you are at peace with yourself now. The children⁵ must be quite well. Kiss them for me if they will let me kiss them.

¹ Muriel Lester, Principal, Kingsley Hall, was Gandhiji’s hostess in London during his visit to England from September to November, 1931.
² Narahari Parikh, addressee’s husband
³ The Menon family were in England, at Selly Oak, Birmingham.
⁴ An English girl, poor and bed-ridden, who was a great admirer of Gandhiji
⁵ Addressee’s daughters, Nan and Tangai
Maria was with me in Bombay. But I had hardly time to talk to her.

I hope Menon is doing well. My love to him and to all at Woodbrooke settlement. Send my love to Miss Harrison and tell me where she is staying. Do you write to Maud Cheeseman?

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Sardar Vallabhbhai is with me. Both of us are doing quite well.

BAPU

254. LETTER TO MAHAVIR GIRI

January 21, 1932

CHI. MAHAVIR,

I got your letter. I feel unhappy that your health has still not improved completely. Do you also wish to go to Darjeeling? None of you need go, if you don’t wish to. And if you do go, make up your mind to return with your health fully recouped. I shall feel very unhappy if you become more ill there. If you do not go, consult Dr. Talwalkar and follow the treatment which he advises. If you decide to go, please let me know where you intend to stay, etc. If there is no proper accommodation for you where you go, I think you will be running a risk in going there. I don’t regard you as a child. Decide like a grown-up and mature person and persuade Krishnamaiyadevi also to think in the same way.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6231

1 Anne Marie Petersen
2 The Quaker Centre, near Birmingham, in whose activities the addressee and her husband took part
3 Addressee’s mother

VOL.54: 13 OCTOBER, 1931 - 8 FEBRUARY, 1932 387
CHI. NARANDAS,

I got the post from the Ashram today, after I had waited for it for many days. I was getting worried since I had received no reply. As you posted the packet as a parcel, it was delayed. On previous occasions, too, that is what happened. I see, however, that posting things as parcel costs less. You may, therefore, continue the practice if you wish to. You can do this. Send the many other letters as parcel and send yours separately, by ordinary post. That will save expenditure and I will get one letter immediately. Ordinarily you or anybody else will be able to write to me as often as necessary. Most probably I will get the letters immediately.

You have done nothing wrong in reproducing in the “Ashram Samachar”\(^1\) the extract from my letter.

Anyone from the Ashram will be permitted to visit us. Others too, who have not become prominent in the political field, will be permitted; for instance, Pyare Ali\(^2\), or Rama (Ranchhodbhai’s). Three or four can come at a time. We are permitted to receive visitors once a week. But we don’t wish to waste money in this manner. You may, therefore, permit people to come as and when you think proper. I wish to tell you what is permissible and what my general view is, and leave the rest to you. Don’t think that I am putting any restriction. How can I judge what the circumstances there require, or measure the depth of people’s feelings or their foolish attachment to me?

Allow Krishnamaiyadevi and others to go to Darjeeling. It will certainly mean expense, but that will be worth incurring. I suppose in Darjeeling they will stay with some friends and we shall have to pay only the fare. Give them the fare for the outward journey. As for the return fare, tell them that you will send a note which they can show and get money from Bhai Jivanlal of the Birla Brothers. That is, you can send them a letter of recommendation when they intend to return. Will Mahavir also go with them? If he does, let him stay there for five or six months. After he has recovered, he can take up some public work in Darjeeling. Similarly, send away the girls when they wish to go.

---

1 A handwritten news bulletin of the Ashram
2 A business man from Bombay who, along with his wife Noorbanu, was an ardent follower of Gandhiji
Where is Abbas Saheb? How does he keep? Inquire and let me know. How is Raojibhai’s Vimala? Where is Raojibhai Manibhai of Sojitra? Where is Shivabhai?

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Venilal\(^1\) was very ill in Bombay. How is he now? You say that Navin has come to live there for the present. What exactly do you mean? Where does he stay just now and what does he do?

The letters to the others will be posted on Tuesday. Take this letter to have been written for Dalbahadur Giri’s family and for Kusum. My compliments to Kanti\(^2\), Bal\(^3\), Prithuraj\(^4\) and other warriors. I will write to them later.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8202. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

256. LETTER TO RAMANANDA CHATTERJEE
January 22, 1932

DEAR RAMAND BABU,

May I ask you for the same courtesy you extended to me during my last incarceration\(^5\)? I did see the current issue of The Modern Review.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Shantiniketan\(^6\)

From the original: C.W. 9526. Courtesy: Santa Devi

---

\(^1\) Venilal Gandhi
\(^2\) Kanti Gandhi, son of Harilal Gandhi
\(^3\) D. B. Kalelkar’s second son
\(^4\) Son of Lakshmidas Asar
\(^5\) During his last incarceration (May 5, 1930 to January 26, 1931) Gandhiji had written to the addressee: “I have permission to receive The Modern Review, among other magazines. Will you please send me copies from the May number? . . .” The Modern Review was among the approved periodicals this time too; vide “Letter from R. M. Maxwell”, 16-1-1932
\(^6\) The postcard was redirected to: 2/1 Townshend Road, Bhawanipore, Calcutta.
257. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

January 22, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. You did well in paying a visit to the women who are in prison.

There is no such thing as a miracle in this world, or rather everything is a miracle. That the earth is hanging in space without support and that we do not see the atman though we know that it dwells in our body—these are great miracles. Compared to them, other miracles are as trivial as the conjuror’s mango tree.

“Keeping one’s eye single” means that one should not see with a distorted vision, that one should keep one’s eyes pure and not cast lustful glances. The statement has no other meaning.

Sarojinidevi’s case is a painful one. If, however, we behave towards her in a spirit of non-attachment, she will keep herself on the right path, no matter whether she continues to live there or lives in Prayag.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10267. Also C.W. 6716. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

258. LETTER TO SIR FREDERICK SYKES

January 23, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

The cordial conversations I had with you last year embolden me to write this to you. If you would rather that, being a prisoner, I should not write to you, I shall cease to do so and this may be thrown away. If however you don’t resent this letter, I may take the further liberty of writing again, should the occasion arise.

Whilst in my opinion all the ordinances are a tragic blunder and so utterly unnecessary, I can understand the Government taking a different view and trying to crush the Congress. The organization may

---

1 The addressee had asked Gandhiji what he thought of miracles.
2 Vide St. Matthew, iv. 22
3 Governor of Bombay be put out of action for a time. The spirit will never be crushed. But this is another story.

What I want to draw your attention to is the excesses that are being committed under the ordinances.

The breaking up of a peaceful meeting in Ahmedabad by severe lathi charges and running horses through the meeting appears to have been a barbarous procedure, several young men were severely and some women were slightly hurt. One young woman had her hair pulled. This information I glean from the newspapers supplied to me. In Nadiad the treatment is said to have been still more brutal and it is reported to have been the worst in Surat. Boys in two boarding houses are said to have been hurriedly dragged out of them and the houses taken over by the authorities. Such procedure brutalizes those who are engaged in carrying it out. It should be borne in mind that all this treatment is being meted out to those who do not retaliate and have not been known to have done any previous violence.

The authorities have taken possession of the National University buildings in Ahmedabad. The University has a rich collection of carefully selected books. There is a religious section to the library. It is admitted to be a unique library built up by devoted scholars. It contains some rare and valuable manuscripts. There is, too, a little museum which has an art collection. The grounds have valuable trees planted on them. The whole of this constructive effort—a fruit of ten years patient labour—is likely to be ruined without any just cause.

One of the most respectable Indians belonging to the celebrated Tyabji family, Mr. Abbas Tyabji who is 78-year-old and who is an ex-Chief Judge of the Baroda High Court is said to have been locked up in Nadiad along with other prisoners in what can only be described as a cage.

I ask you to investigate these statements. Denials by the parties charged can be regarded as no investigation. Often have such denials been proved to be worthless.

I have picked out but a few of what have appeared to me to be glaring instances of high-handedness. If past experience is any guide, probably the worst cases have not even been allowed to appear in the newspapers. Nor do I get all the newspapers.

I write this as a friend wishing well to the English. I am anxious that on both sides every avoidable cause of bitterness should be avoided. I would like the fight to be conducted honourably on either side so that at the end of it either party may be able to say of the other that there was no malice behind its actions.

_I am,_

_Your sincere friend,_

_M. K. Gandh_

SIR FREDERICK SYKES

BOMBAY

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(41), Pt. 1, pp. 15-6; also G.N. 3856

259. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

January 23, 1932

CHI. MIRA.

The long awaited post came from the Ashram only yesterday. I shall now get it regularly I expect. Of course, you were right in going to Bombay. You should be the sole judge finally as to where you would stay and what you would do.

When you write to the Privats, tell them they are constantly in my thoughts. They must on no account impair their health. They should write to me.

I have told you already not to bring or send the hanging bow.¹ You have sent me so many slivers that I shall not need to card for some weeks yet. And I am glad. I have not yet regained my bodily strength. I sleep at least thrice during the day in spite of full sleep between 9 p.m. and 3.45 a.m. I need sleep and rest as yet. I do not spin 500 yards [like]² I did last year. I am doing the amount in two days. I am hoping however soon to be able to do 500 yards per day. I will not strain myself to do it. I shall try to conserve what energy there is still left in me. This is no notice to you to bring or send me more slivers. If I must have them I shall soon tell you. My health is excellent and so is Sardar Vallabhbhai’s. I have simply told you how much rest I still need. The London wear and tear was terrific and I suppose the body now demands prolonged rest. The Bombay rush on the top of London’s undid the good the voyage had undoubtedly done.

As to the visits, this time there is no difficulty. They have

¹ Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 17/18
² From Bapu’s Letters to Mira granted what I asked for last time. Weekly visits may therefore be paid. But this does not mean that someone must come every week. I impose no restrictions. I simply give the warning that we are poor people and therefore we have to be sparing in paying visits of love. There cannot be much business. And love prospers on self-denial. No more of philosophy. I know you will all do what is best. Those who are known to political fame of course cannot visit without special permission.

My love to the sisters, Kamala and to yourself.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6212. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9678

260. LETTER TO KANTI GANDHI

January 23, 1932

CHI. KANTI,

I was glad to get your letter. Personally I was very happy that all of you were given a taste of the Government’s kindness. If the experience does not make us angry but, on the contrary, fills our heart with compassion for the other party, and if we are as ready as ever to welcome more such experience, we shall have realized the true aim of our life. If anybody abused St. Francis, he would smile gently and thank God that He did not inspire that person to assault him, and if anybody assaulted him he would thank God that He did not inspire the latter to kill him outright. If anybody attempted to kill him, St. Francis would say that after all he did not try to torture him. The point is that he who has overcome love for his body and looks upon it only as an instrument will never be affected in his mind by anybody injuring his body.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8905. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
261. LETTER TO BAL KALELKAR

January 23, 1932

CHI. BAL,

I did get your letter, but I could find no time at all to reply. Now that I am here you may ask me whatever you wish to and I will try to answer. I have of course conveyed my congratulations to all of you who have plunged into the struggle with enthusiasm. Though I do not write separately to each one, all of you should write to me about your experiences. The little that I have written in the letter to Kanti applies to you all. That letter contains all that I have to say for the present. Remember that none of us should get elated with the service we are able to do. We should always be dissatisfied with what we can do. We come into this world not to incur debts, but to pay them. He who has no debts to discharge no longer needs to be burdened with a body. Such a one is a free soul, and a debtor has no reason to feel elated even when he pays off his whole debt. When he has done that, he only earns his rest. To be free from one’s debts is to be free from bondage.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8904. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

262. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

January 23, 1932

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

Your letter has set my mind at rest. Everyone is being tested. We should pray in our hearts that God may regard us as fit to make a pure sacrifice. It will be enough if everyone of us does the task that falls to one’s lot to the best of one’s ability.

How is Kaku? What is he doing at present?

Do you take enough milk and fruit? Don’t be stingy about them or shrink from taking them. Regard them as medicine. If you feel better with coffee, you can take that too.

1 Vide the preceding item.
Write to Nath¹ and request him to pay a visit from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

263. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

January 23, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

I have your letter.

You have given a good explanation of rhythm beats. I shall find some time and try to follow the method you have suggested. However, the book has not yet reached me.

Your rule about Mathuri² is correct. She need not get up early. Nor should she have to bear any burden either of work or of study. She should be free to sleep and work as and when she likes. Take care about her diet. Her main food should be milk. She may take rice, but very little of it, and should take no pulses at all. It is necessary for her to take vegetables cooked without spices. It would be good if she eats one or two green tomatoes cooked.

Your advice regarding Gajanan³ seems to me all right.

I was interested by your explanation about Panditji, the teacher⁴. I also like your having formed an Association. It seems but proper that you and his other pupils should first do something through your own efforts and then approach the public for help. That is the only right way for you. Please go slow with the scheme while the present conflagration lasts, though you may certainly do what is absolutely necessary.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 221. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

¹ Kedarnath Kulkarni, Kishorelal Mashruwala’s guru
² Addressee’s daughter, a singer
³ Addressee’s nephew
⁴ Vishnu Digambar Paluskar; vide “Letter to Narayan M. Khare”, 15-1-1932
264. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE

January 23, 1932

CHI. MATHURI,

I got your letter. Your first task is to build up a strong physique. You should not try to learn more than what you can while you play. Our real education lies in learning to be good. Everybody, whether healthy or ill, can do that. Knowledge of letters is like ornaments for the body. Can all people get them?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 260. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

265. LETTER TO GAJANAN V. KHARE

January 23, 1932

CHI. GAJANAN,

I have your letter. The opinion expressed by Kakashri is correct. It is enough to be prepared to undergo suffering. No one will deter you from plunging into the sacrifice when the need arises. In the mean time you should devote yourself to your own jobs.

How are you progressing with your drawing?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: C.W. 306. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

266. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

January 23, 1932

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. We at least could see each other, but what about the other women who could not even see me? However, I should have realized your eagerness and sent a special slip for you. Have it now. I should advise you not to exert yourself beyond your capacity. However, God will look after you all. Remember the first verse of the women’s prayer. It has universal application. You should not think that it is a prayer which was offered by someone thousands of years ago.

All of us are helpless, as Draupadi was. Before God such distinctions as man and woman lose all meaning. The same atman dwells in the man’s and in the woman’s body. In our infatuated state, we are deluded by the different bodily forms and are even overcome by passion. If we know the soul living within and, realizing that all individual selves are essentially one and the same, devote ourselves to the service of all, no disturbing thoughts would attack us and harass us.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9322. Also C.W. 6597. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

267. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

January 23, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

I got your letter written in a beautiful hand. Yes, one can get a walking stick even in England. Do you know by heart all the chapters of the Gita? How many does Pushpa know? Why did she let herself fall ill? Has her nose grown a little? Tell her that, when it is held high, she should not go and get it snapped off. Do both of you rise early? Where is Kamala just now? Does she ever write to you?

Blessings from
BAPU

\footnote{The reference is to Gandhiji’s practice of placing his hand on a girl’s shoulder for support while walking.}
268. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

January 23, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA (AUNT),

Yes. If I had not seen you in Bombay, I would not have thought of asking you to write to me. But having seen you there, I did not write a separate letter to you but said in my letter to Anandi that she should ask you to write. You have improved your handwriting.

Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9462

269. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

January 23, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA¹,

I was glad to get your letter. You have improved your handwriting. Do your lessons there with attention. Do you ever remember the Vidyapith? How is Mohan?²?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5762. Also C.W. 2985. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

270. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

January 23, 1932

CHI. BABU,

You seem to be demanding too much. Should I write when you reply or even without your writing? You seem to be still suffering from asthma. Why? How much cod-liver oil did you take? Did you feel better after taking it or not? What are you doing at present? Do you have cough? How much was your weight last year? Do you take sun-baths? Do you massage your body with oil? Fresh air, sunshine and oil massage are essential for you.

¹ Daughter and son of Narahari Parikh

398 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9904. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

271. LETTER TO VASUDEV

January 23, 1932

Bhai Vasudev,

I have your letter. The soul is ennobled by self-control. The true nature of the soul consists in a passionless state. That is why control over the emotions is imperative.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 8903-a. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

272. LETTER TO RAHANNA TYABJI

January 24, 1932

Chh. Rahanu,

I had your letter. For how many days was Father kept at Nadiad? Did he suffer any hardship there? What are the arrangements for his food and other necessaries? Last time his beard was infested with lice. This time he should take precautions against that. He should ask for help for the purpose if necessary. Or he may ask for me to be brought there. Is he allowed to see everybody freely? How often are you allowed to see him? Tell him that Sardar and I think of him often and speak of the sacrifices made by him.

Why do you feel uneasy? God will take service from you as He wills. Convey to Mother on behalf of us both repeated vandematarams and repeated salaams, Khuda Hafiz and all else that may be befitting. How many months old is Sohaila’s baby now? I do know that you will keep your word. We shall talk more about it if and when God ordains that we meet. Write to me from time to time. Generally they give me all the letters received for me. There is no restriction, either, as to the number of letters that I can write from here. I am not allowed to write on political matters or to important personages like Father. But I may freely write sermons or love-letters to boys or girls like you. This freedom should be considered adequate.

1 Addressee’s sister

Now I begin writing in Urdu. Hamida is a brave girl. God will give her great work to do and let her attain greatness. I wish for nothing more than that God should grant long life to Hamida. In this regard you also deserve thanks, for after all Hamida is your pupil, isn’t she? Point out to me my mistakes. I hope this is enough exercise for today. Khuda Hafiz.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Convey my blessings to Rohini, Radhabehn and others when you see them.¹

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9636

273. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

January 24, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I did see you in Bombay but could exchange no word with you. Now send me your account for all these months. Your health seemed to be all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1827

274. LETTER TO LALJI K. PARMAR

January 24, 1932

CHI. LALJI,

Mamasaheb² tells me in his letter that you are doing no work, that you have stopped weaving because you do not get yarn. How can

¹ This sentence is in Gujarati in the source.
² Presumably V. L. Phadke, who was running a Harijan Ashram in Godhra one who can spin complain that he has no yarn.? You yourself should spin and, when you have got enough yarn for one cloth-piece, you should weave it. You should also persuade your friends and neighbours to spin. One who is eager to serve always gets an opportunity to do so. Do not waste the training which has been given to you. Write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3295

275. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

January 24, 1932

CHI. RUKMINI,

I know I should not expect any letter from you, the more so now that you are a mother. I requested your father-in-law to find a name for the son, and he has passed on the responsibility to me. You should help me now. Suggest some names which both of you would like. Out of these I will select the one which I like best. How is Benarsi? Your father-in-law is what you would describe as an ideal father-in-law. Besides, he is ever ready to help others. But he has not the courage to return from England without having earned enough money there, and he is not likely to succeed in doing it. The only chance now is that, if you press him, he might return. Write to him and tell him that those for whose sake he wants to earn the wealth do not want it. Why, then, should he worry himself so much?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9059

276. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

January 24, 1932

BHAI VITHALDAS,

Just as I was asking Sardar whether he had any news about you,
I got your letter. Your weakness seems to have persisted too long. Do not worry, however. Take complete rest and recover fully before you resume work. Meanwhile your mind is bound to be busy. A person who has special capacity for some particular work\(^1\) can do much even through his ideas. That is the excellence of karmayoga.

Both of us are quite well.

\[\text{Blessings from}\]
\[\text{BAPU}\]

[PS.]
My blessings to all friends in the Ashram at Sasvad.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9779

277. LETTER TO HARIPRASAD

January 24, 1932

CHI. HARIPRASAD,

God will reward you well for your devoted services to Gangadevi. But the \textit{Gita} teaches us to perform our job or our service without consideration of the result. Therefore, on your part rendering of service is an end in itself and that is how it should be. I hope you are keeping well. Give me your daily routine.

\[\text{Blessings from}\]
\[\text{BAPU}\]

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2550

278. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

January 24, 1932

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

I have your two letters. What can I write to you? The progress of your work is as regular as the rising and setting of the sun. Keep it up. I am being provided with \textit{datuns}\(^2\). These days Sardar prepares them.

\[\text{Blessings from}\]
\[\text{BAPU}\]

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6539

\(^1\) The addressee was a khadi expert.
\(^2\) Twigs used for cleaning teeth
279. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

January 23/25, 1932

3 p.m., Saturday,

CHI. NARANDAS,

I will write as many letters as I can and hand them over on Tuesdays for being posted. I cannot be as regular as I should like to be. I need rest. My health is very good, though. You will know more about it from my letter to Mirabehn. I was weighed today. The weight was 106_ pounds. The Sardar weighed 144_ lb. Only, I need plenty of rest and take it. Abbas Saheb is your neighbour now. I suppose you go and inquire after him. If he requires any food, send it to him. Hamidabehn, together with Kanjibhai’s wife and daughter, is also there. I suppose a woman from the Ashram visits them from time to time.

I cannot think from here what special work may be assigned to Tilakam. He must, of course, pick up Hindi. It is also desirable that he should learn spinning and weaving. Does he work to your satisfaction?

Afternoon, January 25\textsuperscript{2}, 1932

I had a painful letter from Champa. Ratilal seems to be harassing her a good deal. It would be desirable if Champa could be separated from him on any pretext. She is not strong enough to bear any more children. It is likely that Ratilal is not able to control himself. We are faced with a very painful moral duty. From what Champa writes, it seems that Ratilal spends the whole day in the bungalow and beats the children whenever he feels the itch. I don’t understand what you can do in this matter. If a woman or man agrees to stay with them for a payment, that may help. Consider this and do what you think best.

If someone visits Maganbhai, he should tell him that I got his letter. How can I write to him now? He should also tell Kakasaheb that I remember all that I have to write about. I will write what I can during the time I get.

You will observe that I send to you many letters addressed to persons outside Ahmedabad. I know that this means double expense and increase in your work. If you wish, I can post such letters directly from here to the persons concerned and save both money and time. I have a faint recollection that I had put this question to you on a previous occasion, too, and that you had replied that they should be forwarded through you. Please let me know what I should do.

\textsuperscript{1} The source has “24”, but Saturday fell on January 23, 1932.

\textsuperscript{2} The source has “24”, but Chapter xiv of Bhagavad Gita referred to in the letter was written on January 25, 1932; vide “Letters on the Gita”. 21-2-1932, Chapter xiv; also “Diary, 1932”, the last item in the volume.

You will find with this, on a separate sheet, a talk\(^1\) on Chapter XIV. Since I have started writing, I will, as far as possible, continue the series from week to week.

Today’s post includes some useful letters (and slips too). If you get time, read them. I have one limitation, or say a gift. I express certain thoughts only in certain circumstances. Without those circumstances, those thoughts would remain unexpressed. If these scattered reflections are not collected, they are likely to be lost. Not that that would be much of a loss, but, since Mahadev, Kaka and others have collected such reflections, I, too, have somewhat fallen a victim to this temptation. As a matter of fact, however, my ship sails as the wind blows. I have no map of the course with me. How can I have one? Having such a map is contrary to the spirit of bhakti. How can one who would dance as God wills choose deliberately a course? It is enough if such a one can give single-minded devotion to the task which falls to his or her lot. But this is mere philosophizing. How does it help? “Live as you like, but realize God somehow, anyhow.”

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

There are sixty letters besides this.

Lakshman Giri writes from 96 Harrison Road, Calcutta, and requests that the Giri family should be sent away. I write this for your information. You yourself should reply to him from there. I am not replying.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I

\(^1\) Gandhiji, however, forgot to enclose the talk and sent it with the letter dated January 26, 1932; vide pp. 40-1. For the series of talks, vide “Letters on the Gita”, 21-2-1932.
DEAR SISTERS,

I hope you will understand that it is not possible for me to write to each of you separately. Of course, whenever it is necessary, and I get time, I write to some of you individually. But this time, too, I intend to write a joint letter to the women as I used to do formerly.

During these days, when all of us are passing through a testing time, I hope that all of you will derive great consolation from Draupadi’s prayer. Really speaking, all of us are now in the same plight as she was. No human being can save our honour, God alone can do that. It is true that He often sends His help through men. But such a man is only God’s tool or instrument. This much in regard to the difficult time through which we are passing.

Now a little from my experiences in England. I may say that in England, too, I received from women almost the same love that I have always received from Indian women. Just as you have kept no secret from me, there in England also I came across women who opened their hearts to me. They came from long distances to accompany me in my early morning walks and to talk to me. The moral which I drew from this is that non-violence is a very wide thing. It includes absolute freedom from impure thoughts.

I also saw that Indian women were in no way inferior to European women. Much of their strength lies suppressed and some of it has had no opportunity to reveal itself. Whenever I observed the European women’s superiority, I could also see the causes of it. If the same causes begin to operate in our country, the women here also would become like them. However, we should certainly reflect over the superiority which we observe in European women. We should not feel elated thinking that that strength lies concealed in us; nor should we be complacent on that account. They possess the power of organization and can unite and work very well like the men. They don’t think themselves helpless, but fearlessly move about wherever they like. In England, if a woman goes out alone either during day or at night, it is not thought necessary for anybody to accompany her. Nursing in hospitals has become an exclusive province of women, and they do the work very well indeed. The sacrifices made by some women are beyond praise. Muriel Lester who came to stay with us at the Ashram is a daughter of rich parents. Like Mirabehn, she has... given away, as a trust to the Ashram founded by her, all her share of the parental wealth. She and her sister Doris have dedicated their all to public service. Doris runs a school for children. She is helped by about ten women teachers who work for a very small pay. Muriel runs the Ashram where I was staying. Day and night the two sisters think only of service. Both have remained unmarried and now they have reached an age when even the thought of marriage would not occur to them. We can see their purity marked on their faces. In Muriel’s Ashram no distinction would ever be made between high and low or between whites and non-whites. One may suppose that she could expect some publicity by acting as my hostess. But what shall one say about her having let Tilakam stay at the place? You may ask Tilakam himself how he was looked after there. He went to it as a pauper. I had agreed to pay the expenses on his account. However, Tilakam gave to the Ashram his full services like the others, so that I did not have to pay a single penny on his behalf. Negroes too she admits into her institution, and treats them with the same respect and love. I have many such happy memories of my stay. But I hope that for the present you will be satisfied with what I have given.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

281. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

Silence Day, [January 25, 1932]

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

Since I cannot write to each of you separately, I shall try to write a joint letter to you all every week as before. I now intend to write to you about the things I had been hoping to explain to you when I would meet you. It is in God’s hands to fulfil the intention. We should live as He may ordain and feel happy in doing so. This is why we sing that bhajan by Narasinh Mehta: “Take to heart neither happiness nor suffering; they are ordained for this body from its very birth.” I will now tell you a story. First I wish to tell you about the school run by a lady named Doris. She is the sister of Miss Muriel who came to stay with us at the Ashram. She has dedicated her life to the service of children, and to that end she has been running a beautiful school for them. It has no male teacher. All the teachers are women. The school is a two-storeyed building with a spacious terrace above, a part of which is covered so that when it is raining the children might play or go to bed under the roof. I liked one thing which I saw there. All the children are made to sleep in the school for half an hour in the afternoon, for which purpose they have small folding bedsteads. You should note that these boys and girls are not more than eight years old. The children are made to do all that they can with their own hands. In the games they play the teacher invariably joins them. The teachers also show them how to wash their faces and hands and how to brush their teeth properly. There is not a single activity of the children which is not supervised by a teacher. All the children belong to poor families and pay no fees. Games, physical exercises and handicrafts also are there. These children became as close to me as you had become. They sent me toys as a birthday gift, which I have carefully preserved and brought for you. But now I don’t know when I shall be able to give them to you. This is enough for today.

1 This being Gandhiji’s first letter to the Ashram children from Yeravda Prison, it is presumed that this was written on the same day as the preceding letter to Ashram women.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8896. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

282. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

January 25, 1932

CHI. JAMNADAS,

You came and left without saying much. Now write to me and make the letter as long as you wish. How far are you succeeding in your work? How many pupils does the school have? And how many teachers? Where is Jagannath? Where are his brothers? How is your health?

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From Gujarati: C.W. 9361
283. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

January 25, 1932

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

You must have got my letter. I have had no reply from you. I write this letter, all the same, so that you may not worry. I am eager to get news about Father and others. I hope you don’t worry about things.

Both of us are quite well. My diet is practically the same as it was when I was out of jail.

Blessings to you both from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3424

284. LETTER TO PREMA BEHN KANTAK

January 25, 1932

CHI. PREMA.

I got your letter. I don’t know whether I shall be able to describe to you all that you want to know.¹

I didn’t know that Dhurandhar had become the King’s guest.

I very much enjoyed seeing the paintings in Rome, but what opinion can I give after a visit of two hours? What is my competence to Judge? And what is my experience in these matters? I liked some of the pictures very much indeed. If I could spend two or three months there, I would go and see the paintings and sculptures every day and study them attentively. I saw the sculpture of Jesus on the cross. I have already written and told you that it was this that attracted me most.

I didn’t feel, however, that the art of that country excelled that of India. The two have developed along different lines. Indian art is entirely a product of the imagination. European art is imitation of Nature. Probably this makes Western art easier to understand. But, maybe, after we have understood it, it keeps us glued to the earth, whereas the more we understand Indian art the more it lifts us above the earth. I have stated these views simply because I must say something to you. I put no great value on them. It is likely that my unconscious partiality for India makes me say this, or my ignorance makes me ride the horse of fancy. But anyone who rides such a horse is sure to fall ultimately.

¹ The addressee had asked for an account of Gandhiji’s visits to places of artistic interest in Rome and elsewhere.

Even so, if you can learn anything from these views you may. If you have risen beyond such things, leave them aside. Parents can freely tell their children, who know less than they, stories from the Ramayana and the Mahabharata in the manner they know best; I am in a similar position in this matter.

You will be able to see from this that I do take interest in art. But I have renounced, have had to renounce, many such interests. I have relished to my heart’s content the joy which everything connected with the search for truth gives me, and I would be ready still to relish it in more of such things. Tasks come unsought to a votary of truth. That is why by nature he is equipped to follow the teaching of the third chapter [of the Gita]. I believe I had been practising karmayoga even before I had read that chapter.

But I am straying, I am afraid, from the path.

You have done well in putting me questions\(^1\) about the Ashram. Work is given the chief place in the Ashram life, because it is man’s duty to do body labour. Anyone who shirks it, eats stolen food. Moreover, the work which we do in the Ashram is as much for service as it is for one’s own benefit. We have put the spinning-wheel in the centre of our activities, because for the millions in the country spinning is the only work we can think of as a universal supplementary occupation to agriculture. It subserves moral and economic ends alike.

The Ashram exists not only for the service of the country but, through it, for the service of the world and to help us to attain moksha, to see God, through such service.

Not everyone can join the Ashram. It is not an infirmary, not an orphanage. It is meant for men and women who have dedicated themselves to service, to the realization of a spiritual goal. Hence it is not meant for people who cannot do body labour. However, we may admit persons who are filled with the spirit of service but who are disabled in body. Of course we can admit only a small number of such persons. And we certainly cannot ask those who joined the

\(^1\) The addressee had asked what the ideals of the Ashram were and, quoting instances of apparently contradictory approaches to life, sought Gandhiji’s opinion.
Ashram as regular members but who may have become disabled afterwards, to leave the Ashram. Outwardly, many of our actions in the Ashram may seem inconsistent but they will cease to appear so when examined more deeply. If you do not understand any point in this, you may ask me again. You may also express any other doubts which you may feel.

It was only rarely that I posed for a photograph while in England. I believe I have not violated my vow in doing that.

It is certainly not my wish, nor is it desirable, that everyone who comes close to me should be like me in every respect. That would mean mechanical imitation. If anybody wishes to take from me what may seem good to him, it will help him only if he takes what he can assimilate. In any case, who can prevail upon Sardar to stop taking tea? And may it not be that tea serves as medicine to him? Some persons who are close to me, who are my co-workers, are even meat-eaters! What do you say to that?

Only those with whom tea does not agree or who refrain from it because they have considered how it is grown will never take it. Though Ba lives with me, she does take tea. She takes coffee too. I would even offer them lovingly to her. Why? I know, of course, that your question was good-humoured joking, but some false ideas and a degree of intolerance prevail among us in such matters and it is necessary to get rid of them. I don’t know if you have this weakness, but it is desirable that you should know my views on this subject. There is much else in my other letters of this week; if you get an opportunity, read them and ponder over them.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10269. Also C.W. 6717. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

\textsuperscript{1} The addressee had asked how Vallabhbhai could take tea while staying with Gandhiji in the jail.
285. LETTER TO RAMABEHN C. JOSHI

January 25, 1932

CHI. RAMA¹.

I must write to you. I often remember the tears in your eyes on that day. Is your mind at peace now? How are Vimala’ and Dhiru’? Does the latter volunteer to work for Gangadevi, who looks after him with such kindness? Have Vimala and Dhiru become quiet now?

Tell Chhaganlal that I was glad to get the newspapers and read them. If he gets an opportunity now in jail to learn the Gita by heart, he should utilize it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5334

286. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

Y. M.,

January 25, 1932

CHI. SHANKERLAL.

Somebody has sent from Madras Ramanathan’s speech against khadi, Pattabhi’s and Varadachari’s criticism of it and the rejoinder by Ramanathan. These have been published in the form of a small pamphlet. If the speeches by Pattabhi and Varadachari as published are complete, I would say they were inane. There is nothing much in Ramanathan’s speech. But if it was thought necessary to reply to it, the reply should have been telling. Read the pamphlet if you have not done so. One point made by Ramanathan is worth considering. He says that there are very few persons if any, who spin in their spare hours. Those who spin have no other occupation and spinning to them is a full-time occupation. Even if that should be the case, I see nothing wrong in it. But if it is true, it does mean that our chain is broken. Gujarat’s experience does not support Ramanathan at all.

¹ Wife of Chhaganlal Joshi
² Addressee’s children
³ ibid
Gujarat may have shown less work; but we know every one of the spinners. Those who spin for money do so only in their spare time. The others spin for their own use, but they also do so in their spare time. We should have full mastery of our case. We do not want to shield the weak. We need not be ashamed, if the progress has been slow, to admit the fact. I am not going to admit defeat even if the progress has been slow or if its rate is declining; because to me the whole thing is as clear as day-light. And Ramanathan’s own statement proves it. He asks if fifty persons working with a machine can do in two hours the work which they would take eight hours to do with hand. Who would be so foolish as to employ fifty persons for eight hours? If machines can thus give work to everybody who would protest against them? But Ramanathan has totally missed the point. He is not so dishonest as to do so deliberately. I therefore believe that he has fallen into ignorance and consequently his reason has become clouded. But be that as it may, we have to draw a lesson even from his speech, which please do. The responsibility for keeping the Charkha Sangh unsullied lies with you, so that one may say I can sit back in peace here. I would therefore keep shooting arrows from here, which you must take.

I have seen the Gulzarilal’-Desai [note]. You must be keeping good health. Anasuyabehn too should write.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G. N. 11538

287. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

January 25, 1932

CHI. PRABHUDAS

It is good you have come on a short visit. As soon as the hot days begin, rush back to the hills. I do have it in mind to write a history of the Ashram\(^1\). But we have to see whether I will get the

\(^1\) Gulzarilal Nanda and Khandubhai Desai, who were in the Dhulia Jail for Gandhiji’s letter to Sir Frederick Sykes, vide “Letter to Sir Frederick Sykes”, 23-1-1932 necessary time for it and also whether I will be strong enough. I doubt whether my right hand will be sufficiently strong for me to write with. Though I have let it rest for four months, it cannot be said to have improved. Let us see what happens.

\(^2\) Gandhiji started writing it on April 5 and completed it on July 11, 1932.

You may ask any questions you wish to.

You have said nothing in your letter about the Magan spinning-wheel.

About Almora, send me your questions so that it may be easier for me to reply.

About the history of the Ashram also, if you send me your questions, I will keep them in mind when I start writing.

Has your work regarding the Ramayana been completed? It would have been better if you had started writing on other subjects, too.

How do you spend each day there? What is your diet? I hope you do not suffer from constipation.

I had put several questions to you in my letter to which you have still not replied

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : S.N. 33022

288. LETTER TO JAMNA BEHN GANDHI

January 26, 1932

CHI. JAMNA.

I got your letter. There are three things you should do to cure weakness and loose motions. Live on curds and fruit only. Fruit may include oranges, jamun, pomegranates, papayas, pineapple and grapes. Take hip-baths before eating anything and also sunbaths in the rays of the rising sun. You should take only a small quantity of curds at a time. Divide the total quantity into four meals. Go on reducing the quantity progressively if you find that you are not digesting all that you are eating. Do not be afraid that, if you do so, you will become weaker.

If and when you feel very eager to work, there are many types of work, both light and heavy, in the Ashram. All of them have equal value if done in a spirit of service.

\(^1\) The reference, presumably is to the preceding item.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 850. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

289. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Tuesday, January 26, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

The yarn which I spun during my last imprisonment was sent there to be woven into khadi. If it has been woven, please let me know what its count was and whether it was strong enough for weaving or was rather weak.

Where are Ramji and others? How many weavers live there? What quantity of yarn is spun and woven in the Ashram every month? Can you say that the quality of yarn has improved in any degree?

Do you know what happened to the books which I had brought with me from England?

Putting this letter under the pad, I discover that I forgot to enclose the talk on Chapter XIV\textsuperscript{1}. I send it today.

Premabehn says in her letter that you have spoiled your health somewhat by eating ground-nuts. I strongly advise you not to eat them. If at all you wish to eat nuts which contain oil, you may eat only almonds. I would not advise you to eat any other nuts. The maximum quantity of almonds which you can eat is five tolas. If you are not taking any other nourishing food, five tolas of almonds will not be too expensive. The best course for you, of course, seems to be that you should take the diet of milk, fruit and uncooked vegetables which I have suggested to Kusum, provided, that is, you do not wish to eat rotli, etc. Alternatively, , milk or curds and some quantity of uncooked vegetables will form a perfect diet. If, occasionally, you drop rotli and milk, that will certainly help. You can live for two or three days on fruit alone. At that time, you should not eat nuts.

\textsuperscript{1} Vide "Letter to Naradas Gandhi", 23/25,9,1932
Modern researches show that man needs very little of rich foods such as milk, pulses, etc. It has been proved, one may say, that most diseases have their origin in rich, fatty and starchy foods.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8204. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

290. LETTER TO H. W. EMERSON

Y.C.P.

January 27, 1932

DEAR MR. EMERSON,

After the receipt of your very frank and good letter received by me in London, I had not expected the turn the events took on my landing. I suppose I am right in thinking that yours is the brain working behind this repression. If my surmise is correct, I should not perhaps be shocked at anything that is happening. For did you not tell me in Delhi that you could hit hard in fight, as you could be perfectly warm in friendship? I am not going to consider you as an enemy. Hence this letter. I hope you will not regard it as an impertinence. Did I not tell you in Simla that after all we had to convert the I.C.S. rather than the English people as a whole? I do not despair. Civil Resistance is a method of conversion. Behind it there is no ill will.

Perhaps you have seen my letter to the Viceroy sent some days ago. Last week I wrote to the Governor of Bombay.

If the fact of the Government blunder is not recognized and repression must continue its mapped course are some of the things that are said to be happening necessary? One reads in the newspapers that notwithstanding denials, things are the worst in the Frontier Province. If they are not, why this expulsion of Father Elwin, a cultured Englishman, and of Miss Naoroji, who is no immature girl but a woman of high attainments past 30? She is more English than Indian, having been brought up as a child under English influences. She is no politician. She is a polished singer. Love of the country has drawn her to the struggle, as conviction of British misrule in India has drawn Father Elwin to the Indian cause. You ought not to repel the advances of such men and women. Try and see them. They are no fanatics. I must confess that I am filled with the greatest misgivings about the happenings in the Frontier Province. How I wish my misgivings were wholly unjustified, I would need very strong evidence to allay my worst fears.

I now come nearer home. Horses were run over an absolutely peaceful meeting in Ahmedabad. I observe that one of the injured boys has just died. I know some of the Ashram boys had severe injuries done to them. And I am glad that they had them rather than unknown boys or men. In Madras one youngster has succumbed to lathi blows. There they play hose pipes even on women. Two women are reported to have fainted through the force of the jet of water.

As Mrs. Gandhi is reported to have said justly at her trial, what is the use of women like her or men like Sardar Vallabhbhai and me being pampered prisoners when others who, being misled, as you would say by us, break laws and suffer lathi blows or worse? I do really think that there is much in what The Daily Express says when it suggests that I as the author of “all this mischief” should be sent to the gallows.

Does it not strike you that there is something terribly wrong with a Government that has to declare a thousand associations unlawful? How is it possible to crush a movement which has taken such deep root? You have suppressed social and economic activities. You have taken possession of school buildings, hospitals, khadi depots, a library that contains valuable research and religious works. Is that what you meant by hitting hard?

I fear you have undone Lord Irwin’s work. I had come with the fullest desire to tender co-operation, if it was at all possible. You should have seen me, reasoned with me and if you had found me wilfully obstinate, you might have taken such course as you had thought necessary. As it is, I cannot help feeling that you took a course which I should not have thought you to be capable of taking.

I plead: retrace your steps. Some day there is no doubt there will be negotiation if not between the present Government and the present Congressmen, then between our successors. Let us not do anything that will make them meet with bitterness in their souls. I can say for myself with the clearest possible conscience that I have done nothig to embitter the relations. If you too can say likewise, I can only say let an impartial authority judge between us. In any case, breath in me I shall long for co-operation even through my non-co-operation. I do not believe in a make-believe co-operation.

You will please pardon me for this long letter. If it is an infliction, you are to blame, for you allowed me to think that we had become good friends. I have exercised the privilege of a friend.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

291. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

January 27, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. Mirabehn and others came and saw me. As requested by Mahavir in his letter, send the family to Darjeeling and give them money for the expenses there. Tell Valjibhai that he can send the translations1 to me. I will see if they permit me to return them revised. My compliments to Surendra. He does not seem to have been hurt much.

The rest next week. You must have received the letter2 which I posted today. I sent with it the talk on Chapter XIV which I had omitted.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. NARANDAS GANDHI
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM
SABARMATI

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8205. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Of the discourses on the Ashram vows, which Gandhiji wrote weekly in his letters to Satyagraha Ashram during his detention in Yeravda Prison in 1930. The first in the series was written in July 22, 1930; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”. These were first published in Gujarati under the title Vratavichar and later under the title Mangal Prabhat.
2 Vide the preceding item.
292. A LETTER

January 28, 1932

MY DEAR,

You are right about the repetition of the prayers by some without knowing the meaning. Effort has been often made to remove the defect. But in a place which has a floating population, the task is difficult. A prayerful repetition is itself not a bad thing. It is like music that has no words. The music has its own distinct effect apart from words. This defence is good only where there is no hypocrisy and the mind is properly attuned.

If I am not mistaken the remains of food is not given to the cattle because it is not good for their health. They are scientifically fed. Burial is not waste. The food turns to manure. The real remedy is that there is no waste. We try to live the life of the poor and hence we should take in our dishes no more than we need. I know there are many difficulties.

Yours,

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8920. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

293. A LETTER

January 28, 1932

BHAI.

What further explanation do you want beyond what I have given in my writings on the Gita? Thoughts occur only in a vikari mind. The word vikar should be understood here in a very wide sense. Vikar means change of state. Even pure thoughts do not arise in a state of samadhi, and yet it is not a state of utter inertness. God does not think, because he is nirvikar\(^1\). Absence of thoughts does not mean a state of inertness, it means pure consciousness. This is a state which cannot be described but can only be experienced. I don’t mean to say, however, that I have experienced it. I believe in it through faith. I may even say that I have had a faint glimpse of it.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8907. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

\(^1\) Not subject to vikar
294. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIĐYA

January 28, 1932

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I got your letter. I am not surprised at what is happening today. I had expected it all. Much worse will follow yet. Didn’t Sudhanva have to jump into a pan of boiling oil to prove his faith? Sita had to enter the flames, and Prahlad was forced to embrace a red-hot pillar. He whose faith in God is perfect has no limit to his endurance. God provides sufficient food alike to the elephant and the ant according to the need of each. There is a verse in the Gita which says: “In whatever way men resort to Me, even so do I render to them.” This is what it means: “I give to the people in proportion to the faith with which they worship Me.” If you draw water from a well with a cup, you will get a cupful and, if you draw with a pitcher, you will draw a pitcherful.

Chanchalbehn has done good work indeed. I am writing to her. Go and give the letter to her or read it out to her. It should not be published.²

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

295. LETTER TO LAKSHMIBEHN N. KHARE

January 28, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMIBEHN,

Do not forget me altogether. Write to me occasionally. How are you? Why does Mathuri remain weak?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati. C.W. 279. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

¹ IV, 11
² Vide also “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 1-2-11932
296. LETTER TO AMINA G. QUERESHI

January 28, 1932

CHI. AMINA,

I got your letter. Noorbanu also gave me news about you yesterday. I am sure that you two will do full honour to the position which Father held. May God grant long life to you both. I do know your courage.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6660. Also C.W. 4305. Courtesy: Hamid Qureshi

297. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARikh

January 28, 1932

CHI. MANIBEHN,

Do you feel happy there? Can you hear better now? Does anybody stay in the Vidyapith? How is Narahari?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5965. Also C.W. 3282. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

298. LETTER TO SHAKARIBEHN C. SHAH

January 28, 1932

CHI. SHAKARIBEHN1,

No woman need spare me while I am here. When I am outside, anybody writing to me may increase my burden. But while I am here you can make up for your previous [self-restraint]. Do, therefore, write to me. Is your mind at peace now? Why is it that Babu2 remains weak?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 29

1 Wife of Chimanlal Shah
2 Addressee’s daughter, Sharda
299. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI G. PATEL

January 28, 1932

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

How are you getting along? Write to me in detail.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 422. Courtesy: Shivabhai G. Patel

300. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

January 28, 1932

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. I like the views of Krishnadas. I would like him to stay with you. But the occasion is inopportune. The dissociation of Krishnadas from Wardha is looked upon by official guests, viz., Jamnalal, Vinoba and others as a betrayal of trust. I believe that he cannot give up the work he has undertaken unless he can do so in normal course. Ultimately, his inner self will help him get peace of mind. He would not get that by change of work. My advice therefore is let Krishnadas stick to his views, but he should not put them in practice. It seldom happens that what we like is also good for us. I feel it is true in the case of Krishnadas but such opportunity should be welcomed when it comes in the normal course. I am of the opinion that at present we cannot even ask Jamnalal and Vinoba and cause them inconvenience. I have formed my opinion according to my understanding of the situation based on the facts you have put before me. Let me know if there is a misunderstanding on my part or some facts are left out. If there is no misunderstanding, send this reply to Krishnadas. If the misunderstanding persists, ask me again.

We can ask Jamnalal or Mathuradas for the money for Almora. We should wind it up if we can. And if it is better to postpone it, you may do that. I cannot give any definite decision from here. You will have to run away when the summer comes. We will incur expenses but that cannot be helped. You are rendering whatever service you can. We should put up with it when the public malign us but have to be very cautious when our own heart takes exception to it.
I understand about the other answers. You are disappointed with yourself, I am not. I believe things have not gone out of our hands as long as you can prevent yourself from putting your views into practice. There is no scope for pessimism as long as we refuse to entertain such thoughts and keep on fighting them.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32943

301. LETTER TO BUDHABHAI

[Before January 29, 1932]¹

CHI. BUDHABHAI,

The complaint Parvati has made in her long letter seems to be true. You beat and abused her and then went on a fast as penance. If this is true, it is bad. Even if you regard Parvati as your wife, our dharma treats it as sin for anyone to raise his hand against his wife. Nor should you have abused her. And having accepted her as a sister, how can you even frown at her? She is as free as you or I. She may go wherever she likes and do whatever she likes. As long as she observes dharma, she may either stay with you or separately from you. You should fix a liberal allowance for her maintenance as you would for a younger sister. It is all right if you went on a fast, but do not value it too highly.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33125

¹ In his letter to the addressee dated January 29, 1932, vide (the following item) Gandhiji says that the ill-feeling between him and Parvati still persisted. Evidently this letter was written before the letter of January 29.
302. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA P. KAMDAR

January 29, 1932

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA,

I hear from Rasik that you gave birth to a child but the baby died after four months. That is what our life is like. All children born do not live, and even those that live will die some day. Need I, therefore, console you? Moreover, the children by the first wife are yours, aren’t they? If the baby had lived, you would certainly have had my blessings for it. I would have been happy if you had come to see me. We shall meet now when God wills. Meanwhile, write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

If you wish, you may write to me directly.

303. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

January 29, 1932

CHI. JANAKIBEHN,

I could only look at you and didn’t get time to speak even one word to you. Well, I have time enough now to write. You also should now write to me as long as you are free. In which prison is Kamalmayan’ lodged? How is he? Ask Madalasa’ and Om’ to write to me. How do you keep?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

As you know, Sardar is with me. We pass our time quite happily. We eat and sleep and pace up and down.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2894

1 Addressee’s son
2 Addressee’s daughters
3 Sushila Gandhi’s younger sister
304. LETTER TO NILKANTH B. MASHRUWALA

January 29, 1932

CHI. NILKANTH,

I got your letter. What is Kishorelal’s diet? The copy of Young India has come with me here. Most probably Gandhi Vichar Dohan also is with me. I cannot revise it from here and return it. Let the thing, therefore, be printed as it is. Are all the prisoners kept together? Request Nathji to visit the Ashram off and on. How is his eczema? How often can you see Kishorelal? Where is Tara? How is she?

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Who is Lakhu? I don’t remember him.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9419. Courtesy: Nilkanth B. Mashruwala

305. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

January 29, 1932

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I got the letter you wrote from Siwan. I also received subsequently your earlier letter. I hope you get my letters. Tell Swarupraniji1 that she should not feel worried at all because Swarup2 and Krishna3 have left. God protects all his creatures. How is her health? My diet is practically the same as it was when I was out of jail. The weight is 106 pounds. Sardar Vallabhbhai is with me. Both of us are quite well. Do you read any newspapers?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3423

1 Jawaharlal Nehru’s mother
2 Vijayalakshmi Pandit and her sister
3 ibid
306. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
January 29, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

I learn from Anand’s letter that both of you will have by now reached Hyderabad. I am sorry I could not talk to you at length. I hope your mind is at peace. How is your health? Keep writing to me. Where is Dr. Choithram? Do you occasionally go to Jairamdas’s? How is everyone there?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

307. LETTER TO BUDHABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
January 29, 1932

CHI. BUDHABHAI,

I see that the ill-feeling between you and Parvati still persists. It is not right to stop speaking with Parvati, nor with the children. Sooner or later, you will have to win her over with love and even when she abuses you. Write to me and tell me what the trouble is. What are your present activities? How do you keep?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33124

308. LETTER TO DR. B. C. ROY

December 30, 1932

DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

I have your great and good letter quite worthy of you. I love and accept your correction, and say with you that we are near to each other; and since we are near to each other, let me say that my letter had no complaint behind it. It simply went out as an advice in order to secure what I thought would be a better working of the organization, and I expected you, as a friend, if my advice did not find any response within your breast, to say plainly to me, ‘You do not know the situation, and therefore I do not accept your advice.’ Of course, your reply said the same thing, but in an unexpectedly different manner, but that is all dead and gone. After having tendered you my apology, I had dismissed the incident from my mind, but you have revived the memory, and now rendered it sacred by your generous letter.

I am glad of the news you give me about your distinguished patients. It is quite like Baby to have placed her flat at Kamala’s disposal.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 18493

309. A LETTER

January 30, 1932

CHI.,

I got your letter. If you wish and if your health permits, you may certainly come. But please don’t feel that it is your duty to come. Where one atman is united with another, there is little need to express their unity through physical means. I realize daily from experience that we cannot give and receive through physical presence what we can indirectly through the heart.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8921. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

310. A LETTER

January 30, 1932

CHI.,

I got your letter. The Ashram exists in our hearts as much as it does on the bank of the Sabarmati. The Ashram on the bank of the Sabarmati can be seized by the Government or be swept away in the flood or be robbed, but no one can rob or burn the one in our hearts. That is the real Ashram. Live in Bombay with that in your heart, and observe whatever rules your health permits. The principal vows can be observed whatever the condition of one’s health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8922. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

311. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

January 30, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

You have improved your handwriting very much indeed. What about Gitaji? Have you learnt by heart all the chapters? Who else has done so? Lakdi\(^1\) and ladki\(^2\) don’t sound very different from each other, so I can say that a lakdi is also a ladki.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4073. Also G.W. 37. Courtesy: Mangala B. Desai

312. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI M. THAKKAR

January 30, 1932

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

I have your letter.

It is probable that the gas trouble is caused by milk. Try the following. Take curds instead of milk, but not more than half a seer at a time. Add ten grains of soda bicarb to the curds. You may take one and a half seers of curds during the whole day. You can then take one and a half seers of dates. But they also should not exceed half a seer at a time. As the dates are likely to have been soiled, you should wash them before eating. There is no harm in mixing them with the curds after washing and taking out their stones. Remember that dates will need time to get softened in curds. In addition, take also the raw vegetables I mentioned earlier, but very little of them. You will certainly feel thirsty between meals. You may then take water with

\(^1\) A stick
\(^2\) A girl beloved by the family
soda bicarb and lemon-juice added to it. This will stop the gas and the body will feel light. Dates never cause gas. Probably it is caused by milk. If the curds cause constipation, take milk once instead of curds. If the milk is fresh and cold, you may soak dates in it also and eat them. They will get soft only if you let them soak for some time. If you eat them soon after putting them in cold milk, you will not find them soft. Dates cannot help you to become fat, but the milk might. One cannot live on dates alone for many days, if one wants to do physical labour. In the letter to Madhavji I mentioned one seer of dates, and this letter is an amendment of that since here I have suggested one and a half seers of curds or milk in place of three seers of milk.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

[PS.]
It is not necessary that you must take the things in the quantities I have mentioned. If you find either of them excessive, you may reduce it. Remember that seer here means 40 tolas.

Ask me about anything that is still not clear to you. Why should you refer to Madhavji always as Shriyut and not as Madhavji.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6819

313. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS
January 30, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I could give to you some more reminiscences of Miss Doris’s school, about which I wrote to you last week. But I will leave that subject today and write about [Madame] Montessori’s schoolchildren. Montessori is an aged lady. She has dedicated her life to children’s education. She is an Italian lady. Learn from your teachers where Italy is and how its government is run. Keep the map of Europe before you. In the map it looks like a fat leg which has separated from the rest of the body.

But let us leave that and return to the school of the learned Madame Montessori. The lady happened to be in England, where they were holding a conference of all teachers who followed her method. She invited me to it and explained to me how and what they taught the children. The most important thing was that the children felt no burden of learning as they learnt everything as they played. Secondly, the aim is to develop all the senses and organs of the child, that is, its hands, feet, nose, ears, tongue, skin and the mind, and they have very carefully planned a teaching programme with that aim in view. In the programme very little place is given to memorizing. Music has an important place, and it accompanies physical exercises also. They teach dancing too, and it gives plenty of exercise to the body. The children do most of the things by themselves and learn without effort to concentrate attention. The thing I liked most in their method was that they trained children to observe silence and concentrate. This is how they do it. The children sit with closed eyes, the teacher speaks in a voice no louder than a whisper into one’s ear and children strain their ears to hear what she says. As soon as any child hears it, it goes over on its toes and sits by the side of the teacher. Till all the children have done this one after another, everyone is to remain sitting and keep silent. You, too, should try this.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

314. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

_January 30, 1932_

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. Has the trunk of books which I brought with me arrived there? Does anybody live in the Vidyapith? Does anyone take care of the books or is everything falling into ruin? Many of the monthlies too are worth preserving. It is desirable that there should be one whole-time person to look after the books assisted by two others. If this is not possible, we should not have allowed the library to grow so large. It is the duty of the Vidyapith to make this arrangement. It is not our job. It is because this was not our work that we started the Vidyapith, otherwise we would have turned the Ashram itself into a Vidyapith. The work does not lie within the Ashram’s sphere of activities at all. Its work is primarily internal, and the Vidyapith’s is primarily external, and so it ought to be. The aims of both are the same but their activities are different. In the Ashram, therefore, we should keep only such books as we require for our purpose. Other books that we may need, we should borrow from the Vidyapith. All this, however, when we settle down again to our normal activities. Just now everything is being swept away by a flood, and that is all to the good. When the flood has subsided, don’t we have a wide expanse of water, clear as crystal?

I remember the Nag Panchami festival, and I adhere to the reply which I gave on that occasion. Haven’t I compared the breaking of heads to the explosion of crackers? Anyone who knows the nature of the atman will believe that to be literally so. If the atman never perishes, what does it matter that the houses it inhabits perish or that the garments which it puts on wear out and decay? Moreover, the atman is eternally perfect and so it can never lack a house to inhabit. If we but know the truth, it needs none. But all this is true only with reference to oneself. So long, therefore, as our own heads are being broken, we should think that crackers are exploding. Don’t ask me how the atman can make a distinction between one’s own and another’s. So long as the body endures, we must assume this distinction in all our actions. As we die to ourselves, the distinction between one’s own and another’s loses its force for us, but so long as we go on killing others, the distinction becomes stronger. As the children gradually understand this truth, they too, like the young men in the Ashram, will become wise. But that requires patience on our part. In this connection, read my letter¹ to the children.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10270. Also C.W. 6718. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

¹ Vide the preceding item.
315. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

January 30, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

Why don’t you write to me? How are you? In what form are you? With whom have you made friends? Which of them do you like most? Where do you live?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9420. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel

316. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

January 30, 1932

DEAR SISTERS,

I wish to write to you today about a lady. Her name is Maude Royden. She is an old woman. She has remained unmarried. She was the first woman in England to obtain the highest degree in theology. Besides her, there has been only one other woman who has obtained that degree. I am saying this not to show that theology is a very difficult subject, though it certainly is that. My point is that few women have been attracted to it. It does not help one to acquire status or importance in the world. Not only has Maude Royden studied the subject so deeply, but she has also dedicated her life to the service of the poor. Like Miss Muriel, she too makes no distinction between whites and non-whites. Through her own efforts she got a church built, which gives shelter to the poor and in which they hold their meetings. These services have brought the lady great honour. People valued her learning very little, but her services to the poor have made the lady very famous. She is also a powerful speaker, and in her character she is above all reproach. She relies on herself in all her activities and does not regard herself a weak and helpless woman. She has travelled widely and gathered much experience. Perhaps she may even come here to help us in our work. The main question before her will be whether she can be free from her present work.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II
317. A LETTER

January 30, 1932

CHI,

Ashram inmates should in no case be invited to a wedding celebration; how can people aspiring to observe brahmacharya have anything to do with weddings? Therefore you must keep yourself away in every respect from that wedding. Be firm in your reply.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 8923. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

318. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

January 31, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

It seems but yesterday that you all came.

I am glad you are coming in such close touch with Radha. She has in her the making of a good woman. You tell me you are not able to keep your evening prayer hours. If so, you should shift the hour and keep it regularly, just giving a few seconds to the thought at the Ashram prayer time. This is merely by way of suggestion. You know best how to manage the thing.

Please tell Nargisbehn to write to me and tell me all about the other three sisters.

We are still keeping well. I still need as much sleep as I can get or would take.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6213. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9679
319. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

January 31, 1932

CHI. TARAMATI,

I hope you are not upset because of the absence of Mathuradas. How is Dilip? Do write to me. Did you visit Mathuradas? Where is he? What does he get to eat? How is his health?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

320. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

January 31, 1932

CHI. NIMU,

Why are you tardy in writing to me. Do you feel lost because of Ramdas having gone to jail? How do you spend your time? How is the child? Does he give trouble? Does he also suffer from constipation? How do you keep? Do you go out for walks?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
321. LETTER TO K. RAMACHANDRA

January 31, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am sorry for the complication that has arisen there with reference to the temple-entry question. I have no doubt whatsoever that whilst a non-Hindu may sympathize with the reform movement, he cannot and ought not to take part in any direct action.

Yours sincerely,

S. K. RAMACHANDRA
SRI WICKRAMA
WELAWATTE
COLOMBO

From a microfilm: S.N. 18494

322. LETTER TO GOPALA MENON

January 31, 1932

MY DEAR GOPALA MENON,

I have your letter of the 26th instant. Now that the fast is off for the time being, I shall watch what work Kerala is going to put in.

The taking of signatures to the memorial is, I hope, proceeding apace. You should report the number taken from day to day. You must have fixed a time limit.

The work of educating public opinion should continue side by side with constructive work amongst the Harijans.

Yours sincerely

From a microfilm: S.N. 18495
323. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Night, January 28/February 1, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I feel that my right hand will not give good service for long, and so I intend to use both hands. It will take more time, of course. But I should not want time here. I will give less time to other work. I have written a letter to Chanchalbehn whose son Visu died the other day. That letter should not be published or talked about. My actions are governed by mutual trust. I do nothing without the knowledge of the authorities. I will talk to them about this letter. There seems nothing wrong to me in writing a letter of condolence. But it would be wrong if such a letter were published. That would be propaganda. That is why I have asked Gangabehn¹ to show that letter to Chanchalbehn and then bring it back with her. No letter of mine is intended for publication in newspapers. There is nothing wrong, though, in your publishing in the “Ashram Samachar” extracts from them containing moral discussions or news about our health.

Parnerkar does not seem to have calmed down. I believe that the problem before him is certainly a moral one. Call him to you and comfort him. Ultimately, of course, you will do what you think best.

I don’t look upon the orchard as a white elephant. It is a useful investment. The money that is spent on it will not, in the long run, have been wasted. An orchard always increases the value of the land, helps the soil to retain moisture and cools the air. This is a universal experience. The choice of trees to be planted may of course require thinking. I have only stated a general principle. Obtain Prof. Trivedi’s opinion. He has seen the plot of land. Send him a list of the plants and the number of each. Ask him if he can throw some light. Write also to Prof. Higginbottom. Pattanisaheb must have employed a curator. You may seek his assistance, too. It is possible, however, that under the present pressure of work, you will not get time to think about all this. If that is so, ignore my suggestions. Totaramji is everybody to us and we should be content with what he can do.

Where is Somabhai? And Bhansali? Have you any news of Lilabehn? How is Hasmukhram?

¹ Vide “Letter to Gangabehn Vaidya”, 28-1-1932

VOL.54: 13 OCTOBER, 1931 - 8 FEBRUARY, 1932 435
I got your second letter today. Do not send by post the leather for repairing the soles of sandals. Anyone who may come to see us may bring it along with him. I see great risk in keeping . . . alone with . . . . She may have exaggerated in her letter, but . . . is not responsible for himself. How can one say when he will have a fit of madness? If you keep . . . with him, a responsible person should stay with them. If . . . can control . . ., he may stay with them. Or somebody else. The position would have been different if . . . had strength of her own to stay with . . . . Moreover, . . . is a slave of passion. If, under the urge of passion, he assaults . . . and she becomes pregnant, that too would be a painful matter. Think over all this and do what you think best. I have written this because I know that you can bear the burden of every kind of responsibility.

Do they permit food to be supplied to Abbas Saheb from outside? Do we supply any? How is Mridula’s condition? Is the newspaper report about Ranchhodbhai correct?

I am writing to both Budhabhai and Parvati. Is Nanibehn there?

Night, February 1, 1932

Anyone who proposes to come and see me should first see Dahyabhai or know from him if he has any message to send. This should be done so that both may not come here and Dahyabhai may be able to send a message if he wishes to.

There are 57 letters this time, not counting yours and the talk on the Gita.

Blessings from
BAPU

At night, February 1, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

Please ask the women and find out whether they understand the purport of the accompanying summary and let me know. On further reflection I see that I should make a third attempt and give a

1 The names have been omitted.
2 ibid
3 ibid

436 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
still easier summary. I do not know whether I shall be able to do that, but it may help me if I see some criticism of what I am about to complete.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8206. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

324. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

Silence Day [January-February, 1932]¹

CHI. JANAKIBEHN,

How are you? Have you kept up your courage? How is Madalasa? Do not worry about Kamalnayan. Haven’t you learnt from Vinoba’s Talks on the Gita that one should not worry about anything?

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 83

325. LETTER TO MARCHIONESS CARLA VITELLESCHI

February 2, 1932

DEAR CARLA,

I got your letter. Yes, you are right. Had I not felt for you as for my own daughter, I would not have spoken to you as strongly as I did that morning. I am now glad of the step you have taken. I am quite sure that your place is by your husband’s side. You must shake off your uncertainty and wavering nature.

You may write whenever you feel like it.

May God give you light and peace.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

¹ As given in the source
[PS.]

Not remembering your full name I am addressing the envelope by your maiden name.

MADAM CARLA
HOTEL DES INGENIEURS
52 RUE BLANCHE
PARIS-MONTMARTRE, FRANCE

From a photostat: G.N. 2511

326. LETTER TO PREMLILA THACKERSEY

February 2, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

There is a stream of gifts from you. I understand the love behind them. But have mercy on me. Both of us get here all that we want. The money which they spend on us here is also people’s money. I will not hesitate to ask you for anything that I need. I sent a message through . . .¹ requesting you not to go on sending fruits, etc. But parcels continue, and that is why this letter. I ate for many days the honey which you had given me for the voyage. It was excellent.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

LADY VITHALDAS THACKERSEY
YERAVDA HILL

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4821. Courtesy: Premlila Thackersey

327. LETTER TO NANIBEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
February 2, 1932

CHI. NANIBEHN JHAVERI,

I have your letter. Your handwriting has improved a great deal. You have also come up, and are coming up, nicely. Have patience.

¹ Omission as in the source
It is ignorance to think ‘I do, I do.’
Even as that of the dog walking under the cart.

Believing that we are the doers can lead to much trouble, for we do nothing at all. We sing:
I move as He moves me,
I am pierced by the rapier of love.
Does the song¹ also not convey the same meaning?
Do you remember the words: “I bring attainment and possession of what has been attained”? May God protect you.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Manavtana Prahari—Pannalal Jhaveri, pp. 25-6

328. LETTER TO P. G. MATHEW
February 3, 1932

MY DEAR MATHEW,

Your letter. You are as shy as ever I see. Do shake it off and write freely.
I am glad you are looking after Tilak and took charge also of Bharatan.
You must try and write a few lines to me in Hindi. Parsuram tells me you have made progress.
Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1548

¹ By Mirabai
² Bhagavad Gita, IX. 22
329. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

February 3, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

I have your letter. Your handwriting is good. Your weight is far too little. You can sit in the sun after 8 a.m. Before that, you must cover yourself. As the heat increases and if you don’t feel cold, you can remove the clothes and massage the body. By doing this you will not feel the chill. You may not take cod-liver oil during Gangabehn’s treatment but you can massage the body with it. They say that too helps.

How much milk do you take?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9905. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

330. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

February 3, 1932

BHAII VALJI,

No one in the Ashram can keep a parrot in a cage.

If someone happens to do it, the manager will free the parrot which is bound to fly away once it gets an opportunity.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: C.W. 7418. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai
331. A LETTER

February 3, 1932

Bhai,

Whatever you do, do it not only with truth and ahimsa but in the spirit of surrendering all to God and of pure service.

Blessings from
Bapu

From Hindi: C.W. 8932. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

332. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised February 4, 1932

Chi. Mira,

I have your letter. I propose to post this directly. The account Damodardas gave me of your health disturbed me. He tells me, and your letter confirms that you are working at feverish heat.\(^1\) You ought to slow down. You can’t keep up till midnight always and get up at 4 a.m. If work till midnight is a necessity, you should rest fully immediately after prayer.\(^2\)

And if a weekly visit to Yeravda will soothe your nerves, you must come every week. I have put no embargo. I simply pointed out my own feeling in the matter. A prisoner is a prisoner. As it is, the authorities allow weekly visits and I can as yet see no reason not to avail myself of the permission. But it is at best a precarious privilege not worth making much of. Self-control is the best thing for a prisoner and his friends and dear ones. But self-control to be self-control must brace one up. It becomes mechanical or superimposed when it unnerves or saddens one. You will come sparingly only if you see the beauty of self-restraint and having seen

\(^1\) “I was busy collecting all the authentic news I could regarding the civil disobedience movement. This I selected and edited and sent abroad in cyclostyled copies.”—Mirabehn

\(^2\) “4 a.m. was the usual prayer time.”—Mirabehn it, exercise it naturally. If it depresses you, know that the effort is strained and unnatural for you. In that case, you should come without the slightest hesitation.

I have gained 1 lb. in weight. It is now 107 lb. Vallabhbhai is steady at 144 lb. Honey will come in useful.

I had a brief note from the Privats.

Who are the ladies in the household now?

My love to Nargisbehn, Jalbhai and Kamala. Is Kamala not going to Panchgani?

Do not expect another letter from me through the Ashram post.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6214. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9680

333. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

February 4, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA.

There are indeed some persons who shed tears when they are happy and smile when they suffer. Our effort should be not to shed tears or smile in either condition.

On what subjects have you written compositions? Which poems do you like best in the text for the seventh form?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9463

334. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

February 5, 1932

CHI. MIRA.

After all I have an excuse for writing to you again.

Do you know what happened to the toys that Doris’s children had sent me and which I had asked you to keep for our children? If you know where they are and if they can be easily traced, let the children have them.

1 Mahadev Desai’s step-sister
Another thing is about the case containing books. Do you know if Pyarelal or Mahadev sent the case to the Ashram or the Vidyapith? Perhaps Manilal knows. If you have no time to think of this, much less to attend to it, do not bother.

I hope you got my letter directly that I wrote to you yesterday. This though being written today (Friday) will be posted only on Tuesday.

Remember, please, that you will share with the Ashram the letters. I may write to you directly.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6215. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9681

335. LETTER TO M. G. BHANDARI

February 5, 1932

DEAR MAJOR BHANDARI,

I observe that you have over two hundred civil resistance prisoners in the extension. Many of these are intimate co-workers. I knew that you had already several from Poona but as they were important public men, I did not ask for meeting them. But with regard to the large number now admitted, an occasional meeting with them is a human want I may not resist. Exactly the same question occurred last year and after talks with Major Martin and then Major Doyle, permission was given to me to see these prisoners occasionally and in small batches of two or three. I repeat the request and I hope that the authorities will have no objection to my seeing these fellow-prisoners and workers, subject of course to the same restrictions as last year.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 5131

1 Vide"Letter to Mirabehn", 4-2-1932
2 Superintendent, Yeravda Central Prison
336. LETTER TO ABBAS

February 5, 1932

CHI. ABBAS,

I got your letter. Your description of a bamboo spinning wheel is very fine. The wheel seems very cheap. Personally, I find the portable Gandiva\(^1\) very convenient and easy to work. Has your speed of spinning improved appreciably? I understand what you say about carding. Has any improvement been effected in the ginning machine? What is the highest count of the yarn from which we can weave khadi now?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6306

337. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

February 5, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I got the letter written by Kanu on behalf of you all.

By now you ought to have acquired a sense of duty. You ought to follow all the rules laid down for you. No one should resign the responsibility which he has undertaken. The authority going with it should be for us a means for doing greater service and learning greater self-control, and, therefore, no one should resign his post of service in a hurry. The atonements fixed by you for a breach of the various rules are good. See that you now stick to them. I will complete today the description of Miss Doris’s school by telling you something which I had left out in my previous letter\(^2\). Once the children had arranged a social gathering. In England it is common for people to meet and have tea with something to eat. At this gathering there was an exhibition of things made by the children. The children were to play the games for the guests to see and were to serve tea to the gathering. And they did all this without any confusion and without the least noise. The items displayed included dances, physical exercises and some dramatic pieces. It was a very fine sight to watch these small

---

\(^1\) A type of spinning-wheel

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Ashram Boys and Girls”, 25-1-1932 children serving tea to the whole gathering. Remember that all these children were under eight years of age. It was no small thing for them to go round with tea-cups and bread, etc., in a tray and serve guests. And I did not notice any child spilling anything. Excellent also were their drawings, their sewing and knitting work, etc. They had made an album for me, which I have of course brought for you. But all these things remain with me. One of you should write a letter to these children. He may write it in Gujarati or in Hindi, and somebody may translate it for you into English and you may send the original letter together with the translation.

The Address is:
C/o Miss Doris Lester
Children’s House
London East

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8927. Courtesy:
Narandas Gandhi

338. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

February 5, 1932

DEAR SISTERS,

Only a few of you are now left there. But there is an ebb and flow in all things in the world. Mother Gita teaches us to remain unaffected by rise and fall, sunshine and cold, or happiness and misery. We are at present getting an object-lesson in the Mother’s teaching. If all of you learn it well, our trust in the Gita will have borne fruit. I have observed that in certain respects people in Europe act according to the teaching of the Gita without knowing it. Just now I remember only one thing, and I will describe it to you. Whenever I went out of London I used to put up with friends, who may be said to be well-to-do. I saw that the servants at their places lived not as servants but as members of the family. They did not put an excessive burden of work on the servants, but worked side by side with them. If anybody had to get up early in the morning, he would not disturb the servant from his sleep but attend to the work himself. At several places I found the servants to have been with the family for many years. In almost every family they introduced me to their servants. Their love of cleanliness was wonderful. On seeing all this, my respect for the friends increased very much. Is it any wonder that these servants should be well paid? I at any rate feel that we ought to admit that we have not reached this level in our relations with our servants. Don’t you agree? This is the yoga of cultivating equality. Arjuna told the Lord how difficult it was, and He replied that, though difficult, it could be learnt through patient effort and cultivation of disinterestedness. We should try and learn it.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8928. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

339. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

_February 5, 1932_

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

I got your letter. I see that you are devoting your time to good work. Write to me regularly from wherever you may be. If God protects even ants, surely He will not leave us unprotected. He is the Creator, the Destroyer and the Preserver. That is why He preserves even while destroying.

I have nothing particular to say about ourselves. We eat and walk and sleep, that goes without saying. In between we read, spin, etc.

Wherever you may be, do not forget to pray daily.

If you can recite no other prayer, you can do at least the Ramadhn.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne_, p. 63. Also C.W. 8790. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya
340. A LETTER

February 5, 1932

CHI.,

It seems, you are destined to remain delicate all your life. That certainly ought not to be. I see that you have given up worrying about your health. From one point of view, it is good. But giving up worrying should not mean that you should make no attempt to improve it. Daily doses of medicines are not the right remedy. Change of diet and exercise are bound to cure constipation. Which food and which exercises will suit you is for you to find out.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8930. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

341. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

February 5, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. Sardar has really given up tea. I knew that he had given up the morning tea. He used to have a cup at ten. Now he has given up that too. I knew this after he had done so. I didn’t say a single word to him. He has acted of his own free will.

It was not my intention to state that I had sent English toys for the children. If that is what I did, I made a slip. What I wished to say was that I had brought some toys. Now I don’t know when I would be able to give them. They were in Mirabehn’s custody. Perhaps she will remember where they are kept.

The books were in a trunk. Either Mirabehn or Pyarelal would know about them. If you lift and feel the weight of the trunk which has not been opened, you will know whether it contains books or something else. Perhaps Mahadev knows about it.

This is what is meant by seeming inconsistency. An apparent inconsistency either in my life or in the affairs of the Ashram can be explained. There is only an appearance of inconsistency in the action of a person who wraps up his body in winter and keeps it uncovered in summer. He obeys the same principle both when he covers the body and when he leaves it uncovered. Many such seeming inconsistencies can be properly explained. Other inconsistencies are such in fact. They are due to my or Ashram’s weaknesses. They should be regarded as moral deficiencies and every effort should be made to overcome them. Which inconsistencies are really such and which are only apparent ones can be decided only when we examine all of them one by one. If you wish to ask me about any inconsistencies which you may have noticed, please do.

No one hates another without a cause. Hence, non-violence lies in loving a person, feeling compassion for him and serving him even when he has given us cause for hating him. There is no non-violence in loving a person who loves us; that is but the law of the world. Non-violence may be described as making a gift. Giving love in return for love is no more than doing one’s duty.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10271. Also C.W. 6719. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

342. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

February 5, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

I should pull your nose from here for having spent so many days before finding time to write to me. Here, take it. Just now it is eight o’clock at night on Friday. Write to me and tell me whether you felt the nose pulled. For you, the handwriting in your letter was good. Make it still better. How far have you come up in the Gita?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3978
343. LETTER TO RAMANANDA CHATTERJEE

February 6, 1932

DEAR RAMANANDA BABU,

Many thanks for The Modern Review.¹ Do please send me The Golden Book of Tagore. It will be allowed. My love to Gurudev when you meet him.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SIT. RAMANAND CHATTERJEE

“[THE] MODERN REVIEW”

UPPER CIRCULAR ROAD, CALCUTTA

From the original: C.W. 9501. Courtesy: Santa Devi

344. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

February 6, 1932

DEAR MARY²,

I was delighted to hear from you. Yes, I am permitted to write and receive non-political letters such as yours is.

The paper³ on which you wrote your letter is nothing new to me. Ahmedabad used to be the home of such paper. It is prepared there even now but in very small quantities. There are several such places in India. The second chapter of the Gita has presented difficulties to many. I would commend to your attention my introduction⁴ to the Gita. I have dealt with the difficulty in that introduction. If you have not read it, get a copy from the Ashram. It was published in Young India. In the first instance, forget that God is speaking through the Gita. God never speaks save through defective human agency. In the second instance, it is not to be treated as a historical book. Thirdly, it

¹ Vide “Letter to Ramanada Chatterjee”, 22-1-1932
² Of Mission Boarding School near Hyderabad; popularly known as Marybehn, she became interested in Gandhiji’s speeches and writings during her furlough in England in 1931 at the time of Round Table Conference; she became acquainted with Gandhiji on board s.s. Pilsna while returning to India.
³ Hand-made
⁴ Vide “Anasktiyoga”
was written by him in whose time war was not taboo and was not considered inconsistent with ahimsa, just as even now generally speaking, killing of animals for food or in self-protection is not considered inconsistent with ahimsa, though in point of fact it is. The author of the Gita therefore chose for driving his lesson home an illustration which we are entitled to consider as defective. Personally I have no difficulty in understanding the second chapter. The central teaching of the Gita is in Biblical language ‘Be careful for nothing’. Results are not for us to control. Having known the path of duty it must be pursued in total disregard of consequence. Arjuna’s reasoning was defective and arose from attachment to earthly ties. He was not averse to war, he was averse to fighting kinsmen. The religious answer to this attachment would be, there is no kinsman and no-kinsman. All are—the whole creation is—kinsmen or no one is. If therefore it is lawful to wage war at all, it makes no difference whether it is kinsmen who are concerned or strangers. But this physical, outward war is merely a shadow of the war that is going on within—between God and Satan, forces of evil and good. And do we not always have difficult and delicate problems of conscience arising within us? The Gita says, “Surrender all to God, He will take care of you and your doubts; do not vex yourself about anything but simply perform the service that comes to you in the name of and for the sake of God. Cultivate uttermost selflessness and all will be well.” The result of this selfless detachment must be uttermost truth and non-violence. Thus read, the second chapter instead of being a hindrance becomes, in my opinion, a help. If this does not satisfy you and you will pursue the subject further, pray do not hesitate to write.

We are keeping the early morning hours. I mean Sardar Vallabhbhai and I.

I am glad you liked your brief stay at the Ashram. Of course you will go there, whenever you feel like it.

---

1 Perhaps a slip for ‘non-kinsman’
2 The source has “This”.
3 Of prayer
Thanks for the offer of books. I have a fair stock and friends and strangers continue to send books which they think I should read. Even apart from the Gita difficulty, do write whenever you feel like it.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 5981. Also C.W. 3309. Courtesy: Mary Barr

345. LETTER TO JAISUKHLAL GANDHI

February 6, 1932

CHI. JAISUKHLAL,

You came and met me but we could not talk. I had been worrying about Venilal, so I had gone to see him once accompanied by Ba. How is he now? Write to me in detail. Where is Umiya\(^2\), and how is she? How are the other girls? How are your relations with Kasumbi\(^3\)? Do write to me about how your work is going on.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III

---

1. In her book, Bapu—Conversations and Correspondence with Mahatma Gandhi, Mary Barr explains: “I replied to the above letter and after that there was a long pause without anything from him. I . . . felt sure that he would have replied if he had received my letter. So I wrote again, a mere postcard asking if he had my second letter. His answer was equally brief and open.” Vide “Letter to F. Mary Barr”, 6-2-1932

2. Addressee’s daughter

3. Addressee’s wife, Kasumba
346. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

February 6, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

I suppose the broken point of the thorn has come out now. Try and get over the mistakes which you make when reciting the Gita verses. Do you know the meaning of the verses? Have you learnt any Sanskrit?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4074. Also C.W. 38. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

347. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE

February 6, 1932

CHI. MATHURI,

I certainly like your getting up early in the morning, but a girl of weak health like you must be free to sleep whenever she wants to. You should do only as much as you can without getting tired or bored.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 261. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

348. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI G. PATEL

February 6, 1932

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

I got your letter. One must never forget prayer. As the body craves for food when it is hungry and does not forget about it, so the soul should yearn to pray. The prayer may consist of nothing more than Ramanama, but one ought not to forget it in any circumstances. To the extent that you forget it occasionally, to that extent it is an external thing to you. Prayer must become so intimately a part of one’s being that at last one’s every breath is accompanied by Ramanama. As an eyelid goes on doing its work, one will go on repeating Rama’s name with every breath.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9507. Also C.W. 423. Courtesy: Shivabhai G. Patel

349. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

February 6, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

If a boy or girl does not know what to write, he or she must be stupid. Surely, you are not stupid, are you? If you even describe the events of the day on which you write, you can fill the whole letter. Try this when you reply to this. You will have enough material to write about.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5763. Also C.W. 2986. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

350. LETTER TO RAMJI G. BADHIA

February 6, 1932

BHAISHRI RAMJI,

Your letter made me very happy. Your decision to follow Shankerlal’s advice is certainly very good. I expect much from you. I felt relieved to know that Jivanlal’s health was all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III
351. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

February 6, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

I cannot answer from here your question about foreign cloth, for it is a political subject. You may, therefore, ask Narandasbhai about it, and if you are not satisfied by his answer we shall discuss the question when we meet.

Tell Mahadev that he cannot afford to lose weight in this manner. One may eat the food that [one’s body] requires. What does Mahadev read at present?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9464

352. LETTER TO NANIBEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
February 6, 1932

CHI. NANIBEHN JHAVERI,

I am writing letters. Sardar is going through the newspapers and reading out important items to me. I have just learnt about you and other ladies having been arrested and later released. I would not write to you thinking you would be in jail and the next thing I learn from the papers is that you are free and far away. Now, if you get this letter, do let me have all your experiences.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Manavtana Prahari—Pannalal Jhaveri, p. 26

1 Some words are missing here in the source.
353. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
February 6, 1932

CHI. NIMU,

So, I have at long last got a letter from you. You have no such reason as I have, of preoccupation with other work for not writing. So, doesn’t your not writing to me mean only lethargy on your part? The thought that my own daughter is suffering from constipation is unbearable to me. Ramdas is only a few yards away from me but, as for our meeting, if at all it is there, I do not know when that will be held. The Superintendent here told me that he is fine.

Do not be tardy again in writing to me. What is Navanit doing these days?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

354. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

[After February 6, 1932]

I got yours today. I was wondering what had happened to you. I did not receive your letter in reply to mine. Do write again and repeat your questions. I think I shall receive it safely. We are all doing well, engaged in various studies and spinning. We have more books than we can cope with. Love from us all.

BAPU

Bapu-Conversations and Correspondence with Mahatma Gandhi, p. 15

1 Vide footnote 1, “Letter to Jaisukhlal Gandhi”, 6-2-1932
355. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

February 7, 1932

CHI. RAIHANA,

I was glad to get your letter. Of course I make many mistakes. Be patient. Leave off correcting when you get tired of doing so. I will try to write every week. Having started the practice, I will not give it up. May God grant a long life to my teacher. Tell Father that both of us remember him several times during the day. Tell him that he must come out of the jail palace a young man. It is a good thing that Ravishankar is there to look after him. Blessings from me to Hamida and other girls and women.¹

I hope this much will be enough for today. I should not trouble you too much. If I do not learn Urdu quite well, the fault will be my teacher’s. The poor pupil is helpless.

To Mother many many salaams, vandematarams and love from us both, to Sohaila blessings, to the baby kisses and to you a slap. Do not think about your disease. Why should one who has fallen in love with God, worry about disease or anything else? Do you know the bhajan, “I will go dance now, singing praises of God”? I heard it once from that lawyer-daughter of Uma Nehru. She is quite a good singer. But why speak of bhajans to you? You are yourself a veritable mine of them.

Many blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9637

356. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Wednesday, February 3/8, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your packet just this evening.

Lady Vithaldas, Bhai Trivedi, Vidya Hingorani and Damodar came in the afternoon and saw me. I got the leather for the sandals. I have heard that Ramdas, Chhaganlal, Surendra, Somabhai and others, in all 190 persons, have arrived here. Most probably some of them will see us.

¹ Up to this the letter is in Urdu.

456 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
For your scabies, you should eat green leaves and tomatoes. Baths with [potassium] permanganate will certainly help.

At the bottom of the letter from C.P. Scott’s son you write that you have sent by book post a biography of the late Scott. The book does not seem to have been received here. If you remember to have sent it, write to me again so that I may inquire further.

You have stated in the “Ashram Samachar” that I spin 500 rounds in two days. I spin, not 500 rounds, but 500 yards, in two days. I spin 375 rounds in two days and it is my ambition to spin as many in one day. But I do not think I shall be able to fulfil it as quickly as I had hoped.

Night, February 6, 1932

I had a letter from Tilakam. The food does not seem to have agreed with him. Read my letter to him, and if he agrees, carry out my suggestions. Pulses do not agree with people who are used to meat. If they start with milk, they experience no difficulty. They ordinarily eat rotli, etc., even with meat. As a substitute for meat, they generally take pulses, but a stomach used to meat cannot digest pulses. In any case such persons must not eat any kind of nuts such as ground-nuts, etc. Milk and curds are but pure forms of non-vegetarian food.

February 8, 1932

You will find with this an article on the subject of the existence of God. It is a translation of a portion of an article published in Young India.¹ I had read that portion² for a gramophone record. The record is on sale now. Anand³ heard it. He took down the extract and sent a copy to me for translation. The Hindi article mentioned above is a translation of that extract. The translation should not be published now. Anand wants the Hindi translation to help him to make a Sindhi translation. Send it to him and ask him not to publish it just now. The inmates of the Ashram can read it. You may even publish it in the Ashram Patrika. If you do, publish it as an original article. Let Parasram correct its Hindi. I leave it to you to decide whether or not you should publish it in the Patrika. If your publishing it is likely to be misconstrued or if someone is likely to reproduce the article

¹ Vide “God Is”
² On October 17, 1931; vide “Diary, 1931”
³ Anand Hingorani, who has since published its Sindhi version under the title “Iswara Ahe? Ha, Ahe.”
elsewhere, drop the idea. It will be enough if the inmates of the Ashram who are there read it, think over it and understand its meaning.

I read in the papers news about a few things having been seized from the Ashram. I expect I shall get more details from you.

I have some free time today and so I wish to describe a few details of the routine here.

Both of us get up at 3.40. After brushing, we pray. After that, we take warm water with honey and lemon juice and then read till the stroke of five. From five to six, we walk. At six, if I feel the call of nature I answer it, and then sleep for about 20 minutes. I get up at 6.45, when the bell for opening the cells is given, and read up to seven. The Sardar, after answering the call of nature, walks about and sits down to breakfast when milk is brought. As he eats the breakfast, he reads from the newspaper, which has arrived by then. During the day, I read, write and spin. In between I take a nap twice. The Sardar walks about much longer than I do. He generally reads from the newspapers which are supplied to us. I have two meals a day. The Sardar occasionally eats salad or something else like that at twelve. I again take warm water and honey at that time. When the honey is exhausted, I add jaggery and lemon-juice. I once happened to remark that Mirabehn or Pyarelal used to prepare fruit for me to eat. Since then the Sardar has monopolized that duty. It is he who prepares dates and tomatoes for me and does it with great love. I have accepted this loving service without the slightest hesitation. Having mentioned the service rendered by Mirabehn and Pyarelal, it would be a useless attempt on my part to decline the Sardar’s help. He takes milk and bread in the morning. At four in the afternoon, he takes bread, curds and some vegetables and, generally salad. I used to take milk in the morning, with dates, tomatoes and, from the fruit sent by Lady Thackersey or Prof. Trivedi, some oranges, chikus, etc. At present, I eat dates and tomatoes and, in the morning, take half a pound of milk, and in the evening the same quantity of curds. But I see that I shall have to reduce the quantity of milk still further. My health is good, of course. Do you know that my weight has increased? I see that now I do not need very nourishing food, especially when I enjoy solitude and peace of mind. This was my experience last year. While in jail, I could live without milk and maintain my weight. After my release, I lost weight in a short time for want of milk and, therefore, resumed it. In England, it was only with that that I could keep up my strength. Here I may not perhaps need milk. On the contrary milk may even do me harm. Of course I will do no violence to my body. My aversion to milk remains. But I will give the body what it requires. Let no one, therefore, worry after reading this. I will also mention some other work which the Sardar does. It is he who trims the envelope which you send and prepares it [for use again]. There are many such happy details which I can mention. But are not these enough? Just as we walk about between five and six in the morning, so do we again in the evening. Between six and seven, I read. Meanwhile, the Sardar prepares dates, babul sticks for brushing teeth, etc., for me and then joins me in the cell. At seven, the prayers begin. After prayers, reading and writing again, till 8.30. By nine, we are in bed. Both of us sleep in the open. From among newspapers, we get The Times [of India], The Bombay Chronicle, The Tribune, The Leader, and The Hindu. From among weeklies, we get Social Reformer, and from among monthlies, The Modern Review. As for books, I get some from outside and I have brought some with me. They supply enough fare to both of us.

I have read the following books so far: Durant’s The Case for India, Crozier’s A Word to Gandhi, Brailsford’s Rebel India, Al HajSalmin’s Imam Hussain and Khalifa Ally, Samuel Hoare’s Fourth Seal, R. MacDonald’s travelogue, Survey of Matar Taluka, Ramanathan’s Speech on Khadi, Will Hayes’ Essence of Hinduism, Ruskin’s St. George’s Guild, Shah’s Federal Finance, Rothenstein’s Ruin of Egypt, Hayes’ The Book of the Cow, A. E’s. Candle of Vision, Kinley’s Money, and Shankh ane Kodi (Gujarati). I am now reading the biography of Munshi Zaka Ullah written by Andrews and Shah’s book, Sixty Years of Economic Administration of India. The Sardar has read Hoare’s and MacDonald’s books and is now reading the book on Egypt. He gives plenty of time to newspapers and, in addition to the two hours which he gives to walking, as I have mentioned, he must certainly be spending two hours more in walking at other times.

Besides this, there are 36 letters.

Blessings from BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8207. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 By J. C. Kumarappa
2 Among the list of books given at the end of “Diary, 1932” the name appears as “Hayes’ Indian Bibles”.
3 For the text of the Gita discourse (Ch. xvi) which followed, vide “Letters on the Gita”
357. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

February 8, 1932

MY DEAR AGATHA,

I have your letter. I was wondering how you were doing. I was therefore glad to hear from you. I may not say more beyond sending my love. Sardar Vallabhbhai is with me and we are both keeping well.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

MISS AGATHA HARRISON
2 CRANBOURNE COURT
ALBERT BRIDGE ROAD
LONDON S.W. 11

From a photostat: G.N. 1450

358. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

Y. M.,

February 8, 1932

MY DEAR ANAND,

I was so glad to see Vidya. She was looking very well indeed. I am now sending for your help, not for publication, a rendering of my speech on God. It is only a fragment of a fuller thing in Y. I. which you should see, if you have not already.

Love to you both.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

1 Vide “God Is” and “God Is” , fn. 3.
359. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

February 8, 1932

Chi. Panditji,

I have two letters from you lying before me. I now understand the riddle of nama hasude [sic]. It is a good way Narayanrao has found for honouring himself. It is not for nothing that he is a Raosaheb.

Whom did Gajanan ask? No responsible person here knows about the matter. Let me know the date and the hour too. I waited for him very long.

I do not remember whether or not I had before me the mantra, Hiranmayena, etc., when it occurred to me that “Truth is God”. When such things occur to me, they spring straight from the heart as if they were original intuitions. For me, these truths have the certainty of personal experience.

If Gajanan is hereabouts, he may still accompany somebody who may be coming to see me. I have referred to Narayan’s visit in the general letter.

I hope there is no hurry about the Bhajanavali. I wish to offer some suggestions.

Do you think that Rambhau has made good progress? Who are taking music lessons with interest at present?

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 226. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

---

1 Isopanishad, 15; vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

ROMAIN ROLLAND'S LETTER TO AN AMERICAN FRIEND

December, 1931

How I should have liked to have you here during the visit of the Indians! They stayed five days—from Sunday night until Friday afternoon, the eleventh—at the Villa Vionette. The little man, bespectacled and toothless, was wrapped in his white burnoose, but his legs, thin as a heron’s stilts, were bare. His shaven head with its few coarse hairs was uncovered and wet with rain. He came to me with a dry laugh, his mouth open, like good dog panting, and flinging an arm around me leaned his cheek against my shoulder. I felt his grizzled head against my cheek. It was, I amuse myself thinking, the kiss of St. Dominic and St. Francis.

Then came Mira (Miss Slade), proud of figure and with the stately bearing of a Demeter and finally three Indians, one young son of Gandhi, Devdas, with a round and happy face. He is gentle and but little aware of the grandeur of his name. The others were secretaries—disciples—two young men of rare qualities of heart and mind: Mahadev Desai and Pyarelal.

As I had contrived shortly beforehand to get a severe cold on my chest, it was to my house and to the chamber on the second floor where I sleep at Villa Olga—you will remember it—that Gandhi came each morning for long conversations. My sister interpreted with the assistance of Mira, and I had also a Russian friend and secretary, Miss Kondacheff, who took notes on our discussions. Some good photographs by Schlemmer, our neighbour from Montreux, recorded the aspect of our interviews.

Evening at seven o’clock, prayers were held in the first floor salon. With lights lowered, the Indians seated on the carpet, and a little assembly of the faithful grouped about, there was a suite of three beautiful chants—the first an extract from the Gita, the second an ancient hymn of the Sanskrit texts which Gandhi has translated and the third a canticle of Rama and Siva, intoned by the warm, grave voice of Mira.

Gandhi held other prayers at three o’clock in the morning for which, in London, he used to wake his harassed staff, although he had not retired until one. This little man, so frail in appearance, is tireless, and fatigue is a word which does not exist in his vocabulary. He could calmly answer for hours the heckling of a crowd, as he did at Lausanne and Geneva, without a muscle of his face twitching. Seated on a table, motionless, his voice always clear and calm, he replied to his adversaries open or masked—and they were not lacking at Geneva—giving them rude truths which left them silenced and suffocated.

1 Vide “Discussion with Romain Rolland”, 6-12-1931
The Roman bourgeoisie, and nationalist, who had at first received him with crafty looks, quivered with rage when he left. I believe that if his stay had lasted any longer the public meetings would have been forbidden. He pronounced himself as unequivocally as possible on the double question of national armaments and the conflict between capital and labour. I was largely responsible for steering him on this latter course.

His mind proceeds through successive experiments into action and he follows a straight line, but he never stops, and one would risk error in attempting to judge him by what he said ten years ago, because his thought is in constant evolution. I will give you a little example of it that is characteristic.

He was asked at Lausanne to define what he understood by God. He explained how, among the noblest attributes which the Hindu scriptures ascribed to God, he had in his youth chosen the word ‘truth’ as most truly defining the essential element. He had then said, “God is Truth.” “But,” he added, “two years ago I advanced another step. I now say,” Truth is God’. For even the atheists do not doubt the necessity for the power of truth. In their passion for discovering the truth, the atheists have not hesitated to deny the existence of God, and, from their point of view, they are right.” You will understand from this single trait the boldness and independence of this religious spirit from the Orient. I noted in him traits similar to Vivekananda.

And yet not a single political ruse catches him unprepared. And his own politics are to say everything that he thinks to everybody, not concealing a thing.

On the last evening, after the prayers, Gandhi asked me to play him a little of Beethoven. (He does not know Beethoven, but he knows that Beethoven has been the intermediary between Mira and me1, and consequently between Mira and himself, and that, in the final count, it is to Beethoven that the gratitude of us all must go.) I played him the Andante of the Fifth Symphony. To that I added “Les Champs Elysées” of Gluck—the page for the orchestra and the air for the flute.

He is very sensitive to the religious chants of his country, which somewhat resemble the most beautiful of our Gregorian melodies, and he has worked to assemble them. We also exchanged our ideas on art, from which he does not separate his conception of truth, nor from his conception of truth that of joy, which he thinks truth should bring. But it follows of itself that for this heroic nature joy does not come without effort, nor even life itself without hardship. “The seeker after truth hath a heart tender as the lotus, and hard as granite.”

Here, my dear friend, are a few hints of those days of ours together on which I have taken much more detailed notes. What I do not dwell on to you is the hurricane of intruders, loiterers and half-wits which this visit loosed on our two villas. No, the telephone never ceased ringing, photographers in ambuscades let fly their fusillades from behind every bush. The milkmen’s syndicate at Leman informed me that during all the time of this sojourn with me of the “King of India” they intended to assume complete responsibility for his “victualling”. We received letters from “Sons of God”. Some Italian wrote to the Mahatma beseeching him to indicate for them the ten lucky numbers for the next drawing of the weekly national lottery!

1 Mirabehn joined Mahatma Gandhi at the suggestion of Romain Rolland.

My sister, having survived, has gone to take ten days’ rest at a cure in Zurich. She returns tomorrow. For my part, I have entirely lost the gift of sleep. If you find it, send it to me by registered mail!

Bapu’s Letters to Mira, pp. 180-3

APPENDIX II

TELEGRAM FROM PRIVATE SECRETARY TO VICEROY

December 31, 1931

HIS EXCELLENCY DESIRES ME TO THANK YOU FOR YOUR TELEGRAM OF THE 29TH INSTANT IN WHICH YOU REFER TO BENGAL AND UNITED PROVINCES AND N.W.F.P. ORDINANCES. IN REGARD TO BENGAL IT HAS BEEN AND IS NECESSARY FOR GOVERNMENT TO TAKE ALL POSSIBLE MEASURES TO PREVENT DASTARDLY ASSASSINATION OF THEIR OFFICERS AND OF PRIVATE CITIZENS. HIS EXCELLENCY WISHES ME TO SAY THAT HE AND HIS GOVERNMENT DESIRE TO HAVE FRIENDLY RELATIONS WITH ALL POLITICAL PARTIES AND WITH ALL SECTIONS OF THE PUBLIC AND IN PARTICULAR TO SECURING CO-OPERATION OF ALL IN GREAT WORK OF CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS WHICH THEY ARE DETERMINED TO PUSH FORWARD WITH MINIMUM DELAY CO-OPERATION, HOWEVER, MUST BE MUTUAL AND HIS EXCELLENCY AND HIS GOVERNMENT CANNOT RECONCILE ACTIVITIES OF THE CONGRESS IN UNITED PROVINCES AND N.W.F.P. WITH THE SPIRIT OF FRANK CO-OPERATION WHICH THE GOOD OF INDIA DEMANDS. AS REGARDS THE UNITED PROVINCES, YOU ARE DOUBTLESS AWARE THAT WHILE THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT WERE ENGAGED IN DEVISING MEANS TO GIVE ALL POSSIBLE RELIEF IN THE EXISTING SITUATION THE PROVINCIAL CONGRESS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED A NO-RENT CAMPAIGN, WHICH IS

1 Vide “Telegram to Viceroy”, 29-12-1931
NOW BEING VIGOROUSLY PURSUED BY THE CONGRESS ORGANIZATIONS IN THAT PROVINCE. THIS ACTION ON THE PART OF THE CONGRESS BODIES HAS COMPelled GOVERNMENT TO TAKE MEASURES TO PREVENT A GENERAL STATE OF DISORDER AND SPREADING OF GLASS AND COMMUNAL HATRED WHICH THE CAMPAIGN, IF CONTINUED UNCHECKED, WOULD INEVITABLY INVOLVE. IN THE N.W.F.P., ABDUL GHAFFAR KHAN AND BODIES HE CONTROLLED HAVE CONTINUOUSLY ENGAGED IN ACTIVITIES AGAINST GOVERNMENT AND IN FOMENTING RACIAL HATRED. HE AND HIS FRIENDS HAVE PERSISTENTLY REFUSED ALL OVERTURES BY THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER TO SECURE THEIR CO-OPERATION AND, REJECTING DECLARATION OF THE PRIME MINISTER, HAVE DECLARED IN FAVOUR OF COMPLETE INDEPENDENCE. ABDUL GHAFFAR KHAN HAS DELIVERED NUMEROUS SPEECHES OPEN TO NO OTHER CONSTRUCTION THAN AS INCITEMENT TO REVOLUTION AND HIS ADHERENTS HAVE ATTEMPTED TO STIR TROUBLE IN THE TRIBAL AREAS. THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER, WITH THE APPROVAL OF HIS EXCELLENCY'S GOVERNMENT, HAS SHOWN UTMOST FORBEARANCE AND TO THE LAST MOMENT CONTINUED HIS EFFORTS TO SECURE ASSISTANCE OF ABDUL GHAFFAR IN CARRYING INTO EFFECT, WITH THE LEAST POSSIBLE DELAY, INTENTIONS OF HIS MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT REGARDING CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS IN THE PROVINCE. GOVERNMENT REFRAINED FROM TAKING SPECIAL MEASURES UNTIL THE ACTIVITIES OF ABDUL GHAFFAR KHAN AND HIS ASSOCIATES AND, IN PARTICULAR, THE OPEN AND INTENSIVE PREPARATION FOR AN EARLY CONFLICT WITH GOVERNMENT, CREATED A SITUATION OF SUCH GRAVE MENACE TO PEACE OF THE PROVINCE AND OF THE TRIBAL AREAS AS TO MAKE IT IMPOSSIBLE FURTHER TO DELAY ACTION. HIS EXCELLENCY UNDERSTANDS THAT ABDUL GHAFFAR KHAN WAS IN AUGUST LAST MADE RESPONSIBLE FOR LEADING CONGRESS MOVEMENT IN THE PROVINCE AND THAT THE VOLUNTEERS ORGANIZATIONS HE CONTROLLED WERE SPECIFICALLY RECOGNIZED BY ALL-INDIA CONGRESS COMMITTEE AS CONGRESS ORGANIZATIONS. HIS EXCELLENCY DESIRES ME TO MAKE IT CLEAR THAT HIS RESPONSIBILITIES FOR PEACE AND ORDER MAKE IT IMPOSSIBLE FOR HIM TO HAVE ANY DEALING WITH PERSONS OR ORGANIZATIONS UPON WHOM REST THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTIVITIES ABOVE OUTLINED. YOU HAVE YOURSELF BEEN ABSENT FROM INDIA ON BUSINESS OF THE ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE AND IN THE LIGHT OF THE ATTITUDE WHICH YOU HAVE OBSERVED THERE HIS EXCELLENCY IS UNWILLING TO BELIEVE THAT YOU HAVE PERSONALLY ANY SHARE IN THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR OR THAT YOU APPROVE OF THE RECENT ACTIVITIES OF CONGRESS IN THE UNITED PROVINCES AND THE N.W.F.P. IF THIS IS SO, HE IS WILLING TO SEE YOU AND TO GIVE YOU HIS VIEWS AS TO THE WAY IN WHICH YOU CAN BEST EXERT YOUR INFLUENCE TO MAINTAIN THE SPIRIT OF CO-OPERATION WHICH ANIMATED THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE. BUT HIS EXCELLENCY FEELS BOUND TO EMPHASIZE THAT HE WILL NOT BE PREPARED TO DISCUSS WHICH YOU MEASURES WHICH GOVERNMENT OF INDIA WITH THE FULL APPROVAL OF HIS MAJESTY’S GOVERNMENT HAVE FOUND IT NECESSARY TO ADOPT IN BENGAL, THE UNITED PROVINCES AND THE N.W.F.P. THESE MEASURES MUST IN ANY CASE BE KEPT IN FORCE UNTIL THEY HAVE SERVED THE PURPOSE FOR WHICH THEY WERE IMPOSED NAMELY PRESERVATION OF LAW AND ORDER ESSENTIAL TO GOOD GOVERNMENT; ON RECEIPT OF YOUR REPLY HIS EXCELLENCY PROPOSES TO PUBLISH THIS CORRESPONDENCE.

India in 1931-32

APPENDIX III

TELEGRAM FROM PRIVATE SECRETARY TO VICE ROY

January 2, 1932

HIS EXCELLENCY DESIRES ME TO ACKNOWLEDGE RECEIPT OF YOUR TELEGRAM OF 1ST JANUARY WHICH HAS BEEN CONSIDERED BY HIM AND HIS GOVERNMENT. THEY MUCH REGRET TO OBSERVE THAT UNDER YOUR ADVICE THE CONGRESS WORKING COMMITTEE HAS PASSED A RESOLUTION WHICH INVOLVES GENERAL REVIVAL OF CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE UNLESS CERTAIN CONDITIONS ARE SATISFIED WHICH ARE STATED IN

1 Vide “Telegram to Private Secretary to Viceroy”, 1-1-1932

VOL.54: 13 OCTOBER, 1931 - 8 FEBRUARY, 1932 466
YOUR TELEGRAM AND THE RESOLUTION. THEY REGARD THIS ATTITUDE AS THE MORE DEPLORABLE IN VIEW OF THE DECLARED INTENTIONS OF HIS MAJESTY’S GOVERNMENT AND THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA TO EXPEDITE THE POLICY OF CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM CONTAINED IN THE PREMIER’S STATEMENT. NO GOVERNMENT, CONSISTENT WITH THE DISCHARGE OF THEIR RESPONSIBILITY, CAN BE SUBJECT TO CONDITIONS SOUGHT TO BE IMPOSED UNDER THE MENACE OF UNLAWFUL ACTION BY ANY POLITICAL ORGANIZATION. NOR CAN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACCEPT THE POSITION IMPLIED IN YOUR TELEGRAM THAT THEIR POLICY SHOULD BE DEPENDENT ON THE JUDGMENT OF YOURSELF AS TO NECESSITY OF MEASURES WHICH GOVERNMENT HAVE TAKEN AFTER THE MOST CAREFUL AND THOROUGH CONSIDERATION OF THE FACTS AND AFTER ALL OTHER POSSIBLE REMEDIES HAD BEEN EXHAUSTED. HIS EXCELLENCY AND HIS GOVERNMENT CAN HARDLY BELIEVE THAT YOU OR THE WORKING COMMITTEE CONTEMPLATE THAT HIS EXCELLENCY CAN INVITE YOU, WITH THE HOPE OF ANY ADVANTAGE, TO AN INTERVIEW HELD UNDER THE THREAT OF RESUMPTION OF CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE. THEY MUST HOLD YOU AND THE CONGRESS RESPONSIBLE FOR ALL THE CONSEQUENCES WHICH MAY ENSUE FROM ACTION WHICH THE CONGRESS HAVE ANNOUNCED THEIR INTENTION OF TAKING AND TO MEET WHICH GOVERNMENT TAKE ALL NECESSARY MEASURES.

India in 1931-32; also Young India, 7-1-1932

APPENDIX IV

VERRIER ELWIN ON GANDHI’S ARREST

Gandhi was staying in a house called Mani Bhuvan and he invited us to stay with him there. There was great excitement in the city: the Viceroy had finally rejected the Congress offer of peace; Nehru was already in jail, and arrest of other national leaders was expected at any moment.

But when we reached Mani Bhuvan and climbed to the roof, we found a great serenity in astonishing contrast to the crowds and turmoil outside. The roof was a very pleasant place. Low tents had been erected, and there were palms and plants; at least 300 people could gather there. It was cool and you could see the stars. Bapu was sitting at the wheel quietly spinning. He had already begun his weekly silence. I carried on a one-sided conversation with him, and he wrote down his questions and replied on a scrap of paper which I still have. I must have begun by asking if there was anything I could do.

1 Vide “Letter to Varrier Elwin”, 4-1-1932

VOL.54: 13 OCTOBER, 1931 - 8 FEBRUARY, 1932 467

He wrote:

“I have sent for you for that very purpose. I have told Mahadev all I have been revolving in my mind. When he comes he will tell you or I shall briefly write what is wanted.

How are you keeping in health?

He [Mahadev]¹ should be coming shortly. If he does not during the time I finish this I shall write out what I want to say.

You are sleeping here? If so is your bedding, etc., arranged?”

Then Shamrao and I retired to the smaller tent and Bapu lay down about three yards from us, while some thirty others lay on the roof under the canvas shelter. Mrs. Gandhi and Mirabehn gave us a surprisingly satisfying supper of dates, nuts and fruit. But I could not sleep. As I wrote at the time, ‘I felt I had to keep vigil, and for hours I was under those splendid stars that rose, tier upon tier above me, while beside me Bapu slept like a child committed to his Father’s hands. I thought of Christ going up to Jerusalem, his eyes filled with determination and courage: and I seemed to see the Spirit of Christ travelling the centuries like a bright sword turned against all wrong and injustice. Among these sleeping friends so dear to us, brave, pure-hearted, sincere, the spirit of love was manifest and unconquerable.

At last I lay down between Shamrao and Bernard on my hastily improvised bed on the floor, just beside Bapu, and fell into a deep sleep, when suddenly like the coming of a dream there was a stir and a whisper: ‘The police have come.’

We started up and I saw what I shall never forget—a fully uniformed Commissioner of Police at the foot of Bapu’s bed, and Bapu just waking, a little bewildered, looking old, fragile and rather pathetic with the mists of sleep still on his face.

‘Mr. Gandhi, it is my duty to arrest you.’

A beautiful smile of welcome broke out on Bapu’s face and now he looked young, strong and confident. He made signs to show that he was keeping silence.

The Commissioner smiled and with great courtesy said, ‘I should like you to be ready in half an hour’s time.’

It was five minutes past three. Bapu looked at his watch and the Commissioner said, ‘Ah, the famous watch!’ and they both laughed heartily. Bapu took a pencil and wrote, ‘I will be ready to come with you in half an hour.’

¹ As given in the source.
The Commissioner laid his hand on Bapu’s shoulder with a gesture so full of affection that I thought it was an embrace, until I realized that it was the formal token of arrest. Bapu then cleaned his teeth and retired for a moment. The door was guarded, and all of us who were on the roof sat round in a circle. I looked out on to the road where some had been keeping all-night vigil and where a little crowd, very quiet and orderly, had collected, but there were no special police precautions.

When he was ready, Bapu sat in the midst of us for the prayers and we sang together the song of the true Vaishnava. Then Bapu took pencil and paper and wrote a few messages, some last instructions to his followers and a letter\(^1\) to Sardar Vallabhbhai, which was as follows: . . .

He then wrote a short note\(^2\) and gave it to me: . . .

Then Bapu stood up to take farewell. It was a strange sight: the police at the door, Mirabehn and Devdas bustling to and fro with the baggage which was already packed, Bapu surrounded by his friends, many of them weeping. Mrs. Gandhi with tears running down her cheeks said, “Can’t you take me with you?” Everyone in turn touched his feet, and when I said goodbye he pulled my ear with a smile. He was in very good spirits: he might have been going to a festival rather than a jail.

Then, followed by the whole company, he went downstairs. Shamrao and I watched from the roof. The tiny figure got into the car and the crowd surged round it. It was a wonderful tribute to India’s non-violence that there were only a few policemen and they were able to be in the midst of the crowd without fear of danger. Just at that moment a message came to say that Sardar Vallabhbhai, the Congress President had also been arrested. And then the crowd scattered as the car bearing the very soul of India drove away through the dark and deserted streets.

The Tribal World of Verrier Elwin, pp. 65-8

---

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Vallabhbhai Patel”, 4-1-1932

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Varrier Elwin”, 4-1-1932
APPENDIX V

LETTER FROM R. M. MAXWELL

Secret
No. S. D. 310
CASTLE,

January 16, 1932

FROM
R. M. MAXWELL, ESQUIRE, C.I.E.
ACTING SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY HOME DEPARTMENT

TO
THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF PRISONS
BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

SIR,

I am directed to inform you that the Governor in Council has been pleased to issue the following orders with regard to the privileges to be allowed for the present to the State Prisoners, Messrs Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi and Vallabhbhai Patel and regarding the arrangements to be made for their periodical medical examination.

2. PERIODICALS AND NEWSPAPERS: Both the prisoners should be allowed the following periodicals and newspapers: The Times of India, The Bombay Chronicle, The Leader (Allahabad), The Tribune (Lahore), The Hindu (Madras), The Indian Social Reformer, The Modern Review, Young India and Navajivan.

3. LETTERS: Both the prisoners may, as requested by them, be allowed to write letters once a week; or oftener with the previous permission of the Superintendent of the Prison. All correspondence to and from the prisoners should be censored by the Superintendent of the Prison. Vernacular letters which cannot be translated in the Prison should be sent to the Oriental Translator to Government for translation unless the District Magistrate can arrange to have them translated in his office. All objectionable correspondence should be withheld. In doubtful cases areference should be made to Government. Any letters which the Superintendent considers should be seen by the Police should be forwarded by him to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, C.I.D., Poona.

1 Vide “Letter to Ramananda Chatterjee”, 22-1-1932

4. Health and Periodical Medical Examination: The two prisoners will remain in the medical care of the Superintendent of the Prison, but arrangements should be made in consultation with the Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay for their full medical examination with as little delay as possible by the Civil Surgeon, Poona, in conjunction with the Superintendent and for a report of the examination to be submitted to Government at once. Similar arrangements should be made for subsequent medical examination by the same two officers of Mr. Gandhi once a month and of Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel once in three months. A copy of the report should in each case be submitted to the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor. The Superintendent should also consult the Civil Surgeon, Poona, if at any time either prisoner appears to be suffering in health or is attacked by any serious illness.

I am to request that you will communicate to the prisoners, through the Superintendent, the orders in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 so far as they pertain to them with the omission of the instructions regarding censorship of correspondence in paragraph 3.

I am also to request that you will invite the attention of the Superintendent to the first sub-section of Section 5 of the Bombay Regulations and ask him to furnish the Government with a report required by this sub-section.

I have the honour to be,

Sr,

Your most obedient servant,

Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay

Home Department

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40), Pt. I
1. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM D. SARAIYA

February 10, 1932

CHI. KAKU,

I got your letter written in a beautiful hand. You have plenty of things to write about. Even if you give an account of what you did during the last year, you will have enough material. You should regard spinning as yajna and do it regularly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 2807. Courtesy: Purushottam D. Saraiya

2. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

February 10, 1932

BHAISHRI VALJI,

I got the packet sent by you. I will look into the translation at least, as and when I get time and let you know when I finish it. I have already replied\(^1\) to your previous letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7419. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

3. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

February 10, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

You get five marks for your handwriting. You will get eight if you leave space between the words and use a good pen. Why does man have no root? A man carries his root wherever he goes. A tree has its root under the ground because it comes out of the ground. Man is born from his mother’s body, and his root also comes out with him at the time of his birth. One may say that the navel is his root. If this is not clear to you, show this letter to Premabehn and ask her to explain its meaning to you.

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Valji G. Desai”, 3-2-1932

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5764. Also C.W. 2987. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

4. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

February 10, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

I got Barve’s book. I will dip into it when I get time.

Your explanation about the first doubt is quite correct. I have felt that that is the implication of Chapter XVII. Ultimately one has to rely on faith. We see again and again that what seems to be the truth to one does not often appear so to others. However, to follow truth as one sees it is like walking on the razor’s edge. Anyone who tries to do so ought to remain wide awake and rigidly follow all the rules and restrictions. The lazy, the licentious, and the hypocrites can claim no right to act according to their view of truth. That privilege belongs only to the sadhak, the seeker after truth.

As for the second doubt, I think that the sadhak will not trouble himself with deciding what is and what is not for general good. He would say that he was not interested in the question, and that universal good lay in truth since truth was the supreme Being. While all other names of God suggested only one aspect of His, truth signified His perfect essence, so that a person who opposed truth could never accomplish anybody’s good. Truth necessitates harmony of thought, speech and act. That is, one must follow truth as one sees it and always be faithful to it in thought, speech and action. But a false notion is widely prevalent among us. We are not always bound to answer a question asked by anyone. There is no violation of truth in refraining from giving an answer. To keep silent when it is one’s duty to answer a question amounts to telling a lie. For example, if my father asked me whether I had stolen a piece of gold, I would be bound to answer the question. However, if even my father asked me whether somebody had stolen a thing, I would not be bound to answer. If, therefore, I did not reply, I would not be telling a lie. I remember the chapter in
I did not agree with the suggestion in it. If you tell a lie under force of circumstances, you are certainly not telling the truth. There never can be an occasion when one must tell a lie. If there can be such an occasion, then it would follow that the principle of following truth in speech and action was imperfect. There can be no exception to a principle, and hence there can be no atonement for untruth spoken knowingly. Or the only possible atonement would be never to do so again. Atonement is possible only when some error is committed in ignorance. I think that this answers your second question too. Ask again if anything is still left out.

I have not revised this letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 222. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

5. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

February 10, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

What you have written is as good as saying that you like pakodas but not chapatis. But a person whose body acquires such a tendency should be considered diseased. A healthy person will never be able to satisfy his hunger by eating pakodas. He would ask only for bread. The same is true about the Gita. Once your mind has awakened, you are bound to like the Gita. You must think that there is something still lacking so long as you cannot like the Gita. But I, who prepare such recipes, should also be blamed. My prescription of the Gita for you is defective and that is the reason why you are not able to absorb it. What is the remedy?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9944.Courtesy: Shardabhenn G. Chokhawala

---

¹ A commentary on the Gita by B. G. Tilak
6. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

February 11, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter which consoles me. Those who believe in God’s guidance just do the best they can and never worry. The sun has never been known to have suffered from overstrain and yet who slaves with such unexampled regularity as he! And why should we think that the sun is inanimate? The difference between him and us may be that he has no choice, we have a margin no matter how precarious it may be. But no more speculation of this sort. Suffice it for us that we have his brilliant example in the matter of tireless energy. If we completely surrender ourselves to His will and really become ciphers, we too voluntarily give up the right of choice and then we need no wear and tear.

I have just commenced almond paste instead of milk. I was daily decreasing the quantity of milk because it was not suiting me. It may be that while I am resting, I do not need animal proteid. I am simply trying. Therefore, if you have more almond paste we had in London, please bring the bottles with you. Just now I am flourishing on dates, tomatoes and almond paste, of course with lemon and honey water twice during 24 hours. It is too early yet to say how I shall fare without milk. I shall not do anything consciously to injure my health, much as I would love to give up milk altogether.

There may be no time for you to tell me when you come, therefore let me know by letter how you washed the woollen blankets. Did you soak them in cold water or warm and how long? How much Lux did you use, in how much water? I propose to use powdered Apana soap. I am in no hurry.

I take it that you share my letters with the Ashram and that you get from the Ashram what may be worth knowing.

I had a letter directly from the Privats. They seem to have thoroughly enjoyed their stay and I am glad.

Do you ever meet Manilal our host and his wife?

If you meet Pyare Ali tell him or send him word not to send any more dates. I have about 20 lb. from Jerajani. Moreover what Pyare Ali gets are old dates and, therefore, they are weevily.
My love to Damodardas and his people.
Love from us both.

BAPU

[PS.]
The accompanying for Nargis. I have heard from Agatha Harrison. She says that Percy Bartlett and Hyam and a university girl are coming.¹ I forget the names. But perhaps you have heard from her too. I have Devi West’s letter written to Ba.

From a photostat: C.W. 9504, Courtesy: Mirabehn

7. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

February 11, 1932

CHI. MANUDI²,

I got your letter. You should serve aunt. You are no longer a child. You are grown-up and can understand things. Aunt has looked after you with great care and shown you much affection too. I would not even know how to show such affection. You should also take care of your [body] and acquire good knowledge. The heap of picture-cards for you is growing bigger. Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1510. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

8. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

February 11, 1932

CHI. MANU,

I did think of writing to you earlier. But even here I take up some work, and for its sake I postpone doing whatever else I can afford to.

I suppose you are thinking hard what you should do but there is ¹ These three English Quakers were to visit India “on an independent mission of conciliation”.

² Daughter of Harilal Gandhi
no reason for worrying. Your duty now is to complete your work there. Study as hard as you can without impairing your health. You should learn the wisdom of the swan. Do you ever read Tulsidas? It is very useful to read him regularly. His work contains this verse:

   All things in the world,
   Both living and non-living,
   God has created a mixture of good and evil.
   The sage will, like the swan,
   Accept the milk of goodness
   Leaving out the water of evil.

   In the same way you should accept the good which you see there and keep away from the evil. Moreover you are there as India’s representative and should always represent what is good in the country. Keep away from the evils of India even for the sake of the country where you are. Ever since I came to know you at the Sassoon Hospital, I have never imagined you capable of any evil.

   You must have now learnt German quite well. Write to me about your studies, your health and your companions.

       Blessings from
       BAPU

[PS.]

You of course know that Sardar is here with me. He sends his blessings.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1004

9. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

February 11, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

Champa seems to be pining to come and see me. Let her come next week. I hope Ratilal will not prevent her.

I got yesterday the post sent by you. It did not include a copy of “Ashram Samachar”. Moreover, the second sheet of your letter was torn at the bottom. It was not torn here. Try to recollect if it was torn there. I also don’t find a separate letter from Ranchhodbhai.

I could not discover here why you did not get the letter to Chanchalbehn and to the widow who had lost her son, namely, Nos. 1 and 22. They are certainly not with me. It is possible that, while the letters were being examined in the office here, these two slipped out and were lost. Henceforth I will try to send a list of names and numbers.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

After I had written this, I got your second post. Since Champa is calm, she need not come, if she doesn’t wish to.

BAPU

10. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA N. KHARE

February 11, 1932

CHI. RAMBHAI ALIAS RAMACHANDRA KHARE,

Bravo! You have found a good argument. Since all others write, why need you? If everybody argued in that way, I would get no letters. Can’t I also argue similarly? The correct reasoning, however, is this. If we do our duty, others also will do theirs some day. We have a saying to the effect: “If we ourselves are good, the whole world will be good.”

Have you now completely overcome the habit of fibbing?

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 290. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

11. LETTER TO JAISHANKAR P. TRIVEDI

February 11, 1932

Bhai Trivedi,

I wished to write to Manu earlier but could not write all these days. Whenever you wish, you may come and see me on a day fixed for visitors. It will always be possible to include you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1003
12. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

February 11, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

I have your letter. But I could not place you. Give me full particulars of yourself and tell me your age too.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3979

13. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

February 12, 1932

CHI. MANIBEHN (PARIKH),

If the pain in the ear has increased so much, did you consult anybody? I think you should get the ear examined once. If Haribhai\(^1\) cannot understand the cause after examining it, you should pay a visit to Bombay. There are some good ear specialists there. Dr. Jivraj will take you to one.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5964. Also C.W. 3281. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

14. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

February 12, 1932

CHI. MANGALA (DARLING),

I got your letter. You must learn to avoid even the few mistakes which you make in reciting the Gita verses. Otherwise you

\(^1\) Although Gandhiji mistook the identity, the addressee was in fact Pushpa S. Patel, as is evident from the letter to her dated March 5, 1932; vide “Letter to Pushpa S. Patel”, 5-3-1932. The misunderstanding was due to her letter being written in unusually good Hindi.

\(^2\) Dr. Haribhai Desai will cease to be ladki and will remain a lakdi for ever.\textsuperscript{1}

Where does Kamu\textsuperscript{2} live? How is her health?

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

\textbf{15. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE}

\textit{February 12, 1932}

CHI. MATHURI,

I will forgive you everything except writing a bad hand. You should write each letter [in a word] as neatly as you draw a picture. Gajanan is there to help you. If you ask him he will teach you how to do so. It is a sort of game. You need not spend much time in practising. You should practise only for a short time every day. Tripathibhai’s Manu used to practise while lying ill in bed. He was in bed for one whole year.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

From Gujarati: C.W. 263. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

\textbf{16. LETTER TO SHANTA S. PATEL}

\textit{February 12, 1932}

CHI. SHANTA,

Why should you feel shy because Sardar is here? Is it because he is Sardar or because he is a Patel? If for the former reason, how long can you escape him? And as for being a Patel, he is no more one. Those who mix with Bhangis belong to all communities.

You have given plenty of news. Write whatever comes into

\textsuperscript{1}Vide also “Letter to Mangala Patel”, 30-1-1932
\textsuperscript{2}Presumably Kamalabehn Patel, addressee’s elder sister \textsuperscript{3}Perhaps a slip for “Trivedibhai’s”. The reference is to Manushankar, son of Jaishankar P. Trivedi, who was ill in 1930.
your head. And see that you don’t fall ill. If you surrender everything to God, you will not fall ill.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4064. Also C.W. 15. Courtesy: Shantabehn Patel

17. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

February 12, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I have your letter. I am glad that Vimal’s head has been shaved clean. It does not seem, at least from here, that there is anything about your Hindi teaching that deserves special notice. If you can attract all to the study of the Ramayana you shall have gained two purposes at one stroke.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 4967. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra. Also G.N. 7490

18. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

February 13, 1932

DEAR. BOYS AND GIRLS,

There is one thing which I noticed in English children but miss in those at the Ashram. Most of you cannot think what to write in a letter. This should not be. In this respect English children are smarter. I cannot say with certainty whether or not children outside the Ashram are like you. You should overcome this weakness.

So many things happen every day around you that, if you properly observe them, you would be able to write enough to fill pages. Why then should you be unable to think of anything to write about when you sit down to write to me? One can write all that one did, saw and thought during a day. You can say in a letter why you

1 Addressee’s younger son
2 Gandhiji presumably meant Ramcharitamanasa by Tulsidas.
felt happy or unhappy on that day, as the case may be. You may also say what good thoughts or bad ones came to you on that day. It is possible that you are not sure whether you can write about these things in a letter. If so, let me tell you that you need have no such doubts. You can write just as you would talk to me. I shall now see what progress you make next week. Letter-writing also is an art. All our art springs from devotion to truth. Anyone who sits down to write a letter with the thought that he would write pure truth and pour out his love, is bound to write an interesting letter, since truth itself is God. There will always be art in anything we do or say or write with truth as witness and as object of our worship.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8936. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

19. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

February 13, 1932

DEAR SISTERS,

Your nest is now almost empty. However, I write down in these letters, as I remember them from time to time, the things that I thought worth noting. As these letters are preserved, they may be of some use perhaps when you reassemble in future.

You have heard the name of M. Rolland. He is a great European writer and a saintly man. I went to see him. He has a sister who also may now be regarded aged, like him. She has remained unmarried with the sole purpose of helping her brother. The language of the two, the brother and the sister, is French. Rolland does not know English, but the sister does. One may say that the sister has merged her identity in her brother’s. She looks after Rolland’s needs in every respect. She works as his secretary and also as interpreter when Englishmen come to see him. Rolland has delicate health, and the sister guards it too. Though such examples of renunciation are rare in this world, we do come across them in the West. If there are any in our country, I do not know about them. By linking up celibacy with moksha we have made it rare, and it has also, therefore, become difficult to observe. On the other hand, in the West women observe it of their own free will for the sake of service to parents or a brother or some other cause, and they find it easy to observe. I wish to draw two lessons from this. One, the observance of brahmacharya for any selfless purpose is good, and two, its observance is perfectly easy for anybody who has, like Rolland’s sister, a concrete reason, for his self-imposed task leaves such a person no time at all. Besides these two, there is of course the particular lesson that women have to learn from this example.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8935. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

20. A LETTER

February 13, 1932

CHI.,

This is what I mean when I say that I think of God every moment. During waking hours there is no time when I am not aware that God dwells within and observes everything. This awareness is intellectual and has been achieved through long practice. I do not say that my heart has such awareness, since I do not think that I am free from all fear. I do feel afraid of snakes, etc. Even though I look upon death as a friend, I also see deep-seated within me the desire to live. It seems that I love life and also that I would be ready to die. These two feelings together are strange, and because of this weakness I do not think I can say that my awareness of God is a matter of the heart also. That the intellect accepts that He dwells in the heart is another matter. One who actually feels the presence of God in his heart would be wholly free from blind attachment to the body. I can see that I have not reached that stage, and yet so complete and firm is the intellectual acceptance of this idea that I also feel it is slowly sinking into the heart. I cannot go further than this... 1

I trust you are no more rigid about food. It is necessary to take fruit along with milk, and preferably fresh fruit. A small quantity of uncooked leafy vegetables also should be included. Tomato and lettuce are considered good. There is a science of diet too, and it should not be disregarded. We know that our food ought to be sattvik,

1 Omission as in the source
but we have to learn from experience which food can be considered sattvik. It is not necessary that one’s food should have all the characteristics of sattvik food mentioned in the Gita.\(^1\) Experience shows that we need fire very little. Personally, I am certain in my mind that it is sufficient that our food is ripened by the sun. All that I wish to say is that we should give the body what it requires from among the things which are acceptable to us.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8938. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

21. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

February 13, 1932

You have just transcribed the Hindi letter. Didn’t Parasram dictate it to you?

Ramarajya means rule of the people. A person like Rama would never wish to rule. God calls Himself a servant of his servants.

You may certainly wear shorts and a shirt when doing exercise or when cooking or doing many other things. Do you massage your body?

Blessings from

BAPU

22. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

February 13, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. Whenever a letter from me is delivered late to you, you should examine the postmark and let me know the date [of its clearance].

To what term has Kisan been sentenced? Where is she kept?

You can certainly open the trunks. If they contain books, they must be taken out and kept in the right places, and, if they contain any other material, all the items will have to be listed and properly disposed of. If you do not know what to do about them, send the list to me. I will then be able to tell you what to do. Even if some of the books belong to other people, it does not matter. If they bear the names of their owners, they can easily be kept separately from the others. If they bear no names there will be no harm if the Ashram stamp is put on them. If, afterwards, these books are claimed by any persons, they should be handed over to them. Our duty is to take all possible care of the books while they are in our possession.

\(^1\) Vide “Discourses on the “Gita” “

Which statement of mine did you interpret to mean that, according to me, the Ashram had nothing to do with education? My view is this: literary education—formal education—is given a secondary place in the Ashram. That is why the Ashram could not be made a Vidyapith. But such education is certainly useful and necessary, and that is why the Vidyapith was established. The Ashram and the Vidyapith supplement each other. Because of this limitation of its sphere of activities, the collection of books in the Ashram should be restricted. The Vidyapith can have no such restriction. The restrictions on it relate to its internal experiments. The Ashram has a big name and certain extravagant notions have come to be formed about it, so that it receives books on all kinds of subjects and in many languages. The Vidyapith is the right place where they can be preserved. The Ashram, on the other hand, should have only such books as relate to the subjects which we study. What books fall in this class, you and others can easily decide. Whenever you cannot decide you may consult me. Personally, however, I don’t see what difficulty you can experience in this matter. After so many years of the Ashram’s existence, we should be able to tell immediately what kinds of books we generally require. If at any time we require some other books, we can take advantage of the collection in the Vidyapith. We should not regard the Ashram and the Vidyapith as two independent institutions. Their spheres of activity are different, but the two have much in common between them and that area is gradually expanding.

If you do not understand any point in this, ask me again.

I am sure I do not consciously refuse to hear or observe

---

1 The addressee had objected to the transfer of books to the Vidyapith as this would be so much loss to the Ashram.
anything against a person about whom my views are formed.\textsuperscript{1} I always hear what others say, but my views may not change. I think it would be wrong for anyone to change, quickly, views formed after careful observation. It would, of course, be obstinacy never to change them. Hence, that too would be wrong. But there should be a sound reason for changing such a view. Often I require the evidence of proved facts. I cherish this nature of mine, which has saved me from many dangers and kept my relations with people unclouded by suspicion.

You are, therefore, free to ask me what you like. You will not get such an opportunity again.

The distinction you have made is correct.\textsuperscript{2} The writer of articles in \textit{Young India} is one person, and the man whom the inmates of the Ashram know intimately is another. In \textit{Young India}, I might present myself as one of the Pandavas, but, in the Ashram, how can I help showing myself as I am? I am, moreover, a votary of truth and can make no attempt consciously to hide my weaknesses. Hence, the Kauravas dwelling in me make their presence felt in one way or another. Haven’t you said that a conflict is always going on in me between the divine and the demoniac? I feel, however, that the Kauravas are being vanquished. But one cannot yet be positive about that. As Solon\textsuperscript{3} has said, the final judgment about a man can be expressed only after his death. I have known cases in which crores were reduced to a cowrie in a moment. I have, therefore, no pride in me at all. And what does pride avail one?

Remember that I do not revise the letters after writing them.

\textit{Blessings from BAPU}

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10272. Also C.W. 6720. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

\textsuperscript{1} The addressee had made this charge against Gandhiji.

\textsuperscript{2} The addressee had stated that Gandhiji the writer in \textit{Young India} appeared to be on a much higher plane than Gandhiji the man who had human limitations.

\textsuperscript{3} An ancient Greek philosopher
23. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
February 13, 1932

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter.

If you think it is proper, write a letter to Ramanathan pointing out the faults in his thinking. Maybe it is our duty to write to him, considering he has served us for so long. Let him misuse if he must what we write to him. This is only a suggestion.

The weaver Ramji writes that he does not have any yarn. Narandas may have mentioned this to you. But since he has written to me, I am drawing your attention to it.

Are you able to meet Gulzarilal? His wife is perhaps there with him. How is his physical condition? Does he get the food his body needs. Who is now in his place?

We are both keeping well. I have given up milk for the time being as it does not suit me. Instead of that, I am taking roasted and ground almonds which I had brought from England. It keeps me in good health. It remains to be seen whether or not the weight is maintained.

You must be having information about Mridula’s health. Let me know how she is.

There was a note from Anasuyabehn. I have not written to her separately.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32727

24. LETTER TO DURGA DESAI

February 14, 1932

CHL.

Tell Mahadev that the lucky ones get ‘C’ class, and that the unfortunate get ‘A’ class even if they ask for ‘C’. But we should accept whatever class we are awarded and learn what we can from our life as a prisoner in that class. Those whose minds run after comforts and luxuries may bother themselves with the distinction between ‘A’ and ‘C’. Those who find their happiness in self-denial should seek opportunities to practise it in all circumstances. The field for such opportunities is unlimited. One should not seek self-denial which will tear apart the skin on one’s back. Such self-denial is forbidden. Let him remember the following two shlokas:

1 Ramji Badhia

Those men who, wedded to pretentiousness and arrogance, possessed by the violence of lust and passion, practise fierce austerity not ordained by Shastras.¹

They, whilst they torture the several elements that make up their bodies, torture Me to dwelling in them; know them to be of unholy re-solves.²

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8934. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

25. LETTER TO PADMA

February 14, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

I got your letter. The Bhowali sanatorium is very near the place where you stay. I would advise you to get yourself examined there. Is there anybody there to help you? Is Joshiji³ there? It is rather surprising that there is no one there who can teach the Gita. Is Shantilal there? He is bound to know it. However, I don’t worry about this. Nor need you. You should first get back your health.

I hope you know that Maitri and Durgi have gone to Darjeeling for some time. Sarojinidevi should of course stay with you. That is perfectly in order. Shila must be growing into a big girl now. Do you take care of her?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6129. Also C.W. 3481. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

¹ Bhagavad Gita, xvii. 5
² Bhagavad Gita, xvii. 6
³ Presumably Chhaganlal Joshi, who was in Almora for some time.
26. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Night, February 11/15, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got both your packets. The fact that Ramji does not get yarn means, does it not, that we are short of it. Is the position likely to be the same at other places too? You alone can explain this.

I think you know that Madanmohan Bauhra wishes to come here for my darshan. Read my reply to him.

The problem of Budhabhai and Parvati seems a difficult one. Personally, I feel that they should live separately for some time. If you agree with this suggestion, try for it. If something else occurs to you, write to me. Does Parvati behave properly in the Ashram? Does she observe the rules?

You are being tested fairly well, it seems.

February 12, 1932

You have to carry a fairly good burden on account of the dairy. You are strong enough for that and transfer the burden to God, and so I don’t worry. It will be enough if Parnerkar can live there quietly. Let him do what he wishes.

My views about the orchard should be treated as those of a man without experience in that field. That is, unless they are confirmed by an expert, count them as no better than deserving to be thrown into the river Sabarmati.

Get some news about Prabhudas. If it is necessary, as his guardian, write to the authorities where he was sentenced to and inquire in which jail he is kept. Send to him at the address of that jail Dr. Talwalkar’s letter regarding his health.

Mirabehn had written to me directly and I, too, have replied1 to her directly. I have asked her to send that letter to you.

Totaramji should be examined by Haribhai for his piles. Does he suffer from constipation?

With whom do they intend to keep Dhiru in Palanpur? What about Vimala?

Send to the Japanese writer permission to translate Young India

1Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 11-2-1932
articles after informing Jivanji.

If Jairamdas’s letter contains nothing objectionable, it can certainly be sent to me.

Afternoon, February 15, 1932

I don’t ask you in every letter to convey the Sardar’s blessings or regards to all. But you should assume that he sends them with every letter. There are 68 letters this time, besides the talk on the Gita and this letter to you. A list is attached herewith, so that, if you do not receive any of the letters, you and I will know which.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8203. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

27. LETTER TO PHILIP HARTOG

February 15, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I am sorry I was unable, owing to circumstances beyond my control, to fulfill the promise I gave you about my statement on the condition of primary education in India during the pre-British time. Immediately on my landing I entrusted the research to Advocate Munshi, a member of the Bombay University Senate, and two other educationists friends. But they too like me find themselves civil resistance prisoners. I had asked Advocate Munshi to put himself in direct touch with you. But his arrest came so soon after mine that I hardly think he could have corresponded with you. As I am permitted to carry on non-political correspondence, I have now asked Prof. Shah to test my statement and give you the result of his test. As I found in you a fellow-seeker after the truth, I was most anxious to give you satisfaction either by confirming my statement or withdrawing it as publicly as I had made it. I thought that I would tell you what I had done in pursuance of my promise.

1 Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, printer and publisher of Navajivan
2 For the text of the Gita discourse (Ch. xvii) which followed, vide “Letters on the Gita”, 14-2-1932.
3 On October 20, 1931, at the Royal Institute of International Affairs; vide “Speech at Chatham House Meeting”, 20-10-1931
4 The source has “educational”.

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932 19
As I have not your private address by me, I am sending this to you under care India Office.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9410. Courtesy: India Office Library

28. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

Silence Day [On or after February 15, 1932]

CHI. NIRMALA (AUNT),

What sort of a girl you are that you complain of absence of letters from me while you yourself do not write. Did Durga convey my message to Mahadev? How is she? Ask her to write to me. How is Bablo?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9461

29. LETTER TO R. V. MARTIN

February 16, 1932

DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

In continuation of my letter to Major Bhandari and in confirmation of our conversation of today, what I need is the human touch with the co-workers who are not known to political fame and who have been brought to Yeravda. I have specially in mind Messrs Chhaganlal Joshi, Surendranath, Somabhai and my son, Ramdas. They, I know, are in the batch that was first sent to Yeravda. I need scarcely say that I have no desire to have any political discussion with them. And I can have no idea whatsoever of interfering with jail discipline.

As the matter has been now hanging for some time I would thank you to expedite it as much as possible.

Yours sincerely,

Home Department, Government of Bombay, I.G.P. File No. 9

1 From the reference to the “message to Mahadev” to be conveyed by Durga Desai (vide “Letter to Durga Desai”, 14-2-1932), the letter appears to have been written on the Silence Day subsequent to February 14.

2 Narayan Desai, son of Mahadev Desai

3 Vide “Letter to M. G. Bhandari”, 5-2-1932
30. LETTER TO RAMANANDA CHATTERJEE

February 16, 1932

DEAR RAMANANDA BABU,

I have duly received the Golden Book. What treasures of love have you poured into it? I gave two hours to it straightway. Thank you for thinking of sending it to me here. Had I got it outside, I would not have been able to go beyond opening it and laying it down with a sigh.

Yours sincerely

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: C.W. 9502. Courtesy: Santa Devi

31. LETTER TO TRIVENI J. MEHTA

February 18, 1932

CHI. TRIVENI,

I got your letter. There is no fixed mould for education. It consists in the purity of one’s love. A mother spoils her child if she regards it as hers. If, instead, she brings it up as a trust received from God, the child soon learns to behave well. I am writing on this subject in today’s letter for the women. Read it and think over it. Instead of paying attention to the weaknesses of others, we should try to become better ourselves.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. TRIVENI JAGJIVANDAS MEHTA
SABARMATI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 70. Also C.W. 8941. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 The Golden Book of Tagore; vide “Letter to Ramananda Chatterjee”, 6-2-1932
2 Vide the following item.
DEAR SISTERS,

Regardless of your number, someone among you should still shoulder the responsibility and keep your Association going. Prayers should continue without any change. I should regularly get a letter on behalf of all the women. Otherwise I, too, am likely by and by to get tired of writing. Who among you has charge of my letters and preserves them?

I will write today about a school that struck me as a wonderful institution. One or two men and one or two women run it jointly. They believe that even the dullest child responds to the law of love. And, accordingly, they have taken in hand the work of educating abandoned orphans who have become practically mindless. The school is run according to certain principles which their teacher has discovered through experiments in the method of love. These men and women have dedicated their lives to such children, who do not know that they are destitute and have no parents. They are brought up in open air and sunshine; the building they live in stands on spacious open ground. They are cured chiefly with the help of music. They make some slow artistic movements to the accompaniment of music, and even become absorbed in them. The women teachers treat the children as their own. They have their meals with the children, keep them cheerful and busy in games the whole day and gradually bring them out of their stupor. These kind-hearted men and women have been carrying on this experiment for the last three or four years only. This wonderful school is situated very near to where Mr. Horace Alexander lives. Seeing the school, I bowed my head in reverence and wondered what love could not do. It can make the dumb speak and the lame climb a mountain.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III. Also C.W. 8947. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
33. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

February 18, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

I got your letter. I may not give you full marks, because no examiner does. But according to me you deserve full marks. I should really learn from you. Always write as beautifully as you did this time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4076. Also C.W. 40. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

34. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE

February 18, 1932

CHI. MATHURI,

I get your letters regularly. But I hope you will satisfy my wish. Learn the alphabet carefully with Gajanan’s help and then write to me in a beautiful hand. Won’t you do this?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 262. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

35. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

February 18, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

I got your letter. You have also improved your handwriting well enough. And now you play on the harmonium. Must I come there and hear you play? But who knows how many years you will take to learn to play so well that one would enjoy hearing it? Must both of us remain here till then?

What do you say?

Blessings from

BAPU

36. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH
February 18, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

Take this a letter for you in your own strip of paper. When you have no ruled paper, you should rule a sheet with your own hands.

When you see Narahari, tell him that I was glad he asked for and got class ‘C’. I lay down one condition, however. He should take care of his health and not fall ill again. See that you learn now to write a letter properly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5765. Also C.W. 2988. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

37. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL
February 18, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

I got your letter. If you cannot think what to write in your letter, take Premabehn’s help. In a few days you will learn to write a very good letter. I am very glad that you feel happy there.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9421. Courtesy Ravindra R. Patel

38. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH
February 18, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

You have raised a correct question. You are sure that beating necessarily involves violence but it is not so. Supposing somebody has been bitten by a snake and is about to faint. In that case he will have to be fed even if it means beating him. This is no violence because this beating is inspired by love and is for the good of the patient. But supposing I have an ill feeling for you in my mind but do not beat you for want of an opportunity. Such an ill feeling is violence. The origin of violence lies in our own minds.
You can have cod-liver oil massage even if you have never taken it orally.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9945. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

39. LETTER TO KASHI GANDHI

February 18, 1932

CHI. KASHI,

I have your letter. You need not at all worry about Prabhudas. God has looked after him and will do so still. After meeting him, let me know all the facts. Probably you know that I had sent to Prabhudas my replies to some questions I had received concerning Krishna.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33088

40. LETTER TO KAPILRAI MEHTA

February 19, 1932

CHI. KAPIL,

I was glad you wrote to me. I was wondering where you were. I would advise you not to become the least impatient but to take complete rest and build up good health. Don’t be in a hurry to start eating cereals, but go on living on milk, curds and fruit for some more time. You should also eat lettuce and some raw tomatoes. By raw I mean not unripe; I mean fully ripe but uncooked tomatoes. And write to me from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Tell Nanabhai¹ that I often think of him and the Dakshinamurti² people.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3977. Also C.W. 1598. Courtesy: Kapilrai Mehta

¹ Nrisinhprasad Kalidas Bhatt
² An educational institution in Bhavnagar

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932
41. LETTER TO LAKSHMIBEHN N. KHARE

February 19, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMIBEHN,

I have again been writing letters to the women, but who is in charge of the work now? Why don’t you write [to me]? The class which was started ought not to be given up. The women who are still there should decide to continue it and you should then let me know. It is you who should take up this burden.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 279-a. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

42. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

February 19, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

Your letter was very good. I was glad that you wrote quite freely.

This is my reply to your criticism. I must hear what the persons concerned have to say in their defence. Only after that can I express my opinion in each case. In a general way, however, I can say that, whenever some freedom was permitted, it was done not as a privilege but as a matter of necessity. I have formed the impression that those who permit themselves any freedom do so not out of lethargy but because their bodies, or say their natures, demand it. We ought not to sit in judgment over others. We may not even be aware of the effort they make [to follow the rules]. This does not mean that such persons have no imperfection in them. If they did not have any, why did they join the Ashram at all? They are not hypocrites. There is a great error in believing that everyone should or can do what one does. If I tried to lift a weight which Hariyomal can, I would die that very moment. Similarly, it would be wrong of him to envy me my weakness.

Many have said that people deceive me. I don’t say that no one deceives me, but the number of such persons is certainly not large. I

1 Regarding inmates of the Ashram allowing themselves freedom from one or other of the Ashram rules
2 A strong man from Sind who worked on the Ashram farm have observed that many persons cannot, when they are away from me, keep up the standard of behaviour which they preserve when I am there. Some even leave me for this reason. There are many such instances and that is why I have been accused of possessing a kind of magnetism.

But this is not likely to satisfy you or others. Nor have I said this to defend myself. I have only explained my attitude. The real position, however, is this, and I have held this belief for many years. The deficiencies of the Ashram reflect my own. I have told many people that they cannot know me by meeting me. When they meet me, I may even impress them as being good. Even if I am not good, people would believe that I was because I am a lover of truth. My love of truth casts a momentary spell over people. In order to know me, people should see the Ashram in my absence. There would be no error and no injustice to me in believing that all its deficiencies are a reflection of my own deficiencies. It is but true that I have drawn the crowd which has gathered in the Ashram. If, though living in the Ashram, they have not been able to overcome their weaknesses but have, on the contrary, developed more, the fault is not theirs but mine. The imperfection of my spiritual striving is responsible for this state of affairs. Nor is it that I do not observe or know about my shortcomings. All that I can say is that they are there despite my best efforts to overcome them. And, moreover, I am convinced that, because I am ceaselessly striving to improve the Ashram, it has not, on the whole, fallen altogether from its ideal. I derive some satisfaction from the thought that every one of the three Ashrams which I established served or has served its immediate aim. I will not, however, deceive myself or anybody else with this comforting thought. I wish to travel far and there are hills and valleys to be crossed on the way. I am resolved, however, to continue the journey. And I rest in peace in the knowledge that there is no defeat in the quest for truth.

It is true indeed that the Ashram has not been able to attract the learned class. The reason is that I don’t regard myself as a learned man. The few learned men who were drawn to the Ashram joined it not in order to pursue their learned callings but to receive and nurse something else altogether. They [are] seekers after truth. The quest of truth may be undertaken even by the illiterate, by children and by theold, by women and by men. Literary education sometimes serves as the golden lid which covers the face of truth. I do not, by saying this, condemn such education, but only put it in its proper place. It is one of the means [in the pursuit of truth].

We have selected most of the prayers from Sanskrit because it is chiefly Hindus who joined the Ashram. We have no aversion to prayers in other languages. Don’t we use such prayers occasionally? If, instead of a large number of Hindus, a large number of Muslims had joined the Ashram, prayers from the Koran would be recited every day and I would even join such prayers.

Does this answer your doubts? Does it satisfy you? If it does not, ask me again and again. I shall not get tired. I wish to satisfy you. Don’t get tired.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10273. Also C.W. 6721. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

43. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

February 20, 1932

CHI. MATHURADAS¹.

I am glad that you have gone to the Ashram. I wrote that to Kamu many years ago. Doctors are now gradually coming to the conclusion that all diseases have one common cause and that, therefore, their main remedy also should be one. If anybody disregards modifications of that one remedy, that would not do him much or any harm. It might be said that the disease was not cured. But what even if the disease is cured? Surely the body does not become immune to death. Hence, if anybody sticks to only one remedy with faith, he commits no sin.

This is also true about spiritual maladies. The cause is always one, and that is the ego. The remedy also is one—giving up the ego, that is, reducing oneself to a cipher. How will one who is a cipher steal? How will he tell a lie or commit adultery? The very questions you have asked spring from ignorance. Let us take just one example. Of course you do not steal in the ordinary sense, but you are right in thinking that your lack of control in eating is a form of stealing. The remedy for this kind of stealing and the ordinary kind must be the same, that is, to give up the habit, to stop eating what you should not.

¹ Mathuradas P. Asar, an expert carder and khadi worker of the Ashram
But who is it that eats such food? The ego-self. Once that has vanished, the other self, though eating, will not be eating and will only give the body its wages. There will be no more question, then, of indulging the palate. Probably you will accept all this with your reason, but it will have meaning only if it sinks into the heart. We live in the Ashram and seek good company, sing bhajans, etc., daily, in order that this truth may sink into the heart. Some day we shall find what we are seeking. In other words, our malady in the form of the ego will be cured. From this you should be able to deduce all the answers, and if you cannot, no matter how much I write and explain, you will not feel satisfied. Ask me again and again till your doubts are resolved.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3753

44. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA P. KAMDAR
February 20, 1932

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA,

I got your letter. You have become careless about your handwriting. You ought not to have. Because you are married you should not forget what you have learnt; on the contrary, you should improve yourself. Forget your grief over Arvind\(^1\). Such separations are inevitable so long as we live in the body, and we ought to bear them. You may write to me whenever you wish to, and, so long as I can see visitors, you can certainly come. Do come. I don’t know how long I shall continue to see visitors.

Blessings from both of us. We are both faring well.

BAPU

---

\(^1\) Addressee’s son, who died an infant
45. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI G. PATEL

February 20, 1932

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

I have your letter.

There is not the slightest doubt that if we condone or take direct or indirect advantage of the untruth spoken or practised by a person with whom we associate, we become party to his untruth. It is for this reason that Tulsidas advises us to seek the company of the good. However, in practical life we cannot always live up to the ideal. We have to bear with our co-workers. We may consider the circumstances in each case and act within the limits of our capacity. We ought not to join where untruth is being deliberately practised, but having once found ourselves in a certain situation, it may not be possible to force ourselves out of it. Where the situation is ab initio permeated with untruth, we have of course the weapon of non-co-operation. Surely, it cannot be claimed that no one practises untruth in the Ashram. Still, we do not close down the Ashram, nor do we condone untruth; but we bear with our associates and strive to advance further every day. Nobody in this world can do more than this.

Have you come to know about the new method of spinning the takli? It is being practised at Wardha. One can draw 160 rounds in half an hour by following it. Why should your diary include anything other than your own daily activities? If necessary, you may give up recording even these.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9508. Also C.W. 424. Courtesy: Shivabhai G. Patel

46. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

February 20, 1932

BHAJ VITHALDAS,

I got your letter. Take rest till your body has completely recovered its strength. Do not be in the least impatient. The reason why khadi sales have gone down this time is as clear as daylight. But do not worry over that. “It is useless to sorrow over what God ordains.”1

Sardar is very well.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9778. Also C.W. 2808. Courtesy:
Purushottam D. Saraiya

47. LETTER TO LAKSHMI JERAJANI

February 20, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMI,

Your handwriting is certainly good. Why don’t you write in ink? The service you are giving to Jerajani [in his illness] is the best preparation for your future life.

Blessings from
BAPU

SJT. VITHALDAS JERAJANI
SASAVANE
DISTRICT ALIBAG

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9778. Also C.W. 2809. Courtesy:
Purushottam D. Saraiya

48. LETTER TO RAMESHWARLAL BAZAJ

[Before February 21, 1932]3

BHAI RAMESHWARLAL4.

I have your letter. I hope you received the letter I sent through Miss Lester.

My health is perfect. These days I do not take milk. I usually take almond paste, dates and tomatoes. I take an occasional papaya. The government have put no restriction on my diet. The weight is 106 pound. It was the same outside. There is no need to send anything

---

1 Ashram Bhajanvali; vide “Ashram Bhajanvali”
2 This letter is written on the postcard to Vithaldas Jerajani; vide the preceding item.
3 It is evident from the details of Gandhiji’s diet given in the letter that it was written before February 21, 1932 when Gandhiji started taking vegetables in the place of papaya; vide “ Diary, 1932”.
4 Benarsilal Bazaj’s father, residing in Britain from there. I get excellent almonds. Honey from Mahabaleshwar is sent to me. Write whenever you feel like it.

My time is spent in spinning and reading. A good deal of time is devoted to letter-writing as I am permitted to write to Ashram inmates. And I also sleep enough during the day-time. I walk about for two hours. Sardar Vallabhbhai is with me.

You must be receiving letters from Rukmini1. Both she and the baby are doing well. When will you come back?

I always recall your love.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 9446. Courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

49. LETTERS ON THE “GITA”2

CHAPTER I

Tuesday Morning, November 11, 1930

The Gita is a small portion of the Mahabharata. The latter is generally looked upon as a historical work. To us, however, the Mahabharata and the Ramayana are not historical works but are treatises on religion. Or, if we call them histories, they narrate the

---

1 Rukmini Benarsilal Bazaj, daughter of Maganlal Gandhi

2 Written during Gandhiji’s incarceration in Yeravda Central Prison in 1930 and 1932, these were sent weekly along with letters to Narandas Gandhi for being read out at the Ashram prayer meetings. Gandhiji commenced the series with Chapter XII: vide “Letter to Behramji Khambhatta”, 4-11-1930. The following week Gandhiji sent Chapter I, with a general introductory note on the Gita.

All the chapters are given here under February 19/21, 1932, the date of despatch of the letter to Narandas Gandhi, which carried the discourse on Chapter XVIII and concluded the series; vide the following item. The translation is reproduced from the Discourses on the Gita (Navajivan Publishing House, Ahmedabad-14, 1960) with slight changes to bring the text into conformity with the Gujarati original.

The Translator’s Preface in the Discourses on the Gita says: “Gandhiji’s Gujarati translation of the Gita was published on March 12, 1930, the never-to-be-forgotten day on which he marched to Dandi from Sabarmati. A member of the Ashram who read it found it very difficult to understand and complained about it to Gandhiji who was then in Yeravda Prison. Thereupon, he wrote a series of letters to the Ashram in which he devoted one letter to each chapter on the Gita. . . .”

For Gandhiji’s discourses on the Gita at Ashram prayer meetings in 1926, vide “Discourses on the Gita”, and for his Gujarati translation of the Gita with a commentary thereon written in 1929, vide “Anasaktiyoga”.

3 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi” 11-11-1930; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 11-11-1930.
history of the human soul; they do not tell of what happened thousands of years ago, but depict what takes place in the heart of every human being today. Both the works describe the eternal war between the God and the demon in man—between Rama and Ravana.
The Gita does this in the form of a dialogue between Arjuna and Krishna. The dialogue is narrated to the blind Dhritarashtra by Sanjaya. Literally Gita means that which is sung. The adjective applies to the noun Upanishad, which is understood, and so the full meaning of the phrase is “the Upanishad which was sung”. Upanishad means knowledge-teaching. The word ‘Gita,’ therefore, means Shri Krishna’s teaching to Arjuna. In reading the Gita we should feel that Shri Krishna—God—dwells in our hearts as the holy spirit within us, and that when, yearning for knowledge, like Arjuna, we take our spiritual difficulties to Him and seek His guidance, seek refuge in Him, He is ever ready to instruct us. We slumber, but the Lord within us is ever awake. He is only waiting for spiritual yearning to be awakened in us. We, however, do not know how to question Him, do not even feel the desire to do so. And so we read a work like the Gita every day and meditate over its teaching. By doing so, we wish to awaken spiritual yearning in us and learn what questions to put to the Lord. Whenever we are faced with spiritual difficulties, we turn to the Gita for their solution and obtain peace of mind through it. This is the spirit in which we should read the work. It is as it were our revered guru, our mother, and we should have faith that we shall be safe if we seek shelter in her lap. We can get all our spiritual difficulties solved through the Gita. Anyone who daily meditates over the teaching of the Gita in this manner will ever experience new joy in his study and find new meanings. There is no spiritual problem which the Gita cannot solve, though it may be that owing to our imperfect faith we do not know how to read and understand the work. We read the Gita as daily spiritual practice so that our faith may increase from day to day and we may become vigilant. I give here, for the guidance of the inmates of the Ashram, the meaning of the Gita which my daily meditation over its teaching has revealed or reveals to me.

When the Pandavas and the Kauravas gathered together on the battle-field of Kurukshetra (the field of Kuru) with their armies, Duryodhana, the king of the Kauravas, approached Drona (his teacher in the science of war) and named the leading warriors on either side.
As a signal for the battle to begin, conch-shell horns were sounded on both the sides and Shri Krishna who was Arjuna’s charioteer drove his chariot into a place between the two armies. The scene which greeted Arjuna’s eyes unnerved him, and he said to Shri Krishna: “How can I attack these in battle? I might readily enough if I had to fight with strangers, but these are my kinsmen. The Kauravas and the Pandavas are first cousins. We were brought up together. Drona is our teacher as well as the Kauravas’. Bhishma is a revered elder for both. How can I fight against him? It is true that the Kauravas are miscreants and doers of evil deeds. They have wronged the Pandavas and deprived them of their lands. They have insulted the saintly Draupadi. But what shall I gain by killing them? They are fools indeed. But shall I also be equally foolish? I have some little knowledge. I can discriminate between right and wrong. I thus see that it is a sin to fight against relatives. Never mind if they have taken wrongful possession of the Pandavas’ share in the kingdom. Never mind even if they kill us. But how dare we raise our hand against them? O Krishna, I will not fight against my kith and kin.”

With these words, Arjuna sank down on the seat of the chariot, being overwhelmed by grief.

Here ends the first Chapter which is entitled “The Sorrow of Arjuna”. All of us should feel pain even as Arjuna did. No acquisition of knowledge is possible unless there is in us a sense of something lacking and a desire to know the truth. If a man is not curious even to know what is wrong and what is right, what is the use of religion for him? The battle-field of Kurukshetra only provides the occasion for the dialogue between Arjuna and Krishna. The real Kurukshetra is the human heart, which is also a dharmakshetra (the field of righteousness) if we look upon it as the abode of God and invite Him to take hold of it. Some battle or other is fought on this battle-field from day to day. Most of these battles arise from the distinction between ‘mine’ and ‘thine’, between kinsmen and strangers. Therefore, as we shall find later on, the Lord tells Arjuna that attraction (raga) and repulsion (dvesha) lie at the root of sin. When I look upon a person or thing as ‘mine’, raga takes hold of my mind; and when I look upon him as a stranger, aversion or hatred enters the mind. Therefore we must forget the distinction between ‘mine’ and ‘thine’. That is to say, we must give up our likes and dislikes. This is the teaching of the Gita and all other scriptures. To say this is one thing; to practise it is quite another. The Gita is there to teach us how to practise. We will try to understand the method it recommends.
CHAPTER II

Monday Morning, November 17, 1930

When Arjuna had picked himself up a little, the Lord rebuked him and said: “How is it that this delusion has come to you? It is unworthy of a warrior like you.” But even then Arjuna stuck to his first position, refused to fight and said: “If in order to get it, I have to slay elders and other relations, I do not want not only a kingdom on this earth but even the delights of paradise. My mind gropes in darkness. I do not know where my duty lies. I put myself into your hands. Please guide me.”

Finding that Arjuna was bewildered and aspired after knowledge, Krishna had pity on him and proceeded to explain things to him: “Your sorrow is for nothing, and you utter words about wisdom without understanding. You have evidently forgotten the distinction between the body and the embodied soul. The soul never dies; but the body passes through childhood, youth and old age and perishes in the end. The body is born but the soul is birthless and unchanging. It ever was, is now and will be there for all time to come. For whom then do you grieve? Your grief arises from a delusion. You look upon these Kauravas as your own, but you are aware that their bodies will come to an end. And as for the souls which inhabit these bodies, no one can destroy them. The soul cannot be wounded by weapons, burned by fire, dried by the wind or drowned in water. Then again, consider this from the standpoint of your duty as a warrior with an army under his command. If you refuse to fight this righteous war, the consequences will be the very reverse of what you expect and you will become an object of ridicule. You have always enjoyed the reputation of being a brave man. But if now you withdraw from the battle, you will be supposed to have been driven from it by fear. If it were part of your duty to flee in the face of danger, disgrace would not matter, but if you retire from battle now, you will have failed to discharge your duty, and people will be justified in condemning your flight.

“Thus far, I have tried to reason out things, draw a distinction between the body and the soul and remind you of your duty as a warrior. But let me now explain karmayoga (the method of action). A practitioner of karmayoga never comes to harm. It has nothing to do with chopping logic. It is something to be translated into action and experience. An ounce of practice is more profitable than tons of argumentation. And this practice too must not be vitiated by speculation about its fruit. Literalists perform Vedic rites directed to the acquisition of material rewards. If one rite does not yield the expected fruit, they have recourse to another, and being disappointed once more, they take up a third. And thus they suffer from utter mental confusion. As a matter of fact, it is up to us to do our duty without wasting a single thought on the fruits of our action. To fight is the duty you have to discharge at present. Gain or loss, defeat or victory, is not in your power. Why should you carry the needless burden of thinking about them and be like the dog who walks under a cart and imagines that it is being drawn by himself and not by the bullocks? Defeat and victory, heat and cold, pleasure and pain come to a man in turn and he must put up with them. Without worrying about the fruit of action, a man must devote himself to the performance of his duty with an evenness of temper. This is yoga, or skill in action. The success of an act lies in performing it, and not in its result, whatever it is. Therefore be calm and do your duty regardless of consequences."

---

\(^1\) This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 13/17-11-1930; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”

On hearing all this Arjuna said: “The course of conduct you have mapped out for me seems to be beyond my capacity. Not to worry about defeat or victory, not to waste a thought on the result how can one attain such evenness of temper and steadfastness in spirit? How does a man with such attainments behave, and how are we to recognize him?”

The Lord replied: “O King, one who renounces all the cravings which torment the heart and derives his contentment from within himself is said to be a sthitaprajna or samadhistha (one stable in spirit). He is unruffled in adversity, and he does not hanker after happiness. Pleasure and pain are felt through the five senses. Therefore this wise man draws his senses away from sense-objects even as a tortoise draws in his limbs. The tortoise withdraws into his shell when he apprehends danger. But in the case of human beings sense-objects are ready to attack the senses at all times; therefore their senses must always be drawn in, and they should be ever ready to fight against sense-objects. This is the real battle. Some people resort to self-mortification and fasting as weapons of defence against sense-objects. These measures have their limited use. The senses do not make for sense-objects so long as a man is fasting, but fasting alone does not destroy his relish for them. On the other hand that relish may be heightened when the fast is broken, and a man can get rid of it only with the grace of God. The senses are so powerful that they drag a man behind them by force if he is not on his guard. Therefore a man must always keep them under control. This end he can achieve only if he turns his eyes inward, realizes God who resides in his heart and is devoted to Him. One who thus looks upon Me as His goal and surrenders his all to Me, keeping his senses in control, is a yogi stable in spirit.

"On the other hand, if a man is not master of his senses, he is always musing on the objects of sense and conceives an attachment for them, so that he can hardly think of anything else. From this attachment arises desire; and when the desire is thwarted he gets angry. Anger drives him nearly mad. He cannot understand what he is about. He thus loses his memory, behaves in a disorderly manner and comes to an ignoble end. When a man’s senses rove at will, he is like a rudderless ship which is at the mercy of the gale and is broken to pieces on the rocks. Men should therefore abandon all desires and restrain their senses, so that these do not indulge in undesirable activity. The eyes then will look straight and that too only at holy objects; the ears will listen to hymns in praise of God or to cries of distress; hands and feet will be engaged in service. Indeed all the organs of sense and of action will be employed in helping a man to do his duty and making him a fit recipient of the grace of God. And once the grace of God has descended upon him, all his sorrows are at an end. As snow melts in the sunshine, all pain vanishes when the grace of God shines upon him and he is said to be stable in spirit.

“But if a man is not stable-minded, how can he think good thoughts? Without good thoughts there is no peace, and without peace there is no happiness. Where a stable-minded man sees things clear as daylight, the unstable man distracted by the turmoil of the world is as good as blind. On the other hand what is pure in the eyes of the worldly-wise looks unclean to and repels the stable-minded man. Rivers continuously flow into the sea, but the sea remains unmoved; in the same way all sense-objects come to the yogi, but he always remains calm like the sea. Thus one who abandons all desires, is free from pride and selfishness and behaves as one apart, finds peace. This is the condition of a perfect man of God, and he who is established therein even at the final hour attains the beatitude of Brahman.”
CHAPTER III

Monday Morning, November 24, 1930

When Krishna had thus set forth the marks of identification for a sthitaprajna person, Arjuna received the impression that one had only to sit quiet in order to attain such a state, as Krishna had not made the slightest reference to any need for action on his part. He therefore asked Krishna: “It seems as if you hold that knowledge is superior to action. If so, why are you urging me to this terrible deed and thus confusing my mind? Please tell me clearly where my welfare lies.”

Krishna replied: “O sinless Arjuna, since the beginning of time seekers have taken one or the other of two different paths. In one of these the pride of place is given to knowledge and in the other it is given to action. But you will find that freedom from action cannot be attained without action, that wisdom never comes to a man simply on account of his having ceased to act. Man does not become perfect merely by renouncing everything. Don’t you see that every one of us is doing something or other all the time? Our very nature impels us to action. Such being the law of nature, one who sits with folded hands but lets his mind dwell on the objects of sense is a fool and may even be called a hypocrite. Rather than indulge in such senseless inactivity, is it not better that a man should control the senses, overcome his likes and dislikes, and engage himself in some activity or other without fuss and in a spirit of detachment? Do your allotted duty, restraining the organs of sense, for that is better than inaction. An idler will only meet his end the sooner for his idleness. But while acting, remember that action leads to bondage unless it is performed in a spirit of sacrifice. Sacrifice (yajna) means exerting oneself for the benefit of others, in a word, service. And where service is rendered for service’s sake, there is no room for attachment, likes and dislikes. Perform such a sacrifice; render such service. When Brahma created the universe, He created sacrifice along with it, as it were, and said to mankind: ‘Go forth into the world; serve one another and prosper. Look upon all creatures as gods. Serve and propitiate those gods, so that being pleased they will be gracious to you and fulfil your wishes unasked.’ Therefore understand that whoever enjoys the fruits of the earth, without serving the people and without having first given them their share, is a thief.

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 21/25-11-1930; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 21/25-11-1930
And he who enjoys them after having given all creatures their share is entitled to such enjoyment and is thus freed from sin. On the other hand, those who labour only for themselves are sinners and eat the fruit of sin. It is a law of nature that creatures are sustained by food, food production depends on the rains, and the rains descend on the earth on account of yajna, that is to say, the labour of all creatures. There is no rain where there are no creatures, and it does rain where they are there. All live by labour; none can remain idle and live, and if this is true of the lower forms of life, it is still more applicable to man. Action takes its origin from Brahma and Brahma from the imperishable Brahman; therefore the imperishable Brahman is present in all kinds of sacrifice or service. And whoever breaks this chain of mutual service is a sinner and he lives in vain.

Tuesday Morning

“When a man enjoys peace of mind and contentment, it may be said that there is nothing left for him to do. He does not stand to gain by action or by inaction. He has no personal interests to serve; and yet he must not cease to offer sacrifice. Therefore do your duty from day to day without entertaining likes and dislikes and in a spirit of detachment. He who acts in such a spirit enjoys the beatific vision. Then again, if even a selfless king like Janaka reached perfection all the while working for the good of the people, how can you behave in a way different from his? Whatever a good and great man does, common people imitate. Take My own case for instance. I have nothing to gain by action, and yet ceaselessly do I pour myself out in action. Hence it is that people too go on working more or less. But what would happen if I ceased to work? The world would collapse if the sun, the moon and the stars ceased to move. And it is I who set them in motion and regulate their activity. But there is a difference between My attitude and the attitude of the common man. I act in the spirit of perfect detachment while he harbours attachment and works in his own interest. If a wise man like you ceased to act, others too would do the same and their minds would be unsettled. Therefore do your duty without attachment, so that others might not cease to work and might gradually learn to work without attachment. Man is bound to work in obedience to and in conformity with his own nature. Only a fool thinks that he himself is the doer. To breathe is a part of man’s nature; when an insect settles upon the eye, the eyelid moves of its own accord. And nobody says: ‘I take in the air’ or ‘I move the eyelid’. In the same manner why should not all human actions be performed in accordance with the qualities of nature? Why should there be any egoism about it? In order that a man may be able thus to act naturally and without attachment, the best thing for him to do is to dedicate all his actions to Me and perform them without egoism as a mere instrument in My hands. When a man thus gets over selfishness, all his actions are natural and free from taint and he escapes many a trouble. Actions then have no binding force for him. Action being natural, it is sheer egoism to outrage nature and to claim to be inactive. The victim of such egoism will externally appear not to act, but his mind is always active in scheming. This is worse than external activity and has all the greater binding force.

“As a matter of fact the senses feel attraction and aversion for their respective objects. For instance the ears like to hear some things and do not like to hear other things. The nose likes to smell the rose, and does not like to smell dirt. This is also true of the other organs of sense. Therefore what man has to do is not to submit to these two robbers, namely, attraction and repulsion. If one wishes to escape their attentions, he must not go about in search of action. He must not hanker after this today, that tomorrow and the other thing the day after. But he should hold himself ready to render for the sake of God such service as falls to his share. Thus he will cultivate within himself the feeling that whatever he does is in fact an act of God and not his own, and his egoism will be a thing of the past. This is svadharma (one’s own duty). One must stick to svadharma, for it is the best for oneself at any rate. Paradharma (another’s duty) may appear to be better, but even so it should be looked upon as dangerous. Moksha (salvation) lies in embracing death while doing one’s own duty.”

When Krishna said that action performed by one who is free from likes and dislikes is sacrifice, Arjuna asked: “What is it that makes a man commit sin? Very often it seems as if he were driven to sin by some outsider against his own will.”

Krishna replied: “The slave-drivers in this case are kama (desire) and krodha (anger). These are like blood brothers. If desire is not satisfied, anger is the inevitable consequence. One who is the slave of desire and anger is said to be inspired by rajoguna (the quality of passion), which is man’s greatest enemy and against which he has to fight day in, day out. As dust hides a mirror, smoke suffocates a fire and the womb covers the embryo, even so anger deprives knowledge of its lustre and suffocates it. And desire is insatiable like fire, and taking possession of man’s senses, mind and intellect, knocks him down. Therefore first control your senses, and then conquer the mind. When you have done this, the intellect also will obey your orders. For, though among the senses, the mind and the intellect, the mind is greater than the senses and the intellect is greater than the mind, the soul is the greatest of all. Man has no idea of his own strength or soul-force, and tends to believe that the senses, the mind and the intellect are not amenable to his control. But when once he has gained confidence in soul-force, everything else becomes easy as a matter of course. And desire, anger and their countless hosts hold no terror for him who has mastered the senses, the mind and the intellect.”

[Note.] I call this chapter the key to an understanding of the Gita, and the gist of it is that life is given us for service and not for enjoyment. We have therefore to impart a sacrificial character to our lives. Intellectual assent to this proposition is only the first step, but such assent and conduct in terms of that assent are bound to rid our heart of its impurities in course of time. But what is real service? In order to obtain the right answer to this question, restraint of the senses is essential, as it gives us a clearer and clearer vision of the God of truth. Service rendered with selfish motives ceases to be sacrifice. Hence the urgent need for the spirit of detachment. When this is understood, all manner of controversies lose their meaning for us. ‘Did Krishna really ask Arjuna to kill his relatives? Could such killing ever be a part of one’s duty?’ Questions like these are set at rest for ever. When detachment governs our actions, even the weapon raised in order to strike an enemy down falls out of our hand. But a mere pretence of detachment serves no useful purpose. If only we persevere in our effort, detachment may come to us perhaps the very first day, or maybe only after a thousand years. We must not worry over the time this takes, for the effort carries within itself the seeds of success. We must however be on our guard and make sure that it is a genuine effort, and that there is no self-deception. And this is certainly possible for us all.

CHAPTER IV

Monday Morning [December 1, 1930]

The Lord says to Arjuna: “The yoga of selfless action which I commend to you is an ancient truth; I am not propounding any new doctrine. I have declared it to you, as you are my devoted friend, in order to heal the conflict in your mind. Whenever goodness weakens and evil grows from strength to strength, I incarnate Myself and

---

1 This note has also appeared under the date of writing in “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 24-11-1930

2 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, November 27/December 3, 1930; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 27-11-1930 , 3-12-1930.
protect the good and destroy the wicked. Those who are aware of this power (maya) of Mine are confident that evil is bound to go under. I am always by the good man’s side. He never strays from the strait and narrow path and he comes to Me at last, for he meditates on Me and hides himself in Me and thus is delivered from passion and anger and is purified by austerity and wisdom. As a man sows, so he reaps. None can escape from the operation of the laws I have made. I established the four varnas (classes, not castes) by the different distribution of qualities and actions. However I am not their author, for I do not desire the fruits of action and have nothing to do with the merit or demerit arising therefrom. This divine maya (course of action) is worth knowing. All activities prevalent in the world are subject to divine laws, and yet God is not defiled by them. Therefore He is, and also is not, their author. And a man who does likewise and acts in a spirit of detachment without being defiled by actions and by the yearning for their fruit is sure to be saved. In action he sees inaction and he understands at once what is wrong action. Wrong actions are all those that are inspired by desire and cannot be performed in the absence of desire, such for instance as theft, adultery and the like. These simply cannot be done in a spirit of detachment. Therefore those who do the duty that lies nearest without desire and scheming for the fruit of the action may be said to have burnt up their actions in the fire of wisdom (jnana). A man who has thus abandoned the attachment to the fruit of action is always contented, always independent. He has his mind under control. He gives up all his possessions. And his activity is natural like the bodily functions of a healthy individual. He is free from any pride or even consciousness that he is acting on his own. He has the realization that he is a mere instrument of the divine will. What does it matter whether he meets with success or with failure? He is neither elated by the one, nor unnerved by the other. All his work is done as a sacrifice (yajna), that is to say, as service to the world. He meditates upon God in all his actions and in the end comes to Him.

“There are many forms of sacrifice, the root of which lies in purity and service, such as, for instance, control of the senses, charity and pranayama (breath-control) practised with a view to self purification. Knowledge of these can be acquired from a wise teacher (guru) through humility, earnestness and service. If anybody indulges in various activities which he thinks are yajna, without any understanding of what yajna is, he will only do harm to himself and to the world. It is therefore necessary that all actions should be performed intelligently. This wisdom (jnana) is not mere book-learning. In it there is no room for doubt. It begins with faith and ends in experience. It enables a man to see all beings in himself and to see himself in God so that everything appears to him to be actually informed by God. Such wisdom effects the salvation of the worst of sinners. It releases the seeker from the bondage of action, so that he is not affected by its results. There is nothing else in the world so holy as this wisdom. Therefore try to obtain it with a heart full of faith in God and with the senses under control, so that you will enjoy perfect peace of mind.”

[NOTE.] The third, the fourth and the following fifth chapter should be read together, as they explain to us what the yoga of selfless action (anasakti) is and what are the means of practising it. If these three chapters are properly understood, the reader will have less difficulty in tackling what follows. The remaining chapters deal in detail with the ways and means of achieving anasakti. We should study the Gita from this point of view, and if we pursue this study we shall find without much trouble a solution of the problems which confront us from day to day. This calls for daily practice. Let everybody try it. If for instance he is angry, let him remember the verse dealing with anger and subdue that enemy. Supposing we heartily dislike somebody, or are impatient or gluttonous or in doubt as to whether we should do or should not do something or other, all these difficulties can be solved with the help of Mother Gita if we have faith in it and give it constant study. Our daily recitation of the Gita as well as this series of letters is a means to this end.¹

CHAPTER V²

December 9, 1930

Arjuna said: “You speak highly of knowledge, so that I am inclined to think that action is unnecessary. But then you also praise action, thus making me feel that unselfish performance of action is the thing to do. My mind will be at peace only if you tell me definitely which of the two is better.”

The Lord replied: “Sannyasa means knowledge and karmayoga means selfless action. Both of them are good, but if I had to choose between the two, I should say that yoga or selfless action is better. The man who does not hate anyone or anything, does not long for anything and is free from the pairs of opposites such as heat and cold,

¹ This note has also appeared under the date of writing in “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”

² This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 4/9-12-1930; vide “Letter to narandas Gandhi”4/9-12-1930
pleasure and pain, is a sannyasi (wise man, literally, one who renounces the world), no matter whether he is or is not a performer of action. He easily casts off the chain that binds him. Only the ignorant speak of wisdom and action as different, not the learned. The fruit of both is the same; both lead to an identical goal. Therefore he who sees them as one sees truly. The man of pure wisdom achieves his object by merely willing it, and has no need to perform an outward act. When the city of Mithila was on fire, others were bound to rush to it and fight the fire. But King Janaka contributed to this fight by his mental determination only, for his servants were ready to obey his commands. If he had run about with a water-pot to quench the fire, he would only have done harm; others would have stared at him and failed to perform their own duty, or at the most would have rushed here and there with a view to the King’s safety. But it is not given to every one of us to become a Janaka at once. It is indeed a very difficult task to reach a Janaka-like state. Only one in a million can reach it as the fruit of service extending over many lives, and it is not a bed of roses either. As a man goes on performing selfless action, his thought grows from strength to strength and he resorts less and less to external action. But he is hardly conscious of this change, and he has not this change in view either. He is devoted only to service, with the result that his power of rendering service increases to such an extent that he hardly seems to rest from service. And finally his service is limited to thought alone, just as an object in extraordinary motion seems to be at rest. It is obviously improper to say that such a man does nothing. But this lofty state can, as a rule, be only imagined, and not experienced. Hence my preference for karmayoga. Millions derive the fruit of sannyasa (wisdom, literally, ‘renunciation’) from selfless action alone. They would fall between two stools if they tried their hand at sannyasa. If they take to sannyasa, it is very likely that they will become hypocrites, and as they have ceased to perform action, they are lost altogether. But a man who has purified himself by means of selfless action, who has his mind and his senses under control and who has identified himself with all beings, loving them as himself—such a man stands apart from action although he is acting all the time, and is not bound by it. He talks, he walks, he takes part in normal human activity, but his activity seems to be merely a function of his organs of sense, and he himself seems to be doing nothing. The bodily functions of a physically healthy person are natural and spontaneous. His stomach for instance functions independently of him; he has not to bother about its functioning. Similarly a spiritually healthy person, though acting through his body, is not tainted by it and may be said to be doing nothing. Therefore a man should dedicate all his actions to Brahma (God) and perform them on His behalf, so that in spite of his activity he does not earn either merit or demerit and is untouched by either, like a lotus leaf which is untouched by water.

Tuesday Morning

“Therefore a yogi (man of selfless action), performing action with the body, mind and understanding in a spirit of detachment and without egotism, purifies himself and enters into peace. The non-yogi, on the other hand, being attached to the fruit of action, is a prisoner bound by his own desires. The yogi lives blissfully in the city with nine gates, that is, his body, having renounced all actions by his mind, and realized that there is nothing at all that he himself is doing or getting done. The man with a purified soul does not commit sin, nor does he do any meritorious deed. He who acts in a spirit of detachment, having destroyed his egotism and renounced the fruit of action, becomes a mere machine moving at the will and pleasure of the Master Mechanic or an instrument in the hands of God. The question, therefore, of his earning merit or demerit does not arise. On the other hand, the ignorant man is always counting his merit and demerit, and sinking deeper and deeper into the pit, so that in the end the only thing he has earned is demerit. But as regards the man who destroys his own ignorance by knowledge from day to day, his spontaneous actions grow purer and purer, and appear perfect and meritorious in the world’s eyes. He sees all things with an equal eye. He is equi-minded towards a learned and humble Brahma-knowing Brahmin, a cow, an elephant, a dog and a degraded human being who is worse than a beast. That is to say, he serves them all with equal devotion. He does not honour any one of them or treat another with contempt. The man of selfless action holds himself to be the world’s debtor, and he repays what he owes to everyone else and does him full justice. Here on earth he takes the creation captive and is filled with the spirit of the Supreme. He is not elated if anybody does something pleasant; nor is he pained if foul abuse is poured upon him. The man attached to the world seeks happiness from outside himself. On the other hand, he who acts in a spirit of selfless detachment discovers the spring of eternal peace in himself, having withdrawn his mind from external objects. All sensual pleasures are a source of pain. One should resist the rush of desire, anger and the like. The selfless yogi is constantly engaged in doing good to all creatures. His mind is free from doubt. He is not of the world though he is in the world. He turns his eyes inward by means of pranayama (control of breath), etc., and conquers desire, fear and anger. He knows Me alone to be the supreme Lord of all, the Friend, and the recipient of sacrificial offerings, and enters into My peace.”

CHAPTER VI

Tuesday Morning, December 16, 1930

The Lord said: “The man who does his duty without any selfish desire for fruit may be called a sannyasi as well as a yogi. But he who abstains from action altogether is only an idler. The root of the matter is that one should not allow his mind to flit from one object of desire to another and from that to a third. He who would practise yoga, i.e., evenness of temper (samatvam), cannot but perform action. The man who has achieved such evenness of temper will be serene, because his mere thoughts are charged with the strength of action. A yogi is one who is not attached to the objects of sense or to action and whose mind has ceased to roam restlessly.

“A man can be saved or ruined by himself alone. Therefore he becomes his own friend or his own enemy as the case may be. To one who has subdued his mind, his soul is a friend; while the soul is an enemy for him who has failed to achieve self-control. The test for self-control is that heat and cold, pleasure and pain, honour and dishonour do not disturb one’s inner serenity. He is a yogi who is a man of knowledge as well as experience, who is unwavering and master of his senses and to whom gold, stone and earth seem all alike. He regards with an equal eye friend and foe, sinner and saint. With a view to attaining this state a man should stabilize his mind, divest it of all sensual desires, and meditate in solitude on the Supreme Self. It is not enough to practise yogic asanas (postures), etc. In order to achieve evenness of temper, one must scrupulously keep the major observances (vratas), such as brahmacharya (chastity) and the like. A man who thus takes his place on a firm seat, keeps the observances and concentrates his mind on God, enters into perfect peace.

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 13/16-12-1930; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 13/16-12-1930
“This equanimity is not for one who overeats or merely fasts, nor for one who is too much addicted to sleep or to vigils. Its seeker has to keep a sense of proportion in all his actions such as eating and drinking, sleeping and keeping awake. To overeat one day and fast the next day, to oversleep for a day and keep a vigil the next, to work hard for a day and pass the next in idleness is no characteristic of a yogi. The yogi is stable-minded at all times, and is without effort free from all desires. He is like an unflickering lamp burning in a windless place. He is not tossed to and fro by dramatic events on the world-stage or by his own brain waves. Such mental poise can be acquired by slow but steady effort. The mind is fickle and restless, but it should be gradually stabilized, for a man can have peace of mind only when he is firm of understanding. In order thus to stabilize the mind, he should constantly fix it on the soul. He will then see all beings in himself and himself in all beings, for he will see Me in all beings and all beings in Me. He who is absorbed in Me, and sees Me everywhere ceases to be himself, so that he is at all times attuned to Me irrespective of what he is doing, and is incapable of sin.”

Yoga thus described seemed to Arjuna to be a tall order, and he exclaimed: “How is one to achieve such equanimity? The human mind is restless like a monkey, and as difficult to control as the wind. How is it to be curbed?”

The Lord replied: “You are right. But if a man earnestly sets about conquering attachment and aversion, yoga will not be difficult for him to practise. But it should be clear to you that it is not for one who cannot control his mind.”

Then Arjuna posed another question: “Supposing a man has faith, but is lax in his effort and is thus unsuccessful in perfecting himself, what happens to him? Is he destroyed like a broken cloud in the sky?”

The Lord said: “Such a man of faith is never lost, for no one who takes the right path ever comes to an evil end. After death he lives for a time in some celestial world according to his merit and is then reborn on the earth into a holy family. But such a birth is difficult to obtain. He then regains the mental impressions developed in his former lives, and struggling harder for perfection, reaches the supreme goal. Thus making an assiduous effort some attain equanimity soon, while others do so after a number of lives in accordance with the measure of their faith and endeavour. This evenness of temper is superior to asceticism, to knowledge and to sacred rites, for these latter are after all only means to the end of equanimity. Do you therefore become evenminded and a yogi. And even among yogis hold him to be the best who dedicates his all to Me and worships Me alone in full faith.”

[Note] Pranayama (control of breath) and asanas (yogic postures) are referred to appreciatively in this chapter, but we should remember that at the same time the Lord has stressed the need for brahmacharya, i.e., keeping the observances calculated to take us nearer and nearer to God. It should be clearly understood that the mere practice of asanas and the like can never take us to the goal of evenmindedness. Asanas and pranayama may be of some slight help in steadying the mind and making it single-purposed, provided that they are practised to that end. Otherwise they are no better than other methods of physical training. They are very useful indeed as physical exercise and I believe that this type of exercise is good for the soul, and may be performed from a bodily standpoint. But I have observed that these practices do only harm when indulged in for the acquisition of supernormal powers (siddhi) and the performance of miracles. This chapter should be studied as a summary of the teaching in the preceding three chapters. It cheers us up in our spiritual struggle. We should never be down-hearted and give up the endeavour to reach evenness of temper.¹

CHAPTER VII²

Tuesday Morning [December 23, 1930]

The Lord said: “O King, I will tell you how a man who devotes his whole mind to Me, takes refuge in Me and practises karmayoga can have perfect knowledge of Me free from the shadow of a doubt. I will declare to you this knowledge based on experience, which having been known, nothing more here remains to be known. Hardly one from among thousands strives to acquire this knowledge, and perhaps one only of these strivers makes a success of it.

“Earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, intellect and egoism— this is the eightfold composition of My prakriti (nature). This is the lower nature; the other is higher nature, that is, life. This world is born of these two natures, that is to say, from the coming together of body and soul. Therefore I am the cause of the origin and destruction of all things. As pearls are strung on a thread, even so is the world held

¹ This note has also appeared under the date of writing in “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 13/16-12-1930
² This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 18/23-12-1930; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 18/23-12-1930
...together by Me. Thus I am the taste in the waters, the light in the sun and the moon, the syllable ‘Om’ in the Vedas, the sound in ether, the spirit of enterprise in men, the sweet smell in the earth the brightness in fire, the life in all that lives, the austerity of ascetics, the intelligence of the intelligent, the pure strength of the strong, and the craving of all beings which does not run counter to righteousness. In short you should understand that all that belongs to the states of sattva, rajas and tamas proceeds from Me, and depends upon Me alone. People deluded by these three qualities (gunas) do not recognize Me Who am imperishable. My maya made of these qualities is hard to overcome. But those who take refuge in Me pass beyond this maya, that is, the three gunas. Foolish evil-doers cannot think of coming to Me even in their dreams. Being steeped in illusion, they roam in darkness and do not acquire knowledge. But the doers of good deeds worship Me. Some of them do so in order to obtain relief in their distress; others seek for knowledge of Me. A third group are inspired by a desire to get something for themselves while others worship Me with understanding, thinking it to be their duty. Worship of Me means service of My creation. This service is rendered by some because of their misery, by others in order to gain some advantage, by a third group out of curiosity as regards the outcome of such activity and by a fourth group who know what they are about and for whom service of others is something that they cannot do without. These last are My wise devotees, dearer to Me than all the rest of them. Or rather they know Me best and are nearest to Me. Their wisdom is the fruit of a quest extending over a number of lives, and when they have acquired this wisdom, they see nothing in the world except Me, Vasudeva. But those who are smitten by a variety of desires resort to other deities. I alone, however, am the giver of rewards commensurate with the devotion of each. The achievement too of these devotees of limited understanding is limited, but they rest content with it. These men in their ignorance imagine that they know Me through the senses. They do not realize that My imperishable and supreme form is beyond the reach of the senses and cannot be grasped with the hands, the ears, the nose, the eyes. Thus the ignorant do not recognize Me though I am the Creator of all things. This is my yogamaya (creative power).

---

1 Harmony, passion, sloth; or rhythm, activity, inertia
2 ibid
3 ibid
Pleasure and pain are the necessary consequence of likes and dislikes and keep mankind under the influence of delusion. But those who have freed themselves from delusion and purified their thoughts and actions hold firmly to their vows and offer Me constant worship. They know Me in the form of perfect Brahman (the Absolute) as well as of individual selves embodied as various kinds of creatures (adhyatma), and My creative action (karma). Those who thus know Me as the One who governs the material (adhibhuta) and the divine (adhidaiva) aspects and the sacrifices (adhiyajna) and have attained evenness of temper, are released from the bondage of birth and death after they have died. Because they have acquired the knowledge of reality their mind ceases to dwell on trivialities; they see the whole universe to be filled with the spirit of God and are absorbed in Him."

CHAPTER VIII

Monday Morning, December 29, 1930

Arjuna asked: “You spoke of ‘Brahman’ (the Absolute), ‘adhyatma’ ‘karma’, ‘adhibhuta’, ‘adhidaive’ and ‘adhiyajna’, but I do not understand the meaning of all these words. Again you say that at the hour of death you are revealed to those who know you as adhibhuta, etc., and have attained evenness of temper. Please explain all this to me.”

The Lord replied: “Brahman is the imperishable supreme aspect of God, and adhyatma is the individual soul living in the body of all beings as the doer and the enjoyer. Karma is the process through which all beings come into existence, or in other words, the process of creation. Adhibhuta is Myself as the perishable body, and adhiyajna is the individual soul purified through sacrifice. Thus whether as the body or as the foolish soul or as the purified soul or as Brahman, it is I who am everywhere. And never doubt this that he who meditates on Me in all these aspects at the hour of death, forgets himself, is careful of nothing and desirous of nothing will be united with Me. Whatever a man constantly dwells on in his mind and remembers at the time of death is realized by him. Therefore at all times you should remember Me and set your mind and heart upon Me and you will surely come to Me. You may say that it is hard thus to stabilize the mind. But you take it from Me that one can become single-minded by daily practice and constant endeavour, for as I told you just now, all embodied beings are in the essence Myself in various forms. For this he should prepare himself from the very first so that his mind does not go astray at the time of death, but is steeped in devotion, keeps the life force (prana) steady, and thinks only of Me as the Omniscient the Ancient, the Ruler, the subtle supporter of all and dispeller of ignorance like the sun which drives darkness away.

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 27/30-12-1930

“This supreme state is known to the Vedas as Akshara (the Imperishable) Brahman and is reached by sages who have freed themselves from likes and dislikes. All who desire to reach it observe brahmacharya, i.e., keep body, mind and speech under control and give up all objects of sense in these three ways. Men and women who die, having controlled the senses and uttering the sacred syllable ‘Om’ and remembering Me as they depart, reach the supreme state. Their mind is never distracted by other thoughts, and when they have thus come to Me, they are not reborn into this painful condition. To come to Me is the only means of breaking the vicious circle of birth and death.

“Men measure time by the human span of a hundred years, and during that period do thousands of questionable deeds. But time is infinite. A thousand yugas (ages) make up the day of Brahma; compared with it a human day or even a hundred years of human life are as nothing. What is the use of counting such infinitesimal measures of time? Human life is as only a moment in the infinite cycle of time. It is up to us therefore to think of God alone to the exclusion of all else. How can we afford to run after momentary pleasures? Creation and dissolution have gone on unceasingly during Brahma’s day and night and will do so in future too.

