Side by side with the attempt to give khadi artisans a subsistence wage there must be an attempt to find a better, i.e., more natural market for khadi. We have hitherto been satisfied with the easy way of obtaining custom only in the big cities—such as Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, etc. This was surely wrong. I have suggested to Dr. Ray that

1 The letter is not reproduced here. P. C. Ray had written that they in Bengal had to seek the Bombay market as there was very little sale of fine khadi in Bengal.
he should, if his health permits, deliver his message of love to the places surrounding the producing centres. The whole of Bengal wears fine cloth. Why should it not wear fine khadi? Under the new scheme it is possible to cheapen khadi if Bengal will produce cotton not for speculation but strictly for home use. But that day may be far off. For the time being Bengal as the rest of India should buy khadi for humanity's sake, not in a commercial spirit, counting the cost. We do not count the cost and find out what our children or our aged parents cost us. We support them at any cost. Should we do less for our millions of brothers and sisters who are starving by reason of our criminal neglect of them for centuries? We may leave no part of India neglected. The science of khadi requires decentralization of production and consumption. Consumption should take place as nearly as possible where khadi is produced. All effort should be directed towards that end. We may produce for the demands of the cities, but should never depend upon them as we would on the local market. We must first study the local market and supply its wants. And since all khadi artisans and wherever possible all artisans working under the aegis of the A.I.S.A. or A. I. V. I. A. will be expected to use khadi, a minimum demand will thus always be assured. Satis Babu and Shri Jethalal of Anantpur have made independent calculations and have concluded that self-sufficing khadi will mean two yards of sale outside against three yards of wear by the artisans. If the calculation is correct, self-sufficing khadi to be popular will need considerable support from local markets. Since other industries will go hand in hand with khadi, it may be that self-sufficing khadi will receive help through village industries other than khadi. The test of self-sufficing khadi lies in the fact that it will cost the wearer practically nothing but his labour. Self-sufficing khadi will never spread unless local markets are created all over the country and demand stabilized. In order to ensure stabilization it is necessary to define areas for every producing centre so as to avoid overlapping and unhealthy competition among workers attached to the same organization.

_Harijan_, 2-11-1935

141. GHEE

Those who can afford it are fond of eating ghee. It enters into the preparation of almost all the sweetmeats. And yet, or perhaps by reason of it, it is one of the most adulterated articles of food. The vast bulk of it that one gets in the bazar is undoubtedly adulterated. Some, if not most, of it is mixed with injurious fats which non-meat-eaters must not eat. Vegetable oils are often mixed with ghee. This mixture diminishes the vitamin value of ghee when it does not contain rancid oils. When the oils mixed are rancid, the ghee is unfit for consumption.

At Maganwadi we have been insisting on procuring cow's ghee. It has meant much difficulty and great expense. We have paid as much as Rs. 29 per 40 lb. plus railage.

This can only be for a rich man's pockets. We are trying as much as we can to approximate the poor man's standard consistent with balanced diet scale. I observed that Dr. Aykroyd had omitted ghee from his balanced diet scale. Medical testimony, while it insists on milk or buttermilk, does not insist on butter or ghee as an indispensable part of the daily menu. We have tentatively dropped ghee from our menu, except for those who consider it to be necessary for their health. We are issuing an equivalent in weight of pure fresh vegetable oils. Millions in India never know the taste of ghee. After all it should be borne in mind that those who take milk get some ghee in the purest and most assimilable form. Apart from the question of relish it may safely be said that village workers can with impunity omit ghee from their diet so long as they can procure some milk or curds or buttermilk. At the same time it is the duty of wealthy people and public bodies like municipalities to place at the disposal of the poor people cheap wholesome unadulterated milk and its products. Adulteration of milk or other foods should be as difficult as counterfeit coin or note or postage stamp, and their value should be standardized as is that of postage stamps.

If half the skill that is today devoted to the management of commercial concerns meant for private gain were devoted to the conduct of dairies for the public benefit and shops for food-stuffs, they could be run as self-supporting institutions. There is nothing to prevent them from becoming so, except the public disinclination to give the requisite skill and capital to such philanthropic concerns. The benevolence of the wealthy is exhausted in the effort to run sadavrats, to misfeed the ever-increasing army of beggars who are a burden on society. For they eat without labouring. It is benevolence misplaced, if it may not be described as mischievous. The difficulty

---

1 Vide “Notes subtitle- For four rupees a month”, 12-10-1935.
2 Charitable eating-houses amounting to impossibility of getting wholesome articles of diet at reasonable rates in every town and village is a great stumbling-block in the way of the village worker. Time is not wasted when village workers attempt to find out by experiments what in spite of this handicap are the indigenous sources of procuring an adequate diet.

_Harijan_, 2-11-1935

142. NOTES

APOLOGIES TO VISITORS

Maganwadi is taxed to its utmost limit. It has guest quarters with maximum accommodation for 12. They are principally meant for A. I. V. I. A. Board members and those who are invited for consultation or otherwise by the Chairman or the Secretary. But wherever I stay people gravitate from all parts. I have made it a rule to ask them so far as possible to share with me what has been put at my disposal. The result is that my abode has become a dharmashala without any private quarters. In dry weather this is no hardship. People sleep on the ample flat roof of the rooms occupied by me and the Board office. In the daytime they spread out anyhow. Living thus it is not possible for me to find comfortable rooms for an unlimited number of visitors. Yet they come without notice and without appointment. Add to this the fact that we are working without servants. Cooking, washing and cleaning are all done by us. The resources of Maganwadi are therefore truly taxed when visitors come as they do without notice. I am obliged to refuse them accommodation or food. The latter is always cooked according to the number known to be resident the previous night. This is all contrary to convention. In an Indian household, a chance comer becomes an honoured guest, and he shares what is prepared for the household. But Maganwadi is not a household. It is a trust created solely for the service of the semi-starved unemployed or semi-employed millions. We are trying in the best manner we know to husband all our resources to save every pice we can. We have therefore no warrant for providing a lavish table at which all who come may sit.

Hence even at the risk of being considered rude or miserly, I am obliged to be very strict and turn away those who come without previous appointment. Those who have therefore been, much against my wish, refused hospitality will please extend their sympathy to me. and excuse me. Future comers will take note of the peculiar position we are in at Maganwadi. I may mention for the convenience of those who must come without notice that within a stone's throw of Maganwadi there is a well-appointed dharmashala capable of taking in a fair number of guests. It has private quarters too for a limited number. I would like to add that in asking for appointments would-be comers should have mercy on me. It taxes all my strength to cope with the day-to-day work. No appointment should therefore be sought except for the benefit of the tasks which at the moment engage my attention to the exclusion of all else.

LAJPAT RAI WEEK

The All-India Achhutoddhar Committee, which was started by the late Lala Lajpat Rai, has decided to celebrate a Harijan Week in the revered memory of the Lion of the Punjab as from 11th November to 17th November. Besides what local committees may arrange, the A. I. A. C. has circularized the workers in the Harijan cause all over India to observe certain common features. They are as follows:

November 11: Prabhat pheris singing songs impressing upon the minds of all the necessity of treating the Harijans as brothers and sisters, and reciting the services of Lalaji in the Harijan cause.

November 12: Kathas of religious literature, such as Ramayana, Gita, Bhagawat, etc., to be read in Harijan quarters by purohits and pundits. Other Hindus should be invited to these kathas.

November 13: Panchayats to be held in Harijan quarters or temples to which all groups of the Harijans should be invited. Speeches emphasizing removal of untouchability among Harijans themselves and other evil habits.

November 14: Caste ladies to be persuaded to visit Harijan sisters in their quarters and establish social contacts with them.

November 15: Baby show. Harijan mothers with their babies should be invited to a temple or dharmashala where caste ladies would meet them and award the babies presents and prizes for cleanliness and good health.

November 16: Games. Caste students should fraternize with Harijan students and play with them indigenous games and end with light refreshments.

Shri Algurai Shastri who has sent circulars to friends informs me that the programme above sketched is subject to change. Readers should therefore be ready for alterations that may be sent from headquarters. The chief point to remember is that the celebrations... must be fitting to the great cause and the memory of the illustrious patriot and reformer. Workers and committees should zealously devote themselves to the success of the celebrations.

_Harijan, 2-11-1935_

143. TWO QUESTIONS

A worker of the Harijan movement has sent me two written questions, of which the first one is:

There is no dilemma here. When we take a Harijan into our family circle, we should tell him all the rules of our household at the very beginning. He should be told plainly that guests who observe untouchability also visit us and in order not to violate their principles they would be served drinks and other things by us or by the other servants. The Bhangi servant who knows this custom of ours will have no cause to feel hurt. But the above question implies that because of such behaviour a new problem faces the Bhangi. Hence, in such circumstances we should clarify our position to the Bhangi as well as the guest. Then neither is deceived and there is no dilemma.

The second question is this:

If this question relates to an event in the past, then it is quite pointless. I can only speak for the future. When we invite all communities of Harijans for a feast, they must be informed beforehand that the meals would be cooked and served by Bhangi Harijans only. If we do not make this clear, then we are certainly guilty of practising deception. We should never forget the fact that the poison of untouchability has permeated Harijans as well.

[From Hindi]
_Harijan Sevak, 2-11-1935_

---

1 Not reproduced here. The worker had asked whether he should let his Harijan servant serve his guests.

2 Not reproduced here. It asked whether guests at dinner parties for Harijans should be forewarned about the caste of the cooks, etc.
144. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

WARDHA,
November 2, 1935

Bhai Parikshitlal,

Will it be convenient to arrange the collection for the Harijan Fund during my visit there for the [Gujarati] Sahitya [Parishad]?

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4004. Also C.W. 131. Courtesy: Parikshitlal L. Majmudar

145. LETTER TO MANEKLAL AND RADHA GANDHI

November 2, 1935

Chi. Maneklal and Radha,

I have the New Year day letters from both of you and was glad to read them. May the new year bring you happiness and prosperity.

Ba is here. Devdas recovered recently from his illness. He will come over here for rest. Ramdas is in Bombay, doing nothing there. One cannot quite say that he has settled down. Manu and Kanti are here. Manu is betrothed to Surendra, Kishorelalbhai’s nephew.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./ XXIII

146. LETTER TO PYARELAL

WARDHA,
November 2, 1935

Chi. Pyarelal,

I have your letter. I shall not press you to come. I would be happy if you did. Mahadev and I are also hard-pressed. But if you cannot remain cheerful after coming here, do go to Calcutta. Your 1 This is followed by a note to someone, saying: “I was glad to read this.” November 2 being Monday was a silence day.

place is where you can be more at peace.
I am not able to understand this combination of faith and despair in you. May God grant you peace.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

147. A FATAL FALLACY

Among the questions that a correspondent asked me for discussion in Harijan there was one which I have kept on my file for some time:

Don’t you think that it is impossible to achieve any great reform without winning political power? The present economic structure has also got to be tackled. No reconstruction is possible without a political reconstruction and I am afraid all this talk of polished and unpolished rice, balanced diet and so on and so forth is mere moonshine.

I have often heard this argument advanced as an excuse for failure to do many things. I admit that there are certain things which cannot be done without political power, but there are numerous other things which do not at all depend upon political power. That is why a thinker like Thoreau said that “that government is the best which governs the least.” This means that when people come into possession of political power, the interference with the freedom of people is reduced to a minimum. In other words, a nation that runs its affairs smoothly and effectively without much State interference is truly democratic. Where such a condition is absent, the form of government is democratic in name.

There is certainly no limit or restraint on the freedom of thought. It may be remembered that many reformers are nowadays laying the greatest emphasis on a new ideology. How few of us are going in for any reform in our opinions? Modern scientists recognize the potency of thought and that is why it is said that as a man thinks so does he become. One who always thinks of murder will turn a murderer, and one who thinks of incest will be incestuous. On the contrary he who always thinks of truth and non-violence will be truthful and non-violent, and he whose thoughts are fixed on God will be godly. In this realm of thought political power does not come into play at all. Even so it must be obvious that political power or want of it is of no consequence in many of our activities. I would make a humble suggestion to the correspondent. Let him make a detailed note of all his daily activities and he is sure to find that many of them are performed independently of any political power. Man has to thank himself for his dependence. He can be independent as soon as he wills it.

---

1 The Gujarati original appeared in Harijanbandhu, 3-11-1935.

The correspondent has raised the bugbear of ‘great’ reform and then fought shy of it. He who is not ready for small reforms will never be ready for great reforms. He who makes the best of his faculties will go on augmenting them, and he will find that what once seemed to him a great reform was really a small one. He who orders his life in this way will lead a truly natural life. One must forget the political goal in order to realize it. To think in terms of the political goal in every matter and at every step is to raise unnecessary dust. Why worry one’s head over a thing that is inevitable? Why die before one’s death?

That is why I can take the keenest interest in discussing vitamins and leafy vegetables and unpolished rice. That is why it has become a matter of absorbing interest to me to find out how best to clean our latrines, how best to save our people from the heinous sin of fouling Mother Earth every morning. I do not quite see how thinking of these necessary problems and finding a solution for them has no political significance and how an examination of the financial policy of Government has necessarily a political bearing. What I am clear about is that the work I am doing and asking the masses to do is such as can be done by millions of people, whereas the work of examining the policy of our rulers will be beyond them. That it is a few people's business I will not dispute. Let those who are qualified to do so do it as best as they can. But until these leaders can bring great changes into being, why should not millions like me use the gifts that God has given them to the best advantage? Why should they not make their bodies fitter instruments of service? Why should they not clear their own doors and environments of dirt and filth? Why should they be always in the grip of disease and incapable of helping themselves or anyone else?

No, I am afraid the correspondent’s question betrays his laziness and despair and the depression that has overtaken many of us. I can confidently claim that I yield to none in my passion for freedom. No fatigue or depression has seized me. Many years’ experience has convinced me that the activities that absorb my energies and attention are calculated to achieve the nation's freedom, that therein lies the secret of non-violent freedom. That is why I invite everyone, men and women, young and old, to contribute his or her share to the great sacrifice.

Harijan, 11-1-1936

148. SOME WAYS OF SERVING THE COW

Shri Purushottam Narhar Joshi who calls himself a worker in the cause of the cow writes as follow:

This letter deserves consideration. Only an institution can put into practice the suggestions made in it. Some of them can be implemented by Government authority alone. However, every reader of Harijanbandhu can implement one point. He should use nothing but cow's milk and ghee made from cow’s milk. Cow’s milk is better and more nourishing than buffalo’s milk. Nothing but cow’s milk should be given to children. Ghee made from this is easier to digest.
The testimony of doctors and vaids regarding these two points has already been published in Harijanbandhu. Despite this, many people use buffalo's milk and ghee made from it for the sake of their taste.
Some others, while prepared to drink cow’s milk, are not ready to use ghee made from it. They claim that the ghee made from buffalo's milk alone is good. It is whiter in appearance and is thicker in consistency. Many people who have become accustomed to its appearance and taste are not ready to give it up for the sake of the cow or the country. In fact the whiteness and the consistency of ghee made from buffalo's milk are themselves points against it. It seems impossible to keep both the cow and the buffalo alive. If the buffalo is to survive, the cow must perish. The buffalo is dying even now. It is because we deliberately permit the slaughter of he-buffaloes that the she-buffalo survives. If, therefore, we remain negligent, we shall be instrumental in destroying both the cow and the buffalo and shall become dependent upon milk and butter imported from countries where thousands of cows are slaughtered daily and not a single cow is even allowed to grow old. Any reader who does nothing beyond

1 The letter is not translated here.
insisting upon what I have suggested will make his contribution to cow-protection and averting this terrible calamity.

Shri Joshi refers to the Goseva Sangh. That organization is not defunct; there are some members who still belong to it. One may say that its activities as an organization are very few, nevertheless it does continue to exist. A few individual go-sevaks are being trained. A dairy is being run under its auspices. Another receives inspiration from it. At the moment, I am not in a position to point out any tangible result of its activities. Attempts are being made to demonstrate such results. God alone knows what will happen in the future.

There is no doubt that much can be accomplished if the Indian States start implementing Shri Joshi’s suggestions. Even if the work is taken up on a large scale and in a co-ordinated manner in the States of Kathiawar alone, it cannot but succeed. And once its success is demonstrated, it cannot but spread to other parts. Shri Joshi fails to mention that a tannery is an important instrument in saving the cow. As this has been often repeated in Harijanbandhu, I do not mention it here again. But every go-sevak has to bear this fact in mind.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 3-11-1935

149. LETTER TO P. G. MATHEW

November 4, 1935

DEAR, MATHEW,

Your letter to hand. I never threw you overboard. I have dealt with you no otherwise than I have with my blood-son and blood-sister. I repeat my advice to you not to come if you can be suited elsewhere. I must refuse to undertake the support of your parents until I am satisfied that you can cheerfully labour with your hands and feet the whole day long and assiduously make up your Hindi and that you have consecrated yourself to constructive work through me and that there remains no cause to suspect your purity.

Love.

BAPU

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
150. LETTER TO S. DUTTA

November 4, 1935

DEAR FRIEND,

I know Sjt. Krishnadas very well. If you will give your daughter to a man of character, staunch and true, even though he may be above 40, possessing no means nor a strong physical frame, Krishnadas will make a wholly worthy husband.

yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

S. DUTTA
C/O PROF. BOSE
BALLYGUNI, CALCUTTA

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

151. LETTER TO TARA N. MASHRUWALA

WARDHA,
November 4, 1935

CHI. TARA,

I like your letter very much. I shall wait for you on the 7th. I fully agree with your view. I do not want to tempt you in any way. At present I only want to help you as much as I can in improving your health. I am not writing separately to Nanabhai1.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. TARABEHN
C/O NANABHAI MASHRUWALA
AKOLA, BERAR

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6697. Also C.W. 4342. Courtesy: Nanabhai I. Mashruwala

1 Addressee's father

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
152. LETTER TO NIRMAL KUMARBOSE

WARDHA,
November 6, 1935

DEAR NIRMAL BABU,

Ghani tells me that ten rupees out of his account are missing and that you propose to reimburse the loss from your pocket. That is not to be thought of for a single minute. Such things will always happen especially where Ghani is involved. He has been brought up in the lap of luxury. He is a spoilt child of his family. You must not, therefore, worry over the loss. Surely it is enough that you have given him your precious time and bestowed on him such extraordinary care.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SJT. NIRMAL KUMARBOSE
6/1A BRITISH INDIAN STREET, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: G.N. 10521-a

153. LETTER TO S. P. KAMAT

November 6, 1935

DEAR FRIEND,

I know that some khadi bhandars have been having their khadi dyed and bleached through mills, if not with the permission, certainly with the connivance of the A. I. S. A. I do not propose to interfere with them all of a sudden, but your objection is sound. I shall see what is practicable in view of the fact that the custom of having khadi dyed and bleached through mills has been going on for some years.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SJT. S. P. KAMAT
ANKOLA (NORTH KANARA DIST.)

From a photostat: G.N. 5680
DEAR SRINIVASARAO,

I have a vivid recollection of our meeting at Bijapur but none of your letter. All my ‘secretaries’ were not secretaries but youngsters who were doing their very best to share my burden. Mahadev himself was in the Belgaum jail. But to show how much I value your letters and your co-operation, whenever you can give it to me, I hasten to reply per return.¹

1. The story of Rama and Ravana is to my mind an allegory. In my preface to Anasaktiyoga I have explained what I understand by ‘incarnation’. What Rama used were spiritual weapons, i.e., satyagraha against the material weapons of the ten-headed Ravana. There is intrinsic support in Tulsidas’s Ramayana for this interpretation.

2. The verse you quote from the Bhagavad Gita, in my opinion, emphasizes the interpretation that I have put upon the whole teaching of the Gita, namely, that when a man has lost his egotism and his

¹ The addressee, in his letter dated November 1, had asked: (1) When Ravana carried away Sita, why did not Shri Rama practise satyagraha instead of going to Lanka and destroying Ravana? (2) Shri Krishna, the author of the Bhagavad Gita which you have annotated, says:

यद्य नाहकतो भगो बुद्धिर्यं न लिप्यते
हत्वाणि स स्मृत्ति काव्यात्मक हनित न निबध्यते। [XVIII. 17]

Not only did he say this but helped, though himself unarmored, the Pandavas to conquer the Kauravas after a bloody battle in which millions of warriors were killed, frequently with the power of his brain which proved superior to material weapons, in order to gain their birth-right. Does this not show that Shri Krishna did believe in the destruction of evil rather than in its reform by peaceful methods? (3) When Vishwamitra proceeded to snatch away Kamadhenu by force and when she complained to her master Vasishtha, the latter told her that he was precluded by his vow from getting angry or retaliating, but at the same time permitted her to protect herself against the outrage. Thereon soldiers fully armed cropped up from every hair of hers and routed the army of Vishwamitra with great slaughter. Why did not Vasishtha permit her to be taken by Vishwamitra? Why did he not practise satyagraha to retain her by peaceful means? (4) It is said that Buddha died of poisoned animal food offered to him by a devotee. We find all his followers to be flesh-eaters. How is this consistent with ahimsa? (5) Is there any instance in history where evil—unreformable evil—was conquered by good only by peaceful means?

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
intellect remains untarnished, what though he should kill all life. In other words, such a person would be incapable of killing.

3. My interpretation of the version of Kamadhenu is that the rage of Vishwamitra was impotent to touch even a single hair of the Kamadhenu. It is an illustration of the famous saying that God is the help of the helpless.

4. Eating of animal food as a matter of habit is not inconsistent with the observance of ahimsa, even as eating milk and vegetable which have also life is not inconsistent with the practice of ahimsa. I have elsewhere argued that practice of absolute ahimsa by embodied life is an utter impossibility.

5. Perhaps your question is not properly put. There can be no question of conquering evil. Evil will always retain its quality but what we endeavour always is to induce our companions, even as we try ourselves, to rid them and us of evil. Is not history replete with instances of men and women, the most evil-minded, being reformed by an appeal to their higher natures? I have not entered into an elaborate argument because I assume that you will take the trouble of procuring a copy of my introduction to Anasaktiyoga. It is translated into Marathi—I believe also in Kanarese. An English translation was published in the pages of Young India, but so far as I am aware it has never been published in book form as yet.

I hope you are keeping well.

Sjt. S.V. KOWJALGI
ADVOCATE, BIJAPUR

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 6569

155. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

MAGANWADI, WARDHA,
November 7, 1935

CHI. SHARMA.

I have your letter after a long wait. The surprising thing is that in America you did not receive even one letter of mine. You should have received at least three. I have the dates of posting. These shall be given at the end of this letter as they have to be traced in the diary.
But our agreement stipulated your writing every week irrespective of my writing or not writing. It is possible that I may have nothing much to say while you must always have something new to write about. Anyway, let bygones be bygones. Now I shall expect a letter from you every week. I have also made it a practice to send on your letters to Draupadi and Ramdas; to the latter because of his specific request and to the former just by the way. It has brought forth one result, namely, that Draupadi is obliged to write in reply. Otherwise would she have at all written to me?

I did not expect you to pay your way so soon in America but I did hold that it would not be difficult to live on modest means. Anyway, now that you are there you may stay on till you are satisfied. You should leave only when you feel that you have nothing further to learn regarding nature cure. The experiences of America will be almost repeated in England. There, too, you will not find much by way of nature cure but it was imperative that you visit the West. Quite a few misconceptions persist until experience drives them out. From this angle I do not regard your trip unproductive.

Do see Shelton’s place if you have not visited it so far; Govind waxed eloquent over it. His Health School is situated in San Antonio, Texas.

You must have got the letter for England which I sent at your request.

You ask me what I meant by saying that you would open out in America. I meant that the slight eccentricity or say a kind of kink that you possessed would be straightened out there and that you would develop the habit of living well-adjusted to others. Your account has been received. You should keep up correspondence with Bhai Brijmohanji but you need not send him an account of your expenses. You must have got the Harijan issues. They have been sent so far to Dr. Holmes’s address as also my letters but this letter I am sending to Dr. Kellogg’s address. I have already forwarded to you the letter I received from Dr. Kellogg. What advice can I give you from here regarding your health except that you should be well protected against the cold and should walk daily at least ten miles? You should partake liberally of milk and fruit and eat salads prepared from greens. This much should ensure good health; and keep up the breathing exercises.

Blessings from,

BAPU
[PS.]

Dates of letters sent to America:
1. Friday, September 20
2. Thursday, October 3
3. Friday\(^1\), October 10
Three letters.

HERBERT SHELTON'S HEALTH SCHOOL
SAN ANTONIO (TEXAS)

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, between pp. 208 and 209

156. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

MAGANWADI, WARDHA,
November 8, 1935

CHI SUMANGAL,

Your letters are received regularly. I destroy them after reading. I do not see any need to give you any advice at the moment. Do what you consider best. “None who works for self-redemption meets with an evil destiny.”

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

\(^1\) Evidently a slip for 'Thursday'

\(^2\) Bhagavad Gita, VI, 40
157. LETTER TO UMADEVI BAJAJ

MAGANWADI, WARDHA,
November 8, 1935

CHI. OM,

I got your letter at long last after waiting for many days. How dare I reproach you? I accept what you give me. I must content myself with it. Ambujam also gives me news about you from time to time. You are having good experience there¹. Take the best advantage of it. I am sure you will perfect your English. The music in that place is also reputed to be excellent. Learn it well. I do hope that you will learn Tamil at any rate, and will also propagate Hindi there. Reduce your weight too. In short, since you have gone to such a distant place prove yourself worthy of the great, although mono-syllabic, name² which you sport. There must be some meaning in your owning a name which, the Shastras say, leads to spiritual welfare. I want you to justify this belief. You do possess some of the virtues symbolized in this syllable. If you acquire a few more, you will need nothing else. I will also tell you another thing, in case you do not know it. Sanskrit words are spoken with perfect pronunciation in Tamilnad as in Maharashtra. Maharashtra is good in respect of pronunciation but the quality of music is not so high. In Tamilnad, the Sanskrit mantras, etc., are recited melodiously and in a sweet voice. You can learn all this with Ambujam's help. All this can be learnt with little trouble. It will not be necessary to spend much time over it. May this year prove good for you. Now that you have started writing, please keep up the practice and write to me from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, pp. 341-2

¹ The addressee, had joined the Vidyodaya School at Madanapalle where S. Ambujammal was the head mistress.
² The mystic syllable ˙ standing for the Brahman or the Supreme
158. NOTE ON CALCUTTA BUSTIS OR SLUMS

Many a time have I rehearsed to myself what I should do if I were a member of a corporation, and when years ago I used to walk through the streets of Calcutta and compare the palaces with their beautiful and sanitary surroundings with the ugliness and want of sanitation of its slums, I used to say to myself that the work and worth of the Corporation of Calcutta should be measured not by the number or beauty of its palaces, but by the condition of its slums, and I felt that then the Corporation had neglected its duties.

Harijan, 9-11-1935

159. MEDICAL RELIEF

Medical relief as part of village work or social service plays an important part in many reports I receive from numerous organizations. This relief consists of medicines supplied to patients who from far and near flock to any person who advertises himself as distributor of such relief. It means no trouble on the part of the medicine man. He need not have much or any knowledge of diseases and the symptoms. Medicines he often receives free from obliging chemists. Donations are always to be had from indiscriminate donors whose conscience is satisfied if they can distribute their charity in aid of suffering humanity.

This social service has appeared to me to be the laziest form of service and often even mischievous. It works mischief when the patient is expected to do nothing save to swallow the drug given to him. He is none the wiser for having received the medicine. If anything, he is worse off than before. The knowledge that he can get for nothing, or for a trifle, a pill or a potion that will correct certain irregularities will tempt him to repeat them. The fact that he gets such aid free of charge will undermine his self-respect which should disdain to receive anything for nothing.

There is another type of medical relief which is a boon. It is given by those who know the nature of diseases, who will tell the patients why they have their particular complaints and will also tell them how to avoid them. Such servants will rush to assist at all odd hours of the day or night. Such discriminating relief is an education in hygiene, teaching the people how to observe cleanliness and to gain health. But such service is rare. In the majority of cases mention of medical relief in reports is a piece of advertisement leading to donations for other activities requiring perhaps as little exertion or knowledge as medical relief. I would therefore urge all workers in the social field, whether urban or rural, to treat their medical activity as the least important item of service. It would be better to avoid all mention of such relief. Workers would do well to adopt measures that would prevent disease in their localities. Their stock of medicines should be as small as possible. They should study the bazaar medicines available in their villages, know their reputed properties, and use them as far as possible. They will find as we are finding in Sindi that hot water, sunshine, clean salt and soda with an occasional use of castor oil or quinine answer most purposes. We make it a point to send all serious cases to the Civil Hospital. Patients flock to Mirabehn and receive lessons in hygiene and prevention of diseases. They do not resent this method of approach instead of simply being given a powder or a mixture.

1 A.V. Thakkar's article which appeared along with this note is not reproduced here.

_Harijan, 9-11-1935_

160. SOYA BEANS

Inquiries are being made as to where soya beans are to be had and how they are to be sown and in what ways they are to be cooked.

The leaflet published by the Bombay Health Association was condensed in these columns only recently. I now give below a free translation of the main parts of a Gujarati leaflet published by the Baroda State Food Survey Office. Its cost is one pice:

Soya beans grow on a plant from one foot to fifteen inches in height. Every pod has on an average three beans. The plant has many varieties. The bean may be white, yellow, blackish, variegated, etc. The yellow variety has the largest percentage of protein and fat. This variety is more nutritious than meat or eggs. The Chinese eat beans with rice. Soya bean flour may be mixed with ordinary flour in the proportion of one to five parts of wheat and turned into chapatis.

Soya bean crop improves the soil. Instead of deriving nitrogen like other plants from the soil, soya bean derives it from the air and thus enriches the soil.

Soya bean grows in practically all soils. It thrives most in soils favourable to cotton or grain crops. Slat soil improves if soya bean is sown in it. In such soil more manure should be used. Fermented cowdung, grass, leaves and dungheap manure are quite serviceable for this crop.

Temperate climate suits the bean. It thrives where the rainfall is not more than 40 inches. It should not be sown in water-logged soil. The bean is generally sown after the first rains, but it can be sown during any season. In the dry season it requires to be watered once a week, or twice if the soil is inclined to dry quickly.

The soil is best prepared in summer. It should be ploughed up and exposed to the sun’s rays. Then the clods should be broken up and pulverized.

The seed should be sown in rows twenty-four to thirty-six inches apart. The plants should be three to four inches apart in their rows. There should be frequent weeding.

One acre would take from 20 to 30 lb. of seeds. They should not be sown deeper than two inches. One acre will require about 10 cartloads of manure.

After the sprouting of the seeds there should be proper weeding with a light plough. All crust should be broken up.

The pods are ready for picking in 120 days after sowing. They should be picked as soon as the leaves begin to turn yellow and drop off. They should not be allowed to be on the plants till they open, or else the seeds will drop out and be lost in the soil.

So much for the Gap.

Now a word as to the results of the experiment being made in Maganwadi.

It is too early to draw deductions as yet. It may be said that the weight of the inmates has kept constant. In a few cases there has been a decided increase—in one case as much as 4\(\frac{1}{2}\) lb. in a fortnight. Ghee has been stopped since the close of the first week. The absence of it has yet made no impression on the weight. One ounce of oil is being issued instead. The ration of beans has been increased for the current week from two ounces to three per head. The bean is served both morning and evening. They are soaked for some hours and then cooked well. Water in which it is steamed is strained out and tamarind and salt added to it. It makes a very popular soup. To the bean after straining are added linseed or til oil and salt making a tasty dish. In the morning the bean is served with chapati or bhakhari and in the evening with rice. The bean requires to be chewed well. NO ill effect has yet been reported.

The bean is obtainable in Bombay and Baroda. Negotiations are being carried on for a reduction in the price. Meanwhile small quantities can be had from Maganwadi at three annas per pound, railage extra. This price is prohibitive. By some mistake our beans were received from Baroda by passenger train instead of goods. My advice to senders is not yet to order the beans from Maganwadi. Godrej and Co. (Parel, Bombay) supply the beans in Bombay and the Baroda Food Survey Office in Baroda.

Harijan, 9-11-1935

161. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

WARDHA,
November 9, 1935

MY DEAR ANAND,

The pamphlets are well got up. I am glad that From Yeravda was sold out so quickly.

You must not allow your constipation to persist. You must take serious steps to get rid of it not by drugging yourself but by proper dietetics. Wheat bread, prunes, pure and raw milk and plenty of leafy vegetables—raw and cooked—ought to see you through.

I have a letter from Vidya, which still awaits answering. I do hope she is getting on well.

Love,

BAPU

SJT. ANAND T. HINGORANI
D/3 COSMOPOLITAN COLONY
KARACHI (SIND)

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

2 Addressee's wife
162. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

November 9, 1935

CHI. NARAHARI,

I saw your letter only last night, because Kaka had forgotten [to hand it over to me]. It will be good if you can anyhow persuade Bhai Velchand to start paying Rs. 500 a month. In fact, he should have started doing so as soon as he had decided to do so.

It is good news that Vanu¹ has recovered completely. Her leaving the Vidyapith is a great act of renunciation. But it will endure only if her attachment for the Vidyapith is dead. I hope you haven't in any way coerced her into taking the step. Otherwise she will always repent it afterwards and will continue to nurse the desire in her heart. If, however, the arrangement that you have made endures, the work being done there will shine out very well.

It won't be in my hands to arrange where I will stay. I believe it will be done by the Sahitya [Parishad]. See the person in charge and do what may be necessary.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9091

163. LETTER TO CHANDAN PAREKH

November 9, 1935

CHI. CHANDU,

I got your postcard. If you come to meet me in January it will be too late. . . . is coming here on the 12th at my call. He will stay here as long as I wish. I sent for him earlier on the strength of your letter. I will arrange to send your brother’s son to Bhavnagar and then you, too, after your work here is finished. You will feel completely at home here, and so will have good rest and will at the same time see some new things. Perhaps you know that Mahila Ashram, kanya Vidyalaya, Charkha Sangh, Gramodyog Sangh and such other activities are being run here. Women from different provinces have gathered here. Hence even from the point of view of experience, your time will not have been wasted. Besides, you will be able to fulfil your resolve mentioned in your letter. Your may come and see me again in January in Ahmedbad. Please, therefore, don’t fail to come to Wardha now, if you can manage to do so some how.

¹ Vanamala, addressee's daughter

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 938. Courtesy: Satish D. Kalelkar

164. LETTER TO A. S. SATYARTHI

[Before November 10, 1935]

Malaviyaji occupies an unrivalled position in the country and in the Congress. He at least should be above aspersions. If your translations is correct, the writer of the paragraph in his zeal to vilify Malaviyaji has not had strict regard for truth. Malaviyaji never applied for the Communal Award.

The Hindustan Times, 11-11-1935

165. LETTER TO UMASHANKAR J. JOSHI

Maganwadi, Wardha,
November 10, 1935

Bhai Umashankar,

Never mind if you are an utterly unsophisticated man; why can’t you write to me and tell me in a postcard, without arguing, what I as President of the Conference should do? Do write to me. And if you are harbouring any suspicion that I told you I could not understand your previous letter even though I had understood it, banish that suspicion from your mind. I sought Mahadev’s help also \[1\] Some statements against Madan Mohan Malaviya had appeared in a language newspaper of Lahor. The addressee was General Secretary of the Punjab Congress Nationalist Party.

\[2\] The letter appeared under the date-line “Lahore, November 10, 1935”.

\[3\] Gujarati poet and man of letters to understand it, but when even he could not help I sent the reply I did.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 10705. Courtesy: Umashankar J. Joshi

166. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

November 10, 1935

CHI. JAMNALAL,

I read the letters. I see no need for Kamalnayan to write to Dr. Jawaharlal. It will do if you yourself write to him.

Blessings from
BAPU

Form a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2976

167. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[Before November 12, 1935] 1

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I learnt only today from Narandas’s letter that you were running fever. Your letter came later.

It seems you have not properly understood the point of what I have written to Jethalal. I did disapprove of Bharatan getting Rs. 50. However, he had given up a post of Rs. 300 a month and even now he can get a job which would bring him the same income or even more. From the Rs. 50 which he takes, he gives as much as half to a poor student whom he supports. Bhai Jethalal is looking for some other job or occupation and will leave the work of the Seva Sangh as soon he gets any. I had clearly seen this. I hope you will be able to see the difference between the two cases. Those of you who take more than Jethalal does have dedicated yourselves to public work and your

---

1 Addressee’s son
2 According to the addressee the letter was received on November 12, 1935.
3 Jethalal Joshi, who had resigned from the National School and accepted the post of secretary, Seva Sangh, Rojkot on a remuneration of Rs. 40 per month.
4 Bharatan Kumarappa, an office-bearer of A.I.V.I.A. market value is greater than what you are getting at present. That is the difference. Even so, I do expect increasing self-sacrifice, within your capacity, from you all, though I wouldn’t feel disappointed, either, if that expectation did not materialize.

Get well soon. We shall meet when it is so willed by God.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5537

168. LETTER TO VIYOGI HARI

WARDHA,
November 12, 1935

Bhai Viyogi Hari,

I have your letter. It satisfied me. Malkani too wrote about you. I want to retain you as the Editor even though you continue to live where you are. You will send from there whatever you can. If an agency of Harijan Sevak can be carried on in Delhi, that too should be done. If you have someone in mind who can cope with all the work here, do send me his name as also what he would expect by way of salary. Your maintenance, as Malkani has said, will be provided by the Harijan Sevak Sangh and the editorship will be only honorary. I shall inform you when the date for the publication from here of Harijan Sevak is fixed. It will be enough if the list and other things are kept ready. If the list can be prepared in duplicate, a copy may be sent in advance.

If the names and the addresses of the subscribers are printed, they should also be sent. There is of course no hurry about anything; for the press, etc; will not be arriving till towards the end of the month.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1078
169. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

November 12, 1935

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I have your letter. Therer are many reasons for issuing Harijan Sevak from here. Ghanshyamdas had approved of all the suggestions as also Viyogi Hari’s coming here. But I understand your difficulties. You shall certainly keep him. I shall manage somehow. He also likes the idea of staying there. More when we meet.

Herewith a letter¹ for Viyogi Hari.

LOVE.

BAPU

PROF. N.R. MALKANI
DELHI

From a photostat: G.N. 1168

170. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

WARDHA,
November 12, 1935

CHI. MATHURADAS,

The sight of your handwriting has become rare of late. But it is a matter of satisfaction that your letters come at the opportune moment.

Now I am nursing the hope that you will keep writing, even if it is only a post-card. Sardar procrastinated and now he is suffering in the same proportion.² He knows how to suffer pain and he can even laugh while in pain. So there is nothing to worry about.

Prithviraj’s case will have happily ended yesterday. Of course, today I have not received the expected letter. It may still arrive by the evening mail.

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² Vallabhbhai Patel had undergone an operation for piles on November 9, 1935.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
74 WALKESHWAR ROAD
BOMBAY

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

171. LETTER TO JAYANTI N. PAREKH

November 12, 1935

CHI. JAYANTI,

I got your letter,

Swaraj is definitely connected with politics. But many an activity can have its roots in swaraj, and not in politics. For example, I would definitely regard it your contribution, however small, to the winning of swaraj if you all three brothers' engage yourselves in business—at present not for your own benefit but to help your father's and to pay off his debts. Please remember that our means of winning swaraj are non-violent and doing one's dharma is the most important of non-violent means.

May this year see your noble aspirations bear good fruit.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6271

---

1 The addressee, Kanti and Indu
2 Nathubhai, a businessman of Calicut
172. LETTER TO KANTI N. PAREKH

November 12, 1935

CHI. KANTI,

I have your letter.

Never mind if you have changed from a farmer to a businessman. Are all our dreams realized, even if they were noble?

Most of the band of eighty¹ have taken up some work or other for themselves. How then, can we find fault with Jayanti or Indu²? Besides, a special dharma has arisen for Jayanti and Indu, as it has for you. I do not regard it as a breach of your former pledge³ if you three brothers do your dharma. If, when he is in difficulty, you don’t help your father who has sacrificed everything for you, you cannot claim to be devoted to him. No higher dharma is facing you just now. Of course, I do wish that even for your father’s sake you should not violate moral principles for earning money.

I have no other reason than this in my mind when I advise Indu to give up his education at an early ege.

May this year see your noble aspirations fulfilled.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6273

173. LETTER TO INDU N. PAREKH

November 12, 1935

CHI. INDU,

I at any rate didn’t know that you had gone to Calicut. I have dictated letters for your two brothers and so there is nothing new to tell you.

Harbhai and Moolshankar⁴ have come to see me today. They

¹ Who participated in the Dandi March
² Who, however, was not one of the eighty ³ Vide “Pledge for Swaraj Workers”, April 1930.
⁴ Moolshankar Mohanlal bhatt will stay here for some time. If you write to this address, they will get your letter.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a Photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6272

174. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

November 12, 1935

CHI. MANIBEHN,

Show the remarks on the reverse to Father. I hear that everybody was extremely pleased with the way Jawaharlal conducted himself.¹

Father must be in excellent spirit and making the doctors laugh with his jokes. Don’t neglect your own health.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Patelne, p. 118_

175. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

WARDHA,

November 12, 1935

CHI. SUMANGAL,

I have been receiving your letters. It would be best to stick to a diet of milk and fruit when you go anywhere. In doing so we give no trouble to the host and our purpose is also served. In the early days of the Ashram this was the rule all members had to follow. It would be even better to carry some fruit with you. If at some place milk is not available you should make do with fruit. It should be explained that the reason for this rule is not self-control but considerations of health.

¹ Jawaharlal Nehru had, at Gandhiji’s instance, seen several British statesmen in England.

Blessings from

BAPU

SUMANGAL PRAKASH
NAVASHAKTI
PATNA

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

176. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

WARDHA,
November 13, 1935

CHI. MARY,¹

I have just received your letter. I have written to Margarete and sent her a general note of introduction.

I believe that Shanta has been suffering from over-tiredness; but it was strong enough to induce fever which she seems to have got rid of. She is taking sufficient nourishment—five to six pounds of milk and fruit daily. Sumitra² had a very bad night. She developed high fever, about 105⁰; so she had to be sent back to the hospital today. Naturally Tara is in charge. Here she readily abstained as much as she could. But with Tara here, I could not think of sending anyone else with Sumitra. Of course she would be relieved twice daily. The doctor thinks that septic poisoning was not eliminated entirely when she was discharged last time from the hospital.

I hope you are keeping fit. Tara has not been bombarding me with questions as before. It is only during the mealtime that she asks some questions. She has been most considerate and keeping quite well. Hitherto soya beans do not seem to have disagreed with her.

Love.

BAPU

MARY BARR
KHEDI SAOLIGARH (BETUL)

From a photostat: G.N. 6059. Also C.W. 3389. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

¹ The superscription is in the Devanagari script.
² Ramdas Gandhi’s daughter
177. LETTER TO JITENDRA NATH KUSARI

WARDHA,
November 14, 1935

DEAR FRIEND,

I have not a shadow of doubt that the Congress will attain complete political independence in spite of present dissensions.

Delicious and stimulating tea can be made by boiling tulsi plant leaves with a little ginger and gur. It has none of the injurious properties of tea and it is any day better.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. JITENDRA NATH KUSARI
C/O HOME HALL
NEW MARKET, PATNA

From a photostat: G.N. 7192

178. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

November 14, 1935

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

I shall be reaching there on the 12th. It is, therefore, necessary to think and decide right now in what way. I can be useful for collecting money for the Harijan Fund. Thakkar Bapa will be arriving here on the 23rd instant. If you wish you may come then.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4003. Also C.W. 132. Courtesy: Parikshitlal L. Majmudar

1 Ahmedabad
179. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

November 14, 1935

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

You must be strong enough now to talk and shout [in your usual manner]. I went through your letter to Ambedkar. It is apt but is not likely to have any effect on him at present. He cannot help abusing me how can he spare you, than? Here, as in London, there are several influences acting on him from behind. The pity of it is that the problem has been given exaggerated importance because of his threats. Even that would’t matter, were it not that instead of exploiting the situation for constructive work people are going about the wrong way to solve it. Instead of making a determined effort for the eradication of untouchability, they are trying to win over Ambedkar with appeals and entreaties. But let it be; this is the atmosphere in which we have to work. Look where you will, you find nothing but an exhibition of fear and weakness.

Can’t you take some steps regarding Patadi? Is it right for your secretary to preside over any sort of meeting without your permission?¹

I hope you understand now the position about my programme in Gujarat in the month of January. As the 12th is fixed for my arrival in Ahmedabad, so the 28th is fixed for my return to Wardha, for on that day Radhakrishna² and Anasuya³ are getting married. I must, therefore, return here at the latest on that day. I can thus give to Gujarat 14 days at the most. You may arrange whatever is possible within that period.

Blessing from

BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL
89 WARDEN ROAD, BOMBAY

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 192-3

¹ A conference of the people of 17 villages of British India was held at Patadi, at principality, on November 8, 1935, with Morarji Desai as Chairman, to oppose the proposal to hand over criminal and civil powers to the Patadi durbar.
² Son of Jamnalal Bajaj
³ Daughter of Shrikrishnadas Jaju
180. LETTER TO AVADHESH DUTT AVASTHI

[November 14, 1935]

CHI. AVADHESH,

I have your letter after a long time. Why have you not yet taken up some definite work? In order to be fearless we should love all and adhere to the path of truth. The assertion that goodness is easier to come by is based on the fact that all wish to be known as good people and no one wants to be known as a sinner. Therefore it can be said that to be a sinner is difficult!

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3214

181. LETTER TO MARGARETE SPIEGEL

WARDHA,

November 15, 1935

CHI. AMALA,

I have your letter. As soon as the German card was placed in Mahadev’s hand he redirected it and you got it. There seems to have been no avoidable delay in redirecting it to you. It was first addressed to you at Bombay. From there it was redirected to the Ashram, not Maganwadi. At the Ashram, there is anarchy at present because the whole thing is being reconstructed. No one can tell when ultimately the card was brought here. You must carefully study the five postal stamps on it. Examine the dates, and perhaps you will solve the mystery of the delay. Such misfortunes are inevitable and you are able to stand greater ones.

I am glad your income is increasing by leaps and bounds. No wonder you like Bombay. You must not count the cost of your food but take whatever is necessary to keep you in perfect health.

With Khurshedbehn at your back you will be quite all right.

1 From the postmark on the original postcard preserved in the National Archives of India

148 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
am glad Krishna and her party came to see you.

Blessings from

BAPU

DR. MARGARETE SPIEGEL
C/O MRS. Bhandarkar
MADHAV NIVAS, 8 LABURNUN ROAD
BOMBAY

Spiegel Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

182. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI G. PATEL

November 15, 1935

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

Your letter remained unattended to till today. You are observing your vow well enough. With a firm mind you will go farther. The food seems to be quite all right, except that it is deficient in green leaves and vegetables. You must include some fresh raw leaves. You should grow them yourself.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Ask Vasumati to write to me.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9516. Also C.W. 432. Courtesy: Shivabhai G. Patel

183. LETTER TO RAMESHWARAS PODDAR

November 15, 1935

CHI. RAMESHWARAS,

I had your letter. Follow Jamnalalji’s advice.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 210

VOL. 68: 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935- 15 MAY, 1936 149
184. LETTER TO VIDYA A. HINGORANI

November 15, 1935

CHI. VIDYA,

I had your letter. I get no time. Restore your health by any means. It is good to act as Dr. Ansari says. In the last analysis, God is our only doctor.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi: Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

185. NEEM LEAVES AND TAMARIND

In answer to certain questions Dr. Aykroyd, Director of Nutrition Research, sends the following interesting replies:

You ask about food values. Data on this point are being rapidly gathered here and elsewhere in India, and I hope that at no very distant period an authoritative book or pamphlet giving the chemical composition, vitamin, potency, etc., of all common foods will become available for those interested in dietetics. I have little doubt that you are right in stating that in practice different vegetable fats and oils produce different physiological effects. This is probably due to their chemical make-up, but unfortunately we are not yet in a position to correlate chemical composition and dietary effect in this case. In all probability some research worker somewhere in the world will soon enlighten us.

We have analysed neem leaves in the laboratory. As compared with a number of other green vegetable previously investigated, they have a high nutritive value. Both mature and tender leaves are rich in protein, calcium, iron and vitamin A activity and are superior in these respects to amaranth leaves, coriander leaves, drumstick leaves, lettuce, murraya leaves, and spinach. This perhaps explains the tradition of their high nutritive value. I believe that modern laboratory investigations in China have not infrequently demonstrated that herbs and other types of food recommended in ancient Chinese books are rich in vitamins, etc.

With regard to vitamin content, tamarind and lemon are roughly similar, except that the latter is richer in the antiscorbutic vitamin C. Tamarind pulp, unlike lemon, contains a good deal of tartaric acid—about 14%; the chief acid in lemon is citric acid. Otherwise the two fruits resemble each other in food value. Tamarind is stated to contain a laxative principle. I can offer nothing in support of the popular belief that it induces fever and rheumatism.

The reader should know that I have been making extensive experiments in neem leaves and tamarind. Neem leaves have been taken with impunity by several. My difficulty has been to make them palatable. Taken in the form of chutney containing sufficient tamarind pulp and salt or lemon and salt, it is least objectionable. Some take two to three tolas of whole leaves with relish. I am unable to say definitely what effect the taking of leaves produces on the system. I have been tempting volunteers to try them because of the high merit attributed in Ayurveda to them and because of their decidedly good effect on Shri Bhansali. Their common use would enable the poor people without extra cost to take the green leaves upon which modern diet experts lay much stress. That the use of the leaf produces no ill effect can be stated with perfect confidence.

Of the good effect of tamarind I can write with equal confidence. One ounce of pulp taken with meals has in several cases induced free movement of bowels. It can be mixed with vegetables or rice or dal. It can be eaten as jam when mixed with sufficient quantity of gur. I have used it with beneficial effect for reducing fevers by giving it in the form of tamarind water. In no case have I found it to have induced cold or rheumatism or boils as many people believe it does. There is hardly a man or woman in the South who does not eat tamarind in some shape or form. It is the base for its famous rasam.

Village workers will have to find out cheap, effective and harmless substitutes for the expensive yet useful articles one uses in cities and which one cannot get in the villages for love or money. Tamarind neem leaf are such substitutes.

Harijan, 16-11-1935

186. CASTE HAS TO GO

I gladly publish Sir Govindrao Madgaonkar’s open letter in this issue. My own position has been often stated in these columns. It may be summed up as follows:

1. Jayakrishna P. Bhansali
2. Vide also “Need for Care”, 30-11-1935.
3. The letter appeared under the title “An Open Letter to Mahatma Gandhi and Hindu Leaders”. The writer, a former judge of the Bombay High Court, had appealed to Gandhiji, Madan Mohan Malaviya and N.C. Kelkar and others “to give a clear and a courageous lead” in reforming the caste system.
1. I believe in varnashrama of the Vedas which in my opinion is based on absolute equality of status, notwithstanding passages to the contrary in the smritis and elsewhere.

2. Every word of the printed works passing muster as ‘Shastras’ is not, in my opinion, a revelation.

3. The interpretation of accepted texts has undergone evolution, and is capable of indefinite evolution, even as the human intellect and heart are.

4. Nothing in the Shastras which is manifestly contrary to universal truths and morals can stand.

5. Nothing in the Shastras which is capable of being reasoned can stand if it is in conflict with reason.

6. Varnashrama of the Shastras is today non-existent in practice.

7. The present caste system is the very antithesis of varnashrama. The sooner public opinion abolishes it the better.

8. In varnashrama there was and should be no prohibition of intermarriage or inter-dining. Prohibition there is of change of one’s hereditary occupation for purposes of gain. The existing practice is, therefore, doubly wrong in that it has set up cruel restrictions about inter-dining and intermarriage and tolerates anarchy about choice of occupation.

9. Thought there is in varnashrama no prohibition against intermarriage and inter-dining, there can be no compulsion. It must be left to the unfettered choice of the individuals as to where he or she will marry or dine. If the law of varnashrama was observed there would naturally be a tendency, so far as marriage is concerned, for people to restrict the marital relations to their own varna.

10. As I have repeatedly said there is no such thing as untouchability by birth in the Shastras. I hold the present practice to be a sin and the greatest blot on Hinduism. I feel more than ever that if untouchability lives, Hinduism dies.

11. The most effective, quickest, and the most unobtrusive way to destroy caste is for reformers to begin the practice with themselves and where necessary take the consequences of social boycott. The reform will not come by reviling the orthodox. The change will be gradual and imperceptible. The so-called higher classes will have to descend from their pedestal before they can make any impression upon the so-called lower classed. Day-to-day experience of village work shows how difficult the task is of bridging the gulf that exists between the city-dwellers and the villagers, the higher classes and the lower classes. The two are not synonymous terms. For the class distinction exists both in the cities and the villages.

_Harijan_, 16-11-1935

187. AWFULNESS OF CHILD-MARRIAGE

The Anti-Child-Marriage Committee has published a useful and instructive bulletin on child-marriage. I copy the main paragraphs below:

The Census Report for India of 1931 gave the following figures of the number of girls who are married under the age of 15 by age groups:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Age group</th>
<th>Percentage married</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>0 to 1</td>
<td>0.8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 ” 2</td>
<td>1.2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2 ” 3</td>
<td>2.0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3 ” 4</td>
<td>4.2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 ” 5</td>
<td>6.6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 ” 10</td>
<td>19.3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10 ” 15</td>
<td>38.1</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Thus nearly one girl in 100 girls of less than one year of age is married and the same horrible fact is repeated in all the other age groups under 15.

One consequence of this is the almost unbelievable number of child widows in the country.

The figures are:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Age group</th>
<th>Actual number of widows</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>0 to 1</td>
<td>1,515</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 ” 2</td>
<td>1,785</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2 ” 3</td>
<td>3,485</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3 ” 4</td>
<td>9,076</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 ” 5</td>
<td>15,019</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 ” 10</td>
<td>1,05,482</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10 ” 15</td>
<td>1,85,339</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 Only excerpts are reproduced here.
Another consequence of child marriage is the number of young mothers who die in childbirth. 2,00,000 deaths in childbirth is the yearly average for India. This works up to 20 deaths per hour, and a vast number of these deaths occur to girls in their teens . . . .

Lastly, child-marriage affects not merely the mother but the child and therefore the race. In India out of every, 1,000 children born, 181 die. This is the average; there are places in India where the average goes up to 400 per, 1,000 . . . .

The figures should cause us all to hang our heads in shame. But that won’t remedy the evil. The evil of child-marriage is at least as extensive in the villages as in the cities. It is pre-emi-nently women’s work. Men have no doubt to do their share. But when a man turns into a beast, he is not likely to listen to reason. It is the mothers who have to be educated to understand their privilege and duty of refusal. Who can teach them this but women? I venture to suggest therefore that the All-India Women’s Conference to be true to its name has to descend to the villages. The bulletins are valuable. They only reach a few of the English-knowing city-dwellers. What is needed is personal touch with the village women. Even when, if ever, it is established, the task won’t be easy. But some day or other the beginning has to be made in that direction before any result can be hoped for. Will the All-India Women’s Conference make common cause with the All-India Village Industries Association? No village worker, no matter how able he or she is, need expect to approach villagers purely for the sake of social reform. They will have to touch all spheres of village life. Village work, I must repeat, means real education, not in the three R’s but in opening the minds of the villagers to the needs of true life befittin g thinking beings which humans are supposed to be.

_Harijan_, 16-11-1935
188. TELEGRAM TO R. R. BAKHALE

[November 16, 1935]

BAKHALE SERVINDIA
BOMBAY

SOCIETY\(^2\) HAS LOST ONE OF ITS FOUNDERS COUNTRY A TRUE TIRELESS SERVANT AND HARIJAN AN INTREPID FRIEND. DEODHAR WAS SOCIAL REFORMER OF FIRST RANK. ALL IS WELL WITH THIS PURE SOUL. MY CONDOLENCES TO ALL CONCERNED.

GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

189. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

WARDHA,
November 16, 1935

DEAR SISTER,

I have your very affectionate letter. You have mastered well the language of politeness. A person who knows how to be polite naturally acquires that language. I see this in your case. I am very happy to learn that your health is gradually improving. I have received the two baskets of fruit you sent with Mridula with special instructions. I ate the fruit and shared it with my co-workers. I shall be happy if you can break your journey here when you go to Ahmedabad after fully regaining your health.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11144. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

---

\(^1\) The telegram was sent to condole the death of G.K. Deodhar on November 16.

\(^2\) Servants of India Society
190. LETTER TO DRAUPADI SHARMA

WARDHA,

November 16, 1935

CHI. DRAUPADI,

I have your letter of the 30th October but not the one of October 8. Even the letter from Colombo has not been returned though the letter enclosed with Ramdas’s has been received. I would not like to bother you this time to send me a copy of the letter from Ceylon. Make enquiries there if possible. To whom did you give it? Sharma complains of the absence of letters from you. There should be no laziness about letter-writing. If you confess you are guilty of laziness, you must follow it up by ridding yourself of it. You are all well, I hope. Do write.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, p. 192

191. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

WARDHA,

November 17, 1935

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

Send the accompanying letter to Kavitha if you approve of it. If you receive any names of persons intending to migrate from the place, see Gulzarilal1 and fix them up in some mill for the present. Write to me if you encounter any difficulty.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4034. Also C.W. 133. Courtesy: Parikshitlal L. Majmudar

1 Gulzarilal Nanda, then secretary of the labour union of Ahmedabad
192. LETTER TO CHANDAN PAREKH

November 17, 1935

CHI. CHANDU,

I got your letter after waiting long for it. . . . is still here. He is as firm as you are. I personally am concerned with the good name of you both. My interest and peace of mind lie in your welfare. May be today Shankar’s heart is estranged from Kakasaheb’s and mine; but how can I forget that you are going to be Kakasaheb’s daughter-in-law? I, therefore, feel all the more concerned for your good. My bond with . . . is an old one. I won’t be able to find out the truth unless you come. If you don’t come this time you will be failing in your dharma. So please come even if doing so means some hardship to you. Take the advice and help of Bal1.

More when we meet.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 939. Courtesy: Satish D. Kalelkar

---

193. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

Unrevised

WARDHA,

November 18, 1935

MY DEAR AMRIT,

Your description of the village visit is consoling and stirring. In Sindi we have nothing but apparent disappointments to register. Your reports is therefore a good set-off. I hope the progress will be sustained.

So you did not or could not go to Saharanpur? You should, if you can.

You must not expect a long letter from me. Only I love to talk to you on Mondays, the day I use the right hand for writing.

1 Elder son of D.B. Kalelkar
Even before you come here, you hold the pistol to my head and say when you must leave here. You will be somewhat just, if you also told when at the latest you will reach here.

Devdas is at Jamnalalji’s. He is getting on quite well. He is still tired if he attempts to do any writing himself. He does a lot of dictating.

Pyarelal and his sister are also here just now.

You will see the child-marriage note reproduced in the current number of Harijan. The other will partly go in, in due course. You want the other returned?

Love to you all.

BAPU

[PS.]

How I wish you could be here when Mrs. Sanger comes about 26th!

From the original: C.W. 3557. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6366

194. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA J. SOMAN

November 18, 1935

BHAJ SOMAN,

Instead of milk, take curds made from cow’s milk once a day. Be satisfied with 20 tolas of milk just now. Mix ten grains of soda bicarb in the curds and eat them slowly with a spoon after having stirred them thoroughly. The curds must not be sour. Measure out 20 tolas of milk before boiling it. The quantity will be reduced slightly on boiling. Don’t boil the milk long. This will be all your breakfast. You should have a brisk walk at least half an hour before eating the curds. Eat them only if you feel hungry. You will have eaten them, say, at seven. Take 20 minutes in eating, keeping a watch in front of you. At eleven you may eat a bhakhari, made from whole-wheat flour and well-baked, with cooked fenugreek leaves. If you wish, you may add to the latter mustard, turmeric and a little oil. You may also eat ripe uncooked tomatoes, but nothing else.

2 Margaret Sanger; vide “Interview to Margaret Sanger”, 3/4-12-1935.
In the afternoon at three you may take, if you wish, lime juice in boiled water with a little soda bicarb. At six in the evening you may eat a bhakhari of the kind described above with milk or take pattarveli cooked with garlic and uncooked fenugreek leaves; tomatoes also if you wish. It is not necessary to eat fruit for the present. Changes may be made in this regimen after you have tried it for a week.

You should go out for an hour’s walk daily in the evening. Every morning and evening you should carefully do breathing exercises on an empty stomach. Drink boiled water, warm or cold, according to need. Juggery and sugar must be avoided for the present.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4050. Also C.W. 95. Courtesy: Ramachandra J. Soman

195. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

WARDHA,
November 18, 1935

CHI. MRIDULA.

I wish that you would show yourself here every three months.
I have written about Roshni.
As for staying on the only consideration should be what you can do from there.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11197. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

---

1 Arum indicum
196. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

WARDHA,
November 19, 1935

CHI. AMBUJAM,

I have your letter. You have done well in sending me a small quantity of ragi. I simply wanted to have a specimen. I shall now try it. Is it used only for making chapatis or is it used like rice also? What is the price of it? I inquire in order to compare prices, not to send you the money. I understand your difficulty about the A.I.V.I.A. I quite see that you should not become an ordinary member. I shall look up the rules and find out whether you can come in cheaply under any classification. Probably Bharatan or Kumarappa will write to you.

When I have tried the ragi you have sent me, I shall tell you whether you have to send more.

Next time when you come you should come to stay at least for a few days.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI AMBUJAM
MADRAS

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library.

197. LETTER TO DAHYABHAI M. PATEL

November 19, 1935

BHAI DAHYABHAI,

I got your letter. You want me to write on the evils that were rampant during the fair. I would certainly like to do it; but would it have any effect on anybody? And one likes to write something only if it is going to have some effect. Everybody in the country is talking about the fine of Rs. 1,000. If we go on brooding over such misfortunes, we can do no work at all. One should not grieve over what can’t be helped; only then can we do something about what we can help, what is within our strength to set right. So if you really want to become a villager, you should, like a true villager, foreget all other things.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI DAHYABHAI MANORBHAI PATEL
CONGRESS OFFICE
DHOLKA

From Gujarati: C.W. 2708. Courtesy: Dahyabhai M. Patel

198. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH
November 19, 1935

CHI. SUMANGAL,

This sort of thing is common among friends. You must tell Sumantji, in good humour and without any anger, that you are a poor man and bring with you only enough food for yourself for the day and if you lose or part with some of it you have to go hungry that day. I am sure if you tell him this he will never again tamper with your food. Millions of poor people are forced to do this kind of thing. Dishonest traders often sell for flour stuff that is quite inedible. Poor people have then to go hungry. For they have no money to buy provisions with. That is what happens in jails too. And is not this world also a kind of jail?

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI SUMANGAL PRAKASH
NAVASHAKTI
PATNA

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
199. LETTER TO KIKABHAI L. WAGHELA¹

[Before November 21, 1935]²

Pandit Malaviya has not arrived at Wardha. there is little possibility of his coming here. It will not be necessary for me to visit Dr. Ambedkar, but if it is necessary I will not hesitate to do so. I will try to visit the Harijan locality when I visit Ahmedabad, but my programme after arrival at Ahmedabad will be fixed by Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel.

The Hindu, 22-11-1935

200. LETTER TO H.L. SHARMA

WARDHA, November 21, 1935

CHI. SHARMA,

I had your letter. The Hindustan Times will continue to be available to you as before as Devdas who is here has agreed to it. I have a letter from Draupadi saying that she is happy and would now write regularly.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, pp. 210-1

201. TALK WITH PROFESSORS AND STUDENTS³

[Before November 23, 1935]

Finding that they were thinking of opening night-schools for adults and children⁴, Gandhiji wondered whether they were agreeable to working under All-India Village Industries Association or would chalk out their own path. If they did the latter he had naturally no suggestions to make. If they would work under the All-India

¹ A Harijan leader of Ahmedabad
² The letter appeared under the date-line “Ahmedabad, November 21, 1935”.
³ Of a college newly started in Wardha. This is extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.
⁴ In Sindi
Village Industries Association he would give them his own idea of the educational needs of the villagers. He said:

What they need is not a knowledge of the three Rs, but a knowledge of their economic life and how they can better it. They are today working as mere automatons, without any responsibility whatsoever to their surroundings and without feeling the joy of work. We are entirely responsible for this state of things, as we have had no intimate contact with them. We have indeed studied their Politico-economic condition, as did the late Romesh Chandra Dutt. But whilst we have been told of the state to which they have been reduced, they do not know how they themselves can partly or wholly remove their poverty. Now I think it is possible to show them how to double their income. You will say they are heavily taxed. That they are, but I am not concerned with that problem at the present moment. Our present policy is to leave all politics or politico-economics alone. You will therefore begin with a study of their social, hygienic and moral condition. You may use magic lantern slides for the purpose. You have to show them that untouchability is no part of religion, and that the idea of superiority of status is foreign to any true religion. Just as a healthy man does not regard an unhealthy man as inferior to him in status, even so a teacher or a merchant may not regard a scavenger as inferior to him. You have to teach them these fundamentals of religion and ethics. Then you will teach them geography and history—you will begin with the history of their own village. Now I would teach them the three Rs as a means for imparting a knowledge of these things, but you do not need to make them matriculates or graduates for this purpose. A knowledge of English may be a source of income in these days, but it is not necessary to add to the health of one’s mind or body. All our energy has been sapped in mastering a foreign language and in reading tons of books which in no way help us to keep ourselves physically and morally fit or to serve the villagers. You will thus see where I bring in a knowledge of the three Rs. It comes in at the end, and at the long end at that, and not in the beginning, and then, as a help to things permanent. You cannot more usefully pass an hour every night with them than by teaching them the laws of health, social morals, and the way of a strenuous life of easy labour.

_Harijan, 23-11-1935_
202. FEAR COMPLEX

Many workers are so frightened of village life that they fear that if they are not paid by some agency they will not be able to earn their living by labouring in villages, especially if they are married and have a family to support. In my opinion this is a demoralizing belief. No doubt, if a person goes to a village with the city mentality and wants to live in villages the city life, he will never earn enough unless he, like the city people, exploits the villagers. But if a person settles in a village and tries to live like the villagers, he should have no difficulty in making a ‘living by the sweat of his brow’. He should have confidence that if the villagers who are prepared to toil all the year round in the traditional unintelligent manner can earn their living, he must also earn at least as much as the average villager. This he will do without displacing a single villager, for he will go to village as a producer, not as a parasite.

If the worker has the ordinary size family, his wife and one other member should be full-time workers. Such a worker won’t immediately have the muscle of the villager, but he will more than make up for the deficiency by his intelligence, if only he will shed his difference and fear complex. He would be doing productive work, and not be a mere consumer, unless he gets an adequate response from the villagers so as to occupy the whole of his time in serving them. In that case he will be worth the commission on the additional production of the villagers induced by his effort. But the experience of the few months that the village work has gone on under the aegis of the A.I.V.I.A. shows that the response from the villagers will be very slow and that the worker will have to become a pattern of virtue and work before the villagers. That will be the best object-lesson for them which is bound to impress them sooner or later provided that he lives as one of them and not a patron seated amongst them to be adored from a respectful distance.

The question, therefore, is: what remunerative work can he do in the village of his choice? He and the members of the family will give some time to cleaning the village, whether the villagers help him or not, and he will give them such simple medical assistance as is within his power to give. Every person can prescribe a simple opening drug or quinine, wash a boil or wound, wash dirty eyes and ears, and apply a clean ointment to a wound. I am trying to find out a book that will give the simplest directions in the ordinary cases occurring daily in the villages. Anyway these two things must be an integral part of village work. This ought not to occupy more than two hours of his time per day. The village worker has no such things as an eight hours’ day. For him the labour for the villager is a labour of love. For his living, therefore, he will give eight hours at least in addition to the two hours. It should be borne in mind that under the new scheme propounded by the A.I.S.A. and A.I.V.I.A. all labour has an equal minimum value. Thus a carder who works at his bow for one hour and turns out the average quantity of cards will get exactly the same wage that the weaver, the spinner or the papermaker would, for the given quantity of their respective works per hour. Therefore the worker is free to choose and learn whatever work he can easily do, care being always taken to choose such labour whose product is easily salable in his village or the surrounding area or is in demand by the Associations.

One great need in every village in an honest shop where unadulterated food-stuffs and other things can be had for the cost price and a moderate commission. It is true that a shop, be it ever so small, requires some capital. But a worker who is at all known in the area of his work should command sufficient confidence in his honesty to enable him to make small wholesale purchases on credit.

I may not take these concrete suggestion much further. An observant worker will always make important discoveries and soon know what labour he can do to earn a living and be at the same time an object-lesson to the villagers whom he is to serve. He will therefore have to choose labour that will not exploit the villagers, that will not injure their health or morals but will teach the villagers to take up industries to occupy their leisure hours and add to their tiny incomes. His observations will lead him to direct his attention to the village wastes including weeds and the superficial natural resources of the village. He will soon find that he can turn many of them to good account. If he picks up edible weeds, it is as good as earning part of his food. Mirabehn has presented me with a museum of beautiful marble-like stones which serve several useful purposes as they are, and I would soon convert them into bazaar articles if I has leisure and would invest into simple tools to give them different shapes. Kaka-saheb had given to me split bamboo waste that was destined to be burnt, and with a rude knife he turned some of it into paper knives. and wooden spoons both salable in limited quantities. Some workers in Maganwadi occupy their leisure in making envelopes out of waste paper blank on one side.

The fact is the villagers have lost all hope. They suspect that every stranger’s hand is at their throats and that he goes to them only to exploit them. Divorce between intellect and labour has paralysed their thinking faculty. Their working hours they do not use to the best advantage. The worker should enter such villages full of love and hope, feeling sure that where men and women labour unintelligently and remain unemployed half the year round, he working all the year round and combining labour with intelligence cannot fail to win the confidence of the villagers and earn his living honestly and well by labouring in their midst.

‘But what about my children and their education?’—says the candidate worker. If the children are to receive their education after the modern style, I can give no useful guidance. If it be deemed enough to make them healthy, sinewy, honest, intelligent villagers, any day able to earn their livelihood in the home of their parents’ adoption, they will have their all-around education under the parental roof and withal they will be partly earning members of the family from the moment they reach the years of understanding and are able to use their hands and feet in a methodical manner. There is no school equal to a decent home and no teachers equal to honest virtuous parents. Modern high school education is a dead weight on the villagers. Their children will never be able to get it, and thank God they will never miss it if they have the training of the decent home. If the village worker is not a decent man or woman, capable of conducting a decent home, he or she had better not aspire after the high privilege and honour of becoming a village worker.

_Harijan_, 23-11-1935

203. A GREAT SOCIAL WORKER

In the death of Shri G.K. Deodhar the country has lost one of its great social workers and an uncompromising and faithful friend of Harijans. He was one of the foundation members of the Society fonned by Gokhale. He was President of the Maharashtra Provincial Harijan Sevak Sangh. There was not a famine or a flood in the country which did not claim the attention of this servant of humanity. Thought he could easily become a rich man, he chose poverty as a life principle for a public worker. His tireless energy was contagious. He never spared himself when social service was demanded of him. His was a life of spotless purity. He was the soul of the Poona Seva Sadan which he loved and for which he laboured so well that from a little thing it has today grown into an institution of the kind second to none in all India. I tender my respectful condolences to the family of the deceased.

Harijan, 23-11-1935

204. LETTER TO DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA

WARDHA,
November 23, 1935

DEAR DR. GOPICHAND,

I have copies of your letters to Shankerlal. So far as I can see, I have nothing to say on the arrangements about the Lahore Bhandar. But in this matter Shankerlal’s word has to be final for he knows ever so much more than I do.

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA
13 MALL ROAD
LAHORE

From the original: Dr. Gopichand Bhargava Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

205. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

WARDHA,
November 23, 1935

CHI. AMBUJAM,

I have your two letters and ragi, also samples of soya beans, and now cow-gram. We have already cooked ragi, but not exactly in the fashion mentioned by you. Cow-gram does not contain the quantity of fats that soya beans do. I am now trying to find the chemical constituents of ragi. If you can find them through any doctor please send them.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

206. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

November 23, 1935

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I have been indeed late in replying to your letter but I was helpless. Your budget seems a bit too exacting. You do not have enough workers to cope with so many activities. The scheme is certainly good provided financial assistance and workers too are available. Every enterprise must necessarily become self-supporting. Only those articles should be produced about the demand for which you are quite confident.

You must be keeping well. Malkaniji told me that you were to shift today to the new residence.

Wherefrom and at what price did you obtain the soya beans?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2432

207. DEATH OF A TRUE HARIJAN SEVAK

There are only a handful of persons in Kathiawar who have no trace of the feeling of untouchability in their veins and are engrossed in the service of Harijans despite being orthodox. Among them the celebrated Harijan Govindji Parekh of Amreli was a leading personality. The late Harilal was the soul of Amreli. There could seldom be a public welfare activity in Kathiawar in which Shri Harilal Parekh did not have a hand. One and all needed his services and his advice, and everyone found it acceptable. In many ways, his was an exemplary life; we should perpetuate his memory by learning all that we can from it.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 24-11-1935
A sum of about Rs. 29,000 is needed for this year’s work of the Harijan Sevak Sangh of Gujarat. Fifty-seven schools and three ashrams are being run with the Sangh’s help. The Sangh is under the supervision of no less a public worker than Thakkar Bapa. Shri Parikshitlal Majmudar is giving his devoted services to it. According to me the expenditure of Rs. 29,000 a year in nothing. If we regard the service of Harijans as our dharma and if everybody who earns Rs. 500 a year decides to spare even Re.1 this charitable activity, we can get several Lakhys of rupees annually. But we don’t yet have such religious awareness. Moreover, not all caste Hindus regard untouchability as contrary to dharma and, therefore, accept service of the Harijan as their dharma. Hence it doubly becomes a duty of those who regard the service of Harijans as their dharma to sustain the work of such service.

Eradication of untouchability is not one man’s job. Neither can it be done only with the help of money. Money can be regarded as a form of energy for the work of service. If every caste Hindu who looks upon eradication of untouchability as his dharma regularly contributes to the fund according to his capacity, then the work being done at present can be kept up and those in charge of it will be saved from financial worries.

I shall be going to Ahmedabad in the second week of January for the Gujarati Sahitya Parishad. I am hoping to collect at that time from Gujaratis the sum mentioned above. It was suggested to me that I should appeal for help from friends outside Gujarat [also] but I rejected the suggestion. If I did that, it would be a disgrace to Gujarat and so to me. No one can say that Gujarat is among the poor provinces in the country. It has, on the contrary, helped other provinces in their time of need. It has never begged for anything from other provinces, and rightly too. Why shouldn’t it, then, contribute for such a noble activity? It is true that it has to contribute to many funds. It is also true that the farmers of Gujarat have suffered many calamities and borne great losses. But I firmly believe that such arguments cannot be advanced as excuses for not doing one’s dharma. I, therefore, hope that all friends, men and women, will work hard and collect the small amount mentioned above and thus relieve Thakkar Bapa, other workers and me of the worry. The burden of most of the activities in Gujarat is generally borne by Sardar. I know that he has had to collect money for many of them. I have, therefore, deliberately not put this burden on him. But he cannot, for that reason, remain unconcerned till the money is collected. Nobody should think that eradication of untouchability is Thakkar Bapa’s and my concern only and not his. I hope that Gujarat will not send me back empty-handed.

---

1 This appeared in the form of an open letter “To All Gujaratis” in Harijanbandhu, 8-12-1935.

Your servant,

MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7184; also C.W. 4781

209. LETTER TO M.R. MASANI

WARDHA, MAGANWADI,
November 25, 1935

MY DEAR MASANI,

Come whenever you can during the next fortnight excepting of course Mondays—my silence days.

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 4127

210. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

November 25, 1935

MY DEAR AMRIT,

I have now two letters in front of me. Better a postcard than no letter. I sent you a wire in reply to your first. I expect you here any day in reply to this.

Love.

BAPU

SMT. RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
JALLUNDER CITY
PUNJAB

From the original: C.W. 3719. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6875
211. LETTER TO G.V. MAVALANKAR

November 25, 1935

BHAI MAVALANKAR,

You must of course be a member of the Reception Committee. Take me for the opening ceremony as you wish, after consulting the Committee. Convey my condolences to the family of the deceased.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1246

212. NOTE TO MANU GANDHI

[On or after November 25, 1935]

Do you wish to tell me anything? Return soon. Write to me regularly. Give me all the news. Live in the utmost Simplicity. Don’t fear Harilal at all. I will write to Narandas about slivers. Kanti will go to see you off. Ask for a direct ticket for Rajkot.

I hope you have been writing to Surendra. Continue to write from there too. Does he write?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1553. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

213. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

WARDHA,

November 26, 1935

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

It was settled yesterday with Thakkar Bapa himself that Malkani would do his work independently while remaining the Joint Secretary. But he came to me early this morning expressing his inability to hold the office. I am enclosing a copy of the letter I have written to \[1\] This silence day note is written on the back of a letter dated November 20, 1935. The Monday following November 20 fell on November 25, 1935.

\[2\] This is not available.
Thakkar Bapa regarding this development. Hence it would be superfluous to go into further details here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8014. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

214. LETTER TO CHANDAN PAREKH

WARDHA,
November 27, 1935

CHU. CHANDU,

I got your letter. When I say that one per cent doubt remains, what I mean is that I am ready to listen to and think over what Father or you may say. If I didn’t have even this one per cent doubt, there would be no need at all for me to here anybody. Please don’t forget this, that before I discussed the matter with you I used to doubt the truth of what . . . and his friends said. After my long and patient talk with you, my attitude towards . . . became more favourable. Your story is something like this: you were bitten by a snake, but you did not feel the effect of poison although you already knew from experience the nature of the poison. Just as this wouldn’t be a plausible story, so is your story of [the effect of] . . .’s touch not plausible. The poison of a lustful man’s touch is far more than that of a snake. And if a snake, while lifting its young one with its teeth, accidentally bites it with its fangs, the young one also would feel the effect of poison. Since a child is easily influenced by its parents, if they pour poison into it the child cannot but feel its effect. Please, therefore, know that it is your own testimony that proves the innocence of . . . to the extent of 99 per cent. And that is why I have told you, and I repeat here, that you should continue to write to me and keep me informed about everything. If you continue to help me, the remaining one per cent doubt also can be cleared. After your testimony, I cannot bring myself to find . . . guilty. Nor can I bring myself to believe that you are telling a brazen lie. Till, therefore, I get further evidence, the one per cent will remain in your favour. If you are one hundred per cent truthful and if you continue your effort [to convince me], you will be able to raise the one per cent to 100 per-cent.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 940. Courtesy: Satish D. Kalelkar

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8014. Courtesy: G.D. Birla
215. LETTER TO UMADEVI BAJAJ

November 27, 1935

CHI. OM,

I got your letter. I find it intolerable that teachers in your school cannot speak with their pupils in any language other than English. You should report this matter to the management politely. Why do they behave in this manner? Your letter is fairly good. You do not take much time to get used to such things. Learn whatever good you find there, but try to keep away from whatever is undesirable.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 342

216. LETTER TO RAMESHCHANDRA

November 27, 1935

BHAIRAMESHCHANDRAJI,

I have certainly asserted that birth-control by artificial means is harmful and I still maintain it. It would be wrong even to think about the possible exceptions. The same holds true in the case of insurance, the only difference being that the number of exceptional cases can be greater in the latter case. The spiritual harm resulting from birth-control by artificial means is much greater than what results from insurance.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6094
217. TELEGRAM TO HANUMANT SAHAI

WARDHA,

[On or before November 28, 1935]

YOUR TELEGRAM. INTERVENTION IMPROPER WITHOUT FULL KNOWLEDGE, CIRCUMSTANCES SUGGEST IMPARTIAL ARBITRATION SUBJECT MEN’S RETURN WORK AND BOTH PARTIES ACCEPTING AWARD AS FINAL BINDING.

GANDHI

_Bapu—A Unique Association_, Vol. II, p. 160

218. CASTE AND VARNA

WARDHA,

November 28, 1935

A gentleman writes that I advocate the abolition of castes and maintain that the varnas are and ought to be enduring. He wants me to explain this with illustrations.

Castes are numerous. They are man-made. They undergo constant change. The older ones die and new ones spring up. Castes based on occupations are to be found all over the world. It is only in India that there are restrictions, as regards intermarriage and inter-dining, which defy reason. This is very harmful. It stands in the way of the community’s progress. It has nothing to do with religion.

Varnas are just four and not numerous. They have been sanctioned by the Shastras. Whether or not people are conscious of them, they do exist all over the world as we see. There are everywhere these four classes: one to impart knowledge of god for the welfare of

---

1 The telegram was reproduced by Mahadev Desai in his letter to G. D. Birla dated November 28, 1935.

3 The workers of the Birla Cotton Mill had gone on strike in protest against reduction in their wages; _vide_ also “Telegram to G.D. Birla”, 2-12-1935 and “Letter to G. D. Birla”, 5-12-1935.
the world, another to protect the people against manifold dangers, a third one to carry on the work of farming, etc., to sustain the community and one class to work for these three classes. There is no feeling of high and low in this division. But since this is not understood as a great law of nature, there has been confusion in it, that is, these four functions are no more confined to the respective varnas. Instead men have been taking up any occupation they choose with a view to achieving their selfish ends. At one time in India people used to consciously follow this law and thus lived in peace. One accepted the calling of one’s own varna and was satisfied in its pursuit for general welfare. There was no unhealthy competition among people to jump from one varna to another for the sake of money or fame. At present this significance of the varna system seems to have disappeared even in India. Destructive competition is on the increase, everyone takes liberty of following any profession and the meaning of varna has been restricted to unnatural and meaningless restrictions on intermarriage and inter-dining. And that is why the country has stopped progressing. Hinduism will once again shine forth if such senseless restrictions are abolished, the pristine varna system is resurrected and the distinctions of high and low are banished. This would be to the good of India as well as the whole world.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 19-1-1936

219. TELEGRAM TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJII

WARDHAGANJ,

November 28, 1935

MATHURADAS TRIKUMJII

78 WALKESHWAR RD.

BY

PYARELAL LEAVING EVENING MEET STATION

BAPU

From the original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar
220. LETTER TO S.V. KAMAT

November 28, 1935

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.¹ I am sending it to Sjt. Gangadharrao for his reply. On receipt of it I shall write to you further.

I cannot recall all the conversations that take place with friends.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal. Papers. Courtesy: Payarelal

221. LETTER TO SWARUPRANI NEHRU

November 28, 1935

DEAR SISTER²,

I have a letter from you after months and that too in response to one of mine. Still, something is better than nothing.

I too got a letter about the rise in Kamala’s temperature. Let us hope that it has come down by now.

You must be getting letters from Krishna³; there is hardly any chance of her writing to me. Jawaharlal will never have any respite from work. Did he have rest even in jail? He wrote a book there and now that he is out he writes letters which read like books.

Ramdas is keeping indifferent health and passing his days in Bombay. He is expected here this week. Ba is all right and so is Mahadev. I hope you are keeping well and cheerful.

MOHANDAS

From the Hindi original: Gandhiji-Indira Gandhi Correspondence. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ In his letter dated November 27 the addressee had sought an account of Rs. 2,675 out of Rs. 20,000 entrusted by Gandhiji to Gangadharrao Desh-pande for Kanara Relief.
² Jawaharlal Nehru’s mother
³ Krishna Hutheesingh addressee’s daughter
222. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

MAGANWADI,
November 29, 1935

CHI. MIRA,

The bearer of your note is in a hurry to go. Your note was read as soon as it came. The reply is being dictated immediately after the reading. The things wanted will be sent tomorrow with the bearer who will bring tomorrow’s note. The idea of cow-keeping is good. If there is none there, I could perhaps send one from here. She will be a good companion for you and provide with good occupation. Meanwhile you should take such milk as you get there. Are there any goats there? If there are, you should possess a few goats on loan. You should take as much ghee as you need and fall back on Maganwadi for supply. I am glad the first experience has been so happy. All well here.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6307. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9773

1 In Bapu’s Letters to Mira Mirabehn explains: “Between the last letter [“Letter to Mirabehn”, 29-5-1935] and this there comes another eventful gap. For some time I was serving Bapu in Maganwadi. Bapu’s health had become very bad and high blood-pressure had developed. At the same time, Maganwadi had become overcrowded with inmates of all descriptions. The problem of Sindi village was continuing unsolved and Bapu suddenly announced that he intended to go and live in Sindi all alone, taking what help he required from the villagers. Everyone was aghast at the idea, specially in view of Bapu’s state of health. I asked Bapu that if I went instead to Sindi, would he accept the compromise. Bapu reluctantly agreed. A small one-room cottage was built and I went there to live. I felt that Sindi was no village and that our experiences of, and experiments with regard to, villages life could not really be carried on there. I, therefore, suggested that as soon as someone else would be found ready to stay in Sindi, I would go on to a real village in the countryside. The following letter was addressed to me in segaon which was the village I had gone on to from Sindi.”

2 The superscription in this and the other letters to the addressee is in the Devanagari script.

VOL. 68: 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935- 15 MAY, 1936 177
G.D. BIRLA: That friend in charge of the tannery\(^2\), you say, is working for a mere pittance. It is highly commendable.

GANDHIJI: He is a brahmin and a graduate. He does not accept more than eight annas a day. His wife also works elsewhere the whole day for a bare living wage.

Yes: All that surprises me, but I do not know how long this can go on in this machine age.

I have no such fear, because I have the conviction within me that when all these achievements of the machine age will have disappeared these our handicrafts will remain; when all exploitation will have ceased, service and honest labour will remain. It is because this faith sustains me that I am going on with my work. After all where is there any cause for despair? What are a few years in the vast stretch of eternity? A study of human origins would carry us back to millions of years. Indomitable faith in their work sustained men like Stephenson and Columbus. Faith in my work sustains me, but there is also added to it the conviction that all the other things that seem to challenge my faith are doomed. Don’t you see that if India becomes industrialized, we shall need a Nadirshah to find out other worlds to exploit, that we shall have to pit ourselves against the naval and military power of Britain and Japan and America, of Russia and Italy? My head reels to think of these rivalries. No, I am clear that whilst this machine age aims at converting men into machines, I am aiming at reinstating mankind to his original estate.

I quite see your invincible faith. But you seem to forget in your enthusiasm that you will not be with us until eternity. You are getting old. Why not make large collections and spread your work over a large area?

No. I do not believe in collecting more than I need.

But supposing you constructed twenty, even ten, model villages?

If it is such an easy thing, you might do so with your money. But I know it is not easy. You cannot bring a model village into being

---

1 Extracted from Mahdev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. G.D. Birla was at Wardha for the executive meeting of the Harijan Sevak Sangh.

2 At Nalawadi
by the magic wand of money. And I believe in making a full return for whatever money I receive from the public. And then I am against raising any more central funds now. There are so many Harijan schools and ashrams in Gujarat requiring an annual budget of Rs. 29,000. Why should I ask you for work in Gujarat? Is it not the duty of the Gujaratis to find money for the Harijan work in Gujarat? If they cannot find it, they had better close down their institutions rather than ask for outside help.

_Harijan, 30-11-1935_

224. AN INTERESTING POINT

The Council of the Harijan Sevak Sangh met last week at Wardha. In view of my article “Caste Has to Go”\(^1\) some members raised the question whether in the pages of _Harijan_ which was issued under the aegis of the Harijan Sevak Sangh I was justified in airing my views on the Sangh, or whether I could express views which went beyond the official policy of the Sangh, or lastly whether the Sangh could extend the scope of its objective.

I gave it as my opinion that I was free as an individual to advocate in the pages of _Harijan_ views which I may know to be contrary to the views of some members or maybe in advance of the official policy of the Sangh. In my opinion, any member of the Sangh is entitled to the same freedom so long as his views do not in any way tone down the Sangh’s objective. Its policy represents the highest common factor between the views of the moderate reformer and those of the radical. We have in the Harijan Sevak Sangh both the sections well represented. There are sanatanists who would restrict removal of untouchability to the mere touch. There are others who would extend it to inter-dining and intermarriage. The membership pledge lays down the minimum which every member has to subscribe to and practise in his or her own life. It does not prevent any member from going further so long as he or she does not advocate the advanced view as the policy of the Sangh. At its very origin all sections of Hindus had met and, in order to carry the largest number of Hindus with them, that representative gathering passed a comprehensive resolution' that would secure the hearty assent of the Largest number present. The wisdom of the course was justified in that there was, thanks to Pandit Malaviyaji, practical unanimity. It is obvious that if the resolution had contemplated the suppression of advanced views and practice by members acting in their individual capacity many members would not have subscribed to such restriction. But on the other hands not even a majority of the members of the board could change the constitution so far as its objective is concerned. That can only be done by a general representative meeting of Hindus convened specially for the purpose. Therefore whilst the most cautious reformer may rest secure about the fundamental policy of the Sangh, the extreme radical is in no way hampered in his advocacy, as an individual, of the views which in his opinion may promote the purity and health of Hinduism.

\(^1\) _Vide_ “An Appeal”, 24-11-1935.

\(^2\) _Vide_ “Caste Has to Go”, 16-11-1935.

It may be mentioned, in passing, that the views expressed by me in the article “Caste Has to Go” have been often expressed in these columns though under different headings. Moreover the article does not deal with the relations between caste Hindus and Harijan Hindus. It deals with reform only among caste men or savarnas. When untouchability goes, untouchables will occupy precisely the same position as caste men. And whatever rule or custom then governs caste men will govern Harijans who are no longer Harijans. If, therefore, caste remains as it is now, there will be no intermarriage and no interdining between Harijans and caste men. But if caste goes in its present form, as it will some day, there will most undoubtedly be intermarriage and inter-dining between Harijans and caste men as there will be between caste men and caste men. And if varna remains, as I hope it will, occupations will be restricted as they were in the past; intermarriage and inter-dining will not be restricted even as they were not in the past. Whatever happens it will happen not because of the activity of the Sangh as a body but because of other forces which the Sangh can neither regulate nor control. Its members as individuals will no doubt take their due share in moulding those forces according to their predilections.

Harijan, 30-11-1935

Shri Gopabandhu Chaudhry writes:¹

In the article “Need for Humane Custom”² you refer to a calculation that “self-sufficing khadi will mean two yards of sale outside against three yards of wear by artisans, etc.” . . . But the reading of the article leaves an impression that the success of self-sufficing khadi entirely depends upon the sale of khadi. But is this a correct ideal? It not the ideal of self-sufficing khadi this that in a majority of cases the spinners will spin their own cotton or purchase their cotton and pay the weaver from their earnings from other village industries or agricultural labour?

Otherwise, when our aim is to make every home in the village self-sufficient, where will the extra two yards for outside sale produced by the spinners sell? Will the demand of the cities be possibly so large?

. . . Self-sufficing khadi ought to thrive independently on its own merits, as there is enough unutilized land to grow the cotton required and unemployed leisure to spin the yarn.

The ideal no doubt is for every family to grow, spin, weave and wear its own cotton, just as it is for every family to own land and grow its own corn, cook and eat it. But we know that every family won’t and can’t realize the ideal; we know, too, that success will not attend the worker immediately he begins to preach the unadulterated message of self-sufficing khadi. What Gopabandhu Babu has himself suggested is itself an intermediary stage, that of a householder buying enough cotton, spinning it himself, having the yarn woven and paying the charges from his savings. But there are million who have no savings and there are millions who purchase their cloth without performing any of the processes. To spin for oneself and pay for cotton and weaving out of the proceeds of some other industry is an intermediate stage. To spin extra and from the proceeds of that labour to pay for weaving is yet another intermediate stage and perhaps the easiest both from the workers’ and the weavers’ points of view. In working out this stage we have ready-made khadi centres. There the workers have to induce spinners and other artisans to wear khadi if they are to continue to get work through the All-India Spinners’ Association agency. There are many among them who depend for their maintenance entirely on their labour spent on spinning, weaving, carding or dyeing. These can only wear khadi if they work at producing surplus khadi and command the sale of such products. This ought not to be difficult, if in spite of the rise in the spinners’ wage the existing demand for khadi continues.

¹ Only extracts from the letter are reproduced here.
² Vide “Need for Humane Custom”, 2-11-1935.

In practice all the stages will be worked simultaneously. What the new scheme does is to put the emphasis on the right spot and state what the goal is in unmistakable terms. Khadi workers will no longer concentrate on increasing sales and reducing the price of khadi. They are henceforth to concentrate on people becoming self-sufficing about their cloth requirements at least to the extent of spinning. They will have to establish personal touch with the artisans, befriend them, know their wants and help them, progressively to improve their economic condition by making the best possible use of their leisure hours consistently with equal opportunity for all. This ought to be a good enough programme for the most ambitious worker. The most difficult task will be on the one hand to open the eyes of understanding of the millions and persuade them to use their leisure hours for their own betterment and on the other to persuade the buying class—the city people and the middle men—to realize that in the long run it pays them if they buy village manufactures even though their cost may be apparently some what higher than they have hitherto paid and even though the appearance be not quite what they have been used to. It pays them because it raises the material condition of the people and therefore their purchasing power. The new scheme is therefore calculated to draw the best out of the whole of the nation irrespective of ‘caste, colour or creed’. The question ultimately resolves itself into this: Have we for this task workers enough of the requisite purity, self-sacrifice, industry and intelligence?

_Harijan_, 30-11-1935
226. AN EXPERIENCE

A correspondent who has for years been wearing khadi made out of his own yarn writes:

This year I had 80 yards of khadi of 50 inches width. It cost me twenty rupees in round figures. People want my khadi at 10 as. per yard. i.e., Rs. 50 for the whole piece. Thus if I want to use three yards for myself I need to sell only $\frac{1}{2}$ yards. If I keep for myself 20 yards and sell the rest, besides paying for my own khadi, I would make a profit of Rs. 17/8.

I know this correspondent. He stands in an exceptionally favourable position because his yarn is a fine, even and strong. Weavers weave it at reasonable rates, and the khadi being therefore strong and fine-looking is greatly in demand. Everyone having faith and patience may verify the truth of the statement by making the experiment himself. Strong, even and fine yarn is the secret of successful khadi.

_Harijan, 30-11-1935_

227. NEED FOR CARE

Apropos of my reproduction of Dr. Aykroyd’s letter¹ on _neem_ leaves and tamarind, the reader will appreciate the following further letter² from the Director of Nutrition Research.

1. I think there is a certain danger in publishing small items of dietetic knowledge apart, as it were, from their scientific context. Ignorant readers are apt to make faulty interpretations. For example, on rereading the paragraph in my letter of November 6 relating to _neem_ leaves, which you wish to publish in your paper, I think it might possibly give the impression that everyone should consume great quantities of this vegetable as a cure for all human ills. Actually, the small series of analyses we have carried out to date show _neem_ leaves to be somewhat richer in certain food factors than a number of other leafy vegetables, but it is only a question of degree. In a word, it would be better, for purposes of popular education, to stress the value of all green leafy vegetables rather than to single out one particular vegetable for special commendation. I should therefore prefer the paragraph, which refers to the bitter variety of neem leaves (Azadirachta Indica) to read as follows:

² From which only extracts are reproduced here.

QUESTION: What is the nutritive value of neem leaves?

ANSWER: Neem leaves resemble other green leafy vegetables in composition. Both mature and tender leaves are richer in protein, calcium, iron and carotene than amaranth leaves, coriander leaves, drumstick leaves, lettuce, marraya leaves and spinach. Their composition makes them valuable as a supplement to a diet largely composed of cereals, and in this respect they resemble the leafy vegetables in general.

2. The paragraph relating to tamarind and lemon might be modified as follows:

With regard to vitamin content, tamarind and lemon are roughly similar, except that the latter is richer in the antiscorbutic vitamin C. Tamarind pulp, unlike lemon, contains a good deal of tartaric acid—about 14%; the chief acid in lemon is citric acid. Fresh tamarind, which is more solid than fresh lemon, contains a somewhat higher percentage of protein, carbohydrate and minerals than lemon; in the dried state tamarind yields about 3% protein and 73% carbohydrate (by difference). Tamarind is stated to contain a laxative principle. I can offer nothing in support of the popular belief that it induces fever and rheumatism . . . .

Harijan, 30-11-1935

228. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

November 30, 1935

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

How much do you spend daily on vegetables? How much on fruit? What is the expenditure on food per head per month at the present rate of quantity served? Do you keep an account of the quantity consumed daily? Do you note down the names of those who come for meals from day to day? How are you keeping? In what other activities besides this are you engaged?

Blessings from

BAPU

229. LETTER TO K.M. MUNSHI

WARDHA,
November 30, 1935

BHAI MUNSHI,

I got your letter. I am not at all surprised by the result. Your duty ended when you responded promptly to an urgent call at the last hour. Tatachari was happy beyond words. He had written a fine letter to me. Who will be hearing the appeal? Whoever it may be, there is no doubt that an appeal should be made.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7586. Courtesy: K.M. Munshi

230. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

November 30, 1935

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

You should immediately approach the four persons whose names you have given me and show them your budget. For this you need not await my arrival. Let me know the outcome. Mother must have recovered by now.

Soya beans are available in Bombay at two rates. The variety from Sind costs 12 annas a lb. and the one from Manchuria 8 annas a lb. Both the varieties can be obtained through Gosibehn.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Gosibehn’s address: Shrimati Gosibehn Captain, Nair Building, Gandhi Seva Sena, Sandhurst Road, Bombay.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2431
DEAR DR. GOPICHAND,

I have your letter enclosing the budget. Its critical examination will rest with Shankerlal. So far as I am concerned, I shall require to be satisfied that no new obligations are taken by the central organization. Provinces may frame their budgets in any manner they like (1) so long as they do not run a single store at loss, (2) so long as they pay the minimum wage to all the artisans whom they employ — the minimum wage being fixed for each province in consultation with the centre, and (3) so long as the budget convincingly shows that the provincial organization can be run without loss.

You suggest that no interest should be charged. But it has been suggested by others that 1 per cent should be charged for covering expenses of the centre.

Yours,

BAPU

DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA
LAHORE

From a copy: Dr. Gopichand Bhargava Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

232. LETTER TO PYARELAL

CHI. PYARELAL.

I have received your letter. Now do not leave anything wanting with regard to food and get well soon. There is no need to put up with pain of any kind. Your present duty is to build your health properly. You have not written anything about Mother. Where is she staying? Who is treating her?

Rajkumari arrived yesterday. Her health is indifferent. She has cough. She was making enquiries about you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar
233. TELEGRAM TO G. D. BIRLA¹

WARDHAGANI

December 2, 1935

Ghanshyamdas Birla

Albuquerque Road

New Delhi

Without diminishing influence or damaging status of recognized union offer listen complaints by whomever made and redress legitimate proved grievance. Persons themselves not employees should prove their authority speak for aggrieved workers. If this advice does not find echo in your heart it is clear I have not grasped true situation. In that event should act according your best judgement.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 7785. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

234. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

December 2, 1935

I got your letter. I am getting confirmed in the views which I have publicly expressed. Your argument² applies to all similar things, but just as it would not be right to carry on public propaganda for such things so also it would not be right to do so in this case. One may propagate a thing that is spiritually elevating. How can one propagate something that has a lowering tendency? “A lowering tendency” need not be taken in a deprecatory sense here. Everybody would welcome sex-gratification without having to have children. Therefore the means of ensuring this are spreading like intoxicants. If there is any cause for regret, it is only that what is morally bad is being regarded as morally desirable. I have recently been given Mrs.

¹ The workers of the Birla Cotton Mill had gone on strike in protest against reduction in their wages, and under the leadership of Satyavati had formed an ad hoc committee to fight their cause. But the addressee had refused to recognize her authority and insisted on negotiating with the Birla Cotton Mill Union functioning since 1928.

² About artificial birth-control
Erskine’s book. It is worth pondering over. It also advocates control but in a different way. I have no time to write more.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi, P.160

235. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

December 2, 1935

Bhai Ghanshyamdas,

I have seen both your letters and you must have got the wire I sent you this morning.

In my opinion no harm can come out of seeing Satyavati. After all, your aim is justice. But she should hold an authority from the workers. The best thing would be to take all the complaints to an agreed arbitrator with the initial condition that there should be no future strike. I have not suggested my own name, for how can I even take up this function? You have to appoint someone else as the arbitrator. I hope you will be patient in everything.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8015. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

236. LETTER TO SUREN德拉

WARDHA,

December 3, 1935

Chh. Suren德拉,

I had your previous letter. It did not particularly call for a reply, hence I saved my time for some other work. Now I shall not treat your letter of the 29th ultimo in the same manner.

Do continue to post me with your bitter-sweet experiences. It would be a mistake to regard the experiences at Sindi as fully

1 The letter carries the following note by Mahadev Desai: “A Hindustan Times issues reports Satyavati as the ‘wife of dismissed employee’. It hurt Bapu. He wrote to Satyavati who had complained to him that it was a stupid blunder by a reporter and that even Ghanshyamdas would not like it.”
comprehensive. I fail to see a reflection of my own experiences in the picture that I form in my mind by putting together Mahadev's description of the experiences at Sindi. There is a restraint in Mahadev's description, hence the bitter experiences included in it are like sugar refined in a factory. I can summarize my experience of Sindi in one sentence. Justice has not yet been done to Sindi. But willy-nilly I happen to be its director. And what sort of a director? I used to pay only short visits. Now I visit the place daily and stay there for a few minutes. I have not mixed with the people. Mirabehn tried hard to do it. But she had gone there only to stop me from settling down in the place. She had not set her mind on it. She was staying under my pressure. Now Gajanan is there but it is also only an experiment. Hence it is likely you are mistaken in placing Sindi in line with the others. I can say that for me [the work at] Sindi is vast enough.

We have done nothing about Vadaj. A separate ashram has come into being at Nalawadi. It cannot be said that it has any appreciable impact on the people of Nalawadi. It is a different kind of activity. We have not yet mastered the art of living in a village. We still have to learn the way of mingling with them. Hence Nalawadi, Vadaj and Sindi, and all the three are different things. Your experiment is the fourth and it is in line with the experiments that are now being carried on. Let us see what finally comes out of it. I am therefore closely watching your work. I am intentionally forgoing the temptation of taking more work from you. I had to exercise great firmness in sending my reply to Navli . . . .

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

237. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

December 3, 1935

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Your letter. I have forgotten the letters connected with the swadeshi industry. You can do what seems fit to you. It would not be proper to send suggestions from here.

2 Gajanan Nayak
3 Omission as in the source
I had given an appointment to the sadhu but refused to keep it as he desired me to go to his place. We could certainly meet on my coming to Delhi if he wants it.

You are keeping well, I hope.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2430

238. INTERVIEW TO MARGARET SANGER

[December 3/4, 1935]

Gandhiji poured his whole being into his conversation. He revealed himself inside out, giving Mrs. Sanger an intimate glimpse of his own private life. He also declared to her his own limitations, especially the stupendous limitation of his own philosophy of life—a philosophy that seeks self-realization through self-control, and said that from him there could be one solution and one alone:

[G.] I could not recommend the remedy of birth-control to a woman who wanted my approval. I should simply say to her: My remedy is of no use to you. You must go to others for advice.

Mrs. Sanger cited some hard cases. Gandhiji said:

> I agree, there are hard cases. Else birth-control enthusiasts would have no case. But I would say, do devise remedies by all means, but the remedies should be other than the ones you advise. If you and I as moral reformers put our foot down on this remedy and said, ‘You must fall back on other remedies’, those would surely be found.

Both seemed to be agreed that woman should be emancipated, that woman should be the arbiter of her destiny. But Mrs. Sanger would have Gandhiji work for woman’s emancipation through her pet device, just as believers in violence want Gandhiji to win India’s freedom through violence, since they seem to be sure that non-violence can never succeed.

She forgets this fundamental difference in her impatience to prove that Gandhiji does not know the women of India. And she claims to prove this on the ground that he makes an impossible appeal to the women of India—the appeal to resist their husbands. Well, this is what he said:

1 Reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s article “Mrs. Sanger and Birthcontrol”

2 According to Gandhi—1915-1948: A Detailed Chronology, Margaret Sanger met Gandhiji on December 3 and 4.
My wife I made the orbit of all women. In her I studied all women. I came in contact with many European women in South Africa, and I knew practically every Indian woman there. I worked with them. I tried to show them they were not slaves either to their husbands or parents, not only in the political field but in the domestic as well. But the trouble was that some could not resist their husbands. The remedy is in the hands of women themselves. The struggle is difficult for them, and I do not blame them. I blame the men. Men have legislated against them. Man has regarded woman as his tool. She has learned to be his tool and in the end found it easy and pleasurable to be such, because when one drags another in his fall the descent is easy . . .

I have felt that during the years still left to me if I can drive home to women's minds the truth that they are free, we will have no birth-control problem in India. If they will only learn to say 'no' to their husbands when they approach them carnally! I do not suppose all husbands are brutes and if women only know how to resist them, all will be well. I have been able to teach women who have come in contact with me how to resist their husbands. The real problem is that many do not want to resist them . . . No resistance bordering upon bitterness will be necessary in 99 out of 100 cases. If a wife says to her husband, 'No, I do not want it', he will make no trouble. But she hasn't been taught. Her parents in most cases won't teach it to her. There are some cases, I know, in which parents have appealed to their daughters' husbands not to force motherhood on their daughters. And I have come across amenable husbands too. I want woman to learn the primary right of resistance. She thinks now that she has not got it . . .

Mrs. Sanger raises the phantasmagoria of “irritations, disputes, and thwarted longings that Gandhiji's advice would bring into the home.” . . . She cited cases of great nervous and mental breakdowns as a result of the practice of self-control. Gandhiji spoke from a knowledge of the numerous letters he receives every mail, when he said to her:

The evidence is all based on examination of imbeciles. The conclusions are not drawn from the practice of healthy-minded people. The people they take for examples have not lived a life of even tolerable continence. These neurologists assume that people are expected to exercise self-restraint while they continue to lead the same ill-regulated life. The consequence is that they do not exercise self-restraint but become lunatics. I carry on correspondence with many of these people and they describe their own ailments to me. I simply say that if I were to present them with this method of birth-control they would lead far worse lives.

---

1 Omissions as in the source

He told her that when she went to Calcutta she would be told by those who knew what havoc contraceptives had worked among unmarried young men and women. But evidently for the purpose of the conversation, at any rate, Mrs. Sanger confined herself to propagation of knowledge of birth-control among married couples only . . . . The distinction that Gandhiji drew between love and lust will be evident from the following excerpts from the conversation:

When both want to satisfy animal passion without having to suffer the consequences of their act it is not love, it is lust. But if love is pure, it will transcend animal passion and will regulate itself. We have not had enough education of the passions. When a husband says, ‘Let us not have children, but let us have relations”, what is that but animal passion? If they do not want to have more children they should simply refuse to unite. Love becomes lust the moment you make it a means for the satisfaction of animal needs. It is just the same with food. If food is taken only for pleasure it is lust. You do not take chocolates for the sake of satisfying your hunger. You take them for pleasure and then ask the doctor for an antidote. Perhaps you tell the doctor that whisky befogs your brain and he gives you an antidote. Would it not be better not to take chocolates or whisky?

MRS. S. No I do not accept the analogy.

G. Of course you will not accept the analogy because you think this sex expression without desire for children is a need of the soul, a contention I do not endorse.

MRS. S. Yes, sex expression is a spiritual need and I claim that the quality of this expression is more important than the result, for the quality of the relationship is there regardless of results. We all know that the great majority of children are born as an accident, without the parents having any desire for conception. Seldom are two people drawn together in the sex act by their desire to have children . . . . Do you think it possible for two people who are in love, who are happy together, to regulate their sex act only once in two years, so that relationship would only take place when they wanted a child? Do you think is possible?

G. I had the honour of doing that very thing and I am not the only one.

Mrs. Sanger thought it was illogical to contend that sex union for the purpose of having children would be love and union for the satisfaction of the sexual appetite was lust, for the same act was involved in both. Gandhiji immediately capitulated and said he was ready to describe all sexual union as partaking of the nature of lust.

I know, from my own experience that as long as I looked upon my wife carnally, we had no real understanding. Our love did not reach a high plane. There was affection between us always, but we came closer and closer the more we or rather I became restrained. There never was want of restraint on the part of my wife. Very often she would show restraint, but she rarely resisted me although she showed disinclination very often. All the time I wanted carnal pleasure I could not serve her. The moment I bade good-bye to a life of carnal pleasure our whole relationship became spiritual. Lust died and love reigned instead.

Mrs. Sanger is so impatient to prove that Gandhiji is a visionary that she forgets the practical ways and means that Gandhiji suggested to her. She asked:

Must the sexual union take place only three or four times in an entire lifetime?

c. Why should people not be taught that it is immoral to have more than three or four children and that after they have had that number they should sleep separately? If they are taught this it would harden into custom. And if social reformers cannot impress this idea upon the people, why not a law? If husband and wife have four children, they would have had sufficient animal enjoyment. Their love may then be lifted to a higher plane. Their bodies have met. After they have had the children they wanted, their love transforms itself into a spiritual relationship. If these children die and they want more, then they may meet again. Why must people be slaves of this passion when they are not of others? When you give them education in birth-control, you tell them it is a duty. You say to them that if they do not do this thing they will interrupt their spiritual evolution. You do not even talk of regulation. After giving them education in birth-control, you do not say to them, ‘thus far and no further’. You ask people to drink temperately, as though it was possible to remain temperate. I know these temperate people.

And yet as Mrs. Sanger was so dreadfully in earnest Gandhiji did mention a remedy which could conceivably appeal to him. That method was the avoidance of sexual union during unsafe periods confining it to the “safe” period of about ten days during the month. That had at least an element of self-control which had to exercised during the unsafe period. Whether this appealed to Mrs. Sanger or not I do not know. But therein spoke Gandhiji the truth-seeker. Mrs. Sanger has not referred to it anywhere in her interviews or her Illustrated Weekly article. Perhaps if birthcontrollers were to be satisfied with this simple method, the birth-control clinics and propagandists would find their trade gone . . . .

_Harijan_, 25-1-1936

239. A MESSAGE

[December 4, 1935]

At the age of sixty, a person does not become old but rather attains the fullest maturity; unfortunately, however, in this country we wear out too soon and therefore rejoice when we complete fifty years. Lady Vidyagauri does not suffer from old age. May she ward off old age for many years to come!

[From Gujarati]

_Gujarati_, 5-1-1936

240. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

WARDHA,

December 4, 1935

CHI. MANUDI,

I sent you yesterday the letters from Natal. But though I spent money on postage, I didn’t reply to you and so am writing again. I am glad you wrote to me. Do write to me from time to time. You did very well in going there. Serve your mother’s sisters devotedly and, if they permit you, return soon. Keep yourself well occupied all the time. Describe your daily programme to me. We had quite a crowd of guests here. The number has come down today, but will go up again.

Take proper care of your health. If you are careful about your food, you are bound to keep well.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

SMT. MANUBEHN GANDHI
C/O BALIBEHN VORA
OPP. HIGH SCHOOL
RAJKOT SADAR (KATHIWAR)

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2667. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

---

1 Margaret Sanger's rejoinder appeared in _Harijan_, 22-2-1936.
2 This was sent for the 60th birthday celebration of Vidyagauri, wife of Ramanbhai Mahipatram Nilkanth.
3 From Gandhi—1915-1948: A Detailed Chronology.
4 The address is from a copy.
241. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

WARDHA,
December 5, 1935

BHAI THAKKAR BAPA,

I have your letter dictated with calm and deliberation.

The Harijan Sevak Sangh is as much yours as mine if not more.

You should cling to your own dharma. If you succeed in that place Navli will get everything [it needs]. . . . ought to be. Hemubhai is a good man. He works hard. I myself could not give him much time. Kishorelal should be reaching in a day or two. Anyway I have to go to Gujarat in the month of January. And now I must stop.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

242. LETTER TO CHANDAN PAREKH

December 5, 1935

CHI. CHANDU,

It was very good indeed that you wrote your letter calmly. Do continue to write in detail so that Father needn't write.

It is extremely difficult to explain fully why I didn't believe your story. The analogy you have adduced is not correct. You yourself admit that the incident Which took place could not happen without impure desire. And when it took place you had already had experience of such desire. And still you say that even in impure actions you did not recognize any impure desire in . . ., nor was such desire aroused in you by those actions. This part of the story is not plausible and so I disregard the rest of it also. If I accept your account, I would have to draw a terrible inference against you, namely, that impure desire was aroused in you but that you now shrink from admitting the fact. How can I bring myself to draw such an inference? I, therefore, believe that there is conscious or unconscious exaggeration in your account. And since I believe that, the conundrums you have put to me have little meaning. You did well in sending me an extract from Kamu's diary. Send its date also. I will then write again.

1 Illegible

Do come and see me when I arrive in Ahmedabad.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 941. Courtesy: Satish D. Kalelkar

243. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

December 5, 1935

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

Your letter. The letter you wrote to Hanumant Sahai is perfectly correct. Neither he nor Satyavati can be recognized to represent labour unless either of them is elected by the workers. But they should get their due. This was all I meant to say¹ and I understand that you have already taken action in this regard.

I expect the whole matter to have been concluded by now. Your offer² seems adequate.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8016. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

244. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

Wardha,
_December 6, 1935_

I wasn't arguing merely academically. You had asked for my views and I expounded them.³

How can I support the move for the Corporation⁴ to open a clinic and to issue posters advising the people to take advantage of it?

¹ Vide “Letter to Mathuradas Trikumji”, 2-12-1935.
² To examine the mill’s records to judge if the workers’ grievances were legitimate
⁴ The Municipal Corporation of Bombay, of which the addressee was a Councillor
I had long discussions with Mrs. Sanger. The more I listened to her arguments the more I became confirmed in my view. If a gourmand falls ill, what else would a vaid advise him to do but to fast? But people will continue to take digestive pills and yet continue to suffer. Understand that it is the same with regard to birth-control. My advice to you is that, in your own case, you may do what you like but should take no interest in the propaganda move. If, however, you have come to definite views on the subject and are convinced of the universal necessity of birth-control, I would have nothing to say.

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuni Prasadi_, p. 161

245. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM J. JOSHI

December 6, 1935

BHAI PURUSHOTTAM,

I have your letter. I was surprised. It needed no reply.

PURUSHOTTAM JIVRAJ JOSHI

AMRELI

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

246. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

December 6, 1935

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter regarding the circular about the restriction on taking loans. The circular is all right. But the law of mortgage is against it. Hence we shall have to consider its implementation. I myself cannot decide immediately what should be done in cases in which money is withdrawn with the Head's consent. Now that the 12th is drawing near we shall have a further discussion then. For the present let your circular remain. Personally I approve of it. I never like the employees in a big department taking loans from its funds. I can, however, imagine the necessity of permitting them to borrow with the Head's permission. It would be less undesirable if employees got loans openly from a public organization instead of incurring private debts.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 Vide “Interview to Margaret Sanger”, 3/4-12-1935.
247. LETTER TO SUSHILA NAYYAR

December 6, 1935

CHI. SUSHILA,

Let us see whether you get this letter or not. I have never thought or written that your wish is to make money. If it were so, how could you even think of sending me the money you save? Now I know what you want. Let us see what God ordains.

Pyarelal must have been operated upon yesterday. I hope to get more news today.

LADY HARDINGE MEDICAL COLLEGE
NEW DELHI

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

248. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

WARDHA,

December 6, 1935

CHI. SUMANGAL,

Your letters come regularly. My advice is that you should give-up your vows about food. You should eat in the mess like everybody and be content with whatever is served. Once you have eaten, you should forget about food. Maybe in this way you will develop self-control automatically. Today the palate pulls you in one direction, the mind in another. This is regrettable. However, if my analysis is wrong my advice may be discarded.

BAPU¹

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ This is in Mahadev Desai’s hand, Gandhiji having been taken ill with blood-pressure and advised complete rest.
249. LETTER TO GIRIJAPRASAD CHINUBHAI

[Before December 7, 1935]

BHAI GIRIJAPRASAD: SIR CHINUBHAI MADHAVLAL,

It is against my nature to announce beforehand what I intend to do. Doing so makes me feel ashamed. Quite often, an impression has got around of my having done something only after having announced my intention of doing it. Your letter raises such a question. I really consider myself disqualified for the Sahitya Parishad. But I was forgetting that you brothers and sisters want to use me to keep the Parishad free from feuds. Doubtless I can be useful in that way and I am accepting your invitation in the hope that I may be instrumental in doing something in that direction. Keep my burden as light as possible. It is a matter of consolation to me that you are the Chairman of the Reception Committee. I take it for granted that the Parishad would not be meeting at least this year. If it is scheduled to meet some time in January or after that, there will be no inconvenience. But it will suit me if it is scheduled for as early as possible in the new year. I have destroyed your personal letter.

Regards from MOHANDAS GANDHI

PRESIDENT
SAHITYA MANDAL
G. S. SAMMELAN
AHMEDABAD

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

1 From the reference to the Gujarati Sahitya Parishad which was to be held in January, 1936 and over which Gandhiji was to preside but could not as he fell ill on December 7, 1935; vide 2nd footnote of “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 28-10-1935 and footnote 1 of “Letter to Fulchand K. Shah”, 7-12-1935. The Parishad was subsequently held from October 31 to November 2, 1936; vide “Speech at Gujarati Sahitya Parishad”, 31-10-1936.
DISCUSSION WITH A VILLAGE WORKER

[Before December 7, 1935]

VILLAGE WORKER: Why are we laying such an emphasis on khadi and wholesome food-stuffs, when you know that even before the advent of the British, khadi was there and our good food-stuffs were there, and yet we were in no better case?

GANDHIJI: This question was discussed threadbare in the columns of Young India and Navajivan if you read them. But I shall sum up the reply for you. We had khadi, but we did not know its significance; we were self-contained, but without realizing its necessity. There was little intelligence behind khadi and our handicrafts, and we little realized that they sustained us. Therefore, when they were lost to us we did not miss them, and today when an attempt is being made to restore them, some of us are wondering what use there could be in their restoration.

Then that means that political education and propaganda is needed, and you have tabooed this.

No political propaganda is needed to teach people the lesson of self-help, of reform in their diet, and of throwing off their inertia and making the best of their idle hours.

My difficulty is this, that though people in our villages are working like asses from morning until night without an hour's respite they do not get enough to eat. And you are asking them to labour still more?

What you say is news to me. The villages I know are those in which quantities of time are being wasted. But if as you say there are people who are being overworked, I am asking such people to accept nothing less than a living wage for nothing more than eight hours' work.

But why not accept the machine with all its good points, eliminating the bad ones?

I cannot afford to keep our human machines idle. We have such an amount of human power lying idle that we have no room for other power-driven machines.

Introduce the power-driven machines and get them to work for only as long as is needed for our purposes.

How do you mean? Supposing X produced all the cloth we needed, in mills specially constructed for the purpose, and gave work to say three million men, also distributing all the profit between them, what then? Then these three million men will be having all the money that used to be distributed between 300 million a hundred years ago.

Extracted from Mahadev Desai's "Weekly Letter"

No, Sir, I propose that our men should not work more than is necessary for our purposes. same work is indeed necessary for all of us, but why should we work, say, more than a couple of hours a day and not devote the rest of our time to pleasant occupations?

So you would be satisfied if our men were to work only for one hour a day?

That should be worked out. But I should certainly be satisfied.

Well there’s the rub. I should never be satisfied until all men had plenty of productive work, say, eight hours a day.

But why, I wonder, should you insist on this eight hours’ minimum?

Because I know that millions will not employ themselves in work for the sake of it. If they did not need to work for their bread, they would lack the incentive. Supposing a few millionaires from America came and offered to send us all our food-stuffs and implored us not to work but to permit them to give vent to their philanthropy, I should refuse point-blank to accept their kind offer.

That would be because the offer would hurt your self-respect?

No, not only because of that; but especially because it strikes at the root of the fundamental law of our being, viz., that we must work for our bread, that we eat our bread by the sweat of our brow.

But that is your personal view. Would you leave the organization of society to society itself, or would you leave it to a few good guides?

I should leave it to a few good guides.

Which means that you are for a dictatorship.

No, for the simple reason that my fundamental principle is non-violence and I should not coerce any individual or community. Guidance is not dictatorship.

_Harijan_, 7-12-1935

251. EVIL OF CREDIT SALES

Whilst the whole policy of the A.I.S.A. about khadi is being overhauled, it is well to remind those who are in charge of the numerous khadi depots that the custom of selling khadi on credit has on the whole resulted in loss rather than gain to khadi. The temptation to give credit to friends, acquaintances and monied men is no doubt very great. Often it offends them if credit is refused when, they contend, no risk is to be run. These good people do not realize that it is wrong to expect a salesman to make invidious distinctions. Numerous complaints are received from managers of khadi depots about friends and well-to-do men not discharging the debts incurred by them. To issue processes of law for the recovery of debts is a thankless and expensive task and often means more worry than it is worth. Hence even at the risk of offending and even losing some customers the safe course is never to depart from the golden rule of ‘no credit sales’.

Let the khadi workers realize that the mission of khadi is not to be confined to the cities, it has to spread among the millions of villagers who are waiting to hear the call. We do not know how to reach them. We have hitherto tried the roundabout way. We shall not find the direct and the true way in the vain attempt to show ever-increasing sales in the books of city depots. Let them know that it is the surplus khadi that is to find its way to cities. The vast quantity has to be made and used by the villagers themselves. The true way to reach the villagers is to concentrate on them in their own cottages. City sales, therefore, can be no index of the progress of the mission of khadi. Khadi statistics of the future have to show the progress made from year to year in the villages. If a large number of workers are to be freed for the spread of khadi in the villages, we must reduce our labours in the cities. One way of doing it is religiously to do away with credit sales and confine our attention to those who really want khadi and appreciate the virtue of cash payment. Credit sales invariably mean increase in prices for they involve more work, i.e., more expenses. Considered from all points of view credit sales have nothing to recommend them except the doubtful convenience of a few customers. But khadi exists not for the convenience of the few. It is intended for the benefit of all. In restricting khadi sales, therefore, to cash transactions the A. I. S. A. seeks the welfare not only of the hungry millions but also of the city buyers of khadi.

_Harijan, 7-12-1935_

252. HAND-MADE PAPER

Shri Yadavrao S. Chaudhary is a paper expert trained in Germany. He has prepared the following notes showing how hand-made paper is prepared in Maganwadi.

_Harijan, 7-11-1935_

1 Not reproduced here
253. LETTER TO UDIT MISHRA

WARDHA,
December 7, 1935

BHAJ UDIT MISHRA,

I have your letter about Sharma. I am not satisfied. In your earlier letter you had praised Sharma. It now becomes your duty to give me a correct picture of what Sharma said. Please let me have it. I have not received Brijmohanji’s letter.

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

254. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

December 7, 1935

BHAJ FULCHAND,

Jaisukhlal read in a newspaper that you had been suffering from a dreadful disease of the lungs. We cannot believe the newspapers. I hope that is the case in regard to this report, too. Please write to me, or ask somebody to write, and tell me what the fact is. Persons like you cannot afford to fall ill. You have a good many tasks yet to accomplish.

How old are you?¹

SHRI FULCHAND KASTURCHAND SHAH
RASHTRIYA SHALA
WADIWAN CITY, KATHIWAR

¹ The letter carries a note by Mahadev Desai saying that after he had dictated the letter Gandhiji suddenly took ill and was forbidden by doctors to do any work. The letter, therefore, could not be signed by Gandhiji. In his letter dated December 13 to Jawaharlal Nehru, Mahadev Desai wrote: “He [Gandhiji] has been having high blood-pressure for several months, I think, and we should not have noticed it but for a timely warning ten days ago when he had some unaccountable pain in the back regions of the head—no headache, no neuralgic or rheumatic pain, but a certain pain accompanied by numbness which disappeared with careful massage but recurred every two or three hours. It was only when the doctors were called—I wired to Jivaraj—that it was found that he had a blood-pressure over 200 (syst.) and 120 (diast.). He has since been having perfect rest in bed, attending to no correspondence, writing nothing, dictating nothing.”
255. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

[December 8, 1935]

DEAR SISTER,

I have been wanting to write to you and then forgetting. As far as I can see sitting here, I think I shall be staying at the Vidyapith when I visit Ahmedabad, I certainly would have liked to stay with you, but in view of your health and my engagements there I think it will be preferable for me to stay at the Vidyapith.

I hope you are well. I can see from Shankerlal’s letter that the treatment at Calcutta has done you some good. Tell Chi. Mridu that I am not writing separately to her.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11145. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

256. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

WARDHA,
December 11, 1935

BHAI VALLABHBHAI.

I am writing to you after many days. I don’t know if I am disobeying doctors’ instructions in doing so. Jamnalalji has got alarmed, but I don’t want you to be so. Come only when you would ordinarily have done. I am all right. The strings of your life, mine and everybody else’s, are held by Mira’s Lord. Let Him pull them as He wills. Does He ever let anybody have his way? Pyarelal is fine.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 193

1 From the postmark
257. IN PRAISE OF GROUND-NUT CAKE

A friend sends the following opinion\(^1\) of Prof. D. L. Sahasrabuddhe, in praise of ground-nut cake. It certainly deserves a trial.

_Harijan_, 14-12-1935

258. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

WARDHA,
_December 14, 1935_

CHI. SHARMA,

Your letters have started coming, which is good. I had a short letter from Draupadi. I keep passing on your letters to her and Ramdas. I have not written again to Kellogg but I shall certainly do so if necessary, on your reaching there. You do well to observe everything there—good or bad. Tell me if you notice anything there that can be useful.\(^2\) Everywhere there are two kinds of shops—those in the poorer quarters and those in the rich section of the town. Sometimes some extremely useful but inexpensive articles are available in the poor business section. This has been my experience in London and Paris. You should not leave the poorer section of New York unexplored. You will of course visit Shelton's Health Home.

Amtussalaam is here and reads your letters. I was not aware that she never writes to you. Ramdas is still in Bombay, and has not yet settled down.

Your diet seems simple and good. You will of course build up your body.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi in Mahadev Desai’s hand: _Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh_, facing p. 213

---

\(^1\) Not reproduced here. Professor Sahasrabuddhe has stated that groundnut was as good as soya beans in proteids, amino-acids and mineral matter, and that groundnut cake (free from oil) was “a highly nutritious food material for human consumption.”

\(^2\) The addressee had noticed several appliances in the American naturecure clinics but had found them much too expensive and complicated for India.
259. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

WARDHA,
December 19, 1935

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I wrote to you last week about the sudden breakdown in Bapu's health. He is progressing well, but it will be some time before his blood pressure becomes normal again. He seems to have worked at high pressure all these months and Dr. Jivraj and Dr. Gilder who examined him two days ago are definitely of opinion that he must have a couple of months' rest. This he has agreed to do. For ten days now he has been in bed resting and sleeping, never reading or writing or dictating. But you will be surprised to know that he continued to do his reading on the commode even during these days! And he finished the 9th Part of your magnum opus—which it really is—this evening.

And as soon as he finished it he called me to his bedside and asked me to send you his impressions. If he had been well he should have written himself or dictated something but he did not want to strain himself in the teeth of the doctors' advice and so told me in Gujarati in a minute or two what he felt. What I say will, therefore, be in my language and not his. He said:

It is needless to say that it is a brilliantly written book, and a great literary production. There are parts where I have my fundamental differences with you and which I would like to criticize, but I will not do so as it is scarcely necessary or useful. For when all is said and done it is a highly introspective narrative containing an expression of your innermost thoughts and convictions. Even if you could be persuaded to moderate or soften that expression, I should not attempt it, as it would result in taking away from its naturalness, if not also its truthfulness. After all we are helpless actors in the mighty flow of events, we have to act according to our lights allowing or expecting the events to correct us where we err. There is just one thing where perhaps I might make a helpful suggestion. The attack on the Liberals seems to have been overdone. It seems to obtrude on the reader's attention over and over again and sometimes mars the grace and beauty of the narrative. Not that there is any venom in anything that you have said; far from it; but you should not be even unconsciously guilty of doing an injustice to them. What you have said about Sastri leaves that impression on me. These friends served the country in their time according to their lights, and whilst we may have our serious differences with them we do not exactly serve the cause of the country by publicly pillorying them. If you have not, therefore, already sent the book on to the publishers, you might alter these portions. . . .

Yours affectionately,

MAHADEV

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1935. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

260. CABLE TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

December 22, 1935

OUR HEARTS ARE WITH YOU AND KAMALA.

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1935. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

261. LETTER TO PADMAVATHI

WARDHA,
December 26, 1935

DEAR PADMAVATHI,

I wrote one letter to Devdas yesterday after my so-called illness. This is the second letter. Your letter of 20th November last has been lying on my head all these days. But I did not want to disregard doctor's warning.

Your love for Kanti⁠ is very great. May he prove worthy of it. Personally I have no objection to the betrothal being announced. But it may not be in Saraswathi’s interest. She must have the right of refusal when she grows to her full age. As you yourself tell me she knows very little of the understanding between you and Kanti or, say, between us. Her mind should be left free and unfettered.

Do ask Saraswathi to write to me some lines on the strength of the old connection.

¹ Extracted form Mahadev Desai’s letter to the addressee dated December 23, 1935, which read: “Two cables from you inpainfully quick succession have been repeated by Sarupbehn. Bapu immediately sent a cable to you yesterday. And ‘our’ here mans the whole family, including Rajendra Babu, and Jamnalalji and Vallabhbhai (who are all here) not to mention those near Bapu.”

² Son of Harilal Gandhi

³ Addressee’s daughter
I am getting better.
Love.
From a copy: C.W. 9770

262. _FOREWORD TO “SATYAGRAHA IN GANDHIJI’S OWN WORDS”_ ¹

[Before December 27, 1935]²

A dear friend on seeing Rajendra Babu’s letter asking for a pamphlet, among others, on the philosophy represented by the name ‘satyagraha’ asked me if I would write such a pamphlet. Rajendra Babu who knew my preoccupations did not make any such demand upon my time. I, therefore, pleaded my inability when the suggestion came to me. Another suggestion was then put forward that some friend who knew my writings should make relevant extracts from them and prepare the booklet required. I readily endorsed it. The result was the following pages prepared after much labour of love. The workers desire to remain unknown. I glanced through the manuscript and I felt that the work was ably done. I believe that it will enable the reader to appreciate the very important implications of satyagraha. The fascination of the doctrine as an epitome of non-violence is daily growing on me, and I doubt not that if an individual or a nation adopts it as a plan of life, it will promote their happiness and peace and it would be their highest contribution to the attainment of the world peace after which we are all hankering.

_Satyagraha in Gandhiji’s Own Words,_ p. 36

263. _FOREWORD TO “TO THE STUDENTS”_ ³

[Before December 28, 1935]²

I like Anand Hingorani’s idea of collecting my writings under suitable heads. The reader will not fail to appreciate the labour he has given to securing attractive printing and binding.

M. K. GANDHI

_To the Students_

¹ The last sentence of this Foreword appeared in _The Hindu_, 27-12-1935, under the date-line “Allahabad, December 27” as Gandhiji’s “Foreword to the Jubilee Brochure on the subject of satyagraha issued by the A.I.C.C. office.”

² The first edition was published on December 28, 1935.
264. MESSAGE TO CONGRESS JUBILEE SAMMELAN

[Before December 28, 1935]¹

Happy at the thought that so many ex-Presidents are meeting. The President's is the spirit of brotherly love. Hope it may augur well for the country.

The Bombay Chronicle, 29-12-1935

265. ANSWER TO “THE COSMOPOLITAN” ²

[1935]³

Not to believe in the possibility of permanent peace is to disbelieve the godliness of human nature. Methods hitherto adopted have failed because rock-bottom sincerity on the part of those who have striven has been lacking. Not that they have realized this lack. Peace is unattainable by part performance of conditions, even as a chemical combination is impossible without complete fulfillment of the conditions of attainment thereof. If the recognized leaders of mankind who have control over engines of destruction were wholly to renounce their use, with full knowledge of its implications, permanent peace can be obtained. This is clearly impossible without the great Powers of the earth renouncing their imperialistic design. This again seems impossible without great nations ceasing to believe in soul-destroying competition and to desire to multiply wants and therefore increase their material possessions. It is my conviction that the root of the evil is want of a living faith in a living God. It is a first-class human tragedy that peoples of the earth who claim to believe in the message of Jesus who they describe as the Prince of Peace show little of that belief in actual practice. It is painful to see sincere Christian divines limiting the scope of Jesus' message to select individuals. I have been taught from my childhood and tested the truth by experience that the primary virtues of mankind are possible of cultivation by the meanest of the human species. It is this undoubted universal possibility that distinguishes the humans from the rest of ¹ The message was read out at the Sammelan on December 28, 1935.

² Of New York. This is extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”, which says this was “Gandhiji’s answer given three years ago . . . fresh enough to be repeated today.”
³ Ibid
God's creation. If even one great nation were unconditionally to perform the supreme act of renunciation, many of us would see in our lifetime visible peace established on earth.

_Harijan_, 18-6-1938

266. TELEGRAM TO A.I.S.A.

[1935]¹

SPINNERS ASSOCIATION

TAKE CHARGE SEND ABSTRACT STOCK WITH PRESENT PRICES AND LIST PERSONAL AND OTHER OUTSTANDINGS. CLEAR ALL SALABLE STOCK NOT BELOW COST WITHOUT PERMISSION.

GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

267. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

WARDHA, [1935]²

CHI. VALJI,

Received the articles. Let Chitre come there if he wants. Right now he has gone elsewhere. He writes that he wants to learn there the science of bee-keeping. Your nephew must be well. I am happy that you are there. I would not like to move you from there for the time being. Are your eyes cured? Do whatever work you can in the field of village industries.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 11172. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

---

¹ In the source, this telegram is placed along with the material belonging to 1935.

² The year has been inferred from the fact that the All India Village Industries Association was established in December 1934 and the references to Chitre in letters to the addressee are to be found from 1935 onwards; _vide_ also “Letter to Valji G. Desai”, 4-8-1935, for the letter expressing concern about the addressee’s eyes.
268. LETTER TO CHAND TYAGI

MAGANWADI, WARDHA,

[1935]

CHI. CHAND TYAGI,

Rajkishori\(^1\) is going there. Nothing much the matter but she was herself somewhat worried. Her temperature often rises up to 99\(^o\) F. Even otherwise she intended to go there on a visit. She has taken permission to be away for a month. She is such a nice girl that we all like her. We find her simple, innocent and pure. She is leaving but with an assurance of writing to me every now and then. You should encourage her to keep this promise. Write to me often how you are faring.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6634. Also C.W. 4282. Courtesy: Chand Tyagi

269. LETTER TO AMRITLAL NANAVATI

WARDHA,

January 4, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

If you have anything to say to me, do write. Take full work from Lilavati. She can help a great deal in the job of cooking. She also wishes to participate in sanitation work at Sindi. She does not know how to recite slokas and bhajans in tune. Do give her the time if she wants to learn it. Ramjilal should be made to learn all the kitchen work. It would be good if he is trained to undertake light responsible work.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10713

\(^1\) The source bears only the date ‘16’, but this appears to have been written in 1935 when Gandhiji was staying at Maganwadi.

\(^2\) Widowed daughter-in-law of the addressee. She had been staying in the Ashram since February 1935.
270. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

January 4, 1936

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

I am distressed by my inability to come there but I could not accept the strict conditions laid down by the doctors. The better course indeed is not to go at all if my health is as bad as they think. Now, in any case, you should come here after finishing the work of raising contributions for the Harijan cause in a few days. Bring Rajen Babu also with you. Probably you will be able to raise the needed money at Ahmedabad itself.

Blessings from

BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL
GUJARAT VIDYAPITH
AHMEDABAD

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna patro–2: Sardar Vallabhdhaine, p. 194

271. NOTE TO FULCHAND JAIN

January 4, 1935

I am reminded of my 21-day fast¹ on this death anniversary of Maulana Saheb. He brought for me a beautiful cow when my fast was over and told me that she was a memento from him for Hindu-Muslim Unity. How nice it would be if keeping this incident in mind, we worked for Hindu-Muslim unity.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi: C. W. 11070, Courtesy: Fulchand Jain

¹ Undertaken for Hindu-Muslim unity from September 17 to October 8, 1924, after which Mahomed Ali had presented a cow to Gandhiji; vide “Letter to Motilal Nehru”, 17-9-1924 and “Letter to Hatim Alvi”, 19-12-1934. Mahomed Ali, to whom Gandhiji refers as Maulana Saheb, died on January 4, 1931.
272. INTERVIEW TO YONE NOGUCHI

[Before January 11, 1936]

It was in the teeth of the doctors' advice that Gandhiji made an exception in favour of Japan's poet Yone Noguchi and invited him to visit him. He said:

He is not going to discuss anything with me. I shall simply have the pleasure of listening to him.

So the poet came and saw Gandhiji in his bed lying with a wet-earth bandage on his head. Gandhiji said:

I sprang from Indian earth and so it is Indian earth that crowns me.

NOGUCHI: In fundamentals, we are the same, in the virtue of negation, of simplicity, of the unification [of] poetry with life, and I am here to give you a few words of adoration.

On Gandhiji asking him his impressions of his visit to India, he said: “India has deeply interested me. So many things I have seen that I had never dreamed of seeing. Sometimes I have had disappointments, too. In the exhibition at Nagpur I found a new India, people very busy working” . . . . . He asked Gandhiji if he knew anything about Japan. Gandhiji said:

Nothing except through Edwin Arnold whose descriptions of Japanese life I read exactly 45 years ago with great avidity as they were appearing in his letters published weekly in an English journal. He had married a Japanese wife and all that he wrote he did with intimate sympathy.

NOGUCHI: You are right, Arnold's book is true even today. Without love and sympathy you cannot give a correct picture of a people.

GANDHIJI: Yes, and it is easiest to see the darker side. You must have seen our darker side, as we know the darker side of Japan through Japan's traffic and trade rivalry. But it is best to see the brighter side, and Japan's brighter side I know through Kagawa'.

Kasturba came and she was introduced to the poet. Gandhiji said:

Don't you think, she is the picture of a Japanese woman?

NOGUCHI: Yes, she is like my mother.

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai's “Weekly Letter”
2 In Seas and Lands (1891) and Japonica (1892)
3 A Japanese sadhu who had stayed with Gandhiji at his Ashram
Gandhiji was apparently unsatisfied with the very little that the poet said about India. So he said once again:

Yours is the most hospitable country in the world, I know. I hope you found my country at least a second best.

NOGUCHI: Yours is the most hospitable.

He perhaps did not want to tax Gandhiji in his weak condition. He said: “I have nothing to ask you since your life is an open book to me. You have had nothing to conceal.”

But as he was leaving he just asked if Gandhiji would give him any message for Japan. Gandhiji said:

My message is included in the message you have received from our poet Dr. Tagore. His message includes all the messages that many of us can give.

Gandhiji requested the poet to visit Ahmedabad and also arranged through Seth Ambalal Sarabhai an invitation to him.

Harijan, 11-1-1936

---

273. LETTER TO DR. SHUMSHERE SINGH

WARDHA,

January 15, 1936

MY DEAR SHUMMY,

You have I know forgiven me for keeping Amrit here so long. Her presence was a great comfort to me. The discovery of her great affection was a treasure. I hope you have found her in possession of good health. I am faring well. Amrit passed on to me all your carefully thought out suggestions. Thank you.

Love to you both.

BAPU

[PS.]

the accompanying from Prabhavati for Amrit.

From the original: C.W. 3560. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6369
274. MESSAGE TO BIHAR POLITICAL CONFERENCE

[Before January 17, 1936]^1

Let no one have any anxiety for me. If anyone has anxiety, let him work ten times greater than I am doing now.

The Bombay Chronicle, 19-1-1936

275. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

BOMBAY,
January 18, 1936

Am well. Ever thinking of you, often your image is in front of me, smiling and loving.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3559. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6368

276. CABLE TO QUEEN MARY

[January 21, 1936]^2

Mahatma Gandhi has sent a cable to Her Majesty the Queen and members of the royal family expressing deep regret over the passing away of His Majesty the King and conveying sincere condolences.

The Hindustan Times, 22-1-1936

277. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[After January 22, 1936]^3

CHI. MIRA,

So you are laid low.\textsuperscript{4} I hope you will soon be well and return to your post. You may certainly seek the solitude of the hills. I am \textsuperscript{1} The message conveyed through Rajendra Prasad, appeared under the date-line “Chatra (Hazaribagh), January 17, 1936”.

\textsuperscript{2} From Gandhi—1915-1948: A Detailed Chronology. King George V died on January 20, 1936
\textsuperscript{3} In Bapu’s Letters to Mira, this letter is placed before that of February 8, 1936, and carries a note saying, “Bapu had been taken to Ahmedabad for a change”. Gandhiji reached Ahmedabad on Wednesday, January 22, 1936.
\textsuperscript{4} The addressee was suffering from fever.
making steady progress in spite of the blood-pressure. I think I have discovered the cause of the present increase. But I shall know more on Wednesday. There is no cause for anxiety. I am allowed plenty of exercise and solid food.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6308. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9774

278. LETTER TO ANASUYA JAJU

AHMEDABAD,
January 25, 1936

CHI. ANASUYA,

It pains me to think that I shall not be attending your wedding, but I am helpless. Be an ideal wife. Remain the ideal sevika that you are. Bring honour to dharma and to the country. Rest assured that you could not have a more suitable husband than Radhakisan.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9119

279. LETTER TO RADHAKRISHNA BAJAJ

January 25, 1936

CHI. RADHAKISAN,

It is no small pain to me to think that I shall not be in Wardha at the time of your marriage. But what can we do, if God planned it that way? The hopes I have expressed for Anasuya in my letter to her I have of you also, only with the necessary changes in their application to a man. I am convinced that you could not have a better match than Anasuya. I am having great expectations of your new relationship, which I urge you to fulfil. Along with this letter I am sending for both of you wedding garlands made from my hand-spun yarn, which you should both wear while circumambulating during the wedding ceremony. May you both live long.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9119

1 Vide the preceding item.
280. LETTER TO SAADULLAH KHAN AND SOFIA SOMJI

[January 26, 1936]

If Bapu had been well, he should have written himself what I am writing on his behalf. May the auspicious day of the 26th of January begin for you both a happy wedded life of service and dedication, made all the stronger and richer by the indissoluble tie that binds you.

Yours sincerely,
MAHADEV DESAI

The Bombay Chronicle, 27-1-1936

281. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

January 26, 1936

When tyrants flourish rebels become slaves. I am flourishing! What about you?
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3558. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6367

282. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

January 26, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,

You must have got my letters. There has been no letter from you for quite some time. You should not be lazy in this regard. How are things with you now? You are now in charge of the kitchen, are you not? Are you taking any medicine?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 329

---

1 The addressee was at this time living in the newly-constructed Harijan Colony, Kingsway, Delhi.
283. LETTER TO JIVANJI D. DESAI

[Before February 5, 1936]¹

BHAI JIVANJI,

I did hear from Sardar about your brother's death, but I did not know that you had been out of station. What consolation may I offer you? Being the printer² of Anasaktiyoga, you of course know that he whom you took to be your brother never died and cannot die. [The body]³ is here today but not tomorrow. Why should one worry about it? May the departed soul rest in bliss and may we be more devoted to our duty.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI JIVANJI DAHYABHAI DESAI

CHHAPARA, VIA NAVASARI, B.B. & C.I. RLY.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9942. Also C.W. 6917. Courtesy: Jivanji D. Desai

284. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[February 8, 1936]⁴

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter relieved me of all anxiety. I hope you will be able to keep the promise not to brood over the past mistakes but look hopefully to the future not to repeat them. I am sure you will be quite all right if in coming to decisions [you] never think of what others will say. Consult the Dweller within and He will never fail you. I am making steady progress. Doctors come tomorrow. You shall have their opinion.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6309. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9775

¹ The delivery postmark bears the date February 5, 1936.
² The addressee was manager of the Navajivin Press.
³ Illegible
⁴ From Bapu's Letters to Mira; vide also the following item.
285. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

AHMEDABAD,

February 9, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I wrote to you yesterday.1 Today I have your letter telling me of your conversation with Jamnalalji. It is a great thing to be able to bear with joy being humbled. You should do the work in front of you without thinking of the future. Jamnalal Bajaj is here. I have not met him yet. I shall surely see him and talk to him about you. No anxiety of any sort. Prabha is writing to you about the medical examination.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6310. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9776

286. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

February 12, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter from Wardha—not yet the corrections. Certainly your coming here was a good thing.2 When it became a definite want of the soul, it would have been foolish to resist it. The thing now is to reap the fullest benefit from the visit. I had five minutes with Jamnalal Bajaj about you. He is quite agreeable that you should go on as you are and that you should have a cottage on the hill. More when we meet. I hope to reach there on 23rd. Carry no cares with you. Prabhavati went today to Patna. I thought that now that I was fairly well, it was necessary for her to join her husband. Let us see what now happens.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6311. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9777

---

1 Vide the preceding item.
2 According to Gandhi—1915-1948: A Detailed Chronology, the addressee visited Gandhiji on February 5, 1936.
CHI. NIMU,

I read your letter to Prabha¹. I have sent her away with her husband today. My health is not so bad as to justify my detaining her here. I hope to be able to reach there on the 23rd. You would have got the letter I wrote to Ramdas regarding Sumitra. She is sitting near me. She flatly refuses to leave the Ashram and go to Wardha. She drinks one and a half pound of milk every day, eats fruit and plays with a lot of friends and studies too. Manibehn, Vanamala and Anandibehn take all possible care of her. Her eye is better. It has improved all respects. We regularly put eye-drops in them. If, therefore, I do not receive a prohibitory order from you, I wish to take her and put her in the H. Ashram.² If afterwards she feels uncomfortable there, we will get her back. For the present, Ramdas seems to have left the decision to you and me. He thinks that it would be better if you, too, go and stay in the H. Ashram. We will think of this when we meet, provided Sumitra stays on there. Let me have your reply before the 19th. You will get this on the 14th. If you reply on the same day, I will get it on the 16th. But do so only if you feel strong enough for it. Give me whatever suggestion you wish to make.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ Prabhavati, wife of Jayaprakash Narayan
² Harijan Ashram
288. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[February 13, 1936]

CHI. MIRA,

I see you dread going to Segaon. Don't if you do not have the urge. You know the verse in Gita नियंत्रणं करिष्यति? What will compulsion avail? This is compulsion against oneself. Resistance up to a point is a duty. It becomes compulsion when the urge and the joy is lacking. All resistance is good and obligatory so long as it gives us strength. But when one is exhausted with every effort, be sure it is compulsion which must be avoided. The evil with you is that you have compelled yourself against your will to do certain things. This is an untruth. Therefore don't go to Segaon unless you feel you must and will be miserable if you did not go.

Is this quite clear? Kanti and Kanu are looking after me with great diligence and care.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6312. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9778

289. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

AHMEDABAD,

February 13, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your rebellious letter have all been delivered to me. I must not attempt a long reply. Prabha went yesterday to Patna to join her husband. I felt it would be wrong to keep her any longer when I

1 From Bapu's Letters to Mira; vide also “Letter to Mirabehn”, 14-2-1936.
2 The addressee explains: “A tremendous struggle was going on within myself . . . I had always been torn between the longing for the countryside and the longing to be with Bapu. Now I had hoped that the time had come when the two longings could be fulfilled. The situation however became very painful. If living in Segaon was to mean perpetual separation from Bapu, my health and nerves would not be able to endure it. Already my health was giving way under the strain which was seriously aggravated by other people telling me that if I did not stay permanently in Segaon, Bapu's blood-pressure would get worse. When Bapu became aware of the fact that my nerves were giving out, he said, if I could not live in Segaon he would himself go there.”

Bhagavad Gita, III. 33

VOL. 68 : 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935 - 15 MAY, 1936 221
almost a discharged patient. The capacity to stand discussions, etc., will come slowly. That fatigue is no new thing. The disinclination came on me a year ago or even earlier.

Kanti and Kanu are looking after me and they are doing it quite efficiently. Manibehn is guiding them. And Manibehn is an adept in these things. In neatness she is not to be beaten. Ba is still in Bombay nursing Lakshmi.

God willing, we leave here on 19th giving two days to Bardoli and then we proceed to Wardha. We (Sardar and I) reach Delhi about seventh or eighth March. Your letters are partly responsible for the delay in coming to Delhi. For all your recent letters have warned me against going to Delhi before the end of February. And Sardar would take no risk.

Hope Shummy is quite well. Looking forward to having an account of your doings in the villages when we meet.

_Cartloads of love from_ _BAPU OR TYRANT, WHICHEVER YOU LIKE_

From the original: C.W. 3561. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6370

290. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

February 13, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

You forgot to see that I wrote a letter to Jayaprakash. I am now sending it with this. I hope you had no difficulty on the way. Kanti and Kanu have properly settled down to their work and the time-table is strictly followed. Manibehn is guiding them. I had the support of her shoulder during the morning constitutional today. Anandi does the massaging with oil in the afternoon, and Kanti and Kanu in the evening. You should not worry about me at all. I felt better for not taking ghee yesterday. I didn't take it today also, though I took all the other things correctly. I had excellent sleep. The weather is not cold at all. Be regular in writing to me, and do please avoid grief on my account.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3455

---

1. Wife of Devdas Gandhi
2. Daughter of Lakshmidas Asar
291. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

February 13, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,

Your letter. As regards your going to Patiala I instructed Kanti to write. You may take Rs. 300 from Thakkar Bapa and hand it over to lala Dunichand. It is good that you are paying rent for your room. We shall consider the future course on my coming to Delhi. I like the idea of your going to Dhaka¹. Consult Dr. Ansari about yourself; you have to become well. You shall have news of Ba from Kanti. Be content with this much from me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 330

292. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

AHMEDABAD,

February 14, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. I do not think you have quoted me correctly. But that does not affect your argument. My letter² of yesterday anticipates most part of your argument and answers it. I do not think you need go to Segaon by way of penance. You should go there only if you cannot be happy otherwise. Whilst I am in Maganwadi you can render all the personal service you like, only letting Ba share what she likes. When I go to Segaon, as I must, if you are not there nobody of the present company can be with me. I must make new friends and co-workers in Segaon. You can settle in any other neighbouring village if you like, so as to be near me. I do not contemplate much travelling—certainly none outside India in the near future. “I do not ask to see the distant scene, one step enough for me!” My heart is in the villages. I want an excuse for going there. Of my own volition I lack the courage to go or to combat the argument of friends. But if you can persuade yourself to leave Segaon, as soon as I return from my convalescence, I would love to go to Segaon not as any punishment to you but as a welcome God-given opportunity for going to a village. The rains won't worry me in the slightest degree. I should find for myself all the comfort I may need there. Hence I would like you not to disturb yourself on my account. You should go to Segaon only if you feel the impulse to do village work. If you do not, you should quietly settle down in Maganwadi. Your hut is there. If you need better arrangement you have but to ask. In fine, you must do nothing in violation of the inner voice, whatever it may be. I am getting on. Yes, we halt for two days at Bardoli, reaching there on 23rd, D. V.

¹ A Harijan village near Delhi

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6313. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G. N. 9779

293. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

February 14, 1936

CHI. MANUDI,

I have your letter. Devote yourself entirely to your duties. Take care of your health, and engage yourself in some study. You should ask for Sushilabehn's help in the matter. She will guide you. Do some general reading also.

Ba is still in Bombay. We intend to leave here on the 19th and reach Wardha on the 23rd. It seems Ba will not be able to come even to Wardha. Convey my blessings to your mother's sisters. Ask Bhanu if he would still be afraid of me. Tell Kumi that she should not give up the idea of coming to Wardha.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1554. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

294. PREFACE TO “BE KHUDAI KHIDMATGAR”

It is a good thing that this concise account of the two servants of God is being placed before the Gujarati reading public. The lives of these two brothers are, in my view, very pure. Of the two, Shri Abdul Ghaffar Khan seems to be a veritable fakir. I see this trait in the letters he has been writing from prison. From day to day his self-abnegation has been increasing and the contemplation of God in his heart becoming more intense. No house where Gujarati is read should be without a copy of this book.

The book is not a mere translation of the original English. The author has tried to write an independent book of his own, and one acquainted with both languages can easily see that he has succeeded in the attempt. This book has also something fresh to contribute.

MOHANDAS K. GANDHI

GUJARAT VIDYAPITH
AHMEDABAD
February 16, 1936

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9941. Also C.W. 6916

295. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
February 16, 1936

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I have been getting your letters, but I was helpless. Of course I did have energy enough to write, but chose to follow the doctors' orders. Now I have got the permission to write a few letters such as this. What about the Agent's betrothal? You write nothing about it. Perhaps your next letter will bring the information. If you have not written to me of this already and if there is something I should know, do write. Write to me whatever you wish as regards Indian Opinion. Now my health may be said to be good enough. There never was anything to worry about. All I needed was just rest and no more, and I am still under orders to rest myself though I have started writing a

2 Mahadev Desai
3 This is followed by a note saying: “Please consider if the place and the date should be retained. Maybe it would be correct to omit them.” They were finally omitted in the printed book.
little. You must have heard from someone about Lakshmi's illness. Ba is with her.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

I am enclosing a letter\(^1\) to Medh.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4847

296. _SPEECH AT HARIJAN ASHRAM:\(^2\)_[^2]

16-2-1936

Though I have been having rest for the last two months or more I have been constantly thinking of the rules and vows\(^4\) of our Ashram. Quite a number of the Ashram inmates, old and young, have given up or have failed to live up to the vows of the Ashram and I wondered if that meant that there was anything inherently defective about those vows. But I came to the conclusion that there was no such thing and that it was well that we had kept those vows in front of us and tried, each according to his or her ability, to observe them, and that there was absolutely no cause for regret that the vows had been taken. I am devotee of the _Gita_ and a firm believer in the inexorable law of karma. Even the least little tripping or stumbling is not without its cause and I have wondered why one who has tried to follow the _Gita_ in thought, word and deed should have any ailment. The doctors have assured me that this trouble of high blood-pressure is entirely the result of mental strain and worry. If that is true, it is likely that I have been unnecessarily worrying myself, unnessarily fretting and secretly harbouring passions like anger, lust, etc. The fact that any event or incident should disturb my mental equilibrium, in spite of my serious efforts, means not that the _Gita_ ideal is defective but that my devotion to it is defective. The _Gita_ ideal is true for all time, my understanding of it and observance of it is full of flaws. The same is the case about the vows. The vows are true for all time, our observance of them has

---

\(^1\) Not available
\(^2\) The Gujarati original appeared in _Harijanbandhu_, 1-3-1936.
\(^3\) Gandhiji visited Harijan Ashram on this date; vide the following item.
\(^4\) Vide “Satyagraha Ashram”, 14-6-1928. been defective. The very contemplation of those vows is a source of perennial joy to me.

I know that several inmates of the old Satyagraha Ashram are staying here. They must be living here for some purpose; it can be none other than service of the Harijans. If they cherish the old vows and insist on their observance, they will be thereby rendering a service to the Harijans. Monetary help is not the only way to serve the Harijans. Our spirit of service and self-purification may take that concrete shape, but that is not the only shape it can take. We can, for instance, never render monetary help to the extent that Government can do. The essence of our help consists in our passionate desire to help and suffer for them, and that desire can come only out of self-purification, out of the observance of the vows we have been endeavouring to keep all these years. That will be the measure of our service to them, and of our capacity to make them true ‘Harijans’—men of God.

_Harijan, 29-2-1936_

297.. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

AHMEDABAD, February 17, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letter. Remember Tyrant won't tolerate Rebel for long. Rebel will have to be tamed into a slave.

Of course you can come to Wardha if you can. That means Savli, a village about 150 miles from Wardha. There will be the A. I. V. I. A. meeting there among other meetings, too. There will be over 100 people—members of Gandhi Seva Sangh gathered there. We would be there for four or five days and then go to Delhi. Of course you will stay with me in Delhi. I shall let them know.

I walked yesterday to Harijan Ashram, 1½ miles from Vidyapith and met there Ghaniram and his son. Both of them are doing good work. He showed me his invention. I could not give him much time. I have asked him to settle down there. The workshop that used to be in Bardoli has been transferred to the Ashram. Therefore there is much scope for his ability. He seemed to be quite happy. Lakshmidas whom you know is looking after him.

Kanti and Kanu are looking after my wants. Manibehn is the supervisor.
Love.

Blessings from TYRANT

[PS.]
I am glad you were villaging instead of watching games.

From the original: C.W. 3562. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N.6371

298. LETTER TO PYARELAL

AHMEDABAD,
February 17, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL.

Everything that is humanly possible has been done. Jamnalalji talked with Yoga\ for hours. Panditji and Lakshmibehn gave them all freedom. Jamnalalji made full use of it. He had prolonged discussions with Panditji and Lakshmibehn also. Yoga showed remarkable firmness. She has never thought about you. Although she is not particular about caste or community, she would have only a Maharashtrian Brahmin as her husband. She says she is not under pressure of any kind. I accept her word. Now your duty is clear. You must stop thinking of Yoga and relieve Panditji of his anxiety. You have already found the Yoga of your imagination. She is not this Yoga, though she may have been instrumental in bringing it about. This has been to your good in the sense that your constantly thinking of her has added to the purity of your soul. May your meditation of the Yoga of (your) imagination free you from all fears and temptations. But do not ever identify this physical Yoga with the Yoga of your imagination. Let me stop with this today. I shall explain the rest on my arrival there. I shall explain to you your duty more clearly. Do not fail me in my expectations. Regain your health fully.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 Niece of Narayan Moreshwar Khare
299. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

February 17, 1936

CHI. SHARMA,

Though you are often in my mind I am writing a few words today now that I have obtained permission to write some letters. You seem to be acquiring good experience in London. Now tell me about the books you read and the diet you take and where. Do not stint yourself in the matter of warm clothing or bedding; you must keep warm, I am now all right. We shall go to Wardha in a couple of days. The month of March would be spent in Delhi. After that Wardha. What do you think of Miss Agatha Harrison now that you are acquainted with her?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, facing p. 228

300. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

AHMEDABAD, February 18, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Today I shall write only this much. After looking up the books or inquiring of Chhaganlal1, send to me at Wardha the details of the sum of over Rs. 1,000 which Bhanushanker paid to the Ashram in several instalments apparently in Chhaganlal's time. I have waited long for Kusum. Now I hardly expect her to come.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8483. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 Chhaganlal Joshi, who was for some time secretary of Satyagraha, Ashram, Sabarmati
301. TRIBUTE TO DINshaw E. WACHHA

[February 19, 1936]

The country has lost a great patriot. The very first Congress I had the privilege of attending was presided over by him at Calcutta. I have vivid recollection of his great industry and unfailing courtesy to all. I remember well how much his fearless criticism of Government measures and his grasp of financial questions were admired by all Congressmen.

The Bombay Chronicle, 20-2-1936

302. SPEECH AT GUJARAT VIDYAPITH, AHMEDABAD

February 19, 1936

Do not forget that the aims and objects of the Vidyapith continue to be what they were. They were framed after much thought and deliberation by the organizers and the teachers. You have to keep them all in front of you. They are all contained in the prayer you have just now recited. We have all to march from untruth to truth, from darkness to light. Truth is at the very root of all our aims and vows and the plant of truth will not grow and fructify if you do not water its roots with ahimsa. But for you the truth lies in cultivating true rural-mindedness. The Vidyapith was started in order to make the children of city-dwellers real servants of villages and we devised our curricula with that end in view. But you are not children of city-dwellers. You come from villages, you are children of villagers who have gone through suffering and sacrifice in the fight for freedom, and your duty towards the villages is therefore greater. May you use all that you learn, for the benefit of the villages.

Harijan, 29-3-1936, and The Bombay Chronicle, 21-2-1936

1 Who passed away on February 18 at Bombay
2 From Gandhi—1915-1948: A Detailed Chronology
3 In December, 1901
4 The Gujarati original appeared in Harijanbandhu, 1-3-1936.
6 The Bombay Chronicle here adds: “They should help village industries... They must make spinning a habit, so that they could spin the yarn required for their own clothing.”
303. LETTER TO RADHAKRISHNA BAJAJ

BARDOLI, ON WAY TO WARDHA,
February 20, 1936

CHI. RADHAKRISHNA,

I got your letter. I was very glad to read it. The satisfaction you have from Anasuya is bound to find an echo in her too. May this mutual satisfaction last for ever. You will be able to build up your health there and also learn the art of nursing people in their illness. I hope Narmada and Tara also are improving in health.

I reached Bardoli today and hope to be in Wardha on Sunday.

Blessing from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9120

304. LETTER TO ANASUYA BAJAJ

[February 20, 1936]

CHI. ANASUYA,

I have your letter. Sardar is accompanying me and we are going to Wardha via Bardoli. I have had a good certificate from Radhakisan about you and me as well, but I am still to get one from you about Radhakisan and myself. I take it that this omission results from your modesty.

I got the slivers which you sent me. They are very good. It is no surprise to me to learn that you have been doing much public service, for you have accepted service to others as your religion.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9130

1 Tara N. Mashruwala, Sushila Gandhi’s younger sister
2 From the contents it is obvious that this letter was written on the same date as the preceding item.
305. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

BARDOLI,
February 20, 1936

BHAI FULCHAND,

I learnt only recently from Sardar that you had been quite ill. They have permitted me now to write a few letters and hence I am writing this. Write or ask somebody to write to me what your illness is. Do get well soon, for I have still much work to take from you.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Send your reply to Wardha.

306. LETTER TO TARA N. MASHRUWALA

CHI. TARA,

I keep thinking of you though I do not write to you. Follow the treatment with faith, not giving it up unless and until Gaurishankarbhai admits defeat. Write to me. Write to me about Narmada also.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7525. Also C.W. 5001. Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala
307. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

BARDOLI.

February 21, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

How is it that I have heard nothing from you after your letter to Kanti from Hathras? I hope you got the letter I wrote the very next day after you left. You shouldn’t be lazy in writing. I write this from Bardoli. I am in good health, and Kanti and Kanu are doing your part of the work ably enough. At the time of leaving, my weight was 112 lb. and the blood-pressure 150-90.

I expect you are keeping good health and taking milk regularly. I am reminded of you by the daily use of your mirror, pattu, lamp and scissors. You have forgotten to take with you your khaddar shoes, which are in safe custody here. You ought to take up some studies there at any rate.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3456

308. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

BARDOLI.

February 21, 1936

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

Unable to resist your love I brought along your gift with me here. And today I had a look at them. The bowl is made in Germany. The razor of course is foreign made, your dharma and mine lies in making do with things made in our villages (not even in our cities). For this reason and in pursuance of the ideal of non-possession I manage without many things. So while on tour I shave with whatever razor I can get hold of. In Wardha there is a nationalist barber who shaves me with a village-made razor. Such being the situation, how can I make use of your bowl and things? Also we must spend every

2 A kind of woollen cloth pie with the utmost care because it belongs to the poor, but you go on lavishly spending on me. These thoughts strike me most poignantly here in Bardoli. Hence this letter. Here they have built a hut for me under a mango tree. The walls are of dried stems of tuver in a framework of bamboo. Khadi has been used where found necessary. Not a single pie has been spent in making the hut. When I leave here all the building material of the hut will be returned to its original users. You will also be happy to see the hut. The village industry movement includes such activities.

I shall find some use for the things I have accepted. It will suffice if this incident remains a guide for the future. Not only should you not incur any unnecessary expense on my account, but anything you buy for me should be of village manufacture. The same consideration should apply to whatever you buy for yourself or for the Majoor Mahajan.

I am keeping fit. Here, too, I have enough leisure, so there is no cause for worry.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32837

309. INTERVIEW TO AMERICAN NEGRO DELEGATION

[February 21, 1936]

GANDHIJI: Is the prejudice against colour growing or dying out?

DR. THURMAN: It is difficult to say because in one place things look much improved, whilst in another the outlook is still dark. Among many of the Southern white students there is a disposition to improve upon the attitude of their forbears, and the migration occasioned by the World War did contribute appreciably to break down the barriers. But the economic question is acute everywhere, and in many of the industrial centres in Middle West the prejudice against the Negro shows itself in its ugliest form. Among the masses of workers there is a great amount of tension, which

1 This appeared under the title “With Our Negro Guests” by Mahadev Desai. According to Mahadev Desai, “the meeting was the first engagement of an important nature undertaken by Gandhiji since the breakdown in his health.”
2 From Gandhi—1915-48: A Detailed Chronology
3 A professor of comparative religion and philosophy is quite natural when the white thinks that the Negro’s very existence is a threat to his own.

a. Is the union between Negroes and the whites recognized by law?

CARROL. Twenty-five States have laws definitely against these unions, and I have had to sign a bond of 500 dollars to promise that I would not register any such union.

DR. T. But there has been a lot of intermixture of races as for 300 years or more the Negro woman had no control over her body. . . . Did the South African Negro take any part in your movement?

a. No, I purposely did not invite them. It would have endangered their cause. They would not have understood the technique of our struggle nor could they have seen the purpose or utility non-violence.

This led to a very interesting discussion of the state of Christianity among the South African Negroes and Gandhiji explained at great length why Islam scored against Christianity there. “We are often told”, said Dr. Thurman, “that but for the Arabs there would have been no slavery, I do not believe it.”

a. No, it is not true at all. For, the moment a slave accepts Islam he obtains equality with his master, and there are several instances of this in history.

The whole discussion led to many a question and cross-question during which the guests had an occasion to see that Gandhiji’s principle of equal respect for all religions was no theoretical formula but a practical creed. “Is non-violence from your point of view a form of direct action”—inquired Dr. Thurman.

a. It is not one form, it is the only form. I do not of course confine the words ‘direct action’ to their technical meaning. But without a direct active expression of it, non-violence to my mind is meaningless. It is the greatest and the activest force in the world. One cannot be passively non-violent. In fact ‘non-violence’ is a term I had to coin in order to bring out the root meaning of ahimsa. In spite of the negative particle ‘non’, it is no negative force. Superficially we are surrounded in life by strife and bloodshed, life living upon life. But some great seer, who ages ago penetrated the centre of truth, said: It is not through strife and violence, but through non-violence that man can fulfil his destiny and his duty to his fellow creatures. It is a force which is more positive than electricity and more powerful than even ether. At the centre of non-violence is a force which is self-acting.

---

1 Pastor of Salem
Ahimsa means ‘love’ in the Pauline sense, and yet something more than the ‘love’ defined by St. Paul, although I know St. Paul's beautiful definition is good enough for all practical purposes. Ahimsa includes the whole creation, and not only human. Besides, love in the English language has other connotations too, and so I was compelled to use the negative word. But it does not, as I have told you, express a negative force, but a force superior to all the forces put together. One person who can express ahimsa in life exercises a force superior to all the forces of brutality.

Q. And is it possible for any individual to achieve this?
A. Certainly. If there was any exclusiveness about it, I should reject it at once.

Q. Any idea of possession is foreign to it?
A. Yes. It possesses nothing, therefore it possesses everything.

Q. Is it possible for a single human being to resist the persistent invasion of the quality successfully?
A. It is possible. Perhaps your question is more universal than you mean. Isn't it possible, you mean to ask, for one single Indian for instance to resist the exploitation of 300 million Indians? Or do you mean the onslaught of the whole world against a single individual personality?

DR.T. Yes, that is one half of the question. I wanted to know if one man can hold the whole violence at bay?

A. If he cannot, you must take it that he is not a true representative of ahimsa. Supposing I cannot produce a single instance in life of a man who truly converted his adversary, I would then say that is because no one had yet been found to express ahimsa in its fulness.

Q. Then it overrides all other forces?
A. Yes, it is the only true force in life.

DR.T. Forgive the weakness, but may I ask how are we to train individuals or communities in this difficult art?

A. There is no royal road, except through living the creed in your life which must be a living sermon. Of course the expression in one's own life presupposes great study, tremendous perseverance, and thorough cleansing of one's self of all the impurities. If for mastering of the physical sciences you have to devote a whole lifetime, how many lifetimes may be needed for mastering the greatest spiritual force that mankind has known? But why worry even if it means several lifetimes? For if this is the only permanent thing in life, if this is the only thing that counts, then whatever effort you bestow on mastering it is well spent. Seek ye first the kingdom of Heaven and everything else shall be added unto you. The Kingdom of Heaven is ahimsa.

MRS. T. How am I to act, supposing my own brother was lynched before my very eyes?

g. There is such a thing as self-immolation. Supposing I was a Negro, and my sister was ravished by a white or lynched by a whole community, what would be my duty?— I ask myself. And the answer comes to me: I must not wish ill to these, but neither must I co-operate with them. It may be that ordinarily I depend on the lynching community for my livelihood. I refuse to co-operate with them, refuse even to touch the food that comes from them, and I refuse to co-operate with even my brother Negroes who tolerate the wrong. That is the self-immolation I mean. I have often in my life resorted to the plan. Of course a mechanical act of starvation will mean nothing. One's faith must remain undimmed whilst life ebbs out minute by minute. But I am a very poor specimen of the practice of non-violence, and my answer may not convince you. But I am striving very hard, and even if I do not succeed fully in this life, my faith will not diminish.

“We want you to come to America”, said the guests.

MRS. T. We want you not for white America, but for the Negroes; we have many a problem that cries for solution, and we need you badly.

g. How I wish I could, but I would have nothing to give you unless I had given an ocular demonstration here of all that I have been saying. I must make good the message here before I bring it to you. I do not say that I am defeated, but I have still to perfect myself. You may be sure that the moment I feel the call within me I shall not hesitate.

DR. T. Much of the peculiar background of our own life in America is our own interpretation of the Christian religion. When one goes through the pages of the hundreds of Negro spirituals, striking things are brought to my mind which remind me of all that you have told us today.

g. Well, if it comes true it may be through the Negroes that the unadulterated message of non-violence will be delivered to the world.¹

_Harijan,_ 14-3-1936

310. SPEECH AT VILLAGE WORKERS’ MEETING ²

_BARDOLI,
February 22, 1936_

The first question was about the duties of the village workers. The only duty of the village worker was to serve the villagers, said Gandhiji, and he could best serve them if he kept the eleven vows in front of him as a beacon-light.

The other question was about the livelihood of the village worker. How was he to earn it? Was he to draw an allowance from an institution, or to earn it by labouring for it, or to depend upon the village for it? The ideal way, said Gandhiji, was to depend upon the village. There was no shame therein, but humility. There was no scope for self-indulgence either, for he could not think of a village which would encourage or tolerate self-indulgence. All that the worker need do was to work for the village all his working hours, and to collect whatever grain and vegetables he needed from the village. He might collect a little money too (for postage and other monetary expenditure) if he should need it, though Gandhiji did not think he could not do without it. The village would willingly support him if he had gone there at the invitation of the village. He could conceive an occasion when the villagers might not be able to tolerate his views and withdraw their support, as, for instance, they did when he admitted untouchables in the Satyagraha Ashram in 1915. Then he should work for his living. It was no use depending on an institution.

The third question was about body-labour. The village worker was in the village to do as much body-labour as possible and to teach the villagers to outgrow idleness. He might do any kind of labour, but give preference to scavenging. Scavenging was certainly productive labour. He liked some of the workers’ insistence on devoting at least half an hour to work entirely of service and of a productive kind.

---

¹ Before taking leave of Gandhiji Mrs. Thurman sang two famous Negro spirituals: “Were you there, when they crucified my Lord” and “We are climbing Jacob's ladder.”

² The Gujarati original appeared in _Harijanbandhu,_ 1-3-1936. The village workers gave a list of questions to Gandhiji and requested him to enlighten them.

³ Non-violence, truth, non-stealing, _brahmacharya_, non-possession, bodylabour, control of the palate, fearlessness, equal respect for all religions, _swadeshi_ (restricting oneself to the use and service of one's nearest surroundings in preference to those more remote) and spirit of unexclusive brotherhood Scavenging certainly came under that category. Also grinding; for money saved is money got.

The fourth question was about maintaining a diary. Gandhiji had no doubt that the village worker must be prepared to account for every minute of his waking hours and must fill them with work and mention it distinctly in his diary. A real diary was a mirror of the diarist's mind and soul, but many might find it difficult to make a truthful record of their mind's activities. In that case they might confine themselves to a record of their physical activities. But it should not be done in a haphazard way. Simply saying, “Worked in the kitchen” would not do. One may have whiled away one's time in the kitchen. Specific items of work should be mentioned.

The fifth question was about work among Dublas who work more or less as serfs in certain parts of Gujarat. Service of Dublas, said Gandhiji, meant readiness to share their toil and their hardships, and to get into touch with their masters and to see that they dealt with them justly and kindly.

Summing up, Gandhiji said:

The village worker will leave politics alone. He may become a Congress member, but he may not take part in an election campaign. He has his work cut out for himself. The Village Industries Association and the Spinners' Association were both created by the Congress, and yet they work independently of the Congress. That is why they and their members steer clear of all Congress politics. That is the non-violent way.

He will also leave village factions alone. He must go and settle there determined to do without most of the things he does not do without in a city. If I sit down in a village I should have to decide what things I should not take with me in the village, however inherently harmless those things may be. The question is whether those things will sort well or ill with the life of an ordinary villager. He will be incorruptible and stand like a rock against the inroad of temptations and save the village from them. Even one pure soul can save a whole village, as one Vibhishana saved Lanka. Sodom and Gomorrah were not destroyed so long as there was one pure soul left in them. That is why I said long ago that I would far rather that India perished than sacrifice truth in order to save it.

_Harijan_, 29-2-1936

---

1. Ravana's brother who went over to Rama's side
2. _Genesis_, 13.4 and 18.9
311. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA,

February 24, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Kumarappa handed me your welcome longish letter at the station. The prescription for flit is twice welcome. I needed it. It will duly appear in Harijan without your name. The parcel will arrive in due course. How wise of me to have let you cut out \( \frac{1}{2} \) yard! When the articles come the artless tyrant will duly examine [the] so-called art of the rebel. Let the rebel however know in advance that sometimes art lies in not interfering with nature's unevenness and irregular curves and lines. Fancy hammering the earth into a perfect sphere! Perhaps then we should cease to be. So you see, if I certify your art, it will be a feather in your cap. But then you will have to sport a cap to wear the feather!

This shows how well I must be in spite of the journey.
I am sorry you can't come to Savli.
We shall see, when we meet in Delhi, what you will or can do in the nature of service. Your appointments will leave you no time.
Love to you all.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3563. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6372
312. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

February 24, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your two letters together. You caused me a little anxiety, for you were told to write immediately after reaching, were you not? You may certainly go to Mother, if there is nothing for Jayaprakash that you might have to do, that is, if there is no service to render him. You may visit your other relatives, if you have to. However, you ought to stay with him if he accepts your services and eats the food you cook. You may come to me after seeing your elders if he is not at all in need of your services and you can gain your freedom gladly. Before coming, however, it should be clear that you will come not to render me any special personal service but to do the task that I might assign to you. Is this clear?

The language you write is good enough. You have secured a good command over Gujarati.

Mind you preserve your health. You should insist on Jayaprakash following the remedies needed for his health.

We reached Wardha safely yesterday. We are putting up at Kanya Ashram. Kanti and Kanu look after me. Ba is at Bombay still. Mirabehn is sitting near me; but she does not take part in any work of service.

Kanti will write the rest.

Don’t be lazy in writing to me. Do not worry about anything.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3457

313. LETTER TO DR. KHAN SAHEB

WARDHA,

February 25, 1936

DEAR KHAN SAHEB,

Since you won’t attend Sofia’s marriage, I may not complain of the absence of any letter from you. But the A.I.V.I.A. is a peremptory body with a strong constitution. You may not be eternally absent and still remain member and trustee. Your difficulty I can anticipate. If it is insurmountable, you should send in your resignation of both and we must wait till the prisoner brother\(^1\) is out.

Love to you all.

Yours,

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

314. DRAFT TELEGRAM TO NARAYANLA\(^2\)

[On or after February 27, 1936]\(^3\)

NARAYANLAL

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI DISCUSSED BARODA AFFAIR WITH ME. HE WANTS APPOINT INDEPENDENT COMMITTEE. THOUGH DISINCLINED BEFORE FOR REASONS HEALTH AND OTHERWISE AM PREPARED INQUIRE AND GIVE DECISION ON POINTS RAISED. WIRE IF YOU WOULD LIKE ME INTERVENE..

From a photostat: G.N. 3072.

315. A TELEGRAM

[On or after February 27, 1936]\(^4\)

JAMNALALJI PREPARED ACT SOLE ARBITRATOR. HAS WIRED NARAYANLAL ACCORDINGLY. YOU SHOULD NEVERTHELESS INQUIRE WHETHER PURUSHOTTAMDAS WILL ACCEPT NOMINATION IF REQUIRED.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 3072; also \textit{panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad}, p. 379

\(^1\) Abdul Ghaffar Khan, who was arrested on December 7, 1934, and released on August 2, 1936

\(^2\) Gandhiji drafted this for Jamnalal Bajaj.

\(^3\) This and the following item are on the same sheet. According to \textit{Bapu Smaran}, Jamnalal Bajaj discussed the Baroda affair with Gandhiji on February 26 and 27.

\(^4\) Vide 2nd footnote of “Draft Telegram to Narayanlal”, on or before 27-2-1936. \textit{Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad}, however, places this telegram under March-April, 1936 with a question mark.
316. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA,
February 28, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Ghee from cow's milk I cannot take. I can take only goat's milk and its products. Have plenty of goat's milk in stock.

The dhotis have come. The ends are well made. But they will not suit dhotis as you will realize when we meet. But they will be used as upper sheets which as you know I wear. The yarn is very fine indeed.
Everyone to whom I showed the things admired the texture and the ends-making.

We leave this evening for Savli and return here probably on 6th.
Only one letter is likely to reach me in Savli if you write to that address. District Chanda, C.P. you will have to put. Savli is an unknown village so far as the public is concerned. I shall miss your presence there as I had almost expected you. Kanti and Kanu accompany me of course.

The date for reaching Delhi is not yet fixed. But I am still hoping it would be 8th March.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3564. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6373

317. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

CHI.MIRA,
February 28, 1936

Yesterday's blood-pressure was a fraud—just a result of garlic. It was taken immediately after the meal to test what effect garlic had. I would have felt miserable if I had been prevented from coming to Segaon. Jamnalal Bajaj was superb. He suppressed his feeling and let me come. It was bound to go down as soon as the immediate effect of garlic had abated.

I am glad you were not upset. Of course I would love to be among the people and chat away with them. Kamala had a setback and poor Jawaharlal will be delayed for eleven days. In the circumstances I may go to Delhi directly. I shall let you know. Am quite well and preparing for Savli.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6314. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9780

318. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

February 28, 1936

CHI. AMTUSSALAAM,

I did not write to you as you had told me not to. I have not still started dictating my letters. We are going to Savli today, and I hope to reach there [Delhi] on the 8th. I expect to learn more about this at Savli. I hope to see you much improved in health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 331

319. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

February 28, 1936

BHAIFULCHAND,

I was very glad to have your letter. Would you not go to Ahmedabad and get yourself treated by Talwalkar¹? I find his remedies work very well in certain diseases.

Blessings from

BAPU

¹ Dr. Talwalkar, a tuberculosis specialist of Ahmedabad
320. LETTER TO PYARELAL

WARDHA,

February 28, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I heard all from Jamnalalji. I was much pained. You must now wake up, get over the stupor and dedicate yourself to work. Come over if you wish. Let me know your programme. It may be as well if you come with me to Savli.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

321. TELEGRAM TO VIJAYALAKSHMI PANDIT

February 28, 1936

JUST SYMPATHIES OF ALL OF US ARE WITH YOU ALL. YOU MUST ALL BE BRAVE. LOVE.

BAPU

The Bombay Chronicle, 29-2-1936

322. TRIBUTE TO KAMALA NEHRU

February 28, 1936

Kamala's death is a great national loss. I had the privilege of knowing her intimately for years. I have not known a truer, braver and more godfearing Woman. May her life be a pattern for us all to follow.