“Brahma who creates and dissolves beings is only an aspect of Me. He is the unmanifested which cannot be perceived by the senses. Beyond this unmanifested there is yet another unmanifested aspect of Mine of which I have spoken to you. He who reaches it is not reborn, for there is no day or night so far as this is concerned. This is a calm and immovable aspect, which can be realized only by single-minded devotion. It supports and pervades the whole universe.

“It is said that one who dies in the bright half of the month during Uttarayana (the northward movement of the sun from January to July) comes to Me if he is mindful of Me at the last moment, and that he who dies in the dark half of the month during Dakshinayana (the southward movement from July to January) is reborn into the world. ‘Uttarayana’ and the ‘bright fortnight’ here may be interpreted to mean the path of selfless service; and ‘Dakshinayana’ and the ‘dark half of month’ to mean selfishness. The path of service is the path of knowledge, and the path of selfishness is the path of ignorance. He who treads the path of knowledge is released from the bondage of birth and death, while he who takes the path of ignorance becomes a bondsman. After having realized the difference between the two, who would be so foolish as to prefer to walk the way of ignorance? All men should learn to discriminate between the paths, renounce all fruits of merit, act in a spirit of detachment and discharge their duty with all their heart and soul, and thus endeavour to reach the supreme state described by Me.”

CHAPTER IX

Monday Morning [January 5, 1931]

Having described the lofty state of a yogi in the last verse of the preceding chapter, the Lord now naturally proceeds to sing the glory of bhakti (devotion). For the yogi in terms of the Gita is neither a dry-as-dust man of knowledge, nor a devotee carried away by his own enthusiasm, but a selfless performer of action imbued with the spirit of wisdom as well as devotion.

So the Lord said: “As you are free from hatred, I shall now tell you the secret of wisdom, a knowledge of which will contribute to your welfare. This is the holy knowledge above all other and is easy to translate into action. Those who have no faith in it fail to find Me. Men cannot perceive My unmanifested form by their senses; yet it pervades the universe. It supports the universe; the universe does not support it. Again in a sense it may be said that all these beings are not in Me, and I am not in them. Although I am the source of all beings and their sustainer, they are not in Me and I am not in them; for in ignorance they do not know Me and are not devoted to Me. Know this to be My divine mystery.

“But though it seems as if I am not in these beings, I am like the air moving everywhere. All creatures pass into My nature at the end of a cycle and are reborn at the beginning of creation. These acts are Mine, but they do not bind Me, for I act in a spirit of detachment and am indifferent as to the fruit they bear. These events happen as such is

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 1/6-1-1931; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 1/6-1-1931
My nature. But people do not recognize Me in such a guise and deny My existence altogether. They entertain vain aspirations, perform vain actions and are full of ignorance, so that they can be said to partake of the nature of demons. But those who abide in the divine nature know and worship Me as the imperishable Creator. They are firm in their determination. They are always striving for virtue, praising Me, and meditating on Me. Others again believe Me to be one or to be many.
There are countless attributes of Me; therefore those who believe Me to be many think of different attributes as so many different faces of Mine. But one and all, they are My devotees.

“I am the intention to offer a sacrifice, I the sacrifice itself, I the offering made to the spirits of the fathers, I the herb, I the sacred verse (mantra), I the oblation, I the fire to which it is offered. I am the Father of this world, I the Mother, the supporter and the Grand sire, the object of knowledge, the syllable ‘Om’, Rig-Veda, Sam-Veda and Yajur-Veda. I am the end of the pilgrim’s path, the sustainer, the Lord, the Witness. I am the shelter, the lover, the origin, the dissolution, heat and cold, being and non-being. Those who perform the rites mentioned in the Vedas do so in order to gain their fruit.
They may thus attain the world of heaven, but they have to return to the world of mortals and to die. But if a man meditates upon Me with an undistracted mind and worships Me alone, I bear all his burdens, supply all his needs and protect his possessions. Some others who worship other deities with faith in their hearts are victims of ignorance, but they are really worshipping Me for I am the Lord of all sacrifices.
However, they do not know Me in My comprehensive nature and therefore are unable to reach the supreme state. Worshippers of the gods go to the world of the gods, the ancestor-worshippers to the world of the fathers and those who worship the spirits go to the spirits, while those who worship Me with the right approach come to Me. I accept the offering of love made by seekers, even if it be only a leaf or a flower. Therefore whatever you do, do it only as an offering to Me, so that your responsibility for the good and evil results will cease altogether. As you will have renounced all the fruits of action, there will be no more births and deaths for you. I am the same to all beings; one is hateful or dear to Me. But those who worship Me with devotion are in Me, and I am in them. This is not partiality but only the natural consequence of their devotion. Devotion indeed works wonders. He who worships Me in utter devotion becomes a saint even if he has been a sinner. As darkness vanishes before the sun, a man abandons his evil ways as soon as he comes to Me. Therefore know for certain that My devotee shall not perish. He becomes a man of religion and enters into My peace. Those who are born in the so-called lower castes and illiterate women, Vaishyas and Sudras who take refuge in Me come to Me. It goes without saying that so do Brahmins and Kshatriyas who lead a holy life. Every devotee enjoys the fruit of his devotion. Therefore you who have been born in this unsubstantial world should worship Me and work out your salvation. Fix your mind on Me, be devoted to Me, offer your sacrifices for My sake, prostrate yourself before Me. And if you are intent on Me and reduce yourself to zero by attuning yourself to Me, you are sure to come to Me.”

Tuesday Morning, [January 6, 1931]

NOTE. We learn from this Chapter that devotion (bhakti) means attachment (asakti) to God. This is the royal road to the cultivation of a selfless spirit. Therefore we are told at the very beginning that devotion is the sovereign yoga and is easy to practise. It is easy to practise if it takes hold of our heart, but hard going if it does not. Hence it has been described as something for which we have to offer our life itself as the price. But he who has plunged into it enjoys perfect bliss though it scares the mere spectator. Sudhanva¹ was laughing as he lay in the boiling oil while the bystanders were seized with terror and anxiety. The ‘untouchable’ Nanda is said to have danced as he was tried by the ordeal of fire.² We need not bother whether or not these are true stories. But the fact is that a man reaches such a state of calmness and imperturbability when he is absorbed in something or other. He forgets himself. But who would set his heart on anything except God? ‘Do not prefer the bitter neem to sugarcane or the glow-worm to the sun and the moon.’ The ninth chapter thus shows that renunciation of the fruit of action is impossible without devotion (bhakti). Its last verse sums up the whole chapter and in a word means, “Seeking nothing, give yourself utterly to Me.”

¹ Son of King Hansadhwa of Champavati in the Mahabharata. He was thrown into boiling oil for disobeying his father who was an atheist; but he came out unscathed because of his devotion to God.
² Nanda was not subjected to any ordeal. The legend is that he went up in flames as he entered the shrine.
CHAPTER X

Monday Morning, January 12, 1931

The Lord said: “Hear once more what I say with a view to the welfare of devotees. Even gods and great sages do not know my beginning, for the very simple reason that I am without beginning myself and am the origin of the universe including gods and sages. The wise man who knows Me to be unborn and without beginning is liberated from all sins, for when he realizes Me as such and himself as My child or as part and parcel of Me, he overcomes the human liability to sin. Ignorance of one’s real nature is the root of sin.

“As all beings derive from Me, so do the various natures distributed to them, such as for instance forgiveness, truth, joy and sorrow, birth and death, fear and fearlessness. Those who know all these to be My glorious manifestations easily become even-minded, as they cease to be egotistic. Their heart is fixed on Me. They dedicate their all to Me. I am the only subject of their conversation. They glorify Me and live in happiness and contentment. To these loving worshippers always aware of Me I grant the power of understanding, by means of which they come to Me.”

Arjuna then praised the Lord: “You are the Supreme Brahman, the highest Abode, and the Lord. You yourself say that sages worship you as the First of the Gods, the Birthless, the All-pervading. O Lord, O Father, no one knows your real nature; it is known to you alone. Now please tell me your glorious manifestations, and explain to me how I may recognize you by meditation.”

The Lord replied: “There is no end to My divine manifestations, but I shall name the chief of these only. I am the atman (soul) dwelling in the heart of all beings. I am the beginning, the middle and the end of them all. Of the Adityas I am Vishnu. Among the lights I am the light-giving sun. Of the Maruts (windgods) I am Marichi. Among the stars I am the moon. Of the Vedas I am the Sama-Veda. Of the gods I am Indra. Of the sense-organs I am the mind. Of beings I am consciousness. Of the Rudras I am Shankara (Siva). Of the Yakshas and Rakshasas I am Kubera. Of the Daityas (demons) I am Prahlada. Of beasts I am the lion. Of birds I am the eagle. Indeed I am even the gambling of the cheats. Whatever, good or evil, happens in this world happens only by My permission. Realizing this, men should give up their pride and steer clear of evil,

1 This was sent along with vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 12-1-1931 for I am the dispenser of the fruits of their good and bad deeds. You should realize that only a single fraction of Mine sustains the entire universe.”

CHAPTER XI

Monday Morning and Afternoon [January 19, 1931]

Arjuna, asking the Lord for a favour, said: “O Supreme Lord, by teaching me the truth about the soul, you have dispelled my ignorance. You are All, the Creator and the Destroyer, being Imperishable Yourself. If possible, please let me have a vision of your divine Form.”

The Lord said: “There are thousands of my divine forms in various colours. The Adityas, the Vasus and the Rudras—all are unified in My body, as well as all things, animate and inanimate. But you cannot see this My form with those fleshly eyes. Therefore I give you divine sight with which to see Me.”

Sanjaya said to Dhritarashtra: “O king, speaking thus to Arjuna, the Lord revealed to him His marvellous form which defies description. We see a single sun in the sky every day, but supposing a thousand suns were blazing in the sky, the glory of what Arjuna saw was more dazzling than their accumulated light. The ornaments and the weapons of that form were similarly divine. Arjuna’s hair then stood erect. And he spoke, shaking all over.”

Arjuna said: “O God, I see everything and everybody within your body. Brahma and Siva are there, and so are the sages and the holy serpents. I see you with countless arms and faces, and find no beginning, middle or end. You shine like a mass of insufferable light, and blaze like fire. You are the ultimate foundation of the universe, the Ancient of Days, and the guardian of eternal law. Wherever I look, I see parts of your body. The sun and the moon are your eyes as it were. You pervade heaven and earth. Your splendour burns up the universe. This world is seized with awe. The gods, the sages, and the siddhas—all are standing with clasped hands and sing your praise. On seeing this stupendous form and brilliance I lose my nerve. My patience and peace are gone. O God, have mercy on me. I see these people rush into your mouth frightful with tusks as moths fly into a

---

1 This was sent along with vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 14/19-1-1931
2 Various classes of gods
3 ibid
4 ibid
flame and you crush them to powder. Who are you with such an awful form? I cannot understand your ways."

The Lord said: “I am Time, the destroyer of worlds. You may or may not fight, but the warriors on both the sides are bound to perish. You are only an instrument of the divine will.”

Arjuna said: “O God, home of all the worlds, you are the Imperishable, Being and non-Being and what is beyond either of them. You are the First of the Gods, the Ancient of Days; you are the refuge of the world. You are the one thing which is to be known. You are Vayu (wind), Yama (the God of Death and Judgment), Agni (fire) and Prajapati (the Creator). Hail to you a thousand times. Now please show me your original form again.”

The Lord then said: “I showed My world-wide Form to you, because I love you. You have seen today something the vision of which cannot be won by Vedic or any other studies, rituals, alms or austerities. Do not be bewildered because you have seen it. Cast away fear, be calm and see my familiar form. That shape of Mine which you have seen is hard to see even for the gods and can be seen only by pure devotion. Whoever works for Me, makes Me his supreme good, becomes my devotee, frees himself from attachment and loves all beings, comes to me.”

NOTE. This chapter, like the tenth; I have deliberately cut short. This one is full of poetry and therefore should be read frequently either in the original or in translation, so that we may be imbued with the spirit of devotion. Whether we are or not thus imbued can be found by applying the acid test mentioned in the last verse. Devotion is impossible in the absence of total self-surrender and all-embracing love. Self-surrender and a sense of solidarity with all living beings become easy of attainment if we meditate on God as world-destroying time into whose gaping mouths the universe rushes to its doom. This fate is bound to overtake us too all of a sudden, whether we wish for it or not. Thus all distinctions of small and big, high and low, man and woman, men and the lower animals, disappear. Seeing that we are all a mere morsel in the mouth of God as the Destroyer, we should become humble and reduce ourselves to zero and cultivate friendship with everyone else. If we do this, we shall cease to be afraid of this terrible Form of God. On the other hand it will give us peace of mind.
CHAPTER XII

Tuesday Morning, November 4, 1930

Arjuna asks the Lord: “Some devotees adore a personal (sakara) God while others worship the Absolute (nirakara). Which of these two courses is better?”

The Lord replies: “Those who fix their minds on Me (as the One Life in all) with perfect faith and are absorbed in Me are My devotees indeed. But those who worship the Absolute and restrain and subdue their senses are equiminded towards all living beings and serve them without looking on some as of a superior and others as of an inferior grade—they also will come to Me. Neither of these two classes of devotees is superior to the other. But a full realization of the Absolute is almost impossible for an embodied being. The Absolute is devoid of all attributes and thus difficult for men even to imagine. Therefore they are all worshippers of a personal God, whether they are aware of it or not. Do you therefore place your mind in Me (the personal God in the universal form) and offer Me your all. If this is not possible, try to restrain the aberrations of the mind; that is to say, by observing the yamas and niyamas, and with the help of pranayama and yogic exercises, obtain control over the mind. If even this is beyond your capacity, perform all actions for My sake, so that your delusion will be destroyed, and you will be imbued with the spirit of detachment and devotion. If you cannot do even this, renounce the fruits of action, that is, cease to have a desire for the fruits of action, and do the task which is allotted to you. A man can never have any say as regards the fruit of his action, as the nature of the fruit is determined by a number of independent factors. Be you therefore a mere instrument in My hands. I have thus described four methods, none of which is superior to the others. You may adopt any one of the four you like. It may seem as if the path of knowledge (hearing the doctrine, pondering over it, etc.) is easier to take than that of yamas, niyamas, pranayama, asanas, etc. Meditation in worship is easier still and the renunciation of the fruit the easiest of all. But the same method is not equally well suited for all. And some seekers have to adopt all the four methods, which are inter-connected. You must become a devotee one way or other; you may take any path that leads to this destination.

\footnote{This letter, the first in this series, was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, October 30/November 4, 1930; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 4-11-1930.}

“Let me tell you what the true devotee is like. He does not hate or bear ill will to any living creature. He looks on all with love and compassion. He is free from the delusion of ‘I’ and ‘mine’. He reduces himself to zero. Pleasure and pain, are equally acceptable to him. He forgives the wrong-doer even as he expects to be forgiven himself. He is always contented with his lot, and is unshakable in his resolve. He dedicates his intellect and mind and all to Me. He never molests his fellow-creatures; these are therefore never afraid of him. He does not allow himself to become perturbed by the world. He is free from exultation, sorrow, anger, fear and the like. He seeks nothing for himself. He is pure and skilful in action. He renounces every undertaking. 1 Although he is firm in his resolve, he is indifferent as regards the success or failure of his action; that is to say, he is not anxious about its result. He is alike to friend and foe. Honour and insult are the same to him. He is silent and content with what comes. He moves freely as if he were alone. He has a steady mind at all times and places. A devotee who behaves like this in faith is dear to Me.”

CHAPTER XIII

Monday Morning [January 25, 1932]

The Lord said: “Kshetra (the Field) is another name for the

---

1 In his “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 13/17-11-1930 (vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 13/17-11-1930), Gandhiji had explained: “The devotee ‘renounces all undertakings’. This means the devotee will not draw up schemes of future expansion. For example, if a merchant who deals in cloth now has any plans of selling fire-wood as well in the future, or if he, having one shop only, thinks of opening five more shops, that would be arambha (undertaking) on his part, and the devotee will have none of it. This principle is applicable to service of the nation as well. For instance, a worker in the khadi department today will not take up cow-keeping tomorrow, agriculture the day after and medical aid on the fourth day. He will do his best in whatever has come to him. When I am free from egoism, nothing remains for me to do.

‘The Lord has bound me with a cotton thread; I am His, no matter where He leads me. I have been stabbed with the dagger of love.’ A devotee’s every activity is planned by God. It comes to him as in the natural course of things. He therefore rests content with, ‘this, that or anything else’ (su dsuspr-A_. This is the meaning of ‘renouncing all undertakings’. The devotee does not cease to work; indeed he is nothing if not a worker. He only ceases to think needless thoughts about his work. It is these that he has to renounce.”

2 The chapters which follow are from M.M.U./II.
human body and kshetrajna means one who knows the Field. Understand Me as the knower of the Field in all bodies. Real knowledge means discrimination between the Field and the knower of the Field.

“The five great elements, namely, earth, water, fire, air and ether, individuality (ahamkara), intellect, the unmanifest, the ten senses, mind, the five sense-objects, desire and hatred, pleasure and pain, sanghata (the power of combination inherent in the constituents of the body), consciousness and cohesion, —these constitute the Field with its modifications. Knowledge of these is essential, as they have to be renounced. Wisdom is the foundation on which such renunciation can be based. Wisdom here means and includes humility, unpretentiousness, non-violence, forgiveness, rectitude, service of the teacher, purity, steadfastness, self-restraint, indifference to sense-objects, absence of egoism, insight into the evil of birth, death, old age, disease and pain, detachment from wife and children, hearth and home, friends and relations, equimindedness to good and bad fortune, whole-hearted devotion to God, love of solitude, dislike for the enjoyment of sensual pleasures in company with others, thirst for knowledge of the soul, and last the beatific vision. And the reverse of this is ignorance.

“Now let me tell you something about that which has to be known with a view to salvation. That is beginningless supreme Brahman. Brahman is beginningless because it is unborn and was there when there was nothing. It is neither sat (existent) nor asat (non-existent) but beyond them both. But from another standpoint it can be called sat, because it is eternal. Human beings cannot recognize it as such; therefore it is said to be beyond even sat. It pervades the whole universe. It may be said to have a thousand hands and feet, and though it seems to have hands and feet, it is devoid of the organs of sense for it does not need these organs. Sense organs are transitory while Brahman is eternal. And although being all-pervasive and all-sustaining, it may be said to be enjoying the qualities (gunas), it is free from them. Where there are gunas, there is change (vikara), but Brahman is changeless. It may be said to be outside all beings, because it is out for those who do not know it. And it is within all

1 The five organs of perception, viz., ears, skin, eyes, palate and nose, and the five organs of action, viz., tongue, feet, hands and the organs of evacuation and reproduction beings as it is all-pervading. Similarly it is both moving and unmoving. It is subtle and hence imperceptible. It is distant as well as near. It is undivided in the sense that it is imperishable though name (nama) and form (rupa) perish, but it also seems to be divided as we say that it is within all creatures. It creates, preserves and destroys. It is the light of lights beyond darkness, and the end of all knowledge. Brahman which is planted in every heart is jneya, the one thing worth knowing. All knowledge is a means to the end of being united with it. Not revised.

“God and his maya (nature) are both without beginning. Modifications (vikaras) are born of maya and these give rise to various kinds of action (karma). On account of maya, the soul experiences pleasure and pain and the fruit of merit (punya) and demerit (papa). He who, having realized this, does his duty in a spirit of detachment is not born again in spite of his activity, for he beholds the face of God in all faces, and seeing that not a leaf moves but by the divine will, he is free from egotism, understands that he is separate from the body and that the soul, though living in the body, remains by means of knowledge unaffected like the omnipresent ether.”

Finished at about 2 p.m.

CHAPTER XIV

Silence Day, January 25, 1932

The Lord said: “Once more I will teach you that supreme wisdom which enabled sages to reach the highest perfection. People who find that wisdom and do their duty accordingly are delivered from the cycle of births and deaths. O Arjuna, know Me to be the Father and Mother of all beings. The three gunas born of nature, viz., sattva (goodness), rajas (passion) and tamas (ignorance) bind the soul down. They may be described respectively as the highest, the middling and the lowest. Of these sattva is pure and unsullied and gives light; it is therefore the source of happiness. Rajas arises from attachment and craving and makes a man indulge in all manner of activities. Tamas is rooted in ignorance and delusion and makes one negligent and indolent. In short, sattva makes for happiness, rajas for restlessness and tamas for sloth. Sometimes sattva prevails, overpowering rajas and tamas; at other times rajas prevails,

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 23/25-1-1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 23/25-1-1932
overpowering sativa and tamas; at still other times tamas prevails, overpowering sativa and rajas. When the light of wisdom shines through all the activities of the body it may be known that sativa is increasing. Where greed, bustle, unrest and competition are observed, rajas is the ruler. And the predominance of tamas is characterized by ignorance, sloth and delusion. If sativa prevails in a man’s life, he is born in the sinless worlds of the great sages after death. If rajas dominates his life, he is born among those who are attached to action. And if tamas is the ruling principle, he returns to the womb of the senseless. The fruit of satvik action is purity, while the fruit of rajas is pain and the fruit of tamas is ignorance. A satvik man rises to the higher regions; a rajasik person remains in this world, while a tamasik individual sinks to the underworld. When a man perceives no doer of action other than these qualities and knows Me who am beyond them he enters into My nature. When the dweller in the body has overcome the three qualities from which all bodies arise, he is freed from birth and death, old age and pain and drinks the nectar of eternal life.”

On hearing that one who transcends the qualities makes such great progress on the pilgrim’s path, Arjuna asked: “What are the marks of such perfection? How does such a perfect being conduct himself? And how does he cross over the qualities?” The Lord replied: “A man is said to have risen above the qualities when he is not angry if the light and knowledge of sativa or the activity and bustle of rajas or the delusion and ignorance of tamas are there and is not wishful if they are not. He sits like one who is unconcerned and is not disturbed by the qualities. He stands apart unmoved, being aware that they are the doers of all actions. He is even-minded to pleasure and pain as well as to a lump of earth, a stone and gold. The pleasant and the unpleasant are alike to him. He is unaffected by either praise or blame. He is the same in honour and evil fame. He is alike to friend and foe. And he has abandoned all undertakings. Do not think that this is a goal you can never reach and that therefore you need not exert yourself. What I have described is the state of a perfect man. The way to it is to serve Me with single-minded devotion.

“From the third chapter onwards I have pointed out that a man cannot so much as even breathe without action (karma), from which no human being can ever hope to escape. He who would transcend the qualities should dedicate all his actions to Me, and cease to desire their fruits. If he does this, his actions will not be an impediment to his progress, for I am Brahman, moksha, the eternal dharma and joy for ever.

“When a man reduces himself to zero, he sees Me alone everywhere. He is guna-atita (one who has transcended the qualities).”

CHAPTER XV

Night, January 31, 1932

The Lord said: “This world is like an ashvattha (sacred fig) tree with roots above and branches below and with the Vedic hymns as its leaves. And he who knows it knows the Vedas. The branches of this cosmic tree nourished by the qualities shoot to heaven and sink to earth. Sense-objects are its sprouts. It is these things of the senses which bind the soul with the bonds of karma in the world of men. The real nature of this tree cannot be known here, nor its beginning, nor end, nor foundation.

“This strongly rooted cosmic tree should be cut down with the weapon of non-co-operation, so that the soul may rise to a higher world from which there is no return [to the world of mortals]. With this end in view a man should engage himself in the constant worship of the Ancient of Days, from whom all this activity (the cosmic process) seems to flow. The wise man who is free from pride and delusion, victorious over the vice of attachment and devoted to the Supreme Soul, who is free from cravings and to whom pleasure and pain are alike—that wise man reaches the state which is beyond all change, and which does not need to be illumined by the sun, the moon or fire. That is my Supreme abode.

“An eternal part of Myself transformed into the individual soul in this world draws to itself the senses including the mind which reside in matter. When the soul enters the body or leaves it, it takes these senses with it even as the wind carries fragrance from its places. It enjoys sense-objects with the help of the ear, the eye, the senses of touch and taste, the nose and the mind. The ignorant cannot recognize it as it goes or stays or enjoys itself under the influence of the qualities, but the sages see it [with the eye of wisdom]. Striving yogis see it living in their own bodies, but those who have not achieved evenness of temper cannot see it even if they try. “The light of the sun that illumines all the world, that which is in the moon and in fire—

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, January 28/ February 1, 1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 28-1-1932, 1-21932
2 The source has “1931”.

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932  63
know that all that light is Mine. Permeating the soil I sustain all living beings. I become the sapproducing moon and feed the plants. Becoming the fire of life in the bodies of all living creatures and being united with the life-breaths, I digest the four kinds of food. I abide in all hearts. From Me are memory and wisdom as well as their absence. I am that which is to be known by all the Vedas. So also I am the Author of Vedanta and the Knower of the Vedas.

“There may be said to be two kinds of personalities in this world, namely, kshara (the perishable) and akshara (the imperishable). The perishable is all beings; and the imperishable is I who am the same for ever. But beyond either is the highest spirit who is called the Supreme Soul, and who, pervading all, sustains the three worlds. This too is I. I therefore transcend the perishable and even the imperishable, and am known in the world as well as in the Vedas as the Supreme Reality. The wise man who recognizes Me as such knows all that need be known, and serves Me with his whole being.

“O sinless Arjuna, I have told you this most secret teaching. By knowing this a man becomes truly wise and reaches the shores of salvation.”

CHAPTER XVI

February 7, 1932

The Lord said: “I will now point out the distinction between the divine and the demoniacal natures. I have earlier described at length what is meant by divine nature but I will repeat its distinctive features. Among the signs of the divine are fearlessness, purity of heart, wisdom, evenness of temper, self-control, alms-giving, sacrifice, study of the scriptures, austerity, straightforwardness, non-violence, truth, freedom from anger, renunciation, peacefulness, not speaking evil of others, compassion to all living beings, absence of greed, gentleness, modesty, absence of fickleness, vigour, forgiveness, fortitude, purity, internal as well as external, freedom from malice and pride.

“Among the signs of the demoniacal are hypocrisy, arrogance, conceit, anger, cruelty and ignorance.

“The divine nature leads to liberation while the demoniacal

1 Literally, ‘having entered their bodies’
2 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 3/8-2-1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 3/8-2-1932 leads to bondage. O Arjuna, you are born with endowments of the divine nature.

“I will say something more about the demoniacal nature, so that people may easily give it up.

“Men of such a nature do not know what to do and what to refrain from doing. There is no purity or truth in them, so that they do not observe the rules of good conduct.

“They hold that the world is unreal, without basis or rule. For them sex is all the world so that they think of nothing except enjoyment of the objects of sense.

“They do horrible deeds. They are dull-witted. They hold fast to their wicked thoughts and all their activity is directed only to the destruction of the world. Their desires are insatiable. They are full of hypocrisy, pride and arrogance. They are thus plagued by innumerable cares. They want fresh sensual pleasures every day. They are ‘ensnared in nooses of a hundred idle hopes’, and by unlawful means amass wealth in order to gratify their desires.

‘I got this today; I will get that tomorrow. I killed this one enemy today; I will also kill others. I am a man of might. I have great possessions. Who is my equal? With a view to fame I will sacrifice to the gods, give alms and make merry.’ They say this to themselves with a chuckle, and being caught in the net of delusion, go to hell at last.

“Men with such a nature, given over to pride, speak ill of others and thus hate God who dwells in all hearts. They are therefore frequently born in the wombs of degraded parents.

“There are three gates to hell, leading to the ruin of the soul:
lust, anger and greed. Therefore we should renounce them all.
Turning aside from them, men go by the strait and narrow path and reach the highest state.

“He who disregards the scriptures composed of eternal principles and gives himself up to pleasure cannot attain happiness or peace characteristic of the right way.

“Therefore in deciding what you must do and what you must not do, you should acquire the knowledge of fundamental and immutable principles from wise men and think and act accordingly.”
CHAPTER XVII

February 14, 1932

Arjuna asked: “What happens to those who serve in faith, neglecting the prevailing code of conduct?”

The Lord replied: “There are three kinds of faith, characterized by sattva, rajas or tames as the case may be. As is a man’s faith, so is he.

“Sattvik men worship the gods; rajasik men worship demigods and demons; and tamasik men worship the spirits of the dead.

“The nature of a man’s faith cannot be ascertained offhand. In order to assess it correctly, one must know the precise nature of his food, austerity, sacrifice and alms-giving.

“Foods which make for long life and increase the vital force, energy, strength and health are said to be sattvik. Rajasik foods are violently bitter, sour, hot or pungent and give rise to disease and aches and pains. And cooked food which is stale or gives out a bad smell and the leavings of others are said to be tamasik.

“The sacrifice which is offered as a matter of duty without expecting a reward and with mental concentration is said to be sattvik. A rajasik sacrifice is that in which a reward is desired and which is offered for outward show. And a tamasik sacrifice is one in which scriptural rules are disobeyed, no eatables or alms are given away and no hymns are chanted.

“Honouring the saintly purity, brahmacharya and non-violence constitute austerity of the body. Truthful, pleasant and beneficial speech as well as a study of the scriptures is austerity of speech. And cheerfulness, gentleness, silence, self-control and purity of motive—these are called austerity of the mind. Such austerity of the mind, body and speech as is practised without desire of fruit by men with an evenness of temper is said to be sattvik. Austerity practised for ostentation and with a view to gaining honour is said to be rajasik. And austerity done by obstinate fools with self-torture or with the object of hurting others is said to be tamasik.

“A gift ‘made in due place, due time and to a fit recipient’ without expecting a reward and with a feeling that it is right for a man to give is said to be sattvik. A gift made grudgingly with a view to getting something in return is regarded as rajasik. And the gift which is given in a contemptuous spirit, and without honour done to the recipient and without considering the proper time and place for it is said to be tamasik.

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 11/15-2-1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 11/15-2-1932

“Brahman is designated in the Vedas as Om tat sat. Therefore men of faith pronounce the sacred syllable ‘Om’ when they commence any rite of sacrifice, alms-giving or austerity. This single syllable stands for Brahman. Tat means that. And sat means satya, beneficent. That is to say, God is one, He alone is, He alone is truth and the benefactor of the world. He who offers a sacrifice, makes gifts or practises austerity with a realization of this truth and in a spirit of dedication is a man of sattvik faith. And he is free from blame if he knowingly or unknowingly does something different from the correct procedure in the spirit of dedication. But acts undertaken in the absence of such a spirit are said to be performed without faith and therefore are asat (unreal).”

CHAPTER XVIII

February 21, 1932

Even after he had pondered over the teaching in all the previous Chapters, there was still a doubt in Arjuna’s mind. So he said: “The sannyasa of the Gita seems to be different from renunciation as currently understood. Are sannyasa and tyaga really different?”

While resolving Arjuna’s doubt in answer to this question, the Lord summarized the Gita doctrine in a concise manner: “Some actions are motivated by desire. Various activities are indulged in by men with a view to fulfilling various desires. These are called kamya actions. Then again there are certain necessary and natural actions such as breathing, eating, drinking, lying down, sitting, etc., with a view to keep the body [a fit instrument of service]. And thirdly there are actions done with a view to serving others. Giving up kamya actions is sannyasa, and renunciation of fruits of all actions is tyaga as recommended to you all along.

“Some people maintain that there is evil, no matter how little, in all actions whatever. Even so, a man must not give up actions done with a view to yajna (sacrifice), that is to say, the service of others. Alms-giving and austerity are included in yajna. But even while serving others, a man should act in a spirit of detachment. Otherwise his activity is likely to be mixed up with evil.

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 19/21-2-1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 19/21-2-1932

“Renunciation owing to ignorance of duties that must be done is said to be inspired by tamas. Giving up any action merely because it involves physical suffering is said to be rajasik. But service rendered to others because of a feeling that it must be done and without the desire for the fruits is real sattvik tyaga. In this tyaga therefore there is no giving up of all actions, but only of the fruit of duties that must be done, and of course of other, that is, kamya actions. When a [wise] man acts in such a selfless spirit, all his doubts are dispelled, his motives are pure and he has no thought of personal comfort and discomfort.

“He who does not abandon the fruits of action must enjoy or put up with the natural consequences of his own acts, and is thus a bondslave for ever. But he who gives up the fruits of action achieves freedom.

“And why should a man feel attachment for action? It is idle for anybody to imagine that he himself is a doer. There are five causes for the accomplishment of all actions, namely, this body, the doer, the various instruments, efforts, and last but by no means the least, providence.

“Realizing this, a man should give up pride. He who does something without egoism may be said to be not doing it in spite of his doing it, for he is not bound by his action. Of a humble man who has reduced himself to zero it may be said that he does not kill though he kills. This does not mean that the man in spite of his humility may kill and yet be unaffected by the killing. For no occasion can arise for such a man to indulge in violence.

“There are three things that inspire action: knowledge, the object of knowledge and the knower. And there are three constituents of action: the organ, the deed and the doer. The thing to be done is the object of knowledge; the method of doing it is knowledge and he who knows it is the knower. After he has thus received an impulse to action, he performs an action in which the senses serve as instruments. Thought is thus translated into action.

“That by which a man is able ‘To see one changeless Life in all the lives’ and to realize the essential unity that underlies all diversities is sattvik knowledge. In rajasik knowledge one holds that there are different souls in different creatures, while in tamasik knowledge a man does not know a thing and imagines that everything is mixed up without rhyme or reason.

“Similarly there are three kinds of action. Action in which there are no likes and dislikes and no desire for personal gains is sattvik. That in which there are desires for enjoyment, egoism and restlessness is rajasik action. And tamasik action is one in which no thought at all is given to personal capacity and consequential injury or violence and which is undertaken through delusion.

“So also there are three classes of doers. Of course having understood the action it could not be difficult to know the doer. A sattvik doer is free from attachment and egoism and yet firm and enterprising and is neither elated by success nor worried by failure. A rajasik doer is impassioned, greedy and violent, ‘slave by turns of sorrow and of joy’ and of course desires to obtain the fruit of his actions. And a tamasik doer is unsystematic, procrastinating, obstinate, malicious and indolent; in short, without an iota of self-culture.

“Intellect, firmness and happiness also are said to be of three kinds.

“The sattvik intellect is able properly to distinguish between action and non-action,

What must be done, and what must not be done,
What should be feared, and what should not be feared,
What binds and what emancipates the soul.

The rajasik intellect tries to draw these distinctions but generally fails to do so correctly, while the tamasik intellect ‘looks upon wrong as right and sees all things contrariwise of truth.’

“Firmness is the power of taking up some thing and sticking to it through thick and thin. It is more or less inherent in all things; otherwise the world could not subsist for a single moment. Firmness is sattvik when there is a constantly maintained balance between the activities of the mind, the vital airs (pranas) and the senses. The firmness by which a man holds fast to duty, pleasure and wealth from attachment and with a view to personal advantage is rajasik. And firmness is tamasik, wherewith the fool

Cleaves to his sloth, his sorrow and his fears,
His vanity and despair.

“Sattvik happiness is the pleasure that endures,
Banishing pain for aye, bitter at first
As poison to the soul, but afterwards
Sweet as the taste of amrit.
It arises from true self-knowledge.

“Rajasik happiness arises from sensual enjoyment.
Sweet
As amrit is its first taste, but its last Bitter as poison.
“And tamasik happiness is that which springs
From sloth and sleep and foolishness.

—EDWIN ARNOLD

“This threefold classification is thus applicable to all things.
The duties of the four varnas are fixed by reason of the dominance or recession of the qualities planted in each.

“A Brahmin’s conduct is characterized by calmness, self-discipline, austerity, purity, forgiveness, uprightness, wisdom, experience and faith in God. The characteristics of a Kshatriya are valour, splendour, firmness, resourcefulness, not flying from battle, open-handedness and leadership. A Vaishya’s task is ‘to till the ground, tend cattle, venture trade’, and service is the Sudra’s work.
This is not to say that a member of any one of these classes may not be endowed with qualities characteristic of other classes or is not entitled to cultivate them in himself. But qualities and work as mentioned above serve as signs for the recognition of a man’s varna.
If the qualities and tasks of each varna are recognized, there is no undesirable competition or feeling of hatred among them. There is no question here of high and low. But if each does his duty selflessly according to his nature, he will reach perfection. Therefore one’s own duty, though it appears to be valueless, is better than the duty of another which seems to be easy. A man may remain free from sin when he performs the task naturally allotted to him, as he is then free from selfish desires; the very wish to do something else arises from selfishness. For the rest, all actions are clouded by defects as fire by smoke. But the natural duty is done without desire for its fruit, and thus loses its binding force.

“The calm yogi who has been sanctified by thus performing his own duty, who has his mind under control, who has given up the five sense-objects, who has overcome likes and dislikes, who lives in solitude, i.e., whose eyes are turned inward, who achieves mastery of his mind, body and speech by abstemiousness, who is ever conscious of the living presence of God, and who has given up pride, desire, anger, acquisitiveness and the like—that yogi is fit to be united with Brahman. He is equi-minded towards all men. He neither rejoices nor indulges in grief. Such a devotee has true knowledge of God and is absorbed in Him. Thus taking refuge in Me, he gains the eternal place.

“Therefore dedicate your all to Me, regard Me as the supreme object of your love, and with discrimination, fix your mind on Me. As you do this, you will overcome all difficulties. But if out of egoism you do not listen to Me, you will perish. The one thing needful is that, abandoning all conflicting views, you should come to Me alone for shelter, and thus be freed from sin.

“Do not tell this truth to anyone who is not a devotee, austere in life, and hating Me, does not wish to listen. But one who communicates this great secret to My devotees will surely come to Me in virtue of his devotion.”

After having thus reported to Dhritarashtra the dialogue between Arjuna and Krishna, Sanjaya said:

“Where there is Krishna, the prince of yoga, and Arjuna with his bow and arrows, there are prosperity, victory, happiness and fundamental morality.”

[NOTE.] Krishna to whom the epithet ‘prince of yoga’ has here been applied means pure knowledge based on spiritual experience, and by referring to Arjuna as an archer it is suggested that where there is action in accordance with such knowledge, the doer obtains every wish that is not contrary to lofty morals.

From microfilms of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. & II

50. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Afternoon, February 19/21, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your post in due time. Tell Bhai Valji that I have started reading and revising his translation today.

You will of course inquire from time to time after those who are imprisoned and lodged in the Sabarmati Jail, but you should also keep yourself informed in which jails the others are lodged. Lilavati came and saw me. It was good of her.

Read my letter to Champa. If she is willing to endure her lot and live with Ratilal, there will be no problem. If, however, she is not willing, I think we cannot force her to live with him. Ratilal may have to be put in the asylum again. The whole problem is a difficult one. Do what you think best. In any case, keep Doctor informed.

Chimanlal must take rest. His body gives no service and no one is able to diagnose the disease.

Krishnamaiyadevi has certainly not acted properly in staying on in Calcutta. You did well in writing to her. Did you get Lakshmi examined by a doctor for her swelling? Is she expecting? That can be a cause. You should ask her or find out through Lakshmibehn. Yajna does not merely mean work for the good of others; it also means body labour. If men did not do body labour, that is, did not cultivate land and grow crops, the rains would stop. My own belief is that natural phenomena are connected with moral behaviour. I have no proof for this. It is my faith. Such faith can do no harm in any case. Little research is done about such matters in the present age, and what is written about them in ancient books is treated as superstition. It is true, of course, that they contain many superstitious ideas. Who can sift truth from error in these books? In the company of thieves even an honest man is taken for a thief. That being so, we should not interpret yajna strictly but accept all possible meanings which satisfy our moral sense and connect the phenomenon of rain with yajna understood. In the Gita as in other scriptures, we find one and the same word used in different senses. Of course, all work done as yajna should be inspired with the motive of service. Send this to Bhai Jivram.

Evening, February 21, 1932

I have just finished Chapter XVIII. You will see that I have taken more freedom in this Chapter than in the others. So far I used to give a simple translation, more or less, but I did not feel satisfied with that. This time, I have given the general meaning of the Chapter, with a few comments intended to make the discussion easier to understand. I have even omitted a few verses as unnecessary for our purpose. I don’t think, however, that I have omitted anything useful. God willing, I will make another effort to explain the general meaning of the work

---

1 Dr. Pranjivandas Mehta, Ratilal’s father
2 Lakshmidas Asar’s daughter for children.
and tell me whether you want such a letter from me. If you want it,

The position about visitors seems to have become uncertain again. Let us wait and see what happens.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
There are 32 letters, besides this one and the discourse on the _Gita_. A list accompanies.

Has Devdas’s case been tried? Do you get any letters from him?
I have received none.¹

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8210. Courtesy:
Narandas Gandhi

---

51. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

February 21, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I see from Mani’s letter that no one undertakes to write to me on behalf of you all. What a state of affairs is this? What purpose would my writing serve if no one assumes responsibility for attending to the letter I address to all the children and if no one so much as even acknowledges receipt of the letter? You should, therefore, write to me say whether you will send me a reply every week. Do you remember what I told you about Miss Doris’s school?² Though the children there are under eight years of age, what a lot of work they do on their own responsibility! Some of you are as much as sixteen years old.
Though grown-up, they are counted among children. If not all, they,
at any rate, should assume all the more responsibilities. At Phoenix, when Devdas and Prabhudas were twelve years old, they got other children to co-operate with them and shouldered considerable responsibility. They brought the mail from the post office and also went to post the letters. They had to walk three miles through the jungle, but courageously they went. They used to help in the printing press in a variety of ways and also fetched water from the spring.

¹ For the text of the _Gita_ discourse (Chapter XVIII) which followed, _vide_
“The Letters on the Gita”
Boys and Girls”, 5-2-1932
In short, at one time Maganlal had only this batch of children to help him, and yet it was possible to cope with all the work, for the children worked as a team without sparing themselves either mentally or physically. Think, then, how much more I would expect from you. Send a reply to this and keep alive your association.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

52. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN
_[February 21, 1932]_\(^1\)

_SISTERS,_

You have won, and I have been completely defeated. I would always like that you should win and I should be defeated. But I find it difficult to accept this defeat, for it has weakened the foundation of the Ashram. However, though I have been defeated, Truth has won. And what does it matter if, for the sake of Truth, thousands of [such] ashrams are reduced to ashes?

This is how it is your victory. Several sisters believed that the friendship of . . .\(^2\) and . . .\(^3\) was not innocent. Disregarding their view, I believed the contrary and defended them. The women’s judgment has proved correct and mine wrong. The matter would have ended earlier if I had accepted your view. But it was necessary that my capacity for judging people should be tested. It was for my good and yours and for the good of the Ashram that it should be tested. It was necessary that my pride should be humbled. Let us hope that it has been. Having known the generosity of your hearts, I ought to have heeded your warning, but I did not and you bore that too. You did not forsake the company of a fool like me. Personally I believe that you will lose nothing for not doing so. Behind my folly were truth and pure love and trust in people. God will therefore mend my mistake. However, I will never disregard your warning in future and will learn from this bitter experience to be careful even in the smallest matters.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

\(^1\) The letter was presumably written on the same day as the preceding item.
\(^2\) The names have been omitted.
\(^3\) _ibid_
53. LETTER TO MAITHILISHARAN GUPTA

February 20/22, 1932

BHAI MAITHILISHARANJI,

I have received the gift you sent. I will read it with interest. I shall enjoy reading it as the subject too is after my heart.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

[PS.]

I have finished Panchavati and liked it. Have started on Saket.

From Hindi: C.W. 9454. Courtesy: Bharat Kala Bhavan

54. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

February 22, 1932

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

I was awaiting your letter. Yes, my health is good, so is Sardar's. I take honey and half a lemon in hot water at 4.30 in the morning, followed by one and a half tola of roasted, ground almonds and thirty dates in tomato juice at 7 o'clock. Lemon and honey in hot water is repeated at noon, and some vegetable, tomato, fifteen dates and one tola of almonds at 4 o'clock. I have started on vegetable only these two days, formerly I was taking thirty dates. On some days I was taking papaya at four, but I can take it no longer, as vegetable constitutes the fifth article of food. Neither is there any need for papaya. It has been like this for about fifteen days. Before that I used to take half a pound of milk in the morning and half a pound of curds in the evening, but I found milk a bit hard on digestion. Anyway, I am always pleased to give up milk on any possible pretext; so I am off milk. I do not know how long I can do without it. My weight is steady at 106 lb. Do send dates; though the ones I have are fresh and good.

They have been sent by Jerajani. You shall have to apply to Delhi or Bombay in order to visit me. The permission might be

1 The addressee had sent Saket, a poetical work on the theme of Ayodhya during Rama's exile, and three other books.
2 Another poetical work of the addressee dealing with Rama's sojourn at Panchavati.
grant, if at all, on the ground of a purely friendly visit. Nothing can be done from here.

I have collected a few books on currency. But send me whatever you like. I want to study this subject as much as possible and to the best of my ability. If you send your own observations I shall go through them too.

Tell me your experiences of America. How was your health and what places did you visit? What did you observe at Battle Creek? Did you meet Holmes’?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 7895. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

55. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

February 25, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I got your welcome letter this morning. I was waiting for it. We are both glad you are happy there. You find yourself there just when you were about to break under the strain. I fancy that 12 oz. of milk will not be enough for you. You should take 24 oz. But it may be that

---

1 A town in Michigan, known as “The Health City”

2 Dr. John Haynes Holmes

3 As a result of my sending abroad weekly bulletins of authentic news, regarding the Civil Disobedience movement, I had been served with a notice to quit Bombay. As I had declined to comply, I was duly arrested, tried and sentenced to three months’ simple imprisonment. ‘A’ class, and sent to Bombay female jail at Arthur Road. There being no ‘A’ class accommodation in the Debtor’s jail, which had been temporarily turned into a jail for female political prisoners, I was put with the ‘C’ class prisoners for the first two nights, after which a small kitchen in the prison-yard was rigged up as my cell. But as nearly all the space was taken up by a large row of stoves, there was no room for me to sleep inside. This was a piece of good luck as it meant I had to be allowed to wander by day amongst the other prisoners in the yard and to sleep under the sky at night, while the rest were locked up in their barrack. It may be mentioned that the ‘C’ class political prisoners were mostly well educated women, used to a high standard of living, certainly higher than the Ashram standard. But the Bombay Government was particularly severe in its classification, Ba, Mrs. Naidu and myself being, as far as I can remember, the only women given ‘A’ class in the whole Province. A few were given ‘B’ class and all the rest ‘C’. The most vital difference in this classification was the food supplied.”—Mirabehn

4 “12 oz. was the ‘A’ class ration.”—Mirabehn

---

76 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
with the comparatively less expenditure of vitality 12 oz. may be enough for you. I simply caution you against any false economy. Your exercise does not appear to me to be enough unless you do a great deal of walking about otherwise.

I am glad you have so much company. If you are permitted to describe your company, please give me the description.

The books that I can think of recommending are Sister Nivedita’s. I would like you to read Dutt’s abridged metrical rendering of the Mahabharata and Ramayana, Arnold’s Indian Idylls and Pearls of the Faith.

You should induce your companions to take to spinning and carding if they have time given to them for that class of labour. You should be able to do a great deal of Hindi there. But no overstraining on any account. You have this precious and unsought leisure. You will make such use as you think will elevate you. My almond experiment still continues to give satisfaction and the weight still remains 106 lb. which is very good. You need have therefore no anxiety on that score.

Love from us both.

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABAI
C/O SUPERINTENDENT
ARTHUR ROAD PRISON
BOMBAY

From a photostat: C.W. 9505. Courtesy: Mirabehn

56. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

February 25, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,
I got your letter written in a beautiful hand.
Memorize carefully the chapters of the Gita. It would be better still if you learnt the meaning too.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4077. Also C.W. 41. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai
57. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

February 25, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter.

You want from me inspired utterances which would touch the heart. If I had a safe filled with them, I would open it and send some every week. But I have no such safe. The words which I pen or speak, come to me unsought. Only such words have truth in them, for they are living words. All other statements are insincere. They may seem arresting, but I think they produce no abiding effect on the heart. I can do nothing insincere. During my student days in England, I attempted twice [to make prepared speeches] and failed on both occasions.¹ I never tried again.

And what is true about my speaking is also true about my behaviour to you on all other occasions which you mention. I remember the conversation we had regarding Mirabehn.² I must have replied to you as I felt at the moment. I can understand that my words did not produce a good impression on you. That is a measure of the imperfection of my non-violence. I must have said only what I felt, but you might have felt a sting in my words. “One must speak the truth in words which are agreeable” is not only a maxim of practical wisdom but is a moral principle. “Agreeable” here means non-violent. If I had told you gently what I did excitedly, my words would not have left behind them the bitter memory which they have. Truth stated in a spirit of non-violence may hurt at the moment, but its ultimate effect must be as sweet as amrit. This is an essential test of non-violence. I am writing this from my own bitter experience. I may have spoken to you vehemently in defence of Mirabehn, but I have not made any man or woman weep as bitterly as I have made her. My hardness of heart, impatience and ignorant attachment were responsible for such conduct. I have felt Mirabehn’s self-sacrifice to be beyond praise and, therefore, wish to see her perfect. The moment I see any imperfection in her, my ignorant attachment makes me impatient and I rebuke her sharply. The result is a flood of tears. These instances have opened my eyes to the presence of violence in me and, recalling them, I have been trying to reform myself. I, therefore, welcome your letters. I do not know whether in return I shall be able to give you anything, but personally I benefit from them. I realized this thing—my hard-heartedness—more vividly in England. Mira was the chief person in attendance on me. There, too, I caused her to weep bitterly on the slightest provocation. But I learnt a lesson from that experience. God has never let any delusion of mine last for ever. Even in the political sphere, whenever I have taken a false step God has immediately opened my eyes. Your letters help that process of awakening.

¹ Vide “An Autobiography” and “An Autobiography”
² The addressee had been rebuked by Gandhiji when she complained against Mirabehn’s having blocked a passage; later she quoted this incident as proof of Gandhiji’s unwillingness to listen to complaints against those whom he trusted.

You will now understand my previous letter better. How can we expect perfection from an imperfect being? A blind man has collected a band of other blind folk. But the blind man knows that he is blind, and also knows the cure for his blindness. Hence, though living with blind people, he is confident that he will not lead them into a pit, nor will he himself fall into it. He walks with a stick in hand. He feels the path ahead with the stick before taking every step. And, therefore, things have gone well on the whole so far. If, despite his using the stick, the blind man has occasionally strayed from the path, he has immediately realized his error and retraced his steps and led back his co-workers. So long as my blindness remains, even a person like you who loves me will continue to have reasons to criticize me. When the blindness has disappeared, there will be no such grounds for criticism. Meanwhile, let all of us, blind men and women, who are seekers after truth, describe the elephant as we perceive it. Our descriptions will vary, but each will be perfectly true from the person’s limited point of view. After all, everyone of us will have but touched the elephant. When our eyes open all of us will dance with joy and shout: ‘How blind we were! This is an elephant, about which we had read in the Gita. How fortunate it would have been if our eyes had opened earlier’. But why should we worry if their opening is delayed? Time has no meaning for God, or rather He measures it differently. Ignorance, thus, will become transformed into knowledge.

I hope you will get from this an explanation of all the shortcomings you may have observed in me. That does not mean, of course, that you should not put your doubts before me. You may continue to put them and I will reply every time.

\[1\text{Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 19-2-1932}\]

Send my blessings to Sushila and Kisan. And also to Dhurandhar if you are permitted to write to him. How is Jamnadas’s health? What happened to his school?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10274. Also C.W. 6722. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

58. LETTER TO RANCHHODJI DAYALJI

February 25, 1932

Bhai Ranchhodbhai,

I was glad to read your letter. I consider your family to be fortunate. Money is a fleeting thing which comes and goes. Is Kunvarji’s health all right? Kalyanji, of course, has no complaint regarding health. Do all the three brothers live together?

Convey to Gangabehn compliments from us both for keeping up her courage. How is Napoleon? Ask him to write to me.

Both of us are quite well.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2695

59. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI G. PATEL

February 25, 1932

Chh. Shivabhai,

I got your letter.

Every human being is liable to err. However, nothing but good results to him who, on realizing his mistake, tries to mend it, since in the long run such a person learns not to make mistakes. His conduct is inspired by love of truth. Where there is such love, the erring man will not deceive himself or the world.

I would regard it as his error if Tolstoy expressed the opinion that you mention. He expressed such mistaken opinions on several occasions. His greatness lay in the fact that as soon as he realized his mistake, he confessed it and corrected it. Moreover, there were so many changes in his way of life that one should also take into account the time when he expressed a particular opinion. In any case, in the matter of husband-wife relationship, I myself am definitely of the opinion that the consent of both should be necessary for their union and not for living apart. If that were not so, both would ordinarily remain in a fallen state. It happens only in rare cases that both wake up at the same time and remain awake together.

1 Chhotubhai, Kunvarji Mehta’s son

Blessings from
BAPU

60. LETTER TO SHAKARIBEHN C. SHAH
February 25, 1932

CHI. SHAKARIBEHN,

So I have a letter from you at last. If you tell them that your letter is meant for me alone, nobody will read it there. What does it matter if the jail authorities here read it? I would, therefore, advise you to write to me without any reserve.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 30

61. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARikh
February 25, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

Does not a man grow? And anything that grows must have a root. Otherwise, how can it grow? Will it be all right, if we say that a man’s root is his stomach? By what means does a tree get its food? Is it not through the root? We get our food through the stomach. The food is turned into its essence there, and it is then digested and nourishes the body. We may, therefore, say that a man’s root is his stomach. Is this all right?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5766. Also C.W. 2989. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai
62. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

February 25, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

I got your letter. Your handwriting is good. Your daily programme of work also seems all right. Go on in the same manner and keep on growing.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9422 Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel

63. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

February 25, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

Received your letter. The inmates of the Ashram can never abuse one another. But quite often, what is not meant to be abuse sounds like abuse. Hence, let me know what you consider to be abuse and also inform me who uses those words. Anyone who stays in the Ashram must abandon fear. Whom need we fear? We should boldly tell even the elders what we regard as the proper thing.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9946. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

64. A LETTER

February 26, 1932

CHI.,

I have your letter. The chief reason for my giving up milk was health, and, therefore, I will go without it only so long as I can preserve my health. So far, at any rate, my weight and strength have remained unaffected.

A crisis was bound to arise for khadi too. What would it avail even if it survives this time? Every calamity, if we properly understand it, is a test. And a test means suffering, that is, penance. Now penance always purifies the person who undergoes it and also purifies the cause for which it is undertaken. There is no exception at any time to this law. Nothing, therefore, disturbs my joy and peace.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8950. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

65. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

February 26, 1932

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I got your letter. I did reply to you. . . . It is certainly possible to acquire control over the sense organs. The Shastras proclaim in the clearest words that such control is difficult, but they were composed to help people to acquire it. It becomes possible through hard practice and the cultivation of disinterestedness. Spiritual development and self-realization go hand in hand. The remedy for your mental agitation lies in you, and rest also depends on you. I see many in jails who do no work, but all of them appear agitated. Rest for the body is not true rest. The sun that takes no rest even for a moment is always fresh. The Lord says that, though He works ceaselessly without rest and without one moment of relaxation, He is the abode of peace. You should, therefore, seek everything within yourself. At this time when the inmates of the Ashram are doing real work and not merely play-acting, you find it uninteresting. Though there are numerous weaknesses in the Ashram, I describe its work as real because it is not a shop doing business but a means of serving the world and a sincere attempt in that direction to the best of our ability. For anybody who understands the things aright, the Ashram activities are in truth rest from work.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 345. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

1 Omission as in the source
66. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

February 26, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your letter after I had waited for one for a long time. Tell Chhotubhai¹ that both of us often think about him. Do you get any news about Pyarelal? How is Chandubhai’s health? Where is Dr. Sumant? How does he keep? I am more or less all right.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1828

67. LETTER TO LAKSHMIBEHN N. KHARE

February 26, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMIBEHN,

I did get a letter from you at last. Why should you feel shy in writing to me? I hope to get your reply to my last letter.² I am sure you will not disappoint me.

I am very glad that you are learning weaving. Can we say that Rambhau’s stay in Almora has fulfilled our expectations?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 280. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

68. LETTER TO PUSHPA P. PATEL

February 26, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

Since your beak has grown so long, how can I recognize you though you remain my stick? My compliments for such fine Hindi. Should they go to you or to Parasramji? Discuss the question with him and let me know.

Blessings from

BAPU

¹ Chhotubhai Purani, a pioneer of physical culture in Gujarat
² Vide “Letter to Lakshmibehn N. Khare”, 19-2-1932
69. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,

Friday [After February 26, 1932]

CHI. PUSHPA,

Why are you peeved when I say that you have a pointed nose? Do you not have a pointed nose? It is a sign of beauty. Now you must write to me that you are laughing heartily. Those who want to be my walking-sticks are forbidden to feel irritated.

I shall not write to Mangala this time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11086. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

70. LETTER TO MAHAVIR GIRI

February 27, 1932

CHI. MAHAVIR,

I got your letter. I was glad to know that you kept good health there. Since you left the Ashram to go to Darjeeling, it would have been better if you had proceeded directly there. The place is certainly cold, but this is considered the best season. Even persons who are ill go there in this season. Do you meet the Gujaratis who live in that place?

Be very careful in spending money and keep accounts. Write to me regularly. See that you and your sisters do not forget your studies.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6234

1 From the contents; vide “Letter to Pushpa S. Patel”, 26-2-1932
71. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

February 28, 1932

MY DEAR CHILD.

I was delighted to have your letter again and the unexpected scribble from Nani¹.

I see you have a cosmopolitan company². I only hope this does not give you more than your health can manage.

No, the Gita does not teach differently. What it does teach is that all our acts must be natural and spontaneous even when unconscious. When they are so, there is no thought of reward or result. There is, therefore, in pure love no giving and no taking. Put in another way there is no giving on earth without taking. Love gives because it must; it is its nature. It therefore does not calculate whether there is a corresponding gain. It is unconscious of the giving and more so of the taking. Love is its own reward. When there is that ineffable love, there is a joy which is above all the so-called joys we think we experience from outward circumstances. It is that joy I want you to possess. There was a time when you thought, I thought, you had it. But you had not then gone through the fire. The joy that will surely be yours one day will come out of the purifying richness of that fire. It will steal over you when it does come. May it come soon.

We are both well.

Love.

Yours,
BAPU

Photostat No. 108. Courtesy: National Archives of India. Also My Dear Child, pp. 88-9

72. LETTER TO NANI MENON

February 28, 1932

MY DEAR NAN,

Your attempt to write a letter to me was very good. And what a reindeer you have sent. What lovely horns! I am sorry I am not playing with the goats, though they are brought before me everyday twice to be milked. I don’t play because when they come, I am always

¹ Addressee’s daughter
² “The Menon home at Selly Oak was always an international centre.” (My dear Child, p. 88) doing something which I must not give up. Yes, there are a few flowers but nothing much to speak of. The ground is stony and they can’t afford in prisons to lay out flowerbeds. You must write again.

Kisses to both of you.

BAPU

My Dear Child, p. 117

73. LETTER TO ABBAS

February 28, 1932

CHI. ABBAS,

In spite of his struggles a man is carried away by passion, since to destroy it completely requires an immense effort. Some things require comparatively less effort and some others require a much greater effort. We require less effort to spin yarn of 10 or 20 counts, but none has progressed so far as to spin yarn of 200 counts. To do that requires better equipment and a far greater effort. We do know that they spun yarn of 200 counts in Bengal a hundred years ago. If different degrees of effort are required in such a small matter as spinning, it is bound to be so in acquiring freedom from passion. Knowing this, the more we meet with failure the greater should our efforts be. Some mountaineers have been attempting to reach the top of the Himalayas. But none has succeeded so far. Our attempt is for a still higher cause, and it knows no failure.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6315. Also C.W. 8951. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

74. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

February 28, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I am waiting for your reply to my letter¹. Meanwhile, I congratulate those of you who have undertaken to help in the kitchen. Some of you are old enough to be able, if they wish, to assume the whole responsibility for it. The fact that we experience difficulties

¹Vide “Letter to Ashram Boys and Girls”, 21-2-1932 particularly in the kitchen is due entirely to our shortcomings. I list below for your information as many rules as I can think of. If you follow them, you will not find the least difficulty in running the kitchen.

1. Never lose your temper whatever happens, whether something is spoilt or broken. Never be impatient. Never worry about anything. Find out the cause of the trouble and remove it.

2. If a co-worker does not finish his work or is lazy about it do not get irritated with him, but take upon yourself the additional burden.

3. Do thoroughly and as perfectly as you can whatever you do.

4. Never play with one another while in the kitchen. Do not hit anybody even in jest.

5. The best thing is not to speak a word unless necessary. If anybody cannot control himself, he may talk in low whispers and make harmless and innocent jokes. However, everybody should gradually form the habit of speaking nothing at all.

6. If you do talk, do not indulge in malicious criticism of one another or back-biting.

7. It is enough for small boys to wear only tucked-up dhotis in the kitchen. The girls also, when sitting, should tuck-up their skirts behind and wear only jackets above them. It is not necessary for them to wear the half sari in the kitchen. This saves cloth and minimizes the danger of clothes catching fire. If anybody wears a shirt, the sleeves should be tucked up at the elbow.

8. When anybody feels the urge to sneeze, he should hold the kerchief over his mouth before sneezing, so that he does not blow spittle from the mouth. Use tie kerchief for blowing the nose and, if you perspire, wipe the drops with it. One ought not to let the drops fall into anything. This means that everyone must carry a handkerchief.

9. For wiping the utensils, etc., there should be a separate towel in the kitchen and it should be washed everyday with soap.

10. Everyone working in the kitchen should take special care to keep his nails clean. They should be trimmed regularly. If there is still any dirt under them, it should be removed with pointed straw.

11. No one should touch or taste any cooked item for sampling it.

12. If, to ascertain whether a vegetable or some similar dish has been properly salted, it has to be tasted, the leader of the boys may take some in a spoon and taste it and, after doing so, immediately wash the spoon clean.

13. If some special dish or dishes have to be cooked for a sick person or a person who is observing a vow, do not regard this as a burden but cook the thing cheerfully. Experience will show that, if the time-table for the various jobs has been strictly followed, no burden will be felt at all.

14. Make it a point to arrive at the kitchen punctually at the time appointed for you. Know that every minute matters, so that you should arrive two minutes earlier but never a minute later.

15. If you have no work in the kitchen, do not remain there to gossip or just to look at the others working.

16. The kitchen should be kept clean all the time. All the things should be in their proper places. After one’s job is done, one should not leave without arranging the things in order.

In addition to these, you may introduce other rules that you may think of. If you think that any of those given by me should be dropped, you may drop them with the consent of the elders. But scrupulously follow whatever rules you lay down. Everyone should make a copy of the rules and keep it with him.

I have often felt that the kitchen provides a means for us to test how far we practise the teaching of the Gita.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am not writing a separate letter to the women today, since this one is already longer than I had intended it to be, and, moreover, such a letter should do quite well for them also.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8955. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
75. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

February 28, 1932

CHI. MANU,

You certainly wrote a good letter. But there is much room for improving your handwriting. If Nanu¹ has become Vimalshah, from where shall we bring an elephant for him? Or will he make a stick an elephant and ride on it? Or will he first do deeds like Vimalshah’s and make himself fit to bestride an elephant?

You wrote a description of Mount Abu. Now write one of Almora.

Ask Dudhibehn to write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7420. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

76. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

February 28, 1932

CHI. SUMANGAL PRAKASH.

I have your letter. Also Kanta’s. I had been awaiting letters from both of you. I had even made inquiries about Kanta. I was surprised that I had not heard from either of you. Now of course I cannot expect any letter from Kanta. Send me news about her and about Prabhavati. When did you send the parcel of books? What were the books? During the journey many things were not delivered to me. I therefore remember nothing about it. It is a pity that you are not yet fully recovered. What disease have they diagnosed that it has not been cured so far?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ Addressee’s younger brother Vimalchandra. Nanu is a pet name for “junior”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
77. DEATH, A FRIEND

February 29, 1932

There was once a wise man, named Socrates, who lived in Athens. His unconventional ideas, which, however, spread love of truth and goodness, displeased the authorities, and he was sentenced to death. In that country people were in those days sometimes sentenced to die by drinking poison. Like Mirabai, Socrates was asked to drink a cup of poison. Our purpose here is to discuss the substance of the concluding words of Socrates’s defence at the time of his trial. We can all derive a moral from it. Let us call Socrates by the name Sukrit. The Arabs knew him as Sokrat.

This is what Sukrit said: ‘It is my unshakable faith that no harm comes to a good man either in this world or the next. God never forsakes good men and their friends. I also believe that nobody ever dies before his time. I don’t look upon the sentence of death as a punishment. The time has come for me to die and be delivered from the sufferings of this life. That is why you have condemned me to die by drinking poison. I am sure that my good lies in that. I, therefore, bear no anger against my prosecutors or against those who have condemned me. They may not have meant well by me, but they can do me no harm either.

‘I have one request to make to the council of elders. If my sons forsake the path of goodness and follow that of evil, if they become lovers of wealth, punish them as you have punished me. Punish them also if they become hypocrites and try to show themselves other than what they are. If you do so, my sons and I will believe that you have acted justly.’

This is a request of Sukrit in regard to his sons. The elders of the city who had assembled to pass judgment on him, did not know the law of non-violence. He, therefore, made the foregoing request and thereby warned his sons and told them what he expected of them, and also rebuked the elders gently for punishing him for doing good. By suggesting to his sons that they should follow in his footsteps, he told them in effect that the path which he had shown to the citizens of

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”; vide the following item.
Athens was also meant for them, and even went to the extent of saying that, if they did not follow that path, they should be treated as deserving punishment.

I had decided to let this week be blank. But I could not reconcile myself to the idea. Glancing at the books, I saw Socrates’s speech. I opened the book, intending to send something from it, and my eyes fell on the world-famous passage in it which I have summarized above.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I and II

78. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

February 24/29, 1932

Evening, February 24, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your packet. The issue of visitors has taken a serious turn and no solution seems to be in sight. As you had hinted in your last letter, you also do not seem to have made any request for permission to see me.

This week’s post contains a letter by Lakshmi senior in which she complains against her letters being read [by you]. I think that once at prayer-meeting you should ask all of them whether anybody has an objection against your reading his or her letters. If any of them object, you need not read their letters, and even if you think that it is necessary to read them read only those of their letters which they permit you to read. Don’t mind if your letters become long. I should like you to give me all the information which it is permissible for you to give.

Discuss with Shankerlal¹ the problem of increasing the quantity of yarn spun.

The Parnerkar affair is a painful one. Show as much love and sympathy as you can.

I understand what you say about the Giri family. Do what you can.

Padma’s expenses will come to Rs. 60 a month. They are three

¹ Presumably Shankerlal Banker, Secretary, All-India Spinners’ Association in the family and, moreover, Padma is always ill.

If the agreement about visitors does not break down, even as many as five to seven persons can come and see me. But, as far as possible, we should take care that they are not more than five.

Send me a copy of Lord Irwin’s letter.

If I get an opportunity to see Mukta¹ and other women, I will not let it pass.

Have you informed Dr. Jivraj [Mehta] that Triveni² does not keep good health?

Is it through obstinacy that Kusum does not try the remedy which I have suggested? Revashankarbhai’s Dhiru had a bone which had decayed and he was cured by sun-baths. Countless people have benefited by this treatment.

I had a fairly long talk with Mathew. You will be happy to know that he spins and does a bit of other work.

Afternoon, February 29, 1932

I have not yet been able to start ‘Bal Gita’³. Nor can I decide what else I can write and send. This week, therefore, I send no special material.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

In the evening, ultimately, I could not resist the impulse to write something. About visitors there is no decision yet.⁴

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8211 Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

79. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI A. MEHTA

February 29, 1932

BHAIASRI BHAGWANJI,

I got your letter. Why should we feel hurt if a relation or friend gives us nothing or takes away something that is ours? If we realize that we have no claim on them, it is my experience that everything would be all right. I have observed that that is the experience of many

¹ Daughter of Jagjivandas N. Mehta of Amreli
² Wife of Jagjivandas N. Mehta
³ Literally, ‘Children’s Gita’, which later came to be known as Ramdas Gita ⁴ For the article “Death, a Friend” which followed, vide the preceding item.
others too. You have earned much and gone through many sweet and bitter experiences. Why should you not rest satisfied with what you have got and devote your abilities and your wealth entirely to public service?

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

SIT. BHAGWANJI ANUPCHAND VAKIL
SADAR RAJKOT
KATHIWAR

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5814. Also C.W. 3037. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

80. LETTER TO KRISHNA M. KAPADIA

February 29, 1932

CHI. KRISHNA,

I was glad to get your letter.

Nobody has been able to come and see me recently, and that is why there has been nothing in the papers. My health is excellent. Sardar is with me. If you can come and are permitted to see us, do come, both of you. Ba must have been released now.

If you have still not overcome love of money, do so. Wealth does not accompany anyone after death, but one’s good and evil deeds do. One should, therefore, do whatever service one can.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII

81. LETTER TO R. V. MARTIN

March 1, 1932

DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

As you know, for two weeks now I have not had any visits. They have been stopped because, I understand, the Government are revising the instructions that have been in force in this connection. The suspense is tantalizing for me and inconvenient for those who wish to visit me. I would therefore like an early decision in the matter.

The question of seeing my companions who have been brought to this prison and on which I wrote¹ to you a fortnight ago is much more vital for me. As I have said, this meeting of some of my companions now and then is a human want I may not deny myself without shaking and impairing the whole nervous system. I had hoped that you would procure an early decision, as I have simply asked for a repetition of what was considered reasonable by the Government last year.² I press for an early reply.

Yours sincerely,

M.K.GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

82. LETTER TO PREMLILA THACKERSEY

March 1, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I have been robbing you of lots of honey these days. Both of us have to take it frequently with warm water, and so two bottles get exhausted in nine or ten days. If you experience difficulty in getting honey, please let me know. Sometimes the honey is mixed with dirt and sometimes there are pieces of cork in it. That made me doubt whether the honey was collected from hives in the countryside. If that is so, I would not regard it fit for our consumption, for in collecting such honey a great many bees are killed and, moreover, it is never clean. I, therefore, eat only the honey which is collected scientifically. Such honey is now collected in our country. Please inquire how the honey which you send is collected and let me know.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

[PS.] Since the right hand is tired, I have written the above with the left.

¹ Vide “Letter to R. V. Martin”, 16-2-1932
² The reference is to the facilities given during his last term of detention in Yeravda Prison in 1930
The reference is to the following sentences in the letter dated February 2, 1932: “I ate for many days the honey which you had given me for the voyage. It was excellent.” Vide “Letter to Premlila Thackersey”, 2-2-1932 however, the name Ramesh is thought better, there is no harm in giving that name either. Santok should write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9060

85. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

March 3, 1932

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

I got your letter. I was happy to learn that you were improving. Write to Father Elwin and ask him to write to me without fail. Shamrao also should write.

Please try and mitigate Champa’s suffering as much as you can. Decide everything on the basis that a wife has the same rights as her husband.

Champa may do only as much as she voluntarily agrees to do.

I have already given detailed comments on the description of the spinning-wheel sent by Abbas. If you have not seen them, please let me know. I will send the comments again.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 36

86. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

March 3, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your postcard and letter. You say that you have nothing to write about, in the same way as children do. This is not right. You will be able to fill pages even if you describe your experiences. Think, and write.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1829
87. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

March 3, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

I may say that you wrote a good letter this time.

One should not tell a lie even in jest and, if one has done so, one must immediately correct one’s lapse.

Should one learn even what kind of questions to ask? We may ask questions the answers to which we do not know and which we know the other person can reply.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I was very glad that you stood first at the examination. My congratulations.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4078. Also C.W. 42. Courtesy:
Mangalabehn B. Desai

88. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

Y. M.,

March 3, 1932

CHI. VIDYA HINGORANI,

I have your letter. You will be cured by the same treatment and by being calm. The fact of the matter is that nothing is to be gained by seeking advice—mine or any one else’s. The mind is its own remedy, if it means that we can be rid of all worries by remembering God alone. Keep writing to me. Do not worry about anything.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani
89. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

March 4, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I have your letter. Those girls writing in Hindi write very nice letters. Why should God bend to every prayer? We hardly know when he is pleased or offended. Prayer is its own reward.

As a matter of fact, Truth is the best policy. It is tact as well as delicacy. Tact can be called gentleness. Than truth there is no better policy on earth, nothing more tactful or delicate.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 4968. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra. Also G.N. 7491

90. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

March 5, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

Since you have demanded a long letter, I have taken the double sheet. Now that you have entered upon your sixteenth year, you have become a responsible person. Improve your health and dedicate yourself to the service of others for life. And for this you should, of your own free will, observe the rules of Ashram life.

Now to your questions.

In the Ashram we keep no idol or image because there is before us God’s image in the form of the world and we should know God through it. If we look at the sky, there are innumerable images there too, and if we wish we may meditate on any of them and think that God dwells there also. In this connection, we should remember that persons like Imam Saheb and Amina did not find it necessary to have what people call an idol.

I have rivers and valleys to be crossed, which means that I have a

1 In the source these English words are in Devanagari.
2 ibid
3 ibid
4 ibid
long distance to go before I can realize God.

There can be no absolution from the sin of telling a lie knowingly, no matter how severe the prayashchitta one undergoes for it. Prayashchitta wins forgiveness only for one who has told a lie in ignorance. Do you understand this? If not, ask me again.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9948. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

91. LETTER TO ISHVARBHAI PATEL
March 5, 1932

CHI. ISHVAR,

I got your letter. Both of us were pleased. Persuade Napoleon also to write sometimes. And you should continue to write. I hope all of you are well.

Blessings from us both.
BAPU

CHI. ISHVARBHAI PATEL
C/O GANGABEHN KUNVARJI
VANZ
Via Sachin

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2696

92. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI
March 5, 1932

CHI. KUSUM,

What a woman you are! You wrote to me a postcard and a letter, and yet could tell me nothing. What did you read all these months, what thoughts came to you, how much did you spin, what health did you maintain, what places did you visit? If you wish, you can tell me all this and much else.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1830
93. LETTER TO NANA BHAI I. MASHRUWALA

March 5, 1932

BHAI NANA BHAI,

I got your letter. I had read in the papers about Tara’s* leaving. I know that Vijayalakshmi will miss her very much. But it is things like these which test us.

I also had a letter from Manilal and Sushila. I had advised him not to return without making proper arrangements for the affairs in South Africa. Probably he will be in India next week. You gave me no news about your health. Please do in your next letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7519. Also C.W. 4995. Courtesy: Kanubhai Mashruwala

94. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

March 5, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I had sent a wire to Rajkot the day before yesterday to cheer Khushalbhai. I have known few persons as fortunate as he. We would be happy to see him live long and be our guide and counsellor. But, should he die now, even from the ordinary human point of view that should be no cause for grief. Since, however, there is no further news from you, I assume that the cloud has vanished.

The issue of visitors has been partly settled. Anyone from the Ashram can come and see me, though even from among the Ashram inmates those who are classed as ‘political’ cannot come. But there are none such at present, unless we count Valji among them. If, therefore, anybody wishes to come next week, he may. The Superintendent should be informed in advance. It would be advisable to inform me too.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8212. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

* Tara Mashruwala; Sushila Gandhi’s younger sister
95. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

March 5, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

Your letter in Hindi was so good that when I read it, I thought you to be some other Pushpa. Your handwriting in the last letter was not good. You would get three marks for it. One should write each letter in a word as carefully as one draws a picture. See Mangala’s handwriting. How beautiful it is! However, your handwriting this time was certainly better than in your previous letters.

Blessings from
BAPU

96. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

March 5, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

You should improve your handwriting. You do write carefully, but the handwriting is not as good as it should be.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Is there any news about Narahari?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5767. Also C.W. 2990. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

1Vide “Letter to Pushpa S. Patel”, 11-2-1932
97. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
March 5, 1932

CHI. NIMU,

Having been trained in the Ashram, why need you feel false embarrassment? If you take the lead, other women also will go out for walks. Who else, if not a mother, will go out for a walk carrying her child in her arms? Do you not have any friend in Lakhtar? Induce her to go out with you. You, mother and daughter, should go out. Take Navin along. We should effect some carefully thought out reforms in such matters.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

98. LETTER TO KRISHNADAS GANDHI

Y. M.,
March 5, 1932

CHI. KRISHNADAS¹.

I have your lucid letter. If you have no work in particular, if Balkrishna or anybody else acting as editor can spare you and if you also wish and Jamnalalji is not opposed to the idea, it might be good for you to go to Vijapur, However, my advice should have no weight outside the jail gate. It is not right at all for a prisoner to take interest in affairs outside the jail.

How are Madalasa² and Om³?

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 369

¹ Son of Chhaganlal Gandhi
² Daughters of Jamnalal Bajaj
³ ibid
99. PREFACE TO “FROM YERAVDA MANDIR”

March 6, 1932

During my incarceration in 1930 in the Yeravda Central Prison, I wrote weekly letters to the Satyagraha Ashrams containing a cursory examination of the principal Ashram observances.¹ As the Ashram influence had already travelled beyond its geographical limits, copies of the letters were multiplied for distribution. They were written in Gujarati. There was a demand for translation into Hindi and other Indian languages, and also into English. Shri Valji Desai gave a fairly full translation in English. But seeing me in possession of comparative leisure during the recurrent incarceration, he has sent me his translation for revision. I have gone through it carefully, and touched up several passages to bring out my meaning more to my liking. I need hardly add that, if I was writing anew for the English reader, perhaps I should write a wholly new thing. But that would be going beyond my commission. And perhaps it is as well that even the English reader has the trend of my thought as expressed to the inmates of the Ashram, and in the year 1930. I have therefore taken the least liberty with the original argument.

M. K. GANDHI

From Yeravda Mandir

100. LETTER TO M. G. BHANDARI

March 6, 1932

DEAR MAJOR BHANDARI,

You have kindly given me a copy of the fresh instructions issued by the Government about the weekly visits.

I appreciate the trust reposed in me regarding the determination as to who shall be considered political inmates of the Ashram. I am anxious to be true to the trust. But before I could do so, there should be a common definition of the adjective ‘political’ between the Government and me. I take ‘political’ to mean those who are politically minded and are actually taking part in politics as apart from civil resistance. For if by ‘political’ are meant those who have been heretofore imprisoned as civil resisters or are believers in the doctrine of civil resistance, then there is no non-political inmate in the Ashram. If, however, the meaning is [as] I have given it, there are only three political inmates. I mean Sjts. Mahadev Desai, Pyarelal and Devdas Gandhi. But if I may not see the first two, I may not see Devdas Gandhi for they are like Devdas to me. As it so happens, they are all incarcerated. I may also mention that at the present moment there are only boys and girls and the few adults who are reserved for looking after the youngsters and the multifarious industrial activities of the Ashram.

¹Vide footnote 1, “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 27-1-1932

It is difficult, too, for me to submit a list of non-Ashram friends till I know the definition that the Government have in mind of the term ‘political’. I shall await reply to this before I submit a fairly full list for approval. But, meanwhile, I give below illustrative names of those friends whom I regard as non-political and whom I would put in the same category as my relatives.

Lady Thackersey, residence—Yeravda Hill. She is a social worker. She helped me during my serious illness in 1923 when I was a patient in the Sasoon Hospital.

Prof. Trivedi of the Agriculture College, Poona. He stands to me in the same close contact as Lady Thackersey.

Yeshvantprasad Desai, mill-owner residing in Matunga. He nursed me during the same illness and took up his abode in Poona for helping me.

Pyare Ali and his wife, living in retirement at a retreat near Thana, where they have taken in a few Muslim orphans. They lived nearly a year at the Ashram. They are a deeply religious couple.

These friends are in no sense political.

Pending reply to this letter, I have written to the Manager of the Ashram to send those inmates who may wish to visit me.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9554. Also Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40), Pt. I, pp. 131-3

\[1\text{Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 5-3-1932} \]
March 7, 1932

I am not yet ready to write and send chapters of the ‘Bal Gita’. As I was wondering what I should send this time, it occurred to me that I should give to the inmates of the Ashram my reminiscences of the Imam Saheb and should carry out this good resolution without delay. I, therefore, wish to write out such reminiscences as occur to me and as I think I may narrate.

Imam Saheb went to South Africa about the same year as I (1893). His real name was Abdul Kadir Bawazeer, but, as he served as Imam in South Africa, most people knew him as Imam Saheb. I always addressed him by this name.

The Imam Saheb’s father was the Muezzin of the famous Jumma Masjid in Bombay and served in that capacity right till his death. He died only a few years ago, after the Imam Saheb’s return to India. He fell dead just as he was washing and getting ready for the azan[^1]. Such a death comes only to the blessed. The Imam Saheb’s forefathers were Arabs and had come to India and settled in the Konkan years ago. Hence he knew the Konkani language too. His mother tongue was Gujarati, but he had little schooling. He knew Arabic well enough to be able to read from the Koran Sharif with a pleasing intonation, though not so well as to be able to understand everything in the Koran. He had picked up, through contacts in practical life, English, Dutch and Creole French. Urdu, of course, he knew. He had also a working knowledge of Zulu. His intellect was so sharp that, if he had regularly studied in a school, he would have earned reputation as a great scholar. Though he was not a lawyer, he had come to understand subtleties of law through practical experience.

The Imam Saheb had gone to South Africa for trade and had earned much. When he gave up business, he kept coaches which he supplied on hire and had a fairly good income from that calling. Being a man of independent temper, he never tried his fortune in big

[^1]: This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”; vide the following item.

[^2]: Call to the faithful business. He had a sweet voice, and, since his father was a Muezzin, he occasionally officiated as Imam in the mosque in Johannesburg. But he accepted no honorarium for his services.

The Imam Saheb had married twice. Both the wives were Malays. His first marriage was not successful, and so he married the lady whom we knew as his wife. This marriage had given him much happiness. He and the Haji Saheba served each other with great devotion. He was a sincere friend. So far as I know, the Imam Saheb’s views about marriage had undergone a complete change and he had come to believe in monogamy.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

102. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

March 7, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I infer from your second postcard that you must have returned to the Ashram. I hope you got my postcard despatched from here yesterday. Through some visitor, send again a piece of leather for the soles. I observe that there is one sole every month to be repaired. There is no urgency about the leather. Both the sandals have been re-soled only recently, so that they will require no attention for two months at least. It was only in order that it may be handy in case of necessity that I have asked you so early to send one.

All inmates of the Ashram who may be described as ‘non political’ will be permitted now to visit me. It is left to me to decide which of the inmates should be treated as ‘political’. But whom the Government would class as ‘political’, I can know only when I receive its definition of the term. I have, therefore, asked for such a definition. Meanwhile, anyone who wishes to come from there and whom you permit may come and see me, since, according to me, there is no one in the Ashram at present who may be described as ‘political’. If nobody is particularly eager to come, it is not necessary for any of you to come merely to make us feel happy. If, however, anybody wishes to come, I would not say ‘No’ to him or her. The Government has asked for a list of ‘non-politicals’ not living in the

1 Vide “Letter to Pushpa S. Patel”, 5-3-1932
2 Vide “Letter to M. G. Bhandari”, 6-3-1932
Ashram. I will draw up such a list after I receive its definition of the term ‘political’.

Do you get any news about Prabhavati?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Tell Valji that I have revised his translation of my letters on the Ashram vows and written out the preface. I will keep them with me now.

Manilal will probably arrive there during this week. If possible, the two should come and see me.

There are 37 letters, in addition to this one and the reminiscences of Imam Saheb.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8213. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

103. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

[March 7, 1932]

DEAR KAKA,

How are you? What food you get? How many are with you and who are they? How is Prabhudas? What food he gets? Inform me about your weight and that of Prabhudas. Similar questions I have asked Mr. Quinn fearing you might not get this letter. What are you reading? We both are all right here. For the present I take dry dates, lime-juice, green vegetables and almond-bread. I am not constipated. If my weight goes down, I will take milk again. I intend writing ‘Bal Gita’ and have commenced writing Imam Saheb’s Sirat. I am stuying

---

1 Vide “Preface to From Yeravda Mandir”, 6-3-1932
2 Presumably Manilal Gandhi and his wife, Sushila
3 Vide the preceding item.
4 The source bears a note to the effect that the Gujarati original of this is not available; this translation appears to have been done by the jail authorities. The addressee was in Visapur Jail.
5 The date is inferred from the reference in the letter to Gandhiji having commenced writing the biographical sketch of Imam Saheb; vide the preceding item, also “Diary, 1932”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
the position of the stars and for that I take assistance of that Gujarati book which is translated from Marathi and also see the maps given in the Weekly Times. I get up at night and see the positions of the stars. This time I hardly send for books. But I get some books from America. I think I will not be able to study Marathi this time. I feel weak and require more sleep. Perhaps after long rest I might regain my strength. How is Narahari? My blessings to you all.

Yours,

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40), Pt. I, p. 88

104. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

March 7, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I think Rama humbled your pride by making you forget to complete your sacrificial spinning.¹ I don’t count your lapse to be as serious as you do. It is right, however, that you should regard it as big enough. I say that Rama humbled your pride because if we, who are but puppets constantly liable to err, did not commit a single mistake in doing something, we are likely to be filled with pride (however subtle it may be). Rama seems to have treated you in the same way as He—or was it Siva?—had treated Narad. The incident has had two good results—your pride has been humbled and you will not make the same mistake again.

I have no comment to make here on the vivid sketches in your letter. I have never believed that you are hard-hearted. Your criticisms help me. Every one of us has virtues and weaknesses. If you are less inclined to see the virtues of others, try to see them more often.

There was nothing in my letter to make Narandas ask questions about himself. He does work in the spirit of yajna. It is not his fault that I have left him no time to do any bodily labour. This, too, is evidence of my lack of organizing ability. If I had been able to make efficient arrangements from the time that the Ashram was started, it would not have been necessary for several persons, as it is now, to be busy only in general supervision. We have gone on the way we started. I believe that it is still possible to change things, but I do not know how, and the Ashram has still not got a man or a woman, who will give more thought to the problem and enforce the Ashram rules more strictly. Till we get such a person, we should tolerant the present conditions. Let us always remember that the Ashram very much falls short of its ideal, for I believe it quite possible to organize things so well that everyone in it will do his or her share of body labour and good order will be preserved. Let us work in this faith. We shall discover the key one day.

¹ The addressee was rather proud of her unfailing observance of the Ashram rules. But once her spinning was short by eight to ten rounds and she atoned for it by a three-day fast.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10275. Also C.W. 6723. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

105. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

March 7, 1932

Bhai Ghanshyamdas,

What a lot of trouble you have taken! There is no reason for getting disturbed over the change in my diet. I have little or no faith in calories. Their norm applies only to them. How can we vie with them? Individual professions too must be considered while laying down a standard of calorie requirements. Now I am taking four ounces of toast too. I have received the dates. I think the good quality dates from Arabia are better than these. The ones sent to me are quite good. I will take milk as soon as I feel the need. Have no worry.

I am not surprised to read your account of America. But there are many good people too.

Did the climate over there agree with you? I am glad to learn that you have discovered the right diet for yourself. How is Malaviyaji Maharaj? Sardar tells me that Rameshwardas was ill. I had no knowledge of this. How is he now?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 7896. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

1 Presumably, Americans’
2 Addressee’s brother
106. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

March 8, 1932

DEAR AGATHA,

I have your two letters also the postman’s attempt [sic].

You are quite correct in not giving me details of the activities of friends, nor am I eager to know them. I am quite sure that all of you over there are doing your best and what is proper.

Do you hear from or see Maud? Please tell her to write to me and tell me all about her health and her progress otherwise.

My regards to all the friends.

I have not yet received the Ruskin volumes.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1451

107. LETTER TO MANMOHANDAS P. GANDHI

March 8, 1932

BHAJ MANMOHAN,

I have your letter. I had been thinking about you a few days ago when I got it. The books have not yet reached me.

I cannot call to mind any particular book on wool and silk industries. You should look up the long bibliography at the end of Puntambekar’s essay. There is one in Gregg’s book also.

For the present at least, I have quite a stock of books. Moreover, Ghanshyamdas also is going to send some, and so I do not wish to put you to trouble on that account just now.

1 The reference, presumably, is to the India Conciliation Group, London, whose “members, varying in views, were united in a concern for the situation in India”. The addressee became its Honorary Secretary in December, 1931.

3 M. P. Gandhi, Secretary, Indian Chamber of Commerce, Calcutta

4 Hand-spinning and Hand-weaving—An Essay by S. V. Puntambekar and N. S. Varadachari (S. Ganesan, Madras)
There is some harm even in being my namesake. If nothing else, you have to reply to correspondents and also confess that you are no Mahatma! Both of us are quite well. I cannot do much work with my right hand now and hence I have written this with the left.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRIYUT MANMOHANDAS GANDHI
135 CANNING STREET
CALCUTTA

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 15

108. LETTER TO SIR SAMUEL HOARE

March 11, 1932

DEAR SIR SAMUEL,

You will perhaps recollect that at the end of my speech at the Round Table Conference when the minorities’ claim was presented, I had said that I should resist with my life the grant of separate electorate to the Depressed Classes. This was not said in the heat of the moment, nor by way of rhetoric. It was meant to be a serious statement.

In pursuance of that statement, I had hoped on my return to India to mobilize public opinion against separate electorate, at any rate, for the Depressed Classes. But it was not to be. From the newspapers which I am permitted to read, I observe that any moment His Majesty’s Government may declare their decision. At first I had thought that if the decision was found to create separate electorates for the Depressed Classes, I should take such steps as I might then consider necessary to give effect to my vow. But I feel that it would be unfair to the British Government for me to act without giving previous notice. Naturally they could not attach the significance I give to my statement.

I need hardly reiterate all the objections I have to the creation of 1 Gandhiji’s letters from correspondents abroad were misdirected to the addressee.

2 Despatched on this date, the letter was drafted on March 9 and revised on March 10; vide “Diary, 1932”.

‘Vide “Speech at Minorities Committee Meeting”, 13-11-1931

112 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI separate electorates for the Depressed Classes. I feel as if I was one of them. Their case stands on a wholly different footing from that of the others. I am not against their representation in the legislatures. I should favour every one of their adults, male or female, being registered as voters, irrespective of education or property qualifications, even though the franchise test may be stricter for the others. But I hold that separate electorate is harmful for them and for Hinduism, whatever it may be from a purely political standpoint. To appreciate the harm that separate electorates would do to them, one has to know how they are distributed amongst the so-called caste Hindus, and how dependent they are on the latter. So far as Hinduism is concerned separate electorate would simply vivisect and disrupt it.
For me the question of these classes is predominantly moral and religious. The political aspect, important though it is, dwindles into insignificance compared to the moral and religious issue. You will have to appreciate my feelings in this matter by remembering that I have been interested in the condition of these classes from my boyhood and have more than once staked my all for their sake. I say this not to pride myself in any way. For, I feel that no penance that caste Hindus may do can, in any way, compensate for the calculated degradation to which they have consigned the Depressed Classes for centuries. But I know that separate electorate is neither penance nor any remedy for the crushing degradation they have groaned under.

I therefore respectfully inform His Majesty’s Government that in the event of their decision creating separate electorate for the Depressed Classes, I must fast unto death.

I am painfully conscious of the fact that such a step whilst I am a prisoner must cause grave embarrassment to His Majesty’s Government and that it will be regarded by many as highly improper on the part of one holding my position to introduce into the political field methods which they would describe as hysterical, if not much worse. All I can urge in defence is that for me the contemplated step is not a method, it is part of my being. It is a call of conscience which I dare not disobey, even though it may cost whatever reputation for sanity I may possess.

So far as I can see now, my discharge from imprisonment would not make the duty of fasting any the less imperative.

I am hoping, however, that all my fears are wholly unjustified and that the British Government have no intention whatever of creating separate electorate for the Depressed classes.

It is perhaps as well for me to refer to another matter that is agitating me and may also enforce a similar fast. It is the way repression is going. I have no notion when I may receive a shock that would compel the sacrifice.

Repression appears to me to be crossing what might be called the legitimate limit. A Governmental terrorism is spreading through the land. Both English and Indian officials are being brutalized. The latter, high and low, are becoming demoralized by reason of the Government rewarding as meritorious, disloyalty to the people and inhuman conduct towards their own kith and kin. The latter are being cowed down. Free speech has been stifled. Goondaism is being practised in the name of law and order. Women who have come out for public service stand in fear of their honour being insulted.

And all this, as it seems to me, is being done in order to crush the spirit of freedom which the Congress represents. Repression is not confined to punishing civil breaches of the common law. It goads people to break newly made orders of autocracy designed for the most part to humiliate them.

In all these doings as I read them, I see no spirit of democracy. Indeed, my recent visit to England has confirmed my opinion that your democracy is a superficial circumscribed thing. In the weightiest matters decisions are taken by individuals or groups, without any reference to the Parliament, and these have been ratified by the Members having but a vague notion of what they were doing. Such was the case with Egypt, the War of 1914, and such is the case with India. My whole being rebels against the idea that in a system called democratic, one man should have the unfettered power of affecting the destiny of the ancient people numbering over three hundred millions, and that his decisions can be enforced by mobilizing the most terrible forces of destruction. To me this is a negation of democracy.

And this repression cannot be prolonged without further embittering the already bitter relations between the two peoples. In so far as I am responsible and can help it, how am I to arrest the process? Not by stopping civil disobedience. For me it is an article of faith. I regard myself by nature a democrat. Democracy of my conception is wholly inconsistent with the use of physical force for enforcing its will. Civil resistance therefore has been conceived to be a proper substitute for physical force to be used wherever generally the latter is held necessary or justifiable. It is a process of self-suffering and a part of the plan is that in given circumstances a civil resister must sacrifice himself even by fasting to a finish. That moment has not yet arrived for me. I have no undeniable call from within for such a step. But the events happening outside are alarming enough to agitate my fundamental being. Therefore, in writing to you about the possibility of a fast regarding Depressed Classes, I felt that I would be untrue to you if I did not tell you also that there was another possibility, not remote, of such a fast.

Needless to say that from my side absolute secrecy has been maintained about all the correspondence I have carried on with you. Of course Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel and Mahadev Desai, who has just been sent to join us, know all about it. But you will no doubt make whatever use you wish of this letter.¹

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

SIR SAMUEL HOARE
WHITEHALL
LONDON

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(4), Pt. I, p. 5; also The Bombay Chronicle, 13-9-1932

109. LETTER TO DURGA M. DESAI

March 11, 1932

CHI. DURGA,

Mahadev arrived yesterday unexpectedly.² It seems the authorities thought that I must have one more companion besides Sardar. There is no cause for worry about my leg. There is a little inflammation at one spot. Treatment is going on. There is not the slightest [cause]³ for worry. You can always write to me anything you wish to. And you may come whenever you like.

Blessings from

BAPU

¹ For Sir Samuel Hoare’s reply, vide Appendix III. For an account of Gandhiji’s discussion with Vallabhbhai Patel and Mahadev Desai on separate electorates and repression, vide The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, pp. 4-5, 7 & 8.
² Mahadev Desai, addressee’s husband, was transferred from Nasik Prison to Yeravda Central Prison.
³ The source is mutilated here.
[PS.]

You will find it convenient if you come with the party of visitors expected next week.¹

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9484

110. LETTER TO LAKSHMIBEHN N. KHARE

March 11, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMIBEHN,

Instead of taking somebody’s help to write a letter to me, why don’t you write in Marathi? I will learn that much Marathi without effort. I understand what you say about the women. Whether or not there is an association, all of you there should meet from time to time and discuss subjects bearing on your spiritual progress.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 281. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

111. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

March 11, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

If the elders have gone to the temple², all of you should take up their work. Then you too will have followed them to the temple.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9466

¹ This sentence is in Mahadev Desai’s hand.
² The reference is to jail.
112. LETTER TO NARAYAN DESAI

March 11, 1932

CHI. NARAYANRAO,

Now that you have graduated from Bablo" to Narayan, I suppose I may go further and make you a “Rao”\(^1\). Besides, Mahadev tells me that you seem to have learnt carding only recently. If that is true, it is proper that you should be addressed as “Raosaheb”. Mahadev is here now. You may send any messages you like. How many rounds do you spin daily?

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

PS.

Since you card, Mahadev is eager to spin with slivers made by you. Send a few pads.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9475

113. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Y. M.,

March 11, 1932

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

Write to me everything about Shankerlal. God is our Protector.

Who is this Nanakram in Majoor Hospital? What is wrong with him? If necessary have him admitted to the Municipal Hospital.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32785

---

\(^1\) A baby boy

\(^2\) Rao” and “Raosaheb” are honorific suffixes added to names of elders.
114. LETTER TO A GIRL

March 12, 1932

CHL.

Learning the Gita by heart only requires a good memory, and the task is easy. But understanding the meaning calls for the use of one’s intellect. This is a difficult thing, and, therefore, uninteresting. When, however, you feel interest in exercising your intellect, the desire to understand the meaning will come to you. You should, therefore, learn to take interest in subjects which require you to use your intellect.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8963. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

115. A LETTER

March 12, 1932

CHL.

There are numerous occasions for one to speak. You may have questions to ask in your class, or may have to speak when playing games or during the recess. It is our duty to spin and hence, if we do not spin, we neglect our duty. That means that we fall into a debt.

Just as the hand becomes dirty if we touch a dirty thing so if we tell a lie the mind is defiled, and that is worse than the hand becoming dirty. We can wash the hand if it has become dirty. It is not as easy to purify the mind.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8965. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
116. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

March 12, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

If instead of reading many books we read only one and reflect over it and put its teaching into practice, we get the desired result. Sannyasa does not mean the renunciation of all activities; it means only the renunciation of activities prompted by desire and of the fruits of action performed as duty. This is real freedom from activity. That is why one must learn to see inactivity in activity and activity in inactivity. Freedom from activity means only one thing, and it is what I have explained above. And still one must win such freedom. This problem led to the idea of renunciation of the fruits of action.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 223. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

117. LETTER TO H. W. EMERSON

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,

March 13, 1932

DEAR MR. EMERSON,

I must thank you for your kind letter of the 2nd instant given to me on the 10th. Though I do not share your rosy opinion about the working of repression, I know I must not enter into any argument. I write this only to correct one grave misunderstanding. I cannot accept the compliment you pay me for my loyalty to my colleagues as if it was the highest thing in life to me. I wish you could have known that all my loyalties are subservient to my loyalty to truth. I have been known, even during the past twelve years, to sacrifice friendships for the sake of what I have considered to be truth. I am happy in the knowledge that at no time have I had colleagues more disposed than now to follow my guidance even though they might differ with me in important matters short of vital principle. Might not history have been written differently, if among the celestials I had enjoyed for my loyalty to truth the credit you kindly give me for my loyalty to my colleagues, and if therefore I had received glad response to my request for the interview? God or the gods in New Delhi had willed otherwise!!!

The Bombay Government have now sent Mahadev Desai as an additional companion. Hence I am able to spare you my wretched handwriting.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

118. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
March 13, 1932

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter. When I first read it I thought you were leaving. Hence I wrote to Anasuyabehn. Now I see that it is some other notice. Let me know what has happened.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32744

119. A LETTER

March 13, 1932

CHI.,

Family influences by themselves cannot ensure one’s moral and spiritual progress. Such progress is impossible without effort on one’s part. If there is no progress despite such effort, we need not worry. It is as true in the science of spiritual progress as it is in the science of mechanics that no force ever fails to produce its result. If five maunds of force push an object towards the north and an equal amount pushes it towards the south, the object will remain stationary, but both the forces will have done their full work and the stationary state of the object will in fact amount to its motion. It is this truth which suggested the method of working without attachment. We should go on doing our best.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From Gujarati: C.W. 8962. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

120. LETTER TO DAHIBEHN PATEL

_March 13, 1932_

CHI. DAHIBEHN,

I was very glad to get your letter. Has your brother completely recovered? Write to me from time to time. Nobody who has dedicated himself or herself to service has to go in search of work.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9205

121. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

_March 13, 1932_

CHI. MANU,

Your description of Ajmer is good. But the handwriting is bad. Try and make it better in your future letters. I will look forward to descriptions of Jaipur and other places. Ask Dudhibehn to write to me. What is your weight?

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7422. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

122. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE

_March 13, 1932_

CHI. MATHURI,

This time your handwriting was better than it generally is. If you persist in your effort and try to improve it, you will be able to make each letter in a word as beautiful as a pearl. Your speed in carding is good for your age, provided the slivers which you make are very fine.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 263-a. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

123. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

March 13, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter. For some time I shall have to write with my left hand and I shall not, therefore, be able to write very long letters. The left hand cannot write as fast as the right hand can. True, Mahadev’s help will be available, but dictating to him will be a new practice so far as letters written from jail are concerned. I shall see how far I can follow that practice. I shall have to observe whether I feel at ease in dictating letters which are prompted purely by love. I will certainly dictate letters of business.

I was not in the least pained by your letter.

All of us must grow or deteriorate in some measure every day. Nothing remains unchanging.¹

When I take the blame upon myself, I do not act out of false humility and do not exaggerate. My taking the blame upon myself does not mean that others are exonerated. But the leader must take the discredit for failure as he does the credit for success.

I accept the need for inter-caste marriages up to a certain point.

If a husband has the right to divorce his wife, a wife should also have the right to divorce her husband. But generally I am against the practice of divorce. The bond of love ought to be indissoluble.

Boys and girls may be educated either separately or together. It depends on the subject of study. They will have to study law together. I cannot lay down in this matter one single rule which can be followed in all countries and in all circumstances. The problem is not a simple one. No one has been able to demonstrate decisive results in any country in this field. The whole matter is in an experimental stage.

¹ In her reply to Gandhiji’s letter dated February 25 (vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 25-2-1932.), the addressee had stated that if Gandhiji had stopped growing in stature whether in or out of jail, she would admire him less.
Beauty should certainly be praised, but silent praise is better. Moreover, of one who is not filled with joy by the beauty of the sky, it may be said that nothing will please him. But those who dream, in the delirium of their joy, of building a flight of steps to reach the constellations live in ignorance.

I liked the curriculum. I don’t think I can suggest just now any changes or improvements in it.

As regards Japan and China, our sympathy is bound to be on the side of the latter. But the real position seems to be as I have described it in my letter to a child.

What you write about Jamnadas is true. He seems troubled in mind but keeps his problem to himself. If Sushila can understand what troubles him, something can be done to help him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10276. Also C.W. 6724. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

124. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

March 13, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

I have written at length about speaking in some other letter and you may read it. God has given us the various abilities to control them, and some to suppress them altogether. He has given us a mouth not to go on speaking in season and out of season, but to speak for doing God’s work. God has given us abilities for doing both good and evil but we have to get rid of the evil impulses completely. Do you understand now?

Blessings from
BAPU

1 Renounce and enjoy” (Ishopanishad, 1)
2 For the Ashram school
3 A friend of the addressee
4 Vide “A Letter”, 12-3-1932

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932 123
125. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

March 13, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

If a girl’s letter does not contain anything which requires a reply, she should not expect a letter by return of post. Your last letter was of that kind. But since you have asked me to write to you every week, I have written this letter. However, in future bear in mind what I have said.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Is there any news about Narahari?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5768. Also C.W. 2991. Courtesy: Vanamala Desai

126. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

March 14, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I got your letter. It is not right for a brahmachari to attend to several things at a time. He takes up only one thing at a time and concentrates all the energy of his body and mind on that thing. If, therefore, you are occupied in manual work and there is no necessity for you to talk about anything relating to it, the proper thing would be to remain silent. However, if we are playing or have gone out for a walk, talking is a part of the activity and so we can talk at that time. Anybody who regulates his life strictly according to this principle, can make it full of interest. And an institution where people work in complete silence and speak only when necessary impresses us as a very quiet place. Not only do I see no harm in the girls putting on shorts and a shirt when doing exercises and also at other times, but I actually like the thing. For the Ashram residents their goal in life has already been fixed, and it is that they are dedicated to the quest for truth.

To your question whether one should or should not aim to be like a soldier, I shall give an answer after you tell me in your next letter what all of you understand to be the meaning of the word ‘soldier’.
After travelling in many countries, I have found India to be the most beautiful country. But since I am free, as I believe, from blind partiality, I have always been able to see much good in every country and so have found them all to be good and have appreciated the special excellence of each of them. On the whole, however, I have felt that India is not inferior to any other country, that one finds in it all that one may want and that what one does not find in India is not quite essential for our life.

If the Ashram has money to spare and if the things are not likely to cost much, even at such a time as the present I would have no objection to having swings and slides made for you. You should, however, bear one thing in mind, namely, that the Ashram should always be a poor people’s institution, and that just because the Ashram has the necessary money we will not be justified in getting anything we want. And even things which befit poor people may be ordered only if the Ashram has the necessary funds. The question, therefore, is only whether we can afford a thing and whether it is in keeping with our aim.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8968. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

127. LETTER TO KASTURBA GANDHI

March 14, 1932

BA,

For some days past I had been thinking of writing to you; and I read today that you were still out. And so I had a mind to write. Mahadev also is with us now. Thus our company has become larger. All three of us are quite well. Ramdas came and saw me. He was all right. Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II
March 14, 1932

As we know, Imam Saheb had set much store by patriotic considerations in arranging the marriages of his two daughters. He wanted to marry them to young men who would devote themselves to the service of the country, would make no difference between Hindus and Muslims and who would, by their manner of living, do honour to the Ashram ideal of life. And so he selected two Gujarati Muslims from families of average means.

My first meeting with Imam Saheb may be said to have taken place in 1903 in South Africa after my return to that country. He used to tell me that we had met once before that but I have no recollection of that meeting. When I set up practice as a lawyer in Johannesburg, he used to accompany clients to my office. He was an altogether different man then in appearance and manners. He used to dress himself in English style, and wore a Turkish cap. I immediately recognized his intelligence, but otherwise he did not produce a good impression on me at first. I thought him rather obstinate, but, as I came to know him better, I liked him more and more.

I saw, as I had more and more experience of dealing with him, that what I had thought to be obstinacy was only his eagerness to understand fully the implications of every point. If he held an opinion on any matter, he would not give it up till his reason was convinced of his error. He would not take a lawyer’s word as gospel truth in legal matters merely because he himself was not a lawyer, but would argue against him even in such matters. Though he had had no education, he had complete confidence in his judgement. Moreover, he had a proud sense of self-respect. I, therefore, saw very soon that he had sufficient strength of mind to cling to his own view without being overawed by anybody.

In the beginning, Imam Saheb used to come to me on behalf of clients and explain their cases to me. But he took interest in current affairs and would draw me into discussion about them. He evinced keen interest in discussing the hardships of our countrymen in South

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”; vide the following item.
Africa and took part in the meetings, etc. On most issues he supported me, but he never hesitated to oppose me even in public whenever he did not approve of my stand. Gradually, however, he was drawn towards me and, when the satyagraha commenced, proved himself as steadfast as a rock. Some fell and some weakened, and some opposed me bitterly, but I don’t remember Imam Saheb to have wavered at any time. When he was imprisoned for the first time, nobody expected that he would remain strong till the end. On the contrary, many persons told me, including some who held him in high respect, that he would not go to jail again, that he had a delicate constitution, was pleasure-loving and had many wants. This was on the whole true. However, Imam Saheb never weakened, whereas I saw many who were known to be simple in their habits withdrawing from the struggle. Imam Saheb’s capacity for self-sacrifice was very great, and, though he would think long before taking a decision, he showed wonderful strength in clinging to a decision once taken.

When Imam Saheb plunged into the struggle, he had no thought at all that he would have to break up his home and embrace a life of complete renunciation. As soon, however, as he saw that if he wished to remain staunch in the satyagraha movement he would have to give up the attachment to his home, he did so almost in an instant. This was no small sacrifice on his part.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

129. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Monday, March 14, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

Mahadev has joined me in the nick of time for my right hand has just gone out of service. By this I do not meant that it is continually paining, but I certainly mean that it would start doing so if I went on writing with it or doing any other work. It may even happen that I shall never be able now to do much work with it, for, I see that, though I gave it complete rest during the return voyage from England, it has not recovered sufficiently well so that I could resume working with it. We need not feel sorry even if it becomes useless for ever. Sooner or later all the bodily organs will have become weak. We need not, therefore, feel concerned when we see them gradually becoming so. It is no small grace of God that I have taken from theright hand the service which I have done. And, after all, as our [spiritual] dictionary tells us, it is He who takes work from us, and He will do so as long as He wills and on His own condition. Our hands and feet are His tools, and it will be enough if we knowingly do nothing to impair their efficiency. We were foolish to the extent that we misused them in the past. It is because we misuse our body that, when what we call old age arrives, our limbs and organs begin to decay. To one who has never misused his bodily organs, old age will not be painful but, on the contrary, it will bring happiness. If trees were thinking beings, we can easily see that they would feel no pain when their fruits, fully ripe, fell to the ground. Rather, the knowledge that these fruits would be used by human beings would make them happy. Similarly, he whose life is good must feel confident that when old age has worn out the strength of his body, his new condition will serve some greater good. But, as things are, all this seems to us as mere wise talk, for we see no instances in the world, or very few, of perfectly happy old age. Similarly, we rarely see a person who welcomes his death as a friend.

The health of all three of us may be described as good. It is true that Mahadev has been suffering pain in the bone of one of his legs, but rest and sun-bath will probably cure it. There is no cause for worry.

You have given no news about Khushalbhai during the past week. I infer from this that the cloud has dispersed for the time being.

The position about visitors is still not clear. It is not improbable that the practice may have to be stopped. However, I believe Jaisukhlal, Kashi, Lakshmi and Moti will have come and seen me in a day or two.

Haridas Gandhi has been brought here. He is still in the hospital. We get reports about his health from time to time, but none of us has yet been able to see him. Ramdas came and saw me. Most probably I shall be able to see the others too. I had expected a letter from Mirabehn, but I have received none so far.

It was reported in the newspapers that Gangabehn Jhaveri has been released. It seems somebody paid the fine on her behalf. Who was that person? Do you get any news about Prabhavati?

1 Bhagavad Gita
2 A resident of Amreli who came to join the Ashram
You should not mind the expenditure on behalf of Radha. I hope Punjabhai has recovered now.

You may write to Holmes about the permission which those gentlemen from New York have asked for. Or, it might be better to send a cable. Since you cannot give a final reply to Holmes within Rs. 25, you had better send a cable to the others as follows:

“Authorizing Rev. Holmes Community Church New York do needful.”

Send a copy of the cable to Holmes and tell him that, if he thinks fit, he may give them the permission they have asked for.

Lilavati told me that the preparation of almonds which she had brought for me was made of a mixture of almonds and dates. If I can know how it is made and in what proportion the ingredients are mixed, we may be able to make it here. It does not seem proper that you should send a parcel of the thing from there periodically, and even if I don’t mind your doing so I must know the quantities of the ingredients, for otherwise I can not judge how much of the preparation I should eat daily.

I had read in the papers about Brijkishan².

Blessings from

BAPU³

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8214. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

130. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

March 14, 1932

CHI. RUKMINI,

I got your letter.

I would prefer ‘Madhavdas’ to ‘Madhavlal’. But these days a good many people do not like the suffix ‘das’. Did Santok like my suggestion?⁴ You should also discuss the matter with Benarsi and ¹ The source has these words in English.

² Brijkrishna Chandiwala, who was arrested on February 22, 1932, and sentenced to six months’ imprisonment and a fine
³ For the article “Imam Saheb-II” which followed, vide the preceding item.
⁴ Vide “Letter to Rukmini Bazaj”, 1-3-1932 then decide. Please do not think that the name selected by me should be approved. Do not neglect to write to me after going to Kashi.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9061

131. LETTER TO SHANTILAL MEHTA

March 14, 1932

CHI. SHANTI,

I got your letter. I was happy. Why have you not mentioned where you got married? I was glad that the marriage ceremony was simple. Did you go for the ceremony alone or were you accompanied by any elders? Manilal does not seem to have arrived last week, but there was a letter from him in which he said that he would be positively here in a fortnight or two. If you can settle down peacefully in your town, I think it would be better for you to remain in India. What would your wife like? Has she had some education? I should know that too. Without that information I cannot rush forward with an opinion.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII

132. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

Monday, March 14 [1932]

DEAR SISTERS,

I am glad that you want a letter from me. I will make today’s letter brief. It is not good that your Association has not been working. Even though your number has become small, it would be good if you can run the Association. Its usefulness may not be apparent now, and it is also likely that there would be obstacles of various kinds in the beginning. However, if you persist and carry it on, it is bound to prove useful. To do so, you should find out collective activities, no

1 From the reference in the letter to Gandhiji’s writing to the addressees earlier about “women in other countries”, vide “Letter to Ashram Women”, 25-1-1932 matterhow small, which will be known as the Association’s activities and in running which everyone would acquire a sense of personal responsibility. This does not at all mean that you are merely to add one more activity to several others; it means that the Association should take upon itself one or more of the activities being conducted at present. Do not fall a victim to the false notion that women cannot work as a team. I wrote to you earlier how much the women in other countries are able to do. Even here we have some examples; if there are none, we have to provide them.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

133. LETTER TO NEWLY MARRIED COUPLE

March 14, 1932

CHL,

You two have shown a new path. Both of you have my blessings. Sardar voluntarily adds his. We wish that you two should devote yourselves to selfless service. That your request for blessings comes on a printed card makes the request purely formal and to that extent it loses its value. If blessings are worth soliciting, they are worth soliciting in a self-written letter, which should also state some good resolutions made by the couple to mark the auspicious event.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 15

134. LETTER TO CHILDREN

March 14, 1932

Even if the present stage [of the struggle] lasts a long time, our energies must not flag, as flag they must in case we are unhappy about it.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 15

1 The addressees had asked for blessings, not as usual on the occasion of their wedding, but after the event had taken place.
135. A LETTER

March 14, 1932

I further believe that marriages should be contracted out of caste. Even though the choice is extended up to the Vaishya community only, it will suffice. But no hindrance should be placed if a worthy match is found only outside the Vaishya community and the girl likes him.

[From Hindi]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 15

136. LETTER TO R. V. MARTIN

March 15, 1932

DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

I revert to my letter of the 1st instant. I was thankful for the permission to see my son Ramdas Gandhi whilst the whole of my request was under consideration. It is high time however that an early decision was given. The matter has for me assumed extraordinary urgency because a co-prisoner Haridas Gandhi is seriously ill and has lost considerable weight. He has lived for a long time at the Ashram. I believe that I exercise greater influence over him than his father and I know that the very fact of my seeing him will put life into him. I would like the Government to realize that young men like Haridas who have come under my influence are no less to me than Ramdas Gandhi. It is impossible for me therefore to be at ease whilst this matter of seeing the fellow-prisoners is hanging fire, especially in view of serious illness of Sjt. Haridas Gandhi. I request an answer by Friday morning.²

Yours sincerely,

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(14)

¹ Vide “Letter to R. V. Martin”, 1-3-1932
² For Martin’s letter to the Home Department, Bombay Government, and the latter’s communication to the Inspector-General of Prisons, vide “Correspondence Between R. V. Martin and R. M. Maxwell (A) R. V. Martin’s Letter to R. M. Maxwell”, 15-3-1932
137. FRAGMENT OF A LETTER

March 16, 1932

It is possible and necessary to treat human beings on terms of equality, but this can never apply to their morals\(^1\). One would be affectionate and attentive to a rascal and to a saint; but one cannot and must not put saintliness and rascality on the same footing.

_The Diary of Mahadev Desai_, Vol. I, p. 15

138. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

March 16, 1932

CHI. RAIHANA,

I got your card. In the letter which has been lost in transit, I had asked you whether there was any rule regarding the use of _ze_, and _se_, _sin_, _hai_, _he_.

For example, why should _khaas_ be spelt with _swad_ and why not with _se_ or _sin_. Why _sin_ and not _swad_ in _salaam_? Or why not _se_? In spelling _galat_, why _toi_ and not _te_? Then I had copied the following _ghazal_:

Life in this world called beautiful garden is only for a short while; you will enjoy the spectacle for a few days only. O traveller, prepare for the march; residence on earth is short. When the great Hakim Lukman was asked, “How long will you live?”—rubbing his hands in despair he replied: “Only a few days.” After burial the angel of death said in the grave: “You will sleep here only for a few days.”\(^2\)

I trust you will consider this much enough for today, seeing that writing with the left hand takes time. The Urdu handwriting is of course very bad, but I am sure you will have no difficulty in deciphering it. Mahadev has now been brought to stay with us here. He remembers your [favourite] _bhajan_ “Awake and arise, O traveller!” Once it was even sung at prayer-time. Next time I shall send it to you in Urdu script.

Are you quite well? Where is Pashabhai? Blessings to Dahyabhai. Our _vandemataram_ and many many _salaams_ to Mother. Tell Father that we saw in _The Leader_ his photograph with the Aligarh students. We had a hearty laugh at the sight of his face hidden away in

\(^1\) Mahadevbhaini Diary has ‘manner’.

\(^2\) Vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”
the beard. Write to me how Hamida and Rohini are faring. My blessings to them all. Blessings to Sohaila also and kisses to the baby. I hope this letter will reach you all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9638

139. LETTER TO M. G. BHANDARI

March 18, [1932]

DEAR MAJOR BHANDARI,

When I gave you the three names, I did not think of the female ward at all. But there are many Ashram inmates in that ward. I would therefore for the time being drop out Sjt. Chhaganlal Joshi and have Shrimati Gangabehn Vaidya instead.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 5129

140. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

March 18, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your packet yesterday, that is, on Thursday. Harjivan\(^2\) and Sharda wish to come here and see me. They may do so now. The present position is that those inmates of the Ashram who do not take part in political activities can visit me. About others, correspondence is going on. Only those who are regularly engaged in Congress work can be described as taking part in political activities. According to this criterion, only Mahadev, Devdas and Pyarelal can be described as doing that. To some extent Valji also may be classed with them, but none of the others. However, those who are carrying on picketing at present must be described [as ‘political’]. Since the whole business is left to my good faith, the final responsibility rests on me. Hence Bal

\(^1\) From The Diary of Mahadev Desai, “Draft of Letter to Frederick Lely”
\(^2\) Haridas Gandhi, Narsinhbhai Ishwarbhai Patel and Chhaganlal Joshi
\(^3\) Harjivan Kotak whose wife was Sharda and other boys and girls who are doing picketing should be excluded. Any of the other inmates can come. Not more than five should come at a time. As I have already explained in a previous letter, it is not necessary that five persons, or even one, should come every week. But anyone who wishes to come has my permission to do so, within the limits explained above.

It will be necessary to send the names to the Superintendent in advance, and no one else should be included later. It will be more convenient to see me between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. on any day, except Sundays and other holidays. I think I have now explained the whole matter sufficiently clearly. There is nothing more, except that, if those who wish to come give their names to you in advance, please send them to me so that I might be ready. . . .

[From Gujarati]

141. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

March 20, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA.

Even if we spin to meet our own requirements, the country gains since it means so much addition to its wealth. And, moreover, we shall have set an example of spending one’s time usefully and of self-reliance.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9467. Also C.W. 8972. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 The letter is incomplete in the source.
142. A LETTER

March 20, 1932

CHI.,

When manure is spread in the field, it becomes fine earth and the gases which are generated in the process serve as food for the trees. Similarly, so long as the saliva remains in the mouth and the mouth is healthy, it helps to digest food. When, however, it is spat out, it makes dirt. Mixing with dust, it breeds germs. The point is that in its own place nothing is dirty, and the second point is that dirt is made by man. We should know this and understand and observe the rules of sanitation.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8975. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

143. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

March 20, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

The stars and the constellations which we see in the heavens are so many images of God.

Indian women’s dress has appealed to me as the best. Mahavir, Buddha, Jesus, Mahomed and other teachers have sung praises of one and the same God.

Most of the education for women should be the same as for men. There may be some difference bearing on the special functions and duties of women.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9907. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala
144. A LETTER

March 20, 1932

CHI.

It is true that in many places people take more freedom than is proper. Such things always happen whenever there is popular awakening. Self-control cannot be forced on anybody. We should be strict in our own conduct and be liberal towards others. What we regard as excessive freedom may, however, be moderation for those concerned. One person may take milk as medicine and another may consume it to pamper himself. Such things happen every day.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8979. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

145. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

March 20, 1932

CHI. GANGABEHN (JHAVERI),

Narandas must have explained to you the whole position regarding your coming to see me. The Government’s order on the subject means that those who have been taking active part in the struggle cannot come. This does not apply to relations. I don’t regard this issue as worth fighting for and, therefore, I think I should be satisfied with the facility which they permit. You may write a letter and say in it what you wish to, or send a message with somebody else who may be coming. You cannot ask me anything concerning the struggle. A prisoner has no right, and is not fit, to express any opinion about anything concerning himself. How did you keep in jail? Narrate your experience. Who do you think paid the fine?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3949. Also C.W. 70. Courtesy: Gangabehn Jhaveri
146. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

March 20, 1932

CHI. MANGALA (DARLING),

When we get swaraj, we will certainly do a great many things. You will see caves and many other things besides. But there are many interesting things to see all around us, and we can see them even today. If you know how to see these, then alone will you see other things correctly. Have you learnt to look at the sky? I am learning to do it in my old age.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4079. Also C.W. 43. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

147. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE

March 20, 1932

CHI. MATHURI,

By spinning as a form of yajna we produce yarn for the poor. Other people will follow our example and spin, and we become one with the poor and in that way are purified.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 264. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

148. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

March 20, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

Brushing the teeth with datan should be supplemented by the use of fingers. That is, rub the gums vigorously with the fingers while gargling after you have brushed the teeth with datan and cleansed the tongue with the twig. One suffering from pyorrhoea should brush the teeth with datan twice daily, and I would not think it too much to give half an hour each time. I have come across negroes brushing their teeth at all times of the day. The benefit from the use of datan is not merely that the teeth are brushed with it, but also that all the poisonous matter in the gums is thrown out with the fluids discharged from the mouth while crushing the datan, as we spit out the fluids entirely. I myself use nothing else except common salt with the datan. Of course, my brushing the teeth does not mean much, because I have not a single tooth left in the upper jaw and even in the lower only a few remain. Both the babul and the neem twigs are good for datan but perhaps the neem is likely to be better for one suffering from pyorrhoea as the bitterness of the neem is highly beneficial.

1 Same as datun; vide “Letter to Tulsi Maher”, 24-1-1932

There is not the slightest need for the girls to use a fountain pen. Really speaking, nobody in the Ashram should need a fountain pen. Why should anybody be in such hurry? For students at any rate, it is certainly a harmful thing to use. The reed-pen is the best for writing Gujarati, Hindi, Urdu and other Indian scripts. We should teach the children to use it properly.

During prayers at the Ashram, none should start reciting or singing before the leader begins. And again, the rule is that when he leads, only those can join in the recitation or singing who can do so in tune. When the whole community sings harmoniously in one tune, their singing never fails to produce an effect. Nor does silence fail. Both are beneficial, each in its proper place. In offering oblations, etc., at a sacrifice, the incantations used to be chanted aloud in the belief that thousands were witnessing the ceremony with reverence. Once that became a custom, even when only five or ten persons are present the incantations at a sacrifice continue to be chanted aloud.

The observance of one principal vow mostly includes that of several minor ones. Just as a neem tree comes out of another neem tree, so human beings are born from human beings, and just as the general properties of the neem are transmitted from one to another, so are those of human beings. But because of several other factors which also operate, the transmission of all characteristics is not, as it should not be, maintained. Moreover, we observe certain peculiarities in man also because of the difference that exists between man and other living creatures.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7492. Also C.W. 4969. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra
149. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

March 20, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

Would a Sardar write letters? He would act as Sardar and ask others to write on his behalf.

This time your handwriting was good. If you pay careful attention, it is bound to improve. Was there any letter from Kamala?

Blessings from
BAPU

150. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

March 20, 1932

BHAJ VALJI,

I got your letter. No argument of yours or mine will avail. How can anybody argue against a law? One may, against a bill. If you do without an introduction, the thing may be possible.

If children play cards during their recreation time, you cannot forbid them. We cannot forbid even grown-up people if they play. We may tell them that it would be better if they did not play. They should not play for stakes. What is your argument against cards?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati C.W. 7423. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai
March 21, 1932

We should remember that Imam Saheb had set up his home in English style. Haji Saheba had lived in that style from her very birth. Fatima and Amina also were brought up like English children. For one who had lived in this manner, it was extremely difficult to curtail his heavy expenditure and adopt an utterly simple mode of life. For Imam Saheb, however, once he had made up his mind to do a particular thing, it was quite easy to carry out his resolve. And, therefore, when I decided to leave Johannesburg and to settle in Phoenix, he himself proposed that he, too, would live there. Though I knew his firmness of mind, I was completely at a loss what to say in reply to his proposal. I described to him the hardships of life in Phoenix. A man who had never put his body to the slightest trouble and had always lived surrounded by comforts and luxuries, I wondered how such a person would be able to start forthwith living like a labourer. Even if he himself could bear the hardships of life in Phoenix, what about Haji Saheba, and Fatima and Amina, I asked. Imam Saheb’s reply was brief. He said: “I have put my trust in God. And you do not know Haji Saheba. She will always be ready to live where I live, and as I live. If, therefore, you have no other difficulty in the matter, I have decided to come and live in Phoenix. No one knows when the struggle will end. I don’t think I shall be able to carry on my old business of supplying coaches on hire, or take up any other occupation. Like you, I too have realized that a satyagrahi should give up love of wealth and possessions.” Imam Saheb’s proposal pleased me very much. I wrote to my co-workers in Phoenix. They also welcomed the proposal. And so Imam Saheb and his family came over.

Many inmates of the Ashram probably do not know that Imam Saheb joined the residents of Phoenix in all their activities. Everybody fetched water for his or her own use from a spring below. It flowed at some depth below the level of the Phoenix Settlement. The Phoenix buildings were on a hill and one had to climb about fifty feet to reach the place. Imam Saheb had a delicate constitution even at that time, but every morning one saw him walking down to the spring with a kavad\(^1\) on his shoulders and climbing up slowly with the buckets filled with water. The place now occupied by the spinning-wheel in the Ashram was held in Phoenix by the printing press. All the inmates, boys and girls, old men and women, educated and uneducated, had to work in some department of the press. There were all kinds of big or small tasks, composing, folding the printed copies of the paper, making wrappers, pasting stamps, moving the wheel with the hand whenever the machine stopped, etc., etc. Everybody was required to give some time and help in these tasks, especially on the day on which the journal was to be published. Imam Saheb, Haji Saheba, Fatima and Amina, all four of them joined in this work. Imam Saheb had learned composing. For a man of his temper and habits and of his age, this was indeed wonderful. In this way, Imam Saheb identified himself completely with the life at Phoenix. He and the other members of his family were non-vegetarian, but I don’t remember any time when they cooked such food at Phoenix.

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”; vide the following item.

This, however, does not mean that Imam Saheb was in any way a less devout Muslim. He never missed namaz, nor did he or his family ever fail to observe the roza. By adopting the manner of life of the other inmates and making a sacrifice for their sake, he really demonstrated the nobility of Islamic culture.

Imam Saheb’s capacity for self-sacrifice was to be put to a still severe test. He went to jail again several times, and proved himself a model prisoner. When, however, in the year 1914 it was decided that most of the inmates of the Ashram should return to India, leaving only a few of them in Phoenix, Imam Saheb was put to a real test. South Africa had practically become his home. Haji Saheba, Fatima and Amina were complete strangers to India and did not know any Indian language—a little English and Dutch was all the language that they knew. But Imam Saheb took no time to come to a decision. He had made up his mind that he and his family would live wherever I did. That was his self-sacrifice for the cause of satyagraha and his contribution towards Hindu-Muslim unity.

All the inmates of the Ashram know about his life after his coming to India. I am convinced that he was rising higher day by day: his heart was becoming purer, his devotion to God was

\(^1\) Two baskets or vessels suspended from the ends of a stick carried horizontally over the shoulders becoming deeper and his faith in the Ashram rules also was increasing. But it is not my intention here to give reminiscences of his life in India. I should like everybody who came into close contact with Imam Saheb to write down his experiences, and all such accounts to be put together with these reminiscences.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

152. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

March 19/21, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I wrote a letter¹ to you yesterday and handed it over today for posting. I hope you will get it in time. It contains detailed instructions regarding visits and Champa. In this letter, therefore, I don’t say anything about these matters. That letter also contains something more.

I saw Haridas Gandhi, Chhaganlal and Narasinhbhai today. I shall now be able to see three [prisoners] every fortnight, and in this way I shall be able to know the conditions of the co-workers who are lodged in this jail and help them whenever I can. Haridas is considerably reduced, but his illness is more mental than physical. He is being well looked after. You will learn more details from my letter to Kamala. If she wants to come and see Haridas, she may do so. If she comes on a day on which other inmates of the Ashram are visiting me and her name is included in the five, she will be able to see both of us.

Hemprabhadevi frequently writes to me directly, and I also reply to her directly. That lady’s goodness, her courage and industry and her intelligence fill me with wonder. Let me hear whenever you get any news about Janakibehn and Jamnalal, though I believe Madanmohan² also will write to me from time to time. I take it that Chimanlal’s operation is over. Who performed it? Who is the vaid treating Triveni and Dudhibehn? Take prompt measures and cure your scabies. The application of the wet sheet pack is bound to cure it. I don’t know what advice I should give you regarding the land in Bidaj. Do what you think right in the circumstances. Raojibhai cannot see you. I didn’t see any letter from Ranchhodbhai. Your list too did not contain his name.

¹ Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 18-3-1932
² Jamnalal Bajaj’s Secretary

March 21, 1932

Read my letter to Tilak[am]. If he falls ill repeatedly for want of meat in his diet, and if he wishes to have it, we should inquire and find a place where he can get it. If you don’t approve of this, let me know. I did this [in the past] for two or three co-workers. It is not, therefore, anything unusual which I am suggesting.

You should, if necessary, even free Hariyomal from active work and force him to attend to the improvement of his health.

What do you intend to do about Daya, who is being called away by her father? You must have read my letter to her.

Write to me in detail about your scabies.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8215. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

153. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

March 21, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

There is of course no sin if one has to go to answer calls of nature during the hours for manual work, but it is certainly a bad habit. A boy or girl who feels interested in such work should attend to calls before joining it. Moreover, one who has a fixed time for such calls would always go at that time. If the hours for manual work come together, then a person would certainly have to go during that period. For this reason, manual work is never prescribed for more than four consecutive hours.

Spinning is primarily an education, for it arouses in us a sense of the duty of service, we learn in it a very useful occupation and there is beautiful art in it.

One never goes to join any work unless the wish is there. But children who are not properly trained never feel the desire to do a good thing. The best rule, therefore, is to join in good work whether the desire is there or not. A child who does this regularly comes to like the work in course of time, that is, he feels a desire to join it. If we always follow only our desires, we would become self-indulgent. We should try our best to save ourselves from that fate. You may say of me that my favourite subjects were languages and geometry.

1 For the article “Imam Saheb-III” which followed, vide the preceding item.

You can come when Narandas permits you to do so, but it would be good if you control your desire to come. Remember that we are poor, wish to remain so and aspire to vie with our starving countrymen.

I will now narrate an incident.

I see here with my own eyes something I had formerly heard about. We have here a cat which, when it wants to answer nature’s call, goes to a place where it would not be observed by anybody. It finds for the purpose a dusty spot and, after answering the call, scratches the ground and covers up the faeces with earth. After doing that, the cat sniffs at the spot and, if there is the slightest smell, it throws more earth on the spot. On seeing this, I asked myself: ‘Do all of us cover up the excreta as carefully as this cat does?’ We daily bow to Mother Earth and ask her forgiveness for walking on her with our feet; but do we cover up the ground after spitting, blowing our nose or passing urine, etc.? Those who have not been observing this rule should start doing so immediately.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8982. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

154. A LETTER

March 21, 1932

CHI.

The real pleasure of being a prisoner lies in having no visitor. . . .

As one should not eat hastily, so also one should not write in a hurry. The ideal is to avoid haste in all matters. If a person has to do anything in haste, that means that he has been too slow before. Non-attachment and haste cannot go with each other.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8969. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Omission as in the source
155. LETTER TO JUGATRAM DAVE

March 21, 1932

Bhai,

We did expect a letter from you. All those who are born do not reach maturity. Moreover, when an epidemic breaks out the death-rate goes up. Hence I am not surprised by what you write. It is a wonder and a matter of joy that the death-rate has not been higher. And, in any case, why should we grieve over death? The death of one who is fit to die may deserve to be welcomed. Moreover, is it not true that people die only to be born again? Hence, there is no reason for sorrow at all. One who has not learnt the art of going his way alone may be upset by external events. But only they who are strong enough to stand alone will realize the God of Truth.

156. A LETTER

March 21, 1932

Chi,

As grain is the body’s food, so worship is the soul’s. He who is convinced about the existence of the soul cannot live without worship. Prayer means the soul turning towards God.

Blessings from
Bapu

From Gujarati: C.W. 8973. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 The addressee had complained about those who had dropped out of the struggle.
157. LETTER TO BOYS AND GIRLS

March 21, 1932

CHI.

Do you remember my definition of God? Instead of saying that God is Truth, I say that Truth is God. I did not always think thus. I realized this only four years ago. But without knowing it I always acted as if it was so. I have always known God as Truth. There was a time when I doubted the existence of God, but even at that time I did not doubt the existence of Truth. This Truth is not a material quality but is pure consciousness. That alone holds the universe together. It is God because it rules the whole universe. If you follow this idea, it contains the answer to all your other questions. If you have any difficulty, however, put your question to me. For me this is almost a matter of direct experience. I say “almost” because I have not seen face to face God Who is Truth. I have had only a glimpse of Him. But my faith is unshakable.

Blessings from

BAPU

158. LETTER TO PURATAN BUCH

March 21, 1932

CHI. PURATAN.

Wasn’t the operation completely successful? What is the complaint now? I do not mind your question. My spiritual seeking, whether or not original, has always been in the form of social service. Such service is an essential part of the quest for truth.

Where do you live?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9164. Also C.W. 8971. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
159. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

March 21, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your letter. Pyarelal and Gulzarilal1 keep good health. If you are permitted, go and see them2 and others as well. Can it be said that you keep good health?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1831

160. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

March 21, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

I have explained about plays in my previous letter3. Did you receive any letter from Narahari from Belgaum? If you did, what does he write? Are all [the prisoners] kept together?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5769. Also C.W. 2992. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

161. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

March 21, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

Whenever I decide to write only with the left hand, my writing work is automatically restricted. This is because the habit of writing with the right hand has still not lost its force. The paper and other articles which I have brought from England are to be used up. If that

1 Gulzarilal Nanda
2 In Dhulia Jail
3 There is no mention of ‘plays’ in the previous letter dated March 13; vide, however, “Letter to Indu Parekh”, p. 232 and “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 24/29-3-1932.
is likely to confuse our minds [in regard to the vow of swadeshi], they may be put away in a safe place. We will use them later. I have forgotten the circumstances relating to the article with the locket. Nothing has come with me which had no historical value. Just now, therefore, everything should be kept in a safe place. Those articles which you think can be utilized may be used.

_Abhiman_ in the sense of firm determination is necessary in regard to _yajna_, but _abhiman_ in the sense of pride—that pride which makes you think how strong you are and feel confident that you will never miss your _yajna_—such _Abhiman_ should be shunned.

I would have to answer your question about Meghji¹ only if I claimed that I could not be bound by human attachments. We may try to free ourselves from their bondage, but should not give up tenderness of heart or our desire to serve human beings. The thought of what will happen after someone’s death springs from foolishness, not from human attachment. Everyone is to die sooner or later. Knowing this, why should we worry over death? Moreover, having surrendered ourselves as puppets in the hands of the Master, how can we bargain with Him? He may make us dance as He wills. After all, what matters is that we should be able to dance. If a person can always dance, what else can he ask for?

It is very good indeed that you are making progress in your music.² If it is necessary to get your tonsils removed, do so.

The matter about visitors from outside the Ashram has not been settled. I have included Sushila’s name [in the list of visitors]. In asking me to discuss your defects, do you want me to praise you? I do not at all wish to tell you your defects. Haven’t I pointed them out more than once? Let me know how many of them you have overcome; we shall talk about others afterwards.

Devotees of God and such other people can cultivate equal-mindedness only in a certain measure. He in whom it becomes perfect must be God. But, then, there is only one God. Hence, even the most perfect human being will have equal-mindedness in an imperfect measure. That is why we see differences in people’s beliefs and conflicts among them. We need not be unhappy about this. The world is the effect of discord. Our duty lies in cultivating a greater degree of equal-mindedness every day. If we try to do this, the presence of discord in the world will cease to hurt us and become bearable, may even seem beautiful.

---

¹ One of the three children who died of smallpox. Their parents had taken Gandhiji’s advice and refused to have the children vaccinated. On all the three occasions Gandhiji was perturbed and could not sleep.

² The addressee was taking lessons from N. M. Khare.

We need not believe that everything in India is better than elsewhere. Moreover, rise and fall is the law of the world. On the whole, there is much good in India. That is why it became a conquered country, and not a conquering country. At the basis of this attitude is the belief that an oppressor is in a worse state than his slave.

What books on astronomy and which of the works of Upton Sinclair do we have?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10277. Also C.W. 6725. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

162. LETTER TO MADALASA BAJAJ

March 21, 1932

CHI. MADALASA,

From my letter to Vatsala you will find replies to some of your questions too. Since milk didn’t seem to agree with me here, I said so in my letter. It is possible that one does not require milk when leading a quiet life.

Cereals and other grains should not be eaten uncooked. Leafy vegetables, carrots, etc., can be. If they are cooked, they lose part of their nutrient value.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Panchaven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 312

150 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
163. LETTER TO BUDHABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
March 21, 1932

CHI. BUDHABHAI,

As long as you do not stop thinking about Parvati, you will continue to suffer from involuntary discharges. Stop thinking of yourself as Babu’s father and regard yourself as his trustee only. Small children always live with their mother. Be content with what Narandas can do about the matter. Do not think too much, either, about what you eat, and do not be nervous if an involuntary discharge occurs. If you thus cultivate detachment, everything will be all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original : S.N. 33123

164. LETTER TO A GIRL

March 21, 1932

Realizing the sense of brotherhood is the most important thing in the observance of brahmacharya. We all are children of the same Father, how can we at all marry? Food must be eaten only as medicine, not for pleasure of the palate. Mind and body should be kept occupied in service. Meditate over Satyanarayana. Cut off your hair regardless of people’s opinion if you feel it is your duty. Remain ever absorbed in service as a form of devotion to God.

Keep up a constant struggle against the passions, holding them to be our real enemy. This very struggle has been delineated in the Mahabharata.

[From Hindi]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 27

1 The addressee was aspiring to observe brahmacharya.
2 God in the form of Truth
165. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON
March 22, 1932

MY DEAR AGATHA,

You will recognize this hand¹. Mahadev came in just when my right hand had begun to refuse to work for me, not that there is any continuing pain but writing with it is difficult. I do a fair amount of writing with the left hand and am using Mahadev’s hand whenever I can.

You [talk]² of Dr. Ramchandra Rao. I can’t identify him He is not likely to be permitted to see me. We are now three and we are all keeping quite well, and having a fair stock of books, newspapers and spinning-wheels, we have enough to occupy our time.

With love,³

Yours sincerely,

BAPU⁴

From a photostat: G.N. 1452

166. LETTER TO DR. C. MUTHU
March 22, 1932

I was delighted to hear from you and to have a copy of the new edition of that excellent book⁵ of yours. I am going to read it again. Please don’t worry about my food. I have not yet had to resume milk. I fancy that when one is leading a quiet and contemplative life, one does not need the stimulation of milk and its vitamins. I am keeping my weight and the required energy on a diet of bread, almond paste, green vegetable and tomatoes, and lemon. I take also about 2 oz. of honey daily mixed with hot water and a pinch of bicarbonate of soda. The bowels act regularly. I am worrying you with these details as you have always interested yourself in my health. I have not received a copy of your address on “How to prolong the span of life in India” and “Health and disease in relation to childhood.”

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 5-4-1932

¹ Mahadev Desai’s
² A word here is illegible in the source.
³ These words are in Gandhiji’s hand.
⁴ ibid
⁵ The Antiquity of Hindu Medicine
⁶ This sentence is from The Hindu, 29-4-1932.
167. LETTER TO PADMA

March 22, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

I got your letter. I read the poem. I see that you have a gift for poetry. But don’t be impatient. Your gifts will develop only if your health improves. Do you get any medical help there? Did you go to Bhowali? The very air of that place is as good as medicine. How is it that you still don’t improve? I received only one letter from Sarojinidevi and replied to her. I have decided to experiment on the Magan spinning-wheel and asked them to send me one.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N 6130. Also C.W. 3482. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

168. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

March 22, 1932

BHAI VITHALDAS,

Presuming that you have returned to Bombay now, I am writing this to your address there. I got the dates you sent for the second time. They contain numerous caterpillars and weevils, which perhaps may have bred after the parcel reached here. In any case, however, you should not send more dates until I ask for them. The dates supplied here are not bad but, for some time, I wish to see if I cannot do without dates altogether. It is not possible here to preserve in good condition a large stock of any eatables. Moreover, friends outside should not spend either time or money on those in jail unless necessary. When I need anything I will certainly ask for it. I hope your health is daily improving. Sardar and Mahadev are quite well.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI VITHALDAS JERAJANI
KHADI BHANDAR
KALBADEVI ROAD
BOMBAY

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9780
169. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

March 22, 1932

A devotee of the Gita never concerns himself with the question whether he can see God while in this body, for it is his duty to do work but he has no right to claim the fruit. If so, why should we think about that to which we have no right? All the same, it is my view that full realization of God is impossible while in this body. We may almost reach the goal, but, because of the body, it seems impossible that we can go through the doorway. We must, of course, feel continually the misery of separation from God, otherwise we would give up or relax our effort. Such misery, however, should lead not to despair but to hope, not to relaxation of effort but to even greater effort. We have God’s assurance that however small the effort, it is never wasted. In view of this, even the misery of separation should be a cause of joy to us, for we must have faith that one day we shall realize Him.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 30-1

170. LETTER TO A PENSIONER

March 22, 1932

You should write to Dr. Muthu. My own knowledge, which, though not scientific, but based on experience suggests that you should fast for three days and break the fast with milk and orange juice. If you try this, it will help you.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 30

1 The addressee had asked for a nature cure treatment for his asthma.
171. LETTER TO M. R. JAYAKAR

March 23, 1932

DEAR MR. JAYAKAR,

Many thanks for Mr. Stokes’s book. Please tell Mr. Stokes that I have set aside other reading in order to go through his book. I hope, when I have finished it, to write to him directly.

I hope that fever has not been troubling you again and that you have been otherwise too keeping well and fit.

As the right hand again causes trouble, I am using the left hand for writing. I have now Mahadev’s assistance.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Jayakar’s Private Papers, Correspondence File No. 407-VI. Courtesy: National Archives of India

172. LETTER TO TILAKAM

March 24, 1932

MY DEAR,

In working out plans for self-restraint, attention must not for a single moment be withdrawn from the fact that we are all sparks of the divine and, therefore, partake of its nature, and since there can be no such thing as self-indulgence with the divine it must of necessity be foreign to human nature. If we get a hard grasp of that elementary fact, we should have no difficulty in attaining self-control, and that is exactly what is implied in the verses we sing every evening. You will recall that one of the verses says that the craving for self-indulgence abates only when one sees God face to face.

Love.

\[ Satyakama or “True Desires” \]
173. LETTER TO ABBAS

March 24, 1932

CHI. ABBAS,

Your question is very good. “Which does not cause pain to anybody”\(^1\) means that the speaker should sincerely have no intention of causing pain. We can never know with certainty what the effect on the other person will be. We may, therefore, only think how we would feel if somebody said the same thing to us. The same rule applies about “agreeable” and “beneficial”

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6307. Also C.W. 8988. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

174. LETTER TO JUGATRAM DAVE

March 24, 1932

BHAI,

You have filled up pages all right. Our gharry is not driven by human beings. It is driven by God. It will certainly continue to run as long as we, the passengers, have faith in Him. The moment we lose faith, be sure that the train will stop.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From Gujarati: C.W. 8983. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi. Also _Mahadevbhaini Diary_, Vol. 1, p. 34

175. LETTER TO INDU N. PAREKH

March 24, 1932

CHI.,

Yours is an interesting question.

The _Mahabharata_ is a poem and not history. The poet’s aim in it is to show that, if man adopts the path of violence, he will necessarily have to resort to falsehood. Even a person like Krishna cannot escape that necessity. But a wrong is a wrong no matter who does it. The actions of keeping Shikhandi in front and hiding the sun were certainly blameworthy. If I remember correctly, Vyasji also has represented them in that light.

\(^1\) _Anudvegakaram; Bhagavad Gita_, XVII. 15

If the plays which represent such incidents show that they are not worthy of imitation, there may be no harm in staging them. However, the question you have asked is certainly worth pondering over....¹

Blessings from
BAPU

176. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

March 24, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

You have filled your letter entirely with explanations, but you can do that only once. You can come whenever you wish to.

All three of us are in good health and keep cheerful.

Janakibehn is all right now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1832

177. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

March 24, 1932

CUNNING RAIHANA,

You are trying to delude me by praising my Urdu. By God’s grace, however, I will not let myself be deluded in this way. My handwriting is very bad, and so is my spelling. Before my Urdu deserves such praise, Raihana will have grown into an old woman or I would have to give more time to it [than I do]. I now copy the bhajan. Imagine that Raihana is singing it.²

¹ Omission as in the source
² In the source, this paragraph and the song which follows are in Urdu.
Arise, awake, O Traveller, it’s morning now.
Where is the night that you are still in bed?
He gains who stands awake,
And he who slumbers loses.
Open your eyes a little,
You careless one, turn your mind to God.
This is not the way to love,
That while He is awake, you slumber.
Know that you will have to eat the fruits of your doings,
O sinner, how can sin ever bring happiness?
You carry a burden of sin on your head,
Why, then, hold your head in grief and weep?
What you would tomorrow, to today,
And what you would today, do right now.
After the sparrows have ravaged your crops,
What will it avail you to beat your breast and weep?

I see that the handwriting continues to be bad, but I can’t write better with the left hand. I will try and improve it slowly. Meanwhile, endure it as it is. Please do not feel ashamed of such a dull pupil. If you are patient, I may in course of time deserve your praise, which I do not deserve now. If that does not happen, I will blame you. Isn’t there a book which explains how to spell in Urdu? Please inquire. If Hamid Ali and Sharifabehn are still there, convey to them my many salaams and tell them that I have not forgotten the meeting with them at Godhra and the help given by both at the Social Reform Conference.

Tell Father that I got his postcard. However, it would not be proper for a prisoner like me to write often to a big person like him. I can write as many letters as I choose to girls like you. Father may write to me as often as he wishes. There is certainly some justification for such a rule. There might be no harm in a prisoner receiving letters, but there may be in his writing. Hence a prisoner may write innocent letters to children without objection. It should cause no surprise that Father’s memory is getting weak. It should be enough for us if God preserves long his strength to dance [with joy]. To Father and Mother, many salaams and as many vandematarams from us all. Kisses to Kamalmiyan¹. Blessings to Hamida, Rohini, and others. It is a very good thing that Ba has now returned to them. Send me from your treasury some good bhajans of your choice. If you write in Urdu script, it will serve as a lesson in Urdu for me. Ask Pashabhai to write. Blessings to him from Sardar and me. Let Sardar remain for ever only Vallabhkaka for you.

¹ Sohaila’s son

Long live Raihana! Khuda Hafiz.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9639

178. LETTER TO SOMABHAI PATEL

March 24, 1932

CHI. SOMABHAI,

Never mind if Narandas has made a prisoner of you. Improve your health. Narrate your experiences to me. How did you spend the time? Is there any news about Bhansali? How much weight did you lose?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9220

179. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

March 24, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

This time your handwriting seems to have deteriorated. You should see that it is always good. Ordinarily it is not necessary to make any difference between men’s and women’s work. There is a difference in some respects, but it will come about naturally.

The correct name is “Mahadevbhai” and not “Madhavbhai”.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9423. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel
180. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
March 24, 1932

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

After your letter nothing remains to be said. In fact I should not even think about the happenings outside. But so long as I do not stop reading the newspapers, it is impossible not to think about them or to react to them. So I asked you to put my mind at ease. You should have immediately sent to him the gist of the conversation. That is my feeling in the light of my earlier experience. But now there is no need to do it. This suggestion may be useful in future. Gulzarilal is maintaining good health. It seems he has found, without seeking, the kind of company he needs. Let me know if you have any more news about Mridula. You two must be in good health.

My right hand needs rest.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32743

181. LETTER TO HORACE G. ALEXANDER

March 25, 1932

MY DEAR HORACE,

You will have no difficulty in recognizing this handwriting. Mahadev was just sent to me when I had again to fall back on the left hand. I was glad to have your note. Agatha has been keeping me informed to the extent that she can of your activities and the papers that I am allowed to receive do also now and then mention something of the activities of all the many friends who had interested themselves in this struggle and Hoyland has been telling me of the silent prayers. I know that they are all precious and not one prayer of the heart is without an adequate response. What though one does not see tangible results of all heartfelt prayers!

You are quite right in being happy for me to have this enforced rest. If it had not come to me there would have been in all probability, a breakdown. The time here does not hang heavy. There is the spinning-wheel, and there are the silent companions—the books—and I need some time for doing a little writing. And then I have Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel with me who last time was not kept with me but just a wall separated him from me. And now I have Mahadev. Yes, I wanted that special message from Olive¹. I was sorry that I could not come in closer touch with her during those precious days at Selly Oak, but I have imagination enough to understand what her beautiful life must be like. Our love to you and Olive and all the friends.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1412

182. LETTER TO ANANDI ASAR

March 25, 1932

CHI.

It was bad of you to have given a curt reply to the visitor. We should always be courteous to any visitor, no matter how he is dressed, and we must reply to a visitor’s question.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8984. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

183. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

March 25, 1932

CHI. MANU,

Your description is good, but how about your handwriting which is very bad? How old are you now? Your handwriting must improve.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7424. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

¹ Addressee’s wife
² Addressee’s name is inferred from “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”,
24/29-3-1932.
184. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI M. PATEL

March 25, 1932

CHI. RAOJIBHAI,

I got your letter. This time we are really being tested. We should not mind it. Write to me from time to time.

I suppose you know that Mahadev has been brought here. We three are practically enjoying ourselves.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8994

185. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

March 26, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

No letter from you as you had promised. But I am not surprised. Such correspondence was held up. But the bar is now lifted at least so far as I am concerned and therefore presumably so far as my correspondents are concerned. I therefore expect from you an answer almost per return. Tell me how you and your companions are doing, what you are eating and how you are passing the days.

Mahadev has now joined us and we have become a merry company. He is the most industrious spinner among us. My weak arms won’t let me try to outdo him. My milkless diet continues without practically any change in the menu. I think I did tell you about the addition of bread. As yet it seems to have done no harm. My weight fluctuates between 105_ and 106_. This is not bad. The others are also doing quite well.

Love from us all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6216. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9682
186. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

March 26, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

Just as I was sending the enclosed\(^1\), I got your two precious letters. I therefore suspended the despatch for writing this. You now know why I could not write, but then we are prisoners. We may not expect the regularity that independent people can create for themselves. But there is nothing to grumble at in these delays which must be regarded as inevitable. Henceforth, let us hope, things will move on without interruption. But whenever the unexpected hitch of any kind occurs, do not be anxious, but say, ‘We are prisoners’.

I am glad you have put on weight. For your height and breadth, you can easily carry 132 lb. But the heat is bad. It is good to have dropped salt. You might even drop milk and butter for two or three days and you will feel cool.

I am glad you are growing fond of reading. Get someone to procure for you full translation of Ramayana by Griffiths and the translation of eleven principal Upanishads. This will be enough for the present term.

For Hindi, you should procure Bala Ramayana. As you now know the story, you will have no difficulty in following it in Hindi.

I had copy of Lord Irwin’s letter\(^2\) before too.

I too have no news of Rolland. But I do not worry. Such interruptions are a legitimate part of the business.

I must stop for the day as I am anxious for this letter to leave here today.

Love from us all.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6217. Courtesy: Mirabehn, Also G.N. 9683

---

\(^1\) Vide the preceding item.

\(^2\) “I think Bapuwas referring to a letter Lord Irwin (now Lord Halifax) had written to me.”—Mirabehn
187. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

March 26, 1932

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

What is your wish regarding the bamboo charkha? I need not see the model. I should like to see models which would help us to increase the output. If this model is strong and good otherwise, people will use it because of its low cost. Do you think it necessary that it should be used in the Ashram? I cannot judge about that from here.

Let me know what the condition of your nose is.

If Sharda does not have massage or take sun-bath, is it because she dislikes them or is it through lethargy?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 12

188 LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

March 26, 1932

CHI. DEVDAS,

I received today permission to write to fellow-prisoners, and hence this letter. I think of you every day. Mahadev has been brought here. All three of us are well. More after I hear from you in reply to this. Give me news about your health, your reading and your companions. I write to Lakshmi regularly and receive her letters written in beautiful Hindi.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2022

189. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

March 26, 1932

CHI. JAMNALAL,

I received today permission to write to you and other co-workers in prison.

Write to me immediately and give me detailed information about your health and your diet. All of us feel a little worried about you. Who else are with you in prison? How is their health? How is Dr. Sumant? Sardar tells me that like me Diwan Master also has lost his teeth. How is his general health? I don’t know who else are with you. Gangabehn has informed me that Pannalal is one of them.

My vandemataram to all co-workers. You must have heard that Mahadev has joined us.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2896

190. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

March 26, 1932

CHI. MANI,

Today I received permission to write to fellow-prisoners. Hence this letter. As I have got this permission, I take it that the recipients of my letters will be allowed to reply to me. Reply to this letter at once. I do not write today to other women prisoners, namely, Lilavati, Nandubehn and Mridula. So let me have news of them too. Who else are with you?

Mahadev has been brought here. We three are all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. MANIBEHN PATEL
PRISONER
PRISON, BELGAUM

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—4: Manibehn Patelin, p. 80

---

1 Sumant Mehta
2 Gangabehn Jhaveri
3 Pannalal Jhaveri, Gangabehn’s step-son
4 Wife of Harilal Desai
5 Nandubehn Kanuga
6 Mridula Sarabhai
191. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

March 26, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

Your elder brother’s weight has increased and the leg has improved so much that he can walk now. There is not the slightest cause for worry. If brother and sister are of the same age, the sister can ask the brother and learn things from him. It is a sister’s duty to do what will be for the brother’s good, regardless of their age.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9468

192. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

March 27, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

Call to mind the hymn “One step enough for me”. What do we gain by thinking what we should do in changed circumstances? When the time comes it will suggest itself. Normally we can say that most things will still have to be learnt even in swaraj. I hope you know that [after independence] those of you who are above sixteen will be free then to do as they wish. People like me will only tender advice.

Now tell me, why don’t you have massage or sun-bath?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9908. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala
193. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
March 27, 1932

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I received your telegram this evening. How did such an accident happen? Were you present at the time of the operation? You have been placed under a great load. But you believe in God. There is assurance in the Gita that the load of a believer is borne by God. Have faith in God and keep your mind free.

I shall expect your detailed letter.

Vallabhbai and Mahadev also are terribly shocked.

How many children does he leave behind?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32724

194. SOME REFLECTIONS ON EDUCATION

March 28, 1932

John Ruskin was a great writer, teacher and religious thinker. He died about 1880. I suppose most inmates of the Ashram know that one book of his had a great effect on me and that it was this book which inspired me to introduce an important change in my life practically on the instant. He started in 1871 writing monthly letters addressed to factory workers. I had read praise of these letters in some article of Tolstoy, but I had not been able to secure them till now. I had brought with me [from England] a book about Ruskin’s work and his efforts in the field of constructive activities. I read it here. This book also mentioned the letters referred to above. So I wrote to a

1 Giving news of the death of Dhirajlal Banker, addressee’s younger brother
2 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 24/29-3-1932
3 He died in 1900.
4 Unto This Last
woman disciple of Ruskin in England, who was none else but the author of that book. Being a poor woman, she could not send me the volumes of these letters. Through foolishness or false courtesy, I had not asked her to write to the Ashram for the money. This good woman sent my letter to a friend of hers who was comparatively in better circumstances. This friend was the editor of The spectator. I had even met him while in England. He sent me the four volumes in which these letters had been published. I have been reading the first part. The thoughts expressed in these letters are beautiful and resemble some of our own ideas, so much so that an outsider would think that the ideas which I have set forth in my writings and which we try to put into practice in the Ashram, I had stolen from these letters of Ruskin. I hope readers will understand what is meant by ‘stolen’. If an idea or ideal of life is borrowed from somebody but is presented as one’s own conception, it is said to be stolen.

Ruskin has discussed many matters. Here I will mention only a few of his ideas. He says that it is a sheer error to suppose, as is generally done, that some education however little or however faulty is better than no literary education at all. It is his view that we should strive for real education alone. And then he says that every human being requires three things and three virtues. Anyone who fails to cultivate them does not know the secret of life. These six things should therefore form the basis of education. Every child, whether boy or girl, should learn the properties of pure air, clean water and clean earth, and should also learn how to keep air, water and earth pure or clean and know their benefits. Likewise, he has mentioned gratitude, hope and charity as the three virtues. Anybody who does not love truth and cannot recognize goodness or beauty lives in his own selfconceit and remains ignorant of spiritual joy. Similarly, he who has no hope, who has, in other words, no faith in divine justice, will never be cheerful in heart. And he who is without love, that is, lacks the spirit of ahimsa, who cannot look upon all living things as his kith and kin, will never know the secret of living.

Ruskin has explained these ideas at great length in his wonderful language. I hope I shall be able to write about them some time in a language which all the inmates of the Ashram can understand. Today I rest content with the brief precis given above. But I will say one thing, that what Ruskin has explained in his finished and cultivated prose with English readers in view, is practically the same ideas which we discuss in our rustic language and which we have been trying to put into practice. I am comparing here not two languages, but two writers. I cannot hope to equal Ruskin’s mastery of language. But a time will certainly come when the love of our language will have become universal and we shall have writers like Ruskin who will have dedicated themselves heart and soul to it and will write as powerful Gujarati as the English of Ruskin.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/II

195. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

March 28, 1932

MY DEAR AMTUL,

I was wondering why there was no letter from you. Narandas kept me informed. Now I am glad I have your letter. It was very good of Dr. Sharma to treat you without making any charge. You may send such books of his as he may recommend. The question of deciding the place for you is a little difficult. You must go to hill or to a sea-side place. I think you can go to Porbandar or Sasavne. I cannot think of another place just now. You must not lose your gain by any false step. If any of your people are living in Mussoorie you need not hesitate to go there. I agree with Narandas that you should not live at the Ashram during these hot days.

Of course you can come and see me whenever you wish. Sardar Vallabhbhai and Mahadev are with me.

As my right hand causes a little trouble if I write with it, I have been using the left hand.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 238

196. LETTER TO H. W. EMERSON

March 28, 1932

DEAR MR. EMERSON,

I was distressed to read a note by the Director of Information, Bombay, that the Bombay Government intended to sell out beyond recall the lands of ‘recalcitrant’ farmers of Ras and such other villages. I do not know that you can recall the remark made by Lord Irwin last year, in the course of the conversations, that under a recurrence of the circumstances which had actuated the Government to sell out some holdings in Ras during the previous satyagraha campaign, the experiment must not be repeated. I do not suggest that this remark was anything more than the then personal wish of Lord Irwin. But I cannot help feeling hurt that all such generous wishes of an honourable and high functionary should be in danger of being set aside or overlooked. And even apart from Lord Irwin’s obiter statement, I would like the legacies of bittermesses to be left either by Government officials or Congressmen to be reduced to a minimum, if they cannot be avoided altogether. Surely all irrevocable acts which parties might possibly deplore in future or for which posterity may curse us should be avoided.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Home Department, Political, File No. 14/17,1932, p. 7. Courtesy: National Archives of India

197. LETTER TO TILAKAM

March 28, 1932

Vanity is emptiness: Self-respect is substance. No one’s self-respect is ever hurt except by self, vanity is always hurt from outside.

In the phrase ‘Seeing God face to face’, ‘face to face’ is not to be taken literally. It is a matter of decided feeling. God is formless. He can, therefore, only be seen by spiritual sight—vision.

198. A LETTER

March 28, 1932

BHAI.

In order to strengthen your mind, you should firmly adhere to the resolutions for the day which you make every morning. After some time, you can make resolutions for a week and so gradually for your whole life. You should not let a single worthless thought arise in your mind. This is the reason for the great importance of Ramanama. It is a tamboora, and other good thoughts are like the other instruments or like the music. The tune on the tamboora must go on ceaselessly. For good health, freedom from worry is essential. In your case, I am sure that your health will improve if your mental illness is cured. But we should certainly employ remedies for the body too.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8987. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

199. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

March 28, 1932

CHI. MANGALA (DARLING),

Arithmetic is an intellectual subject and similarly the meanings of the Gita verses, history, geography, etc., also are such subjects. Any subject to understand which we have to labour with our mind is an intellectual subject. Memorizing the Gita is not an intellectual subject. Spinning can be an intellectual subject. Anybody who, while spinning, improves the method of spinning or finds out ways of improving the construction of the spinning-wheel will have exercised his intellect.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4080. Also C.W. 44. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

200. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

March 28, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

You may ask any questions you like. You will not probably get such an opportunity again. You don’t know that I can, if I choose, reply a question in just one line or may fill pages. If I cannot write a long letter, I shall be content with a short reply. The reply, however, will not be incomplete.¹

To believe that your tongue had an effect on my right hand is like believing that, because the branch of a tree fell as soon as a crow came and sat on it, it fell because of the crow’s weight.

¹ The addressee had then been receiving from Gandhiji letters written with his left hand.

I do get dreams, but the mind hardly ever takes note of them. I attach no importance to dreams.

I think there are complete sets of Carlyle’s and Ruskin’s works in our library. If we have them send me a list of the volumes.

How many copies of the consolidated list of books do we have? If we have more than one copy send one to me.

I have never written to you about the grown up women. I feel inclined to do so this time. They do not seem to come together for any common purpose. That is, their Association has broken up. I have written to Lakshmibehn and Durga on this matter, but I seem to have produced no effect on them. The women should get the strength to assume responsibility for joint work. If you have sufficient courage and confidence in yourself, take up this task. If you do so, however, you must resolve not to be defeated. We have, in fact, achieved nothing if we are able to do something when all the circumstances are favourable. A carpenter gives shape to any piece of wood and a sculptor makes an image from any stone; we are, likewise, worth our salt only if we know how to live with all types of people and get work from them. I think this is the main thing we have to learn in this life. For that, our heart should be as large as the sea. If we observe the defects of a person the very moment we see him or her and are deterred by them, our work would suffer. Everyone has defects. We have them and so have others. If we are determined to mix with them despite the defects, only then can we succeed in our work. I know that this is a difficult task. I have been engaged in this one task all these years and yet I cannot say that I have succeeded in it. I do seem, though, to have succeeded in some measure. That is why I muster courage or have the presumption to guide others.

You may now do what you think proper. You can, if you wish, put this letter before the women.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10278. Also C.W. 6726. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak
201. LETTER TO VIMALABEHN A. PATEL

March 28, 1932

CHI. VIMALA,

Narasinhbhai¹ had prepared me for your letter and the books. Perhaps you know that I was able to see him. He was in good health and quite cheerful. He is now kept with other prisoners. I will find time to read the books which you have sent. I hope your work is going on very well.

Vandemataram to Mother from both of us, and blessings to you.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3275

202. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

March 28, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

A girl of your age should have these things: a fine body, a strong mind and occupations for both, which include all the processes relating to spinning, cooking, various games, swimming, music, knowledge of Gujarati, Hindi and Sanskrit, elements of arithmetic, history, geography, some knowledge of the Gita and the ability to recognize stars and trees and plants. If you lack any of these things, that will be a deficiency. I forgot to mention the art of writing a good hand.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

How is it that Mohan² has fever? Has he been examined by a doctor?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5770. Also C.W. 2993. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

¹ Addressee’s father
² Addressee’s brother
203. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

March 28, 1932

CHI. TARAMATI,

There is no news at all from Mathuradas. Give me news of all of you in detail. Do you know that Mahadev is with me? How do you spend your time?

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI TARABEHN MATHURADAS
C/O MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
57 MINT ROAD
BOMBAY

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

204. A LETTER

March 28, 1932

As the leaves of a tree always live together, so do men with similar ideas and ways. Their attraction for one another is natural. The number of one’s co-workers may be a million, but there can be only one friend, and that is God. It is my view, and my experience, that other friendships are an obstacle in the way of friendship with God.

I do not know, and do not believe, that Lord Krishna could go from one place to another, without any physical means, through yogic power or some other power. A real yogi shuns the exercise of any supernatural power, for his yoga is exclusively for self-realization. Would he exchange it for a mess of pottage?

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevdbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 53
205. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

March 24/29, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your packet yesterday. Gangabehn came and saw me. It is necessary that we should think about Indu’s health. When he returned from Bangalore, he weighed 100 lb., and he is 90 now. Discover the cause. Know from him where and what he eats, what he used to eat in Bangalore and what was his way of life there, and how, according to him, he can keep better health in the Ashram. If anybody does not keep good health in the Ashram, we should try and discover the cause and, if he or she does not improve with such measures and changes as we can try and as would be in keeping with the principles of the Ashram, we should send the person to some other place, to Visapur or Wardha, for instance. Think over this problem and, if you consider it necessary, entrust the responsibility in this matter to one particular person. You will not be able to look after every inmate of the Ashram. You should be burdened only with the responsibility of giving the final decision.

I take it that you got the letter¹ which I wrote last week and in which I explained about visitors, and I do not dwell further on the subject in this letter. I also wrote about Champa in that letter. There were two or three other points too.

Indu has raised a very good question in his letter. Read my reply² to him. However, you, Panditji, Premabehn, Chimanlal, Valji and others in the Ashram who think on such matters should ponder over the problem. Indu had asked whether Krishna did not do wrong in advising Arjuna to keep Shikhandi in front of him and kill Bhishma and in employing his Sudarshan wheel to hide the sun behind clouds, so that Jayadrath might be killed, and had raised the question whether plays which treated of such incidents should be performed in the Ashram. I was very much pleased by his question. If the general tendency of the drama is to show such actions as morally

¹Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 18-3-1922
²Vide “Letter to Indu N. Parekh”, 24-3-1932 wrong, I would have no objection to its being performed. All the same, I do have some doubt about the propriety of such dramas being performed in the Ashram. I don’t think we do any good by repeatedly presenting to children unworthy actions of great men, even though we represent the actions as unworthy, unless it is absolutely necessary to tell them about such actions. They will probably forget the unworthiness of the action and leave with the impression that we, too, could do what great men did. It does not, therefore, seem proper to me to select such incidents and present them in dramatic performances before children. I think that the dramas which we perform in the Ashram should be of a different type. For instance, Rabindranath’s Muktadhara. Maithilisharan Gupta’s Anagh, which I recently read here, is also a good play and could be performed before the children there. Its Hindi is simple and sweet and the moral is excellent.

I go and inquire after Haridas from time to time.

Do you get news about Krishnadas¹ from any source? If you do not, write to Mahavir Prasad and ask him if he has any.

Amtulbehn may certainly come and see me. Your scabies and Kanu’s ought to be cured now.

About the Vidyapith library, so far as we can judge from this distance, all of us feel that we should not introduce the kind of dyarchy which has been suggested. It would mean control by two authorities. Either they should hand over full control to us or should themselves exercise it properly as long as they retain it with them. However, do only what seems best to you. I shall not be able to see the women prisoners lodged in this jail, but I shall be permitted to write to them and receive letters from them.

Anandi had referred to Prema in her letter. Read my reply² to her. The matter requires further thought, however. In teaching the children in the Ashram to be fearless and to stand erect, we have, unknowingly, taught them rudeness. Even grown-ups are not free from such rudeness and, sometimes, their rudeness assumes a painful

¹ Krishnadas Simharai, one time secretary to Gandhiji
² Vide “Letter to Anandi Asar”, 25-3-1932
form. It seems that a guest had arrived in the Ashram and the boys did not answer his inquiries properly. One directed him this way and another that way, and none would even reply to his questions. And of course none took the trouble to accompany him to the office. I understand from Anandi’s letter that she was somewhere near about but she felt unhappy afterwards and wrote to me about the incident, it seems, to confess her error and atone for it. She has asked me about the duty of the inmates of the Ashram in such circumstances. There is no doubt about what it is, but since the question has been raised you should draw everybody’s attention to it. Explain what I have written to Anandi, filling in the necessary details. In my letter I could write only a sentence or two explaining the general principle.

Vanamala tells me in her letter that Mohan’s body temperature always remains 99°. Inquire about this. If necessary, consult a doctor. Why should a child of his age continually show 99° temperature? Or, maybe, just because he is a child, on taking his temperature with a thermometer or examining his pulse, we may feel that he is having fever but in fact there may be no fever. The heart-beat of a very active child who is playing about the whole day is bound to be faster, and, therefore, he is bound to have more heat in him and the thermometer or the examination of his pulse may show a little fever. In such a case, the real test is provided by the child’s stool, the appearance of his tongue, his digestion and his weight. A child’s weight must show increase every week. His tongue should be clean and moist, he should be passing stool without effort and it must be well formed and without foul smell. If all these signs are there, we need not pay any attention to what the pulse or the thermometer may tell us. Every mother in the Ashram, and Jethalal too, should learn these things.

There was a letter from Amtul to which, as desired by her, I have replied at her Delhi address. Tell her this if she has arrived there. She may certainly come and see me. I agree with you that it would be better for her not to live at Sabarmati in summer. It would be very good if you can arrange for her to stay in Porbandar, Chorwad or Sasavne. If she has relations in Mussoorie, she may go there. It would also do her good if she can stay with Padma in Almora. I have given this advice in my letter to her also. Do help to accommodate her, if you can, as I have suggested.

On taking your letter in my hand, I read Pyare Ali’s name in it.
At the place where he lives the air may be cool, and so Amtul will perhaps feel happy there and may also be able to help Pyare Ali. Sultana\(^1\) and other children are there, too. However, treat all this as no more than suggestions. Do what you think proper.

I and Gangabehn have started writing to each other. She informs me that all the women prisoners are keeping well.

I got the leather sent by you for repairing sandal soles.

My experiment of milkless diet is continuing. It has proceeded all right so far. I deduce from this fact that for a person leading a quiet life milk is perhaps not necessary. From the point of view of spiritual well-being, it may even be harmful. As yet, this is only an inference. I can be positive only if the experiment continues successfully for a long time. In my own case this is certainly true, that before I was attacked by dysentery in 1918 I could do without milk no matter how hard I was working. However, these speculations serve no purpose just now. All that is necessary is that I should let you know about the effects of the experiment from week to week. For the present, let nobody even think of following my example.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU\(^2\)_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8216. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

\(^1\) Amina Qureshi’s daughter
\(^2\) For the article “Some Reflections on Education” which followed, _vide_ “Some Reflections on Education”, 28-3-1932
DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

As there was no letter from you this week, there was no need for me to write to you. But this time I ignore the omission. Knowledge should be given only to a jijnasu. A jijnasu means a person who hungers for knowledge. As a child fed by its mother even when it is not hungry will fall ill, so also, if you are not hungry for knowledge you will not be able to digest knowledge which is forced on you, that is, you will derive no benefit from it. Hence, not only should I get a letter from you every week, but the letter should also be an interesting one. “Interesting” means sweet, one which gave you pleasure in writing and will give me pleasure in reading. If you are interested in lejim exercises, you may write an interesting letter on that subject but it may not be interesting to me because I may know nothing about these exercises and have no means here of knowing anything. If you write such a letter, what can I write in reply? Do you understand now the two conditions your letters must fulfil so that they may be interesting? I, too, must fulfil those conditions in my letters. That is why I once wrote to Sharda that, if you could take no interest in my letters about the Gita, the fault must be mine. So be it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8989. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

207. LETTER TO D. B. KALEL Kar

March 29, 1932

CHI. KAKA,

I am now permitted to write to all of you, and so I am writing this. Let me know how you keep. I have heard that Narahari and Prabhudas are with you. Write to me and tell me about their health too. Since I have asked you to do this, I am not writing separately to them. What have you been reading or studying?

All three of us are well. . . .

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Since I am permitted to write to you, I am sure you will be permitted to reply to me.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9485. Courtesy: D. B. Kalekar

208. LETTER TO M. G. BHANDARI

March 30, 1932

DEAR MAJOR BHANDARI,

With reference to my letter of the 6th instant, I have the definition of the expression ‘Non-Political’ which I observe corresponds to mine, but I have yet to have the reply with reference to the five illustrative names submitted of non-Ashram friends who are likely to want to visit me or who I am likely to want to see. I shall be obliged if the reply can now be given. I am waiting for that reply to prepare the list desired by the Government.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

209. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

Y. M.,
March 31, 1932

MY DEAR ANAND,

It was indeed good news that Father stayed with you. That must be enough. It is unreasonable to expect coincidence of views. Mutual respect and toleration is the only thing one may expect and for one’s own part cultivate.

Vidya must write regularly. You have said nothing about her. I hope you are getting more and more composed in mind.

1 A line and a half were censored by the jail authorities.
2 Vide “Letter to M. G. Bhandar”, 6-3-1932.
Love to you both.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

210. LETTER TO DAHIBEHN PATEL

March 31, 1932

CHI. DAHIBEHN,

I got your letter. The harder the task, the fewer willing workers will there be. I was, therefore, not surprised by your letter. But understanding workers, when they observe the paucity of volunteers, will become more devoted to their work and make greater sacrifices. If they do so, the number of workers will increase again. There is no exception to this law.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9206

211. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

March 31, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

Since you have taken a pledge that you will write, you should do so regularly. That you have completed twenty-four years means nothing at all. You have a long span of life before you yet and should fulfil during it the hopes which I may have built on you. Do go and visit Pyarelal. Personally I think I am keeping very good health this time. That I have been able to maintain my weight without milk and do not require enemas is enough for me. I don’t mind very much if I cannot write with the right hand. I shall get used to writing with the left hand. All three of us are doing well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1833
212. LETTER TO MOHAN N. PARIKH

March 31, 1932

CHI. MOHAN,

The letters you make vary in size. Improve your hand. It is a good thing that you rise early. Do you know the tables? If you do not, learn them.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9176

213. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

March 31, 1932

As I had no news from you at all, at last I wrote to Taramati. Then unexpectedly I got your letter yesterday and felt happy. I do not worry about your loss of weight. Your health should remain good in other respects. From the point of view of climate, Nasik is excellent. Write to me regularly from wherever you may be. If writing to me comes in the way of your writing to others, ask one of those to whom you must write to convey your message to me. The understanding between the authorities here and me is that I can write to any of my fellow-prisoners. This should mean that, if the prisoner chooses to reply to me, his letter should not count among the number he is entitled to write.

. . .1 A prisoner ought not to even think of the outside world. Karmayoga for him would mean doing the duty which now has become his in jail.

In the verse cq_kS ‘kj.kehUoPN1; “seek refuge in the attitude of detachment”, etc., the word ‘buddhi certainly does not mean the samkhya, or the path of knowledge. Here it has the meaning which it bears in the phrase yogabuddhi, about which the Lord had promised to explain in the verse ,"kk rs-fHkfgrk lka[;s cqf_:ksxsfRoeka J’.kqA³ “Thus have I set before thee the attitude of Knowledge; hear now the attitude of Action”, etc. That is to say, if any comparison is to be made at all, it is between karmayoga and bhaktiyoga. But instead of making a comparison between jnanayoga, karmayoga and bhaktiyoga, the Gita aims at a synthesis of the three. To practise any one of them perfectly, one must also practise the other two. That is, the three are inseparable. There is some indication of the superiority of karmayoga from among the three, but only because there is less risk in it of being deceived. "Here no effort undertaken is lost, no disaster befalls", etc. I believe that we must first grasp the general purport of the book we are trying to study. In other words, our thinking about it should be independent.

1 Omission as in the source
2 Bhagavad Gita, II. 49
3 Ibid

As for rebirth, there is no room for doubt at all. Our body changes a little every day, so that in seven years the whole gets changed altogether. It seems to be the same because the form remains the same. If the body can be transformed every seven years, there is no reason whatever to think that what we know as death means complete annihilation. The atman is different from the body and it is certainly not destroyed when the body is destroyed. Then, all that takes place at death is a change of state. If a change of state is possible, why not a change of the body? However, we can have a full discussion of this subject only when we meet. Meanwhile, I certainly wish that you should be able to get rid of your doubts about certain conclusions. For this purpose, you may put me any questions that you wish.

I don’t think that I can write a smriti. What I write or say has not been thought out in conformity with a system. I have only enough strength to enable me to meet every situation as it arises in the course of my quest for truth. That is to say, I am no Shastri, and only a person learned enough to write a Shastra can compose a smriti. This suggestion was first made to me by Kishorelal. I would certainly write such a treatise if I could. I would be fortunate, however, if I can use rightly whatever powers God has given me.

We three are quite well. The third is Mahadev.

[PS.]
I see nothing wrong in your trying without concern for the result to come to see me. I would be very happy if you succeed.

[From Gujarati]
Bapuni Prasadi, pp. 105-7

1 Ibid
214. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
March 31, 1932[2]

CHI. VANAMALA,

I hope you have completely recovered from your illness. The best subject of study for girls is how to live a pure life. As for other subjects, each may learn the subject in which she has interest. Persons of the same age are not necessarily similar in nature.

The leaves of all plants do not show as if they felt shy in our presence. I do not know why some of them do. If any of the girls among you has an aptitude for research, let her discover the reason.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5761. Also C.W. 2984. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

215. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

[About March 1932][1]

PARASRAM,

Questions were being left unanswered. The thing which is seen settling down in urine is the natural salt. Everyone has some of it more or less. It is good if a new entrant is medically examined. The question remains whether we can cope with it or no. Neem stick, like babul stick, gives good service.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 7480; also C. W. 4955. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

---

1 The source has “1931”, but Gandhiji was not in jail in March 1931. Vide also “Letter to Vimlabehn A. Patel”, 28-3-1932.
2 From the contents; vide “Letter to Parasram Mehrotra”, 20-3-1932

184 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
216. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

April 1, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

Sardar is in excellent health, though he has lost some weight. True, he had made a few changes in his food, but now he has practically returned to his normal diet. From the authorities there was no objection at all to his doing so. In the matter of food, the only restriction is what we lay down for ourselves.

The golden rule to follow in interpreting the Shastras is this: The various interpretations offered by the commentators may all be correct from their respective standpoints. The seeker should faithfully adhere to the meaning that appeals to his heart and act accordingly. It is for the Shastri to harmonize the different interpretations or to construct a system, and so on. For the person wishing to construct a way of life for himself, there is only one harmony to be achieved—between the meaning accepted by him and his daily life.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 224. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

217. LETTER TO DUDHIBEHN V. DESAI

April 2, 1932

CHI. DUDHIBEHN,

There is no particular trouble in my hand. I am not using the right hand for writing merely as a measure of precaution. You must not let your weight increase. Fast for a few days or live only on fruit. All this weight is superfluous. It may help you even if you live for some time on buttermilk.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7425. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai
218. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

April 2, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

All of you seem to believe that swaraj means my rule. It will not be swaraj then. In swaraj, people who are known for their wisdom will rule. What they decide will be done. Let us hope voters will count for less than they do today.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Mahadev is quite well. The pain in his leg is much less. He eats the same things and of the same quality as at home, namely, rotli, dal, rice, vegetables, etc. There is not the slightest cause for worry.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9469

219. LETTER TO PURATAN BUCH

April 2, 1932

CHI. PURATAN,

Since in any case you are obliged to take rest for some time, can you not go to either Almora, Deolali, Matheran or Belgaum, or to a place on the sea-coast like Chorwad, Mangarol, Dumas, Ghogha, etc.?

I used to pray [as a child] because the elders in the family did. After earnest introspection in 1893 in South Africa, I became a conscious believer.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9165
220. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

Y. M.,
April 2, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

I had been awaiting your letter. I am glad to know that you are doing well. Do not let anything perturb your mind.

I am well and my diet consists of roti, almonds, dates, lemon and some vegetable. My weight remains unchanged.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

221. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

April 3, 1932

CHI. MANGALA (DARLING),

You should know personally the men and women among whom you live. You should know the names and properties of all the trees and varieties of grass which you grow there. You should know where the Chandrabhaga has its source. You should also know the names of the insects, birds and other animals which you see there, and give names to such of them as have no names. You should know the good and the bad points of the soil there, and also the history of the buildings in the neighbourhood. Is not this enough? How much of all this do you know?

Our capacity for observation can be increased by forming the habit of carefully examining things.

I learn to study the firmament with the help of a book.

If it is getting late, you may write less, but write it carefully and slowly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4081. Also C.W. 45. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

1 A rivulet near the Ashram, now dried up
222. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 3, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

Generally I get your letters on Wednesday immediately on arrival. This time, too, I have received a beautiful question from Indu: “Can we practise sword and dagger exercises in the Ashram?” I don’t know or remember when swords and daggers were introduced in the Ashram. Nor do I remember whether, if they were introduced when I was there, I had been consulted. Whether or not I was, I now think that these things have no place in the Ashram. All of you should sit together and think over this matter and, if you feel that their introduction cannot be defended in any way, get rid of them immediately. It seems to me that keeping lathis is the utmost limit to which we can go. However, you and other responsible inmates of the Ashram should think independently over this matter and discuss it among yourselves. If there are any other issues besides this, small or big, you should think over them too.

The other problem is about illness. Anybody who falls ill, as Indu did, as soon as he or she comes to live in the Ashram, should be sent away to some other place. For instance, Jamna has returned there after gaining 12 lb. of weight. If she were to lose it all now, I would certainly feel very unhappy. If a person keeps better health at some other place than he does in the Ashram, it would be good both for him and for the Ashram to send him to stay at that place. We should try and discover the deficiencies of the Ashram because of which some persons do not keep good health there. The water there is of course one cause, but there may be other factors too. These are air and food. We should find out if we are polluting the air in any way. For this, we should examine whether the arrangements for the disposal of night soil and the excreta of cattle are satisfactory. If Anandi is always ill, she should be sent somewhere. Sharda told me that if I did not object, Velanbehn would send Anandi to live with her at Matheran. Really speaking, my permission is not required at all. It is for you to decide whether or not she should be permitted to go. Personally, I see no objection to the suggestion. At present, her expenses even in Deolali are borne by us. If, therefore, Anandi can be

1 For his previous question, vide “Letter to Indu N. Parekh”, 24-3-1932
2 Presumably, the addressee’s wife who had gone to Bombay for health reasons sent to live with Sharda, that should certainly be done. This solves the problem about only one of them. I have asked you to think about the problem of all who keep bad health in the Ashram.

Tell Valji that I have carefully preserved the translation of *Vratavichar*¹ and that, if possible, I will even return it. I feel now that I shall be able to do so.

I understand what you say about Champa. Please remember that it is your responsibility to look after her.

You must have inferred from what I wrote above about Anandi that Harjivan² and Sharda³ came and saw me. If you can ascertain how Lakshmi, Lilavati and others are doing, please write to me about them.

I got the leather for repairing the soles and the books. The difficulty which the officials feel in permitting me to see the women prisoners lodged here is that they would have to be brought to the men’s jail. And I cannot certainly be taken to the women’s jail. Since this difficulty appeared genuine to me, I did not insist. It was agreed, therefore, that we should be permitted to correspond. I have already started writing. Gangabehn informs me that all are well in the Ashram.

Continue the treatment till your scabies disappears completely. It will benefit you in other ways too.

Is the Ashram bulletin being issued? If it is, is a copy sent to me every time? I have not seen any along with your letters for some weeks past.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I got today Prabhavati’s letter. She is in the Lucknow Central Jail. Kanta also is there. She has been promoted to ‘A’ class. Prabhavati has been demoted to ‘B’. According to me Prabhavati has been promoted and Kanta demoted. Prabhavati seems to be keeping good health. She tells me that Jayaprakash is in Bombay. For this week, Mahadev has sketched a fine word-picture⁴ which I send with this letter.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8217. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

¹ Vide footnote 1, “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 27-1-1932
² The Kotaks, khadi workers
³ ibid
⁴ An account of Duchess Elizabeth under the title “A Saintly Woman of Russia” from Sir Samuel Hoare’s Fourth Seal, published in Ashram Jivan
223. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

April 3, 1932

CHL. PREMA,

I got your letter.

Indu has put me some fine questions. Why should we do in the Ashram exercises with swords, *jamaiya*¹, etc.? I have discussed this question in my letter² to Narandas. Hence I do not say anything about it here. I have mentioned the question only to ask you whether it has also occurred to you, since you have been yourself learning these exercises.

I would not give to the Ashram the certificate which you do. I would certainly be happy if it really deserved such a certificate. You may have formed the impression that any person in the Ashram who takes up some work becomes wholly absorbed in it, but your impression is not correct. Are we able to observe the Ashram vows faithfully? It had been decided to teach Hindi, Urdu, Tamil, Telugu and Sanskrit in the Ashram, but we made only a half-hearted effort. Have we acquired proficiency in tanning? Do we spin fine yarn of the highest count? I can point to many such deficiencies, but what I have said is enough to justify my questioning [your certificate].

Everyone can pay single-minded attention to lathi exercises. But we can say likewise that everyone runs after sweets. There are indeed many things in the world the pursuit of which requires no strenuous effort. Since we are also animals in our nature, this quality [of pursuing a thing with single-minded attention] is instinctive in us. It does not have to be cultivated. The question is whether or not [in a particular case] it deserves to be cultivated. Every property of animal nature need not of course be regarded as something to be shunned.

How many persons take meals in the common kitchen these days? Do you still make bread in the Ashram? If yes, who is in charge of the work? If you make good bread, send a loaf or two with any person who may come to see me.

If anyone from the Ashram meets Lakshmi, he or she should tell her that I do not remember not having replied to any letter from her.

¹ Dagger
² Vide the preceding item.
She should, therefore, write to me.

Dikshit’s *Jyotishshastra*¹ has been translated into Gujarati. I have got a copy of the translation with me. Ball’s work will be available to me here, and so I don’t want you to send a copy from there. The books sent by Upton Sinclair belong to the Ashram. Enter them in the catalogue and send me Boston and Brass Tacks. Send a list of the rest.

I like the Upanishads. But I don’t consider myself fit to write a commentary on them.

You should know my love of jesting. I can tell you only in jest that you ask me to describe your faults so that I may praise you². There is, of course, this truth in my remark, that if a person asks another who loves him or her to criticize him or her, he or she will hear only praise, for love covers defects as with a veil, or sees them as virtues. It is the nature of love that it prompts one to point out on occasion the defects of the beloved one because one wants to see perfection in the person whom one loves. Did Kisan tell you that I was praising you even when I described you as hysterical before Dhurandhar? For, in that context you would have had to be held guilty of a more serious offence if I did not believe that you were hysterical. You certainly are hysterical. Sometimes you almost become mad; what does that signify? Anyone who gives way to an emotional outburst is hysterical. Do you understand what I mean?

I have always felt that Japan’s policy is regrettable. She certainly deserved the victory over Russia but that does not make her policy worthy of emulation by others. Just now, however, it will be enough if we take care of our own policy. There is the Holy Being eternally awake with a million eyes to watch Japan’s policy.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10279. Also C.W. 6727. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

---

¹ A Marathi work on astronomy
² Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 21-3-1932
DEAR SISTERS,

Since I cannot write with the left hand as fast as I can with the right, I dictate this letter instead of writing it.

‘Whatever women do, how can you, being their elder, employ satyagraha against them?’ There is a big flaw in this argument and it is based on a misunderstanding of the nature of satyagraha. In that question, you equate satyagraha with duragraha. Satyagraha makes no distinction between the young and the old, the prince and the pauper. God also employs satyagraha against us. His satyagraha is unceasing. In essence, satyagraha means simply this—scrupulous regard for truth. If God did not adhere to truth, the whole world would perish in an instant. The point is that offering satyagraha is as much a duty as it is a privilege. But I shall now take your own instance. If you do not discuss my letters among yourselves and reply to them, I really need not write to you every week. Even if I write, my letters will have no value and no effect. A lover of truth never writes or speaks merely for the sake of writing or speaking. There must be some definite purpose in his writing or speaking. Ordinarily he should observe complete silence. Really speaking, there can be nothing for me to tell you or anybody else, particularly while I am in prison. Though I am imprisoned, the Government permits me to maintain limited contact with the outside world, and I avail myself of that freedom. But I should do so only for writing letters with a definite aim. A person like me should teach what he wishes to teach only through his own conduct. Those who do not learn from my actions, how can they learn from my words? This is the general rule. But there are persons in the Ashram as also outside it who regard my manner of life as worth following and, for that very reason, want me to explain my ideas more clearly. It is my duty to write to them. You are included among these persons, but only if you ask me some questions. That is why I told you that, if you do not reply to me, ask me no question or discuss nothing with me, why should I write to you?

1 A part of this letter is given in Mahadevbhaini Diary, “Guide to London”, under the date April 4, 1932.
2 Opposite of satyagraha
I know that you feel shy. I also know your nature. You do what service you can and say nothing. That is perfectly right, and it befits you. But even though we should learn to live in that manner, after all we have to mix with one another. Living in the Ashram means that we should live as a small community, that is, live together, have our meals together, work and spend our free time together and think together. This is the meaning of the mantra which we recite before commencing every meal. Animals also have some capacity for living and moving together. But man has it in unlimited measure, and it must be so because it is his dharma to realize his oneness with all living creatures. He cannot do this if he cannot live in a community. You must, therefore, strive your best and cultivate this capacity. Hence even if you do not meet regularly just now as members of an association, you should do so at least to qualify yourselves to get weekly letters from me and to reply to them. In this manner you can make some progress [towards collective living]. When any of you write to me individually, I do reply to her. But since I started the practice of writing a common letter to the women I have realized that I must write regularly something meant for all the women. The women should discuss it and I should discuss the questions which they raise. I think that I have now made quite clear what I wished to tell you and what I want from you.

This was only a preface to the letter. Trivenibehn has asked me one question which concerns all women. Today, therefore, I will discuss that. She asks why women, not only the women in the Ashram but all women with whom she has come in contact, look as if they were dead and have no spirit in them at all. There is some truth in her description, though of course it will not apply to all women. The reasons which I have been able to discover are these: (1) lack of order in women’s life; (2) excessive worries; (3) wrong upbringing; (4) adoption of unscientific measures at the time of child-birth and during confinement; (5) lack of exercise; (6) eating food which is harmful to health; (7) the habit of remaining within the four walls of the home; (8) the habit of eating things which they ought not to eat; (9) in many cases, harmful thoughts which they do not try to regulate wisely, but repress.

These are the reasons which I can think of. I do not mean that all of them apply in every case. Every woman should think and find out which reason applies in her own case. I have observed one great defect in our women, namely, that they hide their thoughts from the world. As a result, their behaviour becomes hypocritical. This can happen only to those who are habitually hypocritical. I do not know anything in the world so poisonous as hypocrisy, and especially when the evil affects our middle class women who are suppressed throughout their lives it eats them up like a canker. At every step they do things which they dislike in their hearts, and believe that they must do them. If they only think a little, they will realize that they need not let themselves be suppressed by anybody in the world. If they learn this first lesson and cultivate the courage to stand before the world just as they are, they will be able to eliminate the other causes which I have mentioned.

According to me, this is a very important letter. Think over it again and again and ask me about anything in it which you do not understand. If you read the letter twice or thrice, you will be able to understand it very clearly.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

225. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

April 3, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

This time your handwriting was a little better. Keep on improving it.

About spinning, read the letter which I have written to Kanta.

If a Sardar does not order about others, how could he be called Sardar?

Having taken the part of Mother India in the dramatic piece, you should now cultivate the virtues befitting her.

Blessings from

BAPU

226. LETTER TO KISAN

April 3, 1932

CHI. KISAN,

Do you wish me to address you as Krishnakumari? Your letter was very much to my liking. It is good that you have taught exercises to Jamnabehn and others.

I believe you must have recovered by now.

Anyway do write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 9068

227. LETTER TO AN AMERICAN ¹

April 4, 1932

I thank you for your letter. My answer to your first question is that I would not like anybody to get me out, and certainly not on any condition. I cannot give up, for any consideration whatsoever, what I regard as my life’s mission.

The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, pp. 54-5

228. LETTER TO AN AMERICAN ²

April 4, 1932

I have met many Christian Science friends. Some of these have sent me Mrs. Eddy’s works. I was never able to read them through. I did however glance through them. They did not produce the impression the friends who sent them to me had expected. I have learnt from childhood, and experience has confirmed the soundness of the teaching, that spiritual gifts should not be used for the purpose of healing bodily ailments. I do however believe in abstention from

¹ According to Mahadev Desai, the letter was in reply to the addressee’s offer “to obtain his (Gandhiji’s) release on condition that he devoted himself entirely to propagating the teaching of Christ”.

² The addressee, formerly an atheist and now a follower of Christian Science, had asked for Gandhiji’s views on the subject.
use of drugs and the like. But this is purely on physical, hygienic grounds. I do also believe in utter reliance upon God, but then not in the hope that He will heal me, but in order to submit entirely to His will, and to share the fate of millions who even though they wished to, can have no scientific medical help. I am sorry to say, however, that I am not always able to carry out my belief into practice. It is my constant endeavour to do so. But I find it very difficult, being in the midst of temptation, to enforce my belief in full.

229. LETTER TO SURENDRA

April 4, 1932

I did get your letter in which you wrote about brahmacharya. We shall certainly discuss the subject when we meet. The views which I had expressed at Imam Saheb’s place have become stronger and are becoming stronger still. That is, I find their truth being proved by experience. That alone is true brahmacharya which remains inviolate at all times and in all conditions. It is extremely difficult to cultivate such a state. But that should not be surprising. We owe our birth to lust, and love our body which is the fruit of lust. It cannot but be difficult to get rid of this heritage of lust. However, when we realize that the body is the abode of the priceless atman, our brahmacharya would remain inviolate even if Rambha came down from heaven and embraced us. To everybody, his mother is as beautiful as Rambha, and the thought of this Mother Rambha banishes impure thoughts from his mind. In like manner, the thought of any woman should banish impure thoughts from one’s mind. Need I go on? Reflect over this again and again and understand all its implications.

If somebody is pleased by your punishing yourself\(^1\) it is not correct to describe that as the effect of ahimsa. But the matter is not important. As your faith becomes stronger, your reason will develop. The Gita seems to tell us that God Himself gives us the light of reason. Our duty is to strengthen our faith. It is, of course, necessary to understand the meaning of faith and reason in this context. We cannot understand them through verbal definitions, but can do so only through true humility. He who believes that he knows, knows nothing. But he who believes that he knows nothing, acquires knowledge at the right time. Even God cannot pour Ganga water into a pot that is full. We should, therefore, always stand before God with empty hands. Our vow of non-possession means the same thing. But I must stop here. You may write to me whenever you wish. They will give your letters to me.

\(^1\) The reference is to standing with knees bent and arms stretched out like a chair.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 70

230. A LETTER

April 4, 1932

If in any situation it is our duty to speak, we must tell the truth whatever the cost.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadev Bhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 71

231. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

April 4, 1932

CHI. MANUDI,

I got your letter, and read the whole of it twice. You need not be scared. It was very good that you saw the woeful condition of Harilal with your own eyes. I knew all about him. However, we should not give up hope of anyone’s future. Nothing is beyond God’s power? If there is still some merit to Harilal’s credit earned through good deeds in the past, it will bear fruit one day. We should not pamper him or have false pity on him, but should make our hearts purer day by day. That will have an effect on Harilal too. You have got to harden your heart and write to him and tell him plainly that, as long as he does not give up drinking, he will have to assume that you do not exist. If all of us adopt such a course, Harilal might take heed. Often a drunkard gives up his evil habit when he is greatly shocked.

I liked your reply about marriage. I am sure it will be all to your

1 The addressee had asked if one must tell the truth even at the cost of someone else’s life.
THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Good if you stick to your resolution. In your childhood you were so ill that nobody hoped you would live. You were saved because of Ba’s patient nursing and the treatment of the Ice Doctor¹. But owing to that illness, your growth had practically stopped for five years. You are weak even now, and but for Bali’s² care, you would become ill again. On this account, I always deduct at least five years from your actual age. We have already fixed the earliest age for a woman to marry at twenty-one years. The age, therefore, which you have laid down for yourself for marrying is proper. I would regard you as barely fit for marriage at the age of twenty-five. However, I do not wish to bind you to a pledge. I write this only to tell you that your present resolution is right. When Rami wished to get married at a younger age, I did not come in her way though I did not at all like that she should have married at that age. As for you, there are many reasons why you should not marry early. May God keep you firm in your resolution. At present your duty is to apply yourself hard to your studies, build up a strong, healthy body, understand the path which Gita teaches and live accordingly.

Write to me from time to time. You may come to see me if you wish. Try and improve your handwriting a good deal.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1511. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

232. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

April 4, 1932

Bhai Vithaldas,

We were all very glad to see the letter written in your own hand. Do take sufficient rest. Resume work only after you are physically quite fit.

Another parcel of dates from you arrived before my card could reach you. Dates in which worms have made their appearance should never be considered fit for consumption. They lodge themselves between the rind and the pulp, and washing does not remove them, as

¹ Dr. Kelkar
² Balibehn Vohra, maternal aunt of Manu Gandhi
I found from my experience of the dates this time. I send most of the quantity to the leper hospital here and eat a little from the portion which is not spoiled. But please send no more. The hard dry dates which are available in the local market are free from worms and they serve my purpose well enough. We cannot afford to waste either time or money. You should, therefore, save both.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9781

233. LETTER TO LAKSHMI JERAJANI

April 4, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMI,

I got your letter. Pencil handwriting is faint and becomes fainter day by day. By the time the person to whom the letter is addressed gets it, the characters have become so faint that he can read the letter with difficulty, and sometimes it cannot be deciphered at all. Moreover, with pencil you cannot make your handwriting really good. Finally, pencil handwriting cannot be properly judged. In future, as long as you can get ink and pen, resolve to use them in writing letters or anything else.

If Vithaldas is completely restored to health, you too will share the credit.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 2812. Courtesy: Purushottam D. Saraiya

234. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

April 4, 1932

May God make Raihana healthy both in body and mind and keep her so. Has the pupil gone to the teacher to learn cunning? The teacher’s cunning will not avail her. The bhajan you have sent will seem good only when I can hear it sung, and that can be when you come and sing it to me. To do so it seems you must turn yourself into a boy to enter the jail! I shall see if Mahadev can sing. Now read the ghazal for the day:

VOL. 55 :  10 FEBRUARY, 1932 -  15 JUNE, 1932  199
If thou wouldst see Him, with each breath think of Him. Burn thy pride and smear thy body with its ashes; take up the broom of love and with it wipe out the distinctions of me and thee; reduce the notion of reality to dust and sprinkle it on thy prayer carpet; leave the carpet, break up the rosary, throw the sacred books in the river, seek the help of angels and be their servant; do not fast nor keep Ramzan, do not go to the mosque nor make obeisances; break to pieces the water jar for prayer cleansing and drink the wine of the joy of union; eat and drink but never be off thy guard; enjoy thy intoxication continuously; burn thy egotism. Be neither Mulla nor Brahmin; leave duality and worship Him alone. Shah Kalandar has proclaimed: Say, ‘I am He.’ Mad Mansur says: My heart has known truth, that is the wine shop of the intoxicated, make that the object of thy visit.\(^1\)

I do feel ashamed of my Urdu handwriting, but [however much I try] I cannot write better with my left hand. It took me nearly three quarters of an hour to write this much. The truth is that I should practise writing every day. But I am rather ambitious and wishing to do all I can during this quiet interval, I cannot give much time to Urdu. It was you who tempted me to try writing Urdu, for you used to write a few Urdu sentences and, trying to write in Urdu myself, I became your pupil! What a pupil, and what a teacher! It is indeed a great pair we make. Let us see now if we can justify the designation.

We are eagerly watching what is now in store for Father. We remember you all very often. Uncle Sardar and Mahadev proudly narrate many incidents about Father. They had the benefit of staying with him. I never got that opportunity. I will have my revenge one day.

I shall expect in your next letter the news of Hamida, Rohini and others.

I got Pashabhai’s letter just today. If I cannot send the reply with this, I will write to him later.

I have written enough for the day.

Many, many blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9640

\(^1\) Vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”. Up to this the letter is in Urdu.
235. LETTER TO ANANDLAL GANDHI

April 5, 1932

CHI. ANANDLAL,

I wrote you a letter. You will have got it. I got your postcard yesterday. Why has Harilal not written to me himself if he has really reformed himself? Maybe he was too ashamed to write, in which case it is all right. But there is no reason for him to feel ashamed. Even the worst of men have mended themselves. And then the world did not remember their earlier faults but on the contrary some of them came to be honoured as devotees. If Harilal has really undergone a change of heart I regard it as happy news indeed. But I have serious doubts. People who are addicted like him often take vows only to break them. They have no spirit left in them. They lose the strength to keep a vow. Only a few blessed by God are saved. I hope that Harilal would be one such. Tell him to write.² You should also keep me informed about him. Harilal’s resolve [you say] is up to the month of Margashirsha according to the calendar followed there. What does this mean? If he stays perfectly clean up to Margashirsha, does it mean that he will go back to his old ways again?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya

236. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

April [5]³, 1932

Bhai Ghanshyamdas,

I have your letter. You will guess from the handwriting that Mahadev is here. I like your taking interest in everybody’s diet. The food taken by our middle class does not constitute a balanced diet and there is no doubt that they ruin their constitution by eating useless

¹ Eldest son of Gandhiji
² For Gandhiji’s reply to Harilal’s letter; vide “Fragment of Letter to Harilal Gandhi”, 27-4-1932
³ Vide “Diary 1932”.
stuff. Moreover, doctors and vaidyas in their preoccupation with making money take no note of this problem. That is why I appreciate the usefulness of your experiments and I hope that Rameshwarji and Lakshminivas have benefited. Keep me informed of whatever fresh discoveries you make.

I am fully aware that misconceptions exist about me. Experience has taught me that most of the misunderstandings are cleared up if one has patience. However long the night may be it is bound to come to an end.

For me the same diet continues. I feel well on it. Do you see Andrews? How is he keeping?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 7897. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

237. LETTER TO MAITHILISHARAN GUPTA

April 5 [1932]

BHAI MAITHILISHARAN,

I had your letter. I read Saket, Anagh, Panchvati and Jhankar with enjoyment. I liked them very much. But I do not consider myself at all qualified to make comments. However, as you have asked for my opinion and I did gather impressions while reading I am putting them down as they occurred to me.

The expression of Urmila’s grief, though beautiful in style, could hardly have had a place in Saket. That Tulsidas did not say much about Urmila has been held against him. But this omission I have not viewed as a fault. I see in that the artistry of the poet. The composition of Manas is such that a worthy character like Urmila is brought to notice only by ellipsis, in that lies the greatness of the work and such characters. The character of Urmila and others could have been delineated only to enhance the impact of Sitaji’s character. But Urmila’s virtues were of no lesser order than Sita’s. Sita’s sisters were of the same calibre as herself. Manas is an incomparable scripture. The praise of Sita and Rama rings through every page and every verse. I expected to see the same characteristic in Saket. I failed in this

1 The year is inferred from the contents; vide also “Letter to Maithilisharan Gupta”, 26-4-1932 and “Diary, 1932”, entry under April 5.
to some extent for the reason explained above. I may mention one more point. The lamentations of Dasharatha and others described in Tulsidas’s Manas did not jar. Tulsidasji could not have done anything different. But such lamentations are not appreciated in a book of the present period. It affects adversely the sentiment of valour as well as faith. Those who have faith in the spirit and who consider worldly pleasures as transitory cannot find death and separation unbearable. They might temporarily give way to grief but how can we expect pitiful lamentations from them?

I do not at all mean by all this that you should try to make any improvements in the second edition. But it will be a different matter if you find any worth in my comments.

Mahadev is now with me. I have dictated this to him as the right hand pains and writing with the left hand takes more time.

Yours

Mohanandas

From Hindi: C.W. 9455. Courtesy: Bharat Kala Bhavan, Varanasi

238. LETTER TO CHAND TYAGI

April 5, 1932

Bhai Tyagi Ji,

I was glad to get your letter and gladder still to learn that you are nursing the plague patients. I am not taking milk these days. Here I can do with bread, almonds, dates, vegetables and lemons. My views are the same as before. I am awaiting a letter from Devsharmaji¹. My right hand pains only when writing, but it has been like this for one year and there is nothing special. Balvir’s handwriting is good. Has he got rid of his former faults?

Mahadev is with me. This card is in his hand.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3259

¹ Also known as Acharya Abhaydev

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932 203
239. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

April 7, 1932

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have your letters and enclosures, also copy of an article of yours in an old number of Modern Review.

I understand and even appreciate the moral repulsion against ‘fasting unto death’. I have perhaps some repulsion, if not the same repulsion, against fasting unto death myself, but I remain unmoved. There are many other things I have done and am still doing against my will, because I count my will as nothing before God’s will when I see it clearly before me. I will make myself as certain as it is humanly possible to be, that the will that appears to me to be God’s is really His, and not the Devil’s. But when I am clear about it, I rejoice in obeying that will, rather than mine, although I have no human companion to endorse it. That this kind of fasting has a definite place in Hinduism, and properly so, I have not a shadow of a doubt, but it is a privilege that comes only to a few, and when it comes in obedience to a call from above, it has a mighty force. Only, fasting unto death is a corrupt expression. When I used it first, it had its definite meaning. Now it is being used torn from its context and looks certainly barbarous. But it is there, and its real meaning is unmistakable, and you can almost say that it is not so much of a ‘fast unto death’ as it is a ‘fasting unto a new life’.

All the same, I value your letter and the information you give me about the English attitude. I do want English sympathy in this big struggle. I do want also to be understood. You cannot therefore be too frank or too communicative with me. I shall never misunderstand whatever these few English friends might have to say.

Kerby Page’s article which you have sent I shall see as soon as I get the time, and if there is anything worth saying, I shall reduce it to writing.

I hope that your brother’s septic teeth were extracted and that he had benefited by the extraction.

You know all about Verrier’s change of mind.¹ He had changed it before your blessings were received, and you know the reason also for the change. Whilst I was prepared to bless the marriage, I cannot help saying that I blessed the change still more. So much depended upon Verrier’s decision. I told him that if it was a human want on his part, he must marry, no matter what misinterpretation might be put upon his action. The change came over both Verrier and Mary without any prompting from anybody at all.

¹ About not marrying Mary Gillett

Our love to all.

Yours sincerely,

MOHAN

From a photostat: G.N. 1301

240. A LETTER

April 7, 1932

I have your letter. I am unable to say that I have reached my destination. I fear, I have much distance to cover. . . .

Mahadevbhai Diary, Vol. I, p. 59

241. LETTER TO NRISIMHAPRASAD K. BHATT

April 7, 1932

The fear of tuberculosis is worse than the disease itself. The person who is suspected to have got it is always brooding over the disease and sees its symptoms in every discomfort that he suffers. If he can be helped to get rid of this obsession, he recovers very soon.

Why do you worry over the problem of money? You ought to learn this lesson from me, for I am an expert in the subject. Long before the country made me a Mahatma, I had learnt that, just as it is bad economics to do business with borrowed money, so it is a false conception of dharma to run a public institution with borrowed money. And if the ablest workers of an institution have to go out

---

1 The addressee, an overseer, had asked Gandhiji whether he had attained salvation and seen God face to face.

2 Omission as in the source

3 The addressee had mentioned the proposal to remove Gijubhai Badheka’s child to Panchgani for treatment.

4 The addressee had expressed his fears about the financial position of Dakshinamurti, an educational institution, started by him in Bhavnagar.
begging for money to run it, I would say that that is like doing business with borrowed money. Instead of fixing a specific number, why don’t you follow this other method, namely, to admit only as many pupils as you can manage with the money which you get. It is the easiest thing in the world to do that. You have only to make up your mind; that is all. At the beginning of every year, you should estimate the sum which you will need. If you get it without having to go begging for it, you should carry on, otherwise you should close the institution. Yours is an established institution now, with a glorious record. You have efficient teachers. Why, then, have you no faith? Offer up your venture wholly as sacrifice to the Lord and resolve to run it in His name. He will then keep it running if He so wills. “We have heard of none who loved the Lord and whose honour He did not uphold.” We sang this bhajan at the time of the evening prayer today. I was reminded of it by a letter which I wrote to a girl. You say that the problem would not have worried you if Vallabhbhai or I had been out of jail. But where is the problem? And if there is any, who are we to solve it? Can one blind man lead another blind man? If you think that there is a problem, leave it to Him. Do not dismiss all this as mere philosophizing, but try to act upon it.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 78

242. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

April 7, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

We can keep our minds pure by thinking good thoughts. We can get good thoughts by doing good actions. We cannot always know when an animal is dying. Often, the fact can be found out only by an experienced man.

I also am inquiring about Bhai.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.] I forgot to write in your own letter. Please forgive me. I am keeping the slip with me.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5771. Also C.W. 2994. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

206 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
243. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 8, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. It seems to me that the trouble with the right hand will persist. On coming here I began writing freely with the right hand and I soon discovered that it was no use. It may be one sign of creeping old age. If it is, it is cause neither for grief nor wonder. Had I learnt to use the body merely as an instrument of service and His temple, old age would have been like a beautiful ripe fruit with all the qualities of its species at their highest. It would be a stroke of good fortune if I escape merely with such disability. But even this is idle speculation. I have no business to speculate about these things. It is enough to note such things and take reasonable precautions within the prescribed limits. You will not therefore worry about the hand.

My weight stands at 106 lb. except for the fasting day when it naturally dropped to 103_. I take during 24 hours five to six slices of well-toasted white bread, 30 dates, bowlful of boiled vegetable once, two spoonful of honey at 4.15 a.m. with a pinch of soda and hot water and soda and lemon twice. I take two ounces (nearly) of almond paste. This seems to satisfy me; if it fails, I shall go back to milk. The bowels move perfectly twice or thrice daily without my medicament or appliances. I sleep between 9 and 3.40 and twice during the daytime 20 minutes each time. I spin 375 rounds in two days. I have not begun carding yet. Your supply seems to be inexhaustible. The balance of the time is given to reading and writing. Just now I am reading Ruskin’s Fors Clavigera, a deeply human document. He is dreadfully in earnest. These letters are his last effort at self-expression in word and deed. Much time is taken up in writing and now also dictating letters. As I am allowed to write to fellow-prisoners, naturally there is more writing to be done than last time. I am glad of it. I send something on moral problems to the Ashram every week. And now I have commenced the history of the Ashram for the past five years.

---

1 For extracts, reproduced from The Diary of Mahadev Desai.
2 “With cold water”—Mirabehn
3 “Of slivers”—Mirabehn.
4 Gandhiji had started writing it in Gujarati on April 5, 1932; vide “Diary, 1932”. Its last available portion was written on July 11, 1932, under which date the book is included in Vol. L. days.

This answers all your questions about self.

Vallabhbhai and Mahadev are doing excellently....¹ In these matters we are subject to no restrictions that we would not impose upon ourselves.

Abstention from salt for a time can do no harm and does produce the results you have noticed for yourself. The weakening effect you notice is temporary and can be greatly counteracted by taking fresh limes in some shape or other. I suppose you know that I have gone without salt continuously for six or eight years without noticing any ill effect. Many had joined me in the experiment, you may therefore prolong your saltless experiment to the extent that it benefits you. Milk contains much free salt. There is a saltish taste in raw milk.

I understand and appreciate all you say about yourself. Let me put you at ease. When I come out you shall certainly be with me and resume your original work of personal service. I quite clearly see that it is the only way for your self-expansion. I shall no longer be guilty as I have been before of thwarting you in any way whatsoever. My only consolation in thinking over the past is that in all I did I was guided by nothing else than the deepest love for you and regard for your well-being. I see once more that good government is no substitute for self-government.² A Gujarati proverb says what one sees for oneself may not be visible to the nearest friend even though he may have ever³ so powerful a searchlight. Both these proverbs may not be universally applicable. They certainly are in your case. You need therefore fear no interference from me henceforth. And who can give me more loving service than you?

Mahadev has the hymns you sent him. He is going to work at them. I forgot to tell you that I have now developed the habit of studying the heavens. As you see my pen is exhausted. This is Mahadev’s. And it is now past bed time, 9.15. But I think I have left ¹ One sentence was censored by the jail authorities.

² This sentence, censored by the jail authorities, is reproduced here from The Diary of Mahadev Desai, “Letter to The Natal Advertiser”, 29-9-1893
³ The source has “never”.

208 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
nothing unanswered. I have a full letter from Nurgis about Jal. What a deliverance!

Love from us all.

BAPU

[PS.]

I enclose an interesting cutting which I consider to be non-political enough to pass muster.

From a photostat: C.W. 9506. Courtesy: Mirabehn

244. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

April 8, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your letters. I did get Pyarelal’s letter, and had also replied to him. You should now learn to pronounce Sanskrit words correctly and learn the grammar too. This in addition to spinning on takli. Do you suffer from constipation? You should improve your health. I had liked the first part of Saraswatichandra1 very much, but you ought to read all the four parts. You should also read the four parts of Kavyadohan. Besides, you should read Karanghelo2 and Vanaraj Chavdo, as also some writings of Narmadashankar3 and Manilal Nabhubhai4. If you read these works, you will have a complete understanding of the nature of the Gujarati language. Perhaps you yourself can collect these books and send them.

I didn’t know at all about the Raleigh bicycle having come to India. I will write to Kingsley Hall. I got Rolland’s books. I will read them. Taradevi5 is here. I had even a letter from her. She and the other women are quite happy. She has asked for a copy of the Ramayana. I will send one to her. I got two letters from Sushila. If she could pick up enough courage to write, she wouldn’t be Pyarelal’s sister, [would she? ] The book about Lancashire has gone to [Chhaganlal] Joshi. I will read it when it comes back to me, and give my opinion. I have not collected many books this time. But I do receive some from time to

---

1 Gujarati novel by Govardhanram Tripathi
2 Gujarati novel by Nandshankar Mehta
3 1833-86; Gujarati poet, popularly known as ‘Kavi Narmad’
4 Dwivedi (1858-98); Gujarati man of letters and Vedantist thinker
5 Pyarelal’s mother
time. I have not yet come across any which I should like to send to you. I have received the volumes of Ruskin’s Fors Clavigera; if you wish, I may send them to you. Pyarelal will hardly get anything new even from them. I get letters from Muriel, Agatha and Horace. My weight remains what it was, that is, 106 lb. This is the food which I take: almonds crushed into paste, dates, toast, lemon-juice and a boiled vegetable with one meal. So far I have been able to do without milk. This time I don’t suffer from constipation at all. The hours of sleep have increased. I see that the weakness of the hand persists but I feel no pain. I read only for a little while. Just now I am reading Ruskin’s Fors. As for writing, I have finished the remaining discourses on the Gita. I have now taken in hand a history of the Ashram. I dictate to Mahadev. The letters to Ashram inmates take a good deal of my time, particularly because I write with the left hand. Spinning takes from one and a half to two hours. Because of the trouble with the hand I deliberately do not spin longer. I have made it a rule to spin 375 rounds in two days. I have not carded any cotton so far. I have still a stock of the slivers which Mira left with me. Mahadev has started carding.

I was going to ask you about Harilal¹, but meanwhile you have picked up courage to question me on the subject. I wished to ask you what you had done, and now you have turned round on me. My condition remains. Why cannot you write? You should write what you can; it will be for me to revise and pass what you write. You should overcome your hesitation and start writing. It is probably out of lethargy that you do not try at all. If so, overcome your lethargy. If you do this, I will keep my promise of writing a foreword. The book cannot be published just now, but it is very desirable that the writing should be over. I may not perhaps be able to write the foreword after I am released. I hope you realize that there is a reason for my insisting that you should start writing. There will be no grace in publishing the letters without your essay. You ought not to do that.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1834

¹ Addressee’s husband, whose letters Kusum Desai had been planning to publish with a foreword by Gandhiji and a life-sketch by her
245. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

April 8, 1932

CHI. PREMA.

Since Dhurandhar is here, I shall probably see him some time. Instead of wishing to kill many birds with one stone, why not wish to bring down many berries with one hit? You should never wish to kill a bird.

It was fortunate that you escaped being hurt by the tile. We should conclude from this that you are destined to do much more.

You need not at all feel confused about the problem concerning the women. You may give your services if they want them and if you have confidence in yourself. Otherwise you should forget the suggestion as if it had never been made. You should have confidence in yourself not about your ability to teach the women, but about your humility, about your ability not to let any mis-understanding occur and to manage any difficult situation that may arise. We often hesitate to undertake a responsibility out of fear of humiliation, misunderstanding, etc. If you can overcome such hesitation, you may take up the responsibility. You do believe that all the women are good by nature. They require the help of someone who can express their thoughts in words and maintain records for them. An illiterate mother may have more sense and practical wisdom than her educated daughter, but, being illiterate, she may not be able to use them. A daughter can supply this deficiency. I should like you to do that. I certainly don’t believe that the Association was doing very good work when Gangabehn was there. But on one pretext or another, she could bring all of them together. It was her ambition to do this work and she sowed the seed. She is doing similar work here too. I should like to see that seed grown into a tree. The women certainly do social work, but as individuals. I should like them to assume responsibility as a body, for some social service. This will create in them capacity for organization. When such capacity has been created, individuals may come and go but the organization will remain. God has given such capacity only to human beings. In our country, women have not cultivated it so far. The blame for this lies with the men. But that is a question with which we need not concern ourselves just now. If we believe that women must acquire this capacity for organization, we should try to cultivate it in them. It does not matter if we commence only with my writing a letter to their Association and their replying to me. Slowly (no matter, if very slowly) we may take up other activities. If you have fully understood what I have suggested and if the suggestion has appealed to you, if the other women also approve of it and if they are ready to take interest in carrying it out, you may take up this work. If, however, you see difficulties in carrying it out or see no meaning in it, you may drop the idea.

1 The addressee was sleeping in a courtyard and a gust of wind sent a tile from the roof hurtling on her bed.

Don’t pay attention just now to my request¹ to you to send me a list of books. I don’t want you, for the present, to send anything besides the books of Upton Sinclair which I have asked you to send.

I don’t at all like the practice of converting a person from one religion to another. I don’t believe that marriage between a man and a woman professing different faiths is impossible or always undesirable.

I think the distinguishing features of Hinduism are cow-protection and varnashrama. Any nation that wants to rise should follow the path of truth and non-violence.

I think I have answered all your questions.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

My copy of the Gujarati Jodanikosh, second edition, published by the Vidyapith, is lying there. Send it to me.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10280. Also C.W. 6728. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

246. LETTER TO SECRETARY OF SANTRAM ASHRAM

April 8, 1932

I got your letter and the Gujarati Gita and Ramayana. I thank Maharajshri for both. If Brahmin pandits who are also men of saintly character propagate knowledge of the Upanishads and other scriptures among the people, no one can doubt that they would be doing a good thing. But nowadays learning and goodness rarely go together. Hence I am a little indifferent towards such activities.

¹ Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 3-4-1932

I am similarly indifferent, or even a little more so, towards public readings of the Gita and the Ramayana. I put no value on such readings by persons who do not understand the meaning of what they read, or even if they understand it, read the scriptures loudly—as if merely doing that would earn them holy merit—or read them for show or for fame. I even believe that such readings actually do harm. If Maharajshri has found a remedy for these evils and has succeeded in avoiding them in the readings organized by him, I have no doubt that they will do good to the people.

It should be remembered that I am a prisoner and a letter of this kind should not be used in public. I request you, therefore, to be careful in this matter.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 81-2

247. LETTER TO HANUMANPRASAD PODDAR

April 8, 1932

1 and 2. We must believe in God if we believe in ourselves. If living beings have existence God is the sum total of all life and this in my view is the strongest proof.

3. The denial of God is injurious in the same way as denial of ourselves. That is to say, to deny God is like committing suicide. The fact remains that it is one thing to believe in God and quite another to realize God emotionally and act accordingly. Truly, no one in the world is an atheist; atheism is merely a pose.

4. One can realize God only by ridding oneself totally of attachment, aversion, etc., and in no other way. I hold that one who claims to have realized God has not truly done so. Realization can be experienced, but is beyond description. Of this I have no doubt.

5. I can live only by having faith in God. My definition of God must always be kept in mind. For me there is no other God than Truth; Truth is God.

[From Hindi]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 82
248. A LETTER

April 9, 1932

CHI.,

Gods signify those who do good and demons those who do evil. There can be no peace between good and evil. Hence there is no question of partiality in this matter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9019. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

249. A LETTER

April 9, 1932

CHI.,

We should not pay attention to the stories of miracles in the life of Mirabai. I also don’t believe that they occurred in that very manner. What we have to remember is the holiness of her character. . . .

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9025. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

250. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

April 9, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

If we treat an enemy as a friend, he will certainly come ultimately to trust us.

People who are ill, feel tempted to eat all kinds of things. If one does not succumb to such temptations, one would get all right sooner. Your weight will increase slowly.

If you pay sufficient attention, you will surely be able to understand the Gita.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4082. Also C.W. 46. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

1 The rest of the letter is not available.
251. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

April 9, 1932

CHI. MANU,

Your letter was well written. The handwriting ought to improve. How did you fall ill? I hope you are completely all right now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7426. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

252. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

April 9, 1932

CHIL.

People worship the sacred tulsi because the plant is believed to possess certain virtues. One should be angry with anger itself. Because the other person forgets himself or herself, why should we do the same? Grown-up people also do wrong in getting angry. Even when they become angry, one should cling to what one [believes] to be the truth. Did you get the letter which your elder brother wrote to you?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9470. Also C.W. 9018. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

253. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI M. PATEL

April 9, 1932

CHI. RAOJIBHAI,

This is only to acknowledge your letter. Anybody who attempts to do something which is beyond his capacity lacks wisdom. He deserves compliments who does his duty to the best of his ability. Really speaking, a person need not be complimented for his devotion

1 Addressee’s name is supplied from the S.N. Register.
2 From the C.W. copy
3 Mahadev Desai
to duty, but when most people disown their obligations, the few who discharge theirs deserve compliments.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8995. Also C.W. 9014. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

254. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

April 9, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

God doesn’t come from anywhere or go away anywhere. He simply exists for ever. I see nothing wrong in playing cards during one’s free time. But I would not encourage anybody to do so.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9424. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

255. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

April 9, 1932

CHI. JAMNALAL,

All of us had been eagerly awaiting a letter from you. It was a full one. I am very happy that the food in this jail has agreed with you. I had heard about Janakibehn and Kamalnayan. If Vinoba has not taken a vow to the contrary, I think it is necessary that he should drink milk. Even in that jail he seems to have adopted a strenuous programme. In order to be able to keep it up, I think he should drink milk. I am convinced that there must be some vegetable food which has the beneficial properties of milk but is free from its noxious one. But those vaids who are sufficiently well-read in their science to be able to discover it have never thought about the possibility of there being such a food and the task is beyond the capacity of laymen like us. Or perhaps we can discover it, if we give all our attention to this one problem. It is my firm conviction that it would be improper for any of us to do so. It is therefore our duty to cling to the task which has fallen to our lot unsought. I cannot help thinking that it is not proper for Vinoba to let his weight fall so low.
A fine group seems to have formed there with you. I envy you your ‘C’ class. I had felt very happy when I heard that you were placed in that class. I did not at all feel afraid that it might affect your health. I have never doubted your ability to safeguard your own health and that of your companions. Had you not been placed in ‘C’ class, you would never have got the experience you are now getting. Tell Pyarelal that, as I have fully replied¹ to the letter which Kusum wrote at his instance, I don’t dictate anything here. He will probably get that reply before you get this letter. Let me know if he does not. All three of us are very well. For the past two months, my diet has been bread, almonds, dates, one vegetable and a sour lime. This keeps me all right. I never feel the need for a laxative or an enema. I am engaged at present in writing the history of the Ashram. Writing letters takes up a good deal of my time. In this small circle, we talk about you several times daily. Convey our regards to all. Write to me whenever you can.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2897

256. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

April 9, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

It is possible even to win a kingdom by truth, which means that there is nothing that cannot be attained with the help of truth. But this does not mean that one should make such an attempt. To do so would be tantamount to putting God to test. He who worships God would covet no kingdom. For him kingdom consists in following the path of truth. I love all languages. The meaning of yajna has been continually expanding. Gujarati women’s dress is quite good. It requires two changes: an underwear, and a shirt in place of the blouse.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9949. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

¹Vide “Letter to Kusum Desai”, 8-4-1932
257. A LETTER

April 10, 1932

CHL.

It depends on the nature of the vow. Someone may take a vow of spinning for a certain number of hours, and another person may take a vow of spinning a certain number of rounds. Some others may take a vow in regard to both, that is, to spin a minimum number of rounds and for a minimum number of hours. One must fulfil in letter and spirit the vow which one has taken.

Our emotions and desires are sometimes ruled by God and sometimes by Satan. We are tossed between them and that is why our emotions and desires are constantly changing.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9017. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

258. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

April 10, 1932

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

You should drink through the nostrils every day tepid water in which soda and salt have been dissolved. The nasal passage, then, will not get blocked. This is a useful habit to form.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 13

259. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

April 10, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

What you say about the Vidyapith library is correct.

That one should not speak anything to cause pain to a person does not mean that one should not speak anything which might pain him. Though the speaker did not wish to cause pain, it is possible that the other person will feel hurt. When a father tells his son not to drink bhang, he does not wish to cause him pain but the latter [being addicted to bhang], feels hurt. Nevertheless, it was the father’s duty to forbid the son to drink bhang.

Mahadev did not follow what I said\(^1\) about “Narayanrao”. What is the origin of the name “Hasude”?

Blessings from

BAPU

> From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 225. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

---

260. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

April 10, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I hope to get in the next letter a short report of your programme of work during the National Week\(^2\). We here have not been able to do anything besides fasting and spinning a little more than on other days. You still make mistakes in spelling words. See that such mistakes do not occur. You should learn from my deficiencies. We have had that Jodani Kosh prepared in a hurry for people like you.

If you really keep awake during prayers, you have certainly advanced one step.

Mother Gita has already answered the question, ‘What makes us commit sin?’ Desire and anger do that. All of you will be able to see this truth if you recollect your own actions of this type in the past. Think and verify the truth of this. The Students’ Union is not independent to the extent that it functions subject to the Ashram rules. The freedom of all such associations is limited to some extent. The Students’ Union is of course free in its own field.

If I liked any manual work worth the name in my student days, I may perhaps say that I liked book-binding and carpentry. There are so many crafts and industries relating to spinning alone that the question of selecting some other work in addition does not arise. In order to have a full knowledge of the science of spinning, one must have some knowledge of each of the following: agriculture, chemistry,

---

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Narayan Desai”, 11-3-1932

\(^2\) Celebrated from April 6 to 13 since the starting of the satyagraha movement in 1919 dyeing, painting, carpentry, smithy, weaving, knitting, sewing, carding, ginning, laundry work, history of the industries of the different countries, engraving, Arithmetic, geometry, etc. Think for yourselves and see whether a general knowledge of the subjects just mentioned is or is not essential for [proficiency in the] science of spinning. I have enumerated here only the arts and the crafts which I could remember. If you sit together and discuss, you will find some more to add to the list. Let me know if you can think of more. I hope that you will preserve my list at least.

We worship Krishna the perfect avatar of God and not the Krishna who is supposed to have done so many bad things. That is, we worship not the historical Krishna but Krishna, the Prince of Yogis, who served to Arjuna the nectar of the Gita.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 9020. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

261. _LETTER TO MANU GANDHI_
_April 10, 1932_

_CHI. MANUDI,_

I am happy that you write to me. You should give up fear of Harilal and forget him altogether. Bali is a brave woman. Her slapping [your father]¹ was not an act of violence, but showed her deep love. You must have received the letter² which I wrote to you last week. I explained everything in it, and so I don’t write anything more today. What is your weight now? If you have not written any letter to Ba, you should write one. She will surely expect a letter from you.

Do you pray daily? Do you sing _bhajans_? If you have not been doing either, start doing both.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1512. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

¹ From _The Diary of Mahadev Desai_, “Guide to London”
² Vide “Letter to Manu Gandhi”, 4-4-1932
262. LETTER TO VIMALCHANDRA V. DESAI

April 10, 1932

CHI. NANU,

You have written a very good letter. But you should write figures so carefully that they look like printed ones. If you are really eager to learn the primer, Premabehn will teach you. Form the habit of doing very well whatever you do.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5755. Courtesy: Vilji G. Desai

263. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

April 10, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

The slivers given by Mirabehn are still not exhausted. Moreover, Mahadev has begun carding from the 5th and I also get a share from the slivers which he makes. I discontinued the massage during my last imprisonment. However, Mahadev rubs ghee on the soles of my feet.

I shall write on the subject of teachers if I can. It is through love and not through fear that a child can be made to give up habits like stealing things. Scolding a child has little effect.

The difference between flattery and pure service is [as great] as that between falsehood and truth.

In regard to other things which one should avoid doing, fear of social criticism has a legitimate place. We need not fear it but we should not disregard it either.

Morality is both absolute and relative.

No harm may result from chemistry itself but its misuse will certainly do harm. It is being misused very much.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7493. Also C.W. 4970. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra
264. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

April 10, 1932

CHI. BRIJKISAN,

I have your letter. You did well in giving me detailed news of yourself. I consider you lucky to have Dr. [M.A. Ansari]¹ and others as companions. Convey to them salaam and vandemataram from all the three of us. I hope the Doctor has a new set of teeth by now. Your letter of the 3rd instant did not reach me.

Of course you have my blessings for your thirty-third birthday. One-third of your life-span is gone by. We must hope that you avail yourself fully of the two-thirds left and that you may be granted all means of service. As you have the right aspirations I am sure that you will gradually develop the necessary strength of character and other qualities.

Continue writing. I do get news about Devdas but there has been no recent news about Krishnan Nair. I have been keeping excellent health, so have Sardar Vallabh bhai and Mahadev. I have given up milk for the last two months and take almonds instead. I take bread, one vegetable and lemons since giving up milk and seem to be thriving so far. The weight is the same, i.e., 106 lb., as when I entered the jail. The Gita Shabdanukrama was finished last year. At present I am writing the history of the Ashram. I read a little and of course spin.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2391

¹ The addressee was, at this time, incarcerated along with Dr. Ansari in the Delhi jail. He was transferred to Multan jail on April 11.
265. TELEGRAM TO KAMALA NEHRU

April 11, 1932

ANAND BHAWAN
ALLAHABAD

DISTRESSED LEARN MOTHER SUSTAINED INJURY AT PUBLIC MEETING\(^2\) AND RANJIT\(^3\) LAID UP FEVER. HOPE NOTHING SERIOUS. PLEASE WIRE FULL PARTICULARS.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. I, p. 127; also The Bombay Chronicle, 18-4-1932

266. WATCHING THE HEAVENS—I

A lover of truth feels undiminished joy till the end of his life. He never regards himself as too old to keep on striving for a vision of the God of Truth. He who undertakes every activity in order to see God, also called Truth, who sees Truth in everything [that exists] will not find old age an obstacle [in his quest]. So far as that quest is concerned, the seeker regards himself as immortal and for ever young.

I, for one, have been in this beautiful state of mind for years. I have never felt old age as an obstacle to devoting myself to learning anything which I believed would take me nearer to the God of Truth. A recent example of this is my desire for a study of the heavens. Deep in my heart, I had felt often enough the desire to know something about the stars, but I had assumed that the numerous activities which claimed my attention did not permit me to satisfy it. Maybe my belief was wrong, but so long as I did not myself see the error in it it could not but prevent me from making the necessary effort. I think most probably I myself had prompted Shankerlal, during our

\(^{1}\) Wife of Jawaharlal Nehru
\(^{2}\) At Allahabad during the National Week celebrations; Swaruprani Nehru, addressee’s mother-in-law, was injured when police made a lathi charge.
\(^{3}\) Ranjit S. Pandit, addressee’s brother-in-law
\(^{4}\) This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”; vide the following item.
imprisonment in 1922 [to take up this study]. Books on the subject were received. Shankerlal picked up enough knowledge to satisfy him. I could find no time!

In 1930-31, I had the good fortune to enjoy Kakasaheb’s company [in jail]. He was well versed in this subject. But I did not avail myself of the opportunity, for my desire was not strong enough then. In 1931, I was filled with sudden enthusiasm during the last month of my stay in jail. Why should I not give time to watch that which, to the outward eye, instantaneously reveals the presence of God? How pathetic that one should see like an animal merely with the physical eye without the grand sight penetrating to the sensory nerves behind? How could I let go this fine opportunity to watch the great divine _lila_? I am now quenching the thirst which was awakened then for a knowledge of the heavens, and I have progressed so far that I cannot restrain myself from sharing with inmates of the Ashram the thoughts which fill my mind.

We are taught right from our childhood that our bodies are made of the five great elements—earth, water, _akash_, light and air. We ought to know something about them, but in fact we know very little. At the moment we are concerned with _akash_.

_Aakash_ means space. If there were no space in our bodies, we would not be able to live even for a moment. This is true about the universe too. Our earth is surrounded by infinite space. The blue which we see extending over us in all directions is _akash_. The earth has poles. It is a solid sphere, and its axis is 7,900 miles long. But the _akash_ is empty space. If we imagine this space to have an axis, we shall have to imagine it to be of infinite length. In this infinite space, the earth is like a mere particle of sand, and on this particle of sand each one of us is a particle, of such infinitesimal size that it is impossible to explain how small it is. There is, therefore, no exaggeration at all in saying that, as bodies, we are mere ciphers. Our body, as compared with the size of the earth, is a thousand times more insignificant than an ant’s is as compared with ours. Why, then, should we feel attached to it? Why should we grieve when a body perishes?

However, though in itself the human body is insignificant, it has indeed great value, for it is the house of the _atman_, in truth of the _Paramatman_, of the God of Truth, if we but realize it.

---

1 Play, sport
If this thought sinks deep into our heart, we would never want to make it an instrument of enjoying gross pleasures. And if we fill our imagination with the heavens and, realizing the meaning of their vastness, understand our utter insignificance, all our pride would vanish. If the countless shining divinities in the sky did not exist, we would not have come into existence. Inspite of the many discoveries of astronomers, our knowledge about the sky is practically nil. What little we know tells us beyond the shadow of a doubt that if the sun-god rested even for a day from his ever ceaseless tapascharya, we would perish. Likewise, if the moon stopped raining down her cool rays, we would meet with the same fate. And we can also infer that the countless stars which we see in the sky at night have some role in maintaining this world in existence. Thus, we are most intimately connected with every living creature in the world and with everything that exists; everything depends for its existence on everything else. Hence we ought to try and know something about our benefactors the shining divinities gliding in the sky.

There is one more reason why we ought to do this. We have a saying among us: “The hills look beautiful from a distance.” There is much truth in this saying. The sun, which keeps us alive from a distance, would instantly burn us to ashes if we went near it. This is also true about the other heavenly bodies. Since we know both the beneficial and the harmful properties of the things which surround us on this earth, we may sometimes feel aversion to them and even feel ourselves polluted by physical contact with some of them. Of the divinities in the sky, however, we know only the merits. Hence we never tire of watching them. Knowledge about them can never harm us. Moreover, as we meditate on these divinities, we can raise our imagination with ennobling ideas as high as we wish.

There is no doubt at all that every obstacle which we place between ourselves and the sky harms us physically, mentally and spiritually. If we lived in a natural state, we would live under the sky for all the twenty-four hours of the day. If we cannot do that, we should spend in the open as many hours as we can. We can watch the heavens, i.e., the stars, only at night, and we can do that best lying on our backs. Hence, anybody who wishes to derive the utmost profit from the observation of the stars should sleep in the open directly under the sky. If there are tall buildings or trees near the place where one is sleeping, they will obstruct the view.
Both children and grown-ups love dramas and the spectacular scenes which they present. But no drama composed or acted by human beings can even equal the great spectacle which Nature has arranged for us on the stage of the sky. Moreover, in a theatre we may harm our eyes, breathe unclean air and also run a great risk of our moral sense being weakened. On the other hand, this drama arranged by Nature can do us nothing but good. Watching the stars soothes the eyes; to watch the stars, one must remain outdoors, and this gives fresh air to the lungs; and we have heard of no instance so far of harm having been done to moral character by watching the stars. The more we meditate on this miracle of God, the more we grow spiritually. Anybody who is afflicted by impure thoughts and gets dreams in his sleep should try to sleep in the open and let himself be absorbed in watching the stars. He will soon fall into dreamless sleep. When we are totally absorbed in the grand spectacle in the heavens, we seem to hear those shining bodies in their utter silence, singing the praise of God.

Let him, who has eyes to see, watch the ever-changing patterns of this eternal dance. Let him, who has ears to hear, listen to the silent music of these countless gandharvas.

Let us now try to learn something about these stars, or rather let me share with all co-workers what little knowledge I have picked up. The better method, of course, would be to learn something about the earth before proceeding to observation of the stars. It is quite likely that the boys and girls in the Ashram who have had the benefit of Kakasaheb’s company already know the facts which I am going to describe. I should be happy if that is so. I am writing this for all inmates of the Ashram, children and grown-ups, old and new. Those to whom the subject is interesting will find the study quite easy.

The right time for the study of the sky is immediately after prayer. We need not give it more than twenty minutes at a time. Those who understand the true meaning of this study will regard it as a part of the prayer. Those of the inmates who sleep in the open may spend as much time as they wish, when they are alone, in watching the stars. As they become absorbed in the scene, they will soon fall asleep. If they wake up during the night, they may spend some more time in looking at the sky. Since the sky seems to be moving all the time, the scene keeps changing from second to second.

If we look at the sky at 8 p.m. in the west, we shall see a grand figure.
This figure will be in the west. I see it directly opposite me as I lie on my back with my head in the east. No one who sees the figure from this position will ever forget it afterwards. Since this is the bright half of the month, this and other constellations shine with a rather pale light, but even then this particular constellation is so bright that even a novice like me can spot it easily. I shall refer next time to the beliefs which people formerly held about this group both in our country and in the West. Just now, I shall only tell you that from the description of the position of this constellation in the Vedas, Tilak Maharaj was able to ascertain the date of the Vedas. We have in the Ashram library, a copy of the treatise by the late Shri Dikshit which gives plenty of information on this subject. My job is only to arouse interest in this direction. Once that is done, I myself shall learn more about the subject from the inmates of the Ashram. For me, these constellations have become a means of communion with God. May they be so for the inmates of the Ashram too.

“Live as you like,
But realize Hari somehow, anyhow.”

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8218. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

267. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 11, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. I am certainly happy that nobody comes to see me. My chief reason is that such visits mean unnecessary expenditure. It makes no difference who spends the money. When a visit cannot be avoided, of course we don’t mind. In such circumstances we may go even to Ceylon. Having said this, let me add that those to whom this view does not appeal need not act on it. I certainly cannot measure the strength of feelings of those who are outside.
I am sure Tilakam will not go to Malabar. He will have to be sent somewhere else. If we can send him to Bombay, the arrangement is worth trying. Sometimes it happens that Bombay suits persons whom Ahmedabad does not suit. The air in Bombay is certainly like what it is in Malabar. We know that it suited Jamna. Write to Manilal (Revashankerbhai’s) and ask his view, or to Damodardas, if you approve of my suggestion. I hope Manu has completely recovered now. If Amtul doesn’t have enough money, I think we should provide her the fare and other expenses.

I understand what you say about the Vidyapith library. Do only what seems best to all of you.

It is now two months since I gave up milk. I have observed no ill effects of the step. The weight is maintained, more or less. The strength also has remained unaffected. I am, therefore, continuing the experiment. As I have explained in a previous letter, I am gradually coming to the conclusion that people who do not lead a very strenuous life and who can sleep and rest regularly, can do without milk. In other words, milk is necessary only for a life of rajasik activities.

I do realize Hariyomal’s worth. See that he does not ruin his health through his obstinacy. All of us know what Krishnamaiyadevi is, but we should tolerate her faults as we do the faults of a member of our family, should indeed go a little further than we would in the case of our own family members. When you feel that the limit is reached, you may stop sending money. I cannot say anything more than this from here.

You may give the permission asked for, for translating Anasaktiyoga into Malayalam. I gather from your letter that Harihar Sharma is not in the Ashram at present. My impression is that he is with Rajagopalachari.

What you say about Mathuradas is correct.

I have not received Jethalal’s report from Anantpur. Nor have I had any letter from him. If Harilal comes to the Ashram, I think he should be permitted to stay there only on condition that now he gives up drinking. You should now consider how long Padma may stay on in Almora. Ascertain her own view and also that of Sita Sahai’s in the matter.
I think I have discussed sufficiently often in the past how people should act if a tiger makes its appearance in the Ashram. Let them follow what they remember and what they have imbibed in their lives from all that I have said.

I have sent from here directly, through Chintamani Shastri, a letter of condolence about [the death of] Vishnu Kane of Sasvane. Censor all letters. Raojibhai’s letter should not have been passed. I know that this will increase the burden on you. But it is necessary [to do what I have suggested] in order to satisfy that by which we are always guided.

Blessings from
BAPU

Enclosure:

An English letter for Hume.
An article on “Watching the Heavens—I”¹
From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I

268. LETTER TO HIRALAL SHAH

April 12, 1932

BHAISHRI HIRALAL,

I got your books and your letter full of love. I got them late by a week because Dahyabhai had forgotten to send them immediately. The books will be useful to me, and your letter and notes will enhance their usefulness. But I am not as ambitious as you seem to think I am. I only wish to acquire sufficient general knowledge to be able to see God in the heavens more clearly. Please send me a small book on astronomy which you think will suit my purpose. I will take proper care of your books. I have observed the care with which you have used them. Generally I hesitate to borrow such books from friends for fear that they may be lost or damaged.

I cannot praise your industry and your neatness too much. But don’t you think that your claim to have discovered a master-key may be a little exaggerated?² What is that key? Do you have convincing reasons for believing that it is a key, and a master-key at that? Are those reasons accepted as convincing by experts? What benefits do you promise from your discovery? May it not be that there is the same drawback here as in the case of the spinning-wheel, namely, that there is no master-key at all? I am certainly ready to be convinced by you and will weigh your arguments objectively. But I should like you to cultivate the humility which would befit a dedicated seeker after truth. I know that it cannot be cultivated consciously. But it lies behind every genuine discovery. The man who has discovered some new truth remains doubtful about his discovery inspite of the immense evidence he may have in favour of his hypothesis. The result is that, when ultimately he does put his discovery before the world, he has realized its truth with absolute conviction. The people are astounded and believe him. There is authority, there is irresistible power, in his words. The world is immediately convinced by them. It is simply awed by the proofs he adduces in support of his hypothesis, for he has examined it from every possible point of view. If this is so about your discovery too, I should have nothing to say in the matter. In that case, all honour to you. It is my wish that it may be so.

¹Vide the preceding item.
²In The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, Mahadev Desai explains: “Hiralal Shah wrote to Bapu that he had found the master-key of interpretation in certain subjects.”

All of us, that is, all three, are quite well. Please tell Shankar on my behalf that he should not endanger his health, and ask him to write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 93-4

269. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 12, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. I have noted that the batch of visitors will arrive here on Thursday. Send a cable to America and explain that as a matter of policy the Ashram does not claim exclusive rights [in its publications] or grant them to others. Ask them to write and give details, so that we may think carefully about the request.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

It was indeed a deliverance for poor Mani. I felt happy on reading the news.
I shall be eager to know the results of the non-stop spinning competition. Drop a separate postcard to give me the information.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8219. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

270. LETTER TO SHANTILAL MEHTA

April 12, 1932

CHI. SHANTI,

I got your second letter. Whatever you do, do it patiently. It would be good if you educate your wife a little. I expect that Manilal will come in May. He has taken more time than he had thought he would require in winding up his affairs. Be careful in your expenses. You should either educate your wife yourself or take Jamnadas’s advice for making some other arrangement for her education.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII

271. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

April 12, 1932

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I got your letter just when I had been thinking of you and wondering why there was no letter from you. I gather from it that your health is all right. I did get in course of time the letter which you wrote to me from England, and I have the impression that I also replied to it. I am not aware that I always keep my hand under the head when sleeping. It is possible that the hand got under the head sometimes. I was careful in the matter after I got your letter and remained vigilant. I can say, therefore, that I have never kept the hand in that position since then. However, that seems to have had no effect on the condition of the hand. No one has yet been able to make out the cause of this weakness. As a precaution I even gave up writing with the right hand. But afterwards the doctors also came to the conclusion that the pain was not caused by writer’s cramp. If your massaging the hand is likely to cure the pain, I can certainly secure the necessary permission. However, if you explain to me the exact manner of doing the massage, I would do it myself or ask Mahadev to do it. But the fact is that the condition is not worth worrying about at all. Nor is the pain continuous. It occurs only when I use the hand to do certain things. The surgeon here was of the opinion that the pain was a sign of old age and that, therefore, no cure was possible. Certain weaknesses generally appear in old age, since we do not exercise sufficient self-control in our earlier life. This weakness may be one such, and there is no reason for sorrow or wonder if it is so. Hence, apart from taking necessary precautions, I do not worry about the matter. We have now a new doctor here, who believes that the pain can be cured. Let me see what he can do.

I hope both of you enjoy peace of mind. We three are happy. You must of course have met Andrews.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7548. Also C.W. 5023. Courtesy: Tehmina Kambhatta

272. LETTER TO R. V. MARTIN

April 13, 1932

DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

It was on the 6th of March that I wrote to Major Bhandari\(^1\) about interviews with non-political associates. I sent a reminder\(^2\) on the 30th of March, but I am still without a reply. It is high time that I got a reply about the illustrative list I have already submitted. It causes me much inconvenience and some anxiety not to be able to see some of the friends I should like to see and who would like to see me.

The Government have been good enough to appreciate my desire to write to my prison-associates about their welfare. In virtue of the permission, I have been writing to some of them, but from Belgaum I can get no answer. I have written to Shrimati Manibehn Patel. She is Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel’s daughter, but she has been under the Ashram discipline for over ten years. I knew from the letter that was received some time ago by her father that she had been

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to M. G. Bhandari”, 6-3-1932 & “Letter to M. G. Bhandari”, 30-3-1932
\(^2\) ibid
ailing. I therefore wrote to her asking her to tell me all about her health, but I can get no answer. Then there is Kaka Kalelkar whom you know well and who as you are aware has suffered from tuberculosis and requires special care. I have written to him also and can get no reply. The third is Prabudas Gandhi, a nearly related cousin of mine, brought up under me as an infant whilst I was in South Africa. He is suffering from the same disease as Kaka Kalelkar and has been under special treatment. And there is Sjt. Narahari Parikh, a member of the Ashram, an old associate. He is also in the Belgaum prison. I inquired about these last two of Kakasaheb Kalelkar, but can get no information. Will you please get the necessary information about their health and diet and weight? Absence of any news about them is a cause of considerable anxiety to me.

I shall be obliged if you will kindly ascertain for me whether the telegram I handed to Major Bhandari addressed to Allahabad making inquiries about the injuries sustained by Mrs. Motilal Nehru and illness of her son-in-law Sjt. Ranjit Pandit was duly sent. I may mention that my relations with the Nehrus are more private and intimate than political, and naturally I am deeply interested in the health and general welfare of the members of the Nehru family.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

273. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

April 13, 1932

MY DEAR CHILD,

I am always glad when I hear from you. Your letter is interesting and revealing. You are still fretting somewhat. That you should get over. If we have trust in God, we should not worry even as we would not when we have a trustworthy doorkeeper or guard. And who can be a better doorkeeper or guard than God the never-failing. It is not enough that we sing about such things or have a mere intellectual grasp. It is necessary to feel the thing within. Feeling is exactly like feeling pain or pleasure. It admits of or needs no argument. Who can argue us out of our experience? I write this because I want you to be absolutely free from all care and anxiety.

1 To Kamala Nehru; vide "Letter to Kamala Nehru", 11-4-1932

The idea of giving the children dolls of different races was very good. What is the name of the Hindi girl and what is her province
Did I tell you that Mahadev was with me?
Kisses to the children.
Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: No. 109. Courtesy: National Archives of India. Also My Dear Child, pp. 89-90

274. LETTER TO SHANKARAO DEO

April 15, 1932

BHAI.

I thought at length over your problem, considered it at night too and we three discussed it together. The conclusion, in our firm opinion, is that your conception of dharma is in fact adharma. During satyagraha, no satyagrahi can take any vow at all connected with it without obtaining the sanction of the President. Your interpretation of your vow is a gross distortion. The vow of madhukari has no place in the jail. You have no right at present to judge whether or not you will have any sense of shame in going out for madukari after the release. To envisage now the state of your mind upon leaving the jail would be to claim the role of God Almighty. All three of us hold that your duty lies in accepting the food provided for ‘C’ class prisoners in the spirit of an offering to God. The duty of a sannyasi indicates the same.

Now, as regards clothes, the insistence upon wearing khadi only while in jail is in no way proper. In this matter the duty of every satyagrahi prisoner is to refrain from insisting on wearing khadi until the Congress takes a decision in this. This does not in any way affect your vow of self-sufficiency. I appeal to you to give up the fast, acknowledge your mistake and start eating. It would be beneficial to remain on milk or fruit for a day or two because of the fast. I am writing this from the medical point of view only. I hope you will

1 Addressee’s name is supplied from “Diary, 1932”. Mahadev Desai explains: “The addressee was under a vow of self-sufficiency in cloth, so that he wore only clothes spun by himself, and secondly he had vowed to live on food obtained by madhukari (begging from a number of houses), and if that was not available, on milk and fruit.” (The Diary of Mahadev Desai) follow our unprejudiced advice.¹

[From Hindi]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 98

275. LETTER TO M. G. BHANDARI
April 15, 1932

DEAR MR. BHANDARI,

I would like the accompanying letter² to be delivered to . . .³ at once, if you approve of the contents. They are nothing but re-exhortation to break his fast and take ordinary food.

Yours sincerely,
M. K.GANDHI

[PS.]

If . . .⁴ accepts the advice tendered in my letter to him and breaks the fast, I hope you will issue him milk for one or two days, for it is my experience as a fasting expert that the breaking of fasts on solid food often results in great harm to the body.

M. K. GANDHI

276. LETTER TO KHAGENDRA PRIYA BARUANI
April 15, 1932

DEAR FRIEND.

I thank you for the khadi piece you have sent me. There is no letter accompanying it. Please give me the history of the piece.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SJ.T. KHAGENDRA PRIYA BARUANI
NOWGONG
ASSAM

From a photostat: C.W. 9551

¹ The addressee gave up the fast on Gandhiji’s advice.
² Vide the preceding item.
³ The name is omitted in the source; but it is evident from the contents of the letter that the reference is to Shankarrao Deo.
⁴ ibid
277. A LETTER

April 16, 1932

MY DEAR,

If almond paste agrees with you, by all means take it. But you must give a fair trial to cod-liver oil. I have heard that it has a nasty taste, but you must cover the taste or take it as we take water without bringing the cup to the lips, so that it goes down the throat without touching the palate.

Love.

BAPU

C.W. 9026. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

278. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

April 17, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

To ensure our spiritual welfare, we should scrupulously follow truth. Since we are caught in the workings of Nature, we cannot escape her effects. It is our duty to fight against evil effects. I don’t think there is any truth in the belief that the direction in which we keep our head when sleeping has an effect on us. During the National Week, I spun twice as much as at other times. Mahadev also spun for yajna during the Week twice as much as he does normally. And, of course, we also fasted. All of you did much more than that. God ceaselessly employs satyagraha against us, for He does not tolerate untruth in us even for an instant. God means Truth. His satyagraha, therefore, cannot but be perfect. Is not this clear?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9909. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

236

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
279. A LETTER

April 17, 1932

CHL,

We live in the Ashram in order to overcome all fears. We follow truth for its own sake, not out of fear of anybody. Those who have been suppressed by society should courageously break their bonds. This is the purpose for which the Ashram exists. I wish that the women should understand this clearly and avail themselves of the opportunity [which they have got].

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9032. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

280. A LETTER

April 17, 1932

CHL,

We are not concerned with when the earth came into existence, what was the first living creature on it and when it came into being. That is God’s business. We should know our dharma and that should be enough.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9036. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

281. A LETTER

April 17, 1932

BHAI,

Nobody should grieve over Mani’s death. For her it was actually a release from terrible suffering. Nor should you repent for having decided to get her operated. Do write her reminiscences. You should all cultivate her virtues in yourselves. If you do that, she will be still alive. Truly speaking, however, the soul never dies. The body which the soul inhabits perishes. That happens to all of us, to some of us sooner than to others.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9043. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
282. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

April 17, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

You should discover the source of the Chandrabhaga by all of you going for a walk up her bed. It is not at all far. Only the name is big. All of you have seen her mouth. When you walk towards the source, you should also observe the things which you come across on the banks.

We do not spin for money. We should spin, and with careful attention, because spinning is the only work which millions can do. As we spin, one of us will be able to invent a really good spinning-wheel. Even if nobody does that, we shall be able to discover many other improvements.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4083. Also C.W. 47. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

283. LETTER TO NARAYAN DESAI

April 17, 1932

CHI. BABLO,

Because you signed yourself as Narayan, I added “rao”. Now you say that you would like to be addressed as ‘Narayan Desai’. What is wrong with ‘Bablo’ then? I will call you ‘Desai’ after you have invented a prize-winning spinning-wheel. The first Desais were called so in virtue of the posts which they held. How good it would be if you also become a Desai by rendering some great service! There is no fun for a son to be called a Desai because his father was called that. Would it not be better to cling to the name given to one in childhood?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9478

Vide “Letter to Narayan Desai”, 11-3-1932

238 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
284. LETTER TO PRITHURAJ L. ASAR

April 17, 1932

CHI. PRITHURAJ,

I am addressing this letter c/o the Ashram, as you have not mentioned your address. In your excellent letter you say nothing about the hand.

It is not true that the same person cannot be self-reliant and also owe something to his parents. Just as one inherits certain physical qualities from one’s parents, so also one may inherit from them wealth and prestige too. It would be false pride to reject them. A good son’s duty is to make good use of them and add to them. In this way, one should see that one’s own efforts carry forward what the parents had achieved.

We should listen to everybody’s advice, but do only what our conscience tells us. And in order that our conscience may speak, we should observe the yama-niyamas. Everybody cannot hear the inner voice. We need divine ears to hear it.

Your handwriting shows considerable improvement, but it has not yet become sufficiently well formed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12187-a. Also C.W. 9045. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

285. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI M. PATEL

April 17, 1932

CHI. RAOJIBHAI,

Your letters are interesting, but they cross the limits. After all, we hold ourselves answerable to the Emperor of emperors, the God of Truth. I trust all of you and, therefore, never wish to ask you for a report of your work. I shall be satisfied if I get news about how you are. This is not meant as criticism. I only wish to draw your attention to this, so that you may be careful, and to reassure you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8996. Also C.W. 9040. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 Rules and regulations of conduct for a spiritual aspirant
2 As they strayed into politics
286. A LETTER

April 17, 1932

CHL,

I don’t know when the evil of untouchability entered [Hinduism]. When there were no cars or other vehicles, people went on foot. Gangabehn and other women are all right. For infants milk would be the best food. I don’t ‘remember which play I liked especially. But it is true that I loved seeing dramas.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 9046. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

287. WATCHING THE HEAVENS-II

April 18, 1932

There are many fanciful stories about the cluster of stars of which I drew a figure last time.¹ No figure of this cluster shows all the stars in it. Actually, there are many more stars than you will see in any such figure. Hence the best thing is for everybody to make his or her own drawing and show by dots as many stars as can be seen with the naked eye. If we follow this practice, we shall learn to recognize the different constellations much more quickly. Moreover, the drawings which we ourselves make will be much better for our purpose than those we find in books, for, when the stars are observed from different places there are bound to be differences in the drawings which represent them. It would be advisable for everybody to observe the stars from a fixed place and at a fixed time. This suggestion is meant for those who wish to make drawings or who are beginners. After we have become familiar with the different constellations, we shall be able to recognize these heavenly friends of ours, or these divinities, from wherever we observe them.

The Hindu, a daily of Madras, publishes a weekly, as does The Times of Bombay. Both of them give maps of the sky showing the constellations visible during each month. The Hindu gives such a map in its issue of the first week and The Times gives it in its issue of the second week. If you can get either of these maps, you will learn much from it. The hundredth number of Kumar is due to be published. Shri Hiralal Shah has contributed some articles on this subject for that number. He seems to have made a deep study of the subject. Everybody who is curious may read those articles. Having read those articles, I don’t feel inclined to write much here. I will only explain a little more clearly my point of view in studying the sky. If I attempt more, I shall not be able to write on other subjects along with my weekly letters. I may, however, write something occasionally, or in reply to somebody’s question.

¹ This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, vide the following item.
² Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 11-4-1932

The constellation of which I drew a figure is known among us as Mriga or Mrigashirsha. One of the months got its name, Margashirsha—Magshar—from this. The months in our calendar got their names from the respective constellations. In the West, the Mriga is known as “Orion”. The constellation is imagined to be a hunter. To its east, there are two very bright stars in a straight line. They are imagined to be the hunter’s dogs. The star in the west is the bigger dog and the one to the north is the smaller dog. The cluster of stars which we see to its east and south, below the star which forms the fourth angle of the figure, is imagined to be a hare. The dogs are running towards it. The three stars in the middle are the jewels in the hunter’s waist-band.

Those stars have also been shown as representing the following figures: The bigger of the two dogs is called Lubdhak among us, and those three stars represent the deer’s stomach. The stars to the south represent the arrow shot by Lubdhak. The three stars to the north outside the rectangle represent the deer’s head. These may be beautiful fancies. A great deal has been written about their origin, but personally I have read very little of all this.

There is, of course, no such figure in the sky. Nor are the stars as near to us as they seem. They are not what they look, but are suns far bigger than our sun. Being millions and millions of miles away from us, they twinkle in the sky as mere points. Our knowledge about these suns is very little. But these dusters of stars serve the most illiterate as their friends. If one looks at them even for a second, one would forget all one’s misery and burst forth into praise of God’s supreme greatness. One would realize that the stars were God’s messengers and kept watch and guarded us every night and consoled us in our suffering. This is the real truth. That they are suns and that they are very far from us are mere intellectual conceptions. Their service to us in filling us with an awareness of God is the real truth for us. From a scientific point of view, we may know a good many properties of water, but may not make any use of our knowledge. The knowledge that it is something with which we can quench our thirst and keep our bodies clean, and its use for such purposes, are very important for us and this knowledge of the utility of water is for us the truth about it, even if, in real fact, it is a substance with other properties and uses too. And the same is true about the stars. They serve us in many ways. I have drawn attention to what seems to me their chief function and suggested that one should fix one’s mind on that and benefit from their message. This is what people seem to have always done from the oldest times. In the course of time, however, all kinds of other stories spread and the various myths concerning the stars arose. We may certainly read all this in order to make the study more interesting, but we should not lose sight of the primary benefit which I have suggested.

Let us now turn our attention to two other groups to the north of Mriga.

The bigger group is known as the Saptarshi\(^1\), and the smaller one is called Dhruvamatsya\(^2\). I have shown seven stars in each group, but there are many more in the Saptarshi. They are shown in the drawings which appear in The Times and The Hindu weeklies. In Dhruvamatsya we shall not see more. It being the bright half of the month just now, we can see only three, two members of the rectangle and the one at the end of the tail, which is called Dhruva\(^3\). This is the only star which remains practically fixed and that is why it was a great help to sailors in old days. Both these groups seem to revolve round Dhruva. Here we find it very interesting to watch their motion every night. Their positions change continually all through the night. If we noted these positions from time to time, we would find that they trace quite a big arch. In the West, these two groups are called the Great Bear and the Little Bear respectively. In one of the books, I even saw beautiful drawings of them. The Great Bear is also known as the

---

1 The Great Bear; literally, ‘the seven sages’
2 The Little Bear; literally ‘the Dhruva fish’
3 The Pole star
plough. The Saptarshi serves as a clock during the night. After some experience, we can always know the time of the night from the position of the Saptarshi.

However valuable these benefits and however interesting these names may be, they seem insignificant to me in comparison with the primary benefit. We should aspire to be as pure as the sky and as bright as the stars. We should pray to God, as the latter seem to be doing in their silence. Just as they do not depart from their paths even for a moment, so let us never be remiss in doing what we are expected to do.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

288. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 15/18 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

You must have received my postcard\(^1\) about the cable to be sent to America. Bali and others came and saw me. I was happy that they came.

I think henceforth we should not permit Harilal to stay in the Ashram. I have written to him directly to tell him that he would not be permitted in future to stay there. I have sent the letter through Jamnadas. He begs to be allowed to stay at a place for a few days, and spend them in his habitual pleasures. And then he goes and seeks shelter elsewhere, using the name of the place which he has left. We let him stay in the Ashram so long in the hope that slowly he would change his ways there. But on the contrary, he became worse.

You seem to have celebrated the National Week very well indeed. I hope no one will fall ill in consequence of all that strain. There is one more point in this connection to which I drew your attention once. Let me do so again. Instead of overstraining ourselves during this Week and, when it is over, spending a few days in rest and then resuming our old life, I think it would be much better if we utilize the Week to learn to be more vigilant and then keep up afterwards the increase in production which we effect. In the language of the Gita, work done in the former manner would be an instance of demoniac work and work done in the latter manner an instance of God-like work or the first rajasik work and the other sattvik work. Here we celebrated the Week as I have suggested. Mahadev started carding and spun a little more than he had been doing. But I doubled the quantity of yarn spun daily and, if my right hand does not fail, I intend to keep up the increase.

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 12-4-1932

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932 243

Even if some of the inmates who fall ill in the Ashram stay elsewhere permanently, we should not mind the expense on their account. Did we not start the Ashram in Almora for this very purpose? Why cannot we start similar institutions at other places too? If we do, then whenever we see that the air and water of the Ashram do not suit a person, as in the case of Jamna, he or she can go and live in one of those institutions. It will not be very expensive to maintain such institutions, and, moreover, we shall be able to start work in those areas. This is what we did in Wardha. In the beginning, we sent Ramniklal or somebody else there.¹ But we had started the Ashram in Wardha in order to keep it up, and so, when Ramniklal fell ill or found it difficult to work there—I forget what actually happened—we sent Vinoba. We don’t have another Vinoba, but I think we can spare one of the workers from the Ashram and carry on the work at the new place. If we can find a place on the sea-coast, we should prefer it. But perhaps this is a long-term plan. Even then this at any rate we can do immediately: find a suitable place on the sea-coast and send some of the inmates there, at the same time making up our minds that if anybody does not improve even after trying two or three such places, he or she may die, but we will not go further than this in providing external help for their illness. Whether we do or do not decide just now to fix any such limit, we must help those who keep bad health and who require change of air to get it. Our letters in which we have expressed our views about calling Padma back to the Ashram seem to have crossed. It seems she, too, wishes to return. Ascertain the views of Sitla Sahai and Sarojinidevi and do what is necessary. Jamna should either return to Bombay or select one of the places from Bardoli, Sasvane, Chorwad, Porbandar, Veraval, Manganor, Ghogha and Gopanath. I think the fact that Bombay suited Jamna means only that sea-air suited her. If this inference is incorrect we shall know through experience. Any of the places which I think will suit Jamna will, I believe, suit Tilakam too. I knew of course from the very beginning that the expense on account of Krishnamaiyadevi, Padma and Radha was beyond the means of the Ashram, but, as we have tolerated many other improper things, my mind tolerates this expense too. I do feel ashamed of it, of course. I shall await a report from you of the views expressed on the issues raised by the question of lezim exercises and the final decision arrived at. The person who exercised his influence on behalf of Chandrakanta has not done her good. If there are any important letters from abroad, which you think should be sent to me, make copies of them and send them to me. The rest need not be sent. If any correspondents have asked for autographs [inform them that] they cannot be sent. I have not yet received the bottle containing the preparation of almonds and dates. I think I know now how to make it.

¹ It was Ramniklal Modi.

I am informed by the jail authorities that Kaka, Narahari, Prabhudas and Manibehn keep good health. I have received no letter from them.

Silence Day, April 18, 1932

I got a letter from Mahavir\(^1\) directly. I have written to him and told him that he should send a budget of the likely expenditure and fix the last date up to which he will stay. I have asked him, in deciding this, to remember that our means are limited.

It seems that Nimu and the children do not keep good health in Lakhtar. I, therefore, think that it will be better if you call them back there. It seems the children find the heat at Lakhtar too much. Compared to Lakhtar, Sabarmati is certainly cool. If they prefer Vijapur, she may go and stay there. But even if you feel that she should stay at some place other than the Ashram, I think you will be able to decide finally only after she returns there.

Like the thumb of the right hand, the elbow of the left hand too pain. The doctor, therefore, has advised me to give rest to the left hand. I have not felt any pain so far when drawing the thread with the left hand. It is other movements which cause the pain. As a precaution, however, from yesterday I have started using the right hand to rotate the wheel and the left hand to draw the thread. Thus working the wheel with the left hand, I spun 95 rounds yesterday in three and a half hours and 85 rounds today in two and a half hours. There is no

---

\(^1\) A short wooden device with jingling metal discs attached, used in rhythmic physical culture exercises and trills

\(^2\) Mahavir Giri; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 21/22-4-1932.
difficulty of a mechanical nature in making the necessary change in the Gandiva wheel for this purpose. All that is necessary is to remove the spindle to the other side and fix the wheel on the left hand side.
What effect this change will have on the [left] hand will be known only after some time. I had been spinning 375 rounds every day in the week, and I had wanted to keep that up. But I have had to give up my intention for the present. If, however, I get used to spinning with the left hand, that will be no small advantage. I therefore do not feel unhappy about the rounds spun being so few. My purpose in mentioning this is to induce people there who may have sufficient enthusiasm to learn to use their left hand as much as they do the right.
In Japan, the people are taught from their very childhood to use both the hands equally well. This practice will give nearly if not exactly twice as much advantage as we have now. If our left hand gives as good service as the right, the latter will get proper rest every day, and if the right hand ever becomes disabled we would be able to do all the work with our left hand. This is no small advantage. If this suggestion appeals to anybody there, he or she should start using the left hand to do some of the work which we normally do with the right hand. The activities which immediately come to my mind in this connection are writing, spinning and eating. If, however, we think a little about the matter, we shall be able to think of many things which we normally do with our right hand and which we can, with a little reflection and without much effort, train our left hand to do.

The stock of cotton with me is about to be exhausted. If, therefore, you have some cotton of good quality, please send two pounds of it. There are in all 39 letters today, besides this letter to you and "Watching the Heavens-II".1

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8220. Courtesy:
Narandas Gandhi

1Vide the preceding item.
289. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

April 18, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

Since we ourselves are a democratic people, it is natural that our temperament should draw us towards a democracy. But as lovers of truth it is our duty to see justice and support the party which has justice on its side.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 9039. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

290. A LETTER

April 18, 1932

CHI.,

Woman’s special virtues are non-violence, patience, forbearance, capacity for endurance and purity of heart. Dreams are signs of poor sleep. They may be caused by indigestion or too much of thinking. We can prevent them by discovering their cause.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9029. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

291. A LETTER

April 18, 1932

CHI.,

We see ignorance all around us. We should not feel depressed on that account, but should try to get rid of our own ignorance. If we do that, the ignorance of other people also will probably disappear. Ignorance means ignorance of one’s duty, or disinclination to do one’s duty even when one knows what it is.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9030. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
292. A LETTER

April 18, 1932

CHI.,

When a sister ties the rakhi round the wrist of her brother, she expresses her wish for his welfare and her desire that, when an occasion arises, he should help her. A person round whose wrist a woman ties the rakhi for ever remains her brother. The brother binds himself to help the sister even at the cost of his life.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9035. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

293. A LETTER

April 18, 1932

CHI.,

If ever our sister or any helpless person is assaulted by someone, we should try to save her even at the cost of our life. Whenever one can kill, one can also lay down one’s own life instead. If, however, we do not have the strength to lay down our life, we should help even by using violence. Such violence does not cease to be violence. It remains an evil. But cowardice is worse than violence.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9037. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

294. A LETTER

April 18, 1932

CHI.,

To cure bleeding from the nostrils, one should put a mudpack on the top of the head at noon every day. Next, every morning and evening one should draw in cold water through the nostrils and throw it out via the mouth. It is easy to learn to draw in water through the nostrils. One should not go out too much in the sun, or let the head become hot. You should not believe that everything you read in a book is necessarily true. Experience has proved that it is best to eat before seven in the evening.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9038. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

295. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

April 18, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

You certainly wrote a fine poem for Vimal. After all you are a father and do love him, and it is right that you should. I do not believe that he does not take interest in study. In a proper atmosphere, children learn spontaneously. I have often found that they learn more outside the class-room than inside it. It is our duty, therefore, to create the school atmosphere even at home so that the children may spontaneously go on learning all the time what they can. This is the true Montessori method. But this means that all the grown-up members should behave as teachers, that is, should have purity of character and should love the children. This does not mean that we should close our schools, but it certainly means that we should, as quickly as we can, make the whole atmosphere of the Ashram like that of a school, and that all the grown-up men and women should regard themselves as the children’s guardians and make themselves fit to be so. If we do this, the children will no longer feel the hours in the class-rooms boring.

You should not include for reading Saket and Anagh just because I have made that suggestion. You may do so only if you like the suggestion and feel that some at least in the Ashram will appreciate it.

1. You may give the children some work to be done outside the class-room.

2. When you go for a walk, sometimes being alone may be good for you, sometimes talking and sometimes reading and teaching, depending upon your mood at the time. You should follow your inclination.

3. All persons who deserve to be looked upon as our parents or gurus are also worthy of being revered as God!
4. Anybody who joins the Ashram should follow only the rules of the Ashram, since even the best inmates are imperfect and, therefore, their actions should not be taken as examples to be followed. It is, after all, in human nature that persons who are eager to follow rules will spontaneously be drawn to those who observe them most scrupulously.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7494. Also C.W. 4971. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

296. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN GANDHI
_April 18, 1932_

_Ch. Jamna._
Anybody who expects a letter from me regularly should himself or herself be regular in writing to me. What am I to write about, every week, unless the person writes something?

If Kusum continues to be ill, she should be forced to take rest. I am afraid she will not recoup her health unless she takes rest. I also will write to her.

It is now clear that the Sabarmati climate does not agree with you. This means that you should not live in Sabarmati for any length of time. You should not feel sorry at this, as it is not the particular plot of land that makes the Ashram. Your training in the Ashram will have borne fruit if you observe all its rules wherever you live. If you have been scrupulously observing the rules in Bombay, there must have been a considerable effect on the environment there. I will write some time about the importance of observing the rules.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From Gujarati: C.W. 851. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

297. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA
_April 18, 1932_

_Bhai Khambhatta,_

I got your letter. I cannot ask you to come here just now. Correspondence is going on for permission to see friends. If the matter is satisfactorily settled, I will certainly ask you to come. I have started the massage in the manner recommended by you. It is being done with an oil I have, named Lakshadi oil. I will let you know the result. I hope Andrews’s health is all right.

Blessings to you both from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6599

298. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

April 18, 1932

CHI. MANI,

There is no cause for worrying about Narahari. I have had official information that his health is good. I am trying to get a letter written by himself. A person who has put his or her whole trust in God, why should he or she carry the load of worry?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5966. Also C.W. 3283. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

299. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

April 18, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

Our spiritual progress will remain illusory till we learn to regard every person as our own brother or sister. Why should we feel any difference between relations and others? How should people who have no relations behave? Or those who have lost theirs through death? He who regards all human beings as his relations is never bereft of them, for they are [count]’less. Such relationship is the only true one, and all other relationships are false and transitory. Can you understand this?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9472. Also C.W. 9033. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ The source is mutilated here.
300. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

April 18, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

If swaraj were to mean Gandhi’s rule, it would be a curse. Swaraj means the rule of all, and that would include Pushpa too.

Blessings from
BAPU

301. LETTER TO PADMA

April 18, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

I don’t know who is there in Bhawali at present. Nor do I know who are still free. You can go to Bhawali only if you have cultivated some contacts there. But personally I would also like it if you now returned to the Ashram. We should trust to our fate. What does Sarojinidevi desire? It will also be necessary to know what Sitala Sahay desires. I remember to have replied to every letter of yours that I got. It is you who have not been regular in writing.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6131. Also C.W. 3483. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

302. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

April 18, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

You were certainly not in a mood to write when you wrote that letter. It was as long as your letters usually are, but it seemed to be incoherent. Just as one should not eat when one is not hungry or go out for a walk when one does not feel like it, similarly one should not write a letter when one is not in a mood to write one. Or, you may say merely that you are tired and do not wish to write, and stop there. It is not a good sign that the end of the day finds you irritable rather than cheerful. This is no evidence of a spirit of non-attachment. I advise you, nay urge you, to reduce your responsibilities. That will do no harm either to you or to the Ashram. Only work which is done with a cheerful mind bears fruit.

I see the co-workers here every fortnight, and this time I had asked Dhurandhar to come with the others. He keeps good health. He has lost some weight, for he takes the diet prescribed for ‘C’-class prisoners. You will be permitted to visit him now, provided no one has visited him meanwhile.

I hope you wrote what you did about the questions arising from lezim exercises without giving careful thought to the subject. You don’t know where the doctrine of “art for art’s sake” leads a person. In its name, young men in the West have in this age descended right into hell. Perhaps you didn’t have a clear idea of what art means when you wrote the letter. But, then, you yourself have warned me that there will be no sense or logic in your letter. I will not, therefore, dwell further on this subject.

It is possible that you do not appear hysterical to yourself. Kisan may also not see that you are so. Or it may be that neither of you has understood the meaning of ‘hysterical’. Perhaps you have never consulted a dictionary to find out. Don’t take it for granted that our M.A.s know English. Moreover, very few people know the meanings of such technical terms. You are a fine specimen of a hysterical woman. Being hysterical is not necessarily a defect of character. It is desirable, however, to overcome this tendency sooner or later. But I will not lead you into a discussion of this subject. I don’t mind your thinking that you are not hysterical. Since you always wish to do what seems right to you, I don’t worry about the matter. “No one striving to follow good ever comes to harm.”

Your statement was that it was the special excellence of the Ashram that no one in it who took up some work left it off. I would regard that as a certificate. Maybe the Ashram does not deserve it today, but we should certainly aspire to deserve it one day. I am not unhappy about our failures. I am aware of them and, therefore, I am vigilant. The fact that we get no time to learn what we had wished to learn is only evidence of my shortcomings. My organizing ability and my ability to teach are limited, and my sense of proportion in regard to time is also limited; nonetheless, if circumstances had not kept me away from the Ashram for much of the time, I would have somehow managed to fulfil most of the programme. I say this from experience. But we should think about the past only with a view to improving things in future if we can. All of you should apply your minds and see if you can organize things and do what I have failed to do. Find some time and think over what we had planned to do, what remains undone and how much of it can still be carried out. Try to do whatever can be done. If you think that nothing can be done, forget what cannot be helped. We should not go on worrying about the matter.

---

1 Bhagavad Gita, vi. 40

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932 253

To become a cipher means to shed the feeling, ‘I am doing this’. There is no suggestion of pessimism in this.

Mahadev and I may claim to have done twice the normal amount of work during this Week. This time, Sardar has not yet been inspired to take up spinning. But all three of us had fasted¹.

_Blessings from_ BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10281. Also C.W. 6729. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

303. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM GANDHI²

April 18, 1932

CHI.,

1. I have never seen any difference between the Jain doctrine and the general Vedic doctrine. The difference is only one of point of view. The God of the Vedas is both a Doer and a non-Doer. Since the

¹ On the 6th and 13th, the first and the last day of the National Week
² The addressee had put the following questions to Gandhiji:
   (i) What is the difference between the Gita’s theism and the Jain doctrine that there is no God?
   (ii) If action cannot be attributed to God, who bestows grace? If a person following the path of devotion does not or cannot believe in Divine grace, what else can sustain his faith? Is prayer anything more than an expression of a man’s pious wishes?
   (iii) What is the exact meaning of your statement, “Truth is God”?
whole world is pervaded by God, He is a Doer, and yet He is not that because He remains untouched. He does not suffer the consequences of karma, since the world is not His karma in the sense in which we use the word. Looked at from this point of view, the verses which you have quoted from the Gita can be reconciled with one another. We should remember that the Gita is a poem. God does not speak nor does He do anything. We cannot say that God said anything to Arjuna. The conversation between Lord Krishna and Arjuna is imaginary. I at any rate do not believe that such a conversation took place between a real Krishna and a real Arjuna. But there is nothing inappropriate or untruthful in the method adopted by the Gita. It was a custom in those times to write religious works in such a form, and even today a learned writer would not be criticized for adopting a similar form. Jainism stated the truth logically and unpoetically and, therefore, coldly, and said that there was no God who might be described as Creator of the world. It is not wrong to say this, but the ordinary mass of people do not respond to cold logic. They always crave for poetry. That is why even the rationalism of the Jains felt the need for temples, images and similar aids, for which pure nyaya should have no use.

2. The answer to your second question is contained in the answer to the first, as the question itself, I think, is contained in the first question. The word ‘grace’ is a poetic term. Bhakti itself is poetry. But poetry is not an unworthy or inferior or superfluous thing. It is a very essential factor. That water is composed of two parts of hydrogen and one part of oxygen is a factual statement, but to describe water as a gift of God is poetry. It is essential for a full life that we should feel in this poetic way, but it is not essential that we should know the scientific truth about the composition of water. Similarly, it is perfect logic to say that everything that happens is the effect of karma. But the true nature of karma is an unfathomable mystery. We mortals are so utterly ignorant that we cannot know all the karmas which are the cause of even the most ordinary event. It is, therefore, true to say that everything happens through the grace of God. Really speaking, that is the perfect truth. Moreover, the atman dwelling in a body is imprisoned in it like the air in a jar, and, as that air cannot use its natural power so long as it believes itself

---

1 Logic; for Gandhiji’s explanation of his meaning here, vide “Letter to Purushottam Gandhi”, 12-5-1932.
unconnected with the air outside, so the atman imprisoned in a body remains cut off from the power of omnipotent God so long as it believes itself the doer of things. For this reason, too, it is only when we say that everything which happens is done by God that we speak the perfect truth as befits a satyagrahi. The desires of a votary of truth are good and, therefore, they are always fulfilled. Accordingly, our prayers consisting of the verses which you have quoted  are bound to benefit the world also in the measure in which our prayers are sincere.
The world is not separate from us or we from the world. All are connected with one another in their inmost essence and the actions of each have effects on all others. Actions here include thoughts also.
Hence not a single thought is without its effect. That is why we must cultivate the habit of thinking good thoughts.

3. I was not led to the conclusion that Truth is God by considering that God is formless and so is Truth. But I saw that Truth is the only perfect description of God. All other descriptions are imperfect. Even the word ‘Ishvar’ is a descriptive term, applied to an omnipotent something which cannot be described by human speech. If we think of the etymological meaning of the word ‘Ishvar’, the word does not touch our heart. Thinking of God as a ruler does d not satisfy our mind. It may produce a kind of fear in us, which deters us from sin and impels us to be virtuous. But virtuous actions inspired by fear cease to be virtuous. If we act virtuously, we should do so through love of virtue and not through expectation of any reward.
These and similar reflections resulted one day in my realizing that the statement that God is Truth is also imperfect. The statement that Truth itself is God is a perfect statement as far as human speech can express anything perfectly. We shall come to the same conclusion if we consider the etymological meaning of the word ‘satya’. It is derived from the root ‘sat’, which means to exist eternally. That which exists eternally is satya, Truth, it can be nothing else. But belief in Truth as God should not diminish our faith, on the contrary, it should increase it. That at any rate has been my experience. By regarding Truth as God, we save ourselves from many a pitfall. We no longer desire to see miracles or hear about them. We may find difficulty in understanding what ‘seeing God’ means; there can be no difficulty in understanding the meaning of ‘seeing Truth’. Seeing Truth may itself be difficult, it

---

1 The C.W. source has “Samastah sukhino bhavantu” (May all be happy).
2 Literally, ‘ruler’
is so. But as we go nearer and nearer towards It, we can have an increasingly clearer vision of Truth that is God, and that strengthens our hope and faith that one day we shall have a full vision of It.¹ You can ask me again if you do not find your questions answered by this. I will not be tired of answering your questions. And I am confident that we shall find a satisfactory answer. Maybe this fails to answer all the doubts that may arise in your mind; in that case you may ask me again and again.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

304. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
April 18, 1932

CHI. NIMU,

I received your letter. Ramdas has sent on to me the letter you wrote to him. I have written to Narandas and asked him to call you over to the Ashram. Probably the children will get all right there. Moreover, in the Ashram. there are also such experienced women as Lakshmibehn, etc. As a general rule, it is best to give no medicine to children. If you are careful about what they eat, they will not fall ill. If they do not pass stools with ease, you may give them a little quantity of castor oil. It will be good if you write to me regularly every week. There is no reason for you to feel lost.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original. Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ What follows is from the C.W. source.
305. A TELEGRAM

POONA,
April 19, 1932

ASHRAM SABARMATI
LAKSHMIBEHN NARMADA

DOCTOR PERMITTING AMTULSALAM MAY COME SATURDAY ONE O’CLOCK.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33516

306. A LETTER

April 19, 1932

MY DEAR,

We are all sons of rishis and there should be no pride of priestly or any other class. Priests are servants, voluntarily, of the people, and so are Kshatriyas. And to keep up one’s vow is the duty not merely of the priest and the warrior but of all mankind. Therefore I should have respected your vow taken with deliberation and in a worthy manner without regard to your class. But if you will respect your vow [you] must surround it with all the protection it needs, i.e., you must take all the rest that your system requires so that your vow may not be discredited and so that it may not be unduly tried. Your decision not to draw anything save for your absolute necessity is quite good.

Love.

BAPU

C.W. 9041 Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
307. LETTER TO SUREN德拉JI

April 19, 1932

Your letter did not require immediate reply, and I also thought that as a prisoner I should keep myself within proper limits. Hence I delayed replying to you. I have completely forgotten what you had said in your previous letter (written to me when I was in England). You should never hesitate to write to me anything you think about me. It would be a weakness in you to feel such hesitation. If friends and co-workers put before me their criticism whenever they think that I am committing an error, I would learn much from it, because there would be no malice in their criticism. Moreover, if we are displeased with anything which a friend may have done, it is a test of our friendship and love for him to tell him immediately what has displeased us. Love is not love if it hesitates to speak out through consideration for the feelings of the person loved.

In the statement, “true brahmacharya is that which remains inviolate in any condition”\(^1\), the word ‘condition’ should be understood comprehensively. That is true brahmacharya which does not succumb to any temptation or allurement. If a beautiful young woman makes advances to the stone image of a man, there will be no effect on the latter. A man is a true brahmachari if, in similar circumstances, he remains like a stone. And that image neither hears with its ears nor sees with its eyes. Similarly, a man also should not go seeking temptations. Anybody who does that is not a brahmachari. A brahmachari should not knowingly do anything which may be regarded as a sign of lust. But your chief contention is this, that the sight and company of women are found in experience to be inimical to self-control and must, therefore, be avoided. This reasoning seems wrong to me.

That is not true self-control or brahmacharya which can be preserved only by avoiding even such association with women as may occur in the ordinary course and is necessitated by our work of service. It is only outward renunciation uninspired by genuine desirelessness. The suppressed craving is bound to break through when it gets a suitable opportunity. Scripture tells us that our pleasure

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Surendraji”, 4-4-1932 in sense-objects does not disappear completely till we have had a vision of the Supreme. But the converse is equally true. Till our pleasure in sense-objects has disappeared completely, we cannot see the Supreme. In other words, our progress in regard to both is simultaneous. The meaning of the last statement should be carefully understood. Our pleasure in sense-objects does indeed disappear only after we have had a vision of the Supreme. That is, though our cravings may have subsided, our instinctive pleasure in sense-objects will have survived somewhere deep in us and, therefore, till we have seen the Supreme there will always be a possibility of the cravings being aroused again. After the vision of the Supreme, there can be no cravings whatsoever. That means that such a man loses the consciousness of sex and becomes sexless. That is to say, he ceases to be a figure and becomes a cipher, in other words, loses his self in God. When craving has ceased altogether, there can be no pleasure in sense-objects. I think this is easy enough to understand. If in this discussion we substitute the word ‘Truth’ wherever the words ‘Supreme’, ‘God’, ‘Brahman’, ‘Parabrahman’, etc., occur, the argument will be clear and it will also be easy to understand the meaning of realization. Self-deception will not avail anybody here. Those in the Ashram who, under the pretext of living according to the ideal of the Ashram being one family, gratify their lustful fancies mentally are the hypocrites of Chapter III [of the Gita]. Here we are talking about persons who scrupulously follow Truth and are considering how they should behave. Hence, even if ninety-nine per cent of the inmates of the Ashram act as above, so long as the remaining one percent sincerely try to live according to our ideal of the Ashram being one family, the aim of the Ashram will have been fulfilled and the manner of life which we have deliberately adopted in it will be justified. We need not, therefore, think what others do, but consider only what is possible for ourselves. But, at the same time, we should also take care not to imitate others without regard to our own limitations. Others may claim that they can live freely according to the ideal of our being one family, but we ourselves, if we feel that we do not have such strength, should avoid physical contact with women inmates without disputing the claim of those others. We are carrying on a new and dangerous experiment in the Ashram. Those who can join it without violating Truth may do so, and those who cannot may keep away from it. We do not regard it as everybody’s duty to mix freely with the women inmates. All that we do is to permit such freedom. Those members who can take it without violating dharma may do so, but those who are afraid of violating dharma by such freedom may, even though they live in the Ashram, keep themselves miles away from the company of women. One inmate of the Ashram may be able to treat . . .1 as his daughter. But another inmate may not be able to cultivate such a feeling towards her, though he wishes that he could. It would then be his duty not to be free with her. In this connection I have given the illustration of a corpse. If you feel that it is wrong to imagine such a case even as an illustration, you may suppose ‘A’ and ‘B’ instead. If ‘C’ cannot feel towards ‘B’ as ‘A’ does, it is the moral duty of ‘C’, so long as he lives in the Ashram, never to touch ‘B’. I have tried to enforce this rule in all cases in which I came to know the truth.

1 Bhagavad Gita, ii. 59
2 Literally, ‘pull down our humble cottage on seeing another’s palace’

You should forget what happened about the chair. No importance need be attached to it. You are a sincere seeker, and, therefore, the ultimate result will assuredly be good. So long as one has got reason, one is bound to use it. It is not at all necessary to smother it. You may commit errors, but you will learn through them and some day you will make experiments which will prove beneficial. And it is not as if all your experiments suggested by your reason fail. What does it matter if five such experiments in a hundred fail? All of us have a right to make mistakes. Whenever we realize that we have made a mistake, we shall start afresh and go forward.

I do not remember on what occasion I made it but the statement that a person who observes the vow [of brahmacharya] can render greater service to women is perfectly true. And there can be no question that I must have served them better in the measure in which I have succeeded in my effort to observe it.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 108-10

1 The name is omitted in the source.
308. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
April 19, 1932

CHI. SUMANGAL PRAKASH,

I have your letter. It would have been better if efforts had not been made to have Chandrakanta given ‘A’ class. But what is done is done. Now she must give up the facilities of ‘A’ class or make the very least use of them.

I do remember that when I was in England I had a letter from you but I never had any time there to spare and I hardly wrote to anyone in this country. Even if you wrote about Kanaiyalal’s death, I have completely forgotten about it. What had been the matter with him?

I also remember about the scheme for the publishing house. I do not recollect that I was able to go through it. I take it that it is unnecessary now to say anything about it. I had not been given the book about Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi. You must, if necessary, follow a strict regimen and put your health in order. It is now more than two months since I gave up milk. I give up milk whenever a pretext presents itself and that is what happened this time. This has not done me any harm and so long as no harm comes from it I shall continue to eschew milk. In place of milk I take four tolas of roasted almonds ground to a paste. In addition to this I take baked bread, dates, lemon and one vegetable a day such as white gourd, brinjal, etc. I take sour lemon with soda-bi-carb. In the early morning I have honey in hot water with a little soda. That is my diet. You are not to copy this. You must have chiefly milk, curd and fresh fruit. If you still feel hungry you may take greens and chapati or bread, but this is not to be a substitute for milk and fresh fruit.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to say how long my body will endure. Whatever I may say will only be guessing. I can not claim that my life has been one of self-control from the beginning. I have indulged myself in some form or other and so I cannot take from the body as much work as I should like. Most of the others, too, are poor in health and, therefore, either do not see my physical weakness or ignore it. Be that as it may. All that I wish is that the few years that are left to me should be spent in some-work or other of service. It will be enough if I am not condemned to live the life of an invalid. The full span of a man’s life is a hundred years. For the reasons explained above I do not consider myself fit to reach that age.

It is good to have the teeth scraped by a machine. Pyorrhoea must be got rid of.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

309. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
April 19, 1932

BHAI SUMANGAL PRAKASH,

I have your letter. Kanta must not be coerced into giving up the facilities she enjoys. So long as she does not herself want to give up the privileges, she should not be made to do so. To cite my example is right and not right. It is right because so long as I am engaged in public work people are bound to take me as a model, which will only create misunderstandings, because what I expect others to practise I cannot for various reasons practise myself. So there is a flaw in my leadership. Citing my example might not be right because my position is very different from that of others. One reason is my physical weakness. Another reason is my title of Mahatma. A third reason is my special situation. In whatever class I may be I have to have special food, because my body and my vow demand it. This applies to some extent to all prisoners. It is a different matter that every prisoner cannot have this facility as easily as I can. I am permitted interviews once every week instead of once every three months. As for letters there is almost no restriction. I have decided in my mind that I have no intimate friend. I meet relatives, not because they are relatives but because my meeting them serves some moral purpose. My writing letters also has the same end in view. Whether deep down it gives me some kind of pleasure I do not know. There seems little likelihood because withdrawal of permission to write letters or to see visitors would not upset me. In 1930 I refused to avail myself of the facility of interviews because the Government would not accept my condition. In 1922 I had stopped writing letters. Lately I have been kept apart from others. That also is a reason. One should not make comparisons with me on this account, but if this is not obvious I would not like to persuade anyone by arguments. There is no doubt a slight difference between one who has got ‘A’ class after some efforts from outside the jail and one who has been given ‘A’ class by the jail authorities themselves. But it is no use stressing this difference. The ideal should certainly be that there should be no classification, and where as a result of classification people have been given better classes they should give up the privileges of those classes. Very few are today acting up to this idea. Therefore one does not want to bring the least pressure to bear on a delicate girl such as Kanta. She is a thoughtful girl and on her own practises such self-control as she can.

Kanaiyalal’s untimely demise is distressing. But instead of losing courage you must be doubly careful. The prayer I made on behalf of Manilal was impelled not by wisdom but by a father’s love for his son. Only one prayer is proper and that is “May God do as He wills.” Of course one may ask what meaning this prayer has. The answer is that prayer should not be given a gross meaning. It means that to free ourselves of attachments we become aware of the God dwelling in our hearts and conceiving Him as separate from us, we pray that we may not be taken where we are impelled by the mind but that we may be taken where God who is our Master takes us. Whether our good lies in our dying or in our living we do not know. Therefore we should not rejoice in life or tremble at the thought of death. We should treat the two as the same and remain untouched. This is the ideal and it may take a long time to attain to it. Indeed very few can attain to it. But this need not discourage us from pursuing it. And the more difficulties we face in the pursuit the greater should be our efforts to overcome them.

If we think over the matter deeply we can conquer the palate. We must not accept defeat. Man’s full span of life is considered to be a hundred years. It can be more but however long it may be, time is an unending stream in which a human lifetime is not even a millionth part of a drop. What can therefore attachment for it or calculation about it avail? And any calculations we may make can never be definite. We can only guess and say at the most how long a human life can be. For the rest even the healthiest children meet with untimely deaths. We cannot even say that a man given to lustful pleasures will not enjoy a long life. The most we can say is that a man who has been free from lust from the very beginning, who leads a simple life, stands a good chance of enjoying a long life span. But to seek to conquer pleasures of sense for the sake of a long life is like digging up a mountain for the sake of a mouse. We must conquer sensual pleasures for realizing the Self. If self-control leads to shortening of life rather than to prolonging it we should not care. A life free of disease and long in years is the least significant result of self-control.

Being in jail Kanta naturally cannot practise hydrotherapy. Therefore the best way for her is to consult the best doctors. It is possible that if she restricts herself to a diet of milk, curd and fruit she may have some relief in the matter of her menstrual trouble and her toothache. Relief from pyorrhoea may be attained by chewing a datun for half an hour morning and evening and by massaging the gums inside and outside with a finely ground clean mixture of salt and charcoal powder. I am not writing separately to Kanta.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

310. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
April 19, 1932

CHI. KANTA,

At last you are settled. Now take full advantage of the solitude. Give your friends what you have gained and take from them what is worth accepting from them. If it is possible, write to me from there. But the number of letters you write will be restricted. It will therefore suffice if you write to Brother and he passes on to me what I should know from it. Or tell Prabhavati to include in her letter what you wish to say. Take care of your health. We three are together and enjoying ourselves

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library
311. LETTER TO NRISIMHAPRASAD K. BHATT

April 20, 1932

My fear has come true. You have seen a discrepancy between my advice to you and the fact that I myself toured the country to collect money for the service of the poor. I was afraid that you would do so. I, however, see no such discrepancy. I did not feel any inconsistency with my views in this matter even when I started on my tour. The difference between our two cases is this. Dakshinamurti is your institution, as the Ashram is mine. Your duty towards it is not to go out collecting money for it, but to teach and pour your soul into the pupils. Similarly, my duty towards the Ashram is not to collect money for it but to observe its vows and help the other inmates to observe them, and to help in carrying on the various activities of the Ashram with greater vigour. I must have faith that, if I do this duty, we shall get the money that we need. The principle regarding the collection of a fund for the poor should be the opposite of this. In that case my chief aim was to raise a fund. You cannot go out to collect money for Dakshinamurti, but friends may certainly approach people for help to your institution. It is their duty to do so. Do you now see the difference between the two cases? And this is not a new kind of difference, nor have I thought of it recently. I bore this distinction in mind even in South Africa. That is, when I realized it, I stopped seeking help for Phoenix, but I begged from door to door for a public institution there. I, therefore, still suggest that you should resolve, if not immediately, as soon as may be, that you will not go out to collect money for the institution. You should write to all friends who have been helping the institution and whom you know personally, and inform them of your decision, and then let the events take their own course. The argument that our people do not yet appreciate institutions like yours and do not realize that it is their duty to give help to them on their own, is only a half truth. We who manage such institutions lack faith in our work, and, therefore, the people have not been rightly educated about their duty of providing funds for them. This is a vicious circle. The people remain ignorant of their duty because we have not tried to educate them about it; and till they learn to give money on their own, we go begging from door to door. Things will never change in this way. The people will not learn their duty and we shall not acquire faith in our work. And the result will be that all our labour will be wasted. Some of us, therefore, should risk everything and follow the way of faith. You are in every respect qualified to take such a risk. Your institution is relatively an old one and has acquired a reputation for itself. Some of your teachers are selfless workers, and the pupils are taught with love. We have evidence of this in the fact that you have succeeded in training some pupils by your method and that you have friends who give monetary help regularly. Hence, even from the practical point of view, my advice does not seem unsound. According to me, absolute faith in one’s work is also the highest practical wisdom.

Why do you suppose that, if you raise your fees and become self-supporting, only the rich will send their children to your institution? You must be admitting some children free. You should pass on that burden to the rich. They will pay, and must pay, that tax if they want their children to be educated in your institution. Why do you entertain any doubt about the value to the people of the education which you impart? Personally I am firmly of the view, and my view is based on actual observation, that even our best institutions do not grow to their full capacity because their heads spend much of their time in begging money for them. The head of a school should devote himself exclusively to the internal development of the institution. Instead, I have seen heads wasting their valuable time in collecting funds. Personally I feel that in doing so those heads betrayed ignorance of their real duty. They did not have faith in teaching as a vocation. We see the result. You and all the teachers should meet once among yourselves, and then again in the presence of the friends who have been providing you with funds. Make your resolution at that meeting. The meeting should be called not to seek the advice of those friends but to make your resolution and announce it. Faith does not wait for anybody’s advice, and if you wait for advice you will stand to lose.

I stop here today. If you wish to differ from me on this issue again, you may do so. If you can spare time to write to me, I certainly have enough time to reply. I cannot get so much time when I am outside. You should, therefore, take the fullest advantage of my wider knowledge and experience. If you fail to do so, you will be the loser. I do not hesitate in the least or feel the slightest embarrassment in claiming that I am something of an expert in this matter. It is for you to accept or reject my claim. But just as a man who knows a cure for snakebite but doubts or hides his ability would be a great fool, so also, if I know my special ability and still hide it from others I would be as good a fool as he. I would not knowingly wish to become one.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 112-4

312. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

April 21, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

Major Bhandari has read to me the reply received from Government to my letter of the 13th April addressed to Major Martin regarding, among other things, an illustrative list I had submitted of non-political associates who might visit me. In continuation of that correspondence I now submit as full a list of names of non-political associates as I can think of. I have given a brief description of the persons mentioned in the list. On the contrary I have confined myself to those whom I may wish to see in the near future. These are in no sense political people. I, therefore, suggest that when I want to see others outside the list, the Superintendent may be permitted to decide whether they come within the prescribed limits or not. For I find that if each case not mentioned in the list has to be submitted to Government, the delay caused in receiving the reply is likely to defeat the very object of my application.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

---

1 Inspector-General of Prisons, Bombay Presidency
2 Vide “Letter to R. V. Martin”, 13-4-1932
3 Vide “Letter to M. G. Bhandar”, 6-3-1932
4 In his reply dated April 23, Doyle wrote: “I have submitted to Government the further list of non-political associates whom you may desire to see and have also asked for a decision on your suggestion that the Superintendent be permitted to decide whether others outside the list may visit you or no. I shall communicate to you the orders of Government as soon as they are received.”
[ENCLOSURE]

DESCRIPTIVE LIST OF NON-POLITICAL ASSOCIATES

1. Indira Nehru, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru’s daughter, 14 years old and studying in Mr. Vakil’s School in Poona.
2. Jehangir Vakil and his wife, educationist, conducting a model school in Poona where Indira Nehru is studying.
3. Hemprabha Devi, wife of Babu Satischandra Das Gupta, purely devoted to khadi work at Sodepur (Bengal).
4. RaihanTyabji, daughter of Mr. Abbas Tyabji, a permanent invalid.
5. Hiralal Shah, merchant, residing in Bombay, given to astronomical pursuits.
6. Damodardas Kanji, private gentleman in Bombay, holding intimate contact with the Ashram.
8. Hirewanti Mansukhlal, widow of the late Mr. Mansukhlal Chunilal, a philanthropist.
9. Nargis Captain, an invalid, widow of the late Mr. Captain of the Indian Postal Service.
11. Prabhashankar Parekh, private gentleman of Rajkot, father of an Ashram girl.
12. Behram Kambhatta and Tehmina Kambhatta, an osteologist of Bombay and his wife.
13. Manjukesha Mashruwala, niece of a member of the Ashram and in charge of a charitable dispensary.
14. Sushilakumari, student, Medical College, Delhi, sister of Sjt. Pyarelal of the Ashram.
17. Puratan Buch, an invalid student of the Vidyapith.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40), Pt. I. p. 187
DEAR SISTER,

I got the cotton and the honey yesterday. May I thank you? The cotton seems to have been carded in a mill. You probably know that it can be of no use to me. May I remind you of what I said last year? I had hoped then that you would stock good, hand-ginned cotton, get it carded at your place and give it to people to spin. I wanted you to send me some from such stock of cotton, or if you did not have it, to obtain some from a khadi store. It seems that the people in the office here could not explain this to you properly. Send me such cotton immediately if you can secure it.

I was asked to give a list of persons other than inmates of the Ashram whom I should like to meet. I had sent a few such names, which included yours also. The government has replied that you can come to see me. You may, therefore, now come along with a party from the Ashram or by yourself whenever you wish to.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4822. Courtesy: Premlila Thackersey

314. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 21/22, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I get your post regularly on Wednesday every week. I got it yesterday too. The results of the spinning competition were excellent. I had certainly guessed that your speed would be very high, but the speeds reached by the others, too, are very good. I should be happier if all this makes a difference in the total output.

The pain in my left elbow is of the same kind as in the right-hand thumb, and the doctor has been advising me for some time that I should give up spinning for a few days and give complete rest to the elbow. I told you about this in my last letter. At the moment, all that I can say is that my experiment is continuing. I can draw yarn with the right hand with fairly good ease. It is too early yet to say whether this will cure the pain in the elbow completely. However, there is no cause at all for worry. I shall give you definite information on Tuesday when I seal the letters in a packet. I have started dictating this letter on Thursday.

I was glad that Mathuradas came and saw me. It would be a good thing if Tilakam goes to Calicut, but we should not send him at our own risk unless somebody there offers to take care of him and treat him well. As regards Amtul, I am writing to her. Read that letter¹. I told you in my previous letter what I wrote in reply to the letter² I had from Darjeeling. You may come here whenever you wish to. You will be able to see those women whom the previous visitors did not see.

I have been trying to do for Kaka everything I can from here.

Use Soniramji’s money as you think proper. It should certainly be used for supplying free copies of the Gita whenever you think it justified.

The person who stole things from your room must have known what it contained. I cannot resist the temptation of saying that Jamna deserved the lesson. Nobody should keep a single pice in his or her room. Anything one has should be deposited in the safe of the Ashram and that, too, only when the person has no other alternative. Except for books, a few spinning-wheels and such other articles necessary for our work, we should have nothing in our rooms. Even the clothes should be the minimum we require for our daily use. As a rich man feels happier the longer the list of his possessions, we should feel happier the shorter it is.

Our ideal is to have no possessions worth keeping a record of. So long as we continue to possess things, our burglar friends are bound to claim their share. Since we do not voluntarily offer it, they seize it by force.

You will of course read the letter which I am going to write to Kusum. It would certainly be good if she learns nursing. I also believe that Mrs. Lazarus³ will treat her well. But it seems to me that at present the work is beyond Kusum’s strength. If she cannot preserve her own health, how will she be able to help others to preserve theirs? Nursing the sick imposes no small strain on one’s strength.

¹ Vide “A Letter”, 22-4-1932
² From Mahavir Giri; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”
³ Matron at the Vadilal Sarabhai Hospital, Ahmedabad
Sometimes a nurse has to be on duty the whole of the day and the night. And she is on her feet all the time. Most of the patients have little endurance. They are irritable and demand immediate attention. Hence anybody who is sincere in taking up this work must make her body and mind strong. Of course this is true only about a woman who wishes to be a devoted nurse. A nurse who doesn’t care for her patients and whose heart is not in her work is a disgrace to her profession. A nurse’s job, if done sincerely, is more arduous than a doctor’s. Good doctors have always given credit to the nurses and claimed none for themselves. If Kusum has understood all this and if we can be sure that she can make her body strong enough for the work, I would certainly encourage her in her idea. Personally, I have always been of the view that a nurse should remain unmarried. The best nurses in the world are found among the followers of the Catholic Church, and that religion also supplies the largest number. All of them are required to remain unmarried. This is a special merit of the Catholic Church. Another noteworthy fact about it is that all teachers, from the primary to the highest level, are unmarried persons. We see very few other teachers who can excel them.

April 22, 1932

Dhiru had asked me in his letter whether he might send a Magan spinning-wheel or himself bring one, and I had replied to him and told him that he could send or bring one. How is it that it has not yet come? I thought about that spinning-wheel especially because of the pain in my elbow. Padma, too, has in her letter urged me to use that model, and so I am more keen about it today than I was when I wrote to Dhiru. If the spinning-wheel is ready, send it with anybody who may be coming to see me. If it reaches Bombay, even Dahyabhai will bring it. He comes every Saturday. I have already written to you in my previous letter asking you to send me some cotton.

Read the letter which I have written to Vinabehn in regard to Kusum. I need not write anything more. Manibehn will be released from the Belgaum jail on May 14. I had a letter from her, in which she says that Keshu had agreed to make a spinning-wheel for her. If it is ready, ask him to send it to Dahyabhai in Bombay. If it is not ready, ask him to make it by and by and send it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8221. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
315. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

April 22, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

If you will turn up the file left by Major Martin, you will find I am referring to a matter that has been pending for some time. Kaka Kalelkar you know perhaps as well as I do. He is at present in the Belgaum Central Prison. He was transferred from Visapur to Belgaum. I have been trying to get accurate information about his health and that of three other companions, but beyond getting a little vague information after considerable delay I have been able to make no headway. In the reply Major Martin sent me just before he left, he said that he was asking for the information that I had sought. The information already received by Major Bhandari shows that Kakasaheb is weak. Probably he has lost weight and does not get cow’s milk which he used to get here. Therefore if there are no political reasons to the contrary, I suggest his transfer to Yeravda, and if he can be put with me I should bring him up, I hope, to the weight he reached here in 1930, i.e., to 116 lb.

Of the other three prisoners referred to in my letter to Major Martin of 13th April, Narahari Parikh has nose trouble which often causes great pain. His wife Mrs. Parikh writes saying that she cannot even get acknowledgment from the Belgaum Prison although she has sent reply-paid postcards. She has not heard from her husband at all and naturally she is worrying. I have myself written to Kakasaheb inquiring not only about him but about the other three also, because they are all inmates of the Ashram, but I have no reply from him or them. I would like to have their personal letters if I may. I presume that the object of allowing me to hold correspondence with fellow-prisoners was to give me the human satisfaction that I need in the way of getting information from them as to their well being.

I know that you have only just arrived and must be very busy. I would not have worried you almost immediately on your arrival, but for the pressing necessity of the cases I have brought to your notice.1

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

1 For Doyle’s reply, vide Appendix “Letter from E.E. Doyle”, 23-4-1932
CHI. MIRA,

Your expected letter has just arrived. Like you I need not delay mine.

I am delighted that you have Kamaladevi with you and that she joins you at the morning prayer and sings bhajans in the evening. Her vigorous skipping reminds me of the time when I used to skip for the same reason as Kamaladevi. I had taught the boys also. Ramdas was the gracefulest and best. It is certainly a fine exercise especially in winter.

It is good that you are continuing your saltless experiment and that it is agreeing with you.

We have here a new doctor. He is a Parsi Major. He loves his work and has the innate dignified courtesy that you see invariably associated with a cultured Parsi. He has been giving me electric massage for the right thumb and the left elbow. The elbow has been causing pain for some time, but only when I work in particular ways. He thinks that it may be necessary to stop spinning for some days. Having done double work during the National Week, so far as my output is concerned, it is now about 85 rounds per day. For I have anticipated Dr. Mehta by using the left hand for turning the wheel. This is my fourth day. I have made very good progress. The right hand draws much more steadily and the thread is finer and more uniform.

This additional practice with the left hand again makes me think of the necessity of our trying to use the left hand equally with the right. And we should teach the children from now to be ambidexterous. I have already written about this to Narandas.

1. “Superintendent’s initialling date”—Mirabeen
2. “Kamaladevi was imprisoned as a ‘B’-class prisoner, and placed like other ‘B’-class prisoners, amongst the ‘C’-class prisoners in the Debtors’ Prison. She and I began to take too much interest in the well being of the rest of the prisoners with the result that we were both removed to the permanent women’s jail inside the big Arthur Road jail, where we were placed in one of three small barracks, which had a common verandah. The other barracks were occupied by female convicts.” —Mirabeen
3. “Ashram children” —Mirabeen
As a result of the two days, fast, I suppose, I have lost 2 lb. in weight. There is nothing in this loss, if I do not lose steadily. If I do, I shall go back to milk without the slightest hesitation. I have given you this information only by way of report. You must not brood over this loss of weight.

The history of the Ashram goes on, though slowly. In order to overtake the arrears of correspondence, I have suspended it for the past three days. I shall soon resume it.

Study of the heavens has come to stay. I have now a few books on it. This study puts me more in tune with the Infinite.

I won’t need to card for spinning. Mahadev has already begun. He always cards more than he spins and this he does for me. The present stock being so regularly replenished is not likely ever to be exhausted.

Radha is largely to blame for her bad health. She broods too much, gives more time than necessary to external tidiness and does not give herself full rest as prescribed by medical men. I am not now inclined to press for Almora. We should learn the poor man’s art of living. I know that I am the greatest hindrance in our march towards that ideal. You and the other survivors will have to re-arrange many things that, by my identification with them, have been or will be left as they should not be.

We are all keeping well except that Vallabhbhai’s nose and constipation still worry him as before. Dr. Mehta is now dealing with both the disorders and hopes to produce some relief in a short time.

Whilst this was being written in the midst of interruptions, we saw from the newspapers received, that Kamaladevi had been transferred to Belgaum. A prisoner has no choice. His or her body is not in his or her own keeping.

Love from us all.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6218. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9684
317. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

April 22, 1932

DAUGHTER AMTUL,

If I had time I should write to you in Urdu. Why don’t you? Only you should write a clear hand. It will be good exercise for me. Have I spelt your name correctly?¹

I have not yet got Doctor Sharma’s books. I shall read them when I get them and tell you all about them.

For you, I am in correspondence with Narandas.² Of course you can go to the Ashram when you wish. What I feel is that you should live where you keep well. There are opportunities for service everywhere. A kind word spoken at the right moment is good service. Even a kind thought that would translate itself into action is good service. It is idolatry to think that there is no service but what is rendered through the body.

You should tell me how you pass your day. Do you keep your diary?

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 249

318. A LETTER

April 22, 1932

DEAR,

I think that you have erred in judging the people in the Ashram. It is very difficult for one person to say of another whether he or she has love or not. We know nothing of the struggles that go on in the human breast between the forces of good and evil. We are ready enough to see the defects of people but we are unable to know how many conquests they have made. What I say is not intended to signify that we are all perfect in the Ashram. Far from it. But I do want to say that one member has no right to judge another. It betrays want of charity. I have also noticed that those who are very exact in the performance of their own duty are often uncharitable to others, especially when they do not see them as assiduous as themselves. This is a grave defect and a hindrance in the path of one’s progress. If we take care of ourselves, God will take care of the others, if they will not do so themselves.

¹ Gandhiji had written her name in Urdu.
² Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi” and “Letter to Hiralal Shah”

Nor does my writing mean that you are mechanically to shut your eyes and ears to what may be going on in front of you. What I have suggested is in no sense a mechanical performance. It is a mental attitude which comes from training. Meanwhile wherever you notice lack of love, you must as gently as possible bring it to the notice of those in whom you detect the defect and if you have not got enough gentleness to do so you should bring it at least to the notice of Narandas and leave him to do what he likes.

Love.

BAPU

C.W. 9048. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

319. A LETTER

April 22, 1932

CHI,

We do not take stray dogs under protection in the Ashram. If we start doing that, the Ashram would be full of them, and we would be so busy looking after them that we would forget our duty to human beings. The mantra which we recite before starting to eat is praise of God. We should offer thanks to God whenever we start doing something. As far as possible, we should not use goods imported even from China and Japan.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9052. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
320. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

April 22, 1932

CHI. MANU,

This time your handwriting was a little better, but you have still to improve it in many ways. Request someone to help you and do so. If Nanu does not let you read his letters, you should not try to snatch them from him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7427. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

321. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

April 22, 1932

CHI. PREMA.

I have already written¹ to you about Dhurandhar. He has not gone on hunger-strike.

I think you should not force Anandi² to go out for a walk with you. If she has no strength, she will not be able to walk. It will be enough if you teach her pranayama and some passive exercises. Do you know what passive exercises are?

Regarding conversion, I don’t mean that it is never justified. But no one should invite another person to change his or her religion. In my view, the belief which underlies such practice, namely, that one’s own religion is true and another’s false is an error. When, however, a person has changed his religion under compulsion or in ignorance, there should be no objection to such a person rectifying his error, that is, returning to his original religion; on the contrary, he should be encouraged to do that. His action is not conversion. If I think that my religion is false, I should give it up. And I may, I ought to, accept what seems to me good in any other religion. If my religion seems to me imperfect, it is my duty to try to make it perfect. It is also my duty to try to rid it of any evil which I may see in it.

¹ Vide „Letter Premabehn Kantak”, 18-4-1932
² Lakshmidas Asar’s youngest daughter
I regard Mirabehn as a Christian, and now she also regards herself as a Christian. I see no inconsistency in her being a Christian and reading the Gita with devotion. Persons belonging to other faiths also join in our prayers with sincere feeling.

I really don’t know what we shall do after we get swaraj. God will lead me then, as He does today. A man who believes in God does not plan what he will do in future. He who plans is not a man of faith, or rather his faith is weak.

There are not three separate paths, knowledge, devotion and action, for the realization of God. The three form one single path. That one path is divided into three aspects for the sake of convenience [of discussion]. Water is a compound of hydrogen and oxygen, but it is neither the one nor the other. Similarly, knowledge is not a self-sufficient path of God-realization, nor is devotion. It may be said that the path of God-realization is a chemical compound of all the three factors. This metaphor is defective, but it explains what I mean.

The protection of Draupadi’s honour is not a miracle like the conversion of water into wine. The faith that God succours his devotees when they are in distress helps one, and the examples which support such faith are worth cherishing. If, however, a person cultivates devotion in expectation of such help, his devotion is of no value.

I do not approve of a policy of compelling people to become strong. There should be no compulsion at all in this matter. I have not known anyone who liked to remain weak in body. This is a matter for education.

We should put before the people the ideal of reducing their needs to a minimum. Having done so, we need not concern ourselves with the result. Where is compromise in this? The question of compromise does not arise at all. The standard of life of the starving poor ought to be raised. But this is not a new idea. Even now we are making efforts towards that end.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10282. Also C.W. 6730. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

\footnote{St. John, ii}
322. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

April 22, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

Who helped you to write the letter in Gujarati? Whoever it was, his handwriting is excellent. I assume that the actual language was yours.

One may certainly enter into loving rivalry with a fellow-disciple of one’s guru or with anybody else. That is, we can take everybody who can do something better than we as our ideal and advance. There should be no trace of envy in this. I have used the adjective ‘loving’ above to suggest this. In such rivalry, we should wish in our heart that the person whom we have accepted as our ideal will improve his skill day by day, so that the ideal which we seek to attain will always be rising higher as we progress. Such a wish will have a beneficial result for us too, since we shall be continually advancing.

I am firmly of the view, and it is my experience too, that, if a person has violated a moral principle in any one sphere of his life, his action will certainly have an effect in other spheres. In other words, the belief generally held that an immoral man may do no harm in the political sphere is quite wrong. And so is the other belief that a person who violates moral principles in his business may be moral in his private life or in his conduct in family affairs. Hence, whenever we do an evil we should overcome [the tendency towards] it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9437. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

323. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

April 22, 1932

DEAR RAIHANA,

I got your letter. Let Father rest for a few days. I hope that the work which requires him to stay there for some time is not anything very difficult. Many salaams and vandematarams to him from all of us. Tell him also that I always pray to God that He may grant him a long life and enable him to render great services. Many salaams and vandematarams to Mother too. I have got the Urdu books now. I copy out today a few passages from them.¹

My Urdu handwriting will not improve till I practise writing in Urdu regularly. But how can I spare the time? Moreover, it is my left hand which I must train. Hence I content myself with what I am able to do. The progress is bound to be slow, but we cannot help it.

This time you gave me no news about Hamida and her friends. I must get some in the next letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9641

324. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL
April 22, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

It is good to form the habit of having a bath before entering the kitchen. But the rule cannot be applied to a person who goes there to have a meal.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9425. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel

325. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA
April 22, 1932

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I got your letter. I was glad that both of you could me Andrews. I will trouble you and request you to come here if I can secure permission for you to see me, and then also only if the condition has not improved by that time. Both of us will go through the books on massage when we get them. I find that Lakshadi oil is excellent.

Blessings to you both from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6600. Also C.W. 4386. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

¹ This paragraph is in Urdu. The passages copied out are not translated here.
326. LETTER TO A GIRL

April [22]¹, 1932

CHI.,

Under a father’s rule, exploitation may go on and the pool suffer. A mother, on the other hand, would spin always for her poor children.² The sacred thread and the rosary may give some help in cultivating holiness. But they are not very useful today. A cow is looked upon as a mother because, like a mother, she gives milk. Moreover, a woman feeds her own children till they are one year of age, whereas the cow gives milk to all of us, and that is why she is our mother too. A mother receives much service from her children. But who does anything for a cow? Hence a cow is more of a mother.

[From Gujarati]

327. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL¹

April 22, 1932

CHI. MANI,

We were eagerly waiting for a letter from someone there, as people wait for the rains, when we received one or two . . . . See me here on your way when you are released. If it is Monday, stay on till the next day, Tuesday. Between 12 noon or 11.30 a.m. and 1 p.m. is the most convenient time when you can see me. If you come during this period, you will be able to see at least two of us . . . . All three of us are all right . . . .

¹ From the C.W. copy
² The addressee had asked Gandhiji the meaning of a Gujarati saying, to the effect that a child might not be as well cared for by his father even if the latter was a king, as by his mother even if she had to support herself by spinning.
³ According to the source, parts of the letter were censored by the jail authorities.

282 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
I see that you have really tried to improve your handwriting. The result shows that anybody can improve his handwriting if he tries. This is true about everything.

To learn the Gita by heart also means that we should understand the meaning of every verse and pronounce the words correctly. Who teaches you the Gita? Perhaps you will tell me this only when we meet. But if there is time and if the jail authorities let you do so, write your last letter before you are released. As regards your health, we will issue a certificate only after seeing you.

Yashoda and the boy visited us once. The boy climbed on to a chair and was so thoroughly pleased with himself that he left his new pair of shoes here. Fortunately for him or for Dahyabhai, some one of us noticed it and immediately sent it to him. Yashoda’s health is none too good. Indeed she has not been well for many years. Dahyabhai comes every week and can see both of us.

Jivatram\(^1\) is still out of prison and working. Devdas is in Gorakhpur [prison]. I have just had a letter from him. He is alone there but quite happy. He reads a good deal. Lakshmi is no longer ‘poor Lakshmi’! She is still nursing Papa\(^2\), but the latter is nearly restored to health. Rajaji is fine. He keeps good health. His companions also keep fairly good health. Indu\(^3\) has not yet come to see me. I do not know where she is at present. Most probably she is in Poona. Kamala\(^4\) is in Prayagji. Kamalapati\(^5\) seems to have some relief from his pleurisy, but still has slight fever.

I will write to someone in Ahmedabad about the spinning wheel. But we can spare a good one even from here, if you want one.

... I wrote my first letter to Ba only today, but I do get letters written by her. She and other women prisoners are all right. Mithubehn continues to conduct her class.

---

1. J. B. Kripalani
2. C. Rajagopalachari’s elder daughter
3. Indira Nehru
4. Kamala Nehru, wife of Jawaharlal Nehru
5. Literally, ‘Kamala’s husband’, one of the names of Vishnu
If your glasses are broken, you can get them changed even while in prison. But this is perhaps unnecessary now as the date of your release is approaching.

Your letter was received here today and immediately given to me. The reply also is being written on the same day. I hope that it will be posted tomorrow. When you will get it depends on your luck and mine.

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Patelne_, pp. 81-3

328. A LETTER

_April 23, 1932_

CHI,

It is not correct to say that Lord Krishna exhorted Arjuna to follow the way of violence. He only prevented him from doing a great evil in the name of non-violence. Arjuna had already committed violence when he assembled the army. He, therefore, had no other course open to him. He was not afraid of violence. But he did not wish to kill relation. He did not regard it as evil to fight other people.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9051. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 She was released on May 15, 1932.
329. A LETTER

April 23, 1932

CHI.

You did good work during the National Week.

The sound which you hear in your stomach while you are fasting is made by the movement of the gas.

In order to feel that all human beings are our relations, we should think constantly that all of us are created by one God.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9060. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

330. A LETTER

April 23, 1932

CHI.,

I would see no harm in boys and girls playing together if certain restraints are observed. I think they cannot play the game of hututu1. In this game, the players touch one another so frequently that impure feelings are likely to be aroused in some boy or girl. We should avoid that danger. We should know that, when grown-up boys and girls mix together in such fashion, impure feelings are likely to be aroused. We shall gain nothing by hiding this fact.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9061. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

331. A LETTER

April 23, 1932

CHI.,

One should certainly nurse a person who is sick, but cannot omit spinning for that reason. Nursing a sick person benefits only that person, whereas we spin for the sake of millions of the poor.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9067. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Also called ‘kabaddi’
332. A LETTER

April 23, 1932

CHI.,

Wearing the tuft of hair has little connection with dharma. The support of man’s life is God. If a thing is indispensable, we may use it even if it is imported from abroad.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9068. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

333. LETTER TO DUDABHAI DAFDA

April 23, 1932

BHAI DUDABHAI¹,

I got your letter. My compliments to Sunderjibhai for his help. It seems you have attracted a good many pupils. I hope Danibehn² is all right now. I occasionally get news about Lakshmi³.

Sardar and Mahadev are with me. They send their regards to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 7757. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

334. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

April 23, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

If you have faith in yourself, my hopes in you will be realized. You must have written to the Ashram for Gangabehn [Vaidya]’s powder and pills.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1835

¹The first Harijan admitted by Gandhiji in the Ashram in 1917
²Addressee’s wife
³Addressee’s daughter, who was brought up by Gandhiji in the Ashram
335. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

April 23, 1932

CHI. MANI,

I got your letter. Do not worry about Narahari at all. I even hope to get permission for him to write to me. I got news about him this week also. There seems to be nothing wrong with his health. I have written a letter to him today. Still, if you wish to go to Belgaum, you may.

Blessings from

BAPU

336. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

April 23, 1932

CHI. MANGALA (DARLING),

You deserve compliments for standing second. Did you understand the idea that our bodies are things of little value? If you have understood this, the next step in the argument is easy. Is it not a great thing that God dwells even in such a worthless thing?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4085. Also C.W. 49. Courtesy: Pushpabehn N. Naik

337. LETTER TO MOHAN N. PARIKH

April 23, 1932

CHI. MOHAN,

Your handwriting is good. You should become a good man too. Uncle Mahadev is very well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9177
338. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

April 23, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

As far as possible, we should not use foreign goods at all. If, however, we refrain from using the goods of one particular country but use the same goods imported from another country, that does not necessarily imply violence. Ask Premabehn to explain this further to you.

If anyone is afraid that playing cards may tempt the players to start gambling, he or she should certainly not play. It can never be one’s duty to play cards, and it may be too much if we forbid people to play. Those who can refrain from playing should not play.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9471. Also C.W. 9056. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

339. LETTER TO PURATAN BUCH

April 23, 1932

CHI. PURATAN,

Whatever spiritual growth has taken place in me is wholly the result of my worship of Truth. From that I have gained all other things. For the present, you should completely give up the thought of going to jail. Improve your health first.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9166
340. LETTER TO PADMA

April 23, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

As I should not write much with the left hand, this letter will not be long. However, I shall be able to say all I wish to. Personally, I think that you should go to the Ashram. But we should know what Ba and Sitala Sahay also think in the matter. I am now ready to spin on the Magan spinning-wheel. You have copied out quite useful instructions for spinning on it. Why did you take so much trouble? Anyway, I will now preserve that letter. Please remember that it is not one’s body alone that can render service to others. You can also serve if you live a truly celibate life and become a very learned woman. They are born to no purpose who, though endowed with a strong body, do not use it for service. And the knowledge acquired by such persons also goes in vain. If you understand this, you will give up worrying and will recover your health more quickly. Blessings to Shantilal.

Blessings from

BAPU

341. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA N. KHARE

April 23, 1932

CHI. RAMBHAU,

The account which you have sent of your progress is good.

As one person may live in several houses one after another, so also there is nothing strange if he should dwell in different bodies one after another.

Who knows whether Rama did grieve as much as he is said to have done, or whether he grieved at all? What we read is a poet’s account. It is perfectly true that such grieving would not be seen in a man of spiritual knowledge. We should, therefore, believe that our

1 Over the abduction of Sita as described in the Ramayana ideal Rama would not have grieved in that manner.
You should regain the weight which you have lost.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 291. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

342. MESSAGE ON SACRED THREAD CEREMONY

[Before April 24, 1932]¹

The sacred thread ceremony has lost its significance for me nowadays. Still, if the sacred thread ceremony is deemed essential, it should be performed only after the boy’s attaining maturity. The sacred thread ceremony means entering new life and since then constant endeavour should be made to lead a life of self-control and service.

The Bombay Chronicle, 25-4-1932

343. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

April 24, 1932

CHI.

Mother India should possess the virtues of patience, capacity for endurance, forbearance, courage, non-violence, fearlessness, etc. One can cultivate them in the Ashram.

Do we remember every event in our present life?² If we did, we would become mad. After we have learnt the proper lesson from anything which we would like to remember, what harm is there if we forget it? On the contrary, it would be for our good.

Blessings from

BAPU

¹ Of the son of Mr. Mahulikar, formerly painting master in the Gujarat Vidyapith.
² The message was reported under the date-line: “Ahmedabad, April 24”.
³ The name of the addressee is not given in the sources; but in “Letter to Pushpa S. Patel”, 3-4-1932, Gandhi refers to her having played the role of Mother India in a dramatic piece.
⁴ The addressee had also asked why we cannot remember the events of former births.
344. LETTER TO DUDHIBEHN V. DESAI

April 24, 1932

CHI. DUDHIBEHN,

It is less trouble to me to reply to a letter immediately I get it, if I have the time to do so. Writing will stop automatically when I can no longer use my hand. A wife can go where her husband does, but sometimes dharma indicates a different course. What is essential is to have patience. We should cheerfully do — learn to do — the duty which has come to us unsought. Why should a woman believe herself weak? Husband and wife are friends and equals of each other. A weak wife makes the husband also weak. Hence she should be strong even for his sake.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7428. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

345. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

April 24, 1932

CHI. DEVDAS,

You have proved your opinion of yourself to be wrong. For, your letter just received is, though not too short, not very long either. But it will do.

I used to get news of you, though I did not hear from you directly. It is good that you have got quiet there. It was necessary for you to get used to it. Since you are keeping good health, I do not worry on your account.

I certainly wish that you should master Urdu.

It is ten minutes to two now. Mahadev has come to me after finishing most of his own work, and, since I write very slowly with the left hand, I am now dictating this letter to him. My aim in asking you to complete your study of Urdu is that you should read Maulana Shibli’s writings. He has written a biography of the Prophet and also anecdotes from the lives of his associates. There is much else too, with all of which I believe we should become acquainted. If you have sufficient enthusiasm, you should read all that. You can send for the books from Azamgarh, where his office and madrasah are. Most probably, you were with me during that tour and saw the place. The present incumbent of Maulana Shibli’s religious office is Maulana Suleman Nadvi, since the former, as you must be aware, died some time ago.

I get quite good letters from Lakshmi. That is, she replies to mine as a matter of religious duty. Her letters are rather short. But she seems helpless. She admits that she cannot think of anything to write and so contents herself with a few sentences. However, whatever little she writes she writes beautifully, and her Hindi may be said to be quite good. She writes a pleasing hand and seems to be a quiet girl. But why need I describe her to you? I have given here, though, the impression she has made on me. She has been writing, it seems, to the Ashram inmates too.

We are happy here. We do not feel that we are in a jail. How can men be styled ‘State prisoners’ unless they enjoy complete freedom about food, sleep and all else? As for visitors, Dahyabhai comes every week and he sees both of us together; but Mahadev does not have our status and, therefore, cannot join us at the interview. Occasionally someone comes from the Ashram too, and we two see the visitor. Durga and Jivanji came once and saw Mahadev. Now we have decided for the present that Durga should not come and unnecessarily spend money. However, she is free to change her mind if she wishes, as she has not taken a vow not to come.

This is our daily routine: All three of us get up at 3.45 a.m. After we have prayed together, Mahadev goes back to sleep and we two take honey and water and then have a walk. Afterwards I sleep for about a quarter of an hour. At 6.30 all the three have our breakfast consisting of bread, tea, etc., my tea of course being crushed almonds mixed in water. I like it and have so far not felt the want of milk. That is the only joint meal during the day. The other two who drink milk have their next meal at about mid-day, and I have mine at 4 p.m. In between, I eat dates and almonds. At 4 p.m. I eat some vegetables, bread and almonds. Mahadev has been doing a lot of spinning and carding, giving the spare time, if any, to reading. At present he has also to go through the proofs of the book being published by the Oxford Press. I take about two of his hours for my work. Owing to the pain in the hand, since the National Week I have been spinning with the left hand and drawing the thread with the right. I have had enough practice by now and experience no difficulty, though the speed has of course slowed down. Formerly I used to spin 375 rounds or more a week, but I cannot maintain a steady speed now. I rest satisfied with whatever I can spin in two to three hours. The highest number of rounds I have been able to draw so far with the right hand is 182. However, I feel confident that gradually the speed will increase. As for my reading, I could get Urdu readers here and am going through them. I read Ruskin also and give some time to books on astronomy too, as I have of late fallen in love with watching the stars. With all this, I also find time for a nap of 20 or 25 minutes during the day. I have started writing the history of the Ashram, having completed the remaining chapters of the Gita some time ago. That is the account of time for us two. As Sardar suffers from some trouble in his nose, he remains content with reading newspapers mostly and reading out something from them to me. He reads a little from other things too, but he cannot read much as his nose begins running with the least strain. During this jail term, I do not generally ask for books from the Ashram. Friends have been sending me enough for me to live on. In fact they are too many already—over two hundred, as I guess. Not that all of them are worth reading. I liked very much Upton Sinclair’s latest book which he sent me. In the form of a novel, it gives a very good account of the working of the American Prohibition Law. I am sending you the book, which is named Wet Parade. Others of his books are there in the Ashram, but I believe that this new book has probably not arrived there. Mahadev told me a story of how you lost some books. I was not surprised to hear it, as I think I know well enough your capacity for losing things. Pyarelal is in Dhulia jail, and Prabhudas is in Belgaum jail, where I hear that he is in very good health. He has put on two more pounds of weight. Kakasaheb is very weak. Jamnalalji, Vinoba, Gulzarilal, etc., are in Dhulia jail. Ramdas is here, and so also are Chhaganlal Joshi, Surendra, Mohanlal, Qureshi, etc. I am permitted to see them occasionally. Mathuradas is in Nasik jail. Taramati writes to me occasionally.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2154

---

1 Vide “Letters on the Gita”
346. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVII BAJAJ

April 24, 1932

CHI. JANAKIBEHN,

Please write to me. Why do you remain ill? What is your diet? You should eat fruit in sufficient quantities. You ought to improve your health. You need not worry about Jamnalal or Kamalnayan or anybody else. Do you read anything? Who are your companions in Jail?

All three of us are quite well. We often think about you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2898

347. LETTER TO RAMIBEHN PAREKH

April 24, 1932

CHI. RAMI,

A letter from you would always be a surprise for me. You said that your birthday was approaching, but forgot to mention which. As you know, I never remember. Many happy returns of the day to you. But you should also take up some work of service. Come and see me when you feel inclined.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9717. Also C.W. 698. Courtesy: Navajivan Trust
348. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
April 24, 1932

CHI. TARAMATI,

I had been awaiting this letter. I think I did receive your letter of 30th March. The address is correct.

Jyotsna will have recovered by now. If her fever is due to teething, it has gone on for too long.

If you have heard from Mathuradas, let me know immediately. How is your own health? Do you get any chance to meet anyone? To the extent that your health will permit you must undertake some work of service. Doing work of service helps one to attain peace of mind. One may serve even one’s neighbours. There is none in the world not in need of anyone’s help.

Sardar and Mahadev send their remembrances.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

You can come to see me some day if you feel like it.

From the Gujarati original Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

349. A LETTER

April 24, 1932

BHAI,

If you have fully understood the value of brahmacharya, I think your father’s pain or anger need not be taken into account. If you put his anger in one scale and dharma in the other scale, the former would weigh as light as air. But you should first decide whether you regard brahmacharya as dharma. If you are firm, your father will soon calm down.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9057. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 A portion of this letter appears in Letter to Taramati M. Trikumji”, 24-4-1932
2 Addressee’s daughter
350. LETTER TO ASHRAM GIRLS

April 24, 1932

CHI.

If you get your hair cropped, you would save the time you have to in taking proper care of it, save expense over oil, comb, etc., and get rid of the false notion that there is beauty in hair. Without hair, the head remains clean. For a woman, absence of hair is a sign that she is observing brahmacharya. If girls and grown-up women get their hair cropped, the practice would cease to be regarded as sign of widowhood. If we think about the matter we may discover some other benefits also. But are not those I have mentioned enough just now?

From Gujarati: C.W. 9058. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi. Also Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 120

351. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

April 24, 1932

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I would not be able to think anything about Dr. Ambedkar from here. It is enough if we can retain our right in the land. If anything has to be done, please do it yourself.

The news about Prabhudas is good. He gets milk. His health is good. He has gained two pounds.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32866
352. LETTER TO VATSALA V. DASTANE

April 24, 1932

CHI.

I do not think that you should cut off your hair in the face of your parents’ opposition. You must convince them before you take this step. I see no point in the argument put forth by your mother. If short hair is useful, the other girls may well take up the matter. But your mother will come round if you have patience. I shall write to Anna.¹

From Hindi: C.W. 9059. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

353. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH²

April 24, 1931

BHAI SUMANGAL,

I can only today find the time to write to you. I see nothing wrong in your continuing to live with your parents till you are restored to health. The plan to have Kanta stay with you also seems good. You must fully recoup your health. It seems to me a drawback that young men cannot take care of their health. I think it is wrong to be in possession of a proscribed book. The proscription has not been withdrawn. It is not possible for me to stay at one place. You should not exert yourself mentally overmuch. You should therefore give up the thought of writing a history of the War. I am writing for Y. I. and Navajivan to be sent to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am not writing separately to Kanta. Let her write to me.

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹Vide “Letter to V. V. Dastane”, 26-4-1932.
²The letter appears in this place due to misreading of the year in Gujarati. It should be read after item No: 430,
Many thoughts occur to me as I write the history of the Ashram. I become aware of our many short-comings. These reflections have led me to the conclusion that from time to time we should draw up a balance-sheet of our progress. A business man draws up a daily, a monthly and a half-yearly balance-sheet of his business, and a comprehensive balance-sheet at the end of every year. We are engaged in the business of spiritual seeking and, therefore, we should draw up a balance-sheet of our spiritual progress. Everybody should draw up such a balance-sheet for himself or herself and all of us together for the Ashram as a whole. If we do not follow this practice, we would become spiritually bankrupt, as a business man who is negligent in drawing up the balance-sheet of his business would find himself financially bankrupt. If we do not know whether we are progressing or going backwards in keeping our vows and in our other activities, we would become mechanical in all our work and, in the end, become less efficient even than machines. In other words, we would incur loss in our business.

How is such a balance-sheet to be drawn up? I will answer this question by writing down a few questions.

1. Are we untruthful in our thoughts, speech or actions? ‘We’ means every one of us.

2. If that is the case, who are the guilty persons and on what occasions were they guilty of untruth? What did they do when their guilt was discovered and also what action did the Ashram take?

3. During all these years of the existence of the Ashram, have we made any progress in this matter or have we become worse?

4. We should ask these questions in regard to all the vows and whenever we discover short-comings, we should try to think out suitable remedies and employ them.

We can do the same with regard to the various activities in which we are engaged. We have to think about them from two different points of view. From the economic point of view, the question we should ask is this: ‘Is the activity self-supporting?’ It is our faith that if an activity is found economically self-supporting, from the moral point of view also it is likely to have been carried on along proper lines. If there is either loss or profit, we may be sure that there has been a violation of moral principles somewhere. The second point of view is this: ‘Is the activity carried on primarily with a religious motive?’ It is essential that all our activities in the Ashram should be carried on with a religious motive, for everything we do ought to be subordinate to dharma that is, to truth.

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 25-4-1932; vide the following item.

Concerning both these—our vows and the other activities—I cannot help asking the following questions:

1. How is it that in the Ashram itself people deceive one another in small matters?
2. When shall we cease to distrust one another? What can we do to bring this about?
3. How is it that burglars from outside still continue to raid the Ashram?
4. Why is it that the inmates have too many personal possessions?
5. Why have we not cultivated contacts with the neighbouring villages? What is the best way of doing that?
6. Why do people continually fall ill in the Ashram?
7. What have we done for the labourers who work in the Ashram? Why is it that they have not been attracted to come and live in the Ashram? Or, rather, why should there be any labourers at all in the Ashram? In the Ashram there should be no masters and labourers.

I can write down many more such questions. But these are enough to show what I have in mind. I should like all people, young and grown-up, to start thinking. This was certainly one of my aims in insisting that all inmates should maintain a diary.

From a microfilm of the Gujarat: M.M.U./II
355. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 25, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

Change the name of “Ashram Samachar”. The name has given rise to a needless argument whether it is not a newspaper. Since it is not a newspaper in any sense of that word, a name which suggests that it is, should also be dropped.

The title should be “Ashramvasi ane Anya Mitro Pratye’”¹, and at the end Shankarbhai should sign: ‘Your servant, Shankar’. There should be no subscription. No copy is sent to anybody who was not in the Ashram. The [present or former] inmates of the Ashram who receive copies must be contributing towards its expenses. If these changes are made, I would be able to send to Chhaganlal and Gangabehn the very copy you send without being obliged to make fresh copies. I think this is quite clear.

If you have not sent the cotton, don’t send it now. I got a parcel from Lady Vithaldas. The quantity will last me a long time.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Think over what I have said concerning the need for drawing up a balance-sheet.² I think something like that should be adopted as a regular practice among us.

Tell Durga that Mahadev got her letter. His leg is completely all right now. Treatment is going on for the teeth. Tell Jivanji that he should not forget to send with some intending visitor Mahadev’s notes concerning the Round Table Conference and his diary of our stay in London and the other things which I have asked him to send. Ask Manibehn to see me without fail when she goes to see Narahari. She should fix with some inmate of the Ashram who may be coming to this side and travel with him.

[Enclosed is a list of the names of 44 persons for whom I had

¹ ‘To Inmates of the Ashram and Other Friends’
² Vide the preceding item.
sent signed letters to Narandas. Along with that[1] this letter to Narandasbhai and the article on “The Necessity of a Balancesheet”.[2]

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8222. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

356. LETTER TO VERRIER ELWIN

April 25, 1932

I wish you will not take to heart what the Bishop has been saying. Your church is in your heart. Your pulpit is the whole earth. The blue sky is the roof of your church. And what is this Catholicism? It is surely of the heart. The formula has its use. But it is made by man. If I have any right to interpret the message of Jesus as revealed in the Gospels, I have no manner of doubt in my mind that it is in the main denied in the churches, whether Roman or English, High or Low. Lazarus has no room in those places. This does not mean that the custodians know that the Man of Sorrows has been banished from the buildings called Houses of God. In my opinion, this excommunication is the surest sign that the truth is in you and with you. But my testimony is worth nothing, if when you are alone with your Maker, you do not hear His voice saying, ‘Thou art on the right path.’ That is the unfailing test and no other.

The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 87

357. LETTER TO A BENGALI ASPIRANT FOR BRAHMACHARYA

April 25, 1932

I have your letter. Brahmacharya is a mental state. It is undoubtedly helped by abstentiousness in all respects. But diet plays the least part in giving one the necessary mental state. Not that wrong diet will not hinder progress. What I want to say is that right diet, taken in moderation, is not the only thing in the observance of brahmacharya though it is undoubtedly one of the necessary things.

1 From Bapuna Patro-9: Shri Narandas Gandhine, Pt. I
2 This paragraph appears to have been added by Mahadev Desai.
3 The letter was in reply to the addressee’s letter in which he had said that a Bishop had called him a traitor to Christ and had prohibited him from preaching in churches.
Indulgence of the palate will be the surest sign of weak mental state which is repugnant to brahmacharya. The sovereign remedy for the observance of brahmacharya is realization that the soul is a part of the Divine and that the Divine resides within us. A heart grasp of the fact induces mental purity and strength. You should therefore read such books as would enable you to grasp the central fact, cultivate such companionship as would constantly make you think of the Divine presence and follow all the directions given about fresh air, hip baths, etc., in my book called Self-restraint v. Self-indulgence. And when you are doing all these things regularly and industriously, do not brood over all that happens, but have confidence that success is bound to attend your effort.

358. A LETTER

April 25, 1932

I have your pathetic letter. Seeing that God is to be found within, no research in physical sciences can give one a living faith in the Divine. Some have undoubtedly been helped even by physical sciences, but these are to be counted on one's finger-tips. My suggestion therefore to you is not to argue about the existence of Divinity, just as you do not argue about your existence, but simply assume like Euclid's axiom, that God is, if only because innumerable teachers have left their evidence and what is more their lives are an unimpeachable evidence. And then, as evidence of your own faith repeat Ramanama every morning and every evening at least for a quarter of an hour each time and saturate yourself with the Ramayana reading.

---

1. The source has “attain”.
2. The addressee, an MA., B.Sc., had written: “Having studied science extensively, I cannot have faith in God, but I do feel that I should have it. How can I cultivate it?”
3. The source has this in Devanagari.
359. LETTER TO A WOMAN

April 25, 1932

Laziness is not the only reason for your not writing the diary. It is difficult to write the truth in it. Try to do it and see.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 120

360. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

April 26, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

I thank you for your two letters and am expecting early information about my four friends in the Belgaum prison. Since writing to you last, I have received two letters, one from Manibehn Patel and one from Kakasaheb Kalelkar. From both the letters I could see that the very information that I wanted was scratched out by the Jail authorities at Belgaum. The letters therefore proved practically valueless for the purpose for which they were intended. And reading between the lines I could also see that Kakasaheb was not at all well.

However as you have kindly promised prompt attention, I am not disturbing the peace of my mind.¹

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

361. LETTER TO K. NATARAJAN

April 26, 1932

DEAR MR. NATARAJAN,

I am sure you must have read the reports of an exhibition given by an Indian yogi of his powers before an audience specially assembled at the Gokuldas Tejpal Hospital. The yogi is reported to have eaten a live viper’s head, nails, nitric acid, and the like, and that the Chief Justice and his wife were among the distinguished audience.

¹ For Doyle’s reply, vide “Letter from E. E. Doyle”, 28-4-1932
² Editor, Indian Social Reformer
The report states that one lady was so disgusted at the eating of the viper’s head that she abruptly left the hall before the exhibition was finished. I do not know how you look at such exhibitions. In my opinion they are degrading both for the demonstrator, as also for the public. And if the demonstrator died, as he most likely would, if these demonstrations were continued, those who encouraged him by attending them, I should hold guilty of manslaughter. I do not think that either science or humanity is served by such revolting exhibitions. The text-books on Hatha yoga clearly lay down that the Hathayogis are expected not to exhibit their yogic powers or make use of them for purposes of gain. If you agree with me, will you not initiate an agitation in the daily Press for preventing such cruel exhibitions? One man, I suppose you know, recently died in Rangoon precisely giving demonstrations such as the one reported in Bombay.¹

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

362. LETTER TO MAUDE ROYDEN

April 26, 1932

I thank you for your letter² enclosing the correspondence between yourself and Sir Erric Drummond³ and Sir John Simon. When I read about your movement⁴, I did not think that you were in any way showing preference to China over India. I then felt that you were quite right in concentrating your energy over a situation that ¹ In his reply Natarajan wrote: “I agree with you that exhibitions of the kind you refer to are repulsive, and as they serve no useful purpose, they should be discouraged by public opinion. They recall a saying of Ramakrishna Paramahamsa’s, which I read somewhere. Someone asked him if it was possible to walk on water. “Yes”, was his reply, “but sensible people pay a pice to the ferryman” (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 107). Vide also “Letter to K. Natarajan”, 25-5-1932.

² Which read: “I hesitated to send you the correspondence because I fear you must think that our first concern should have been India, but I believe you will understand and sympathize with our sense of the extreme urgency of the hostilities between China and Japan in the Far East. I, therefore, send these letters for your information.” (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 89)

³ Secretary-General of the League of Nations

⁴ For organizing a Peace Army threatened to involve bloodshed on a vast scale and that too by the adoption of the method of satyagraha.

363. LETTER TO V. V. DASTANE

April 26, 1932

BHAI DASTANE,

Shanta sent me your letter written in pencil. Vatsala seems to be impatient to get her hair cropped. I have written¹ to her saying that though I support her idea,² this was not a matter in which she could disregard the wishes of her parents. Vatsala desires me to write to you. I do feel that we should encourage our children to take a step like this or that, if we cannot go so far as to encourage them, we ought to give them complete freedom to act as they wish. Even if she changes her mind later, it is not as if hair will not grow again. However, do not attach any weight to my opinion in this matter. You may do as you think fit, as you may have a number of reasons for not giving your permission to Vatsala to do as she wishes. I hope you are in good health. I envy the company you have got.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3086

364. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI M. PATEL

April 26, 1932

CHI. RAOJIBHAI,

I got all your letters, and I have also replied to them. I am very glad that you go and see Abbas Saheb. I would be happy if you come and see me here. But it would be more honourable for us if you do not come. When we are trusted, we should interpret the conditions on our side to our disadvantage. This is why I do not ask you to come.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8997

¹ Vide "Letter to Vatsala V. Dastane", 24-4-1932.
² Vide also "Letter to Ashram Girls", 24-4-1932
365. LETTER TO MAITHILISHARAN GUPTA

April 26, 1932

BHAII MAITHILISHARANJI,

I have your letter. It is hardly a letter, it is sheer poetry. You have won over me. I follow your point and from that viewpoint Urmila’s grief is pertinent. As a matter of fact, I had no right to say a word. My study of the scriptures is insignificant and of literature even less. My knowledge of the vernacular too is of the same order. Being well aware of my own short-comings, I gave you my impressions just as they occurred to me. My friends, knowing my deficiencies but also my devotion to Truth, ask for my opinion whatever its worth. Prompted by love I sent you my comments, but I could never have expected such a beautiful, poetic letter in reply. I shall preserve it and read it again; which means that I must re-read Saket from the viewpoint expounded by you. Although your language is pretty easy, I occasionally find it difficult to understand it fully, owing to my scanty knowledge of Hindi. Yet another reason of my difficulty is my limited Hindi vocabulary. Is there any dictionary of Hindi wherein I may find the meanings of all the difficult words used in Saket and such other books? I know that a determined effort will by itself make many things clear.

My vandemataram to Ajmeriji. I remember his bhajans very well. God willing, I shall listen to them again some time.

Yes, I have written to Parasram to include Saket and Anagh in the Ashram curriculum. Possibly a start has already been made.

Yours,

M OHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 9456. Courtesy: Bharat Kala Bhavan, Varanasi

1 Dated April 15, 1932 (S.N. 19312).
2 Vide “Letter to Maithilisharan Gupta”, 5-4-1932
3 A Muslim poet who had presented a few of his works in Hindi to Gandhiji in 1929 during the latter’s visit to Jhansi
4 Vide, also “Letter to Parasram Mehrotra”, 18-4-1932
366. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

April 27, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I do think it would be harmful if boys and girls play hututu together. In this game, the players catch and throw down one another. Boys and girls cannot play such a game together. We should not knowingly do something which may rouse impure feelings in us.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 9063. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

367. LETTER TO M. G. BHANDARI

April 27, 1932

DEAR MAJOR BHANDARI,

After all if a letter had to be written about getting the specialists here, Sardar Vallabhbhai thought that he should write the letter himself. Hence the enclosed from him. You will see in that letter absence of any mention of 12 lb. loss of weight. Of course I wholly disagree with you and the other doctors that these local troubles have nothing to do with the digestive apparatus. As a layman I strongly hold the conviction that the nose trouble has much to do with the loss of weight. In Sardar Vallabhbhai’s case in spite of his strong will, I know that the constant and irritating attention that the trouble invites disturbs him as it would anybody. If nothing else, the disturbance itself would be a sufficient cause to put a person off his food. I know that in my case I should simply stop taking food if I had such trouble. I would impute it to something wrong in the stomach in spite of medical opinion to the contrary. All this however is merely by the way.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

Vide also “A Letter”, 23-4-1932
368. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO HARILAL GANDHI

April 27, 1932

I will still not give up hope of your reformation, for I have not given up hope about myself. I have always believed that I was a bad man when Ba carried you in her body, but after your birth I have been doing greater and greater penance for my former life. How can I, therefore, give up all hope? I will continue to hope as long as you and I are alive. And hence, contrary to my usual practice, I am preserving your letter so that, when you have awakened, you may see the insolence of your letter and weep over it and laugh at your folly. I am not preserving this letter to throw it in your face then, but only that I may laugh at it, if God wills that I should see that day. All of us are full of short-comings. But it is our dharma to overcome them. I pray that you do so.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 125-6

369. LETTER TO A SIKH

April 28, 1932

With reference to the growing of hair and beard I hold a totally different view from yours. Whatever value outward symbols had before, they do not and ought not to possess the superlative value that you seem to attach to the growing of hair and beard. For me, I can see no reason whatever for departing from a long established practice which I have accepted for myself. I would far rather that people judged me by my deeds than by my outward appearance.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 129

1 The addressee had written a letter to Gandhiji demanding that his daughter, Manu, should be taken away from the custody of his wife’s sister, Balibehn Vohra, and be restored to him. He had also complained about Bali’s assault on him and held Gandhiji responsible for it. Vide also “Letter to Manu Gandhi”, 4-4-1932 and “Letter to Manu Gandhi”, 10-4-1932
2 The addressee had written: “I see not much difference between a true saint like Guru Nanak Dev and your noble self. It will be in the fitness of things if the greatest living Indian and the greatest man of the present world keep keshas like all the great men of all times,” (Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol I, p. 128)
370. LETTER TO LAKSHMI JERAJANI

April 28, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMI,

I got your letter. You find it difficult to write in ink because you are not accustomed to doing so. But once you get accustomed to it you will discover that it is easier to write in ink than with pencil.
Moreover, there is greater pressure on the fingers when we write with a pencil, and hence the hand gets tired sooner.

I myself had written the letter. If the handwriting resembles this, then the letter was written with the left hand. My handwriting is certainly bad. No one should copy me in that respect. My right thumb is paining.

Blessings from Sardar, Mahadevbhai and me.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 2810. Courtesy: Purushottam D. Saraiya

371. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 28, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

We have two iron machines for crushing nuts, like almonds, etc.
One was sent by Gregg and is brand new, and the other has been used for some time. Keshu or Premabehn is likely to know about them.
They were used only by Pyarelal. Perhaps Kusum will know where they are. If you can find them, send one of them to me immediately.
By ‘immediately’ I only mean that it may be sent with somebody who is coming here to see me, or by railway parcel if it does not cost more than eight annas. Let Keshu examine the machine before it is sent. He, too, has had some experience of using them. My experiment with almonds is going on. One person requires about five hours to crush them, and the quantity lasts me barely nine days. If I eat more every day, it would probably last only six days. Why should anybody, I thought, have to labour so much when we have a machine for the purpose? Hence this request. Some almonds were crushed today and they will last me till Friday week. If the machine arrives before then, the problem will be solved. By the time you get this letter, you will have received the letter which I wrote to you today about Harilal. I expect this letter to be posted tomorrow, that is, on Friday.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8223. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

372. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

April 28, 1932

The question you have put me about the meaning of pinda and brahmanda is a big one. But I will explain the idea in brief. For our purpose, we may understand the word pinda to mean our body, and the word brahmanda to mean the earth. Now, the statement [as in the pinda, so in the brahmanda] means that everything that is in the body is there in the earth, too, and likewise there is nothing in the earth which is not in our body. The latter is composed of the same substance as the earth. There are five elements of the earth, and the body is made of the same five elements. Innumerable creatures exist on the earth and also in the body. As one body perishes and another is born, so the substance of the earth also is continually undergoing transformations. We can amplify this analogy still further. But we can deduce from what I have said, that if we know the real nature of our body, we shall know the real nature of the earth as well and shall not have to go far afield in search of knowledge. Our body is the nearest thing to us, and if we understand it we shall have attained our object. If we try to know about the earth, our knowledge will always be incomplete. That is why wise men have told us that there is nothing in the brahmanda which is not to be found in the pinda. Therefore, if we know the self, that knowledge will include all other knowledge. But we may also enjoy the knowledge of other things which we gain while we strive for knowledge of the self, since we shall be enjoying it as incidental to our pursuit of knowledge of the self . . . . I think that Narasinhbhai has not thought deeply enough in interpreting the Gita. We should not confuse the Krishna of the Gita with the Krishna of

---

1 This is not available. Vide, however, “Fragment of Letter to Harilal Gandhi”, 27-4-1932

2 Omission as in the source history. The problem before Krishna was not that of violence or non-violence. Arjuna shrank not from violence but from having to kill his relations. Krishna, therefore, explained to him that in doing one’s duty one ought not to treat one’s relations differently from others. In the age when the Gita was composed, the men who influenced its thought did not raise the question whether the violence committed in war was right or not. That question seems to have been raised only in modern times. The principle of non-violence was accepted even then by all Hindus; but opinions differed then, as they do now, as regards what involved violence and what did not. Our descendants may see violence in many things in which we do not see it today. For instance, we do destroy life when we consume milk or cook cereals. It is conceivable that future generations may wish to refrain from such violence and stop drinking milk and cooking cereals. Today we commit this violence and still claim without any hesitation that we observe non-violence. In exactly the same manner, war was regarded such a normal thing in the age of the Gita that people did not feel that they violated the principle of non-violence by engaging in it. The illustration of the war in the Gita, therefore, seems to me perfectly innocent. If, however, we reflect over the teaching of the Gita as a whole and examine the characteristics of the sthitaprajna, of the man who has merged in the Brahman, of the bhakta or of the yogi, we can come to only one conclusion, namely, that the Shri Krishna who taught the path of the Gita was literally an avatar of ahimsa and his exhortation to Arjuna to fight does not in the least detract from the purity of his ahimsa. On the contrary, if he had advised Arjuna to follow any other course, I am sure that the perfection of his knowledge would have been called in question and he would never have come to be worshipped as the most perfect avatar of God. You should read what I have written in this connection in Anasaktiyoga.

[From Gujarati]

---

1 Vide “Anasaktiyoga”
373. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

April 29, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM

1. It does not befit us to ask the questions you have asked about Maulana Shaukat Ali. We should not pay attention to the short-comings of other people or sit in judgment over anybody. We should exhaust all our energies in examining ourselves. As long as we can detect even a single weakness in ourselves and, despite it, inwardly wish that our relatives, acquaintances and friends should not cut off relations with us, we are not entitled to see short-comings in others or criticize them. If we unintentionally see such short-comings in anybody, we may, if it lies in our power and if it is proper for us to do so, ask the person concerned about them, but nobody else. There is no gain in asking other people. However, since you wished to ask me, you did quite well in doing so. For otherwise I would not have had an opportunity to lecture to you in this way.

And now I reply to your question. From a distance and on the basis of the known facts only, we should not approve of the Maulana’s activities. However, I cannot arrive at any definite opinion without hearing in detail about his activities from his own mouth. According to me, it is not correct to say that the followers of the Prophet ought to, or may, do all things done by him. All people are not entitled to do everything that the great men may have done. We have seen that such imitation leads to undesirable results. However, we find that Hindus, Muslims and followers of other faiths do not only not follow this golden rule always, but even act as if they were entitled to do certain things because the Prophets or avatars had done them. Seeing that this is the general attitude, I am not surprised that the Maulana has cited the Prophet’s example.

2. What we do about Bhishma and others we may also apply to social workers of the present day. I feel that the present practice of (offering) jalanjali needs reform.

Everyone who has written to me on the subject had nothing but praise about the Ramayana class which you have been conducting. Go on in the same interesting way. It would be in my view a great achievement if all at the Ashram come to love speaking in Hindi and become interested in the Ramayana. I am, therefore, very much pleased that you have thrown yourself heart and soul into this work.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7495. Also C.W. 4972. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

374. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN GANDHI

April 30, 1932

CHI. JAMNA,

I got your letter. I think that if you definitely feel better in Bombay than at any other place, you should go there. You should observe the rules, that is, the vows of the Ashram. You should behave courteously with everyone and make yourself useful wherever you live.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 852. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

375. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

April 30, 1932

CHI. MANGALA (DARLING),

To follow one’s atman does not mean acting as one pleases. It means obeying the voice of God who dwells in our heart. We pray daily, keep vows and practise self-control in order that we may hear Him. When we are convinced that we have heard the voice of the Lord, we should not worry no matter who is displeased with us.

Blessings from

BAPU

376. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE

April 30, 1932

CHI. MATHURI,

This time your handwriting was better. You should write like this every time and keep on trying to improve it still further.

God is self-created. He is not born. If He were born, what would be the meaning of saying that He was God?

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 265. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

377. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

April 30, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

It is not at all necessary to wear a pin in your hair. Dreams come to everybody. Nobody knows why they come. You will be able to improve your handwriting if you try hard enough. Do not get disheartened.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9426. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel
378. FRAGMENT OF A DRAFT LETTER TO LORD SANKEY

May 1, 1932

You have given judgment against me on evidence of which I have been kept in ignorance and your judgment has been given at a time when I have been rendered incapable of defending myself.¹

The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 97

379. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

May 1, 1932

CHI BHAGWANJI,

It is good that you wrote to me. I am going to write about the subject²; so I do not expatiate on it here. You drew the attention of a responsible person to what you felt was a slip. Now you have only to watch what he would do. As for you, you have done your duty.

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 346. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

¹ Mahadev Desai explains: “Bapu was deeply pained to read Sankey’s article in Newsletter. He said it was a vicious piece of writing and he felt he should write to its author. . . .

The Sardar who was listening to the dictation remarked: ‘Instead of writing such a longish letter, why don’t you simply tell him that he is a liar?’

Bapu laughed and replied, ‘In fact I have said something stronger still. I say his conduct is ungentlemanly. I go further and say that he has betrayed a friend or colleague. This is something that would cut an Englishman to the quick, but I have written what I felt. People like Shafi and the Aga Khan who met him every now and then must have told him all these lies. And he not only believed them to be true, but never asked me about them and throws the blame on me now when I am in prison....’

The keenness of Bapu’s feeling is evident from this sentence in the first draft of the letter....

Part of the sentence was later replaced with the following: ‘You have given it after rendering me incapable of defending myself.’ . . .

It is not true again that my claim is exaggerated. Why should our claim to independence be considered exaggerated? It may be so considered if I propose to reduce England to slavery. I set forth the Congress demand in my speeches but during the discussions I dealt with any number of formulas.” (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol I, pp. 96 -7)

² The reference is to “Lesson of the National Week”, 2-5-1932
380. LETTER TO MOHAN N. PARIKH

May 1, 1932

CHI. MOHAN,

A boy of your age should study, play and do some work. He should also pray. I hope that if you go to Belgaum you will certainly come here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9179

381. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

May 1, 1932

CHI. MANI (PARIKH),

I was expecting that you would come this week. When you come, most probably you will be able to see Mahadev too. I now get news from Belgaum.

Blessings from
BAPU

382. LETTER TO NARAYAN DESAI

May 1, 1932

CHI. NARAYANRAO ALIAS NARAYAN DESAI ALIAS BABLO,

If we read the Gita and understand it, we shall know how to do our duty. By spinning during the National Week or at other times, we increase the wealth of the country and serve the poor.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9479
383. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

May 1, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

_Gandhiraj_ means that a person, that is Gandhi, will rule the country. What is the good of that? In swaraj, everybody will rule, and everybody will include you, me and all others. If you do not understand how that can be, ask Premabehn to explain it to you.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3987. Also C.W. 33. Courtesy: Pushpabehn N. Naik

384. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

May 1, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

If the burden of work is excessive on you, I cannot accept your view that it cannot be reduced. That view betrays ignorant attachment and weakness. I can believe that the cause of your irritability lies in yourself and not in the weight of work on you. If that is so, you will gradually learn to keep your balance, for you will not deceive yourself for a long time. I do not, however, wish to pester you about this. Try to harden your sensitive nature.

Among our books there are some Urdu ones. A few of them are likely to be with Imam Saheb. Inquire in the Ashram too. If you cannot identify them, Parasram will certainly be able to do so. If you find _Sirat-Un-Nabi_ among these books, send it to me. It is written by Maulana Shibli. There is another biography of Nabi written by Dr. Mahomed Ali. Send that too. The _Sirat_ is in two parts. You are surrounded on all sides by labourers, and the life which they lead is the only true life. That has been the idea behind the Ashram. True, the labourers should be seekers after truth. Are you not one? Are not the other women and the men also such seekers? I believe that everyone is 1 This was in reply to her letter complaining of mental exhaustion. She had also stated that she was unhappy and felt dissatisfied, and that separation from Gandhiji pained her.

---

so to the best of his or her capacity.

You ask me when you will be able to visit me. If you use your eyes, you cannot but see me. My spirit dwells there, though the body may be here, and it will continue to dwell there even if the latter is reduced to ashes. It is quite possible that when I am there in body, my soul may not be there. Understand this truth and give up your ignorant idea.

One must feel discontent, but it should be regarding oneself. The day one believes that one has become perfect, one’s fall has begun. Hence one ought to be discontented about oneself. But such discontent does not mean that one should wish all the time to take up new duties.

I cannot, however, explain all this by argument. Time will do its work. Where you see pitch darkness today, you will see light tomorrow. “Premal Jyoti” seems to me to be the only bhajan which truthfully describes this condition of mind. The meaning is very well brought out in Gujarati. The original English is a marvellous creation, though.

I have been told that Dhurandhar keeps fairly good health. What is your present weight? How much milk and curds do you take? How many volumes do you think there are in the library?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10283. Also C.W. 6731. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

385. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

May 1, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

Just as from one grain of wheat grow millions of grains, so from two human beings millions of human beings may be born. You can know this even by doing a multiplication sum on your slate. Try to do it.

I did not say that we should merely learn to turn the charkha with the left hand. What is necessary is that we should learn to do with the left hand everything which we can do with the right hand. To start with, try to write and eat with your left hand and clean your teeth with it, and after that you may try to do other things.

1 A Gujarati rendering, by Narasinhrao B. Divetia, of Newman’s “Lead, Kindly Light”.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5772. Also C.W. 2995. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

386. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

May 1, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

Learn everything about spinning. Spinning is not for those who can get other useful occupations. That is why mill-hands are not told to spin for a wage. Spinning is meant for the millions of Indians who do not have an occupation for six months in the year. In short, a person may spin under any pretext; what his spinning adds to the wealth of the nation is the benefit we get from it.

Khadi is to be preferred because through it we serve the poor to the utmost.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9910. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

387. LETTER TO VIMAL KISHORE MEHROTRA

May 1, 1932

CHI. VIMAL,

Write in ink. Anyway, you did well in writing to me.

Learn about the yajna from Parasram and, if it needs further explanation, do write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 4973. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra. Also G.N. 7496
388. LETTER TO SANTU

May 1, 1932

CHI. SANTU,

We must make the least use of weapons which can hurt as we want to observe non-violence. I have not opposed the practice of lathi and lezim. I have found no fault with wax candles.

BAPU

[From Hindi]

From a photostat: G.N. 7712

389. LESSON OF THE NATIONAL WEEK¹

May 2, 1932

I received a letter from Shri Bhagwanji regarding the self-purification week celebrated in April last. In that letter he draws my attention to the waste of cotton which occurs and he also suspects that some persons knowingly gave a higher figure for the yarn spun by them. He states that the waste was of two kinds: one, the quantity of broken threads was more than permissible, and, two, since the spinning was done with excessive speed the count of the yarn spun was very low.²

If anybody knowingly gave a wrong figure for the yarn spun by him or her, I would regard it as a serious matter. Such conduct would be a blot on the good name of the Ashram. The spinning done by a person who gives a wrong figure will not be accepted by God as yajna. The figure entered in our records has no value. The real value of the spinning done remains what it is. It cannot be increased or diminished by entering a higher or lower figure in our record. Besides, the cash value of the yarn is no more than a few annas; its real value lies in the sincerity of the motive with which the spinning is done. That value can never be estimated by us. It is recorded only in the divine book, for who but God can understand man’s motives.

¹This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 28-4/2-5-1932; vide the following item.
²For Gandhiji’s reply to Bhagwanji P. Pandya, vide “Letter to Bhagwanji P. Pandya”, 1-5-1932

320 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
However, we have one test. If such \textit{yajna} does not yield the expected result in time, we may conclude that there is some impurity in us. Let everybody examine his work from this point of view and, if anybody has been guilty of untruth, let him or her humbly confess it and so purify himself or herself. We cannot, in the Ashram, keep a secret watch over anybody; most of the work is carried on the basis of trust in one another. The Ashram cannot be run on any other basis. Everybody, therefore, should know his duty and do it. Let the inmates also think if they have been guilty of anything else besides giving wrong figures for yarn. Were they slack in doing the spinning? Did they do it as a task forced on them? Did they give to it less than the appointed time? Did they throw away the broken threads? This is the condition for a true \textit{yajna}: the person doing it should give his whole-hearted attention to the work, and do it with all his skill and intelligence.

Let nobody believe that he or she may behave anyhow throughout the year and still be able to observe the rules explained above during the National Week. It should be remembered that one’s whole life in the Ashram has to be a continuous \textit{yajna}. Among all its activities, spinning is the supreme \textit{yajna}. The only difference between the National Week and the rest of the year is that we give more time to spinning during that Week.

I suggest that the following rules should be observed in future:

1. If the yarn is of less than 20 counts, the spinning should not be regarded as \textit{yajna}.

2. If the waste exceeds a fixed limit, the spinning should not be regarded as \textit{yajna}.

3. If the strength of the yarn comes to less than a fixed limit, then also the spinning should not be regarded as \textit{yajna}.

In \textit{yajna} or any other work, the neatness of the product and the sincerity with which the work is done are more important than the number or quantity of what is produced. Fifty bullocks who are physically unfit will prove a burden on the owner, whereas one strong bullock will do his work well. Fifty knives with blunt edges will not be useful in mincing vegetables, but one knife with a sharp edge will do the work perfectly. We should, therefore, learn to give our full attention to every work which we do. We should devote the next [National] Week exclusively to this subject.

I observe that some inmates find spinning a boring work and prefer something else. There is one natural weakness in this attitude. A person is bored by the work which he has to do every day and persuades himself that, if he had been doing some other work instead, he would not get bored in that manner. However, if that other work becomes his daily work, he would ask for something else still. Besides, consciously or unconsciously persons who do spinning think of the low earnings from that work. According to the standpoint of Ashram this is a wrong attitude. The wage for spinning is the lowest because it is the only work at present which millions can do and which can help them to earn a little money. All of us, therefore, do voluntary spinning as yajna in order to popularize the work. The idea behind yajna is that we dedicate the work to God and have faith that He will provide us the wherewithal for our maintenance. Let everyone understand this significance of yajna and daily do the yajna of spinning with whole-hearted devotion and with zest.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

390. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 28/ [May 2, 1932]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have already written to you today a letter² about the problem of Harilal. I hope you will receive it without delay. I need not, therefore, write anything more about the matter.

Send more pills for Gangabehn made from ten tolas of chauraj and ten tolas of asafoetida. I had received the quantity which I had asked you earlier to send. If you send the pills with somebody who is coming here to see me, I will arrange for their being delivered to her.

Personally, I liked Tilakam’s going to Thana. Others also may go, if they are not likely to be a burden on Pyare Ali. That would look nice too, for we should be as happy to be a Muslim’s guest as a Hindu’s. Besides, it would be a painful thing if anybody felt that, since Tilakam was not one of us and since he came from an Antyaja family, the present arrangement was good enough for him. If Jamna willingly goes there, Noorbanu will shower love on her. Since the first day that we met I have always felt a beautiful light of purity shining in her eyes.

¹ Inferred from the contents
² Vide footnote on “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 28-4-1932

322 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
I hope Gangadevi is all right now. I had a letter from Santok. She says that she would like Radha to stay on in Deolali for four months more. If that is likely to restore her health completely, it would be all right. I have had no letter at all from Ba.

I cannot say that the change of hands in spinning has reduced the pain. But I see that, had I not made this change, I would have been unable to continue working. I can see from my experience of drawing the rounds with the right hand that slowly rotating the wheel causes much less strain in the elbow than drawing the rounds hour after hour. I now draw about 200 rounds daily with the right hand. That is five or ten more than the number I used to draw with the left hand a week ago. The average then was 187_ [rounds] a day, or say rather that I kept up that average with an effort. Of course, more time is spent now in spinning. But in any case I had been giving more time in a week previously. From every point of view, therefore, the present practice seems all right. There is no cause at all for worrying about the condition of my hand.

There is, of course, no ban on printing copies of “Watching the Heavens” and the other articles I send, but I think it would be wiser not to print any. Rather than print copies, the better course would be for somebody to dictate to a group of five to ten persons. This would be more in keeping with our principles. By following this practice, we would learn again the art of writing a neat hand. The copies made in this manner could then be circulated among those who might wish to read the articles. Those persons may make more copies if they wish to. Or everybody should pass on the copy supplied to him, on the same day on which he receives it, to another person whose name is given to him. In this way it will be possible to circulate a few copies among a large number of persons and all those who get them will read the article with special interest and derive greater benefit from it. Think over this.

[May 2, 1932]

Read carefully what I have written about the work done during the National Week this time. If you agree with me, show it to all others, and also try to follow in practice as much of it as can be done. If you wish to make any changes in my suggestions, you may certainly do so. I have, generally speaking, only my experience to go by. In the Ashram you have a veritable mine of experience. It is possible, therefore, that you will find some of my suggestions impracticable, but there is no doubt that we ought to pay attention to the fineness of the count and strength of yarn and to reducing waste. At the examination, this was the method of evaluation formerly adopted. The candidate was awarded marks equal to the figure of the count multiplied by that of the strength. I do not know what method is followed now. I would introduce the factor of waste in calculating the marks—reduce the marks in proportion to the quantity of waste. Mahadev and I have thought out this method. Waste up to one tola for every pound [of yarn] may be condoned. If the waste exceeds one tola, for every additional tola the marks arrived at by multiplying the figure of the count by that of the strength should be reduced by sixteen. That is, the marks should be reduced by one for every 1/16 tola of waste. If the waste is as much as ten tolas, the candidate should fail. However, you yourself may decide whether waste, of one tola or of more than one tola per pound should be condoned. I have given the figures merely as illustrations to explain my idea. If I were an examiner, I would even take into account how the candidate sat when spinning, in what condition he maintained his spinning-wheel, whether he kept the place where he sat for spinning quite clean and whether he could repair a spinning-wheel when it went out of order, and calculate marks for all these. This means that the work of the candidates would be constantly observed by somebody. This observer would be one of the examiners at the test. I would not mind if such a practice had the effect of reducing our output. What is essential is that we should be sure in our minds that we were vigilant and were progressing from day to day. I have stated in the accompanying note¹ that when the yarn spun is of less than 20 counts, the spinning should not be counted as yajna. This does not mean that no credit should be given for the spinning done. The candidate would go on spinning every day and be awarded marks for his work, the yarn could be made use of, but such a spinner should not be considered to be performing yajna. He would be only a candidate.

Read the letter which I have written to Dr. Mehta. Forward to Jetpur the letter which I have written to Manjula. Maganlal’s wife. I have forgotten her father’s name. If you do not remember it, Champa or Ratilal will probably know it. Read the letter before sealing it, and communicate the address to me also. I have already written to you ¹ On the National Week; vide the preceding item.

² Dr. Pranjivan Mehta’s youngest son who had gone abroad regarding Kusum. Nobody has come to see me till now except Trivenibehn. About Budhabhai, do what you think proper.

Post the accompanying letter to Hill only if you think it is all right, for if he comes just now it is you who will have to shoulder the burden. You must have received my letter regarding Harilal. I had another letter of bitter complaint from Manu.

BAPU

[PS]

In some of the letters this time, I have omitted “Blessings from”. The words are understood. I have omitted them to save time. As I write with the left hand, I naturally like to save as many words as I can. You will observe that I pay more attention to making every letter in a word distinct. I think that, if I write still more slowly, the handwriting with the left hand may be a little better. Is there no limit to the wishes of an old man who has arrived at death’s door?

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8224. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

391. TELEGRAM TO DAHYABHAI PATEL

May 2, 1932

[REGARD THIS AS] RELEASE FROM LIVING DEATH.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 132

392. TELEGRAM TO MANIBEHN PATEL

May 2, 1932

YASHODA PASSED AWAY YESTERDAY. REGARD THIS AS RELEASE FROM LIVING DEATH.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Pateln, p. 83

1 Vallabhbhai Patel’s son. According to Mahadev Desai, this was sent on receipt of the news about the death of addressee’s wife, Yashoda.
393. LETTER TO SIR SAMUEL HOARE

May 2, 1932

DEAR SIR SAMUEL,

I am grateful to you for your reply\(^1\) to my letter of the 11th March. I had hardly expected any reply to that letter. I wrote it purely as a matter of duty that I thought I owed you. However much we may differ in our views, in all I may do I want to be correct to the best of my ability and knowledge. I quite agree with you that you could not possibly have said more than you have done in your letter under reply, so far as the first part is concerned. As to the second part of your letter, it would ill become me, as a prisoner, to enter into any argument on merits. I must therefore content myself by simply declaring my conviction that even the newspapers that I am permitted to receive show how grossly misinformed you must be with reference to the state of things in this country.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9556. Courtesy: India Office Library

394. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

May 3, 1932

DEAR AGATHA,

I have your letter of the 15th ultimo. Yes, Mahadev is with us. You have in English the saying that two is company, three is none. Somehow or other we three are belying that saying and are getting on quite well. You must be feeling considerably relived now that you have Deenabandhu with you.\(^2\) Whether you call Mahadev’s little hope—or shall we say big hope?—Master Desai or some other it is the same thing to him, because he is utterly innocent of English. But the

\(^1\) Vide “Letter from Sir Samuel Hoare”, 13-4-1932

\(^2\) The addressee was helping C. F. Andrews and this was one of “the ways in which she interpreted Mr. Gandhi’s request . . . to work for mutual understanding between India and Britain” (Agatha Harrison, p. 68).
book you have sent I have no doubt contains many pictures. These he will enjoy without stopping to inquire how you have addressed him. ¹

With love from us both.

[BAPU]

[PS.]

Love to Charlie.

From a photostat: G.N. 1453

---

395. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

May 3, 1932

I got your letter. I would not worry over the loss of twelve pounds of weight, if your strength has not gone down and you suffer from no particular disease. I frequently write to Taramati, and this time she also has been writing fairly often. In the last letter Dilip² also wrote two lines. Of course I had to ask for that favour. By now Taramati must have visited you.

According to me, rebirth is a fact proved by scientific experiments and by people’s memories of past lives. To accept such memories as proof, we have to put trust in men who have narrated their experiences. But so many persons have borne witness to their remembering their past lives that we cannot brush aside their evidence. I would not, however, spend time convincing anybody about the reality of rebirth; nor would I enter into too much argument on the subject. There are several things scientifically established, our disbelief in which is of no great consequence in our lives. It is possible that rebirth may be so defined by somebody that the usual proof offered in support of it will not satisfy him. My own definition of it is just this. The soul does not cease to exist with the end of the body, but migrates from one existence to another, and that is rebirth. That is, I would say that even Christians, Muslims and Zoroastrians who believe in the Day of Judgment believe in rebirth according to my definition of it. The acquisition of another body, in my view, follows as a necessary corollary from this belief. However, I know that the traditional Christian view does not permit it, though an increasing number of

¹ Up to this the letter is in Mahadev Desai’s hand; the rest is in Gandhiji’s left hand.

² Addressee’s son
Christians now believe in the possibility of the soul getting another body. Lagnantar will not serve as a Gujarati equivalent of ‘divorce’. Lagnantar means another marriage, which is possible even without a divorce. If no current word is available, I would coin a new word Lagnabhanga. On my asking Mahadev, he says that he was going to suggest this very word. So we have, as the saying goes, two prescriptions of the same cure for an illness.

Taramati will probably find it difficult to get the ‘Yeravda chakra’—the Yeravda spinning-wheel—in Bombay. I am writing to her and advising her to write to Bardoli or the Ashram and ask them to send it directly to you. Your interpretation of Gita, XVIII. [66] cannot contradict mine. I do not now remember what the interpretation I offered in my letters was. But I would certainly oppose your interpretation if you tried to make out the idea of surrender to God to be a path in itself unconnected with other duties. I have often noticed that what we have said or wish to say had already been said by somebody else in different words. Instead of noting a difference or contradiction between the two explanations, I see the identity of meaning. What does it matter if the language differs? I am aware that there are certain risks in following this method, but they exist only for those persons who twist the meanings of words to see and prove the identity of the meaning of the passages in question. I don’t think there is any such risk for a person who sees such identity spontaneously. Hence, the question we face is, whether the better course is to form the habit of seeing identity of meaning or to proceed on the assumption that difference in language indicates difference in meaning. In my view, it is dangerous to see difference in meaning in verbal difference. I very much like to see identity rather than difference of meaning between Ishvar and Allah.

It seems that apart from Kishorelal and Jairamdas you have no other companions. Ask them to write to me if they can without forgoing their right to write an ordinary letter, or include in such ordinary letter what they wish to write to me. I had one letter from Jairamdas, to which I replied. It is not at all necessary for you to let go writing a letter to Taramati for the sake of being able to write to me. It would be enough if you include in your letter to Taramati whatever you wish to communicate to me; or, if you write in the letter to me what you wish to tell her, to that at any rate there can be no objection.

We three are happy here. It is now three months since I gave up

328  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
milk. In its place, I take almonds with bread. So far, the weight has been maintained. And there is no complaint of constipation, so that I am carrying on with this diet for the present.

Mahadev points out that in Marathi they use the word vivahavichchheda for lagnabhanga. Both the words had occurred to me but I liked lagnabhanga better. However, I would certainly accept the word vivahavichchheda and perhaps even prefer it since I support the view that the terms newly coined in Indian languages should be uniform.

Convey our due regards to the company there.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi, pp. 107-9

396. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

May 3, 1932

DEAR SISTERS,

I had intended to send this letter along with the post dispatched today, but forgot to do so as I was in some hurry and hard pressed for time. After the packet of letters was handed over for posting, I remembered, and could still have written to you and sent the letter, but decided to put off. I hope all of you help in nursing Gangadevi. At the Ashram, it is our aim to create such an atmosphere that no one, including children and the old persons there, should feel the absence of relations. Anybody who regulates his or her life by the principles of dharma should first look after those whom he or she does not regard as relations. For, one’s relations are not likely to remain uncared for, and if one makes it a point always to pay attention first to persons who are not one’s relations, by and by one would learn to pay equal attention to relations and others. It is a matter of congratulation that the children of Rabaris¹ are attending Manibehn’s classes. I was glad to read what you wrote about the girls. You will have taken a great step forward if you are able to act towards them exactly as you have indicated in your letter. Two girls have put me this question in their letter: ‘May girls use bob-pins or hair-pins? Should they bind the hair with ribbons?’ I have replied to them as I thought fit, but I put the matter before you also. I think that neither of the two things is necessary. At least they were not in the past. In the West the women do their hair in different styles so that every woman needs a great number of hair-pins and ribbons without number. But we do not care for outward adornment and it does not befit us. It is our duty to save every pie that we can, like misers; for the money which is given to us is not our property, we are only its trustees and, therefore, we are entitled to use out of it only just enough to feed and clothe the body.

¹ A cattle-breeding community
I, therefore, believe that hair-pins, etc., have no place in our life. We should seek our happiness and that of our children only in such manner as befits us.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 9091. Courtesy:
Narandas Gandhi

397. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

May 4, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

I thank you for your prompt reply\(^1\) of 2nd instant in connection with my four friends and co-workers in the Belgaum Central Prison.\(^2\) I thought that you would give me their weights. I would still like to have them for additional satisfaction.

I am not free from anxiety yet about Kaka Kalelkar. He often suffers from pain in the spine. From the diet scale allowed to him I miss butter altogether. You may remember that he had 4 oz. of butter allowed to him here in addition to milk, bread and vegetables, and I know that he was able to take all that butter without suffering any harm and he was able to put on weight and feel energy coming to him, whereas when he was received here he felt weak and could with difficulty take regular exercise. I would therefore like to know what his weight is now and whether he suffers from any pain in the spine.
The letter he was permitted to write to me distinctly states that he had that pain at the time of writing, i.e., on 13th April last.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

\(^1\) Vide “Letter from E. E. Doyle”, 2-5-1932

22-4-1932
398. LETTER TO PERCY W. BARTLETT

May 4, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I received your letter only last Saturday\(^1\) together with the Poet’s draft appeal\(^2\). I do not know that you expect me to say anything now. But this I can say, that I should yield to no one in my desire for conciliation and peace. You may therefore depend on my doing nothing that will prevent them. Consistently with national honour, I would do everything that would promote conciliation and peace. More I may not say from behind the prison wall.

I am glad you and the other friends\(^3\) were able to visit India and hope that you were none the worse for its climate.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. I, p. 193

399. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

May 4, 1932

CHI. RAMDAS,

From Narandas’s letter received yesterday, I learnt that Nemu had returned to the Ashram.

I am afraid I may not have been able to explain in my last letter what I wanted to say. It has always been my view that asatyagrahi should never fight about his food. He should thank God for whatever he gets and eat it.

\(^1\) April 30. On April 29, the Secretary of State for India, Sir Samuel Hoare, in his speech in the Commons had said: “There dearly cannot be any question of co-operation with anyone associated with civil disobedience. If Mr. Gandhi shows a disposition to restore the relations which existed at the Round Table Conference, he will not find the slightest difficulty in conveying the fact to the Government without any intermediary. The Government will consider the position thus created. But one thing is quite clear, that there will be no question of making a bargain with the Congress as a condition of its co-operation” (The Hindu, 24-6-1932).

\(^2\) Vide “Rabindranath Tagore’s Appeal”, 22-3-1932

\(^3\) Members of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, who had visited India in March 1932
The jailor is the master of a prisoner’s body. Hence, a satyagrahi should accept whatever food is served to him so long as he can do so with self-respect and the food is not unclean or of a kind which he cannot eat. He may eat it if he thinks that he can digest it, otherwise he may throw it away or return it if he has not already started eating it. In this age, the laws of good health are generally observed in fixing prisoners’ food. However, what should one do if they give only rotla and water?

One may discuss the matter courteously with the official but one cannot fight about it.

People can get many things, have got many things, by creating trouble for the authorities. But we ought not to adopt such methods.

I, therefore, believe that you should not protest at all regarding the bhaji which is being served. Those who wish may eat it and others may leave it. We should thank God even if we get only rotlas and dal.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 135

400. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

[May 4, 1932]

CHI. TARAMATI,

I have a letter from Mathuradas. He says in the letter that he has asked for a Yeravda Chakra. If you do not have it at home or have not sent it already, write to Bardoli or to the Ashram with instructions to send it. It would be preferable to write to Bardoli as it would be ready there. At Bardoli Lakshmidasbhai will receive the letter if you address it to the Khadi Karyalaya. If you enclose this postcard with the letter, your work will become easier. Jyotsna must have recovered by now. Mahadev sends you his regards.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ASAR VIRJI’S BUILDING, 5TH FLOOR

53 MINT ROAD

FORT BOMBAY

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 From the postmark

332 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
401. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

May 5, 1932

BHAI NANABHAI,

Thinking about the matter objectively, I am indifferent whether Manilal and Sushila come or do not come. In view of his vow, it would be good if they come but from the point of view of the health of all three of them it would be better if they do not come. Only they can tell how strictly they interpret his vow. However, from what I know of Manilal’s nature I guess that he would not put an objective and strict interpretation on his vow and Sushila also, willingly or unwillingly, would identify herself with his point of view. This is my analysis of their character. They are both good and simple-minded so that, wherever they are, they will take up some work of service and do their best.