The Bombay Chronicle, 29-2-1936

1 On Kamala Nehru's death
2 This was handed over to Mahadev Desai by Gandhiji as he left for Savli by the Grand Trunk Express.
By the grace of medical friends and self-constituted gaolers, Sardar Vallabhbhai and Jamnalalji, I am now able by way of trial to resume to a limited extent my talks with the readers of Harijan. The restrictions that they have put on my liberty and to which I have agreed, are that, for the time being at any rate, I shall not write for Harijan more than I may consider to be absolutely necessary and that, too, not involving more than a few hours' writing per week. I shall not carry on private correspondence with reference to correspondents' personal problems or domestic difficulties, except those with which I have already concerned myself, and I shall not accept public engagements or attend or speak at public gatherings. There are positive directions about sleep, recreation, exercise and food, with which the reader is not concerned and with which therefore I need not deal. I hope that the readers of Harijan and correspondents will cooperate with me and Mahadev Desai, who has in the first instance to attend to all correspondence, in the observance of these restrictions.

It will interest the reader to know something about the origin of the breakdown and the measures taken to cope with it. So far as I have understood the medical friends, after a very careful and painstaking examination of my system they have found no functional derangement. Their opinion is that the breakdown was most probably due to deficiency of proteins and carbohydrates in the form of sugar and starches, coupled with overstrain for a prolonged period involving long hours and concentration on numerous taxing private problems in addition to the performance of daily public duty. So far as I can recollect I had been complaining for the past twelve months or more that, if I did not curtail the volume of ever-growing work, I was sure to break down. Therefore when it came, it was nothing new to me. And it is highly likely that the world would have heard little of it but for the over-anxiety of one of the friends who, on seeing me indisposed, sent a sensational note to Jamnalalji who gathered together all the medical talent that was available in Wardha and sent messages to Nagpur and Bombay for further help.

The day I collapsed I had a warning on rising in the morning that there was some unusual pain about the neck, but I made light of it and never mentioned it to anybody. I continued to go through the daily programme. The final stroke was a most exhausting and serious conversation I had with a friend whilst I was having the daily evening stroll. The nerves had already been sufficiently taxed during the preceding fortnight with the consideration and solution of problems which for me were quite as big and as important as, say, the paramount question of swaraj.

Even if no fuss had been made over the collapse, I would have taken nature's peremptory warning to heart, given myself moderate rest and tided over the difficulty. But looking back upon the past I feel that it was well that the fuss was made. The extraordinary precautions advised by the medical friends and equally extraordinary care taken by the two 'gaolers' enforced on me the exacting rest which I would not have taken and which allowed ample time for introspection. Not only have I profited by it but the introspection has revealed vital defects in my following out of the interpretation of the Gita as I have understood it. I have discovered that I have not approached with adequate detachment the innumerable problems that have presented themselves for solution. It is clear that I have taken many of them to heart and allowed them to rouse my emotional being and thus affect my nerves. In other words they have not, as they should have in a votary of the Gita, left my body or mind untouched. I verily believe that one who literally follows the prescription of the eternal Mother need never grow old in mind. Such a one's body will wither in due course like leaves of a healthy tree, leaving the mind as young and as fresh as ever. That seems to me to be the meaning of Bhishma delivering his marvellous discourse to Yudhishthira though he was on his death-bed. Medical friends were never tired of warning me against being excited over or affected by events happening around me. Extra precautions were taken to keep from me news of a tragic character. Though, I think, I was not quite so bad a devotee of the Gita as their precautions Lead me to suppose, there was undoubtedly substance behind them. For I discovered with what a wrench I accepted Jamnalalji's conditions and demand that I should remove from Maganwadi to Mahila Ashram. Anyway I had lost credit with him for detached action. The fact of the collapse was for him eloquent enough testimony for discrediting my vaunted detachment. I must plead guilty to the condemnation.

The worst however was to follow. I have been trying to follow brahmacharya consciously and deliberately since 1899. My definition of it is purity not merely of body but of both speech and thought also. With the exception of what must be regarded as one lapse, I can recall no instance, during more than thirty-six years' constant and conscious effort, of mental disturbance such as I experienced during this illness. I was disgusted with myself. The moment the feeling came I acquainted my attendants and the medical friends with my condition. They could give me no help. I expected none. I broke loose after the experience from the rigid rest that was imposed upon me. The confession of the wretched experience brought much relief to me. I felt as if a great load had been raised from over me. It enabled me to pull myself together before any harm could be done. ¹ But what of the Gita? Its teaching is clear and precise. A mind that is once hooked to the Star of stars becomes incorruptible. How far I must be from Him, He alone knows. Thank God, my much-vaulted Mahatmaship has never fooled me. But this enforced rest has humbled me as never before. It has brought to the surface my limitations and imperfections. But I am not so much ashamed of them, as I should be of hiding them from the public. My faith in the message of the Gita is as bright as ever. Unwearied ceaseless effort is the price that must be paid for turning that faith into rich infallible experience. But the same Gita says without any equivocation that the experience is not to be had without divine grace. We should develop swelled heads if Divinity had not made that ample reservation.

Harijan, 29-2-1936

324. LETTER TO NIRMALABEHN J. SHROFF

SAVLI,
February 29, 1936

CHI. NIRMALA.

This is no letter of condolence. Of course we do feel pained at the death of anyone and, from that standpoint, there is certainly pain at the death of your husband. You have not become a widow, and if you think you have, you were as much a widow in your married state. I expect you do not think that there has been any change in this state. Carry out your duty firmly. If you get the custody of your child, rear him. Do not ever get your head shaved. I see no need for any change in your way of life. In my view, it is your duty to continue your work of service as before. May God grant you the good sense and the strength to do your duty.

¹ Vide letters to Premabehn Kantak, 6-5-1936 and 21-5-1936.
In fact, there is no need to write even this much as Nathji is already there by your side.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9718. Courtesy: Nilkanth B. Mashruwala

325. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING—I

SALVI,
February 29, 1936

The truth is that I have come here after opening the exhibition. I thought that first I would see the exhibition and then tell you what was worth seeing there. Just now you have heard the reports of those who have brought exhibits from other parts.

When I was told that an exhibition was to be held here I had an impression that there would be things produced in Savli and the neighbouring villages. They would not be numerous. Khadi work is being carried on here. Fine khadi is made. The Harijans get their livelihood from it, because most of the workers are Harijans. From this point of view I feel the lack of the different processes and types of khadi. The reason given for this is—and it may be a correct one—that we would see Savli closely, study it well and would try to measure in a better way Savli's capacity in khadi production.

For the last two or three months efforts were being made for the members to meet here. For this reason I had expected that you would try in the mean time and exhibit articles made here. Had this been done, all of us would have had the opportunity to see what Savli could do. But this criticism should be borne in mind for the future. The sessions of our Sangh will always be held in villages. On such occasions we should undertake a study of the local industries and the products to explore the potentialities of the place and content ourselves with exhibiting only the things that it can produce. We must also see that we do not confuse the aims of such exhibitions with those of a museum. There can be a display of ancient things which have no connection with our economic life. But such museums should be where they belong; they have no place in our sessions. Our duty is to concentrate on only those industries and crafts which are capable of being revived. Now when you go and see the exhibition, also note what things are not there and what could have been included.

1 At its second annual meeting

A circular had been sent to you about what you were to bring when coming here. It asked you to bring a lantern, writing material, postcards, envelopes, stamps, etc. The circular was appropriate because these things are not available in villages. More than 80% of the villagers are illiterate. So who would store these things for sale? It would have been an unnecessary expenditure if lanterns were provided by the Sangh.

The circular also mentioned that it was difficult to procure milk in Savli and cow's milk was practically unprocurable. Those who needed cow's ghee were instructed to bring their own supply. After coming here you would have discovered that buffalo's milk has been provided for you. You would hardly know that your milk supply comes from Chanda¹ and vegetables from Nagpur². I think it is sinful. It was our duty to have had cows here instead of getting milk and vegetables from such a long distance. So many of our people live here. They could always have kept some cows. Of course it would have meant some expenditure. It is possible that less expenditure is incurred in procuring milk from Chanda. But the higher expenditure would not have been improper. We should have also had vegetables grown here. We should have informed the farmers two or three months in advance that three to four hundred of our people were coming to stay here for a week. We would require so many maunds of vegetables daily and they should right then plan their farms to meet the needs. They would have gladly welcomed your suggestion and would have thanked you for having decided to have the session at Savli.

It is better to do without milk or vegetables for a week if such local arrangements are not possible. Arrangements should be made for sick persons or people like me who cannot do without milk or vegetables and that, too, from the supply that is locally available. A pertinent question is: why should they take the trouble of coming such a long distance? We should keep it in mind that we should be able to benefit the villagers to the maximum from our stay there. At least we should try to do so. We should try and get the necessary things made there. If we incur an expenditure of Rs. 3,000 over such a session, we should try and see that we benefit the local people to the same extent by our body-labour purchasing power.

¹ Thirty-four miles from Savli
² More than 120 miles from Savli

[From Hindi]
Gandhi Seva Sanghke Dwitiya Adhiveshan (Savli) ka Vivaran, pp. 25-7

326. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING—II

SAVLI,
March 1, 1936

I shall devote one hour every day to the session. During that time I can speak for about half an hour at the most, and the remaining half hour will be spent in listening to your questions and so on. I have already received some questions from you and the President has also raised some questions in the course of his speech. I shall first reply to his questions. If my reply raises any further questions in your minds, you are free to ask them.

The first question concerns the subsistence wages. In my view we cannot formulate any exact rule about it. We can no doubt say that we shall not go beyond a certain limit. For instance, the Sangh has set the limit of Rs. 75 as monthly wage. According to me even this is too much, because our field of activity is in the villages. And we cannot allow Rs. 75 or Rs. 50 in the villages. Nor is so much money needed there. True, all people cannot go to the villages. They have their own difficulties. Then, there are some people who are good workers and whose ideas and actions are acceptable and whom we would not permit to leave the field of service. And they cannot maintain themselves on low wages either. To such people we can give even Rs. 75. But we give this reluctantly and they too accept it reluctantly. This, however, is not a matter to be considered by others. But, if one person can carry on with Rs. 5, why should he demand Rs. 50 Merely because some other person is getting Rs. 50? The person earning Rs. 50 or Rs. 75 has either poor health or has some other handicaps which the person earning Rs. 5 does not have. This should not be considered a matter of competition at all. Let a person take only what he needs. For instance, Mirabehn can manage with very little. But I told her that she should definitely take milk and fruits. Because of this her monthly expense goes up to Rs. 10 or 15. But Gajanan who works in her place in Sindi has such habits that he requires almost nothing compared to Mirabehn. This does not make him envy Mirabehn. And it should not make him envious. Thus, no one should accept more than his minimum requirements. Any person who has lived in a city so far and has now gone to a village but has not been able to adjust himself to village life may take higher wages for some time.

1 Gandhiji arrived at the meeting at 4 p.m.
2 Kishorelal Mashruwala

The next question deals with body-labour. What I have said earlier includes my reply on this point also. Each person will function within his own individual limits. We cannot lay down more than this. Let every man put in the maximum body-labour he can. One worker wrote to me that he managed to earn his livelihood in the village; but all his time was spent in doing body-labour. He had resolved to take to spinning and also planned to make a living by spinning. But he found no time to do anything else. I have written to him that, if he continues his work with devotion, people will have a lesson to learn even from this. If the people of the village desire to accept his services, he can educate their children, clean up the garbage and in return earn his bread from them. If he puts his heart in his work, he will be able to earn his livelihood. But he must take only what is necessary. He may be able to have sweets, ghee, fruits, etc., if he asks for them. But he should not accept these things even if the people offer them on their own. I go round with the thought of the village in my mind, and so other problems do not arise for me. There can be no question at all of drawing the maximum out of public funds.

PRESIDENT: What should be the lowest limit of body-labour, so that, if a particular worker is not able to put in that much work, he would be justified [in withdrawing himself and thus] cease to be a drain on public funds?

GANDHIJI: I have understood your question. But it is not possible to set the same limit for all workers. In fact, each one of them should put in as much labour as he can. Let him earn whatever wages he can, and supplement the deficit from the funds of the Sangh. If his needs are not so great that it would be disturbing to others when they know about them, he should not hesitate to meet them from the Sangh. I cannot set any limit. I would not set any limit if the management were in my hands. I do not also wish to determine which type of work should be regarded as body-labour. I can only say that writing a book is not body-labour.

The third question—a very difficult one—relates to the family. Members should help the President in solving this problem. And the President also should be alert in the matter. We have changed our way of life. We have given up the old tradition. Nevertheless, we are born in the cities. We have got our parents, wives and children. They have been all brought up in the old tradition. They have not changed their way of living. We wonder what right we have to compel them to accept the way of life we have accepted. And we want to educate our children in the old method which we have discarded. That is the reason why the workers are worried about the future of their children. They wonder if they would be able to educate their children so as to make them lawyers or doctors. On the one hand, a member of the Sangh lives in poverty and on the other he feels that his duty to his wife and children is different from what he has accepted for himself. He believes that sacrifice is his dharma but not his family's. Renunciation is regarded as a duty in old age. At the root of this idea is the traditional Hindu sentiment that we should renounce the world in old age. That is why we want to educate our children in the old way. But we have given up the belief that renunciation is a duty only of old age, not imperative for youth. We have accepted it as our duty, even in youth, to renounce all pleasures and serve the country. If we believe that sacrifice is man's dharma and that our pleasures should be consistent with the dharma of renunciation, then it becomes our duty to recognize the appropriateness of this dharma for our wives and children as well. If they insist on having more than this, let us tell them that we can give them only this much, that we can give them only the food that we ourselves eat; that what we consider proper for ourselves, we consider proper for them too. What more could be done? Right from my South Africa days I have adhered to this ideal. There is nothing wrong in wanting to reduce one's income. And any ideal which is right for us is also right for our children. All problems would be easily solved if we accept this. But the conflict arises when we believe that our wives and children have a different dharma to follow. We must go as far along this path as possible. If, out of an impulse, we have gone too far, there should be no hesitation in retracing our steps. The Sangh should carry on with whatever means it may be having. Let us keep an eye on our resources and fix the maximum limit. But, in doing this, we shall have to look to the country as well. We are bound to be affected by whatever may be happening in the country. And it is our goal to take the country along with us. We must always try to pursue our activities taking the country with us. I cannot lay down any rule in such matters. These are matters concerning the individual and they depend on his sincerity. The highest limit of Rs. 75 has been set. Whether or not that amount should be drawn is a matter for individual decision.

JAMNALALJI: But, from the point of view of an organization, it becomes necessary to make some rules. It would not be a good rule that the organization should give what an individual considers proper to demand. One who is engaged in public work should also think of one's market value.

g. I think from the public viewpoint it is difficult to clarify the matter any further. A person's market value may be Rs. 25 merely because he knows only Marathi and Sanskrit and is ignorant of English. But why should we put his value merely at Rs. 25? Take the example of a woman spinner. She would not earn even a pice in the market. But we have decided to pay her three annas. The question of market value arises in the case of a lawyer or a doctor. He charges whatever fee he desires. But we should not make such distinctions. We may make some distinction if the lowness of one's wages is due to one's special quality. For instance, if the needs of Gajanan are fewer than those of Mirabehn, he has no need to take as much as Mirabehn. If a person who is a B.A. LL.B. and another with a knowledge of Marathi-Sanskrit have similar functions to perform, they should be valued at the same rate.

j. But, if a person who can earn only Rs. 25 outside can get Rs. 40 from the Sangh, he would remain with the Sangh merely because of the temptation to get Rs. 40 even at the cost of degrading his soul.

g. That is correct. But it depends on the firmness of the organizers of the Sangh; if there were any such person in the Sangh, they should convey it to him that he does not possess the abilities he was supposed to possess. But take the example of Ravishankerbhai. He may not have any market value but he is a great worker.

j. What would be the correct policy with regard to the education of children and medical treatment?

g. The education of the boys certainly deserves our consideration. I have already said that the dharma which is proper for us should also be considered proper for our families. The children should not be converted to another dharma. If I have considered it my dharma to maintain myself through body-labour, it would be as good as converting my son to another dharma if I try to make him a barrister. I can only give him training in body-labour. Along with this, I should give my children whatever education I can within the income limits I have set for myself.

1 Ravishankar M. Raval

Let me now come to the point of medical treatment. Take the example of Timmappa. It is true that once we have gone to the villages, we should adjust our whole life accordingly. But we must also look to the results of our experiments. What was the result of Timmappa's not taking milk for a few days? He had to spend on railway fare to go to Bombay. He had to be under obligation to a doctor. But even that was a mistake. When we go to a village and live in poverty, we must avail ourselves only of such medical facilities as the poor villagers can command for maintaining their health. Even if you tell me that I do not follow this precept myself, I cannot conceal my ideal, though I may accept the charge. He who remains continuously ill should send in his resignation.

RAJENDRA BABU: Why do you stress so much the condition of the worker maintaining himself by body-labour? This would leave little time for service. It may be all right to set an example to the people but setting an example is not enough. The need for advice and consultation cannot be ruled out. A worker's usefulness is very much reduced by overmuch insistence on physical labour.

This involves the question of reforming the entire Indian society. Every human being should maintain himself only through physical labour. I consider it a divine law. That is the reason why I have fixed that ideal. Now, the question is about intellectual development. Yes, it is a relevant question. But, if I could have power over the world, I would make physical labour compulsory for everybody. Exceptions would have to be made even here, for example, in favour of sannyasis and such others. People would themselves make the means of livelihood available to them. Whether you call it society or people or State, the meaning is the same. I am not making any new or original point. Ruskin, in his Unto This Last (translated by me as Sarvodaya) has said the same thing. Our Shastras also stress the same point. It may not be clearly mentioned, but it is there by implication. I am not well-versed in the Shastras. Vinobaji and Kakasaheb can talk with authority citing references from the Shastras. But I found the point clearly expounded in Unto This Last.

1 Vide "Sarvodaya [-1] ", 16-5-1908; [II], 23-5-1908; [III], 30-5-1908; [IV], 6-6-1908; [V], 13-6-1908; [VI], 20-6-1908; [VII], 27-6-1908; [VIII], 4-7-1908; [IX], 18-7-1908. and that very night I transformed my life. The gist of Ruskin's argument is that a doctor or a lawyer should take the same wages as a labourer.

R. What should the present members do to pursue that ideal?

g. All the present members have this ideal before them. But in the pursuit of that ideal they may follow some honest occupation or take their wages from the Sangh. But the Sangh should give wages only to those whose services it values. It should not give the wages as a favour. The Sangh should not make anyone dependent on it. This Sangh is not to produce parasites. It may become dependent on them by taking the maximum work from them.

DEVSHARMAJI: Is not the limit of Rs. 75 too high?

g. All the better if it could be brought down. As for me I have decided upon Rs. 15 as the limit. you may lower it from Rs. 75 to Rs. 50 if you wish. But it does not seem likely.

[From Hindi]
Gandhi Seva Sanghke Dwitiya Adhiveshan (Savli) ka Vivaran, pp. 32-6

327. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

March 3, 1936

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

Having obtained some dispensation from medical friends, I am able to write this to you. I hope to reach Delhi on 8th. I hope you will prevent people from coming to the station. I am not in a fit state to face crowds and cut my way through them. I should love quietly to be taken to Birla's new Harijan Home.

This must—could—have been written by Mahadev. I have taken up this letter to tell you that as soon as I received your great book on regeneration, I began to read it and finished it the day following. I have called it great because it is evidence of much research and great labour. There is hardly a superfluous word in it.

But as I was reading it, I asked myself, “Does this book take mankind upward? Is it in need of that kind of regeneration? What is revival of youth worth if you cannot be sure of persistent physical existence for two consecutive seconds?”

1 Regeneration in Man
Is mere physical restoration the end of true medical science? I wonder!
I asked myself these questions, because you were the author of the book I have ever known you as a seeker of God. When you can spare a few moments, I would like to know from you how this form of regeneration harmonizes with a search after God.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

328. LETTER TO P. M. NAIDU

March 3, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. I attach no value to my son's letter of recantation, and if the job he has received is the price for his recantation, it is a premium put upon sin. As my son is continuously under the subtle influence of drink he has become incapable of coherent thinking or constancy to his words. Nevertheless, if he is faithful in the performance of the job given to him, it is so much to the good. I can only hope that he only appreciates the extraordinary kindness that has been shown to him by you and others and that he makes good use of the money he is receiving.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. G.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

329. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

SAVLI,

March 3, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter this morning. I read it immediately after having my meal, had a few rounds and am now writing this reply at 8.30.
I tore up your letter soon after reading it. What was so confidential that you had to doubly reassure yourself? Indeed, there was nothing private at all. And how could you have so private a thing as that? I shall, however, carry out your wish so long as you mark your letter confidential and ask me to tear it up. Your going has of course lessened my anxiety because the going meant following the law of truth, and not to go would have been, I feared, its violation. But that had no relation to the blood pressure, which had already been going down and so went down by itself. I was not so much worried about your staying on, as I knew all the time that you would at last do the right thing only, and you did so quite promptly. As for the blood-pressure, however, things will go on as they have been going. It had reached 188/110 at Wardha and once it went up to as high as 212/120, but the same day again it fell to 188/108. I don't know what it now is. It cannot, therefore, be said at all that the blood-pressure went down because of your going. You may come when you can, after staying there as long as you have the duty to stay on. Happiness ever goes with dharma. And there alone lies peace of mind. Never have any doubt that there can be no happiness in the violation of dharma.

1 As Harilal had threatened to embrace Islam or Christianity if he was not provided with a job, the addressee, a lawyer, secured him one in the Nagpur Municipality. The former, however, gave it up and secretly embraced Islam on May 29, 1936. Vide also, “Statement to the Press”, 2-6-1936

Why do you want to be exempted from taking milk? Your good lies only in taking it. Of course, you have freedom to reduce its quantity when you cannot digest four lb. of it. There will be no difficulty in digesting four lb. of milk as long as you have regular exercise and sleep. As for fruit, take what is easily to be had. It will be good if Jayaprakash follows the same diet as yours.

Keep your diary day after day. I follow your point about studies. You may do what you can. Study Hindi grammar. Send for anything you need from here. I shall leave here on the 6th, hoping to reach Delhi on the 8th. I shall be spending at least a fortnight there.

You must have written, I think, to Swaruprani and others about Kamala. Ba is in Bombay, Rajaji, who has gone to Bombay, may perhaps come here.

We have a fairly good gathering here. The weather is fair and they see that I get good peace and rest.

It seems one of your letters has been lost in transit. I have noted that. I know it is unlikely that you would avoid writing out of laziness. The fear is you might grow melancholy, but you ought not to under any circumstances. Doesn't Mother Gita teach us to endure cheerfully the situation that we happen to be in?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3458
330. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING–III

SAVLI,
March 3, 1936

Ramnarayanji¹ has passed on a letter to the President. He showed it to me, and I read it too. Then I wished to know what this committee² for Gandhian thought was, who were the persons constituting it, what were its powers and so on. Then I was informed about all that happened yesterday. I was told at the same time that this committee was not a body authorized by this session. This session does not function by passing resolutions. When the occasion arose, a suggestion was made, and then those who favoured the suggestion formed a committee. At first I felt that I should not involve myself in this matter. I felt also that since I had not been able to be present at the discussion, I was not entitled to express any opinion. Nevertheless, I do have an opinion on the subject and I consider it my duty to express it even if it should be considered an impertinence on my part. I wish to make clear to the committee its scope. If it undertakes any work, it should only be one of collecting my thoughts and beliefs. If it does anything more, I am afraid the misgivings³ expressed by Ramnarayanji are bound to come true.

I have conceived no such thing as Gandhism. I am not an exponent of any sect. I never claimed to have originated any philosophy. Nor am I endeavoring to do so. Several people said to me that I should write a smrīti of Gandhian thought. I told them that I could not presume to vie with the ancient law-givers. I have no such plans. The right to codify my thoughts cannot belong to me. Whatever is lasting will take shape after I am gone. Without any elaborate scheme I have simply tried in my own way to apply the eternal Principles of truth and non-violence to our daily life and problems. Like a child I did whatever occurred to me on the spur of the moment during the course of events.

¹ Ramnarayan Chowdhary
² It was proposed that a committee for Gandhian thought be formed with D. B. Kalelkar, as President and the following members: Shankar Tryambak Dharmadhikari, Mahadev Desai, Swami Anand, Kishorelal Mashruwala, Rangarao R. Diwakar, Haribhau Upadhyaya, Balubhai Mehta, Devsharma ‘Abhay’, Rajendra Prasad, Shankarrao Deo, Raghunath Shridhar Dhotre, Satis Chandra Das Gupta and Sitaram Purushottam Patwardhan.
³ Namely: (1) Gandhism would end up by becoming one more sect. (2) It would give rise to more blind faith and intellectual dependence. (3) Differences would crop up among the Gandhians themselves with regard to the interpretation of Gandhian thought. (4) The importance of practice would decrease and undue importance would come to be attached to mere thought. (5) The evolution of Gandhian thought would slacken. (6) Gandhism would assume the form of a dogma and breed hypocrisy. (7) The bad habit of reading and writing will grow and inclination to do service would go down. (8) It would also increase Gandhiji's difficulty in giving decisions on doubtful points.

Then I realized that what I was doing were experiments in truth. In doing so I have sometimes erred and learnt by my errors. Life has thus become for me a series of experiments in truth. In my pursuit of truth I came across the method of non-violence. By instinct I have been a votary of truth, but not non-violent. As the Muni Jinavijayaji once rightly observed, I was all for truth and was capable of sacrificing non-violence for the sake of truth. I confessed to him that it was true. For me “there was no dharma higher than truth” and “no dharma higher than the supreme duty of non-violence.” The word dharma in my opinion has different connotations as used in the two statements. In other words it means that there cannot be an ideal higher then truth and there cannot be any duty higher than non-violence. A man can pursue truth only by constantly adhering to this duty. There is no other means for the pursuit of truth. For the sake of truth one should not hesitate even to witness the ruin of one’s country. One may even leave one’s country. Paul Richard has severely criticized me in this regard. He had pointed out the difference between my ideas and those of Manusmriti. I do not regard it as dharma to have to resort to untruth either for the sake of argument or to protect the cow. This statement is correct. However, I do not think this is a subject which can be discussed academically.

Well, all my philosophy, if it may be called by that pretentious name, is contained in what I have said. You will not call it Gandhism; there is no ism about it. And no elaborate literature is needed about it. All that I have written is but a description of whatever I have done. And my actions alone are the greatest exposition of truth and non-violence. Those who believe in these can propagate them only by following them in practice. They call for no books. My work is there for them to emulate. But it may be said that this, too, is not permanent.

---

1 Code
2 Mahabharata. Adiparvan, XI. 13 and Shantiparvan, CLXII. 24
A caustic critic once observed that the spinning-wheel would be so discredited that when I died the wheels would serve to make the funeral pyre. That, however, has not shaken my faith in the spinning-wheel. I will not despair even if you all forsook me. My faith will grow all the more. Indeed, I have never despaired nor have I had to repent. I do not regret the long struggle that I have put up nor the amount of money and the number of lives lost. Whenever I went to the villages I have returned with my vessel full of hope. But how can I convince the world that one cannot communicate this confidence with the help of books? Silent work alone can provide it. Hence no one should yield to the weakness that he would be helpless if the committee did not supply literature. The workers complain that pundits from the government and other circles go to the villagers and criticize our ideas. They misguide the people. What can we do, then, since we do not have their superior knowledge?

It is a real difficulty. But where is the need for books? Tell the villagers that you are there in their midst to serve them with your wheels, your brooms and buckets. Let them accept your service if they will. Must we then, you will ask, work away in silence, without bothering about our critics? Yes; I should not mind even your taking a vow of silence. Write if you feel you cannot do without it. But let not your real work suffer because you are busy writing books.

This, however, is the ideal. This committee was not so imperative. But now that it has come into being it will not be inconsistent with our work. There are no grounds for Ramnarayanji’s misgivings. All we need is a little vigilance. I can understand your desire for some authoritative publications explaining the things we are striving to do. These you may have without entering into a controversy. The committee should function quietly without much ado. It will only spread poison, if it sets about to work with pomp and show. And of course it shall have to be self-supporting.

I should be satisfied if your Sangh became a register of workers who have complete faith in all activities which are a concrete expression of truth and non-violence, or rather simply of non-violence (for the practice of non-violence is impossible without acceptance of truth). Thus let no member say that he believes in truth and non-violence, but does not believe in handicrafts or khadi and service of the villagers therethrough, or that he believes in truth and non-violence but does not believe in Hindu-Muslim unity, or in the removal of untouchability. If your meet such a one you may tell him that it is possible that he is a believer in truth and non-violence according to his own conception, but not according to Gandhiji's conception of them, and that he cannot therefore be a member of the Sangh. Beyond this, your Sangh has no credal, regional or institutional limitations. Your members may belong to any caste or creed, any race or nation.

I agree with the President regarding this.¹

There is no need to repeat that everyone should follow the ideal of celibacy. Of course it is not possible to ride two horses at a time. Those who are not married or, though married, are living like unmarried ones can serve better. But it is no possible to have a rigid rule regarding this. Moreover, there is no need for it. It is good if we get workers who do not wish to marry but if tomorrow Gajanan or Surendra wants to get married, he can do so and still remain a member of the Sangh. If their expenses increase they can take them from the Sangh. It is a personal question. Hypocrisy and unchastity will creep in if we form a rule for it.

Some of the shortcomings shown by the President are shortcomings of the whole of India. It is necessary for us to be alert about them. Those who are worshippers of truth and non-violence and want to serve India and humanity cannot afford to be lazy. Those who waste time waste truth, non-violence and service as well. This applies to cleanliness, too. If we are alert, do not waste time and observe cleanliness, we will not be lacking in knowledge. What we call lack of knowledge is actually lack of concentration. Mother Gita says that one who worships with faith will automatically gain knowledge.²

The President has shown three angles.³ Possession is really mental. I have a watch, a rope and an undergarment. I am possessive, ¹ Kishorelal Mashruwala had said that the Sangh would comprise workers who would help the various institutions in times of need. It would propagate Gandhiji's principles and would be ready to form a band of worker for a good cause. It would be a trustee of the property of the various institutions.

² Bhagavad Gita, iv. 39.

³ The President had suggested that a limit should be fixed regarding (1) the amount of balance an institution may have at the end of a year; (2) donations it may receive and (3) the property of worker may acquire in the name of the institution. if I feel unhappy without them. A person can keep a large blanket if he needs one; if he is not distressed when it is lost he is not possessive.

What the President has said\(^1\) is enough. There is no need to say more.\(^2\)

I see that there is a tendency to believe that these programmes are mutually exclusive or antagonistic. Much of our misunderstanding arises out of this belief. The worker in the constructive field looks down upon the political programme and \textit{vice versa}. But really there is no such opposition. I had thought that it was clear by now to every worker that there was no absolute division between the so-called political and the so-called constructive programmes. In our method of work there are no watertight compartments. Nevertheless I do maintain that for the sake of efficiency it is necessary for one to confine oneself to one item at a time or such items as conveniently run together. The governor of the Bank of England exercises considerable influence on the politics of England, but he never busies himself with what are called active politics. He has hardly the time to follow the debates in the House of Commons. But he is at least as important a member in the English public life as, say, a noted member of the House of Commons. As a general rule I would suggest that the members of the Sangh should occupy themselves with work which brings no kudos and which is ordinarily not liked by workers.

We have different programmes, such as the Spinners' Association, the Harijan sevak Sangh, the Village Industries Association and \textit{goseva}, which I have not yet placed before you. But one connected with \textit{goseva} can also become a member of the Sangh. Those who wish may even take part in more than one activity. It is a matter of one's capacity. As for me, I can attend to other things even as I work for the Charkha Sangh Everybody cannot do the same. For example, take the Parliamentary Board\(^3\). Even this I have brought into being. But would I ever join it? Today I cannot even think of entering the Legislatures. However, it is not a matter of principle. We must do whatever may be necessary at a given time. And tomorrow, if I deem it

---

\(^1\) That a satyagrahi should be firm about one thing: He should consider it his duty to help the oppressed and raise them, make them full of life and spirit. He should resist untruth under any circumstances in spite of his superior's anger.

\(^2\) Mahadev Desai here reports: "One of the questions . . . was about the compatibility or otherwise of the constructive with the political programme."

\(^3\) Formed in May 1934, with M.A. Ansari as President
It was I who started the civil disobedience movement. But I instructed the Hindi propaganda workers in South India that they should not court imprisonment, as the work would suffer. Only Anna (Shri Harihar Sharma) from among them went to jail and that, too, with my permission. I had told Shankerlal [Banker] that the work of the Spinners' Association was as valuable as courting of imprisonment by thousands of men. Except for a few days in the beginning, jail-going became another name for taking rest. Those who remained outside faced a number of hardships and those who had gone to jail returned strong and sturdy. Once they went in, they violently defied the jail rules. What good did such people do by going to jail? It is a mistake to make a distinction between the constructive and the political programmes. In my opinion, political work also is constructive work. I once wrote in Young India that even civil disobedience was constructive work according to me. But from the point of view of the world, it may be described as destructive. In reality, they are two branches of satyagraha, and hence are akin. One cannot be complete without the other. But some people wonder how goseva, removal of untouchability or propagation of Hindi could be called political activities. Would these things bring swaraj? But it is my belief that swaraj cannot be attained without these. Many Congressmen, too, do not have faith in them. It is also our task to inspire such faith in them. These people do not consider these activities political. Hence, they describe them as constructive. A large number of people are ready to take to activities which they regard as political. Hence, we must consciously abide by a particular rule. The whole thing will break down if we do not observe the rule. That is the reason why the work is going on well in Gujarat. Today we have imperfect faith in these things. The plant is tender. We have to tend it with great care. It is my belief that if we could do these four or five things well, swaraj is as good as in our hands. It would also increase our efficiency. I am reminded of an incident. There was some discussion about the constructive programme at a meeting. Sapru¹, Chintamani² and Pal³ were also present there. Chintamani was very critical of the constructive programme. Pal replied to him. He was considered my opponent; but his sharp intellect grasped the thing. Of language he was a master. He explained, much better than I could have done, that with it the prestige of the country would go up. He said we had come across something which would give us the strength that we would not derive from all our other works and all the journals. What he expressed in a beautiful language I conveyed in my uncouth language. My faith in the constructive programme is probably ten times it was then.

¹ T. B. Sapru
² C. Y. Chintamani
³ Bipin Chandra Pal

The work of the Parliamentary Board is also my creation. But, if you wish to go to the Legislatures for this reason, I shall not allow you to do so. Today, I shall send Bhulabhai there. He has faith in that work and he is also capable. What would I do with Satyamurti here? If I have to attain swaraj through music, I would send Khareshastri or Balkoba. And, if your faith in the constructive programme is deep enough, you must do only that work. Such is my faith in goseva. I even dream of the cow. Let us all concentrate on our own work and our own place. Let that be our dharma. And even if another's dharma appears to be best we should understand that it is fraught with danger.

[From Hindi]

Gandhi Seva Sanghke Dwitiya Adhiveshan(Savli)ka Vivaran, pp. 50-4

331. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING–IV

SAVLI,
March 4, 1936

Before replying to the questions I wish to say a few things on my own. I have of course no right to say anything. But it is my habit to express my opinion on whatever I hear. I am no doubt very eager to listen to your discussion. But I have held back my eagerness. Even so, things are conveyed to me by jailor (the Sardar), sometimes lightly and sometimes solemnly. Why have we all gathered here? Why are we wasting our time? I hear that votes were taken on the question of the wages for the members of the Sangh. Four hours were spent in unnecessary arguments over it, although it was self-evident. Where was the need to argue about it? Jamnalalji raised the question,

1 Bhulabhai J. Desai
2 S. Satyamurti
3 Narayan Moreshwar Khare
4 Raised by Jamnalal Bajaj

VOL. 68 : 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935 - 15 MAY, 1936
because he has to find the money. But we must tell him that we do not expect wages. I do not know what Gandhism is. But I do not know the Gandhian teaching. Let us try to carry on our work without money. Where there is non-violence, not even a cowrie is needed. Yes, I was telling you that we are arguing without a concrete resolution. Even this would be all right in a way. Everyone is engrossed in his own work. Where is the need for a resolution? Even so, some resolutions can be necessary. I cannot say what these resolutions should be as I am not able to fully participate in the session. If you cannot think of any resolutions and if there are going to be just arguments, do stop the exercise at once. Or, let some definite programme be formulated. Let something or the other be achieved here. Put back the money that has been spent here. Observe Savli very closely. So many of us who are workers have gathered here and if we do nothing for Savli, it would be a very harsh comment on the session. Mahadev is much pained by this thought. The sad condition as in Savli is to be found everywhere—there is dirt, there is the problem of water, there are quarrels. Let us do our utmost to remedy these things. There was a suggestion that there should be an eight-hour spinning programme one day. But it was voted out. The pretext was the difficulty about obtaining so many charkhas. If so many charkhas were not available, we could have carried on with half the number?

Some could have done carding, while others did the spinning. But leaving aside the charkhas, let us at least clean up the filth in the village. I am reminded of Balasore. The Sanitary Inspector of the town said that, if only he could have 50 men, the local tank could be cleaned. I appealed to the people and 50 men volunteered. Many such tasks are waiting to be done in Savli. You can take up some such work. You have spent Rs. 4,000 on the session. Do some work here worth Rs. 4,000. We have long passed the age of resolutions. So, what new outlook will you take back with you from this session?

The most difficult question is the one of village industries. Then there is the question of health. Yes, let us not talk about the debts of the villagers. Let us not take up that burden. But let us at least improve their health. That, too, is the business of the Congress. But now it is getting late. So I leave this subject here, and come to the other questions.

Q. How can lifelong interest in work be developed among the workers?
A. The Gita has furnished the answer: through constant practice.

Q. Can person who has taken the vow of non-possession become a trustee.

A. Yes, he can. There can be no objection to this on principle. If I have given a different opinion in the case of Vinobaji, there must have been a personal reason.

Q. What is your view about the position Dr. Ambedkar has taken?

A. Had I been in Dr. Ambedkar's place, I would have been as angry. In his position, may be, I would not have been a believer in non-violence. When overcome by anger, a person does whatever comes to his mind. Whatever Dr. Ambedkar does, we must bear it in all humility. Not only that, it would be a service to Harijans. If he really hits us with shoes, we must bear even that. But we should not be afraid of him. There is no need to kiss Dr. Ambedkar's feet to convince him. That would be a disservice. If he and the other Harijans who have no faith in Hinduism embrace another religion, that too would make for our expiation. We deserve such treatment. Our task [now] is to wake up to the situation and purify ourselves. There is no need for flattery. That is why I expressed my sorrow at his announcement and suggested self-purification. I did nothing more.

Q. What are the points of similarity and difference between your point of view and socialism?

A. There are quite a few similarities. I too desire that everything should be considered as belonging to God. I too believe that all wealth belongs to the people. But the difference lies in that the socialists advocate collective effort, whereas I believe that the beginning should be made at once in our individual conduct. If we have such faith, we should dedicate to society at least our own property. One cannot be a socialist so long as one retains even a cowrie for oneself. They want to achieve their aim through legislation. Legislation implies coercion. If they are not saying all these things now, it is because that is not within their power. They are virtuous because they are weak. Socialists, that is Communists, want to use force, but they are helpless. But we are believers in democracy.

---

1 Bhagavad Gita, VI 35
2 This was in reply to a doubt expressed by a member.
Q. What is the difference between your views and those of Pt. Jawaharlalji?

A. We have many differences, and they are well known too. The position as revealed in our correspondence still remains. But in spite of our differences we respect each other and desire to work together as far as possible.

Q. What should be the limits of the worker's individual service?

A. A very fine criterion for this is to be found in the sloka which lays down that for the good of the family the individual may be sacrificed. An individual may be served only as far as it does not hamper service of the society. Suppose that my son is ill, my mother is ill, or my wife is ill, but I am expected to preside over a meeting at Lucknow. In such a situation, I would leave my son, mother and wife in charge of my brother, etc., and go.

Q. Can people who believe in non-violence take unfertilized eggs?

A. It is a personal matter. Those who have no objection can take such eggs. The reason why we should take a neutral attitude on this point is that these days the Hindus' definition of non-violence is confined to the matter of food. I have regarded it as of secondary importance. If you say that we have to do it in order to live, well, strictly speaking, it would be an act of violence to eat even a single morsel. In such things we can have no rules which would be equally applicable to all. I have myself given cod liver oil to some boys in the Ashram. Doctors frequently prescribe alcohol and meat. They have even started prescribing glands. If anybody objects, the Doctors cite the authority of Manu and do not hesitate to tell a lie to save the life of a patient. Throughout the world only a section of Hindus has restrictions about non-vegetarian food on religious grounds. And these are confined to some Vaishyas, Jains and a few Brahmans. Shall we then abandon the Muslims, Parsis, etc.? I have seen many non-vegetarians who believe in non-violence and many vegetarians who believe in violence. Some abstain from non-vegetarian food because 2 Which says: One should sacrifice the individual for the sake of the family, the family for the village and the village for the country; for the sake of atman one should sacrifice the whole world.

---

they do not relish it; it is not in their upbringing. When I took meat out of a sense of duty, I had a bad time of it. Let not the vegetarians feel proud. Non-violence is a unique thing. It is a matter of feeling, not merely of external behaviour.

Q. What should be done to check the increase in births among poor women?

A. Our duty is to explain to them the duty of self-control. Artificial measures would be as good as death. And I do not think the village women will take to these measures. Why, Premabehn herself is a maiden with a mind completely free from passion. On her own she is a votary of brahmacharya. She should work with this faith. Women like her will have quite an impact. We must try to get milk for the village children.

Q. Women may be willing to exercise restraint to keep births in check. But what should be done if men use force?

A. This is a question of a women's true dharma. Premabehn has grasped it fully. I am a worshipper of the satis. But I do not wish to push them down the well. Draupadi has shown what a woman's true dharma is. Even if the husband falls the wife must not. It is pure lechery to stand in the way of a woman when she desires to abstain. If he forces himself on her, it is her duty to make him desist even by slapping him. She should close her door to the lustful husband. She must refuse to be the wife of a sinful husband. We must inculcate such courage in women.

Q. What is the duty of the middle-class women in the matter of birth-control?

A. Whether it be the middle-class or the aristocracy, indulgence is in our hands. But we cannot have control over the consequences. It is not for us to ask whether we shall be successful. Our task is only to teach them the dharma of truth. If the middle class women wish to adopt the latest birth-control measures, we must advise them against it. Self-control alone can be the remedy. Premabehn should place before them her own example.

Q. What should a wife do if the husband has syphilis?

A. In such circumstances not even any birth-control measures can protect the wife. She must regard such a husband as impotent and remarry. But for this women should have sufficient education to be self-reliant.
Q. Like the socialists you also believe that ‘all land belongs to the Lord’. But today one man tills the soil and another exploits him. We want to resolve this conflict of interests with the help of non-violence. And one does have to resort to evil practices if one wants to earn wealth. Under the circumstances, is it not sinful to accept financial help from the rich?

A. All that we can do is to try to understand the principle as fully as possible. But God alone fully observes the [ideal] dharma. We are but imperfect and limited souls. Therefore I do not hesitate to receive money from the rich in spite of my belief that piling up wealth is the opposite of dharma. I do not consider it wrong to accept money in this way because I believe that thereby I only serve the rich and society in general. Up to this point I can also hold my own vis-à-vis the socialist. But I must counter his arguments only with silent service. Those who believe that it is wrong to collect money from the rich should act up to their belief. But for the Sangh it is dharma although it seems the opposite of it. I am crazy about body-labour. It includes everything. “What more need be said for the wise?”

[From Hindi]

Gandhi Seva Sanghke Dwitiya Adhiveshan (Savli) Ka Vivaran. pp. 59-63
332. A LETTER

[On or before March 5, 1936]

I had fully hoped to attend the function but God had willed otherwise. Though the embargo on my movements has been slightly relaxed, I am still under orders not to accept any public engagements. I could go to Delhi, I might as well have gone to Gurukul. I am not going to Delhi to fulfil any engagement but for rest and I hope everyone at the Gurukul will understand my inability and excuse it. I also hope that my inability to attend will not in any way affect the donations and other help that the Gurukul deserves in an ample measure. It had, always had, my blessings. Though I cannot go I am glad Sardar Vallabhbhai is going there. His going is as good as my going, because he goes there on my behalf and fully represents me.

_The Hindu, 5-3-1936_

333. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

SAVLI,

[March 5, 1936]

CHI. PRABHA.

I got your letter, read it and tore it up. I see that you have been going through mental strain. You should, however, remember that happiness and unhappiness are passing fancies of the mind, and know that pain is no pain, the only real pain being unmindful of God. Yes, you may stay or move about with Jayaprakash as long as he wishes and you can serve him in some useful way. Giving him medicine regularly, cooking for him, looking after his personal belongings—all this is service, of course, and so doing you should gain whatever experience you can. You should certainly keep seeming relatives and acquaintances if you go to a place like Patna. Do all such acts with

---

1 According to Mahadev Desai’s telegram dated March 5, 1936, from which this is reproduced, Acharya Devsharma went specially to Savli to persuade Ganhiji to attend the convocation of the Gurukul at Kangri. Presumably this letter was sent through Acharya Devsharma. _Vide_ also “Message to Gurukul Convocation”, before 9-3-1936.

2 From _Bapuna Patro—10: Shri Prabhavatibehne_. p. 78 interest and yet without attachment. I shall of course be pained if you spoil your health. Be careful of your diet. Write to me the experiences you gather.

We shall leave Savli tomorrow. The marriage of Krishnadas¹ was celebrated here today. Both being in every way plain and simple, they had put on nothing more than their usual dress, and there were no presents, etc. I have never seen so simple a wedding as this.

  Blessings from
  BAPU

[PS.]

We shall reach Delhi on the 8th.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3312

334. LETTER TO ANASUYA SARABHAI

March 5, 1936

CHI. ANASUYABEHN ²,

Your letter is worthy of you.

Of course, I do use the flask you gave me and it reminds me of your love. So also the mirror. Do you know where it came from? There has been no occasion to use the razor. The question therefore is one only of future. I am aware that the metal sheets are imported from abroad but the flask is wholly manufactured abroad. For the present the sheets will continue to be imported but the utensils worth crores [of rupees] ought to be made here. If German-silver sheets are no more imported, we should do without them. We should have brass utensils plated with tin or find some other remedy. What I mean is that the thought of the villager should be in our minds when we make any purchases.

  Blessings from
  BAPU

[PS.]

I am leaving Savli tomorrow and expect to reach Delhi on the 8th.

From the Gujarati original: G.N. 11562

¹ Chhaganlal Gandhi's son who was married to Manojna Devi
² Sister of Ambalal Sarabhai and leader of the Ahmedabad labour movement.
335. LETTER TO RAMNARESH TRIPATHI

WARDHA,
March 5, 1936

Bhai Ramnareshji,

I have your letter and the annotated version of Ramacharitmanas, too. Daily for half an hour during these days of rest, I listen to the recitation from the Ramayana. For the last three days I have been reading your book. Apart from reading the passages recited I also started on the preface and I have now progressed on to the biography. I have great faith in your rendering.

Yours,
M. K. Gandhi

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Shri Ramacharitmanas

336. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

SAVLI,
March 5, 1936

Chh. Krishnachandra,

Your letter. You did the right thing. I write a few letters now. I have not noticed the effect you fear from the eating of sour things, but it does occur on giving up milk and ghee. Anyway you can watch the results if you eschew sour foods for a while. For constipation you can experiment with raw garlic weighing up to a tola and taken with the meals. I have personal experience of its great benefit. Continue with the neem leaves; no harm can possibly result from it.

What is your routine these days?
I expect to reach Delhi on the 8th instant.

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4284
For the past two days I have been trying to get acquainted with each one of you. But I have failed. I had a desire to meet every one of you and resolve your doubts. That would have satisfied you as well as me. I have grown rather fond of meeting people individually. But I found I should overcome this temptation if I wanted to work. You exercised restraint and thus put a check on this fondness. None of you sought to meet me and with great reluctance I gave up my desire.

I had to restrain myself a great deal today. It pained me that I could not say anything at the wedding of Krishnadas. I did not address even a few words to the newly-married couple. Some day one will have to suffer even physical separation. Then why should we not prepare ourselves for it right from now on? The relationship between you and me should be so lasting that it would not be affected by physical separation.

Let me now reply to Prabhudas Gandhi’s questions. He has asked me how we can become one with the poor. This means that he has been trying, but has not succeeded so far. The conclusion to be drawn is that it is only with difficulty that such a state can be attained. We have lived on urban life, and we still have a lingering desire for that life. On the other hand, the desire to serve the villages is growing.

I cannot prescribe any method for becoming one with the people. Nor do I have one. If Vinoba has suggested something, I am not aware of it. One cannot say to what extent oneness with the poor in a broad sense is possible. Some may be able to attain it in full, and some partially and some not at all throughout their life. But we must attain that oneness at any rate in our own hearts. Once the heart has begun to experience such oneness, the mind would automatically follow, and we would gradually progress in that direction. Whether or not we succeed is in the hands of God. What really matters is the effort.

His second question is whether we should make it a rule that Rs. 4 out of Rs. 15 should be sent direct to some poor person every month. It is not up to me to make such a rule. Nor is it necessary. Even after giving away that amount it cannot be said oneness would have been established between us. An external act is no proof of the inner reality. If any such rule were to be enforced by the State, people would seek to evade it.¹

---

1 Vinoba Bhave had replied to these questions on the previous day.

Q. So long as we do not put an end to economic exploitation of our rural masses and bring them concrete financial gain, they will continue to be indifferent towards us. . . . How can we help them?

A. We face all these difficulties not because the village people do not understand us, but because we are not able to understand them. It is a pity. Even I have not been able to explain my ideas fully. Our work has just begun. It is not even a year since it started. We do not have enough experience to serve the people. I myself have not been able to settle down in a village so far. But I have done some research. In South Africa I lived in the midst of many villagers and I have experienced their difficulties. I also know from experience that we have not yet thought about the reasons why we have not been able to inspire confidence among the villagers. We must discover these reasons. We are working and spending money in the hope that the villagers will accept what we say. When we understand these people they, too, will cling to us. Till then, let us scavenge for them, distribute some medicines and teach them the laws of sanitation. Let us not go there as physicians. Let us be satisfied with giving the medicines which they accept. Let us not expect any further rewards. Let us not be worried whether or not we give financial help, whether or not they are indifferent. I have repeatedly told the village workers that they should not feel disappointed. Have they not turned themselves into sweepers? And a sweeper is satisfied even with the left-overs. Let us also go to them with such an attitude. If they abuse us, let us bear it in silence. If they beat us, let us bear that also. It is not that they are not coming forward because their economic conditions are not good. They would not come even if you offered them money. They would take the money and also expect us to do the scavenging for them. That is all. Let us work so that the sick are given medicines. Let the people defecate wherever they choose. Let us not even ask them to avoid a particular place or go elsewhere. But let us go on cleaning up without a word. That is non-violence. Protecting their health, showing them the way and going on cleaning up is the only path we have to follow.

¹ Gandhiji then replied to the questions asked by Swami Anand.
Some day they are bound to understand. If this does not work, then there is no such thing as non-violence.

Q. Is it or is it not necessary to do something more than this?

A. We may if we can. But it is not necessary to connect the two. They are two independent services. Even if we cannot take up the service that would bring them economic benefits, let us at least take up the first one. And let us not worry if we can do nothing more.

Q. Can a village worker, with a view to making consumer articles available to the villagers at low prices, run a shop and sell betel leaves, bidis, tobacco, fish, tea, etc.?

A. We can resort to every means to put an extra pice into the villagers' pockets. But whether or not a village worker can open a shop depends on his own capacity and resourcefulness. I cannot lay down any hard and fast rule as to the articles a village worker may have in his shop. Let each worker fix a limit for himself in accordance with his own ability. He will have to compete with the village shopkeepers and also consider the habits of the villagers. If I go to the villages and find that the people cannot do without tobacco and bidis, I would sell these, too, even though I consider tobacco worse than alcohol. A habit that has been entrenched for thousands of years cannot go in a day. My work has not been directed towards making people give up smoking. Ideal is one thing, practice is another and what other people can do is yet another.

Q. Then would you sell liquor also?

A. No. I would not sell liquor. I would not give them something which they hate and which even the drink addicts consider evil. But if I went to England and found that I could not rid people of this habit, I would sell liquor. And if there are people who eat meat or fish and want them clean, I would supply these, too, with my own hands.

Let my words not be taken literally and misinterpreted. I shall certainly try to make people give up things which are considered bad. But I would give them those things till I could persuade them to give them up and continue with my work. It is very difficult to run a shop. A resourceful man like Lakshmidas can do much. The path of village organization is arduous. There is no royal road. He who serves sincerely will find the right way.
Q. Should we not use bullock-carts instead of motor-lorries to transport the goods made or produced in the villages?

A. This is a ticklish question. I have no answer to it which can touch your heart. I shall only say that I am helpless. Motor-vehicles are invading the villages day after day. The question involved is that of service of the cow. We must continue our efforts in good faith. Shall I lay down the principle? If we do not try to understand aright this question of service to the cow we might start eating beef. Even today if the doctor advises, people would not mind taking beef as medicine. You cannot carry on with buffalo's milk. I have seen beef being consumed in the name of medicine even in Vaishanva families. But let us remember that if the cow perishes, we shall perish, too. The motor-car has been invading the villages. If this goes on, India will become another South Africa. I do not favour small holdings. But at the same time I do not wish to see that any single individual should own twenty or twenty-five thousand acres of land. Today service to the cow is more expensive than a motor-vehicle. But this question is similar to the question of khadi. I have sold khadi cloth worth two annas a yard at 17 annas a yard. I am talking of an ideal. Our duty is to carry on work with faith in our heart.

RAJENDRA PRASAD: But is it a proven fact that it is cheaper to use a motor-car?

A. Absolutely not. The question of expensive or inexpensive is not correct. The law of demand and supply is not a human law, it is a devilish law.

Q. Would it be proper, in the light of your definition of swadeshi, to procure for Bombay rice from Ahmedabad or wheat from Khandwa? Will it not be proper to fix a ceiling on profit in respect of every commodity?

A. Limits should be fixed both as to the quantum of profit and the distance. Let us not get all our rice from Bombay. Sitarama Sastri sends rice to Bombay. In fact, it should be [sold] in Guntur District. The proper thing would be to utilize rice where it is grown. My definition of swadeshi is old but it is valid. Only by following it can we evolve a new kind of economics. True economics must follow ethics. Even if we fail in this we shall have succeeded.

Q. The village workers employ middle-men instead of taking the help of the villagers. Is this proper?

A. There should be direct dealings as far as possible.

¹ The source has ‘sent’.
Q. Hand-pounded rice, hand-ground flour, oil, etc., can be made in cities also. Would you call them village industries?

A. Today we seem to be going in the wrong direction in the name of dietary reform. There is not enough milk in the villages. So Dr. Tilak recommends that milk powder should be brought from Bombay. It is a terrible thing. We must never do it. We must stop the exploitation of villages by all possible means. We must persuade the villagers not to sell milk.

[From Hindi]

Gandhi Seva Sanghke Dwitiya Adhiveshan (Savli) ka Vivaran, pp. 67-70

338. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING—VI

SAVLI
March 6, 1936

Q. With regard to the policy adopted by the Sangh last year under your advice on the question of the States, has not the time come, according to you, when the Sangh should concentrate more on the work in the States and make concerted efforts in the direction?

A. I have forgotten what I had agreed to. But I am quite clear about my attitude on the subject. We should no doubt make concerted efforts in the matter. But how can I say what kind of efforts should be considered concerted? Trying to do well what can be done through the State should be considered concerted efforts.

Q. Would you adopt the same policy of co-operation even in the States where Englishmen or their people have been appointed Prime Ministers, army commanders, police officials, etc., and where the administration is carried on in a large measure along British lines?

A. There can be no change in our policy even if the entire staff of the States consists of Englishmen. I can well imagine the difficulties that would arise in such a situation. But there could be no solution to it. Even if all the officials were Englishmen the administration could still be carried on in the name of the State.

Q. Is there now any change in your opinion that there should be no British interference in the affairs of the States? If not, why did you allow Shri Manibhai and Shri Jamnalalji to act as they did?

1 Gandhiji first replied to the remaining questions from Swami Anand and then to those put by Ramnarayan Chaudhari in regard to the States.
A. Whatever Shri Jamnalalji and Shri Manilalji have done has been with my consent. But my policy in that matter is the same as it was. Through a policy I arrive at a principle; but I do not wish to restrict the field of its operation. Even in my dreams I do not wish for British interference. But those who wish for such interference under exceptional circumstances have fixed their own limits. Everyone has a right to fix his own limit; and if somebody comes to consult me, I can even fix the limit for him keeping in mind the individual concerned. Someone asked me if, under the same circumstances, another person could do what Shri Jamnalalji was doing. I told him to come to me with Jamnalalji and then I would answer. Only when a person has full understanding of the situation, can he fix the limit after deciding the extent to which the principle can be applied in the given situation. His conduct cannot serve as an example to others. The qualification of the person also to be considered. I can say that in letting Jamnalalji or Manilalji go it was not my intention to seek interference. But even supposing that the principle was set aside, it should be attributed to my failing rather than made a precedent. He who is firm must adhere to the principle.

Violent and non-violent activities are going on side by side. God is their witness. People see only the effects. We shall see the causes. The way I have been practising non-violence appears to be a novel thing. The Jains and the Buddhists also experimented in non-violence. But that non-violence has become restricted to diet. Political and social activities also are inspired by both violent and non-violent forces. On the surface they do not appear to be different. But the difference lies in their motivation. There would be no trouble if we remember this point in everything we do. And there would be no difficulties.

Q. Can newspapers concerned only with the problems of the States be run in accordance with your policy?

A. I am afraid such newspapers are not run in accordance with my policy. But how can I convince those whose point of view is altogether different? In my view, there is no need to have different newspapers for the States. Our work will not be done through newspapers. My advice would be that we work in silence. Let us do whatever the officials of the States permit us to do. If we cannot work like this, let us withdraw. We will achieve in the States what we achieve in British India. It is like the rule of three. The States' people are slaves. of slaves. Those who work according to my idea cannot be slaves. But those who follow the path of non-violence must proceed after great thought. Whatever we may be able to do there must be done in such a manner that no British interference would be possible at all. India will not attain swaraj through agitation carried on in the States. Maulana Abul Kalam Azad once said that the whole country was a gurudwara. That very moment it occurred to me that the whole country was a prison. And the States are doubly so. The facilities available in the States are those available in a jail.

I wish to tell you a couple of things. I spoke without authority earlier, I shall speak without authority now also. I heard with a sense of pain that the committee for Gandhian thought\(^1\) which had been formed has ceased to exist. Since it had not come into existence as a result of any resolution of the Sangh but voluntarily, it was within its right to wind itself up. But I hear that the committee has broken up because I was not in favour of it. But I could have been consulted. I was just here. If anybody says that I desire this and I desire that, do not believe it. It is my misfortune that my words can be interpreted in two or more ways. I do try to speak and write a language from which only one meaning can be drawn. But language is an imperfect instrument. And then I am no master of language. Where shall I find the power to put down in writing all that is in my mind? My words affect different people in different ways. I did not mean to say that you should not propagate my ideas. I do not believe it is [your] duty to explain my views. But I do have the vanity to believe that my ideas are right. And because of this I am also keen on explaining them to my colleagues. I possess the faculty of speech also. And that necessarily results in some propaganda. I also wish that my ideas are propagated. But I had a feeling that you were being pretentious. I wanted to avoid it. It was not that I did not want the committee to be formed. The committee could have been formed, but it should have been as I wanted it to be. I am bound to express my views so long as I am alive. What then is the harm in forming such a committee? This committee can be instrumental in propagating my thoughts and my words. So I wish the committee is formed again and functions within its limits. Is it ever possible that any work with which Kakasaheb is associated would be considered worthless by me? I had no apprehension that the committee would do any wrong. But why should I not caution you? And even if one believes that I wanted to undo the work of the committee, why did other members join me in undoing the work and why did it become necessary for Kakasaheb to carry it all on his own?

\(^1\) Vide “Speech at Gandhi Seva Sangh Meeting-III”.

280 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

MAHADEV DESAI: Who gave you the information that the committee had broken up? It has only been adjourned. It can become active any time it is desired.

A. I am making these observations from something that I have heard. It is a happy thing if it has not broken up. Kakasaheb gave me the assurance that he was to do the work all by himself. Now the committee should give him its co-operation.

Another thing which I want to say relates to the functioning of the Sangh. When I said that every worker of the Sangh should work with the pickaxe during the day and at night there should be discussion for some two or three hours, I did not mean that the Sangh should be wound up. You are so many and you are also efficient; I would, therefore, say nothing on such an occasion. I am old and close to death. My memory also has grown weak. Hence, I say whatever I can remember. What I said has been only to encourage you in your work, and your progress. So do not think I want to criticize, rather think that I want to explain something to you. Try to learn something new from it. The Sangh is proceeding on right lines today. I am not so completely deprived of my reasoning as to suggest its winding up at such a time.

There is a new point, but I shall deal with it if there is any time left. I shall speak about the next session. Let the next session be held at a place which is not so far away from a railway station that one cannot reach there either on foot or by a bullock-cart. As for me it does not matter if the place is even fifty miles away. But then the condition should be that everyone should walk to the place. The luggage too should be taken in a bullock-cart, not a motor-car. If some handicapped persons like me do not come, let them stay away. But I shall definitely come. You may provide for me a bullock-cart or carry me on your shoulders. I shall not fight shy of either. We have to go and put that village into shape. Let us select areas where there is no doctor or engineer. If there is paucity of water, let us dig wells. If there are no cows there, let us get cows for them. I would even insist that we should drink only cow's milk. Let us not give up milk on any account. If I pour out my heart to you about goseva, I could make you cry and break down myself. My heart is so full of sorrow.
I would insist that we should have only cows. How can we serve India if we cannot insist even on this much? When one calls me obstinate I feel that I have some kind of insistence. And all that I insist upon is that we should not take buffalo's milk but only cow's milk and should never give up milk. I shall be content even to die while insisting on it. Let us find out a village where cow's milk will be available, where it would be possible to procure green vegetables, pure water, etc., and start our preparations right from now on. Let us not be worried if the place is far away. We shall serve the people living nearby and get new experiences every moment. I have placed before you what according to me is the most correct point of view. If the session is to be held, let us start the preparations right from today. Let us make a close study of the village. We have been passing through a long period of degradation. We have no strength to raise ourselves. All the work of the Congress is not being carried on according to my wishes. When I say this, I am not criticizing the Congress. But will they ever hold the Congress session in an obscure place?

Even if we can get eleven months to make our preparations for the next session it would not be too long. The place should provide enough work for the workers. If there is dearth of cows we should bring some from the surrounding areas. We should look after these cows while we are there and if the people of the village are prepared to keep them we may leave these cows with them. Otherwise we should take them back.

If we work in this manner we shall derive greater benefit than from a long speech. I am saying all this from the point of view of the purest ideal. This is not a matter of money. It is a matter of intelligence. The session is to be held twelve months hence. I can invite you to Segaon. But I am not allowed to do so. Whoever desires to invite the session, must do so within a month. We ourselves must perform the functions of the doctor, engineer, mason, carpenter, etc. I cannot understand how you can put up with buffalo's milk. Arrangements should, therefore, be made for cow's milk and green vegetables.

I wish to mention to you another subject. First I thought that Vinoba should discuss it. But since I have some time, I shall myself mention it. It is my nature to share a good thing with everyone. This thing arose many years back. Chhaganlal may be a witness to this. I was then in the midst of the Zulu War. Chhaganlal can tell you the year.

CHHAGANLAL GANDHI 1906.

Yes, it was during that time and a great thing it was. Look, this is how the Divine play goes on. I realized there that one who wishes to serve the world must practise brahmacharya. A married couple should also observe brahmacharya, by which I mean cessation of reproductive activity. I believe that those who procreate cannot be called brahmacharis. Hence I placed this ideal of brahmacharya before Chhaganlal and others. I was quite young then and a young person can do anything. If I ask all of you to practise brahmacharya, would that be practicable? It is only an ideal. So I myself preside over many marriages. While laying down the ideal, I do see that people will indulge in pleasure. I was under the impression that brahmacharya and procreation were contradictory.

But on Thursday Vinoba brought to me a problem. It was a quotation from the Shastras. I had not realized its significance earlier. It has filled my heart with a new light. I lost myself in pondering over it. I am still under its spell. The scriptural interpretation of brahmacharya is perfect. An avowed brahmachari is one who has practised it since birth, who has not lost semen even in a dream. But I did not know why a person who cohabits for the sake of procreation was considered a brahmachari. Yesterday this great truth flashed on my mind. The couple which, in a state of marriage, withdraw into privacy and cohabit for the purpose of procreation are brahmacharis in the right sense of the word. What we call marriage today is but its outward form. What we call pleasure is only dissipation. Although I maintained that the motive behind marriage was procreation, what I meant to convey was that neither party should dread having children or make efforts to avoid this natural consequence of the sex act in which both should be willing partners.

I did not realize that it had a greater purpose. But this also was not the perfect marriage. The perfect marriage is founded on brahmacharya. When can a marriage be called perfect? In a perfect marriage a couple may have children when they are necessary and cohabit only when they need a child. That is to say, procreation ought to be looked upon as a duty and sexual union resorted to for that purpose only. Apart from this they should never engage in the sex act. Nor should they allow themselves privacy. If a man controls his semen, except on the occasion of such purposeful cohabitation, he is as good as an avowed brahmachari. Just imagine, how many occasions for such cohabitation can there be in a lifetime? In the life of a healthy and virile man or woman, there may be only one such occasion. Why should such persons not be looked upon as avowed brahmacharis? This truth, of which I had only a glimpse earlier, is now as clear as daylight. Those who are married should think of it. I had mentioned this subject earlier also; but I had not so much faith then. I used to think that it was impracticable. Today I think it is practicable. It might be different in the animal world. But it must be a rule in the married life of man, that no couple should procreate without the need for a child nor should they cohabit without the object of procreation.

[From Hindi]

Gandhi Seva Sanghke Dwitiya Adhiveshan (Savli) Ka Vivaran, pp. 78-82

339. A CONTRAST

Savli is a little village in the District of Chanda, C.P. It has a large Harijan population, and Harijans are for the most part devoted to khadi production under the aegis of the Maharashtra Charkha Sangh. Member of the Gandhi Seva Sangh and some other workers met there between 29th February and 6th March. In the Hindi notices sent to the invitees, among the things they were to bring were lantern, writing material, postcards, envelopes, postage stamps and soap. The notices mentioned that it was difficult to procure any milk in Savli and cow's milk was practically un procurable. Those who would take no ghee other than cow's ghee were advised to bring their own supply. On reaching Savli, it was further discovered that for the 300 men and women gathered there, milk had to be brought all the way from Chanda, a distance of 34 miles, and fresh vegetables from Nagpur, a distance of over 120 miles.

Savli is a typical village. The difficulties mentioned above are to be met with in most of the villages of this land.

India worships the cow, and cow's milk is unprocurable in the majority of our villages! She has a climate fit enough everywhere for vegetable growth, and fresh vegetables are not to be found in many of her villages! It is no wonder that writing material and stationery are scarce in the thousands of our impoverished villages. The villagers are mostly illiterate and those who can write have not money enough to invest in writing material or stamps. It is profitless to find out whether the villages of India were always what they are today. If they were never better it is a reflection upon the ancient culture in which we take so much pride. But if they were never better, how is it that they have survived centuries of decay which we see going round us and of which Savli is but a type?

The task before every lover of the country is how to prevent this decay or, which is the same thing, how to reconstruct the villages of India so that it may be as easy for anyone to live in them as it is supposed to be in the cities. Indeed, it is \textit{the} task before every patriot. It may be that the villages are beyond redemption, that rural civilization has had its day and that the seven hundred thousand villages have to give place to seven hundred well-ordered cities supporting a population not of three hundred millions but thirty. If such is to be India’s fate, even that won't come in a day. It must take time to wipe out a large number of villages and villagers and transform the remainder into cities and citizens.

However, those who believe in the possibility of village reconstruction have to follow out their programme logically and truthfully and not be satisfied with any make-believe. For them Savli is an eye-opener. Any village ought to be able easily to accommodate a party of 300 men and women with perfect comfort and give them fresh open air, fragrant grass and good rich milk from healthy cows and fresh vegetables and fruit in addition. Surely there is something radically wrong if many of these things have to be brought from cities.

There is no trick of magic that can bring about this change overnight. But with patience and perseverance, the programme of reconstruction can be carried out without much difficulty. But nothing can be done if ardent workers do not settle down in villages with the fixed determination of reconstructing their villages in the right manner.

\textit{Harijan, 7-3-1936}
340. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

March 8, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letter was waiting for me when I arrived here.
The weather is not hot but there is nothing cold about it. It rained near Jhansi. We are all well. Ba and Navin are the additions to the party. Puri too was with us.

I sent a wire as soon as we arrived. I hope you received it.

You may be proud of the frilling to the ‘uppers’ miscalled shawls or scarves. I am proud of your spinning. For spinning is real art. And for you—a ‘novice’—the effort is quite worthy. There, once in a way, even a rebel may receive a compliment from a loving TYRANT

[PS.]

You will drive directly to the Harijan quarters on 11th, D.V.

From the original: C.W 3565. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6374

341. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

March 8, 1936

I see something troubles your mind, though you may try to conceal it. You may certainly come according to your wish, provided you get the permission. It will be the greatest service you render to Jayaprakash if you lay before him your correct position with the utmost firmness and calm of mind. I am afraid you have not fully stated your case to Jayaprakash and if you have, it did not make any impression on him, that is, he does not take the statement to be correct. He will calm down without doubt, if he is convinced that you have in you no such thing as sexual desire. Your freedom from desire should put out the fire of his, just as water puts out any fire. Why should you be afraid and lose peace of mind, when you do have faith in God? At the time of going you made me a promise not to get

1 The telegram sent by Gandhiji on his arrival at Delhi is not traceable.
2 Son of Vrajlal Gandhi disturbed, and you ought to keep it. Keep writing to me . . . . Take care to be true to the promise, remain calm and undisturbed, preserve your health, come if and when you can. We shall be here for about fifteen days.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

342. MESSAGE TO GURUKUL CONVOCATION
[Before March 9, 1936]

While giving his blessings to the outgoing graduates, Sardar Patel at first read out a message from Mahatma Gandhi sent to the outgoing graduates in which he had asked them to lead a life of truth, purity and service and to never forget that the institution to which they were bidding farewell was founded by the late Swami Shraddhanand who died while serving the nation to his last breath.

The anniversary of the Gurukul concluded when a message from Mahatma Gandhi asking the public to give liberal donations to the Gurukul was read out by Sardar Patel. In that message, Mahatmaji had expected everybody present there to fill the coffers of the Gurukul which was run by contributions from the public.

The Hindustan Times, 11-3-1936

343. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

DELHI,

March 9, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

So you return leaving Kamala for ever in Europe. And yet her spirit was never out of India and will always be your precious treasure as it will be of many of us. I shall never forget the final talk that wetted our four eyes.

Heavy responsibility awaits you here. It is laid on you because you are well able to bear it. I dare not come to you, as I would have if my body had regained its original elasticity. There is nothing organically wrong with me. The body has even gained in weight. But it has lost the vitality it seemed to have only three months ago. Strange to say, I never felt any illness. And yet the body had become weak and the instrument registered high blood-pressure. I have to be careful.

1 Omission as in the source
2 The convocation was held on March 9, 1936, at Kangri.

I am in Delhi to rest for a few days. If your original plan had been carried out I would have remained in Wardha for our meeting. It would have been quieter there for you. But if it is the same thing to you, we may meet in Delhi where I should be till 23rd instant at least. But if you prefer Wardha I can return there earlier. If you come to Delhi, you could stay with me in the Harijan quarters newly built in Kingsway—quite a good place. You will tell me, when you can, the date of our meeting. Rajendra Babu and Jamnalalji are or will be with you. Vallabhbhai also would have been but we all thought it would be better if he stayed away. The other two have gone there not for political discussion but for condolence. The political discussion will take place when we have all met and when you have finished domestic work.

I hope Indu bore well the grief of Kamala’s death and the almost immediate separation from you. What is her address?

May everything be well with you.

Love.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1936. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

344. LETTER TO MIRZA ISMAIL

HARIJAN COLONY,
KINGSWAY, DELHI
March 9, 1936

DEAR SIR MIRZA,

Now that I am free to attend to correspondence to a limited extent, I write this to acknowledge your kind invitation which I treasure. You know how I love to be with you and under your care. But I do not know how I shall fare during the hot weather and where fate will take me. For the moment I can only say, the wish is there.

My love to you all.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 2179

1 Dewan of Mysore
345. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

March 9, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Isn’t there anyone else at the Ashram who can also go into Bhanushanker’s account? We can roughly guess the year. Bhanushanker should be able to give the exact year at any rate.

We reached Delhi yesterday. Kanti, Navin and Kanu are with us. All are having a happy time. I brought Navin here for the sake of his health. This month is always cool here.

I believe I shall be here at least for a fortnight. I feel I am in fairly good health. Krishnadas’s marriage was solemnized with great simplicity.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8484. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

346. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARikh

March 9, 1936

CHI. NARAHARI,

I hope Sumitra is doing well. See that she writes in ink.

I am sure Ramji does not cause any trouble. The goshala must be working well.

I wish to spend a fortnight in Delhi. But let us see what happens.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9092

347. LETTER TO JAIJI PETIT

March 9, 1936

DEAR SISTER,

I have your letter. God has been putting you to a severe test and you are going through it very well, which also is due to His grace. There is a verse which we have been reciting here during the daily prayers. It says, that which goes by the name of adversity is not such; nor is that prosperity which goes by that name. To forget God is adversity; ever to think to Him is prosperity. It is good that Hira is with you.

Do write a few lines to me whenever you think it fit. Are you at all likely to pay a visit to the country?

I am quite well, though perhaps I may not now be able to put in the amount of work I used to formerly. I, of course, do need rest. At present we are in Delhi. Ba is with me. Probably we shall be back in Wardha in a fortnight.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3155

---

348. _LETTER TO VANAMALA N. PARIKH_

_March 9, 1936_

CHI. VANAMALA,

You must have learnt from Anandi why I could not speak to you. I had very much wished to hear from you all the news of Sumitra, but does God always let all our wishes be fulfilled?

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

---

349. _LETTER TO SUMITRA GANDHI_

_March 9, 1936_

CHI. SUMITRA,

How is it that you do not write to me? You must be enjoying yourself. Do play well and do study well, but understand that all work or all play is of no real use. Can you read this letter? Grandmother is here with me.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5786. Also C.W. 3009. Courtesy: Vanamala M. Desai

---
350. LETTER TO DRAUPADI SHARMA

March 9, 1936

CHI. DRAUPADI,

I have a letter from Sharma from which I learn that you are not keeping well. What is this? I am writing this, for I am now permitted to do some writing. As I am in Delhi it would be fine if you could come up to see me. Amtussalaam is of course here already

Blessings from
BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, facing p. 192

351. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

DELHI,

March 10, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter. Your experiences are interesting. You must not count the days of my return. I shall do so as early as I can, especially as Jawaharlal is not coming before 3rd April. This was a false alarm. He is coming tomorrow.

The weather here is still decidedly cool. Amtul Salaam is much better than what she was there. So is Brijkishan.

I hope you were able to get a good mare.

You are much below your normal weight. You must put on more. Do not hesitate to increase the quantity of milk or ghee or both and anything else you may need. You must put on more muscle.

I am keeping well and am getting plenty of quiet.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6323. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9789

1 The following two sentences were added by Gandhiji after completing the letter.
352. LETTER TO BACHUBHAI B. RAMDAS

March 10, 1936

CHI.BACHUBHAI,

Gangabehn has written to me about you. I think that Vaidya Jugatram’s advice to you is right. For the present at any rate your diet should be milk and fruit. You may take glucose with it. At present it will be good not to take anything made of when or other cereals. In place of milk, you may take churned curds, which will be easier to digest and will cause no gas. A healthy cow’s milk if taken fresh soon after milking does not cause any gas; this may be taken in small quantities. Instead of taking milk and fruit together, you should take them at intervals separtely. For the present, take only juicy fruits, such as oranges, mosambis, grapes, pomegranate, pineapple and papaya. Take care that the curds are not sour. If Jugatram agrees, you would do well to take about ten bulbs of garlic. Recently I have heard much about the good that garlic does. It appears to help much in the digestion of milk. Dr. Talvalkar’s brother prepares an essence of garlic. In my recent illness, I could take twenty-five big bulbs of garlic a day. I do not take them now as there is no need to do so. One may add glucose to milk and to fruit juice. Do not take buffalo’s milk. It is likely to prove heavy for you. If you find even cow’s milk heavy, have a goat at your place and take its milk.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9719

353. A LETTER

March 11, 1936

CHI. RANCHHODLAL,

Ever since I left Ahmedabad I have been intending to write to you but could not, as it was left out or forgotten at the time of writing the few letters that I am permitted. Today, however, early in the morning I made a note of doing this. The reason for the letter is the pain caused to Bhai Mavalankar, who had put his entire trust in you and held you in great respect. Now, that confidence being no longer there, he writes to Sardar that you have yourself given him cause to lose his faith in you, as you neither consulted him nor so much as informed him of your going to Bombay. He feels aggrieved in the matter, has even begun doubting the purity of your motives, and repents that he put so much trust in you. You should explain to me all that has happened, as Mavalankar writes that he helped you in the nick of time trustfully though several friends had warned him against you. You should remove the doubts in Mavalankar's mind and see that you do not lose such an open-hearted and disinterested friend as he. You should not lose the faith your creditors put in you. No matter if you have to turn a penniless beggar, you ought not to lose your credit for truthfulness. I shall be waiting for your reply by return of post. I hope Motibehn is doing well. I shall be here for the present at any rate.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

354. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

DELHI
March 11, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I trust you get my letters regularly. The last of your letters was from Sitab Diyara. I have received the book¹ written by Jayaprakash and have been reading it. Tell him that I shall send him my opinion after finishing the reading. It is exceedingly cold today and it is windy. Dr. Ansari examined me today. The blood-pressure was 156/94, but last evening it was higher. The doctor, therefore, thinks that I should still be moderate in work and observe the restrictions. It is very good that at Sitab Diyara you get milk [from the cow] at home. You should increase the quantity as much as you can.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3459

¹ Why socialism?
355. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

[March 12, 1936]¹

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

I read your book carefully and liked it although the attack on me which it carries betrays considerable ignorance regarding me. That can be removed but I am enchanted with your study. After these preliminaries I may say that I find in it no remedy for our problem. Your solution does not suit the conditions in this country at least for the present. The goal you aim at is almost the same as that desired by me and many Congressmen. But our method of attaining it differs from yours. Your method in my opinion is not practicable in this country. I am not so attached to my own method that I cannot see the merits of anyone else's. But I am unable to appreciate your solution in spite of all sincere effort.

Your speech at the Bengal session had been travelling with me and I read it only today. I like your resolution regarding the committee of experts. Have you anyone in mind who can do justice to the work? Have you taken any further step in this respect? Your book has given rise to many thought with more to come but I cannot write anything just now on that topic. Prabha writes that you are totally negligent of your health; this is not good.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

356. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

DELHI,
March 12, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I have had no letters from you of late. I wrote to you a brief note yesterday. I write this letter today as I wish to send the letter I have written to Jayaprakash on his book. Perhaps you are both at ¹ This was sent along with letter to Prabhavati; vide the following item.

Allahabad by now. Jamnalalji, for his part, has already gone there. Rajen Babu too was there. Jayaparaksh's book is worthy of your reading and observation. Some of his ideas are wrong, if mine are right. Is a person great just because all want to follow him? Rajkumari is expected to arrive today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3460

357. LETTER TO SHANKERBHAI B. PATEL
DELHI,
March 12, 1936

CHI. SHANKERBHAI,

I indeed made inquiries of you all, but none of you turned up. It was certainly good that narrow caste bonds were broken.

SHRI SHANKERBHAI
JAMSI VILLA, ELLIS BRIDGE
AHMEDABAD, B.B. & C.I. RLY.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4088. Also C.W. 51. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

358. LETTER TO MANGALABEHN B. DESAI

[March 12, 1936]

CHI. MANGALA,

A child may turn a bad child, but parents can never change; and hence I offer blessings to both of you. But you know the conditions going with them. Render service and bring honour to the Ashram. Life is not intended for enjoyment, but for service to others, and service is impossible without self-restraint. Hence, may you both be self-restrained and live long.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4088. Also C.W. 51. Courtesy: Mangalabehn B. Desai

1 The addressee's daughter Mangala was married outside the caste.
2 This and the preceding item are written on the same sheet.
359. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

DELHI,
March 13, 1936

MY DEAR ANAND,

Of course you come when you can. Only here in the Harijan colony you may be crowded out. There will be an influx of visitors presently. And of me you will have precious little in the way of talking. Hope you are both getting well.

Love.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

360. BIRTH-CONTROL

A co-worker who is a careful reader of my writings was disturbed to read that I was likely to approve of the 'safe period' method of birth-control. I endeavoured to make it clear to the friend that the safe period method did not repel me as did the use of contraceptives and that it was open largely only to married couples. But the discussion of the topic led us into much deeper waters than either of us had expected. The fact that my friend was repelled by the safe period method as much as by that of contraceptives showed to me that he believed in the possibility of ordinary persons practising the restraint imposed by the smritis, i.e., that the union between husband and wife was permitted only when the parties really desired to have children. Whilst I knew the rule I had never regarded it in the light that I began to do at the discussion. All these long years I had regarded it as a counsel of perfection not to be carried out literally and that so long as married couples carried on intercourse by mutual consent but without special regard to the desire for progeny, they were carrying out the purpose of marriage without breaking any positive injunction of the smriti. But the new light in which I viewed the smriti text was a revelation to me. I understood now as I never had done before the statement that married people, who strictly observed the injunction of the smritis, were as much brahmacharis as those who were never married and lived chaste lives.

1 Vinoba Bhave

The sole object of sexual intercourse according to the new light was the desire for progeny, never gratification of the sexual instinct. Simple gratification of the instinct would be counted according to this view of marriage as lust. This may appear to be a harsh expression to use for our enjoyment which has hitherto been regarded as innocent and legitimate. But I am not dealing with custom. I am dealing with the science of marriage as propounded by Hindu sages. Their presentation may be faulty, it may be altogether wrong. But for one like me who believes in several smriti texts as inspired and based on experience, there is no escape from a full acceptance of their meaning. I know no other way of finding the truth of things and testing certain old texts in accordance with their full meaning no matter how hard the test may appear and how harsh its deductions may sound.

In the light of what I have said above, birth-controls by contraceptives and the like is a profound error. I write thus with a full sense of my responsibility. I have great regard for Mrs. Margaret Sanger and her followers. She impressed me much by her great zeal for her cause. I know that she has great sympathy for the women who suffer because they have to bear the burden of carrying and rearing unwanted children. I know also that this method of birth-control has the support of many Protestant divines, scientists, learned men and doctors, many of whom I have the honour of knowing personally and for whom I entertain high regard. But I should be false to my God who is Truth and nothing but Truth, if I concealed my belief from the reader or these great advocates of the method. Indeed, if I hid my belief, I should never discover my error if my present belief is one. Moreover, its declaration is due to those many men and women who accept my guidance and advice in many moral problems including this one concerning birth-control.

That birth requires to be regulated and controlled is common cause between the advocates of contraceptives and the like. The difficulty of control through self-restraint is not to be denied. Yet there is no other way of attaining the end, if mankind is to fulfil its destiny. It is my innermost conviction that if the method under discussion gains universal acceptance, mankind will suffer moral deterioration. This I say in spite of the evidence to the contrary that is often produced by the advocates of the method.

---

1 Vide “Interview to Margaret Sanger”, 3/4-12-1935.

I believe I have no superstition in me. Truth is not truth merely because it is ancient. Nor is it necessarily to be regarded with suspicion because it is ancient. There are some fundamentals of life which cay not be lightly given up because they are difficult of enforcement in one's life.

Birth-control through self-control is no doubt difficult. But no one has yet been known seriously to dispute its efficacy and even superiority over the use of contraceptives.

Then, I feel that full of acceptance of the implication of the injunction of the Shastras as to the strictly confined use of the sexual act makes the observance of self-control much easier than if one regards the act itself as a source of supreme enjoyment. The function of the organs of generation is merely to generate progeny obviously of the highest type possible for a married couple. This can and should only take place when both parties desire, not sexual union but progeny which is the result of such union. Desire for such union, therefore, without the desire for progeny, must be considered unlawful and should be restrained.

The possibility of such control for the ordinary man will be examined in the next issue.

Harijan, 14-3-1936

361. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

KINGSWAY, DELHI,
March 14, 1936

DEAR SATIS BABU,

Profulla gave me a sorrowful account of you and Hemprabha. He says both of you are ailing and full of anxiety. I had a brief card from Hemprabha in reply to my inquiry.

Do please give me a full account of your condition and doings. Both of you are devotees of Gita and Ramayana. Of anxiety therefore 1 Vide “Birth Control-II”, 21-3-1936.

2 Profulla Chandra Ghosh
3 Addressee's wife you should have none. From ailments we can hope to be free, if we would take reasonable care ourselves.

Throughout my illness, I have never ceased to think of you. And how is the mad pujari of yours? How is Arun\(^1\)? Where is he? What is he doing? What is Charu doing? What about the Harijan work? I know nothing of your many activities.

I am well and hope to be in Delhi till 23rd instant at least.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1628

---

362. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

March 14, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your second letter is before me. I hope you received mine\(^2\). I shall try to think of your message when Jawaharllal comes. He will be here on 17th and will stay at the Harijan colony.

Of course every intimate contact with the real villagers in their villages gives us new knowledge and new hope, though it also shows us the difficulties in our path. My heart is there. What is my effort will end in I do not know.

I think I told you what Dr. Ansari found. He is satisfied with the condition but he is firmly of opinion that I have to go slow yet for a while. I am having all the rest I need.

Rajkumari is here and sitting by my side as before.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6315. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9781

---

\(^1\) Addressee’s son

363. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

March 14, 1936

CHI. MANILAL,

After I had written the letters today, I remembered your inquiry regarding the diet for diabetes. There should be no starch and no sugar in the diet; so one ought not to take bananas, potatoes, rice, wheat, jaggery, sugar, etc. One may take a little of porridge made of broken wheat—such as remains after the flour is sifted out. Salt may be added to the porridge. Or, one may grind the sifted wheat pieces into flour and make chapates out of it. One may take milk, curds, leafy vegetables, green peas, gourd, and sour fruits but no sweet fruits. The main food should be milk and vegetables, and this should restore one's health fully.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4848

364. LETTER TO DRAUPADI SHARMA

March 14, 1936

CHI. DRAUPADI,

I have your letter which I am sending on to Sharma. My [stay]¹ in Delhi is certain till the [23rd]². I would like it if you could visit me in the mean while. I am keeping well but cannot tackle much work. I have strength but there is the doctor's veto.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, between pp. 192 and 193

¹ From the printed version in the source
² Ibid
365. LETTER TO H.L. SHARMA

March 14, 1936

CHI. SHARMA,

I had your letter which prompted me to send for Draupadi and here is her reply. But I have repeated my invitation. You are gaining good experience. It will be nice if you have nothing further to learn from any institution after you come here. You may remain there as long as your knowledge remains incomplete in any respect. As for my opinion, I hold that nature cure requires a different kind of training though a complete knowledge of anatomy and chemistry is of course most essential.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, between pp. 236 and 237

366. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

March 14, 1936

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

The diary must be filled in every day. As we eat daily, so must we pray daily and fill in the diary. Sometimes food has to be dispensed with but the diary is indispensable as long as we have any strength, and prayer too cannot be given up as long as the heart is pure.

If you start on garlic you will be totally relieved of wind and black pepper will become unnecessary. Partaking of garlic and milk by way of medicine need not constitute a violation of brahmacharya. In the case of the weak, the proclivity to passion tends to grow and also results in involuntary discharge. Such men require milk and the like. My opinion regarding milk as expressed in my Guide to Health has certainly undergone some change.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4285

1 An English translation of a series of Gujarati articles on general knowledge about health published in Indian Opinion from January 4, 1913 to August 16, 1913.
367. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

DELHI,
March 15, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I read your letter to Mahadev. You sound as if your staying in Maganwadi was a punishment. If you have knowingly stayed there, you must consider it your duty to stay there like that. One who follows religion with proper understanding always finds great joy before which other pleasures are insignificant. Other pleasures cannot ever be called joys. This joy does not depend on anything external. Hence, outside worries cannot ever diminish that joy. You will have passed the test only when you derive such joy from your pursuit of duty.

None of you is going to be inconvenienced if I can manage to go to Segaon. But, as you say, when that ‘if’ is removed, everything will fall in place. Hence, instead of thinking about the future steps let one step be enough for the present. Thus, you will find contentment. When one step is taken, the next step will be right before you, is there any doubt about it?

I understand about the Kumarappa brothers. It is sufficient that you have done your duty. Congratulations on the recovery of Nanavati. Are your keeping well? Everything is fine here.

Blessing from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

368. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

DELHI,
March 16, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your third letter has arrived. I am delighted you have a horse. Never mind the cost. They will allocate it as they think best. You should do everything gently and take rest while the sun is blazing. All work before 10 a.m. and after 4 p.m. during summer. You should take more fruit than you do. Cold bandage on the head is a necessity. Earth retains the cold longer than the mere wet bandage.

1 Amritlal Nanavati

The weather is now getting steadily warmer. It is nearing 3 p.m. and I have nothing to cover the body. I can bear the pankha.

I thought I did see your dictionaries in Wardha. But I will inquire and see that you get dictionaries.

Yes, the more you can interest Jajuji, the better it will be for village work.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6316. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9782

369. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

March 16, 1936

MURABBI BHAII,

I had decided in the presence of Kashī to write to you regarding Chi. Krishnadas’s marriage. Yesterday I remembered the decision which I had forgotten because of my change of place. Such a marriage must be the consequence of the merits of the couple and their elders. The ceremony was performed by a true Brahmin, Ravishankar Maharaj, amidst the blessings of numerous loving friends. Instead of Krishnadas having to go to the place of the bride’s father, the latter came with his daughter to meet Krishnadas at his place of duty. The bride wore a white sari woven from yarn spun by Krishnadas himself. For other ornaments she had garlands of yarn spun by Kashi and me. Vinoba, Krishnadas’s guru, was of course present, and the very next day the couple joined the guru in doing their work of service. The bride did not have even a grain of gold as a wedding ring. The expense on the wedding is not likely to have been even so much as two rupees. I found the bride truly gentle. Never had I witnessed such a wedding before. The other marriages I attended

---

1 Fan
2 Gandhiji’s father’s brother’s son
3 Addressee’s daughter-in-law, wife of Chhaganlal Gandhi had been simple enough, but nowhere else did I find the holy atmosphere of this one. I take it that this information will give satisfaction to you both.

Respectful pranams from
MOHANDAS

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

370. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI
March 16, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

The enclosed letter¹ is for Father to read. I do know that all of you will of course do your best at the time of Purushottam’s marriage. However, don’t circumstances sometimes overcome us, just as we sometimes overcome them? The duel between destiny and human effort must continue.

I have asked for the dates from Bhanushanker. Are you sure we did not have his account in the ledger-books? Or, it might be that the sums were credited to the Goseva Sangh’s account or some other account. I am here up to the 23rd at any rate.

Blessings form
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati; M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8485. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

371. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR
March 16, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

You must have got my letter. This I am writing on purpose. There are bound to be some Hindi-Engligh and English-Hindi dictionaries on the bookshelf. Give them to Mirabehn whether they belong to her or to Prabhavati. If the dictionaries are not to be found among the books, ask Ramjilal to find them out and give them to

¹ Vide the preceding item.
Mirabehn. On my return I shall arrange to get new ones for her and we shall return the borrowed ones.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

[PS.]

Deliver the enclosed letters yourself.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9338. Also C.W. 6613. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

372. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

March 16, 1936

CHI. KAKA,

I have your letter. It is likely that I may not reach Wardha on the 28th or the 29th. Shankerlal insists that I should go to Lucknow¹. The date [fixed] is the 28th. I have no idea what I ought to do. Let me see where destiny takes me. However, I do see that this creates confusion for you. For the present I am helpless, but I will inform you as soon as I am able to decide the date. Certainly, keep to the 28th or the 29th, if you can manage without me. Fix your own programme while I am touring. I am of course sending a telegram to Bombay today.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10894

373. LETTER TO CHAND TYAGI

[After March 16, 1936]²

I marvel at your Urdu handwriting. Milk should not be given up though sweets and ghee can be dispensed with.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 3265

---

¹ To open the All-India Village Industries Association Exhibition
² The letter is in reply to the addressee’s letter of March 16, 1936.
374. LETTER TO DR. SHUMSHERE SINGH
March 17, 1936

MY DEAR SHUMMY,

Amrit has given me your message and something more — her tears. She felt most miserable as she was labouring through the message.

Amrit has told me so many things about your great love for her that I could and would not believe that a coolness had sprung up between you two and that too owing to my having entered Amrit’s life. She tells me that my way of looking at life had begun of affect hers as early as 1915. For me her affection and co-operation are a precious treasure. But I want neither at the cost of abiding love between you two. You alone, I am aware, have [stood] by her through thick and through thin. My own connection with you all must, if anything, tighten that bond, never weaken it. So you will tell me what you will have me to do. This I can say that I shall never be guilty of weaning her from her present public activites. I would love to make them purer, i.e., I would have her to work in a much more detached manner than she has hitherto done. But in all my doings about Amrit, you shall be my guide. If ever I differ from you I shall tell you. But where the supreme good of Amrit is a common cause there can be no difference. She is too tender a flower to be allowed to wither.

You must look after yourself and her village work.

Love.

BAPU

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

375. LETTER TO PYARELAL

DELHI,
March 17, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I do not understand your behaviour. I am extremely pained. I shall be relieved if you can explain things to me. What are you doing, with whom and for what purpose? Is there any thought behind it? If you wish to see me I shall find the time. I shall be thankful even if you write. Have you abandoned everyone? You have brought shame to the training I gave you.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

---

376. A LETTER

_March 17, 1936_

It is no strain for me to write to you. Dr. Ansari has allowed considerable latitude, I assure you. I am going very slowly and very cheerfully. But no amount of care would keep this body intact when its time-limit is reached. We merely infer, and probably after the event, that it happened because of such and such circumstances. But our inference is based on probability. Hence I think we should not worry about our own likes, or those of dear ones.

Mahadev has smelt in your letter a dislike for him. I have combated the view but I know you will tell me frankly whatever the matter is. Your letter does exclude him. Your conversation led me to think that you wanted me to be with you all alone. Gosibehn spoke to me differently. She gave me details about the place, too. I could understand your first proposal.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

---

377. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

_DELHI_,
_March 18, 1936_

CHI. PRABHA,

This time you were late in writing to me; you should not let that happen. What could keep you so busy? You ought to write a postcard at least.

Jawaharlal arrived yesterday. I shall have to go to Lucknow for the Exhibition so as to reach there on the 28th. My idea is to leave Lucknow on the 29th for Wardha. However, one never can tell. The rest Kanti will write.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3468
If Ba desires then with her, otherwise I would live alone in a hut in Segaon.

Mirabehn’s [hut] may not suffice for me.

As little expense as possible should be incurred in building the hut and in no case should it exceed Rs. 100.

Whatever help I might need, I should obtain from Segaon.

I should pay visits to Maganwadi as often as necessary. For that I should use whatever vehicle I can get.

Mira...² should stay with...³ She must not give her time to attend personally on me but she can help me in my village work.

If necessary, Mahadev, Kanti and others might stay in the village. For them a simple hut should be erected.

Along with this, I will continue my other outside activities.

Unless there is some special reason, people from outside should not come to see me at Segaon. They may see me only at Maganwadi on the days fixed for my going there.

Whenever there is need for me to go out...⁴ I firmly...⁵ by doing...⁶ the work of village industries will gain momentum and the attention of the people will be directed to village handicrafts. By doing this, full use could be made of Mirabehn’s great capacities. And Mahadev, Kanti and others will also get a novel and good experience.

Whatever defects there may be in my way of thinking will come to the surface on my living in a village. Other people will, no doubt, get encouragement.

It is not...⁷ to stay at Segaon alone, but Segaon seems to have

---

¹ This was sent to Jamnalal Bajaj.
² Illegible
³ ibid
⁴ ibid
⁵ ibid
⁶ ibid
⁷ Illegible
come to my mind in the natural course. But, if there is any other more suitable village, I am prepared to consider it.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2977

379. LETTER TO ANASUYA BAJAJ

March 19, 1936

CHI. GODAVARI

Your letter. You do not tell me the time you get up. Sugar is unnecessary and can be even harmful if taken in large quantities. To chew sugar-cane when in season is preferable to sugar and so is jaggery.

Blessings form

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 9134

380. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

DELHI,

4 a. m. March 20, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Yours this time is a revealing letter. What you say about the well on Jamnalal Bajaj’s farm is disturbing. But it merely shows the tremendous difficulties we have in our way. In the midst of all these you must keep well and calm, even as I am trying to do. For you might imagine that it cannot all be plain sailing for me here. I am having difficulty about the political part as also the village settlement part. But according to Dr. Ansari my progress is steady and he wants me to undergo more physical and mental exertion to test my capacity. And I am keeping calm. Bood-pressure was on 18th evening 154/92. I have to go to Lucknow on 28th to open [the] Exhibition. I am then supposed to go to Wardha. I do not know for certain what is going to happen after 28th. But I shall soon know.

I hope your fever has not returned and your pony is giving you

1 This was another name of the addressee.
2 The caste-Hindu villagers had been objecting to Harijans using the well. satisfaction.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6317. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9783

381. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

2. p. m., March 20, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have another letter before me. These recurring attacks of fever disturb me. If you cannot keep well in villages, you must live in Maganwadi and do what you can from there. You may not use violence against yourself. Why do you not write about the difficulties there to Jannalalji? When I mentioned the well difficulty\(^1\) to him, he resented having to know it through me. He said the understanding was that you should let him know directly about all your difficulties. Perhaps you will answer that that agreement was cancelled. I would say ‘not quite’. You are still bound so long as you attend to Segaon to write to him directly. That does not mean that you may not write to me.

Love.

Bapu

[PS.]

I shall procure palak\(^2\) seeds. You mean the bhaji\(^3\), do you not?

From the original: C.W. 6318. courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9784

382. LETTER TO ABBAS K. VARTEJI

March 20, 1936

CHI. ABBAS,

I got your letter. It is right that you are getting married. May you both live long and be happy. Both of you should observe the

\(^1\) Vide the preceding item.

\(^2\) Spinach

\(^3\) Leafy vegetable restrictions laid down for Ashram life. Is the girl educated? If so, she should write to me. How old is she?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6312

383. LETTER TO LILI H. SHAH
March 20, 1936

CHI. LILI,

You are now about to fly away. But you could not get time to write in ink the letter seeking my blessings! Are you so busy with work, or are you mad with joy? Whatever the case, you both certainly have my blessings. May you both live a pure life, continue to be pure and dedicate yourselves to the country.

Blessings from
BAPU

[C/o] SHRI HIRALAL AMRITLAL SHAH
CHAPSI BUILDING
PRINCESS STREET, BOMBAY 2

From Gujarati: C.W. 9720. Courtesy: Lilibehn A. Pandya

384. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI
March 20, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I have your letter only today. I shall be going to Lucknow, not on the 3rd, but on the 28th. I shall return from there on the 29th. I expect I shall go to Wardha most probably. Though I do not quite like it my life nowadays is spent in wanderings. However, it may all be only to the good and perhaps I gather experience at any rate. Do try to read Jayaprakash’s book, though it is sure to be rendered into Hindi.

My talks with Jawaharlal are continuing and will, I believe, go on for some time more.

Dr. Ansari came to examine me again and expressed his satisfaction with the improvement in my health. The weight continues to be 111 lb. and it is a good thing that the blood-pressure was 154/92 though noted in the evening. It will indeed be good if you will be at
385. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

March 20, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I am indeed glad that you have taken up the propagation of village industries and sanitation. You should succeed in this work. These activities are, according to me, an integral part of swaraj. Bhanushanker does not remember the dates.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8486. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

386. LETTER TO D. B. KALEL Kar

March 20, 1936

CHI. KAKA,

What a pitiable plight I am in! No one may explain anything to me fully. Lest any harm should come to my health, none would ask me anything in detail and I may not speak at length. The result was that I never realized that the proposed conference¹ was to have three or four hundred invitees and that I was to preside over it. Moreover, there is going to be a reception committee! How can you involve me in all this? I am still under orders not to do any such thing. For my part, I took it that I was to sit in a small room for a little while and offer whatever suggestions might occur to me. It is of course my fault that I did not understand things fully. I admit it, but the admission is not the end of the matter for us. Jamnalalji has been greatly surprised and even pained at this. I undertook the responsibility of replying to the letter and sent a long telegram. Of course the telegram was sent to Munshi since I did not know where you might be at the time. Rajendra Babu thinks that it would be good if this function follows immediately after the Hindi [Sahitya] Sammelan which is fixed for the 25th and the 26th April. That would mean saving the expenses that we might then have to incur. Do think over this. Does Jawaharlal take interest in this? He might choose to come if it takes place towards the end of April. And what if we made him the President? He will of course have a pleasant time as an honoured guest. Let someone else be Chairman of the Reception Committee. What about Jajuji, if at all you consider the Reception Committee necessary? Or, why not you yourself?

¹ Akhil Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10895

387. BIRTH-CONTROL—II

There is nothing in our society today which would conduce to self-control. Our very upbringing is against it. The primary concern of parents is to marry their children anyhow so that they may breed like rabbits. If they are girls, they are married at as early an age as they conveniently can be, irrespective of their moral welfare. The marriage ceremony is one longdrawn-out agony of feasting and frivolity. The householder’s life is in keeping with the past life. It is a prolongation of self-indulgence. Holidays and social enjoyments are so arranged as to allow one the greatest latitude for sensuous living. The literature that is almost thrust on one generally panders to the animal passion. The most modern literatuee almost teaches that indulgence in it is a duty and total abstinence a sin.

Is it any wonder if control of the sexual appetite has become difficult if not almost impossible? If then birth-control through self-restraint is the most desirable and sensible and totally harmless method, we must change the social ideal and environment. The only way to bring about the desired end is for individuals who believe in the method of self-control to make the beginning themselves and with unquenchable faith to affect their surroundings. For them the conception of marriage I discussed\(^1\) last week has, it seems to me, the greatest significance. A proper grasp of it means a complete mental revolution. It is not meant merely for a few select individuals. It is presented as the law of the human species. Its breach reduces the status of human beings and brings swift punishment in the shape of multiplicity of unwanted children, a train of ever-increasing diseases and disruption of man as a moral being responsible to his Maker. Birth-control by contraceptives no doubt regulates to a certain extent the number of newcomers and enables persons of moderate means to keep the wolf from the door. But the moral harm it does to the individual and society is incalculable. For one thing, the outlook upon life for those who satisfy the sexual appetite for the sake of it is wholly changed. Marriage ceases to be a sacrament for them. It means a revaluation of the social ideals hitherto prized as a precious treasure. No doubt this argument will make little appeal to those who regard the old ideals about marriage as a superstition. My argument is only addressed to those who regard marriage as a sacrament and woman not as an instrument of animal pleasure but as mother of man and trustee of the virtue of her progeny.

\(^1\) Vide “Birth Control [-I], 14-3-1936.

My experience of self-control by fellow-workers and myself confirms me in the view presented here. It assumes overwhelming force from the discovery in a vivid light of the ancient conception of marriage. For me brahmacharya in married life now assumes its natural and inevitable position and becomes as simple as the fact of marriage itself. Any other method of birth-control seems useless and unthinkable. Once the idea that the only and grand function of the sexual organ is generation possesses man and woman, union for any other purpose they will hold as criminal waste of the vital fluid and consequent excitement caused to man and woman as an equally criminal waste of precious energy. It is now easy to understand why the scientists of old have put such great value upon the vital fluid and why they have insisted upon its strong transmutation into the highest form of energy for the benefit of society. They boldly declare that one who has acquired a perfect control over his or her sexual energy strengthens the whole being, physical, mental and spiritual, and attains powers unattainable by any other means.

Let not the reader be disturbed by the absence of many or even any living specimen of such giant brahmacharis. The brahmacharis we see about us today are very incomplete specimens. At best they are aspirants who have acquired control over their bodies but not their minds. They have not become proof against temptation. This is not because brahmacharya is so difficult of attainment. Social environment is against them, and the majority of those who are making an honest effort unknowingly isolate the control of the animal passion from all other passions, whereas the effort to be successful must include control over all the passions to which man is prey.
brahmacharya is not impossible of attainment by the average man and woman. It must not be supposed that it requires less effort than that required by an average student who has set his heart upon becoming a master of any one of the sciences. Attainment of brahmacharya in the sense here meant means mastery of the Science of Life.

_Harijan_, 21-3-1936

388. LIMITATION OF REFORMERS

Ever since Dr. Ambedkar has thrown his bomb-shell in the midst of Hindu society in the shape of threatened conversion, frantic efforts have been made to wean him from the proposed step. Dr. Ambedkar’s threat has had its repercussions on Harijans, too, who are at all literate and are able to read newspapers. They have begun to approach Hindu institutions or reformers with a demand for posts, scholarships or the like, accompanying it with the statement that the writer might, in the event of refusal, be obliged to change to another faith, aid having been offered on behalf of the representatives of that faith.

Without a doubt these threats are a portent and a matter of grave concern to those who care at all for the religion of their forefathers. But it will not be served by coming to terms with those who have lost faith in Hinduism or for that matter in any religion. Religion is not a matter of barter. It is a matter for every individual to decide for himself to which faith he will belong. It does not lend itself to purchase in any shape or form. Or if such an expression can be used in connection with things of the spirit, religion can only be purchased with one’s own blood. If therefore any Harijan wants to give up Hinduism, he should be entirely free to do so.

There must be a searching of heart for the reformer. Has his practice or that of his neighbours caused the defection? If it has and if it is found to be improper, it must be changed.

It is an admitted fact that the conduct of a vast number of Hindus who call themselves sanatanists is such as to cause the greatest inconvenience and irritation to the Harijans all over India. The wonder is that many more Harijans than already have, have not left Hinduism. It speaks volumes for their loyalty or for the innate virtue of Hinduism that millions of Harijans have clung to it in spite of the inhumanities to which in the name of that very faith they have been subjected.

This wonderful loyalty of Harijans and their unexampled patience render it imperative for every savarna Hindu to see that Harijans receive the same treatment that every other Hindu does. The course before savarnas is, therefore, on the one hand not to interfere with Harijans wishing to leave the Hindu fold by trying to keep them within it by the offer of bribes in the shape of finding employment or scholarships and, on the other hand, to insist on full justice being done to Harijans in every walk of life. Indeed reformers should anticipate the Harijans’ requirements and not wait till they begin to complain. The Harijan Sevak Sangh is the biggest institution for the removal of untouchability. It has wisely adopted a most liberal policy of giving scholarships to deserving students. It employs as many Harijans as possible. But it is in no sense a bureau for finding jobs for unemployed Harijans. Generally speaking, there is no dearth of jobs for Harijans who are fit for the jobs for which they offer themselves. The greatest hardship felt by thousands of Harijans is want of pure water for drinking and domestic use, denial of access to public schools and other institutions, constant pinpricks in villages and, last but not least, denial of access to temples of worship. These disabilities are stern realities in the lives of the vast mass of Harijans. If they as a mass give up Hinduism, they will do so because of these common disabilities which brand them as lepers of Hindu society. Hinduism is passing through a fiery ordeal. It will perish not through individual conversions, not even through mass conversions, but it will perish because of the sinful denial by the so-called savarna Hindus of elementary justice to Harijans. Every threat of conversion is, therefore, a warning to the savarnas that if they do not wake up in time, it may be too late!

One word to the impatient and needy Harijans. They must not use threats when they approach Hindu institutions or individuals for help. They should rely upon the strength of their case commanding a hearing. The majority of Harijans do not know what change of religion can mean. They mutely suffer the continuing degradation to which savarnas in their selfishness have consigned them. They must be the primary care of Hindu reformers whether they complain or do not. Those who are enlightened enough to know and feel the degradation and know also what change of religion means, are either too good Hindus to desert their ancestral faith and deserve every help they need, or being indifferent as to religion may not claim help from savarna Hindus in exchange for their condescending to remain in the Hindu fold. I would, therefore, plead with enlightened Harijans for their own sakes not to seek material betterment under threat of conversion. And whilst reformers must on no account yield to threats, they must ceaselessly strive to secure justice for Harijans at the hands of savarna Hindus.

Harijan, 21-3-1936

389. LETTER TO K.M. MUNSHI

DELHI, March 21, 1936

BHAJ MUNSHI,

Jamnalalji was greatly surprised at Kaka's letter to him on the subject of the conference, and I got scared. I have, therefore, sent Kaka a long telegram on behalf of Jamnalal but to your address. I have also written to him. It would not be proper to expect a long speech from me. I am not yet in a position to preside over such a large conference. When I said yes, I imagined there would be just a handful of men attending and we would be exchanging a few thoughts with one another. Your idea, it appears, is to have a gathering on a big scale. It is of course my own fault that I did not gather full information in advance. You may now do as you think fit. Indeed, I like Rajendra Babu's suggestion. He himself may even attend the function, and perhaps Jawaharlal too would. The latter may even agree to preside. Why should you not have Kaka or someone else as Chairman of the Reception Committee? If you hold the conference after the Hindi Sammelan and if they do have a Reception Committee, Jamnalalji might be available.

I hope you are both doing well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7598. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

1 Vide “Letter to D. B. Kalelkar”, 20-3-1936.
2 Ibid
390. LETTER TO TARA N. MASHRUWALA

March 21, 1936

CHI. TARA,

After all, you didn’t write to me. Anxiety or thinking about you—call it what you like—persists every day. I regard it as wrong that you should ignore your ailment. You have many excellent qualities, but this disregard of the body is hard to reconcile with them. You ought to make a “manly effort” to overcome your ailment. It does not matter if you have given up the treatment of Gaurishankerbhai. Try the prescription of any other in whom you have faith. I am certainly prepared to keep you under my care. You had, if I have correctly followed your words, no troubles when you were living with me. Try one thing for a week: take in two instalments, mixing it with your food, one tola of green garlic very finely crushed. It indeed had excellent effect on me. It helps greatly in eliminating viruses in the body—in relieving one of gas. This was the remedy prescribed by Dr. Ansari for Navin. Green garlic, which is to be consumed along with the bulb and the stems and the leaves, should be washed clean before it is crushed. It is meant not for imparting taste, but as medicine. Write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7526. Also C.W. 5002. Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala

391. INTERVIEW TO M. C. RAJAH

March 22, 1936

Rao Bahadur Rajah . . . discussed the Delimitation Committee’s recommendation which a Committee appointed by the Assembly had recently considered, and invited Ganhiji’s suggestions as to how to proceed further.

. . . I am not in a position to reveal these suggestions. . . Rao Bahadur Rajah was much exercised over the irresponsible talk of mass conversions and wondered if intensive religious propaganda among Harijans could not be undertaken. He instanced

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 From The Hindu
3 Member, Legislative Assembly
the formation of bhajan parties to travel from cheri to cheri singing bhajans and giving kathas, and wondered if the Sangh could not send some parties from the North. Gandhiji said:

Whilst parties could be sent from the North, there is no need for the South to depend on the North. The South has its inexhaustible treasures of religious songs and it should be the easiest thing to organize bhajan parties from the province itself. I have heard soul-stirring bhajans of Thyagaraja, and Sjt. Rajagopalachari and Dr. Rajan would give you many a tip in this behalf. For Malabar you cannot think of a better guide than the poet Vallathol Narayana Menon. I assure you there is a lot of musical talent even among Harijan boys of which we have not availed ourselves. During the Harijan tour in Bhavnagar I came across a Harijan boy who kept audiences spellbound by his simple songs. In her indigenous kindergarten school for Harijan children Anasuyabehn has an infant prodigy who wields his tabors as an expert and she has equally good songsters.

Dr. Ambedkar has every reason to be bitter for he has had to suffer humiliations and insults which should make anyone of us bitter and resentful. If it is permitted to be bitter and to vent one’s wrath, there is no reason why he should not do so. What he fails in my opinion to realize is that it is not the fault of Hinduism but of Hindus.

RAJAH: But has he to suffer those humiliations even now? Those must be a thing of the past.

GANDHIJI: Those particular humiliations are a thing of the past, but even now he would not be welcomed in an orthodox Brahmin’s house.

R. But why should he want to enter an orthodox Brahmin’s house?

G. It is not that he wants to enter it, but he resents the attitude. Even that refusal he would not resent if the rest of the svarnas were on their best behaviour. Thus if an orthodox Hindu minister were to invite a number of Hindus, including Dr. Ambedkar, to dinner, and if he discriminated against the Doctor by asking him to sit apart, it is the duty of the rest of the Hindus to leave that house along with Dr.

---

1 Slum
2 Religious stories
3 From July 1 to 3, 1934
4 Balagriha which Gandhiji visited on June 29, 1934
Ambedkar. If we all did so Dr. Ambedkar would easily feel like one of us.

Rao Bahadur Rajah wondered if under the new Constitution the Harijans might identify themselves with any of the Parties—the Congress Party, the Justice Party and so on. Gandhiji... said:

You must not identify yourselves with any party. My views about the existing system of government have not changed, but with the peculiar disabilities that you have suffered for ages I would not expect you to identify yourselves even with the most forward party in India. You will accept whatever is given you by Government, but you will not sacrifice your self-respect. You will similarly endorse whatever is good in the Congress programme, e. g., prohibition, abolition of the salt tax, and say to the world that you would not allow the Harijans to be in any way isolated from the poor of India whose interests are identical with yours. Whilst you will join no party you will under no circumstance whatsoever sell the country. If you can do this, Harijans will be the greatest factor in India. When these Harijans awake, they will become an irremovable force.

1 Bhagavad Gita, v. 18

_Harijan_, 28-3-1936

392. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

_DELHI,
_March 23, 1936_

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter disturbs me in more senses than one. You are not yet well. If life in Segaon does not suit you, you must leave in time and not as you had not in Bihar where there was a collapse. I may or may not know my limits. But you certainly do need to be cautioned, again and again. You must not become a wreck. And may this illness again be due to separation from me, though this time there are no such antecedent circumstances as there were last time. Re-read your letter to me; you have kept a copy. It will be terrible if it needs revision. But terrible or not, if there is the need, it must be revised. Only one thing must not happen and that is living with me for personal service. In my opinion you should be able joyfully to carry out the present understanding which is in no way arrived at under pressure of any kind whatsoever. Let the mere fact of my mention of this thing not disturb you.

I would not have discussed this at all except for the fact my stay here is being unavoidably prolonged and I do not know how long it will be. It won’t be beyond the middle of April in any case and it won’t be earlier than 7th April. I am booked up to 5th April.

Yes, do not believe Press resports. Dr. Ansari is giving me more and more latitude daily. He found me last night fitter than I was four days ago. He now wants me to walk for one hour at a stretch twice daily and undertake greater mental strain. He is trying to test the extreme of my capacity for physical and mental exertion. I have written many letters today besides an article for _Harijan._

The weather all over India is very funny this year. There is a howling wind blowing here just now. It is not thus ordinarily in March.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6320. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9786
393. LETTER TO BALIBEHN M. ADALAJA
AND KUMIBEHN T. MANIAR

March 23, 1936

CHI. BALI AND KUMI,

There is nothing particular to write to you. However, I am writing to acknowledge the letter your sisters have sent me. I was indeed very glad that you both saw me at Sabarmati. I expect the children are quite happy and hope that Kumi is now quiet and peaceful.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1555. Courtesy: Manubehn S.
Mashruwala

394. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

March 23, 1936

CHI. MANUDI,

I have your letter after a long time. If Ba and I do not happen to be in Wardha in the month of May, we shall consider what may be done. For your part, you should obtain the consent of your mother’s sisters and get ready. Ba returned today from a visit to Amritsar.
Madalasa accompanied her during the trip. I hope you are keeping fit.

Do not be lazy in writing to me.
I shall be in these parts for some more days still.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1556. Courtesy: Manubehn S.
Mashruwala
395. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

March 23, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

Enclosed is Bhansalibhai’s letter. Nanavati will have understood the meaning of the telegram. I have got the import of your letter. It will be enough for me if you bring credit to your work.

This will be all for the present since I have lots of other writing to do today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

396. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

March 25, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter. Just a line to say that I have to stay for the Congress. I shall not be there therefore before 15th April. I am sorry but it was inevitable. I am just off to see the Poet¹. Dr. Ansari’s diagnosis remains hopeful. The manometer showed a rise of 8 points but he is not disturbed. He insists on my taking garlic. I wrote to you yesterday.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6321. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9787

397. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

March 25, 1936

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

I read both your letters. If you find no peace in Savli or your health suffers there, you have my permission and blessings to go wherever you deem fit. Kishorelalbhai will write in detail. I have written to him at length.¹

¹ Rabindranath Tagore

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1883

398. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

March 25, 1936

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I got your letter. I shall not write much as I am writing this at night.

I had long talks with Jawaharlal, but what shall I write about them? My stay at Lucknow may perhaps extend to the 3rd. On the same day I shall proceed to Allahabad, from where I would return to Lucknow on the 7th, perhaps, and stay on till the Congress session. Hence I take it that you will be meeting me somewhere or other.

Blessings from
BAPU

Form a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3465

399. LETTER TO RABINDRANATH TAGORE

DELHI,
March 27, 1936

DEAR GURUDEV,

God has blessed my poor effort. And here is the money². Now you will relieve the public mind by announcing cancellation of the rest of the programme. May God keep you for many a year to come.

Yours with love,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 2288

¹ The letter is not available.
² Gandhiji had sent a draft for Rs 60,000 for the Visva-Bharati. Vide also “Letter to Rabindranath Tagore”, 13-10-1935.
400. DISCUSSION WITH HARIJAN SEVAKS

[March 27, 1936]

HARIJAN SEVAKS: We received our inspiration from Swami Shraddhanandaji.

GANDHIJI: Not only you, but many of us received inspiration from the noble life of the late Swamiji.

Why don’t you take some steps to counteract the vicious propaganda of the missionaries? Why not have Hindu missionaries for counter-propaganda? Of course, Mahatmaji, you are there enough to cover the whole field. But pracharaks are needed.

Let me explain to you. The Sangh was not created for that purpose. Our object was to end the disabilities of Harijans and to put them on the same social level as the rest of the Hindus. As for propaganda that you have in mind, the best propaganda is that of personal example. Let every Harijan sevak lead a model life of purity and simplicity, clothe the Harijans with love and, I am quite sure, no counter-propaganda will be necessary.

But there are places where the missionaries rush to the scene, do nothing but provide a few amenities like a water-pipe or a good road and make the recipients declare that they are Christians. The poor recipients often do so, but beyond the declaration they do nothing. They share in the life of their Harijan brethren, celebrate the same Hindu festivals, and remain Hindus in every respect, except perhaps for census purposes.

True. They will remain Harijans and even the missions will not set much store by them. Our duty is to work hard amongst the orthodox Hindus and to get them to admit the Harijans in their fold as their kith and kin and to end the disabilities they suffer from.

But how are we to persuade the orthodox? May we storm their fortresses? There are local board wells, for instance, which have been thrown open to the Harijans but the orthodox people will not allow them to use them. May we advise the Harijans to defy the opposition and challenge them to do their worst?

You might, where you are fearless and where you are sure that

---

1 The workers, including some Harijans, met Gandhiji “on the last day” of his stay in Delhi i.e., March 27
2 ibid
3 Those who belonged to the Arya Samaj
4 Propaganda workers there will be no clash and that the Harijans will not be cowed down. But the opposition is melting away gradually everywhere and I trust no storming will be necessary.

When untouchability is no more, Mahatmaji, what varna will you assign to us?

Who am I to assign a varna to you? But if I had the power, I should declare that we are Hindus, all of the same varna. As I have made it clear over and over again there is no real varna today. When we have come to our own, when we have cleansed ourselves, we may have the four varnas according to the way in which we can express the best in us. But varna then will invest no one with a superior status or right, it will invest one with higher responsibility and duties. Those who will impart knowledge in a spirit of service will be called Brahmans. They will assume no superior airs but will be true servants of society. When inequality of status or rights is ended, every one of us will be equal. I do not know, however, when we shall be able to revive true varnadharma. Its real revival would mean true democracy.

What we want today is not that the caste Hindus eat with us or have marital ties with us. We want rights of true citizenship, equal opportunities.

I want my son to have the liberty to be a vakil or a barrister or a doctor according to his own wish

You know there is no legal bar against your son being anything he likes. There is custom, hard prejudice and blind superstition. That the Snagh is trying its best to fight. Dr. Ambedkar is a barrister and now a professor. But blind orthodoxy will not treat him as equal with the savarnas. You cannot force them by legal enactment. You can do it by education, by converting the orthodox. There was, for instance, a Harijan who used to sell bidis in Nasik. So long as no one knew that he was a Harijan, he had very good custom. The moment they came to know that he was Harijan, they stopped purchasing bidis at his shop. How are we to compel people to purchase bidis at his shop, otherwise than by showing them that it is inhuman and irreligious of them to boycott anybody by reason of his birth?

But why should we be called Harijans and not Hindus?

I know that a small section of you resents the name. But you may know the genesis of the name. You used to be called ‘depressed classes’ or ‘asprishyas’ or ‘achhoots’ (untouchables). All these names the vast mass of you naturally resented. Some of you sent their protests to me and asked me to find out a better name. In English I had adopted a better word than ‘depressed’, viz., ‘suppressed’, but whilst I was casting about for a good Indian word a friend suggested the word ‘Harijan’ taken from the song of one of the best of our saints1. It appealed to me because it best described your condition and still had no bad odour about it. It means a devotee of God, and as God is the help of the helpless, and as it is the helpless who naturally turn to God, I thought you deserved the name better than I for instance. For whilst I have to aspire to become a Harijan you are Harijans in the very nature of things. But you will say, ‘When your objective is to make Harijans Hindus why don’t you start by calling them Hindus straightaway?’ What am I to do so long as I have not succeeded in abolishing untouchability?

But today, sir, it is an opprobrious term. There is a Brahmin who threatens to hammer us if we call him a Harijan.

Then he is no Brahmin. You know the word ‘Harijan’ occurs in Tulsidas’s Ramayana? There Lakshmana describes to Parashurama the characteristic of a true Kshatriya. He says:

\[ \text{सूर महिसुर हरिजन आह गाई } \text{ हरमें कुल इन्ह पर न लूमा} \]

(It is the trait of our clan never to use force towards a god, a Brahmin, a Harijan or a cow.) ‘Harijan’ there means a man of God, a devotee, no matter to what caste or varna he belongs. We all have to treasure the beautiful connotation of the word and try to be worthy of the name.

One more question. You call your Sangh “Harijan Sevak Sangh.” You are unnecessarily exploiting our name. Fourteen annas in the rupee expended by the Harijan Sevak Sangh goes into the pockets of non-Harijans, 2 annas barely goes into the pockets of the poor Harijans.

Now, now, there you are betraying gross ignorance. I can prove to you the reverse of what you say. Have you got any proof in support of your statement? I make you a sporting offer. If you can prove what you say, you can come to Wardha, at the Sangh’s expense, with all the evidence in your possession, and if you succeed in convincing me I shall declare myself beaten and do proper penance. In case you fail, I will not ask you to pay back to me the train fare. But I will expect you to publicly apologize for bringing a baseless charge against the Sangh. The Sangh’s books are there open to inspection by anyone, and I tell you the books will convince you that the truth is the reverse of what you say.

1 Narasinha Mehta; vide “My Notes”, 6-8-1931.

There is one thing certainly that you can prove. It is that there are a few sevaks who are paid even as much as a hundred rupees per month. But where that is the case, through such a sevak we distribute thousands to Harijans. Also he who is being paid a hundred rupees could easily earn in the market much more than what he receives. I am ready to confess, too, that, there are some who have to be paid as much as their market value but if no volunteer workers are available, or if you cannot get the services of the present staff on better terms, what can be done? I can, however, assure you that our administrative charges do not exceed 15 per cent, and the balance goes for the benefit of the Harijans.¹

_Harijan, 4-4-1936_

401. TEMPLE-ENTRY

The reader will recall the important resolution² on temple-entry passed recently by the Harijan Sevak Sangh. No one need run away with the idea that because not much is nowadays heard of the questions it has been forgotten or given up by the Sangh. Pandit Malaviyaji’s visit to Nasik and the vast audiences that gathered round him show that the people as a whole are not averse to the removal of untouchability, though it showed also that orthodoxy was not yet prepared to give up its untouchability. But it is not possible to await developments. The local Sanghs should make a sustained effort to have the existing temples thrown open and even to build new ones, not for Harijans only but for all. If they are situated in healthy localities and have a school, a meeting place and a dharmashala attached to them, they must prove useful and popular among all classes of Hindus. There may be public prayers held there every evening or at stated periods and religious discourses may be occasionally arranged. If these temples are properly conducted, they would go a long way towards removing the prejudice against the opening of existing temples to Harijans. Care must be taken, where temples are opened to Harijans, that no discrimination is made against them. They must be opened on precisely the same terms as they are opened to the other Hindus.

¹ Harijans who were present at the meeting repudiated the suggestion and admitted that the bulk of the funds went into Harijans’ pockets.

² At the annual meeting held in Delhi from February 6 to 8. It read: “Since any further delay in securing temple-entry for Harijans will result in great harm to Hindu dharma, and since such temple-entry is part of the immediate justice to which the Harijans are entitled, the Central Board of the All-India Harijan Sevak Sangh resolves that effective steps be taken immediately for achieving temple-entry for Harijans and, with a view to achieving this purpose, the Executive Committee be asked to take necessary steps in consultation with Gandhiji”.

328 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

It is hardly necessary to state that in different localities different methods may be adopted for securing the desired end. Perfect non-violence must of course be maintained in all cases. An all-India simultaneous movement of the same type is not contemplated. It will vary in intensity and method according to the circumstances in each locality. Nowhere should temples be opened where there is an active minority opposed to the opening. Practical unanimity should be secured before any temple is opened. Thus what is required is sustained effort to convert local public opinion in favour of temple-entry.

The position in the Hindu States is somewhat different. Where the Prince or his officials are favourably inclined, there should be no difficulty about opening them. The question has assumed a great importance in Travancore. In most other places Harijans are indifferent about temple-entry. The position is otherwise in Travancore. The vast majority of Harijans of that State are far more advanced than in other places. They have many men belonging to the learned professions. Many have passed through colleges. They naturally chafe under any restriction of their liberty but most of all on the entry into temples. One hears that the large body of savarnas there are wholly in favour of the removal of the bar. Travancore has an enlightened Prince and an enlightened Maharani. Surely the opposition of a few orthodox persons, however influential they may be in their own spheres, cannot be allowed to prevent a much-needed reform which has become long overdue. But Harijan sevaks should by an accurate referendum or some such means show beyond all doubt that a great majority of savarna Hindus are decidedly in favour of the opening of Travancore temples to Harijans precisely on the same terms as themselves. The Maharaja may not march in advance of the public opinion of his State, but I can hardly imagine his flouting clearly expressed public opinion.

_Harijan_, 28-3-1936
402. FOR THE YOUNG

It is the fashion in some quarters nowadays for the young to discredit whatever may be said by old people. I am not prepared to say that there is absolutely no justification for this belief. But I warn the youth of the country against always discounting whatever old men or women may say for the mere fact that it is said by such persons. Even as wisdom often comes from the mouths of babes, so does it often come from the mouths of old people. The golden rule is to test everything in the light of reason and experience, no matter from whom it comes. I want to revert to the subject of birth-control by contraceptives. It is dinned into one’s ears that gratification of the sex urge is a solemn obligation like the obligation of discharging debts lawfully incurred, and that not to do so would involve the penalty of intellectual decay. This sex urge has been isolated from the desire for progeny, and it is said by the protagonists of the use of contraceptives that conception is an accident to be prevented except when the parties desire to have children. I venture to suggest that this is a most dangerous doctrine to preach anywhere; much more so in a country like India where the middle-class male population has become imbecile through abuse of the creative function. If satisfaction of the sex urge is a duty, the unnatural vice of which I wrote some time ago and several other ways of gratification would be commendable. The reader should know that even persons of note have been known to approve of what is commonly know as sexual perversion. He may be shocked at the statement. But if it somehow or other gains the stamp of respectability, it will be the rage among boys and girls to satisfy their urge among members of their own sex. For me the use of contraceptives is not far removed from the means to which persons have hitherto resorted for the gratification of their sexual desire with results that very few know. I know what havoc secret vice has played among schoolboys and schoolgirls. The introduction of contraceptives under the name of science and imprimatur of known leaders society has intensified the complication and made the task of reformers who work for purity of social life well-nigh impossible for the moment. I betray no confidence when I inform the reader that there are unmarried girls of impressionable age studying in schools and colleges who study birth-control literature and magazines with avidity and even possess contraceptives. It is impossible to confine their use to married women. Marriage loses its sanctity when its purpose and highest use is conceived to be the satisfaction of the animal passion without contemplating the natural result of such satisfaction.

I have no doubt that those learned men and women who are carrying no propaganda with missionary zeal in favour of the use of contraceptives are doing irreparable harm to the youth of the country under the false belief that they will be saving thereby the poor women who may be obliged to bear children against their will. Those who need to limit their children will not be easily reached by them. Our poor women have not the knowledge or the training that the women of the West have. Surely the propaganda is not being carried on on behalf of the middle-class women, for they do not need the knowledge, at any rate so much as the poor classes do.

The greatest harm, however, done by that propaganda lies in its rejection of the old ideal and substitution in its place of one which, if carried out, must spell the moral and physical extinction of the race. The horror with which ancient literature has regarded the fruitless use of the vital fluid was not a superstition born of ignorance. What shall we say of a husband—man—who will sow the finest seed in his possession on stony ground or of the owner of a field who will receive in his field rich with fine soil good seed under conditions that will make it impossible for it to grow? God has blessed man with seed that has the highest potency and woman with a field richer than the richest earth to be found anywhere on this globe. Surely it is criminal folly for man to allow his most precious possession to run to waste. He must guard it with a care greater than he will bestow upon the richest pearls in his possession. And so is a woman guilty of criminal folly who will receive the seed in her life-producing field with the deliberate intention of letting it run to waste. Both he and she will be judged guilty of misuse of the talents given to them and they will be dispossessed of what they have been given. Sex urge is a fine and noble thing. There is nothing to be ashamed of in it. But it is meant only for the act of creation. Any other use of it is a sin against God and humanity. Contraceptives of a kind there were before and there will be hereafter, but the use of them was formerly regarded as sinful. It was reserved for our generation to glorify vice by calling it virtue.
The greatest disservice protagonists of contraceptives are rendering to the youth of India is to fill their minds with what appears to me to be wrong ideology. Let the young men and women of India who hold her destiny in their hands beware of this false god and guard the treasure with which God has blessed them and use it, if they wish, for the only purpose for which it is intended.

_Harijan_, 28-3-1936

403. SPEECH AT KHADI AND VILLAGE INDUSTRIES

EXHIBITION, LUCKNOW

_March 28, 1936_

I am glad and thankful to be able to come to Lucknow to open this khadi and other village industries exhibition. I may tell you that I was eager to be here at the opening. Though I know that Dr. Murarilal and Sjt. Shankerlal Banker have devoted themselves heart and soul to organizing it, at the back of it all was my conception. This exhibition, to my mind, brings out concretely for the first time the conception of a true rural exhibition I have nursed in my breast for several years. In 1921 when we met in Ahmedabad in the first year of the new Congress Constitution, we took the first step towards rural-mindedness, and the exhibition organized under the auspices of the Congress held there was the beginning of the process which you find reaching its maturity today after 15 years. I have believed and repeated times without number that India is to be found not in its few cities but in its 7,00,000 villages. But we who have gathered here are not villagers. We are town-dwellers. We town-dwellers have believed that India is to be found in its towns and that the villages were created to minister to our needs. We have hardly ever paused to inquire of those poor folks get sufficient to eat and clothe themselves with and whether they have a roof to shelter themselves from sun and rain. Now I do not think any Congress worker has travelled through the length and breadth of India as much as I have done during the past twenty years. That in itself is hardly thing to be proud of. I, however, humbly claim, as a result of those peregrinations, to know the Indian villages more than any other Congress worker or leader. I have found that the town-dweller has generally exploited the villager, in fact he has lived on the poor villager’s substance. Many a British official has written about the

---

1 This appeared under the title “A Unique Exhibition”. conditions of the people of India. No one has, to my knowledge, said that the Indian villager has enough to keep body and soul together.
On the contrary they have admitted that the bulk of the population live on the verge of starvation and ten per cent are semi-starved, and that millions have to rest content with a pinch of dirty salt and chillies and polished rice or parched grain. You may be sure that if any of us were to be asked to live on that diet, we should not expect of survive it longer than a month or should be afraid of losing our mental faculties. And yet our villagers go through that state from day to day.
The Village Industries Association was formed last year\(^1\) in order to study the conditions in which they lived and the state of their handicrafts, and to revive such village arts and crafts as may be revived. Simultaneously with the creation of the A.I.V.I. Association was passed a resolution to the effect that future exhibitions should be organized by the Spinners’ and the Village Industries Associations.
This exhibition I am about to declare open today is the first of that kind.

As I have told you the whole conception here is mine, and yet I must confess that we are still far from bringing out that conception fully. It is an evidence of the organizers’ wonderful industry, and yet it is not perfect of its kind. It was not humanly possible to achieve it during the time at their disposal. It is no easy job to bring village artisans form their villages. You will find here villagers from South India who perhaps don’t know where they have come to. It is the purpose of this Exhibition to show that even this starving India of the villages is capable of producing things which we town-dwellers may use both to the villagers’ and our advantage.

This exhibition is not a spectacular show like its predecessors.
Those earlier ones were bound to be big shows. They were designed for a different purpose. Congress expenses were generally found out of the takings of the exhibition. The whole outlook was changed last year. We decided not to have things of spectacular interest, but we decided to give the spectators a glimpse of the Indian villager and his craft. This therefore is a vast educative effort. Not that we will have no takings this time. Only they will depened on those Congressmen who are intent on freedom and will win it by rehabilitating the village. If they will establish a living bond between towns and villages, they will

\(^1\) Vide “A.I.V.I.A—Object and Constitution”, 14-12-1934.
\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Jivanji D. Desai”. flock to the exhibition and will make a point of studying the various demonstrations in the exhibition.

This cannot be done by one visit only. You should visit it daily and carefully study every section. If you will do this, you will marvel at the energy and industry expended in organizing it. You will be deeply interested in it if you approach it in a spirit of service. You will find here craftsmen and craftswomen for Kashmir and South India, form Sind and Assam, and learn how they earn their scanty living. You will find that it is within your power to add a little to their income and to enable them to have square meal, if only you will make up your minds to pay for their wares enough to ensure them a living wage.

You will not expect me to describe all or even one of the numerous sections of the exhibition. It is impossible for me to do so. Let me tell you that you will have an inkling of the inside even from where you are sitting. For in front of you are no triumphal arches but there are simply but exquisitely decorated walls done by Sjt. Nandlal Bose, the eminent artist from Santiniketan, and his co-workers who have tried to represent all the villagers’ crafts in simple artistic symbols. And when you go inside the art gallery on which Babu Nandlal Bose has lavished his labours for weeks, you will feel, as I did, like spending there hours together. But even the other sections will attract you. You may not find in the exhibition anything to amuse you like music or cinema shows but I assure you you will find much to learn.

In conclusion, I want you all to be voluntary advertising agents of the exhibition so that numbers may be attracted to see it. The exhibition has not been organized for the villagers, it is organized for the city-dweller to enable him to see how the villager lives and what he is capable of. The Reception Committee has spent something like Rs. 35, 000 in order to bring this exhibition into being. The lest that you must do is to enable them to meet the expenses. This you can do if you become their enthusiastic advertising agents. Commission I can promise none, though I dare say you will get it for work dutifully done when you appear before the Great White Throne. I may tell you that I am staying here for some days and expect to visit the exhibition as often as I can. I shall therefore know how you have discharged your trust.
It is our intention to throw the exhibition open to the people from villages if the expenses are covered.

You will find in the exhibition many a drawback, but you and I are to blame for them, not the villagers. Let me tell you, however, that the organizers have attempted the stupendous task of achieving in a few weeks the work which should take many months to be properly done. You will therefore bear with us and forgive the shortcomings you will no doubt see.

_Harijan, 4-4-1936_

404. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

LUCKNOW,
March 29, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

It is nearing time for bed, 8.25 p.m. I have just taken silence. Your letters have reached me in time. I was able to speak for over 38 minutes without any strain at the opening of the Exhibition. It is too early to say whether it will be a success. Shankerlal has worked like a Trojan.

We leave Lucknow on 3rd April night train and [shall] be in Allahabad from 4 to 7th reaching Lucknow on 8th. If all goes well I expect to leave Lucknow for Wardha on 12th or 13th. I hope you are steadily getting better.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6322. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9788.

405. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

March 29, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your two letters—one reflecting a disturbed mind and the other a quiet one. I was glad to have both. I would be able to give you some guidance so long as you reveal your whole mind to me. It would be good indeed if your present peace of mind endures, but I will not be scared if you happen to lose it again. Trying in this way, some day you will certainly attain steadiness of mind. I have not at all given up the hopes I had of you. You, too, should not give up. Now I expect to return only on the 15th of April. It is unlikely that I might reach earlier, and don’t be scared if I am delayed by two more days.

Take good care of your health. One may say you have made good progress in carding.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.] Deliver the enclosed letter to Mirabehn.¹

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9339. Also C.W. 6614. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

406. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

LUCKNOW,
March 30, 1936

I have received no communication whatsoever from Lord Halifax. The whole story is a fabrication.² I am sorry that responsible newspapers should publish sensational statements, the truth or otherwise of which they could verify without loss of time.

The Bombay Chronicle, 31-3-1936

407. LETTER TO UMADEVI BAJAJ

March 30, 1936

CHI. OM,

I am well aware that you have in my illness a good excuse for not writing to me; but, as you know, your letters would not prove a burden to me. You would cease to be the ‘Sleeping Beauty’—won’t you—if you thus began writing!

I write this because you do not keep cheerful there, you get

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² Some newspapers had reported that Lord Halifax was arranging an interview between Lord Linlithgow and Gandhiji.
³ The addressee who accompanied Gandhiji during the Harijan tour of 1933 used to snatch naps as often as possible which earned her this nickname.
homesick and sometimes even shed tears. When did you get so soft as that? Our home is where we happen to live. After all, aren’t we sojourning in this world for “a few days”? I have not seen those parts myself, but I am told the region has a bracing climate and is equally beautiful, too. I expect you have seen Mr. Duncan¹. I should have from you a description of the place.

All of us, including Kakaji and Madalasa, are here together at Lucknow. We shall go to Allahabad on the 3rd and probably return on the 8th. We hope to reach Wardha some time about the 15th.

One may say my health is now good enough. Do you try to get Harijan Sevak? I think you now understand English also very well.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, pp. 342-3

408. LETTER TO VITHAL L. PHADKE

March 30, 1936

CHI. MAMA,

I don’t know whether Sardar has replied to you. You should do as he says. For my part, I would say that you should not incur the trouble of having a house, unless you are required to stay there rather long.

You must have read in Harijan what I have written² about an ideal temple. Read it if you have not. While writing it I had you in mind.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3834

¹ Duncan Greenlees
409. LETTER TO CHAMPABEHN R. MEHTA

March 30, 1936

CHI. CHAMPA

The only person I know in Kashmir is Shri Surendra Mashruwala of the Khadi Bhandar. You may write to him direct. If you like, you may enclose this letter. You should do as he says.

The address is: A.I.S.A. Depot, Srinagar, Kashmir.

I expect you are all doing well. Mother must be well enough and Prabhashankar completely restored and on his feet again.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI CHAMPABEHN
SHASHI BHUVAN
SABARMATI

From Gujarati: C.W. 9693. Courtesy: Moolubhai Nautamlal

410. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

March 30, 1936

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA.

I got your letters. As for Medh, Ba tried very hard. If no help is available there, it does not matter even if all the savings get exhausted. In no time can one earn the money again if one’s health is restored. Failing that, one should cheerfully remain in God’s keeping as He wills.

I follow the idea of leaving Sita in the care of A. You should do what you both think fit. In my view it would be a great thing if all preserve their health.

We are in Lucknow for the present and shall be here till the Congress session. To Wardha thereafter.

I may be said to be well enough now, though it cannot be said that I have regained my strength.

1 Wife of Ratilal, Dr. Pranjivan Mehta’s son
2 Addressee’s father
Krishnadas has come to Lucknow with his wife. Of course Prabhudas’ and Amba’ are already here. Prabhudas has been showing his spinning-wheel to everyone around. Ramdas has taken up yet another job. After such trials, he would settle down somewhere. Devdas and Lakshmi are still at Bombay. Jamnadas has already started business there.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4849

411. LETTER TO INDIRA NEHRU

March 30, 1936

CHI. INDU,

Kamala’s passing away has added to your responsibilities but I have no misgivings about you. You have grown so wise that you understand your dharma fully well. Kamala possessed some qualities rarely found in other women. I am entertaining the hope that all the qualities of Kamala will be manifested in you in equal measure. May God give you long life and strength to emulate her virtues.

This time I have been able to have heart-to-heart talks with Jawaharlal. I shall leave here for Allahabad on the 3rd April. It has been decided that I should stay on till the Congress session but you should address your reply to Wardha.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: Gandhi-Indira Gandhi Correspondence: Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 Chhaganlal Gandhi’s son
2 Wife of Prabhudas Gandhi
412. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

CAMP LUCKNOW,
April 1, 1936[1]

CHI. JAMNALAL,

Kindly have Rs. 15,000 (fifteen thousand only) sent to the Secretary, Dakshina Bharat Hindi Prachar Sabha, Madras, out of whatever funds have been collected for the ‘purse’[2] in connection with the Indore session of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2960

413. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

LUCKNOW,
April 3, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Though you could have stayed here till today, it was well you went on Tuesday. Your wire was good and the letter quite in keeping with the past performances. Yes, we had the rain here, too, but not much damage was done at the Exhibition for the dust storm and the cold wind gave ample warning. The attendance is improving. Of course it was good to have told your sister-in-law to purchase khadi for you. I understand she went yesterday and bought a fair quantity, I hope, not all for you. I was tempted to buy an exquisite mat for Rs. 35 for you. But I resisted the temptation. Mahadev was inclined to purchase it.

I am glad Nabi Bux[3] told you why he would not eat at Harijan mess. I shall talk to Amtul Salaam about it. This is being written before the morning prayer. Don’t be alarmed. I got up only at 3.50.

---

[1] The source has “1935”, but Gandhiji was in Lucknow on April 1, 1936.
[2] The purse of one lakh rupees which was to be presented by the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan to Gandhiji for propagation of Hindi; vide “Speech at Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, Indore”, 20-4-1935.
[3] Addresssee’s attendant

340 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
I miss you during my walks more than at other times. At other times, I saw very little of you.

Expect you in July at the latest.

Hope Shummy has got rid of his cold, etc., and that Beryl is thoroughly restored.

Love to you both.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3566. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6375

414. TELEGRAHM TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

April 3, 1936

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI

BIRLA HOUSE

NEW DELHI

WIRE IF HEALTH PERMITS YOUR PRESENCE

ALLAHABAD MONDAY¹ FOR CERTAIN.

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

415. LETTER TO C.F. ANDREWS

April 3, 1936

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have had your letters to which Mahadev has been replying. I have been permitted for some time to write few letters daily and to write to a limited extent for Harijan.

This is however to inform you that Gurudev’s presence in Delhi whilst I was there made it possible to collect the whole of the deficit, i.e., Rs. 60, 000. Gurudev was pleased beyond measure and cancelled the rest of the tour. So you see how God worked. This news ought to help you to get rid or anxiety complex.

I am just now in Lucknow for the Khadi Exhibition and the Congress. I am not taking any active part in the latter. We hope to return to Wardha by the middle of the month.

I hope you are, i.e., your work is, prospering.

Love.

MOHAN

From a photostat: G.N. 988

¹ For the Congress Working Committee meeting on April 6
416. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

April 3, 1936

DEAR AGATHA,

Every mail-day I think of you and then let it pass by so as not to add to the number of letters I am permitted to write. Though no numerical limit has been put, I try to carry our the spirit of their advice.

I have had very long and quiet chats with Jawaharlal. By the time this reaches you, you will know the result of the Congress deliberations.

You must have been filled with disgust as we have been here over the sensational and false news published in the Indian Press about the supposed interview to take place between the coming Viceroy and myself. Poor Lord Halifax has also been dragged in. Nowadays I never believe anything that appears in the papers. I hope you, too, do likewise.

Love to you all.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1493

417. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

April 3, 1936

DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,

I have your long letter and have read it carefully. Bapa’s letter has not at all pained me. I know you are not the one to take defeat and I believe the taunting words of Rukminibehn1 will not affect you. However, Bapa’s letter suggests that you are not really needed there. It is a different matter that you are sure to be of service wherever you may be. I wish to put you where they need your services, and you are indeed needed elsewhere. Hence I have written to Bapa to send you to me if you are not really needed there. Now do what Bapa says.

2 Wife of N.R. Malkani

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
It is not true that people find fault with you because you are a Muslim. But do not mind if they do so because you are a woman and an unmarried one. Even in such a case, however, be assured that they are just a few, if any, whereas there are countless people who respect you and love you for your purity. But you never care for praise or censure, do you? You may start worrying when I entertain any suspicion of you. Go to Segaon. Get away from Bapa.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 333

418. FOR CONTRACEPTIVES

A correspondent writes:¹

I would like to say a few words on the report of the interview² between Mrs. Sanger and Mahatma Gandhi that appeared recently in the Harijan.

The cardinal fact that I see missed in the interview is that it has not been taken into consideration that man is above all an artist and a creator. He is not satisfied with bare necessity, but must have beauty, colour and charm as well. . . . He has made every necessity into an art and has spent tons of blood on them. His creative instinct impels him to add to his difficulties and problems and solve them over again. He cannot be ‘simple’ as Rousseau, Ruskin, Tolstoy, Thoreau, and Gandhiji would like him to be. War he must have as its necessary corollary which also he has transformed into a great art.

To appeal to him [to copy] the example of nature would be in vain, for it is totally incompatible with his very being. ‘Nature’ cannot be his teacher . . . . “From an artistic standpoint,” says Nietzsche the iconoclast, ‘nature is no model. It exaggerates, distorts and leaves gaps. Nature is the accident. To study ‘from nature’ seems to me bad sign; thus lying in the dust before trivial facts is unworthy of a thorough artist” . . . . To end sexual life when the need of propagation is no longer there, or to enjoin sex-communion expressly with the desire of begetting offspring, is too calculating, too natural, too ‘matter-of-fact’ . . . .

. . . I do not mean to underrate the value of the discipline of self-control or what is technically knows as brahmacharya. I would always admire it as the art of the control of the sex instinct carried to perfection. But just as the perfection of other arts does not interfere with the science of life, with the whole life (in the Nietzschean sense of the term), with the proper scheme of all the values of life, so also I will not allow the value of the ideal of brahmacharya dominate other values, far less use is as an instrument of solving problems, such as over-population. . . . I believe it was with an eye to such a scheme of values that the scriptures said, “यदृच्छयामेव तद् यदृच्छा रात्रिस्तथा संदृष्टिः” or, there is brahmacharya where sexual union occurs only at night (i.e., as opposed to abnormal cohabitation during the day time). Here normal sex-life itself is spoken of as brahmacharya, the rigid conception of which began after we had already topsyturvyed the proper scheme of all values of life.

¹ Only extracts of the letter are reproduced here.
² Vide “Interview to Margaret Sanger”, 3/4-12-1935.

I gladly publish this letter as I should any such letter that is not full of declamation, abuse or insinuations. The reader should have both the sides of the question to enable him to come a decision. I am myself eager to know why a thing which is claimed to be scientific and beneficial and which has many distinguished supporters repels me notwithstanding my effort to see the bright side of it.

Thus it is not proved to my satisfaction that sexual union in marriage is in itself good and beneficial to the unionists. To the contrary effect I can bear ample testimony from my own experience and that of many friends. I am not aware of any of us having derived any benefit, mental, spiritual or physical. Momentary excitement and satisfaction there certainly was. But it was invariably followed by exhaustion. And the desire for union returned immediately the effect of exhaustion had worn out. Although I have always been a conscientious worker, I can clearly recall the fact that this indulgence interfered with my work. It was the consciousness of this limitation that put me on the track of self-restraint and I have no manner of doubt that the self-restraint is responsible for the comparative freedom of illnesses that I have enjoyed for long periods and for my output of energy and work both physical and mental which eye-witnesses have described as phenomenal.

I fear that the correspondent has misapplied his reading. Man is undoubtedly an artist and creator. Undoubtedly he must have beauty and therefore colour. His artistic and creative nature at its best taught him to see art in self-restraint and ugliness in uncreative union. His instinct for the artistic taught him to discriminate and to know that any conglomeration of colours was no mark of beauty, nor every sense enjoyment good in itself. His eye for art taught man to seek enjoyment in usefulness. Thus he learnt at an early stage if his evolution that he was to eat for its own sake as some of us still do, but he should eat to enable him to live. At a later stage he learnt further that there was neither beauty nor joy in living for its own sake but that he must live to serve his fellow-creatures and through them his Maker. Similarly, when he pondered over the phenomenon of the pleasurableness of sexual union, he discovered that like every other organ of sense, this one of generation had its use and abuse. And he saw that its true function, its right use, was to restrict it to generation. Any other use, he saw, was ugly and he saw further that it was fraught with very serious consequences as well to the individual as to the race. It is hardly necessary for me to prolong the argument.

The correspondent says well than man makes art out of his necessities. Necessity is not only the mother of invention, it is the mother also of art. We should therefore beware of that art which has not necessity as its basis.

Nor may we dignify every want by the name of necessity. Man’s estate is one of probation. During that period he is played upon by evil forces as well as good. He is every prey to temptations. He has to prove his manliness by resisting and fighting temptations. He is no warrior who fights outside foes of his imagination and is powerless to lift his little finger against the innumerable foes within, or, what is worse, mistakes them for friends. “War he must have”. But the correspondent is wrong when he says that “as its necessary corollary he has transformed it into a great art”. He has hardly yet learnt the art of war. He has mistaken false war for true even as our forefathers under a mistaken view of sacrifice instead of sacrificing their base passions sacrificed innocent non-human fellow-creatures as many even do at the present day. We have yet to learn the art of true war. Surely there is neither beauty nor art in what is going on today on the Abyssinian frontier. The correspondent has chosen unhappy (for him) names for his illustrations. Rousseau, Ruskin, Thoreau and Tolstoy were firstclass artists of their time. They will live even after many of us are dead, cremated and forgotten.

The correspondent seems to have misapplied the word ‘nature’. When an appeal to man is made to copy or study nature, he is not invited to follow what the reptiles do or even what the King of the forest does. He has to study man’s nature at its best, i.e., I presume his regenerate nature, whatever it may be. Perhaps it requires considerable effort to know what regenerate nature is. It is dangerous nowadays to refer to old teachers. I suggest to the correspondent that it is unnecessary to bring in Neitzsche or even Prashnopanishad. The question for me is past the stage of quotations. What has cold reason to say on the point under discussion? Is it or is it not correct to say that the only right use of the generative organ is to confine it solely to generation and that any other use is its abuse? If it is, no difficulty in achieving the right use and avoiding the wrong should baffle the scientific seeker.

_Harijan_, 4-4-1936

419. HINDI PRACHAR APPEAL

The following appeal¹ has been issued by Sheth Jamnalal Bajaj and others:

The Dakshin Bharat Hindi Prachar Sabha is the body at present engaged in carrying out Mahatma Gandhi’s work of propagating Hindi in South India, inaugurated by him eighteen years ago at the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan held at Prayag in 1918. Since its inception the Sabha has succeeded in laying the work of Hindi prachar in South India on a firm and sure basis. For the last five or six years it has been functioning in a self-sufficient manner. It is at present operating through its 450 centres in four different provinces with different languages in South India. Besides, the teaching of Hindi is being pushed forth through the various arts schools and colleges through the efforts of the Sabha. The total number of students receiving instruction in Hindi in South India through the agency of the Sabha today stands over 40,000.

It is now proposed to erect a bhavan for the Sabha to house its various departments. The Madras Corporation has donated three acres and a half of land for the purpose. . . . The scheme would cost one lakh rupees and when completed will include, besides residential quarters for the workers, a college with hostel accommodation for at least 50 for training workers for Hindi prachar work, an arts school where Hindi will be compulsory and a prayer hall and a gymnasium for the use of students and workers of the Sabha and the neighbouring public. . . .

¹ Of which only extracts are reproduced here.
All remittances should be sent to the Treasurer, Dakshin Bharat Hindi Prachar Sabha, 107, Armenian Street or to Indo-Commercial Bank, Madras.

I heartily endorse the appeal and hope that it will receive adequate response.

_Harijan_, 4-4-1936

420. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

ALLAHABAD,

April 5, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letter duly came today. You shall have the shawl if it is unsold when I reach Lucknow. But you will have to develop a kind of village art, cheap yet real beautiful. You must have seen something about art in my latest article on birthcontrol. The wooden spoon made by Navin out of waste bamboo is, you have admitted, a thing of beauty and yet quite cheap.

The value of women like you taking up village work lies in your capacity for making it attractive in spite of the necessity of conforming to cheapness. Perhaps art to be real must be cheap in terms of coin.

No more today.

Love.

Tyrant

From the original: C.W. 3567. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6376

421. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 5, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

All your letters arrived here in due order.

The weather here too has been unsteady. We had storms and rain. Let us hope we shall have settled weather—till the rains overtake us.

1 _Vide_ “For Contraceptives”, 4-4-1936.
The dates I have given you still abide.¹ We leave here no 7th reaching Lucknow on 8th morning.

At Anand Bhavan I have the same room, the same surroundings without Motilalji and Kamala—big gap. Old Mother is almost inconsolable. She is broken down in health. Her bravery persists.

You will keep your health at all cost. I am so glad you have Sejila². He must be a boon.

Yes, I envy you your life. Just now my mind is in the villages though the body thrives in the cities.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6324. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9790

422. SPEECH AT HINDI SAHITYA SAMMELAN ³

April 5, 1936

Mahatma Gandhi read out a letter from Mr. Narmada Prashad, Secretary of the Sammelan, regretting his absence due to illness and announcing a donation of Rs. 500. Mahatma Gandhi, speaking [in Hindi], said that these announcements⁴ had made up for the debt the building had incurred but the building was still incomplete. It was sad to reflect that whereas Mr. Tandon⁵ had appealed for four lakhs the response had been so small in a matter which concerned what India had declared was its national language. The country was undoubtedly starving. Of course physically crores of people did not even have one meal a day and poverty and hunger in India were worse than in any [other] country in the world. But he used the expression ‘starving’ in a different sense. Even lakhs of donations could not breathe soul into the language. This work could be accomplished if someone was born whose heart overflowed, as Tagore’s had overflowed in Bengal and made Bangalee a living language. The language never died. Tulsidas and Surdas did not write for the sake of the Hindi language. Their hearts and thoughts flowed out and humanity was benefited. Such a person must be born and create the necessary activity to make the language of 23

² Addressee’s horse
³ Gandhiji performed the opening ceremony of the library and museum of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan of which he was the President. Vide also the following item.
⁴ Earlier, two donations amounting to Rs. 2, 250 had been announced.
⁵ Purushottamdas Tandon crores of people again live. The efforts of one or two persons cannot accomplish this work; it can succeed only with the efforts of all the Hindi-speaking people.

_The Leader, 7-4-1936, and Hindi Sangralahaya: Samkshipta Parichaya, p. 8_

423. ENTRY IN VISITORS’ BOOK

April 5, 1936

Performed the opening ceremony today.

M. K. GANDHI

[From Hindi]

_Hindi Sangralahaya: Sankshipta Parichaya, p. 8_

424. TELEGRAM TO PRESIDENT, KERALA HARIJAN SEVAK SANGH

[Before April 6, 1936]

DIFFICULT TO GUIDE FROM DISTANCE, BUT DO NOTHING IN CONTRAVENTION OF ORDERS. CANVASS SIGNATURES DOOR TO DOOR, HOLD MEETINGS.

_The Hindu, 6-4-1936_

---

1 This sentence is translated from the Hindi in _Hindi Sangralahaya: Samkshipta Parichaya_.

2 Hindi Sangralahaya, Allahabad

3 Gandhiji then announced a donation of Rs. 5,000 to the Museum.

4 The report has the date-line “Trivandrum, April 6”.

5 The batches organized by the Kerala Harijan Sevak Sangh to carry on propaganda in connection with the Temple-entry movement were banned in Travancore.
MY DEAR WEST¹.

I was delighted to have your letter, and see your well-known signature, after a long time. Is it not years?

I am sorry about Sorabji². Though I am far away from where I can get access to books I can say with confidence that for years I have received no payments either through Reuter’s Agency or the East Indian Trading Co., or Dr. Nanji. Amounts received by me through the Trust were, upon recommendation of Mr. Doull if I remember aright, backed by other trustees, sent back for Sorabji’s use as a loan, his policy being accepted as received security. The premium for the policy has not been paid and probably it has lapsed. I gave this loan with the greatest reluctance. But I felt that I could do so. For in those circumstances had Parsi Rustomji been alive he would have liked me to help Sorabji. Of course no part of the loan has been returned. I had years ago small payment for giving prizes to children. That sum still is held and prizes are still being distributed annually. Beyond that there is nothing to report as there is no money in my hands on behalf of the two Trusts. In order to get the authoritative statement I am forwarding your letter with this reply to Narandas Gandhi who is in charge of the books of the Ashram. And if there is any error in what I have said, I shall rectify it.

You will please keep me informed of the results of your investigations.

I hope you are all doing well including Mrs. Pywell who must be nearing her century. How are you doing now?

With love to you all.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

ALBERT H. WEST, ESQ.
256 MOORE ROAD
DURBAN, NATAL (S. A.)

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

¹ Gandhiji’s close associate in South Africa
² Sorabji Rustom, son of Parsi Rustomji
426. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

April 8, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL.

I am waiting for your wire in reply to mine. You ought not to catch cold as often as you do. I am quite sure that you can avoid these colds by a judiciously natural life. I have a vague fear that your silk underwear has not a little to do with the delicacy of your skin. There is also the constant irritation you subject your skin to by frequent baths and still more frequent face-washes. Add to this the criminal use of soap which destroys all the grease with which nature protects the skin. These three exterior causes perhaps largely account for your colds. Discuss this with Shummy and if the physician in him endorses my view, make the necessary change, not perhaps all at once but one by one.

Khurshed is here and so is Perin. I have sent your memo to them to make a selection. I have authorized not more than Rs. 600 investment. You should not incur any loss on the articles. The shawl and the knife will be packed with the other articles.

Prabha is sitting by me as I write this. She came in four days ago to Lucknow.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3568. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6377

427. LETTER TO MARGARETE SPIEGEL

LUCKNOW,
April 9, 1936

CHI. AMALA,

I was longing to hear from you and to know how you were faring. I was therefore glad to see your handwriting and that, too, Gujarati. I observe that you have not forgotten your Gujarati as you have forgotten your khadi. But that is nothing. It is better to be perfectly natural and bad than to be artificially good.

1 Perin Captain, granddaughter of Dadabhai Naoroji
I am glad your mother would be with you very soon and that you are saving up for her. I hope you are keeping quite well.

We hope to return to Wardha by 15th inst.

I continue to call you Amala. But if you will have me to do otherwise, you will tell me.

Love.

BAPU

Spiegel Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

428. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

April 10, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I hope you are quite happy, undisturbed and absorbed in doing your duty. I still hope to reach there on the 15th or 6th.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9340. Also C.W. 6615. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

429. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM GANDHI

LUCKNOW,

April 10, 1936

CHI. PURUSHOTTAM,

I have your letter. You always have my blessings wherever you go. May you live long. I regard you as a bhakta. No harm will ever come to you. If your constipation persists, take with curds or milk half a tola of crushed garlic, green or dry, with your meals. It would be good to do so one hour before you begin your meal. Continue it if you find relief after three days.

Blessings from

BAPU

PURUSHOTTAM NARANDAS GANDHI
OPP. MIDDLE SCHOOL, NAVUN PARUN
RAJKOT, KATHIWAR

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

1 Who was in Germany

352 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
No movement or organization having vitality dies from external attack. It dies of internal decay. This is true at any rate of great all-India organizations like the A.I.S.A. and A.I.V.I.A. or the Harijan Sevak Sangh. I omit mention of others which are no less for all India than these three. I single out the first two for they seek to represent and promote the immediate welfare of the millions of villagers who do not earn enough to keep body and soul together because they have to live in enforced idleness for at least four months in the year for want of work. And I refer to the third because it seeks to represent the despised millions of society. The three causes are thus worthy. They should, therefore, not only be able to survive all external attack but even to thrive on it.

It is clear that they cannot flourish on mere pecuniary support. They will always need it, but it must come as a direct fruit of honest work. Therefore, what is necessary is character above suspicion, ceaseless effort accompanied by ever-increasing knowledge of the technique of the work and a life of rigorous simplicity. Workers without character, living far above the ordinary life of villagers, and devoid of the knowledge required of them for their work, can produce no impression on the villagers whether Harijan or other.

As I write these lines instances of those workers who for want of character or simple living damaged the cause and themselves recur to my mind. Happily instances of positive misconduct are rare. But the greatest hindrance to the progress of the work lies in the inability of workers of quality of support themselves on the village scale. If every one of such workers puts on his work a price which village service cannot sustain, ultimately these organizations must be wound up. For the existence of payments on the city scale except in rare and temporary cases would imply that the gulf between cities and villages is unbridgeable. The village movement is as much an education of the city people as of the villagers. Workers drawn from cities have to develop village mentality and learn the art of living after the manner of villagers. This does not mean that they have to starve like the villagers. But it does mean that there must be a radical change in the old style of life. While the standard of living in the villages must be raised, the city standard has to undergo considerable revision, without the worker being required in any way to adopt a mode of life that would impair his health.

Harijan, 11-4-1936
The Secretary of the Tamil Nad Branch of the A.I.S.A. writes to Shri Shankerlal Banker:

The old khadi merchants of Tirupur have started an association for certifying their khadi products.

Their object is to sell their existing stocks at enhanced rates and allow liberal commission to retail merchants throughout the province and to continue khadi production at old system and pay low wages. Many an old spinner, who is either unable to purchase cotton from us or improve the quality of yarn, may continue to spin for these merchants. We are, however, making arrangements to counteract these merchants' efforts by vigorous propaganda among the villagers by pamphlets, private talks and lectures about the object and work of our Association and that of these merchants. Our workers go from house to house and teach the spinners how to hank and improve the quality of yarn.

These merchants still continue to use our name for deceiving the public. Their sign boards, letter-heads, bills, invoices, labels on clothes are all printed as certified by the A.I.S.A. I sent them letters the other day asking them to strike out our name at once. One merchant has replied as follows:

‘I am surprised to read your letter dated 2-3-'36. You say that if I do not strike off the words “Certified by A.I.S.A.” within a week you are going to take legal action. The All-India Spinners' Association is not a registered body. . . .' Neither you nor anybody else has the right to object or protest. . . .'

I have written to the Press. I am making arrangements to stock A. I. S. A.-certified khadi at every Congress sabha. . . . Already two committees, the Mylapore Congress Committee and the Vedaranyam Town Congress Committee, have taken sales certificates. I hope before long other committees will apply for certificates and arrange to stock and sell khadi. . . .

I request that you will kindly explain the situation to Mahatmaji and request him to issue an appeal in the Press asking people who cannot spin for themselves to purchase only A. I. S. A.-certified khadi and also to sound a note of warning to the merchants of Tirupur.

It is certainly wrong of the erstwhile certified-khadi merchants to continue their trade in uncertified khadi after refusing to conform to the new rules about khadi and thus making themselves unfit for certificates. Their conduct is unpatriotic and unhuman. They ought not to exploit the poor spinners and to a much lesser degree the credulous buyers. I would urge them to conform to the new rules and take out certificates, or if they are not satisfied with the new scale, to take to some other business. It ill becomes them to retort that the A.I.S.A. is not a registered body and that therefore they can do what they like. I suggest to the objectors that their defiance of a body which they have hitherto obeyed is a breach of the moral and social code.

---

1 Only extracts of the letter are reproduced here.

But whilst I hope that my appeal to the sellers of uncertified khadi will bear fruit, I would like the Secretary of the Tamil Nad Branch to acquaint the spinners of the new rules and persuade them not to spin for lower wages. The most effective remedy lies in the hands of the spinners.

Of course I heartily endorse the Secretary’s appeal to Congress Committees and other lovers of the poor villagers to take out certificates for the sale of khadi and thus render concrete service to the toiling spinners. Their active co-operation will largely check the sale of uncertified khadi.

Harijan, 11-4-1936

432. TELEGRAM TO J. A. D. NAOROJI

April 11, 1936

J. A. D. NAOROJI
78 NAPEAN SEA ROAD
BOMBAY

AWAITING YOUR CONSENT KAMALA MEMORIAL APPEAL.¹

GANDHI

Form a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

¹ The Kamala Nehru Memorial Trust meeting was held at Allahabad on April 7, 1936.
[Gandhiji] appealed to them to go and visit the Exhibition, once, twice, three times, even four times, with their eyes and ears open, and if possible with the eyes and ears of their souls open. They would then see miracles in the Exhibition.

When I told you the other day that the Exhibition was not a cinema show, I meant more than I said. If you move about this Exhibition with my eyes and ears, you will spontaneously exclaim, ‘Hurrah! what a splendid exhibition!’

There may be many young men here who shout ‘hurrah’ on witnessing the dance and gesticulations of a woman. But God has given us eyes not to see and appreciate the dance of a woman, but to recognize the mother in her. The ‘hurrah’ that will spontaneously come to your lips on witnessing the Exhibition with my eyes and ears will be clean and not filthy. We go into raptures no hearing the name of Khuda or Rama in a dargah, mosque or a temple. You can look upon this Exhibition as an equally sacred place. You will not find here anything to captivate you in a sensual way. You have to see it with my eyes. It does not mean you should see it with the eyes of a mahatma. I am only a villager, a simple man. Therefore you have to look at this village industries exhibition with the eyes of a simple villager.

Anyone who pays a rupee, the charge for seeing the Exhibition four times, can learn four lessons in the bargain. I am sure you have heard about spectacles made of pebble. Now, here you can actually witness them being made. Where else would you go to learn this craft? But then this is a rather difficult job. They also make paper here. You will be amazed at the progress made by the paper industry. Even a lad of ten can make paper if he wants to. If you closely study here the process of paper-making you will be able to pursue the craft in your home. Here you will come across a novelty at every step and stop to marvel at it.

---

1 Vide “Speech at Khadi and Village Industries Exhibition, Lucknow”, 28-3-1936

2 This is reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. What follows has been translated from the Hindi in Harijan Sevak.
When you go to a cinema show you meet with things there to captivate in a sensual way your eyes and ears. I may tell you that we have tried to boycott from this Exhibition everything that had no educative value. We have tried to make the Exhibition a sacred and holy place, a feast for your eyes and ears, a spiritual feast capable of purifying the senses. I shall tell you why. Do you know Orissa and its skeletons? Well, form that hungerstricken, impoverished land of skeletons have come men who have wrought miracles in bone and horn and silver. Go and see these things not only ready-made but in the making, and see how the soul of man even in an impoverished body can breathe life into lifeless horns and metal. A poor potter has also worked miracles out of clay.¹

I have bought from the stall a nice little ink-pot to hold my ink. I thought its price would be six or seven annas, but I was surprised to learn that it was just one pice. Well, when you look at it you will no doubt wonder if it had not come from Germany or Japan. But the article is village-made. If this is not a wonder, what is?²

Things which I thought would be worth several annas are worth only a copper or a couple of coppers and yet they are delicate little pieces of art. A dear sister purchased the other day a little ‘Krishna’ in ivory. She was not given to worshipping Lord Krishna, but she now tells that she has begun to worship the exquisite little form.

The Exhibition is thus not a spectacular show, but a kind of fairyland. But our tastes have been so debased that miracles happening before our very eyes appear like so much dust or clay and trifles coming from abroad become exquisite pieces of art; water from a spring in far off Europe with the witchery of an unintelligible name becomes invested with miraculous quality, while the water of the holy Ganges which is said to be a purifier and a natural disinfectant seems to be no better than water from a dirty pool.

You can, of course, see that craftsmen from distant Travancore, Kashmir and Cuttack have congregated here. These poor people have come here to earn a few coins by exhibiting their crafts. Therefore those people on whom God has bestowed money ought to purchase here something or other. Things are not overpriced here. It is another matter if you yourself pay a fabulous price for a piece which pleases you. The price you pay here will not go to fill the pockets of any rich commission-agent. It will directly reach the purse of the poor villager to whom all of us are indebted. We are all living at the cost of the villagers. The city-dwellers are exploiting the villagers, and they must repay the debt, at least partially. A link has been built to bridge the yawning gulf between the cities and the villages; we have only to cross this bridge. Patronizing village industries will constitute the crossing of the bridge. This is not a matter of charity; I have placed a purely commercial proposition before you. Those who buy things here should also return with ‘hurrah’ on their lips; and the craftsmen from Kashmir, Travancore, Cuttack, etc., should also return to their homes saying, ‘Hurrah, how well the people in Lucknow appreciated our handiwork.’ If you engrave my words on your hearts, I shall also feel that I have been duly paid for my lecture.¹

¹ This paragraph is from Harijan. The following paragraph is Harijan Sevak.
² What follows is form Harijan.

If a vision of the kind I have described to you fails to stir your hearts and urge you to make some little sacrifice for the illfed and the underfed, God help you. Iqbal whose poem “Hindostan hamara”² still stirs our hearts with emotion must have had some such vision before his mind’s eye when he described India with her eternal sentry the Himalayas, and Ganges the eternal witness of the numerous stages through which our civilization has passed. We attend flag-hoisting ceremonies and are proud of our National Flag. Let me tell you that our pride has no meaning if you do not like things made in India and hanker after foreign ones. It is idle for those whose heart is not stirred at the light of things made by our poor craftsmen and craftswomen and to make a little sacrifice for them to talk of independence for India.

_Harijan, 18-4-1936, and Harijan Sevak, 18-4-1936_

434. A LETTER³

[Before April 13, 1936]⁴

DEAR FRIEND,

Your letter. Wisdom suggests ad experience testifies that one should never grieve over the past, however sinful or awful it might have been. The past is worth remembering only in order to profit by

¹ This paragraph is from Harijan Sevak. What follows is from Harijan.
² “Sare jahanse achchha Hindostan hamara”
³ The addressee, a retired accountant, had written that though he was 65 he was not free from passion and had broken certain vows taken in the past.
⁴ In the source this letter is placed before those of April 13, 1936.
it, to strengthen the good we might have done and to prevent, with all our might, a repetition of the bad. I hold that determination never to repeat a sin is the best form of repentance. The only remedy I can suggest is to rely upon Ramanama with an undying faith. It will surely give you mental relief and ultimately root out all the evil that may be in you in spite of yourself.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

435. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

LUCKNOW,
April 13, 1936

DEAR HYSTERICAL IDIOT,

Your two letters before me. I may leave tomorrow and for certain the day after. On reaching Wardha I shall send you a wire if the change of scene does not produce a lapse of memory, as it so often does with me.¹

The parcel is in course of preparation.

I have the Rs. 100 in mind. Add the amount to your donation to the Kamala Memorial. You will see the notice in a day or two. You may give as much as you comfortably can. And if you knew her well and that as a woman of rare spiritual beauty, make collections if you can, in an easy way. I do not want you to strain yourself in any way. Nor must you do it because I suggest it.

If I settle down in Segaon, I shall most decidedly be available to the outside world and certainly to idiots, lunatics and the like. And you may depend upon my taking care of brother ass. Therefore “Be careful for nothing”.

I have asked K.² to expedite the purchases for you.

You shall certainly pay for the hospital building in Maganwadi.

No more time.

Love.

TYRANT

SMT. RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
JULLUNDUR CITY
PUNJAB

From the original: C.W. 3770. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6876

¹ Vide “Letter to Anrit Kaur”, 20-4-1936 and 21-4-1936.

² Khurshedbehn
436. NOTE TO S. A. BRELVI

April 13, 1936

No. I would not accept office for table crumbs, but I would accept office for substantial gains. I told Masani not to use what I said and he endorsed what I said.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

437. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

April 13, 1936

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I got your letter. I have gone through the article on the Agent’s marriage. It puts forth a good argument but it cannot be said that it is written in good English. Some mistakes have gone undetected. However, it does not matter. I say this only to draw your attention to it. What is essential is clarity of thought although it would be good to write a language faultlessly. Of course a mistake in a foreign language may be excusable.

We are still in Lucknow. Probably we shall leave here on the 15th. For the present we shall be going to Wardha. I am thinking of settling down in a village near Wardha.

Nimu², Krishnadas and his wife Manojna, Prabhudas and Amba, etc., are here at present. Umiya³ and her husband Shankarlal⁴ live close to us. Jaisukhlal also has come and has put up near the Exhibition. The Exhibition has been a success.

Kanti, Navin, Kanu, Ba are with me already, and also Jamnalalji, Janakidevi and Madalasa. Thus we have quite a good gathering here. The day after tomorrow, however, most of them will have dispersed.

¹ Mahadev Desai records: “Brelvi reported that Masani had said that Gandhiji’s inclination was then growing more and more towards ‘non-acceptance’ of ‘ministry’. ” Opinion in the Indian National Congress was divided over the question of accepting ministerships in provinces under the new Constitution provided for in the Government of India Act of 1935.

² Nirmala, wife of Ramdas Gandhi

³ Daughter of Jaisukhlal Gandhi

⁴ Shankarlal Agrawal
Ramdas, Devdas and Lakshmi are staying on at Bombay.

I may say I am in fairly good health.
I believe Medh is improving steadily.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Remembering that it is Jallianwala Bagh Day, some of us have been observing a fast.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4850

438. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 13, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have now two letters of yours to deal with. Not much to say. If I do not leave tomorrow, I leave for certain on 15th.

Segaon is on the brain. Jamnalalji is half converted.

It is a great joy to me that in Sejila you have found a faithful and intelligent companion. I dread your nightly adventures.¹ I know it is wrong to do so. We are all in His keeping. But I am anxious for you to avoid all mishaps which can be anticipated.

I expect of find you hale, hearty and joyful.

Yes, Ku.² has put his whole soul into making my rooms as attractive as possible and that after my style.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

We are all fasting today. I have just broken mine.

From the original: C.W. 6325. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9791

¹ The addressee used to ride home in the dark over the long country roads.
² Bharatan Kumarappa
439. A LETTER

April 14, 1936

Your letter surprises me although I rather like it, too. Your language does not appear to spring from your heart. Perhaps such language comes to you naturally. I am not impressed by the mention of your jap\(^2\), etc. You had written a similar letter at Maganwadi. In spite of the several vows you took you were full of sensual aberrations and kept from me the fact. This letter gives no proof of your frankness. You seem to accept your guilt because you have no option. I see in it no feeling of remorse although it may be that I am mistaken. Maybe, you have turned a new leaf; on my part, I would of course wish it. Show all the papers to Ramjibhai and confess everything to him. Do away with such figurative and flowery language. Use adjectives sparingly. Your very first sentence irks: “Let us thank the gracious Dweller in the heart for bringing in the fortunate opportunity of confess with humility what was concealed by cowardice”. Why “us”? I see nothing to be thankful for. I have not known such a thing happening to man all of a sudden, as you describe. By saying “If we went into the details I might perhaps win the point”, you weaken your feeling of remorse, if you had any. Do go into the details, if you think you can win the point that way. The saints magnify their own fault if it were as small as a speck of dust and make it look as big as an elephant. You are, however, not at all obliged to do so; you kept back for long whatever you had [to confess].

[From Gujarati ]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

440. SPEECH AT ALL-INDIA DEPRESSED CLASSES CONFERENCE, LUCKNOW

April 14, 1936

Speaking for five minutes Mahatma Gandhi said that the Harijans had all his blessings and asked them to have patience as the demon of untouchability was a long-standing one and could not be destroyed in a day. He exhorted them to be clean and neat and assured them that he was always with them and was one among them.

The Leader, 17-4-1936

\(^1\) The name has been omitted.
\(^2\) Repetition of a name of God or a mantra
441. DISCUSSION WITH VISITORS

[Before April 16, 1936]

“This book-cover is made by our women”, said the lady from Poland. Thanking them Gandhiji asked:

Is it only the women who spin and weave there, and do the men do nothing?

Spinning is done exclusively by women. But men are not idlers either. They are engaged in other crafts. For instance this wooden casket is made by our men.

Is this a recent revival, or has the movement been on for some time? Has it touched the intellectual classes, or is there a gulf between them and the masses?

No; the intellectuals have taken keenly to it and we have had the movement now for some time. and it is daily growing.

And how do you happen to work together—you who must be as poles asunder, Poland an agricultural country and France a highly industrialized country?

We have been working together for several years. There is a village industries movement in France too, and we thought we should go together to India to study things first-hand. We must say we have had much to learn.

They were contemplating writing a book on India and wanted to know whether they could serve India by doing so.

You could, if you write for Poland and France or say Europe, but not if you write for India.

They paused for a moment wondering what Gandhiji meant.

I shall explain. If you have really learnt something from our villages, you can only give the benefit of that learning to your own people. What I learn from the West I give to my country. Fallen though we seem today, our villages have still to teach something to the world. And if what you say to your people appeals to them, that will have its reaction on us. What I say holds good only if you have really learnt something worthy from our villages. Perhaps the Exhibition has opened your eyes to many possibilities.

1 Two ladies, one from Poland and the other from France, representing the village industries movement in Europe, called on Gandhiji and presented a little hand-spun hand-woven book-cover and a tiny wooden casket.

2 According to Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter” from which the report is extracted, the discussion took place at Lucknow. Gandhiji left Lucknow on April 16.
I should like to spend weeks there and fill my soul with the atmosphere of the past. You find there workmen actually at work—workmen from Orissa and Kashmir working with their crudest possible tools, if you please, and yet conjuring up with their aid some of the most gorgeous articles in silver and wool. The things you have brought for me are no patch on similar things you will find in the Exhibition. Look at the men from Patan working at their sari of exquisite pattern and design. The work is now confined to only four families whereas hundreds of families used to get their living in the past out of the work. They are so conservative that they would not let their nearest neighbour know the cunning of their craft. But we have drawn some of them out into light. Some of this work can be revived, in all its glory, if we are prepared to pay for it adequately, pay enough to feed them and to keep them in health and comfort. Now that is a nearly perfect Exhibition, i.e., as perfect as it could be looking to the limited time at the disposal of the organizers and to the numerous handicaps they had to contend against. And yet it is nothing compared to what it could be, if we could have brought all the representative men and women engaged in many other crafts.