As for revising Anasaktiyoga, I need the presence of Kishorelal. Unless somebody wakes me up, I shall regard the book with a closed mind. I shall see what Mahadev can do. If I get Kishorelal’s notes, I will certainly go through them carefully and make whatever changes I can think of. I must say you have planted your feet in a good many directions. Does Surendra maintain his weight? Do you hear from Tara? Regards to you both from all of us here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6683. Also C.W. 4328. Courtesy: Kanubhai Mashruwala

402. LETTER TO IBRAHIMJI RAJKOTWALA

May 5, 1932

I got your letter. If you ask reason for proof of the existence of God, what proof can reason give since God is above all reason? For, if you say that nothing is beyond rational explanation, you will certainly run into difficulties. If we give the highest place to reason, we shall be faced with serious difficulties. Our own atman is beyond reason. People have indeed tried to prove its existence with logical arguments,

1Manilal, Sushila and their daughter as they have tried to prove the existence of God. But he who knows God and the atman with his intellect only does not know them at all. Reason may be a useful instrument of knowledge at one stage. But anybody who stops there will never enjoy the benefits of true spiritual knowledge, in the same way that intellectual knowledge of the benefits of eating food does not by itself help one to enjoy those benefits. God or the atman is not an object of knowledge. He Himself is the Knower. That is why we say that He is above reason. There are two stages of knowledge of God. The first is faith, and the second and the last is first-hand experience to which faith leads. All great teachers of the world have testified to their having had such experience, and people whom the world would ordinarily dismiss as fools have also demonstrated their faith. If we have faith, like theirs, one day we may have first-hand experience too. If a person sees somebody with his eyes but, being deaf, cannot hear him and then complains that he had not heard him, he would not be justified. Similarly, to say that reason cannot know God betrays ignorance. Just as hearing is not the function of the eyes, so also knowing God is not the function of the senses or of reason. To know Him a different kind of faculty is required, and this is unshakable faith. We know from experience that reason can be all too easily deceived. But we have not known anybody, howsoever mighty he may be, who could deceive true faith.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 136-7

403. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Y. M.,
May 5, 1932

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

Dahyabhai first gave me the news about Indu’s illness. I have now obtained more information from Shankerlal. How did Indu fall ill? How is she now? Is it because of her illness that you are there? How long will you remain there? How are you?

Tell Saralabehn I am deliberately not writing any letter to her. Of course I think of everybody.

We are well.
You must have come to know of Yashoda’s\(^1\) death. Give our regards to everybody there,

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: G. N. 11557

404. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

_YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 5, 1932_

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter. Take care of your health in every way possible. If you are in good health, other things can be taken care of. What advice can I give you at the moment? What can I even suggest? May God protect you.

I am writing a separate letter to Lilavati.

We have to consider about Gulzarilal. But I am not worrying since Jamnalal is there.

Things here are proceeding well. I have not yet felt the need to take milk. Almonds seem to be helping me quite a bit.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32747

405. TELEGRAM TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA\(^3\)

_May 6, 1932_

WE WERE ALL TOUCHED LEARN GANGABEHN’S DEATH. AM HAPPY THAT SHE LIVED WELL AND DIED WELL WITH FAITH EVERLASTING. NO WONDER TOTARAMJI\(^3\) IS HAPPY.

_Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 138_

\(^1\) Wife of Dahyabhai, Vallabhbhai Patel’s son

\(^2\) This was sent to the Ashram on receipt of the addressee’s letter informing Gandhiji about the death of Gangadevi Sanadhya.

\(^3\) Totaram Sanadhya, Gangadevi’s husband
406. LETTER TO SAROJINI NAIDU

May 6, 1932

I do not know that I would share Lilamani’s enthusiasm. Chivalry is made of sterner stuff. Chivalrous knight is he who is exquisitely correct in his conduct towards perfect strangers who are in need of help, but who can make no return to him and who are unable even to mutter a few words of thanks. But of these things some other day and under other auspices.

The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 102

407. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 6, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter was received at the expected time.

Do you remember the frail little wife of Dahyabhai— Yashoda. She died on Sunday. It was a deliverance for her. She had fits and had almost lost her memory. This means additional burden for Vallabhbhai. For she has left behind her a bright boy about five years. But he has broad shoulders.

My weight oscillates between 104 and 106. I am, therefore, not making any change. I am trying to replace almond paste with ground-nut paste. If it agrees as well as almond, it will be good. The others are also keeping well.

Magan wheel was received yesterday. I am going to try it. It will enable me to give complete rest to the left elbow. And Prabhudas will be delighted when he learns that I am actually trying his invention. Of course my recent drawing [of] the thread with the right hand will come in very useful.

1 In the source, Mahadev Desai explains: “Sarojinidevi had written to her daughter Lila that she was permitted after her arrest to deep in the Taj Mahal [Hotel] and this reminded Lila of mediaeval chivalry.”

2 “Spinning-wheel with two spindles which are propelled by a foot pedal. As Bapu used only one spindle, one of his arms could, therefore, be given complete rest”—Mirabehn
I am glad you have begun to use the left hand in place of the right. It must be done not merely for writing. Try to eat also with the left hand. No special effort, save a little thought, seems to be necessary.

I am glad you had a few days with Sarojini¹ and that you were able to serve her.

What I have said about my being a hindrance is perfectly true. I may help to start the thing, but, not being able to live up to it must hinder further progress. The ideal of voluntary poverty is most attractive. We have made some progress, but my utter inability to realize it fully in my own life has made it difficult at the Ashram for the others to do much. They have the will but no finished object-lesson. We have two delightful kittens. They learn their lessons from the mute conduct of their mother, who never has them out of her sight. Practice is the thing. And just now I fail so hopelessly in so many things. But it is no use mourning over the inevitable. I have just had a card from Narandas saying that Gangadevi is no more. She died cheerfully with Ramanama on her lips. She and Totaramji were worthy of the Ashram.

Perhaps we shall meet soon.²

Love from us all.

BAPU

[PS.]

I spun 24 rounds on Magan wheel. Narandas asks whether you will be able to see me on 18th. So far as I am concerned, of course you can.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6219. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9685

¹ “Mrs. Sarojini Naidu had been arrested and brought to the Arthur Road Jail. We had but a few fleeting days together. She was transferred to the women’s jail in the Yeravda Central Prison”—Mirabehn

² “My three months’ sentence was drawing to a close”—Mirabehn
DEAR COL. DOYLE,

I observe from Kaka Kalelkar’s letter to me that though he and Sjs. Narahari Parikh and Prabhudas Gandhi were put together at Visapur, they were separated on being admitted to the Belgaum Central Prison. They are all inmates of the Ashram. Prabhudas Gandhi was Kaka Kalelkar’s pupil and Narahari Parikh his assistant and colleague. I do not know that there was any reason for separating them from one another. If there was none, you will perhaps agree that in the present state of the health of both Kaka and Prabhudas Gandhi, if all the three are together they can be mutually helpful.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

DEAR COLONEL DOYLE,

I wish to bring to your notice a matter that has reached the point of exasperation. Over two months ago Sardar Vallabh bhai wrote two letters, one to his son at Bombay and one to Mr. G. V. Mavalankar at Ahmedabad, both of which were of a business type. They were duly authorized, but never reached the addressees. On March 26th Sjt. Mahadev Desai wrote his monthly letter to his wife at the Ashram at Sabarmati. The letter never reached her. On the 28th ultimo I wrote, by permission, a letter addressed to the Ashram and meant for an erring boy of mine. It was a most important letter in answer to his. The letter was not delivered at the Ashram, though subsequent letters were delivered. Almost invariably the Ashram post reaches the Ashram two or three days after the due day of delivery. I infer from this that the letters are delayed, where they are not withheld entirely, by some authority. I know that correspondence of civil resisters is under strict censorship. I have nothing to say against it. But the correspondence sent from a prison, duly franked by prison authorities would, I should imagine, be free from further censorship and consequent delay or danger of being withheld altogether. I do not write letters uselessly and hope I am meticulous about observing the terms under which I am permitted to write these letters. If they require a double censorship, it may be well to let us know. If they are withheld even after being passed by prison authorities I think it is due to us that we should know at least the fact of detention. The letter that I sent to my son was designed to affect the future course of his conduct and it had attached to it an original letter which my son had sent for my inspection and which he desired should be returned to him. I have no desire whatsoever to write a single line that I would not like any Government official to see. But I do feel hurt when even letters sent by prisoners that are held to be unobjectionable by prison authorities are delayed or intercepted in course of transmission.

I should, therefore, thank you if you would kindly enquire of proper authorities as to the fate of the letters in question. I should be glad if it were discovered that my suspicions were groundless and that there had been no interference with this correspondence, and that the delays had been accidental and that the missing letters had been found and delivered to the addressees.

Yours sincerely,

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No.
800(40)(30), Pt. I, pp. 247-8

410. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

May 7, 1932

CHI. PREMA.

If we make it a rule to draw up a balance-sheet of our spiritual progress from time to time, we shall be able to get rid of unnecessary fears and appear to the world as we really are. Obviously, this is true only about sincere people. Those who are insincere will not be able to keep up the practice of drawing up such a balance-sheet. They will find it impossible.

I believe everything you say about Narandas. He ought not to take up work beyond his strength. No one should do that. But generally man deceives himself. He is generous towards himself, and when he has done a small thing he believes that he has exerted himself overmuch. Ordinarily, therefore, when someone works hard I do not feel inclined to dissuade him from doing so. But Narandas’s way is different. He always takes too much work upon himself. Since he generally does his work in time, a stranger may not perhaps see how much he had worked. Hence it is but proper that Narandas should not undertake new burdens. I have written to him to that effect. You should keep a watch.

My suggestion about a balance-sheet is not likely to make anyone mechanical in his or her work. If any person living in the Ashram becomes so, I would blame our method of running it. I know that that method is not perfect. But no one living in the Ashram has become mechanical in his or her work, and many who were mechanical have come to be filled with new life. I infer from this that our method must be at least 51 per cent effective. Those who are in charge of the various activities in the Ashram are not experts in their respective fields. It is not their fault that they are not. But it has always happened that the Ashram has either undertaken some new type of activity or has decided to carry on a traditional activity in a new manner, and, therefore, it has had to train its own experts. This has resulted in some unnecessary expenditure of time and moneys and despite that the Ashram has not always done its work so well as to win praise. The Ashram, however, exists not to win praise but to serve. If it does the work of service so well that it wins praise for it, we may feel happy. But, even if it is criticized, we should continue to serve. The conclusion to be drawn from this is that, as we become progressively more efficient, we shall be able to do more work and shall feel the burden of work less and less. Here is a recent experience. When I started the practice of rotating the wheel with the left hand, on the first day I could spin only 93 rounds. I also took more time and got more tired. When my efficiency had increased relatively, I could spin more than 200 rounds in less time and felt less fatigued. I have now started spinning on the Magan spinning-wheel. Yesterday I spun 24 rounds and spent much time. Today I spun 56 rounds in less time. The fatigue, too, was less. What is true about an individual and his small task, is also true about an organization and its big undertakings. “Yoga is skill in work.’’ Work here means service, yajna. All our difficulties arise from our inefficiency. If we become efficient, what seems a hardship today will become a source of joy. I am convinced that in a well-organized set-up based on right principles, no tensions should be felt.

---

2 Bhagavad Gita, II 50

You have joined the Ashram to acquire this efficiency. You will not learn it from anyone. Everyone has to acquire it from the atmosphere in the Ashram. If any person like you does not acquire it, he or she will not remain in the Ashram till the end. I am not talking about those who have no ambition. They will perhaps remain. Since the Ashram is really an institution based on the principle of freedom, everyone in it may rise as high as he or she wishes. But no one will be able to help a person who does not aspire to rise. It is for you to create the atmosphere in which you can work well. You can attract your friend to the Ashram. Really speaking, however, that would be self-centredness on your part. All those who live there are your friends. Give them what you have and receive from them what they have. If you believe that you have nothing to learn from others except from one or two persons, you are sunk in the well of self-delusion. I think there is none in this world from whom we may not learn something.

What you write about Ramakrishna\(^1\) is very likely to be true. I do not regard myself as having attained any degree of spiritual realization, and I am sure, therefore, that I make mistakes again and again. But being innocent mistakes, they seem to have done no harm so far. I, therefore, continue on my path with an untroubled mind and also draw co-workers into my experiments.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Passive exercises help the weak; for example, massage, \textit{ardhashirhasana}, \textit{ardhasarvasana} lying down and raising the legs or the hands slowly upwards. In all these, the patient remains passive and gives his or her mental co-operation. Do you follow this?

Prayers have often been attacked, but they have been kept up for 16 years. How much time do they take? How much of that time

\(^1\) Shri Ramakrishna Paramahamsa
\(^2\) Yogic postures
\(^3\) The addressee wanted to adopt a new name in memory of his deceased wife, Rajkishori.
can be saved? Anyone who accepts the necessity of prayers will not grudge the time given to them. We can point out a drawback in everyone. On the whole, however, our prayers seem all right. For my information, though, what change do you desire?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: 10284. Also C.W. 6732. Courtesy:
Premabehn Kantak

411. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

May 7, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

The report is excellent. It is not proper to take the name Kishorikant, and the motive also behind taking such a name is unworthy. It would have been better if the article about me had not been written. But now you need not feel sorry for having written it.
You should not write any such article in future. Your possessing books does not violate the vow of non-possession. They are not “yours”. This is also true about slips of paper.

There is no universal rule that a person who has no children has an unfeeling heart. We can try to know God through the study of chemistry, etc. But that is possible only for a few. Study of the sky is quite easy. The effect of a diary depends on the kind of diary it is.

BAPU

PS.

The report about Hindi is excellent. Who is in charge of the sales section?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4797. Also C.W. 4974. Courtesy:
Parasram Mehrotra

412. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

May 8, 1932

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

Your letter smacks of a complaint that Narandas does not listen to you. Please do not think so. Your duty ends when you have informed [him]. You told him without expecting a response, didn’t you?

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 347. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya
413. LETTER TO BENARSILAL AND RUKMINI BAZAJ

May 8, 1932

CHI. BENARSILAL,

I read your remarks. You must have read Father’s letter addressed to me. It was first received there and then redirected to me. I did not understand it clearly.

CHI. RUKMINI,

I got your letter. As soon as you came down to the plains, both of you lost health again. Does that mean that you should permanently stay at a hill station? I hope that you have completely recovered now. Do you take out Madhav for a walk every day? See that you do not let the child’s health suffer for any reason. Write to me regularly. If you follow Mirabehn’s practice and fix a day for writing to me, you will not have to try to remember.

PS.

You must have heard about Gangadevi’s death.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9442. Courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

414. A LETTER

May 8, 1932

We violate it whenever we eat anything for the pleasure it gives. To observe the vow of non-indulgence of the palate, we should eat, from among things acceptable to us, only as much as is necessary to keep our body healthy and strong. If we observe this vow, we shall become healthy and remain so, shall find it easier to observe brahmacharya and acquire control over the mind in other ways too.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9087. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
415. A LETTER

May 8, 1932

When Father asked you to go, it was your duty to obey him. Not everybody likes to live in the Ashram. Only those like the Ashram who like freedom with self-restraint.

True mercy has never done harm to anybody in this world. We do not know the real facts about Prithviraj and, therefore, cannot say anything about his case. In such matters, we should not cite examples from the past. If we can test a medicine today, why do we want to know what effect it had in some case in the past?

From Gujarati: C.W. 9097. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

416. LETTER TO DURGA M. DESAI

May 8, 1932

CHI. DURGA,

You should not read Saket so that you may cry with sorrow as you read it. Even Urmila’s protestations teach spiritual wisdom. We should read the poem for its glorification of Rama. Moreover, what comparison can there be between Urmila’s separation from Lakshman and Durga’s from Mahadev? Yours is no separation at all. You can write to him, see him if you wish to and get news about him from time to time. Urmila had no such consolation. How can we compare a forest with a jail-temple, and fourteen years with two years?

BAPU

[PS.]

You may eat spices if without them you do not keep good health.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9485

417. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

May 8, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I am thinking whether or no I should continue to write to you. But since you wrote a postcard to me, I write this. I should like you to pay a visit to Dhulia\(^1\) without waiting for a reply. But you know best whether you can spare time now.

BAPU

[PS.]

Write the essay\(^2\) with the utmost care, and not simply as a task.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1836

418. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

May 8, 1932

CHI. MANI (PARIKH),

I was glad that you came and saw me. It is true that I could not talk with the children. But you know that this is a prison. How long could we go on talking? You should give up your weakness. You should not let tears be seen in your eyes. Write to Shankarlal and tell him that I was unhappy that I could not see him. But that could not be helped. I was very glad that Babu also came and saw me. I could have no fun with him either.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5968. Also C.W. 3285. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

419. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

May 8, 1932

CHI. MANU,

I have already described my experiences in England which were worth describing. After all, can I describe things as well as you do? If, however, you improve your handwriting, I will think about some other experiences in England and write about them.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7429. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

---

\(^1\) To the Dhulia District Jail to meet Pyarelal and Gulzarilal Nanda

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Kusum Desai”, 8-4-1932
420. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

May 8, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

You should try and understand the virtues of Mother India, and then cultivate them in yourself by degrees.1

If we think over everything which happens in the course of even one day, we feel giddy. If, then, we try to recollect every thing that happened during a number of years, would we not become mad?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3988. Also C.W. 34. Courtesy: Pushpabehn N. Naik

421. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

May 8, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

Your handwriting this time was a little better. If you take sufficient care every time, it is bound to improve. I cannot answer questions about what this or the other thing is made of. You should put such questions to Premabehn or somebody else there.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9427. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel

422. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

May 8, 1932

MISS RAIHANA,

What have you been doing, sitting idle there? What a teacher you are! I have now procured a copy-book for improving my handwriting. I will start doing exercises in it from today or tomorrow. I have also been studying the Urdu readers. The thing is that I am ambitious to do much but can spare only limited time. Let us see. All I do I do in the name of God and for His work. He will lead me where

1 Vide also “Letter to Pushpa S. Patel”, 3-4-1932 and “Letter to Pushpa S. Patel”, 24-4-1932
He wishes. You know what you sang the other day:

Open your eyes a little
You careless one, turn your mint to God.
What you would tomorrow, do today
What you would today, do right now.

I am of course trying to do the thing just now. It is in His hands to lead me to the goal.¹

I will not write more of the Urdu exercise today. In the midst of several other things to do, I cannot find for it the time I would wish to give. I hope the climate of Mount Abu has benefited Father, you and all others. Does Hamida still have difficulty about [digesting] food? How many of you are at Mount Abu? I have never seen it in my life.

Do you know very well Dahyabhai, son of uncle Sardar? Father of course does. His wife, Yashoda, died nine days ago, leaving a small child behind. Dahyabhai has been much upset. He was here to see us on Saturday. Tell Father about this if he does not already know.

If you have all returned to Baroda by now, find out from among Father’s books Amir Ali’s Spirit of Islam and send it for Sardar. Mahadev and I have read it, but Sardar has not.

All three of us are happy here. It is hotter here than it usually is at this time of the year.

Did Sohaila accompany, or has she accompanied, you to Abu? Kamal must be growing fast. Give my dearest love to him.

To all of you, our salaam, aadaab, vandemataram or blessings as may be proper and fitting, and to Father bhrrr from me.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9643

423. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 8, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. It is very good that you are staying with Father-in-law. Do not think too much. Do what service you can and always have Ramanama in your heart.

¹ Up to this the letter is in Urdu.
I have not yet come to a decision about meeting people. I shall write to Mehta when I make up my mind.

I have Anand’s letter. You should write to me every week.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi: Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

424. CLEANLINESS, TRUTHFULNESS, PURITY, NEATNESS

May 9, 1932

Now that I have succeeded today in acquiring over the Magan spinning-wheel brought by Dhiru enough elementary control to satisfy me, I feel sufficiently free in my mind to pay attention to the appearance of the wheel. Vallabhbhai’s sharp eyes detected a spider’s web on it, and he immediately joked about it. I discovered now the real source of Manibehn’s great love of neatness. The envelopes in which I seal the letters for the Ashram are an illustration of this quality of Vallabhbhai’s. Anybody who has not seen these envelopes should do so immediately. Along with neatness, they exemplify great economy. The letters which I write from here do not require very long envelopes. It will, therefore, be observed that two envelopes are made out of the original one. The brown paper which comes here in the form of packets, etc., is preserved and then used for making new flaps for the envelopes.

This was by way of introduction. I noted Vallabhbhai’s comment, but at the moment I was impatient to try the spinning-wheel. The doctor had been advising me not to use the left hand even for turning the wheel. Hence I thought that, if I could rotate the wheel with either foot, probably I would not have to drop spinning for a single day. In my impatience to acquire control in managing the spinning-wheel as soon as possible, I let the web remain where it was. But I felt confident today that I would be able to work with my right hand, and so began observing the poor condition of the spinning-wheel. I saw that there was not only one web, but that there were webs in seven or eight places. And the entire spinning-wheel was covered with dust. The brass spindle-bearers were covered with a sticky layer of grease and dust. There was plenty of dust on the wooden boards too. This should be deemed unpardonable. The spinning-wheel is the divine weapon of Daridranarayana. It is the chief means of worship. By neglecting it and allowing it to be covered with dust, we show lack of reverence for Him. Generally, temples, mosques and other places of worship are kept clean. But we believe that every spot on the earth is as sacred as a temple. There is no place anywhere where God is not present. To us, therefore, our bedrooms, dining rooms, libraries, lavatories—all these are sacred as temples and should be kept clean as such. All the more so a spinning-wheel. If we really believe in its power, none of us, from the very young to the old, would ever let a spinning-wheel remain unclean.

1 This was sent along with ‘Letter to Narandas Gandhi’, 4/9-5-1932; vide the following item.

I have already referred once to the cat’s love of cleanliness. Recently I observed more evidence of it. She gave birth to two kittens about a month and a half ago. Their ways are wonderful. The three are rarely found separated. The mother cat lets the kitten suck whenever they indicate their desire. The two cling to her and suck at the same time. It is a sublime sight. The mother has no feeling of false shame about the matter. She does not perform all actions in public and anywhere. As soon as the kitten could walk and play, she taught them the procedure to be followed for defecation. She withdrew to a quiet spot where the earth was soft and dug out a small hollow. She put the kitten in position over the hollow, afterwards covered the excreta with earth and made the spot as clean as it was before. The kittens now follow that procedure every day. They are a brother and a sister. Four days ago, one of them was trying to dig a hollow in the earth, but the ground was rather hard. The other one went to its help and the two together dug out a hollow of the required size. After defecation, they covered up the excreta with earth and left the place. Why should we not willingly do what these creatures—even the little ones—do?

The four words in the title are intended to suggest the same meaning. Since we are conscious of ourselves as souls, our cleanliness must be both internal and external. The former means truthfulness. Truthfulness is the essence of purity, and is also another name for neatness. If we are neat and tidy outwardly but have unclean minds, we make a false show or are guilty of pure hypocrisy, or that may be a sign of our lustfulness. Thus, for men and women who strive to lead a life of self-control, outward neatness is of value only if it is a sign of inner purity.

Our holiest temple is our body. We should take care not to let it be infected with any impurity from outside. We should not sully the purity of the mind with evil thoughts. Anybody who follows this ideal of cleanliness will display neatness and tidiness in everything he does. That would be his instinctive behaviour.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

425. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 4/9, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. Both the letter and the accompanying comments of Premabehn I found very useful. I think you have become somewhat impatient. The one virtue of your character which I value most is that you never undertake any work beyond your strength, do thoroughly whatever you take up and never lose your peace of mind. We see a combination of these three virtues in very few persons. I think you have shown it in your character. It is now very necessary to take care that you do not lose this precious asset through impatience. Everybody is not capable of doing everything. We see a few persons who do many things but most people can do only a few things. It is enough that you belong to the former class. Provided you take care of your health and preserve your peace of mind and remain cheerful, I will say nothing against your taking upon yourself as much responsibility as you wish. But one forgets this condition when one becomes impatient. Maganlal forgot it and he paid a heavy price for it. We should learn from his mistake. Premabehn believes that you have taken upon yourself such a heavy burden that your body cannot bear the strain for long.\(^1\) Kusum also seems to agree with her. Think over this and make whatever changes may be necessary. If you have been hasty about anybody else, too, in any matter, you should rectify your mistake. I think the following rules should be observed.

1. Everyone should get one hour which he may spend as he likes. Nobody should spend it in any work or activity which is part of

\(^1\)Vide also “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 7-5-1932

350 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
his daily routine.

2. The period of silence at prayer-time should be increased from one minute to five minutes. One person should keep his eyes open and, when the five minutes are over, give a mild stroke on the bell.

3. Spinning, etc., should be done only during the time left out of compulsory bodily labour like cooking, cleaning lavatories, helping in the dairy, working on the farm, washing and bathing, etc. All these are essential activities. We should so arrange our daily programme that we are able to do full justice to them.

4. Sufficient time should be allowed to a person to leave one duty and take up another.

5. If, as a result of arranging the work in this manner, it becomes necessary to engage paid labourers, you must engage a sufficient number of them. But we should not treat them as labourers. We should see to it that they get proper accommodation and clothes to wear and gradually we should draw them towards the Ashram rules. These rules should be explained to them before they are engaged.

6. If you can reduce the activities and do without paid labourers, that would certainly be the best course.

7. Everybody, whether grown-up or young, must go to bed as soon as it is nine. Children under 12 should go to bed at eight.

You may revise these rules from time to time in the light of your experience there. Though I think about these matters from here and raise issues for you to think over, you should carry out my suggestions only to the extent practicable. I hope you do not discharge any labourers who are prepared to observe our conditions. Though they work for wages, I regard them as inmates of the Ashram. I had a long talk with Kusum, and so I do not say anything about the matter here. Giridhari came and saw me recently. Manibehn Parikh also was one of the party. I cannot describe Dhiru’s health as satisfactory. I got Dr. Sharma’s books. I also got Jodanikosh, etc.

The yarn spun by Chhakkaddas appears very clean and even in texture like silk. I see that he has taken great care in spinning it. Mahadev thinks that the count probably does not exceed 20. I have not examined the yarn carefully from that point of view. But even if

---

1 The standard dictionary of Gujarati orthography published by the Gujarat Vidyapith.
Mahadev is right, I would rate yarn of 20 counts which is strong and even in texture much higher than yarn of 40 counts which is weak and uneven in texture.

I am glad that Nimu has returned. Will her mother stay there? I should be happy if she does. Ask Nimu to write to me every week without fail. If she does, she will also be able to give some news which I may convey to Ramdas.

Jamna must run away to Bombay. What is the name of the doctor who extracted Mathew’s tooth? I think Mathew should be permitted to go and visit his father. It seems to me that by and by he will become a fine worker. He is good-natured and gentle and his intentions are always good.

I have already written to you that Gangabehn again requires asatotida powder and chaiaarj, the same quantity as you sent before. Mahadev got the parcel addressed to him. It seems certain now that the packet received from Jethalal has been lost. What did it contain? Who has signed the receipt?

If it is the rule in a jail to handcuff a prisoner when he is taken out and if a prisoner is so handcuffed he should not protest but, on the contrary, should cheerfully submit to being handcuffed. This has been my view from the very beginning. When I was taken out of jail in Pretoria and brought to a court to give evidence in a case, I was handcuffed. I welcomed that, for I did not regard myself as different from other prisoners and never desired treatment different from theirs. Today also I do not desire such treatment. That there should be improvement in the treatment of prisoners is a separate issue, and the change should be brought about mostly by the efforts of people outside. Prisoners can bring about a change only by obeying the harshest prison rules. There is only one exception to this, which is really not an exception, namely, that a prisoner ought not to submit to anything which is humiliating. The law does not permit humiliation of prisoners. This may be taken as my general view. Only those who had taken a vow to spin regularly before the struggle started may insist on being permitted to spin in jail. There are very few such persons. I cannot write more than this on this subject. I have already written to you about Parvati. You did all right in giving one hundred

---

1 Vide "Letter to Narandas Gandhi", 28-4-1932, 2-5-1932
2 Containing a report of the khadi centre at Anantpur and fifty rupees to Champa. We cannot be very rigid in such matters. I have not received the cotton yet. There is no hurry, of course, since I have already received four pounds from Lady Vithaldas.

May 9, 1932

I got the cotton. The papayas were excellent. The bread also was very good. The cotton parcel cost a little too much. But that is bound to happen sometimes. The machine for crushing almonds was used the very next day after it arrived. It saved much labour. I have written about cleanliness this time and what I have said should be carefully borne in mind. Why did Dhiru bring the spinning-wheel in such dirty condition? Try and find out if Gangadevi gave any personal service to Totaram which some other woman also can give, and appoint someone for the purpose. Are his requirements of food being looked after? Jamna should leave and go away to Bombay without delay. A list of 38 letters accompanies.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8225. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

426. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

May 9, 1932

Bismillah

CHIRANJIVI RAIHANA,

Please do not laugh at the sight of this! Remember I am writing a copy-book, I am trying to learn to write exactly as children do. Just when, tired with other work, I had started writing this, your much-awaited letter arrived. Father and Mother are both very clever people and they know that my views very much resemble theirs. That is why they ask you to follow my advice. They have thus contrived to deprive you of your freedom. And this innocent, crazy girl is now a prisoner of old people. Let us see what happens. After all, it does not matter that people like you and me are always drawn into their net. The visit to Mount Abu seems to have done you no good.¹

I hope this is enough for today. I take a great deal of time to

¹ Vide the preceding item.

² Up to this the letter is in Urdu.
write even such a hand as this. God has given you the gift of singing bhajans. Go on doing that, serve your elders as best as you can, and live contented. Contentment also is a form of service in itself. Send me what Pashabhai has written. There is no harm in his going to America. It will be enough if he takes every step after careful thought. Moreover, you are there to guide him. Tell Hamida to write to me as soon as she leaves. I had expected a letter from Rohini. Many blessings to Kamalmiyan. Many . . . ‘. I hope some day to give him a slap or two. My bhrrr to the white beard. Tell all that we think of them every day. Some topic or other always crops up. It is like what Hazarat says in his ghazal. Even if one tries, not to think about a thing, one does think about it. Some things one cannot remember though one would like to, and some others one cannot forget though one tries to. He never lets our wishes be fulfilled. I was glad that you wrote the ghazal in the Gujarati script.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]
Uncle Sardar has made it his occupation to add to the country’s wealth by making such envelopes. Did I tell you this before?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9642

427. LETTER TO TOTARAM SANADHYA

May 9, 1932

BHAI TOTARAMJI,

I am overjoyed to learn that you are not grief tricken over Gangadevi’s death.2 The grief can be only out of self-interest. As for Gangadevi, she is released from pain and has undoubtedly attained a nobler state. We are all thankful to you. Chhaganlal and Gangabehn have expressed sorrow. Chhaganlal grieves for her, remembering all her kindness to his children.

To me Gangadevi was the personification of renunciation, and her renunciation was combined with detachment which made it enduring. It was an example to be emulated by us all. I have found in you the quality of detachment. Do tell me if there is any exaggeration

1 Omission as ill the source
2 Vide “Telegram to Gangabehn Vaidya”, 6-5-1932 in my statement. And if what I say is correct, send short memoirs of Gangadevi.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2531

428. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA N. KHARE

May 10, 1932

CHI. RAMBHAI.

You now seem to be doing your duties very well. Give complete rest to the arm which has sustained injury. I have now acquired fairly good control over the Magan spinning-wheel. Truthfulness is the first step in culture.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 292. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

429. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

May 10, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

We should not follow anybody. If you wish to get your hair cropped, you should go ahead and do so. You will not then feel the weight of hair on your head. Your time will be saved, and there will be no more dirt in the hair. However, if you wish you may let your hair remain. Don’t mind if people call you a bear. That is only a good-humoured jest.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9443. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel

430. A LETTER

May 10, 1932

When deciding what one’s duty is, many questions may arise. But when examining the teaching of the Gita, we have only to consider what Arjuna’s question was. If a teacher goes beyond the scope of the question put to him, he would be a bad teacher, for the questioner’s attention would be fixed on his question and he would be in no fit state of mind to listen to other things. The discussion may even be beyond his capacity and may, therefore, bore him. Further, the reply to his question is likely to get lost in the discussion about irrelevant issues, in the same way that plants of grains in a field sometimes get buried under the weeds which grow round them. From this point of view, Krishna’s reply to Arjuna is perfect. And when we leave Chapter I and come to Chapter II, we find that it breathes the pure spirit of ahimsa. We should not, believing or claiming that Shri Krishna is the most perfect avatar of God, expect that we can get from his words a simple reply to every question that may arise in our minds in the same manner that we can find the meaning of a word by looking up a dictionary. Even if we could find such replies, that would do us harm, for in that case nobody would strive for further advance or new discoveries. Man’s reason would simply atrophy. Thus, the people of every age should strive to solve the problems of that age by their own hard labour and tapascharya. We should, therefore, try to solve the problems which arise in the present age in regard to war and other issues with the help of the principles enunciated in a noble work like the Gita. But even such help will be negligible. We shall get real help only from what we learn through tapascharya. Books on Ayurveda describe the properties of innumerable herbs and plants. We may read those descriptions for guidance. But the knowledge so gained will be useless, may even be burdensome, if the properties attributed to those herbs and plants do not pass the test of actual experience. We have to seek solutions to the many difficult problems of life in exactly the same manner. If you still wish to ask me any questions on this subject, please do.

[From Gujarati]

431. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

May 11, 1932

CHI. DEVDAS,

Yesterday, the 10th, I got the letter you wrote on the 1st. It was not delayed here. According to me, this delay is not too long in the case of a prisoner. After all, what is the value of his time? 13/12 rupees per hour, for I think daily expense on account of a prisoner comes to Rs. 13. I think personally that the weakness of my hands is a symptom of old age. Don’t most old people suffer from some weakness or other? We should remember that this weakness was there even when I... used to take milk. Had it not been so, I would have perhaps got alarmed and resumed taking milk. Has any of my experiments done me harm in the long run? The only such case which I can remember is that of the last experiment, that is, Gopalrao’s experiment. I was hasty in starting it and waited too long before giving it up. I persisted in it even though people were falling ill one after another. From the economic point of view the experiment was a good one and Gopalrao had great faith in it. Excepting this one, my impression about all other experiments is that I had benefited from them physically and spiritually. This time I am wide awake. I don’t attach too much importance to the experiment. After I am released from jail, I think I shall have to take milk and, therefore, here I wish to do without it only if I can do so without harm. There is not the slightest cause for worrying about my health, as I have maintained my weight.

I will certainly go through the Urdu books which you have mentioned, when they come. This time I had intended to take up Urdu at a somewhat later stage since I wished to do some other reading before. But Raihana began writing a few Urdu sentences in her letters to me and I thought that it would be good to reply to her in Urdu. By and by I appointed her to be my Urdu teacher, and asked her to send me the corrections in the Urdu I wrote every week. Of course this cannot satisfy me. Hence I took out from the jail library here Urdu readers and began to study them. As my Urdu handwriting is very bad, I have now procured a copy-book and some tracing paper. I am now trying to see how deep I can go into this study. On the one hand is this Urdu, and on the other the Magan spinning-wheel. I am now giving my whole self to the Magan wheel since I had already decided to please Prabhudas and to test and utilize his abilities, and since to add to this the doctors here insisted on my giving complete rest to the left hand, which was possible only if I drew the yarn with the right hand and rotated the wheel with my foot. I find it difficult to move the wheel with the foot and to draw the yarn with the right hand. But I am confident that I shall succeed. Some time ago I felt that I had acquired the necessary control, but lost it, today again I feel that I have partly regained it, though spinning in this manner takes quite a lot of time. And third is Ruskin. The study of economics, which was the fourth, has been suspended for the present. The fifth thing is Maithilisharan’s Saket, which I wish to read carefully. Mahadev and I have already read it once, and Vallabhbhai also has read it. It seems to be a fine work. I am sure if you secure a copy there and read it, you also will like it. For you it will be very easy reading. I shall send the book to you from here if you cannot get a copy from the Kalyan office. And the sixth is watching the stars. I have taken this up quite seriously. During the day I read something on the subject and at night observe the particular stars carefully enough to be able to recognize them afterwards. I wonder why I did not take serious interest in this subject earlier. I always wished to do so, but the desire was not sufficiently strong to make me take up the pursuit immediately. But now I see that everybody ought to cultivate as much acquaintance with the denizens of the sky as he conveniently can. I believe that millions of people can, without much difficulty, acquire enough knowledge of them for their own satisfaction and raise themselves spiritually. Anybody who tries to study the stars from a spiritual point of view will easily experience true joy of the heart and will be filled with greater devotion to God. I do not know whether this is true of all, but I do know that such was the effect on me and that is why I have kept up the practice. Probably you get no opportunity to see the sky at night. When do they lock you up? We three sleep directly under the sky. Opposite we see the Venus shining, to our right is the Great Bear, and to the left the Swastika (the Southern Cross). Leo roars right over our heads and Jupiter, too, is straight above us. I read in Gujarati Hasan Nizami’s Kavan Charit. It did not make on me the impression it did on you. When I read it I was not prejudiced against him, still I did not feel that his motive was pure. His language seems to be good, but for anybody who wants to read Urdu books for the sake of language there are many others equally good. If one does not mind difficult words, Shibli’s language has no small power. I am sure you will like Upton Sinclair’s Wet Parade. There are many others of his books at the Ashram. I got only two here, all the rest are there. As for Mahadev’s view of your capacity for losing books, you will know it from what follows. You should not readily accept their “no” to your demand for a spinning-wheel. Carry on a courteous fight for it. I will look into the book on health when it arrives. Mahadev certainly did not receive the letter written to him from Delhi. Lakshmi writes to me regularly and so do I to her.

1 The reference is to the unfired food experiment in 1929

Mahadev may or may not write to Durga a letter which will be a letter according to you. But he asks me to add this here: His charge against you about losing books referred to the loss of as many as 80 books at the jail gate in 1930. It was the goodness of the stranger that he delivered them to us, but his goodness does not mitigate your carelessness. If Mahadev had your company as he had twice formerly, he would have been much happier. Sometimes when cooking he remembers you and recalls the Lucknow days when you did joint cooking. When carding he remembers you daily (since you helped him in carding everyday). And he unfailingly remembers you whenever he gets a good book to read (though he does not get much time to read, despite his having a whole heap of books with him, for spinning and carding take up four or five hours in the morning, then he spends two hours with me, and writing the diary in detail also takes up some time). He remembers you when recalling memories of our stay in England, when singing bhajans at the time of prayer, when taking soda-water in the evening, etc., etc. If you read the Gitarahasya' in Hindi why didn’t you read it in the Marathi original? If you can read the whole of Shibli’s volume you can make from it a beautiful book in Gujarati describing incidents in the Prophet’s life. Kaka, Narahari, Mani and Prabhudas, all four of them underwent considerable suffering at Belgaum, but the problems have been nearly solved now. I am in correspondence with all, (though not as regularly as I am with you). But of course how long will the thing last! Among newspapers, besides The Time [of India] we get The Leader, The [Bombay] Chronicle, The Hindu, and The Tribune. Mahadev does not get much time to read them. You know his indifference in the matter, but he pastes a good many cuttings. (It is Sardar who reads the papers to us both.) The load of correspondence is getting heavier day by day. In addition to the Ashram post, we get quite a good number of letters from other places (that is, from England and America). The entertaining letter¹ which Romain Rolland wrote to an American friend about our stay with him has been published in India. You will find quite a good deal of useful material from Mahadev’s Diary and his album of cuttings—he keeps copies of important correspondence too. Jamnalalji, Pyarelal, Vinoba, and Manilal Kothari, all of them are happy in the Dhulia jail. Mathuradas and Kishorelal are at Nasik, Ramdas, Chhaganlal, Surendra and others are here, Kanti and other youngsters are at Visapur, and most of the Ashram women excepting Ba are here—I am in fairly regular correspondence with all’ these.

¹ Commentary on the Bhagavad Gita by B. G. Tilak
² Vide “Romain Rolland’s Letter to An American Friend”, 12, 1931
Have you heard that Sardar’s son, Dahyabhai, lost his wife? For poor Yashoda, it was a real deliverance, since her life was a living death to her.¹

The envelope containing this letter was made by Vallabhbhai. We thus try to save every pie. Blessings from us all should always be understood.

BAPU

SJT. DEVDAAS GANDHI
‘A’ CLASS PRISONER
DISTRICT JAIL
GORAKHPUR, U.P.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2016

432. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS
May 11, 1932
DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I got a letter from you after a long time. Do not give up the work which you have begun. Look upon it as part of your education.

Why should we not treat everybody as a friend? Exclusive friendships may even result in bitterness. But our life will be full of joy if we regard everybody as a friend.

If you wish to spare the time required for the preparation of dramatics, etc., from the hours of manual work, you should consider whether the others can do without your help. We should do what farmers¹ and shepherds¹ children do. Why not spare the time for dramatics from the study hours? Think over this and let me know.

BAPU

From a microfilm Of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

433. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI
May 11, 1932
CHI. MANU,

Your handwriting was good this time. Your weight should improve. I am glad that you have started spinning. How many rounds do you spin [per hour]?¹

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7430. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

¹ What follows is in Gandhiji’s hand.
434. LETTER TO PADMA

May 11, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

I got your letter. Rambhau and Dhiru told me in their letters the very same thing that you did. When it becomes impossible to use my hand now, I rotate the wheel with my foot. Since the slivers are very bad, my speed does not exceed 100 rounds. When I start using better slivers, it will go at any rate to 160.

As regards your digestion, take the measures I have described in my letter to Sarojini. In addition to them, you should drink in the morning a glass of warm water with ten grains of soda mixed in it.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6133. Also C.W. 3485.Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

435. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,

May 11, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

I can say that your speed in spinning on the takli is quite good. You will stand first.

Aminabehn’s children have taught [the lesson] that parents should observe self-restraint.¹ They were only children. Men and women who observe celibacy can have no children. If there are no births, there will be fewer to die. When you grow up, won’t it be good if you practise self-restraint?

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11096. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

¹ Vide “Letter to Kusm Desai”, 8-4-1932 and “Letter to Secretary of Santram Ashram”, 8-4-1932
436. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

May 11/12, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I asked you about your weight and diet because I felt some doubt concerning your health. What was your highest weight in the past? Don’t they cook tomatoes or bhaji any time? They had decided to plant lettuce, what happened to that? You yourself can plant lettuce or fenugreek in a small bed. They will sprout in but a few days. You must include some fresh green leaves in your diet. Since one can eat them uncooked only in small quantities, growing them is no difficult matter. I don’t know why tomatoes cannot be grown all the year round. Ask someone.

I met Dhurandhar immediately [after he was brought here] and visit him from time to time, for I had come to know him closely during the March. Moreover, since I take interest in your life I take in his too, for your sake. This is an instance not of special love for an individual, but of non-violence. If we bear love for one person so that we feel aversion to others or cannot love them, then that would be an instance of special love. I believe that I bear no such love for any person. I do all that I do for you because I think you require such attention from me, because you expect it and because I believe it is in my interest to do so for I expect much from you. If you see practical shrewdness behind this attitude, I would not quarrel with you. Personally I think this is the mark of a non-violent nature.

I hope you have not forgotten about the Urdu books.

If all the people have decided to leave the Ashram at the same time, I do not approve of that. But now the Ashram has been in existence for so long that I would not argue about any matter nor complain against anything connected with it. Realizing that something is wrong somewhere, I try to get things right whenever such an occasion arises, and dissuade people from leaving it if I can do so without much trouble. If the Ashram is likely to be deserted completely and if you can stay behind cheerfully, do so, and leave when other workers return. However, it is for Narandas and you to decide what is the right course for you to adopt. How can I judge from here?

1 Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 1-5-1932
May 12, 1932

I send with this an article by Montessori in the weekly Hindu. Mahadev liked it and so I asked him to take out the cutting. Read it. See if you find anything in it worth accepting. Otherwise throw it away.

Sushila will be permitted to see me. If, therefore, you wish to bring her along when you come, you may do so.

I did not intentionally leave any of your questions unanswered. I still cannot recollect which question I left unanswered. If you ask it again, I will reply to it.

The problem about the type of education imparted in the Ashram is an old one. I don’t think it is proper to make any comparison with a boarding school. The whole burden is borne by Narandas, and he may, therefore, act as he thinks best. You can help him in arriving at a decision. Personally, I would apply one rule, namely, that the proposal should appeal to the children. Everything which they do unwillingly will fail in its aim and will have helped in perpetuating the tradition of compulsion. We can stop observing holidays if and only if the children welcome the idea.

I will not pass judgment about anything which you did in the Ashram school. If I were there, I would certainly interfere from time to time, but I will say nothing from here. As you follow the practice of self-examination, you will correct yourself whenever you go wrong.

I don’t know if I had tried to teach you knowledge of the Brahman, but in any case you betrayed your ignorance by claiming that you had it. The arguments which you went on to advance serve only to prove your ignorance. An intellectual understanding of the concept of the Brahman does not amount to a knowledge of It. Knowledge of the Brahman awakens in the heart. And it is not true that one who has attained to that state renounces all external activity. Outwardly, the spiritually awakened man and the ignorant may look alike, but the motives which inspire their activities are as poles asunder. Ramanama is not incompatible with knowledge of the Brahman. They may mean the same thing. Any person claiming knowledge of the Brahman, who feels polluted by Ramanama has fallen into the well of ignorance and is in a desperate condition. He who merely repeats Ramanama with his lips engages in a fruitless exercise and wastes his time. Knowledge of the Brahman and being happy in my presence are certainly not incompatible with each other;
if, however, my absence affects your devotion to duty, you have not attained knowledge of the Brahman but are in a state of ignorance. Anyone who claims to have such knowledge will in all probability be devoid of it. It is a knowledge which does not speak about itself—its presence is revealed by its own light. The sun does not have to testify to the fact of its light. We can see that it shines. We can say the same thing about knowledge of the Brahman.

When I had faith in British rule, I used to believe that it was for the ultimate good of the country, that it was inspired by noble motives. But I cannot discuss this question further.

I do not like the literature on sex that is being published in America.

BAPU

[PS.]

I do intend to write about it. When children ask questions, we should give them straight answers. I don’t know about the cinema, but stage performances have a place. For realizing God, the practice of non-attachment seems to me the best method. It includes everything.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10285. Also C.W. 6733. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

437. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

May 12, 1932

DEAR COLONEL DOYLE,

I am deeply grateful to you for the prompt reply you have sent in respect of my inquiry contained in my letter of the 4th instant. The addition of three ounces of ghee to Kaka Kalelkar’s diet certainly meets, if I may dare to say so, the physical needs of his constitution. The assurances contained in your letter do relieve me of considerable anxiety on the score of these friends of mine.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

1 Vide “Letter to E. E. Doyle”, 4-5-1932
438. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM GANDHI

May 12, 1932

I got your letter. It was a beautiful one. My statement that Jainism puts emphasis on pure nyaya has been slightly misunderstood by you. Pure nyaya may mean right policy or just decision, and ordinarily that is the sense in which we use the word. But I did not use it in that sense. I wanted to say that Jainism emphasizes logic, but that logic sometimes leads to wrong conclusions the consequences of which are fearful. This is not the fault of logic, but we do not always possess all the data necessary for arriving at a correct conclusion. Nor is every word understood by the hearer or the reader in the same sense in which it was used by the speaker or the writer. Hence the heart, that is bhakti, faith and first-hand experience, is given a higher place than logic. Logic is a purely intellectual process. We should not care in the least if logic, that is intellect, cannot understand what is self-evident to the heart. On the contrary, sometimes our intellect is convinced of certain ideas which the heart does not accept. We should, then, reject them. You will be able to think of any number of illustrations which will explain my point. In the sense in which I have used the word nyaya above, it can never be an end in itself. Both nyaya and the yoga of desireless work are means. The former belongs to the sphere of the intellect, the latter is a matter of the heart. We cannot cultivate desirelessness with the help of the intellect.

Now I will deal with the issue which you have raised. Compassion and ahimsa are not two different things. Compassion is not opposed to ahimsa. Anything which is so opposed is not true compassion. We can describe compassion as the concrete expression of ahimsa. It is a contradiction in terms to describe any man as free from attachment and without compassion. A person who is free from attachment should have a compassionate heart as large as the ocean.

---

1 “Who wrote that according to the Jains even compassion is included in attachment (raga), albeit a desirable one, and therefore Bapu’s action in putting an ailing calf out of pain was not worthy of vitaraga (one who is free from attachment)” The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, pp. 108-9.

2 Vide ”Letter to Purushottam Gandhi”, 18-41932
And when such compassion embraces millions, to say that, though sattvik, it is not free from attachment is to betray ignorance of the meaning of the word or else to give it a new meaning. Generally, we use the word in the sense in which Tulsidas has used it. His meaning is clear in the following doha:

```
1
```

Here, compassion is used as a synonym for ahimsa. Perfect ahimsa is possible only in the atman in its disembodied state. But when the atman takes on a body, ahimsa manifests itself in one as the feeling of compassion. Considered from this point of view, my mercy-killing of the calf was an expression of the purest ahimsa. To endure suffering in one’s own person is the very nature of the atman, but it is contrary to its nature to make or let others suffer. If the mercy killing of the calf had been prompted by a desire to relieve my own pain [at its suffering], the act was not ahimsa, but to end the calf’s pain was ahimsa. Indeed, ahimsa implies inability to endure other creatures suffering pain. From such inability arise compassion, heroism and all other virtues associated with ahimsa. It is perverse logic to argue that we should be able to look on while others suffer. Again, it is not always true that death is more painful for human beings than anything they may suffer in life. I think that it is we ourselves that have made death the terror it is. The so-called savages do not have the same fear of death. The martial races also have very little of it. And in the West a school of thought is spreading whose followers would prefer to end their lives rather than go on living in extreme pain. I think that the assumption of excessive fear of death proceeds from ignorance or dry theorizing. Because of that assumption, we, and especially the Jains, have perverted the meaning of ahimsa, with the result that true ahimsa has practically disappeared. A woman who jumps into a well in anger may clutch at a rope offered to her, but one who has jumped into it deliberately under the force of some belief, whatever it be, will disdain to avail herself of a rope even if offered to her. The practice of harakiri among the Japanese is a well known example of this. Whether that practice is the result of right knowledge or ignorance is beside the point. Here I am only pointing out that there are countless instances in which men prefer death to life. In the West they kill animals whose condition is hopeless and who suffer extreme pain, and behind this

1 Couplet

2 “Compassion is the source of dharma and pride is the source of sin (or, the ego is the cause of the body).”
practice lies the belief that they do not experience much fear of death, and that they will prefer death to suffering pain beyond a certain limit. This idea may not be true, and it is, therefore, our duty to behave towards animals as if life was as dear to them as it is to human beings.

If you accept so much, it is not very necessary to consider the matter from a social point of view or from the point of view of our duty towards society. Where the people have regard for ahimsa, there is little risk of the example of my killing the calf being misused. Where people have no such regard, in any case animals are killed. Thus, my action is not likely to increase violence to animals. When killing the calf, it was not necessary for me to know all the possible consequences of my action. If it was certain that the calf would never die in any other manner, I should of course have paused before killing it. In other words, if it were the case that nobody but I could have ended the calf’s life, it would have been necessary for me to think of all the possible consequences of my action. But the fact is that all creatures, calves as much as we, live with the possibility of death always hanging over us. Therefore, the utmost that could have happened was that the calf would have lived for a few days or months or a year more. These considerations are not irrelevant to the case, since my motive was disinterested and my only aim was to end the pain of the calf. We may, therefore, say that even if there was any error in my reasoning, no harmful consequence to the calf followed which would never have followed but for my action.\(^1\) Ask me again and again till you have understood the point. The subject is an important one and the explanation deserves to be carefully grasped. It is easy to grasp, and once it is grasped you will be able to deduce many other consequences from it.

It is undoubtedly true that my approach to the problem attacks certain generally accepted beliefs. But I do believe that we, that is Hindus, have become so full of cowardice and inertia that the true essence of ahimsa is forgotten and the thing has come to be identified with superficial concern for the lives of lower creatures. In its essence, ahimsa is a powerful emotion of the heart which finds expression in numerous forms of service. If it manifests itself in its perfection even

---

\(^1\) The rest of the paragraph is from the C.W. copy.
in one human being, its light would be far more powerful than that of the sun. But where do we find such ahimsa today?\(^1\)

[From Gujarati]

439. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 12, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

You have advanced far ahead of Mangala in spinning on the takli. That is wonderful.

It is good that you and Mani do the cleaning together.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11078. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

440. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 13, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

In the hope that you would get this on or before Monday, I write in reply to your unexpected letter received today.

It is well if you do without the fountain pen. But what we must aim at is the correct attitude. This brings about lasting and drastic changes. A detailed local treatment must go hand in hand with a penetrating search after the root cause, the desire to possess. It is possible to conceive a person not being poor in spirit though he may

\(^1\) Mahadev Desai explains: “While the above was being dictated, we had a discussion about the two readings in Tulsidas’s verse: Bapu said, “‘I have heard both of them, but I prefer to read deha (body).’” I remarked that the Vedantic idea that pride is the root of the body did not fit in well here. Perhaps the poet wanted to say that mercy is the root of religion and pride is the root of sin. Bapu said, “‘If we read deha, he means that the body being the root of pride is an obstacle in the way of mercy. But to spend ourselves to the uttermost in service is purest mercy. This mercy should be cherished as long as we live.’” I objected that that was so but it was not what the poet meant to say. Again Bapu’s interpretation was too subtle for the common man, while he could easily understand that pride is the root of sin. In any case, the latter half of the verse had nothing to do with the subject-matter of the letter.” (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 111) have nothing, because he is jealous of those who possess. He has nothing, but feels the deprivation. Another may have by him a golden footstool which he is seen using in order to save his feet from treading on hot ashes, but which he converts into cash for the poor the very next moment and feels the delight of dispossession. This is not to criticize what you have done but to enforce it, if it is at all necessary or possible.

You will come as soon as you can, bringing with you anyone who may wish to come and who is permitted to come. Pyare Ali and Noorbanu can come. Not yet Damodardas whose name is still under consideration. You should go to Pyare Ali’s place and there see Amina’s children and Tilak. Of course, Tilak can come if he wants to. There is immediately the question of poverty. But I would not bring it up in his case if he has a desire he cannot restrain.

Your left-hand writing is certainly steadier than mine. You will, in a short time, write as well with the left as you do with the right hand.

I am delighted Sofia is with you. I have met her. It is just like her to join you in prayer so heartily. Give her my love. I would almost wish for her sake that she had you longer than you would be. Let her write to me if ever she has a month when she has nobody else in particular to write to. That could not be I am sure. But who can say?

Magan wheel has caused me trouble, but I am gaining mastery over it. Ground-nuts are gone. Vallabhbhai and Mahadev frightened me and I have allowed myself to be frightened. My weight has gone up to 105\(\frac{1}{2}\) again.

Love from us all.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6221. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9687

441. WONDROUL SELF-SACRIFICE

May 15, 1932

Sometimes a lesson in even an ordinary school reader teaches us a great moral. Recently I have been reading an Urdu reader. Some of the lessons in it are very good. One of them produced a profound effect on me. Thinking that it may have such effect on others too, I give here a summary.

---

1 Presumably, this was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 13/15-5-1932; vide the following item.

A few years after the death of the Prophet, there was a great battle between the Arabs and the Romans. On both sides large numbers of warriors were killed and a great many wounded. Every evening the fighting would stop. One evening after the fighting had ended an Arab warrior went round the battlefield to find his cousin. If he found the cousin dead, he would bury the body, and if he found him alive he would treat his wounds. Thinking that the cousin might be thirsting for water, this Arab carried a jug full of water.

As, with lamp in hand, he made his way through the bodies of warriors lying wounded and crying in pain, he found his cousin and indeed he was thirsting for water. His wounds were bleeding profusely. There was little hope of his remaining alive. The Arab held out the jug of water before him. Just then they heard a wounded warrior crying pitifully for water. The cousin felt compassion for that man and asked the Arab to go first to him and give him water. The latter immediately went in the direction from which they had heard the cry.

This wounded man crying for water was a big chieftain. As he was about to take the jug of water from the Arab, they heard somebody else crying for water. This chieftain, like the Arab’s cousin, was a man of compassion. With great difficulty, he uttered a few words and made gestures to the Arab and explained to him that he should first go to that other person and, give him water. Feeling miserable, the Arab ran to the place from which the cries had come. But the moment he reached there, the wounded warrior breathed his last and closed his eyes. The water had arrived too late. The Arab quickly returned to where the wounded chieftain was lying. He found that the chieftain, too, was dead. With a heavy heart and praying to God, the Arab went back to where his cousin lay, and found that his pulse, too, had stopped and he had died.

Thus, none of the three got water. But the first two won immortal fame. The pages of history abound in such instances of pure self-sacrifice, and, if they are narrated by a master of the pen, we even shed a few tears over them. But I have narrated this wonderful story here with the hope that it may inspire in us the spirit of self-sacrifice displayed by those two brave warriors and that, when such occasions arise, we will give water first to others before drinking it ourselves, will save others’ lives before saving our own and if, in trying to do so, we meet death, we will meet it with a smile on our face.
I think even more difficult than the sacrifice of water is that of air. Without it we cannot live even for a minute. That is why the whole world seems to have been filled with air. However, it does sometimes happen that men are locked up in a small room as in a cupboard. There is only one small hole letting in air, and only those who get this air are likely to survive and the others would die. We should pray to God that if ever we found ourselves in such a condition we would voluntarily give up our place near the hole.

Next to air comes water. We occasionally hear of men fighting for a glass of water. We should hope that if we find ourselves in such circumstances, we will have the spirit of self-sacrifice displayed by those brave Arabs. But very few people are tested in this manner. There are less severe tests which we face almost every day. Let all of us ask ourselves: Whenever we are confronted by such tests, do we always put our co-workers and neighbours before ourselves? If the answer is in the negative, then it means that we have failed in the test and that we have not learnt even the first lesson in non-violence.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

442. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[May 13/15, 1932]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I received two packets from you this time. I follow your argument that yarn of 16 counts will be cheaper than that of 20 counts. But I think we shall find that on the balance yarn of 20 counts is cheaper, for in spinning such yarn we shall have to remain vigilant all the time. The spindle, etc., will have to be kept in good condition. By “cheap” I do not mean here merely economical. I give to the word a spiritual sense. If, therefore, you see no other difficulty, insist on everybody spinning yarn of 20 counts and do it yourself, and see that the other conditions are also observed. If you find that this results in decrease in production for the time being, never mind. Probably you remember one thing which I suggested to you once or twice. We should reckon the value of all types of work at the same rate. In other words, if a person works for one hour, whether he spins or cards or weaves or does carpentry work or writes accounts or works on the farm, the value of his work should be the same. For the purpose of our record, I had suggested that the value should be one anna per hour of work. If all inmates of the Ashram above the age of ten, other than those who may be bedridden, have been working daily for an average of eight hours, I would say that the Ashram was self-supporting. This may seem just now to entail loss from the economic point of view, but ultimately the account will balance itself even from that point of view. Of course, in proceeding on this basis we assume that all inmates have been honest. Everybody must have used the time honestly. To make sure of this, we should have considered, when making the entry, whether the person had done as much work per hour as everybody doing that work was expected to do, and whether he had done it with proper care. I did not suggest that this record should take the place of the usual account that is kept. It does not require too many entries. The daily figure will be entered against everybody’s name; it may be one in some cases and two in others, and the figures will indicate the number of hours for which the person had worked. The figures will be entered only against those who pass the test in our eyes. I would call this a spiritual account. If we work in this manner, whatever the yield of our farm and our dairy I would describe those activities as self-supporting. Moreover, this plan assumes that the labourers will be as good as inmates of the Ashram and that we shall be satisfied with the vegetables, fruit and milk which we produce in the Ashram. These ideas have not sprung up in my mind recently. I have been discussing them ever since the establishment of the Ashram. I may not have discussed them at length with you, but I used to discuss them frequently with Maganlal. But till now they have remained as mere wishes. I am simply pouring out before you the stream of thoughts which started with reflections on the spinning yajna during the National Week. I do not wish that you should start implementing these suggestions right now. You are a steady man, and, therefore, I do not hesitate to put before you whatever ideas come to me. I don’t wish to confuse your mind in any way or start you worrying needlessly. There are persons who become impatient as soon as a new suggestion is put before them, immediately start implementing it and, failing in their attempt, get confused. In the result they will have given up the old practice but discovered nothing to take its place. I believe you do not have this weakness in your nature and that is why I throw out to you every new fancy which occurs to me. When you are fed up with this, please drop a hint and I shall calm down. From here I can give you no active help in your work, but within my limits I can help you with suggestions. But this help also I can give only if you receive the suggestions patiently, put each in the proper cabinet in your brain and weigh its practicability before acting on it. If, however, they become a burden on your brain, my sending them will serve no useful purpose.

1 From Bapuna Patro-9: Shri Narandas Gandhine, Vol. I, p. 368

Let me return for a while to the question of 20 counts. It is not quite correct that cloth woven from yarn of 16 counts lasts longer than cloth woven from yarn of 20 counts. If the cotton from which the yarn of 20 counts was woven was of sufficiently good quality and was properly carded, and if the yarn spun from it was strong enough and the weaving was sufficiently close, the cloth would certainly last longer than the cloth of 16 counts which we have with us now. The fact that the latter lasts longer only means this: Both the varieties of yarn which we spin, 16 counts and 20 counts, are weak. But the yarn of 16 counts is likely to be less weak comparatively, and such yarn can be spun even from cotton of inferior quality without its quality being affected. Hence the cloth woven from it may appear stronger than the cloth woven from the yarn of 20 counts. If we cling to this belief, we shall be responsible for spreading the notion that cloth woven from yarn of 16 counts is stronger than cloth from yarn of 20 counts, and, if my argument about yarn of 20 counts is correct, we shall also be responsible for encouraging work of bad quality. Up to a limit, the finer the count of the yarn which we are able to spin the better shall we be able to serve the poor, because that will raise the prestige of khadi.

I think we shall be able to demonstrate that it is not difficult to spin fine yarn which can be used for weaving cloth. Just now I give all my attention to learning to spin on the Magan spinning-wheel. But Mahadev has been experimenting with the slivers sent by Chhakkaddas. He has made some changes in the spindle-bearer, and these changes by themselves have enabled him to spin without any difficulty yarn of 36 counts from the slivers which he has been using all along. Previously he could spin yarn of 20 counts, then of 25 counts and now he can spin yarn of 36 counts. In the letter which I wrote to Lakshmidas yesterday I have explained how this improvement took place. Get that letter from him and read it. It is true, however, that Mahadev’s speed has decreased a little. When he was spinning yarn of 25 counts, his speed was 300 rounds per hour; it was 240 when the yarn was of 32 counts, and now for yarn of 36 counts it is 210 rounds per hour. This decrease does not alarm me in the least. When the count of the yarn becomes fixed, I am sure his speed will increase a little. My point is that by gradually learning to spin yarn of finer count, we are helping the cause of khadi. It seems you celebrated Maganlal’s anniversary in a most befitting manner.

Panditji, Lakshmibehn, Yashvant Prasad and Mathuri came and saw me. Manibehn was the oldest among the party, and hence I gave the letter to Harilal to her. While giving it I asked her and was told that all of them would return to the Ashram on the same day. Isent the letter with her, thinking that it would reach you earlier than by post. I feel helpless. I got one more letter from Harilal. In both letters I see pure insolence and total lack of shame. I don’t see in Bali the faults for which he blames her. She has been like a mother to Manu, and, therefore, it would be a cruelty on Manu to remove her from her charge. However, I cannot have in prison the information which you may get there. After knowing my views, therefore, do what seems best to you whenever you have to decide what to do.

There is no cause for worry about my hand. It pains when I work, but not at other times. If I feel that milk will help to cure the pain, I will certainly start taking it. The pain was there even when I used to take milk.

I see that Ratilal is a heavy responsibility on you. I have had two letters from Champa. She seems to have felt hurt for some reason. See what you can do to pacify her. She says that her younger brother wants to stay in the Ashram. If you think he can stay in the Ashram, take him in. Write to Harihar Sharma and ask him if he will take away Ratilal. I am afraid that even if he goes to Rangoon he will not stay there without Champa. And the latter does not wish to go there. I believe that she has good reasons for not wishing to go there.

Grant the permission desired by Ranganath Kulkarni to make a Marathi translation. None of the papers sent by Jethalal Govindji were reports about Anantpur. But I did get one letter from him. The prison authorities tell me that the reports must have been received, but that they seem to have been misplaced. Please, therefore, obtain their copies from him.

There is probably much exaggeration in the complaint you have received regarding the women. I will, however, inquire about the matter.

I sent to you the five names of intending visitors which were approved. The other names which have been approved are as under:

Indu Nehru, Jehangir Vakil (of Poona, Indu’s tutor) and his wife, Hemprabha Devi, Raihana, Hiravanti Mansukh lal, Chhaganlal, Rama (Ranchhodbhai’s) Prabhashankar (Champa’s father), Behram Kambhatta and his wife, Manjukesha, Sushila (Pyarelal’s sister), Sushila (Premabehn’s friend), Dinkar Mehta, Puratan Buch. You need not write to them. If Puratan comes to the Ashram any time, you can tell him that he may come whenever he wishes. I have given the list only for your information. If you know of any other persons who wish to visit and if they come within the conditions laid down by the Government, please send their names to me.

There is a letter from Mahavir. He writes in it that all of them are keeping good health and that, therefore, they should be permitted to stay on for a few months more. I think that they may be permitted to stay on. It would be advisable to fix the upper limit of their expenditure. I should like them to take up some work in Darjeeling. If you can think of any, please suggest it. I think you did write to me and tell me what their monthly expenditure was, but I have forgotten the figure. I think it would be good if they marry Maitri to someone in Darjeeling. She has certainly reached marriageable age. They wished to get her married to Khadgabahadur. But I don’t think he will agree. I have written directly to Maitri about this. Read that letter. If in the end they decide to stay permanently in Darjeeling and Mahavir starts earning, that would certainly be good. If you have thought about any suggestions in this regard or if any suggestion occurs to you in future, please let me know.

Ramdas writes and tells me that he has deposited some of his money in a certain bank and he wants the amount to remain where it is. I heard that Gopaldas, the Vidyapith graduate, has received serious injuries. Inquire about him and let me know the facts. If he is able to write, ask him to do so. Ask Chandrashankar to send me by registered post a copy of Maganbhai’s Mimansa. He should also write how he keeps.

Did Ba get my letter? I have had no letter from her at all. Did you read what Jamnadas said about Harilal? I am afraid the latter has misled you. Many persons write to me and tell me that he has abandoned all restraints. Haridas Gandhi’s health is fairly good. He is

1 Gopaldas Jivabhai Patel, who was seriously injured in a lathi-charge at a Congress meeting in Delhi

2 Maganbhai Desai’s thesis Satyagrahi Mimansa, for which he was awarded the degree of Samajvidya Parangat by the Vidyapith

3 He was one of the prisoners transferred from Sabarmati to Yeravda. being treated properly. His illness, however, is mental. Does his father visit him? Where is Kamala?

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8226.
Courtesy:Narandas Gandhi

443. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

May 15, 1932

CHI. MANU,

I got your letter. According to me, the most important benefit of your going there¹ will be improvement in your health and the good and bad experiences which you will get there. It will certainly be very good if you attain great proficiency in your medical studies, but see that you do not harm your health or let go opportunities for other experiences for the sake of your studies. Since you will have to study German, learn it sufficiently well to be able to read and understand German literature without difficulty. And you should be careful to create a good impression on the people about you, that is, about India. I have just received a letter from Walsh² in which he writes about you. Both he and Zimmermann impressed me as good men.

Do you meet any Indians there?

All three of us are well. Sardar and Mahadev send their blessings to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1005

444. LETTER TO MAHAVIR GIRI

May 15, 1932

CHI. MAHAVIR,

I got your letter. I cannot understand why you did not get mine. In future I will send through the Ashram my letters to you. All of you also should send your letters to me through the same channel. I hope the money has been sent to you. Please drop the idea of going to Kalimpong. If all of you keep good health, you may remain where you are. And everyone in the family should take up some work. What is everybody’s programme during the day? Do all of you keep a correct diary?

¹ To Germany
² Carlyle Walsh

How is it that I have had no letter from Maitri? Has Krishnamaiyadevi recovered now? With whom do you stay?

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6235

445. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

May 15, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

You should write in your diary anything which occurs to you. You can write even your most secret thoughts. Nothing concerning ourselves need be kept secret from other people, and you should not, therefore, worry who will read your diary. For that reason, however, you cannot record others’ short-comings or what anybody may have told you in confidence. Only the secretary of the Ashram or a person authorized by him has the right to read anybody’s diary. But, on our part, we should not wish our diary to be kept secret from any person.

You should not in any circumstances stop spinning on the _takli_ and be out of practice, no matter even if you can give to it only half an hour every day. Have you become methodical now?

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7498. Also C.W. 4975. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

446. LETTER TO PADMA

May 15, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

I advised you to come away because you asked for my opinion. If, however, you yourself wish to stay there, why need I ask you to come away? When Sitala Sahai comes there, ask him to write to me.
I have kept up spinning on the Magan spinning-wheel. Your suggestion was not found very useful. It did not solve my difficulties. If the wheel has not stopped in the desired position, I have often to use the hand to put it in that position. But I can use only one hand. The left hand is useless because of the pain in the elbow.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6141. Also C.W. 3493. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

447. LETTER TO SUSHILABEHN GANDHI

May 15, 1932

CHI. SUSHILA.

You are a very clever woman. I do not understand how you can say that you have been waiting for a letter from me, having written to everybody earlier to say that you were starting today. If now you do not get a letter, you may complain. I am glad that you have decided to stay there for the sake of Sita. I also did think sometimes whether it would be good for you and her to come over. Let me know how you are helping there and also write to me in detail about your daily programme of work. I am sure you have good company now. Ask Pragji to write to me in detail. How is Parvati? Will all of you stay together or separately?

All three of us are happy.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

The envelope in which this letter is being sent was made by Sardar. It was made from the paper in which the small parcels which we receive are wrapped. People like you living in a civilized country may not look with favour upon such gifts from a poor land. But what can we do? Seeing your palaces, should we destroy our cottages?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4788
448. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 15, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

Why did your hand shake? Why did your eyes burn? When the eyes burn, sprinkle hot and cold water. What was it, you had asked me about the rules of the kitchen? I do not remember. Write again.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11097. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

449. LETTER TO BHAU PANSE

May 15, 1932

CHI. BHAU,

I have your letter and also Vinoba’s discourse on the first chapter [of the Gita]. Follow it up by the second.

It will be good if all learn the new method of using takli. Which of you have learnt it? I hope you are keeping well.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6727. Also C.W. 4470. Courtesy: Bhau Panse

450. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

May 15, 1932

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

I got your letter yesterday. I had sent a prompt reply to your letter written from Gwalior. I addressed it to Gwalior which might be the reason of its non-receipt by you. Some of my letters are certainly missing. Malaviyaji’s enthusiasm as well as his optimism is worthy of emulation. We are all doing well. My diet so far continues to be the same and I am maintaining approximately the same weight. I hope Rameshwardas is well.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 7898. Courtesy: G.D. Birla
451. LETTER TO MAITHILISHARAN GUPTA

May 15, 1932

BHAII MAITHILISHARANJII,

I got your letter and the dictionary too. I received another copy of Saket with your annotations. The notes will be of great help to me. I will not bother you to send Hindi Shabdasagar. The Kalyan office might possibly send me one. Anyhow, I shall manage well enough with your notes and the dictionary. This correspondence about Saket cannot be made public for the present. The condition that no letters of mine will be published during my incarceration is implied in the permission for writing letters granted to me. And there is no harm in keeping this correspondence unpublished for some time. The inherent strength of Saket will by itself push it ahead. Mahadev had an experience of your affection, I was extremely delighted to hear the whole account from him.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 9457. Courtesy: Bharat Kala Bhavan, Varanasi

452. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

May 15, 1932

CHJ. BRIJKISAN,

I have your letter. I had sent a lengthy reply to your earlier letter in which I answered all your queries. But it appears that it did not reach you as you have made no mention of it. We all are doing well. Convey our salaam, Vandemataram and respectful greetings to the friends there. I hope you are maintaining your health. Rest on hearing from you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2392

1 The letter was in reply to the addressee’s (C.W. 9458) suggesting publication of his correspondence with Gandhiji for the benefit of the readers of Saket.
453. LETTER TO BABALBHAI MEHTA

May 16, 1932

CHI. BABALBHAI,

I hope you can now spin yarn of 20 counts. The daily reading of the Gita you find uninteresting because probably you do not reflect over what you read. If you look upon the Gita as our mother who guides us daily in our life, you will not find its reading uninteresting. After the reading every day, you should reflect for a minute over what you have read. You will daily learn something new. Only a perfect man will have no more to learn from it. But the ordinary man who commits some error or other every day will not weary of reading the Gita if he looks upon it as the mother who will save him from his faults.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9451

454. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

May 16, 1932

CHI. JAMNADAS,

I have heard from you after a long time. I of course had learnt the fact of Harilal’s beastly behaviour, but wanted to know the details from you as I did not depend in any way upon what Anandilal had written to me. What are your grounds for saying that I deliberately remain silent on the subject of Harilal’s vices? I have never concealed my disapproval. I express it whenever anybody gives him something. What more do you desire or suggest that I should do? Of course I wrote to him and told him that I still cherished the hope that he would repent. That has happened in the case of many. As long as a person is alive, we must continue to hope that he will reform.

Let me have more information about the school. You should not lose self-confidence and give up the work you have undertaken. According to me, it is only there that your health will improve. How do you find the atmosphere there? ‘Is the State being ruled well? Are the people happy?’

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9444

455. A LETTER

May 16, 1932

Even if your mind wanders when praying, you should keep up the practice. You should retire to a secluded spot, sit in the correct posture and try to keep out all thoughts. Even if they continue to come, you should nevertheless complete the prayer. Gradually the mind will come under control. The Gita also says that the mind is restless, but it tells us that with patient effort we can bring it under control. “We shall never willingly accept defeat, though we lose our life in the struggle.”

From Gujarati: C.W. 9114. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

456. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

May 16, 1932

RESPECTED BROTHER,

You seem to have demonstrated a miracle. From the letters which I got, I had given up hope altogether. But the letters which I get now have raised in me the hope that we shall meet in the present life.

If you can, kindly write a letter to me, otherwise dictate one. Mahadev is with us.

Respects to you both.

MOHANDAS

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

457. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN GANDHI

May 16, 1932

CHI. JAMNA,

If your health does improve there, what more can we desire?

Kusum was guilty of a serious lapse in not asking for permission. Did you draw her attention to her error? Sometimes the girls don’t mean anything and forget common courtesy only through their innocence. I admit this short-coming in our education.

If the grown-up women treat all the children as their own, the latter would develop very well.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 853. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
458. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

May 16, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

The letter is altogether incomplete. I will think out questions when I have some time. You should reply to them and after that I will do what I can. I will then call for the papers here. There is no hurry just now. My promise to write means that I will write but only when I get time.

Are you referring to the letters which I dictated to you? If that is so, when some day a collection of letters dictated to various persons is published, those dictated to you will also be included in it. Is there any special reason for publishing the latter separately?

If you have not settled down by June and pay a visit in the first week, you will be able to see Mahadev too. Did you visit Pyarelal? If Sushila wants to visit me, she will be able to do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1837

459. LETTER TO FULCHAND B. SHAH

May 16, 1932

BHAISHRI FULCHAND,

All of us were glad to receive your letter. We need not worry over such incidents.¹ After all we are prisoners, and should be content with whatever facilities we are allowed. Time was when prisoners were not permitted either to read or write, were not even given sufficient food to eat, were kept in fetters all the twenty four hours and made to sleep on straw. We should, therefore, think it God’s kindness that we get the facilities which we do. When our self-respect is attacked, we may lay down our lives to save it, but we should endure physical suffering.

¹ This sentence is reproduced from a fragment of the letter in Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 156. From the addressee’s letter to Gandhiji written from Visapur jail, 13 lines had been censored out by the jail authorities.

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932  383
We were happy to learn that all of you were happy there. After all, happiness and unhappiness are states of one’s own mind. The fact that you and Mama obey the rules and persuade others also to obey them and to observe cleanliness does great credit to you both.

I hope that every one of you there makes the best use of his time. You are not likely to get such quiet and leisure again in life. You may read if you get books, and you can always think and reflect. And there is so much work, too, from which you should volunteer to do something or the other. There is one serious mistake which all of us commit, and it is that we waste Government’s time or property as if they did not belong to us personally. A little reflection will show that the Government’s time and property belong to the people. If we waste them because they are at present controlled by the Government, it is the people’s property and time we waste. We should, therefore, make the best use of anything which we have occasion to use. The goods also which we produce by our work in jail increase the nation’s wealth. The fact that the present Government is foreign does not affect this argument. But I would be entering the field of politics if I go further than this, and as prisoners we cannot discuss politics. I, therefore, stop here on this subject. Tell me, when you write next, who else I know are there, or somebody else whose time for exercising his right of writing a letter has come may write to me. Is Diwan Master in that jail? Is Madhavlal of the Ashram also there?

The three of us, it may be said, are really enjoying our time. There are no restrictions on food except those which are self-imposed, nor on the hours of rest and sleep. Carding and spinning are going on fairly well. And we also read. We get a reasonable supply of newspapers too. As for books, friends send them regularly. We pray at regular hours. That is our daily programme.

Our regards to you all.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9445. Courtesy: Chandrakant F. Shah

460. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

May 16, 1932

CHI. VIDYA.

If you spin with enough care, you will certainly be able to spin yarn of 20 counts.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9428. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel
461. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 16, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

Premabehn would never refuse to reply. You must ask your question politely.

You must learn Hindi, because that is the language spoken in the major part of India.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11079. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

462. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

Y. M.,
May 16, 1932

CHI. NIMU,

I have your letter. Sumitra should not be given rice.; Oranges should be sweet. Add some water to the milk. Add honey instead of sugar. Papaw should be given in small quantities and that well mashed. She will now have cut teeth, so probably it will be all right to give her the kind of khakhari they used to make with soda and salt in it and rolled thin as paper. Observe timings in feeding.

Add some water to the milk for Babu. Give him dill water. Add honey to it. Add lime water to the milk. Ask Jethalal to consult the books there and explain how to make it. Both should get lots of fresh air. Give them exercise. Do you know how to exercise children? Mathuradas had given a book to Ramdas. Did he read it out to you? If the book is not there, ask Premabehn to explain its substance. You will get a beating if the kids’ health suffers. Ramdas is well.

BAPU

[PS.]

About separate kitchen you may ask Narandas.

From the Gujarati original: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
463. LETTER TO VIMAL KISHORE MEHROTRA

May 16, 1932

CHI. VIMAL,

Your letter this time is good. Keep it up. You can teach everyone Hindi while playing games. Try to spin fine yarn.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 7499. Also C.W. 4976. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

464. A LETTER

May 16, 1932

BHAJ.

Ask for anything only in the sacrificial spirit.

A guru is one who guides us to righteousness by his own righteous conduct.

True development consists in reducing ourselves to a cipher.

Selfless service is the secret of life. To rise above passions is the highest ideal.

The sages mainly from their own experiences have laid down rules of thought and conduct.

A rishi is one who has realized himself. Sannyasa according to Gita is the renunciation of actions prompted by desire.

Only one who has his body under control is a man. Beauty because of its quality of inwardness cannot be experienced in the physical sense.

All your questions have been answered.

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 9122. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

386 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
465. A LETTER

May 17, 1932

Life without a ruffle would be a very dull business. It is not to be expected. Therefore it is wisdom to put up with all the roughness of life, and that is one of the rich lessons we learn from the Ramayana.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. 1, p. 158

466. LETTER TO NIRMALA B. MASHRUWALA

May 17, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

I was very glad to get your letter. Write regularly in future and give me news about Kishorelal and Gomati. Do you ever go to see them? Let me know Gomati’s diet at present. Who are the others there with her? I know all those who are with Kishorelal. I have written to Manju and advised her not to leave the hospital. She has taken up this responsibility of her own free will. I am of the view that she cannot give it up now without a strong reason for doing so. What is Nathji’s view? And what do all of you think? All three of us keep good health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2661. Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala

1 The addressee had asked Gandhiji if he had met anybody who was never perturbed.
467. LETTER TO WOMEN PRISONERS

May 17, 1932

God cannot be seen with our physical eyes. He has no body, and, therefore, we can see Him only with the eyes of faith. When no impure thoughts or feelings disturb us, when we feel no fear and are always serene, that is a sign of God’s presence in our heart. In fact, He is always there, but we do not see Him because we do not have faith, and in consequence suffer in many ways. When true faith is awakened in a person, he does not feel the outward sufferings. This is true about Taradevi Bajpai. She should do only as many pranayamas and in such manner as cause no physical discomfort. I have no experience of the type of pranayamas practised in Hathayoga. I cannot therefore guide her in this matter, nor is such pranayama necessary. We cannot know God by performing certain physical acts. To know Him we should have living faith and should live according to that faith. Pranayama and other processes purify the body and give us a measure of peace. They have no other benefit.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 157-8

468. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

May [18], 1932

DEAR COLONEL DOYLE,

Major Bhandari told me today that he was instructed to prohibit Shrimati Mirabai (Slade) from seeing me should she desire to do so. As it so happened, she having been discharged from Arthur Road Jail yesterday came today to see me. It would have been courteous if she had been previously informed by Government that she would not be allowed to see me. But that is perhaps a small matter. What is of the highest concern for me is that of all the Ashram people Mirabai should be singled out for the prohibition, whereas hitherto she has never been prohibited from seeing me. I have always been under an impression, and have been grateful, that the Government had tacitly Vide the following item. The source has ‘19’, the date on which the letter was submitted for despatch; vide “Diary, 1932”, entry under “May 19”.

388 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
recognized not merely the fact of Mirabai being an inmate of the Ashram, but being nearer to me than an Ashram inmate, if such a thing was possible. I may mention that she is under strict instructions not to take an active part in the present political movement and not deliberately to seek imprisonment. Her activity has been confined purely to conducting the constructive khadi movement and reporting to friends in the West the present political happenings. If these be a disqualification, there is hardly a person whom I should be able to see. If therefore I cannot see Mirabai, I do not know how far I would be justified in availing myself of the permission to receive other visitors. Needless to say that I do not discuss politics with Mirabai or any other visitor, nor have I the slightest desire, even if it was possible for me, to direct the movement from within prison walls. All interviews take place in the presence of the Superintendent. If therefore the Government have any regard for my feelings or Mirabai’s, I hope that they will reconsider their decision and permit her to visit me as before.

Will you kindly place this letter before the Government and request an early decision?

Yours sincerely,
M. K. Gandhi

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(2), Pt. I, p. 95

469. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 18/19, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I was distressed suddenly to find that you were not to see me. My first thought was not [to] see anybody at all if I could not see you. But I restrained myself and saw the others. I have now written to the Government asking them to reconsider their decision. If they do not, I imagine I must cease to see others. I have said almost as much in my letter to the Government. It would be another matter if they had any reasonable ground for the prohibition. Meanwhile you should write to me. I hope this unexpected thing has not upset you. More later.

\[\text{Vide the preceding item.}\]
The Bombay happenings\(^1\) are heart-rending. God’s will be done.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

[May 19 [1932]]

As I handed this to Superintendent he told me he was sending me your letter. I have it now. I do not need to add anything just now. There is no such thing as a blow in reality.\(^2\) After having entrusted oneself to God where is any room left for blow? Therefore rejoice in suffering.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6222. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9688

470. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 19, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

It has been decided not to permit Mirabehn to see me. It is a serious question now for me whether I should see other visitors. I have written to the Government and informed it almost in so many words that, unless it reconsiders its decision, I would have to think seriously whether I should see any other visitors. If, therefore, Premabehn, Sushila and you wish to come, you should come soon. I may perhaps be able to see you. If meanwhile I receive a negative reply in regard to Mirabehn, I will most probably send you a wire asking you not to come. You may come even on Tuesday if you wish.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8227. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

\(^1\) Hindu-Muslim riots

\(^2\) “Bapu refers to the shock of being refused admission at the gate.”—Mirabehn
CHI. PREMA.

Though you are likely to visit me next week, I think it best that I should reply to your letter. Moreover, an incident which occurred yesterday shows that my receiving visitors should always be treated as uncertain.

Vali has proved her worth very well indeed. I don’t think the Ashram can take credit for that. She seems to have joined it with her character already formed.

Why girls brought up in the Ashram seem so weak is a problem which I have not been able to solve. I have my explanations for that, but I think it useless to discuss them unless I can give reasons in support of them. We should try our best to discover the real reasons. It should also be borne in mind that, after leaving the Ashram, these girls do not always improve.

To keep a watch over Narandas means that, when he seems to have taken an excessive burden upon himself you should caution him and also inform me. I have discovered no ambiguity in any of my statements. If they are ambiguous, they are so unintentionally and because of my imperfect command over language. My statements are short, and hence they leave many things unsaid. But in this respect they are like propositions in geometry.

Those girls who wish to learn English may certainly do so if they have paid attention to Hindi and Sanskrit and acquired a good command over Gujarati. Of course, this is subject to facilities for teaching English being available. We ought to have them, no doubt.

You do not seem to have understood my interpretation of passive exercises. What a person does himself cannot be described as passive. Passive exercises are for people who are ill. If I am ill and wish to give exercise to my bowels, and if someone massages the abdomen or raises my legs several times to form a right angle with the rest of the body and lowers them again, and I am not required to raise or lower any limb, then that is passive exercise. I don’t think you have understood that this is what the phrase means.

\[1\text{Vide } “\text{Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 7-5-1932}\]
I had two aims in practising silent prayer. One was, of course, to give rest to the mind. But it was also difficult to turn the mind inward except through such prayer. Whenever we lay aside one work and take up another, we should feel that we have ample time on hand. We should not feel impatient or restless. It is thus that we gradually learn detachment.

I think I do command concentration, but not well enough to satisfy me. I try earnestly to cultivate such concentration, but I am not impatient.

If the children take no interest in any of the prayers, a special item can be included for them, as used to be done by Prabhudas. I should be happy if they sit through the prayers with faith and in stillness.

I did not say it by way of praise that the same prayers have continued for sixteen years. It was only a statement of fact. I did not wish to suggest that all have been attending the prayers for so many years. The Ashram has clung to these prayers in the face of all troubles and criticisms and quite a few people have derived peace of mind from them. All that I intended to say was that these prayers ought not to be given up or altered without a strong reason.

Women’s prayers will not seem proper in the evening. Moreover, some people devote the evening to reading, etc.

What you write about yourself is correct. You should follow your reason and your heart. I am not impatient. I may tell you what seems proper to me, but cannot force you to accept my suggestion against your reason. All I can do is to act as a friend. I can, at the most, claim my experiences over many years in my favour. If, however, they find no echo in your heart, even thousands of them will have no value for you. I make, of course, one claim for the Ashram. It helps new-comers to grow wings. They may then fly where they will. If they continue in the Ashram of their own free will, they are welcome to stay. Even if they do not stay, the Ashram will have done its duty in one matter. This can be proved to have happened to many persons, especially women. At different times in the past, girls came and joined the Ashram, who had no spirit in them at all. Today they believe themselves independent and are in fact so. Such were Gulbadan, Umiya, Vidyavati, Rukhi, etc. Love for individual persons is not wholly forbidden. Only, such love should not be an obstacle to love for all beings and for God. My love for Ba today flows from my love for God. When I was filled with lust, it was an obstacle to love of God and was, therefore, unworthy.

The loss in your weight need not worry you, if otherwise you are all right. Sushila may come.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10286. Also C.W. 6734. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

472. A LETTER

May 19, 1932

. . . should not be forced to forgo the two special facilities which she enjoys. Till she herself feels a strong desire to forgo them, we cannot ask her to do so. You are both right and not right in citing my example. You are right because so long as I am doing active work people will point to my example and, in consequence, be misled. For a variety of reasons, I cannot demonstrate in my own life standards of conduct which I expect others to follow. I know that this is my deficiency as a leader. At the same time, you are not right in citing my example because my condition is now different from that of my co-workers. One reason for this is my physical weakness, another is my Mahatmaship and the third is my uncommon mode of life. Even if I were in ‘C’ class, my food would be different from that of the other prisoners, either because of my weakness or my vows. This would be so, more or less, in the case of any prisoner. That other prisoners may not get special facilities of diet as quickly as I get them, is another question. I see visitors once every week, instead of once every three months, and there is no restriction at all on the number of letters I can write. In justification of this, I have told myself that I have no personal friends and that I do not see relations because they are relations, but my seeing them serves a moral aim. I write letters with the same aim. Whether there is an element of self-indulgence lurking behind this, I do not know. But it is not likely to be so, for, if

1 The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, gives only the initial letter “S” of the addressee’s name. The addressee had questioned how Gandhiji could advise others to forgo privileges while he himself enjoyed them; why we are grieved to see an ailing or dying man; why we thank God if he survives; why Gandhiji had thanked God when Manilal was saved; what the span of human life was, etc.

2 This name is omitted in the source.
interviews and writing letters stopped, I would not be perturbed. In the year 1930 I had stopped seeing visitors when a condition laid down by me was rejected.¹ In 1922 I had similarly stopped writing letters.² Apart from these reasons, there is another reason too, namely, that I am kept apart from other prisoners. For all these reasons, a comparison between other prisoners and me would not be right. However, I don’t think it proper on my part to try to convince anybody in this matter with arguments if the difference is not self-evident to him. There is certainly some difference between the case of a person for whom ‘A’ class has been secured through outside influence and that of another who has got it in the normal course, but the difference is not worth stressing. The ideal, of course, is that there should be no classes and, therefore, prisoners who have been put in the so-called upper classes should give up their privileges. Very few persons yet follow this ideal in practice, and so I do not feel inclined to put any burden on a young woman like . . . . She is a very thoughtful woman. I am sure she exercises of her own accord whatever self-control she is capable of.

My praying for Manilal was not a sign of my spirituality but was a sign of a father’s love for his son. There can be only one right prayer, that God may do what He wills. Of course the question can be asked what purpose such a prayer serves. The reply to it is that the meaning of the prayer is not to be understood literally. We are aware of the presence of God in our heart, but, for the moment we imagine him to be external to us and pray to Him in order that we may be delivered from ignorance. In other words, we do not wish to follow wherever the mind drags us. If, however, God is external to us, we wish to follow Him wherever He, our Master, leads us. We do not know whether it is good for us that we should live or that we should die. Hence we should not rejoice that we are alive or tremble at the thought of death. We should look upon life and death as equal and be indifferent to them. This is the ideal. We should not give it up because we cannot reach it all at once or only rare persons can reach it. On the contrary, the more we realize its difficulty the harder should be our effort to reach it.

The full span of a man’s life can exceed even 100. But

¹Vide “Letter to Tricumdas Dwarkadas”, 28-2-1933 and “Letter to P. R. Lele”, 28-2-1933
²Vide “Letter to Hakim Ajmal Khan”, 12-5-1922
however long a man may live, his life is not even one ten-millionth of a moment in the infinite cycle of time. Why, then, should we be eager to live a long life and try to determine its maximum span? Any figure we determine will never be exact. We can only guess what the maximum span of human life can be. In actual life we even see a healthy child die suddenly. Nor can we say that a sensual man will not enjoy a long life. At the most we can say that a person whose life has always been simple and pure will very probably enjoy a long life. But those who acquire control over the senses in order that they may enjoy a long life only dig up a mountain in order to find a mouse. We should acquire control over the senses in order that we may know the self. We should not care if, as a result of such control, our life becomes shorter instead of longer. A healthy and long life is the least important benefit of freedom from the cravings of the senses.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. 1, pp. 162-4

473. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day [Before May 20, 1932]

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. Your health must return to normal. Where does Krishnadas live in Kadi? Who is in Vijapur? I feel that you can also ply takli the same way as I do. Sitting on a chair with the hand straight and not raising it higher, is not tiring at all.

If possible, I will write something which the children can understand, about the shloka pertaining to sthitaprajya. I will not get your spinning-wheel here as my stay here is uncertain and also I have no time.

There is no time today for writing anything more. What kind of life is this that even here I do not get time. But then, you know my programme. I do not have even a single minute free.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32937

1 From the reference to the addressee’s spinning-wheel, it appears that the letter was written before the preceding one.
474. LETTER TO BABALBHAI MEHTA

May 20, 1932

CHI. BABALBHAI,

We should do a thing to please elders if it is not immoral. It cannot be a matter of dharma to sing group-prayers aloud. Hence you cannot offer satyagraha to get freedom to do so. There is no loss of self-respect at all in giving finger-prints in a jail. The practice of obtaining prisoners’ finger-prints has no bearing on the fear of their running away.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9452. Also C.W. 9115. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

475. A LETTER

May 20, 1932

You should not be in the least disappointed at seeing no immediate result whatever of your work. We should stick to the work undertaken, in single-minded devotion to it, with the faith that service done with pure motives, selflessly and as sacrifice to the Lord never fails to bear fruit. We even know that often in the past men gave their whole lives to some good cause and the fruits were enjoyed only by those who came after them. It should not be a matter of any wonder if four or five years of work by men like us yield no results in a poor, despairing region like Orissa, where several people may have gone under the pretext of public service and robbed the people. On the contrary, it would be a matter for wonder if such a brief period yielded any results. Besides, you actually see the beginning of some results. Your field of work lies there, and you and your co-workers should stick to it with the conviction that it is also the place where you can attain self-realization. I was glad to learn this time that all of you are in good health. As you get more and more accustomed to the climate there and the mind remains cheerful, that will have its good effect on your health too.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9116. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
476. A LETTER
May 20, 1932

Give up all idle thoughts and constantly wish the good of all living creatures. The more you do so the more peace of mind you will enjoy.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9113. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

477. LETTER TO JAMNA BEHN GANDHI
May 20, 1932

CHI. JAMNA,

Kusum is still a child in some ways. Very often a child learns only through bitter experience. If she takes rest in Ranavav now, she will be all right.

If you do not improve, you too should go somewhere outside.

BAPU

478. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL
May 20, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

Your handwriting is improving now. Children should go from the prayer directly to bed.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3989. Also C.W. 35. Courtesy: Pushpabehn N. Naik

479. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI
YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 20, 1932

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I was keenly waiting for your letter. Ultimately it arrived.¹ Dhiru had come to see me and left behind the Magan spinning-wheel.

¹ A few lines after this have been crossed out in the source. They may have been censored by the jail authorities or cancelled by Gandhiji himself, who had dictated this letter, having written only the last few lines himself.
I observed him drawing yarn on it for a minute. From the very next day, I started spinning on it. I had to face a lot of difficulties but I cannot say that the written suggestions sent to me by Padma were of any help. You had assessed the qualities of a learner and a stupid learner, and according to that estimate, I stand nowhere even near the stupid learner. I wasted quite a large number of slivers while plying it, sometimes for four hours, sometimes for five hours and sometimes for three hours. Now I can say that I have acquired sufficient mastery over it. Today, I spun 183 rounds of yarn in about one and a half hours. When the switch which gives direction to the wheel does not arrive and stop at the right place, the wheel requires pushing by hand. The directions for the difficulties I encountered are not mentioned in your list of suggestions. From that, I have come to the conclusion that my difficulties are unusual. If that is a fact, it is not surprising. An old man’s organs do not co-operate with each other promptly. So I took time in bringing about co-ordination between my hand and fingers. I could not work on two spindles because of pain in my left wrist. The doctors believe that the pain will not go unless I give my left wrist complete rest. So the biggest utility of the Magan spinning-wheel for me is that because of it I am able to continue spinning. I have started hoping that gradually I will be able to achieve my normal speed on the Magan spinning-wheel. At one time I feared that I would not be able to spin on it at all. But I did not want to accept defeat and therefore worked hard on it. I do not find spinning on it at all difficult. Initially I used to get tired but now I do not...¹ Today is the fourteenth day of my spinning. I like my devices. It is good. The spinning-wheel is cheap and there is scope for making it still cheaper. Some modifications occur to me but I will take sometime to carry those out. I cannot say just now that I have so much mastery over the spinning-wheel as to make modifications in it. It is plied with both hands that is no doubt a clear advantage. An efficient spinner would spin either twice or one and a half times or one and two-third times more with two hands than he would with one hand. I can think of other reasons too, for producing more yarn on it. I may be wrong.² You will immediately gain one or two seers of weight if you personally see the interest I am taking in your spinning-wheel. You will be very happy. I had decided to experiment with your spinning-wheel at a time when I had no problem with my wrist. Now I have to do that under compulsion. Either I give up spinning or spin on the same spinning-wheel. Just as a person who is in difficulty thinks of new tricks to save himself, I will keep on thinking about new techniques of improving my speed on the Magan spinning-wheel. And if you are released, and I am allowed visitors at the time, come and see me and teach me some new tricks.¹

¹ A few words here are illegible in the source.
² The remaining paragraph is already reproduced in “Letter to Prabhudas Gandhi”, 20-5-1932

And when you say that you would not allow anyone to depend on you, then on whose strength are you going to buy the land? How then can you insist on buying the land? One of the conditions of buying the land was that you would stay on it as a guard. You violate that condition and suggest buying the land—how are both things possible. It does not matter if you violate the conditions because as long as the land is not bought, you have to some extent a right to change your opinion. But the moment you absolve yourself from that condition, you lose the right to suggest buying of land. Not only that. The land will be bought under new conditions in case it is bought. And as you say, the talk you had with the seller was final. Then you cannot absolve yourself from the commitment. I do not analyse all these to bind you but to show you what difficult predicament you are in. I understand you. I do not want to criticise you in any way. One need not bind a devoted worker like you. No person, however respected he is, can absolve others from their moral obligations. Everyone has to define his or her own moral obligations himself. As long as you do not have trust in yourself, you should not even accept for yourself any moral obligation. If you compel yourself, you will possibly impede your progress. It is all right if you rise gradually. No doubt you are going to rise because your intentions are pure, you are hardworking, you want to help others to the best of your ability and you do not want to deceive yourself. However, you will come across many moral dilemmas. Do not worry about them. They will help you to become a matured person.²

¹ A few lines are again crossed out here, probably censored by jail authorities.
² The following two paragraphs are already reproduced in “Letter to Prabhudas Gandhi”, 20-5-1932

‘Matparah’ means ‘devotion to truth’. ‘Charan Padma’ means ‘lotus feet of Satyanarayan’. By using the word ‘Lotus feet’, a devotee has personified truth. Truth is formless and so people imagine it in the form they like. In spite of knowing that it is imagination, different persons conceive different images. As long as the imagination lasts, the images are true; the devotees ascribe whatever they want, to those images. In fact, Vishnu, Maheshwar, Brahma, Bhagwan, Ishwar, etc. are all meaningless names or are wanting in meaning. But truth conveys full meaning. A person who says that he will die for God would not be able to explain what he meant by that and the listener, too, would hardly grasp the meaning of what is told to him. But a person who says that he would die for truth, knows what he had said and the listener would also most probably grasp the meaning of it. You ask me, “what does Rama mean?” It is almost meaningless to worship Him after I explain to you the meaning. But if you worship Rama with the realization that one whom you wanted to worship was Him, only then will he be a Kamadhenu1 to you. If you recite the name of Rama with that faith, be it a parrot-like recitation, you will transcend the material world. The difference is that you recite the name of Rama with faith in Him which a parrot certainly does not have. A parrot is devoid of faith and will therefore feel tired and give up, or, if he worshipped God in pursuit of self-interest, he will keep quiet after collecting enough grains for himself. From this point of view, you do not need a symbol. Tulsidas has given more importance to the name of Rama than to Rama, the man. That is to say, he has suggested that the name need not have any meaning. A devotee will create the necessary meaning later on according to the nature and quality of his faith in Him. That is the beauty of the practice of such worship, otherwise it cannot be proved how even the dullest of men can enjoy spiritual awakening. The only condition is that the name of God should not be taken to impress others or to deceive others. As I have suggested, if a man worships God with faith in Him and never tires of doing so, for him He becomes a Kalpataru. I have no doubt about it. Men so inclined can prove this for themselves. Initially, their mind, while worshiping God, will wander for days together, in some cases for years; they will become restless, feel sleepy, even more than that, they might have some tragic experience, but even then if they keep on worshipping God, their devotion will pay. I have no doubt about it. An inanimate thing like a spinning-wheel comes under control only after giving us a lot of trouble. Other things which are

---

1 The proverbial cow, believed to fulfill all wishes of the worshippers more difficult give us more trouble before we achieve them. What can we do for a person who wants to achieve the best but does not take the medicines prescribed for it patiently for a long time and gets disappointed.

I feel that the above covers answers to all your questions; after these there remains nothing for you to ask. If you can develop faith, go on repeating His name while doing your work—eating, drinking, sitting or sleeping. Even if you have to devote your whole life, you are not going to accept defeat. If you do this, no doubt, you will be more and more at peace with yourself with each passing day.

Do only as much writing and reading as you can without straining yourself. There is no need to tire out yourself by drawing up a big programme of writing and reading or getting disappointed if you are not able to keep it up. I will see what I can do for Devidutt and Chandradutt’s sister Lakshmi.\(^1\) I believe Chhaganlal will take care of inspection and checking of trivial things about which you have written. Dhiru has lost a lot of weight and so he has gone to Ranavav. Kusum has also gone as she too keeps indifferent health. Padma has not recovered from her illness, so I need not expect much from her. The three of us are still together and are keeping good health.

I am writing on aparigraha for the Ashram somewhat on the lines you wanted me to write. I do not get much time as I am occupied these days with Magan spinning-wheel and the increased correspondence. And for that reason . . .\(^1\) is lying unfinished.

I will certainly not draft trivial rules. I neither have the inclination nor it is good to draft such trivial rules. With the change of place and time, new sub-rules will emerge from great principles. At the same time, some rules will become obsolete while new ones will come in force. If you have a thorough understanding of the basic principles, then you would know the source of the sub-principles and be able to draft the rules easily. Just as a person who knows the derivation of the principles of geometry is able to find the correct time.

Totaramji’s wife, Gangadevi was conscious till the last moment.

\(^1\) Gandhiji wrote to Narandas Gandhi to accommodate her either at Wardha or at Sabarmati Ashram and inform Prabhudas accordingly. Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 19-23-5-1932

\(^2\) A word here is illegible in the source.
She died while reciting the Ramanama. A few hours before her death, she knew that she was going to die. She had warned others and was herself very cheerful. Totaramji was also quite composed. Gangadevi brought credit to the Ashram in her life and in her death.1

Blessings from Sardar and Mahadev. Keep on asking me till you are satisfied. Do you meet Kakasaheb and Narahari?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32935

480. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

May 20, 1932

CHHAGANLAL,

I am enclosing a letter from Prabhudas. I have given an answer2 to his spiritual problems. As for the Almora land, I have said that the idea of buying the land has been given up as no responsible person is at present in a position to stay there and Pantji3 is also away. I have also written to him at length about the Magan spinning-wheel on which I have been spinning and over which I have acquired some control for the last four days or so. I think he will be happy to read that I have also added that he might come and see me when he is released, if I see visitors then. As for Lakshmi, Devidatta’s sister, I have said that I will do the needful. You have to reply to all the remaining points. He is in excellent health and does not seem to have any trouble now. It seems he would desire a change of place when the monsoon sets in and it rains heavily. The letter has been censored at several places and this is my guess from the portions not struck off by the officials. However that may be, a request for a transfer should not be made and certainly cannot be made from here. Dr. Talwalkar may make the suggestion if he thinks it fit and wishes to do so. I do not have the fear which Prabhudas has. But no one can tell, and when the patient himself is afraid, his fear itself brings about what he fears.

As for Khushalbhai, I guess from the letter which I have received that he has got a new lease of life for a time. All three of us are well.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 37

1 The remaining letter is in Gandhiji’s own hand.
2 Vide the preceding item.
3 Govind Vallabh Pant
VOL. 55 :  10 FEBRUARY, 1932 -  15 JUNE, 1932

481. LETTER TO DUDHIBEHN V. DESAI

May 21, 1932

CHI. DUDHIBEHN,

I hope Mavo\(^1\) has completely recovered now. Write to Valji and tell him from me that he should demand the food which he requires. He should not think that he cannot get it. For reasons of health, even ‘C’-class prisoners get milk, etc. I will write to Nanu\(^2\) about study.

I was glad that you got the opportunity to nurse Gangadevi. The lady has become immortal through her death.

Do write to me from time to time.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7431. Courtesy: Valji G. desai

482. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

May 21, 1932

CHI. RAIHANA,

I got your letter. Convey the sympathies of us all to Tehminabehn\(^3\). God has ordained death as well as birth. We, therefore, should not rejoice at the one and grieve over the other. Everything has two sides, or rather, the two are one and the same thing. In our eagerness to live, we believe death to be different from life and something bad. I have read Hazrat’s ghazal twice already. I shall read it again to understand it thoroughly.\(^4\)

Please be satisfied with this much exercise for today, I take some time to write so much, as I write with the reed-pen and take great care to see that the handwriting is good. Please forgive me for forgetting to reply to your question. I thought I had replied to it. There is no doubt at all that your duty is to stay with Mother. That is to be the form of your sadhana\(^5\) and also your service. I am, therefore, glad that you have made this choice. Always remain satisfied with it. I hope the Abu climate did good to you all.

\(\footnote{1}{Self-dedication}
\footnote{2}{ibid}
\footnote{3}{Tehmina Kambhatta}
\footnote{4}{Up to this the letter is in Urdu.}
\footnote{5}{Sudarshan Desai and Vimalchandra Desai, addressee’s sons}
Father dance in his usual fashion? There he must have become a young man again. After the Bombay madness we have to forget our dancing and our playing. I can never understand how man can fight man in the name of religion. But let me check my thoughts and my pen. At present I am drinking cupfuls of this poison.

Send the book when you all return to Baroda.

Many many salaams and vandematarams to Father and Mother from us all.

When is Hamida’s time for release?

Many Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I heard on Saturday that Hamida had been released. Is the information correct? If it is, she should write to me a full account [of her stay in jail].

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N., 9644

483. LETTER TO VIMALCHANDRA V. DESAI

May 21, 1932

CHI. NANU,

I got no letter from you this week. When will you now start taking interest in study? Children learn even as they play. In prison here, even kittens learn. Their mother teaches them. If you want to know how she does it, you may listen to my account which I give in a letter to someone else.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5756. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

1 The postscript, written in Urdu, seems to have been written on May 23; vide "Diary, 1932", entry under "May 23".

2 Vide the following item.
I have already written about our cat’s love of cleanliness. Observing her and her kittens’ ways, I feel that she is an ideal teacher. Whatever they have to be taught, she teaches quietly and without any fuss. The method is quite easy. She demonstrates to them by her own example what she wishes to teach, and the kittens learn the thing very quickly. In this manner they learnt to run, climb trees and come down again carefully to eat, to kill a prey and to lick their bodies and clean them. In a very short time they have learnt to do all that their mother can do.

The cat does not leave the kittens alone for long. Her love for them is just like that of a woman’s for her children. She sleeps with the kittens clinging to her. When they indicate a desire to suck, she lies down and lets them do it. If she has killed a prey, she brings it to them. Vallabhbhai gives them some milk every day. All three of them lick it from a saucer. Sometimes the mother only looks on without sharing the milk. She plays with them as if she were their own age, and even engages in a sort of wrestling with them.

I have drawn a lesson from all this, namely, that if we wish to educate children properly we should ourselves do what we want to teach them to do. Children have great capacity for imitating others. They do not easily understand what is explained to them orally. If we wish to teach them truthfulness, we ourselves should be scrupulously truthful. If we wish to teach them not to keep with them more things than they need, we, too, should not do that. And what is true about moral rules is true about bodily labour.

Looking at the matter in this light, we immediately see that the present-day education produces very little result, considering the expenditure of money and time which it involves. We also realize that all grown-ups are teachers so far as children are concerned. It is because people do not pay proper attention to their duty as teachers that education has degenerated.

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 19/23-5-1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 19/23-5-1932
2 Vide “Cleanliness, Truthfulness, Purity, Neatness”, 9-5-1932
Creatures like cats have no reason, or say, they do not have reason like man’s. We, therefore, should do much more than what they do. But before we can do so, as guardians of the moral character of the next generation we should observe moral principles in our own lives. We should learn, to the best of our ability, to live as we wish the next generation to live.

I have written all this with the hope that all men and women inmates of the Ashram who give their services as teachers, and others too, may think along these lines and, wherever necessary, act accordingly.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

485. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

May 22, 1932

MY DEAR CHILD,

I understand all you are doing. Only you must not work yourself into anxiety. If we simply make ourselves instruments of His will, we should never have [an] anxious moment.

Yes, there is no calm without a storm, there is no peace without strife. Strife is inherent in peace. We should not know it without [strife]. Life is a perpetual struggle against strife whether within or without. Hence the necessity of realizing peace in the midst of strife.

It has been hot in Poona this time. As a rule it is never so hot in Poona. But the rains are now coming in and we are having beautiful sunsets and sweet songs of the birds.

Have you been to that patient¹ again?

I told you Mahadev was with me. He spins and cards about five hours daily. He is now spinning very fine counts. Owing to weakness of my hands I cannot do much. I hope you are keeping well.

Love from us all and kisses to the children.

BAPU

From a photostat: No. 110. Courtesy: National Archives of India. Also My Dear Child, p. 90

¹ The cripple girl; vide “Letter to Esther Menon”, 21-1-1932.
486. LETTER TO NAN AND TANGAI MENON

May 22, 1932

DEAR NAN AND TANGAI,

You have sent me a sweet letter.

I see you are making friends with birds. We have made friends with a cat and her kittens. I call her sister. It is delightful to watch her love for her young ones. She teaches them all sorts of things by simply doing them.

God bless you. With kisses,

BAPU

My Dear Child, p. 117

487. LETTER TO P. C. RAY

May 22, 1932

The work you are doing is difficult, but it is the only way to help our people. There is no substitute for charkha for universal relief.

It is nonsense for you to talk of old age so long as you outrun young men in the race for service and in the midst of anxious times fill rooms with your laughter and inspire youth with hope when they are on the brink of despair.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 169-70

488. LETTER TO ARUN DAS GUPTA

May 22, 1932

Mother tells me you are ailing and that you insist on reading and working. Will you not give yourself rest and the body a chance of recovery? Though death and life are the faces of the same coin and though we should die as cheerfully as we live, it is necessary until life is there to give the body its due. It is a charge given to us by God. And we have to take all reasonable care about it. Do write to me if you can. God bless you.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 168

1 Dr. P. C. Ray, known as Acharya Ray, scientist and educationist; vide also “Tribute to P. C. Ray”, 24-5-1932
2 Son of Satis Chandra Das Gupta
3 Hemprabha Das Gupta
489. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

May 22, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I had given a reply to Pyarelal’s questions. Did you convey it to him? He doesn’t seem to have received any message from me.

The letter to you ought to be published.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1838

490. A LETTER

May 22, 1932

CHI.,

We ourselves are the source of moha. There are two powers dwelling within us: the divine and the demoniac, the Pandavas and the Kauravas. The demoniac is the source of moha. Why should we not fix our minds on the true Mahadeva instead of on His image made of earth? Or rise from the inert matter to spirit? If we cling to the trunk, we automatically get hold of the branch. If, on the contrary, we cling to the branch, the branch will break and we shall fall with it. It is no sin to think about people with whom we are related by blood. However, we wish to enlarge our definition of blood-relations so as to include in it all people. If we make a distinction between ‘ours’ and ‘the others’, we suffer in innumerable ways. If we imbibe the truth that the two are the same, there will remain the pain of neither separation nor death. Do not look upon this as philosophical or difficult knowledge and be scared by it. It deserves to be digested. Such an attitude of mind means not diminishing of love but its enlargement. In truth, we always go on, knowingly or unknowingly, enlarging our idea of ‘ours’. If we carefully grasp this supremely valuable law, it leads to very important results.

From all I have written, accept only as much as you can digest and leave the rest. The rule that applies to food applies here also

I hope that the change of climate will do you good.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9117. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 From the addressee’s husband
2 Infatuation, ignorant attachment
491. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

May 22, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

Even silence for five minutes can serve many purposes. It also means rest. If the Ashram cat makes a mess all over the place, you must take it that it has acquired the bad habit from us. No man has influenced the cat here.¹

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9947. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

492. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

May 22, 1932

CHI. TARAMATI,

I have received your letter. You do not have to seek permission from here to visit me. You must write to Narandas, so that you can be allotted your day when someone is coming from the Ashram. Only one interview is allowed in a week. Even this is likely to be stopped. Interviews have been stopped in the case of Mirabehn. If that restriction is continued, I may have to stop interviews. You will be informed if that happens. Let me know when you hear from Mathuradas.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

¹Vide “Cleanliness, Truthfulness, Purity, Neatness”, 9-5-1932 and “The Cat- A Teacher”, 22-5-1932
493. LETTER TO TOTARAM SANADHYA

May 22, 1932

BHAI TOTARAMJI,

Your reminiscences of Gangadevi¹ sent here are sacred.² Though I had inferred a great deal about her qualities your reminiscences of her are truly astounding. The Ashram is blessed where such a chaste woman lived.

BAPU

From the Hindi original: Banarsidas Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

494. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

Y. M.,

May 22, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. Your duty for the present is to be with your in-laws and serve them and do such other work of service as you can. When your turn comes God will clear the way. Be patient for the present. Improve your health.

I have had two letters from Anand. But I have not replied to them, nor did he expect an answer. I did not know his address either. Newspapers report that he has been taken to Sindh.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

¹ Addressee’s wife, who had died in the first week of May ² Vide also “Letter to Totaram Sanadhya”, 9-5-1932
CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter on Wednesday morning. If you think that I am doing any injustice to Harilal, please tell me. I say this because you have not said in your letter what you decided after reading my letter to Harilal. Provided you observe the three conditions I have mentioned, you may do all you can. I can have no objection then.

If you have found any improvement as a result of the period of silence having been increased to five minutes, please let me know.

Lady Vithaldas, Mathew and Manibehn came and saw me. Mirabehn will not be permitted. The decision has been a great blow to her. I feel that if the gates are not opened to her, I should stop seeing any visitors. I have even written a letter to the Government (very nearly) to this effect. It is probable, therefore, that the next week will be the last during which I shall be seeing visitors. And even of that I am not certain, for, if I get a negative reply before that, I will stop seeing visitors immediately. I, therefore, also intend to drop a postcard to you today. If you get it in time, it should be in your hands on Sunday. If you do get it and if you do not receive a wire from me not to come, it might be advisable for you to start soon. Provided, that is, you think it necessary to come and see me. This applies to Premabehn and Sushila too.

I think it will be difficult to make the labourers give up smoking. It would of course be good if you succeed. But it would be most undesirable if they agree to give it up for fear of losing their jobs or any other similar reason and then continue to smoke on the sly. One labourer may be a smoker and still be good in other ways, while another who does not smoke may be a very bad man. Of the two, the one who smokes is a far better person. Hence, while paying attention to the habits of those whom you engage as labourers, pay as much attention as you can to their inner character as well.

I was glad to learn that Dhiru and Kusum have gone to Ranavav.

1 This is not available; however, vide “Fragment of Letter to Harilal Gandhi”, 27-4-1932
2 Vide “Letter to E. E. Doyle”, 18-5-1932
Don’t let them return to the Ashram all too soon. We may be sure that those who have understood the meaning of the Ashram rules of life and have fallen in love with that life will carry the Ashram wherever they go. Moreover, if Dhiru and Kusum, who have spent many years in the Ashram, cannot observe the Ashram rules even while living away from it, it will only show that they have learnt nothing from their stay in the Ashram. Anybody who has understood the meaning of the Ashram life can serve wherever he lives. The field of service is as wide as the world, and opportunities for it exist everywhere. Dhiru and Kusum, therefore, ought not to get impatient. If the water of Ranavav agrees with them and their health improves, let them stay there till they get completely all right.

Pyare Ali, Noorbanu and Tilakam have not come [to see me till now]. If you sent any messages with Mathew, they remained with him, for he could not speak much.

I have received no letter from Ba so far. Maybe her letters have not been dispatched from there. They don’t seem to keep back any letter here. If any of you can, please inquire from the Superintendent whether they have been dispatched. In any case Ba can certainly inquire.

May 20, 1932

Are there any Chharas still staying near the Ashram? If there are, have you cultivated contacts with them? Do they harass you in any way? Why do the Ashram inmates keep a watch [at night]? For how many hours is the watch kept? Who are the persons taking turns? Who stays in Doctor’s bungalow? Who stays in Jyotirbhavan? I send with this a letter from Chhaganlal, along with one from Prabhudas to me. Read both of them. There is a reference to Lakshmi in them. If Balkrishna agrees to accommodate her in Wardha, let her go and stay there. If Balkrishna does not agree or if the girl wants to stay in Sabarmati and if you see no difficulty in that, accommodate her there.¹ If you cannot do so and if Balkrishna is not prepared to accept the responsibility, write to Devidatta and inform him accordingly. And also to Prabhudas.

I can now say that I have acquired control over the Magan spinning-wheel. Today I spun 183 rounds in about 2½ hours. The yarn must be of about 16 counts. The slivers sent by Ramjibhai were full of hard particles, otherwise I think I could spin yarn of even higher count. The wheel still offers difficulties. I have often to use my hand and put the wheel in the right position. I believe this must be a defect. The pedal produces a low grating sound. Show this to Keshu. Ask him if he has any suggestion to make.

¹Vide also “Letter to Chhaganlal Gandhi”, 20-5-1932

May 22, 1932

If you have not read out to the inmates of the Ashram the reminiscences of Gangadevi which Totaramji has sent, or given them a summary, you should do so. They are quite interesting.

May 23, 1932

Today I spun 89 rounds in 50 minutes. The count of the yarn, too, is 20.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

496. LETTER TO ELIZABETH F. HOWARD

May 23, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I was delighted to have your letter. I have a most vivid recollection of the very pleasant and peaceful time we had at your place.² From what I saw during those brief hours and in autumn I can easily picture all you say of Epping Forest in spring time.

It was a matter of sorrow to me that I could not see the friends who visited India recently to study the situation. Please give my regards to Mr. Bartlett and tell him that as soon as I received his letter enclosing the Poet’s appeal I sent him my reply³ which had naturally to pass through the Central Government. I do not know whether it was sent to him. Of course I cannot repeat the contents here.

I thank you for the extract from George Fox’s writings.

Please give my regards to your mother who I hope will finish the century and accept the same for yourself. Yes, Desai is with me and wants to be remembered to you.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

1 Addressee’s name is supplied from the G.N. Register.
2 Gandhiji visited the addressee at Ardmore, Buckhurst Hill, London, on September 20, 1931.
3 Vide “Letter to Percy W. Bartlett”, 4-5-1932
497. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

May 23, 1932

CHI. MANUDI.

I have your letter now, but I have been regularly getting news about you from others. I have collected a good many pictures for you. I had collected them during my last imprisonment but I could not meet you at all and give them to you. Some of those are still left, to which I go on adding more. You will get them sooner or later. The later you get them, the more precious they will be, won’t they? I am glad that you do not wear ornaments. Never mind losing your hair. It will grow again. There is no beauty in wearing long hair. If there were any, one would look beautiful even with hair stuck on the head. Beauty lies in goodness of heart. If it was not so, the sight of glass or wax dolls would be enough to give us pleasure, and we would preserve the soulless body in a frame. The fact that we do not do so means that whatever beauty there is in the soul. Can this be in anything except its qualities? One who realizes this will look upon the body as only a means for the progress of the soul.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Write to me and tell me whether you followed what I have said in this letter.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1513. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

498. LETTER TO BENARSILAL AND RUKMINI BAZAJ

May 23, 1932

CHI. RUKMINI.

This letter is meant for both of you. I got your card and was happy to learn that the little boy had recovered. It would be good if you can manage somehow to take him out for walks.

Rameshwardas’s letters suggest that he is very much troubled in

1 Rukmini Bazaj’s father-in-law, Rameshwarlal mind. Benarsi can understand the reason better than I. He should do something in the matter if he can.

I have received some reminiscences of Gangadevi. She lived a pure life devoted to the service of others. Why is it that you do not get the Ashram Patrika there? Probably you have not asked for it.

Probably you have also not heard of the death of Dahyabhai’s wife, Yashoda. Do you read newspapers, etc.?

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. RUKMINIDEVI AND SIT. BENARSIDAS
23/96 PANCHGANGA
KASHI, BANARAS, U.P.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9139

499. LETTER TO HANUMANPRASAD PODDAR

May 23, 1932

I do not remember any incident in my life which had particularly increased my faith in God. For some time I had no faith, but it began to grow when I started thinking and reflecting about religion, and it has gone on increasing ever since as I have come to feel more and more distinctly the presence of God in my heart. But why do you ask me this question? Is it with the intention of publishing my answer in a future issue of Kalyan? If so, it will serve no useful purpose. If you have asked it for your own guidance, I must tell you that in this matter another man’s experience will not help you. Faith in God will increase only through ceaseless striving with such faith as you have.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbihaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 170

---

1 Mahadev Desai explains: “The addressee had asked Bapu if there had occurred any particular incidents in his life which strengthened his faith in God.” (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 125)
500. LETTER TO ABHAYDEV SHARMA

May 23, 1932

Bhai Abhay,

I have been daily looking forward to your letter when at last I got one yesterday along with two copies of *Vaidik Vinaya*¹. I had received a copy earlier. I will certainly read it and give you my comments if I have any to make. I like your becoming an Acharya², but I dislike it too. But I believe it on the whole to be right because this duty has come to you unsought. You will be able to perform some great service in this way. Where is Jayadev? Daya has impressed me very favourably through her letters. I see in her the makings of a true sevika.

How is Ramdevji keeping and how is Vidyavati?

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI ABHAY ACHARYA
GURUKUL KANGRI
DISTRICT SAHARANPUR

From Hindi: C.W. 9661

501 TRIBUTE TO P. C. RAY

May 24, 1932

Acharya Ray I had the privilege of knowing for the first time when Gokhale was his next-door neighbour in 1901 and I was undergoing tutelage under the latter. It was difficult to believe that the man in simple Indian dress and wearing simpler manners could possibly be the great scientist and professor he even then was. And it took my breath away when I heard that out of his princely salary he kept only a few rupees for himself and the rest he devoted to public uses and particularly for helping poor students. Thirty years have made no difference to the great and good servant of India. Acharya

¹ An annotated compilation, by the addressee, of Vedic mantras, to be recited one on each day of the year
² Headmaster, preceptor
³ On his seventieth birthday

416 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Ray has set us an example of ceaseless service, enthusiasm and optimism, of which we may well be proud.

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. I

502. LETTER TO SATYACHARAN LAW

May 24, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your circular letter about Acharya Ray’s seventieth birthday celebration. I send you the accompanying humble tribute in the hope that it would be allowed to reach your hands by the authorities.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DR. SATYACHARAN LAW
SECRETARY
ACHARYA RAY’S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION COMMITTEE
CALCUTTA

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. I

503. LETTER TO MOOLCHAND PAREKH

May 24, 1932

The Harijan Samiti’s resolution seemed shocking to me. What guidance, however, can I give from here? How can a single school for Harijan children be closed while the members of the Samiti are alive? If they are sincere, they would sell themselves into slavery, would sell their property but continue to run every school. Instead of accepting defeat, therefore, you should have hope that when you come forward to sell yourselves, the people will buy you and pay the Samiti all the money it needs. You may doubt this, but I do not. Don’t you remember Bhoja Bhagat’s lash?

Bhakti is a bargain in which you must stake your very life, for full of danger is the path ahead.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 171

1Vide the preceding item.
504. A LETTER
May 24, 1932

Boys and girls should be married only after they have grown up. The partners should choose each other with the consent of their parents. Hence there is no unnatural restriction in such a method. If anybody asks my opinion, I would say that marriage between persons following different faiths was a risky experiment. If both husband and wife believe in their respective religions and actively follow them in their lives, difficulties are likely to arise between them. Thus I think that the Bhatia girl’s marriage is a risky step, but I do not regard it as irreligious. I would not oppose it if their love is pure, if the Bhatia girl can follow her religion and the Muslim youth his and if their ideas about food are the same. But I do not advocate marriages between persons of different faiths as I advocate inter-caste marriages because I desire the disappearance of sub-castes. I would not agitate against such marriages either. This is an issue on which every man and woman should think and decide for himself or herself. There cannot be a uniform law for all.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 171

505. LETTER TO K. NATARAJAN
May 25, 1932

When I said that writing about the abuse of occult powers you might have been stronger,¹ I used the adjective precisely in the same sense in which I use it regarding admitted evils. I feel that whilst we should spare evil-doers, we dare not be sparing in our condemnation of evil. Perfect gentleness is not inconsistent with clearest possible denunciation of what one knows to be evil, so long as that knowledge persists; and there would need to be no cause for regret later if our knowledge of the past was found to be a great error of judgment. In our endeavour to approach absolute truth we shall always have to be content with relative truth from time to time, the relative at each stage being for us as good as the absolute. It can be easily demonstrated

¹ This letter is not traceable; for an earlier letter on the subject, vide “Letter to K. Natarajan”, 26-4-1932

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
that there would be no progress if there was no such confidence in oneself. Of course our language would be one of caution and hesitation if we had any doubt about the correctness of our position. In the case in point, the motive of the exhibitor, no matter how excellent it may be, in my opinion would be no excuse for his exhibition, and the laziness of the spectators in not having thought out the consequences of their presence at such exhibitions is again no excuse for their presence. But I must not labour the point any further. I thought that as I could not endorse the position taken up by you in your letter\(^1\), I should just place before you my argument for your consideration.

_Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 177_

506. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI\(^2\)

May 25, 1932

It is irrelevant to the point of the story either to praise or blame the man who carried the water. If you reflect a little, you will see that he could not force the soldiers to drink water. Nor is it to the point to ask whether there was enough water for three. Each of the first two soldiers, on hearing somebody else crying for water, refused to drink the water before that other soldier had got some. Hence we need not blame the man who carried the water for having failed in his duty. You do not seem to have visualized the situation.

When a person is extremely thirsty, he feels such intense craving

\(^1\) Which read: “As for my paragraph about occult powers which you feel might have been stronger, it is curious but I seem to have utterly lost the taste for and the knack of strong writing particularly in criticizing persons. When I take my pen intending to hit hard, the picture of the other man stands before my eyes and seems to say: ‘You do not know what I have to say for myself. I too have ideals, however much they may be obscured by my conduct. Judge me as you would yourself.’ I avoid all adjectives of judgement as poison and try in all that I say to be completely objective. This has become a habit, and I do not doubt that in all circumstances it is a healthy one. As regards this particular matter, the thought that after all the man takes his life weighs my judgment. As for the curious crowd, they, I suppose, find relief from the tyranny of daily circumstances in witnessing facts which show or seem to show that one man at least is able to rise above them.” ([_The Diary of Mahadev Desai_, Vol. I, p. 128])

\(^2\) Misinterpreting _Gandhiji_’s article “Wonderful Self-sacrifice” (pp. 433 5), the addressee had argued that the man who carried the water had failed in his duty, for he could have given some water to each of the three dying men.
for water that he does not care for anybody else and, if he himself gets any water, gulps it down. In this case the poor soldiers were nearing death. But even at that time they did not forget their goodness, which means that they remained in a spiritual state right to the end. The man who carried the water was quite helpless. In any case, was it possible for him to enter into argument with the wounded soldiers, who were drawing their last breath? If you think over all this and reflect a little, you will realize that this, which actually occurred, is an example of sublime and perfect self-sacrifice, and that the man who carried the water and accidentally became the cause of their death deserves no criticism at all. Generally, we do not come across such perfect examples in history. There is always some imperfection or other. But I see none in this.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary Vol. I, pp. 172-3

507. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJEE

May 25, 1932

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I got a letter from you after a long time. You certainly have my blessings. May you live long and render selfless service. Remember a noble verse which our people often recite:

That which goes by the name of adversity is not such; nor is that prosperity which goes by that name. To forget God is adversity; ever to think of him is prosperity.¹

That is, what people call misery is not real misery and what they call happiness is nothing of the sort. Real misery is forgetting God—that is, Truth, and real happiness is remembering Him.

My respectful greetings to Mother. I hope Gokibehn² is all right. Give my blessings to Sumati.

Sardar sends his blessings, and Mahadev his regards.

You may write to me anything you wish to.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4796. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarjee

¹ Vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”
² Addressee’s aunt
May 25, 1932

Please tell Darbari that there was no need for him to give up the kasti1 and sadra2, and that it would be proper for him to resume them as soon as he returned home. There is no sin in wearing them, nor is it superstitious to do so. By wearing them he does no harm to anybody, but by not wearing them he gives pain to other Parsis. It does not befit a servant of the people to give pain to anybody needlessly, and moreover such behaviour is a violation of ahimsa. It should be enough if one does not attach undue importance to these things. One should not idolize them, and he does not do that. The two things are only outward signs of one’s being a Parsi, and I do not think it desirable from any point of view to discard them. I have asked Dahyabhai to bring for him books containing the teachings of Zoroaster. I have read Zoroaster’s sayings. I read a translation of the Vendidad3 many years ago. The work is rich in ethical teaching. Since Zoroastrianism is a very old faith, it is possible that all its scriptures have not survived and that those which are extant do not contain spiritual knowledge of the same order as the Upanishads and other works do. Darbari should read the extant works and reflect over them. But even today it is accepted that Zoroaster’s teaching is based on that of the Vedas. As far as I remember, the translator of the Vendidad has pointed out a close similarity between Zend and Sanskrit. It is, therefore, in no way derogatory to Zoroastrianism or to the self-respect of the Parsi community to fill in the deficiencies which may be observed in the Parsi scriptures with the help of the Vedas and the Upanishads. In fact, it is our right, even our duty, while adhering to our own religion, to accept from other religions anything which specially appeals to us. It is fanaticism to think that we cannot adopt anything from other religions, and Darbari and all of us have grown out of it.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhai Diary, Vol. I, p. 173

1 Sacred thread and shirt worn by Parsis
2 Videvdat, a later Avestan writing
3 ibid
509. LETTER TO BHUSKUTE

May 25, 1932

What do you mean by asserting that there is no guiding force in the universe? How can we make such an assertion? My statement seems to have been somewhat twisted in this context. I have only said that Truth is identical with God and you may take it to be the Moving Spirit. In this context karta\(^2\) does not have the meaning we usually attribute to it. Therefore Truth is karta as well as akarta\(^3\). But this is only an intellectual explanation. There is nothing wrong in this matter in believing whatever one’s heart accepts, as no man has perfect knowledge of God nor can he express whatever little knowledge he has. It is true that I do not depend upon my intellect to decide upon any action. For me the reasoned course of action is held in check subject to the sanction of the inner voice. I do not know if others would call it the mysterious power or whatsoever. I have never deliberated upon this nor analysed it, I have felt no need of doing so either. I have faith, and knowledge, too, that a Power exists beyond reasoning. This suffices for me. I am unable to clarify this any further as I know nothing more in the matter.

[From Hindi]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 173-4

510. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[May 26, 1932]\(^4\)

CHI. MIRA,

I was waiting for your letter. It came today. The shock such as you received must be accepted as the common lot of those who would only serve their conscience. I shall take no hasty step. If, apart from the personal equation, I did not think it to be my duty to stop seeing others if I could not see you, I would not take that step. But let

1 Mahadev Desai explains: “Bhuskute had asked how Bapu acted according to the dictates of the inner voice while he believed that Truth is God and there is no Creator.” (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, 127)
2 Doer
3 Non-doer
4 “Date of Yeravda Postmark”—Mirabehn us wait and see.

Tulsidas’s Ramayana is to me a work of great religious merit. I have not myself read Griffith’s translation\(^1\), but I knew that it was the best available and I am glad you have found it so good.

Don’t you try to make envelopes there?\(^2\) It is a fascinating occupation when you have the time. If you have weak persons having no occupation, they may try their hands at the thing. But not you. For you it would be an uneconomic use of time.

I was again 105\(\frac{1}{2}\) lb. today. So you see there is no cause for anxiety.

I have now acquired sufficient control over the Magan wheel to make the work pleasurable. I spun 202 rounds in 82 minutes, i.e., 147 rounds per hour—not bad for me. I hope to do much better still.

Give my love to the Rollands and tell them I simply enjoyed that letter\(^3\) to the American friend. Surely there was nothing [wrong] about it. And how can there be anything wrong in an honest expression of opinion?

Love to you all from us all.

BAPU

[PS.]

No separate letter to Radha.

From the original: C.W. 6223. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9689

511. A LETTER

May 26, 1932

Tell Chhotubhai that it is useless to think about his father’s illness here. Why, then, should he go on worrying? His father is under the care of the great Father of us all. At present Chhotubhai is exempted by Him from serving as His instrument and nursing his father. He need not, therefore, think about the matter. It is a weakness to lose one’s peace of mind. None of us can be wholly free from that weakness, but the more clearly we realize that we control nothing the more we shall enjoy peace of mind.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9121. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

\(^1\) Of Valmiki’s Ramayana

\(^2\) “Bapu and specially Sardarji [Vallabhbhai Patel] were making envelopes for Bapu’s letters.” —Mirabehn

\(^3\) Describing the meeting between Gandhiji and Romain Rolland in December 1931; vide “Romain Rolland’s Letter to An American Friend”, 12-1931
512. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

May 26, 1932

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

I have your letter. The letter I addressed to Gwalior was somewhat lengthy. I recollect this much but nothing of the contents. We must consider the views of the workers regarding working in three shifts and also the extent of the material and moral benefit to them from it. If they gain materially but lose morally, it will not be acceptable to me. I may be considered neutral as I have at present no means of ascertaining labour’s point of view. I only hope that this change has been made with due regard for the labourers’ attitude towards it. I have received two books. By two books is meant one pamphlet and the proof of your speech. Is it not? These two are with me. I have not been able to read them so far, as I could not take time off from the work on hand. I had to devote a good deal of time to working the charkha with the foot owing to pain in the left hand. And moreover I have taken up the study of Urdu. I shall now possibly save some time and use it for reading the two items. I distinguish between optimism and simplicity of heart. Panditji is endowed with both. That person is an optimist who continues to hope despite the discouraging signs on the horizon and his own knowledge of them. This quality can be found in Panditji in plenty. To accept in good faith someone’s encouraging utterances is simplicity of heart. Panditji possesses that too, which in my opinion is undesirable. Panditji, by virtue of his nobility, has come to no harm on account of this quality. But we should not emulate it. Optimism is dependent upon the inner voice while credulousness is dependent upon external factors.

I am not qualified to give any opinion on foreign travel. Ordinarily my views are well known.

My diet continues to be the same. The weight too is steady.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 7900. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

1 Madan Mohan Malaviya

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
513. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

May 26, 1932

BHAI KRISHNACHANDRA

I have your letter. The man who has faith in God will never go to astrologers. Therefore in my view no action in deference to their prediction is called for. In fact I have observed on many occasions events happening contrary to the predictions and honest astrologers do admit that predictions merely indicate the possibility. Thus undoubtedly there is sufficient scope for individual effort. The meaning of the Gita, III. 33 is clear enough; our basic nature cannot be altered. The English saying that the leopard cannot change his spots also supports it. What is true of the skin is true of the inside too. That is why so many people are unable, in spite of great efforts, to change qualities ingrained in their nature.

Gulkand1 can be taken in place of dates, raisins, etc., but it can never be as beneficial. It is difficult to specify the quantity; everyone has to find that by experience.

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi: S.G. 38. Also G.N. 4261

514. LETTER TO VERRIER ELWIN

May [27]2, 1932

MY DEAR VERRIER,

“Ask and ye shall receive” has been verified once more. Your lovely letter arrived here today. I read it after five and today being Friday, without any prompting from me, Mahadev gave effect to your suggestion about fellowship by singing “Lead Kindly Light” in its very beautiful Gujarati version. At the evening service it is always Mahadev’s part to sing the bhajan. The hour would be approximately 7.40. The prayer commences at 7.30 and opens with the 19 verses at the end of the second discourse of the Gita. It is followed by Ramanama and then comes the bhajan. As soon as I read

1 A preparation made from rose petals and sugar
2 From the reference in the letter to “Friday”, which fell on May 27. The source, however, has “26”.
your suggestion I had no hesitation in endorsing it, but I was debating as to the choice of the hymn. I had in mind the singing of the English text and so the choice was limited. It could either be “Lead Kindly Light” or “When I Survey the Wondrous Cross” or “Take My Life And Let It Be” for the simple reason that I myself cannot very well sing any of the other favourite hymns of mine—not that even these three I sing accurately. But it would be a fair approach to the tune as I have heard it. Mahadev is unused to the tune of English hymns, but by thinking of taking up the Gujarati version of “Lead Kindly Light”, Mahadev solved the difficulty about the choice and singing. There is a special fitness about the choice of this hymn of Newman’s. It was that hymn which, when I was in physical distress, was sung to me by Olive Doke in Johannesburg under the late Rev. Doke’s roof.¹ So you may take it that we shall be here singing this hymn at 7.40 every Friday evening with the knowledge that you at least will be joining us wherever you are, whether the suggestion is taken up or not by the other friends. Let there be no Press publicity about this at the present moment. I do not know that the Government will appreciate it and from my place as a prisoner I would not like to do a single thing that they would not approve of, unless of course I had to engage in an open quarrel with them in any vital matter. I shall be asking Narandas to sing this bhajan on Fridays at the Ashram prayer which during summer months always begins at 7.30.

Yes, I like very much, if only for the sake of the old lady and Eldyth², the idea of your going to England for a few months and you certainly need the change for the sake of your health. And since you should be going, the sooner you leave the better.

I do not like the idea of Mother and Eldyth coming to village India or any other India. The spirit with them may be willing but the flesh will not respond. You yourself are no bright example in this respect, and it would be unwise to put the strain on them of settling down in India. It would be however a wholly different thing if, independently of any prompting on your or anybody else’s part, they felt the clearest possible call from within. But in that case, there would be no question of seeking or accepting advice from any quarter. Such cases have of course happened before now. There the spirit surmounts

¹ In February 1908; Gandhiji was taken care of by the Rev. Joseph Doke after the assault on him by Mir Alam; vide “My Reward”; also “Satyagraha in South Africa”
² Addressee’s younger sister the flesh.

I do not at all like the news about Shamrao’s illness. He should be ashamed of himself. He must learn the art of living befitting a true servant of Daridranarayana.

The passages you quote from Plotinus are very striking and very beautiful. The first is good for all time, the second the modern mind will carp at. I have personally no difficulty in understanding the author’s meaning.

During your absence and Shamrao’s, who will be in charge of Karanjia?

With love from us all to you all, including your host and hostess,

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. 1, p. 233

515. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

May 27, 1932

In a long letter to Devdas Gandhi, Bapu paid a generous tribute to Narandas Gandhi, the Ashram Secretary, “who, by his firmness, patience, courage, renunciation and good judgement, has relieved all my anxiety about the Ashram.” . . . As regards his Urdu studies, Bapu wrote to Devdas Gandhi:

There are lessons on history in each reader. Some of them deal with the Prophet and his times, while others are concerned with Muslim rulers in India. The standpoint from which these are written should be understood by everyone. I have an increasing realization of the importance of Urdu studies. By learning to write a language in its own script we can write letters in it. Moreover we thus also acquire greater mastery over the language, and are better able to decipher as well as understand letters received by us. I believe we should learn how to write Urdu letters to Muslim co-workers. If we are compelled to write to them in English, Hindi can never take its legitimate place as the national language. That is why I think that ability to write in Urdu is an essential part of our mental equipment.

He then referred to the circumstances in which he began to write Urdu letters to Raihana Tyabji and said:

---

1 For the passages and discussion on them, vide The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I.

2 The Translation is reproduced from The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I.
All these are non-violent and delicate means of establishing friendly relations with Mussalmans.

[From Gujarati]

516. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

May 28, 1932

MY DEAR AMTUL,

I have read both your letters. Your Urdu writing is not clear enough for me. I gave nearly an hour to it and could only get the substance of your letter. I gather that it is only a paraphrase of your English letter. If you can keep your head cool and composed, I think you should stay with the family for the time being and then go to the Ashram. If you find it impossible to be at peace with yourself living with your people, you should stay with Noorbanu.

Does this answer all your questions? If not, write again and that in English. Write partly in Urdu also.

I shall write to Dr. Sharma.

I was glad you were able to come. You must regain the lost weight.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 250

517. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

May 28, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

I doubt if there was any moral obligation on the pupils of your guru, the late Panditji, to do something in his memory and pay their debt to him. But, since all of you felt that something must be done, you were bound to do what you did.

Write a letter to Lakshmibehn and send it with somebody there who may be coming this way. Or ask Narandas to write. Sometimes I come to know about a thing only after it is over.

I hope Rambhau is all right now. He who rides may fall too.
I look upon the problem of untouchability from a purely religious point of view. There must be, therefore, no separate electorates in any case. But the reservation of seats for them, if it is statutory, will not test the caste Hindus and, therefore, will not be a real prayashchitta on their part. We cannot bargain with the ‘untouchables’. What is necessary is that the suspicion which they harbour in their minds should go. If you still do not understand my position, please ask me again. Please take care that these views do not find their way into print in any circumstances.

There is a possibility of the visits coming to a stop.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 227. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

518. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA N. KHARE

May 28, 1932

CHI. RAMBAU,

You should not worry about the injury to the bone. Such accidents happen to anyone who does physical exercises. I hope the bone has now been properly set.

Your reply was very helpful to me. Following your suggestion, I have been able to stop touching the wheel with the hand. I have understood the trick, though I have not yet mastered it.

You still make mistakes in your Gujarati. Avoid them and improve your handwriting. My compliments to you on regaining your weight.

When you are entrusted with a responsible job, look upon it as an opportunity to render more service and to be more humble.

Monetary help should be given only to a person who is really in need of it. And it is properly given when it is given at the right time and without any feeling of pride that one was helping somebody.

Non-violence means that we should not give pain to anybody for our good. It comprises both such a state of mind and such conduct.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 293. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

---

1 Atonement
519. LETTER TO LAKSHMI JERAJANI

May 28, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMI (BORIVALI1).

If you used a small slip only for economy and if you use such slips when writing to everybody, what you did was right.
How did Kaka get eczema? Who are there with him?
I write to Gangabehn every week.
If you make a mistake when writing in ink, you may certainly strike out the word or words.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 2811. Courtesy: Purushottam D. Saraiya

520. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

May 28, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

How is it that you don’t get rid of your illness at all? “Satya is bound to triumph” does not mean that it should be victorious exactly at the time we desire it to be. Moreover we cannot say that what we are convinced to be true is the truth. So we may say: ‘If what we think to be truth is indeed the truth, it is bound to succeed.’

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9911. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

521. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

May 29, 1932

MY DEAR CHILD,

This is silence time. I have your longish letter—none too long for me. I forgot last time to tell you I had received the book you sent me. I shall read it as soon as I can. Every minute is pre-mortgaged. Any new reading or other work that comes my way has therefore to await its turn unless it is of such paramount importance as to warrant

1 A suburb of Bombay suspension of current work.

Feeling is of the heart. It may easily lead us astray unless we would keep the heart pure. It is like keeping house and everything in it clean. The heart is the source from which knowledge of God springs. If the source is contaminated, every other remedy is useless. And if its purity is assured nothing else is needed.

This is written with the right hand, for the left has become worse than the right. There is nothing to worry about. Only, it must have complete rest. I therefore spin on a wheel which has a pedal and draw the thread with the right hand.

We are three—all well.

Love from us all. Kisses to the children.

BAPU

From a photostat: No. 111. Courtesy: National Archives of India. Also My Dear Child, p. 91

522. LETTER TO GOSIBEHN CAPTAIN

May 29, 1932

Your welcome letter. I don’t expect Jalbhai to trouble to write to me. I expect you, the nurses, to do that work. A patient has to eat, sleep, complain and bully. He is an angel when he omits to do the two last things. I hope the crutches will go.

I am no good at choosing books for others, even for you, though so near to me. The book of life is really the book to read and that you are doing more or less. The other is amusement for those who have no service. One would think that here at least one would have plenty of time to read. Well, spinning and preparatory studies leave little time for reading for amusement. But I must stop this lecturing.

Are you keeping well? Has Nargisbehn lost her headache? The Government’s reply regarding her is that I am not to see her. Evidently they think that she is taking an active part in politics or that she suffers from contamination.

Now it is my left hand’s turn not to be used. Can it be old age knocking vigorously at my door?

1 The source has this paragraph in Gujarati.
523. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

May 29, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I write this letter though I had none from you this week, for when it reaches the Ashram, you too will have returned and will probably expect a letter from me.

I was happy that all of you came and saw me. Of course, we did not have much to talk about, and in any case the time was too short. I deliberately did not give time to Sushila alone. Whatever time was permitted to me had to be divided among you, Amtul and Sharda. Did Sushila have anything particular to ask me?

In their letters to me, I am afraid the boys and the girls put to me all sorts of pointless questions, and that too merely for the sake of asking some questions. Explain this carefully to them once. Writing letters also requires to be taught to some extent.

I shall look forward to an account of your experience of the visits.

Did you see Dhurandhar? Anybody else?

I hope you have succeeded in increasing your weight.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10287. Also C.W. 6735. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

524. LETTER TO VENILAL GANDHI

May 29, 1932

CHI. VENILAL,

I got your letter. Your illness was such that you are bound to take time to regain strength. Try to regain it patiently.

You have practically got a new life. Make the best use of it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 917. Courtesy: Venilal Gandhi

432 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
525. LETTER TO DAUDBHAI

May 29, 1932

I welcomed your letter. Fight like a lion bad thoughts and impulses. It is our duty to fight. Whether we shall win rests with God. We should be content with fighting. But our fighting must be sincere. Seek the company of the good. For that, you should read good books. In a city like Bombay, reading good books is the only way of being in the company of the good. According to me, the sight of Noorbanu is also uplifting like the company of the good. She is a truthful and pure lady.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 187

526 LETTER TO MAGANLAL P. MEHTA¹

May 29, 1932

Received the letter from Venice. Let me know how you passed your time on the steamer, what things you observed during the voyage and how you spent your money, so that I may have an idea of your powers of description and of what you regard as simplicity....² Take walks for exercise and make yourself physically fit. Do not get others to do what you can do for yourself. Do not use a conveyance in order to reach a place if you can negotiate the distance on foot. Fight against cold by exercise, not by sitting near the fire place....³

Write to your father regularly. Send him a statement of accounts from time to time. Remember that parents can never have enough of letters from their children. They are interested in the minutest details about them. Fulfil your father’s expectations about you.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 186-7

¹ The translation is reproduced from The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I.
² Omission as in the source
³ ibid
527. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
May 29, 1932

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. You kept me waiting too long. I hope you have not forgotten your Gujarati? It is good you are learning English from Kisan. I trust you have made good progress. If your health remains good, Father’s anger will pass.

What else are you studying? Do you get all the material you need for writing?

Tell Prabhavati I have written three letters to her. I do not know whether she got them.

Blessings to Sarup, Kisan and Prabhavati.

All the three of us are quite happy.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

528. LETTER TO BHAU PANSE

May 29, 1932

CHI. BHAU,

I have your letter. Send me only as much [portion] of Vinoba’s discourse as you conveniently can. If possible, write in ink. Did you take it down while Vinoba was discoursing or did Vinoba himself write it out? Training in takli is progressing well. It will be very good if all the Ashram inmates learn it.

The silence period was lengthened from one minute to five minutes in order to give people greater peace. It appears that all the people were much too distracted. Concentration will be greatly helped if all observe silence with a willing heart.

1 Kisan Ghumatkar
2 A Co-worker of Vinobha
To meditate upon the image of a living person is not proper. The object of concentration is expected to be, and ought to be, perfect, but how can we call any living person perfect? The illustrations in the Ramayana and similar works are worthless. But why do we need a concrete image? God is without form or attributes. Why not concentrate one’s thoughts on Him? If that is impossible, a form or an imaginary figure, may be meditated upon. Why not meditate upon the Gita? It has been compared to the kamadhenu. Let us meditate on this; we can gain much from it. However it be, meditation upon living persons is harmful; so it should be avoided.

Write to Rameshwarji that I have already sent him three or four letters.

Krishnadas informed me that Vinoba had started grinding flour and that Jamnalalji had lost 20 lb. in weight.

Here are some remedies for constipation. They can all be tried simultaneously.
1. Drink hot water with salt and lemon-juice in the morning; Salt can be substituted by jaggery or honey.
2. Sleep with an abdominal mud-pack at night.
3. Give up pulses for some time.

If you do not benefit with this treatment within three days, follow it up by eating only boiled greens for the next three days. Eat them hot. Tandalja is the best among the greens. You can take salt and lemon-juice on it.

*Blessings from

BAPU*

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6729. Also C.W. 4472. Courtesy: Bhau Panse

529. LESSON OF DEATH

May 30, 1932

So far as I remember, the following deaths have occurred in the Ashram till now: Fakiri, Vrajjal, Maganlal, Gita, Meghji, Vasant, Imam Saheb and Gangadevi. (It would be desirable to record the dates on which these persons died).

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 26/30-5-1932; vide the following item.

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932 435
Fakiri’s death cannot be described as one befitting an inmate of the Ashram. The Ashram had been recently established when he died and he had not imbibed its moral and spiritual influence. He was no doubt a brave boy. I have made the foregoing remark as he died a victim of gluttony. His death was a test for me. I remember that I sat up, alone, by his side for the whole night on the last day of his life. In the morning, I had to catch a train for Gurukul. I watched the bier being borne away and then, hardening my heart to stone, took the road to the station. Fakiri’s father had entrusted him and his three brothers to me, knowing that I would make no distinction between them and others. When Fakiri had gone, I lost the other three brothers too.

Vrajlal had joined the Ashram when he was well advanced in years and met his death while doing an act of service, thus winning immortal fame for himself and bringing glory to the Ashram. He had descended into a well to bring up a child’s pot and, while climbing up, because of fatigue lost his grip of the rope and fell and died.

Gita passed away peacefully, hearing verses from the Gita. Meghji was an undisciplined child, but he preserved wonderful peace during his illness. In most cases children suffer a great deal when seriously ill and are difficult patients to nurse. But Meghji was an almost ideal patient. Vasant did not have to be nursed for a long time. A fatal attack of smallpox carried him away in a day or two. His death was a painful test for Panditji and Lakshmibehn, and they stood it well.

What shall I say about Maganlal? We are describing here the deaths which occurred in the Ashram. Hence Maganlal’s name has no place in the list. But how can I leave it out? He had come into the world to serve the Ashram. As gold is tested in fire, Maganlal was tested in the fire of service, and passed away after proving his perfect worth. Everything that we see in the Ashram bears witness to Maganlal’s devoted service.

Imam Saheb’s was the only Muslim family in the Ashram and all the members were perfectly loyal to its ideals. His death has created an unbreakable bond between us and Muslims. Imam Saheb regarded himself as a representative of Muslims and had joined the Ashram as one. (I remember here Amina’s two children. But they were only infants and there is little to say about them. Their deaths certainly teach us the necessity of self-control.)
Gangadevi’s face is still vivid before my eyes, and I seem to hear her voice too. I still take pleasure in recalling memories of her. Her life teaches all of us, and particularly women, many lessons. Though practically illiterate, she possessed spiritual wisdom. She was the only person who, of her own accord, refused to go for change of air though she could have gone. She looked after every child entrusted to her care as if it was her own. I do not remember any occasion when she had quarrelled with somebody or got angry. She was not attached to life. She did not fear death— she met it with a smile on her face. She knew the art of dying, for there is an art of dying as there is of living.

I have recalled all these deaths lest we forget what we are. Our earth is like a particle of sand in this vast universe. On that particle of dust we are, so far as our bodies are concerned, mere specks. We cannot count the number of ants in an ant-hill, and cannot even see with our naked eyes creatures smaller than the ant. In relation to the Cosmic Form of the Lord, we are smaller than even the invisible creatures on our earth. That is why there is perfect truth in the description of this body as kshanabhangur\(^1\). Why should we be attached to it? Why should we cause pain to a single creature for its sake? Why should we move heaven and earth to preserve something which is more brittle even than glass? Death means nothing but the soul leaving that body. Why should we fear it, then? Why all this desperate struggle to delay its coming? Let us all, grown-up and young, ponder over this constantly and give up the fear of death, and, while the body lasts, spend it in the service of others. We recite daily the last 19 verses of Chapter II of the Gita in order that we may get the strength to live in this manner. We shall find in them what we seek only if they fill our very hearts.

PS.

After I had finished the foregoing, Mahadev reminds me of the deaths of Fatima, Kaki\(^2\) and Valji’s mother. But I leave the discourse as it is, since their inclusion would not affect the lesson which I have drawn. Even so, I may say that what I was told about these deaths fills my mind with holy thoughts.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I

---

\(^1\) Momentary

\(^2\) Wife of D. B. Kalekar
530. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 26/30, 1932

ChI. Narandas,

Premabehn, Sushila, Amtulbehm, Sharda, Noorbanu and Pyare Ali were here before I got your packet. When absolutely necessary you may increase the size of the party from five to six or even seven. But ordinarily it would be desirable to stick to five. Only this time the number was six, not counting Amina’s children. I think it will be safer for you to stick to the limit I have given, so that you may not displease anybody. Vallabhbhai had concluded that you had dropped your name because there were already five names. Whether that is the reason or whether you did not come because you did not think it necessary to come, in either case it was all right. Probably, there will be no occasion for you to bear all this in mind. I have still not received the Government’s decision in regard to Mirabehn. If it is in the negative, you may take it that I will stop seeing visitors.

Lakshmidevi, who is in the prison here, has left her spectacles in the Ashram. She has asked me to request you, if you find them, to send them here with somebody. If no one is coming, send them by parcel. And also send 20 tolas of asafoetida pills along with it. When you say that Ba’s letters were dispatched directly, I suppose you mean that they were sent through the Superintendent. If that is so, please inquire there. In affixing a stamp on the envelope in which you dispatch letters for me, you generally affix it at one of the two ends where it is closed. But unless you affix stamps at both ends, affixing a stamp at one end only serves no useful purpose. It would be advisable, therefore, to affix stamps at both ends. Either do that, or put sealing wax at both ends. Adopt whichever method you like.

You may certainly discuss with other inmates there my suggestion about calculating the value of work at the rate of one anna per hour, but I think for your own observation you will find it very helpful to maintain such a record in an independent book. The books being kept at present will continue to be maintained. The one I have suggested will be in addition to them. If, however, I have been able to explain my idea, you will see that there is so little to be recorded that the work will not be heavy at all. Moreover we shall be able to judge whether there is any truth in what I have been saying. If the summary at the end of a month reveals a great difference between the actual figure of expenditure and the one arrived at by following the method of calculation suggested by me, we may assume that we shall never be able to close the gap and my mind will then start working in some other direction. I am confident, however, that such a summary will lead to a conclusion which will surprise us. It is my experience that very often because of our lethargy we continue to labour under a mistaken idea, and, if we make proper calculations, we are able to get rid of our preconceived notions and correct our errors. Personally, at the moment, I see no error at all in my reasoning and I believe, therefore, that the result will be excellent. Since for hundreds of years different types of work have been paid for at different rates, we assume that that is the right thing to do but I think it is a false notion.

Did you read the latest letter which Harilal wrote to me? Even the handwriting is not steady. He seems to have written the letter with a trembling hand. Either he has written it in great excitement, or he was drunk when he wrote it. The language is all excitement and insolence. No attention is paid to ordinary syntax, words are left incomplete and even the signature is not completed. I think we should completely forget him now. If God wills, he will reform himself one day. Even in order to open his eyes, it is necessary that we should let him know plainly what we think about him. You say that you got “both” my letters to him. Does that mean that you also got the one which we thought had miscarried? If you got it, did you examine the postmark on it?

The electric treatment seems to have had no effect on the hand. For the first two days, it seemed that it might really do some good. The real trouble just now is not with the right hand but with the left elbow, but the doctor does not give electric treatment for that. He has been thinking of giving radium treatment. Since I spin on the Magan wheel, I do no work at all with the left hand. But there is no cause for worry. So far it has been paining only when I work with it. At other times there is no pain. As for getting Khambhatta here to examine the bone, I cannot say anything just now. Permission for him has been received, but it will not be possible for me to avail myself of it if the reply in regard to Mirabehn is in the negative. I thought I had sent to you the five names which had already been approved. You

\[1\] In “Letter to E. E. Doyle”, 7-5-1932, Gandhiji refers to a letter dated April 28 to “an erring son”; vide also “Diary, 1932”, entry under “April 28”.

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932
know three of them now. The other two are Trivedi and Lady Thackersey. It would be fine indeed if you think you can look after Jayantiprasad’s daughter. Jayantiprasad gave me the impression, during the Dandi March, that he was careful in observing rules.

I feel rather unhappy that Chimanlal and Sharda do not improve. I write down here the suggestion which occurs to me just now as to what they should do. I will not write to them separately. Let them take this as addressed to them. Shivaji used to keep indifferent health. He read all the literature on the subject that he could get, tried the diet changes and exercises recommended in the books which he read and succeeded in improving his health. Chimanlal should do something like that. I don’t mean that all could try everything that Shivaji did. But Chimanlal has been in the Ashram for a long time, has thought about the subject and has observed my experiments too. It is, therefore, possible that he will hit upon something which his body needs. We have plenty of books on the subject in the Ashram. There is a small book even on chromopathy. This remedy is quite easy to try. The doctor whose treatment helped Amtulbehn employs it in many cases. Light asana exercises also may help. Chimanlal should find some time and read about them. According to me, these remedies are more effective than doctors’ medicines, and they are spiritually harmless. We often see that even the latter fail. Medical science is altogether imperfect and much of it is based on hypotheses. Since the body of every person is a unique organism, we do not at all exaggerate in saying that there are no remedies which are universally applicable. About Sharda, I think that we know the remedies but they have not all been tried. She also may be partly responsible for this. You should gently persuade her to try them.

I think it was a very good thing that Jamna went to Ranavav. Since Purushottam is with her, you will not have to worry about her at all. Parnerkar’s problem is very complicated. Do what you can. Read my letter to Titus. Compared with the heat there, the heat here is a joke. Hence our tapascharya, both outward and inward, is no real tapascharya. Yours deserves to be envied. I hope and pray that you will survive it.

If all my letters are not translated into Hindi, make it a strict rule that they must be. Even if there are sometimes only two or three

1 Hiralal Sharma persons who do not know Gujarati, the letter must be translated, unless the persons themselves do not wish it.

May 30, 1932

I had written one letter to Savitribehn, that is, Mrs. Standenath, and put on it the address given by her. But the letter has been returned from the D.L.O. I am now sending it to you, along with the envelope.
If you have more particulars of her address, use it and send the letter by registered post. She must be awaiting a letter from me and, having got no reply from me, must be feeling unhappy. If you find her full address, please send it to me too.

Father Elwin has suggested that we should recite a Christian prayer here every Friday, and that his Christian friends will sing the same prayer on that day and at the same time. They would thus cultivate a communion of hearts with us. Mahadev accepted the suggestion as soon as we read his letter last Friday and we replied to it with Premal Jyoti. Hence we have fixed upon that hymn as the one we will sing every Friday. Discuss the matter with Panditji and, if he agrees, sing it every Friday there too at the time of evening prayers.

You will observe that I have now resumed writing with my right hand.
The doctors here are strongly of the view that the left elbow requires complete rest. Failing this, they think gradually the pain will increase.

I have, therefore, given up even writing with the left hand. In a day or two, they will put the whole arm in plaster. Don’t get alarmed on reading this, for the elbow has never pained so far except when I have been working with the left hand. The arm is to be put into plaster only as a precaution. The doctors are convinced that this pain has no connection with my diet. People who play tennis also get such pain sometimes, and the doctors believe that, because of my regular spinning for many years, I have strained the elbow much more than tennis players do. Hence they think that it requires complete rest for some time.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8829. Courtesy:
Narandas Gandhi

\[Vide \quad \text{“Cable to J. F. Horrabin”, 3-1-1932}\]

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932 441
531. LETTER TO GULCHEN LUMSDEN

May 30, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I thank you for your letter. I well remember the visit of Sir Henry Lawrence to this prison in 1922 or 23, and he is right in his impression that I then passed my time principally between reading The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire and spinning at the wheel. It is also true that he found me quite happy. But there was no “lovely orchard” then, nor is there now. There were then, as there are now, some tall trees about. The rooms are bare and barred cells of an ordinary Indian prison. As cells they are well lighted and well ventilated. So long therefore as the surroundings are concerned, there is no question of my memory betraying me, for at the time of writing I am exactly in the same surroundings as when Sir Henry saw me. If therefore his description of them gave you the impression of a fairy tale, it was surely erroneous. Happiness after all is a mental state, and for myself, being used, now for more than a generation, to a hard life, I have learnt to detach my happiness from my surroundings.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9527. Courtesy: Mrs. Hugh Lumsden, Canada

532. LETTER TO A. R. TIJARAY

May 30, 1932

MY DEAR TIJARAY,

I have your letter, received just now. The previous letter you refer to was not received at all. I would have attended to it there and then. Sardar Vallabh who is present whilst I am dictating this and who has shared all the correspondence with me has also no recollection whatsoever of anything having been received from you. However I know no one in Vienna. I have never been there. But I have no doubt that when you tell the specialist the whole of your story he will treat your case as he must have treated similar cases before. If it is of any value, you may certainly use this letter to identify you as Principal, Tilak Vidyalaya, Nagpur. I hope you will benefit by the treatment there. I am glad that Vithalbhai is improving. Please remember me to him.

---

1 Addressee’s name is supplied from Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 189.

Yours sincerely

M. K. GANDHI

A. R. TIJARAY
(Principal, Tilak Vidyalaya, Nagpur)
C/O PENSION B. PFEFFER
WILHELM EXNERGASSE 28
WIEN IX, AUSTRIA

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. I, p. 241

533. A LETTER

May 30, 1932

In my opinion unity will come not by mechanical means but by change of heart and attitude on the part of the leaders of public opinion. I do not conceive religion as one of the many activities of mankind. The same activity may be either governed by the spirit of religion or irreligion. There is no such thing for me therefore as leaving politics for religion. For me, every, the tiniest, activity is governed by what I consider to be my religion.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 189

534. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

May 30, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

You did well in paying a visit to Pyarelal. He had become impatient to get my reply. I have written a postcard to him directly from here. Mahadev will write by and by. Inform me what your movements for some time will be. If you intend to write to Pyarelal,

1 The addressee had advised Gandhiji to give up politics and to preach the truths common to Islam, Christianity and Buddhism.
inform him that I am still reading Ramakrishna’s and Vivekananda’s books. I will send them over to Rameshwardas’ when I finish them.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1839

535. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

May 30, 1932

Bhai Rameshwardas,

I got your letter. I hope that you got my last letter which I wrote before you wrote yours and which I sent to you through the Ashram. Stick to the vow of spinning. Do not take any new vow until your mind has become firm. However, adhere with the utmost firmness to the vows which you have taken and maintained so far. Even a small vow becomes a rudder to the ship of one’s life, if one sticks to it in the face of all difficulties. It will be all right if you can win over your mother and sister-in-law with loving persuasion, otherwise you should patiently tolerate their opposition. They should not be forced against their wishes. It will be good if you send the boy to the Gurukul at Kangri. There he will learn Hindi, Sanskrit and English and almost everything else that they teach at a high school. If he is unwilling to go to the Gurukul, he may go to Santiniketan. In that case he should learn Bengali. If even that does not suit him, he may join the Kashi Vishvavidyalaya. He will not be able to study at home. Since you have withdrawn him from the high school there, it would not be proper to send him back to it. Nor would it be right to interrupt his studies. It would, therefore, be desirable to send him to one of the three places mentioned above.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 181

1 Presumably by Romain Rolland; vide “Diary, 1932”, entries under May 22 and 23.
2 Rameshwardas Poddar of Dhulia
May 30, 1932

I believe, and doctors also hold the same view, that no woman can be absolutely and simply raped. Not being prepared to die, a woman yields to the wrongdoer. But a woman who has overcome all fear of death would die before submitting to the outrage. It is easy to say this, but difficult to act in this manner. Hence when a woman yields to the wrongdoer unwillingly, it is but right that we should regard her as having been raped. If such a woman becomes pregnant, she should not resort to abortion. A woman who has been the victim of a rape does not deserve any censure. On the contrary, people should have compassion for her. If, however, a woman wishes to conceal the very fact of her having been raped, who is to say what right she has, whether or not she has a right to resort to abortion? In her fright she would believe that she had such a right and do as she wished. After the outrage, a woman has no right at all to commit suicide, nor need she do it.

My replies to your letters or to the letters of others, being written from jail, must not be published. I write numerous letters from here and it would not at all be proper to publish them. The Government may even tolerate the publication of all these letters, but a satyagrahi ought not to take such freedom. This is one of the restrictions which a satyagrahi voluntarily imposes on himself. The world is not impatient to know my views and act according to them. Even if it is, it should exercise patience at present. Nor do I myself attach so much value to my views. And, moreover, I cannot say about any view which I may express now that I will not change it in future. I may not mind expressing my personal views to a person like you. I would assume that you would bear in mind my temperament and my short-comings and take them for what they are worth.

And now about the questions you put. Some of them are such as should not be asked at all. A seeker may ask a person in whom he has faith for solutions to a very few of his immediate difficulties. He should never raise hypothetical issues. He may certainly ask if he has any doubt about a step which he intends to take. If he asks a question

---

1 The Diary of Mahadev Desai Vol. I, gives only the initial letter “S” of the addressee’s name.
about something which has really happened, he should give all details of the incident. He should not frame a general question on the basis of the incident, for in doing so he might ignore some relevant detail of that incident. It would be risky, in that case, to apply to that particular incident the reply given to a general question.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 188-9

537. DIARY, 1932

JANUARY 4, MONDAY, YERAVDA

Spun 190 rounds. The police came and arrested me at 3 o’clock in the morning. Left after reciting a bhajan. Elwin’, Privat, Mills and others were present. Vallabhbhai also was arrested at the same time. We met in the jail and are lodged together. I may say I spent the day resting. I could take a walk for the first time today after landing. Started reading Will Durant’s book. Ate no fresh fruit today. Had two seers of milk.

JANUARY 5, TUESDAY

Spun 172 rounds. Rested well today also. Sent a note about our wishes in regard to visits, etc., to I. G. just for his information. Continued reading Durant’s book.

JANUARY 6, WEDNESDAY

JANUARY 7, THURSDAY

1 In Gandhiji’s own hand, in Gujarati; for the entries under October 14, 1931, when Gandhiji commenced this Diary, to January 3, 1932
2 From January 26, 1932 Gandhiji described this as “Yeravda Mandir”. This place-entry is not reproduced under subsequent dates.
3 Verrier Elwin
4 For the titles of the books, vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 3/8-2-1932
5 ibid
taking tomatoes tomorrow.

JANUARY 8, FRIDAY

JANUARY 9, SATURDAY
Spun 212 rounds. Today completed Brailsford’s Rebel India. Received two baskets of fruits and vegetables from Trivedi.

JANUARY 10, SUNDAY
Spun 160 rounds. Yesterday commenced reading Mahomedali Al Haj Salmin’s Imam Hussain. Completed it today. Now am reading his book on Khalifa Ally. Entered silence today at 3 o’clock. Have still not gained the strength to spin or work more. Feel like lying down all the time. Slept thrice during the day. Ate the grapes and oranges sent by Trivedi.

JANUARY 11, MONDAY
Spun 163 rounds. Received some mail today, namely, letters from Mira, Kashinath, Kalavati and Prabhavati. A lawyer named Iyer sent a book on the Scout Movement.

JANUARY 12, TUESDAY
Spun 206 rounds. Some more letters and books arrived today. Received permission to write letters. Wrote to Narandas, Ba, Mira, Radha, Amina and others. Also to Prabhavati and Kashinath.

JANUARY 13, WEDNESDAY
Spun 185 rounds. Commissioner Clayton called. Received a letter from Prabhavati. Wrote to Narandas enclosing postcards to Mahalakshmi and others as also to Chandrashankar and Hemprabhadevi. Dahyabhai visited Vallabhbhai. Ordered dates today.

JANUARY 14, THURSDAY
Spun 185 rounds. Finished today the letter to the Viceroy which I had been drafting since yesterday. Completed reading life of Ally yesterday. Today commenced reading Hoare’s The Fourth Seal. Received slivers, sandals and carding-bow from the Ashram. Also wrote a letter to Samuel Hoare. Were weighed today—my weight was

1 A Marathi monthly
2 The first letter to Narandas Gandhi, however, is dated January 11, 1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 11-1-1932 the same, Sardar’s decreased by three pounds.

JANUARY 15, FRIDAY

JANUARY 16, SATURDAY

JANUARY 17, SUNDAY

Spun 196 rounds. I could read a good deal today. Again two baskets of fruits and vegetables arrived from Trivedi.

JANUARY 18, MONDAY

Spun 166 rounds. The Ashram mail—Narandas, Khushalbhai, Champa, Pranijvan, Abbas, Parnerkar, Surentra, Balkrishna, Chhotelal, Durga, Ratilal, Bhansali, Vasumati, Padma, Valji, Prabhudas, Ramdas, Mira, Chhotalal Gandhi, Mahuwa, Maganlal Shamji, Urmi Devi, Abdul Majid (Barabanki), Raihana, Kamala Nehru, Nirmala Joshi, Hakim Abdul Latif (Dasuya), Surbala Desai (Surat), Prof. Trivedi. Completed MacDonald’s book.

JANUARY 19, TUESDAY

Spun 228 rounds. Received today intimation regarding newspapers, visits, etc. Seems to be satisfactory. Received letters from Pyarelal and others. Received fruit from Lady Thackersey. Commenced yesterday the book about the Matar Taluka inquiry.

JANUARY 20, WEDNESDAY

JANUARY 21, THURSDAY

Spun 205 rounds. Ashram letters arrived today and also one from Kashinath. Stanley Jones sent me his new book. Wrote letters yesterday and today: Lester, Hopkinson, Sir George Barnes, Narandas,

---

1 J. C. Kumarappa’s Survey of Matar Taluka
2 Travelogue
3 A slip for St. George’s Guild

JANUARY 22, FRIDAY
Spun 231 rounds. Sent yesterday’s letters for posting. In addition, wrote to Ramananda Babu, the Chronicle, Marie Petersen. Col. Steele examined both of us.

JANUARY 23, SATURDAY
Spun 153 rounds. Did not take milk today. Again a basket of fruit has arrived. Wrote a letter yesterday to Sir Frederick Sykes and handed it to the Major today. Wrote a few letters during the day for the Ashram. Received today letters from Hemprabha Devi and others. Also from Raihana.

JANUARY 24, SUNDAY
Spun 160 rounds. Cresswell called this morning. Did not take milk even today. Wrote a number of letters for the Ashram in the afternoon.

JANUARY 25, MONDAY
Spun 201 rounds. Completed the Ashram mail. It contained 61 letters and a talk on Chapter XIV [of the Gita]. The other letters are to Prabhavati, Raihana, Hemprabha, Kangani 2 Sundaram and Vishvanath Thanorkar. A number of books arrived again today, including a volume of Ingersol’s speeches. Wrote to Josiah 3 acknowledging receipt of these books.

JANUARY 26, TUESDAY
Spun 211 rounds. Handed over yesterday’s letters for posting. Took milk today. Ordered dates. The Gita number of Purushartha arrived. Prepared draft of letter to Emerson. It was so long and I was so much engrossed in it that I did not hear the clock strike seven. Hence prayer was delayed by half an hour. Wrote letters to Vichchhan Charan Patnaik, Kashinath, Edith Scott, Hope and also to Narandas, having forgotten to enclose Chapter XIV with the letter to him. Commenced The Ruin of Egypt.

1 K. T. Shah
2 Literally, “jobber”
3 Dr. Josiah Oldfield, editor of The Vegetarian, President of Bayswater Vegetarian Society founded by Gandhiji during his stay in England for studies; vide “An Autobiography”
JANUARY 27, WEDNESDAY

Spun 190 rounds. Handed over yesterday’s letters to the Superintendent. Today wrote one to Prof. Shah and handed over this also to him. Mira, Pyare Ali, Noorbanu and Radha paid a visit. Received copies of The Hindu and The Leader. Received the Ashram mail. Wrote a postcard to Narandas about the Giri family. Wrote some letters.

JANUARY 28, THURSDAY

Spun 172 rounds. Handed over to the Superintendent letters to Emerson and Narandas. Wrote letters. Received a copy of The Leader.

JANUARY 29, FRIDAY

Spun 179 rounds. Received The Tribune today. More books arrived. Received letters from Narandas and Prabhavati. Airey [sic] received orders to go to Bombay. I asked him to carry Hoare’s book. Wrote some letters. I still feel sleepy.

JANUARY 30, SATURDAY

Spun 168 rounds. I fed great need for sleep. Wrote some letters during the day.

JANUARY 31, SUNDAY

Spun 207 (two hundred and seven) rounds. Completed The Ruin of Egypt. Commenced Hayes’ book on the cow. Among some letters received from abroad was one from Esther, too.

FEBRUARY 1, MONDAY

Spun 235 rounds. Wrote letters and got them ready. The Ashram packet—Manilal (Dhiru, Mangal, Gulab), Chintamani, The Hindu, Kali Babu, Prabhavati, Kamla Nehru, Chandrasas, Kevalram Dave (along with his sisters’), Emma Harker, Khushal Shah, Swami Chidatmananda, Virendranath, Hariram Mohandas, Prabhakar, Biharilal, Kantilal Trivedi. Received five books from Shah. The second mail that arrived contained Manilal’s letter from South Africa. Quinn went to Visapur. Dahyabhai met the Sardar.

FEBRUARY 2, TUESDAY

1The Book of the cow letters to Joan Widdikiss, Gertrude Keller, De Valera, Rev. W. Hayes, Prof. Hoyland, Carla, rmani.

FEBRUARY 3, WEDNESDAY
Spun 152 rounds. I do not know how I spun fewer rounds today. There was the correct number of slivers. Handed letters written yesterday to the Superintendent for posting. The magistrate called. Were weighed. Vallabhbhai’s weight was 144.5 lb., mine 107. Read the life of Shri Bhupati Nath. In the afternoon, Lady Vithaldas, Prof. Trivedi, Damodar and Vidya called. Mira sent leather for the soles and honey. 190 persons, including Ramdas, Chhaganlal Joshi, Surendra and Somabhai came from Sabarmati [jail]. Mani, Lilavati, Nandubehn and others arrived and they were transferred to Belgaum [jail]. Received the Ashram mail.

FEBRUARY 4, THURSDAY
Spun 210 rounds. Wrote some letters to the Ashram. Wrote a separate one to Mira. Two bottles of honey came from Lady Thackersey.

FEBRUARY 5, FRIDAY
Spun 210 rounds. Spoke to the Superintendent about meeting fellow-prisoners, wrote to him a letter. Received copy of The Modern Review. The Superintendent gave me oil for applying on the elbow.

FEBRUARY 6, SATURDAY
Spun 244 rounds. Today commenced reading biography\(^1\) of Zaka Ullah. Wrote letters to the Ashram; also to Mary Barr, Karimnagar, Ramananda Babu.

FEBRUARY 7, SUNDAY
Spun 180 rounds. Wrote out summary of Chapter XVI of the Gita. Felt miserable upon reading the painful news of a girl’s attempt on the life of the Governor of Bengal. Translated speech about God.\(^3\)

FEBRUARY 8, MONDAY

---

\(^1\) The first letter is illegible in the source.

\(^2\) Zaka Ullah of Delhi by C. F. Andrews

\(^3\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 3/8-2-1932
Did not take milk or curds today. Took almond paste.

FEBRUARY 9, TUESDAY (RAMZAN ID)
Spun 192 rounds. Sent for posting letters which were made ready yesterday. The Major did not attend office on account of Id. Received news of Prabhudas’s arrest.

FEBRUARY 10, WEDNESDAY
Spun 185 rounds. Punjabhai, Juthabhai, Shankar, Amina and Kanti called on me today. Received the Ashram mail. Kanti gave a few books among which was Sangitshastra of Barve sent by Panditji. Received letter from the Governor of Bombay. We were weighed today. I was 105_ [lb.] and Vallabhbhai 141.5.

FEBRUARY 11, THURSDAY (VASANT PANCHAMI)

FEBRUARY 12, FRIDAY
Spun 183 rounds. Despatched yesterday’s letters. Continued Ashram mail today. Wrote quite a number of letters.

FEBRUARY 13, SATURDAY
Spun 207 rounds. Prof. Glen Clarke sent me his books. One or two other books arrived. Wrote Ashram letters this afternoon also. Vallabhbhai passed blood in stool. The Major, therefore, examined it.

FEBRUARY 14, SUNDAY
Spun 201 rounds. Wrote letters during afternoon. Translated Chapter XVII in the evening.

FEBRUARY 15, MONDAY
Spun 217 rounds. There are 68 letters for the post. Narandas for the Ashram, Chapter XVII, and also to West, Narsi Premji, Jivraj Mehta, Philip Hartog, K. T. Shah, Chhaganlal, Metalbhai, Gertrude Keller, Rasiklal Chunilal, Velshi Ranshi, Harilal Govindji, Maganlal Mehta, Nirmala Pandya.

FEBRUARY 16, TUESDAY
Spun 189 rounds. Major Martin paid a visit today. The question of my meeting other prisoners was discussed. As a result, I wrote a letter. Handed over yesterday’s letter to the Superintendent. Received copy of the Golden Book of Tagore as also of the biography of A. Gray [sic]. Telegram to the Maharaja of Bikaner. Wrote letters to Narandas, Jhaverchand, Chakechake [sic], Hanumanprasad, Gosibehn, Ramananda Babu, Mrs. Gael.

FEBRUARY 17, WEDNESDAY
Spun 171 rounds. Handed over yesterday’s letters to the Superintendent. Mira, Valji and Lilavati came to see me today. There was some argument about Valji and Lilavati. In the end they saw the point. Mira will be arrested tomorrow. Valji brought a book on astronomy and three letters. Received honey and papaya from Lady Thackersey. Mira brought soap powder and almonds.

FEBRUARY 18, THURSDAY
Spun 160 rounds. Received Gandiva wheel from Lakshmidas. Received a letter from Andrews. There is an enquiry on about the people coming to see me. Received the Ashram mail. Started writing letters for the Ashram. Were weighed today—Vallabhbhai was 142 [lb.] and I, 106. Wrote letters to Lakshmidas and Damodardas.

FEBRUARY 19, FRIDAY
Spun 150 rounds. Handed over yesterday’s two letters for posting. Dahyabhai paid a visit to Vallabhbhai. Received four books from Maithilisharan. Received a telegram from Magan about going abroad. Wrote Ashram letters.

FEBRUARY 20, SATURDAY
Spun 205 rounds. The District Magistrate called. Wrote letters. Talked with the Superintendent about Ishu. Someone has sent a book about Mussolini.

FEBRUARY 21, SUNDAY
Spun 160 rounds. Completed summary of Chapter XVIII. Practically finished Ashram mail. Took white gourd as the fifth item.¹ Changed bed-cover which had got completely worn out.

FEBRUARY 22, MONDAY
Spun 160 rounds. G. N. Gokhale has sent his book on the Dharmashastras. Letters to the Ashram totalled 32. In addition to [letter to] Narandas and the summary of the Gita chapter, the others include those to Ghanshyamdas, Kamla Nehru, Rani Vidyavati, Maithilisharan, Jerajani, Rameshwarlal Bajaj, Raihana. Completed

¹ The reference is to Gandhiji’s vow to take not more than five items in his day’s food, which he had taken in 1915 during his visit to the Kumbha Mela in Hardwar; vide “Diary for 1915”
Shah’s Sixty Years of Economic Administration of India and Maithilisharan’s Panchavati. Commenced Saket.

FEBRUARY 23, TUESDAY

Spun 183 rounds. IShu has been sent for a night. Spoke with the Superintendent about visits. Sent yesterday’s letters.

FEBRUARY 24, WEDNESDAY

Spun 159 rounds. The Civil Surgeon examined me. Received the Ashram mail. Commenced writing letters.

FEBRUARY 25, THURSDAY

Spun 222 rounds. Sir Samuel’s letter arrived, also one from Mira. Today Yashwantrasad, Jivanlal, Lady Vithaldas were to pay a visit but did not because of Superintendent’s objection. Wrote to Mira, Harjivan, Babalbhai and Ranchhodbhai Kunvarji’s maternal uncle—and of course the Ashram letters. Yesterday began Salvemini’s book on Mussolini, having finished Saket.

FEBRUARY 26, FRIDAY

Spun 176 rounds. Wrote letters for the Ashram. Handed over yesterday’s letters to the Superintendent. Received 24 postcards today. Received some Hindi books from Kalyan Press.

FEBRUARY 27, SATURDAY

Spun 195 rounds. Dahyabhai called. I also met him. Received *[Life of] Henry George*¹ and some other books from America. Received some letters. Wrote and sent a postcard to Ba. Wrote letters for the Ashram.

FEBRUARY 28, SUNDAY

Spun 206 rounds. Ate bread today. Discontinued tomatoes because of stomatitis. Wrote letters for the Ashram and some others. Wrote letters to Sir Fazli and Sir Samuel Hoare.

FEBRUARY 29, MONDAY

Spun 163 rounds. Handed over two letters of yesterday to the Superintendent. Today received letters from Munshi and others. During these days wrote letters to Lilavati (Munshi), Hemprabha, Esther, Jessie Jones, Sumangal, Lakshmidas, Purushottam, Maganlal Pranjivan, Bhagwanji Anupchand, Mulchand Parekh, Kanu Munshi, Madhavdas Gokuldas, forty-two for the Ashram in addition to

¹ American economist
Narandas’s and on Socrates’s ideas about death.

MARCH 1, TUESDAY

MARCH 2, WEDNESDAY

MARCH 3, THURSDAY
Spun 217 rounds. Ba and Shanta called on me. Fruit arrived from Lady Thackersey. Dinkar brought honey and dates. Received the Ashram mail. Wrote Ashram letters. Sent yesterday’s postcards for posting and a telegram to Khushalbhai.

MARCH 4, FRIDAY
Spun 205 rounds. Some books arrived. Letters from Sir George Barnes and from Ghanshyamdas. Oranges arrived from Wardha. Wrote the Ashram letters. Dahyabhai and Yashoda paid a visit.

MARCH 5, SATURDAY
Spun 160 rounds. Five of the skeins today are likely to be short by three rounds. Government orders regarding visitors from outside [the Ashram] received today. Wrote a letter to Narandas. The other letters were for the Ashram.

MARCH 6, SUNDAY

MARCH 7, MONDAY
Spun 180 rounds. 37 Ashram letters, “Reminiscences of Imam

1 Vide “Death, A Friend”, 29-2-1932
2 Gandhiji wrote “Reminiscences of Imam Saheb” instead; vide “Imam Saheb— I”, 7-3-1932; 14-3-1932 and 21-3-1932 also “Letter to D. B. Kalelkar”, 7-3-1932 the spinning-wheel, that of the spring. Received letters from Lakshmidas, Raihana, Manmohan and others. Wrote to Raihana, Manmohan, Lakshmi and Ramachandra, Gertrude Kellersching, Agatha Harrison, Aubrey Mony, Ramgopal Mehta, Nagardas, Kantilal Shah, Rambiharilal, Lakshmidas.

MARCH 9, WEDNESDAY
Spun 215 rounds. Today I weighed 105.5. Vallabhbhai was 139. Handed over yesterday’s letters for posting. Ramdas called. Discussed what would be my duty in case separate electoral rolls were prepared for untouchables. Also prepared draft of a letter to be addressed to Sir Samuel Hoare. Received the Ashram mail.

MARCH 10, THURSDAY
Spun 189 rounds. Today spun on the old spinning-wheel, it took a lot of time. Major brought Emerson’s letter. Jaisukhlal and others will come to see me. Received grapes from Trivedi. Mahadev came. Revised letter to Sir Samuel.

MARCH 11, FRIDAY
Spun 160 rounds. Today the Major examined Mahadev’s leg. Despatched letter to Sir Samuel through the Governor. Vallabhbhai was willing neither to stop the letter nor to agree to its being sent, either. If his vote counted, it would be a negative one. Mahadev said having regard to my nature such a letter ought to go. Commenced Ashram letters.

MARCH 12, SATURDAY

MARCH 13, SUNDAY
Spun 203 rounds. Wrote the Ashram letters, and one to Emerson.

MARCH 14, MONDAY
Spun 185 rounds. Wrote 41 letters for the Ashram; in addition to these letters, one to Narandas and “Reminiscences of Imam Saheb”, [letters to] Sir George Barnes, Shanti Mehta, Bhanumati, Radha, Benarsi, Rukhi, Evelyn Wrench, Keelan [sic].
MARCH 15, TUESDAY
Spun 155 rounds. Today Kashi, Jamna, Moti, Lakshmi, Lalitabehn, Jaisukhla, Durga, Babla and Prabodh paid a visit. Wrote a letter to Martin to the effect that I should receive a reply about seeing Haridas and others by Friday. Today received fruit from Trivedi. Completed Wet Parade. Commenced Carpenter’s Adam’s Peak to Elephanta. Wrote letters to Hemprabha, Alexander Gary and Dinkarrao.

MARCH 16, WEDNESDAY
Spun 185 rounds. Major Martin’s reply regarding Haridas arrived. Received reply from India Office on behalf of Evans [and] Rogers.¹ Dictated letters [to] Shah, Mulchand Parekh, Oriental Eucalyptus Company, Champaklal, Syed Mustafa Husain, Napoleon, Prithuraj, Shankarsagar. Handed over yesterday’s letters for posting.

MARCH 17, THURSDAY
Spun 221 rounds. Handed over yesterday’s letters. Received the Ashram mail and a letter from Dhiru.

MARCH 18, FRIDAY
Spun 160 rounds. Decision about visiting prisoners is received. Received a painful letter from Champa. Commenced letters for the Ashram. Wrote letters to Narandas, Petavel² and Harjivan.

MARCH 19, SATURDAY
Spun 162 rounds. Handed over yesterday’s letters for posting. Met Joshi, Narasinhbhai and Haridas. Sent dates to Haridas. Received Stokes’s book. For the present agreed to content myself with letters from women prisoners instead of meeting them.

MARCH 20, SUNDAY
Spun 195 rounds. Completed Adam’s peak to Elephanta. Completed Anagh. Wrote letters for the Ashram.

MARCH 21, MONDAY
Spun 207 rounds. Letters for the Ashram and letter to Gangabehn. Sent Federal Finance, Money and Sixty Years of Economic Administration of India to Chhaganlal. Commenced

¹ The reply was presumably an acknowledgement of the gifts sent by Gandhiji to them after his return to India; vide footnote 2 on “Letter to Mirabehn”, 12-1-1932
² Captain J. W. Petavel
Stokes’s Satyakama.

MARCH 22, TUESDAY

MARCH 23, WEDNESDAY

Spun 170 rounds. Handed over for posting yesterday’s letters and the one written today to Jayakar. Gangabehn paid a visit. Women prisoners have commenced a fast. Had a rather sharp discussion about this with the Major. Sent dates to Haridas. Received the Ashram mail.

MARCH 24, THURSDAY

Spun 159 rounds. Commenced Ashram letters. Prepared drafts of letters to Major Martin and Dr. Norwood. Received Fors Clavigera. Received news of breaking of the women’s fast.

MARCH 25, FRIDAY

MARCH 26, SATURDAY

Spun 214 rounds. The Major informed me that I could write to fellow-prisoners. Hence I wrote letters to Mira, Mani, Jamnalal, Devdas and sent them over. Sent a telegram to Shankerlal on Dhirajlal Banker’s death. Got Gangabehn’s letter. Sent her slivers. Received dates from Vithaldas, and honey and papaya from Lady Vithaldas. Today finished the old stock of almonds. Received from Rameshwar Rolland’s Life of Vivekananda and Ramakrishna. Received some other books also.

MARCH 27, SUNDAY

Spun 181 rounds. Received Ashram letters and a telegram from Shankerlal. Wrote to him and Lilavati, and also to Emerson, Raghavan. Proofs of the autobiography [for children].

---

1 Satyakama or “True Desires”

2 By Ruskin
MARCH 28, MONDAY
Spun 177 rounds. Got yesterday’s letters. Fuss over giving dates to prisoners. Wrote letters for the Ashram. In one of them wrote about Ruskin. Letters to Taramati, Narasinhbhai’s Vimala, Amtul.

MARCH 29, TUESDAY
Spun 208 rounds. The surgeon examined me. Explained about the dates to the Major. Handed over letters for the Ashram, etc.

MARCH 30, WEDNESDAY
Spun 174 rounds. Wrote to the Major about visits. Harjivan and Sharda called. Received letter from Mathuradas. Completed proofs of the autobiography for children.

MARCH 31, THURSDAY
Spun 163 rounds. Wrote to Mathuradas. Received Jayakar’s letter. Commenced letters for the Ashram. Have now stopped receiving goat’s milk.

APRIL 1, FRIDAY
Spun 184 rounds. Today met Qureshi and two Maharashtrian gentlemen for two hours. Two seers of almonds arrived.

APRIL 2, SATURDAY
Spun 201 rounds. Dahyabhai paid a visit. Telegram to Nargis about Jal. Wrote letters for the Ashram. Received letters from Lester and others.

APRIL 3, SUNDAY
Spun 190 rounds. Wrote and also dictated letters for the Ashram. Dictated letters for some Americans.

APRIL 4, MONDAY
Spun 186 rounds. Handed over for posting letters to Kamla Nehru, Jayakar, Radha, Kanu Desai, Jamu Dani, Chaturbhuj Sharma, 52 for the Ashram. Also a letter to Narandas along with [an article on] “A Saintly Woman of Russia”, and letters to Loovan, Rev. Skudder, Henarsa, Prabhavati, Jerajani, Raihana (Pashabhai), Savitri Standenath¹, Shambhushankar, Rev. Smiley.

APRIL 5, TUESDAY
Spun 182 rounds. In addition to yesterday’s letters, handed over

¹ By Mahadev Desai; vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 3-4-1932
² Francisca Standenath
letters for Shah and Elwin. Dictated letters to Maithilisharan, Ghanshyamdas, Gandralal, Andrews, Tyagi and Gopaldas. Started history of the Ashram. Received books from Santaram and others.

APRIL 6, WEDNESDAY

Spun 192 rounds. Handed over yesterday’s letters for posting. Added to them a postcard to Durga. I fasted today. Today got a mattress made to serve as a seat for me. Received honey from Lady Thackersey. Completed the first book of Fors. Completed Narasinhbhai’s letters, Samarpan and Buddha and Mahavir. Commenced second part of Fors.

APRIL 7, THURSDAY

Spun 198 rounds. Wrote a letter to Lakshmanrao Kane. Commenced Ashram letters. Cresswell sent two books on astronomy. A carpet arrived from Armenia. Received three seers of almonds. Received letter from Mira. Received a book on Vedanta from Jayakar. Received letter from Nanabhai. Dictated letters to Nanabhai Bhatt, Kartar Singh, Moto Edith, Roberto.

APRIL 8, FRIDAY

Spun 234 rounds. Handed over yesterday’s letters for posting. Major Mehta arrived. Received letters from Jamnalal, Esther and Nargis. Wrote Ashram letters. Dictated letters to Hanumanprasad, Rameshwar, the Hungarian priest and Ambalal Modi.

APRIL 9, SATURDAY

Spun 235 rounds. Dahyabhai paid a visit. Received books on astronomy and a letter from Hiralal. Major Mehta examined my hand and Mahadev’s leg. Applied iodine to both. Dictated a few letters.

APRIL 10, SUNDAY

1 The Armenian who had sent the carpet
2 Here, in the source, followed the following prayer by Prahlad:
APRIL 11, MONDAY

Spun 383 rounds (194+189=383). Today completed 375 rounds of yarn without a break. So far a skein was completed on alternate days but today and yesterday there was one skein daily. I intend to keep this up if possible. Received Sir Samuel’s reply to my letter about the caravan¹, etc. Completed letters for the Ashram. Handed over yesterday’s letters to the Superintendent. Have passed on a telegram for Kamla Nehru. It will go to the I.G. Wrote about “Watching the Heavens” for the Ashram.

APRIL 12, TUESDAY

Spun (186+187)=373 rounds. The first figure within brackets is that of the rounds counted today. The second is that of today’s on the spindle. Handed over letters for the Ashram. The letters numbered 28. Dictated to Vallabhbhai letters to Gangabehn and Chhaganlal. A postcard to Shankarlal Marwadi. Handed these three together to the Major. In the afternoon dictated letters to Kambhatta, Nargis, Narandas, Lalita Subbiah, Shanti Mehta, Shankarbhai, Major Martin and Hiralal.

APRIL 13, WEDNESDAY

Spun (188+207)=395 rounds. This morning wrote letters to Hiralal, Ramdhari, Lakshmi Raja, Dhiru Revashankar. Letters and copies of “Watching the Heavens” to Gangabehn and Chhaganlal. Handed over these and yesterday’s letters to the Major. I am fasting today. Still I weighed 104.5 lb. Last Wednesday I was 103.5. Received the Ashram mail.

APRIL 14, THURSDAY

Spun 168+217=385 rounds. Handed over letters to Radhika, Esther and Hemprabha Devi for posting. Today met Mohanlal, Manibhai and Dhurandhar. I saw Shankarrao Deo who has been fasting. He did not listen to me. Bali, Manu, Kunvarji and Kusum called on me.

APRIL 15, FRIDAY (RAMANAVAMI)

Spun 158+248=406 rounds. Received a telegram from Ranjit, wrote a letter to Deo, sent Mahadev to Deo. He gave up his fast. Wrote an acknowledgement to Khagendra Priya Barua and acknowledged receipt of khadi. Received three seers of almonds. The earlier stock is not yet over.

¹ Sir Samuel Hoare, in his broadcast on January 28, 1932, had said: “Our policy is simple, straightforward and sympathetic. It is a policy of progress combined with firmness. . . . Though dogs bark, caravan passes on.”

APRIL 16, SATURDAY
Spun 127+282=409 rounds. Major Proll called. Dahyabhai paid a visit. Received letters from Khambhatta, Hiralal and some others.

APRIL 17, SUNDAY
Spun 93 rounds. Today spun with the left hand. There was considerable strain but as there had been some extra rounds every day the skein could be completed. The object in turning the wheel with the left hand and drawing the yarn with the right hand is to spare exertion to the left elbow which is paining. Today Major Mehta gave electric treatment to both the hands. Dictated postcards to Khambhatta, Mahavir, Hiralal and Shakarabhai.

APRIL 18, MONDAY
Spun with the left hand 85 rounds. Wrote letters for the Ashram. Today started eating from the new stock of almonds. Today worked till 11 o’clock. Handed over for posting yesterday’s letters and an earlier one.

APRIL 19, TUESDAY
Spun with the left hand 85 rounds. Handed over 39 Ashram letters as well as “Watching the Heavens” and the letter to Narandas [for posting]. About a hundred books arrived from Nanabhai. Got the Government’s permission to see five people not belonging to the Ashram, and Trivedi whenever necessary. Letters from Chhanaganlal, Ramdas. Reply to Ramdas. Electric treatment is being continued.

APRIL 20, WEDNESDAY
Spun 112 rounds. Received the Ashram mail. Wrote to Gangabehn, Chhanaganlal Joshi and Surendra. Handed over the letters to the Major. Received the Ashram mail. Dictated letters to Ghanshyamdas, Nanabhai, Nagardas and Chaturbhuj. Sent letters to Sumangal and Kanta.

APRIL 21, THURSDAY
Spun 92+33 rounds. Sent two letters to Col. Doyle, about Kaka Kalelkar and others and about visits. Wrote to Lady Thackerse about cotton, to Nanabhai, Ghanshyamdas, Nagardas and Chaturbhuj.

APRIL 22, FRIDAY
Spun 182 rounds. Today I tied up in a bundle all the 28 skeins I had spun up to the 17th. Completed a skein of yarn spun by left hand. Sent for posting letters to Raihana, Maganlal Pranjivan, Ba, Mithubehn and Kanti. Received letters from Maithilisharan, Verrier, Mani, Kaka.

APRIL 23, SATURDAY

APRIL 24, SUNDAY

Spun 27+141=168 rounds. Wrote a good many letters. Almost all pending letters have been dealt with. Commenced third Urdu reader. Commenced Heath’s Astronomy.

APRIL 25, MONDAY

Spun 171 rounds. Letters—Taramati, Devdas, Kunvarji, Harjivan, Janakibehn, Bindheshwariprasad, Satyendra Nath Ganguli, Chandrashankar, Elwin, Brijbhushan Chaudhari, Sharda Kotak, Ramananda, Lakshmidas, Sushila Nayar, Radha, Vaidehisharan and Mathuradas. Received books on the Buddha sent by Nair.

APRIL 26, TUESDAY

Spun 63+93=156 rounds. Letters for the Ashram, along with “Necessity of Drawing up a Balance-Sheet”, and letters to Maithilisharan, Dastane, Hiralal (Shankar), Hemprabha, Shankerlal. Today the new Magistrate paid a visit. Received books on massage sent by Khambhatta. Received the Ashram mail.

APRIL 27, WEDNESDAY

Spun 182 rounds. Letters—Maude Royden, Dr. Nair, “Apana Sabu”1, Dyer, Doyle and Natarajan. Vallabhbhai wrote a letter to the Major asking him to call in a nose specialist for him. I also wrote one. Received letter from Mills today.

APRIL 28, THURSDAY

Spun 100+101=201 rounds. Sent for posting letters to Narandas and Harilal. Triveni called. Vallabhbhai changed his timings of meals, so that he could eat three meals. Received letter from Maganlal.

1 Trade-mark name of a soap
APRIL 29, FRIDAY
Spun 203 rounds. Letters—Maganlal Pranjivandas, Polak, Narandas, Dinkar Mehta, Santok. Wrote a long letter to Gangabehn. Sent her a lot of books. Spent two hours today with Ramdas, a teacher of the Tilak Vidyalaya and Gokuldas Talati. Received letters from Samuel Hoare and Percy Bartlett. Almonds sent by Bhimji were exhausted today. A new stock of three pounds arrived yesterday, which will be utilized from tomorrow. Received Upton Sinclair’s autobiography.

APRIL 30, SATURDAY

MAY 1, SUNDAY
Spun 208 rounds. Received Bernard’s letter and Francis Adam’s poems. Wrote and dictated letters.

MAY 2, MONDAY
Spun 41+196=237 rounds. Received telegram about Yashoda’s death. Handed over for posting letters to Hoare and Sankey.

MAY 3, TUESDAY
Spun 179+16=195 rounds. 43 letters for the Ashram; they include “Lesson of the National Week”, [letters to] Prabhavati, Dahyabhai, Bernard, Bhagirathi Shirodkar. Received the Ashram mail. Received honey from Parikh Dashrathlal.

MAY 4, WEDNESDAY

MAY 5, THURSDAY
Spun 120+82=202 rounds. Letters—Sharda, Narasimhan, Lakshmi, Shankerlal, books to Chhaganlal, “Watching the Heavens”, Marathi Purusharth, Bhajanavali, and the Gita number to Gangabehn and letter to Anasuyabehn. Mani Parikh, Vanamala, Mohan, Kusum, Girdhari paid a visit. Brought clothes, fruits, etc. Received Magan spinning-wheel. The almonds were over today.
MAY 6, FRIDAY

MAY 7, SATURDAY
Spun 56 rounds on the Magan spinning-wheel. Letters—Hanumanprasad, Chandulal Patel, Prof. Nayak, Narandas, Mira, Col. Doyle. (about Kaka and about letters which get lost), Gangabehn, Sarojini Naidu, Chhaganlal Joshi. Dahyabhai paid a visit. Received “Apna Sabu”. Hiralal sent Mukerji’s book on astronomy. Perhaps for the first time today spat blood while gargling. It is not likely to have been from the lungs.

MAY 8, SUNDAY
Spun 71 rounds on the Magan spinning-wheel. Letters for the Ashram. The ground-nuts are over.

MAY 9, MONDAY
Spun 59 +36=95 rounds. This is the total of those spun by the left and the right hand. Began eating from the new stock of almonds. Letters—Upton Sinclair, Benarsi, Hiralal, Harjivan, Evelyn Wrench. Have almost completed the Ashram letters. Received letters from Gangabehn and Chhaganlal, a spinning-wheel from Kantawala and Modi’s book on the Gita. Today finished “Apana Sabu”.

MAY 10, TUESDAY
Spun 102 rounds. I could not at all manage with the right hand today. Worked for almost five hours. Thirty-eight letters for the Ashram including the article on “Cleanliness, Truthfulness Purity, Neatness” and a letter to Raihana. Am reading life of Nabi Saheb by Imam Saheb.

MAY 11, WEDNESDAY
Spun 131 rounds. Today the right hand gave good work. Mail—letters to Gangabehn and Biharilal Kantawala. A rather sharp argument with the Superintendent about the specialist for Vallabhbhai. Received Col. Doyle’s letter about Kaka and others, a letter from Shardabehn, and Vinayachandra’s books. Today I weighed 105.5, Vallabhbhai 140.5, Mahadev 147.5.

1 Sirat-un-Nabi
MAY 12, THURSDAY
Spun 126 rounds, all with the right hand. Letters—Doyle, Bhikhabhai, Devdas, Lakshmidas, Pyare Ali. Panditji, Lakshmibehn, Mathuri and Yashwantprasad paid a visit. Received a second packet of letters from Narandas.

MAY 13, FRIDAY
Spun 90 rounds. Today could not give even two and a half hours to spinning. Letters—Mira and Shardabehn. Surendra, Patwardhan and Rabade were with me for more than two hours. Books by Upton Sinclair and also from Gondal arrived. Commenced Rolland’s Ramakrishna.

MAY 14, SATURDAY
Spun 97 rounds. Felt very tired. Chhaganlal Joshi, Chandulal, Dahyabhai paid a visit. Books from Trivedi.

MAY 15, SUNDAY
Spun 78 rounds. Wrote letters for the Ashram.

MAY 16, MONDAY
Spun 90 rounds. Letters—Sushila (Phoenix), Trivedi, Mira. Got letter from Fulchand and others.

MAY 17, TUESDAY
Spun 115 [rounds]. Forty-five letters for the Ashram, including an article on self-sacrifice, and letters to Maithilisharan, Natarajan, Prataprai Modi, Birla, Fulchand Bapuji. Dictated a good many letters today.

MAY 18, WEDNESDAY
Spun 165 rounds. Getting used to spinning by hand and foot. Letters—Rameshwar Bazaj, Bindheshwari, Trivedi, Nanabhai M., Radha, Narasimhan, Lalita, Nirmala Mashruwala, Bara Yukil, Baldev Pra[sad] and Ram Mohan Roy (Bezwada). Lady Thackersey, Mani and Mathew paid a visit. Permission to see Mira has been refused. Received new stock of almonds today.

MAY 19, THURSDAY
MAY 20, FRIDAY
Spun 183 rounds. I now seem to have acquired good control over the spinning-wheel. Letters—Sumangal Prakash, Tilak, Mithubehn Petit, Ranchhodji Shastri, Narandas, Govindbhai Chavda, Kailashnath Katju, Kamla Nehru.

MAY 21, SATURDAY

MAY 22, SUNDAY
Spun 193 rounds. Could write a good-many letters. Completed Rolland’s Ramakrishna.

MAY 23, MONDAY

MAY 24, TUESDAY
Spun 204 rounds. Letters—thirty-nine letters for the Ashram including an article on “The Cat-A Teacher”, Miss Elizabeth Howard, Jayapraakash, Maud Cheeseman, Jethalal Govindji, Nanakchand, Rukhi.

MAY 25, WEDNESDAY

MAY 26, THURSDAY

MAY 27, FRIDAY

MAY 28, SATURDAY
Spun 205 rounds. Letters—Sukhlal, Ghanshyamdas, Elwin, Devdas, Ba. Sent a spinning-wheel to Lilavati. Dahyabhai and Mani

MAY 29, SUNDAY
Spun 200 rounds. Stopped washing clothes from today on account of [the pain in] the left arm.

MAY 30, MONDAY

MAY 31, TUESDAY
Spun 220 rounds. Mail—letters for the Ashram (36 including “Lesson of Death”), Harjivan, Gulchen Lumsden, Tijaray, Sumangal, Aristarchi, Newham, Renwick. Today started eating from the new stock of almonds. Completed Rolland’s Vivekananda. Received the Ashram mail.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 19337

538. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 1, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter arrived today.

I have now decided to stop the interviews from next week if the decision is delayed. They will be resumed if the decision is favourable.

The left elbow has proved worse than the right hand. All work with the left elbow has stopped and presently it will be packed in splints. Doctors are sure that it is nothing but the strain caused by the uninterrupted working of the wheel from day to day. I am thankful that I have now acquired full control over the Magan wheel. Spinning, therefore, continues and will continue merrily, unless the right elbow strikes from sympathy.

1 Superscription in this and other letters to Mirabehn is in Devanagari.
2 Gandhiji had requested the Government to reconsider their decision not to permit Mirabehn to see him in Yeravda Jail as otherwise he might not avail himself of the permission to receive other visitors; vide “Letter to E. E. Doyle”, 19-5-1932; also “Letter to E. E. Doyle”, 9-6-1932.
You will be glad to learn that today I weighed 106 1/2 lb. This is a good record. So you see that there is not the slightest cause for worry even on account of the elbow.

Your saltless experiment is producing interesting results. I should, however, wait before ascribing all the good results to the absence of salt.

I wrote to Verrier last week care of Khambhatta. I hope he got my letter. Yes, it is a good idea, his going to England for recuperation. The sooner he goes the better. It was very wrong of Shamrao to have had that fever. Have you seen him?

I am sorry about Damodardas. The enclosed is for him.

It is a superstition to think that saltless is tasteless. Salt kills flavour. I have known people not touch things with salt in them. Taste is a matter of habit. I suppose you do take butter and bread. These do contain salt. Your experiment is one of reducing the quantity of free salt. The effect produced on you, therefore, is due to reduction, not entire absence of salt in your food. But that does not matter. Nor need you worry that you are taking some salt somehow. Let well alone. Do you ever see Manilal? Or is he still not there at all?

Love from us all.

BAPU

[PS.]

Verrier suggested that we should sing a Christian hymn every Friday at evening prayer. So Mahadev began “Lead, Kindly Light” in Gujarati. And this we shall continue every Friday. Please tell Verrier this if he has not yet got my letter.

From the Original: C.W. 6224. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9690

---

1 On May 27
2 The source has ‘Xian’.
3 Premal Jyoti, by Narasinhrao Divetia; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 8/13-6-1932
LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 1, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I was glad to hear that Nirmala’s enthusiasm for Hindi was increasing. By all means teach Hindi poems. I do not know whether the lines on the palms (of our hands) have any significance, but there is no profit in trying to know what the future holds whether through these or through astrology or by any other means; on the contrary, it is definitely harmful. And, one who is a lover of the Gita, i.e., who leaves the results of one’s work to God, should never desire to know the future. I have not received the booklet, but will go through it when I get it. Destruction of small creatures as a result of essential activities is unavoidable. As far as possible, we should be careful about those which we can see with our naked eyes; more than this, we cannot do.

Tiny insects like ants are not crushed under our feet when we walk. They are protected by their very smallness. But larger insects may be so crushed. Hence it has been regarded as our duty to look at the ground in front of us while walking. All these precautions are signs of our kind-heartedness, but non-violence is something more far-reaching and wonderful. It should be apparent in all our work, in our relationship with one another and in all our dealings with our fellowmen. We should remain unconcerned when we see a peacock devouring a snake. The latter is food for the former and we cannot interfere with it. Tulsidas’s quatrains about women which you have quoted is not only not applicable to all women but it is not even a criticism of women. It criticizes man’s sensuality. Tulsidasji’s point in it is that man, being lustful, thinks only of women, and he has written these lines to show what man becomes like when he is seized by lust.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7500. Also C.W. 4977. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

1 Literally, Yeravda temple, that is, Yeravda Central Prison, where Gandhiji was imprisoned from January 4, 1932 to May 8, 1933. This place-line is not reproduced in subsequent letters.

2 A khadi worker and a Hindi teacher; also a member of Gandhiji’s secretariat for some time.

3 Intellect, valour, virtue and truth are all like fish, while woman is like a bait, say the wise.”
540. LETTER TO RAMESHWARADAS PODDAR

June 1, 1932

BHAI RAMESHWAR.

I got both your postcard and your letter. The conclusion which you have drawn from my letter is correct. If, instead of attempting a big leap, we take small steps according to our capacity, our enthusiasm for the work will increase and with that our self-confidence. I am not worried about Jamnalalji’s loss of weight, as he otherwise keeps good health. And, as for Vinoba, let him refrain from milk and ghee so long as he can maintain his health and strength. I am satisfied with the message which he has sent.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 179

541. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 2, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

There is no reply yet regarding Mirabehn. I, therefore, think that I should stop seeing visitors pending the reply. So do not send any names for the next week. I will send you a wire if a favourable reply is received. Mahadev desires that Durga\(^1\) should be informed about this.

BAPU

SJT. NARANDAS GANDHI
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM
SABARMATI
B.B.&.C.I. RLY.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8231. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

\(^1\) The article “Concerning Titiksha and Yajna” was sent with this letter.

\(^2\) Mahadev Desai’s wife
542. LETTER TO FEROZABEHN TALEYARKHAN

June 2, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I was glad to read your letter. Bhai Nariman had not given me your message. But since I did not come across you anywhere I concluded that you might have been out of Bombay. I hope you are keeping good health. Seeing me will, I think, not be easy. Most probably all my visitors will be stopped. We shall however know the actual position when you come. Sardar¹ and Mahadev Desai are with me. Please write to me from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. FEROZABEHN TALEYARKHAN
C/O POST MASTER
BODHGAYA BIHAR

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 9775

543. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

June 2, 1932

CHI. PRABHAVATI,²

I have your letter. I am writing this letter deliberately in Hindi so that it may be delivered to you without delay. I have written to you at least twice. The letters have been dispatched from here. I cannot make out how they failed to reach you. You should take milk and fruit.
Jayaprakash says he is all right. My health is satisfactory. I shall write at length after hearing from you. Sardar and Mahadev are with me.
Blessings to Sarup, Kisan and Kanta.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRIMATI PRABHAVATI DEVI
‘A’ CLASS PRISONER
CENTRAL JAIL
LUCKNOW

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3422

¹ Vallabhbhai Patel
² Wife of Jayaprakash Narayan
544. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

June 2, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

As you are left-handed, you should also try to perform every function with your right hand. The human race increases through births. Do you know how you came into being? Other men and women came into being in the same way as you did. Human beings owe their birth to their parents.

BAPU

545. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Tuesday, May 31/June 3, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have practically decided that tomorrow, Wednesday, will be the last day when I will see visitors. If the Government continue to delay its reply in regard to Mirabehn, I think I should assume that it will be negative and should stop seeing visitors for the time being. I can start seeing them again if finally the decision is favourable.

If Harilal wants to vent his anger on Bali, let him do so. Bali is strong enough to face it, and knows how to deal with him. Whether or not that is so, if the path of duty is clear before us we must follow it without regard to consequences. Is it not because people are concerned about consequences that they often forsake the path of dharma? The Gita was composed to drive this one lesson home, and it repeats the idea again and again in every possible context.

As we gradually understand more clearly the aim behind the five minutes’ silence (at prayer time), we shall feel its grandeur with greater and greater force. Vasumati Thakore is being properly looked after. The doctor said that she must have suffered from the disease for a long time.

1 Daughter of Narahari Parikh, an associate of Gandhiji
2 Balibehn Vora, sister-in-law of Harilal Gandhi
If a labourer willingly agrees to obey the Ashram rules, do not discharge him even if there is no work for him. If he himself wishes to leave, that would of course be another matter. We should not discharge any person, who is otherwise good, merely for the sake of economy. A labourer will never be a burden on us. And the Ashram may engage paid labourers, but we shall be worthy of its great ideals only if we continue to work with our own hands or join them in work.

Don’t let Dhiru and Kusum return for some time yet. It will be a great error to suppose that, after their health has improved a little, they will be all right in the Ashram, They should return only after their health has become quite strong. If they observe the Ashram rules where they are staying and do whatever work their health permits, that would be as good as living in the Ashram.

Do not waste your time and energy in inquiring about Ba’s letters. I got one postcard written by her. How many Chharas are there and where do they live? From what part of the country do they come? What is their language? We should think what our duty towards them is, irrespective of whether or not they harass us. See if anything is possible in this matter.

I have nothing more to say about the Magan spinning-wheel. My hand seems to be fairly well set on it. I could also guess today from which part the sound comes. I am using just now the slivers sent by Chhakkaddas. I am naturally tempted to spin yarn of fine count from such good slivers. Today I drew 22 rounds from one sliver. Each sliver weighs less than one anna. The count of the yarn, I guess, must be about 30. I spun today yarn of that count at the rate of 110 rounds per hour. For yarn less fine than that I have already reached the speed of 130.

I have preserved Totaramji’s letter. I even made two copies. One I sent to Gangabehn and the other to Chhaganlal Joshi. If Totaramji has not kept a copy, I may return the original or send a copy from here. Because of the uncertainly in regard to visitors, I have not asked for permission for Chitalia and others. As for Thakkar Bapa, I am afraid I won’t be able to write about him from here in any case. It is enough that Bhansali at least sends news about him from time to time.

Lakshmidas did get my detailed letter in which I had explained

---

1 An ex-criminal tribe of central Gujarat
2 Totaram Sanadhya, a farmer who had come from Fiji and joined the Ashram how the change in the spindle-bearer in the Gandiva spinning-wheel immediately resulted in improvement in count and speed, for he has acknowledged it. I, therefore, think that there has been some misunderstanding. I got a letter from Krishna, but she does not mention anything in it about Choudhariji, nor have I received a letter from him. Which Choudhariji did you refer to? Ba seems to have lost much weight but I hope that she and Navin are improving now. If you interpreted Mirabehn’s letter to refer to fasting, you were not correct. She spoke about the mockery of fasting, about eating only one meal on the 6th and 13th of the National Week.

The Narayanappa affair is a shameful one. Now that the guilty party in this theft has been found out, I suppose we must believe that Bhagwanji’s suspicion, too, was correct. If, however, Narayanappa is sincerely repentant and if all of you think that he may be permitted to stay on, by all means let him do so. The spinning yajna will be complete if everybody hands over the yarn which he or she spun for that yajna. There can be no doubt at all that such yajna will remain incomplete so long as those who take part in it wish to keep back the yarn for their own use. The rule which I have suggested is that everybody should hand over all the yarn spun by himself to the Ashram, and he may get from the Ashram the khadi required for clothes. One should spin yarn of the highest count that one can, and accept from the Ashram as coarse a cloth as one’s body can tolerate or as many fall to one’s share. All this is implied in the vow on non-possession and in the ideal of self-dedication. However, I do not have the courage to make this a compulsory rule for all. Moreover I am no more in your midst and, therefore, since the matter has come up for discussion, I am merely pointing out what the Ashram dharma demands. Read this out to all and explain what I have said, and then leave it to every individual person to accept from it as much as he or she can. But we can certainly make this rule, that everyone should wind yarn into neat hanks at the end of each day or week and hand them over with details of name, place, number of rounds, etc., and, when one wants to get cloth woven from the yarn, one may ask for the hanks according to the rule which one may have accepted for oneself. I think this is absolutely essential for a correct record to be preserved.

What is Rambhau’s speed, with one hand, on the Magan

---

1 Celebrated in April ever since the starting of the satyagraha movement in 1919.
spinning-wheel and what is the count of the yarn?

Mahadev’s yarn of 40 counts is piling up for he spins 630 rounds daily. You should get ready *rach*¹ and *fani*² of the type necessary for weaving this yarn. We should be able to weave yarn of 40 counts without the least difficulty.

I am of the view that we should build a regular tomb over Imam Saheb’s grave. But you should consult a trustworthy Muslim and find out what the proper thing would be. Maulvi Saheb Gulam Nadvi³, who was a teacher in the Vidyapith for some time and had good relations with Imam Saheb and who was present at the funeral, will most probably be in Ahmedabad just now. You may consult him. There is no hurry, of course. If Pyare Ali⁴ himself has made any suggestion in this regard, let me know it.

All the persons whose names you sent to me came and saw me. Anandlal’s Ranchhod also had joined the party, so they were six in all. But that may be permitted occasionally. Now send no more names till you hear from me.

June 3, 1932

Send, by parcel, one pound of asafoetida pills for Gangabehn. She requires them urgently.

I did not keep a copy of the article⁶ sent last time, thinking that I would get one from you sooner or later, but I have not received any so far.

I hope I shall get one by and by.

BAPU

[PS.]

This is the 29th letter in today’s packet.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8230. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ Weaving tools
² ibid
³ Abdul Kadir Bawazeer, Gandhiji’s associate since South African period and an Ashram inmate; vide “Imam Saheb—I”, 7-3-1932.
⁴ Abu Zafar Nadvi
⁵ A business man from Bombay
⁶ “The Cat—A Teacher”, 22-5-1932
546. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

June 3, 1932

CHI. MANI

Patience is learnt through long effort. The secret of regarding sorrow as joy is learnt by leaving everything to God. It is for this very reason that those three verses\(^2\) have been included in the prayer for women. I hope you do remember these verses. Through effort, one can learn to bear suffering.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5969. Also C.W. 3286. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

---

547. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

June 3, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I write this slip merely because I think I must write something to you. Don’t forget to send the Urdu books. If visits stop now, send them by registered book post.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10288. Also C.W. 6736. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

---

548. LETTER TO D.B. KALELKAR

June 3, 1932

CHI. KAKA\(^3\),

I do get news about you from time to time. All the same, when you can next write letters, write to me and tell me how you are. . . .\(^4\) The pain in your back must have disappeared now. I hope the rains have had no ill effect on your health. Who are your companions?

---

1. Wife of Narahari Parikh
2. Containing Draupadi’s prayer to Lord Krishna when she was being disrobed by the Kauravas; vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”
3. Dattatreya Balkrishna Kalelkar (b.1885), popularly known as Kakasaheb, a co-worker of Gandhiji since 1915.
4. Seven lines here were censored by the jail authorities.
Recently I have been spinning on the Magan spinning-wheel. The left elbow is paining and the doctors say all it needs is rest. Since the pain has been caused by the exertion of drawing the thread in spinning for many years, I learnt to draw the thread with the right hand on the Gandiva spinning-wheel. But the doctors advised me not to exert the left hand even for rotating the wheel. Even otherwise, I had intended to learn spinning on the Magan spinning-wheel, and this advice gave me one more reason for taking it up. And so I have started spinning on it. I had a good deal of difficulty in learning to use it, but I may say that I have now acquired fairly good control over it. When I had good slivers, I had attained a speed of 150 rounds [per hour]. Just now I have been spinning with the worst possible kind of slivers. The speed is less but not much less than 100. I give some time to Urdu. And daily I read some book or other apart from star gazing. I have taken up the study in right earnest. I would not now show myself a complete ignoramus in discussing the subject with you. Among the books which I have seen, I have found Flammarion’s book the most useful so far. Dikshit’s book seems to be the result of considerable labour, but, from a learner’s point of view, it requires a good deal of improvement. Patwa’s Akashdarshan can be of some help, but the book is very superficial. There ought to be one good book in Gujarati, which should also give some information relating to astronomy. Two separate books in Gujarati for this purpose are not a practical proposition. We must have a book which would give both scientific knowledge of astronomy and practical guidance. If you were with me here, I would have made you write such a book and I also would have made some contribution to it. I have come to take so much interest in the subject and perceived such deep religious significance in this study that, were not my knowledge altogether inadequate, I myself would have started writing such a book. I occasionally exchange letters with Hiralal on this subject. He has sent me two or three books. I read the biographies of Ramakrishna and Vivekananda written by Romain Rolland. One of them is being read by Mahadev now and the other by Sardar. (Sardar’s self-chosen job is to go through newspapers and to make beautiful envelopes from used brown paper or such other thick paper which we may get. Thus he is daily adding to the nation’s wealth and dust is being turned into gold, so to say.)

1 Shanker Balkrishna Dikshit’s Bharatiya Jyotishshastra
Mahadev gives about five hours every day to carding and spinning. There is a friend of Chimanlal named Chhakkaddas who loves spinning very much. He has sent us beautiful slivers made from Cambodian and Navsari cotton. With those slivers Mahadev daily spins 650 rounds, the yarn being of 40 to 45 counts, and also cards an equal quantity from the cotton which we have received. Hence we always have a good stock of slivers with us. My experiment of milkless diet continues. My weight is steady. All three of us are in good health.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Gangadevi¹ passed away about a month ago. She was perfectly calm at the time of death. Her death was worthy of an Ashram inmate. Totaramji has sent, at my request, some very beautiful reminiscences of her. We can see from them that her life was truly great.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9486. Courtesy: D.B. Kalelkar

549. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

June 3, 1932

CHI. VIDYA².

Raw mangoes become spice or fruit when eaten as such. Collyrium should not be applied to the eyes for beautifying them. It can, however, be used as medicine for some eye-complaints.

BAPU

550. LETTER TO KASHI GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 3, 1932

CHI. KASHI,

It was very necessary for you to talk to me about Prabhudas. Because you did so, I have been able to take the necessary steps. That we should not be unhappy certainly does not mean that we should be indifferent. When we see anyone suffering, whether the person is our relation or somebody else, we should do everything that is within our capacity and then stop feeling unhappy or worrying. Prabhu wrote to me a long letter and hence could not write to you. Only one letter once every three months [permitted].

¹ Wife of Totaram Sanadhya
² Daughter of Raojibhai M. Patel

As for your health, till you are able to digest solid food, live only on fruit juice. You may take water in which vegetables have been cooked. Avoiding ‘starch’ means avoiding rice and wheat and avoiding ‘proteid’ means avoiding pulses and milk. Try this for a few days. Do not mind if you feel weak.

At night, keep a mud-pack on the abdomen. Have sun-bath with the body uncovered. If you feel cold that way, remove one garment after another as the heat increases. Whether lying down or sitting, gently take deep breaths.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33087

551. LETTER TO BHAU PANSE

June 3, 1932

CHI. BHAU

I have already answered your letter. Write to me if you have any fresh doubt.

Both my hands are disabled for plying the takli. The fingers have grown so weak that for the present I am unable to use them for manipulating the takli. The future rests with God. Thus I have to content myself with the reports of the progress made by others.

BAPU

From a photostat of Hindi: G.N. 6730. Also C.W. 4473. Courtesy: Bhau Panse

---

1 Presumably, to prisoners. Evidently, Prabhudas was in jail at the time.
2 He was an Ashram inmate.
552. LETTER TO D.V. PARACHURE SHASTRI

June 3, 1932

All three of us were delighted to read our letter. How stupid of me to mistake Harolikar for Hukerikar. I am very bad at remembering names and faces. It gratifies me greatly that you are bearing with the disease so cheerfully. This is what I expected of you all.

I am pained to hear of your wife’s ailment. Is someone looking after her? Has she any parents? I am sending you a bundle of slivers prepared by Mahadev. Do not hesitate to ask for more as our stock is always more than sufficient. Send me a list of the books you want, I shall try to procure them. Have you quoted that saying in reference to suicide from some book? My opinion in this matter is as follows: A person suffering from an incurable disease has the right to commit suicide if he cannot perform any service whatsoever and lives only as a result of the ministrations of others. Fasting unto death is infinitely superior to drowning oneself. A person’s strength of character is tested in fasting moreover it leaves scope for changing one’s mind, which is both proper and necessary. But as long as he can perform the least bit of service, he is not justified in putting an end to his life. Although physical activity is an important and necessary feature of yajna a physically disabled person can certainly perform mental yajna which is not totally unfruitful. A man by his pure thoughts alone can render service. He can also be engaged in giving useful advice and such like. The thoughts of a man possessing a pure heart are an activity by themselves and can produce far-reaching results.

[From Hindi]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. 1, pp. 198-9

553. LETTER TO JAL A.D. NAOROJI

June 4, 1932

If Mr. Cooper’s plough is what he claims it to be, I should have no objection to its use merely because it is a steel plough and therefore the village carpenter will be deprived of a portion of his work. I do not mind the partial deprivation of the carpenter if the plough increases the earning capacity of the farmer. But I have very grave doubts about the claims made by Mr. Cooper for the invention. At Sabarmati we have tried almost all improved ploughs manufactured in India and I think even others, but the claims made for each variety have not proved true in the long run. An experienced man has said that the indigenous plough is specially designed for the Indian soil. It conserves the soil, because it ploughs deep enough for the farmer’s crops but never deep enough to do damage. Of course I do not claim to understand agriculture. I am simply giving you the testimony of those who have had considerable experience in these matters. What we have to remember is that all improved implements have to meet the peculiar conditions of India. There is nothing wrong in an engine plough in itself and it may be a great advantage to a man who owns thousands of acres of land, and has a cracked caky soil, which will not yield under the indigenous plough. What, however, we want is an implement that would suit owners of small holdings from one acre to three acres. . . .

1 The addressee was at this time in the lepers’ ward of Yeravda Central Prison.

I do not believe in the doctrine of the greatest good of the greatest number. It means in its nakedness that in order to achieve the supposed good of 51 per cent the interest of 49 per cent may be, or rather, should be sacrificed. It is a heartless doctrine and has done harm to humanity. The only real, dignified, human doctrine is the greatest good of all, and this can only be achieved by uttermost self-sacrifice.

_Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol.1, pp. 200-1_

554. LETTER TO ANNE MARIE PETERSEN

June 4, 1932

“Be careful for nothing” is one of the verses that has ever remained with me and taken possession of me. If God is, why need I care? He is the Infallible Caretaker. He is a foolish man who fusses although he is well protected.

_Mahadebhaini Diary, Vol. 1, p. 201_

1 Member of the staff of the Danish Missionary Society in South India.
555. CONCERNING "TITIKSHA" AND "YAJNA"

June 6, 1932

A friend suffering from leprosy writes as follows:

I am daily growing stronger in my faith that the best medicines for a person suffering from a disease like mine are asanas, pranayama and such other ordinary exercises and eating food earned through yajna. I spend my time in reading the Gita, singing bhajans, meditation and spinning more than 500 rounds of yarn daily. Our religion enjoins titiksha which means bearing all pains and miseries without opposing them even in thought, without worrying and without complaining. I am trying to cultivate such endurance, and I am discovering from experience that it is difficult to acquire such strength unless one works regularly for yajna. A person afflicted like me cannot do other forms of yajna, but, thanks be to God, I can do yajna by sweeping public roads, removing night-soil and spinning, and I find my happiness in doing these things and try to bear my misfortune. However, I often ask myself what my condition would be when the body became so weak that I could do no useful work. The Shastras emphatically declare that a life without yajna is as good as death, that it is a burden and an affliction to the world. You have said this repeatedly in your speeches and writings and my experience, too, tells the same thing. If that is so, the question arises: “What is the duty of a person who is so seriously ill with a disease that he can do no useful work at all and must live on the service of others?” I even read in a Shastra that a person who suffered from such an incurable disease should give up his life by drowning himself or by some similar means.

This is only a summary in my own language of a beautiful letter. I wish to draw a lesson for ourselves from this letter, namely, that all of us should cultivate this friend’s capacity for endurance and, even when ill with a disease, should go on doing useful work as long as the body permits. That one must cultivate endurance and must do yajna—these are age-old ideals. We hear about them constantly in the Ashram. When, however, we read such things described by a person

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 2-6-1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 2-6-1932
2 D.V. Parachure Shastri; vide “Letter to D.V. Parachure Shastri”, 3-6-1932 who is relating his own experience, they seem something new and fresh and the description has great power in it. We do not expect a person suffering from leprosy to be able to write in this manner or to feel thus. In most cases such persons, if they write about themselves, tell us how they suffer and complain about their misfortune. Here we find something different altogether, and hence I have summarized the letter for the inmates of the Ashram. The question which is raised in it also deserves attention.

We understand by yajna physical work voluntarily done for the service of others. But this need not be taken to mean that a person who is physically too weak to do such work performs no yajna. Such a person can serve with his mental capacities in many ways, and his work would most certainly be yajna. But we can conceive of a case in which the person does not have the necessary degree of purity or sufficient mental strength for such yajna, and yet he is extremely eager to do it, has lost the desire to live, dislikes having to be served by others and is convinced that his disease is incurable. I think that, in such circumstances a person who has the necessary strength of mind may certainly give up his life, one may even say that it is his duty to do so. But to tell anybody that it is his duty to give up his life will probably shock him. It is not right for a healthy person to tell another who is suffering from a disease that it is his duty to give up his life. Such a remark may even upset that person. But I think that is not likely to happen in this case, and so I have cautiously stated what seemed right to me. It is certainly desirable that we should cease to fear death and give up the intense clinging to life which impels us to try to save it by trying every possible remedy and at the cost of infinite trouble to people around us. My attitude in what I have written is that, if a thoughtful person afflicted with an incurable disease regards it his duty to give up his life, we need not think that what he does is absolutely wrong.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./11
June 7, 1932

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS.

I have your letter. My health seems to be well enough. The weight is satisfactory. I weighed 106 1/2 lb. today. Doctors tell me that I am suffering from tennis elbow as a result of spinning continuously for years; rest is the only cure for it. So I have to give complete rest to my elbow for 3-4 weeks. I started using the Magan spinning-wheel for this reason. Before that I was using my left hand for plying the wheel instead of holding the sliver. The doctors were not satisfied with this but they agreed to my turning the wheel with the foot. But now my elbow has been put in splints in order to prevent the least movement. Let us see now if the doctors’ diagnosis is correct or otherwise. You have no cause for worry, there being no pain except in moving the arm. Do send me the khadi woven out of the yarn spun by your sister. I overlooked writing on this matter as your letter was not in front of me. I have decided to study economics as much as I can while I am still here. I took up the study of other books in the expectation of a long stay here. Anyway I shall start on economics very soon.

I follow what you say about running the mill all day and night. So often have I had the idea of making a detailed observation of your mills but it came to nothing. I wish to watch the condition of the labourers with my own eyes. We are all doing well.

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 7899. Courtesy: G. D. Birla
CHI. MIRA.

Your letter came in today. Yes, the left arm is in splints. The passers-by who do not know the cause must be pitying me. If the packing of the elbow does not improve it, I might have try milk. If I do, I shall also try the saltless experiment. But only when I learnt that there was no such thing as a thorough saltless experiment, I accepted the medical friends’ advice and began taking salt. Milk contains plenty of salt as does water. And at a seaside place, you continually drink in salt. And yet there is decidedly some advantage in not taking additional free salt as a condiment. What we get in water, milk and air is perhaps quite enough for the system. I have a prejudice in favour of saltless diet. Only I do not want to abstain from it religiously, unless I feel the necessity. Meanwhile your observations are accumulating. They will be useful.

I do not quite understand the position about Verrier. What does he propose to do now? If the extension is only up to July, what is to happen thereafter? I have never understood the passport intricacies. If he cannot go to England, he must go to a hill station. Almora may be a suitable place. If he is and is to remain vegetarian, he must copy your diet as closely as possible. Very little starch, no vegetable proteid in the shape of pulses, plenty of milk and fresh green vegetables. No potatoes and such other starchy vegetables. No condiments. Has he had my letter?

What may be regarded as final answer has been received about you. The Government say they are informed that you were directing the movement before imprisonment and therefore you could not see me. I have combated that statement and have said that you were under instructions not to take part in civil disobedience movement and that you were confining yourself to the khadi work and sending reports to friends! If I have erred, please correct me and I shall have no

---

1 The source has “8-5-1932” which is a slip. Gandhiji’s arm was put in splints of June 5, 1932; vide entry under date June 5, 1932 in “Diary, 1932” appearing at the end of this volume. Bapu’s Letters to Mira also gives this date.

2 Vide “Letter to E.E. Doyle”, 9-6-1932
hesitation in correcting myself. I do not know whether anything will result from my letter. Anyway, I am regarding the reply as a final decision and have accordingly asked N[arandas Gandhi] not to send anybody. I stopped interviews last week in anticipation, i.e., I did not see Manibehn and Dahyabhai.

You should rejoice in this additional trial and be thankful that we can write to each other. But we should rejoice even if that stops. Nothing happens without divine permission. And how can we grieve over what He permits?

You should correspond with Radha regularly. I believe your reading of her. I must not write about it. It will upset her. She may take things from you. You should make time for writing to her. I believe that her expenses are met from the Ashram and that she has not been now for some months a burden on Damodardas.

You will have another talk with Damodardas and leave his place, if it will at all ease his burden.

Love from us all.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6220. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9686

558. LETTER TO H.S.L. POLAK

June 8, 1932

She has aged considerably—in some respects perhaps more than I have. Spiritually she has made wonderful progress.

It will take me many incarnations to become disillusioned with the slowness of the charkha. The slowness of the charkha is perhaps its most appealing part for me. But it has so many attractions for me that I can never get tired of it. It has a perennial interest for me. Its implications are growing on me and I make discoveries of its beauties almost from day to day. I am not using a sewing machine in its place or at all. I know how the mistake crept into the papers. My right elbow, having been used for turning the wheel, almost without a break for over ten years, began to give pain, and the doctors here came to 1 According to the addressee this was correct.

2 Henry Solomon Leon Polak, a close associate of Gandhiji during the South African struggle. He had written to Gandhiji: “London papers report that you have taken up the sewing machine having been disillusioned with the slowness of charkha. I don’t believe it for a moment. But it needs a prompt denial”.
3 Kasturba Gandhi
the conclusion that the pain was of the same type that tennis players often have after continuous use of the racquet. They therefore advised complete rest for the elbow. That might have meant cessation of spinning for some time, but for Prabhudas’s invention. You know Prabhudas, Chhaganlal’s son. His invention consists in turning the wheel with a pedal and thus freeing the right hand also for drawing the thread and practically doubling the output of yarn. I forestalled the doctors by having this wheel brought to me, and before the peremptory order to stop all work with the right elbow came, I was master of the pedal charkha called ‘Magan charkha’ after the late Maganlal. A stupid reporter who knew nothing about the invention, when he heard that I was moving the wheel with the pedal, came to the conclusion that I was working at the sewing machine and since there are Pressmen good enough to imagine many things of me and impute all sorts of things to me, they improved upon the false report by deducing disillusionment about the charkha from it. Now you have the whole story.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 208-9

559. A LETTER

June 8, 1932

Whatever your financial condition, bear this in mind:
(1) One who earns money has the right to lose it.
(2) There is no shame in losing money, but it is shameful, even sinful, to hide the fact of one’s loss.
(3) One should never live beyond one’s means. Though one may be living in a bungalow today, one should be prepared to live in a hut tomorrow.
(4) We need not feel ashamed if we do not have enough money to pay our creditors.
(5) Anybody who hands over to his creditors everything without keeping back a single pie for himself has fully repaid his debt.
(6) Wisdom lies first in not starting a business with borrowed money, but in case one has already done it, the next wise thing is to give away what one has and free oneself from one’s debts.

You may go to the Ashram whenever you wish to.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 209-10
DEAR COL. DOYLE,

Major Bhandari has informed me of the Government’s decision about Shrimati Mirabai (Slade). I appreciate the frank reasons given for the decision. I do not know what the Government would call being “actively engaged in the furtherance of the civil disobedience movement”. It is likely too that the Government are misinformed. Obviously Mirabai has had no chance of refuting the information given to them. I can only reiterate my statement that like several other companions of mine she has been intentionally, and for the movement itself, kept out of its civil resistance part. But if Mirabai at any time was, or is now, actively engaged in the furtherance of the civil disobedience movement, my wife and my two sons were taking an active part in it. Yet if they were not in prison, being members of my family, they would, I presume, be allowed to see me. As I have made it clear to the Government in previous communications, I have long ceased to make any distinction between family members and others. My co-workers are as much members of my family as the members so called.

Unless therefore the Government see their way to revise their decision, I must deny myself the pleasure of having weekly visitors. I enforced the self-denying ordinance on Saturday last. Indeed under the ruling given by the Government in Mirabai’s case it would be a serious thing for me to take the responsibility of deciding in the case of Ashram inmates who should and who should not see me.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(2), Pt. I, p.109

1 Inspector-General of Prisons Bombay Presidency
2 Superintendent of the Yeravda Central Prison
561. LETTER TO NATHURAM TRIKAMDAS

June 9, 1932

BHAI NATHURAM,

I felt happy on reading your detailed letter. I am glad that you have gone there to learn khadi work. Learn it well and properly. If you get mere superficial knowledge, on your return you will not be able to teach it to others. You will be able to do that only if you acquire mastery over the smallest details. Observe the Ashram rules carefully.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

562. LETTER TO RAMESHWARADAS PODDAR

June 9, 1932

BHAI RAMESHWARADAS,

I got your letter. I had also received your previous letters. You must have received my replies. Repeating Ramanama certainly does not mean repeating it mechanically with the lips. The preceptor of Ramanama believes that if a person repeats it mechanically but with faith, his faith itself will some day carry the name below the throat and right down to the heart. So long as this has not happened, one cannot have true peace. I know of no other remedy which could give you peace. You should cut down your intake of food as a medical necessity at least, and if even then you do not keep well you should try fasting, etc. I wrote a postcard to Pyarelal only a few days ago.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 180
CHL. PARASRAM,

I got your two letters pinned together. I find that the short letter with paragraph headings is a summary of the first one and that it would be enough to read that alone. But it appears that you have also sent the original letter so that I may know more details if I wish.

You should certainly not strain your will to use the limb which pains, that is, use it disregarding the pain. If you feel that because of such self-restraint the pain is gradually decreasing, you may conclude nothing else is necessary. If the pain does not decrease gradually even though you take care not to use that limb, there is no option but to take complete rest.

There can be no one rule for all as to the time required for a meal. If somebody’s meal consists only of milk, it would take him only five to seven minutes to sip it. If somebody else’s meal consists only of one pomegranate and he has no teeth but has to eat the seeds instead of extracting the juice and drinking it, he may even take an hour to do so. Hence the following should be the rule: A meal should take up as much time as is required for chewing it properly, taking into consideration the type and quantity of the food. Ordinarily, twenty to thirty minutes should be regarded enough for those who have good teeth and who eat rotlis, dal, rice and vegetables. I have no faith in the common belief about sleeping with the head in a certain direction. I have never followed that rule.

It is my belief that the peepul tree is considered sacred because it is very big, covers a large area with shade and can be grown almost everywhere.

I understand what you say about the Hindi translation of my letters, etc. I shall be satisfied if everybody else is satisfied in this matter.

I used to keep cloves and sugar crystals in my mouth merely to prevent my voice getting hoarse. They were discontinued when I

---

1 Chapatis
stopped making so many speeches and to such large audiences and I never resumed the practice afterwards.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7501. Also C.W. 4978 Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

564. A LETTER

June 9, 1932

As you say, you are continually assailed by impure thoughts and feel miserable because of that. This is what is called self-made hell. This contains the replies to both your questions. It makes clear why I said what I did and also why such a state of mind is described as hell. If you understand the nature of this hell, it will also be easy for you to understand how you can come out of it. You should not brood over the fact that you get impure thoughts. Instead, you should go on as if they never troubled you. If a person who stumbles while walking does not stop to find out the cause of his stumbling, no harm will follow. If, on the contrary, such a person sits down on the road and goes on thinking why he stumbled, he will make no progress in his journey. But he will forget that he had stumbled if he does not think much about the fact and continues his journey. Since he is advancing, he gradually gathers strength and consequently stumbles less.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 211

565. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

June 10, 1932

Most of the manual work in the Ashram is done by the inmates themselves. There are a few hired labourers, but only those men who follow the Ashram rules fairly well have remained to work in that capacity and the inmates of the Ashram work with them. Gradually they are acquiring mastery over all types of work. Children also contribute their share Newcomers are first required to learn prayers, bhajans, etc. It is only after they have learnt these that those among them who wish to learn English may do so.

All the inmates spin for yajna in company for one hour. Yarn of less than twenty counts cannot be included as part of one’s contribution through the spinning yajna. The yarn spun on a day has to be handed over to the depot on the same day. I have now suggested that, if all the people agree, no one should be permitted to buy the yarn spun by himself or herself for his or her own use.1 I have always believed that our yajna remains incomplete because of this freedom to buy one’s own yarn.

Beginning last week, it has been decided to maintain an account of everybody’s labour at the rate of one anna per hour of work irrespective of the nature of work, though it has not been decided to make actual payments at this rate. Just now my suggestion to Narandas was merely that, if he agreed, he should immediately start keeping the records. These records will be in addition to the general records which are being kept now, and for the present we will merely note the results. They will give us much useful information and may also help us to realize the ideal of equality of work. In other words, all types of social service, whether spinning or weaving or cleaning lavatories, should be valued at the rate of one anna per hour of work. You probably remember that we have discussed this subject in the past at great length. Recently I have been writing to Narandas on a variety of subjects and among them I brought up this one again for discussion. It seems to me that Narandas’s capacity for responding to such idea has increased considerably these days. He, therefore, welcomed my suggestion. These records do not require much time to maintain and, if the present experiment reaches the stage of implementation, the keeping of accounts would be so easy that even a person of ordinary education in Gujarati would be able to do the work. Success in maintaining accounts of this nature depends on the honesty of the people. If a person has not really worked for the number of hours which he enters against his name or supplies to the account-keeper, or if he has done the work carelessly, it is plain that the account will not be correct. That is, it will be like good and bad coins getting mixed up. I have been writing from here a great deal about children’s education too. I cannot tell how much of it the inmates of the Ashram will be able to adopt. It would require much time to discuss all that here, and I cannot spare it. Have patience in this matter.

1 Vide ‘Letter to Gangdevi Sanadhya”, 12-1-1932
All of us should make the right use, according to our lights, of this priceless opportunity which we have got. The best use we can make of it is to cultivate the power of reflection. Our minds are oftentimes vacant and at such times the only thing we like to do is either to read or to talk. Some of us do think, but they only build castles in the air. Really speaking, just as reading is an art so is thinking. All our thoughts should occur to us at the right time. Just we do not read useless books, so also we should not let our minds run after idle thoughts. The power which is produced and conserved by such control over one’s thoughts can not be measured. I have felt during each term of imprisonment that it was the best time for learning to think in this manner.

I, therefore, advise all of you to master the art of deep reflection. If you do so, you will not find it necessary to consult me frequently. But let no one misunderstand my meaning. I do not wish to forbid anyone to consult me. I only wish to cure people of excessive dependence on me. In case of necessity, however, my advice will always be available. It is your right and also your duty to take whatever advantage you can of my experience and the results of my reflection concerning matters of which I have had more experience and over which I have reflected more deeply than others.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaimi Diary, Vol. 1, pp. 211-3

566. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

June 11, 1932

CHI. MATHURADAS

Why do you regard yourself responsible for Meghji’s death? If you are responsible, how much greater is my responsibility? But even supposing you are, why grieve over it now? One should not keep thinking about the past. After drawing the proper lesson from it, one should forget it.

It will be better to keep a fixed time every day for writing the

---

1 Mathuradas P. Asar, an expert carder and khadi worker of the Ashram
2 One of the children in the Ashram who had died of smallpox; on Gandhiji’s advice they had not been vaccinated.
book on weaving and not spend the whole day on it. What is written in haste often turns out to be ill-digested. If one’s thoughts are perfectly clear, one always writes well and only such writing impresses.

I always prescribe the same medicine. For all diseases, though known by different names, have one and the same cause. Hence the medicine for all of them must be one.

I want you to become perfectly vigilant, build up strong health and start working regularly.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3754

567. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

June 11, 1932

BHAI NANABHAI¹,

I got your postcard. I have not yet received Manilal’s letter. I have completely stopped seeing visitors. Even if this had not been the case, Medh could not have seen me without special permission. Nevertheless, when I receive Manilal’s letter, I will form some opinion from it if I can. From the fact that there has been no cable from Phoenix, I had concluded that Manilal and Sita² were quite well. About the latter, I came to know only from your postcard. I had heard from Surendra that he was well in Visapur.

Blessings to you both from

BAPU

From a Photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6684. Also C.W. 4329 Courtesy: Kanubhai Mashruwala

¹ Manilal Gandhi’s father-in-law
² Manilal Gandhiji’s Daughter Dhairyabala
568. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

[June 11, 1932]¹

CHI. PANDITJI².

In the article on death Kaki’s name was included later, on my being reminded of her death by Mahadev. As I had already drawn the moral from the other deaths described, I did not write more about her. A few other names of persons who had died were also left out. A complete list can be made only in the Ashram.

Rasik’s death could not be mentioned in that article, since he had died outside the Ashram. Why I mentioned Maganlal’s is explained in the article itself. Mathuri³ was all right when I saw her.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 230. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

569. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN GANDHI

June 11, 1932

CHI. JAMNA⁴.

I am very glad that you have gone to Ranav. Now you must not leave that place for quite some time. To whom does the sanatorium belong? Where is it situated? Are there any people living in the neighbourhood? Do you have to pay any rent? You should not feel sad at having had to go there. You should get acquainted with the poor living there. If possible, try and serve them. If that is not possible, study on your own and increase your knowledge and improve your ability to work. It is very good indeed that Purushottam⁵ is with you.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 855.Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ The source has “11-5-1932” which is a slip. From the reference to the article on death (“Lesson of Death”, 30-5-1932) it is evident that the letter was written later.
² Music teacher at the Ashram
³ Wife of D.B. Kalelkar
⁴ Harilal Gandhi’s son who died in 1929
⁵ Addressee’s daughter
⁶ Narandas Gandhi’s Wife
⁷ Addressee’s son
Chi. Prema,

I did not consider your letter too long, for you have given in it an account of your visits such as I had wanted you to give. I have been to Sinhagarh thrice. Once I went there while the Lokamanya was also there, and we met each other a good many times. I saw his house. You have certainly described a few things about which I did not know. I did meet Hari Narayan Apte. I certainly wish to read his novels, but I do not have the courage to take up anything new just now. Urdu, economics, watching the sky, spinning and writing letters—these keep me busy enough. And off and on I take up something extra to read.

What you say about the Superintendent is correct. I saw and understood everything. But we should tolerate all that. As a man he is certainly not bad. But authority is an evil thing. And, besides, authority over whom? We should, therefore, reason thus: How good is it that even in unfavourable circumstances a little measure of humanity has survived? Who knows to what depths we would have descended if we were in his place? You will frequently get the kind of experiences you had. It is through such experiences that we learn to cultivate forbearance, generosity, patience and courtesy. In favourable circumstances, everyone can behave in a manner which will win him or her the good opinion of others.

There was no special meaning behind my question. “Are you satisfied now?” I asked the question only casually. Sushila may not have felt hurt, but I myself felt sorry. Having permitted her to come with you, I should have talked with her a little. But I had no time and so contented myself with an inquiry about Jamnadas. My blessings to her.

I certainly intended to write on the subject of sex. But it would be better if you ask me specific questions. We need not stop the teaching of English. All that I meant was that we should not teach it to new pupils before they have learnt the other things. I have written more about this in my letter to Narandas.

1 Vide “Letter to Sarrladevi Chowdhrani”, 1-5-1920
2 A Marathi novelist
3 Of the Yeravda Central Prison, Major Bhandari.
Your body ought to be [as red] as copper. If you have no objection to fish and if you think you can maintain good health by taking it, you may go out to eat it.1 Imam Saheb used to do that. If you wish to discuss this subject further with me, you may.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10289. Also C.W. 6737. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

571. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 8/13, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I had got your postcard before I received the other post from you today, but I did not reply to it in a separate letter since I had written in detail about Narayanappa in the letter which was dispatched yesterday along with the other letters. I have now received a negative reply in regard to Mirabehn. It was good, therefore, that I had already decided provisionally not to see visitors. That being so, though Durga and Anandi2 had come today to see us, Vallabhbhai and I could not see them. Mahadev went and saw them. We certainly felt unhappy but it is only by swallowing such bitter draughts that one can preserve dharma. I, therefore, welcomed the pain that I felt.

I am very happy that you have decided to follow the method of calculating the value of work at the rate of one anna per hour. I think we shall make some important discoveries by following it. In order that the account may be properly kept, everybody should know exactly how long one has worked. That means that you will have to strike the bell for each hour or will have to devise some other method so that everybody can know how much time has passed. Secondly, the information about the hours of work supplied by every inmate must be correct. If it is clearly realized that time is money, it will be seen that giving wrong information will be like passing off counterfeit coins. Our records will be wrong and, in consequence, our conclusions will be wrong too. I think for at least one month the slips received from everybody should be preserved. To facilitate this, I suppose all the inmates are supplied slips of the same size. The slips should be

1 A Physician had pointed out that she had been losing weight because she had given up fish.
2 Daughter of Lakshmidas Asar of the Sabarmati Ashram filled in clear handwriting. Now that I think about the matter as I dictate these lines, I feel that you yourself need not keep a daily record. Your record will be the slips. If we decide to preserve them permanently, they can be pasted [in an account book] but I do not think that is necessary at all. As the slips are received, the hours mentioned in them may be entered in the ledger. If you object that, in that case, we would not know for how many hours each type of work was done, you may enter the hours under separate heads of work. However, to be able to use that information you will have to maintain a double-entry account, that is, keep the record under each name and each type of work separately. Only then will you be able to draw up quickly a summary every month showing the hours given by each person and the total number of hours spent on each type of work. I do think that for our purpose information under both heads will be necessary. At the moment I cannot think of any other suggestions besides these. Your account of your own daily work seems all right. If necessary, you may reduce yajna work from two hours to something less. If anybody gives money equal to the value of the yarn spun by him, instead of the yarn itself, his yajna is certainly imperfect, since it is marred by his desire to wear cloth woven from his own yarn. That is, he spins yarn of the fine count through his selfish desire to be able to wear cloth woven from such yarn. Ideally, one should not wish to all to derive any personal benefit from work done for yajna or from any gift made as yajna. Anybody who works for yajna may take from what he produces only as much as would be the share of each if the total quantity were divided equally among all the persons for whom he works. We claim that we work for the 300 millions of our countrymen. If so, we may certainly have 1/300 millionth share of the yarn which we spin, imagining that that share is mixed with the yarn from which the cloth of our garments is woven. I know that many arguments have been advanced, from the point of view of increasing the production of fine khadi, against my stand, and I admit the force of those arguments. That is why I have tolerated yajna which is only half pure. But I have always felt within myself that such yajna is imperfect. If you clearly see the imperfection to which I am drawing attention, you should hand over all the yarn which you spin and overcome your desire to get cloth woven from it for your or Jamna’s use. When all the yarn received is mixed together and woven into cloth, you may take from it what you require. If you see any error in my reasoning, please point it out to me. And you need not follow my suggestion though you may agree with me, if you feel that it is beyond your capacity at present to do so—irrespective of whether the reason is Jamna or yourself. If we voluntarily start doing something which we had not been doing up to now, we experience nothing but intense joy from that and feel that a heavy load has been taken off our head. Do not act upon my suggestion till you feel thus. As I stated in a previous letter, I want everybody’s yajna to be perfect, but I should like to wait till all people are convinced of the correctness of my view. I see from your letter, however, that they have now come so far that it should not be difficult to take that last step, if it is not implied in what they have agreed to. I have interpreted your letter to mean that everybody would spin for yajna in the porch between 12.30 and 1.30 and hand over there and then the yarn spun by him or her. Literally understood, this means that one cannot even buy back that yarn. If this is to apply to all, you also will have to hand over the yarn spun by you. Your statement, however, that the yarn spun during that time will be handed over may also mean that a person may buy back his or her yarn for personal use. If so, the arrangement will have the imperfection which I have remarked above. I should be happy if all agree to remove this imperfection. If they agree, however, everybody should understand that he will have to spin in future even more carefully than he had been doing up to now when he knew that he was spinning the yarn for his own use.

I have been spinning for the last ten days or so with such bad slivers as I have never used before. I am doing this purposely. I wrote to Premlilabehn requesting her to send me some cotton, and in reply she immediately sent slivers. The slivers with which I have been spinning are from this lot. It certainly cannot be thrown away as useless. That would mean being light-hearted about work. Nor can I send these slivers to the women prisoners. If the slivers are good enough for them I would say that they were twice for me. I, therefore, decided to use them up. I realize from my experience the great difference between good slivers and bad slivers. Theoretically I always understood it, but I realized it from experience only now, for ordinarily I would always get good slivers. Whenever I myself have carded cotton I have done so very carefully. Hence I do not remember to have spun with such bad slivers any time in the past. And I see from Mahadev’s spinning what difference good cotton can make.

My purpose in writing about all this is to point out that, if we wish to spin for yajna the finest yarn that we can, the slivers with which we spin should be of the best quality and the cotton must be perfectly clean. The spinning-wheel also should be in good condition. If these conditions are fulfilled, no one will find the one hour of spinning boring. On the contrary, the smoothly rotating spinning-wheels would make such sweet music when so many persons spin in complete silence that the hour would pass as but one minute and give perfect joy. Even the most interesting activities will only bore a person who does not understand their value or who feel aversion towards them. Here ends my sermon on account-books and on yajna.

I have already said above that I will not see visitors now. Do not worry about my hand till I tell you that the condition is serious enough to cause worry, for I am keeping back nothing about it. I see no necessity to keep back anything. We aspire to learn to bear everything that may happen to us. If so, it would be altogether wrong to keep back anything relating to illness or pain. The left elbow is in plaster just now. I, therefore, present a pitiful sight, though there is no reason at all to pity me. If the cause of the pain in the elbow is no other than the excessive work I have done with that arm, it is obvious that it should be given complete rest. Since the only way of doing that is to put it in plaster, that has been done. We shall know the effect in a week or two. If the elbow requires only rest, the officials themselves will obtain whatever external aid may be required. In other respects my health is very good. The weight is 106 1/2 pounds, that is, it has been increasing. Though I can work only with one arm, and despite the trouble which bad slivers give, I can spin more than 200 rounds daily. I can also read for a while. I practise, like a child, writing large Urdu letters in a copy-book. I would not be able to do all this if my health was not good. The mind would simply not work.

I think your decision regarding Jayantiprasad’s daughter is perfectly all right. You should not assume new responsibilities just now. If the girl were capable of looking after herself and were healthy, I would have certainly felt tempted to take her in.

Chimanalal1 should improve his health anyhow.

Leave Parnerkar2 to solve his problem by himself. If he can stay, we certainly want him to do so. If he cannot, we need not press him. The verse in the Gita which asks what avails a man to force himself

---

1 One of the oldest inmates of the Ashram, a patient of asthma
2 Yashwant Mahadev Parnerkar, Specialist in animal husbandry beyond a certain point applies in this case too.

The fact that you do not find Savitribehn’s address there means, I suppose, that you have not been getting any letters from her recently. But her connection with the Ashram is not recent. You may find some of her old letters lying somewhere. Moreover, if correspondent’s addresses are being preserved in the Ashram, her address must have been written down somewhere. If anybody goes to the press, we are bound to have her address on its record. She has also written a book about me, in which she has reproduced some of my letters. You may possibly find her address in these. However, I do not want you to spend too much of your time in finding it.

Father Elwin has not explained why he suggested Friday for a Christian prayer. On Sunday evenings pious Christians will have gone to churches and will be attending special services, so that Sunday may not suit them for the purpose of the public communion which he has in view. Moreover, Friday is the day of Jesus’s crucifixion, and Father Elwin may have selected it for that reason. But this is only my guess. I very much like the idea that we should fix one day in the week for a Muslim prayer. If Friday is not available now for that purpose, we may fix Thursday. Thursday means Jumma, and I think that day also is holy for Muslims. To us, however, all days and hours are equally holy. It is enough if we pray with sincere devotion.

We also had read here in the papers about the suitcase. Hence Mahadev believes that we must have lost one. Aluvihari was with us all the time and was one of the party. It seems that, having read about the suitcase in the papers, he went and claimed it. Mahadev cannot guess—and if he cannot, how can I?—whose clothes and books it contains. Well, it is safe now. Aluvihari will probably send it to you, or may use his judgement and do with it what seems best to him. I expect to hear from him.

I have always considered that the rule that newcomers should not be permitted to start immediately on English is a correct one. My stand is that they may learn English, must learn it, but only after they have acquired a working knowledge of Sanskrit, Hindi and the Urdu script, learnt music well enough to join in singing bhajans and mastered all the processes relating to spinning. I think a person of average ability would take one year to complete this programme, though it is likely that some may take more than that and some less. Those who have joined the Ashram for life or have joined it temporarily with the aim of training themselves for service should have no special attraction for English. If anybody feels it, he should know that he cannot satisfy his desire in the Ashram. Nobody should understand from this that we proscribe English from the Ashram or do not love it as much as others do. Our only aim is to see that it does not occupy a place which does not belong to it. For many persons knowledge of English is essential even for the purpose of service, but we can give instruction in it in the Ashram only in a manner convenient to the Ashram and consistent with its aims. We are entitled to expect this patience in all inmates of the Ashram.

June 11, 1932

Regarding Imam Saheb’s tomb, Pyare Ali asked Khatib Saheb for his opinion. The latter said that Islam does not approve of the erection of tombs. You should, therefore, put a few blocks of stones on the spot to mark it off and to prevent the ground being used for any purpose. Take or send some Muslim to the place and ask him to arrange a few stones. If there is no objection to our laying them, somebody from among ourselves may arrange them.

Silence Day, June 13, 1932

I got you letter today. Since tomorrow (Tuesday) is a holiday, I will dispatch the post today. Read the letter which I have written to Sitala Sahay\(^1\). However, in the end do what you think proper. I think it is best that in this matter I should not decide from here what should be done. I will approve of whatever you do. I may not even have the necessary data for taking a correct decision.

Where is Madhavlal at present? I thought he was in jail. But I hear from Vithal that he is not in Jail.

I am not sending any article this week. I have no time to write one, and moreover, this letter to you has become something like an article

The plaster on the left arm has been removed. There has been no improvement. The cause of the pain, therefore, must be something else. But there is no cause whatever for worry. Mirabehn is on saltless diet at present, and therefore, had been pressing me to adopt it. I started it yesterday. For me it is child’s play to live on such diet, for I have done that for eight years. I shall have fresh experience of it now. If there is anything to write about, I will do so before the next letter is due.

\(^1\) A khadi worker from U.P.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8232. Courtesy Narandas Gandhi

572. LETTER TO BHARATI

June 13, 1932

I got your letter¹ written in beautiful handwriting. I cannot have too many such letters.

I would certainly be pleased if you brothers and sisters became as strong and sturdy as steel and could endure heat and cold. But I cannot all at once make such and experiment on you in the heat (sic) of Simla. Training in such endurance would be fruitful only if it is undergone methodically and step by step. It is a grave error to believe that a person who generally lives a sheltered life can suddenly become hardened when the need arises. That would be going against nature. I remember hundreds of instances of persons who made such mistakes.

I would certainly enjoy reading literature. During my school days I could not read anything outside the syllabus. After that I got involved in so may activities one after another that I could get little time to read,. Whatever I did read was in jails. But I do not think that I have lost much because of this. I got a great deal of time for thinking. And, moreover, what one learns in the school of experience is always more useful than reading.

Even those who profess to cultivate art for its own sake are not really able to do so. Art has a place in life though what is art is a different question. But, art and such other things are mere means in the path that we with to tread. When they become ends in themselves they become shackles and drag us down.

God is Truth. For the past few years I have been saying that ‘Truth is God’ instead of saying that ‘God is Truth’. I feel that this is a more logical way of putting it. Truth is the only reality in this world.

Here Truth should be given a wider connotation. It is something living. This Truth that is God and the laws of God are not distinct from one another but are the same thing. Hence Truth, too, is a living thing. Thus it means the same thing to say that this world is governed by Truth or by God’s laws. There is infinite power in that Truth. According to Chapter X of the Gita, it may be said that the world is sustained by just a fraction of that power. You will, therefore, understand that I mean by God if you read, “Truth” wherever the word “God” occurs.

¹ The addressee had asked Gandhiji whether he was interested in literature, whether art could be pursued for its own sake and what his concept of God was.

If God exists—though we call Him Truth—it is our duty to worship Him. We become like that which we worship. Prayer means nothing more than this. But does not that meaning of prayer explain everything? Truth dwells in our hearts, but we are not aware, or fully aware of the fact. This awareness comes through sincere prayer. . .

Do you find it difficult to read my handwriting? The envelope in which this letter is sealed was made by Sardar. He spends a great deal of his time in putting to this use any useless paper he can lay his hands on.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

573. LETTER TO MAITRI GIRI

June 14, 1932

CHI. MAITRI ¹.

I got your letter. There was no reason whatsoever for you to feel hurt. The question which I asked you, I put to all grown-up girls. If any girl wishes to get married, I regard that as natural. Would it not be better to tell me frankly rather than repine inwardly? But I am certainly pleased if a girl does not wish to get married. I asked you so that you may have no fear on that account. If, however, you positively do not, at present, wish to get married, that is indeed the best. You should know, however, that in order to preserve such purity, it is very necessary to cultivate devotion to God and to keep oneself engaged in some work for the service of people. All of you should improve your health. How is Krishnamaiyadevi’s ² health?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6236

¹ Omission as in the source
² Daughter of Dalbahadur Giri
³ Widow of Dalbahadur Giri
574. LETTER TO SHAMAL R. RAVAL

June 14, 1932

CHI. SHAMAL.¹

I got your letter. However much your brother or others may press you, you should cling to your decision, and refuse to get married as long as you can control your mind. You may request Anasuyabehn² to help you in this matter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3141. Also C.W. 2877. Courtesy: Shamal R. Raval

575. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 14, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

After I had dispatched the post yesterday, I got a letter from Mahavir³ in which he says that he has not received the money. He has estimated the expenditure at Rs. 15 per head. You may decide what it should be. Maitri informs me that she has not the slightest wish to marry just now.

Personally, I think we should let them stay in Darjeeling as long as they wish.

BAPU

CHI. NARANDAS GANDHI
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM
SABARMATI

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8233. courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ A worker in the Navajivan Press
² Sister of Ambalal Sarabhai, a mill-owner of Ahmedabad. She was associated with the Labour Union of Ahmedabad.
³ Son of Krishnamaiyadevi
576. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

June 14, 1932

CHI. TARAMATI,

I have your letter. I am not worried that Mathuradas has lost weight. It is sufficient if other things are all right. Did Mathuradas receive my letter?

Since Mirabehn is not being permitted to have visitors I am compelled to stop having visitors myself. If the restriction is removed, I shall let you know at once.

All the three of us are well.

Blessings from

BAPU

577. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

June 15, 1932

DEAR AGATHA,

I have your letter. You are quite right in scrupulously honouring the restrictions. Indeed by a long course of habit I have lost all curiosity. For a prisoner’s curiosity can only be idle, as he can do nothing even if he came to know certain things through indirect means. And what is perhaps more, I have abundant faith in friends doing their very best so long as they believe in the justice of the cause.

Yes, Mahadev was able to see both his wife and son only last week. He is entitled to a visit per month

Love from us both.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1454

1 Secretary of the India Conciliation Group (1931)
CHI. BHAU,

I could not reply to your letter of the 6th last week. Meanwhile, I got another letter from you this week. I understand your reason for discontinuing to send Vinoba’s discourses. His prohibition is right.

Yes, there was some misunderstanding on my part regarding the paintings of scenes from the Ramayana. I do not see anything objectionable in meditating over a figure drawn as purely imaginary. If, however, meditating on the Gita can satisfy you, where is the need for any other object of meditation? There are two ways of meditating on the Gita. Since we look upon the Gita as Mother, you may meditate on a painting or photograph of your mother, you require one (and if your mother is dead), thinking of her as the kamadhenu\(^1\) in the form of the Gita. Alternatively, you may have an imaginary picture of the Gita in your mind. You may even think of her as Mother Cow. I think it would be better if you could follow the second way. You may, at that time, meditate on any verse or phrase from the chapter of the Gita which you may have recited on that day or from any other chapter. All the words in the Gita are so many ornaments on the body of Mother Gita and, therefore, meditating on any one of them amounts of meditating on the Gita herself, just as meditating on an ornament worn by the woman whom one loves amounts to meditating on herself. But one may also meditate on the Gita in any other way that one can think of. There are as many ways as there are brains. No two persons meditate in the same way even on one and the same object. There will always be some difference between the exact pictures of the object imagined by them and their descriptions of it.

According to Chapter VI, even the least sadhana is not wasted, and we resume our sadhana in our next life from the point where we had stopped. Similarly, a person who desires to turn towards spiritual living but lacks the necessary strength for the purpose will have greater strength of mind in his next life. I have no doubt about this at all in my mind, but it does not mean that we can relax our effort in this life. If we think in that manner, our desire for a spiritual living is

\(^1\) Mythical cow that yielded whatever one asked for not sincere. Or, it is a desire of the intellect and not of the heart, and a desire of the intellect has no value at all. It will not survive one’s death. On the other hand, a desire which has been accepted by the heart cannot but inspire sincere effort to fulfil it, though it is quite possible that owing to various circumstances or weakness of the body our desire may not be fulfilled during this life. We have experience of this every day. But the desire will cling to the soul when it leaves the body, and in the next life the difficulties which stood in the way of its fulfilment during this life will diminish and the desire will be fulfilled or will at least become stronger. Thus a person who aspires after spiritual life is ever advancing.

It may be that Jnaneshwar Maharaj meditated on Nivrittinath' while the latter was alive, but I am strongly of the view that we should not follow his example. If we meditate on a person, he must have attained perfection. It is altogether improper, and also unnecessary to ascribe perfection to a living human being. It is possible, however, that Jnaneshwar Maharaj did not meditate on the real Nivrittinath, but meditated on the perfect Nivrittinath of his imagination. But why should we need at all concern ourselves with this problem? when the question is about the propriety of meditating on a living human being, we need not bring in the question of meditating on our mental image of that person and any reply on the propriety of that is likely to confuse the reason of the other person.

The names which are given Chapter I are, according to me, more the names of certain qualities than of real persons. While describing the divine and the demoniac forces in our nature, the poet has personified them. In saying this, I do not deny the possibility of an actual battle between Kauravas and Pandavas having taken place near Hastinapur. My belief is that the poet took a well-known event of that age as an example and used it as material for his immortal work. I may be mistaken in this belief and all those names may be the names of real persons. If so, it was not improper for the poet to give those names at the commencement of his historical narrative, and, since the first chapter is necessary for introducing the subject, it is necessary to recite it as part of ceremonial recitation of the Gita.

If we spin with slivers made by somebody else, our spinning yajna is certainly imperfect. A person like me may not be able to make his own slivers at present owing to physical weakness, but those

---

1 Jnaneshwar’s elder brother, a jnanayogi who can should make their own slivers.

I consider it necessary for everybody to learn spinning on the takli and gain mastery over it. I know that Vinoba regards it as a much easier means for the yajna of spinning. I have not come to a final decision about this, nor do I wish to do so without discussing the matter at length with Vinoba. I am, therefore, not particular either way. You should, however, discuss your suggestion with Narandas. I also will do so.

BAPU

[PS.]

Write to me about your constipation.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6731, Also C.W. 4474. Courtesy: Bhau Panse

579. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

June 15, 1932

CHI. MANU¹,

I got your letter. I cannot understand why you did not get the letter that was sent with my letter to Jamnadas². Your courage is being tested fairly well. But there is nothing to be afraid of. You should tell very plainly that you have been living with Ba and Bali since childhood, and that you do not wish to live with Harilal at all. Even parents cannot claim custody of grown-up children. Hence it depends on your own wish where you will live. Nobody can force you to marry against your will. You should, therefore, always remember that it is in your own power to save yourself. I can write in this way and give you courage, but as prisoner I cannot give anything in newspapers. Nor will my letters help you in the court. But rest assured that you will need no such help.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1514. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

¹ Daughter of Harilal Gandhi
² Jamnadas Gandhi, younger brother of Maganlal Gandhi and Principal of Rajkot Rashtriya Shala
Like you, some others also believe that I live a life of self-control and observe brahmacharya, and that, therefore, I was sure to live long. This belief about me is not correct, or it is correct only partially in contrast with how other people live. I indulged in sexual pleasure nearly up to the age of 30. Nor can I claim that I exercised self-control in eating. I used to eat all kinds of delicacies for the mere pleasure of the palate. Then I steadily drifted towards restrain. But this does not mean at all that I have overcome the cravings of the senses. All I can claim is that I have learnt to hold them under control. Thus, self-indulgence had already had its effect on my body, but it has been counteracted in the measure that I have acquired self-control. My contemporaries who do not exercise even that much self-control naturally wonder at my self-control such as it is and do not observe my weakness. . .

The privileges which I enjoy as a prisoner are not because of my being placed in a particular class. I am not treated as an ordinary convict. Prisoners of my category\(^2\) are entitled to many privileges. This, of course, is no defence of what I do. Though the Government does give certain privileges to a prisoner like me, it certainly depends on the prisoner himself whether or not to avail himself of those privileges. Hence the misunderstanding which you mention is quite natural. But I regard it in public interest to continue to avail myself of the privileges even at the risk of incurring such a misunderstanding. But it should not be necessary for me to defend this point of view. Its correctness should be self-evident. Even if it is not, I should cling to it so long as I believe it to be earnest. This reasoning applies to every captain of a ship. A captain cannot always explain the reasons for the course which he is following. But he would not deserve to be a captain if he listens to the advice of others and give up what he believes to be the right course. Such captains are known to have wrecked on rocks the ships under their charge. Hence persons like you may certainly caution me whenever they have doubt about the propriety of my actions. If, however, I do not change my policy even after that, they should have faith that what I am doing is right. It does happen

---

1 Here follows Mahadev Desai’s comment introducing the next paragraph but does not indicate if any portion is omitted here.
2 State prisoners detained under Regulation 25 of 1829
sometimes that such faith proves to be misplaced. But there is no other way of managing public affairs. At the moment I am confident that, when I feel that I ought not to avail myself of a particular privilege or of any of them, I shall have the strength to renounce it or them. In South Africa I spent fairly long periods of imprisonment as an ordinary prisoner.

From whom did you hear that story about Krishnadas? There is no truth in it at all. Krishnadas was certainly not sent away. For some reasons he himself asked for leave to go. But though he has left, our relations have remained the same. It is against my nature to take any such step at somebody’s instigation. And nobody instigated me to take such a step in regard to Krishnadas. All the same I wish to know the source of this story. If you think you can tell me, please let me know.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 218-20

---

1 Gandhiji’s secretary in 1921-22
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

LETTER FROM SIR SAMUEL HOARE

April 13, 1932

DEAR MR. GANDHI,

I write this in answer to your letter of 11th March and I say at once I realize fully the strength of your feeling upon the question of separate electorates for the “Depressed” Classes. I can only say that we intend to give any decision that may be necessary solely and only upon the merits of the case. As you are aware, Lord Lothian’s Committee has not yet completed its tour and it must be some weeks before we can receive any conclusions at which it may have arrived. When we receive the report we shall have to give most careful consideration to its recommendations and we shall not give a decision until we have taken into account in addition to the view expressed by the Committee the views that you and those who think with you have so forcibly expressed.

I feel sure if you were in our position you would be taking exactly the same action we intend to take. You would await the Committee’s report, you would then give it your fullest consideration and before arriving at a final decision you would take into account the views that have been expressed on both sides of the controversy. More than this I cannot say. Indeed I do not imagine you would expect me to say more.

As to the Ordinances, I can only repeat what I have already said both publicly and privately. I am convinced that it was essential to impose them in the face of the deliberate attack upon the very foundations of orderly government. I am also convinced that both the Government of India and the local Governments are not abusing their extensive powers and are doing everything possible to prevent excessive or vindictive action. We shall not keep the Emergency measures in force any longer than we are obliged to for the purpose of maintaining the essentials of law and order and protecting our officials and other classes of the community against terrorist outrages.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI, ESQUIRE

The Bombay Chronicle, 13-9-1932

Vide “Letter to Sir Samuel Hoare”, 11-3-1932 and “Letter to Sir Samuel Hoare”, 2-5-1932

VOL. 55 : 10 FEBRUARY, 1932 - 15 JUNE, 1932 513
APPENDIX II

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN R. V. MARTIN AND R. M. MAXWELL

(A) R. V. MARTIN’S LETTER TO R. M. MAXWELL

INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF PRISONS,
BOMBAY PRESIDENCY,
POONA,
March 15, 1932

MY DEAR MAXWELL,

I enclose a letter I have just received from M. K. Gandhi. May I please have a reply by return regarding interviews with other prisoners? He seems to be getting very agitated on the subject.

I have no knowledge regarding the illness of the prisoner he mentions

Yours sincerely,

R. V. MARTIN

R. M. MAXWELL, ESQ. C.I.E., M.A. (OXON), I.C.S., J.P.
SECRETARY TO GOVERNMENT
HOME DEPARTMENT, BOMBAY

Orders have already been passed. Please see that they issue promptly.

R. M. MAXWELL

16/3

(B) R. M. MAXWELL’S LETTER TO THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF PRISONS

P. 147 NO. S. D. 2357

FROM
R. M. MAXWELL, ESQUIRE, C.I.S., I.C.S.
ACTING SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY HOME DEPARTMENT

TO
THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF PRISONS
BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

SUBJECT: Interviews between Mr. Gandhi and other prisoners in the Yeravda Jail or Camp Extension.

SIR,

In continuation of my letter No. S. D. 1568, dated the 4th March 1932, I am

Vide “Letter to R. V. Martin”, 15-3-1932

514

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
directed to state that Mr. Gandhi may be allowed to see other prisoners in the Yeravda Main Jail or Camp Extension on the conditions suggested by you, namely:

1. Interviews to be permitted with not more than three prisoners at one time, and not oftener than once in two weeks.
2. The interviews not to be treated by either side as a means of inquiring into the treatment or conduct of other prisoners in the Jail. The Jail arrangements, discipline and political subjects not to be discussed.
3. The interviews to take place in the office of the Superintendent of the Prison.
4. Interview time: 20 minutes.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

R. M. Maxwell

16/3

Acting Secretary to Government

Bombay Secret Abstract, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40), Pt. I

APPENDIX III

EXTRACTS FROM MIRABEHN’S LETTER¹

April 8, 1932

Received a letter from Mirabehn with 24 pages, every line of it instinct with spotless devotion. She would not be happy unless she lived with and rendered personal service to Bapu. But Bapu wants her to get rid of this desire, as otherwise she would feel herself stranded when Bapu was no more with us. This controversy has been on ever since Mirabehn came to India. In today’s letter she has poured out her wonderfully transparent heart:

Bapu, I am never without that thought in my mind, as to how best to serve you. I think and pray and reason with myself, and it always ends the same way in my heart of hearts. When you are taken from us, as in jail, an instinct impels me to work with all my strength at outward service of your cause. I feel no doubt and no difficulty. When you are with us, an equally strong instinct impels me to retire into silent personal service—trying to do anything else, I feel lost and futile. The capacity for the former depends on the fulfilment of the latter. The one is the counterpart of the other, and something continually tells me that it was for fulfilment in that way that I was led to you. The instinct is so strong that I cannot get round it or through it or over it. It is difficult to ask you to have faith in it as the full proof of its correctness can only leave it at that. This much I know full well that during this struggle my strength, capacity and inner peace and happiness are much greater than last time, because I had been able to serve according to my instinct (except for one short spell of anguish since your previous release). The fact that I was on the point of a breakdown when I came here had nothing to do with this question. It was sheer over-work, because when I saw that I was shortly going to be arrested, I simply spent my strength recklessly, knowing an enforced rest was coming. And there was more than enough work around me to be reckless over.

¹Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 8-4-1932

Who knows if it is all delusion! But a woman has to go by instinct. It is stronger with her than any amount of reason, and her full strength can only be harnessed and brought into service if her nature is able to express itself. I have no thought, no care, no longing in all the world except for you—(you the cause—you the ideal.) To serve that cause in this life and to reach that ideal in after-life, God who has brought me from utter darkness to the light of your path will surely not answer my prayers by leaving me now to follow a wrong instinct. I have not written all this for the sake of argument, but simply to share with you the result of my ceaseless strivings to (understand) since I have been in jail.

_The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, pp. 62-3_

APPENDIX IV

LETTER FROM E. E. DOYLE

_Confidential_
Inspector-General of Prisons
Bombay Presidency,
Poona,
April 23, 1932

Dear Mr.,

Reference your D. O. of 22nd instant.

I have written to Belgaum for detailed particulars regarding the persons in whom you are interested—and hope to be in a position, within the week, to let you have the information you desire.

If circumstances permit, I intend visiting Belgaum as early as possible, and will then be able to give you first-hand information.

_Vide_ “Letter to E. E. Doyle”, 22-4-1932

516
_The Collected Works of Mahatma Gandhi_
I can find no reply to Major Martin’s letter so I presume, an answer was addressed to him by name, and is now chasing him to England. I trust, though, that I shall soon have all the information you require.

Yours,
E. E. Doyle

MR. M. K. Gandhi

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

APPENDIX V

LETTER FROM E. E. DOYLE

No. 356 of 1932

INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF PRISONS,
BOMBAY PRESIDENCY,
POONA,

April 28, 1932

DEAR MR.,

I have just received a report from the Superintendent, Belgaum Central Prison, in reply to my letter. This does not give me all the details I desired, so I have asked for a further and more precise report by return post. All four persons have lost weight since admission to jail custody—but as reasons for this are not stated, I have asked for them to be supplied.

Three of the four are on special diet as shown below:

D. B. Kalekar—
Loaf bread 12 oz.
Milk 2 lb.
Molasses 2 oz.
Olive Oil \(\frac{1}{2}\) oz.

Manibein Patel—
Milk 2 lb.
Rice 1 lb.

Prabhudas Gandhi—
Wheat bread 1 lb. 2 oz.
Dhall & Vegetables
Milk 8 oz.

\(^1\) Vide “A Letter” 25-4-1932
I shall communicate with you again on this subject, as soon as I hear from Belgaum Central Prison.

Yours,

E. E. Doyle

MR. M. K. Gandhi

Yeravda

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

APPENDIX VI

LETTER FROM E. E. DOYLE

No. 365 of 1932

INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF PRISONS,

BOMBAY PRESIDENCY,

POONA,

May 2, 1932

DEAR MR.,

I have received the further information I required and am now in a position to assure you that you need have no cause for worry in respect of any of the persons you named in your letter to me.

D. B. Kalelkar’s previous medical history is known to the Medical Officer at Belgaum, who is watching his health carefully and has prescribed treatment and diet as is necessary.

P. Gandhi was in hospital from 9-3-1932 to 12-3-1932 with malaria, which has left him slightly anaemic—but he is being treated for this—and is doing well.

Manibehn Patel suffered occasionally from lumbago for which she was treated and has obtained relief. Also [she] is habitually constipated. This is treated as necessary with laxatives and change of diet.

N. D. Parikh is reported as being quite fit in spite of a small loss in weight.

I trust this will relieve your mind.

Yours,

E. E. Doyle

MR. M. K. Gandhi

Yeravda

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

1Vide”Letter to E. E. Doyle”, 4-5-1932

518

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
APPENDIX VII

RABINDRANATH TAGORE’S APPEAL

Viswabharati, Santiniketan,
Bengal,
March 22, 1932

From the depths of the present atmosphere of suffering the cry has come for the inauguration of a new age of faith and reconciliation, for a fellowship of understanding between races and nations alienated by cruel politics and diplomacy. We in India are ready for a fundamental change in our affairs which will bring harmony and understanding into our relationships with those who have inevitably been brought near to us. We are waiting for a gesture of goodwill from both sides, spontaneous and generous in its faith in humanity, which will create a future of moral federation, of constructive works of public good, of the inner harmony of peace between the peoples of India and England.

The visit of our friends from England has confirmed the immediate possibility of such an intimate fellowship and truth in our mutual relationship, and I feel called upon to appeal to all who have the welfare of humanity at heart to come forward at this critical hour and courageously take upon themselves the task of fulfilling the moral responsibility, which is before us, of building upon the bare foundation of faith or acceptance of truth in a spirit of generous mutual forgiveness.

The memory of the past, however painful it may have been for us all, should never obscure the vision of the perfect, of the future which it is for us jointly to create. Indeed, our experience of the futility of suspicion and hostility must inspire us with a profounder belief in the truth of the simple fellowship of hearts, in the mighty power of creative understanding between individuals as well as nations inspired by a common urge of love.

Advance, 23-6-1932

1 Vide "Letter to Percy W. Bartlett", 4-5-1932. The message was given to the Society of Friends Deputation at Santiniketan in March. Dr. Tagore asked them to take it personally to Gandhiji but permission was refused by the Government of India.
1. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

[Before June 16, 1932]¹

CHI. PARASRAM,

Judging from your letter the children seem to have made good progress. You speed with the takli is also good. Do give half an hour daily to it; if you can in what time spin 160 rounds, nothing can be better than that. What does kule ki haddi² mean? The word Kula is not to be found in the Hindi Dictionary. Why did the haddi get swollen? Has the swelling subsided now? If it has not, you must take immediate steps to cure it.

The replies to the questions which you have put to Mahadev are:

1. I consider a minimum of half an hour’s walk morning and evening essential for you and others. It is not necessary to sit in one position for more than an hour. One should stand up for a minute at least, or change the posture.

2. It is natural that a mother should desire to see her son, but every mother ought to restrain such a with and, if the son is engaged in some activity of service, he must cure his mother of such attachment.

3. When a son goes abroad and lives in a foreign country for ten years, his mother has no choice but to bear the separation. There are innumerable poor mothers in India who possibly never again see the face of their son after he has gone out to earn a living. One may console the mother through a letter, and cheer her as much as one can by reasoning with her and citing other similar instances.

4. At the moment my heart has become as hard as stone so that the incidents in Bombay may have affected me, if at all, only unconsciously, and I am not aware that they have. I felt sad for a while but I think I have quietened down after that.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7481. Also C.W. 4956. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

¹ The date is inferred from the reference to the swelling of the hip-bone; vide “Letter to parasram Mehrotra”, 16-6-1932.
² Hip-bone
2. LETTER TO C.F. ANDREWS

June 16, 1932

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have your letter and your scribble under Agatha’s letter. I am following your movement in so far as it is reported in the papers here, but even without the assistance of the papers I can picture to myself what you are doing.1 I do hope that your Chinese mission2 will be successful. Do please send our love to the good Dean of Canterbury when you write to him. I wonder how long he is going to be there. Has he any companion with him? How is it we have not yet got your latest book3? I see that the first edition was sold outright.

Love from us all.

MOHAN

From a photostat: G.N. 974

3. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised June 16, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter4 came in only today.

I am glad you have left Damodardas’s roof. It is ominous that there is no letter from him as yet. Let us hope that he will do nothing shady and that (he) has done nothing of the kind. I have always held a high opinion of him. It will distress me to find otherwise.

I have no doubt you will make sure that Shantabai is not embarrassed in any way by harbouring you.

Yes, I have been saltless since Sunday. As the doctors removed the splints and found that there was no relief from their use, I immediately thought of you and knew that you would be more at ease if I gave up salt. It was no deprivation to me and so I stopped it at once. It meant giving up the loaf and going to chapati. Whether it was the chapati or the absence of salt, the bowels became looser than I would care. Therefore from yesterday I have been on grapes,

---

1 The addressee was trying for reconciliation between the Congress leaders and the British Government by personally interviewing Lord Irwin, Lord Sankey, Sir Samuel Hoare and Ramsay MacDonald.
2 To the flood-stricken areas of China in company with the Dean of Canterbury
3 What I Owe to Christ
mangoes and a vegetable. This at once put the bowels right, though not absolutely. I would, therefore, continue the chapatiless and almondless diet for a little longer and watch the result. I was weighed yesterday and had lost 1\1/2 Ib., nothing to grumble about. Strength is maintained. The condition of saltless ought not to mean reversion to milk. If I revert to milk and the pain in the elbow disappears, the disappearance will justly be attributed to milk. If in spite of milk, the pain does not leave the elbow and does after giving up salt, the experiment may be claimed to have succeeded. Dr. Mehta is positive that there is nothing organically wrong and that the only thing required is rest for the affected part. This I am giving so far as the wheel is concerned. Anyway, having taken up the saltless, I shall watch its other effects and take to milk if need be. I am watching myself carefully. There is, therefore, not be slightest cause for anxiety. The system is quite good in every other respect. As Vallabhbhai rightly says, if there was anything organically wrong, the mischief should spread to the other parts of the body. I am not repeating all these details in my letter to the Ashram, since you let them see what I write you.

I understand what you say about your activity. I shall see if I can make use of the information.

I suppose you know that Devdas is down with fever. The telegram received says there is nothing serious. I have wired for more particulars. And Manilal, Sushila, their daughter and Pragji were all down with that deadly malaria. But they seem to have escaped with extreme weakness. There is a splendid passage in Sir James Jeans’ book: “Life is a progress towards Death.” Another reading may be: Life is a preparation for Death! And somehow or other we quail to think of that inevitable and grand event. It is grand even regarded as a preparation for a better life than the past, as it should be for everyone who this to live in the fear of God.

Remember me to Shantabai. Of course, you will be seeing Damodardas often and help him with your advice. Is Keshav\(^1\) there? What does he say? Ask him to write to me fully.

Love from us all.

BAPU

[PS.]

In the envelope you will admire Vallabhbhai’s art.

From the original: C.W. 6225. Courtesy Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9691

\(^1\) Son of Maganlal Gandhi
4. LETTER TO NARAYANAPPA

June 16, 1932

There is nothing like finding one’s full satisfaction from one’s daily task however humble it may be. To those that wait and watch and pray, God always brings greater tasks and responsibilities.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 223

5. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

June 16, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I have not yet received your booklet. Mahadev will go through the Press cutting. Do something about the swelling‘ and cure it.

You did quite right in not running up to Vimal’s elder brother, but you yourself should feel so. The knowledge that he is under the care of your brother and that the latter is looking after him properly should be enough for you. If you have some special remedy for his illness or if you think that your very presence will cure him, then it may be your duty to go. That is, if you can become free from your work you should go in such circumstances. You should go, however, not only for the sake of Vimal’s brother but for any person who may be ill and whose illness is likely to be cured by your presence. It is only thus that one learns to overcome the weakness of one’s heart. Let us hope that the child is all right now.

I think that it would be desirable to fix the maximum number of hours for work, it that is possible. But it seems to me that the limit would be different for each person. In an institution in which all the members regard one another as members of a family and everybody has the same sense of responsibility, it would not only be impossible, but may even be improper to fix a uniform limit for all. How can we frame a rule which would not permit a person, whose health is good enough, who is himself willing and who has no other work of service to claim his time, to give all his time to the service of the institution?
The conclusion which I draw from this is that, if we exercise discretion

1 Vide “Letter to Parasram Mehrotra”, 16-6-1932.
2 Addressee’s son
in all our work, do it calmly and selflessly and without hurry, no one would feel the burden of work. We feel work to be a burden only when we do it under compulsion. Work done willingly and cheerfully is never felt as a burden. But those who have a demoniac nature are impelled by their selfishness to take all manner of work from their body and then break down. Such persons have no peace of mind and we should never take them as examples.

The line about women which you have quoted has no other sense but what I have explained. It is true only for lustful men. There is no injustice in saying that for immoral men, women are a mine of evil, just as for the greedy, a mine of gold is like hell. For the world, however, it is not so. Gold is useful in many ways.

BAPU

[PS.]

I was glad to hear that the child was all right.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7502. Also C.W. 4979. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

6. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

June 16, 1932

BHAISHRI VITHALDAS,

I got your two letters. The X-rays seem to have had miraculous effect on you. Your health should improve rapidly now. But it may be wrong to believe that, because the rays have proved beneficial in one disease, they would help in my complaint too. They may or may not. Here in the prison my body is in the hands of the Superintendent. Let him take such measures as he thinks may help. They seem to have no fear and believe that the pain in the elbow will disappear if it is given complete rest. The pain is not continuous. The elbow pains only when I do a particular type of work with the arm.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9782

1 Vide “Letter to Parasram Mehrotra”, 1-6-1932.

2 This was followed by a note from Mahadev Desai: “I have gone through your article on the takli and found nothing special about it, on the contrary you have omitted to discuss its economic aspect. We should prepare an interesting dialogue on this subject for children.”
7. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

June 16, 1932

CHI. DEVDAS,

I did fear some such thing. I had a feeling the day before yesterday that there would be bad news from somewhere. And then I got your wire yesterday. I immediately asked Vallabhbhai what the wire contained, and on opening it he read the news about your illness. It was not likely that you would escape fever in Gorakhpur. But I assume that it will have left you before you get this letter. I think that, according to your nature, you would like to be surrounded by friends and relations at such a time. You would deserve such care because you have looked after many people in their illness. But I myself am a hard-hearted man. I, therefore, would not like to ask anybody from the western part to run up to Gorakhpur. And if I did feel such a wish, I would suppress it. If I don’t practise my philosophy on you, on whom else should I? I wish that you should understand this nature of mine and bear it cheerfully. God is your relations and your friends and your parents; all others are so only in name. Themselves helpless creatures, how can they help you? Instead of looking to such cyphers for protection and support, seek the protection of the Universal Power. He will send you such help as He wills. It is my firm faith that, wherever you are, you will draw your neighbours towards you. There is no reason to believe that it will be otherwise in jail.

After saying this, I suggest that, if you want anybody from the Ashram to be near you, send a wire there. But my hope is that by the time you get this letter your illness will have been a thing of the past. You always have the blessing of us all.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhai Diary, Vol. I, p. 220

---

1 Gandhiji, however, was persuaded by Vallabhbhai Patel to request the U.P. Governor for the addressee’s transfer to a jail having less inclement climate. Vide “Telegram to Sir Malcolm Hailey”, 18-6-1932.
8. A LETTER

June 16, 1932

The story about the snake is correct only to a certain extent. The snake was passing over my body. At such a moment what could I or anyone else do except to remain still? I don’t see that this deserves any such praise as the writer has given me. And how do we know if the snake was poisonous or not? Having held for years that death is not a frightening event I am not affected for long by the death of anyone.

[From Hindi]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 224

9. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

June 17, 1932

MY DEAR AMTUL,

I have your letter. I am glad you are staying with your people. I have not yet been able to write to Dr. Sharma. But I will do so early. If the door to interviews in again opened, you shall certainly come and see me. Are you reading anything? Give me your day’s diary. Do write something always in Urdu.

Love.

SHRIMATI AMTUSSALAAM
42 GHOD BUNDER ROAD
SANTA CRUZ
B.B.& C.I. RLY.

Love.

From a photostat: G.N. 251

---

¹ The letter was in reply to a question whether the story about Gandhiji having allowed a venomous snake to crawl over his body was true.
² Vide “Letter to Dr. Hiralal Sharma”, 18-6-1932.
10. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

June 17, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

What else am I to believe but that you are a fool? If children have no interest in asking questions and still write, they waste their time. If they write with interest, though merely as a formality, there is some meaning in that. Children may not expect letters from parents, but are bound to be glad when they get one. There will be no trace of selfishness in this. In any case, you cannot see in this evidence of hysteria. I have explained to you in one of my letters what your hysteria is.¹

I have not opposed contemplation of a personal form at the time of prayers, but have given a higher place to the formless. Perhaps it is not right to make such a distinction. What suits one person will not suit another. Comparison is out of place in this matter. For me worship of the formless has greater appeal. Your explanation regarding Sankara and Ramanuja does not seem correct.² Personal experience is more important than the influence of external circumstances. The latter should have no effect on a votary of truth. He ought to see beyond them. We often see that opinions formed on the basis of external circumstances are afterwards discovered to be wrong. The connection between the atman³ and the body is a well-known instance of this. Because the atman is intimately connected with the body in this life, we cannot easily think of it as distinct from the body. No one has equalled the power of vision of the person who saw beyond this outward fact and first uttered: “Not this”. You will be able to think ² According to Mahadevbhaini Diary, the addressee had argued that our attitude towards God had changed with the change in social and political conditions. Sankara lived in an age of freedom when people talked of equality with God; Ramanuja lived in an age of slavery when people talked of being the slaves of the slaves of God. In the book Bapuna Patro-5: Ku. Premabehn Kantakne, pp. 99-101, however, the addressee, presumably relying on her memory, says that she had argued that both Sankara and Ramanuja could attain greater heights of spirituality because they lived in an age of freedom where as the later saints, being born in slavery, worshipped personal gods and not the abstract Brahman.

³ Sel of any number of such instances. It is not at all proper to take literally the utterances of Tukaram and other saints. Recently I read one such utterance of Tukaram. I quote it for your benefit.

An image of Lord Pashupati is made out of clay: what, then, would clay called?

The worship of the Lord reaches unto Him, the clay remains clay.

An image of Vishnu is carved out of stone, yet the stone does not become Vishnu.

The devotion is offered to Vishnu, the stone remains a stone.

From this, I draw the lesson that we should pay attention only to the idea behind the words of such saints. They may describe personal God and yet worship the formless. We ordinary human beings cannot do that and, therefore, we would come to grief if we do not try to understand their real meaning and guide ourselves by it.

If a person who can read Urdu goes to Imam Saheb’s house, he will soon find the books. You have there Mirabehn’s Urdu-English and English-Urdu Dictionary. Send that, too, along with the other books. Does anyone clean Imam Saheb’s house periodically? Every unoccupied house should be cleaned once a week or a fortnight.

You will find it difficult to keep an account of time only till it has become a habit with you to do so. Afterwards, it shouldn’t take any time. Such things have a value and bear fruit only if they are done in the right spirit.

I cite the example of children in South Africa in order to encourage the children in the Ashram and not to find fault with them.
These children, too, are capable of working, if we have anyone among us who knows how to take work from them. Aren’t you there?

For the pain in your back, you should sit in warm water. You should do that for fifteen to twenty minutes. At the same time you should massage the back with your palm. If you do this, your pain will be cured and there will also be a beneficial effect on menstruation. Let me know what the doctor says. Such diseases should be effectively treated at the very first appearance of their symptoms.

I carefully examined your daily programme of work. It is much too heavy. You can easily make a few cuts in it. From 12.30 to 5.40 you run a class and give instruction in crafts. That comes to five hours and ten minutes. If you reduce this period by one hour, you will get the free time which you need. You may retire into privacy and have a nap or simply lie down for one hour, or do some work which makes you feel that you are resting. You should not, however, spend the time in talking or in any serious work. If you do not wish to utilize the free hour just then, you may advance the time of those items of the programme for which it is convenient to do so and get an hour in the evening. Anyone who feels completely absorbed in his or her work does not feel it a burden or a strain, but to one who feels no interest in his work even a small task seems heavy, as a day seems as long as a year to a prisoner. To a person given to worldly enjoyments, a year seems as short as a day!

In the past, I used to get bored when listening to European music. It is only now that I can understand and enjoy it a little.

You are not right when you say that “one should not hope to do any reading here.” It is quite true that you cannot do much reading. It is equally true that reading is given less importance in the Ashram. Even so, many prisons in the Ashram have been able to do some reading. I do not like your expressions of despair. Try to perfect what you find imperfect. If, however, on the balance you feel that things are unsatisfactory, if, that is, after weighing the good points against the shortcomings, you feel that the latter exceed, you should leave the Ashram. Justice to oneself and to society requires that.

You need not apologize for your long letters. They don’t bore me; on the contrary, I like them. I learn something from them, for each of them mirrors the state of your heart at the time of writing it.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10290. Also C.W. 6738. Courtesy:
Premabehn Kantak

11. LETTER TO MOHAN N. PARikh

June 17, 1932

CHI. MOHAN.

Your letter was well written. Try to write still more neatly. I am glad that you do cleaning work and carding.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9180

\(^1\) Son of Narahari Parikh
12. A LETTER

June 17, 1932

You ought not to lose your self-confidence. One often gets impure thoughts. But those who frequently clean out the dust that daily settles in their houses may be said to be clean and keeping their houses clean. Similarly, those who drive out impure thoughts from their minds as soon as they come are sure to win in their struggle. They should not be called hypocrites. To save oneself from hypocrisy, I have already suggested a golden rule, which is that one should speak about one’s impure thoughts and never hide them. Of course, you need not trump them in public. But you should certainly tell some friend about them. And, indeed, you should be mentally prepared not to mind even if the whole world knew about them. Have faith in the words of Vinoba and do not yeild to despair.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhai Diary, Vol. I, p. 226

13. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

June 17, 1932

I, for one, daily realize this truth from experience, that Nature provides for the needs of every living creature from moment to moment, and I also see that, voluntarily or involuntarily, knowingly or unknowingly, we violate this great law every moment of our lives. All of us can see that, in consequence of our doing so, on the one hand large numbers suffer through over-indulgence and, on the other, countless people suffer through want. Our endeavour, therefore is to save mankind from the calamity of widespread starvation on the one hand and, on the other, destruction of food-grains by the American millionaires though a false understanding of economic laws. It is true, of course, that it is impossible at present to live in perfect conformity with this natural law. But that need not worry us.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhai Diary, Vol. I, p. 224

1 The addressee had requested Gandhiji to explain to him the meaning of the vow of non-possession.
14. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 17, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

Your Hindi letter is beautiful. Have you written it yourself?
Consult Premabehn about sitting on the swing during the rains. It is very good that you are reading Vishal Bharat.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11080. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

15. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

Y. M.,
June 17, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. To you household work is also service, because you are not attached to it. Since it is the only duty for you at present, you should derive perfect joy out of it. Never allow your health to suffer.
Give my blessings to Anand.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

16. A LETTER

June 17, 1932

Nothing as regards the conduct of prisoners can be sent from here for publication. As you say clarification on this point is desirable but that must await a suitable opportunity. I appreciate your argument against fetters. However I still think that the distinction between ordinary and political prisoners is invalid. There is need for reform in

1 The addressee had suggested satyagraha against political prisoners being taken out of jail for work, chained and fettered.
the administration of prisons. A prison should be a house of correction and not punishment. If that is so, why should a forger have fetters on his legs in prison? The fetters will not improve his character. To my mind it is intolerable that anyone should be fettered if there is no likelihood of his trying to escape or becoming unmanageable or wishing to make a nuisance of himself. But if a political prisoner is an athlete like you, always thinking out means of escape and unable to control his tongue and hands, it will be the duty of the authorities to put him in fetters. In short what I mean is that the discrimination between political and other prisoners is not justified. We reformers should not seek for any concessions which cannot be justified on ethical grounds and are not granted to all prisoners in the same category. I should be unable to stand an arrangement by which wheat is given to politicals and maize to ordinary prisoners. Wheat bread must be issued to a prisoner who is unable to digest maize even if he is a murderer. And a political prisoner who has splendid digestion must give up wheat and ask for maize, and thus protect his fellow-prisoners. But these are only my views upon which I must not insist from where I am. Let each follow the dictates of his own conscience.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 226-7

17. TELEGRAM TO SIR MALCOLM HAILEY

HIS EXCELLENCY GOVERNOR
UNITED PROVINCES

June 18, 1932

OVER THREE MONTHS AGO MY SON DEVDAS WAS TRIED DELHI AND MEERUT AS CIVIL RESISTER AND SOMETIME AFTER CONVICTION TRANSFERRED GORAKHPUR JAIL. GORAKHPUR CLIMATE NOTORIOUSLY

1 The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 174 has: “A wire from Devdas. . . . was received yesterday: ‘The maximum temperature was 102°, and has now gone below 100°. The climate of Gorakhpur is very bad . . .’ Bapu remarked that Devdas had referred to the climate in the expectation that we should try to get him transferred from Gorakhpur. The Sardar suggested that he should certainly be transferred to some place with a better climate. Bapu said, ‘Yes, but we must apply for the transfer ourselves, if we want it, and I have no mind to do so. Harilal was in the worst prison in South Africa, but his transfer was arranged by him himself and not by me’. The Sardar said, ‘But we are not prisoners here. The circumstances in India are different. Let us apply by means.’ Bapu yielded after all and wired to Hailey. . . .”
MALARIAL CAUSE FOR REMOVAL COMPANIONLESS TO SUCH OUT OF THE WAY JAIL UNKNOWN. HE IS SUFFERING FROM SIXTH INSTANT FROM SUSPECTED MILD ENTERIC THOUGH HE SEEMS TO BE RECOVERING. REQUEST HIS REMOVAL TO HEALTHIER AND MORE ACCESSIBLE PLACE PREFERABLY TO DEHRADUN TO JOIN PANDIT JAWAHARLAL WITH WHOM HE IS CLOSE FRIENDS OR TO YERAVDA TO JOIN ME IF REMOVAL HERE AT ALL POSSIBLE.

M. K. GANDHI

PRISONER, YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3) Pt. I, p 283

18. LETTER TO E.E. DOYLE

June 18, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

In continuation of my letter of the 9th instant regarding Shrimati Mirabai (Slade) I now enclose her original letter dated Bombay, June 14, 1932 (placed below), just received in reply to my enquiry. In my opinion, the precise language of this full letter is conclusive answer to the statement that she was “actively engaged in the furtherance of the civil disobedience movement”. I think that Government should be in possession of this emphatic denial of the information before them in connection with her doings before her incarceration. To save time I have marked the relevant portions of the letter.

Yours Sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(2) Pt. I, p. 115

1 Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 16-6-1932.
2 Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 8-6-1932.
19. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI

June 18, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR)\(^1\).

I got both your letters. You cannot come to see me till the restriction on Mirabehn is lifted. Isn’t that what self-denial means?

We shall not do justice to Harilal if we do not publish his letters to you. Surely it was no fault of his that you could not live up to his ideals. You should do so now. You ought not to withhold the letters in order to hide your weakness. But why should you despair and feel weak? Or is it, rather, that you think you are too old? How can you give up hope at the age of twenty-four or twenty-five? In fact this is the time of life when you can strive and rise. Take Care!!!

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1840

20. LETTER TO SUSHILABEHN GANDHI

June 18, 1932

CHI. SUSHILA,

I hope you got my letter. When I wrote it, I believed that Manilal must have left. It must indeed have been an ordeal for you all. But that is how we are really tested. I hope that no effects of illness are left now. Did you have to call in a doctor, or did you try only common remedies? How do you help in the press?

I assume now that Manilal also will remain there. Do not feel unhappy about that. We should live as God ordains. Our wishes are not always fulfilled.

Sita is now growing up. Do you teach her anything? Has your hearing improved?

Ask Pragji\(^2\) and Parvati to write to me. All three of us will be glad to get their letter. Will Pragji stay on there now? I would be happy if you cease being lazy in writing to me and make your letters full of news. But you are daughter of a big man and I can’t take you

\(^1\) Widow of Harilal Maneklal Desai, an Ashram inmate
\(^2\) Pragji Khandubhai Desai, a co-worker of Gandhiji during the South African period, wrote regularly for the Gujarati section of Indian Opinion. to task if you don’t do that. And, moreover, it was Jamnalalji who arranged the marriage. If you were daughter of an ordinary man, I would have forced you to write long and detailed letters !!!

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4789

21. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

June 18, 1932

CHI. MANILAL,

I got your letter sent with Medh\(^1\). I don’t think I shall be able to see him. In the first place, as Mirabehn is not permitted to see me I have stopped seeing any visitors. And, secondly, the name of every intending visitors has to be sent to the Government and Medh’s name is not likely to be approved. Even if he is permitted to see me, I don’t think we would be allowed to discuss the affairs of South Africa. In the letter asking for the permission, he should state as the reason his intention to discuss them. If I see him then, there would be no need to send a cable to you. But I did not have even a letter from Medh. He can at any rate write to me.

So you were all attacked by the virulent fever. In the absence of any news by cable, I assume that all of you are well. I approved of Sushila’s and Sita’s staying on there because I thought they were certain to keep better health there. And so it seems God sent me this message through your illness: ‘You are a fool. Who are you to think who would keep better health where? I keep people healthy or make them ill as I choose. Why don’t you understand this simple thing?’
Though I have now learnt this wisdom, I still think that it might be cleaner for them to remain in South Africa. But now it seems that you, too, will have to remain there. I also think that, if Pragji is not ready to shoulder the responsibility or if the responsibility is beyond his capacity and if you cannot make any other arrangement, you cannot come. It would not be proper to close the paper at this time. The problems here will take care of themselves. Stay there without worrying about things here, and don’t feel unhappy that you cannot come. After all, you live there for public service and not for your own

\(^1\) Surendra Medh, a leading satyagrahi during the South African struggle happiness. Write to me regularly.

All there of us are very well. We do plenty of spinning, of course. I now rotate the wheel with my foot and draw the thread with the right hand. Even otherwise, I wished to experiment on this spinning-wheel for the sake of Prabhudas. But now I have an additional reason for spinning on it, namely, that my left elbow needs rest. Mahadev spins yarn of 40 counts. Sardar makes envelopes from useless paper. It is in one such envelope that I intend to seal this letter.

Ramdas is in this jail. He sees me sometimes. His health is all right. He is reading and studying at present. Nimu and the children are in the Ashram.

Devdas is far away in Gorakhpur. He has been having fever for some days. But there is no cause for anxiety. The fever is now receding.

Ba is in Sabarmati [jail] and Kanti in Visapur [jail]. There are many others, too, in jail, but I need not mention them here. Did I tell you that Devdas is engaged to Rajaji’s daughter? The engagement was the result of the strong desire of them both. Because of the struggle, they have put off the marriage.

A good many reforms are being introduced in the Ashram. By reforms I mean further measures of self-control.

Personally, I never think as to when the struggle would end. Let it end when it will. For him who fights for Truth and with truthful means, victory and defeat are the same. That is, he always wins, though the victory may come now or in future.

Sardar and Mahadev send their blessings.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4790

22. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

June 18, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

Your first attempt at writing a letter in Hindi was good. Did you write it without anybody’s help? Your handwriting can be still better.

1 Son of Harilal Gandhi
2 Lakshmi
All of you should do cleaning work in the Ashram with great care. One does not get peace everywhere. Alteration of head and cold is the law of the world.

BAPU

23. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

June 18, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

God never does evil, for He is Truth. Hence man himself is responsible for the evil that he does. Whatever good we do is inspired by Him, and, therefore, it may be said that He does it.

As for the degree of proficiency in Sanskrit, you should know the language well enough to be able to understand the Gita. This includes grammar.

If you find that the work has increased so much that you do not get even half an hour every day completely free, you should reduce the period of study. Don’t think that you will learn less to that extent. By taking half an hour’s rest, you will increase your capacity for grasping to that extent and so on balance there will be nothing but gain. Scientists have proved this by experiments.

Besides books on religion, there are plenty of books on other subjects in the Ashram which you can read. Everybody may select from them and read the books which he likes. The books are not only in Gujarati, but also in Urdu, Hindi, even in Sanskrit, and of course in English.

I assume that the new office-bearers elected will do their duty properly.

I observe that boys and girls are careless in using paper. That should not be. And they should never tear out sheets from exercise books and write on them.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II
24. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

June 18, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

You should not be afraid of anything you may see in a dream. Nor should you feel unhappy about it. If kitten sit in my lap, so do children.1 A cat has no reason, whereas human beings have it. Hence there is nothing in a cat’s life for which one may wish to be born a cat.

BAPU

Form a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9435. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel

25. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

June 18, 1932

You will be surprised, but I would advise you just now to stop reading even the works of Raychandbhai and the Gita.2 Reflect on whatever you understand from the Gita verses and the bhajans which are recited or sung during prayers. This self-restraint will be difficult to exercise, but you will see its miraculous effect. At present, your reading has become your work. Whenever you are free, take up some useful work to do. Give up trying to understand things with your reason. This is the meaning of “one step enough for me”. One should give up any aid which becomes a bond.

BAPU

[PS.]

There is no harm in your reading newspapers.

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 348. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

---

1 The addressee had written: “You play a lot with the kitten and let them sit in your lap. How I wish I were born a cat too!” (Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. 1, p. 233)

2 The addressee read too many books on religion and brooded too much.
26. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

June 18, 1932

I got your letter. I think it would be better not to write about the Lothian report, though I see nothing wrong in principle in doing that. Personally, I would not even wish to write about it. I would always feel that I didn’t have sufficient data for the purpose. Why, then, waste mental energy and also time in trying to write about it?

Devdas has taken ill. The fever is receding now and there is no cause for anxiety. Manilal, Sushila, Sita, Pragji and his daughter, all of them had caught virulent fever in Natal, but the latest news about them was reassuring.

I had never thought that you would write a play. Your thoughts are turning toward ultra-modern reforms. I do believe that within certain limits divorce should be permitted, but I would not at all care to propagate that idea. Generally we are such slaves of the psychological forces in us that no one will wager that his mind will be in the same state tomorrow in which it is today. I, therefore, feel even now that a marriage tie voluntarily entered into ought not to be broken without a very strong reason. If I had divorced Ba on the difference over untouchability, surely we would never have known the beautiful relation between us which exists today. Who can say in what condition Ba would be living and with whom I would have rushed into marriage? But the idea that there can be no divorce was ingrained in us, and so the crisis passed and only its memory is left now. I hope, therefore, that you have not advocated in your play unfettered freedom for a husband or a wife to divorce either party at will.

1 The Franchise Committee under Lord Lothian had published its report on June 3, 1932 in which it had proposed an increase in the total number of voters in the provincial electorates from 7 millions to over 30 millions, or nearly 30 per cent of the total about population, and for the due representation of all classes and sections of the community. Regarding its recommendations, according to Mahadev Desai, Gandhiji said: “The Committee has done well in so far as it has come forward with a definition of untouchability and calculated the number of ‘untouchables’ so called at three crores and a half instead of the usual seven crores. For this Lothian is perhaps entitled to credit. Thanks to this definition, Hindus, if they wish, can incorporate ‘untouchables’ into Hindu society in one moment and at a stroke satisfy all the demands ostensibly made on their behalf.” (Mahatma, Vol. III, p. 197; India in 1931-32, pp. 50-1 and The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. p. 147)

2 Advocating divorce
If it were man’s duty to gratify his carnal passion, I would certainly understand the necessity of artificial means of birth control.\(^1\) If, however, we regard gratification of passion without a desire for progeny as sin—and according to me it should be so regarded—it would be putting a premium on sin to prevent progeny by artificial means. It is Nature’s eternal law that one shall reap as one sows. If man indulges his carnal passion, let him bear the burden of progeny. The question why the woman should bear it does not arise, since we regard her as completely free. The adoption of artificial means of birth-control in the West is already producing one result, namely, that the sanctity of marriage is disappearing and men and women gratify their lust without any restraint. It is not many years since these means came into vogue, and yet the bond which had been held as sacred all this time is losing its strength. Advanced thinkers in the West now look upon marriage as a superstition and see nothing evil even in a brother and a sister feeling passion for each other and gratifying it, but, on the contrary, regard it as completely normal. I don’t look upon these views as the swinging of the pendulum to the other extreme. I think that they are the direct and natural result of the same attitude of mind which lies at the back of artificial birth-control. It is possible that the bonds of marriage, etc., which we now regard as spiritually uplifting may actually be spiritually degrading. But I simply cannot go beyond conceding such a possibility for the sake of argument. All such talk in the name of ethics and science seems extremely dangerous to me. These new ideas are raining from the fountain of false compassion and impatience and of the thinkers’ experiences limited to the hour of pleasure. I wish that we do not get drenched by this rain. Moreover, having regard also to the conditions in India we have no use whatever, for these artificial methods. Millions are ruined in health and have become weak in minds. If they start gratifying their passion as soon as it is aroused, there would be an end to all possibility of our progress. Some of the men who have been using these means are almost impotent. Cast a glance at the advertisements which appear in newspapers. I am writing all this from wide observation. I wrote the articles in Nitinashane Marge\(^2\) in reply to letters received every week from enfeebled students and teachers. The youth of India need justnow to learn the lesson of self-control, however painfully it may be. The condition of girls, too, is most extraordinary. How strange that a girl like . . . , brought up in the Ashram, only fifteen years old and weak in body, should express a desire to get married? How is it that a girl of her age feels passion? But the whole atmosphere in our society is unclean. From their very childhood boys and girls are fed on impure suggestions. I would never consent to teach such boys and girls that it was right and proper to yield to passion. But I will not dwell further on this subject. You will understand my views from what I have said.

---

\(^1\) The addressee had argued in favour of birth-control.

\(^2\) “Towards Moral Bankruptcy”.

Pyarelal is in Dhulia [jail] and Devdas in Gorakhpur [jail]. In the Dhulia jail, one may say that they have formed a society for the study of the \textit{Gita}, for Vinoba daily discourses on the work.

Since your health is good otherwise, I am not at all concerned at your having lost 17 lb. Weight is a factor in judging the state of one’s health only within certain limits. Jamnalalji has lost 25 lb. There is of course a difference between his condition and yours. You cannot afford to lose weight as liberally as he can.

I hear from time to time from Taramati and Dilip\textsuperscript{1}. I had asked them to come and see me. They were about to come, when I suddenly stopped seeing visitors. If the gates open again, I will repeat the invitation.

The \textit{Times} weekly gives every month a map of the stars visible in the sky at the time. All of you should have look at it. I myself have been watching the stars every night and enjoy the experience immensely. I have woken up in old age. But what harm can there be in waking up even on death-bed if watching the stars helps one to have a glimpse of the soul? My blessings to all who may see you.

\[PS.\]

The envelope in which this letter will be sealed was made by Sardar from the envelope in which your own letter was received. Making envelopes has become his occupation. Any addition to the country’s wealth is welcome.

\[From\ Gujarati\]

\textit{Bapuni Prasadi,} pp. 110-2

\[1\] The name is omitted in the source.

\[2\] Addressee’s son
27. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

June 18, 1932

CHI. SHARDA

It is bad thing to commit a mistake. That is why we should be ashamed of it. But having committed it, it is a good thing to ask to be forgiven. Hence what is there to be ashamed of in asking to be forgiven? It implies a determination not to repeat the mistake. Once this determination is there, why should one be ashamed? Have you understood this?

Why should truth and non-violence be compared? But, if one must make the comparison, I would say that truth is superior even to non-violence; for, falsehood too is violence. And he who loves truth is bound to turn to non-violence some day.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9950. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

28. LETTER TO DR. HIRALAL SHARMA

June 18, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

Shrimati Behn Amtussalaam sent me some time ago your pamphlets and the two volumes of your book, Light and Colour in the Medical World. I am grateful for your having treated Amtulbehn with extreme care and attention which she tells me you gave her. As for the literature on Light and Colour I can express no opinion, as I have no experience, worth the name, of this treatment.

As I have not much faith in drugs and as I believe in the great healing power of the sun, naturally I would love to find that the methods you are advocating are sound and can bear investigation. If under the restrictions in which I am living I can make any experiments, I shall do so.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, p. 8
29. PRAYER

June 19, 1932

Prayer is the very foundation of the Ashram. We should, therefore, clearly understand what it means. If it is not offered from the heart, it is no prayer at all. We rarely see anybody dozing while eating. Prayer is a million times more important than food. If anybody dozes at prayer time, his condition must be pitiable indeed. If we miss the prayer, we should feel deeply pained. We should not mind if we miss a meal, but we should never miss a prayer. Missing a meal is sometimes beneficial for health. Omitting prayer never is.

If any person dozes at the time of prayer, feels lazy or talks with his neighbours while the prayer is going on, does not fix his attention on it and lets his thoughts wander, he has as good as absented himself from it. His physical presence is mere show. he is, therefore doubly guilty; he has absented himself from the prayer and has deceived the people. To deceive means to act untruthfully, and, therefore, to violate the vow of truth.

If, however, anybody feels sleepy or bored against his will, what should he do? But this can never happen. If we run straight from the bed to the prayer meeting, we are bound to feel sleepy. Before going to the meeting, we should rouse ourselves fully and brush our teeth, and resolve to remain awake and alert. In the meeting we should not sit close to one another, should sit erect like a walking stick, breathe slowly and, if we can speak the words correctly, join in reciting the verses or singing the bhajans, silently to ourselves if not loudly. If we cannot do even this, we may go on repeating Ramanama. If we still cannot control our body, we should keep standing. No one, whether a grown-up person or a child, should feel shame in doing so. Grown-up persons should occasionally keep standing, even if they do not feel sleepy, in order to create an atmosphere in which nobody would feel ashamed of standing.

Everyone should make an effort and understand as soon as possible the meaning of what is recited or sung for prayer. Even if a person does not know Sanskrit, he should learn the meaning of each verse and meditate over it.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

1 This was sent along with “letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 16/19-6-1932; vide the following item.
30. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 16/19, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your packet on Tuesday. Read my reply¹ to Jethalal’s letter. I have not received his report. Send it by registered post. You have sent Hiralal Shastri’s² account of his “Jivankutir”, but it is not accompanied by any letter from him not do you mention anything in your letter. If you know, please tell me something about him. I have already written to you about Sitala Sahay. I hope you also got the postcard I wrote about Mahavir.

I send with this a letter for Medh. Manilal’s problem has become very complicated. I think we should now give up the hope of his coming.

About prayers, I intend to write a separate article, so that it may be useful to all. I, therefore, do not write anything about it in this letter. It will be enough if you are able to keep up the new rule which has been adopted.

The labourers should wear khadi, send their children, if they have any, to the Ashram school, give up smoking, but only if they can easily do so, should be free from the vice of drinking and, if they are staying on the Ashram premises, attend the morning or the evening prayer. It should not be enough if they wear khadi when in the Ashram but not outside. If they like spinning, they may spin, otherwise they need not. I think we should not lay down any other condition besides these. However, we should have faith that if we take interest in their lives, share their joys and sorrows, and care for their children, they will observe the other rules voluntarily and in the proper spirit. Just now, we should only explain to them the meaning and importance of those rules. If our company really has the power of improving them, Tulsidas’s assurance³ will not be proved false. We shall be tested, too. Up to now we have not looked upon labourers as our kith and kin. It is true that we have tried to be friendly with them,

² A constructive worker of Rajasthan, founder of the Vanasthali Vidyapith
³ About five minutes’ silence during prayer time
⁴ “The wicked are reformed in the company of the righteous.”
(Ramcharitamanasa—Balkanda)
but we have done so patronizingly. There has always been a feeling in us that we are in some way superior to them. The more I understand the truth, the more I realize at nobody is superior or inferior to others. And we cannot judge, we have no means at all of judging, who has more holy merit earned in past lives. Who can say whether the mustard seed or the mountain is superior? We don’t regard a thing as superior or inferior because of its size. Similarly, we cannot compare the relative worth of persons. I have, therefore, suggested the easiest rule—I should say, rather, that I have extracted it from Shastras—that everybody should regard himself as a cipher. We shall then never feel proud about ourselves. If you or anybody else, who has more practical experience of life than I, see any error in this reasoning of mine regarding labourers, please point it out to me. It will of course be difficult to act upon it. But there must be some difficulty in every attempt to do a good thing.

I feel that Dhiru and Kusum have returned much too quickly. There must be some reason why they did so. If you have been able to know it, tell me what it is. I had Dhiru’s letter from Ranavav last week, in which he had said that both of them kept good health and that their weight was improving. Hence I infer that they have returned so soon because something must have happened there which hurt them. I have already explained to you my reason for not writing “Blessings from” when signing the letters—it saves energy. My blessings must be assumed.

I think that Ba’s reply that the illness was caused by mangoes is not correct. Her attitude is that one should not eat mangoes at a difficult time like this, and she is right from her own point of view. She wishes in the depth of her heart that I also should feel in the same way, and the reason is her love for me. She has seen the fruit of the little self-control which I have exercised. In the past it used to trouble her and she could not even understand its aim, but gradually she realized its value. However, this time I have not excluded mangoes from my diet. Fresh fruit is essential in the diet experiment which I am making. I have always found that mangoes benefit me. Hence, when some mangoes were sent to me unasked, I did not object to eating them. The fact that I had no objection to eating mangoes become known and so parcels have been coming one after another. However, I don’t criticize Ba’s resolution not to eat mangoes.

If you begin mixing with the Chharas, do not give up the practice afterwards. If, however, you discover that the task is beyond your strength, you may give up the attempt. None the less I do believe that it is our duty to mix with them even at some sacrifice to ourselves. We should not try to mix with them in the hope that thereby we shall save ourselves from possible harassment by them. If we entertain any such hope, we shall not save ourselves. God will save us, if He wills. If He does not, we will welcome the harassment as His loving gift. We should regard it as our duty to mix with them because they are our neighbours. According to me, the person most qualified to make the attempt is panditji\(^1\). The first time we go in their midst, we should go singing Ramdhun. But it is necessary that Panditji should have faith in himself for this purpose. He can also take with him a party of children who will lead the procession. We can take up the job of teaching the Chhara children. We can help the Chharas who may fall ill. If we take up that work, one person should devote himself exclusively to it. We can help them in two ways in illness. In ordinary cases, we ourselves may treat the patients. If a case is beyond our skill, we may ask for help from doctors with whom the Ashram has connections, and I think they will be glad to give it.

Tell Chhakkaddas that I was so pleased with the slivers sent by him that I would not mind having more. I do not get here slivers of such fine cotton. If, therefore, he would like to send more, as he said he would, he may. I will not use them, for I don’t think I can spin yarn of 40 counts on the Magan spinning-wheel. I have not heard of anybody else either, who could do so. And slivers like those are too good for yarn of lower count. Mahadev requires at most 30 tolas of slivers every month, and there is no immediate need. he has enough slivers from the lot sent by Chhakkaddas to last for thirty days. After it is finished, Mahadev will surely try to spin with the slivers prepared here and see what count he can produce with them. I have stated all this only in order that Chhakkaddas may not think it necessary to work very hard and send the slivers immediately. And he may send them only if he can do so without any inconvenience. Chimanlal and you should consider independently whether Chhakkaddas should be put to all this trouble, and, if you think that he had made the offer merely through his goodness and that really it would be much trouble to him to send the slivers, do not convey my message to him. I send

\(^1\) Narayan M. Khare
with this Totaramji’s letter. Bhansali¹ is really very strong in his firmness. Where is Lilabehn², and what does she do? Has she kept up any connection with the Ashram? I did not get any letter from Ramnarayan Choudhari³. And now that the Ashram has been shifted to Wardha, he may even have courted arrest. if you have heard anything more about the matter, please let me know.

Where is Lalji⁴ working at present? Is there no yarn in Vijapur or Amreli? Does anyone on behalf of the Government stay in the Vidyapith? And does he use the buildings for any purpose? I hope Kanaiyalal has now completely recovered. You must have come to know that Damodardas is in serious difficulties.

I got your second letter while I was writing this. I had got a direct wire, too, about Devdas. I have sent a wire in return asking for more details. I have not received any reply to it so far.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8234. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

31. LETTER TO LAURI SAWYER⁵

June 19, 1932

MY DEAR LAURI,

Prof. Horace Alexander reminds me of your existence and tells me how weak you are. Of course I remember you perfectly. Weak in body you may be, but the very first time I met you I saw how strong you were in will. And if God wants more service from you in your present existence, He will give you sufficient strength of body. For those who have faith in God, life and death are alike. Ours is to

1 Professor Jaikrishnadas Prabhudas Bhansali
2 Bhansali’s sister-in-law, a widow
3 A prominent Congress leader of Rajasthan who assisted in editing Hindi Navajivan
4 Lalji K.Parmar, a Harijan student from Panchmahals.
5 Prefacing this, Mahadev Desai writes: “Among our many women helpers in England was Lauri Sawyer. She had suffered from cancer first and then from tuberculosis, but I have seen few girls so cheerful and bright as she was. Horace suggested that she was not likely to live very much longer Bapu should write her a letter. He therefore at once wrote to her...”; vide also “Letter to Horace G. Alexander”, 23-6-1932.
serve till the last breath. Do write to me when you can. Love from Mahadeo.

Yours,

BAPU

PS.

I write nothing about ourselves as you must know all there is to know.

32. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

June 19, 1932

I consider yours to be a scientific experiment, and therefore I have been watching you all along and have desired to follow your work in full detail. You are a seasoned worker and will encounter many more difficulties in the future. This is the usual pattern of every great work: once in a while we feel that the line is now clear and we shall be able to make rapid progress. We then relax a little, but all at once we notice a deep ditch in front of us. Therefore you must settle there permanently. The one thing needful is infinite patience with self-confidence at the root of it. Self-confidence means an unflinching faith in one’s work. Once this faith is acquired, there is no need to be anxious about the numerous errors we are unconsciously bound to commit from time to time. We must not permit ourselves to be paralysed by the fear that we are perhaps on the wrong path. I consider your experiment to be scientific, yet I think it is not perfectly scientific now; but your work shares in all the characteristics of a scientific experiment, and you have the patience needed in carrying it out. I had noticed one defect in you before, but I think you have remedied it intelligently. Or perhaps your devotion to truth has helped you to remedy it without being conscious of it. That defect was this: you were satisfied with incomplete data and drew hasty conclusions from them. But this is no longer the case. A scientific experimenter has profound confidence in himself and is therefore never down-hearted. At the same time he is so humble that he is never satisfied with his own work, and is not guilty of drawing hasty conclusions. On the other hand he measures his progress off and on and declares emphatically that the result of ‘x’ can be ‘y’ only. Our workers are generally lacking in this humility of the real man of science. I was therefore not surprised when I found that you were not an exception to this rule. But I do believe that you have the power of persevering till the end. Ardently wishing that you may not suffer even from this little limitation, I gently drew your attention to it many years ago. In order to succeed you must first collect a band of fellow-workers around you. They are bound to be gradually attracted to you in view of the work you are doing. In order to attract them you must cultivate the quality of tolerance springing from generosity. Co-workers cannot do everything that we are doing or we want them to do. But if they are well-intentioned and diligent, we should not despise their assistance. Only thus can we hope to build up a team. In the absence of such an accommodating Spirit some of us have to plough a lonely furrow.

---

1 The addressee had sent a report of his work among the poor of Anantapur, a village in Madhya Pradesh where he had been engaged in constructive work for the last three years.

One thing more about your work. You should cultivate a desire to take tips even from those who are working on other lines. It is a mistake to suppose that a scientific experiment can be performed in one particular manner, and those who fall into such error stand to lose a good deal. We for ourselves may follow a method which we think to be right or perfect, but if others do not recognize its perfection or notice defects in it, we should let them go their own way. We thus increase our power of comprehension.

I cannot say anything about your present method of work. As I am partial to you, it seems to be all right from here. But if I am able to see you actually at work, it is possible that many ideas would occur to me and I would place them before you for consideration. I cannot picture your work accurately from this distance. It would therefore be an impertinence to offer any suggestions.

[From Gujarati]

33. LETTER TO SHAMAL R. RAVAL

June 19, 1932

CHI. SHAMAL,

It will be well if the food which you eat suits you. The fact that you suffer from constipation indicates that you should eat boiled vegetables in good quantity.

34. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

June 19, 1932

BHAJ NANABHAI,

I have your letter. I got as much of Manilal’s letter as you have copied out and sent to me. If there is anything in the rest of the letter which may interest me, please make a copy and send it to me.

I also feel that, since Pragji refuses to shoulder the responsibility of Indian Opinion, Manilal should stay on [in South Africa]. He should not abandon it as long as he has confidence that he can run it. His first duty is to that paper. After all, we wish to do public service, no matter where. We should be satisfied if all of them are happy in South Africa. The fever which spread in Natal was of a deadly character. They have survived the present attack at any rate. I was happy at the news that Sushila and Sita were staying behind, thinking that they were bound to keep better health there. But does anybody know what he should rejoice at and what weep for? We should stop doing either.

Give my condolences to Dadasaheb Mahajani’s family.
Sardar and Mahadev send their regards.
How does Tara¹ spend her time?

Blessings from

BAPU

35. LETTER TO PUNJABHAI H. SHAH ²

June 19, 1932

You write well indeed. You have made the best use of your life. One whose aim in life is service and who remains in that state of mind till death may be said to have made the best use of one’s life. Narandas informs me that you fainted once again. One day you will

¹ Addressee’s daughter
² The co-worker, who had helped Gandhiji to acquire the land on which the Sabarmati Ashram was subsequently built, was ill at this time and died in October 1932. For Gandhiji’s reminiscences of him, vide “Long Live Punjabhain”, 23-10-1932.
fall into eternal sleep as a result of such an attack. Welcome it when it comes.

[From Gujarati]
_Mahadevbhaini Diary_, Vol. I., p. 233

36. LETTER TO A CHILD

_June 19, 1932_

Generally people do not like to clean utensils or lavatories. We, therefore, get such work done by members of certain communities. This is wrong. Anybody, therefore, who does such work for the good of the world does service through it.

[From Gujarati]
_Mahadevbhaini Diary_, Vol. I, p. 233

37. A LETTER

_June 19, 1932_

He alone is a lover of truth who follows it in all conditions of life. Nobody is forced to tell lies in business or in service. One should not accept a job which does so, even if one starves in consequence.

[From Gujarati]
_Mahadevbhaini Diary_, Vol. I, pp. 231-2

38. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

_June 20, 1932_

MY DEAR BHHRR,

You can’t disappoint me even if you try. You may not therefore allow such a thought to depress you. You have simply to dance when Raihana’s sings. We are all glad you seem to be nearing 1 The addressee had sought Gandhiji’s advice on an alternative to his job of a cloth merchant’s assistant which obliged him to tell lies.

---

2 This was a form of greeting between Gandhiji and the addressee.

3 The addressee, being unable to court imprisonment again, had written: “Need I say there is hardly a minute of my conscious hours when I am not thinking of you and your companions and wondering how much I am disappointing you.” (_Mahadevbhaini Diary_,

4 Addressee’s daughter

---

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
the end of earthly troubles.

Please send my salaams to the Hamid Alis. I am sure they do not think you have spoilt their holiday by giving yourself well deserved rest on that beautiful hill. You will be surprised to know that I have never been there.

Our love to you.

Yours,
BHRRR

From a photostat: S.N. 9578

39. LETTER TO PRINCESS EFY ARISTARCHI

June 20, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I continue to receive your kind messages. The latest brings the news of your financial worries. My prayers are certainly with you. Those who walk in the fear of God do not fear financial or any other losses. They often come to the godfearing as blessings in disguise. May this trouble be so with you. Your faith and fortitude should cheer your aged mother.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]

You know the next part of the beautiful verse you have quoted from an Upanishad. It means “Enjoy the world by renouncing it.” How apposite!

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 238

40. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

June 20, 1932

Who can say whether it is better for him or her to remain ill or to enjoy good health? Haven’t you heard the story of Nala and Damayanti? Nala was very handsome. To save him, God ordered a cobra named Karkotaka to bite him and make him ugly. As the cobra bit Nala, the latter became nervous. But in the end he realized that it

1 “Everything in this universe is pervaded by God.”
2 Ishopanishad, 1
was divine providence. I think that is exactly so in your case. You should, therefore, go on trying remedies to cure your illness, but never feel that the illness is a misfortune. Whatever your state of health, you should sing and dance and serve Mother.¹

My sermon is over. You should keep smiling. No matter what happens. If you have surrendered your all to God, your body is His, not yours. The disease, too, is suffered by Him, not by you. Why, then, should you feel unhappy? I shall have to try to understand the meaning of the ghazal ² which you have translated into Gujarati. You think you have got an intelligent pupil. Your eyes will open in a short time. Why should an intelligent person become anybody’s pupil? And particularly a pupil of a teacher like you? It doesn’t matter, therefore. I am what you deserve. Or, rather, you are what I deserve. Who can say whether you chose me as a pupil or I put you in the chair as my teacher?

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 239-40

41. LETTER TO ROHINIBEHN DESAI

June 20, 1932

CHI. ROHINI³,

I got your and Surbala’s letters. What a coincidence that I got your and Hamida’s letters almost at the same time! Next time you feel inspired to write, tell me how you spent your time in jail.

I hope uncle’s health is all right now. Our blessings to both you sisters.

BAPU

SMT. ROHINIBEHN
C/O SIT. KANJIHBHAI DESAI
GOPIPURA, SURAT

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2657

¹ Gandhiji wrote this paragraph in Urdu; the source has it transliterated into Gujarati.
² A lyric in Urdu or Persian
³ Daughter of Kanaiyalal Desai
42. LETTER TO HANUMANPRASAD PODDAR

June 21, 1932

In answering question on spiritual matters it is an advantage to keep in mind the particular inquirer¹. To write for newspapers is a difficult task for me. My mind has turned almost blank upon learning that you have asked the questions with a view to publish them in Kalyan. It does not mean that the public gains nothing from what I write for the papers. I am simply explaining my own point of view. That is why I have reiterated many a time in Young India that it was not a journal for me but a weekly letter meant for friends. And the spiritual matters discussed in Young India and Navajivan have been almost invariably written with a certain individual in view. It has a reason behind it. I am not well-versed in the Shastras. Although I make use of reasoning often enough the mainspring of my talks and writings is not the intellect but the heart. And the outpourings of the heart cannot be presented in the form of an essay . . . .

Finding no alternative expression I had used “Disciplined faith”.² But it does not express all I mean and at present no other expression occurs to my mind. What is meant is that faith should not be ignorant, devoid of discrimination and blind. For example in a matter where reasoning too applies someone asserts, “I take resort to faith and shall persist in doing so no matter what the reason indicates.” There is no discipline in this kind of faith. To determine whether the earth is round or flat is a matter of intellect. Despite this someone may say that his faith suggests the earth to be flat. This is not disciplined faith.

[From Hindi]

¹ The addressee in an earlier letter had asked Gandhiji to narrate some incidents of his life which had awakened and strengthened his faith in God, to which Gandhiji replied on May 23, 1932 and inquired if the question had been put with a view to using the answer in Kalyan, a Hindi journal on religious matters published by the addressee.

² The addressee had requested an explanation of the expression “Sanyamamayi Shradda” used by Gandhiji in his letter May 23, 1932. Mahadev Desai in his diary has reproduced the letter in Gujarati though the original must have been in Hindi. The expression “disciplined faith”, however, does not appear in the fragment of the text reproduced in the published diary.
43. A LETTER

June 21, 1932

A craving for things of beauty is perfectly natural. Only there is no absolute standard of beauty. I have therefore come to think that the craving is not to be satisfied, but that from the craving for things outside of us, we must learn to see beauty from within. And when we do that, a whole vista of beauty is opened out to us and the love appropriation vanishes. I have expressed myself clumsily, but I hope you follow what I mean. . .

The purpose of life is undoubtedly to know oneself. We cannot do it unless we learn to identify ourselves with all that lives. The sum total of that life is God. Hence the necessity of realizing God living within every one of us. The instrument of this knowledge is boundless selfless service.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 242-3

44. LETTER TO RAMESHWARADAS PODDAR

June 21, 1932

CHI. RAMESHWARADAS.

I forgot to send a reply to your letter with this week’s post. Do not yield to your ignorant love and every harm the good of Shriram. Go to Kashi or Kangri from time to time and see him. What other freedom will Vinoba permit you? Remember to what distant places Kamalnayan wanders one after another. Parents have no right whatever to harm the interests of their children. If you have heard more about Shivaji, Dattu, Shankarrao and others, let me know. The distinction that is made between a diet of cereals and pulses and a fruit diet has no value. From both physical and spiritual points of view, some of the cereals and pulses may be more wholesome than fruit in certain circumstances. Ground-nut, though it is classed as a fruit, is harmful in almost every disease, whereas rice, though a cereal, can always be eaten in a limited quantity. Anybody who wishes to control his senses may keep himself alive on rice, but groundnut is likely to be harmful to him. You may be sure that, for your health *pendas*¹ will be extremely harmful. Instead of eating a full meal in the evening consisting of rice, dal, rotlis and vegetables, if you take a little fruit, such as *munakkas*², oranges, pomegranates or any other juicy fruit, that will certainly be much lighter. Considered as foods, however, there is no difference between cereals and fruit. The distinction between them seems to have been invented by Vaishnavas³ who could not conquer the palate and wished to deceive themselves and God. Having been born in a Vaishnava family myself, I am writing this from experience. Just as we make a poultice of linseed or wheat flour, in the same manner earth should be moistened and wrapped in a piece of cloth in the form of a bandage, which should then be bound round the abdomen. This should always be done on an empty stomach. Binding the pack in this manner when the stomach is full does harm and causes stomachache. Meditating on the Gita means meditating on the meaning of any verse or phrase from it.

1 The addressee was a co-worker of Muriel Lester. She had asked why we crave to see and enjoy beautiful things and what the purpose of life was.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 182

45. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

June 21, 1932

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I got your letter. I had obtained permission for both of you to come and see me and was about to write to you, when an order was issued barring Mirabehn from seeing me. I thought it my duty not to see other visitors if I could not see her, and so I stopped the interviews. I am still trying to get the order barring Mirabehn withdrawn. Hence I did not write to you immediately. I assumed that you must have heard about the order against her. I think you know that last time I had stopped seeing visitors our account of the Naoroji sisters, and so I thought you would draw the necessary inference. I had obtained permission for you to see me not in your capacity as a bone-setter but as a friend. Of course, if you had come you would have examined my elbow, and if you had then thought daily massaging of the arm necessary I would have had to obtain special permission for that. How could I make it a principle not to let you do such service to me? I

¹ A sweet made out of milk
² A large variety of dried grapes, dark brown in colour
³ Devotees of Vishnu would certainly be happy if your touching my arm could cure the pain. But it is true that I would prefer, though not as a matter of principle, to leave the responsibility of calling in a doctor from outside to the Government. But such a necessity has not arisen in this case. The condition of the arm has not become hopelessly bad. Mahadev does message the arm as well as he can with the help of your book. Major Mehta has joined here as a doctor on special duty. He is trying electric shocks. If these measures have no effect and the doctors here confess their failure, the question of calling in help from outside will naturally arise and then you will be able to come in your capacity as a bone-setter even though I may not be seeing any visitors. I have always fully understood your love for me and, therefore, will not feel the slightest hesitation in accepting any service from you. I would even request it if I need it. At which place is the hymn “Lead, Kindly Light”, to be sung? Or will you two sing it every Friday in your home? If you sing it in your home and if no English friends are present, I suppose you know that the Ashram Bhajanavali contains a Gujarati translation1 of the hymn in case you wish to use it. You may sing it if you like it. Here we sing that. Is Father Elwin with you at present or is he still in the Ashram? You had mentioned a special oil for the message. If, apart from the massage, the oil itself has an effect, send a little of it. I hope both of you are well. Are three of us are quite happy.

Blessings to you both from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7549. Also C.W. 5024. Courtesy: Tehmina Kambhatta

46. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 22, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter came in yesterday.

I am defeated. I have taken milk and baker’s bread and therefore salt also. Major Bhandari will not let me make experiments that might endanger health. And he thought it was time for me to take milk and bread, also fruit. He is of opinion that absence of salt must

1 “Premal Jyoti” by Narasinhrao Divetia reduce weight and that I cannot afford to lose. I succumbed. The saltless experiment I must reserve for future day. I am none the worse for the brief experiment, if I am not better. I have made certain observations. But they are of no value as they are based on much too short-lived an experiment. You will tell me of your experiment, if you have made further discoveries.

Your previous letter\(^1\) I have sent to the Government in confirmation of my letter\(^2\). Let us see what happens.

You asked what the electrical treatment was. It is called high frequency—it consists in rubbing with a flat glass bulb charged with violet rays. Exposure to the early morning sun should serve the same purpose except [for] this [that the] instrumental rays are hot.

Then you asked about the Ashram history. I am trying to deal with every phase of the Ashram activities. But the work is proceeding very slowly. Somehow or other I do not give it some time every day. And as yet, I have not felt like giving it resolutely one hour daily. However, if I am here long enough, the history will, God willing, be certainly finished.

Damodardas has written. He seems to have been hurt by that last conversation you had under his roof. I have asked him to talk to you about it. But you will yourself ask him what hurt him. I know you could have no intention of hurting him. I have begged of him to give up speculation altogether and be satisfied with a humble life. Davdas has enteric though of a mild type. You should write to him. His address is District Jail, Gorakhpur, U.P.

I do not suppose you have noticed that “The valiant only taste of death but once” has a deeper meaning conveying the perfect truth according to the Hindu conception of salvation.\(^3\) It means freedom from the wheel of birth and death. If the world ‘valiant’ may be taken to mean those who are strong in their search after God, they die but once, for they need not be reborn and put on the mortal coil.

The weather here at this time of the year is always cool. We, too, had showers.

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 16-6-1932.
\(^3\) According to The Diary of Mahadev Desai, the addressee “very much liked Bapu’s description of life as preparation for death, and quoted Shakespeare: ‘Cowards die many times before their deaths, / The valiant only taste of death but once.’ She thought these lines did not convey Bapu’s idea”.

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 193
My congratulations to Shantabai on her taking up the wheel again.

I am glad you are mothering Tilak. He needs it. Of course Noorbhanu is very good to him, but he does not speak enough Hindi to be able to talk to her to his heart’s content. And Noorbanu cannot give him what you can. Of course you will try to see her and Pyare Ali.

Yes, I wrote to Narandas suggesting five minutes’ silence. I forgot to write to you about it. I am not doing it here. It is unnecessary here and for you it is impracticable. The rapid repetition of Ramanama in a new assembly is undoubtedly good. For very rapid repetition, mere Ram, Ram, Ram Ram . . . is often used. If it is done with proper cadence, the effect is ecstatic. Yes, we get up at 3.40. The prayer at 4 and 7.30.

My love to Nargis and Jal. I am glad the former has so improved. I do not remember the name Hilla Petit. I may have met her.

I am glad Gulab and Manilal have seen you. Tell them to write to me. I do not need the ghee now.

I hope you are not overworking yourself.

Love from us all.

BAPU

[PS.]

You know that the Quaker practice during silence does not require the closing of the eyes. In that case the difficulty about the me is overcome. But for you all this is needless.

From the original: C.W. 6226. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9692

47. LETTER TO TILAKAM

June 22, 1932

She is a pure soul with an infinite capacity for self-sacrifice.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 425

1 A student at the Ashram
2 Wife of Pyare Ali
3 Mirabehn
48. LETTER TO SHANTABEHN G. PATEL

June 22, 1932

CHI. SHANTA,

I hear from Bhaktibehn\(^1\) that you intend to come to see Narasinhbhai\(^2\), in the beginning to July. Whenever you come, see Bhaktibehn too. When you see Narasinhbhai give him my regards. I don’t ask him just now to see me, and he controls his desire to come and see me as an example to others. I have read most of the books sent by you. Now they are being read by the women.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. SHANTABEHN NARASINHBHAI
C/O GORDHANDAS P. PATEL, ESQ.
POONA CITY\(^3\)

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5229

49. LETTER TO HORACE G. ALEXANDER

June 23, 1932

MY DEAR HORACE,

I have your two letters. It was just like you to remind me about Lauri. I remember her quite well. She appealed to me at once as a beautiful character. And then it was Charlie who, I think, brought her to me. I wrote to her at once and sent my letter\(^4\) by air mail. At least I asked the authorities to send it so and wrote it in time for the air mail. I know that she is brave enough to face all the illnesses that may be in store for her and death.

We are all three keeping well and quite fit. Mahadev and I pass the time spinning, reading, writing; Sardar in reading and envelope-making out of scraps of paper that come to us by chance. I call this healthy wealth-production in the name of and for the sake of all.

I wanted to write to you earlier, but somehow or other it escaped me. You will be pleased to learn that at the Ashram the minute of

---

1. Wife of Darbar Gopaldas
2. Addressee’s father
3. The letter was addressed by Gandhiji to Patidar Karyalaya, Anand, from where it was redirected to this address.
silence has been increased to five minutes. From the letters I was getting from the Ashram I saw that the concentrated labours of the inmates made them high-strung and therefore I felt that it was likely that those who were not used to such concentrated work might not be able to follow the prayer with required serenity. If therefore they had five minutes' unbreakable silence to compose themselves and put themselves in tune with the Infinite, the prayer would be more fruitful. This was introduced now nearly a month ago or a little longer. And Narandas tells me that the silence has done much good.

I have not yet got Charlie’s book. I expect it every week. We constantly think of you all at the Settlement. It was happy time you gave me at Selly Oak. Olive is a great reminder to us all in faithful devotion and utter cheerfulness in spite of frail condition. Mahadev says he does remember the conversation she had with him and many other sweet things at Woodbrooke. We both wish her many more years of loving service.

With love from us all to the whole family,

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1413

50. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

June 23, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

Yours is the first letter I see. The figure of four is written differently in Hindi and in Gujarati—4 [in Gujarati] 4 and [in Hindi]. I am glad that you are learning verses from the Gīta by heart. Pronounce the words correctly. And also try to understand the meanings of the verses.

BAPU

1 Woodbrooke Settlement, the Quaker centre near Birmingham
2 Addressee’s wife who was an invalid
51. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

June 23, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I had no fear or anxiety about Kamal’s illness. Children often get fever etc. If they do not fall into the clutches of ill-informed doctors and if the parents do not, through ignorant love, go on loading their stomachs with food, most of them recover without any medicine. Children have the vitality to recover from illness and regain strength sooner than grown-up people. You should ask those who used formerly to attend the Ramayana classes but do not do so now, the reason why they do not attend them, not with a view to pressing them to attend but in order that, if they point out any defect in your manner of explaining, you may remove it. You may, if you wish, read Saket to all who attend. But my suggestion was not that. It was that you should teach selected portions from the work to those who had made some advance in the study of Hindi, so that, when their interest was aroused in it, they might read the work by themselves and bring their difficulties to you.

Anasakti certainly means freedom from attachment to anything concerning oneself and one’s relations, but also such deep attachment to the ‘other’, that is, to Truth, to God, so much so that one must lose oneself in Him, become one with Him. It is because we do not understand this that our enthusiasm wanes and other difficulties arise. You have used the word nirutsaha as a noun. Mahadev immediately pointed out to me that it is an adjective. I told him that you had used it as a noun and that you were not likely to make such a mistake. But he told me that you had made a mistake. So we consulted a small Hindi dictionary which we have and found that it gives the word as an adjective. Solve this problem.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7503. Also C.W. 4980. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

---

1. An epic in Hindi by Maithilisharan Gupta
2. Meaning ‘wanting in enthusiasm’; it is also an abstract noun meaning ‘want of enthusiasm’ but seldom used as such.
52. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

June 23, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

Among the Urdu books, are there two volumes by Nadvi? He wrote something in continuation of Shibli’s work. Perhaps the author’s name on the cover of the book will be Maulana Sulaiman Nadvi.

About fish, I have not made an exception in your favour. Though cod-liver oil is forbidden for us, I have allowed it in the Ashram. Meat and fish are forbidden in the Ashram itself, but they are not forbidden to individuals, cannot be. I at any rate have never forbidden them to anyone. That is why Imam Saheb was permitted to eat them outside the Ashram. Suppose it was Narandas and not you. He was never touched meat, etc., in all his life. But suppose he fell seriously ill and his life was in danger, and he wished to save it by eating meat. I would certainly not prevent him from eating it. Today he knows my views and also what dharma teaches. But the approach of death may change one’s ideas. If at such a time, anyone wishes to eat meat, it would be my dharma not to prevent him from doing so. But suppose it is a child and I have to decide for it. I would let it die but not give it meat. Do you know that Ba once passed through such an ordeal? Most probably the incident is described in the Autobiography. If you do not know about it, nor does anybody else, write to me and I will narrate it. It was a blessed occasion for both Ba and me. Do you now understand my meaning? I don’t wish to urge you to eat fish. If by not taking it you are likely to die and you are ready for that, I am ready to let you die. Even if eating fish enables you to live longer, will not the end be death? But, then, dharma is for one who has faith in it and is ready to follow it. Do I follow such dharma in my own life in regard to milk? I do not, though it is clear to me as daylight that one should not drink the milk of any animal. Such principles of dharma however are not meant to be enforced in the lives of others. One should follow them in one’s own life. I think I have said enough.

Let me know what your present diet includes, with the quantity of each item. If I feel like suggesting a change, I will.

1 Vide “An Autobiography”.
Your questions about men and women are good.

We should explain to a child any matter about which it shows curiosity, if we know the answer. Otherwise, we should admit our ignorance. If we think the child’s question should not be answered, we should restrain it and also tell it not to ask others. In any case, we should never give an evasive reply. Children know more about these things than we think they do. If we refuse to tell them what they do not know, they learn to satisfy their curiosity in improper ways. We should, however, take that risk and not tell them what we think they ought not to be told. There are, of course, very few such things. If they want to know about the obscene act, we should certainly not satisfy their curiosity. Don’t mind if they learn the facts in a clandestine manner despite our forbidding it.

If children see birds engaged in the sex-act and want to understand what it means, I would certainly satisfy their curiosity and use the opportunity to teach them the lesson of brahmacharya. I would teach them the distinction between man on the one hand and birds and beasts on the other. All the men and women who act in the same manner are, despite their human form, like birds and beasts in that particular respect. There is no condemnation of anyone in this; it is only a statement of fact. We have been granted the human form and our intelligence so that we may rise above our animal nature.

All the facts about menstruation should be explained to a girl who has reached puberty; if a younger girl comes to know about the phenomenon and asks you about it, you may explain to her, too, as many facts as she can understand.

Despite all our precautions, children will not always remain ignorant about these facts. Hence, it would be better to impart that knowledge to them at the proper time. If brahmacharya is so frail a thing that a person who know the facts about sex cannot observe it, we have no use for such brahmacharya. The knowledge of these facts should strengthen one’s brahmacharya. That is what happened in my case.

The motives for seeking or imparting this knowledge differ from person to person. One person may seek it in order to gratify his lust. Another may learn the facts without his showing any curiosity about the subject. A third person may seek the knowledge in order to calm his passions and to help others.

One should impart this knowledge to others only if one is fit for the job. You should have that ability, and also the confidence that by imparting it to the girls you will not awaken sex-thoughts in them. You should remember all the time that you impart this knowledge to the girls in order that they may not be disturbed by such thoughts. If you yourself are not free from them you should take care that they do not disturb you while you are imparting this knowledge to the girls.

The primary aim behind the partnership in life of man and woman as husband and wife is physical enjoyment. Hinduism has tried to teach in its place the practice of self control, or say, rather that all religions have done so.

If the husband is Brahma, Vishnu and Maheshwar, so is the wife. A wife is not a servant; she is a friend with equal rights, a partner in dharma. Each is the guru of the other.

A daughter’s share should be equal to a son’s.

A husband and a wife have equal rights in what either earns. The husband earns with the wife’s help, even if she does no more than cook for the family. She is not a servant, but is an equal partner.

A wife has the right to live separately from her husband if he ill-treats her.

The two have equal rights over the children. After the children have grown up, neither of them has any. If the wife is unfit to exercise her right, she loses it. And so does the husband.

In sum, I do not admit any differences between men and women except those created by Nature which all of us can see. I don’t think now that I have left any of your questions on this subject unanswered.

I have the fullest trust in Narandas. When he says that his mind is at peace, I would not believe that it is not so. I have cautioned him again and again. I will harass him no more from this distance. He has great capacity for working in a spirit of non-attachment. Such a person always works much more than another who is attached to his work, and yet seems to be doing no work. He is the last person to tire. Really speaking, he should never feel tired, but that is only an ideal. Since you are on the spot, your duty will be different from mine if you observe that his mind is not at peace and that he is deceiving himself. In that case you ought to caution him. I, too, would do that if I were there and found that the evidence of my eyes contradicted what he said. If he disagrees with you and rejects your advice, you should accept what he says, so long as you believe that he is a truthful man. Very often our eyes, too, deceive us. If I think that you feel depressed but you contradict me, I must believe you. If I have reason to fear or suspect that you are trying to hide the fact from me, then it would be a different matter. In that case, I should not ask you. I would have to seek other means of discovering the truth. The Ashram life, however, cannot go on thus. Truth is the very foundation of that life. There even with a good motive one cannot deceive others.

You will read about khadi either in my letter¹ to Narandas or in the letter to children.

Ask Narandas and know from him why he does not try an oil massage.

By all means wait for 4th July². But, then, 4th July of which year is a matter for speculation. It doesn’t matter which year, though. It is much even if only the month and the date are known for certain. We won’t have to wait, then, for some other month or date. After 4th July has passed, we shall wait in patience for the July of 1933.

BAPU

[PS.]

Vidya seems to require attention. I think she is dull. She does not even know how to ask questions. Look into this.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10291. Also C.W. 6739. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

53. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

June 23, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

You should learn how to write a letter. Your questions make no sense. you should show your letters to Premabehn.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9431. Courtesy: Ravindra R.Patel

54. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

June 23, 1932

Harilal’s glass is always red. He goes about drunk and begs from people. He holds out threats to Bali and Manu. Even in this, his motive is to force Bali to give him money. To me also he has written letters holding out very insolent threats. He has threatened that he will

¹ Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 22/26-6-1932.
² It had been predicted at that time that Gandhiji would be released on this date.
file a suit against Bali for control of Manu. I don’t feel hurt by all this. I only feel pity for him, and smile too. There are many other people like him. What about them? shouldn’t I feel for them as much as I do for Harilal? They all obey their nature. What else can they do? If we behave in the right manner towards Harilal, he will come round in the end. I think I am not a little responsible for what he is. When he was conceived, I lived in ignorance. The years when he grew up were a time of self-indulgence. I certainly did not drink, but Harilal has made up for that. I sought my pleasure only with one woman. Harilal seeks his with many. It is only a difference of degree, not of kind. I should therefore, alone for my sinful life, and that means self-purification. It is an extremely slow process. . . .

From here, I get certain reform introduced in the Ashram. I am taking advantage of Narandas’s unquestioning faith, his purity of heart, his firmness, his habits of hard work and his competence.

[From Gujarati]

_Mahadevbhaini Diary_, Vol. I, pp. 245

55. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

_June 24, 1932_

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

All or most of you write to me on sheets taken out from exercise books. That is not right. It means waste of paper and slovenliness. You should use other writing paper.

In permitting Premabehn to eat fish if she wants to do so, I have shown regard for non-violence. I have discussed this my letter to Premabehn. Read it. She will come to feel love for fish only if she can think independently. I have observed this in many persons with whom I came into contact. If you are not convinced even after reading this as well as my letter to Premabehn, you may ask me again.

Those of you who still feel sleepy during prayer should stand up without feeling shy. Even if they do a few pranayamas sitting, the sleepiness would go. One cannot sleep while doing _pranayama_.

I have already told you that I cannot write anything from here

---

1 The letter also informed the addressee about the telegram sent to the Governor of U.P.; _vide_ “Telegram to Sir Malcom Hailey”, 18-6-1932.

3 Breathing exercises for Madhpudo'.

I cherish the ideal of service for the Ashram children when they grow up. God will give suitable field of service to all who have faith in Him, and will also give sufficient strength to each to shine in the work which is given to him. God looks after the material and spiritual well-being of His bhaktas (the Gita, IX. 22, X. 10). You are making slow but steady progress in reading and writing. Those of you who are keen can improve their knowledge still further. But your intelligence will grow in proportion as you do all physical work with proper attention. A child may learn to read and write and still remain mentally dull. If you do not understand this fully, ask me to explain again. Do not feel dissatisfied even in your hearts with the present arrangement. Do this. Use your intelligence in doing everything which you are asked to do. Even cleaning a lavatory requires great intelligence. If you do not know how, ask me.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/II

56. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

June 24, 1932

CHI. MANU. I got your letter. Your handwriting is improving now. For increasing your weight, you should do exercise in open air and include sufficient milk and ghee in your diet. How much milk do you get? If I can say everything I wish to in a short letter, why should I write a long one?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5759. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

57. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

June 24, 1932

CHI. SHARDA, You must know that what is true about the peacock is also true about us. Even men and women who have been beautiful are not a 1 Literally, 'beehive'; a handwritten magazine brought out by the Ashram boys and girls.

2 Devotees
3 Son of Valji G. Desai
4 The addressee had stated in her letter that a peacock which had died in the Ashram looked as ugly in death as it had been beautiful in life.
pleasant sight after death, and we cremate them without delay. Hence, we should not be attached to bodies.

There is no hatred in complaining about anyone’s lapses in discharging the duties laid down by one’s superior. But the person at fault should be tenderly warned.

The expression *sahadharmacharini*¹ basically does mean what you say. But in ordinary language it is used only for a wife. When a sister gets married, she does not stay with her brother. The expression charini has the implication of life-long adherence. And when a particular meaning comes to be attached to a word, it becomes difficult to change it. Nor is it necessary. You are comfortable remaining alone. Look after your health.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9950. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

58. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 24, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

You should not feel ashamed to carry pen and inkpot to the class. You should feel proud. But if you do not like to do that, you can certainly carry a pencil.

I intentionally selected sandy land for the Ashram because only such land can be considered good for health. If one works hard and intelligently, one can grow any fruit or flower in the rockiest soil. On our soil we can grow any fruit that the climate of the place permits.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11098. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

¹ Literally, ‘partner in dharma’; the addressee had asked why the expression could not be applied to a sister also, if she joined her brother in the practice of dharma.
60. A LETTER

June 24, 1932

I got your long letter. According to me, the idea of anybody being possessed by a ghost is nothing but superstition. The countless millions don’t feel thus. We don’t find such a thing everywhere in the world. But whether we find it or not, you should trust entirely in God. He is the magic and the mantra and everything else for us. You should, therefore, go on repeating Ramanama. Whatever is decreed for you will happen. You should cultivate the strength to bear it. Then let events take what course they will.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bhavnagar Samachar, 17-12-1955

1 A part of the letter is already reproduced in, though under the date June 25, 1932.
2 According to the source the letter was addressed to a member of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta’s family.
3 Incantation
61. HOW TO OBSERVE AHIMSA

June 25, 1932

Can we kill a snake? Can we use violence against a ruffian attempting to rape a woman? Can we plough a field, though knowing that we kill germs thereby? A votary of ahimsa need not concern himself with such problems. Let them solve themselves when they will. If we lose ourselves in this labyrinth, we shall forget ahimsa.

Those who are sincere in their desire to follow ahimsa will examine their own hearts and look at their neighbours. If one finds ill will and hatred in one’s heart, one may know that one has not climbed the first step towards the goal of ahimsa. If a person does not observe ahimsa in his relations with his neighbours and his associates, he is thousands of miles away from ahimsa.

A votary of ahimsa, therefore, should ask himself every day when retiring: “Did I speak harshly today to any co-worker? Did I give him inferior khadi for myself? Did I give him imperfectly baked roti and reserve for myself a fully baked one? Did I shirk my duty and throw the burden on my co-worker? Did I neglect serving the neighbour who was ill today? Did I refuse water to a thirsty passer-by who asked for it? Did I not care even to greet the guest who had arrived? Did I scold a labourer? Did I go on exacting work from him without thinking that he might be tired? Did I goad bullocks with spiked sticks? Did I get angry in the kitchen because the rice was half cooked?” All these are forms of intense violence. If we do not observe ahimsa spontaneously in such daily acts, we shall never learn to observe it in other fields and, if at all we seem to observe it, our ahimsa will be of little or no value. Ahimsa is a great force which is active every moment of our lives. It is felt in our every action and thought. He who takes care of his pennies may rest assured that his pound is safe. But he who does not take care of pennies will lose them, and as for the pound he never had it.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 22/26-6/1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 22/26-6-1932.
62. LETTER TO NATHURAM TRIKAMDAS

June 25, 1932

BHAI NATHURAM,

The use of temples and choras\(^1\) is well known. The people would assemble in these places, sing bhajans, hold meetings, etc., and that was the purpose which they were intended to serve.

The question whether image-worship is necessary does not arise, since it has always existed and will continue to exist. Every human being is not an image-worshipper, of course. It may be desirable to make changes in the Vaishnava rituals of worship.

God exists everywhere, and therefore, He exists in the image too. I believe that destruction of image-worship is impossible.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

63. LETTER TO BH AU PANSE

June 25, 1932

CHI. BH AU,

One hundred and ninety-eight rounds in half an hour is great speed indeed. The sight must be worth watching.

Anybody who aspires to do service must possess truthfulness, humility, single-minded devotion, etc., and observe brahmacharya. If the question, however is what things he must learn to do, it is one which is difficult to answer. One cannot know too many things. The only rule is that one must become totally absorbed in any duty that falls to one’s share, or that one should acquire proficiency in one’s chosen field of service. It is difficult to say more than this. If the question is, what type of work is the best form of service in the present condition of the country, it is easy to answer and I have often answered it in the past.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. Also C.W. 4471 Courtesy: Bhau Panse

\(^1\) Public meeting-places in villages
64. LETTER TO NIRMALABEHN GANDHI

June 25, 1932

If the oil from which you put drops into Babu’s ears is first boiled with garlic, it will probably be more beneficial.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhai Diary, Vol. I, p. 255

65. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

June 25, 1932

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Prabudas’s good lies in allowing him to stay where he is. I do not know anything about his going to Almora but it will be best if Talwalkar goes and sees the place. If he likes it, we can see whether we can use it. I do not even know how big it is. But Dr. Talwalkar, if he goes there, can see other places too, and then make his plans.

I am writing to Hirji Mistri. Did Vijapur suit Chimanlal? Tell him to write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32865

66. LETTER TO LAKSHMINARAYAN GADODIA

June 25, 1932

BHAII LAKSHMINARAYANJI,

I was very glad to receive your letter.

Interviews are not allowed at present. There is little hope of the restriction being relaxed.

I hope that you both are in good spirits. Your love ever recurs to my mind.

We three are doing well. The time is spent in reading and spinning.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5623

1 Wife of Ramdas Ghandi
2 Addressee’s son
CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your packet. I examined the account sent by you. I think it is all right. Only, it does not include the information about the total number of hours given to each type of work. Do you wish to keep a record of that? The slips received from the inmates will of course contain the information. If you intend to paste them in a book, we shall be able to get any information we want and whenever we want it. If only one person enters all the information, I think he will take at least one hour. Though such an arrangement would make the work very easy, I do think that, if one person dictated and another took down, that would save time, even taking into account the time spent by both. But I can see even from the record of three days that the time spent in this work will not be wasted. If anybody has shown less than nine hours in his slip, it would be better if he also explains in it the reason. A slip will be a mine of information for us. Let this suffice for the present.

This is what I feel about the Giri family: This responsibility has come to us unsought. Dalbahadurgiri’s sacrifice was very great. When he died, he asked Krishnamaiyadevi to go and live in the Ashram; so great was the trust that he put in us. Nobody else would have supported her. The Congress there did nothing, or could do nothing. If I had begged from friends on her behalf, I would have got enough help. But I did not think it necessary. The affairs of the Ashram are planned on the assumption that every inmate who works for nine hours a day would earn his food and clothes. If, therefore, Krishnamaiyadevi lived in the Ashram, I calculated that it would not be necessary to beg specially on her account. We regard it as our duty to support her only so long as she lives in the Ashram. After all these years, she expressed a desire to leave. Krishnamaiyadevi, Maha-vir, and Dharmakumar, all of them kept bad health. Maitri, too, was not very strong either. Krishnamaiyadevi, therefore, had sufficient reason for wishing to leave. In deciding whether or not we should pay the expenses of the family, it would be irrelevant and unfair to think of its many shortcomings. Persons who have nothing in them besides such shortcomings would not live in the Ashram or would not be able to do so even if they wished. We may give credit to the Ashram for tolerance for the fact that all those who lived in it could do so, but it was no small degree of endurance on their part too. You will come across many who would prefer to starve rather than endure the severity of the Ashram life. But this family bore the difference of language, of the general mode of life and the absence of non-vegetarian food and endured living in what was to them a foreign land. I think we ought not to forget all this. That means that she was justified in leaving the Ashram. If so, we should pay them their expenses. In Darjeeling, if they maintain a separate establishment the expenditure would easily come to Rs. 15 per head. Since they live with her uncle, most probably the latter is saving something from the money given to them. If, however, she emphatically states that that is not so, I would certainly believe her. He must be incurring some expenditure because of them. I had asked her for accounts and for a description of their daily routine. As for the accounts, she said that since they were living with her uncle she simply paid him the amount at the rate of Rs. 15 per head. And it is understandable that, if they live with the uncle, they cannot keep a separate account of their expenses. Probably she keeps something for miscellaneous expenses, but I did not ask her about that. I had assumed that you received detailed letters from her. The last letter which I got from her a few days ago was after an interval of 20 to 25 days and that, too, was only for complaining that she had not received the money. I had asked her to send me a description of their daily routine, but so far I have not received it. Whether or not she keeps such a diary and sends it to me, just now we must pay the money. Their living in Darjeeling will also be a test for them. I don’t think they will want to stay there for more than two or three months. I have not fixed any limit in my mind. Personally, I desire that they should stay as long as they wish. I did ask her whether they would like to settle down in Darjeeling permanently. Mahavir was emphatic in his reply: “We belong to the Ashram and wish to live there. We have not come here with the intention of taking up an occupation. If you want us to go back, we would do so immediately. We wish to stay on here for some time longer only because we have come here after many years and because here our health has improved a little. I am however fully conscious of my responsibility. We will not do anything to tar the good name of the Ashram”. This was the substance of his reply. In future, if I get similar letters from him I will remember to send them to you. Maitri’s reply in regard to the question of her marriage was equally emphatic. “How can you ask me such a question just now? How can I think of marriage at a time like this? I have not the least desire to get married now, and, even when I wish later to get married, you will have to fix the marriage,"¹ Finally, so long as we bear the expenditure of Rs. 100 for Radha, we must bear this expenditure of Rs. 90 too. We cannot here take into account the fact that Radha is the daughter of Maganlal, who was the very soul of the Ashram. If we pay attention to such considerations, we would sink deep into the well of discrimination between person and person. If at all we take that fact into account, it should be to expect Radha to bear more than others do. But I don’t have the courage yet to ask Radha or Santok to do so. I believe that mother and daughter are doing what seems right to them and console my mind with that thought. If you see any error in this whole reasoning, please do point it out to me. I have explained the matter at such length in order that my attitude may be clear to you.

Let me also say here what I think about Dudhibehn² and Nimu. Dudhibehn probably runs her own kitchen. If so, she must be spending all the money she gets. Valji’s mode of life is extremely simple. Dudhibehn has lived in such atmosphere that she would not ask for any help even when she is ill. I would not, therefore, like to tell her anything. Nimu’s case, I admit, is in a different category, and you can even raise the matter with her. If you wish, I also may write to her. However, if I write from here that may give her pain. Ramdas makes repeated and sincere resolutions to live in a simple style. But he grew up in South Africa and always spent freely. After all, how simple can he make his life? Moreover, Nimu is but a child and she must also have spent freely when she lived under the parental roof. I am certain, therefore, that she makes the Ashram pay for some unnecessary expenses. Mahadev tells me that she takes her meals in the common kitchen. That only means that she eats food worth six or seven rupees—she probably pays for milk and curds from the sixty rupees which she gets. The food for the two children cannot be supplied from the kitchen. The expenditure for their milk and curds ispribably met from the sum of sixty rupees which is paid to her. If so, that sum may not be so shockingly large as I feel it is. However, that can be judged only by a person who knows how she spends the sum. You should get the information from her.

I left the letter incomplete with the last paragraph and busied

¹ For Gandhiji’s reply to Maitri on this subject, vide “Letter to Maitri Giri”, 14-6-1932.
² Wife of Valji G. Desai myself with the meal. Meanwhile I got another letter from you, in which you have replied to my question regarding the hours of work for each type of work. Your explanation helps me to understand many things clearly. The word “Experiments” at the top probably refers to Keshu’s experiments. I observe that the largest number of hours is for the spinning yajna, and that seems very fitting. The fact shows that when a whole group of people do work, the maximum possible time will be devoted to it and yet it will not be a hardship to anyone. If, therefore, all people live in a spirit of yajna, the problems of life would disappear. I knew intuitively this value of public yajna, but I had never tested my belief with figures.

Records are like the sixth finger. As things are, without that sixth finger everything would come to a standstill. But where everybody observes truth in thought, word and deed, there would be no necessity at all for a department of records, or, if, there was such a department, it would require a minimum of time.

In column 14, the entry is “ill” and in column 20 it is “nursing”. What does “ill” mean? With whom does Sharda live now? That is, who is chiefly responsible for her support?

It is certainly a fine thing that the spinning for yajna is done in the dehla and it would be very good if the practice is kept up. I have no doubt that people will form many useful habits through this practice. I am certainly glad that you are able to give two hours to this work, and I can also understand very well that it must be a time of rest for you. In the same way that prayer should give rest to a person, such yajna also should. Only those who feel it to be a burden will try to escape it or do it perfunctorily. I had only one consideration in mind in suggesting to you to limit your yajna work to only one hour. I thought that you had to do your other work under excessive pressure and might also not be getting enough time for sleep. If so, you should not look upon the yajna work as rest. But since you enjoy perfect peace and don’t feel the work to be a burden in any way, I have nothing to say about the matter.

Bhau had suggested that, as they do in Wardha, at Sabarmati too we should use only the takli for spinning for yajna. I had replied to him that I would write to you, but I forgot in my last letter. I am indifferent in this matter. I have not weighed the pros and cons of the suggestion. But you may listen to what Bhau has to say and do what seems best to you.

My arm is not bad, nor can I say that there is distinct improvement. I admitted defeat and started taking milk from today. I have written a detailed letter\textsuperscript{1} to Mirabehn about this, which she will get before you get this. It will of course be shown to you, and so I don’t repeat everything here. I remained on saltless diet for eleven days. I cannot say positively that the result was good, as is clear enough from the fact that I was forced to start taking milk. But I cannot say, either, that the absence of salt was responsible for the ill effects which followed. I can guess many other causes. But I cannot make here, ought not to make, any experiment which has the slightest risk in it. If I try to take any such step, I would put the officials too in a difficult position. They would not desire to put any restraint on me in such a matter. Hence, if any ill consequence followed, they would be put in a difficult situation. That is why I started taking milk from today, and have decided to eat bread from tomorrow. That means the experiment of saltless diet is over. But such diet has one effect, and, if anybody wishes to try it, the experiment is certainly worth making. I can state it as proved beyond doubt in my case that vegetables dressed without salt have a laxative effect. Saltless diet may, therefore, prove beneficial to anybody who suffers from constipation. When we were in South Africa, such diet was a rule. There should be no doubt, moreover, that saltless diet for a period is very useful for acquiring self-control. It is certain that Parnerkar’s aim has not been fulfilled. Has he calmed down a little now?

— Front part of a house

Did you post the letter to Savitribehn which I had sent to you?

Mahadev had in fact opposed the suggestion that a Muslim bhajan should be recited on a fixed day. And now I have a letter from Chhaganlal, too, opposing it. Their argument is that Muslim bhajans are included in the Bhajanavali. It should be enough if they are recited occasionally. To fix one bhajan to be recited on a fixed day does not seem right. I appreciate the argument. But I still feel in the depth of my heart that there is much force in the suggestion to fix one day for a Muslim bhajan which should be the same every week. There is a great difference between our singing such a bhajan occasionally when we feel inclined to do so and fixing a certain day for the purpose. Why do we recite certain verses every day? For that very reason it seems to me that the feeling that one day in the week at least we establish a bond of unity with Muslims is not altogether meaningless. Now do what seems best to all of you there. I have put before you my real conviction in this matter, but I don’t press you to accept my suggestion. And if you decide to select a bhajan, “Hai bahare bagh” is certainly the best, for not only was it dear to Maganlal but we have been singing it from our days in South Africa. It was introduced there at the suggestion of a pure-hearted Muslim youth. That youth then passed away, so that for us the song has more in it than its literal meaning. The song was so dear to that youth that, when he came to the line “Yad kar tu ay Nazir kabronke roz” he used to substitute his name, Hasan, for Nazir’s Hasan was a frequent visitor to Phoenix. To me he was another son, and we sang that song not once but several times in Phoenix. Hasan played on the piano too, and he often sang it alone to the accompaniment of the piano while we listened. The choice of this bhajan is therefore excellent. Its meaning also is excellent.

\textsuperscript{1} Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 22-6-1932.

Is Father Elwin being properly looked after? I feel anxious because he has rather delicate health. There is no need to write to Aluvihari about the suitcase. He will send it at his leisure. I had his address, but I do not seem to have preserved it.

Puratan is in Bhavnagar. The letter will most probably reach him if addressed c/o “Dakshinamurti”.

Vallabhbhai draws my attention to the printed words on one corner of the Ashram envelope, “Satyagraha Ashram, Udyog Mandir, Sabarmati”. Why both “Satya” and “Udyog”? When I looked at the words, my eyes fell on the letters “B.B.C.I” printed below. Why are they in English? And why at all are they necessary? Assuming that they are necessary, why should we not print “B.B.C.I. Railway” in Hindi? This criticism is too late for the envelopes we have in stock. It is meant only for future guidance.

June 24, 1932

Narayanappa has referred to the difficulty experienced in supplying milk to outside customers. In my reply to him, I have asked him to discuss the problem with you. Read that letter.

June 26, 1932

It has been argued that, if one is not permitted to get one’s yarn woven into cloth for one’s use, khadi will be costly. Other doubts, too, have been raised. This is how I feel in the matter:

1 Vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”.
2 Vide “Haji Hussain Dawad Mahomed”, 1-10-1913.
3 “Nazir! remember the day of death.”
1. The best thing of course is that one should hand over to the Ashram all the yarn spun by oneself and be satisfied with the khadi that one gets as one's share from the stock in the Ashram.

2. Those who are not ready to do this may hand over the yarn spun during the hour set apart for the yajna of spinning and keep for themselves the quantity spun at other times.

3. The khadi supplied to the inmates of the Ashram should be charged for at the lowest possible rates.

4. The Ashram should always have a stock of khadi which would suit everybody’s requirements.

5. The khadi woven from the best yarn spun in the Ashram should always be sent out.

6. The inmates of the Ashram should do with as coarse khadi as they can accept and be happy with it. Our idea is that we wear clothes only for protecting our bodies. We will, therefore, use the cheapest quality and the minimum possible quantity.

7. If anybody fears that handing over all the yarn spun by himself as his contribution to the yajna of spinning will probably kill his enthusiasm for spinning yarn of fine count, let it be killed. Such fear has the terrible implication that the person concerned does the spinning yajan as a task. Dharma on the contrary tells us that, howsoever indifferently we may spin or cook for ourselves, we should do our best when spinning or cooking for others. Those who do not do that do not really offer yajna but merely work. Their yajna has no meaning and may be described as hypocrisy. If, therefore, our spinning for yajan is not better than or at least as good as our spinning previously, we shall have failed in the test.

Let everybody think over this and then express his or her desire. Every person will act as he wishes. There is no doubt at all that dharma lies in what I have pointed out. If a person is convinced of what I have said, it is his duty to act accordingly. If, however, anybody cannot do so, simply because he has acted differently up to now, let him do as he wishes. I don’t wish to create any new difficulty for you, I think I have nothing more to explain.

My arm is all right more or less. I am continuing milk and bread. It is too early yet to say anything about their effect. There is no cause for worry.

I hope you do understand that although I write these letters, I am not certain how long I shall be able to go on, I would not be surprised if, like the visits, they too are stopped suddenly. We should be quite ready for that too. Of course there is no such possibility just now, but one cannot say when the necessity may arise.

I think I have inflicted a fairly long letter on you this time.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./ I. Also C.W. 8235 Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

68. LETTER TO KRISHNABEHN M. KAPADIA

June 28, 1932

CHI. KRISHNA,

I got your and Madhavdas’s letters. I hope you keep perfectly fit now. I wish Madhavdas had said something in his letter about his present financial condition. He can write even now. I give complete rest to my arm these days. There is no cause for worry at all. I suppose you know that Manilal, Sushila and Sita, all three of them were caught in the epidemic of virulent fever in Natal. But there was a letter from Sushila after they had recovered, and that means that they must be on their feet again. I get news about Ramdas’s health from time to time that it is all right.

Why does Madhavdas remain worried? One never knows when one may lose one’s wealth. One should not rejoice when one has it, nor grieve over its loss. One need not feel ashamed of having become poor and remaining so. Really speaking, poverty is man’s natural condition. There only a few in the world who are rich.

Blessings from

BAPU

SJT. MADHAVDAS GOKALDAS KAPADIA
MANORDAS STREET
FORT
BOMBAY

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/ XXII

1 For the article “How to Observe Ahimsa”, which was sent along with this letter, vide “How to observe ahimsa”, 25-6-1932.
69. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

June 28, 1932

BHAI SHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I got your letter. I was informed about the arrival of the bottle of medicine, but Major Bhandari hesitates to let me use it. He says that it is a camphor liniment described in British Pharmacopoeia and that it smells very strong and may, therefore, injure the skin. If there is any ill effect, he would be held responsible. If he knows the composition of the solution and thinks that the strength of the ingredients is light enough, he may let me use it. That being the position, if you yourself make the oil please let him know its composition and also describe your experience of its effects. He may then let me use it. I pressed him to permit me to use it, but as he mentioned his responsibility I have kept quiet. The pain in the elbow has not increased. I give it complete rest, of course.

Blessings to you both from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7550. Also C.W. 5025. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

70. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

August 28, 1932

CHI. NIMU

I have a letter from Ramdas in which he says that it was not proper for you to have given up ghee without corresponding with him. He also wishes that I should write to you in the matter and explain to you your duty. He says, too, that he had not ordered you to give up cinnamon and clove. At any rate, after seeing me he had given up the idea altogether. He says moreover, that for the sake of the children also, you ought not to give up ghee. I agree with all this. It was your duty to have asked Ramdas what was the right thing to do. He does not in the least wish to order you. He has never believed that you are his subjects. Surely you ought to have ascertained the full facts from the person on whose account you wished to take a vow. Also, under the Ashram rules, you must obtain the Manager’s permission to undertake anything by way of expiation. You have not done that either. Looking at the matter from every point of view, therefore, I feel that you should give up your resolve not to take ghee.

I hope the children are all right now. Narandas says in his letter that their illness had somewhat frightened you. Illness comes and goes. Why should it frighten one? It is certainly no easy matter to be a mother. A mother may look after her children as well as she can. Then, whether the children keep good health or bad, live or die, is in the hands of God. And this applies to all living beings alike. Therefore, why grieve? On the contrary, giving way to grief interferes with the nursing of the ill.

Be regular in writing to me. Start taking ghee and inform Ramdas that you have done so. You know well enough how Ramdas worries about you.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and library

71. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

June 28, 1932

CHI. RAIHANA

I got your long letter. The ghazal is very fine. I have preserved all your letters to read them again. I wish to prepare a dictionary with their help. The work which you have got in the Oriental Research Institute is very good indeed. Raihana will be called a scholar now. She will now fly in the air and all of us will watch her. Tell Pashabhai that all of us were sorry to learn about his misfortune. I hope the girl is all right now. Uncle Sardar has been reading Amir Ali’s book with deep interest. Sincere greetings and vandemataram from us all to Mother and Father.

I hope Bhai Purohit is all right now. Tell him that Sardar inquires after him. Shardabehn also had informed me that Dr. Sumant was putting on weight.

I will not write further today in Gujarati. I have said above almost everything I wished to say. I am waiting for Hamida’s letter. Regards and vandemataram from Sardar and Mahadev.

Blessings and a slap from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu/Gujarati: S.N. 9646
72. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

June 28, 1932

Bhai Ghanshyamdas,

I have received the khaddar, but no letter has been received. Please tell Behenji (sister) that I shall lovingly be using the khaddar. Since I wrote¹, I have been studying books on economy. I have read your two pamphlets. I can understand (the subject) better than before. But as yet the picture of the whole subject (lit. all things) does not come before me. But I am pursuing it and so I hope to be sufficiently acquainted with the subject. So far I have been reading (Prof.) Shah’s book on Banking and Exchange. In this connection any books which may be considered worth reading may be sent. It would be very well if the Reports of the Herschel Committee, Fowler Committee, Babington Smith, Chamberlain and Hilton Young Committees are printed in book form. If they are not so printed they may be sent as they are available. Dissenting minutes should also be with them. I also wish to have these Reports over and above the literature you have in mind. If you send also the books our experts have written, there will be sufficient acquaintance with the subject.²

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40)(3), Pt. I. p. 319

73. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 29, 1932

Chi. Mira,

Your letter here just now. This is just to entrust you with two letters for Damodardas and his wife. They might feel comforted by the letters.

¹ Vide “Letter to G.D.Birla”, 7-6-1932.
² This and some other letters, reproduced from Bombay Secret Abstracts, are official transaltions of Gujarati or Hindi originals which are not available.
I am well. The milk, bread and fruit are progressing.
More later.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6227. Courtesy Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9693

74. LETTER TO KANHAIYALAL

June 29, 1932

BHAI KANHAIYALAL,

(1) One who believes in ‘I’
(2) Freedom from likes and dislikes.
(3) Untruth.
(4) Non-violence.
(5) Freedom for ever from likes and dislikes.
(6) Untruthful conduct.
(7) Non-violence.

BAPU

75. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

June 29, 1932

We here have boundless patience, and do not mind if a couple or more years pass [before our effort is crowned with success]. We will only claim so much more interest.

Rajaji seems to be rather prejudiced against American writers. I have read nothing of Hardy or Zola. And I have always felt the loss of 2 Gandhiji is referring to Samuel Hoare’s speech; he had said that no peace with the Congress was possible so long as it challenged the Government.

3 After reading The Wet Parade Rajagopalachari had expressed his views to Devdas Gandhi.
not reading the latter. But Upton Sinclair is not a writer to be despised. A propagandist novel cannot be dismissed from an idea that propaganda as such is a fault in it. A propagandist devotes all his powers to the production of his work. He makes no secret of his purpose, and still does not let the interest flag in his story. Uncle Tom’s Cabin is propaganda pure and simple, but its art is inimitable. Sinclair is a great reformer and writes with a view to promoting reforms; yet it is said, all his works are interesting. I propose to read them if I have the time.

[From Gujarati]

76. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

June 29, 1932

DEAR SUMANGAL,

Your letter to hand. Your argument with regard to rape seems convincing. In circumstances similar to those in which you believe it right for a woman to take her life, it may be right for a trustee to take his life when somebody tries to rob the property under his care. But the woman and the trustee themselves should think that it is their dharma to do so. You or I have no right to accuse a woman of failing in her dharma if she does not kill herself to prevent herself from being raped. If, unlike her, the trustee dies while defending the property under his care, we cannot assume, either, that he has done the right thing. We can judge in either case only if we know the mental condition of the person concerned at the time. Though I say this from the point of view of justice, personally I believe that a woman, if she has courage, would be ready to die to save her honour. In discussing this matter with women, I would, therefore, certainly advise them to kill themselves in such circumstances and explain to them that it was easy to take one’s life if one wished to do so. I would do this because many women believe that, if there is no man present to protect them or if they have not learnt to use a dagger or a gun, they have no choice but to submit to the evil-doer. I would certainly tell a woman who believes so, that she need not depend upon anybody’s weapons to protect her and that her own virtue will protect her. Even if that does not happen, instead of using a dagger or any other weapon she can kill herself. She need not consider herself weak or helpless.
And now concerning hypothetical questions. I had understood your purpose in asking the questions to be exactly what you explain it to be, but I would describe such questions as hypothetical. In some cases questions of this nature may be asked, but it would be better not to ask any. In any case, you should not make it a habit of asking such questions. Anybody who does that commits the same error which a student of geometry who asks his professor to solve riders does. Such a student will never learn geometry well. That will also be the fate of a person who seeks the solutions of problems arising out of a principle from other people. Apart from this, however, there is a great flaw in the very nature of questions raised on the basis of ethical principles, namely, we never come across in life an instance exactly similar to the one we had imagined. If there is ever so slight a difference between the hypothetical case and the actual one, the answers in the two cases are likely to be entirely different. That is why I have cautioned you that, if you are not confronted with a problem relating to an actual instance which you have come across, you should not make it a habit to seek from me solutions of hypothetical problems in order to be prepared for such eventualities. If you do that, my answers to hypothetical questions will, instead of helping you in an emergency, prevent you from finding the right solution. The mind of such a person becomes incapable of original thinking. The better thing would be to grasp the basic principle thoroughly and to assimilate it, and not to mind if, in applying it in solving your problems or those of other members in your family, you make mistakes. You will learn from such mistakes. But you should not approach others, even those who understand the principle better than you do, to seek solutions of hypothetical problems in order to prepare yourself to meet them when they arise. Such a procedure destroys one’s self-confidence. The author of the \textit{Gita} seems to have written verse 10 of Chapter X because he knew this from experience. Doesn’t the Lord tell us in that verse that “to these, ever in tune with Me, worshipping Me with affectionate devotion. I give the power of selfless action, whereby they come to Me.” If you substitute “Truth” for “God” in this sentence, the meaning will be perfectly clear. I hope you now understand what I meant to say. I do not mind your hypothetical questions, but I fear that I may do you harm by encouraging you to put such questions. I am sure at any rate that I would not be helping you. Take, for instance, your question regarding rape. Though I may give a definite reply now to your question regarding a hypothetical instance, I would give quite a different reply if an instance like that actually occurred, and support it with convincing reasons. It is also very possible that I would be able to point out a difference between the hypothetical case and the actual incident. I write all this from experience about coworkers. I will stop here now.