Harijan, 25-4-1936

442. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

April 16, 1936

CHI. MANUDI,

You of course asked for a quick reply, but I didn’t have the time. It remains for you to come over in accordance with your vow. Ba and I shall be at Wardha for the present. Do come over. I wonder if you have any other plan. We are going to Wardha today. I hope you are in good health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1559. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
443. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

LUCKNOW,
April 16, 1936

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

You had a right to tell Jamnalalji what you did about me. But you should have taken me into confidence if you felt hurt. Prabha came to me with your consent as well as Brijkishore Babu’s. I can say nothing about the influence I exercised on her. But by her association with me there has been no waning of her devotion to her father or love for her husband. True, Prabha does not give you conjugal satisfaction, because by her very nature she cannot. She was free from passion even before she came to me. We can only go by what she says. She told me this repeatedly and firmly and I accepted her word. Now tell me what I should do. If you want that Prabha should give up visiting me or writing to me, for your peace of mind I will accept this restriction.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: Jayaprakash Narayan Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

444. SPEECH TO VILLAGERS

SEGATION
[After April 17, 1936]

Mirabehn who is here in your midst came here with the intention of settling down for good. But I find that she is not in a position to carry out her intention. Even if she stayed on, she could do so not without considerable mental struggle. The will is not lacking but perhaps the flesh is weak. Now as you know an unbreakable bond of common service binds us both, and so I thought it my duty to do what she could not do. God willing, therefore, I shall come to stay in your midst. Maybe God will give me the strength that He did not vouchsafe to her.

1 According to Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”, from which the speech is extracted, Gandhiji visited Segaon soon after his return from Lucknow. He reached Wardha on April 17, 1936.

But even God’s will is expressed through various agencies and unless I have your goodwill even I may fail in my mission. Ever since my childhood it has been a principle with me that I should not think of inflicting myself on those who view my going in their midst with mistrust, misgivings or apprehension. I should not think of coming here, except to serve you. But in many places my presence and the programme I stand for are viewed with considerable dread. At the back of this dread is the fact that I have made the removal of untouchability a life’s mission. You must have known from Mirabehn that I have cost out all untouchability from myself, that I hold all classes of people—Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Shudra, Rajput, Mahar, Chamar—all alike, and I regard these distinctions based on birth as immoral. We have suffered because of these distinctions, and this sense of high and low has vitiated our lives. But I may tell you that I should not think of imposing these convictions on you. I should try to do so by persuasion, above all by my own example. I shall try to serve you by cleaning your roads and your surroundings, by trying to render such help as I can if there is illness in the village, by teaching you self-help by way of helping you to revive your handicrafts. If you will co-operate with me I shall be happy, if you will not I shall be content to be absorbed among you as one among the few hundreds that live here.

I hope I shall come to settle here. But it depends on His will. For I did not know that He would move me from India to South Africa, and from South Africa I should come to Sabarmati, and from Sabarmati to Maganwadi, and now from Maganwadi to Segaon.

_Harijan, 2-5-1936_

445. FOR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS

DEAR BR. GANDHI

. . . You have had your name blazoned abroad. . . as one of the greatest philosophers and sacrificial workers on earth. In India you have been proclaimed the Mahatma, and actually worshipped as one of the incarnations of India’s many deities. . . Your practice also of fasting when sin has been committed. . . has had a tendency to make Indians believe that you can merit blessing which can be communicated to others,—but has anybody been loving and courageous enough to write and challenge you as to how personally you are going to obtain atonement for your own sin? All your self-denials and fastings and prayer and good deeds cannot blot out one sin of your early days.
For thirty or more years of your life you lived the carnal, self-life, seeking and following your own plans and ambitions without seeking to know God’s purpose for your life or to honour His holy name...

    Even if, as you profess to believe, Christ was only one of many incarnations of God, and the latest of them, you must either accept His tremendous claims as of Divine origin, or reject them as only human and fallible. And when He declares as He did to the Jews of His day —‘If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins’ or ‘I am the way, the truth, and the life, no man cometh unto the Father, but by me’, you must either believe Him to have been self-deceived, or deliberately false. . . . I pray daily that Christ may grant you a revelation of Himself as He did to Saul of Tarsus, that. . . you may be used to proclaim to India’s millions the sacrificial efficacy of His precious blood.

This is a typical letter1 from an old English friend who regularly writes such letters almost every six months. This friend is very earnest and well known to me. But there are numerous other correspondents unknown to me who write in the same strain without arguing. Since now I cannot for reasons of health write to individual writers, I use this letter as a text for a general reply. Incidentally this effort will enable the readers of Harijan who accept my guidance to understand the nature of my religious belief.

    My correspondent is a literalist. He gives its literal meaning to every text of the Bible in spite of its clear statement that “the letter killeth, the spirit giveth life”. My very first reading of the Bible showed me that I would be repelled by many things in it if I gave their literal meaning many texts or even took every passage in it as the word of God. I found as I proceeded with my study of the scriptures of the various religions that every scripture had to be treated likewise, not excepting the Vedas or the Upanishads. Therefore the story of the immaculate conception when I interpret it mystically does not repel me. I should find it hard to believe in the literal meaning of the verses relating to the immaculate conception of Jesus. Nor would it deepen my regard for Jesus if I gave those verses their literal meaning. This does not mean that the writers of the Gospels were untruthful persons.

1 Of which only extracts have been reproduced here
They wrote in a mood of exaltation. From my youth upward I learnt the art of estimating the value of scriptures on the basis of their ethical teaching. Miracles therefore had no interest for me. The miracles said to have been performed by Jesus, even if I had believed them literally, would not have reconciled me to any teaching that did not satisfy universal ethics. Somehow or other, words of religious teachers have for me, as I presume for millions, a living force which the same words uttered by ordinary mortals do not possess.

Jesus then to me is a great world-teacher among others. He was to the devotees of his generation no doubt ‘the only begotten son of God’. Their belief need not be mine. He affects my life no less because I regard him as one among the many begotten sons of God. The adjective ‘begotten’ has, for me, a deeper and possibly a grander meaning than its literal meaning. For me it implies spiritual birth. In his own times he was the nearest of God.

Jesus atoned for the sins of those who accepted his teachings by being an infallible example to them. But the example was worth nothing to those who never troubled to change their lives. A regenerate outgrows the original taint even as purified gold outgrows the original alloy.

I have made the frankest admission of my many sins. But I do not carry their burden on my shoulders, If I am journeying Godward, as I feel I am, it is safe with me. For I feel the warmth of the sunshine of His presence. My austerities, fastings and prayers are, I know, of no value, if I rely upon them for reforming me. But they have an inestimable value, if they represent, as I hope they do, the yearnings of a soul striving to lay his weary head in the lap of his Maker.

The Gita has become for me the key to the scriptures of the world. It unravels for me the deepest mysteries to be found in them. I regard them with the same reverence that I pay to the Hindu scriptures. Hindus, Mussalmans, Christians, Parsis, Jews, are convenient labels. But when I tear them down, I do not know which is which. We are all children of the same God. “Verily, verily, I say unto you, not everyone that sayeth unto me Lord Lord, shall enter the Kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven shall enter the Kingdom”, was said, though in different words, by all the great teachers of the world.

_Harijan_, 18-4-1936
446. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA.
April 18, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

We reached here yesterday noon quite comfortably. I hope you had my wire in time. Sardar and Rajendra Babu came with me. So we were quite a large company. But we came by a train in which there was no discomfort caused to fellow-passengers. Only we came by the passenger train from Itarsi.

My programme is that I am in and about Wardha till the middle of May. May go to Panchgani after that for about a fortnight.

I hope your throat is quite in order. You must get rid of these ailments. How you can do so I do not know. But I do feel that there is a simple natural remedy.

Jawaharlal will be here about 24th instant.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3569. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6378

447. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

April 18, 1936

CHI. VALJI,

Do go to Nainital. It would be good if Jivram' gives up his insistence on attaching his mother-in-law’s name to the donation. If he does not, we shall have the name.

There is little likelihood of getting an extensive grazing ground for Rs. 500. He might entrust it to Gopabandhu Chowdhary to utilize the sum for the service of the cow.

Blessings from

BAPU

[P.S.]

Your letter was delivered only yesterday as it did not bear the correct address.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7477 Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

1 Jivram Kothari of Kutch who had settled in Orissa to work among the poor
448. LETTER TO R. RAMASWAMI

[Before April 19, 1936]

Gandhiji has your letter of the 8th instant. The contents surprised him, inasmuch as an educated man like you does not understand the reason why the price of khadi has slightly gone up. It has been increased in order to enable the poor spinner to have something like a living wage. We are far yet from giving him a real living wage, but the recent increase in khadi [prices] ensures him a wage just enough to secure him two full meals a day. Do you, poor as you are, grudge the little increase to the men and women who are much poorer than you?

_The Hindu_, 20-4-1936

449. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDSHA,

April 20, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL.

You are right in saying I worry about nothing and therefore not even about your persistent cough which you so lightly regarded. But not to worry is not to neglect or underrate such information. Why should you be so delicate? Why should the slightest change in the weather upset you? If it is the diet that is at the bottom, you must revert to the old regimen. On no such account may you endanger your health. There are occasions in a person’s life when everything has to be sacrificed. Surely a new regimen suddenly adopted is not such an occasion. My own inclination is always on the side of nature cure. But that you may not adopt unless Shummy co-operates, you believe in it, and you get a proper guide. A guide is obtainable but Shummy may not agree and you may not have faith in it. Mere liking is of no consequence. Please do not play with your ailments. Even a rebel has to submit to the laws of nature.

1 The addressee, a clerk of the Scindia Steam Navigation Company, had written to Gandhiji protesting against the increase in the price of khadi. In reply Mahadev Desai wrote to him.

2 The report appears under the date-line “Cuddalore, April 19, 1936”.

370

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
I look forward to better news tomorrow.

You know all about the tragedy of the wire.° You began to crow before the dawn.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

The electric stand adorns my desk now. Bharatan brought it yesterday.

From the original: C.W. 3570. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6379

450. LETTER TO VITALAL L. PHADKE

April 20, 1936

CHI. MAMA,

Now that Sardar has communicated to you his permission to put up a hut, I have nothing further to write. You will, of course, incur the minimum expenditure.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3835

451. LETTER TO BHUJANGILAL CHHAYA

April 20, 1936

CHI. BHUJANGILAL,

I have your letter. At present nothing in certain as to where I may settle. Even after I have settled down you must obtain your father’s permission. It would not be proper to let you stay with me against your father’s wish. You have to have patience.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2638

452. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

April 20, 1936

In my opinion The Hindustan Times has become a thoroughly worthless paper. It does not contain any news worth knowing. And if there are any they are harmful. If it cannot be improved you must wash your hands of it. I do not see a single newspaper which publishes authentic news. Of course I do not cite the instances. Mahadev wrote to Parasnath but so far there is no improvement. You can hardly do anything! Who can?

From Gujarati: C.W. 8018. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

453. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA,
April 21, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letter gives encouraging news. You do like to be told that letters from you are always welcome and wanted. Well, this is to tell you once for all that you must write regularly except when you can’t do so without straining yourself. It must never be a task.

You are wrong as in usual for idiots. Your letters were duly received in Lucknow. But poor Kanu absent-minded forgot that you were in Simla. My memory is bad enough but it was quite in order for the purpose of sending you the wire. I must however confess that I thought of it a few hours after my arrival.

I must find the yarn you want. I shall try to get it twisted.

Don’t be ill again. What is the use of having the car there? Surely it can be well looked after in Jullunder.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3721. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6877

1 Devdas Gandhi had joined The Hindustan Times in 1934. The use of the second person singular and the contents of the letter indicate that the letter was addressed to him.

2 Editor, The Hindustan Times
454. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

April 21, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

The notes make good reading. Your answers were fairly full and of course straight.

Why do you feel worried over the forthcoming meeting? If there is discussion it would only be to convince one another of the soundness of one’s views. You will stop the discussion when you think a proposition has been thoroughly argued. After all you want teamwork and I have great hope of this happening.

I reach Nagpur 23rd evening.

I wish Ranjit will take care of himself. I am glad he has gone to Khali. I expect Sarup to accompany you.

Sardar is still suffering and is just now on buttermilk only. I am taking him to Nandi Hill after 8th May. I wish you too could come.

Love.

BAPU

A Bunch of Old Letters, p. 175

455. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 21, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Jamnalalji has given full authority to commence building operations. If you come tomorrow evening or 23rd morning, I could explain everything. I leave for Nagpur 23rd evening, returning 26th evening or 27th morning at the latest.

More when we meet.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6328. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9794

1 Of the Congress Working Committee
2 Ranjit Pandit, addressee’s sister’s husband
3 For Gandhiji’s hut at Segaon
456. LETTER TO CHAND TYAGI

WARDHA,
April 21, 1936

BHAI CHAND TYAGI,

A son must feel the sting of his father’s death but it should not be taken too much to heart for we all have to go the same way one day or the other. Why grieve over what comes inevitably with one’s birth itself? One should grieve, if at all, over one’s birth.

I thought Rajkishori was not required to go there. We are poor and we wish to live like the poor. Why then should we spend needless railway fare? Am I wrong in thinking thus or have you changed your opinion? Anyway, on my part there will be no restriction on Rajkishori, she can leave whenever she is so inclined.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6098

457. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA,
April 22, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Only idiots can think of idiotic interpretation¹ and because you are such a brilliant specimen and agent of the A.I.V.I.A., naturally you will like the rest to belong to your species. Heaven help poor me—their guide ! ! !

Do you think anything on earth can be done without trouble? You can’t do even your unpacking without trouble. Then what is the use of your saying that I should redeem my promise to send you honey if it can be done without trouble? I tell you that it cannot be done without some trouble. But that trouble is going to be taken and honey is being sent. You will cover the expense when you next send your cheque. The parcels to follow will be sent to you direct from Calcutta or Shillong, V.P.P. if you like. You will tell me when you will want the next parcel. Let all eat this honey, if they prefer it to the Australian. I am sure the Shillong honey is any day better than the foreign stuff, if only because it is fresher.

¹ The addressee had interpreted A.I.V.I.A. as ‘All-India Village Idiots’ Association’.

Your lace, mattress and the reversible sari must be in the box that was being packed for you. You must receive it by this time. I know there was some bungling about it. You are not the only idiot. You may be the princess among them !! Are you?

I go tomorrow to Nagpur, probably return on 25th, 27th for certain. I go to Segaon, 5 miles from here, on 29th or 30th, returning when required. I go with Sardar on 9th May or about the date no Nandi Hill, Mysore. Mahadev and others accompany me. Or else I would have insisted on Mahadev going to you for a month. We descend to Bangalore about 1st June and leave it about 10th June. This outing is necessary because Dr. A[nsari] wants Sardar to go to a hill-station. He would not go without me. If I had not to go to Mysore, I would have passed a fortnight with the sister at Panchgani. I am sorry to disappoint them.

Of course I inflict myself on you, if I have to come to Simla. I do not think I shall have to just yet. As for you, I shall hold you to the three winter months with me and then you will diet yourself under supervision. What would Shummy say about it?

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3722. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6878

458. LETTER TO RAMI K. PAREKH

April 22, 1936

CHI. RAMI,

I have your letter. If you do wish to have Manu with you let it be so. I shall be required to go to the Mysore region with Sardar about the 10th of May. We would be returning about June 10. So, Manu will be staying with you during that period, won’t she? In June I may perhaps go to settle in a village, where I may have Manu with me. However, I do not know whether I could stay there during the monsoon. Nothing has been finalized.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.W. 9725
459. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

April 22, 1936

CHI. MANUDI,

My letter to Ramibehn contains my reply. I am not writing to your mother’s sisters separately.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1557. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

460. LETTER TO KRISHNALAL

April 22, 1936

CHI. KRISHNALAL,

You are on the contrary finding fault with me. You yourself would not write and yet expect me to write. How is that? Shall I say that you did not even argue out my case properly? It is good that you have passed your examination. Become a very intelligent and equally nice boy.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1558. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

461. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

April 22, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,

I have your letter. You must not go on grumbling. You should work within your capacity. Not much may be expected from Tyagi. He is a good man but he cannot keep his mind steady. You have to take the injections; start on them soon. Kanti is with me all along. I am keeping well. It is naturally hot. I shall leave for Bangalore about May 8, taking Sardar with me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 332
CHI. MAHADEV.

I did expect that you would send Shivprasad’s letter after making a fair copy. It would be good if, in my old age, I could personally teach Vijaya and Manu how to read and write at any rate. I, therefore, give some dictation to both of them after the prayer. I think that even with my left hand I would write faster than they do, more legibly at any rate. But I have found this key for training them, and I am holding on to it. My handwriting is none too good, either. So I allow the letter as taken down by Vijaya to go, as also the one by Manudi. That ‘mission’ became “machine” is not so very important. But I did sympathize with Shivprasad. Although I had expected that you would have a fair copy made if you found it too difficult to read. Bablo, Durga, Prabhudas or, if free, Kanu could have made a copy. I must have presumed some such thing. But what can we do, now that the arrow has sped from the bow? Let it strike Shivprasad. Why should he have asked such questions? Kuruvilla is free to send the note prepared by you.

You will have to accompany me to Hodge’s. Do whatever you can for Daniel Hamilton. I will of course try to detain Rajkumari. When should we reach Nagpur? Decide this if it has not already been done, so that I may know when I will have to leave Segaon. Please remember and caution other visitors that the wooden bridge on the longer route has been pulled down. Hence cars, etc. should not take this route.

Read Moore’s letter to Rajkumari and then destroy it.
Jammalalji will have arrived before Anandshankarbai does.
Even if he has not, why not put up Anandshankarbhai at his place? But do what you think best. If there is no reply from Madan Mohan¹, make alternative arrangements for his stay in consultation with Jajuji² or Radhakisan. Tikekar is, of course, there. He would be comfortable at his place also. But he is in bad shape these days. Hence it would be better to make some other arrangement.

I talked to Rambhau and also told him not to have his meals with you. I also asked him to leave Wardha immediately. But what can I do when you yourself are soft? Pyarelal says that he too had scolded him severely. You can tell him on my behalf that he may either leave or take his meals anywhere else he wishes. I knew nothing about the bangles.

I have read Chopra’s booklet. We do have a copy. It was lent to Mahodaya³. It came eight or nine months ago. Its title is likely to be ‘Indian Drugs’ rather than ‘Indian Plants’.

I am writing to Jugal Kishore and Pattani. Jajuji’s lot is pitiable. Keep in touch with him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati original: S. N. 11519

463. LETTER TO GOVIND V. GURJALE

April 23, 1936

MY DEAR GURJALE⁴,

The troubles, such as you mention, will make us, if we can stand them in the right spirit, I hope that the persecuted family will come through the fire scatheless.

Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1385

¹ Jamnalal Bajaj’s secretary
² Shrikrishnadas Jaju
³ Dr. Mahodaya
⁴ Alias Bhikshu Nirmalananda
464. LETTER TO CARL BUTTO

April 23, 1936

I have just received your interesting letter. Yes, I am following the events in Germany and the other parts of Europe. It is all confusion worse confounded. It is a mere trial of physical strength, it is also a trial of diplomacy of the worst kind ever experienced in history. As you know my attempt is wholly on a different plane. I can show nothing and yet my faith is growing stronger—more so for the events of Europe.

Love.

BAPU

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai.

465. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

WARDHA,
April 23, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I am going to Nandi Durg, taking Sardar with me. I am prepared to take Kusum¹ with me if you can send her and if she wants to come. We shall be leaving here on the 8th. She can accompany Sardar who is coming here from Ahmedabad.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8447. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ The addressee had explained the conditions prevailing in Germany and highly praised Hitler.

³ Daughter of Vrajlal Gandhi
Introducing his printed speech to the audience, Gandhiji said he was out of place in a conference of litterateurs especially as he knew better than anyone else that his knowledge of Hindi literature, and even of Gujarati literature, was nothing to speak of, that his knowledge even of Gujarati grammar was indifferent. But he had been told that it was an impossible task to get together formidable litterateurs, who were like lions safe enough in their own cages, but difficult to keep together and to be made to work together. It had been thought that he as a neutral man and a ‘mahatma’ might be of some service in bringing them together. There he was available to them for what he might be worth, but he wanted to make it clear that he was there simply to initiate the work of bringing [together] the literary men of every province speaking the different languages, and of serving the masses of India by making available to them the best in all the rich languages of our country.

In the course of his extempore speech Gandhiji said that doctors had advised him not to exert himself too much.

I am here for a brief while for the limited purpose I have told you, but you may know that my heart is neither here nor even in Wardha. My heart is in the villages. For days I have been striving with the Sardar to let me go to a village near Wardha. He is still unconvinced, but my mind won’t rest, and God willing, I hope to go and settle in a village near Wardha in a short while. But that does not mean that I will not do the work I am doing now, or that I shall cease to be available for consultation to friends, or for advice to those who will seek it. Only my address will be a village where I would be living ordinarily. I have been asking all my co-workers who are doing village work to go and settle in villages and to serve the villagers. I feel that I cannot do so effectively until I go and settle in village myself.

Proceeding, Gandhiji referred to the conflict between Hindi (Hindustani) and Urdu which was due mainly because Hindus and Muslims considered each other as enemies. He noticed disputes ever since he returned to India from Africa. In fact there was no cause for dispute because even if Muslims took the vow not to use a single

---

1 This is reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The following paragraph is from The Hitavada.
2 What follows is from Harijan.
Hindi word they were unable to keep it mainly because the grammatical systems of both were identical. Neither could the staunch advocates of Hindi abolish Persian or Urdu words as could be seen from Tulsidas's Ramayana which abounded in Persian and Arabic words.¹

Gandhiji said that Hindi or Hindustani stood the best chances of becoming India's lingua franca since it was a comprehensive language and was receptive to outside influences, in that it had absorbed the best from every other literature. He favoured simplification of Hindi and deprecated the tendency to Sanskritize it. He also urged that all current expressions in different languages should be adopted.

Proceeding, Gandhiji deplored the tendency to translate Hindi books first into English and then into Bengali or other languages. If they wanted to revive the vernacular, if they wanted to achieve the object they had in view, they must banish English so far as Indian masses were concerned. He had no desire to underestimate the value of English which was a universal language and had international significance but Hindustani must become India's lingua franca and the pernicious notion that they could produce excellent literature only in English must go.²

Gandhiji deplored the present state of things where people were, so to say, in a hide-bound way content to remain in their own linguistic and cultural wells, not ready even to acquaint themselves with the language and literature of their neighbouring provinces. A handful of our literary men may be studying different provincial literatures and exchanging the treasures of other provincial languages. But we had to seek do do more . . . .

We must not only seek to know the picturesque language of the village folk, but also to spread a knowledge of modern useful literature among the villagers. It is a shame that Chaitanya's¹ lyrics are a sealed book to people outside Bengal and Orissa. Few of us here may know the name of Tiruvalluvar. People in the North are innocent even of the great saint's name. Few saints have given us treasures of knowledge contained in pithy epigrams as he has done.

In this context, I can at this moment recall the name only of Tukaram.⁴

But for that purpose not only the existing literary treasures had to be made available in a language which could be easily learnt by the masses in all the provinces, but even new literature had to be created—new literature of a healthy and

---

¹ This and the following two paragraphs are from The Hitavada.
² The following two paragraphs are from Harijan.
³ Founder of a sect of Bengal Vaishnavas
⁴ This sentence is translated from the Hindi in Harijanbandhu.
health-giving type.\footnote{This paragraph is from Harijan. The following paragraph is translated from the Hindi in Harijanbandhu.}

If we were to enter the vast field of Indian literature, should we stop somewhere? In my opinion there should certainly be a limit. I never had the temptation of increasing the number of books. I do not consider it necessary that every book written or published in the language of every province should be introduced to all the other languages. Even if such an attempt were possible, I think it would be harmful. Such literature as fosters unity, morality, valour and such other qualities, and science, should profitably spread to every province.\footnote{The following paragraph is from Harijan.}

Today a plethora of highly objectionable erotic literature seems to be in evidence in every province. Indeed, there are some who say that barring the erotic there is no other rasa\footnote{According to Indian aesthetics there are nine rasas, i.e., types of emotional responses.} worth the name; and because the erotic is at a premium, those who insist on restraint in literature are held up to ridicule as devoid of all rasa. They forget that even those who are said to sacrifice everything do not sacrifice rasa. Each one of us feeds himself on some rasa or sacred passion. Dadabhai Naoroji sacrificed everything for the country, but he was fired by the sacred passion of patriotism. That gave him all his inner happiness. To say that Chaitanya was devoid of rasa is to confess innocence of all rasa. Narasinh Mehta, the poet-saint of Gujarat, has described himself as a bhogi\footnote{One who enjoys the pleasures of life}, but his bhoga was that of singleminded devotion to God. If you will not be annoyed, I would go to the length of saying that the erotic is the lowest of all rasas, and when it partakes of the obscene it is wholly to be eschewed. If I had the power I should taboo all literature calculated to promote communalism, fanaticism and ill will and hatred between individuals, classes or races.\footnote{What follows is translated from the Hindi in Harijanbandhu.}

How can all this be achieved? Munshiji and Kakasaheb have cleared our way to a certain extent. Literature of wider appeal can only be spread by a widely [spoken] language. Hindi-Hindustani is such a language compared to the other languages. The reason why Hindi is qualified by the word ‘Hindustani’ is that words originating from the Persian idiom may not be shunned in that language.
The English language can never become the medium for all the provinces. If we sincerely hope to enrich Indian literature, to carry the gems hidden in the different languages to the crores of Indian masses, we can do so only through Hindustani. It was with this end in view that Munshi started the monthly Hans with the help of the famous writer Premchandji. It is necessary to make it a success.

467. A YOUTH’S DIFFICULTY

A correspondent who prefers to remain anonymous seeks an answer to a question arising out of my article¹ in Harijan addressed to the young. Although it is a sound rule to ignore anonymous correspondence, I do sometimes make an exception when the question put is substantial as in the present case.

The letter is in Hindi and is longer than it need have been. Its purport is:

From your writing I doubt if you understand the young mind. What has been possible for you is not possible for all young men. I happen to be married. I can restrain myself. My wife cannot. She does not want children but she does want to enjoy herself. What am I to do? Is it not my duty to satisfy her? I am not generous enough to look upon her satisfying her desire through other channels. I read from the papers that you are not averse to promoting marriages and blessing them. Surely you know or ought to know that they are not contracted with the high purpose that you have mentioned.

The correspondent is right. The fact that I bless so many marriages, when they satisfy the tests that I have set as to age, economy, etc., perhaps shows somewhat that I know the youth of the country to an extent that would justify my guiding them when they seek my guidance.

My correspondent’s case is typical. He deserves sympathy. That the sole purpose of sexual connection is procreation is in the nature of a new discovery for me. Though I had known the rule, I had never before given it the weight it deserved. I must have till recently regarded it as a mere pious wish. I now regard it as a fundamental law of married state which is easy of observance if its paramount importance is duly recognized. My object will be fulfilled when the law is given its due place in society. To me it is a living law. We break it always and pay heavily for its breach. If my correspondent realizes its inestimable value and if he has love for her and has faith in himself, he will convert his wife to his view. Is he sincere when he says he can restrain himself? Has the animal passion become transmuted in his case into a higher passion, say, for service of fellow-beings? Does he naturally refrain from doing anything to excite the passion in his wife? Let him know that Hindu science denotes eight kinds of union which include sexual suggestions made even by signs. Is the correspondent free from these? If he is not, and if he is sincerely desirous that his wife should be weaned from the sexual desire, let him surround her with the purest love, let him explain the law to her, let him explain the physical effects of union without the desire for procreation, let him tell her what the vital fluid means. Let him further engage his wife in healthy pursuits and strive to regulate her diet, exercise etc., so as to still the passion in her. Above all, if he is a man of religion he will try to transmit to his companion his own living faith. For I must confess that the observance of the law of continence is impossible without a living faith in God which is living Truth. It is the fashion nowadays to dismiss God from life altogether and insist on the possibility of reaching the highest kind of life without the necessity of a living faith in a living God. I must confess my inability to drive the truth of the law home to those who have no faith in and no need for a Power infinitely higher than themselves. My own experience has led me to the knowledge that fullest life is impossible without an immovable belief in a living Law in obedience to which the whole universe moves. A man without that faith is like a drop thrown out of the ocean bound to perish. Every drop in the ocean shares its majesty and has the honour of giving us the ozone of life.

¹ Vide “For the Young”, 28-3-1936.

_Harijan, 25-4-1936_

1 Could this be a slip for “If he is”?
468. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

April 27, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your two letters. A copy of good Ramayana with notes which Mahadev has will be sent to you.

Your cheque has duly arrived. The amounts will be duly distributed as per instructions.

The Simla parcel should contain the soft fibre mattress, the reversible sari, your lace and two knives.

I returned from Nagpur last night. I did plenty of work but without much strain.

The W.C. is now on. But they are all at J[amnalal]'s place.

I hope your expectation will be fulfilled and you will be free from throat trouble at least for four months.

Love.

In haste

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3723. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6879

469. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 27, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

If it is possible the boiling-pot will accompany the messenger. If not, it will go with me.\(^1\) Ba is not quite well. Are there any goats in Segaon? If there are, I do not want to bring any with me.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6329. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9795

\(^1\) In Bapus's Letters to Mira the addressee says : “Bapu was planning to come to stay for a few days in my camp under the trees in order to choose the exact site of his cottage and give me detailed directions as to how it was to be built.”
470. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 28, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I shall bring the necessary things with me. I cannot come tomorrow. The W.C. is still sitting and I cannot leave so long as the members are here. In no case shall I have uninterrupted 10 days there. I must be here no Sunday and also for 1st and 2nd May, if Dr. Ambedkar comes. Then I have to be absent from 5th or 6th. I expect to leave for Bangalore on 8th. Therefore there will be no returning after I leave on 5th or 6th. So the ten days will be reduced to 30th, 31st and 4th and 5th May, the latter only possibly. I shall be thankful even if I can be there even to that extent. Ba is still not well.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6330. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9796

471. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

April 28, 1936

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

I have your letter. If you take hip-baths, live on fruit juice and have massages, I have no doubt that you will be rid of your complaint. For you garlic is not the best cure. Partial fasting, as I have explained above, is the only way you can get rid of the excess fat—or whatever you call it—in your body. It is possible that your system does not take kindly to fruit, in which case you will have to live on water. You will definitely return a cured person if you go to Poona and get yourself treated by Dr. Mehta.

It is all right if Shankerlal does not come. He should improve his health there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32774

1 The addressee writes: “Dr. Ambedkar did come but saw Bapu in Segaon under the trees.”
homesick and sometimes even shed tears. When did you get so soft as that? Our home is where we happen to live. After all, aren’t we sojourning in this world for “a few days”? I have not seen those parts myself, but I am told the region has a bracing climate and is equally beautiful, too. I expect you have seen Mr. Duncan1. I should have from you a description of the place.

All of us, including Kakaji and Madalasa, are here together at Lucknow. We shall go to Allahabad on the 3rd and probably return on the 8th. We hope to reach Wardha some time about the 15th.

One may say my health is now good enough. Do you try to get Harijan Sevak? I think you now understand English also very well.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvard, PP. 342-3

472. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

WARDHA,
April 29, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

God willing I am coming tomorrow. The paper is being sent. More when we meet. I expect to be with you at about 7 a.m.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6331. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9797

473. TELEGRAM TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

April 30, 1936

BAPA “SEVAK”
DELHI

IF AMTUL’S SERVICES NOT REALLY NEEDED SEND HER HERE SOON.

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 Duncan Greenlees

VOL. 68 : 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935 - 15 MAY, 1936 387
I have written to Chimandas. To Choithram’ I wrote from Lucknow itself. The case of Amtussalaam is a difficult one. She is not going to be happy with me, too, and I am now going to settle in a village. For the present, however, I am going to Nandi Durg with Sardar. He has been confined and I am banding jailor to him; I mean he is ill and I am to act as his number I am prepared to take Amtussalaam there. It is not good morning away from Rukmini's harassment of her. That women encourage her in her ways. We must find out a way to reform Rukmini. Therefore, consider Amtussalaam's case in this way. Is it necessary to have her there? If it is so, keep her there and clip Rukmini's wings. If she is not needed she should be sent to me forthwith. I sent her there with a view to satisfying her ambition to serve and under the belief that she was needed there. She is certainly not to be accommodated on the assumption that work may be taken from whoever is there. You are fully entitled to do what you think right after looking at the question from this angle. I am enclosing her letter herewith.

Now about Sastri. He was here and talked about many things. His mention of Ganesan's abuses is only an excuse. He is tired of the work because he has no energy to raise the funds. On my part I am disappointed about him. I believe he is fit for specified desk work and can perhaps maintain accounts and carry on correspondence well. But he has not the ability to run an institution. He lacks initiative, has no self-confidence, no interest in the work, no such thing as drive. However, he is a good man and he is honest. I advise you, therefore, to relieve him from the Kumbhakonam work and entrust the burden to Bhashyam Iyengar. Let him do as he wishes. As for Pratapmal, Jagannath Das may take him on if he wants to, but we should not shoulder the burden of expenditure. He may carry on by raising funds from Madras or any other place he likes. In no case can Ganesan continue. You might share the burden to any extent you 1 Gandhiji began this letter on April 29 and completed it the next day.

---

2 Choithram Gidwani choose provided Bhashyam Iyengar and Venkatasubbayya can shoulder the responsibility. You should boldly settle the matter as you wish. See that in whatever you do Sastri and Ganesan are carefully kept out. Sastri may be accommodated anywhere else. I wish you should no more burden me on his account. My heart turns towards the villages. I wrote the part concerning Amtussalaam at Wardha and then had to leave it incomplete as visitors came up. Now I complete it today, the second day, here at Segaon which is five miles from Wardha. You should take it that I have settled finally when I return here from Bangalore. Till then you may regard it as the Mahatma's imposture.

It is not that Sardar is taking me to Nandi Durg, I am taking him there.

Is it not enough, considering that I have not written to you for a long time, that I wrote all this from a village on country-made paper with a country-made reed-pen and country-made ink?

I got a long letter from Amtussalaam. I am enclosing my reply\(^1\) to her, which you should read to her.

Vandemataram from
BAPU

[PS.]

Reply to the Wardha address.
From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1158

475. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

Not revised

WARDHA,
April 30, 1936

MY DEAR AGATHA,

I have your letter of 17th instant. Nothing less was to be expected of Jawaharlal. His address\(^2\) is a confession of his faith. You see from the formation of his cabinet that he has chosen a majority of those who represent the traditional view, i.e., from 1920. Of course the majority represent my view. I would love to kill the New Constitution\(^3\)

---

\(^1\) This is not available.
\(^2\) As President at the annual session of the Congress at Lucknow
\(^3\) Under Government of India Act of 1935
today if I can. There is hardly anything in it I like. But Jawaharlal's way is not my way. I accept his ideal about land, etc. But I do not accept practically any of his methods. I would strain every nerve to prevent a class war. So would he, I expect. But he does not believe it to be possible to avoid it. I believe it to be perfectly possible especially if my method is accepted. But though Jawaharlal is extreme in his presentation of his methods, he is sober in action. So far as I know him, he will not precipitate a conflict nor will he shirk it if it is forced on him. But there perhaps the whole Congress is not of one mind. A difference there certainly is. My method is designed to avoid conflict. His is not so designed. My own feeling is that Jawaharlal will accept the decisions of the majority of his colleagues. For a man of his temperament, this is most difficult. He is finding it so already. Whatever he does he will do it nobly. Though the gulf between us as to the outlook upon life has undoubtedly widened, we have never been so near each other in hearts as we perhaps are today.

This is not for public use but you are at liberty to show it to friends.

I do not suppose you want anything more in answer to your question.

The rest from Mahadev.

Love.

BAPU

MISS AGATHA HARRISON
2 CRANBOURNE COURT
ALBERT BRIDGE ROAD, [LONDON] S.W. 11

476. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI
April 30, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. Sardar is taking a different route. Arrange to send Kusum to Wardha. She should be here before the 8th as we are leaving on that day. She should bring warm clothing and blankets, but not superfluous luggage.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am spending the day in Segaon, where I hope to settle down.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8488. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

390 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
477. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDDAR

SEGON,
April 30, 1936

BHAIPARIKSHITLAL,

I got your letter. You have done well in giving me an account. What a good thing it would be if by this time we had cultivated the strength to raise contributions!

I expect the Bharuch affair has been settled.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4035

478. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

April 30, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I got two letters from you. I understand what you say about money. Of course, your father’s letter is excellent and I noted what he had to say about giving you money. Inform him that I have sent it.

It is all right if you have given up milk for health reasons. But you are not to undertake any experiment with a view to giving up milk. The fit was probably due to your going without milk. You are not to worry at all. As long as you have your parents’ blessings and they have not the least dissatisfaction about you, what have you to worry about? How does it matter what the world says? You alone have to settle your account with Jayaprakash. His is a different case. Hence it will not do if you fall ill under the stress of worry. The true follower of the Gita is one who can remain calm and composed in any situation whatever, and you have to become such a one. For the present, write to me regularly.

Jayaprakash came to see me yesterday; Patwardhan was with him. He spoke to me about your future although he said nothing in reply to my letter. He said he wished to put you for three months at the school in Banaras where, he said, you might learn the Montessorie method. Then he mentioned Patna and asked my opinion about it. I told him I had no objection to the proposal. You should have the three months’ experience at the Banaras school, and then we shall see what is to be done. In any case you must maintain your health.

My stay in Nandi and Bangalore will take up a month, after which I am returning here. I came to Segaon today and shall be here for three days at least. Then again, after another two or three days I shall be leaving for Bangalore on the 8th. I expect Jayaprakash took your luggage with him and you were able to speak to him. Pyarelal alone has accompanied me to Segaon. Ba has not come as she is unwell.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]

Note that my address continues to be Wardha. The Mysore address is: Nandi Hill, Near Bangalore.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3462

---

479. DISCUSSION WITH A WORKER ¹

_April 30, 1936²_

“Don’t you think, Bapu,” the worker asked, “rather than bury yourself in this village, you should undertake a tour through the country, just for the rural reconstruction programme? I cannot tell you what a godsend that Harijan tour³ was, how it worked a silent revolution in people's minds. Nothing else could have achieved it. Couldn’t you take a tour like that?”

[G.] Oh, no. There is no similarity between the two cases. In Harijan work the practical and the theoretical aspects were combined. Here I cannot combine the two. I have been talking theory all these days, talking and giving advice on village work, without having personally come to grips with the difficulties of village work. If I undertook the tour, say, after passing three seasons in a village and among the villagers, a year hence I should be able to talk with knowledge and experience which I have not got today. Yesterday I went to Sindi to see how Gajanan Naik was working. The condition of things there is scarcely better but he is carrying on his work, patiently and perseveringly. The moment I saw him last morning I said to

---

¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
² Gandhiji had moved to Segaon early in the morning.
³ From November 7, 1933 to August 2, 1934 myself: ‘If I had been working with Gajanan, I should certainly have had intimate experience of the difficulties he is meeting with.’ No. It is clearer to me than ever before that my place is in the village.

_Harijan, 9-5-1936_

480. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

[On or after April 30, 1936]¹

MY DEAR CHILD,

I have your long letter. I have read it with the deepest interest. You have a tough problem in front of you. If you can, you should come to Nandi Hill to see me. I reach there on 10th May, D.V. God will guide you. You must not worry. Take things as they come to you when you cannot alter them.

I am writing this from the village Segaon where I want to settle down. Mirabai is here already. She will go to some other village, if I settle down here. I do not want any of the old co-workers with me, if I can help it.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: No. 137. Courtesy: National Archives of India

481. LETTER TO BAL D. KALELKAR

[Before May 1, 1936]²

That work³ is for you to do provided you have digested what I told you.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

---

¹ From the reference to Segaon where Gandhiji moved on April 30, 1936
² The source states that this was written before the letter to the addressee dated May 1, 1936; vide “Letter to Bal D. Kalelkar”, 1-5-1936.
³ The addressee had suggested that D. B. Kalelkar or Kishorelal Mashruwala should write a treatise to counteract the harangues on socialism.
482. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

May 1, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

You won't be a rebel if you were not an idiot. So it is always a question which title suits you most. And since no one can take titles for oneself and Rebel is your choice, I suppose I should prefer the use of Idiot. But though called Tyrant I pamper you so that the rebel of today may be a willing slave of tomorrow.

Well, I am at last in Segaon. Pyarelal is with me. I wanted him. Ba was to have come but she was unwell. You will be glad to learn that I walked almost the whole distance. I was none the worse for it. I took the bandi\(^1\) for the remaining \(\frac{3}{4}\) of a mile because we had missed the way and the others were getting uneasy about me. We came yesterday. The night was glorious.

The reversible sari was surely your own choice. Was it a shawl or sari, I forget. If the khes\(^2\) has come back to you it is a mistake. It has to come back to me.

I hope you get your money. No more now as Mahadev must take this and leave at once.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3724. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6880

483. LETTER TO BAL D. KALELKAR

[May 1, 1936]\(^4\)

CHI. BAL,

My suggestion\(^3\) was a considered one. You should indeed possess the ability to compile a volume explaining my ideas which can meet your need if you all really appreciated my thoughts. If you were convinced that the earth is round, you would not go to find out its proof from the best book of geography, but would rather prove your

\(^1\) Cart
\(^2\) An upper garment for men draped across the shoulders
\(^3\) Gandhiji had arrived in Segaon on April 30, 1936.
\(^4\) Vide “Letter to Bal D. Kalelkar”, 1-5-1936.
point by advancing arguments in your own way and in your own language. The same applies to my thoughts or those of others. Ultimately in the matter of dharma, too, the final authority is neither the Vedas nor the Gita nor the Bhagavata; the sole authority is our own unflinching faith and the resultant understanding.

This is what I mean when I say ‘solely due to Kaka’s greatness’.¹ He taught you both brothers Gujarati without reservations and, moreover, brought you up in Gujarat. Had he been narrow-minded he would [not] have let you speak any other language and would have had you brought up somewhere in Maharashtra. Is it not true?

This I am writing from Segaon on the second day of my arrival here. I surely like this place. Do you remember my tour of Orissa? Here we have a shelter like the ones in that tour. I am satisfied. My hut will come up in my absence. But, for the time being, I have to take Sardar to Bangalore—Nandi.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

484. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

May 1, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter quite in time. Kanti will send you your luggage.

I am sending a money order for Rs. 25. Do not be so careless again. It is likely that there was not so much carelessness as a feeling of shame. If so, such shame, too, ought to be given up.

You should put your time to good use.

I am concerned about your giving up milk. What is wrong with your health that you should give up milk? You must not let your health suffer.

My health is good, of course. My weight taken last night was 110-lb., i.e., about the same as at Delhi. The food, too, is nearly the same as there.

¹ Gandhiji had stated that the addressee’s brother winning the Paramananda Prize was “solely due to Kaka’s greatness”.

VOL. 68 : 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935 - 15 MAY, 1936
I shall be going to Nandi, Bangalore, on 8th or 9th May from here accompanied by Sardar. Our stay is expected to last a month.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3453

485. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SEGAON,

May 1, 1936

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

Mahadev cannot leave today. One strong reason is given in the wire. The other is Harijan. If he finishes it, you may detain him even longer. I have explained everything to him and, therefore, I do not write anything more in this letter.

If you don't improve your health and make it perfectly fit, I am bound to quarrel with you.

The air of the place is fine indeed. It was very cool at night. My requirements about food, etc., can be met satisfactorily. But more about this when I get some free time. Doctor (Ambedkar) and Walchand met me in Segaon. They are coming again

Blessings from

BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL

89 WARDEN ROAD

BOMBAY

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 195

486. FOR WOMEN REFORMERS

From a serious discussion I had with a sister I fear that my position on the use of contraceptives has not yet been sufficiently understood. My opposition is not due to their having come to us from the West. I thankfully use some Western things when I know that they

1 Walchand Hirachand, an industrialist
2 Mrs. Margaret Sanger; vide “Interview to Margaret Sanger”, 3/4-12-1935.
benefit us as they benefit those in the West. My opposition to contraceptives is based on merits.

I take it that the wisest among the protagonists of contraceptives restrict their use to married women who desire to satisfy their and their husbands' sexual appetite without wanting children. I hold this desire as unnatural in the human species and its satisfaction detrimental to the spiritual progress of the human family. As against this is often cited the following testimony among others of Lord Dawson of Penn:¹

Sex love is one of the clamant, dominating forces of the world. . . . You may guide it into healthy channels but an outlet it will have, and if that outlet is inadequate or unduly obstructed, irregular channels will be forced. Self-control has a breaking point, and if in any community marriage is difficult or late of attainment, an increase of irregular unions will inevitably result. . . .

Sex love has, apart from parenthood, a purport of its own. It is an essential part of health and happiness in marriage. . . . The attainment of mutual and reciprocal joy in their relations constitutes a firm bond between two people and makes for durability of their marriage tie. . . .

I will pass on to consider the all-important question of birth-control. . . . The reasons which lead parents to limit their offspring are sometimes selfish, but more often honourable and cogent. The desire to marry and to rear children well-equipped for life's struggle, limited incomes, the cost of living, burdensome taxation, are forcible motives. . . . Absence of birth-control means late marriages and these carry with them irregular unions and all the baneful consequences. . . . But say many, 'Birth-control may be necessary, but the only birth-control which is justifiable is voluntary abstention.' Such abstention would be either ineffective or, if effective, impracticable and harmful to health and happiness. To limit the size of a family to, say, four children, would be to impose on a married couple an amount of abstention which for long period would almost be equivalent to celibacy, and when one remembers that owing to economic reasons the abstention would have to be most strict during the earlier years of married life when desires are strongest, I maintain a demand is being made which, for the mass of people it is impossible to meet; that the endeavours to meet it would impose a strain hostile to health and happiness and carry with them grave dangers to morals . . .

Lord Dawson's eminence is not to be denied. But with all due respect to his greatness as a physician, I am tempted to question the value of his evidence, specially when it is pitted against the experience of men and women who have lived a life of continence without suffering any moral or physical harm. Physicians generally come across those who have so defied laws of health that they have contracted some illness. They, therefore, often successfully prescribe what sufferers should do to become well, but they cannot always know what healthy men and women can do in any particular direction. Lord Dawson’s evidence, therefore, about the effect of continence on married people has to be taken with the greatest caution. No doubt the tendency among married people is to regard sexual satisfaction for itself as legitimate. But in the modern age in which nothing is taken for granted and everything is rightly scrutinized, it is surely wrong to take it for granted that because we have hitherto indulged in the sexual appetite in married life, the practice is either legitimate or healthy. Many old practices have been discontinued with good results. Why should this particular practice be exempt from examination especially in the light of the experience of those who even as married men and women are living a life of restraint with mutual benefit both physical and moral?

¹ Only extracts from the quotation are reproduced here.

But I object to contraceptives also on special grounds in India. Young men in India do not know what sexual restraint is. It is not their fault. They are married early. It is the custom. Nobody tells them to exercise restraint in married life. Parents are impatient to see grandchildren. The poor girl-wives are expected by their surroundings to bear children as fast as they can. In such surroundings, the use of contraceptives can only further aggravate the mischief. The poor girls who are expected to submit to their husbands’ desires are now to be taught that it is a good thing to desire sexual satisfaction without the desire to have children. And in order to fulfil the double purpose they are to have recourse to contraceptives!!!

I regard this to be most pernicious education for married women. I do not believe that woman is prey to sexual desire to the same extent as man. It is easier for her than for man to exercise self-restraint. I hold that the right education in this country is to teach woman the art of saying no even to her husband, to teach her that it is not part of her duty to become a mere tool or a doll in her husband’s hands. She has rights as well as duties. Those who see in Sita a willing slave under Rama do not realize the loftiness of either her independence or Rama’s consideration for her in everything. Sita was no helpless weak woman incapable of protecting herself or her honour. To ask India's women to take to contraceptives is, to say the least, putting the cart before the horse. The first thing is to free her from mental slavery, to teach her the sacredness of her body and to teach her the dignity of national service and the service of humanity. It is not fair to assume that India's women are beyond redemption and that they have therefore to be simply taught the use of contraceptives for the sake of preventing births and preserving such health as they may be in possession of.

Let not the sisters who are rightly indignant over the miseries of women who are called upon to bear children whether they will or no, be impatient. Not even the propaganda in favour of contraceptives is going to promote the desired end overnight. Every method is a matter of education. My plea is for the right type.

Harijan, 2-5-1936

487. LETTER TO M. MUJEEB

SEGAON, NEAR WARDHA

May 2, 1936

MY DEAR MUJEEB,

You were quite right in writing to me as you did. Aqil must have given you a full account of what I did and what happened. As your letter is so good and so important, I propose to publish it without your name and answer it in the columns of Harijan. I hope you will see the answer. If it does not satisfy you, you will not hesitate to write again. I want to give you complete satisfaction if I at all can. There are parts of your letter where you have made mistakes.

My love to all whom I know.

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 1464. Courtesy: M. Mujeeb

---

1 Of Jamia Millia Islamia
3 Vide “Hindi or Hindustani”, 9-5-1936 and 16-5-1936.
488. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

May 2, 1936

CHI. AMBUJAM,

I have your letter from Madras. I hope to leave for Bangalore via Madras on 8th instant. I pass through on 9th evening. If you can you will find me out at the station. Ba, Mahadev, the same boys, Kumarappa, will certainly be with me. I am going to Nandi Hill for the sake of Sardar.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 9606. Courtesy: S. Ambujammal

489 LETTER TO VIYOGI HARI

May 2, 1936

BHAII VIYOGI HARI,

We already have in our hands the work of Harijan Sevak; other kinds of service of Harijans are carried on everywhere. Now a third cause has come up. As desired by Jamnalalji the Hindi Sammelan has entrusted the work of Hindi propagation to a special committee which will have Wardha as its headquarters. We all want you to be the secretary of that committee. We have Baba Raghavdas, too, in mind. Can he not leave Gorakhpur? Do you like this work? Would you like to come over to Wardha? Can you leave your work of Harijan education without any harm? If not, do you know anyone who is a lover of Hindi and can handle the work of a secretary and who is also willing to stay in Wardha?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1099

1 Kanti Gandhi and Kanu Gandhi
2 A prominent social worker from U.P.
490. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

May 2, 1936

BAPA,

I have carefully gone through your ‘circular letter’ regarding the Harijans of Tiruchengodu. What may we do in such a case? The money given is in a way the price paid for proselytization and, in a way, it is not so either. To fill the belly man resorts to forced labour and flattery. The remedy could be only one. Let us remove their sufferings. But these ‘our men’ in Tiruchengodu are attached to money and therefore in such cases we are helpless. They would soon come over to our side if we paid them more. But this would be an unprofitable trade. “Therefore what is unavoidable thou shouldst not regret.”¹ All the same, wisdom would consist in doing what Rajaji says since he is a man with experience of the place. I do not write to him because you have already written. Your letter had not reached me when he was in Wardha.

I have already written to you how the question of Amtussalaam is to be solved.²

Read my letter to Viyogi Hari and give it to him if you think it right. I mean it is no use giving him the letter if you are sure you cannot relieve him. It will be possible to make full use of him here if it cannot be done there.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1155

491. LETTER TO DRAUPADI SHARMA

May 2, 1936

CHI. DRAUPADI,

I, too, got a letter from Sharma after writing to you. I have sent it on to Ramdas asking him to pass it on to you. Yes, I shall leave on the 8th for Bangalore, Mysore, taking Sardar with me. I have now come to settle in a village. Amtussalaam writes to you, I suppos.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, between pp. 192 and 193

¹ Bhagavad Gita, II. 27
² Vide “Letter to Amritlal V. Thakkar”, 29/30-4-1936.
492. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

WARDHA,
May 3, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

My right hand needs rest. You will perhaps like to read the enclosed.¹ It need not be returned.

Khurshed has written to me about her new suggestion regarding the scope of Kamala Memorial. If it is a substitute for the hospital, it is in my opinion inadmissible. And it cannot be carried out for 3 lacs.

Love.

BAPU

493. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

MAY 3, 1936

CHI. JAMNALAL,

I spoke to Shriman Narayan. I like him. He has good poetic promise and is keen on improving it. The family seems to be good.

I visited the site of the memorial. I could not know what they were now doing there. I would certainly like to know.

Dharmadhikari will look after the garden at the site of the memorial. He seems to like this place. They are satisfied with him. He remains absorbed in his work.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2978

¹ Presumably a copy of the letter to Agatha Harrison, dated April 30, 1936; vide also “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 12-5-1936.
494. SPEECH AT A.I.V.I.A. EXHIBITION

WARDHA,

May 3, 1936

As I was coming to Maganwadi I saw the weekly bazaar that is held here every Sunday. That bazaar has the raw produce as well as manufactures from raw produce exhibited in abundance. This exhibition has these exhibited on a very humble scale. I therefore wondered how our exhibition compared with the weekly bazaar. The fundamental difference is that the exhibition is held entirely with a view to service of the village and the townsfolk, whereas the bazaar is a business concern in which the villager is exploited. He is made to sell his wares as cheap as possible, often even below cost price. At this exhibition there is hardly any buying and selling. This exhibition is an attempt to educate the residents of Wardha in their duty towards the villages surrounding them and to educate the villagers in what is possible for them to better themselves in every way. The exhibition teaches them how to keep their villages clean, what food to eat and how to improve their industries and thus earn a little more than they do today. So far as the town-dweller is concerned the exhibition forcibly brings to his mind the various ways in which he is exploiting the villager, and how best he may serve the villager by going in for his wares. The Lucknow Exhibition opened the eyes of those who visited it to the wonderful capacity of our village craftsman, and even this will do so somewhat. I may tell you here that though the admission here has been kept free, at Lucknow it was not free. Reports have been published that the exhibition there resulted in a heavy loss. They are wrong. The receipts from the sale of tickets exceeded Rs. 25,000. There were, besides, receipts from stall-holders. It is just possible that there will be a nominal profit. Those around Lucknow will not see such an exhibition in Lucknow for years to come. The Kumbh Mela recurs at long but regular intervals. The Congress and the Exhibition may not be held again at the same place, and even if it is, it may be held at an indefinitely long interval, especially because the tendency, I hope, now will be to select not big cities but small towns for their venue. But local exhibitions like this should be inexpensive annual efforts of growingly educative value. The village oilman has, for instance, deteriorated nowadays. He adulterates the oil with cheap and spurious stuffs. He will learn here how it is profitable to make the oil absolutely pure and unadulterated. The paper-maker will learn here how to make the paper neat and lasting. As time goes we should be able to show improvements in these processes. I know that we have been able to produce little effect, during the year, on our surroundings or on the villages in the neighbourhood. But that does not disappoint me. We have to plod on. Those of you who have come here have to go forth to the villages as advertising agents and to draw the villagers to such exhibitions. The tragedy today is that the town-dweller is becoming increasingly indifferent to the villages, that he even believes that the villages are going to be destroyed in the near future. They certainly will be if we continue to prefer mill-made articles to hand-made. Those of you who have come here have to go out as preachers of the gospel of rural-mindedness.

1 Reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Gandhiji inaugurated the exhibition arranged at Maganwadi.
2 From The Bombay Chronicle, 5-5-1936

A factory employs a few hundreds and renders thousands unemployed. I may produce tons of oil from an oil-mill, but I also drive thousands of oilmen out of employment. I call this destructive energy, whereas production by the labour of millions of hands is constructive and conductive to the common good.\(^1\) Mass production through power-driven machinery, even when State-owned, will be of no avail.

But why not, it is asked, save the labour of millions and give them more leisure for intellectual pursuits? Leisure is good and necessary up to a point only. God created man to eat his bread by the sweat of his brow, and I dread the prospect of our being able to produce all that we want, including our Food-stuffs, out of a conjurer's hat.

_Harijan_, 16-5-1936

\(^1\) The report in _The Bombay Chronicle_, 5-5-1936, here has: “The method of production of necessaries through power-driven machinery displacing tens of thousands of men and providing prolonged leisure was, in his opinion, _asuric_, whereas the ancient method of production by human labour in co-operation was _daiwire_—that is to say, conductive to the progress of humanity. The ancient method had its effects. The All-India Village Industries Association was endeavouring to remedy the evil and exhibitions were a method of encompassing that end.”
LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
May 4, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

As Mahadev is here and has brought your note, I must send this through him. Your post generally comes in the evening in Maganwadi. I am not, therefore, able to deal with your letters the very day. In Segaon, your post comes late at night which is the same thing. So there is no delay about incoming letters.

You are right. ‘Idiots’ must not meet in broiling heat. Next year we meet in February of early March unless you invite us to Simla !!!

Your Lucknow parcel must be with you by this time.

Yes, I have almost all the creature comforts I need. What I do not have, I do not miss. And I could have them, if I want.

Your suggestion about Ku. was ever anticipated. He is going with me to Nandi and I hope to have the tonsils removed in Bangalore.

You may depend upon it I am having a royal time in Segaon. Therefore no anxiety.

Love to you all.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3725. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6881

LETTER TO PRABHASHANKAR PATTANI

P. O. WARDHA,
May 4, 1936

SUJNA BHAISHRI,

Is there in your State a cool place having Gopnath or some such name? I am sure you came across Vinoba’s brother, Balkrishna, at the Ashram. He is a learned man, well versed in music, too, but his health has run down. He loves solitude and may not be able to stand

1 J.C. Kumarappa
2 Dewan of Bhavnagar State
3 A seaside health resort in the Bhavnagar State

VOL. 68 : 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935 - 15 MAY, 1936
noise. I wish he could use a quiet room in Gopnath or whatever the place is called. I have written to Bhai Jivanlal¹ to see if accommodation can be found for him at Chorwad.

I am in Segaon and Mahadev [will be] in Bombay. I am taking Sardar to Nandi Durg on the 8th. May I, therefore, ask for a reply by wire if this reaches you in time?

I hope you are quite well.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

[PS.]
Please address the mail to Wardha.

497. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
May 5, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Surely by this time you have had more than one letter from Segaon. I am sure in a day or two you would have begun to like the place and the life. Ba came with me yesterday. I walked the whole distance. It took me full two hours. But then we again missed the way a little. We were all novices without a guide. And I was silent. I can comfortably do the whole distance on 1½ hours. I was none the worse for the walk and was ready for the evening walk. Mahadev and Lilavati walked in at 8.30 p.m., and slept on the ground where the operations are going on. We all sleep there, surrounded on all sides by double trenches supported by the excavated earth. We eat the vegetables grown here. We do not therefore get a variety but there is more than compensation in the thought that we are taking what is grown locally. This restriction, if persisted in, will soon induce a cultivation of other vegetables. So much for Segaon.

Now for the parcel from Lucknow. You wrote to me the other day saying you had advice of despatch of parcel by Miss Ala worth over Rs. 600. You even hoped that it won't contain the khes you had sent. Where is that parcel? Instructions together with addresses were duly passed. But everything was topsy-turvy. All were overworked. I am sorry about the parcel having gone to Simla. I know what worry it is to have things wrongly addressed. I had spoken to Khurshed more than once and then to Jerajani1. Let us see what finally happens. You need not send your cheque before the receipt of the parcels. By way of curiosity I would like to know how much extra the wrong address has cost.

¹ Jivanlal Motichand Shah who helped Gandhiji financially in his khadi and Harijan welfare work.

I am sure you should accept the Jullundur nomination2 if it comes to you. And I take it, you have taken over the college responsibility. These things cannot be put away lightly.

You are right about Ku. He is coming to Nandi Hill. I shall see what is possible. I shall not have the operation performed unless I am sure that it is necessary and the surgeon knows his work. Bharatan too will be going probably to Kodaiakanal.

Remember the date of my departure, 8th instant. I leave Segaon on 8th morning.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3726. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6882.

498. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

[May]3 5, 1936

CHI. JAMNALAL,

Herewith Akarte's4 letter. It is difficult to make out what the truth is. I find it necessary to exercise restraint in giving publicity to Buva. It is all right to cultivate his acquaintance. I consider it improper to make use of him for public service without closer experience of him. I shall go deep into the matter when I get the time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2979

---

1 Vithaldas Jerajani, a khadi worker
2 To the Municipality
3 From Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 179
4 J.S. Akarte, an advocate from Nagpur
CHI. PREMA,

You can write to me now. We are leaving on the 8th for Nandi Durg.

You seem to have gathered good experience. Merely because we doubt a man's sincerity we cannot reject his application if he is prepared to sign the Congress Pledge. There will always be men who will wangle admission under one or the other pretext. If the majority of the members are sincere, ultimately all will be well.

The report of the Maharashtrian's letter is perfectly correct. But his supposition was completely wrong. The correspondent's letter could be interpreted to mean that by resting my hands on girls' shoulders I used to gratify my sensual desire. His words of course were different.

But the truth is that my discontinuing the practice of resting my hands on the shoulders of girls has nothing to do with my sensual desire. It had its origin in my pampering the body with food while doing no work. I had a discharge, but I was awake and the mind was under control. I understood the cause and from that time stopped taking rest as prescribed by the doctors. And my state now is better than it was, if such a state could be imagined. If you wish to ask me more questions about this you may, for I have cherished high hopes of you. You may, therefore, know from me anything concerning myself that you wish to.

The articles I have written recently deserve careful pondering over. If you have understood them, the practice of brahmacharya will become very easy. If one is convinced that the genital organs are not intended for sex-gratification, wouldn't one's attitude change completely? As a man happening to see on the road the blood-stained sputum of a consumptive may take it to be a gem and long to pick it up, but will come to his senses as soon as he realizes his error, so is the case in regard to the function of the genital organs. The truth is that this belief has never been held with sufficient conviction and clarity.

1 A Maharashtrian professor from Poona had written to Gandhiji in connection with his article “Nothing Without Grace”; vide “Nothing Without Grace”, 29-2-1936.
And now the new education denounces it, teaches that moderate sex-gratification is a good thing and asserts its necessity. Think over all this.

The experience of your friends that you have described is excellent.¹

Let this suffice for the present.

Probably Lilavati will join you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10380. Also C.W. 6818. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

500. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

May 6, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,

I have your letter. What shall I write to you? I have a telegram from Dr. Ansari; you must follow his instructions. I wanted to take you to Bangalore with me, but let us now see how things take shape. You shall follow the treatment unquestioningly. The first thing is to get well. After that we shall see what we can do.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 334

501. SPEECH AT KHADI YATRA²

PAUNAR,

[May 6, 1936]¹

Gandhiji said he had sense enough not to spoil the effect of that rapturous utterance³ by inflicting another speech on them. But, he said, he would offer one test whereby he would like to measure their sincerity and earnestness next year.

¹ Two women of Sasvad, who though married and living with their husbands had observed abstinence for several years, had narrated their experiences to the addressee.
² Mahadev Desai in his “Weekly Letter”, from which this is extracted, explains that the “yatra” was an “annual gathering of believers in khadi in Marathi-speaking Central Provinces”.
³ Gandhiji visited Paunar on May 6, 1936.
⁴ Earlier, Vinoba Bhave had “in a torrence of eloquence . . . explained the object f khadi yatra and in doing so brought to bear all the wealth of imagery and illustration”.

VOL. 68 : 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935 - 15 MAY, 1936 409
I should be satisfied if you were to follow the gospel of khadi with even a hundredth of Vinoba's faith. We have to demonstrate to the poor that khadi could be had for the price of unginned raw cotton, that is to say, those who produce cotton can have khadi free. That can happen only when we popularize the handginning of cotton, a process which preserves the vitality both of the cotton fibre and of the seed. Jamnalalji would fain close his ginning factory tomorrow, if we were to ask him to do so. But it would have no value. If you were to take upon yourselves to gin all the cotton that you produce it would close down automatically. Vinoba's simile of the lamp was very beautifully expressive indeed. As darkness cannot stand in front of light, even so absence of khadi cannot exist in front of khadi. Your khadi will be infectious only if you will bring to bear on it all the devotion and the perseverance and, above all, the intelligent devotion and perseverance that it deserves. Only thereby will you be able to take it out of a narrow and exclusive groove and succeed in sharing it with those whom you come across.

_Harijan_, 16-5-1936

502. TELEGRAM TO G. RAMACHANDRAN

_May 7, 1936_

G, RAMACHANDRAN\(^1\)

THAIKAD

TRIVANDRUM

HOPE UNDER WISE GUIDANCE SHRIMATI RAMESHWARI NEHRU\(^2\)

CONFERENCE [SUCCEED] AND SOLVE TEMPLE-ENTRY AND OTHER QUESTIONS SO AS TO PURIFY HINDUISM OF CURSE UNTOUCHABILITY.

GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

\(^1\) Secretary, Harijan Sevak Sangh, Kerala

\(^2\) President of the Harijan Sevak Sangh, who presided over the All-Kerala Temple-entry Conference
503. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 7, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I am leaving tomorrow 8th. Amtul Salaam has not arrived. Dr. Ansari has detained her. Lilavati went to Bombay with Mahadev. She may join you in Segaon during the last week of May or beginning of June. I suppose you would not mind her coming and becoming initiated and knowing the people there. Balwant Singh may also pass the month with you. If he comes he can only help you. I suggested [it] to him this morning. The work you are just now doing is too much for you. If however you do not like any of my appointments you will tell me. I suggested Balwant Singh, as you were inclined to take Munnalal1. And of Lilavati you had shown readiness to take her. That was a different thing, I know. But this is a proper occasion if she would come in advance. I have my doubts as to her coming. She simply wants my company. But you will let me know your own wishes plainly and they will be given effect to.

The rammers should have gone to you this morning to be returned without fail on Sunday.

I understand about the sandals.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

I walked the whole distance yesterday. The scenery was splendid.

From the original: C.W. 6332. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9798

504. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

May 7, 1936

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I entirely agree with you that if people had to be banished from the colony because of Rukmini's likes or dislikes, many more people than Amtul Salaam would have to leave. I have said as much to Bapa.

1 Munnalal G. Shah
Of course he has suggested A.’s leaving for your peace and A.’s. But I know you do not want such peace. To bear with Rukmini and yet not to yield to her is your martyrdom. But if A. has to leave for the sake of her health she must do so. I now have a wire from Dr. Ansari that he has detained A. I now await his letter which he has promised.

My sympathies are all with you.

Here are letters for A.S. and Rukmini. You need not give the letter to R. if you do not like it.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 921

505. LETTER TO RUKMINI MALKANI

May 7, 1936

CHI. RUKMINI,

What is all this? What could a nice girl like Amtussalaam have done to you? It is not good of you to harass a husband like Malkani. Do you remember your promise to me? Be calm, assist Malkani in his work and live amicably with all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 920

506. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

May 7, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM.

I wrote no letters to you earlier as I was expecting you. Why need you go to a hill-station when Doctor Saheb has said that it is not at all necessary? You may well stay on. Now I understand why Thakkar Bapa said that there was no work for you; it was solely to avoid unpleasantness. Malkani frankly says that he needs you. Hence you have now to stay on in the Harijan Colony. There is no need at present to go to Dhaka whatever might happen in future. Anyway,

1 The source has “him”.
2 A Harijan village near Delhi what could you do in Patiala? Now the problem of the Harijan girl is out of the way. You should take no note of what . . .¹ says; let her say whatever she likes; she is silly. Anyway, I have written to her and I am writing to Bapa, too. Kanti and Kanu are with me. Mahadev and . . .² will come via Poona. Kumarappa will join us later.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Devanagari transliteration of Urdu]
Bapuke patra−8: Bibi Amtussalaamke Naam, pp. 70-1

507. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

May 7, 1936

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

Chandrashanker¹ is ill and Mahadev has gone to Poona; from there he will join me at Bangalore. I leave this place tomorrow for Bangalore. I shall be at Nandi Durg for a fortnight and then I go to Bangalore, for Vallabhbhai's sake.

Regarding Parameshwari² I have already obtained Parnerkar's³ opinion and shall seek some more opinions. The sanction of Rs. 10,000 from the Goseva Sangh to Parameshwari is being delayed.

A meeting will have to be called as three members have voted against it. The meeting can be called only in June. There will be a further hitch on account of Parnerkar's recent adverse opinion. No doubt, he has experience behind him, having worked for years at Sabarmati. At present he is working at Dhulia on behalf of the Goseva Sangh.

Dinkar⁶ met me and I told him not to accept defeat but to go on trying to give you satisfaction. I also told him that you certainly had some doubt about his application, none about his honesty or hard

¹ The names are omitted in the source.
² Ibid
³ Chandrasanker Pranshanker Shukla, Editor, Harijanbandhu
⁴ A dairy expert running the addressee's goshala in Delhi
⁵ Yashwant Mahadev Parnerkar
⁶ Dinkarrai Pandya, in charge of the dairy in the Sabarmati Ashram work. He will come to see you and you may do what is right.

I have come to like Segaon.

If necessary you may come over to Bangalore where the climate is of course good.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 8019. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

508. SPEECH AT A.I.V.I.A. MEETING

WARDHA,
May 7, 1936

I take it that those who are members of the A. I. V. I. A. know the rules of the Association, one of which is that there is to be an annual general meeting. Either such a meeting is necessary or it is not. If it is, surely it is the duty of every member to attend the meeting unless he is unavoidably absent. What I cannot understand is that the absentees have not all written to say what prevented them from attending the meeting. The feeling on the part of an individual member that his absence alone cannot affect the quorum is obviously wrong.

Our ambition is to make at least one member for each of our 7,00,000 villages, but our actual membership is 517! And the bulk of the members are not present! It is deplorable, but it does not dismay me. Let those who are present carry to the absentees at least this message that it was their duty to inform the Secretary as to the reason of their failure. Failure even to intimate the reason argues lethargy, which certainly should disqualify one to be the member of an association like ours.2

Mahatma Gandhi observed that the duty of the workers was to serve the villagers and if they found that the atmosphere in some place was not congenial to them for the pursuit of service owing to the hostility of local officials, nothing would be lost by their shifting their centres of work. The country was wide enough to provide ample scope for work in places other than those in which conditions were

---

1 The first annual general meeting of the Association scheduled to be held at 3 p.m. had to be adjourned for want of quorum and was held at 8 p.m.
2 This is extracted from Mahadev Desai's “Weekly Letter”. The following paragraph is from The Bombay Chronicle. rendered difficult owing to extraneous forces. Difficulties occasioned by internal forces it would be the duty of workers, however, to overcome.

Some members talk of difficulties created from outside. I think most of them are imaginary. How much have we been able to do where there are no difficulties from outside? Take Sindi and Segaon where Gajanan and Mirabehn have both been working with a zeal and rural-mindedness that every one of us might envy. How much have they achieved that could be shown? The reason is the inertia, the lethargy of our people, the masters. We want them to do something, i.e., to keep their surroundings clean, to eat wholesome food and to regulate their working hours so as to increase their income. They have no faith in all this. They have lost hope of bettering their lot.

We have to tackle the triple malady which holds our villages fast in its grip: (1) Want of corporate sanitation; (2) Deficient diet; (3) Inertia.

In Segaon where Mirabehn is working, all the outside circumstances are more favourable than anywhere else. The zamindars there are Jamnalalji and Babasaheb Deshmukh. They place no obstacles; they, on the contrary, help her. And yet, do you think she gets much co-operation from the people? Not that they are wilfully obstructive. They are not interested in their own welfare. They don't appreciate modern sanitary methods. They don't want to exert themselves beyond scratching their farms or doing such labour as they are used to. These difficulties are real and serious. But they must not baffle us. We must have an unquenchable faith in our mission. We must be patient with the people. We are ourselves novices in village work. We have to deal with a chronic disease. Patience and perseverance, if we have them, overcome mountains of difficulties. We are like nurses who may not leave their patients because they are reported to have an incurable disease.

The only way is to sit down in their midst and work away in steadfast faith, as their scavengers, their nurses, their servants, not as their patrons, and to forget all our prejudices are prepossessions. Let us for a moment forget even swaraj, and certainly forget the ‘haves’ whose presence oppresses us at every step. They are there. There are many who are dealing with these big problems. Let us tackle the humbler work of the village which is necessary now and would be even after we have reached our goal. Indeed, the village work when it becomes successful will itself bring us nearer the goal.¹

He hoped to see Segaon become an ideal centre of persistent effort, and he trusted that worker's elsewhere would apply to the work before them the same zest and energy. It was too early to judge the progress achieved, but he hoped that they would also attempt to understand thoroughly the implications of the threefold programme that had been placed before them by the Association. The first part of this was the improvement of sanitary conditions, removal of filth and the eradication of habits which gave rise to uncleanness. That meant the education of the village population by personal example and steady work.

The next part of the programme called for a radical change in the dietary of the people so that they might be enabled to draw greater sustenance from the articles of food ordinarily available in villages. This required that the processing of food-stuffs should be done in the villages, as in the past, and that pure food-stuffs should be made available in villages and not be drained away to towns. The last portion of the programme was the utilization of spare time of the cultivators, the revival of dead or dying industries, and teaching all classes of people the right use of leisure.

All these were difficult tasks, Mahatma Gandhi admitted, and those friends of his were not wrong who warned him that he had now in the evening of his life taken upon his head a heavier responsibility than the promotion of the charkha movement or the removal of untouchability. Both these activities, important as they were, formed only a part of the vast work of rural reconstruction.

_Harijan, 16-5-1936, and The Bombay Chronicle, 11-5-1936_

---

509. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 8, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your sweet letter. I leave by the Grand Trunk after 6 p.m. I had a long talk with J.² about the road through the village. His mind is working on it. Do keep yourself perfectly well and cheerful. Do not overwork yourself even though my cottage itself remains unfinished.³

¹ What follows is from The Bombay Chronicle.
² Jamnalal Bajaj
³ The addressee explains: “There were only six weeks in which to complete the cottage, the cowshed, the road and my hut on the hill. Balwant Singh, Munnaalbhai and myself worked at full speed from daybreak to night. Even so, rains began before we had fully completed everything. But the house was inhabitable when Bapu arrived in pouring rain to take up residence on the 16th of June.”
No fretting.

I hope you got the rammers.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6333. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9799

510. LETTER TO PANDURANG N. RAJBHOJ

May 8, 1936

BHAI RAJBHOJ,

I regard it as necessary to encourage the craft of leather-work. I hope you will acquire proficiency in this craft and you must not be satisfied till you attain it.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 795

511. SPEECH AT TRAINING SCHOOL FOR VILLAGE WORKERS

WARDHA,

May 8, 1936

I may confess that I was sceptical about the opening of the school.\(^1\) We had not enough material, we had not much practical experience of village work, and I doubted whether we should be able to give the students anything helpful by way of training. I also doubted whether many students would be forthcoming and whether they would be the kind of men we need for village work. I am glad to say that my fears have been so far falsified, and that we have achieved during the brief three months more than was expected.

But today I propose to speak to you about the ideal of work and life that you have to keep in view and work towards.

You are here not for a career in the current sense of the term.

\(^1\) The school was opened by the A.I.V.I.A at Maganwadi in January and had 37 students.
Today man's worth is measured in rupees, annas, pies and a man's educational training is an article of commerce. If you have come with that measure in mind, you are doomed to disappointment. At the end of your studies you may start with an honorarium of ten rupees and end with it. You may not compare it with what a manager of a great firm or a high official gets.¹

You should cultivate the true spirit of humility and appreciate properly the role you are to play in the life of the rural community.

Your ambition should be to serve the villagers more intensively and not to look to higher emoluments. You are not less valuable servants of India than members of the Indian Civil Service who draw a remuneration a hundred times higher than what you will get.

It is a topsy-turvy economics which is fashioning your destiny today when persons draw salaries which are nearly a thousand to two thousand times the average income of an Indian.

We have to change the current standards. We promise you no earthly careers, in fact we want to wean you from ambition of that kind. You are expected to bring your food-bill within Rs. 6 a month. The food-bill of an I.C.S. may come to Rs. 60 a month, but that does not mean that he is or will be on that account physically or intellectually or morally superior to you. He may be for all his sumptuous living even inferior in all these respects. You have come to this institution because, I presume, you do not value your qualifications in metal. You delight in giving your service to the country for a mere pittance. A man may earn thousands of rupees on the Stock Exchange but may be thoroughly useless for our purposes. He would be unhappy in our humble surroundings and we should be unhappy in his. We want ideal labourers in the country's cause. They will not bother about what food they get, or what comforts they are assured by the villagers whom they serve. They will trust to God for whatever they need, and will exult in the trials and tribulations they might have to undergo. This is inevitable in our country where we have 7,00,000 villages to think of. We cannot afford to have a salaried staff of workers who have an eye to regular increments, provident funds and pensions. Faithful service of the villagers is its own satisfaction.

Some of you will be tempted to ask if this is also the standard for the villagers. Not by any means. These prospects are for us servants and not for the village-folk our masters. We have sat on their backs all these years, and we want to accept voluntary and increasing poverty in order that our masters' lot may be much better than it is today. We have to enable them to earn much more than they are earning today. That is the aim of the Village Industries Association. It cannot prosper unless it has an ever-increasing number of servants such as I have described. May you be such servants.¹

¹ This is reproduced from Mahadev Desai's “Weekly Letter”. The following three paragraphs are from The Bombay Chronicle.

He hoped, in conclusion, that this institution would serve to be an agency for forging links between the rural population in different parts of India.

_Harijan, 23-5-1936, and The Bombay Chronicle, 11-5-1936_

512. HINDI OR HINDUSTANI

Elsewhere the reader will find a deeply interesting letter² from an esteemed friend which was read to the delegates who recently assembled in Nagpur and who inaugurated the Akhil Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad. There is a similar letter from another Muslim friend enclosing leading article³ on the subject in _The Bombay Chronicle_ dated 27th April last. These letters and the _Chronicle_ article generally represent my views on the question of common inter-provincial speech. However, I fear that there are perhaps limitations to my agreement which need to be publicly stated. The limitations if they may be so called are designed to compass the very end that my friends have in view.

At the outset I must dismiss from consideration the suspicion entertained by some Muslims. The whole atmosphere is surcharged with suspicion. No person's declarations or acts are above suspicion. The best way, in my opinion, for those who sincerely desire full communal unity and have themselves given no cause for suspicion is to act on the square without being swayed one way or the other by the passions of the moment, especially in matters like the Parishad which have nothing to do with the passions. The object of the Parishad is to gather together all that is best in all the languages of India and to make it available to the largest number of her inhabitants and therefore through a speech understood by the largest number. Urdu is undoubtedly one of the many languages and contains treasures which should be the common property of all India. No Indian who wishes to know the Muslim mind or to know all about Islam as it is being interpreted through the Indian medium can afford to ignore Urdu literature. And the Parishad just established will fail in its duty and purpose if it does not unlock for all India the treasures to be found in the current Urdu literature.

---

¹ What follows is from _The Bombay Chronicle_.

² _Vide_ Appendix, “Popularize Hindustani”, 27-4-1936; also “Letter to M. Mujeeb”, 2-5-1936.

My correspondent has made a mistake which needs to be cleared. He could not have had before him the full test of Tandonji's speech made not as the friend thinks at Banaras but at Allahabad, or he would not have made the serious mistake of thinking that when Tandonji talked of 22 crores speaking Hindi, he had in mind only those who wrote the modern artificial Hindi. He made it clear that he referred to the vast mass of people of north of the Vindhyas including the seven crores of Mussalmans who more or less spoke and understood the language which is evolved from Vrajabhasha and which has the latter's grammatical structure. The name Hindi given to it is not original. It was given by Muslim writers to what they wrote for the people of the North and what was undoubtedly like that which their Hindu brethren wrote. Later on a bifurcation took place and Hindi written in Devanagari came to be the speech of the Hindus of the North and Urdu written in Arabic or Persian script came to be the speech of the Muslims of the North. It is hardly true as yet to say that Urdu is common to the Mussalmans all over India. I know that the Ali Brothers and I found it difficult to make ourselves understood by the Moplahs of Malabar through our Urdu. We had to have a Malayalee interpreter. We found a similar difficulty in East Bengal among its numerous Mussalmans. Both Tandonji and Rajendra Babu therefore meant the same thing absolutely as my friend when they used the word 'Hindi'. The use of the word 'Hindustani' would not make their position clearer.

But the writer of the letter is on sure ground when he complains of the writers of the North who write a language which they call 'Hindi' but which very few persons even of the North would

---

1 At the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan on April 5, 1936, at Allahabad
2 Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali
3 As President of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan held at Nagpur understand. It is an effort which is doomed to fail like Johnsonian speech.

Then why insist on ‘Hindi or Hindustani’ and why not simply say ‘Hindustani’, the writer may say. For one simple reason that it would be impertinent for me, a newcomer, to ask an association of 25 years' standing to alter its name when the need for it is not clearly proved. The new Parishad is an offspring of the older Association and wants to cater both for the Muslims and Hindus of the North who speak the common mother tongue, it does not matter whether it is called Hindi or Hindustani. For me either word has the same connotation. But I would not quarrel with those who would use the word ‘Hindi’ if they mean the same speech as I do.

I do not understand the writer's objection to the adoption of the expression Akhil Bharatiya. It is an expression certainly known to the Hindus all over India. And I make bold to say that even the majority of the Mussalmans of the North would understand it. The Indian culture of our times is in the making. Many of us are striving to produce a blend of all the cultures which seem today to be in clash with one another. No culture can live if it attempts to be exclusive. There is no such thing as pure Aryan culture in existence today in India. Whether the Aryans were indigenous to India or were unwelcome intruders, does not interest me much. What does interest me is the fact that my remote ancestors blended with one another with the utmost freedom and we of the present generation are a result of that blend. Whether we are doing any good to the country of our birth and the tiny globe which sustains us or whether we are a burden, the future alone will show. So far as I am concerned the new Parishad and the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan have the common good of all through a blending of the best in all India’s languages. If they have not, they will perish. But blending to be that must not mean exclusion of everything that has an Aryan flavour any more than that of everything that has an Arabian or for that matter English or any other flavour.

I may not prolong the argument this week. There are still some important points to be covered. I hope to deal with them next week.²

_Harijan, 9-5-1936_

¹ Hindi Sahitya Sammelan
² Vide “Hindi or Hindustani-II”, 16-5-1936.
513. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

May 9, 1936

MY DEAR SLAVE-TO-BE,

This is being written on the train nearing Madras. We were in a crowded train at Wardha and were divided into three parties. Towards 10 o’clock we all had sleeping room quite comfortable. I wished you were with us. Except for the heat you would have enjoyed the journey. On way I have already collected Rs. 186 for the Harijan cause. I hope to make up Rs. 200 before reaching Madras.

I shall cease to be tyrant when you become a willing slave instead of a rebel for nothing—an imaginary rebel to an imaginary tyrant. Whether your idiocy will permit you to see such an obvious thing is another question. I shall wait, watch and see.

I hope the parcel contains much you wanted. What about the bigger one for Ala? I can’t understand why you have not got the lace. I must inquire.

Ku. and Shanta¹ will follow me in a day or two. I have asked Ku. to stop in Bombay a day or two longer, in order to have a thorough examination.

I hope you were a match for your opponents in the matter of birth-control argument. Non-violence is not an easy job. It is the subtlest force in the world. It easily eludes one. But I know that in the matter of non-violence you may be beaten in argument; you won’t be dislodged from your conviction which had come to you before your reason had approved of it. Is that not so?

My address is Nandi Hill, Mysore State or simply Bangalore City.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3727. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6883

¹ An Englishwoman
514. LETTER TO RAMESHWARI NEHRU

ON THE TRAIN,
May 9, 1936

DEAR SISTER,

It was very good that you went to Trivandrum.\(^1\) I gave you the trouble of travelling such a long distance only because of the importance of the work. I am sure much benefit has resulted from your visit.

I am writing this on the train. I had to send Mahadev to Poona as Chandrashanker who looks after the Harijan work has fallen ill. Mahadev will join me at Nandi Durg. Come to Nandi Durg and see me if you can and tell me how things are at Trivandrum. Write to me in detail if you cannot come over. I hope you were keeping well there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 7982. Also C.W. 3078. Courtesy: Rameshwari Nehru

515. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADRAS,
May 9, 1936

Declining to comment on Indian or world politics, Gandhiji told an Associated Press representative:

Talk to me about the weather, but politics—no. Having withdrawn from politics now, it will not be proper for me to talk about politics or politicians.

The Mahatma likewise declined to comment on the Abyssinian question, but read with interest Pandit Jawaharlal’s rejoinder to the Italian Consul-General.

In reply to an enquiry about his health, the Mahatma said that he was now feeling very much better. The trip was not unpleasant. He had been travelling along the coast with a sea breeze blowing. At Wardha it was intensely hot, with hot winds continuing till midnight.

\(^1\) Vide “Telegram to G. Ramachandran”, 7-5-1936.

Referring to his visit to Nandi Hills where he will be staying for a fortnight and at Bangalore probably for a fortnight before returning to Wardha, Gandhiji said:

My jailor (Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel) will be there (Bangalore) half an hour before me to take charge of me. It may be that this time I may have to act as jailor to him (Mr. Vallabhbhai) because it is for his recuperation rather than mine that I am going to Nandi Hills.

The Hindu, 11-5-1936

516. DISCUSSION WITH C.V. RAMAN AND DR. RAHM

[On or after May 10, 1936]

“He has discovered”, said Sir Chandrashekharan, introducing Dr. Rahm, “an insect that can live without food and water for 12 years, and has come to India for further researches in biology.”

[GANDHII] When you discover the secret at the back of it, please pass it on to me.

[DR. RAHM:] But I am a scientist and a monk also, and when I decided to come to pay my respects to you, I thought of asking you a question or two. May I do so?

With pleasure.

Dr. Rahm was perplexed by the many warring creeds in the world and wondered if there was no way of ending the conflict.

It depends on Christians. If only they would make up their minds to unite with the others! But they will not do so. Their solution is universal acceptance of Christianity as they believe it. An English friend has been at me for the past thirty years trying to persuade me that there is nothing but damnation in Hinduism and that I must accept Christianity. When I was in jail I got, from separate sources, no less than three copies of the Life of Sister Therese, in the hope that I should follow her example and accept Jesus as the only begotten Son of God and my Saviour. I read the book prayerfully but I could not accept even St. Therese’s testimony for myself. I must say I have an open mind, if indeed at this stage and age of my life I can be said to have an open mind on this question. Anyway I claim to have an open mind in this sense that if things were to happen to me as they did to Saul before he became Paul, I should not hesitate to be converted.

1 Introducing the interview, Mahadev Desai writes in his “Weekly Letter”: “Sir Chandrashekharan Venkata Raman came up the hill one afternoon with Professor Rahm from Switzerland, a reputed biologist.”

2 Gandhiji reached Nandi Hills on May 10, 1936.

But today I rebel against orthodox Christianity, as I am convinced that it has distorted the message of Jesus. He was an Asiatic whose message was delivered through many media and when it had the backing of a Roman emperor it became an imperialist faith as it remains to this day. Of course there are noble but rare exceptions like Andrews and Elwin. But the general trend is as I have indicated.

There was held the other day in Bombay a parliament of religions. Now a positive bar to a real parliament of religions is the refusal to accept an equal basis and a mutual regard for one another’s faith. We must not forget that it is a parliament of religions, and not of a few religious-minded men. Did Christianity enter the parliament on a par with the others? When they do not do so openly, they secretly criticize us for our having many gods, forgetting that they have also many gods.

Dr. Rahm was not perhaps prepared for this reply. He made no answer. He put another question in reply: “If we cannot unite, can’t we fight atheism which seems to be so much on the increase?”

Sir. C.V. Raman put in: “I shall answer your question. If there is a God we must look for Him in the universe. If He is not there, He is not worth looking for. I am being looked upon in various quarters as an atheist, but I am not. The growing discoveries in the science of astronomy and physics seem to me to be further and further revelations of God. Mahatmaji, religions cannot unite. Science offers the best opportunity for a complete fellowship. All men of science are brothers.”

What about the converse? All who are not men of science are not brothers?

The distinguished physicist saw the joke and said: “But all can become men of science.”

You will have to present a kalma of science as Islam presents one.

“Science”, said Sir C.V. Raman, “is nothing but a search for truth—truth not only in the physical world, but in the world of logic, psychology, behaviour and so on. The virtue of a truly scientific frame of mind is the readiness to reject what is false and untrue. It proclaims from the house-tops that there is no virtue in sticking to untruth. I think the latest biological discovery is that there is no fundamental

1 Verrier Elwin
2 Muslim prayer
cleavage between the life of man and the life of the lower creation and that salvation lies in the perfection of the biological instinct for the perpetuation of race—the instinct to sacrifice the individual for the sake of the species.”

Harijan, 30-5-1936

517. TELEGRAM TO ASSOCIATED PRESS

May 11, 1936

DR. ANSARI’S DEATH IS A STUNNING BLOW. HE WAS ONE OF THE BEST AMONG MUSSALMANS AS ALSO HINDUS. FOR ME HIS DEATH IS A.
PERSONAL LOSS. HE WAS MY INfallible GUIDE ON HINDU-MUSLIM QUESTIONS. HE AND I WERE JUST PLANNING AN ATTACK ON THE GROWING SOCIAL EVILS. HE WAS THE POOR MAN’S PHYSICIAN IF HE WAS ALSO THAT OF THE PRINCES. HIS DEATH WILL BE MOURNED BY THOUSANDS FOR WHOM HE WAS THEIR SOLE CONSOLATION AND GUIDE.

The Hindu, 12-5-1936

518. TELEGRAM TO BEGUM ANSARI

May 11, 1936

JUST HEARD OF DOCTOR’S DEATH. YOUR LOSS IS EQUALLY MINE.. I FEEL SUDDENLY FORLORN. I KNOW YOUR FAITH IN ALLAH IS GREAT. YOU THEREFORE STAND IN NO NEED OF CONSOLATION FROM POOR
MORTALS LIKE ME. POOR ZOHRA. MAY GOD BLESS YOU ALL.. SARDAR VALLABHBHAI WHO IS HERE JOINS ME IN THE CONDOLENCES.

The Hindu, 12-5-1936

519. LETTER TO ZAKIR HUSAIN

May 11, 1936

I came to know of the Doctor’s death before receiving your wire. I sent a wire to Begum Sahiba and a message to the Press. I have written, too, to Zohra. I expect from you a full account. Please tell me

1 This was sent by Mahadev Desai with the following note : “We were all stunned this morning to receive the message from the Associated Press, . . . announcing the terrible news of Dr. Ansari’s sudden death. Gandhiji immediately issued the following Press message.” Dr. M.A. Ansari died on the train while going from Dehradun to Delhi on May 10.

2 Principal, Jamia Millia Islamia, Delhi

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
also who will look after the practice and the home. Few deaths leave me disconsolate as this has done. Quite wrongly, I know, but I had pictured Dr. Ansari as one destined to finish his century. When, therefore, I got the Press wire, I would not believe [it] at first. He had become part of the lives of many. But God is great. He gives and takes away. We never know His purpose. We dare not quarrel with His dispositions. Let us hope and believe that good will come out of this good friend’s death, as nothing but good came out of his life. I know what this death means to the Jamia. My deepest sympathy with you all.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai.

520. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

NANDI HILL,
May 11, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I have just got your letter. We reached here yesterday safe and sound. It was Sunday and so though I thought of you, I dismissed the talk of a wire. Those who try to approach the villagers have to forget that there is such a thing as telegrams. A weekly post is all they have and often not even that. In Segaon there is supposed to be a weekly delivery but I am told the postman in Wardha hands the letters to any Segaon man whom he comes across and whom he trusts !!!

Your letters are all torn [up] after I have read and answered them.

I hope you got my letter written on the train in pencil hand. It was posted at Madras.

I walked up the hill from the base. It took me 2½ hours, the distance covered was over 5 miles. I walked very slow. Hence there was no fatigue. It was Dr. Ansari who wanted the Sardar to pass the summer on a hill. And he himself is no more. Evidently his death was quite sudden. For me it is a very personal loss. I relied upon his advice in so many matters.

The pressure put upon you not to resist your nomination to the Jullunder Municipality, I quite understand. Idiots being honest people and therefore impartial, are always in demand. How could it be otherwise—you, a princess among them—not the hereditary one but by right of merit.

I do not mind your trying to make Simla less insanitary. Only don’t you catch the infection. Why don’t you move the Municipal Committee? Of course, what is true of Segaon and Sindi must be true of the black town of Simla. I suppose you know that the old Indian part of Madras is to this day called black town. It has not occurred to any of the city fathers to change that name, though they give patriotic names to some of their streets. We cannot all of a sudden develop sanitary habits because we heave up to Simla heights. But the M. Committee can, if it will, enforce proper sanitation. Many things are enforced over there. Sanitary enforcement will be least open to objection.

Well, Nandi Hill is really a model of sanitation, of course enforced from above. The air is beautiful. The calmness is divine. No' cars or carts or even rickshaws. Only 30 families can live here comfortably. More are not allowed. I do not know a more secluded, cleaner, quieter hill. Sardar is in raptures over the stillness. I know you will love it, if you were here.

Ku. reaches Wednesday.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3571. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6380

521. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

NANDI HILL,
May 12, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

The reason why I sent you my reply² to Agatha was to know whether I had correctly represented your attitude.

But I am glad you have gone for me instead. I am not guilty of ‘supporting a system which involves a continuous and devastating class war’ or expressing approval of systems based essentially on himsa or ‘of criticizing and condemning people for more or less

¹ The original has “Not”.
² Vide “Letter to Agatha Harrison”, 30-4-1936.
It is possible that I am unconsciously guilty of the things you seem to impute to me. If so, you should give me concrete instances. I have already admitted that my method of dealing with things is different from yours as I see it. But there is no difference whatsoever about looking at the existing system.

Dr. Ansari’s death is a severe blow. For me it was infinitely more than a political friendship.

I hope you are going to Khali or coming to me to breathe a little cool air.

Please tell Sarup I had her two notes. I will write to Sir Tej.

Love.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1936. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

522. LETTER TO NUR M. MALIK

May 12, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

I was delighted to receive your letter of 2nd ultimo. Much as I would like you to return to India I must not encourage you. I think you are better off as you are. It is a most uphill task to run a new hospital in India.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

NUR M. MALIK, MD., ESQ.
7407 TWELFTH AVE
DETROIT, MICHIGAN

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

523. LETTER TO SHARMA

May 12, 1936

DEAR SHARMA,

I am sorry that it is only now that I am able to reach your letter of 30th ultimo. Yes, I was delighted with the cartoons on swadeshi that I saw in the Lucknow Exhibition. I would like to possess a copy of them if it is available. So far as khadi exhibits in a swadeshi exhibition which admits mill-cloth are concerned, it is a ticklish question. I wish you had discussed it with Shankerlal Banker when he was in Lucknow. If khadi is not exhibited in such exhibitions there are sound business reasons for the absence. But I am myself open to conviction. The first thing, however, for you to do is to convert Shankerlal Banker.

Yours sincerely,

THE MANAGER
ALLAHABAD SWADESHI LEAGUE
ALLAHABAD

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

524. LETTER TO M. B. GODBOLE

May 12, 1936

DEAR DR. GODBOLE,

Please forgive me for my inability to acknowledge your letter of 15th March last earlier. It was impossible as I was moving to and fro. I was able to read it only the other day. I am sorry to have to disappoint you for going through Dr. Lindlahr’s volumes. It did not strike me that reprinting of the volumes would be of much use. Some of the conclusions of the author are dogmatic and some others are based on insufficient observation.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

DR. M.B. GODBOLE
P.B. 19
POONA CITY

From a copy: Pyarelal papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
525. TELEGRAM TO PRABHAVATI

May 13, 1936

PRABHAVATI
BABU HARSUDAYAL
SITAB DIARA

WRITTEN REGULARLY. WRITING TODAY. HOPE YOU WELL.

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

526. LETTER TO V.S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

NANDI HILL,
May 13, 1936

DEAR BROTHER,

Yes, I had need of sympathy on Ansari’s death. Your letter was therefore most welcome. Few deaths make me disconsolate. This one has made me so. Not only were our hearts one but we had so much in common. We had some joint plans also in view. All these have been dashed to pieces at a stroke. Your recalling the old days in Delhi adds to the poignancy of the grief.

I do hope you are well. We must meet before Sardar and I leave this place.

Love.

M. K. GANDHI

Letters of Srinivasa Sastri, p. 286

527. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

May 13, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your telegram last night. How am I to prevent your unhappiness? I have of course written¹ to you in the matter of ¹ Vide “Letter to Prabhavati”, 30-4-1936.

Jayaprakash’s visit to me and the proposal to send you to Banaras. Do not be impatient. It is not likely that I won’t write to you at all. It is another matter that you may get the letters at irregular intervals. As I understand from your telegram that you will reach Srinagar on the 15th, I am sending this to that place. I expect you are in good health now and are taking milk regularly. What about the Banaras proposal? Write to me frankly whatever you have to say without any reserve. I shall deal with your letter according as you wish. We reached here on Sunday. It is an excellent place. We have here peace and solitude. There are very few residents as the hill is a small one. I would have been happy to have you here with us. Ba, too, remembers you. Our party comprises Sardar, Mani, Kusum Gandhi, Tara Mashruwala, Navin, Kanti, Kanu, Ba and me. Kumarappa and Shanta are arriving today and Kakasaheb in about four days. Sardar is keeping well. As for Tara one doesn’t know when she will get well, though she is sure to. Even Kusum who has been weak is expected to recover here. Our stay here will, it seems, last till the 15th June, part of the time having to be spent at Bangalore.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3463

528. LETTER TO PYARELAL

NANDI DURG,
May 13, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I have your letter. I do not like it. How can it be the final farewell? Are those not the words of an unbeliever? I did not like it either that you had the ticket bought, then returned it, and also took back the baggage. Since I had given up putting any pressure on you, I kept quiet. Otherwise I would not have allowed you to return the ticket.

But your saying that I heard you out the last time out of kindness is the limit of unbelief. Such lack of faith in the very person whom you revere! If I had not wanted to hear you out could I not have said so? I listened to your tale about your uncle with such interest that even today I can repeat it almost in your very words. I did not have the time, otherwise I would have gone on listening to you for even longer than an hour. I was absolutely certain that you would walk with me if only to finish your tale. What led you to believe that I was merely being tolerant and did not really wish to hear you out? Why did you not ask me the moment you had such a doubt? Why this lack of faith?

But it is no good crying over spilt milk. What has happened has happened. From this incident too learn if you can a lesson in faith. Even now you are free to come if you want. Only remember this much, that if you come now, come in good faith. What good will it do if you come with a doubtful mind?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

529. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

NANDI HILL,

May 14, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

It is quite like you to be laid up. How I wish I could exercise the authority of a tyrant to drag you down to this beauty spot. No worry, no noises, not a particle of dust, perfect quiet, subdued foliage and refreshing coolness, no social functions, nice tennis ground, beautiful walks. But what can a poor tyrant do to an idiot-rebel? Therefore you will suffer and eat the dust of Simla rather than breathe the dustless fresh air of Nandi. I hope to have better news in your next letter. Don’t you go near those dirty places in this state of your health.

Ku. and Shanta already feel much better. They are having good walks.

Of course when you come to Segaon, ever faithful Nabi Bux shall be with you.

Love.

TYRANT

WITHOUT AUTHORITY

From the original: C.W. 3572. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6381
530. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 14, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. Yes, it is very delightful here. My personal love wishes you were here to share with us the quiet and isolation of this beautiful hill. My impersonal love tells me you are better off where you are for it is the part of duty. Kumarappya and Shanta came in yesterday. Sardar is feeling much better here. He takes very long walks with impunity and eats much better than before.

Dr. Ansari’s death was a great shock to me. I have hardly got over it yet. I feel the want of his presence in so many things.

I am glad you are making good progress with the hut. I understand what you say about the road. You will do what is the best. I have implicit faith in your judgement in these matters.

Balwantsingh and Munnalal must not be a burden on you in any shape or form. I enclose notes for them.¹

I hope by the time this reaches you, the land² in Varoda will have been taken.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6334. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9800

531. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

May 14, 1936

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

Mirabehn tells me that you have reached Segaon. Good. Now help her and be cheerful. I hope you will not even want to go anywhere till I return. Train Govind and Dashrath well. Preserve your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1884

¹ Vide the following item. The letter to Munnalal is not available.
² For the addressee’s cottage
532. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

May 14, 1936

MY DEAR CHILD,

May God give you full strength to live up to your motto, ‘It is no easy matter to count always loss as gain, in joy as well as pain.’ I know anyway that your life is not in vain. Of course you are right in not coming to me. You will come, when God wills it.

I hope Tangai is quite well again. Kisses to the children. See if they would write to me. Here is a little note for them.

Don’t coax them to write.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: No. 139. Courtesy: National Archives of India

533. LETTER TO NAN AND TANGAI MENON

May 14, 1936

DEAR CHILDREN,

Do you remember that there was a time when you used to write to me? Should you not—now that you have grown in years and wisdom? I was sorry to hear of Tangai’s illness. The hat for delicate children like you is a necessary article of wear.

Love and kisses from

BAPU

[PS.]

Esther will tell you all about where I am at present.

My Dear Child, p. 122

1 Addressee’s daughter
2 Vide the following item.
3 Daughter of Esther Menon
534. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

May 14, 1936

Bhai Bapa,

I send with this a cheque for Rs. 200 received from Sophia Wadia. The receipt need not be sent to her. Send it to me.

I understand what you say regarding Sastri. I enclose [a report of] the work done in Madras in four hours. Jagannathdas had arranged a prayer meeting in Kodambakkam, but I refused to go till an assurance was given that the institution would be continued. Jagannathdas gave the required assurance, which I send with this. Please preserve it. I met Pratapmalji also. He, too, has undertaken to solve the financial worries, but he asked for somebody who would be able to create there the atmosphere that we have in the Ashram. How can I find such a person? I met Venkatasubbiah here and discussed the problem with him. He and the others expressed their dislike of Sastri. Venkatasubbiah says, however, that they will do without Sastri and Ganesan. One of the four will visit the place daily by turns. This is what I have been able to do. Kindly write from there now and ask them clearly to relieve Ganesan. Sastri’s resignation has already been accepted. You can mention Jagannathdas’s letter and say that you hope that the four of them will carry on the work.

Since Dr. Ansari had detained Amtussalaam please accommodate her. Malkani, poor man, writes and tells me that he could not tolerate the thought that she had to leave because of Rukmini. The latter does not tolerate anybody. But does that mean that they should all leave? I have written a strong letter¹ to her. Amtussalaam is not likely to pay attention to Rukmini’s words. She will remain happy if you go on giving her some work.

I hope that your letters are opened before they are sent to you. If there is any cheque or such things in an envelope, they should not follow you from place to place.

You, too, have been travelling a good deal. It seems you are becoming young again. If you share your experiences with the people, they will be of priceless value to them, Garhwal is a ‘sealed book’ for most people. I have heard that it is a very beautiful but a very poor region.

---

¹ Madam Sophia Wadia, Indian representative on the P.E.N.

We are in Nandi Durg, enjoying its pleasant air.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1122

535. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM AND VIJAYA GANDHI

May 14, 1936

CHI. PURUSHOTTAM AND VIJAYA.

May you live a long married life, and may you both devote your life to service. These are my wishes and my blessings. There is no place for sensual pleasure in married life; the coming together of man and wife should be only for the sake of begetting progeny. Recently I wrote an article\(^1\) suggesting this. You should try to live accordingly if you like my idea. A certain discipline has to be observed to be able to live such a life. Only then can one find the aim within reach.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

536. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 14, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS.

I have your letter. Here are my blessings to the bride and the bridegroom.\(^2\) I am also enclosing yarn garlands for them both. Other letters that I intend writing will also be enclosed in this packet.

Kanu is enjoying himself and remains absorbed in his work. He is full of idealism and will have, I feel, a bright future.

Kusum, too, is well enough. I hope you won’t mind if she cannot reach there before the 20th or 22nd, as we shall be in Mysore till the 15th [of June] at any rate.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8489. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

\(^1\) Vide “For Contraceptives”, 4-4-1936.

\(^2\) Vide the preceding item.
537. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

May 14, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter.

How can it be hot there? That is the beauty of a coastal place.

You are a rash and impatient person. You could not have seen your way even if you had not indulged in the adventure at Segaon. Adventure is a good thing if undertaken at the right time and for a right cause. Otherwise it is sheer rashness. Your coming to Segaon was no better. The point in recalling this incident is only to prevent its recurrence. Yes, there you have of course to act with caution.

I have already written to Mirabehn¹ to accommodate you if you go there before me. I have also her reply in the affirmative. But if you go, do it realizing that it is your dharma; do not go merely to please me. I have already told you that I am surely going to take you to Segaon. I am not going to change my word. Do not neglect your health. We are all fine here. The place is very quiet and small.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9341. Also C.W. 6616. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

538. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR N. MORARJEE

May 14, 1936

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR.

Your letter reached me only last evening. Your birthday falls today. Where shall I send the telegram? It may not reach you today even if I should send it now. It is 2.45 and we are in Nandi Durg. You have my blessings of course. May you live long and may your noble inclinations ever increase!

Pranams to Maji. Blessings to Gokibehn² and Sumati³.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4725. Courtesy: Shantikumar N. Morarjee

² Addressee’s father’s sister and wife
³ Ibid
539. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

May 14, 1936

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

My previous opinions have changed. In the past I insisted on eschewing quinine, etc., but now I do not. There is no harm in taking them as a temporary measure. We do not know all the natural cures and the ones that we know are not effective against all diseases. Neem leaves ought not to be shunned simply on account of their bitter taste; their efficacy is well known. Similarly, some qualities of tamarind also are universally acknowledged. However, there is no such rule that one or the other thing must prove beneficial to everyone. There is no reason, either, to believe that milk no more agrees with you because of the quinine. The rule about forgoing the morning meal [on the day] of the does not apply to those who do not take the evening meal. But you may discontinue the morning meal if it does not suit you. Nor do you need to make it a rule to have a weekly fast. In case of a feeling like indigestion you should of course abstain from food. It is good that the pain in your spine has disappeared. Yes, I do intend to settle in Segaon.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4270

540. TELEGRAM TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

NANDI,
May 15, 1936

JAMNALAL BAJAJ
WARDHA

WIRE PARTICULARS TARABEHN’S DEATH.

BAPU

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 180

1 Mary Chesley had taken ill while on a pilgrimage to Badri- kedar. She died in a hospital, leaving all her property and money in Canadian banks to Gandhiji. Vide also “In Memoriam”, 23-5-1936.

VOL. 68 : 23 SEPTEMBER, 1935 - 15 MAY, 1936 439
541. TELEGRAM TO SATYADEV

May [15]†, 1936

SATYADEVJI
KANKHAL

WIRE PARTICULARS OF TARABEHN’S DEATH.

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

542. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

NANDI HILL
May 15, 1936

CHI. MARY.

I have just had a wire saying that Tara died at Hrishikesh. The news is stunning, unbelievable. I have no further particulars. I had warned her against braving the pilgrimage. But she had an iron will. Once it was made up it was immovable. I have wired for particulars. Perhaps you have them already. Her forgiving nature and charity had captivated me. Her belief in the goodness of human nature was beyond all praise. She has sacrificed herself for the cause she believed in. Shanta is here and she has given Miss Blythe’s address. Miss B. was her partner. You will tell me all you know and I ought to know about Tara. I got your letter yesterday. All these days I had taken you at your word and never wrote to you.

I am looking forward to Miss Madden’s letter. I am glad she will be with you for one year. Tara wanted me to invite her to see me again. There was no question of doing so immediately as I was coming to Nandi. But I think the present arrangement is better. Only, she must go slow in making changes in her life. Europeans simply cannot make some changes. Each one has to recognize his limitations. Of course you can spend for the roof and the like what you might have saved from your expenses. You will take a lesson form Tara’s life and not overdo things.¹

¹ The source has “14”, obviously a slip. Gandhiji received the news of Mary Chesley’s death only on May 15; vide the following item.

² The addressee was doing social work in Khedi, a village near Betul.
The office is and still will be at Maganwadi. Segaon is a good place. You will see it one of these days, I hope.

This is a beautiful place. Not too high. It is isolated and quiet. Not many people can live here. No cars or carts or even horses. We walked up. It took me 2½ hours. Writing paper has improved all over. Choudhary, the expert has revolutionized the making of hand-made paper. And an assured demand has cropped up for the time being. Kumarappa is with me. Of course Ba is and also Sardar and Manibehn. I have come here for Sardar’s health. Dr. Ansari insisted on his having a change to a hill. And he himself is gone! ! ! God’s will is there unmistakably in everything. Ours is only to strive in all humility.

Love to both of you.

BAPU

[PS.]

The enclosed is for Gopal. Try to read it and hand it to him or send wherever he is.

From a photostat: G.N. 6060. Also C.W. 3390. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

543. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

Unrevised

DEAR SATIS BABU,

Cholera cases need organized treatment. But I suppose nothing of the kind is yet possible in our country. There is not that corporate sense of responsibility. The few of us who have must persevere before a visible impression is made.

Do you suggest anything to make the exhibition less expensive, and more instructive? This one was instructive enough as far as it went. It was not inexpensive. Later on it drew huge crowds and there will be practically no loss, if at all. We had Rs. 25,000 entrance fees and Rs. 5,000 from stalls. Khadi sold very well and so did many other things. You must have got the detailed guide-book. Go through it and make concrete suggestions.

1 Yadavrao S. Choudhary
2 The letter is not available
3 At Lucknow
If frequent change of residence keeps you in good form, you should arrange your work accordingly. It is no use making one residence an inevitable thing. When you have many forms of service open to you, you have to take that which is most conducive to your health. If Atari was the only thing open and obligatory, I should understand consecration unto death. You must do everything humanly possible to keep your body a fit instrument of service.

Pyarelal is there. I hope he will accept your guidance.

I hope both you and Hemprabha are well.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1629

544. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

May 15, 1936

CHI. NARAHARI,

I have your postcard. I understand what you say about Sumitra. Sardar told us about Vanamala’s adventure. I am now trying to free Sumitra from the botheration. You were quite right in sending her. Ramdas has by now realized that Sumitra only harms herself by going to her mother.

I am sending herewith the letter which reports that a sum of Rs. . . . has been paid to the Gandhi Seva Sangh on account of the Goseva Sangh. File the letter in the records there.

The climate here is beautiful, and Sardar says that [Mt.] Abu has now become stale, while this hill is an ideal one from the standpoint of sanitation. For quietness no other place can excel it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9093

---

1 The source has “inducive”
2 A place in Bengal
3 Illegible
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

SPINNERS' WELFARE

A few points why Khadi Pratishthan, devoted to the khadi work in Bengal, should continue to give work (in a graduated higher scale of wages) to spinners and find sale for their products in conjunction with self-spinning work:

1. Khadi is never meant to enter into competition with machine- (i.e., mill-) made cloth.
2. Khadi represents ‘back to village’ cry.
3. Village life means simplicity and freedom from contamination of urban ‘civilized and refined’ mode of life, i.e., life represented by cinemas, race-gambling and other nonsensical things.
4. In the mills the workmen get higher wages, but they are converted into so many automatons and drudges in the mill area. Half their wages again are consumed in drink and prostitution.
5. The poor women (generally widows) who ply the charkha and earn a bare pittance are thereby enabled to be self-supporting and not dependent on their male relatives who really sit idle and make the helpless women dependent on them work like drudges and galley-slaves. Thus the latter are really freed from sweated labour.
6. Those who ply the charkha are seldom or never whole-time workers; only during the intervals of household duties they utilize their leisure hours. So it would be wrong to compare their off-time labour with that of the sweated labour of the mills.
7. In Bengal there is only one crop (the Aman Paddy) in most parts. That gives peasants occupation for barely three months in the year. Even where there is second crop which gives employment for a couple of extra months or so, for seven months they sit idle. Hence, if the people could be persuaded to ply the charkha, they would have a second occupation or another string to the bow. Thus during a failure of crop due to drought or flood (as is often the case in Bengal at any rate) plying the charkha would be a ‘God-send’. The people won’t starve or be dependent on chance doles distributed in the relief centres.
8. The spinners are not the only people benefited; along with the spinners a large body of weavers find occupation; in fact, on week days (especially during the hat or village market days) the weavers in the khadi centres with their woven dhotis and shirtings eagerly look for payment. Then other subsidiary artisans would be benefited, e.g., the village carpenters, etc., making charkhas.

\footnote{Vide “Acharya P. C. Ray on Spinners’ Welfare”}

9. A unique experiment is going on in the Atral and Talora centres (visited by you in 1925). After 12 years of hard labour, expenses, not to speak of the sacrifices of voluntary workers, at last we have got a body of willing 'self-spinners'. I have myself watched with interest and joy how the women look forward to the saris, bodices, and chadars for children, supplied in exchange for the yarn.

P. C. Ray

Harijan, 28-9-1935

APPENDIX II

A.I.S.A. RESOLUTION ¹

[On or before October 11, 1935]

1. This Council is of opinion that the wages now paid for spinning are inadequate, and therefore resolves that they be raised and a suitable standard be fixed so that spinners may at least receive a minimum wage calculated on the basis of eight hours' efficient work, sufficient at least to procure clothing (20 yards per year) and maintenance in accordance with a scientifically prescribed scale of minimum food requirements. All concerned should try, as circumstances permit, for a progressive rise in the wages scale, so as to reach a standard enabling each spinning family to be properly maintained out of earning of its working members.

2. In order to guide the A.I.S.A. workers in the execution of the principle underlying the foregoing proposition, the following should be regarded by all branches and bodies, working in affiliation to or in any other way under the Association, as the settled policy of the Association until it is altered in the light of further experience by the Council:

(a) The mission of the Association is to make every home in India self-sufficing through khadi with reference to its clothing requirements, and to promote the welfare of spinners who are the least paid among khadi artisans and all others engaged in the different cotton processes beginning with growing cotton and ending with weaving of khadi.

(b) It is therefore imperative that those who work for the production of khadi, whether as artisans, sellers or otherwise, shall use khadi for their clothing requirements to the exclusion of every other kind of cloth.

(c) All the branches and affiliated bodies shall so work the scheme as to avoid all losses, that is, so as to restrict their production to the demand within their own selected areas commencing with their immediate neighbourhood and never extending beyond their province except in so far as they are called upon by other provinces to meet the latter's demand.

(d) In order to avoid surplus production, producers may restrict their operations only to those spinners who solely depend upon spinning for their daily bread for part of the year or the whole of it. Branches and other bodies shall maintain an accurate register of all the spinners and other artisans employed by them and shall deal directly with them. In order to ensure the use of the wages for clothing and food, a part or the whole of them may be paid in kind, i.e., khadi or other necessaries of life.

(e) In order to avoid overlapping, undue competition, or duplicating of expenses where there are more khadi-producing organizations than one, the area of operation of each shall be previously defined. Private certified producers will not be encouraged by the Association. Among those that are already certified, those only who will work strictly under the same rules that govern the Association branches and take all risks without any prospect of recouping themselves from the Association will have their certificates renewed on the strict understanding that any breach of the rule that may be laid down from time to time or instructions given will involve automatic withdrawal of their certificates.

(f) It should be understood that it is the primary and imperative duty of all organizations working under the Association to promote the scheme of self-sufficing khadi. Production of khadi for meeting the demand of cities or of khadi-wearers out-side cities who do not spin for themselves is a secondary or supplementary duty. No organization will be considered bound to produce or sell such khadi.

File No. 4/12/36, Home, Political. Courtesy: National Archives of India
That the Hindi-Urdu question is in imminent danger of becoming a communal issue is evident from the speech Mr. Purshottamdas Tandon delivered at the opening ceremony of the Hindi Museum at Benares in the first week of this month. He declared that next to Chinese, Hindi was the most widely spoken language in Asia. This means, in other words, that the problem of a common language is solved; it is going to be Hindi, because Hindi is spoken by the majority of Indians. Those who clamour for Hindustani can be outnumbered, therefore they cannot matter. But the counting of heads is no more a remedy than breaking of heads. Whatever Mr. Tandon may have really meant, it seems to me that ground is being prepared for another such indignity as the Communal Award.

It is only your prestige and the confidence inspired by your personality that can rescue us. I am giving below a number of points which in my humble opinion are rational in themselves and provide a sound basis for a common language. If you consider them and find them worthy, not in your own estimation only but also of the cause they are meant to serve, you may make them known to others. What I am dreaming of just now is that they might become the basis of a public pronouncement by you.

The points are:

1. That our common language shall be called ‘Hindustani’, not ‘Hindi’.
2. That Hindustani shall not be considered to have any peculiar association with the religious traditions of any community.
3. That the test of ‘foreign’ and ‘indigenous’ shall not be applied to any word, but only the test of currency.
4. That all words used by Hindu writers of Urdu and Muslim writers of Hindi shall be deemed current. This of course shall not apply to Urdu and Hindi as sectional languages.
5. That in the choice of technical terms, specially political terminology, no preference be given to Sanskrit terms as such, but as much room as possible be allowed for natural selection from among Urdu, Hindi and Sanskrit terms.
6. That the Devanagari and the Arabic scripts shall both be considered current and official, and that in all institutions whose policy is directed by the official promoters of Hindustani, facilities shall be provided for learning both scripts.

There may be friends to whom these suggestions will look like Muslim demands.

They are not. But I know that unless an assurance of some such kind is given by you and the Parishad, there can be no question of Muslim literary effort being harnessed in the cause of a common language. So I have submitted these suggestions to you. If they are extravagant, I know you will pardon me, and if they are unjustified, they will not offend you. So far as I am concerned I have only wanted to do my duty, and to show, by an appeal to you, my unlimited respect for your judgment and my confidence in your deep feeling of justice and tolerance.

_Harijan, 9-5-1936_

APPENDIX IV

POPULARIZE HINDUSTANI

The All-India Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, the twenty-fifth session of which was held at Nagpur during the week-end, has two main objects before it: to develop Hindi literature and popularize Hindi throughout the country. We shall consider here the latter object mainly. The need for a national language is undeniable. That English cannot possibly be that language is equally undeniable. The popular form of Hindi or of Urdu, generally called Hindustani, has alone the prospect of being a perfect national language if earnest efforts are made to popularize this form in every possible way, particularly by developing Hindustani literature, that is to say, Hindi and Urdu literature without a large admixture of classical words.

CALL IT HINDUSTANI

Unfortunately, however, this national aim is not precisely understood. Many, who possess wrong notions of purity of language or literary elegance, persist in using too many classical expressions, the Hindus from Sanskrit and the Muslims from Persian and Arabic. Sometimes this tendency is deliberately fostered by communalists, whence has arisen the Hindi-Urdu controversy. Babu Rajendra Prasad much deplored this spirit of exclusiveness both because it hindered the growth of national language and because it widened the gulf between the authors and the common readers. He rightly commended the use of a simple language and at the same time urged the absorption of foreign words wherever necessary. He would have brought out his point more clearly if he had definitely suggested that the language which should be specially cultivated should be Hindustani. That is, we believe, the suggestion made by Gandhiji himself at the Nagpur Conference. The most effective way to end once for all the Hindi-Urdu controversy and to develop a national language is not only to propagate a simple or popular form of Hindi

1 Vide “Hindi or Hindustani”, 9-5-1936. Only extracts from the article are reproduced here.
and Urdu but also to call that language Hindustani, which in fact is its most appropriate name. In order that much confusion and needless controversy regarding the respective claims of Hindi and Urdu may be avoided, may we suggest to the Congress President to issue definite instructions to all Congress organizations that the only national language to be recognized by them should be Hindustani and that Congressmen should not carry on propaganda in favour of either Urdu or Hindi being the national language?

USE BOTH SCRIPTS

The question of a common script for the national language has come very much to the fore during the last two years or so. Many suggest that the Nagari script should be the national one, with some improvements made therein, as it is the basis of the scripts of all the vernaculars derived from Sanskrit and, therefore, intelligible to a large majority of the people. A few have suggested the use of the Roman script, and the rumour was abroad some time ago that President Jawaharlal had supported it. He has now made it clear that, though he sees some advantage in it, he does not see any chance of its being adopted by any considerable community in the country. Even as regard the Nagari script there is not at present that consensus of opinion in its favour which can justify its exclusive adoption in writing Hindustani. Apart from this the claims of the Arabic script, which is being used in many Asiatic and African and even European countries as well as in India cannot lightly be ignored. In the circumstances the best immediate approach to the problem is for every Indian to learn both the Nagari and the Arabic scripts. That was Gandhiji’s suggestion during the N.C.O. Movement and many national schools and colleges loyally followed it. We believe he has not changed his mind on this point.

The Bombay Chronicle, 27-4-1936
1. A GREAT FRIEND GONE

It is not usual in these columns to have obituary notices of all the great men who pass away. This is a journal devoted to a special cause. Such notices are taken generally only of those who had specially identified themselves with the Harijan cause. I had to use extraordinary self-restraint to avoid noticing Kamala Nehru’s death. It almost become an oppression. But I need exercise no such restraint about Dr. Ansari’s death. For he was essentially a symbol of Hindu-Muslim unity with Hakim Saheb Ajmal Khan. Dr. Ansari never wavered in his faith even when it was put to a severe test. He was an orthodox Mussalman proud of his descent from the helpers of the Prophet when the latter was most in need of help. His very staunchness and his intimate knowledge of Islam made Dr. Ansari a believer in Hindu-Muslim unity. It is no exaggeration to say that he had at least as many Hindu as he had Mussalman friends. He was one of the ablest physicians in all India. His advice was freely available to the poor of all races. And what he earned from the princes and rich men, he spent with both hands among his many needy friends. No beggar approached him without emptying whatever his pocket contained, and he never counted what he gave. He was a tower of strength to hundreds of men and women who swore by him. I have no doubt that he has left many literally weeping for the personal loss they have sustained. He has left a wife who is a philosopher though invalid. She is too brave and too much of a believer to shed a tear over her loss. But the many whom I have in mind are no philosophers. Their faith in God is vapoury; their faith in Dr. Ansari was living. It was no fault of theirs that their faith in God was weak as with most of us. They had many proofs of the Doctor’s friendship when they thought God had forsaken them. They little knew that even the great Doctor could only help them so long as his Maker allowed him. Would that what he could not accomplish while he was alive would be accomplished by his death.

Harijan, 16-5-1936
2. HINDI OR HINDUSTANI–II

In the previous article¹ I have already showed how and why I regard Hindi and Hindustani as synonymous terms and why it is necessary to retain the use of the word ‘Hindi’.

An objection to the use of the word ‘Hindi’ has been thus stated in the letter² reproduced in the last issue:

It has been studied by Mussalmans in the past and they have done as much if not more than their Hindu brethren to raise it to the status of a literary language. But it has also religious and cultural associations with which Mussalmans as a whole cannot identify themselves. Besides, it is now evolving a vocabulary that is exclusively its own and is generally unintelligible to those who know only Urdu.

If the Mussalmans of old studied and enriched Hindi in the past, why should they of the present generation avoid it? Surely the Hindi of old had greater religious and cultural associations than modern Hindi has today. And should one avoid the use of a language because of its religious and cultural associations? Must I avoid Arabic and Persian for their religious and cultural associations? I may not be affected by the latter, if I do not want to be or if I have antipathy towards them. Surely if we are to live together as blood-brothers that we are, we may not fight shy of each other’s culture. And why quarrel with the use of Sanskrit words, in Hindi to the point of rebelling against the language itself? The unnatural process of using Sanskrit words in the place of simpler current words or giving the derived words their original Sanskrit form is undoubtedly a reprehensible practice and robs a language of its music. But a certain use of Sanskrit words, as the nation expands, is inevitable in the hands of Hindus who know only Sanskrit, as the use of Arabic is inevitable in the hands of Mussalmans who know only Arabic, though both write the same language and have no special likes or dislikes. Educated Hindus and Mussalmans will have to acquaint themselves with both the forms. Is this not true of all growing languages? Educated Englishmen know both ‘sympathy’ and ‘fellow-feeling’ or ‘fatherly’ and ‘paternal’ or yearly’ and ‘annual’. The difficulty with us is that just now our hearts are not one and the best of us are affected by the virus of mutual suspicion.

¹ Vide “Hindi or Hindustani”, 9-5-1936
² For extracts from the letter, vide Appendix, “For Hindustan only”, 9-5-1936.

Hindi, Hindustani and Urdu are different names for the same speech just as the dialects of Cornwall, Lancashire and Middlesex are different names for the same speech. What is being aimed at today is not to evolve a new language but to adopt the language known under the three names as the inter-provincial language. I believe Shri Munshi was right when he defended the form of the language used in Hans. For rendering, say, a Tamil or Telugu piece into Hindi or Hindustani, the use of Sanskrit words is almost inevitable, even as the use of Arabic words would be inevitable if one was translating an Arabic piece into Hindi or Hindustani. Rabindranath’s Gitanjali in Hindi would read much less musical than it does, if its Hindi or Hindustani translation studiously avoided the Sanskrit words with which Bengali is replete. Literary Mussalmans like Mouli Abdul Haq Sahib or Aquil Sahib have but to make their own contribution to the common speech to avoid its degenerating into a language only spoken by the Hindus. I would if I could wean them from treating the Urdu form as the exclusive speech of Mussalmans, as I would wean literary Hindus from treating Hindi as the exclusive speech of Hindus. If none of them is weaned, there will be no common speech for Hindus and Mussalmans of the North, no matter by what name it is known. Here at least, therefore, we do not need to quarrel about the name. Call it by what name you like, if only you mean the same thing in all sincerity.

There remains the question of script. At the present moment insistence on Devanagari by Mussalmans is not to be thought of. Insistence on the adoption of Arabic script by the vast mass of Hindus is still less thinkable. What therefore I have suggested as the definition of Hindi or Hindustani is ‘that language which is generally spoken by Hindus and Mussalmans of the North, whether written in Devanagari or Urdu’. I abide by that definition, in spite of protests to the contrary. But there is undoubtedly a Devanagari movement with which I have allied myself whole-heartedly and that is to have it as the common script of all the languages spoken in the different provinces, especially those which have a large Sanskrit vocabulary. Anyway, an attempt is being made to transcribe in Devanagari script the most precious treasures of all the languages of India.

Harijan, 16-5-1936
3. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM GANDHI

NANDI DURG,
May 16, 1936

CHI. PURUSHOTTAM,

You must have received an unexpected letter¹ from me even before I got yours. The noble hopes expressed in it could be entertained only of one like you brought up in the Ashram from childhood. Vijaya alone would know the state of her mind but you have to be a teacher to her. The circumstance is common in the Hindu family. If you wish to follow the duties of married life as I have suggested, I have also outlined its restriction in my article. If you find these difficult, it only means that you have not really understood the one purpose of sexual intercourse. Even to the husband the wife is a mother. It has been said in a book that the woman giving birth to a child gives birth to a portion of the husband himself, and that therefore after she has conceived she deserves to be daily honoured with a namaskara much as his own mother. Such things are looked upon as intellectual indulgence. The conviction that such things need to be put into practice has not gone down people’s throat. Hence they turn a deaf ear to any talk of acting according to it. “The path of God is for the brave alone.” Read this to Vijaya if you think it fit.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

4. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 16, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Herewith a letter² for Purushottam and Marybehn’s letter to you. Yesterday I had a telegram telling me of the death at Rishikesh of a very benevolent lady, Tarabehn Chesley, whom you do not know.

¹ Vide “Letter to Purushottam and Vijaya Gandhi”, 14-5-1936
² Vide the preceding item.
She was on her way to Badri-Kedar with two other women. She was a learned person, living an exceedingly simple life.

Kusum is having a nice time. She comes out daily for a walk with me. I do hope this place will help her recover her health. Kanu moves about, absorbed in his work. He has been trying to train his hand on the *dilruba*¹, and his instrument accompanies the Ramayana recitation every day. All the three brothers² sing the verses in unison, and now Kusum has joined them. Sardar walks for four hours every day, and Mahadev and Mani accompany him. It is beyond my capacity to take such long walks. Kumarappa and Shantabehn are of course here. Both are good company to each other and spend their time working. Ba keeps fairly good health. This is how our little world here goes on.

I learn from Kusum’s talks that the Bal Mandir has been running at a loss. In my opinion, we should send an account of income and expenditure to the parents and notify to them that the Bal Mandir would be closed if they did not help to meet this expenditure. You may also mention that the house rent, etc., is not included in the accounts. You should, however, include Kusum’s salary of Rs. 35 or 40 as also those of the other teachers, if any, whatever they are paid. We might go about begging to run the school if the children belonged to the Harijan or some other so-called lower communities, but certainly not for the others; and emphatically not a Bal Mandir. The very poor cannot afford to send their children there; nor is there any great need that they should. Please think over this and, if you are convinced about it, you should consult the Committee and give the parents notice of one or two months. Kusum says that you have increased the fee already, in which case the increase should be only to the extent of meeting the increased cost. You must be aware that there are several schools in the country, which bring profits to the owners after defraying all expenses. Many schools, for example, the Bharda High School, are a source of income. Only the Proprietary High School of Ahmedabad and some others regarded as national schools and some experimental schools are run with the help of contributions

---

¹ A stringed musical instrument
² Kanti Gandhi, Kanu Gandhi and Navin Gandhi; in fact, cousins raised from the public. I think we should get away from this kind of work and give our time to work among Harijans and in the villages.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8490. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

5. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

May 16, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I read the two lines you added to Nimu's letter to me. See that you preserve your health. Give the body as much milk, curds and ghee as it might need. It is only if you preserve your health that I shall be able to take from you all the work I want. Tell Bhanubapa that an obstacle has again cropped up. A fresh estimate is contemplated for the place where the building is to be put up. This is a complicated affair. Perhaps Mahadev will have to be sent to Nasik.

Did you hear anything further as regards the summons?

Let Nimu have her studies to her fill.

All are well and happy here. The coolness here and the hot winds there—what a contrast! Yet one may not say that here I am in better health than there. The fact is that heat does not affect me.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10714

6. LETTER TO NEKI RAM SHARMA

NANDI DURG,

May 17, 1936

BHAI NEKI RAM SHARMA,

Please convey my blessings to Chi. Chandrakala and Chi. Omprakash. May their married life be happy and devoted to service.

_Vandemataram from_

M. K. GANDHI

SHRI NEKI RAM SHARMA
BHIWANI
(PUNJAB)

From the Hindi original: Gopichand Bhargava Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
7. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

NANDI DURG,
May 17, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER,

All that you write about Doctor Saheb is perfectly true. We have no one to take his place. But we do not know if his death was for the good or otherwise. God alone is the best judge. He gives and He takes away. We should only learn a lesson from Doctor Saheb's death. We should carry on from where he left. Mourning and fasting serve no purpose. Those who believe in God have no reason to fear death. Those who are born are bound to die. You do not want any more clarification on your earlier letters, do you? Now you do not have to go to Patiala or Chitrakoot or even to join me. To me you can come whenever you feel like it. Otherwise the Harijan Ashram is all you should devote yourself to. This is not my own suggestion but deduced from the last letter from Doctor Saheb. You are taking, I hope, the medicine prescribed by him. We are all well. I do not write separately to Tyagiji. Rajkishori is happy, I suppose.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 335

8. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

NANDI HILL,
May 18, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

You must have seen all I have written about Dr. Ansari.¹ I may weep over his death selfishly. But there need be no sorrow over his death, if one is certain, as I am, that it is only the perishable body that has perished, not the indestructible soul within. Having put off the old garment, it will put on a new and better one.² His services are not lost. If we have faith we may be sure that he is serving even now though in an unseen manner. Being used only to relying upon the feeble and often unreliable evidence of our senses, we refuse to believe that things go on which transcend our senses and which are far more durable and useful than the passing show our senses note and make us alternately weep and laugh. Enough of this wisdom-spinning.

¹ Vide “A Great Friend Gone”, 16-5-1936
² Bhagavad Gita, II. 20 and 22

Yes, I shall try to secure for you ivory goods and the rest within the limits assigned by you.

Ku. is flourishing. Dr. Subba Rao will examine him and Shanta about the 20th instant.

I hope you have been able to persuade Dalip to take “rest and be thankful”. The court work will go on without him for a few weeks or months. The services have taken good care about their work.

Why do you worry about your inability to invite Mira? These are limitations of a joint family which both you and I must recognize. Friendships do not exist, must not, for selfish gratification. Mira is quite happy though she is melting in Wardha heat. She is joyous in that she is superintending the creation of my hut. She is looking after the minutest detail with the greatest care. And she is glad too that I shall be her neighbour in the very near future D.V.

You are exasperating. When you meet me you will forget all about Kallenbach. Why not out with the talk? Let me share the joke or own up the shame, if I see any in what I might have said. But I hear so many things about myself about which I am an utter stranger that I shall not be surprised if what you have heard ranks among them.

Love to you all.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3573. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6382

9. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 18, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I hope you got my letter from Nandi.

Yes, Dr. Ansari’s death is a great personal loss. Both birth and death are great mysteries. If death is not a prelude to another life, the

1 A German architect who became a friend and associate of Gandhiji in South Africa; vide also “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 28-5-1936
2 Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 14-5-1936 intermediate period is a cruel mockery. We must learn the art of never grieving over death no matter when and to whom it comes. I suppose that we shall do when we have really learnt to be utterly indifferent to our own and the indifference will come when we are every moment conscious of having done the task to which we are called. But how shall we know the task? By knowing God’s will. How shall we know the will? By prayer and right living. Indeed, prayer should mean right living. There is a bhajan we sing every day before the Ramayana commences whose refrain is “Prayer has been never known to have failed anybody. Prayer means being one with God.”

I am glad you are making progress with the buildings. Rs. 300 for the land and the building in Varoda should prove enough for the time being at any rate. I wish you would be able to squeeze in the fence. There need be no paid labour for it. Balwantsingh and Munnalal should be able under your direction to put it up. The material should cost practically nothing. Fence and some shade is the chief thing. We are all flourishing. But those who are profiting most are Sardar, Shanta and Ku. They were the ones who positively needed the bracing air of a hill. The others not so much and so they do not show visible signs of gain. I see we shall not be able to move away from Mysore before 15th June.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6335. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9801

10. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

May 18, 1936

MY DEAR CHILD.

You are being tested. Why should you have “flu even in a cool place like Kodai? But I know you will keep your peace even in the midst of tortures and live up to your motto.¹ You will tell me when you are free. My prayers and my love are with you.

BAPU

From a photostat: No. 140. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹ Vide “Letter to Esther Menon”14-5-1936
11. LETTER TO DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA

NANDI HILL,
May 18, 1936

DEAR DR. GOPICHAND,

The people in Maganwadi report that they have not yet got cow-milk ghee. They will be presently out of stock. Please see to the supply.

Yours,
BAPU

DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA
LAHORE, PUNJAB

From a copy: Dr. Gopichand Bhargava Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

12. LETTER TO GOVIND V. GURJALE

May 18, 1936

DEAR GURJALE,

I have your letter. Much as I should like to visit you, I cannot do it. I have come here for Sardar’s health. I have other patients, too, with me. And I must keep time.

My advice to you is for you simply and solely to live like a villager. Therefore your own expenses can only be under Rs. 10 per month. If there is any productive work to be done, get it done by paid labour. Labour combined with intelligence must always be self-supporting.

Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1399
13. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

May [18, 1936]¹

BHAIBAPA,

I see the point about Amtussalaam. Her silliness we can afford to suffer, but Rukmini’s hurts.

I do not see how Rajaji’s suggestion can be acted upon. We may procure ten thousand acres of land right now, but who will put it to use? How can it be colonized? Supposing we get the land in Dharampur²—would it be of any use? I think, therefore, the idea is not worth consideration. We have no remedy but that of exposing the missionaries’ tactics and rendering more and more service if possible to Harijans.

Now about the Rs. 3, 000. He has left it to me and hence I have not sent the sum on to you. I would soon spend it all if I came across a place suffering from acute scarcity of water. I understand that the sum is not such as could be included in our current fund. Do you know of any cause for which you can spend it right now? If so I shall send the sum for it or to you if you ask for it. Otherwise my idea is to spend the sum on the repair of wells for Harijans, which comes under my purview. Would it not be right to spend it that way rather than ask for money from you when such need arises? All the same, I am prepared to act according to your wishes.

Now the fourth thing, which is a new one. Hardly could we persuade Surajbehn³ to quit when a demand for the building has come on behalf of the Women’s Servants of India. For my part, I think that these women’s idea is quite different. It smells of Western polish. These women do not wish to go along the lines that I have all along followed in the course of my work among women. There may well need for their work, but I think we should not use this income for such a purpose. You should however give your opinion with a free mind, and explain to me if I am making any mistake. While you are roasting there, we are enjoying the coolness of this place. What can be done? I envy you.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1157

¹ From the contents and the G.N. Register
² A small town in the inhospitable terrain of the Dangs
³ A worker of the Bhagini Samaj, Bombay
14. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

May 18, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

You have been causing some anxiety. It is over 12 days since I got your little note. There was a wire from you, to which also I have replied.1 How are you keeping now? Have you started taking milk? How much milk do you take? What is your decision?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3469

15. LETTER TO PYARELAL

NANDI DURG,

May 18, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I have read both your letters carefully. Why do you write in English? You ought to write either in Gujarati or Hindi. We must take a vow not to talk or write in English except when it is unavoidable. Is this habit of conversing and writing in English not a great drawback?

You must also cultivate writing a neat hand.

Your impression of Yashodhara is not wholly correct. I found Akshaychandra’s behaviour faultless. Yashodhara will be seeing me. I had a long lucid letter from Akshaychandra. I know Yashodhara very well.

Hence your case must be examined independently. Haribhau’s letters to me give an altogether different impression. I do not think Yoga has gone to the length you imagine. Yoga is not just repeating what she is tutored to speak. But your case is not related to your like or dislike of her. I find your case amazing. Your love did not need a response.

Your getting her or the desirability of your getting her was not, is not, and should not be a necessity in your life. That is one sign of pure love. Your love was extraordinary, yet it had certain ordinary features, such as the need for Haribhau’s mediation. It would have been better without it. But what even if it was brought in? The idea occurred to you too. Perhaps it was inevitable. You are not perfect, are you? You can say that perfect love was born in an imperfect man and that made love imperfect. I shall act on your suggestion if there is an occasion. But I know that you would not find anyone who would pass the test you have suggested.

1 Vide “Telegram to Prabhavati”, 13-5-1936

I must stop here or I shall miss the post.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

16. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTH

MNDI DURG,
May 18, 1936

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

If your nose bleeds, clean it with cold water every morning and also inhale water through the nose. Keep a wet cloth on your head throughout the day as I am doing. Otherwise, consult a doctor. There is no need to go to Sind. Tell Nanavatiji that I have given instructions about ghee. Tell Bhanu Bapa that I have sent a letter to Nasik. Pursue your studies diligently.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI PRABHUDAYAL
MAGANWADI

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11670

17. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

May 18, 1936

CHI. BRAJKISAN,

Only today have I reached your letter of May 1. It was received during the days of our preparation for Nandi and it remained unattended to. Now Dr. Ansari is no more. I had such faith in his treatment that whenever a patient was under his care I used to rest fully assured. But I do not know what you will do now. Illness seems to be your constant companion. Now give me all the details.

It was the right thing to close down the Bhandar. Your health would not permit you to cope with this work. And it becomes difficult to carry on such an enterprise solely depending on others. I understand what you say about Nair¹. If no one will stay with him the Ashram may be closed down. Nair may return to Malabar or work under the Harijan Sangh or come over to me. Coming to me implies that I shall post him anywhere. It will not be possible to keep him at Segaon where I am going to live. You may show this letter to him, so that I need not write separately to him. If not the whole of it, give him a copy of this paragraph.

If you have a balance or Rs. 50 or whatever the amount, please send it to me. I shall utilize it as I wish. You should keep with you only the amount required for your maintenance.

You have of course my permission to come to Wardha whenever you wish. You must not take up any work involving permanent responsibility. You may take up only such work as can be relinquished whenever you have to, or none at all. Your primary duty is to improve your health which you must somehow improve. It appears that the Delhi climate suits you best; therefore you should live there most of the time and engage yourself if you can in the kind of work I have suggested. It will be good if you live in a rented place in the Harijan Nivas. Kshama had offered to erect a room if some land near the colony could be acquired. You could live there paying rent if she accepts it. I have made all the suggestions I could, except one. Gadodiaji² has come across a hakim practising nature cure. Please see him. His treatment might prove beneficial to you.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2447

¹ Krishnan Nair
² Lakshmi Narayan Gadodia
18. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM
May 18, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER,

Why are you quarrelling with Bapa? Was not whatever he wrote meant for your own good, to protect you from Rukmini? Is he to blame? Bapa asks me to explain it to you. Tell me what there is to explain.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 336

19. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
NANDI HILL,
May 19, 1936

DEAR TEACHER OF SLANG,

You are adding to your titles. Your breast won’t hold them all. Then perhaps you will shed some or better still select one and reject the rest.

Terrible lightning has just now burnt up all the fuses and we are in utter darkness. A little light has been made up for me with cotton wicks and eating oil. This bungalow seems to have no substitute for electric lights.

It was good you got the Tr.1 Maharani to give you Rs. 500.
I do hope they will accept your terms about Urdu broadcast. You certainly deserve congratualtions.

Mrs. Marsden will be supplied with Mahadev’s fine yarn. His is the finest.

I must trace the lace. It must not be lost.
I hope you are quite restored now.
Ku. and Shanta are flourishing.
Love.

BAPU

From the oiginal: C.W. 3574. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6383

1 Travancore
20. A LETTER

May 19, 1936

My search is not outward, it is inward. Perhaps the search is its own reward. If an embodied guru is a necessity in my case, God will send him to me.¹

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the manuscript of Mahdev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

21. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

May 19, 1936

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

After many days I have your letter today. Apart from the letters I wrote to you in April, I wrote on May 1, 12¹ and 18. Whose fault could it be if you got none of them? You must take it that I do write in reply to yours and, in the absence of any letter from you, would certainly write a reminder card. I shall ask Kanti why he has not been writing.

You miscalculate the dates. Yours was [received] not on the 17th but on the 19th and was written on the 14th, and on that basis this should reach you on the 24th, and if you do not get my letters by then wire receipt of this. I shall await your wire on the 24th and the 25th unless I hear from you in the meantime. Yes, Jayaprakash saw me and spoke to me. Patwardhan had accompanied him. He said nothing in reply to the letter I had written. I understood that he did not want to reply. He spoke to me only of your future, proposing that you should undergo Montessorie training for three months at Kashi and then he wants you to live in Patna. He sought my consent, which I readily gave. There can be no harm in your learning the Montessorie method, though I don't fancy it. You should, however, follow his wish and train yourself in the Montessorie method. I expect you will then be staying in Patna or some such place. I believe you will decide this ¹ The addressee had suggested to Gandhiji to accept as his guru a certain person living near Madras.

² This appears to be a slip for ‘13’.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
point with him in a personal talk. This is the substance of our talk. Your things have gone with Jayaprakash.

How very foolish of you that you did not write to me to say that you were unwell. Do you have the fainting fits now? What about taking milk? Why did you have to go to Banaras? And again why to Sitab Diyara? What is your routine at Srinagar?

I have already told you about our party. All are fine. Sardar is daily having walks for four hours, Mani and Mahadev accompanying. Kumarappa and Shanta have benefited much. Kaka arrived the day before yesterday. Ba and I are well. Tari and Kusum continue to be weak. Ramayana recitation and the prayers go on as usual. I expect the Ayodhyakanda will be over tomorrow. The address is given in my letter of the 1st of 12th.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3470

22. LETTER TO RAMIBEHN K. PAREKH

May 19, 1936

CHI. RAMI,

I have your letter. You did well in writing to me. I shall send for Manu after I have reached Wardha, although, if Manu so wishes, she might even now go to Wardha since Nimu has taken up her stay at Maganwadi. I trust you and the children are keeping well. I hope Kunvarji is well enough.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9726

23. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

May 19, 1936

CHI. MANUDI,

You managed all right to escape. You know that Taribehn is here, don't you? All are well and happy.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9726
24. LETTER TO FATAH-ULLA-KHAN

NANDI,
May 20, 1936

The holy Koran I regard as a book of spiritual experiences, the same as, say, the Bible or the Zend-Avesta. I do not know the Quran offers more real solution to the modern problems than the other scriptures of the world. The competition today is not between the different scriptures of the world but between the representatives thereof and then between the latter on the one hand and those who reject the authority of the scriptures altogether.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

25. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

CHI. BRAJKISAN,
May 20, 1936

I read your letter about the Union. Taking into consideration all the circumstances, I feel that you should dissociate yourself from this affair of the workers. You must put it out of your mind; it is beyond your strength. Your word will not carry weight. Hence your presence is in the long run likely to harm the workers instead of benefiting them. Your duty at present is only to recover your health. Who can come over from Ahmedabad? Whoever comes, can he succeed? We must content ourselves with the tasks within our capacity. There is therefore no need to offer any opinion about the scheme. Tell me all the details regarding Dr. Ansari.

You must have got my earlier letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 2446
26. LETTER TO ASAF ALI

NANDI HILL, BANGALORE,
May 21, 1936

DEAR ASAF ALI,

You have done well in writing to me. I can drink in all the news you can give me about the deceased brother. He was nothing less to me. I have already written to Zohra and Zakir Husain about the details. I should receive their replies tomorrow or the day after. But you will now send me what they may not be able to.

As to the memorial, I fear we can get nothing worthy just now. Even the little thing about Kamala is causing difficulty. Since Lalaji’s memorial I have discountenanced any memorials for big people like Dr. Ansari. I should wait for better times not materially but politically. Sardar who is here joins me in this view. But let me know what G. and R. have to say.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

27. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

May 21, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

Here are two cuttings from The Hindu. I have refused to believe that you are correctly represented by the reporter. But I would like the

1 Vide “Letter to Zakir Husain”, 11-5-1936
2 Lala Lajpat Rai
3 The first cutting read: Bombay, May 18—Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru, addressing a ladies’ meeting this evening, said that he was asked in several places why he had not included women in the Congress Working Committee. He was surprised that no such question was forthcoming from women.

He continued, “The responsibility of choosing the Working Committee members rests with the President, and you all know what the situation was at Lucknow. You know the price I had to pay for my views and I will have to continue to pay such price. Choosing the Working Committee members was not so easy. You are also aware, I, as President, encountered many odds at Lucknow and my wishes were not carried out. Possibly, another man in my place would have resigned but I propose to do my utmost.”

The other cutting read: Bombay, May 18—Mr. Nehru when he visited the Khadi Bhandar today expressed doubts as to whether hand-spinning and weaving were an economic proposition. From his experiences in the united Provinces, he could say that it was not so. He, therefore, favoured development of machinery.
correct version, if you can send me one on both the subjects.\(^1\) The exclusion of women was entirely your own act. Indeed, nobody else had even thought it possible to exclude a woman from the cabinet. As to khadi I have understood you to say that it is indispensable in the present economy of the nation and that when the nation came to its own, hand-made cloth might have to give place to the mill-made.

Love.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1936. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

28. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 21, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

This fever I do not like at all. I hope you have given yourself adequate rest. If your hut cannot be ready at the expected time, it does not matter, nor for that matter my hut. You must not put an undue strain on yourself and should take all the fruit you may need. I am glad both B.\(^2\) and M.\(^3\) were with you in the nick of time. I am impatient to be with you. But it cannot be before 17th or 18th.

Tara’s death has disturbed me much. She was an extraordinarily good woman, possessing great strength of mind. Her love was amazing. I have a graphic description of her death. Brave Mahadevi\(^4\) was by her side all the time.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Do you know the price paid for your plot in Varoda?

From the original: C.W. 6336. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9802

---

\(^1\) Vide Appendix “Letter from Jawaharlal Nehru”, 25-5-1936, also “A False Alarm”, 6-6-1936.
\(^2\) Balwantsinha G. Shah
\(^3\) Munmalal G. Shah
\(^4\) Vinoba Bhave’s disciple Mahadevitai
29. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

May 21, 1936

CHI. JAMNALAL,

Tarabehn was indeed an extraordinary woman. Her single-minded devotion, firmness of mind, purity, generosity and love of India baffle description. Mahadevi, too, rendered excellent service and also showed courage.

Mirabehn writes to me of her illness. The lady’s faults are negligible, but her merits are worthy of emulation. May God save her.

Madalasa, Om are fine. I am returning both the letters.

I expect you are taking care of your health. Are you following the instructions I sent you in the matter of diet? Do you take enough rest? Do you take a daily walk? Do not ignore Janakibehn's suggestion regarding the abdominal belt.

Everything is all right here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2980

30. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

May 21, 1936

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I got your letters here at Nandi Durg. The photos are excellent. I have sent them to Ramdas and Devdas. What is Ali doing? Are Ali and Ismail partners in business? What is the trade they carry on? I hope they are not baffled by the great rise in population.

I should be glad if someone would look after your work and you could make a trip here. But avoid the temptation to visit me if you cannot save the necessary money. Do not incur the heavy expense merely for the sake of a trip if you all keep well and enjoy other amenities too.

It does not surprise me to hear that Indian Opinion is under a boycott. Continue to publish it as long as the people want it; stop it if they do not like it. We surely ought not to be unduly insistent. What is the present number of subscribers? How many of them are Hindus and how many Muslims? Do you sell any copies otherwise?

130 lb. is too much weight for Sushila. She should and can easily reduce it by 10 lb. She should eat less of starch and take enough fruit, give up ghee for some time if necessary, but not milk. This will certainly bring down the weight. She must not omit to take exercise but walk at least six miles every day, that is to say, for two hours at her normal speed. She should also take hip-baths.

Maybe I have written to you earlier about our party here at Nandi Hill. If I have not, here it is. Sardar, Manibehn, Tari, Kusum Gandhi, Navin, Kanti, Kanu, Ba, Kumarappa, Shantabehn (the Englishwoman) and Kakasaheb. Sardar, Manibehn and Mahadev have daily walks for four to five hours. Kusum and Shantabehn, too, walk just as much, and the rest of us for two hours. The climate here may not be said to have proved quite beneficial to Tari, though she is better than on the plains. Her health has suffered pretty much on account of worry and indifference to treatment. Kusum, too, is weak, no doubt, but comparatively better.

Recitation from the Ramayana is conducted daily. A fairly good number of people attend it. The morning and evening prayers are of course held as usual.

Devdas may now be said to be well enough. I think the letter is now long enough.

We shall be going to Wardha on June 15.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4851

31. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

May 21, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

Your weight has gone up fairly well. Hence you should be asked to stay on there. You did very well to have visited Gangabehn. You gave me no news of Bachubhai's health.

What is Tansukh's salary?

1 Tansukh Bhatt

22
It was hasty of you to have begun walking. Never be impatient in anything. Rest your leg and have it completely cured. Why don't you use home-made paper? It is quite easy to make and is cheap, too. We ought to pay attention to things that are regarded as trivial. Now that you are confined there, should you not introduce as many country-made things as possible?

You may pay a visit to Nagpur. You may go wherever you want to before reaching Segaon.

It seems I shall reach Wardha on the 17th at the earliest.

All here are doing well.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Tarabehn passed away on her way to Badri-Kedar. Mahadevi nursed her exceedingly well. She had a severe attack of fever.

Hoodbal means rashness.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9342

32. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

May 21, 1936

CHI. PREMA,

Here in Nandi Durg, I may claim, I am able to dispose of each day's mail practically on the same day. I read your letter of the 18th last evening, and am replying to it today.

It matters little what hopes I cherish about you. You may go on striving according to what you think these hopes are and according to your ability.1

You have put the question very well. You could have put it still more plainly.2 I have always had involuntary discharges. In South

---

1 Gandhiji had used this expression in the letter dated May 14, 1936.
2 The addressee had pleaded lack of confidence in her own capacity to grow into an illustrious brahmacharini, as hoped for by Gandhiji. Vide “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 13-2-1933
3 The addressee could not readily believe Gandhiji's confession of involuntary violation of brahmacharya. Vide “Nothing without Grace”, and letter to the addressee, “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 6-5-1933. After an inconclusive discussion with and at the instance of Acharaya Bhagavat the addressee had hesitantly sought clarification from him.
Africa they occurred at intervals of several years. I do not remember exactly. Here in India they have been of months. I have mentioned the fact of my getting discharges in a few articles of mine. If my brahmacharya had been completely free from discharges, I would have been able to place before the world very much more than I have succeeded in doing. But it seems practically impossible that a person who has indulged in sex gratification from the age of 15 to 30, maybe with his own wife only, can, on taking a vow of brahmacharya, control the discharge of his vital fluid completely. One whose capacity for retention has progressively weakened from day to day for fifteen years cannot recover it fully all at once. Both his body and mind will have become too weak for that. I, therefore, consider myself a very imperfect brahmachari. But my position is like that of the castor oil plant which looks big on a heath where there are no trees. People know this shortcoming of mine.

The experience which tormented me in Bombay was a strange and painful one. All my discharges so far had occurred in dreams and they never troubled me. I could forget them. But the experience in Bombay occurred while I was fully awake and had a sudden desire for intercourse. I felt of course no urge to gratify the craving, there was no self-forgetfulness whatever. I was completely master of my body. But despite my best efforts the organ remained aroused. This was an altogether strange and shameful experience. I have already explained the cause.\(^1\) As soon as that cause was removed the state of remaining aroused came to a stop, that is, waking state.

Despite my imperfection, one thing has always come easily to me, viz., that thousands of women have remained safe in my company. There have been occasions in my life when certain women, though aroused, were saved by God, or say, I was saved. I am a hundred per cent certain that it was God who saved us and, therefore, take no pride in the fact. It is my unceasing prayer to God that I might remain in the same condition till the very end of my life.

I have been striving to attain to Shukadeva's\(^2\) condition. I have not succeeded in that aim. If I succeed, I would become a eunuch\(^3\) though possessed of the vital fluid and discharges would become impossible.

---

1. Vide "Letter to Premabehn Kantak", 6-5-1936
2. Son of Vyasa and the ideal brahmachari described in the Bhagavata.
However, the views which I have recently expressed regarding brahmacharya have no flaw in them and contain no exaggeration. With effort, any man or woman can attain that ideal. This does not mean that the whole world or thousands will realize it in my own lifetime. Let it take centuries to be realized, but the ideal is correct, is realizable and must be realized.

Man has a long way to travel yet. His instincts are still those of a beast. Only his frame is human. Violence seems to reign all round. Untruth fills the world. And yet we do not doubt the rightness of the path of truth and non-violence. Know that the same is the case with regard to bramacharya.

Those who strive but continue to burn inwardly are in fact not striving. They nurse lust in their minds and only wish to control loss of the vital fluid, to refrain from the physical act of intercourse. Such persons are correctly described in Chapter II [of the Gita]. They may be regarded as hypocrites.

What I am at present striving to achieve is purification of thought.

Modern thought regards brahmacharya as adharma and recommends the ‘dharma’ of self-indulgence and control of progeny by artificial means. My soul rebels against this.

Sex-craving will always remain in the world, but its moral basis rests and will ever rest on brahmacharya.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10381. Also C.W. 6819. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

33. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

May 21, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

You reached there quite in the nick of time. You could get the

1 Vide “For Contraceptives”, 4-4-1936 and “For Women Reformers”, 2-5-1936
2 In fact Chapter III. 6 right type of work since you arrived when Mirabehn was really hard pressed. I am hoping to reach there on the 18th.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8605. Also C.W. 6991. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

34. LETTER TO PYARELAL

NANDI DURG,

_May 21, 1936_

CHI. PYARELAL,

I have your letter of the 17th. It would be better to learn the facts from me instead of knowing my mind. Hence, only that step would be correct which does justice to both. I was really unhappy that you did not come. Otherwise, why should I have got the ticket?

I consider the service of the lepers, etc., the greatest thing only if you can stick to it. I did believe that Yoga would not have approved of your becoming a fakir. Those day are gone. Faith is the only thing left for the present age. For that, I would consider renunciation the best thing. There is hardly any scope for human endeavour. Occasions may occur when human endeavour is possible. Right now, there is a feeling of utter defeat. Hence there is nothing left except to depend on God’s power. That is the reason why I did not show displeasure at your going to Calcutta or Orissa. I never considered it important. I had already suggested that it would be right for you only to stay with me. Even now, that is how I feel independently of anything. Hence I would appreciate it if you abandon what you are pursuing and came to me. But I would not like it if you ran away from Calcutta or Orissa after settling there.

As I see it you still do not have mental poise. You are not at peace. You have not found faith. It seems your mind is wavering between faith and human endeavour. If that is the case, I think your place is only with me.

I have no doubt at all about Yashodhara. Her love was merely attachment. It had not the backing of the spirit or strength of sacrifice.
Had she been even a little firm, she would not have had any trouble. I shall know more when she sees me.

Blessings from

BAPU

35. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

May 22, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your note-paper is certainly very good. It shows the very great progress made by the hand-made paper industry. I think it is a good idea your sending for uncut paper and having it cut to order there. Perhaps that would support a few poor people there, if you get enough orders there. The question then would be whether it would be worth while your devoting your time to such details. You must be the best judge. You have to make the best use possible of your time in Simla consistently with the preservation of your health such as you have.

You are quite idiotically reserving so many things to tell me when we meet. When that great event comes to pass, you will have forgotten most of the things. I am sure you are not making notes of these reservations. For once therefore you had better be a little wise and reserve nothing for the next meeting. There will be enough to discuss when we meet. And I hope you are telling the Adampur people whatever they need to be told. Certainly you should tolerate nothing fraudulent, no matter what it costs. No cost is too great to pay for your putting down fraud in a pure movement.

Did I tell you about Tara's death during her pilgrimage to Badri-Kedar? You will see all about this in Harijan.¹ She was one of the noblest of women I had the good fortune to meet.

Love.

TYRANT

¹ Vide “In Memoriam”
36. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

NANDI HILL,
May 22, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

My heart is with you though my body is here.¹ I had expected a word from you but I have one from Radhakrishna. His letter contemplates bringing you to Wardha. I hope it was not necessary. Of course whatever is thought necessary for quick recovery must be done. You must not allow the building programme or anything else to prey on your mind. Without good health, you can carry out no programme. I look forward to tomorrow bringing good news.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]
We descend to Bangalore on 31st.

From the original: C. W. 6337. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9803

37. LETTER TO CHUNILAL

May 22, 1936

BHAI CHUNILAL,

I have your letter. Now that Thakkar Bapa is arriving there everything must settle down. From now on it is not necessary to send the papers to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII

¹ The addressee “had gone down with a severe attack of malaria.”
Miss Mary Chesley, an Englishwoman, came to India in 1934 when the Congress was in session in Bombay. As soon as she landed she came to my hut in the Congress camp and told me she knew Mirabehn and had expected to come with her but somehow or other she had preceded her by a week or there-about. Her desire was to serve India through her villages. She did not prepossess me by her talk and I thought she would not stay in India many months. But I was wholly mistaken. She had come to know of Miss Mary Barr who had already commenced village work in Khedi, a village a few miles from Betul (C.P.). Miss Chesley found her way to Mary Barr. Mary Barr brought Mary Chesley to Wardha and we were together for a few days. Miss Chesley showed a determination that surprised me. She began work with Mary Barr in Khedi, adopted the Indian costume and changed her name to Tarabehn and toiled at Khedi in a manner that alarmed poor Mary Barr. She would dig, carry baskets full of earth on her head. She simplified her food as much as to put her health in danger. She had her own handsome income from Canada from which she kept only a paltry sum of about Rs. 10 for herself and gave the rest to the A.I.V.I.A., or to Indians with whom she came in contact and who seemed to her to give promise of being good village workers and who needed some pecuniary help. I came in closest touch with her. Her charity was boundless, she had great faith in the goodness of human nature. She was forgiving to a fault. She was a devout Christian. She belonged to a Quaker family. But she had no narrowness about her. She did not believe in converting others to her own faith. She was a graduate of the London School of Economics and a good teacher, having conducted together with a companion a school in London for several years. She realized at once that she must learn Hindi and was regularly studying it. For being able to pick up conversational Hindi she lived for a few months in the Wardha Mahila Ashram and there with two members formed a plan of going to Badri-Kedar during summer. I had warned her against the adventure. But it was difficult to turn her from such adventures when once her mind was made up. So only the other day she started with her friends on

1 In the last week of October her perilous pilgrimage. And I got a brief message on the 15th from Kankhal saying, “Tarabehn expired”. In her love for India’s villages she was not to be excelled by anybody. Her passion for India's independence was equal to that of the best among us. She was impatient of the inferiority complex wherever she noticed it. She mixed with poor women and children with the greatest freedom. There was nothing of the patron about her. She would take service from none, but would serve anybody with the greatest zeal. She was a self-effacing mute worker whose left hand did not know what the right had done. May her soul rest in peace.

_Harijan_, 23-5-1936

39. Bribery

Bribery in the name of _mamul_ and the like to railway officials and the others is not an unusual occurrence in Indian life. Any official with whom the public has anything to do is generally said to be open to receive bribes even for the performance of his duty, not to speak of committing breach thereof. I have had to suffer in my time for refusing to pay a paltry anna at the third-class ticket windows for getting my ticket in my turn which would never come because favourites had to be served first. I have had to wait for hours sometimes before I could get a chance of buying my ticket. The customs and the railways are the two departments with which the general public have to come in frequent touch. And it is there that the public suffer most. A correspondent draws my attention to the woes of public workers who want to despatch goods or receive consignments. At either end unless you are prepared to bribe officials, you are made to wait exasperatingly long. He wants to know how this evil can be remedied. There is desire among spirited workers to resist this immoral blackmail. It is difficult to advise in this matter. Obviously no bribe may possibly be given. Equally obviously public work must not be allowed to suffer. There is no quick remedy against a petty official who misuses his brief authority. Threat to lodge a complaint produces no effect on hardened officials. They know their strength and use it mercilessly, for it is a matter of pecuniary gain for them. They have come to think these perquisites are a part of their pay. And he who

---

1 Custom
2 The source has “bribery”.
questions their right to demand them needs to be taught a lesson. Lesson or no lesson, someone has to have the courage to bring to book those who will not recognize the new spirit that is seizing so many workers. Despatch or clearance work may suffer for the time being. It is worth while taking the risk, if thereby officials will learn the elementary morality of not taking bribes. If they are ill paid, let them demand a higher pay, but they may not take bribes from the public whom they are paid to serve. I hope the higher authorities will see these lines and deal effectively with the evil which they know does flourish widely.

Harijan, 23-5-1936

40. MARRIAGE BY PURCHASE

Some months ago The Statesman opened its columns to a discussion of the dowry system prevalent among many castes almost all over India, and dealt with it editorially. I used to write on the cruel custom often enough in the columns of Young India. The cuttings from The Statesman revive the cruel memories of what I used to know then. My remarks were aimed at deti leti as the custom is known in Sind. Enough educated Sindhis were found who exacted large sums of money from parents who were anxious to see their daughters well married. The Statesman has carried on a crusade against the custom in general. There is no doubt that the custom is heartless. But so far as I am aware it does not touch the millions. The custom is confined to the middle-class who are but a drop in the ocean of Indian humanity.

Whenever we talk of evil customs, we usually think of the middle-class. The millions living in the villages have their customs and woes of which we have as yet but little knowledge.

This however does not mean that one may ignore the dowry evil because it is confined to a comparatively small number of the people of this country. The system has to go. Marriage must cease to be a matter of arrangement made by parents for money. The system is intimately connected with caste. So long as the choice is restricted to a few hundred young men or young women of a particular caste, the system will persist no matter what is said against it. The girls or boys or their parents will have to break the bonds of caste if the evil is to be eradicated. Then the age for marrying has also to be raised and the girls have to dare to remain spinsters, if need be, i.e., if they do not get a suitable match. All this means education of a character that will revolutionize the mentality of the youth of the nation. Unfortunately the system of education has no connection with our surroundings which therefore remain practically untouched by the education received by a microscopic minority of the boys and girls of the nation. Whilst, therefore, whatever can be done to abate the evil must be done, it is clear to me that this evil and many others which can be named can only be tackled if there is education which responds to the rapidly changing conditions of the country. How is it that so many boys and girls who have even passed through colleges are found unable or unwilling to resist the manifestly evil custom which affects their future so intimately as marriage does? Why should educated girls be found to commit suicide because they are not suited? Of what value is their education if it does not enable them to dare to defy a custom which is wholly indefensible and repugnant to one's moral sense? The answer is clear. There is something radically wrong in the system of education that fails to arm girls and boys to fight against social or other evils. That education alone is of value which draws out the faculties of a student so as to enable him or her to solve correctly the problems of life in every department.

1 The source has "customs."

_Harijan_, 23-5-1936

41. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

NANDI HILL,

_May 24, 1936_

CHI. MARY,

I have your letter. You will see my note¹ on Tara in _Harijan_. Yes, she made in Rishikesh a will in Hindi making over everything to me. It is signed simply Tarabehn. Do you know who her relatives are? Do you know her address in Canada? If you do, please send [it]. Her friend in England is Miss. P. Blythe, Anthorn School, Quakers Lane, Potters Bar, London. I have written to her at length and so has Shanta. I am sending your letter to Sumitra through Satyadevji. His address is Gurukul, Kangri, U.P.

¹ _Vide “In Memoriam”, 23-5-1936_
I have heard from Miss Madden. I am glad you have given me particulars about her. It is plucky at her age to come to village work. But faith can overcome mountains. I am writing to her.

The climb up did not hurt me at all.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Address: Bangalore City. After 31st May till 15th June.

Herewith for Gopal.¹

From C. W. 3391. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

42. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 24, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

The late-fee letter of 20 and the one of 21 reached me at the same time. It does often happen like that to late-fee letters. However, nothing is lost. I had R.’ s² note the previous day. I do hope you had no further fever. I hope too that you are still taking rest. You never give yourself enough rest after these attacks of malaria. I wish you could become proof against them. You should go to some hill or seaside for that rest. I could easily send you to a Kathiawar seaside place where you would have quiet, would be happy and be doing some village work. Let us see what the coming rains have in store for us. No rooms as yet for Mahadev & Co.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6338. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9804

43. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 24, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I am glad you are free from fever. Of course you were quite right in ordering oranges. You should order from outside any other

¹ The letter is not available.
² Radhakrishna; vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 22-5-1936 fruit you may need. And do take plenty of rest before beginning strenuous work. And you should seriously consider my proposal for a change at a seaside place.

I would like you not to incur the expense of having partitions made. I would like to improvise them as they may be need[ed] almost like what Chhotelal had arranged for my bathroom, you will remember. As it is I dread the cost of the hut. I hope Divanji is keeping within the limits prescribed by me. The plinth, four walls and a waterproof roof with open verandah and fence round is the indispensable minimum. But you are giving me in addition a kitchen and bath-room and a stable.

Let the other additions wait till after my arrival.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Give my blessings to Ram¹ and Lakshmi². Tell them I hope they will prove worthy of each other and the country.

From the original: C.W. 6339. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9805

44. LETTER TO FARID ANSARI

May 24, 1936

MY DEAR FAREED³.

Your letter gave me an agreeable shock. Your handwriting is an almost exact copy of Dr. Ansari's. And I wondered how I could receive the Doctor's letter when I saw your signature.

Neither Ammajan's fortitude nor Zohra's grief surprises me. Zohra is a tender flower. She knows nothing of philosophy. She has tasted abundantly of human love that has sustained her all these years. Now the poor girl feels the void. It can never be wholly filled, not even when she is married. Dr. Ansari's love for Zohra was unique. There was nothing he would not do to make her good and happy. And all this was out of pure selfless love.

I can understand your grief too. He was to you all you describe him. The fact [is]¹ he was a selfless friend and guide . . .⁵. Such was his

¹ Presumably, Rameshwardas Poddar's son Shriram and Purushottamdas Jajoria's daughter Lakshmi
² ibid
³ Dr. M.A. Ansari's brother's son
⁴ Illegible
⁵ ibid
[greatness]! May his spirit sustain us and enable [us to conduc-] ct ourselves [so] as to prove worthy [of] him.

You vainly approach me [for] relief and strength. I have none of his great [nursing] skill nor do I possess the [devotion] of you all that he had. But if my love for Dr. Ansari can be sufficient passport for entry to the hearts of you, Zohra and others who were specially his care, I can present that passport. For his death has deepened that love whose bottom was as sound as that of human love can be.

I hope you are making steady progress.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a facsimile: Mahatma, Vol. IV, between pp. 112 and 113. Also C.W. 9797

45. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

May 24, 1936

CHI. PRABHA.

I was very happy to have your wire at the expected time. This document leads me to conclude that you did not get my three earlier letters. Nor have they come back; I therefore do not know what happened to them. Whatever it may be, I have of course given you the substance of the earlier letters in the one you got. Kanti also did write two letters. Write to me what food including milk you take and in what measure, and also your daily programme.

Should you not speak frankly to him and seek his advice as you do with me because I am away? There should be no hesitation in doing so. By all means you may ask whatever can be asked through letters. But you may certainly seek Father's assistance in anything that calls for quick decision.

The chief mark of faith is that whatever the situation the inner joy should abide. Everything is all right here.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Send your reply to Bangalore where we shall go on the 31st. Kumara Park, Bangalore City.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3466

1 Vide “Letter to Prabhavati”, 19-5-1936

VOL. 69 : 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936

35
46. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 24, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I am sending to you Prema's first letter after the illness, as originally desired by her. I hope the wedding passed off without any hitch and you received my letters.¹

Has Balkrishna reached Chorwad?
Kusum keeps fairly well. She comes with me for a walk daily.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]
Leaving Nandi on the 31st, we shall go to Bangalore and most probably stay there for 14 days. The address is: Kumara Park, Bangalore City.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8491. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

47. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

May 24, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I think you did well in going there. You should look upon Mirabehn's company as a veritable satsang.³ Serve her as much as you can and put your heart in doing what she bids you. Don't you be a burden to her in any way. Learn from Balwantsinha the entire processing of cotton.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8604. Also C.W. 6992. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

¹ Of Purushottam and Vijaya
² Vide “Letter to Purushottam and Vijaya Gandhi”, 14-5-1936
³ Association with the good.
48. LETTER TO C. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARIAR

NANDI HILL,
May 25, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

It would have been delightful if you could have come to Bangalore where we shall be from 31st to 15th June probably. Do come even now, if health allows it.

As you know I have planned to settle down in Segaon, a village near Wardha. How far God will allow the plan to succeed He alone knows. But I may not disturb it voluntarily. Therefore I dare not attend the Exhibition, much as I would like to.

It is difficult to give a decisive opinion about the Lucknow Congress. There was nothing alarming about it. And I do entertain the hope that only good will come out of the confusion that seems to have been created in the minds of Congressmen. After all has that not been our history since 1920? It was inevitable when new ideas and new policies were being introduced. I have great faith in Jawaharlal’s nobility, sobriety and loyalty to the Congress. He won’t place it in jeopardy.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]
I did not attend the session for the opening. The telegram

From the original: C. Vijayaraghavachariar Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

49. LETTER TO ZAKIR HUSAIN

May 25, 1936

MY DEAR ZAKIR,

Your letter has just reached me. The same post has brought a copy of what Agatha Harrison wrote about the Doctor for Hitavada—Servants of India paper in Nagpur. I send it to show what he meant to me. I know he had interrupted his journey to Europe. My pleading

1 & 2 The source is mutilated here.
3 During Gandhiji’s 21-day fast which commenced on May 8, 1933 for the journey was in vain. He had run to me without [my] asking. And he had gathered round him all the best doctors he knew. It was almost worth fasting to have that extraordinary demonstration of love. It might be taken in another light. One might well say it was folly to fast if it was to cost the precious time of so many first-class physicians who during those three weeks deprived their many patients of the assistance they badly needed. Who knows how such demonstrations should really be taken? We can but obey, in all humility, the will as we can know it of Him who is the Controller-General of every second of our life.

This long paragraph shows you the state of mind I am in. Not that I have time enough and to spare here from the daily tasks. But I am in the position of poor Zohra. If I had not the peremptory call of duty from moment to moment, I should be as distracted as she is.

For the last three days I have been framing in my mind a letter to you alone and then I thought of Shwaib, then Khwaja and then quite forgetfully of Sherwani, not just then realizing that the big man was also no more in the flesh with us. There are other Muslims I know. But for this moment these were the names vividly before me.

But I know that none of you can become the infallible guide Dr. Ansari had grown to be. It is not a question of merits. It is a question of faith.

As I am writing this I feel I must confine myself to you. The question I wanted to ask was and I still want to ask is, will you be to me what the Doctor was on the Hindu-Muslim question? What distracts me is not the absence of the warmth of a gentleman-friend, of a God-believing and godfearing doctor. It is the absence of an unfailing guide in the matter of Hindu-Muslim unity. My silence at the present time on this question is not a sign of my apathy, it is a sign of an ever-deepening conviction that the unity has got to come. Then I ask, will you take Dr. Ansari's place? In answer, do not think of your status in society. If you have self-confidence, you must say ‘Yes’. If you have not, you must say ‘No’. I shall not misunderstand you. I know and love you too well to misunderstand you.

Whether you become my guide or not, please answer the question I asked, among others, Dr. Ansari in my last letter. Is this step

---

1 Shwaib Qureshi
3 Tasadduq Ahmed Sherwani

38 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
the Frontier Government has taken, that of practically refusing the grant to Sikh Hindu girls' schools that teach through Hindi and Gurumukhi right? I have been asked for months to express my opinion. I have resisted the invitation till now. But the question is one of principle and bears in its womb great consequences. I have approached Sahibzada Sir Abdul Qayum in the matter. He has sent me what is a painful reply. You can have a copy if you want it, before expressing your opinion.

I do not know whether you share the opinion Mujeeb expressed in his letter to me on Hindi-Hindustani question.¹ I would like you, him, Aqil and other friends to read my two articles² in Harijan and if they do not give satisfaction, I would like you all to argue the thing out with me, if you like through Harijan or privately. I see no cause for difference of opinion. But if there is, we must try to remove it.

Love to you all.

BAPU

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

50. LETTER TO BHUJANGILAL CHHAYA

NAND I DURG,
May 25, 1936

CHI. BHUJANGILAL,

I have your letter. Young people should never write with a pencil. In fact no one should. Pencil-writing fades out with passage of time. It presents difficulty in reading.

You should have patience and be polite. Your father will not come in your way if your conduct is faultless in all matters. He has the right to test your firmness.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2603

¹ Vide Appendix, “For Hindustani Only”, 9-5-1936.
² Vide “Hindi or Hindustani”, 9-6-1936 and 16-5-1936.
51. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

May 25, 1936

CHI. JAMNALAL,

I send herewith Gopal's letter for you to read. He seems to have been greatly shocked at Tarabehn's death. He has some faults as also some good qualities. It now falls to my lot to guide him. I see no difficulty in it; I have only to direct him from a distance. For the present, I have suggested that he should stick to his insurance business and prepare himself for village welfare work.

The question of Sumitra and Subhadra is complicated. I think Tarabehn had taken them to Hardwar. I am inquiring. I am also trying to know sumitra's mind. If, as Gopal says, Sumitra hands over custody of Subhadra, I think we might keep the latter at the Mahila Ashram. As for Sumitra, I have suggested that she should stay with Marybehn in Khedi. Perhaps she may have to be given something towards her expenses.

Do tell me your opinion in the matter. You must rest yourself.

[PS.]

In Nandi Durg up to May 30 and at Bangalore City from May 18 to June 15.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2981

52. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

May 25, 1936

DEAR SISTER RAIHANA,

It is wonderful to have your letter after so many months and in such excellent Gujarati! You seem to have been improving your knowledge of the language. How good if I could do the same with my Urdu! But then, is the teacher or the pupil to blame for it?

What a way you have of telling me of Abbajan! Inscrutable are God's ways of saving him! He wishes to! What beautiful situations He brings about! A master Manipulator of strings, He makes us dance by plucking at any of the strings He likes. We do not even feel that

1 Addressee's father, Abbas Tyabji
He is pulling the strings if we dance as He wishes. It is when we resist Him that we feel the pull of the string, and then we begin complaining. Observe Abbajan's face as you read this to him and write to me what you notice. You should, however, suppress the letter if he does not have the strength to listen and the doctors do not permit it.

You have mentioned so many members of the family that most of them are no more than names to me. I do not remember any of the faces, and I have to commit to memory the names. All the same, I am myself a member of the family, am I not? And such a one as does not even know the names of his own family members or their faces either! But what can be done? That must be the plight of a person becoming one of a vast family. But what is great about knowing name and form? We are all children of the same Mother. If we truly understood this, we could do without name and form, couldn't we? Read this to all, apologize to them on my behalf and make them forgive me. Anyway, do convey my good wishes and blessings.

Yes, Dr. Ansari's passing away has created a big void which will be difficult to fill. Poor Zohra is lost in grief. I am sending her today a second letter¹ in my broken Urdu.

Sardar [and] Kaka are of course here and very much remember Abbajan and Ammajan.

My address is Bangalore City up to June 15.

Can you read my writing? Has Hamida² come?

SMT. RAIHANA TYABJI
SOUTHWOOD

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

¹ Neither letter is available.
² Addressee's brother's daughter
53. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

NANDI DURG,
May 25, 1936

CHI. AMBUJAM,

I was delighted to get your letter. Krishnaswami must be happy now. Your daughter-in-law too is happy, I hope. You must be keeping well, physically as well as mentally. Your parents too must be doing fine.

The climate here is friendly. Sardar takes plenty of walks daily. The others too are all right and so am I.

Yes, we shall be in Bangalore for a fortnight, going there on the 31st instant. It will be good if [you] too can come. We have to go to Wardha via Madras only.

Kamala wants to spend two or three days with me. I have sent my consent.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Tell me if you can read the above with ease. There is Mrs. Esther Menon living there in Shamrock Cottage. See her if you can on my behalf and befriend her.²

From a photostat of the Hindi: C.W. 9607. Courtesy: S. Ambujammal

54. TELEGRAM TO MAGANLAL P. MEHTA

MAGANLAL PRANIJIVAN MEHTA
MOGHUL STREET, RANGOON

YOU MUST NOT GO WITHOUT SEEING ME. NANDI HILL TILL THIRTY-FIRST THEN BANGALORE FORTNIGHT. COME IF ONLY FOR ONE DAY.

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

¹ Addressee's son
² The postscript is in English.
55. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 26, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your two letters 23rd, 24th came in today.

Of course if you are happier and better in Segaon, you will go there. You must have rest and the food you want at the time you want. Tell someone quietly there and perhaps matters will mend. I return the maps.¹ No corrections. You have thought the thing out well and it stands.

No more today, as I am anxious to catch the post just now going.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6340. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9806

56. LETTER TO VIYOGI HARI

BANGALORE CITY,²

May 26, 1936

BHAJ VIYOGI HARI,

Only today I got your letter. The telegram regarding Sukirti's³ wedding will go tomorrow. It is a good development. Send my blessings to both. Convey to Bhagavati Prasad that I hope the motive behind this marriage was not lust but only pure religious feeling. The purity in Sukirti and Bhagavati Prasad's life from now on will have a great impact on the Hindu world.

I have already written about you. Your decision, I find, is correct.

Blessings from

BAPU

¹ The addressee had drawn “two alternative plans for the lay-out of the buildings, prayer-ground and compound”.
² Gandhiji apparently meant this for the addressee’s reply
³ An inmate of the Harijan Ashram, Delhi
[PS.]
Hand over the enclosed letter to Amtussalaam.
It must be made clear that Sukirti’s marriage had no connection with the Harijan Sevak Sangh. It need not be announced to the Press. Does Bhagavati have parents or any other relatives? Has he been thrown out by his caste or is there any such possibility?

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1071

57. LETTER TO K. HAZAREESINGH

[AS AT] WARDHA,
May 26, 1936

Bhai Hazareesingh,

I was about to leave for Nandi Durg when your letter reached me. I had already received your book which however has been left at Wardha. I have your letter before me.

I stayed in Mauritius for about ten days, while my boat was lying at anchor. There was no other purpose in my visit and this is why only a few people may have been aware of my presence there. I stayed in the house of some Muslim friends and that gave me an opportunity of meeting other people. I also met the Governor at a social function. Please convey my greetings to all my fellow-countrymen. Vandemataram.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhi

From a facsimile of the Hindi: A History of Indians in Mauritius, Appendix E

58. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 27, 1936

Chi. Mira,

I gave a hurried reply yesterday to your two letters. I returned also the two plans for the fenced yard. I did not examine your maps critically, as I regard your judgment to be superior to mine. You have a natural faculty for these matters.

1 Gandhiji, in fact, stayed in Mauritius for 20 days; vide “Speech in Mauritius”, 13-11-1901
2 What follows is a translation as given in the source, the corresponding Hindi original not having been reproduced.
I think I have already told you1 that Mahadev's hut need not be thought of just yet. I want first to feel my legs before incurring the expenses of further buildings. It is wise to move slowly. The experience of five days shows that contact can be retained even while Mahadev & Co. are in Maganwadi. This is merely said to justify cautious movement.

I must discuss with you the disorganization you noticed at J.'s2 when we meet.

The storm you describe is an indication of what things can be in the villages in the rainy season. Perhaps the things were better in Segaon, because it is not on an eminence as Paunar is. Every position has both its advantages and disadvantages. It is better therefore not to make elaborate plans about things which are themselves unenduring.3

I think I have told you, we descend to Bangalore on 31st to remain there a fortnight. We leave Bangalore any day between 10th and 15th. It depends upon the engagements there. My inclination will be to hasten the date of departure. I have not needed the outing. I think Sardar has gained well. He won't need the full 15 days in Bangalore. Therefore if we stay on till the last day, it will be business that would keep us.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6341. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9807

59. LETTER TO MAULVI M. ASHRAF

AS AT WARDHA,
May 27, 1936

DEAR ASHRAF,

What can you expect from me? No doubt you have written to Kumarappa and Shankerlal Banker. They can send you what little literature the two Associations4 have produced. I am sure you do not

2 Jamnalal Bajaj
3 Explaining this the addressee writes: “While I was building Bapu's mud cottage, a pucca brick bungalow happened to be being prepared for Jamnalalji at Paunar. In the severe storm referred to the little mud cottage stood firm and the brick bungalow collapsed.”
4 The A.I.S.A. and the A.I.V.I.A. want Harijan, which deals with untouchability mainly and some moral problems.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

MAULVI M. ASHRAF
POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC INFORMATION DEPARTMENT
SWARAJ BHAWAN, ALLAHBAD

A.I.C.C. File, 1936. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

60. LETTER TO KANAIYALAL AND LILAVATI MUNSHI

May 27, 1936

BHAI MUNSHI AND CHI. LILAVATI,

If I could persuade myself to yield to your love, I would certainly accept your hospitality. But now I am a party to keeping even Sardar back. We had a talk yesterday and both of us came to the conclusion that he too should not go [to Ooty]. From the point of view of health, Nandi has agreed with us all, and especially with Sardar. Do not think for a moment that the place can offer Nandi's solitude. It is now cool in Bangalore too, and we hope to be able to do some work after going there. It, therefore, seems unwise that Sardar should part from me even for two days. Since my programme in Bangalore will be crowded, I suggest that you should come here and spend your last two days with us. If you do so, we shall be able to talk a little and also do some work. The climate of Ooty is certainly excellent, and so is the scenery. But I don't feel like going there just for that reason, nor can I summon the courage to do so. Sardar has already enjoyed your hospitality. I also shall enjoy it some day. As for your love, I am tasting it daily.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7574. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi
61. LETTER TO VITHAL V. DASTANE

BHAI DASTANE,

It appears you are expecting too much from me. You know my present limitations in placing the thing before the country. Publicity, however, is inherent in diligence in your own work.

In response to his letter I have asked Dev to let me know the location, plan and other facts. In the mean while here are my answers to your questions:

(1) In the rainy season you should grow there the requisite vegetables as also a few flowering plants. You should also grow such food grain as could be harvested by December. All this should be utilized at the time of the Congress session. Measurements of the land should be obtained right now. Make notes of places which are waterlogged during the rainy season. If there is any tank which gets filled up, this water too should be conserved. For this job you should immediately obtain the services of an expert agriculturist and an expert engineer. I take it that you will get their help gratis.

Do see Shankerlal right now. He knows about this more than anyone else. Mhatre the architect has worked for two sessions; so please take him there right now. Again ask Shankerlal about Nandalal Bose and the material from the Santiniketan exhibition. Contact Lakshmidas, as also Jajuji and Kumarappa.

Mhatre will help you with the calculations regarding the time and space for the pandal, barracks, etc. Assume that the minimum time required would be three months, so that the construction work should start soon after the monsoon is over. But first of all prepare a plan [of work].

The site should accommodate a hundred thousand people. Enroll the names of men and women volunteers right from today. Start with . . .’ Vatsala’ and others.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 Illegible
2 Addressee's daughter
62. LETTER TO TIRUPUR KHADI-PRODUCING ASSOCIATION

[Before May 28, 1936]

All I can say is that it is wrong for you to sell khaddar in the circumstances in which you are doing. It hurts the poor people in whose interest the affairs of the All-India Spinners' Association are conducted.

The Hindu, 30-5-1936

63. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

May 28, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letter came in yesterday. The post comes after the closing of the outgoing mail.

You are a proper family party—Judge, Government Member, Doctor, with rebellious sister in their midst and you want the Collector Brother in your midst to finish your happiness. Remember that feeding up an exhausted brother is not the only manner of expressing a sister’s love. She has to know the food that is required for a given constitution. I know cases where rich and nutritious food has resulted in harm. But you have lived with me in vain if you do not know how to choose the correct articles. The manner of preparing them must be your very own.

When I read the sentence in your letter, attributed to me as having ever said to Kallenbach, I couldn’t believe it. I re-read the thing and then I laughed. I never lay down the law like that even for little children. Though K. had immense faith in me, he would not tolerate the autocracy and arrogance attributed to me. And faith like his would not require such assertions of infallibility. You must now fill in the gap and tell me who regaled you with the precious information

---

1. The Association had pointed out that they were paying the spinners decent wages and...that if they had really reduced the wages of spinners, they would not spin for them but would forthwith go to the All-India Spinners' Association and that the prices raised by the All-India Spinners' Association were too high. Vide “Uncertified Khadi”, 11-4-1936.

2. The report appeared under the date-line “Tirupur, May 28, 1936”.

---

48 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
and I might be able to throw some more light on the grave problem! But my denial should not be taken to mean that I won’t lay down the law for rebels and idiots and require obedience because it is given by me. I must live up to the title given to me if only to give you the satisfaction of proving your rebellious spirit! And then heaven help me, if such assertion being heard by somebody is quoted as an authentic example of my arrogance!!

When we descend to Bangalore I shan’t have time to give you such nonsense. Here there is quiet and therefore comparative leisure for giving you senseless things.

I do hope this hospitality even of nearest and dearest is not proving a strain on your weak body. I know what closest attention to the tiniest details, of which you are capable when it is a matter of loving service, means to the person giving such love. Happily Shummy is there to prevent you from overdoing it.

Mira was badly ill but she is better now. She was taken to J.’s bungalow. She must have returned to Segaon.

Rameshwari Nehru comes here today for three days. She had a very successful tour in the Harijan cause in Travancore.

There was no indication in your note on Lucknow Exhibition that you did not want it published. I read it carefully, made alterations to hide your identity and let it go. You will tell me how it reads. And why did you not want it published? Next time you will mark all such things suitably so as to indicate your wishes. That note had little value if it was not meant to tell me people what a town-bred woman had felt about the Exhibition.

Here is a note received from Mr. Marsden which speaks for itself.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Remember we descend to Bangalore City on 31st and stay there not beyond 15th June.

From the original: C.W. 3728. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6884

1 Published in Harijan, 23-5-1936, under the title “A City Woman on the Lucknow Exhibition”
May 28, 1936

CHI. AMTUSSALAAM,

I have a letter from you after a long time. Nowadays I am afraid of writing to you. You see in my words what was not intended because you have grown very suspicious. I am even considering whether I should stop writing in Urdu. You were hurt by an innocent letter containing nothing offensive because you put a contrary interpretation on it. I was only jesting when I wrote to you not to quarrel with Thakkar Bapa. I know that you are not one to quarrel with anybody, and hence it can be only a jest if I talk of a quarrel with reference to you. I made the joke only after I had Thakkar Bapa’s loving letter and understood that it was all over. Why should you then feel unhappy and not be glad about it?

Shall I henceforth give up all joking with you?

What if there are all kinds of stories about you? Are you sure it is not your suspicious nature that is at work here again? You are concerned with your work alone. Tell me what other work can be better than cooking for the Harijan children, feeding them and keeping all things clean. Moreover, you have Tyagi and Rajkishori with you and you should therefore experience no difficulty.

It will pain me greatly if you ruin your health. You ought to forget the grief over Dr. Ansari’s death and take up the work he has left behind.

The talk you had with your brothers at Patiala was not right. It was nothing but your foolishness and it evoked the response it deserved. What else would an unhappy member of the family say? All have to bend before your obstinacy.

I had already sent for Saraswati and her mother even before you made the suggestion. I believe they will come to Bangalore. Have no anxiety on Kanti’s account.

The reply should now be addressed: Bangalore City.

I am writing to Sukirti and Raj. Write about your health.

Tell me whether you can correctly read this letter.
Have I not answered all your questions now?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 595

65. LETTER TO RAJKISHORI TYAGI
May 28, 1936

CHI. RAJKISHORI,

Your letter. You need not return if you do not like to live in the Mahila Ashram. You should write a letter to Sethji regarding this. Write to me in detail what you did not like at the Mahila Ashram.

It is better to stay with Amtussalaambhn and Tyagiji is of course there. Learn form him as much Hindi and arithmetic as possible.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6637. Also C.W. 4285. Courtesy: Chand Tyagi

66. TELEGRAM TO PYARELAL

NANDI,
May 29, 1936

PYARELAL
15 COLLEGE SQUARE
CALCUTTA

YOU HAVE WHOLLY MISUNDERSTOOD MY LETTER. ABANDONING REFERS PRESENT WORK.

BAPU

From a photostat: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 Jamnalal Bajaj

VOL. 69 : 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936 51
67. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

May 29, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I have your letter of 25th instant.¹ So you are touring with almost feverish speed. May you have the requisite strength. Even a week at Khali will be a godsend.

I propose to make public use of your statement on khadi². I have received so many inquiries. The distorted summary³ has caused consternation among our people who have faith in khadi. Your statement will ease the situation a bit.

Your explanation about the omission of a woman on the W. C. does not give me satisfaction. If you had shown the slightest desire to have a woman on the Committee, there would have been no difficulty whatsoever about any of the older ones standing out. There was pressure if it may be so called only about Bhulabhai.⁴ And the first time his name was mentioned you had no objection. There was no pressure about any other member. And then you had this unfettered choice of omitting a socialist name and taking a woman. But so far as I remember you yourself had difficulty in choosing a substitute for Sarojini Devi and you were anxious to omit her. You even went so far as to say that you did not believe in the tradition or convention of always having a woman and a certain number of Mussalmans on the cabinet. Therefore so far as the exclusion of [a] woman is concerned, I think it was your own unfettered discretion. No other member would have had the desire or the courage to break the convention. I must also tell you that in certain Congress circles the whole blame is being thrown on me, for I am reported to have excluded Mrs. Naidu and to have insisted on having no woman—a thing for which as I said to you I had not even the courage. I could not exclude even Mrs. N., not to mention a woman.

As to the other members too, I have been under the impression that you chose the members because it was the right thing to do for ² Vide, “A False Alarm”, 6-6-1936.

³ Vide footnote to “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”
⁴ Bhulabhai J. Desai
the cause. There was no question of behaya or hayadar when all were actuated by the noblest of motives, i.e., service of the cause according to their lights. I may say that your statement which your letter confirms has given much pain to Rajen Babu, C. R.\(^3\) and Vallabhbhai.\(^4\) They feel—and I agree with them—they have tried to act honourably and with perfect loyalty towards you as a colleague. Your statement makes you out to be the injured party. I wish you could see this viewpoint and correct the report if it is at all possible.

As to the third thing, I would love to have the thing cleared. I cannot guess what you want to say. But that must wait till we meet. I must not add to the strain you are already bearing.

About Dr. Ansari Memorial, I have given\(^1\) Asaf Ali my clear opinion that the memorial for the Doctor should await better times politically as it has for Papa\(^6\). Do you think otherwise?

The Kamala memorial is making slow progress.

Herewith the Princess’s letter containing a reference to Indu.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Bangalore City till 10th.

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1936. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

68. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

May 29, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

So you are in Segaon already. I do not mind. If you get there the comforts you need, it will be where your heart is. If you get the rains, of course there can be no building. Therefore let all labour that can be used be given to the walls and the roof. If these are ready and the walls dry, the rest can be finished even after the rains. But I am not going to worry, if in spite of all effort the building is not ready for

---

1. Shameless
2. A self-respecting person
3. C. Rajagopalachari
5. Vide “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 21-5-1936
6. Motilal Nehru, who had passed away on February 6, 1931

VOL. 69 : 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936 53
occupation by the time we return. No strain should be put upon your weak body.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]
The accompanying for Munnalal. I hope you got a basket of fruit sent by Janammal¹

From the original: C.W. 6342. Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9808

69. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

May 29, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I have your letter. Both of you² are passing through a severe test. We ought to learn to live in a village, come wind, come rain. The city-dwellers have their own risks to run and yet live there, and so do the villagers. At present we have ceased to belong to the town nor have we come to belong to the village and, hanging midway between the two, we are in a miserable state.

_Blessings to both from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8603. Also C.W. 6993. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

70. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

May 29, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

You must have got my reply to your telegram. The reason for replying by wire was that if for some reason Nimu should wish not to go she need not go. I am not enthusiastic about Nimu’s going to Bombay. Her mother would not very much need Nimu’s services as her sister is in Bombay and so are her sister’s husband and her brother. However, I permitted her to go thinking that since Ramdas has sent a telegram she might think it necessary to go. Show this to her if she is there.

¹ Cousin of S. Ambujammal
² The other being Balwantsinha
Dispose of the letters enclosed herewith. If no one from Mirabehn has turned up to receive the mail, make inquiries at Jamnalalji’s. And if no one from Jamnalalji’s is going, someone at Maganwadi should take it to her. Munnalal too is with Mirabehn. Letters should now be sent to Bangalore City.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10715

71. SELF-CONTROL AGAIN

Your recent articles\(^1\) on self-control have created quite a stir. Persons who are in sympathy with your views find it difficult to exercise self-control for any length of time. They argue that you are applying your own experience and practice to the whole mankind. And even you have admitted that you do not fulfil the definition of a complete brahmachari. For you yourself are not free from animal passion. And since you admit the necessity of limiting the number of children a married couple may have, the use of contraceptives is the only practical method open to the vast majority of mankind.

Thus writes a correspondent.

I have admitted my own limitations. In this matter of self-control v. contraceptives, they constitute my qualifications. For my limitations show quite clearly that I am like the majority of earth earthy and can have no pretensions to any extraordinary gifts. The motive for my self-control was also quite ordinary, viz., the desire to limit the progeny for the purpose of serving the country or humanity. Inability to support a large family should be a greater incentive than the very distant one of serving one’s country or humanity. That in spite of thirty-five years of successful (from the present standpoint) self-control, the animal in me still needs watching shows in an eminent degree that I am very much an ordinary mortal. I, therefore, do suggest that what has been possible for me is possible for any human being who would make the required effort.

My quarrel with the advocates of contraceptives lies in their taking it for granted that ordinary mortals cannot exercise self-control. Some of them even go so far as to say that even if they can,

\(^1\) Vide “For Contraceptives”, 4-4-1936; “For Women Reformers”, 2-5-1936; also “Birth-Control [-I], “Birth-Control-II” and “For the Young”, 28-3-1936 they ought not to do so. To them, no matter how eminent they may be in their own spheres, I say, in all humility but with utmost confidence, they are talking without experience of the possibilities of self-control. They have no right to limit the capacity of the human soul. In such instances the positive evidence of one person like me, if it is reliable, is not only of greater value but decisive. To dismiss my evidence as useless because I am popularly regarded as a ‘mahatma’ is not proper in a serious inquiry.

Far more weighty is the argument of a sister who says in effect:

We, the advocates of contraceptives, have come on the scene only recently. You self-controlled had the field all to yourselves all these long generations, maybe thousands of years. What have you to show to your credit? Has the world learnt the lesson of self-control? What have you done to stop the misery of over-burdened families? Have you heard the cry of wounded motherhood? Come, the field is even now open to you. We do not mind your advocacy of self-control. We may even wish you success, if perchance you save wives from the unwanted approaches of their husbands. But why should you seek to decry the methods which we employ and which take note of and make every allowance for common human weaknesses or habits and which when properly employed almost never fail to accomplish their purpose?

The taunt is dictated by the anguish of a sister filled with compassion for the families that are always in want because of the ever-increasing number of children. The appeal of human misery has been known to melt hearts of stone. How can it fail to affect high-souled sisters? But such appeals may easily lead one astray, if one is lifted off one’s feet and, like a drowning man, catches [at] any floating straw.

We are living in times when values are undergoing quick changes. We are not satisfied with slow results. We are not satisfied with the welfare merely of our own caste-fellows, not even of our own country. We feel or want to feel for the whole of humanity. All this is a tremendous gain in humanity’s march towards its goal.

But we won’t find the remedy for human ills by losing patience and by rejecting everything that is old because it is old. Our ancestors also dreamt, perhaps vaguely, the same dreams that fire us with zeal. The remedies they applied for similar ills, it is possible, are applicable even to the horizon that appears to have widened beyond expectations.

And my plea based on positive experience is that even as truth and ahimsa are not merely for the chosen few but for the whole of humanity to be practised in daily life, so exactly is self-control not merely for a few ‘mahatmas’ but for the whole of humanity. And even as because many people will be untruthful and violent, humanity may not lower its standard, so also though many, even the majority, may not respond to the message of self-control, we may not lower our standard.

A wise judge will not give a wrong decision in the face of a hard case. He will allow himself to appear to have hardened his heart because he knows that truest mercy lies in not making bad law.

We may not attribute the weaknesses of the perishable body or the flesh to the imperishable soul that resides in it. We have to regulate the body in the light of the laws that govern the soul. In my humble opinion, these laws are few and unchangeable, capable of being understood and followed by the whole of the human family. There would be differences of degree but not of kind in their application. If we have faith, we won’t lose it because it may take a million years before humanity realizes or makes the nearest or visible approach to its goal. In Jawaharlal’s language, let us have the correct ideology.

The sister’s challenge, however, remains to be answered. The “self-controllers” are not idle. They are carrying on their propaganda. If their method is different in kind from the method of contraceptives, so is and must be their propaganda. “Self-controllers” do not need clinics, they cannot advertise their cure for the simple reason that it is not an article to be sold or given. But their criticism of contraceptives and warning to the people against their use is part of their propaganda. The constructive side has always been there, but naturally in an unfelt and unseen manner. Advocacy of self-control has never been suspended. The most effective is that of example. The larger the number of honest persons who practise successful self-control, the more effective becomes the propaganda.

_Harijan_, 30-5-1936

72. NOTES

Prize Essay on Barter

Those who are interested in the question of barter in the place of exchange are reminded that the date for closing the competition is
CERTIFIED DEALERS, NOT CERTIFIED KHADI

The manager of the Burma Branch of the A. I. S. A. writes to the Secretary:

With reference to the article of Gandhiji under the caption “Uncertified Khadi” in Harijan of 11-4-1936, I beg to bring to your notice the fact that here in Burma also, spurious khadi is sold in large quantities and it is a common practice amongst the uncertified dealers to demonstrate to the buyers that they are stocking and selling khadi certified by A.I.S.A., by showing to them the words “Certified by A.I.S.A.” stamped on (some) cloth or the label bearing these words affixed on (some) cloth ....

We have therefore often and often to bring to the notice of the public and the credulous buyers the fact that khadi or cloth is never certified by A. I. S. A. but it is only the dealer or the party that is certified, (and the public are advised to buy only from A.I.S.A. or A. I. S. A. certified dealers or depots.) You will thus see that it is wrong for us to use the words “certified khadi” or “uncertified khadi” because it only strengthens the hands of uncertified dealers.

Now that the use of these words is made even by Gandhiji... I have not been able to check myself from bringing to your notice the mistake that we unconsciously commit by using the words “certified khadi” or “uncertified khadi”...

I gladly make amends. It is undoubtedly an error to speak of certified khadi. It will be difficult to certify pieces and it is futile to expect buyers to make sure of every article they purchase, whether it is genuine or not. The A.I.S.A. has always therefore followed the practice of certifying stores and dealers selling only genuine khadi in the cloth line. I hope that, whether in Burma or elsewhere, lovers of khadi will make themselves sure that they buy only from stores or dealers certified by the A.I.S.A.

Harijan, 30-5-1936

1 Not reproduced here; vide “Prize Essay on Barter System”, 26-8-1935
2 Only excerpts of the letter are reproduced here.
73. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

NANDI HILL,
May 30, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter of 28th.

Of course you will incur the expense of a latrine. It may be well to rig up a bathroom also side by side as we had in Sabarmati.

I would not want you to go to a seaside, if your hut on an apology for a hill serves the same purpose.

I hope we shall reach Wardha on 15th June, Monday, if not on 14th. My effort would be to reach there on a speaking day. That can only be Sunday. But if I cannot manage it, I shall be satisfied to reach there even on Monday.

You must have by now heard about Harilal's acceptance of Islam. If he had no selfish purpose behind, I should have nothing to say against the step. But I very much fear that there is no other motive behind this step. Let us see what happens now.

We descend to Bangalore City tomorrow.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6343. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9809

74. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

Saturday, May 30, 1936

. . . just read in the paper about Harilal's exploit. There could be no harm in his being converted to Islam with understanding and selfless motives. But he suffers from greed for wealth and sensual pleasures. At Nagpur he gave me to understand that he would do anything whatever to satisfy his greed. I shall be spared all the mental pain if I find my impression wrong and if he turns a new leaf. But here it is [like] adding meat-eating to drinking, and he had more or less assumed the freedom to eat meat. All the same none of you should be unhappy about it. What is destined must be. He had ceased to belong to any faith and now he has taken on the label of Islam. That does not make him a follower of the faith, though we should indeed feel satisfied if he truly practises in his life what is best in Islam. And if this is a mere show, it does not deserve to be lamented.

1 Omission as in the source

This instance should make us all alert and we should try to understand whatever religion we follow and bring credit to it.

Read this to Devdas and send an extract to Manilal.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

75. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

May 30, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter which arrived just today. I read it and promptly destroyed it. Hence I am writing this ‘out of my head’, i.e., on the basis of my recollection.

You are bound to have a burden to shoulder while there. God is there to take care of you. You are quite right in reducing your food when there is much work to attend to, but it would be good not to have to give up milk. Perhaps you will be getting more rest at Sitab Diyara.

I follow the point about Chandramukhi, Vidyavati. You have well escaped it. You must have learnt about Tarabehn's [death]. My opinion is that you should go to Banaras and learn what you can. After all, you do wish to read. You should, therefore, welcome this new knowledge. You will meet some new persons and it will please Jayaprakash. It is a different matter if you could convince him with your arguments, but the better thing is not to have much argument. It is all right if you could persuade him with a casual discussion. Only after the completion of the Banaras course shall we consider what is to be done.

1 Jayaprakash Narayan's brother's daughter
2 Addressee's sister
3 This sentence, being illegible in the source, is taken from Bapuna Patro-10: Shri Prabhavatibehne. The book however places the letter under May 20, which is a slip.
Don't you think you have now my opinion of the Banaras proposal fully? Give me an account of Chandrakanta's wedding, if you can. Where is Sumangal and how is he? Do you know anything about him? Tomorrow we leave for Bangalore City from where we proceed to Wardha on the 13th at the latest, reaching there on the 15th. I shall be living at Segaon, five miles from there. Perhaps I shall be visiting Wardha once a week. My hut is under construction.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

The newspapers report that Harilal has become a Muslim.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3471

76. LETTER TO PYARELAL

[May 30, 1936]

CHI. PYARELAL.

You must have received the telegram I sent you yesterday. What should I write to you? Such utter lack of faith! Where there is faith, even a wrongly written word would be rightly interpreted. I did not write anything wrong. You must know that I do not revise my letters. I have many letters to write. Sentences are written as they come from the pen. They should be interpreted only in the context of the relevant facts. How can “abandon what you are pursuing and come to me” be interpreted the way you have done? “What you are pursuing” is a reference not to Yoga but to your work in Calcutta or Orissa. I wrote that way because I felt that although that work is worth doing, it may be better in your interest to stay with me. But what is the remedy when you see such a contrary meaning in it? In my view that indicates the height of suspicion and lack of faith! But it is like ‘once bitten twice shy’. But in this case it is like being shy even though there is no bite at all.

It is possible that I may have the remedy even for such lack of faith. Have you understood the meaning of what I have said? There

1 Sumangal Prakash
2 From the reference to the telegram: vide the preceding item.
is no scope for wrong interpretation at least in this.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]
I shall be at Bangalore city after Mar 31.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

77. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

May 30, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. It is an excuse that hand-made paper is not available there. Do not people find similar pretexts for not wearing khadi? All these are signs of laziness and lack of earnestness.

I shall reach Wardha latest on the 17th or 18th. It is probable that I shall leave by the 14th or the 15th.

Prema’s address is: Sasvad, near Poona.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

78. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

[Before May 31, 1936]

CHI. NIMU,

I got your letter. Also Nanavati’s with it. I was very pleased to learn that you feel quite at home there and are having the education that you wanted. That Nanavati will give you a certificate is equally gratifying. Look after every thing carefully as if it was your own. Preserve cleanliness. Keep the kitchen perfectly neat. There will be little for you to do yourself but certainly you can keep an eye over everything. As a general rule, women are better at such jobs. This may not be true of all women but it can certainly be said of you. I will not

1 From the reference to Gandhiji’s proposed visit to Bangalore on May 31; Gandhiji left Nandidoorg for Bangalore on May 31, 1936; vide “Letter to Begum Mohammad Alam”, 9-1-1933 write to Nanavati today. Tell him so. . . I hope it will not be necessary to go to Ahmedabad. I wrote to you what Ramdas wrote to me about his illness. I have written to Sarita as well. I will leave for Bangalore on 31st May. If you address your letter to Bangalore City, it will do.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

79. DISCUSSION WITH C. V. RAMAN AND LADY RAMAN

[Before May 31, 1936]

The young men wanted Gandhiji to go to their Institute . . . . If he listened to them, he would have to listen to many other requests, he argued in reply. Some of them wanted his autograph and had also thought of presenting him with a purse for Harijans.

[GANDHJI:] I wish every one of you would want my autograph so as to swell that purse; but you must do all that where I am staying, but not drag me to the Institute.

The moment he was told that it was the Science Institute, he capitulated.

Of course, if it is the Science Institute you are talking of, I must make an exception in its favour, provided Sir C. V. Raman will show me some magic there.

He said to Lady Raman:

I have heard all kinds of good things about you from your husband, but I have to find out how far they are true. He told me the other day that whilst he is absorbed in his science, you find time for all kinds of humanitarian activities.

[LADY RAMAN:] Not as much as I should be doing. But I am certainly interested in khadi and Harijan welfare and social service and things of that kind. You know, Mahatmaji, I have been a spinner since many years ago. Some fifteen years ago I sent you a quantity of my own hand-spun yarn to be woven into cloth and the

---

1 Some words here are illegible in the source.
2 Who were accompanied by some students of the Science Institute
3 According to Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”, from which this and the following item are reproduced, these discussions took place at Nandi Hill where Gandhiji stayed till May 31, 1936.
late Maganlal Gandhi sent the cloth on to me. But my husband had no faith in the wheel then. He would put away my wheel, smash it and break it; but I am glad to tell you that in my own life-time the day has come when he no longer ridicules the wheel. He too believes in it.

I am very happy. Well, then, I want you to do a little work for me. Did you ever meet the late Kamala Nehru?

Once or twice, Mahatmaji. But I know the old Mrs. Nehru very well.

But you of course know what a good woman Kamala was. You know how she spent herself for the country. But what I prize most of her is not her political contribution but her great spiritual beauty which I should like every man and woman to know.

Yes, I know of her services and her moral beauty.

Then you must help me in collecting some money for the Memorial we are having for her.

And he explained to her the object of the Memorial.

“Oh yes, Mahatmaji,” she said, “don’t I know how you sat down in Calcutta after Deshbandhu Das’s death⁴ for a few months and collected as much as 8 lakhs? You can certainly collect a lot if you sat down like that here. I had the privilege of helping in that collection. I was in Calcutta then.

Oh yes, but I have not the time I had then at my disposal. But you can bring to bear all your influence and collect as much as you can.

Lady Raman heartily agreed. As this business was going on, in came . . . Sir C. V. Raman. She was talking in Hindi as he came in. “Now, is that Hindi any good?” he asked jocularly.

Certainly as good as your science.

“Oh yes” spoke... Sir C. V. Raman, “she has an amazing capacity for picking up languages. She knows Hindi, she knows Bengali better than Hindi.”

Of course, she has stayed in Calcutta for some years.

“Not necessarily for that reason. I, too, have stayed with her. But I know not a word. And now here she has picked up Kannada and talks it.” Sir Chandrashekhar Venkataraman then began wondering what language could be the language for the masses of India and seemed for a moment to be inclined to the belief that English had the chance.

Don't you think it will be a bad day for the many millions of India who know Hindi without learning it to attempt to know English?

⁴ On June 16, 1925.
And Sir Chandrashekhara [Venkataraman] immediately said he was glad that Hindi was making rapid strides in South India and added: “I know Hindi, too, Mahatma. I understand it very well. I learnt it from no less a teacher than Malaviyaji whose wonderful Hindi I had sometimes to hear for hours when I was in Kashi, and I could not help learning it. But I cannot speak Hindi. It is that conceit, you know, that I am full of as much as you.”

Harijan, 6-6-1936

80. DISCUSSION WITH DR. ERIKA ROSENTHAL

[Before May 31, 1936]

[DR. ROSENTHAL]: Could you teach me how to make them co-operate with us?

[GANDHIJI]: I am trying to learn it myself. You may have heard that I am now going to settle in a genuine village instead of living in a glorified village that Wardha is. Well, all that I have been saying to the people and my co-workers will be there put to the test. But if I have said that I am going to learn the art, there is no doubting the fact that the only way is to go in their midst and do the things oneself. Dumping educated patrons amongst them or even mere enlisting the help of monied men cannot go a long way. One must do as the late Mary Chesley did.

And with that he narrated the pathetic life-story of Tarabehn Chesley who met her death on her pilgrimage to Badri-Kedar.

“But,” said Dr. Rosenthal, “that was, if I may say so, a rash adventure and I should not imitate her.”

No, I do not want you to. I am talking of her spirit—the spirit in which she tried to identify herself with the poorest. There is Miss Mary Barr there who, if you please, is more sensible, who makes allowances for her own limitations and still has completely identified herself with the people. You must see for yourself the work she is doing.

I must. What I mean is that a foreigner cannot and must not adopt all the ways and habits of Indians. He should assimilate what is best in their life. Many an Indian

---

1 Daughter of Dr. Paul Deussen and wife of a doctor who, following the Nazi persecution of Jews had come of India. She was doing welfare work in Mysore.

2 Vide footnote 3, “Discussion with C. V. Raman and Lady Raman”, 31-5-1936

3 She had asked Gandhiji “the secret of teaching people to help themselves”.

VOL. 69: 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936 65
goes to Europe and picks up the superficial things of European life, much to his own damage. That is what I don't like.

What you say is cent per cent true. The foreigners ought not to attempt to adopt more than they naturally and easily can. Miss Barr has, I think, struck the true balance.

“Yes, one has to sit down in the midst like missionaries,” said Mr. De Souza who accompanied her.

“Yes,” said Dr. Rosenthal but energetically added, “but not with the desire to convert the people. The religious motive is what spoils most of their work. I hate conversion.”

No doubt you would, being the daughter of your father.

And yet, you will be rather surprised that I have come up against a sentence in my father's writings which I cannot understand. He says, in effect, that he could not understand why people were unable to accept a religion because of the outside temptations that were offered them.

It must be just the contrary. I should like to see that text. It cannot be as you say.

I shall send you the text.

Yes, do. And then if I am right and you are wrong you will have to admit that I am a better son of your father than you are his daughter.

Yes, I think, Mahatmaji, we have to contend against religion being mixed up too much with the daily life of our people.

No, if it is true religion we want more of it.

I do not want to exclude true religion. I shall give you an example. We have in one of our centres a very good Harijan nurse. One day a Brahmin came there with his son who was suffering from sores. The doctor with the help of the nurse washed the sores and dressed them and bandaged them. But lo and behold the consternation of the Brahmin when he found that it was a Harijan nurse who had dressed his boy's sores. He took him to the nearest river, bathed him and washed away the whole dressing and bandage!

That is no religion. It is rank superstition. You will come across instances of that kind, but they are getting fewer every day.

_Harijan, 6-6-1936_
81. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

BANGALORE CITY,
May 31, 1936

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

I have your postcard. It is surprising that you never are quite free from illness. However, watch the result of the serum injection. Why should Babu¹ write to me, now that she is a learned lady? However, I would not complain if she never wrote to me, so long as she does not fall ill or grow weak. I know complaining will not avail but I would not complain even to myself, if Babu made her body like copper.

How very seriously you take the Narandas episode! It is contrary to non-violence. Not to mind the pain inflicted whether by a friend or by a foe is one more form of non-violence. Such conduct is part and parcel of non-violence. Moreover, we must also think of the friend's point of view. Why should we be pained if he said or did something without ill will even though his words or act were improper? You could point out his error, if any, to Narandas in case you are convinced that he is not a man to take any step out of ill will. Be patient if he is unable to see his error, but never take offence. Even if you think that he had an evil motive, your heart should feel no shock because a malicious person deserves to be pitied. Should we take offence at the act of one who deserves pity? My purpose in writing this is that you may analyse the state of your mind, apply to it the touchstone of non-violence and, if you detect your error, rectify it, cleanse your heart and calm down.

Blessings to you all from

BAPU

[PS.]
We shall be here till the 12th.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 18

¹ Sharda, addressee's daughter
82. SPEECH AT CHICKBALLAPUR

May 31, 1936

Addressing the gathering in Hindi¹ Mahatmaji said as the doctor had asked him not to overexert himself he did not propose to make a long speech to them. He was very glad to address them that day which happened to be the birthday of H.H. the Maharaja of Mysore. Along with the people of Mysore, he joined in praying to God to give long life and prosperity to their beloved Ruler.

He prayed further that it may be given to H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore to approach more and more to Ramarajya in Mysore. In olden days, Ramarajya meant a government in which everyone in the country, including the lowest ryot, had peace and plenty.

Continuing, Mr. Gandhi thanked the people of Chickballapur for their cordial welcome. He and members of his party had all been very well cared for during their stay at Nandi Hills and they had all benefited greatly by their stay. The Government as well as the people had shown him great love and he and his party were duly thankful to them.²

The Hindu, 1-6-1936

83. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, CHINTAMANI

May 31, 1936

Addressing the gathering, Gandhiji said that medical advisers had prohibited him from raising his voice. Fortunately, it was one and the same thing to them whether he raised the voice or not. He wished he knew their own language. It would have been better perhaps if many of them could have followed his . . . Hindi or Hindustani. He still lived under the hope that before he died he would see educated India speaking the inter-provincial language—Hindi or Hindustani. He knew that there were some people who entertained, quite falsely, in these parts of India the notion that the movement of Hindi was conceived in order to supplant the provincial languages, but this belief proceeded from gross ignorance. This movement had contributed handsomely to further the working knowledge of Hindi or Hindustani. It had . . . intended to strengthen the vernacular provincial languages. But provincial languages would suffer stagnation so long as they could not extend help to other languages. The English language had a definite place and an international character. But it had certainly no place whatsoever in the heart of the masses of India.

¹ Ismail Sheriff translated Gandhiji's speech into Kannada.
² A purse of Rs. 100 was presented to Gandhiji. Accepting the purse he smilingly said: “It is too small. Only hundred rupees. Three times shame!”
³ An address on behalf of the Municipal Council was presented to Gandhiji. Over 2,000 people attended the meeting.

Proceeding, Gandhiji said that it was a great day for the people of the State as it was the birthday of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore. He would also join them in their prayers wishing the Almighty to give him long life and prosperity. (Cheers)

They all knew what views he held about the quality of the rule of Princes in India. Princes forgot their duty. In ancient days they carried their administration in a way which was called Ramarajya. In Ramarajya, there was no such thing as grinding poverty. People lived in absolute peace. There was no one high or low. He wished that that principle of Ramarajya was translated into practice in all parts of India.

Continuing, Mahatma Gandhi said that they had done well in presenting him with a little purse for the Harijan Fund. He called it little because it was possible for them to give him a better purse. Nothing that they could give for the Harijan cause was sufficient penance. There could be no peace for them until the Harijans were levelled up to the highest status in Hindu society. They must enjoy absolutely the same rights as other Hindus. While they were entitled to take credit for what little they had done for Harijans, he was glad that they admitted that much more remained to be done. He therefore hoped that they would redouble their efforts in that direction.

The Hindu, 1-6-1936

84. SPEECH AT KOLAR

May 31, 1936

Mahatmaji thanked the Municipal Council for the address and the townsmen for the purse. He would like to join the people of Kolar in wishing His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore many a return of the birthday which his subjects all over the State were celebrating with great joy. He was glad to hear that the Municipality was doing some work in the cause of the Harijans. He was also very much pleased to hear that the Municipality had many more things to do for the Harijans. Unless untouchability was blotted out, root and branch, the Hindu society would perish. Therefore, so long as untouchability remained in the land in one form or another, they could not say that they had done anything for the cause of the Harijans.

Proceeding, Mahatmaji congratulated the Mysore Government on the establishment of khadi centres and appealed to the people to take to khadi. He wished he could go to other parts of India and say that in Mysore State at least, the people wore khadi and used swadeshi articles.

The Hindu, 1-6-1936

1 Of Rs. 201
85. SPEECH AT LABOURERS’ MEETING

KOLAR GOLD FIELDS,

May 31, 1936

Gandhiji, speaking to a mass meeting of mine-labourers for a few minutes, said he had paid a hurried visit to the labour huts which seemed to him too small, too ill-lighted and too low-roofed to be fit for human habitation. If the workers only knew what they could do for themselves by combining their training and intelligence they would realize that they were no less proprietors of the mines than the managers and shareholders. Their labour was better gold than the metal they extracted with their labour from the bowels of the earth.¹

Gandhiji made an earnest appeal to the mining authorities to see to the betterment of the lot of coolies working in the mines, through whom the mining authorities derived their maximum benefit. Mahatmaji wanted that the mining officials should give the same facilities to the coolies working underground as they did to the highly paid officials.

Mahatmaji said that he could not congratulate the management on their efforts to house the poor. He understood that the labourers were charged about twelve annas to one rupee per hut. The rent should be much less.

He reminded the mine-owners that unless they voluntarily recognized the due status of labour and treated it as they treated themselves, time was not far distant when labour would dictate its own terms. He mentioned his theory of trust which he had propounded before the Ahmedabad mill-owners. He told the workers that whilst it was right and proper to assert their rights they ought to do their tasks as if the mines were their personal property. He also asked them to shun drink, gambling and other vices.

Mahatmaji observed that considering the cause for which the money was collected, this sum of Rs. 619 from the Kolar Gold Fields area was not much.²

_Harijan_, 13-6-1936, and _The Hindu_, 1-6-1936

¹ The following two paragraphs are from _The Hindu_.
² This sentence is from _The Hindu_.

70 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
86. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

NANDI HILLS,

Wednesday [May 1936]

CHI. JAMNADAS,

I got your letter.

For your throat, you must consult a good doctor. Consult Haribhai in Ahmedabad or Dr. Mehta or Dr. Rajab Ali in Bombay. Let me know what you propose to do.

Do not pay the rent to the old aunt herself but pay it to the owner of the house and obtain a receipt from him. Pay the rent which has been fixed. Keep the balance with you. Meet the owner of the house and inquire.

If the quantity decreases in spite of the students working . . .

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33820

---

1 The letter is written from Nandi Hills which Gandhiji visited twice—in 1927 and 1936. The 1927 material has no reference to the addressee whereas the 1936 material indicates that Gandhiji was in communication with the addressee and there is evidence of the addressee teaching at the Rajkot Rashtriya Shala; vide, “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 3-7-1935; “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 20-9-1935 and “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 25-9-1935. Hence, the letter was presumably written between May 10 and 31, 1936 when Gandhiji stayed at Nandi Hills.

2 The last sentence is illegible.
I was taken to the huts of the workers in the Kolar Gold-fields the other day. I could not help remarking that the huts were not fit for human habitation. With the mining Company declaring fat dividends of 30 to 40 per cent it seemed to be cruel to me that those who earned the profits for them were housed in those dismal hovels. The huts you have built here are certainly better, they are well ventilated and well situated. But there ought to be something like a minimum standard of a hut for unmarried people and of a hut for married couples and couples with children. We ought to realize that husband and wife must not share the same room with grown-up children. These cabins provide for no privacy. I cannot understand municipalities measuring out land for their poor employees by so many feet. One more room for each of these huts and a verandah is an absolute necessity. I am glad you propose to provide the same facilities for the Harijan employees, but pray bear this suggestion in mind when you build houses for them. There are, I am pained to say, still numerous municipalities which provide no housing facilities for their lowest paid employees. I do not know when we shall realize our duty to the most essential of our servants. If we do not do so ere long, the doom will soon settle on our society, as it must, if the society does not correct itself.

_Harijan, 11-7-1936_

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The colony, consisted of 250 huts, built by the Municipality for its employees.

2 From the reference to Kolar Gold-fields in the speech it is evident that this visit took place after May 31, 1936.
88. TELEGRAM TO THE SECRETARY, HINDU SABHA, DELHI

June 1, 1936

HINDU SABHA
CARE KALIA, DELHI

THANKS. IGNORE SUCH ABERRATIONS EXCEPT FOR PURGING RELIGION OF ALL IMPURITIES.

GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

89. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

BANGALORE CITY,
June 1, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter of 30th is before me. I am glad you are making steady progress. If you will always keep some strength in reserve, you will be proof against malaria.

Yes, we had a strenuous time yesterday. I was none the worse for it. Sardar picked a bad cold on the way and he won’t give it up even today. The boys and the girls remained behind to see the gold mines. They return today. The right hand has been giving excellent work. I am therefore giving it rest.

The Gujarati papers are full of Harilal’s exploits. If you will be in local Simla, there will have to be a local line to it too. And there will have to be variations in the two temperatures to attract me!

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6344. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9810

1 This was in reply to the addressee’s telegram saying: “Hindus shocked over Harilal’s conversion. Please guide how we can reclaim misguided brother.”

2 He had embraced Islam and changed his name to Abdulla.

3 The reference is to the addressee's cottage which was going to be built at Varoda, “an apology for a hill”, as Gandhiji had described it in a previous letter; vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 30-5-1936
90. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

June 1, 1936

DEAR SATIS BABU,

You give me a satisfactory account of your health. Not so Pyarelal. He says your heart is not sound and that you are constantly overstraining yourself. I wish you would recognize that such treatment of the body is a positive sin.

Are you dealing with the same famine that Profulla is dealing with? Or is this some other?

I see several difficulties about leaving something permanent after every exhibition. We never get a site where we can build anything solid. Then there must be that [local] desire which would pay for the thing and ensure its upkeep. We are having the next Congress in a bona-fide village. What would you suggest? How cheaply can we organize it? You know that the Lucknow [show] did after all become self-supporting.

We leave Bangalore City probably on 12th instant.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1630

91. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

June 1, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

We descended yesterday and work began. We toured the gold area the whole day, collected over Rs. 1,000 for Harijan cause and returned after 10 p.m. not much tired.

It is warm in Bangalore compared to Nandi Hill. And nothing pleases after the bracing air and isolation of Nandi Hill which for me has a charm which no other hill possesses. It was not without a sigh I left Nandi. Sardar is almost disconsolate. He won’t even go out for awalk. I had my usual hour. But Bangalore itself is undoubtedly pleasant at this time of the year. Only Nandi has spoiled us.

1 Not clear in the source
2 ibid

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
I am glad you are again able to spin.

Yes, your envelope is good. But you must not pay through the nose for them. It must be an idle hour’s job for someone who is in the household or given to those who would be thankful to earn an honest anna.

Why should you feel helpless? Why not be wholly satisfied with what you can get through during the day? You may be angry with yourself when you neglect anything. But what can you do when time runs against you?

You must have seen Harilal having adopted Islam! He must have sensation and he must have money. He has both. I am thinking of addressing a general letter to Mussalman friends.¹ I will see how it shapes itself. Poor Ba and poorer Kanti. Both were much upset.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

You are right about our unbusiness-like habits. Go for those who betray them.

SHRI RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
MANOR VILLE
SIMLA W.

From the original: C.W. 3729. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6885

92. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

June 1, 1936

CHI. NARAHARI,

I hope you have all returned, and in much better health. How did Manibehn fare at the place? Is she now quite well? Did Vanamala¹ and Mohan¹ gain in health? You used to take long walks, didn’t you?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9094

¹ Vide “Statement to the Press”, 2-6-1936
² Harilal’s son
³ Addressee’s wife
⁴ Addressee’s daughter
⁵ Addressee’s son
93. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

June 1, 1936

CHI. SHARMA,

Last night, on reaching Bangalore, I got your letter of May 12. By now you must be in Khurja. I hope you are keeping fit. I shall certainly reach Wardha on the 15th; you can come over then. In the mean while write to me at Bangalore City.

Blessings from
BAPU

94. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

BANGALORE,
June 2, 1936

The newspapers report that about a fortnight ago my eldest son Harilal, now nearing fifty years, accepted Islam and that on Friday last 29th May in the midst of a large congregation in the Jumma Musjid at Bombay, he was permitted to announce his acceptance amid great acclamation and that, after his speech was finished, he was besieged by his admirers who vied with one another to shake hands with him. If his acceptance was from the heart and free from any worldly considerations, I should have no quarrel. For I believe Islam to be as true a religion as my own.

But I have the gravest doubt about this acceptance being from the heart or free from selfish considerations. Everyone who knows my son Harilal, knows that he has been for years addicted to the drink evil and has been in the habit of visiting houses of ill-fame. For some years he has been living on the charity of friends who have helped him unstintingly. He is indebted to some Pathans from whom he had borrowed on heavy interest. Up to only recently he was in dread of his life from his Pathan creditors in Bombay. Now he is the hero of the hour in that city. He had a most devoted wife who always forgave his many sins including his unfaithfulness. He has three grown-up children, two daughters and one son, whom he ceased to support long ago.

1 The Statement, published in Harijan under the title “To My Numerous Muslim Friends”, was issued to the Press on June 2, 1936.

Not many weeks ago he wrote to the Press complaining against Hindus—not Hinduism—and threatening to go over to Christianity or Islam. The language of the letter showed quite clearly that he would go over to the highest bidder. That letter had the desired effect. Through the good offices of a Hindu councillor he got a job in Nagpur Municipality. And he came out with another letter to the Press recalling the first and declaring emphatic adherence to his ancestral faith.

But, as events have proved, his pecuniary ambition was not satisfied and in order to satisfy that ambition, he has embraced Islam. There are other facts which are known to me and which strengthen my inference.

When I was in Nagpur, in April last, he had come to see me and his mother and he told me how he was amused by the attentions that were being paid to him by the missionaries of rival faiths. God can work wonders. He has been known to have changed the stoniest hearts and turned sinners into saints, as it were, in a moment. Nothing will please me better than to find that during the Nagpur meeting and the Friday announcement he had repented of the past and had suddenly become a changed man having shed the drink habit and sexual lust.

But the Press reports give no such evidence. He still delights in sensation and in good living. If he had changed, he would have written to me to gladden my heart. All my children have had the greatest freedom of thought and action. They have been taught to regard all religions with the same respect that they paid to their own. Harilal knew that if he had told me that he had found the key to a right life and peace in Islam, I would have put no obstacle in his path. But no one of us, including his son now twenty-four years old and who is with me, knew anything about the event till we saw the announcement in the Press.

My views on Islam are well known to the Mussalmans who are reported to have enthused over my son’s profession. A brotherhood of Islam has telegraphed to me thus:

Expect like your son you truth-seeker to embrace Islam truest religion

---

1 For Gandhiji’s comment on it, vide "Letter to P. M. Naidu", 3-3-1936
I must confess that all this has hurt me. I sense no religious spirit behind this demonstration. I feel that those who are responsible for Harilal’s acceptance of Islam did not take the most ordinary precautions they ought to have in a case of this kind.

Harilal’s apostasy is no loss to Hinduism and his admission to Islam is a source of weakness to it if, as I apprehend, he remains the same wreck that he was before.

Surely conversion is a matter between man and his Maker who alone knows His creatures’ hearts. And conversion without a clean heart is, in my opinion, a denial of God and religion. Conversion without cleanness of heart can only be a matter for sorrow, not joy, to a godly person.

My object in addressing these lines to my numerous Muslim friends is to ask them to examine Harilal in the light of his immediate past and, if they find that his conversion is a soulless matter, to tell him so plainly and disown him and if they discover sincerity in him to see that he is protected against temptations so that his sincerity results in his becoming a godfearing member of society. Let them know that excessive indulgence has softened his brain and undermined his sense of right and wrong, truth and falsehood. I do not mind whether he is known as Abdulla or Harilal if, by adopting one name for the other, he becomes a true devotee of God which both the names mean.

Harijan, 6-6-1936

95. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

June 2, 1936

CHI. JAMNALAL,

I have your letter.

I shall be satisfied if you can get proper rest at Juhu; take exercise and observe the food restrictions. You certainly need the belt for your abdomen though you may also consult a doctor if you like.

We shall reach Wardha on the 15th. Madalasa' has scribbled a couple of lines perfunctorily. I would not mind her not writing if by going there she has gained weight and thrown her mental worries into the sea.

1 Addressee’s daughter

Where is Om’? I of course have Shriman’s Hindi work. I shall write something and send it. You must have read about Harilal.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2982

96. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

June 2, 1936

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

The enclosed letter is for your information. I have written to him that he should place his suggestion before you and before Bapa if the latter happens to go to Bharuch.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

We shall be here till the 13th.

This letter certainly does not mean that you are to accommodate him. I do not even know him. This responsibility is yours entirely. The reply to Jagjivandas amounts only to this.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4039

97. LETTER TO ABUL KALAM AZAD

[After June 2, 1936]

DEAR MAULANA SAHEB,

If you have seen the enclosed I would like your considered opinion on the points raised therein. Is such conversion valid in

1 Addressee’s daughter
3 This is not traceable.
4 Vide “Statement to the Press”, 2-6-1936

VOL. 69: 16 MAY, 1936-19 OCTOBER, 1936 79
Islam? Is the method adopted lawful? Is the way the thing is being advertised lawful or permissible? Will you publish your opinion or permit me to publish it?

Yours sincerely,
M.K. Gandhi

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

98. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
June 4, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

I congratulate you on not being nominated. If some of the things you have drop out of themselves, it would be a gain.

As to the Y. M. C. A., I would not hazard an opinion without having fuller knowledge.

I have myself chosen the ivory things for you today. They will be sent to you by the depot with invoice. If the things are ill-chosen or not to your taste, you must blame yourself for having commissioned for the choice an ignoramus. You will give me your opinion without reserve. Proper address has been given.

The weather in Bangalore, too, is cool enough.

I have addressed a fairly long letter to Muslim friends. I observe that the papers over here have been afraid to publish the full text. You shall have it if it is not published anywhere.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3576. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6385

99. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
June 5, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Yours of Ist has just arrived. “Empty bottles” are more needed in Segaon than perhaps in Maganwadi. But I am not less in Maganwadi for being in Segaon than when I was there without Segaon. But no extra exertion should be put forth to secure them.

1 To the Jullundur Municipality
Whatever you have to spare should come my way when you are coming. The razors are not used for knives. They are used for shaving. You shall see the specimen knives when you come. Yes, you will occupy a corner wherever I am both on your way to Waltair and return.

Self-praise is no praise. And when one always insists that she can never be coerced the hearer will take it with a grain or two of salt. A la J. you belong to a system that is based on coercion. Therefore the less you talk of not being coerced the better!!

The return of the khes to you is a double-distilled stupidity. Did you get the lace too? Poor Jerajani sent me a copy of the letter he sent to his people saying that the khes was to come to me and the lace to you. This is an idiotic circle. Are you responsible for the infection? Anyway do write a strong letter of protest to the sender. And do not spend money on sending it. You should bring it. You must obey.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3577. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6386

100. LETTER TO MIRZA ISMAIL

BANGALORE, June 5, 1936

DEAR SIR MIRZA,

Many thanks for your letter. It emboldens me to ask you, please put the following before His Highness.

I understand Harijans are not allowed even to attend the Durbars whenever they are held. I can find no warrant in Hindu religion for the bar. Unless there are valid and insuperable objections to the relief being granted, I do hope that the prohibition will be removed.

I would urge the necessity of opening all State temples to Harijans on the same terms as the savarna Hindus.

I am hoping we shall meet before we leave Bangalore which we expect to do the 12th inst.

With renewed thanks for the hospitality and attention we are receiving.

Yours sincerely,

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
101. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 5, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I was silent over your letter because I wanted to have a talk with Kanu, which I had at length yesterday. He does not wish to be away for the present at any rate. He particularly wishes to acquire from me whatever he can just by remaining by my side although he no doubt wants to learn a good deal of music from Panditji. Hence, I have assured him that he may rely without fear on my promise that I would gladly let him go any time he thinks he has had enough of me or wants to go to Panditji or anywhere else and obtain some special knowledge. I think this is enough for the present. Of course I shall be watching him.

He has a clean mind, but after all he is only an adolescent. Sometimes he suffers from melancholy but it is momentary and there is no particular reason for it. Didn’t we all at his age have a similar experience more or less?

As for the school, I am getting convinced more and more that we should start thinking in terms of closing it unless it becomes self-supporting. For, if it does not stand on its own it could be looked upon as being run to serve our needs. We however believe that knowledge should be imparted only to the seeker. Yes, of course we would go begging money for such students if we have any as might thirst for knowledge and yet be unable to pay their way. If we had such seekers, they would cheerfully carry out our word and within a year fully bear their financial burden. There are many institutions of the kind in America where immediately on admission the student begins to earn his board side by side with his studies. You may continue this discussion in your letter if you wish.

Kanu has gone through this letter and says that I am not correct in saying that he has a great desire to learn music under Panditji. If he is ordered to go to Ahmedabad, he would rather learn it at the Gandharva Vidyalaya under Shankarrao Vyas although it cannot be said that this is what he wishes. According to his present state of mind,

1 Narayan Moreshwar Khare
2 ‘Shankarlal’ in the source, which is obviously a slip.
his only wish is to be with me and do what I ask him to. He will be under my care and there is no reason to worry on his account. He has written a long letter to you.

I have written to the Press on the subject of Harilal, though nothing has been published yet. I do not say anything here, hoping it will be in print in due course.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]

The progress made there in spinning is excellent in my view. As for Sardar, I will speak to him. He should, however, make it a point to come if he can have an opportunity.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III. Also C.W. 8492. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

102. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

_June 5, 1936_

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter. I was pained to read about Bachubhai¹. You cannot leave him as long as he is bed-ridden. Tell Jugatram² to consult a homoeopath. Homoeopathy has not won my faith, but it helped Devdas and a medical specialist³ whom we met here is all praise for it. In any case it will do no harm, and may do some good.

I am returning Kusum’s letter. I should like it very much if she went to Bochasan. If Lilavati feels inclined to go, I would certainly encourage her to do so. I will have a talk with her when I return to Wardha on the 14th. Amtul Salaam is not at Wardha. She is still in Delhi and is not too eager to leave it. If she joins, she can of course give you much help and the work will benefit her, too. Write to her at Delhi; she reads Gujarati. Her address is: Harijan Nivas, Kingsway, Delhi.

---

¹ Addressee’s nephew
² An Ayurvedic physician of Bombay
³ Captain C. Oommen, the Medical Expert of the Grace Medical Mission
Do come and see me when I visit Gujarat. I will find some time for you.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6 G.S. Gangabehnne, pp. 90-1. Also C.W. 8831. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

103. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

June 5, 1936

CHI. SHARMA,

You must have received the letter I sent. I got your telegram here. You must have passed through Wardha at that time.

Amtul Salaam is in Delhi ailing. You should go there and try your newly acquired knowledge and then come over to Wardha when you can.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

We reach Wardha on the 14th.

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, facing p. 252

104. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

June 5, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I have your letter.

Shall I ever prevail with you? Why should you not come to me if you are in bad health? Why should you stick on there in spite of your bad health? I have of course written to Sharma who has now reached Khurja.¹

¹ Vide the preceding item.
I follow your point about the food there. For the present, however, I cannot think of any suggestion. I shall be much pained if you do not eat what you should.

Ask the resident boys to write to me once so that I can start writing to them. It would be helpful if I knew their names, their standard of knowledge, etc.

Where is Sukirti gone?
We shall be reaching Wardha on the 14th.

_Blessings from BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 617

---

105. LETTER TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

June 5, 1936

BHAI RAJENDRA PRASAD,

Pass on the enclosed letter to Pierre Ceresole1. I saw your letter. You must have received a copy of Jawaharlal’s letter. This time we shall have to further clarify many things.

I hope you are keeping well.

_Blessings from BAPU_

From a copy of the Hindi: C.W. 9875, Courtesy: Rajendra Prasad

---

106. THE LEPROSY PROBLEM

Wardha is a Tahsil having a fair share of lepers. Village workers often come in contact with them. What are the workers to do? May they freely mix with the lepers? How may they help these unfortunate people? Is there any cure? These are daily questions for serious village workers. I, therefore, approached Rev. Donald Miller, whom I have had the pleasure of knowing for years as a great worker among lepers in the Purulia Leper Asylum and otherwise, for simple

---

1 A Swiss pacifist, President of the International Voluntary Service, who had come to India for helping in the relief work in Bihar directions for village workers. He readily agreed and a series of letters to an imaginary village worker was the result. The first letter is given below.¹

_Harijan_, 6-6-1936

107. A FALSE ALARM

When I saw a newspaper report purporting to be a summary of what Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru had said on khadi during his recent visit to the Khadi Bhandar at Bombay, I refused to believe it. It seemed to me to be so thoroughly contrary to what I had understood to be his considered view about khadi. I, therefore, sent the cutting to the Pandit,² and the following is the reply he promptly sent me.

I attended and spoke at several dozen meetings in Bombay—I have lost count of them—and had no time to see reports. I spoke in Hindustani of course, and reporting was no easy matter—and then condensed reports are apt to be misleading. The report of what I said on khadi, however, was pointed out to me and was corrected the same day or the next day. What I had said was that for many reasons—economic, political, social—khadi was an important item in our present programme and must be encouraged, but that I did not think that it could finally solve our poverty problem, especially if the present social system continued. This system transferred the improvements and additional earnings of the peasant to the landlord. But I pointed out that this theoretical argument did not apply today. For this I said that although I was in favour of big industry, I believed that even with the increase of industrialization there would be considerable room for the development of cottage industries in India. At present, of course, they were even more important from various points of view.

This position may not satisfy the ‘whole-hoggers’. But it is vastly different from the misleading report. Such misreporting is the lot of public men, especially in India, where they have to speak in an Indian language which reporters do not always understand and which has invariably to be translated into English for the purpose of transmission by wire. The moral is, the public should wait for authentic ¹ Not reproduced here. This and the other four articles of the series first appeared in _Harijan_ and later in the form of a booklet, The Leprosy Problem.

² Vide, "Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru", 21-5-1936 information before believing the so called pronouncements of leaders in important matters.

Form the letters I have received I see that the report created great uneasiness among some khadi workers. To them I should like to give a warning. It is fortunate that, for all practical purposes, what Pandit Jawaharlal actually says is satisfactory. He is too noble to say anything to please anybody if he does not believe in it. The quotation from his letter, therefore, derives added weight from the fact that the helmsman of the Congress holds views favourable to khadi. But khadi workers should know that there are many important public men outside the Congress who decry khadi and would never touch it. They should know too that even in the Congress ranks there are some who do not believe in khadi, who are never tired of ridiculing it, and use it merely as a measure of discipline till they succeed in banishing it from the Congress programme. Khadi has progressed in spite of these obstacles. No doubt it would have made greater progress if we had not such opposition to contend against. It is a matter of very great consolation that Pandit Jawaharlal believes in khadi as he does. But what should khadi workers do if he, on further study, finds it necessary to declare himself against it? I hope that after sixteen years of experience of khadi and its possibilities, we have a sufficient number of confirmed believers whose faith in it is based on their own knowledge of its working. If it is still a derived faith, the prophecy of a great journalist will undoubtedly come true that on my death khadi will also die and that the wheels that would be broken after the natural event would be sufficient for full cremation of the body.

This nervousness over the false alarm is a portent if it is a token of weak faith of khadi workers. I suggest to them that they examine their own position and if they have doubts about the great economic importance of khadi, let them revise their attitude. In order to help them to carry on the examination, I propose, if at all possible, in the next issue, to put my view of the importance of khadi for India from several points of view.

_Harijan, 6-6-1936_

---

1 Vide “Is Khadi Economically Sound?”, 20-6-1936.
I tender my congratulations to the Maharashtra Provincial Congress Committee on their decision to hold the next Congress Session at Khirdi, a village near Faizpur—another village in East Khandesh. If the plans are properly laid and preparations undertaken in advance, the Reception Committee will be able to put up a brave show at a comparatively less cost than is usually incurred at these annual national gatherings. The conditions are obvious. The Committee must not aim at reproducing a city in the village. That would be doing violence to the whole conception. They should aim at giving the city people who, let us hope, will gather in their thousands, such hospitality as a model village should be able to supply. In other words, we should see in December a miniature edition of village India in Khirdi. By wise planning the organizers will find that there is practically nothing that a model village cannot supply in the way of hygienic comforts, proper food, proper sanitation, and in case of sickness proper medical aid. These are not to be had today in the generality of villages. Therefore, I have used the expression ‘model village’. A model village should lack nothing that is required for healthy living. But everything in a village has to conform to the village scale which need never be shoddy and has to be, at the same time, subdued. For lighting, I would suggest electric light, though it may be a long time before our villages are able to have electricity. The whole show should be an object lesson both for villagers and townsfolk. The chief attraction of the Congress will necessarily be the exhibition. The Lucknow Exhibition was undoubtedly a success when one realizes that it was the first effort of its kind. The coming exhibition should be a much greater success and yet, so far as I can see, need not cost as much as the Lucknow Exhibition did. In order that it may become a success, artists, engineers and like professional men will have to volunteer their services free of charge on a larger scale than heretofore. And they will have to approach what to me is a sacred task with the village mentality.

_Harijan_, 6-6-1936
Unfortunately it has been found that owing to the increased scale of wages that are being offered to hand-spinners on behalf of the A.I.S.A. and a consequent slight rise in the price of a certain style of khadi, several uncertified dealers are selling khadi as if it was certified by the A. I. S. A. and some of them do not even hesitate to defend their unpatriotic and unhumanitarian action on the ground that the A. I. S. A. is not a registered body. In order to ascertain the true legal position instead of relying on his own ancient knowledge of law, Shri Rajagopalachari referred to an eminent lawyer for opinion and this is his decisive opinion:

I have no doubt that the Tirupur merchant has been wrongly advised as to the law. The law protects unregistered bodies as much as registered bodies in this respect. To use an unregistered name pretending to be somebody that he is not is as much a deceit of the public as it would be if the name had been registered. Registration under a statute may have statutory consequences and protections; but in the protection of the public from deceit there is no distinction between registered and unregistered names. It is absurd prima facie that because a name is not registered, he can assume the same name and pass off goods as certified by A. I. S. A. An action will lie for injunction and damages. Injunction you will have. Damages will depend on proof that persons purchased believing the stuff had been made or certified by the A. I. S. A.

If formal opinion with authorities is required I shall get it drawn for you at an early date.

(Sd.) T. R. V. SASTRI

Ooty, 23rd May, ‘36

The eminent lawyer is no other than the ex-Advocate-General of Madras, Shri T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar. I hope that in view of this opinion those dealers who are carrying on unauthorized sales of khadi as if they were authorized by the A. I. S. A. will desist from the practice which has been described as fraudulent. If it becomes necessary, opposed though I am to resort to law-courts, I would not hesitate in the interest of poor dumb spinners to advise legal steps being taken against those who knowingly injure their poor sisters.

Harijan, 6-6-1936

1 Vide “Uncertified Khadi”, 11-4-1936
110. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

June [6], 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. Serve Mirabehn as much as you can. It would have been better if you had been to see Premabehn. Do not undertake anything beyond your capacity. Do not talk too much. Do nothing but bury yourself in work. Do not talk unless it is necessary. I expect you have brought to Segaon only the necessary things.

I hope you are in good health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9343. Also C. W. 6618. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

111. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 6, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have your three letters received by the same post.

Devkapas seed can be had from Bengal and other places. I am writing to Satis Babu.

I do not like the idea of bring [ing] the commode and pot or the desk from Wardha. For commode there should [be] a stool with the middle open and a half tin or a bucket or some such thing. For pot we may use a bottle or keep a village metal pot. For desk something quite cheap and serviceable made in Segaon. There need be no hurry about these things. If you have not quite understood what I want, you may wait till I return. Wooden bedstead may be brought, lota also. Stool should be rigged up there. Another cow will be necessary. Consult Chhotelal about it.

Did I tell you the date of departure is not 13 but 12. We reach therefore on 14th, Sunday, D. V.

1 Illegible in the source. This letter appears to be the one mentioned in the letter to Mirabehn dated June 6, 1936, the following item.

2 A Variety of cotton
You may expect Lilavati by the time this reaches you. The accompanying is for her.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 6345. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G. N. 9811

112. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

BANGALORE CITY,
June 6, 1936

CHI. AMBUJAM.¹

Your letter.

I am glad Padma is proving so good and satisfactory. You must not judge sons from what you can say of Kichi². Poor boy! His has been an unfortunate development. Let us hope Padma’s goodness well infect Kichi and make him also good.

I am glad you went to Esther. If you found her glad to receive your visit, I would like you to go to her as often as you conveniently can.

I was sorry to hear about Father’s continued illness. How nice it would be if he would take nature cure. Mention this to him on my behalf. He ought to pull through and get perfectly well through proper dieting and water and sun treatment.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Bangalore City till 12th.

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library.

113. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

June 6, 1936

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter of the 29th. You must have got my letter repeating the reply I gave earlier. You did well in returning to milk.

¹ Daughter of S. Srinivasa Iyenagar. This is written in Hindi.
² Addressee’s son
Take 4 lb. and see. Do you get any fruit there, and do you find time for walks? You seem to have been deeply immersed in serving the family. Never give up your fixed course of prayers, etc. Teach spinning [to the people there]. There are likely to be many singers of the Ramayana there. Learn from them the tune in which to recite the Ramayana. You can find the time once you have a settled programme. For you have already learnt how to utilize even a short interval of five minutes. You must be getting Harijanbandhu if not anything else. Write regularly to Jayaprakash whether you hear from him or not.

You should find a carding-bow.

Write to Mathuradas¹ at Madhubani, P. O. Champaran, so that he may send you what you need.

You should never lose your inner peace in spite of the many outer worries.

I write nothing about Harilal here as I have said much through the Press. Write to Amtul Salaam at Delhi; her address: Harijan Nivas, Kingsway, Delhi.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

At Bangalore City till the 12th and at Wardha on the 14th.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3472

114. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[After June 6, 1936]

CHI. MIRA.

Yours of 3rd just to hand. Yes, Sejila should have a shed by himself, so as to leave your verandah free. On second thoughts I think it will be wise to bring the commode and the pot from Maganwadi for European visitors. Therefore this is in addition to the plan suggested by me.

¹ Mathuradas Asar, a khadi expert of Sabarmati Ashram who had gone to work in Bihar
² From the contents it is evident that this was written after the letter to the addressee dated June 6, 1936; “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 11-10-1935
If you get hold of peacocks, I do not mind. But I know nothing of their habits.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 6346. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G. N. 9812

115. LETTER TO KHWAJA ABDUL MAJID

AS AT WARDHA,
June 7, 1936

Wonderful! I was about to write to you today about another matter when I got your welcome letter. To hear from you is like meeting a long lost friend or brother whichever you will; have both.

In my diconsolateness over Ansari’s death I thought of you, Shuaib and Zakir Husain. I decided to write a long letter to Z.¹ I am daily awaiting his reply.

Asaf Ali wrote to me about some memorial. I told him this was not an opportune time politically for a national memorial to so big a man. I gave the same opinion over Motilalji’s death. I have in mind not the financial stringency but the political condition. If people spontaneously send money and if we get a large enough sum, we might make some use as a memorial by personal admirers and obligers (cannot find the right word just now). I hold on to the cheque² till I hear from you or till we meet.

Your exposition of politics is deeply interesting. “Et tu, Brute!” Do not take this literally in its application. How have the mighty fallen? Do you remember your remark at the Ansari Hotel? But I do not blame you. I have nothing but praise for your downright honesty. Yes, we must meet. Do come to Wardha any day after 16th June. You know that at the end of the month the whole Working Committee will be there. But I know you want to discuss the thing first with me. Only therefore the earlier you come the better.

Now for what I was to write about. If you have not seen my public letter about my eldest son’s so-called conversion, I enclose a cutting herewith. Read it and let me know your views. Is such a conversion permissible and right? Is all this advertisement the poor wreck and rake is receiving a proper thing? I have no anger against Harilal. He is hardly responsible for his acts. During the past three months he has gone through many changes. You must know that it is not loafers who are responsible for what has happened and is happening. Those who are accepted as responsible Muslims in society are doing all this. Do study this phenomenon, interest yourself in it for the sake of religion and this unhappy land. If you put a different construction on the event, you will not hesitate to tell me so frankly.

¹ Vide “Letter to Zakir Husain”, 25-5-1936
² The addressee had sent a cheque for Rs. 1, 000 for a memorial to Ansari.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

116. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

June 7, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Do not be alarmed at the reduced prices of the articles sent to you. I asked for it because you were to sell them as swadeshi propaganda and might have to lose on them, too, if you are unable to dispose of them. Let not your princely pride be wounded. You should charge the full selling price plus postage, etc. No idiocy allowed in business matters. For these things you are no rajkumari but a simple sevika and trustee. I have a copy of the letter and bill sent to you.

Hope you are quite restored.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3578. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6387

117. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

June 7, 1936

CHI. MARY.

I return the letter from Hardwar and retain the other papers sent by you.

Sumitra had left for Nagpur when your letter and mine were received at the Gurukul. I now send them all to you. If Gopal is there, he might know her address.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
As to Tara’s¹ other papers and things, they should be left untouched till we know what can be done with the will.² We have first to trace her relatives who may be interested in her property. The bicycle can certainly be used by Gopal. Similarly you may use the sita [r].

I fear Dr. Nur Jahan has to be asked to keep her English things with her for the time being. We reach Wardha [on 14th]¹

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6062 Also C.W. 3392. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

118. LETTER TO GOVIND V. GURJALE

June 7, 1936

MY DEAR GOVINDRAO,

You have given me interesting bits about your activities. May they prosper. Never depart from the golden rule of cutting your cloak according to your cloth. No debts to be incurred.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Bangalore City till 12th.

From a photostat: G.N. 1400

119. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

June 7, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I have your letter. I am sorry to learn about the sudden death of Prakashmani. Please convey my condolences to his relatives there if any.

Where has Sukirti gone?

¹ Mary Chesley, who died of pneumonia in May 1936, on her way to Badri-Kedar; vide “In Memoriam”, 23-5-1936
² Vide “Letter to F. Mary Barr”, 24-5-1936
³ Illegible in the source.
Nothing can be better if looking after the children brings you back to health. How does Rukmini behave now? Do you visit Dr. Ansari’s?

Ask Sharma to come there; I have written to him.

Paparamma and Saraswati are arriving here tomorrow morning. There is no question of Kanti going to Harilal now. He has calmed down. You must have read what I have written about Harilal.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 616

120. LETTER TO JANKIE AMMAL NAI DOO

[AS AT] WARDHA,

June 8, 1936

MY DEAR JANKIE,

I was delighted to have your letter. It is good Father is coming to India. I wish you too had come. Of course after the rich living of Natal, you may not appreciate the simple life here. And you will be horrified to see the appalling poverty of the villages. That experience would chasten you. However, Father will tell you on his return what India is like.

Yes, all the Phoenixites are well.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Address: M. K. Gandhi
Wardha
India

SHRI JANKIE AMMAL NAO DOO 37 MALLINSON RD., SYDENHAM
DURBAN, NATAL

From a photostat: G.N. 10463

1 Vide “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 5-6-1936
2 G. Ramachandran’s sister.
3 G. Ramachandran’s sisters’ daughter.
4 This is in Tamil script.
121. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

June 8, 1936

CHI. MARY,

I am in no hurry. Do finish your slivers and other urgent work before tackling Tara’s box. I wrote1 yesterday or the day before returning your letter to Sumitrabehn.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6063. Also C.W. 3393. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

122. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

BANGALORE,

June 8, 1936

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I have the letters from you both. You must have read of Harilal’s exploit. I am not sending you a separate copy of my article as it has appeared in several newspapers. Nor have I anything to add as I have said enough in my article. Ba has been unhappy but bears it very patiently. Kanti is calm. I should have no worry or objection if he reforms himself now.

We shall reach Wardha on the 14th. Tari is still not cured of her ailment, but she is bound to get well if she follows my treatment with patience. All the youngsters here, both boys and girls, are at present busy sight-seeing in this State.

Lakshmi has been keeping indifferent health. She fell ill at Bombay just when Devdas was about to leave for this place.

Ramdas is doing his agency business satisfactorily.

I have not the least grudge against Sushila’s going to live in the city. One has to practise self-denial for the children’s sake. Without this the latter cannot advance in life. It is just proper that both [the children] are with you. I shall be satisfied if you do not Anglicize them, but bring them up under the influence of dharma. Do not let them forget their mother tongue and also teach them Hindi. I should like them to learn Tamil since you are living there. None of your acts

1 Vide “Letter to F. Barr”, 7-6-1936 should encourage in them an infatuation for English. They will acquire a working knowledge of the language. However, if one acquires knowledge through one’s mother tongue, one can better understand, digest and utilize it in one’s life. But then this is what I think is wise. It is for you to adopt the course that you both find agreeable. There is no question of doing anything merely to please me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4852

123. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

BANGALORE,
June 9, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your exploit in going with drawing-room slippers and missing your way and walking till you were exhausted was worthy of an idiot. You have more than earned the title!

This letter will probably be the last from Bangalore. We leave here on 12th, reaching Wardha 14th.

Yes, Mira is quite well working as hard as she can at my hut. Vidya hi seva is quite good. But it is better to have Seva hi Vidya2. Why not Vidya Sevayai, meaning Knowledge for Service? I suppose you will have it somewhat like this:

This as artistically drawn as is possible to do. But you know what I mean.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3730. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6886

1 “Knowledge itself is service”; the motto was needed for the crest of the Lady Irwin College in Delhi.

2 “Service itself is knowledge.”
124. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 9, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

This will be perhaps my last letter from here. We hope to be in Wardha on 14th inst.

Cartmen seem to be having a fine time there. 50 carts working at a single job simultaneously must be a record for Segaon. I hope they were all local. I expect to see you hale and hearty.

Evidently Balwantsinha and Munnalal were a godsend for you. When I felt like accepting Munnalal’s offer and suggested to Balwantsinha to seek your unbroken contact, I had no notion you would find them almost indispensable. Anyway, their being with you during your illness and convalescence was a source of great comfort to me.

The Madras basket contained apples. Did you have them? They were all from Janammal.

Love.

BAPU

From the Original: C.W. 6347. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9813

125. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 9, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

You have, I believe, my letter about Kanu. They have all been very busy sight-seeing. We hear from them from time to time. The other day they paid us a visit also. Here is another letter from Prema. You got the earlier too, I hope.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8493. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 5-6-1936
126. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

June 9, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

We expect to reach there on the 14th morning. Attend to the enclosed letters. I hope you are in good health and Bhansali is practising his penance within limits. Of course I remember others, too, but don’t write about them to save time.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10716

127. TELEGRAM TO RAIHANA TYABJI

BANGALORE,
June 10, 1936

ONE OF MY STAUNCHEST FRIENDS GONE.2 MOTHER AND YOU WILL FIND ME EQUAL SHARER IN LOSS. FATHER WAS TRULY GRAND OLD MAN OF GUJARAT AND FAITHFUL SERVANT OF NATION WHO KNEW NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN HINDU AND MUSLIM. SARDAR AND OTHERS ALL JOIN ME.

The Bombay Chronicle, 11-6-1936

128. MESSAGE TO MANJULA M. MEHTA

June 10, 1936

Return with greater purity, kindness, health and self-restraint. I have great expectations of you both. May you prove Doctor’s1 true heirs.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 1602

1 An almost identical telegram was sent to Mohammed Habib, son-in-law of Abbas Tyabji.
2 Addressee’s father Abbas Tyabji died on June 9, 1936.
1 Addressee’s father-in-law, Dr. Pranjivan Mehta
129. INTERVIEW TO ADI-KARNATAKA
SANGH

June 10, 1936

Mahatma Gandhi stated that he was in full agreement with the view that no work for the uplift of Harijans could be carried on satisfactorily unless it had their cooperation. No one had emphasized more than he the fact that in the service that they had undertaken, to remove all social and other disabilities in the case of Harijans, they were only discharging a debt of obligation, as they had committed the sin which had doomed the persons to social and other hardships.1

He pointed out that the Kengeri Gurukul did not belong to the Harijan Sevak Sangh; and that far from the Kengeri Gurukul excluding Harijans, it expressly served Harijans and took in Harijans whenever they were forthcoming.

The next important thing was that the Conference was one of savarna Hindu workers who were going to assemble in order to compare notes, discuss their difficulties, find out their own weaknesses and to organize their work better. The Conference was one of hereditary sinners who wanted to find out ways and means of repaying the debt they owed to Harijans. How were the Harijans going to help in this Conference? They were certainly welcome to attend it, but how would they help in the deliberations?

D’SOUZA: You may call yourselves debtors but the Harijans cannot help suspecting a superiority complex in all that you do, and you will lend yourselves to the suspicion that instead of devising means to help them you are devising new means to keep them down.

GANDHIJI: If there is suspicion for which there is no ground, I do not mind the suspicion. The savarnas’ action if it is honest will dispel it. I do not blame the Harijans because they have known nothing better.

A HARIJAN: There is no suspicion. We simply wanted to narrate our hardships.

GANDHIJI: Need you narrate them to me? Don’t I know them?

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. P.G. D’Souza, leader of the deputation, among other things pointed out that the Harijan Sevak Sangh took no account of work being done by Harijans who wanted H.S.S. Funds to be made available to them, that if Hindu opposition persisted the Missionaries were bound to accentuate their antagonism, that the Harijans were not being admitted in the Gurukul Ashram at Kengeri, that the Harijan Workers’ Conference about to be held was going to be a purely non-Harijan affair and that it was no use concentrating on temple-entry when Harijans’ economic and social conditions badly needed improvement.
Don’t I proclaim from the house-tops that you have to rise all along the line? No; I want you to understand that it is a conference of sincere sinners. You are all welcome of course, but you will find that the complexion of the meeting is different from what you expect it to be. We are all debtors; we know that we can pay nothing more than small instalments, and that our creditors may be so enraged as to fling those instalments in our faces and kick us out. But we have to tolerate even this if such is to be our lot. For our goal is to pay the principal with interest. When Dr. Ambedkar abuses us, I say that it serves us right. Then sometimes the creditor becomes so great that he does not care for the debt of the debtors. We, however, have to forget everything else and concentrate on repaying the debt. The Shastras say that when the cup of a people’s iniquity is full, they perish. Hinduism is a dying cult if it will not purge itself of untouchability and will perish, Ambedkar or no Ambedkar. If our attempt is sincere, I assume you will see no superiority complex among the reformers. I admit that as I see Hinduism, darkness envelops many savarnas. They call irreligion religion. Now it is out of this darkness that a very imperfect class of sinners are trying to come out. As regards the condition of some Harijans, I am reminding the savarnas day in and day out that it is they the savarnas who are responsible for the filthy habits of some of the Harijans. I tell them it is wrong of them to insist on Harijans getting clean before they receive the same status as other Hindus. We have to admit them first and then make them clean. As regards your disabilities, housing conditions, etc., I am pleading with the State. Pray be patient. We may not be able to deliver the goods as quickly as you want us to, but do not question our motives.

D’SOUZA: We thank you for having given us the assurance you have given. We want you to extend to the Harijans the hand of fellowship. A sinner should not behave as though in expressing penitence he was doing some service to God. I want you to get the Harijans direct representation in the Mysore Assembly in proportion to their population. They should be recognized as having attained manhood.

GANDHIJI: For that I must make a suggestion to you. You must displace the present Maharajah and have me as such for a week!

Harijan, 27-6-1936, and The Hindu, 11-6-1936
130. SPEECH AT HARIJAN WORKERS’ CONFERENCE, KENGERI

June 10, 1936

Whoever conceived the idea of this Conference gave vent to a happy idea and we should be able to make good use of this meeting. Though there are at this Conference representatives invited from all parts of South India, there are others here, too, and instead of confining myself only to the actual work of the delegates, I will make some general observations.

These general observations I shall make for the benefit of the savarna Hindus. Let them understand that this movement for the removal of untouchability is different from other current movements in India. So far as I am concerned, and so far as the Harijan Sevak Sangh is concerned, the anti-untouchability movement is not a political movement. Nor is it intended purely for the economic amelioration of the Harijans nor yet for their social regeneration. But this does not mean that we do not aim at the Harijans’ social, economic or political advancement. We want all these improvements. If we are honest about our work, progress in these directions is bound to follow from our efforts.

But our goal is quite different from the things I have mentioned just now. It is this: that untouchability is a blot upon Hinduism and must be removed at any cost. Untouchability is a poison which, if we do not get rid of it in time, will destroy Hinduism.

I know that those of you who are outside the ranks of workers and delegates—nay, even some of the workers and delegates—do not realize the real significance of what I am saying. But whether you realize the significance or not, I must continue to express the views which I hold and hold very strongly.

I can see in the continuance of untouchability slow destruction overtaking Hinduism now, and I promise that if you study the thing itself as I am doing, you will observe that the slow disintegration which Hinduism is going through, may become so rapid as to make it impossible for the workers to overcome it.

1 This was published in Harijan under the title “The Inwardness of Harijan Movement.”
2 From The Hindu
And why do I say that untouchability is a curse, a blot and a powerful poison that will destroy Hinduism? It is repugnant to our sense of humanity to consider a single human being as untouchable by birth. If you were to examine the scriptures of the world and the conduct of peoples other than Hindus, you would not find any parallel to the untouchability I have brought to your attention just now. I can well understand a person being untouchable whilst he is performing a task which he himself would feel makes him untouchable. For instance, a nurse, who is nursing a patient who is helpless and bleeding and soiling his clothes and suffering from a disease giving out from his body a foul smell, such a nurse whilst she is nursing such a patient is untouchable. But when she has washed herself, she becomes as touchable as ourselves. Not only that. She is not only just as fit to move in society as any of us, but she is also adorable for the profession which she follows. She is worthy of our respect and, so long as we have ranks in our society, she must occupy a very high place amongst us.

Now look at the other side of the picture. Take, for instance, Dr. Ambedkar. He is pronounced as belonging to the Depressed Classes and as being untouchable. Intellectually he is superior to thousands of intelligent and educated caste Hindus. His personal cleanliness is as high as that of any of us. Today he is an eminent lecturer in Law. Tomorrow you may find him a Judge of the High Court. In other words, there is no position in the Government of this country to which he may not aspire and rise, and to which an orthodox Brahmin can rise. But that orthodox Brahmin will be defiled by the touch of Dr. Ambedkar and that because of his unpardonable sin that he was born a Mahar (Untouchable)!

If we had not been habituated to think that untouchability by birth is an integral part of Hinduism, we would not conduct ourselves towards our fellow human beings as many of us conduct ourselves even today.

I know that I have told you nothing new in this my talk to you today. I know I have said this same thing in a much more burning language than I have done today. Yet what I say is not, and will not be, superfluous so long as this simple fact of the need for the removal of untouchability does not affect your understanding or conduct.

Untouchability is a phenomenon which is peculiar to Hinduism only and it has got no warrant either in reason or in the Shastras, and what little I have studied of the Shastras and what I have been told by people who have made a deeper study of them shows that there is no warrant for untouchability by birth in Hinduism. I have not the time now to go into the Shastric precepts. Nor is it necessary at this time of the day to give you Shastric proofs for my statement. But what is necessary is that if you are satisfied that untouchability is a blot on Hinduism and that there is a danger of its destroying Hinduism, you must set about removing it.

What will you do to remove it? If all of you will say that you have done your duty by declaring that untouchability is a blot on Hinduism, it will be a mockery. It will not be enough even if you in a flush of enthusiasm go to a Harijan and touch him and embrace him, and then forget all about him. It will not do even if you go to the Harijan quarters every day and make it a point to touch a number of Harijans as a token of your conviction.

What is required of you is that you should regulate your day-to-day conduct in such a manner that you make it absolutely evident to the Harijans whom you come across that a better day has dawned for them all.

You will begin by taking the Harijans along with you to the temple if you are in the habit of going to a temple. But if you discover that you will not be allowed into the temple along with your Harijan companions, then if you have the living belief that I have that untouchability is wrong, you will shun that temple as you shun a scorpion or fire. You will then believe with me that such a temple is not inhabited by God. I will take by way of illustration the greatest temple known all over the world, viz., Kashi Vishwanath in Banaras. The Lord who is supposed to reside there is known as the Lord of the Universe. And yet in the very name of that Vishwanath the savarna Hindus have today the impudence to say to the Harijans: ‘You shall not come to this temple’!

I claim to be as good a Hindu as any orthodox Hindu. I have endeavoured to enforce all precepts of Hinduism in my own life to the best of my ability. I admit that my ability is small. But that does not affect my attitude to and love for Hinduism. Yet, in spite of all that love for Hinduism, with a due sense of my own responsibility I am here to tell you that so long as the doors of the Banaras temple are closed against a single Harijan, Kashi Vishwanath does not reside in that temple and I could not possibly approach that temple with a belief in its sanctity or in the faith that by worshipping there I should be purified of my sins. I can have no sense of piety in respect of such a temple. And what is true of Kashi Vishwanath is true of every other temple in India which bars its doors to Harijans. It applies of course to all such temples in South India, including the Guruvayur temple.

Thank God, the gates of the Guruvayur temple are closed to me. But even supposing the trustees of that temple, or whoever is in authority there, gave me permission to enter that temple, I could not possibly avail myself of it so long as members of the Harijan community are shut out. Unless every one of you here begins in the way I have pointed out, he has not removed untouchability from his heart.

It is absolutely of no consequence that a vast majority of Harijans are uninterested in our campaign. Only this morning Mr. D’Souza, leading a deputation of Harijans, told me that the Harijans were not so interested in temple-entry as in their political and economic amelioration and perhaps a rise in their social status. Naturally, they cannot think otherwise. For we are responsible for deadening their sense of unity with us and their desire to worship in common with us in our temples.

Therefore I say that the God of Hinduism is really non-existent for them. It is true that the God of Hinduism is not different from the God in Islam or Christianity. Only the mode of worship is peculiar to each religion. If Harijans because of our own sins—our own unpardonable treatment of them—have been taught to consider that the temples visited by savarnas are not for them, you could not blame them for their indifference in this matter. Force of habit has made them indifferent. That Harijans in Travancore and other parts of India have still got the desire to enter the temples and claim the same rights as other Hindus, is a good thing and a comforting thing, but it does not affect my argument.

There is another aspect of the opening of temples to Harijans which you must not fail to realize. If you open your temples to Harijans because they demand that they shall be so opened, you will not be doing any great thing. But if you open the temples to them because of a sense of sin for which you should atone, it becomes a religious act. I should insist on Hindu temples being thrown open to

---

1 Vide the preceding item.
Harijans even if the Harijans in India were converted to another religion and there was only one Harijan left in the Hindu fold. It is this religious attitude that isolates the Harijan question from all other questions, and gives it a special importance. If our present programme was merely one of policy or political expediency, it would not have the religious significance that it has for me. If it was demonstrated to me to my satisfaction that the political or economic regeneration of Harijans would be enough to retain the Harijans in the Hindu fold, I should still want to open the temples and remove every trace of inequality. Because for me it is, as it must be for you, a question of repentance and reparation for the wrong we have done to our fellowmen.

Thus the threat of the conversion of Harijans to other religions which is agitating so many Hindus today, has no bearing on our duty to Harijans. If we begin to quicken our activities, because of the threat of conversion, then such opening will lose the significance which I have outlined. I promise you that Hinduism will not be saved by such means.

Hinduism can only be saved when it has become purified by the performance of our duty without the expectation of any return whatsoever from the Harijans. Nothing less than that can possibly save Hinduism. If you do something by Harijans as a matter of expediency or political manoeuvre, you have not rid yourselves of untouchability in your hearts. There will come many occasions when that poison will erupt on the Hindu social organism to such an extent that we shall be confounded. If we are ashamed of untouchability, we must shed it, no matter what results follow or may not follow.

I become impatient when savarna Hindus tell me from their platform of high superiority that they will remove un-touchability when Harijans give up their habits of drinking, eating carrion, uncleanliness, etc. Suppose my father, mother, son or daughter were lepers, can I say that I will touch him or her only when he or she had got rid of leprosy? I will be false to our sacred tie if I do not serve him or her in his or her need. The position regarding Harijans is infinitely worse, because we ourselves are responsible for the condition to which Harijans have been reduced. For their drinking, eating carrion, and other unclean habits we are directly responsible. Therefore, if we are true, we have to embrace them in spite of their shortcomings; and I hope, not without foundation, that immediately you adopt an attitude of mind looking upon the Harijans as your brothers they will change their habits. People who had experience in this direction will confirm this statement. It is therefore first necessary that savarna Hindus should purify their hearts and change their attitude towards Harijans.

I would ask you, please, not to fling in my face bad cases you may have come across—cases where you befriended Harijans and they refused to improve.

But having uttered this word of caution, I want to give you my evidence. I do not know a single Harijan adopted by a Hindu who has not reformed himself. As a matter of fact, it cannot be otherwise. The Harijan is bound to feel the change to be too good to be true. The novel experience of his improved surroundings will enable him to get rid of the craving for drink or carrion-eating. As for cleanliness it is a question of facilities made available to him. It is merely the cussedness of the savarna Hindus that employs the arguments about the uncleanness of the Harijans, so that they themselves need not act correctly.

I will close with a material thought. I have told you exactly my views of the duty of every savarna Hindu to Harijans. There are many more things that the savarna Hindu can do in his own personal conduct.

But I know that there will be a lot of discussion among members assembled here as to how to conduct the work of Harijan Sevak Sanghs without money. I say to such delegates that the fear comes out of their own want of faith. We want to move not half a dozen savarna Hindus, we want to touch the hearts of millions of savarna Hindus. Paupers though we are, we find that no Hindu temple has ever to be closed for want of funds. I invite you to study this phenomenon. But do not run away with the false idea that millions of Hindus always pay to their temples merely out of superstition. There may be a partial truth in that statement. But it is only a partial truth. The better part of the truth is that the people who support these temples by their offerings of pice or rice or coconut or supari, do so because of an indefinable faith that they are doing an act of piety. And I tell you that you will not be doing justice to yourselves, or to India or to humanity, if you will characterize these things as superstition. I know that superstition is a long-lived thing. There are many monsters of superstition which have been given a long rope by the Almighty. But however long their life, it is nothing in the cycle of time. The better half of the truth is that there is something undoubtedly holy and true about the faith that takes millions to the temples. If you have faith in the piety of the dumb humanity who support these temples, and faith in your mission, each of you will become little temples and gather pice or rice from the people.

---

1 Areca-nut

If you remain content with the lazy delusion that a few millionaires like Ghanshyamdas Birla will always send money to you for your work, I assure you that the movement is bound to fail. You will never be able to bring this movement to a successful conclusion unless you realize the need to go to the dumb millions and collect pice or even their rice as a token of their conviction that untouchability is a sin to be got rid of.

Never mind if it takes time before you are successful. Whether it takes a few years or ages you must have unbounded faith that it is the only way to convert savarna Hindus and bring this message to every Hindu home. Know that time never runs against Truth. And this is the downright truth: You have to get rid of untouchability or perish. Only those become impatient who want to prop up a mission about whose correctness they have a doubt. Have faith that when all the forces that are arrayed against us—and they are mighty forces—have died down, there is still this movement which will go on to purify Hinduism. But if you lose heart, courage and faith and become too lazy to remain on the watch-tower, do not blame people for not paying. The movement will perish not because of external forces but because of internal weakness. I urge every worker to approach the problem in this light.

Harijan, 20-6-1936

131. LETTER TO BALKRISHNA BHAVE

BANGALORE,
June 11, 1936

CHI. BALKRISHNA.

When you go for change of air or take other cures it never occurs to me that you do it out of attachment for life. The body is a field of duty. We must maintain it by taking proper care of it and for that reason you should take all the necessary treatment. I am greedy to take a lot of service from you and that is one of the reasons why I make you wander from place to place. As long as you are weak you will have to take service from others wherever you are. I do not see any harm in it if it is done with humility in the name of God. The idea behind it after all is that if God grants you health it will be utilized only for rendering service. My advice therefore is that you should not obstruct the improvement of your health by entertaining any kind of worries.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

132. LETTER TO VALLABH
June 11, 1936

CHI. VALLABH,

Mahadev has already briefly answered your two letters yesterday. “Vallabh” is all right. If you want to add anything to it, I would suggest “das”. First, because it is a simple suffix and secondly because we have voluntarily accepted the dharma of service and also because, the varnas having vanished, we are Shudras. Moreover, Vallabhdas is generally a name given to sadhus. Let everyone in the Ashram abuse you in just by calling you Swami but outside merely Vallabh or Vallabhdas will be proper. You do not want to become ‘bhai’ so you are only a half rival of Sardar. You should remain so.

Both of you are certainly servants. Let him be a ‘Sardar’; you always remain a “das”

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

133. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI
June 11, 1936

DAUGHTER RAIHANA.

It was very good you wired. For us, Abbajan is always alive. This body is but a play lasting “a few days”\(^1\). However, the \textit{atman} living within is immortal. His body we consigned to the tomb. Our association with it was momentary. He who had taken on the body and whom we loved as our own is no doubt even now watching us. May he witness all our acts, and save us from doing anything unworthy.

It was good that nearly the whole family was present at the time.

\(^1\) A servant
\(^2\) From a \textit{ghazal} by Nazir Akbarabadi
Please offer condolences on my behalf to all. Who will console me? You know the bond between us.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

134. INTERVIEW TO M. V. JAMBUNATHAN

_June 11, 1936_

Gandhiji appreciated the efforts of Mr. Jambunathan in publishing an Urdu-Hindi dictionary and gave a few suggestions to make his work more exhaustive and complete.

Referring to the Urdu-Hindi controversy, Gandhiji said it was due more to the mentality of the Hindus and Muslims of the present generation than the scripts themselves.

_The Hindu, 13-6-1936_

135. DISCUSSION AT HARIJAN WORKERS’ CONFEERENCE, KENGERI

[June 11, 1936]¹

Q. You were rather hard in your speech about the temples. The _savarna_ orthodoxy feels that we have no faith in the temples and your remark will support their feeling.

A. You are begging the question when you say that _savarnas_ feel that we have no faith in their temples. They are _our_ temples as much as theirs. My remarks were addressed to those who have faith in the temples. We do not create any hostile feeling in the _savarnas_ by saying that God had left temples whose doors were barred against Harijans. For God there is the God of _our_ creation. If it was God of His own creation, He would say: “Fools! Do you not see me everywhere?” But God is good enough to forget that we are fools,

¹ Of the Mysore University
² Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.
³ From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary.
⁴ Vide “Speech at Harijan Workers’ Conference, Kengeri”, 10-6-1936 and thinks that we have enshrined Him in order to purge corruption from our hearts. But when we discover that God whom we had enshrined in our temples permitted a class of His devotees to be regarded as untouchables, we said God had fled from such temples. I therefore say we must not visit the temples that forbid the entry of Harijans, and after we have finished with the members of our families we should go out with the same advice to others.

Q. Is the Harijan Sevak Sangh entitled to fight caste as we know it, since untouchability cannot go without the present caste going?

A. Untouchability has to go in its entirety, but so far as the Sangh as a body is concerned we have confined its work to the removal of the extreme form of untouchability. Therefore we do not begin with an attack on caste, though most of the members individually do not believe in and have discarded from their lives all caste restrictions about food and marriage.

Q. Shall we ever at some stage have to attack caste?

A. Why not? We recognize our limits and have thus restricted the rate of our progress. When we have got confidence we can change the creed of our Sangh and go a step further. Individuals, as I have said, have gone further. So far as restrictions about intermarriage and inter-dining are concerned, they are no part of varnashramadharma. Both of them are individual matters. No Shastra can compel me to feed or marry or refuse to do so with particular individuals. I urge you to recognize the fundamental distinction between our own personal conduct and the policy of the Sangh, which can only be changed in accordance with its constitution.

Q. There were places where Harijans had as a result of the present awakening given up handling dead animals and their disposal. There were places where Harijan reformers had to ask their Harijan brethren to give up the work, if only to give up carrion. In some places these had incurred the wrath of the savarna Hindus who had declared a boycott against them and stopped all social amenities. What were the Harijan sevaks to do?

A. It is our duty to protect the Harijans wherever such a thing happens, and if life is made difficult for them, we should help them to migrate to some more hospitable neighbourhood. But the best thing is for Harijan Sevaks to find out from amongst savarna reformers, including themselves, men ready to learn the art of curing hides and tanning. There are tanneries where all the processes from the skinning of carcasses to tanning are taught, and if we have many savarnas ready to do this work the awakened Harijans will not fight shy of it. But they have every right to abandon the work and take up anything else, and wherever they will not take charge of it we must take it up ourselves. Let us make the community realize the terrible waste of wealth that is going on from day to day. If we knew the science of dealing with carcasses, we should find that often a carcass pays more than the animal being worn out and starved would have fetched when alive. For the dead flesh can be turned into fine manure; the bones need to be simply charred in order to be turned into rich manure, they are also used to make buttons, handles, etc.; fat which can be easily preserved is precious for various purposes; the intestines are valuable for guts for carding-bows and musical instruments.

Q. But in our place a curious situation has arisen. The Harijan community is strong, and they have resolved to face even social boycott. There is only a small minority of Harijans who are in favour of continuing the work of the disposal of carcasses. What advice am I to give them?

A. Of course they should be free to continue their calling.

Q. Even at the risk of being boycotted by their own community?

A. No. Then we should not divide the community.

Q. Have we given up the Temple-entry Bill? Can’t we take it up again?

A. We have not given it up. It will be taken up as soon as the conditions are propitious.

Q. Can’t we make greater provision in the budget for propaganda?

A. No. If I could help it, I should not permit even 5 per cent of the budget for propaganda. But if you must expend money on propaganda, you may collect money specially for propaganda, but even then the Sangh will ask you to account for every pie you have spent.

Q. In our work we find the existence of sub-castes and untouchability among Harijans themselves a very great barrier. How are we to break the barrier?

A. By removing sub-castes and untouchability from ourselves. The Harijans are simply imitating their masters. We have kept them as slaves and taught them to imitate us. And you must remember that an imitator improves on the original, i.e., he disfigures it.

Q. Don’t you think that the whole Harijan problem is in the last analysis an economic problem, and that the moment you improve the Harijans' economic status you solve the problem?
A. No. You may solve the economic problem, but unhappily the Harijan problem, which is essentially that of the eradication of a disease in Hinduism, will not be solved thereby. Dr. Ambedkar who is economically much better off than most of us is still regarded as an untouchable.

Q. A worker, apparently an iconoclast, seemed to be impatient of some of the forms of worship among Harijans—including even their worship of Rama and Krishna—and naively said: “I know that they worship sticks and stones, even when they say they worship Rama and Krishna. And worship of these, however great they may be, does not inspire me. May I ask them to regard you as an incarnation of God and worship you, as I do?”

Amidst the laughter of all present Gandhiji calmly replied:

A. There is this difficulty staring me in the face: I am, you must know, an idol of mud, and those who seem to you to be revolting as ideals are my revered ideals. The names of Rama and Krishna fill me and Krishna fill me with hope. So I would advise you to break your incarnation—me—to pieces. That will be better than condemning Rama and Krishna which is nothing short of violence to Hinduism and to religion.

“But”, replied the friend, “Rama and Krishna were human beings.”

You think I am such a fool as to worship Rama and Krishna who existed ages ago? I worship Rama and Krishna who exist today, who have existed for all time, who know my innermost thoughts and who continually correct me. If I were not sure of my Rama and Krishna, existing on both sides of me, I should have gone mad with Sjts. X and Y and questioners like you.

“But”, put in C.R., “this explanation may not improve matters. He might regard you as an incarnation all the more for this explanation!”

Well, then I must remind you, young man, that if you are confirmed in your opinion that I am an incarnation you will find that one day I am no more. Will then God disappear for you?

But Christians also worship Christ?

Let me tell you that Christians worship the Christ who was resurrected. In the same manner those who worship Rama and Krishna worship Rama and Krishna who are more living than you are, or certainly more living than I am. They live now and will live until eternity. If ideals of Rama and Krishna are revolting to you, you should advise Harijans to forsake Hinduism, for I am quite sure that if a man does not believe in Rama and Krishna as God he is not a Hindu. A Muslim who says he does not believe in his Kalema will be hounded out of Muslim company. Do not then ask me, if I worship Rama who killed Shambuka and krishna about whom we hear all kinds of legends. I worship the living Rama and Krishna, the incarnation of all that is True and Good and Perfect.

1 C. Rajagopalachari

Harijan, 4-7-1936

136. DISCUSSION WITH A HARIJAN COUPLE

[On or before June 12, 1936]

Not knowing that they were Harijans, Gandhiji asked:

You are a married couple? What have you brought for me?

“We have brought flowers”, the bridegroom said.

But flowers won’t do. You are married and would you ask me to be satisfied with flowers only?

Sir, we have brought grapes too.

The grapes are sour. Can’t accept grapes, can’t accept flowers. Go and consult together and decide what to give me for the poor Harijans.

“We are ourselves Harijans”, they exclaimed, and Sjt. Ramachandra put in on their behalf: “Bapuji, he is Dewan Bahadur Srinivasan’s grandson.”

For a moment Gandhiji paused, as he had forgotten that the Dewan Bahadur was a Harijan. and then said:

I see, I see. Then it is not you who should give, but I should give you something.

We have come to have your blessings.

Of course you have them. Now tell me, are you happy in Hinduism, or will you give up the wretched religion?

We are perfectly happy and we will never give up Hinduism.

May I then proclaim to the world that Dewan Bahadur Srinivasan’s grandson and granddaughter-in-law are happy in Hinduism?

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.
2 According to the source, this and the following discussion took place at Bangalore where Gandhiji was till June 12, 1936.
Please do. We are perfectly happy.

“May we touch your feet?” Both did so and received hearty thumps on the back—Gandhiji’s favourite way of giving blessings to those nearest to him.

_Harijan_, 27-6-1936

137. DISCUSSION WITH A POLISH STUDENT

[On or before _June 12, 1936_]

[STUDENT]: I am keenly interested in rural reconstruction. There is at... ¹ a school conducted by Catholic Fathers. I shall help the school from the proceeds of the sale of this photograph².

Returning the photograph Gandhiji said:

Ah, that is a different story. You do not expect me to support the Fathers in their mission of conversion? You know what they do?

And with this he told him... the story of the so-called conversions in the vicinity of Tiruchengodu, the desecration and demolition of the Hindu temple, how he had been requested by the International Fellowship of Faiths to forbear writing anything about the episode as they were trying to intervene, how ultimately even the intervention of that body composed mainly of Christians had failed, and how he was permitted to write about it in _Harijan_. He, however, had deliberately refrained from writing, in order not to exacerbate feelings on the matter.

“But”, said the student, “the Christians among whom the Fathers I mention are working became Christians long ago.”

Well, there they foment fresh troubles. I do not know why the professors of a noble faith should assist in creating deadly quarrels between two sections of the same faith.

But I myself am a Christian convert. I cannot tell you the happiness and the solace that Christianity has meant to me.

I can understand that. You are using the language of a truly converted Christian. You have a heart to lose or to keep. If the Harijans in India reach your intellectual and spiritual level, and experience your sense of original sin, I would bless them for voluntarily embracing Christianity. Have you read what I have written on my son’s so-called conversion to Islam? If he had become a

---

¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.
² Omission as in the source.
³ On which the student wanted Gandhiji’s autograph.
Muslim from a pure and a contrite heart, I should have no quarrel with him. But those who had helped him to embrace Islam and are enthusing over his apostasy simply exploited his weaknesses. They are no true representatives of Islam. My letter to the Muslims, I tell you, was written with my pen dipped in my heart’s blood. Similarly there is no redeeming feature about the Tiruchengodu conversions I have spoken to you about.¹

_Harijan_, 27-6-1936

138. ADVISE TO HINDI WORKERS²

_BANGALORE_,

_June 12, 1936_

Gandhiji advised Hindi _pracharakas_ who are imbued with a sense of service, not to fritter away their energies in all possible spheres, but to confine themselves to the one work they had undertaken.

Gandhiji observed that it was quite possible for anybody, man or woman, to attain full mental development through the mother tongue alone and he considered all those who did not agree with the view as being guilty of treachery against their mother tongue. Even if Sir Venkata Raman were to say that he could not explain his researches in his mother tongue, Gandhiji would ask him to keep his Nobel Prize and Knighthood to himself.

_The Hindu_, 12-6-1936

139. SPEECH AT HARIJAN WORKERS’ _CONFERENCE, KENGERI³_

_June 12, 1936_

We should do nothing having in view the threat of conversions. For I am sure that everything that you will do merely to stop them will fail of its purpose. Conversions or no conversions, we have to redouble our efforts in order to remove all the disabilities under which

¹ Here Mahadev Desai remarks: “The young man could see the deep pain with which Gandhiji was speaking. He did not press him to give the autograph and took his leave.”
² More than 100 Hindi workers, including about 30 women drawn from all parts of the State, met Gandhiji in the morning.
³ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.
Harijans are labouring. The reaction that we should do something because of the threat of conversions was bound to take place as we are human beings. We may therefore take note of the fact but do no fact but do nothing because of it. If we redouble our efforts because of the threat, we shall slacken our efforts immediately the threat is carried out, or the moment we find that the threat was empty. Either way, if we slacken our effort we shall be harming the cause. Harijans will feel that the whole of our agitation was, like a soda-water bottle affair, momentary, and that there is now going to be nothing more. Our movement is essentially religious and independent of political vicissitudes. There can, therefore, be only greater and greater dedication on our part. What shall we, then, a handful of us do for the cause, when we find that thousands and thousands of our people are wholly indifferent and will do nothing beyond passing a few resolutions? Somehow or other they do not feel that these resolutions are addressed to them individually. Years ago eloquent speeches used to be made on swadeshi, but speakers did not feel that they were bound to carry out what they said. They took shelter under the phrase ‘as far as possible’. There is no ‘as far as possible’ on the question of untouchability. If it is to go, it must go in its entirety, from the temples as from everywhere else. So if the thousands who passed the resolutions in Travancore were serious when they raised their hands, no power on earth can prevent the entry of Harijans to temples. Those of us, therefore, who are working for the removal of untouchability must convince the Harijans of our bona fides. I have, however, a suspicion that all who have come here are not as thorough in their action as they should be. Most of you do not go far enough in identifying yourselves with the Harijans’ difficulties. You will say, ‘We believe in the removal of untouchability only to the extent of the Harijan Sevak Sangh programme.’ If Harijan workers take shelter under this ‘thus far and no further’, it will be difficult to convince Harijans that we are sincere. Naturally Harijans want to have positive proofs of daily increasing progress. They want to rise to the highest status that a Hindu is capable of. I ask you, therefore, not to leave this conference without discussing the difficulties that face us. If all our workers were capable of making cent per cent delivery of goods and of becoming cent per cent Harijans voluntarily, it would be well with us.

I do not want to blame anyone, I am simply thinking aloud, and when Ramachandran wanted me to say what should be done I could not put the thing more concretely. It is a question of ourselves feeling the thing. This cannot happen except with the conviction that if untouchability does not go Hinduism will perish. I would go even further and say: ‘I would pray that a religion which damned any human beings because they were born in a particular section should perish.’ And I want you, if you feel with me, to pray that it ought to perish if this blot on humanity is not removed. That points to the necessity of our becoming Harijans in every sense of the term. Does it mean that we should start eating carrion or drinking or living filthily? No, we must feel miserable whenever they feel miserable, and try to remove all that makes them miserable; let us never say their misery is due to their karma, but let us say we have made up our minds to discharge at least a portion of our debts to them. Let us ask ourselves every morning if we have done anything in discharge of that debt. Unless we do this all our resolutions will be a fruitless effort.

Q. What is to be our attitude to those who want to come back to Hinduism?

A. We shall simply say to them: ‘You are perfectly welcome,’ but you will offer no inducements to those you expect to win back by doing so.

Q. Oh no. That is out of the question. I was wondering if you would approve of any purification ceremony.

A. No purification ceremony is necessary. If they had become converts wantonly, they will regretfully come back, in which case those who take them back may ask them to do some shuddhi. I would simply ask them to take Ramanama a hundred times.

Q. Won’t you object to a Harijan sevak attending a voluntary shuddhi ceremony of this character?

A. I see no objection to his attending such a ceremony, but let him be clear that Shuddhi is no part of the Harijan Sevak Sangh’s programme, and also he should be sure that the man wanting to be reconverted was doing so absolutely freely and without the offer of any inducement. The question is: Are you convinced of the downright sincerity of the man wanting to be reconverted? If you are, do everything to befriend him.

Harijan, 4-7-1936
I had no idea that when I promised to give you half an hour this evening I was going in for an elaborate function and should have to give you more time than I had bargained for. Not that I should not have liked to give you more time. If it had been possible I should certainly have given you two hours, examined you in Hindi, done a little business by asking for contributions for Hindi propaganda, and possibly for your ornaments. But that was not to be. Within a couple of hours I shall be leaving Bangalore. That however, does not mean that those who want to contribute may not do so after I have left.

I congratulate those who have won their diplomas and certificates today. I hope they will keep up their studies and go on adding to their knowledge every day. Those who go to ordinary schools and colleges go there for a career, read their books for examinations and the moment they leave their examination-hall forget the books along with what they have learnt from them. Many care more for degrees than for knowledge. But those who have won their diplomas today have not done so for the sake of diplomas, for the obvious reason that the Institution for the Propagation of Hindi does not aim at helping you to win jobs. The diplomas and degrees conferred on you are meant only as proof of the knowledge your teachers have imparted to you. It is quite possible, of course, for a few of you to earn your livelihood from your Hindi studies, but that certainly is not our object.

It delights my hearts that a majority of the successful candidates today are members of the fair sex. That indicates a bright future for Hindi prachar and for Mother India, for I am firmly of opinion that India’s salvation depends on the sacrifice and enlightenment of her women. In many of the women’s meetings I used to address, I emphasized the fact that when we wanted to speak of our ancient heroes and heroines or gods and goddesses we would name the latter first, e.g., Sita Rama, Radha Krishna and not Rama Sita or Krishna Radha. This practice is not without its significance. Women used to be

---

1 Published in Harijan under the title “The Question of Hindi”. Gandhiji presided over the Convocation, which was attended among others by Srinivasa Sastri, C. Rajagopalachari and Satyamurti.
2 From The Hindu, 13-6-1936.
honoured and their work and worth were regarded of special value. Let us continue the tradition in its letter and spirit.

I shall take this occasion to give you a few obvious reasons why Hindi or Hindustani alone can be the national language. So long as you live in Karnataka and do not look out of it, a knowledge of Kannada is enough for you. But a look at any one of your villages is enough to show that your outlook and your horizon have widened, you no longer think in terms of Karnataka but in terms of India. Events outside Karnataka interest you, but the interest cannot obviously go very far, without a common medium of expression. How is a Karnataka man to establish and maintain contact with men from Sind or U.P.? Some of our people have held and perhaps still hold that English can be this medium. If it was a question of a few thousands of our educated people, English would certainly do. But I am sure none of you will be satisfied with that. You and I want millions of people to establish interprovincial contacts, and they cannot obviously do so through English for generations to come, if ever. There is no reason why they should all learn English, and it certainly is no sure or substantial means of winning a livelihood. Its value for this object will, if anything, become less and less as more people come to learn it. Then Hindi-Hindustani offers no difficulty in studying as English must. Study of it is never going to take the time that study of English would do. It has been estimated that the number of Hindus and Mussalmans speaking and understanding Hindi-Hindustani exceeds 200 million. Would not the 11 millions of men and women of Karnataka like to learn a language that is spoken by 200 millions of their own brothers and sisters? And can they not very easily learn it? The answer is supplied by a fact I noticed very strikingly a moment ago. You have all listened to a Kannada translation of Lady Raman’s Hindi speech. You could not but have noticed that the translation adopted unaltered quite a large number of words which Lady Raman had used in her Hindi speech—words like prem, premi, sangha, sabha, adhyaksha, pada, ananta, bhakti, swagata, adhyakshata, sammelan. All these words are common to Hindi and Kannada. Now supposing someone was translating Lady Raman’s speech into English, could he have retained any of these words? By no means. The English equivalent of every one of these words would be new to the listeners. When therefore our Kannada friends say that Hindi is difficult for them, they amuse me no less than they make me angry and impatient. I am sure it is a matter of a few hours’ careful study for a month. I am 67 and have not many years before me, but I assure you that when I listened to the Kannada translation I felt as though I should not take more than eight days to learn Kannada if I gave a few hours to it each day. With the exception of half a dozen, like the Rt. Hon. Srinivasa Sastri and myself, all of you here are quite young. Have you not energy enough to devote to a study of Hindi four hours each day for just one month? Do you think it is too much to devote this time to cultivate a contact with 200 millions of your own countrymen? Now suppose those of you who do not know English decided to learn English. Do you think any one of you would be able to learn the language in a month by devoting four hours to it each day? By no means. The reason why Hindi is so ridiculously easy is that all the languages, including even the four South Indian spoken by Hindus in India contain a large number of Sanskrit words. It is a matter of history that contact in the old days between the South and the North used to be maintained by means of Sanskrit. Even today the shastris in the South hold discourses with the shastris in the North through Sanskrit. The difference in the various vernaculars is mainly of grammar. In the North Indian languages even the grammatical structure is identical. The grammar of the South Indian languages is of course vastly different, and even their vocabularies, before they came under the influence of Sanskrit, were equally different. But now even these languages have adopted a very large number of Sanskrit words, so much so that I have not found it difficult, whenever I have gone South, to get a gist of what was being said in all the four languages.

I come now to our Mussalman friends. They know the vernaculars of their provinces as a matter of course and Urdu in addition. There is no difference whatsoever between Hindi and Urdu or Hindustani. The grammar is common to both, it is only the script that makes the difference, and when one comes to think of it one finds that the three words Hindi, Hindustani and Urdu denote only one language. If we were to refer to the lexicons of these languages, we should find that most of the words are the same. For them, therefore, barring the question of script which will adjust itself, there is no difficulty whatsoever.

To return therefore, to where I began, if your horizon goes as far as Srinagar in the North and Cape Comorin in the South, Karachi in the West and Dibrugarh in the East—as indeed it should—there is for you nothing for it but to learn Hindi. English, I have shown to you, cannot be our lingua franca. I have no prejudice against English. A knowledge of English is necessary for a few scholars, it is necessary for international contacts, and for a knowledge of the sciences pursued in the West. But I am pained when an attempt is made to give English a place it cannot take. That attempt, I have no doubt, is bound to fail. Everything looks proper in its own place.

There is a scare of which I should like to disabuse your minds. Is Hindi to be taught at the expense of Kannada? Is it likely to oust Kannada? On the contrary, I claim that the more we propagate Hindi the more shall we stimulate a study of our vernaculars and even improve their power and potency. I say this from my experience of different provinces.

A word about the question of script. Even when I was in South Africa, I thought that all the languages derived from Sanskrit should have Devanagari script, and I am sure that even the Dravidian languages could be easily learnt through the Devanagari script. I have tried to learn Tamil and Telugu through the Tamil and Telugu scripts, as also Kannada and Malayalam, for a few days, through their respective scripts. I tell you I was frightfully upset over having to learn four scripts when I could see that if the four languages had a common script—Devanagari—I should learn them in no time. What a terrible strain it is on those like me who are anxious to learn the four languages? As between the speakers of the four South Indian vernaculars, does it need any argument to show that Devanagari would be the most convenient script for the speaker of one to learn the other three? The question of Hindi as lingua franca need not be mixed up with the question of script, but I have referred to this simply in order to point out the difficulty of those who want to know all the Indian languages.

Hirijan, 27-6-1936

141. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

BANGALORE,

June 12, 1936

I believe Sjt. Kodanda Rao to be incapable of having made the claims attributed to him. viz., of being a Congress representative or my ‘envoy’; I consider him to be too straightforward a man to make any such claim.

1 P. Kodanda Rao of the Servants of India Society was on a visit to Trinidad.
I do not know anything about his views on Hindi, but I must decline to believe the statement put into his mouth that Hindi is of no use for Indians overseas, or that he advised the educational authorities there that they should not listen to any such claim put forth by Indian settlers. I should be sorry if it is found that he holds these views, because I think it is absolutely essential for Indian settlers not only not to forget their mother tongue but to keep themselves in touch with the literature and growth of Hindi.

_The Hindu, 13-6-1936_

142. A WITNESS FROM AMERICA

Miss Mabel E. Simpson of Montana (U. S. A.) writes to the Editor:

I wish to express my appreciation of your publication. What it lacks in size it more than makes up in quality. I greatly enjoyed Mr. Gandhi’s article on birth-control displaying his usual clear insight into the heart of things. If he had visited America twenty years ago when birth-control was disapproved and now when it is in full swing, he would know that it brings moral deterioration. But he would not be able to convince anybody of it, for it also brings a blindness to both moral and spiritual perception that makes it impossible for its followers to discern with sensitivity along high moral and spiritual lines. If India follows the West in this it will surely lose two of its most priceless and beautiful jewels: affection for little children and reverence for parenthood. America has lost both—and does not know it. Could you print a statement of the meaning of _brahmacharya_? I have been asked about it and while I have an idea I am not sure enough to attempt to explain it to others. Thank you.

The reader may place what value he or she chooses on this piece of evidence. I suggest however that such evidence against the use of contraceptives is worth far more than that of those who claim to derive benefit from their use. The reason is obvious. The benefit in the sense that advent of children is often checked is not denied. What is contended is that the moral harm the use does is incalculable. Miss Simpson has given us a measure of such harm.

Now for the definition—the meaning—of _brahmacharya_. Its root meaning may be given thus: that conduct which puts one in touch with God.

The conduct consists in the fullest control over all the senses. This is the true and relevant meaning of the word.
Popularly it has come to mean mere physical control over the organ of generation. This narrow meaning has debased brahmacharya and made its practice all but impossible. Control over the organ of generation is impossible without proper control over all the senses. They are all interdependent. Mind on the lower plane is included in the senses. Without control over the mind mere physical control, even if it can be attained for a time, is of little or no use.

Harijan, 13-6-1936

143. WHERE IS THE LIVING GOD?

The following is taken from a letter from Bengal.¹

I had the privilege to go through your article² on birth-control with the heading ‘A Youth’s Difficulty’.

With the original theme of your article, I am in full agreement. But, in that article, you have expressed in a line your sentiment on God. You have said that it is the fashion nowadays for young men to discard the idea of God and they have no living faith in a living God.

But, may I ask what proof (which must be positive and undisputed) can you put forth regarding the existence of a God? Hindu philosophers or ancient *rishis*³, it seems to me, in their attempt to describdes the swarupa or reality of Ishwara have at last come to the conclusion that He is indescribable and veiled in maya and so on.... I do not dare to deny that a true Mahatma like you or Sri Aurobindo, or the Buddha and Sankaracharyas of the past, may well conceive and realize the existence of such a God, who is far beyond the reach of ordinary human intellect.

But, what have we (the general mass), whose coarse intellect can never penetrate into the unfathomable deep, to do with such a God if we do not feel His presence in our midst?...

So, it is not at all surprising that young men of the present day do not believe in a God, because they do not want to make a supposition of God—they want a real living God. You have mentioned in your article of a living faith in a living God. I shall feel highly gratified and I think you will be rendering a great benefit to the young world, if you put forth some positive, undeniable proofs of the existence of God. I have the confidence that you will

---

¹ Only extracts are reproduced here.
² Vide “A Youth’s Difficulty”, 25-4-1936
³ Seers not more mystify the already mystified problem, and will throw some definite light on the matter.

I very much fear that what I am about to write will not remove the mist to which the correspondent alludes.

The writer supposes that I might have realized the existence of a living God. I can lay no such claim. But I do have a living faith in a living God even as I have a living faith in many things that scientists tell me. It may be retorted that what the scientists say can be verified if one followed the prescription given for realizing the facts which are taken for granted. Precisely in that manner speak the rishis and the prophets. They say, anybody following the path they have trodden can realize God. The fact is we do not want to follow the path leading to realization and we won’t take the testimony of eye-witnesses about the one thing that really matters. Not all the achievements of physical sciences put together can compare with that which gives us a living faith in God. Those who do not want to believe in the existence of God do not believe in the existence of anything apart from the body.
Such a belief is held to be unnecessary for the progress of humanity.
For such persons the weightiest argument in proof of the existence of soul or God is of no avail. You cannot make a person who has stuffed his ears, listen to, much less appreciate, the finest music. Even so can you not convince those about the existence of a living God who do not want the conviction.

Fortunately the vast majority of people do have a living faith in a living God. They cannot, will not, argue about it. For them “it is”.

Are all the scriptures of the world old women’s tales of superstition? Is the testimony of the rishis, the prophets, to be rejected? Is the testimony of Chaitanya, Ramakrishna Paramahamsa, Tukaram, Dnyandeva, Ramdas, Nanak, Kabir, Tulsidas of no value?
What about Ramamohan Roy, Devendranath Tagore, Vivekananda—all modern men as well educated as the tallest among the living ones?
I omit the living witnesses whose evidence would be considered unimpeachable. This belief in God has to be based on faith which transcends reason. Indeed even the so-called realization has at bottom an element of faith without which it cannot be sustained. In the very nature of things it must be so. Who can transgress the limitations of his being? I hold that complete realization is impossible in this embodied life. Nor is it necessary. A living immovable faith is all that is required for reaching the full spiritual height attainable by human beings. God is not outside this earthly case of ours. Therefore exterior proof is not of much avail, if any at all. We must ever fail to perceive Him through the senses, because He is beyond them. We can feel Him, if we will but withdraw ourselves from the senses. The divine music is incessantly going on within ourselves, but the loud senses drown the delicate music which is unlike and infinitely superior to anything we can perceive or hear with our senses.

The writer wants to know why, if God is a ‘God of mercy and justice, He allows all the miseries and sorrows we see around us. I can give no satisfactory explanation. He imputes to me a sense of defeat and humiliation. I have no such sense of defeat, humiliation or despair. My retirement, such as it is, has nothing to do with any defeat. It is no more and no less than a course of self-purification and self-preparation. I state this to show that things are often not what they seem. It may be that what we mistake as sorrows, injustices and the like are not such in truth. If we could solve all the mysteries of the universe, we would be co-equals with God. Every drop of the ocean shares its glory but is not the ocean. Realizing our littleness during this tiny span of life, we close every morning prayer with the recitation of a verse which means: “Misery so-called is no misery nor riches so-called riches. Forgetting (or denying) God is the true misery, remembering (or faith in) God is true riches.”

_Harijan_, 13-6-1936

144. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

[At] Wardha, June 13, 1936

I have your love letter and a longer one from Horace¹. This is for you both. I did not mean to suggest that we have not to convert Englishmen. What I meant and mean even now is that our contribution must be from this side. We must show that we mean no harm to England. It is not our fitness which is in dispute. Our harmlessness is, and rightly. This cannot be proved by any protestations made by the ablest Indian representative in England. It can only be proved by our uniform conduct here. But our conduct is by no means uniform. Not every Indian means well by England. And the best of us do not wish well in the same sense that Englishmen would have us to. Thus it was very difficult for me to convince the Lancashire operatives that I meant and wished well even in the act of preaching the immediate boycott of foreign cloth.¹

¹ Horace Alexander

Do you see that the non-violent way requires patience and has to be worked after the style peculiar to it?

This is not to say that it is wrong for any Indian ever to go there. No doubt chance visits of women like Mrs. Hamid Ali or men like Bhulabhai² must be exploited. I can even conceive occasions when men like Jawaharlal might specially go to remove misunderstandings. Let us wait for such a time.

C.F. Andrews expected here on 18th inst.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1494

---

145. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

[AS AT] SEGAON,

June 13, 1936

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

I have written to Mangaldas³ during the free time I now have in Madras. If there is time Mahadev will enclose a copy. I hope you did not find the journey difficult. Finish your work soon and come back. Do keep up the walks.

Blessings from

BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL
89 WARDEN ROAD, BOMBAY

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 195

² Bhulabhai J. Desai, leader of the Congress Party in the Legislative Assembly.
³ Mangaldas Pakwasa, President, Bombay Legislative Council.
146. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 14, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

We arrived here at 8 a.m. The train was late. I have your letter. My mind is there. But my body must be here till Monday for Harijan’s sake. If the weather is good, I hope to be with you on Tuesday morning about 7.30 a.m. I shall have taken milk on the way. I understand about Lilavati. I do not know who will be with me if any at all. We shall see. Do not worry. I quite see that till the things have shaped, you will have to be in Segaon. ‘Be careful for nothing.’ If someone is at the gate to show me the exact way to take, it would be good. It may be Govind or Dasrath—is that the other comrade’s name? But it does not matter if no one can be spared.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Some fruits will go with this if the bearer... ²

From the original: C.W. 6348. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9814

147. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 14, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Kusum must have reached there by now. I do not remember if I wrote to you of her wish to have perfect training in music from Panditji. Alongside, she would like to earn something and undertake some studies, if possible. Or, she might, for the present, give up the desire to earn. Talk with her on the subject and then let me know. We might arrange for her studies, but what is to happen there? You should consider where, in view of her nature, her own good lies and guide her and tell me what you propose. She is as tender as her name implies.³

1 At Wardha.
2 Illegible
3 ‘Kusum’ literally means a flower

VOL. 69 : 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936 129
In a single moment I could read her whole self on the day we parted.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.M./II. Also C.W. 8494. Courtesy:
Narandas Gandhi

148. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA,
June 15, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

We reached here yesterday morning. The weather is superb. The clouds all the day and a cool breeze, not much rain yet to speak of. I hope, if there is no rain in the morning, to leave for Segaon tomorrow, though my hut is not quite ready yet. Things move slowly in villages. But I know there will be no difficulty about getting a dry corner for myself.

Rameshwari Nehru is with me. She travelled 3rd class with us all the way. Of course 3rd class with me is no discomfort except for the crowds that gather at every station. She had two nights with us in the train. Her tour in Travancore was quite successful. She will be leaving Wardha on Wednesday.

Kanti went to Poona and returns on Friday. Navin stayed behind to learn the art of carving. He expects to be able to carve ivory-goods like what I have sent you.

Ba had a sandal-wood box sent to her. It was no use to her. I thought the best use was to send it to you either to sell or keep. It was left with Navin to send by post.

I hope you are better and the weather has improved. You must find a better place to go to in summer. From your descriptions Simla seems to be none too good.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

My weight on leaving Bangalore was 112 lb.!!! B.P. 156/90.
Quite good as the doctor said.

From the original: C.W. 3731. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6887
149. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

June 15, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

It is a great thing for a rebel to own defeat. At last you have a plethora of letters from me! Your humiliation delights me. But you are not to think of making yourself sick in an attempt to overtake my letters. Remember you are in Simla having calls on your time which I have not.

Now to change the topic. You wouldn’t be an idiot if you had guessed why I had chosen the brooches with flimsy pins. Your dense head could not see that the purchaser or wearer belonging to the exploiting class would have a solid gold pin put on in the place of the flimsy one. The question is: is the carving of the brooch good or not? Is it neat enough? I gave much time to the selection of the two brooches. Most were loud. These two I thought might pass Your Highness’s test.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

It is raining now.

From the original: C.W. 3579. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6388

150. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 15, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your note. It is raining here well. I expect therefore that I shall [not] be able to get out.1 Yes, I shall bring the bhaji. And I can do without it, too, for a time.

No more till we meet.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6349. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9815

1 For Segaon
2 Leafy vegetable
151. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

June 15, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

Kanti is not here today. I saw your letter and opened it. I am preserving it as you have permitted Kanti to read it. I shall not destroy it till Kanti and Saraswati arrive on Friday. However, no one else will read it.

I do not myself fancy Kashi. I gave the advice I did because it is your duty to please Jayaprakash in such a matter. Now there is no question of your going there since Harsubabu himself says no and J.P. does not wish to displease him. Sitab Diyara is your Kashi for the present, and all that you do there with understanding is of course your education. Do acquaint yourself with the villagers. Do you pray alone or do other women join you? It is surprising that there is none in the village who can sing the Ramayana.

I shall go to Segaon tomorrow. Probably I shall go alone since my hut is not yet ready. Perhaps Lilavati may accompany me.

My weight at Bangalore was 114 lb. and my blood pressure 156/110, which may be taken as satisfactory. Sardar is at Bombay.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3474

152. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 15, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Here are some of my thoughts. We should not run the school from a rich man’s viewpoint, but have as teachers only those whose motto is service. They should be satisfied with a maximum salary of Rs. 15 a month and devote their whole time to it. To start with, there should be one teacher for just one pupil of whatever age. The teacher should prepare his own textbook and impart knowledge through the use of the eyes and the ears and teach the pupil to use his hands for wielding implements to make things. He should himself do what he teaches. It would be better to have such a school in some village. As for you, you have to make the beginning at the place where you are. You can start with yourself. Accept pupils from middleclass families if they agree to your terms. They must pay fees, but one should not depend on this income while undertaking the work. You may start the experiment only if you accept the idea whole-heartedly. You should swallow only what you can digest.

If you understand this, this is what you should do for the present. Put the thoughts before your associates. It is our dharma to run the existing school if it pays its way but those parents who can should pay the full fees.

I have put all these ideas before Nanabhai1. He likes them but he is himself so deeply involved that the changes suggested by me are beyond his power. The help I used to get for Dakshinamurti has now stopped.

You may ask me time and again whatever you want to. Kanu is my responsibility. He will be under my supervision whether at Segaon or at Maganwadi. He has my permission to live at Segaon. Hence if he continues to stay at Maganwadi, it will have been his own decision. Now that Kanti has gone to stay with Kaka to attend on him, Mahadev will be left alone. If, on that account, Kanu is required to be with Mahadev, that too will be left to his choice.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I have not been giving anything to Kanu.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8495. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 Nrisimhaprasad Kalidas Bhatt who conducted Dakshinamurti, an educational institution in Bhavnagar
153. MESSAGE TO RAJPUTANA HARIJAN
SEVAK CONFERENCE

[Before June 16, 1936]

Hinduism is on trial today. Those alone can become true sevaks who have faith in dharma and who have love for Harijans and are prepared to dedicate themselves to the service of Harijans.

[From Hindi]
Gandhiji aur Rajasthan, p. 197

154. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

June 16, 1936

CHI. RAMESHWARDAS,

I want Parnerkar to visit the Delhi and Pilani dairies. He will, of course, make arrangements about Dhulia before leaving. Anyway, there the work is already well organized. After all we want to serve the cow; if we could do it better by Parnerkar’s going to Delhi and Pilani, it becomes our dharma to let him go. You may, therefore, release him. The rest he will explain to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 211

155. LETTER TO J. K. SHARMA

WARDHA,

June 17, 1936

MY DEAR SHARMA,

You are in a hurry. Your business is to convert many. I am pursuing the subject. All the letters so far received show that the restriction is wholesome and necessary. They say khadi does not gain by being exhibited alongside mill-cloth. It is not intended to supplement the latter, it is intended to sup-plant it. Khadi has a mission of its own. It is part of national education and it stands for new and true economics at least for India.

1 The conference was held on June 16 and 17, 1936 at Nareli near Ajmer.
You are hasty in your criticism of khadi workers. They are working in the light of their experience and for the sole good of the poor. You should understand their viewpoint and difficulty before criticizing them.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 88

156. LETTER TO DILIP KUMAR ROY

WARDHA,
June 17, 1936

MY DEAR DILIP,

Mahadev Desai gave me your letter and the correspondence only yesterday. I glanced through the very interesting correspondence between you and Raihana¹! I have perhaps a theory of my own about Krishna. I need not discuss it here as it is of no consequence. I hope with you that we shall meet some day. Then we can usefully discuss the Krishna legends and many other things of common interest. And of course I should listen once more to your music.

Love.

M. K. GANDHI

Golden Book of Dilip Kumar Roy, p. 121

157. FRAGMENT OF A LETTER²

June 17, 1936

For me the whole of philosophy is contained in truth at any cost.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

¹ Raihana Tyabji
² According to the source the addressee was an American woman.
158. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

June 17, 1936

BHAI THAKKAR BAPA,

I have the invitation from Palampur.
Send immediately the sum of Rs. 2,000 which Valunjkar has not yet received. You can always take from him the detailed accounts, etc., that you would require. Do not let his work be held up.
The Bharuch matter must have been decided. Karsandas has thrust on me the responsibility for the building at Vile Parle. A meeting of the Trustees has to be called. I hope Kishorelal has written to them. We may hold the meeting on hearing from you about the convenient date.
I shall of course be going to Wardha for meetings and such other work, even though I am settled in Segaon.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1159

159. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

SEGAON,
June 17, 1936

CHI. MRIDU,

You have not acknowledged my long letter. I do expect a detailed letter from you.
I had sent a reply to your telegram. Now you may come over any time you feel like it. I have returned to Segaon. But that does not matter in the least.
The occasion for writing this is the enclosed letter. I am under the impression that you need good women workers. The writer of the enclosed letter belongs to a good family in Rajkot. She does not have much education, but she is efficient and experienced. She can be useful in taking care of the girls and so on. Think about the possible ways in which you can use her. She is needy. But that is of secondary importance. Think over it and write to me if she can be useful or not. Do not think that she has to be absorbed somewhere because I have recommended her. As I had to do something for this widow, I am asking you first because you had asked for women workers.

You must be receiving happy news from Vienna and Oxford.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Write only to the Wardha address.

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11198.Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

160. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

June 17, 1936

CHI. VIJAYA,

Well, I am in Segaon, though residential arrangements are yet to come. The work cannot be completed on account of the rains. I would be prepared to put you up at Maganwadi or in the Mahila Ashram if you came over. You can visit me from there. Even Ba has not yet come to stay with me. You will have to wait if you must stay with me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7061. Also C.W. 4553. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

161. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

June 17, 1936

CHI. SHARMA,

I have two letters from you. I am sorry to hear the news from your family.¹ Do treat the patients if you have now gained confidence in your treatment or leave them to themselves; let them carry on with the routine treatment.

Come over here to discuss your own future and Draupadi’s² too. That I am living away in Segaon should not matter. It is possible to make daily trips from Maganwadi. The air is pretty cool here, the rains have been copious and have not stopped even now. What was the total expense of your travels? Did you achieve what you wanted? Is there still anything else that you might have learnt there? Did you acquire sufficient knowledge of anatomy-physiology?

¹ The addressee’s elder brother’s only son had passed away.
² Addressee’s wife.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, p. 253

162. A MESSAGE

June 17, 1936

Every Hindu organization can easily do the following five things:
1. Root out untouchability, treating it as a sin.
2. Take up the service of the cow, which at present suffers from slackness due to ignorance, and pursue it with intelligence.
3. Serve Daridranarayana to the extent possible by adopting khadi.
4. Serve the villagers by buying the goods produced by them.
5. Do away with such bonds of caste as are destructive of dharma.

M. K. GANDHI

[From Hindi]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

163. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 18, 1936

MY DEAR AGATHA,

This is from my new abode—a proper village which may be defined as a place with no post-office, no store for food-stuffs of quality, no medical, comforts and difficult of access in the rainy season. I could add many more adjectives but these should be enough for the time being. This is not to say that I am suffering any discomfort. I have told you this to let you understand the nature of [the] task before me.
I appreciate all you say about news. Jawaharlal is trying to cope with the problem. Let us see what is in store for us during the next six months.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1495

164. LETTER TO MURIEL LESTER

June 18, 1936

MY DEAR MURIEL,

You have overtaken me. When young Kalelkar described his meeting you, finding you malaria-ridden and asking me to insist upon your treating yourself decently, I wanted to write at once. And lo and behold, your first letter came and now second with Dorothy’s.

You are ever before my mind’s eye and often in our talks but pressing work here prevents my writing as often as I would to friends and co-workers living away from India.

And how am I to insist on your taking care of yourself? If your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost and not a den of thieves, you must rest when the body needs it. ‘Be careful for nothing’ is a wonderful admonition. If we would adopt it in daily life, we would not, in fearful hurry to achieve results, neglect our bodies and then be incapacitated for further work. You have no business to have malaria in England. God be with you.

Well, I am at last in Segaon in the cottage Jamnalalji has built for me. I do not know what the future has in store for me. But for the moment my headquarters are in Segaon. The postal address must be Wardha. There is no post-office here. You cannot but a stamp here as you cannot but many things.

I dare not write to Dorothy separately: There is no time.

My love to you, her and all the other members of the family.

Kamalnayan, Jamnalalji’s son, will be soon with you. You will mother him and put him where he will be taken care of.

Yours

BAPU
[PS.]

Your article¹ will receive prompt attention.

From a photostat: G.N. 3807

165. TELEGRAM TO PADMAJA NAIDU

WARDHA,
June 19, 1936

PADMAJA NAIDU
C/O PALACE, BOMBAY

PRAYING SUCCESSFUL OPERATION. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

166. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 19, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your complaint about my faint writing is quite legitimate. Nor are you the only complainant. I must improve village ink. Village [ink] and village paper is not a combination I can yet advertise. You will admit, however, that if I give in, improvement may become impossible. Rebels like you must persist in their rebellion and you will soon find that even the tyrant will have to mind his manners. Perhaps I shall have to give up using this thin paper. Tell me if you were able to read this without the magnifier.

You have certainly done well over your sales. I have answered² your objection about the shoddy pin for the brooches. If the answer is not satisfactory, they will, I am sure, exchange the brooches for any article you may fancy of the same value.

¹ “Tissington Well-dressing”, written by the addressee and Dorothy Hogg, appeared in Harijan, 5-9-1936.
² Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 15-6-1936
I hope you got the sandal-wood box that was separately sent to you. You must get out of this chronic overwork even if it is to be by living in Segaon. I can build you a hut according to your plan. You can drive straight from the station reaching Segaon at the most in 1\(\frac{1}{2}\) hours. You should do it in one hour. You must not drive if it is raining or if it is just after a heavy downpour.

My hut has thick mud-walks, twice the breadth of ordinary brick-wall. The mud is rain-proof. I think you will fall in love with the hut and the surroundings.

Mira is quite well.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3732. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6888

167. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

[June]\(^1\) 19, 1936

MY DEAR CHILD,

You are naughty. You will write on all the sides of your letter without giving any direction as to where you began writing in all the margins. Why don’t you add one more sheet? But no more of grumbling. I sent Saraswati and Kanti as I thought you would like to see them.

Strange! I have a letter from Maria\(^2\) this week. She shows considerable anxiety about you.

It must be torture to K. that he cannot do just what he thinks is best for want of funds. We have however to take comfort from the fact, God does not always allow us to do what we think is the best. I suppose we don’t always know what is best.

Do not make the children write to me. Let them write when they are led to do so of their own free will.

I hope you have completely recovered from your illness. How I should love to see you as hale and hearty as you were when we first

---

\(^1\) From the contents it is evident that this letter was written after the letter to the addressee dated May 18, 1936; vide “Letter to Esther Menon”, 18-5-1936. On June 19, 1936 Gandhiji was in Wardha.

\(^2\) Anne Marie Petersen.
met. You were such a picture of health that I had thought you to be incapable of getting ill.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: No. 138. Courtesy: National Archives of India.

168. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

June 19, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I was about to send you the enclosed for your information when I got your letter yesterday.

I am glad Ranjit is better. He must take care of himself.

I do not want you to issue any special statement about the omission of [a] woman from your cabinet. I think that this omission does not stand on the same footing as the inclusion or exclusion of others. None of us had either the courage or the wish to exclude [a] woman altogether from the W. C. If this is the correct interpretation of your attitude, it should be made clear if the occasion offers itself.

As to the others I am sorry you feel still sore about what happened. You swallowed the Bhulabhai pill in the interest of the cause. And surely at the very first discussion I had said before you had mentioned the thing that there must be Socialists in the cabinet. I mentioned also the names. What however I want to emphasize is not who mentioned whom but that all were actuated by no other motive than that of serving the common cause.

So far as I remember, what you have sent me is not the statement I had seen. What you have enclosed I seem to see for the first time. Please ask Dr. H. if he issued any other. Even the one you have sent me is at variance with what the Doctor used to tell me. I take no exception to the expression of his views faulty, in my opinion, though they are. My complaint is that he said one thing to me and said another thing [for] publication. You are at liberty to show this to Dr. H.

I hope you are well. I was following your Punjab hurricane tour not without anxiety.

Love.

BAPU

1 This is not traceable.
2 Vide “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 29-5-1936
[PS.] If the writing is too faint to read, please throw away the letter.'

Also A Bunch of Old Letters, pp. 178-9

169. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 19, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. As for the school, do only what you think proper. I am in no hurry. I have no doubt about our duty, but there may be some practical difficulties.

Tell me whether you can now read my writing correctly.

I am enclosing two letters. Kanu sees me every day almost.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8496. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

170. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

June 19, 1936

CHI. AMTUSSALAAM,

I accept the blame for sending Sharma to you. Please forgive me. I shall not repeat such a mistake. Do you ever listen to anyone’s advice? Why then should you act upon Sharma’s? Once you revered him, followed his advice and even used to say that it had done you good. That you do not now like his advice shows how times are changing.

I did not suggest to Kanti to go to Kakasaheb. He got ready for the work because he learnt that Kakasaheb was in need of his services and assistance. I like his readiness. It will indeed do him good. Kanti will come to me when Kakasaheb’s work is finished or when Kanti wishes to come.

1 In the original this is written at the top of the letter.
I see that you have already written to your brothers and your brother’s wife. I see no politeness in it. I see in it your stubbornness. But who can persuade you? A man like me has only to watch helplessly whatever you do. Do come over when you have your holiday. My health is fine and I am in Segaon. I expect Saraswati has come today. The letter for the children accompanies this.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 338

171. LETTER TO MANGALA PRASAD
AND OTHERS

June 19, 1936

CHI. MANGALA PRASAD, JOGIRAM, BANWARI LAL.

I was glad to read your letters.

Mangala Prasad’s words run into each other, and his writing can well improve. Jogiram’s is shaky and Banwari Lal’s good. Mangala Prasad and Jogiram should write better.

All three of you should pay full attention to your studies and account for every single minute. Live in harmony with each other and observe simplicity.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1085

172. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

June 19, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

Don’t you be in a hurry. Mahadev has personally seen how difficult it is to accommodate anyone here just now. Should we not at least have a bathroom and a latrine? These just do not exist. The rains continue, workmen do not turn up as required, and even the mason does not appear so that the culvert is half built. Now I doubt whether we shall have things done within the next month or two. Besides, you have not cured your cough so that you can think of coming over. This is not good. Are you indulging your taste for chillies and oil? I have heard a lot about your fondness for tasty foods. Even here, you missed your spicy things, didn’t you? Conquer this weakness. Things are difficult here. In such matters you should not go by what Ba does. That, however, is another thing. Get over your cough by taking salt in warm water and other things.

\[1 \text{ Vide the following item.}\]

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9577. Also C.W. 6549. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

173. G. O. M. OF GUJARAT

It was in 1915 I first met Shri Abbas Tyabji. Wherever I have gone and there has been a Tyabji, he or she has made it a point to come to me as if I was a member of that great and numerous family. I do not know what the binding tie specially was, except perhaps that the distinguished judge to whom the family owe their fame had befriended me in 1890 when I had come to India from South Africa as an utterly unknown man, possibly an adventurer as some had thought. Not so however thought Badruddin Tyabji and several others I can name.

But I must come back to Abbas Mian of Baroda. As we embraced each other and I looked into his face, it reminded me of the late Justice Badruddin. That meeting laid the foundation of a life-long friendship. I found in him not merely a friend of Harijans, he was himself one. When at Godhra long ago I had, to the surprise of my audience, invited them to have an anti-untouchability conference in the evening at the untouchable quarters, Abbas Mian was there taking as lively an interest in the Harijans as any staunch Hindu. Yet he was no ordinary Mussalman. He had given lavishly to the cause of Islam and was supporting several Islamic institutions. And yet he had never any designs upon Harijans. His Islam had room for all the great religions of the earth. Hence he looked at the anti-untouchability campaign with the fervour of a Hindu. And I know that he retained

1 Actually 1896; vide “Letter to Jamnalal Bajaj”, 5-5-1936
2 In November 1917.
that fervour to the end of his time on this earth.

The fact is he never took up anything half-heartedly. There were no mental reservations about Abbas Tyabji. At a moment’s notice he answered the call of the Punjab.¹ At his age and for one who had never known hardships of life it was no joke to suffer imprisonments. But his faith conquered every obstacle. He put to shame many a young man by his ability to live with an infectious smile the simple life of the Kheda peasant, to share their simple food, travel in all seasons in their rude carts. I have never known him complain about inconveniences which could have been avoided. “His was not to reason why, his was to do and die.” He who had once the power as Chief Judge of imposing the death penalty and exacting obedience showed an amazing capacity for submitting unquestioningly to discipline. He was a rare servant of humanity. He was a servant of India because he was a servant of humanity. He believed in God as Daridranarayana. He believed that God was to be found in the humblest cottages and among the despised of the earth. Abbas Mian is not dead, though his body rests in the grave. His life is an inspiration for us all.

_Harijan,_ 20-6-1936

174. IS KHADI ECONOMICALLY SOUND?

If by the question is meant whether khadi can compete with Japanese ‘fent’ or even with the cloth manufactured by the Indian Mills in price, the answer must be emphatically ‘no’. But the negative answer would have to be given about almost everything turned out by man-power as against labour-saving power. It would have to be so even with regard to goods manufactured in Indian factories. Cloth, iron, sugar made in factories require State aid in some form or other to withstand foreign competition. It is wrong to put the question in that way at all. In the open market a more organized industry will always be able to drive out a less organized one, much more so when the former is assisted by bounties and can command unlimited capital and can therefore afford to sell its manufactures at a temporary loss.

¹ Abbas Tyabji was one of the five Commissioners appointed by the Congress Sub-committee to study the evidence and prepare a report on the Punjab disorders in April 1919.
Such has been the tragic fate of many enterprises in this country. Any country that exposes itself to unlimited foreign competition can be reduced to starvation and therefore subjection if the foreigners desire it. This is known as peaceful penetration. One has to go only a step further to understand that the result would be the same as between hand-made goods and those made by power-driven machinery. We are seeing the process going on before our eyes. Little flour mills are ousting the chakkis, oil mills the village ghani, rice mills the village dhenki, sugar mills the village gur-pans, etc. This displacement of village labour is impoverishing the villagers and enriching the monied men. If the process continues sufficiently long the villages will be destroyed without any further effort. No Chengis Khan could devise a more ingenious or more profitable method of destroying these villages. And the tragedy of it all is that the villagers are unconsciously but none the less surely contributing to their own destruction. To complete the tale of their woe let the reader know that even cultivation has ceased to be profitable. For some crops the villager does not cover even the cost of seed.

With all these deadly admissions, what do I mean by saying that khadi is the only true economic proposition? Let me then state the proposition fully: “Khadi is the only true economic proposition in terms of the millions of villagers until such time, if ever, when a better system of supplying work and adequate wages for every able-bodied person above the age of sixteen, male or female, is found for his field, cottage or even factory in every one of the villages of India; or till sufficient cities are built up to displace the villages so as to give the villagers the necessary comforts and amenities that a well-regulated life demands and is entitled to.” I have only to state the proposition thus fully to show that khadi must hold the field for any length of time that we can think of.

The present pressing problem is how to find work and wages for the millions of villagers who are becoming increasingly pauperized, as anyone who will take the trouble of going to the villages can testify for himself and as is amply proved by contemporary expert evidence that people are becoming poorer economically, mentally and morally. They are fast losing the will to work, to think and even to live. It is a living death that they are living.
Khadi supplies them with work, tools and a ready market for their manufactures. It gives them hope where but yesterday there was blank despair.

“Then why has khadi made so little progress if it is such a hopeful proposition?”—the sceptic asks. The answer is the progress khadi has made in terms of the millions, though little in itself, is comparatively the largest of all the other single industries. It distributes yearly the largest amount as wages among the largest number of wage-earners in the villages with the minimum of overhead charges and every pice practically circulates among the people. This can be verified by anyone who would study the figures published by the A.I.S.A.

Khadi has to work against almost settled prejudices among the villagers, against unscrupulous competition without State protection, and against the prevalent opinion of so-called experts in the science of economics, against even the demand of khadi wearers for progressively cheaper khadi. It is thus largely a question of the education of the villagers and the city-dwellers in the true economics for this land of tears. These transcend all religions. Hindus, Mussalmans and Christians who live in the villages suffer from the same disease of poverty and want. If there is a difference it is only one of degree.

I therefore maintain that though yard per yard khadi may be dearer than mill-made cloth, in its totality and in terms of the villagers it is the most economic, practical proposition without a rival. Khadi may be interpreted to include other village industries for the purposes of a thorough examination of the proposition.

_Harijan_, 20-6-1936

175. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

_June 20, 1936_

CHATAM.

I have your letter and fruit. I shall certainly write to you when I need fruit from your end. Generally, Bombay is nearer. But sometimes oranges are almost unavailable in Bombay when sweet limes of the South are most welcome.

I am glad Father is feeling better.
I know... too needs the hip-baths and sitz-baths. Women are more easily cured by sitz-baths than men.

I would like you both to join the Kodambakkam Committee. I would like you as such to visit the Institution at least once a week when you are in Madras and inspect the work and make inspection report. You should come in touch with the inmates.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 9608. Courtesy: S. Ambujammal

176. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 20, 1936

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I have not-heard from you for a long time as it seems to me.
How is the school going? Is Rukmini causing further trouble?
Please pass the enclosed on to Thadani. The article gives another method [of] interpreting the Vedas. Is his theory making any headway?

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 918

177. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

June 20, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I have your letter. What can one say to a person with endless flights of fancy? You would of course want to see Saraswati; that is why I wrote to you as I did. It was neither to test you nor to tempt you. I cannot send Saraswati there. It involves a lot of expense. This I would certainly call moha.

1 Two words here are smudged in the source
2 This is not available.
3 Infatuation
There would be some sense in your coming to Wardha, but none in Saraswati going there. She will stay here long if she likes to.

The Harijan children who know the Urdu script should be encouraged to keep it up.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 337

178. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

June 20, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

There was no need to have taken a vow to give up chillies but now that you have, do keep it. I wish you to improve your speech. You have formed a habit of uttering thoughtless words. This is not right. It is better to accept as true that sense which the listener derives from our words. By this we learn to speak less and that too thoughtfully. I am eager to have you here but I do not want you to suffer the inconveniences. Moreover, there is another consideration. If I bring you here on the 24th or 25th and go away on the 27th leaving you behind, you will not like to spend the week at Segaon without me.

There you have the opportunity to serve Ba if nothing else. Talk less.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9578, Also C.W. 6550. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

179. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

June 20, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I have already disposed of your letter orally.

Many persons are now likely to interfere in the kitchen affairs, but be patient in dealing with them.

Do not try to restrict the group favouring spiced food. Say no to none.

Get the required khadi and have it stitched into garments.
By all means refuse to spare time for Manu if you cannot afford it. It will be right for her to stick to the sitar.
Take care of Bharatan’s food.
Improve your health by taking the diet you need.
I expect Gajanan has recovered. Ask him to write to me about his health as also about the Sindi work.
Tell Bhanubapa that the Nasik work must not be delayed even for a day because of laxity on my part. The Government office is a new unforeseen factor.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10717

180. LETTER TO ATAR SINGH AND OTHERS

June 20, 1936

CHL. ATAR SINGH, PRABHU DAYAL AND JAYAKARAN,

I was glad to have your letters. Write a good hand, work hard and gain proficiency in the craft.

Atar Singh asks about the benefit of observing silence. It brings peace, conserves energy and leaves more time for meditation.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

The boys knowing the Urdu alphabet should not forget it.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1083
181. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 22, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

This is another batch of cuttings¹, of more importance perhaps to you than to me. My right hand is resting.

No more, since we meet soon.

Love.

BAPU

182. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

June 22, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Three rupees have been paid. You have already had letters from Segaon which I leave for a week on 27th to be in Wardha for several meetings.

It has been raining daily off and on. Nothing serious. There was no damage here or none to be noticeable.

Of course, only an idiot could expect customers to cure their purchases of defects. I fully expected to make the brooches presentable to the royalty adding the extra cost entailed in doing so. However, it is something that you thought at last of the right thing.

I see nothing wrong in your trying to give to Arjan the best of your knowledge and experience. Ba did not want the sandal-wood casket. Now for profuse apologies.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3733. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6889

¹ These are not traceable.
183. LETTER TO DR. B. PATTABHI SITARAMAYYA

June 22, 1936

DEAR DR. PATTABHI,

You have a brilliant boy, quite like his father. But he does not seem to have been able to carry the whole joke to you. When I saw Mrs. P. decked literally from top to toe, I said: “Now I know why Father was afraid to come to Bangalore.¹ For the sin of this barbarity is more on Father’s shoulders than Mother’s.” Now you may take the joke as seriously as you like. I quite agree with your philosophy. Wives and grown-up children must have vacation from their husbands and parents.

Love.

M. K. GANDHI

Incidents of Gandhiji’s Life, p. 226

184. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

June 22, 1936

BHAI MUNSHI,

I have both your letters. I have not yet been able to read the articles. I am returning with minor changes the one you wanted. My idea about the office would be a little different. If you come to hold the same view it is as well. But if I set out to incorporate it in your article, the language would be changed and the article would take a different form. I do not think it necessary. Let your own idea get around. I am writing my own article and it may be ready by Tuesday. You may, if you like, withhold the article in question till then. And after seeing my article if you want to revise it you may do so. However I see no need for that. Anyway do what you think best. Consult Sardar if you like.

I understand what you say about Premchandji.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7602. Courtesy: K.M. Munshi

¹ Gandhiji and Vallabhbhai Patel, who were in Bangalore some days previously had asked the addressee to come over. He did not go.
185. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

June 22, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter just now. You are very clever. There is still nothing certain about your coming and you ask me about Segaon. After you have got the leave you can ask me telegraphically or if you are not impatient you can ask me after you have arrived.

It is not proper that you keep falling ill. You will certainly not get Father’s disease, provided you take milk and fruit regularly, garlic with vegetables or curds, regular exercise, hip-bath and friction-bath. You will never fall ill if you do this.

My letter bore the postmark of the following day because I wrote it after the clearance of the mail.

I am in good health and take the usual food without any change. The weight was 112 ib. when I left Bangalore.

I shall be going to Maganwadi on the 27th for a week.

The mail is delivered in Segaon once a week, so you should address your letter to Maganwadi, Wardha, only. I get my mail every day from there.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

[PS.]

Mirabehn is well. Balwantsinha and Munnalal are with me. Ba is at Maganwadi.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3475

186. LETTER TO JAYANT E. PATEL

June 22, 1936

BHAI JAYANTBHAI,

If you cannot leave your wife and if you are truly free from lust, you can be a true teacher to her and make of her an accomplished woman. If your _brahmacharya_ is only theoretical, then it is better given up.
I cannot give you more guidance than this.

JAYANTBHAI E. PATEL CHAMPAKLAL BROS.
143 PRINCESS STREET
SAI BHUVAN, BOMBAY

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

187. LETTER TO SURENDRA

June 22, 1936

CHI. SURENDRA,

Which of your questions have I not answered? I have the impression that I did not leave out anything. Maybe, since I didn’t have your letter before me when I wrote to you, something was left out. When this happens you should write again. I do not have your previous letter with me.

Now I have stopped using Nepalese paper. I have yet to solve the problem of the ink. You must let me know without fail when the handwriting becomes illegible.

You must observe this rule for the diet. When the body requires a certain thing you must give it that as a medicine. At that time you should not count the annas and pies. Milk must be considered indispensable.

Balwantsinha has decided to stay in Segaon. He will go anywhere I send him. Let us see whether he will settle down here or not. I hope he will.

Today I shall be completing a week here. There is no question of my not liking it, as my mind was always here.

How shall I address you? I cannot write “Mr.” Every Surendra can be addressed as “Shri”. “Maharaj” was certainly written in jest but that appellation is being used there, isn’t it? “Sadhu” Surendra seems good. “Brahmachari” is also all right. Now have your choice. Mirabehn will go to stay at her chosen place, Varoda, on Wednesday.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
188. LETTER TO SHOBHALAL GUPTA

June 22, 1936

Bhai Shobhalal,

The test through which Hinduism is passing... They alone can be true servants who have faith in dharma and genuine love for Harijans and who are prepared to sacrifice themselves in the service of Harijans.

SHOBHALAL GUPTA
C/O HARIJAN SEVAK SANGH
AJMER

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

189. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

June 22, 1936

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

That nature cure is not effective for all ailments is admitted by all medical practitioners.

I see no need for permitting the use of turmeric and other condiments unless specifically required although anyone may take them as medicine.

Unboiled milk cannot be the cause of mucus, but you may start taking neem leaves; you may also try garlic. Hip-bath is of course beneficial. You should take it in the morning before eating anything. Then take a walk and drink milk an hour later.

Sharma’s book is not entirely reliable.

You may certainly go to Europe if it can improve your health. For my part I have no other interest. But you should follow only the dictates of your own conscience. Never mind what I think about it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4286

1 Omission as in the source
190. LETTER TO RAMESHWARI NEHRU

June 22, 1936

DEAR SISTER,

I was awaiting your letter. Although you suffered discomfort in coming to Segaon, the matters discussed at the end were essential. God will grant you the strength to follow your duty. Keep writing to me.

You will be glad to learn that Ghanshyamdas’s telegram says he has had satisfactory interviews with the Maharaja\(^1\). Let us watch developments.

... \(^2\) must be very happy.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 7983. Also C.W. 3079. Courtesy: Rameshwari Nehru

191. TELEGRAM TO G. D. BIRLA

WARDHAGANI,

June 23, 1936

GHANSHYAMDAS BIRLA
GUEST HOUSE
TRIVANDRUM

RECEIVED. GOD BLESS YOU. \(^3\)

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 7975. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

\(^1\) Of Travancore
\(^2\) A word here is illegible.
\(^3\) This was in reply to the addressee’s telegram which read: “... Had two interviews with His Highness. Promised satisfactory results next Birthday Anniversary.” Vide also the preceding item.
192. LETTER TO G. N. KANITKAR

June 23, 1936

DEAR BALUKAKA,

You did well in writing to me. I know the value as well as the limitations of oil lamps and even चकले. But I thought that some patriotic firm might put a dynamo light [in] the place free of charge or at a trifling cost. I should defend the use of electric lighting if it can be done on my terms.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SHRI SEWANANDJI
341 SADASHIV
POONA CITY

From a photostat : C.W. 967. Courtesy : G.N. Kanitkar

193. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 23, 1936

CHI. MRIDU,

Our letters crossed. You must have received my letter. I have destroyed yours. I have read the statement. I do not approve of it. The language does not describe the actual state of affairs. I do not wish to make such a remark intentionally. There is no time to analyse it. Some time, when both of us are free and you are eager, I shall explain. But it is not as if by issuing this statement you have disobeyed my order. You were perfectly entitled to issue the statement. Nor do I think you have intentionally committed any mistake in doing so. It does not also diminish my love in any way. You have all the right to seek my advice.

It appears to me from your letter and also from Jawaharlal’s public statement that there is a difference between what I had told you and what you have said. If that is so, then let me know so that if there is any lapse of memory on my part, I would make amends or reaffirm what I have said.

1 A torch or flame.

Blessings to brothers.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11199. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

194. LETTER TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

June 23, 1936

BHAJ RAJENDRA BABU,

I delayed replying to your letter till Ceresole arrived. He tells me that all the difficulties have been resolved. That is why I did not hurry. If there are still some loose ends you can tell me on coming here. I shall leave here on the 27th. I am now using my left hand, having overworked the right one.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Hindi: C.W. 9875. Courtesy: Rajendra Prasad

195. DISCUSSION WITH PIERRE CERESOLE AND CHRISTIAN MISSIONARIES

[ About June 23, 1936]

[PIERRE CERESOLE]: Religion which should bind us divides us. Is it not a sorry spectacle that whilst people of various denominations find no difficulty in working together all day in hearty co-operation, they must disband when the time for prayer comes? Is religion then meant to divide us?

Must it be allowed to become an expression of conceit rather than of a desire to be of service? I want some sort of religious communion between men of different faiths.

[GANDHI]: Quite possible, if there is no mental reservation.

2 Ceresole arrived in Wardha presumably on 23-6-1936; vide the preceding item.
But a friend of mine, a great humanitarian worker, believes that but for evangelism he should not have taken up his mission work. He gets the driving power from communion with Jesus, he says, because Jesus was always in communion with God.

The greatest trouble with us is not that a Christian missionary should rely on his own experience, but that he should dispute the evidence of a Hindu devotee’s life. Just as he has his spiritual experience and the joy of communion, even so has a Hindu.

Dr. Ceresole seemed to have no doubt about this, and he said that the broadest view of Christianity seemed to him to have been presented by Frank Lenwood; whose book Jesus—Lord or Leader, deserved to be better known than it is. “He says he has the greatest respect for the personality of Jesus, but he thought he might respectfully criticize him.”

MISSIONARY LADY: I have not had the time or desire to evangelize. The Church at home would be happy if through our hospital more people would be led to Christian lives.

But whilst you give the medical help you expect the reward in the shape of your patients becoming Christians.

Yes, the reward is expected. Otherwise there are many other places in the world which need our service. But instead of going there, we come here.

There is the kink. At the back of your mind there is not pure service for its sake, but the result of service in this shape of many people coming to the Christian fold.

In my own work there is no ulterior motive. I care for people, I alleviate pain, because I cannot do otherwise, The source of this is my loyalty to Jesus who ministered to suffering humanity. At the back of my mind there is, I admit, the desire that people may find the same joy in Jesus that I find. Where is the kink?

The kink is in the Church thinking that there are people in whom certain things are lacking and that you must supply them whether they want them or not. If you simply say to your patients, ‘You have taken the medicine I gave you. Thank God, He has healed you. Don’t come again,’ you have done your duty: But if you also say, ‘How nice it would be if you had the same faith in Christianity as I have,’ you do not make of your medicine a free gift.

But if I feel that I have something medically and spiritually which I can give, how can I keep it?

There is a way out of the difficulty. You must feel that what you possess your patient also can possess but through a different route. You will say to yourself, ‘I have come through this route, you may come through a different route.’ Why should you want him to pass through your university and no other?

[M.L.] Because I have my partiality for my Alma Mater.

[G.] There is my difficulty. Because you adore your mother, you cannot wish that all the rest were your mother’s children.

[M.L.] That is a physical impossibility.

[G.] Then this one is a spiritual impossibility. God has the whole humanity as His children. How can I limit God’s grace by my little mind and say this is the only way?

[M.L.] I do not say it is the only way. There might be a better way.

[G.] If you concede that there might be a better way, you have surrendered your point.

[M.L.] Well, if you say that you have found your way, I am not so terrifically concerned with you. I will deal with one who is floundering in mud.

[G.] Will you judge him? Have you people not floundered? Why will you present your particular brand of truth to all?

[M.L.] I must present to them the medicine I know.

[G.] Then you will say to him, ‘Have you seen your own doctor? You will send him to his doctor, ask the doctor to take charge of him. You will perhaps consult that doctor, you will discuss with him the diagnosis, and will convince him or allow yourself to be convinced by him. But there you are dealing with a wretched physical thing. Here we are dealing with a spiritual thing where you cannot go through all these necessary investigations. What I plead for is humanity. You do not claim freedom from hypocrisy for the Christian Church?

DR. CERESOLE: Most of us believe our religion to be the best and they have not the slightest idea of what other religions have revealed to their adherents, Dr.....¹ has made a careful study of the Hindu scriptures, and he has observed what Hinduism gives to the Hindus.

[G.] I say it is not enough for him to read the Song Celestial or the Koran. It is necessary for him to read the Koran with Islamic spectacles and the Gita with Hindu spectacles, just as he would expect me to read the Bible with Christian spectacles. I would ask him: ‘Have you read the Gita as reverently as I have or even as reverently as I have read the Bible?’ I tell you I have not read as many books on

¹ Omission as in the source.
Hinduism as I have about Christianity. And yet I did not come to the conclusion that Christianity or Hinduism was the ONLY way.

Gandhiji discussed the instance of Mr. Stokes—now Shri Satyanand—who was, in his early years in India, nearly killed for preaching Christianity to the Pathans, but who in a truly Christian spirit secured his assailant’s reprieve, and who in the later years said to himself, ‘My faith in Jesus is as bright as ever, but I cannot deliver the message of Jesus to the Hindus unless I become a Hindu. Unless I make the Hindus better Hindus I shall not,’ he said, ‘be true to my Lord.’

But then, wondered the missionary friends, what exactly should be missionaries’ attitude?

[G.] I think I have made it clear. But I shall say it again in other words: Just to forget that you have come to a country of heathens, and to think that they are as much in search of God as you are; just to feel that you are not going there to give your spiritual goods to them, but that you will share your worldly goods of which you have a good stock. You will then do your work without a mental reservation and thereby you will share your spiritual treasures. The knowledge that you have this reservation creates a barrier between you and me.

[P.C.] Do you think that because of what you call that mental reservation the work that one could accomplish would suffer?

[G.] I am sure. You would not be half as useful as you would be without the reservation. The reservation means that you belong to a different and a higher species, and you make, yourself inaccessible to others.

[P.C.] A barrier would be certainly my Western way of living.

[G.] No, that can be immediately broken.

[P.C.] Would you be really happy if we stayed at home?

[G.] I cannot say that. But I will certainly say that I have never been able to understand your going out of America. Is there nothing to do there?

[P.C.] Even in America there is enough scope for educational work.

[G.] That is fatal confession. You are not a superfluity there. But for the curious position that your Church has taken, you would not be

\[1\] Satyanand Stokes’s letter clarifying his position was published in “Weekly Letter” in Harijan, 15-8-1936.

\[2\] Italics in the source.
here.

[P.C.] I have come because the Indian women need medical care to a greater extent than American women do. But coupled with that I have desire to share my Christian heritage.

[G.] That is exactly the position I have been trying to counter. You have already said that there may be a better way.

[P.C.] No, I meant to say that there may be a better way fifty years hence.

[G.] Well we were talking of the present, and you said there might be a better way.

[P.C.] No, there is no better way today than the one I am following.

That is what I say is assuming too much. You have not examined all religious beliefs. But even if you had, you may not claim infallibility. You assume knowledge of all people, which you can do only if you were God. I want you to understand that you are labouring under a double fallacy: That what you think is best for you is really so; and that what you regard as the best for you is the best for the whole world. It is an assumption of omniscience and infallibility. I plead for a little humility.

Harijan, 18-7-1936

196. ADVICE TO VISITORS

[After June 23, 1936]

To appreciate all the advantages of walking you must read Thoreau. I have made it a rule that no one, unless he is completely disabled, should be encouraged to come here in a bullockcart—not even Jamnalalji with his heavy body. In fact I told him that trudging to Segaon and back was for him the best possible remedy to reduce his paunch and to add a few years to his life. And no one should fight shy of it, seeing that European ladies who have seldom walked on roads waded through mire with their shoes and stockings on!

Harijan, 25-7-1936

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.

2 Vide the preceding item; the visitors were two missionary ladies who accompanied Ceresole to Segaon.
197. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 24, 1936

CHI. AMBUJAM,

Perhaps the work of begging from the parties named in the enclosed is not beyond you. I do not feel like writing to them. I know you are shy. But you must shed your shyness if you are to render service for which God has made you. You may take Janammal\(^1\) with you if you like.

But you will not hesitate to say no if you find the mission beyond you.

Hope Mother is doing well and Father is keeping up the improvement.

Love

BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

198. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

June 24, 1936

CHI. PREMA.

There is no harm in undertaking the work for the duration of the Congress session.\(^2\)

Your complaint regarding the paper is justified.\(^3\) I hope this paper will satisfy you.

You should go on educating public opinion about flour, rice and oil. Though these articles cost more, they are cheap in the end. We are building up a new economics. Conditions differ from country to country. And, moreover, the rich and the poor have their own economics. Please, therefore, do not lose heart.

---

1. Addressee’s niece
2. The addressee had agreed to organize a women’s volunteer corps for the Faizpur session.
3. Gandhiji had used inferior hand-made paper and ink. The superior paper supplied by the addressee had been given away by Gandhiji to another person.
I know about bajra. However good the seed may be, if the soil, water, etc., are not suitable, the seed loses its virtue.

Here is a four-line Foreword. ¹

[Be] Khudai Khidmatgar is a book that ought to be translated in all the languages of India. It has already come out in Gujarati, Urdu and Hindi. It will probably be translated into other languages also. It is in the fitness of things, therefore, that a Marathi translation is being published; and the greater cause of pleasure is the fact that the translation has been done by a dedicated woman worker. She deserves compliments for her commendable venture. I hope that the people of Maharashtra will read with loving devotion the lives of the two Khudai Khidmatgars or Servants of God.

M. K. GANDHI²

To be an atheist till one comes to have faith in God is as reasonable as one’s trying to cremate the body of a man who has entered samadhi, assuming him dead till one can be sure that he is alive.

If bhavana¹ and shraddha⁴ can be distinguished from each other, one benefits by joining the prayer with a sincere heart even in the absence of bhavana, in order to acquire shraddha.

If we are living among primitive people, instead of propagating our religion we should propagate the religion of morality. As and when the doors of their hearts open, they may choose whichever religion they like. We shall have given them general information about all the religions.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10382. Also C.W. 6820. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

¹ To Mahadev Desai’s Be Khudai Khidmatgar, which the addressee had translated into Marathi; for Gandhiji’s “Foreword” to the English original, vide “Interview to The Natal Mercury”, 30-9-1908
² The Foreword is in Hindi
³ Feeling of devotion
⁴ Firm faith
199. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

June 24, 1936

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

I do not remeber to have told Sardar that the Godhra Ashram was running very well. I told him that the Ashram was working and had not been closed. However, you certainly did well in informing me of the situation. Do what you think right.

You do not say whether the decision about Bharuch is correct. I have not been able to understand the effect of the decision. Is that the whole resolution, or is there anything more to it?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4038

200. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

June 24, 1936

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

I have your letter. You ought to recover your health. If a course of injections does it, well and good. You must find out why your well-knit frame broke down. Believe me it is impossible that the observance of these niyamas can affect health; but dangerous consequences do follow from a lapse in the observance of yamas, etc. For example, the greatest lapses are to be found in the observance of brahmacharya. It being a bodily penance, the consequences of its faulty observance must adversely affect the body. The same is true of aswada. I mention these only as illustrations. It is difficult to say where you might have committed a slip. The detection of your fault, if possible, can now benefit only to the extent of proving helpful in your treatment.

1 Harijan Ashram, managed by Vithal L. Phadke
2 Any self-imposed religious observance, dependent on external conditions
3 Any moral duty or religious observance; the yamas are usually said to be ten, but their names and given differently by different writers. According to Patanjali’s Yogasutras, they are ahimsa, truth, non-stealing, brahmacharya and non-possession.
4 Control of the palate
Why is not your mind composed? To one constantly thinking of non-violence it should be like a myrobalan held in the hand.

Sharda may have a change if the climate does not suit her.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 19

201. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

_June 24, 1936_

CHI. SHARDA,

It is a lame excuse that you had nothing to write about. Many boys and girls engaged in work which is not to my liking keep on writing to me.

Your argument is not worthy of your intelligence. You say that your body being delicate you would like to develop your intellectual faculties to make a living. But you do not see that mental work can have an adverse effect on health. It is a lowly idea to acquire knowledge for the sake of earning money. It is also a mistaken notion that you will be a burden. Why don’t you realize that you are going to be a burden if, in spite of acquiring the highest knowledge, you have to remain bed-ridden? I would certainly be happy if you acquired knowledge. I would not grudge it if, like Bal, you studied in a college and acquired a high degree. But certainly not at the cost of your health. Your primary duty is to improve your health. This is of course my view. What matters is your own bent. Now that you have started, continue writing to me.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9971. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

^ Addressee’s daughter

VOL. 69 : 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936  167
CHI. NIMU,

I am having quite a good discussion with Ramdas these days. He is very keen that you should come over to Wardha, look after Kanam and other children and pursue whatever studies you can. Ramdas himself will not be able to remain fixed at one place. He will have to keep moving. You should therefore come over as soon as you can. You will of course have to stay where Kaka Saheb decides. In no case at Segaon. Nanavati is with Kaka and so you will feel at home. It will also help the children. If you stay at Segaon, I should like it very much indeed. But Wardha is a more suitable place for the work you have to do. We will be here at least up to July 1. After that nothing is certain. The visit to the Frontier Province is not quite certain.

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. SUMI,

Your letter is very good. If you could go walking up to Mussoorie, I would count it as excellent. But if such a long walk is likely to tire you, do not go. Kanam’s letter is enclosed.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

1 Though the letter is written on a printed letterhead with the address: ‘Birla House, Mt. Pleasant Road, Bombay’ Gandhiji was at Wardha on this date.
203. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 26, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

The length of the kerchief is $1\frac{3}{4}$ of the length of this paper and width $1\frac{1}{2}$. I have no measure-tape or rod here.

Yes, you were free to keep the sandal-wood box for yourself. Ba had expected as much.

There is not likely to be heavy rain at the end of July. If there is, you will walk part of the way. It will be perfectly pleasant. It is only a certain class of people who die many times before their death. Thank heaven you do not belong to that class. Are you not the lion brand?

No more today.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Mira went to her hut on Wednesday at Varoda, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from here.

From the original: C.W. 3580. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6389

204. LETTER TO NAN MENON

June 26, 1936

MY DEAR NAN,

I had hoped to send you a long chatty letter but I never got the time. Now Esther sends me a reminder. So here is this note to tell you that though I cannot write, I can never forget you. I hope both of you are happier than before.

Love and kisses to both of you.

BAPU

My Dear Child, p. 122
205. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

June 26, 1936

CHI. MARY.

Your letter. The receipt of the cheque and the credit-note for £800 disturb me. I do not know how to overtake this work. God will open the way.

I know Margaret was looking forward to the Assam work.

The Christian sadhu must be a real sadhu. You will tell me more about him, if there is more to tell me.

You must fight this terrible reduction in weight. You should discover the cause and remove it, even if it means another vacation. Are you taking balanced diet? Do tell me what it is.

I am glad you have stumbled upon weavers.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Mira is now in Varoda, 1\(\frac{1}{2}\) miles from here.

From a photostat: G.N. 6064. Also C.W. 3394. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

206. LETTER TO G.V. KETKAR

June 26, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

I have just finished reading your note.

I do not remember the incidents referred to by you.

If you do not strain the meaning of whatever I said, your interesting research does not affect my general position. But if there is in your opinion a real conflict between my remark and your discovery, I have no hesitation in saying that your discovery should be preferred to my remark

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

G.V. KETKAR
‘MARHATTA’ OFFICE
568 NARAYAN PETH, POONA 2

From a photostat: G.N. 7866. Also C.W. 983. Courtesy: G.V. Ketkar

207. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 26, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

After I had half torn up Prema’s letter, which I am enclosing, I remembered that I should be sending it to you. Hence I joined the pieces.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8497. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

208. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

June 26, 1936

CHI. AMTUSSALAAM,

What do you want me to withdraw? You say, “You should not have sent Sharma at all. I am not going to follow his instructions.” But I committed the mistake of sending him. Should I not now ask to be forgiven for my mistake? I wrote ‘You used to revere Sharma’; and you say, “I worship no man.” Now tell me how we should manage to agree with each other. I, on my part, revere everyone, including you. I thought you revered Kanti, you worshipped Draupadi. What will the worshipper of God do if he does not worship His creation? Will not one holding me in reverence revere my Kanti? But how can I cope with you? You presume to be a veritable storehouse of knowledge. What do you care for my grace or anybody’s? It is doubtful if you would care for His grace.

1 Vide “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 19-6-1936

VOL. 69 : 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936 171
To be stubborn means ‘to refuse to be persuaded’. Neither by the mother, nor by the brother, nor by a companion, nor even by a poor adopted father like me. Now tell me, who is merciless? You or I? You do not discard your own pride and kiss Bapu’s feet. Only when you sincerely reduce yourself to zero and think that not you but God is the Doer of all things, will your self reveal itself to you. At present, however, your pride has been leading you away. Why don’t you persuade yourself that the work you have is enough and be content? Why should you take up any new work that Bapa might entrust to you? Your agreement with me is that you will do only what I tell you to do. When did you have my permission to take up new work?

Give the enclosed letter¹ to Lilavati when she returns from Badri-Kedar. Krishnan Nair will learn in due course. The letter² for the students accompanies this. Saraswati has gone to the Mahila Ashram.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 378

209. LETTER TO DEVNANDAN AND OTHERS

June 26, 1936

CHI. DEVNANDAN, RAMEHAR, RAMSWARUP, SHRIRAM AND RAMVRIKSHA,

I have your letters. You did well in writing. Out of the four¹ the best handwriting is Devnandan’s, the worst Ramvriksha’s. The least the learners can do is to perfect their handwriting. If the handwriting does not improve now it will be extremely difficult to improve it later. I write a wretched hand and it can hardly be improved in my old age.

And just as we should maintain a neat and tidy hand, so should we keep our heart good and pure. This is the easiest thing to attain.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1084

¹ This is not traceable.
² Vide the following item.
³ A correction in the original suggests that the fifth name was added as an afterthought.
210. LETTER TO SHANNODEVI

June 26, 1936

CHI. SHANNO DEVI,

What can I say to you? Your energies will certainly be misspent on the daily.

From being a teacher you what to become an editor. Although I am your well-wisher, how can I give my blessings to a venture which does not interest me at all?

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

211. BARBAROUS IF TRUE

A correspondent sends me the following paragraph\(^1\) from The Hindu’s own correspondent dated 8th June at Ramnad:

At a meeting of the Devacottah Panchayat Board held on Saturday at the Board’s office,... the usual procedure was adopted, viz., the Harijan member entered the meeting hall, signed his signature in the attendance register, receded to the exit door of the meeting hall, and stood all the while till the close of the meeting...

I take the following\(^2\) from his letter enclosing the cutting from The Hindu:

I am sending herewith a cutting from The Hindu…

The Panchayat Board referred to is in the heart of Chettinad and is supposed to be composed of Congressmen or men who had been elected quite recently on the Congress ticket to advance through local boards and panchayats the aims and objects for which the great Indian National Congress stands.

It is shocking to read that a body like this should in this twentieth century has the audacity to compel a Harijan member to stand out of the meeting hall in spite of the fact that he is himself a member of that body duly elected and representing a section of the community and thereby enjoying all the privileges to which such a membership entitles him...

\(^1\) Of which only excerpts are reproduced here.
\(^2\) ibid

I do not know whether my correspondent is correct in saying that the Devacottah Panchayat is composed of Congressmen. If it is, so much the worse for the Congressmen concerned, for apart from the manifest injustice of the conduct adopted by the Panchayat towards its Harijan members, Congressmen are pledged opponents of untouchability. But whether the Panchayat is composed of Congressmen or not, the conduct of the Board can only be characterized as barbarous, even as it would be of the Legislative Assembly if it made its member Rao Bahadur Rajah stand in a corner whilst its proceedings were going on.