I am glad to learn that your health has improved.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

77. A LETTER

June 29, 1932

Why should you wish to commit suicide? So far as I know, you have not deceived anyone. And since you have resolved never to speculate in future, that chapter is closed. Even if you have deceived anybody, that is no reason for committing suicide. A person who confesses that he has deceived people is better than other who deceive but who are not found out or than those who have not been put in circumstances in which they would feel tempted to deceive. You have, therefore, no reason for committing suicide. And now about the problem of debt. If you hand over everything you have to your creditors, your responsibility will be over. If the creditors declare you insolvent, let them do so. There is nothing to be ashamed of even in that. Manliness lies in facing whatever happens. I have already written to you and told you how you may live now. Both of you should go and live in the Ashram. Do not feel the slightest hesitation in doing so. Do not be proud and think that, now that you are a poor man, you cannot go to a place where you often used to go in the days of your prosperity. The Ashram exists for good people. Write to me from time to time. Seek Mirabehn’s company for what comfort it can give you. Know that good company is like a philosopher’s stone and be near her.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 258

1 It is likely that this was addressed to Damodardas and his wife; vide the following item and “Letter to Mirabehn”, 29-6-1932.
78. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 30, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

Being anxious to send to Damodardas and his wife a comforting letter, I wrote at once yesterday so as to catch the post. I hope you got the two letters and gave them to the friends. It is sad that loss of wealth should so affect people.

Where are your Urdu-English and English-Urdu dictionaries? I need them badly. My Urdu studies are growing. I am reading fairly extensively. I must, therefore, enrich my Urdu collection of books. There are several books at the Ashram. I propose to send for them.

There is nothing to report just now about my health.

The improvement you notice in your system is certainly very encouraging. The increase in milk and fruit was necessary.

I was glad Verrier was able to go to England after all. The visit must renew his shattered body. And his mother and sister will be overjoyed to have him in their midst.

There is no reply to my letter about you. There may be no reply!

It is good thing Shantabai is giving some time regularly to spinning.

Tilak should take all the rest he may need. He must build up his body.

Noorbanu does not take enough exercise. Do coax her to take long walks. And if you can persuade her to go without salt and ghee for a month, she will lose much of her superfluous fat.

For the cadence of Ramanama, you should get hold of Panditji when he passes through Bombay. I think he could recommend one of his fellow-teachers of the Gandharva Mahavidyalaya if you wrote to him. You would learn it in half an hour’s time.

Who are the principal members of the International Fellowship now?

You will send my love to all the friends in Europe, and Mahadev’s too, and to the Oxford uncle and his wife, and kisses to the beautiful baby. I can never forget that visit, the quiet home and the very beautiful chapel attached to it.

Love from us all.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6228. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9694

79. LETTER TO MRS. LINDSAY

June 30, 1932

You have beaten me. For the past four weeks or more I have been thinking of writing to you and I could not. And now your most welcome letter giving me a budget of family news has come. Thank you for it. What I wanted to say to you was that in everything I have done, I have asked myself how you would take it. Such was the hold your appealing eyes had on me when you spoke to me at that meeting under Prof. Thomson’s roof. And then came those never-to-be-forgotten talks under your own roof when you had received me as one of the family. Mahadev is with me. We often talk of all the friends we met in Oxford. Our love to all of you.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 263

80. LETTER TO THE PRIVATS

June 30, 1932

My dear bhakti and anand,

It was a great delight to hear from you both and to know that you were doing so well. I had one postcard from Anand whilst you were travelling. Nothing beyond it. Of course you remember Sardar Vallabhbhai. He and Mahadev are with me. We are all keeping well trying to made ourselves useful. Mahadev and I give fair time to spinning and studying. Sardar produces wealth by making envelopes from waste brown paper and the like. This will be enclosed in one such envelope.

I do hope you did not find the Indian climate too trying for you.

1 Wife of Dr. A.D. Lindsay, Master of Balliol College, Oxford
2 A Swiss couple; Gandhiji called them Anand and Bhakti.
I wonder if you often see the Rollands. When you do please give our love to them and accept it for yourselves.

Yours,

BAPU

PROF. E. PRIVAT
LA CHAUMIERE AVENUE
SWITZERLAND

From a photostat: G.N. 8792

81. LETTER TO BHAU PANSE

June 30, 1932

CHI. BHAU,

Jamnalalji has already sent me three copies of Vinoba’s *Gitai*¹. Your constipation must be cured. If necessary, consult Dr. Talwalkar about it. Its effect may not be felt much now, but it is bound to become serious in future. I will suggest one remedy which has helped me. You may try it for two or three days and, if it does not work, give it up. Eat twice or thrice a day cooked *tandalja*² or *palak*³ leaves—eat nothing else. This is likely to help you. As soon as you pass stools normally, resume your normal food. The immediate, and unfailing, remedy for migraine is the application of a mud-pack. Bind it when retiring. If the headache still occurs on the next day, apply the pack again and lie down.

I think that the image of the Lord reclining on the Shesha⁴ has some mystic significance and does not contradict the idea of his being ceaselessly active. The word atandrita in that verse⁵ can only mean doing everything with perfect vigilance and without lethargy. It does not mean working all the twenty-four hours of the day. This can be said about God’s manner of working as contrasted with that of unenlightened human beings, and the verse only draws such a contrast. In truth, however, God is neither awake nor asleep. He neither does anything nor does nothing. It is therefore, not possible to compare

1. Literally, ‘Mother Gita’, Vinoba Bhave’s metrical Marathi rendering of the Gita
2. Amaranth
3. Spinach
4. A serpent with a thousand heads which is the couch and canopy of Lord Vishnu.
5. Probably Bhagavad Gita, III. 23
Him with anything. After saying this, I may add that this is how I interpret the image of the Lord reclining on Shesha: that God is so perfectly free from fear that He can sleep soundly even with His head on the body of a snake. I interpret it thus for my own satisfaction and the meaning gives me strength. That is, if we are filled with perfect ahimsa, we would not feel the slightest fear even in the presence of a snake and, more than that, the snake would have no fear of us.

BAPU

82. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

June 30, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I got your letter. I do not see any harm in your encouraging the girls to write to me in Hindi and correcting their language. Only see that, instead of constructing the sentences themselves, they do not write them down as you speak them. They themselves should write the letters first. Otherwise, only their handwriting will improve and their language will not improve. The questions also should be their own. There is no rule that they must ask questions. They should describe what new things they have learnt during the week, what they have observed, what made them happy or unhappy, or things which happened during the week or have left an impression on their minds. This will mean more work for you, but you can teach them to write about these things even during their Hindi lessons. I also see that Pushpa has begun to take interest in her work and is eager to make progress.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7504. Also C.W. 4981. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra
83. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

June 30, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I regard you as being three years old.¹ What you say is correct. When I brought you along with me from Bombay, I was doubtful whether you would continue in the Ashram, though not as much as you believe I was. For you had kept your promise, and I do not feel doubtful about anyone who keeps his or her promise. I do not think there was sarcasm in my words, but I was not sure that you would continue as long as you have done. I recollect this to be the state of my mind then. I certainly wish that you should spend your whole life there as you have spent three years and that through deliberate resolution, not aimlessly, with the firm conviction that you belong to the Ashram and the Ashram belongs to you. But, of course, I cannot force you to do this. I may only wish that you should do so. You cannot make up your mind to stay on unless you sincerely feel that the Ashram belongs to you. I have merely expressed my wish.

This refers to your second birth in the Ashram. The other birthday falls on July 13 and you should get this letter about the 8th. You have my blessings, of course. May your highest aspirations be fulfilled! I have no doubt that they will be, since you are alert and striving with that aim. You should also have sufficiently long life and good health for that purpose. I am sure you will have them too. But, ultimately, none of these things depends on you or me. We trust everything to Him. He may do as He wills. And whatever He does will be for the best.

Send to me your account for the 13th. Tell me what resolution you make on that day. I suppose you know that I advise everyone to make a good resolution on his or her birthday.

Put no trust in the predictions of astrologers. Do not take any interest in the matter at all. Even if such predictions come true, there is no benefit in knowing them. The harm is plain.

It is hot there. But here it is very cool. There has not been much rain, though.

¹ The addressee wanted to be regarded as only three years old since she considered her coming to the Ashram as her new birth.
Send to me soon the following Urdu books—as many biographies of the Prophet as you can find, the two parts of Asva-e-Saheba, Khulfa-e-Rashdin and the English-Urdu and Urdu-English dictionary. If you can send them to Dahyabhai in Bombay, he will bring them here on Saturday.

All the buildings should be cleaned regularly on fixed days. The luggage should be lifted and the spot cleaned. You must find the necessary time for this.

It is our duty to try to raise to perfection whatever we find imperfect, whether a person or a society or an institution. If on the whole we find more shortcomings than good points, our duty is to leave the person or the thing, non-co-operate with him or it. This is a universal principle and I asked you to follow it. In doing so, I did not wish to advise you to leave the Ashram, or anything else. I only explained to you what is accepted as everyone’s moral duty in certain circumstances.

In Bengal, hundreds of sheep and goats are slaughtered in broad daylight every day and offered as sacrifice to the Goddess Durga in Calcutta. I pray to God to make me a fit instrument for stopping this. Didn’t you know this?

I knew that men often describe themselves as gopis. If this is done purely through bhakti, I see nothing wrong in it. Before God all of us are the weaker sex.

When we have swaraj, men will certainly come forward to climb the top of the Himalayas or discover the North Pole. I do believe that knowledge of the physical sciences is useful.

My experiments in diet have done me no harm. They have lasted for periods ranging between seven days and eight years.

Dhurandhar has gone to Nasik.

“Monodiet” is certainly beneficial.

BAPU

1 The addressee had asked which particular prayer Gandhiji addressed to God every day.
2 The cowherd maidens with whom Krishna sported in his boyhood.
84. LETTER TO SHAMAL R. RAVAL

July 1, 1932

CHI. SHAMAL,

Anasuyabehn meets everybody who wants to see her. Ask her to advise you and guide you. You do right in asking my advice. Who makes fun of you? You can meditate on God by going on repeating His name. The best way of worshipping God is to see Him in all creatures and serve them lovingly. Why are you unhappy in the Ashram? Explain the cause, whatever it is, to Narandasbhai. In any case write to me and tell me everything fully.

BAPU

S. R. RAVAL

85. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI

July 1, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

Some of your letters are no letters at all. For instance the last letter. If you cannot think of anything to write about, it would be better not to write at all. It is a weakness in you that you cannot think of anything to write about, but writing a letter which is almost a blank sheet of paper does not make up for that weakness but confirms it.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1841.

86. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

July 1, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

This time your handwriting was bad. You should always make each letter as distinct as in print.

As regards the selection of land, see what I had written in my letter either to Mangala or Sharda, and then if there is anything you wish to ask me, you may do so.
Why does Mohan not write to me regularly?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5776. Also C.W. 2999. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

87. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

July 1, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

It is not right that Premabehn should suggest the questions which you ask. The questions must be of interest to you, and you should be eager to know their answers. They should be such as nobody there can answer. Questions should not be asked for the sake of asking them. Your letters should contain a report of the work done during the week. Work includes study also.

Now the questions:

For the past many years my life has come to be exclusively devoted to public work.

Pure food is that which involves the minimum destruction of life and which is taken merely for the sustenance of the body.

The motive behind pilgrimage should always be religious. But religious actions also serve practical ends. Religion ought not to be—cannot be—antagonistic to true practical ends.

The chief characteristic of virtuous life is sat, i.e., truth.

In your letters your grammar and spellings must be correct.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U. II

88. LETTER TO BABALBHAI MEHTA

July 1, 1932

CHI. BABALBHAI.

Bhakti means silent [and continuous] repetition of God’s name in one’s heart. God means the One Essence manifested as all living creatures. Hence the bhakta is a person who serves all living creatures through love of God. You have correctly interpreted the meaning of the injunction: “Do everything as sacrifice to me”.¹

Your interpretation of the other verse, too, is correct. For stilling the movements of the chitta,² observance of the *yamaniyamas*³ is the chief thing. The same idea is expressed in two different ways: “Do everything as sacrifice to me” and “Renounce the fruits of action.” People of a certain nature will understand the first easily and people of another type will understand the second easily.

The condition of my elbow is not as serious as you seem to think it is. The only thing is that it pains when I use the arm in a particular manner. Kakasaheb’s health is definitely improving. Do not worry if you feel when reading the Gita that your life is contrary to the teaching of every verse. Instead, you should try to overcome your shortcomings patiently but with determination, no matter even if there is a whole heap of them, as big as a hill. As you go on trying, a day will come when all of them will disappear together. If, however, looking at the hill you get discouraged and stop trying, the hill will become bigger and bigger.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9450

89. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

July 1, 1932

DEAR PANDITJI,

I had never heard the name Yoga before. What is her age? How far has she studied? The supervision of the Vidyapith books has come to our hands in time. Now take good care of them. Mahadev spins more than 200 rounds of yarn of 45 counts per hour. The children’s problem is our own. I will discuss it in my letter to Narandas.⁴ Read it. I have written to Narandas in regard to silent prayers in the morning.⁵ If the silent prayers in the morning are held intelligently it would be advantageous. Though I had it in mind only for the evening. But I do not write here more. See what I have written

¹ Bhagavad Gita, XII. 10
² Mind-stuff
³ Rules and regulations of conduct for a spiritual aspirant.
⁴ Address’s niece
⁵ Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 28-6/4-7-1932.
⁶ ibid
to Narandas. I have suggested to Mirabehn that if, instead of repeating the refrain Raghupati Raghava Rajaram, etc., only Ram Ram Ram . . . is repeated in ascending and descending notes, then the refrain could be taken up briskly and it would be very good for the newcomers.¹ But who will teach her this? If you have anybody in view in Bombay please write to him to go and teach her. Have you followed?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 228. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

90. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

July 1, 1932

. . . As you follow whole-heartedly the remedy I have suggested, you will get more and more peace. What you have already read will have an invisible effect on you and it will be amazing. Live as if you had never read anything. Whatever you have digested and assimilated will of itself bear fruit as action.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

91. LETTER TO SWAMI ANAND

July 1, 1932

Bhai anandanand

You made me wait for a long time. Sardar asked me several times why your letter was still not received. We knew that it was not received but what can you do? Even if the reason is known, one does hope for a thing which one ardently desires. You will receive this letter or it will come back to me.¹ Many of those who have come in contact with me had similar experience about separation as you have got,

¹ Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 22-6-1932.
² Vide also “Letter to Bhagwanji P. Pandya”, 18-6-1932.
³ What follows is collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I.
though I am near you. 1 You are to draw as much satisfaction therefrom as you can. Kallenbach had laid down a fine standard. His experience was that when he first came in contact with me, he met me daily and took as much of my time as he could; when we came in very close contact and began to live together he had hardly time to talk with me though we lived, ate and slept together. While returning home from office, there were always some people talking with us. So, that became a regular matter of quarrel between us. He applied the rule of three and came to the conclusion that it was his experience that the more one came into contact with me, the more he remained away from me. I supported his statement and added, “You have come so near me because you have understood me. Hence you have no right to take my time now nor have I the right to spare time for you, leaving aside those who have yet to know me.” And on this understanding our affairs went on. Is it not that there is some truth underlying such experience, viz., that in the case of associates who are closely united with one another there remains nothing to make inquiries about? If they do so they may be said to fail to that extent in their general duty. And if this is true, associates like you who are near, though living at a distance, have no reason to feel sorrowful about. 3 I did know that your weight had gone down, but I had no fears about your health. The Magan spinning-wheel is not a modified or improved form of the Gandiva wheel. It is a distinct, useful and excellent discovery made by Prabhudas. 4 Its wheel can be worked by foot instead of by hand, and so both the hands being free, two spindles can be worked simultaneously. Hence he who becomes an expert in working it can without doubt spin one and a half times, if not double, of what he can do on a one-spindle wheel. I did want to work the wheel to satisfy Prabhudas. In the mean time the doctors here prohibited me from drawing the yarn or working the wheel with the left hand. So there was a twofold reason for me to work the Prab-

1 The addressee had stated in his letter that he would not commit the crime of taking up Gandhiji’s time when he was free, and was not lucky enough to be his companion in jail. He could, therefore, never hope to be able to live with Gandhiji and have an opportunity of discussing things personally with him.

2 Hermann Kallenbach, a German architect; devoted friend and co-workers of Gandhiji in South Africa.

3 The following is reproduced from the English rendering of the letter available in Bombay Secret Abstracts.

4 Prabhudas Gandhi, eldest son of Chhaganlal Gandhi.
As Maganlal encouraged the making of that wheel and contributed largely to the scientific side of it, it has been named Magan Rentio. I am spinning on it at present. The speed has reached about 140 rounds. It will still go up. From the above remarks, I hope you have understood that I have been spinning only on one spindle because, giving complete rest to the left hand, I draw the thread with the right.

The yarn is of 19 counts. There is nothing to fear about the hand. When it is used in doing a particular kind of work, the elbow is aching and doctors persistently believe that the complaint is not due to any internal cause, but it is due to an external cause, viz., due to the drawing of threads daily. So, they are of the opinion that by giving rest to the muscles the complaint will subside by itself. Despite this, that part is treated by [ultra-]violet rays. Hence there is no cause for anxiety. My weight has failed to go up to 112 lb. It has not exceeded $106\frac{1}{2}$ lb. I have been taking milk for the last ten days under pressure from the Superintendent. I am yet unable to say that I have benefited by it. My present weight is 104 lb. Sardar is doing well. His weight may be said to be the same as it was when he came (here). It can be said that the nose complaint is under slight control. The weight of Mahadev is also good. His health is excellent. Mahadev had been spinning 840 yards of yarn of No. 45 to 50 up to the day before yesterday. He spent about five hours daily on it. As he also felt the effects of exertion, he spins half the amount of yarn for the last two days and is doing carding work, of course, in addition. I spin 200 yards of yarn. I study Urdu, astronomy and books on currency and write the history of the Ashram when I get time. Mahadev is reading on stray subjects. He has, of course, in addition, to write for me. Now the spinning having been reduced, he may, perhaps, begin to write something. Sardar produces wealth from dust, in other words, he has been making envelopes from wastepaper of badami and other colours. If I were to give you a description of the papers, you will laugh a lot. To whomsoever we have to write a letter, we make use of these envelopes. As we do not differentiate between Government money and ours, we save every cowry where possible. The making of envelopes is undoubtedly an addition to the wealth of India or that of the world, however small it may be. Keeping in mind that everything that is used as Government property is our property, we make use of it. Sardar is spending time also in reading and has thought of acquiring a working knowledge of Sanskrit. He has also called for the Sanskrit Pathamala by Satavlekar\(^1\) and intends side by side to be well versed in Hindi too. This is the account of our work. Our family consists of a cat and her two kittens. Though their names are not entered in the history ticket, they share a little of milk, etc.\(^2\)

---

1 Brown

I have completed reading Rolland’s books on Ramakrishna and Vivekananda. I always had reverence for Ramakrishna I had read little about him. But as I had heard several things about him from his devotees, that feeling had sprung up. I cannot say that Rolland’s books have added to it. In fact both the books of Rolland are meant for Westerners. I will not say that we can derive nothing from these books. But I for one have derived very little benefit. The things which had influenced me are also to be found in Rolland’s books. The additional matter which it contains has not added to the impression. It did not appear to me that Vivekananda was as much a devotee as Ramakrishna. Vivekananda’s love was great. He was full of feeling and used to be carried away by it. It was like the golden covering for his knowledge\(^3\). The distinction which he made between religion and politics was not correct. But it is no use criticizing such a great man and once we let loose ourselves we can criticize anyone whom we wish to. Our duty lies in learning anything we can from [the lives of] such persons. As Tulsidas’s couplet has produced a deep impression on my life, I do not like to criticize. But as I know that you will wish to know if I have to offer anything by way of criticism, I have written this much. I have no doubt that Vivekananda rendered great service. We have clearly seen that he gave his life for what he considered to be the truth. When I went to see the Belur Math in 1901, I desired to see Vivekananda also. But the Swami of the Math informed me that he was ill and resided in the city and no one could see him. I was then disappointed. My devotion had saved me from many difficulties. At that time there was not a single notable person whom I did not run up to see with feelings of respect and I used to go to most of the places on foot on the long roads in Calcutta. Devotion inspired all this. I had no desire to save money though this is also in

---

1 1866-1968; renowned scholar and author of several books in Sanskrit
2 The following paragraph has been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadev-bhaini Diary.
3 cf. Ishopanishad, 15
my nature. Respects from all three of us to Abdulla Sheth, Jabir Ali, Soman, Gokulbhai, Vishwanath, and all others. I hope you will admit now that I have written at greater length than you might have wished.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

92. LETTER TO KISHORELAL G. MASHRUWALA

July 1, 1932

DEAR KISHORELAL,

I was waiting for your letter. I do not wish you to write to me, making use of the occasion when it is necessary for you to write to anybody else. But do write to [me] when you can easily do so. Devdas was suffering from mild typhoid. But now he is entirely cured. I receive letters from him. He was taken good care of. He is getting books to read. Ramdas is here and is all right. Chhaganlal, Surendraji, Darbari and several others are with him. Qureshi is also there. Ramniklal, Kanti, Surendra, Vithal, Fulchand, Diwan Master and several others are in Visapur jail. Jamnalal, Pyarelal, Vinoba, etc., are in Dhulia jail. There the Gita is being studied with great enthusiasm. Manilal, Sushila, Sita, Pragji all had an attack of the poisonous fever prevailing in Natal. But all have been saved. Pragji is not willing to undertake responsibility. So Manilal is engaged and it seems that he will not come. Gangabehn, Tara, Mahalakshmi, Rama, Gangabehn Jhaveri, Nanibehn, Bhaktibehn, Shanta, Lilavati Asar, etc., are here. As doctors believe that my hand complaint is due to exertion, I have been giving rest to it. The complaint is not permanent. It recurs when a particular kind of work is done. As an experiment, it is given diathermy; but the doctors here believe that rest is the only remedy for that part of the hand. It is not necessary even to direct a thought over it. I have been taking milk nearly for the last ten days. My weight is 104 lb. The reason for taking milk is that the Superintendent here is pressing for it. I did not think that it was essential. But as the weight was going down, I gave up my determination. I am working Prabhudas's spinning-wheel by foot and am drawing the thread with the right hand. It is working well. Sardar and Mahadev are doing well. The nose complaint in of Sardar is lying dormant for the present. The complaint in the leg-bone from which Mahadev was suffering was completely cured in a few days after he came here. Mahadev spins yarn of 40/50 counts. He is doing some carding work and reading, of course, in addition to what he has to write for me. Sardar is reading and adding to the wealth of the world by making envelopes from seless badami paper. As we do not differentiate between the Government and other property, we hold the so-called Government property to be ours and make a careful use of everything. Such troubles as you infer should not arise from the working of the Gandiva spinning-wheel. Its wheel should work without the least trouble. It requires only a gentle push. But if you believe that though the wheel of the Gandiva spinning-wheel you have been using is turning very lightly, yet your wrist is aching, then you should use a spinning-wheel with a perpendicular wheel even for the sake of removing your doubt. That your weight is increasing can indeed be regarded as good news. The diagnosis of the doctor about the asthma may be correct and if two grains of quinine every day cures the trouble, it should be regarded to be very good.

1 The following is from the English rendering available in Bombay Secret Abstracts.

I had written on prayers\(^1\) and on subject like that of the regulations to be observed by satyagrahi\(^2\); but not on this subject. However, I have not got a copy of the same. But as you refer to it, I shall call for it and correct errors in it and send it to you, if possible. It will not be regarded, I feel confident, as a letter. There is indeed pressure of work in the Ashram. Shankarbhai\(^3\) writes the Ashram letter when he gets leisure. Several essential things are left out in it. I have kept up the idea of reading your book carefully, but believing that I have ample time I do not turn to it, leaving aside what I have been reading at present. You have done well in going through the Gita again. If you send it here, I will get it.\(^4\) I do not desire to recommend you to read anything special.\(^5\) I do not believe that you have read less. My own reading can indeed be regarded as being quite odd. I have been reading Urdu at present. As my ignorance on currency is unpardo-

---

\(^1\) Vide "Prayer", 19-6-1932.
\(^2\) Vide "Lesson of the national week", 2-5-1932.
\(^3\) Shankarbhai Bhikhabhai Patel
\(^4\) What follows has been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary.
\(^5\) The addressee had requested Gandhiji to suggest what he should read in addition to what he had read already.
nable, I have been making some progress in the subject. The spirit of service lies behind both of these, and submitting to this spirit, though I can be regarded to be on the eve of death, I aspire to have a good knowledge of Tamil which has been left incomplete; and from this point of view I had begun to read Bengali and Marathi, and I shall not be surprised if I plunge into their study if a good time is passed here. If your mind is working in any such direction and if you desire to know any new language do not fail to do so. We had this aspiration about languages when the Ashram was established. It has not weakened at all so far as I am concerned. But I do not desire to draw you under this temptation. The one necessity which I see for all of us is that we should think on what we have read, digest it and make it a feature of our life. From this viewpoint I have gone even to the length of advising Bhagwanji\(^1\) to give up (the reading of) Gita and writings of Raichandbhai and to remain engaged in his own work and think over it alone; because I found that he had crammed much from the Anasaktiyoga and the writings of Raichandbhai, but he was unable to make the right use of all these. His heart, I believe, is clean, but his intellect defeats him, he indulges in various thoughts and at last he remains where he is. My writing appears to have produced a deep effect on him and he is appeased. Whatever may be the result of this advice, it has become clear to me from several experiences that the line of thought behind it is quite correct. Accordingly I cannot think of recommending the reading of religious books to persons like you.\(^2\) I agree to a certain extent with the realization by you of defects in you. I have, however, marked many times that you are in the habit of entering into discussions. You appear to have taken an exaggerated view of this defect in your letter. I see no reason for it. But I am, indeed, of opinion that much of the discussion can be curtailed. This does not mean that you should not reply to what one asks you. If one does not ask a man like you, whom will one ask? It is one thing to give to an inquisitive [man] what one can out of what one has, and to enter into discussion is quite a different matter. Do not be confused by interpreting these observations of mine in an unwarranted manner. Do not uselessly reprove yourself also after deep introspection. My support is not intended to magnify the defects you have seen, but is meant to explain their proportion. In order to live with ease with persons of queer nature, silence is indeed greatly essential. We must understand that we have not known religion until we are able to maintain calmness though we live in society.

\(^2\) The following has been reproduced from the English rendering of the letter available in Bombay Secret Abstracts.

Imitation of Christ is a treasure of experiences of a real man. So it cannot but produce effect. I will tell you how I was induced to study the sky. When I accidentally found that it had become for me a means of seeing God, I looked at it at once. Kaka was with me. He induced me much, But my mind turned me aside from it. ‘When I got leisure from other work I would do it’ was the feeling. In 1922 when I was here, I had collected books on the subject. At that time also, I was deferring this study for one reason or another. Shankerlal gradually studied the subject himself. I was induced several times to see Cassiopeia. After seeing a little I engaged myself again in my work. But at this time thoughts came to me suddenly that the sight of the sky was equivalent to a valuable religious association. The stars were silently talking with us. I do not wish to dilate upon all these thoughts. In short what I want to say is that when everything becomes a religious lesson for me, then only I dive into it and now I cannot come out of it.

As much time has passed, I do not lengthen the letter now. If this letter will reach you safely, I will write again further.

Blessings from

BAPU

93. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

July 1, 1932

DEAR MANGALA,

A letter should not be written on a page torn from a note book. To become a cipher means to remain last in receiving a good thing, to serve everybody, to expect nothing in return and to be first in suffering inconveniences. Anybody who lives like a cipher in this manner is bound to remain devoted to his or her duty.

There must be love in our mutual dealings. It is good that you

---

1 The two sentences which follow have been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary.
2 The paragraph which follows has been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary.
have taken up a responsibility, Discharge it fully. Who stays with Kamu? Does the ever write a letter? Send (me) her address.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

94. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

July 1, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

Find out the meaning of “like a cipher” from the letter to Mangala.¹ There has been no rain here. I believe I am not being partial. If Bawa Muldas really said what he is supposed to have said, it was wrong.² Thereby, even the widow has been wronged. One should not tell a lie even to relieve someone from misery. That surely is no way of ending misery.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9952. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala.

95. LETTER TO JEKOR

July 1, 1932

DEAR JEKOR,

Those who are released go back. This is a useless question. When there is nothing specially to ask, nothing should be asked. But write an account of your work every week. (Your) handwriting is good but there is much scope for improvement yet.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40)(3), Pt. II, p. 53

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² The addressee had asked: “Bawa Muldas saved the widow by describing her as his wife. Was it right? Can one speak a lie to save a widow?”
96. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

July 1, 1932

DEAR PUSHPA,

Received your letter. Sultan means a king. He can do much. But if he does not worship God his whole life and begins to do so in old age, that cannot be done. There is no reason why you should [not] write a letter in Hindi. It is proper that you do. But my Hindi may not be correct, and so if I write in Hindi it may be a wrong lesson.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 53

97. LETTER TO ANANDI

July 1, 1932

DEAR ANANDI,

You have been spoiling your handwriting. This is not good. Do you write letters to Bai? How do you spend your whole day?

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 53

98. LETTER TO INDU N. PAREKH

July 1, 1932

DEAR INDU,

Your weight must be said to have been much reduced. For the present leave off prayers. In the morning, sleep as long as you can. Increase the proportion of milk and reduce that of any other thing you like. Then see if the weight increases or not. It is enough that what you can do, you should do with attention and interest. Never mind if less (work) is done for the present.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 55
99. LETTER TO MADHAVLAL

July 1, 1932

DEAR MADHAVLAL,

I was waiting for your letter. It is good news that you are keeping good health. Do not fast for having broken the vow of spinning. Do see that there is no break again. And so there must be takli introduced along with it. Under the new method of plying the takli introduced in the Ashram some have already been turning out 300 yards per hour. There should be no break in the prayers. Never mind if (they are offered) late. It would be better if it is not late. Even if it is late it should not be that the prayers are not offered [at all].

Food can be given up but not the prayers. In these circumstances I regard (the absence) of a diary to be pardonable. Ahimsa can be attained only by strict perseverance.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 55

100. LETTER TO PUNJABHAI H. SHAH

July 1, 1932

DEAR PUNJABHAI,

Received your letter. Go on renouncing the liking for the body so that when it falls, you will experience complete peace.

Blessings from
BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 59

101. LETTER TO S. D. SADATAKAR

July 1, 1932

DEAR SHRI SADATAKARJI,

Perhaps you know that Sardar Vallabhbhai and Mahadev are here with me. Sardar has a desire to learn Sanskrit, Mahadev will guide him. Please send a set of your Sanskrit Readers (Parts 1-24). I hope you are all right. We three are doing well.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

SHRI SHIRIPAD DAMODAR SATAVLEKAR
SWADHYAYA MANDAL
AUNDH, DIST. SATARA

From a photostat of the Hindi: C.W. 4762. Courtesy: S.D. Satavlekar.

102. LETTER TO DUDHIBEHN V. DESAI
July 2, 1932

CHI. DUDHIBEHN,

I expect from you that you should like cloth made from the best yarn spun by you to be used by other people and that you yourself should wear the poorest variety of khadi that you can get. If, however, you lack such courage, you may go as far as you can. Do nothing under pressure from me or through false regard for me. I have pointed out the path of dharma according to my lights. But you may follow it only according to your capacity, and do not feel unhappy, either, that you cannot respect my wishes. If you feel unhappy, I would hesitate in future to make any suggestion about what is right from the point of view of dharma. I get news about Valji from time to time. God protects him.

BAPU

103. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL
July 2, 1932

CHI. MANI¹,

I got your letter. I hope you received my message. Since you intended to send the slivers, you have earned the merit which you would have done if you had sent them. You did well, however, not to send any. No bad slivers are now left here. The slivers we have got are enough. Mahadev has made as many as we need. They have been accumulating for the last two months. Mahadev mostly uses the slivers sent by Chhakkaddas, because they are made from superior cotton and with great care. I shall never be able to spin on the Magan charkha as fine yarn as Mahadev does. I have always held the view—and I am sure I am right—that yarn spun for yajna should never be used for oneself. If a man who spins for yajna is careless, he has been weighed in the balance and found wanting.

¹ Daughter of Vallabhbhai Patel

The yarn spun for yajna should be spun with the utmost care. It would be best if one gives away all the yarn spun by oneself and uses whatever bad or good yarn one can get. If one does not have the heart to do so, one should at any rate spare one hour or half an hour daily for yajna and spin at least 160 rounds of yarn as an offering to Lord Krishna.

I can easily understand your preferring group prayer, for you started praying in that manner. But you must also pray by yourself, even if it be only for one minute. Our aspiration should be that ultimately we shall continually and silently go on repeating God’s name in our heart, and that is impossible unless one forms the habit of praying, by oneself. One can pray by oneself even while lying in bed, bathing, eating or doing any other work. Thus it can never be a burden. On the contrary, such prayer will lighten one’s heart—it ought to do so. If you do not get such experience, then you may know that your prayer is not from the heart.

Dahyabhai’s problem is a little difficult. But he is very sensible and, therefore, will himself recover his balance of mind. Nobody need advise him in this matter. If he wishes to marry again, nobody can dissuade him from doing so. If, on the contrary, he does not wish to marry again, nobody can tempt him to do so either. Acquaintances will certainly pester him, but Dahyabhai can deal with them. In any case you will be able to deal with them. On such occasions, I feel the sacrifice of having stopped seeing visitors, but it is our duty to bear such sacrifices. My left elbow pains when I work with the arm in a particular manner. A servant has been washing my clothes for about a month. I use utensils supplied in the jail. They are not shining bright, but are clean. Take care of your health and write to me regularly.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. MANIBEHN PATEL
C/O DR. BALWANTRAI KANUGA
ELLIS BRIDGE, AHMEDABAD

[From Gujarati]
Bapu na Patro—4: Manibehn Patelne, pp. 84-5

Addressee’s brother
104. LETTER TO A FRIEND

July 2, 1932

DEAR . . .

Your letter and diary to hand. Is the diary to be returned or should I tear it off? Your disease is an old one. But do not lose heart. Pray to God daily for purity and your passions will subside.

. . . was not at fault in sending the mangoes (to you). If you really did not want them, you ought to have given them away to somebody—some labourer. Then . . . would not have sent again. A woman decidedly knows the weakness of her husband and, labouring under false affection, nourishes it (weakness). If the husband remains true (to himself), he abandons the weakness, and the woman will not tempt him.

Moreover, what is the fault of . . . ? I believe what . . . says. She has no desire for carnal pleasures. She does not become passionate towards any man. Hence there is no reason to doubt her. But supposing that she tells a lie; yet, what is the object in doubting her? A woman cannot doubt her husband. She puts up with the enjoyment of carnal pleasures by her husband. Why should a man keep a watch over and be angry with her. Let the woman behave as she may. If she does not want to be chaste, the husband cannot make her preserve her chastity by force. Purity belongs to those who remain pure. Hence, it is deemed proper that you should drive away even from your mind the idea of finding fault with . . . Such fault-finding causes the ruin of you both. Also it is sinful and unjust to involve another man on suspicion. It is entirely a sign of weakness. Drive away this weakness. You have done well in putting down such things in your diary.

May God grant you peace and purity. Vithaldas must be doing well.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 49

1 The names have been omitted.
105. LETTER TO SIDDHIMATI

July 2, 1932

DEAR SIDDHIMATI,

Received your letter. Learn Hindi well. What was your weight before? Can you follow Hindi well?

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 61

106. LETTER TO DHIRU

July 2, 1932

DEAR DHIRU,

I am writing to Gajanan\textsuperscript{1} about drawing. It requires some help from others. There must be more of practice.

I am writing slowly the Urdu copy-book. Do you want the copy-book or do you want to see the way. I write the copy-book? If you want to see that, I may tear off the pages. I have written and send them to you. If you want a copy-book it can be had even there.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 61

107. LETTER TO GAJANAN V. KHARE

July 2, 1932

CHIL GAJANAN,

Now you must have learnt to read Gujarati. Dhiru is very keen to learn drawing. A few others also may get ready. If possible, spare some time for them.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 307. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

\footnote{Nephew of Narayan M. Khare; vide the following item.}

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932 93
108. LETTER TO SHANTI

July 2, 1932

DEAR SHANTI,

This time your handwriting is good. Write in the same way. It is good that during silent (prayers) you do not get sleep.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 63

109. LETTER TO LAKSHMI JERAJANI

July 2, 1932

DEAR LAKSHMI,

My hand pains while doing certain work. If is not paralysis. There is no cause for anxiety. Rest is the chief remedy.

Vithaldas had written to me as regards eczema. Radium must be regarded to have been efficacious.

Do send me your daily work.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 63

110. LETTER TO LILADHAR

July 2, 1932

DEAR LILADHAR,

The girls know about the privies. I had only played a joke. Narandas had written about Shanti. Let her remain with you for the present. Remove her stupidity with love. Do not be angry.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 63

1 Niece of Vithaldas Jerajani
111. LETTER TO TRIVANI J. MEHTA

July 2, 1932

DEAR TRIVENI,

Received your letter. You have given a good description. There is much mismanagement in hospitals and hence it is desirable that chaste women should take up the work there. So this is good by way of having some experience. If the mind becomes engrossed in the work, the work is certainly such that to it a life may be devoted.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 63

112. LETTER TO MANJULABEHN M. MEHTA

July 2, 1932

AR MANJULA¹,

Your letter to hand. I have learnt that you are not going to the Ashram for the present. Go there, whenever it is possible for you to go. White your daily time-table. Devdas is convalescing now. You must be getting letters from Maganlal.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. MANJULABEHN
SHETH NAUTAMLAL BHAGWAN MEHTA’S HOUSE
JETPUR, KATHIWAR

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 107

113. LETTER TO RADHA GANDHI

July 2, 1932

DEAR RADHIKA²,

Your letter to hand. As Premkuver is involved in great difficulties, there is little possibility of her going there. Hence, are you, mother and daughter only there? Who does the shopping, etc.? It does not seem that any of the male members are there. Looking to the conveniences of that place, there may not be any need of them. How much do you spend? Have you kept any account? It there pipe water? Is there any news about Rupi \(^1\) again? It seems that you have made good progress.

¹ Wife of Maganlal Mehta, son of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta
² Daughter of Maganlal Gandhi

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

SHRIMATI RADHABEHN GANDHI
BHATIA SANATORIUM
DEOLALI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 111

114. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

_Y. M._
_July 2, 1932_

CHI. VIDYA,

I am very glad that you have gone to Quetta. Derive the fullest benefit from the air there. Walk as much as you can. Describe to me the scenery and the climate of the place. Who are the settlers there?

What you write is absolutely correct. An honest heart is a happy heart. May your happiness grow and stabilize.

Give me any news you may have of Anand. How do you spend your time there?

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

115. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[Before July 3, 1932]\(^2\)

All the food that is digested is not transformed into blood, etc., but what is assimilated is transformed into the various elements which

---

\(^1\) Presumably Rukhi, addressee’s sister
\(^2\) In the source the letter is entered under July 3, 1932, as having been written earlier.
sustain or build the body. In the same way, what we read, should be assimilated by us, just as manure is assimilated by the tree and as a result it bears fruit.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 271

116. LETTER TO MAGANBHAII PATEL

July 2/3, 1932

BROTHEE MAGANBHAII,

Raojibhai’s letter about his lands to hand. In it he writes that you see the necessity of selling the lands, and also believe that the lands will not fetch as much price in the absence of Raojibhai as they would have, if he were present. Instead of coming to a decision himself, Raojibhai has left it to me and Sardar (Vallabhbhai Patel) to decide (the matter). On consultation we have decided that you know most in this matter. There cannot be enough materials before Raojibhai or ourselves to arrive at a decision. Even if you make endeavours and supply us as much information as might be needed, yet it might be considered insufficient. In such matters, decision cannot be and should not be reached without one being actually on the spot. Hence we have cone to the decision that you should do whatever is proper to be done having regard to the circumstances. If you think that is should be sold, you should sell it without any hesitation. And if you feel that it can be kept—must be kept—then wait till Raojibhai is released. You do without fear whatever is more advantageous. We both of us know that Raojibhai is keen on setting apart a piece of land sufficient for building as ashram for the Dharalas. But, if in carrying out that object, less price is realized for the lands or if any debt still remains unpaid, it is not necessary to insist on that. If there is any need for an ashram, it will be seen through when Raojibhai is released.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 47
117. HOW TO OBSERVE TRUTH

Sunday, July 3, 1932

What I said about ahimsā also applies to truth. If we split hairs about issues such as whether one may or may not tell a lie to save a cow and ignore what is daily happening before us, we cannot follow truth. By raising such complicated issues we make truth difficult to discover. If we follow truth today in solving the problems which confront us in our daily life, we shall know instinctively how to act in difficult situations when they arise.

Each of us should examine only himself or herself from this point of view. Do I deceive anybody knowingly? If I believe that B is a bad person but show him that I believe him to be good, I deceive him. Do I try to show, in order to win people’s respect or esteem, that I possess certain virtues which in fact I do not possess? Do I exaggerate in my speech? Do I hide my misdeeds from persons to whom I should confess them? If a superior or co-worker puts me any question, do I evade him? Do I keep back what I ought to declare? If I do any of these things, I am guilty of untruth. Everybody should examine his conduct daily in this manner and try to overcome his shortcomings. One to whom truth has become second nature and who has risen to a state so that he can never speak untruth may not do this. But everyone who has the least trace of untruth in him or who can follow truth only with effort should examine himself daily as explained above and put to himself those or any other similar questions which may occur to him and reply to them. Anybody who follows this practice even for a month will clearly observe a change having taken place in himself.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

118. LETTER TO FULCHAND B. SHAH

July 3, 1932

BHAIUSHRI FULCHAND,

I got your letter of April 31 [sic], 1932, as also Raojibhai’s of June 10, 1932, only today. All of us were glad to read them.

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, June 28/-July 4, 1932; Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 28-6/4-7-1932.
2 From Bombay Secret Abstracts
3 Vide “How to observe ahimsa”, 25-6-1932.
time 15 lines in your letter were completely censored. If it is possible, tell the person who deals with all such letters, or the Superintendent, to show you the portions which he thinks should be censored, so that you may write the letter again. If this is done, the context would not be suddenly broken as happens at present. Tell everybody there not to expect, or wish for, a separate letter from me. Though there is no restriction on me as regards the numbers of letters I can write, I think I myself should put a limit on it. Hence I write as few letters as I can. But I do reply to letters from co-workers in jails, or write to one of them when there are many co-workers in the same jail. That serves the purpose of writing to all of them. If, however, anybody wishes to write to me about something specially, he may certainly do so, as Raojibhai has done. We shall not often get opportunities like the unique one we have got just now for self-examination and study. All of us, therefore, should realize that we should so act and spend our time that we would be able to give a good account of every moment. Even a drop of water should not be wasted. We should regard everything in the country, no matter in whose possession it is, as belonging to us and take care of it and use it accordingly. It is plain that this serves several purposes. Tell the boys and girls there that, when they can use the permission to write letters, they may write to me if they don’t wish to write to anybody else. It is a strange thing that the rains have not yet commenced here. By now there should have been quite a good amount of rain. Cultivators are worried. Give the accompanying letter to Raojibhai. That is, what follows is meant for him.

I have discussed the matter with Sardar and both of us have come to the conclusion that neither (he nor I) can give an opinion from here. We cannot know many of the facts without being present on the spot, and hence I have written to Maganbhai and told him that he may do what he thinks best, taking into account all the relevant circumstances. I have written to him quite a long letter to this effect. I received your letter doday and am replying immediately. I have thus not delayed by a single moment. Raojibhai should not worry about the matter at all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9445-b. Courtesy: Chandrakant F. Shah

1 The two sentences which follow have been taken from Bombay Secret Abstracts.

119. LETTER TO DINKAR

July 3, 1932

BROTHER DINKAR,

Your letter to hand. I have stopped all visits, as the visit of Mirabehn has been disallowed. Looking to your weight, it can be considered a great improvement (in your health). Nothing can be done about sanatorium from here. I have received here a book named Vishva Shanti, i.e., world peace. Mahadev and myself have glanced through it. I cannot know anything about its good or bad points, because, really I have not in me the power to appraise poetry. I have not been able to develop that taste. Doctors believe that there is nothing else except that my hand has been tired out; hence I am giving it rest. I have written by mistake that Mahadev has gone through Vishva Shanti. He has not read it.

Blessings from
BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 109

120. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 28/July 4, 1932

CHL. NARANDAS,

I got your mail today. It is seven days today since I started taking milk and fruit. I don’t see any effect on the elbow. Perhaps there may be none. I cannot say positively that they have completely agreed with me. What had agreed perfectly is the experiment of almonds, bread and vegetables. But I will continue milk for the present. I feel slightly afraid of developing constipation. If necessary, I will add a little quantity of vegetable. There is no cause at all for worry on this account.

What you say about Sitala Sahay is right. His letter is rude and seems to have been written in anger. If his expenditure is more, he should send you detailed accounts. If they are all right, there should be no objection to paying him more. Hence, instead of fixing an absolute limit of Rs. 60, it seems to me that the better course would be to ask him to send accounts before paying him more. I have explained other points fully in my letter of yesterday, and, therefore don’t touch upon them here. I need not write more about the Girl family either.

If Dhiru and Kusum do less physical work and take enough milk, their weight will increase.

Do you hear any time from Nirmala Joshi? She may have some information about Lilabehn. Do you know her address?

Do what you think proper regarding Titus. If you are fully satisfied with his work and his demand is in accord with his requirements, it may be proper to pay him that much. It is natural that the dependents of those who had joined the March and who are no longer in the struggle but are employed in some work will expect help from them. If, therefore, we stick to the letter of their pledge, we may perhaps do them injustice.

Parnerkar’s action is highly improper. It is certainly not right to go away without obtaining permission and send a message afterwards. However, since his motives are good and his mind has become very weak, I don’t wish to censure him. And his sacrifice also has been good. If, therefore, you think it proper send some money to his mother. I know that strict justice will not permit that. But very often cold justice becomes injustice. It is extremely difficult to look into the heart of any human being. Hence, whenever it is a question of paying money, my inclination is always to pay something if we can.

Where are Ramarao and Pratap at present? It is enough if Father Elwin is satisfied. He would not expect from us the same attention as Mirabehn could give, nor can we fulfil such an expectation. Few persons would be capable of her careful attention to details when she looks after anybody whom she loves. We cannot, therefore, compete with her. It was very good that the matter of Imam Saheb’s tomb was settled.

You must have read what I wrote to Jivram regarding Annapurna. Sharat Chandra Patnaik, from what you write about him, seems to be a good man. If he marries Annapurna, his motive would be primarily humanitarian. However, Jivram should approve of him and Annapurna should be willing. If Sharat Chandra knows the whole story of Annapurna’s past and still marries her, he would certainly have my blessings, but he would also deserve compliments.

I suppose you have acknowledged receipt of the various

---

1 A graduate of Higginbottom Agriculture College and trained by Parnerkar at the Ashram
2 Dandi March in 1930.
translations of An Autobiography which you have received. I think Keshu spinning 350 rounds of yarn of 50 counts is good speed. On what type of spinning-wheel does he spin?

Even those rooms which contain only luggage should be opened at regular intervals. It is a practice in big office in charge of buildings that the last date on which each building was cleaned and the next date fixed for its cleaning are shown on some part of it. Even if, therefore, the list of future works does not include those items, the dates would be shown on the buildings. The staff would inspect these dates as a matter of routine, so that, if persons have been appointed to attend to such work, it would be carried out in due time without anybody having to remember the dates.

For spinning yarn of fine count, besides good slivers the spindle, the belt and the spindle-holder also are relevant factors. You cannot spin yarn of 50 counts even from the best slivers with the type of belt and spindle in the Magan spinning-wheel. The spindle of the spinning-wheel on which the Andhra women spin yarn of 80 counts is extremely fine, like the wires of an umbrella, and quite small. The belt also is very thin. That is why those women are able to spin yarn of such fine count. Examine your spindle and belt from this point of view. My own experience is that we cannot spin on any other type of spinning-wheel as fine yarn and with as much ease as we can on the Gandiva spinning-wheel, and the chief reason for this is the extremely thin belt of the latter. My eyes tell me that such thin belt will not work on a spinning-wheel which stands vertical. Moreover, we can never achieve on the wheel of the latter the same control as on the Gandiva wheel. For the same reason, a delicate spindle bearer like the one with which the Gandiva wheel is fitted will not work on the other types. We ought to master the art of spinning yarn of the finest count, and those who have very much more experience in this field than I should spin for trial on the different types of spinning-wheels and examine them from this point of view.

I went through your summary. I have said enough on this subject in previous letters, and so I need not write anything here. You need not continue to send such summaries every week. If you make any changes after studying the figures, please inform me about them. If information from more persons is received and if you have any comments to make, please write. I will preserve the register sent by you, so that, if you refer to it in explaining anything, I will consult it and find out the point of the reference. Personally, I learn a great deal from such summaries and they also help me to think clearly. You have done well in giving details about every person which help me to identify him or her.

---

I see from Panditji’s letter that you observe five minutes’ silence in the morning too. If you have found the result of the practice good, let it be continued. My own suggestion, however, was only for the evening prayer. The inmates attend it after tiring work for the whole day and, therefore, may require a little longer time to concentrate their attention in meditation. Five minutes’ silence will help in acquiring such concentration. At the time of morning prayer the condition is quite the opposite, and so silence may not be necessary for the purpose I have explained. Panditji thinks that many of them doze during these five minutes. I have here discussed the necessity or otherwise of five minutes’ silence from a general point of view. From the spiritual point of view, the longer the period of silence during prayer the better it is. But that is only for those who can benefit from it. Please do not understand me to mean that the five minutes’ silence in the morning should be stopped. It is obvious that an excellent practice which has been started ought not to be discontinued in a hurry. I have said all this to tell you that, if you are of the same view as Panditji and would like to reduce five minutes to one minute but refrain from doing so because you had understood my suggestion to mean that I wanted five minutes’ silence at both times, you are free to make a change.

July 3, 1932

There was a hint in Panditji’s letter, and Mahadev also tells me, that children do not get enough sleep. They ought to get at least eight hours’ uninterrupted sleep. They can get that only if they go to bed at 7.30 p.m., assuming that we want them to get up at 3.30 a.m. I also believe that children should get at least eight hours’ sleep. It would be desirable if the grownups also get as many hours of rest. One way of ensuring this would be to start the evening prayer at 7 and finish it at 7.30 or rather at 7.20. Since half an hour is the minimum time required for the prayer, it should start at 6.50. Alternatively, [in the morning] the bell should be given at 4 and the prayer should start at 4.30. Still another way would be to have a separate time for prayer for children, which should be at the commencement of their class. There is, in fact, a prayer at that time. We should be satisfied with that. Apart from that, the children should form the habit of praying [either in the morning or in the evening]. They may pray in the morning whenever they get up. The general time for rising should not be later than 4 a.m. and morning prayer ought not to start later than 4.30. And the children must get at least eight hours’ sleep. Taking these two conditions as essential, you may make any changes that may appear necessary. You will have to decide who should be counted as children. Boys and girls who are neither children nor adolescents may be counted as children if they wish. The rule for them should be that they may continue to be counted as children for one year at the longest. Those who are ill have always been exempted from attending the morning prayers. Indu and other boys like him should be exempted. Whether or not they themselves wish. That is, a boy or girl who is losing weight should not be put to the strain of getting up early. That Indu does not get sleep before ten is certainly not a desirable state of affairs. If his bed is made in the open near yours, he is bound to get sleep. Even though he should be exempted from attending the morning prayer, he must form the habit of sleeping early. Think over all this and make any changes you may think necessary.

Shamal seems to be troubled in his mind. I have advised¹ him to have a talk with you. Without waiting for him to come to you, send for him and ask him what his difficulties are.

There is a letter from Manjula, in which she says that her going to the Ashram has been postponed. Perhaps she has written to you also. She has not given the reason.

There is no change in the condition of my left arm. It seems that it will improve in course of time purely through rest. You need not worry about it at all. I do take milk to please the Superintendent, but at present at any rate I don’t see that it has benefited me much. However, I am continuing it for the present. Along with it I take rotli, instead of bread, and a vegetable with one of the meals. Just now it is the season for grapes in Karachi. Lalwani², therefore, sends parcels of them from time to time and I eat them too. The weight has risen to 104.

About yarn, if you see Shardabehn³ perhaps you may be able to get yarn spun by women for the yajna of spinning. We must—if we can—discover some means of meeting the acute demand for yarn.

How do Jamna and Purushottam spend their time in Ranavav? If you know the details of their daily routine, let me have them.

² Chabildas Rochiram Lalwani, Husband of J. B. Kripalani’s sister
³ Shardabehn Mehta
Inform Ba that I got only one letter written by her. Does she get mine?

BAPU

July 4, 1932

I had written about a few rules for the Ashram and about prayer. These articles did not seem to have been circulated to all. Send copies of them to me. You will find in Mahadev’s cupboard a big French dictionary belonging to him. Send that and the Urdu translation of An Autobiography along with the Urdu books which I have asked Prema to send. Why has Nirmala (Aunt) stopped writing to me? Mahadev desires you to tell Durga that she has not said anything about money and her health in her letter, and that she should write about them in her letter to him. The rotlis for me are made by Mahadev.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8236 Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

121. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

July 4, 1932

DEAR MANGALA,

When did you begin suffering from pain in the chest and waist and for how many years have you been suffering? How do you feel now?

It is true absence of desire when we trust that whatever we do is done by God Himself. The greatest act of one attached to truth is to stick to truth in whatever condition one is placed.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 197

\(^1\) Vide “Prayer”, 19-6-1932 and “Lesson of the national week”, 2-5-1932.

\(^2\) Mahadev Desai’s step-sister
122. TELEGRAM TO PAPA

[July 5, 1932]¹

PAPA²,
GANDHI ASHRAM, TIRUCHENGODU

DEVDAS WIRE NEWS YOUR HUSBAND’S³ DEATH. WE ARE ALL DEEPLY STIRRED BUT YOU WILL NOT GRIEVE OVER DEATH WHICH IS COMMON LOT OF HUMANITY. REMEMBER YOU ARE DAUGHTER OF BRAVE FATHER. MAY GOD GIVE YOU PEACE. LOVE FROM US ALL.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 11

123. TELEGRAM TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

[July 5, 1932]¹

C. RAJAGOPALACHARI PRISONER, DISTRICT JAIL VELLORE

WE ARE DEEPLY GRIEVED OVER PAPA’S BEREAVEMENT OF WHICH DEVDAS HAS SENT WIRE. BUT YOU STAND IN NO NEED CONSOLATION FROM US. GOD MUST BE YOUR ROCK. LOVE FROM US ALL.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 11

124. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

July 5, 1932

DEAR DEVDAS,

Just received your wire. Who can expect Varadachari to die! There was some fear that Papa would pass away, but Varadachari has

¹ Vide “Letter to Devdas Gandhi”, 5-7-1932.
² Daughter of C. Rajagopalachari
³ Varadachari
⁴ Vide the following item.
passed away. Inscrutable are His ways. It is good that the God of Death does not renounce anybody's friendship. Sooner or later he shows his liking for all. I have wired to Papa as under: (Wire in English). To Raja as under: (Wire in English).

I have sent wires as above.

Raja will be shocked but his power of endurance is strong and so there need be no anxiety. Death as such seldom affects me. What touches me is the miseries suffered by relatives. What greater ignorance can there be than to grieve over death?

You must have received the letters I have sent. The letter which was thought to have been lost has been handed over to you. This information has been sent by your Superintendent to the Superintendent here. So your hunger for my letters must be satisfied.

We all three are happy. There is nothing new to write about. I have already written to you that I have begun taking roti and milk.

Blessings from
BAPU

---

1 Not reproduced here; vide the preceding two items.
2 ibid
3 The Paragraph which follows has been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I.
125. LETTER TO SARALADEVI CHOWDHARANI

July 5, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I was grieved to note from the papers that your mother was no more. My sympathies go out to you and Deepak1 in your sorrow. Sardar and Mahadev join me in sending you condolences.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SMT. SARALADEVI CHOWDHARANI2
CALCUTTA

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 159

126. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

July 5, 1932

Bhai Ghanshyamdas.

Only today I got your letter3 of June 27. In my letter of June 294 I have acknowledged receipt of the khadi. I have also asked for some books that came to my mind on reading your booklets. Numerous questions have occurred to me while reading the literature but I intend to take them up if any remain unsolved after the completion of the present study. These days I constantly manage to read something or other that must add something however little to my knowledge. I am still reading Prof. Shah’s book. After that I shall start on Iyer’s book on foreign exchange which he has sent to me.

At present, mills function side by side with the production of khadi and it will continue thus for some time. Ultimately a contest between the two is inevitable as our ideal is to produce khadi in all the

1 Son of the addressee
2 Wife of Pandit Rambluj Dutt Chowdhari and grand-niece of Rabindranath Tagore
3 The addressee, who was himself a lover of khadi and jaggery although owning cotton-mills and sugar factories, had referred to the rivalry between khadi and mill-cloth and between jaggery and sugar.
villages. Thus mills will no longer have a place in India when each village can produce khadi. But for the time being people like you can have both the activities at the same time provided the ideal is kept before the public in order to assert the truth. People so inclined will continue to indulge in criticism, it cannot be helped.

I do not possess sufficient knowledge about jaggery but I have an impression that mills will remain indispensable for the production of sugar. Sugar cannot be easily manufactured in villages, nor can every village grow sugar-cane, which means that production of jaggery cannot be a universal occupation. Perhaps I am wrong in thinking so. However, if a person can advocate mills as well as khadi he can assuredly talk of jaggery and sugar factories at the same time.

The more I study of economics the firmer I grow in my belief that the methods suggested in these books for eradicating poverty are not at all efficacious. The method lies in working out a scheme wherein the production and consumption happen to be simultaneous and this scheme can work only with the revival of village industries.

I have started taking milk on the Superintendent’s insistence, also chapati and vegetable. Vegetable, I take once a day and chapati twice a day. But no longer do I notice the cleansing of the bowels that I experienced formerly on a diet of roti, almonds and a vegetable. But I will not give up milk in a hurry now that I have started it. I shall watch the results. These days I am taking the grapes sent from Karachi by Kripalaniji’s brother-in-law.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 7901. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

127. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

July 6, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. By trying to give artistic appearance to the envelope, you spoiled it. This is bound to be the result when one tries to create beauty which meets no practical need. Sardar makes no effort to give to an envelope artistic appearance for its own sake; such appearance is the by-product of practical utility and, therefore, please the eye. If we wish to use again an envelope which has been used once, the address written on it should be covered up. For that purpose Sardar stuck over the written lines finely cut slips of paper of appropriate sizes, and that gave the envelope an attractive appearance. But he was not satisfied with this. So now he turns the envelopes received from there inside out, so that he need not paste slips over them and the envelopes may look as good as new. You will discover this if you examine them closely. Your slips with zigzag edges had half come off and looked very shabby. And they served no practical purpose. Your labour, therefore, was wasted, and so were the time and the paper. That was a loss to the public. Draw two lessons from this: never imitate anyone blindly, and beauty created for its own sake is no beauty. It is said about the great cathedrals in Europe that all their beautiful features serve a practical purpose. Whether this is true or not, there can be no doubt about the truth of the principle which I have stated.

Your letter this time contained very little besides a criticism of the Minister. I think it unnecessary to consider whether or not your criticism is justified, since it can have no effect. The statement “judge not lest ye be judged” deserves to be engraved in our hearts. I do not know if there is a Gujarati saying with a similar meaning. If there is any in Marathi, send it to me.

I should like to have a list of the Urdu books. In any case, send Shibli’s volume. I know that Khalifa’s biography, too, is there.

I should certainly like it if you would prefer to die rather than eat fish. Does that mean that you would not take codliver oil too? You need not consider what I would wish you to do. I have put the question simple to know your own attitude. You should increase milk/curds and/or ghee in your diet. It must also include occasionally some ripe fruit in place of uncooked vegetable. Don’t you grow papayas there? Or tomatoes? Or bhaji1 of any kind? Why should you, yourself, not grow some tomatoes? And also lettuce—it grows quickly. Unripe papay ought not to be eaten in large quantity. Nor should it be eaten daily. Introduce this change without thinking about the expense. Keep up Kuhne-baths with hot water. It is very necessary to massage the spot where you feel the pain. Any girl will be glad to do the massage.

1 Vegetables
Vidya’s dullness will disappear if you try to teach her with love. Rambhau’s case is a little difficult. There is only one remedy, however. There are three influences working on him. If they do not work in harmony, there will be a problem. The three influences are: Panditji, Lakshmibehn and you or anybody else who looks after him. Only love will enable you to discover a way out of this difficulty. In the measure that your love becomes wider in scope, in that measure will your capacity to reform such children increase.

Be generous towards the grown-up girls in the Ashram. They do not purposely shirk work and sit idle at home; they do not work because they become helpless. You and I cannot judge the degree of their helplessness. They alone can do so. Their judgment may, of course, be wrong. But we should be satisfied if their motive is not dishonest. Among the grown-up girls, think about Anandi, Kusum\(^1\) and Nimu. What could all these girls do? Anandi is not likely to shirk work. Kusum at any rate will never do so. Nimu is burdened with two children. She hardly knows how to bring them up, but has already become a mother. How much work, therefore, can we expect from her? Perhaps you will be able to think of many more instances. We cannot weight all such cases in scales with which we weigh gold and pearls. You will also see from experience that as you become more generous you will find it easier to make others work. I don’t know how far it is true, but is said [about me] that I have great capacity for making men work. If this is true, the reason is that I never suspect anyone of shirking work. I am satisfied with the work that a person does. I then ask him to do more, and he does. There are also somehow say that there will be hardly anyone whom people deceive as much as they do me. Even if this assessment is proved correct, I shall not feel sorry. I would be satisfied if people give me a testimonial that I deceive no one in the world. If nobody else gives such a testimonial to me, I certainly give it to myself.

I hate untruth more than anything else.

I don’t believe in the principles of “the greatest good of the greatest number” and “survival of the fittest”. For man the rule is, the good of all, the progress of all and “the weak first”. We bipeds

---

\(^1\) Vidya R. Patel

\(^2\) Kusum Gandhi, whom Narandas Gandhi regarded as his daughter are human beings, but we have not yet risen above the nature of quadrupeds. Dharma lies in doing so.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10293. Also C.W. 6741. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

128. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

July 6, 1932

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I got your letter. You should not belittle your idea of sewing for yajna. Its real value lies in turning to use even the poorest quality of khadi. We cannot afford to pay for sewing. However, those who are ready to do sewing as free service can give even to the most unattractive khadi the value which devotees of God give to flowers by making garlands for the deity from them. For instance, one who gives such service should not make shirt from bad khadi, but he can make quilts, bagos or pillows from it. We can think of a number of things made from such khadi which would not need to be washed and which could be used for a long time in the same condition. I had a hand spun and hand-woven wollen blanket with me, which I had received as a gift. It had been so much worn out be use that, if used longer, it would have not torn out into pieces. But, being of an ingenious turn of mind and having a friend like Janakibehn\(^1\) who is ever ready to help me, I gave the blanket to her and told her how she could make it into a new one. The blanket is still with me. I deliberately took it with me, when I visited the Royal Palace in England.\(^2\) Let me explain, too, how the blanket was made new. It was sewn on to a piece of thick khadi, the whole surface being stitched both length-wise and breadth-wise. The wornout woollen blanket, being thus lined with khadi, become as good as new and gave more warmth than before. This does not mean that the effort which you are making for improving the quality of yarn is unnecessary. I daily realize the necessity of such effort. But such improvement will not reduce the importance of sewing for yajna or dispense with it. The love of khadi has still not spread widely in the country. It means, in other words, that love of the poor has not spread so, or, even where it exists, the people who have it

---

\(^1\) Wife of Jamnalal Bajaj
\(^2\) During the Round Table Conference in 1931 are ignorant and are not yet convinced that the best way of showing their love is by patronizing khadi. If they can be convinced of this, your discovery can become very useful. I have not, therefore, become indifferent to it in the slightest degree. Do write a book on how to spin better yarn. But do not make a single statement in it the truth of which you have not tested. Nor should you deduce any general principle only on the basis of exclusively your experience. Others also must have found it true. If you have not checked all your statements in this manner, postpone writing the book. I observe again and again that books which have no basis in experience are practically without any value. For instance, if anybody translated Charaka1, the work would not be of any use today since we cannot find many of the herbs and plants described by him and, with regard to those which we do find, cannot prove the properties attributed to them. The most important thing therefore is that you yourself should spin the finest possible yarn of different counts and, while doing so, analyse and note the contribution of the spindle, the type of the spinning-wheel, the quality of the cotton used, the quality of the carding and your own, that is, the spinner’s skill towards the result. Then tally your experience with that of other spinners. A book based on such data will accepted without question, like a bar of gold weighed on the scale kept in the market for public use. You asked me what limit I have fixed with regard to the count of the yarn spun. Previously I had fixed it at 20, then raised it to 40. I do not lay down any limit now. If we can get or grow cotton from which we can spin yarn of 400 counts and which we can card well enough for such purpose, and if we can get men or women spinners who have sufficient patience to spin yarn of such quality, I would certainly desire that we should reach that level. In short, I think it very important that we should go in this direction as far as we can, for this is likely immediately to enhance the value of the art of hand-spinning. I am sure you know that a friend of Satis Babu had reached up to 150 counts. The khadi woven from it is preserved in Satis Babu’s collection. But along with this I also insist that as we progress in spinning yarn of finer and finer count the yarn should always be strong and even. I cannot say what marks any specimen of yarn should earn for passing the test in these respects. Only you and other experienced spinners can say that. I certainly have a rough test for this

1 Author of Charakasamhita, a manual of Ayurvedic medicine purpose, and it is that any weaver should be able to weave the yarn without difficulty. If a weaver rejects a lot, I would treat it as below par though it may have passed our test. When I get the cup, I will try the method suggested by you and test the strength of my yarn. Even without testing it, however, I know that it is not good enough, and I am myself not satisfied with it. Because of the pain in my elbow, I have had to change from one hand to the other [for drawing the yarn]. My hand had set very well on the Gandiva spinning-wheel and I could spin on it yarn of sufficiently uniform quality as I wished, though the speed was not much to speak of. But I was obliged to draw the thread with the right hand and then to spin on the Magan spinning-wheel, with the result that it is only now that I have acquired some control over it. As if this was not enough, I thought it my duty to use up the very inferior quality of slivers we had and I began spinning them. I have now resumed spinning with good slivers since a few days ago, and so, by the time your cup arrives and I try it, my yarn will have become good enough to pass the test. Previously I used to spin yarn of about 25 counts, but after I started spinning with the Magan wheel I remain at about 19 counts. Probably I will go up now. I think I have now answered all your questions. Have courage and cultivate strength of mind. Don’t think too much. How is Motibehn’?

I have received the cup.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3755

129. LETTER TO FEROZABEHN TALEYARKHAN

July 6, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

Received your letter. You must be having the benefit of cold weather. Information has been received about Devdas being completely cured and hence there is no cause for anxiety. You are keeping yourself well-informed. Ba is happy. My visits are still disallowed. Vandemataram from the Sardar and Mahadev.

Blessing from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 173

1 Addresse’s wife
130. LETTER TO PARAMANAND

July 6, 1932

BROTHER,

I have today learnt from a newspaper the news of your wife’s death. When you were imprisoned in the Andamans I had come to know her and was much impressed by her simplicity. May God grant you peace and patience.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 163

131. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

July 6, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I have both your letters. Whenever there is doubt about the grammar of a Hindi word, is not consulting a dictionary the right course? One who knows Sanskrit will commit fewer mistakes in using his words. But a word used in Sanskrit in a particular sense would not, as a rule, be used in the same sense in Hindi. We should therefore regard the dictionary as an authority. And where the help of the dictionary is not available, we should regard one who knows Sanskrit as an authority. I looked up the word nirutsaha [wanting in enthusiasm] in the Hindi dictionary which is with me, and there also it is termed an adjective. Hence one who knows Sanskrit and the dictionary both agree about it. I write all this merely out the love of language. I expect a higher knowledge of the language from those who know a particular language. I also expect them to use it correctly. Hence I asked about the word nirutsaha in my last letter¹. I have always thought your knowledge of Hindi to be sound and I expect you to be more and more vigilant about it day by day. Someone must dedicate his life in the service of Hindi. Politics is always on our neck. But this cannot be nor should it be an exclusive field. We might have willingly or unwillingly plunged into it, but as soon as its activities calm down, we should return to our pursuit. Also not all of us need plunge into politics at all times. Hence we should select, according to our capacity and inclination, any of the many permanent and constructive activities. You certainly have a liking for Hindi. Now I would like you to think of dedicating your life for the spread of Hindi after adding to your knowledge of Hindi as much as you can. I do not mean to say that you should make this resolve soon. For the present you may carry on what you are doing. Most of your time is already taken up by Hindi. Whether you should stick to Hindi till the end of your life will become clear by itself in course of time. Just now I have simply sown the seed.

Now about the Ramayana. What you write on this subject is true. I do not regard the Ramayanas such as by Radhasoami, etc., to be refined works. The Ramayana of Tulsidas is a work of great refinement. We only have to create interest in it. We can surely bring ant an abridged Ramayana in Tulsidas’s own language. I had made an attempt with regard to the “Balakanda”. Most probably there is a copy in the Ashram. Twenty years have passed since then. If I were to take up the task again, perhaps I would choose entirely different quatrains and couplets from it. Prabhudas has also made an attempt in this direction. As you are engaged in teaching, it will be useful if you did something in this direction. Also you ought not to have much difficulty. Mahadev tells me that two or three such attempts have already been made in the U.P. But that need not deter you. There is no harm if a fourth is added to them. People of different temperaments, keeping in mind children or people of a different class, would make different sections. I will not insist if you do not get time during the evening prayer. The Hindi classes are always there. Try to create interest in the Ramayana whenever possible. Also if some wish to study the Ramayana out of devotion, and if you can spare time, you may arrange for such a class once or twice a week. But I do not at all insist on it. I am only expressing my desire. You alone can say how and to what extent it can be carried out.

You must be perturbed, as I write all this. I think your work is going on well. Comparatively you were never more at ease than now and I do not at all wish to disturb you or make your mind unsteady

---

1 The following two sentences are from Bombay Secret Abstracts.
2 Presumably Radheshyam Kathavachak, author of a popular Hindi Ramayana
3 Vide “Tulsidas’s Ramayana”, 14-10-1908.
by putting before you new ideas or schemes. These thoughts came to my mind on reading your letter and so I have placed them before you. Accept out of them whatever you can fully understand, digest and put them into execution, and forget the rest. Even if you discarded the whole lot, I would not be shocked. I have only one mighty desire for you that you may feel yourself entirely at ease and may not be embarrassed at all.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9643. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra. Also Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, pp. 213-9

132. LETTER TO MATAPRASAD GUPTA

[July 6, 1932]

BROTHER MATAPRASADJI,

Received your letter as well as the book. Prisoners are prohibited from giving their opinions is regard to books. Therefore please excuse (me). Moreover, I am not entitled to express an opinion on a book on the culinary art, and I cannot express one.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 171

133. LETTER TO AN AMERICAN CORRESPONDENT

July 7, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I was touched by your letter. If you can possibly stand the climate of this country and the strenuous life of the Ashram, I would be delighted to have you as a member. There is no fee to be paid and you will not be called upon to pay for your board and lodging, so long as you can share the common meal. But the life is hard and incredibly simple. All the inmates are expected to labour in the field and the factory for a certain number of hours daily. All work, including scavenging, is done by the inmates. The dress we wear is 1 What follows is from Bombay Secret Abstracts.

2 The letter is placed in the source along with other letters of this date. In the “Diary” it is entered under July 4.
also very simple and is all hand spun and hand-woven, and sewn at the Ashram. If, therefore, you feel inclined to venture out, whilst you are welcome, I would warn you against coming unless you have enough funds to take you back to America in the event of the climate or the institution not being agreeable to you. In spite of this letter [if] you desire to come to India and join the Ashram, I would like you to see Mr. Richard Gregg, who has lived at the Ashram for a long time and knows all about it, and you will not think of coming unless he gives you encouragement. His address is: Richard Hurst Hill, Esq., Spl. Asstt. to the President, Howard University, Washington, U.S.A.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 9319. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

134. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

July 7, 1932

CHI. MANIBEHN (PARIKH),

Mahadev has talked to me about your letter to him. How can you help if your body does not give service? If all those inmates of the Ashram who cannot work were to be asked to leave, we would have to send away many of them. You need not feel ashamed. Those who spare their bodies and shirk work should feel ashamed. If the Ashram cannot maintain persons like you, it should be considered useless.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5970. Also C.W. 3287. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

135. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

July 7, 1932

MY DEAR DAUGHTER RAIHANA,

I have not received any letter from you this week so far. I have read with great attention the bhajan and the ghazal which you sent to me. I liked both of them and fully understand them now. The bhajan is easy to understand, but there was some difficulty in understanding the ghazal as it contained new words. But I fully understood it after reading it over two or three times. The ghazal is very good indeed. I suppose “Zafar” is the nom de plume of Emperor Bahadur Shah, is it not? Send me more such ghazals from time to time. You wrote to me once that you would find out and send a suitable book for me. If you have forgotten your promise, please remember it now and send a book if you find one. At present I am reading some books published by the Jamia Millia. All of them are full of good thoughts. Two of the books were plays. The book I am reading at present contains stories like the “Kimiyaagar” and others. Have you seen these books? Convey respectful greetings from us all to Father and Mother. As for you, a little squeezing of your ear on my behalf, which may be done by Kamal. I am waiting for a letter from Hamida. Uncle Sardar is still reading Amir Ali’s book. The rains have now set in here. Cultivators were worrying. The weather has become now fairly cool. I hope Pashabhai’s sister is all right now.¹

You should correct in the foregoing not only spelling mistakes but grammar mistakes also. The Urdu book which you send to me will be more useful if it also contains a glossary of ordinary words, rules of grammar and spelling, etc. If there is no such book you need not trouble yourself.

Blessings from
BAPU

FROM A PHOTOSTAT OF THE URDU/GUJARATI: S.N. 9647. ALSO BOMBAY SECRET ABSTRACTS, HOME DEPARTMENT, SPECIAL BRANCH, FILE NO. 800 (40) (3), PT. II, P. 151

136. LETTER TO ZOHRA BANU ANSARI

July 7, 1932

MY DEAR DAUGHTER ZOHRA,

You will be surprised to read this letter. The reason for writing this is that now the Bapa¹ has been released, you may write to me about his health. (Let me also know) how much weight he has lost. What have you been doing all these days? Sardar Vallabhbhai and Mahadev Desai are with me. We are all in perfect health. Convey our respects to (your) father and mother. May God give you long life and may He make you great servant of the country! Write to me soon. If you write a beautiful hand, then alone I shall be able to read it.

MOHANDAS GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 153

¹ This paragraph is in Urdu.
² Dr. M.A. Ansari
137. LETTER TO RATILAL P. MEHTA

July 7, 1932

DEAR RATILAL,

Have you not completely forgotten me now? Do not remove Shashi¹ from the Sharda Mandir at all. He is being taught properly there. You must be happy.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 191

138. LETTER TO KUSUM

July 7, 1932

DEAR KUSUM (JUNIOR),

What was the question you asked me? I have entirely forgotten. You write it again and I will answer it. I thought that I had already answered all questions. It is certainly good to absorb the rays of the sun sitting under a neem tree. You should start taking a hip-bath. By it, the temperature will certainly go down. Rest is certainly the principal item. You should not feel tired at all when you go out for a walk. When you can read and play only the sitar, how do you feel tired? Raichandhbaina Lekho, (or writings of Raichandbhai), all parts of Kavya Dohan, Naval Granthaval, Astodaya, Gujarati translation of Shakuntala, selections from the Gujarati Reading Series, works of Kakasaheb, books by Kishorelalbhai, etc. All these will be more than enough. Many more can also be mentioned.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 191

¹ Addressee’s son
139. LETTER TO SITALA SAHAY

July 7, 1932

BROTHER SITALA SAHAY,

Our letter to hand. I have carefully gone through it. It is not proper that you should compete with Prabhudas. It is likely that Prabhudas’s expenses might be less as he gets some other conveniences. Some estimate can be arrived at from the expenses incurred by Prabhudas. But, as a matter of fact, the unavoidable expenses only are to be taken into account. A big amount was to be spent for Rasik all of a sudden. Maganlal fell ill and died at such a place in Patna that no expenses were incurred. One time, Krishnadas did not incur any expense. But when he was removed to Dehradun, the expenses rose at once. Hence, ultimately every case is to be separately considered. We can only desire and demand from them that they should spend money thoughtfully and keep an account of the money spent. The Ashram can spend so far as it can afford to do it. When the Ashram cannot afford, we should all assemble in the Ashram and suffer the consequences and while so doing should laugh and enjoy the pleasure. I have suggested this to Narandas also. On looking at the bill of Padma, if there is anything to be said, it should be written to you if you are there or to Padma. Is not this proper?

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 211

140. LETTER TO LAKSHAMI

July 7, 1932

DAUGHTER LAKSHAMI

If Devdas had not sent me a wire, from where could I have got intimation of Papa’s condition? I hope you are at present working like a brave woman. Please let me have all information about Papa. I have written a letter for Papa and I am sending it along with this. Now Anna must have come to the Ashram. Tell him to

1 Addressee’s daughter
2 Daughter of C. Rajagopalachari, who later married Devdas Ghandhi write to me.

Do not spoil your health by worrying. Fear of death and sorrow should be abandoned altogether. Why should there be pain and fear for a thing which is inevitable for every human being? It is ignorance to regard death as a punishment from God. Death is a gift to man from God.

I expect a long letter from you.

Blessings from
BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 149

141. LETTER TO SHAMAL R. RAVAL

July 8, 1932

CHI. SHAMAL,

There are many mill workers who never touch a drop of liquor. If your brother does not listen to you, you should stop associating with him. Pray of God to grant him good sense. First you should politely try as well as you can to persuade him to stop drinking. Anybody who is ill is expected from yajna. It is good to do such work at fixed times. But if one cannot do it on some day at the time fixed, one may do it at some other time.

Liquor cannot prevent any disease.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3144. Also C.W. 2879. Courtesy: Shamal R. Raval

142. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

July 8, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

A flower is just like ourselves. It blooms at its proper time. Then it may be said to have grown up.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5777. Also C.W. 3000. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai
143. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

July 8, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

It is certainly good that those who feel sleepy during the prayers keep standing. One reason why the feet of those who stand up ache is that they do not know how to stand. Anybody who keeps his feet on the ground thus, A, and who stands erect can stand for a long time without getting tired. One who is not accustomed to standing will certainly feel tired for a day or two. But afterwards he will not feel tired. We should show love for those who follow the wrong path, and serve them, but we ourselves should follow the right path. If we do this, in time the other person will come to the right path. One who cultivates devotion to God, whether he is working or resting, teaches devotion to others too. Following the path of truth in life helps us in every way.

Your questions seem to have been asked for the sake of asking them.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

144. LETTER TO NATHURAM TRIKAMDAS

July 8, 1932

CHI. NATHURAM,

One who does not share in the work cannot be called a partner.

There is certainly himsa in castrating a bull.

The sacred thread worn by one cannot be used as belt for the spinning-wheel.

One who uses authority over others without consulting them is an autocrat.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II
145. LETTER TO GOKIBEHN

July 8, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I have been wanting to write to you since a month ago and had, therefore, asked for your address. I have just got it. I hope you enjoy peace of mind. Does anybody stay with you? Do write to me from time to time.

Jai Shri Krishna from

BAPU

SMT. GOKIBEHN
KARSANDAS DHARAMSINH’S BUNGALOW
KRISHNA BHUWAN
BORIVLI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9813

146. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

July 8, 1932

CHI. MANU,

If a child does not like milk, how can he grow well? If you drink milk only when you are hungry, you will come to like it. During the five minutes’ silence at the prayer time, you should repeat the name of Rama. You should not tease a child who is easily teased. If we keep a diary, we know what we did at what time and our laziness disappears.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7433. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

1 Aunt of Shantikumar Morarjee
147. LETTER TO PUNJABHAI H. SHAN

July 8, 1932

DEAR PUNJABHAI,

To one who is sinless, death is a bed of happiness. When we have taken to heart the lesson that birth and death are one and the same thing, we should know that we have freed ourselves from the cycle of birth and death.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 201

148. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

July 8, 1932

DEAR PUSHPA,

You have improved your handwriting very much.

To write a biography means to write whatever we know about the life of a person which is fit to be published. If one feels sleepy at the prayer time, one must stand up.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 197

149. LETTER TO BALABHADRA

July 8, 1932

DEAR BALABHADRA¹,

I am not satisfied with your letter. The fact that questions do not occur means that you do not want to ask questions. But that does not mean that one who has a question to ask should write a letter. You write in a clear hand what you are doing, seeing and thinking about. If you go through my writings you will get the answers to the questions asked by you. Do you remember what you had asked? If anyone commits a fault, his elder prevents him from doing so. One should not talk at the time of yajna.

¹ A student at the Ashram

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 201

150. LETTER TO SHANTI

July 8, 1932

DEAR SHANTI,

Countless insects are born during the rains. You should not collect the snails. Such insects are the creation of God. We do not know the use of all of them.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 193

151. LETTER TO JAYA

July 8, 1932

DEAR JAYA,

When we meet a thief, we should request him not to steal, if we have courage and love for him. We must endure it if he beats us.

Sleep must be without dreams If you are at fault and the elders do not punish you, this is mercy.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 193

152. LETTER TO ANANDI

July 8, 1932

DEAR ANANDI,

I shall see how long you remember your irritability. It is good that you take milk regularly. How can I forget the stick while taking a walk in the evening? Girls like you should read books selected by the teacher. Then you will learn to select the books.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 195

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
153. LETTER TO MAHAVIR GIRI

July 8, 1932

DEAR MAHAVIR,

Now you must have received the money. All should keep the diary complete. You all write to me the full programme for a day or two. Durga' must be better now.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 199

154. LETTER TO INDU N. PAREKH

July 8, 1932

DEAR INDU,

It is very good that you have confidence in Narandas. As he says it is possible that you will benefit by being patient in taking food and sleeping for a long time. Do you get motions properly?

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 201

155. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

July 8, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

It is my belief that nobody really knows the origin of the name Bharatakhand. But it is said the name Bharatakhand came from Bharat, the son of Shakuntala'. You need not give any importance to things like the shaking of legs, etc. In olden times, if there was knowledge in one direction there was also ignorance in another.

We may describe the sister as a sahadharmacharini if she is staying with her brother. But it is customary to use that term only for a wife. I always tear up the letters.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9953. Courtesy: Sharadabehn G. Chokhawala

1 Addressee’s sister
2 Wife of Dushyanta, hero of Kalidasa’s Abhijnanashkuntalam

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932 127
156. LETTER TO E.E. DOYLE

July 9, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

Upon inquiring of Major Bhandari why there has been recently irregularity about my post, I find that his orders are to send all my outgoing and incoming post to the Government. If this procedure means interminable delay in the despatch of the outgoing post and the delivery to me of the incoming post, I should lose all interest in this, what to me is, healthy mental food. I do not write idly. Nor, so far as I am aware, do I transgress the limits to which I may go in writing to my friends. If the Government intend to continue to let me write the letters I have been writing hitherto, I should like to be sure of regularity about the handing in of my correspondence. The letters to and from the Ashram are regularly written. I attach the greatest importance to this correspondence, including my letters to and from Shrimati Mirabai. I should like to know at the earliest possible moment where I stand in the matter of my post.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40), Part I, p. 239

157. LETTER TO P.G. MATHEW

July 9, 1932

MY DEAR MATHEW,

In ‘God is Truth’, ‘is’ certainly does not mean ‘equal to’ nor does it merely mean ‘is truthful’. Truth is not a mere attribute of God but He is That. He is nothing if He is not That. Truth in Sanskrit means Sat. Sat means ‘Is’. Therefore Truth is implied in ‘Is’. God is, nothing else is. Therefore the more truthful we are, the nearer we are to God. We are only to the extent that we are truthful.

The illustration of hen and her chickens is good. But better still is that of the Lord and His serf. The latter is far from the former because both are mentally so far apart thought physically so near.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Hence Milton’s “mind is its own place”; and the Gita’s “man is the author of his own freedom or bondage.”

It is to realize this freedom that I would have us to labour as pariahs and labourers.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1555. Also Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I., p. 279

158. LETTER TO BHAU PANSE

July 9, 1932

CHI. BHAU,

I also did not feel happy about the first stanza in our prayer. But on thinking more deeply about it, I realized that reciting it daily with proper understanding of its meaning was useful. Our reason certainly tells us that we are not this physical body, but are the witness who dwells in it. The stanza describes this witness, and then the seeker asserts that he is that witness—the Brahman. Only those who daily strive to become that and loosen the bond of their physical bodies can make such an assertion. Whenever one realizes that one has forgotten one’s real nature or is overcome with fear or with the dualities of love and hatred, pleasure and pain, etc., one should remember the qualities of the Brahman and try to become free from the dualities. By so doing, one becomes that on which one daily meditates. We may, therefore, daily recite that stanza with humility and firm aspiration and keep in mind our assertion in all our actions.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6733. Also C.W. 4476. Courtesy: Bhau Panse

1 Paradise Lost, I. 253

2 “न एव मनुष्यांकारणं बंधोपधक:” This, however, is not from the Gita but from the Mahabindu Upanishad.

3 “Early in the morning I call to mind that Being which is felt in the heart, which is sat (the eternal),chit (knowledge) and sukham (bliss), which is the state reached by perfect men and which is the super-state. I am that immaculate Brahman which ever notes the states of dream, wakefulness and deep sleep, not this body, the compound made of the elements—earth, water, space, light and air.”
159. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN GANDHI

July 9, 1932

CHI. JAMNA,

I got your letter. If you cannot stay at Ranavav during the monsoon, you may certainly go to the Ashram. However, if you do not keep well there, we shall have to think about another place [where you can stay]. I have also a fear that your mental condition when you live in the Ashram is not the same as when you live elsewhere. You may eat in the Ashram and same food which you eat outside and cooked in the same manner. You may of course make any change in it that may be necessary for your health. I certainly wish that the air and water of the Ashram may suit you. They will certainly suit you some day.

Ask Purushottam to write to me. Let him give a detailed description of how you live there.

You may be said to have formed good relations with your neighbours. Let me know for how many days you stayed there and how much you spent.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 856. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

160. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

July 9, 1932

MY DEAR AMTUL,

The monthly irregularity will go, if you will persist in the friction sitz-bath. Thousands of women have benefited by the treatment assisted of courses by a simple diet.

Thought I wrote¹ to Dr. Sharma, I have not heard from him.

I do not want you to send me your diary book. I simply wanted your day’s work. This you have given quite nicely.

Your Urdu writing is quite clear this time. I have been able to decipher every word. It is undoubtedly better than your English. Try to write more and more in Urdu. And when you will let me. I too shall ¹ Vide “Letter to Dr. Hiralal Sharma”, 18-6-1932.

write to you in Urdu.

The Government have not yet granted permission for Mirabehn to see me. And if it is not granted, I am afraid I must deny myself the happiness of seeing the others.

But you must not worry.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 248. Also Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 207

161. LETTER TO NIRMALABEHN GANDHI

July 9, 1932

DEAR NIMU,

I read your letter to Ramdas. What a fool you are! You do not write to me, nor speak to Narandas about your difficulties and write about them to poor Ramdas! Was it for this that I got you married to Ramdas? Moreover, the teaching in the Ashram is to the effect that a woman should not believe herself to be dependent, weak, should not go on looking to her husband, but should make her own way (in life). Take the instance of Gangadevi. When Totaramji became a pauper, it was Gangadevi who kept up his spirit. Your difficulty is nothing. If there is any need for a boy, Narandas will get one. You should place all your difficulties before Narandas as if he were your father. You certainly have confidence in him. This much is my advice. Do not engage a boy for doing Ashram work. Taking proper care of children I consider to be the work of the Ashram. The responsibility to taking care of children lies with the Ashram. You are doing your duty on behalf of the Ashram. Hence, believe that you have given all the hours to the Ashram. In spite of this, if you require a boy, it is a different matter. You write to me properly. Otherwise I will have to bring you round.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 205
DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

God willing, we shall meet on the 21st. You know well enough things don’t always happen as we intend or wish. See, Papa seemed to be on her death-bed, but she recovered. Her husband, Varadachari, was strong and healthy, but he passed away after a brief illness, leaving for Raja a widowed daughter. Papa is his dearest child. She is a strong-willed girl and will bear the blow with courage. If knowledge sinks deep into the heart, one does not feel the loss beyond one’s strength to endure. For the wise are equally unaffected by birth and death. As this recent example of the uncertainty of life was fresh in my mind, I started the letter with “God willing”. We shall meet on the 21st if our wish to meet on that date is in accord with His will. And even if we don’t, we shall be equally thankful.¹

Ashram letter is sent along with this.

Now this for Ramdas: Nimu’s letter and the lines written by you on the blank part of the sheet reached me. There is nothing impolite in your writing on the blank portion. In my opinion it would be impolite not to use that part. Again, in prison we can feel greedy about everything and we should keep up this greed throughout life. This is also a prison in that the body is even a jail. So that it would be well if we can observe all the good rules of this small prison throughtout the life. If we cannot observe them, we should admit out weakness to that extent and should try to observe them as far as we can.

I have written to Narandas that after talking with Nimu, he should do what is proper.² I have jokingly given a mild rebuke to Nimu.³ Why does she trouble you? Why did she not write to me direct? Why did she not make matters clear with Narandas? Is it for troubling you here also that she is married to you? Again a girl brought up in the Ashram would not believe hereself to be weak or dependent. She would find her way out. She would not sit (idly) looking at the face of her husband. What a (good) example Gangadevi had set! Totaramji became a pauper; she kept up his spirits and did not allow his beggarliness to be felt at all. If she does not write to me hereafter she will have to be brought round. I have written to her to this effect. I have expressed my opinion that she should not engage a boy servant to do the Ashram work. A mother who takes proper care of her children is also doing the Ashram work, because so long as Nimu is in the Ashram the responsibility of taking care of the children rests with the Ashram, i.e., Nimu by taking care of the children discharges her duty to the Ashram and so it is equivalent to doing Ashram work. You need not be anxious over it. You have done right in throwing that anxiety on me. At present my letters are being checked. There is no reason why they should do so. But are we not prisoners? Hence perhaps they may reach the Ashram late. Even in that case there is no cause for anxiety. Your weight must increase. The doctor says that Ramdas can ask for and eat whatever he likes. If milk is necessary, it should be taken. You should not allow the body to become weak. I know your nature. I am also of the same views. But I would not hesitate to take those things which my other companions do not get if I am convinced that my health requires them. It is a different matter if we know that the other companions also need them.

¹ This paragraph has been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol.1.
³ Vide the preceding item.

As regards the health of Surendra, some thought has to be given. Does he take wheat at present? His weight must increase. If the energy is maintained there is no reason to add to the weight.

I have sent a Parsi book for Mr. Darbari. I have not paid for it. He may return it when he has done with it. It is a very good book. It contains a full substance of the Zoroastrian ethics. Now Mr. Darbari must be completely recovered.

Devdas is completely recovered. There is nothing settled about (his) transfer. It seems other (prisoners) are where they were lodged.

Prof. Trivedi has sent (me) the writings of (Swami)Vivekananda. I did not send for them. If anyone from your side has sent for the same please let me know so that I may send the same to him.

As regards our activity the latest news is that the Sardar has begun the study of Sanskrit. He has sent for the 24 parts of the Guide to Sanskrit by Satavlekar. The first part will be finished in about three days. Attempts are being made by him to begin spinning. He is also doing the work of making envelopes. You already know that the weight of us three has increased.

We have not received any new books worth reading. Chandulal has sent me the Gondal Reading Series.

If Ramdas has occasion to write to Nimu, he may write a brief purport of what I have written above. So that she may know my views even if my letter reaches her late, or does not reach her at all.

It is surprising there is no letter from you this time.

We three of us remember you all.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

My post is passing through strict scrutiny. In consequence there is every possibility of the Mimansa of Maganbhai being lost, so Dahyabhai may bring it if the same is sent to him. He will personally hand it over to the Superintendent and then there will be no fear of its being lost.

Nevertheless, he must have a copy of it in his possession.

BAPU

[PS.]

I send herewith Mr. Bhansali’s letter for your perusal. You will like it. It is not necessary to send it back.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800

163. LETTER TO DHIRU

July 9, 1932

DEAR DHIRU,

I do not consider your letter to be clear. You say that there in no difficulty in spinning yarn of 15 counts, and when you reach 30 counts, it is done up. But there is a great difference between yarn of 15 and 30 counts. Do you say that there is no difficulty in spinning yarn up to 30 counts? If you say that, what is the speed for spinning yarn of 30 counts? What is the waste in spinning a tola of yarn? What is the speed for spinning yarn of 40 counts? What is the waste after it? What is the reason that there is difficulty in spinning yarn of finer counts? Prabhudas has much faith in you. If you want to fulfil his hopes, you should be engrossed in the spinning-wheel and find out its faults if there be any, and should find out its measure of strength. By spinning on one spindle only, perhaps, yarn of finer quality might be obtained. Also find out whether you can obtain as much yarn upon a spindle by the Magan spinning-wheel, as you would get on a spindle by an ordinary spinning-wheel.

Many Muslims believe in rebirth. There is a great difference between one who tells a falsehood once and one who has formed a habit of telling lies.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 209-11
I will explain in brief one central idea about education which has been dominating my thoughts as I am writing the history of the Ashram. Some persons see a deficiency in the Ashram, namely, absence of any arrangement for education, that is, for literary education. I also can see this deficiency. But it will probably remain as long as the Ashram lasts. I will not here go into the reasons for that.

People see this deficiency because we do not know the true meaning of education and the right method of acquiring it, or we assume that the existing system of imparting education is the right one. According to me, the present idea of education and the method of imparting and receiving it are both faulty.

True education is that which helps us to know the atman, our true self, God and Truth. To acquire this knowledge, some persons may feel the need for a study of literature, some for a study of physical sciences and some others for art. But every branch of knowledge should have as its goal knowledge of the self. That is so in the Ashram. We carry on numerous activities with that aim in view. All of them are, in my sense of the term, true education. Those activities can also be carried on without any reference to the goal of knowledge of the self. When they are so carried on, they may serve as a means of livelihood or of something else, but they are not education. In an activity carried on as education, a proper understanding of its meaning, devotion to duty and the spirit of service are necessary. The first necessarily brings about development of the intellect. In doing any piece of work, however small, we should be inspired by a holy aim and, while doing it, we should try to understand the purpose which it will serve and the scientific method of doing it. There is a science of every type of work—whether it be cooking, sanitation, carpentry or spinning. Everybody who does his work with the attitude of a student knows its science or discovers it.

If the inmates of the Ashram understand this, they would see that the Ashram is a great school in which the inmates receive education not for a few hours only but all the time. Every person who lives in the Ashram to attain knowledge of the self—of Truth—is both a teacher and a pupil. He is a teacher in regard to what he knows, and a pupil in regard to anything about which he needs to learn. If we know more than our neighbour about anything, we should willingly share our knowledge with him, and equally willingly receive from him what he knows more than we do. If we thus regularly exchange knowledge with others, we would not feel the absence of teachers, and education would become a painless and spontaneous process. The most important education is the training of character. As we advance in our observance of yamaniyamas, our capacity for learning—for knowing Truth—will go on increasing.

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 6/10-7-1932; vide the following item.

What about literary education, then? It is no more a question. The rule for this is the same as for the other activities. The method explained above dispenses with one superstition, namely, that for education we require a separate building known as school and a teacher to teach. When the desire for literary education awakens in us, we should know that we shall have to acquire it through self-help. There is ample scope for this in the Ashram. If I have been able to explain above my idea clearly, literary education should no more be a problem. Those who possess it should take every opportunity to impart it to others and the latter should receive it from them.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

165. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 6/10, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter and the other mail. These day I get them very regularly. I had handed over my packet on Monday for being posted and I do not understand why you did not get it till Saturday. In future, you should inspect the postmark on every packet. It is difficult to understand how a letter posted by you there reaches me the next day but what I send from here reaches you after six days.

You need not send me just now the register of hours of work. It will be quite enough if you send it whenever you observe anything special in the figures, or at the most once a month. Among other things, I am sure of this, that when the whole thing has become systematic everybody will do his or her work sincerely and then nobody will feel any burden. If anybody feels a little worried in his mind, that also will and must disappear. For a sincere person one thing should be enough. Nobody should undertake more than what he can cope with and should wish to do less than what he can. He who attempts to do more than what he is capable of suffers from pride, he is attached to work and its fruit. He who does less than what he can is a thief. By maintaining a register of the hours of work, we can save ourselves from either mistake, may be without knowing it. I don’t say that we shall positively save ourselves, for, if we do not help to keep the register willingly and with full appreciation of its need, we cannot derive the fullest benefit from it.

Did you carefully read Sitala Sahay’s letter? I saw nothing objectionable in it. I see no anger in it. If what he writes about Prabhudas is correct, his demand is not unreasonable. But we can decide this justly only in the manner I have explained, that is, by examining his expenses. In such matters, examples of others give us no help. They may serve as a guide, but, when a person gives us an account of his expenses and we can find no fault with it, we must pay him what the account justifies. It is quite possible that such precedents may cause difficulties in future. But we may hope that, since our motives are sincere, we shall escape such difficulties.

He who has protected us up to now will protect us even in future. We shall go on paying as long as we have money. If we have brought His name into disrepute, He will deprive us even of what we have. Whom will we pay then? Sitala Sahay says in his letter that Padma has sent some accounts to you. I suppose they are all right, are they? I also assume that what Sitala Sahay writes about Prabhudas’s expenses is correct. If, however, the facts are not as stated by him, it would certainly be necessary to think more about the matter. My opinion, thus, is based on the assumption that the information given by Sitala Sahay in his letter is correct. You do perfectly right in putting all the facts of a case before me. I should go on giving my opinions as long as I can, so that your burden may be lighter.

Nimu has written a letter to Ramdas which he has sent to me. She writes in it about having engaged a boy. She believes that she needs his help, but suspects that you may not have approved of her action. She also says that you have raised no objection Ramdas has left it to me to do what I think proper. I cannot decide in this matter independently. I am writing a letter to Nimu.

Read it and do what you think best. Don’t wait for Nimu to speak to you, but go and meet her yourself and put her mind at rest.

If you can, do save Shashi. If necessary, you may speak firmly to Ratilal about him.

July, 10, 1932

My writing letters has become a serious issue and I do not know when, if at all, you got the last packet of my letters. Nor do I know when you will get this. I have sought clarification about this matter. I cannot say what the outcome will be. “Neither be glad to get what is pleasant, nor be sad to get what is unpleasant”.

Today’s article is about education. Read it carefully and think over it. If you understand it properly, you will have to shoulder one more burden, a mental one this time. Examine carefully every person in your mind, and consider whether all of them fully understand the work which they do. Understand and explain to others the meaning and method of every activity in the Ashram. If there is any point which you do not understand ask me. If you question me about anything which I understand, I will answer your question. Find out whether everybody gets time to read. You will require some peace of mind to be able to take up this responsibility. As it is, you have been all the time doing a teacher’s work, and so this work will not be new for you. I have only widened your sphere. However, my method of teaching is simple. It requires little memorizing to be done. Our activities concern rural life, and their science, therefore, is not beyond our capacity. As for literature and similar studies, everybody may get from the books in the library as much as he can and impart it to the others. The important thing is development of intellect and understanding the meaning of our quest of truth. If that is understood, the rest will follow. Our contentment then will be boundless. We shall have to make no effort to learn patience. We shall have secured the key to all knowledge. We shall wish to know only as much as is necessary for our spiritual progress and for self-realization.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8238. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Vide “Letter to Nirmalabehn Gandhi”, 9-7-1932.
3 Bhagavad Gita, v. 20
4 Vide “Education”, 10-7-1932.
166. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

July 10, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

I forgot to write about one thing in my letter to you last week, namely, about the time spent in prayers. One should not grudge it or feel bored. Islam enjoins prayers five times a day, and every prayer lasts for not less than 15 minutes and the substance every time is the same. In Christian prayers, one feature is constant, and that also generally takes 15 minutes every time. In the Roman Catholic Church and the Established Church of England no prayer lasts for less than half an hour, and the prayers are held in the morning, in the evening and at noon. Pious men and women do not feel this irksome. In short, none of us has a right to change the established pattern of daily activities in the Ashram, for all of us are imperfect and we have discussed these things long enough. We should now learn to take interest in our activities. We wish to realize God through them and derive our daily sustenance from them. Instead of thinking about making changes in our programme, we should carry it out as best as we can and instil life in our activities. This is how I feel as I think more and more about the matter.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 229. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

167. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

July 10, 1932

The disturbance of my correspondence continues and letters are delayed. Thus we are made to feel now and then that we are prisoners, and we should, since it gives us the opportunity to practise the Gita doctrine. When we cannot get what we want, we find out if the deprivation disturbs our peace of mind. If it does, it shows that we have much headway to make up. I therefore try to preserve my equanimity. We may ask only for what we are entitled to. If we get it, it is all right. If we do not get it, then also it is all right. Congratulate Sarojini on her assuming the role of a physician. Tell her also that her sweets were appreciated by many of us. But this should not be construed as a request for further favours of the same kind. Real enjoyment is derived from drops, not from mouthfuls. In my earlier letter too I had written only in jest. Sweets are not the thing for us here as they are for her, whom we dare not imitate. Here we are a servant, a farmer and a porter. If the like of us put on royal robes, the village urchins would pelt stones at us and we should have deserved such treatment. Tell all this to Sarojini Devi if you can tell her without putting her out. Otherwise this lesson may be learnt by your other fellow-prisoners. You see how I have mixed instruction with amusement.

[From Gujarati]

168. LETTER TO KANAIYALAL

July 10, 1932

BHAI KANAIYALAL,

If God is taken to mean Truth then it is possible to see Him directly. It is not correct to take literally the stories regarding Dhruva and others having seen Him. The description given by the poets is a kind of metaphor.¹

(2) Vanar (monkey) must be taken to mean people with monkey-like nature.

(3) The main idea of the Vedas is spiritual wisdom (lit. the knowledge of Brahman).

(4) Practice of truth by means of mind, speech and body is always the best yajna. For the present time its practical form is to ply the charkha with altruistic motive.²

(5) The true means of (following) religion is the observance of yamas and niyamas.³

(6) See in Chapter II (of the Gita) the characteristics of a sthitaprajna (one who is firm in judgment and wisdom).

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800. Also Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p.284

¹ These paragraphs have been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary.

² ibid

³ ibid
169. A LETTER

July 10, 1932

There is a class of people to which many of us belong. They read and read and read until they almost lose their power of thinking. To such people I suggest that they should stop reading and think over what they have previously read.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 284

170. HISTORY OF THE SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM

[July 11, 1932]

INTRODUCTION

Ashram here means a community of men of religion. Looking at the past in the light of the present, I feel that an ashram was a necessary of life for me. As soon as I had a house of my own, my house was an ashram in this sense, for my life as a householder was not one of enjoyment but of duty discharged from day to day. Again, besides the members of my family I always had some friends or

---

1 Gandhiji commenced writing this history in Gujarati in Yeravda Central Prison on April 5, 1932. He worked on it intermittently and wrote the last available instalment on July 11, 1932, though later letters show that the writing continued even after this date. On his release, he showed the manuscripts to Kakasaheb Kalelkar and said: “I could not complete this job. It badly needs revision. I do not know whether I shall ever complete it. It is not fit to be published as it is. I shall give it only when I have revised it.” Kakasaheb said that he would have copies made of whatever had been written and took the manuscripts from Gandhiji’s hands. Since the original could not be traced, Navajivan Publishing House issued Satyagrahashramno Itihas in Gujarati in May 1948 from the copy available with Kakasaheb. It was translated into English by Valji G. Desai and published by the Navajivan Publishing House under the title Ashram Observances in Action in 1955. The translator has occasionally changed the paragraphing, omitted a sentence or summarized an argument, but otherwise the translation is faithful and is reproduced here. Two paragraphs of the incomplete chapter on satyagraha, which were written on July 11, 1932 and which were omitted in the English version, have been translated from the Gujarati. Appendices found in Gujarati and English versions are not reproduced here, since they are placed in their chronological order under the dates February 16, 1916, June 14, 1928 and December 8, 1941. For the first two appendices, vide “Speech on Ashram Vows at Y. M. C. A., Madras”, 16-2-1916 and “Satyagraha ashram”, 14-6-1928.
others living with me, whose relation with me was spiritual from the first or became such later on. This went on unconsciously till 1904 when I read Ruskin’s Unto This Last, which made a deep impression on me. I determined to take Indian Opinion into a forest where I should live with the workers as members of my family. I purchased 100 acres of land and founded Phoenix Settlement, which neither we nor anyone else called an ashram. It had a religious basis, but the visible object was purity of body and mind as well as economic equality. I did not then consider brahmacharya (chastity) to be essential; on the other hand it was expected that co-workers would live as family men and have children. A brief account of Phoenix will be found in Satyagraha in South Africa.

This was the first step.

The second step was taken in 1906. I learnt in the school of experience that brahmacharya was a sine qua non for a life devoted to service. From this time onward I looked upon Phoenix deliberately as a religious institution. The same year witnessed the advent of satyagraha which was based on religion and implied an unshakable faith in the God of Truth. Religion here should not be understood in a narrow sense, but as that which acts as a link between different religions and realizes their essential unity.

This went on till 1911. All these years the Phoenix Settlement was progressing as an ashram though we did not call it by that name.

We took the third step in 1911. So far only those people lived at Phoenix who were working in the press and the paper. But now as a part of the satyagraha movement we felt the need of an ashram where satyagrahi families could live and lead a religious life. I had already come in contact with my German friend Kallenbach. Both of us were living a sort of ashram life. I was a barrister and Kallenbach an architect. However we led a comparatively very simple life in the sparsely populated country, and were religiously minded. We might commit mistakes out of ignorance, but we were trying to seek the root of every activity in religion. Kallenbach purchased a farm of 1,100 acres and the satyagrahi families settled there. Religious problems confronted us now at every step and the whole institution was managed from a religious standpoint. Among the settlers there were Hindus, Mussalmans, Christians and Parsis. But I do not remember

---

1 Vide “An Autobiography”.. that they ever quarrelled with one another, though each was staunch in his own faith. We respected one another’s religion and tried to help everybody to follow his own faith and thus to make spiritual progress.

This institution was not known as Satyagraha Ashram but as Tolstoy Farm. Kallenbach and I were followers of Tolstoy and endeavoured to practise much of his doctrine. Tolstoy Farm was closed in 1912 and the farmers were sent to Phoenix. The history of Tolstoy Farm will also be found in Satyagraha in South Africa.¹

Phoenix now was no longer meant for the workers of Indian Opinion only; it was a satyagraha institution. That was only to be expected, for Indian Opinion owed its very existence to satyagraha.
Still it was a great change. The even tenor of the lives of the settlers at Phoenix was disturbed, and they had now to discern certainty in the midst of uncertainty like the satyagrahis. But they were equal to the new demands made upon them. As at Tolstoy Farm, so also at Phoenix I established a common kitchen which some joined while others had private kitchens of their own. The congregational prayer in the evening played a large part in our lives. And the final satyagraha campaign was started by the inmates of Phoenix Settlement in 1913.²
The struggle ended in 1914.³ I left South Africa in July that year. It was decided that all settlers who wanted to go to India should be enabled to go there. Before going to India I had to meet Gokhale in England. The idea was to found a new institution in India for those who went there from Phoenix. And the community life commenced in South Africa was to be continued in India. I reached India early in 1915⁴ with a view to establish an ashram though I was still unaware that I would call it by that name.

I toured all parts of India for a year, and visited some institutions⁵ from which I had much to learn. I was invited by several cities to establish the ashram in their neighbourhood with a promise of assistance in various ways. Ahmedabad was selected at last.
This was the fourth, and I imagine the last step. Whether or not it will always be the last is something of which no forecast is

¹ Vide “Satyagraha in South Africa”.
² On September 15; vide “Satyagraha in South Africa”.
³ Vide “Satyagraha in South Africa”.
⁴ On January 9; vide “Interview to The Bombay Chronicle”, 9-1-1915..
⁵ Servants of India Society, Santiniketan, Gurukul Kangri possible. How was the new institution to be named? What should be its rules and regulations? On these points I had full discussions and correspondence with friends, as a result of which we decided to call the institution Satyagraha Ashram. It is an appropriate name if we take its object into consideration. My life is devoted to the quest of truth. I would live and, if need be, die in prosecuting it, and of course I would take with me as many fellow-pilgrims as I could get.

The Ashram was established in a rented house at Kochrab on May 25, 1915. Some citizens of Ahmedabad undertook to finance it. At the beginning there were about 20 inmates, most of them from South Africa. Of these again the large majority spoke Tamil or Telugu. The chief activity in the Ashram at this time was teaching Sanskrit, Hindi and Tamil to the old as well as the young, who also received some general education. Hand-weaving was the principal industry with some carpentry as accessory to it. No servants were engaged; therefore cooking, sanitation, fetching water—everything was attended to by the Ashramites. Truth and other observances were obligatory on them all. Distinctions of caste were not observed. Untouchability had not only no place in the Ashram, but its eradication from Hindu society was one of our principal objectives. Emancipation of women from some customary bonds was insisted upon from the first. Therefore women in the Ashram enjoy full freedom. Then again it was an Ashram rule that persons following a particular faith should have the same feeling for followers of other faiths as for their co-religionists.

But for one thing I was solely responsible, and I am indebted to the West for it. I refer to my dietetic experiments, which commenced in 1888 when I went to England for studies. I always invite members of my family and other co-workers to join in. The experiments were designed to achieve three objects, viz., (1) to acquire control over the palate as a part of self-control in general; (2) to find out which diet was the simplest and the cheapest so that by adopting it we might

1 Gandhiji disbanded the Satyagraha Ashram in 1933. When he shifted to Segaon in April 1936 he had no intention of establishing an ashram there. However, it gradually developed into the Sevagram Ashram.

2 In Vol. XIII, p. 98, however, Gandhiji mentions the number as 35.

3 For the text of the draft constitution of the Ashram, vide “Draft constitution for the ashram”, 20-5-1915; and for the final constitution, vide “Satyagraha ashram”, 14-6-1928.
identify ourselves with the poor; and (3) to discover which diet was necessary for perfect health, as maintenance of health is largely dependent upon correct diet.

If in England I had not been under a vow to be a vegetarian, I might perhaps never have undertaken experiments in diet. But once I began to experiment, these three objectives took me into deeper waters, and I was led to make various kinds of experiments. And the Ashram too joined in, though these experiments were not a part of Ashram discipline.

The reader has perhaps now seen that the Ashram set out to remedy what it thought were defects in our national life from the religious, economic and political standpoints. As we gathered new experiences we undertook fresh activities. Even now I cannot say that the Ashram has embarked on all possible activities that I can think of. There have been two limitations. First, we were sure we must cut our coat according to our cloth, that is, we must manage with what funds were placed at our disposal by friends without any special effort in collection. Secondly we should not go in search of new spheres of activity, but if any activity naturally suggested itself to our minds, we should go in for it without counting the cost.

These two limitations spring from a religious attitude. This implies faith in God, that is, doing everything in dependence upon and under the inspiration of God. The main of religion conducts such activities as are sent by God with such resources as God places at his disposal. He never lets us see that He Himself does anything; He achieves His aims through men inspired by Him. When help was received from unexpected quarters or from friends without our asking for it, my faith led me to believe that it was sent by God. Similarly when some activity came to us unsought so that not to take it up would have been sheer cowardice, laziness or the like, I thought it was a godsend.

The same principle applies to co-workers as to material resources and to activities. We may have the funds and know how they are to be used, but we can do nothing in the absence of co-workers. Co-workers also should come unsought. We did not merely imagine but had a living faith that the Ashram was God’s. If therefore He wished to make the Ashram His instrument as regards any activity, it was for Him to place the requisite men and munitions at the Ashram’s disposal. Phœnix, Tolstoy Farm and Sabarmati Ashram have all been conducted more or less according to these principles consciously or unconsciously. Ashram rules were observed at first with some laxity, but the observance has become stricter from day to day.

The Ashram population doubled itself in a few months. Again the Kochrab bungalow was a hardly suitable building for an ashram. It would do for one well-to-do family, but not for sixty men, women and children engaged in various activities and observing brahmacharya and other vows. However we had to manage with what building was available. But very soon it became impossible to live in it for a number of reasons. As if God wanted to drive us out of it, we had suddenly to go out in search of a new site and to vacate the bungalow. The curious will look up the Autobiography for an account of these events. There was one defect in the Ashram at Kochrab which was remedied after we had removed to Sabarmati. An Ashram without orchard, farm or cattle would not be a complete unit. At Sabarmati we had cultivable land and therefore went in for agriculture at once.

Such is the prehistory and history of the Ashram. I now propose to deal with its observances and activities in so far as I remember them. My diary is not at hand. Even if it is, it takes no note of the personal history of the Ashramites. I therefore depend upon memory alone. This is nothing new for me, as Satyagraha in South Africa and the Autobiography were written in the same manner. The reader will please bear this limitation in mind, as he goes through these pages.

I

TRUTH

Whenever someone was found telling a lie in the Ashram, effective steps were taken to deal with the situation as symptomatic of a serious disease. The Ashram does not believe in punishing wrongdoers, so much so that hesitation is felt even in asking them to leave the institution. Three lines of preventive action were therefore adopted.

The first thing attended to was the purity of the principal workers in charge, the idea being that if they were free from fault, the atmosphere about them was bound to be affected by their innocence. Untruth cannot stand before truth like darkness before the light of the sun.

1 Vide “An autobiography”.

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932  147
Secondly, we had recourse to confession. If someone was found practising untruth, the fact was brought to the notice of the congregation. This is a very useful measure if it is judiciously adopted. But one has to be careful about two things. The public confession must not be tainted by even a trace of force; and the confession should not lead to the person confessing taking leave of all sense of shame. If he comes to believe that mere confession has washed off his sin, he is no longer ashamed of it at all. There should be an ever present consciousness of the fact that the least little untruth is a dangerous thing.

Thirdly, the worker in charge of the Ashram as well as the wrongdoer would fast as a matter of penance. Of course it is a matter for the wrongdoer himself to decide whether or not he should undertake a fast. But as for the worker in charge, he is clearly responsible for intentional and unintentional wrongdoing in his institution. Untruth is more poisonous and more subtle than any poison gas whatever, but it dare not enter where the head of the institution is wide awake and has a spiritual outlook on life. Still if it is found to have effected an entrance, it is a warning to the principal worker, who may be sure that he must bear his share of responsibility for this infection. I for one believe that spiritual acts have clearly defined results precisely like combinations or processes in the natural sciences. Only as we have no such means of measurement in the former case as in the latter, we are not ready to believe or we only half-heartedly believe in the spiritual influences. Again, we are inclined to be lenient to ourselves with the result that our experiments are unsuccessful and we tend to move only in a circle like the oil-miller’s bullock. Thus untruth gets a long lease of life, and at last we reach the melancholy conclusion that it is unavoidable. And what is unavoidable easily becomes necessary, so that not truth but untruth increases its own prestige.

When therefore untruth was discovered in the Ashram, I readily pleaded guilty for it myself. That is to say, I have not still attained truth as defined by me. It may be due to ignorance, but it is clear that I have not fully understood truth and therefore neither even thought it out nor declared it, still less practised it. But granting all this, was I to leave the Ashram, and resort to some Himalayan cave and impose silence upon myself? That would be sheer cowardice. The quest of truth cannot be prosecuted in a cave. Silence makes no sense where it is necessary to speak. One may live in a cave in certain circumstances, but the common man can be tested only in society.
What then is the remedy to be tried to get rid of untruth? The only answer which suggests itself to me is bodily penance, that is fasting and the like. Bodily penance has a threefold influence, first over the penitent, secondly over the wrongdoer and thirdly over the congregation. The penitent becomes more alert, examines the innermost recesses of his own heart and takes steps to deal with any personal weakness that he may discover. If the wrongdoer has any pity, he becomes conscious of his own fault, is ashamed of it and resolves never to sin any more in the future. The congregation takes a course of self-introspection.

But bodily penance is only a means to an end, not an end in itself. By itself it cannot bring an erring person to the right path. It is profitable only if it is accompanied by a certain line of thinking, which is as follows:

Man tends to become a slave of his own body, and engages in many activities and commits many sins for the sake of physical enjoyment. He should therefore mortify the flesh whenever there is an occasion of sin. A man given to physical enjoyment is subject to delusion. Even a slight renunciation of enjoyment in the shape of food will probably be helpful in breaking the power of that delusion. Fasting in order to produce this effect must be taken in its widest sense as the exercise of control over all the organs of sense with a view to the purification of oneself or others. Merely giving up food does not amount to a fast. And fasting for health is no fasting at all in this sense.

I have also found that frequent fasting tends to rob it of its efficacy, for then it becomes almost a mechanical process without any background of thought. Every fast therefore should be undertaken after due deliberation.

I have noted one special effect of fasting in my own case. I have fasted frequently; therefore my co-workers are nervous and are afraid that a fresh fast may place my life in danger. This fear makes them observe certain rules. I consider this an undesirable consequence of fasting. I do not however think that self-control practised on account of such fear does any harm. This fear is inspired by love, and therefore it is a good thing if a person steers clear of wrongdoing even under the influence of such fear. Deliberate and voluntary reformation is of course very desirable, but it is only to be welcomed if a person avoids sin because he is afraid of causing pain to elders, as it involves no use of brute force. There are many cases of reformation undertaken primarily only to please one’s dear ones becoming a permanent feature of men’s lives.

One painful consequence of fasting must be taken into account. People sometimes do not avoid sin but only try to hide it for fear that someone else may fast if he comes to know of it.

I hold that penance is necessary in certain cases and it has benefited the Ashram on the whole. But one who undertakes it must possess certain qualifications:

1. The wrongdoer should have love for the penitent. The penitent may have love for the wrongdoer; but if the wrongdoer is unaware of it or adopts an inimical attitude towards the penitent, penance for him is out of the question. As he regards himself as an enemy of the penitent, he hates the latter. There is therefore a possibility of the fast affecting him in a manner contrary to all expectations, or acting as brute force employed against him and thus regarded by him as a form of coercion. Moreover, if everyone is supposed to be entitled to undertake penance for the failings of others who do not stand in a special relation to him, there would be no end to the programme of penance. Penance for the sins of the whole world might befit a mahatma (great soul), but here we are concerned with the common man.

2. The penitent himself must be one of the parties wronged. That is to say, one should not do penance for a failing with which he is not in any way concerned. Thus, suppose A and B are friends. B is a member of the Ashram, but A has nothing to do with it. B has wronged the Ashram. Here A has neither the duty nor the right to undertake a penance for B’s fault. His interference might even complicate the situation both for the Ashram and B. He may not even possess the necessary material to pronounce a judgment on B’s conduct. By agreeing to B’s admission to the Ashram, A must be regarded as having transferred to the Ashram his responsibility for B’s good conduct.

3. A penitent for another’s wrongdoing must himself be guiltless of similar misconduct. “The pot may not call the kettle black”.

4. The penitent must otherwise also be a man of purity and appear such to the wrongdoer. Penance for another’s wrongdoing presupposes purity; and if the guilty man has no respect for the penitent, the latter’s fast might easily have an unhealthy effect upon him.

5. The penitent must not have any personal interest to serve. Thus, if A has promised to pay B ten rupees, non-payment of it is a fault. But B may not perform penance for A’s failure to redeem his promise.

6. The penitent must not have any anger in him. If a father commences a fast in anger for a fault of his son, that is not penance. There should be nothing but compassion in penance, the object being the purification of oneself as well as of the guilty person.

7. The wrong act must be patent, accepted as such by all and spiritually harmful, and the doer must be aware of its nature. There should be no penance for inferential guilt, as it might at times have dangerous consequences. There should be no room for doubt as regards the fault. Moreover, one should not do penance for an act which he alone regards as wrong. It is possible that what one holds to be wrong today he might regard as innocent tomorrow. So the wrong must be one that is accepted as such by society. For instance, I might regard the non-wearing of khadi to be very wrong. But my co-worker might see nothing wrong in it, or might not attach much importance to it, and so might or might not wear it as he wishes. If I regard this as a wrong and fast for it, that is not penance but coercion. There can be no penance also where the wrongdoer is not conscious of having done anything wrong.

The discussion of this topic is necessary for an institution in which there is no place for punishment or which always strives to act in a religious spirit. In such institutions the penance on the part of the heads of the Ashram takes the place of penal measures. It would be impossible to maintain its purity in any other way. Punishment and disciplinary action might make for an outer show of orderliness and progress, but that is all. On the other hand penance preserves the institution both internally and externally and makes the institution firmer day by day. Hence the necessity for some such rules as those given above.

Fasts and such other penance have been undertaken in the Ashram. Still it is far, far indeed, from its ideal of truth, and therefore, as we shall see later on, we now call it by the name of Udyoga Mandir (Temple of Industry). But we can certainly say that the men in charge of the Ashram are wide awake, fully conscious of their imperfections.
and constantly trying to make sure that untruth does not find a foothold anywhere. But in an institution to which new members are being admitted from time to time, and that too only on trust, and which is frequented by men from all provinces of India and some foreign countries, it is no easy thing to keep all of them on the strait and narrow path. But if only the men at the top are true to themselves, the Ashram is sure to stand the test, no matter how hard it is. There is no limit to the potency of truth, as there is a limit to the power of an individual seeker. But if he is wide awake and is striving constantly, there is no limit to his power as well.

II
PRAYER

(i)

If insistence on truth constitutes the root of the Ashram, prayer is the principal feeder of that root. The social (as distinguished from the individual) activities of the Ashram commence every day with the congregational morning worship at 4.15 to 4.45 a.m. and close with the evening prayer at 7 to 7.30 p.m. Ever since the Ashram was founded, not a single day has passed to my knowledge without this worship. I know of several occasions when owing to the rains only one responsible person was present on the prayer ground. All inmates are expected to attend the worship except in the case of illness or similar compelling reason for absence. This expectation has been fairly well fulfilled at the evening prayer, but not in the morning.

The time for morning worship was as a matter of experiment fixed at 4, 5, 6 and 7 a.m., one after another. But on account of my persistently strong attitude on the subject, it has been fixed at last at 4.20 a.m. With the first bell at 4 everyone rises from bed and after a wash reaches the prayer ground by 4.20.

I believe that in a country like India the sooner a man rises from bed the better. Indeed millions must necessarily rise early. If the peasant is a late riser, his crops will suffer damage. Cattle are attended to and cows are milked early in the morning. Such being the case, seekers of saving truth, servants of the people or monks may well be up at 2 or 3; it would be surprising if they are not. In all countries of the world devotees of God and tillers of the soil rise early. Devotees take the name of God and peasants work in their fields serving the world as well as themselves. To my mind both are worshippers. Devotees are deliberately such while cultivators by their industry worship God unawares, as it helps to sustain the world. If instead of working in the fields, they took to religious meditation, they would be failing in their duty and involving themselves and the world in ruin.

We may or may not look upon the cultivator as a devotee, but where peasants, labourers and other people have willy nilly to rise early, how can a worshipper of Truth or servant of the people be a late riser? Again in the Ashram we are trying to co-ordinate work and worship. Therefore I am definitely of opinion that all able-bodied people in the Ashram must rise early even at the cost of inconvenience. Four a.m. is not early but the latest time when we must be up and doing.

Then again we had to take a decision on certain questions. Where should the prayers be offered? Should we erect a temple or meet in the open air? Then again, should we raise a platform or sit in the sands or the dust? Should there be any images? At last we decided to sit on the sands under the canopy of the sky and not to install any image. Poverty is an Ashram observance. The Ashram exists in order to serve the starving millions. The poor have a place in it no less than others. It receives with open arms all who are willing to keep the rules. In such an institution the house of worship cannot be built with bricks and mortar, the sky must suffice for roof and the quarters for walls and pillars. A platform was planned but discarded later on, as its size would depend upon the indeterminate number of worshippers. And a big one would cost a large sum of money. Experience has shown the soundness of the decision not to build a house or even a platform. People from outside also attend the Ashram prayers, so that at times the multitude present cannot be accommodated on the biggest of platforms.

Again as the Ashram prayers are being increasingly imitated elsewhere, the sky-roofed temple has proved its utility. Morning and evening prayers are held wherever I go. Then there is such large attendance, especially in the evening, that prayers are possible only on open grounds. And if I had been in the habit of worshipping in a prayer hall only, I might perhaps never have thought of public prayers during my tours.

Then again all religions are accorded equal respect in the Ashram. Followers of all faiths are welcome there; they may or may not believe in the worship of images. No image is kept at the congregational worship of the Ashram in order to avoid hurting anybody’s feelings. But if an Ashramite wishes to keep an image in his room, he is free to do so.

(ii)

At the morning prayer we first recite the shlokas (verses) printed in Ashram Bhajanavali (hymnal), and then sing one bhajan (hymn) followed by Ramdhun (repetition of Ramanama) and Gitapath (recitation of the Gita). In the evening we have recitation of the last 19 verses of the second chapter of the Gita, one bhajan and Ramdhun and then read some portion of a sacred book.

The shlokas were selected by Shri Kaka Kalelkar who has been in the Ashram since its foundation. Shri Maganlal Gandhi met him in Santiniketan, when he and the children of the Phoenix Settlement went there from South Africa while I was still in England. Dinabandhu Andrews and the late Mr. Pearson were then in Santiniketan. I had advised Maganlal to stay at some place selected by Andrews. And Andrews selected Santiniketan for the party. Kaka was a teacher there and came into close contact with Maganlal. Maganlal had been feeling the want of a Sanskrit teacher which was supplied by Kaka. Chintamani Shastri assisted him in the work. Kaka taught the children how to recite the verses repeated in prayer. Some of these verses were omitted in the Ashram prayer in order to save time. Such is the history of the verses recited at the morning prayer all these days.

The recitation of these verses has often been objected to on the ground of saving time or because it appeared to some people that they could not well be recited by a worshipper of truth or by a non-Hindu. There is no doubt that these verses are recited only in Hindu society, but I cannot see why a non-Hindu may not join in or be present at the recitation. Muslim and Christian friends who have heard the verses have not raised any objection. Indeed they need not cause annoyance to anyone who respects other faiths as much as he respects his own. They do not contain any reflection on other people. Hindus being in an overwhelming majority in the Ashram, the verses must be selected from the sacred books of the Hindus. Not that nothing is sung or recited from non-Hindu scriptures. Indeed there were occasions on which Imam Saheb recited verses from the Koran. Muslim and Christian hymns are often sung.

But the verses were strongly attacked from the standpoint of truth. An Ashramite modestly but firmly argued that the worship of Sarasvati, Ganesh and the like was violence done to truth; for no such divinities really existed as Sarasvati seated on a lotus with a vina (kind of musical instrument) in her hands, or as Ganesh with a big belly and an elephant’s trunk. To this argument I replied as follows:

‘I claim to be a votary of truth, and yet I do not mind reciting these verses or teaching them to the children. If we condemn some shlokas on the strength of this argument, it would be tantamount to an attack on the very basis of Hinduism. Not that we may not condemn anything in Hinduism which is fit for condemnation, no matter how ancient it is. But I do not believe that this is a weak or vulnerable point of Hinduism. On the other hand I hold that it is perhaps characteristic of our faith. Sarasvati and Ganesh are not independent entities. They are all descriptive names of one God. Devoted poets have given a local habitation and a name to His countless attributes. They have done nothing wrong. Such verses deceive neither the worshippers nor others. When a human being praises God he imagines Him to be such as he thinks fit. The God of his imagination is there for him. Even when we pray to a God devoid of form and attributes we do in fact endow Him with attributes. And attributes too are form. Fundamentally God is indescribable in words. We mortals must of necessity depend upon the imagination which makes and sometimes mars us too. The qualities we attribute to God with the purest of motives are true for us but fundamentally false, because all attempts at describing Him must be unsuccessful. I am intellectually conscious of this and still I cannot help dwelling upon the attributes of God. My intellect can exercise no influence over my heart. I am prepared to admit that my heart in its weakness hankers after a God with attributes. The shlokas which I have been reciting every day for the last fifteen years give me peace and hold good for me. In them I find beauty as well as poetry. Learned men tell many stories about Sarasvati, Ganesh and the like, which have their own use. I do not know their deeper meaning, as I have not gone into it, finding it unnecessary for me. It may be that my ignorance is my salvation. I did not see that I needed to go deep into this as a part of my quest of truth. It is enough that I know my God, and although I have still to realize His living presence, I am on the right path to my destination’.
I could hardly expect that the objectors should be satisfied with this reply. An ad hoc committee examined the whole question fully and finally recommended that the shlokas should remain as they were, for every possible selection would be viewed with disfavour by someone or other.

(iii)

A hymn was sung after the shlokas. Indeed singing hymns was the only item of the prayers in South Africa. The shlokas were added in India. Maganlal Gandhi was our leader in song. But we felt that the arrangement was unsatisfactory. We should have an expert singer for the purpose, and that singer should be one who would observe the Ashram rules. One such was found in Narayan Moreshwar Khare, a pupil of Pandit Vishnu Digambar, whom the master kindly sent to the Ashram. Pandit Khare gave us full satisfaction and is now a full member of the Ashram. He made hymn-singing interesting, and the Ashram Bhajanavali (hymnal) which is now read by thousands was in the main compiled by him. He introduced Ramdhun, the third item of our prayers.

The fourth item is recitation of verses from the Gita. The Gita has for years been an authoritative guide to belief and conduct for the Satyagraha Ashram. It has provided us with a test with which to determine the correctness or otherwise of ideas and courses of conduct in question. Therefore we wished that all Ashramites should understand the meaning of the Gita and if possible commit it to memory. If this last was not possible, we wished that they should at least read the original Sanskrit with correct pronunciation. With this end in view we began to recite part of the Gita every day. We would recite a few verses every day and continue the recitation until we had learnt them by heart. From this we proceeded to the parayan.1 And the recitation is now so arranged that the whole of the Gita is finished in fourteen days, and everybody knows what verses will be recited on any particular day. The first chapter is recited on every alternate Friday, and we shall come to it on Friday next (June 10, 1932). The seventh and eighth, the twelfth and thirteenth, the fourteenth and fifteenth, and the sixteenth and seventeenth chapters are recited on the same day in order to finish 18 chapters in 14 days.2

---

1 Regular recitation
2 The translator supplies the following information: “Later on the Gita 156
At the evening prayer we recite the last 19 verses of the second chapter of the Gita as well as sing a hymn and repeat Ramanama. These verses describe the characteristics of the sthitaprajna (the man of stable understanding), which a satyagrahi too must acquire, and are recited in order that he may constantly bear them in mind.

Repeating the same thing at prayer from day to day is objected to on the ground that it thus becomes mechanical and tends to be ineffective. It is true that the prayer becomes mechanical. We ourselves are machines, and if we believe God to be our mover, we must behave like machines in His hands. If the sun and other heavenly bodies did not work like machines, the universe would come to a standstill. But in behaving like machines, we must not behave like inert matter. We are intelligent beings and must observe rules as such. The point is not whether the contents of the prayer are always the same or differ from day to day. Even if they are full of variety, it is possible that they will become ineffective. The Gayatri verse among Hindus, the confession of faith (kalma) among Mussalmans, the typical Christian prayer in the Sermon on the Mount have been recited by millions for centuries every day; and yet their power has not diminished but is ever on the increase. It all depends upon the spirit behind the recitation. If an unbeliever or a parrot repeats these potent words, they will fall quite flat. On the other hand when a believer utters them always, their influence grows from day to day. Our staple food is the same. The wheat-eater will take other things besides wheat, and these additional things may differ from time to time, but the wheat bread will always be there on the dining table. It is the eater’s staff of life, and he will never weary of it. If he conceives a dislike for it, that is a sign of the approaching dissolution of his body. The same is the case with prayer. Its principal contents must be always the same. If the soul hungers after them, she will not quarrel with the monotony of the prayer but will derive nourishment from it. She will have a sense of deprivation on the day that it has not been possible to offer prayer. She will be more downcast than one who observes a physical fast. Giving up food may now and then be beneficial for the body; indigestion of prayer recitation was finished every seven instead of every fourteen days, and the chapters were distributed among the days as follows: Friday, 1 and 2; Saturday, 3, 4 and 5; Sunday, 6, 7 and 8; Monday, 9, 10, 11 and 12; Tuesday, 13, 14 and 15; Wednesday, 16 and 17; Thursday, 18".
for the soul is something never heard of.

The fact is that many of us offer prayer without our soul being hungry for it. It is a fashion to believe that there is a soul; so we believe that she exists. Such is the sorry plight of many among us. Some are intellectually convinced that there is a soul, but they have not grasped that truth with the heart; therefore they do not feel the need for prayer. Many offer prayer because they live in society and think they must participate in its activities. No wonder they hanker after variety. As a matter of fact however they do not attend prayer. They want to enjoy the music or are merely curious or wish to listen to the sermon. They are not there to be one with God.

(iv)

Prarthana (Gujarati word for prayer) literally means to ask for something, that is, to ask God for something in a spirit of humility. Here it is not used in that sense, but in the sense of praising or worshipping God, meditation and self-purification.

But who is God? God is not some person outside ourselves or away from the universe. He pervades everything, and is omniscient as well as omnipotent. He does not need any praise or petitions. Being immanent in all beings, He hears everything and reads our innermost thoughts. He abides in our hearts and is nearer to us than the nails are to the fingers. What is the use of telling Him anything?

It is in view of this difficulty that prarthana is further paraphrased as self-purification. When we speak out aloud at prayer time, our speech is addressed not to God but to ourselves, and is intended to shake off our torpor. Some of us are intellectually aware of God, while others are afflicted by doubt. None has seen Him face to face. We desire to recognize and realize Him, to become one with Him, and seek to gratify that desire through prayer.

This God whom we seek to realize is Truth. Or to put it in another way Truth is God. This Truth is not merely the truth we are expected to speak. It is That which alone is, which constitutes the stuff of which all things are made, which subsists by virtue of its own power, which is not supported by anything else but supports everything that exists. Truth alone is eternal, everything else is momentary. It need not assume shape or form. It is pure intelligence as well as pure bliss. We call It Ishvara because everything is regulated by Its will. It and the law It promulgates are one. Therefore it is not a blind law. It governs the entire universe. To propitiate this Truth is prarthana which in effect means an earnest desire to be filled with the spirit of Truth. This desire should be present all the twenty-four hours. But our souls are too dull to have this awareness day and night. Therefore we offer prayers for a short time in the hope that a time will come when all our conduct will be one continuously sustained prayer.

Such is the ideal of prayer for the Ashram, which at present is far, far away from it. The detailed programme outlined above is something external, but the idea is to make our very hearts prayerful. If the Ashram prayers are not still attractive, if even the inmates of the Ashram attend them under compulsion of a sort, it only means that none of us is still a man of prayer in the real sense of the term.

In heartfelt prayer the worshipper’s attention is concentrated on the object of worship so much so that he is not conscious of anything else besides. The worshipper has well been compared to a lover. The lover forgets the whole world and even himself in the presence of the beloved. The identification of the worshipper with God should be closer still. It comes only after much striving, self-suffering (tapas) and self-discipline. In a place which such a worshipper sanctifies by his presence, no inducements need be offered to people for attending prayers, as they are drawn to the house of prayer by the force of his devotion.

We have dealt so far with congregational prayer, but great stress is also laid in the Ashram on individual and solitary prayer. One who never prays by himself may attend congregational prayers but will not derive much advantage from them. They are absolutely necessary for a congregation, but as a congregation is made up of individuals, they are fruitless without individual prayers. Every member of the Ashram is therefore reminded now and then that he should of his own accord give himself up to self-introspection at all times of the day. No watch can be kept that he does this, and no account can be maintained of such silent prayer. I cannot say how far it prevails in the Ashram, but I believe that some are making more or less effort in that direction.

III

AHIMSA OR LOVE

The greatest difficulties perhaps were encountered as regards the observance of ahimsa. There are problems of Truth, but it is not very hard to understand what Truth is. But in understanding ahimsa we every now and then find ourselves out of our depth. Ahimsa was discussed in the Ashram at greater length than any other subject. Even now the question often arises whether a particular act is violent or non-violent. And even if we know the distinction between violence and non-violence, we are often unable to satisfy the demand of non-violence on account of weakness which cannot easily be overcome.

Ahimsa means not to hurt any living creature by thought, word or deed, even for the supposed benefit of that creature. To observe this principle fully is impossible for men, who kill a number of living beings large and small as they breathe or blink or till the land. We catch and hurt snakes or scorpions for fear of being bitten and leave them in some out-of-the-way place if we do not kill them. Hurting them in this way may be unavoidable, but is clearly himsa as defined above.

If I save the food I eat or the clothes I wear or the space I occupy, it is obvious that these can be utilized by someone else whose need is greater than mine. As my selfishness prevents him from using these things, my physical enjoyment involves violence to my poorer neighbour. When I eat cereals and vegetables in order to support life, that means violence done to vegetable life.

Surrounded thus as I am by violence on all sides, how am I to observe non-violence? Fresh difficulties are bound to arise at every step as I try to do so.

The violence described above is easily recognized as such. But what about our being angry with one another? A teacher inflicting corporal punishment on his pupils, a mother taking her children to task, a man losing his temper in his intercourse with equals, all these are guilty of violence, and violence of a bad type, which is not easy to tackle. Violence is there where there is attachment on the one hand and dislike on the other. How are we to get rid of it?

The first lesson therefore that we in the Ashram must learn is that although to sever some person’s head from his body for the sake of the country or the family or oneself is indeed a violent act, the subtle violence involved in injuring the feelings of other people day in and day out is possibly very much worse than that. Murders committed in the world will seem to be numerous when considered by themselves and not so numerous when compared with the number of deaths due to other causes; but the subtle violence involved in daily loss of temper and the like defies all attempts at calculation.

We are constantly striving in the Ashram to deal with all these kinds of violence. All of us realize our own weakness. All of us including myself are afraid of snakes, for instance. We therefore as a rule catch them and put them out of harm’s way. But if someone kills a snake out of fear, he is not taken to task. There was once a snake in the cowshed, and it was impossible to catch it where it was. It was a risky thing to keep the cattle there; the men also were afraid of working thereabouts. Maganlal Gandhi felt helpless and permitted them to kill that snake. I approved of his action when he told me about it. I believe that even if I had been there on the spot, I could not have done anything other than what he did. My intellect tells me that I must treat even a snake as my kinsman and at the risk of losing my life I must hold the snake in my hands and take it away from those who are afraid of it. But in my heart I do not harbour the necessary love, fearlessness and readiness to die of snake-bite. I am trying to cultivate all these qualities but have not still succeeded in the attempt. It is possible that if I am attacked by a snake, I may neither resist nor kill it. But I am not willing to place anyone else’s life in danger.

Once in the Ashram the monkeys made a terrible nuisance of themselves and did extensive damage to the crops. The watchman tried to frighten them by making a show of hurling stones from a sling but in vain. He then actually threw stones and injured and crippled one of the monkeys. I thought this even worse than killing it. I therefore held discussions with co-workers in the Ashram, and finally we took the decision that if we could not get rid of the monkeys by gentle means short of wounding them, we must kill one or two of them and end the nuisance. Before this decision was taken there was a public discussion in the columns of Navajivan which may be consulted by the curious.¹

No one outside India thinks that one should not kill even a violent animal. Some individuals like St. Francis observed this rule, but the common people did not, so far as I am aware. The Ashram believes in the principle, but it is a pity that we have not succeeded in putting it into practice. We have not still acquired the art of doing this. It is possible that many men will have to lay down their lives before this art is mastered. For the present it is only a consummation devoutly to be wished for. The principle has long been accepted in India but the practice is very imperfect on account of our laziness and self-deception.

¹ Vide “Monkey Nuisance”, 8-7-1928 and “I have not done any killing”, 18-11-1928.

Mad dogs are killed in the Ashram, the idea being that they die after much suffering and never recover. Our people torture mad dogs instead of killing them and deceive themselves into thinking that they observe non-violence. As a matter of fact they only indulge in greater violence.

Non-violence sometimes calls upon us to put an end to the life of a living being. For instance a calf in the Ashram dairy was lame and had developed terrible sores; it could not eat and breathed with difficulty. After three days’ argument with myself and my co-workers, I had poison injected into its body and thus put an end to its life. That action was non-violent, because it was wholly unselfish inasmuch as the sole purpose was to achieve the calf’s relief from pain. It was a surgical operation, and I should do exactly the same thing with my child, if he were in the same predicament.

Many Hindus were shocked at this, but their reaction to the incident only betrays their ignorance of the nature of ahimsa, which has for us long ceased to be a living faith, and has been degraded into formalities complied with when not very inconvenient.

Here we must take leave of the Ashram experiments with ahimsa as regards sub-human species.

Ahimsa as regards sub-human life is from the Ashram point of view an important aspect but still only one aspect of this comprehensive principle. Our dealings with our fellow-men are still more important than that. The commonest form of human intercourse is either violent or non-violent. Fortunately for humanity non-violence pervades human life and is observed by men without special effort. If we had not borne with one another, mankind would have been destroyed long ago. Ahimsa would thus appear to be the law of life, but we are not thus far entitled to any credit for observing it.

Whenever there is a clash of ephemeral interests, men tend to resort to violence. But with a deliberate observance of non-violence a person experiences a second birth or ‘conversion’. We in the Ashram are out to observe ahimsa intelligently. In so doing we meet with numerous obstacles, disappointments and trials of faith. We may not be satisfied with observing ahimsa in deed only. Not to think badly of anyone, not to wish ill to him though we have suffered at his hands, not to hurt him even in thought,—this is an uphill task, but therein lies the acid test of our ahimsa.

\footnote{Vide “The Fiery Ordeal”, 4-10-1928 and “A young heart”, 3-1-1929.}

Thieves have visited the Ashram from outside, and there have been thieves in the Ashram itself. But we do not believe in inflicting punishment on them. We do not inform the police; we put up with the losses as best we may. This rule has been infringed at times. A thief was once caught red-handed by day. The Ashramite who caught him bound him with a rope and treated him contemptuously. I was in the Ashram at the time. I went to the thief, rebuked him and set him free. But as a matter of fact ahimsa demands from us something more than this. We must find out and apply methods which would put a stop to thieving altogether. For one thing we must diminish the number of our ‘possessions’ so as not to tempt others. Secondly we must bring about a reformation in the surrounding villages. And thirdly the Ashram ministry should be extended in scope so that the bad as well as the good would learn to look upon the Settlement as their own.

We thus find that it is impossible for a man with ‘possessions’ to observe ahimsa even in the gross meaning of that term. A man of property must adopt measures for its security involving the punishment of whoever tries to steal it. Only he can observe ahimsa who holds nothing as his own and works away in a spirit of total detachment. If there are many such individuals and organizations in society, violence will not be much in evidence. As gunpowder has a large place in a society based on violence and a soldier who can handle it with skill becomes entitled to honour and rewards, even so in a non-violent society self-suffering and self-control are its ‘munitions of war’, and persons endowed with these qualities are its natural protectors. The world at large has not still accepted ahimsa in this sense. India has accepted it more or less but not in a comprehensive manner. The Ashram holds that ahimsa should be universal in scope, and that society can be built up on the foundations of ahimsa. It conducts experiments with this end in view, but these have not been very successful. I have been unable to cite in this chapter much that would hearten the votary of ahimsa. This does not apply of course to ahimsa as applied to politics, to which I propose to devote a separate chapter.¹

¹ This remained unwritten.
IV

BRAHMACHARYA OR CHASTITY

This observance does not give rise to ever so many problems and dilemmas as ahimsa does. Its meaning is generally well understood; but understanding it is one thing, practising it is quite another thing and calls forth all our powers. Many of us put forth a great effort but without making any progress. Some of us even lost ground previously won. None has reached perfection. But everyone realizes its supreme importance. My striving in this direction began before 1906 when I took the vow. There were many ups and downs. It was only after I had burnt my fingers at times that I realized the deeper meaning of brahmacharya. And then I found that expositions made in books cannot be understood without actual experience, and wear a fresh aspect in the light of it. Even in the case of a simple machine like the spinning-wheel, it is one thing to read the directions for plying it, and it is another thing to put the directions into practice. New light dawns upon us as soon as we commence our practice. And what is true of simple tangible things like the wheel is still more true of spiritual states.

A brahmachari is one who controls his organs of sense in thought, word and deed. The meaning of this definition became somewhat clear after I had kept the observance for some time, but it is not quite clear even now, for I do not claim to be a perfect brahmachari, evil thoughts having been held in restraint but not eradicated. When they are eradicated, I will discover further implications of the definition.

Ordinary brahmacharya is not so difficult as it is supposed to be. We have made it difficult by understanding the term in a narrow sense. Many of us play with brahmacharya like fools who put their hands in the fire and still expect to escape being burnt. Very few realize that a brahmachari has to control not one but all the organs of sense. He is no brahmachari who thinks that mere control of animal passion is the be-all and end-all of brahmacharya. No wonder if he finds it very difficult. He who attempts to control only one organ and allows all the others free play must not expect to achieve success. He might as well deliberately descend into a well and expect to keep his body dry. Those who would achieve an easy conquest of animal passion must give up all unnecessary things which stimulate it. They must control their palate and cease to read suggestive literature and to enjoy all luxuries. I have not the shadow of a doubt that they will find brahmacharya easy enough after such renunciation.

Some people think that it is not a breach of brahmacharya to cast a lascivious look at one’s own or another’s wife or to touch her in the same manner; but nothing could be farther from the truth. Such behaviour constitutes a direct breach of brahmacharya in the grosser sense of the term. Men and women who indulge in it deceive themselves and the world, and growing weaker day by day, make themselves easily susceptible to disease. If they stop short of a full satisfaction of desire, the credit for it is due to circumstances and not to themselves. They are bound to fall at they very first opportunity.

In brahmacharya as conceived by the Ashram those who are married behave as if they were not married. Married people do well to renounce gratification outside the marital bond; theirs is a limited brahmacharya. But to look upon them as brahmacharis is to do violence to that glorious term.

Such is the complete Ashram definition of brahmacharya. However there are men as well as women in the Ashram who enjoy considerable freedom in meeting one another. The ideal is that one Ashramite should have the same freedom in meeting another as is enjoyed by a son in meeting his mother or by a brother in meeting his sister. That is to say, the restrictions that are generally imposed for the protection of brahmacharya are lifted in the Satyagraha Ashram, where we believe that brahmacharya which ever stands in need of such adventitious support is no brahmacharya at all. The restrictions may be necessary at first but must wither away in time. Their disappearance does not mean that a brahmachari goes about seeking the company of women, but it does mean that if there is an occasion for him to minister to a woman, he may not refuse such ministry under the impression that it is forbidden to him.

Woman for a brahmachari is not the ‘doorkeeper of hell’ but is an incarnation of our Mother who is in Heaven. He is no brahmachari at all whose mind is disturbed if he happens to see a woman or if he has to touch her in order to render service. A brahmachari’s reaction to a living image and to a bronze statue is one and the same. But a man who is perturbed at the very mention of woman and who is desirous of observing brahmacharya, must fly even from a figurine made of metal.

An ashram, where men and women thus live and work together, serve one another and try to observe brahmacharya, is exposed to many perils. Its arrangements involve to a certain extent a deliberate imitation of life in the West. I have grave doubts about my competence to undertake such an experiment. But this applies to all my experiments. It is on account of these doubts that I do not look upon anyone else as my disciple. Those who have joined the Ashram after due deliberation have joined me as co-workers, fully conscious of all the risks involved therein. As for the young boys and girls, I look upon them as my own children, and as such they are automatically drawn within the pale of my experiments. These experiments are undertaken in the name of the God of Truth. He is the Master Potter while we are mere clay in His all-powerful hands.

My experience of the Ashram so far has taught me that there is no ground for disappointment as regards the results of this pursuit of brahmacharya under difficulties. Men as well as women have on the whole derived benefit from it, but the greatest benefit has in my opinion accrued to women. Some of us have fallen, some have risen after sustaining fall. The possibility of stumbling is implicit in all such experimentation. Where there is cent per cent success, it is not an experiment but a characteristic of omniscience.

I now come to a point of vital importance which I have reserved for treatment towards the end of the discussion. We are told in the Bhagavad Gita (II.59) that “when a man starves his senses, the objects of those senses disappear from him, but not the yearning for them; the yearning too departs when he beholds the Supreme”, that is to say, the Truth or Brahman (God). The whole truth of the matter has here been set forth by the experienced Krishna. Fasting and all other forms of discipline are ineffective without the grace of God. What is the vision of the Truth or God? It does not mean seeing something with the physical eye or witnessing a miracle. Seeing God means realization of the fact that God abides in one’s heart. The yearning must persist until one has attained this realization, and will vanish upon realization. It is with this end in view that we keep observances, and engage ourselves in spiritual endeavour at the Ashram. Realization is the final fruit of constant effort. The human lover sacrifices his all for his beloved, but his sacrifice is fruitless inasmuch as it is offered for the sake of momentary pleasure. But the quest of Truth calls for even greater concentration than that of the human beloved. There is joy ineffable in store for the aspirant at the end of the quest. Still very few of us are as earnest as even the human lover. Such being the facts of the case, what is the use of complaining that the quest of truth is an uphill task? The human beloved may be at a distance of several thousand miles; God is there in the tabernacle of the human heart, nearer to us than the finger nails are to the fingers. But what is to be done with a man who wanders all over the wide world in search of treasure which as a matter of fact is buried under his very feet?

The brahmacharya observed by a self-restraining person is not something to be despised. It certainly serves to weaken the force of the yearning for the ‘flesh-pots of Egypt’. One may keep fasts or adopt various other methods of mortifying the flesh, but the objects of sense must be compelled to disappear. The yearning will get itself in readiness to go as this process is on. Then the seeker will have the beatific vision, and that will be the signal for the yearning to make its final exit. The treasure supposed to be lost will be recovered. He who has not put all his strength into his effort has no right to complain that he has not ‘seen’ Brahman. Observing brahmacharya is one of the means to the end which is seeing Brahman. Without brahmacharya no one may expect to see Him, and without seeing Him one cannot observe brahmacharya to perfection. The verse therefore does not rule out self-discipline but only indicates its limitations.

All members of the Ashram, young as well as old, married as well as unmarried, try to observe brahmacharya, but only a few will observe it for life. When the young people come to years of discretion, they are told that they are not bound to observe brahmacharya any longer against their will, and that whoever feels that he is unable to put forth the requisite effort has a right to marry. And when he makes the request the Ashram helps him in finding out a suitable partner in life. This position is very well understood, and the results have been uniformly good. The young men have persisted in larger numbers. The girls too have done pretty well. None of them married before she was fifteen, and many married only after they were nineteen.

Those who wish to marry with Ashram assistance must rest satisfied with the simplest of religious ceremonies. There are no dinners, no guests invited from outside, no beating of drums. Both bride and bridegroom are dressed in hand-spun and hand-woven khadi. There are no ornaments in gold or silver. There is no marriage settlement and no dowry except a few clothes and a spinning-wheel.
The function hardly costs even ten rupees, and takes not more than one hour. The bride and bridegroom recite in their own language the mantras (Vedic verses) of the saptapadi\(^1\) the purport of which has already been explained to them. On the day fixed for the marriage, the bride and bridegroom keep a fast, water trees, clean the cowshed and the Ashram well and read the Gita before the ceremony. Those who give away the bride also fast until they have made the gift. We now insist that the Ashram will not help to arrange a marriage between members of the same subcaste, and everyone is encouraged to seek his mate outside his own subcaste.\(^2\)

V

NON-STEALING AND NON-POSSESSION OR POVERTY

These two, along with truth, ahimsa and brahmacharya that have gone before, constitute the five mahavratas (primary observances) of old and have been included in the Ashram observances as they are necessary for one who seeks self-realization. But they do not call for any lengthy discussion.

1. Non-Stealing

To take something from another without his permission is theft of course. But it is also theft to use a thing for a purpose different from the one intended by the lender or to use it for a period longer than that which has been fixed with him. The profound truth upon which this observance is based is that God never creates more than what is strictly needed for the moment. Therefore whoever appropriates more than the minimum that is really necessary for him is guilty of theft.

2. Non-Possession Or Poverty

This is covered by Non-stealing. We may neither take nor keep a superfluous thing. It is therefore a breach of this observance to possess food or furniture which we do not really need. He who can do without chairs will not keep them in his house. The seeker will deliberately and voluntarily reduce his wants and cultivate progressively simple habits.

Non-stealing and Non-possession are mental states only.

---

\(^1\) For the meanings of the mantras, vide “With bare religious rites”, 7-3-1926.

\(^2\) The translator has added the following footnote: “This was written in 1932. In 1948 Gandhiji said a marriage could be celebrated in his presence only if one of the parties was a Harijan and the other a caste Hindu”.

168 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
No human being can keep these observances to perfection. The body too is a possession, and so long as it is there, it calls for other possessions in its train. But the seeker will cultivate the spirit of detachment and give up one possession after another. Everyone cannot be judged by the same standard. An ant may fall from grace if it stores two grains instead of one. An elephant on the other hand will have a lot of grass heaped before itself and yet it cannot be charged with having ‘great possessions’.

These difficulties appear to have given rise to the current conception of sannyasa (renunciation of the world), which is not accepted by the Ashram. Such sannyasa may be necessary for some rare spirit who has the power of conferring benefits upon the world by only thinking good thoughts in a cave. But the world would be ruined if everyone became a cave-dweller. Ordinary men and women can only cultivate mental detachment. Whoever lives in the world and lives in it only for serving it is a sannyasi.

We of the Ashram hope to become sannyasis in this sense. We may keep necessary things but should be ready to give up everything including our bodies. The loss of nothing whatever should worry us at all. So long as we are alive, we should render such service as we are capable of. It is a good thing if we get food to eat and clothes to wear; it is also a good thing if we don’t. We should so train our minds that no Ashramite will fail to give a good account of himself when testing time comes.

VI
BREAD LABOUR

The Ashram holds that every man and woman must work in order to live. This principle came home to me upon reading one of Tolstoy’s essays. Referring to the Russian writer Bondareff, Tolstoy observes that his discovery of the vital importance of bread labour is one of the most remarkable discoveries of modern times. The idea is that every healthy individual must labour enough for his food, and his intellectual faculties must be exercised not in order to obtain a living or amass a fortune but only in the service of mankind. If this principle is observed everywhere, all men would be equal, none would starve and the world would be saved from many a sin.

It is possible that this golden rule will never be observed by the whole world. Millions observe it in spite of themselves without understanding it. But their mind is working in a contrary direction, so that they are unhappy themselves and their labour is not as fruitful as it should be. This state of things serves as an incentive to those who understand and seek to practise the rule. By rendering a willing obedience to it they enjoy good health as well as perfect peace and develop their capacity for service.

Tolstoy made a deep impression on my mind, and even in South Africa I began to observe the rule to the best of my ability. And ever since the Ashram was founded, bread labour has been perhaps its most characteristic feature.

In my opinion the same principle has been set forth in the third chapter of the Gita. I do not go so far as to say that the word yajna (sacrifice) there means body labour. But when the Gita says that ‘rain comes from sacrifice’, (verse 14)¹, I think it indicates the necessity of bodily labour. The ‘residue of sacrifice’ (verse 13)² is the bread that we have won in the sweat of our brow. Labouring enough for one’s food has been classed in the Gita as a yajna. Whoever eats more than is enough for sustaining the body is a thief, for most of us hardly perform labour enough to maintain themselves. I believe that a man has no right to receive anything more than his keep, and that everyone who labours is entitled to a living wage.

This does not rule out the division of labour. The manufacture of everything needed to satisfy essential human wants involves bodily labour, so that labour in all essential occupations counts as bread labour. But as many of us do not perform such labour, they have to take exercise in order to preserve their health. A cultivator working on his farm from day to day has not to take breathing exercise or stretch his muscles. Indeed if he observes the other laws of health, he will never be afflicted with illness.

God never creates more than what is strictly needed for the moment, with the result that if anyone appropriates more than he really needs, he reduces his neighbour to destitution. The starvation of people in several parts of the world is due to many of us seizing very much more than we need. We may utilize the gifts of nature just as we choose, but in her books the debits are always equal to the credits. There is no balance in either column.

This law is not invalidated by the fact that men raise bigger

¹*Vide* “Discourse on the Gita”.
²*ibid*
crops by mechanizing agriculture and using artificial fertilizers, and similarly increase the industrial output. This only means a transformation of natural energy. Try as we might, the balance is always nil.

Be that as it may, the observance best kept in the Ashram is that of bread labour, and no wonder. Its fulfilment is easy with ordinary care. For certain hours in the day, there is nothing to be done but work. Work is therefore bound to be put in. A worker may be lazy, inefficient or inattentive, but he works for a number of hours all the same. Again certain kinds of labour are capable of yielding an immediate product and the worker cannot idle away a considerable amount of his time. In an institution where body labour plays a prominent part there are few servants. Drawing water, splitting firewood, cleaning and filling lamps with oil, sanitary service, sweeping the roads and houses, washing one’s clothes, cooking,—all these tasks must always be performed.

Besides this there are various activities carried on in the Ashram as a result of and in order to help fulfilment of the observances, such as agriculture, dairying, weaving, carpentry, tanning and the like which must be attended to by many members of the Ashram.

All these activities may be deemed sufficient for keeping the observance of bread labour, but another essential feature of yajna (sacrifice) is the idea of serving others, and the Ashram will perhaps be found wanting from this latter standpoint. The Ashram ideal is to live to serve. In such an institution there is no room for idleness or shirking duty, and everything should be done with right goodwill. If this were actually the case, the Ashram ministry would be more fruitful than it is. But we are still very far from such a happy condition. Therefore although in a sense every activity in the Ashram is of the nature of yajna, it is compulsory for all to spin for at least one hour in the name of God incarnated as the Poor (Daridranarayana).

People often say that in an institution like the Ashram where body labour is given pride of place there is no scope for intellectual development, but my experience is just the reverse. Everyone who has been to the Ashram has made intellectual progress as well; I know of none who was the worse on account of a sojourn in the Ashram.

Intellectual development is often supposed to mean a knowledge of facts concerning the universe. I freely admit that such knowledge is not laboriously imparted to the students in the Ashram. But if intellectual progress spells understanding and discrimination, there is adequate provision for it in the Ashram. Where body labour is performed for mere wages, it is possible that the labourer becomes dull and listless. No one tells him how and why things are done; he himself has no curiosity and takes no interest in his work. But such is not the case in the Ashram. Everything including sanitary service must be done intelligently, enthusiastically and for the love of God. Thus there is scope for intellectual development in all departments of Ashram activity. Everyone is encouraged to acquire full knowledge of his own subject. Anyone who neglects to do this must answer for it. Everyone in the Ashram is a labourer; none is a wage-slave.

It is a gross superstition to imagine that knowledge is acquired only through books. We must discard this error. Reading books has a place in life, but is useful only in its own place. If book-knowledge is cultivated at the cost of body labour, we must raise a revolt against it. Most of our time must be devoted to body labour, and only a little to reading. As in India today the rich and the so-called higher classes despise body labour, it is very necessary to insist on the dignity of labour. Even for real intellectual development one should engage in some useful bodily activity.

It is desirable if at all possible that the Ashram should give the workers some more time for reading. It is also desirable that illiterate Ashramites should have a teacher to help them in their studies. But it appears that time for reading and the like cannot be given at the cost of any of the present activities of the Ashram. Nor can we engage paid teachers, and so long as the Ashram cannot attract more men who are capable of teaching ordinary school subjects, we have to manage with as many such as we have got in our midst. The school and college-educated men who are in the Ashram have not still fully acquired the skill of correlating the three R’s with body labour. This is a new experiment for all of us. But we shall learn from experience, and those of us who have received ordinary education will by and by find out ways and means of imparting their knowledge to others.

VII

SWADESHI

At the Ashram we hold that swadeshi is a universal law. A man’s first duty is to his neighbour. This does not imply hatred for the foreigner or partiality for the fellow-countryman. Our capacity for service has obvious limits. We can serve even our neighbour with some difficulty. If every one of us duly performed his duty to his neighbour, no one in the world who needed assistance would be left unattended. Therefore one who serves his neighbour serves all the world. As a matter of fact there is in swadeshi no room for distinction between one’s own and other people. To serve one’s neighbour is to serve the world. Indeed it is the only way open to us of serving the world. One to whom the whole world is as his family should have the power of serving the universe without moving from his place. He can erkise this power only through service rendered to his neighbour.
Tolstoy goes further and says that at present we are riding on other people’s backs; it is enough only if we get down. This is another way of putting the same thing. No one can serve others without serving himself. And whoever tries to achieve his private ends without serving others harms himself as well as the world at large. The reason is obvious. All living beings are members one of another so that a person’s every act has a beneficial or harmful influence on the whole world. We cannot see this, near-sighted as we are. The influence of a single act of an individual on the world may be negligible. But that influence is there all the same, and an awareness of this truth should make us realize our responsibility.

Swadeshi therefore does not involve any disservice to the foreigner. Still swadeshi does not reach everywhere, for that is impossible in the very nature of things. In trying to serve the world, one does not serve the world and fails to serve even the neighbour. In serving the neighbour one in effect serves the world. Only he who has performed his duty to his neighbour has the right to say, ‘All are akin to me’. But if a person says, ‘All are akin to me’, and neglecting his neighbour gives himself up to self-indulgence, he lives to himself alone.

We find some good men who leave their own place and move all over the world serving non-neighbours. They do nothing wrong, and their activity is not an exception to the law of swadeshi. Only their capacity for service is greater. To one man, only he who lives next doors to him is his neighbour. For a second man his neighbourhood is co-extensive with his village and for a third with ten surrounding villages. Thus everyone serves according to his capacity. A common man cannot do uncommon work. Definitions are framed with an eye to him alone, and imply everything which is not contrary to their spirit. When he observes the law of swadeshi, the ordinary man does not think that he is doing service to any others. He deals with the neighbouring producer, as it is convenient for him. But an occasion may arise when this is inconvenient. One who knows that swadeshi is the law of life will observe it even on such occasions. Many of us at present are not satisfied with the quality of goods made in India, and are tempted to buy foreign goods. It is therefore necessary to point out that swadeshi does not simply minister to our convenience but is a rule of life. Swadeshi has nothing to do with hatred of the foreigner. It can never be one’s duty to wish or to do ill to others.

Khadi has been conceived as the symbol of swadeshi, because India has committed a heinous sin by giving it up and thus failing in the discharge of her natural duty.

The importance of khadi and the spinning-wheel first dawned on me in 1908, when I had no idea of what the wheel was like and did not even know the difference between the wheel and the loom. I had only a vague idea of the condition of India’s villages, but still I clearly saw that the chief cause of their pauperization was the destruction of the spinning-wheel, and resolved that I would try to revive it when I returned to India.

I returned in 1915 with my mind full of these ideas. Swadeshi was one of the observances ever since the Ashram was started. But none of us knew how to spin. We therefore rested content with setting up a handloom. Some of us still retained a liking for fine cloth. No swadeshi yarn of the requisite fineness for women’s saris was available in the market. For a very short time therefore they were woven with foreign yarn. But we were soon able to obtain fine yarn from Indian mills.

It was no easy job even to set up the handloom at the Ashram. None of us had the least idea of weaving. We obtained a loom and a weaver through friends. Maganlal Gandhi undertook to learn weaving. I conducted experiments at the Ashram and at the same time carried on swadeshi propaganda in the country. But it was like Hamlet without the Prince of Denmark so long as we could not spin yarn. At last however I discovered the spinning-wheel, found out spinners and introduced the wheel in the Ashram. The whole story has been

---

1 Gandhiji wrote on the subject in Hind Swaraj.
unfolded in the Autobiography.¹

But that did not mean that our difficulties were at an end. On the other hand they increased, since such of them as were hidden till now became manifest.

Touring in the country I saw that people would not take to the spinning-wheel as soon as they were told about it. I knew that not much money could be made by spinning, but I had no idea of how little it was. Then again the yarn that was spun would not at once be uniform as well as fine. Many could spin only coarse and weak yarn. Not all kinds of cotton were suitable for spinning. The cotton must be carded and made into slivers, and in carding much depended upon the condition of the cotton. Any and every spinning-wheel would not do. To revive the spinning-wheel thus meant the launching of a big scheme. Money alone could not do the trick. As for man-power too, hundreds of workers would be needed, and these men should be ready to learn a new art, to be satisfied with a small salary and to live out their lives in villages. But even that was not enough. The rural atmosphere was surcharged with idleness and lack of faith and hope. The wheel could make no headway if this did not improve. Thus a successful revival of the wheel could be brought about only with an army of single-minded men and women equipped with infinite patience and strong faith.

At first I was alone in having this faith. Faith indeed was the only capital that I had, but I saw that if there is faith, everything else is added unto it. Faith enlightens the intellect and induces habits of industry. It was clear that all experiments should be conducted at and through the Ashram which indeed existed for that very purpose. I realized that spinning should be the principal physical activity of the Ashram. Thus only could it be reduced to a science. Therefore spinning was at last recognized as a mahayajna (primary sacrifice), and everyone who joined the Ashram had to learn spinning and to spin regularly every day.

But yajna implies skill in action (कर्मयज्ञ).² To spin some yarn somehow cannot be called a yajna. At first the rule was that the members should spin for at least half an hour every day. But it was soon found that if the spinning-wheel went out of order, one could not spin even a couple of yards in half an hour. Therefore the rule was modified and members were asked to spin at least 160 rounds, one round being equal to 4 feet. Again yarn was no good if it was not uniform as well as strong. Tests of strength and uniformity were therefore devised, and we have now made such progress that spinning yarn coarser than 20s does not count as yajna.

¹ Vide “An autobiography”.
² Bhagavad Gita, II, 50

But granted that good yarn is spun, who would make use of it? I was sure from the first that the person who did spinning as a sacrament must not use his own yarn, but I was unable to carry conviction to others. Where was the harm if the spinner paid the wages and purchased his yarn for himself? I deceived myself and agreed that one who paid the wages and bought his own yarn should be considered a spinning-sacrificer. This error has not still been fully rectified. Errors not dealt with a strong hand at their first appearance tend to become permanent, and are difficult to eradicate like chronic diseases.

As a consequence of this yajna, spinning has made great strides in India, but it has still to take root in each of our villages. The reason is obvious. My faith was not coupled with knowledge. Some knowledge was acquired after mistakes had been committed. Co-workers have joined me, but are too few for the great task in hand. There are hundreds of workers, but perhaps they have not in them the requisite faith and knowledge. The root being thus weak, one may not expect to enjoy the ripest fruit.

But for this I cannot find fault with anybody. The work is new and wide as the ocean and it bristles with difficulties. Therefore though the result of our activity is not gratifying, it is still sufficient for sustaining our faith. We have every right to hope for complete success. Faithful workers, men as well as women, have joined in adequate numbers and have accumulated a fund of valuable experience, so that this movement is certainly destined not to perish.

Khadi has given rise to quite a number of other activities at the Ashram as well as elsewhere in the country which cannot here be dealt with at any length. Suffice it to say that cotton crops are raised, spinning-wheels are made, cloth is dyed, and simple hand-operated machines are manufactured for all the processes from ginning to weaving. These machines are being improved from time to time. The progress made in producing a more efficient type of spinning-wheel is a piece of poetry to my mind.

VIII
REMOVAL OF UNTOUCHABILITY

The Ashram was founded in order to serve and if necessary to die in the service of Truth. If therefore while holding that untouchability is a sinful thing, it did not do something positive in order to end it, it could hardly deserve the name of Satyagraha (adherence to Truth) Ashram. Even in South Africa we recognized untouchability as a sin. When the Ashram therefore was founded in India, removal of untouchability easily became one of its major activities.

Within a month of the foundation of the Ashram, Dudabhai applied for admission along with his family. I had no idea that the testing time of the Ashram would arrive so soon. Dudabhai’s application was supported by Shri Amritlal Thakkar. I felt bound to admit a family which was recommended by him.

The arrival of Dudabhai was the signal for a storm breaking upon the placid atmosphere of the Ashram. Kasturba, Maganlal Gandhi and Mrs. Maganlal had each of them some scruples in living with so-called untouchables. Things came to such a pass that Kasturba should either observe Ashram rules or else leave the Ashram. But the argument that a woman in following in her husband’s footsteps incurs no sin appealed to her and she quieted down. I do not hold that a wife is bound to follow her husband in what she considers sinful. But I welcomed my wife’s attitude in the present case, because I looked upon the removal of untouchability as a meritorious thing. No one could uphold untouchability and still live in the Ashram. It would have been extremely painful to me if my wife had had to leave the Ashram, seeing that she had been my companion all these days at the cost of great suffering. It was hard to be separated from her, but one must put up with every hardship that comes his way in the discharge of his duty. I had therefore no hesitation in accepting my wife’s renunciation of untouchability not as an independent person but only as a faithful wife.

Maganlal Gandhi’s case was harder than mine. He packed up his things and came to me to bid good-bye. But who was I to bid him good-bye? I put him on his guard. I told him that the Ashram was his creation as much as mine, and would be destroyed if he left it. But he certainly did not want that it should perish. He did not need to seek my permission to leave an institution which he himself had brought into existence. But to leave the Ashram should be something unthinkable for him. This appeal did not fall on deaf ears. Perhaps Maganlal had thought of leaving in order to give me a free hand. I could endure to be separated from all the world besides but not from Maganlal. I therefore suggested that he should go to Madras with family. He and his wife would learn more of weaving there and would have more time to ponder over the situation that had developed. So they went and lived in Madras for six months. They mastered the art of weaving and after mature consideration also washed their hearts clean of untouchability.¹

1 Vide also “An Autobiography—Part V, Chapter X”, 3-2-1929.

The internal storm thus blew over. But there was a storm outside the Ashram too. The chief person who financed the Ashram discontinued his assistance. There was even a possibility that the Ashramites should not be allowed any more to draw water from the neighbour’s well. But all difficulties were surmounted by and by. As regards finance, something happened which was not unlike Narasinha Mehta’s hundi (bill of exchange) being honoured at Dvaravati. A sum of thirteen thousand rupees was received from an unexpected source. Thus the Ashram ordeal in keeping Dudabhai at any cost was not so severe as it might well have been. The Ashram passed that test as regards its opposition to untouchability.
‘Untouchable’ families come to the Ashram freely and live in it.
Dudabhai’s daughter Lakshmi has become a full member of the family.

Three callings followed by the so-called untouchables are practised in the Ashram, and improved methods are devised in each.
Everyone in the Ashram has in turn to do sanitary service, which is looked upon not as a special calling but a universal duty. No outside labour is engaged for this work, which is carried on on lines suggested by Dr. Poore. Night-soil is buried in shallow trenches and is thus converted into manure in only a few days. Dr. Poore says that the soil is living up to a depth of twelve inches. Millions of bacteria are there to clean up dirt. Sunlight and air penetrate the ground to that depth.

¹ The translator has condensed the story here. Gandhiji records that Maganlal and his family returned to the Ashram along with Manilal who had gone to Madras to learn hand-weaving.
Therefore night-soil buried in the upper layer readily combines with the earth.

Closets are so constructed that they are free from smell and there is no difficulty in cleaning them. Everyone who visits them covers the night-soil with plenty of dry earth, so that the top is always dry.

Then again we have handloom weaving. Coarse khadi was manufactured in Gujarat by Harijan weavers only. The industry was almost on the verge of destruction, and many weavers were compelled to take up scavenging for a living. But now there has been a revival of this handicraft.

Thirdly we have tanning. We shall deal with it in the chapter on the Ashram dairy.

The Ashram does not believe in subcastes. There are no restrictions on interdining and all Ashramites sit to dinner in the same line. But no propaganda in favour of interdining is carried on outside the Ashram, as it is unnecessary for the removal of untouchability, which implies the lifting of bans imposed on Harijans in public institutions and discarding the superstition that a man is polluted by the touch of certain persons by reason of their birth in a particular caste. This disability can also be removed by legislation. Interdining and intermarriage are reforms of a different type which cannot be promoted by legislation or social pressure. The Ashramites therefore feel themselves free to take permitted food with everyone else but do not carry on any such propaganda.

Schools are established and wells sunk for Harijans through the Ashram which chiefly finds the finance for such activities. The real anti-untouchability work carried on in the Ashram is the reformed conduct of the Ashramites. There is no room in the Ashram for any ideas of high and low.

However the Ashram believes that varnas\(^1\) and ashrams\(^2\) are essential elements of Hinduism. Only it puts a different interpretation on these time-honoured terms. Four varnas and four ashramas are an arrangement not peculiar to Hinduism but capable of world-wide application, and a universal rule, the breach of which has involved humanity in numerous disasters. The four ashrams are brahm-

---

\(^1\) The four castes

\(^2\) The four stages of life
acharya, garhasthya, vanaprasthya and sannyasa. Brahmacharya is the stage during which men as well as women prosecute their studies, and should not only observe brahmacharya but should also be free from any other burden except that of studies. This lasts till at least the twenty-fifth year, when the student becomes a householder if he wishes. Almost all the students thus become householders. But this stage should close at the age of fifty. During that period the householder enjoys the pleasures of life, makes money, practises a profession and rears a family. From fifty to seventy-five wife and husband should live apart and wholly devote themselves to the service of the people. They must leave their families and try to look upon the world as a big family. During the last 25 years they should become sannyasis, live apart, set to the people an example of ideal religious life and maintain themselves with whatever the people choose to give them. It is clear that society as a whole would be elevated if many carried out this scheme in their lives.

So far as I am aware, the ashrama arrangement is unknown outside India, but even in India it has practically disappeared at present. There is no such thing now as brahmacharya, which is intended to be the foundation of life. For the rest we have sannyasis, most of them such only in name, with nothing of sannyasa about them except the orange robe. Many of them are ignorant, and some who have acquired learning are not knowers of Brahman but fanatics. There are some honourable exceptions but even these well-conducted monks lack the lustre we love to associate with sannyasa. It is possible that some real sannyasis lead a solitary life. But it is obvious that sannyasa as a stage in life has fallen into desuetude. A society which is served by able sannyasis would not be poor in spirit, unprovided even with the necessaries of life, and politically dependent, as Hindu society is at present. If sannyasa were with us a living thing, it would exert a powerful influence on neighbouring faiths, for the sannyasi is a servant not only of Hinduism but of all the faiths of mankind.

But we can never hope to see such sannyasis unless brahmacharya is observed in the country. As for vanaprasthya, there is no trace of it. The last stage we have to consider is that of the householder. But our householders are given to unregulated self-indulgence. Householders in the absence of the three other ashramas live like brutes. Self-restraint is the one thing which differentiates man from beast, but it is practised no longer.
The Ashram is engaged in the great endeavour to resuscitate the four ashramas. It is like an ant trying to lift a bag of sugar. This effort though apparently ridiculous is part of the Ashram quest of truth. All the inmates of the ashram therefore observe brahmacharya. Permanent members must observe it for life. All the inmates are not members in this sense. Only a few are members, the rest are students. If this effort is crowned with success, we may hope to see a revival of the ashrama scheme of life. The sixteen years during which the Ashram has functioned are not a sufficiently long period for the assessment of results. I have no idea of the time when such assessment will be possible. I can only say that there is nothing like dissatisfaction with the progress achieved up to date.

If the ashrama scheme has broken down, the plight of the varnas is equally bad. At first there were four varnas (classes); but now there are innumerable sections or only one. If we take it that there are as many varnas as there are castes and subcastes, their name is Legion; on the other hand if, as I think, varnas have nothing to do with caste, there is only a single varna left and that is the Shudra. We are here not finding fault with anybody but only stating the facts of the case. Shudras are those who serve and are dependent upon others. India is a dependency; therefore every Indian is a Shudra. The cultivator does not own his land, the merchant his merchandise. There is hardly a Kshatriya or a Brahmin who possesses the virtues which the Shastras attribute to his varna.

My impression is that there was no idea of high and low when the varna system was discovered. No one is high and no one is low in this world; therefore he who thinks he belongs to a high class is never high-class, and he who believes himself to be low is merely the victim of ignorance. He has been taught by his masters that he is low. If a Brahmin has knowledge, those who are without it will respect him as a matter of course. But if he is puffed up by the respect thus shown to him and imagines himself to belong to a high class, he directly ceases to be a Brahmin. Virtue will always command respect, but when the man of virtue thinks much of himself, his virtue ceases to have any significance for the world. Talents of all kinds are a trust and must be utilized for the benefit of society. The individual has no right to live unto himself. Indeed it is impossible to live unto oneself. We fully live unto ourselves when we live unto society.

No matter what was the position in ancient times, no one can nowadays go through life claiming to belong to a high class. Society will not willingly admit any such claim to superiority, but only under duress. The world is now wide awake. This awakening has perhaps given rise to some licence, but even so public opinion is not now prepared to accept any distinctions of high and low, which are being attacked on all sides. There is ever increasing realization that all are equal as human souls. The fact that we are all the creatures of one God rules out all ideas of high and low. When we say that no one is high-born or low-born, it does not mean that all have or ought to have equal talents. All have not equal talents, equal property or equal opportunities. Still all are equal like brothers and sisters of different dispositions, abilities and ages.

If therefore the varna system is a spiritual arrangement, there cannot be any place in it for high and low.

Thus there are four varnas, all equal in status, and they are determined by birth. They can be changed by a person choosing another profession, but if varnas are not as a rule determined by birth, they tend to lose all meaning.

The varna system is ethical as well as economic. It recognizes the influence of previous lives and of heredity. All are not born with equal powers and similar tendencies. Neither the parents nor the State can measure the intelligence of each child. But there would be no difficulty if each child is prepared for the profession indicated by heredity, environment and the influence of former lives; no time would be lost in fruitless experimentation, there would be no soul-killing competition, a spirit of contentment would pervade society and there would be no struggle for existence.

The varna system implies the obliteration of all distinctions of high and low. If the carpenter is held to be superior to the shoemaker and the pleader or doctor is superior to both of them, no one would willingly become a shoemaker or carpenter and all would try to become pleaders or doctors. They would be entitled to do so and to be praised for doing so. That is to say, the varna system would be looked upon as an evil and abolished as such.

But when it is suggested that everyone should practise his father’s profession, the suggestion is coupled with the condition that the practitioner of every profession will earn only a living wage and no more. If the carpenter earns more than a shoemaker and the pleader or doctor more than both, everyone would become a lawyer or doctor. Such is the case at present, with the result that hatred has increased and there are more lawyers and doctors than are necessary. It may be that society needs the lawyer or doctor even as it needs the shoemaker and the carpenter. These four professions are here taken only as illustrations and for comparison. It would be irrelevant to stop to consider whether society has particular need or no need at all for this, that or the other profession.

This principle then is an integral part of the varna system, that learning is not a trade and may not be used in order to amass riches. Therefore in so far as his ministrations may be necessary, the lawyer or doctor ought by practising his profession to earn only a living wage. And such was actually the case formerly. The village vaidya (physician) did not earn more than the carpenter but only a living wage. In short the emoluments of all crafts and professions should be equal and amount to a living wage. The number of varnas has no sanctity about it; their value is due to the fact that they define the duties of man. Varnas may be supposed to be one or more just as we like. The scriptures enumerate four of them. But when once we have assigned equal status to all, it makes little difference whether we think that there are four of them or that there is only one.

Such is the varna system which the Ashram is trying to resuscitate. It is like Dame Partington with her mop, trying to push back the Atlantic Ocean. I have already mentioned its two fundamental principles, namely, that there are no high and low, and everyone is entitled to a living wage, the living wage being the same for all. In so far as these principles win acceptance, they will render a positive service to society.

It may be objected that if such a plan is accepted there will be no incentive for the acquisition of knowledge. But the object with which knowledge is acquired nowadays tends to corrupt it, and therefore the absence of an incentive will be entirely beneficial. Knowledge truly so called is intended for one’s salvation, that is to say, service of mankind. Whoever has a desire to render service will certainly try to equip himself with the requisite knowledge, and his knowledge will be an ornament to himself as well as to society. Again when the temptation to amass riches is removed, there will be a change for the better in the curriculum of studies as well as in the methods of education. There is much misuse of knowledge at present. This misuse will be reduced to the minimum in the ‘new order’.
Even then there will be scope for competition in trying to be good and helpful. And there will be no discontent or disorder as all will receive a living wage.

Varna is wrongly understood today. That wrong understanding must make way for the principles outlined above. Untouchability must go, and varnas should have nothing to do with interdining or intermarriage. A person will dine with and marry whom he likes. But as a rule he will marry someone who belongs to the same varna as himself. But if he marries a person belonging to another varna, his act will not count as a sin. A person will be boycotted not by the varna but by society at large when his conduct justifies such a measure. Society will be better constituted than it is at present, and the impurity and hypocrisy which infest it now will be dislodged.

IX

AGRICULTURE

This department of Ashram activities owes its existence to Maganlal Gandhi. But for him I would not have had the courage to take up agriculture at all, although an ashram without it would be something like Hamlet without the Prince of Denmark. For we had not the requisite skill and environment for it as I thought. Agriculture is a very big undertaking and would call for a lot of land, money and man-power. I was afraid that it would distract our attention from other necessary things which could be done and would not wait. But Maganlal was insistent and I yielded to him. ‘Let me do it’, he said, ‘if only for my own diversion’. Maganlal hardly ever argued with me. He thought it his duty to carry out my ideas. If he did not understand them or if he disagreed, he would tell me so. If even then I stuck to my plans, he would take it that they were correct, and execute them. In fact he believed that an ashram without agriculture was something not to be thought of, and he would have had to make out a case for his belief. Instead he put forward the supreme argument of love and the Ashram launched upon agriculture. Most of the trees in the Ashram were planted by Maganlal or at his instance.

I still have my doubts about agriculture. Even today I cannot claim that it is a full-fledged Ashram activity. But I am not sorry for what little cultivation of the soil is done in the Ashram. A considerable amount of money has been sunk in it. It is not possible to show that it is self-supporting. However I am inclined to think that this much farming was necessary for the Ashram. No farming, no Ashram; for it must grow its own vegetables and fruit as far as possible. Indeed later on Maganlal took a vow that he would restrict himself to the use of Ashram-grown vegetables. An ashram should acquire the capacity to grow its own food grains and grass for the cattle. It may not carry on agricultural research, but an ashram without its farm would look like a face without the nose.

The Ashram farm is only in an experimental stage. It has not much to teach anybody. It is intended to impart only an elementary knowledge of agriculture. At first there was not a single tree in the Ashram, but now there are many trees, planted with a view to their utility. Vegetables are grown as well as some fruit and fodder. Night-soil is used as manure with satisfactory results.

Ancient ploughs are used as well as modern improved models, water is pumped from wells by methods which can be followed in villages. We are rather partial to ancient implements which are suitable for the poor farmer. They may be susceptible of some slight improvement, but nothing definite can be said about it, as the Ashram has not the time to apply its mind to the subject.

X

DAIRY

The Ashram ideal is to do without milk, as it holds that the milk of animals like meat is no food for mankind. For a year and more no milk or ghee was used in the Ashram, but as the health of the children as well as the adults suffered under this regimen, first ghee and then milk had to be added to the Ashram dietary. And when this was done, it was clear that we must keep cattle in the Ashram.

The Ashram believes in goraksha (cow-protection) as a religious duty. But the word goraksha savours of pride. Man is incompetent to ‘protect’ animals, being himself in need of protection from God who is the Protector of all life. The word goraksha was therefore replaced by goseva (cow-service). But as the experiment of doing without milk or ghee and thus serving the cow without any selfish considerations did not succeed, cattle were kept in the Ashram. We had buffaloes as well as cows and bullocks at first, as we had not yet realized that it was our duty to keep cows and bullocks only to the exclusion of the buffalo.

But it became clear day by day that cow-service alone at present stood for the service of all sub-human life. It is the first step beyond which we have not the resources to go for the time being. Again cow-slaughter is very often the cause of Hindu-Muslim tension. The Ashram believes that it is not the duty of a Hindu, nor has he the right to take away a Muslim’s cow by force. There is no service to or protection of the cow in trying to save her by force; on the other hand it only expedites slaughter. Hindus can save the cow and her progeny only by doing their duty to her and thus making her slaughter a costly act which no one can afford to do. Hindu society does not discharge this duty at present. The cow suffers from neglect. The buffalo gives more and richer milk than the cow, and keeping a buffalo costs less than keeping a cow. Again if the buffalo brings forth a bull calf, people do not care what becomes of him because buffalo ‘protection’ or ‘service’ is not a religious duty for them. Hindu society has thus been short-sighted, cowardly, ignorant and selfish enough to neglect the cow and has installed the buffalo in her place, injuring both of them in the process. The buffalo’s interest is not served by our keeping her, but lies in her freedom. To keep the buffalo means torturing its bull calf to death. This is not the case in all the provinces, but where the buffalo bull is useless for agricultural purposes as in Gujarat for instance, it is doomed to a premature death.

On account of these considerations, buffaloes were disposed of and the Ashram now insists on keeping cows and bullocks only. Improvement of breed, increasing the quantity and enriching the quality of milk by giving various feeds, the art of preserving milk and extracting butter from it more easily, least painful methods of castrating bull calves,—all these things are attended to. It is in an experimental stage, but the Ashram does believe that the cow will pay for its keep if she is well treated and all her products are fully utilized.

Many perhaps are not aware that a man cannot simply afford to keep a cow, and slaughter is inevitable so long as that is the case. Mankind is not so benevolent that it will die to save the cow or allow it to live on itself as a parasite. The cattle population at present is so large that if it is well fed, the human population will not have enough food left for itself. We must therefore prove the proposition that the cow if well kept is capable of greater production.

If this proposition is to be proved, Hindu society must discard some superstitions masquerading as religion. Hindus do not utilize the bones, etc., of dead cows; they do not care what becomes of cattle when they are dead. Instead of looking upon the occupation of a tanner as sacred, they think it unclean. Emaciated cattle are exported to and slaughtered in Australia where their bones are converted into manure, their flesh into meat extract and their hides into boots and shoes. The meat extract, the manure and the shoes are then re-exported to India and used without any compunction.

This stupidity makes for the destruction of the cow, and puts the country to huge economic losses. This is not religion but the very negation of it. Tanning has therefore been introduced in the Ashram. None of us is still a skilled tanner. No tanner from outside who would keep the Ashram rules has been available. But all the same tanning is an integral part of Ashram industry and we have every hope that it will be developed and propagated like spinning. The cow will cease to be a burden to the country only if dead cattle are fully utilized. Even then there will not be any profits. Religion is never opposed to economics, but it is always ranged in opposition to profits. If the cow is to pay for its keep, dead cattle should not be allowed to go to waste or to swell the profits of large-scale tanneries. This cannot be done by force. But Hindu society should keep the cow, treat her and her progeny well so long as they are alive, cherish them in their old age, and fully utilize their carcases when they are dead. Thus alone can the cow be saved, and in saving her we shall perhaps learn how to save the rest of the sub-human creation. Thanks to our ignorance, laziness and hatred, the cow today is hastening to her destruction. As for the other cattle, the less said about them the better.

The Ashram suggests that all goshalas and pinjrapoles should be organized religiously and scientifically. The rich should have their own goshalas and insist on using cow’s milk and ghee only. Trading in cow’s milk should be looked upon as a sin, and the well-to-do should manage public goshalas so as to make both ends meet. The cow would then soon be saved.

The Ashram at present has a limited object in view: to conduct a model goshala at the Ashram, to breed good cows and bullocks, to utilize their carcases fully when they are dead so as to show that cow-keeping is an economic proposition, to train workers and provide for their employment upon the completion of their training. This work is going on at present. There are many difficulties, but we are fully confident of success.

XI

EDUCATION

The word is here used in a special as well as the current sense. The Ashram experiment in education was a trial for us as nothing else was.

We saw at once that the women and children in the Ashram should be taught to read and write, and a little later on that there should be similar facilities for even the illiterate men that came to the Ashram. Those who had already joined the Ashram could not undertake to teach. If capable teachers were to be attracted to the Ashram, the rule of _brahmacharya_ had to be relaxed in their case. The Ashram was therefore divided into two sections, the teachers’ quarters and the Ashram proper.

Human beings cannot overcome their weakness all at once. As soon as the two sections came into being, a feeling of superiority and inferiority poisoned the Ashram atmosphere in spite of all our efforts to scotch it. The Ashramites developed spiritual pride, which the teachers could not tolerate. This pride was an obstacle in the attainment of the Ashram ideal and therefore an aspect of untruth as well. If _brahmacharya_ was to be observed in its perfection, the division was inevitable. But the _brahmacharis_ had no reason to think too highly of themselves. It may be that the _brahmacharis_ who sinned mentally in spite of themselves were retrogressing while those who did not claim to be _brahmacharis_ but liked _brahmacharya_ were making progress. This was clear to the intellect but it was not easy for all of us to put it into practice.

Then again there were differences of opinion as regards the method of education which gave rise to difficulties in administration. There were bitter discussions, but at last all calmed down and learned the lesson of forbearance. This was in my view a triumph of truth, the goal of all Ashram endeavour. Those who held divergent views harboured no evil intentions in their minds, and were indeed grieved at the divergence. They wished to practise truth as they saw it. Their partiality for their own stand-point came in the way of their giving due weight to the arguments of their opponents. Hence the quarrels which put our charity to a severe test.

I have my own perhaps peculiar views on education which have not been accepted by my colleagues in full, and here they are:

1. Young boys and girls should have co-education till they are eight years of age.
2. Their education should mainly consist in manual training under the supervision of an educationist.
3. The special aptitudes of each child should be recognized in determining the kind of work he or she should do.

4. The reasons for every process should be explained when the process is being carried on.

5. General knowledge should be imparted to each child as he begins to understand things. Learning to read or write should come later.

6. The child should first be taught to draw simple geometrical figures, and when he has learnt to draw these with ease, he should be taught to write the alphabet. If this is done he will write a good hand from the very first.

7. Reading should come before writing. The letters should be treated as pictures to be recognized and later on to be copied.

8. A child taught on these lines will have acquired considerable knowledge according to his capacity by the time he is eight.

9. Nothing should be taught to a child by force.

10. He should be interested in everything taught to him.

11. Education should appear to the child like play. Play is an essential part of education.

12. All education should be imparted through the mother tongue.

13. The child should be taught Hindi-Urdu as the national language, before he learns letters.

14. Religious education is indispensable and the child should get it by watching the teacher’s conduct and by hearing him talk about it.

15. Nine to sixteen constitutes the second stage in the child’s education.

16. It is desirable that boys and girls should have co-education during the second stage also as far as possible.

17. Hindu children should now be taught Sanskrit, and Muslim children Arabic.

18. Manual training should be continued during the second stage. Literary education should be allotted more time according to necessity.

19. The boys during this stage should be taught their parents’ vocation in such a way that they will by their own choice obtain their livelihood by practising the hereditary craft. This does not apply to the girls.

20. During this stage the child should acquire a general knowledge of world history and geography, botany, astronomy, arithmetic, geometry, and algebra.

21. Each child should now be taught to sew and to cook.

22. Sixteen to twenty-five is the third stage, during which every young person should have an education according to his or her wishes and circumstances.

23. During the second stage (9-16) education should be self-supporting; that is, the child, all the time that he is learning, is working upon some industry, the proceeds of which will meet the expenditure of the school.

24. Production starts from the very beginning, but during the first stage it does not still catch up with the expenditure.

25. Teachers should be paid not very high salaries but only a living wage. They should be inspired by a spirit of service. It is a despicable thing to take any Tom, Dick or Harry as a teacher in the primary stage. All teachers should be men of character.

26. Big and expensive buildings are not necessary for educational institutions.

27. English should be taught only as one of several languages. As Hindi is the national language, English is to be used in dealing with other nations and international commerce.

As for women’s education I am not sure whether it should be different from men’s and when it should begin. But I am strongly of opinion that women should have the same facilities as men and even special facilities where necessary.

There should be night schools for illiterate adults. But I do not think that they must be taught the three R’s; they must be helped to acquire general knowledge through lectures, etc., and if they wish, we should arrange to teach them the three R’s also.

Experiments in the Ashram have convinced us of one thing, viz., that industry in general and spinning in particular should have pride of place in education, which must be largely self-supporting as well as related to and tending to the betterment of rural life.