But The Hindu correspondent lets the public know that the procedure is usual for the Devacottah Panchayat. It is to be presumed that the occasion for noticing the usual event has been supplied by the fact that untouchability just now looms large especially in the South. Even if the practice of making Harijan members stand in a corner by certain panchayats is usual, public opinion should make it impossible of repetition. Evidently, however, the paragraph does not appear to have caused any public stir. The editorial columns of the Southern Press seem, too, to have taken no notice of the incident which is ugly enough to demand strong condemnation. Thanks are therefore due to my correspondent for lifting The Hindu paragraph from oblivion.

Not only is the practice barbarous, I think it is also illegal. The Harijan member has a legal right to demand a seat side by side with his fellow members. It would be no answer to the charge that the Harijan member was party to his own insult. I can well understand poor Harijans in remote parts of India being too timid to assert their rights. And for Harijans, Devacottah is unfortunately remote enough.

Anyway, it is the duty of the Provincial and the local Harijan Sevak Sanghs to investigate the matter and take such steps as may be proper to avoid a repetition of the insult offered not merely to the Harijan member but the whole society, if it is jealous of the rights of the least among its members equally with the greatest.

Harijan, 27-6-1936
212. HARIJANS AND ELECTIONS

The talk I had on my return journey from Bangalore, with Shri. A. Kaleswara Rao and Shri V. Kurmiah, a Harijan lawyer, has been published in The Hindu. Friends have written to inquire whether the correspondent of The Hindu has correctly reported the conversation. They also ask me to give my opinion in my own language.

The Hindu correspondent’s version is substantially correct so far as it goes. It omits the preliminary part of the talk. In answer to Shri Kurmiah’s question I said I adhered to the written advice I had sent to Shri Gavai of Nagpur, M.L.C. “But what are we to do if we are not one undivided party, and if individuals or groups are not strong enough to act unaided?” asked Shri Kurmiah.

“Then,” I said, “naturally you will ally yourselves to that party which gives you the greatest advantage. “In my opinion such a party is undoubtedly Congress. It is pledged to the removal of untouchability root and branch; the largest number of Congressmen are to be found among workers engaged in doing anti-untouchability work. But you will do well not to participate in any council boycott or civil resistance campaign, if the Congress is driven to any such thing in the pursuit of its clearly defined goal of complete independence. And this I say, if only because the vast majority of Harijans are hardly equipped for such a fight. Your immediate goal is to vindicate your status of absolute equality which is denied to you in the sacred name of religion by the so-called sanatani Hindus. You ask as if you were only an isolated individual. But all Harijans are not like you. An ocean separates you from the fellow-Harijans in education and understanding. If I am true to you, I must speak only in terms of the vast mass of illiterate Harijans in whose name Harijan members of councils will speak.”

This is the purport of the conversation and it represents my considered opinion. The reader will be interested to know that this was the advice I tendered Harijans even when I launched on the first civil resistance campaign and prevented Ashram Harijans from either joining the campaign or the exodus from the Ashram.

Harijan, 27-6-1936
213. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

WARDHA,
June 27, 1936

MY DEAR MALKANI,

My whole heart goes out to you. You ought to tear yourself away from Rukmini for a time and [rest your nerves a bit.]

I fancy that the trouble with Bapa is partly due to the tension under which you are living.

Why should you worry about boys from Delhi or the provinces. If you succeed in training the boys you have so that they become good citizens and wage earners, your fame will spread and you will have to reject applications for want of space.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 922

214. FRAGMENT OF A LETTER

June 27, 1936

My Europe is in Segaon. It is difficult even to wait till September.¹

The Hindu, 1-7-1936

215. LETTER TO A HARIJAN WORKER²³

June 27, 1936

Hinduism is not opposed to humanism. Untouchability being a disease peculiar to Hinduism, our work in this regard should be confined to Hindus alone. There can be no such expression as a Muslim untouchable. The problem you have to face is due to the peculiar local conditions. If someone who was a Harijan yesterday is a Christian today, we need not take note of such conversion. To us he

¹ The portion in square brackets is very faint in the source.
² A correspondent from Calcutta had enquired whether the Press report about Gandhiji’s sailing in September for Europe was correct.
³ Of the Punjab

176 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
remains a Harijan so long as he receives help from us. Of course if a person is educated it is a different matter. For instance, if someone is getting aid for his college education he ceases to be entitled to it on his conversion.

Yours,
M. K. GANDHI

[From Hindi]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

216. TALK WITH A FRIEND

[About June 27, 1936]

We all know that conditions of life in a village are particularly hard in the monsoon. Why then should I not begin with that rich experience and wait until conditions were better? I had been nursing the thought of going to live in a village ever since I had heard of the experiences of Timappa Naik and his friends, and I tell you that now that I am there, I grudge having to come here even for a single day. I came this week because it would have been too much to expect all the members of the Working Committee and other friends to tramp to Segaon in this weather. But I may tell you that though I am here, my mind is there.

Harijan, 11-7-1936

217. LETTER TO GITA BAJAJ

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 28, 1936

CHI. GITA

You should live up to your name. Widowhood and the married state are not of our choosing. No one has control over life and death.

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 From the reference to the Working Committee meeting it is evident that the conversation took place at Wardha where Gandhiji had gone to attend the meeting on June 27 and stayed on for a week.
3 Widow of Girdharilal, Jamnalal Bajaj’s nephew who had met with an untimely death
Hence remain calm and dedicate yourself to service. I just got the news from Jamnalalji. Write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

Gandhiji aur Rajasthan, p. 204

218. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 29, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

This is merely a love letter. Nothing to say except that I am praying for your relief. Do not make any experiments is the lesson to be learnt from this new experience. ¹

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6350. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9816

219. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM BAVISHI

WARDHA,

June 29, 1936

BHAI BAVISHI,

Unless I write this postcard, writing to you may be delayed. God will surely lead you to where your mind is fixed. You will find no one to advance you money until your experiments succeed. The Bhangi quarter incident is surprising.

To you both,

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 126. Also C.W. 4751. Courtesy: Purushottam Bavishi

¹ In Bapu’s Letters to Mira, Mirabehn says: “As far as I can remember, I had tried eating a wild plant panwar, as vegetable, which the villagers had recommended.”
220. LETTER TO PYARELAL

WARDHA,
June 29, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

Today is a silence-day. And then there is your letter. I have not been able to see all the letters. I have glanced through your original letter. I had been waiting for your letter every day. I had intended to write you a letter of reprimand. But I could not find the time. Then your letter came and I was relieved of the anxiety.

Is it clear to you that my letter did not mean what you had understood it to mean? I shall know this when I read your letter in full. I shall read the papers enclosed with it and shall write you another letter if necessary. I must have your letters regularly.

I have understood about Sushila. Only God knows to what extent I can win her heart. I will certainly try. I have always tried to draw her to me. As in the case of others, in Sushila’s case also my attempt has been to be a mother and a father. But I was not aware that she had greater need of a father. In my future efforts I shall remember this. I shall be willing to keep her at Segaon if she can carry on there, and I shall take work from her to my heart’s content. This is of course my aspiration and yours. But there is no question of my imposing my aspiration and yours on her. Let her do only as much as she wishes. I shall be ready from my side.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I shall definitely go to Segaon on the 6th if not on the 5th.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

221. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

June 29, 1936

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

Your letter was up to my expectations. Munnalal should have got well by now. He is not very restless, is he? I am sending a bottle of... milk. He should drink as much as he can and you can drink the rest or make it into curds. Do return the bottle. I shall send some milk tomorrow, too.

I understand what you say about the well. Let us be patient. All will be well.

Your work is indeed progressing splendidly.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1885

222. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

_Chinna Mira,

If there is no satisfactory clearance, why not castor oil or Epsom salt. If you need any other opening medicine, I can send it. Shall I send any vegetable from here?

Love.

_BAPU_

From the original: C.W. 6351. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9817

223. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

_Wardha,

June 30, 1936

Chinna Prabha,

I destroy your letter, but why does it need to be destroyed?

Your time-table shows that you sleep very little. Why can’t you sleep soon at night? Do you worry about anything? You should go to bed uttering Ramanama. I see that you don’t sleep during day-time either. You should have some sleep during the day also. It will be good if you take more milk. I follow your point about Patna. It seems to be your destiny not to be able to live with Jayaprakash and serve him. At Segaon either Balwantsinha or Munnalal cooks for me. Both of them insisted on living there. My food continues to be what it was, i.e., what you used to cook. I continue to take garlic and onions. The weight is 112 lb. At the moment I am in Wardha and shall go to Segaon on Saturday or Sunday. Mirabehn is at Varoda. It is a mile and a half from Segaon. She is alone. When I go this time Lilavati might perhaps accompany me. My programme at Segaon so far has been writing letters and seeing visitors. I dispense medicines to the patients who turn up. How can I say what will happen next? We have there a goat and a cow. Cow’s milk is for Mirabehn.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3477

224. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA AND MUNNALAL G. SHAH

June 30, 1936

CHI. BALWANTSINHA AND MUNNALAL,

I shall find some other remedy for the worms. All my thoughts are with you.

I am again sending the milk today. It is no trouble. Yesterday too I sent it of my own accord. I have not met Kanchan¹ so far; she might come today.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]²

You may use Jamnalalji’s portion, and Nanavati may use Ba’s. Hurry up with the weaving shed as soon as the skies are clear. What more need I say in the matter? Fill up the vacancy that might occur. Here too there is sure to be some vacancy. The person who has to do the work should find out what must be done.

From a photostat of the Hindi: C.W. 6995. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah. Also G.N. 8299

¹ Munnalal’s wife
² The postscript which is in Gujarati is written on the reverse of the letter.
225. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 1, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Yours is a good report. It is raining here. I am going to try to come on 5th. 6th is the real date.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6352. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9818

226. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

WARDHA,

July 2, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Do not try to come here unless you feel quite up to the mark and the day is fine. Mohanlal is going to the bazaar to get bhaji for you and if it is available it will be sent. If the bearer does not bring bhaji from here, try Segaon.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6353. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9819

227. LETTER TO NARAYAN SWAMI

July 2, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

Pressure of work has prevented me all these days from thanking you for all the care with which you attended to the arrangements of our stay in Nandi and Bangalore. While I am thankful to the State for the generous hospitality extended to me and my party, I know that our comfortable stay had not a little to do with your careful stewardship.

Yours sincerely,

NARAYAN SWAMI
BANGALORE

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
228. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

[July] 2, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

See that Balwantsinha does not fall ill. For the present, follow Mirabehn’s instructions.

I understand the trouble caused by the strap. Only wait and watch where you can do nothing. Diwanji may help if he can. We shall see what can be done when I come. I am sending the milk....

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Kanchan, Hiramani and Bhai came to see me today.

SH. MUNNALAL
SEGAON

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8602. Also C.W. 6994. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

229. MESSAGE TO “INDIAN OPINION”

July 2, 1936

The Editor of Indian Opinion asks me to send a message for the Diwali number of the paper. How can there be any Diwali—festival of lamps—for one who has a Holi—an all consuming fire—burning in his heart? How can one celebrate Diwali when one’s ears are filled with the sighs of the millions of the living dead in this country? All I can think of saying to the readers of Indian Opinion is this: Celebrate Diwali by all means, but don’t forget the skeletons in India. Set apart a share for them first.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4853

1 The source has “June” which obviously is a slip. It is evident from the contents that this was written after the letter to the addressee dated June 30, 1936; vide “Letter to Balwantsinha and Munnalal G. Shah”, 30-6-1936
2 The source is damaged here.
3 Addressee’s brother’s daughter
4 Addressee’s brother
230. LETTER TO MUNNALAL SHAH

[Before July 3, 1936]

CHI. MUNNALAL,

This man will bring sulphur if available. Smoke away the sulphur for about an hour. I am sending a spray pump and also some liquid Flit if available. You may be knowing how to use Flit. If not, we will use it when I come there. And then, what right have I to advise you when you are prepared to put up with the pest. But I will certainly go there and find some remedy for the irritation. It should be easy for you to discover a remedy. Have you not studied chemistry?

Why have you stopped taking milk? At present both of you should take it. Reduce the quantity of cereals.

There is nothing about the Mahar affair in today’s letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 8601

231. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

WARDHA,
July 3, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I hope you found everything in order in Segaon. I am making a desperate effort to reach Segaon on Sunday. Yes, I read Mrs. Sanger’s speech. Most leaders have gone. It was an anxious time.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6354. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9820

1 From the contents; vide “Letter to Munnalal G. Shah”, 3-7-1936
232. LETTER TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

July 3, 1936

MY DEAR SUBHAS,

I have just received your letter. I hope to be able to write to you as frequently as I hear from you. I know what it means to prisoners or detenus to receive letters from friends.¹

I am asking Mahadev to see that Harijan is sent to you every week.

If it is of any use, you may inform the authorities that any views you may express on non-political matters, I have no desire to publish unless permission is given thereto.

Love.

M. K. GANDHI

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

233. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

July 3, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I am sending the milk as usual, as also sulphur, a Flitsprayer and a bottle of Flit. We shall use the sulphur when I come but use the Flit right now. Climb on a ladder or a pile of planks and spray it into the thatch twice or thrice a day. Send back the bottle when the liquid is used up. We shall fill it again.

Ba will not come; Lilavati may. Most probably I shall come on Sunday if there is no rain. But then as He wills.

I understand what you say about the Mahar. Have the labourers started coming?

To you both,

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8600. Also C.W. 6996. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

¹ The addressee was in Darjeeling jail.
234. LETTER TO PYARELAL

WARDHA,
July 3, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I am sending you this brief note in order not to keep you without a letter. I have received your letter only today. But I am so deep in work that I have not yet found the time to read your letter. Perhaps I shall be able to read it only when I go to Segaon. A lot of people are coming and going. Do I not know your feelings? Do not think that your dreams will never become a reality. You must proceed on the assumption that they will come true.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

235. FOR KHADI-WEARERS

Here are two extracts\(^1\) from a longish letter from a Bihar correspondent:

I have a complaint against you. I am a habitual khadi-wearer. I have been using khadi since its first appearance.... If I ever be obliged to give up khadi due to my poor circumstances, I shall be much pained. And the present unexpected increase in its prices without proportion will, I fear, drag me to that verge.... This will, I think, bring about the total collapse of the khadi movement.

I am told that you desire to pay more to the poor spinners... But from whose pockets?... It will certainly be death to poor khadi-wearers if they are obliged to give up an ideal for which they stood and bravely fought... Your present decision is a great blunder. I fear by this you mean to give the movement a decent burial.

The following\(^2\) is taken from a U.P. correspondent:

...Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru has so much minimized the importance, necessity and utility of khadi that many staunch khadi-wearers are placed in a

---

\(^1\) Only excerpts are reproduced here.
\(^2\) Only excerpts are reproduced here.
fix and the weaker believers have got a secure shelter behind Panditji. The Congress has also relaxed the rigidity in the use of khadi and you seem to be finding solace in your determined silence. Would you just guide us and let us know our duty under the present circumstances? Another difficulty lies on account of the existing organization of the supplying source of khadi, the All-India Spinners’ Association. Under the present conditions khadi is becoming dearer and dearer and its supply is growing less and less. The independent and individual khadi producers have been almost debarred from producing even a yard of khadi. The rules and restrictions seem, firstly, unreasonable, secondly, almost impossible to be followed, and thirdly, they are applied in an objectionable way and not in the spirit they might have been stipulated by you... How do you justify the restrictions imposed on the private khadi producers who have been compelled to abandon their production?

There is a similar complaint from C.P. National Scouts. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru was, as has been made clear by him, misreported. 1 In common with the other believers in khadi, till the country has attained its freedom he thinks khadi to be a vital necessity. His doubt about its economic value has a place, if at all, only when independence is achieved and industrialization on a vast scale takes place in the country. Surely no wise man will give up khadi now for fear of its being overwhelmed by industrialization which may or may not envelop India in the far-off future. The restrictions on private producers are intended as well in the interests of artisans, especially the spinners, as the buyers. If they are removed the market will be flooded with spurious khadi resulting in spinners being put out of work and the buyers being deceived. If there is irregularity in the working of the regulations, attention of the Secretary should be drawn to it and it will be set right without delay.

The increase in prices is the only question that demands satisfactory answer. It should be remembered that when khadi was not half as good as it is now and when there was much less variety, it was much dearer than under the new scale and there was hardly any complaint against the prices then ruling. Whilst the buyers have been benefiting all these many years, the spinners had till now practically no benefit whatsoever in the shape of rise in wages. They were dumb and helpless. They could not declare a strike against the Association. In the very nature of things, they could not combine, being so scattered for the betterment of wages or anything else. They were in such need of even pies that they could not make any effective protest. If now the conscience of a few of us has begun to rebel against the wretchedly low wage given to the spinners, we deserve help from the buyers who have hitherto enjoyed the privilege of reduction in prices. The difficulty of poor buyers is obvious. But the value of khadi lies in its social and moral value. If the khadi buyers understand the implications of khadi, they will not complain of rise in prices, if and when it is conclusively shown, as it can be in the present instance, to be due to the increase in the wages of the spinners concerned. If they have the will they will discover many ways of making up for the increase they might have to bear in the purchase of khadi. But this they will do if they have burnt their boats and resolved never to use any other cloth but khadi so long as they are in India. If they leave an escape-door, they will make use of it on emergency. Invention comes generally from necessity. If the correspondents had made up their minds that for them there was no other cloth but khadi, they would not have written as they have done but, like the very large number who are no whit better off than these correspondents, they would have accommodated themselves to the slight increase that has taken place in the price of khadi.

---

1 Vide “A False Alarm”, 6-6-1936

At the same time let me comfort the correspondents by giving them the assurance that every care is being taken to make the increase as slight as possible for the poor lovers of khadi. Let them too peruse the reports from Rajendra Babu and the Secretary, A.I.S.A., Tamil Nad, on the great success that is attending the new experiment in giving unsolicited increase to spinners in their wages. If khadi-lovers will have patience, they will find that, if the price of khadi has slightly increased, there has been corresponding improvement in the quality and durability of khadi.

_Harijan, 4-7-1936_

236. INFANTICIDE OF GIRLS

It is difficult to believe that even today a cruel inhuman custom like infanticide of girls is prevalent in this unfortunate country. But, the letter that lies before me forces me to believe it. In the village Amarpur, in Bhagalpur District, Bihar, an association to oppose such infanticide among Rajputs has been formed. The secretary of this body has written a very sad letter in this regard. A few excerpts from it are given below.

Dharma teaches us that all souls are one. Plurality, being momentary, is only an illusion. Nationalism, too, teaches us this same lesson. We do not think of ourselves as Rajputs, or Biharis, Punjabis and so on. We consider ourselves Indians and we believe ourselves to be one nation and persuade others to believe so. Therefore whether from the point of view of religion or of patriotism we are one; the responsibility of the misconduct of any one falls on all of us. For this reason we are all responsible for the infanticide of girls among Rajputs, whether we are Rajputs or from any other community. Had we not been indifferent to one another’s faults and troubles, infanticide of girls could not have continued to this day. There is no religious excuse and no need for this. There might have been a time when the life of a Rajput was insecure and therefore the birth of girls was considered calamitous. Today this excuse does not exist. It cannot be said that the lives of Rajputs are less safe than those of the others. War no longer threatens the Rajputs. Today a Rajput does not have to sleep with his sword by his side. There is still a Rajput community, no doubt, but there is nothing like the special dharma of the Rajputs. Why then this infanticide of girls? Why should girls be a burden? The burden certainly is on those who buy husbands for their daughters and have to pay such exorbitant prices that they are all but ruined. It is God’s mercy that they have not reached the stage of killing their daughters. I am not aware if any excuse is put forward for the infanticide of Rajput girls. If there is any such excuse, it is the duty of this new association to throw light on the subject.

But even if there is a cause, it is our duty to remove it. No excuse can be accepted for the continuance of this barbarous custom. Public opinion must be mobilized to abolish this custom soon. The burden of mobilizing public opinion must fall on the Rajput Kanya Vadha Virodhini Sabha. This endeavour will not bear fruit by long speeches nor by passing resolutions. A little of both these will be needed. But the most important thing is a complete picture of the facts. You should prepare a chart which should tell at one glance where the infanticide of girls takes place and the number of girls killed in the previous year. It may be difficult to obtain the number of girls killed, it may even be impossible. The point is that all available information must be gathered and the Sabha’s message conveyed to every home where there is a possibility of such an incident. Mere publishing of the resolutions in newspapers will have no effect on the parents who resort to this practice. It is important for the workers of the Sabha to remember that they should not exaggerate facts in any way. By ceaseless, sincere and peaceful efforts success in this cause can be attained soon. This is what I think and believe.

1 These are not translated here.

[From Hindi]

_Harijan Sevak, 4-7-1936_

237. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

WARDHA,
July 4, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I still entertain the hope of coming tomorrow. No more just now. I am in the midst of a meeting.

Love.

_BAPU_

From the original: C.W. 6355. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9821

238. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

July 4, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I am sending the milk and the Flit. I expect to reach there tomorrow when I shall go into the Mahar problem.

_Blessings to you both from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8599. Also C.W. 6997. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

239. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

July 4, 1936

CHI. KANU,

Only half the work has been done. As you spoke to me of seven annas I mentioned the same amount to Govind. He promptly gave me four annas and will be giving the three now. I shall send the money there. Debit it to the expense account and credit it on getting it from there.

Ramjilal may take his meals there as he pays for his board.

Never mind the Flit tin. I shall enter it into the accounts here.

You may change the time for the recitation of the Ramayana though we shall revert to the existing practice after I come...1 it is good to have accounts which suit the convenience of all.

Send the pair of tongs which was set apart exclusively for my use, as also the griddle, and the saucepan if they have come back after welding. They get Marathi newspapers there; please send one or two of them. I should now have a red pen. For Munnalal a letter pad of ordinary unlined paper. Enclosed please find [letters] for Krishnadas, Kaka, Shambhu Dayal....2

I hope you are in very good humour.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Tell Mahadev, if he is there when you get this, that I don’t need fruit.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXI

240. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

July 4, 1936

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

I had not told Mahadev to write to you about the museum. I had instructed him to write only about the other buildings. You might remember that when I talked to you about my requirements I had stated the need of Rs. 1,00,000 for the purpose of erecting the other buildings. Later I included among them also the schools already constructed although at the time of mentioning one lakh I had excluded the school, for I had planned to use the amount for the other buildings only. But the construction of the school has involved a heavy expenditure which the Sangh is unable to meet fully. I had an impression that you had already transferred some funds out of the one lakh to Bachcharaj and Co. Now I learn that nothing has been deposited there to this account. Hence I sent you a letter¹ at Trivandrum which probably did not reach you. If any sum can be drawn now from this amount it may be done.

1 Illegible in the source
2 ibid

You must have got the copy of my letter² to Dr. Moonje. What has been settled with Parnerkar?

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From Hindi: C.W. 8020. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

241. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
_July 6, 1936_

MY DEAR REBEL,

Having returned to Segaon last evening I can deal with correspondence.

How can a young man of 67 say from experience whether men (for women I won’t be allowed to speak) become obstinate on old age creeping in?

Yes, I would gladly forgo the pleasure of having Idiot talk to me by post when she is attending to Malaviyaji who needs considerate listeners like you. How I would love to see him rest for a year! But he won’t. He will die-in harness. God bless him. Nevertheless he departs from धर्म in refusing to rest when both mind and body need to. You and I must not imitate him, though you are inclined always like him to overdo things. You must recognize it as an unpardonable weakness.

I shall find work for you in Bezwada if I know definitely when and how many hours you will be there.

You must impose silence on yourself to give your poor throat some rest. Do you know that a specialist has enjoined on Jawaharlal a week’s complete silence on pain of having a complete breakdown. Not even a whisper allowed. Will you listen? Or will you prove the idiotic obstinate princess who will listen to no one? You will give me the definite date of your coming. Mira is happy in her cottage. Her village instinct is a marvel to me.

¹ Not traceable
² _ibid_

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Encl. for Malaviyaji.¹

From the original: C.W. 3581. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6390

242. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

July 6, 1936

CHI. MARY,

This is by return post. Nothing wrong in your getting registered as a voter.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6065. Also C.W. 3395. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

243. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

July 6, 1936

DEAR HENRY,

This will be presented to you by Kamalnayan Bajaj, the eldest son of Jamnalalji. However much we may fight Great Britain, London is increasingly becoming our Mecca or Kashi. Kamalnayan is no exception. I have advised him to take up a course in the London School of Economics. Perhaps you will put him in touch with prof. Laski who may not mind guiding young Bajaj. Muriel has undertaken to mother him.

Please treat this also as acknowledgment of your letter received some time ago. I am trying to become a villager. The place where I am writing this has a population of about 600—no roads, no post-office, no shop.

Love to you all.

Bhai

From a photostat: G.N. 3053

¹ This is not traceable.
244. LETTER TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

July 6, 1936

CHI. KAMALNAYAN,

I am sending herewith three letters of introduction which will serve the purpose. Woodbrooke is in Birmingham. It is an excellent institution. You should establish contact with these persons quite soon. As I am writing this, I think I should send you a letter addressed to Prof. Horace Alexander also. That makes four letters'. Prof. Alexander belongs to Woodbrooke. Write to me regularly. Listen to everyone, but do what you consider best and what agrees best with the hopes you raised in us when you went. There is no end of temptations out there. Live up to your name and, recalling its qualities, remain untouched by the mire although surrounded by it, as does the lotus. Then all will be well. Don’t delve beyond your depth and don’t compete with anybody. Your potentiality will develop to its best if you make good use of every moment. Study deeply the Ramayana and the Gita, reading them every day. You will of course read the Gita in the original but also keep with you a copy of Edwin Arnold’s Song Celestial.

Blessings from

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3052

245. LETTER TO HORACE ALEXANDER

July 6, 1936

MY DEAR HORACE,

This will be presented to you by young Kamalnayan Bajaj, the eldest son of Jamnalalji. I have advised him to join the London School of Economics. But if you think of anything better, please guide him likewise. In any case, I have asked him to put himself in touch with the Woodbrooke school of thought. The rest I leave to you.

Love to you, Olive and all other friends.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1425

1 Of these only two are available; vide the preceding and the following items.
2 Kamalnayan literally means “lotus-eyed”.

194 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
246. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

July 6, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I have your telegram and the two letters. In the matter of Saraswati, I did what Kanti had suggested. I wired to you at Kanti’s instance as you could have returned after seeing her although I was afraid you would not be able to come. There was no question whatever of Saraswati or Kanti going there. We shall now see what to do when Saraswati returns.

What you write about Mahila Ashram is not at all proper. The institution has been growing day by day and girls have had to be refused admission. It is not right to say that Saraswati cannot stay just because Rajkishori, for instance, could not. The reason for Saraswati’s not staying was quite different. I don’t have the time to explain all that.

I like the idea of your going through the operation during the holidays. Viyogi Hari will tell you more. Kanti and Saraswati left only yesterday for Trivandrum. Lilavati is with me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 339

247. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

July 6, 1936

CHI. NARAHARI,

I forgot to speak to you of one thing that I had intended. Nimu wants to go and stay there. Here she has no opportunity for studies. Besides, Sumitra would thus be under her supervision. The subjects she wants to learn are English, Arithmetic, History, Geography (i.e., through Gujarati), as also vocal music and the sitar. I would send her to the Vidyapith if you thought she could study there and she would not in any other way add to your inconvenience.

She should do her own cooking and of course pay the rent, etc. She should give one hour to service of Harijans. She can teach tailoring, music (elementary) and Gujarati (elementary). You are [not] to accept her for my sake. I inquire about it as I would be glad to fulfil her wish if it could be done without difficulty.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9095

248. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR
July 6, 1936

BAPA,

At Wardha I can hardly lift my head and read letters, and if I manage to read them I cannot reply to them. And what is more, if I am to live long, I must avoid working till late at night, or in the small hours of the morning.

Do call a meeting of the Committee in August to discuss the subjects you suggest. Obtain Jamnalalji’s consent. I shall be occupied between August 10 and 12.

I have followed the point regarding contributions. It is surprising that you had no success in Bombay. I do not think we should cut down on work everywhere, though all the provinces should certainly become self-supporting.

In accepting conditional Government aid for Kodambakkam I can see nothing but ruin. I had mentioned to the Rao Bahadur very strong reasons and I thought he had been convinced. I now see I was mistaken. The chief reason of course is that if the money is not forthcoming from the Hindus even for this small institution, the Sangh or the Hindus cannot take the credit for running it. Of course if you say we are concerned with the end and not with the argument, then I shall have nothing to say. But even so I shall insist that considering the origin of the Sangh, if nothing else, our ideal should be not to shoulder any burden that the Hindus would not share. The rest is a matter of method or means. If it is somehow worth while running it even with Government aid, why should not the Committee run it on its own independently of the Sangh? I would be interested in keeping the Sangh’s foundations firm and strong, though the range of my understanding is limited to Segaon. Hence the correct decision would be the one that the Committee takes after they have listened to me.

My Malaya or whatever you call it is Segaon, at least for the present. If God lets me spend three seasons here, I would deem it great favour of the Big Brother. But what flattery can work with Him?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1163

249. LETTER TO K. NATARAJAN

WARDHA,
July 7, 1936

Mahadev has just sent me your letter. The editorial you have sent me from Unity is extraordinary. The views attributed to me and reproduced in inverted commas were never uttered by me and, what is more, they have never been held by me.¹ From nothing that I have heard from Jawaharlal’s lips have I ever even suspected that he contemplated the use of violence for the attainment of India’s independence.² It is surprising how Dr. Holmes has allowed himself to be duped into thinking that I had ever made the remarks said to have been made by me. You can make whatever use you like of this letter and to save time you may pass on this letter to Dr. Holmes if you think it proper.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

250. LETTER TO KHURSHEDBEHN NAOROJI

July 7, 1936

Your statement contains a statement of eternal truth. But your previous letter contained a definite complaint which you had a perfect right to make. Indeed it was your duty to do so. Do you not owe it to me [that you should tell me] who were the culprits and what they had done? After all we approach eternal verities only by tackling details in terms thereof. Anyway, whatever glimpses I may have of truth I owe ¹ Vide “Are We Rivals?”, on or before 22-7-1936.

² The report in Unity inter alia said: “Elected President of the Indian National Congress at its recent meeting at Lucknow, Nehru came out for a use of violence in the struggle for independence, and is reported to be planning a movement to shake British rule in India.”
principally, if not entirely, to attention to the minutest details, always keeping the supreme objective in view. Do please therefore help.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

251. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 8, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I have just received your letter. I was seeking time to be able to write to you on the events in Wardha. Your letter makes it difficult. I would however just like to say that the letter of withdrawal does not bear the meaning you put upon it when it was given to you. It was sent to you after I had seen it. The sending of such a letter in the place of resignation was my suggestion. I wish that you could take a juster view of that letter. In any case I am firmly of opinion that during the remainder of the year, all wrangling should cease and no resignations should take place. A.I.C.C. will be paralysed and powerless to deal with the crisis. It will be torn between two emotions. It would be most unfair to spring upon it a crisis, in the name of democracy, which it has never been called upon to face. You are exaggerating the implications of the letter. I must not argue. But I would urge you to consider the situation calmly and not succumb to it in a moment of depression so unworthy of you. Why should you not allow your ...

1 Of July 5, in which the addressee had complained about the attitude of some of his colleagues of the Working Committee with whom he had differences of opinion. At the meeting of the Working Committee held at Wardha on June 29, these differences had come into such sharp focus that seven members of the Working Committee, namely, Rajendra Prasad, C. Rajagopalachari, Jairamdas Doulatram, Jinnahal Bajaj, Vallabhbhai Patel, J.B. Kripalani and S.D. Deo, found it necessary to submit their resignation from that body, which on Gandhiji’s suggestion they later withdrew. Rajendra Prasad, however, sent a personal letter to Jawaharlal Nehru on July 1, explaining in detail the reasons which had impelled him and the others to send their resignation letter. All the three documents, viz., the letter of resignation dated June 29, Rajendra Prasad’s letter to Nehru dated July 1, and Nehru’s letter to Gandhiji dated July 5, not reproduced here, are to be found in A Bunch of Old Letters.

The differences in the Working Committee, which had become apparent at the Lucknow Session itself, at which Nehru was elected President, revolved round the question how far the Congress could commit itself to socialism in its programme. “The President,” Pattabhi Sitaramayya says, “was out of tune with the majority of the Working Committee.”
humour to play upon the meetings of the W. C.? Why should it be so difficult for you to get on with those with whom you have worked without a jar for years? If they are guilty of intolerance, you have more than your share of it. The country should not be made to suffer for your mutual intolerance.

I do hope you have accepted the very sane advice of the German doctor.

Love.

BAPU

252. LETTER TO GLADYS OWEN

July 8, 1936

DEAR GLADYS,

I am glad you have accepted a year’s appointment from the Rajghat Theosophical School¹. Anyway it will enable you to gain some experience of Indian students and you will certainly be able to give something to the boys or girls who may be under your charge.

Yes, Abbas Tyabji is the one of Baroda whom you had intended to see and who, alas, is no more. He was one of the noblest of men I had the good fortune to meet, and you should still nurse the desire of meeting the members of his family. They are all chips of the old block, and especially Raihana, one of the daughters of the deceased. She is not only most accomplished but she is also deeply spiritual.

Love.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6192

253. LETTER TO ATULANANDA CHAKRABARTY

July 8, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

I had your letter. I wish you would appreciate my own difficulty. My method of approach to the question is unfortunately different from yours. I would therefore at least for the time being suggest that you serve according to your own line. If your method ever commends itself to me I should have no difficulty inaccepting it and for any organized efforts I would not do otherwise than to refer you to the Congress. Do not expect any paragraph from me. You will presently find that if I am to do the village work on which I am bent, I should have to cease correspondence at least for the time being.

¹ At Varanasi

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 1475. Courtesy: A.K. Sen

254. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

July 8, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

What a strange letter! It won’t do if you keep falling ill time and again. Why do you not ask leave of everybody and come away here if you never keep fit there? Being ill, you will not be serving but taking service from them all. I could write to Jayaprakash if you wish. Why don’t you say boldly what you have in your mind? You talk brave things to me but, I am afraid, you secretly worry all the while, which is not going to help in any way. Jayaprakash saw me. He writes that in Patna you will be living together. The Banaras proposal seems to have blown over completely. It seems he has already taken a house at Patna. He told me that the place was good. I think you know all this.

Kanti has gone to Trivandrum, taking Saraswati with him. His address is: C/o G. Ramachandran, Harijan Sevak Sangh, Trivandrum. He will return in a month.

Wire about your health as soon as you get this.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3478
255. LETTER TO JIVANJI D. DESAI

July 8, 1936

I have gone through the Glossary¹. I presume the meanings given are just the ones given in Anasaktiyoga². It looks quite all right.

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9943. Also C.W. 6918. Courtesy: Jivanji D. Desai

256. TELEGRAM TO LADY FAZL-I-HUSSAIN

[July 10, 1936]³

PRAY ACCEPT MY CONDOLENCES.⁴ I HAVE NOTHING BUT PLEASANT RECOLLECTIONS OF MANY HAPPY INTERVIEWS I HAD WITH YOUR DISTINGUISHED HUSBAND.

The Hindu, 13-7-1936

257. LETTER TO NARASINHRAO B. DIVATIA

July 10, 1936

SUJNA BHAISHRI,

If Gokulbhai were not to give me the news of the passing of your life companion, then who else would? He is one of your many admirers. Where is the need for offering condolence to you? I had been hearing about your illness. I did not know anything about Sushilabehn. Truly God tests his devotees. You have passed through many ordeals. You have to pass all the tests. To those whom God tests He seems to give strength to bear suffering. Your faith in God will make even an atheist a believer. May you always succeed.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

¹ Gitapadarthakosha
² Gandhiji’s Gujarati translation of the Bhagavad Gita.
³ Vide footnote 1, “Letter to Kanu Gandhi”, 10-7-1936
⁴ The addressee had lost her husband on July 9.
258. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

July 10, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I have your letter and follow what you say. I don’t mind how long you stay there provided you preserve your health. You can do much work while there. Meditate on what the verses of Chapter II say and try to live accordingly. Be cheerful, concentrating your attention on the duty facing you at a given time. Try to live on milk, curds, vegetables, fruit and rotli. Don’t touch dal.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3467

259. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 10, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. I shall certainly make use of the figures you have given, and I have made a note of the corrections you have sent me. It is good that you are constantly thinking of khadi. That is as it should be. Swadeshi is one of our eleven vows. And from the beginning khadi has been considered the core of swadeshi. Even so, we have very few people giving constant thought to khadi. That is why the khadi activity is not as widespread as it ought to be.

There is chaos in national education, too. There are many who talk about it, few who understand it. Those who understand it seldom put it into practice. But there is no doubt that true national education is as I have described it. Therefore, just as we cannot permit any adulteration of khadi whether it succeeds or not, so, too, we cannot permit adulteration of national education. And if, without our adulterating it even one student pursues it with love, I will say that national education is going on, its future is bright.

1 Of the Bhagavad Gita
2 Chapati

But I would not say that national education was flourishing merely because a number of children pursued what passed for national education but which was not really national education. This view of mine notwithstanding, you should go on doing what you can to the best of your ability. Do not derive any meaning from my words, other than that you will have my co-operation when you are fed up with adulteration and seek to introduce basic changes. You once asked me regarding Kanu’s clothing. I do not remember if I replied to you. If I have not, all that I have to say is that you need not worry.

Getting used to as little clothing as possible helps towards a healthy body. I do, therefore, take care of Kanu’s clothing to the extent of preserving his health. At the moment it would seem his training, too, is proceeding fast though the credit may not go to Mahadev. As neither Navin nor Kanti is here, I have to take from Kanu alone the work the two of them would be doing. So Kanu is getting his fill of training in the process. But this is the impression I get. The impression that Kanu gets should be the correct one. For the present I see very little of him and so have not been able to ask him about it. He remains deeply immersed in work and has no errands to run for Mahadev.

It seems Manju’ is progressing well. Is Kusum’ keeping fit? Did she gain or did she lose from her recent travels?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8498. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Daughter of Vrajlal A. Gandhi
2 ibid
260. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

July 10, 1936

CHI. KANU,

There used to be two nozzles with me, of which one has come here and the other is left behind. Send it over if you find it. I need my takli box, which has not come.

The letter to Narandas contains a reference to you. If I am correct, write so to him; write to me also whether it is correct. I enclose the text of a telegram\(^1\). Please despatch it immediately. The letters to be posted are there as usual. Today you have to bear the whole burden single-handed! Won’t you shoulder the work by yourself when it comes to you some day for good? Won’t you prove equal to it?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am sending a cheque for Rs. 40 with my endorsement. Send me one or two small bottles which can hold an ounce or two, with corks if you have them there or without.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

261. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

Unrevised

July 10, 1936

BHAISHRI HARIBHAU,

I have had exhaustive talks with L.\(^2\) and S.\(^3\). L. has nothing in her. She did not impress me favourably. S. did. He admitted that they had both been infatuated with each other and remained so. The situation even now is the same. According to S. the infatuation arose out of blameless service. L. kept mum on the point. She was willing to undergo medical examination but I seriously doubt whether she would stand before a doctor if she was really taken to one. S. assured me that the two of them did not reach the last stage of intimacy as they thought of you and me. I saw L.’s father at Beawar. From his

---

\(^1\) Presumably this was the telegram to Lady Fazi-i-Hussain.

\(^2\) The name has been omitted.

\(^3\) ibid
talks I inferred that he had no knowledge of this illicit relationship and I also did not think it necessary to put him wise about it. Her father did not impress me at all. From one of your letters I gathered that you were satisfied that he was really not L.’s father. But another letter of your seems to show that you have now changed your opinion. According to L. he is indeed her father. Having examined the whole thing I, have given this decision:

(1) L. should go to M. and live as his wife.
(2) If she does not wish to do so and can remain free of passion, she should observe brahmacharya.
(3) If she cannot control her passion she should marry some other young man.

She should have kept her relations with S. pure untill marriage. Both claim that they have been pure. I, therefore, do not think it is proper for them to associate with each other. However, if they cannot live without each other’s intimate company, they should do so openly. But in that situation, they cannot expect my blessings. They can then stay neither in the Ashram nor in an institution with which I am closely connected. I fear L. cannot live without S. It is my opinion that she is suffering from hysteria caused by sexual desire. S.’s contact is tainted with passion and aggravates the hysteria.

Now you may do what you think proper.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Haribhau Upadhyaya Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

262. DR. AMBEDKAR’S INDICTMENT—I

The readers will recall the fact that Dr. Ambedkar was to have presided last May at the annual conference of the Jat-Pat-Torak Mandal of Lahore. But the conference itself was cancelled because Dr. Ambedkar’s address was found by the Reception Committee to be unacceptable. How far a Reception Committee is justified in rejecting a President of its choice because of his address that may be objectionable to it is open to question. The Committee knew Dr. Ambedkar’s views on caste and the Hindu scriptures. They knew also that he had in unequivocal terms decided to give up Hinduism. Nothing less than the address that Dr. Ambedkar had prepared was to be expected from him. The Committee appears to have deprived the public of an opportunity of listening to the original views of a man who has carved out for himself a unique position in society. Whatever label he wears in future, Dr. Ambedkar is not the man to allow himself to be forgotten.

1 The name has been omitted.

Dr. Ambedkar was not going to be beaten by the Reception Committee. He has answered their rejection of him by publishing the address at his own expense. He has priced it at 8 annas. I would suggest a reduction to 2 annas or at least 4 annas.

No reformer can ignore the address. The orthodox will gain by reading it. This is not to say that the address is not open to objection. It has to be read if only because it is open to serious objection. Dr. Ambedkar is a challenge to Hinduism. Brought up as a Hindu, educated by a Hindu potentate, he has become so disgusted with the so-called savarna Hindus for the treatment that he and his have received at their hands that he proposes to leave not only them but the very religion that is his and their common heritage. He has transferred to that religion his disgust against a part of its professors.

But this is not to be wondered at. After all one can only judge a system or an institution by the conduct of its representatives. What is more, Dr. Ambedkar found that the vast majority of savarna Hindus had not only conducted themselves inhumanly against those of their fellow religionists whom they classed as untouchables, but they had based their conduct on the authority of their scriptures, and when he began to search them he had found ample warrant for their belief in untouchability and all its implications. The author of the address has quoted chapter and verse in proof of his therefold indictment—inhuman conduct itself, the unabashed justification for it on the part of the perpetrators, and the subsequent discovery that the justification was warranted by their scriptures.

No Hindu who prizes his faith above life itself can afford to underrate the importance of this indictment. Dr. Ambedkar is not alone in his disgust. He is its most uncompromising exponent and one of the ablest among them. He is certainly the most irreconcilable among them. Thank God, in the front rank of the leaders he is singularly alone and as yet but a representative of a very small minority. But what he says is voiced with more or less vehemence by many leaders belonging to the depressed classes. Only the latter, for instance Rao Bahadur M.C. Rajah and Dewan Bahadur Srinivasan, not only do not threaten to give up Hinduism but find enough warmth in it to compensate for the shameful persecution to which the vast mass of Harijans are exposed.

But the fact of many leaders remaining in the Hindu fold is no warrant for disregarding what Dr. Ambedkar has to say. The savarnas have to correct their belief and their conduct. Above all, those who are by their learning and influence among the savarnas have to give an authoritative interpretation of the scriptures. The questions that Dr. Ambedkar’s indictment suggests are:

1. What are the scriptures?
2. Are all the printed texts to be regarded as an integral part of them or is any part of them to be rejected as unauthorized interpolations?
3. What is the answer of such accepted and expurgated scriptures on the question of untouchability, caste, equality of status, inter-dining and intermarriages?

(These have been all ably examined by Dr. Ambedkar in his address).

I must reserve for the next issue my own answer to these questions and a statement of the (at least some) manifest flaws in Dr. Ambedkar’s thesis.

Harijan, 11-7-1936

263. LETTER TO A. DONALD MILLER

WARDHA,

July 11, 1936

DEAR MR. MILLER,

Your letter of 3rd July to Mahadev Desai. Thank you for the letters you have been contributing in connection with the terrible leprosy in India. I know from personal experience of village workers of the increasing number. Only this morning Mirabehn who, as you know, has now for nearly 18 months settled down to village life, was

1 Vide “Dr. Ambedkar’s Indictment—II”, 18-7-1936
2 Vide “The Leprosy Problem”, 6-6-1936
3 At Varoda, a village near Wardha telling me how many lepers have been coming in contact with her, hoping to find some remedy for their disease. I know that she will derive much help from your letters. And now that I have just begun the village life, I am already making use of the instructions which you have given in your letters.

Needless to say your fifth letter will be published. Of course the readers of Harijan should know fully what missionary effort has done to alleviate the suffering of lepers. It would be churlish of me or anybody to ignore the medical work of the various missions in India and elsewhere. My complaint is that that work is not done without an alien motive behind it. I could not give you an adequate conception of the barrier that this motive erects between them and the thousands who would gladly take advantage of medical and other help that missionaries could render. You will probably rejoin that missionaries are not deflected from the call which they consider to be divine, by knowledge of the barrier. Persons like me who believe in the essential truth of all religions feel on the contrary that the proselytizing effort prevents so many Indians from benefiting by the unadulterated teachings of Jesus which ennobles life in spite of their not believing in him as the only begotten Son of God.

I hope you will not regard this paragraph of my letter as in any way qualifying my gratefulness for your articles. I felt that it would not be complete if I did not let you know that my view on proselytization could not in any way affect my recognition of the good that is done by the mission, apart from their proselytizing attempt. I need hardly say that this little discussion of my view is not meant as an invitation to a debate on the subject. This letter itself does not call for any reply. It is merely meant to be one of thanks and nothing more. You may expect questions on leprosy as may be prompted by personal contact with lepers which will probably be my daily lot.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhi

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers Courtesy: Pyarelal
264. LETTER TO SAHEBJI MAHARAJ

July 11, 1936

DEAR SAHEBJI MAHARAJ,

I know you have supplied the Karachi Harijan Tannery a competent tutor for shoe-making and so you have for the Harijan Colony in Delhi. We have in Wardha also a tannery to which a few young men are devoting their time principally for their love of Harijans! But we are feeling the want of a competent teacher for shoe-making and other leather manufacture. If we can teach shoe-making to the Harijans and others in village-tanning, they will have an additional capacity for earning and we would be able to have more men if we can add manufacture to finished tanning. If you have such a teacher to spare, could you please lend one for six months? The idea is that the teacher will prepare from among the students a promising young man as a teacher. If you can send such a person you will please tell me when he can come and what he will expect to be paid.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 2163

265. LETTER TO UMADEVI BAJAJ

July 11, 1936

CHI. OM,

I want you to send me little Marathi books that may be with you, Madalasa, or anybody else and are not of immediate use there, since I wish to set up a small library here and need Marathi books. They should be textbooks as well as books for general reading. The books will be returned to their owners if my scheme does not work. These should be lent for six months at least. And those books which can be given away are to be given away for good. Send me a list of the books that may be given away. I don’t propose to have a library costing more than ten rupees. This will give you an idea of the kind of books I want. If anybody preserves Marathi newspapers I would like to have

1 Head of a Radhaswami Sect in Dayalbagh, Agra them, too, after they are read there. This is not asking for any big donation. Nor do the seniors need be disturbed. However, some persons like you can easily undertake such work if they have a thought for the villagers. Do this job with your heart in it. If you do not find interest in it, say no, so that I may plead with someone else.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]

_Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 343_

266. _LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL_

_July 11, 1936_

CHI, VIJAYA.

You yourself will write whenever you fancy, and I am expected to reply by return of post. Nor will you apologize for your laxity! Where did you have all this training? I am settled in Segaon all right but I have no facility to accommodate you. You may go to the Mahila Ashram if you wish. Ba has not yet come. She is still at Maganwadi.

There is within us divine going on constantly; it is, no doubt, beyond the perception of sense-organs, but we can believe in it on the strength of our faith. Moreover, just as we have sense-organs, so too we have the _atman_ within us, don’t we? Hence the _atman_ may experience it, being itself beyond the sense-organs. I experience every moment the presence of the _atman_ and therefore I occasionally catch the echoes of the divine music. With effort you, too, can hear the music if you wish. It is not the music that another can help one hear. One can communicate to another only that which is perceptible to sense-organs. About the _atman_, the _atman_ alone can know.

Wait if you wish to stay nowhere but with me.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7060. Also C.W. 4552. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi
267. LETTER TO D.B. KALELKAR

July 11, 1936

CHI. KAKA,

I have gone through Rameshwardas’s letter. Since you have offered no comments I do not know what you desire. I shall explain as I see the situation.

Parnerkar will not give up responsibility for the Dhulia Goshala. He well keep an eye on it. He has not gone there to take up any other work for Rameshwardas. He cannot involve himself in Rameshwardas’s domestic affairs, though there has been some interference on his part. This was natural since he has been staying with the family. Both the husband and wife are foolish and though they do not get along well together, Rameshwardas cannot do without Gangabehn even for a moment and quarrels are inevitable. What can anyone do in this situation? Neither of the two can make use of Shivaji who stays there. Gangabehn cannot put him to any good use; though she would certainly misuse his presence if she could. So awful is the situation. If you can see the situation differently please ignore my letter. If your view is much the same as mine, give any advice that you think fit after considering my view. Perhaps the better course might be for you to see Vinoba and advise me as you two decide. But this is only what occurs to me on reading the letter. You should do as you may have decided.

I am returning the letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7700

268. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 12, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I have your letter. Do not strain to write to me. You must not thin away. Do not waste your energy. Your letters to me must be a pleasure and a recreation or they must not be written at all. We shall not come closer by reason of letters. Absence of them can’t separate us or create coolness. Why should you become a chronic invalid?

Your sense though of an idiot evidently led you aright. For your Simla khadi experiment seems to be succeeding beyond expectations. I suppose I must call it a mere accident. Idiots can’t design good things!

The cottage here is a picture. I have just now a young sadhu. He is a great bhajani, singer of bhajans of his own composition. He will be with me for a month. I occupy one corner, he occupies another, the third is occupied by Munnalal, a co-worker. The first accommodates a plank bedstead which you have seen. That corner will be taken up by Ba, if she comes, and you. So, you will prepare yourself for the proper village life. No privacy except in the bathroom which you will share with me. You must shudder to think of the fate that awaits you. You will enjoy the newness. There is no noise in spite of the seemingly crowded state of the room. All round is open and beautiful. Fresh breeze blowing throughout the day. It is quite cool. Perfect walks all over. When you come for two nights you will tell me what changes you will want.

You are there perhaps much more crowded than you are likely to feel here. All of us sleep under the sky without a roof separating us from it. Nevertheless you should bring your mosquito net and the cork for your thermos which you have made mine. I am managing with the one which is now almost all eaten away.

Agatha expects to attend the Ceylon Conference which you have tabooed for yourself.

This is the newest sample of Maganwadi paper. You will have this in an envelope of Maganwadi make.

Love.

Tyrant

From the original: C.W. 3582. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6391

---

1 Tukdoji Maharaj: vide the following item.
2 Agatha Harrison
269. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIIDYA

July 12, 1936

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Cooking and washing clothes are no small service. There is an idea abroad these days that only the educated can do public service and the value of cooking and similar work has gone down very much. But did you not see that at Sabarmati the responsibility of the kitchen was entrusted only to a mature and experienced Ashram worker? When the Ashram was first established at Kochrab, I had in the beginning assumed the responsibility myself. Subsequently it was passed on to Vinoba, Kaka and others, and a worker like Vrajlal\(^1\) lost his life while attending to the washing of clothes. Even when he joined, he had asked to be allowed to do all the clothes-washing, though he could do accounting and possessed a handwriting beautiful as a string of pearls. At a time of difficulty once, the charge of the store had to be entrusted to him. Without such workers we can never hope to win swaraj.

What I have said above doesn’t mean, however, that you may not increase your knowledge of letters when you get the opportunity to do so or that you should not encourage others in their desire to learn. All that I mean is that anybody who hankers after education, neglecting the dharma that has fallen to his lot unsought, is committing an error.

Do come to Wardha before going to Bochasan. Gomati will try to drag you to her place. Besides, there are Maganwadi and Mahila Ashram also. Janakibehn is there, too, and, if you wish, you can come to me at Segaon and even stay with me, though we have only one room here for all of us. Only lately Tukdoji Maharaj has come and has been assigned one corner. The room is large enough, 29 x 14, with a 7’ verandah running all round. In one corner of the verandah is a small kitchen and in another a bathroom for me. The walls are made of mud. The entire building is constructed with purely local materials. All around in this season our eyes rest on green fields.

\(^1\) Vrajlal Gandhi who had descended into a well to bring up someone’s water pot which had fallen in. While climbing up he slipped and was drowned Mirabehn lives by herself in a hut smaller than this room, about a mile and a half from here.

It is very essential that Bachubhai does not ignore any of the restrictions regarding food or exertion.

Blessings from BAPU

[From Gujarati]

270. LETTER TO PYARELAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,

[July] 12, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

Now that I have given the first priority to your letter, I cannot give it up. Hence I am sending this letter at my earliest. But Sushila’s letter is still lying unanswered because I am still waiting for a free moment. I want to make it a beautiful letter. Where should I send it?

You may go wherever you please, but please understand that you will be most welcome whenever you come here. I am in a hut here. There is shortage of space. But surely you are not bothered by that? You have seen the dharmashala at Maganwadi, have you not? This little place is becoming just like that. I like it. There is peace. Right now Tukde Maharaj is keeping me company. He will be staying for a month. He has an endless treasure of bhajans. All of them sound beautiful. Come if you feel you want to listen to them. For the rest I am just getting acquainted with him. I see that much service can be had from him. People have great faith in him.

Others living with me at present are Munnalal, Balwantsinha and Lilavati. Ba is planning to come. Now that Devdas has gone to Delhi,

1 The source bears the date “12-6-1936”, evidently a slip, for Gandhiji was in Bangalore on this date. Further, from the contents of the letter it is clear that it was written on July 12; vide also “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 12-7-1936

214 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
she may come.

What is your diet?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

271. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

July 13, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your wire yesterday evening and was very glad. I will not tolerate your falling ill as it would put you and me to shame. Why should one who has learnt from me the key to health fall ill? Take only the food that agrees with you, breathe fresh air and take regular exercise. Take hip-bath whenever you need it. Do not worry under any circumstances. This anyone can do. You should never work beyond your capacity.

Ba came here last evening with Manu. A sadhu also has come to spend a month with me. We are all in the same hut. The sadhu is known by the name Tukdoji Maharaj.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Kanti is at Trivandrum.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3473

272. LETTER TO SHRIMAN NARAYAN AGRAWAL

SEGAON,

July 13, 1936

BHAJ SIRMAN,

Your letter I could read only just now. I am unable to read the whole mail as soon as it arrives.

I am sending Roti ka Raga. Return it to me after Kakasaheb does his writing on it. In fact I had understood that my opinion was required solely for your own satisfaction. But now I cannot find anything to write which can go into print. All the same let us see what can be done. You may come over whenever you wish to. You are not going to take my time, are you? Do whatever work Mahadev asks you to do for Harijan.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Panchvendo Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 239

273. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

Unrevised by me
SEGAON,
July 15, 1936

DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

(1) I hope you got my wire about The Times of India letter. I procured it yesterday and read it through. Nobody has ever written to me about the subject-matter. My reading of the letter confirms my view that you should take legal notice of the libel.

(2) If you will not misunderstand me, I would like you to keep me free of the Civil Liberties Union. I do not like for the time being to join any political institution. And there is no meaning in a confirmed civil resister joining it. Apart however from my joining or not joining the Union, matuer consideration confirms me in my opinion that it would be a mistake to appoint Sarojini Naidu or for that matter any civil resister as President. I am still of opinion that the President should be a well-known constitutional lawyer. If that does not commend itself to you then, you should have an author of note who is not a law-breaker. I would also ask you to restrict the number of members. You need quality, not quantity.

(3) Your letter is touching. You feel to be the most injured party. The fact is that your colleagues have lacked your courage and frankness. The result has been disastrous. I have always pleaded with them to speak out to you freely and fearlessly. But having lacked the courage, whenever they have spoken they have done it clumsily and you have felt irritated. I tell you they have dreaded you, because of your irritability and impatience of them. They have chafed under your rebukes and magisterial manner and above all your arrogation... of what has appeared to them your infallibility and superior knowledge. They feel that you have treated them with scant courtesy and never defended them from socialists' ridicule and even misrepresentation.

You complain of their having called your activities harmful. That was not to say that you were harmful. Their letter was no occasion for recounting your virtues or your services. They were fully conscious of your dynamism and your hold over the masses and the youth of the country. They know that you cannot be dispensed with. And so they wanted to give way.

I look upon the whole affair as a tragi-comedy. I would therefore like you to look at the whole thing in a lighter vein. I do not mind your taking the A.I.C.C. into your confidence. But I do want you not to impose on it the unbearable tasks of adjusting your family quarrels or choosing between them and you. Whatever you do you must face them with accomplished things.

Why do you resent their majority being reflected in all subcommittees, etc.? Is it not the most natural thing? You are in office by their unanimous choice but you are not in power yet. To put you in office was an attempt to find you in power, quicker than you would otherwise have been. Anyway that was at the back of my mind when I suggested your name for the crown of thorns. Keep it on though the head be bruised. Resume your humour at the committee meetings. That is your most usual role, not that of a care-worn irritable man ready to burst on the slightest occasion.

How I wish you could telegraph to me that on finishing my letter you felt as merry as you were on that New Year's Day in Lahore when you were reported to have danced round the tricolour flag.

You must give your throat a chance.

I am revising my statement. I have decided not to publish it till you have seen it.

I have decided that nobody should see our correspondence, besides Mahadev.

Love.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1936. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
274. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

July 15, 1936

CHL. PRABHA,

I have your letter. Don’t fall ill again. What was the cause of the last illness? Do you take hip-baths? In no case should you give it up.

Kanti is still at Trivandrum. Nimu is going to join Ramdas in Bombay. Manu will come to stay at Segaon. Lilavati is already here. So here, too, we shall be congested.

I seem to be keeping good health, and the food, too, continues to be as usual. For the present, Tukdoji Maharaj is here to spend a month with me.

I have written to you about the talk with Jayaprakashji.¹ When will you be going to Patna?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3479

275. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

July 15, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUL SALAAM,²

I have your letter today, and I am sending the reply with Kanu so that it might be carried by the morning train.

The operation can certainly be performed at Delhi and I shall arrange for it. I shall let you know the names of the doctors when I learn them.

Why should you believe what others say to you about my displeasure? Would I not express my displeasure myself? What a daughter you must be to believe what others say about your father!

Haven’t I told you that you should have from me the money to meet your needs? You will take from me the money for coming

¹ Vide “Letter to Prabhavati”, 8-7-1936
² This is in Urdu.
³ For nose trouble over here.

I had a bit of a letter from Kanti. He is happy. He will return in a month.

Have your nose examined by someone there. Consult Devdas.

I think I have answered the questions in your letter. There is no time to write more.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 340

276. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 16, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

There are tyrants and tyrants. You will see on 22nd how you feel. If the night is fine, the roads dry and you do not feel fatigued, drive to Segaon after having your food. I shall be ready to give you a shake down at Segaon. If the fates are not propitious, you will sleep at Maganwadi and walk or drive, as you will, to Segaon in the morning. You must not be tired out in any way. You may brave all kinds of experiences, subject to the tyrant’s will, on your return when you are expected to stay for a period.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3583. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6392

277. LETTER TO HORACE ALEXANDER

July 16, 1936

DEAR HORACE,

Your letter was most welcome. You will get a note1 from me through Kamalnayan Bajaj. But that is a mere introduction. Only it was written before the receipt of your letter.

1 Vide “Letter to Horace Alexander”, 6-7-1936

VOL. 69: 16 MAY, 1936- 19 OCTOBER, 1936 219
I anticipated you about Agatha. I cabled approval of her plan. Her expenses in India can certainly be found but, on principle, her passage to India and back should be found from your end. That is what I have generally followed.

I quite agree with you that such visits are helpful. Therefore if the Heathys\(^1\) can come it would [be] a good thing.

Jawaharlal is tirelessly preaching his message. He has an unconquerable faith in his mission.

Love to you both.

BAPU

---

278. LETTER TO KHURSHEDBEHN NAOROJI

July 16, 1936

When did the pilgrimage become due? If you are merely referring to Khan Saheb’s manifesto, it contains no such message for me. The incident is too trivial for me to notice. My undertaking with the Brothers is that I am not to rush without a call from them, unless I have an irresistible urge. I have none of the latter.

Saints are both real and false. The real ones never want any noise round them but it does become their hard lot. The false ones cannot live without noise.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

279. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

July 16, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I got your note well in time. It is easy to say, ‘May you live a hundred years.’ However, It is for you to make the effort. It is enough

---

1. The cable is not available. Agatha Harrison was to attend the Ceylon Conference. Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 12-7-1936
2. Presumably Carl Heath, a Quaker, and his wife
3. The addressee had informed Gandhiji that there was a call for him from the Frontier to go there silently and had also remarked. “Can’t saints do anything without noise?”
if we regard our body as a trust held in behalf of God and use it accordingly. Take care of your body. Take up no more burden than it can carry.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10718

280. LETTER TO J.P. BHANSALI

July 16, 1936

CHI. BHANSALI

I have your note. I cannot help feeling anxious. You have to become a model for others. You ought to preserve your health in good condition. You cannot get up without assistance. Why this sign of old age? I want you to do this: Live on unboiled milk alone, or eat any flour and almonds, or take coconut, gram and lemon. It is possible to keep the vow of abstaining from cooked food. True discipline would lie in this: You should eat nothing to indulge the palate. By way of medicine, you may take any food in the prescribed measure. Your weakness and night blindness must disappear.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

281. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

[July 16, 1936]¹

CHI. NARAHARI,

I have your letter. Nimu [is going]² to Bombay. Ramdas insists that she should now stay with him. He is now engaged in the . . .³ .business.

I follow your point about Ramji. Do not give up your firmness in any case. Service of the cow we shall entrust to Vinoba.

. . .⁴

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9096

¹ From the S.N. Register
² Illegible
³ ibid
⁴ ibid
282. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

July [16), 1936

CHI. KANTI,

You have been proved right and I wrong. What misuse and misinterpretation of a quite innocent statement of mine! Even so, why should it touch you? I have explained to you that you should not be touchy. Our letters crossed; yours reaching Wardha the day I sent mine from Segaon.

I don’t think there is anything particular in Saraswati asking leave to stay on for two months. What comment did my letter evoke? And who made it?

You say nothing about your health. Where had you been to? I have not understood what Saraswati writes.

Nimu is leaving today to join Ramdas. Kanam° will be here. Ba and others have gone to Wardha to see Nimu off. She will return tomorrow. She comfortably works from Wardha to this place and has the courage also to walk back the same day. Manu too will come here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7302. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

283. TELEGRAM TO PYARELAL

WARDHAGANI,
July 17, 1936

PYARELALJI
KHADIPRATISHTHAN
15 COLLEGE SQUARE
CALCUTTA
WIRE HEALTH. WRITING FULLY TODAY.

BAPU

From a photostat: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 The source has July 26, which apparently is a slip as Nirmala went to join Ramdas on July 16; vide "Letter to Manilal and Sushila Gandhi", 18-7-1936
2 Son of Ramdas Gandhi

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
284. LETTER TO PYARELAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 17, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I received your letter only last night. It is painful that your health should be spoilt. You must have received the telegram I sent you today. If you have not committed yourself to go to Utkal, come to Segaon. There is plenty of work waiting here. Only in this jungle can we have a couple of hours to ourselves. Therefore my wish is that you should now settle down only with me. Who knows about October? We shall see when that time comes. “Enjoy the present moment, who has seen the morrow?”

I had then and there read the note you had sent in a small cover. I have not been able to read your article. I have kept it safe. I shall read it when I find some time.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

285. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

WARDHA,
July 17, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have corrected the note¹ you sent me and am now returning it with my endorsement. It would be proper not to expect a visit from me at present. If you persist in your request to Sardar, he will, I expect, try to come, though no one can say if that will be on the 12th² exactly. I have struck out those names as things are all uncertain. It would of course be admirable if people joined purely out of love of khadi; otherwise what does it matter if we get or do not get a little

¹ Vide the following item.
² Gandhiji's birthday according to the Vikram calendar more khadi? How long can we sustain their enthusiasm for them? However, you may publish the names if in course of time you can ascertain who will be coming.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8499. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

286. LETTER TO KHADI WORKERS

July 17, 1936

Before this¹ was printed a draft was sent to me. I know Narandas's love of khadi so I cannot refuse his request for my signature under it. The more khadi we produce with a pure heart the nearer comes swaraj for all. What Narandas asks of the readers is as good as nothing; it should therefore be complied with without reserve.

MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8500. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

287. TALK WITH JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM AND DEVDAS GANDHI

[Before July 18, 1936]²

I am very happy that you have come here, but, I hope, not to see this dignified hut of mine. I am responsible for little of the planning here, and I have given to it none of my art or my labour. But I wonder if you saw on your way Mirabehn's hut. It was worth while coming all the way to see her hut certainly. That is really and truly her hut. This ¹ It was a note on the programme for Gandhiji's sixty-eighth birthday which was revised by Gandhiji. It read: “If a spinner wishes to use for himself the yarn spun by him, he will get it back as prasada; if not, it will be used to promote khadi activity.

² It is not too much to hope that everyone will understand the significance of this occasion and give an impetus to khadi activity.”

² Extracted from Mahadev Desai's “Weekly Letter”

³ DeVdas Gandhi had reached Delhi by July 18; vide “Letter to Manilal and Sushila Gandhi”, 18-7-1936 is a hut built FOR me, not MY hut. Here is her own hut, planned and built by herself (of course with other people's labour). But it is not merely a hut. It is a poem. I studied it in detail only yesterday, and I tell you I had tears of joy as I saw the villager's mentality about everything in it. You know I often have my quarrels with her, but let me tell you that no one from amongst us can claim to have the real rural-mindedness that she has. Did you study the position of her little bath-room and the inside of it? She has utilized every stone that the blasting of the underground rock in her well, made available to her. The seat for the bath is all one stone fixed to the ground. Next to the bathroom in the same little hut is the latrine. No commode or wooden plank or any brickwork. Just two beautiful stones, half buried in the ground, and with two halves of kerosene tins between the stones. Any villager can do this, but never does it. All the water naturally runs to carefully made beds for plants and vegetables. And look at the care with which she has built the little stable for her horse, on the grooming and feeding and keeping of which she lavishes all her love and attention. Her love of animals is a thing to learn from her. Even whilst she is sitting and working in her hut; the stable is so arranged that she can give an occasional look to the horse. And now let us see the inside of the hut—all mud and split bamboo and wattle of palm-branches. You note every little article in the hut and the place given to it. Her chula (fire) is all made with her own hands, and though she has learnt it from us no one can beat her in the art. Then see the bamboo mantelpiece (if you will give it that big name) on which she keeps her earthen cooking utensils. Then see the little doorless windows and bamboo bookshelf and note the palms and peacocks over the windows, moulded in relief by herself. Also note her little kitchen and the carding room. The village where she works is about two to three furlongs from the hut. All the women and many of the men in the village know her, and the women confide to her many of their household secrets and look to her for advice and guidance—not always an easy matter, but always unfailingly for solace and comfort. She looks like one of them. Well, if you have not studied her hut carefully I would like you to go there again on your way back.

_Harijan_, 25-7-1936
The Vedas, Upanishads, Smritis and Puranas including Ramayana and Mahabharata are the Hindu scriptures. Nor is this a finite list. Every age or even generation has added to the list. It follows, therefore, that everything printed or even found handwritten is not scripture. The Smritis, for instance, contain much that can never be accepted as the word of God. Thus many of the texts that Dr. Ambedkar quotes from the smritis cannot be accepted as authentic. The scriptures properly so called can only be concerned with eternal verities and must appeal to any conscience, i.e., any heart whose eyes of understanding are opened. Nothing can be accepted as the word of God which cannot be tested by reason or is not capable of being spiritually experienced. And even when you have an expurgated edition of the scriptures, you will need their interpretation. Who is the best interpreter? Not learned men surely. Learning there must be. But religion does not live by it. It lives in the experiences of its saints and seers, in their lives and sayings. When all the most learned commentators of the scriptures are utterly forgotten, the accumulated experience of the sages and saints will abide and be an inspiration for ages to come.

Caste has nothing to do with religion. It is a custom whose origin I do not know and do not need to know for the satisfaction of my spiritual hunger. But I do know, that it is harmful both to spiritual and national growth. Varna and ashrama are institutions which have nothing to do with castes. The law of varna teaches us that we have each one of us to earn our bread by following the ancestral calling. It defines not our rights but our duties. It necessarily has reference to callings that are conducive to the welfare of humanity and to no other. It also follows that there is no calling too low and none too high. All are good, lawful, and absolutely equal in status. The callings of a Brahmin—spiritual teacher—and a scavenger are equal, and their due performance carries equal merit before God and at one time seems to have carried identical reward before man. Both were entitled to their livelihood and no more. Indeed one traces even now in the villages the faint lines of this healthy operation of the law. Living in Segaon with its population of 600, I do not find a great disparity between the earnings of different tradesmen including Brahmins. I find too that real Brahmins are to be found even in these degenerate days who are... living on alms freely given to them and are giving freely of what they have of spiritual treasures. It would be wrong and improper to judge the law of varna by its caricature in the lives of men who profess to belong to a varna whilst they openly commit a breach of its only operative rule. Arrogation of a superior status by any of the varnas over another is a denial of the law. And there is nothing in the law of varna to warrant a belief in untouchability. (The essence of Hinduism is contained in its enunciation of one and only God as Truth and its bold acceptance of ahimsa as the law of the human family.)

I am aware that my interpretation of Hinduism will be disputed by many besides Dr. Ambedkar. That does not affect my position. It is an interpretation by which I have lived for nearly half a century and according to which I have endeavoured to the best of my ability to regulate my life.

In my opinion the profound mistake that Dr. Ambedkar has made in his address is to pick out the texts of doubtful authenticity and value and the state of degraded Hindus who are no fit specimens of the faith they, so woefully misrepresent. Judged by the standard applied by Dr. Ambedkar, every known living faith will probably fail.

In his able address, the learned Doctor has over-proved his case. Can a religion that was professed by Chaitanya, Jnanadeva, Tukaram, Tiruvalluvar, Ramakrishna Paramahamsa, Raja Ram Mohan Roy, Maharshi Devendranath Tagore, Vivekanand and a host of others who might be easily mentioned, be so utterly devoid of merit as is made out in Dr. Ambedkar's address? A religion has to be judged not by its worst specimens but by the best it might have produced. For that and that alone can be used as the standard to aspire to, if not to improve upon.

_Harijan_, 18-7-1936

289. NOTES

_HARIJAN SEVAK SANGH AND MUNICIPAL GRANTS._

The Secretary of the Harijan Sevak Sangh writes:

The Government auditors have raised objection to the grant made to the Harijan Sevak Sangh by the Dhulia Municipal Borough during the last year, on the ground that the work of Harijan uplift is not an educational object and the Municipal Borough cannot spend for it. Here is a serious question to be tackled.
It is also contended that hostels of students are not educational institutions. This is an astounding interpretation and unless set right at an early date will adversely affect the work of the Sangh and other institutions as well.

If what is stated here is true, there must be some misunderstanding. It may be debatable whether Harijan uplift can be classed as an educational effort, but when a school is conducted for Harijans or a hostel run in the interests of students surely both are educational efforts, and as such there should be no objection to a municipal borough financing such institutions. I hope, therefore, that the remarks said to have been made by the Government auditors are due to a pure misunderstanding of the position. It may be that the Dhulia Board voted a grant for 'Harijan Uplift' and if it has no power to make grants except to educational institutions, Harijan uplift as such might not be classified under grants to education. The matter requires further elucidation. Any further comment must be withheld till all the facts of the case are known.

A VILLAGER’S HUMANITY

The reader will be glad to see the following two pictures sent by Miss Mary Barr of Khedi of what I have called “A Villager's Humanity”.

1. Yesterday I found an old woman sitting in the wet with her calf. I asked her why she did not sit in the verandah (meaning the verandah of Miss Mary Barr's Cottage) with the rest of her party and keep dry. (They were some wandering people who had asked leave to camp for 24 hours on the verandah) She replied, 'I am sitting by this 'ëøÊ (calf). Its mother is dead.'

2. This afternoon I found two donkeys had come on to the verandah out of the rain and my first instinct was to 'shoo' them off as they would spoil the floor. They obediently 'shooed' and I immediately felt ashamed remembering yesterday's old woman and invited them back. They came.

I am sure Tara would be glad to know that her verandah is sheltering all kinds of men and beasts during these wet days.

The reference to Tara, i.e., the late Mary Chesley, entirely bears out what I knew of her, and now that her numerous intimate friends have come to know about her premature and unexpected death, I have been receiving touching letters about the qualities of her heart and head. From those I copy the following.¹

¹ Only extracts are reproduced here.
Polly (Miss Chesley) was built of the stuff from which martyrs are made. She never knew fear. She was keen pacifist and persuaded me to take the post left vacant at her mother's death as Superintendent of Peace and Arbitration in the W.C.T.U. for Cananda... Polly and I worked together to gather money for the Russian and Chinese famines, getting ten thousand dollars.... We also collected one thousand dollars for German children's relief.

A CORRECTION

With reference to my note ‘Barbarous If True' the President of the Panchayat Board, Devakottai writes: 2

... There has been no objection raised at all at any time by myself or any other member of the Board to the Harijan member taking his seat alongside the other members. On the other hand he has been repeatedly requested during each and every meeting to take his seat. He has complied with our request during a few of the meetings that were held during the last four months.

... The Harijan member was questioned about the alleged treatment and he has issued a statement... that he was never objected to by anybody in the Board in taking his seat, and at times when he hesitated to take his seat along with others as per age-long custom, he has been promptly cheered up by the President to take his seat and advised not to get disheartened.

... Finally I wish to inform you that the Harijan member is no doubt sitting along with other members during the whole of the meeting now, and I want to assure you that all facilities are accorded to him by me so that his rights and privileges are duly enjoyed by him.

I gladly publish this letter. I am gladder still to find that the statement published was wholly untrue. In these days of suspicion and ferment among Harijans, it is necessary for correspondents to be accurate about the information they give. It is worth while knowing how the correspondent came to make the statement which appears to have been without any foundation whatsoever.

_Harijan, 18-7-1936_

---

1 Vide “Barbarous if True”, 27-6-1936
2 Only excerpts are reproduced here.
290. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 18, 1936

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I got your letter. For some time past I have not been able to attend to your letters regularly.

There is nothing special concerning Harilal for the present. He goes about talking at random.

Sushila seems to think that I am insisting on your coming over here, but I don't remember having suggested such a thing in any of my letters. I do not think that you need come over if you are comfortably settled there. I would of course wish you not to feel helpless. Do what you both think right.

Ba, Manu and Kano came over to stay with me yesterday. Lilavati is here already. I may say we are now cramped for space.

I think I have told you earlier that there is just one room.

Ramdas has set himself up very well for the present. Let us now see how he fares. Nimu went to join him two days ago.

Devdas and Lakshmi had been here and have now reached Delhi. Chhaganlal and Kashi continue to stay at Wardha.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4854

291. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 18, 1936

CHI. MRIDU,

The bulletins arrived two days after your letter. You have strong shoulders and they will bear the burden of this work. But if you pass some of that burden on to my shoulders, I am afraid they will be crushed. What more can I say or do beyond giving you the empty blessings that God may grant you glory in the gigantic task you have undertaken. My strength is limited and every single movement of mine is taken up by my rural but nevertheless new work. Even so I have spared the time required to read your bulletins. I have made the necessary comments which you will receive along with this letter.

I had a long letter from Jawaharlal in which he writes that you have become a matter of controversy between him and me. When will you write to me about this? I am awaiting the letter. I am trying to get to the root of this problem.

Give the enclosed letter to Mummy.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original; C. W. 11200. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

292. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 18, 1936

CHI. NIMU,

I received Sumi’s letter...’ I have written today. She must have reached the place. Kanam is fine. Write to me in detail.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papars. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

293. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGAON,

July 19, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

You need not attempt to come here for the statement. There is no hurry. I cannot even give time, today being Harijan editing day. And of course you were right in postponing the statement to the plants which in village life take the prior place.

Love.

BAPU

From the original:C.W. 6356, Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9822

1 Some words here are illegible in the source.
294. TALK WITH STUDENTS OF VILLAGE WORKERS’ TRAINING SCHOOL

[July 19, 1936]¹

He does not talk like me; he simply sings bhajans and preaches and teaches through them. I must needs talk as I can neither compose nor sing.

After the entertainment... the talk began with a light banter of a student who believes in growing long hair. Gandhiji asked him:

Is this just for show, or for the sake of health? If it is for no particular purpose, why not get rid of it?

Well, don’t you run away with the idea that one can do village work by just going and sitting down in a village. To be a real villager is to serve them, and you may remember that to be a real villager is more difficult than to obtain a graduate’s degree. I have been talking of villages and villagers for the past thirty years, but have been able to come to stay in a village only today. And that too is just the stay and no work. We eat unpolished rice and hand-ground flour, but how can we compel the villagers to do likewise? Even if we had the power to do so, we should not exercise it. We have to convince them by patient persuasion.

Q. Without power, can we really achieve much?
A. Did I not say that even if we had it, we should not use it? We have to convert them to our way of thinking. We have to bring to bear on them moral pressure.

Q. If you take such a desperate view, where are we?
A. I am far from taking a desperate view and it would be wrong to suppose that potentially you are weaker than I. Physically of course there may be considerable difference between you and me, and the spiritual power in you may be dormant in your case, active in my case. But this is no task where one could do things as if by magic. What magic is there in merely staying in a village? Even six months’ stay in a village may not by itself achieve anything. Much

¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”, 25-7-1936
² According to Mahadev Desai the conversation took place on a Sunday. The Sunday prior to July 25 fell on July 19.
³ Tukdoji Maharaj depends on the spirit in which one goes to stay there. We stay for years in cities without affecting the life around us. We have to go there as their voluntary servants. They come and labour for us in cities for a wage. We have to go to villages and labour for them without a wage.

Q. I see. Do the village folk come to see you?
A. They do, but not without fear, and perhaps even suspicion. These also are among the many shortcomings of villagers. We have to rid them of these.

Q. How?
A. By gently insinuating ourselves into their affections. We must disabuse them of the fear that we have gone there to coerce them, we must show them by our behaviour that there in no intention to coerce, nor any selfish motive. But this is all patient work. You cannot quickly convince them of your bona fides.

Q. Don’t you think that only those who work without any remuneration or allowance can inspire confidence in them, i.e., those who accept nothing whether from any association or from the village?
A. No. They do not even know who is and who is not working for remuneration. What does impress them is the way in which we live, our habits, our talks, even our gestures. There may be a few who suspect us of a desire to earn; we have to dispel their suspicion no doubt. And then do not run away with the feeling that he who accepts nothing from an association or from the villages is by any means an ideal servant. He is often a prey to self-righteousness which debases one.

Q. You teach us village crafts. Is that to give us a means of earning our livelihood or to enable us to teach the villagers? If it is for the latter object, how can we master a craft in the course of a year?
A. You are being taught the ordinary crafts, because unless you know the principles you will not be able to help people with suggestions. The most enterprising among you would certainly earn a living by following a craft. Now here you see I had a hut ready made for me, thanks to Jamnalalji and thanks to my 'Mahatmaship'! But you will have to build your own hut, unless of course you also get a friend to build it for you—in which case I will say you were old and decrepit like me!

Q. Shri Rajagopalachariar who was here the other day told us that it was no use our going to villages without mastering a craft, for then we should not be able to teach them anything. You must be better agriculturists than they are, he said, better cobbler, better weavers, and so on.

A. What he said is true. But we have no agricultural course here, because mastery of agriculture would take a century. And the things we teach here are such that you are likely to be able to bring to the villagers better knowledge of them. We have improved grinding stones and rice-husking stones and oil-presses. We are carrying on experiments in improving our tools and we have to take the improvements to them. Above all there is truth and honesty in business that we have to teach them. They adulterate milk, they adulterate oil, they will adulterate truth for petty gain. It is not their fault, it is ours. We have so long ignored them and only exploited them, never taught them anything better. By close contact with them we can easily correct their ways. Long neglect and isolation has dulled their intellect and even moral sense. We have to brighten them up and revive them all along the line.

Q. What about the Harijan problem here?
A. It is as acute as anywhere else.

Q. There is untouchability as amongst the Harijans?
A. Of course. A Mahar would keep a Bhangi at arm's length. Here is a well belonging to Jamnalalji, no public well. After consultation with the man in charge of the estate, we decided to declare it open to all the Harijans and invited Mahars, Chamars, Bhangis and others to use it. They would not do it. They hesitated. One or two Mahars then came forward, a Bhangi also came. That created an uproar. The Harijans stopped using the well, and the tumult has ceased. But there it is. It is like an armed truce. But it is no use blaming them. What are we doing? I have heard with horror the incident from Rajputana where Harijans would not be suffered to cook their food in ghee and to prepare sweetmeats, and that, because of the perversity of the savarnas, the situation reached such a pass that firing had to be resorted to and three savarnas were killed. It is a tremendous problem. Now, can we who have not cast out untouchability expect the Harijans to cast it out from their midst in a moment?

_Harijan_, 25-7-1936
295. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 20, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

No one understands what message the bearer has brought. Lilavati is too careless to understand. I cannot speak. Munnalal is half dead. B. threatens to follow suit. In these circumstances, it is better to write out what you want. This has become a confused household instead of a hermitage it was expected to be. Such has been my fate!! I must find my hermitage from within.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W.6357. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9823

296. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

WARDHA,

July 20, 1936

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter. Even if somebody offers a big donation, do not spend money received from outside on the sanitation work. I have forbidden the spending of even a single rupee in the village here where sanitation work is being carried on, for then people miss the education. We should work as hard as we can but must not spend money. Let the work remain incomplete till the people themselves are prepared to pay for it. We may ourselves do the sweeping, remove the night-soil and bury it. But until the people put up latrines with their own money, let them relieve themselves in the open. We may instruct people in the ways but they must themselves find the means. The Taluka Board may find the money. It may not cost more than ten or twenty rupees. If you do not follow all this, ask me again.

Have no doubt that sanitation work and educating the people with regard to a healthy diet is the only real medical service. Why should not Shamalbhai, Shivabhai and the other men staying there join the sanitation work? It will be enough to devote one hour daily.
You should set out every morning like the Bhangis with brooms, spades and baskets.

You may ask me anything you wish to.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

---

297. LETTER TO PANNALAL JHAVERI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 20, 1936

CHI. PANNALAL,

I have your letter. You have given a good account of your activities. May they bring you credit. I have neither the desire nor the strength to write anything beyond what I write for the _Harijan_. I would certainly reply to the questions that someone like you may ask.

I was indeed surprised when I saw your name on the Reception Committee and Sardar showed me the speech of the Chairman of the Committee. I thought the Chairman’s speech was impudent and devoid of truth. I did wonder how you could lend support to such a speech. But what can I say to anyone today? Is Dinkar any different? He has given up all sense of decency. There are other similar examples also. As far as you are concerned, I know that you would do only what you thought was proper. No one has a right to expect more than this from anyone. If someone expected more even from me, I would feel he was being unfair to me.

All of you who act in adherence to truth are bound to prosper.

But I am forgetting the main thing. I will certainly send Walunjkar. He will be getting his railway fare from there, won’t he?

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

_Manavtana Prahari—Pannalal Jhaveri_, p. 32
298. LETTER TO NANIBEHN JHAVERI

SEGAON, WARDHA.

July 20, 1936

CHI. NANIBEHN,

Your letter came in all right. I would certainly like to settle down in Gujarat in the midst of all of you. But my sadhana has to be at Segaon for the present. My coming in October will be as good as not coming. We shall of course have the satisfaction of seeing each other.

I hope you and Gangabehn are keeping yourselves fit. I shall not ask about your minds.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Ba, Manu and Kanu, Prabhavati, Balvantsinha are doing well.

[From Gujarati]

Manavtana Prahari—Pannalal Jhaveri, p. 28

299. LETTER TO BABURAO D. MHATRE

SEGAON,

July 21, 1936

DEAR MHATRE,

Shoorjibhai sends the message that the absence of mention of your name in Harijan has been felt by you. I assure you that it is not intentional. As you know I am sparing in my compliments. I should have mentioned you when Shri Kar was mentioned. Only at that time I had not your name before me. I know your valuable services too well to underrate them. But I am not going to make an opportunity for mention. It will come in the natural course.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 9824. Courtesy: B.D. Mhatre

1 Shoorji Vallabhdas
2 Presumably this is a reference to Gandhiji's speech published in Harijan, 4-4-1936; vide "Speech at Khadi And Village Industries Exhibition, Lucknow", 28-3-1936
300. LETTER TO PYARELAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 21, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I have your telegram and letter. I had to wait for your reply to my last letter. But I am writing this because I have read your articles in the mean time. The articles are good. I shall publish them in the Harijan in four parts.\(^1\) More could be written about the remedies. You can still do so if anything further occurs to you.

I hope your health is in perfect shape. If you decide not to come here, it must be after careful thought. You should not need any time to decide to come. If there is any doubt the benefit of it should be in favour of coming.

Let me know if you had any talk with Haribhau about which I should know.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

301. LETTER TO CHAND TYAGI

July 21, 1936

BHAII TYAGI,

I cannot read the whole of your letter. It is sad news that Balvir\(^2\) has contracted tuberculosis. How is he now?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6097

\(^1\) The articles appeared under the title “The water they drink”, in six parts in the Harijan issues of the 8th, 15th, 22nd ant 29th of August and the 5th and 12th of September 1936.

\(^2\) Addressee's son
302. LETTER TO RAJKISHORI

July 21, 1936

CHI. RAJKISHORI,

Your letter. Stay wherever you find peace.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6638. Also C.W. 4286. Courtesy: Chand Tyagi

303. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

July 21, 1936

CHI. AMTUSSALAAM,

I hope you have received my letter. I am enclosing letters to Tyagi1 and Raj2 and also one3 to the students.

Return the letter to Rammehar4 noting on it all the facts. Ask Malkaniji5 why he had to be relieved.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 341

304. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 21, 1936

CHI. NIMU,

Your fears about Kanu came true. Since you have written to me, I am sending him with an escort. I am no doubt unhappy about it but feel that at the moment God wills it that way.

The snake that bit Satyavan was not a snake in the physical sense; the snake was lust. Savitri got the venom out by her purity and

---

1 Vide the preceding two items.
2 ibid
3 This is not traceable.
4 Inmate of the Harijan Ashram, Delhi
5 N.R. Malkani
love. That is the mystery of the story of Savitri. A person whose purity can overcome lust in another can overcome anything. You should thus by your purity and by your love become fit to overcome the threefold afflictions of Ramdas. That is my wish.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library.

305. ARE WE RIVALS?

[On or before July 22, 1936]

I have had two typical cuttings sent to me giving altogether false news about relations between Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and myself. Remarks said to have been made by me have been reproduced in quotation marks. Thus I am reported to have said, “My life-work is ruined” (i.e., by Jawaharlal's programme); “not even the firmness and repression of the British Government have harmed my work as much as the policy outlined by Nehru.”

I have never said anything of the kind nor uttered one single remark attributed to me in the two articles sent to me. What is more, I have not even entertained the opinions contained in them. So far as I am aware, Jawaharlal has come to the conclusion that India's freedom cannot be gained by violent means and that it can be gained by non-violent means. And I know for a fact that he did not in Lucknow “come out for the use of violence in the struggle for Independence”.

No doubt there are differences of opinion between us. They were clearly set forth in the letters we exchanged some years ago, and in reply to correspondents I hope at an early date to bring our differences up to date. But they do not affect our personal relations in any way whatsoever. We remain the same adherents to the Congress goal that we have ever been. My life-work is not, cannot be, ruined by Jawaharlal's programme, nor have I ever believed for that matter that it

---

1 The report in The Hindustan Times carrying this item is dated July 22, 1936.
2 This was reported in the Literary Digest.
3 This was reported by Unity; vide footnote 2, “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 18-11-1935 has been harmed even by “the firmness and repression of the British Government”. My philosophy, if I can be said to have any, excludes the possibility of harm to one’s cause by outside agencies. The harm comes deservedly and only when the cause itself is bad, or being good its champions are untrue, faint-hearted, or unclean. The article in question refers to “Gandhiji’s secret plans”. If I know Gandhi at all I can vouchsafe for it that he never had any secret plans in his life. And if beyond what the readers of Harijan know there is no plan that I can disclose, it is because I know none myself. Then one of the articles presents Jawaharlal and me as rivals. I cannot think of myself as a rival to Jawaharlal or him to me. Or if we are, we are rivals in making love to each other in the pursuit of the common goal, and if in the joint work for reaching the goal we at times seem to be taking different routes, I hope the world will find that we had lost sight of each other only for the moment and only to meet again with greater mutual attraction and affection.

_Harijan_, 25-7-1936

306. LETTER TO SAHEBJI MAHARAJ

Segaon, Wardha,

_July 22, 1936_

DEAR SAHEBJI MAHARAJ,

Many thanks for your prompt attention to my letter. Do please send the mistry as soon as he can come. I may mention that we have no tools save nine casts, one simple sewing machine and a village awl. Whatever tools may be needed should be brought by the mistry. If they are within our means we shall buy them. If they are not they may go back with him when the time for return arrives. Rs. 60 per month

---

1. The _Literary Digest_ had reported: “As anxious as India's 350,000,000 people to prove Gandhi's secret plans is the Marquess of Linlithgow.... Facing a turbulent Nationalist Party, Linlithgow next year will institute India's new British made Constitution, which provides for a Parliamentary Government by a series of compromises in favour of India's minorities, mostly the sixty million Moslems... To placate Moslems, who fear Hindu dominance, the Constitution grants them almost as many seats in the Federal Legislature, which will exercise no control in India's foreign and defence affairs.... Knowing that neither Gandhi nor Nehru's Nationalists cherish the new Constitution, Lord Linlithgow is watchful of the two rivals' next move.”

2. _Vide_ “Letter to Sahebji Maharaj”, 11-7-1936 will be paid from the day he reaches Wardha or, if you prefer, from the day he leaves Agra. Will you please also let me know what will be expected of us for his accommodation? The tannery is situated in the open about 1 1/2 miles from the post-office. We can place at his disposal two rooms in the tannery.

I appreciate your kind wish that I should revisit Dayal Bagh if it be only to see your new dairy. I should love to do so. But my present sadhana lies in not leaving Segaon. I want to feel my feet in this little village and be constantly in it for 3 seasons. I know that there will be at least 3 breaks during the time. I do not want to add to the list. But I can say this that I need no inducement to go to Dayal Bagh.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. Gandhi

From a photostat: G.N. 2164

307. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
July 22, 1936

MY DEAR AMRIT,

You are not to venture out tonight. Come as early as you can tomorrow morning but without disturbing your rest. And on your way look in at Mira's cottage.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W.3734. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6890

308. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK
July 22, 1936

CHI. PREMA,

I have your postcard written on your birthday. You did right in taking my blessings for granted. In order to be a Mahatma's disciple you will have to imagine one yourself. The person who is called Mahatma is not one at all, though he is certainly able to take the place of father to many and is content with that. He would be fully satisfied if most of them testified to his being a good father.\footnote{The addressee insisted on calling Gandhiji ‘Mahatmaj’ unlike others who called him ‘Bapuji’, arguing that she would not call anyone else father as long as her own father was living and that a name ought to denote only one person.}

I hope your work is going on well.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

[PS.]

With me at present are Ba, Manu, Lilavati, Balwantsinha and Munnalal.

Tukde Buva also is staying with me these days.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10383. Also C.W. 6821. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

\textit{309. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH}

\textit{July 22, 1936}

\textit{CHI. NARAHARI,}

After all Bhaskarrao\footnote{Bhaskarao Behere} did not come up to the mark. Nothing can add to my grief. What does it matter to the ocean if the number of rivers emptying themselves into it is one more or one less? But then don't we sing in our daily prayers that misery is not really misery and happiness is not really happiness? A mountain of misery will confront us when we forget Narayana.

Bhaskarrao is a man who does not subscribe to this view. I have also informed Vinoba today.

I have understood what you write about Ramji.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

From a photostat of the Gujarait: S.N. 9097
310. LETTER TO VIJAYABEHN GANDHI

July 22, 1936

CHI. VIJAYA, ¹

I have your little note. You do not write with an open heart still. I am glad that Jamna² has asked for a copy of the Gita with the Sanskrit text and printed in large type for your use. I have asked for one and shall send it to you both.

The third chapter of the Gita which you have learnt is very useful to us. Its effect is true to its heading³. It interprets (in the highest sense) yajna as body labour. However, I have described fetching water, grinding corn, sweeping and the process connected with spinning as the panchamahayajnas.⁴ How many of them do you perform?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

311. CABLE TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

July 23, 1936

KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ
INDIAN CONTINGENT
OLYMPIC VILLAGE
BERLIN

ENGAGEMENT⁵ MADE ANNOUNCED. GOD BE WITH YOU. LOVE.

BAPU

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad; p. 290

¹ Wife of Purushottam Gandhi
² Wife of Narandas Gandhi
³ Viz., “The Yoga of Karma”
⁴ The five great sacrifices traditionally enjoined on the householder are svadhyaya, homa, balivaishvadeva, pindakriya, atithipujan.
⁵ Of the addressee with Savitri, daughter of Laxmanprasad Poddar; vide the following item.
312. TELEGRAM TO LAXMANPRASAD PODDAR

July 23, 1936

Seth Laxmanprasadji Poddar
2 Hastings Park Road
Alipore, Calcutta

Both Kamalnayan and Savitri have my blessings.
May this connection be fruitful of good for them and for country.

Gandhi

Panchen Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 267

313. NOTE TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

[After July 23, 1936]

1. The marriage should not be solemnized in less than four years or before Kamalnayan completes his studies.
2. Whatever education Savitri wants to have, she should have only in India. After they are married the two of them may travel for sight-seeing or for work.
3. Kamalnayan and Savitri should have full freedom to correspond with each other. I do not see why such correspondence need be secret.
4. Even before marriage, Savitri should from time to time visit Wardha or any other place where Janakibehn, etc. may be staying.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3054

314. LETTER TO ELENI SAMIOS

Segaon, Wardha,
July 24, 1936

Dear Sister,

Your book had escaped me till Mirabehn showed a letter from

1 Vide "Cable to Kamalnayan Bajaj", 23-7-1936
2 Widow of the Greek author Nikos Kazantzakis. She had written a book entitled The Holy Life of Mahatma Gandhi and sent a copy to Gandhiji.
Mons. Jean Herbert. I am sorry I was never able to have the whole book read to me. I hope that those for whom you took the trouble of writing the book will profit by it.

Yours sincerely
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C. W. 11075. Courtesy: Eleni Samios, Nicosia

315. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 24, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

I have your letter. How can I relieve your depression? You are so sensitive that one never knows when you might take offence. First, this is in your nature and secondly, you are at present unhappy. You cannot forget Harilal, so you are unhappy over everything that you either do not find pleasant or do not understand. In this, God alone can help you and He will. May those bhajans which you sing with such relish be your shield, since they are the balm to soothe all your burning.

I cannot at all see why Ramachandran and Paparamma are angry. Explain it to me if you have understood it.

We shall discuss the question of Harilal when you return. I understand from Ramdas's letter that Harilal is perpetually in a drunken stupor. When Ramdas spoke to him about the unrestrained language of his Rander speech, his reply was that it was their way of propaganda. You have been sent a copy of the speech of course.

I destroyed Paparamma's letter. It contained nothing special about you. On the contrary, from beginning to end it was full of praise for you. You are a sadhu, you are clever, Saraswati got you on account of great punya, and so on. So I wrote: “May your hopes be fulfilled!”

You certainly ought not to extend your stay beyond a month notwithstanding their importunity. You may obtain Kakasaheb's permission and stay on if you are very keen but it does not look well

1 Spiritual merit to ask for such permission unless the need is very great. You should yourself consider if it is necessary.
    I have not understood the telegram from Devdas. You don't have to think of it.
    Build up your health well while you are there.
    I am enclosing a letter for Saraswati.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7301. Courtesy; Kantilal Gandhi

316. LETTER TO SARASWATI

SEGAON,
[July 24, 1936]²

CHI. SARASWATI,

    I did get a letter from you at long last. Keep it up.
    You are not like what? Did you not say that you wished to marry the same day if it were possible? What is wrong with it? Yours was a childlike wish. I fail to understand Mama's and Mother's anger.
    What a smart girl you are! I let Kanti go for a month and now you ask him to stay for two. Don't do it. Do not detain Kanti beyond one month.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6153. Also C.W.3426. Courtesy: Kantilal
Gandhi

317. AVOIDABLE MISERY

    From a correspondent's long letter of wail I take the following.³
    This letter is one out of many such. The majority of letters are written in Hindi. But we know that English education has made things

¹ Vide the following item.
² Vide the preceding item.
³ Not reproduced here. The correspondent, a father of seven daughters, had dwelt on his straitened circumstances and sought Gandhiji's help in meeting the expenses of one of his daughter's marriage. no better for parents of daughters. In some cases they have become worse in that the market price of possible young men who would suit an English-educated daughter of an English-educated father suffers an appreciable increase.

In a case like the Bengali father’s the best help that can be rendered is not a loan or a gift of the required sum, but it should consist in persuading and strengthening the parent to refuse to purchase a match for his daughter but choose or let the daughter choose one who would marry her for love, not for money. This means a voluntary extension of the field of choice. There must be a breach in the double wall of caste and province. If India is one and indivisible, surely there should be no artificial divisions creating innumerable little groups which would neither inter-dine nor intermarry. There is no religion in this cruel custom. It would not do to plead that individuals cannot make the commencement and that they must wait till the whole society is ripe for the change. No reform has ever been brought about except through intrepid individuals breaking down inhuman customs or usages. And after all what hardships can the schoolmaster suffer if he and his daughters refused to treat marriage as a marketable transaction instead of a status or a sacrament which it undoubtedly is. I would, therefore, advise my correspondent courageously to give up the idea of borrowing or begging and to save the four hundred rupees he can get on his life policy by choosing in consultation with his daughter a suitable husband no matter to what caste or province he belongs.

_Harijan_, 25-7-1936

318. IN WATERLESS SALEM

The Secretary, Salem District Harijan Sevak Sangh, writes:

The District is dry and the Harijans are not allowed to take water from the wells owned by caste Hindus. The Gandhi Ashram has provided wells in two or three villages. In the village of Avangier the Harijans are now depending on the visit of the railway engine to the railway station for their drinking water supply. The engine driver doles out some water and the villagers have to be content with that. There is another place called Managalapuram where water scarcity is severe.

This reveals a shocking state of affairs. No private organization can ever cope with this terrible distress. As it is, Salem District has a perpetual scarcity of water. And when to this is added scarcity of common fellow-feeling on the part of a large part of its inhabitants, the distress becomes unbearable as it has become in the case of Harijans in Salem District. Is it not the first duty of the District Board to ensure a regular supply of water for the Harijans—the most neglected and yet the most useful servants of society? And now that the Government of Madras has a department dealing with difficulties of such classes as Harijans, one may hope to hear less and less of scarcity of pure water for Harijans. But this is not to mean that Harijan sevaks are to relax their vigilance or that private charity need not concern itself with water supply to Harijans. Aid must reach Harijans in the shape of water no matter from what source it comes. And it will come only when all sources combine to cope effectively with the distress.

_Harijan_, 25-7-1936

319. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGAGON,
July 25, 1936

CHI. NIMU,

This time your going away pricks me a lot. I liked your staying with me. The next place I would have liked is Sabarmati. But your dharma clearly is to go to Bombay and serve Ramdas. So go there, look after your health, be happy, remain cheerful and, as Ramdas wants, become his teacher. I have already explained to you what it was Savitri saved Satyavan from, haven’t I? Save Ramdas in the same way. Do not worry about Kanam. Keep on writing to me regularly at least once a week.

A letter for Ramdas is enclosed. I could not at all find time to write to him earlier.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
320. LETTER TO NIRMA A GANDHI
SEG AON, WARDHA,
July 25, 1936

CHI. NIMU,

Kanu left with Jamnalalji just yesterday. Ba went to see them off. For me it was... I ardently looked forward to being able to help him advance. I did not realize my limitation. And so this happened. I see that his spoon, dish and bowl are still here. I do not know why Ba kept them back. She is at Maganwadi. Send for whatever you want from among the things lying here or at Maganwadi. Write to me a detailed letter. Never be tardy in writing to me. What was forgiven in Ramdas’s case, will not be forgiven in yours.

With Tukdoji Maharaj, Kano had come to feel at perfect ease. Write to me and tell me all about yourself and Sumi.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

321. LETTER TO M.C. RAJAH
SEG AON, WARDHA,
July 26, 1936

DEAR RAO BAHADUR,

I have no difficulty about giving general endorsement to your letter to Dr. Moonje. I do not at all understand Dr. Moonje’s or Dr. Ambedkar’s position. For me removal of untouchability stands on a

1 A word here is illegible.
2 & Dr. B.S. Moonje's proposal, accepted by Dr. Ambedkar, was as follows: “If Dr. Ambedkar were to announce his decision that he and his followers are prepared to embrace Sikhism in preference to Islam and Christianity, and that he shall honestly and sincerely cooperate with the Hindus and the Sikhs in propagating their culture and in counteracting the Moslem movement for drawing the Depressed Classes into the Moslem fold, the Hindu Mahasabha will be prepared, in view of their having agreed to remain within the Hindu culture, to make an announcement that it will not object:

   (i) To the conversion of the Depressed classes to Sikhism
   (ii) To the inclusion of the neo-Sikhs in the list of the Scheduled Castes; and
   (iii) To the enjoyment by the Depressed Classes of the political rights of the Poona Pact by free competition between the non-Sikh and the neo-Sikh Depressed Classes as provided for under the Poona Pact.” For Gandhiji’s views, vide” Letter to B.S. Moonje”, 31-7-1936 footing all its own. It is to me a deeply religious question. The very existence of our religion depends on its voluntary removal by savarna Hindus in the spirit of repentance. It can never be a question of barter for me. And I am glad you take nearly the same position\(^1\) that I do.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

---

322. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

July 26, 1936

CHI, CHHAGANLAL,

Today I must write to you. I very much wished to write to you all these days, but could get no time at all.

Enclosed is a letter from the Bhangis of Bhavnagar. I have written to them and advised them that they should seek and follow the advice of the local branch of the Sangh. I am sending the letter\(^2\) only for your information. Read it and take whatever action, if any, may be necessary.

I often think about what you wrote in your personal letter. These are troubled times and it is difficult to keep one's moorings at such a time. Be sure about this: that reason without moral sense is like a prostitute who may be outwardly attractive, may dance and sing and cast a spell on one, but who will ruin a man. I see the prostitute reason doing that to many people at the present time.

See that you yourself do not abandon even the smallest of the Ashram rules.

Blessings from
BAPU

---

\(^1\) In his letter the addressee had challenged the position of Moonje pointing out that there was a difference between religious conversion and communal migration such as he was advocating and declared that he could not be a party to the political manipulation proposed by Moonje.

\(^2\) Not available
323. LETTER TO TARA N. MASHRUWALA

July 26, 1936

CHI. TARA,

I wanted to reply to your letter immediately and with a long letter, but it could not be. Now, however, I must reply. Do continue Dr. Gauri’s treatment.

You must write to me regularly.

You should try to stay at Mahila Ashram, if you are not certain that it is your duty to stay at Akola. There, you may, if you wish, increase your knowledge of English. Besides, you will be able to see me from time to time if you are in the Mahila Ashram. Kishorelal and Gomati are also there, and Jamnalalji, too, will generally be there.

I have lent you a helping hand but it remains to be seen how long you will let me help. I shall not tire of it, nor should you. I want to lead you just as far as your mind and your heart can take you. You are therefore safe with me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7527. Also C.W. 5003. Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala

324. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGAON,

July 27, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I had prepared myself for the news, especially when I found that you had not come. Will you have Manu or Lilavati? You will tell me when I come in the evening. Whether germ or chill, let us hope you will be free tomorrow. I shan’t negotiate the hillock tomorrow but walk straight to you. I wish you will take an earth bandage for the head. The ache will go. Take soda with hot or cold water. More when I come.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W.6360. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9826
325. LETTER TO UTTAMCHAND

July 28, 1936

What are you referring to when you say that there has been silence observed at this end about your drops as you call your donations? I assure [you] in the forlorn causes I handle, every drop is an ocean. Your latest cheque is most welcome.

I appreciated your caution about Kamala Memorial. There are trustees behind it who will control it. I am hoping that it will be a home for ailing women and children.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

326. LETTER TO MANDY MACCARTHY

July 28, 1936

I have received your articles with much interest. But before I publish them in Harijan, I would like to know much more about you than you have said in your postcard. What is your occupation, what is your age, what led you to India, what led you to adopt an Indian name¹, what is your faith, how do you support yourself? I hope you will not consider these questions to be impertinent. Generally we take in Harijan articles from those whom we know and who try to live up to what they write. I have observed over the past 50 years that the simplest writings of earnest persons are effective when brilliant writings of mere clever people fall flat. Words seem to take the vitality of their writers or speakers.

And if I am to use your articles, I should have your full permission to cut them about always taking care not to change the sense.

Yours,

M. K. G.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

¹ Tandradevi
327. LETTER TO EFY ARISTARCHI

July 28, 1936

It is ages since I wrote to you. So you have lost your uncle. For seekers of God every loss is a gain. Separation is purely nominal and temporary. Death is a deliverance for all without exception. But you need no sermon from me. Since I wanted to write on your uncle's death, I could only give you my innermost thoughts long held on death.

I dare not give myself the time to write to you about things going on in this little village.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

328. LETTER TO RAJARAM R. BHOLE

SEGON, WARDHA,

July 28, 1936

DEAR RAJARAM,

Pray don’t expect me to answer all your letters. I have but limited time for such work now.

I still retain the opinion that the d. c. should retain independence of action. But the position changes, when some of them go to the Parliamentary Board and seek assistance and advice. The P. B. may not put them off. You see the distinction.

Yours,

BAPU

From the original: R. R. Bhole Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
329. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SEGAON,
July 28, 1936

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

You have been suffering much indeed. You must have got yourself operated upon by now.¹

The revelation about... ² is a serious one. But such corruption is not to be found in the States People's [Conference] only. It is a widespread evil. There are a great many people like... 'among us...'s³ sin has been discovered. Let us see what he does now.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Take complete rest. It will not matter if you cannot come here. I am in excellent health.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 196

330. LETTER TO LAKSHMI NARAYAN GADODIA

July 28, 1936

BHAI LAKSHMI NARAYAN,

I am happy to see the signatures of you both.⁴ My hipbaths still continue. There is no need of steam-baths as I perspire enough as it is. I am not using the mud-pack at night. I am not used to a sitz-bath. I shall now see about it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5625

¹ The addressee was operated upon for septum of the nose at a polyclinic on July 30, 1936.
² Omissions as in the source
³ ibid
⁴ ibid
⁵ Presumably the addressee and a hakim who practised nature-cure
331. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 29, 1936

BHAI SATIS BABU,

There is little likelihood of Chandranath following your advice if he does not wholly believe in truth and non-violence.

Why does Hemprabha keep worrying?

How are matters with the Harijan Sevak Sangh? And how is Arun¹?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1627

332. LETTER TO PYARELAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 29/30, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I am awaiting your letter. I have of course received the post-card. You will have fully recovered by now.

I understand about the articles. You must hurry about whatever further you want to write.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Your letter has just reached me. I shall write after reading it.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

¹ Addressee's youngest son
MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

How I wish you would put down your foot on ‘insane’ programmes and save your energy for the common good.

All will be well if you will never lose your humour and make up your mind to stay out your period, trying to push through your policy as much as you can through the present team. Time has arrived to think of the future, i.e., next year’s plans. Whatever happens, you must not be in opposition. That is my confirmed opinion. When like Father you feel that you are ready to take sole charge of the Congress, I think that from the present company you will find no opposition. I hope you will have plain sailing in Bombay.¹

Kamala Memorial is disturbing me. I do not know what is happening about the collections or the scheme. If Khurshed or Sarup² or both are concentrating on the thing, it is well. Please tell Sarup I expect her to keep me informed of her doings in this connection.

I won’t discuss here the question of socialism. As soon as I finish revision of my note, you will have the draft before it goes to the Press. My difficulty is not about the remote future. It is always the present that I can concentrate upon and that at times worries me. If the present is well taken care of, the future will take care of itself. But I must not anticipate.

I hope you are keeping really well.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

You will see the correspondence between Jenkins and myself. I too hate legal proceedings. But this seems to me to be a case where action is called for.

¹ At the A.I.C.C. meeting scheduled to be held on August 22 and 23
² Vijayalakhmi Pandit

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1936. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

257
334. DRAFT OF APPEAL FOR FUNDS

[July 30, 1936]

An appeal is respectfully made for at least Rs.... on behalf of the Harijan Sevak Sangh. Gandhiji cannot be expected to tour as he did in 1933-34 for collections and stirring public conscience. There is no cause other than the Harijan cause that can claim greater support from caste Hindus who believe that untouchability is a blot on Hinduism. The only question therefore for the public to consider is whether the Harijan Sevak Sangh is the organization that is enough to discharge the trust it has undertaken.

The Appendix gives enough details to enable the public to judge this for themselves. And if they are satisfied about the fitness of the institution, we hope that a generous response will be made to this appeal.

From a photostat: G.N. 10503. Also C.W. 7976 b. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

335. ENDORSEMENT OF APPEAL FOR FUNDS

July 30, 1936

I heartily endorse this appeal. Removal of untouchability is a matter of change of heart. Hearts are not changed by expenditure of money however wise it may be. The change will come when we have enough selfless spiritually-minded workers. Monetary contributions will be an effective test of the existence of such persons. For one of the results of the change of heart should be incessant work among Harijans. This cannot be done without plenty of funds. Schools and hostels cannot be opened nor can wells be dug without ample funds. I hope therefore that this appeal will receive liberal support from both the rich and the poor according to their means.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N.10503. Also C.W. 7976 a. courtesy: G.D. Birla

1 This was drafted by Gandhiji; vide “Letter to S.R. Venkataraman”, 30-7-1936
2 ibid
3 Vide the preceding item.
336. LETTER TO S.R. VENKATARAMAN

July 30, 1936

DEAR VENKATARAMAN,

In accordance with Shri Birla's wish, I have drafted the appeal for funds. I enclose also my endorsement. I have not the time to make a fair copy for facsimile reproduction. If shri Birla's conception is different from mine, the draft should be altered as he wishes. I am of opinion that the appeal should not be issued unless some support is guaranteed and arrangements made for collections throughout India.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 10503. Also C.W. 7976. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

337. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

July 30, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUL SALAAM,

I have with me two of your letters to answer. There is no harm in your being operated upon there. I shall do through Devdas whatever is possible. Moreover, there will be Brajkisan when he comes. Give the accompanying letter to Devdas.

I have understood your point about Rukmini. And now she has after all gone. It was just the proper thing that Malkani should have gone to leave her at Hyderabad.

I shall ask you to come after your operation. Meanwhile look after your health carefully. Do send for anything that you need. You should freely ask Devdas for anything that you need if you truly regard him as your brother.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 342

1 Vide the preceding two items.
2 Ibid
3 Not traceable
338. LETTER TO ANANDSHANKAR B. DHRUVA

July 30, 1936

SUJNA BHAISHRI (PROF. DHRUVA)².

I have carefully gone through both your letters to Mahadev. What I want is not something for the learned but something which Harijans and workers can understand and put into practice. I do not want you to make a fresh study, but only that from your wide knowledge you should send me something which you can write in... ³ hours or at the most in eight hours.

I had already written to you that I liked your book on Hindu religion very much. I will certainly read it again. But I do not want extracts from anything. For a moment imagine yourself among Harijans in a village, converse with the old men, women and children and teach them religion. I want whatever is available in this way and it should have your stamp. Mahadev won't even translate it into English. The testimonial you give him is deserved, but first he hasn't the time and then I want your language. It is not beyond you to write simple English and finally you will grant the two of us the right to make some suggestions. Won't you? The suggestions will be put into the writing only if you approve of them.

Now about your programme. Going through it I am scared. At the moment Gujarat or Hindu religion does not require scholarship. That will not save either religion or India or Gujarat. I do not mean to say that there is absolutely no need for scholarship. There are many who will give us scholarly writings. But there are very few religious enthusiasts who would make themselves one with the people. I have believed that you are one of them. You have given quite a big share of your scholarship to the scholars and the educated. But what have you given to the villagers and persons like me? A person like me would steal something from what you have given to the educated. But that does not amount to giving. Do what Tolstoy did. In his old age he had before his eyes the unknown peasants of Russia and the literature he produced for them will live for ever. Can't I expect something like that from you?

¹ The source has Ahmedabad in the date-line which is obviously a slip.
² 1869-1942; Sanskrit scholar and Gujarati man of letters
³ The source is illegible here.
Be that as it may. I have said whatever I wanted to. I did not want to write so much. Accept whatever appeals to you and throw away the rest. I won't feel unhappy. Why should a beggar feel shy? Donors will only give according to their wishes and means.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a copy of the Gujarati: Payarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

339. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI
July 30, 1936

CHI. KANU,

I am sending six letters with this. Keep copies of the letters1 to Jugalkishore and Gangabehn. The rest may be posted straight away. Make a copy of the letter2 to Satyanand Bose also.

In this way you are getting closer to Mahadev's place.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II.

340. LETTER TO SATYANAND BOSE
July 30, 1936

DEAR SATYANAND BABU,

I quite agree with you that the Congress has to respond to variations in public opinion. Pandit Jawaharlal is wide awake and handling the questions as they arise. My work is strictly limited to advising those who find it necessary to refer certain matters to me.

I would therefore like you to pass on your views to Pandit Nehru.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Payarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 These are not traceable.
2 ibid
3 Although it is explained in the footnote on p. 184 that the letter to the addressee referred to in the text is not traceable, it is possible that this is the letter meant, a copy of which became available after the volume was sent to the press.
4 Pyarelal has kept this letter with those of 1936.
341. LETTER TO JAYANTI N. PAREKH

July 30, 1936

CHI. JAYANTI

I had always sought and got news about you. I am glad that you wrote to me. I do not have to say anything about the change in your views. May you go on making progress in your thinking and do fearlessly whatever you feel is right. Your good lies in that.

As you were bound by pledge it was your duty before violating it to meet the leader of your batch and acquaint him with your dilemma. You have not done that. A soldier's duty is not easy. If all the eighty soldiers interpret the pledge as they like, what will the leader do? Can the country's work be done like that? But the milk that has been spilt cannot be collected again. This is to be remembered for the future.

I know ill-feeling prevails in Gujarat. It is difficult to say who is to blame for it. But I have seen that socialists in Gujarat do not discriminate between truth and untruth. There are some among them of whom I would not have believed it. I do feel unhappy about it. I do hope that you have not accepted diplomacy as your dharma.

You had been to see me. I was happy to know that both of you brothers are doing very well financially.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

342. LETTER TO H.L. SHARMA

July 30, 1936

BHAI SHARMA.

We are looking for Babbitt but it has not been found so far. How much was the yarn? The corresponding length of khadi of the same count will be sent. I am looking for the fine yarn; it simply slipped from my mind. You know my attitude to going to the villages.

1 The source has Ahmedabad in the date-line which is obviously a slip.
2 An Ashram inmate who later become a communist.
3 Principles of Light and Colour by E.D. Babbitt, obtained by the addressee in Switzerland
4 The yarn spun by the addressee for his own kurtas
Do not incur heavy expenditure. Draupadi and the child are well, I hope. Do keep writing to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, facing p. 258

343. LETTER TO B.S. MOONJE

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 31, 1936

DEAR DR. MOONJE,

R.B.M.C. Rajah has sent Seth Birla and me copies of your correspondence with him on the Yeravda Pact for such use as we may wish to make. But the correspondence on your side is marked confidential. My own opinion is that the subject-matter admits no confidence. But before I can avail myself of the Rao Bahadur's permission, I would like to have your consent to the publication of the correspondence. Meanwhile you will permit me to say that your proposal is subversive of the spirit of the Yeravda Pact and wholly contrary to the object of the anti-untouchability movement.

Yours sincerely,

From a copy: C.W. 7788. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

---

1 Vide Appendix, “Agreement between depressed classes leaders and caste hindu Leaders”, after 17-10-1932.
2 Vide footnotes 1 and 2, “Letter to M. C. Rajah”, 26-7-1936
344. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

July 31, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

At this place one needs the tools every moment. I tried to obtain country-made tools, but could not. They are now being made at Bangalore. Meanwhile I sent for your kit as it was not needed at Maganwadi.

It seems some of the tools are missing. Whatever that may be, I have made a list of those that came to hand. You will find it on the reverse. Let me know which ones you remember having been lost. I shall arrange to search for them.

From the handwriting on the reverse you will see that Rajkumari is here. She came last evening. You will now admit that my place has become similar to your dharmashala—one corner to me, another to Rajkumari, a third to Tukdoji Maharaj and a fourth to Munnalal. In the centre are Ba, Lilavati and Manu; and Tukdoji includes himself and his followers who stream in all day long. Have you heard of him? He had come to see me at Nagpur.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7303. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi
345. A TALK

[Before August 1, 1936]

Now, you must see that I am being compelled to grow a beard!
“But my husband is ready to come whenever you summon him!”, says the woman.

That I know, but will he shave the Harijans?
I do not know that, Maharaj; but he is quite prepared to shave you.
But how can I have his services when my Harijan brothers cannot have them?

Harijan, 1-8-1936

346. A TALK

[Before August 1, 1936]

So, Patil, I must remain without the services of the barber?

No, Mahatmaji, he is ready. Shall I send him?
I know you can send him. But what about my Harijan son? You must know that I have a family here and Govind is my son. How can I have the barber's services if he will not allow Govind to go near him?
What would you do if you were in my position? Tell me. Supposing you were invited to a place from where your son was deliberately excluded. Would you go there?

“ Now, there, Bapuji, don’t you touch him on the raw”, says Jamnalalji, who has known the old Patil for years. “If someone could assure him that he would go straight to swarga (Heaven) if he were to cast off untouchability, he would do so. But he wants a reliable assurance, and he would not accept ours.” And the room resounds with laughter in which the old Patil joins. “ Everything is permissible to a Mahatma like you, but not to folks like us,” he says and returns.

Harijan, 1-8-1936

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter” The headman of Segaon had made clear to Gandhiji that he would not co-operate with him on the question of untouchability and for that reason the local barber was prevented from rendering his services to Gandhiji. For Gandhiji’s talk with the headman, vide the following item.
2 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
347. DISCUSSION WITH VISITORS

[Before August 1, 1936]

The sadhu or the Buva who is for the moment a member of the family has for visitors a number of devotees. They are frankly surprised that the sadhu is not only associating with the Mahatma but eats under his roof food cooked by a Harijan boy....They come and argue, sometimes the sadhu cannot solve their doubts and difficulties and they turn to Gandhiji.

[A VISITOR:] But, even the lower creation observes untouchability, Mahatmaji, and you would have even man to shed it!

[GANDHJI:] Now that's something novel. Let me understand.

Donkeys don't associate with dogs; a crow would not touch a pigeon's eggs. Every species has its own sphere, its own place, its own use in God's creation.

But cows, donkeys and dogs will gladly remain under the same roof if you feed them and own them. And do you hold that there is the same difference between you and an untouchable, as there is between a cow and a dog?

Don't we shun wild animals?

You shun lions and tigers and snakes, because they are untouchable? Absurd! You shun them because you fear them. You would fain tame them if you could, and crowds flock and attribute miraculous powers to one who can domesticate them.

But we don't touch pigs because they are dirty, and not because we are afraid of them.

Well, then, supposing a man in cleaner clothes looked upon you as dirty and regarded you as an untouchable, you won't mind? And what of your women who do all the dirty jobs for your children? They are the mistresses of the family. Why so?

Well, then, supposing the so-called untouchables were dressed as well as you, and washed themselves clean after doing the dirty jobs for you, and for which you should thank them rather than despise or shun them, would you touch them? Supposing they ate clean food and did not touch beef or carrion, would you touch them? I tell you there are numerous so-called Harijans in India who satisfy all these conditions, who live cleaner and purer lives than we do and yet we regard them as

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai's “Weekly Letter”
2 Tukdoji Maharaj untouchables. How will God forgive this heinous sin of ours?

But you want us to admit them to the temples too! How can people doing dirty jobs be admitted to temples?

Have I ever asked them to go to temples with baskets of filth on their heads? Have I not said that they would satisfy all the conditions about bath and cleanliness that the other Hindus satisfy? According to you all surgeons and all nurses are unfit to go to our temples!

_Harijan, 1-8-1936_

348. DISCUSSION WITH A FRIEND

[Before August 1, 1936]

[FRIEND:] Why do you insist on eight hours’ manual work a day? Is it not possible in a well-ordered society to reduce the working day to two hours and leave the citizen ample leisure for intellectual and artistic pursuits?

[GANDHJII:] We know that those who get all that leisure—both the working and the intellectual class—do not make the best use of it. In fact we too often find the idle mind being turned into the devil’s workshop.

No; he would not be idling away. Supposing we divided the day into two hours’ physical labour and six hours’ intellectual labour; would it not be good for the nation?

I do not know that it would be feasible. I have not mathematically calculated it, but if a man will do the intellectual labour only for profit and not for the nation, I am sure that the scheme will break down; unless of course the State pays him amply for the two hours’ labour and compels him to do other work without paying him anything. That would be a fine thing, but it cannot be done without a kind of State conscription.

But take for instance you. You cannot in the nature of things do eight hour’s physical labour, and have to do eight hours’ or more intellectual work. You do not abuse your leisure?

It is compulsory work and leaves no leisure, as for instance it would if I was going out to play tennis. But I tell you even taking my case that I am sure our minds would have been infinitely better if we laboured with our hands for eight hours. We would not have a single idle thought, and I may tell you that my mind is not entirely free from idle thoughts. Even now I am what I am because I realized the value of physical labour at a very early stage of my life.

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”

But then if physical work has such inherent virtue, our people have been working more than eight hours a day, not with any appreciable effect on the purity or strength of their minds.

Physical labour by itself is not an education even as mental labour is not. It has been with our people deadly drudgery without their knowing this, and that deadens one's finer instincts. That is where I have my strongest complaint against the savarna Hindus. They have rendered work for the proletariat a task of hard drudgery, from which they have no pleasure and in which they have no interest. If they had been considered members of the society enjoying the same status as they, theirs would have been the proudest position in life. This is supposed to be the Kaliyuga. In the Satyayuga, or golden age, whenever it was, the society I dare say was better ordered than today. Ours is an ancient land where civilizations have come and gone, and it is difficult to say what exactly we were like in a particular age. But there is no doubt that we are where we are because we have long neglected the Shudras. Today's village culture, if culture it can be called, is an awful culture. The villagers live as worse than animals. Nature compels animals to work and live naturally. We have so dabased our working classes that they cannot work and live naturally. If our people had laboured intelligently and with joy, we should have been quite different today.

Work and culture cannot be separated, then?

No. They tried to do it in ancient Rome and failed miserably. Culture without labour, or culture which is not the fruit of labour, would be 'Vomitoria' as a Roman Catholic writer says. The Romans made indulgence a habit, and were ruined. Man cannot develop his mind by simply writing and reading or making speeches all day long. All my reading I tell you was done in the leisure hours I got in jails, and I have benefited by it because all of it was done not desultorily but for some purpose. And though I have worked physically for days and months for eight hours on end I don't think I suffered from mental decay. I have often walked as much as 40 miles a day and yet never felt dull.

But you had this mental equipment.
No fear. You don't know how mediocre I was at school and in England. I had never the courage to speak at debating society meetings or even in a gathering of vegetarians. No. Don't you run away with the thought that I was blessed with any extraordinary powers. God, I think, advisedly did not give me then the power to speak. You must know, among us I am the least read man.

_Harijan_, 1-8-1936

349. DISCUSSION WITH STUDENTS OF VILLAGE WORKERS’TRAINING SCHOOL’

[Before August 1, 1936]

Q. How to dispose of people of ill-gotten gains which is what the Socialists are out to do?

A. Who is to judge what gains or riches are ill-gotten or well-gotten? God alone can judge, or a competent authority appointed both by the 'haves' and the 'have-nots' can judge. Not anyone and everyone. But if you say that all property and possession is theft, all must give up property and wealth. Have we given it up? Let us make a beginning, expecting the rest of follow. For those who are convinced that their own possessions are ill-gotten, there is of course no other alternative but to give them up.

Q. What is the root of violence? Does it not take place to prevent injustice and humiliation?

A. Hardly. The root of violence is selfishness, anger, lust, etc.

Q. I have not made myself understood. I see in front of me terrible wrong being done and I am provoked to violence. Is not the wrong at the root of it?

A. No, anger is at the root of your violence. Whether your violence is justified or not on such an occasion is another question, but there is no doubt that anger is at the root.

Q. How to deal with beggars? How can we turn them away when we see they are famishing?

A. Beggars must be distinguished from famishing people. Beggars are often enough sturdy. Some are theives. There is nothing like a right to beg, there is certainly a right to ask for work. And whilst

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter” you may not give alms, it is your duty to give work to those who ask for it.

Q. But how are you going to do it when you have work for four and eight turn up? Will you engage all the eight?
   A. No, because I must recognize my limitations.

Q. Then they will beg rather than starve?
   A. They shall not beg. They must do some work. I have not yet settled down in Segaon. When I do so I shall see that no one goes away for want of work. I will have spinning wheels and chakkis for those who being in want of work ask for it.

Q. When we go to villages we are bound to come up against opposition. For instance, they are opposed to sanitation work. What are we to do?
   A. We have to put up with the opposition.

Q. They boycott us, they will not allow us to use their wells.
   A. They may; we will use other wells, but we shall not fight them. We will not provoke them, but argue with them until they understand. We have to face all kinds of difficulties.

Q. My difficulty is that if my sanitation work scares people away, if they will not attend the prayers, if they will not do even spinning, must I persist?
   A. It depends on the spirit in which you have sat down there. If you have gone there principally for sanitation work, you will certainly not give it up, whatever happens. After all we will certainly do our own sanitation, keep our own surroundings clean. But it is open to one to begin with spinning, night classes, etc., and go on to sanitation if one thinks that would enable one to do one's work easier.

_Harijan_, 1-8-1936

350. _A COBWEB OF MISUNDERSTANDINGS_

I have before me a number of cuttings from various Urdu papers severely and even bitterly criticizing the proceedings of the recently formed Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad and thereanent Babu Rajendra Prasad, Babu Purushottamdas Tandon, Pandit Jawaharlal and me. They attribute motives and designs to which, I know, we are all strangers. The writers have not taken the trouble of even understanding what was said or done by us or at the Parishad. Thus they think that the design at the bottom of the Association is to push Hindi at the expense of Urdu, and so to Sanskrite Hindi as to make it almost impossible for Mussalmans to understand it. They also infer from a speech of Babu Purushottamdas Tandon delivered at Allahabad at the time of the opening of the Literary Museum of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan that he distorted facts when he claimed that there were nearly 23 crores of Indians who spoke or at least understood Hindi. There are in these writings other innuendoes which I need not notice, my purpose being simply to remove if possible the misunderstandings that have led to the innuendoes.

---

1 At Nagpur; _vide_ “Speech at Akhil Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad”, 24-4-1936

To take the last first. If the writers had the whole speech of Tandonji before them they would have known that in the 23 crores he deliberately included the Urdu-speaking Hindus and Mussalmans. He therefore included Urdu in the use of the word Hindi. This will be clear if it is borne in mind that Hindi according to the resolution adopted at Indore in 1935,¹ to which Tandonji was party, meant that language which was spoken in the North by Hindus and Mussalmans and was written either in Devanagari or Urdu scripts. If the writers had known this definition, surely they would have had no complaint on any account unless they objected to the very name Hindi. If they did, it was deplorable. Hindi is the original word for the language of the North. Urdu, as is well known, was the name specially given for a special purpose. The script was also a graft for the convenience of the Muslim rulers. If that is the historical sequence, there ought not to be any opposition to the use of the word 'Hindi' so long as it is used inclusively. In any event at the most the difference, if there must be any, narrows itself down to the use of one word or the other for signifying the same thing.

The complaint about Sanskritizing has some justification in that some writers of Hindi insist on unnecessarily introducing Sanskrit words in their writings. A similar charge can justly be brought against some Urdu writers who insist on equally unnecessarily introducing Persian or Arabic words. And what is worse, they even alter the grammar of the language. These extremes are bound to disappear in course of time because they would never be adopted by the masses. A speech that is beyond the comprehension of the masses has but a brief existence.

¹ At the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan held from April 20 to 23; vide “Two Good Resolutions”, 4-5-1935
As for the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, it aims at making through Hindi as above defined available to the whole of India the best thought in the provinces. Surely there is in this nothing sinister or communal, as suggested in some writings.

The adoption of 'Hindi-Hindustani' was at my instance. It was adopted in order to bring out in a compound word the meaning of the definition of Hindi. Moulvi Abdul Kadar Sahib had suggested the use either only of Hindustani or Hindi-Urdu instead of Hindi-Hindustani. I should personally have no objection to either course, but the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad could not ignore its own origin. The idea was born at the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan at Indore and took a definite shape at Nagpur under its aegis. The retention of the word 'Hindi' was therefore necessary in the nature of things. The substitution of Urdu would have been bad for the reasons I have already stated. But as I have endeavoured to show, Hindi, Hindustani and Urdu are synonymous terms and refer substantially to the same language.

_Harijan_, 1-8-1936

351. A CRIMINAL TRIBE

Perhaps there are not many places on this globe where crime is the profession of tribes as it is in India and it flourishes under the garb of religion. We have therefore in this country a law called the Criminal Tribes Act. The Aheris of Hissar District are supposed to be one of such tribes. On 7th June a conference of Aheris was held in the village of Gangan Kheri under the presidentship of Lala Thakurdas Bhargava. It was attended by over 1,000 Aheris and over 200 savarna Hindus. From the report before me it appears that the Aheris were told by some persons that if they embraced Islam they would be helped to become free from the application of the Act and the stigma of being a criminal tribe would no longer attach to them. Therefore the Aheris assembled declared their 'undying faith' in Hinduism and appealed to the Government to free them from the application of the Act.

In these days of ferment mere conferences and resolutions will not prevent appeals for conversions against material inducements nor bring the freedom sought. The only way to avert danger of defection and to procure freedom from special hardships is self-purification and selfless continuous service of the depressed people by the savarnas. Criminal tribes and untouchable castes are a scourge upon Hindu society for its godless treatment of its own members in the sacred name of religion. You cannot have a diseased limb without the whole body being affected. Therefore the only effective method is reform from within. If the whole society is purified, it will be immune from external attacks, no matter how fierce they are. Conversely, no battling against external attacks can prevent internal disintegration. Indeed the energy expended in repelling external attacks must result in further exhaustion and therefore speedier destruction. I hope that the responsible savarna Hindus who attended the Conference will continue the work begun at the Conference and direct their energy in constructive channels.

_Harijan, 1-8-1936_

352. LETTER TO RAFI AHMED KIDWAI

_SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 1, 1936_

MY DEAR KIDWAI,

To ask for a message from me is like drawing...live tooth and then too for a meeting such as you are describing.

Surely at a meeting at which Mr. Jinnah presides and which Jawaharlal opens any message would be superfluous.

_Yours sincerely,

MOULVI RAFI AHMED KIDWAI

4A RUTTLEDGE ROAD

LUCKNOW

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

353. LETTER TO BAL D. KALELKAR

_August 1, 1936_

CHI. BAL,

From my experiments in cooking I have come to the following conclusions: By cooking for oneself one saves money, improves health, becomes more enthusiastic and improves general knowledge.

1 The source is damaged here.

VOL. 69: 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936 273
One also automatically gains knowledge of the science of nutrition and becomes more efficient in serving food to others.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

354. LETTER TO KIKABHAI LAVAJI

August 1, 1936

BHAI KIKABHAI,

I have received your letter. We can say that Yeravda Pact is for all. If it finds appeal, everything will be all right. I see no need for reprinting it now. If it is necessary, I shall certainly have it reprinted.

We must put up with whatever Dr. Ambedkar says. One who is born a Hindu would not give up his religion because of the misdeeds of other Hindus. We can very well say that Harijans are unhappy because of their deeds. But a person like me would not forget that the ill-treatment by the so-called savarna Hindus adds to their unhappiness. If the savarna Hindus mend their ways and repent of their deeds, then very soon the seeming faults of Harijans will be on the wane even if they do not go root and branch.

Drinking will certainly increase with the increase in the number of mills.

BAPU

KIKABHAI LAVAJI
PATTHAR KUVA
AHMEDABAD

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

355. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

August 1, 1936

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

It is good that you got the operation done: If it proves successful, you will have permanent relief.

You must have received the copy of my reply to Rajaram.¹ If you have not replied yet, I suggest this: “Your letter contains no fresh ¹ The letter is not traceable. point which calls for a reply. I have, therefore, nothing to add to my previous letter.”

Do not be in a hurry to leave the hospital and do not resume work without taking complete rest.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 196-7

356. LETTER TO GANGABEHN B. JHAVERI

August 1, 1936

CHI. GANGABEHN,

After a long time I did receive your letter. I cannot form any opinion about the new school. I cannot swallow the views of its manager which are destructive of morality. However, treat this view of mine as of no consequence. Consult Pannalal and, having heard him, do what you wish.

If you have not read everything pertaining to socialism, then take a decision only after reading something more about it. Socialism is one thing and Jawaharlal is another. There has always been a difference between individuals and ideology.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

357. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 1, 1936

CHI. NIMU,

I received your letter. Do not fail to relieve Ramdas of the burden of writing to me. The children must have got well. Send for Kanam’s things which may be required. Do not postpone writing to me. Write to me in time and give all the details.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
358. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

August 1, 1936

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA.

Your letter. You will fall and rise, fall again and rise again and by thus falling and rising attain success. Never give up your efforts. You must certainly write to me but you may not expect a reply from me as I have no time to spare. If I have I shall scribble a couple of lines.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4287

359. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 2, 1936

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA.

This time Manilal did not write to me. I am writing this with my left hand as the right one is tired. Let those who want to brag about Harilal's action do so with pleasure. Here at any rate they have almost forgotten him and he is always under the influence of drink. The fault must lie somewhere in my own method of bringing him up. Mine has been a life of wanderings and it has had a number of vicissitudes. It is quite obvious that I could not manage it all.

Manu is with me at present, enjoying herself. And of course Ba and Lilavati are also with me. Sushila ought to control her palate and improve her health. Indulging the palate is not limited to eating starchy foods and sugar alone. You can get so much fruit there that you can very well maintain your health. Milk and fresh fruit must improve your health. Moreover, you must never miss your daily walk.

Ramas, one may say, has now settled down. Nimu too has gone to join him. Devdas and Lakshmi are in Delhi.

Kishorelal went to Akola and from there to Bombay.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4855
360. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI M. PATEL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 3, 1936

CHI. RAOJIBHAI,

Your letter. You may take it that Andrews has left Fiji. All the same I shall make inquiries.

It would be nice if you could procure good ghee. On my part, I have been insisting on producing it at Maganwadi, where we now have an expert. At Segaon, too, I am having a cow.

Your work seems to be going on well. Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

SJT. RAOJIBHAI
P.O. PETLAD via ANAND
B.B. & C.I. RLY.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9008

361. LETTER TO B.K. DIWANJI

SEGAON, WARDHA, C.P.
August 4, 1936

DEAR DIWANJI,

It cannot be desirable for Indians to act as agents of foreign concerns whose traffic is detrimental to the moral or material interests of the country. This covers all your questions but I may add that acceptance of advertisements, Indian or foreign, whose object is to advertise things which are contrary to the policy advocated by the newspapers cannot be defended.

The medical profession is a noble profession only when medical men practise it for service, not for money, and if they give predominant place to prevention rather than cure, and accept the limits to their remedial measures so that they are not contrary to humanness towards non-human life.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers: Courtesy: Pyarelal
362. LETTER TO K.M. MUNSHI
August 4, 1936

BHAJ MUNSHI,

Since he insists on starting another magazine, why should we retain Hans? Why not write to him:

“Since you contemplate another magazine you must keep Hans. Parishad can easily manage with other title.”

You may carry out your suggestion if you do not think this right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7604. Courtesy: K.M. Munshi

363. LETTER TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE
SEGON WARDHA,
August 5, 1936

MY DEAR SUBHAS,

You may be late replying but I must reply per return. I know what it means for a prisoner to hear from friends.

I share your regret that we cannot freely exchange views [even] on absolutely non-political questions.

I am surprised that you are not getting your copy of Harijan. I am inquiring.

Yes, my dietetic experiments continue unabated. Just now I am trying to find jungly edible leaves. and I have succeeded beyond expectations. I am not having any fresh vegetables from outside Segaon. The second thing I am doing [is] to use lemons and gur [as] an effective substitute for fresh fruit.

After many experiments I have come to the conclusion that cow milk, fresh green vegetables (including leaves and fruit of plants), onion and garlic, wheat or any other grain, gur and any juicy fruitmake a perfect diet. Generally I recommend avoidance of pulses

1 Munshi Premchand
2 This paragraph is in English for brain workers—vegetable protein is not so easy to digest as animal protein. I have mentioned onion and garlic. They are both strongly recommended by many medical men.

Yours sincerely,

SHRI SUBHAS BOSE
C/O SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE
DARJEELING

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

364. LETTER TO SAHEBJI MAHARAJ
August 5, 1936

DEAR SAHEBJI MAHARAJ,

Many thanks for your letter. We shall await the mistry on the 12th. He will be paid his travelling expenses to and fro and the pay will begin as from the date of his departure from Agra.

I am expecting much out of this experiment.¹

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 2165

365. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA
August 5, 1936

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Why need you fall into despair? Why do you feel that you have wasted fifty-seven years? Ever since I have known you, I have observed that you are always striving. God has given man only the strength to strive and nothing more. If we ever remain absorbed in doing our duty without lethargy, we have no reason to feel despair.

Ramibai seems to be very unhappy. Can anything be done to

¹ Vide letter to the addressee, “Letter to Sahebji Maharaj”, 22-7-1936 help her? I understand about Bachubhai.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. GANGABEHN VAIIDYA
RAMBAG, BORIVLI
B.B. & C.I. RLY.

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, p. 94. Also C.W. 8834. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

366. LETTER TO PANNALAL JHAVERI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 5, 1936

CHI PANNALAL.

Shri Walunjkar will be starting from here on the 19th and thus reaching there on the 21st morning. He will be put up at the Harijan Ashram, I suppose. He has to reach Wardha latest by the 26th. Send me a telegram if this date is not suitable.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Manavatana Prahari—Pannalal Jhaveri, pp. 32-3

367. LETTER TO N. C. KELKAR

SEGAON WARDHA,
August 6, 1936

DEAR MR. KELKAR,

You are reported to have said: “When he (Gandhi) openly says that his object is to run down the Tilak school of politics, etc., etc.” If you have said it, will you kindly let me know when I did so? I have no recollection of ever having said any such thing and how could I when, as you rightly say, I have “carried forward the work of Mr. Tilak”?

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 3120. Courtesy: Kashinath N. Kelkar

368. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

SEGAGON, WARDHA,
August 7, 1936

CHI. MRIDU,

I am pleasantly surprised to see that you are able to find time to write such long letters. You are taking upon yourself so much work that even a person like me shudders. May God grant you the strength to attend to all your tasks.

I do not know what you would be able to do in the Women’s Conference to be held at Ahmedabad. I have no clear idea of that organization and what little I know is only through Raj Kumari. I have not formed the impression that it can do anything for village women. Raj Kumari herself is very keen to serve in the villages. It remains to be seen how far she can carry her other friends with her.

You are greatly mistaken if you think that there are no Hindu-Muslim distinctions among women. There certainly are. They have not found extreme expression because women do not come out in public very much. When they come out like men and they are awakened, they too will be found making these distinctions to a considerable extent. They will become conscious in a few years. But the possibility of Hindus and Muslims uniting in the mean time is remote. Nevertheless it is your duty as well as mine to carry on the work on the assumption that those distinctions do not exist among 1 In his reply the addressee said: “The work of Tilak which you have carried forward is the work intensive political agitation, but by the Tilak ‘school’ of politics I mean Tilak’s philosophy and methods and in respect of these, you and he vastly differ.”... “Your open insistence on non-violence, truth and non-co-operation was taken to imply that the school of political thought you superseded favoured the antithesis of these three...” Vide also “Letter to N.C. Kelkar”, 24-8-1936.

---

2 The All-India Women’s Conference commenced on December 23 and was presided over by Margaret Cousins.

3 Amrit Kaur, Secretary of the All-India Women’s Conference women. Among the avoidable things I have enumerated the measures you suggest are of course included. But at that place I had to stress one point only. Other things were irrelevant there.

Now about giving recognition to the Jyoti Sangh. Your arguments are interesting. I would only say that for the moment you do everything you are doing, but give up any talk about recognition. Citing the instance of tailors, etc., is not proper because the Sangh does not recognize them. It provides them work. Till now they had even been given by the mills the work of dyeing and washing. I stopped it only recently. Your arguments befit those who are indifferent to khadi. But you are a khadi volunteer. You believe in the power of khadi. How can you bend in the face of difficulties? But you say that you are ready to come if it is necessary. If you are not convinced by all this from me, come over at your earliest. At least we can meet under that pretext.

I hope Mummy is well. The letter for Suhrid is enclosed.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11201. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

369. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

SEGAON WARDHA,
August 7, 1936

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

I read both the letters. Other things later. Parnerkar has not come to me so far.

The interview was all right but I see nothing hopeful in it; he will not be able to do a thing. Their policy and ours are poles apart. I firmly hold that no further overtures should be made to him. It is not correct to say that I had made any promise. Whatever I did was all worth doing. This is the reason why it was done and not because of any promise of mine. It was not in the public interest to proceed any further. I write all this in order to make things clear for the future.

1 An institution in Ahmedabad for socially oppressed women
2 Addressee’s brother
3 The addressee had met the Viceroy Lord Linlithgow on August 5, 1936.
What can I do in connection with the elections? Yes, I can try to avoid friction within the Congress; in fact I am already engaged in this.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 8021. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

370. INTERVIEW TO PAULA LECLER AND Y.S. CHEN

[Before August 8, 1936]

In reply to several questions Gandhiji said:

On the political programme you should go and visit Pandit Nehru who, though he is busier than I, might give you a useful half hour. I am no authority on politics, and having retired from the Congress for two years now, I am a kind of a back number.

But may it not be that you have retired to give the other people a chance, and in the conviction that after they have had their chance they are bound to come back to you?

That is not my way. I am a votary of truth. I meant it cent per cent when I retired from the Congress and the so-called politics of the country. My mind and body are buried in Segaon. What the future has in store for me God alone knows.

[Y. S. CHEN:] Your body is here, but your spirit travels over the whole world.

Yes, but not my political spirit. What I am doing today, i.e., living in a village, I might have done in the beginning of my career. Instead I am doing it in the evening of my life.

The American lady wanted... him to... give a message to the distracted world as to how best to get out of the trouble and chaos.

I am off talking. I can give you no message. You can see what I am doing if you will stay in this village. How to help the world out of 1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Paula Lecler was an American woman and Y.S. Chen a member of the Cotton Industry Commission of China.

2 Paula Lecler here quotes Gandhiji having said: “You may be sure I am living now just the way I wish to live. What I might have done at the beginning, had I more light, I am doing now in the evening of my life, at the end of my career, building from the bottom up. Study my way of living here, study my surroundings, if you wish to know what I am. Village improvement is the only foundation on which conditions in India can be permanently ameliorated.” chaos is a vast question which cannot be answered at a moment’s notice. But if there is an answer it is this: ‘By waiting on God.’

I want to transmit to America a picture of the faith and light you have.

I could not give it by word of mouth. I am not in a talking mood.

But you have your faith?

Oh yes, I have.

Then could you not put it in a few words?

How can I impart it in words?

Then you can just say a few words of prayer, i.e., what is your innermost desire. You can just pray audibly.

No, I cannot possibly do so. Is it not enough for you to know that I am trying to live a simple village life as simple villager? When I succeed in it. I shall have achieved my ambition.

And what happens to your children, the people of India?

They are in the villages. I live with them. They will live with me.

Are you happy?

Ah! I can answer that question. I am perfectly happy.

More happy that you were outside the village?

I cannot say, for my happiness is not dependent on external circumstances.

[Y. S. Chen:] wanted to know something about our social programme.

I have no doubt that untouchability is going. It can go quicker, but we have not got a corps of social workers adequate to the task. It is social work indeed, but more than that it is great spiritual effort. If untouchability remains, Hinduism perishes and with it Hindu culture. And if that calamity comes, the whole face of India will be changed. The ruining of Hindu culture is fraught with incalculable harm for the general culture of India. But I am firm in my faith that untouchability is bound to go, it is going. Here you will see I am surrounded by untouchables. We have, for instance, for our cook an untouchable boy. He never knew cooking, certainly he did not know how to cook hygienically. He is now learning it. He is a fine boy, eager to learn, and hard-working. This process is going on throughout India. The best of our workers are trying to work amongst the untouchables in this fashion. That is the complete reform. We have to obliterate all the differences of social status. That is the essence of this part of our social reform.

I want to correct the impression that has got abroad in America that Mr. Gandhi is sulking....But what is the truth about the supposed antagonism between you and Nehru?

You must see my disclaimer.¹

I have seen it.

I have said that it was an absolute travesty, an absolute falsehood.

What is your feeling about Nehru?

My feeling about Nehru is nothing but that of love and admiration. We are not estranged from each other. I hear from him nearly twice a week.² There are things on which I do not talk the same way. There are obvious differences in outlook, but in spite of them our affection has not diminished. And these differences are not new. He has never kept from me whatever he has felt from time to time. Even what he said in Lucknow was not new. It was a summary of views he had stated in different places on different occasions.

But you don't see the truth entirely his way?

I don’t. But it is one thing to say that I do not sympathize with some of his views and quite another to say that he had ruined my life-work! It is a lie. There is no other name for it.³ I have never had even the suspicion that Jawaharlal’s policy has ruined any part of my work.

Because the truth you stand for is still there?

That is a truism. I am not talking from that higher philosophical point of view. I am just talking in mundane terms. I want to say that he has taken no such steps as would ruin my programme or my work. If he had said: ‘You have blundered all along. You must retrace your steps. You have taken the country back a century’, as some have certainly said, he, because he is he, would embarrass me. But he has

¹ Vide “Are We Rivals?”, 22-7-1936
² Paula Lecler quotes here: “Jawaharlal Nehru and I are friends. It is true our beliefs may differ in some ways. But to say there is enmity between us, that is a lie. Even when he is travelling around the country on speaking tours, as he has been doing, I hear from him at least twice each week. There is no rivalry in work like ours.”
³ Paula Lecler reports here: “They quoted me: ‘My life-work is ruined... not even the firmness and repression of the British Government have harmed my work as much as the policy outlined by Nehru.’ But much as I dislike to use so strong a word, it is an absolute lie. I never said anything like that nor do I think it.”
said nothing of the kind. Also, it is not wholly true to say that I do not sympathize with his programme. What is he doing today with which I cannot sympathize? His enunciation of scientific socialism does not jar on me. I have been living the life since 1906 that he would have all India to live. To say that he favours Russian communism is a travesty of truth. He says it is good for Russia, but he does not give an unequivocal certificate to it even about Russia. As for India, he has said plainly that the methods to be adopted in India would have to answer India’s needs. He does not say that there must be class war, though he thinks it may be inevitable; and only recently he declared emphatically that there should be no confiscation without compensation. There is nothing in all this which I oppose. Nevertheless there are differences of method; but to say that they make us opponents or rivals is a caricature.

There is nothing he believes, nothing in his programme today about which I can say, as I certainly would if I felt that way: I oppose this tooth and nail. I would not present the same thing in the same way. Certain methods I adopted Jawaharlal would not adopt.

Are you fond of him?
Yes, as I am fond of you. But that is not saying anything much.

Do you approve of him for India?
Yes.

This our friend had got the impression in Karachi that your own internal cleavages were far worse than outside tyranny, and that was the impression she was going to fly off with to America.

That remark of hers elicited one sentence of withering criticism from Gandhiji:
If I did not believe in human nature, I would say that to give you that impression was a diabolical plot to blacken India’s name.

Asked if he would emerge from his retirement to lead his people if they again needed him, Gandhiji replied firmly, with a quick look from under irregular eyebrows at his interrogator.

1 Paula Lecler reports: “To say he favours communism on the Russian model is doing a grave injustice to Jawaharlal.”
2 Paula Lecler adds here: “I believe he thinks a class war may be inevitable, but he is doing his best to avert one.”
3 The paragraph that follows is from Paula Lecler’s report reproduced in The Bombay Chronicle.
That depends upon God. I never decide beforehand but wait for the contingency to decide. Planning ahead for myself, even for a few years, is opposed to my principles.

_Harijan, 8-8-1936, and The Bombay Chronicle, 7-3-1937_

371. TWO PEN-PICTURES

Babu Hara Dayal Nag, the G. O. M. of Bengal, is never weary of well-doing. In the constancy of love of his country he is not to be excelled. The reader will appreciate the following instructive description of his village as he saw it in his youth and as it is today.

_Harijan, 8-8-1936_

372. PROPAGANDA BY VILIFICATION

A correspondent sends me a proselytizing pamphlet, being a Gujarati version of the original in Urdu. The Gujarati translator and publisher is Shekh Umarbhai Mohmedbhai and the pamphlet is printed in Ahmedabad. I take the following from the correspondent’s letter.

Permit me to send you a copy of a pamphlet published...with a view to induce Harijans for conversion to Islam and create hatred among them against Hindus. This pamphlet is full of such remarks about the Hindu religion and the Hindu rites as are not only false but are likely to intensify the communal tension....

You will kindly...suggest the course to be adopted so that these poor and illiterate Harijan people may not be entrapped by such false and inflammatory pamphlets.

I had the pain of going through the pamphlet. It is as mischievous as it has been described by the correspondent. It is in the form of a dialogue between two Harijans, father and son. At the instance of the father the son reads Hindu scriptures and ridicules them. Everything held sacred by Hindus is caricatured so as to excite disgust towards Hinduism and _savarna_ Hindus. Even the sacred name of Swami Shraddhanandji has been dragged in the discussion and words have been put into his mouth which I hold him to be incapable of having uttered. Here is a sentence which no gentleman would write of his fellow-men: "Some Hindus sit in squares smeared with cow-dung as if they were sitting to evacuate themselves. Cursed be such eaters." the pamphlet is full of distortions. And it holds out material hopes to Harijans which can hardly be fulfilled especially about the mass of Harijans if they are ever tempted to forsake their ancestral faith. Thus the Moulvi who is responsible for the conversion of the Harijan’s son is represented to be a convert from being a Chamar and having married a girl belonging to a noble Muslim family. The new convert drinks from the same cup as the Moulvi and the remains of the water are drunk by the company. He is treated to a feast at a Munshi’s palatial house. The feast fills the dining hall with fragrance.

1 Not reproduced here
2 Only excerpts are reproduced here.

“Every morsel was a nectar, every potion the water of life,” and this erstwhile Harijan is treated to the inhalation of a hookah which goes the round of the whole company.

It is tragic to see that religion is dragged down to the low level of crude materialism to lure people into which the most cherished sentiments of millions of human being are trodden underfoot.

I hope that the pamphlet has no support from thoughtful Mussalmans who should read it to realize the mischief such pamphlets can create.

My correspondent asks me how to deal with the menace. One remedy I have applied, viz., to bring hereby the vilifying propaganda to the notice of the responsible Muslim world. He himself can claim the attention of the local Mussalman leaders to the publication. The second and the most important thing to do is purification from within. So long as the poison of untouchability remains in the Hindu body, it will be liable to attacks from outside. It will be proof against such attacks only when a solid and impregnable wall of purification is erected in the shape of complete removal of untouchability.

Harijan, 8-8-1936

373. NOTES

WHEELERS, NOT SHOULDERS

Shri C. Tejpal has for years been conducting a campaign in favour of using light vehicles instead of shoulders for carrying dead bodies. He knows that he has to fight against a sentiment cherished by millions of Hindus and Mussalmans from times immemorial. Persons vie with one another in giving their shoulders for carrying the dead. The carrying of corpses on human shoulders is an impressive sight. So at any rate we have been used to think. But apart from sentiment there is nothing to recommend the practice. Where the burial ground or the crematorium is some distance from the place where death occurs, carrying on shoulders becomes a trying task. Again when a caste has only a few members, or it is a poor man who has lost a relative, no matter how near the place of disposal is the question assumes serious proportions. And we know that in times of plague and famine corpses are often left in the streets to rot or to be food for vultures. There is no doubt, therefore, that there is much to be said in favour of carrying corpses on carts. Shri Tejpal has constructed a cart which costs a little over 100 rupees. In a poor country like India a hundred rupees is a consideration not to be lightly dismissed. But if village Mahajans' and municipalities were to own such carts and hire them out at a trifling charge, the question of expense can be eliminated. And local enthusiasts who appreciate the reform may popularize the practice in their surroundings. Shri Tejpal informs me that the Municipality of Ahmedabad keeps one such cart and so do Mahajans or Seva Samitis in Surat, Baroda, Jamnagar and Porbandar. The Prarthana Samaj of Bombay is also reported to have one. It will be interesting to know the extent to which the reform has made headway in the places where such carts are kept.

HAND-GINNING

Like the wheel, the carding-bow and the hand-gins have been undergoing progressive improvements though not to the same extent as the wheel. But the processes anterior to spinning are just as important as spinning itself. Evenness, strength and speed depend upon good cotton, good picking, good ginning and good carding. If any of the processes are defective, they tell upon the quality and the quantity of yarn turned out in a given time. Experiments are therefore being conducted by Shri Radhakrishna Bajaj in Wardha in finding out the possibility of improvement in the hand-gin. If there are khadi lovers who have made improvements, they should correspond with Shri Radhakrishna and send him specimens if any.

Harajan, 8-8-1936

1 A representative body of responsible citizens
374. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 9, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Yes, it is well for you not to come. I am sending more milk. If not wanted, let Motibehn bring it back.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 6358. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G. N. 9824

375. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

August 9, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

How you have hurt me like a thorn! Since I had this news, your face has been present before my mind’s eye, and I have been brooding constantly. What is this that has happened and why did you do it? But how could you help it? Who could overcome his nature? And it is quite proper that you should not curb your nature, as this would only lead to hypocrisy. It is thus I console myself. I am considering what I can do, within my limits, to help you fulfil your ambition.

I shall send you a dhoti if you write to me the length and the width you want. Or, you may yourself cut it out when you come here. I have three rolls with me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 7304. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

1 The reference is to the addressee wanting to have formal education and a degree; vide “Letter to Manilal and Sushila Gandhi”, 16-8-1936.
376. LETTER TO PYARELAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 9, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I see that our views are divergent. You still appear to have faith in outward effort. I have given up outward effort altogether. I depend only on the grace of God. The reason for my asking you to come is that it is here that your sadhana has to be, not in Bengal or Utkal. Your natural place is also here with me and perhaps it is here that you can be most useful. This therefore is my advice to you. If my writing strikes a chord in your heart, do come.

What you write about Khan Saheb is correct. He came yesterday to stay with me. He is occupying a corner of the room at the moment. I like this dharmashala. How wonderful it would be if you could also join! Still a small room has been built for Khan Saheb. You can also make use of it. He is not using it. Maybe he will not use it at all.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

377. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 9/10, 1936

CHI. KANAIYO,

Tell Chhotelal to send me two vessels each big enough to hold five to seven seers of milk. They should preferably be tin-coated brass ones. Zinc vessels will do if they are cheaper.

Send me some mustard oil.

A few letters accompany this.

I want hand-made paper for making note-books, etc.

Blessings from
BAPU

P. T. O.
August 10, 1936

On the reverse I wrote yesterday.

But it got left behind. I find, however, that it was not very urgent. I am now sending some letters and an article. I propose to send some more later. I want the enema things we have here. If they are needed there, new ones have to be bought for this place.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M. M. U./II

378. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

August 10, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I hope the progress will continue. If there is any complication, you will at once let me know.

Love

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 6359. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Aslo G. N. 9825

379. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SEGAON, WARDHA,

August 10, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

Khan Saheb has received the usual notice to attend the meetings in Bombay. He has no desire to attend them and I do not want to press him. And in Bombay he will be asked to attend meetings and functions at which he would be called upon to speak. I do not want him to do so just now. I want him rather to pass the year with me. And he is none too strong nor invulnerable to attacks of illness. Will you, therefore, please excuse him from attendance?

Love.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1934. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 In the source this letter is placed among 1934 papers and the same year is assigned to it in A Bunch of Old Letters. This however is a mistake as Gandhiji shifted to Segaon only in 1936.

2 Of the A. I. C. C.
380. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

August 10, 1936

CHI. PREMA,

I had a reason for not being content with a three-pice postcard.¹
I didn’t get your rakdī. I would certainly have worn it had I received it. Since you sent one, however, you have had the joy and earned the merit of sending it.

You seem to be picking up knowledge of a good many subjects. I shall at any rate glance through the book sent by you.

I can certainly enlarge the area of experience in Segaon, but not just now. I have neither the time nor the inclination. The experiences don’t seem to me worth communicating to anybody.

Man’s speech has a conventional meaning but in addition each utterance also has a specific meaning intended by the speaker which can be known from the context. Nobody has known truth in its perfection and, therefore, each person describes a thing as he sees it and that is the truth for him, even though as a matter of fact his view might be false.

In like manner man’s view of a thing changes from age to age and the view held in a particular age is the truth for that age. This is the meaning or idea in asato ma sadgamaya².

Where the notion of high and low has disappeared I see no harm in the Shudras serving the other three varnas.³ [Nobody]⁴ is compelled to be a Shudra. [If, then, service is the natural bent of mind of a Shudra,]⁵ why should he change that calling for another? If the Brahmin and the Bhangi both get just enough for their sustenance, ¹ The addressee had enquired why Gandhiji had used an envelope for his letter dated July 22, 1936, when the matter could have been fitted in a postcard.

² The thread tied by a sister to her brother’s wrist symbolizing the brother’s obligation to protect her
³ Lead me from untruth to truth.
⁴ The addressee had maintained that the whole tradition of the saint-poets of Maharashtra had more or less acknowledged the idea of high and low as inherent in the varna system; how then could they look upon all with equality?
⁵ This sentence is incomplete in the source.
⁶ ibid
what is the difference between the two? Nobody will prevent a Bhangi from becoming a jnani. In the varna system of my conception, no varna will have the monopoly of knowledge. Think over the verses in the women’s prayer. What are the common dharmas of the four varnas? Maybe you will find some utterances of Jnanadeva and others which seem to support the distinction of high and low. But nobody should be judged in this way by a few isolated sayings of his. I know what you wish to say regarding Ramdas. Even if those examples could be shown to be inapplicable, my argument remains untouched.

I cannot accede to your request, for you have given no thought as to its propriety. You have just been carried away by the present tide. You, I, and all others are cast in the moulds inherited from our parents. There is as much sense, or lack of sense, in rejecting it as there is in forgetting the fact and claiming ourselves to be different. We can remain in the old mould and still make many changes. That is growth or progress. To assume a completely new appearance will mean a total revolution or a new religion altogether. Does Hinduism have no definite mould in any respect? Children daily trace new letters in water which disappear the moment they are formed, but they enjoy the game. It seems you wish to do the same. But do you think you can lure an old man of 67 who has grown up in the old mould, and interest him in drawing circles in water? Standing on the bank, I watch the play of such as you. In the next issue of Harijan, you will see something having a bearing on this in my comments on a letter.

You have discovered my ignorance all right. If you search more, you will discover still grosser ignorance. But I hope you will not desert me when you have discovered all my ignorance. If you promise me that, I will confess that I don’t know anything at all, for I have not made such a study.

I have read enough about communism to satisfy me. What we shall need in swaraj I can tell only when I see the swaraj. Any opposition from me that you may notice will be concerning the question of

1 A spiritually enlightened person
2 Vide “Letter to Prabhavati”, 15-12-1930
3 Jnaneshwara, saint-poet of Maharashtra
4 Samartha Ramdas Swami, Shivaji’s guru
5 Vide “Varna v. Caste,” 15-8-1936 truth-untruth and violence-non-violence.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 10384. Also C. W. 6822. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

381. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

August 10, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I am enclosing Prema’s letter. Lilavati does not wish to move out of this place, though you have been inviting her and, on my part, I have gladly given the permission. She is very unsettled in her mind and wants to try and see if she can steady herself with a year’s effort. And she believes that going there might disturb her. There is some truth in it, no doubt.

I therefore recommend that you manage without her if you can. Yesterday she told me that she was going to write to you.

Kanaiyo comes often to see me. I see he is in a very happy mood.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8501. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

382. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

August 10, 1936

CHI. NARAHARI,

Have you ever extracted juice from a dried lemon? If you say ‘no’, how will you squeeze out of me a lesson for your series of readers? I went through your circular request. It is good, but not for me. I would stop all writing if I could have my way. Don’t ask for anything new. Go ahead with your work, taking me as gone.
Maruti desires to build a house. The land should be from the Harijan Ashram. What happened to Avantikabai’s plot? Can we give him that or some part of it? Or he might keep with us the sum he wishes to invest and so long as he does so he might put the land to his use and enjoy ownership rights of the house. If it does not suit us, we may return his deposit after estimating the current value of the property. I am saying all this on the supposition that Avantikabai’s land might not be available or that the Ashram land might not be sold. For my part, I have no objection whatever to selling it. Think over the whole matter and do what seems proper.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9098

383. LETTER TO H.L. SHARMA

August 10, 1936

CHI. SHARMA,

Your letter. I feel ashamed that Babbitt’s book has not yet been found though I am sure it will be found. The yarn got mixed up with the other yarns. You should accept the khadi form me....

Blessings from
BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, facing p. 259

384. LETTER TO PYARELAL

August 11, 1936

CHI. PYARELAL,

I started reading your letters in detail after writing to you. I see that you suffered from bleeding. That also is a sign that it would be unwise for you to go to Utkal and that you should come here. I have always been telling you that it is your duty to make your body healthy. I was pained to hear about the squalor in the College Square.

1 Husband of Lakshmi, a Harijan girl adopted by Gandhiji
2 Avantikabai Gokhale
3 The last sentence is illegible, the original having been damaged.
Have you drawn Satis Babu’s\(^1\) attention to it? Do let me have news of your health if you are not coming immediately.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

385. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

August 12, 1936

BAPA,

You have made a pretty full miscellany of a single letter. I hope Devdas’s presence causes no distraction to life there.

I had a long letter from Malkani whose plight is indeed pitiable. The question constantly occurs to me whether to call Rukmini a shrew or an absolutely foolish person.

What shall we do about Satis Babu? On the one hand he has made a great sacrifice and, on the other, he is very suspicious by nature. Of course we shall be able to keep him as long as we wish to.

Ramachandran has caused me a surprise. Let me know if any difficulty concerning him arises.

Surely, some day you are going to look at things at Segaon....\(^2\) Tukdoji occupies the corner in front of me, Khan Saheb the one beside me; Munnalal by Tukdoji’s side. Rajkumari’s bed is between me and Tukdoji. On the wooden stand before her rests a rustic medicine box which is nothing but a used fruit-case and other odds and ends. Ba, Lilavati and Manu accommodate themselves where they can. Again, we have quite a different scene at night. Isn’t ‘houselessness’ one of the distinguishing characteristics of a bhakta? At any rate, am I not indulging in all sorts of pranks, trying to play the bhakta? Whatever it may be to others, Segaon is to me an inexhaustible source of joy. Yesterday the last corner fell vacant—for the present at least. Munnalal’s of course is permanent.

I expect you are doing well.

BAPU

---

\(^1\) Satis Chandra Das Gupta

\(^2\) A word or two are illegible here.
I had very little time even to scribble this silly stuff. But shouldn’t I rather relax in this way? I have only followed you.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1169

386. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 13, 1936

CHI. KANTA,

I was glad to have your letter, though late. Doubtless you had to do what your father wanted. But surely he did not tell you to bedeck yourself in finery. He would never ask you to array yourself in ornaments. And even if he did, he must have left it to your wish. He got you married, but surely he would not run your household. But I do not wish to write a long letter. Be straightforward, simple and good. Be a good worker and serve. Fulfil at least some of the hopes you have aroused. Preserve your health—physical, mental and spiritual.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI CHANDRAKANTA
BHAKTI BHAVAN
SIGRA
BENARES CITY

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library
387. LETTER TO MANGIBAI

SEGAON,
August 13, 1936

CHI. MANGIBAI,

I have just heard of your husband’s death. Why should we grieve over the death of our loved ones. In the long run death spares no one. This too should be regarded as one of God’s blessings. Now be calm and devote yourself to service.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 172

388. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

WARDHA,
August 14, 1936

MY DEAR SISTER,

This is to acknowledge your letter to Bapu of the 9th inst. I assume that you are still in Khedi though Dr. Baretto told me that he was expecting you on Tuesday last. Evidently his date did not suit you and you asked for another, otherwise you should have been here by now.

In your letter too, you do not say when exactly you are arriving here.

Bapu likes very much your idea of taking a brief holiday in England. We will discuss the details about your travel after you arrive. In the mean time he wants me to tell you that much as he likes the idea of your getting England to take a bigger share in helping India’s poor, you must not think that you are not giving to India more than you are taking from her. You must dismiss the thought from your mind that you have ever been a burden or are ever likely to be one. Whilst you may ask for support from English friends, it will not be in order to find the wherewithal for your livelihood, but in order to help our work here. You are a member of the family and are entitled to wage as much as the rest of us.

More when we meet.

Yours sincerely,
MAHADEV

MISS MARY BARR
KHEDI SAOLIGARH
DISTT. BETUL, C.P.

From a photostat: G. N. 6066. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr
389. TALK WITH A PATIL

[Before August 15, 1936]

The old Patil... went one evening to Gandhiji saying, “I am ready to have the barber’s services... immediately after he has served Govind.”

[GANDHIRE] What then is the difficulty?

[PATIL:] But now he is asking of me a thing I cannot give.

[GANDHIRE] What is that?

[PATIL:] It is that I should once go and feed at his place. With God as witness, Maharaj, I say I have never in my life of about four score years had tea or any kind of refreshment in a hotel. How does he expect me to go and feed at his place?

I quite appreciate what you say, but why does he insist on your feeding at his place?

Because he thinks his castemen might boycott him, and he wants to make assurance doubly sure by having me in his place to eat. Now, Maharaj, is that part of your anti-untouchability programme?

Certainly not. I am satisfied if you have conquered the prejudice of touch. Inter-dining is no part of the anti-untouchability programme, though as you know I am having Govind to cook for me. But that is what I would expect every Harijan sevak to do, not you.

Harijan, 15-8-1936

390. TALK WITH A BARBER

SEGAON,

[Before August 15, 1936]

One morning when I went to Segaon, I found Gandhiji busy pulling to pieces a hair-cropping machine, in order to clean and oil it. That done, he began having a crop with his own hands with a mirror in front of him.

At the same moment one of the devotees of the sadhu came in, and he happened to be a barber. “Bapuji,” shouted the sadhu from the opposite corner, “Let Bhima crop your hair. He knows the art.”

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”, 15-8-1936

2 The barber for fear of being boycotted by the village Patil and others had refused to shave Govind, a Harijan boy.

3 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
[GANDHIJI:] But how does he know it?
He is a barber by profession.
Ah, that is very good. Come along then.
But as soon as Bhima began the operation, Gandhiji asked him:
But I hope you have no prejudice against shaving our Harijan brethren. Have you?
He slightly hesitated, and said: “I have in my heart no prejudice against Harijans.”
That I can believe. But will you shave a Harijan on the same terms as you would shave me?
Again he hesitated. Thereupon Gandhiji said to the sadhu:
I thought you had ascertained from him this thing before you asked me to have his services.
“I am sorry,” said the sadhu, “that aspect had for the moment escaped me.”
Then I shall have to consider whether I should stop in the middle of the crop and dispense with Bhima.
But Bhima said: “No, though I do not usually do it, I promise from now to serve Harijans on the same terms.”

Harijan, 15-8-1936

391. MORE COBWEBS

A seeker of truth cannot afford to write or speak to please anybody. During my long search after truth in all things which have come my way, I know that I have hardly ever succeeded in convincing all of the correctness of my position regarding the matters then in question. In the matter of Hindi propaganda, if I have displeased certain Muslim friends I have no less displeased Hindu friends. But unless my critics convince me of my error, they should not expect me to change merely because they want me to. Thus a correspondent actually says that although my position is logically and historically correct, I should change it to suit the Muslim critics who would have me either to advocate the adoption of the expression ‘Hindi-Urdu’ or merely ‘Urdu’ to denote the same common speech, the objection being not to the speech but the name which it has hitherto carried. Now there is a letter before me which quarrels with my address to the Hindi Prachar Convocation recently held at Bangalore from another standpoint. It is a long letter from which I quote below the most relevant extracts:

In your convocation address at Bangalore you have asked the 11 million men and women of Karnatak to learn Hindi in order to establish contact with them. You have not even restricted the appeal to those who are already educated in the mother tongue. Even taking for granted that all are educated in the mother tongue, it is neither possible nor desirable, though possible, nor natural that the masses should learn a language other than their mother tongue. Only all India national workers, business men and other people who come in daily contact with the people of North India can and should learn Hindi. Necessity will make them learn the language even without any propaganda.

Though you say that Hindi does not supplant but supplements the provincial languages, in effect it is not so. The bulk of the intellectuals of Tamil Nad today don’t think nor even feel in Tamil but in English. They have completely neglected Tamil. You can understand to what depths of cultural slavery they have fallen when you know that they are even proud of declaring in public meetings and other places that they cannot speak or write well in Tamil but they can do both fluently in English. Now some of them have taken to the study of Hindi more with the help of English than with the help of Tamil. The result is going to be the same. They will begin to think in Hindi instead of English. If a Gujarati tells you that he can write a beautiful essay in Hindi but not in Gujarati, you will be only sorry for him and think that our country is far from attaining purna swaraj. Many have begun to say in Tamil Nad that they know Hindi better than Tamil.

One should not learn any language even though it be the language of the gods, to the detriment of one’s own mother tongue. In this connection I used to cite your own example to the Hindi fanatics. Though you declare that Hindi is the common language of India you have not written either your Autobiography or Satyagraha in South Africa in Hindi but in Gujarati. If you had written them in Hindi many more people would have known what you say in your own words. But you preferred to write them in Gujarati. Though your teaching and personal example differ in this matter, I hold your action to be correct and proper. Therefore I want people to follow not what you say but what you do.

Swaraj should not mean the imposition of one language over those who speak different languages. Primary importance ought to be given only to the mother tongue. Only secondary importance can be given to Hindi, the common language of India. Real inspiration and elevation can come only through the mother tongue.

---

1 On June 12, 1936; vide “Convocation Address at Hindi Prachar Sabha, Bangalore”, 12-6-1936

Let me come to the question of script. In Harijan dated 4-5-1935, writing on the resolution passed by the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan held at Indore you show a partiality for the Urdu script which passes my understanding. In your convocation address at Bangalore also you show the same partiality for the Urdu script. You want to destroy the scripts of all Indian languages derived from or largely influenced by Sanskrit and substitute Devanagari for them for the sake of those who want to learn the various languages. You want to preserve the two scripts, Devanagari and Urdu, for one and the same language spoken by Hindus and Muslims. Others, who also number millions and who have the misfortune of speaking different languages, should allow their scripts to be destroyed and displaced by Devanagari, learn Hindi-Hindustani and also learn Urdu script in order to understand and come into contact with 130 million Hindus and 70 million Muslims! Does this not sound ridiculous and represent the highest from of tyranny? The logical conclusion of this policy would inevitably be the abolition of all languages except Hindi with both of its scripts, for the Devanagari script would have been adopted for all the languages, all would have learnt Hindi and all the important works in the mother tongue would have been translated in [to] Hindi. I want you to reflect for a moment whether this consummation would be desirable in the best interestes of India, our common land of birth. Before you propose to destroy the various scripts, should you not attempt to destroy one of the scripts, Devanagari and Urdu, for one and the same language? Why should Muslims and Hindus speaking the same language use two different scripts?

I do not know that I asked all 11 million men and women of Karnataka to learn Hindi-Hindustani. I should be more than satisfied if all those who ever have to come in contact with the people from the North would learn Hindi-Hindustani. But I would certainly not only not deplore, as my correspondent would have me to, on the contrary I would welcome, all people of all the non-Hindi provinces learning Hindi. Why is it not desirable or natural for all India to know an all-India speech in addition to every province knowing its own language and in addition knowing All-India speech? Why should such knowledge be the privilege of the cultured few and not of the masses? It will surely show a very high degree of culture for a whole nation of over 300 million souls to know two languages. That such an event is highly improbable is unfortunately too true.
What, however, would be most unfortunate would be for any province to neglect its own language and to prefer another speech as the correspondent complains is happening in Tamil Nad. My frequent travels in Tamil Nad have confirmed the opinion expressed by my correspondent. But latterly I have noticed a change for the better in that province. And the process of preferring the provincial speech to every other where the choice is possible will be hastened without an effort as the educated in every province recognize more and more the necessity of seeking and establishing contact with the masses.

The correspondent incidentally touches the eternal rivalry between English and Hindi-Hindustani to be the common speech. I have held and declared, ever since I have entered public life, the definite opinion that English never can or ought to be the all-India speech and that it can only be Hindi, i.e., Hindustani, the speech spoken by the millions of Hindus and Mussalmans of the North. The attempt to treat English as such is to establish a permanent bar between the masses and the English-educated classes and to retard the progress of the country to its destination. I have repeatedly explained that English has a definite place in our culture. In order to understand the rulers and the whole Western world and to bring to India the best that the West has to give, a few of us must learn English which is the most widely known speech of the West. But a thousand times more Indians have to know Hindi-Hindustani if the illiterate masses are to be one with the educated classes.

The correspondent is wholly ignorant of my opinion when he thinks that I have even been guilty of advising preference for Hindi over the provincial speech. There is no hiatus between my principle and my practice in this connection. I heartily endorse the proposition that primary importance should be given to the mother tongue.

On the question of script my correspondents’s fear is justified, nor do I apologize for the opinion I hold. Different languages descended from or intimately connected with Sanskrit ought to have one script and that is surely Devanagari. Different scripts are an unnecessary hindrance to the learning by the people of one province the language of other provinces. Even Europe which is not one nation has generally adopted one script. Why should India, which claims to be and is one nation, not have one script? I know I am inconsistent when I tolerate both Devanagari and Urdu scripts for the same language. But my inconsistency is not quite foolish. There is Hindu-
Muslim friction at the present moment. It is wise and necessary for the educated Hindus and Muslims to show mutual respect and toleration to the utmost extent possible. Hence the option for Devanagari or Urdu scripts. Happily there is no friction between provinces and provinces. Hence the desirability of advocating a reform which means a closer knitting together of provinces in more ways than one. And let it be remembered that the vast mass of the people are wholly illiterate. It would be suicidal to impose on them different scripts for no other reason than a false sentiment and laziness to think.

_Harijan_, 15-8-1936

392. VARNA V. CASTE

Shri Sant Ramji, of the Jat-Pat-Torak Mandal of Lahore, wants me to publish the following:

I have read your remarks about Dr. Ambedkar and the Jat-Pat-Torak Mandal, Lahore. In that connection I beg to submit as follows:

We did not invite Dr. Ambedkar to preside over our conference because he belonged to the Depressed Classes, for we do not distinguish between a touchable and an untouchable Hindu. On the contrary our choice fell on him simply because his diagnosis of the fatal disease of the Hindu community was the same as ours, i.e., he too was of the opinion that caste system was the root cause of the disruption and downfall of the Hindu. The subject of the Doctor's thesis for doctorate being caste system, he has studied the subject thoroughly. Now the object of our conference was to persuade the Hindus to annihilate caste, but the advice of a non-Hindu in social and religious matters can have no effect on them. The Doctor in the supplementary portion of his address insisted on saying that that was his last speech as a Hindu, which was irrelevant as well as pernicious to the interests of the conference. So we requested him to expunge that sentence, for he could easily say the same thing on any other occasion. But he refused and we saw no utility in making merely a show of our function. In spite of all this, I cannot help praising his address which is, as far as I know, the most learned thesis on the subject and worth translating into every vernacular of India.

Moreover I want to bring to your notice that your philosophical difference between caste and varna is too subtle to be grasped by people in general, because for all practical purposes in the Hindu society caste and varna are one and the same thing, for the function of both of them is one and the same, i.e., to restrict intercaste marriages and inter-dining. Your theory of varnavyavastha is impracticable in this age and there is no hope of its revival in the near future. But Hindus are slaves of caste and do not want to destroy it. So when you advocate your ideal or imaginary varnavyavastha they find justification for clinging to caste. Thus you are doing a great disservice to social reform by advocating your imaginary utility of division of varnas, for it creates hindrance in our way. To try to remove untouchability without striking disease or to draw a line on the surface of water. As in the heart of their hearts dwijas\(^1\) do not want to give social equality to the so-called touchable and untouchable Shudras, so they refuse to break caste, and give liberal donations for the removal of untouchability, simply to evade the issue. To seek the help of the Shastras for the removal of untouchability and caste is simply to wash mud with mud.

1 _Vide_ “Dr. Ambedkar’s Indictment- I”, 11-7-1936

The last paragraph of the letter surely cancels the first. If the Mandal rejects the help of the Shastras, they do exactly what Dr. Ambedkar does, i.e., cease to be Hindus. How then can they object to Dr. Ambedkar’s address merely because he said that that was his last speech as a Hindu? The position appears to be wholly untenable especially when the Mandal, for which Shri Sant Ram claims to speak, applauds the whole argument of Dr. Ambedkar’s address.

But it is pertinent to ask what the Mandal believes if it rejects the Shastras. How can a Muslim remain one if he rejects the Quran, or a Christian remain Christian if he rejects the Bible? If caste and varna are convertible terms and if varna is an integral part of the Shastras which define Hinduism, I do not know how a person who rejects caste, i.e., varna can call himself a Hindu.

Shri Sant Ram likens the Shastras to mud. Dr. Ambedkar has not, so far as I remember, given any such picturesque name to the Shastras. I have certainly meant it when I have said that if the Shastras support the existing untouchability I should cease to call myself a Hindu. Similarly, if the Shastras support caste as we know it today in all its hideousness, I may not call myself or remain a Hindu since I have no scruples about inter-dining or intermarriage. I need not repeat my position regarding the Shastras and their interpretation. I venture to suggest to Shri Sant Ram that it is the only rational and correct and morally defensible position and it has ample warrant in Hindu tradition.

_Harijan, 15-8-1936_

\(^1\) The twice-born
393. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

SEGAON WARDHA,
August 16, 1936

CHL. MANILAL, SUSHILA,

I have your letters. There is no need at all for you to come here if you are happy where you are. No matter where we are we should render whatever services we can, and regard the people wherever we are as members of our own family. The true meeting is that of hearts, and they are quite close though we are millions of miles apart. If the hearts of two prisoners in the same cell are not one their physical proximity is meaningless. Hence, I do not long to have you come here to see me. You may live there permanently if you find your peace there.

Now a surprise for you both. Kanti’s mind is now set on getting formal education and obtaining a degree. However one may try, he cannot possibly be deterred. I tried hard, but without success. Now, the question of the expenses for his education remains. Kanti, too, agrees that it cannot be paid from the public funds and that it would be a crime to take anything from his mother’s sisters who have already spent a good deal on him. Hence, either you three brothers should pay his expenses or he must earn and learn. In my opinion, you three should share the burden, which is likely to be Rs. 75 to Rs. 100 a month, though I do not know about it. It is enough if you give your share of Rs. 33. Start sending the sum if you agree with the proposal.

Manu and Ba are with me. We are getting on quite well.

I got a letter from Harilal, his first after his conversion. He asks for a copy of the Golden Number¹ and wants to see me. I have written² to him, saying that he may come provided he agrees to my terms for the visit.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4856

¹ Of Indian Opinion
² The letter is not traceable.
394. TELEGRAM TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

[On or before August 17, 1936]

THE NOTICES ARE AGAINST THE PRINCIPLE OF ARBITRATION AND ARE FRAUGHT WITH SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES.

The Bombay Chronicle, 18-8-1936

395. LETTER TO N.R. MALKANI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 17, 1936

MY DEAR MALKANI,

You did well in pouring out your heart to me. You should ignore what others may say. Thakkar Bapa has often made mistakes in judging people. And he writes letters often without careful thinking. But it is idle to expect him at this time of life to change his ways. We must take him as he is and love him for his sacrifice, single-minded devotion to the poor and the oppressed. I never attached any value to his remarks over the visit of the lady. It was undoubtedly wrong to have written at all about the incident and written in the way he did.

You did well in leaving Rukmini in Sind. You will have to be firm with her for her own sake. She must not be allowed to make life miserable or interfere with your work.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 919

396. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 19, 1936

CHI. SUMANGAL,

I have your letter after a long time. I have been keeping myself informed about you. What can I write? I shall not give up hope of you. Some day your mind will become steady. Please note that should 1 President of the Mill-owners’ Association. According to The Bombay Chronicle the telegram was addressed also to Chimanlal Parekh who had put up the wage-cut notices in his mill.

2 The report bearing the telegram was dated August 17, 1936.
you wish to lead a married life there would be nothing wrong in it. No one can transgress the bounds of his nature.

Write whenever you feel inclined.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

397. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

SEGGAON, WARDHA,
August 19, 1936

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

You should have written earlier but better late than never. You seem to have made yourself unhappy for some things without any reason. But what wisdom can I give you from this distance? For, you showed wisdom in not calling over Kashi. Our family is where we live. We should be content with what help they give.

I still advise you not to work beyond your strength. We are not omnipotent like God that we can help all people in all their troubles. We may go only as far as our strength permits. The baby is not likely to derive much benefit from glucose. As for cod-liver oil, I do not like it at all. If, however, you are very keen on it, you also may do as others do. You yourself have taken it. So have Kusum and Navin. It may possibly help.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32997

398. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

SEGGAON, WARDHA,
August 20, 1936

CHI. AMBUJAM,

So, you can’t be satisfied without letters written by me. You shall have them
You must be composed whatever happens. You should not worry over Kichi’s indifferent health. God protects us all and we may not distrust Him when things do not go as we wish or when our dear ones get ill. So I am glad to see that you say you have resigned yourself to God. Let that resignation be from the heart and not merely mechanical. For often we utter these truths without their finding a set in our hearts.

My food is just now milk, pumpkin or any vegetable obtainable in Segaon or surrounding villages, a little garlic and fruit when there is any. I do not find the need for fruit as I used to before.

I hope you have recovered your strength and that Father and Mother are also well.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 9609. Courtesy: S. Ambujammal

399. A LETTER
August 20, 1936

Your letter makes me think. If all the principal relatives have no objection, if...¹ is free to retain her own faith and does as a matter of fact retain it, and [her] future partner is likewise and does as a matter of fact retain his own faith and both have equal regard for each other’s faith and practices, so far as I can see now, I should have no difficulty in blessing the union.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

400. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI
August 20, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Could you give Kumi some work at the school or elsewhere, if I arranged an allowance of Rs. 15 a month for her from this place? To put the question differently, does she in your opinion have the disposition to be entrusted with some work?

Will a copy of the Gita with the words split up and with their meanings, do for Purushottam and Vijaya? They had asked for only a

¹ Omission as in the source

310 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Sanskrit text. I now learn that there is such an edition in large type and with meanings. There will of course be no difficulty in getting the bare Sanskrit text.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8502. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

401. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 21, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

A letter from you after many days. I had been waiting for it day after day. I very well understand the reason why you could not write. It would be enough to write out a postcard when under such a stress. Who am I to worry on you account? And after all how would my worrying avail? God alone worries and protects us all. May you have the faith that He is the Lord of every breath we take! Everything will then go well. Otherwise you are being fully put to the test and you are sure to pass it. Do nothing beyond your capacity. Do manage to take milk and fruit. You will not then have to worry about the rest of your food. Who stays there? This is all I am writing today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3480

402. LETTER TO H.L. SHARMA

August 21, 1936

CHI. SHARMA,

... ¹ Give me the full title of Babbitt’s book. You may not mind the loss of the book but I cannot help feeling upset till it is found. How can a book disappear like this? And the same goes for the khadi.

¹ Omission as in the source
However, I do not feel as bad about it as about the loss of Babbitt. I still hope I shall find it.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, p. 260

403. A LETTER¹

[Before August 22, 1936]

I see that you do not know the origin of the word ‘Harijan’ as applied to the so-called untouchables. Hindu literature and, so far as I know, even Christian literature is full of the idea that the despised of the earth are favoured children of God; and so we have a proverb in daily use which means that God is the help of the helpless. Who could be better fitted to be called Harijans in this sense than the millions whom the insolence of men has made the outcastes of society? It would be a different thing if the untouchables themselves said, ‘We are Harijans because we are without sin’—but can any man born of woman say ‘I am without sin whether he has experienced what you call ‘new birth’ or not?

Harijan, 22-8-1936

404. DISCUSSION WITH A PANDIT²

[Before August 22, 1936]

A Pandit was one of the visitors to Segaon the other day. He was introduced as one learned in the Shastras and as one who gave regular discourses on the Gita. Gandhiji asked him if untouchability had the sanction of the Gita. It seemed to depend, according to him, on how one defined an untouchable. He said:

¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The addressee, a missionary, had enquired: “Does it not indicate that to be really and truly Harijans we must have the experience of a new birth, a spiritual regeneration, which the ordinary man can have no very great understanding of, so long as he is in the unregenerate state? Instead of designating the poor villagers who are still ‘dead in trespasses and sins’ as ‘sons of God’, would it not be better to call them all men and women who might become true sons of God?”

² Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
An untouchable is he who thinks evil thoughts, speaks foul language, does evil deeds. Such a one would be an untouchable according to the Gita.

But at that rate every one of us would be an untouchable. Who is there amongst us who is without sin? Let me ascertain. Tukde Maharaj, are you without sin?

No, by no means.

Then, Khan Saheb, what about you?

The same thing. Who can claim to be perfect?

Which means that we are all untouchable. Anyway, it is better that we regard ourselves as less pure than others, for we know ourselves better than we do others, and we may judge none. That is why saint Surdas sang: “There is none so wicked and base as I.”

“But then one needs the help of the Shastras to purge oneself of evil thoughts?” said the Pandit.

Yes, but I refuse to accept the authority of a Shastra which supports untouchability, i.e., which condemns a certain class of people, by reason of their birth, as untouchable. Such a Shastra, far from purging us of sin, adds to our load of sin.

Harijan, 22-8-1936

405. DISCUSSION WITH A SADHU

[Before August 22, 1936]

Another sadhu, a header of the Harijans, one day came in with a curious poser:

“How can we serve God when we do not know God?”

[GANDHI]: We may not know God, but we know His creation. Service of His creation is the service of God.

But how can we serve the whole of God’s creation.

We can but serve that part of God’s creation which is nearest and best known to us. We can start with our next-door neighbour. We should not be content with keeping our courtyard clean, we should see that our neighbour’s courtyard is also clean. We may serve our family, but may not sacrifice the village for the sake of the family. Our own honour lies in the preservation of that of our own village. But we must each of us understand our own limitations. Our capacity for service is automatically limited by our knowledge of the world in which we live. But let me put it in the simplest possible language. Let us think less of ourselves than of our next-door neighbour. Dumping the refuse of our courtyard into that of our neighbour is no service of humanity but disservice. Let us start with the service of our neighbours.

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”

_Harijan, 22-8-1936_

406. A DANGEROUS PROPOSAL

Rao Bahadur Rajah has rendered public service by publishing the correspondence between himself and Dr. Moonje.⁠1 There was no breach of confidence in the publication. Privilege of confidence is surely not available for proposals which the receiver may regard to be dangerous or harmful to a cause as the Moonje-Ambedkar proposal most undoubtedly is. That neither Dr. Moonje nor Dr. Ambedkar regards his proposal as dangerous does not make it less so in the estimation of those who disapprove of it. What else was R.B. Rajah todo if he intended by all legitimate means to thwart it? He entered into correspondence with some of those who were parties to the Yeravda Pact, and when he saw that not one of them favoured the proposal he promptly released the correspondence for publication. One may hope that we have seen the last of any bargaining between, Dr. Ambedkar and _savarna_ Hindus for the transfer to another form of several million dumb Harijans as if they were chattels.

The Pact is between one large section of Hindus and another. It frustrated the attempt to cut the Hindu body into two and gave the opportunity to _savarna_ Hindus to make reparation to those millions whom they had ill-treated for centuries.

Dr. Ambedkar wants to scourge the _savarna_ Hindus as he has every right to do, but he may not expect the latter to be party to it. He has every right to be impatient. But prejudices and superstitions centuries old do not die in a moment. No one who has at all cared to study the reform movement will deny that every attempt humanly possible has been and is being made to bring home to the _savarna_ Hindus the message of the anti-untouchability movement. If Dr. Ambedkar’s proposal were accepted, the reform movement would receive a setback which might mean death to it in the end. For it contemplates a paper but legal transfer of Harijans from the Hindu fold to some other, no matter by what name the latter is called. It must mean fratricide. Harijans themselves will be cut up into two rival sections, and if they are both classified as Harijans within the meaning of the Pact their state then will be worse than it is today, and it will be an evil day for unhappy India if such a calamity descends on her.

---

⁠¹ Vide “Letter to M.C. Rajah”, 26-6-1936

It is futile to argue that although there will be nominal change of religion, there won’t be a real one, and if there is any, it would not be so bad as if Harijans were called Christians or Muslims. If it is a change of religion, it matters little under what label they are classified. Only if they are said to belong to another religion and still remain Harijans, an additional cause of internecine quarrel would be created; and all this to satisfy the desire to punish savarna Hindus. If in his anger or impatience Dr. Ambedkar refuses to see the obvious result, surely Dr. Moonje ought to.

And who are we, the self-constituted leaders, to barter away the religious freedom of Harijans? Has not every Harijan, however dull or stupid he may be, the right to make his own choice? It is one thing for Dr. Ambedkar and those who wish to change over to some other religion to do so, and wholly another for political or other parties to assume such change for the mass of Harijans and to base thereon legal and other consequences of a farreaching character.

If the leaders of different religions in India ceased to compete with one another for enticing Harijans into their fold, it would be well for this unfortunate country. I have the profound conviction that those who are engaged in the competition are not serving the cause of religion. By looking at it in terms of politics or economics they reduce the religious values, whereas the proper thing would be to esimate politics and every other thing in terms of religion. Religion deals with the science of the soul. Great as the other forces of the world are, if there is such a thing as God soul force is the greatest of all. We know as a matter of fact that the greater the force the finer it is. Hitherto electricity has held the field among the finer physical powers. And yet nobody has seen it except through its wonderful results. Scientific speculation dares to talk of a force finer even than that of electricity. But no instrument devised by man has been able to know anything positive of soul force or spiritual force. It is on that force that the true religious reformer has hitherto relied and never without hope fulfilled. It is that force which will finally govern the welfare of Harijans and everyone else and confound the calculations of men however gifted they may be intellectually. The reformer who has entered upon the duty of ridding Hinduism of the disease of untouchability has to depend in everything he does on that force and nothing else.

_Harijan_, 22-8-1936

407. LETTER TO MEHERCHAND AHLUWALIA

_SEGAON, WARDHA_,
_August 22, 1936_

DEAR FRIEND,

My agreement is general. I have never advocated nor do I now advocate class war of class hatred. I do not believe the former to be inevitable. But I have never said nor believed that capitalist help is necessary for the Congress cause.

_Yours sincerely_,

SHRI MEHERCHAND AHLUWALIA
RAJPURA
N.W.R.

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

408. LETTER TO MEHRABEHN ZABWALA

_August 22, 1936_

DEAR SISTER,

I have your nice letter. There is no direct relation between Harijan workers and khadi. Even those who wear foreign clothes can serve Harijans. Therefore keep on doing social work without paying any heed to the criticism.

But you are also a devotee of Daridranarayana. Daridranarayana means thousands of starving villagers. Those who serve them can certainly bear the weight of khadi. It is enough that you do all that is possible for you. May I give you one suggestion? You are able to spin very fine yarn. If you do that you can get a very light sari made for five or six rupees. Many poor women do the same.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
409. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 23, 1936

BAPA,

I do not remember the talks regarding the Sevak Mandal of South India. For the present at least, I form an opinion about each situation as and when it is represented to me. I see no objection if deserving workers can be found for the South India Mandal and the expenses are met from the South itself. The centre cannot give any aid.

I hope Amtul Salaam is not, on the whole, a source of worry to you. She is preparing to return. You have to accept payment from here for Nilam’s expenses. The burden is not to be thrown on you there. Most probably Jamnalalji will pay her expenses or as a last resort my purse is always there.

Valunjkar will need more money. I have already written to you to accept his hundi. He has been working under my supervision and consults me in all matters.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1165

410. LETTER TO N.C. KELKAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 24, 1936

DEAR MR. KELKAR,

I am late acknowledging your letter.

Do you not think your statement was based on very flimsy evidence? You might have referred Swami Satyadev’s article to me for confirmation. If I had the time I would love to enter into correspondence with him and find out the names of parties to whom I was supposed to be talking. But I have neither the time nor the inclination to pursue the matter any further. Truth stands.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 3119. Courtesy: Kashinath N. Kelkar

Vide “Letter to N. C. Kelkar”, 6-8-1936
411. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
August 24, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Time only to send you love in abundance for two wires. Thank God thumb well.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3735. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6891

412. LETTER TO MIRABEHN
August 24, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Here is Sitaram Sastri’s letter for you to deal with. You forgot the sandals. I wonder if you got your own pair. If not, you should procure a pair there or write to Valunjkar at once.

I hope you are well and well settled.¹ I am looking forward to your first letter after settling down to the new life. Do not make any time-table.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6362. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9828

413. LETTER TO B. G. KHER
August 24, 1936

MY DEAR KHER,

Having little time, I have delayed acknowledging your important letter.² This is no question of anybody becoming a Buddhist. The temple is meant to be one dedicated to Buddha as temples are dedicated to Rama, Krishna and the like. There is no proselytizing

¹ The addressee had moved to Betul.
² Wherein the addressee had written: “Shri Dharmanand Kosambi told me that you would like to look into the way the amount given by Birlaji for the Naigaum Vihar is spent. I will do so; until the building is ready I shall see to the application of this amount. Thereafter I do not know what I could do, being today identified with the Harijan Seva Sangh. How am I to work on a Buddhist Vihar committee? Are they all going to become Buddhists? Where is the need?…”
taint about this movement. At the most it is to be a Hindu temple of an advanced type in which a very learned man will be keeper or pujari.
That is how I have understood the whole scheme of Prof. Kosambi.
You may share this with the Professor, and if he endorses my position, with Shri Natarajan, so that there may be a common understanding about the temple.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 7977. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

414. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

August 24, 1936

CHI. MANILAL, SUSHILA,

I have your letters to me and have also read the one to Kishorelal. The idea of having share-holders does not seem right.
Where there is a field ready for share-holders, one for customers and expert workers can well be assumed. Having share-holders does not mean having subscribers or expert workers. In my opinion, there may be difficulty in getting men in spite of a flow of funds. Plainly speaking, the subscribers to Indian Opinion are not exactly its readers but rather patrons. This is a pitiable situation. You should stop running around and find another honest trade which can support both of you. You may pay the loss in running Indian Opinion or those who desire its continuance should give a guarantee to bear the loss.
You should close down Indian Opinion if this cannot be done. The insistence on continuing it could be right only up to a point. You ought to have the ability to support yourself by means of some other trade in case Indian Opinion cannot run. You should also be equipped to support yourself solely on agriculture. You ought to think over all this patiently. Very little help can be had through exchange of ideas across this distance. You alone know the present condition there. It may, however, be right to inform me before taking a final decision. If there is no time for it there is no harm in deciding independently. In any case do observe these conditions:

(1) Incur no debts.
(2) Transact no business on credit.
(3) Take up no business in forbidden goods such as selling bidis.

(4) Don’t engage in a business to get rich quickly.

I am pained to read about Sorabji. Sheth Rustomji’s fears about him seem to be proving true. After all things must go the destined way and one’s understanding follows the same way.

Perhaps I have already written to you about Kanti, who too is drawn into the current of examinations and degrees. He would not be satisfied without it. Now I recollect that I even asked you to help him.¹ It seems Devdas has offered him some help which would reach here in two or three days when I expect to learn more about it. Ramdas writes to say that he will not be able to help.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4857

415. A DISCUSSION WITH MAURICE FRYDMAN²

[On or before August 25, 1936]¹

[GANDHIJII:] So that is Frydman. You have come to study the spinning-wheel. But you will not win the Rs. 100,000 prize, as the prize has been withdrawn.

[Maurice Frydman] joined heartily in the laughter and said, “Oh, no, I do not want the prize, my only aim is to give you the wheel you want.”

He again asked a number of questions about the wheel, discussed various improvements and left for Wardha.⁴

He inquired if Gandhiji’s aim was just humanitarian in sitting down in the village, just serving the villagers as best he could!

I am here to serve no one else but myself, to find my own self-realization through the service of these village folk. Man’s ultimate aim is the realization of God, and all his activities, social, political,

¹ Vide “Letter to Manilal and Sushila Gandhi”, 16-8-1936
² Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Maurice Frydman was a Polish engineer, interested in village reconstruction movement, who had met Gandhiji earlier at Nandi Hill. He was given the name Bharatanand.
³ According to the source the discussion took place on a Tuesday. The Tuesday before 29-8-1936 fell on 25-8-1936.
⁴ The discussion which follows took place on a subsequent visit.
religious, have to be guided by the ultimate aim of the vision of God. The immediate service of all human beings becomes a necessary part of the endeavour simply because the only way to find God is to see Him in His creation and be one with it. This can only be done by service of all. And this cannot be done except through one’s country. I am part and parcel of the whole, and I cannot find Him apart from the rest of humanity. My countrymen are my nearest neighbours. They have become so helpless, so resourceless, so inert that I must concentrate on serving them. If I could persuade myself that I should find Him in a Himalayan cave, I would proceed there immediately. But I know that I cannot find Him apart from humanity.

But some comforts may be necessary even for man’s spiritual advancement. One could not advance himself by identifying himself with the discomfort and squalour of the villager?

A certain degree of physical harmony and comfort is necessary, but above a certain level it becomes a hindrance instead of help. Therefore the ideal of creating an unlimited number of wants and satisfying them seems to be a delusion and a snare. The satisfaction of one’s physical needs, even the intellectual needs of one’s narrow self, must meet at a certain point a dead stop, before it degenerates into physical and intellectual voluptuousness. A man must arrange his physical and cultural circumstances so that they do not hinder him in his service of humanity, on which all his energies should be concentrated.

What then was the secret of his concentration on the village?

I have been saying that if untouchability stays, Hinduism goes; even so I would say that if the village perishes, India will perish too. It will be no more India, Her own mission in the world will get lost. The revival of the village is possible only when it is no more exploited. Industrialization on a mass scale will necessarily lead to passive or active exploitation of the villagers as the problems of competition and marketing come in. Therefore we have to concentrate on the village being self-contained, manufacturing mainly for use. Provided this character of the village industry is maintained, there would be no objection to villagers using even the modern machines and tools that they can make and can afford to use. Only they should not be used as a means of exploitation of others.

_Harijan_, 29-8-1936
416. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHAGANI,
August 25, 1936

RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
MANORVILLE
SIMLA

WIRE EXACT CONDITION BODY INCLUDING THUMB AS MEDICALLY CERTIFIED.
LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3736. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6892

417. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

August 25, 1936

MY DEAR AMRIT,

What have you done? Shummy says you “return an ill woman” and naturally he says he “feels very disappointed all round”. You shall not be cross with him for having told the truth. The wire distresses me. What could be wrong with you? I have sent you a peremptory wire.

I hope you will not leave me in suspense and will give me a faithful report. Why is Shummy disappointed all round? You will enlighten me. You told me not to write to Shummy. But I could not ignore the wire. I have sent him a brief note.1

I do hope there is nothing seriously wrong with you. More when I know the whole truth.

Yes, Mira left for Betul yesterday and Puri2 occupies her hut.

Your corners are vacant! And the bathroom? All the playthings gone! But how can you return to me if you cannot keep good health here?

Love.

BAPU

1 This is not traceable.
2 Anant Ram Puri
[PS.]

You dare send me a blank sheet when you leave not a blank corner on your written sheet!

B.

From the original: C.W. 3737. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6893

418. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

August 25, 1936

CHI. MARY.

Your letter does you credit and draws me nearer to you if that is possible. We do need to have scrupulous regard for truth. The fact is that I inquired only to know whether you were disturbed. I did not want you to respond to the bell. Even for the few who are with me in Segaon, I am not rigid. They are free not to attend the morning prayer. The moral is never do anything to please people, even the dearest, unless the doing of it pleases you also. This broad proposition does raise side issues. But you know what I mean.

Give my love to Moti. I am glad she likes her life there. I hope she is keeping quite well.

Mira has gone. Let us hope she will be comfortable there. If she is not, she must return. I could easily have sent her to another but a distant place. She was disinclined to go far.

Mahadev will be inquiring about cargo boats.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6067. Also C.W. 3397. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

419. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

August 25, 1936

CHI. BRIJKISHAN,

The replies to your letters have been overdelayed. The reason is nothing but lack of time. Even today I am writing just at bedtime.

1 In this the addressee had written that she had told Gandhiji “practically an untruth” when she had given an excuse for not getting up for prayer at Segaon while she had not intended to get up at all.
You ask me who lives with me. The three were already here. Among others are Ba, Manu and Khan Saheb. I stop those whom I can from coming here. What do we stand to gain by allowing you to come? You never keep well here.

Give up the village industries work if you cannot find any help.

But do write to me if you do not keep well there.

BAPU

[PS.]

I had not finished my letter with this. I wrote the last sentence half asleep, the pen slipped out of my hand and I promptly fell asleep. I am now writing this after I awoke from my nap and had some hot water. This is no sign of any ailment or weakness; if at all, it is a sign of good health. Give up the longing to live with me and live there or at any other place where you can engage yourself in some occupation and earn not more than you spend. Why not join some khadi bhandar? Or go to live at Narela and work with the help of others. It is not good to sit idle. Consult Devdas. Take it that the reason you attribute to my not writing is an utter impossibility. How can I ever forget you?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2445

420. LETTER TO R.S. PANDIT

WARDHA,
August 26, 1936

CHI. RANJIT,

Why are you keeping indifferent health? Sarup writes that now you are a little better. You must make your body as strong as steel even if it requires some effort. One can certainly make a boat to cross the Ganga. The real achievement would be to make a boat to cross the waters of slavery. But you cannot do this with a hollow chest. You should be strong enough not to let the oar slip from your hands.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
421. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

[Before August 27, 1936]\(^1\)

DEAR DAUGHTER,\(^2\)

I have your two letters. You ought to have faith in what Dr. Bharadwaj tells you. Dr. Ansari would have done the same. You are therefore going to clean your nose and carry out whatever else he has recommended.

I am enclosing Nilam’s letter\(^3\). I would certainly have sent for you had it not been for Nilam’s illness. I shall show both your letters to Kanti and shall permit him to go if he wishes. I also do not like the step he proposes to take, but I do not wish to suppress him either.

I have no more time now, so I stop here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 603

422. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHAGANI,
August 27, 1936

RAIKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
MANORVILLE
SIMLA WEST

YOUR WIRE. THANK GOD. WIRE CONDITION DAILY. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3738. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6894

---

\(^1\) From the reference to Kantilal Gandhi’s proposed visit to the addressee; vide letter to the addressee, “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 27-8-1936

\(^2\) This is in Urdu.

\(^3\) This is not available.
423. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 27, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

Let me see what great feat you perform, now that Kanti has gone there. Do not pick quarrels. Persuade him sweetly if you wish to. As far as I can tell, it is now impossible to stop him.

Carry out Dr. Bharadwaj’s instructions. While you have been advising others, you yourself need to look after your own health. Do not expect any long letter from me for some time now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 343

424. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August [27, 1936]\(^1\)

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

I have your letter. You should clearly write so to Bapa if you feel that he has made a mistake. I wrote to him nothing since I had not read everything fully. However, I am quite aware that a judge’s function is over with the delivery of his decision, and that he is not even entitled to interpret his judgment. However, I have not written to Bapa even to say that if both the parties approach him again with a representation he might take it up, because I am so much immersed in work that many such things are left out. You may send this to Bapa if you now write to him. Now that I have written so much to you I feel like writing to him also, but where is the time?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4037

\(^1\) From the G.N. Register
425. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

[About August 27, 1936]¹

CHI. PRABHA,

You must have got my letter to the Sitab Diyara address though you have gone to Patna. Now obtain milk and fruit there and improve your health. Look after the household properly. You have now the opportunity to take full care of Jayaprakash’s food. I do not write here about your questions since I have replied to them earlier in detail. Tell me about the house you live in and about other things I should know. How is the climate, for example? Do take regular walks. My weight as recorded yesterday was 109 lb.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Mahadevi and others have returned from Badrinarayan. Nilam, one of the party who fell ill, is with Amtul.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3464

426. TELEGRAM TO AMTUSSALAAM

WARDHAGANI,
August 28, 1936

AMTUSSALAAM
SEVAK
DELHI

YOU MUST COMPOSE YOURSELF. GET WELL QUICK. AM LOOKING AFTER KANTI.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 344

¹ From the reference to Nilam’s illness and her stay with Amtussalaam; vide “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 27-8-1936
MY DEAR REBEL,

I am writing this at J.’s in the early morning to catch the train.

I can’t give you the assurance that I am without anxiety. How can I be when you act so rebelliously? You were docile in the presence of the tyrant. Behind his back the rebellious spirit breaks out. Therefore the only way to free me from anxiety is for you to get quickly well and, if fish-eating would restore you, you should unhesitatingly take it.

But I can give you this assurance that nothing that Shummy can say will affect me in the least. His great anger is the measure of his love for you. Brought up as he is, he has every right to accuse me of having ruined your health and otherwise disturbed the even tenor of your life. How can he feel otherwise? I had told you that much was to depend upon your returning to Simla in a first-class condition. You did not, you could not. We would settle accounts after you have got well and look better than ever before. You would continue to write and wire daily while the illness lasts. You must not take up any work till you are completely restored. I hope you had my wire yesterday.

I came to Wardha yesterday. I walk back this evening.
Mira is returning today from Betul.
Love to you and Shummy.

TYRANT
ROBBER
BAPU, etc.

From the original: C.W. 3584. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6393

---

1 The source has “29-8-1936”, but below it someone has written “Really”, 28-8-1936”, which is confirmed by the postmark.
2 Vide “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 27-8-1936
428. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

Segaon,
August 28, 1936

My dear Jawaharlal,

Our conversation of yesterday has set me thinking. Why is it that with all the will in the world I cannot understand what is so obvious to you? I am not, so far as I know, suffering from intellectual decay. Should you not then set your heart on at least making me understand what you are after? I may not agree with you. But I should be in a position to say so. Yesterday’s talk throws no light on what you are after. And probably what is true of me is true of some others. I am just now discussing the thing with Raja. I should like you to discuss your programme with him if you can spare the time. I must not write at length, having no time. You know what I mean.

Love.

Bapu

429. NOTES

Uncertified v. Certified

The difficulty that cropped up in the Tamil Nad on the introduction of the new scale of wages for spinning has arisen in other places and specially in Andhra, as appears from several letters I have received from that part of India. Correspondents complain bitterly of the harm uncertified dealers of khadi are doing to the cause of the poor women who have no chance of earning an additional pice. I do not know whether the uncertified dealers will listen to my exhortation not to be so selfish as to snatch the pice from thousands of poor spinners. I hope they will. But the real remedy lies in the hands of the khadi-buying public. If they will not buy khadi except from the bhandars certified by the A.I.S.A., the uncertified bhandars will have to close down. The public should realize that there can be no khadi if there is no A.I.S.A. Until khadi becomes current coin and has found general favour in the villages, it must be nursed by a vigilant body having the capacity for performing the onerous duty. Such a body is the A.I.S.A. The public know or ought to know that it is a purely philanthropic institution having no interest save that of the millions of poor women spinners of the villages of India. As its name implies, all its activities are intended to subserve their interest. Economic salvation of the villages is impossible, unless the millions of women who have no occupation for nearly six months in the year have a steady and profitable occupation fitted to their constitutions. There is no such universal occupation as hand-spinning. I have been obliged to restate this oft-told truth in order to emphasize the necessity of the public patronizing certified khadi bhandars to the exclusion of uncertified ones, even though the latter sell khadi at less than the Association rates. The public should know that the Association rates alone make it possible to pay higher wages to spinners.

HUTS WITHOUT MONEY

Last year I had 60 Harijans accommodated in the village of my future abode. The question of building huts for them was ticklish. But it was solved for me by Harijans themselves. When I went to the village a month after their settlement, I found 12 huts already erected evidently without the cost of a pice. The walls were made of palm branches or stalks of juari, cotton or tuver; the roof of split stalks of juari, knitted into chatais and those were covered with leaves of khakhra. The ropes were made from the fibres of khakhra roots.

Thus writes an enthusiastic agriculture graduate who is keen on settling down in a village. Where labour is not exploited and where it has free access to the material that Nature produces in abundance and which is generally allowed to go to waste or sold for a trifle, poor Harijans have no difficulty in getting for themselves comfortable cottages and other amenities of life. But orthodox prejudice makes it a sin or a crime for Harijans to touch even its wells ! ! !

Harijan, 29-8-1936

---

430. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

Segaon, Wardha,

August 29, 1936

MY DEAR AMRIT,

I hope you got my letter of yesterday. I am writing this in Segaon; therefore this can’t go by late fee post. Your daily telegrams and letters giving cent per cent truth are absolutely necessary for the peace of my mind. Why must you send vegetables too? Surely that is repugnant to the village sense. Trust me to ask for what I need from you.

---

1 Mats
There is no hurry about the surgical instruments. I can wait till Shummy is himself again. You have to make up your mind to win him back. It is sheer nonsense for you to talk of running away from the home. It is so unlike you. ‘Love is patient and long suffering.’ And what are you if not embodiment of love? Your precious association with me is not going to make you less loving and less lovable. If you have not been able to give satisfaction to the family by showing better health, surely it is within your power to show an equable mind and a love that will quench the fieriest anger. Do wire to me that you have reconquered Shummy. I tell you the thought of his pain over your illness haunts me all the day long. I do not know how I can appease him except by your unmistakably showing him that you have not lost, but if possible gained by your contact with me, in all that counts.

Mira came back yesterday. The appointments in Betul were too dirty for her.

Love to both of you.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 3585. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6394

431. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 30, 1936

MY DEAR AMRIT,

You are good. You are sending me full letters and wires. I needed them all. Your letters are also cheerful. But whilst I do not worry in the sense you do. I must confess that your illness has given me a rude shock and Shummy’s estrangement has proved unbearable. You must walk to his room and stoop to conquer. Bathe him with your tears. I want his wire that he has forgiven me from his heart. It hurts me to think that I should be the cause of estrangement between you and him.

Here you were perfect in your obedience. I want you to obey me in this from your heart. Voluntary obedience always carries its own conviction. And I know that your obedience will restore the harmony of the household. The exact, method of winning over Shummy I must leave to you.

When you are entirely restored, I shall discuss with you and Shummy, if he is then composed, my own opinion about the cause of your painful collapse.

It may be well for you to reduce the quantity of milk rather than giving up eggs. The heaviness need not be looked for in that direction first. And if the doctor agrees, you should take a little garlic always. I cannot vouch for it but I am inclined to think that onion oil should be good for eczema.

I was not amused over Subhas’s fear. There is much truth in what he says. If you were feigning strength however unwittingly, under the impulse of your enthusiasm and your intense love for me, naturally the separation would produce a collapse. You alone could be the judge of the condition, which [you] can fathom by introspection. No more tonight.

Love

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 3586. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6395

432. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

August 30, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

This time your letter is late. You must fix a day for writing. For my part, I have never been lax. I reply to you as soon as I get your letter. Your last letter reached me yesterday and today I am writing this reply. I hear that Jayaprakash is reaching Wardha today. I have not known the reason. Are the letters henceforth to be sent to the new address? Are letters to the Searchlight address delayed? How did you get the cough? You should regain your strength quickly if milk is now available.

You should shoulder only as much responsibility as you can bear. One does not have to repent if one takes up service in proportion to one’s capacity.

I am just told that Jayaprakash has arrived.
In your letters you make mistakes of gender. I am returning today’s with the corrections. Ask me if you don’t follow them.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3481

---

433. TELEGRAM TO G. D. BIRLA

_WARDHA, August 31, 1936_

_GHANSHYAMDAS_

_CARE LUCKY_

_BOMBAY_

COME AS SOON AS POSSIBLE. VALLABHBHAI WAITING FOR YOU.

_WIRE REPLY._

_BAPU_

From the original: C. W. 7979. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

---

434. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

_SEGAON, August 31, 1936_

_CHI. JAMNALAL._

I forgot to discuss three points with you.

What happened in the case of Babarao Harkare? I think it is good to send him Rs. 25 every month.

If his brother deserves more, he should be paid more.

Shankarrao Tikekar seems to be in a pitiable plight. A summons to pay Rs. 1,500 has been served on him, and he is unemployed. Have you thought of doing anything for him?

You are better placed to think over all these matters.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 2983
435. A TALK

[Before September 2, 1936]

It was interesting one morning to watch a number of urchins collected in the verandah of Gandhiji’s hut...Their eyes were fixed on a snake in a glass jar....Though the place cannot... be said to be infested with snakes, a fair number of snakes are to be found there during the season. There must therefore be a fair number of cases of snake-bites, and in all cases the villagers kill the snakes at sight. Explaining the presence of the exhibit Gandhiji said:

That is hardly proper or necessary. We cannot tell a poisonous from a non-poisonous snake and therefore we kill all without discrimination. The bulk of them are non-poisonous, and in many cases it is the fright that kills the victim of snake-bite. The snakes have their place in the agricultural economy of the village, but our villagers do not seem to realize it. They perform a particularly useful function, in that they clear the fields of rats, vermin and other pests. It is best therefore to know the elementary principles of snake-lore and to teach them to the villagers. They must know how to distinguish between a poisonous and a non-poisonous snake, they must know that it is not necessary to kill all snakes, which although they may be poisonous do not usually bite unless they are trodden upon or mishandled, and they must also know that certain snakes at least are useful. With that purpose in view I have decided to have here snakes alive or dead to be shown to the villagers. This one in the jar was caught alive by an inmate of our household. We have a simple device with which it is easy to catch snakes alive without doing them physical injury, and this one was found clinging to a roof in the farmyard over there. I decided to send it on to the Civil Surgeon for examination. He was good enough to examine it. He found that it was a Krait, one of the most poisonous varieties, and so he killed it and sent it back. I decided to preserve it and sent for a glass jar with rectified spirit. We had to wait several hours for the jar to come, and when it did come we found on opening the basket that the snake was alive. It seems to be particularly tenacious of life, and so it lingered on until the third day, when we decided to end its pains by immersing it in water. The fact was that the

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 This and the subsequent interviews evidently took place before Gandhiji was hospitalized on September 2, 1936.
Civil Surgeon had smashed its brain and stunned it, and as he explained later its spinal cord was intact and therefore it had remained alive. I have now got a cage to keep live specimens in. As you see, the little urchins are already being attracted. I have begun to study snake-lore and hope to place before the villagers the broad facts regarding these creatures.

_Harijan, 5-9-1936_

436. DISCUSSION WITH TEACHERS

[Before September 2, 1936]

A group of school teachers went to Segaon one morning with that old Platonic problem—Knowledge is virtue—and asked if it was true. Why was it that though we knew very well indeed that a particular course of action was morally wrong, we could not avoid it? Replying to them Gandhiji said:

Human life is a series of compromises and it is not always easy to achieve in practice what one has found to be true in theory. Take this very simple case. The principle is that all life is one and we have to treat the sinner and the saint alike, as the _Gita_ says we have to look with an equal eye on a learned pundit and a dog and a dog-eater. But there I am. Though I have not killed the snake, I know I have been instrumental in killing it. I know that I should not have done so. I know, besides, that snakes are _kshetrapals_ (guardians of the field); and therefore too I should not have helped in killing it. But as you see I have not been able to avoid it. But it is no use my thinking that I cannot avoid it. I do not give up the principle which is true for all time that all life is one, and I pray to God that He may rid me of the fear of snakes and enable me to achieve the non-violences necessary to handle snakes and as we handle other domestics. Take another instance, again a very simple one. I know that as a villager and as one who has made it his business to promote village crafts, I must use a village-made razor, but you see that I am using a foreign one.²

I might have got a village-made razor, if I had written to friends to procure one for me. But I thought I must help the village barber, no matter what kind of razor he used. I therefore decided to cultivate him, and put up with his dirty clothes and uncouth instruments. But on one thing I could not possibly compromise. He said he would not

---

¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”

² Gandhiji was having a shave when the teachers arrived.
shave Harijans on the same terms as he was prepared to shave me, and I had to do without his services. Now you find me having a shave with a foreign razor, though it is open to me to procure a village-made one. Here there is obviously an indefensible compromise. And yet there is an explanation. I have been sticking on to a set of shaving tackle given me by a loving sister, whose gift I could not resist and whose feelings I could not hurt by rejecting the foreign razor and insisting on having a village-made one. But there it is, the compromise is there. I do not commend it for imitation. We must be prepared to displease the dearest ones for the sake of principles.

There are eternal principles which admit of no compromise, and one must be prepared to lay down one’s life in the practice of them. Supposing someone came and asked you to give up your religion and to embrace another at the point of the sword, would you do it? Supposing someone were to compel you to drink wine or eat beef, or tell a lie, would you not rather lay down your life than yield to the coercion? No. A principle is a principle, and in no case can it be watered down because of our incapacity to live it in practice. We have to strive to achieve it, and the striving should be conscious, deliberate and hard.

Has not our Poet sung for all time that fearless striving is the very condition of freedom?

Where the mind is without fear, and the head is held high,...Where tireless striving stretches its arms towards perfection;...
Into that heaven of freedom, Oh Father, let my country awake. ¹

_Harijan_, 5-9-1936

437. TALK WITH BHARATAN KUMARAPPA²

[Before September 2, 1936]

I have no heart in this correspondence, no zest in it. I am actually tired of it and feel like asking people not to write to me at all. I long to wander among the villages around us rather than go to Wardha where so many friends are coming and I may have to go. But I feel it a wrench to be torn from my work. It is, if I may call it, my _sadhana_, and I would, if I could, not let anything interrupt it. I have two or three engagements which I accepted long ago and I shall have to keep them, though I would love to find some excuse to put them off or avoid them. I would like to walk out every morning to the villages in our neighbourhood. I am doing practically little physical work now, and I am longing to do it. We have taken a couple of cows and are trying the experiment of making our own ghee. Now I should like to look after the cow myself, look after her feed and her general upkeep. My idea is to show these villagers that a cow can easily pay for her feed and the charges of her upkeep. Then look at the number of ailments these villagers suffer from, and how they will try all kinds of quack remedies but will not do the simplest things they must do.

¹ _Gitanjali_, 35
² Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”

All this is slow work, and it is no use expecting startling results as those of the Five Year Plan in Soviet Russia. We have to realize that we are eating the salt of the poor, and we have to make an adequate return to them. Never mind if you do not get agents for this difficult work. If we have only one genuine agent, I should be satisfied. Indeed I should not worry even if we had none. Our acid test is: Have we organized any single village according to our programme? Have we introduced food reform there? Are their roads and their lanes clean and perfect? Have we revived any industries? Have we tackled the problem of drink and vice? If we could do this successfully even in one village, I should think we had achieved a good deal. From individuals you may get a response but I should not call it making headway. Making headway is touching one whole village. Jajuji was wondering if we might not have a wider scheme. No, we cannot have it. It is not one item of work like hand-spinning for instance. It is whole village-work, and today our work centres round three or four things I have mentioned. It may centre round thirty things some day, but not today.

_Harijan, 5-9-1936_

438. TELEGRAM TO AMTUSSALAAM

WARDHAGANI,
September 2, 1936

AMTUL SALAAM
CARE SEVAK
DELHI

YOU CAN GO INDORE PATIALA BOMBAY WARDHA FOR IMPROVING

1 Shrikrishnasadas Jaju

VOL. 69: 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936  337
HEALTH. KANTI JOINED VAKIL’S SCHOOL BOMBAY. WHEN BA I DEVDAS DO NOT WORRY IT IS WRONG FOR YOU TO WORRY.

From a photostat: G. N. 345

439. MESSAGE TO WORLD PEACE CONGRESS

September 2, 1936

NO INDIAN CAN HELP SYMPATHIZING WITH PEACE EFFORT
GOING ON IN WESTERN COUNTRIES.

The Bombay Chronicle, 3-9-1936

440. TELEGRAM TO AMTUSSALAAM

WARDHAGANI,
[September] 3, 1936

AMUTUL SALAAM
CARE SEVAK
DELHI
SARASWATI GOING TRIVANDRUM MONDAY. COME BEFORE IF POSSIBLE.

From a photostat: G. N. 346

441. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHAGANI,
September 4, 1936

RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
MANORVILLE
SIMLA
YOU MUST BEHAVE YOURSELF AND NOT GRIEVE OVER MY ILLNESS. NO FEVER YET. LOVE.

From the origial: C. W. 3739. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6895

1 The message was sent through Sarojini Naidu.
2 From Bapuke Patra—8: Bibi Amtussalamke Naam., The original is damaged.
3 Gandhiji was down with malaria; vide also the following item.
442. MESSAGE FOR AMRIT KAUR

September 4, 1936

Tell her she must be content with a letter from you, at least for two or three days. Also tell her my prophecy about the thermos was correct; it is broken, and that she has now to replace it.

From a copy: C. W. 10100. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur

443. GOD OF LOVE, NOT WAR

The Statesman of Delhi has devoted four articles to an unmeasured condemnation of the no-war movement led by Canon Sheppard and other earnest Christians in England. The paper has dragged into its support the authority of the Bhagavad Gita in these words:

Indeed the true but difficult teaching of Christianity seems to be that society must fight its enemies but love them.

Such, too,—will Mr. Gandhi please note—is the clear teaching of the Bhagavad Gita, where Krishna tells Arjuna that victory also goes to him who fights with complete fearlessness and is utterly devoid of hatred. Indeed on the highest plane the argument between the conscientious objector and the knightly warrior is for ever settled in the second book of that great classic. We have little space to quote and the whole poem deserves to be read not once but many times.

The writer of the articles perhaps does not know that the terrorist has also used in his defence the very verses quoted by him. But the fact is that a dispassionate reading of the Bhagavad Gita has revealed to me a meaning wholly contrary to the one given to it by the Statesman writer.

He has forgotten that Arjuna was no conscientious objector in the sense the Western war-resisters are. Arjuna believed in war. He had fought the Kaurava hosts many times before. But he was unnerved when the two armies were drawn up in battle array and when he suddenly realized that he had to fight his nearest kinsmen and revered

1 This was conveyed by Mahadev Desai to Amrit Kaur in a letter which, inter alia, read: “[Gandhiji] deliberately went to the hospital in order that the doctor may not have to be troubled over and over again. He is being properly looked after and is progressing well. There was no fever until 2.30 [p.m.] Even if it does come, I am sure it will be mild. He is taking complete rest . . . .”
teachers. It was not love of man or the hatred of war that had actuated the questioner. Krishna could give no other answer than he did. The immortal author of the Mahabharata, of which the Gita is one—no doubt the brightest—of the many gems contained in that literary mine, has shown to the world the futility of war by giving the victors an empty glory, leaving but seven victors alive out of millions said to have been engaged in the fight in which unnamable atrocities were used on either side. But the Mahabharata has a better message even than the demonstration of war as a delusion and a folly. It is the spiritual history of man considered as an immortal being and has used with a magnifying lens a historical episode considered in his times of moment for the tiny world round him but in terms of present-day values of no significance. In those days the globe had not shrunk to a pinhead, as it has today, on which the slightest movement on one spot affects the whole. The Mahabharata depicts for all time the eternal struggle that goes on daily between the forces of good and evil in the human breast and in which though good is ever victorious evil does put up a brave show and baffles even the keenest conscience. It shows also the only way to right action.

But whatever the true message of the Bhagavad Gita may be, what matters to the leaders of the peace movement is not what the Gita says but what the Bible, which is their spiritual dictionary, says and then, too, not what meaning the Church authorities give to it, but what meaning a prayerful reading of it yields to the reader. What matters most of all is the objector’s knowledge of the implications of the law of love or ahimsa, inadequately rendered in English as non-violence. The articles of The Statesman are perhaps a fair challenge to the objectors. I am sorry I do not know enough of the movement to give a definite opinion. My opinion need have no weight whatsoever with the objectors. But it has, inasmuch as I know intimately some of them, who even correspond with me. And now they have gone a step further in that they have adopted almost as their textbook Mr. Richard Gregg’s book called The Power of Non-violence which is claimed by its author to be a Western interpretation of what non-violence as I interpret it stands for. It may not therefore be presumptuous on my part if I set down without argument the implications and conditions of success of non-violence. Here they are:

(1) Non-violence is the law of the human race and is infinitely greater than and superior to brute force.
(2) In the last resort it does not avail to those who do not possess a living faith in the God of Love.

(3) Non-violence affords the fullest protection to one’s selfrespect and sense of honour, but not always to possession of land or movable property, though its habitual practice does prove a better bulwark than the possession of armed men to defend them. Non-violence in the very nature of things is of no assistance in the defence of ill-gotten gains and immoral acts.

(4) Individuals or nations who would practise non-violence must be prepared to sacrifice (nations to the last man) their all except honour. It is therefore inconsistent with the possession of other people’s countries, i.e., modern imperialism which is frankly based on force for its defence.

(5) Non-violence is a power which can be wielded equally by all—children, young men and women or grown-up people—provided they have a living faith in the God of love and have therefore equal love for all mankind. When non-violence is accepted as the law of life it must pervade the whole being and not applied to isolated acts.

(6) It is a profound error to suppose that whilst the law is good enough for individuals it is not for masses of mankind.

_Harijan_, 5-9-1936

444. WHAT A GIRL NEEDS

A fair correspondent writes:

Your article “Avoidable Misery” seems to me to be incomplete....If parents were to educate their daughters as they educate their sons, so as to enable them to earn an independent living, they would not have to worry themselves over the selection of husbands for their daughters.... When girls have had the opportunity of developing their minds fairly and are able to support themselves in a dignified manner, they have no difficulty, when they are desirous of marrying, in being suitably matched... What I plead for is a training of girls in useful knowledge and some calling that would make them fully confident about their ability to face the world and not to feel dependent upon parents or their future husbands.... I wish you could emphasize this

---

1 Only excerpts are reproduced here.
2 Vide “Avoidable Misery”, 25-7-1936 aspect of the question in considering the difficulties of parents having on their hands daughters of marriageable age!!

I heartily endorse the sentiments expressed by my correspondent. Only I had to deal with the case of a parent who had made himself miserable not because he had an incompetent daughter, but because he and perhaps even his daughter wanted to restrict themselves, in the choice of a husband, to their own little caste. The ‘accomplishment’ of the girl was itself a hindrance in this case. If the girl was illiterate, she could have accommodated herself to any young man. But being an accomplished girl, naturally she would need an equally accomplished husband. It is our misfortune that the sordidness of exacting a price for marrying a girl is not regarded as a decided disqualification. An altogether artificial value is put upon English collegiate education. It covers a multitude of sins. If the definition of ‘accomplishment’ was more sensible than it has become among the classes whose educated young men exact a price for accepting marriage proposals on behalf of girls, the difficulty of selecting suitable matches for girls would be much lessened, if not entirely removed. Whilst, therefore, I commend the proposal of my fair correspondent to the attention of parents, I must insist on the necessity of breaking down the highly injurious caste barriers. Breaking down the barriers will widen the range of choice and thus in a great measure prevent exactions.

_Harijan,_ 5-9-1936

445. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHAGANI, September 5, 1936

RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
MANORVILLE
SIMLA

COMPLETELY FREE FOR SIXTY HOURS. QUITE HAPPY. YOU SHOULD ACCEPT MEMORIAL\(^1\) AGENCY FOR JULLUNDUR ONLY.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 3740. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6896

---

\(^1\) Kamala Nehru Memorial
446. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA,
September 6/7, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

All these few days I was in no mood to play. Hence I had forgotten that you were a Rebel, Idiot, etc., etc. Now I am somewhat composed. You have still to send me the news that there is reconciliation between you and Shummy. If you have not gone to him, you must do so at once.

I told you I did not like that eruption on the thumb. You must not doctor it yourself. You should see a competent doctor, if Shummy will not attend to you. Nor can I guide you from here as to your food except in a general way. The bath is all right. You are right in raising its temperature. It is enough to have it is at least 5 degrees below the temperature of the body.

I must tell you later what I consider was the cause of your breakdown. This is being written after 8 p.m. So I must not write more.

Mahadev has kept you fully posted about my health. Hence I need say nothing more except that I am A 1.

Please thank Shummy for the book on snakes of which I saw some beautiful live specimens yesterday.

Much love from

ROBBER

September 7, 1936

[PS.]

My door can never be shut in your face.

From the original: C. W. 3587. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6396
447. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

WARDHA,
September 7, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER,¹

For three days there has been no temperature and so it can be said that I am rid of the fever. I am writing this from my hospital bed. Kanti’s letter accompanies this.

It is not right for you to worry about him. Can your relationship be deeper than Ba’s and even mine? Can the measure of your love be greater? Be reasonable and calm down.

You do not care to improve your health; this is not good. You must have got my wire², but there is no reply from you. How cruel you are!

Send me a full report and take a final decision.

It is foolish of you to be afraid of a visit to Wardha. However, I don’t insist. Go wherever you can improve your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Is Chitre there?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 347

448. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

September 7, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

I have been thinking of you every day, only my indifferent health would not let me write to you. But I cannot postpone writing today. I have no fever. I have written for Harijan, so why should I not write to you? I have your letter. I was certainly pained beyond measure. The edifice of my trust collapsed in a moment. You suddenly drifted away from me. Ba’s grief is greater than mine; andpoor A.’s the greatest. You have justified the epithets I gave you.

¹ This is in Urdu.
² Vide “Telegram to Amtussalaam”, 2-9-1936
You are a tyrant, you are treacherous. You stole A.’s heart and then you spurned her. Can you think of an act of greater cruelty? In your curriculum you will have occasions to drive needles into living beings and dissect them. Remember this letter then. You have started your lessons by torturing a living human being. But I am not at all angry at your strange sacrifice. What could you do? How far can you get over your nature? You have been carried away by the current of the prevailing atmosphere as well as by your own mental makeup. This happens more or less to everyone. May you be blessed. One thing hurt me very much. In the evening you came to me with a certain resolve. Next day you changed it altogether. You did not even think it necessary to discuss it with me. What kind of conduct is this? Do you regard your own word as absolutely worthless? It was a severe blow. You made me cry so much. You could have desisted from this act without difficulty. Well, one cannot collect spilt water. It will be enough if you learn to value your own word after this regrettable episode. Remember knowledge without a moral basis has no worth whatsoever. It is like a two-pice bit of copper coated with mercury to look like a rupee.

Take good care of your health. Don’t reduce yourself to a skeleton by overwork. Don’t exhaust your brain. I have no doubt that you will pass all the tests.

Write to me regularly.

I am still in the hospital. The fever may be said to have gone. Mirabehn’s bed is by my side. She is still running a temperature. The third patient is Ba who is suffering from cough.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C. W. 10707. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

449. LETTER TO JUGAL KISHORE BIRLA

WARDHA,
September 7, 1936

Bhai Jugal Kishoreji,

I was about to have an attack of fever when your letter of 26th August reached me. I am now free from fever but am still confined to the hospital bed. Even then I should write to you. Thinking on objects of sense is a delusion. I have not received any divine message. If what I say does not appeal to you, you must never listen to me. If I cannot hope to persuade you by this letter and in my present condition of health, I shall certainly try to do so when we meet. Perhaps I shall succeed.

Today I will only say that to me Sikhism is a part of Hinduism. But the situation is different from the legal point of view. Dr. Ambedkar wants a change of religion. If becoming a Sikh amounts to conversion, then this kind of conversion on the part of Harijans is dangerous. And that too with a stroke of the pen and without the Harijans being consulted. Conversion as well as change of community can only be a personal matter. It is not so in this case. If you can persuade the Sikhs to accept that Sikhism is a part of Hinduism and if you can make them give up the separate electorate, then I will have no objection to Harijans calling themselves Ramanujis or Sikhs.

More when I have the time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

450. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

September 8/9, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I am having good news from you. I got your note just now at seven in the morning. It was painful for me that your hearts could not be one. Not only that, it obstructed our work too. Let us hope that the [harmony] now restored will never crack.

I understand what you say about Govind. You should visit him and the other patients from time to time.

I am sending the newspaper.

Send here the brass barrel for honey which is there, and also the lid of the white metal box to be used in the cooker. The box sent to Radhakisan cannot be put to full use because its lid got mixed up and another came in its place.

Ask Puri to send me a report of his health and his work.

1 Illegible in the source
I am having no fever at all and the weakness is disappearing gradually. I am still on milk and fruit. It seems the doctor will take some time to discharge me. Mirabehn had an attack of fever yesterday. She was given a purge. She is well now. She too is on milk and fruit.

Ba still has cough, but it looks like subsiding now.

Rajendra Babu, Brajkishore Babu and Jayaparakash are still here. R. Babu and J. are unwell and B. Babu has stayed behind to nurse J.

[Blessings from BAPU]

[PS.] I have detained Prahlad for the day. The needle will be extracted. We shall know only tomorrow where the needle is lodged.

[September 9, 1936]

After all this could not go yesterday. Prahlad is being operated upon just now at 10 o’clock. The needle has been located.

At 10.30

Mirabehn and I went to watch the operation. The needle has been extracted. [Prahlad] is all right.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 8598. Also C. W. 6998. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

451. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

September 9, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I got your letter, but here at the Hospital. Indeed, I forget the other newspapers. Now I can send for them only tomorrow. Today I am sending only The Bombay Chronicle and Harijan. The lid seems to have been returned to you; if so, send it tomorrow.

Prahlad has been progressing well. He asks for food. But today he will be on milk only.

[Blessings from BAPU]

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8597. Also C.W. 6999. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

¹ This is in Hindi.
452. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

WARDHA HOSPITAL,
September 10, 1936

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

I have had three letters from you which I have acknowledged in my letter to Munnalal. I got the letter from Ramniklal too. I have also sent you my congratulations. I hope to reach there probably the day after tomorrow.

I am almost recovered.

I do not send for Munnalal now but I shall try to send Dr. Mahodaya. In the mean while he should subsist on milk only. If he does not have clear motions he may take castor oil and at least ten grains of quinine. Of course you are looking after him.

Neither Gangabehn’s nor Munnalal’s letter has reached me. Do not send milk for Prahlad or anyone else unless asked for. Prahlad was given milk yesterday as well as today from Maganwadi. He is quite comfortable. He will have to stay on for at least ten days. I shall not write to Puri today.

More tomorrow. Two bottles are being [returned] today. The rest I shall try to send tomorrow.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1886

453. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

September 10, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I had the physical capacity to write to you all these days. But I have been so busy talking things that I have not been able to do any writing except on Monday. I hope you got my letter written that day.

Now too I am writing this before retiring for the night.

Illegible in the source

1 Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 6/7-9-1936
Yes, I had a good letter from Shummy. I do not agree with you that Segaon climate had nothing to do with my malaria. Indeed Segaon is noted for its malarial climate. It is for me to conquer it and not shun it. I hope to be there on Saturday. The plate\(^1\) will be taken tomorrow. It will decide my fate.

Your letters, received with extraordinary regularity, have been a rich treasure. You must not trifle with your eczema or the eruption on the thumb. You must put yourself under a competent doctor and do as he tells you. So long as you take eggs, I do not think anybody will insist on your taking meat. I would like you to wire to me saying you have called in skilled assistance. Consult Shummy on the point. You must not be obstinate on the point.

No more just now.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3588. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6397

454. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

WARDHA HOSPITAL,
September 10, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I understand from Mahadev that you have developed a dislike for Segaon, and whenever you think of the place you become miserable. You have lost your peace of mind. Since you had taken a decision, you want to spend a year somehow with me. I had known this all along. Now it is all the more clear. I must consider now what my duty is. For me to seek forgiveness from children is nothing new. The most recent example is that of Kusum. If you do not know about it ask her. Perhaps even Mahadev can tell you. If I had reason to ask Kusum’s forgiveness, I have still more reason to ask your forgiveness.

I thought I was protecting you like a flower. Whether you were aware of it or not, despite all the harsh words I threw at you, I was protecting you against attacks from others. But I set no store by it. What has value is the impression made on you. Judging by that standard, I acknowledge my failure. Forgive me for the unhappiness I caused you. I shall not let such a situation be repeated. But now I have lost self-confidence. You do not have to ask your freedom from me. But you have to free yourself of me. Or, say, I have to give you your freedom. Only a few can learn from me by being physically near me. Countless persons have been able to do that while being away from me. You are one of them. If you wish to learn something from me while being away, I am willing to teach you regularly through letters. Your coming to Segaon is going to benefit neither you nor me. I shall have to be constantly on my guard if I take you with me. You would not like me to be in such a pitiable state. The situation in which parents have to guard themselves from children is always to be avoided. So you should give up your insistence on coming to Segaon. There is no reason to be unhappy about it. There is no reason for you to feel ashamed as you are not giving up Segaon. In despair I am making you give up Segaon. Respect this wish of mine in good cheer. It is my duty and yours to avoid a situation in which you may break down at the end of a year and your heart may be filled with contempt for me. How can I explain this better? I particularly wish that you should go to Rajkot and help Narandas. You have hardly any place now at Maganwadi. The kitchen is being discontinued. What would you do in that event? There is no provision at all at Maganwadi to accommodate women. Of course, you may stay in the Mahila Ashram. But Mahadev will guide you in this regard. I urge you once again that you should forget the unhappiness you have suffered at Segaon.

\(^1\) X-ray

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

455. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH AND BALWANTSINHA

September 11, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL AND CHI. BALWANTSINHA.

I have your letter. In any case the Doctor is surely coming today. Moreover, he is from Burhanpur like you. Tomorrow he will not come. He may examine the patients, if any, today. Prahlad is fine. What you write is likely to have happened to Balwantsinha’s letters. For my part, I have an impression that I had acknowledged his letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8597. Also C.W. 7000.Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

350

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
456. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

September 11, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

Who is taking up the responsibility for milk and other things from now on? Send the khakhari¹ for Mirabehn if they have prepared it, and butter. Keep the butter being sent herewith and send me another lot. The salt bottle is sent for refilling. Send ten tolas of flour, a small griddle, rolling-pin and board if the khakhari is not ready. You may send a bill for such of these articles as have to be taken from the new kitchen. Send dal, rice and vegetables for Prahlad. It does not matter if the three are put together.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10719

457. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

[ Before September 12, 1936]²

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I extracted two lovely bits of hair from today’s curds besides the once that I may have swallowed. They were Mother goat’s hair. So the carelessness may be traced to the person who strained the milk. The curds were very sour. If the morning milk is curdled, I can take it now. If you send it I shall want garlic. No garlic if you send milk.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10720

458. WHAT IT IS LIKE

The recent debate between Dr. Sokhey and Dr. Mangaldas Mehta on the ever-green topic of birth-control emboldens me to disclose the opinion of the late Dr. Ansari of revered memory supporting Dr. Mangaldas’s position. It was now nearly a year ago I wrote to the deceased asking him whether as a medical man he could endorse the position I had taken up on the vexed question. Much to my agreeable surprise he wrote heartily supporting it. When I was in Delhi last, I had a brief discussion with him on the subject and he promised at my request to contribute a series of articles showing by facts and figures from his own experience and that of other medical men how the practice had hurt both men and women who were party to it. He gave a graphic account of the condition to which the men were reduced after they had mated for some time with their wives or other women who they knew were using contraceptives. Freedom from the fear of the natural consequence of coition had made them reckless in self-indulgence leading to an inordinate craving for seeing women which ended in dementia. Alas! he died just when he was about to write the promised series.

¹ A thin crispchapati
² The addressee has placed this letter in August/September, 1936. It appears to have been written from the hospital in Wardha where Gandhiji’s food used to be sent from Maganwadi; vide the preceding item. Gandhiji was discharged on September 12.

Bernard Shaw is reported to have said that coition accompanied by the use of contraceptives was nothing less than sexual masturbation. A moment’s reflection would show how accurate the description is.

I receive almost daily piteous letters from students and sometimes even from teachers complaining how they had become slaves to the habit and were being gradually reduced to loss of manhood. Recall, too, the correspondence¹ published in these columns from the principal of the Sanatan Dharma College, Lahore, bitterly complaining of teachers practising unnatural vice on their pupils and the consequences of the practice on their health and character. The deduction I draw from these examples is that even the union between husband and wife bereft of the possibility of its natural consequence must cause the same ruination that invariably attends masturbation or unnatural vice.

It is the philanthropic motive that no doubt impels many birth-control reformers to a whirlwind campaign in favour of the use of contraceptives. I invite them to contemplate the ruinous consequences of their misplaced philanthropy. Those whom they want to reach will never use them in any appreciable numbers. Those who ought not to use them will, without doubt, use them to the undoing of themselves and their partners. This would not matter in the least if the use of contraceptives was incontestably proved to be right physically and morally. Dr. Ansari’s opinion, if my testimony about it is accepted, is a grave warning to the reformers and would-be reformers.

¹ Vide “A Growing Vice”, 27-4-1935

_Harijan_, 12-9-1936

459. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

_SEGAON, WARDHA, September 12, 1936_

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Well, I am at last in dear old Segaon without Ba, Lilavati and Moti. Amtul Salaam is here for a few hours and she goes back to Wardha. Lilavati is in Maganwadi under discipline and Ba has remained there out of sympathy. All is quiet here and looking nice. In front of me are two live snakes in the cage caught yesterday. Your green soap bit is there in its place. It will give a few day’s work still.

You will be glad to learn that your thermos was broken to pieces after giving a night’s good use. The door of the cart suddenly opened and the thermos fell out. You are not to replace it any more. I must do the best I can with improvised things. You know by this time that I am shameless enough to ask for things I need. And such a thing is a real good magnifying glass. But this at your leisure and not by post. Tell me what was the cost of the thermos broken today. It is pure curiosity that prompts the question.

I hope you have listened to me and taken expect advice about your eczema. It is a thing not to be lightly treated.

You won’t be anxious about me. I shall take every care of myself.

Mira is now in her cottage.

Love.

Tyrant

From the original: C.W. 3589. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6398
460. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

September 12, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Puri has sprung a surprise on me. He says you do not want him, his presence will be a tax on you. You want to be left alone. If so, P. Must go. He too says he won’t come up to your expectations. Balwantsinha will follow with milk. You will take what service you like from him. Who will sleep there? You must not put any strain on yourself. I wish I could come over to you and see you face to face. But that cannot be just yet.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6363. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9829

461. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

September 12, 1936

CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter.

What service of a Mahatma means you can realize only if you become one yourself. At present you can only follow your imagination as far as it takes you. If a Mahatma gets a boil, the whole world talks about it. If, on the contrary, an ordinary man gets even fistula, it is given no more importance than a boil. Nobody would know about it. That is the way things happen.

I left the hospital only today and have returned here. I am still weak, but I hope to regain strength here.

It seems now it has been raining on your side. Here it has been raining much in excess of our needs.

Your other descriptions were enjoyable. You are going ahead with your work. Let the result be what it will.

I have no wish to criticize your writing activity.1 You must put your God-given gift to good use.

1 The addressee had taken to writing articles, stories and even books after going over to Sasvad. She was afraid Gandhiji might not approve and had sought his opinion.
Lilavati’s case is certainly a very difficult one. My first attempt has failed. I am now making another. I will of course not admit defeat so easily.

Your question is correct. But I wish to bring swaraj. Why should I die before my time?

What you write about Mirabehn is also correct. She just cannot live away from me. Let us see what happens now.

I may not write more today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10377. Also C.W. 6823. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

462. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

September 12, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Prema’s letter accompanies this. You must be getting news of my illness from time to time. Neither Sardar nor Jamnalalji will be able to go there. Whom else do you expect? I would advice you not to bank upon anyone but be satisfied with whatever you can do there. You should look upon my effort as absolutely independent.

The contributions raised for the spinning fund you may use for famine relief if a state of famine prevails. But then this is only a suggestion.

Today I put my signature in the copy of the Gita required for Purushottam and Vijaya’s use.

I returned from the hospital to Segaon today. Ba and Lilavati stayed back at Maganwadi.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8504. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
463. LETTER TO RAMNIKLAL MODI

September 12, 1936

CHI. RAMNIKLAL,

I must be content with writing to you only a postcard. I have not yet regained full strength. Why should you believe that you are drifting away from me? The right thing is for everyone to work according to his capacity. This alone is truth. How far can we strain ourselves or work out of a false sense of shame? If for the present Tara fails to influence the Patel women, she need not feel defeated. We should render whatever service they accept and be satisfied. Tell Surendra that I have no doubt made a note of writing to him but a number of obstacles come in the way. I write only to reassure you.

Blessings from

BAPU

SJR. RAMNIKLAL
C/o BHAILALBHAI
HARIJAN SEVAK SANGH
BORIAVI, B.B. & C.I. RLY.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4183

464. FRAGMENT OF A LETTER

September 12, 1936

...She should begin by reading and pondering the verse: “Thou mournest for them whom thou shouldst not mourn for.”¹ She should not squabble with Ba. She should not cry before her or anyone else. She should not dwell on her woes.

She should think of whatever good qualities she may have observed in Munnalal, Balwantsinha and Mirabehn and worship them for those qualities. She should not think of their shortcomings and if she is reminded of them she should show forbearance.

No more today. She should make a copy of this and send it to me. If anything further occurs to me I shall let you know.

¹ Addressee’s wife
² Bhagavad Gita II. 11
If the letter to Rajkumari cannot be posted today, then post it tomorrow with late fee paid.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
You will have got the bullock-cart by now.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9579. Also C.W. 6551. Courtesy: Liavati Asar

465. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

September 13, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have your cheerful letter. Had it been a dry path I would have walked up to you. You must not exert yourself. Patiently train Puri. Do not despair of him quickly.

Have you my torch? Have you the falka?"?

I hope you have all you need.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6364. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9830

466. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

September 13, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

As you want me to destroy your letters at once, I have always to write from memory. Yes, Shummy wrote a sweet letter which I am going to acknowledge, though he does not want me to.

Here is my diagnosis of your illness. You left in the midst of nature treatment. As it was not completed, there was a reaction in a radically changed climate. It would be called a healthy reaction if it could be treated a la nature-cure method. This [is] not merely hip-baths. There are steam-baths, light-baths, etc. But this was not to be.

---

1 A kind of frame for winding yarn was not alarmed over the reaction but over the just resentment in the family. They cannot sympathize with nature-cure methods.

Have I made myself clear? Thank God, now there is peace in the family.

But you must not trifle with your eczema. I would certainly treat you if you were with me. But that cannot be, certainly not for cure. You have to go through the orthodox method. The quicker the better.

Yours is a departure from the orthodox routine. You may not therefore resent the criticism of the family. You will justify your rebellion only by your large-hearted charity, ever-increasing inner joy, equableness and possession of good health. Rebellions can only be justified by success. If you will therefore be patient and wise in your changes, all will be well.

Please give my love to Tai, if she is still there.

You need not now give me daily letters if you are pressed for time or too lazy to write. Writing to me must be no tax on your mind or body.

Cartloads of love.

ROBER

From the original: C.W. 3741. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6897

467. LETTER TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

September 13, 1936

MY DEAR SUBHAS,

I hope you were given my wire in reply to your kind enquiry. My fever—an attack after twelve years of freedom—was the cause of the lateness of my reply to your questions.

(1) Tea or coffee I do not consider to be essential to health. They often do harm. They may remain harmless, if tea is weak and straw colour and coffee drunk with plenty of milk with only a spoonful or two of coffee.

(2) If received fresh from the udder well cleaned and from a healthy cow, milk drunk fresh unboiled unwarmed is the best food. Next best is pasteurized milk. For some stomachs sweet curds are the best. They having the yeast obviate even the use of fruit.

(3) Leafy vegetables must always be taken, better if taken as salads. All leaves are not edible in the raw state. Onion, pumpkin with the skin, pandora, brinjal, lady’s finger, turnips, carrots, parsnips, cabbage, cauliflower are good additions to leaves. Potatoes and starchy tubers should be taken sparingly.

(4) Dates are a fine food for a healthy stomach. Raisins are more digestible. I can take both freely but all cannot. All can take raisins and sultanas.

(5) Garlic and onion in a raw state are strongly recommended in the West. I take raw garlic regularly for blood pressure. It is the best antitoxin for internal use. It is also recommended for tubercular patients.

I think the prejudice against these two harmless vegetables is due to the odour which is the essence of them and it arose with the rise of Vaishnavism. Ayurveda sings the praise of both unstintingly. Garlic is called poor man’s musk and so it is. I do not know what villagers would do without garlic and onion.

(6) Yes, lemons and gur or honey are a good substitute for sweet oranges.

I think this answers all your questions. I hope you are well. I would like to know the result of Drs. Sircar’s and Roy’s examination.

Love.

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

468. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS

September 13, 1936

DEAR SIR PURUSHOTTAMDAS,

You will please explain to the South African delegation my sincere regret over my inability to welcome them in person. Apart from convalescence it is difficult for me to tear myself away from my new home Segaon. I pray to God that this visit may result in removing cobwebs of misunderstanding and bringing the two countries closer together.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

1 On the arrival of the delegation in Bombay on September 19, 1936. The addressee handed over this letter to J.H. Hofmeyer, the leader of the delegation.

2 The Bombay Chronicle, 20-9-1936, has: “my new love—Segaon”.

VOL. 69 : 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936 359
469. LETTER TO SYED MAHMUD

WARDHA,
September 13, 1936

MY DEAR DR. MAHMUD,

Bapu has your affectionate letter of the 9th inst. He is very happy to hear all that you say about wife and children and he is glad that you told her that unless she gave up pardah it was not possible for her to expect Bapu’s welcome.

The fever has left Bapu very weak and he might take some time to recover all his lost strength. The doctor wanted him very much to stay in Wardha for some time, but his heart was in his village where alone he could get his peace.

It is quite like you to write in the way you have done about Harilal’s so-called conversion. You are one of the very few Muslim friends who has written in this behalf with such warmth and sympathy and understanding. Misguided Muslims do not know how very much they are lowering the name of Islam by going on in the way they are doing. Of course Bapu saw the newspaper cutting that you have referred to but to beat everything else, an Urdu newspaper in Lucknow has given the news to the world that Bapu has become a Muslim. It is based on an interview supposed to have taken place with Bapu in the course of which he eulogized Islam, denounced Hinduism and declared that he was repeating Kalma every day. No such interview every took place. This precious piece of news has been copied by dozens of Urdu papers and has now been translated into Gujarati and Marathi by Muslim papers in Gujarat and Maharashtra. What do you say to all this? I do hope you are now completely restored. The three Bihari leaders, Rajendrababu, Brijkishorebabu and Jayaprakash Narayan have converted Jannatulaij’s guest-house into a hospital. All the three took suddenly ill on arrival here. Luckily they are progressing now.

Yours sincerely,

MAHADEV

DR. SYED MAHMUD
CHAPRA
BIHAR

From a copy: Dr. Syed Mahmud Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library; also G.N. 5088
470. A LETTER

September 13, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

With reference to your letter, I am powerless to help you. You may know that for the moment I have retired from active public life. But the public bodies in India and particularly the National Congress have been expressing their opinion in no uncertain terms.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

471. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

September 13, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I have of course asked Mahadevbhai to write to you. I returned to Segaon yesterday. Except for a feeling of weakness I am all right. I am still in a diet of milk and fruit only. Mirabehn has gone to her hut. Ba is not here at present. She will probably go to Devdas at Delhi. Lilavati is at Maganwadi. Manu is with Gomati. She might now go with Ba. This leaves Balwantsinha, Munnalal, Pyarelal and Khan Saheb here. Very probably, Nanavati will come over. Several persons are in a way free because the Maganwadi kitchen has been merged with the students’ Moreover, the place is no more crowded.

Amtul Salaam has come and most probably she will leave for Bombay in the evening.

I showed your telegram to Jayaprakash, but he is not a person whom I or anyone else can stop from following his own bent. He may have left today. Father is here. He had a severe attack of fever. A doctor is going to examine him. The particular ailment which Jayaprakash suffered from has abated. Rajendra Babu will however stay on for the present.

Kanti has gone to Bombay for his studies.

Tell me now, haven’t I given you plenty of news?
How are you? What is your diet? Do you suffer from headaches? Are you able to get milk? What about fruit?

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I just read your letter of 2-9-36. How could it be that you had no letter from me for 22 days? It is true that I could not write during my illness, but that was a matter of 10 days. I have not at all received the letter sent through Kanti. How could I be angry with you? Or, why should I be displeased with you? I remember no occasion when you ever gave me cause for anger or annoyance. It may be that letters go astray or that I am unable to write because of the pressure of work, but never think that I refrain from writing because I am annoyed with you. That I weigh 108 lb. after the fever should be regarded as a good sign. Instead of writing to Kanti’s address, write now directly to me. Kanti’s address is: Satyagraha Camp, Vile Parle, B.B. & C.I. Rly. Drive away your melancholy. Write to me regularly. My birthday [according to the Vikram calendar] falls on October 12.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3454

472. LETTER TO K.M. MUNSHI

September 13, 1936

Bhai Munshi,

“It’s good that we are out of the snare; we can easily reach Shrigopal.” We are not going to keep Hans or its successor going by paying a security of Rs. 1,000. A hans will feed on milk alone. Kakasaheb’s suggestion seems to be correct; but wouldn’t a quarterly need a security? If it does, we may not have that either. I expect you are both doing well.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7605. Courtesy: K.M. Munshi

1 These lines are from a bhajan by Narasinh Mehta.
2 Literally ‘swan’
473. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

SEGAON,

September 14, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have from Nanavati the painful news that you have been weeping like mad. You will postpone your coming to Segaon so long as, while there, you do not do as I say. I had been expecting a letter in your beautiful handwriting but what I have is only bad news! What is this? Be reasonable and do as I tell you. I am helpless if you must persist in hurting me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9344. Also C. W. 6619. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

474. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

September 14, 1936

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

You had an attack of fever, and now it is my turn. Let us see what happens next. My diet consists only of milk or curds, musambi and garlic.

It is a pity that you have lost faith in spinning. It is such a great yajna; but I shall not argue.

You may, if you wish, take the vow of brahmacharya once again; but please understand that it is almost impossible to observe it strictly unless the palate has been conquered. There is no need of your coming to Wardha, I rarely go there. You may not come to Segaon with the intention of staying.

Recoup your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 4288
475. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

September 14, 1936

CHI. SHARMA,

I have your letter. I do not have anyone of the kind you want. You must yourself find such men.

Your idea of staying in a village does not appeal to me in the least. At the moment we cannot spend so much money for propaganda work among the villages. Do not expect any help from me in this programme. Even now I would suggest that you start your work without any money, settle down in a village and assess your ability. But I find you have your head in the sky, while I am a creature of the earth and do not want to move my feet away from the earth. It seems, therefore, that our paths at present are different.

What will you gain by going to Satis Babu’s?

His...‘I am persuading him to reduce it still further. From 42 I am trying to get it reduced by another 12.

It is obvious that you do not know the villages. How will you learn midwifery from the books? Still, you may send me the list. I will then send you the books.

I am sorry that I am not able to give you a satisfactory reply. But isn’t it better that I tell you what I feel.

I had gone to the hospital after leaving behind my fever. took quite a large quantity of quinine.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

476. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

September 15, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I am glad your thumb seems to be quite restored. But I shall wait. The oozing must be stopped, not merely suppressed. Please do not trifle with it. I do not mind your feeling lazy and not taking up routine work. But you must not deceive yourself and imagine yourself to be well when you are not.

Illegible in the source

How I wish you could keep Tai there for some time. My love to her.

I have not yet read, the Statesman article. It is with me. I shall see what I can do with it.¹

I have sent a longish letter² to [hummy]. Do not worry over letters to me. Write daily, if it pleases and relaxes you. No strain, please. I shall not imagine all sorts of evil when I do not hear from you, now that I know you are free to miss a day or two.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 3742. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6898

477. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

September 15, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I had expected to meet you at where we met yesterday and tell you why no rengi³ was brought. I wanted to inspect the site when it was possible to walk there. Let us see what happens tomorrow. Are you prepared to make your own dahi⁴ there? You need not, unless you wish.

Hope you and Puri are getting on famously.
The rains are now ruining everything. God’s will be done.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 6327. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G. N. 9793

² This is not traceable.
³ Small bullock-cart
⁴ Curds
478. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

September 15, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

You are still a bad girl. You would not shoulder the little burden placed on you. This shows the stuff you are made of. I have told you that you may give me a pleasant one hour, You should not create a scene with me. Know that the more you persist in your ways, the further you push your coming to Segaon. You know best if all this is but a trick to avoid coming. How heartless of you that even for the sake of my peace you would not agree to stay five miles away!

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9345. Also C. W. 6620. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

479. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

September 15, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

I received your postcard only today. I am well. There is only a little weakness, which will pass.

Amtul Salaam has left Rs. 150 for you. This I have credited to her account, for she hasn’t a cowrie of her own. She makes merry at the cost of her brothers, who spend all that they earn. But even if she has her own money, why should you beg of her? When we adopt someone as our mother, is it to serve her or to serve our own interests? I do not like your selfish attitude. It would be good if you got out of it. It is not right that while Devdas pays your expenses you should go about begging like this. For my part I have told you to put in some effort and earn while you learn. Why do you lose heart? Amtul Salaam has gone there. She had forbidden me, so I said nothing to you. However, it would be good if you could say to her: “Thinking further on the matter I feel that I ought not to accept any money either from you or from anyone else except Devdas. Therefore, I will not take money from you.” But if it does not come out of your heart, then don’t say it. Do not scold A. S. or feel constrained. Even while doing what you want to, don’t give up courtesy and humility. She is much hurt.

Put in as much work as you wish while taking care of your health. It is not trouble cooking one’s own food. Find the necessary time and eat satisfying meals. Keep writing to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 7304. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

480. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

September 15, 1936

CHI. JETHALAL,

I have a vague impression that I did dictate a reply to your letter of the 7th August. I have returned here after being discharged from the hospital. I feel weak. Some things I write myself, some things I dictate. Since Nanavati has come to live here, dictating has become convenient also. I shall not write more about my illness as you will know about it from Harijan or Harijan Sevak or Harijanbandhu. Your letter regarding the tools is encouraging. The important question for me is whether in ordering heavy implements from you the transport charges might not be as great as the price. I have been carrying on here the same experiment that you have been trying there. We have a solitary blacksmith in this village. He, too, poor man, is not very intelligent. Only recently I got him to make three knives from an old file. I paid him whatever he charged. But this is not enough for me. Let me have a list of the items you wish to sell outside along with their prices, the freightage to Wardha, and so on. I need hardly assure you that I will help you in the sale of your articles, if possible. You mention a detailed letter. I have not yet received it. Write it now. Who else are there at present and what are your activities?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 9856. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat
481. LETTER TO CHAND TYAGI

September 15, 1936

Bhai Chand Tyagi,

Your letter has been lying in front of me for many days but I could not attend to it till now. You have given me good news about Balvir. I cannot send for him as I am striving hard to live a village life. I do not have enough accommodation in this village nor do I want to add to the family here. I have now neither the strength nor the inclination to do what I could do in places like Sabarmati, etc. My aspiration of leading a village life can be realized only if I maintain a limited family. God alone knows the future, assuming that the thread of my life is to stretch farther. Rajkishori seems to have completely forgotten me. She does not even write to me. What does she do? How much does she spend?

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 6633. Also C. W. 4281. Courtesy: Chand Tyagi

482. LETTER TO MARGARETE SPIEGEL

Segaon, Wardha,
September 16, 1936

Chi. Amala,

You seem to have deserted me. How so? Do tell me all about yourself.

Love.

Bapu

Spiegel Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

483. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

September 16, 1936

Chi. Mira,

The dinner bell has gone. You will not stir out today. I am coming. You shall come to Segaon tomorrow.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 6365. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G. N. 9831

484. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

September 16, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. If you have not understood even after so many letters from me, how am I going to make you understand now? Read all the letters again and act accordingly — joyfully. I do not know how much and what kind of persuasion you want from me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have written this in great haste.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

485. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
[Before September 17, 1936]\(^1\)

BAPA,

Kakalbhai brought your letter while I was still thinking of writing to you. Of course, I have not seen Kakalbhai or Balwantrai. Just now I can’t see anyone, nor am I in a hurry about it. I am only slowly disposing of the arrears of work. The fever came on swift as a horse but my strength is returning at an ant’s pace. This is not a complaint against God who alone knows what He has in store. He is the giver of strength; why then may He not withdraw it, too?

Why should I go to Almora to effect a reconciliation between Kakalbhai and Amritlal? Water cannot be parted by hitting at it with a lathi. The two were reconciled but is Amritlal reconciled with himself? I am not impatient to drag him back into public life; I am impatient to see his mind purified. That is why I wrote to him as soon as I heard of the matter. He will not remain in Almora if he has regained purity. For my part I make no difference between public life and private life. However accomplished a man, if he is immoral the splashes from the mud of his immorality are bound to stain public life. That we cannot see the evil splashing does not mean that it is not doing so. I am, therefore, firmly of the opinion that those who wish Amritlal well, those who wish public life to advance, ought to let Amritlal cleanse himself. Only harm will be done to him and to public work by luring him into a hasty come-back. That is my view.

\(^1\) From the date of receipt recorded on the letter

I fear I have not been able to make you see my point about Valunjkar. The question is only of giving to him the amount which I have promised from among the funds standing in my name. I believe that in doing so the Council’s approval is not necessary. Isn’t that right? Please correct me if my memory is failing me. I have of course no objection to the matter going before the Council. But on what basis would the Council generally sanction such amounts?

Rukmini is mad of course. Every fault, the famous Lombroso has said, is a symptom of madness. But when is a kubharya properly so called? It is a different matter if we dismiss the word altogether. My sympathy is with Malkani, and the pity I feel for Rukmini is of a different kind.

Do you want Amtul Salaam to return? You should not hesitate to warm me if, in spite of her good intentions, she proves a nuisance there. It was God’s grace that Nilam survived. I shall await the figures. I have made the letter long enough.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 1170

486. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

September 17, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

That you have no reed pen is a good excuse. I am sending a pen herewith. I am sending a copy of the Gita, such as I could find; I do not know which copy you call your own. Kanaiyo knows how to make a reed pen. Learn it from him. You have written out the verses well enough, but what about their meanings?

1 Cesare Lombroso, the Italian physician and criminologist
2 Shrew

You are expected to use hand-made paper. What’s the idea of having a hand-made pen and mill-made paper? I shall feel satisfied only when you are completely calm. Send over your dilruba¹ for Nanavati’s use if you are not playing on it. If you are, there is no need at all to send it.

You have to make out a copy of the instructions I have written to you,² and send it to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9580. Also C. W. 6552. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

487. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
September 18, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Just a line only. Your apples have been eaten by all with relish. Not an invitation to send more.

Khan Saheb was most grateful for the attention given by you to the girls.³ He wants you to go out of your way to befriend them and direct them the right way. Here is his letter.

I am glad Shummy is now attending to you. You will now get well quick. Obey him willingly like a good idiot that you are.

Cartload of love.

TYRANT

From the original: C. W. 3590. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6399

¹ A stringed musical instrument
² Vide "Fragment of a Letter", 12-9-1936
³ Mehrtaj and Mariam, Abdul Ghaffar Khan’s daughter and niece respectively
488. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

[September 18, 1936]¹

CHI. KANTI,

I liked your letter. Ten o’clock of Friday morning has passed by. It is four now. I will wait for Yamaraj² at ten at night.³ You do know that as it is I am always ready to welcome him.

I will certainly pay the photographer’s Rs. 50. Where shall I send it?

About the other things, I have understood whatever you have written. However unhappy I may have felt about your going,⁴ I have certainly not given up hope of you.

I have destroyed your letter.

You certainly know more about Amtul Salaam. If you want to write to me something in particular, do so. About the money I wrote whatever she told me. Now I believe every word of what you say.

I understand about Saraswati. I am sure you will not do anything blameworthy. May God give you strength.

I shall not expect a long letter from you from time to time. But you will write me a postcard every week, won’t you? Write a long letter, too, occasionally.

Ba and Manu will leave for Delhi tomorrow.

This will be enough for now as it is time for the post.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 7388. Courtesy; Kantilal Gandhi

¹ From the reference to Manu and Kasturba going to Delhi which they did on September 19. Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 20-9-1936. Also, the letter was written on a Friday and September 18 was a Friday.
² Lord of Death
³ Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 21-9-1936
⁴ For studying medicine. Vide, “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi”, 7-9-1936
489. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

8.25 p.m., September 18, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I am alarmed by your last sentence. If you think of going to a school after a year, the worth-while thing is to begin now. One may start one’s studies any time, but it ought to be painful to you as well as to me if you have to flee Segaon in disappointment and join a school. Search your heart and shake off your folly. Satisfy your hunger for learning. At Segaon, what can you have except the drudgery and my temper? I cannot help fearing that you will not find your stay here bearable. I spend a good deal of my time thinking of your welfare. Not that I grudge it. But it should be intolerable for both you and me if in the end you have to give me up in disappointment. If you must come to Segaon, it is for you to determine how soon it can be done. Read my instructions again and again and carry them out cheerfully.

Remove all ill will from your mind. If you resent someone with whom you have to deal every day, how will you be happy with me? How shall I be at peace? Isn’t this quite easy to understand? There is never any shame in doing the right thing.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9346. Also C. W. 6621. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

490. NOTES

ABOUT TARABEHN MARY CHESLEY

Almost every foreign mail, letters are being received from the late Mary Chesley’s relatives and friends extolling her many virtues and telling me of the benefactions received by most of them from her and of promises of help made by her and even a will or wills left by her. Though Mahadev Desai has been giving these correspondents such detailed information as he can during the limited time at his disposal, it is necessary to make a public announcement for the benefit of all concerned that the will made by her in my favour just before her lamented death does not, in the opinion of legal friends, appear to be valid according to the Indian Succession Act. Even if it can be proved, I have no desire whatsoever to use her property, except with the concurrence of her relatives and friends, for the sake of the Indian village industries work, which was her latest and last love for which she slaved and died heroically. If the property came into my hands, of which there is very little chance, I should examine all her commitments and promises in the West and try to satisfy them before making use of anything left by her undisposed of in her lifetime. I have cheques coming from her Bank which lie with me uncashed. My advice to her cousins, of whom I see there are many, is that the nearest of them should take out letters of administration and send me legal authority to part with whatever is in my hands or Miss Mary Barr’s. I possess the uncashed cheques and the latter her papers and trinkets. The deceased had so reduced her personal wants in India that there is hardly anything left which can be converted into money. All she received during her lifetime was generally made over to me for village work. I hope this gives to all concerned such information as is in my possession about the affairs of the deceased humanitarian.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING?

Two friends write to me deploring my attitude in the Ambedkar-Moonje proposal.¹ Their argument may be summed up as follows:

Surely you are making much ado about nothing. Guru Nanak was a Hindu reformer like the others who have founded Hindu sects. Sikhs are Hindus to all intents and purposes. Their culture is the same as of the Hindus. If Harijans declare themselves as Sikhs, why do you call it change of faith?

The objectors seem to be alone in their opinion. Some time after 1915 when I returned home from my self-imposed exile of fourteen years, I happened to go to the Punjab. Addressing a meeting of Sikhs, I had said they were in my opinion Hindus belonging to a sect of reformers. A well-meaning Sikh friend spoke to me aside and said I had unwittingly offended Sikhs by calling them Hindus. Ever since that caution, I have never described them as Hindus. What they believe matters, not what I or a few individuals do. Sikhs have a separate electorate. Dr Ambedkar does not regard Sikhs as Hindus. He definitely wants a change of faith. If Sikhs were a Hindu sect, no change in the Pact would be necessary. It is open to any Hindu to change his sect and still remain a Hindu. Moreover, neither Dr.

¹ Vide “A Dangerous Proposal”, 22-8-1936
Ambedkar nor R. B. Rajah nor anyone else can change even the sect of a whole mass of Harijans by a stroke of the pen. Religion is essentially an individual matter which each one has to decide for himself. No one who believes in religion as a sacrament can therefore be party to the proposal put forth by Drs. Ambedkar and Moonje.

_Harijan, 19-9-1936_

491. OF MY RECENT ILLNESS

I would not tax the reader about my recent malaria fever except for the fact that friends are involved in the decision I have prayerfully made and which I hope God will let me fulfil.

It went against the grain for me, a confirmed believer in nature-cure methods, to go to Wardha and seek admission to the hospital. Left entirely to myself, I would have treated myself in accordance with nature-cure methods as far as possible. But I could not do so without offending the friends who happened to be near me at the time. I knew that Jamnalalji too had a special responsibility, in that I had settled in a village near Wardha, his permanent place of residence. With the choice of the village he has had nothing to do. It was entirely Mirabehn’s and it was made because Segaon was predominantly a Harijan village and far enough from Wardha and yet not too far. I was drawn to the village in accordance with a certain declaration I had made when Mirabehn went to Segaon. Jamnalalji to an extent and Sardar Vallabhbhai altogether were against my settling in a village as yet and then in Segaon. But I bore down their opposition when I told them that I was bound by the declaration to which I have referred to settle down in Segaon. No doubt the promise was agreeable to me for my heart was in the village. Having gone to Segaon it was my intention not to stir out of it for full three seasons, i. e., one year. Unfortunately there are obligations undertaken before the decision to settle in Segaon, which I shall have to fulfil and which will disturb the unbroken year’s stay. I urge friends, therefore, not to make further inroads upon the period. For me it is my _sadhana_. I set the greatest value upon the village problem. It may not be put off except at the cost of our very existence. India lives in her villages, not in her cities. I am supposed to guide and direct the village industries movement to which at Bombay an autonomous existence was given by the Congress. ‘I am incapable of guiding any movement in which I do not plunge myself actively and directly. Maganwadi, though a village, being a large village,’ was not good enough for my instruction and inspiration. I needed to be in a real village presenting the problems that face one in generality of villages. Segaon is one such village.

If then I may not leave Segaon in order not to interrupt my instruction and first-hand experience, I may not also leave it for health reasons. Segaon like most villages has its full share of malaria and other diseases which villagers suffer from. Of its population of 600 there is hardly anyone who has not suffered from malaria or dysentery. Of the record of nearly 200 cases that have come under my observation or Mirabehn’s, most are those of malaria and dysentery. The simple remedies at our disposal with dietetic control have served their purpose effectively. The villagers do not go to hospitals, they cannot even go to dispensaries. They usually resort to village quacks or incantations and drag on their weary existence. I claim to have some workable knowledge of common ailments. I have successfully treated myself often enough without the assistance of medical friends though they have been ever ready to help me in my need. If I was not a ‘Mahatma’, so-called, no one would have known anything of the recent attack of malaria. I rarely have fever. The last attack I had was nearly 12 years ago and I had treated myself. There is all the greater reason for me now, if I have another attack of malaria or another ailment, not to stir out of Segaon in search of health; and if I must have medical assistance, I must be satisfied with what I can get without fuss and without having to leave Segaon. I am fatalist enough to believe that no one can put off the hour of death when it has struck. Not the greatest medical assistance available has saved kings and emperors from the jaws of death. One like myself struggling to become a humble village servant surely ought to be satisfied with remedies easily accessible to villages. By leaving my village in search of health or the like I deny myself the opportunity of knowing what village life can be when one’s health is in peril.

My malaria has quickened my resolve to study the problem of making Segaon malaria-proof. All round me the fields are water-logged. The crops are rotting. The ground is unwalkable unless you are content to wade through knee-deep mud. Fortunately a pukka

---

1 In October 1934
2 The source has “in being a large village”.

376 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
road was built for my convenience through Jamnalalji’s fields which keeps Segaon somewhat accessible to people from Wardha. The road has proved a great convenience for man and beast. If I had listened to friend’s advice to postpone settling in Segaon till after the rains, I would have missed the rich experiences I have gained during the heavy rains of the past two months. Everything I have seen hitherto therefore convinces me that, if I am to make any approach to the village life, I must persevere in my resolve not to desert it in the hour of danger to life or limb. And I ask all the friends to help me in carrying out the resolve and pray with me that God may give me the strength to do so.

_Harijan_, 19-9-1936

492. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGGAON,

September 20, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

You are in danger of losing caste even with Tai, if you persist in defending my non-violence so long as it has not become your very own. That the savage in us may get the better of us when we are tried does not affect our position, if we even while we are savage know that we are doing wrong. The fact is that in this age of doubt, we are never sure of our ground. Some attractive argument which we cannot answer baffles us instead of humbling our pride in our intellect. These questions of non-violence, birth-control, and the like are eternal problems. So it might be better for you in the long run, never to seek to defend my views. When it is your own views, I know [you] are more than able to hold your own. I do not want your great ability to be discounted because of your association with me. Rather would I like it to be said that neither your body nor your mind had suffered decay after you began to come to Wardha.

I am glad Shummy is now treating your eczema. You must not be touchy about the feet. Is it not better that what is in is now coming out. The only thing is to have a remedy that results in elimination, not suppression.

I hope you will have no difficulty in deciphering the leaf 4. You will have none if you will treat this as part of it. You know what I mean.
Even among closest relatives some can be shameless. I belong to that class. Therefore don’t send me a thermos till I call for it. I assure you I am getting hot enough drinks. On that score you need not worry.

I entirely agree with you that women are better nurses and more attentive to details than men. Whether it is so for modern women or not you can speak with greater authority than I can.

Your recent letters make me feel uneasy. You seem to be overdoing things again. Learn to say “No” when you are physically or mentally too tired.

Ba and Manu went to Delhi yesterday. And Lilavati is still at Maganwadi. Mira has no temperature today as yet though this is the day for it.

Your apples were eaten with great relish by Khan Saheb and me. Sufficient for the day.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3591. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6400

493. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

September 20, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

Do send me some envelopes.

Write to Dr. Shah about Amtul Salaam, inquiring how she is, what she does, whether she can be cured, etc.

Did you write that your lemons should be included in the parcels that come from Bombay? So far none have come.

I went through Ba’s letter in The Hindustan Times. It does reveal Ba’s pain, and also Devdas’s.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11488
494. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

September 20, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

How foolish of you! No one reads your letters and, supposing someone does, what is there for you to be ashamed of? Don’t you see that your purpose could not be served because your Express Delivery letter reached late? But no one reads it, having recognized your handwriting. But I read it to Mahadev to show him your folly, and both of us laughed at it.

Why do you write in Gujarati or in Hindi? By all means write in Urdu. Your handwriting is clear. Never mind if I take more time to read it.

How can I be persuaded to speak nothing to Kanti when you give money for him? You had forbidden me to discuss the matter with you and I respected your wish. I did rebuke Kanti and he then wrote to say that your wanting to help him was not a recent thing. But then if you persist in making yourself unhappy, how can I help it?

Write to me about the final decision regarding your operation.

Did you get the letter addressed to Santa Cruz P.O.? You have no more complaint regarding letters, have you? Won’t you be a little reasonable, a little cheerful? You do not in any way prove your goodness by making yourself miserable.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 348

495. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

September 20, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have read your letter very carefully. If you could only have some idea of my anxiety about you, you would become straightened as a cane, curb the wild horse of your imagination and become absorbed in the work entrusted to you. I do not trust you and hence you cannot be at Maganwadi. I am anxious about you because I have expectations of you. I am thinking what my duty towards you is. If at Segaon you can mix as sugar does with milk, even if you wanted to I would not let you go. You must admit that you do not have that strength right now. But all will come right in time. Be patient. I have understood the purport of your letter. It contains a few misunderstandings. But I have no time to clear them. It is not ever necessary. Do read Prithivilabhā again. And let me know about the effect it has on you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

496. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

September 20, 1936

BHAJGHANSHYAMDAS,

I gave three days to Parameshwari, Parnerkar, Saryuprasad, Dinkar and Dharmadhikari and talked with them to my heart’s content. They all hold different opinions. Parnerkar is not prepared to take charge of the dairies. It does not seem proper to undo Parameshwari’s sixteen years of experiments. I have not been able to reach a final decision as even the winding up of this will take two to three months. I feel that Parameshwari should be given a further Rs. 2,000 for the expenditure up to December 31. There was some talk about sowing, to which I have already agreed. He should be given Rs. 2,000 in the same manner as he was given Rs. 500 and, whatever may ultimately come about, the sum of Rs. 2,500 should be the first charge on the establishment. Meanwhile we should meet somewhere and take a final decision. I must go to Banaras on October 25. Jamnalalji, too, will be there. I have further advised Parameshwari to obtain the opinion of the Government expert.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 8023. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

1 A novel in Gujarati by K. M. Munshi; vide also”Letter to K. M. Munshi”, 26-9-1936
2 For the opening of the Bharat Mata Mandir
497. LETTER TO G.S.N. ACHARYA

[Before September 21, 1936]¹

I never knew that there was a movement in Andhra Desa against Hindi pracha². But I would resist any attempt to displace the rich vernaculars of the different provinces. Hindi is not intended to take their place, but it is intended to supplement them as a medium of inter-provincial intercourse. Therefore, Hindi propaganda should not only not interfere with the progress of vernaculars, but it must enrich them.

The Hindu, 22-9-1936

498. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA, September 21, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your eczema has to go. I do not know how. Will Shummy approve of gently steaming the part affected, then applying ice poultice? If you think you can discuss this with him you should do so. But at the same time you must not fret because it is a skin disease. You will be well earlier, if you will cease to think about the trouble. How I wish I was by your side at the present moment! But that cannot be.

Please tell Fielden³ with my regards that he is working himself to death without a just cause. He ought to take leave and get well quickly. Of course the effect of malignant malaria is said to be very bad.

I wonder if Mahadev passed on to you the yarn that I was to have died of heart failure at 10 a.m. on Friday last.⁴ This was sent by a learned man in all seriousness to Jamnalalji. He told me all about it. And though he made light of the information, he could not help posting poor Mahodaya here for the night. Though he was deprived of the privilege of last rites, he came in handy as Mira happened to have high fever that very day.

¹ The news report carrying this item is dated September 21, 1936.
² Propaganda
³ Lionel Fielden, first Director-General of All India Radio
⁴ Vide also “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi”, 18-9-1936
I hope the access of visitors has not proved a real strain on your scanty resources. I wish you could hide yourself somewhere during the cold season. Any other hill will be better than Simla. Is it impossible to try Mahabaleshwar or Ooty?

Love.

ROBBERS

From the original: C.W. 3592. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6401

499. LETTER TO BHULABHAI J. DESAI

September 21, 1936

BHAISHRI BHULABHAI,

Shoulder the whole burden of the parliamentary election, financial as well as organizational. You will yourself no doubt contribute the largest amount but also persuade others to do likewise. This task is primarily yours; others will join afterwards.

I hope Dhiru and Madhuri are fine. Blessings to them both.

Vandemataram from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Bhulabhai Desai Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

500. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

September 21, 1936

BHAIR GANSHYAMYDAS,

I become more and more convinced each day that for Harijan work in each province the necessary funds should be raised within the province. If money has to be provided by the centre to enable provinces to carry on their work, work thus accomplished cannot be enduring. We shall also not be able to gauge the feelings of the caste Hindu. Rather than we should be forced later to cut down on our work, it is better that we should recognize our limitations.

What it means is that each province should now submit its budget in the light of the above and having examined these budgets we should then provide to each province such assistance as may be feasible for a year or two. I see our work purely as a religious undertaking. Expansion of the work therefore depends on our finding self-sacrificing and saintly workers. Money will go after them. They will not have to go after money. If this has not been made clear to our Council it is only unfortunate.

If it is necessary that there should be a meeting of the Council at Wardha to take a final decision in the matter, such a meeting may be arranged.

Yours,
Mohandas Gandhi

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8022. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

501. LETTER TO ZOHRA ANSARI
September 21, 1936

Dear Daughter Zohra,

I cannot attend your wedding but I shall certainly be with you in spirit. You will both have my blessings on that day. May God grant you long life and happiness.

Blessings from
Bapu

From a facsimile of the Urdu: Mahatma, Vol. IV, between pp. 112-3

502. LETTER TO MARGARETE SPIEGEL
Segaon, Wardha,
September 22, 1936

Chh. Amala,

I am glad you are keeping up your Gujarati and Hindi. How could you feel that I had ceased to take an interest in your welfare! I am glad you are in a more commodious house. You must get rid of your malady. It is tragic how your mother is being hindered. Let us hope however she will be able to come at last.

Love.

Blessings from
Bapu

Spiegel Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 With Shaukat. The wedding was to take place on September 25; vide “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 25-9-1936
MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your two letters came in the same day one after another. I know that my letters comfort you. Therefore I am trying to write to you as frequently as I can.

How I wish I could have you under my care in December and onward. But your eczema must disappear before then. Sardar Vallabhbhai is due there on 24th. I have asked him to get Deshmukh to examine you. He is a good all-round man. He might be able to find the real remedy. I take it Shummy won’t mind that.

Of course I shall write to Shummy to let you come to me between December and February both inclusive. But I don’t want to write just yet or you will tell me when.

The folding charkha will be sent as soon as you send me the address. It will be specially made.

I understand what you say about your letters. Your wish is being literally respected.

It does seem to me that you should let Shummy put you on a meat diet. Surely you won’t refuse to take meat as medicine. You have not developed that independent conscience. Let the evolution be slow and steady. If I religiously avoid meat even as medicine, it has been a life-long sadhana independently and deliberately undertaken. Anyway I would urge you to yield to Shummy in this respect, if he is sure that he will cure you. You must not expect the impossible from him.

Love.

ROBBER

SHRI RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
MANOR VILLE
SIMLA W.

From the original: C. W. 3743. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6899

1 Dr. Punjabrao Deshmukh
504. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

September 22, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have finished Prithvivallabh1. I am now sending it to you. Read it carefully but quickly, and let me know what you think of it. The book belongs to Kakasaheb. Be careful not to soil it. Don’t make any marks in it. The ones you will find in it are not made by me. We should never make any marks in other people’s books.

I got your letter yesterday and the slokas you have copied out. How can the slokas convey any meaning to you unless you spend some time to understand them? Shouldn’t we exercise the mind a little? The work I have given you so far is the least and the easiest. Today also I dreamt of you. What a sorry state. How nice it would be if I did not have to worry on your account!

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9347. Also C. W. 6622. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

505. LETTER TO JAYANTI N. PAREKH

September 22, 1936

CHI. JAYANTI,2

I could manage only today to read your letter and I am dictating this at once while spinning. You wrote the letter on your birthday. Live long and bring glory to your elders and to the country by your work. I have followed your argument about the batch and it is correct. But the batch was never disbanded; for those who have this faith, it still exists. But I must admit that there are very few who have this faith. I give you the freedom you now ask for. I would have liked to have a little talk with you before granting you this freedom, if only I had the time to send for you and meet you. That would be purely for my own satisfaction. I have had to forgo such satisfaction on several occasions before; so I can forgo it now. Do only what your inner voice tells you. In this alone lies your good. Only make sure that you rightly understand what the inner voice says. If the

1 A Gujarati novel by K. M. Munshi
2 An Ashram inmate who later became Communist

VOL. 69: 16 MAY, 1936- 19 OCTOBER, 1936
385 voice prompts a murderer to commit murder, a debauch to commit debauchery, or a thief to commit theft, we shall not regard it as the inner voice. Men of experience have therefore laid it down that he alone can have recourse to the inner voice who has acquired the ability to hear it. As men have often failed to understand this clearly, they have pillaged and plundered in the name of religion. However, I know I don’t have to explain all this to you. Write to me occasionally. I am in correspondence with several socialists, though not with our comrades from Gujarat. If I set out to seek such contacts on my own I would be overwhelmed by them. I reply to those who write to me, but at present I am curtailing even that kind of correspondence, as I desire as present to bury myself in Segaon and be forgotten. Even if this desire cannot be wholly fulfilled, should I not at least do all I can to realize it? And that is what I am doing. A certain amount of correspondence has therefore come to a stop.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6263

506. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 23, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I am trying to send you somebody. Frontier Gandhi is not sent out anywhere. So this will be rather difficult.

Do keep throwing out the names that occur to you. Why is it not possible to find out from the books what amount was sent by Sorabji? Durban has been urgently demanding it. Maybe Chhaganlal [Gandhi] will know and maybe Chhaganlal Joshi, too. The books are there. For the rest, anyone can look into them and find out. We don’t have so very many ledgers, do we? What is the difficulty?

I enclose a letter from Jaisukhlal. It contains complaints against Chhaganlal Joshi. I had written to him that he should allow me to show these complaints to Joshi. At last he has sent me the permission. But he has added that I should send the letter through you and obtain your opinion also. That is why I am sending you the letter. Do let me have your opinion and, unless you have some objection, show it to Joshi and ask him to send me his reply. Or I shall send it direct to

386 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Joshi if you so wish.

You may always take for granted thousands of blessings from me on your birthday. I have cherished many hopes of you. They have also borne fruit, and will further do so. But the real test will come when I am no more, won’t it? I have assumed that then, too, you will succeed.

I am reaching Ahmedabad on the 30th and from there I shall have to rush off to Nadiad the same day. My wish to see the elders before that is growing stronger and stronger. I shall therefore try and drop in if I can. I shall leave soon after receiving the blessings of the elders. There should be no fanfare. No one is to be informed. You should not expect me to do any other work. At the most I shall spend one night there. I shall not have all that time and I shall arrive in the morning and leave at night. For me this is nothing but a pilgrimage. You, too, should give up all thought of taking advantage of my presence for some other cause. Persons like Nanalal Joshi will of course know, and anyway Shuklasaheb will have to be informed. However, everyone should understand that my visit to Rajkot is not to be considered a visit at all. It is likely that Khan Saheb will accompany me, and you may take advantage of his presence then but don’t make any announcement in advance.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C. W. 8505. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

507. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

September 23, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

I have your letter. I do not wish to annoy you on account of Amtul Salaam. I am satisfied that you visited her.

It is certainly good that you have been using a mosquito-net. Do not take it for granted that you will remain free from fever in spite of taking all sorts of liberties with yourself. As for the studies, you should observe some restraint. Why should you strain your eyes at night after having studied the whole day?
I had forgotten to write about Saraswati. I shall enquire about her from Ramachandran and then let you know.

I expect you have been regularly writing to Devdas. Ba will be glad to have a little note from you. Did I tell you that Ba and Manu have gone to Devdas? Here at present we have two additions—Pyarelal and Nanavati. Lilavati continues to stay at Maganwadi.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 7306. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

508. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA
September 23, 1936

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Mahadev gave me your letter about Deka. I have read Deka’s letter. Fortunately Shankerlal too happens to be here. I have had a talk with him too. A copy of my letter¹ to Deka is enclosed from which you will see that you have no reason to worry about him. You must have got the letter I wrote to you some time back. I was sorry to read about Mother being unwell. I hope she is all right now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 2444

509. LETTER TO SUNDARLAL
September 23, 1936

MY DEAR SUNDARLAL,

You did well in writing to me this letter². I have not seen Maulana Abdul Haq’s statement. I saw only a portion of it. Please send me a copy of that statement.

¹ This is not traceable
² In the letter the addressee had regretted that the Hindi-Urdu controversy, which was mainly a literary affair, should have been given a communal shape. Comparing the grammar and idiom of the two he emphasized that they were fundamentally the same. Urdu and Hindi writers were both obstructing the formation and development of a common Hindustani language and confusing its grammar. He explained that neither “Hindi” nor “Urdu” could rightly denote this common language.
Whatever I have done in this connection, I have done with absolutely pure intentions. My position is exactly what it was in 1920. My efforts are directed towards the acceptance of the word. That is why I got the word ‘Hindustani’ passed by the Congress. I could not do so in the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan. Therefore, at Indore, I got the connotation of the word Hindi clarified. In the All-India Sahitya Sammelan I went one step further. My object was the same, viz., to give one common name to the two forms of the language as used by the Hindus and by the Mussalmans, as well as to make them one language in reality.

You have yourself written that the adoption of the name Urdu had its special reasons. I never meant to attribute motives for this adoption.

You have also accepted what I said with regard to grammar. That Hindi writers commit mistakes of another type does not disprove or falsify my statement.

The prevalent misunderstandings are bound to be removed, because there is absolutely no ground for them. I do not at all want to give up Urdu. I have sufficient regard for it. I attach sufficient value to it. I daily read from some Urdu work or other. I also write letters in Urdu to several Muslim sisters and brothers. I have patience enough.

I think I have cleared all your points. If there still remain some doubts, we shall see about them later. Even for writing this I could with difficulty snatch a few moments.

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.]

One thing more. The language of the sentences you have quoted is not mine. From where did you take them?

The Searchlight, 9-10-1936

---

1. At Nagpur on April 24 and 25, 1936; vide “Speech at Akhil Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad”, 24-4-1936
2. The original letter was in Hindi.
510. PREFACE TO “GITAPADARTHAKOSHA”

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 24, 1936

Kakasaheb has explained in his own foreword why this kosha, which was prepared twelve years ago and which has not come up to the required standard yet, is being published today.

This kosha is indeed necessary for those who are at all interested in the translation which has been published under my name. Maybe it will be useful to other students of the Gita as well. To them I would suggest that if they do not like the interpretations given in the Padarthakosha and prefer others, they should note these down in the book itself. By doing so, they will have a glossary of their own liking with very little effort. And if such students send me the interpretations of their choice, I shall be grateful.

The more I study the Gita, the more I am made aware of its uniqueness. For me, it is a spiritual dictionary. Whenever I am in doubt as to what I should or should not do, I fall back upon it, and so far it has never disappointed me. It is indeed a Kamadhenu. In the beginning, we recited one sloka a day, then two, then five, then a chapter a day, then a complete recitation in two weeks and, finally, in the last few years some of us have been able to do a complete recitation in seven days. And on particular days of the week the sound of particular chapters is heard around 4.30 a.m. Some—a very few—have learnt all the eighteen chapters by heart. The morning prayers include the chapters in the following order during the days of the week.

- Friday I, II
- Saturday III, IV, V
- Sunday VI, VII, VIII
- Monday IX, X, XI, XII
- Tuesday XIII, XIV, XV
- Wednesday XVI, XXII
- Thursday XVIII.

1 This appeared in the book under the title Request to Readers and also in Harijanbandhu, 25-10-1936, under the title “Gitarupi Kamadhenu”. A padarthakosha is a concordance as well as a glossary.
2 Gandhiji had prepared this Padarthakosha while in the Yeravda jail in 1922-24; vide “My Jail Experiences- XI”, 17-9-1924
3 Anasaktyoga; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 23-5-1935
4 Mythical cow that gave anything that was desired
Suffice it to say that there has been some deliberation behind this schedule. Our experience has been that this order facilitates understanding of the text.

It may well be asked why the recitation has to begin on a Friday. The reason for this is simply the following: For considerable length of time a complete recitation used to take fourteen days. In the Yeravda jail I thought of a seven-day recitation and the idea was put into effect on a Friday. In this way and since that day, the recitation week begins on a Friday.

There are two reasons why I mention the matter of complete recitation here: to show how far devotion to the Gita has taken some of us up to date and to indicate to the reader the way to encourage its study.

But we are not to rest content with merely reciting the Gita. It is a spiritual dictionary; it is a tremendous force for straightening the creases of the soul; it is the refuge of the afflicted; it is an awakener from stupor. Only those who have this faith can derive help from reciting the Gita. I do not in the least suggest that recitation of the Gita without an understanding of its meaning is by itself beneficial to a man. With sufficient effort a tame parrot can certainly be taught to memorize the Gita. But that is not going to bring the slightest merit either to the parrot or to its trainer.

The Gita is the living, life-giving immortal mother. The mother who suckled us will one day disappear and leave us in the lurch. We see countless mothers failing to protect their children from peril. But one who seeks the support of Mother Gita saves himself from the greatest peril. She is ever wakeful and she never lets one down. But a mother will not give one nourishment unless one asks for it. Mother Gita too gives nothing without our asking for it. Before taking anyone under her wing she tests him severely, expects whole-hearted devotion. The devotion, too, should not be dry. She wants single-minded devotion. Hence, she plainly refuses to help those who are not prepared to surrender their all to her.

The student of physics gains an insight into his subject only when he is crazy after it. Those who obtain M.A. and B.A. degrees read day and night, spend money and put themselves to great physical strain. From amongst those who make such efforts, only a few are successful at the first attempt. Those who fail do not despair but try again and again and only rest when they have passed. And in the end—?

For those who wish to drink the nectar that is the _Gita_, much greater effort than this should be and is required. But how many want to partake of that nectar? Even of those who feel the need, how many are prepared to make a strenuous effort? We know that the number of people devoted to the _Gita_ in the way I have suggested is negligible. Yet all agree that the _Gita_ is the essence of all the Upanishads. No Hindu should remain ignorant of it. At present, however, all religion has depreciated in value. This is not the occasion to go into the reasons for this. In this note of appeal all that I have tried to do on the occasion of the publication of this volume is to draw the attention of seekers to the gem that is the _Gita_ and to suggest how it can be put to good use. May it bear fruit.

Mohanadas Karamchand Gandhi

[From Gujarati]

_Gitapadarthakosha_, pp. iii to vi

511. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

September 24, 1936

My dear idiot,

This is a left hand effort just to give the right a little rest.
You do seem to be overworking yourself. You ought to find a way out.

The newspaper cutting is funny. They cannot live without lies. Presently they will reduce you to thin air ! ! ! Then you will fly about everywhere without any escort and I shall need provide no corner for you when you choose to waft yourself to Segaon. The only difficulty will be how to make you out—a mere airy nothing. Well, by the time you become nothing, I shall have grown a sixth sense enabling me to recognize beings or non-beings of the air.

Don’t you think that I have nothing else to do but to write nonsense. I wanted to chat with you. I don’t want to be always lecturing to you on your eczema. And the wretched cutting gave me the text for this letter.

The apples have come in again. Are they still from your
512. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

September 24, 1936

CHI. AMBUJAM,

Your fruit has been coming in regularly and it has been serving its purpose.

I returned to Segaon on Saturday. I am keeping well though still feeling weak. I don’t want to move out of the place if I can at all help it.

I see that Mrs. Rangasami has given you Rs. 2,000 for the Hindi work.

I hope Kichi is better and that Father and Mother are also keeping well. And how about you?

I am glad you are continuing the Ramayana.

Love.

BAPU

513. LETTER TO A. H. WEST

September 24, 1936

The Phoenix experiment for me was a life-work. And so, if you ever come to India, you will find me amid conditions simpler than in Phoenix. For the ideal has not only persisted but it bears today an ampler meaning.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

1 This is in Hindi.
514. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

September 24, 1936

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

I have your letter. Who knows when this will reach you?

Everything is going on smoothly here. Every day there is a churning, giving lots of butter. Today two and a half seers of curds yielded fourteen tolas of butter which gave ten tolas of ghee. Pyarelal has become an expert at it. Munnalal looks after the milk.

We had a heavy rain today.

Kishorelal’s letter is enclosed. He is all right now, though pretty weak.

Tell Maharaj that I got his letter.

Yes, give them a sound training in sanitation too.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1887

515. LETTER TO M. S. KELKAR

September 25, 1936

DEAR ICE,

What shall I say to you? I would love to have you by me and yet with all your belief in stars, I have no faith in your treatment. Your belief, too, that I gained by your treatment is not quite correct. After all your effort, I had at last to undergo an operation. You treated many patients in Sabarmati but except little Manu who had raw eggs, nobody derived any permanent relief. You have been trying all these many years to settle down to solid work but you still remain a rolling stone. I very much fear that you are self-deluded. It is high time you recognized your limitations. I know you have talent and energy. It grieves me to find it running to waste.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

1 Sant Tukdoji Maharaj; the addressee had gone to his Ashram at Mojafari to teach carding, spinning, etc.
2 The addressee was a specialist in ice treatment.
3 On January 20, 1919
516. LETTER TO BAL D. KALELKAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 25, 1936

CHI. BAL,

It is strange that you of all people should have this sudden craze for testimonials. However, if you want one here it is.¹

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2178

517. TESTIMONIAL TO BAL D. KALELKAR

September 25, 1936

Chi. Bal, the younger son of Kakasaheb Kalelkar, is well known to me. It may be said that he was brought up under my care at Sabarmati Ashram. He is very intelligent, sociable and cheerful. His ambition is to live a life of service after acquiring much knowledge. Chi. Bal rendered me excellent service during my second 21-day fast² and on other occasions. He is entitled to my blessings at all times.

MOWANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2177

518. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

September 25, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

Not only are you foolish, but you are also silly. Your letter is full of nonsense. It appears that in your view no man is good. I got your letter regarding Dr. Gilder. He did not open any of your Urdu letters nor has he read any. I read out your last letter to Mahadev as it contained nothing confidential. Doesn’t a parent have that freedom?

I had replied immediately to your letter regarding Dr. Gilder saying that if you needed to be examined by Dr. Gilder it could be arranged. Did you get my letter addressed c/o Bari, the Theosophical Lodge? I have not failed to reply to any of your letters. What can I do if letters fail to reach you? If you wish, I shall obtain a certificate of posting. Why do you make yourself unhappy for nothing?

¹ Vide the following item.
² From May 8 to May 29, 1933

Zohra and Shaukat are getting married today in Delhi. The ceremony will be entirely private.

Write to me regularly. You should write only in Urdu.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 349

519. LETTER TO TARABEHN N. MASHRUWALA

September 25, 1936

CHI. TARA,

What shall I say to you? I would not like to rebuke you but I cannot bear your not keeping your promises. Where is the account you were going to render every week? It is not even in the letter you write. Why are you so sluggish? When will you wake up?

Do you write to Dr. Ooman? You should have kept up the contact for the sake of your studies if for nothing else. If you have broken with him, I would recommend that you make it up with him. I have not given up hope. It is open to you to get from me fresh instructions from day to day. But you do not seem to be interested even in improving your health. Who can create this interest in you? It is our duty to preserve this largesse from God and make noble use of it. But it seems you have closed all your doors. This is not right. You have strength, a desire to serve, candour and purity. But there is also in you something—call it obstinacy or stupidity or some other failing—that does not let your potentialities flower. It would be a good thing for you to find out that shortcoming and resolutely remove it. Open up your mind, which you have locked.

I got the yarn. Congratulations to those who participated in the spinning. I trust your parents are doing well. Do you make use of Oommen’s book or his box?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7528. Also C.W. 5004. Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala
520. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

September 25, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

You shouldn’t be in a hurry to come to Segaon. You have as yet not even acquired a command over your handwriting. Ask yourself whether you can live at peace with Munnalal, Balwantsinha and Mirabehn. At present we have perfect peace here and there are no quarrels to annoy me. I tremble at the thought of a threat to this peace. So think calmly and tell me yourself. Meanwhile, you are already busy with the work there. You have peace. Mahadev gets your full help. He needs that help. Therefore it seems you are in the right place. You will not take this to mean that I do not at all want to have you in Segaon. I do wish to have you here, but not at the cost of any threat to peace. Even from here I do try to guide you. Do you expect anything more? You should patiently consider whether you yourself would be happy here. Do not encroach on Mahadev’s time for this. Do the thinking yourself and write to me what you feel.

I hope your leg is all right now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9348. Also C.W. 6623. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

521. LETTER TO GOPINATH

September 25, 1936

BHAI GOPINATHJI,

... 2 Now tell me if there is in the Ayurvedic system any medicine for malaria as efficacious as quinine. Which medicine is definitely more effective than the allopathic drugs? In the villages, in spite of my strong inclination to the contrary, I have to take

---

1 Editor of Arogya Darpana, a Hindi journal advocating Ayurvedic system of medicine; the letter was originally published in the November 1936 issue of the journal.

2 Omissions as in the source recourse to quinine, soda-bicarb, potassium permanganate and tincture iodine . . . .

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Gujarati, 3-1-1937

522. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA
September 25, 1936

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

It is only natural for you to grieve over your father’s death. What you write about [the devoted] Hindu [wife] is perfectly right. You must of course console your mother.

The question of giving up the effort to observe brahmacharya does not at all arise. Mother Gita assures us that “no well-doer meets with a sad end”⁴. You may certainly fast on Saturdays if you find it beneficial.

Consider carefully whatever you decide to do.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4289

523. LETTER TO SHRIMAN NARAYAN AGRAWAL
September 25, 1936

BHAJ SHRIMAN,

I read your Naye Yugka Raga. I liked the poems. Your purpose is clear and pure. But I do not consider myself qualified to express any opinion about its poetic quality. Only poets can judge whether your work deserves to be published.

Blessings from
BAPU

---

¹ Omissions as in the source
² Illegible in the source
³ ibid
⁴ Bhagavad Gita, VI. 40
How much time I spent over writing this! I didn’t know what to write.

[From Hindi]

_Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad_, p. 299

524. THE LAW OF OUR BEING

_The Statesman_ has devoted a reasoned article to the argument advanced by me in reply to its criticism of Canon Sheppard’s war against war. In that article a very clever attempt has been made to dispute the whole of the position taken up by me.

The writer says that whilst the _Bhagavad Gita_ assists him, it does not assist the terrorist. Once you admit the lawfulness of the use of physical force for purposes other than the benefit of the person against whom it is used, as in the case of a surgeon against his patient, you cannot draw an arbitrary line of distinction. The _Mahabharata_, of which the _Gita_ is only a tiny chapter, describes in gruesome detail a night slaughter of the innocents which, but for our recent experiences of our civilized war, would be considered unbelievable in actual practice. The grim fact is that the terrorists have in absolute honesty, earnestness and with cogency used the _Gita_, which some of them know by heart, in defence of their doctrine and policy. Only they have no answer to my interpretation of the _Gita_, except to say that mine is wrong and theirs is right. Time alone will show whose is right. The _Gita_ is not a theoretical treatise. It is a living but silent guide whose directions one has to understand by patient striving.

The _Statesman_ writer next likens Canon Sheppard’s position to that of Arjuna. Surely this is a faulty analogy, hastily drawn. Arjuna was the Commander-in-Chief of the Pandava forces. He became suddenly paralysed when he contemplated the awful scene before him. As general he knew exactly what he had to do. He knew that he had to war against his cousins. His paralysis was due to momentary weakness. He could not have given up the task before him without creating the utmost confusion and disorder, and bringing disgrace on himself and his innumerable friends and followers. He was bound to engage himself and his followers in the terrible slaughter for which he had trained himself and them. It is profitless to conjecture what would have happened if non-violence in thought, word and deed had suddenly but really possessed him.

1 Vide “God of Love, Not War”, 5-9-1936

That rich possession, let us hope, has come to Dick Sheppard and his companions. Anyway, so far as I know, his position is wholly different from Arjuna’s. He is no general of an army drawn up in battle array. He makes no distinction between kinsmen and others. For him man is man, no matter where he is born of what his skin is, or what he calls himself. After having prayerfully searched through the book which for him is the Book of Life, he has been driven to the conclusion that he may not hurt his fellowmen for gain for himself or his country, and that therefore he must himself abstain from participation, direct or indirect, in war. He naturally takes the next step of preaching to his neighbours the doctrine of peace or love and goodwill towards men without exception. This is a position which Arjuna never took up.

But the Statesman writer has many strings to his bow. And the strongest is his denial of non-violence or love as the law of the human race. If love or non-violence be not the law of our being, the whole of my argument falls to pieces, and there is no escape from a periodical recrudescence of war, each succeeding one outdoing the preceding one in ferocity. I cannot undertake, and least of all through a newspaper article written during moments snatched from the daily routine, to prove that love is the source and end of life. But I venture to make some relevant suggestions which may pave the way for an understanding of the Law. All the Teachers that ever lived have preached that law with more or less vigour. If Love was not the law of life, life would not have persisted in the midst of death. Life is a perpetual triumph over the grave. If there is a fundamental distinction between man and beast, it is the former’s progressive recognition of the law and its application in practice to his own personal life. All the saints of the world, ancient and modern, were each according to his light and capacity a living illustration of that supreme Law of our Being. That the brute in us seems so often to gain an easy triumph is true enough.-That, however, does not disprove the law. It shows the difficulty of practice. How should it be otherwise with a law which is as high as truth itself? When the practice of the law becomes universal, God will reign on earth as He does in Heaven. I need not be reminded that earth and heaven are in us. We know the earth, we are strangers to the Heaven within us. If it is allowed that for some the practice of love is possible, it is arrogance not to allow even the possibility of its practice in all the others. Not very remote ancestors of ours indulged in cannibalism and many other practices which we would today call loathsome. No doubt in those days too there were Dick Sheppards who must have been laughed at and possibly pilloried for preaching (to them) the strange doctrine of refusing to eat fellow men. Modern science is replete with illustrations of the seemingly impossible having become possible within living memory. But the victories of physical science would be nothing against the victory of the Science of Life which is summed up in Love which is the Law of our Being. I know that it cannot be proved by argument. It shall be proved by persons living it in their lives in utter disregard of consequences to themselves. There is no real gain without sacrifice. And since demonstration of the Law of Love is the realest gain, sacrifice too must be the greatest required.

The rest of the argument advanced by the Statesman writer in refutation of mine needs no answer if the Law is recognized. His argument is valid if the Law is denied or doubted.

One point may, however, be dealt with in passing. The writer seems to pooh-pooh the idea of honour derived from individual and national gain. He says: “What is this honour that would be left to a nation that voluntarily destroyed itself?” There is no question for one of self-destruction, voluntary or otherwise. But there is of “anation allowing itself to be destroyed” for the sake of preserving its honour, as would be the case, say, if Indians died to the man, without lifting a finger, in their determination not to surrender to the will of an invading host. A woman defends her own honour and that of her sex, when she non-violently refuses to the point of death the advances of a rake. Young Prahlad non-violently risked his life to defend his honour, which consisted in his persistence in declaring his belief in God. Jesus defended his honour and that of man when he preferred the death of a felon to the denial of his faith.

Harijan, 26-9-1936

---

1 Slip for ‘devoid of’; vide “A Correction”, 10-10-1936.
2 Slip for ‘me’; ibid
525. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 26, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT.

If the unbreakable thermos comes, I shall not return it. As I destroy all your letters, I have inadvertently destroyed the Mahmudabad address. Please repeat it on a separate sheet.

Surely it is ‘idiotic’ to pass summer in Simla merely because you possess a house there. You ought to select another summer resort where you can really recoup yourself.

Remember one of the attributes of non-violence. It seldom speaks, it simply and silently acts. It appeals not to the intellect, it pierces the heart. The more it speaks and argues, the less effective it becomes. Therefore do not hesitate to let your case be lost by default. Apparent defeat may be the hour of victory. Speech is often a sign of weakness.

You will please give a trial to meat if Shummy says it is necessary. Your vegetarianism will be on surer ground for your yielding now, if yielding becomes a duty.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3594. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6403

526. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

September 26, 1936

MY DEAR KU.,

Jajuji has sent in his resignation to be presented to you, if I would agree, for submission to the Board. I am not quite happy over the prospect. Though J. is quite capable of adjusting himself to new conditions, the manner...¹ to leave. ² do not know that the resignation will be in the best interest of the Sangh. I will like you to examine the situation from that standpoint and that alone. Just think the thing over with Bharatan and let me have your opinion.

¹ Faded in the source
² ibid

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Meanwhile I am holding the paper. I am asking J., too, to consider the question from that point of view.

From a photostat: G.N. 10111

527. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

September 26, 1936

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. The Bhangis’ problem seems to have been solved satisfactorily. I am returning the letter which you want.

I am surprised about Chandulal'. I have sent him the relevant extract from your letter and asked for his reply.

I hope your work is going on smoothly now. It must. Very few workers are left now.

I am hoping to meet you all. I only wish to pay a visit of duty. There should be, therefore, no publicity.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5540

528. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

September 26, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I myself went through your letter written in pencil. I just got your wire and am sending a letter to Dr. Shah. You may show it to Dr. Jivraj if Dr. Shah is away. Send me a wire if you need anything.

You are foolish. You make yourself unhappy. You deliberately suspect people. Why did you have to go away when you had fever? Why don’t you write a note to Kanti and ask him to come? At the moment I don’t have the courage to keep you or anybody else in Segaon. Let me settle down in peace.

Why don’t you listen to me?

What do you propose to do if Bari goes out of town?

1 Chandulal Becharbhai Patel who was then Education Officer of the Gondal State. The reference is to the segregation of Harijans at public places.
Shall I make some other arrangement for you in Bombay itself? Who are there with you in the house?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 350

529. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

September 26, 1936

Bhai Munshi,

Kakasaheb’s acquaintance with you has been growing and he is having the opportunity of reading your works. He read Prithvivallabh and has pressed me to read it and give my opinion on it. I read it four days ago and now send my opinion direct to you. Kakasaheb will read it. You had already sent me some of your books when I was in jail where, however, I could read none of them. You had even then asked for my opinion. I read Prithvivallabh with interest. Not one character appealed to me. I did not at all wish to be like Munj. Why so? It would not be quite in the fitness of things for you to say that you delineate the characters as they are. Some at least in this wide and varied world are likely to be noble, free from hypocrisy, loyal. Mrinal you reduced to pieces, and poor Vilas melted like wax before Rasanidhi. Could it be that men are so cunning and that even a forty-year-old, homely and self-restrained woman would fall for a man’s love talk and suggestive gestures? What does a man read for? For mere enjoyment? And that too so low? Kalidasa wrote nothing of the kind. Shakespeare made no such impression on me. From them I learn something. Why not from you? Personally you appear to me nice and pleasant. I am drawn to you. I have hopes of getting much from you both. How did I fail to get a glimpse of your personality in Prithvivallabh which is regarded—or isn’t it—your best work? I have little hope that Kaka can solve this puzzle for me. You alone can do it. There is of course no question in this which calls for a reply immediately.

Now allow me to have a little fun. Your last sentence is somewhat like this: Crushed under the elephant’s foot, Munj’s body lay flat like a rotlo¹. The word rotlo was all right; but did it ever occur

¹ Cake made from millet or other coarse grain to you that the body could not be turned into a rotlo? It may do to say ‘turned into chhundo’. The body can be turned into *murabbo*¹, into *churna*², but it can never be turned into a rotlo.

_Blessings from_
 BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7606. Courtesy: K.M. Munshi

---

530. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

September 26, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

You have no reason to be irregular. I definitely wish to learn of your condition even before I have recovered my strength.

I am regaining my strength. I have at present reduced my food intake. I take about a pound and a half of milk. Among fruits I take mosambis, prunes and occasionally chikoos or some other fruit. I take plenty of rest.

You can find half an hour for a hip-bath whatever work you may be doing. You must. Nor would it do to be unmindful of your food. You will be bed-ridden if you are careless in this regard.

I had a good talk with Father. It was decided that Jayaprakash should get Rs. 50. I take it he will himself explain things to you better. Mirabehn is of course with me. She is improving. The rains may be said to have stopped now.

_Blessings from_
 BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3482

---

1. A preparation made by crushing the ingredients
2. Jelly
3. Powder
531. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 27, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

If you do not chew garlic well, it is likely to pass out undigested. It must therefore be well pounded. You may take it the last thing before retiring in an ounce of dahi or at the table.

You must send me a copy of your rural broadcast.

Khan Saheb wants me specially to thank you for all you are doing for Mehrtaj and Mariam. I am glad they are coming under your influence.

Does Navin ever write to you?

Too late to say more.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3744. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6900

532. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

September 27, 1936

CHI. AMTUL,

You are hard to please. I have written to you daily. The first letter was sent, as instructed by you, care of the Postmaster and the later ones to the Easter Villa address. Am I to blame if you don’t get the letters? And is it my fault that I cannot do something beyond my power? Tell me now how I can satisfy you.

I see no need at present to consult Dr. Gilder. It would be right on our part to go to another after we have tried one. Nonetheless, if you wish I shall write to Dr. Gilder too. You may consult Dr. Jivraj if he is available and anyone else you think fit.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 351
533. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

September 27, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your postcard. I do not at all like your having to suffer, but what am I to do? Do you take anyone with you when you go to Dr. Shah’s? Does he carefully attend to you? Give me the full details regularly. Is Bari still there, or has he left? I cannot help it if you make yourself unhappy.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 352

534. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

September 27, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

If I were to call you after you had copied out the whole of the Gita, I would ask you to copy out a hundred slokas a day and be done away with that excuse. What I am thinking about is the threat to my peace. Nor do I say that the fault lies with you alone. I have made the utmost demand on you because you wish to stay with me purely for training yourself.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9581. Also C.W. 6553. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

535. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

September 27, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending with this Gadodia’s cheque for Rs. 200, which for the present is to be credited to the Segaon account. You will be sending it to Jamnalalji’s, I suppose?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11485
BHAII LAKSHMI NARAYANJI,

I am very happy to see that you are both taken up with hydrot-herapy. Let this always continue. You have found a pure altruistic activity in which both of you have such great faith and I see the greatest good where the energies of you both are equally applied. I continued my morning hip-bath even through the attack of malaria, and my walks too. The hipbath still continues though the hour has been shifted to ten o’clock. After the morning prayers I go to sleep and I cannot manage a walk after the hip-bath at 10 o’clock. Anyway I do go for walks twice a day. I cannot take friction-bath because due to lack of practice the foreskin cannot be drawn back in the required manner. I had made an attempt on receiving your first letter. The skin is intact and I used to take friction-bath years ago. I have not yet started having the abdominal mud-pack at bedtime. Formerly I used to try mud-packs on many occasions and now I shall try it for your sake if for no other reason. If I come across an honest naturopath, I would certainly keep him with me and popularize the treatment. I have not so far found such a person. Most of the hydropaths in India have reduced their treatment to a means of making money. There are very few like your Moulvi Saheb, and they cannot give up their occupations. What can we do under such circumstances? I have the cheque for Rs. 200. I shall see how it can be utilized in Segaon. Three-fourths of the Segaon village is owned by Jamnalalji and he has authorized me to spend for the villagers’ benefit whatever returns he gets from the property and I think the amount is sufficient. Hence I cannot tell you just now how and when I shall be able to use your Rs. 200 for the welfare of the people of Segaon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5624
537. LETTER TO MARGARETE SPIEGEL

SEGHAON, WARDHA,
September 28, 1936

CHI. AMALA,

You have made such progress in Gujarati as to tempt me to correct the few mistakes you have made.

I am quite well. I wish you could say as much about yourself.

I do hope you will soon have good news about and from Mother.

You must not stint yourself about food. You should eat plenty of fruit and salads.

The friend you have in mind is all right.

Love.

BAPU

Spiegel Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

538. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGHAON, WARDHA,
September 28, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Herewith the message. Tell Mother¹ that I am longing as a child to rest my head in her lap and Father’s². It is unthinkable that I should go to Ahmedabad and not see them. So take it that, God willing, I shall be there. The date will be around 27th or thereabouts.

Your purpose could be met if someone reaches there between the 2nd and the 12th. I am considering whom I can send. You may send me a wire if you have some other names in your mind.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8506. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ Devkunwar Gandhi
² Khushalchand Gandhi
539. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

September 28, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending three articles with this. You may delete from the articles anything that you do not like. I wrote out what I had long been contemplating. I took up my pen at 8 and laid it down at 10. I took up the file at 7.30. It took me half an hour reading and rearranging the matter from Hardikar, drawing out the substance of Raja’s writing and trimming the one referring to the Madurai judge.

Narandas does need some public figure. Whom may we send? Can you think of somebody? How about Kaka, Jajuji, Kumarapp, Lakshmidas, Malkani? What about Bapa? Have you any woman in view? I would send no one but Mira if she were well.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Post the letter to Magan by air mail.\(^1\)

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11486

540. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

September 28, 1936

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

You must have received my letter referring to Deka. I am all right. Amtul Salaam is not here. She stayed for two or three days at Maganwadi but never at Segaon. She is now in Bombay. I had already read about your mother in your letter to Mahadev and I hope she is now better. How is your health?

I suppose you get my letters regularly.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2443

---

\(^1\) Vide “Remnant of Barbarism”, 3-10-1936

\(^2\) The letter to Maganlal P. Mehta, however, is not traceable.

\(^3\) Vide “Letter to Brijkrishna Chandiwala”, 23-9-1936
MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your two letters at the same time.

Khan Saheb is delighted that you are giving all that attention to the girls.

You should yield to Shummy now and take what meat he wants you to. There will be grace in your yielding now. There will be little or none if you yield when you are driven to it. And there will be no restraint possible. That you took very little meat when you did is no argument to prove that it will produce no effect in your case. Since you have no religious objection, I would like you to listen to me and straightway tell Shummy to prescribe what he likes. You must get rid of the eczema before you begin to move about.

I see that you can’t come to me in December. Let us see what is possible in January and February. Of course you are to be in Faizpur at the time of the Congress if you are able to go to Ahmedabad. When do you descend to Jullundur?

The idea of building a separate cottage for yourself in Simla is a chimera. If you had one, you would be torn to pieces. You are physically unfit to have an eternal round of guests. Mira is free from fever but is not herself still. But she will be quite well in a few days. I am getting stronger though slowly.

You will persevere with the hip-baths and try the sitzbath too. I have described the latter to you. Sit on a stool with the legs outside the water which should be level with the stool and then gently wash the genitals with a smooth towel. It is supposed to work wonders. You should take this separately.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3745. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6901
542. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

September 29, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I know nothing about my birthday. I see it only as the Charkha Jayanti. The reason why you take an interest in observing the day is not that you are my kinsman but so that the charkha which is as dear to you as it is to me may gain impetus in your vicinity. In the sluggish atmosphere that prevails today this is an arduous, maybe even a rather dreary task. But faith can make a difficult task easy and a dreary task interesting. May your faith make the people around you see the power of the charkha.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8507. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

543. LETTER TO J.P. BHANSALI

September 29, 1936

CHI. BHANSALI,

It is very good indeed that following Mahadev’s advice you gave up the idea of coming to me and hiding yourself as in a cave. Your cave is there. Listen to another bit of advice. For the boil in your arm-pit, perhaps plain earth will not suffice. You should let ordinary poultice be applied to it. I see no reason why it should not maturate.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

544. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM K. JERAJANI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 29, 1936

BHAJ KAKUBHAI,

You have given me good news. Samples of the exercise books are good. It will be all to the good if people do not forget khadi.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10838. Courtesy: Purushottam K. Jerajani

_545. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM_

_SEGAON, WARDHA
September 30, 1936_

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

Your letter is full of fancies. You listen neither to your brothers nor to me. Why a cottage? Why a visit of Ooty? You ought to improve your health in Bomaby. One’s mother’s home is the true cottage. I would have to hang my head if Dr. Shah did for money what he would not do on the strength of my letter. I advise you to accept his treatment and understand that he does what he thinks right. After the nose has been attended to, you may certainly take homoeopathic treatment if you want to.

Your Urdu letters have certainly not gone astray. I have of course replied to them. Mehrtaj will pursue her studies at Vakil’s school there. Lali has gone to the High School at Panchgani. All will go well if you keep up your patience. The Rajkot climate is good if you should choose to go there. Balkrishna, who is staying there for the present, finds it good. I went through your letter myself.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 353

_546. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR_

_September 30, 1936_

CHI. LILA,

There is no end to your _lila_. Yesterday you wrote, “We shall talk it out when we meet,” and today you write to me that there is no letter from me. And what a bad hand you have written! It is all right if

---

1 Play, sport, especially of God

VOL. 69: 16 MAY, 1936- 19 OCTOBER, 1936 413
you do not go to Rajkot just now. Go there when we go to Kashi and from Rajkot join us at Ahmedabad when we leave the place. Isn’t that what you want?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11487

547. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH
[About September 1936]

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I cannot understand why there was no news yesterday.

Hearty congratulations to both of you for the termination of mutual non-co-operation. This news has removed a heavy burden of anxiety from my head. Let the co-operation grow from day to day. I hope to get much work from both of you.

I will inquire from the doctor why he did not come yesterday.

More kudos to Balwant Singh for progress in the production of butter. It is one more step forward that Prahlad, Govind and Rajaram have started taking butter-milk there. Everything will be all right if we hold our patience. I will inquire if anyone needs butter-milk here. I will procure the Ramayana for you. You need not try to secure it.

Now I know that letters and newspapers were sent from Maganwadi yesterday also but they could not be forwarded from the bungalow. It would be better if someone brought them here. It seems necessary to spend some money over this arrangement. Now it is exactly five o’clock. Neither Sadashiv nor Prahlad has arrived. Sadashiv has already taken letters, and newspapers from Maganwadi.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 8595

---

1 From the contents, it is evident that the letter was written about this time; vide “Letter to Munnalal G. Shah”, 9-9-1936
548. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

October 1, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I was glad to have your little note saying the toothache was over. I shall anxiously await the Dentist’s report.

The unbreakable thermos has arrived after all. Let us see when that too shares the fate of the others.

More than half the apples were quite uneatable. Evidently they have now become too delicate for transport. Is there any fun in wasting money like that? Why not put to my credit all the money you thus save. It may then be used for buying good fruit as and when needed. That is a sporting offer that should appeal even to an idiot ! ! !

I dare not give you more time just now as I have to attend to Nanavati1 who is laid up with fever whose kind I do not yet know.

Love

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3746. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6902

549. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

October 1, 1936

CHI. PREMA,

I have both your letters. Yesterday I got your last letter. Day before yesterday I had to write ‘no’ to Achyut Patwardhan. Narandas had invited me for Rentiya Baras.2 But I could not accept it. Would you then wish me to make an exception in your case? You must understand that from the point of view of our ideals it is good for Khan Saheb to refrain, for the present, from going out for public speeches, etc. Slowly we are getting to know each other. Am I then relieved?

1 Amritlal Nanavati
2 Gandhiji’s birthday according to the Vikram calendar
I will be able to answer your earlier letter only at leisure. At the moment I have too much work.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Try to find some women worker; persuade Khurshedbehn.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3788

550. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

October 1, 1936

CHI. MARY,

Just before retiring, this is merely to acknowledge your two love letters giving me very cheerful titbits.

My love to you both.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6068. Also C.W. 3398. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

551. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[Before October 2, 1936] ¹

CHI. MAHADEV.

I didn’t at all like your returning after having arrived so late in the day. However, I did not have the courage to insist on your staying over, with the result that both of you were quite exhausted and reached at 11 in the night. I would not wish to ask anyone to stop over and sleep for the night in this weather. Nanavati’s fever persists. It is not malaria; it may be typhoid. There is no need to send a doctor from there; I hope to cope with it.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11497

¹ Vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 2-10-1936
552. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,

October 2, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I am replying to your letter as soon as I have got it. I enclose a letter\(^1\) also to Vadud\(^2\), from which you will see what my advice is in the matter. I do not write more as I am in a hurry. You should act thoughtfully in your interest. You have a number of ailments. The trouble with your nails requires immediate care. It is better to follow Dr. Shah’s advice regarding your nose. If, however, you wish to undergo homoeopathic treatment, take that too there. There are many doctors in Ahmedabad and also in Rajkot, no doubt. I would suggest Rajkot if you definitely do not like Wardha. At Rajkot you will be happy and have peace of mind. The question that always troubles me is how to bring you peace and happiness.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 354

553. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

October 2, 1936

CHI. LILA,

You have seen how from being Lilavati you have become Lila. Now before you become Lili I have to be worthy of it. If I were, I would not have to argue with you. It is difficult to become a kinsman without being a blood relation. About paper you may do as you think fit.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9582. Also C.W. 6564. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

\(^{1}\) The letter is not traceable.

\(^{2}\) Addressee’s nephew
554. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,
October 2, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

You may bring in a doctor, if you wish, to put your mind at rest. It would be good if Amtul’s letter goes today. The rest when you come. At present Rajendra Babu and others have gathered here. Nanavati is still not free from fever but he is cheerful.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11489

555. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 2, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

Did you find the Kavishar judgment in the Times? Do they send newspapers to Navin?—Harijan, Harijanbandhu and The Hindustan Times? I think Kanti too has asked for them.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11490

556. REMNANT OF BARBARISM

We know by painful experience of what is daily happening in India that there are husbands enough who regard their wives as their property like their cattle or household furniture, and therefore think they have the right to beat them as they would their cattle. But I was unprepared for a judicial endorsement of the brutal habit till a friend put into my hands a newspaper cutting reporting a decision of the Sessions Judge of Madura recognizing the legal right of a husband of beating his wife. Fortunately an English Judge on going through the calendar detected this extraordinary Judgment of the Madura Sessions Judge and issued notice to the accused husband to show cause. In due course the case was heard by Justices Pandurang Row and K. S.
Menon, whose judgement I make apology for quoting below:

... It is perhaps enough to say that though the learned Judge may be entitled to have his own views on the subject in a private capacity, yet he was not justified in laying down the law in this manner from his seat on the Bench declaring that the husband has the right of punishing his wife by beating her for impudence or impertinence. No such right is recognized by the Indian Penal Code and wife-beating is not one of the exceptions in the chapter of 'General Exceptions'.

One can easily imagine the serious consequences of such a declaration being made from the Bench by a Sessions Judge unless the declaration is declared to be wrong and unfounded by this court. That is the reason why we thought it necessary to state in unmistakable terms that the learned Sessions Judge’s declaration of the rights of husbands in this regard has no foundation, so that no one may rely upon that in future as any justification or excuse for beating wives.

It has to be confessed with shame that even educated husbands are not free from the belief in the right of husbands to treat their wives as chattels and beat them whenever they feel the impulse to do so. Would that this judgment would show them that such treatment of wives is a remnant of barbarism.

_Harijan, 3-10-1936_

557. TEACHING OF HINDUISM

Referring to my recent articles on the English peace movement led by Canon Sheppard, a friend writes:

I hold the view that independently of the context of the _Gita_ and the preliminary conversation between Arjuna and Shri Krishna, Hinduism does not stand decisively for non-violence in regard to organized invasion. It would be straining too much to interpret all out best scriptures in this way. Hinduism no doubt holds the spirit of compassion and love as the very highest duty for man.

But it does not preach what you or the pacifists preach, and it is no good straining everything into an allegory for this object.

---

1 Of which only extracts are reproduced here.

I have admitted in my introduction to the Gita known as Anasaktiyoga that it is not a treatise on non-violence nor was it written to condemn war. Hinduism as it is practised today, or has even been known to have ever been practised, has certainly not condemned war as I do. What, however, I have done is to put a new but natural and logical interpretation upon the whole teaching of the Gita and the spirit of Hinduism. Hinduism, not to speak of other religions, is ever evolving. It has no one scripture like the Quran or the Bible. Its scriptures are also evolving and suffering addition. The Gita itself is an instance in point. It has given a new meaning to karma, sannyasa, yajna, etc. It has breathed new life into Hinduism. It has given an original rule of conduct. Not that what the Gita has given was not implied in the previous writings, but the Gita put these implications in a concrete shape. I have endeavoured in the light of a prayerful study of the other faiths of the world and, what is more, in the light of my own experiences in trying to live the teaching of Hinduism as interpreted in the Gita, to give an extended but in no way strained meaning to Hinduism, not as buried in its ample scriptures, but as a living faith speaking like a mother to her aching child. What I have done is perfectly historical. I have followed in the footsteps of our forefathers. At one time they sacrificed animals to propitiate angry gods. Their descendants, but our less remote ancestors, read a different meaning into the word ‘sacrifice’ and they taught that sacrifice was meant to be of our baser self, to please not angry gods but the one living God within. I hold that the logical outcome of the teaching of the Gita is decidedly for peace at the price of life itself. It is the highest aspiration of the human species.

The Mahabharata and the Ramayana, the two books that millions of Hindus know and regard as their guides, are undoubtedly allegories as the internal evidence shows. That they most probably deal with historical figures does not affect my proposition. Each epic describes the eternal duel that goes on between the forces of darkness and of light. Anyway, I must disclaim any intention of straining the meaning of Hinduism or the Gita to suit any preconceived notions of mine. My notions were an outcome of a study of the Gita, Ramayana, Mahabharata, Upanishads, etc.

Harijan, 3-10-1936

1 Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 23-5-1935
Thus writes a young man:

You want everyone to become moral in order to change the world. I do not exactly know what you mean by morality—whether you confine it to matters sexual, or whether it covers the whole field of human conduct. I suspect the former, because I do not see you pointing out to your capitalist and landlord friends the great injustice and harm they are doing by making huge profits at the expense of labourers and tenants, while you are never tired of castigating young men and women for their moral lapses in sexual matters and upholding before them the virtues of celibacy. You claim to know the mind of Indian youth. I do not claim to represent anybody, but as a solitary young man I beg to challenge your claim. You do not seem to know through what environment the modern middle-class youth is passing, what with long spells of unemployment, crushing social customs and traditions, and temptations of co-education! It is all a conflict between the old and the new ideas, resulting usually in the defect and misery of youth. I humbly request you to be kind and compassionate to the youth and not to judge them by your puritanic standards of morality. After all, I think every act, when it is performed with mutual consent and mutual love, is moral whether it is performed within marriage or without. Since the invention of contraceptives the sexual basis of the institution of marriage has been knocked down. It has now become an institution mainly for the protection and welfare of children. You will, perhaps, be shocked at these ideas. I would here venture to ask you not to forget your own youth when judging the present-day youth. You were an over-sexed individual given to excessive indulgence, which seems to have created in you a sort of disgust towards the sexual act and hence your asceticism and the idea of sin. Compared to you, I think many young men of today are better in this respect.

This is from a typical letter. To my knowledge the writer has gone through several changes even during the past three months that I have known him. He is still passing through a crisis. The extract quoted is from a long letter which together with many of his other writings he would gladly have me publish. But what I have quoted just represents the attitude of many a youth.

Of course my sympathies are with young men and young women. I have a vivid recollection of the days of my own youth. And it is because of my faith in the youth of the country that I am never tired of dealing with problems that face them.

For me morals, ethics and religion are convertible terms. A moral life without reference to religion is like a house built upon sand. And religion divorced from morality is like ‘sounding brass’ good only for making a noise and breaking heads. Morality includes truth, ahimsa and continence. Every virtue that mankind has ever practised is referable to and derived from these three fundamental virtues. Non-violence and continence are again derivable from Truth, which for me is God.

Without continence a man or women is undone. To have no control over the senses is like sailing in a rudderless ship bound to break to pieces on coming in contact with the very first rock. Hence my constant insistence on continence. My correspondent is right in saying in effect that the coming in of contraceptives has changed the ideas about sexual relations. If mutual consent makes a sexual act moral whether within marriage or without, and by parity of reasoning even between members of the same sex, the whole basis of sexual morality is gone and nothing but ‘misery and defeat’ awaits the youth of the country. Many young men and women are to be found in India who would be glad be free from the craving for mutual intercourse in whose grip they find themselves. This craving is stronger than the strongest intoxicant which has ever enslaved man. It is futile to hope that the use of contraceptives will be restricted to the mere regulation of progeny. There is hope for a decent life only so long as the sexual act is definitely related to the conception of precious life. This rules out of court perverted sexuality and to a lesser degree promiscuity.
Divorce of the sexual act from its natural consequence must lead to hideous promiscuity and condonation, if not endorsement, of unnatural vice.

Since my own experiences are relevant to the consideration of the sex problem, let me just warn the reader who has not read my autobiographical chapters against drawing the conclusion that my correspondent has drawn about my sins of indulgence. Whatever over-indulgence there was with me, it was strictly restricted to my wife. And I was living in a big joint family where there was hardly any privacy except for a few hours at night. I awoke to the folly of indulgence for the sake of it even when I was twenty-three years old, and decided upon total brahmacharya in 1899, i.e., when I was thirty years old. It is wrong to call me an ascetic. The ideals that regulate my life are presented for acceptance by mankind in general. I have arrived at

---

1 However, Gandhiji actually, took the vow in 1906; vide “An Autobiography” sub-title “Brahmacharya- I” them by gradual evolution. Every step was thought out, well-considered, and taken with the greatest deliberation. Both my continence and non-violence were derived from personal experience and became necessary in response to the calls of public duty. The isolated life I had to lead in South Africa whether as a householder, legal practitioner, social reformer or politician, required, for the due fulfilment of these duties, the strictest regulation of sexual life and a rigid practice of non-violence and truth in human relations, whether with my own countrymen or with the Europeans. I claim to be no more than an average man with less than average ability. Nor can I claim any special merit for such non-violence or continence as I have been able to reach with laborious research. I have not the shadow of a doubt that any man or woman can achieve what I have, if he or she would make the same effort and cultivate the same hope and faith. Work without faith is like an attempt to reach the bottom of a bottomless pit.

_Harijan_, 3-10-1936

559. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

_October 3, 1936_

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I was delighted to hear that you were examined by Dr. Deshmukh even though it was after daylight. Let us hope you will profit by his prescription.

S[hummyy]’s antipathy to nature-cure is either a simple pose or simply due to prejudice born of ignorance. Ansari always appreciated it.

How I would love to have you with me even in your bad health and nurse you to good health! But you must not be impatient. No one can get out of his or her limitations whether external or internal without patient and persistent striving.

I fear your fretting over this eczema is due to the temporary disfigurement. What vanity, if my surmise is right. Your will certainly have to come to me to shed it. And here at least you won’t be conscious of the spots or any such thing. Here you won’t have the society of your peers. Anyway this continual brooding over the ailment worries me. I want you to be above it. Can you do it? Make a brave effort and forget the wretched thing.

Of course, when I say nothing about myself you should know that I am well. But I have a sick companion to nurse. He is Nanavati—a first-class worker and good singer. He was in charge of the kitchen in Maganwadi. He seems to have a mild attack of typhoid. He is simply on orange juice or honey and hot water. He has hip-baths and enema daily. He is keeping up his strength and is quite cheerful. I expect he will be free in seven days. This is the fifth day. As you know, I love nursing. It is no strain on me. Pyarelal is in charge of the kitchen. He is a sleepless giant.

Sardar is due here today.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3747. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6903

560. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

October 3, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM

Yesterday I wrote to you in a great hurry. Today also I am in a hurry. Nanavati, beset by fever, lies in bed before me. I have wrapped him in a wet sheet. I would not approve of your going to Trivandrum for improving your health. The climate there cannot be said to be good. Nor would the food there quite agree with you, and an expert doctor may not be readily available. The place, moreover, is so far away for you that you should go there only after improving your health. I have no objection to your going there to meet Saraswati after you have recovered. I have already told you what you should do. As for Kanti, he always has my blessings.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 355
561. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 3, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending with this some telegrams. Any news of Sardar? Motihari perhaps has no telegraph office. I am sending the letters also. I will send away Jawahar from here at 10 o’clock since on account of illnesses here I shall not be in a position to provide meals to anybody tomorrow. You will of course be arriving here tomorrow. I proceed on the assumption that Sardar will certainly reach this afternoon.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Ask Kumarappa or Bharatan to read the telegrams so that no mistake is left. Kanu should despatch the telegrams, post the letters and make the required copies, if Mahadev is already on his way here.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11491

562. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

October 3, 1936

CHI. DEVDAS,

I see your pain in Ba’s letter.1 I was already aware of hers. But what is unavoidable you should not worry over2. Besides, no one can say what part, knowingly or unknowingly, I or we both parents might have played in Harilal’s fall, and to what extent. The saying ‘the quality is in the seed’ contains a whole Shastra. There is a similar proverb in Gujarati, “As the banyan so its fruit, as the father so the son.” When such thoughts occur, I don’t feel like finding fault with Harilal. What is the use of being angry with myself? I know how lustful I was then. I do not know anything else. But who can

1 To Harilal Gandhi
2 Reference to Bhagavad Gita, II. 27 understand the inscrutable ways of God? We can only deduce principles from well-known illustrations.

Let me know if you have received any comments on Ba’s letter whether through public or private correspondence.

How are you? Are you making any progress?

How is Lakshmi? Is Ba happy? Or is she annoyed? How is Manudi?

Kanti has plunged into his studies.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2037

563. LETTER TO KASTURBA GANDHI

October 3, 1936

BA,

There has been no letter from you lately. Have you been ill? If so I hope you are recovered by now. Mirabehn is better. She is of course weak. She has no fever. Nanavati, who has some fever still, is likely to be free from it in a couple of days.

I read your letter in the newspaper. What made you write it? Your letter has prompted an Englishwoman to write to you. Understand the letter with the help of Devdas and ask him to write her a reply. Lilavati comes here from time to time with Mahadev. Things are going on fairly well.

All of you there, I expect, are now all right.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2038

564. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

October 3, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

Your letter brings tears to my eyes. On the one hand, I think that what you say about milk and fruit is true, while on the other hand, we cannot afford your falling ill for want of that kind of food. What is more, any saving thus effected would be spent in paying the expenses of the doctor and the medicines in case you fell ill. So difficult is dharma. It is not proper for me to send you the extra money nor proper for you thus to take more milk and fruit. I must keep my peace having said that you should, if somehow it is possible, take more milk and fruit. God will protect you. Who am I to worry on your account?

You are quite right in saying that you do everything after consulting me. You are also right in saying that you do it in obedience to my command. If your dharma to do what you have been doing is clear to me, how can I give you an order to the contrary? And, how can I arrange to pay you Rs. 25 as long as you remain occupied with your own family? Hence, I have decided to obtain another Rs. 25 also for Jayaprakash and have even given instructions to send it. You should of course take full rest, and also do a little walking. I expect you are not taking oils and spices, and that you take whole-wheat flour. What leafy vegetable can you get? Is the jaggery that you get good?

I have written to you about myself earlier. I am on milk, fruit and vegetables. I have not started taking chapatis for fear of fever. I have not been weighed recently, as the necessary arrangements do not yet exist. Ba is still with Devdas, and Manu too.

What else would I tell Father about you? He praised your nature and was pleased with you. Yes, I shall reach Kashi on the 24th and leave it on the 26th for Rajkot. After paying my respects to Narandas’s parents, I shall go to Ahmedabad and after staying there for three days, to Segaon. You aren’t likely to come to Kashi, are you?

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3483

---

1 Gandhiji was to open there a Bharat Mata Mandir at the invitation of Shivprasad Gupta.
565. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

October 3, 1936

CHI. LILA,

It seems you expect a letter from me every day since I have got you into the habit. I never said that I would write to you daily. It just happened that I did so because I wanted to comfort you. Do you still need that support?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

566. TALK WITH JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

[October 3, 1936]

That is why we have made you the King Canute so that you may do it better than others.

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU: But is there no better way? Must you do all these things yourself?

Who else is to do it? If you go the village nearby, you will find that out of 600 people there 300 are ill. Are they all to go to the hospital? We have to learn to treat ourselves. We are suffering for our own sins. You must have seen in the series of articles Pyarelal has written on the water problem in Bengal that we have brought on all the diseases like malaria, cholera, and the rest ourselves. How are we to teach these poor villagers except by personal example?

Harijan, 10-10-1936

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 Mahadev Desai mentions in his “Weekly Letter” published in Harijan, 17-10-1936, that Jawaharlal Nehru along with Sardar Patel visited Segaon on this date.
3 Nehru had compared Gandhiji’s insistence on nursing the patients himself to that of King Canute’s attempt to stop the tides.
567. TALK WITH AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

[After October 3, 1936] ²

If you feel like going because you think it would please your parents better if you were in the hospital or under Kakasaheb’s roof, you should certainly go. I can ask for a stretcher at once and have you shifted. But if you think of going out of consideration for me, let me tell you that you will be untrue to me. No son would think of leaving his father out of consideration for him. The father himself would feel deeply hurt if he whispered a suggestion of that kind. And no consideration is needed. I can get any amount of help here, I know that I can nurse you back to health as clearly as I knew that I should nurse Ba back to health when she was at death’s door in South Africa, ³ or as clearly as I knew that I should pull my son Manilal through his enteric which lasted for 42 days. ⁴ The doctors in both cases gave me grave warnings and said the responsibility for their deaths would be mine. But I was as ready to sacrifice them as I was anxious to save them and careful to nurse them. Well, God tried my faith, but He also gave me the strength to stand the trial. I may tell you, as you are a brave man, that I am not afraid to lose you, if it should come to it, but I know that I am doing all that is needed to pull you through. If, therefore, you will decide to leave me out of pity for me, you will be untrue to me and to yourself. I am making this so clear to you because we are satyagrahis, we have to weigh the motives and springs of action of everything that we do, and we should deceive neither ourselves nor others.

Nanavati had no difficulty about answering: “I am thinking of going only because of you. I feel that I should not be the source of so much worry to you. Otherwise I know that nowhere else in the world am I going to get better nursing and more loving attention”. And he elected to stay.

_Harijan_, 17-10-1936

¹ In his “Weekly Letter” Mahadev Desai introduces this as follows: “[Amritlal Nanavati’s] condition has been apparently giving us all some anxiety, and Kakasaheb and I and other friends thought that he should be removed to the hospital, both in order to relieve the congestion and lighten Gandhiji’s task and anxiety as also to place the patient within reach of medical treatment. When we went with the proposal Gandhiji was perfectly agreeable to his removal but he insisted on making one or two things clear.”

² As reported by Mahadev Desai

³ Vide “An Autobiography”, sub- title “Kasturbai’s Courage”

⁴ Vide “An Autobiography”, sub- title “Settled in Bombay”
568. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 4, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

Your letter reached Wardha yesterday evening and came to my hand this morning. You must have received the telegram I immediately sent just for the peace of your mind even though it is Sunday.

I shall not write at length as I am sitting between two sick-beds. Balwantsinha and Nanavati are in the grip of fever.

You are in a painful situation from which you will no doubt free yourself. Have patience and courage. You should refuse politely but firmly to see her, saying that you have orders from me. I am writing to her also not to see you at all and not to annoy you. For fear of the nuisance she may cause you, you do not have to go to Ahmedabad where too she is likely to follow you. I have myself suggested to her that she might go to Ahmedabad or to Rajkot. I have told her not to go to Trivandrum while she is unwell. Even if she follows you everywhere, you will be free from her only be refusing to see her.

However, if you otherwise like the idea of going to Ahmedabad you may by all means go. You may stay with Maganbhai and Diwan and Ballubhai will welcome you [to their school]. Devdas will pay the fees. I only want you to pursue your studies in peace, without any obstacle. I shall see that you do not have to suffer annoyance from Amtul Salaam. Write to me from time to time. Take no step in a hurry.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7307. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

569. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

October 4, 1936

CHI. AMTUSSALAAM,

I have today a very painful letter from Kanti. He says that you do not leave him alone and waste his time talking for hours about

1 Vide the following item.
2 Vide “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 3-10-1936
useless things though he has not a minute to spare. I had told you specifically that you might see Kanti only if he wished it. I have forbidden Kanti to see you, and I am forbidding you also to see him. Kanti’s future will take care of itself; you may not bother about him. Just get well as early as possible.

Tell me in your letter that you will not see him any more. Write to me whatever you want to say to him. You must have got my letter of yesterday.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 356

570. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

_SEGAON, WARDHA_,

_October 5, 1936_

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Two baskets with apples and one containing honey have arrived, also the two glasses.

I do hope Deshmukh will see you again.

Of course I am not going to strive with you any more about meat. I do want to respect your scruples.

I await your experience of the S.A. Delegation'.

Don’t expect long letters from me just now. I have two serious cases and now Mira is down again. She does not know how to regulate her diet. Who does? Idiots may.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3595. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6404

---

1 South African Delegation; _vide_ “Letter to Purushottamdas Thakurdas”, 13-9-1936
571. LETTER TO J. H. HOFMEYER

October 5, 1936

DEAR MR. HOFMEYER,

It was a great pleasure to receive your warm letter. I do hope you are having a profitable time in this land and that you find the people you meet to be hospitable.

It will be a matter of regret to me that although you have so many friends in India, we may not meet at all.

You may be interested to know that the paper I am writing on is hand-made written with a village reed pen. You ought not to leave India without seeing some typical villages. Of course it is foolish of me to expect you to visit Wardha and Segaon and glance at the humble effort we are making.

With kind regards to you and fellow members.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

572. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 5, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending whatever could be got ready. My article is still unfinished, and I must detain Kanu for an hour more if I wish to complete it. I shall, therefore, send it with somebody who may happen to come or with a special messenger tomorrow morning or this evening. Amidst patients I am carrying on as best as I can for the day. Workers from Kathiawar may be invited if Sardar gives 12th/13th to Narandas. Intimate to him whatever Sardar wishes.

Blessings from

BAPU

1 Vide “Letter to Purushottamdas Thakurdas”, 13-9-1936

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Somebody will be going there as I shall of course have some post to send.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11494

573. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

October 5, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

You should not expect any letter from me for some time now. Mira and Nanavati have been seriously ill. I have to spend the whole day in nursing them. Jamma’ too should not expect a letter from me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8508. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

574. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

October 5, 1936

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your explanation concerning Jaisukhlal. I am completely satisfied. I have received complaints against you from many sources. I have however not believed most of them. Those that I believed I have discussed with you. I shall send your letter to Jaisukhlal. ²

I have received a long reply from Chandulal. Reply to his letter directly. Or better still, send your letter to me so as to avoid the necessity of making a copy.

It seems certain now that we shall be meeting, although I should like to run away on the very same day that I arrive there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5541

¹ Addressee’s wife
² Vide “Letter to Jaisukhlal Gandhi”, 6-10-1936
575. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[October 5, 1936]

CHI. MAHADEV,

Just as I was about to send with Prahlad all the accompanying matter having finished it all, I got your gun-shot; but it has misfired. I had a hearty laugh when I read your message. Nowadays we don’t have any occasions to laugh. I had no idea that my Note² contained any criticism of you. Even when Mirabehn drew my attention to it I told her, “What can Mahadev do?” Cancel my Note and send in yours. Why should I have to insist on anything? For my part I can manage even if nothing is issued. A similar mistake has occurred in the current number too, which I am not at all going to correct. I have in me a far greater strength to let such things pass than you might imagine. However, you are after all a poet and that too with a sensitive skin; so you are easily upset. Where can I have the remedy for this? It would have been enough, had you only asked, ‘How if we draft the Note like this?’ Why did you have to make an issue of it? But that is that. “Old habits die hard.” It is useless to plead on Lilavati’s behalf. Her coming up here has crowned her faults. However, why didn’t she promptly take charge of him³ when he fell ill? The fact is she is crushed under the weight of sympathy she gets.

Look here, don’t you take offence again. If I haven’t said the right thing you should correct me but never feel hurt.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am sending McArrison’s speech, which may be included as it is after deleting the first paragraph.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11492

---

² Perhaps this is a reference to “A Correction”, 10-10-1936
³ Prabhu Dayal, vide the following item.
576. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 6, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending herewith the letters that I wrote last night. Even today Nanavati’s fever has not gone and he is noticeably weak. Balwantsinha has normal temperature. Mirabehn has suffered an attack again and her illness seems to go deeper. She has some kind of a sore on her nipple. She is bed-ridden.

The last blow dealt by Lilavati has hurt me very much. I never thought that she would forget anyone lying ill before her eyes. My impression has been that you encourage her. Why didn’t you yourself put her in charge of Prabhu Dayal? Kanu had been keeping a vigil throughout the night. Bhansali happened to visit at 3 in the morning and he then relieved Kanu. This much Kanu told me when I wrote to him and inquired. He also said that she wasted a good deal of your time talking. But I felt she had a number of complaints. You should learn them from her as I don’t have the time and am, moreover, as good as dumb. She will not benefit from undeserved pity. Her trouble lies deep within her. She herself says that she has never submitted herself to any rules.

Again my stock of envelopes is exhausted. Why not send me eight packets of them? I have had to send a few letters without envelopes. I need no postcards.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11493

577. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

October 6, 1936

CHI. AMBUJAM,

Your letter. I am getting a regular supply of fruit from you. You must let me know the price. If the fruit is dear I must not have it from you. I must get it from where it is cheap even when it is a gift. I have

1 This is in Hindi.

VOL. 69: 16 MAY, 1936-19 OCTOBER, 1936 435
three sick-beds just now.

Your argument is both sound and unsound. I would have the hospital in preference to superstition. But there is a middle way—to have intelligent home treatment and then await the result with confidence. Even kings have to die. Thousands die in hospitals. It is all a toss. The key to life is in God’s hands. We can but explore His laws and obey them. And I do not expect a time when every villager who wishes can have good hospital treatment. But I do expect a time when he can have at his door competent advice. But even that time is far off.

I hope you are all well.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

578. LETTER TO NANDALAL BOSE

October 6, 1936

DEAR NANDALAL BABU,

Just a line to thank you for your letter and to tell you I shall be at your disposal on 13th instant. You will please wire to Mahadev when you are coming.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. G.

SHRI NANDALAL BOSE
C/O RABINDRANATH TAGORE
6 DWARKANATH TAGORE LANE
JORASANKO, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: C.W. 9778
579. LETTER TO GLADYS OWEN

October 6, 1936

MY DEAR GLADYS¹.

I was glad to receive your good wishes. You are a bad woman to have free days just when I am to be away. I leave here on 22nd and do not return till 5th Nov. I am in Kashi on 24th and 25th [October]². Tell me when you can come.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6193

580. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

October 6, 1936

MY DEAR RAIHANA.

Your touching letter. Of course I am with you and Mother. When I received your first letter I could not understand how Mother was reconciled to a mixed union at this stage of our society. I am sure Hamida is too good to resist Ammajan and you. I expect you have seen my letter³ to her. I am now corresponding with Shankerlal and if necessary with Prabodha. Please keep me informed of developments if any.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9650

¹ The addressee was a teacher in the Theosophical Society School, Banaras.
² The source has “November”.
³ This is not traceable.
581. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

October 6, 1936

CHI. LILA.

Is it any less lila that from Lila you have become Lilavati again? What would have been my plight had you become Lili? I like your decision. It was beyond your capacity to remain with me. I hope you will always carry my blessings with you wherever you are. You may certainly stay away from me but don’t forget me altogether.

Your reason for leaving me is unusual. What do you ask to be forgiven for? Have you committed any fault? If you have, the proper atonement would be not to abandon me but to cling to me with greater resolve, to conduct yourself in conformity with it and show greater watchfulness. However, a correct decision, though taken for a wrong reason, is always welcome, and this applies to this decision of yours. Consult Mahadev in taking whatever step you may choose to take. Yesterday you could see my anger, but couldn’t you see my unbearable pain—couldn’t you read my love?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9349. Also C.W. 6624. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

582. LETTER TO JAISUKHLAL GANDHI

October 6, 1936

CHI. JAISUKHLAL.

I am enclosing with this the reply to your complaint. For my part, I fully believe Chhaganlal’s denial, and my impression is that Narandas too believes it. Anyway he does not support you. Now it remains for you either to prove your charges against him or cleanse your own mind in the matter. Chhaganlal has his faults but, I trust, he is free from the ones you attribute to him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III

1 Vide ”Letter to Lilavati Asar”, 2-10-1936

438 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
583. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

October 6, 1936

CHI. SHARMA.

I have two patients on my own hands. They are both having fever. The temperature of one of them has now been below 99° for the last eight days and the other patient is at Simla. What will you do about such patients? Anyway there are many other patients as well. I hope everyone at home is all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a facsimile of the Hindi: Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, facing p. 260

584. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 6, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

Herewith I am sending whatever post I could write as I don’t know when I shall be able to finish it. Lilavati’s decision is quite correct although she has added insult to injury. She will never be happy with me. She needs to be guided for her future.

It seems the situation here has become very critical. Mirabehn has suffered a severe relapse. Her fever this time looks dangerous. Nanavati too is certainly not well enough. Inwardly he also seems to be losing hope. God’s will be done.

The letters include a postcard to Nandalal Bose. It would be good if it goes with late fee paid.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11495
MY DEAR IDIOT AND REBEL COMBINED,

Your own blank paper returns to you duly filled. The magnifiers are already being used for various purposes examining patients as well as snakes. I have two live specimens again.

Yes, Nanavati is with me—three beds going—Mira, Nanavati and Balwantsingh. The latter is free from fever. The other two cases are obstinate. Fever persists with ups and downs. They all require careful nursing. They are under water treatment and get fruit juices. No cause for anxiety as yet.

Of course there is as much illness in Simla as elsewhere and I was told when I came there for the first time that the place was notorious for venereal diseases. But those who choose can certainly benefit by its mountain air. Therefore if the climate agrees with you, you should stay as long as Shummy wants you to. Village work in Manganwal¹ will take care of itself meanwhile.

When I go to Ahmedabad I shall see what can be done about the women’s differences. But I hold out no hope. I know the state of affairs there. From what you tell me it seems that you never received any letter from Mridula² in reply to yours. And she told me definitely that she had written to you inviting you to her house.

Khan Saheb says it is enough that the girls seek and like your company. He says he is grateful to you for the open invitation you have given them. He does not want or expect you to give them lessons. Khan Saheb was never ill. I suggested an examination of his teeth and sent him to Nagpur. One tooth was extracted.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3748. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6904

¹ A place in the Punjab
² Mridula Sarabhai
586. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

October 8, 1936

CHI. LILA,

I have your letter. You would be stable if you stayed with Mahadev; going to Nagpur is lack of stability. Therefore you had better stay with him; or at the Mahila Ashram if you can bear with the life there, though I am afraid you will not be able to. Be sure I have not given you up for lost.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9350. Also C.W. 6625. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

587. TASK BEFORE HARIJAN SEVAKS

Ever since the inauguration of the Harijan Sevak Sangh, the central organization has been feeding, very properly, the provincial branches. But the time has certainly arrived for the branches to stand on their own and be self-sustained, even though it may be at the sacrifice of part of their programme. The work in each province, and for that matter in each district or taluka, should be an unequivocal demonstration of active savarna support. For the chief mission of the Sangh is to touch the savarna heart and change it. Supposing the central organization had collected from two or three reformers a crore of rupees, and with it established branches all over India to cover it with schools and hostels for Harijan boys and girls, it would not have hastened the day of the doom of untouchability. For the savarna heart would remain as stony as ever. Supposing conversely that without the cost of a single pice, by some stroke of good fortune the savarna heart was changed and untouchability became a thing of the past, the whole object of the Sangh would be fulfilled. For in that case every public school, place of worship and other institutions would be open to Harijans precisely on the same terms as to caste Hindus. That day may be far off or much nearer than many people expect. Anyway that is the goal of the Harijan Sevak Sangh and never the opening of separate schools, wells, temples and the like for Harijans and consequent perpetuation of untouchability. At present these things are undoubtedly done, but they are done only as a means to the end. They have become necessary because the savarna heart is slow to change.

The growing number of reformers must not sit still and make protestations of removal of untouchability from themselves. They must demonstrate that change by their visible conduct. The spending of their purse for the Harijan cause is a tangible proof of the change and therefore an essential part of the programme. But immediately it becomes a corner confined to a few individuals who salve their conscience by liberal donations, it ceases to be a token in the manner indicated by me. Hence it becomes a matter of duty for the Central Board to invite the attention of the branches to this fundamental part of the programme and for the branches to appreciate it and prepare the way to becoming wholly self-reliant. Indeed the burden has been progressively thrown on provincial boards of financing their own institutions. But the time has come for definite and decisive action in the direction.

This change to full self-reliance will never come unless all the workers realize that this is essentially a religious movement. We are a nation spending lavishly for causes which the masses believe to be religious. One has only to go to the places of pilgrimage to have an ocular demonstration of the fact. A study of the history of religious endowments will reveal the tragic story of fortunes being entrusted to them by credulous millions without ever caring to know how they were spent. It is enough for people to believe that they pay their mite to a cause which in their opinion is religious. Harijan workers have a cause that is wholly religious in the best sense of the term. If they have a living faith in it, if they do not move mountains they will at least get from their surroundings enough for the institutions in their charge.

_Harijan, 10-10-1936_

588. A CORRECTION

I know that Harijan contains almost always printer’s errors. It would be tedious, if not even pedantic, to issue corrections every week. In the difficult circumstances under which Harijan is being issued, the problem before me is to cease publication or to continue it in spite of mistakes recurring with unfailing regularity. I have chosen the latter course whilst a sufficient number of subscribers tolerate the errors.
But the issue of 26th September contains two howlers in the article headed ‘The Law of Our Being’ which need correction:

Last para, II. 2-4.

INCORRECT:
“The writes seems to poohpooh the idea of honour derived from individual and national gain.”

CORRECT:
“The writer seems to poohpooh the idea of honour devoid of individual and national gain.”

Last para, II. 6-7.

INCORRECT:
“There is no question for one of self-destruction, voluntary or otherwise.”

CORRECT:
“There is no question for me of self-destruction, voluntary or otherwise.”

The errors seem to have originated in Wardha, the typist having misread the manuscript sent from Segaon.

_Harijan_, 10-10-1936

589. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

_SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 10, 1936_

MY DEAR REBEL,

I have been obliged to neglect you these few days. My only comfort is that the correspondence has been practically suspended—all my time being given to the sick ones. I can’t say they are yet on the mend. The temperature is slowly rising daily. There is no danger as yet. But both are very weak. They will be all right if they have enough vitality. Anyway neither they nor I have any anxiety. The C.S.\(^1\) was here today to examine them. They are having only water-cure.

I have just finished your broadcast.\(^2\) Your experience of the village is excellently reproduced. The other part is not well balanced.

---

\(^1\) Civil Surgeon

\(^2\) To village women
You say “old systems... have perished.” If they have, where is the cause for revival? But you yourself show later that they have at most decayed, not perished.

And then you begin at the wrong end—build roads and houses!! Who can do the thing? Surely sanitation comes first.

We were agreed upon it too!! And you began with it. But how should [you] be Idiot, if you remembered such a very simple fact?

And then you have not made a sharp division between what people can and should do themselves and what the State can and should. You do not want more than this, do you? And you are in no need of praise. Of that you must have had a surfeit.

If you are only permitted to pass two months with me, I should hope to reconstruct your body. This eczema is certainly a source of anxiety from the medical standpoint. But I do not despair. Of course you won’t go to Ahmedabad, if you are not quite fit.

The apples of late have been quite hardy and all in a good condition. You should tell me what the fruit costs each time and what the railage costs. The honey too came in quite safely. I finished the whole yesterday. It was quite nice.

I have not yet heard from Lionel.

Khan Saheb has all the fruit he can eat. I get apples from you and Ambujam—more than I need—mosambis from Bombay and oranges locally.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Khan Saheb leaves for Delhi on 14th.

From the original: C.W. 3749. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6905

590. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

October 10, 1936

CHI. DEVDAS,

I am gald to learn that the whole line of thought has been Ba’s own. She certainly has that power, and the letter is indeed a good one. Dr. Mahmud writes a long letter which I am enclosing. Read it and

1 Vide “Letter to Kasturba Gandhi”, 3-10-1936

444 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI tear it up. Am I to understand from the rather long letter you wrote that you can now write fairly well? The two patients take a good deal of my time, which I certainly like to give.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2035

591. LETTER TO V. L. MEHTA

October 10, 1936

Bhai Vaikunth,

I heard only yesterday that Lallubhai\(^1\) has fallen ill again.
Things are bound to be all right where workers like you are available to look after him. I hope he is better now.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I spoke to Shankerlal about the Agriculture Department.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1363

592. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

October 10, 1936

Chhi. Prabha,

I have your letter. Of course, I do wish you to see me at Kashi, but the wish ought not to conflict with dharma. If you cannot be freed, or if you can be freed but Jayaprakash does not want it, then it would be improper for you to come and my desire that you should would be against dharma. I should be glad if, subject to these two conditions, you could come. I might even wish that you could be by my side at present! However, the wish would go contrary to dharma as your dharma at present is to do whatever service you can by remaining there. Both Mirabehn and Nanavati are laid up here. Both are very ill. You could be very helpful to me on the present occasion; but how can I entertain such a wish? That way, even Mahadev would prove helpful here. But wishing his presence here is against dharma.