In these experiments we have achieved the largest measure of success with the women, who have imbibed the spirit of freedom and self-confidence as no other class of women have done to my knowledge. This success is due to the Ashram atmosphere. Women in the Ashram are not subject to any restraint which is not imposed on the men as well. They are placed on a footing of absolute equality with the men in all activities. Not a single Ashram task is assigned to the women to the exclusion of the men. Cooking is attended to by both. Women are of course exempted from work which is beyond their strength; otherwise men and women work together everywhere. There is no such thing as purdah or laj in the Ashram. No matter from where she has come, a woman, as soon as she enters the Ashram, breathes the air of freedom and casts out all fear from her mind. And I believe that the Ashram observance of brahmacharya has made a big contribution to this state of things. Adult girls live in the Ashram as virgins. We are aware that this experiment is fraught with risk but we feel that no awakening among women is possible without incurring it.

Women cannot make any progress so long as there are child marriages. All girls are supposed to be in duty bound to marry and that too before menstruation commences, and widow remarriage is not permitted. Women, therefore, when they join the Ashram, are told that these social customs are wrong and irreligious. But they are not shocked as they find the Ashram practise what it preaches.

Not much of what is usually called education will be observed in the Ashram. Still we find that the old as well as the young, women as well as men are eager to acquire knowledge and complain that they have no time for it. This is a good sign. Many who join the Ashram are not educated or even interested in education. Some of them can hardly read or write. They had no desire for progress so long as they had not joined the Ashram. But when they have lived in the Ashram for a little while, they conceive a desire for increasing their knowledge. This is a great thing, as to create a desire for knowledge is very often the first step to be taken. But I do not regret it very much that there are insufficient facilities in the Ashram calculated to satisfy this desire. The observances kept in the Ashram will perhaps prevent a sufficient number of qualified teachers from joining it. We must therefore rest satisfied with such Ashramites as can be trained to teach. The numerous activities of the Ashram may come in the way of their acquiring the requisite qualifications at all or at an early date. But it does not matter much, as the desire for knowledge can be satisfied later as well as sooner, being independent of a time-limit. Real education begins after a child has left school. One who has appreciated the value of studies is a student all his life. His knowledge must increase from day to day while he is discharging his duty in a conscientious manner. And this is well understood in the Ashram.

1 Veil

The superstition that no education is possible without a teacher is an obstacle in the path of educational progress. A man’s real teacher is himself. And nowadays there are numerous aids available for self-education. A diligent person can easily acquire knowledge about many things by himself and obtain the assistance of a teacher when it is needed. Experience is the biggest of all schools. Quite a number of crafts cannot be learnt at school but only in the workshop. Knowledge of these acquired at school is often only parrot-like. Other subjects can be learnt with the help of books. Therefore what adults need is not so much a school as a thirst for knowledge, diligence and self-confidence.

The education of children is primarily a duty to be discharged by the parents. Therefore the creation of a vital educational atmosphere is more important than the foundation of numerous schools. When once this atmosphere has been established on a firm footing the schools will come in due course.

This is the Ashram ideal of education which has been realized to some extent, as every department of Ashram activity is a veritable school.

XII
SATYAGRAHA

The various activities of the Ashram have already been covered more or less. The Ashram came into existence to seek the Truth by adhering to truthful conduct. And while doing so, if we are required to use the weapon of satyagraha, the Ashram may experiment with it, may explore its rules and limitations. The broad framework of these rules has also been discussed.

But what are the limits of satyagraha? When can this weapon be employed with vigour? Man’s adherence to truth is also satyagraha. It is not this form of satyagraha that is being discussed here. I am examining its utility as a weapon against an opponent.
Such satyagraha can be offered against associates, relatives, society, the State and the world. At the root of it . . .'

Ashram Observances in Action; also from the Gujarati in Satyagrahashramno Itihas.

171. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

July 12, 1932

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

It is enough that you apologized to Lakshmidevi; there is no need to fuss over it. You can come over whenever you get leave. The renunciation that we value is mental; it is not going into the forest. Without it nothing is complete, At present these is no question of going to Wardha. It may be considered after Vinoba is released. ‘Never say die even if it costs your life.’

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 350. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

172. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

July 13, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

You will please excuse me for worrying you again over my troubles. Major Bhandari told me yesterday that, in answer to my letter of the 9th instant, he was to inform me that there was no delay either in your office or Major Bhandari’s in attending to my correspondence as soon as it was received from the Government. This I knew. My inquiry was exactly about the Government’s procedure. I have been permitted to write letters to friends outside and fellow-prisoners, including those at Yeravda whether male or female. I have written to the latter as regularly as to my people at the Ashram. There is no use my writing to the fellow-prisoners in this Jail if my letters and theirs are not exchanged quickly. The letters naturally relate to mutual welfare and the welfare of those in whom they and I are interested.

The same thing applies to the Ashram letters.

---

1 This section ends here abruptly.

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932 193
Some of the letters I receive from others are from my standpoint important. Whether they are regarded by the authorities as important or otherwise, I should not like to lose them.

My experience of past imprisonment is that when the correspondence goes to the Government, it takes time to receive attention. In 1930, in the commencement my letters were sent to the Government and I know that they took nearly six weeks before I could get the first batch given to me and this after repeated requests. Subsequently Major Martin, the then Superintendent, was empowered to deal with the correspondence and naturally there was no delay. Of course I can have nothing to say as to who examines my correspondence. What I am concerned about is:

1. What are exactly the revised instructions about my correspondence?
2. How long shall I have to wait before I receive my letters and before what I write is posted?
3. Shall I continue to receive back those letters which may be rejected, and as before be given the reasons for rejection?
4. Will the letters and parcels withheld from me be treated as my property and cared for and delivered to me whenever I may be discharged?

I shall thank you to forward this letter to the Government and procure for me an early reply.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

173. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 14, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter of 7th instant came to hand this morning, (14th). Just now things are all upside down so far as my correspondence is concerned. All of it goes to the Government. What happens then I do not know. I am inquiring. Such is prison life. It is a good discipline in patience.

I am glad my letters gave some consolation to Damodardas and his wife. I hope they are now out of the wood. What kind of a woman is Prem Kunver? Is she brave enough to face these tremendous losses?

I am keeping quite well. The weight now stands at 105 1/2. The pain in the elbow is at a standstill. It is just possible that the ointment they are now trying may cure the elbow. But whether it does or not, there is nothing to worry over.

Yes, Pyarelal is sure to profit by a temporary abstention from salt. Your experiment, if it continues to yield good results, will be taken up by many. Pyarelal will surely try it. But nothing definite can be said about it until you have gone on with it for at least a year.

The papers say you are on the move. Strange you should have received the order when the police must have known you were about to leave Bombay.¹ They must have received orders before your projected departure could have come to their notice.

Vallabhbhai has now added Sanskrit studies and spinning to the envelope-making. He is most diligent in his Sanskrit studies and although new to the Gandiva wheel, is easily drawing 180 rounds of 20 counts.

Love from us all.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6231. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9697

¹ In Bapu’s Letters to Mira, Mirabehn explains: “Just as I was packing up to go and see Rajendrababu at Chapra, I received a notice ordering me to leave Bombay. I did not change my plans, but went on the day already fixed for my departure.”
174. LETTER TO M.A. KHAN

July 14, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your admonition. You do not expect me to argue with you. I fear that as a prisoner, I would not be permitted to enter into argument over political matters. But I can't tell you that deep thinking in the solitude of a jail has not induced a change in my outlook.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

MOULVI SAHEB M. A. KHAN
KOTWAL STREET BAZAAR 3
FEROZEPUR CANTT.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 185

175. LETTER TO A. VELUSAMI

July 14, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter of 7th instant. I never got yours of 12th March last.

There can be no manner of doubt that this universe of sentient beings is governed by a Law. If you can think of a law without its giver, I would say that the Law is the Law-Giver, i.e., God. When we pray to the Law, we simply yearn after knowing the Law and obeying

1 The addressee had written: “You do not understand politics. Leave it to the Aga Khan and persons like Sastri and Mr. Sapru. You should retire to the Himalayas and admit your mistake.” Gandhiji had written to him in his own hand. Mahadev Desai has reported the following conversation about this letter between Sardar Patel and Gandhiji:

SARDAR: Why did you write a reply to this abusive letter in your hand?
BAPU: To a person like him I must write in my own hand.
SARDAR: Because he has abused you? This is what makes many people think too highly of themselves.
BAPU: I do not think this has done us any harm. (Mahadevbhaini Diary, “The Indian Franchise”, 16-12-1895.)

2 Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I has “may”.

196  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
it we become what we yearn after. Hence the necessity for prayers. Though our present life is governed by our past, our future must by that very law of cause and effect be affected by what we do now. To the extent therefore that we feel the choice between two or more courses, we must make that choice.

Why evil exists and what it is are questions which appear to be beyond our limited reason. It should be enough to know that both good and evil exist. And as often as we can distinguish between good and evil, we must choose the one and shun the other.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

VELUSAMI
SIVAGANGA

From a photostat: G.N. 7947. Also Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40)(3), Pt. II, p. 183

176. LETTER TO SUDHIR KUMAR SEN GUPTA¹

July 14, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I took up goat’s milk because I had vowed not to take buffalo’s or cow’s milk. Physiologically there is little difference between the three. It would have been better from the ethical standpoint if I could have resisted the temptation to take goat’s milk. But the will to live was greater than the will to obey the ethical code. My views on the ethics of milk food remain unchanged. But I see that there is no effective vegetable substitute for milk. you should not give it up.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. SUDHIR KUMAR SEN GUPTA
C/O BABU RAJANIKANTA SEN GUPTA
PLEADER
HOOGHLI P. O.
BENGAL

¹ The addressee, a Bengali boy, had written: “You had taken the vow to give up milk. But after that you took goat’s milk. Did you see any special advantage in it? I am a rice- eater. From what thing other than milk can I derive nourishment?”
177. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJEE

July 16, 1932

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I got your letter. I had asked you to write to me anything about yourself if you wished to do so. If I can share from here your joys and sorrows, I should like to do so. I cannot write anything regarding the Conference. Respectful greetings from us all to Grandmother. Does anyone stay with Gokibehn? I wrote to her some days ago.\(^1\) My blessings to Sumati.\(^2\)

_Blessings from_ BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 4797. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarjee

178. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 16, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got today, Saturday, your mail which ordinarily I should have got on Tuesday. We should regard it as God’s grace that I got it at all. But we should understand that things have become uncertain now. You will probably have received my letters by now. All of you are having experience of the practice of non-attachment, and so are we here. What could a prisoner do if he was not permitted to write or receive any letters or see visitors? If, then, he is granted some little freedom, why should he expect too much because of that? If, therefore, you stop getting my letters, you should conclude that something must have happened. I will of course go on writing regularly about something or other.

It was a very good thing that the inmate of the Raniparaj Ashram was cremated. If you have come to know his age, let me know, and also if you know of what he died.

Narmada’s\(^3\) story reads like an incident in a novel. From here I cannot guide either you or her. If necessary, you may consult Bhai

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Gokibehn”, 8-7-1932.
\(^2\) Addressee’s wife
\(^3\) Narmadabehn Rana; she was ill-treated by her in-laws and was rescued by Shambhushankar Trivedi of Saurashtra who brought her to the Ashram.
Mavalankar about the matter or, if he cannot get any time or if he is not there, consult Bhai Tulsidas or Fulshankar, the lawyer. In the last analysis this is a question of what is right from the point of view of dharma. You may, therefore, do what you think dharma requires. You have done perfectly right in writing to her husband.

If Chhotubhai stays for the present in the Ashram to look after his aged father, we may perhaps welcome the latter. However, we cannot let it become a practice for inmates of the Ashram who have invalid relations to bring them to the Ashram. If we do that, the Ashram would be disrupted. This is a difficult time and Chhotubhai’s father has already arrived, and so I have suggested a via media. If Chhotubhai does not stay in the Ashram, the Ashram should certainly not accept the responsibility of looking after his father.

If, through some unavoidable reason, Hariyomal’s son cannot come to the Ashram, I do not think it would be too big a sum to send fifteen rupees every month for him. We have given such help on several occasions. The rule, of course, is what you say it is. But we should think whether it should be applied in Hariyomal’s case. Since you know more facts about this matter than I, you may attach what weight you think my opinion deserves and do only what seems right to you.

For Anandi and Mani, follow Dr. Kanuga’s advice. I cannot say that taking milk has benefited my elbow in any way.

Think very carefully over the article about prayer which I am sending with this. You will find it very easy to understand. If you understand it, you will also be able to explain its meaning to others. I see from my experience that, instead of our time being wasted in that way, our mind seems to become lighter and we feel less the burden of work or responsibility. These days I think frequently about prayer, and especially about individual prayer. Rambha had taught me to pray when I was a mere child, and so prayer has become a most natural thing for me. But I still see short-comings in me. If perfect wakefulness is achieved, the grandeur of that state would make

\[^1\] Ganesh Vasudev Mavalankar
\[^2\] Khadi student at the Ashram
\[^3\] A Sindhi inmate who worked at the Ashram farm
\[^4\] Dr. Balwantrai Kanuga
\[^5\] Vide “Individual Prayer”, 17-7-1932.
\[^6\] Gandhiji’s nurse; vide “An Autobiography—Part I, Chapter X”, 3-2-1929 everything else seem meaningless.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8239. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

179. LETTER TO NARMADABEHN RANA

July 16, 1932

CHI. NARMADA.

If what has been written to me on your behalf is true, that does you credit. No human being can protect your chastity. You alone can do that. And if you have complete faith in God, you may rest assured that it will be protected. Ask the women in the Ashram to explain to you the meaning of the first verse in the women’s prayer. Though the prayer was addressed by Draupadi, it is meant for all women. Don’t look upon it as merely the prayer of a woman one or two thousand years ago. It can protect, like a shield, [the honour of] any woman who is in distress.

I cannot advise you from here whether you should go to a court or not. I cannot even decide that. I must know all the relevant circumstances. On this matter, therefore, you should follow the advice of somebody whom you trust. But in any case you must have confidence in your mind that, no matter where you are taken and kept, you can protect your chastity without anybody’s help. You may be certain that such confidence will give you the necessary strength. If, however, you have resolved to live as a virgin for your whole life, you should study further and keep your mind engaged in some work of service.

Blessings from

BAPU

200 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
180. LETTER TO SHAMBHUSHANKAR TRIVEDI

[July 16, 1932]

DEAR SHAMBHUSHANKAR,

Received your letter. See what I have written in Narandas’s letter\(^1\) regarding Narmada. In such matters I cannot give any advice from here. Where a pleader requires to be consulted, he should be consulted. This is wisdom. After that if the Ashram has to do anything, Narandas has full authority, He may do whatever his duty dictates. See the letter I am writing to Narmada.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40), p. 319

181. INDIVIDUAL PRAYER

July 17, 1932

Though I have already written once on this subject,\(^2\) I feel that I should again write something about its importance. It seems to me that one reason why people feel no interest in community prayers may be that they do not realize the necessity of individual prayer. The idea of community prayers arose from the individual’s need for prayer. If individuals do not feel such a need, how can a community? Community prayers also are for the benefit of individuals. They help people in their effort to attain knowledge of the self—for self-purification; It is, therefore, necessary that all of us should understand the importance of individual prayer. As soon as a child learns to understand things, its mother ought to teach it to pray. This practice is common to all religions.

There are at least two clear times for such prayer, that is, we should turn our mind to the Lord within immediately on awakening in the morning and when closing our eyes for sleep in the evening. During the rest of the day, every man and woman who is spiritually awake will think of God when doing anything and do that with Him as witness. Such a person will never do anything evil, and a time will

\(^1\) Vide the preceding item.
\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 16-7-1932.
\(^3\) Vide “Prayer”, 19-7-1932.
come when he or she will think every thought with God as witness and as its Master. This will be a state in which one will have reduced oneself to a cipher. Such a person, who lives constantly in the sight of God, will every moment feel Rama dwelling in his heart.

For such prayers, no special mantra or bhajan is necessary. Though generally a mantra is recited at the commencement and conclusion of every religious act, that is not at all necessary. We have only to turn our thoughts to God, no matter by what name we call Him, by what method and in what condition. Very few form such a habit. If most people followed this practice, there would be less sin and evil in this world and our dealings with one another would be pure. In order that we may attain such a pure state, everybody should pray at least at the two times which I have mentioned. Each person may fix other hours, too, according to his convenience, and gradually increase their frequency so that, ultimately his every breath will be accompanied with Ramanama.

Such individual prayer consumes no time at all. It requires not time but wakefulness. As we don’t feel that the unceasing action of blinking consumes any time, so also we do not feel that praying inwardly does. But we are aware that the eye-lids are doing their work; similarly prayer should go on constantly in our heart. Anybody who wishes to pray in this manner should know that he cannot do with an impure heart. He must, therefore, banish all impurity from his heart when praying. As one feels ashamed of doing anything wicked when being observed by somebody, so also should one feel ashamed of acting similarly in the sight of God. But God watches every action and knows every thought of ours. Hence there can be no moment when we can do anything or think any thought unobserved by Him. Thus, anybody who prays to God with his heart will in the end become filled with Him and so become sinless.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U. / II

182. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI

July 17, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your letter. It does not answer all my questions. I cannot remember now your replies to my questions put to you orally. It would not be proper for me to write anything on the basis of [my impression of your replies. That is why I put down the questions in writing. But I will not trouble you further. I shall see what I can do on the basis of the material you have supplied. The description which you have given of your condition is sad, but I do not despair. I am confident that you are vigilant. And since you are also striving to the best of your ability, I should like you to have trust that you will get some day the required strength. If you lose faith in yourself, other people’s faith is hardly to help you.

All three of us keep well. We spend a good deal of our time in studies.

Writing and receiving letters has become uncertain now.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9181

184. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

July 17, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

Should we not believe that you are unlucky? I sent the birthday blessings by return of post, but the letter itself was held back here. I don’t know if it was posted yesterday. What good do blessings

---

1 Eleventh day of the lunar fortnight; traditionally a day of fasting for Hindus.

2 Vide “Letter to Pramabehn Kantak”, 30-6-1932.
conveyed in a letter do? You should be satisfied if my heart showered blessings on you, which it certainly did. We never know how a person feels in his heart. It is the heart which matters; all else is false.

You must cure the pain in your back. It can have some connection with your monthly periods. Are they normal? I feel the same doubt about Anandi; Mani and Mangala. Talk with the girls and find out. It is probably time for Mani to begin to have menses. I remember that she was three years old when she was brought to the Ashram. She should be sixteen now. Mangala, too, may be of the same age. Know from them all the facts.

If any of the women who have joined the Ashram recently can write, ask them to write to me. Get into close contact with Narmada. Her story is a painful one.

I do not know the life of President Wilson. I am told that he was a good man and that his motives were sincere.

The last War seems to have done no good. Moral bonds have weakened and hatred has increased. The war mentality is not less strong today than it was before the War and the lure of power and pelf has become stronger.

We can certainly pray for some person or with a material aim, and such prayer may even be rewarded. But prayer which is inspired by no such motive is probably more beneficial to the atman and the world. Prayer produces an effect on oneself, that is, it awakens further the Indwelling Spirit and, as the latter becomes more and more awakened, the area of its influence becomes wider. What I have said above about the heart is applicable here. Prayer is a matter of the heart. Saying it aloud and similar other activities are intended to awaken the heart. The Infinite Power which exists outside us also exists inside us and is equally infinite there. The body is no obstacle to Its operation. The obstacle is created by us. Prayers remove that obstacle. We do not know in any particular instance whether or not our prayers have answered our wish. If I pray for Narmada to be delivered from her suffering and if she becomes free from it, I should not assume that that was the result of my prayer. Such prayer is never in vain, but we do not know how it bears fruit. Moreover, when the effect for which we had prayed follows, we need not believe that it is necessarily for our good. In this matter, too, we should follow the path shown in the Gitabodh. Prayers should be offered in a spirit of non-attachment. Even when we have prayed for some person, we can remain, unconcerned with the result. We may pray for a person to be delivered from his suffering because we think that is for his good, but we should remain unconcerned whether or not he becomes free. Because the effect is the opposite of what we had prayed for, we need not believe that our prayers have not been answered. Tell me if you want me to explain the matter still further.

Remember about the list of Urdu books which I have asked you to send. It is quite uncertain now when you will get this letter and when I shall get your reply. We should however cultivate and feel certainty in the midst of uncertainty.

BAPU

185. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

July 17, 1932

DEAR DEVDAS,

Received your letter dated 30th June, written on the back of the Urdu letter of Hamid Ali, yesterday noon, that is, on the 16th July. Nowadays my post has become very irregular. It comes to me after taking a big round. It must be said to be my good fortune that I get it in spite of that—what rights a prisoner has? Imprisonment means absence of rights. As I take the meaning of imprisonment to be this I can keep my mind steady. Similar is the case with visits. For the most part you will be able to see Mahadev. But there cannot be prepared a timetable as you think. Either you should take the risk of not being granted an interview or you should give up the desire of visiting him. I would have been glad no doubt to see you and Lakshmi if I could, but the step taken by me certainly seems to be proper. Ba will feel the shock the most. But she is born to endure shocks. All those who form or keep connections with me must pay a heavy price. It can be said that Ba has to pay the heaviest. I have this much satisfaction that Ba has lost nothing by it.¹

As soon as I received a telegram about Varadachari I also wired

¹ This paragraph has been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I.
to him. I also wrote letters. I got receipt of my wire also by wire through Rajaji. Yesterday I received a letter from Lakshmi to that effect; in it there is no receipt of my letter on the subject. But my post about that time went the wrong way.

None of us had the idea that you are to be released in September. It does not seem that you will be transferred from there, though I got a detailed report of your health from H.E. the Governor. I hope that your health will not suffer now. The presence of Hanumanprasad proved to be much peace-giving to me. I find from Hamid Ali’s letter that he had sent Ramacharcha also. I am reading it. I read the stories about martyred lad, agriculture, alchemist, etc. It is true that I could not understand some words. Otherwise there was no difficulty. I have not got yet the book on arogya, i.e., sanitation, from anywhere. It will be better if Al-Faruk is not received from Delhi. We had a copy in the Ashram. I have asked for it. I will read it after I finish Ramacharcha. I like it. I now remember to have read it before. I find the meanings I had noted down in it. It is not wrong if this book is read two-three times. You must be writing to Hamid Ali and others in English. You must form a habit to write in Urdu. My idea is to write a short letter in Urdu to him. His handwriting resembles that of a professional writer. He must be a professional writer. We have lost the art of writing. It is still preserved in Urdu.

The reason why I am taking milk is the (persuasion of the) Superintendent of this place. He was disturbed and my health had a little bit given way and hence I am taking milk. There was no necessity for it. It was likely that the health would become normal soon. But I thought it wise not to carry on experiments here. I do not see any benefit of taking milk in particular for the present. The weight which had gone down had increased, that is, it is 105½ lb. It had gone to 103 lb. I do not see any effect of taking milk on the hand. The pain was already there when I was taking milk. But this pain cannot be said to afflict me. Because it aches only when the elbow is given a particular movement. When that movement is stopped there is no pain. Such movement is (almost) stopped. There is no cause for anxiety at all.

1 Vide “Telegram to C. Rajagopalachari”, 5-7-1932
2 Vide “Letter to Lakshmi”, 7-7-1932.
Vallabhbhai has begun spinning on the Gandiva spinning-wheel and also the study of Sanskrit. When he heard that Rajaji was studying it, he became enthusiastic over it. He has begun the study in right earnest. He had sent for the 24 parts of Satavlekar’s guide. He has finished (in six days) the first part thereof. Now he is reading the second part. His study is going on very briskly. The books by Satavlekar are on the whole good. They are easy to learn. Perhaps you must have seen and read them also. My study of Urdu, astronomy and political economy is going on. At intervals I read some religious books also. As for instance I read Vaidik Vinay of Abhay Sharma.¹ Now I am reading a book called Swadhyaya Samhita.² It contains selections from the Vedas and other books, and below them there is translation in Hindi. Mahadev is learning French and reads something else also. He writes for me if there is anything. He devotes one hour for Vallabhbhai. He also cooks bread for me. I take bread instead of the bread from the bakery. There is no chaff in the bread from the bakery, while it is contained in the bread prepared at home. That is the reason of going back to the roti. I am writing letters with my own hand because mostly while observing silence I am writing letters. I also get most of them written (by someone). Whatever I write I do not feel any difficulty in writing with my right hand. I am not allowed to write with the left hand, and hence I use the right hand. I am writing the history of the Ashram during leisure.³ I hope to finish it in a short time. I am spinning on the Magan spinning-wheel.

Jalbhai Naoroji can now move about. He has escaped just from death.

I have returned Rajaji’s letter to you. I am wondering about your letter dated 2nd June. I will cause a search to be made here again. Whatever (blessings) you like from my companions.

Blessings from
BAPU

¹ Abhaydev Sharma, Acharya, Gurukul, Kangri
² By Vaidikmuni Hariprasadji
³ Vide “History of the Satyagraha Ashram”, 11-7-1932.
186. LETTER TO MADALASA BAJAJ

July 17, 1932

CHI. MADALASA¹,

The word *abhiman*² connotes an undesirable quality, whereas *swabhiman*³ connotes a good one. If you think yourself an important person being a big man’s daughter, you would be abhimani. If, however, somebody tries to insult you but you are not intimidated by him, you will be said to have preserved your swabhiman or swaman. Why doesn’t Om⁴ write?

Kamala⁵ of course, I must not expect to write.

Babu⁶ must be growing very fast now. Does he still love to eat plenty of sweets?

Don’t be lazy in writing to me. Ask Balkrishna⁷ to write too.

[From Gujarati]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 313

187. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

July 17, 1932

DEAR RAMESHWARDAS,

The adjective dear must have been written by mistake. I cannot make one my ‘dear’. He who wishes to be my ‘dear’ ought to wear a chain⁸ on the neck. He cannot escape under the pretext of weakness. You appear to be pucca bania. You escape, (bringing) in the pretext of weakness wherever (possible). How can such (a man) become my ‘dear’? If the observance of the fast of the eleventh day is in name only, God and society may be humbly told that you have no strength to observe a fast. But you cannot fight shy of it thus. The few vows

---
¹ Daughter of Jamnalal Bajaj
² Pride
³ Self- respect
⁴ Proud
⁵ Sisters of the addressee.
⁶ ibid
⁷ Addressee’s younger brother, Ramakrishna
⁸ Balkoba, younger brother of Vinoba Bhave
⁹ The source has “put on a necklace” which may have been taken should be firmly adhered to and fully observed. From this, enormous strength may be created.

Now Vinoli¹ must be happy. Make arrangements about Ram as he says. A father should not pass on his own weakness to his descendants, He must safeguard their interest as far as he can. Dasharatha² preferred death and allowed Rama to go out into the jungle. Remembering this, acquire strength.

Blessings from
BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 313

188. LETTER TO LAKSHMI

July 17, 1932

DAUGHTER LAKSHMI,

I have received your letter. Devdas had sent a wire to me in respect of Varadachari and so I wrote a letter³ to you which you must have received (by now). Along with it a letter (each) was sent for Anna and Papa. What further consolation can I give? All (our) sufferings vanish when we entertain no fear of death and consider it as our greatest friend. Why should we grieve since the soul is deathless? This idea should be strengthened. Well, I hope Narasimhan⁴ has not hastened to you. If he has, tell Anna that he should go back.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. LAKSHMI
GANDHI ASHRAM
TIRUCHENGODU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Part II, p. 339

¹ Presumably Vinoba; vide “Letter to Rameshwardas Poddar”, 21-7-1932.
² King of Ayodhya, father of Rama
³ Vide “Letter to Lakshmi”, 7-7-1932.
⁴ Addressee’s brother
189. LETTER TO KHODIDAS H. SHAH

July 17, 1932

BROTHER KHODIDAS,

If you have taken a vow, it is your duty (religion)\(^1\) to observe it.

MOHANDAS

MR KHODIDAS H. SHAH
ROJID
KATHIAWAR

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 301

190. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

July 17, 1932

BOYS AND GIRLS,

Why is the holiday of the eleventh of the bright half of Ashadha (regarded) a special holiday? It has been known so far that the holiday of the eleventh day is for fasting. But Premabehn seems to have discovered something. Explain to her. My complaint is not in regard to the observing of the holiday in a new way. I want [you] to understand its significance. A student should try to realize the significance of anything he does.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No 800 (40) (3), Part II, p. 309

\(^1\) Presumably the original had “dharma”.

210 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
191. LETTER TO MANI

July 17, 1932

DEAR MANI,

I thought you would never fall ill, then how is it that you fell ill again? You do not write letters now. Do you like to stay at the Ashram? Why did you come away from Mother? Write to me everything in detail. Write also openheartedly what your desires are.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II p. 311

192. LETTER TO ANANDI

July 17, 1932

DEAR ANANDI,

It seems you are again down with fever. Why do you not find out the cause? Now you are taking Dr. Kanuga’s pills. Let me know what is their effect. You must continue to write whether you receive mine or not.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II p. 311

193. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

July 17, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

We do not know if people meditated upon Bharata and Rama during their lifetime. Experience tells us that people are worshipped only after their death. It is a different thing that they are honoured while they are still alive. We may not call it dhyanā. A living human being can certainly not be regarded as perfect. And, worship and dhyanā would be appropriate only with reference to perfect beings. It would be harmful to worship one who has faults or who is likely to do something wrong, for we would become like those whom we

1 Youngest daughter of Lakshmidas Asar
2 Meditation
meditate. I do not have the power nor the wish to perform miracles as Christ did. How can there be any comparison between him and me? He was a very great man indeed. Write to Bhai that he should write to me.

You must continue to put on weight.

Do you not realize the difference between the bodily structure of man and woman? Whatever differences you see can be seen, one may say, with the naked eye. A man has moustaches, a woman has none. A woman bears children, a man does not. A woman suckles her child, a man does not. Are these differences not plain enough to be clear to everyone? And this means a little difference in their functions and training.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9954. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

194. LETTER TO CHHOTUBHAI

July 17, 1932

DEAR CHHOTUBHAI,

Received your letter. If just now you continue to remain at the Ashram for looking after your father, then there will be no objection to his staying there; otherwise I am of opinion that the Ashram will not be able to look after him and at such a time such a burden should not be allowed to fall on the Ashram. After thinking over the account received from you about his constipation, I see only one remedy and it is that unless he observes 10-15 fasts at a stretch, his stomach will not be cleansed. But only he and you can say if he has strength to do so. His strength does not mean his bodily strength, but his strength of mind. Even if he observes fast, some treatment must be taken side by side, that is, drinking a good deal of water and taking enema daily.

It does not seem that your father knows how to write, because the whole letter has been written by you. And so I do not write separately to him.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, pp. 315-7

1 The source has “Chhonbhai”; vide however, “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 16-7-1932.
2 Of Jamia Millia
195. LETTER TO HAMID ALI KHAN

July 17, 1932

BROTHER HAMID ALI,

Devdas has sent your letter to me for perusal. I am grateful to you for the books sent to me. I am still reading Ramacharcha (i.e., life of Rama). I have finished other books. All the three books have pleased me. There was not much difficulty in understanding them. Please do not send Al-Faruq (life of Faruq, the 2nd Caliph of Islam) as I have got it with me (here). But do send some other books which in your opinion may be quite all right for me. Convey vandemataram to all the brothers of the Jamia.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

[PS.]

I have not as yet got Guide to Health¹ I have written to Devdas about it. I am very sorry to hear about the burning of the press.

GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 337

196. LETTER TO INDU N. PAREKH

July 17, 1932

DEAR INDU.

If you are well, certainly attend the prayers. Sitting here I cannot know (anything) about your demand. Do as Narandas asks you to do. Has your life been made regular? Can you concentrate your mind on study? Has the confusion of your mind lessened? Has (it) begun to understand its responsibility? Think about all these things.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 309

¹ An English version, published in India, of the Gujarati articles contributed by Gandhiji to Indian Opinion in 1913.
MY DEAR CHILD,

I have your letter. Do not fret, if you don’t hear from me at the expected moment. My correspondence has been upset a bit. I am hoping that the matter will be soon put right. However, a prisoner has got to be satisfied with facilities that may be given to him for the natural satisfaction of his healthy wants.

When you see the invalid sister, you must tell her I often think of her. I wonder if you ever visit that little school\(^1\) in your neighbourhood for defective children. I thought the institution had earnest workers. If you have the time, I would like you to know more of the institution and its managers and tell me how it progresses.

You tell me how desolate Bajaj’s house looked for want of the woman’s touch. I have always considered this a result of our false notions of division of work between men and women. Division there must be. But this utter helplessness on the man’s part when it comes to keeping a household in good order and woman’s helplessness when it comes to be a matter of looking after herself (more here than in the West) are due to erroneous upbringing. Why should man be so lazy as not to keep his house neat, if there is no woman looking after it, or why should a woman feel that she always needs a man protector? This anomaly seems to me to be due to the habit of regarding woman as fit primarily for housekeeping and of thinking that she must live so soft as to feel weak and be always in need of protection. We are trying to create a different atmosphere at the Ashram. It is difficult work. But it seems to be worth doing.

Remember me and Mahadev to Mrs. Winston when you write to her.

Kisses to the children.

Love.

BAPU

---

\(^1\) Gandhiji visited it when he went to England for the Round Table Conference in 1931.
198. LETTER TO PRINCESS EFY ARISTARCHI

July 18, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I have to thank you once more for your lovely gifts. I have got the beautiful book The Way of the Cross with your markings and the crucifixion cards with helpful descriptions and thoughtful quotations made by you at the back.

I hope all your troubles are over and if they are not, God has blessed you with sufficient wisdom to regard them, in the language of one of your quotations, as “blessings in disguise”.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

PRINCESS ARISTARCHI
HOTEL SCHOTZKY
FREIBURG I. B., GERMANY

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 253

199. LETTER TO GANESHDATTA

July 18, 1932

DEAR GANESHDATTAJI,

I have received your book. Prisoners are not permitted to write a foreword.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. II, p. 251
200. LETTER TO NARHARI DEVSARMA

July 18, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. As you know, it is not open to me to argue about matters political. But I can heartily endorse your remark that all the leaders must bear the natural consequences of their actions.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. NARHARI DEVSARMA
BARRACKPORE TANK ROAD
BARRACKPORE

201. LETTER TO NATWARLAL

July 19, 1932

DEAR NATWARLAL,

Your letter has been received. It is very good that you have been plying the takli. To ply the takli does not mean drawing out a thread. But it is drawing 160 yards of yarn of at least 12 counts of uniform twist per hour so that there may be no difficulty in weaving. One should not have even any confidence about letters from one in jail. Your letter came to my hand today, that is, fourteen days after you wrote it. It remains to be seen when this reaches you. In these circumstances there is no meaning in my replying by return of post. But your vow is such that you must have adhered to it on the ground of not receiving my letter. This will certainly do you good. And if you can pull on without tea and sugar for so many days, how can you not do without them for ever? We know from the lives of crores (of people) in this world that both these things are unnecessary, inasmuch as they are acquainted neither with tea nor sugar. About jail life: the life of one in jail cannot be written at length. But to the 1 The addressee had said in his letter that the leaders were responsible for the people’s suffering.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40)(3), Pt. II, p. 289

202. LETTER TO S. D. SATAVLEKAR

July 19, 1932

Bhai Satavlekar,

I got your letter only today. The Sanskrit Readers came earlier but I was awaiting your letter. May I thank you for the Readers? I have received so many books from you! Purushartha and other things keep coming. You will be gratified to learn that Sardar has completed the first two Readers and has gone on to the third. We are jotting down the errors that come to our notice. We had already decided to inform you of them even before the receipt of your letter. There is no doubt that on the whole the Readers are very well planned. Whatever mistakes we observe will be pointed out to you only with the purpose of enhancing the utility of the series.

My arm does not give too much pain. The left elbow pains only with a particular movement. The Superintendent gave me Lakshadi oil to be used for massage but it did no good. In fact, this oil helps only when the pain is caused by rheumatism but the pain in my elbow joint is not rheumatic. So far the doctors have diagnosed it as the result of constant employment of the elbow in plying the charkha. For that reason I have given up using the left arm in spinning for almost a month. It cannot be said that it has resulted in any improvement. So now I am to undergo intensive treatment. There is no cause for worry; my health is, on the whole, good enough.

What you have written about Vishwaroopadarshanayoga¹ is quite correct, but it does not in any way contradict what I have written in the preface to that chapter. The man who sees the whole world as a manifestation of Vasudeva is bound to have a vision of the Cosmic Form but the Form will be that of his own imagining. A Christian who considers the creation as a divine manifestation will visualize an image to suit his notions. Our way of worship determines the form of God in our mind. One born and bred in the Hindu culture will never tire of reading the eleventh chapter and if he be a devotee, he will be able to picture to himself the magnificent form described therein. Such imagery is not beyond a man’s imagination in this world. We may call the divine force as Brahman, Atman or Vasudeva, yet it remains formless. Only for the devotee it acquires dimensions; that is its expression and therein lies its poetic appeal. We can make only one deduction which you have already drawn. We must be able to see Vasudeva or God even in a dacoit. When we have acquired the strength to do that, the dacoit will give up his wickedness. And until we acquire this power all our learning and knowledge is worthless. You have not expected my comments upon your writing on Vishwaroopadarshana, yet I have written all this as I am engrossed with the same thoughts. It gives me great pleasure to carry on such conversations with you through letters.

¹ “Yoga of the Vision of the Cosmic Form” in the Gita; the addressee had said in his letter that there was not only poetry in Chapter XI of the Gita as Gandhiji had made out, but also the vital truth that God is immanent in all created objects which are only different parts of His body.

I have finished reading ‘Vaidik Vinay’ by Abhayji. Now I am reading Swadhyaya Samhita by Vaidikmuni Hariprasadji. But I find great difficulty in reading the Vedic hymns. You are acquainted with my knowledge of Sanskrit, it is of the most elementary order, and as regards Vedic Sanskrit it is almost nil. I know this much, that vedic hymns have been interpreted in several ways by different scholars—by Sanatanis in one way, by Arya Samajists in another and by Western scholars in yet another. Even among the sanatanis I find difference of opinion. All Arya Samajists too are not agreed upon the same meaning. You must be remembering the correspondence between yourself and Vaidyaji that I initiated. In the light of all this I feel bewildered when I try to study the Vedic hymns and find myself at a loss to decide upon any interpretation. At present I am memorizing Ishopanishad. I think Shankara’s interpretation of it differs from that of Aurobindo Babu; and your interpretation that I saw last year while in jail differs from both. I have now received a translation in Gujarati. This and Hariprasadji’s translation are again at variance. I have understood this Upanishad in my own way which seems somewhat presumptuous in view of my scanty knowledge of Sanskrit. Is there any work available from which I may learn the rudiments of Vedic grammar and does a collection exist containing different annotations by various scholars? In short, what should a man like myself do when confronted with interpreting correctly the Vedic mantras? I have not faith enough in any sect to accept their interpretation as gospel truth. Luckily or unluckily I possess just enough knowledge of Sanskrit to choose from several interpretations available to me. But I have no desire to collect a large library while I am in jail nor do I wish to involve myself in a deep study. Gita suffices for my own contentment. But I do like to dabble in the Vedas. Therefore please oblige me by giving whatever information you can. We are all well.

---

1 In the Anasaktiyoga; Vide “Letter to Hemprabha Das Gupta”, 21-9-1932.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: C.W. 4763. Courtesy: S.D. Satavlekar

203. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 20, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

Your letter, posted on the 18th, reached me on the 20th. But I don’t know what will happen to mine. The officials here tell me that the packet which I had handed over on the 4th was dispatched on the 16th. All the letters are sent to the Secretariat for censoring, and are posted when received back here after being passed. I simply cannot understand why they should do this. I have been trying to find out, of course. I don’t know if I shall succeed. We should go on writing to each other as usual and not worry when the letters will reach their destination. We should not think about the matter at all. We should be ready in our minds to face the possibility of the correspondence stopping altogether and be sure that we shall not feel upset even then.

Ask Prabhudas to write to me. Two days ago the doctor permitted me to rotate the Gandiva wheel with the left hand, and so I have started spinning on the Gandiva. I appreciate it all the more after my experience with the Magan spinning-wheel. My yarn became fine immediately and the threads also snapped rarely. I still draw the thread with the right hand. There are some defects in the spinning-wheel, and when I have removed them it will work still more smoothly.
Comparing it with the Magan spinning-wheel, I see that I cannot acquire speed on the latter. Hence I think that for spinning with one spindle only, the Gandiva or the ordinary spinning-wheel is better. For anybody who cannot use either of his hands for drawing the thread or for rotating the wheel, the Magan spinning-wheel is an invaluable invention. Obviously, anyone who can use both his hands can spin more. But we cannot spin yarn of the highest count on it. A few changes may perhaps help us to do it. It is also possible that our speed on it may increase if we make some modifications so that we can spin on it with one spindle only. But all this requires experimentation. My experience of it in its present form is what I have described it to be. I can say that I have now acquired excellent control over the pedals.

I have been permitted to spin on the Gandiva wheel not because there is any improvement in the condition of my elbow but because complete rest has not benefited it in any way. The assumption behind this is that the pain may not have been caused by the strain of [rotating] the wheel when spinning. I shall know for certain in a few days.

I am happy that Dr. Talwalkar charges two rupees for conveyance and gives a bill for the medicines. If we call him only once or twice in a year, he can afford to charge us nothing, but he cannot afford to do so when he gives us medicines as frequently as he does. He is not so rich. As for conveyance, I think we have been paying it for a long time. Dr. Talwalkar’s sending us bills for medicines is likely to have one result. Through laxity we may have been calling him during all this time even when it might not be necessary. If that is so, our laxity should go now. In any case, if we are scrupulous in following dharma, we should feel extremely reluctant to accept anybody’s free services. But most people certainly do not behave in that way. Because water costs nothing, we use it freely and do not feel ashamed in doing so. On the contrary, we ask why we should not use it freely when it costs nothing. And as we are careless about using water because it costs nothing, we feel in the same way about other services or things which we get free. This is a violation of our vow of nonstealing, besides being a violation of the vow of ahimsa too.

I have had no letter from Ba. I wrote one letter to her many days ago, to which I got no reply. And so I have not written to her recently.
I simply do not understand what happens to these letters. I will write once again to her, and put the letter with this. If you get it, show it to the Jail Superintendent there and give it to Ba. I hope all those who had got cold have recovered now. There is a wire from Devdas informing me that he had a mild relapse of fever. If you get this letter and if Shanti is there at the time, give him and his wife my blessings and tell him that I was happy that he had gone there. Did he get my letter? I wrote it to him at Rajkot.

It will be enough if you send the slivers, given by Chhakkaddas, to Dahyabhai with anybody who may be going to that side. I have a stock of other slivers with me. It will not matter, therefore, if Chhakkaddas’s arrive a little late.

Is Parnerkar’s health all right? I am sure Prithuraj is quite well.

It seems to me from your description that Shankarbhai had a narrow escape. Anyone falling from the roof of the kitchen is hardly likely to survive, as the roof is at a fairly good height. I hope his arm is all right now.

I have fully explained my views regarding Sitala Sahay in a previous letter. You will know what they are if you get it. I have also written about Parnerkar’s mother, as also about Narmada.

The Jailor informed us that Mahadev’s letter to Durga, written on the 11th, was posted on the 14th. But you had not got it till the 18th, from which it seems that the letters are being tampered with there too.

You should assume that for some time now you cannot be certain of getting my letters—as for the future, let us wait and see what happens. You will find more about this in my letter to Premabehn.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8240. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 Vide “Letter to Kasturba Gandhi”, On or After 21-7-1932.
2 Son of Lakshmidas Asar
5 Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 16-7-1932.
6 Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 24-7-1932.
204. TELEGRAM TO SUPERINTENDENT,
CENTRAL JAIL, LAHORE

[Before July 21, 1932]

SUPERINTENDENT
CENTRAL JAIL
LAHORE

HEAR KHURSHEDBAI NAOROJI HAD OPERATION. PRAY INFORM ME CAUSE OPERATION AND PRESENT CONDITION.

GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

205. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 21, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I have before me your letter and postcard. The body will take its toll. We never know when we commit a breach of the laws that govern the body. And in nature as in human law ignorance is no excuse.
Your fever therefore does not surprise me. I expect that the energetic remedy adopted by you checked the progress of malaria. Yes at such times services of friends become a boon and induce an early recovery.
I know what lavish care is bestowed upon guests in Sivaprasad Babu’s home. I am glad you are having these sweet experiences. It makes attacks such as you had not only bearable but even a prized visitation in that they enable one to understand human nature at its best. And when it acts equally towards all and in all circumstances, it approaches the divine.

Your description of Ganga is quite poetic. I felt much the same as you have done. And it was probably the same spot where I was walking. I wrote my impressions for Navajivan. This was quite 10 years ago I think.

Milk diet still continues. The weight is 105 1/2 lb. It has produced no effect on the elbow. I feel no better than when I was taking

1 The jail authorities forwarded this to the Home Secretary, Poona, for orders on July 21, 1932.
2 After her arrival at Varanasi from Chhapra the addressee had a severe attack of malaria.
3 A Congress leader of Varanasi almonds and bread. So far as the bowels are concerned, I was most assuredly better under that diet than the milk diet.

I do not know when you will get this letter. The disturbance of my correspondence still continues. The incoming post has become regular but there is much delay about the outgoing post. I am in correspondence with the Government about [it]¹. I cannot understand this sudden disturbance at all. But there it is. Fortunately for the peace of my mind I commenced my career as a prisoner even in South Africa with the assumption that a prisoner had no rights. If you are still outside prison walls, you will know why you do not get my letters regularly, if you do not.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Remember us to all the friends. If you at all can, try to see Devdas. He is so near you.

SHRIMATI MIRABAI
C/O BABU SIVAPRASAD GUPTA
SEVA UPVAN
NAGWA
BENARES

From a photostat: C.W. 9508. Courtesy: Mirabehn

206. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

July 21, 1932

MY DEAR DEVDAS,

The telegram from Hanumanprasadji today causes anxiety. It seems that there is an attack of fever again. It is stated in the telegram that the attack is a mild one. Hence I believe that by the time you get this letter you must have completely recovered. You must have received the letter (I) wrote before this. Still there is no certainty about the post dispatched by me. It seems that my letters take many days to get through (the scrutiny). The letters are being nicely scrutinized. You must be certainly careful of your health. Whatever the climate, I believe that it can be kept under control by effecting suitable changes in the diet. Write to me why there was a set-back again.

¹ Vide letters to Doyle, 9-7-1932; 13-7-1932. and also : 22-7-1932.
It seems that I get my post regularly again. We all three are happy. Vallabhbhai is learning Sanskrit like an industrious schoolboy. He devotes many hours to its study. He has finished two parts and is reading the third. There will be no wonder if he finishes all the 24 parts within four or five months at this rate. Yet, it will be considered a wonder and a miracle if he begins to understand the Mahabharata and the Ramayana in original.

Blessings from

BAPU

DEVDAS GANDHI
DISTRICT JAIL
GORAKHPUR, U.P.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40)(3), Pt. II, p. 353

207. LETTER TO SONIRAMJI

July 21, 1932

BROTHER SONIRAMJI,

I am in receipt of your letter. I have heard many interpretations of the occult significance of the sacred thread. But all these interpretations are only guesses. I do not think that all these ideas were present at the time when the sacred thread came into use. Those people who described themselves as Aryans adopted the use of the sacred thread in order to distinguish between Aryans and non-Aryans. This must have happened at the time when the art of making cloth from cotton was discovered. Crores of people merely put on the dhoti then, as they do even now, with the rest of the body uncovered. In any case those who are believed to be non-Aryans did so. The Aryans, therefore, adopted the symbol of the sacred thread in order to encourage and improve the art of spinning and prove that it was sacred work. I have no evidence from history in support of this statement. It is only my conjecture. Today there is no distinction—and there ought not to be any—between Aryans and non-Aryans. An admixture of blood between the races took place thousands of years

---

1 From the English translation available in the Bombay Secret Abstracts
2 ibid
3 ibid
ago and the present inhabitants of India are the progeny of such an admixture. If the sacred thread is to be worn to all, all [the castes] should have the right to wear it. I see no meaning in such a movement. For this reason, after giving up the use of the sacred thread I never tried to wear it again nor do I wish to do so. Inasmuch as the practice of wearing the sacred thread is likely to have created the distinction between higher and lower castes, it should be discarded. I would advise Gauri Prasad to give up his infatuation for the sacred thread. It is the sign of a brahmachari. If a person observes brahmacharya that itself is the best sacred thread. Why is a cotton thread needed?

To keep the water in a well clean it should be covered with a wire-netting. There ought not to be any dirt anywhere around it. The well should be deep and (a certain quantity of) “permanganate of potash” or chlorine should be put into it every month. The quantity (of the drug) to be used should be ascertained from a doctor. In addition to taking these precautions it would be advisable to get the water analysed from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

208. LETTER TO KAPIL

July 21, 1932

DEAR KAPIL,

Received your letter. I am sorry to learn of your health. I think you should quietly improve your health and while improving health whatever service you can render, be satisfied with that. To ply a takli is some service. Educate the children who may be in your vicinity or conduct night classes for those who are grown up. This is also service. We should purify ourselves as we advance in years and should not allow a single impure thought to enter our mind. This is, from my

1 What follows is from the English translation available in Bombay Secret Abstracts.
2 What follows has been collated with the Gujarati in Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I.
point of view, a service. And even a man on sick-bed can do this much.¹ You must indeed be observing the rules regarding prayers, etc. Do write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

209. LETTER TO HANUMANPRASAD PODDAR

July 21, 1932

BROTHER HANUMANPRASAD,

Received your letter as also your telegram today. I shall not feel anxious about Devdas since you are there. Moreover Devdas had written to me that you treated him in a very loving manner. The doctor is really a good man. I shall always expect to receive letters from you from time to time.²

The man who resorts to falsehood with a view to acquiring worldly goods or for some other reason in full of attachment and hatred; he cannot possibly reach God.³ And I consider the other example you have cited as impossible. To tread the path of truth and at the same time to remain aloof from worldly affairs, i.e., from pravritti is a thing which is impossible like a flower in the sky. How can one tell what path one follows who keeps away from pravritti? To tread the truth in itself involves entrance into pravritti. Without pravritti there is no occasion for treading or not treading the path of truth. The holy Gita in its several verses has made it clear that a man cannot exist even for a moment without pravritti. The difference between a devotee and one who is not a devotee is this, that the first remains in pravritti with an eye to the highest good and while living in pravritti never lets go his hold upon truth and weakens attachments and aversions, while the other lives in a state of infatuation with

¹ What follows is from the English rendering available in Bombay Secret Abstracts.
² The following paragraph has been collated with the Hindi in Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I.
³ The addressee had asked: “Can a man who resorts to untruth for worldly purposes see God? Or is the beatific vision possible for one who gives up all activities in order to be able to observe the truth?”
pravritti and does not even try to remain aloof from such demoniac actions as falsehood, etc., while pursuing his object. These worldly affairs are not a thing to be looked upon with contempt. It is only through worldly affairs that a vision of the Lord is possible. Those worldly affairs that create infatuation deserve to be looked upon with contempt and always shunned. This is my firm opinion and experience.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]

210. LETTER TO KASTURBA GANDHI

[On or after July 21, 1932]¹

BA,

None can say what the matter is that you do not receive my letters and I do not receive yours? Hence I have not written any letters at present. When it is not certain that letters would reach you how can I like to write? I do receive information about you. Nimu writes to say that you appear to be losing strength. How is that? Is the food digested?

We are happy here. You must be knowing that I am at present taking milk. There was no special reason for taking it. The Superintendent here insisted and so I began to take it. I also take roti and vegetable. Vallabhbhai has begun to learn Sanskrit, and has also begun to work the spinning-wheel. There is uncertainty about my letters at present and so it cannot be said what the fate of this will be.

Devdas has again fallen ill, but there is nothing to be anxious about.

You may have known of the death of Rajaji’s son-in-law. If you have not written a letter of condolence, write one. Blessings to sisters.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800

¹ From the reference to the relapse of Devdas’s fever; vide also “Letter to Devdas Gandhi”, 21-7-1932

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932
DEAR COL. DOYLE,

I refer to my letter of 13th instant. My son at Gorakhpur too had a relapse. I have written to him a letter\(^1\) that should cheer him. But I have no notion when it will be passed and sent to him. Another to a friend\(^2\) in the Lahore Jail. She has undergone an operation. A third to the sister of the missing Airman Jeejibhoi.\(^3\) Fourth to Shrimati Mirabai Slade\(^4\) who is down with fever at Benares. And I am writing today a postcard\(^5\) to a girl sending her and her people condolences on a family bereavement. All these letters to be of value should surely be sent at once or not at all. But from the manner in which the Ashram post is held up, how can I hope that the foregoing letters will be passed soon? I have a postcard from the Ashram telling me that my letter of 5th July was received there on 20th instant! The letters written on the 12th and 19th July have still evidently not been sent. They contain important instructions about ailing inmates and others in distress that has nothing to do with political matters. If the Government do not wish to withdraw their orders conveyed to me about my letters, I should be assured of their quick despatch. This delay in sending my letters to their destination seems to me to be highly unjust to me and hardly becoming for the Government. I have willingly broken no rule about my correspondence. On the contrary I have tried to be meticulously correct in carrying out their instructions. I know no reason for this vexatious change in the disposition of my correspondence.

Could you please forward this to the Government and ascertain their wishes in the matter?

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

---

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Devdas Gandhi”, 21-7-1932.

\(^2\) Khurshedbehn Naoroji; vide “Telegram to Superintendent, Central Jail, Lahore”, Before 21-7-1932.

\(^3\) In the entry under date July 21, 1932 in “Diary, 1932”, given as the last item in this volume, there is a reference to a letter to Shirinbai; but this letter is not available. Vide, however, “Letter to Shirinbai”, 26-7-1932.

\(^5\) Vide “Letter to Rohinibehn Desai”, 22-7-1932.
212. LETTER TO ROHINIBEHN DESAI

July 22, 1932

CHI. ROHINI,

I got a letter from Hamida today. She informs me that your maternal uncle has expired. All of you are being tested severely. Give condolences to Mother or behalf of all of us. Really speaking we should never grieve over death. If we regard death as a friend, then uncle has met a friend. We may, of course, mourn his death because of our selfishness. If, however, we look at the matter in proper light, it is our good fortune that all of us will meet that friend sooner or later. I have heard that Kanjibhai also feels weak. Write to me and give me detailed news. Sardar also is eager to know about his health.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. ROHINIBEHN
C/O S J T. KANAIYALAL NABHAI DESAI
GOPIPURA, SURAT

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 2658

213. LETTER TO NIRMALABEHN GANDHI

July 22, 1932

DEAR NIMU,

You seem to be a very cunning girl. After showing that you have no time left, you turn the tables on me and say that you would devote as many hours as I would ask you to devote. But I have already written to you that the care you take of children resembles the Ashram work. It does not matter if no note can be kept of that. If from that half an hour even—not to say an hour—is spared, that also can be noted. There is no shame in it.

If Hasu sends Vinay here [sic], then it will serve your purpose as well as mine. There will be two girls instead of one. The elder girl has children. But there are two conditions. Either Sumitra may commit theft and be convicted, appear in male guise, be big after being drawn though a machine and appear to be sixteen years of age or she should

1 Addressee’s father, Kanaiyalal Desai
2 Addressee’s daughter

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932 229
have four instead of two legs and a tail! Then I may be permitted to keep a cat with four feet. Is Sumitra willing to become a cat with four feet and have a tail? If so, take medicine from Gangabehn who is going there, grow (additional) feet and tail and send (her).

Continue to write letters. All your troubles must have disappeared.

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 397

214. LETTER TO NANDUBEHN B. KANUGA

July 22, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

When I was thinking of writing a letter to you, letters began to rain from you, maybe, on the Sardar. It may rain for any reason, but it must make all wet. The same is the case with us.

I knew that you were of a humorous nature, but I knew only from your letter that you were overflowing with humour. You ask for my blessings, but they are always there.

You have been encouraging the Sardar well, but he is not a soft Bania like me. When he is inspired with courage from the heart, then only he will do what he wants to do. That is the case. Now he is enthusiastic over the study of Sanskrit, i.e., he has fully devoted himself to it. But there is no one here who can take credit for that. His teacher is Mahadev. In addition, comes the Gandiva spinning-wheel. That also when it occurred to him. So the intentions you have formed to go shares with him are useless. Yes, you can take the share you want from his knowledge of Sanskrit. If you say, we may send the same by wire.

What a shame that a doctor becomes toothless as I am. Tell Haribhai that [the question is] when doctors become ill in whom we should have faith.

1 The source has ‘glory’.
2 Dr. Haribhai Desai of Ahmedabad
You and Lilavatibehn have lost, it seems, a good deal of your weight.

Blessings from
BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, pp. 395-7

215. LETTER TO RAGHAVDASJI

July 22, 1932

MAHARAJ RAGHAVDASJI,

I have received the book sent by you. I shall go through it when I get time. No review can be sent from the jail. I would, therefore, like to be excused.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 365

216. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

July 23, 1932

CHI. KAKA,

I have received you letter after waiting for a long time. As it is heavily censored, I have not been able to get full news about your health. I have of course written to Colonel Doyle about your health. I have suggested to him that he should send you to me, in which case your health will of course improve and we could also study astronomy and even write about it.

My suggestion is twofold. Either Shanker¹ and/or Bal² should be sent to you, or you should be sent to me. Shanker is here. He of course wishes to be near you and serve you. I have no direct communication from Bal but I keep getting news about him and the other boys. Someone or another writes from Visapur.

About astronomy my intention and purpose was as you had ¹ Satish Kalelkar, addressee’s elder son

² Addressee’s second son inferred. It was not in my mind that astronomy helps one to know the hour of the night by looking at the stars, nor was I thinking that the Vedic gods and goddesses are directly connected with planets, stars and constellations. I am familiar with Bhai Hiralal’s ideas. I have read all the articles he sent me. All that is interesting. But my interest is of quite a different kind.

Looking at the sky the impression we get of infinity, of purity, of order and of grandeur is one that purifies us. It may perhaps be that on being able to reach the planets and the stars one will get the same experience of good and evil that one gets here on earth. But truly divine is the peaceful influence of their beauty and coolness at this great distance. Also when once we are able to establish communion with the heavens it does not matter where we may happen to be. It then becomes like receiving the Ganga in one’s own home. All these thoughts have made me a keen watcher of the infinite skies. So I am acquiring knowledge of astronomy enough for my own satisfaction. At present I have gathered quite a collection of books on the subject. Professor Trivedi has sent me three books\footnote{The Stars in Their Courses, The Universe around Us, Mysterious Universe} by James Jeans. Of them I have read the two bigger ones. I like them both. I have now started a systematic study of astronomy. At present I am reading a book by Kharas. The author, it seems, has taken a good deal of trouble over it. The book is profusely illustrated, which is great help. I find this book interesting because I have already read other books. Had I begun with this book I may not perhaps have liked it. No effort has been made to make it entertaining.

I cannot, as yet, write to you about the kind of book on astronomy which I want in Gujarati, as my ideas on the subject are still taking shape; it would be neither easy nor desirable to indicate a framework at this stage.

It is quite all right that your spinning is reduced. Nothing need be done at the risk of your health.

Vallabhbai has added to his work of preparing envelopes. He spins ten slivers every day on the Gandiva spinning-wheel and is immersed in the study of Sanskrit. We have sent for all the 24 parts of Satavlekar’s series. It is about a fortnight that he started the study and is already finishing the first three parts. This is really good progress. He will probably finish all the parts in four or five months. He aspires to know enough Sanskrit to be able to read the Ramayana and the Mahabharata.

Mahadev has reduced his spinning by half. Too much time was taken up in spinning yarn of 40 counts. It was also very tiring for him. His yarn of 40 counts turns out to be very good.

I can’t say that my left elbow is completely cured; but with the doctor’s permission I have gone back from the Magan spinning-wheel to the Gandiva. But I turn the wheel with my left hand and draw the thread with the right. I haven’t sufficient control of the right hand to draw a thread as fine as I would like to. But even then, the thread is finer than the one I could draw on the Magan wheel. My speed also has somewhat increased, and if my left elbow does not betray me, my speed must increase a good deal. I visualize a tug of war between my speed and the fineness of the yarn.

These days, Satyagrahashramno Itihas takes up my time. I do not feel like writing anything else before the history is finished. The study of Urdu and of the currency problem and Swadhyaya Samhita are of course going on. I may not, therefore, be tempted to write on the characteristics of daivi sampat. The idea is yours and I think it is proper that you yourself should write on the subject.

The history of the Ashram is taking a strange shape. I find the task is also difficult. There is in it very little about individuals. I have explained what the Ashram observances are, and how they are being followed. Therein I have written at length on non-violence, varnashrama, bread-labour and brahmacharya. Perhaps the work will be finished in a fortnight. I am keeping your suggestions before me. But all your suggestions cannot be incorporated in it. I myself do not know what shape the history will take finally.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9487. Courtesy: D.B. Kalelkar

---

1 Vide “History of the Satyagraha Ashram”, 11-7-1932.
2 Divine heritage: vide Bhagavad Gita, XVI. 1-3.
3 The addressee had written: “The above letter refers to my suggestions which were about what should be included in the history of the Ashram. I had particularly requested Gandhiji not to spare any of us whose narrow vision and incompetence gave him so much trouble and who were inadequate to carry on the grand experiment in community life for social reconstruction known as the Satyagraha Ashram.”
217. SUPERVISION IS NOT NECESSARY

July 24, 1932

This heading will probably shock the readers. I do not intend to suggest through it that we can manage our affairs at present without supervision. But I certainly wish to suggest a way of reducing its degree and doing away with it completely by and by.

If supervision is thought necessary in an institution inspired by the ideals of dharma, to that extent it is deficient in dharma. Supervision implies distrust, and distrust kills the spirit of dharma, it kills the soul. God watches everybody. Why should we then watch anyone? Why should a person who has undertaken to cook or to clean lavatories not do the work carefully unless he is watched? Why should we not trust that he will do it carefully? We may not mind [a rule to the effect that] a person who does not do thoroughly the work which he has undertaken should leave the Ashram, but supervision ought to be unbearable to us. The total quantity of work each person does every day is sufficient supervision over him.

We should understand the meaning of supervision here. A child does require supervision. It will not know how to do a thing, and should be taught to do the work given to it. Even grown-ups who do not know how to do a particular thing will require, may even want, supervision. Really speaking, such supervision is not supervision, but is guidance by a teacher. Novices are able to go forward in their work through the confidence which such guidance gives them.

But the supervision which is a form of watching in order to know whether or not the other person is doing his work properly is blameworthy. Such supervision even over children is a bad thing. We should discover some means of doing away with this blameworthy practice.

This is the first step towards that goal: we should make a list of the activities in which supervision is maintained and note the persons who are working in them. The matter should be discussed with them and they should then be left to their sense of honour. The manager of the Ashram and all the others should fully realize the God watches everything. Children, too, should realize right from now that God is present everywhere. This is not a superstition or a matter of doubt. It is as much a fact as our own existence is to ourselves.

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 20-7-1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 20-7-1932.

Everybody should think carefully over this suggestion. It is our moral duty to put it into practice to the utmost extent possible.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

218. LETTER TO E.E. DOYLE

July 24, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

Since writing to you about my correspondence, Major Bhandari has showed me the Government’s letter to you on the subject.

I must confess that the letter has come upon me as a shock. It betrays, if I understand it rightly, want of confidence in Indian officials as a class and, naturally therefore, a disregard of the great languages of the country spoken by the millions of its inhabitants. The consequences of the policy are disastrous for those who have to suffer from it. Those who do not know English and cannot afford to pay for English assistance or who are too proud to avail themselves of it are at once put under a disadvantage. My own case is an instance in point. A friend who has visited my ailing son in the Gorakhpur Central Jail tells me that he is anxiously awaiting my letter. I did write to him. But he had not got the letter at the time the friend wrote. My son knows English, but we have never written to each other in English. My wife complains of the absence of my letters. She does not know English. I do not know what happens to her letters to me and mine to her. In my humble opinion the principal languages of

---

1 The letter could not be posted the day it was written. Regarding this Mahadev Desai has reported: ‘Bapu prepared a letter to be sent to Doyle about our correspondence. But the Superintendent was unnerved and said, ‘Please do not send any such letter. It may lead them to suppose that the Indians in charge of this prison had complained to you.’ [Next day] Bapu assured the Superintendent that it was not open to objection on the ground he feared. The Superintendent proposed, ‘Please make it clear that you are not referring to the jail authorities.’ Bapu pointed out, ‘In that case they will assuredly believe that is has been written at your suggestion. Instead of that, please let it go in the form which I have written it. As a matter of fact this is an issue on which you ought to resign—if you had any self-respect. But we have lost such sense of honour. Therefore if you are not able to take any action permit me at least to do this much.’ (Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 324-6)

3 Devdas Gandhi
India are entitled to as much status at least as English, if not a greater.

It hurts me to think that no Indian officials knowing the respective languages are considered fit or trustworthy enough to decide whether letters I write in Gujarati or Hindi or Urdu do or do not come within the passable limits. I have already in my letter of 22nd instant inquired if I have unwittingly given cause for the extraordinary scrutiny of my letters.

The revised orders of the Government therefore by implication seem to take away the liberty they have given me for letter writing.

Alike therefore for grounds of reason and sentiment, I would invite Government to reconsider their decision and so arrange as to ensure for my correspondence in the vernaculars the same quick despatch they promise for the English, if they whole-heartedly desire that I should continue to write letters as I have done hitherto.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. I, p. 249

219. LETTER TO M.G.BHANDARI

July 24, 1932

DEAR MAJOR BHANDARI,

With reference to your inquiry about letter¹ No. 27 addressed to Chhotubhai in an Ashram packet, I have to state that I cannot trace it among my papers. It must have been lost in passing from place to place. The letters are listed after they are collected. There is therefore little chance of any being left here. The missing letter contained my advice to Chhotubhai about his father who is suffering from obstinate constipation and softness of the brain. I do hope that it will be traced and sent to the Ashram, if found and passed as unobjectionable.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 5132

¹ Presumably “Letter to Chhotubhai”, 17-7-1932.
220. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI

July 24, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your letter. You say that Pyarelal and others keep good health, whereas I had a letter from someone else telling me that Pyarelal’s health has gone down. I forget who it was. I should like you to go and see him again. I have had no letter from him at all. I have written to him, but these days it is not smooth sailing with my letters.

Have you been reading anything? Have you kept up your effort to learn English?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1843

221. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

July 24, 1932

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I hope all of you reached the Ashram in comfort. Qureshi¹ should take care and see that his health, which has been improving, should not decline again. I hope you also have paid a visit to Imam Saheb’s grave. Ask Qureshi to write to me about it. If it is considered desirable to put up a wall round the grave, that may be done. Where is Kevalram²? How is his health? Ask him to write to me. Nirmala³, it seems, has fallen into a long sleep. I have had no letter from her at all recently.

Give me news about Dhiru⁴ and Vimala. If you have seen them recently, let me know how their health is.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 5503

¹ Gulam Rasool Qureshi, son-in-law of Imam Saheb
² Kevalram Bhimji Joshi
³ Wife of Kevalram
⁴ Addressee’s children
222. LETTER TO PURATAN BUCH

July 24, 1932

CHI. PURATAN,

There is not much difference between ‘bhai’ and ‘chi’. I do not remember how ‘Bhai’ came to be written or why I wrote it. I did not make the change intentionally. I sometimes do think of what the other person would prefer. But in your case I did not even do that. It is true that anybody whom I address as ‘Chi’. is loaded with greater burden by me. So long as I am in jail, we need not think whether you can stay with me. If I am released some day you may ask me then. If I settle at some fixed place, I would certainly have you with me. My advice was not meant to stop you from asking questions but was intended to induce you to reflect. You must learn how to solve corollaries after knowing the principle. So long as we cannot do this, is cannot be said that we know the principle. This is like solving geometrical problems. If we can solve one, we should be able to solve others arising from it. Improve your health and make it very strong.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9167

223. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

July 24, 1932

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

I got your letter. Sharda writes to me from time to time. It is good that she is staying alone. All children in the Ashram must learn to live alone without their parents. Children who are excessively dependent on parents become weak in the end.

Perhaps deep breathing may prove beneficial for your nose trouble. Drawing in water mixed with potassium permanganate into the nose may also help. Did Dr. Rajab Ali examine it? If the bone inside is affected, a doctor’s help is necessary. Otherwise deep breathing must help. Please do let me know the effect of the vaid’s medicine. If the air there agrees with you both, do not be in a hurry to leave the place. Chhaganlal and Kashi1 cannot but like your company, and wherever you are will certainly be working.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 14

1 Wife of Chhaganlal Gandhi
224. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

July 24, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. I cannot say how long I shall be able to continue writing letters. A sword is hanging over them. If the delay in clearing the letters from here continues, I see no benefit in writing them. Incoming letters are now handed over to me immediately. For outgoing letters, correspondence is going on. If these letters stop, you may assume that the train is off the rails. But that need not upset you or make you unhappy. It is for the Government to permit me or not to permit me to write letters. A prisoner cannot demand such permission as a matter of right. The fact that I have been writing so long confers no right on me, and the loss of something over which one had no right should not make one unhappy.

So you have now received my letter conveying my blessings to you on the occasion of your birthday. Why should you mind that you got it late? Perhaps your getting it late has increased its value. You should not have taken it as an ill-omen when you did not get it. It is impossible that I would not send you my blessings though I had your letter asking for them. Why should you take it as an ill-omen if, because of unforeseen circumstances, you do not get the letter or get it late? Really speaking, there is no such thing as ill-omen for a person who has cultivated the spirit of non-attachment. Do not, therefore, believe for a single moment that this will be bad year for you. It will be bad only if we think bad thoughts or speak or do evil. And it is in our power not to do that.

If it is the doctor’s opinion that you should get the tonsils removed, you should do so. Wasn’t his opinion the same when you consulted him before? The operation takes very little time. Nor have I heard that there is any risk in it. Your body ought to become completely free from disease. I believe that ultimately one is the best judge in regard to one’s body.

Doctors have to depend much on what their patients tell them. This fact itself shows that, if the patient does not know what happens to his body, he cannot give correct replies to the doctor’s question. If you merely tell a doctor, “I have a headache”, what can he do? The patient should know why he has got a headache. We can see that this is true about many other symptoms. The same argument applies to treatment. A doctor cannot know, if he is not told, what effect a particular medicine had. He has to depend on the patient for that. But all patients are not able to understand the effects of medicines. Food is a daily medicine for the body. What effect a particular food has on a person’s body, only he can understand. Hence, one who knows the effects of food, water and air on the human body will be able to preserve his health better than a doctor can over do for him. I believe, therefore, that all of us should acquire some general knowledge about the body, as also about air, water and food. We do have the necessary literature for this purpose. We need not read all of it. If we read some of it, that would be enough to help us. Shivaji made his body very strong by his own efforts. Regarding myself, I am convinced that if I had not acquired sufficient knowledge for my purpose, I would have marched away long ago. This half broken body endures through my own care. I am sure that doctors have very little share in keeping it going.

1 Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 30-6-1932.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10295. Also C.W. 5749. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

225. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

July 24, 1932

DEAR PRABHUDAS,

Know (what I have written) about Magan spinning-wheel from letter\(^1\) to Narandas.\(^2\) I have nothing to say about truth. It is difficult to define God. The definition of truth is enshrined in everyone’s heart. Whatever you believe at present to be true is truth and that is your God. If one lives in accordance with this truth felt in one’s heart, one is bound to reach the ultimate and pure truth, and that is \textit{Paramatman}.\(^3\) I am at present reading selections from the Vedas and there the same idea occurs. According to me, so long as we do not learn to live a truthful life, all reading is fruitless. Such a life has no room for anything which is not spontaneous. The votary of truth will

\(^1\) \textit{Vide} “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 20-7-1932.
\(^2\) What follows is from \textit{Mahadevbhaini Diary}.
\(^3\) \textit{Superme Self} appear as he is. There will be unity in his thought, speech and action. We learn this sooner if we regard God as truth. In order to live such a truthful life, we do not need to read many books. Everything depends on us. Reflect over this mantra: “The face of truth is covered by a golden lid. O sun, remove that so that I may see the Law of Truth.”

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

226. LETTER TO PADMA

July 24, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

I have preserved for you and Durga slips of coloured paper. It would be very good of course if the change to another plot agrees with you. Your weight must increase. If you get better there, then there will be no necessity for you to go to Bhowali. I regard it as a great improvement that your constipation has disappeared. What fruits can you get there? How much milk can you drink? How do you pass your time? What does Sheela do during the whole day?

I have not received your father’s letter mentioned by you.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6134. Also C.W. 3486. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

1 Ishopanishad, 15
227. LETTER TO KAMALABEHN

July 24, 1932

DEAR KAMALABEHN,

It is good that you have come to the Ashram; now stay (there) quietly. Does the Ashram water agree. (with you)? Do you receive any information about Gopaldas? How is his health? Write to me.

I have not received at present any information about Balkrishna’s health. Is he still conducting the girls’ school?

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 393

228. LETTER TO DR. PRANJIVAN MEHTA

July 24, 1932

BROTHER PRANJIVAN,

I am in receipt of your letter. Polak writes that he is satisfied with Maganlal1. His mind is engrossed in study. If that is the case and the same state continues, he will undoubtedly be benefited. Of late I have no letter from Maganlal. Ratilal2 appears to be going on well at present. In his case changes—good and bad—will continue to take place.

Thought my left elbow was confined in splints, there was no benefit. As it gives no trouble as long [as] it is not used in a particular way, I entertain no anxiety about it. The doctor here has been giving the treatment of diathermy at present. It has so far been treated thrice only and so nothing can be said about its effect. I hope you do not look to your shop overexerting yourself.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, pp. 405-7

1 Addressee’s son who was studying in England at this time

2 Addressee’s son who was ill
229. LETTER TO KUSUM GANDHI

July 24, 1932

DEAR KUSUM (JUNIOR),

You must be thoughtlessly speaking out too much. My post did not reach there and so you stopped writing, though you have written to me so often that you like to write to me every week. Do not speak anything hastily or thoughtlessly. Do not take a vow before thinking fully (about it). If (once) it is taken, remember it and observe it. Has your fever gone? What amount of milk can you take? If you want to be a nurse recover (from illness) soon and pass (your) life in meditation. By searching for the cause of everything any activity which we undertake becomes interesting and it does not appear to be burdensome.

BAPU

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 20-IX

230. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

July 25, 1932

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I certainly felt unhappy that I could not see you. But we have no choice when dharma requires us to act in a particular way. Having stopped receiving visitors, surely I could not make any exception. You should now write to me. Tell me how you keep. Give me news about Kaku, too. Amina also should write to me. I am sure you are quite happy. All three of us are well. It is not certain whether I shall be able to continue to write letters. We must resign ourselves to whatever happens.

I suppose you met Nath. Give me news about him.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, p. 63. Also C.W. 8791. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

1 Amina G. Qureshi, younger daughter of Imam Saheb
2 Kedarnath Kulkarni, guru of Kishorelal Mashruwala
231. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

July 25, 1932

CHI. MATHURADAS,

Received your letter on the 23rd. It would be better if the weather there agrees (with you). Has any companion been given? Are sufficient clothes provided? I had received Popular Astronomy. I could not know who sent it. From the name in the book I thought that it must have come from Pranlal. It has so happened that a copy of the book has come to my hands for some months past. Shivaji (brother of Vinoba) of the Ashram has made a deep study (of the subject). I had written to him to send me any book he liked. And so this book came to me. So I have with me two copies at present. It has good maps, but the contents are not of much value. At present I have got with me better books (from the point of view of contents) than this. There can be no observation of the sky in this season. In September or October when the sky clears and the sunset will take place earlier, if you are allowed to remain outside till 7.30 or 8 you can observe the sky.¹

I see that your views about social reform are very advanced. My attitude in such matters is different. I would not discuss any matter which does not seem to be of immediate importance and about which there is the slightest room for doubt. Divorce is such a matter. For one thing, among the masses divorce is not prohibited, and where it is prohibited many other reforms need to be introduced before we can go as far as divorce. I would not therefore spend my energy in discussing the subject and create confusion in the minds of people.

As regards [artificial] birth-control, my mind revolts against it. It is possible that old ideas unconsciously influence my views, but reasons for which I oppose it [really] exist today and we can, therefore, see for ourselves the great harm done by [artificial] birth-control. By adopting artificial means to prevent conception, even those who are strong today are likely to become weak. The whole attitude to life behind the practice of birth-control is dangerous and mistaken. Its supporters believe that it is not only man’s right but also his duty to satisfy his natural sex desire, and that if a man does not discharge this duty his development will be retarded. I see great evil in this view. I observe it daily in experience. It is impossible to expect self-control in those who have recourse to these artificial means. These means are being advocated on the assumption that self-control in this matter is impossible. And to regard the control of the sex urge as impossible or unnecessary or harmful is to my mind a denial of dharma, for self-control is the very basis of dharma. There are many other simple and innocent methods of preventing the birth of weak progeny. Leaving them aside, how can a dangerous method like birth-control be adopted? Almost everybody admits that it is full of dangers. Thus, from whatever point of view I think about it, it seems to me highly undesirable. I am prompted to write all this again because you have still time to think and, since the subject is very serious, it is necessary that you should examine it carefully. I shall have no fear then what conclusion you come to, for I believe that your truthfulness will save you in the end or that, if I am wrong, you will be able to correct my error. If you are convinced that birth-control is morally right, you will not rest until you have converted me to your view. And I am easy to deal with. However strongly I may cling to a view, I don't hesitate to give it up immediately if I discover my error or if it is pointed out to me by somebody.

¹ This paragraph has been reproduced from the English translation available in Bombay Secret Abstracts.

All three of us are well. I now take milk, but I do not see any benefit. I have yielded to the pressure of the doctor here. The pain in the elbow persists, but it pains only when it is moved in a certain way, and hence there is no cause for anxiety about it. I have already written to Taramati in regard to visits.\(^1\) Besides making envelopes, Sardar has taken up two other things, viz., spinning and study of Sanskrit. He is pursuing the study with great energy. You have probably seen the 24 books by Satavlekar. Out of these he has finished three in 15 days. This is excellent speed.

Devdas had another relapse, but from the latest information I have received it appears that fever has again come down. He says in his letter that the Gorakhpur Jail authorities looked after him very well. The position about my correspondence has become uncertain now. Incoming post is delivered fairly regularly, but the letters which I write are delayed a good deal before they are despatched. You need not, therefore, worry if you don’t get my replies to your letters soon.

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 14-7-1932.
Give me detailed information about the food which you get there, whether you can digest it, what exercise you can take, what your weight is and how you sleep. What are you reading at present?

I am progressing well with my Urdu reading. I can now write a little. I am happy about this.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Have you received the Gandiva spinning-wheel? Mahadev reminds me that you wrote to me about having received it. My memory may be said to be failing a little now. Can you spin on it?

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi, pp.112-4, and Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 465

232. TELEGRAM TO MADAN MOHAN MALAVIYA

July 26, 1932

PANDIT MALAVIYAJI
HINDU UNIVERSITY
BENARES
THANKS FOR LOOKING AFTER MIRABAI AND DEVDAS. MAIRABAI’S FEVER CAUSES ANXIETY. PLEASE WIRE HER CONDITION.

GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 371
233. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 26, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

Your postcards are a great relief. I cannot understand why fever persists. I hope you have been using the mosquito-net regularly. The incoming letters are again being received in good time. There is much delay about outgoing letters. I am still in correspondence with the Government. You will not worry if you don’t hear from me or hear late.

Love.

BAPU

SMT. MIRABAI
SEVA UPAVAN
NAGWA, BENARES

From the original: C.W. 6229. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9695

234. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

July 26, 1932

Your touching letter of 23rd instant came into my hand today. Papa’s letter I have not received yet. My correspondence is being overhandled by the authorities. There is therefore much delay and uncertainty about it. The incoming letters are delivered in good time.

I loathe to argue about death in the face of the tragedy that has overtaken you.¹ You will say with Job, “miserable comforter.”² But I do feel that if we would know God, we have got to learn to rejoice in death. When Narasinha Mehta the first poet-devotee of Gujarat lost his son, he is said to have joyed over it and exclaimed: “It is well that this burden is lifted. Now I shall meet God soon.” This is an unhappy rendering of a beautiful musical verse. May you see greater light out

¹ The addressee had written: “Death is a dear friend, quite true, and not a frightful enemy as men suppose. But then, we all fight so vigorously against him on his approach, and employ all the knowledge of the ancient and the modern science to drive the friend away that the truth is quite forgotten just when we ought to remember it most, . . . . It is not grief, but darkness that is around. I am still praying for light.”

² The Book of Job, XVI. 2 of this darkness. I know that you stand in no need of any comfort from any of us and that it has to come from within. This is merely an evidence of what all of us three are feeling about you.

235. LETTER TO MAGANLAL P. MEHTA

July 26, 1932

DEAR MAGANLAL,

I expect a letter from you every week, but I am disappointed. Mr. Polak has informed me that you are getting on all right and that you are engrossed in your studies. I receive letters from Manjula¹.

Write to me in detail. Let me know what subjects you are studying.

Develop your body well.

Hope you are writing to the Doctor regularly.

Yours,

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 455

236. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

July 26, 1932

MY DEAR HENRY,

I see you want your pound of flesh. I had thought that your partnership with Millie would improve you. But it is the old story of the leopard repeated a millionth time. Having seen one good thing in you, you want me to see many more. I must decline the invitation with thanks. For If I accepted it, the result would be that my other companions would grow jealous and forsake me.

Devdas was always nervous when Maud drove her car. She is always high-strung and often absent-minded. She ought to give up driving the car herself. Please pass this on to her.

¹ Addressee’s wife
I am writing to Leon.¹ His letter came into my hands before yours. Let us all hope that he and Marie will have many years of happiness.

I am glad Maganlal is shaping so well. Please give him the enclosed.²

Love to you all. Mahadev joins.

Yours,
BAPU

H.S.L. POLAK, ESQ.
5TH FLOOR, DAVES INN HOUSE
265 STRAND, LONDON, W.C. 2
Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 453

237. LETTER TO LEON POLAK

July 26, 1932

MY DEAR LEON,

I am glad you wrote to me about your engagement to Marie Lindrum. May you both have many many years of happiness and service.

My love to you both.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 453

¹ Vide the following item.
² Vide the preceding item.
238. LETTER TO SHIRINBAI

July 26, 1932

MY DEAR SISTER,

I received your disconsolate letter only today. It had to pass through so many hands before coming to me. My whole heart goes out to you and your aged mother. God suffers us to blame Him, to swear at Him and deny Him. We do it all in our ignorance. A very beautiful Sanskrit verse which we recite daily at the morning prayer means: “Miseries are not miseries, nor is happiness truly happiness. True misery consists in forgetting God, true happiness consists in thinking of Him as ever enthroned in our hearts.” And has not an English poet said: “Things are not what they seem?” The fact is if we knew all the laws of God we should be able to account for the unaccountable. Why should we think that the withdrawal of your brother from our midst is an affliction? We simply do not know. But we do, or ought to know that God is wholly good and wholly just. Even our illnesses such as your other brother’s may be no misfortune. Life is a state of discipline. We are required to go through the fire of suffering. I do so wish that you and your mother could really rejoice in your suffering. May you have peace.

Please forget all about the honey and write to me in English by all means.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 326

1 The Diary of Mahadev Desai, has: “There was heartrending letter from Shirinbai, the sister of the missing airman. His 72-year-old mother was still alive; and his only brother had been in a London nursing home for 8 years. The sister had picked up a little Gujarati 30 years ago, but still she took great pains and wrote a good Gujarati letter and at the end of it requested permission to write to Bap in English.”

2 The Addressee had sent a honeycomb and offered to write about in detail.
239. LETTER TO A. SUBBIAH

July 26, 1932

I can understand your grief and hers over the loss of your child\(^1\) of whom Lalita\(^2\) used to write to me in such loving terms. But you have lived long enough in the Ashram to realize, especially on such occasions, that God has the right to take away from us what He gives us. You know that we believe. Our belief is that every one of us comes to this world as a debtor and we leave when the debt is for the time being discharged. The child has paid the debt and is free. You and Lalita and all the rest of us have still to discharge our obligations.

240. LETTER TO LALITA

July 26, 1932

DAUGHTER LALITA,

From Subbiah’s letter I have learnt of your grief and Subbiah writes that you have been weeping much. But you should know that religion forbids weeping. The God who gave the daughter has the right to take her away. And in the end we all are to go there. What grief can there be for that! So forget the grief and plunge yourself in service (of others). Certainly write to me. May God give you peace.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 491

---

\(^1\) The addressee had lost his daughter on the very day he was released from jail.

\(^2\) Addressee’s wife
241. LETTER TO NAJUKLAL N. CHOKSI

July 26, 1932

BHAISHRI NAJUKLAL,

You have written to me after keeping me waiting for a long time. I received your letter after eighteen days, but that is not your fault. Do you go to bed with an empty stomach? It is a universal experience that a person who eats late at night does not get sleep immediately on retiring. If, therefore, you do not take your meals before sunset, form that habit. And if you cannot concentrate on Ramanama, go on repeating any Sanskrit stanza or bhajan which you like, and you will most probably get sleep. I assume that in other respects, your health is good. Prabodh' must have become quite big now. All three of us are well.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12150

242. LETTER TO HAMIDA TYABJI

July 26, 1932

DEAR HAMIDA.

Received your letter written in good handwriting. Abbaji has also been informed that you have improved in health. You did well in informing me about the death of Rohini’s maternal uncle. Later on Rohini’s letter was received. Though I have written to her a letter of condolence I now do not like to express condolence for the death (of someone). Why run away from death? God has given us many boons and death seems to be one of the greatest of them. It is not a calamity. We should learn to regard it as a friend. That which is for every living being, how can we regard as a calamity? By so looking upon it, we become offenders before God. Like Raihana if you write letters to me both in Gujarati and Urdu you also will be an expert like her. You must write in Gujarati so that you may acquire the habit. I wish that your knowledge of Gujarati may increase.

1 Addressee’s eldest son

252 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
It is good that you have developed so much friendship with Rohini’s family. There is no doubt that the family is good and honest. But the certificate that you will give will be a true one. I am not much in touch with it. My salaams to all there.

Many blessings from
BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 471

243. LETTER TO TARAMATI M. TRIKUMJI

July 26, 1932

MY DEAR TARAMATI,

I have received a letter from Mathuradas from Belgaum in which he writes that, unless he sends for you, you should not go to Belgaum. Mathuradas’s health is good till now. I have received the book on astronomy. Hope you and Dilip are well. There is no letter from you now.

Yours,
BAPU

SMT. TARAMATI MATHURADAS
21 MINT ROAD, FORT
BOMBAY

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 447

244. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

July 26, 1932

MY DEAR DEVDAS,

Hanumanprasadji sends me regularly news about you, therefore I am relieved to anxiety. I have already written a letter¹ to you, but nowadays my outgoing letters go first to the Secretariat and are then despatched after scrutiny. And if they are written in Gujarati, they take lot of time and hence you do not receive them earlier. Therefore do not worry yourself if you do not hear from me or receive my letters late. Such are the conditions of prison life. I am however in correspondence with the Government. How is it that you have fallen ill again?

¹ Vide “Letter to Devdas Gandhi”, 21-7-1932.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

DEVDAS GANDHI
PRISONER
DISTRICT JAIL
GORAKHPUR, U.P.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 451

245. LETTER TO RAMNIKLAL V. SHAH

July 26, 1932

DEAR RAMNIKLAL,

I have received your letter. I do not know your elders, therefore, I dare not write to them. You can show (them) this letter. It is our religion\(^1\) to touch or to dine with those whom we erroneously call untouchables or of low caste. Not to touch them is a sin. I have not the slightest doubt about this. This is not a reform which has come from the West, but it is the duty of the Hindus.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

RAMNIKLAL VIMBASHI SHAH
CHINTAMANI BUILDING
2ND BHOIWADA, BOMBAY 2

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 451

\(^1\) Presumably the original had “dharma”.

254 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
DEAR . . . .

I do not remember having seen you any time. It is possible that I might have seen you many years ago when I was out to beg. Although I have no direct acquaintance with you, yet, as I have connections with your father and . . . , allow me to exercise some authority as an elder. But do not consider this my letter as coming from an elder. I wish to be your friend. I have known about the misdeed committed by . . . I am pained on account of the misdeed because . . . has been brought up in the Ashram. Hence I have to apologize to you for his misdeed. You can accept my apology only when you entirely forget . . . from your mind, and you may not henceforth be caught in the snare of any youth.

I believe that boys and girls, when they attain the age of discretion, are freed from the control of their parents. Parents may guide them as friends. (But) they cannot put pressure upon them. You have not attained the age to enjoy this freedom. You may not be knowing that I have guided many girls like you, and that from among them those who have followed my advice have become happy. In this world there is no vice (lit. dross) like untruth. He who conceals that which is not to be concealed acts untruthfully. If you believed that parents should not exercise their authority over you, but that they should guide you, then why should you write a secret note to . . . or anybody? If you fall in love with anybody, you have a right to do so. But many boys and girls nourish their secret passions only in the name of affection. If they take a vow not to conceal anything from their parents and act accordingly, they cannot but be saved from such calamities.

Your present time is for study only. You have been fortunate to have parents of broad views, and hence they are affording you facilities for study. So long as you desire to avail yourself of this facility, you must lead the life of a celibate. But it is possible that this may be beyond your power. If it is so, you must consult your parents with a pure mind. There is not the slightest need to feel hesitation in it. If you do this much and if you give me a promise (not to do such a thing again), then only I will know that there has not remained in the least upon you the effect of the misdeed committed by . . . . Give an answer to this letter if you get it. May God protect you.

1 The names have been omitted in this and the following letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 487

247. A LETTER

[July 26, 1932]¹

I have received today your letter dated the 8th instant. At present my post has become irregular. For some days I get my incoming post regularly. The outgoing post is still irregular. I do not know when you will receive this.

You did well in writing about . . . . I had hoped that . . . would have improved. By after reading your description, I stick to the adjective I used. The steps you had taken about . . . were certainly appropriate. I think that he ought to have been brought to his senses in still more plain terms. There is nothing to be thought about him at present.

You must have deeply thought about . . . . I see from the account given by you that her mind is still not purified. I have taken courage to write a letter to . . . . Give it to her if you think it proper to do so. From this letter you will also come to know my views about children. I am grieved at this calamity which has fallen upon you, husband and wife, on account of . . . . The responsibility for the faults (still) lurking in . . . rests as much on . . . as on the Ashram. As (the atmosphere) of purity cannot be made to pervade the Ashram, the children as well as the grown-up (inmates) do not become free from faults. It is my firm belief that where perfect sanctity prevails, an unholy person must leave off his impurities so long as he stays in this atmosphere. So much also has not been imparted in the Ashram. It is only because of this that instances like that of . . . are to be found.

I understand that there cannot be any change in your attitude towards . . . . . is exceedingly straightforward and outspoken. He has suffered much on . . . account. When he hears this, he will feel intense pain.

¹ Vide the preceding item.

I have returned the telescope in the beginning of this month. I was not permitted to keep it for more that a month’s time. Hence, your suggestion was late. We could make very little use of it. We could see Jupiter very well. But we could not get any information regarding the stars with the help of the telescope. We could not see the beauty of Parijata about which we had read. I will carry out your suggestions, when any other telescope comes to hand. At present the clouds do not allow us to have a sight of the sky.

I have got the Sanskrit dictionary. I am reading Kharas’s book at present. I like his style. I feel that if anybody makes a beginning with this book, he would find it difficult. It is, as it were, written not for those who have absolutely no knowledge of astronomy. But I have gone through other books and hence I feel no difficulty in understanding this (book). I hope to hear from your mouth about your invention some time. In the mean time, please do write to me if there is anything worth writing.

Blessings from

BAPU

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 483

248. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

July 26, 1932

DAUGHTER RAIHANA.

I have had no news from you this week. I hope you are quite well. I received a very sweet letter from Father. I was very glad to learn that the affairs of his company have been cleared up. I hope his pain has disappeared now. It is too early for him yet to get old. I hope to see him dancing. I had a letter from Hamida too. At present I am reading an Urdu book entitled Ramacharcha. It is beautifully printed and its Urdu is easy to follow. After finishing it, I intend to read the Sirat. I shall finish Ramacharcha in a day or two. We are having good rains here. Convey our respects and vandemataram to Father and Mother, and bhrrrr from me to Father. All of you will be pleased to learn that Sardar is learning Sanskrit and is making very good progress.

1 Sirat-un-Nabi; vide entry under date July 28, 1932, in “Diary, 1932” appearing at the end of this volume.

To Raihana,

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: S.N. 9645

249. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 27, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

It is a great consolation to me that you are giving me a daily report of your health. This sudden overtaking of weakness after every illness shows that your system has not much staying power. But there is, I am afraid, no remedy for it. In a previous letter I asked you, if you could, to see Devdas.¹ It is not to be thought of now. You need a long rest from work both mental and physical. Remember me to Babu Sivaprasad and his people.

Love,

BAPU

SMT. MIRABAI
SEVA UPVAN, NAGWA
BENARES

From the original: C.W. 6230. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9696

¹ Vide “Letter to Devdas Gandhi”, 21-7-1932.
250. LETTER TO RUKMINIDEVI BAZAJ

July 27, 1932

CHI. RUKMINI¹,

I got a letter from you after many days. I did not know that you were having fever. Naturally in that condition you cannot write. And if you cannot write, why should Benarsi² write? It seems that you have lost the strength you had gained at Deolali. You should regain it. I hope the child is thriving. It was a good thing that all of you went to see Devdas.

Blessings to you both from

BAPU

SHRIMATI RUKMINI
C/O SJT. BENARSIDAS
PANCH GANGLA, BENARES CITY, U.P.

From Gujarati: C.W. 9451. Courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

251. A LETTER³

July 27, 1932

DEAR . . .,

You have become emaciated. But I can understand your misery. I have already told you that in your company your life and that of . . . have been spoiled.⁴ If you really feel no passion, you cannot satisfy . . . although you submit to him. This is the experience of all men who seek pleasure. The result is that in spite of having intercourse with you . . . remains unsatisfied, and that increases his passion. If, therefore, you two want to live together, you must take pleasure in intercourse with him. If you cannot do so, you should live separately. I see nothing but harm in your living together in your present condition. You deceive each other, you deceive yourselves and also deceive the world. All people except me seem to believe about you that, because you live in the Ashram, you live as ascetics. The best

¹ Daughter of Maganlal Gandhi
² Addressee’s husband
³ The names in this and the following letter have been omitted.
⁴ Addressee’s husband
⁵ What follows is from Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol.I.
course is that both of you should come out of this untruthful life and that both of you should marry according to your wish. According to me, both of you live an immoral life just now. If . . . marries another woman, I would regard his life afterwards to be blameless because it will be natural and in the end his passion will calm down. To make this change in your life, you should have a frank talk with each other and then firmly take whatever step seems proper to you both. If this is done, . . . will one day become free from passion. If you go on as at present, he will continue to feel dissatisfied and his passion will become stronger and stronger. Do not lose the strength which you possess. Do not yield to despair. May God help you.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

252. A LETTER

July 27, 1932

DEAR . . .,

Received your letter. I have carefully read your note. Your duty towards . . . appears clear to me. If she is devoid of passion you should live separately from her. If . . . does not desire it I would not regard her as being devoid of passion, that is, she ought to satisfy your passion. As you cannot suppress your passion you ought to form another marriage. Marry a suitable women if you can get one there. It would be better if she is a widow; and then satisfy your passion.¹ You will then become free in the course of time from your sexual craving. Today this seems to be almost impossible for you. The cause of your anger also is your sexual craving. Your palate is very strong, which is not surprising; for anger, sexual passion and craving of the palate go together. You believe that you are completely devoted to your work. But I doubt if that is so. I do not mean to say that you are indifferent. But anybody who is wholly devoted to his work can never be a slave of his passion. How can he find the time for that? But you are certainly not so. It can be seen that you try to become devoted to your work, but then you also try to overcome your sexual passion. As you have not succeeded in the second aim, so you have not succeeded in the first either. You seem to be a prey to lustful thoughts even when you are working. Was not that my condition too? Other people saw no sign of negligence in my work, but I myself could see such signs. That is why I resolved to observe brahmacharya.¹ Read my previous letter and this to . . . . I wish that anyhow you both should be relieved of this misery. May God be kind to you.

¹ What follows is from Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol I, P. 331, and Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 507

253. LETTER TO RADHA GANDHI

July 27, 1932

I have received your letter after many days. My post has now become irregular. Don’t be surprised if it stops entirely. I am trying to settle this matter. I hope rain has no bad effect upon your health. I have received a letter from Santok today in which she says that she is going to Kashi. I have also received a letter from Rukhi. She is now all right. She has seen Devdas. Devdas was not keeping good health, but he is well now. Tell Premkuvar that I do not remember to have received a letter from her. If I received it, I would have written to her in reply.

Yours,

BAPU

RADHABEHN GANDHI

BLOCK A, BHATIA SANATORIUM, DEOLALI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 497

¹ What follows is from the English translation available in Bombay Secret Abstracts.
² The source has “Don’t take it as a wonder”.

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932 261
254. LETTER TO RADHA GANDHI

July 27, 1932

I have received your letter after many days. My post has now become irregular. Don’t be surprised if it stops entirely. I am trying to settle this matter. I hope rain has no bad effect upon your health. I have received a letter from Santok today in which she says that she is going to Kashi. I have also received a letter from Rukhi. She is now all right. She has seen Devdas. Devdas was not keeping good health, but he is well now. Tell Premkuvar that I do not remember to have received a letter from her. If I received it, I would have written to her in reply.

Yours,

BAPU

RADHAEBHN GANDHI
BLOCK A, BHATIA SANATORIUM, DEOLALI
Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 497

255. LETTER TO KASTURBA GANDHI

July 27, 1932

You are getting worried about not receiving any letter from me, but I have already written three. One I sent to the Ashram address. This is the fifth letter I am now writing to you. We must realize that we are both prisoners. What would we have done if there was no permission to write to each other? To worry about such things is useless. I am quite well. I am now taking milk, bread and vegetables. Vallabhbhai and Mahadev are also all right. I understand that you are feeling weak. I have not received any letter from you. Write to me in detail.

Yours,

BAPU

MRS. KASTURBAI GANDHI
PRISONER
CENTRAL PRISON, SABARMATI
Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 499

1 The source has “Don’t take it as a wonder”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
256. TELEGRAM TO G.S. BAJPAI

July 28, 1932

G.S. BAJPAI
DUNDALION
SIMLA

OUR SINCERE CONDOLENCES ON YOUR BEREAVEMENT.

GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40)(3), Pt. II, P. 377

257. LETTER TO DR. MOHAMMAD ALAM

July 30, 1932

DEAR DR. ALAM,

I was concerned to read in the papers that you were ill and had to be removed to a hospital. Do please let me know exactly what the matter is with [you]. Sardar and Mahadev Desai join me in the wish that there is nothing serious the matter with you.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 24

258. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

July 30, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. There seems to be no limit to your foolishness. When you get angry, you lose all sense. In the very letter in which you write about having taken a vow to overcome anger, you get angry and that too without reason. You did not understand the reason for my gentle rebuke. I had complained that there was no beauty or art in the slips with zigzag edges which you had pasted on the envelope.¹ I would not find fault with anyone for spending time on art. But in this case there was no art at all. What art can there be in pasting slips on an ¹ The source has “is”, which is evidently a slip.

² Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 6-7-1932.
envelope? And, moreover, you had pasted them so carelessly that they had half come off. Your anger, therefore, was without reason. It only amused me. If I were with you, I would have slapped you. But your having erred is a more serious matter. You spent so much time on the thing. You entered into unnecessary argument about it and harmed your health, for scientists have discovered by experiments that anger has a very bad effect on health. Our people have always held that belief. Besides, you violated your vow. Don’t get angry like this again. My criticism, moreover, was gentle and you did not show even sense enough to understand it.

About letters, follow the example of the child who eats up the carrot when he finds that he cannot blow with it as with a pipe. That is, you should not feel unhappy if the letters stop. In any case, you should go on writing from your end. If I decide to stop writing, I will let you know. Even if I cannot write to you to tell you about that, your writing to me will not be a waste of effort.

Greet the new flowers on my behalf. Try to cheer them by telling them that I hope to sleep in their midst one day.

You are very difficult to persuade. If you grow tomatoes and some bhajis round the flower plants, you will get them all the year round and your health will benefit. If the body is not yours, but is a trust given to you by God, you should certainly give some time for keeping it fit. Growing tomatoes and bhajis does not require much time. They don’t cover up much plot either. An English friend of mine who lived with me in South Africa used to grow, in a few days and with little trouble, a bhaji named cress which is eaten uncooked.

I have already written to you in regard to the bad health of the girls. Inquire into the matter carefully and find out the facts. I was certainly afraid that it was so about Rambhau. Since he has told you everything, try and win him over.

If your weight has gone down, you must eat fruit. Don’t mind a little additional expense. What is the good of trying to save money and injuring your health? What is true about food is also true about rest. You must make it a rule to take some rest in the afternoon. It is not for me to show how you can spare time for that. If you are determined to find it, you will succeed.

Now about your questions:
(1) Instead of worshipping an individual, one should worship virtues. An individual may turn out to be unworthy of our worship, and in any case he is bound to die. Virtues, on the other hand, never perish.

(2) If you do not like most of those who run the Ashram, this is a golden opportunity to learn to tolerate their defects. No human being is without defects. If we wish to regard others as our own selves, we should have no likes and dislikes.

(3) If you accept the principles on which the Ashram is founded, differences of opinion regarding its outward form should not matter. We should be concerned with the principle of a thing and not with its form.

(4) It is your duty to remain in the Ashram so that you may overcome the defects of your temper.

(5) If you cannot realize your ideals in the Ashram, the fault is yours. Everyone enjoys perfect freedom in the Ashram.

(6) Why should the attraction of those whom you love force you to leave the Ashram? Their love should draw them to the Ashram whenever they feel the need to see you. Love never requires the physical presence of the person loved. Love which requires such presence must be momentary attraction. The purity of one’s love is tested by separation from the loved one after his or her death. But all this is mere intellectual exercise. You will live only where your heart is. What can I do or you either, if your heart cannot accept the Ashram?

The yarn spun by me ought to be converted into saris. It belongs to a time before I expressed my views about yarn. It was in fact earmarked for Ba. Hence it is for her to renounce her claim over it. I cannot say that it is not for her. She will never be able to wear very coarse saris. Even the saris, therefore, supplied to her by the Ashram will usually be fine. For that reason, too, she may wear saris made from the yarn spun by me. But we should be very strict about the yarn spun in future, though even with regard to that I will not exercise compulsion on Ba. I certainly wish that she should, of her own free will, refuse to use it and be content with whatever she gets as her share. But this is about the future. As yet all the yarn spun by me recently is here. In any case, my yarn should not lie unused. In fact no one’s yarn should lie unused. As soon as a person has spun enough quantity of yarn to be used for weaving, it should be processed for the purpose.

1 Gandhiji had said that those who took part in the spinning yajna should not keep back the yarn for their own use; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 31-5/3-6-1932. The addressee had argued that the yarn spun by Gandhiji should be kept for Kasturba’s use.
You know about Dhurandhar. If none else, Lilavati, I believe, spins. What you say, however, is correct. Most women will prefer embroidery to spinning. What is true about eating is also true about work. The mind will run after bhajiyan in preference to rotli. There is self-control and renunciation in continuing to eat rotli, whereas it is self-indulgence to start eating bhajiyan. Similarly, there is self-control in keeping to spinning and self-indulgence (relatively) in taking up other work.

Your comments on my advice “Judge not lest ye be judged” are unworthy of you. You have not understood the meaning of the statement at all. There is much pride behind your comments. ‘Lest ye be judged” means that we should not do anything for which we should be judged by others. We should not be insolent towards the world. Why should we say, “Let the world say or do what it will”? We should be humble before the world, that is, even when we follow the right path we should not use violence against it or sit in judgment over it. On the contrary, we should endure its punishment and its condemnation. This is humility or non-violence. I should not like you to write what you did, though you probably wrote it sarcastically or in anger. I don’t mind your being angry with me. I can laugh it away. But this other remark rankles in my mind. You should never be prompted to pen such a remark, that is, you should not even have such a thought. Since you had it, I don’t mind your expressing it to me. It is because you expressed it that I am able to explain to you how it is wrong. I have not written this paragraph so that you may keep back your thoughts from me. I wish to see you as you are, whether foolish or insolent or humble. But what I ask of you is that you should not even let such a thought enter your mind.

If the girls cannot massage with sufficient pressure, you should teach them how to do so. That requires not physical strength but skill.

Now about what you have been reading. The belief which you refer to was held once. It is no longer held now. People have not understood some of Malthus’s theories, and some others are faulty. The law which applies to lower animals does not apply to man. Lower

---

1 Fried delicacy

2 Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 6-7-1932. Commenting on it the addressee had said: “I would only be a coward if I hesitated to criticize others lest they should criticize me. Why should I be afraid of the world and refrain from telling people what I regard as truth, since I do not care?”
animals live on one another. Man strives to grow out of that condition. It is the spirit of non-violence which prompts him to do so. So long as one’s body endures, one cannot realize perfect non-violence. If, however, a person cherishes the ideal of non-violence, he will live so as to commit the minimum violence. Man’s excellence lies in his readiness to let others live and lay down his own life. As he progresses, his food also changes for the better. He has capacity to grow still further. There have been many more discoveries after Darwin’s. The book which you have been reading seems to be an old one. Whether it is old or new, the principle of “the greatest good of the greatest number” or “survival of the fittest” is false.

Non-violence aims at the good of all. The divine law cannot be any other but the good of all. It is our duty to discover how to bring that about and what man’s duty is under such a law, and not to oppose that law by another. But this is a vast subject. I have dealt with a few points in brief. If you want me to discuss the subject further, put me some questions.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10296. Also C.W. 5751. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

259. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA
July 30, 1932

BHAISHANSHYAMDAS,

I have your letter of the 22nd instant. I have gone through all the books on economics available with me. But that does not mean that I have quite understood them. Still my understanding has been enriched to some extent. I had expected to receive some more books from you before I had finished reading the last of these. But you did not receive that letter1 of mine. Now this one is yet another letter gone astray. I want the reports of the Fowler Committee, Chamberlain Committee, Babington Smith and Hilton Young Committee along with the dissenting reports, Dadachanji’s book on currency or exchange and the one recently written by Findlay Shirras.

I am a bit afraid that almonds will not suit you. I can digest almonds, ground-nuts and such oily nuts as I have subsisted on them for years. For you milk and curds are the main food, very little of starch and of the dal proteins none. I have found by experience that wheat, milk, curds, salads and non-starchy fruits like grape, pomegranate, orange, apple, pineapple and papaya, these form the necessary and suitable diet for people like you. Almonds can supplant milk only when a vegetable is found equivalent to milk. Chemical tests prove that almonds and milk have common properties excepting a certain specific property which is found in milk but not in almonds and which is present in animal proteins only. I have full faith that among millions of vegetables there must be one possessing that specific property but our vaidyas have done no research in this matter owing to sheer lethargy. Hence almonds are not as useful to us as milk.

The condition of my arm is the same as before but it does not interfere with my work. Therefore there is absolutely no cause for anxiety.

All three of us are well. You will be glad to know that Sardar has started learning Sanskrit and he is making very rapid progress.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi : C.W. 7902. Courtesy : G.D. Birla

260. LEARN THE “GITA” BY HEART

July 31, 1932

I have often written and spoken advising people to learn the Gita by heart. Since I myself have not been able to do that, it does not become me to advise people that they should. But I do not feel ashamed of doing so time and again, because I know the benefits of the practice. I am able to face my problems somehow, because I knew once as many as thirteen chapters by heart and have been meditating on the teachings of the Gita for the past many years. It may be said, therefore, that I have lived my life under its protecting shade.
However, if I had been able to learn the whole Gita by heart and had studied it with greater care, I would probably have gained much more than I have. But what happened or may happen to me does not matter. My life, it may be said, is over, though I would, if I got an opportunity, try once again to learn it by heart.

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 28/31-7-1932; vide
the following item.
Here the word Gita should be understood in a wider sense. It means the book or work which is our spiritual authority. Since for most of us it is the Gita, I have used that name. But Amtul, Amina and Qureshi should learn by heart the whole or a part of the Koran-e-Sharif instead of the Gita. Those who do not know any Sanskrit and cannot learn it now may memorize a Gujarati or a Hindi translation. Anybody whose faith is not in the Gita but in some other holy book may memorize that.

We should also know what is meant by “memorizing”. We should sincerely attempt to live according to the teaching of the book which we learn by heart. That teaching should not be in conflict with certain fundamental principles and we should have understood its meaning fully.

This practice has its reward. If at any time we do not have the book with us or our copy is stolen or burnt, if we are stranded in a strange place or lose our eye-sight or power of speech while our mind is clear—we can imagine other similar circumstances—if in such circumstances we know our beloved book by heart, it can give us great peace of mind, show us the right path and act as our friend in our misfortune.

This is also the experience of the whole world. Our forefathers—whether Hindu, Muslim, Christian or Parsi—used to memorize certain portions of holy books. Many do that even today. We should not disregard the precious experience of all these people. In some measure this is a test of our faith.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati : M.M.U./II

261. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 28/31, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got today your letter of 25th/26th. We ought to thank God that you still get my letters. But we should thank Him even when you do not receive them. This will mean that we shall have learnt to be equal towards cold and heat, good and bad, happiness and suffering. If we have truly handed over to Him the direction of our lives, we should dance as He wills. We may be happy if He sends us a letter, and should be happy, too, when He sends none. Narasinh Mehta danced and sang with relief: “It is a blessing that the net is cut.” That certainly did not mean that his wife was not dear to him or that her presence did not make him happy. She was of course dear to him. However, when she died he felt that there was divine providence in that, even that it was God’s kindness. Hence, as long as you continue to get my letters let them give you what pleasure they can. But rest content when they stop. You will discover that there is joy even in that contentment.

I got the postcard which you wrote on getting the previous packet of letters. The condition of the elbow has remained the same. The weight had risen to 105\(\frac{1}{2}\) pounds, but it has again gone down to 104. Such minor changes are bound to be there from time to time, but otherwise my health is quite good.

As a principle it is correct that Padma ought not to have incurred a debt. But circumstances may change and a principle may no longer remain applicable. To do her justice, therefore, we should take into account the total figure and, if you feel that the expense was justified, you should pay the debt. We can imagine circumstances in which one has no choice but to incur a debt. It may even be one’s duty to do that. All such principles have to be relaxed when circumstances change. Only then can we do justice in every case. If we do not act in this manner, we would be merely clinging to the letter of a rule. About Titus, do what you think best.

It is a great achievement on Keshu’s part to have spun yarn of up to 200 counts. How many rounds of such quality did he spin? If you send samples of every quality of such yarn—strings of five or seven threads each tied to your letter—we shall get them safe and be able to see the yarn. Also send, with somebody who may be coming to this side, a few slivers from among those with which he could spin such fine yarn. If he can spin more such yarn, you should also be ready to get cloth woven from it. On which type of spinning-wheel did he spin yarn of 200 counts, and what was the spindle like?

I have already written to you that at present I spin on the Gandiva wheel.\(^1\) After making some improvements in its spindle-bearer, I can easily spin on it yarn of 30 counts. Today I probably spun yarn of still higher count. The waste, moreover, is negligible. The improvements are these: There is just enough space in the spindle-bearer to fit the spindle; the spindle-bearer is made very narrow; the spindle fits so closely that there is no room for the pulley to move loosely, since there is just enough space for the spindle to rotate freely. These improvements have reduced to a minimum the accidents which resulted in the snapping of the threads, and enable us to draw very fine threads without fear. I have to see whether, by making the spindle still thinner, I can spin fine yarn with greater ease.

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 20-7-1932.

I get news about Mirabehn quite regularly here. The latest news I had, at the time of writing this letter, was of 23rd. She was bad-ridden then, though the postcard was written in her own hand. She has become very weak.

I understand what you say about the changes in the prayers. The important thing is that nobody should look upon the prayers as an infliction. As a healthy man feels the pangs of hunger in his stomach if he has not eaten anything on some day, so also a person with a healthy soul cannot but feel uneasy if he has not prayed during a day.

Do what you think proper regarding Prabhudas.

I suppose Shankarbhai’s arm is no longer in plaster.

I don’t like to tell Premabehn to make her letters shorter. I ought to let her pour out her heart. I know that she must be giving a good deal of her time to these letters, but probably she feels satisfied after writing them.

I will write to Mathew. Read that letter. The inmates of the Ashram will be able to put into practice my suggestion regarding education only to the extent that you have been able to understand the idea and can carry it out. It is something which I cannot easily make clear by explaining in words. It is only by putting it into practice that one can show how easy study and learning can be if we master that key, and how the thing can be done without much ostentation.

July 31, 1932

About Narmada, I wrote to you in my letter dated 31-7-1932. I don’t suppose you could have got it in due time. I need not write anything more in this. I had one more letter from Shambhushankar. I am sure that, if anything was possible, you must have done it. I bless her and pray that her honour may remain inviolate.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8241. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Vide “Education”, 10-7-1932.
2 Evidently a slip for 16; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 16-7-1932.
262. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 31, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

You are remarkable. In spite of your extreme weakness, your hand is just as steady and clear as ever. Malaviyaji, to whom I had wired says he is going to detain you till you have regained your strength. And if the climate agrees with you, nothing can be better than that you should be under Sivaprasad Babu’s hospitable roof and Malaviyaji’s loving care. I should be entirely free from anxiety. So you have been having the tulsi leaf ‘tea’. I have never taken it myself. I have heard of its many virtues. In my opinion, the hot water is the chief agent. But I must not discount the testimony of many physicians and patients. What I want is to see you restored to your original strength and that without the harmful quinine. The tulsi leaf is certainly harmless, and it has a delicate, pleasing fragrance.

Please give our love to all the friends there.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

I hope you had my previous letters. The Government has allowed them to be posted to you. There was delay, but latterly the letters have been fairly promptly released for despatch.

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 6232. Courtesy : Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9668

263. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

July 31, 1932

CHI. RAMESHWARDAS,

I got your two letters. It is good that you left Ram to take care of Vinoba. This is not separation but union. Do not remove him from

---

1 On July 26, 1932; vide “Telegram to Madan Mohan Malviya”, 26-7-1932.
2 An aromatic plant
3 “Shivaprasad Babu’s old servant prepared me a special concoction of tulsi leaves, one or two parijat leaves, black pepper, and mishri, which induced perspiration and relieved the fever.” —Mirabehn
4 Addressee’s son
there. If Gangadevi wants to learn English, she should certainly be permitted to do so. A husband has no right to hinder his wife’s progress.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 183

264. LETTER TO AMINA G. QURESHI

July 31, 1932

CHI. AMINA,

I expect to get a long letter from you by and by. How is your health? How is your study of Urdu? Write a few sentences if you can. How do you find the children? How did everybody behave towards you?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6661

265. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

July 31, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

Since Tai has come to stay with you, it is our duty to see that she improves her health while she is there. Discover the art of building up good health. Ask Tai to write to me. She may write in Marathi.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 241. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

266. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

July 31, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA (ANUT),

Please let me know whether or not you like being called anut. Aren’t you Babla’s’ anut? Need you use a different kind of paper for every letter? Using sheets torn from exercise books costs more and,

¹ Son of Mahadev Desai
moreover, spoils the exercise books. Again, when the sheet is [torn off], the vertical line ruled on the left side . . . . . A thing is well used only when it is used chiefly for the purpose for which it is meant. It is not necessary that you should ask some questions in every letter. You can give in a letter a fine summary of what you read [and understood] during the week.

Nobody, whether a woman or a man, needs a physical weapon to protect herself or himself. Sometimes such weapon is used against that person himself. Moreover, a woman who [believes in] ahimsa will protect herself by killing herself rather than the evil-doer. A woman should have faith, like Sita and Draupadi, that God will protect her honour. God dwells in us in the form of His qualities and protects us. [Do you understand] this? Mahadev had received your letter. Did you get his reply?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9473. Also C.W. 1001. Courtesy: Nirmalabehn I. Mehta

267. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI

July 31, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

You have been keeping the letter of your promise all right, but one may be said to have really kept a promise only if one also keeps its spirit. I have no right to give you this advice, for on the issue of milk I was content to keep merely the letter of my vow. Its spirit was that if I could not take the milk of cow or/buffalo, I could not take that of any other animal either. Because of my eagerness to live, I violated that spirit. If you can accept advice from such an imperfect person, you may. I on my part have released you from your promise. You may write when you feel like writing. I am sure you must have inquired about Pyarelal [again]. I have already written to you and told you that I am waiting for Harilal’s letters.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1844

1 The source is illegible here.
268. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

July 31, 1932

CHI. RAMA (JOSHI)\(^1\).

If there is no letter from you in the next post, I will kick up a row. I want a detailed letter, giving me information of personal interest and about the activities of the group as a whole. How are Vimu and Dhiru? Do you find the Ashram the same place that it was, or better or worse than it was?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5335

269. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

July 31, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

How was Surendraji’s tree uprooted? Plant another in its place. Ask Viramati and Chanchal to write to me. Why can you not spin as fine yarn as Keshu?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5778. Also C.W. 3001. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

270. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA N. KHARE

July 31, 1932

CHI. RAMBHAU,

You boys and girls are now old enough to have a sense of responsibility, and it is, therefore, right that you take up such work. What do you write in English? Send me a specimen of your English handwriting. Write a short essay.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 294. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

\(^1\) Wife of Chhaganlal Joshi

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4, SEPTEMBER, 1932 275
271. LETTER TO NIRMALA B. MASHRUWALA

July 31, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA, (TOPIWALA BUNGALOW)

I was waiting for your letter. I received the proofs of *Gitamathan*¹ [just now], but I have not received your previous letter till the moment of writing. There was a problem about letters written to me, which had created some confusion. Things have now settled down somewhat.

It was very good that you wrote to me. You have many things to write about. I would certainly be happy if you give me news about everyone.

I had received Babukaka’s² letter, and I had also written a long letter³ in reply. He must have received it now. Give my blessings to Gomati. All three of us are well. Blessings to everybody there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2885. Courtesy: Nirmalabehn Shroff

272. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

July 31, 1932

CHI. MANU,

This time your handwriting was a little better. It will improve if you keep model letters in front of you and copy them with a reed-pen as carefully as if you were drawing pictures. You should first learn Gujarati, a little Sanskrit, arithmetic and all the processes connected with spinning, and then you may certainly learn English if you wish. You must increase your weight by a good many pounds. You will do so if you take sufficient milk and ghee and do exercise.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5760. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

¹ By Kishorelal G. Mashruwala
² Kishorelal G. Mashruwala
³ Vide “Letter to Kishorelal G. Mashruwala”, 1-7-1932.
273. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI

July 31, 1932

There is a mantra in Ishopanishad, which can also be interpreted to mean, “concentrate on the work before you”. If one does so, one will certainly realize God. God is Omnipresent. He is present in “my” work too. What I think of as “my work” is in truth His. If I concentrate on it, I shall regard it as His. Anybody who does the Lord’s work attains Him.

[From Gujarati]

274. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

July 31, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

I may say your letters are beautiful. With regard to protection read the letter to Nirmala.¹ One whose mind is pure should have the faith that God would protect her purity. It is wrong to depend on weapons. What if the weapon is snatched away? One who follows the path of non-violence may have no faith in weapons. Non-violence and love are his weapons.

There is no violence if someone’s feelings are hurt when you speak the truth. There is no violence if someone is hurt without our wanting to hurt. Supposing I ask for cow’s milk, but knowing about my vow, if you do not give it to me you are not committing violence, but doing your duty.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : C.W. 9912. Courtesy: Shardabejn G. Chokhawala

275. LETTER TO GULAM RASUL QURESHI

July 31, 1932

CHI. QURESHI.

Write to me in detail. I believe you remember the books I want. It seems Premabehn has sent Khulfa-e-Rashidin Sarat—Part II, the biography by Dr. Mohammed Ali, and other books.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10807. Courtesy: Gulam Rasul Qureshi

276. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 31, 1932

CHI. MANGALA.

You certainly do not wish that I should write the first letter only to you every day? If I did that, it would only be called partiality. Hence I should make it a rule to write first only to the person whose letter is received first. Is that not fair?

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11099. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

277. LETTER TO A GIRL

July 31, 1932

Everything written in books should not be accepted as sacred truth. We should not believe anything which violates our moral sense or justifies cruelty, no matter where we find it. So long as we have not acquired the capacity to judge between right and wrong, we should, in regard to what we read in books, accept the opinion of elders whom we trust.

[From Gujarati]

1 The addressee had asked: “If we do not believe what is given in the books about Mira’s miracles, then should we have faith in what others say about her? If we do not consider books as an authentic source, then what other sources can you suggest about our heroes and heroines?”
278. A LETTER

July 31, 1932

You are suffering from a subtle pride and diffidence at the same time. How can you feel lonely in the midst of so many human beings, every one of whom demands your service and in whose midst you have thrown in your lot? You are in the midst of books and you will not touch them. You are in the midst of Hindi-speaking men and women and you will not speak to them. You are in the midst of workers and you will not throw yourself into the work and make two blades of grass grow where only one was growing yesterday, make two yards of cloth where only one was woven yesterday. All our philosophy is dry as dust if it is not immediately translated into some act of loving service. Forget the little self in the midst of the greater you have put yourself in. You must shake yourself free from this lethargy.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 336

279. LETTER TO A GIRL

July 31, 1932

What a reason for not going to the Ashram! what would happen if everyone followed your example? Have you not heard the story of the Kazi and his dog? The dog died, and its corpse was taken for burial in procession, which was joined by the whole town. But when the Kazi himself was dead, there were hardly enough mourners to carry his coffin to the cemetery. Are you not guilty in the same manner or as the Gujarati bhajan puts it, “Man’s friends are selfish; they will all desert him in the end.” When a man dies, we burn his corpse. But you—I leave the sentence for you to complete. My point is that we must not make an individual the object of our affection which should be reserved only for his virtues. And this attachment should spring from pure love. Every person’s virtues result in some concrete act or other. If we admire his virtues, we should promote the

---

1 The addressee had said in his letter that he felt very lonely and was of no use at all.
2 The addressee had said that she did not feel like going to the Ashram in the absence of Gandhiji who had drawn her to himself as a magnet.
activities which constitute their outward expression. You must therefore go to the Ashram and take care of the girls whose acquaintance you have made. And sometimes join the prayers too.

[From Gujarati]

280. TELEGRAM TO KAMALA NEHRU

August 1, 1932

KAMALA NEHRU
ANAND BHUWAN
ALLAHABAD

ALARMING ACCOUNT PRESS ABOUT HEALTH, WIRE EXACT CONDITION.

BAPU

Bomay secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800(40)(3), Pt. II, p. 383

281. LETTER TO VIMALABEHN A. PATEL

August 1, 1932

CHI. VIMALA¹.

I got your letter. The information which you have sent will be useful to Bhaktibehn. I will try to pass it on to her, but a prisoner can never say anything with certainty. When you write to me next, please let me know why you wrote the last letter with pencil. Anybody who writes a letter with pencil without a special reason commits a wrong. That is, he is guilty of violence, because the writing in pencil fades out and gives trouble to the readers. Your handwriting is indeed as good as you yourself are, but because you wrote the letter in pencil the words have almost faded out.

Blessing and greetings to all of you from all the three of us.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. VIMALA PATEL
PATIDAR MANDIR
ANAND JUNCTION

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3276

¹ Daughter of Narasinhbhai Ishvarbhai Patel

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

You seem to have forgotten me. But my companions and I often talk about you.

Manilal tells me he thoughtlessly leased to someone a plot of the Phoenix land without reference to the trustees.¹ If there is no objection to the lease except on the ground of Manilal’s thoughtlessness, I feel that it would be well to protect him by validating the agreement. Manilal says the other trustees are agreeable. If during the five years the whole ground has to be sold, it can be subject to the lease. I am hoping however that years of labour put in the settlement will not have that sorry end. This brings to mind Tolstoy Farm. What is the state of things there? I am well.

Love,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

283. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

August 3, 1932

CHI. MANILAL,

I got your letter. You have asked for a reply by cable but a prisoner cannot easily send cables like that. The authorities may perhaps forward it, but I must observe proper limit. Moreover nearly a month has passed since you wrote your letter and there would be no harm if another month passes. I, therefore, did not ask for permission to send a cable. It was not quite proper that a promise to hand over the lease was made directly, but now that it is made I have written to Kallenbach to endorse it if possible. The letter is enclosed. I hope that you yourself will have been able to persuade him before you get this letter and it will not be necessary for you to use my letter.

¹ Vide “Letter to Manilal Gandhi”, 3-8-1932
² This is not available.
Please send me a copy in the Phoenix Trust-deed. It is possible that there is a copy in the Ashram. But in case we do not find it there, I should have a copy to consult it if necessary.

I think you will now stay there. It will not be wrong at all if you have decided to do that. There, too, you will be doing service.

But do not be lazy in writing to me.

Devdas had a good spell of illness in jail. So he has been released one month before the expiry of his term. Mirabehn also was very ill. Dr. Mehta is seriously ill.

All three of us are well.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4791

284. LETTER TO PRAGJI K. DESAI

August 3, 1932

CHI. PRAGJI,

Parvati and you seem to be so busy that you do not get time to write even a single line. Here, Mahadev, Sardar and I remember both of you. Please, therefore, find time some day and write to us.

We are all right. Spinning is going on, as usual. At present Mahadev spins yarn of about 70 counts. Besides spinning, Sardar studies Sanskrit with the enthusiasm of a young student and is making rapid progress. Mahadev is studying French, and I am doing a little Urdu. Sardar makes envelopes from waste paper. That is his chief occupation. This letter will be carried in one of his envelopes.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a Photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5033

285. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

August 3, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter of the 1st. I hope you are not getting frightened at the crowing in the hostel. If the girls are well behaved, there will be no difficulty. There will be none, either if we have perfectly learnt the lesson of non-attachment. Others can suggest mostly external remedies for your health. About internal remedies, you alone can judge. I do not have much faith in psychologists. How much can even the best trained psychologist know about the human mind? Hence, you yourself should try and know what connection your ill-health has with your mind and adopt the proper remedies. In this very letter, however, you say that heavy or light work and proper sleep or its absence do have an effect on health. Thus the truth is that both internal and external factors have a bearing on one’s health. No one has been able to maintain good health with the help of mind alone, neglecting external measures. You should, therefore, listen to Naran das’s advice in regard to sleep, rest and work, and examine the mental cause yourself. Take any measures you think necessary but make your body as strong as steel. I should have told you at the very beginning that you should not take Kuhne-bath in warm water during the period of your monthly course.

The inner voice is something which cannot be described in words. But sometimes we have a positive feeling that something in us prompts us to do a certain thing. The time when I learnt to recognize this voice was, I may say, the time when I started praying regularly. That is, it was about 1906. I searched my memory and tell you this because you asked the question. In fact, however, there was no moment when I suddenly felt that I had some new experience. I think my spiritual life has grown without my being conscious of the fact in the same way as hair grows on our body.

This is how repetition of God’s name wipes out one’s sins. Anyone who sincerely follows that practice is bound to have faith. He starts with the conviction that such repetition will wipe out his sins. Wiping out of sins means self-purification. One who repeats God’s name daily with faith will never grow tired of doing so, and, therefore, the name which he repeats with his lips to start with sinks ultimately into his heart, and that purifies him. This is a universal experience. Psychologists also believe that man becomes what he thinks. Ramanama follows this law. I have unshakable faith in the virtue of repeating God’s name. I am convinced that the person who discovered it had first-hand experience [of spiritual life] and that his discovery is of the utmost value. The door of purification should open even for the illiterate. Repetition of God’s name opens it for them. (See Gita IX. 22, X.10.) Telling beads and similar practices help one to concentrate and to count the number of times the name has been repeated.

Studies should be undertaken only with the aim of equipping oneself for service. Since, however, service of others gives one the highest joy, one may say that studies are for joy. I have not heard of anyone, however, who found unbroken joy in life through literary pursuits alone without devoting himself to service.

Art cannot be the monopoly of any country or individual. That which requires secrecy is no art.

It is the right and the duty of every country to protect its industries. It is the duty of a person who follows the path of non-violence to give shelter to the homeless. Who should be treated as homeless can be decided only by reference to the circumstances of each case.

What seems bad in its outward appearance is not always so in its substance. The unattractive appearance of Urdu books indicates their publishers’ lack of means. But cannot their contents be excellent? In fact the contents of some of them are so. In making the list, however, how does the question of the work being or not being interesting arise? Since the list has to be made, the work must be interesting because there is interest in doing one’s duty. If you take the trouble some time of learning a little Urdu, you will find the study interesting in itself.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10297. Also C.W. 5748. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

286. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

August 3, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

Here is the first letter of the day to you. But would not everyone wish to have the first letter? So, we must be satisfied with what we get. And, if we have to choose, we should choose the worst for ourselves. One who follows this rule will always be content.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11081. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

284 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
287. TELEGRAAM TO CHHAGANLAL P. MEHTA

August 4, 1932

CHHAGANLAL MEHTA
8 PAGODA ROAD
RANGOON

GOD’S WILL BE DONE. CONSOLATION TO YOU AND MOTHER. HOPE YOU WILL FULLY CARRY ON ALL NOBLEST TRADITIONS LEFT BY FATHER FOR COMMERCIAL INTEGRITY, LAVISH HOSPITALITY AND GREAT GENEROSITY. SARDAR AND MAHADEV JOIN ME IN CONDOLENCES. FOR ME I FEEL FOR LORN WITHOUT LIFELONG FAITHFUL FRIEND. CONTINUE KEEP ME INFORMED OF EVERYTHING. MAY GOD BLESS YOU ALL.

GANDHI

288. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

August 4, 1932

Dr. Mehta is no more. I have lost a lifelong faithful friend. But for me he lives more intensely by his death than before, for I treasure his many virtues now more than ever. That treasure becomes a sacred trust. Here is a letter for Maganlal. I expect you to do all you can to make him a worthy son of his father. I have advised him not to worry but continue his studies. Broken down though Dr. Mehta had become of late, I expect he had preserved his original circumspection to make suitable financial arrangements for Maganlal’s studies. Maganlal will know. I feel that I am not by his people’s side at the present moment. But not my will, let His be done, now and for ever.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 344

1 Eldest son of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta
2 Dr. Pranjivan Mehta had passed away on August 3.
289. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

August 4, 1932

Brotherhood is just now only a distant aspiration. To me it is a test of true spirituality. All our prayers, fasting and observances are empty nothings so long as we do not feel a live kinship with all life. But we have not even arrived at that intellectual belief, let alone a heart realization. We are still selective. A selective brotherhood is a selfish partnership. Brotherhood requires no consideration or response. If it did, we could not love those whom we consider as vile men and women. In the midst of strife and jealousy, it is a most difficult performance. And yet true religion demands nothing less from us. Therefore each one of us has to endeavour to realize this truth for ourselves irrespective of what others do.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 345

290. LETTER TO MANILAL R. JHAVERI

August 4, 1932

CHI. MANILAL.

I have just received a cable about Doctor’s death. I had been getting cables every day about his condition. You also must have received similar cables. I do not know whether you will have to go to Rangoon. I had been daily sending cables to Chhaganlal. Please let me know how much you can help in preserving Doctor’s good name. I do not know whether he has left a will. If you know who is with Chhaganlal in Rangoon at present, please let me know. What will happen to Magan now? A beautiful nest is in danger of being ruined. I know that all of you will feel the loss of Doctor. But my sorrow is peculiar. I had no greater friend than Doctor in this whole world, and for me he is still alive. But I am unable to do anything from here to keep his nest whole, and that makes me unhappy. But I hope you will do all you can to that end. I will of course be in regular correspondence with Chhaganlal. Write to me regularly for some time. Where is

1 The addressee had asked “why the idea of brotherhood did not take root among nations in spite of the example set by Bapu, Kagawa, Albert Schweitzer and others”. (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, p. 270)

2 Son of Revashankar Jagjivan Jhaveri, Dr. Pranjivan Mehta’s brother
Nanalal1 at present? Hand over the accompanying letter2 to him. I hope both of you are well. How is Tilak?

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

Read the letter3 to Khimchand too, and pass it on to him.

291. LETTER TO NANALAL K. JASANI

_August 4, 1932_

Doctor’s passing away has put me in a more unhappy plight than it has done any of you. I feel miserable that my oldest co-worker or friend, call him what you like, has passed away and I, being in jail, can do nothing to help you. But God has a purpose in this too; it may even be His kindness. I do not know what strength you possess to preserve the prosperity of Doctor’s nest. Use all the strength you have. We must wait and see whether his good name remains unsullied and his children perpetuate his virtues.

[From Gujarati]

_Mahadevbhaini Diary_, Vol. I, p. 343

292. LETTER TO BABALBHAI MEHTA

_August 4, 1932_

BABALBHAI,

I got your letter4. My experience tells me that, instead of bothering about how the whole world may live in the right manner, we should think how we ourselves may do so. We do not even know whether the world lives in the right manner or in a wrong manner. If, however, we live in the right manner, we shall feel that others also do the same, or shall discover a way of persuading them to do so.

---

1 Nanalal K. Jasani, Dr. Pranjivan Mehta’s business manager and partner
2 Vide the following item.
3 This is not available.
4 In which the addressee had asked: “The world has always been as it is; when will it improve?” (_The Diary of Mahadev Desai_, Vol. I, p. 276)
To know the atman means to forget the body, or, in other words, to become a cipher. Anybody who becomes a cipher will have realized the atman.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9449

293. A LETTER ¹

August 4, 1932

CHI.,

You are now without a father. But remember that the great Father of us all is alive. For Doctor, it was deliverance from great suffering. I wish that you should be as wish and good as he was. You may not have his intelligence or learning, but you can certainly cultivate his goodness, generosity and truthfulness. And it is these virtues that help us. Those who revere Doctor do so not for his learning but for his virtues. You should not be impatient. You need not go to Rangoon if you have not already started. Do not worry about your share. I am writing to Chhaganlal.² Have trust in him. You will gain nothing by distrusting him. Write to me from time to time. I hope you understand my meaning. God will protect you.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bhavnagar Samachar, 17-12-1955

294. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL P. MEHTA

August 4, 1932

Your conduct henceforth should show to others that you understand the true significance of Doctor’s death. His many virtues are his real will. They are your legacy. I hope you will do nothing which may make your younger brothers unhappy in the slightest degree. . . . ³ I feel unhappy that, at a time when my life long ¹ The letter was probably addressed to Ratilal Mehta, son of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta.

² Vide the following item.
³ Omission as in the source friend has passed away, I am as helpless as a cripple. If I had been free, I would be by your side now. Perhaps Doctor would have drawn his last breath in my lap. But God is ever jealous of our wishes. I must, therefore, content myself with what I can do through letters.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevshinh Diary, Vol. I, p. 343

295. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI
[August 4, 1932]

CHI. NARANDAS,

You will find with this a letter for Ratubhai. The clearing of the outgoing mail seems to have become regular once again. This has happened at the right time. For some time you may write to me daily if you find it necessary to do so. Inquire and try to get as much information as you can.

Doctor had been thinking of coming over in November, but we know that God does not always fulfil our wishes.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Courtesy : Narandas Gandhi

296. LETTER TO RATILAL SHETH
August 4, 1932

BHAJ RATILAL,

Perhaps I will feel the loss of Doctor the most, because I am not able to do anything to help in preserving the prosperity of his business. Doctor was always apprehensive about how Chhaganlal would behave after his death. You can probably, if you do your best, prove his fear unjustified. I could see when I was in Rangoon that Lilavati had great influence over Chhaganlal. I was happy that it was so. I could not judge whether Lilavati was making good use of that...

1 Vide the following item.
2 Ibid
3 Chhaganlal Mehta’s father-in-law
4 Wife of Chhaganlal Mehta influence or abusing it. I did have some misgivings. I had even cautions her and she had reassured me. But in Doctor’s letters which I received here he had expressed great disappointment about her. In Rangoon he had even wept before me. I do not know what influence you still have [over] Lilavati. Nor do I know how far Doctor’s fear was justified. I hope that you will not fail to contribute your share to see that Doctor’s nest is not ruined, that all the brothers preserve good relations and do not quarrel among themselves and that the business does not suffer.

Please write to me frankly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 7167. Also C.W. 4661. Courtesy:
Champabehn R. Mehta

297. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

Y. M.,
August 4, 1932

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I got your letter. I had been waiting for it. You must not feel distressed that you could not meet anyone. It is a mercy that even letters are permitted, for how can a prisoner expect to be permitted to receive letters? Preserve the health with which you have come out.
Pranayama does benefit, particularly persons with a lung disease. It must be remembered that pranayama is not to be done in a hurry.
How was the behaviour of the jail officials? Was it courteous?

I have already conveyed to you that I have given up the Magan charkha for the present. I could not go beyond 20 counts. I am not able to use both my hands. I cannot draw the yarn with my left hand.
I can therefore try only the right hand. I have got adjusted to it. But since I have been permitted to turn the Gandiv wheel with the left hand, I felt that I ought to change over to it. I have acquired wonderful control over it. Even on this I draw the yarn with the righthand and have gone up to 35 counts. I am also picking up speed, though it is still quite slow. It is around one hundred rounds, but I am satisfied.
There is very little wastage and even in such as takes place, I am making small improvements. I have thus had to postpone the Magan charkha experiment for the present. I will of course not give it up completely. I enjoy spinning on that too. Cling to the Divine Name like one possessed. When you have no help from anywhere else, you will get it from the Name.

1 The source is mutilated here.

May your ambition of improving the Magan charkha be fulfilled.

Do go to Almora. All of us agree with your idea of not giving a big name to the Ashram at present. You may therefore call it shail Ashram. Of the five names all the three of us liked that the best. We did not waste our time in thinking of another name. Ultimately we are concerned with the work, not with the name.

The Ashram is certainly not to be filled only with invalids. Some of course are bound to come. If Padma' comes, she must be received. You should get separate expenses for any such persons who may come. There would of course be a budget for the Ashram. I will not decide the figure for it. You may settle it with Narandas. It is proper that the expenditure on you, too, should be counted separately. This would be convenient for you. What you write about your work there is also correct. You should not take up too many things just now. You should proceed slowly and only as much as your health permits. For the present you should do only what you can on your own responsibility. I would be happy if you could tempt Balkrishna. He would be very good company for you. He may also improve in health and the Ashram would gain in dignity. If Dhiru' desires to join, it should be with a firm resolve to be steady there. Let him join if he does so on that condition. It would of course be excellent if you could find some good hill people to join you.

You have mentioned having enclosed Krishna’s letter but I don’t see it. Either you forgot, or the letter was left behind at Sabarmati. Where is...’?

Blessings from Sardar and Mahadev.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Gandhi Nidhi File (August, 1976). Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

1 Padma Sahay
2 Chhaganlal Joshi’s son
3 A word here is illegible in the source
298. TELEGRAM TO NARANDAS GANDHI
August 5, 1932

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM

SABARMATI

CONSOLATION RATILAL CHAMPA. STRONGLY ADVISE THEM NOT GO RANGOON. AM CONSTANT TOUCH WITH RANGOON.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 8243. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

299. LETTER TO NELLIE SEN GUPTA
August 5, 1932

What is this we hear about your husband’s illness? Please send me a correct report and send him kind regards from us all. You know I have Sardar and Mahadev Desai for companions.

The Hindustan Times, 14-8-1932

---

1 J.M. Sen Gupta
300. LETTER TO HARDAYAL NAG

August 5, 1932

DEAR H. D. BABU,

It was a perfect delight to all of us to hear from you. You make me jealous when you say that at your ripe age\(^1\) you learnt takli spinning. It was a great joy to learn that you had gained 16 lb. in weight. May you have many more years of service. We often talk about you and your wonderful vitality.

With regards from us all.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 348

301. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

August 5, 1932

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I got your letter. It seems after all I shall be able to continue to write letters.

What had Kaku done?

Ask Ramibehn to write to me. What disease is she suffering from? She should realize that you are no longer in a position to serve your family personally. She should [willingly] make that sacrifice. She is, moreover, a woman of spiritual understanding. She should rely on God for protection. She will always enjoy that, wherever she may be.

I am trying to do something about Kaku. I had a letter from him. It is not for us to worry about him. If we can do anything for him, we certainly should. Do write to me regularly.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro—6: G. S. Gangabehnne_, p. 64. Also C.W. 8792. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

---

\(^1\) He was eighty-five.
302. LETTER TO S. A. BRELVI

August 6, 1932

DEAR BRELVI,

I am intensely dissatisfied with myself for having allowed our conversation of yesterday to drift into a discussion primarily of my wretched arm. I wanted to know the daily routine of all the companions. For this there were hardly a few minutes left. But the information I gained emboldens me to offer a suggestion. Whilst I appreciate a study of French and other continental languages I feel that we ought first to devote our attention to our own languages. Mahadev tells me that you had already begun a serious study of Sanskrit and that you know a little Gujarati. May I then suggest your devoting your time first to studying Sanskrit, Gujarati and Hindi? I do believe that each one of us should make the very best use of the precious time at our disposal. Since you know Urdu and Persian so well, Hindi is child’s play. You should be able to read the Ramayana of Tulsidas in the original.

You will excuse this presumption, please.

Love from us all.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: S. A. Brelvi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

303. LETTER TO MATHURADAS P. ASAR

[Before August 7, 1932]

CHI. MATHURADAS.

I have your letter. The hook for the cup has not yet arrived. I am not even ready to use it as yet. Every day the cup is before my eyes. It has not been our intention to go on increasing the count. I am going to be steady at around 40 counts myself. Most probably it will

---

1 Editor, The Bombay Chronicle
2 Gandhiji had been having pain in the left elbow.
3 From the contents the letter appears to have been written before the one to the addressee of August 7, 1932; vide “Letter to Mathuradas Purushottam”, 7-8-1932.
be the same in the case of Sardar. Mahadev may settle at around 80 counts. Then testing it would be the thing to do. It would be easy to see the result. If the yarn is even and does not break while being taken off and is tightly wound round the spindle, then the yarn is not likely to be weak. On the other hand, there are chances of being cheated in the tests made using the cup or the machine used in a mill. The yarn cannot be unwound from just any place. There would be much waste in doing so. Hence, only if the yarn is even from the point of unwinding can it stand the test. This means that yarn can be tested only by the weaver. The yarn which can be used for weaving without difficulty is good yarn. But the purpose of writing is not to disregard the tools of yarn-testing. My purpose is only to indicate the time for doing the test. At one time I used to do the testing every day. I had prepared the tool for the purpose with the materials available at home. But then I found that it was taking a lot of time. And I was not able to effect much improvement thereby. I also saw that where I only used my guess instead of the test, my guess frequently turned out to be correct, because, while unwinding the yarn, it would have passed before the eyes. One would also know how often it has broken and also how well the yarn has been wound on the spindle. And so, an intelligent spinner automatically gets an idea about the quality of his yarn. Otherwise you are absolutely correct in arguing that there is no reason to gloat over the fact if the yarn is of 100 counts on weighing. I know that there can be yarn of 100 counts fit only to be thrown away. I have also seen such yarn. Any attempt to spin such yarn is sheer waste of time. Hence, anyone spinning fine yarn should be convinced that the yarn will easily be turned into a length of cloth. Then alone can the yarn be considered as of good quality, otherwise it is useless; That is why I had written to Narandas two or three months ago that he should make arrangements for the weaving of fine yarn.

Your report about the Yajnik Sewing Machine is interesting. If we get volunteers in thousands involved in the . . . right at the beginning, the experiment will not go very far. Hence, we must invent something which will ensure proper use of the hand needle and does not take much time. It is only with this in view that I have kept embroidery and knitting in my mind. The art of Yajnik sewing is not for making available to the poor ready-made khadi garments, but for quick disposal of the khadi woven by the poor without loss. It is for making expensive-looking khadi inexpensive. But if we expect from a fairly wealthy person that he shall buy khadi however expensive and however coarse it may be, and then get it stitched at his own expense, then khadi cannot go very far. Alternatively khadi should be sold at a loss or the spinning charges, etc., should be brought down. In your plan I saw the suggestion to avoid doing that and so I promptly welcomed it. Hence you should convince the ladies who have protested that they should feel gratified that they adorned the khadi woven by the poor by stitching it free and serving the poor. For, by their action, the stitched garments could be sold at the price of unwashed khadi and we could pay the poor their full wages. We can certainly make an inexpensive sewing-machine in this country; but I think it can only be an imitation of the machine in vogue at present. If so, it should mean overriding the patent law. The Singer and other machines have invested capital of millions of rupees and wherever patent laws prevail, they must be registering their patents. But I am not fully conversant with the situation, and if somebody invents an original design and prepares a sewing-machine which is simpler than the machines currently in use, he himself can earn millions by registering his patent. Because, he would then compete with the Singer machine. Our craftsmanship has still not inspired such confidence in me. In the West, there are countless new inventions every day. But that is not our field at all. Something like that has no doubt been in my mind. Our ancestors invented the greatest thing in the shape of the spinning-wheel. Millions of people have benefited from it. Textile machinery is based on the design of the spinning-wheel. Hence there is still much scope in the direction of improvement of the spinning-wheel. I am sure that something will emerge. There can be a profit of millions, but there is no chance for a single individual to earn millions.

1 Unclear in the original

Now about your diet. You have done well to give up starches. Equally important is the point about pulses. If the curd is absolutely sweet (not sour), it can never cause headache. To make it safe, a little soda may be added to it. But if one can take milk, there is no need to take curd. It is only superstition that papaw is harmful to the eyes. Any person can test this fact by taking only papaw. He should take nothing else with it. This can be tested by having a single meal of papaw. There is no need to entertain such a superstition even with regard to ripe tomatoes. Your diet can consist of thin chapati, green vegetables and milk. You must have something sweet. You can take currants, black grape or raisins. Raw onion can do you good, but it can be taken only in the evening because I know that it gives off a terrible smell. I have myself eaten lots of raw onions. I did it only in the evening and avoided meeting anyone afterwards. But the tolerance of our women is infinite. But since Ba has been in the habit of making free comments over the years, she could not hold herself from remark-king on the matter. And in the end she always warned me against going before anyone else with my mouth stinking. And she was absolutely right. I am afraid your digestive system cannot accept almonds. Do not go on brooding about your diet. Do not brood over your illness either. Once you have decided about something, it should be taken as settled. Taking a vow only means that our mind stops bothering about it after the vow has been taken. Just as a trader doesnot bother about the thing he has already sold and starts thinking about the next thing, so also the mind.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3761

304. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI
August 7, 1932

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

What a joy to have had such a letter from you. It was thoughtful of you to have sent us the medical report. Hardly a day passed but we have talked of you. You have suffered. It is good you are going out for treatment. We all hope you will profit by it and return fully restored to health.

It was equally considerate of you to have given a full report of Jawaharlal’s health.

I expect to hear from you regularly.

And now about ourselves. We have all been keeping quite well. I am taking milk. My weight is 105. We are leading a student’s life.
Sardar gives full 4 hours or more to Sanskrit. He gives nearly two hours to spinning and turns waste paper into envelopes. I learnt only here that he had an eye for neatness and a deft hand. This will be closed in an envelope of his make. So you see he is adding to the wealth of the country. Mahadev is reading French, gives Sanskrit lessons to the Sardar, does my writing work, reads other things and does 3 hours’ spinning and needful cooking, etc. I do over two hours’ spinning and Urdu. I have read those Jamia publications that were sent to me. And now I am rereading Shibli’s Life of the Prophet. I carry on a little Urdu correspondence. One of my correspondents is a girl whom you are reported to know. Her name is Zohra. What a wonderful hand she writes. My Urdu teacher is Raihana whom too you know. She is the daughter of our old young friend Abbas Tyabji. She is a brick.

Bon voyage and love from us all.

Good-bye.³

Yours always,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: C. W. 10876. Courtesy: Dr. Zakir Husain Library, Jamia Millia Islamia

---

305. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

Y. M.,

August 7, 1932

CHI. NIMU,

I got your letter. Could you not understand that my letter was in part a jest? Ramdas had made no complaint against you. I complained that in my opinion you were harassing Ramdas. But are you going to stop harassing him because of my saying so? You will stop harassing anybody only when you stop considering yourself helpless and, ceasing to be a weak woman, become strong. Those who feel themselves helpless and weak always harass others wittingly or unwittingly.

Babu’s ear should be all right now. If you know what medicine was given, let me know.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

¹ Sirat-un-Nabi
² Zohra Banu Ansari, addressee’s daughter
³ This is in Urdu.
306. DR. PRANJIVANDAS MEHTA

August 7, 1932

If I were in the Ashram just now, I would have said a few words about this holy soul. He was my oldest friend. I came into contact with him when I first went to England, and our relations became closer as time passed. He was the first person whom I met in England and from the very beginning he acted as my guide and counsellor. But all this is there in the Autobiography. Here I do not wish to write about our intimate relations. If we know what virtues he possessed because of which I describe him as a holy soul, we shall be able to emulate them, and can have faith that we also can achieve in our lives what he did in his.

Doctor had won a gold medal at the Grant Medical College. After that, he passed more examinations in England and was enrolled as Barrister. But I leave all these achievements. All of us cannot shine as scholars. For that we require favourable circumstances. Men are not worshipped for their attainments in letters. It is for their virtues that they are worshipped. I saw Doctor continually progressing in such virtues as firmness of mind, courage, generosity, purity, love of truth, ahimsa and simplicity. Once he had made up his mind to do something, he would never change. His word, therefore, was trusted by people who had dealings with him. And he was always fearless. When he returned from England, he found that he could not keep up his self-respect in his native town of Morvi, and he, therefore, left it for good. Doctor’s liberality knew no bounds. His house was like a dharmasala. No deserving poor ever returned empty-handed from him. He had helped and supported a number of people. There was no ostentation in his help. He never boasted about it. It knew no limits of caste or community or province. There were people in all provinces and belonging to all communities and faiths who had benefited from his generosity. Doctor had enough wealth and to spare, but he was not proud of it. He spent very little of it on pleasures for himself. It can be said that in his very large bungalow he occupied the smallest space for his use. I don’t remember his having ever spent money in self-indulgence. I believe that he had relations with no other woman except his

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 2/7-8-1932; vide the following item.

2 In October 1888

3 Vide “An Autobiography”.
wife. During the last many years of his life he loved brahmacharya. In his early life, Doctor had little interest in reading religious books, but in his later life his love for such books increased. In a letter which he wrote to me here he mentioned the books which he had been reading. All of them were religious books. So far as I know, Doctor had scrupulously followed truth both in his business and his legal practice. I know that he had great hatred of falsehood and hypocrisy. His ahimsa was visible on his face and could be read in his eyes, and it was becoming deeper day by day. Of course the atman in man never dies, but Doctor has become, through his virtues, immortal in a special sense. His close connection with the Ashram was a great help in its religious aspirations. Let us learn something, each one to the best of his or her ability, from the life of this holy soul.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati : M.M.U./II

307. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

August 2/7, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your mail today. If Narmada is saved, we shall think that we have rescued a cow from the slaughter-house. Help Liladhar\(^1\) in every way you can. If you show him love, he may recover his balance of mind. Never let him feel that he lives outside the Ashram. And still he should be free and so also we. He must assume at least some responsibility for the girls. That is for his own good. Read my letter\(^2\) to him. Do what you think proper about Jaisukhlal’s daughters. If the elder one does not stay there willingly, it would be difficult to watch her all the time. You must have read Indu’s letter. Read my reply\(^3\) to him. What is the doctor’s opinion about Mani? If Kusum’s lungs have become all right, take care and see that she does not weaken them again by over-exertion. She at least should find this weather good for her health. On two conditions, however—that she does not exert herself too much and that she consumes enough milk and ghee. As far as possible, help everybody who has come from the Vidyapith. I,

---

1 A shopkeeper of Vadaj. His family stayed for some time in the Ashram when his wife was ill.
2 This is not available.
3 Jaisukhlal Gandhi
4 This is not available.
too, had heard about Devdas, and also about Dr. Mehta. There is every possibility that the latter’s illness may prove fatal this time. I don’t know what kind of a will he has made. You must have judged from his letters that Chhaganlal and Lilavati have caused him much grief. What are Ratubhai’s circumstances at present? You are likely to know whether his work leaves him any time. It would be excellent if he goes there as soon as he can and see that Chhaganlal and Lilavati play no mischief. I am sure Ratilal also would like to go. If he wishes to go, I think it will be useless to try to dissuade him. However, you will be a better judge of that. Where is Nanalal at present? I am not at all surprised by what I read about Harilal. I am afraid his whole life will pass thus. Read my letter1 to Ramji. It is our duty to bear with him in as many things as we can. That will be our atonement for our treatment of the Antyajas. We are not likely to get better men from among them than he or Dudabhai.

August 4, 1932

If you show to the Municipal Engineer, Mr. Malik, the spot on the prayer-ground which was threatened by the flood, he will help you. I think you know him. He used to visit the Ashram formerly. If you ask Bhai Mavalankar, he will request Shri Malik to come and see you. The danger from floods was known from the beginning. That is why the weaving shed and “Hridaykunj” were built as farther back as possible. Probably this work cannot be done during the rainy season, but it would be best to follow an engineer’s advice. Such things happen in Bengal every year. The rivers there are notorious for their power of causing erosions.

August 7, 1932

I got without delay your wire and letter about Doctor. I had been regularly getting cables from Rangoon. On the day on which I got your wire, I wrote to you2 and to Ratilal3 and Champa. I hope you got the letters immediately. You must have got my wire4, too. The fact that there has been no cable from Rangoon after the one giving the news of Doctor’s death makes me think. Whether or not any cable is received, I think it would be best for Ratilal and Champa not to go. They should trust to their fate. I gave similar advice about Maganlal

---

1 This is not available.
2 Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 4-8-1932.
3 Vide “Letter to Chhaganlal P. Mehta”, 4-8-1932.
4 Vide “Telegram to Narandas Gandhi”, 5-8-1932.
I have made a little change in my diet since eight days ago. Eating rotlis twice seemed to be causing slight constipation. Hence, for one meal I eat four bananas. In the evening, I don’t eat bananas, but eat some vegetables as I did previously. Just now the vegetable is generally guvar or patkalu. I mix the vegetable with milk and eat it. There is also a mosambi or an orange. I eat one in the morning too. This has relieved constipation to some extent. I am still watching. In the experiment which I am making now, most probably milk will remain one of the items. This time the weight came to 105 pounds. My health must be described as good in all respects.

There are 37 letters in all. Nine of them are bound with a string.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati : M.M.U/I. Also C.W. 8242. Courtesy : Narandas Gandhi

308. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 7, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I have two postcards and one letter to acknowledge. Vallabhbhai makes the choice of the best envelopes from his ever increasing stock. No wonder you appreciate his art. It is an art which turns waste into wealth. I am delighted that Rajendra Babu is with you. If I fail to write to him, give my love to him in which Vallabhbhai and Mahadev join. I doubt not that wherever possible, you are speaking in Hindi.

You asked me the other day about a further selection of books when and if you get the leisure. Babu Sivaprasad has a very fine collection of books. He and Rajendra Babu can help you to make the selection. As you like the Ramayana, you are likely, too, to appreciate the Mahabharata. It is a big task but it is worth undertaking. And then there are the Vedas and the Upanishads. You can have selected readings from the former and read all the principal Upanishads. This course will certainly give you an insight into the Hindu thought that would be valuable. Your intuitive love of

---

1 A kind of beans
2 Pumpkin
3 “For reading when and if I should go to jail.” —Mirabehn
Hinduism will then have the backing of an informed mind. And it may be that you might have to correct some of the notions you have formed. I would balance this reading by a reading of the Koran and Amir Ali’s Spirit of Islam. Pickthall’s translation of the Koran is perhaps the best. I cannot tell. But if not that, then Dr. Mohamed Ali’s translation. I have now given you fully a year’s course of good, solid reading.

I say nothing about Devdas as I am writing to him separately. Tea and coffee, if they are strong, are poison for a convalescing patient. Tea made after the Chinese fashion is likely to be harmless. You know how it is made, do you not?

The note you refer to from S. Sahai and Rajen Babu I do not find at all. It must have been left there. For the time being at any rate my post both outgoing and ingoing is again in order.

For the past week I have replaced chapatis with bananas of which I take 4 daily. This I did to avoid constipation which seemed to be coming. I feel better. The result of course is that there is little salt in the food now. I take none with oranges which I am taking. I retain a vegetable on which I pour the evening milk.

Love from us all.

BAPU

From the original : C.W. 6235. Courtesy : Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9701

309. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

August 7, 1932

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I got your letter. I have preserved your letter about the cup.¹ At present all three of us are trying our best to spin fine yarn. Mahadev has reached nearly 80 counts, while Sardar and I are between 30 and 40. When we have reached our target, we will use the cup and I will then let you know the result.

The following points should be considered in regard to dress-making for yajna. (1) What Kind of clothes can be stitched in the shortest time. (2) What kind of clothes will be sold most. (3) What kind of clothes women can stitch more easily and what kind of clothes men can stitch more easily. (4) Whether this scheme includes embroidery and knitting. (5) Whether to cater to the needs of the rich also or only of the poor. (6) Scope of machine-sewing and of hand-sewing, etc., etc. The subject is an interesting one and is also of practical benefit. It requires very careful thinking. If at present, however, you concentrate on spinning, pay less attention to sewing. Think over it when you have no other work and make experiments yourself. Mithubehn and Perinbehn have done very good work in this field. But I know that your plan is much wider than theirs. If it can be implemented fully and if people respond to it, no cloth can compete with khadi. But at present your work is improvement of spinning. Give as much time to sewing as you can spare for it. Concentration on one work helps one to attain moksha, but to attempt many things at a time is self-indulgence.

As regards your relations with Motibehn, you should first examine your own mind. Do you still wish to enjoy pleasures of the flesh? If you have firmly resolved in your mind that you do not wish to do so, you should inform Motibehn and other friends about your resolution. That will certainly shock Motibehn, but your firmness will have an electric effect on her. Firmness means that you will remain steadfast in your resolution even if Motibehn loses her reason or dies. You should also be convinced that the good of you both lies in such firmness on your part. If, however, you have not reached this degree of firmness, give up arguing with Motibehn and silently live with her as other husbands live with their wives and exercise what self-control you can while doing so. If you do that, nobody will have a right to criticize you. Everybody can advance only within the limit of his capacity. In any case you will deserve criticism if you remain undecided and deceive yourself, your friends and the world. If you save yourself from such a position, everything will be well in the end. Do not think too much and get confused. You have spent a good many years in thinking. Come to a definite decision without further hesitation, and you will then enjoy complete peace of mind.

This is the meaning of the Gita verse: “The attitude, in this matter, springing, as it does, from fixed resolve is but one, O Kurunandana.”

Think over it and the verses which immediately follow. You will understand this letter more clearly then.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3756

1 Bhagavad Gita, II. 41.
310. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

August 7, 1932

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your letter. My letter to you went to the Camp\(^1\). What is the trouble in your leg? Ramdas and Hargovind\(^2\) told me about it when they met me this time.\(^3\) See that you do not let your health suffer outside jail.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5505

311. LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH

August 7, 1932

CHI. VANAMALA,

I got your letter. You should learn to do with your right hand everything which you do with your left.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5779. Also C.W. 3002. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

312. LETTER TO NIRMALA H. DESAI

August 7, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

Your elder brother\(^4\) wishes that, instead of sending a \([rakhi]\)\(^5\) for him on the Balev Day, you should send a \([janoi]\)\. Ask Panditji and give him as much fine yarn spun by you or Anandi, whichever is finer—preferably spun on \(takli\)—as he requires, and get a \([janoi]\) made by him. If you then give it to Narandas, he will send it.

\(^1\) Yeravda Central Prison Camp where satyagrahis used to be lodged after they were sentenced
\(^2\) Hargovind Pandya
\(^3\) On August 5, 1932 (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, 270)
\(^4\) Mahadev Desai
\(^5\) The source is illegible here, but Gandhiji presumably refers to the thread traditionally tied by a sister on her brother’s wrist on the Balev Day, i.e., Shravan Sud 15.

Sacred thread
You must have received your elder brother’s letter. Afterwards, he has sent a letter for your mother too. Send both the letters to her. I hope you have not lost courage because Mother is being tested. Is it not our good fortune that we get an opportunity to suffer what other people suffer?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : S.N. 9476

313. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

August 7, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

The story relating to the significance of the ekadashi is interesting. But we observe the ekadashi in a different manner.

For us, the ekadashi should be a voluntary vow observed both physically and mentally, and its aim should be self-purification. When a person who is ill does not eat, his aim is to cure his illness and not to observe a fast. Similarly, a poor man also who does not eat because he has no food does not observe a fast thereby.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati : M.M.U./II

314. LETTER TO NARMADABEHN RANA

August 7, 1932

CHI. NARMADA,

I got your letter. Personally, I do wish that you could stay in the Ashram and make great progress. Work hard and improve your handwriting, etc. Your resolution is noble. God will certainly help you in it.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Write to me from time to time.

From Gujarati: C.W. 2758. Courtesy: Ramanarayan N. Pathak
315. LETTER TO DUDHIBEHN V. DESAI

August 7, 1932

CHI. DUDHIBEHN,

I certainly compliment you on your good gesture if you have given the yarn willingly. I can understand that you would like to go to Jetpur if Valji has to stay there for some time to come. The position will be clearer after he is released. See that Manu improves his handwriting.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : C.W. 7434. Courtesy : Valji G. Desai

316. LETTER TO DAHYABHAI PATEL

August 7, 1932

CHI. DAHYABHAI,

One of the lenses in Mahadev’s glasses is broken and as a result he is very much inconvenienced. A lens of that type is not available here. The glasses were got made in June-July last year by Dr. Bhaskar in the Whiton Company. The firm has got Mahadev’s number. If it does not have it, you will get it from Dr. Hiralal Patel who had examined Mahadev’s eyes and determined the number. If you can contact Dr. Bhaskar, take his help and ask the Company to find the number and make a new pair and then send it as soon as you can. Probably the Company will also have the details of the size of the lenses and of the frame. But in case it does not have them, they are given on the accompanying sheet. If Bhaskar is not in Bombay, see Dr. Hiralal. He also will help to get the glasses made. Mahadev wrote a registered letter to Bhaskar last week, but he does not seem to have received it. I hope Karamchand’s wife is completely all right now.

I have not heard from Manibehn recently. Mahadev’s work has come to a standstill without the glasses. Please, therefore, send them soon.

I hope the little boy is quite well. All three of us are well.

Blessings from

BAPU

1 Dr. B. Patel
2 An ophthalmologist of Bombay
[PS.]
Farther has written today a letter to Dr. Ansari at your address. Go and hand it over to him. He is leaving Bombay on the 11th. He will, therefore, be there on the 9th and the 10th.
He will probably stay with Usman Sobhani. If he is not there, you will know from Usman’s place where he is staying. Find out and go and hand over the letter to him.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—4: Manibehn Patelne, pp. 147-8

317. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI
August 7, 1932
Cling like a friend to His name. It will be helpful even when everything else fails.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 351

318. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH
August 7, 1932
CHI. SHARDA,
It was good that you two girls were not frightened of Harilal and gave him bold replies.
Even though Chimanlal has come, if you like to stay in the hostel and if your health remains good, why should you not continue to stay there?

BAPU
From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9913. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

1 A mill-owner of Bombay
319. A LETTER

August 7, 1932

It was good that you went to see . . .'s corpse. All of us will arrive at that condition sooner or later, and we should wish, therefore, that when our time comes we may leave this abode cheerfully. As long as we have it, we should keep it clean, pure and healthy, but should let it fall when its time comes. We have been given it for temporary use. He who has given it may take it back whenever He wishes. And we should use it only for service of other people and not for enjoying pleasures.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 352

320. A LETTER

August 7, 1932

I cannot share your sorrow. Your wife has been released from suffering. She has died at such a time and in such a manner that we should envy her death. Why do you feel that you are left an orphan? Only a person who is without God’s protection may regard himself as an orphan. But God protects everybody. Hence it is only because of our utter ignorance that we regard ourselves as orphans. The armour which protected you was neither Mani nor your wife. Our true armour is not our relations, but our faith in God. The capacity of the human body to endure is much less than that of even a glass bangle. The latter will remain intact for hundreds of years if it is carefully preserved. The human body, on the other hand, does not endure beyond a certain limit however carefully it is looked after, and even within that limit it may perish at any moment. Why should we put our trust in such a brittle thing? You should absorb yourself completely in the Ashram work and think about nothing else. You need not at all worry about Mangala, who is now a girl of six years. You yourself should look after her and you should also teach Shanti and Jekor to look after themselves. Probably you do not know that from her

1 The name is omitted in the source.
2 Presumably to Shankarbhai Patel, a teacher at the Ashram childhood Rukhibehn was brought up by Maganlal, though Santok was living. There was little hope that she would live. She could hardly even breathe. Maganlal used to bathe this girl, dress her hair, make her sit down beside him at mealtime and feed her, and he also looked after his other children. And still he did more work by way of service than anybody else. The finest kitchen-garden was nurtured by him. In Phoenix he was the first to grow a rose. When he struck with his spade to dig some hard part of the compound, one felt as if there was a tremor in the ground. You can do all that Maganlal could. In all this, I have made no mention of his great artistic ability and his learning. He had confidence in himself and faith in his work. God had blessed him with a strong body. It broke down at last only because of the heavy burden of the Ashram work and his stoic habits. I believe, however, that in his short life Maganlal did as much work as another man might do in a hundred or several hundred years. I have cited his example to you because you knew him and it was his love which had drawn you to the Ashram. Let his memory, if nothing else, help you to overcome your present helplessness and gloom. I don’t believe even one person in a hundred thousand in the country has the means which you command.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 352-3

321. A LETTER

August 7, 1932

To us, all useful work is good and worth doing. Thus tanning, carpentry, cleaning lavatories, farm work, weaving, cooking, grazing cattle and all similar types of work are of equal value. If I could persuade the people, I would have all kinds of work rewarded equally, the work of the educated and of the uneducated, the clerk’s work and the scavenger’s. Probably you know that, in order to examine the problem from this point of view, the account of work in the Ashram is being kept only in terms of hours. If, therefore, you are not getting sufficient yarn for weaving just now, please do not believe that you are doing work of less importance than farming or similar other work.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 353

1 Rukminidevi Bazaj
322. A LETTER

August 7, 1932

What I expect from the Gandhi family is that all members should devote themselves exclusively to service work, observe the utmost self-control and have no desire for wealth. They should not marry and those who are married should observe brahmacharya. They should live on whatever they get from service work. The field of service is so vast that it can give opportunities to countless men and women. Doesn’t this include everything?

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 354

323. LETTER TO SAROJINI NAIDU

August 8, 1932

DEAR BULBUL,

Here is a letter from Dr. Ansari which you would like to read. It is meant as much for you as for us.

You got my message about your loving gifts! This is not to invite a repetition. We are spoilt children of nature and have everything we need in the way of creature comforts.

It is naughty of Padmaja\(^1\) to neglect me for so long. I hope she is better. Do you hear from your bearded son? If you write to him, please give him my love.

Have the ladies there\(^2\) told you that Sardar is seriously studying Sanskrit? He has made much progress during the four weeks he has been at it. His application would shame a youthful student.

Love from us all.

Yours,

LITTLE MAN

From a photostat: G.N. 5124

---

\(^1\) Addressee’s daughter

\(^2\) In the Arthur Road Prison, Bombay, where the addressee was imprisoned along with Mirabehn and Kamala Chattopadhyaya
324. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKAR PARIKH

August 8, 1932

BHAISHRI PRABHASHANKAR1.

I got your letter. It is natural that we should feel grieved at the death of Doctor. For himself, it was a release from suffering. I have expressed my opinion and told Ratilal and Champa that it is not necessary for them to go to Rangoon. In any case I will write to Rangoon. I do not know whether there is a will. I think that safety and good sense lie in trusting Chhaganlal. All the same, you may take the advice of Nanalal or anybody else in whose judgment you have confidence. My views will probably seem impractical to you, but to me they appear most practical.

I believe that the interests of Champa and Ratilal are safe.

I hope Mother has recovered. My respectful greetings to her.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8765

325. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN GANDHI

August 8, 1932

CHI. JAMNA.

I got your letter. It is the experience of most doctors that sweet curds will harm nobody. Sweet curds mean curds which have no taste of sourness at all. Everybody can digest such curds. If there is the slightest taste of sourness, add some soda bicarb. This will cause effervescence and remove the acidity. I do this every day. Fruits also will do no harm if they are sweet. Mosambis are always sweet, and so are the small variety of grapes. Eat all these things in small quantities. If they do not agree, you may stop them. And you must also take sun-baths and do light pranayama. I am glad that Janakibai has started learning Gujarati.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 857. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Ratilal Mehta’s father-in-law
326. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

August 8, 1932

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

It is surprising that you received no letter of mine although I wrote many. The last one I deliberately wrote in Hindi. I shall write at length if you receive this. We are all quite comfortable. My weight is 105 lb. and I am taking milk. There is no cause for anxiety as regards my arm. Blessings to Sarup, Krishna and Kanta. Your letters do reach me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi : G.N. 3421

327. LETTER TO AKBAR HYDARI

August 9, 1932

DEAR SIR AKBAR,

I am studying Urdu. Just now I am reading Shibli’s Life of the Prophet. But I would like to see the textbooks and other literature issued by the Osmania University. Could you please have a selection sent to me?

I often think of our meetings on board.

Please remember me to Lady Hydari and the other members of the family.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, Home Department, Special Branch, File No. 800 (40) (3), Pt. III, p. 13

1 Presumably of June 2, 1932; vide “Letter to Prabhavati”, 2-6-1932.

2 Dewan of Hyderabad
328. LETTER TO MADHAVDAS AND KRISHNA KAPADIA
August 9, 1932

CHI. MADHAVDAS AND KRISHNA,

I got the letters of you both. I am glad that you have given me detailed information. It is in adversity that we are really tested. But we ought not to lose heart at such a time. Welcome poverty. Write to me from time to time, though I may not be able to help you in any way. The knowledge that you two have not lost heart and can find happiness in adversity will reassure me. You must have received letters from Devdas. I saw Ramdas. He is in fairly good health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII

329. LETTER TO S. D. SATAVLEKAR
August 9, 1932

BHAI SATAVLEKARJI,

Many people here on finding Sardar learning Sanskrit have expressed the desire to do the same. Kindly arrange to send another set of the Sanskrit readers as they have different quarters. I do not know how far your institution can afford to send them free. If you consider it proper I shall see to the payment.

Ishopanishad and other books have been received. I was awaiting your second letter but I got a chance to write this. I am making a careful study of Ishopanishad, I have even memorized it. I shall go through the other works too. These days I am reading the Veda number of the Ganga. I am sending you a page cut out from the article by Sahityacharya Mahendra Mishra which has appeared in it. Please note the portion I have underlined in red pencil and throw some light upon it. The Veda number contains some more similar instances but I do not wish to bother you over-much.

Yours,
MÓHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: C.W. 4764. Courtesy: S.D. Satavlekar

1 In which, quoting from the Vedas, the author had tried to establish the prevalence of cow-sacrifice and beef-eating in the Vedic period. Satavlekar, in his reply dated October 20, 1932, refuted the assertion (S.N. 18590).
330. LETTER TO BENARSILAL BAZAJ

August 9, 1932

CHI. BENARSI,

I have your letter. There was some confusion about my correspondence but it has been set right now. Do you get any news from Father\(^1\)? How is he? It would have been good if Rukmini had gone away with Madhav [for a change]. She has lost much weight. Health is wealth and the basic requisite for every kind of happiness. You are keeping well, I hope. How is business? You must be meeting Devdas.

Blessings from

BAPU

SYT. BENARSILAL
K 23/96 PANCHAGANGA
BENARES CITY

From Hindi : C.W. 9449. Courtesy : Benarsilal Bazaj

331. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

August 10, 1932

DEAR COL. DOYLE,

Referring to my letter of the 22nd and 24th ultimo and your kind reply, I have not since heard from you and Kaka Kalelkar who you said was to be permitted to write to me about his health. I would appreciate early attention to this matter.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 9

\(^1\) Rameshwarlal Bazaj
332. LETTER TO MANSANKAR J. TRIVEDI

August 10, 1932

CHI. MANU,

I got your letter after a long delay.

Now that you are studying, you should cease thinking about other things and complete the course. If after thinking carefully about the cruelty practised in the different fields of your study, you can prove that it is not necessary to perform such experiments on animals, you may do so when you are qualified for such an attempt. Some doctors themselves have opposed this practice.

I see that you are making good use of your time. Try to understand and follow the truth in the saying: “Study without reflection is useless.” We do not increase our knowledge merely by reading books; we can increase it only by reflecting over what we read and by digesting it.

All three of us are well. Sardar is studying Sanskrit. Shouldn’t his example be a great source of inspiration to a young man?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1006

333. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

August 11, 1932

I understand that you have not yet resolved to give up cinnamon and cloves. I intend to write to Nimu. If she has already taken a vow, I will not press her to give it up. I will only explain what her dharma is. I think that one should not press anybody to give up a vow like this. The effect of such persuasion on a person is to tempt him to give up his firmness and in consequence his mind becomes weak. I do not regret the strictness which I imposed on the occasions which you

---

1 The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, pp. 279-80, has: “Today’s letters were all from prisoners. One of these was from Ramdas who complained that Bapu who was very strict at a time in doing and imposing penance had now become too lenient and people took an undue advantage of this leniency. He seems to have taken a vow not to take cinnamon and cloves... with the result that his wife Nirmala has given up milk and ghee.”
mention. It was justified at that time. Now I feel the slightest degree of strictness to be as heavy as the weight of the Himalayas. Formerly, I had to fast in order to make people do what I can now persuade them to do with a mere rebuke; and other people, too, had to act more or less similarly. If I continue to act as I used to do, I would be a cruel man. Does this mean that others also have advanced, as I have done? We have no reason to believe this. But since I can now influence people close to me, nothing more is necessary. In other words, you need not yourself be strict with Nimu or yourself, for I am here to keep a strict watch. After my death, all of you will have to be vigilant. It is because of this state of affairs that we often find laxity creeping in when I am away. That is so all over the world. We should, therefore, learn to be fully vigilant in our own lives. At present we may be growing as a creeper does with the support of a tree. But this is a form of dependence. We should shake it off and learn to stand on our own feet. The cause of the electric effect on Nimu is what I explained above. Conditions were not the same at the time of my life which you remember, because the atmosphere then was not responsive. It had not been purified sufficiently to be so. If I were to write anything harsh to Nimu, she would feel miserable. Do you now understand the reason for my liberal attitude? There was the same love behind the strictness of the past as there is behind the liberal attitude of the present. What you say, however, is quite correct. It would certainly be bad if anybody misunderstood my liberal attitude and became lax. The reason for entertaining such fear is different. It is that I have become less exacting to myself. My former strictness has gone. The body does not obey me. I naturally feel reluctant to ask others to do what I myself cannot. I, therefore, often told the inmates of the Ashram that I was no longer fit to be in charge of it. The gate-keeper who guards the Ashram must be an ever vigilant and strong man. Formerly, I used to work as much as anybody else did, and so the others, too, had to keep pace with me. But now they do not have the example of my work. They have to follow my preaching. It is not surprising, therefore, that you see laxity in the atmosphere. I hope you have understood all this fully.

I like your vigilance. In this case, however, you should not be strict with Nimu. My ideas about the relations between husband and wife have changed of course. I would not like any of you to behave towards his wife as I did towards Ba. She has lost nothing through my strictness, of course, for I never regarded her as my property. I always had love and respect for her. I only wished to see her grow spiritually. However, she could not be angry with me, whereas I could with her. I did not give her the same freedom of action which I enjoyed and she did not have the capacity to exercise it either. Hindu women never have such capacity. That is a defect of Hindu society. I, therefore, wish that you should treat Nimu as having the same freedom which you have. I once wrote¹ to her and asked her jestingly not to regard herself as dependent and harass you for every little thing. She replied saying that she was dependent and that you knew that it was so. The language is mine, but this is the meaning of what she said. This sort of dependence ought to be removed. If she wants a servant, why should she ask you? She can ask Narandas to provide one and may even quarrel with him on that issue. This is but a trivial example. She should, however, be free in matters which concern herself. If you wish to enjoy immoral pleasure with another woman, you will not be afraid of Nimu. That you may be held back by your love for Nimu is another matter. Similarly, Nimu should be free to enjoy immoral pleasure with another man without any fear. Mutual love may save a couple from sin, but there should be no fear of each other. I began to teach this [equality and freedom] only in the Ashram. My behaviour towards Ba at Sabarmati progressively became in line with this attitude, and the result was that she changed. Her old fear of me has disappeared mostly, if not completely. Even if I feel angry with her, I turn the anger on myself. The cause of anger is my attachment to her. This is an important change which has taken place in me and it has had beautiful results. The results will be more beautiful only if my love becomes purer still. Numberless women trust me spontaneously. I am sure that the reason of that is my love and respect for them. Invisibly they produce an effect all the time.

[From Gujarati]

_Mahadevbhaini Diary_, Vol. I, pp. 355-7

¹ Vide “Letter to Nirmalabehn Gandhi”, 9-7-1932.
334. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

[Before August 12, 1932]

MY DEAR AMTUL,

I am glad you have arrived at the Ashram and taken your niece there. I hope the climate will agree with her. You ought to keep well now. The weather must be quite cool.

I was very glad to read your Urdu letter. Keep writing like this. It is good that you intend to learn Hindi. I am sure you will not find it difficult. Do you find any difficulty in reading my handwriting?

I hope you can read my Urdu hand. I know it is bad. Let your niece write, if she can. How old is she?

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 252

335. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

August 12, 1932

MY DEAR AMTUL,

I have your letter. There was nothing to hide from anyone in your letter. I would like all girls and women to shed this false shame about the monthly sickness. There may be a sense of shame on the part of those who want to indulge their animal passions and treat the monthly business in terms of sexuality. But those who want to lead a life of continence should discuss this sickness as any other sickness. Now for the remedy. In the first place you should take perfect rest as soon as there is any symptom of the sickness coming and rest should be continued whilst there is the slightest discharge. During the free days of the month regular sitz-baths should be taken as also hip-baths in order to avoid undue discharge or a discharge beyond three days in pains. There should [be] no pains during the sickness. If there the treatment does not answer, you should allow the womb to be examined by a doctor. On this matter you should consult Mrs. Lazarus and be guided by her. She is likely to be able to tell you what to do.

1 In the book Letters to Amtussalaam this letter is placed before that of August 12; vide the following item.

2 Kudsia, aged nine, lived with the addressee since her mother’s death.

3 This paragraph is in Urdu.
You should take Premabehn into your confidence. She does not know much about this. But you two can put your heads together and read up the literature on the subject. If you don’t know what sitz-baths are and if Prema also does not, you should read up Kuhne’s book. If you master the secret of this illness, you can impart it to the other girls. It is the most fruitful source of the diseases of women. A false sense of shame prevents girls from understanding the sickness and regulating it in the proper manner. It is sinful to hide this thing and then suffer untold miseries. Herewith letter¹ for Dr. Sharma.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Your Urdu letter is good. I will reply to it in another letter. Today the time is up.²

From a photostat: G.N. 253

336. LETTER TO DR. HIRALAL SHARMA

August 12, 1932

DEAR DR. SHARMA,

I was glad to receive your letter. I would strongly dissuade you from going to Europe or America for finishing your study of natural healing. You have to do it here by perfecting your observations here and making original researches. Those who have done anything in this line in the West learnt from none but their own experiments. It is a vast mistake to suppose that by going to the West you can learn much of this art. It is yet in its infancy there too. But the first thing for you to do is to be your own healer. If you have a broken body, you will not be listened to by people. Surely your disease³ will yield to sun-baths and regimen.

For my elbow I would not trouble you. Thanks all the same for offering your help.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat : G.N. 3150. Also Bapuki Chhayamen mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, pp. 10-1

¹ Vide the following item.
² The postscript is in Urdu.
³ Tuberculosis
337. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

August 12, 1932

BHAI KHAMBHATTA,

I deliberately postponed writing to you. I wished to write only after I had used the oil sent by you. I have now started using it. It is ten days now, but there is no change. Mahadev massages the arm with it daily. There is nothing wrong with the arm in other respects, and so there is no cause for worry.

Blessings to you both from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6601. Also C.W. 4387. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

338. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

August 12, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

The following books are required for parachure Shastri. Send those from among them which you have there. I will get the others from elsewhere. See if you can send them soon. Give them to Manibehn or to Nandubehn. Either will send them to Dahyabhai. Parachure Shastri was in the Ashram once. He is a man of great learning. He is in this jail just now. He has been suffering from leprosy. That is why I am in a hurry to send the books to him. He spins daily. I am not permitted to see him, but can write to him. His wife, too, is ill and confined to bed. She is outside. The books are: (1) Imitation of Christ, (2) Works of Swami Vivekananda (whichever volumes we have), (3) Works of Sister Nivedita (whichever volumes we have), (4) Essays of Tolstoy, (5) Vyakarana Mahabhashya, (6) Yajurveda Bhashya, (7) Dispensations of Keshab Chandra Sen.

Since Parachure Shastri has lived in the Ashram, he informs me that the last three are available there. He seems to have read them while he was there.

I got your letter. You seem to believe that I could write an interesting letter whenever I wished to. But you see now that that is

1 Wife of Dr. Balawantrai Kanuga of Ahmedabad not true. I cannot even judge which letter is interesting and which is dull. I am telling the truth. Moreover, who can say that the letter which you think interesting is in fact so? If there is an independent yardstick for judging whether or not a thing is interesting, God seems to have kept it under lock and key. On this earth, therefore, everyone has his or her own yardstick for this purpose. If I tried to come up to your standard, wouldn’t I be in a miserable plight? All my time would be taken up in trying to succeed in the effort. Should I start writing a letter all over again, or a third time, for fear that what I had written might be uninteresting? And if I must write interesting letters to you, I must write similar letters to others. And the result, bankruptcy!!!
Instead of that, I follow a simple rule. Without considering whether the letter will be interesting or not, I should write what I think in such language as I can command. But you are foolish, and proud too.
How can you ever appreciate this simple reasoning? And now I see that you claim to be omniscient. Any wise thing I try to explain to you, you seem to know it. But pause a little. One who believes in an idea or knows it to be true but cannot act on it does not in fact know it, or knows it in a sense and yet does not know it. Hence, as long as you go on writing foolish things, get angry and feel proud, you will remain foolish in my eyes. This does not mean that you should not let your pride, anger and foolishness be seen in your letters. As long as you have them in you, you must express them. The value of your letters lies in letting yourself be seen as you are. I don’t mind your remaining foolish. But you must overcome your anger and be a little less proud. It is impossible to get rid of pride altogether.

You cite the instance of Narada. But do you know the real significance of his statement? By all means worship a personal form in the manner in which he did. Such worship is proper. His Krishna is as historical as the God in Vaikuntha. Narada’s God dwelt in the temple of his imagination. That Narada is alive today, and so is his Krishna, for both live for ever in our imagination. According to me, imagination is superior to historical fact. This is the only possible meaning of Tulsidas’s statement that the name Rama is more potent than the person Rama.

Is it not because you are caught in the whirlpool of worship of the individual that you worry me again and again? You have not been

1 “Devotion means profound love for God.”—Narada Bhaktisutra
2 Abode of Vishnu
able to free me from worries regarding the Ashram. Narandas has succeeded in doing So. I can cite instances of other persons too. They also worship persons, who doesn’t? But, ultimately, they go beyond the person and learn to worship his virtues, that is, his creations. We forgot this priceless truth and, in our ignorance, we taught women to burn themselves on the pyre of their husbands. That is worship of the person taken to its extreme!! The real duty of a loyal wife is to immortalize in herself her husband’s life-work. If we purify the relationship of husband and wife of sex and banish from it the distinction of gender, this ideal will apply to every woman in the world, whatever her state may be. In other words, love for the husband merges in love of God. But I leave this subject now.

Why are you upset by the news that Dhiru is arriving? Have confidence that you will be able to control him too; have that much faith in yourself. Let the immortal statement, “Love conquers all”, sink into your heart. We should be pleased whoever may arrive. Our only wish is to serve everyone as best as we can. Why don’t you have faith that, if the other children have become wellbehaved, under their influence Dhiru also will become like them? It is also possible that Dhiru has become a wise boy now. Personally, I have always hoped much from him.

You should dedicate your whole life to the service of the girls. If they do not talk frankly about themselves to anyone, they are bound to fall ill. Read my letter to Anandi. If she lets you have that letter, all the other girls who have grown up should be asked to read it.

I have never observed from my own experience that bananas give rise to gas. I have consumed more bananas than anybody else is likely to have done. For many years they were my chief food. I neither took milk nor ate bread. My diet consisted of bananas, olive oil, ground-nut and lemon. However, I never suffered from gas. After many years, I have started eating them again. I observe no ill effects. You must, of course, observe one rule in eating them. Either bananas should be cooked or they should be completely ripe. An unripe banana is pure starch, and I saw in Gopal Rao’s experiment that starch should not be eaten uncooked. Hence, one should not eat bananas which have not become soft or ripe. They will become ripe if kept aside for two or three days. If you want to eat bananas before they have become ripe, you should either roast them or boil them in water.

The book which you read may have been published in 1924, but the theory which it mentions has become outdated.
I had opponents in the past and have them even today. But I have never felt angry with them. I have not wished them ill even in my dreams. The result has been that many opponents have become friends. No one’s opposition has had any effect on me. On three occasions they sought to take my very life, but I am still alive. This does not mean that no opponent would ever succeed against me in his plan. Whether he succeeds or does not is no concern of mine. My dharma lies in wishing well even to them, and serving them whenever an opportunity offers itself. I have tried to live up to this principle to the best of my ability. I think this thing is part of my nature.

I get physically tired by the worship of vast crowds. It has never made me happy, nor have I ever felt that I was worthy of it. On the contrary, I have always been conscious of my unworthiness. I do not remember to have ever hungered for honour. I always want work. I have tried my best to make people who honour me do work, and, when they refused to work, I have run away from their honour. I will feel myself blessed only when I reach my goal. But, as the saying goes, will that day ever dawn?

It is not necessary to cultivate pride or contempt in order that one may be able to stand against the world. Jesus stood against the world, Buddha stood against his times and Prahlada also acted in the same way. All of them were humility incarnate. To have such humility, one must have faith in oneself and in God. Those who have opposed the world with pride have ultimately fallen. Sometimes your pride and your anger are only pretended. But even such pretence in an evil thing. It may ultimately become a habit and often gives cause for unnecessary misunderstanding. One should be very careful in one’s conduct so as to guard against such possibilities. I think it impossible for anyone to have the strength to stand alone against the world at a critical hour unless he or she has the utmost humility. And it is such strength which has any value at all. It is tested only at such a time. Many of those whom the world has believed to be brave, it had no opportunity of judging whether they were really so. Now read my letter to Amtulbehn too.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10298. Also C.W. 5752. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak
339. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

August 13, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

In India also, if our leaders live long they would rise very high. I have not read Aristotle’s writings and have read very little even of Plato’s I can, therefore, say nothing about their ideas.

All the virtues mentioned by you are essential for universal service.

Children need good company. Tulsidas has explained the meaning of good company.

I have not read the article in The Times of India.

Anybody who has tasted the sweetness of honey in my company will taste similar sweetness wherever he goes, for he will find even bitter things sweet.

I did not receive the Anantapur report. The same thing seems to have happened regarding the takli. I will inquire.

I do not know who Emerson was. Don’t you know that my reading is more limited than even that of a good matriculate?

Anybody who seeks happiness in his own mind should have the same qualities as the sthitaprajna\(^1\) described in Chapter II [of the Gita]. I have not read L’Allegro\(^2\) and Il Penseroso\(^3\) either.

My ignorance has been tested fairly well. But I do not mind.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7505. Also C.W. 4982. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

---

\(^1\) A man of secure understanding
\(^2\) By John Milton
\(^3\) Ibid
340. LETTER TO NARMADABEHN RANA

August 13, 1932

CHI. NARMADA,

I am glad that you have escaped. Live in peace now and learn everything you wish to. Acquire book-learning and learn some crafts too. understand carefully the meaning of prayer, etc. You should try to rise very high. Write to me from time to time.

BAPU

From Gujarati : C.W. 2759. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N. Pathak

341. LETTER TO LAKSHMI JERAJANI

August 13, 1932

CHI. LAKSHMI (JERAJANI),

I got your letter.

There was some problem about my letter\(^1\), and that is why you got it late by some days.

It was good that you sent me your daily programme. What subjects do you study? I will make one suggestion. I see no time fixed for prayer in your programme. Immediately after rising in the morning and brushing your teeth, you must sit down quietly and pray with complete concentration. And you should do the same when retiring. Prayer is to the soul what food is to the body. The body can live for some days without food. A few days’ fast may even benefit it. There can be no fast in regard to prayer. one who believes in the existence of the soul cannot do without prayer even for one day. Write to me occasionally and give me news about Vithaldas\(^2\).

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati : C.W. 2813. Courtesy : Purushottam D. Saraiya

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Lakshmi Jerajani”, 2-7-1932.

\(^2\) Addressee’s uncle
August 14, 1932

We are taught at school: “Studying without thinking is useless.” This is literally true. Love of reading is good. Those who are prevented by lethargy from reading and studying have certainly dull minds. But those also who merely read and never reflect on what they read remain more or less dull. Some of them lose their eyesight in the bargain. Reading without reflecting is only a kind of mental disease.

Many of us read in that manner. They read but never reflect on what they read, much less put it in practice. We should, therefore, read less, but think over what we read and put it in practice. We may reject what we discover from experience to be unsuitable, and go on with the rest. Persons who follow this method will satisfy their needs with less reading, save much time and become fit for creative and responsible work.

Another benefit which accrues to persons who learn to think is worth nothing. One cannot always get books to read or get time to read them. Persons to whom reading has become a habit are known to have gone crazy when they could not read. If, however, one forms the habit of thinking, the book of thoughts is always available to one, and there will then be no danger of one becoming crazy when not able to read.

I have deliberately used the phrase to “learn to think”. That way lots of people think, carelessly and unprofitably. This is only a form of madness. Some get caught in futile speculation and, overcome with despair, even kill themselves. This is not the kind of thinking I am advising. What I am advising here is only that people should reflect over what they read. Suppose we here or read a bhajan today. We should then reflect over it. We should try to discover its deeper meaning and think what we should accept from it and what we should reject. We should see if there is any error in its idea. If we have not understood its meaning, we should make an effort to understand it. This is called systematic thinking. I have given the simplest illustration. Everybody should apply it to his own case and draw necessary conclusions for himself, and may thus progress. One who follows this method will experience great inner joy and benefit from all that he reads.

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 11/15-8-1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 11/15-8-1932.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

343. A LETTER

August 14, 1932

It won’t do for anyone to say I am only what I am. That is a cry of despair. A seeker of truth will say, ‘I will be what I ought to be.’ My appeal is for you to come out of your shell and see yourself in every face about you. How can you be lonely in the midst of so much life? All our philosophy is vain, if it does not enable us to rejoice in the company of fellow-beings and their service.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 361

344. LETTER TO GULAB

August 14, 1932

CHI. GULAB,

I got your letter. I am glad that you feel happy there. Pay great attention to study. Also do exercise and improve your body.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1720
345. LETTER TO SHAMAL R. RAVAL

August 14, 1932

CHI. SHAMAL,

When you are afraid of anything, you should repeat Ramanama. The fear will then disappear. You should go to sleep repeating it. Does anybody sleep near you? We should have faith that God is near us. If a person has such faith, what need he fear?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3145. Also C.W. 2880. Courtesy: Shamal R. Raval

346. LETTER TO KESHAV

August 14, 1932

CHI. KESHAV,

I got your letter. Improve your handwriting. Study with great attention. If anybody takes away a utensil from your hand for cleaning it, you should request him politely to permit you to clean it. If he does not let you, you should not insist. If there is any article which contains chillies, you should leave it in the plate. At the very beginning you should request them not to serve any such article. You should make do with rotli, buttermilk and salt or such other things which you can get. If you cannot do that, you may eat a little quantity of whatever is offered.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3279

347. LETTER TO PADMA

August 14, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

I got a letter from you after many days. I do not remember having omitted to reply to any of your letters. I wrote a good many letters [to you]. I am glad that your health is improving. Give some description of Khadli. How many trees are there? From where do you get water? How far is it from Almora? Has Sheila grown very big?
How do you spend your time? To test the condition of my arm, I spun for a few days on the Gandiva spinning-wheel. From today I have resumed spinning on the Magan spinning-wheel. My speed does not seem to be more than a hundred rounds per hour. Write to me from time to time.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 6135. Also C.W. 3487. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

348. LETTER TO BHAU PANSE

August 14, 1932

CHI. BHAU,

For your constipation, you should immediately go and consult Dr. Talwalkar. It must be cured. I think that a bhakta with a personal motive is one who asks for the fulfilment of some wish. If I pray to God daily for the success of the khadi programme, I would be a bhakta with a personal motive.