1 Lallubhai Shamaldas, addressee’s father
He has before him the dharma I have assigned to him. Such is the case with the others too. Have you now followed me on the question of wishing? Does God let us fulfil all our wishes?

I have been keeping good health amidst all this work. Such work has remained part of my nature to this day. God has always kept me well while nursing the sick. I hope that this time too it will be so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3484

593. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR
October 10, 1936

CHI. LILAVATI,

Your handwriting, instead of improving steadily, becomes worse. I asked Kanu' if you had been nursing Prabhudayal and he said that you had not gone anywhere near him. How is that? Can you find no time to serve a person when he falls ill there? You seem to be spending a lot of your time only in talking. I ask that you quietly apply yourself to the work entrusted to you. I am pained.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

594. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI
Segaon,
October 10, 1936

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

I have your letter. I was all the time having news of you. Never eat peanuts. When one is weak it is usual to have dreams. You need not worry about it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11703

1 Second son of Narandas Gandhi

446 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
595. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
5 a.m., October 11, 1936

CHI. LILA,

I warn you lest you should prove all my fears right. Do you think you are free from all restraints since you are released from the obligation of coming here? Have you stopped copying out the slokas? You do not mean that you will never be able to come here, do you? He who used to play on the dilruba is prostrate. Shall I send it to you? Let me have a list also of your other belongings which are here so that I may send them to you, or you may come and collect them. Do as you think fit.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9351. Also C.W. 6626. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

596. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

October 11, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I went through your letter carefully. Stick to your decision. Don’t leave Bombay. Ask of me any help you need. Remain cheerful and do everything to recover your health. You may come to Segaon after recovering your health. Three-fourths of the people in this village are Harijans. Those attending on me are Harijans and they are enjoying themselves. You may serve them to your heart’s content. Is there anything more that you want? Remember, however, that you will have to go back to Bombay if you fall ill. You are yourself responsible for your falling ill. Have your nails attended to.

You must have got my letter of yesterday regarding Kanti. Kanti, you and I will all be happy if you willingly act on it. If you had been thinking of God as you have been thinking of me you would certainly have got your wish fulfilled. Do it even now. Forget me, forget Kanti and forget Saraswati. Think of God alone. This in no way means that you should abandon me or I should abandon you.

1 The reference is to Amritlal Nanavati, who was ill.
However, it does mean that you should give up your exaggerated notions of me and trust only God. You will surely have peace and happiness if you do this.

There is sense in weeping for God while remembering Him, but in weeping for a man one only hurts one’s eyes. You would stay patiently where you are if you would follow my advice.

Tell Vadud I am not writing to him separately. Even this I am writing after 8 p.m.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 357

597. TALK WITH STUDENTS OF MARWADI VIDYALAYA

October 12, 1936

Gandhiji asked the students to be worthy of the Principal, Sjt. Aryanayakam, who at the invitation of Jamnalalji had agreed to take charge of the institution. He had a distinguished career at Cambridge and London and later on at Santiniketan, and he has come to Wardha with his wife who is a great Sanskrit scholar and a distinguished graduate of the Banaras University. She has been placed in charge of the Mahila Vidyalaya, also a creation of Jamnalalji. Gandhiji asked the boys to be not only worthy of the Principal, but of Jamnalalji... [He said:]

He had long ago broken the bonds of sect and community and creed, and though the institution owed its existence to donations from Marwadis only—that is what gave it its name—Jamnalalji would not be satisfied until it was thrown open to boys of all castes and creeds. He has no interest until he had found his way to destroy its exclusive character, to throw it open as much to the Harijans as to any other section of Hindus, as much to the Mussalmans as to the Hindus. He has no room in his heart for untouchability, and he had none at all for any feeling that Hinduism is in any way superior to any other religion. He has helped Muslim institutions no less than he has done Hindu ones, and he has several Muslim friends whom he treats as blood-brothers. I would ask you students, Hindus and Muslims, to take a leaf from Jamnalalji’s book and to have the same regard for one another’s religion that Jamnalalji has, and to treat one another as blood-brothers. And let me tell you one thing which you may not know, and perhaps many do not know. This passion for removal of untouchability and freedom from communal feeling as well as equal regard for all religions, Jamnalalji does not at all owe to me. It is not possible for anyone to transfer his conviction to another. All one can do is to help another to manifest the conviction which is already in him. But in respect of Jamnalalji, I could not take the credit for having even helped him to arrive at or to manifest those convictions in his life. He had the convictions in him long before he met me and he had lived up to them. It was these inner convictions of his that brought him and me together and made possible the close co-operation in which we have been able to work together for so many years. You children have to be worthy of a man like him.

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The Principal and the students came to see Gandhiji on his birthday which according to the Vikram calendar fell on October 12.

_Harijan_, 24-10-1936

598. _LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM_

_October 13, 1936_

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your letters, but the nursing of patients here leaves me no spare time. Nanavati and Mirabehn have been suffering from typhoid fever; somebody has to keep awake by their side day and night. I can hardly write a letter. By all means do go to Mecca Sharif if you get the required facilities and if your health permits.

If you recover your health somehow, it would indeed be an achievement. I continue to be well enough, though I have not taken my weight. There aren’t the means.

I am enclosing a letter to Dr. Jivraj.¹ I am writing regarding Dr. Gilder also.

Do not expect more letters for the present.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 358

¹ The letter is not available.
599. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,
October 13, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

When you have already placed your head at my feet, where is the question of forgetting?

I think that the article¹ should go as it is. We had better let him proclaim his dissatisfaction rather than anticipate his argument. There is no harm in letting the article go as it stands, for it is, according to me, a fine thing that the same old argument should have occurred to me involuntarily even today though I had forgotten the subject. Haven’t I said before that I have no matter with me? I am certainly not sorry that I can spare no time from amidst the patients. All is well.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
You should derive full satisfaction from the services assigned to you.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11496

600. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

SEGAON,
October 14, 1936

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. You are flying high. All right fly. But see that you don’t get exhausted and fall.

To my right and left are Mira’s and Nanavati’s sick-beds. Both are suffering from typhoid.
I have practically stopped attending to correspondence. But you certainly have my blessings for your camp which you have asked for.
I hope that being the servant you are, you will go on serving silently and without ostentation and regard service as its own reward.

I don’t know anything about my having to go to Bombay. Even the visit to Ahmedabad has become uncertain now. I cannot leave Mira in her present condition. Nanavati, one may say, is on the road to recovery.

¹ Vide “Ahimsa Conundrums”, 17-10-1936

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10385. Also C.W. 6824. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

601. MESSAGE TO MILL-OWNERS’ AND LABOUR ASSOCIATIONS

[Before October 15, 1936]

The Mahatma says he is surrounded by two typhoid fever patients, nevertheless he is prepared to give two hours on October 21. He has to depart for Benares on 22nd if the patients are well enough.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 16-10-1936_

602. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

_SEGAON,
October 16, 1936_

CHI. MAHADEV.

Nobody brought the papers yesterday. I am sending two letters and also the telegrams herewith. Nanavati shows much improvement today; his temperature in the morning was 99°. Mira, too, may be said to have improved; she too had 101° after several days. Lilavati’s clothes which I sent with someone must have reached there. Is there anything more left? If so, she should write to me so that I might find it. There is an entirely discoloured and tattered sari with big holes—is it hers? How is Bhansali?

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11498

---

1 The Mill-owners’ and Labour Associations had requested Gandhiji to fix a convenient date for hearing the wage-cut question.

2 The report is date-lined “Ahmedabad, October 15”.
603. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
October 16, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Since I have a free moment. I must utilize it for a few words to you. The patients are doing well, though fever persists. How many villagers can go to hospitals? Both would have gone to the hospital if I had wanted them to. I could not do so without denying my past and the recent article¹ I wrote. So long as God wants me to work on this earth in this body, He will take care of it. Not all the physicians in the world can save me when the hour strikes.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3596. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6405

604. LETTER TO VITHAL L. PHADKE
October 16, 1936

CHI. MAMA,

I cannot recall your earlier letter. For the present there is a mountain of letters before me as I lie between two sick-beds. As things stand at present, I am not to stay in Gujarat for more than three days. Sardar has the control of the programme there. You should write to Sardar though at the moment I don’t feel like going anywhere. The rest if I find out your letter or if you write again. How should I be able to say at this stage who in Ahmedabad would take how many minutes?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3836

605. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI
October 16, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

You seem to be deeply immersed in work. The fever still persists though it is slowly subsiding.

¹ Vide “Of My Recent Illness”, 19-9-1936
When can I go through the pile of the Sahitya Parishad papers? I am returning it after removing those about the constitution and the Chandravadan matter. If there is anything else that I should read, send it. Send me a copy of my programme. Very probably I shall have to go direct to Rajkot for a day, and from there Sardar may perhaps take me straight to Nadiad and I may reach Ahmedabad on the 30th afternoon or evening. Do mention that my Rajkot visit is only a family visit. From the present trend of things I see that you will be required to stay on at Segaon. The final programme will be known by Monday.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11499

606. AHIMSA CONUNDRUMS

A college professor and two representatives of a class of fifty students write:

As you are no doubt aware, the Intermediate Prose Text-Book, Pearce and Aryatna’s Models of Comparative Prose, used in most Intermediate Colleges in India this year, contains a selection about five pages long from your book The Story of My Experiments with Truth. The selection is entitled “Ahimsa”, and contains your discussion of this most challenging principle and its application to our lives.

The fifty students in my prose class, and I, their instructor, have been spending several class periods studying and discussing the above essay....

At one point, however, both the students and I, their instructor, have been unable clearly to understand the precise nature of your views. I refer to your statement about the conduct of a votary of ahimsa in case of war, particularly the following passage: “When two nations are fighting, the duty of a votary of ahimsa is to stop the war. He who is not equal to that duty, he who has no power of resisting war, he who is not qualified to resist war, may take part in war, and yet whole-heartedly try to free himself, his nation, and the world from War.” A little further on (discussing three methods of recourse in case of the European War, for yourself): “... or I could participate in the war on the side of the Empire and thereby acquire the capacity and fitness for resisting the violence of war. I lacked this capacity and fitness, so I thought there was nothing for it but for me to serve in the War.”

1 Only extracts are reproduced here.

We should be deeply and humbly grateful if you would expand and clarify this subject and your past and present views upon it...

I do not know that I need have suppressed the name of the college or the names of the signatories. The learned professor has sent me a stamped envelope for answer. This presumes a personal reply. But I have only limited time at my disposal especially when I am nursing two precious patients. I would not miss my weekly talk with the readers of Harijan. I am, therefore, with apologies to my correspondents, combining two purposes to save my time.

The question raised in the letter is of very great importance and has always caused me the greatest difficulty, not much in deciding upon the action to be taken at a given moment but in justifying my conduct in terms of ahimsa. For the same action may outwardly be taken by the believer and the unbeliever. At these times the motive alone decides its quality.

At the time of writing I have neither the text-book nor the original in Gujarati of which the text is a translation. But I have a recollection of what I wrote. What is more, so far as I am aware, my views on ahimsa, as I held them, remain the same today.

The general proposition that I laid down in the quotation was derived from my conduct during the European War. I had thrown myself whole-heartedly into it at the peril of my life—not because of the risks attendant upon serving at such times, but because at the time I was attending drills and camps I was suffering from pleurisy and general weakness as I had hardly regained the strength I had lost during an exhausting fourteen days’ fast I had undertaken two or three months or before the War. I believed then the British Empire to be on the whole a system beneficial to humanity. I had dreamt of one day converting it to methods of peace instead of war for the sake even of its own existence though in another form. But I was fully conscious of my limitations. I was an insignificant atom ineffective for resistance to its general policy. Whether I joined the War or not, I was helplessly party to it, inasmuch as I ate the food protected by the British fleet. I was enjoying personal liberty too under its protection. If, therefore, I helped the War somehow or other, I felt that for me as a votary of ahimsa, it was better to take a direct part in it so as to enable me the sooner to end War. It is quite possible that all this was argument of the weak and that if I felt that war was an evil, I should have gone away from it even if it meant starvation or a rebel’s death. Anyway I did not think so then, nor do I now.

It is wholly beside the argument what my attitude would now be, seeing that I no longer believe in the Empire as on the whole a beneficent power.

To illustrate my answer, let me take another argument from my own life. Even when I was a little urchin my heart and intellect rebelled against untouchability. But being then an insignificant member of the family I acquiesced in their conduct towards Harijans which I should not do now. Needless to say, I could not then have argued out my conduct. My personal belief did not appear to me to be inconsistent with my living in the family.

Indeed life is made of such compromises. Ahimsa, simply because it is purest, unselfish love, often demands such compromises. The conditions are imperative. There should be no self in one’s action, no fear, no untruth, and it must be in furtherance of the cause of ahimsa. The compromise must be natural to oneself, not imposed from without.

I should not at all wonder if my answer has given no satisfaction to the professor and his pupils. I must be pardoned for the constant reference to my own actions. The reason is obvious. I am not a well-read man in any sense of the term. All I know of ahimsa is in the first instance derived from my own experiences and experiments carried on in broad daylight in a humble scientific spirit and in the fear of God which is Truth.

Harijan, 17-10-1936

607. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI

Segaon,

October 17, 1936

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

You must not eat rice and dal. Take only milk and fruit. I am sending six Mosambis from here. Eat them. Take milk. It is your duty to get well quickly. Do not take cereals.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11701
608. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

SEGAON,
October 18, 1936

CHI. LILA

I understand your lamentations. I would have sent for you even today if I could have the courage. However, have patience. When I return from my journey, I shall accommodate you at Segaon. You may also stay at Segaon if I leave Mahadev behind. If both of us go, you may go to Rajkot and join us the day we leave Ahmedabad.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9583. Also C.W.- 6555 Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

609. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

October 18, 1936

CHI. RAMESHWARDAS,

I like the scheme sent by Parnerkar for the Goseva section at the Exhibition. I think it would be proper for you to shoulder its expense around Rs. 1,300 to Rs. 1,500 if it is not too much for you. Not more than Rs. 5,000 is to be taken from the Congress Committee for the entire exhibition.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 173

610. LETTER TO SYED MAHMUD

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 19, 1936

MY DEAR MAHMOOD,

Two precious patients have stopped all my usual correspondence. I am writing this under great stress. I have not much to say in defence of my attitude on Hindi-Hindustani. I fear you do not know the whole history. Moulana Abdul Haq has given a distorted picture. I entered the Hindi Sammelan not only a year ago. It is now nearly ten years that I was first invited to preside at their conference.\(^1\) I pleaded then for recognition of Urdu as part of Hindi. The views I then pronounced I held even before 1908. I went a step further and got a definition accepted at the Indore Conference a year ago which included Urdu speech and script.\(^2\) That is the fons et origo of my crime. Did you know all this? If you did, what is it you do not understand? It is a fault that I could not accept for that meeting either Hindi-Urdu or merely Hindustani? I have dealt with that question fairly fully in Harijan.\(^3\) Please read these and then if you do not feel convinced, write to me fully and I shall strive with you. I should despair of myself if I cannot carry conviction to you on an issue which appears to me to be perfectly simple.

Love.

BAPU

DR. MAHMOOD, BAR-AT-LAW

CHHAPRA

BIHAR

From a photostat: G.N. 5079. Also the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

611. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

October 19, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I am returning the pamphlet after correcting it. I shall give you the exact date in my next letter.

It would not be correct to see Jawaharlalji\(^4\) during the lecture. I would certainly see him if he would grace us with a visit. The timings both for the spinning sacrifice as well as for the prayers, are quite all right. Arrange Khan Saheb’s interview with the Muslim brethren. You may arrange another gathering for meeting all the people, if possible, that is, if all wish it. I shall not be able to attend it. There is no harm if

---

\(^1\) Gandhiji presided over the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan at Indore on March 29, 1918; vide “Statement of Transvaal Indian Case”, 16-7-1909 sub-title “A Brief History of the Struggle”

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to H. S. L. Polak”, 29-9-1909

\(^3\) Vide “Hindi or Hindustani”, 9-5-1936 and “Hindi or Hindustani-II”, 16-5-1936

\(^4\) A Jain sadhu

VOL. 69 : 16 MAY, 1936 - 19 OCTOBER, 1936
nothing can be arranged for Khan Saheb. Whatever is done should be spontaneous.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8509. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

612. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

October 19, 1936

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I liked the letters from you both. Manilal, it was your dharma to have pointed out my shortcoming which you did, nor was it indecorous. Filial piety consists in respect for parents in spite of one’s knowledge of their shortcomings. In that test none of you fail, barring Harilal. But the fault is not entirely Harilal’s. For how could we hold him responsible for what he does or says under the influence of drink?

I shall not write a long reply as I am surrounded by patients. Mirabehn as well as Nanavati are better today. I do not repent for the kind of education I gave you brothers. I should have been glad if I could have done more along the same lines. I offered you at the altar of my sacrifice, not unmindful of your well-being but knowing it fully well. Nor do I believe the result has been unhappy. There was a special purpose in sending Sorabji. He achieved it too; we could have seen it had he lived. As for Chhaganlal, he was sent to prepare himself for a specific task. It miscarried because he was threatened with tuberculosis and left England abruptly. How do you forget about Ritch and Polak? There was a purpose in sending them and there was one also in not sending you brothers. By the time you had reached the age of discretion my infatuation with Western education had worn away. It was not that I did not provide you such education for want of money. The Doctor’s purse was always at my disposal. When Ritch was sent I too was in a position to meet the cost. However, I purposely moulded you in the school of experience and drafted you for public

1 Vide “Letter to Harilal Gandhi”, 16-10-1912
2 Chhaganlal Gandhi
3 L.W. Ritch; vide “Speech at Farewell to L. W. Ritch”, 9-3-1905
4 H.S.L. Polak
5 Dr. Pranjivan Jagjivan Mehta

458 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
service. I understand how you might regret the want in view of the present times, but that does not change my thinking. Don’t you know that I have done the same with the boys and girls that came to be placed in my charge here too? I am not worried that Radha, Keshu, Shankar, Bal, Jayanti, Kanti, etc. rebelled against it. I see in it the force of the current stream and not any defect in my thinking. The best of workers here have no Western education, and men like Mahadev who have it are with me not because of it but because of their other qualities. I do of course make use of Mahadev’s education by the way, but that is of no great significance. It may be my efficiency. Mahadev will himself admit that Maganlal was more valuable than he. How many educated men do you think there are in my army? To what position would I have been reduced had I depended on them? Don’t you know that I had a hand in sending Joseph, both the Godfreys and Bernard? Where are they? What have they achieved? I also know the art of producing barristers and doctors, but it has borne no fruit. I think you brothers were spared the wild goose chase. Why can you not see my non-violence in the exceptions I made in the cases of West¹ and Sam²? Had I not been generous to them, how could I have accommodated them and others like them? You know that I encouraged Kitchin³ to eat meat when he was ill and, as a result, he gave it up altogether. In the Boer War I myself served wine to the stonebreakers in my corps and served bidis to others. Discretion is very necessary in doing all such things. Generosity to others is as necessary as strictness with oneself.

I have dilated far more than I had intended. You need not send anything to Kanti as Devdas has undertaken to pay all his expenses.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4858

¹ A.H. West
² Govindaswami; vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Gandhi”, 13-5-1905
³ H. Kitchin
613. LETTER TO BALVANTRAI K. THAKORE

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 19, 1936

BHAISHRI BALVANTRAI

I am at present busy nursing patients. I finished your letter little by little yesterday evening. I have no idea what I would be able to do in Ahmedabad. I regard myself quite unfit to preside over the Conference. Being a Mahatma, perhaps, I am supposed to know all things. Would you send your suggestions in the form of an amendment? I should be glad to meet you, but how could there be such an occasion? After all I am not visiting Bombay. I Shall be wandering into Ahmedabad.

I expect you are in good health.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

[PS.]
Your letter shall remain confidential. I have destroyed it.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9238

614. LETTER TO BENARSIDAS CHATURVEDI

October 19, 1936

BHAJ BENARSIDAS,

Prabhu Dayal gave me the news of your brother’s death. You are a man of knowledge and therefore hardly need to be consoled. We all have to go the same way as Ramnarayan, the only difference being in time. Why then should we grieve over it? But with the passing away of our loved ones, our responsibility increases and yours has grown heavily. God alone is our true help at such times. He alone can guide you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2516

1 (1869-1952); Gujarati poet and man of letters
615. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 19, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

I can say that I have done a fair amount of writing today. Baba has done a great thing. Mira’s temperature today has been 98° and it has not risen so far. She however continues to be restless. There is no release of saliva in her mouth. It remains sticky and she has no wish to take glucose or even fruit. There is something else too. I want no oranges or lemons. Munnalal made a mistake in sending for the lemons.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a Photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11500

616. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI

October 19, 1936

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

It is good you wrote. I am enclosing a letter to Pandit Benarsidas. Send it to him.¹ Take milk and fruit as necessary. Do not work beyond your strength.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a Photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11677

¹ Vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 19-10-1936
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

LETTER FROM JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

May 25, 1936

About women and W. C. I began by saying that I had received some protests for their non-inclusion. I would have welcomed even stronger protests for I wanted our women to be more aggressive and to insist on their rights, both political and social. I invited them to organize themselves to press for their rights which they were not likely to get if they waited for the goodwill of their menfolk. About the W. C. I said that it was formed under peculiar circumstances when I had to play an unusual part. The hayadar (self-respecting) president would probably have resigned and I being behaya (shameless) stuck on even though the majority of the Congress had decided against me on some vital issues. This peculiar position was reflected in the formation of the W. C., which certainly could not be under the circumstances of my choice although technically I was responsible for it. When various viewpoints have to be represented, the lesser ones go to the wall. You are perfectly right in saying that I was responsible for the exclusion of women. But yet this is not the whole matter. I would have liked to have a woman in the Working Committee but as the matters developed and a number of other names appeared and stayed, there was little choice left. Ultimately I felt that it mattered little to me who was in the W. C. and who was not. The Committee as it took shape was not my child, I could hardly recognize it and to some inclusions, as you know, I reacted strongly. Yet ultimately I submitted but inevitably with the thought that I was surrendering to others and almost against my own better judgment. At the very first meeting, almost without provocations, the inherent conflicts appeared. The whole purpose of a president nominating a homogeneous committee was thus frustrated.

File No. 32/12/36, Home, Political. Courtesy: National Archives of India

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 27-9-1935
APPENDIX II

LETTER FROM VALLABHBHAI PATEL TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

May 29, 1936

I have received your letter... of 24th with Kripalani’s letter to you enclosed with it.

His2 Bombay speeches have disturbed me much. I am not worried so much about khaddar. It will recoil on him if he goes on in this fashion. But I cannot stand the attitude of injured innocence he has assumed regarding the nomination of members in the W. C., particularly his statement regarding omission of a woman. Rajaji feels equally strongly.

Bapu had written to him on these points and the extracts of his reply and the last letter of Bapu to him on the subject of the W. C. nominations are enclosed herewith for your information. Re: khadi—he says the report is not correct and he had issued a correct version of his speech next day though. I have not seen it reported anywhere. His reply about the W. C. is bad enough and I don’t think I can swallow it. It is a humiliating position in which I for one would not agree to stay at any cost. He was expected to act honourably with his colleagues but he cannot do so or if he feels that we are a drag on him we must clear the way for him.

I am going to Bangalore tomorrow where I am staying till the 12th and then we disperse for our respective places. Hope you are doing well.

File No. 32/12/36, Home, Political. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 Vide “About ‘Conversion’”, 28-9-1935
2 Jawaharlal Nehru’s
1. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 21, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

You have certainly provided me with excellent material for Harijan. Mahadev will see your letter. I shall make judicious use of portions of it. You must then do a little propaganda work, even write to the papers and invite other women to do likewise. If you women would only realize your dignity and privilege, and make full use of it for mankind, you will make it much better than it is. But man has delighted in enslaving you and you have proved willing slaves till the slaves and the slave-holders have become one in the crime of degrading humanity. My special function from childhood, you might say, has been to make woman realize her dignity. I was once slave-holder myself but Ba proved an unwilling slave and thus opened my eyes to my mission. Her task was finished. Now I am in search of a woman who would realize her mission. Are you that woman, will you be one?

If Shummy will be happy and healthy going to Europe and won’t go without you, why should you not accompany him? No time for more. Gave you a long letter yesterday.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]
Yes, you should write to Natesan without doubt.

From the original: C.W. 3597. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6406

2. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

October 21, 1936

CHI. LILA,

I have been thinking of you, though I have been unable to write to you of late. Are you aware, or aren’t you, that you have taken upon yourself a much greater burden by asking to be released from the conditions? You do not intend to become a self-indulgent person.

1 Vide “Obscene Advertisements”, 14-11-1936
2 The letter is not traceable.
You have self-control and you want to make progress in that direction. Take it that if you forget this, you will have invited perpetual discord.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11757

3. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 21, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending some post. Rajkumari’s letter, which I send you, is for you to read. It should be returned as I shall want it for Harijan. Next week it is going to be a question what to write and what not to write. Both the patients are fine—subnormal. Mirabehn’s complaint has toned down today. I give her curds.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11501

4. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 21, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

You may send a wire to Shivprasad¹, also stating who are coming with me. Take it for certain that you will be there. The accompanying is for Raja². Write to S. saying that I have written to Raja.

I can’t see how I may write on Premchandji³. If we suggest it to Viyogi Hari, he might draft a brief note. We take no editorial notice of men of letters. Lallubhai’s⁴ case, however, deserves to be considered. For my part, I propose to leave here at six o’clock. No arrangements need be made from there. The luggage will be carried in the cart from here. I shall walk as much as I can; I am feeling strong enough. I shall climb on to the cart if I feel it necessary. On my way I shall stop to

---
¹ Shivprasad Gupta
² The letter is not traceable.
³ Who had recently died
⁴ ibid
look at Kamala’s\(^1\) son. I shall peep into Maganwadi if there is time. You may if you wish suggest any change in this. The patients are fine.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11502

5. LETTER TO RADHAKRISHNA BAJAJ

October 22, 1936

CHI. RADHAKISAN,

I heard the news about Vinay\(^2\). It will be good if Kamala whom I very much wish to see comes here. If I go there myself I should have to run away in a few minutes since here I shall be busy working till 5 o’clock. There is no reason for Kamala to confine herself where she is. Read this letter to Kamala if you think it proper and send her or bring her yourself.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9121

6. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

WARDHAGANJ,
October 22, 1936

As usual I am overwhelmed with messages of birthday greetings. It is impossible for me to send acknowledgments to these kind friends. I, therefore, take this opportunity for thanking them all through the Press for their good wishes.

The Bombay Chronicle, 23-10-1936

---

\(^1\) Kamala Nevatia, Jamnalal Bajaj’s daughter

\(^2\) Kamala Nevatia’s son
7. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

Segaon, Wardha,
October 23, 1936

Chi. Amtul Salaam,

I got your letter just now. I had Kanti’s letter expressing his happiness on the Rentia Baras Day. It is not worth sending to you. I don’t bother him since he has no time to spare.

It is good that you went to hospital. Khurshedbehn had written to me. I should of course be glad if you helped her.

I myself never undertake a pilgrimage. There is so much hypocrisy prevailing in places of pilgrimage. I know several persons who have been to Mecca Sharif. I couldn’t see that they had regained health by going there. But since you have the faith, why should I stop you? By all means go, and return more firm of mind, healthier and (free from attachment). What more need I say?

I am leaving for Kashi today. I shall spend two days there and then a few hours in Rajkot. I reach Ahmedabad on the 30th. The patients here are now free from fever. Get well soon.

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N.359

8. TALK WITH AN ENGLISHMAN

[Before October 24, 1936]

A friendly Englishman asked Gandhiji the other day a question which rather surprised me: “You are a Gujarati, you belong to Gujarat. Why should you have selected a Marathi-speaking part for your work and experiments? And why Wardha of all places?” Gandhiji was no less surprised, but he calmly replied:

I do not belong to Gujarat, I belong to the whole of India. Wardha I selected because it afforded so many facilities for work. There is Jamnalal Bajaj who is interested in my programme of work and my experiments, and he gave me his valuable garden and his garden-house for the Village Industries Association of which I made Wardha the headquarters.

Harijan, 24-10-1936

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
9. ALL-ROUND RISE?

Sri Krishnadas Gandhi of Maharashtra Charkha Sangh informs me that the rise in the spinners’ wage has necessitated a rise in the twisters’ wage. Experiments are therefore now being made how without raising the price of khadi the efficiency of the twister can be raised so as to enable her to make 3 as per day. He has therefore started using the double spindle Magan Rentiyio for the purpose. If all the workers engaged in khadi production will work with the spirit that fires Krishnadas Gandhi and a few such workers, we shall attain the ideal rise in wages in all the departments of khadi without putting an undue strain upon the consumers purse. And if we succeed in giving the full wage to all the khadi artisans, we should have no difficulty in reaching the level for all other village industries. What is needed is a scientific spirit that will take nothing for granted, that will brook no laziness of body or mind, that will have an undying faith in its mission. All work is dead without faith.

Harijan, 24-10-1936

10. BUFFALO v. COW

Those who are engaged in saving the cow from the swift destruction that awaits her if measures are not taken betimes to save her, are often confronted with the question whether, apart¹ from the religious sentiment, the buffalo is not the cheaper animal to keep. As a layman I have always hazarded the opinion that the cow is the cheaper to keep, at any rate in the long run, that it is impossible to save the two animals, and that if we would but concentrate attention on saving the cow, the buffalo will take care of herself. But if the cow goes, the buffalo will never be able to take the cow’s place and the struggling, starving farmer will have in the deprivation of the cow and her male progeny a handicap that will leave him prostrate. Those who are interested in this important problem will get some help form the following opinion² of Sardar Datar Singh M.D.D.(Eng.) of the Montgomery Dairy Farm sent to me by a friend.

Harijan, 24-10-1936

¹ The source has “even apart”
² Not reproduced here. It gave reasons why the buffalo was not an economical animal.
11. LETTER TO MARGARETE SPIEGEL

ON THE TRAIN,
October 24, 1936

CHI. AMALA,

Mira and Nanavati had been ill, and so the delay in replying.² They are now better. I am on my way to Benares. I return to Segaon about 5th November. I reach Ahmedabad on 30th and [shall] be there for four days at least. I hope you understand my corrections. Of course you need milk and butter and so do you need fruit. Take it as medicine to save more expenses.

Love.

BAPU

Spiegel Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

12. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

ON THE TRAIN TO KASHI,
October 24, 1936

CHI. JETHALAL,

I have had no free time, as I was busy nursing Mirabehn and Nanavati. Now they are better. I have found some time in the train as I am going to Kashi. I have read your letters. I have decided to write to the Home Member myself. Let us see what happens. I shall write in Harijan also at the opportune moment. I could never abandon this thing.

You can certainly bring the craftsmen to the Exhibition. But the expenses for bringing them will have to be borne by you. It has been decided not to spend more than Rs.5,000 for the Exhibition this time and so all who come will meet their own expenses. The Committee will bear the expenses of their lodging and boarding. If there is any profit after these expenses are met, it will be distributed among those who would have incurred the expenses. If you bring any tools or have them made, I shall arrange for their sale up to Rs. 200 at a profit of 20 per cent over their cost price. This would give you a net profit of Rs. 40. I am interested in testing the strength of the Gandhi tools. I am of course making other arrangements. You must also find out what is possible at Jalgaon and other places. How can I have the time for it?

¹ This was in reply to the addressee’s letter dated October 1, 1936 written in Gujarati.
² This sentence is in Gujarati.

Blessings from BAPU

[PS.]
I shall return to Segaon between 5th and 9th November.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9857. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat

13. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM K. JERAJANI

ON WAY TO KASHI,
October 24, 1936

BHAI KAKUBHAI,

On the basis of your letter, I have written about silk and khadi for Harijan. I can get no free moment at all while in Segaon. How could I, therefore, possibly write even a postcard to you? Your sales have been wonderful. Go on writing to me when you think it necessary.

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10839. Courtesy: Purushottam K. Jerajani

14. SPEECH AT BHARAT MATA MANDIR, BANARAS

October 25, 1936

The temple contains no image of any God or Goddess. It has only a relief map of India made of marble stone in it. I hope this temple, which will serve as a cosmopolitan platform for people of all religions, castes and creeds including Harijans, will go a great way in promoting religious unity, peace and love in the country.

I can hardly express my sentiments in declaring open this shrine. I have left Segaon, and my dear patients and my work in the village, to come to Kashi in obedience to the irresistible call of love—love which, in Saint Mirabai’s language, is as soft and fragile as a

1 Vide “Silk and Cotton”, 7-11-1936
2 Gandhiji performed the opening ceremony in the afternoon before a vast gathering of over 25,000 people which included Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Parsis, Jains, Buddhists and Harijans from all parts of the country.
3 This paragraph is from The Bombay Chronicle.
weak thread, but as strong as life itself. It draws men together from thousands of miles, and I could not possibly resist Shivprasad’s affection. I am in no way worthy of opening the shrine, but Shivprasad’s affection has made me forget my limitations. Babu Shivprasad lives on the bank of the Ganga which purifies his body, but even in his heart flows another Ganga—that of emotion and imagination. One can fly on the wings of emotion and imagination right up to Heaven, and also sink to hell when they are unhealthy. Shivprasad’s pure and noble imagination has prompted him to think of the shrine of Mother India and to dedicate a portion of his wealth to its making. In the temple about to be opened he has given a concrete shape to his imagination which he conceived in Prof. Karve’s Home for Widows. He rallied craftsmen, sculptors and engineers who could appreciate his sentiment. There was a time when he had despaired of life, but God has enabled him to live to see his dream take shape.

As I was asked to perform the opening ceremony in the morning, and as I listened to the chanting of the Vedic mantras, I thought of a verse in our morning prayer which we have been repeating now for 20 years: ‘Mother Earth, Spouse of Vishnu, ocean-clad and mountain-breasted, I bow to Thee. Forgive me the touch of my feet.’ It is this Mother Earth to the service and devotion of which we are dedicating ourselves today. The Mother who gave us birth was bound to die some day; not so the Universal Mother who bears and sustains us. She must die some day, but when she passed away she would take all her children also along with her. She therefore demands a life-long dedication. Shivprasad had dedicated this shrine for the worship by all, irrespective of creed. He had imposed no conditions whatsoever. Everyone who loved Mother India was welcome to the shrine to offer his or her worship according to his or her light and capacity. Therefore, I could not resist Shivprasad’s affectionate summons. Let us all forget our divisions and differences.

---

1 The Bombay Chronicle report here has: “Gandhiji added that he was not fit to perform the opening ceremony of the temple, but as Pandit Malaviya’s blessings were with him he set his hands to it.”
2 Shivprasad Gupta had seen a relief map of India at Karve’s Home for Widows in Poona.
3 This paragraph is from the Gujarati in Harijanbandhu. What follows is from the “Weekly Letter” in Harijan.
4 The source has “closing”.

8 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
sacrifice them at her feet and bring the purest of our service to her. Shivprasad’s dream has, thank God, been realized. May God also be pleased to fulfil his heart’s desire—the ceasing of the strife of all warring creeds and opinions and interests and may He let him live long enough to see the fulfilment.

_Harijan_, 31-10-1936, _Harijanbandhu_, 1-11-1936, and _The Bombay Chronicle_, 26-10-1936

15. SPEECH AT BANARAS

_October 25, 1936_

It strikes me as peculiarly inappropriate to ask a man like me to make this presentation¹. I am wholly unfit for the task². I am neither a Hindi scholar nor a poet. I do not even like celebrating jubilees of great or small people. If we must celebrate somebody’s jubilee we should do so when he is no more among us.

I regard it as peculiarly inappropriate if not impertinent for people to present great men with a book of what I should call certificates of merit. I therefore refused to contribute anything to the Commemoration Volume; but the word Mahatma covers a multitude of disqualifications and so, I suppose, I was asked to present the Volume. It is my innermost conviction that a man cannot be called a poet or a Mahatma or an avatar so long as he is alive³.

Ramchandraji was not considered an avatar during his lifetime. Tulsidas’s birth anniversary was not celebrated when he was living.

It is we who have made them avatars. After all the _Gita_ maxim, “To work thou hast the right, not to the fruit thereof”, applies peculiarly to poets and Mahatmas. I should therefore have a bone to pick with Maithilisharanji if he were to believe that he was a great poet of India.⁴

So this anniversary should have been celebrated when the Poet was no more. People would have then known that something was being done for honouring him. You will please forgive me. When Padmanarayanji came to Segaon I told him that it was not decent to

¹ Of a commemoration volume to Maithilisharan Gupta who had completed his fiftieth year
² This sentence is from Ma hade v De sai’s “We ekly Letter” in _Harijan_, 31 -10- 1936
³ These paragraphs are from _Harijan_.
⁴ _ibid_
go about collecting opinions on a reputed poet. Such a poet’s work does not call for an expression of opinions. If ever I had delivered myself of an opinion on Gurudev or Malaviyaji or Dwivediji, it was always under pressure. If you ask me, I have never felt like writing about great men.

The fact that I did so on former occasions is no reason why I should repeat the mistake. If you also press me I might write something for you too, but not willingly. I know Maithilisharanji very well. Even if I refused to write about him he would not misunderstand me. I had the honour of having his hospitality in Chirgaon.

A poet writes under inspiration and not to the dictation of anyone. He therefore does not write for applause. His work is its own joy and compensation.¹

[From Hindi]
Sampadakke Pachchis Varsh, p. 86, and Harijan, 31-10-1936

16. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

KASHI,
October 26, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

I have not been able to write to you before now. I have just got good news from Munnalal about you both.² I hope you are well both in mind and body. It is a matter of joy that our weaknesses exhibit themselves as a warning to us. Therefore the memory of the last day’s incident should bring you joy only.

Prabha is here.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6366. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9832

17. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

October 26, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I just got the wire about you. Keep growing day after day. Do

¹ These paragraphs are from Harijan
² The reference is to the illness of Mirabehn and Amritlal Nanavati.
write to me.

Kakasaheb is here. Take up the dilruba when your strength returns.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10721

18. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

October 26, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

Your telegram came at the expected time. Be patient in all that you do. There my . . .

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8594. Also C.W. 7002. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

19. LETTER TO MOTILAL ROY

IN A MOVING TRAIN,

October 26, 1936

DEAR MOTI BABU,

I had your affectionate wire as also your letter about the debt. Neither you nor I can afford to be satisfied till the whole debt is paid. I send you for your consideration the latest letter from Annada Babu. It is [a] serious matter if the kahdi delivered has not been priced at the market rate. And how should you ask for a certificate till the debt is discharged or a settlement arrived at to the satisfaction of the council?

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 11047

---

1 Illegible in the source.
2 Of the Pravartak Sangh
3 In the source the letter is damaged here.
20. LETTER TO EDMOND AND YVONNE PRIVATE

AS AT SEGAON, WARDHA,
C.P. INDIA,
October 26, 1936

DEAR BHAKTI AND ANAND,

Your dear letter has just come into my hands. You need not have included yourselves among those to whom my appeal for sparing me was addressed. Letters from informal friends and co-workers like you living in distant lands are always welcome.

That you cannot come again to India owing to your duty keeping you there is no cause for regret. Where hearts are one, physical separation is of no moment.

Truth and ahimsa are truer than many so called scientific facts. Only they are difficult to put into practice. And then too, they are not so difficult as they seem if there is the proper previous preparation. But we do not care to give this most important thing in life more than a part of our leisure hours. Our valuations need revising.

Mira, of whose serious illness you must have read, is out of the wood. She is still weak.

This is being written in a moving train.

Love to you both.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2338

21. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

ON THE TRAIN,
October 28, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

This is my 2nd letter¹ during travelling and only to tell you that you are never out of my mind. Hope the progress of both continues. I had a very busy day in Delhi doing quiet work. Ba is with us. Manu remaining with Devdas. It is delightfully cool in Delhi just now. Devdas is much better.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Tomorrow Rajkot. 30th Ahmedabad

From the original: C.W. 6367. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9833

¹ The first having been written on October 26
22. LETTER TO SYED MAHMUD

ON THE TRAIN,
October 28, 1936

MY DEAR MAHMUD,

This is being written in a moving train. I hope you got my previous letter written to you on a cursory glance at your note. Now I have read it carefully. There is one very big historical error in it. You will evidently think that the vast majority of Mussalmans are immigrants and their descendants. The truth is just the opposite. The vast majority are converts and their descendants and therefore inheritors of the Vedic civilization and culture. And why should not the immigrants take pride in the achievements of the ancestors of the original inhabitants? Your note contains several other glaring inaccuracies and faulty conclusions or inferences. I detect much haste in its preparation. I wish I had time to point out these. But I have no time. You should reread your note and perhaps you will detect some errors yourself.

To conclude, I should even now refuse to go to heaven without Mussalmans nor has my effort for unity abated in any way. Only my method is different but deeper and more substantial. The result is in God’s lap.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N.5078

23. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

ON THE TRAIN, PALANPUR,
October 28, 1936

CHI. KANAIYO,

Of all your fellow-students you alone seem to have remained firm so far. I believe that you have thereby lost nothing whatever. May God grant you the strength to remain firm for ever. May you live long.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

1 Vide “Letter to Syed Mahmud”, 19-10-1936
24. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

ON THE TRAIN,

October 2\,8, 1936

CHI. MUNNALAL,

All of you must be working without strain. Both of you men are, I trust, cheerful. Yesterday I waited for your letter and telegram in Delhi but neither came. Now I shall see what I hear from you at Rajkot. I am not writing separately to Nanavati today.

Balwantsinha must be doing well and I expect you both have mixed as well with each other as milk and sugar.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8593. Also C.W. 7001. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

25. ADDRESS TO HARIJAN WORKERS

RAJKOT.

October 29, 1936

Gandhiji said to them that in view of cases of impurity of Harijan workers having come to his notice, he had been confirmed in his conviction that no Harijan ashrams should look to the central office for any financial help; that they may be, if they would; under the discipline and control of the Central Body; and that the impurity had so far alarmed him that he had not the courage to ask individuals to support these institutions financially. It was the clearest duty of those in charge of these institutions to put the public at ease about the purity of the institutions before they approached them for financial help.

Harajan, 7-11-1936

\(^1\) This digit is illegible in the source. Gandhiji was at Delhi on the 27th. This was evidently written the next day.

\(^2\) This and the following two items have been extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
26. SPEECH AT VITHAL KANYA VIDYALAYA HOSTEL, NADIAD

October 30, 1936

I ought not to have been asked to speak on this occasion, inasmuch as my presence is enough to show that the institution has my blessings. Besides, I already blessed the institution when I came here last year to lay the foundation stone. But now that I have been asked to speak, let me say that my blessings are conditional. I should like to impress on those in charge of this institution, the teachers and the girls that the institution will not last without a moral foundation. The workers should all be selfless workers and the education imparted here should be true education, that is to say, which draws out the best in the character of the taught. Every one of us has good inherent in the soul, it needs to be drawn out by the teachers, and only those teachers can perform this sacred function whose own character is unsullied, who are always ready to learn and to grow from perfection to perfection. The girls also will have to be receptive, they will not think of showing themselves off but of enabling their teachers to draw out the best in themselves. I have had bitter experience of institutions of this character and therefore hesitate to bless newly opened institutions. I am even doubtful about the teachers needing my blessings. Some of them, I dare say, think of me a back number, not in touch with the spirit of the age and modern tendencies and not at all competent to speak to the modern youth. Well, let those who think like that reject what I have said.

Harijan, 7-11-1936

27. TALK WITH STUDENTS

NADIAD

October 30, 1936

The girls of the institution gathered in the afternoon to give Gandhiji their yarn spun on the occasion of his birthday. There were boys, too, of the Vallabh Vidyalaya of Bochasan. The girls gave 122,475 yards of yarn but, what is more, 60 of them took pledge to spin 100,000 yards during the year for their own clothing needs.

1 Jamnalal Bajaj declared open the hostel.
2 On May 31; vide “Speech At Inauguration of Vithal Kanya Vidyalaya, Nadiad
3 Vithal Kanya Vidyalaya
[GANDHI:] You know that Seth Jamnalal Bajaj has opened your hostel today. You must try to be worthy of that good man. You perhaps know that he is a good man?

[GIRLS:] Oh, yes.
No ‘oh, yes’ but ‘yes, please’.
‘Yes, please,’ they shouted in a chorus.

But if he is a good man, what about the rest?
Everyone is good.
Not including you?
We are good, too.
All, without exception? Are you sure?
Yes, Sir.
Well, then, now tell me if any of you tell lies.
‘We do,’ said some of them.
Always or on occasions?
On certain occasions.
And don’t you quarrel?
We do.
Always?
‘Yes’, which was drowned in hearty laughter.

Well, but I must say that you are good, because you are ready to confess that you sometimes tell lies and quarrel amongst yourselves. And the rest of us are also good only in that sense and no other. But what about those who go about saying that everyone must tell the truth but who, themselves never do so?

They are hypocrites.

That’s perfect. Let us never be hypocrites. Now, one more question. You have taken a pledge to spin 100,000 yards during the year. What if you break the pledge?
‘No fear,’ they emphatically protested.

But if you do?
‘We know we will not,” they rejoined with even greater emphasis.

But supposing you do?

(One voice) ‘Fasting !’

Who is to fast? I or you?

We of course.
Fasting on milk and fruit?
No, Sir, We shall take only water.
But how many days will you fast?
So long as we do not finish our promised quota.
Splendid. But know that there are reporters here who will publish this talk of ours and you will have to rue it if you fail.

Then came the turn of Vallabh Vidyalaya boys—boys of the Dharala community who are being taught and given their board and lodging free. The teacher presented to Gandhiji cloth woven out of the yarn spun from slivers carded on the 12th of October, from cotton purchased out of the wages they had earned from carding. The teacher said that the boys did cleaning and sweeping of the streets as well.

Every day?
No, we did so on Gandhiji’s birthday.

Well, I tell you, if you do it every day you will make Bochasan a model village from the standpoint of sanitation and you may some day be Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel. Even if you fail to be Sardar Vallabhbhai, you will have done something good. But you may take it from me that if you do not do this street cleaning, you will never be Sardar Vallabhbhai.

But,’ said one of the boys, ‘ours is a bad village. It does not deserve these heroic measures. We may clean the streets, but they will go on spoiling them.’

Now, now, don’t say so. All villages are like that, and it is our duty to persevere the more, the more they persist in defiling the streets. And you must not forget that you belong to the village.

Harijan, 7-11-1936

28. SPEECH AT MUNICIPAL GIRLS’ SCHOOL

AHMEDABAD,
October 30, 1936

My heart is in Segaon. I am not interested in such things although I used to take interest in them before my life turned in a different direction.

He added that women’s education should aid development of womanhood whereby women might lead pure life.

The Bombay Chronicle, 31-10-1936

1 At the inauguration of the building.
29. VOLUNTEER BHANGIS

Let not the word Bhangi frighten any reader as it does many. [The] Bhangi is probably the most useful member of society. Its health depends more upon proper sanitation than perhaps on proper food. Needless to say I am not thinking of the Bhangi caste. I am thinking purely of the occupation that the word ‘Bhangi’ connotes. I regard the scavenger’s or the cleaner’s as a noble ‘profession’, nobler than the professions known as ‘honourable’. They may easily become dishonourable; this never can.

Well, Shri Appa Patwardhan who is an M.A. has become commander of a corps of volunteer Bhangis which he is trying to form for attending to the sanitation of the Congress camp at Faizpur. The issue before the Reception Committee was whether to employ professional Bhangis or to have the sanitation attended to by volunteers. Someone pointed out that at the previous Congress the work was done by the town Bhangis. But the volunteer scheme won the day. The task could not have been allotted to fitter hands. Appasaheb has qualified himself for it by long previous training and, what is more, by his love of the most despised member of society. His love has not been purely sentimental. He has done the work of sanitation side by side with Bhangis, and he knows that proper scavenging is as much a science as any other. He has invited applications for the free services of two hundred persons not under 18 years of age for the work. They must be willing and ready to attend to the cleaning of latrines and the whole camp while the Congress work lasts. They must be zealous youths who won’t neglect the duty entrusted to them for the sake of seeing the tamasha or the Congress delegates at work. Theirs will be the privilege of making the work of the delegates possible by attending to their sanitary comforts.

Maharashtra is a bee-hive of good hardy workers. It should not be difficult for the province to supply two hundred good and true young men to do the work. Not that young men from other provinces may not apply. But for the sake of economy, if nothing more, it is better to have young men from the province and, better still, the taluq or the district in which the Congress is held.

_Harijan_, 31-10-1936
30. WHOSE IS THE HUMILIATION?

From a long letter of a worker among Harijans I take the following paragraph:

There is a growing discontent on the part of educated Harijans to call themselves Hindus. Because if they say they are Hindus, they have to disclose their caste also, and the inferiority complex makes this unpleasant. They would rather call themselves Christians than undergo humiliation by calling themselves Hindus. Why may we not then ask them to become Sikhs or Buddhists and end the humiliation? For Sikhs and Buddhists are as good as Hindus.

The correspondent gives up his case when he says that Sikhs and Buddhists are as good as Hindus. For if that is so, there is no occasion to prompt Harijans or anyone else in the direction. Any Hindu is free to call himself a follower of any one of the innumerable Hindu sects and yet remain Hindu. And why should a Hindu disclose his caste if he does not want to or if he has renounced caste? Many Hindus do not believe in caste. I have endeavoured to show that caste is no part of Hinduism. Varna is not caste, it is class. A man may call himself a Brahmin, i.e., a teacher of religion, if he is one in fact; or a Kshatriya, i.e., a soldier, if he is one; or a Vaishya, i.e., a merchant or a farmer, if he is that; or a Shudra, i.e., an employee, if he is one. These divisions are not castes but classes and have reference to callings. There is no such class as untouchable. Hence an untouchable is not bound to say he is one. He may say if he wishes that Hindu society has regarded him as such but he does not recognize that distinction. I may say that though I have been classified by Hindu society as belonging to the Bania caste, I am not that, as I do not believe in caste, but that if I must call myself anything more than mere Hindu, I am a Harijan by choice, having made, so far as in me lies, common cause with Harijans.

And why is there any humiliation in a Harijan disclosing his classification made by Hindu Society? Surely the humiliation is of the society that reduces its members to the condition of helots, consigned to ghettos and shunned by society. The very education of the Harijan should make him proud of the fact that he can truthfully call himself a Hindu even though so-called higher castes have denied their religion in their lives and persecuted him in a manner beyond description. If untouchability is destroyed root and branch and Hinduism lives, the future historian will assign the place of honour to Harijans who will have stood by their faith in spite of heartless persecution by their fellows. Each time, therefore, a Harijan has to say what he is classed as in Hindu society, the humiliation is not his but of his persecutors—the so-called caste Hindus.

_Harijan, 31-10-1936_

31. SPEECH AT LABOURERS’ MEETING, AHMEDABAD

October 31, 1936

In 1918 some workers had become indifferent and had also weakened. To carry on a strike for twenty-one days—remaining peaceful, not even throwing a little stone at anyone—is a hard test for anyone. You passed through the test lasting 21 days. Then you weakened somewhat. Do you know what I had to do then and what the results were? For 21 days you carried the banner on which were written the words” Unbreakable Vow”. Every day I asked you to remember God and do everything with Him as your witness; otherwise the time would have come for a person like me to die. As on the banner, so in the heart, “Unbreakable Vow” was written. You had all lost heart but you played your part well. Anyone who wishes to keep a pledge should take it only after due deliberation and recognizing his limitations. One should know one’s own capacity and, as the saying goes, “You should stretch yourself according to the length of your bedspread.” Do I need to explain this to labourers? For you always huddle up when you go to sleep. Everyone should have a seven-foot long bed; the labourer’s may well be made of coir strings and the rich man’s have silk webbing. The rich may have a painted cot and yours may be [made of] babul wood, but everyone needs to stretch himself full length while sleeping. I can see that this is not the case today. Where is the room in your house for such a bed? Some of you may have it, but the majority do not. And, moreover, even if there is room for one such bed, the houses are not big enough to hold beds for your mother, wife, children, sister, and so on. You live in hovels. You have always to live huddled up as one does when shivering with cold. You have not room enough even to stretch your legs. At present this is the case everywhere. Here too we are able to huddle up. We do not have the strength to soar high into the skies. Means have been invented for killing thousands of people with an explosion from the sky, but I do not want such power. We should not even wish for it. Even if it were possible to acquire the strength to destroy everything by a whiff, I would refuse such strength. But we should have the strength to keep a pledge, if we have taken one. It is enough if we secure this strength.

We are all children of the earth and it is only if we keep our vows that we can live on this earth preserving our self-respect. You had for twenty years that capacity to keep your vow. If tomorrow you lose this capacity which is your capital, you shall have lost your twenty years’ earnings. It would be an asset if you could keep it unto death; otherwise all your achievements will come to nothing. Today there are multi-millionaires who become insolvent and take poison to end their lives. Isn’t that so? A vow is worth more than a hundred millions. Its value can never be measured. You treasured that capital for twenty years. With the interest on it, it must have now doubled or trebled itself. We, however, cannot live on interest. We should be satisfied with what we have. It is enough that our principle remains intact. However, when this capital is lost you will become bankrupt.¹

The question facing you seems to be this: whether you have grown in strength or the mill-owners. If the mill-owners close the doors against arbitration, you may have to resort to a strike. They may want to try your strength. Now I should like to suggest to the mill-owners that if you grow in strength, they have nothing to be afraid of. If they grow in strength you have everything to be afraid of.

But let us see what differentiates us from the mill-owners. Their strength lies in their wealth. Ours in our capacity to work. Whereas they have the strength of money we have the strength of labour. They depend upon their money, we upon our labour. If labour did not co-operate with capital, not a single mill could function. If you and I do not work in their mills, your brothers will go and work there. They will be able to procure workers with the help of money, threats, coercion or force. But the co-operation of labour will have to be secured. Otherwise their mills will come to a standstill. It is labour that holds the key. The labour union may not have it but you, the labourers do have it.

Although there may be crores of you, what could you do if you had no capital? What could you achieve if you had crores of rupees but not the talent to use them? You will also need people to manage these mills. I should not be able to run the industry even if someone gave me a crore of rupees. I would know how to use the sum for Harijan work or for producing khadi. But I cannot run a model mill.

¹ The paragraph that follows is from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter” in _Harijan_
It may well happen that a mill-owner might hand over a mill to me if I pleaded with him to do so. But even if someone did it I would not have the capacity to run it. I wish you to acquire this capacity some day. But in twenty years you have not acquired it, and in another twenty you may not be able to do so. It may well happen that one labourer may learn the trick and make the others his slaves. But the working class as a whole does not have this ability today. If you believe that you have now developed this capacity, you will no longer require a leader. I do not think you have it. And the day you do so, there will cease to be two isms. If you have it today, you have become capitalists. Capital and labour will become one when you become aware of your own capital. I am imagining a time when we shall bring about such a situation through a vow and this would be done not by breaking the heads of capitalists. Let those who preach class war say what they will. If I appreciated what they said, I would become one of them. However, even if I came to profess class wars I would while doing so have to bring in many of my fads such as non-violence, truth and so on. To me, of course, these are invaluable principles and not fads.

Even if we fight mill-owners, we are not to bear them ill will. If we fight them, we should do so in the same way as we would fight our father, mother, wife or children. We should struggle against them in the same way and for the same reason, as lovingly and reluctantly and with as much respect and politeness as we do against our blood-relations. The lessons which you learnt twenty years ago have still to be kept in mind. Mill-owners belong to the opposite camp. But we have to consider others besides them. Those who are known to all as blacklegs are traitors. Within no time they undo the labour of years. Instead of fighting them, we should plead with them, reason with them. It may well happen that they do not listen to you. It is all right if they walk away after hearing you; it would be even better if they came over to your side, but even if they do not, we have to bear with them. There is another union here. It has sent me an open letter. Its substance is that you should merge in that union. Otherwise there will be two unions. I agree that in a place like Ahmedabad there is no room for two unions. It is easy to undo the work you have been doing for twenty years; it is not so easy to carry it on. If you wish to undo it, the Sabarmati is handy. It may be that one may become a president quicker in the new union, you may even achieve some success, but do not yield to that temptation. The protagonists of class war may claim that co-operation is harmful. For us, co-operation is the first lesson.
When non-co-operation with the Government was advocated it was not implied that there could be no co-operation in future. In fact non-co-operation with the Government was launched so that co-operation could at last become possible. The day the Government becomes the servant of the people we should certainly co-operate with it. Similarly, these people—mill-owners—can become our friends, but that will be when they give up their ism.

My association with you is a lifelong one. If unfortunately you have to non-co-operate, it should only be in order to return to co-operation. If we do not co-operate, both the parties will suffer. You will be put to hardship for nothing and the mill-owners too will suffer loss. It is my desire that Ahmedabad should become a thousand times greater than it is today and the prestige this city has today should be greatly multiplied. It is a heterogeneous place. It is my function to bring about harmony among its varied elements. It is the function of us all. It is not for us to accentuate distinctions; it could be the work of class war enthusiasts. We should on our part plead with them to bear with a single union.

I am one of the arbitrators and as such I may not say anything regarding justice or injustice. After all I am an optimist. I hope you will not be obliged to resort to a strike. The mill-owners have not thrown their reason into the Sabarmati that they would be prepared to fight it out. If for twenty years they regarded this course of action as harmful, would it become all right overnight? I shall strain every nerve to avert a crisis. However, what shall I do if the strain tells on the nerves? I shall then understand that God is going to give us a test. God perhaps wants to see whether or not the labourers keep their vow. Only then will it be known whether your pledge was a flute made of a carrot, which could be eaten if it did not work, or a real flute. Will a drunkard, a gambler or a dissolute character be able to keep his vow? We are after all your servants. We shall suffer for your sake. We shall receive blows along with you, if that becomes necessary. However, it may happen that we shall be spared and you alone will be beaten. If you are beaten, we will nurse you. You yourselves will have to bear the final burden. We are only going to help you when you bear that burden. Whatever you do, do it intelligently and not through blind faith.

---

1 The Bombay Chronicle reports here: “He was optimistic. He believed that they would not have to go on strike. Sheth Kasturbhai Lalbhai, the President of the Mill-owners’ Association, was going to see him today.”

I believed that the key to swaraj lay with the labourers; but I now feel that it is not with them alone. Swaraj will not come so long as our poverty is not wiped out. The magic cure for achieving this is in Segaon—in the villages. It is a village of six hundred people. Three out of every four persons there are Harijans. It has no railway station. I have settled there because I believe it is untouched and not for my own pleasure. The happiness of the poor, of Daridranarayana, is all my pleasure. They do not get even rotlo. And if they do, it is of poor quality, unbuttered and savoured with dirty salt. I can testify to this. We must find out how we can rid them of their misery. How can it be done while sitting here? You are in a much better position than they. There are no chawls, no schools, no hospitals like yours. Even for Mirabehn, no doctor would be available if we looked for one. On both sides there would be patients suffering from infectious diseases, and we lying between them. My faith, however, grows day after day.

The people of Segaon hold the key to your liberation. You are well aware of your plight. Those who have this awareness are not unhappy. But one who is not conscious of his plight is truly unhappy. He is himself a slave but knows not that he is one. His predicament is such that if you put ghee on his bread, he will get stomachache. As you go farther from Segaon, you find the villages more and more exploited. If I find the magic cure, I shall achieve everything. I am not fond of making speeches. If you depend upon me, I shall prove a false support. You will have to forget me. I am going farther and farther away, and my interest in you is drying up because you do not have that key. I shall have to go far to find that key. For me, there is no other happiness. There is only one joy for me and that is to get a glimpse of God. This will be possible when I become one with the poor. I can be one with the whole world if I can merge myself in the poor people of a poor country. This is my defence before the public. I am running away only to find the right key. I have been a villager for years. I am a villager by temperament. I am therefore happy there. You cannot afford what I can. Today I am being tested. I do not know whether or not I shall be able to live for a year in Segaon, how then can I advise others?

---

1 Tenement houses
I have run far away. I have now served you notice not to depend upon me. Even if I have a telegram that I am needed, I may refuse to come. Even if the mill-owners request me to come, I may say no. Anyone who comes to Segaon will get whatever services I can give. My sadhana and my samadhi are at Segaon. Even if the people of Segaon throw stones at me, my place will be there. At first, they did not even let me have water, now we are on slightly better terms. But the way is not clear. I am not the person to run away from the thorny path. I shall sleep there as I would on a bed of flowers if I could get one. You have to depend upon your own strength. You shall triumph if you fight with God’s strength; if you fight with mine, you will fall into the ditch. We are all servants, we serve to the best of our capacity. You should depend upon your own and God’s strength.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 8-11-1936, and Harijan, 7-11-1936

32. SPEECH AT GUJARATI SAHITYA PARISHAD

AHMEDABAD,
October 31, 1936

What Bhai Munshi told you was not quite true. He told you that in 1925 I resolutely turned down the offer and refused the presidency and further said that if such a request was repeated I would plead helplessness. So far so good. But Munshi hastened to add that on this occasion I had accepted the presidency as resolutely as I had declined it earlier. But this is not a fact, it is far from the truth. I was then not worthy of this honour and I am much less so now. I was not at all eager to accept this honour. However, I have accepted it, but reluctantly. I came because I was faced with a dilemma. When friends from whom I expect to take work put some burden on me, I persuade myself to assume it.

After accepting it I feel ill.1 I sent word asking to be excused and suggesting that they should go ahead with this session without me. But as I am a Mahatma, who would accept this suggestion? Who knows in whose heart I may be a Mahatma! However, to my own self I have already become an alpatma.2 The Mahatma’s word did not avail.

1 On December 7, 1935; vide “Letter to Fulchand K. Shah”, 7-12-1935
2 One with a small soul, as opposed to mahatma.
Once I fell ill and could not attend the session. And now another difficulty came up. Two of my friends in Segaon fell ill and I thought that if I failed to go, I would now be an alpatma for the alpatmas too. The Shastras say that a commitment made under certain circumstances may not be operative under certain other circumstances. But I am in the habit of keeping my word to the letter; so I have come. But the patients have survived and I am sitting here.

I had hoped that, before coming to the Conference, I would gather all the literature and read it and prepare my speech after reading it all. Today, however, I am bankrupt. I could not prepare my speech and sent word that they should not hope for a written address. At Segaon, I could not leave my patients unattended; I had then hoped for some peace in Rajkot, where however, every minute was occupied. When I came here, I learnt that there was a conflagration—the dispute between the mill-owners and the labour was raging. I had also hoped that I would look through something at night. I even had the necessary material sorted out, but I was engaged in important matters right up to the time of my arrival here. Hence I have not even made the necessary preparation for an impromptu speech. Has the conference ever made a worse choice?

This is said to be the twelfth session. But I am afraid I won’t be performing the twelfth day rites\(^1\) of the Conference! That inauspicious word has fallen to my lot. I am however in fact lucky. Various kinds of hopes are kindled wherever I happen to go. It is hoped I would help give things a new form. And if this happens, will it not be as good as doing away with the present idea of the session? I have received some Press clippings\(^2\). Twelve amendments to the constitution have been sent to me. Although I have gone through them, I have come here without studying the constitution. Hence if some legal pundit raises any problem, I shall be perplexed.

There are twelve items before us on today’s agenda. My speech is one of them. All these have to be completed before half past five.

---

1. The pun is on barman which as an adjective means ‘twelfth’ and as a noun ‘the twelfth-day rites after death’.
2. There had been much criticism in the Press about the so-called ‘undemocratic’ character of the constitution of the Gujarati Literary Conference, and it was also said that the constitution was too rigid or too cleverly drafted by Munshi to permit any improvement.
Having made these introductory remarks, I express my gratitude for the burden imposed on me. Even if the master gives a kick, the servant apologizes to the former and admits that he had made some mistake and had to be kicked. My masters number 33 crores. They have not elected me to serve them but I regard myself as their servant. You too are included in those crores. And, you are doubly my masters as you have elected me. However, I have come in the hope that you will some how put up with me.

I have been unable to go through what appeared in the newspapers about me and the Press-clippings which were sent to me. I must, however, read the letters which I get. I should read them if only for the sake of courtesy. I am regarded as a democrat and I am one. Hence these people put their faith in me. They pleaded that Munshi was responsible for the constitution of the Conference, that it might be regarded as his monopoly. As he is a legal expert, he has so constructed it that we cannot alter a single brick. Something can be done, however, if I can shift one or two bricks. I may effect certain changes by exercising pressure, willingly or otherwise. Besides this, there were some other suggestions too. I have not been able to digest these suggestions. I believe I am a democrat and as such I understand what can be democratic and what not. Even when the Congress constitution was drafted, someone objected that they did not want to pay four annas as membership fee. I told them that if they had a conscientious objection to paying the fee, they need not want to be members of the Congress. Supposing we had a people’s bank—not the usual type of a business concern, but a real people’s bank—how should we run it on democratic principles? We should have to employ there men not democratically elected, but men of proved integrity and character, ready to work for the people’s welfare. Then take the instance of High Courts, which we will have even under Ramarajya. Must the constitution of a High Court also be democratic? Even under true democracy there will be institutions which, in the interests of democracy itself, will have to be run on other than democratic lines. I do know where democracy can function and where it cannot. Similarly, literary conferences too cannot be run on wholly democratic lines. . . .

1 The following paragraph has been taken from the English version published in Harijan.
Though I am joking, I want to talk to you of serious matters. But by telling you of such things, should I make you cry? I do not have such seriousness. I should be incapable of such seriousness even if I was about to be hanged. Hence, even if I make you laugh, you must listen to me in all seriousness.

Although I am a democrat, I say such conferences cannot be run on democratic lines. They may have the spirit of democracy, but not its procedures. I shall be dead by the time the children, women and old men who are now regarded as totally illiterate come to understand the meaning of democracy. But those who will be living then should remember that democratic practices cannot apply to such an institution. If they were applied, it would cease to be democracy and become mobocracy. Hence I must say all this in all humility to those who have written to me asking me to make these changes if I want democracy. This however does not mean that the present constitution which is the creation of Munshi is his monopoly. I have read that constitution. I am famous for drawing up constitutions at a moment’s notice. But I am hardly a legal expert! Hence my language is that of the villager, but I can mould it so that both legal experts as well as the common man can understand it. I have not yet mortgaged my senses, I can therefore say that Munshi has no monopoly in this constitution.

You say it has been framed with such consummate cleverness that no one may change a comma or colon in it. I refuse to believe it. No such constitution has ever been drafted. There is no constitution through which one may not drive a coach and four if one so wills. I do not know of a perfect constitution having ever been drafted. Perfection is the attribute of the Almighty, and yet what a great democrat He is! What an amount of wrong and humbug He suffers on our part! He even suffers us, insignificant creatures of His, to question His very existence, though He is in every atom about us, around us and within us. But He has reserved to Himself the right of becoming manifest to whomsoever He chooses. He is a Being without hands and feet and other organs, yet He can be seen by him to whom He chooses to reveal Himself.

We are a subject nation and Munshi is one of us. Munshi cannot conjure into being a constitution of the kind you suggest. But even in Russia, Italy and elsewhere there is no constitution which cannot be altered. Constitutions may indeed be upheld by force of arms, but a flawless constitution is an impossibility. I shall therefore make certain suggestions in order to help you to introduce whatever changes you deem necessary. All that will be under the constitution. You will please trust me to suggest a proper via media.

---

1 The two paragraphs that follow have been taken from the English version published in Harijan.

I have a suggestion for those who wish to make changes in the constitution of this Parishad. Worth-while amendments cannot be made within these two days. However reluctantly, I am the president. I know the President’s prerogative. And, I am well aware of the responsibilities, But who is the real president?

Turning towards Anandshankarbhai:

This Vice-president is the real person. I am only a figurehead. He had written to me that he would spare me although I was the President. Hence he will take care of all that is to be done. The constitution cannot be amended in a couple of days. Nor can we burden Anandshankarbhai with this responsibility. In order that the Conference may not come to nothing—and this shall not happen so long as I am the President—I shall summon all the skill that I can and recommend amendment of the constitution. But I cannot be sure that I shall succeed. Whatever I shall point out will be in conformity with the constitution. I would never say anything deceitful. I have always had the strength to tell the plain truth straight. I shall point out those changes which may be made in a straightforward manner, in a manner which will be a hundred per cent straight.

Now, my address. What should I say to the litterateurs? Of me. Sir Chinubhai has already said that I am neither a scholar nor a literary figure. However, I am the Kulapati of the Vidyapith; I was instrumental in having the Jodanikosha prepared. Sir Chinubhai referred to the Vidyapith in the past tense. I shall beg leave to inform him that the Vidyapith still exists and will continue to exist. It is not a passing phase. The Vidyapith will continue to function so long as we do not forget the mantra of swaraj. The Vidyapith may become a mobile institution like the Ashram. Someone happened to donate two and a half lakhs of rupees, and there was a building. But would not the Vidyapith have functioned had this building not been there? The Vidyapith existed even when there were no funds. It was founded in the past, it exists in the present and shall do so in the future. It has undergone transformations and these will continue. Gidwani¹ is no longer there, nor are Kripalani² or Kaka. There are villagers in it. But may only scholars run the Vidyapith? A man may well be a villager. He should be a villager at heart and not merely posing as one. There is a community in Kathiawar called Validas who will perform any part they are asked to perform. It is not people such as these but those who truly have the heart of a villager who can run the Vidyapith. The Vidyapith is not meant for the painted dolls and dandies of Ahmedabad. Bhai Ambalal’s daughter³ may have joined it. But the Vidyapith is not a ‘depot’ to which dolls would come to be decorated only to be ‘delivered’ to their parents just as they had come, i.e., returned to their care. The Vidyapith has been formed to build up countrymen and countrywomen. They do not know how to do it, but they are trying all the same. Of such people, it is said in the sixth chapter of the Gita, that they will not ‘meet with a sad end’.⁴ This is a Divine assurance and it must apply in the case of the faithful. Through its contribution in the past, the Vidyapith has fully rewarded those who donated funds to it. But, Sir Chinubhai, I wish to tell you that, if the Vidyapith has fully rewarded donors, you will see that it will also continue to do so in the future.

---

1 Chancellor
2 Gujarati Dictionary

Now with regard to the Conference. What should it do? What hopes should I have of it? Kaka had written nine pages for my benefit about this. Although I have gone through these, I cannot recall anything. Dr. Hariprasad wrote a letter, but it is running around somewhere. It must be safe somewhere but I could not get at it when starting for this place. I asked him to write it down again. He did and sent it to me but I received it after I had gone to bed and I have not brought it here. Hence, I cannot give anything that he has suggested. Such is my misfortune. Do I have the time to cook and lay the table? But, whatever I say just now is appropriate for me, if not altogether so. Because I speak what comes from my heart, without gilding my words.

The Chairman of the Reception Committee has lightened my burden. He has repeated to you what I had earlier told the Literary Conference. he did so on the assumption that perhaps I might have to

¹ Choithram Gidwani
² J.B. Kripalani
³ Mridula Sarabhai
⁴ Bhagavad Gita, VI.40
whip you. But, would a devotee of non-violence resort to whipping? I would not possess a whip. I had then been only polite.¹

For whose sake are we going to have our literature? For Kasturbhai & Co.? For Ambalalbhai or Sir Chinubhai? Not certainly for the great gentry of Ahmedabad. They can afford to engage literary men and have great libraries in their homes. But what about the poor man at the well who with unspeakable abuse is goading his bullocks to pull the big leather-bucket? Years ago I had asked Sjt. Narasinharao,² who I am sorry is too aged and ill to be here in our midst, if he could give me something, some inspired tunes or ditties, which this man at the well could lustily sing and forget for ever the filthy abuse in which he indulged without knowing that it was abuse? What can I say to him? Anyone who is a poet should approach him. Munshi is a novelist, he cannot do so. Only an extraordinary artist can go and persuade him. A couple of words here and a couple of words there and he would put the thing in a way that he will be able to catch the meaning. And, Ramanbhai³ is not even alive today.⁴

That man belonged to Kochrab, where we had the beginnings of our Satyagr Ahashram. But Kochrab is no village, it is a slum of Ahmedabad. Jivanlalbhai had a bungalow there. Who else but a ghost like me would go to live there? Moreover, who could have given him a higher rent in those days? But they wanted me to stay there and so Jivanlalbhai offered me his bungalow and Sheth Mangaldas promised monetary help. Now I have hundreds of such folks for whom I want real life-giving literature. How am I to do so? I live in Segao today where in a population of 600 a little over ten are literate, certainly not more than fifty, very likely less. Of the ten or more who can read, there are scarcely three or four who can understand what they read, and among the women there is not one who is literate.

The place is absolutely untouched by Wardha. I would have moved farther away had that been the case. There we have only malaria. But I have an understanding with malaria that it cannot stay on wherever I go. There are many puddles there. But I came across a ¹ The following paragraph has been taken from Harijan, with a sentence or two from the Gujarati.

² Narasinharao Bholanath Divatia
³ Ramanbhai Nukanth
⁴ The following paragraph has been taken from Harijan with some addition from the Gujarati.
wealthy person who had a road built. People like Anandshankarbhaji could not have visited the place under the conditions prevailing six months ago.²

Seventy-five per cent of the population are Harijans. I have to justify my position as Kulapati of the Vidyapith. Now I thought of setting up a little library for them. The books had to be of course within their understanding, and so I begged a dozen school books from two or three girls who had no use for them.

I could make you laugh a great deal if I spoke to you about the authors of those worthless text-books and I could talk about them for hours but we don’t have the time.

The place is a part of Maharashtra. There is not as much illiteracy as in Gujarat, but Segaon is almost entirely illiterate. I have with me a young man who is an L.L.B. but who has forgotten all his law and cast in his lot with me. He is from Gujarat but knows some Marathi. He goes to the village and reads to those who come to him from these books whatever they can follow and digest. He takes a newspaper or two with him. But how is he to make them follow our newspapers? What do they know of Spain and of Russia? What do they know of geography? The place which houses these books worth three and a half rupees is such that one cannot sit under the roof during the monsoon. If anyone applied a match-stick, it would go up in flames. It was really Mirabehn’s hut. Mirabehn is a self-sacrificing person but foolish. I had told her that she would not be able to live in a place where people defecated. I would live only on the outskirts. I must have pure air, pure water and pure food. That is my condition for living in a village. Fortunately the open place where I live is not used by the people for answering nature’s call. But in that hut belonging to Mirabehn we set up a library.

What am I to read to them? Munshi’s novels? Or Krishnacharita which Sjt. Krishnalal Zaveri has translated from the Bengali? It is a good book but I am afraid I cannot place it before these illiterate folks. They would take time to understand it. This is unfortunate no doubt but ought not you writers to know it from me? Who else will tell you this?

¹ Jamnalal Bajaj
² What follows is taken from Harijan, with some extracts from the Gujarati.
³ Munnalal G. Shah
You must know that much as I should have loved to bring with me a Segaon boy here, I have not done so. I would have brought one if I paid his fare. But what would he do here? He would find himself in a strange world. But I am here as his representative, as those village folks’ representative, unsolicited, unelected. That is true democracy. I shall one day ask you to go with me there. I am clearing the way for you. Of course the road is strewn with thorns, but I shall see that the thorns will not be without roses too.

As I am speaking to you just now, I am put in mind of Dean Farrar and his book on the life of Christ. I may fight the British rule, but I do not hate the English or their language. In fact I appreciate their literary treasures. And Dean Farrar’s book is one of the treasures of the English language. You know how he laboured to produce that book? He read everything about Jesus in the English language, and then he went to Palestine, saw every place and spot in the Bible that he could identify, and then wrote the book in faith and prayer, for the masses in England, in a language which all of them could understand. It is not in Dr. Johnson’s style but in the easy style of Dickens. Have we men like Farrar who will produce great literature for the village folk? Our literary men will pore over Kalidasa and Bhavabhuti, and English authors, and will give us imitations. I want them to go to villages, study them and give something life-giving. If, while enjoying such works they develop consumption, sprue or blood-pressure, they will still be tempted to go on. If then they set out to write books for the villages, their works will be as diseased as they are themselves. Villages have no use for such persons. They need thoroughly practical men such as described by Narmadashankar. Those who go and live in villages as true villagers are needed there more than persons like me who go there with their own thermos flasks; such persons can provide living literature to the people.

Men like Ravishankar Raval splash their brushes comfortably in Ahmedabad; what would they do if they went to the villages?

Though I was happy and proud to see what I saw in the exhibition this morning, and felt that I had not seen anything of the kind before in Gujarat, let me tell you that I missed what I would call a painting that speaks. Why should I need an artist to explain a work of art to me? Why should it not speak out to me itself? I tell you what I mean. I saw in the Vatican art collection a stature of Christ on the Cross which simply captured me and kept me spell-bound. I saw it five years ago but it is still before me. There was no one there to explain its charm to me. Here in Belur in Mysore, I saw in the ancient temple a bracket in stone made of a little statuette which spoke out to me without anyone to help me to understand it. It was just a woman, half-naked, struggling with the folds of her clothes to extricate herself from the shafts of Cupid who is after all lying defeated at her feet in the shape of a scorpion. I could see the agony on the form—the agony of the stings of the scorpion. That at any rate was my interpretation of it, though Sjt. Ravishankar may have another to offer.

I could speak on to you for hours telling you what I want. I want art and literature that can speak to the millions. I have given you an outline of the picture. You will fill in the details. I have said my say. My heart is weeping at the present moment, but time has made it hard enough not to break even when there are occasions for it. As I think of Segaon and its skeletons.

At this stage he did, however, break down! After a little pause he continued: as I think of Segaon and its folk, I can’t help saying that our literature is a miserable affair. Principal Anandshankar Dhruva sent me a list of a hundred books, but none of them would do for them. What am I to place before them? And their women! Is there any relation, I wonder, between them and the Ahmedabad ladies I see in front of me? The Segaon women know no literature. They cannot even repeat the Ramadhun with me. They simply know how to drudge and slave away. Reckless of sun or rain, of snakes or scorpions, they fetch water, they cut grass and hew wood, and look upon me as their benefactor if I give them work and a few coppers. They don’t have an Ambalalbhai to help them with a few coppers. What am I to take to these dumb sisters? Those dumb millions do not live in Ahmedabad but in the Indain villages. The five percent who are literate have a vocabulary of hardly a hundred words or two. I know what to take to them. But I cannot tell you. I am no speaker, neither is the pen my profession. I have written what I have, because I could not help it, and at one time I was dumb, so much so that my friends used to call me a dunce, until I went to the courts where too it was with difficulty that I opened my lips. It is not my business to speak or to write. My business is to live amongst them and show them how to live. The key to swaraj is not in the cities but in the villages, and so I have settled in a village—a village, too, which I did not go seeking, but which came to me.¹

Likewise I had not gone around looking for satyagraha. Many of the women from this village gave their love to me much against my will. If, however, I were to accept their love, my vow of faithfulness to my wife would be put to shame; hence, I regard them as my mothers. I know them as such and worship them as such. I invite you to the temple of these mothers.

Turning towards Keshavlal Dhruva:

Keshavlalbhai, I invite you too.

[K.] Then please grant me longer life as well.

But then I also must live equally long. There is not much difference in our ages.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 22-11-1936, and Harijan, 14-11-1936

33. LETTER TO VITHAL L. PHADKE

AHMEDABAD,

November 2, 1936

CHI. MAMA,

Please explain my predicament to the Harijan brethren who would be disappointed at my not coming. My soul is in Segaon, and I came here because I had to. I will leave for Segaon as soon as the work here is finished. I shall certainly try to come to Godhra if God grants me another opportunity.

There is nothing wrong in putting away the money that the Harijan brethren have raised for the temple. Only it should be seen to that it is safe. It should bring in interest which should then be added to the principal. The simplest possible temple of my imagination would be for us to find a priest with a pure heart and the place where he conducts the worship should be our temple. We may make this idea as vivid as we like. We should not be in a hurry to spend money on building a temple. It would be all right spending money, if there was any, on building a temple if it could be used as a place of worship, a school, a meeting place for village elders and a public resthouse. For the rest, if we would only realize it, we all carry a temple in our hearts.

¹ The paragraphs that follow have been taken from the Gujarati.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3837

34. SPEECH AT THE CONCLUDING SESSION OF THE TWELFTH GUJARATI SAHITYA PARISHAD, AHMEDABAD

November 2, 1936

At the outset, I must thank you all. Ordinarily, a president always expresses his gratitude, but I do not do so as a matter of tradition. I came here because of your love for me. I did not even give you the time which I should have given you. I made an extempore, undigested speech. For this, I should beg your forgiveness. I express my heart-felt gratitude to you for having put up with me.

It is not that I do not like to read good essays. I have some interests which I cannot satisfy. A good many of these have become extinguished, but those that are still alive will keep showing up on every occasion so long as I have not been able to see God. Anandshankarbhai told me that a poetry symposium was held here and even young men participated fully. I had wished to go to the lecture on the archaeological work in Indore. But I neither went to the lecture nor attended the poetry symposium. What can it be but generosity on your part that you have put up with all these failings of mine?

On hearing about the donations for prizes, I was reminded of Carnegie who endowed a large library in Scotland. Professors in Scotland told him: ‘If you want to make a donation, why insist on a library? You know about business; what can you know of these matters?’ I, too, would tell our philanthropists that if they want to make sure that their money would be well spent they should give us donations without attaching any conditions.

Today, we have a spate of novels. Reading of novels has become a passion. These are sprouting like mushrooms. If you want to know how a novel is written, I can tell you a good deal about it. But it cannot be described before civilized men and women. One’s imagin-

1 A summary of the speech by Mahadev Desai was also published in Harijan, 21-11-1936.
2 Vide “Speech at Gujarati Sahitya Parishad”, 23-10-1936
ation can run riot, it knows no restraints. However, we can do without these novels. The Gujarati language will not be widowed without them. At present it is indeed in a state of widowhood. When I went to South Africa, I took some Gujarati books with me. Taylor’s Gujarati Grammar was one of them. I liked it very much. This time, too, on the critical night before the Conference, I had taken it out in order to read it. But where was the time to read it? I remember the epilogue to that grammar. Taylor asks in it, “Who said that Gujarati was inadequate?” “Gujarati, the accomplished daughter of Sanskrit, how could it be inadequate?” And he concluded: “As the speaker, so the language. “It is not its inherent poverty that Gujarati reflects but the poverty of the people speaking it. That poverty cannot be wiped out through novels. Our language is hardly going to be redeemed through an increase of books like Nandabatrisi.

I live in a village and so I can acquaint you with my hunger as a villager. While doing my matriculation I read a book on astronomy, but no one then asked me to look at the sky. Kakasaheb is a man of keen interests. In Yeravda jail, he used to gaze at the stars every night. I wondered what he could be gazing at. But after his release I too asked for books on the subject. I wanted a Gujarati book and I even found one although worthless. But how could that appease my hunger? Could we not give to our villagers a book on astronomy which they could understand?

But not to speak of astronomy, do we even have books on geography which they could understand? The fact is that we have not paid any attention to the villages. Although we are dependent upon them for our food and clothing, we behave as if we were their masters. We have given no thought whatsoever to their requirements. Is there any other country which is so impoverished that it carries on its business in a foreign language while ignoring its own? It is for this very reason that our country continues to be poor and our language is in a state of widowhood. There is not a single book in French or German, which soon after its publication is not translated into English. Abridged versions of the best classics are produced in large numbers for children. Have we anything like that in Gujarati? If that were the case, I would bless it. I had wanted to introduce a resolution on this subject, but now I shall be content with merely making the suggestion. I entreat our writers to begin writing for our dumb masses rather than for our city-dwellers. I am the self-appointed representative of that dumb public. On their behalf, I ask you to take a plunge into that field. You may be writing entertaining stories but these are not going to make any impression upon their minds. We have a school for village workers. I asked its teacher to study the tools used in a craft before teaching it, to understand how a basala\(^1\) is made. If you wish to develop your mind, you should study village implements, understand their good points and bad points and then write about them. Those whose minds are fresh will find new things to see and to learn in villages. It is not true that your mental development becomes stunned when you go to the villages. My reply to those who say this would be that they must have gone there with close minds. Actually the village, and not the city, is the place for the development of the mind.

I shall say something here which I said yesterday in the Subjects Committee. I received a letter from Shrimati Lilavati Desai on behalf of the Jyoti Sangh. Although I approve of the substance of the letter I did not like its language. Its substance was that what was written about women was painful to them. The description of women which was found in current literature was a distorted one. These women in exasperation asked whether God had created them in order that men could describe their bodies? When they were dead would they embalm their bodies? There was no reason to believe that they were created to cook and clean utensils. Someone had picked out some striking quotations from Manusmriti and sent these to her. He had picked out from Manusmriti whatever disparaging things could be said against women. Some women, poor soul, themselves admitted that they were helpless, uncouth and like cattle—but for this reason, could that description apply to all women? Why could not someone else have interpolated such ugly verses in Manusmriti?

Now these women ask the question why they are not described as they really are. They are neither Rambhas, celestial maidens, nor slave girls. They too are independent human beings like men. Why should the latter describe them as if they were dolls? Why do not men think of their mothers when they talk of women? There was a time when a large number of women stayed with me. In South Africa I had become a father or brother of women belonging to about sixty families. There were pretty women as well as plain ones amongst them. Although these women were illiterate, I brought out the courage in them and they went to jail as bravely as men.

I ask you to change your point of view. I am told that current literature is full of apotheosis of women. I do not want such wrong apotheosis, such descriptions of \(^1\) Carpenter’s tool used for trimming wood their eyes, nose, ears and other features. Do you ever describe your mother’s features? I suggest that before you put your pens to paper keep your mother before your eyes. If you do that the literature which will flow from your pen will be like the rain which nurtures the thirsty mother earth. But today,

35. ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

SABARMATI,
[November 2, 1936]¹

Q. The work of removing untouchability seems to be insuperable. How exactly are we to tackle it?

A. Silent plodding. I better tell you how I am doing it in Segaon. I do not preach to them, but work away never thinking of the result. The one condition is that you should not harbour untouchability in any shape or form. I have made it a point to have as many Harijans about me as possible. They come as servants but they soon know that they are brothers to us. We tolerate no distinction between Harijans. Though I cannot present you with tangible results of this silent service, I may safely say that there is a marked change for the better among all—Harijans and the orthodox Hindus.

Q. It is not quite easy for the Harijans to leave their village where they feel like doing so, as in Kavitha. How can they get work?

A. I still adhere to my advice. We should be ashamed of asking them to stay on in the village and suffer the continuing persecution. It should not be impossible for us to find work for them. The number of those who will migrate will never be large.

Q. The Bhangis’ lot is pitiable in many places. How can they secure their elementary rights from Municipalities?

A. They must know that they are not bound to serve under all conditions. They may leave the work if the Municipality will not listen to them. But we have to settle down in their midst and educate them and not make reckless attempts to drive them to strike work. They must be taught to know that they have friends. Whilst they like others have the right to go on strike, they should know its limitations. They should be taught to regard their work as equally dignified with all other social services. I have no doubt that they are the most neglected social servants and deserve every assistance we can render them.

¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The questions were asked by a group of Harijan workers of Gujarat and Kathiawar who were spending a month at Harijan Ashram, Sabarmati, learning carding and spinning.

² The date is from Gandhi: 1915-48

Q. What is the outlook, in view of the precarious financial position of our Ashrams and institutions today?

A. It is not our financial position but our moral position that is precarious. You know the instances of moral lapse that have occurred. Purity is the only social foundation. No movement or activity that has the sure foundation of purity of character of its workers, is ever in danger of coming to an end for want of funds. Then we in Gujarat have to realize that we must not always depend only on our monied men. We have to tap humbler resources. Our middle classes and even poor classes support so many beggars, so many temples, why will they not support a few good workers? We must beg from door to door, beg grain, beg copper coins, do as they do in Bihar and Maharashtra. In Maharashtra they have paisa funds and mushti\(^1\) funds. It will be the finest form of propaganda among caste Hindus. But remember everything will depend on the singleness of your purpose, your devotion to the task and the purity of your character. People won’t give for such work unless they are sure of our selflessness.

Q. What about the Harijans turned Christians who are today no better than Harijans?

A. Everything will be all right the moment untouchability disappears. When there is no untouchability, there will be no occasion for them to label themselves otherwise than as Hindus. I am talking of nominal Christians. If we put our own house in order, we need have no anxiety about Harijans changing religion as people change clothes.

Q. If it is impossible to get the caste Hindus' co-operation in antiuntouchability work, would it not be better to take up the village industries work?

A. That is a delusion. You may be sure that he who gives up Harijan work on a pretext like that will be able to do less for the village industries work. You can’t settle down in a village and miss the Harijans who are the foundation of society.

_Harijan_, 28-11-1936

\(^1\) Literally, ‘a handful’
MY DEAR IDIOT,

You have been good in that you have been sending me letters without receiving anything from me. I had simply no time after leaving Segaon. And in Ahmedabad I was washed out. Last night there was hardly 3 hours’ sleep for I had to detrain at 12 p.m. at Baroda to see the Tyabjis and entrain at 2.30 a.m. for Surat. On the train for Baroda I had to revise Mahadev’s notes and so there was no time to sleep on the train. Thank God it is all over and now I have made up for the lost rest. For I have been sleeping off and on since 8.30 a.m. I have commenced attending to correspondence only just now (4 p.m.).

I had a long chat with Lady Vidyagauri, Hansa¹ and others. I had no time to talk to Mridula² after the interview and not at all on the Conference matter. I have now written to her³.

I am glad S[hummy]⁴ has agreed to your being with me for two months. Let us hope and pray that you would be all the better in health for being with me. Ba’s hut is being built. She went with me from Delhi. She will leave A[medabad] today for Bombay and pass about a week with Ramdas who is not keeping extra well. She will be there about a week. Mahadev will also be going to Bombay tonight. He had a touch of fever. I have kept very fit in spite of overwork. I wish you were with me for some functions which were interesting.

I had gone to Rajkot not to see my sister, though she, too, is there. I had gone specially to see my aged cousin⁵ and his wife⁶, Kanu’s⁷ grandparents who gave all his [sic] children for the cause.

¹ Hansa Mehta
² Mridula Sarabhai
³ The letter is not traceable.
⁴ The addressee’s brother, Col. Shumsher Singh
⁵ Khushalchand Gandhi and Devkunvar
⁶ ibid
⁷ Second son of Narandas Gandhi
Of course you are going to stay with me in Faizpur.

Both the Segaon patients\(^1\) are doing well. They require hardly any nursing. For the most part they are now able to help themselves. What a trail we have all gone through. All’s well that ends well.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3750. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6906

37. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

ON THE TRAIN, November 3, 1936

BHAI KASTURBHAI,

I have gone through the papers concerning Gordhanbhai’s demands. He has no right to ask for the money. Assistance can be given for the labourers’ school in Nadiad but its [accounts] should be scrutinized and the school should function under the supervision of the Majoor Mahajan and your association. Such is my firm opinion. The correspondence suggests that, according to the resoultion passed, a trust-deed should immediately be made.

I am returning the papers.

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

38. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

November 3, 1936

CHI. MRIDU,

I am returning the letter you had given me. Narmada\(^2\) and Ramnarayan saw me. Both of them said they would come to me, would try to understand each other and perhaps follow my suggestion, that is to say, they would break the marriage bond. I have no doubt that this is an unholy marriage. Their account of it suggests only that. Now, if Narmada wishes to live with you according to her understanding with you, have it in writing and then keep her with you. Narmada need not come to me at all. Of course, she does not

---

\(^2\) Wife of Ramnarayan Pathak understand her own mind in the least.

You told me that you had written a letter to Rajkumari inviting her to stay with you. She has not received the letter. I have written to her that it is impossible that you would not even reply to her letter. I do not insist that you should invite her if you have not done so. But you should at least write to her.

Vidyabehn¹, Sharadabehn², Hansabehn³, etc., had come to me. They tell me that you not only refuse to join them in their work but also carry on a campaign against them. I told them that I could understand your not joining them but that I was not aware of your carrying on any campaign against them. If you think it is proper, meet them in this connection or inform them about whatever you may be doing. Or you can write to me.

I have not been able to understand the meaning of the comment about Pramodabehn’s temple. If you have understood it, write to me. I did want to talk with you, but it could not be done.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G. W. 11202. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

39. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

SEGAON,
November 4, 1936

CHI. KANAIYO,

Send me the takli and some books, such as the Ramayana, lying there. I don’t find Meghaduta, etc., and the small pencil, too, in the luggage. These are not things one should have to search for. When Lilavati comes here she should bring no box, but only useful clothes and other things.

If there are any woollens among my clothes there, I want them.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

¹ Vidyagauri Nilkanth
² Sharada Mehta
³ Hansa Mehta
40. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

November 4, 1936

BHAJ PARIKSHITLAL,

Concerning the financial position of the Harijan Ashrams, you should start doing as I suggested in my reply. A defeatist outlook here will lead us nowhere. Work should at once begin on the lines I have suggested, and then it should be continued in the manner of the charity box kept in Shriji’s temple. I hope you know of Shriji’s box.

I am very eager to discuss in Harijanbandhu such questions as you have asked but I am not able to manage it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 4029. Also C. W. 140. Courtesy: Parikshitlal L. Majmudar

41. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

November 4, 1936

CHI. NARAHARI,

The haste this time, and the crowds, were terrible. So, too, the number of accidents.

I could not even have a look at the Ashram. How could I when my mind was in Segaon?

I keep on receiving complaints from Rajaji. Give him the enclosed letter. I have asked Joshi of Bhavnagar to discuss his scheme with you. It will be very nice if there is something worth while in it. Let me know.

Deliver the accompanying letters.

It still pricks me that I was not able to spend some time with the girls.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9099
42. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
November 5, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Well, I returned yesterday in good order and condition and found both the patients in a fit condition.

I hope you got my letter written on the train and posted at Bhusaval.

No more time to say more.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3751. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6907

43. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

November 5, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I had been anxiously awaiting your letter which I got today. I read it myself and there was hardly a word which I could not decipher. Tell Bari\(^1\) that I did get the honey but did not realize that it was sent by him. Hope he is all right.

I follow what you say about your health. I told you that you could come to Segaon when you got well. How does it mean that you should not do Khurshedbehn’s work? I should be glad if you did. I do give you the permission to come but I shall like it better if you take up Khurshedbehn’s work. What I should like most is for you to be fully recovered. Even the nails should be healthy. You will be able to share other people’s sufferings if you yourself are healthy. If you don’t regain health, you will make others suffer for you.

Ba will pay a visit there. There is good news from Delhi. Manu is there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 360

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 3-11-1936
\(^2\) Abdul Bari, addressee’s brother
44. LETTER TO J. P. BHANSALI

November 5, 1936

CHI. BHANSALI,

I was very glad to have your letter. I certainly do not want you to give up any of your vows. But a vow means a good vow, i.e., one fit to be taken. Your vow to eat only uncooked starchy foods is a bad one. One who eats unripe bananas would be regarded a monster. You should know that it is the same in the case of uncooked wheat. Why should you withhold anything when you have entrusted everything to me? When you have enough faith to entrust your future to me why can’t you entrust your present, too? I do expect penance not only from you but from all. I am therefore, not asking you to pamper the palate when I ask you without hesitation to make some necessary changes in your diet. On the contrary I want you to build up your body so as to exact hard work from you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/II

45. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

November 5, 1936

BHAIBAPA,

I didn’t of course get the Gujarati letter, but I got the English one today. The wire will be despatched tomorrow and this, too, will be posted only tomorrow.

I feel that even writing a confidential letter is very risky. Whatever we want to do can be done only after the proclamation is issued. And even after it is, it will be befitting to have the celebration only in Travancore. It would be too much to give it too big a publicity outside the State. However, we shall be able to organize a movement all over India if the proclamation is up to our expectations. Whatever it may be, we should not be impatient. For my part I don’t at all believe that all temples will be thrown open. It will not be dharma but a mere administrative measure if the main temples are not thrown open. Calculating policy has no place in dharma. We must show a sense of proportion.

BAPU

1 By the Maharaja of Travancore, throwing open temples to Harijans: vide “An Example for Hindu Princes and Their Advisers”, 16-11-1936
46. LETTER TO VAKIL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 6, 1936

MY DEAR VAKIL,

I am thankful for your transparent letter just received. I have been in touch with spiritualists for years including, I think, Rishi. I do not disbelieve their experiences. But I know that the spirits which talk to them are themselves not infallible. They are blind guides leading the blind. It is of no moment that they say they are not harmed by these conversations. That the spiritualists who hold them are harmed I see daily. I have painful experiences of some of them becoming unhinged and those who seem to have retained their faculties have certainly suffered weakness of mind.

If one has faith in God, one should be independent of these spirits than whom there are undoubtedly higher orders of beings. Contact with these spirits is a hindrance between God and ourselves. I may not carry this argument any further.

I would like to know why your guide misguided you and became the cause of so much anxiety to others.

Your letter shall be treated as you desire. Do you wish it to be withheld from Mahadev, Pyarelal, and the like? Your wishes shall be strictly respected.

Yours,

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

47. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

November 6, 1936

CHI. NARAHARI,

I am enclosing Lalji’s letter. Ponder over it. In the first place, Lalji has to divorce that girl. We should speak to her parents, and also to the girl. We should speak to Lalji’s father also. I feel that it was improper on the part of Lakshmi to have spoken directly to Lalji. I don’t think we should agree to the proposal too readily. If everything is done rightly, the alliance won’t hurt me. I cannot understand why Mama’ gave in. Make a thorough inquiry and write to me. Do consult Lakshmidas, Parikshitlal and others.

1 This is not traceable.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9100

48. LETTER TO LALJIBHAI

November 6, 1936

CHI. LALJI,

I have sent your letter to Naraharibhai. Tell him everything. The task is not as easy as you think it is. The only thing you have to take into consideration is the well-being of the girl. You should also take into account the feelings of your parents and her parents. Why should you not be satisfied with the girl? What is your objection to her? You have learnt the dharma of self-restraint. Tell me, would I have any objection if this contemplated union was in keeping with the needs of propriety?

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3297

49. TELEGRAM TO R. SRINIVASAN

[After November 6, 1936]

MY ADVICE MISUNDERSTOOD. WHilst I REPEAT ADVICE TENDERED TO HARIJANS I DARE NOT INTERFERE WITH POLITICAL BODIES WHO ARE APPROACHED BY HARIJANS FOR GUIDANCE DURING ELECTIONS. IT IS FOR YOU TO PRODUCE ATMOSPHERE OF SUCH CONFIDENCE THAT NO MORE THAN FOUR MOST DESERVING MEMBERS WILL APPEAR FOR THE PANEL.

_The Hindu,_ 20-11-1936

1  V. L. Phadke
2  This was in reply to the addresssee’s telegram of November 6, regarding the interference of the Congress in the Scheduled castes elections.
There is a subtle rivalry going on just now between hand-manufactured silk and khadi hand-made from cotton. So far as the A.I.S.A. is concerned the matter was settled long ago. Certified khadi stores were permitted to stock indigenous silk cloth only to attract more customers for khadi and to enable the stores to make up somewhat for loss on khadi by charging fancy prices for silk cloth. The line was often overstepped by overzealous store-keepers but never with the approval of the A.I.S.A. Now the manufacturers of silk cloth have discovered that they can easily displace Andhra khadi because they can afford to undersell Andhra saris, and now silk merchants are to be found defying the A.I.S.A. in pushing their wares. So far nothing can be said against these merchants for no one is bound to respect the policy of the A.I.S.A. unless its virtue is recognized. But in Bombay as elsewhere, too, perhaps, silk merchants have been found doing their business so as to lead the credulous public to believe that they, the merchants, are doing their business with the approval of the A.I.S.A. and in the interest of khadi.

It is necessary, therefore, to warn the public against being deceived by such devices. The public should know that the A.I.S.A. has adopted no arbitrary policy. Trade in indigenous silk had not died out when khadi revival was ushered in. Khadi can give employment to crores whereas silk hardly to more than a few thousand. Khadi is a necessity for both the poor and the rich. Silk is a necessity for none but a few who, in order to nourish a religious sentiment, insist on silk garments on certain occasions. Hence when it is a question of choice between silk and khadi, naturally those who have the welfare of starving millions at heart will always choose khadi. And the very object of the All-India Spinners’ Association requires it to give the first place always to khadi made of cotton. I say khadi made of cotton in order to avoid confusion in the minds of those who have seen the wider definition of khadi as being cloth hand-spun and hand-woven out of cotton, silk or wool. This wide definition was and is necessary in order to cover woollen and silken hand-spuns when the latter two are used not to supplant cotton hand-spuns but to supplement them. Thus in winter many people want the warmer woollen or silken stuff.
No one need run away with the idea that the policy I have advocated in these lines disregards the welfare of silk spinners and weavers. Nothing can be farther from my thoughts than this. For I know that if khadi dies, indigenous silk dies automatically. Japanese silk and the artificial imitation from the West will sweep every piece of indigenous cloth out of existence. It is the khadi spirit which has enabled Kashmir woollens and Bengal-Assam silks to hold their own. It is the far-seeing policy of the A.I.S.A. which in protecting cotton khadi against all odds automatically protects indigenous hand-spuns made of wool or silk. Put the three in competition with one another and you dig the grave of all the three. Lastly, let it be remembered that if cotton khadi lives but silk dies, the hands left idle due to the death of silk can easily take up cotton spinning and weaving, but if silk displaces cotton, it cannot employ the crores that will be without occupation or chance of it due to the death of cotton khadi. It seems to me, therefore, to be the obvious duty of all lovers of Daridranarayana to prefer cotton khadi always when the question of making a choice confronts them. It will be economical in the long run to pay for the present dearer prices for fine cotton khadi than for the corresponding fine silk wear.

_Harijan, 7-11-1936_

51. ONE THING NEEDFUL

The one thing needful for effective Harijan service and, for that matter, all service of the poor, the forlorn, the helpless, is purity of personal character in the servant. Without it possession of even the highest intellectual ability and administrative capacity is of no account. It may even prove a hindrance, whereas possession of a pure character combined with love of such service will assuredly develop or provide the requisite intellectual and administrative capacity. This reflection is prompted by the discovery of very painful instances of grave moral lapses on the part of two well-known workers in the Harijans’ cause. They were both regarded by all who knew them to be above suspicion and of unsullied character. They have both been betrayed into conduct unworthy of those occupying the positions they did. They were no doubt victims of lust that was hiding like a deadly snake in a dark corner of their hearts. But poor mortals that we are, we cannot read into others’ hearts. We can but, and we must, judge other fellow men by their acts which we can see and handle. In these two cases they are such as to make it impossible for them to remain as workers in the Harijan Sevak Sangh. This would be no punishment. Their withdrawal would be necessary for the protection of the Sangh and its cause if not also for themselves. I can safely say that it will be unnecessary for the Sangh to take any step against them. These workers will themselves retire from the Sangh and, I hope, from all public activity. The duty of service is denied to none. A person who has had a grievous moral fall but has come to his senses will serve no matter where he is placed. His very reformation will be a service of society. But performance of such service that comes of itself and is rendered almost secretly is wholly different from being in an organization and enjoying all its privileges. For such re-entry into public life a complete restoration of public confidence is absolutely necessary.

There is in modern public life a tendency to ignore altogether the character of a public worker so long as he works efficiently as a unit in an administrative machinery. It is said that everybody’s character is his own private concern. Though I have known this view to have been often taken I have never been able to appreciate, much less to adopt, it. I have known the serious consequences overtaking organizations that have counted private character as a matter of no consequence. Nevertheless the reader will have, observed that for my immediate purpose I have restricted the application of my proposition only to organizations like the Harijan Sevak Sangh which make themselves trustees for the welfare of the dumb millions. I have no manner of doubt that possession of a spotless character is the indispensable requisite of such service. Workers in the Harijan cause or for khadi or for village industries must come in closest touch with utterly unsophisticated, innocent, ignorant men and women who might be likened to children in intelligence. If they have not character, they must fail in the end and for ever damn the cause they espouse in the surroundings in which they are known. I write from experience of such cases. Happily they are rare enough for the numbers engaged in such services, but frequent enough to call for public warning and caution on the part of organizations and workers who are engaged in such services. These last cannot be too watchful or too exacting of themselves.

_Harijan, 7-11-1936_
52. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 7, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your letter. I hope this will reach you in Simla.

It is joyous news that S[hummy] denied himself aspirin for full one week and you were gracious enough to have only two tabloids during the whole Simla season. Let us hope now you won’t need even two during your lifetime which extend to 100 years.

Your sales of khadi certainly went beyond even my expectations. All this due to the effort of a mere woman—frail in body and idiot mentally !!! No, wonder poor khadi workers in Simla are trembling over the prospect of your absence during the next Simla season. But we need not worry about the future which is in God’s hands. You will give a good account of yourself no matter where you are.

Nanavati is so well that he is leaving today to pass a few days among the members of his family and friends whilst he is gaining strength. He is a wonderful worker. Mira is chirpy. Balwant Singh is weak. He must overwork himself and take chapati even when he must not.

You were extravagant in buying the thermos, the magnificent apples. But you would not be a Rajkumari if you were not extravagant. You are none the less so because you spend on others. If you counted yourself a trustee, as you should, of all you possess including your body, you would be balanced in using them even for your trust. You may not philosophically smile this simple truth away. Remember the value of a rupee in terms of the poor. It means 64 solid meals which millions do not have. Many in Segaon live on a rupee per month, i.e., only two meals a day costing one pice each. But millions do not get this much. How can you and I, knowing this as well as that I am writing this, mis-spend a pice? Will you be wise for a while? If you will become the—or a—woman of my imagination, you will have to develop all your faculties, not excluding account-keeping. And how about your Hindi?

Will you send me a good portable copy of Granth Sahib in Hindi with translation? No hurry and not an expensive volume. If getting a cheap copy is beneath your princess-like dignity or your capacity, you must leave this commission alone.

I gave Ku[marappa]’s manuscript to Mira for criticism. She read it carefully and has given me her notes. She thought it was heavy, but terse enough, some parts not convincing. I am glad you have revised it. I wanted to pass on M[ira]’s notes to Ku[marappa]. But I had no time. If it is not given to the printers, and I find the time, I shall go through the thing myself.

Enough for the day.

Love:

ROBBER

[PS.]

Andrews coming here soon.

Isn’t this good paper?

From the original: C.W. 3598, Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6407

53. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

November 7, 1936

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,¹

Arrange to send me through Bari or otherwise a copy of the Koran with Urdu translation by return of post. If you cannot get hold of a spare copy, send me the one you have with translation.

I expect you are well now. Nanavati is leaving for Bombay today.

Ba must have arrived there. You are not to go to see her. I have written to her to call on you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 361

¹ The superscription is in Urdu.
54. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

November 7, 1936

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I went through the notice issued on behalf of the Majoor Mahajan. It is all right. Be very watchful of every step you take and having taken it you should not waver.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

55. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI

SEGAON,
November 7, 1936

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

Buy a Yeravda chakra if you can-get it cheap. Otherwise I have already one spinning-wheel ready for you. Cheap means for about a rupee and a half., Have you regained your strength?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11678

56. LETTER TO BHARATAN KUMARAPPA

SEGAON,
November 8, 1936

MY DEAR BHARATAN,

I was about to write to you about the permission given to Kanu & Co. to cook their food. But Kanu mentioned today your remark made to him. Hence this letter now. Your remark was fully justified. The request had come to me before I went to Benares. I pooh-poohed it then. It was repeated on my return with greater emphasis. The reason was indifferent health. I believed it and capitulated. This is no separate kitchen. They want no facilities involving expense. They need no separate kitchen building and they must not take in guests on any account whatsoever. At the same time I have told Zaverbhai that he should not rest content with the withdrawal of these young men from his kitchen. He must so arrange that he can find suitable food for them.

Is my position clear and sound?

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 3594

57. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

November 8, 1936

CHI PRABHAVATI,

You have entirely stopped writing to me because of my tours. I returned on the 4th and am writing this after waiting for your letter. Both the patients are well. Nanavati left for Bombay yesterday to see the members of his family. Ba is in Bombay. Nimu\(^1\) has become quite weak. Vasumati has come to Segaon for a few days. Khan Saheb and Mehrtaj are of course with me. Lilavati is at Maganwadi and will be at Segaon in about a week.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3485

58. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

Segaon, Wardha,

November 9, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

You are nasty and of little faith. Why should you always know that your letters are welcome? Taken to its logical extent, it means that you have always to wire whether your letter will be welcome. Why can you not take it for granted?

So somehow or other you have succeeded in sending me an instrument case! I shall prize it when I receive it and forgive the expense of sending the yarn which shall be looked after as desired by you.

\(^1\) Nirmala Gandhi, wife of Ramdas Gandhi

Andrews must be in Wardha today.

I wish I was with you to supervise your packing. I should make short work of many of your things and ease your burden for the rest of your life. But now you must be in Jullundur unpacking.

Meher Taj is with me. She seems to be flourishing. Do write to her and send her letter with mine.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3752. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6908

59. LETTER TO NANDALAL BOSE

November 9, 1936

DEAR NANDA BABU,

Here is a wire from Shri Ambalal. What is to be done? You will excuse the left-hand writing. The right needs rest.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9796

60. LETTER TO VITHALDAS

November 9, 1936

CHI. VITHAL,

All were surprised and happy to see the excellent contribution you made in the spinning yajna arranged on the occasion of Rentia Barash¹. May you live long, make progress in the art of spinning and become a true servant of the poor.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

¹ Bhadarva Vad 12, Gandhiji’s birthday according to the Vikram calendar
61. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

November 9, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

It is good that you wrote to me. The letter for Vithal is enclosed herewith. Give him a spinning-wheel worth about Rs. 5 or khadi or books of the same value, whichever he prefers. If you find Rs. 5 too much, then make it less.

It was Vallabh’s suggestion to take Balkrishna to Jamnagar. I accepted it deliberately as I like sun-bath treatment which I understand is given to everyone at Jamnagar. I would rather that Balkrishna was given drugs orally than through injections. As Balkrishna has no preference of his own, the whole burden rests on me. I thought it proper to accept the Jamnagar suggestion which happened to present itself. I thought it a duty to do at least this much for Balkrishna, seeing that I had to do much more for others who showed themselves more impatient. Ultimately the hut is there as the last resort. However, if Talwalkar insists and he is not cured by the time, his treatment will have to be tried.

I have sent the clarification about the purse for Harijanbandhu.

I would be glad if you take up the khadi activity in Kathiawar. Maganlal Patel was chosen because an uncle only in name is better than no uncle. If you take up the work in Kathiawar and do not ask for any financial help from the central office of the Sangh, you will be able to organize your activities as you wish. You ought to have the zest and be able to see your way clearly. If you take up the work, you may perhaps be able to get more help from the Indian States. You may even make Ramjibhai take interest in the work again. For my part I leave everything to you.

I could not recognize Tara. I shall of course write to her.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Won’t you put someone under Lakshmi Prasad to learn something about medicinal herbs?

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8510. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Vide the preceding item.
62. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

November 9, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I just got your card at 7.15. I also had the note sent from Maganwadi. I shall see what to do about the honey and the bottle. I should have given you Khakharis¹ for the journey. You should increase your diet gradually. I think your weight is all right and for the present you should go up by at least 2 lb. per week. I hope you are getting fairly good fruit there.

Things here go on well. I allowed Mirabehn to have four Khakharis this evening.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI AMRITLAL NANAVATI
BHADARAN BHAVAN
MALAD, B.B. & C.I. RLY.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10722

63. DISCUSSION WITH C.F. ANDREWS²

[On or after November 9, 1936]³

GANDHIJI: Their behaviour has been as bad as that of the rest who are in the field to add to their numbers. What pains one is their frantic attempt to exploit the weakness of Harijans. If they said, ‘Hinduism is a diabolical religion and you come to us,’ I should understand. But they dangle earthly paradises in front of them and make promises to them which they can never keep. When in Bangalore⁴ a deputation of Indian Christians came to me with a number of resolutions which they thought would please me, I said to them: ‘This is no matter for bargain. You must say definitely that this is a matter to be settled by the Hindus themselves. Where is the sense of talking of a sudden awakening of spiritual hunger among the untouchables and then trying to exploit a particular situation? The poor Harijans have no mind, no intelligence, no sense of difference between God and no-God. It is absurd for a single individual to talk of taking all the Harijans with himself. Are they all bricks that they could be moved from one structure to another? If Christian Missions here want to play the game, and for that matter Mussalmans and others, they should have no such idea as that of adding to their ranks whilst a great reform in Hinduism is going on’.

¹ Thin, crisp chapatis made out of wheat flour
² Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Andrews had just returned from a visit to New Zealand, Fiji and Australia and had been, since his return, in correspondence with various missionaries. He wanted to know Gandhi’s reaction to the attitude of the missionaries.
⁴ Gandhi was in Bangalore from 31-5-1936 to 13-6-1936.

C.F.A. Let me ask one question. I said in Australia that all the talk of Dr. Ambedkar and his followers was not in terms of religion, and I said also that it was cruelty to bargain with unsophisticated people like the Harijans as they are in most parts of India. Then came the London Missionary Society’s statement that the Ezhavas in Travancore had asked for Christian instruction. I said then that the Ezhavas were quite enlightened and if they had really asked to be instructed in Christianity, it would be an entirely different matter. Was I right?

GANDHIJI: I do not think so. Whilst there are individual Ezhavas who are doctors and barristers and so on, the vast majority of them are just the same as the Harijans elsewhere. I can assure you that no one representing the vast body of Ezhavas could have asked for Christian instruction. You should ascertain the fact from our principal workers there.

C.F.A. I see what you mean. Only I wanted to say that the London Missionary Society was a liberal body and would not make an irresponsible statement.

GANDHIJI: But they at the centre cannot know, as the Parliament cannot know the truth of what is happening in India.

C.F.A. But that apart, I should like to discuss the fundamental position with you. What would you say to a man who after considerable thought and prayer said that he could not have his peace and salvation except by becoming a Christian?

GANDHIJI: I would say that if a non-Christian, say a Hindu, came to a Christian and made that statement, he should ask him to become a good Hindu rather than find goodness in change of faith.

C.F.A. I cannot in this go the whole length with you, though you know my own position. I discarded the position that there is no salvation except through Christ long ago. But supposing the Oxford Group Movement people changed the life of your son, and he felt like being converted, what would you say?

GANDHIJI: I would say that the Oxford Group may change the lives of as many as they like, but not their religion. They can draw their attention to the best in their respective religions and change their lives by asking them to live according to them. There came to me a man, the son of Brahmin parents, who said his reading of your book had led him to embrace Christianity. I asked him if he thought that the religion of his forefathers was wrong. He said ‘No.’ Then I said: ‘Is there any difficulty about your accepting the Bible as one of the great religious books of the world and Christ as one of the great teachers?’ I said to him that you had never through your books asked Indians to take up the Bible and embrace Christianity, and that he had misread your book—unless of course your position is like that of the late Maulana Mahomed Ali’s, viz., that a believing Mussalman, however bad his life, is better than a good Hindu.

C.F.A. I do not accept Maulana Mahomed Ali’s position at all. But I do say that if a person really needs a change of faith I should not stand in his way.

GANDHIJI: But don’t you see that you do not even give him a chance? You do not even cross-examine him. Supposing a Christian came to me and said he was captivated by a reading of the Bhagavata and so wanted to declare himself a Hindu, I should say to him: ‘No. What the Bhagavata offers the Bible also offers. You have not yet made the attempt to find it out. Make the attempt and be a good Christian.’

C.F.A. I don’t know. If someone earnestly says that he will become a good Christian, I should say, ‘You may become one’, though you know that I have in my own life strongly dissuaded ardent enthusiasts who came to me. I said to them, ‘Certainly not on my account will you do anything of the kind.’ But human nature does require a concrete faith.

GANDHIJI: If a person wants to believe in the Bible let him say so, but why should he disregard his own religion? This proselytization will mean no peace in the world. Religion is a very personal matter. We should, by living the life according to our light, share the best with one another, thus adding to the sum total of human effort to reach God.

Consider whether you are going to accept the position of mutual toleration or of equality of all religions. My position is that all the great religions are fundamentally equal. We must have the innate respect for other religions as we have for our own. Mind you, not mutual toleration, but equal respect.

_Harijan, 28-11-1936_
64. LETTER TO J.P. BHANSALI

SEGON, WARDHA,
November 11, 1936

CHI BHANSALI,

I enjoy writing to you. Do spin if your body can bear the strain. Continue moong and rice for the present.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

65. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI P. DESAI

November 11, 1936

CHI MAGANBHAI,

I have been able to use your letter to the full. Get hold of Harbhai’s monthly and send it to me.

By a happy coincidence, just as I was leaving, Jivanji put into my hands your work Sukhmani and Kaka’s Jivando Anand. When I started on Sukhmani it so engaged my attention that I could not put it down. I write this after finishing it—except for the “Ashtapadis”. I did that in the “Library”. What else could I have done? I have now begun reading the “Ashtapadis” too! But that I will do at my leisure. I like your exposition very much. . . .’s1 translation is good and beautiful. In the language of your essays I feel there is something lacking, though I cannot lay my finger on it. However I found your translation of the essays of Puran Singh and Vaswani quite pleasing. Only you can tell why it should be so, or maybe it is only my feeling. This is, however, an unimportant point and your book is useful for students as also others.

You have done well in raising a doubt about the words which McAuliffe puts into Guru Arjun’s mouth on the subject of the Shastras. McAuliffe has no doubt put in great labour into his work. But I suspected him as far back as 1922 when I read all his chapters in Jail. Later I heard that it was thanks to him that Hindus and Sikhs became disunited. You should write a Sikh history if you have the time and can do the necessary reading. You have to read a vast amount of literature on the subject for the purpose, move among the Sikhs, ransack the library of the Khalsa community and meet Sir Joginder Singh. Probably you know that he is a great writer. It is not a small thing to write a good history. I greatly appreciate your study as revealed in Sukhmani. I see that you are interested in the subject and therefore you may be able to undertake the task. A superficial book will not satisfy me. May be for many years to come this is the work cut out for you. In that case “Better is death in the discharge of one’s duty”.¹

1 The name is illegible in the source.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9066

66. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

November 11, 1936

CHI. KANAIYO,

When will you write to me? I have been expecting your letter daily.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

67. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

November 12, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your letter.

Why are you in a hurry to send me the shawl? Whenever it comes, depend upon it I shall wear it. Therefore deliver it yourself or send it through someone who may be coming and save the postage for a better purpose.

I won’t be any party to your becoming a miser nor can I tolerate criminal extravagance at the expense of the poor. But of all such things more when we meet.

¹ Bhagavad Gita, III. 35

62

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
There are one or two things missing in your beautiful and needful case. One of the khaddar pieces was used to dress a new Andrews’s hernia belt. Ba came in today. She is happy. Her cottage is making steady progress. Andrews went to Nagpur and returns on Saturday or thereabout.

Love.

BAPU

From a original: C.W. 3753. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6909

68. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

November 12, 1936

CHI. MANUDI

You seem to have gotten lazy. Why don’t I have any letters from you? I could stay at Rajkot for just a few hours. I reached there in the morning and left at night. I had a long meeting with Bali and Kumi. Aunt too had come. I missed you much at Ahmedabad. Ba arrived here today bringing Kana with her. Lilavati too will come, though she may perhaps have to go back on account of her brother. Vasumati is here. She will leave for Bochasan in two or three days.

If you are not specially needed there and if you wish to come here you may do so. A companion for the journey will not be difficult to get. Khan Saheb and Mehertaj are of course still here.

Mirabehn is all right. Nanavati has gone to his brother’s at Malad.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 1560. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

1 Harilal Gandhi’s daughter
2 Balibehn M. Adalaja and Kumibehn T. Maniar, addressee’s aunts
3 ibid
4 Gandhiji’s sister Raliatbehn
5 Kanam Gandhi, Gandhiji’s grandson and Ramdas Gandhi’s son
69. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

November 12, 1936

CHI. DEVDAS,

The enclosed is for Manudi. Send her here if you do not particularly need her there. Read my letter to her.

The accompanying letter will tell you if you do not already know of Harilal’s latest exploit. I do not attach any value to his letter. It seems he is not getting any money from there either. Maybe, too, he is tired of the whole thing. After I had torn up the letter it occurred to me that probably you had not come across it, so I decided to send you the pieces.

Write to me about your health and Lakshmi’s. Hope the children are well. Nimu has been quite ill at Bombay.

Do you go for walks? Do you take your meals regularly? You must do these two things.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2034

70. LETTER TO JAISUKHLAL GANDHI

November 12, 1936

CHI. JAISUKHLAL, 3

I got both your letters. I went through the account of Ramjibhai’s new activity from beginning to end. He is hardworking. Therefore his activities are bound to bear good fruit. I hope his faith in khadi has not diminished. I got the feeling that he was exhausted somewhat. Show him this letter and ask him to write to me. What is the news about Umia? 4

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI JAISUKHLAL GANDHI
RAMBAG, DHARI
KATHIAWAD

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

1 The reference is to Harilal Gandhi’s public statement of November 10, 1936, that he was seriously thinking of adopting Hinduism again.
2 Addressee’s wife
3 Gandhiji’s nephew and father of Manubehn Gandhi.
4 Addressee’s daughter
71. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

November 12, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

Your letter is very good. My right hand needs rest. I consider . . .’s error a serious one. There is certainly no place for guess-work in the matter of food. One should know for certain every item one eats. If you have the necessary facility have hip-bath early in the morning and then go out for a walk. Eat after that. Mirabehn has her bath at 5.45 a.m.; then walks two to three miles and after that she takes milk, etc.

Now keep up the quantity of rotli, ghee and leafy vegetables in your diet and increase gradually the intake of milk and curd up to 3 lb. Do not give up garlic. Take whatever honey is available there. See if you can get it in the Khadi Bhandar. However, if grapes are available honey is not so necessary. For my part, these days I take jaggery, which you saw here, with water. I may be taking about two tolas of it. I like it, but you should do whatever suits you.

I shall see about Gajanan. Now we are finding things here interesting. The experiments continue. Do not give up yours.

Harilal’s letter has no effect on me. The motive behind it is to get money out of me. However, I would not be surprised if doing that he should come to his senses one day. Of course you did well in writing to me as I knew nothing of it before I got your letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10723

72. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

SEGAON, WARDHA,

November 12, 1936

CHI. SUMANGAL,

I have your distressing letter. You may as well take it that the time when I could have people staying with me is past. Even Mahadev is not staying with me. It is impossible to have you staying at Segaon.

1 The name is omitted in the source.
What will you gain by staying at Maganwadi? In any case I am more and more drawn to crafts. It is my feeling that for getting rid of your illness you should give up writing as a literary activity. Wherever you may be, I would like to make a labourer of you. But you do not find this to your taste. It is also my feeling that you should get married and practice what self-control you can while leading a married life. Your nature being what it is I see no other course. You have been partial to me and you have felt drawn to me, but this is attachment. It seems to me that your ideal is somewhat different from mine. Therefore even if you come to Wardha you will again become restless. The best thing for you would be to forget me. If you cannot do so, keep your self away and digest what you can. Even loha bhasma can be taken only in prescribed doses, which are different for different people. The same may be said of a teacher. All teaching cannot be assimilated by all in the same quantity. Very few people have gained anything by staying near me.

I know nothing about Dandekar. It will be no use speaking to Sethji now. But if you feel it is your duty to do anything in this regard you may write to him direct. I would not wish to make reference to your letter, nor would you.

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers,. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

73. TELEGRAM TO C.P. RAMASWAMI IYER

WARDHA,

[On or after November 12, 1936]¹

I TENDER HEARTY CONGRATULATIONS TO HIS HIGHNESS THE MAHARAJA ON HIS GREAT PROCLAMATION² OF FREEDOM FOR HARIJANS.

The Hindu, 17-11-1936

¹ The proclamation by the Travancore Durbar was issued on November 12.

² For the text of the proclamation, Vide “An Example for Hindu Princes and Their Advicers”, 16-11-1936
74. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

[On or after November 12, 1936]

I tender my congratulations to the Travancore Durbar and their advisers on this overdue fulfilment of the duty of a Hindu Prince as I have always conceived it to be. I hope that this good proclamation will be carried out in letter and spirit so that Harijans may feel the glow of freedom and real oneness with their caste brethren and I hope that all other Hindu Princes will follow the noble example set by this far-off ancient Hindu State.

The Hindu, 14-11-1936

75. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

[After November 12, 1936]¹

CHI: AMTUL SALAAM,

What can I do. I do not remember anything about Harilal. Why should you not write short letters?

1. You may go to see Harilal. You can take Ramdas or anybody else to accompany you. I hope no one will prevent you. In my eyes Harilal’s conversion is meaningless.

2. I expect Kanti came to see you. It is not as if I forbade him thinking that you were no good, but he himself does not want to see you. He does not wish to enter into argument with you. What then is the sense in your insisting on seeing him? Think of Kanti’s happiness and calm down.

3. I would soon send for you if I could improve your health by having you with me, but I just don’t believe I can.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 602

¹ From the reference to Harilal’s conversion. According to Gandhi—1915-1948, Harilal became converted to Hinduism again about this date.
76. AN INTERVIEW

[After November 12, 1936]

The modern miracle in Travancore is mainly due to the influence of women, or if you please, to the influence of one woman, Her Highness the Maharani of Travancore. When I was in Travancore some years ago, I met the Maharani. She was determined to do what was the purest act of justice, and it is she who is really at the back of the Maharaja’s decision. It was a most courageous act to issue the proclamation and still more courageous to carry it out to the letter. The Maharaja could not have done it without the support of his mother. So I see the hand of woman in this miracle.

The opening of temples would not have been possible without the widest co-operation of the caste Hindus. It is a unique demonstration of the power of non-violence. I had thought that the State would at least have to post a strong police force at the main temples, and that at least a few heads would be broken. The process began with the biggest State temple, the one that the Maharaja visits himself. There was no political pressure here. It could not be imposed on a million people. I had no idea that there were nearly 2,000 temples in Travancore. I only knew that ten years ago our volunteers had been severely hammered for even crossing a forbidden road near the temple at Vaikom. Now the humblest of the humble have entered the Vaikom temple without the slightest difficulty. The proclamation did not enthuse me, though it was a solid thing. For I had feared that there might be a political motive behind it. But all my fears have been dispelled. That the orthodoxy, who used to swear by the letter of the ritual and made so much of the efficacy of temple worship being destroyed by even the shadow of a pariah, would fall in with the proclamation, is a thing I was not prepared for, so soon at any rate. But God has made possible what man could not have done.

Mahatma, Vol. IV, pp. 103-5

1 The identity of the interviewer, an American woman, is not given in the source.
2 From the reference to the proclamation issued by the Maharaja of Travancore, throwing open all State temples to Harijans
3 In 1927; vide of “Speech At Trivandrum”, 10-10-1927
77. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 13, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your long letter. I feel very sorry for Bari’s health. What is the reason of his ill-health? I got the honey and fruit as also the Koran. Why did you send the fruit? If you have so much money, why don’t you send it to me?

It will be very good if you can settle the quarrel between the two brothers. Make an effort. May God help you. How foolish you are! Who said you were bad when you were told not to write to Kanti or see him? Of late I have neither written to him nor got a letter from him. For my part I know no Diwali and how could there be any in Bombay where a holi is raging? I do not like festivals at all. Are we worthy of the festivals?

This is what I think about you. You should stay there, improve your health and then come to me. Where else can you be treated? If you are prepared to go to Bangalore, I can arrange for that. You can certainly get medical aid there. But you will not get anywhere the facilities available in Bombay. Do not even think of observing the Ramzan fast. Get well and then observe as many fasts as you like. I would have allowed you to observe the Ramzan fast at Segaon, had you recovered fully. I shall write a letter to Dinshaw if you want to consult him. What was the point in deciding to go to Mecca and giving it up soon after? I think now you have the answers to all your questions.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 363

78. OBSCENE ADVERTISEMENTS

A sister¹ sending me a cutting from a well-known magazine containing the advertisement of a most objectionable book writes:

¹ Amrit Kaur; vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 21-10-1936
The enclosed came under my eye when glancing over the pages of . . . I do not know if you get this magazine. I do not suppose you ever have time to glance at it even if it is sent to you. Once before I spoke to you about ‘obscene advertisements’. I do so wish you would write about them some time. That books of the type advertised are flooding the market today is only too true, but should responsible journals like . . . encourage their sale? My woman’s modesty is so utterly repelled by these things that I cannot write to anyone but you. To think that what God has given to woman with intent for an express purpose should be advertised for abuse is too degrading for words. . . . I wish you would write about the responsibility of leading Indian newspapers and journals in this respect. This is not the first by any means that I could have sent to you for criticism.

From the advertisement I do not propose to reproduce any portion except to tell the reader that it describes as obscenely as it can the suggestive contents of the book advertised. Its title is Sexual Beauty of the Female Form and the advertising firm tells the reader that it will give away free to the buyer two more books called New knowledge for the Bride and the Sexual Embrace or How to Please Your Partner.

I fear that in relying on me in any way to affect the course of the advertisers of such books or to move the editors or publishers from their purpose of making their productions yield profits, she relies on a broken reed. No amount of appealing by me to the publishers of the objectionable books or advertisements of them will be of any use. But what I would like to tell the writer of the letter and other learned sisters like her is to come out in the open and to do the work that is peculiarly and specially theirs. Very often a bad name is given to a person and he or she in course of time begins to believe in the badness. To call a woman member of ‘the weaker sex’ is a libel. In what way is woman the weaker sex I do not know. If the implication is that she lacks the brute instinct of man or does not possess it in the same measure as man, the charge may be admitted. But then woman becomes, as she is, the nobler sex. If she is weak is striking, she is strong in suffering. I have described woman as the embodiment of sacrifice and ahimsa. She has to learn not to rely on man to protect her virtue or her honour. I do not know a single instance of a man having ever protected the virtue of a woman. He cannot even if he would. Rama certainly did not protect the virtue of Sita, nor the five Pandavas of Draupadi. Both these noble women protected their own virtue by the sheer force of their purity. No person loses honour or self-respect but by his consent. A woman no more loses her honour or virtue because a brute renders her senseless and ravishes her than a man loses his because a wicked woman administers to him a stupefying drug and makes him do what she likes.

It is remarkable that there are no books written in praise of male beauty. But why should there always be literature to excite the animal passions of man? May it be that woman likes to live up to the titles that man has chosen to bestow upon her? Does she like to have the beauty of her form exploited by man? Does she like to look beautiful of form before man and why? These are questions I would like educated sisters to ask themselves. If these advertisements and literature offend them, they must wage a relentless war against them and they will stop them in a moment. Would that woman will realize the power she has latent in her for good if she has also for mischief. It is in her power to make the world more livable both for herself and her partner, whether as father, son or husband, if she would cease to think of herself as weak and fit only to serve as a doll for man to play with. If society is not to be destroyed by insane wars of nations against nations and still more insane wars on its moral foundations, the woman will have to play her part not manfully, as some are trying to do, but womanfully. She won’t better humanity by vying with man in his ability to destroy life mostly without purpose. Let it be her privilege to wean the erring man from his error which will envelop in his ruin that of woman also. This wretched advertisement is merely a straw showing which way the wind is blowing. It is a shameless exploitation of woman. It would not leave alone even “the beauty of female form of savage races of the world”.

_Harijan_, 14-11-1936

79. TEMPLE-ENTRY

A co-worker writes:

A worker in the Harijan cause came in the other day and wanted money for a Harijan temple and school in Phagwara (Jullundur) District. I resolutely refused money for a ‘temple’, because I am dead against the building of all such, especially exclusive ones for the Harijans, for it is one form of perpetuating their ‘untouchability’, and just as he was vehemently arguing with me the postman brought in Harijan with your article on this theme. It was quite a godsend. Some sanatanists, I understand, are trying to induce Harijans to build a temple for themselves, so that they need not then claim entry into existing temples. The Harijans really need protection in this respect and your article has not come a bit too soon.

I had a huge discussion the other day with a mutual acquaintance about your advocating ‘temple-entry’ for Harijans. The friend maintained:

'(a) The Mahatma never goes to worship in a temple himself; why, then, does he encourage Harijans to do so? For advocating ‘temple-entry’ is an indirect means of encouraging worship in temples.

(b) Our ‘temples’ are in the vast majority of cases solely means of livelihood for priests who are incapable of earning an honest living in any other way. Why encourage them?

(c) To every priest in charge of such temples the entrance of Harijans will mean more money because no one can go to a temple without putting in a pice (minimum).

(d) Why impoverish the Harijan community?

(e) Why can’t the Mahatma teach Harijans to worship in the open air as he does himself?’

I do not know if these questions have been specifically put to you by others and whether you have ever answered them and think it worth while doing so. I do feel, however, that Harijans must not be allowed to build separate temples for themselves and that the removal of the ban on temple-entry will purify the caste Hindu only. The Harijan has to raise himself in other ways with his own as well as our help.

This letter contains the answer, too, to the questions raised therein. Nevertheless it invites publicity and discussion. These questions have been often raised and equally often discussed in these columns in some shape or other.

The worker who wanted a donation for a separate temple for Harijans, and the one who put the various conundrums before the writer of the letter reproduced above, missed the main reason for temple-entry. The demand for opening all temples to the Harijans is made not because the Harijans desire entry, or that when the temples are thrown open to them they will become changed beings. The demand is made for the purification of caste Hindus. It is made because Harijans are deprived wrongfully of a right that belongs to every Hindu. Even though not a single Harijan enters Hindu temples, it is the duty of caste Hindus to throw them open to their brethren the Harijans. It is the truest sign of removal of untouchability from the caste Hindu heart. The other disabilities have undoubtedly to go, but if this one remains untouchability does not die. The civil disabilities will go in course of time, whether caste Hindus wish it or not, but the temples cannot be opened without their free will. There is nothing to prevent a Harijan from drawing water from a public well or demanding at a public school equal treatment with the other pupils. He does not do so today in a vast majority of cases, only because he is yet too timid to assert his legal right. He has reason to be afraid of physical hurt and worse from the caste Hindus. But as he grows from strength to strength, he will certainly assert himself and exercise the right which, owing to his helplessness, he has been hitherto unable to exercise. Not so, however, about temple-entry. If Harijans in a body marched to a temple, they would be prevented by law from entering that temple. Hence the necessity for agitation by caste Hindu reformers for opening their temples to Harijans.

---

1 “Task before Harijan Sevaks”, vide “Task Before Harijan Sevaks”, 10-10-1936

As to temples designed specially for Harijans, I have always opposed such projects. But there have always been reservations. I would not oppose a movement among Harijans themselves for building a temple accessible to both themselves and the caste Hindus. Nor would I oppose the building of such temples by caste Hindus. In other words I do not always oppose the building of temples as such. I think that they play an important and useful part in the lives of millions of people.

That I do not go to the orthodox temples is irrelevant to the issue before us. In order to prove my belief in temples, I need not be a visitor myself. Surely it is enough that I believe in God and offer daily worship not as a mere formality but as an integral part of my spiritual food. Of course I go out of my way to invite Harijans to attend the daily open-air worship. I do so, however, not to wean them from the desire to visit orthodox temples.

Corruption in the temples there undoubtedly is. The illiteracy and cruel ignorance of the priests in charge of most temples is deplorable. But that is a reason for their reformation, not condemnation to destruction. Nor need Harijans pay anything to the priests. Thousands visit temples without paying even a pie. I verily believe that the movement for the opening of temples to Harijans, when it succeeds, as it must some day not far distant, will sweep the temples clean of any of their glaring abuses.

_Harijan_, 14-11-1936

80. DISCUSSION WITH JOHN R. MOTT

[November 13/14, 1936]

JOHN MOTT: You have been one that has given a great initiative to the movement, you have put your life-blood into it, you have suffered and triumphed, and I want you to help me to a profound understanding of what the issues are and tell me how I may help, for I do not want to hinder. What is happening in India is going to have a profound effect on the world. We are in front of forces the influence of which it would be difficult to prophesy or predict. Give me your own diagnosis of the problem.

GANDHlJI: So far as I am concerned with the untouchability question, it is one of life and death for Hinduism. As I have said repeatedly, if untouchability lives Hinduism perishes, and even India perishes; but if untouchability is eradicated from the Hindu heart root and branch, then Hinduism has a definite message for the world. I have said the first thing to hundreds of audiences, but not the latter part. Now that is the utterance of a man who accepts Truth as God. It is therefore no exaggeration. If untouchability is an integral part of Hinduism, the latter is a spent bullet. But untouchability is hideous untruth. My motive in launching the [anti-]untouchability campaign is clear. What I am aiming at is not every Hindu touching an untouchable, but every touchable Hindu driving untouchability from his heart, going through a complete change of heart. Inter-dining or intermarrying is not the point. I may not dine with you, but I ought not to harbour the feeling that if I dined with you I should be polluted. If I was a woman to be married, I should not say ‘I cannot marry a man because he is an untouchable.’ I am making this clear to you because in the programme of the Harijan Sevak Sangh we say we

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s report “Dr. Mott’s Visit”. John Mott was an American evangelist, a prominent Y.M.C.A. leader and Chairman, International Missionary Council.

2 The source gives no date. Vide, however, “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 14-11-1936, where Gandhiji says: “I gave over four hours to Dr. or Mr. Mott with Andrews between yesterday and today”. Mahadev Desai’s evidence seems to contradict this. He says: This talk was taking place exactly at the moment when the Travancore Proclamation was being issued” which was on the 12. But Mahadev Desai was writing several days after the talks.
don’t ask the orthodox Hindus to inter-dine or intermarry with the ‘untouchables’. Many of us have no scruples about inter-dining or intermarriage. That untouchability is an ancient custom I admit, but there are many such things intertwined with Hinduism because it is an ancient religion, even a prehistoric religion. Instead of being the dead faith that it threatens to be, I want it to be a living faith, so that it may exist side by side with other religions of the world.

With this he explained, the genesis of the Harijan Sevak Sangh, and how he could not be a member of the Sangh, and yet that he had directed and guided the policy of the Sangh.

“The world looks upon you,” said Dr. Mott, “as a front-line prophet, conscience, initiator and warrior, and we pray that you may be spared long for this most fateful period in the life of the world.”

The conversation led to the genesis of the Yeravda Pact1 beginning with Gandhi’s declaration, at the Round Table Conference, to lay down his life to stop the vivisection of Hinduism.2

G. But I had no political axe to grind, I have none. Nor have the other Hindus a political motive. For instance, the Pact has been a kind of bombshell thrown in the midst of Bengalis. They have their own Hindu-Muslim problem which has been rendered difficult by the Yeravda Pact. The original Premier’s ‘Award’, as it was called, gave fewer seats to the Harijans than the Pact gives. It is almost an overwhelming number. But I said Hinduism loses nothing if all the seats were captured by the Harijans. I would not alter a comma in the Pact unless the Harijans themselves wanted it.

JOHN MOTT: Removal of untouchability is the business of your life-time. The importance of this movement lies beyond the frontiers of India, and yet there are few subjects on which there is more confusion of thought. Take for instance the missionaries and missionary societies. They are not of one mind. It is highly desirable that we become of one mind and find out how far we can help and not hinder. I am Chairman of the International Missionary Council which combines 300 missionary societies in the world. I have on my desk reports of these societies, and I can say that their interest in the untouchables is deepening. I should be interested if

1 Of September 1932 between Hindu leaders and the Depressed Classes; vide Vol. LI, Appendix II.
2 Vide “Speech at West Minster School”, 13-11-1931
3 This announced the British Government’s scheme of providing separate electorate for the Depressed classes. Vide also “Letter to Ramsay Macdonald”, 18-8-1932 you would feel free to tell me where, if anywhere, the missionaries have gone along wrong lines. Their desire is to help and not to hinder.

I cannot help saying that the activities of the missionaries in this connection have hurt me. They with the Mussalmans and the Sikhs came forward as soon as Dr. Ambedkar threw the bombshell, and they gave it an importance out of all proportion to the weight it carried, and then ensued a rivalry between these organizations. I could understand the Muslim organizations doing this, as Hindus and Muslims have been quarrelling. The Sikh intervention is an enigma. But the Christian mission claims to be a purely spiritual effort. It hurt me to find Christian bodies vying with the Muslims and Sikhs in trying to add to the numbers of their fold. It seemed to me an ugly performance and a travesty of religion. They even proceeded to enter into secret conclaves with Dr. Ambedkar. I should have understood and appreciated your prayers for the Harijans, but instead you made an appeal to those who had not even the mind and intelligence to understand what you talked; they have certainly not the intelligence to distinguish between Jesus and Mohammed and Nanak and so on.

Dr. Mott referred to the Archbishop of Canterbury’s speech¹, and the talks he had with him, and other bishops and missionary leaders in England, and emphasized the fact that the Christians should in no way seem to be bidding with others for the souls of the Indian people. He said he had a reassurance from the Free as well as the State Church leaders, but in the secular papers it had got abroad that Dr. Ambedkar could hand over 50 million people to those who were prepared to accept them. He had sensed that it might mean a tremendous disservice. He said: “The most trustworthy leaders of Protestant missionary forces would give to what you have said great heed. They do believe increasingly in work for the untouchables. Tell us what we can wisely do and what we cannot wisely do.”

G. So far as this desire of Dr. Ambedkar is concerned, you can look at the whole movement with utter calmness and indifference. If there is any answer to Dr. Ambedkar’s appeal and if the Harijans and he take the final step and come to you, you can take such steps as your conscience suggests. But today it seems unseemly and precipitate to anticipate what Dr. Ambedkar and Harijans are going to do.

Deenabandhu Andrews referred with condemnation to the Lucknow Conference and Dr. Mott said that what the Conference did was not authoritative.

¹ Vide “What Is a Miracle?”, 19-12-1936.
G. It becomes authoritative owing to the silence of Christian bodies. If they had disowned all that happened it would have been well, but those who met at Lucknow perhaps felt that they were voicing the views of the missionary bodies who, in their opinion, were not moving fast enough.

J. M. But there was a disclaimer.

G. If there was, it did not travel beyond the English Channel.

J. M. But there is a deplorable confusion of thought and divided counsel even amongst friends. The Devil would like nothing better. My life has been mostly spent for the intellectual classes, and I feel very much conscience-moved to help in this movement.

Gandhiji cited the example of good Christians helping by working under the Hindu banner. There was Mr. Keithahn who was trying hard to smooth the path of the untouchables. There were Miss Barr and Miss Madden who had thrown themselves into the rural reconstruction movement. He then adverted to the problem in Travancore where an indecent competition was going on for enticing away the Ezhavas from the Hindu fold.

G. The Ezhavas in Travancore want temple-entry. But it is no use your asking me whether they want temple-entry. Even if they do not want it, I must see that they enjoy the same rights as I enjoy, and so the reformers there are straining every nerve to open the temple doors.

J. M. But must we not serve them?

G. Of course you will, but not make conversion the price of your service.

J. M. I agree that we ought to serve them whether they become Christians or not. Christ offered no inducements. He offered service and sacrifice.

G. If Christians want to associate themselves with this reform movement they should do so without any idea of conversion.

J. M. Apart from this unseemly competition, should they not preach the Gospel with reference to its acceptance?

G. Would you, Dr. Mott, preach the Gospel to a cow? Well, some of the untouchables are worse than cows in understanding. I mean they can no more distinguish between the relative merits of Islam and Hinduism and Christianity than a cow. You can only preach through your life. The rose does not say: ‘Come and smell me.’

1 R. R. Keithahn, an American missionary
J. M. But Christ said: ‘Preach and Teach,’ and also that Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. There was a day when I was an unbeliever. Then J. E. K. Studd of Cambridge, a famous cricketer, visited my University on an evangelistic mission and cleared the air for me. His life and splendid example alone would not have answered my question and met my deepest need, but I listened to him and was converted. First and foremost we must live the life; but then by wise and sympathetic unfolding of essential truth we must shed light on processes and actions and attitudes, and remove intellectual difficulties so that it may lead us into the freedom which is freedom indeed. You do not want the Christians to withdraw tomorrow?

G. No. But I do not want you to come in the way of our work, if you cannot help us.

J. M. The whole Christian religion is the religion of sharing our life, and how can we share without supplementing our lives with words?

G. Then what they are doing in Travancore is correct? There may be a difference of degree in what you say and what they are doing, but there is no difference of quality. If you must share it with the Harijans, why don’t you share it with Thakkarbapa and Mahadev? Why should you go to the untouchables and try to exploit this upheaval? Why not come to us instead?

J. M. The whole current discussion since the Ambedkar declaration has become badly mixed with other unworthy motives, which must be eliminated. Jesus said: ‘Ye shall be witnesses unto Me’. A good Christian has to testify what he has experienced in his own life or as a result of his own observation. We are not true as His followers, if we are not true witnesses of Christ. He said: ‘Go and teach and help through the mists and lead them out into larger light.’

Deenabandhu Andrews here asked to be permitted to put forward a concordat. He said: “There are fundamental differences between you and the missionaries, and yet you are the friend of missionaries. But you feel that they are not playing the game. You want the leaders of the Church to say: ‘We do not want to fish in troubled waters; we shall do nothing to imply that we are taking advantage of a peculiar situation that has arisen’.”

G. I do not think it is a matter which admits of any compromise at all. It is a deeply religious problem and each should do what he likes. If your conscience tells you that the present effort is your mission, you need not give any quarter to Hindu reformers. I can simply state my belief that what the missionaries are doing today does not show spirituality.

The talks reproduced above took place on the 13th. What follows is a report of the talk on the 14th.
J. M. What are the governing ideals and aims of this Indian Village Industries movement? What is the object of your settling down in this little village?

G. The immediate object of my stay in Segaon is to remove to the best of my ability the appalling ignorance, poverty and the still more appalling insanitation of the Indian villages. All these really run into one another. We seek to remove ignorance not through imparting the knowledge of the alphabet by word of mouth, but by giving them object-lessons in sanitation, by telling them what is happening in the world, and so on.

J. M. What you are doing here has great industrial significance. Japan with about as high a rate of literacy as any country in the world is not exempt from the sins of industrialism.

G. But I am not seeking to industrialize the village. I want to revive the village after the ancient pattern, i.e., to revive hand-spinning, hand-ginning, and its other vital handicrafts. The village uplift movement is an offshoot of the spinning movement. So great was my ignorance in 1908 that I mixed up the spinning-wheel with the loom in my small book on Indian Home Rule.

J. M. What is the cause of your greatest concern, your heaviest burden?

G. My greatest worry is the ignorance and poverty of the masses of India, and the way in which they have been neglected by the classes, especially the neglect of the Harijans by the Hindus. This criminal neglect is unwarranted by any of the scriptures. We are custodians of a great religion and yet we have been guilty of a crime which constitutes our greatest shame. Had I not been a believer in the inscrutable ways of Providence, a sensitive man like me would have been a raving maniac.

J. M. What affords you the greatest hope and satisfaction?

G. Faith in myself born of faith in God.

J. M. In moments when your heart may sink within you, you hark back to this faith in God?

G. Yes. That is why I have always described myself as an irrepressible optimist.

J. M. So am I. Our difficulties are our salvation. They make us hark back to the living God.

G. Yes. My difficulties have strengthened my faith which rises superior to every difficulty, and remains undimmed. My darkest hour was when I was in Bombay a few months ago. It was the hour of my temptation. Whilst I was asleep I suddenly felt as though I wanted to see a woman. Well a man who had tried to rise superior to the sex instinct for nearly 40 years was bound to be intensely pained when he had this frightful experience. I ultimately conquered the feeling, but I was face to face with the blackest moment of my life and if I had succumbed to it, it would have meant my absolute undoing. I was stirred to the depths because strength and peace come from a life of continence. Many Christian friends are jealous of the peace I possess. It comes from God who has blessed me with the strength to battle against temptation.

1 Hind Swaraj, which, however, was written in 1909 and not in 1908.

J. M. I agree. ‘Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.’

The talk now was switched on to subjects vastly different—those of current politics and other subjects. But Gandhiji would not allow a discussion on current politics in the columns of Harijan. I am therefore reluctantly obliged to omit this very important part of the discussion.

J. M. If money is to be given to India, in what ways can it be wisely given without causing any harm? Will money be of any value?

G. No. When money is given it can only do harm. It has got to be earned when it is required. I am convinced that the American and British money which has been voted for missionary societies has done more harm than good. You cannot serve God and mammon both. And my fear is that mammon has been sent to serve India and God has remained behind, with the result that He will one day have His vengeance. When the American says, ‘I will serve you through money,’ I dread him. I simply say to him: ‘Send us your engineers not to earn money but to give us the benefit of their scientific knowledge.

J. M. But money is stored-up personality. It can be badly used as well as well used. Through money you can get the services of a good engineer. But far more dangerous than money is human personality. It makes possible the good as well as the bad use of money. Kagawa of Japan admits the use of money and machinery is attended with peril but insists, and I agree with him, that Christ is able to dominate both the money and the machine.

G. I have made the distinction between money given and money earned. If an American says he wants to serve India, and you packed

1 In January 1936. Vide “Nothing Without Grace”, 29-2-1936 also “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 21-5-1936 him off here, I should say we had not earned his services. But take Pierre Ceresole who came at his own expense, but after our consent, to serve earthquake-stricken Bihar. We would love to have as many Ceresoles as could possibly come to our help. No. It is my certain conviction based on experience that money plays the least part in matters of spirit.

J. M. If money is the root of evil, we are living in a time when there is more money than ever was before.

G. Which means that there is more evil in the world.

J. M. This makes it supermely important that we study more profoundly than ever how to dominate this power both among the rich and the poor with spiritual purpose, motive and passion . . . .

The greatest thing you have ever done is the observance of your Monday silence. You illustrate thereby the storing up and releasing of power when needed. What place has it continued to have in the preparation of your spiritual tasks?

G. It is not the greatest thing I have done, but it certainly means a great thing to me. I am now taking silence almost every day. If I could impose on myself silence for more days in the week than one I should love it. In Yeravda Jail I once observed a 15 days’ silence. I was in the seventh heaven during that period. But this silence is now being utilized to get through arrears of work. It is a superficial advantage after all. The real silence should not be interrupted even by writing notes to others and carrying on conversation through them. The notes interrupt the sacredness of the silence when you should listen to the music of the spheres. That is why I often say that my silence is a fraud.

Harijan, 19-12-1936 and 26-12-1936

81. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

November 14', 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I shall try to procure Ku.’s book as revised by you and read it.

When you post the Granth Saheb, you may pack the precious shawl, if that will satisfy your soul. I understand that Granth Saheb is 1 There is overwriting in the source; 24 seems to have been made 14; the book Letters to Amrit Kaur also gives the date 14-11-1936.

2 J.C. Kumarappa available in Hindi characters with Hindi translation. If it is a Gurumukhi edition, you will have to send me a Gurumukhi primer with equivalent Hindi alphabet. I wish you could persuade enlightened Sikhs to take to the Devnagari script in the place of the Gurumukhi.

I gave over four hours to Dr. or Mr. Mott with Andrews between yesterday and today.¹

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3599. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6408

82. A LETTER

WARDHA,
November 14, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

Charlie Andrews has passed on your letter to me. I am moving in the matter. I have no recollection of ever having received any letter from you.

Yours sincerely,

83. LETTER TO MOTILAL ROY

November 14, 1936

DEAR MOTI BABU,

Shankerlal Banker sends me a pathetic letter covering a letter from the A.I.S.A. I want you to give him the satisfaction that very ordinary business men give and is expected of them. Surely you and I have to be like Ceasar’s wife above suspicion. The khadi you give cannot be priced at more than the present market price and if that does not cover the [final]’ advance you should pay off the balance, if necessary, in easy but reasonable instalments.

With love,

yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 11051

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² In the source, the letters are smudged here.
84. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

November 14, 1936

CHI. AMBUJAM,¹

As usual you have anticipated me. I had fully intended to write to you on my return to Segaon but you were crowded out.

I am glad you are persisting with your translation of Tulsidas. It will do you good and serve the Tamilians.

It would be a great load off the minds of you all if Kichi² sticks to the banking job and keeps well. It is good that he is contented with his work.

I do get the fruit regularly. Once a week is enough. If sour limes are cheap, you may add 2 doz. But you must send me the prices for my satisfaction.

Love.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

85. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI G. PATEL

November 14, 1936

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

I got your letter. Your disappointment is not justified. One who strives hard does succeed in the end. Do stick to the decision already taken. Think twice before taking a decision and once it is taken stick to it. Vasumati spoke of those twelve things.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9517

¹ This is in Hindi.
² Krishnaswami, the addressee’s son
86. LETTER TO SHRILAL

November 14, 1936

CHI. SHRILAL,

I have gone through your letter carefully. So far the printed pamphlet has not come into my hands; perhaps it is not necessary. I do like your writing. Your views have become organized to some extent. . . find the way out. For the present do not insist on carrying on without a servant. It facilitates things if we treat a servant not as a servant but as a companion and we get the desired help immediately. It takes time and unnecessary expenditure for half-baked, burdened and weak persons like us to find companions. I on my part keep gathering such persons round me and if I do not have them, then I will have no one for my experiments. . . .

Now about the women. I would prefer husbands and wives. I believe that women can make their full contribution. But I feel that if a woman only goes on bearing children, she will not be able to do anything else. My idea of married brahmacharya was born out of these kinds of difficulties. If your group believes in the present methods of birth-control, then it is obvious to me that you are on the way to ruin. Moreover, a woman is not as well trained and educated as her husband. Thus a woman is almost . . . and the institution has to suffer.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyrelal

87. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

November 14, 1936

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I got your letter. I am immediately writing to Chowdhari at the address that I have been given.

I have not yet received the book sent by the Parsi sister. You certainly did well in buying a cow. I am glad that you feel happy there.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, p. 145

1 A word or two are illegible here.
2 ibid
88. LETTER TO VIYOGI HARI

November 14, 1936

BHAI VIYOGI HARI,

Ghee should be eschewed unless you are sure of its quality. Oil may be used by those who can digest it. But the quantity of milk should certainly be increased to make up for the lack of ghee. With some effort pure ghee ought to be available. In the matter of spices the attitude should be liberal. Students should go only as far as they can. Give them black pepper if it seems necessary, even green chillies if they are habituated to them. But the value of simple pure food should be explained to them and they should go as far as they can in the matter.

It would be best for the students to grind the flour themselves; it will be cheaper, too, in the end.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1091

89. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

November 15, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

Send fruit with Ganpat. I take it that it includes apples. The stock of apples is exhausted. I have of course spoken to Kanu for the oranges, as that man Satyanarayan fleeces us. His bill was exorbitant. I have paid it. Do the oranges cost four rupees a hundred and bananas eight annas for fifty? In spite of having been told not to, he has sent the fruit again. I have returned it. This is just for your information.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11503
90. AN EXAMPLE FOR HINDU PRINCES AND THEIR ADVISERS

[Before November 16, 1936]¹

The Travancore Durbar have earned the congratulations of the whole Hindu world and all thoughtful men by issuing the following proclamation:

Profoundly convinced of the truth and validity of our religion, believing that it is based on Divine guidance and on all-comprehending toleration, knowing that in its practice it has throughout the centuries adapted itself to the need of the changing times, solicitous that none of our Hindu subjects should, be reason of birth, caste or community, be denied the consolation and solace of the Hindu faith, we have decided and hereby declare, ordain and command that, subject to such rules and conditions as may be laid down and imposed by us for preserving their proper atmosphere and maintaining their rituals and observances, there should henceforth be no restriction placed on any Hindu by birth or religion on entering or worshipping at temples controlled by us and our Government.

The action has been long overdue. But better late than never. It may be said without pride that the way for the great step was prepared by the gentle but persistent efforts of the Travancore branch of the Harijan Sevak Sangh headed by Shri K. Parameswaran Pillai. The workers of the Sangh had awakened the conscience of the savarna Hindus who had sent numerous petitions to the Durbar praying for the opening of the State temples to Harijans on the same terms as they were to caste Hindus. Untouchability, though an excrescence, has taken such hold of the Hindu world that whenever a Hindu breaks through it and declares against it, he excites admiration among reformers and becomes the object of fierce criticism from the orthodox. This is much more so when the action is taken by one in high authority as H. H. the Maharaja of Travancore, an ancient orthodox Hindu State. Let us hope all criticism will be hushed before this well thought out, deliberate act of piety and justice.

Let us hope, too, that no attempt will be made to whittle away the hard-earned freedom of Harijans by hedging it round by any the least distinction between one Hindu and another. If the proclamation means anything it means that in the temples conducted under the State aegis Harijans will offer worship precisely on the same terms as the highest caste Hindus so called. In other words, in the house of God in Travancore henceforth there will be no distinction between man and man, there will be no Harijans and no high caste, all will be Harijans—children of God. If these are not the implications of the great proclamation, it is nothing but a mere scrap of paper. But we have no reason to doubt its sincerity or suspect any mental reservations.

¹ Though this was first published in The Bombay Chronicle on November 17, it is clear from the following item that it was ready for release on the 16th.

Travancore has a large and important Christian community. Christian missions are flirting with Harijans, rightly no doubt from their own standpoint, they are spending money on them and holding out hope of real freedom and equality of social status. It is beside the present discussion that for Harijans there is no social equality, no real freedom anywhere except when it is first obtained in Hinduism. I am not thinking of individuals. I am thinking of the whole mass. The latter are so intertwined with the other Hindus that unless they become brothers with them instead of remaining serfs which they are, no change of label can avail anything. But this apart, let us realize that the working of the proclamation will be narrowly watched and criticized by the sister communities. It therefore behoves the State authorities as well as the caste Hindus to give full effect to the letter and the spirit of the proclamation.

The main duty of working the proclamation, however, devolves in a way upon the reformers and Harijans. They should avail themselves of the freedom in a religious, becoming and humble spirit. Reformers should see to it that Harijans enter these temples after proper ablutions and in a clean condition. I know that this primary rule is observed more in the breach than in the performance by the vast majority of temple-going caste Hindus. Harijans may not copy the bad manners of caste Hindus. They should take pride in setting a good example in cleanliness both of body and heart.

The proclamation should have no political significance, as it has none. I regard it as the performance of a purely religious duty by the State. And it should be so taken and so treated by all the Hindus of the State. To give it any other colour will be to destroy its great spiritual purpose and effect.

Let us hope that the example of Travancore will prove infectious and all the other Hindu States will follow suit. There is no reason why they should not. It is the privilege and duty of a Hindu prince to propound religious codes which are not inconsistent with the fundamental principles of Hinduism as derived from the Vedas and which are demanded by the spirit of the times. This must be true of all the progressive and living religions. This rule accounts for apparent inconsistencies of the different smritis and also obvious departures from the original tenets as even a careless student will detect even in the same smriti. If the Hindu princes do not perform this primary function, it is not so much their fault as of the lost Brahminhood. If the Brahminical spirit was restored, princes would be rishis, who would take from the revenues the honest minimum necessary to support them as a commission for their labours on behalf of the ryots, and hold their revenue in trust for the ryots. They would not have private property as they possess today and feel independent of their ryots and their wishes.

But whether we reach the ideal state outlined here during the present generation or ever, surely there is nothing to prevent the Hindu princes from following the example set by Travancore, and thus hastening the day of the total removal of untouchability from Hinduism, and helping to save it from certain destruction. I would advise the responsible Hindus in every Hindu State to approach their princes and their advisers to initiate the overdue reform.

_Harijan, 21-11-1936_

91. TELEGRAM TO G. D. BIRLA

WARDHAGANI,
November 16, 1936

GHANSHYAMDAS BIRLA
CARE LUCKY
CALCUTTA

NO NECESSITY ALL-INDIA DAY. YOU SHOULD CONGRATULATE DURBAR IN YOUR OFFICIAL CAPACITY. AM RELEASING FOR PUBLICATION MY ARTICLE\(^1\) FOR "HARIJAN" APPEALING PRINCES FOLLOW TRAVANCORE.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 7981. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

\(^1\) Vide the preceding item.
92. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 16, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I am enclosing Prema’s letter. Keshu has sent me your letter to him. Do you believe that Lakshmidas is unjust to him? Can Keshu acquire a patent in his individual capacity? Isn’t what Lakshmidas writes of Arjun correct? Is Lakshmidas jealous of you or Keshu? Is he partial? Which are the special points about Keshu’s machine? Has he stolen any points from the machine which Lakshmidas has made? I have come to believe that Keshu is prejudiced against Lakshmidas.

Please throw whatever light you can on the matter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8511. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

93. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

November 16, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. Consider this as a footnote to Lilavati’s letter. Kanaiyo is happy here. He has taken upon himself a big job. If he sticks to it his life will certainly be rewarded. Jamna' should not pester him for coming there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C. W. 8512. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Addressee’s wife.
94. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

November 16, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I have no time at all. I have received your letter. You must obtain permission to come here for improving your health. If you can, give the accompanying to Jayaprakash. Ba and Lilavati have arrived. Kanu has come from Bombay. Manu is in Delhi. She has not yet come. Vasumati has left today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3486

95. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

November 16, 1936

CHI. MATHURADAS,

No matter in what context, I like to have your letters. I really have no right to give my opinion. I do not come in contact with anyone. Even newspapers I read only casually. Nevertheless if I am asked, I say what I feel.

Here everyone believes that proposing Vallabhbhai’s name will not be proper. There would be no difficulty at all if Rajaji were agreeable. There is already talk of having Rajendra Babu for a second term. I am not particular about anyone. When I suggested Jawaharlal’s name, I had only the country’s good in mind. Now let us see what happens. The children will be doing well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 Parts of this letter have already been reproduced in “Letter to Mathuradas Trikumji”, 16-11-1936
96. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

WARDHA,
November 16, 1936

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

I saw Prabha in Benares. It gave me much pain to see that she had become very weak. She appeared to be in a much worse condition than before. If it is possible, send her here for a few months.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: Jayaprakash Narayan Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

97. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

WARDHA,
November [17]', 1936

BHAJ MUNSHI,

I have got your Diwali card. But for whom is it Diwali? You have a Holi burning there. Who can remain untouched by its sparks?

How is Jijima? Her illness has been prolonged. It is better that we get along with the appointment of the Constitution Committee. It would serve us well if the work begins.

Blessings from
BAPU

1 The source has 27th which appears to be a slip, for Jijima had died before that date; vide “Letter to K. M. Munshi”, 20-11-1936 Also, Diwali was on November 14.
98. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

SEGAON,
November 17, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I got your letter after Vasumati had left. So the address for the information of the relatives could not be given. I am sending Kanu your address.

Among other fruits are pomegranate, custard-apple, pineapple, jamī, sweet guavas, mangoes, fully ripe rayan, sweet berries, etc. There is no harm in taking bananas occasionally. But it is better to take them in place of rotli. You may wash them and add butter or ghee. It is possible that some of these fruits may not suit you as the apples did not. You should give up such fruits.

I follow the point about soap. Chhotelal says that even soap powder is more expensive than the soap made at Maganwadi. Can you say anything on this matter? You are gaining weight satisfactorily. It should go on. See that you do not have the slightest indigestion. Mirabehn is also recouping her health and she does not feel tired while walking. She does some work also. Although sometimes she does transgress the limit. One day she even had fever. I was scared and so was she. She took almost nothing on that day and remained on honey, water and lemon juice and was well again. Amtul Salaam lives at Santa Cruz. Do go there. The address is Easter Villa, 7th Road.

See Kanti if you can. Your recipe for making gruel is correct. No lumps will form even if you put paste of flour made in cold water into the boiling water. I had made gruel for 75 prisoners at a time by this method. It cooks in a very short time. It takes quite a long time if we put the cold mixture on the fire and it requires stirring continuously. Do you understand what I write? I hope you do. You must pour into boiling water the thick paste of flour, stirring the while. The intake of milk should be up to 120 tolas. Make a habit of taking lemons.

There is nothing about Harilal in the newspapers. I do wish to know, however, what he said on the occasion, where it was and what happened there, and so on.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 10724

¹ The reference is to Harilal’s reconversion to Hinduism through shuddhi performed according to Arya Samaj rites.
99. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 17, 1936

CHI. RAMDAS,

Why, indeed, need you write to me. Kanu is fine. As I am writing this, he is cycling about. He eats quite well. He accompanies me on my evening walks. He is still coughing a little. Everybody says that Nimu has very badly gone down in health. If finally she does not keep well, send her over to me. Let her go to Lakhtar if she so wishes. Or, she may go to Sabarmati. You ought to observe regular eating habits. If you all constantly fall ill, it would be too great a price to pay for living in Bombay. I do wish that you should not pay such a price.

What came of your plan for a store?

Ba keeps worrying a good deal on your account.

Have you discovered the meaning of the mystery of Harilal’s new change?¹ The papers are keeping completely quiet about it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

100. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 17, 1936

CHI. NIMU,

So after all you did fall ill there! But then, are you so ill that you cannot even write? Ba worries so much. You went there to look after Ramdas, to see that he gets his meals at the appointed hours and to share in his work, but Ba tells me that you have become so weak that Ramdas has to prepare his morning meal himself. Of course there is nothing wrong in it. But these days, Ramdas too, is a cripple. Now, you two may do what you deem best. It will be well if you come over here or go either to Sabarmati or Lakhtar. Do whatever you like but ¹ Harilal had embraced Islam about May 14 of the year and then changed over to Arya Samaj about 12th November. get well. I hope you are not worrying about Kanu. If you wish to make any particular suggestion, do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

101. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 17/19, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

I would of course be glad if you insist on writing to me only a postcard every week. I do not wish to disturb you at all in your studies.

I wrote the above the day before yesterday and then there was an interruption. Nor do I wish to waste even a moment of your time. However, I do not regard five minutes given to me every week an unnecessary waste of time. I very often think of writing to you but fail to find the time. Amtul Salaam writes much about you and sends messages but I write nothing of it to you.

I write this on purpose. Sardar told me that you had been to Harilal and there you saw such a tragic sight that you could not control your tears and wept and came away. How will you help me by keeping unhappiness from me? I must learn to endure unhappiness and get used to it. Write to me, therefore, all that happened there. Also tell me what that Arya Samaj business was. Is there any truth in it? Does anyone look after him? I put these questions to you because you still take interest in Harilal. How are things with you?

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7308. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
102. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

November 19, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I write never to make you weep but always to make you laugh. After your letter I realized the meaning you gave to your previous letter. At the same time your paragraph did bear the meaning I put upon it. But why should my play make you weep? Why don’t you weep over the many choice adjectives I apply to you? You must develop a thick skin, if you will be well, both physically and mentally, and will take up the task for which you seem to be cut out.

I am not going to Faizpur on 1st December but I may on 10th or 11th, certainly about 20th. If you come after 27th it will be very late. Why not come earlier and go from there to Ahmedabad. Then you may be a little late, if you like. But you will see what is possible. I am not touring after the Congress. My destination is Segaon. I shall have to go to Belgaum in March or April, whenever Gandhi Seva Sangh meets. This gives you all the information you need and ask for. The session begins on 27th and ends 29th.

I shall certainly read your article if it comes to me in time for suggestions.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C. W. 3754. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6910

103. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

November 19, 1936

CHI. PREMA,

There was nothing in your previous letter which called for a reply. I would welcome any pretext for writing to you. But I had no time at all. I must, however, reply to your last letter. Kaka had told me about your illness in the course of a minute’s conversation, but I did not know that it was as serious as you describe it to be. How did you manage to fall ill like that? I see your carelessness in this. If you looked upon your body as a trust from God and used it accordingly, you would not fall ill as you did. Why don’t you content yourself with what you can do within the limits of your strength?
I have no plan of camping there from December 1 or of starting on a tour in January. Yes, I should certainly like to go to Faizpur before the Exhibition starts.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

[PS.]
Lilavati has returned to Segaon. She is unpredictable. Her aspirations are no doubt high. She works hard, too. But she will make no real progress until she overcomes her impatience. Still, if I do not give up hope of swaraj why should I give up hope of Lilavati? It will be difficult for you to find another optimist like me.

Has not Harilal fallen into a deep pit? But I have not given up hope even about him. What more can I say? Becoming an Arya Samajist means nothing.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10386. Also C.W. 6825. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

_104. LETTER TO DAHYABHAI M. PATEL_
_November 19, 1936_

BHAI DAHYABHAI,

I have your letter. The picture of you sitting in front of me is still vivid before my eyes. How helpless I am! I was so hard pressed for time that I did not even dare to ask you how you were. I wanted to save every moment of my time and every particle of my energy.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

SHRI DAHYABHAI MANORDAS
DHOLKA DHANBHUKA RAILWAY

From Gujarati: C.W. 2709, Courtesy: Dahyabhai M. Patel
105. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI N. PATEL

November 19, 1936

CHI. RAOJIBHAI,

I have your letter. I wish your Conference success. The yardstick of success is not resolutions however grand but firm follow-up action on the part of the youth. They should not pass any resolution which they are not prepared to implement.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI RAOJIBHAI NATHABHAI PATEL
PATIDAR YUVAK MANDAL
SEVA MANDIR
NADIAD, B. B. & C.I. RLY.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9009

106. LETTER TO RAMNARAYAN N. PATHAK

November 19, 1936

BHAII RAMNARAYAN,

Your first statement is not an indication of truth. It fails to incorporate many points that should have been there. Even my opinion has not been quoted correctly. How can a person ignorant of the background understand it? I have to join issue with you, should I not, when you do not accept my opinion and at the same time publish it? If you wish, you may publish your second statement. However, you need not do anything under pressure from me. Write and do only what your mind and your heart permit. I expect nothing more than that you will weigh calmly the words of one like me.

It is not up to me to forsake or ignore you. To the end of my life I shall hope, as I do in the case of Harilal, that you will be reformed.

To me Narmada’s staying in Jyoti Sangh, her being considered a pious woman, your staying near her and other things are like branding one who has already burnt himself. I do not know what kind of morality you accept. Probably you do not find any immorality in your conduct and therefore my simile would hurt you as everything I say hurts Harilal. However, there is no other way before me to awaken either him or you. I do not know you but I do know Narmada a little. She is a foolish girl and has very little understanding. She is ignorant of truth and untruth. Any young man can mislead her. You became her husband instead of being a brother or father to her and did obvious injustice to Ganga. Narmada could not even stand the talk she had with me before leaving. I keep on receiving laments from your brother, Ganga and Hemubhai. It is terrible if all that they write is true. And if it is—and from what you yourself write it seems to be—one shouldn’t be surprised if you were playing false with them. I know young men who feel satisfied that they have done their duty when they partially acknowledge their sins and if other people are not satisfied with it they get angry. They think that society is ungrateful to them. I wish you would not make such a mistake. Believe it that whatever I have written is for your good and for your guidance. You may forsake me but I do not forsake myself. So how can I do that with you or anyone else?

_ātma-nāsaḥ abhiḥ ¹_ is not only a scriptural statement; it has been woven into my life.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From Gujarati: C.W. 2786. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N. Pathak

107. LETTER TO F. MARY BARR

_Unrevised_

SEGAON, WARDHA, November 20, 1936

CHI. MARY,

I have been terribly behind hand in my correspondence. No time unless I would work outside the permitted hours. But I won’t. How long that ‘won’t’ will last remains to be seen.

I hardly think Maria’s ² case will apply to you. But no one knows what may happen.

About return passage I shall try. I do not want you to collect in London for the A.I.V.I.A. I suppose you have Indians in mind. It is no use your going to them with the beggar’s bowl even for _Daridranarayana_.

¹ Seeing others as oneself
² Anne Marie Petersen
You may certainly use the Rs. 100 and any other such sum in the way you indicate.

I do not think you need to thank donors who give through agencies like me.

I do not at all like the idea of your earning anything by giving takli lessons unless they are given to some rich people who want to learn takli spinning as a hobby. I would far rather supply your small wants from other sources.

My policy of not asking or expecting friends of the West to join any C.D. movement still abides. They can do much by doing what I call constructive work on behalf of A.I.S.A., A.I.V.I.A. and the like.

Now I think I have answered all your questions.

Love to you and Motibehn whom I was delighted to see, even though it was only for a very short time.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6069. Also C.W. 3399. Courtesy: F. Mary Barr

108. LETTER TO JOHN R. MOTT

November 20, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

I was delighted to have your letter. It was a pleasure to me to renew our acquaintance and to have the discussion. Pray thank Mrs. Mott for the two packets of maple sugar.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DR. JOHN R. MOTT
NAGPUR

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

109 LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

November 20, 1936

CHI. MANUDI,

I had your letter. Now you are expected here any day. Come and start singing bhajans for us immediately. There are certainly numerous things to learn here if one wants to. Kishorelal and Gomati are touring in Gujarat these days.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 1561.Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

110. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

November 20, 1936

BHAI MUNSHI,

This is not a letter of condolence. Jijima has been rewarded, having served and been served by both of you. No one born is immortal. I always admired her love for you and your devotion to her. Her devotion to God will always be a protecting hedge around you.

You may come on Saturday or Sunday week. We shall decide and then you can get the resolution passed accordingly. It is unnecessary to bring everyone here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7609. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

111. LETTER TO RAMESHWARI NEHRU

November 20, 1936

DEAR SISTER,

I had your telegram. The Travancore affair for us is a call to greater purity, greater sacrifice and greater dedication. I have an unshakable faith that if we continue to be truly devoted in the performance of our duty, untouchability will go root and branch.

Your work must be progressing satisfactorily.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 7984. Also C.W. 3077. Courtesy: Rameshwari Nehru
Sjt. Maganbhai Desai, who received the other day the degree equivalent to Master of Arts from the Gujarat Vidyapith, wrote to me a Gujarati letter dated 7th October from which I cull the following:

May I invite you to discuss in the columns of Harijanbandhu a question which you have so far left more or less untouched, I mean the question of imparting sex instruction to young people? . . .

Should sex education be included in the educational curricula of our children? Who should impart it? What would be the necessary qualification for the task? Should this subject be taught in a matter-of-fact manner to all and sundry just like geography or arithmetic? Or is there any limit? And if so, who is to draw the line and where? Again, should the aim of sex education be to combat the onset of libido or simply to recognize it as an inevitable fact of nature which has to be accepted and submitted to?

May I also take leave to make a special request in this connection? Apart from what you may write on this subject in English, won’t you write something for the Gujarati reader in Gujarati? You know it is an old-standing grievance of ours that you have ceased to give your original contributions in Gujarati . . . .

I kept this letter for such a long time hoping that one day I should write something on the subject discussed in it. Meanwhile I had to go to Ahmedabad to preside at the Twelfth Gujarati Sahitya Parishad. During my stay of four days at the Vidyapith and in course of contact with Gujarati men and women there, past incidents came afresh to me. I was confronted by the man who had gently castigated me in the above mentioned letter. He even asked me, “What about that letter?” I pacified him by saying that I was carrying it everywhere with me and that I would definitely write about it. At that time I wanted to write in English. On reaching Segaon, I felt the impact of Maganbhai’s castigation. I was reminded of the bitter but affectionate

---

1 Translated from Gujarati by Pyarelal. The original appeared in Harijanbandhu, 22-11-1936.
2 Only extracts have been reproduced here.
3 Vide “Speech at Gujarati Sahitya Parishad”, 31-10-1936 and “Speech at the Concluding Session of the Twelfth Gujarati Sahitya Parishad, Ahmedabad”, 2-11-1936 quarrel with Swami Anand in the days of Navajivan. He could not bear that I should contribute my original ideas to Young India while only stale versions should go to Navajivan. I also felt the same. Yet my insistence on writing in Young India was not out of place. I think at long last Swami Anand got tired and stopped troubling me. Even after the lapse of such a long time I cannot say definitely which of us two was right. Be it as it may, having said this much by way of introduction I wish to tell the readers of Harijanbandhu that I fully agree with Shri Maganbhai’s complaint. And from now onwards, every week I will try to give something new to the Gujarati readers. I appeal to them to encourage me in my effort.¹

Preoccupation with sex is daily becoming more marked in Gujarat as in the rest of India. And what is more, those who fall under its sway feel as if there is something meritorious about it. When a slave begins to take pride in his fetters and hugs them like precious ornaments, the triumph of the slave-owner is complete. But this success of Cupid, spectacular though it may be, will, I am convinced, prove to be short-lived and ignoble, and at long last end in inanition even like a scorpion whose venom is spent. But that does not mean that we can in the meantime afford to sit with folded hands. The certainty of its defeat need not, must not, lull us into a false sense of security. The conquest of lust is the highest endeavour of a man’s or a woman’s existence. Without overcoming lust man cannot hope to rule over self. And without rule over self there can be no swaraj or Ramarajya. Rule of all without rule of oneself would prove to be as deceptive and disappointing as a painted toy mango, charming to look at outwardly but hollow and empty within. No worker who has not overcome lust can hope to render any genuine service to the cause of Harijans, communal unity, khadi, cow-protection or village reconstruction. Great causes like these cannot be served by intellectual equipment alone, they call for spiritual effort or soul-force. Soul-force comes only through God’s grace, and God’s grace never descends upon a man who is a slave to lust.

What place has then instruction in sexual science in our educational system, or has it any place there at all? Sexual science is of two kinds, that which is used for controlling or overcoming the sexual passion and that which is used to stimulate and feed it. Instruction in the former is as necessary a part of a child’s education as the latter is harmful and dangerous and fit therefore only to be shunned. All great religions have rightly regarded Kama as the arch-enemy of man, anger or hatred coming only in the second place. According to the Gita, the latter is an offspring of the former. The Gita of course uses the word kama in its wider sense of desire. But the same holds good of the narrow sense in which it is used here.

¹ This paragraph has been taken from Harijanbandhu.

This, however, still leaves unanswered the question, viz., whether it is desirable to impart to young pupils a knowledge about the use and function of generative organs. It seems to me that it is necessary to impart such knowledge to a certain extent. At present they are often left to pick up such knowledge anyhow, with the result that they are misled into abusive practices. We cannot properly control or conquer the sexual passion by turning a blind eye to it. I am therefore strongly in favour of teaching young boys and girls the significance and right use of their generative organs. And in my own way I have tried to impart this knowledge to young children of both sexes for whose training I was responsible.

But the sex education that I stand for must have for its object the conquest and sublimation of the sex passion. Such education should automatically serve to bring home to children the essential distinction between man and brute, to make them realize that it is man’s special privilege and pride to be gifted with the faculties of head and heart both; that he is a thinking, no less than a feeling, animal, as the very derivation of the word manushya shows, and to renounce the sovereignty of reason over the blind instincts is therefore to renounce a man’s estate. In man reason quickens and guides the feeling, in brute the soul lies over dormant. To awaken the heart is to awaken the dormant soul, to awaken reason, and to inculcate discrimination between good and evil.

Who should teach this true science of sex? Clearly, he who has attained mastery over his passions. To teach astronomy and kindred sciences we have teachers who have gone through a course of training in them and are masters of their art. Even so must we have as teachers of sexual science, i.e., the science of sex control, those who have studied it and have acquired mastery over self. Even a lofty utterance that has not the backing of sincerity and experience will be inert and lifeless, and will utterly fail to penetrate and quicken the hearts of men, while the speech that springs from self-realization and genuine experience is always fruitful.
Today our entire environment—our reading, our thinking, our social behaviour—is generally calculated to subserve and cater for the sex urge. To break through its coils is no easy task. But it is a task worthy of our highest endeavour. Even if there are a handful of teachers endowed with practical experience, who accept the ideal of attaining self-control as the highest duty of man, are fired by a genuine and undying faith in their mission, and are sleeplessly vigilant and active, their labour will light the path of the children of Gujarat, save the unwary from falling into the mire of sexuality and rescue those who might be already engulfed in it.