Arnold believes that the verse beginning with agnirjyotih is interpolated. I also believe that it may be so. If we take it in its literal sense I cannot understand its significance. The general purport is clear enough. The first is the path of knowledge and the second is the opposite of that. The reference to the periods of six months is a metaphor. I interpret the verse in this manner for my own satisfaction. The difficulty which you experience when praying is experienced by everybody (in the beginning). But perseverance will help you to overcome both the difficulties. Despite the difficulties, you should keep up the practice of praying. One day you will learn to concentrate. We experience such difficulties because we do not feel the same hunger for prayer as we do for food. In other words, we do not have the same conviction about the existence of the soul as we have about that of the body.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 6734. Also C.W. 4477. Courtesy: Bhau Panse

---

1 Devotee
2 Bhagavad Gita, VIII. 24 and 25
349. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

August 14, 1932

CHI. MANU,

Exercise books are meant for doing lessons. If you use loose sheets of paper for writing letters, they will cost you less. For learning good handwriting you should have a reed-pen. If you carefully practise writing in a copy-book, your handwriting will certainly improve. It was a little better this time.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7435. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

350. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

August 14, 1932

We associate the physical labour which we do in the Ashram with freedom and the other with slavery. In truth, however, there is freedom for us in both. Those who voluntarily invite suffering should not complain against it even in their thoughts. On the Contrary, they should feel happy in that suffering. How do you think could Sudhanshu dance with joy in the pan of boiling oil? Or Prahlada embrace a red-hot pillar of iron? We should not regard these stories as pure inventions, for we see that people can act in this manner even today. The stories about Ridley, Latimer and Mansoor are historical incidents. You can call to mind other similar examples. Everything depends on the mind.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 360

1 Protestant martyrs
2 ibid
3 A Sufi martyr
351. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 14, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

May you live for many years and grow into a fine sevika. May God sustain you in your vow. It is very hard to be non-violent at heart, but it is easy for one who has faith in God.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11100. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

352. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

August 14, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

If the same thing is mentioned in somebody else’s letter, why should you not read it?

It is good that you have put on three pounds. Do not reduce because Shakaribehn\(^1\) has come.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 9914. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

353. A LETTER

August 14, 1932

Do not try now to destroy...’s\(^2\) soul. I feel respect for her obstinacy. How can we interfere with what she regards as dharma? On the contrary, we may even encourage her. It is your duty to support her. You should not get angry with her, just as you would not get angry with another woman for the latter’s manner of life. The secret of inward happiness lies in such attitude of equality.

[From Gujarati]

\(^1\) Addressee’s mother

\(^2\) The name is omitted in the source.
354. LETTER TO A GIRL

August 14, 1932

Instead of asking what you should do when you get angry, you should ask what you should do in order that you may not get angry. For that, we should cultivate a broad-minded attitude towards all and the feeling that we are in all people and they are in us. Just as the drops of water in sea are different and yet the same, so are we in this sea of life. That being so, who should get angry with whom?

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 361

355. A LETTER

August 14, 1932

Caste distinctions are not respected in the Ashram because they are not part of dharma. They have no connection with the Hindu dharma. It is sinful to regard anybody as higher or lower. All of us are equal. We are polluted by sin, never by human beings. One who wishes to serve cannot look upon anybody as higher or lower. The belief in such distinctions is a blot on Hinduism. We should remove it.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 362

356. LETTER TO A GIRL

August 14, 1932

Do not consider anything wrong unless your heart pronounces it as such. Ultimately we have no other yardstick, that is why we try to keep our hearts pure. The wicked man imputes rightness to sin because his heart is impure. However it be, he continues to act sinfully till he is enlightened. No one but yourself can judge what is good for you. I can tell you only this much that we have to tread the path of truth and non-violence and to that end we must observe some rules and regulations.

[From Hindi]
357. A LETTER

August 14, 1932

One’s respective dharma towards one’s self, family, nation and the world cannot be divided into watertight compartments. The harm done to oneself or one’s family cannot bring about the good of the nation. Similarly one cannot benefit the nation by acting against the world at large. Thus the purport is that we must sacrifice ourselves in the interest of the family, the family must do so for the nation and the nation for the world. But the sacrifice has to be pure. Therefore it all starts from self-purification. When the heart is pure, from moment to moment one’s duty becomes apparent effortlessly.

[From Hindi]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 362

358. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

August 11/15, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your mail in due time. I send with this a beautiful letter received from a lady living in an ashram like ours in Italy. All the workers in that Ashram are women. The letter will give you some idea of the devotion and patience with which they work. Explain its contents to all the inmates, particularly to the women. Tell them at the same time about St. Francis. Mahadev once wrote a sketch of his life for Navajivan. Maybe you have read it. I have requested these ladies to write a letter directly to the Ashram. If you get any letter from them, reply to it. If, on reading this letter, you wish to write to them immediately, you may do so without waiting for a letter from them. But please don’t think that you must write. For all I know, they may have written a letter directly to the Ashram.

You seem to have had excessive rains there. It is practically the same here, though to a much lesser degree. The sky is clearing fairly well now.

My yarn was tested today and it was found that with the Gandiva wheel I have been able to go up to 53 counts. Mahadev has gone up to 80 counts, and Vallabhbhai has reached at least 40. I think such results can be achieved easily only on the Gandiva wheel. There is still room for improvements in it to make it suitable for spinning fine yarn. A few such improvements are being made by us here in the jail. Anybody who wishes to spin fine yarn must concentrate all his attention when he is spinning and have a supply of good slivers. The point is that one can spin fine yarn only if one pays careful attention to every detail. I feel more certain every day that, if we try to spin yarn of the best possible quality and the highest possible count, we shall be able to make many discoveries resulting in improvement in the quality of all yarn, and our own work will also become very methodical and neat. If we wish to bring this about, everybody who wishes to spin fine yarn should start using the Gandiva wheel. However, it is for you and the others there to decide about this after a careful discussion. Though my experience with this wheel is sufficiently long, I don’t attach much importance to it. It will count only if it is unhesitatingly supported by others who also have spun on it. I attach value to my experience only as a guide to others. So far no harm seems to have been done to my elbow by spinning on the Gandiva wheel. I will use the hand as long as it gives service. If it fails, I will go back to the Magan spinning-wheel. It will be a very easy thing for you to spin on the Gandiva wheel. I know that you draw the threads with the right hand. It is very easy to do this on the Gandiva wheel. If no bend has been made in the groove in the spindle-bearer, all that is necessary is to change the direction in which the spindle points. If, however, a groove is already there, you should fit another spindle-bearer with the bend pointing in the desired direction. Since the spindle-bearer in my wheel has a bend, it is easier to wind the yarn firmly. I spun the yarn of 53 counts with slivers received from Chhakkaddas. If I don’t write to him this time, please tell him that the slivers sent by him have proved very useful.

1 Miss Turton of the Siena Ashram

I hope Virsinh’s fever has left him, and that Amtul also is better.

I received the slivers sent by Chhakkaddas, the Urdu books and the French dictionary. Shankarbhai’s [arm] has been in plaster long enough. I guess from this that the injury was quite serious. I hope the plaster has been removed now.

It is really a release for Narmada. What is Dhirsinh’s caste? Who will pay the sum of Rs. 650? Or can Narmada’s relations bear the burden? I ask this only for my information. I think Narmada has won her freedom fairly cheaply.

If Ratubhai takes any step regarding the affairs of Doctor, please write to me immediately even if it is not your day for writing to me. If you have learnt now who are there in Rangoon, please let me know that too.

My weight varies from time to time by about one or one and a half pounds either way. I have not tried to discover if there is any particular reason for it. There is no need to try. I have omitted rotli from my diet for the last ten days or so because of a slight tendency to constipation. Since then I have been eating four to six bananas for one of the meals, with milk and one spoonful of almond paste. For the other meal I eat some vegetable, as when I used to eat rotli. I eat it mixed with milk, and generally at both meals I also take mosambis or oranges. This diet has cured constipation. This time the weight was 104 1/2 pounds. I can say, therefore, that the omission of rotli has not resulted in loss of weight. There is no change in the condition of the elbow. I received the samples of yarn spun by Keshu and Abbas. Both were excellent. I will preserve them carefully. On which type of spinning-wheel did Abbas spin this yarn? I have examined the statement of work done by the inmates as yajna though I have not studied it very carefully. If we want trained spinners to spin yarn of not less than 20 counts, we shall have to fix the limit fairly higher than that. Hardly anybody will fall below 20 then. If a person does not wish to fall below the lowest step, he must stand five to ten steps above the lowest. Nothing in this world remains on a fixed level for ever. Nobody, therefore, can maintain himself on the lowest level fixed. And so if one does not advance, one must fall. In the method for learning which I have recommended it is not necessary for people to make a special effort to spare time for one another. In an institution where the necessary atmosphere has been created, the inmates will spontaneously give time to one another for such a purpose. Just as nobody makes an effort to spare time for eating but gives time to it as a matter of course, so also this matter of giving time to one another should be spontaneous. Anybody who has wealth of any kind should willingly share it with his neighbours who are without it. But before such a habit becomes ingrained in us, it may be necessary, as you suggest, for the inmates to reserve some time for the purpose. Hence,

1 Vide “Education”, 10-7-1932.
if anybody has something with him which he can share with others, the time when he can do so must be mentioned in our daily timetable.

You did very well in inquiring of Krishnadas if he needed help. Regarding Nimu, I will write to her. Read the letter which I write. if she has taken a solemn vow, I will not press her to give it up. If one gives up a vow, though it involves no sin, one’s strength for making vows, that is, power of determination, diminishes. If there is a demand for copies of Anasaktiyoga, I see no harm in getting them printed in any press which you think suitable. If you think you cannot meet the demand, you should keep silent just now. I think there will be no harm in getting the discourses printed. If, however, you do that, they should be carefully revised in proof. I don’t revise things carefully before sending them. Besides, my handwriting is bad. It is likely, therefore, that some bad errors will have been made. The discourses which I write now are addressed to the small circle of the Ashram inmates. Appa seems to have done very fine work. You have done right in asking Hariyomal to leave.

August 14, 1932

I did not see any letter from Narayanappa. If, therefore, he inquires for my reply, tell him that I did not receive his letter. Read my letter to Anandi and Amtul regarding the children.

BAPU

Mahadev tells me that I have not told you yet about Vallabhbhai studying Sanskrit. I think I did mention it. These days he is simply engrossed in that study. Whenever he gets any time, he studies Sanskrit or thinks about it. He gives about five hours to it. He has finished the five books of Pandit Satavlekar, and has now added five new verses from the Gita to be studied daily. He has completed Chapter I and is going on with Chapter II. This is how he started the study. There was a letter from Rajaji one day. He had mentioned in it having studied Sanskrit. That inspired Sardar. Five weeks have passed since this happened. Together with Sanskrit he started spinning too. He now spins with perfect concentration. The speed is increasing every day. He has gone up to about 40 counts.

August 15, 1932

Parasram tells me in his letter that you have already dispatched the Anantapur report. If that is true, please let me know the date on which you posted it. Did you send it by registered post? There are 44 letters in all.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8245. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

359. LETTER TO S. SATYAMURTI

August 15, 1932

MY DEAR SATYAMURTI,

What is the matter with you? I don’t trust newspaper reports. I hope there is nothing serious.

We are all three doing well.

Advance, 23-8-1932

360. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

August 15, 1932

CHI. JANAKIBEHN,

What pride! That, because you have been in jail, you do not write to me at all! As if you were the only one who could do so! How is your health? Where is Kamalnayan? He does not seem to have received the letter which I wrote to him.

Where is Balkrishna? I have had no letter from him for some time. Madalasa also seems to have gone to sleep. Write to me about Shivaji and Radhakrishna. I have written to Chhotelal, but have had no reply from him, too. I expect you to tell me about all of them.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. JANAKIBAI
C/O SHEH JAMNALAL BAJAJ
WARDHA
C.P.
[PS.]

All three of us are all right.

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 2899

1 Addressee’s son
361. LETTER TO VIMALABEHN A. PATEL

August 15, 1932

CHI. VIMALA,

I pass your letter this time. It gets 33 1/3 per cent marks. If you want even more than that, tell me. The letters are rather small, but it does not matter. But they are not uniform. There are a few verses by Ramdas1 on the art of good handwriting. Have you read the poem? If you have not, get from the Ashram. I do not have it here. It is a beautiful poem. Do you know that we can make a carbon copy even of letters written with ink? There is a special kind of carbon paper for that. Your message was immediately conveyed to Bhaktibehn. But even then it was late. Dahyabhai had already seen her.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. VIMALABEHN
PATIDAR MANDIR
ANAND

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 3277

362. LETTER TO BHUSKUTE2

August 15, 1932

I believe in both Gods, the one that serves us and the one that we serve. It cannot be that we should render service and should not receive service of any kind. But both Gods are of our imagining. There is only one God who is real. The real God is beyond conception. He neither serves nor receives service. He cannot be described by any epithets, being not an external power but something dwelling in our heart. Since we do not understand the ways of God, we

1 A saint-poet of Maharashtra
2 "There are two Gods. There is the God people generally believe in, a God who has to serve them sometimes in a very refined way; perhaps merely by giving them peace of mind. This God does not exist. But the God whom we all have to serve does exist and is the prime cause of our existence and of all we perceive." Referring to these words of Tolstoy, the addressee had enquired "which of these two Gods Gandhiji believed in, for if a man believed in the second God, prayer had no meaning for him".
have necessarily to think of a power beyond our conception. And the moment we think of it, the God of our imagining is born. The fact is that belief in God is a function not of the intellect but of faith. Reasoning is of little help to us in this matter and once we accept God the ways of the world cease to bother us. Then we have to accept that no creation of God can be purposeless. Beyond this I cannot go.

[From Hindi]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 364

363. LETTER TO FELLOW PRISONERS

August 15, 1932

For those who find it difficult to concentrate their mind on their studies, it is a great help to forget the outside world altogether. If a dying man has his heart in the world, he fails to attain release, he is unhappy himself and is the cause of unhappiness in others; the same is the case with a prisoner in jail who should cease to think of the outside world; for imprisonment means civil death. One who is civilly dead looks mad himself and maddens others about him if he pokes his nose into the outside world. This prescription of mine is no new discovery. [John] Bunyan could not have produced his immortal work¹ and Lokamanya Tilak Gitarahasya if in prison they had continued to worry about the outside world.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 363

364. A LETTER

August 15, 1932

Prayer and brahmacharya are not things of the same kind. Brahmacharya is one of the five cardinal vows, and prayer is a means of being able to observe them. I have said a great deal to explain the necessity of brahmacharya. But when I tried to think how one can observe it, I discovered a powerful means in prayer. For him who has realized the value of prayer and is able to pray with concentration, brahmacharya becomes quite easy to observe.

¹ The Pilgrim’s progress
My idea of a doctor is a person who has acquired a good knowledge of his profession and gives the benefit of that knowledge to the people without charging fees. For his livelihood, he should take up some other work. Or he may live on whatever little the people give him voluntarily, but never regard it as fee for his services. In an ideal state of affairs, I would fix an annual allowance to be paid to such voluntary workers, in addition to which they would be permitted to charge or accept nothing either from the rich or the poor.

Japayajna means repeating the Name, so far as I can judge.

It is difficult to find how much exactly one should eat, but it is easy to eat little, that is to say, resolutely to eat less than one needs, and that is the better way.

One who would keep the vow of truth should not think a single thought which he would hide from the world. He should not mind if the world comes to know even his silly ideas. What he should worry over is his silly thoughts, his sins. Members of the Ashram are worried by the fear that someone else might read their diary, because they wish to appear better than they are. But when a man does not care even if the whole world looks into his diary, why should he hide it from his wife?

The only limit to the keeping of the vow is that of our capacity.

So long as there is the distinction of meum and teum between friends and even between husband and wife, since those chained to a body cannot get over it, each may not take anything belonging to the other without permission. Your intention that you will put it again in its original place does not meet the case, if only because you can never be sure that you will live long enough to carry it out or that the thing will not be stolen while it is still in your charge. In observing this rule, we should not mind if we are accused of pedantry and even worse on that account.

[From Gujarati]

_Mahadevbhaint Diary_, Vol. I, pp. 365-6
365. A LETTER

August 15, 1932

Achara means the outward mode of living and it can change from time to time.\(^1\) The rules of inner living must remain the same; that is, one should cling to truth, ahimsa, etc. It trying to follow them, we may change the rules of outward mode of living whenever necessary. We need not cling to anything, saying or believing that according to the Shastras achara is the first step in dharma. All rules given in Sanskrit were not Shastra. Even the book entitled Manavdharmastra is not really speaking a Shastra. Shastra is not anything written in a book. It should be a living thing. Hence the words of a wise man of good character whose actions are in accord with his speech are our Shastra. If we do not have any such lighthouse to guide us, what seems truth to us is our Shastra, provided our minds and hearts have been purified.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 364

366. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR\(^2\)

August 16, 1932

MY DEAR MARY,

I got your letter today. I was wondering what had happened to you. I did not receive your letter in reply to mine.\(^3\) Do write again and repeat your questions. I think I shall receive it safely. We are all doing well, engaged in various studies and spinning. We have more books than necessary.

With love from us all,

BAPU

\(^1\) The addressee had referred to the verse “अचार्यः प्रथमे धर्मः ”, i.e., “achara is the first step in dharma”, and asked what it meant.

\(^2\) Of Mission Boarding School, Hyderabad; author of Bapu: Conversations and Correspondence with Mahatma Gandhi.

\(^3\) Vide “Letter to F. Mary Barr”, 6-2-1932.
I note that you have joined the communion party that sings “Lead, kindly Light” every Friday evening.

MISS MARY BARR
KARIM NAGAR
H. E. H. NIZAM’S DOMINIONS

From a photostat : G.N. 5982. Also C.W. 3310. Courtesy : F. Mary Barr

367. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU

August 16, 1932

MY DEAR PADMAJA,

Unlike the lotus the Lotus-born can write much and say nothing. For your letter occupies a fair space and tells me nothing except about myself. What I wanted to know was how you were keeping, what Lilamani was doing and how Father’s hospital, which you had showed me and where the prayers were offered, was doing. But you would not be Padmaja if you gave me credit for wanting to know all these family details instead of being told that I was by nature a wrinkled old slave-driver rather than a saint. Anyway for your credit let me slave-drive you to give me a decent letter giving me a proper budget of family news.

I duly got the grapes and other fruit, also The Candle of Vision. For all these gifts thanks if you need them. Mother evidently forgot when she prompted you to buy the book for me that at her instance the poet had himself sent me his own copy.

Now be good and write.

Sardar and Mahadev join me in sending you all much love.

Yours,

SLAVE-DRIVER

[PS.]

The envelope in which this is going is of Sardar’s manufacturing.

SHIRMATI PADMAJA NAIDU
C/O SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY
POONA

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 By George William Russell who wrote under the pseudonym ‘O’
368. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

August 16, 1932

BHAI SHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I got your letter. I did not write my letter to you in order to discontinue your medicine but I wrote it to tell you that I had succeeded in getting possession of it. I do not worry whether the pain will be cured or not. I wished to use your oil because I knew that you had mixed your love with it. I will continue the massage till the bottle is exhausted and will not be in a hurry to stop it. How can I take sun-bath in this season? I will certainly take it as soon as the sky clears permanently. I have not tried cold packs, but I did apply mud-packs prepared with cold water. They did not help. The real difficulty is that the exact cause of the pain cannot be ascertained, and so we cannot be certain about the treatment either. The pain is not in the muscle but in the bone of the elbow. It is in the left elbow and is felt only when the bone is pressed or when the arm is moved in a certain manner. Otherwise I am not aware of it at all. Personally, I believe that this is a symptom of old age. If it is so, treatment is useless. However, the remedy suggested by you is completely harmless and I will not, therefore, discontinue it. I very much wish to request you to come over, but, since I have stopped seeing visitors I must obtain special permission for you to see me in your capacity as a bone-setter. I do not feel like doing that, for it means asking a favour and I would feel hurt if it was refused. For the present, therefore, I think it best to let things go on as they are doing.

There is no trouble so far in my right elbow. The right thumb used to give pain when writing. I think it was cured merely through rest. I will give it more rest if it again starts paining. Mahadev massages it daily. I have filled this letter with the story of my pain. But it is not as serious as all that. I have written at such length, however, because I know that you like to hear the story.

Andrews had gone to Germany to see the grandson of Gurudev there. He has now left us.

I must prescribe for your lumbago. The only remedy for it is fasting, steam-bath and hip-bath. It is my experience till now that if

---

1 Nitin who died of tuberculosis in Germany these measures do not cure it, nothing else will. Fasting is an art. [Dr.]
Mehta in Poona has some experience in the matter. Have you met him at any time? I have had no personal experience of him, but had it in the case of a Sindhi friend’s wife who was put under his care. Her complaint was of course of a different nature. I have mentioned her case just to fill the letter. Apart from fasting, and hip-bath, we have in the last resort the supreme remedy of surrender to the Lord.

Blessings to you both from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7551. Also C.W. 5026. Courtesy:
Tehmina Kambhatta

369. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

August 16, 1932

DEAR DAUGHTER RAIHANA,

Again there was no letter from you. I hope that your health is all right. I told you that I had written a letter\(^1\) in Urdu to Zohra. Dr.
Ansari came to know about it. I wrote to him and told him that you were at the back of it all. He was pleased and wrote to me asking me to send his love to you. Please remember that you are responsible for the errors which I make. Write to me and explain the meaning of this ghazal\(^2\) by Ghalib.

I understand the general idea of the ghazal, but do not clearly understand the meaning of every word. Respectful greetings from us all to Father and Mother. Has Hamida returned?

Khuda Hafiz\(^3\)

I have taken fairly good time to write this. I hope you will have no difficulty in reading my handwriting. Whenever you cannot write, ask Hamida or anybody else who may be with you to write at least a few lines. It will not matter if the letter does not contain the usual lesson.\(^4\)

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu/Gujarati: S.N. 9680

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Zohra Banu Ansari”, 7-7-1932.
\(^2\) This is not translated here.
\(^3\) “God be with you.”
\(^4\) This paragraph is in Gujarati.
370. A LETTER

August 16, 1932

You are right when you say that one should not trust a person who is not trustworthy. What I meant to say was that we should not regard anybody with suspicion. Just as we like other people to trust us, we also should trust them; and do not repent having trusted them if they prove themselves unworthy of our trust. Nobody has ever lost anything by trusting people. Those who betray the trust put in them always lose [something precious] in spite of gaining millions. We lose something only if our soul is stained. Wealth comes and goes, and we should not grieve when it goes.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 366

371. LETTER TO RAMESHWARLAL BAZAJ

August 17, 1932

BHAI RAMESHWARLAL.

I saw your letter to Mahadev. I have not expressed and I do not entertain disapprobation for anyone. I am acquainted with Benarsi only and I believe him to be a good, modest, simple and truthful young man. I am in no way dissatisfied with him. He writes to me regularly. Whosoever wrote to you is totally ignorant and why he wrote this is beyond my comprehension.

I have sent proper replies to all letters received from you.

Yes, I do have a complaint against you. You are staying on there\(^1\), why don’t you sell what you have and come here? Why be scared of poverty? Come over and share our religious life. Life is misspent there.

Rukmini keeps writing regularly.

We are all well. There is nothing serious with my arm. I constantly recall your love.

Blessing from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi : G.N. 9063. Also C.W. 9447. Courtesy : Benarsilal Bazaj

\(^1\) Presumably this was addressed to one of the relations of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta.

\(^2\) In England
DEAR FRIEND,

There can be no doubt that Sir Samuel Hoare has showed you and the Cabinet my letter\(^1\) to him of 11th March on the question of the representation of “depressed” classes. That letter should be treated as part of this letter and be read together with this.

I have read the British Government’s decision\(^2\) on the representation of minorities and have slept over it.\(^3\) In pursuance of my letter to Sir Samuel Hoare and my declaration\(^4\) at the meeting of the Minorities Committee of the Round Table Conference on 13th November, 1931, at St. James’ Palace, I have to resist your decision with my life.

The only way I can do so is by declaring a perpetual fast unto death from food of any kind save water with or without salt and soda. This fast will cease if during its progress the British Government, of its own motion or under pressure of public opinion, revise their decision and withdraw their scheme of communal electorates for the “depressed” classes, whose representatives should be elected by the general electorate under the common franchise no matter how wide it is.

The proposed fast will come into operation in the ordinary course from the noon of 20th September next, unless the said decision is meanwhile revised in the manner suggested above.

I am asking the authorities here to cable the text of this letter to you so as to give you ample notice. But in any case, I am leaving

---

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Sir Samuel Hoare”, 11-3-1932.

\(^2\) On August 17, 1932. Ramsay MacDonald, the British Prime Minister, announced a provisional scheme of minority representation, known as the Communal Award. The scheme fixed the number of seats in the provincial legislatures and retained separate electorates for the minority communities and for the Muslims both in Bengal and the Punjab, despite their numerical majority. Weightage was also conceded to the Muslims in the Provinces in which they were in a minority and to the Sikhs and Hindus in the Punjab. The Depressed Classes were recognized as a minority community entitled to separate electorate. While creating a number of specially reserved constituencies for the Depressed Classes, it gave them the additional right to contest seats in the general constituencies, with this provision that special electorates and reservation would lapse automatically after twenty years.

\(^3\) Gandhi commenced writing this letter on the 17th and completed it on the 18th. For conversations regarding this letter.

\(^4\) Vide “Speech at minorities committee meeting”, 13-11-1931.
sufficient time for this letter to reach you in time by the slowest route.

I also ask that this letter and my letter to Sir Samuel Hoare, already referred to, be published at the earliest possible moment. On my part, I have scrupulously observed the rule of the jail and have communicated my desire or the contents of the two letters to no one, save my two companions, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel and Sjt. Mahadev Desai. But I want, if you make it possible, public opinion to be affected by my letter. Hence, my request for their early publication.

I regret the decision I have taken. But as a man of religion that I hold myself to be, I have no other course left open to me. As I have said in my letter to Sir Samuel Hoare, even if His Majesty’s Government decided to release me in order to save themselves the embarrassment, my fast will have to continue. For I cannot now hope to resist the decision by any other means. And I have no desire whatsoever to compass my release by any means other than honourable.

It may be that my judgment is warped and that I am wholly in error in regarding separate electorates for the “depressed” classes as harmful to them or to Hinduism. If so, I am not likely to be in the right with reference to other parts of my philosophy of life. In that case my death by fasting will be at once a penance for my error and a lifting of a weight from off those numberless men and women who have childlike faith in my wisdom. Whereas if my judgment is right, as I have little doubt it is, the contemplated step is but the due fulfilment of the scheme of life, which I have tried for more than a quarter of a century, apparently not without considerable success.

Inmarī
Your faithful friend,
M. K. Gandhi

THE RT. HON’BLE J. RAMSAY MACDONALD
PRIME MINISTER, LONDON

The Bombay Chronicle, 13-9-1932

373. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

August 18, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter.
I got the rakhi, but late by two days. I had, however, taken it that I had received it on Monday.

If bananas do not agree with you and yet you go on eating them, they will not benefit you. Every stomach has its own peculiarity.

I have fully understood your analysis of the reasons why you get angry. Try to overcome your weakness. I know that you will succeed in overcoming it. I understood your meaning in that part of your letter which you had decided not to leave out. You did right in not leaving it out. There is great pride in not explaining one’s need to a person whom one loves, it does him injustice and puts a heavy burden on him. Civility and humility on our part save him from the trouble of ascertaining our need. This is the first lesson in civility. Learn it now.

Write to Krishnan Nair and tell him that I often think about him.

You did very well in going to Rajkot. It seems your health requires such rest.

Public opinion means the opinion of that section of society for which we care. It is our duty to respect it so long as it is not against morality.

It is difficult to come to a just conclusion on the basis of the incident about the dhobi. Such conduct would certainly not meet with our approval in this age. Anyone who abandons his wife because of such criticism would be regarded as a cruel and unjust man. But I am not in a position to say what the poet’s intention was in the Ramayana in narrating that incident. We need not bother about that problem. I would not. I do not read even works like the Ramayana from that point of view.

I believe that I must stop taking the freedom which I do with the girls if that shocks the inmates of the Ashram. There is no reason which makes it a moral duty for me to take such freedom, nor does my taking it violate morality. If, however, my refraining from it was likely to have an undesirable effect on the girls, I would reason with the inmates of the Ashram and continue to behave as I have been doing. If the girls themselves do not leave me, I would have to consider how to meet the situation. In any case, no one should follow my example and take similar freedom with them. The freedom one takes should be spontaneous. No one should consciously and deliberately decide to take such freedom from one fine morning and behave unnaturally; it would be quite improper if anyone did so. Narandas is free to act as he thinks proper. I would not wish even to criticize him. The truth is that anyone who takes even the most innocent freedom with impure feelings falls into a pit and also drags others behind him. As long as the relations of men and women have not become natural in our society, one should certainly be careful in one’s behaviour. There is no royal road in such matters which all can follow. There is a good deal of clumsiness in your own behaviour. Your innocence saves you, but it is certainly not proper for you to be proud of it and obstinately to persist in your behaviour. There is thoughtlessness in doing so. You do not see today the harm which such behaviour may do. But you may have to repent one day. No one’s pride has endured for ever. One should not deliberately try to shock society, arguing that all conventional restrictions are bad. Have you now some idea of what public opinion means?

Write to Dhurandhar and tell him that he should bear in mind what the Major told him. He will himself have to become a walking advertisement for asanas.¹

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10299. Also C.W. 5745. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

374. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1932

CHI. PUSHPA,

You have drawn wonderful pictures. What are the gifts Mangala received? Who gave them? Are your trees alive? Your handwriting is improving.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11082. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

¹ Dhurandhar practised the yogic asanas and propagated them wherever he went.
375. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 19, 1932

CHI. MIRA,
So you are again in your den.¹ I hope you will regain your lost strength and vitality. And you will be anxious about nothing. Simply concentrate on your spinning and such studies as you can easily undertake. We are all doing well. Love from us all. God [be] with you.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6233. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9699

376. LETTER TO GULAB

August 19, 1932

CHI. GULAB,
If the thoughts which come to you are good, you need not worry much about them. If they are bad, try to keep them out with the help of Ramanama and think only about your work.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1721

377. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM GANDHI

August 19, 1932

CHI. PURUSHOTTAM,
I got a letter from you after a long interval. Do not worry if you cannot keep to the prayer hours in the Ashram. Both Jamna and you have weak health, and if a person cannot get up early in the morning he should not force himself to do so. The secret of being able to get up early is to go to bed early.

I think that hip-bath, sun-bath, fruit diet and milk, only as much as one can digest, would be a sure remedy for anaemia. Open air also is essential.

¹ The addressee was sentenced to one year’s imprisonment.
The book on health has discussed only the diseases of which I had some experience.

BAPU

From Gujarati : C.W. 904. Courtesy : Narandas Gandhi

378. LETTER TO NANALAL K. JASANI

August 19, 1932

Bhai Nanalal,

I was waiting for a letter from you as we wait for rains in the months of Jeth and Ashadha. I remembered you immediately the day I received the cable about Doctor’s last sleep, and also wrote\(^1\) to you. I even wished at that time that you were with me, but I did not know you were in fact so near me. I did not even know where you would be, and so I enclosed that letter and another for Khimchand with my letter\(^2\) to Manilal. In my letter to you I asked for your help and in the letter to Khimchand I cautioned him. I mentioned my distrust of him and other people’s too, but told him that Doctor had great trust in him and expressed my hope that he would not betray it. Maganlal had written me two long letters about Khimchand about the time he went to England, and I had also written to Doctor on the basis of those letters. Doctor had assured me in reply that Khimchand had turned over a new leaf and that there was no ground for distrusting him. You should not feel any hesitation now in taking a hand in the affairs of the family. It is your duty at this juncture not to wait to be asked to intervene. Doctor’s trust in you can be seen even in his last instructions. Chhaganlal writes to me. His letters have been very good. He has promised to abide by my advice. He has expressed his own views, too, but he does not insist on their being acted upon. My letters are not likely to reach there before the 13th [proximo]. Hence, without knowing what I want he has sent me a copy of the note which you had sent [to him]. All the letters and cables which I have received up to date from Chhaganlal after the passing away of Doctor can be described as perfectly satisfactory. If he seems to have an ulterior motive behind them, you should guide me. I am proceeding with full

\(^1\) Guide to Health.

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Nanalal K. Jasani”, 4-8-1932.

\(^3\) Vide “Letter to Manilal R. Jhaveri”, 4-8-1932.
trust in him. Ratilal Desai' has written to me and told me that he does not share my trust. I have as yet made no suggestions beyond asking him to bring the accounts up to date. For the present, I am collecting all the relevant facts. I sent wires\(^2\) to Ratilal, Champa and Manjula and dissuaded them from rushing to Rangoon. I wished to restrain Maganlal too, but I knew that he would not have that much patience, and also that he did not trust Chhaganlal. My own attitude has been that the shares of the three brothers should be separated. From what Chhaganlal writes, Doctor’s property seems to be very much less than I had thought. He says that there is practically no cash, and also expresses his distrust of Mayashankar\(^3\). I think we should treat the last instructions of Doctor as his will. If, however, the total property is as enumerated by Chhaganlal and if there is no cash, how can we pay immediately the sums specified by Doctor? Please write to me frankly and in detail about all these matters. I feel unhappy that I am in jail at this juncture. But our wishes are not always fulfilled, and, therefore, we should do our duty as best as we can in the circumstances in which we are placed.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From Gujarati : C.W. 9462

379. LETTER TO BALKRISHNA BHAVE

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON, POONA
[Before August 20, 1932]\(^4\)

CHI. BALKRISHNA,

I was not at all vigilant. I could suspect others but I could not suspect you. Whether I was vigilant or not it was your duty to inform me immediately about the lapse. That way the lapse would have been to some extent remedied. But it is futile to think over the past.

But now you should be able to sleep. Do not strain yourself to induce it. Sleep out in the open air. Be without any thoughts. Utter Ramanama if thoughts occur. If in spite of it, thoughts keep coming,

\(^1\) Son-in-law of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta
\(^2\) Vide “Telegram to Narandas Gandhi”, p. 333.
\(^3\) Mayashankar Vrajlal Desai, business partner of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta
\(^4\) From the contents the letter appears to have been written before the one to the addressee dated August 20, 1932; vide “Letter to Balakrishna”, 20-8-1932.
let that be so. Once you have decided that you must sleep then there is nothing to think about. Instead of worrying it is better to court failure. If there is discharge during sleep, do not fret. If you remain indifferent to it, I shall consider that you have learnt the lesson taught in the verse पत्थरं अथवं स्त्रयं जितनु। If we have completely shut our minds to it, how are we responsible for an emission in sleep? All this can be addressed only to one following truth.

You do not require wheat for putting on weight. However, do take it if you can digest it. If you find it difficult to digest wheat then take as much milk as you can and also fruit. For the moment do not think about the cost. Therapeutically milk and neem could be a complete diet, but this can be proved only by experiment. If you call free yourself from there I would like you to go to Almora for a few months. Discuss it with Vinoba.

To show you how Suraj Bhan had a break-down, I send herewith his letter.

Now for the questions. I take it you have these with you.
1. Yes and No. Because I am myself not clear as to what activity goes on for the whole day.
2. Both are alike, so I have not made an effort to find out the difference. There is scope for wide difference where the word ‘like’ is used. There is a great difference between the statements: ‘gold is like brass’ and ‘gold is brass’, and similarly between ‘a rope is like a snake’ and ‘a rope is a snake’. The first is a beautiful example of eloquence but is meaningless as usage. There is no eloquence in the second. There can be many usages.
3. The reply to the first question covers that to the third.
4. Both the activities are different; so there can be no comparison. Only an experienced person can say more.
5. The brahmi state is positive, it is an affirmation. But it cannot be described as it can only be experienced.

‘Sensitive’ means delicate and soft. It is good you introduced the children to me. A letter to them is enclosed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11279
380. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

August 20, 1932

CHI. JANAKIMAIYA,

So at last you took the trouble to write a few lines with pencil. It seems you could not shake off your lethargy even in jail. I think it was a mistake [on the part of the magistrate] to have awarded you ‘A’ class. He should have awarded you ‘C’ class, so that you would have had to do hard work. Well, be as lethargic as you will, but see now that you recover your health completely. I am glad you are having an experience of Vinoba’s strict discipline. If you do not write regularly, bear in mind you will be punished. Did I tell you that the old blanket which you had made into a new one by stitching it on to khadi cloth had accompanied me to the Royal Palace?1 And it is with me in this jail, too. I am sure it will last for many more years yet.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 2900

381. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

August 20, 1932

CHI. LILAVATI,

You must have got my message. I hope you have calmed down now. Remember the second chapter [of the Gita].

It seems best to me that you should entrust your money to the care of Narandas and let him make any arrangement about it which he thinks proper. You should know from him what arrangement he makes. Obtain receipts, etc., and preserve them, or give the original receipts to Narandas to preserve. You should consult Narandas himself for further guidance in this. I am writing to him. From here I cannot think of any other suggestion to make. I hope your health is all right. Send me a report of your work.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G.N. 9570. Also C.W. 6542. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

1 Vide “Letter to Mathuradas Purushottam”, 6-7-1932.

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4, SEPTEMBER, 1932  355
382. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

August 20, 1932

One of the many causes of illness is impatience. First the mind becomes impatient, and then the body. But it is the universal experience that ‘the impatient get nervous and the calm remain self-possessed’. If the world is on fire, will impatience help us to put out the fire? And is it for us to put out the fire? Do you know that firemen do not shoot water at the raging flames when a great fire breaks out? They direct their attention to the parts round the flames. If they can save them, they should be regarded as efficient, that is, as [karma] yogis. If we do our own duty well, we would in effect have put out the fire. It may not seem to the physical eye to have been put out, but you may rest assured that it has been put out. My long search for truth has revealed to me no other way but this, nor is it likely to reveal any other in future. If what I have said is not correct, it would become impossible to follow the path of truth and cling to it scrupulously. We can insist only on that which is possible. If anyone demands air of the mountains on the moon, we would have to call him a Shaikhhalli for his desire can never be satisfied. And this is also true about the scope of our duty. Really speaking, everyone’s duty is clear enough for him to see, for one does not have to look far to find it. One has to look no farther than the tip of one’s nose. We have merely to clean the dirt immediately in front of our feet. As we clean it, we shall discover more dirt to be cleaned and will clean that too. It does not matter that, at the end of our lives, there will be as much dirt to be cleaned as when we started. In truth, however, can we say that life ends? The body perishes, but does that matter? And if life does not end, we should not feel disheartened to discover that the dirt has not disappeared. A tailor’s son goes on stitching all his life. If he falls dead with a yawn, a needle in his hand, he would be a man of true devotion to duty.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 371

---

1 The addressee had said in his letter that he felt frustrated by the environment and was impatient to dispose of arrears of work.

2 One who builds castles in the air
383. LETTER TO KASTURBA GANDHI

August 20, 1932

You will soon be released now. But you will feel unhappy that you cannot see me. I also feel unhappy. I may feel tempted to relax for your sake at least. But you also will agree that it would not be proper for me to do so. We have become what we are through self-sacrifice. You should, therefore, show patience. Write to me in detail.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 373

384. LETTER TO BALKRISHNA

August 20, 1932

I do not know with certainty what Shankaracharya meant by maya. This is what I believe. The world which we see and believe in is mere appearance; it is a product of our imagination. But in its true essence it does exist. We do not know what that essence is. We say that it is Brahman, but we characterize all descriptions of the latter as inadequate. The world also a Brahman and not different from it. The difference which we see is mere appearance.

My view is that the span of our life can be lengthened or shortened. The truth is that every species is born with its natural functioning determined. We do not know and need not know what they are.

The divisions of time are man-made and they are smaller even than particles of dust in the cosmic cycles of time. Even if crores of units of our time as big as the Himalayas were added together, the total would be smaller than a cosmic cycle of time. It is very little, therefore, which man commands. Let him be pleased with it as much as he will.

There are innumerable physical causes of dreams. I have experienced that, while dreaming, we can be conscious of its unreality. Such a moment may possibly be the point of transition from the dream state to the waking state. Involuntary discharges are sometimes the result of purely physical causes and take place even without impure thoughts in one’s mind. They can be stopped by changes in one’s food. Mostly they are caused by constipation. When such discharges are due to milk, mostly the immediate cause is impure thoughts, since milk has a tendency to stimulate passion. But that is not the case with you. That is, milk cannot stimulate passion in persons whose bodies have become weak even if the person is of a passionate nature. All the power of the milk is used up in building the body of such a person. Dr. Rajab Ali’s view is correct within certain limits. But what he says does not apply to persons who are completely healthy in body and mind.

1 Presumably Balkrishna Bhave, brother of Vinoba Bhave

The desire to work for the welfare of the world is an essential element in the nature of a man of spiritual knowledge. There can be no exception to this.

I cannot say for what length of time I can keep out all thoughts from my mind, since I have never tried to test this. But I know that I am able to keep out unnecessary thoughts. If any such thoughts come, they have to run away like thieves.

Hypocrisy is nothing but the mask which falsehood wears.

[From Gujarati]

385. LETTER TO MATHURADAS

August 20, 1932

The plan of voluntary dress-making for yajna is not intended to provide the work of stitching khadi clothes for the poor. The idea behind it is to promote quicker sale without incurring loss, of khadi woven by the poor and to reduce its price which is felt to be high . . . .

Do not pay attention to carnal thoughts either. Once we have made up our mind in regard to a thing, we should take it as finally settled. A vow means that the mind stops thinking about the thing concerning which we have taken the vow. When a business man has concluded a deal, he does not think further about it and directs his attention to other things. We should act in the same manner with regard to vows.

[From Gujarati]

2 The discussion on food which followed is omitted in the source.
386. LETTER TO MADALASA BAJAJ

August 20, 1932

CHI. MADALASA,

I got your letter. You may believe that you are full of envy, pride, etc., but I don’t believe so. From whom could you have got these defects? Jamnalal certainly does not have them, nor Janakibehn. You have also not come under the influence of bad company. And there is nothing you lack. Yes, you are inclined to be angry. I, too, observed that. But Janakibehn also has that weakness. And, moreover, your body is weak. But you are wise. Make a conscious effort, therefore, to overcome your shortcoming. Other people also are human beings like us. The same atman dwells in all of us. Hence, getting angry with anybody means getting angry with ourselves. Moreover, no short-comings remain in anyone in whom a passion for the service of every living creature has been aroused. You should, therefore, cultivate greater devotion to service.

It will make me happy if you write to me regularly.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 313

387. LETTER TO UMADEVI BAJAJ

August 20, 1932

CHI. OM,

I got your letter. Your handwriting has improved greatly. If your present weight is due to a strong build, why do you wish to reduce it? You will be better equipped for service if you grow up to be big and strong in body, provided of course that your mind also becomes strong along with the body. If the body has become merely fat because of some disease, you should certainly try to reduce your weight. Do you suffer from any disease? Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 335

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4, SEPTEMBER, 1932

359
388. LETTER TO GULAM RASUL QURESHI

August 20, 1932

CHI. QURESHI,

I got your letter. Since the children feel at home at Noorbanu’s, we may be satisfied that their interest will be well protected.

Improve your health. If your piles can be cured with treatment it would be very good. Do not be impatient.

I have received two parts of Safaba, the first part of Sirhat and Al Farooqui. I have not received anything else. With whom did you send the Koran? I must get the second part of Sirhat and the second part of Shibli. What is your weight now?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10808. Courtesy: Gulam Rasul Qureshi

389. READING AND REFLECTION—II

August 21, 1932

Awake and arise, O traveller, it is morning now;
It is no longer night that you still slumber.¹

If anybody understands these lines to mean simply: “O traveller, arise, it is morning now. Is it night that you are still sleeping?”—then he has read the lines but not reflected over their meaning. For such a reader will rise early at dawn and feel satisfied. But a reader who wishes to think will ask: Who is this traveller? What is meant by “It is morning”? What does the poet mean when he says that it is no longer night? What does sleeping mean? He will then discover daily new meanings in every line, and understand that the traveller represents every human being. For one who has faith in God, it is always morning. Night may also signify ignorance. This line applies to any person who is negligent, be it in ever so small a degree. Anybody who tells a lie also slumbers. The line is a call to such a

¹ Wife of Pyare Ali, a businessman from Bombay
² This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 20/21-8-1932; vide the following item.
³ A popular bhajan in Hindi person to wake up. We may thus read a wide meaning in the line and learn peace of mind through it. In other words, meditation on this single line can supply enough provision to a man for his spiritual journey, whereas a person who has memorized the four Vedas and also studied their meaning may find them a useless burden. I have given here but one illustration which occurred to me. If all of us decide in what direction we wish to progress and start thinking, we would discover new meanings in life and daily experience a new joy.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati : M.M.U./II

390. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

August 20/21, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your heavy mail. There was a bitter letter from Champa. I immediately wrote a postcard in reply, which you should get on Sunday or Monday. Now that Narmada has been saved, we owe an especial duty to her. I think her education has been poor. Her handwriting is extremely careless. If she has the good fortune now to observe brahmacharya for the rest of her life, I think she will have to know things. See, therefore, if you can give her more help (by way of time) and educate her. If she does not work with sincere enthusiasm to make good use of the time which you give to her, you may stop the help. About Liladhar, what you have done seems all right. If you can, try and make Jaisukhlal’s daughters forget Amreli. What is the name of Indu’s maternal uncle? What is his occupation in Palitana? Kusum cannot take up nursing as long as she is not completely free from the danger of tuberculosis. It would be very bad if she joins and returns in a month or so. She ought to realize that nursing is a very strenuous work. A sincere nurse has to be on her feet the whole day. She can hardly find time even for a hurried meal.

Ratubhai’s condition is pitiable. Why does he let his children remain in college when he is in debt? I can easily see that he will not be able to go to Rangoon. Will not any of his children be ready to come and stay in the Ashram? A boy who is truthful, industrious and healthy can rise as high as he wishes in the Ashram. May be he will not get there the education which he gets in a college. But, after all what is the value of that education?

You are doing a very good thing in keeping Ratilal from going. I had fine letters from Chhaganlal, so that I am now relatively free from worry from that source. I got letters from Nanalal and Manilal, too. Manjula has been writing regularly. She is rising higher in my esteem every day.

I have been having novel experiences in regard to my food. Eating bananas did not cure my constipation completely as long as I was drinking milk. I, therefore, stopped milk and ate bananas only for some days. For the evening meal I had bread and vegetable. This relieved the constipation to some degree. But, being eager to eat the same food as ‘C’ class prisoners do, and remembering that in 1930 I had tried rotlas of bajri and that had cured my constipation, for the last three days I have been eating in the evening one rotlo with vegetable. That has cured the constipation completely. But on the last occasion the continued consumption of bajri had resulted in more than the disappearance of constipation, and so I had to give it up. It is possible that the same thing may happen this time. I have not decided to exclude milk completely for the present. I, therefore, intend to take it with bajri as soon as I am free from the fear of constipation. I have given all these details so that, if anybody there wishes to make the same experiment for constipation, he may do so. But the essential condition for the success of this experiment is that there should be no oil or ghee in the vegetable, nor should any ghee or milk be taken with the bajri cake. In 1930, when my constipation was cured, I ate only bajri and vegetables. I did not eat fruit, nor almonds. I had added the latter after the constipation was relieved. But I did consume sour lemons. The vegetables should include some greens.

If the doctor advises, Parasram should be got operated upon.

You are doing right in permitting Premabehn to go out frequently. She will take time to become steady. I do write to her letters to calm her.

I also can understand about the wire from Darjeeling. You have done quite right in taking no action on it. You should give a few details of the wire to Mahavir and ask him what the purpose behind sending that wire was. You should also write to Agamgiri and ask him the same question.

If anybody asks for permission to publish a German translation of Vratavichar, you may tell him that we claim copyright for none of

---

1 During Gandhiji’s detention in the Yeravda Central Prison in 1930, he wrote weekly discourses in letters addressed to Narandas Gandhi, from July 22, 1930 our publications and that, therefore, he can translate it, but also tell him that it is essential for such a book that a translator should not depart from the original in any point.

When you say that Shankarbhai’s arm will require treatment for a long time, I hope you don’t mean that some defect is likely to remain.

Or, is some other complication feared? Is the arm being examined by anybody from time to time?

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I. Also C.W. 8246. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

391. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

August 21, 1932

CHI. RAMESHWARDAS,

I feel no pain while writing. I of course dictate to Mahadev when the letter is long. I do not remember your vows. If you also do not remember them, then forget about them and think as if you had taken none. Your mode of life is still not such that it can endure vows. But you should make resolutions slowly one after another. If you remember the vows and are observing them, please let me know what they are. Even if you do nothing else, keep repeating Ramanama. Some day you will suddenly see light in the midst of darkness.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 204

onwards, to Satyagraha Ashram, containing “a cursory examination of the principal Ashram observances”. They were published in Gujarati under the title Vratavichar. Subsequently, a chapter on swadeshi was added to it and the title was changed to Mangal Prabhat. It was translated into English under the title From Yeravda Mandir.
392. LETTER TO GULAB

August 21, 1932

CHI. GULAB,

A general statement that your speed in spinning and making slivers has increased tells the other person nothing. If you say that now you spin 160 rounds instead of 150 or make seven instead of five tolas of slivers per hour, that will tell him something.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1722

393. LETTER TO MANIBEHN N. PARIKH

August 21, 1932

CHI. MANIBEHN,

I have your letter. I hope you do not worry about Narahari now. Why should we worry when we have left it to God to worry for us? And what do we gain by worrying?

I will write to Vanamala some other time.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5971. Also C.W. 3288. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

394. LETTER TO CHAMPABEHN R. MEHTA

August 21, 1932

CHI. CHAMPA,

I hope you received my postcard. Do not worry about anything at all. God will solve all problems. Prabhashankar has sent me a copy of the letter which you wrote to him. But as I explained to you in a previous letter, unfortunately for you, he and I cannot agree. I will go on acting and advising you as seems best to me. May God give you patience.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8753. Also C.W. 1041. Courtesy: Champabehn R. Mehta
395. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE

August 21, 1932

CHI. MATHURI,

I got your letter after a long time. The programme is good. How much do you weigh now? If you feel sleepy during prayers, you are permitted to doze off. Do you know that one can go on repeating God’s name even in sleep?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 266. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

396. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA N. KHARE

August 21, 1932

CHI. RAMACHANDRA,

Your English handwriting is very good indeed, though you are rather weak in spelling. Do you understand the meaning of every word correctly?

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 295. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

397. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN GANDHI

August 21, 1932

CHI. JAMNA,

You wrote to me after a long interval. It is certainly good that you get an opportunity of staying in Rajkot from time to time. Khushalbhai’s recovery to this extent is indeed a miracle. Tell Jamnadas that I should be happy if he stops being lazy in writing to me.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 858. courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
398. LETTER TO NARMADABEHN RANA

August 21, 1932

CHI. NARMADA.

You should improve your handwriting. You should leave some space on both sides. The words should be spaced well. The line should be straight. It will be better if you use a reed-pen.

I should like you to become accomplished in everything. What do you mean by a boy’s dress? Please describe it. For how many years have you been wearing it, and on whose advice?

Let me know your programme of daily work.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 2760. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N. pathak

399. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

August 21, 1932

CHI. GANGABEHN.

I got your letter. It would be very good indeed if Ramibehn' recovers before leaving that place. I hope you got all my letters. Regain the weight which you have lost. Feel no hesitation in eating any food which may be necessary for your health.

The change which has taken place in Kaku’s brother and sister is very good.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G. S. Gangabenne, p. 64. Also C.W. 8794. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

1 Ramibehn Kamdar, addressee’s sister
400. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

August 21, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

You seem to have become very hard-working. That is certainly very good. But you must improve your handwriting.

BAPU

401. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

August 21, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

Nowadays your letters have become dull. It is not possible that nothing worth mentioning would have happened during a whole week.

You can describe the trees and plants and the cattle which you see, you can give an account of your work, can say who was most alert and who was lazy, what books you read, etc. You can describe in numerable other things like these if you but try to think. Why don’t you write about all these things in your letters?

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M. M.U./II

402. LETTER TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

August 21, 1932

CHI. KAMALNAYAN,

It was your duty to write to me immediately after your release. Did you get the letter which I wrote to you? You have acquired very useful experience indeed. I have a faint recollection of having received a letter from you before I left for England. I have also an impression that I replied to your question. I now forget what the question was. Ask it again.

1 Illegible in the source
Narmada scribbled a confused description and cleverly got off. That is a sign of lethargy.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 3048

403. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM
August 21, 1932

MY DEAR AMTUL,

Your inquiry about the Koran is pertinent. I do not believe any gospel to be a message from God delivered to someone by the angels but I do believe it to be the promptings of the inner voice of the prophets. This much should suffice for us. It is good that you are planning to understand well the text of the Koran. The very purpose of the study of scriptures is to comprehend fully the text and its impact upon our heart.

How is it that Kudsia knows no Urdu? Do all the members of your family know English only? Give me the history of your clan, where it originally belonged to, when and how the interest in Urdu was lost? I suppose you are all right now. Do not overwork or take anything to heart. Be cheerful and be satisfied with what God permits you to do. You must have forwarded the letter to Dr. Sharma. Tell me if you can read my letter with ease. I would prefer to write in Urdu if that pleases you. Every week you must point out my mistakes. But tell me unhesitatingly if you like my English letters better. I want you to be happy. It is better that you write to me in Urdu but in that case you will have to write legibly, otherwise I shall be unable to read the letter.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 254

404. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH
August 21, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

The word for ‘learned’ in the shloka you have quoted includes the meaning ‘virtuous’. In the olden times the word for a learned man, viz., vidvan was synonymous with vedavid, meaning ‘the knower of the Vedas’, and it was believed that anyone who knew the Vedas was bound to be virtuous. What I meant to say was that Doctor was respected because of his virtue. This does not mean that scholarship may never be honoured. But we know very well that there are many highly learned people who are utterly ignored.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 9915. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

405. LETTER TO AMINA QURESHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
_August 21, 1932_

CHI. AMINA,
You have improved your handwriting very much indeed. You must master Urdu. You know how much Imam Saheb also wanted that you should. What has gone wrong with your health? Write in detail.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10801. Courtesy: Gulam Rasul Qureshi

406. LETTER TO PUSHPA S. PATEL

_August 21, 1932_

CHI. PUSHPA,
This time your pictures are badly drawn. If you want to draw pictures you must draw them well. Otherwise you cannot learn painting.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11083. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

407. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

Y. M.,
_August 21, 1932_

CHI. NIMU,
If the children are being bitten by mosquitoes, rubbing a little korosene on the body would keep the mosquitoes away. This has been the experience with many.
You must have started taking ghee and oil now.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

408. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

August 22, 1932

CHI. MANILAL,

I have your letter. I am more than happy that both of you are free from fever. I hope that you have fully regained your normal health. I was pained to read what you say about Pragji. I had a letter from Mr. Ritch, in which he expresses his view that Phoenix ought not to be disbanded. He writes nothing about Pragji, but he has some complaint against you. He says that you have got involved with Sorabji and have lost some money. I hope that this is not true. What you have belongs to the Trust. Surely you know that you cannot take anything from it except what you need to meet your normal expenses. You can neither advance a loan or make a gift from it, nor can borrow money against it. I think that the plot of twenty-five bighas also was leased out to meet the needs of Indian Opinion. Even that was a mistake, however. Since you yourself realized it, I need not say anything about it.

If you are sure that Pragji has been concerned only with his own interest, then I think that you ought not to use his services for Indian Opinion. I will write to him if you wish that I should do so.

All three of us are well. Devadas has recovered. He will take rest for some time. Pyarelal has been released. Manibehn is again in jail for one year and three months. Ramdas is all right. Ba is about to be released. She has lost some weight.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 4793
August 22, 1932

CHI. SUSHILA,

Though your letter of two pages seemed long to you, a lazy woman, I found it much too short. Do you know that, whenever I wrote to my brother from England, I used to fill 20 to 25 pages and still I thought the letter was too short? I did not feel, either, that Brother would find it too long and that it would be a bother to him to read it. I was sure that he would like a long letter. I would write about everything I might have done during the week, everyone I might have met and everything I might have read and every foolishness I might have committed. No wonder the letter would be so many pages long. Moreover, I used to write only to my brother, and so I would unburden myself completely in the letter.

But you are a princess who would, if she could, write only one line but writes 50 lines with the words written wide apart from one another, and thinks that she has written quite a long letter. All right. Please yourself and rule Manilal. You were married to him because he is a rather simple man and you are deep. I always believe that your judgement about people would be correct. Exercise a little more control over him. Don’t think that, because he is your husband, you have done your duty when you have advised or warned him. A good wife should hold the husband back by the ear and save him from falling into a pit. I believe that you have that strength. There is an agreement between Manilal and me that he should not look upon you as his servant but should regard you as his life-companion, his partner in the duties of life and his better-half. You two, therefore, have equal rights over each other. Since you are gifted with greater intuition, you have, to that extent, greater authority over him than he over you in matters which require it. He knows more about the press and, therefore, he has greater authority in that field. Similarly, he knows more about water-treatment, and so he may have greater authority in that field too. When you read my letter to Manilal, you will understand what all this means. How is your ear? Does Tara write to you?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4792
410. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

August 22, 1932

Bhai Khambhatta,

I have your letter. Do send your ointment, I will try it. But I should tell you that I have tried iodine for a long time. If the ointment contains some other useful ingredients, it may be worth trying. What a poor memory I have that I forgot that we had Vidya treated by you. It is true that one should not have any illness even in old age. But that can be expected only of a person who has refrained from bodily pleasures throughout his life. But I have indulged in plenty of them. Only one was left, namely that I never had my hands massaged before going to bed. That is why I remember you every day at night.

Blessings to you both from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6602. Also C. W. 4388. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

411. LETTER TO TRAMBAKLAL

August 22, 1932

Chhaganbhai has full trust in you. Doctor also trusted you. I am sure that you are doing your best to keep Doctor’s family united. Please write to me and let me know about any difficulties which hinder your efforts. And let me also have any suggestions which you would like to make.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9436

412. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

August 22, 1932

Dear Daughter Raihana,

I got your letter, and also Father’s today. I had received your letter in which you had copied Dagh’s ghazal, but after considerable delay. I have an impression that I had written to you about having received one of your letters. I liked that ghazal. I have all your letters with me. Why did you trouble Mother about Ghalib’s ghazal? I do not wish to give so much trouble to you either. Whatever you can give without much trouble to yourself will be enough for me. I have now got quite a few Urdu books. It is good that Purohitji has been released. Why did Bhaiji have to drop the idea of going to Afghanistan? Mahadev is learning French and Urdu. Father used to teach him French. Since then he has not given it up. He will think about learning the language of Timbuctoo after having learnt these two. But, then, you will have to teach it to him, because you are likely to be the only one in our world who knows that language. I am not writing separately to Father. There is danger in writing to elders. Give my regards to Father and Mother, and vandemataram to the others. To you a slap.

BAPU

[PS.]

It took me half an hour to write this much. It is all your fault. Why cannot I write with speed?1

Blessings, good wishes, etc., from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu / Gujarati : S.N. 9671

413. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 23, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I wrote one letter2 or rather postcard at your new address.

I had made up my mind not to chide you even mentally if you fell ill again. I said to myself when I heard of your illness from Kashi that it would not do to be finding fault with you every time you got ill. No doubt we get ill through our faults. But the difficulty lies in our inability always to know our errors before hand. The other is our inability always to guard against them even when we know them. It is therefore enough to know these truths that we ail through our own mistakes and then not always to be chiding ourselves when we do get ill. Your latest lapse therefore does not surprise me. It was inevitable in

1 The postscript is in Gujarati.
the circumstances related by you. God be thanked that you are able to tide over these illnesses without their leaving bad after-effects. The elimination (of) disease germs through natural treatment often leaves the system purer and stronger. the rest you are getting is providential.
And you are not going to bother if you get no permission to receive visitors or even to write letters. Only 50 years ago prisoners could not receive visitors or write letters. Ordinary prison life nowadays has lost all its terrors. It was a great movement Howard¹ set on foot. It is only in its beginning stages. The day is not far distant when prisons will be rechristened and persons will be merely detained so as to be unable to do harm whether moral, social or political in accordance with the conception of the respective States. But we have to rejoice whatever the conditions of jail life, trying nevertheless to secure relief wherever possible.

Now about my food. Do you not remember that here in Yeravda
I could not get rid of constipation with milk and juicy fruit and that I was able to do so only by dropping milk? This time, too, I had dropped milk only because I could not keep myself fit on milk and fruit. This time I began banana with milk. There was slight improvement. But that was not enough. I have therefore just for a few days dropped milk and am taking bajri chapati instead of wheat and the effect has been marvellous. During last incarceration² it was bajri that removed my constipation. And I was able to pass the rest of the term on bread, vegetables and almond cream. I propose to go back to milk and see whether with bajri I am able to avoid constipation. I am keeping excellent health. And as you can see I am writing with the right hand without coming to grief. For the better protection of the left elbow, I have gone back to the Magan charkha and am this time able to draw over 30 counts. I am satisfied with this. The output per hour is still bad. It hardly reaches 100 rounds per hour.

Vallabhbai is making very rapid progress with his Sanskrit.
Mahadev is doing both French and Urdu. So our time is being very usefully spent. The weather has suddenly turned bright and very hot here—unusual at this time of the year. I hope it is not bad with you.

I hope you have the mosquito-net.
Love from us all.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6234. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9700

¹ John Howard, English philanthropist and prison-reformer.
² In 1930-31
414. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

August 23, 1932

CHI. VASUMATI,

Now I can write a separate letter to you. You could not meet Mahadev after all. I had expected your letter immediately. It is possible that I may get it before you get this. Describe all your experiences, what you learnt from other women, the thoughts which came to you, the books which you read etc., etc. How was your health [in jail]? Did you learn any Marathi? Could you keep up your energy of body and mind on the food that you were getting? I have had no letter from Nanibehn. Why is that so? We are all very well.

Blessings from
BAPU

415. LETTER TO PREMLILA THACKERSEY

August 23, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I got your letter and the copy of Sir Vithaldas’s biography. I Will go through it.

All three of us keep good health, as usual.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4832. Courtesy: Premlila Thackersey

1 Addressee’s husband
August 23, 1932

It does not seem correct to me to say that it is part of man’s nature to spend some time in idle thoughts. If there is a single exception to this, we cannot say that it is part of man’s nature to do so. Actually, we find many exceptions. It is true that vast numbers of people are always busy thinking about all manner of things which they will do or will not do, and thus may be said to spend time in idle thoughts. If this were not so, it would not be necessary to emphasize the importance of concentration. What is important for us at present is this. We ourselves make all kinds of plans and resolutions, most of which we do not even remember after some time. All such thoughts are mental incontinence. Just as man dissipates his physical strength through ordinary incontinence, so he dissipates his mental strength through mental incontinence, and, as physical weakness affects the mind, so mental weakness affects the body. That is why I have defined brahmacharya in a wide sense and described even idle thoughts as violation of it. By defining brahmacharya in a narrow sense, we have made it more difficult to observe. If we accept its wider definition and try to control all the eleven organs, the control of the one most important organ would be much easier. You seem to believe in the heart of your hearts that physical activity prevents or hinders us from watching the progress of our inward purification. My experience is the opposite of this. Without inward purification, work cannot be done in a spirit of non-attachment. Hence the degree of inward purification can be judged mainly by the purity of our work. Anybody who tries to cultivate inward purity without doing work will more likely than not be in danger of falling into a delusion. I have seen many such instances. I will give an ordinary example. I have known many co-workers making all kinds of good resolutions in jail, and also seen

1 The addressee had said in his letter that “aimless thoughts were certainly burdensome but it seemed as if even the seeker after truth had to pass through the stage of wandering thoughts. It was true that selfless action purified the mind. But after some purification has not the seeker quietly to observe his mental activity? Or was the selfless action sufficient in itself? Buddha recommended a combination of activity and contemplation with some such end in view. Bapu however was all for action, which according to him was the royal road to self-perfection. But did it enable the seeker to understand the activity of the soul?” (The Diary of Mahadev Desai, Vol. I, pp. 304-5).

2 Five organs of perception, five of action and the mind their resolutions broken at the first blow after they were released. In jail they were quite sure that they would never swerve from their resolutions, that they had achieved inward purification, that they had examined themselves in complete peace of mind and that they had acquired concentration in prayer. But I found that the moment they were outside the jail walls all this evaporated into thin air. The fifth verse of Chapter III of the Gita states a profound truth. Scientist after scientist has told us that the principle enunciated in it is a universal law. It simply means that no human being can cease from karma even for a moment. Karma or motion is the universal law of all material things and forms of life. Man’s spiritual knowledge and his excellence lie in obeying it in a spirit of non-attachment. There are two verses in the Ishopanishad which state the same truth, and they are equally profound. Who am I to criticize a great soul like the Buddha? Besides, I love and revere him. But did he himself set up the organization [of monasteries] or did his followers do so? whoever did it, the monasteries which were established became, in obedience to this universal law, stagnant and by and by acquired reputation as dens of sloth. Even today we find Buddhist monks in Ceylon, Burma and Tibet sunk in ignorance and the veritable images of sloth. In India, too, the monks known as sannyasis are not found to be shining specimens of humanity.

Personally I am convinced, therefore, that man can achieve real and enduring purification of heart only through work. I again feel tempted to quote the Gita. Verse 18 of Chapter IV means that he who sees action in inaction and inaction in action is the wise man, he is the true yogi and the true man of karma. I have, however, explained here what I have found in my own experience. I have quoted the Gita verses because I have found the truth of their teaching in my experience. I never quote anything from Shastras which I have not tested in experience. The experience of others may be different from mine and they may even quote verses from the Gita which tend in the opposite direction or they may quote in support of their experience the same verses which I do and interpret them differently. All this is possible. I, therefore, never insist that all people should accept my experience as the sole guide.

[From Gujarati]

1 Verses 1 and 2

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932 377
417. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

August 23, 1932

CHI. TARAMATI,

I have received your letter.

Mathuradas has not written to me again. But Shri Gangadharrao Deshpande received a letter from him. He says that Mathuradas is keeping good health. He has got good companions. As for the climate at Belgaum, it suited Mathuradas in the past. It is good that he has been patient and postponed going there right now. He may go there for a time after the rains stop.

All of us are keeping good health.

Are you reading anything? What is your usual activity? Do you meet anybody from among the women?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

418. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU

Y. M.,
August 24, 1932

MY DEAR PADMAJA,

The basket of lovely musambis came in last evening. I hope you got my letter posted to Hyderabad. Mother has begun the same pranks she used to play in London. She spoiled me there by bringing the choicest fruits and now she is using you to do the same thing.

Do tell me all about you. Remember me to all the friends of the Society.

Love.

BAPU

SHRIMATI PADMAJA NAIDU
C/O SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY
POONA CITY

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
419. LETTER TO NANI AND OTHERS
August 24, 1932

MY DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS, NANI\textsuperscript{1}, ANNA\textsuperscript{2}, GILLIAN\textsuperscript{3} AND LYDIA\textsuperscript{4},

I was delighted to have your sweet notes with funny drawings made by you. You do not mind my sending one note for all of you. After all you are all one in mind though not in body. Yes, it is little children like you who will stop all war. This means that you never quarrel with other boys and girls or among yourselves. You can’t stop big wars, if you carry on little wars yourselves.

How I wish I was with you to celebrate Nani’s and Anna’s birthday. May God bless them and bless you all. My kisses to you all, if you will let me kiss you and Nani will pass on my love to Esther. Won’s she?

BAPU

From a photostat: No. 2. Courtesy: National Archives of India.

420. LETTER TO PREMIBEHN JAIRAMDAS
August 24, 1932

MY DEAR PREM\textsuperscript{5},

I was glad to have your letter. As you make no reference to the Koran, it must have been sent by someone else. It came with your boxes. It is not that Sardar does not like the sweets you sent. But he did not want to eat them while here. It was for that reason that both the boxes were sent to Sarojini Devi. When will you learn Hindi? Tell me all about Father. We are all well

Our love to Mother, Arjun\textsuperscript{6} and yourself.

Yours,
BAPU

SHRI PREMIBEHN
PREMBHAVAN
MARKET ROAD
HYDERABAD, SIND

From a photostat: C. W. 9243. Courtesy: Jairamadas Doulatram

\textsuperscript{1} Son and daughter of Esther Menon
\textsuperscript{2} \textit{ibid}
\textsuperscript{3} Children whom Gandhiji had met in Selly Oak at the time of the Round Table Conference in 1931
\textsuperscript{4} \textit{ibid}
\textsuperscript{5} Daughter of Jairamadas Doulatram
\textsuperscript{6} Addressee’s brother
421. LETTER TO GOVINDDAS

August 24, 1932

We read from the papers about your wife’s illness. May God restore her to sound health. Sardar and Mahadev are with me, and we often remember you.

The Bombay Chronicle, 31-8-1932

422. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA P. KAMDAR

August 24, 1932

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA1,

Won’t you mind if I did not write to you for five months? I did not expect that you would be so lazy, and you do not even write your full address, so that I have to send my letter via the Ashram. Now give up your laziness. What was wrong with your health? write to me in detail about Rasik2 after meeting him. Which school do Tara and Vasant attend?

Sardar Vallabhbhai and Mahadevbhai are with me.

How do you spend your day? Do you read anything or spin? Have you got acquainted with Raihanabehn? How are your eyes?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7470. Also C. W. 4916. Courtesy: Hari-ichchha P. kamdar

---

1 Niece of Valji G. Desai
2 Addressee’s brother
423. LETTER TO RUKMINIDEVI BAZAJ

August 24, 1932

CHI. RUKMINI,

I got your letter, as also Radha’s. Try and get back the weight which you have lost. It was good that you went to see Devdas.

Blessings from

BAPU

SIT. BENARSIDAS
K 23/96 PANCHGANGA
BENARES CITY

From a photostat of the Gujarati; G. N. 9140

424. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

August 24, 1932

CHI. MANUDI,

I got your letter. Why do you still cry sometimes for Harilal? We should pray to God for his welfare. You must write to me regularly. I hope you do not display temper now, and pay proper attention to study. This time your handwriting was bad. I hope all the children of Ramibehn are in good health now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 1515. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

425. LETTER TO BALIBEHN VORA

August 24, 1932

CHI. BALI,

I got your letter after a long time. Please overcome your laziness in this matter. You must refuse to pay bills in Harilal’s name which you may receive. I hear that he is somewhere in Ahmedabad. My hope of his reforming is becoming dim day by day. All of us, he and we, are in God’s hands.
The pain in my elbow is not much to worry about.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 1516. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

426. LETTER TO NIRMALA B. MASHRUWALA

August 24, 1932

CHI. NIRMALA,

I got your letter. I have been getting proofs of Gitamanthan. I have got the proofs of Chapters X to XIII, but the proofs of the last are not complete. Why have the proofs of the earlier chapters been sent to me? When were these chapters written and who reads the proofs? When is the book expected to be published? who keeps Gomati company? How does she spend the day? And now the reply to Kishorelal’s letter. I have not yet been able to take up Gandhi Vichar Dohan. Just now my correspondence is rather heavy, and it has become very much more so after Dr. Mehta’s death. I have to write many letters to give what advice I can from here and get the necessary information for the purpose, and that leaves very little time for other things. I do not wish to overstrain myself or cut down on sleep to do anything. I do not even sacrifice for any work the short midday nap which I need. I can, therefore, read only during the time which is left after attending to other necessary things. During that time I read a little from the Upanishads and go through books on astronomy. This week I have not been able to read any Urdu book, though till now I could give some time at least for its study every day. The history of the Ashram is almost complete, but I have had to keep it aside for some time. If the predictions of the astrologers come true, all my plans would be in a mess. But the planets betray them time and again, and, therefore, as we all go on working without thinking of death, I go on working unmindful of their predictions. In fact all three of us go on working. Nobody has sent me the book on health as yet.

1 Addressee’s mother
2 By kishorelal Mashruwala
3 Vide “History of the satyagraha ashram”, 11-7-1932.
If I get it, I would go through it at the earliest opportunity. There is every likelihood of my making some changes in it. Experiments for improving spinning are going on very well. Mahadev spins yarn of 80 counts and Sardar has reached 40 counts. He will reach a still higher figure. The two spin on the Gandiva spinning-wheel and I spin on the Magan spinning-wheel. I can spin yarn of 30 counts on it, and hope to reach 40 counts. Sardar’s study of Sanskrit is progressing with the speed of a race horse. He is studying at present part VI of Satavlekar’s pathamala. In addition to that, he studies five verses from the Gita every day. He gives plenty of time to this study. It is indeed very good that you are learning Kannada. It is of course true that, if the script were the same, a good deal of time would be saved. But we will see about that when we have Ramarajya. It is my experience, however, that after we have learnt two or three scripts, more scripts give no trouble, for we discover points of similarity in all of them. I have read all the proofs of Gitamanthan which I have received. I liked the language. He has almost written a new Gita on the basis of the orginal. I have not yielded to the temptation of making changes in the book, for I feel that it would be improper to do so. I have thought it better to leave as it is the arrangement which kishorelal has adopted after careful thinking. There is no change in the condition of my left elbow. It gives me no trouble. All three of us are very well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 2884. Courtesy: Nirmalabehn Shroff

---

427. LETTER TO MANILAL JHAVERI

August 24, 1932

CHI. MANILAL,

I had to wait for quite some time for your letter, but at last it came. At present at least I get letters from all. Chhaganlal’s letters are perfectly satisfactory. But Jeki¹, Manekbai² and Ratilal Desai have expressed their dissatisfaction about him. From Chhaganlal’s letters, however, I can see no reason for distrusting him. All the same, I have put him some direct questions. If it becomes absolutely necessary, you will have to go to Rangoon. As far as possible I will not involve you in this. I have received Nanalal’s letter. If you have heard or if you hear anything or if you have any suggestion to make, please do not hesitate to write to me about it. The whole business is rather delicate. Let us hope that Doctor’s punya’ will work and everything will be all right.

¹ Jayakunvar, elder daughter of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta and wife of Manilal Doctor
² Wife of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta

I am not writing to Manjula, thinking that she must have returned by now. I wrote one letter to her at Jetpur. Letters for Gulab, Maganlal and Tilak are enclosed.

\[\text{Blessings from} \]
\[\text{BAPU} \]

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 5043. Courtesy: Dhirubhai Jhaveri

428. LETTER TO GULAB

August 24, 1932

CHI. GULAB,

What happened so that you required change of air for such a long time? Write to me in detail. I hope you have completely recovered now. Do you hear from Dhirubhai? Does Neelam write to you any time? How are they both getting along? How is Tilak? Do you feel any inconvenience because of him?

\[\text{Blessings from} \]
\[\text{BAPU} \]

From a photosat of the Gujarati: C. W. 5047. Courtesy: Dhirubhai Jhaveri

429. LETTER TO BENARSILAL BAZAJ

August 24, 1932

CHI. BENARSI,

I have your letter. I got a letter from Father saying that some one had written to him of my displeasure with you people and that it had caused him great pain. I have replied to him that you have

\[1\] Merit earned through goodness never given me any cause for displeasure. Who could have given him such wrong information?

Blessings from
BAPU

SIT. BENARSIDAS
K 23/96 PANCHGANGA
BENARES CITY

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 9140. Also C. W. 9450. Courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

430. LETTER TO BEGUM MOHAMMAD ALAM
August 24, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I was very glad to get your letter. I did get the letter from Doctor Saheb. It was only yesterday I learnt from it your address. I hope that Doctor Saheb is better.² Keep me informed. Please, convey to him vandemataram from Sardar, Mahadev and myself. We are all doing well by the grace of God. I hope you will find no difficulty in deciphering this letter.

Yours,
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Urdu: G. N. 25

431. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI
August 25, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your letter. I had told you in my letter in reply to yours, in which you had answered my questions, that I would take up the work when I got the other letters. “The other” means those which are to be published. I think it necessary to go through them. Your hesitation has made my work difficult. Unless Harilal’s bond with your as revealed in his letters is properly explained, his letters by themselves will have no value. That can be done only on the basis of the facts set out by you, those which I have gathered in conversations from you and those which are revealed in the letters. The task is going to be more difficult than I had thought. But I will try to do justice to it. At present I am in no mood to take up such work. That is certainly an obstacle in my path. Ultimately, God will let me do only what He has willed.

¹ Wife of Dr. Mohammad Alam
² Dr. Alam was in Lahore Central Jail and was ailing.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 1845

432. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI M. THAKKAR
August 25, 1932

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

I had got the letter which you wrote before leaving the jail. Before you get this letter, I expect to get your letter describing all your experiences [in jail]. Also give all the news you may have heard about the children, and tell me what you read and thought while in jail. Let me know whether you were comfortable in the company of so many women and how they used to behave. Give me any news about Madhavji¹ that you may have heard.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 6820

433. LETTER TO TARA N. MASHRUWALA
August 25, 1932

CHI. TARA,

I got your letter. It is of course the ideal thing to follow the rules applicable to the lowest class. But although following the rules applicable to ‘C’ class prisoners, we should try to secure, if we can, whatever food is necessary for our health. Many ‘C’ class prisoners get milk, etc. This need not cause any surprise. If we can secure such food without sacrificing our self-respect, it should be welcome; but if we do not get it, we should do without it and not feel unhappy. The regular practice of writing a daily diary, even in the fewest possible words, cures many undesirable habits in us. For a person who wishes to live truthfully, a daily diary serves as a sentinel. Now that you have decided to keep such a diary, cling to your resolution. I hope no effect of the injury which you had received on the head is left now.

¹ Addressee’s husband

It was expected that the creation of classes [of political prisoners] would give rise to jealousies. The only thing we can do is to remain unaffected by them and to forgo as far as possible the privileges accorded to the higher classes.

What is wrong with Nanabhai’s health? Manilal and Sushila wrote to me also. Manilal is in some trouble. He says that he did not get on well with Pragji. Perhaps people know about this there.

Nirmala writes to me occasionally and gives news about Kishorelal and Gomati.

Please write to me from time to time

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

All three of us are quite well. Perhaps you do not know that Sardar is studying Sanskrit with great energy. He also spins yarn of 40 counts. Mahadev has reached 80 counts.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 7521. Also C. W. 4997. Courtesy: Kanubhai Mashruwala

434. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

August 25, 1932

CHI. MANU,

A boy who laughs during prayers may not be called mad, but he certainly lacks manners. What ticket do you mean? Human beings are given names so that people may recognize them. If no name were given to you, how would anybody call out to you if he wanted you from among other boys?

If one does not make use of what one learns, one might as well have not learnt anything.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 7436. Courtesy : Valji G. Desai
435. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 25, 1932

CHI. TARAMATI,

I have your letter and that of Dilip. I replied to your previous letter yesterday. You must have received it. Hinkalam means the Belgaum jail, just as Yeravda means the Poona jail. Mathuradas has not been transferred. I too saw it in the newspapers. Explain thoroughly to Dilip the meaning of the verse in Chapter II of the Gita. He should not merely cram it. I am not writing separately to him today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

436. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

August 25, 1932

CHI. MRIDULA,

You say in your message that you have written me a letter. But no letter has been received here. The Major\(^1\) mentioned that you spoke about writing one. Now he does not remember whether or not he had received your letter. Write immediately. Tell your parents we remember them a great deal. Blessings to brothers and sisters.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11183. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

437. LETTER TO BHAU PANSE

August 26, 1932

CHI. BHAU,

It was a good thing that you sent me Vinoba’s interpretation of those verses. We have no ground for believing that that was the author’s meaning. But as I have explained in the preface to

\(^1\) Major M. G. Bhandari

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Anasaktiyoga, the utterances of poets go on acquiring ever new and revolutionary meanings, and that is as it should be. Vinoba has every right to interpret the verses as he has done. If, however, you are not satisfied with his interpretation, think over the meaning which I have given.¹ If even that does not satisfy you, you may give the verses any meaning which appeals to your reason provided it is not contrary to the chief aim of the Gita. And if you cannot do even that, you should leave the verses as ones which you cannot understand just now. If they do not yield a satisfactory meaning, that will not hinder your study of the Gita. Your daily programme of work is good. But there is no provision for rest in it. You should frame a programme which will help you to get over your headaches. For that, you should stop all work, except what you do as yajna, and take rest. You should lie down and put a mud-pack on your head. If you do this for one week, your headaches are bound to disappear. Also the pills given by Dr. Talwalkar will produce their effect. Headache is not a disease by itself, but is a symptom of some other disease or a warning that something is coming. If you take rest for a few days now, it will save you from a long rest afterwards. Reduce your reading. You have provided the time from 5.45 a.m. to 6.30 a.m., 9.15 a.m. to 10.30 a.m., and 11.45 a.m. to 12.30 p.m. for study of the Gita and reading of newspapers. You may stop both for the time being and take rest at that time. If that does not give you relief, reduce carpentry work a little. You should regard it as your moral duty to banish this disease and should try to do so by every possible means.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 6735. Also C. W. 4478. Courtesy: Bhau Panse

438. LETTER TO PADMA

August 26, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

This letter is meant only for you. You complain that I do not write to you, but I wrote several letters. Narandas has sent to me the statement of expenditure received from you. In it you have simply mentioned Rs. 30 as miscellaneous expenses. This is not correct. You should give details. The expenditure seems to have exceeded even the figure mentioned by Sitala Sahay in his letter to me. Be careful in spending money. Send details of the miscellaneous expenses. In my previous letter¹, I asked you to give a description of the new place and Sarojinidevi’s and your daily programme of work. I want Sheila’s too. What are her toys and games? How much has she grown? What is her height—how many feet and inches? Does she learn anything?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 6136. Also C. w. 3488. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi

439. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

August 26, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. I hope you do not exhibit different virtues from time to time in order to win from me the praise which they deserve. If you do that my praise will lose all its value².

You will not see anywhere else the fierce hatreds which you see in Kathiawar. I am not, therefore, surprised that you saw an exhibition of them too. Such exhibitions take place there without any preparation. A person like . . . is likely to get frozen by an exhibition of such hatreds, but it is strange that though . . . . lives in Rajkot she could not remove . . . ’s depression. I am sure she must have tied on his wrist the customary raksha on the Baley Day. But were they satisfied with a raksha of hand-spin yarn? It ought not to be beyond . . . ’s strength to discover the cause of . . .’s unhappiness and remove it . . . used to adore his wife, . . . My belief is that, though married, they observed brahmacharya . . .’s passing away was a great shock to . . . Perhaps deep down in his heart . . . wishes to marry. He cannot understand his own condition. But . . . should have as wife a girl with the same ideals as his own. Failing to get such a wife, if he gets a sister with strong idealism in her character, . . . may perhaps blossom out. I have supposed . . . to be a perfect brahmacharini. She cherishes friendship for . . . , and has idealism in her character. Since you wrote about . . .’s depression, I have been tempted to write this. If you think that I have understood . . .'s character correctly and that what I have suggested is not beyond her strength, you may safely send this letter to her. If you feel that this is beyond her strength or that it is not her work, you may ignore this part of the letter. . . . craves for pure love. But . . . is full of likes and dislikes. he can love very few persons and so remains discontented within himself all the time. Such a person feels little need for a wife. But [,if married,] he can remain absorbed in his wife. He must get the sisterly love of a woman who is free from passion. If . . . gets such a sister, his life will take a new turn.

¹ Vide “Letter to Padma”, 14-8-1932.
² The names in the following two paragraphs have been omitted.

Women in our society do not try to cultivate this virtue. They know how to be good wives, but do not know how to be good sisters. In order to be a good sister, one requires great capacity for renunciation. It seems self-evident to me that a wife can never be a perfect sister. A woman can be a true sister to the whole world. A wife can surrender herself only to one person. The capacity to be a good wife is a useful virtue, but it does not have to be cultivated, for a wife’s relation to her husband permits the satisfaction of physical desire. It is extremely difficult to cultivate the virtue required in one who would be a sister to the whole world. Only a woman for whom brahmacharya is a natural state and in whom the spirit of service has become the strongest impulse of her life can become that . . . has not given me the impression that she has risen so far, but I certainly believe that she has the capacity to rise so high. Maybe you have been instrumental in creating this impression in me. I have now said everything which I felt about this matter. I have indeed been striving to make you such a sister. It is a difficult task. Let the result be as God wills it.

You have given a good description of the exhibition. Your descriptions are always interesting to read and make one think.

You did right in returning to the Ashram for the Janmashtami festival. See that you overcome your anger. Do you know that Dhiru was simply not ready to go with you? Don’t get angry with him at any time. He is a child; you are not. If you win over Dhiru, it will be your victory; if you fail to do so, it will be your defeat.

Is there any test by which to judge whether a father and a mother are cultured? Who can say what the parents’ state of mind was at the time of conception? I think, therefore, that it is best to cling to the rule that what is good bears good fruit. If we cannot prove the truth of this rule in every individual case, the reason may be our ignorance and not the inadequacy of the rule.

Even if I did believe in Fate, its decrees could not be altered. Fate means the effect of past karma.

For saving the prostitutes from their profession, it is necessary that men should cease to be beasts. As long as we have beast-like men in the world, so long shall we have prostitutes. If any prostitutes give up their profession and turn a new leaf in their lives, the so-called “respectable” men will certainly come forward to marry them. It is not true that once a prostitute, always a prostitute.

The belief that in every country girls are abducted for the army seems exaggerated to me. In a well-governed country this cannot happen.

It is not correct to believe that residents of the Malabar coast can digest coconut even after they have left the air of that place. By mixing coconut with tandalja, you weakened the effect of tandalja. I have often included coconut in my diet. It didn’t agree with me. But it is highly probable that it is essential with other articles of food in regions where it grows.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 10300. Also C. W. 5747. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

440. LETTER TO RAMCHANDRA N. KHARE

August 26, 1932

CHI. RAMBHAI.

Was the Hindi of your letter your own or did you write it with Parasramji’s help? The handwriting was good. If the Hindi was your own, it was good. I hope to get a detailed description of the Janmashtami celebration.

A few sentences in English will give me some idea of your progress in that language.

BAPU

1 The addressee explains in Bapuna Patro—5: Ku. Premabehn Kantakne that she had asked Gandhiji whether he believed in Fate, and thinks that the reply should read: ‘Even if I did not believe in Fate . . .’.
The “Om” which you have carved is good enough, but I don’t think it is clear enough to be recognizable. How much time did it take you to carve it?

BAPU

From Gujarati : C.W. 296. Courtesy : Lakshmibehn N. Khare

441. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

August 26, 1932

How is it that you have not written to anybody since your imprisonment? A prisoner is surely entitled to write a letter immediately after he or she is brought to a jail. Do write now if you have not written any letter so far. If you can, improve your health this time. Do not hesitate to ask for or eat whatever food is necessary [for your health].

I would advise you to draw up a regular plan of study in jail and master the subjects in which you are weak at present. For instance, study Gujarati grammar carefully and acquire better command over the language. You know English and can, therefore, improve your proficiency in it too. You may take Kamaladevi’s help for that. Lilavatibehn can help you in Sanskrit. Improve your Marathi too. You should also learn something about matters which specially concern women. But all this is only a suggestion. If you do not like all these items, you may select whichever you like. If you do not like any of them, select something else of your own choice. I only want that you should fully utilize this precious opportunity for increasing your knowledge. Spinning, if permitted by the rules, prayers and keeping a diary—you must not omit any of these things.

All three of us are quite well. Father is studying Sanskrit with a speed which would astonish you. He is never found without a book in his hands. No young man is likely to show greater enthusiasm than he does. He also spins yarn of up to 40 counts, and makes envelopes. Mahadev spins yarn of up of 80 counts, besides studying French and Urdu. I spin on the Magan wheel, but rather

1 The addressee was arrested on August 11, 1932, and sentenced to 15 months.
2 Kamaladevi Chattopadhyaya
3 Lilavati Munshi
slowly. My study also is slow. Correspondence takes up a lot of my time. . . . \(^1\)

If you feel like writing to me any time and can include a letter to me in the number of letters permitted to you, do write.

Blessings from us all.

BAPU

MANIBEHN PATEL
PRISONER
BELGAUM

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—4 : Manibehn Patelne, pp. 85-6

442. LETTER TO D.B. KALELKKAR

August 26/27, 1932

CHI. KAKA,

After a long time and through Col. Doyle’s kindness I got a letter from you, dated 1 \([6-8-1932]\) \(^2\). The Colonel also told me today that you must have reached Ahmedabad today, and added that you should give up spinning, too, for some time in order to get rid of the pain in your back. I promised to convey this to you and to advise you to give up spinning as long as the pain persists. You should, therefore, give up spinning for some time. If you can spin on the takli standing and without getting tired, as you used to do here, you may do so, but you need not do even that. The only thing which I insist on your doing just now is to improve your health and get strong. Do get the area on the back where you feel the pain in the bone gently massaged. It is very good indeed that you can bathe with cold water. (Please let me know who are the other people with you there) . . . \(^3\)

I am writing to Hiralal about the book on astronomy. He has already sent me three of the books in your list. They are as follows: Stellar Maps, Khagolchitram and Hindu Astronomy. I am sending them with this. There is some history behind Khagolchitram. It was torn when it arrived here. . . . \(^4\) I shall soon be having a fairly good

\(^1\) Some lines were censored by the jail authorities.
\(^2\) Illegible in the source
\(^3\) Two-and-a-half lines were censored by the jail authorities.
\(^4\) ibid
collection of books on astronomy. There are three books by Jeans which are worth reading. If you have not read them, would you like me to send any of them? Hiralal has sent me Maeterlink’s book at your suggestion. I got it only two or three days ago. Since it was sent at your suggestion, you must have read it of course. If you want it, however, please let me know and I will send it too. I can easily recognize the morning constellations whose names you have given. You used to tell me names of many constellations but at that time they were only names to me. Now I can recognize most of them. I am able to read something at least every day. I have glanced through the chapters you have written. Though I have not read them carefully, I observed one deficiency in them. I felt, after reading a short sketch of Sir William Hershel’s life in Ball’s Story of the Sky, that you should give the names and short lives of Western astronomers, some of whom, as you yourself say, were men of great courage and spirit and of noble character. A modest effort to do this was made in Jyotirvilas. The book on astronomy which we wish to publish should be as perfect as possible and should give an account of all discoveries to date in the field. After reading the books of Jeans, I also feel that the book should give some knowledge about physics. This means that the scope of your undertaking becomes a little wider. I have merely thrown out a suggestion here. I don’t expect you to do all this while you are resting there. Perhaps it is beyond your capacity, and so I do not wish to analyse your chapters too critically. Moreover, the book should not be such as only highly educated persons can understand. It should be written with villagers in view. But you should attach more importance to your health than to even this undertaking. You should go on with the work only if you can improve your health at the same time and not at its cost.

How is it possible that I would not know Pundalik? I don’t think he is likely to have accompanied you there. The disease from which he is suffering is an awful one. I have no other remedy to suggest for it except fasting, cold hip-baths and enemas. The lower intestines will recover their normal position only if they are given complete rest. Pundalik’s complaint is known as prolapsus of the rectum. The effect of enema will be that the faeces will be expelled by the force of the water without the rectum slipping out. And since he will be fasting, the intestines will have no work to do and the rectum will not then slip out.

---

1 Pundalik Katagde, follower of Gangadharrao Deshpande

I think you will get this letter without much delay. Vallabhbhai’s study of Sanskrit is progressing with the speed of Indra’s horse. As soon as spinning is over, he picks up a book of Sanskrit. He has completed six parts of Satavlekar’s series and two chapters of the Gita. He does five verses every day. He becomes equally absorbed in spinning. He has reached as far as 40 counts. I don’t think any student of the Vidyapith can equal his capacity for hard work. Mahadev’s study of French and Urdu is progressing. He has reached as far as 80 counts. I had gone as far as 53 counts on the Gandiva spinning-wheel, but I have gone back to the Magan spinning-wheel to prevent harm to the left elbow. I have not been able to rise above 30 counts on it. In addition to astronomy, I also study Urdu a little. Correspondence takes up a great deal of time. After Dr. Mehta’s death, I have had to write numerous letters concerning the affairs of his family. I suppose you have heard about his death. He had got a cut in a foot with a piece of glass and the wound became septic. The leg had to be amputated. The operation was successful, but afterwards he developed double pneumonia which proved fatal. This is the fourth week since he died.

Maganlal (Dr. Mehta’s) must have landed in Bombay today. He had gone to England. . . .

Blessings from

BAPU

August 27, 1932

. . . I had almost completed the history of the Ashram. After revising what I had written, I was about to proceed further but had to leave the work aside. I have not been able to find time for it since then. I am trying to do so. I have not been able to write it in as much detail as you may have thought. I believe, however, that it will contain my views in brief on all matters.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9488. Courtesy: D.B. Kalelkar

1 Seven-and-a-quarter lines were censored by the jail authorities.
2 The first line was censored by the jail authorities.
443. LETTER TO SULOCHANA
August 27, 1932

CHI. SULOCHANA,

I got your letter. You seem to have made good progress. learn carding as soon as you can. You make mistakes in your letters. You should form the habit of going through a letter after writing it. Get your letters revised by somebody. With a little effort, you will also be able to improve your handwriting.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1737

444. LETTER TO VIMALA JOSHI
August 27, 1932

CHI. VIMU,

Your handwriting is indeed very bad and yet I like your letter. Now see that your eyes are cured soon. What is wrong with them? It would be very good if you will now settle down in the Ashram.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5311

445. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI
August 27, 1932

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your letter. You have been long enough in the Ashram now. I had expected from you a report of your observations without my asking for it, but I have received none till this day. Rama did send hers, though it was a short one, and secured a long letter from me in reply. You will, no doubt, read it. I want a detailed report from you. I do not mind whether it is favourable or unfavourable, so long as it gives your sincere impressions.

Do not neglect (the condition of) Vimu’s eyes.¹ A disease of the eye should be treated as soon as its earliest symptoms are observed. Does Vimu still love mischief as much as she used to, or has she become a little more serious? It would be a good thing if Dhiru also comes over. How did he spend his time?

¹ Vide the preceding item.

Did you go and see the Vidyapith library? What is the matter with Amina? Did you visit the grave?

I am sure you must have called on Punjabhai. He is nearing the end, it seems.

Shankar met me. He seems to be repenting for what he did.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5506

446. LETTER TO CHAMPABEHN R. MEHTA

August 27, 1932

CHI. CHAMPA,

I got all your letters. I have received a copy of Doctor’s instructions. He has not signed the document, but I believe the instructions will be carried out. Why do you worry? I can never abandon you. you may, if you choose, reject my advice, and if you do so it will not hurt me. I can only try to act as your father but Prabhashankar is your real father and it would be but natural if you prefer his advice to mine. In this matter, however, you should use your reason as much as possible. if it does not help you, you should naturally follow the advice of your father. I am of course making efforts to see if Prabhashankar and I can agree. But I have not been able to understand him. I do not like, or do not understand, some of his ways. Some of his views seem devious to me. I am trying to persuade him to change his attitude. I will write to him. if we can agree, there will be no problem for you. But even if we do not agree, you need not worry. Who can rob you of what is yours? Have faith in God. You are not yet being asked to do anything. Have patience and wait. Look after the children. I hope those of them who were ill are all right now.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8754. Also C.W. 1622. Courtesy: Champabehn R. Mehta

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
447. LETTER TO NARMADABEHN RANA

August 27, 1932

CHI. NARMADA,

You seem to be very greedy. You have only one letter to write, and so you write a long one. I have many letters to write. How much time would it take me if I made them long? But I like your being greedy. I say in every letter all that I wish to say. You should improve your handwriting. Keep some space between lines and words.

If you remain firm and courteous, all your relatives will come round.

It is best to speak very little. I suppose you have obtained Narayandas’s permission for observing silence. Who teaches you Gujarati?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2761. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N. Pathak

448. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

August 27, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

Your letters are always nice. the summary of Rajaji’s discourse which you have sent me is good.

I know why you are having pain in the back. Find it out from my letter to Anandi and then write more about it.

Why are the slivers not up to the mark? Why don’t you tell Narandasbhai about it?

BAPU

From the Gujarati original; C.W. 9916. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

449. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,

August 27, 1932

CHI. MANGALA,

Lately you have stopped writing. Why? How do you propose to repay those from whom you received presents?
Indu’s writes to me that you, Nirmala and Kanu are not on talking terms with him. What can be the reason for this? Write to me in detail. Start talking to him if possible. We cannot stop talking to anyone.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11101. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

450. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

August 25/28, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got on Tuesday the mail posted by you. Parvati’s letter moves one to pity. If Budhabhai will not listen, what can you do? I am in intentionally not writing to Parvati. Comfort her as much as you can.
When you wish me to write to both or one of them, I will do so.

I see from kusum’s letter that you have to carry a fairly heavy burden of work these days. Whatever the demands of work, you should take enough sleep and snatch at least half an hour’s rest in the afternoon. It is good that Rajaji has come over as also Mirabehn. I felt very happy. why is it necessary for Amina to avoid milk, ghee and sugar? What is she suffering from? I expect the women there look after her properly. I hope you had understood that the letter for Ba which I sent last week was to be delivered to her after she was released.
I had got an impression that she was to be released in a day or two.
Will parvati patki now live in Khamgaon permanently? It was rather amusing that you did not easily follow what I had written about the letter from Italy. That happens sometimes.

If we can now spin fine yarn, the spinning-wheels, spindles and slivers are much more responsible for success than our own effort.
Now that all of us are trying to spin yarn of fine count, there should be no slivers of inferior quality in the Ashram. Does every spinner use

1 Indu N. Parekh
2 Nirmala Desai, step-sister of Mahadev Desai
3 Kanu Gandhi
4 The article “Action—Thoughtful and Thoughtless”, 28-8-1932, was sent along with this letter; vide “Action—Thoughtful and Thoughtless”, 28-8-1932.
5 A couple who had come to live near the Ashram
6 ibid
slivers made by himself, or do the slivers get mixed up? I think if everyone would spin with his own slivers, the quality of carding would improve very much. If we make fine yarn as defined by us the centre round which everything else should revolve, every process from the sowing of cotton seeds to the weaving of the cloth is bound to become perfect. We shall then have to evolve the best quality seeds, improve the soil, look to the quality of the manure, pay careful attention to the manner of separating the cotton from the pods, and so on. Fine yarn means yarn uniformly of not less than 40 counts, which would stand comparison with good mill yarn of the same count and from which a weaver can weave cloth with ease. I chose the figure of 40 in this definition because it is possible to spin yarn of lower count than that with some effort from slivers of inferior quality, but not yarn of 40 counts. please let me know what inconvenience you think one feels in the posture in which one has to sit for spinning on the Gandiva spinning-wheel. According to me, one of the many excellences of this wheel is that you can spin on it while sitting in any position. One can sit on a chair or a stool, put the spinning-wheel on a box or a bench and spin. You can keep it to your left or right, or even in front. When travelling in a train, I put it on the same berth on which I sit and spin. There will be no harm if Chhakkaddas's slivers arrive after some time. If you have not sent Keshu's slivers before you send Chhakkaddas's, you may send the two together with a sign to identify Keshu's. What is the count of the yarn which Abbas spins? Please let me know the length and circumference of his spindle. You need not worry if you cannot spin yarn of more than 20-22 counts. I would be satisfied with the quality of yarn that you can spin with the best slivers and the thinnest spindle.

I did not receive the Anantapur report even during this week. Who has signed the receipt which you have got? You may tell parasram what you consider necessary. Why did Pyarelal leave in such haste? Padma must send details of miscellaneous expenses. Read the letter¹ which I have written to her. What you have written to Mahavir’s uncle is quite correct. I was glad to learn that Jivanlal’s brother’s wife had come there. Has she had any education?

Your question about the Dattatreya temple is good. I don’t look upon the shrine as a temple. I think that it is a form of a samadhi'. In any case, it cannot be used as a public temple. I am also not inclined to make it a private temple, though it seems to me that, if somebody goes and worships at the shrine, he cannot be forbidden. Please find out and let me know what panditji believes and what he desires that we should do. Has any issue been raised about this matter just now?

¹Vide “Letter to Padma”, 26-8-1932.

Who wrote to you and suggested that some amount should be kept with Trivedi? There are now very few women left in the jail here. Trivedi would not like our keeping any such amount with him. If, however, you think it necessary, you may do that with his consent. I don’t see any necessity of it. If at any time we specially require something, we can write to the Ashram, and, if we require it urgently, I would feel no hesitation even in obtaining it from Trivedi. Probably Ramabehn, Vasumati and others are there now. Know their views also.

Read my letter to Liladhar. Do only what you think right. Whose idea was the exhibition at Rajkot? Was the entire burden on Jamnadas?

August 26, 1932

If the discharge from Manjula’s ear persists, consult Dr. Talwalkar and try the remedy which he advises. Ask Agam Giri a straight question, whether he is dissatisfied in any way with the Giri family, or whether he has any suggestion to make. Does Mahavir write to you regularly? To me he does not. When he had complaints to make, he wrote frequently enough.

August 27, 1932

Kaka has been transferred to the prison there. Apply for permission to see him. I have written to Ba directly this time. I don’t believe that she can have lost 16 pounds of weights. If she lost so much weight, she would become a mere skeleton. Have you seen her? Make a more careful inquiry. How much milk does she consume? What other food does she eat?

Send to the Superintendent by registered post the postal acknowledgement for the registration of the Anantapur report. Keep with you a copy of the acknowledgement. When you send it, inform me too. I have still not got these papers.

---

1 A structure over a place where a body is buried or cremated
2 Prof. Jaishankar P. Trivedi of Poona Agricultural College, who usually supplied the needs of the Ashram members lodged in the Yeravda Central Prison
See my letter to Indu. There seems to be some estrangement between him on the one hand and Kanu, Mangala and Nirmala on the other. Please inquire what the matter is. Indu has become eager to learn English. Personally, I think it would be wise to let him occupy his mind in learning English if he studies nothing else.

I got your letter of the 25th posted separately. When you say four heads of cattle, do you mean cows or bullocks? What was the loss? What were the injections, and for what were they given? You did right in asking Narayanappa to leave. We have endured much from him. It seems that Bhagwanji was right in his judgment. But I don’t believe that we made a mistake in trusting Narayanappa. A person in a responsible position ought not to disqualify anybody on someone’s word, unless he is himself convinced. Our policy had this good result, that Narayanappa has now disqualified himself.

I hope Kusum is not nervous in the slightest degree. There is no reason at all to become nervous.

The ceremonial reading of holy works on the Janmashtami day was very well done. What is the number in the Ashram just now? How many are women, and how many men? How many are boys and girls under sixteen? And how many labourers?

August 28, 1932

Read Nimu’s letter and persuade her to start eating ghee. Ramdas’s argument is correct. There has been no change in my food—bajri, bananas, almonds, oranges and green vegetables. Constipation has disappeared completely. In other respects also the health is good. Even then, I will certainly start taking milk and see the effect. I want to find out whether bajri helps in preventing constipation in spite of my taking milk. I also see that green vegetables play a big part in helping complete evacuation.

Take the necessary steps immediately to see that the slivers made are of the finest quality. You need not worry if there is decrease in the quantity of slivers for some time, but pay your attention to ensuring that the work is neat and careful and the slivers are of the best quality, and that there is minimum waste.

There are 54 letters in all.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati : M. M. U./I. Also C. W. 8247. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932 403
I wrote about reading and reflection. Today I wish to say something about working and thinking. According to me, real education consists in learning the art of thinking. If we can master it, everything else will follow in beautiful order.

The woman in the story who, on seeing the face of the mongoose red with blood threw her pot of water at it, acted thoughtlessly, and repented afterwards for killing the creature which had saved the life of her son. She could not wipe the stain of this act from her mind for the whole of her life. The loss of the pot and the water are not even worth mentioning, so big was her crime.

This is an extreme illustration, but it serves to drive home the idea we are discussing. If we do all our work in the Ashram after careful thought, there would be more peace, our efficiency would increase much time would be saved and we would find new interest in our work every day. We employ cattle for working the water-mill and the animal labours the whole day, but its knowledge does not increase and it feels no interest in its work. If there was none to goad it, the animal would not go round. But we are human beings. The [Gujarati] word manas comes from manushya, and the latter means, literally, one who thinks, who knows. We ought not to live or act like animals.

We clean lavatories. If we don’t think about it, we would feel the work to be low and degrading and eagerly wish that we could be saved from it. If, however, we think about it, we would realize that it was our moral duty to do it. To clean it means to make the place perfectly clean, to bury the contents of the bucket carefully, to keep in a clean condition the things with which we do the work, and to examine the contents. I there is any blood or the stink is very offensive or if there are worms, we may conclude that somebody is ill. We should then find out who that person is. We would of course know who uses a lavatory. If, while cleaning it we discover that the stool is not properly covered with dust or a portion has fallen outside

---

1 This was sent along with “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 25/28-8-1932; vide the proceeding item.
2 Vide “Reading and Reflection-I”, 14-8-1932 and “Reading and Reflection-II”, 21-8-1932.
3 Human being
4 ibid
the bucket or that the urine has fallen outside it we should find out the guilty person and explain the matter politely to him. All this will be done only by a person who does the work in a spirit of service. This means that as we think daily more carefully about our work, it will be done better and more easily every day and cease to be boring and become interesting. I have not here examined the question of cleaning lavatories from every possible point of view. I have merely mentioned it by way of illustration.

Let us take another example, spinning for yajna. If we do this work with careful thought, we would enjoy it, too, immensely and there would be indefinite progress in the art of spinning. If everybody spun with careful thought, we would make many discoveries and spin yarn of the finest quality.

And the same is true about prayer. What is prayer? Why do we pray? Why do we observe silence? Why do we use prayers in Sanskrit, and not in Gujarati, Marathi or Hindi? We can think about these and many other questions and make our prayer a tremendous force, whereas it seems to me that we think the least about this subject.

The Gita's statement, “Yoga is skill in work”, is a profound thought. Yoga means union. Union with God is yoga. Mother Gita teaches that such union can be achieved without difficulty by skill in work. Anyone who aspires to cultivate such skill must become absorbed in the work and devote all his thought to it. Somebody who used to spin on the takli and applied his mind to the work made the important invention of the spinning-wheel, and somebody who used the spinning-wheel with careful thought invented a spinning-machine with thousands of spindles. According to me, that person exercised his intellect brilliantly, but did not use his heart. Hence, it is not enough that we should think. Our thinking should be for a good end and should be inspired by concern for dharma. However, in contrast to absence of thinking the power of intellect of the inventor of the spinning-machine certainly deserves to be admired.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M. M. U./II

1 Bhagavad Gita, II. 50
452. LETTER TO ELIZABETH F. HOWARD
August 28, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

You are quite right in addressing me as ‘friend’! I continue to call you ‘sister’. Perhaps it is more affectionate than ‘friend’. But you may take whatever appeals to you as better.

It was good of you to have given me a brief description of your meeting. This fellowship is a difficult thing. It can come only through constant practice in all walks of life and among all the different races and nationalities.

I had read the letter you sent to Mahadev Desai. I have preserved the beautiful verses you had copied. Mahadev Desai wishes to be remembered to you.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G. N. 863

453. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU
August 28, 1932.

MY DEAR PADMAJA,

Should bad handwriting be hereditary? Why should you copy Mother’s vices? Being India’s only poetess, she can afford to write a bad hand and do many other bad things. But you have no excuse. Do you know how long it took Mahadev to decipher your letter? Supposing you were to try to write a passable hand and give the trial some of your idle moments you will be surprised at your success. You think a pot is calling Miss Kettle black, do you? Well, I am prepared to submit to a comparative test and I know that in this at least I should beat you hollow. My handwriting is wretched, I admit, but not so indecipherable as yours. Now try to be good and render voluntary obedience to the slave-driver. I hope you got my p. c. which was sent to acknowledge the oranges you sent.¹

Love.

BAPU

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers’. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ Presumably Fellowship of Reconciliation
² Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 2/7-8-1932.
Y. M.,
August 28, 1932

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. I have been able to go up to 30 counts on the Magan charkha up to now. I shall be satisfied if I go up to 40 counts. The speed is very slow. It does not go beyond a hundred rounds an hour. It may go beyond that if I draw thick yarn. But I do not wish to do so. The cause of the noise that the wheel was making was discovered. Mahadev guessed it. The rod under the plate was broken and when the plate stopped functioning altogether the defect was discovered. On the rod being replaced the noise stopped and the plate also started functioning perfectly. I, too, believe with you that there is much room for improvement. None has occurred to me yet. I have got a box fixed on the plant, in which I keep the tools, spindle, etc. I do not consider this an improvement. For fine yarn we must have fine spring and fine spindle. But I doubt if a fine spindle would work. In the Ashram there is a spinning-wheel received from Darjeeling which can be worked with the foot. Examine it.

It would be sufficient if you named the Almora Ashram just Shail Ashram. The word Ashram itself carries a religious meaning and religion includes service. Janasthan sounds pompous. Kinkarashram is all right but does not sound pleasant. You can call it Shail Udyog Mandir. But I favour Shail Ashram. Devaki Nandan uses the word Sevashram and so it is clear that you cannot use it.

It is well that you paid a visit to Rajkot. It would be good if you rushed to Almora now. It is desirable that you should go there in good health. You may then devote yourself wholly to building the Ashram there as your only duty without having to worry about your health. After going there do not build castles in the air; but having formed a particular plan resolve not to go beyond it, nor even to think of doing so. As for writing, complete the work on the Ramayana, etc., if possible. Concentration on improving the Magan charkha, spinning and weaving the local cotton and wool and the necessary carpentry connected with it—these should be enough work. Since there is land it will certainly be possible to grow vegetables and fruit trees. Keep an account of every pie. Never go beyond the budget. Write to me as long as I am permitted to receive letters. Keep up the practice of repeating Ramanama whether or not you feel any benefit from it. There is no doubt that ultimately it will purify and steady your mind.

From the Gujarati original: Gandhi Nidhi File. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

455. LETTER TO NANIBEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 28, 1932

CHI. NANIBEHN,

I have been awaiting your letter every week. But it seems you have come out with a vow not to write. Write to me in detail and soon.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Manavtana Prahari—Pannalal Jhaveri, p. 26

456. LETTER TO SUNDERBEHN BHAGVAT

August 28, 1932

CHI. SUNDERBEHN¹,

I got your letter. All three of us send our blessings to you and Deshpande². We hope that your union will be happy, that both of you will live long and devote yourselves completely to service. Only then will your union be said to have justified itself.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 2169

¹ Now Sushilabai
² Pandurang Ganesh Deshpande
August 28, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I got your small booklet of nine pages. I could hardly hold my sides with laughter. I remember to have laughed like this only once in my youth when I had drunk some bhang. But please do not conclude from this that you should go on sending amusing books. It is for you to teach the boys to say sthira or khade ho instead of “stop”. Under the intoxicating effect of your letter, I mix Hindi with Gujarati. I cannot explain from here how you can persuade the boys to do so. They must feel the power of your love and knowledge so that they will start using a Hindi or Urdu word for “stop”. As you become more and more frank and loving and humble, those who are learning Hindi will increasingly come to love the language. Any boy or boys who acquire sufficient proficiency in Hindi to be able to teach it to small children my certainly be given charge of their class.

By showing that even Arjuna gets exhausted and that no one remains alive, the author of the Mahabharata has demonstrated the folly of armed war. The Lord’s description of Himself in the Gita is put by the author in His mouth. In fact God is formless and speaks or does nothing. The question, then, is whether such words can be put in God’s mouth. I feel that it can certainly be done. God its omnipotent and omniscient. Anything that an omniscient Being speaks is perfect truth, and therefore it cannot be described as boasting. Such description of himself by a human being would not be proper, since man cannot know his strength and power rightly. If, however, in reply to a question, a man gives his correct height, his doing so is not boasting but simple statement of truth. If a person who is five feet tall says that he is four feet tall, that is not humility on his part. It is either inexcusable ignorance or hypocrisy.

Lady Cat and her children are always enjoying themselves and turn up at meal-times to claim their share. They never touch anything except what is offered to them.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 6102. Also C. W. 3424. Courtesy: parasram Mehrotra

1 This sentence is in Hindi.
458. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

August 28, 1932

BHAI KHAMBHATTA,

I got your letter and the ointment sent by you. I have started using the ointment. I will let you know the result.

Blessings to you both from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 6603. Also C.W. 4389. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

459. LETTER TO PYARELAL NAYAR

August 28, 1932

Vallabhbhai is running with the speed of an Arab horse. He is never found without a book about Sanskrit in his hands. I had not hoped for this. Nobody can equal him in the art of making envelopes. He makes them without using measurements and is guided only by his eyes in cutting the paper, and still he does not seem to take much time. His orderliness is simply wonderful. If there is anything which he has to do, he does not leave it to his memory. He does it immediately. From the time that he started spinning, he always spins at the fixed time, and so the quantity of yarn spun and the speed of spinning are increasing daily. He rarely forgets anything which he takes up. With such orderliness, there can be no confusion any time.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 386

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 6603. Also C.W. 4389. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta
460. LETTER TO S. D. SATAVLEKAR

August 28, 1932

BHAI SATAVLEKAR,

I feel somewhat anxious as I have sent you three letters but have received no reply.¹

Yours,

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

In one of the letters I have made a request for another set of the Sanskrit Readers.

From Hindi: C. W. 4765. Courtesy: S. D. Satavlekar

461. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

August 28, 1932

DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,

I prefer to write to you in Urdu unless you forbid it. It is helpful to take full rest during the menstrual period. On other days do only as much work as Narandas assigns to you. One whose heart is pure and free of passions has nothing to hide from the world. I do not know of any book that deals with your pain. I shall look for it.

You can consult Mrs. Lazarus, she ought to know. Dr. Sharma must have received my letter. Your Hindi script is good. Keep writing a little in this way. How long is Kudsia to stay there?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G. N. 255

462. LETTER TO A GIRL

August 28, 1932

I would certainly be happy if you could remain unmarried for your whole life. But I have known many boys and girls deceive themselves. Anybody who wants to observe lifelong brahmacharya

¹ The addressee’s silence was due to the prolonged and serious illness of his son.
must be perfectly truthful and must hide nothing. He or she should also know what brahmacharya means. It is a difficult job to control carnal desire. Anybody who would do so should refrain from all forms of indulgence. That is, he should do everything not for the pleasure he may get from it but because it is necessary to do it. Accordingly, he should do nothing that is not necessary. This rule applies to eating, working, resting, dressing and all other activities. I would be happy if you have the strength for all this. If you do not have it, you should humbly admit the fact and do what all other girls do. Nobody will blame you for that. One should attempt nothing that is beyond one’s capacity.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 386

463. LETTER TO A GIRL
August 28, 1932

You should know the past life of the person to whom you are betrothed. And if you do not like him, you should ask your people to break off the engagement. You should not be afraid to plainly refuse to marry him. If, however, you wish to act thus, you must give up false shame, though you should not give up humility and should be ready to suffer the consequences. A person who wishes to act in this manner should have such purity of character that it cannot but produce an effect on other people.

When you get angry, you should keep silent and overcome your anger by repeating Ramanama.

[From Gujarati]
Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 385-6

464. A LETTER
August 28, 1932

The suggestion for five minutes’ silence during the evening prayer was mine. It would certainly be fine if this practice was adopted at both times. If all those present are sincere about observing silence, the noise is bound to stop. The children also will get used to remaining silent for five minutes. I have even attended meetings where silence was observed for half an hour. That was in England. In our country we attach great importance to voluntary silence. Samadhi is a kind of silence. The word muni also is derived from a word meaning silence. It is true that at first we feel sleepy or all kinds of thoughts come to us during the period of silence. But silence is necessary to overcome these very weaknesses. We are used to speaking and hearing all the time and, therefore, find it difficult to observe silence. After a little practice we shall come to like it and the peace which we shall feel then will be heavenly. As lovers of truth, we should understand the true meaning of silence and try to observe it in a manner which will accord with that meaning. Even during silence, one can repeat Ramanama. The real thing is that our minds should be ready for silence. A little reflection will reveal its importance. Cannot we sit quietly for five minutes in an assembly? Have you gone to see a play at any time? In many theatres talking is forbidden. An enthusiast like me would take his seat one hour before the time. The pleasure from the play would make it possible for him to remain silent for one hour. But this is not all. A play lasts for four to five hours. Do not the spectators have to remain quiet all that time? But we don’t mind that. Since the mind is ready for silence at that time, it is not felt irksome. Why, then, should it be difficult to observe five minutes’ silence for love of God? If there is any error in this reasoning, please point it out to me, and if there is none, observe the silence willingly and be my advocate and defend it before those who oppose it.

But we should not believe that only such short-comings as we have are worth tolerating. My view is that we should keep good relations with all who are striving for self-improvement. Tulsidas tells us that even God shuns people who love their short-comings, that is, look upon them as virtues.

[From Gujarati]

---

1 The last stage in yoga
465. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS
August 28, 1932

Learn well everything which the Ashram has to teach. Remember that the most important thing to be learnt is truth.

[From Gujarati]
_Mahadevbhai Diary, Vol. I, p. 385_

466. LETTER TO SUSHILABEHN GANDHI
August 29, 1932

CHI. SUSHILA,

I got your letter, but I have not received Manilal’s. I appreciate your asking the question, but you need not seek the advice of elders and be guided by it in every matter. I have explained the basic principles as well as I could. Bear in mind as many of them as you have been able to assimilate and do what seems best to you both. How long will you go on consulting me? You should consult the self within, and do as that inner voice tells you or obey it as well as you can. I hope you remember that your question was about khadi.

The matter of the lease must be over now. I hope you got all my letters. I wrote one more letter after reading Mr. Ritch’s letter. I hope Manilal got it.

At the moment it seems that Devdas has recovered completely. All three of us are well. Sardar’s Sanskrit is progressing with great speed.

Even if Manilal is lazy in writing to me, you should not be so.
I hope you met, Maharajkunvar and his family.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 4794

467. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA
August 29, 1932

BHAI NANABHAI,

I got your and Sushila’s letter. I have replied to her that in such matters she need not consult elders. Both of them should be guided by their inner voice and follow it to the best of their ability. I have not yet received Manilal’s letter. Perhaps it will arrive with the Ashram post. All three of us are quite well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 6685. Also C. W. 4330. Courtesy: Kanubhai Mashruwala

468. LETTER TO HIRALAL

August 29, 1932

I look upon myself as slow-witted. There are many things which I take more time to understand than other people. But that does not trouble me. There is always a limit to the growth of the intellect but none to that of the heart.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhai Diary, Vol. I. p. 389

469. LETTER TO FULCHAND B. SHAH

August 30, 1932

BHAIISHRI FULCHAND,

I got your letter of the 21st. I see that my letter of July 3 was given to you on August 14. If it was kept back there all that time, it would be better if you ask me to address my letter to another prisoner whose turn for receiving a letter comes earlier than yours and who does not expect a letter from anybody else. In this way you will get my letter earlier. I always reply immediately to a letter from any of you. If we look upon the whole country as our—and we do so—then everybody should sincerely feel that every drop of water or blade of grass anywhere in the country belongs to us. We would then use with the utmost economy anything we get in any part of the country, even if it is regarded as somebody else’s property. Even the things which are in our possession have been produced from the wealth of this country. How can we use things belonging to other people differently from those that belong to us, after we have realized that the whole country is ours? It is very necessary that, during this period of seclusion [in jail], all of us should ponder over this again and again and understand it properly. There is a large number of boys in your jail, and that increases the responsibility of the grown-ups. Who supplied you all those books of literature? It is very good indeed that the prisoners there have been learning new languages and crafts. I will tell you one thing in order to inspire greater enthusiasm among you all. Here Sardar has been studying Sanskrit like a very enthusiastic young man. He has completed six parts of Satavlekar’s Pathamala and learns five verses from the Gita daily. He is in Chapter III just now. He gives to it whatever free time he gets. His progress is wonderful. He spins also, and gives between two and two and a half hours to this work. He spins yarn of 40 counts. All this is in addition to his daily work of making envelopes. All paper with one side blank or all other useless paper on which he can lay his hands is turned into envelopes. As a result, for the last three or four months we have not had to spend money for buying a single envelope. This is the meaning of turning dust into gold. He adds to the wealth of the country, no matter in how small a measure. Similarly, we exercise the utmost economy in using everything. Mahadev is learning French and Urdu and spins yarn of up to 80 counts. Brelvi is studying French, and also intends to take up Sanskrit afterwards. He, for his part, teaches Urdu to some Maharashtrian prisoners who are with him. Gangadharrao is learning Gujarati. Kishorelal is learning Kannada in Nasik [jail] with the help of some kannadigas. You have been doing good work there, of course. I have mentioned all this to encourage you in your efforts.

1 Presumably Hiralal Shah

If we cannot expect ideal behaviour from the Ashram boys, from whom else can we expect it? I am, therefore, not surprised that you give them your certificate. Vithal must have been released now. But if he is not released, please tell him that according to me, his mother’s death was a deliverance for her, and, therefore, he should not grieve over it. He is a sensible man and has learnt to look upon death as a friend. I am not surprised to learn about Ravishankar’s devoted service. Has his constipation been cured, or does he still suffer from it? What is the news of his son who was at Vedchhi? Where is he now? We often talk about you all and think of you.

Blessings to all friends from BAPU

From Gujarati: C. W. 9445-a Courtesy: Chandrakant F. Shah

1 Presumably S. A. Brelvi, Editor, The Bombay Chronicle
470. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

August 30, 1932

CHI BRAJKISAN,

Well, why didn’t you mention it earlier? I got your letters but it appears as if you have not received mine. One letter in particular was quite long as it contained the replies to your queries. How is your health? How did you find your companions? Where is Krishnan Nair? Sardar and Mahadev remember you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi : G. N. 2393

471. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 31, 1932

CHI. MIRA,

I got your regular letter today. I am glad you are feeling better in body. your recipe is not of use for me. That requires procuring goat’s milk butter. I do not want to go to that trouble. And I do not need to, as I am keeping excellent health without. I have, therefore, no excuse for it either. For, we may not concoct dishes for the pleasure of palate. I have done enough of that for many years, you need the change especially there. I don’t hesitate to procure what I fancy I need for the body. Today I have taken milk. But I propose to continue bajri and see whether with milk it continues to keep the bowels in order. Without milk it has produced most excellent results. This may not be true of all constitutions. I have discovered this that each body has its own peculiarities which have to be found out.

Tell little Lakshmi that I got her sweet little note before she was locked up. I expect her to make the very best use of the time she has now got. I am glad too that Shantabehn and Gangabehn are also with you. Tell them they must make up their Gujarati and make their Hindi pucca. And give them love on behalf of us all.

I was quite prepared for the news that you will not be removed from there. You ought to be able to keep well there also. Narandas wrote to me about your orders for ghee and dates. I hope you have both. I dropped dates because I could not get good ones weevils-free. You are able to take the hard, dry thing called kharek\(^1\). I cannot.

1 Which said: “At last, Bapu, I too am entering the temple of Liberty . . .”

I hope you will have permission to see some friends at least. But if you do not, after all we have no strangers. All strangers are friends including criminals as also the jailors. We have here learnt to recognize friends among animals. We have a cat who is a revelation. And if we had vision enough, we should appreciate the language of trees and plants and value their friendship.

Love from us all.

BAPU

---

472. LETTER TO KUSUMBEHN DESAI

August 31, 1932

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your letter. You must have got my letter in which I have explained which letters I meant. I can see from here your vacillation. But it is bound to give place one day to steadiness of mind. I will not give up my faith.

Do you write any time to Khurshedbehn? All three of us are doing well. You probably know that Sardar is going ahead fast with his study of Sanskrit.

BAPU

---

473. LETTER TO VASUDEV G. JOSHI

August 31, 1932

BHAJ VASUKAKA,

Narandas has sent me the letter which you wrote to him. It overflows with your love. But I am afraid I cannot avail myself of that love. There is a great difference between your complaint and mine. Ordinarily I felt nothing. I feel the pain only when I move the arm in a certain manner. In any case the pain in not increasing, and it causes no discomfort. Doctors have only advised rest. That being so, even if I

---

1 Dried dates
2 Dadabhai Naoroji’s grand-daughter
3 Proprietor of the Chitrashala Press, Poona, and a close associate of Bal Gangadhar Tilak wished to be examined by Dr. Deshmukh, probably the authorities would not be permitted to call him in. They would be allowed to call in a doctor from outside only if there was cause to fear something serious. There is no such cause in my case, and my health is perfectly good in other respects. I will, therefore, cherish your love for the present and avail myself of it only if it becomes necessary. please thank Dr. Deshmukh on my behalf for his willingness to come.

When you were here, Sardar often talked about you and was even eager to meet you. But that was impossible, of course.

We were filled with joy to read that, though you suffered such pain in the leg, you did not mind it. May you live long.

You will be glad to know that Sardar has been studying Sanskrit with great earnestness.

I have preserved the socks sent by you as symbol of your love.

Please accept vandemataram from us all. Was the Gujarati your own?

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

At the top of your letter-paper are printed the words “Tipe Printers”. I suppose “Tipe” is a misprint. Such a misprint should not be overlooked in the letter-head.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3616

474. LETTER TO SHANTA S. PATEL

August 31, 1932

CHI. SHANTA (PATEL),

I had received the note which you wrote before you were released. I will wait for your promised letter. With whom do you stay?
Give a detailed report about yourself. Let me know about the condition of both your mind and body. What did you read? Who were your friends? Write about all these things.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 4065. Also C. W. 16. Courtesy:

Shantabehn Patel
475. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

August 31, 1932

CHI. PREMA,

I cannot think what fresh epithet of praise I should give you this time. Tell me what epithet will please you, and I will give you that.

I have not yet received the books required for Parachure Shastri. I hope I shall get them soon.

I do not think we can say that the arrival of those two women means that educated women have started joining the Ashram. There are certainly a few stray cases of such women turning up. The Ashram has not attracted any of them to stay on, unless we regard you as also one who has stayed on. Your case, then, will be an exception, Who will believe that one swallow makes a summer?

I am sorry about Rambhau. I do not mind your having dismissed him from the class. Keep a watchful eye on him and bring him to the right path if you can. I understand your difficulty regarding Dhiru. If you can cultivate sufficient broadmindedness and courage, you should talk about him to Joshi and Ramabehn and discover some way of winning him over to the right path. We ourselves plant thorns in our path and then complain about being pricked by them. We shall probably never reach our goal if we try to do so with our own strength but, if we march with God’s strength, we shall see light even in darkness. If you retort that you do not have such love in you, my advice is of no value. If, again, you argue that though I believe that I am full of love I have not been able to win over many, and ask me what right I have to advise you, and thus close the door of your heart against me, I would be helpless. I admit my imperfection. Why should you take that as an example? You should follow the advice I give you from my experience. We should not take the weaknesses of co-workers as our guide but should try to be free from them and embrace only their virtues. Moreover, unlike you I do not accept defeat but hope, with God’s grace, to melt the stoniest heart and, therefore, continually strive to perfect myself.

If you have been reading out newspapers in the kitchen and jesting with people, I would certainly not approve of that. There should be perfect silence in the kitchen. Why should you read out anything there? Moreover, Narandas’s attention is bound to be occupied with the things around him. I do not approve of your reading out anything in such an atmosphere. In the kitchen, even if you read you should do so seriously. Do, therefore, make this change. Consider what example you would be setting to the children if you make jokes in the kitchen and try to make people laugh. If all of them start doing what you do, the kitchen would become a “bear’s garden” and discipline would vanish. Can the “smart” brain of the ‘smart little girl” understand all this, or has she lost her”smartness” in the Ashram?

1 Chhaganlal Joshi

This is enough for this time.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 10301. Also C. W. 5754. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

476. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

August 31, 1932

CHI. PANDITJI,

I got your letter. Like Anandi, others also will gradually become interested in the Gita, provided our own interest in it remains sincere. I do not think your trying to reform Rambhau is likely to do any good. He seems to have no sense of right and wrong. I cherish the hope that some day his eyes will open.

I will write today to Anandi advising her to drink milk and take rest. I cannot immediately suggest from here a suitable time-table for her. It will be enough if, without getting tired, she does anything in which she feels interested. Children with weak health must not feel any burden on them.

Who filled Lakshmibehn’s molar? This is a very delicate job. The filling should not be done till the cavity is completely cleaned. If there is the slightest negligence in this matter, decay starts inside and that does harm.

The letters dictated by Mohan and others are good. This shows that intellectual growth has little connection with knowledge of letters. Linking the former with the latter results in considerable loss of orginality. If we impart as much knowledge as can be done orally and teach the alphabet as calligraphy, children will by themselves slowly learn to read and understand books.

BAPU

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932 421
I know about kaka.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 232. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

---

477. LETTER TO MATHURI N. KHARE

August 31, 1932

CHI. MATHURI,

I got your letter. Do you remember that I had advised you to do only as much work as you could? Your speed in carding is certainly good. But is the quality of slivers as good as the speed? Whatever you do should be neat and well done, no matter if the speed is slow. Speed will increase slowly.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 267. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

---

478. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

August 31, 1932

CHI. NIMU,

I learn from a postcard from Narandas that Baba¹ is very ill. It will be as God has willed. Do not panic. If you do, it will harm Baba. You should know that the mother’s feelings always affect the child. We must do our best. There should then be no cause for panic. I am keeping Ramdas informed. It will be good if you keep me informed every day. Follow the doctor’s instructions carefully.

BAPU

[PS.]

Give this to Nimu after reading.²

CHI. NARANDAS GANDHI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM

SABARMATI

From the Gujarati original: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library.

¹ Kanam Gandhi
² The letter was addressed to Narandas Gandhi.
479. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 31, 1932

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

Your letter with the rakhi arrived, though rather late. All the time I have been wanting to reply but I can manage it only now. You did not write about Indu’s health. Do so now. How is Mridula? According to Dahyabhai, she has written to me but I have not so far received the letter. How is Saraladevi?

I keep thinking of you all.

All the three of us are well. How is your health? And what news of Gulzarilal?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32821

480. DIARY, 1932

[1-6-1932 to 31-8-1932]

JUNE 1, WEDNESDAY, YERAVDA MANDIR

Spun 208 rounds. Letters—Anandanand, Jaya, Radha, Ranchhod, Gajanan, Lakshmibehn, Mathuri. Rama paid a visit. Commenced Kirtikar’s Vedanta.

JUNE 2, THURSDAY

JUNE 3, FRIDAY

JUNE 4, SATURDAY

Spun 224 rounds. Letters—Gangabehn, Parachure Shastri, Kaka. Dahyabhai and Mani paid a visit today. I did not go to see

---

1 Continued from Vol. XLIX
2 Gandhiji described Yeravda prison as “Yeravda Mandir”. This place name is not reproduced under subsequent dates.
3 Studies in Vedanta them. And I got a reply about Mirabehn that she had participated in the civil disobedience movement.

JUNE 5, SUNDAY

Spun 222 rounds. Today Dr. Mehta put my left arm into splints. Amrit Nanavati’s letter came from Visapur.

JUNE 6, MONDAY

JUNE 7, TUESDAY

Spun 191 rounds. Letters to the Ashram—29, including [an article]“Titiksha and Yajna”; [letters]—Amritlal Nanavati Visapur), Karsandas, Nagardas, Shankerlal. The Superintendent was of the opinion that the splints on the arm had not been set properly; so these were untied and tightened again. Hence the hand remained uncovered the whole day.

JUNE 8, WEDNESDAY

Spun 212 rounds. Durga, Anandi, Babla visited Mahadev. Received a telescope from Trivedi today.

JUNE 9, THURSDAY

Spun 225 rounds. Letters—Balkrishna Kolte (Fatehpur), Savitri (Ludhiana), Prabhashanker (Rajkot), Mira, Polak, Ghanshyamdas, Col. Doyle, Raihana.

JUNE 10, FRIDAY

JUNE 11, SATURDAY

1 They were fellow-prisoners.
JUNE 12, SUNDAY

Spun 216 rounds. On saltless [diet] from today. Since the splints did no good to the hand, Mira will be very much distressed. In order to please her and to test the result, I have started the saltless [diet]. Simultaneously have discontinued putting soda in the rotli. Completed the small pamphlet by Ghanshyamdas.

JUNE 13, MONDAY

Spun 188 rounds. Letters—Saklatwala, Nanabhai, Qureshi, Col. Doyle, the Ashram (38 letters). As it is a holiday tomorrow, handed over the Ashram letters today [for posting].

JUNE 14, TUESDAY

JUNE 15, WEDNESDAY

Spun 199 rounds. Letters—Taramati, Mahavir, Narandas. As I had soft motion today, I did not eat rotlis and almonds; felt better; weighed 104.5 [lb].

JUNE 16, THURSDAY

JUNE 17, FRIDAY

Spun 211 rounds. Letters—Vithaldas, Mira, Udit Mishra, Regarding Devdas, received his own and Hanumanprasad’s telegrams.

JUNE 18, SATURDAY

JUNE 19, SUNDAY

Spun 204 rounds. Last evening ate saltless bread made by Merne but it cannot be said to have agreed with me. Did not eat it this

\[1\] A Scottish fellow-prisoner

JUNE 20, MONDAY

JUNE 21, TUESDAY

Spun 211 rounds. Today there were slight signs of dysentery, hence ate grapes only.

Letters—the Ashram (32 including an article of prayer and Totaramji’s letter), Hemprabhadevi, Raihana, Navin, Carl Heath, Aristarchi, Lalwani, Kamala Nehru, Lalita, Rohini, Janakibehn, Lakshmi Raja.

JUNE 22 WEDNESDAY

Today the Major pressed me hard to take bread with milk. The weight went down by one and a half pounds. Mosambis arrived. Also milk. I took it.

JUNE 23, THURSDAY

Spun 210 rounds. Letters—Mira, Devdas. Today added bread to milk. As the superintendent did not like the portion concerning my health in my letter to Mira, I altered the same.

JUNE 24, FRIDAY

Spun 208 rounds. Letter to Horace Alexander. Thomas and Col. Doyle paid a visit. The visitors today were Morarbhai, Marathe, Dr. Pathak.

JUNE 25, SATURDAY

1 Home Member, Government of Bombay
JUNE 26, SUNDAY
Spun 224 rounds. Started using new dhotis from today. Again two boxes of grapes arrived.

JUNE 27, MONDAY
Spun 207 rounds. Letters—the Ashram (31, including ‘How to Observe Ahimsa’), Col. Doyle.

JUNE 28, TUESDAY
Spun 222 rounds. Letters—Gangabehn, Joshi, two to Col. Doyle about my letter to Mira and about my denture. The Ashram mail arrived.

JUNE 29 WEDNESDAY
Spun 233 rounds. Letters—Birla, Kambhatta, Raihana, Lakshmidas, Madhavdas, Balwantrai, Chhaganlal Joshi, Mira, Damodardas, Premkunvar.
Today weight was 104 lb.

JUNE 30, THURSDAY
Spun 217 rounds. Letters—Jaiji, Mithubehn, Shirinbehn, Devdas.

JULY 1, FRIDAY
Spun 203 rounds. Letters from—Hiralal, Mrs. Lindsay, Mira, Privat, Satavlekar, Cresswell (his four books), Swami Anand and Kishorelal.

JULY 2, SATURDAY
Spun 244 rounds. Letters—Kishorelal, Swami. Dahyabhai and Mani paid a visit.

JULY 3, SUNDAY
Spun 212 rounds. Wrote letters, history of the Ashram.

JULY 4, MONDAY
Spun 212 rounds. Letters—the Ashram (32, including “How to Observe Truth”), Manjula, Mataprasad, Dinkar, Radha, Lady
Vithaldas, Fulchand Bapuji, Raojibhai, Maganbhai Chaturbhai, Harjivan Kotak. Wrote history of the Ashram.
JULY 5, TUESDAY

Spun 234 rounds. Returned the telescope to Trivedi. Received a telegram from Devdas about the death of papa’s husband, Varadachari. Sent telegrams to Papa and Raja.

JULY 6, WEDNESDAY

Spun 220 rounds. Letters—Devdas, Birla, Saraladevi, Bhai Parmanand. Doyle paid a visit—spoke about my denture and about writing a letter to Mira. I weighed 105.51b. Have been eating almonds for three days.

JULY 7, THURSDAY

JULY 8, FRIDAY

Today the Major informed me that letters to and by me now go to the Government—this week’s Ashram mail has gone there. Qureshi, Mohanlal, Moolshanker Dave and Haridas paid a visit.

JULY 9, SATURDAY

Spun 236 rounds. Letters—Col. Doyle, Gokibehn. Today a few letters from I. G.1 arrived which included those from Krishnas and Babu Motilal Roy. Today ordered mosambis from here.

JULY 10, SUNDAY

Spun 215 rounds. Vallabhbhai started spinning from today. Spun 125 rounds in one hour. Today completed Kimiyagar and Vaidik Vinay. Com-menced the Veda number of Ganga and Premchandji’s Ramacharcha.

JULY 11, MONDAY

Spun 210 rounds. Letters—the Ashram (33, including “Education”).

1 Inspector General of Prisons
JULY 12, TUESDAY
Spun 208 rounds. The Superintendent told me that even the letters addressed to the prisoners at Yeravda would have to be sent to the Government. Almonds arrived.

JULY 13, WEDNESDAY

JULY 14, THURSDAY

JULY 15, FRIDAY
Spun 245 rounds. Letters—Khan, Velusami, Mirabehn, S. K. Sen Gupta. The District magistrate paid a visit. Soma was released.

JULY 16, SATURDAY
Spun 232 rounds. Other Ashram letters arrived today.

JULY 17, SUNDAY
Spun 208 rounds. Completed Ashram letters.

JULY 18, MONDAY

JULY 19, TUESDAY

JULY 20, WEDNESDAY

JULY 21, THURSDAY
Spun 223 rounds. Letters—Nargis, Shirin, Khurshed. Telegram to Lahore Superintendent about Khurshed. Today met Chhaganlal, Mukund Doctor and Shankar. I reprimanded Shankar about Hiralal. Today the Major gave diathermic treatment. Received a telegram about Devdas having had relapse of fever.

JULY 22, FRIDAY
Spun 221 rounds. Letters—Devdas, Mira. Today too diathermy was tried. Some books arrived. Received a list of some letters which had been posted. It contains mostly letters of the 19th.

JULY 23, SATURDAY

JULY 24, SUNDAY
Spun 210 rounds. The day was spent in writing letters to the Ashram, drafting a letter to be addressed to Col. Doyle and in reading.

JULY 25, MONDAY

JULY 26, TUESDAY

JULY 27, WEDNESDAY
Spun 217 rounds. Letters—Hiralal+Lily, Rajagopalachari, Shirin, Subbiah+Lalita. Today my weight was 104 lb. It has gone down by 1.5 lb. The cause seems to be discontinuation of fruit.

JULY 28, THURSDAY
Spun 250 rounds. Letters—Harjivan Kotak, Khurshed, Rukhi, Venkataraman, Radha, Mira, Ba. Telegram to Bajpai. The Ashram mail arrived. Today commenced Locaire’s Astronomy. For the last three days I have been reading Sirat-un-Nabi. Nadkarni’s pamphlet.

JULY 29, FRIDAY
Spun 197 rounds. Letters—Nargis, Nirmala.
JULY 30, SATURDAY

JULY 31, SUNDAY
Spun 216 rounds. Completed Ashram letters. Devoted quite some time to it. Ate bananas today after a long time.

AUGUST 1, MONDAY
Spun 216 rounds. Letters—the Ashram (36, including “Learn the Gita by Heart”), Birla, Brajkisan, Shyamkisan, Subhasbabu, Mira. Telegram to Kamala.

AUGUST 2, TUESDAY
Spun 207 rounds. Letters—Bhaktibehn, Prabhashankar, Damodardas, Vimala, Mohanlal Bhoot, Prabavati, Jethalal, Jivabhai.

AUGUST 3, WEDNESDAY
Spun 216 rounds. Letters—Krishnadas, Jagannath Bajaj, Jawaharlal, Hanumanprasad, Modi, Devdas+Sivaprasad. The Major has informed me that an order has been received to the effect that the outgoing mail also will hereafter be censored by himself.

AUGUST 4, THURSDAY

AUGUST 5, FRIDAY

AUGUST 6, SATURDAY
Spun 212 rounds. Letters—Brelvi, Chhaganlal Mehta, Taramati, Mrs. Sen Gupta, Hemprabha, Hardayal Nag. After a talk about Gokhale and Suganendra who are on fast it was ultimately decided that I should meet them. Accordingly I met them and they said if they had no right under the rules to demand food cooked by a Brahmin, they would give up their stand. The rules were then scrutinized and the position was explained to them, whereupon they have agreed to give up the fast. This took up a lot of time today.

AUGUST 7, SUNDAY
Spun 196 rounds. Devoted time to the Ashram mail.

AUGUST 8, MONDAY
Spun 204 rounds. Letters—the Ashram (37 including an article on Dr. Mehta), Manjula, Ansari, Mira + Rajenbabu, Devdas, telegram to Chhaganlal.

AUGUST 9, TUESDAY

AUGUST 10, WEDNESDAY

AUGUST 11, THURSDAY

AUGUST 12, FRIDAY

Today Col. Doyle brought with him Dr. Dalal for Vallabhbhai’s and my dentures. There was an unexpected and sharp argument about Ansari with the Major.

AUGUST 13, SATURDAY
Spun 206 rounds. Letters—Devdas Gandhi, Behram

1 For a report of the talk, vide The Diary of Mahadev Desai.
Khambhatta. Today also I had to go to Dr. Dalal. Ate potatoes today.

AUGUST 14, SUNDAY

Spun 223 rounds. Today also went to Dr. Dalal. Sarojini’s Padma sent grapes, etc. Ate the grapes. Today started spinning on the Magan spinning-wheel. As there was a little more pain in the elbow today, I tried one sliver on the Gandiva with my left hand after several months; it worked well.

AUGUST 15, MONDAY

Spun 214 rounds. Letters to—the Ashram (44 including “Reading and Reflection[—I]”, Vimala Patel, Nargis + Kamala + Sonawala, Satyamurti, Janakibehn. Feeling hungry, I foolishly took a meal this afternoon despite constipation; hence everything inside was thrown out. The vomiting this time was unlaboured and easy.

AUGUST 16, TUESDAY

AUGUST 17, WEDNESDAY

Tody also got the denture further improved. Conversation with the Major about Kapurthala. Ate bajra today.

AUGUST 18, THURSDAY

Spun 200 rounds. Letters—Manjula, Chhaganlal Mehta + Khimchand, Lily, Hiralal, Popat Virji, Krishnadas. Yesterday the decision of the British Government about the proportion of Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs and others in the Legislative Assemblies was received. After some discussion, I have written a letter to Prime Minister Mac-Donald. Have given in it September 20 as deadline. I have informed him that if the decision is not altered by that time, I would go on an indefinite fast from 12 o’clock on the 20th. In case the Government suggests a postponement of the fast, I have said, I would have no objection to such postponement if it seemed necessary to do so.
AUGUST 19, FRIDAY
Spun 215 rounds. Letters—Champa, Mira, Anandshankar, Kamala Nehru, Sarojini, Jaiji, Karsandas, Mahomed Alam, Agatha. Met Gangadharrao, Shankar and Devidas Ghevaria’s nephew. Shankar talked quite satisfactorily. He has reassured me and promised that he would never commit such a mistake again.

AUGUST 20, SATURDAY

AUGUST 21, SUNDAY
Spun 200 rounds. Ashram mail—Andrew’s book.

AUGUST 22, MONDAY
Spun 205 rounds Letters—the Ashram (51 including “Reading and Reflection-[II]”, Manilal + Sushila + Ritch, Hemprabha.

AUGUST 23, TUESDAY

AUGUST 24, WEDNESDAY
Spun 235 rounds. Letters—Darbari, Bhaktibehn, Nirmala Mashruwala, Prabhoshankar, Velanbehn, Raja, Mira. Two seers of kagadi1 almonds arrived today. My weight was 103 [Ib.]

AUGUST 25, THURSDAY

1 A kind of almonds with a fragile shell
AUGUST 26, FRIDAY

Spun 215 rounds. Letters—Tara Mashruwala, Taramati, Kaka, Mridula, Hansa Mehta, Manibehn. The denture was examined again. Col. Doyle called and spoke about Kaka¹, about the Prime Minister’s letter, and the denture.

AUGUST 27, SATURDAY

Spun 220 rounds. Letters—Hiralal, Kaka, Ba, Kevalram Dayaram, P.N. Lal Verma. Today took baker’s bread in place of one of bajra. Put into the eyes the drops sent by the Major.

AUGUST 28, SUNDAY

Spun 225 rounds. Commenced Gandhi Vichar Dohan. Letter to Devdas about not going to Rangoon.

AUGUST 29, MONDAY

AUGUST 30, TUESDAY

Spun 203 rounds. Letters—Lily, Hiralal, Devi West, Nandubehn, Revashankar, Meghji, Shastri, Sushila, Manilal, Nanabhai, Sharda Mehta, Noorbanu, Col. Doyle. My denture was examined again.

AUGUST 31, WEDNESDAY

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 19337

¹ Doyle informed Gandhi about D. B. Kalelkar having been transferred to the Sabarmati Jail and asked him to prevail upon Kalelkar to give up spinning so that he might be from back-ache. Vide “Letter to D. B. Kalelkar”, 26/27-8-1932.
481. LETTER TO ASHRAM BOYS AND GIRLS

YERAVDA MANDIR, ¹
September 1, 1932

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

I got the letter, written in beautiful handwriting, by your new secretary. I hope that the new office-bearers will discharge their duties well. By assuming responsibilities in this way you will advance very far. Associations like yours can run smoothly only if you are tolerant towards one another. If you learn to do this, you will get in time the ability to run big associations. Keep sending me weekly reports of your work. If any disputes arise, you should write about those too. The best thing, of course, is that there should be no disputes. But in case a dispute does arise, there would be no benefit in keeping it from me. If I know about it, I may be able to guide you. Moreover, the knowledge that you will have to inform me may itself save you from quarrels.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

482. LETTER TO PURATAN BUCH

CHI. PURATAN,

September 1, 1932

I certainly did not wish to stop you asking me questions. After you have thought out in your own mind the answer to a problem, you may certainly ask me to check whether your solution is correct. I may say that intellect has had very little share in shaping my life. I believe that I have a rather poor intellect. I have found it literally true in my case that God shows the means to the man who has faith. I always hold elders and men of spiritual knowledge in high respect and put faith in them. And my deepest faith is in truth, and because of that I have always found my path easy even when it is beset with difficulties.

I am happy that your health is improving.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9168

¹ Literally, Yeravda Temple; Yeravda Central Prison, where Gandhiji was imprisoned from January 4, 1932 to May 8, 1933. This place-name is not reproduced in subsequent items.
483. LETTER TO KESHAV GANDHI

September 1, 1932

CHI. KESHU¹,

You will be able to improve your handwriting if you try hard enough. Man’s only true friend is God. One should never eat so much that the stomach is full. The atman is none else but jiva. Just now, you should read the Gita in Gujarati translation and try to understand it. If you do not follow, you should ask somebody to explain. Do not make slivers pointed. If you want to know how many good slivers one can make in an hour, you may ask Abbasbhai. Memory will improve with study.

You may write to me anything which you wish to.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3280

484. LETTER TO GULAB

September 1, 1932

CHI. GULAB,

I have your two letters. You say that your speed at spinning is low. What is it exactly? Improve your handwriting. I shall be able to answer you only after you tell me what errors Krishna has committed.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1723

485. LETTER TO MOHAN N. PARIKH

September 1, 1932

CHI. MOHAN²,

If your handwriting is not good there is no harm in dictating your letter. This does not mean that you may neglect to improve your handwriting. You are now big enough to be able to write a good hand.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9182

¹ Maganlal Gandhi’s son
² Son of Narahari Dwarkadas Parikh
486. LETTER TO NARMADABEHN RANA

September 1, 1932

CHI. NARMADA,

I have your letter. This time your handwriting is better. If you keep up the effort it will gradually improve. You say that you have learnt everything. This cannot be true. There are many things to be learnt. Your Gujarati is still very weak. You have yet to learn Sanskrit. Ginning, carding, weaving, sewing, embroidery, spinning yarn of fine count—all this remains.

You should know arithmetic and also learn nursing. You will learn all this in time.

Speak less, think more. I understand what you say about your dress. At the moment, I cannot think of anything against it.

I wish you to become a very good girl.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2762. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N. Pathak

487. LETTER TO PADMA

September 1, 1932

CHI. PADMA,

I got your letter. You have given plenty of information in it. It is good that you are eating fruit. There is no harm if you stop spinning when you get tired. You will not get tired if you draw the thread with the right hand and rotate the wheel with the foot. That is what I do. if, however, even that is a strain, then you may stop spinning. If you can, do embroidery or sewing. If you do not get cotton slivers, you may spin wool. Teach Sheela with proper care. Just now, she need not trace and retrace the letters. A lot can be taught orally. For instance, you can teach arithmetic in that manner.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6137. Also C.W. 3489. Courtesy: Prabhudas Gandhi
488. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

September 1, 1932

CHI. SHARDA,

I am absolutely certain that you would do credit to the post of a secretary. Do not work beyond your capacity. And, do not be deterred by anything that may happen. You should never worry. How is it that your yarn snaps so often on the takli? Luck and perseverance contribute in equal measure in every act we do. We can control our efforts, so, let us work to our fullest capacity and leave the result to luck. The Gita teaches us this very lesson.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9917. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

489. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

September 1, 1932

CHI. GANGABEHN,

That there is no one living in the house in Kamatipura and that some property from it was stolen, you should look upon as a test of your faith. Keep repeating to yourself: “It is a blessing that the chains have broken, it will now be easier for me to find Shri Gopal.”

Kaka1 wrote to me, too, about Chapter XVI. At present, however, I have no time for it. Ask Ramibehn2 to write to me.

I hope your health is now all right. Besides, the hakim3 is with you. What more do you want? Give my due regards to him. Has Nathji’s4 eczema been cured?

---

1 The line is from Premanand’s poem on Narasinh Mehta. The original says, “I can now worship Shri Gopal in peace.” Gandhiji later admitted in an article in Harijan Bandhu, 2-11-1940, that he had got used to misquoting the line (अब मैं गोपाल को पूजा कर सकता हूँ) instead of (मैं गोपाल की आराधना कर सकूं).

2 D.B. Kalelkar.

3 Ramibehn Kamdar, addressee’s sister.

4 Addressee’s instructor in Unani medicine.

5 Kedarnath Kulkarni, Kishorelal Mashruwala’s guru.
Write to me regularly.

Lakshmi¹ Jerajani impressed me as a wise and smart girl.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 65. Also C.W. 8794. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

490. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 1, 1932

CHI. TARAMATI,

I have received your letter. It is very good that a sanatorium has been opened in the sacred memory of Bhai Shantilal. Are there any restrictions of caste or community for getting admission there? Pyarelal wrote to me that he had met you.

How nice it would be if you could learn enough to improve your Gujarati from the teacher who is coming. You may brush aside my suggestion if you find it burdensome. But if you are keen to learn, you must follow it in practice as much as possible.

I never had an opportunity of reading the books that you have mentioned.

Here is a letter to Ramprasad, the teacher, about Dilip.² Pass it on to him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

¹ Niece of Vithaldas Jerajani, a dedicated khadi worker; she was later married to Purushottam D. Saraiya, addressee’s grandson.
September 1, 1932

I had asked Dilip to send me your name. I have ventured to write to you, though I do not remember that we have met any time. It has always been my view regarding children’s education that we obstruct their intellectual growth and spoil their handwriting by beginning with the alphabet. I am of the opinion that, before teaching the alphabet, we should give them orally a good deal of general knowledge. Beginning with the history and geography of the child’s city or village, we should tell him something of the region, the country and the world as also of Nature’s beauty, the sky, the trees and plants and teach him orally a little of arithmetic, geometry, and literature, i.e., correct pronunciation, grammar, poems, Sanskrit verses, etc. For doing any one of these, it is absolutely unnecessary first to teach reading and writing. The child should learn to read before he is taught to write. Writing should come last. Before he starts learning the alphabet, he should learn some drawing. After learning thoroughly how to draw straight lines, oblique lines, triangles, etc., the child should begin to draw pictures of the letters of the alphabet. If we follow this method, learning will not be a painful process to the child, he will have acquired a considerable amount of general knowledge through oral instruction and the letters drawn by the child will be like pearls. There is a chapter on the subject of good handwriting in Dasbodh

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 390-1

1 The addressee was a private tutor employed for Dilip, son of Mathuradas Trikumji.

2 By Samarth Ramdas Swami
492. LETTER TO VIMAL KISHORE MEHROTRA

September 1, 1932

CHI. VIMAL KISHORE¹.

We all study the Gita because it is for us like a mother to be consulted whenever we have any doubts.

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 4983. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra. Also G.N. 7506

493. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA N. KHARE

September 2, 1932

CHI. RAMACHANDRA².

I have your letter. The story about Hira is good. You have written it well. You copied it from a book, didn’t you? Be as brave and loyal as Hira was. You do not tell me why you left the school, but I have received complaints against you from three different persons. I know very well that you have some faults, but I thought that they had become fewer, and that you were trying to improve yourself. You do seem to have improved outwardly. Your handwriting is better and you write well. But your heart should be equally pure and good. You should never tell a lie, nor scheme against anybody. If you have any grievances let me know them. You must obey Panditji at any rate. You do not seem to have kept your vows either. Write to me and tell me everything frankly.

May God make you good.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 297. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

¹ Son of Parasram Mehrotra
² Son of Narayan Moreshwar Khare, music teacher at the Ashram.
494. LETTER TO YOGA V. KHARE

September 2, 1932

CHI. YOGA¹.

If you cannot read or follow this, request Panditji to read it to you. I hope that you will continue to like the Ashram as much as you do now and that your health will remain as good as it is and even improve. Anybody who is ready to learn will find much to learn in the Ashram. You should slowly learn it all. Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 311. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

495. A LETTER

September 2, 1932

However wicked the man you have to face you should have faith that God will give you the strength to resist him. You should not have the slightest fear. If such a thing happens, use all your strength. Such resistance is not violence. A rat can never do violence to a cat. If, however, the rat is determined, the cat cannot eat it alive. Thus, a rat which saves itself from the mouth of a cat does no violence to the cat. Do you understand this? Remember that an immoral man is always a coward. He cannot withstand the power of a pure woman. He trembles when she roars at him.

[From Gujarati]

496. A LETTER

September 2, 1932

Our love for a dear one should not be such that in everything he says we may see a sign of his having been hurt. We should have sufficient confidence in ourselves to feel sure that such a person will never be hurt by anything we say or do. If we do not have such confidence, we shall often do injustice to him or her.

¹ Niece of Narayan Moreshwar Khare.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 392

497. LETTER TO DR. HIRALAL SHARMA

September 2, 1932

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. What you have heard or read about nature institutions in the West is a case of distance lending enchantment to the scene. Of the best advertised institution, people of the place knew nothing when a friend enquired about it. This does not mean that there is nothing in them. My only point is that the whole of this science is yet in its infancy and that there is no common course adopted by these institutions. They are what they are through the original researches of their authors. We in India have to make our own researches in keeping with our surroundings. Whatever is to be gained from them can be easily learnt through their publications.

As to your own health I simply gathered from your letter that it was not up to much. You cannot afford to go by the cases of orthodox physicians. You are a pioneer and will therefore have to show a record that would stand the most rigorous scrutiny.

I am glad you have given up the idea of going to the West. Do buildup your own body. That in itself will lead you to many discoveries. Your progress may be slow but it will be sure, if the foundation is sound. . . .

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, pp. 12-3

498. LETTER TO DR. SURESH CHANDRA BANERJI

September 3, 1932

MY DEAR SURESH,

I was glad to have your second letter. May your hope be fulfilled. Your extraordinary effort surely deserves to succeed. You will please report your progress from time to time. It was quite like Malaviyaji to have visited you and blessed you.¹

Have you or the doctors who have been helping you discovered the cause of your illness? Why should you, who were to all appearances so healthy, have been caught by the germs of a dangerous malady? Or is the science of medicine still so hopelessly incomplete that it is unable for certain to trace causes of so many diseases to which all flesh is heir?

Love from us all.

BAPU

Advance, 13-9-1932

499. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

September 3, 1932

PANDITJI,

You did well in writing to me regarding the temple. If you have still something more to say, write to me. I surely don’t insist that my view in this matter should prevail. However, my views on this subject are fixed. I have said regarding myself that I am both an image-worshipper and an image-breaker. The God conceived by a human being is bound to be a form, though the image may be only in the mind. In that sense, I am an image-worshipper. But I have never been willing to worship any form or image as God. Towards a form or image, I always feel neti, neti². Hence I regard myself as image-breaker. This being my attitude, I have always felt that we should not have any temple in the Ashram. And it was for this reason that we decided to have no building even for prayers. We sit in the open, with the sky above as the roof and the horizons on the four sides as the walls. If we wish to maintain an attitude of equality towards all religions, this is how we should live. These days, I am trying to read a little from the Vedas and other sacred books. I see this same thing in them all. There is no mention of image-worship anywhere. But Hinduism has a place for it. We should not, therefore, oppose it. However, image-worship is not obligatory. It is voluntary. I feel, therefore, that it would be better if, as an institution, we kept away from image-worship. If what I have always believed to be a samadhi is really a temple, we should not make it a place of public worship. When the owner of the land wished to demolish the structure and carry away the bricks, I paid money to him against the estimated value of the bricks and saved the structure. But I do not wish to turn it into a temple. You may discuss this with others who are likely to understand my attitude, and then write to me again if you wish. Do not have the slightest hesitation in expressing your view.

¹ The addressee was in Calcutta undergoing treatment for tuberculosis.

² Literally, “not this, not this”; the Vedas thus acknowledged the indescribability of the Absolute.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 233. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn N. Khare

500. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

September 3, 1932

CHI. PARASRAM,

I have your letter and the questions. You may leave me if you like—that may happen though I do not wish it to happen. I, however, will never leave you, for I still want many services from you. There is a prescription which I always recommend, and you should never forget it. As soon as we feel the slightest anger or aversion against a co-worker or think that he has done us injustice, we should sink into deep meditation and tell ourselves: ‘I certainly deserve such treatment. The fault is not my co-worker’s but mine. Knowingly or unknowingly, I must have given him some cause to be angry with me or feel aversion against me.’ When the mind is so persuaded and has calmed down, you should immediately go to the co-worker and ask him what fault he had seen in you. We should then examine ourselves to see that fault and overcome it. If we follow this method, we shall always enjoy peace, feel generous towards the whole world and never feel offended with anyone.

I am satisfied if the massage has really cured the pain. In such a matter, one should never deceive oneself. Do not be afraid of a surgical operation if it becomes necessary.

Of course there was the hand of Fate in the sinking of that boat, but we can see from it the fear which rules our people. It also shows how great is the fear of death in us. If the people had kept their reason to see that the serpent could not have bitten all of them, any one of them could have picked it up and thrown it into the river or even killed it, if he so wished. But where nobody thinks of others and everybody is seized with fear, the result is bound to be what happened. The only lesson we have to draw from this is that we should never have fear of any kind and we should pray to God to grant us good sense when we unexpectedly find ourselves in such situations.

446 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7507. Also C.W. 4984. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

501. LETTER TO VIDYA R. PATEL

September 3, 1932

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. [You must] improve your handwriting a good deal. Ask Premabehn to teach you how to do it. If you do not at once go to sleep as soon as you lie down, you should close your eyes and begin repeating Ramanama. You will soon fall asleep.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9432. Courtesy: Ravindra R. Patel

502. LETTER TO SULOCHANA

September 3, 1932

CHI. SULOCHANA,

Your handwriting is fairly good. But you should make it still better.

What is your speed at spinning?
Why does Gulab beat you?
Learn everything well.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1738
503. LETTER TO GULAM RASUL QURESHI

September 3, 1932

CHI. QURESHI,

I get all the news about you. You must be keeping well after the operation. How long will you be confined to bed? Obey all the instructions of the doctor carefully and get well fully. Write to me when you are strong enough and are permitted to do so.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Convey my vandemataram to the doctor.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10809. Courtesy: Gulam Rasul Qureshi

504. LETTER TO HAMID QURESHI

September 3, 1932

CHI. HAMID,

It was very good indeed that you wrote. Write always in ink. What is the name of the teacher? Give him my blessings.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10804. Courtesy: Gulam Rasul Qureshi

505. LETTER TO AMINA QURESHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 3, 1932

CHI. AMINA,

I have your letter. It was good that Qureshi went through the operation. There will now be no cause for him to worry. Now you also should get well. It is good that Rajab Ali\(^1\) is supervising and guiding you. Do as he advises. You should keep reading and writing even

\(^1\) Dr. Rajab Ali
now. I hope you are observing the restrictions on your diet. Keep writing to me.

We are all well. Sardar spins fine yarn of forty counts. Mahadev has reached up to eighty counts. What is your progress? Mahadev and I are learning Urdu.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10790. Courtesy: Gulam Rasul Qureshi

506. LETTER TO SECRETARY, NAGARI PRACHARINI SABHA, BANARAS

September 3, 1932

DEAR SIR,

I have your letter. Although I am not personally acquainted with Acharya Mahavir Prasadji I am not unaware of his services to Hindi literature. I consider it most fitting that he should be honoured by the lovers of Hindi on his entering his seventieth year.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

SHRI PRADHAN MANTRIJI
NAGARI PRACHARINI SABHA
BANARAS CITY

From Hindi: C.W. 9663. Courtesy: Bharat Kala Bhavan

507. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

September 3/4, 1932

CHI. NARANDAS,9

I got your letter on Tuesday. I got the usual letter about Kana, too, posted separately. I convey the information to Ramdas as and when I think fit. I had expected a postcard today, but there was none. Pyare Ali had sent me a wire about Qureshi’s operation. I have also

1 The block-print of this letter appeared in the commemoration volume presented to Mahavir Prasad Dwivedi on his birthday.
2 Ramdas Gandhi’s son
3 A business man from Bombay
4 Gulam Rasool Qureshi

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932

449
had a letter from him. I hope Champa\' got the postcard I wrote to her. Please make whatever arrangements are possible for the education of the new girls who join. I constantly feel that you should get more free time to think about and plan things such as this. We have done much for Liladhar\'. If he does not understand his place or his self-interest, how can we help him? Do only what seems proper to you. Indu\' yearns for parental love. Try to understand his heart. Read my letter to Kusum\'. If she takes careful measures, she will be completely all right. If, however, she takes rest and employs other remedies just to please you, she will lose her life altogether or else will become an invalid and then weep. I intend to devote the weekly article this time to Narayanappa\’s case. It will contain some thoughts which may seem novel. Try to understand them and then explain them to the girls.

My chief reason for resuming milk from Wednesday was to see whether bajri would be effective, in spite of the milk, in preventing constipation. Today is Saturday. There has been no ill-effect till now and in other respects my health has been quite good. So far bajri and bananas have not disagreed with me.

What you say about Parasram is correct. Though he is extremely unmethodical, he has seemed to me a useful man. His motives are good. Sometimes he exhibits great capacity for work.

Shankarbhai\’s hand should be completely cured by now. Is the bone-setter a man trained in the indigenous method or has he been qualified in Allopathy?

Vinoba\’s plan is indeed excellent. If we have the right type of men, there is plenty of work which they can do. I received today Chhakkadas\’ and Keshu\’s slivers. I now want the thinnest spindle you can get. Only if I get it, can I carry on my experiment here properly. I got the books too. How far they tally with the ones I had asked you to send, I shall perhaps let you know after I have checked them.

Do we get money for Kaka\’s milk and ghee? We should, for he was supplied these items in Belgaum by the Government. If they don\’t supply these to him there we must do so. But we should not act

---

1 Wife of Ratilal Mehta, Dr. Pranjivan Mehta\’s son
2 A shopkeeper of Vadaj, a village near the Ashram; when his wife was ill in 1931, the addressee had brought him and his family to the Ashram.
3 Indu Parekh, a student of the Ashram school
4 Kusum Gandhi, a student of the Ashram school, daughter of Vrajlal Gandhi.
like the woman who ignorantly gives away the butter along with the whey, and is called a fool into the bargain. If necessary, go and see the Superintendent and talk the matter over with him.

I have suggested in a letter to Maganbhai a title for the discourses. But on second thoughts it seems to me that we need not be in a hurry to print them. I have written them in great haste. You and other people there may correct my mistakes as you read the discourses, and even if you did not understand some point I would not worry much. I would not mind even if you found that a few sentences here and there were not sufficiently clear. It is not always possible for me to revise the discourses after writing them. Hence, if they are to be published I should certainly like to read them from that point of view before they are published. I would, therefore, suggest that, if you have not incurred any expense so far, you should postpone their publication. If, however, Maganbhai, Panditji, Chhaganlal—if he is there—and you feel no doubt about the meaning of any sentence and if, whenever the language was not clear, you have been able to make it clear, you may certainly print them. You have suggested Mangal Prabhat-II as the title, but it does not seem to me appropriate, for the discourses on this occasion were written from a somewhat different point of view. That is, I had in mind mostly the inmates of the Ashram when writing them. That is why I have suggested the title Ashramvasi Pratye so that readers may know the limitations of the discourses and those of them who look upon themselves as among the inmates, though they do not live in the Ashram, may understand that they are addressed to them too. But I don’t insist on this title being accepted.
You may choose any other that may appeal to all of you.

Think about Manjula’s dilemma. If her disease can be cured with cod-liver oil, it would perhaps be the right thing to give it to her.
I don’t think she can think for herself. She will probably depend on Kashi’s advice in which case she should follow it. And if Kashi does

---

1 Maganbhai Desai
2 On subjects of special interest to Ashram inmates which Gandhiji sent with letters to Narandas Gandhi during the period from February 29, 1932, to September 3 “To the Ashram Inmates”. The discourses were published under this title, but subsequently the title was changed to Ashram Jivan, “The Ashram Way of Life”.
4 Daughter of Vrajlal Gandhi.
5 Widow of Vrajlal Gandhi not want to give her that, it should not be given. But if Manjula, though only a child, understands things a little and would like to take it I think we should respect her wish. You may now do what you think best.

While writing the history of the Ashram, a thought occurred to me. I have a faint recollection that I wrote to you about it once. I don’t know if we have a list of the persons who came and stayed in the Ashram temporarily from the time of its establishment to the present day. If we don’t have such a list, we should try to remember the names and write them down. They should be noted in a register, which should contain the full name of every such person, his place of residence, age, occupation, education, marital status and similar information; also what he learnt in the Ashram, when he left it and where he is at present. Whenever anybody comes to the Ashram in future, his name should be entered in the register, so that all this information will be available to us in one place. My only aim just now in asking for this information is to know how many persons came to and stayed in the Ashram temporarily, how each of them was trained and where he is settled now. If we have kept no such record till now, as time passes it will become increasingly more difficult to prepare one.

The pieces of leather for repairing the soles of sandals which you sent a second time have also been used up. These pieces are of such poor quality that, though I use the sandals very sparingly, the repaired soles hardly give service for a month. Like a miser, I also send small bits of leather for repair of soles. But we must make do with whatever quality of leather of dead cattle we can get. Please, therefore, send one or two pieces again.

[September] 4, 1932

Hemprabhadevi\(^2\) used to write to me regularly. Of late I have had no letter from her except for a postcard once. Do you hear from her? If you do, give me news of her health. And write her a letter or postcard. And tell her that I complain about absence of letters from her, and that I should get her letters regularly. If she has been writing and if she has preserved the dates of the letters, she should let me have them. Probably she has been writing. Sometimes letters get lost in

---

1 The source has “4-7-1932”.
2 Wife of Satis Chandra Das Gupta transit. Her letters are not likely to have been lost here, but it is possible that they did not reach this place at all.

I hope you have dispatched the postal acknowledgment for the registration of the Anantpur report.\(^1\) I enclose a photograph sent by Devdas. Show it to Ba too.

BAPU

[PS.]

After I had written the above, I sat down to write the article for the women. I have just finished it. I think it is very important. But probably they will find it difficult to understand the article. If you do not understand it fully, do not show it to the new group. Write to me about it. If you are convinced of its truth and can see ahimsa in that slap, you may certainly read it to them solving each difficulty that may be raised as you proceed. This is what I would suggest. If, after reading the article, you feel that you have understood it, give it to Panditji and other senior persons to read. Prema also should read it. If these persons understand it, show it to all others, and particularly to women, for it is primarily meant for them. Of course this article should not be published. It can be easily misunderstood. Those who have the spirit of ahimsa in them would understand it without difficulty. In any case, they would not misunderstand it. An article like this may be published only when I am outside. For the present, it will be enough if all of you understand it. If my reasoning is correct and if I am right about my experience, I am sure that most people who try to follow those ideas in practice are bound to realize their truth.

BAPU

[PS.]

In all there are 48 letters, 39 tied with a string along with 8 loose and a photograph.

508. WHAT WOMEN SHOULD DO IN A DIFFICULT SITUATION

[September 4, 1932]

Touching upon non-violence, if some maniac should try to assault a woman, and if another man should happen to be present, should he not protect her honour with the use of a weapon? Should not women train themselves in the use of weapons and learn to protect themselves? I have given my opinion. Use of weapons would certainly imply violence but I have never permitted anyone to draw from this the inference that a man or woman who happens to be present should not run to the rescue of the woman and should tolerate an outrage on her modesty. On the contrary, I have said that the man who allows the modesty of a woman to be thus outraged will be regarded as a coward. He will be a partner in violence because violence is implicit in cowardice. It is my firm opinion that heroic violence is less sinful than cowardly violence. A heroic man or woman can learn the lesson of non-violence, it is pretty nearly impossible for a coward to learn it. I have not begun this article in order to repeat all this. One will find these ideas in many other places in my writings.

But there is one thing which I think I have not remarked upon anywhere else which I wish to put down. I have dissuaded the Ashram women from learning the tricks of jamaiya, etc. The woman who depends on a jamaiya or a gothi to guard her honour may some day fail to do so. When someone snatches away the jamaiya or the gothi from her, she will become defenceless, so that there is a possibility of her falling into the hands of a maniac. . . .

Sita had no weapons. But she had soul-force. Hence her consent was necessary before Ravana could so much as touch her. Our sisters should have self-confidence of this kind. Hence we have introduced Draupadi’s prayer specially for women. But we were discussing an ideal. When a woman is faced by a maniac, what is she to do? If she truly has courage in her and also compassion, instead of becoming panicky she will melt him with the radiance of her compassion. But if that emotion has not arisen in her, she will certainly become enraged. In her rage she will slap him

---

1 From Mahadevbhaini Diary.
2 Dagger-like weapon.
3 Name of a weapon.
4 Some words are illegible here.
and raise such a row that he will run away from the scene. Or he will fall at her feet then and there. That is to say, the woman will use all her physical strength. Will that not constitute violence? If that is to be so, why not carry a weapon? My opinion is that there is violence in carrying and learning to use a weapon. But in a situation like the above, slapping or scratching, if the occasion demands it, does not constitute violence. If there is violence in a mouse biting a cat, the conduct of a woman in such a situation would also constitute violence.
The trust of a woman who slaps is not in the slap, her trust is in God.
Only compassion has not awakened her, while anyone can become enraged. Her rage will indicate her opposition. When a lecherous man approaches a woman, he does so in the belief that he will be able to subdue her, that is to say, that desire will also ultimately possess her.
How is the woman to show that this cannot happen? Either by calm but immense compassion or by shouting and struggling. Slapping and so on is like the struggling of a mouse against a cat. The woman’s slap certainly cannot cause any injury to the lecher. This will be evident, if we go deeper into it. Here I do not have in mind women of a giant’s strength. Such a woman will be blinded by the consciousness of her strength. She may be faced by a man of greater strength and she may then surrender herself to him. Here I have in mind Ashram girls or women without physical strength who repose their trust in soul-force. Their slap is not an expression of violence, only of their opposition. Their cry will render that lustful man meek, because crime itself has no strength and he who has come to commit an offence knows it. This belief of mine implies that the woman will not even till death surrender herself to the man. Her anger, her alarm, proclaims for herself as well as for the man her preparedness to die. For what I have pictured may not happen and the maniac instead of becoming meek at the woman’s anger, may hit her and determine to throw her on the ground. If at that time the woman is defeated, if she does not think of God, if she loses her self-confidence, she will be trembling, so that it will not occur to her to die. Even if it occurs to her to die, she will not know how to die. Fear, . . . ‘self-confidence become utterly weak. And enthusiasm in her . . .’ This is merely to warn women. It is quite possible for her to be in a state where she may think: ‘I do not have such faith in God that I shall be able to get rid of the maniac by

1 Illegible in the source.
2 ibid
my purity alone. Bapu has said that one must not use a weapon; for that will be violence. One may then not use even one’s hands. What, O God, am I to do ! Oh! I am dying.’ Such a thought is intolerable to me. This instruction of mine is not meant only for one man or woman. There is no question of my instruction rendering anyone weak. If anyone becomes so, it will be due to their own misunderstanding. The above suggestion is to clarify my thought.
Women should just forget that they are the weaker sex. She who has the desire and the strength to die can never be regarded as weak.
There is danger to the body, not to the soul. The soul which has attenuated its relation to the body, has made it absolutely insignificant like a blade of grass, cannot be harassed or defeated even by all the maniacs of the world. This lesson should be learnt by every boy and girl who is of an age to understand it. It is to impart this lesson that I have made the above observation. Instead of feeling helpless and scared, she should say to herself: ‘I shall offer up my body and life, but shall not become a coward.’ Her slap or scratching indicates this resolve. It is in itself an act of non-violence. She has no strength to cause harm. Hence her act is not violence; but it has power to move a lecherous mind and to awaken the woman who administers the slap.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

509. LETTER TO SETH GOVINDDAS

September 3/4, 1932

BROTHER GOVINDDAS,

I have received your letter as well as the deed of renunciation.¹ I have received them only today as they have been going round from one Government office to another. I learn from the newspapers that the letters I wrote before this have been duly received.

Your letter of renunciation is very touching, so is your father’s letter. I am sure he could not have acted differently. It is no ordinary matter to give up attachment. We cannot expect from the older people the same spirit of renunciation that has been awakened in the youth of this era. I have no doubt that your total renunciation is all to the good.
I had forgotten that episode of 1921 but now I can recollect it. I am confident that the affection between you two will now become deeper.
It is quite likely that your father will now make some sacrifice or other. It is a good thing that you are as devoted to him as before. Did you have the support from Bindanidevi in this matter? Is she educated? I hope that her health will gradually improve. May your purity of heart increase. Sardar and Mahadev too thank you. I had read about your letter of renunciation but I did not feel it proper to write upon it from here. I can now write this because your letter has been allowed to reach me. But I would advise you to refrain from sending this to the newspapers.

¹ The addressee had renounced his claim to his ancestral property.

456 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Yours,
M. K. G.

[PS.]
After writing this I have received an acknowledgment of my postcard. I hope that Bindanidevi is improving in health.

Government of Bombay, Home Department, I.G.P. File No. 20-IX

510. LETTER TO SATYAVATI CHIDAMBER

September 4, 1932

DEAR SISTER,

I have your letter. Why do you think that the truth lies only in believing in Jesus as you do? Again why do you think that an orthodox Hindu cannot follow out the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount? Are you sure of your knowledge of an orthodox Hindu? And then are you sure again that you know Jesus and His teachings? I admire your zeal but I cannot congratulate you upon your wisdom. My forty-five years of prayer and meditation have not only left me without the assurance of the type you credit yourself with, but have left me humbler than ever. The answer to my prayer is clear and emphatic that God is not encased in a safe to be approached only through a little hole bored in it, but that He is open to be approached through billions of openings by those who are humble and pure of heart. I invite you to step down from your pinnacle where you have left room for none but yourself.

With love and prayer,

Yours,
M. K. G.

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, pp. 395-6

1 Addressee’s wife.
2 The postscript was written on September 4.
511. LETTER TO GULAB

September 4, 1932

CHI. GULAB,

I am glad that you wrote to me a detailed letter. It is good that your health has improved.

Meet Mirabehn as often as you can and keep me informed about her health. She also writes to me from time to time.

It is only from you that I learn that Bhai Tilakam does not live there now. I will write to him today and ask him why. He seems to me a very straightforward young man.

How far has Indira’s pregnancy advanced? Do you see Nargisbehn or Jamnabehn any time?

Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5048. Courtesy: Dhirubhai Jhaveri

512. LETTER TO TILAKAM

September 4, 1932

MY DEAR TILAK,

How extraordinary! I did not know that you had left Mani Bhavan. Where are you staying now and what are you doing? Do give me a full account of your doings please. I hope you are keeping very good health now. Did you get my previous letter?

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 9553
513. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

September 4, 1932

CHI. CHHAGANLAL (JOSHI),

There was no letter from you in this week’s post. It rarely happens that the week’s post contains no letter from you, and, therefore, when there is none, I miss it. I read in Narandas’s letter that you had gone to bring Dhiru¹ to the Ashram. Let me know how he is.

I had sent to you, when you were [in the Camp Jail] here, a book named Flowers of St. Francis. Have you or anybody else taken it away? Mohanlal² writes to tell me that he cannot find it among the books with him. And it has not been returned to me. Please look for it. Its special value lies in the fact that it was received as a gift from a lady in Europe and contained her good wishes. A few passages in it are also marked. Don’t mind if you cannot recollect where it is.

If you have met Nanabhai, let me know how he is. I hope you have preserved your health. Ordinarily Vasumati would not neglect to write to me, but this time, though I had written to her and asked her to write to me after she was released, I have not heard from her. There are many other women, too, who have not written to me. But their conduct doesn’t appear as strange as Vasumati’s for they were not regular correspondents. Inquire about Vasumati. And remind the other women too.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5507

---

¹ Addressee’s son.
² Mohanlal M. Bhatt, sometime manager of the Navajivan Press. At this time he was in Yeravda Camp Jail.
514. LETTER TO MANILAL R. JHAVERI

September 4, 1932

CHI. MANILAL

I have your letter. A whole pile of opinion has accumulated with me against Khimchand. There is now a wire from him, saying that Chhaganlal’s four letters were drafted by him. I am awaiting his letter. It seems that he had to leave Rangoon after all. Your advice to Manganlal is perfectly right. Let us hope that the two brothers will create an atmosphere of harmony in the family and keep the good name of the Doctor untarnished.

Please communicate to me, anything which you may hear or any suggestion which may occur to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5044. Courtesy: Dhirubhai Jhaveri

515. A LETTER

September 4, 1932

I do not despair, as you do, but hope, with God’s grace, to melt the stoniest heart and I continue to strive to that end.

[From Gujarati]

Mahadevbhaini Diary, Vol. I, p. 396

1 Son of Revashanker Jhaveri.

2 Eldest son of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta.

3 Youngest son of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta.
516. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

September 4, 1932

DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,

You have corrected my mistakes in a very good hand. Keep this up. Instruct me if you know the rules regarding the proper usage of... Tell me when you would have an English letter from me and I shall write one with pleasure. My sole wish is for your peace and health. Dr. Sharma has given my letter for publication in the newspapers. This was not good. I shall be writing to him. You will read that letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 256

517. DISCUSSION WITH MAHADEV DESAI

September 4, 1932

It then seems you have not understood my article. I have actually pointed out that a slap rouses oneself, makes oneself fearless and above all, gives oneself the strength to die. A wicked person is not prepared for such, in his eyes senseless, resistance. In all probability, therefore, he would run away. But I attach less importance to that. The strength which is aroused in that woman enables her to end her life. By the time that the maniac has overpowered her, the woman has already sought protection in death; for she struggles prepared for death and has no thought of hitting the man. All that she has to do is to go on repeating Ramanama. I suggest this remedy for all circumstances, and only for those women who are pure and who want to defend themselves against attack non-violently. This article is based on my own experience. When I held on to that bar, I was mentally prepared for death. I could not have inflicted any serious injury on my assailant. If, however, I had lost hold of the bar, I would have struggled on, would perhaps have slapped or bitten the man and would have resisted till death. I would not have committed violence by 1 Since it was Gandhiji’s Silence Day, he expressed his views in writing.

3 When Gandhiji was attacked at Pardekoph; vide “An Autobiography”.

VOL. 56 : 16 JUNE, 1932 - 4 SEPTEMBER, 1932
fighting in this manner. For, I could not have inflicted any injury upon him, nor was it my intention. I only wished to die and to avoid the necessity of sitting at the opponent’s feet. This is the real test of non-violence. One’s aim should not be to inflict pain nor should pain be the result.

M. D. I understand, but the purest of girls cannot subdue a hooligan with one slap and is helpless if she has to face a number of them.

GANDHIJI: Not only I but medical jurisprudence holds it impossible for a woman to be outraged so long as she does not relax. A woman who is not ready to die relaxes, may be reluctantly, and submits to the hooligan. A desperate animal breaks its bonds or else breaks itself, and every animal is capable of exerting so much strength. The fact is that love of life is too strong for one to hold fast till death. A woman who puts forth the utmost strength will have herself torn to bits and her ribs broken in fighting the assailant.

M. D. To a woman of such purity it is not necessary to suggest slapping or anything of that kind. She will herself think out some plan or other.

GANDHIJI: I may explain it all only after I break the silence.

[From Gujarati]

APPENDIX

DISCUSSION ON COMMUNAL AWARD

August 17, 1932

The communal decision was published today. Bapu went about his work till the evening as if nothing had happened. . . . I said the new constitution was worse than the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms. “Certainly”, replied Bapu. “Those reforms were based on the Lucknow agreement between Congress and the Muslim League. But this constitution seeks to create such divisions in the country that it can never again stand up on its own legs.” Just before the evening prayer he said to me, “Well, you and the Sardar think over the situation and tell me whatever you feel like saying. The letter to Samuel Hoare details the steps I should take in order to deal with the present situation. I have therefore to serve the British Government with a notice.” . . . and then Bapu began to write the letter to MacDonald.

August 18, 1932

After finishing it in the morning Bapu said, “You stop spinning for a while and go through this letter so that it may be sent at once.” The Sardar and I read it. Then he [Sardar] said, “There is no reference in the letter to other parts of the decision. May not this be misinterpreted to mean that they are approved by you?” “No”, replied Bapu. “My views are well known. Still if you wish, I will insert one paragraph, although I would then have to enter into argument. In this letter I propose to leave out all argument, this having been included in the letter to Samuel Hoare.” I suggested that Bapu should only say his soul rebelled against the decision as a whole, but part of it was so vicious that he would lay down his life in the attempt to get it annulled. “No”, said Bapu. “No such comparison may fairly be instituted. If it were, they would say that I wanted to get the decision annulled in its entirety and had seized upon a certain part of it as a pretext. I do want the whole decision to go. But at night I thought for a moment over the question whether other points should be included and decided against their inclusion.”

The same subject was discussed in the evening. Bapu observed, “I cannot put in other things at all, for that would be tantamount to mixing politics with religion. The two questions are in fact distinct from each other.” He then continued, “I have rehearsed everything in my own mind. Everything you have suggested was considered by me before I reached the decision. Separate electorates for the Muslims and the rest are fraught with danger. They will combine with the British to suppress the Hindus. But I can think of methods by which the combination can be dealt with. When once the outsider who foments quarrels is gone, we can tackle our problems with success. But as regards the so-called untouchables I have no other remedy. How possibly am I to explain things to these poor fellows? To draw suffering on oneself when misfortune dogs one’s footsteps is no novelty. How did Sudhanva fall into the pan full of hot oil and how did Prahlad embrace a pillar of red-hot iron? There will be many satyagraha movements even after the attainment of swaraj. I have often had the idea that after the establishment of swaraj I should go to Calcutta and try to stop animal sacrifice offered in the name of religion. The goats at Kalighat are worse off even than untouchables. They cannot attack men with their horns. They can never throw up an Ambedkar from their midst. My blood boils when I think of such violence. Why do they not offer tigers instead of goats?”

1 Vide “Letter to Ramsay MacDonald”, 18-8-1932.

In the morning we discussed the possible repercussions of Bapu’s step. I said, “It will be misinterpreted in a variety of ways. Here in India there will be senseless imitation of it while in America they will say Gandhi obtained his release by his fast.” “I know”, replied Bapu. “In America they will swallow anything, and there are British agents ready to help them to do so. Many will even say that I am now a bankrupt, that my spirituality is not paying dividends; therefore, I committed suicide like cunning insolvents. And in this country there will be blind imitation, and misinterpretation. The Government will perhaps release me and let me die outside prison, or perhaps they will let me die in jail, as in the case of MacSwiney. Our own men will be critical. Jawaharlal will not like it at all. He will say we have had enough of such religion. But that does not matter. When I am going to wield a most powerful weapon in my spiritual armoury, misinterpretation and the like may never act as a check.”

August 19, 1932

The Superintendent came and asked why Bapu was going to take such a drastic step. He replied there was no alternative. The Superintendent suspected that Hoare had perhaps not even informed the British Cabinet. Bapu said, “I believe he must have informed them. But your suspicion is not ill-placed. Hoare is a man of such a type that he might not inform them. And when the Cabinet comes to know of it, he will say he did not think he should worry them with the case of a man who was ready to die for such a trifle. But I think if he did not inform the Cabinet, he would lose his career as well as reputation.” The Superintendent asked what effect Bapu’s fast would have in England. “None”, replied Bapu. “Even if all the untouchables in a body ask for joint electorates, the British can say that in the case of a minority which has been suppressed for centuries they alone can decide what is good for it; the suppressors cannot understand its needs.” He then continued, “My whole life has been passed that way. This last step of mine is the crown of my career. I had no idea that I would have to give up my life for this. But it is a noble object. The beginning was made 50 years ago, when as a child I began to smoke and then felt I was doing the wrong thing and must make a clean breast of it. Since then I have made continuous progress in the knowledge and the practice of truth.”

464 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

The Collector came in the afternoon and said: “What can they do if they are not to give such a decision? There must be some solution. In matters like this you cannot insist upon absolute justice and right.” “No”, replied Bapu. “The solution may be unreasonable but it must be acceptable to all. But there is no agreement at the back of this decision. They asked us for a solution in England but they did not see that they were addressing a packed house, and therefore their demand could never be satisfied.”

In the morning Bapu said, “It is a law of satyagraha that when a man has no weapon in his hands and when he cannot think of a way out, he should take the final step of giving up his body. What did the Rajput women do? What did Kamalavati about whom we were reading the other day do? She had resolved that she would not fall alive into the hands of the enemy. She therefore embraced death as a dear friend.”

August 20, 1932

The Sardar and I thought today that the news of Bapu’s impending fast should be passed on to the outside world by some means or other. But that was impossible without a breach of Bapu’s promise. He has promised that he on his part would never send the news out. And we could not be disloyal to him. The Sardar was very much worried . . . .

August 21, 1932

“People will tell us”, said the Sardar, “that we were here with you and should have somehow or other sent the information outside, say, through Dahyabhai who sees me every week.”

“That is not to be thought of”, replied Bapu. “Can we tell them that we would now inform the outside world of this by some means or other? We have promised to maintain absolute secrecy from our side, and that is the end of the matter so far as we are concerned. You must have noticed that in the letter I have addressed to MacDonald I have said with perfect indifference that if he made it possible, I wanted public opinion to be affected by my letters. What can they do, supposing Malaviyaji and Rajagopalachari come to know about the impending fast this very day? It is a matter of only a few days. I think it is necessary to give a slight shock even to these two leaders. Rajaji is a clever man and will at once understand why I was driven to take this step. The shock will help him to understand it. Don’t you see that I have advanced no argument in this letter? Could I not have framed a long indictment? But I restricted myself to this one point for which I would gladly sacrifice my life. I had reserved my life for a nobler purpose, but meanwhile this occasion has arisen. What can I do now? The satyagraha is directed not against Congressmen who are in jail, but against non-Congressmen in order to make them understand what they are doing. Don’t you see none of them is at all perturbed by the British Government’s proposals as regards untouchability? This inertia is sickening, and it cannot be dealt with in any other way. The possible consequences of separate electorate for Harijans fill me with horror. Separate electorate for all other communities will still leave room for me to deal with them, but I have no other means to deal with untouchables. These poor fellows will ask why I who claim to be their friend should offer satyagraha simply because they were granted some privileges; they would vote separately but vote with me. They do not realize that the separate electorate will create division among Hindus so much so that it will lead to bloodshed. Untouchable hooligans will make common cause with Muslim hooligans and kill caste Hindus. Has the British Government no idea of all this? I do not think so. And to cap it all, they have brought in Irwin. The Archbishop of Canterbury said they could not do without Irwin’s co-operation. And now the Christian Irwin is a party to this nefarious scheme.”

“No, no, Vallabhbhai. Previous publication of the news will only do harm; sudden shock is the treatment required. It would be different if you felt that this was a serious blunder. You are both associated with it; and therefore you are responsible to some extent, but the final responsibility rests with me alone, for I have done what suggested itself to me. This is a case in which no one else’s consent is necessary. When I fasted during the Bombay riots, C. R. Das and Motilal Nehru insisted that I should have consulted them before undertaking it. But I explained that the fast was undertaken by me not as a Congressman but as a man. I observed a certain religion and I fasted in accordance with its doctrine. I said the same thing to Hakim Ajmal Khan as regards the fast connected with Hindu-Muslim tension. Now too it is for me a religious and not a political question.”

August 22, 1932

[Answering Mahadev Desai, Gandhiji said]: “. . . The suppressed classes are in great peril today. The pity of it is that no one else is aware of it. It may be that when I am released, the situation might have deteriorated to such an extent that it cannot be retrieved. Numerous untouchables might have been converted to Islam or else the caste Hindus might have crushed them into submission. This part of the British Government’s decision seems so dangerous to me that even if all other parts had been acceptable, I would have been compelled to take such a step in order to combat it. . . .”

MY DEAR PADMAJA,

Your basket of oranges again! Seeing that you will insist on sending them no matter what I say, let me tell you that they are really a good variety—very juicy.

You have responded to the gentle driving by the poor little slave-driver. Even I could decipher your letter without difficulty. But I do not want you, please, to exert yourself when you are lying flat on your back. Any abomination will do. Even the abominations of loved ones are preferable to their silence. But when you are really ill, why not get some willing assistance? Anybody will gladly write to your dictation. Your mention of that magnificent story of the Buddha brings to mind many sacred things. Yes, I do dream many dreams. All may not be airy nothings or I would be crushed under the weight of the love I appropriate from people of all sorts and conditions—men, women, boys and girls.¹ Sardar and Mahadev have more books than they can cope with. The former is absorbed like a diligent student in his Sanskrit studies; the latter in his French and Urdu thanks all the same on their behalf for your offer. It is no use, I fear, your wanting to see them. I wish it was possible.

Love from us all.

Yours,

SLAVE-DRIVER

SHRIMATI PADMAJA NAIDU
C/O SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY
POONA CITY

¹ This paragraph has already been reproduced in “Letter to Padmaja Naidu”, 5-9-1932.

From the original: Padma Naidu Papers. Courtey: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
2. LETTER TO NANALAL K. JASANI

September 5, 1932

BHAJ NANALAL,

I had been awaiting your letter and was relieved when it came. I have already written to Mayashankar1; I hope he got the letter. I have been restraining Champa. I had also dissuaded Manjula. I think Maganlal would welcome this. She seems to me a very wise girl.