_Harijan_, 21-11-1936, and _Harijanbandhu_, 22-11-1936

113. HELP CYCLONE-STRICKEN HARIJANS

Sjt. G. Sitarama Sastri writes to Sjt. Thakkar Bapa the following letter:

> The havoc caused by the terrible cyclone that burst over the coastal districts of Andhradesa, especially Guntur District, cannot be adequately measured in terms of money. The official estimate is one crore of rupees. . . . I am writing this to you specially on behalf of Harijans who have been terribly hard hit. Their plight is very pitiable and calls for prompt and adequate relief. Over 3,000 weavers have lost homes and looms. Fishermen on the coast, aboriginal tribes, Harijans and other Depressed Classes have lost their all—food, clothing and shelter . . . . A sum of Rs. 25,000 is the bare minimum required to give them immediate relief . . . . Donations may be sent to Deshbhakta Konda Venkatapayya, Guntur.

I gladly publish this letter. Calamities such as the one that has overtaken Guntur have become part of our life. There is no doubt that philanthropists will be helping cyclone-stricken people in Guntur, but the call of the Harijans affected by the cyclone required special emphasis, and I hope that those who are interested in Harijans will not fail to respond to this call.

_Harijan_, 21-11-1936

114. BEWARE OF BEGGARS

I have just understood that Sjt. Govind Chandra Misra, who was at one time in the Sabarmati Ashram and who has been carrying on Harijan work near Cuttack, has come down to Bombay to make the

---

1 Only extracts have been reproduced here.
usual collections. As a rule he consults me before going out for collections. He has not done so this time; and he knows too that there are grave allegations against him into which I am investigat ing. I would therefore warn all those who have been helping him under the belief that he goes out collecting with my permission, that they should refrain from giving him any assistance whatsoever.¹

_Harijan_, 21-11-1936

115. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

_SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 21, 1936_

MY DEAR C.R.,

Read S.’s letter within and give me your decision. Needless to tell you that Sardar is desperately anxious for you to wear the thorny crown. I shall be pleased if you will but I have no heart to press it on you. If you have directly or indirectly let S. to think that you could be persuaded into shouldering the burden, you should unhesitatingly say yes and end the agony of those like the Sardar who are anxious that you should come forward.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2059

116. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

_November 21, 1936_

CHI. JETHALAL,

I have received your letter. I have started work about the leather affair. The inquiry has been started from a higher level. I will let you know if I get more information. Keep writing to me about whatever new developments take place there.

You must come for the exhibition. You will give but you will also take. It will give us a pretext for meeting. However, I shall be happy if you meet your own expenses. If you bring goods up to that ¹ Govind Chandra Misra writing to Gandhiji later described the statement as “untrue”. For Gandhiji’s reply to it, _vide_ “A painful Duty”, 19-12-1936.

² Satyamurti’s amount you will be able to sell them. If that is not possible, I shall manage to get the expenses from somewhere—up to Rs. 25, isn’t it? Most probably there won’t be any need to bring the workers from there. I will let you know if there is. Come when you are free. You must come over to see me at least ten days before the opening of the exhibition. It will be nice if you spend a few days with me. It will be good if you come over in the first week of December.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9858. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat

117. LETTER TO FULCHAND K. SHAH

November 21, 1936

Bhai Fulchand,

I have your letter. As for you, I have nothing to say. I am like one who, having been scalded by milk, blows on buttermilk before he drinks it. Ramnarayan’s action has made me very unhappy. There have no doubt been such incidents but this was the limit. The question is how our minds react to such incidents.

It is possible that my views are unsuited to the new mind. If it be so, I alone will stick to my views. You must improve your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 2863. Courtesy: Shardabehn Shah

118. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

Segaon, Wardha,
November 21, 1936

Bhai Bapa,

Why should Mahadev keep back your letter from me? There is nothing in it but your overflowing love for the Harijans. Isn’t that so? I too love them equally but there is a difference between the two of us. You overdo it while mine is restrained. It is difficult to say which is

1 Vide “Letter to Ramnarayan N. Pathak”, 19-11-1936

106 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI better. For the time being it is enough for me to say that I have given due thought to what I have done and therefore we are not going to lose anything. Do we ever prevent those who wish to say something or do more work? A true celebration consists only in increasing our purity and other virtues. The simile of the cow at that time\(^1\) was quite appropriate. It was not an insult to the Harijans. Harijans and children like Pulaya and Kanu should not fall into the hands of the missionaries. Anyway, you should keep sending me your views.

Vandemataram from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1167

---

119. LETTER TO BABUJI GAURISHANKER VYAS

November 21, 1936

CHI. BABUJI,

You have done well in writing to me in detail. All that you write is painful. You must work hard. I know Shastri quite well. You should not depend at all on your father-in-law’s help. Your duty is clear. You should either engage yourself in some honest work to earn money or plunge into the field of service with a determined will. If you do the latter you have to give up all hope of earning money. You should be interested in service for the sake of service. If it is not so it is hypocrisy, and what can be worse than that? A father-in-law has been given the same status as a father in our religion. Consult Shastriji, therefore, and do as he suggests. Now that you have started writing to me, keep it up. What you have written is true—you are like a son to me.

SHRI BABUJI GAURISHANKER VYAS
HATKESHWAR CHOWK
RAJKOT CITY
KATHIAWAD

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2510

\(^1\) During the discussion with John Mott; vide “Discussion with John R.
Mott”, 13/14-11-1936
120. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 22, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

Two of your letters are lying with me unanswered. To me Diwali and Holi are the same. When there is a fire raging before our eyes, it is a sin to celebrate Diwali. You indeed deserve congratulations for settling the brothers’ quarrel. I believe that that is enough for the success of your Bombay trip. It was good that there you could consult the doctors also. What is wrong in serving your mother? Now you will be able to serve her with knowledge. Service to your mother can be a part of the larger service to the country.

Do go to Trivandrum if you can improve your health there. You might get well if the climate there suits you. However, go only if Ramachandran permits you. As far as I am concerned I prefer Indore. But do whatever you think is best. Hope Bari is improving.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 362

121. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI A. MEHTA

November 22, 1936

BHAII BHAGWANJI,

I have received your complaints. What can I do if you do not understand humour. I do not regret at all what I have done. You will have nothing to complain of if instead of considering me a mahatma you consider me a biped without horns or tail—a human being with a black head. A correction is perhaps required. Now my head is grey, not black. But that is an argument that can be put forward from my side. Isn’t it? If I feel hurt by your letter you will apologize, won’t you?

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

SHRI BHAGWANJI ANUPCHAND VAKIL RAJKOT C.S.
KATHIAWAD

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5830. Also C.W. 3053. Courtesy: Bhagwanji A. Mehta
122. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

November 23, 1936

MY DEAR C.R.,

Don’t be angry. I have taken a liberty with your note on the Travancore Act—a liberty I do not remember having ever taken with your writings. The reasons for the amendments and the addition you will easily understand and I would fain hope as easily accept as valid. Anyway, I have felt the duty of making the corrections for the sake of the cause.

Love.

BAPU

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai.

123. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

November 23, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I got your two letters. You seem to be a pretty good reporter of news. Your progress may be regarded fair. No one can put on 5 lb. in a week. I shall be satisfied if henceforth you put on 2 lb. every week.

Mirabehn’s diet at present is just the same as you have written. Apples cure many persons of their constipation. However every constitution has its own characteristics. Formerly Mirabehn had no such thing as constipation. I am the main cause of her illness, am I not? Anyway, things are getting on well now at any rate.

Gur made from the date juice has been a complete success now. The cause of the earlier failure seems to be the carelessness in applying lime to the earthen pot.

There is a scarcity of ghee here at present. The number of bachelors has increased. Now Balkrishna has joined them. I shall definitely arrange to send ghee to you.

My method of making the gruel definitely saves time and there is no difficulty in cooking. Some items need boiling water and some other should be put in cold water when being placed on the fire, for instance, potatoes.
No one gave me the information which you have been able to give regarding Harilal. But now I have received more information. His condition is miserable. There is no change in him at all. He only needs money for liquor.

I understand about Kana. Train him when you come here. None of your letters are pending now. Lilavati has taken over the charge of the kitchen and the accounts.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10725

124. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT
November 23, 1936

CHI. JETHALAL,

My own feeling is that I have received all your letters and my recollection is that I have answered them all. Now you will be coming here soon, so perhaps there won’t be any need for a letter. If there is, let me know.

I am carrying on brisk correspondence about the leather. You must see the correspondence even if nothing comes of it. I shall get the news about the appeal by telegram tomorrow.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I have collected some village instruments which you will see. They are no more to be found in the villages but of this later.

From the Gujarati: C.W. 9859. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat

125. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHII
SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 23, 1936

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

Your letter is good. The Bhajan Mandali’s object is the same as yours. But of course, you must arrange things as you want. Both ways are good.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11679
126. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

November 24, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

I am quite clear that women should not seek favours from men. Therefore the fittest should rely upon their being wanted for the parliamentary work. I like the idea of some women at least declining to be on the reserved list. Those who will come on the Congress ticket must sign the Congress pledge. I do not know what is possible at this stage. Dr. M. should have no difficulty if she would sign the pledge and if there is room for her. But I know nothing of what is happening. You have done well in writing to J.N. I think this covers all your questions on this head. If not you will ask again.

Faizpur is 25 miles’ motor drive from Bhusaval and 7 from a station before B. I forget the name. If you can start from J. two days earlier, you can easily drop in at Faizpur. You can even stay there two or three days if you can afford to leave J. earlier still. I should not accept any fixtures in J. after 12th December. You will watch my programme about that time and act accordingly. I did ask Mrs. S. to withdraw but I do not remember whether she acted up to my advice. Dr. M. should know.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3755. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6911

127. LETTER TO MADHAVDAS G. KAPADIA

November 24, 1936

CHI. MADHAVDAS,

November 24, 1936

I quite forgot your [letter]. Jamnalalji will no doubt contribute whatever he can afford. If he asks for a note there is no harm in giving it. However, tell him to consult me about the matter. I had indeed opened an account for you but at the same time had instructed them not to harass you.

1 Jullundur
2 Brother of Kasturba Gandhi
As for Diwali, I am not even aware of it. The sentiment behind it has died out. When there is a fire raging all around, how can there be a Diwali celebration? As long as Harilal has not freed himself of his addiction, his conversion and reconversion can have no value.

Blessings to you both from both of us.

BAPU

[PS.]

You should always write your address in a letter.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII

128. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

November 24, 1936

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

Nobody here shares your view. Personally I liked Jawaharlal’s statement. How could he have said less? What more could we expect? This time there is no question of remaining in the Cabinet. We shall see about that at the proper time. I didn’t wish to send any draft, but who am I to say no to Mathuradas? After all he is my nephew and has been able to coax me into agreeing with a number of things. If you don’t approve of the draft write out another, and if you think it your duty to contest the election do so. If you think it necessary to make any changes, by all means do so. Whatever you do, do with confidence for we have to cross many more deserts yet.

Improve your health.

If you can, come to Wardha on your way back from the Frontier Province.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 197-8
129. DISCUSSION WITH BASIL MATHEWS AND OTHERS

[November 24, 1936]

I cannot speak with either the definiteness or the confidence of a Stalin or a Hitler, as I have no cut-and-dried programme which I can impose on the villagers. My method, I need not say, is different. I propose to convert by patient persuasion. This is a kind of practical adult education to be put to use as it progresses. The centre is automatically shifted from the cities to the villages. They will be taught to know what they should want and how to obtain it in the shape of sanitation and hygiene, improvement of material conditions and social relations. If this primary education is taken by them in its fullness everything else follows. But in indicating the ideal I have told you of the difficulties of this stupendous task. For you should know that we have smaller, more illiterate villages even than Segaon, where people hug their ignorance and dirt as they do their untouchability.

With this he gave Mr. Mathews a vivid idea of the village and its inhabitants and surroundings, and spoke on the problem of utilization of waste hours and waste products or of products that were going to waste. He described how a successful experiment was now being made of tapping palm-trees for gur which were either being used for toddy or not used at all. And he gave Mr. Mathews and Mr. Hodge and others present a sample of the gur made that morning. A palm-tapper had to be engaged, he dictated his own terms. Gandhiji said:

I want them to dictate their own terms. He charges Rs. 10 a month for tapping 25 trees, but when more people begin doing the thing and have learnt how to utilize their idle hours, the adjustment will take place of itself.

He next talked of sanitation. . . . He said:

Lionel Curtis’ when he wrote that the Indian village consisted of dilapidated structures built on dung-heaps did not overdraw the picture. We have to remove the dung-heaps, turn them to good account and make the village site a smiling garden.

Mr. Basil Mathews . . . discussed the place of the money-lender and the zamindar in the village economy. Gandhiji said:

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly letter”
2 The date is from the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary.
3 Vide “Interview to “The Star”, 6-1-1908
The money-lender who is inevitable today will gradually eliminate himself. Nor are co-operative banks needed, because when I have taught Harijans the arts I want to teach them they will not need much ready money. Besides, those who are today deep down in mire cannot make use of co-operative banks. I am not so much concerned in getting them loans of money or plots of land as I am about getting them bread and butter and even a little cheese. When people have learnt the art of turning idle hours to wealth all the adjustment we need will follow.

But what about the zamindar? Would you eliminate him? would you destroy him?

I do not want to destroy the zamindar, but neither do I feel that the zamindar is inevitable. I will illustrate how I work out my trusteeship theory here. In this village Jamnalalji has a 75 per cent share. Of course I have come here not by design but by accident. When I approached Jamnalalji for help he built me the required hut and outhouses and said, “Whatever profit there is from Segaon you may take for the welfare of the village.” If I can persuade other zamindars to do likewise village improvement becomes easy. Of course the next question is that of the land system and that of Government exploitation. I regard the difficulties surrounding that aspect of the question as for the moment necessary evils. If the present programme is carried through, I shall perhaps know how to deal with the Government exploitation.

Your actual economic policy would differ from Mr. Nehru’s? He, so far as I understand him, would wipe out the zamindar.

Yes, we seem to differ in our ideas of village uplift and reconstruction. The difference is of emphasis. He does not mind the village uplift movement. He believes in industrialization; I have grave doubts about its usefulness for India. He believes in the ultimate inevitability of class conflict, though he would avoid it if he could. I expect to convert the zamindars and other capitalists by the non-violent method, and therefore there is for me nothing like an inevitability of class conflict. For it is an essential part of non-violence to go along the line of least resistance. The moment the cultivators of the soil realize their power, the zamindari evil will be sterilized. What can the poor zamindar do when they say that they will simply not work the land unless they are paid enough to feed and clothe and educate themselves and their children in a decent manner? In reality the toiler is the owner of what he produces. If the toilers intelligently combine, they will become an irresistible power. That is how I do not see the necessity of class conflict. If I thought it inevitable I should not hesitate to preach it and teach it.

Mr. Mathews referred to the Arch Bishop of Canterbury's speech at the Central Hall, Westminster. Gandhiji said:

That is a question to which I have given great thought and I am convinced that if Christian missions will sincerely play the game, no matter what may be their policy under normal circumstances, they must withdraw from the indecent competition to convert the Harijans. Whatever the Archbishop of Canterbury and others may say, what is done here in India in the name of Christianity is wholly different from what they say. There are others in the field also, but as a devotee of truth I say that if there is any difference between their methods, it is one of degree and not of kind. I know of representatives of different religions standing on the same platform and vying with one another to catch the Harijan ear. To dignify this movement with the name of spiritual hunger is a travesty of truth. Arguing on the highest plane I said to Dr. Mott, if they wanted to convert Harijans had they not better begin to convert me? I am a trifle more intelligent than they, and therefore more receptive to the influences of reason that could be brought to bear upon me. But to approach the Pulayas and Pariahs with their palsied hands and paralysed intelligence is no Christianity.

No, whilst our reform movement is going on, all religious minded people should say: Rather than obstruct their work let us support them in their work.

M. Do not the roots of the reform movement go back to the missionary movement? Did not the missionaries wake up the reformers and make a certain amount of stir among the untouchables?

G. I do not think that the missionary movement was responsible for a stirring of the right kind. I agree that it stung the reformers to the quick and awakened them to their sense of duty. They say: ‘Here is some good work being done by these missionaries; they open schools and hospitals, train nurses. Why don’t we do these things for our own people?’ And they try to do something in indifferent imitation.

M. You have spoken of some good work being done by missionaries. Should not we go on with it?

G. Oh yes. Do, by all means. But give up what makes you objects of suspicion and demoralizes us also. We go to your hospitals with the mercenary motive of having an operation performed, but with no object of responding to what is at the back of your mind, even as our children do when they go to Bible classes in their colleges and then laugh at what they read there. I tell you our conversation at home about these missionary colleges is not at all edifying. Why then spoil your good work with other motives?

Mr. Mathews was curious to know if Gandhiji followed any spiritual practices and what special reading he had found helpful.

G. I am a stranger to yogic practices. The practice I follow is a practice I learnt in my childhood from my nurse. I was afraid of ghosts. She used to say to me: ‘There are no ghosts, but if you are afraid, repeat Ramanama.’ What I learnt in my childhood has become a huge thing in my mental firmament. It is a sun that has brightened my darkest hour. A Christian may find the same solace from the repetition of the name of Jesus and a Muslim from the name of Allah. All these things have the same implications and they produce identical results under identical circumstances. Only the repetition must not be a lip expression, but part of your very being. About helpful readings we have regular readings of the Bhagavad Gita and we have now reached a stage when we finish the Gita every week by having readings of appointed chapters every morning. Then we have hymns from the various saints of India, and we therein include hymns from the Christian hymn book. As Khan Saheb is with us, we have readings from the Koran also. We believe in the equality of all religions. I derive the greatest consolation from my reading of Tulsidas’s Ramayana. I have also derived solace from the New Testament and the Koran. I don’t approach them with a critical mind. They are to me as important as the Bhagavad Gita, though everything in the former may not appeal to me—everything in the Epistles of Paul for instance, nor everything in Tulsidas. The Gita is a pure religious discourse given without any embellishment. It simply describes the progress of the pilgrim soul towards the Supreme Goal. Therefore there is no question of selection.

M. You are really a Protestant.

G. I do not know what I am or not; Mr. Hodge will call me a Presbyterian!

M. Where do you find the seat of authority?

Pointing to his breast, Gandhiji said:
It lies here. I exercise my judgment about every scripture, including the Gita. I cannot let a scriptural text supersede my reason. Whilst I believe that the principal books are inspired, they suffer from a process of double distillation. Firstly, they come through a human prophet, and then through the commentaries of interpreters. Nothing in them comes from God directly. Mathew may give one version of one text and John may give another. I cannot surrender my reason whilst I subscribe to Diving revelation. And above all, ‘the letter killeth, the spirit giveth life.’ But you must not misunderstand my position. I believe in Faith also, in things where Reason has no place e.g., the existence of God. No argument can move me from that faith, and like that little girl who repeated against all reason ‘yet we are seven’ I would like to repeat, on being baffled in argument by a very superior intellect, ‘Yet there is God.’

Harijan, 5-12-1936

130. LETTER TO L. A. HOGG

WARDHA,
November 25, 1936

DEAR MR. HOGG,

Thank you for your letter of the 21st instant.

I am sorry we have not made much headway with papermaking. An expert whose services we had secured left us three or four months ago and we are unfortunately now where we were. Our students are manufacturing paper of a sort, but it is not up to much. I could send you samples of various varieties of hand-made paper that we use, but I could not tell you how they are made and the materials from which they are made. We here use waste paper clippings from the local press. We have now here with us a chemist who can make paper out of gunnybag waste, cotton-seed waste, white rags and such other raw materials available in villages. But he is still a novice and I am afraid I have nothing to communicate to you which you can profitably pass on to your friend in Egypt. For experts in this direction, we have to look to China. The paper on which this is being typed is from a village in the neighbourhood of Poona. It is the best that I have. Our own paper which used to be good when we had our expert here is no good at the present moment. I enclose herewith one sheet of Nepal paper made out of bamboo pulp and another of Junnar paper made out of, I think, tailors’ waste which is identical with the one on which this is being typed. The Nizam’s State produces very good hand-made paper. Perhaps if you write to the Director of Industries, Hyderabad (Dn.), he would send you a descriptive report on paper-making as cottage industry.

I am sorry about the Harijan. I am asking the Manager to see that you get your copy regularly.

Yours sincerely,

ENCL. SAMPLE PAPER SHEETS
L. A. HOOG, ESQ.
Y. M. C. A.
5 RUSSELL STREET, CALCUTTA

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

131. LETTER TO MARGARETE SPIEGEL
November 25, 1936

CHI. AMALA,

You have not given your address. So don’t blame me if you get this late. I had your previous letter but I had no time.

I do hope your mother and your pet have come. I do hope you won’t have to shift from your present quarters.

Your earnings are good. You must not starve yourself. Take plenty of milk, fruit and greens.

All’s well here.

Love.

Blessings from

BAPU

Spiegel Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

132. LETTER TO SAM HIGGINBOTTOM
Segaon, Wardha,
November 26, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

Just as it was a farm manager’s turn to pass a few months at your institute¹ and pick up such knowledge as he could, it is now Shri

¹ As given in the G.N. register
² Allahabad Agricultural Institute, Allahabad
Mirabai Slade’s desire to have her turn, if you will let her come. Our village work whets the appetite for knowledge required for the service. Mirabai is a lover of cattle as also farming. She has a natural aptitude for such work. She is anxious to come as quickly as she can if you can take her. Of course she will pay the necessary charges. The question of housing her may be a difficulty. If she has a room in a professor’s house, she will be satisfied.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 8937

133. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

November 26, 1936

MY DEAR ANAND,

Your two letters stay for me. How could you be so cruel to Vidya or she to you and herself and to her progeny? Must love find such unlovely expression! Or are the protagonists of contraceptives justified in their furious advocacy of them? Can love not deny itself? Has it no such power? Or is there absence of love where there is absence of self-restraint? [sic] Or is love powerless before the demands of animal passion? You and Vidya are embodiments of emotion. Should emotion take such undesirable turns? What is done cannot be undone. You have now to nurse the child to maturity and nurse Vidya to such health as may be still her lot. That is the least you would do. But I ask you to consider calmly the questions I have framed. If Vidya had no appetite but she could not resist your approach, I would far rather tolerate bigamy than a stormy satisfaction of the animal in you through a helpless mate.

I am powerless to say more or to say anything less. You will share this with Jeramdas. I am not writing to him separately.

Love to you both.

BAPU

SHRI ANAND HINGORANI
C/O SHRI K.B. KEWALRAMANI
P.O.CANAL COLONY
FEROZEPORE
PUNJAB

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani
134. LETTER TO DR. HARILAL ADALJA

November 26, 1936

BHAI HARILAL,

I hope you are quite well now. The best and the simplest means to be with God is to serve His creatures as they are beings no different from us.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 93

135. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

November 26, 1936

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

You wrote to me after a long time. I have followed what you say about your activity. Now stick to what you have taken up. Improve your health. For that you should be free from mental tension.

A letter for Balram is enclosed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 391. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

136. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

November 26, 1936

CHI. PRABHA,

I have your letter. However busy I may be I will never find it burdensome to reply to your letter. It is true that this place is crowded. But how would it become more so by your coming? In spite of that, if you feel like it, come after December. I may have to go to Faizpur around December 10. You could come even then. You will improve your health while at Segaon, won’t you? I shall be at Segaon in January in any case.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3487
137. LETTER TO MANSHEKAR J. TRIVEDI

November 26, 1936

BHAI MANSHEKER,

Your conclusions can no doubt be regarded as correct. I have always held myself responsible for Harilal’s being what he is. I no doubt have a share in his sins. I am undergoing punishment for that and will have to do so in the future also. I will not consider that a punishment at all which is inflicted by others. I am being punished by my own conscience. I do not see anything confidential in your letter though I will not take up the pages of Harijan to reply to it. This reply should be enough for you and other gentlemen like you.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS GANDHI

SHRI MANSHEKAR J. TRIVEDI
106 VITHALBHAI PATEL ROAD
BOMBAY

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4753

138. LETTER TO MIRZA ISMAIL

November 27, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter of 9th instant. I await your further letter as also information about the images.

You were good enough to tell me that I was free to make use of your workshops etc., to make researches and get such assistance as was easily available. I know Mr. M. Frydman of your electrical department. He is a lover of villages and has the village mind. Though he has been helping me with his ideas for some years and has recently made me some village tools, I would like you, if it is proper, to instruct him and the Director of Industries to give me or the Village Industries Association such assistance as they can appropriately render. Being in a village myself I do need such assistance fairly often.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SIR M. ISMAIL
DEWAN, MYSORE

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 Gandhiji gave him the name “Bharatanand”.

VOL. 70: 21 OCTOBER, 1936 - 24 FEBRUARY, 1937 121
139. LETTER TO MARGARET SANGER

WARDHA,
November 27, 1936

DEAR SISTER,

It was very thoughtful of you to send me an assortment of your choice dried fruit. Agatha Harrison is here just now and I remarked to her, “Whilst Mrs. Sanger went away from me without taking anything, you see how much I am taking from her even though she is so many miles away.” You may judge who is the better of us two, of course apart from the natural superiority of the sex to which you belong. I have gone through your reproduction of the interview in Asia. My hurried reading left on me the impression that it was a faithful reproduction.

Blessings from

BAPU

MRS. MARGARET SANGER
BIRTH CONTROL CLINICAL RESEARCH BUREAU
17 WEST 16TH STREET
NEW YORK CITY

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

140. LETTER TO P.G. VENKATADESikan

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 27, 1936

DEAR VENKATADESikan,

I was glad to hear from you.

I hope you will stick to your spinning, propagating khadi and assiduously learning Hindi.

Yours,

BAPU

SHRI P.G. VENKATADESikan
3 CHAKRAPANI NAIDU GARDEN PAPER MILLS ROAD
PERAMBUR
MADRAS

From a photostat: G.N. 10845

1 Vide “Interview to Margaret Sanger”, 3/4-12-1935

122 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
141. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

November 27, 1936

CHI. NARAHARI,

I have your letter. I follow your point about Lalji. We must succeed in bringing his wife to the Ashram. Having read the enclosed letters give them to Lalji-Lakshmi. It seems that we shall have to find a husband for Mani also. There will be no difficulty if she learns things and adopts clean habits.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9101

142. A SPUR TO FURTHER PURIFICATION

If the Travancore proclamation of the religious freedom of Harijans is a matter for great rejoicing, it is also an event calling us to greater humiliation, greater effort and greater purification. It is not the end of untouchability. It is certainly, as C. Rajagopalachari says, ‘an indication of the potentiality that exists in us, if only we seek His aid’. It inspires us with hope and faith in our mission. But on no account will it warrant relaxation of effort and vigilance over ourselves. If the proclamation is a result of prayer and purification, if the mute prayer of the selfless workers of Travancore aided by kindred spirits all over India, rather than the advertised meetings and their resolutions, inspired H.H. the Maharaja and his advisers to issue the proclamation (it does not matter whether consciously or unconsciously to them), it follows that greater selflessness and devotion of workers must do the rest.

Let us realize the contents of the rest. We do not yet know how the orthodoxy of Travancore and the Harijans will react to the proclamation. If it is not followed up by suitable response on the part of the public, it can easily become a dead letter. The mere opening of temples will mean nothing, if it does not lead to their purification and that of the priesthood.

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Narahari D. Parikh”, 6-11-1936
The opening of temples in Travancore must lead to their opening in the sister State Cochin and must also lead to the opening of the sister temple of Guruvayyur. These are of a piece, guided by the same tradition and ceremonial. Then come the great temples of Tamil, Telugu and Canarese India. Kashi Vishwanath, Dwarika and Puri temples in the North, West and East still remain closed to the Harijans. Of the big black patches of India Travancore, though a big patch in itself, considered relatively, was a small speck. It has, by the grace of God showing itself through the proclamation of H. H. the Maharaja, become suddenly a bright spot radiating its light throughout India. Will the radiation prove strong enough to affect the big patches I have mentioned?

And the religious freedom, if it is real in the sense that it comes from the heart of orthodoxy, must be followed by the economic and social betterment of the Harijans all over India.

A mere mention of these most important things should be sufficient to chasten us. But it cannot frighten us if we have a living faith in God and our cause.

For this great and glorious task we want more workers—men and women, boys and girls. We want more money, paper, gold, silver, copper, even handfuls of grain, but these too will surely, as also only, come if the workers whom we already have are, like Caesar’s wife, above suspicion. Are we all pure in heart? Are we faithful to our trust? Have we faith in the purely spiritual nature of our mission? If the answers can be in the affirmative, all is well. But the cases I have somewhat discussed1 in these columns and which I am still following up, make me cautious. How will it fare if we have other black sheep among us? We are none without sin. But if we are not men enough publicly and without any attempt to underestimate it, to own up to our guilt, again I ask, how will it fare with us and the cause we have dared to represent? My rejoicing over the proclamation is thus tempered by the necessary sadness induced by a vivid knowledge of what is happening in our midst. No cause for gloom, equally no warrant for over-exultation but the greatest cause for vigilant introspection and a vivid sense of our responsibility rendered greater by the proclamation.

_Harijan_, 28-11-1936

1 “One Thing Needful”, 7-11-1936
A correspondent sends me an issue of Indian Swarajya published at Bezwada. It contains an article on the place of woman in the Smritis. From it I copy the following few extracts without any alteration:

The wife should ever treat the husband as God, though he be characterless, sensual and devoid of good qualities. (Manu 5. 154)

Women should follow the word of their husbands. This is their highest duty. (Yajnavalkya 1. 18)

A woman has no separate sacrifice, ritual or fasting. She gains a high place in heaven by serving the husband. (Manu 5. 145)

She who fasts and performs rituals, while the husband lives, cuts off the life of the husband. She goes to hell. A woman who is after the sacred waters should wash the feet or the whole body of the husband and drink the water; and she attains the highest place (Atri 136-137)

There is no higher world for the woman than that of the husband. She who displeases the husband cannot go to his world after death. So she should never displease the husband. (Vasistha 21-14)

That woman who prides in her father’s family and disobeys the husband should be made by the king a prey to the dogs in the presence of a big assembly of people. (Manu 8. 371)

None should eat the food offered by a woman who disobeys the husband. Such a woman is to be known as a sensualist. (Angiras 69)

If the wife disobeys the husband when he is given to bad habits or becomes a drunkard or is suffering from physical ailment, then, for three months she should be deprived of her valuable clothes and jewels and kept away. (Manu 10. 78)

It is sad to think that the Smritis contain texts which can command no respect from men who cherish the liberty of woman as their own and who regard her as the mother of the race; sadder still to think that a newspaper published on behalf of orthodoxy should publish such texts as if they were part of religion. Of course there are in the Smritis texts which give woman her due place and regard her with deep veneration. The question arises as to what to do with the Smritis that contain texts that are in conflict with other texts in the same Smritis and that are repugnant to the moral sense. I have already suggested often enough in these columns that all that is printed in the name of scriptures need not be taken as the word of God or the inspired word. But everyone can’t decide what is good and authentic and what is bad and interpolated. There should therefore be some authoritative body that would revise all that passes under the name of scriptures, expunge all the texts that have no moral value or are contrary to the fundamentals of religion and morality, and present such an edition for the guidance of Hindus. The certainty that the whole mass of Hindus and the persons accepted as religious leaders will not accept the validity of such authority need not interfere with the sacred enterprise. Work done sincerely and in the spirit of service will have its effect on all in the long run and will most assuredly help those who are badly in need of such assistance.

Harijan, 28-11-1936

144. THE IDEAL BHANGI

The ideal Bhangi of my conception would be a Brahmin par excellence, possibly even excel him. It is possible to envisage the existence of a Bhangi without a Brahmin. But without the former the latter could not be. It is the Bhangi who enables society to live. A Bhangi does for society what a mother does for her baby. A mother washes her baby of the dirt and insures his health. Even so the Bhangi protects and safeguards the health of the entire community by maintaining sanitation for it. The Brahmin’s duty is to look after the sanitation of the soul, the Bhangi’s that of the body of society. But there is a difference in practice; the Brahmin generally does not live up to his duty, the Bhangi does, willy-nilly no doubt. Society is sustained by several services. The Bhangi constitutes the foundation of all services.

And yet our woebegone Indian society has branded the Bhangi as a social pariah, set him down at the bottom of the scale, held him fit only to receive kicks and abuse, a creature who must subsist on the leavings of the caste people and dwell on the dung-heap. He is without a friend, his very name has become a term of reproach. This is shocking. It is perhaps useless to seek the why and wherefore of it. I certainly am unaware of the origin of the inhuman conduct, but I know this much that by looking down upon the Bhangi we—Hindus,

---

1 Translated from Gujarati by Pyarelal. The original appeared in Harijanbandhu, 29-11-1936.
Mussalmans, Christians and all—have deserved the contempt of the whole world. Our villages have today become seats of dirt and insanitation and the villagers come to an early and untimely death. If only we had given due recognition to the status of the Bhangi as equal to that of a Brahmin as in fact and justice he deserves, our villages today no less than their inhabitants would have looked a picture of cleanliness and order. We would have to a large extent been free from the ravages of a host of diseases which directly spring from our uncleanliness and lack of sanitary habits.

I therefore make bold to state without any manner of hesitation or doubt that not till the invidious distinction between the Brahmin and the Bhangi is removed will our society enjoy health, prosperity and peace, and be happy.

What qualities should such an honoured servant of society exemplify in his person? In my opinion an ideal Bhangi should have a thorough knowledge of the principles of sanitation. He should know how a right kind of latrine is constructed and the correct way of cleaning it. He should know how to overcome and destroy the odour of excreta and the various disinfectants to render them innocuous. He should likewise know the process of converting night-soil and urine into manure.

But that is not all. My ideal Bhangi would know the quality of night-soil and urine. He would keep a close watch on these and give a timely warning to the individual concerned. Thus he will give a timely notice of the results of his examination of the excreta. That presupposes a scientific knowledge of the requirements of his profession. He would likewise be an authority on the subject of disposal of night-soil in small villages as well as big cities and his advice and guidance in the matter would be sought for and freely given to society. It goes without saying that he would have the usual learning necessary for reaching the standard here laid down for his profession. Such an ideal Bhangi, while deriving his livelihood from his occupation, would approach it only as a sacred duty. In other words, he would not dream of amassing wealth out of it. He would consider himself responsible for the proper removal and disposal of all the dirt and night-soil within the area which he serves and regard the maintenance of healthy and sanitary condition within the same as the summum bonum of his existence.
How may we have this ideal Bhangi? Only when we have produced an army of Appa Patwardhans. To clothe the Bhangi with the dignity and respect due to him is the especial task and privilege of the educated class. Some members of the class would first themselves master the science of sanitation to educate the Bhangi round them in the same. They would carefully study their present condition and the causes underlying it and set themselves to the task of eradicating the same by dint of inexhaustible perserverance and patience that never looks back and knows no defeat. They would teach them the laws of cleanliness. Our Bhangis do not today possess even good brooms or other suitable means for the removal of night-soil. The latrines themselves are wretched. The site round the Bhangis’ quarters is no better than a cesspool of dirt. All this can only go if some of the educated class give themselves up to the task of redeeming the Bhangi from his present plight and thus redeeming society from its terrible insanitation. Surely this is work enough to satisfy the highest ambition of one who has the spirit of service in him.

_Harijan,_ 28-11-1936

145. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 28, 1936

DEAR CHARLIE,

I am glad you were able to carry Isudas with you to a certain extent. Of course there can’t be any question of _Shuddhi._

You must get rid of this tiredness. It means that you need both mental and physical rest. If it can be had by delaying departure by a week and taking rest at Wardha or Ahmedabad, you must take it unless you will be too late for your first lecture.¹

You won’t put an undue strain on yourself. Love to Gurudev.

Love.

MOHAN

From a photostat: G.N. 992

¹ Sitaram Purushottam Patwardhan
² The addressee was going to England to deliver a course of lectures in Cambridge on Pastoral Theology.
146. LETTER TO VINOB A BHAVE

November 28, 1936

CHI. VINOB A.

Balkrishna is fine. I hope you have received the dates. Let me know whether they are of a better quality. Where is the need for my coming there early? I promised Dev and Dastane that I should be there towards the first week of December, but the stipulation was that you felt the need of my presence there. My coming causes unnecessary excitement. Do you think I should come? I do not think so. When I come, possibly a few good workers will get tied up on my account. Khan Saheb will be with me. Pyarelal will be there. Sahasrabuddhe and Vaikunthlal are of the opinion that I should not make the visit before the 21st. Think over all this and write to me and persuade Dev and Dastane.

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

147. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

November 28, 1936

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS.

I understand your distress over Travancore. Rajaji too is distressed. But I cannot even think of any other course. How can I conceal my feelings when I must speak out? I am so heartily thankful that I have assumed the responsibility for having the order carried out. Now read the laws that have been enacted for temple-goers and tell me if my caution was justified or not. Do we not see everywhere that an order says one thing while the laws framed for its implementation are such as to negate it? It is not as if I was ignorant of the difficulties of the Durbar. But the knowledge should make us vigilant.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8025. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

1 The reference is to Gandhiji’s interview and article on the Travancore proclamation; vide “An Interview”, 12-11-1936 and “A Spur to Further Purification”, 28-11-1936
148. BIRTH-CONTROL THROUGH SELF-CONTROL

The following letter1 has been lying with me for a long time:

In the mean time, I visited Ahmedabad. I did not have the occasion to express my views on the above subject. But, as mentioned by the correspondent, I certainly believe that birth-control can be made effective only through self-control. Any other means of birth-control is likely to result in harm. One can easily discern the evil effects of artificial birth-control methods where they have taken root. It is not surprising that those who advocate birth-control without abstention cannot see these, as it has gained footing in the name of morality.

It is an exaggeration to say that the object of the committee formed in Ahmedabad is what the correspondent states it to be. But whatever its aim may be, its activities will definitely result in an increase in sexual indulgence. Water when thrown on the ground is bound to follow a downward course; similarly, if means are invented to facilitate sexual indulgence, it is bound to increase.

Similarly, it is an exaggeration to believe that doctors and vaidyas do not preach self-restraint as it is likely to affect their incomes adversely. Doctors and vaidyas have never considered it their field to advocate self-restraint. But I see clear signs of these men tending more and more to do so. Their field is to diagnose diseases and cure them. If they do not assign primary importance to indulgence and lack of self-restraint as a cause of disease, a time will come when they will have to stop their practice. As society becomes increasingly intelligent, it will not rest satisfied unless diseases are completely eradicated. And, so long as society does not turn towards self-restraint and does not observe the rules to prevent diseases, it is impossible for it to remain healthy. This is so clear that ultimately everyone will be able to see it and honest doctors will give it the utmost importance. I have no doubt that birth-control without self-control will contribute largely towards increase in sexual indulgence. Hence, it is my humble opinion that the Ahmedabad League can obtain the desired results if it goes deeper into the problem and, taking into account the dangerous consequences of lack of self-

1 Not translated here. The correspondent had noted with disapproval the setting up of a Birth-control League in Ahmedabad which in his view must lead to an increase of licentiousness. control, spends its time in teaching women the necessity of self-control and telling them how simple it is.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 29-11-1936

149. ONE ENEMY ALONE

A man has only one enemy and only one friend: and that is himself. These are not my words but of all the Shastras. A person becomes his own enemy when he deceives himself. He becomes his own friend when he puts himself in the hands of the God who is within him. The necessity for writing this has arisen from the two instances of fall which I have mentioned and other such instances, major as well as minor, which I come across. As I go deeper into these, I find that the persons concerned are practising self-deception. The results of my investigations have yet to be known.

All of us commit sins. But we degrade ourselves more when we try to appear innocent though we are really guilty. A man degrades himself with two women who regard him as a brother, a saint, a sincere worker, a teacher or guru, and then marries one of them. I regard it as a device to hide one’s licentious conduct. To call such a relationship marriage is to abuse the sacrament of marriage. I know such things are happening at many places these days. But any adding to sin or multiplying it will not make it accepted as virtue. If the whole world practises sin it may well become a custom, nevertheless it will remain sin. I am aware that this does not apply to all acts which are regarded as sins. I have in mind things which have been regarded as sinful for generations and which are considered as such by society today.

Teachers develop secret relationships with their women students. That in some cases these relationships are given the form of marriage does not make them virtuous. It is my firm opinion that just as husband-wife relationship is not possible between brothers and sisters, so should it not be possible in the case of teachers and pupils. If this golden rule is not faithfully adhered to, educational institutions will eventually collapse; no girl will be safe from her men teachers. A teacher’s position is such that students—both boys and girls—are constantly under his influence; they regard the teacher’s words as gospel truth. So they do not entertain any doubts about any liberties taken by the teacher. Hence such relationships are regarded, and should be regarded, as uncondonable where the soul is respected as something apart from the body. When such relationship creeps into an institution such as the Harijan Sevak Sangh, it has far-reaching evil effects and ruins its activities.

I am thoroughly convinced that behind the unexpected event of the temples of Travancore being thrown open to Harijans lies the strength of the service of silent workers. Such workers are scattered all over the country. They do not want fame, they have no false sense of pride. They find their fulfilment in service alone. As a result of their punya God came to dwell in the heart of the Maharaja of Travancore and made him throw open the temples to Harijans. This step is the first glimpse of the glory of God. It is an invitation to the workers to become more alert, purer and more dedicated. No workers, whether men or women, can rest in peace as long as all the temples are not thrown open to Harijans, hypocrisy, wickedness and filth are not banished from all the temples and untouchability is not eradicated from the very marrow of Hinduism. And, they should realize that the delay caused in washing away the sin which has existed since time immemorial is due to the sins of the workers which have come to light recently. Who knows, there may be other such workers concealing their sins. The workers should not cling to their weaknesses by looking upon their sins as virtues, they should not fall and drag their work with them by hiding their sins, nor should they satisfy themselves with admitting their sins only partially.

Some persons are hesitant to acknowledge publicly their own sins, some others put a gloss over them while acknowledging them. Religion proclaims: Magnify your sins into mountains even when they are as small as mustard seeds. If you sincerely confess your guilt you will look as clean as a cloth after its dirt has been washed off. And your public confession and repentence will be like a shield to guard you in future.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu, 29-11-1936_

150. PURSE FOR KATHIAWAR’S DARIDRANARAYANA

A sum of Rs. 7178-7-6 collected by Shri Narandas Gandhi for the _Daridranarayana_ on the occasion of Rentia Barash has been handed over to Sardar Vallabhbhai for use in Kathiawar. I was to decide how that money should be disbursed.

Those who collected the fund had thought that this sum could be utilized for khadi and Harijan work. I have been given to understand that at the moment money is not needed for khadi work. The Spinners’ Association is doing its utmost to meet the needs of khadi work in Kathiawar. Moreover, I understand that there is a provision in the late Mohanlal Pandya Memorial Fund for developing khadi activities in Kathiawar. I know, however, that funds are badly needed for Harijan work in Kathiawar. Hence, I have decided to hand over the above mentioned purse for the welfare of the Harijans to Shri Nanalal Kalidas Jhaveri, the Sangh’s representative from Kathiawar.

Let me correct an error along with this. Shri Narandas writes to say that he had contributed 200,000 yards and not an equal number of rounds\(^1\). A round measures four feet whereas a yard is only three feet. And spinning had been carried on in the school for three months, not two.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu, 29-11-1936_

---

151. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

_SEGAON, WARDHA,

November 29, 1936_

MY DEAR REBEL,

I will write to Shummy. My going to Faizpur early is an uncertainty. If I go I will send you full instructions. Do not worry.

Your report of Manganwal is fine reading. May I publish it over your name? It can’t be anonymous.

Whenever you leave you should see me on your way to Ahmedabad. I am quite clear that you may not leave Ahmedabad without finishing your work. It would be improper for you to do so. Whilst your meeting lasts, it should receive your undivided attention. What does it matter even if you come the last day.

I have no time for more.

So with cartloads of love,

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3757. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6913

\(^1\) As mentioned by Mahadev Desai in his “Weekly Letter” in _Harijan_, 24-10-1936.
152. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

November 29, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

I gave you a hurried note this afternoon.
V.’s letter herewith. You will talk to me about it when we meet.
Yes, I read J.’s letter as you did. The meaning has been wilfully perverted by the Press.

If you do not meet me at Faizpur, your stopping at Wardha would not mean any loss of time. And coming to Wardha and Segaon is certainly easier than Bhusaval and Faizpur. And living at Faizpur is none too comfortable. Let us [see] what is in store for you.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3756. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6912

153. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

November 29, 1936

Bhai Bapa,

I have got your letter regarding Govind Babu. I have brought him up as my son. You do know of his previous misadventure. I asked Baba Raghavdas to make an inquiry. He too gave an unsatisfactory report. I did not know at all that he wanted to become a member of Parliament. All those to whom he had gone know him as my man. I took action when the complaint came from Bombay. For my part I do desire that he should hand over possession of the Ashram. As you share the unhappiness of everybody around, I must write to you. Mustn’t I?

Blessings from

Bapu

SHRI THAKKAR BAPA
HARIJAN NIVAS
KINGSWAY, DELHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1172

¹ Vide “Beware of Beggars”, 21-11-1936
154. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

November 30, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

The scorpion incident is a serious one. Let Jhaverbhai thoroughly inquire into the matter. Who was in charge of the cooking? It is quite possible that Bhansali is under the effect of it. Did this happen during the night or in the morning? We would not leave Vrajlal so easily. Whatever happens, let it happen here. Let him carry on his propaganda. We can’t shut up anyone in a cage, can we?

Corrections took a long time, so with great difficulty I am able to write what I am sending.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

It is three o’clock. I am still writing and therefore I am getting all that checked here.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11504

155. LETTER TO D.B. KALELKAR

November 30, 1936

CHI. KAKA,

I just read your article on eroticism. We shall have to discuss it. It is not necessary to make any change in your diet. At any rate I approve of what you take at present. This should suffice for the present.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7695
156. LETTER TO SATYAMURTI

SEGAON,
December 1, 1936

The terms offered by you appear to me to be reasonable, but uplift of the Harijans is an equivocal expression. The Congress is pledged to the removal of untouchability, root and branch. It is part of the original programme. I do hope that the primary elections will be uncontested. Why should your terms be confidential? I would advise absolutely open dealings in a question in which a vast mass of people are affected.

The Hindu, 4-12-1936

157. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 1, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

I had your second letter yesterday. I have to answer both your letters here together merely for want of time. I would not have any difficulty in reading your long letters nor would they tire me, because your handwriting is as neat as Mahadev’s and you never write nonsense. I was not under any apprehension that you might adopt Islam while you were in Bombay. Amtul Salaam had that fear. I had even rebuked her for that. However, considering the disordered state of your mind, I did not think it an impossibility. But you always have

---

1 President of the Tamil Nad Congress Committee.
2 The terms formulated by the addressee were as follows:
   (1) The Congress will always have the uplift of Harijans as an integral part of its programme.
   (2) No plan of non-co-operation or boycott of legislatures undertaken by the Congress need bind the Harijan members, if they do not agree to abide by such decisions.
   (3) Harijan members will be free to act in matters requiring help of the Government for the special relief and uplift of the Harijan community, despite any party rules to the contrary in respect of other Congress members.
   (4) The Harijan members of the Congress party will have full freedom of opinion and vote in respect of matters specially affecting the Harijan community, where they differ from the policy adopted by the party, should any such difference arise.
convincing arguments for your changes and the motives of such changes are not immoral. That is why I am able to put up with them. To me all religions are equal, so I would not feel unhappy if one changed one’s religion with deliberate knowledge and in a sincere spirit in order to cultivate more detachment and attain God sooner. However there is one thing: one who believes that all religions are equal will have no need to change his religion as it includes other religions. One who has grasped this has no need to change his religion. I told you of my apprehensions about your going there. I still have my fear. It seems that so far you have been able to keep your head above water. If you succeed in doing that till the end, it will be a triumph for you and I shall be immensely satisfied.

Take it that for me it will have no value if you drain your energies and come first in all the subjects. It has been truly said that the body is verily the first means necessary for the performance of dharma.¹

Eat wherever you want. Stay where you wish. But remain healthy.

I have not given permission to Amtul Salaam to go anywhere. However, I have not debarred her from going to Trivandrum although I have issued several other injunctions. It was of course good that you did not see her. There is no doubt that she is childish and foolish. She would squander one lakh of rupees if she had that amount. Do not encourage her but at the same time do not neglect her. She has been asking me to withdraw the injunction against her seeing you but I did not pay any heed to her.

Your examination result is very good. I had no doubt about it.

You have given a good account of Harilal. God alone can guide him. That is why I do not say anything to him. I had a letter from him recently. There was nothing in it. I have replied to it, an Arya Samajist is carrying on correspondence with me. He may improve if the Arya Samajists guide him properly, although the correspondent writes that that probability is remote. I have forgotten his name but I have noted it down somewhere. Harilal still wants to marry. He wants money and a life of ease and enjoyment. You probably know about his talk with Surendraji. However, it is impossible to set store by his word because he is not consistent.

¹ हरीकार्यां व कर्मोऽपरं साध्याय

VOL. 70: 21 OCTOBER, 1936 - 24 FEBRUARY, 1937 137
Lilavati is here. Manu arrived on Monday. Vijaya of Bardoli is also here. Those gentlemen who came to attend on Nanavati and Mirabehn are also here. In a word, there is enough company for us.

Durga and Bablo have also arrived, so Mahadev can be said to have set up house. Occasionally I receive letters from Navin.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7309. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

158. LETTER TO TARABEHN N. MASHRUWALA

December 1, 1936

CHI. TARI

I have your letter. Do I have to return any of the books you have sent? I shall write to you even if you don’t. I cannot bear to see you despair. You ought to make an effort. How old are you that you should lose hope? Come to me if you would not get yourself treated there. For my part I like Dr. Oommen’s suggestion. You will have a change of place and also the help of that kind gentleman. And also by the time you return you would have learnt something. Be guided by me. I understand about the Mahila Ashram. I think you wrote a little about it earlier.

You should never give up writing to me. How can we lower the value of our word? By insisting on writing to me, maybe you will become steady and will not accept defeat.

“Never say die even if you have to give up your life.”

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 6698. Also C. W. 4343. Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala

159. ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

[December 1, 1936]

QUESTION: Do you see a reason for Christian workers in the West to come here, and if so what is their contribution?

1 Sister of Sushila Gandhi, Gandhiji’s daughter-in-law.
2 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The questions were asked by visitors interested in Christian mass movements.
3 From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary
ANSWER: In the manner in which they are working, there would seem to be no room for them. Quite unconsciously they do harm to themselves and so to us. It is perhaps impertinent for me to say that they do harm to themselves, but quite pertinent to say that they do harm to us. They do harm to those amongst whom they work and those amongst whom they do not work, i.e., the harm is done to the whole of India. They present a Christianity of their belief but not the message of Jesus as I understand it. The more I study their activities the more sorry I become. There is such a gross misunderstanding of religion on the part of those who are intelligent, very far advanced and whose motives need not be questioned. It is a tragedy that such a thing should happen in the human family.

Q. You are referring to things as they are at present. Do you visualize a situation in which there is a different approach?

A. Your ability is unquestioned. You can utilize all those abilities for the service of India which she would appreciate. That can only happen if there are no mental reservations. If you come to give education, you must give it after the Indian pattern. You should sympathetically study our institutions and suggest changes. But you come with preconceived notions and seek to destroy. If people from the West came on Indian terms, they would supply a felt want. When Americans come and ask me what service they could render, I tell them: ‘If you dangle your millions before us, you will make beggars of us and demoralize us.’ But in one thing I do not mind being a beggar. I would beg of you your scientific talent. You can ask your engineers and agricultural experts to place their services at our disposal. They must not come to us as our lords and masters but as voluntary workers. A paid servant would throw up his job any day, but a volunteer worker could not do so. If such come, the more the merrier. A Mysore engineer who is a Pole has sent me a box of hand-made tools made to suit village requirements. Supposing an engineer of that character comes and studies our tools and our cottage machines and suggests improvements in them, he would be of great service. If you do this kind of work in a religious spirit you will have delivered the message of Jesus.

Q. There is this mood abroad in the world.

A. I would like to see it amongst missionaries in general in India.

1 Maurice Frydman
Q. What would happen if there is an increase in the process of multiplying Christians?

A. If there is an appreciable increase, there would be blood feuds between Harijans themselves, more savage than the feuds we have in Bombay. Fifty per cent of the residents in Segaon are Harijans. Supposing you stole away 10 Harijans and built a church for them you would set up father against son, and son against father, and you would find texts in the Bible to support your action. That would be a caricature of Christianity.

Here Gandhiji explained that the whole story of the sudden uprush of spiritual hunger among the millions of untouchables was absurd. A speech at Central Hall, Westminster, made by Bishop Pickett, of which he had read a report in the Church Times, had greatly shocked him. He said:

He has made such extravagant statements that I would want a demonstration of them—even of the statement that millions were seeking to be converted.¹

Q. Apart from the contribution through the realm of scientific achievement, evangelism seems to be out of the question in establishing relationships between East and West?

A. I do say that. But I speak with a mental reservation. I cannot only reconcile myself to—I must recognize—a fact in nature which it is useless to gainsay—I mean proper evangelization. When you feel you have received peace from your particular interpretation of the Bible, you share it with others. But you do not need to give vocal expression to it. Your whole life is more eloquent than your lips. Language is always an obstacle to the full expression of thought. How, for instance, will you tell a man to read the Bible as you read it, how by word of mouth will you transfer to him the light as you receive it from day to day and moment to moment? Therefore all religions say: ‘Your life is your speech.’ If you are humble enough you will say you cannot adequately represent your religion by speech or pen.

Q. But may not one in all humility say, ‘I know that my life falls far short of the ideal; let me explain the ideal I stand for’?

A. No. You bid good-bye to humility the moment you say that life is not adequate and that you must supplement it by speech. Human species need not go to animals and shout to them: ‘We are humans.’ The animals know them as humans. The language of the soul never lends itself to expression. It rises superior to the body. Language is a limitation of the truth which can be only represented by life.

¹ Vide also “What Is a Miracle?” , 19-12-1936.

Q. How then is experience to be passed on from generation to generation without some articulate expression?

A. There is no occasion for articulate expression. Life is its own expression. I take the simile of the rose I used years ago. The rose does not need to write a book or deliver a sermon on the scent it sheds all around, nor on the beauty which every one who has eyes can see. Well, spiritual life is infinitely superior to the beautiful and fragrant rose, and I make bold to say that the moment there is a spiritual expression in life, the surroundings will readily respond. There are passages in the Bible, the Gita, the Bhagavata, the Koran, which eloquently show this. “Wherever”, we read, “Krishna appeared, people acted like those possessed.” The same thing about Jesus. But to come nearer home, why are people touched as if by magic wherever Jawaharlal goes? They sometimes do not even know he has come, and yet they take sudden fire from the very thought that he is coming. Now there it may not be described as a spiritual influence, but there is a subtle influence and it is unquestionably there, call it by what name you like. They do not want to hear him, they simply want to see him. And that is natural. You cannot deal with millions in any other way. Spiritual life has greater potency than Marconi waves. When there is no medium between me and my Lord and I simply become a willing vessel for his influences to flow into it, then I overflow as the water of the Ganges at its source. There is no desire to speak when one lives the truth. Truth is most economical of words. There is thus no truer or other evangelism than life.

Q. But if a person were to ask the source of such a life, what then?

A. Then you will speak, but your language will be well thought out. You will yourself feel that. It defies expression. But then the questioner probes further, if he is a searcher. Then you will draw him to you. You will not need to go to him. Your fame will so spread that people from all parts of the world will flock to see you and listen to you. You will then speak to them. Take Aurobindo Ghose. Many from all parts go to him. He does not even see them, except on two days during the year, and never talks to them.

Q. You see any indication that there is a drawing together of those who have intimations of a higher life?
A. Yes. But not through these organizations. They are a bar to the process. Why am I at Segaon? Because I believe that my message will have a better chance of penetrating the masses of India, and maybe through them to the world. I am otherwise not a man capable of shutting myself up. But I am so downright natural that once I feel a call I go forward with it, whatever happens. Mr. Hofmeyer\(^1\) of the South African Delegation appreciated my desire not to move out; he did not resent it as price or indifference. Economy of words and action has therefore its value. Only it has to be natural.

_Harijan_, 12-12-1936.

---

160. _LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR_

_Harijan_, Segaon, Wardha,

_December 2, 1936_

_BAPA_,

Your letters have kept coming. I have had no misgivings so far about the propriety of the steps taken in connection with Travancore. Only harm and no good can come if the limit laid down by me is not adhered to.

I am enclosing the correspondence with Bapi Needu. Keep the Valunjkar report in a file there.

The duplicity of Govind Babu is becoming obvious. He himself wrote that he would come and make a clarification. I invited him and now he writes: “I do not wish to come to you. Your ideas and mine differ. I am not satisfied with social activities” and so on. On the other hand evidence against him is piling up with me. I write this since you have taken interest in this case.

_BAPU_

From a photostate of the Gujarati: G. N. 1173

---

161. _LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA_

_Bhai Ghanshyamdas_,

_December 2, 1936_

I am dictating this as I eat. Parameshwari Prasad has been here for the last two days. He had a talk with Jammalalji and myself. He has

\(^1\) He visited India in September 1936; _vide_ “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 5-10-1936 obtained the opinion of experts like Smith, which shows that his scheme is scientific and practicable. Go through it if you can find the time. Parameshwari Prasad suggests that all share-holders should donate their shares, thereby turning the limited company into a public association. With this donation a start would be made and public donations would be asked for the rest of the capital. Jamnalalji and I have decided to go by what you decide in the matter. Now about the loan you have advanced. I have advised that it may be treated as all other loans and that it should be repaid. Even if the whole set-up should have to be wound up, it would remain a first charge along with Nathuramji’s money. And if it turned into a public association it would perforce have to assume the responsibility for all debts. Parameshwari Prasad is going to Calcutta. He will explain the matter to you. Having heard him you will do what you think best.

This has been taken down by your daughter Anasuya.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C. W. 8024. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

162. LETTER TO KAMALABEHN

December 3, 1936

CHI. KAMALABEHN,

I hope you have received my telegram. What consolation can I give you? Does death spare anyone? Even so we would like to go before our dear ones. But what difference does it make to one who lives only for service whether he dies early or late. May God bless you with health and devotion to service.

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

163. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI A. MEHTA

SEGAON,

December 3, 1936

Bhai Bhagwanji,

Amidst heavy pressure of work I write this much. You are suspicious by nature and the only remedy for that is work. Bhagwan'

1 God alone knows, not Bhagwanji, if unknowingly I have done injustice. Who would know the pangs of childbirth? How can you invite a man who has just been nursing the sick\(^1\) and expect a written speech from him? I am not annoyed that you have written to this effect. Only please forgive me if I am not always able to write even this much.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5831. Also C.W. 3054. Courtesy: Bhagwanji A. Mehta

164. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS\(^2\)

WARDHAGANJ,
December 4, 1936

Certain definite matters have been referred to us by the Ahmedabad Mill-owners’ Association and the Ahmedabad Labour Association for arbitration. We had three days’ conference with the respective representatives at Wardha and Segaon. We hope to deliver our Awards\(^3\) not later than the 15th instant.

The Hindu, 5-12-1936

165. DISCUSSION WITH STUDENTS OF VILLAGE WORKERS’ TRAINING SCHOOL\(^4\)

[Before December 5, 1936]

For some time past a party of students of Village Workers Training School has been visiting villages in the neighbourhood on appointed evenings reciting the Tulsi Ramayana and bhajans. . . . Now that the boys, examinations are drawing near, a proposal came to drop the visits for the time being. Said Gandhiji to them:

This has shocked me. If your studies cannot stand this brief relaxation, and you must pore over your books all the twenty-four hours because of the approach of the examination, those studies are worth nothing. But apart from this, your proposal augurs ill for the villagers. You have promised to go to them on appointed evenings,

---

\(^1\) Gandhiji had nursed Mirabehn and Nanavati when they were ill in October.

\(^2\) This was a joint statement issued by Gandhiji and Kasturbhai Lalbhai, an industrialist and mill-owner of Ahmedabad.

\(^3\) For Gandhiji’s Award, vide “Award in Labour Dispute”, 26-12-1936.

\(^4\) Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
and now you are going to break the promise. I tell you the few visits you have paid to them will be as inauspicious as the appearance of the comet is supposed to be. They may be worse. The comet appears suddenly almost without notice, Nature’s known laws do not seem to govern it. But you gave them a promise and now if you go back on it, they will feel that it is not for them that you go there but just to please your own fancies. That feeling will breed indifference and ultimately disgust. I tell you these visits are more important than the visits to distribute medicines to the villages. The medicines are good for their physical ailments, Ramayana is good for their spiritual ailments. If you had not made the beginning I should not have asked you to do so. They never invited you or expected you to go there, but now that the beginning has been made you should keep it up. These visits give you a living touch with the people; rather than drop them you must think out how you can make them more and more useful and successful.

He next spoke to them in answer to a question about the profession of the Bhangi. He asked them to study the article on the Ideal Bhangi that he had written for the current issue of Harijan and to fill in the details if they were wanting. He regaled them with stories of the Bhangi who was serving the village, and who was now being asked to go for negligent work, and of the new Bhangi who asked for Rs. 30 a month and ultimately became ready to accept Rs. 15. [He said:]

Now it is your work to mend these people’s ways, and you cannot do so unless you are good Bhangis yourselves. As I have explained in my article, I do not want the Bhangi to be the indifferent and perfunctory scavenger that he is today. I want him to be a healer of ailments, and a physician besides being an ideal scavenger. In ancient times the village barber used to be also the village surgeon. I want the good Bhangi to be the village health inspector and physician. You have to pave the way for this. Today we have reduced him to the lowest level and we have gone down with him. He is content to live in squalor and dirt, we are doing no better. You cannot reform him unless you reform yourselves, unless you set about the task with a passion that you momentarily import into your studies. The task of rural sanitation is no easy one, it means nothing less than raising the village Bhangi to the status of an ideal Bhangi. The whole subject is unexplored; the profession, far from being a dirty one, is a purifying, life-protecting one. Only we have debased it. We have to raise it to its true status. I have indicated the lines in my article and I will not repeat here what I have said there.

Harijan, 5-12-1936

1 Vide “The Ideal Bhangi”, 28-11-1936
166. TEMPLE-ENTRY RULES

The reader will find in this issue the full text of the rules1 framed under the famous Travancore Proclamation opening the State temples to Harijans. It is not possible to criticize the rules in anticipation of their application. As with all rules, naturally they lend themselves to an interpretation and application as liberal as the Proclamation itself, and to so narrow an interpretation and application as to make the Proclamation wholly ineffective and thus make things worse than before. There is no warrant whatsoever for fearing any calamitous result. The Proclamation, as I believe it, is in response to the Time Spirit by a Prince imbued with the spirit of reform. It has behind it the sanction of popular approval, if what appears in the Press and what I have learnt from persons who should know can be relied upon.

But as I have already said in these columns the brunt of making the working of the reform successful will fall on the shoulders of the reformers of Travancore. It should be possible to create an atmosphere whereby the rules may never need enforcement by authority. Temples are generally visited by sincere devotees or hypocrites. The former are meticulous in their observance of rules prescribed by custom for fear of losing all merit of temple worship, and the latter have to observe the rules equally meticulously for fear of their being found out. Framing of rules such as we have now to deal with is a novelty of the modern age though absolutely necessary. When the temple doors are opened by a secular proclamation to thousands of people, it becomes necessary also to frame secular rules for its due enforcement. There is no doubt the whole of this great experiment of Travancore requires careful, sympathetic and prayerful handling by all concerned. If the spirit behind is purely religious all will be well. Who can lead in that direction better than the reformers and the Harijans whom they will bring to those temples?

_Harijan, 5-12-1936_

---

1 Vide Appendix.
167. SEGAON, NOT SHEGAON

Several correspondents address their letters to me to Shegaon. Now Shegaon is a main line station between Bhusaval and Wardha. I am not living in Shegaon. I am living in Segaon near Wardha. It is not a railway station. It has no post-office, and no telegraph office. All letters and telegrams should therefore be addressed to Wardha.

_Harijan_, 5-12-1936

168. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUL SALAAM,

I have your letter. How shall I please you? I have already told you that you can join me after you have recovered. I cannot, under present conditions, give you the care you can get at home. It is for this reason that I say that your coming to me for the present may not be the right thing.

I felt tired after writing this, and the letter remained unfinished as visitors came. You yourself are the source of your misery. When I speak something frankly you take it in the wrong light. You fail to see the turn my life has taken. I am running no Ashram here and I cannot accommodate here any number of persons I may wish. How could it be that I should call you here and not be able to nurse you? You might say that you need no nursing, but how could I put up with that? I keep no ailing persons here, and to those that are already here I have spoken to the effect that they should go either to Wardha or to their villages. Under such conditions what can I tell you? Recover and then come. If not, tell me where I may arrange to send you for improving your health and I shall do so. It was for this reason that I suggested sending you to Bangalore.

For falling ill also you yourself are to blame. You do not even see the reason why I asked Kanti to go to you.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu and Gujarati: G.N. 364

1 The letter up to this is in Urdu. _Bapuke Patra-8; Bibi Amtussalaamke Nam_ assigns to this portion the date December 4, without however giving any reasons.

2 _Vide_ "Letter to Amtussalaam", 13-11-1936
169. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

December 5, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

Though I have corrected the enclosed I doubt whether it is worth publishing. Consult Andrews today or tomorrow. If you cannot contact him send it to Mott and tell him that I agree to its being published only if he feels that it is worth publishing.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11505

170. ABOUT PIERCING THE NOSE AND THE EARS

From far off Kenya, Shri Badiyani, who is a teacher in the Government Indian School there, writes to say:

The tendency of this correspondent of using adjectives such as “the great child educationist” with reference to Shri Gijubhai and of running down an uneducated person like myself, is not worth emulating at all. Gijubhai wishes to grow old teaching young boys and girls, so why should he not hand over poor girls to the control of men like himself by piercing or allowing them to pierce their ears and noses? If Gijubhai claims to be a great child educationist and does not allow anyone else to share this title, his opinions will have to be carefully weighed. In that case it is necessary to know under what circumstances and in which year he had the noses and ears of his own daughters pierced and in which year and in what context he wrote the above letter.

Let us, for the sake of argument, accept that Gijubhai is a great child educationist. Nevertheless, why should we take it for granted that his views can never be wrong? Why should we regard utterances of Mahatmas on every occasion as gospel truth?

How did my advice, which was being acted upon so far, become wrong after the correspondent had seen and read a letter appearing

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that having read Gijubhai’s views on the subject of piercing the nose and the ears he could no longer agree with Gandhiji’s views on the matter.
under Gijubhai’s name? Had Shri Badiyani found anything wrong with the young girls whose noses and ears had not been pierced?

My advice is that is no matter, whether small or big, should anyone’s opinion be given the importance of a gospel truth. Every statement—whether coming from a ‘Mahatma’ like myself or a great child educationist like Gijubhai—should be weighed in the scales of intelligence and one which is more reasonable should be accepted. If, later, one comes across even a greater ‘Mahatma’ or a greater Shastri, one should not immediately prostrate oneself before him but remain faithful to the person whom one’s intelligence has accepted. This is the meaning of an unwavering intelligence. If we do not learn to do so, we shall be left with no faith and our poor intelligence will be rendered ineffective from confusion.

Let us now consider the basic issue. Are only girls fond of jewellery? Is this not true of boys? What can love of jewellery have to do with the piercing of the nose and the ears?

In the West, there are innumerable girls whose noses and ears are not pierced, but we do not hear of their lamenting the fact when they grow up.

If the nose and the ears are to be pierced, how many holes are to be made and why only a specified number of holes? What kind of ornaments can be regarded as adornment and when should these be regarded as ugly?

If the practice of piercing noses and ears is good, then why should we not leave it to the girls to get that done when they are grown up?

Why increase artificial differences between boys and girls? Are there many parents amongst us who get the ears of both their boys and girls pierced? Why then show this favour to or inflict this tyranny on girls alone?

Let me now give my opinion briefly.

In both my ears, taken together, there were six holes. These are still there and I do not like them. But how am I to close these up? My wife’s nose and ears were pierced. She must have resented taking off her ornaments. Neither of us feels that either one of us looks less comely for having taken them off. If we do not appear comely in the eyes of others, should we have pity for them even in such matters?

The piercing of the nose and the ears and adorning these with ornaments results in dirt collecting at these places and this sometimes even leads to pus formation. The fact that time is wasted in keeping... these clean to avoid such harmful consequences, is also not an unimportant consideration.

Doctors alone can measure the effect of the pain caused to little children by the piercing of their noses and ears.

Women, as it is, are slaves. In the act of piercing their noses and ears, I have never seen anything but a symbol of their slavery. By tying a string to her ear-rings, woman can be pulled like a bullock. Instances exist of cruel husbands having cut off both the ears and the noses of their wives along with the ornaments in them.

I invite those who advocate the piercing of the nose and the ears to look at the frightful ornaments on the noses and ears of Indian women and the dirt in them and then advise me as to what I should do. Should I have them remove their ornaments or should I advise them to wear ear-pendants of pearls in holes large enough for my finger to go through?

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 6-12-1936

171. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,

December 6, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letters. Agatha came in last evening. Andrews is here and so is Carl Heath.

Your two parcels have come. I see in them two blankets! The white one is in use already. Is any of them for the Exhibition? The rest, I take it, is for [the] Exhibition. The books are valuable.

What is the letter about articles? I think I told you they were not worth publishing—such, i.e., as I had read.

Shummy’s reply has been received. It is good. But he can’t bear the separation and he is anxious about your health.

I have to reach Faizpur not before 20th. Hence you will pass through Wardha on your way to Ahmedabad. I leave Wardha on 19th evening. The weather here is very good. I have not seen the lace yet. Is it coming in a separate parcel?

Too busy to say more.

Love.

TYRANT
[PS.]
Yes, J.’s appeal is splendid. I understand what you say about V.S. and Manganwal. We must talk about it.

From the original: C.W. 3758. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6914

172. LETTER TO NARMADABEHN R. PATHAK
December 6, 1936

CHI. NARMADA,

You unworthy girl, you sat before me for hours but could not see that I was pained. Could you not see my unshed tears? You even forgot what you had told me. Carried away by an impulse, you have cast away abiding happiness. And now you feel ashamed even to write to me. What were your words when you came to the Ashram\(^1\) and what have you done? I do not resent your marriage\(^2\). You yourself admit that your relationship cannot be called a marriage. Both of you have to seek dharma in this sin. I do not say that what I have suggested is the right course. At the same time I have no doubt that the path you have chosen is wrong. Wake up. Perhaps your intellect will fail to understand this but your heart, if it is sound, certainly will. This is only in reply to your message.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W 2780. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N. Pathak

173. LETTER TO RAMNARAYAN N. PATHAK
SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 6, 1936

BHAIRAMNARAYAN,

I have your letters. Instead of drafting a statement for you from these letters I will write an article\(^3\) and publish it. Believe me I weep more than both of you could be doing because all my expectations have been belied. Nothing is lost if your repentance is sincere. But you cannot atone for what you have done by indulging in pleasure. I

---

\(^1\) In July 1932; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, and “Letter to Narmadabehn Rana”, 16-7-1932

\(^2\) With Ramnarayan Pathak.

\(^3\) Vide “Need for Cleansing of Heart”, 13-12-1936
still stick to my views. You were the guardian of Narmada’s chastity. You violated that chastity and while doing so you never thought of what you were doing or what the after-effects would be. Still, the problem of doing justice to Gangabehn remains. If you can become Narmada’s teacher, her life, and also yours, will be saved from ruin and Gangabehn will have peace of mind. I do not know Gangabehn. Her letter has not impressed me much, though I see that she feels hurt. To your brother and Hemubhai the blow is still fresh. You will be able to see the light not by lamenting over what you have done but by thinking calmly over it. Nothing but ruin can result if you are carried away by your present notion of marriage. Will you not pay off your debt to the Harijans?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2782. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N. Pathak

174. DISCUSSION WITH STUDENTS OF VILLAGE WORKERS TRAINING SCHOOL

[December 6, 1936]

I have no doubt that this penance willingly undertaken and cheerfully gone through had something to do in bringing about the settlement. I do not mean to imply that it had any direct influence upon the Union Government. It is my firm belief that all real penances produce unseen but sure effects. The penance was undertaken for self-purification, for sharing, however humbly, in the suffering of the strikers.

That was the only way in which I could prayerfully appeal to God.

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 According to the source, students of Village Workers’ Training School met Gandhiji on “Sunday last”, which would be December 6.
3 Gandhiji had been asked about the fasts he had undertaken on various occasions, and he had referred to his first fast in connection with a public movement which he had undertaken in 1913, when he had imposed on himself a triple vow of self-suffering till the £ 3 tax was abolished: (i) to adopt the labourers’ dress; (ii) to walk barefoot; (iii) to have only one meal during the day—a meal which during those days consisted of fruits untouched by fire. This penance went on for some months till the tax was removed.
The man who performs such penances throws himself wholly and solely on God. He does not undertake such a penance lightly, never in anger, and not certainly with a view to winning any advantage for himself. Then it must not be against an opponent with whom there is no bond of affection. Then it presupposes personal purity and a living belief in non-violence and truth. Obviously there can be no room for pride in such penances.

_Harijan_, 12-12-1936

175. LETTER TO MURIEL LESTER

[After December 6, 1936]

DEAR MURIEL,

Though you do not expect to hear from me, I would just like to tell you that Agatha is here just now and walks from Jamnalalji’s to Segaon. The cool weather permits such adventures. Andrews was here for four days. Dr. Mott and B. Mathews have been to Segaon. The discussion centres round the untouchability question, i.e., the propriety of Christian Mission interfering with the internal reform movement which has received a tremendous lift by the action of the Travancore State opening all the temples to Harijans.

I hope you are keeping extra fit.

Mira is flourishing after her serious illness.

Love.

BAPU

MISS MURIEL LESTER
C/O N.P.M. 105 EAST 22ND ST.
NEW YORK CITY

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

176. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

_December 7, 1936_

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have not been able so much as to lift my eyes. If you do not like this about Ramnarayan, come and discuss it with me. If you like it send it immediately.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11506

1 From the reference to Andrews’s visit in the past. He was still at Segaon on December 6; _vide_ “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 6-12-1936

2 _Vide_ “Need for Cleansing of Heart”, 13-12-1936
177. LETTER TO RADHAKRISHNA BAJAJ

SEGAON,
December 7, 1936

CHI. RADHAKISAN

I do not at all like this fever. Neither you nor Anasuya should fall ill. You may continue with the baths even when you have fever and the water should be cold, not hot. I have also recommended a mud-pack. Come and let me explain if you have no fever tomorrow.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 9122

178. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 8, 1936

MY DEAR ANAND,

I am not angry. I am filled with pain and dismay. Your letter does not mend matters. If you felt for Vidya, your duty was clear even if she was the temptress. You were the guardian of her health. What I stated about contraceptives was not to suggest that you believed in them. It was the measure of my grief that if noble natures like you could not exercise self-restraint, the case for contraceptives came to wear the robe of respectability. Suppose I yield so to some temptation or pity and a frail woman conceives, will not the case for contraceptives seem to be overwhelming? The difference between the two cases will be only one of degree except that my fall will be infinitely more unpardonable than yours.

You must be as practical as you are sentimental, otherwise your sentiment will be nonsensical and may easily become a weakness and a vice.

Of course poor Vidya has my blessings. Let his name connote your and Vidya’s victory over the flesh.

Love to you all.

BAPU

1 Jamnalal Bajaj’s nephew
2 The child’s name was “Vijay” which means “victory”; 12-12-1936
I have assumed that Vidya is well.

FROM a microfilm Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

179. ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

SEGASON,
[December 8, 1936]

Some time ago a group of friends who had come from the World Committee of the Y.M.C.A. were on a visit to Segaon . . . . these friends, questions were refreshingly fresh . . . . Gandhi had sat down in the village to better the social and economic condition of the villagers, especially Harijans. How exactly was this being done?

ANSWER: By living in their midst, by having them to work with us and by working for them.

QUESTION: That is very good. But does that create in them any ambition to live higher?

A. It does.

Q. Do they have any big hopes for the future?

A. I do not know but I think it is better that it comes naturally and gradually. You may be sure that they feel and know that better times are ahead of them.

Q. Our problem is quite different; we have a number of difficult problems like secularism, nationalism and immigration. Could you give some advice to our young folk?

A. It would be sheer presumption on my part to offer advice to those whom I do not know except through hearsay, and I am so constituted that I cannot send advice to people whom I do not know through people I do not know.

Q. We have here delegates from various countries. Some of them will go out in separate groups to the people of India and would like to speak to them about conditions in their countries. I wonder what Indians would be particularly interested in hearing about?

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 The date is from the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary.
3 Mr. and Mrs. Davies Reid and a Japanese named Mr. Saito
A. I suppose I may say, subject to correction, that they would be more interested in politics than in questions economic or spiritual. It may be sad, but that I think is the state of things.

Q. In connection with the political situation, I dare say they have heard of communism and fascism, about which we are at loggerheads. Would they like to hear about Spain?

A. Indeed. Our President would not let us remain without hearing about Spain.

Q. I see. Now I would put the question from the point of view of our own learning things from India. We will be going back to America, Europe, Far East. What shall we look for here? How can we take back with us something of the imperishable asset of the Indian civilization? Can we hope to get at the heart of things?

A. It is a very difficult question, and yet perhaps not so difficult to answer. I would ask you to ignore big cities if you would see the heart of India. The big cities here are but poor editions of your big cities. Therefore you have to go to the villages, and those too not close to cities or to the railway line, but unspoilt by them. Go thirty miles from the railway line where people are untouched by post and telegraphs, and you will see that the people show a kind of culture which you miss in the West. You will have to see people with the help of the interpreters. You will find there relics of art which has not yet perished, you will find culture which is unmistakable but far different from that of the West. Then you will take away something that may be worth taking. But of course it depends on the angle from which you would see things.

Q. But how would you describe the elements of culture we should find in the villages?

A. Will you explain what you mean?

Q. A gentleman said we should find in Indian villages qualities of age-old culture which we should not find in the West. Is it in the philosophy of life, or art, or what?

A. You would therefore want me to describe to you the predominant aspect of our culture. Is that what you want?

Q. Yes.

A. I would say it is spiritual.

---

1 Civil War had broken out in Spain and Jawaharlal Nehru had been voicing concern for the Spanish Republic.
Q. That leads us to another question. One of the questions we are going to discuss is the ‘Impending Challenge of the Will of God to the Youth’. Even in the same religion people have different ways of finding the will of God. Could you tell us whether the people here are conscious that they are working out the will of God?

A. They are not, and I am thankful that they are not, because it is natural with them. They are not conscious that they are breathing or using their eyesight and yet they are doing it every moment. A healthy man will not be thinking or talking of his health. In the same way the spirituality here is unconscious of itself. It is an inherited culture. Thus in a good home they do not know what spirituous liquor is. They do not know what it is to be a teetotaller, for they have been that all their lives. The words do not occur in their dictionary.

Q. Japan and India have many things in common.¹

A. Well, East is East, but not now. Japan is Americanized. In fact Japan is beating America and England hollow in exploiting India. You know the quantity of fents that are dumped here by Japan?

Q. (Taken rather aback) We provide cheap goods, Sir. Are they harmful?

A. I will not say that they are harmful because they are cheap. But they leave us poorer.

Q. It is not good to provide cheap goods?

A. No. You have no business to deprive us of our hands and feet.

Q. So, then, you are against this machine age. I see.

A. To say that is to caricature my views. I am not against machinery as such, but I am totally opposed to it when it masters us. Japan and America and England are doing it today. The agreement between India and Japan is a misnomer. It is an agreement between England and Japan. Japan must wash its hands of this competition. It is harmful to us and harmful to you. No one can make bond-slaves of others without degrading himself. Only a few years ago we manufactured our own cloth, and now we get it from Japan and England. It is an unnatural position. We could make enough cloth for ourselves and the whole world. Our country abounds in natural resources. There is something most hideously wrong in sending one’s own cotton out and getting manufactured goods. Nine crore rupees worth of cattle hides are exported from here only to return to us as manufactured products. There is no reason why this should happen.

¹ This was said by Mr. Saito.

Q. You would not industrialize India?

A. I would indeed, in my sense of the term. The village communities should be revived. Indian villages produced and supplied to the Indian towns and cities all their wants. India became impoverished when our cities became foreign markets and began to drain the villages dry by dumping cheap and shoddy goods from foreign lands.

Q. You would then go back to the natural economy?

A. Yes. Otherwise I should go back to the city. I am quite capable of running a big enterprise, but I deliberately sacrificed the ambition, not as a sacrifice, but because my heart rebelled against it. For I should have no share in the spoliation of the nation which is going on from day to day. But I am industrializing the village in a different way. I shall show you a village product which I am sure compares favourably with American toffee. Tell me if you do not prefer this gur (palm-juice gur) to American toffee.

Here a little supply of palm-juice gur is distributed to the guests who enjoy it. The American lady thoroughly enjoys it . . . her artistic eye catches sight of the palm trees drawn in relief on the wall above the niche in front of her. She appreciates it much.

But there Japan has got plenty to give us. In your arts and handicrafts you are matchless.

Q. But I like the mud floor and the mud walls here.

A. Oh yes, it keeps us warm in winter and cool in summer.

Q. That’s what the Germans say about their beer.

A. So mother earth is our beer. Is not that splendid?

But the American friend was not going to while away the time joking. He asked earnestly if Gandhiji would not give a message to youths. . . .

A. Simply this that 50 years of unbroken practice of non-violence to the best of my ability has deepened my faith in it, instead of diminishing it. And if my faith is any worth to them, let them not get weak-hearted, but be heartened by my faith. If that faith went away I should bury myself alive.

Q. You like the Sermon on the Mount?

A. Oh yes. Even my declaration that I like it is exploited by Christian friends. But let that be. What do you want to ask?
Q. I would like you to tell me one passage which has given you more satisfaction than any other.

A. I do not know. But I shall give you a passage that I have often quoted to those who came to convert me to Christianity: ‘Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and everything will be added unto you.’ I saw this emphasized in one of Tolstoy’s beautiful stories. It gripped me, and also what he wrote underneath it.

The talk then turned to the modern miracle in Travancore, which Gandhiji said was entirely due to the influence of a great woman. The work of the great woman prompted the lady visitor to ask one final question about the women in America.

Q. Our own women and girls unfortunately do not represent the finest and best in us. I wonder if we can reorient our curricula of education for woman, so as to keep her the preserver of the best in us and to enable her to become a good co-worker of man. Could you give us a thought for our girls?

A. I believe in the proper education of women. But I do believe that woman will not make her contribution to the world by mimicking or running a race with men. She can run the race, but she will not rise to the great heights she is capable of by mimicking man. She has to be the complement of man.

Harijan, 27-2-1937

180. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 10/11, 1936

BHAI KASTURBHAI,

I am sending herewith my draft of the Award.¹ I am still going through the papers. As I read them I find that the mill-owners do not have any case for the cut, and if they have they have not been able to argue it. If you feel that the papers we have received prove their case it is your duty to guide me. I will in any case be receiving your Award, which will contain your arguments also. If I can understand them I will certainly change my decision. I of course take it that in your Award you will not make use of anything that you may know but of which I am ignorant because in that case I will not be able to understand it at all. I may have heard many things from the Labour Association, but what can I do so long as they are not recorded in the files? I write this not by way of warning but just to know your mind because I shall feel unhappy if both of us do not arrive at the same decision. I want to understand your point of view fully but only on the strength of the evidence we have received. I do not understand how you can demand a cut in wages so long as the Delhi settlement is not proved unworkable. So for me the doors are closed. You will realize my difficulties better after reading my Award. If you think it is necessary for you to come here, do come. If you find that it is necessary to send me a telegram, do that.

¹ Vide “Award in Labour Dispute”, 26-12-1936.

As I hear that you have gone to Ahmedabad, I am sending this to two addresses. Send back to me one of the two copies.

See that we adhere to the time limit of the 15th.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS
December 11, 1936

[PS.] I wrote this yesterday. As it missed the train in spite of all efforts, I opened it to write about the Umpire. That was left out. Besides Shri Madgavkar, the other names suggested are Shri Motilal Setalvad and Shri Patkar. Shankerlal told me that you approve of Shri Govind Ballabh Pant. You may choose any of these.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 4196

181. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 11, 1936

MY DEAR REBEL,

I have a moment just now for a love letter. I don’t understand the possibility of your missing Wardha en route to Ahmedabad. If it is to be with Shummy as long as possible you may drop Wardha assuredly. The quickest route from Delhi to Ahmedabad is by metre gauge. From Wardha to Ahmedabad, for you Bombay is more convenient. Tapti valley is cheaper and quite good.

1 Of 13-1-1935. This provided for a reduction of 6 1/2 per cent in the earnings of all time and piece workers and further promised that wages would be standardized and a scheme for adjustment of wages would be framed.
I am glad you are missing Delhi. No feverish running to and fro. V. S. ought not to be pampered.

Ba’s cottage is nearly finished. You will like it except for its somewhat city appearance. It has cost more than my hut. I am sure that at least Rs. 100 could have been saved on it. But I could not control the operations unless I was to give my time which I could not afford. But of all this when we meet.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3759. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6915

182. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

December 11, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

What about the borrowed book? Have you received Fowler’s article and so forth?

Who among us will go to Faizpur? Even now I do not receive butter regularly. As for oranges, I am buried in them. Who has arranged that? Every alternate day I get a basket of fifty. That should be stopped. What do they cost?

We should make a deeper study of Mott’s correction. I hope Bablo is doing well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11507

183. LETTER TO D.B. KALELKAR

December 11, 1936

CHI. KAKA,

“How can a habit once formed be given up?” How many times have I told you not to put trust in my words reported by another and not to act upon them. Dinkar, deen as he is, can neither understand humour nor indulge in it. Now I am compelled to say that you too are wanting in that respect. But has your imagination also become stunted

1 Vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 5-12-1936
2 Poor
by fasts? Why do you not use your imagination and say to yourself: ‘Bapu has been joking; I will certainly go’? And after all you wanted to come to me only to pay your respects. So what would it have mattered even if I did not speak to you? Or even if I despised you? It was your duty to pay me your respects, was it not? Why should you then have hesitated in observing your dharma? You wanted to talk to me, we could have done that also. Even when you write to me I have to read it. Now you have to come here to discharge your debt with interest. Do you wish that while talking to others I should never mention your name even by mistake?

Now you have entered the vana'. You should be happy. You can now hold converse with the trees. I have read your address to the Gujarati Sahitya Parishad from beginning to end. I liked it. More when we meet.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7968

184. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR
SEGGAON, WARDHA,
December 11, 1936

CHI. LILA,

You seem to have gone far. I have written a letter to Dwarkadas\(^2\) which is enclosed. It is difficult to give any guidance from here. Dinshaw\(^3\) visits Bombay from time to time. Bring him along. Find out about his date of coming from his man. His office is in Fort, Bombay. Maybe Ramdas knows about it. Ba’s blessings to all of you.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Navin\(^4\) has arrived today.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

---

1 Gandhiji is referring to the addressee having entered his fifties, the age of vanprastha.
2 Addressee’s brother
3 Dr. Dinshaw K. Mehta
4 Vrajlal Gandhi’s son
185. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

December 11, 1936

Bhai Ghanshyamdas,

I have your two letters in front of me. I understand about Parameshwari and I have sent him a copy of your letter advising him to give up the Delhi farm. I too understand that the financial aspect is not important. The important question for me is one of honour and right judgement. I must not abuse your confidence and generosity nor permit anyone else to do so. Let us see what happens. I understand your point about Travancore. Nevertheless it was unnecessary for me to do more than I did. I express my impressions as they occur. As regards the current developments you will read what I have written in the Harijan.¹

Thakkar Bapa writes that you are somewhat indisposed. What is it? Andy why? Dates are coming regularly and the rug has been received. It is quite warm.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8026. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

186. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

December 11, 1936

Chi. Brajisan,

Mother must have recovered by now. Why do you wish to go to the Congress? I shall probably reach there on the 20th. At present I have no idea where I shall be lodged or how I shall go. My idea is to walk from the station. If I have room enough and if you have to come you can certainly stay with me. But if it is not really necessary for you to come, you should remain there and do some work of service.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2442

¹ Vide “God Is Great”, 12-12-1936
187. PLACE OF CEREALS IN FOOD

Shri Ishverbhai Amin, Chief Chemist and Technical Superintendent of the Alembic Chemical Works of Baroda, has prepared a chemical analysis of principal cereals and pulses commonly used in Gujarat and a note thereon. I give the important part of it below, omitting the detailed analysis as being too technical for the reader. The note gives the reader sufficient information for his guidance.

_Harijan_, 12-12-1936

188. GOD IS GREAT

The following telegram was received at Poona from the Harijan Sevak Sangh, Trivandrum, on the 3rd instant:

Actual working Proclamation most successful. Has disproved all fears entertained certain quarters. No part of temple open to any devotee is barred against Ezhavas and Harijans now. Excepting innermost chamber which has been always used only by officiating priest, all other places including mandaps, enclosed platforms, corridors are as freely used by newly admitted devotees as by caste Hindus. What is of the greatest importance is that waters in sacred tanks attached to temples are also freely used by Ezhavas and Harijans. Sense of horror at approach of Harijans seems completely overcome. Harijan devotees do not seem to excite any special reaction in devotees of other castes who engage in worship at the same time. Hardly necessary to say that no special hour or any other distinction made against new entrants. A hopeful feature is priests and other temple officials genuinely wholeheartedly co-operating. They do not seem to suffer any mental strain . . . .

Orthodox people including Namboodiris have as groups or individuals displayed no hostility, most of them expressing themselves in terms of full approval of Proclamation. We see no signs whatever of resentment. Their behaviour is such as if nothing extraordinary had happened, which from what we know of previous orthodoxy is an astonishing achievement. The noble Proclamation has been followed up by thorough execution.

1 Not reproduced here.
2 Only extracts are reproduced here.
The telegram was received too late for publication in the last issue. That is the handicap of having different places of printing and editing.

When the Temple-Entry Proclamation was issued, I had misgivings which I could not and would not suppress. Was it a political document with loopholes and reservations? What would be its effect on the caste Hindus, if it was a superimposed thing? What would be its effect on Harijans? Would it not leave them cold?

Friends took me to task for not sharing their enthusiasm. I could not help it.¹ Not that I had any doubt about the genuine desire of H.H. the Maharani, or the Maharaja, or the Diwan Sir C.P. Ramaswamy Ayyar. Indeed I had the privilege of meeting the Maharani and her young hope, the present Maharaja, when I was in Travancore years ago. The Maharani had even then professed her belief in the reform. I had even jokingly asked the boy, as the Maharaja then was, whether he would remove untouchability and throw open temples when he mounted the gadi of Travancore. He had enthusiastically said ‘of course’. Have I not known Sir C.P. Ramaswamy Ayyar since 1915 or 1916 as a reformer? My misgivings had a deeper meaning which I had tried to express. It may be that it was my want of faith in the people. There certainly was in the adequacy of the effort and purity of reformers working under the aegis of the Harijan Sevak Sangh.

But the latest happening described in the foregoing telegram with such wealth of detail has dispelled all doubt. The rules² reproduced last week have lost their formidableness. The actuality has surpassed all expectations. The enthusiasm of the Harijans, the absence of all opposition to their entrance to the farthest limit permissible to the highest caste, and the willing, nay, the hearty, cooperation of the officiating priests, show the utter genuineness of the great and sweeping reform. What seemed impossible for man has been made possible by God. Royal proclamations cannot convert tens of thousands of people. Here, therefore, is an instance of mass conversion of caste Hindus. It is real because it is spontaneous.

Only a few years ago in Vaikom the caste Hindus had threatened violence if Harijans crossed even certain roads leading to the Vaikom temple. Now that very temple has been opened to Harijans on absolutely the same terms as to any caste Hindu. And all this without the slightest pressure from anybody. What was quoted to me as the Sankara Smriti has given place to the Maharaja Smriti whose validity is proved by the unequivocal response of the caste Hindus as a whole and the equally unequivocal response in another sense by the Harijans. Truly, God is great, if we would but open the eyes of our understanding. My congratulations to the Maharaja and his good mother and his great Diwan, as also the Hindus of Travancore. Let us hope that all caste distinctions, in so far as they connote high and low grades, are things of the past in Travancore. If we garner the enthusiasm of Travancore, it cannot be long before the whole of India catches the Travancore spirit.

¹ Vide “Letter to G.D. Birla”, 28-11-1936
² Vide Appendix.

Harijan, 12-12-1936

189. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

SEGON, WARDHA,

December 12, 1936

MY DEAR ANAND,

I am sorry for Vijay’s death and yet not quite so. He came to punish man and discharge his debt. His task having been finished the poor infant has gone. Let us shed a tear. My blessing was not available for the act. It was and is ever available for you and Vidya. And if it means anything let it be a shield against repetition of the blunder. Your case has turned me upside down. Both of you have led me to bank so much upon you. I do not yet despair.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Hope Vidya is free from fever.

From a microfilm: Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

1 Vide “Letter to Anand T. Hingorani”, 26-11-1936

166 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
190. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

December 12, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I am returning your letter. There is no doubt that you are mad. And you are as suspicious as you are mad. How you have completely misread my meaning in the letter. I wrote to you about Kanti and you vexed yourself. It becomes difficult even to help you. Neither Hindus nor Mussalmans despise you. Both like you. Your brothers love you. Then consider Thakkar Bapa, Malkani, Narandas, Prabhavati, Ba, Mira, Mahadev and the rest. To Kanti you are a mother. There was a time when Kanti could not live without you. Now he has got over that infatuation but he still worships you. Is there anything which Dr. Ansari has not done for you? Khan Saheb is always thinking about you. He even hoped that you would spend Ramzan with him. Your sister-in-law worships you. Your brothers love you. What more do you expect? There are very few as fortunate as you. A person like Khurshedbehn fawns upon you and Madam Wadia is eager to help you. If you wake up and look you will realize that you are mad and therefore unhappy. I will leave on the 19th. If you wish you can come and see me before that. But how will the meeting help you? If you want to get treated here, I can definitely make the arrangement. In that case you can’t keep running from place to place and will have to live as I say, eat what I prescribe and do what I ask you to do.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 367

191. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

December 12, 1936

CHI. NARANDAS,

Now that I have something like leisure I am writing to you.

You have raised the question as to who can stay in the weavers’ quarters in the Harijan Ashram. I like your suggestion. Discuss the matter with Narahari. If you have any difference of opinion, let me know. This will save my time.
Vajubhai went as he came. He could not satisfy me and I could not satisfy him. I told him that you did everything after consulting me and with my consent and that therefore if he had any differences of opinion with you he should discuss them with me. After this there was nothing for him but to argue with me. Then I learnt that there was a great gulf between his views and mine. Ultimately he left. I gave him the return fare. He had said that in order to get justice he might resort to satyagraha, that is, undertake a fast. Of course I explained to him the impropriety and the immorality of such a step. Let me know if he does anything or says anything. I am hoping that he will be quiet now and find some other work.

I understand about Keshu. I have always held your opinion in high esteem and therefore I will have to consider the whole episode again. I went through the letters of Lakshmidas, but I was not impressed by them as you were. The reason may be that I was not able to read them carefully. Now I will do so. Write to me if you can throw more light on the subject.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
It seems that Kumi and Bali are having a tough time. Look after them.

192. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK
December 12, 1936

CHI. PREMA,

I have managed to snatch a little time to write this. You must not leave Saswad even if you have to live under a tree. But give them no cause even in your thoughts. If you nurse anger even in your heart, you will lose the merit or reward of living under a tree.

We may have such decoration at the Congress as we can plan in keeping with the rural environment. Understand “as we can plan” in both the senses—that there should be art in decoration and that it should not cost a single pie.

1 Vajubhai Shukla
2 In Saswad the addressee had to give up the house which she had been able to secure for her ashram because of manoeuvring by the Mamlatdar.
I shall be going there on the 20th. How many we shall be will depend on the reply that we get from there.

You seem to be entertaining Vinoba very well.

See that you do not fall ill again. If one works within one’s limits, one can do more work and the work shines out.

Lilavati’s brother is seriously ill and so she has gone to Vile Parle.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10387. Also C.W. 6826. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

---

193. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

_December 12, 1936_

CHI. AMBUJAM,

I am very happy that Tulsidas’s _Ramayana_ is being translated into Tamil by you. Your noble effort will enable the Tamil knowing people to have the benefit of the unrivalled _prasadi_ of Tulsidas.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Hindi original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

194. NEED FOR CLEANSING OF HEART

One of the two Harijan workers about whose downfall I have been writin is Shri Ramnarayan Pathak, who was the soul of the Porbundar Chhaya Harijan Ashram. I had some talk and some correspondence with him. He has now written me the following letter:¹

The letter of December 3 is really long. I have not summarized it. It is not easy to do so. Even if I published the whole letter it could possibly serve no useful purpose. I believe it is harmful to satisfy a morbid curiosity which seeks pleasure in finding faults with others. I do not therefore wish to put unnecessary details before the readers. Some persons calling themselves friends and well-wishers of Shri ¹ Not translated here. The correspondent, anxious to atone for his misdemeanour, had requested Gandhiji to prepare a confession on his behalf and if he so chose to publish it in Harijanbandhu.

Ramnarayan have gently chided me. This was out of place as I had not given the name or address. What I had written was not written without thought or cause. However, what Shri Ramnarayan, unable to bear the burden of his guilt, has confessed is far more serious than I had realized.

I do not repent the habit I have formed since many years of not hiding my own faults or of those dear to me. This has only been to the good of the persons concerned and others. I have not concealed the failings of my late father, nor those of my wife, nor those of my sons. My own failings every reader knows by heart. Lest I forget, people, some in good faith, some others to condemn me, keep on reminding me of them. By making my failings public I have learnt to avoid them. However hard anyone may try secretly to be pure, he will never succeed. Why should God’s creation not see the faults which God sees? Anyone who is really ashamed of his failings will be safe only by making them public and having his own co-workers to protect him. This is what is meant by depending on God. I must confess that many a time if I have saved myself from a heinous deed it was because of my friends and children. If I gave in to weakness what would happen to them? If they came to know of it in the case of a man to whom they looked for support, the support would collapse. This reflection saved me. This is what is called God’s protection. This is what is meant by Rama being the strength of the weak. We can escape from the net spread by the senses only if we admit our failings. It is for this very reason that making public our faults is the first step towards purification.

Bhai Ramnarayan was already well established in the field of social service when I came to know him. Even at that first meeting, I did not see frankness or innocence in his eyes or on his face. But Thakkar Bapa had recommended him so strongly that disregarding the impression he had made on me I gave him my blessings. After that, however, I too like Thakkar Bapa became an admirer of Shri Ramnarayan. When I wanted to give an instance of an ideal Harijan worker I often cited the name of Shri Ramnarayan. Just as I regard many young men and women as my sons and daughters, even so did I regard Shri Ramnarayan as my son. As for Narmada, she may be said to have come to me while still an infant. I became her father and also her mother, as she needed a mother’s affection as well.

So the readers can well imagine the blow which I suffered. They will also understand the purpose of this article. The hopes which I had entertained about Narmada have now been blown away within a fraction of a second like a particle of dust in the wind.

When the first complaint against Ramnarayan reached me, my heart would not let me to believe it. I smelt Kathiawari rivalry in these.
I, therefore, sent those letters for verification. I was showered with evidence. Much of the twofold sin which Shri Ramnarayan had been concealing for a long time came to light and he left Chhaya, along with Narmada.

Narmada is still a child. I still consider her to be innocent. She has a kind of courage, but lacks determination. I do not think she is one who would deliberately commit a sin. That girl became the victim of Shri Ramnarayan’s lust. Although she strove with him she fell.
Now both of them have married. Another girl who was also involved with him at the same time is left in the lurch.

In giving this account my aim is not to dwell on Shri Ramnarayan’s failings. I believe that he has done all this because he was blinded by lust. It could not possibly have happened without the practice of falsehood, and so the thing continued undetected. But seldom can one hide one’s guilt till the very end. Those whose failings come to light, should be regarded as blessed. This is precisely what has happened in the case of Shri Ramnarayan.

He is right in saying that he will be unable to purify himself even by the most candid confession. He has fallen so deep into the pit of lust that he has become almost incapable of coming out of it.
Marriage gives a kind of outward peace. Indulgence assumes a new and fuller form. I know that those who hold modern views regarding the relationship between man and woman will not like this language.
However, nothing is written in this journal with a view to pleasing anyone. I on my part do not have this aim in writing. I would be happy if I could please everyone while keeping Satyanarayana\textsuperscript{1} with me. However, even if I cannot do so, I would not write anything which Satyanarayan would not tolerate. I do know what Bhai Ramnarayan’s views are at the moment. According to his letter of December 3, Shri Ramnarayan does not regard his marriage with Narmada as something improper. However, his letter which I have published suggests that he is restless in his mind, he cannot see his way clearly.

\textsuperscript{1} “Truth as God”
I believe that his mental agitation is sincere. Narmada is not his sahadharmini. Where there is no dharma, how can there be anyone to share it? She is truly a helpless woman. It is only by guiding her and by making her dreams of service come true that he can serve her and atone for the wrongs done to her. Shri Ramnarayan can also fulfil his dharma of doing justice to the other girl by shedding impurity from his heart. And what about the debt to the harijans? My heart fills with pain when I think of this. What a wide gap between Ramnarayan, the mature servant of Harijans and Ramnarayan the slave to sexual desire!

However, many slaves of this kind have attained liberation through sustained effort. Many have extricated themselves from the pit of sins. What alligator had caught the king of elephants? The latter was not a four-footed elephant with a trunk. He was a human being with two feet, like any one of us. The elephant was getting more and more entangled because of his own strength. But when his strength failed him, God came to his rescue and liberated him. The Gajendramoksha is not merely a poem. For those like us it is a consolation, it is a protecting hedge.

Those readers who, on reading this article, condemn Ramnarayan will not gain anything. All readers should pray for his purity, but even more important than this is that keeping this incident in mind, they should ever remain vigilant, should never conceal a weakness, should never entertain pride and think that if ever they should be in a similar predicament they would not get caught in the net. Pride has never helped anyone. He alone is triumphant whose heart is in the right place till the very end.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 13-12-1936

195. LETTER TO SARASWATI

December 8/13, 1936

CHI. SARASWATI,

I don’t mind your failure at all. It is a stepping-stone to success . . . .

being thorough in the subjects you have failed in. There is no

1 Wife; literally, ‘partner in dharma’
2 The PPS. was added on December 13.
3 This is in Devnagari.
4 The source is damaged here.
harm in your not being considered clever or brilliant. But there is much harm in not being and in not being considered good. Do write regularly . . . .

BAPU

[PS.]

Poor Minakhshi. Do send her my condolences. What was the matter with her father and what was his age?

BAPU

[PPS.]

In order to write more this was delayed up to today.

From a photostat: G.N. 6157. Also C.W. 3430. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

196. LETTER TO N.R. MALKANI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 13, 1936

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I have your letter. Yes, I do study your figures. I write nothing, as I have nothing to complain about.

I did remark about Tyagiji and asked V. Hari to speak to you about him. His goodness is undoubted. But he is lazy and lives in dreamland. Why does he need Rs. 15 when he gets food and lodging? He used to ask for nothing at the Ashram. He has no needs. His son is working. Rajkishori is well able to support herself. I do not want you to get rid of him but he must not get more than his needs and even then not more than his market price. I fear he is getting more. If you like I shall write to him. I did write to him about his work.

As for yourself, I see nothing wrong in your getting something from Hindustan Times.

I agree with you about manufacturing our own mistris\(^1\). The sooner you do so the better. It is a tragedy that Tyagi won’t be one. I note you are coming to the Congress.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 925

\(^1\) The source is damaged here.

\(^2\) Masons or carpenters
197. LETTER TO MIRZA ISMAIL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 13, 1936

DEAR FRIEND,

The Ahmedabad labour dispute has [been] absorbing me to the exclusion of most important correspondence.

I am pondering over your suggestion. I have no hesitation about seeking an interview. But I ask myself: What shall I talk? What will he talk? I shall write what I have decided.

Thank you very much for Navin Chandra. If he equips himself for service and earns his scholarship whilst there I shall be satisfied. Thank you also for giving the necessary instruction to Frydman.

My love to the whole family.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G. N. 11516

198. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

December 13, 1936

CHI. KANTI,

It was good I got your letter. I had a talk with Manu immediately. Now I will ascertain Surendra’s wishes and make arrangements accordingly. I have already written about milk.

I do get news about your health from time to time. I do not write to you because I do not get the time. I will not have you get old so soon. You cannot neglect your health. You must order your diet scientifically. Why worry about studies? Do as much as you can and

1 Sir Mirza Ismail, Dewan of Mysore
2 Between the Ahmedabad Mill-owners’ Association and the Labour Union on which Gandhiji gave his Award on December 26, 1936; vide “Award in Labour Dispute”, 26-12-1936
3 Maurice Frydman, a Polish Engineer who was interested in village reconstruction movement and whom Gandhiji used to address as “Bharatanand”. In his earlier letter of November 27, 1936 Gandhiji had asked the addressee to instruct Frydman to render assistance to him or the Village Industries Association, ibid.,
4 Vide the following item.
be satisfied with it. Why should you be in a hurry? Do you want to gain true knowledge or show off? Whatever it may be, do not have the desire to get a “double first” at the cost of your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7310. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

199. LETTER TO SURENDR A B. MASHRUWALA

December 13, 1936

CHI. SURENDR A,²

Manu writes to you regularly, so I do not write. I write today because of two things Kanti has mentioned in his letter. You do not take milk and you have become somewhat impatient to get married. I do not say that the two things are related. You should never give up milk. The reason given by Kisorelal is also not correct. For one who is having discharges the thing required is purity of mind and, as external remedy, the hip-bath. When do you wish to get married? As Kanti understands it, you think the sooner it is the better. Let me know your wishes frankly. I can then consult the other elders and do what is proper. Where would you prefer to have the wedding solemnized, at Wardha only or would Segaon also do? Write to me without hesitation.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 1562. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

200. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

December 14, 1936

DEAR KU,

Have not seen the Home Member’s statement². Unlucky Guntur! Yes, have the meeting on the dates mentioned. I was told the opening was on 23rd. But don’t know.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10112

¹ Kishorelal Mashruwala’s nephew and Balubhai Mashruwala’s son
² Regarding cyclone damage. According to the Home Member the houses were rebuilt and the relief organizations were doing good work.
201. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAI0N,
December 14, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

We failed to receive the butter once again. Please ask them to send two days’ supply with Ganapat.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I am sending a letter also.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11508

202. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

SEGAI0N, WARDHA,
December 14, 1936

CHI. PRABHUPAS,

I do hear about you but it is good that you yourself wrote. It is indeed welcome news to me that you are getting steadier in mind and that all three of you keep quite well. May all your noble aspirations be fulfilled. Those who have grown up in the Ashram or have been supported by it are for the present at any rate abandoning the Ashram ideals. I feel very good when at such a time I find anyone clinging to those ideals. You seem to have greatly improved your handwriting. Why doesn’t Amba write?

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI PRABHUDAS GANDHI
GANDHI SEVA SADAN
ASAFPUR
E.I. RLY.
BADAUN

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 33035
203. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

December 14, 1936

BHAI KASTURBHAI,

I have prepared a reply to your telegram. It will be despatched tomorrow. It is now 8.30 p.m. If after reading what you have to say I feel so inclined, I will certainly revise my views. If I find the need of discussion, I will give you trouble.

I on my part have not showed my draft to anyone connected with the Labour Association. I thought I might acquaint Shankerlal with it after we had given our Awards. Whether that happens or not, I quite agree with you that if we have to go to the Umpire neither of the parties should divulge anything about our decision till the Award is made public. Please write and inform the parties concerned on behalf of both of us from there.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

[PS.] I will reach Faizpur on the 20th. My stay there will last at least for nine days. However, if you find it necessary you can meet me there. On my part I do hope that by that time we shall be free of the work.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4197

204. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 15, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

How idiotic of you to disappoint me at the last moment. But it is good. Duty before everything else. To pass through Wardha was no part of duty. It was pleasure to be derived in the course of duty.

From what you say it seems that the two cotton quilts are also for me, not for the Exhibition. When J. comes he shall have the fulkaris.
Yes, I know Natesan very well. I can certainly write to him. But I would like you to tackle him once more. Let me know the result. I shall try if you fail.

Your account of the Manga[n]wal visit with Agatha is interesting. But you must not get tired. Why strain yourself? You won’t acquire merit by overstraining or even straining yourself. Why not be satisfied with the use of energy God has given? Overuse is as much abuse as wrong use or underuse. Does this penetrate your idiotic brain? If it does, why not act accordingly?

I leave here on 19th for Faizpur. They are pressing me to go to Travancore to follow up the temple-entry.

Love.

ROBBIE

[PS.]

It seems now certain that I must go to Travancore during first week of January. Of this we must talk when we meet.

From the original: C.W. 3760. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6916

205. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

December 15, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending herewith quite a big lot—Gujarati articles, one article about Govind’s letter, another about Mysore, a telegram for Kasturbhai and the mail.

I understand about butter. If Dharmadhikari is there he should come and see me, otherwise anyone who is there.

You may send with the bearer whatever little you wish to. Ganapat will of course come at noon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11509

1 Vide “A Painful Duty”, 19-12-1936.
206. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

December 15, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV,

Ramachandran has become impatient. It is necessary to consult you before sending him a wire. I am in need of an annual diary for noting down appointments. Haven’t you received any? I also want a wall calendar. This was a digression. I would certainly like to solve the Trivandrum problem quickly if no date has been given to anyone. Guide me. We shall reply tomorrow.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11513

207. FRAGMENT OF A LETTER

December 15, 1936

When our speech and actions strive faithfully to follow our thoughts, our speech cannot fully describe those thoughts nor is the meaning of our actions fully conveyed by our words. When I describe in words a table of my conception the description falls short of the conception and, when it is made, the product falls short of the description. Euclid’s straight line exists only in conception. Its definition is only a part of the conception and its figure again a part of the definition. If this cannot explain what I want to say, you can delete the bracketed portion without fear of break in the continuity of thought.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11559

208. TELEGRAM TO AMTUSSALAAM

WARDHAGANI,
December 16, 1936

AMTUL SALAAM
EASTER VILLA, SANTA CRUZ

UNDESIRABLE COME FAIZPUR. NEVERTHELESS DECIDE FOR YOURSELF.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 365

1 The addressee is not identified in the source.
209. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

December 16, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

I have gone through your preface. It is no doubt good. No changes are called for. I have therefore made very few. Whether the reader will be able to digest it is a question. Let us however leave it at that.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I have sent three articles, not including one' by Andrews. I sit down now to write the Gujarati.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11510

210. LETTER TO MOOLCHAND AGRAWAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 16, 1936

BHAi MOOLCHAND.

I am replying to your letter after a long time. I am enquiring into the matter instead of writing about it in Harijan. Please let me have the names and addresses of the prominent workers of the Arya Samaj in Ajmer.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 759

1 “A Message of Peace”, published in Harijan, 26-12-1936
211. INTERVIEW TO MISS FITCH

[December 16, 1936]

The chief value of Hinduism lies in holding the actual belief that all life (not only human beings, but all sentient beings) is one, i.e., all life coming from the One universal source, call it Allah, God or Parameshwara. There is in Hinduism a scripture called Vishnusahasranama which simply means ‘one thousand names of God’. These one thousand names do not mean that God is limited to those names, but that He has as many names as you can possibly give Him. You may give Him as many names as you like provided it is one God without a second, whose name you are invoking. That also means that He is nameless too.

This unity of all life is a peculiarity of Hinduism which confines salvation not to human beings alone but says that it is possible for all God’s creatures. It may be that it is not possible, save through the human form, but that does not make man the Lord of creation. It makes him the servant of God’s creation. Now when we talk of brotherhood of man, we stop there, and feel that all other life is there for man to exploit for his own purposes. But Hinduism excludes all exploitation. There is no limit whatsoever to the measure of sacrifice that one may make in order to realize this oneness with all life, but certainly the immensity of the ideal sets a limit to your wants. That, you will see, is the antithesis of the position of the modern civilization which says: ‘Increase your wants’. Those who hold that belief think that increase of wants means an increase of knowledge whereby you understand the Infinite better. On the contrary Hinduism rules out indulgence and multiplication of wants as these hamper one’s growth to the ultimate identity with the Universal Self.

_Harijan, 26-12-1936_

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The interviewer had asked Gandhiji to tell her the chief values of Hinduism as she had been told that he was the life and soul of Hinduism.

2 The name and the date are supplied from the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary.
212. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
December 18, 1936

MY DEAR IDIOT,

So you will receive this in Ahmedabad. You will go to the Harijan Ashram and speak to the girls, the cattle and the trees of which there was not a trace when I took the land. There was a solitary neem tree, I think. You will see old Ramji, the Harijan, and his tall wife. And you will see also some familiar faces. Anandi, I think you know. And you must see the Vidyapith and the labour work of Anasuyabai. You should see her indigenous kindergarten for the Harijan brats. Of course you will see Mridula’s Jyoti Sangh. The other things will be shown to you in the usual manner.

Don’t bury yourself in the routine work, though that can’t be neglected, I know. But you must learn the art of doing things without fretting and feeling the strain.

What a long-drawn-out sermon this letter has become? You will be quite comfortable with me in Faizpur. Only don’t come there in a dilapidated condition.

You have all the love you may be in need of there from

TYRANT

[PS.]

I reach Faizpur on 20th.

From the original: C.W. 3761. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6917

213. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

December 18, 1936

I have received your telegram. Why do you insist on coming to Faizpur? Come to see me at Segaon and talk to me there. You may stay on if you like the place. Why do you have misgivings when I have already told you that I shall keep you in Segaon? In spite of all this if you want to come to Faizpur do come. I expect to be back in Segaon on the 29th.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 366
214. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

December 18, 1936

CHI. LILA.

I have your letter. Why do you worry? Worrying will not help you to lessen your brother’s suffering. Why should you worry? Death, life and recovery from illness depend on God alone. It is our dharma to live, to get well or to make an effort in that direction, and we have to discharge it. Why should you worry while discharging your dharma? Know for certain that worry is an obstacle in the path of dharma. Take it that prayers, bhajans, and so on are useless if they do not teach us to remain unperturbed under all circumstances.

Why can’t you call Dinshaw to the hospital? Seek the doctor’s permission. He will give it. Take his permission for the treatment also. At least meet Dinshaw. Talk to him, get the necessary information, find out his visiting days. We should build the dam before the floods. We should not start digging a well when the house catches fire; we should have one ready beforehand.

Do not create unnecessary trouble. Do not talk loudly. Give thought to whatever you do. Do not blurt out whatever comes to your mind. Put up with what you cannot help.

I hope that Damayanti has patience and courage.

You have not given the name of the hospital.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9352. Also C.W. 6627. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

215. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

December 18, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

Babla’s handwriting, one can say, has improved. But he has forgotten quite a lot of what he had learnt. I hope you have received and despatched the telegram to Kasturbhai. I have received a fair number of copies of Ishopanishad.
I expect to reach there at about 7.30 tomorrow. Navin will come with Ba. So for the present three of us and Mehrtaj will go. Bablo will join us on the 23rd.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11511

216. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

December 18, 1936

BHAI NANABHAI, 1

I am glad you wrote me the two letters. You should not have any hesitation in writing to me.

About the first letter, Kishorelal has taken the responsibility.

Now about the second letter. I feel that it is right that we should know even our seniors as they are. It has been my experience that since we do not know many of them, we form an exaggerated opinion of them, and as a result the significance of brahmacharya is undermined. The idea of brahmacharya will lose its lustre if people consider me a brahmachari since childhood. A man who is pure of mind, speech, body and temper has a lustre all his own. Where can we find such brahmacharis these days? The influence of our seniors does not suffer if we know them as they are, but if they conceal their shortcomings the impression they make on us will only be superficial.

The question of self-control does not arise as I am against artificial means of birth-control. However, I quite agree with your view that even if that knowledge is worth acquiring it should be disseminated in a restrained manner.

There is no doubt whatsoever that the friendship between men and women should not exceed a limit. Of course it is difficult to draw a line. Moreover, such a limit cannot be universal and absolute. I hope you are keeping well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7529. Also C.W. 5005. Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala

1 Kishorelal Mashruwala’s brother

184 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
217. LETTER TO TARABEHN N. MASHRUWALA

December 18, 1936

Chi. Tari,

I feel like writing: ‘How shall I make you understand?’ Will you wake up only when your condition becomes utterly hopeless? To improve your health you should make up your mind to get well at least to the extent of two annas in a rupee. Why do you lose hope? If you are giving much help there, then do stay on. I will not say anything.

Tell Nanabhai that Kishorelal has taken the responsibility of dealing with his long letter, so I have not written anything to him.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI TARABEHN MASHRUWALA
AKOLA
BERAR

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6699

218. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

December 18, 1936

Bhai Ghanshyamdas,

I am glad that you liked my article this time. But the fact is that I can write only what I feel and that is as it should be.

As soon as I received Ramachandran’s telegram from Travancore I felt it was my duty to go. Why not see Sir Akbar, too, as you saw the Travancore authorities? Why should we not discuss with the Viceroy and other officials the need for a law? Maybe a law is necessary to open the Guruvayur temple. What is needed is for someone to offer the advice. Will not Malaviyaji agree even now?

I completely forgot about Parnerkar. I shall try to send him. I leave tomorrow for Faizpur. Parnerkar is there. I shall write to you further after seeing him.

I have accepted your opinion regarding Parameshwari for I have nothing definite to suggest. I do have a feeling, though, that Parameshwari might be allowed to conduct his experiment by turning the present company into a public association. I think his idea of improving the breed is not ill-founded and he is interested in the work. He has also obtained favourable opinions of the other experts. My bias is certainly in his favour but how can I be certain? I know him only through you people. I do not therefore wish to do anything independently.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8027. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

219. A PAINFUL DUTY

I publish the following without any alteration:¹

An open letter to Mahatma Gandhi:

DEAR MAHATMAJI,

I was shocked to read your note² about myself in the Harijan of 21-11-1936 which contains untrue statements about me. I am not “carrying on Harijan work near Cuttack” nor did I “come down to Bombay to make the usual collections” nor “as a rule, I consult you before going out for collections”.

I make the following statements in repudiation and correction of your statement which appeared in Harijan of 21-11-1936. Though I was at one time at Sabarmati Ashram, never received any help from you nor any mandate to carry on Harijan work or any other work near Cuttack or anywhere else. I have not been carrying on Harijan work near Cuttack. I never consulted you before going out for collection for Sevashram started by me and named by me in your honour. It has no connection with or dependence on any Congress institution nor with you. On my return from Sabarmati in the year 1921, I had an idea of serving the country on the line which you were preaching. . . .

When some complaints reached you 18 months ago, you wrote to me and I gave you a suitable reply, solemnly negativing the allegations. There the duty which I owe to you has ended as far as I and my Ashram are concerned. You are free to make any investigation you like . . . .

I remain,

Dated Cuttack,
the 6th Dec. 1936

Yours truly,

GOVIND CHANDRA MISRA

I would have suppressed the letter if the author had not invited publicity. To publish it is a painful task, to comment on it a painful duty.

¹ Only extracts are reproduced here.
² Vide “Beware of Beggars”, 21-11-1936
Govind Babu first came to me sent by Deenabandhu Andrews when he was in the greatest need. He was not wanted in Orissa. My weakness for Orissa compelled me to keep him in Sabarmati. His incoherent conversation did not prepossess me in his favour. And but for his being from Orissa and his description of his sufferings I would not have harboured him in spite of Deenabandhu’s recommendation. Like everyone else he straight way became like my sons. Indeed his manners were so unattractive that the other inmates did not take to him kindly. So he was my extra care. He went to Orissa after consultation with me. He opened the Ashram in consultation with me. He used to send his reports regularly to me. He did do Harijan work and khadi work under my supervision. He collected monies in Bombay principally from those who know me and him as an inmate of Sabarmati. I went out of my way to visit his Ashram. On going there I was deeply pained to see the bungalow he had built there and publicly condemned it. He pleaded guilty. The only work worth naming that I saw being done was a well-stocked dispensary which was kept in a slovenly condition. I rebuked him severely for belying my hopes, for absence of proper accounts and any constructive work. The dispensary was certainly not a need. I told him it was the easiest thing for anybody to establish if he got some funds.

He had promised to mend but he did not. Then Baba Raghavdas was sent to inquire into the working and his report was adverse. Then came grave allegations about his morals. These are still under investigation. I knew nothing about his being a candidate for the Assembly. He never consulted me about it. He knew that I would disapprove of the step for him. It was only after the paragraph about him had appeared that he felt compelled to disclose the secret to me. His first letter was suppression of truth, the second an admission. After the paragraph was published he offered to come to Segaon to clear himself. I had a number of declarations from his erstwhile friends making most damaging statements. I therefore accepted his offer. But he backed out of it saying he no longer subscribed to my philosophy. In the light of this honest outline of my connection with Govind Babu, I can only say that his letter is a gross perversion of truth. It has been no pleasure to me to have to write a word against one in whose making I had a great deal to do and who was at one time ready to do as I would like him to.

The only relieving feature in this episode is that Govind Babu is so hysterical that he often does not know what he is speaking or that he is speaking an untruth. May he detect in this writing the anguish of a parent who has suddenly lost an obedient son and repent of the wound he has inflicted on me. In spite of all his limitations I had never doubted his loyalty and readiness to carry out my wishes in the interest of the cause which bound him to me. His two recent letters and this last have come upon me as a thunderbolt.

_Harijan, 19-12-1936_

220. A CONTRAST

Thakkar Bapa sends me the following four cases from Gwalior:

(1) In the diary for October last, Sjt. K. V. Datey, the chief Harijan worker of Gwalior State, reports that there was a great commotion amongst the audience in a public meeting held in the Town-Hall at Ujjain where Jain Guru Anantsagar was speaking to an audience of about five to six hundred people, because some Harijans entered the hall to hear the religious sermon. The orthodox section amongst the audience wanted the Harijans to go out, but the speaker and the reformists were firm, with the result that the orthodox section went away displeased.

(2) At the end of October the Suba or the Collector of Ujjain issued an order that Harijan sevaks, even of 'high caste', were thereafter prohibited from worshipping in the chief temple of Ujjain, because of their close contact with Harijans. Necessary representation has been made to the State in connection with this order.

(3) A Chamar girl in a village named Mahudia had the audacity to put a golden ring on one of her ears. This was resented by some orthodox people who had it removed. This came to the notice of one of the workers who went to the village and had them reconciled and the girl was allowed to put the ring on her ear.

(4) The mother of Shri Moolchand Agrawal, a khadi worker, died on 27th October at Neemuch. Sjt. Dhaniram Sagar, a Harijan and a worker, joined the funeral procession and carried the bier for a short distance out of respect for the deceased. The orthodox amongst the funeral party resented this very much, but Sjt. Moolchand remained firm and so the matter did not go further.

What a contrast with what is going on in Travancore! The present Maharaja of Gwalior has only just mounted the gadi. He made a generous statement about the Harijans. If he follows it up by action such as Travancore’s, his Subas won’t issue the ridiculous orders such as the Suba of Ujjain is reported to have done, nor will caste Hindus molest Harijans as they have done according to Thakkar Bapa’s report. The bulk of the caste Hindus are torn between two conflicting opinions.

In the Indian States, the thing appears to be simple. If the other Hindu princes like Travancore will issue authoritative proclamations, they will have the validity of Smritis and all opposition will be silenced.

_Harijan_, 19-12-1936

221. WHAT IS A MIRACLE?

About the 9th of October last there was a meeting of Christian denominations in London. His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury presided. The following occurs in the report of the meeting published in the _Church Times_ of 16th October:

The next speaker was dressed as a layman, without even the smallest discernible purple patch to indicate that he was Dr. J. W. Pickett, a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, U.S.A. For some years past, Dr. Pickett has been studying the mass movements on the spot in India, and has published the results of his observations in _Christian Mass Movements in India_, described by the Archbishop of Canterbury as a remarkable and valuable book. Dr. Pickett is profoundly impressed with the spiritual significance of the movement. He said that four and a half millions of the depressed classes in India have become the disciples of our Lord, and the witness they bear to Him in their lives is making the multitudes in India marvel. Even Brahmins have testified—albeit reluctantly—to the power of Christianity to transform the characters and lives of people whom they once thought incapable of religious feelings, and to whom they denied the right of entrance to the temples of Hinduism. It is people of this kind, said Dr. Pickett, who have now standards of church attendance and worship difficult to equal in Western Christendom. He quoted an example in the Telugu area, where 900,000 people now profess the Christian faith. Out of 1,026 villages, 1,002 hold a service for the worship of God every evening of the year, and more than two hundred also a daily morning service. It appeared to satisfy Dr. Pickett entirely as a test of the reality of the faith of the converts to hear a surprisingly high proportion of them speak of a sense of mystical union with God and their belief that God had come into their lives. Even their Hindu neighbours admitted that the religion of Jesus Christ had lifted them to a new standard of cleanliness of person and home, and made them a trustworthy people. More impressive still is the fact that high-cast people are now coming into the church, literally by dozens and hundreds, in areas where this transformation of life has occurred among the untouchables. “It is a miracle,” he declared, “one of the great miracles of Christian history.”

I have rarely seen so much exaggeration in so little space. A reader ignorant of conditions in India would conclude that the figures relate to the conversions due to the movement led by Dr. Ambedkar. I am sure Dr. Pickett could not have made any such claim. He has in mind the figures to date commencing from the establishment of the first church in India hundreds of years ago. But the figures are irrelevant to the general claim said to have been advanced by the Bishop. Where are “the multitudes in India who marvel” at the transformation in the lives of “four and a half millions of the depressed classes”? I am one of the multitudes having practically travelled more than half a dozen times all over India, and have not seen any transformation on the scale described by Dr. Pickett, and certainly none of recent date. I have had the privilege of addressing meetings of Indian Christians who have appeared to me to be no better than their fellows. Indeed the taint of untouchability persists in spite of the nominal change of faith so far as the social status is concerned. Needless to say I am referring to the masses, not individuals. I should like to know the Brahmins “who have testified—albeit reluctantly—to the power of Christianity to transform the characters and lives of people whom they once thought incapable of religious feeling.” But if it is of any consequence, I can show many Brahmins who can testify to the power of the reform movement to make a radical change in the lives and outlook of Harijans who were neglected by caste Hindus. I must pass by the other unbelievable generalizations. But I should like to know the hundreds of high-caste Hindus who “are now coming into the church in areas where this transformation of life has occurred among the untouchables.” If all the astounding statements Dr. Pickett has propounded can be substantiated, truly it is “one of the great miracles of Christian history”, nay, of the history of man.

But do miracles need an oratorical demonstration? Should we in India miss such a grand miracle? Should we remain untouched by it? Miracles are their own demonstration. As witness the miracle in Travancore. Nobody believed a month ago that the more than 2,000 temples of Travancore could be opened to Harijans and that Harijans would enter them in their hundreds without let or hindrance from the most orthodox Hindus. Yet that event has happened in Travancore. which even he who runs may see. It is beside the point whether it can be called a miracle or not. I see in it the visible finger of the Invisible God.

I believe in the Bible as I believe in the Gita. I regard all the great faiths of the world as equally true with my own. It hurts me to see any one of them caricatured as they are today by their own followers and as has been done by the learned Bishop, assuming of course that the report reproduced above is substantially correct.

_Harijan_, 19-12-1936

222. WHAT IS NON-VIOLENCE?

A friend\(^1\) writes.

You enjoin on all your disciples to be non-violent not only in _acts_ but also in _words_ and _thoughts_. In the _Harijan_ of Nov. 26\(^2\), you are reported to have said to Mr. Andrews on his wanting to know from you your reaction to the present attitude of the missionaries, “Their behaviour has been as bad as that of the rest who are in the field to add to their numbers. What pains one is their frantic attempt to exploit the weakness of Harijans. If they said, ‘Hinduism is a diabolical religion and you come to us,’ I should understand. But they dangle earthly paradises in front of them and make promises to them which they can never keep.”\(^3\)

If you are reported correctly, I ask—is this not _violence in words_ against the missionaries as a class?

I have no disciples, being myself an aspirant after discipleship and in search of a guru. But that is irrelevant to the issue raised by my friend. To say or write a distasteful word is surely not violence, especially when the speaker or writer believes it to be true as I did when I spoke to Deenabandhu as reported in the quotation. But even if it were found that what I said was an exaggeration, or worse still, an untruth, it would not be violent in the sense used by my correspondent. The essence of violence is that there must be a violent intention behind a thought, word, or act, i.e., an intention to do harm to the opponent so called. Here there was and could be no such

---

\(^1\) A. S. Wadia; _vide_ “What Is Non-violence?”, 6-2-1937.

\(^2\) This should be 26.

\(^3\) _Vide_ “Discussion with C. F. Andrews”, 28-11-1936 intention. I was engaged in a friendly conversation with two good Christians, both missionaries in their own way.

I have used much stronger language about sanatanist behaviour towards Harijans and quite latterly about the acts of dear co-workers. But there has been no violent intention behind the use of my language. And generally I have been acquitted by my critics of any violent intention.

Indeed the acid test of non-violence is that one thinks, speaks and acts non-violently, even when there is the gravest provocation to be violent. There is no merit in being non-violent to the good and the gentle. Non-violence is the mightiest force in the world capable of resisting the greatest imaginable temptation. Jesus knew ‘the generation of vipers’, minced no words in describing them, but pleaded for mercy for them before the Judgment Throne, ‘for they knew not what they were doing.’

I gave the company chapter and verse in support of the statements I made. I regard myself as a friend of the missionaries. I enjoy happy relations with many of them. But my friendships have never been blind to the limitations of my friends or the systems or methods they have supported.

False notions of propriety or fear of wounding susceptibilities often deter people from saying what they mean and ultimately land them on the shores of hypocrisy. But if non-violence of thought is to be evolved in individuals or societies or nations, truth has to be told, however harsh or unpopular it may appear to be for the moment. And mere non-violent action without the thought behind it is of little value. It can never be infectious. It is almost like a whited sepulchre. Thought is the power and the life behind it. We hardly know that thought is infinitely greater than action or words. When there is correspondence between thought, word and deed, either is a limitation of the first. And the third is a limitation of the second. Needless to say that here I am referring to the living thought which awaits translation into speech and action. Thoughts without potency are airy nothings and end in smoke.

_Harijan_, 19-12-1936
223. HOW TO STOP OBSCENE ADVERTISEMENTS

A correspondent who saw my article on obscene advertisements writes:

You can do much in preventing obscene advertisements by exposing the names of the papers and magazines which advertise such shameless things as you have mentioned.

I can’t undertake the censorship my correspondent advises, but I can suggest a better way. If public conscience is alive, subscribers can write to their respective papers, if they contain objectionable advertisements, drawing their attention to them and stopping their subscriptions if the offence is not cured. The reader will be glad to know that the sister who complained to me about the obscene advertisement wrote also to the editor of the offending magazine who expressed his regret for the inadvertent admission of the obnoxious advertisement and promised to remove it forthwith.

I am glad also to be able to say that my caution has found support from some other papers. Thus the editor of Nispruha of Nagpur writes:

I have not only read with great care your article in the Harijan regarding obscene advertisements but have given a detailed translation of it in the Nispruha. I have also added a short editorial comment thereon.

I am enclosing a typical advertisement which though not obscene is yet immoral in a sense. The advertisement is obviously bogus and it is generally the villager who falls a prey to it. I have always refused such advertisements and I am also writing to this party similarly. If an editor must supervise the reading matter that he will allow, it is as much his duty to supervise the advertisements, and no editor can permit his paper to be used by people desirous of duping the simple villagers.

Harijan, 2-1-1937

1 The Hindi version of this was published in Harijan Sevak, 19-12-1936.
2 Vide “Obscene Advertisements”, 14-11-1936
224. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

December 19, 1936

DHI. MAHADEV,

As decided earlier, I am sending the letter herewith. The bearer’s name is Mahadev. Give him whatever he is able to carry. Lilavati is of course coming there in a cart.

I want six pomegranates and 12 bananas.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11512

225. LETTER TO KISHORELAL MASHRUWALA

WARDHA,

December 19, 1936

CHI. KISHORELAL,

As per the instructions I gave you yesterday:

(1) Send to Bhai Chhaganlal Joshi Rs. 1,000 received from Manilal Kothari for khadi work, to be used for the Harijan Sevak Sangh in Kathiawar.

(2) I have sanctioned a budget of nearly Rs. 19,000 for the Nalwadi tannery for the coming year. It is estimated that it will involve investment of nearly Rs. 9,000. Give that amount to Valunjkar as and when he needs it from the Gandhi account. From this amount, pay back Mahadev Desai Rs. 500 taken from him. Besides that, I have approved a 1,200-rupee plan for a building for a students’ hostel. And then we shall also need a store-room, etc., to keep the stocks of goods. We will need to spend the necessary amounts for these constructions. Discuss with Ramanlalji and decide from what source the amounts should be drawn. But in the mean time spend the money from the Gandhi account.

(3) Credit Rs. 1,264-4-3 to the account of Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati, from the amount of the Goseva Sangh. And Bhai Narahari has suggested that Rs. 500 (five hundred) should be sent to him. Do accordingly.

(4) Sanction the budget for Kager from that fund to the extent it may seem necessary to you. In this connection, have the difference between the Kamrej and Mangarol talukas clarified.
(5) Sanction a grant of up to Rs. 10 per month to Jyotiramji, if he has a good record of work.

(6) As for continuing the grant to Elwin\(^1\) (Gond Seva Mandal) you may do as Jamnalalji decides.

\[\text{Blessings from BAPU}\]

From the Gujarati original: Gandhi Nidhi File (August 1976). Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

226. WHAT SHOULD THOSE FAILING IN DUTY DO?

Some friends have posed the question arising out of the sad incident which I have had to relate: \(^2\) “You bring to light such cases, and suggest to the persons concerned to give up their posts. You have been unable to find fault with their work from the material point of view. You have even praised their work. Have they now lost their ability as well? Should the public be deprived of their services? Who is to fill the vacancies caused by their going?”

This question is worth considering. For myself I answered it years ago and on innumerable occasions I have acted accordingly. I have not used the adjective ‘innumerable’ thoughtlessly. I have acted on my belief so many times that I have lost count of them. I believe and I have repeatedly found in experience that however able a person may be, his secret immorality cannot but leave a stamp upon his work. This rule does have a limitation on its field of application, namely, that the type of work in question requires moral integrity. The work done by those who lack ability but are faultless in character, has shone out. There should be no need to give instances of this. Doing so is a delicate task. But if one looks at the activities which have been founded on morality, one cannot fail to be convinced by what I have said. There should be no hesitation in believing that the removal of untouchability is impossible with the help of men who lack character. How can even the best orator, well versed in the Shastras, change the beliefs of an orthodox sanatanist Hindu? Attacking the intellect is futile. The influence of such persons as Chaitanya, Ramakrishna, Rammohan Roy, Dayanand and others, still persists today. Is this through any force? We may perhaps come across numerous persons more intelligent than they. But they will not be able to convert people’s hearts. The history of the world is replete with such instances. Despite this, if we ask for proofs we will be justifying the saying that a bad dancer finds the courtyard uneven. However, it must be admitted that even a person of character must have industry, a keen desire for the necessary knowledge and discernment.

\(^1\) Verrier Elwin

\(^2\) Vide “Need for Cleansing of Heart”, 13-12-1936

However, the question asked by the correspondent still remains unanswered. Those who have left public institutions do not and cannot give up service even if they want to. No one can take a person away from his dharma. Dharma belongs to him who practises it. Dharma is for those who are engaged in the service of Harijans, in khadi work, in serving the villages. If those who had fallen, but have come out of their swoon, will render service wherever they happen to be, who can prevent them from living in a village? Who can prevent them from silently doing scavenging in villages while living in obscurity? What is there to prevent them from spinning and teaching others to spin or in serving Harijans? While doing all this, they would purify themselves to such an extent that they would not find it difficult to face society. Even if they lived unnoticed wherever they are, the aura which they would create would spread far and wide. I have never said or believed that there is no redemption from sin. Even the first among the fallen can become a saint. A historian has said this of Tulsidas. The Gita proclaims that even for the very sinful the path of devotion leads to liberation. It is for this reason that one of the names of God is Patitapavan.¹

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu, 20-12-1936_

227. THE IDEAL AND THE ACTUAL

A gentleman has written a long letter on reading my article² on the ideal Bhangi. The substance³ of it is as follows:

¹ Purifier of the fallen
² Vide “The Ideal Bhangi”, 28-11-1936
³ Not reproduced here. The correspondent had written to say that he disagreed with Gandhiji’s views on the ideal Bhangi. He felt that Gandhiji could not differentiate between the ideal and the actual and he would not be successful in turning anyone into an ideal Bhangi.
The correspondent has embellished his letter with many arguments. There is nothing new in them. The letter merely attempts to convince me. Hence I shall not involve the reader in these arguments. I intend to make some observations in reply in order to make my stand clearer. An ideal which cannot be put into practice at all is not worth the name. There will always be a gulf between the ideal and the actual. Man’s supreme effort should be directed towards bridging this gulf. Even today, we come across many Bhangis who are highly educated and who are carrying on their occupation and are striving to come up to my description of an ideal Bhangi. Their number is constantly increasing. If some of the carpenters remain carpenters all their lives, some of the farmers remain farmers, some stone-cutters and some barbers continue to follow their vocations, then why can’t some of the Bhangis remain Bhangis? Do not all these persons have a right to knowledge? Actually every doctor and every nurse is a Bhangi. He or she has to handle human excreta, smell, clean and analyse it. Will it be humiliating to them if we regard them as Bhangis? Why should that be so? What sin has the Bhangi committed that his occupation is regarded as the lowliest of all? This is not the case everywhere in the world. Even in England some persons have to sweep the streets and carry away garbage. That occupation is not regarded as demeaning by anyone there.

Any vocation scientifically pursued is as interesting as any scientific pursuit. It is in our country that society has not allowed the vocations to grow into sciences by looking down upon them. Hence, the carpenter does not compile technical documents on carpentry. We import these from the West. At present Dr. Fowler is doing the work of a Bhangi in Bangalore. He collects all the garbage in the hotel where he stays and is minutely studying how to convert it into manure in the simplest way.

In the West the disposal of the garbage in the big cities is demanding work. Those who do it and devise new methods for doing it are also Bhangis, aren’t they?

In Darjeeling and Simla, enormous sums are spent on the disposal of garbage. Is it not a matter of shame and sorrow that none among our Bhangi brothers have acquired any knowledge of this? This is a heinous sin on the part of those who are said to belong to the higher castes. Our looking down upon Bhangis, has made them the object of the disdain of the world. I have not the slightest doubt in my mind that there cannot be any happiness or independence, whether economic, social or political, in the country as long the Bhangis do not get the same respect as the Brahmins. What I have said here is not about ideals—but purely about what is practicable. I ask for respect for the Bhangi as he is today. When a Bhangi gains knowledge of the Brahman, we shall perforce worship him. But we shall become purified only when we recognize a Bhangi as our own brother even as he is.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 20-12-1936

228. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

December 20, 1936

CHI. A. SALAAM,

You have indeed started writing a good deal in Hindi. What is the use of sending a telegram to you? There is no limit to your foolishness. If you are not patient with the treatment, then please come to Segaon. I will give you the treatment I desire. I will reach Segaon on the 29th, or, at the latest, on the 31st.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 368

229. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

FAIZPUR,
December 20, 1936

BHAI KASTURBHAI,

As per our talk I have carefully examined the papers which are to be submitted to the Umpire. I have removed all the papers connected with the three issues. I am sending herewith the list of the papers which will have to be sent to the Umpire. I have also appended to Nos. 2, 7, 8, 9, 14, 15 and 16 the latest replies from the Mill-owners’ Association. The documents Nos. 10, 11 and 12 are independent notes submitted by the Labout Association. So far we have not received any reply from the Association. Those notes relate to the discussion held at Wardha. You will see that one of them is a corrigendum. As in the case of the other notes, the copy of this note has also been sent to the Association; so it has to be retained. However, I will not have any objection if you feel that all these three notes should be removed. As far as I am concerned, I have not gone into the merits and demerits of the case. So I do not require to note mistakes or the figures mentioned in the notes in order to arrive at a decision.

I have all the papers mentioned in the list ready in case we are fated to go to the Umpire. I have not made any notes, etc., on them, so that those can be sent to the Umpire. However, I do hope that you, independently or with the help of some lawyer friend, have been convinced of the three basic issues I have raised and will be taking effective steps in the direction we had thought of while arranging the papers. Naturally I had to read the papers again but I could do that only very casually. I feel that my decision is as clear as daylight. But that has no meaning. However, if, and only if, you reach the same conclusion, we can save ourselves from going to the Umpire.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 4198

230. LETTER TO SHRIMAN NARAYAN

December 20, 1936

CHI. SHRIMAN,

I have gone through your article. It cannot be published in Harijan, it is not worth publishing. Make your scheme public. Your resolution is acceptable to all but how are we to define ‘literacy’? The question is very controversial.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 299
231. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

December 21, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

We did not have the rain you had but we had full-strength gale and lightning. Here there has been nothing so far. They are working full speed but much remains to be done yet. Nature has been unkind. Her unkindness will be forgotten if she does not repeat it.

It will be a great thing if Prahlad’s boy pulls through. I am glad you will have half an hour with Balkoba every evening.

I have given strict instructions about fruit. I hope the two B.s\(^1\) are getting it without any hitch.

Do not overwork.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Tilak Nagar P. O. No further address required.

[PPS.]

Have talked to P. He will write.

From the original: C.W. 6368. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9834

232. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

TILAKNAGAR,

December 21, 1936

CHI. LILA,

How is it you have not received my letter? I was glad to learn that your brother is now recovering.

Tell Damayanti I had thought she was brave. A brave woman will not weep or be restless. Life and death are not in your hands, nor in the hands of anyone else. Why should one grieve then? We have done everything when we have served the sick.

Only Mahadev, Bablo, Pyarelal and Radhakishan are here with me. Of course Khan Saheb and Mehrtaj are here. They lodge separately. Mehr is with Prema.

\(^1\) Ba and Balkoba
Ba, Manu, Nimu’s Kano and Navin will arrive on the 24th.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]
This is enough for Mehr and Tara.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9353. Also C.W. 6628. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

233. _LETTER TO HARILAL GANDHI_
FAIZPUR CONGRESS,
_December 21, 1936_

CHI. HARILAL,
If you can give up drinking for eight months for my sake and for nine months for the sake of Vijayshankerji, then for how long will you do so for your own sake and for the sake of God?

_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]
From the Manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

234. _LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH_
_December 21, 1936_

CHI. MUNNALAL,
I hope your dairying and scavenging are going on well. Take a testimonial from Mirabehn. She knows this work well. Try to understand the dairy accounts in detail. The students will have come on Sunday.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8592. Also C.W. 7004. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah
235. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

TILAKNAGAR,

December 21, 1936

CHI. VIJAYA,

There is nothing particular to write to you. You write to me. Bring neatness into everything you do. Be exact in keeping accounts.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7062. Also C.W.4554. Courtesy: Vijaya M. Pancholi

236. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

December 21, 1936

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

I gave Ramdas your letter. He thought you might have come here since you had no work on hand. I told him about your having taken up service of the cow and he was silent. I hope you are keeping well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1888

237. ADDRESS TO CONGRESS VOLUNTEERS

December 21, 1936

Mahatma Gandhi broke his silence tonight with an exhortation to the Congress volunteers, particularly those in charge of conservancy. About 500 men and women listened to him in cloistral silence.

Speaking in quiet persuasive tones, Gandhiji dwelt at length on what he described as the science of Bhangis’ work. He started by pointing out that he had begun his work as a Bhangi long ago in South Africa. To be born as a ‘Bhangi’ was the result of great punya in previous birth. He did not know what qualifications determined the birth of one man as Bhangi and another as Brahmin, but from the point of view of benefit to society the one was no whit lower than the other. Those who considered Bhangis’ work as mean did so in their ignorance.

1 This was also reported by The Hindu, The Hindustan Times and The Hitavada.

Every mother acted as a Bhangi for her children; every doctor often acted as a Bhangi for his patients. But the doctors received fat fees, while the Bhangi who was equally working for the benefit of society got very little in comparison. Society regarded the work of Bhangis as demeaning, while the wholesome work done by the doctors was considered ennobling. One who could not and did not do the work of the Bhangi in the proper spirit and in a thorough fashion and with pride in it could never be expected to do any other item of national service to the country effectively. The Congress could go on with its deliberations and win success only if sanitary work was carried out properly. Congress deliberations might end in success, but no session of the Congress could be called a success if the sanitary work was not a success. One could go without food for two or three days and could do so without serious trouble but no one could do without the Bhangi’s services for that length of time or even less. The greatest cause of worry for those in charge of arrangements for Congress sessions was the anxiety to see that there was no complaint on the score of food and sanitary arrangements. Other things need not worry them so much.

Mahatma Gandhi proceeded to refer critically to the actual work he had seen some of the volunteers do. What struck him was that they were very slow. He did not blame them. It was not their fault. They were sincere, but there seemed to be none to attend to their training. With training he was confident that they would do splendidly. His conception of Ramrajya, which he said, was certain to come to India, was a dispensation under which there would be no distinction between a Brahmin and a Bhangi or even a Brahmin and a Maharaja. They would be treated from the point of view of the usefulness to society of their respective work. Re-emphasizing the importance of Bhangi in the scheme of things, Gandhiji declared that swaraj would come to India not through the Congress parliamentarians in the legislatures, but through efficient and conscientious discharge of their work by Bhangis and other workers without looking for reward or praise in municipal and public addresses. He exhorted the workers as well as the delegates and visitors to Faizpur to make it an ideal village.

Passing on to the number of volunteers placed at his disposal, Gandhiji said that fifteen volunteers who accompanied him during his walks seemed to be too many. He would be satisfied if one volunteer came with him just to show him the way. Faizpur was a village, not a big city and there was no fear of big crowds requiring the attention of a large posse of volunteers.

The Bombay Chronicle, 22-12-1936
238. TELEGRAM TO EZHAVA TEMPLE-ENTRY CELEBRATIONS COMMITTEE

[On or before December 22, 1936]

DO NOT BE IMPATIENT. IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO COME BEFORE JANUARY 6TH.
SEND ME A FIVE DAYS PROGRAMME AND MAKE ARRANGEMENTS.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 23-12-1936_

239. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

FAIZPUR,
December 22, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter.

Ba I expect on 24th. It is well I did not bring her with me. The fewer there are here to look after the better. If I could have, I [would] have prevented Ba from coming. But that was not possible.

I do not mind how much work you do so long as you do not strain yourself.

I hope Prahlad’s boy is on the mend and so also the new cow. It would be a pity to lose her.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6369 Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9835

240. SPEECH AT KIRODA

December 22, 1936

Gandhi said how happy he was to come to the village. He regarded it as a pilgrimage, remembering as he did the sacrifices and services of Dhanaji Nana Choudhary of the village who resigned a job in the Police department and took an important part in Congress work. He also recalled the work of 75 men and women who kept company with Mr. Choudhary in his achievements.

1 The report carrying the item bears the date December 22.
2 Gandhi was presented with a purse of Rs. 100 and an address in Marathi. Gandhi spoke in Hindi. Reports of the speech also appeared in _The Hindu_, _The Hindustan Times_ and _The Hitavada_.

204 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
He had come, said Gandhiji, to congratulate the village on that record of service and he was glad to see how clean the surroundings had been kept. If the Congress session had come nearer to them, the reason was perhaps their part in the struggle.

While I am glad to see the way in which you have kept your village clean, I am sorry to say that differentiation of man from man is bad. The other motto says real Hinduism does not recognize discrimination between Harijans and caste Hindus. But during my walk round the village and round the Harijan quarter I found they are differentiating between Harijans and caste Hindus. You are not treating Harijans in the same way as you declare in your motto. You do not allow them to have water from your wells and they are driven to have recourse to tank water which I understand is occasionally also drunk by cattle. This is bad.

Our country has been under foreign domination. We are not a free people. Though all of us agree that swaraj is our birthright, we have not been able to win it so far. Mere membership of Congress means nothing. How many members of Congress are there today in the country? At the most one crore. Then what about the rest of the 34 crores? I have left the Congress. I am not even a four-anna member of the Congress, as I have decided to educate the public—I remain in the 34 crores. For example, there are only 250 out of 2,500 residents of your village as Congress members. Nothing would be lost if you are all not members. Not that I do not want you to become Congress members, but I feel there is no use in your merely becoming Congress members. I am in favour of all of you becoming members of the Congress. I have no objection even if you want to enter legislatures but in your attempt to do so you need not create differences and quarrels amongst yourselves.

I leave the work in the legislatures to those who have the desire, resources and leisure for such work. I have said that nothing substantial could be achieved by entering the legislatures but if Congress decided to capture them and asked Congress members of the legislatures to carry the Congress flag even into the Council Chambers, it is because Congress wants to prevent undesirables capturing those seats and using them in a way detrimental to the national interests.

If real swaraj is to be achieved we must give up quarrelling amongst ourselves. There should be perfect equality and fraternity. All artificial differences between man and man, community and community, class and class should be immediately obliterated. After all we are all human beings, all children of the same God. The moment we realize this and translate this in our daily lives swaraj will be within our grasp.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 24-12-1936_

241. MESSAGE TO THE ALL-INDIA WOMEN’S CONFERENCE

[Before December 23, 1936]

I have grown old but will give a message still, if you need one from me. I can only say that until women establish their womanhood, the progress of India in all directions is impossible. When woman whom we call _abala_ becomes _sabala_, all those who are helpless will become powerful.

_The Hindu, 24-12-1936_

242. LETTER TO RONALD DUNCAN

_AS AT SEGAON, WARDHA, December 23, 1936_

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your pamphlet. The argument appeared to me to be sound so far as it went. Perhaps there is not sufficient emphasis on personal individual conduct irrespective of what society does or does not do. Non-violent action does not depend upon another’s co-operation. Violent action is ineffective without the co-operation of others. Here both the forces are conceived in terms of the ultimate good of society.

_Yours sincerely,_

M. K. GANDHI

RONALD DUNCAN, ESQ.
6 PALL MALL
LONDON

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

1. The conference commenced on December 23 and was presided over by Margaret Cousins.
2. Weak
3. Strong

206  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
243. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

TILAKNAGAR,
December 23, 1936

CHI. AMRITLAL,

The sun has not risen yet and my hand is numb with cold, but I am writing this as your postcard is lying before me. Now you should have more strength than before. There is a competition between you and Mira. She has no doubt regained her strength. She takes four pounds of milk daily and also eight to ten tolas of butter and fifteen tolas of flour, vegetable and fruit. However, she has not put on weight; it is the same as before. Now she washes her own clothes. Ba, Manu and Kanu arrived here yesterday on their way to Segaon. Here with me are Mahadev, Bablo, Pyarelal and Radhakishan and of course Khan Saheb and Mehrtaj.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10727

244. LETTER TO NARNADABEHN R. PATHAK

December 23, 1936

CHI. NARMADA,

I am writing to you since you have asked me to. Those who think you are mature or capable of taking decisions are mistaken. Your intellect is raw and your mind unsteady. Your ideals are good but you do not have the ability to put them into practice. This is my reading of you. The person who could have guided you on the right path himself cast evil eyes on you and you fell a prey to him. As a result, great injustice was done to the woman for whom you had a soft corner and you abetted in the crime. How can such an immoral relationship inspire in you a spirit of service? Why can’t you understand this? There is no clarification either in your letter or in Ramnarayan’s letter. This much seems clear to me: either you should forget that you are husband and wife or you should go ahead and indulge in carnal pleasures as you wish. I believe that it is almost impossible to practise brahmacharya while calling yourselves husband and wife. At least your thoughts are bound to be carnal. May God be good to you.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2781. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N.
Pathak

245. LETTER TO RAMNARAYAN N. PATHAK

December 23, 1936

BHAI RAMNARAYAN,

I received the letters of you both. I hope you have not done anything in a fit of excitement. When both of you have decided to practise _brahmacharya_, the marriage does not exist at all. It is clear from your letter that at the root of your marriage was the desire to satisfy your passion. The married couple who voluntarily observe _brahmacharya_ are only brother and sister. But you were not even fit to be husband and wife.

How can a man who had relations with a woman ever marry her?
I have nothing to say if the sanctity of marriage rites has no importance in your eyes. In that case your relations with Ganga and Narmada should be considered innocent and such a word as immorality should disappear from the language. I am still striving with you because you respect my opinion. However, do not take any step as long as you are not convinced of my arguments. Whatever you do, it is bound to be difficult. I know that it is not easy to overcome passion. My duty is to help you to purify your thoughts. One should not see morality in sin. Passion makes one see right in wrong. Now do whatever you think is proper and stick to whatever you do. It is easy to say this but difficult to put it into practice.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2783. Courtesy: Ramnarayan N.
Pathak
246. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

TILAKNAGAR, FAIZPUR, December 24, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your letter. Which of your questions shall I answer? Kanti has not arrived here so far and I do not know when he will. He has gone to Poona to see one of his friends. Come to Segaon and have a discussion with me. If you stay on, I will give you treatment or have it given to you. It would be right for you to come there for the peace of your mind at least. You still do not write anything about your finger.

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 369

247. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

December 24, 1936

Mahatma Gandhi said that he could not conscientiously continue to serve any longer as the President of the League, as he could not do without goat’s milk. He, however, promised to continue to take interest and guide the activities of the League in the same way as he had been doing in the case of the All-India Village Industries Association.

The Hindustan Times, 27-12-1936

248. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

TILAKNAGAR, FAIZPUR, December 25, 1936

BHAI KASTURBHAI,

I have received your telegrams and letter. I take it that you have obtained legal opinion on the basic issues I have raised and that it has gone against me. If it is so, one can easily understand that there is nothing you can do in this connection.

1 The All-India Cow Protection League. Gandhiji resigned as its President after it was decided that every trustee must use only cow’s milk and products of cow’s milk.
The paper No. 2 was of course included on my suggestion but at that time you did not raise any objection. I was not bound in any way and therefore it was my duty to hear the Labour Association. My decision no doubt goes against them but their protest is a part of the representation they have made against us and therefore it must go to the Umpire. I did ask for paper No. 6 and you had no objection to it. I have no objection to dropping Nos. 10 and 11.

Both of us had asked for No. 12. We had certainly agreed that the mistakes should be rectified.

Therefore in my record I have kept all the papers except Nos. 10 and 11. I can say that I have even used them for arriving at my decision. Paper No. 12 is of no use to me, but as your opinion is based on the merits and demerits of the case I believe it is necessary for you.

If there is difference of opinion between us even over this, let it also be decided by the Umpire. As a lot of time has already been taken up we should not delay matters further by prolonging our correspondence.

About the Rajnagar mill, my opinion is that Chimanbhai has made a serious mistake. I feel that my decision is correct and therefore it is wrong to change it. Had Chimanbhai allowed us to take the decision regarding the remaining mills, I would have imposed a fine on the workers so that the account would have been squared. We should go deeper into the question of reinstating the workers.

I shall try to send my Award with additions and alterations by tomorrow. Kindly arrange to send it along with yours to the Umpire there or wherever he may be.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

[PS.] I forgot one point. We should give copies of our Awards to both the parties. Even if we do not do so the Press will continue to write about it. I went through the cutting you have sent. How can we say from which side the names were leaked out? Are newspapermen averse to indulging in guess work? Sometimes something is bound to come true. Don’t you think so?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4199
249. SPEECH AT OPENING OF KHADI AND VILLAGE INDUSTRIES EXHIBITION

December 25, 1936

You must have seen from the newspapers that the responsibility for having this session of the Congress in a village is wholly mine. They had also announced that I would go to Faizpur in the beginning of December and supervise all the arrangements about the Exhibition. The latter half of the statement is true, and without any false modesty or exaggeration I would say that I am wholly responsible for whatever shortcomings you see here. The idea of having the Congress and the Exhibition in a village originated with me, and I must shoulder the responsibility for whatever defects or shortcomings you will notice here. The credit for anything good that you will see belongs to those who were in charge of the arrangements here. It was Dastane and Dev who accepted my suggestion to have the Congress and Exhibition in a village and with the thoroughness and determination that characterize the Maharashtrians they have carried out their promise. The Exhibition was bound to be according to my conception because it is organized by the All-India Spinners’ Association of which I am the President and the All-India Village Industries Association which I am guiding and directing. I had to warn them against creating a Lucknow or Delhi in a Maharashtra village. Why not in that case have the Congress and the Exhibition both in Poona? But if they were to be in a village, they must be in keeping with an Indian village. And no one could do it better than I, because, as I said to them, I had long been a villager by choice, whereas they had become villagers only recently. Of course, I too settled in Segaon only a few months ago, and as I was actually born and bred and educated in a town, my body found it difficult to adjust itself automatically to village life. I had, therefore, malaria there. But, as you know, I threw it off immediately, recovered quickly and am alive and kicking. Part of the reason of course is that I am now care-free, having cast all my cares on the broad shoulders of 1 The exhibition was opened at 8.30 a.m. Among those present were Kasturba Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru, Abdul Ghaffar Khan, Vallabhbhai Patel, Sarojini Naidu, Rajendra Prasad, Abul Kalam Azad, Govind Ballabh Pant, J.B. Kripalani, Jamnalal Bajaj and Mahadev Desai. Reports of the speech appeared in The Hindustan Times, The Bombay Chronicle and other newspapers. What follows is Mahadev Desai’s resume of the speech.

Jawarharlal and the Sardar. However, let me yield up the real secret of my health, which is that my body happens to be where I had set my heart.

Credit for the arrangements here belongs to the architect Sjt. Mhatre and the artist Sjt. Nandalal Bose. When Nanda Babu responded to my invitation a couple of months ago I explained to him what I wanted, and left it to him to give concrete shape to the conception. For he is a creative artist and I am none. God has given me the sense of art but not the organs to give it concrete shape. He has blessed Sjt. Nandalal Bose with both. I am thankful that he agreed to take upon himself the whole burden of organizing the artistic side of the Exhibition and he came and settled down here some weeks ago to see to everything himself. The result is that the whole Tilaknagar is an exhibition in itself, and so it begins not where I am going to open it but at the main gateway which is a fine piece of village art. Of course our thanks are due also to Sjt. Mhatre who has spared no pains in bringing the entire plan to completion. Please remember that Nanda Babu has depended entirely on local material and local labour to bring all the structures here into being.

Now I want you to go and see the Exhibition with, if possible, my eyes. If you will realize that it is organized under the auspices of the A.I.S.A. and A.I.V.I.A., you will know what to expect there. The object of the former is to make the whole of India khadi-clad, a goal which we are unfortunately still far from having reached. The object of the latter is to revive the moribund cottage industries of India. Both khadi and the other cottage industries are vital to the economic welfare of our villages.

This Exhibition is no spectacular show, it is not intended either to dazzle the eyes of the public or to delude them. This is a genuine village Exhibition which has been brought into being by the labour of villagers. It is a pure educative effort. It simply shows the villagers how to double their income if only they will use their hands and feet and the resources around them. I would ask our President to take me to a village in U.P. and I would offer to reconstruct the village not out of Jamnalalji’s money but with the help of the hands and feet of the men and women living there, on condition that he induces the villagers to work according to instructions. Our President will perhaps say that as soon as these poor folk begin adding to their income, a zamindar like Jamnalalji would enhance the rent and thus rob the extra income out of their hands. Well, we will not allow the zamindar to do anything of the kind. There is no doubt in my mind that in a country like ours teeming with millions of unemployed, something is needed to keep their hands and feet engaged in order that they may earn an honest living. It is for them that khadi and cottage industries are needed. It is clear to me as daylight that they are badly needed at the present moment. What the future has in store for them I do not know, nor do I care to know.

With this Gandhiji proceeded to describe some of the exhibits that had been placed before him—small tools from the blacksmith’s smithy which had been made overnight, articles made by Andhra workmen out of grass growing on river banks (e.g. pouches and spectacle-cases), fox’s hide cured and tanned and lined with khadi at the Wardha tannery, and so on.

These little things add substantially to the income of the poor villagers. If you can ensure them three annas instead of the three pice that they get today, they will think they have won swaraj. That is what khadi is trying to do for the spinners today. In brief we have to teach them how to turn waste into wealth, and that is what the Exhibition is meant to teach them. When I met Nanda Babu two months ago I asked him not to bring from Santiniketan costly paintings from his own school of art, lest untimely rain should ruin them. He accepted my advice and has collected things from the neighbourhood of this place. He launched out to the villages with the eye of an artist that is his, and picked up numerous things from the peasants’ households, things that never catch an ordinary eye as striking objects of art, but which his discerning eye picked up and arranged and thus clothed with a new meaning.

Sjt. Vaikunth Mehta has apologized for the small size of the Exhibition as compared with the previous ones, but there was no occasion for apology. It does not contain one superfluous exhibit and the crafts represented mean so much additional production. Look, for instance, at the samples of hand-made paper out of munj grass, banana bark and bamboo. Bamboo has indeed played a prominent part in all the structures you see here, and you may be sure that after this Congress camp breaks up all the bamboo will be turned to good account.

You could not but have noticed the grand simplicity of the procession that was organized for our President, especially the beautifully designed and decorated chariots drawn by six pairs of bullocks.
Well, all that was designed in order to prepare you for what awaited you here. No city amenities or comforts, but everything that poor villagers could provide. The place is thus a place of pilgrimage for us all, our Kashi and our Mecca, where we have come in order to offer our prayers for freedom and to consecrate ourselves to the nation’s service. You have not come here to lord it over the poor peasants but to learn how to get off their backs by participating in their daily toil, by doing the scavenger’s job, by washing for yourselves, by grinding your own flour, etc. For the first time in the history of the Congress you are being given here rice unpolished of its substance and chapatis made out of hand-ground flour, plenty of fresh air and clean mother earth to rest your limbs upon. But you will please bear with all the poor organizers’ shortcomings, for in Khan Saheb’s language we are all Khudai Khidmatgars—servants of God, come here not to take but to tender service.

_Harijan_, 2-1-1937

250. HALF A DOZEN OR SIX

The following Press cutting¹ has been sent to me by Thakkar Bapa.

Whether the Harijan is nominally a Christian, Muslim or Hindu and now Sikh, he is still a Harijan. He can’t change his spots inherited from Hinduism so called. He may change his garb and call himself a Catholic Harijan, or a Muslim Harijan or neo-Muslim or neo-Sikh, his untouchability will haunt him during his lifetime. It is one and the same thing whether you call the numeral after five half a dozen or six. Not until untouchability is removed from Hinduism will the taint be removed from Harijans, no matter what label they adopt. Therefore Harijans have it in their hands either to save Hinduism or to destroy it, as caste Hindus have it in theirs. It is no doubt easier for Harijans to change labels than for caste Hindus to change their hearts, but it may be easier for Harijans to rise superior to every earthly temptation and be consciously steadfast in the faith in which they have been denied by their fellows the most elementary human rights. It is no doubt difficult for anybody to resist the temptations to which Harijans are exposed today. It will therefore be a marvel if they prove true and cling to their ancestral faith with the determination to purify it by a conscious supreme effort. They can do this as they could not before for they know that there is a growing body of caste Hindus who are making common cause with them and making reparation for their own past wrongs and the continuing wrongs of fellow caste Hindus. Thus viewed, the Kumbakonam incident is as much a shame of the Roman Church as it is of Hinduism.

¹ Not reproduced here. It reported that during the Sunday service in St. Mary’s Cathedral at Kumbakonam caste Catholics withdrew from the service on Catholic Harijans entering in an organized body and distributing themselves among caste Catholics instead of occupying the portion intended for them.

_Harijan_, 26-12-1936

251. THE SECRET OF IT

The Deputy President of the Travancore Assembly has written a long article to disprove my statement that “the way for the great step (the Proclamation) was prepared by the gentle but persistent effort of the Travancore Branch of the Harijan Sevak Sangh”.¹ The writer even asks the local Sangh to desist from organizing public meetings and importing outsiders like Shri C. Rajagopalachari to advertise their work. He contrasts my utter failure to have temples opened in Ahmedabad where I must be presumed to have the greatest influence.

What I meant was clear from my language that the _savarna_ mind was made responsive by the unremitting zeal of the local Sangh in educating and preparing it. To my knowledge there was no other body or organization in Travancore working among the _savarnas_ to awaken their conscience. There was nothing in my writing to suggest that the act of the Maharaja was influenced by the activity of the Harijan Sevak Sangh.

For the rest the local workers know best what to do and how to act.

So far as my own influence is concerned I must plead guilty to the Deputy President’s charge. Not only have I not succeeded in having temples opened in Ahmedabad but I have not succeeded in having temples opened even in Wardha after my having established myself there. And what is still more damaging to my reputation is that I have not succeeded in having the only two caste temples in Segaon opened to the Harijans of the little village. But this confession leaves me unrepentant. My failure is a stepping-stone to the success in which

¹ _Vide_ “An Example for Hindu Princes and Their Advisers”, 16-11-1936
I have full faith. But it will come in God’s own time. “Mine is but to do and die”.

Therefore the glory of the miracle of Travancore belongs undoubtedly to the Maharaja, his good mother, and his able Diwan. And herein is a lesson for us all who are interested in the root-and-branch removal of untouchability. Rightly or wrongly the tradition in Hinduism is that a Hindu Prince has the authority, as it is his duty, to propound Smritis known to the moderns as laws or rules consistent with the fundamentals of religion for the due fulfilment by the people of their moral obligations.

When years ago I had discussions with the Pandits of Vykom they had assured me that in spite of the Smriti they had produced in support of their contention, they would obey regulations to the contrary if they were promulgated by their ruler. This belief probably accounts for the happy phenomenon we are witnessing in Travancore where its population is whole-heartedly giving full effect to the Proclamation. If the other Hindu States will follow the example of Travancore they will also perhaps discover that their people will carry out the rules that may be issued. Anyway, the people of the respective States might well prepare public opinion in the direction. But they must not relax their effort for having temples opened by their respective trustees without waiting for Princely lead. For the reformers’ argument is that no new Smriti is required for opening temples to Harijans or for removing untouchability. Only we may not leave out any honourable avenue open to us for fulfilling our purpose. And appealing to the Princes to take the lead is an honourable avenue and most likely to hasten success.

Harijan, 26-12-1936
252. CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY

The Church Missionary Society of England has published a pamphlet prepared by Prebendary W.W. Cash, in which

The C.M.S. is appealing for an emergency fund of £ 25,000 to enable extra grants to be made during the next five years to those areas where this big movement is taking place, and the Society appeals to the whole Church to support it in this effort. Not for ourselves do we ask people to give, but for the sake of the hundreds of thousands who are dimly groping after Christ, and who are finding spiritual life and social uplift through the Gospel.

‘The big movement’ referred to is the movement for the conversion of Harijans. The money is wanted for work in the Telugu area and Travancore.

The appeal ends thus:

The movement among the outcastes is spreading to the caste people, and within the last five years it is estimated that no less than 30,000 caste people from fifty-one different castes have become Christians. This is a movement of such far-reaching consequences that we dare not refuse help. The thousands of today may become millions tomorrow. Will you help us to go forward in a great advance that the harvest may be reaped?

Its opening sentences run as follows:

Recent news in the papers has attracted widespread attention to the untouchable of India. We have read of great conferences of outcaste people who have decided to break away from Hinduism. We have heard of mass movements towards Christianity and of baptisms of tens of thousands of converts in recent years. We have followed with growing interest the development of the young churches in these rural areas, particularly in the Dornakal and Travancore Dioceses. We are therefore compelled to examine more closely what is happening in India and to see how far we are reaping the harvest which has come.

It contains among others these three headlines:

1. What is happening among these people?
2. Who is Dr. Ambedkar?
3. What does India say to Dr. Ambedkar’s advice?

I cull the following from what appears under the third headline:

There is no doubt that there have been important repercussions all over India from the conference of untouchables. Mr. Gandhi had previously carried on a campaign for the removal of untouchability, but he has signally failed because he clung to the Hindu system which has been the cause of the trouble.

In passing I may remark that I am utterly unconscious of “signal failure”. I have not clung to “the Hindu system which has been the cause of the trouble”. On the contrary I have rejected that which has been the cause of the trouble, namely, untouchability. And I have not abandoned the campaign as suggested in the question.

Under the same headline occurs also this paragraph:

In the C.M.S. area of the Dornakal Diocese there are no less than three hundred villages appealing for teachers; they represent forty thousand people definitely asking for baptism. The Bishop reckons that probably about a million people in his diocese are moving Christward.

Though I have travelled in the Telugu area often enough I have never heard of forty thousand Harijans or any figure near it asking for baptism.

Under the same headline occurs also this precious paragraph:

In Travancore, the Ezhava community are definitely on trek. They are a superior type of the ‘exterior’ castes. Many of them are educated; some are landowners, others lawyers, doctors, officials and teachers; but they are excluded from the temples and suffer from the disabilities of the outcaste community. The leaders of one section of these people numbering over 850,000 have waited on the Bishop in Travancore, because they are anxious that their entire community should become Christians. This is by no means entirely due to Dr. Ambedkar, but is another incident in a situation which is growing in magnitude from day to day.

I dare not speak for the Ezhava leaders. The papers report them to have congratulated the Maharaja on his Proclamation. But that may not be inconsistent with their anxiety that their entire community should become Christians. Let them speak if they will on the contents of the quotation.

The exaggerations of Bishop Pickett, with which I had the misfortune of dealing last week,¹ are beaten perhaps by those contained in the appeal.

There is no other way to deal with the exaggerations of which the appeal is full than by living them down and by the truth working through the lives of the reformers. The appeal deals not with the past but with contemporary events. And if millions are waiting to bear witness to the message of Christ, as and in the form in which it comes through the agents of the C.M.S., my disbelief in the statements made in the appeal will melt like snow under the rays of the midday sun.

¹ Vide “What Is a Miracle?,” 19-12-1936

_Harijan_, 26-12-1936

253. AWARD IN LABOUR DISPUTE

_TILAKNAGAR_,

_December 26, 1936_

I. The Ahmedabad Mill-owners’ Association has referred to arbitration the following questions:

(a) The M. O.A.’s demand for a 20% cut in wages.
(b) Complaint against the New Maneckchowk Mill.
(c) Complaint against Motilal Hirabhai Mill.
(d) Complaint against Rajnagar Mills No. 1.

The reference is subject to two conditions, viz.,

1. The Arbitrators should give a simultaneous award on all the questions referred to them.
2. With reference to the mill which might have resigned from the M.O.A. whether the Arbitrators have any jurisdiction in respect of complaints against them before they enter upon merits.

II. Sheth Chamanlal Girdhardas Parekh was Permanent Arbitrator on behalf of the M.O.A. but he having resigned the M.O.A. has appointed Sheth Kasturbhai in his place only with reference to the questions referred to above. The absence of Sheth Chamanlal has been felt by all.

III. The Arbitrators had conversations with representatives of the M.O.A. and T.L.A. on 2nd, 3rd and 4th instant at Wardha and Segaon. At these meetings no evidence was taken or registered beyond consultations. But at my instance and for my edification certain particulars were supplied as embodied in Appendices 2, 6, 7, 8, and 9. With reference to the admission of these Appendices as part of the record to be submitted to the Umpire, it is likely that my brother Arbitrator will object to their admission. I had asked for the information embodied in these Appendices in Wardha and Segaon. There was no objection raised by my brother at the time. Appendix O

---

Gandhiji wrote this in Gujarati and the English translation was arranged by Kasturbhai Lalbhai. _Vide_ also “Letter to Kasturbhai Lalbhai”, 3-1-1937 was asked for by us jointly and if that also is objected to, I do not mind its exclusion as it is unnecessary for my decision.

IV. The evidence that is submitted to the Umpire is embodied in the fourteen appendices attached hereto.

V. From the evidence submitted it appears that the T.L.A. has been obliged reluctantly to agree to the restricted reference (Appendix II). In my opinion, if all the points of dispute between the two parties had been referred to arbitration, the Arbitrators would have found it easier to give their Award because such questions are as a rule closely related to each other. Although therefore there seems to me to be validity in the T.L.A.’s protest, its letter dated November 30th (Appendix I) is a clear acceptance, however involuntary, of the restriction. Nevertheless the T.L.A. has a perfect right to have all these questions referred to arbitration.

ON WAGE CUT

VI. After having read the papers herewith and having given full consideration to them on the question of the M.O.A.’s demand for a wage cut, I have come to the conclusion that evidence submitted furnishes no cause for any cut.

VII. The last Arbitration Award was given on the 17th January 1935 (Appendix IV, sub-appendix 1).

VIII. In that Award the Arbitrator has thrown certain responsibilities on both the parties of which three are as follows:

(a) Earnest efforts should be made to standardize the wages of piece-workers as soon as possible after 1st January 1936.

(b) With a view to providing for a prompt settlement of all wages questions on either side in future the parties will meet and try to evolve a scheme for automatic adjustment of wages.

(c) The mills which are desirous of adopting rationalization will prepare before 30th June 1935 a register of workers who are working and who are likely to be unemployed in the departments to which such schemes will apply.

IX. From the evidence submitted to the Arbitrators it appears that the M.O.A. has not discharged its share of these responsibilities nor has it taken sufficient pains to do so. In my opinion it is possible, with sufficient endeavour, to standardize wages and although it is difficult to evolve a scheme whereby the question of increasing or decreasing wages can be automatically regulated, I do not consider it to be impossible. It was the obvious duty of the M.O.A. to keep a registry of hands in connection with rationalization. In all these three matters either party could have availed itself of the assistance of the Arbitrators but it does not apper to have occurred to them to do so.

X. It is necessary to bear this in mind that the Award of 1935 was originally a voluntary agreement between the parties. To give it the form of an Award was obviously in the natural course but in view of the fact that the Award was merely a stabilization of the voluntary agreement, it was doubly the duty of the parties to give effect to it and is so today.

XI. In my opinion, not until the M.O.A. has made a serious attempt to carry out the terms of the last settlement and the impossibility of its being carried out has been proved is it open for the M.O.A. to ask for a wage cut.

XII. However, the general understanding arrived at between the two parties has the same value as the Award in determining the question of wage cut. The fact that in spite of the admission of the necessity of having a sub-arbitrator appointed to adjudicate upon petty disputes arising from time to time the appointment has not been made is injurious to the harmonious relations between the parties and becomes a cause of mutual distrust and this in its turn harms the industry. It seems improper that the workmen’s complaints may not be disposed of in time or not at all and that the question of wage cut can still be referred to arbitration.

XIII. That the permanent Arbitrators cannot investigate every complaint is self-evident. Those who seek justice have to come with clean hands. In my opinion the M.O.A. has not performed its duty in this matter and has no right to ask for a wage cut until this duty of appointing a sub-arbitrator is discharged.

XIV. Such being my opinion it is unnecessary for me to enter into the merits of the case for wage cut.

XV. But a study of the papers submitted by the parties has left on me the impression that the period that has elapsed since the last Award was given is too short to warrant a case for wage cut. Besides, the M.O.A.'s statement does not substantiate its claim.

XVI. At this stage I would like to restate the principles that for the good of both parties I have presented to them as a result of my close and unbroken contact with the industry for a period of 18 years in the capacity of Arbitrator.

(a) No cut should be made till the mills have ceased to make any profit and are obliged to fall back upon their capital for continuing the industry.
(b) There should be no cut till the wages have reached the level adequate for maintenance. It is impossible to conceive a time when the workmen have begun to regard the industry as if it were their own property and they would then be prepared to help it out of a crisis by taking the barest maintenance consisting of a dry crust and working day and night. That would be a voluntary arrangement. Such cases are irrelevant to the present consideration.

(c) There should be a common understanding as to what should be included in determining a living wage.

(d) The consideration of the deterioration in individual mills cannot form part of a case for a cut in wages of labour in general.

(e) It is vital to the well-being of the industry that workmen should be regarded as equals with the shareholders and that they have therefore every right to possess an accurate knowledge of the transactions of the mills.

(f) There should be a register of all available mill-hands acceptable to both the parties and the custom of taking labour through any agency other than the T.L.A. should be stopped.

XVII. I have not presented these principles in the belief that they will be acceptable either to the brother Arbitrator or to the mill-owners or even to the workmen. These have not guided my decision in the present case but I am convinced that without the acceptance of these principles the industry, i.e., the owners and the workmen, are in danger.

XVIII. Before concluding the discussion on the wage cut it seems to be necessary for me to allude to a thing that has come under my observation in the course of the proceedings. The control of the M.O.A. over individual mills appears to have slackened. When the M.O.A.’s decisions appear repugnant to individual mill-owners, they are tempted to secede. This is undoubtedly a regrettable state of things and requires to be mended. But it cannot be cited in support of a case for wage cut. The burden of maintaining such mills cannot be laid on the shoulders of labour. The deterioration of individual mills has been found to be due to the shortcomings of managers, out-of-date machinery or such other internal defects.

NEW MANECKCHOWK MILL

XIX. The reduction of wages by this mill is not denied but no mill has any right to initiate a reduction of its own will. M.O.A. says that this mill has retired from the Association and the Arbitration has, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain the case. One notice of reduction was issued on 8th August last and the other on the 2nd October last. Meanwhile the mill seceded from the Association on the 20th August last. The M.O.A’s statement that the reduction was made on September 30th is evidently a slip of the pen. Whether it is or not, the fact of the resignation does not debar the T.L.A. from bringing the case before Arbitration. If, whenever a mill so acts as to have its action impeached by the Arbitrators and therefore resigns with a view to escaping discipline, the system of arbitration becomes meaningless. How the M.O.A. can enforce discipline against a seceder is another question. Such a question, when it arises, can be dealt with by resort to arbitration if it becomes necessary. In my opinion the mill in question should restore the reduced amount and withdraw the notice. If the defaulting mill does not carry out this decision the M.O.A. should co-operate with the T.L.A. in adopting all legitimate measures against the defaulter.

MOTILAL HIRABHAI MILL

XX. I can give no definite opinion on the papers submitted. If the owners of this mill do not furnish the required information the M.O.A. should procure it without delay and if it is not procured the T.L.A. is at liberty to come before the Arbitrators. Although the M.O.A. and the mill do not appear to have given the necessary help to the T.L.A., the latter erred in assisting the workmen in resorting to the strike if such assistance was in fact given. However provoking the circumstances might be, workmen cannot cease work without due notice nor can owners impose reduction of their own motion. This is inherent in the acceptance of the principle of arbitration.

THE DECISION

Thus on the points submitted to arbitration my decision is as follows:

1. The case for wage cut is dismissed for the reason that the M.O.A. has failed to prove it.

2. The alleged resignation by the New Maneckchowk Mill does not put it outside the jurisdiction of the Arbitration Board. The mill should restore the reduced wages and withdraw the cut notice. If the owners do not carry out this decision, the M.O.A. should co-operate with the T.L.A., in taking all legitimate steps to enforce discipline and should seek the assistance of the Arbitration Board, if necessary.

3. I am unable to give a definite decision about the complaint against Motilal Hirabhai Mill

History of Wage Adjustments in the Ahmedabad Industry, Vol. IV, pp. 33-40
254. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

December 26, 1936

BHAI KASTURBHAI,

I am enclosing herewith my Award\(^1\) with two extra copies, one for the Labour Association and the other for the Mill-owners’ Association.

Please go through the additions and alterations made therein. There is a reference to sub-appendices in the Appendix. As desired by you I have dropped sub-appendices and have made a note to that effect in the Appendix. Please see.

After writing to you yesterday, I thought about the question at night and while writing this it has occurred to me that greater justice would be done by not recommending payment of arrears of the wages and therefore I am revising the decision. I have only made a recommendation concerning the wages, which you will see. You will also find therein my reasons for not paying the arrears. It is in conformity with my nature. If you had not drawn my attention to it, I would not perhaps have noticed the error in my approach. However, you drove me to hard thinking. I very much wanted to accept your suggestion. You demonstrated your friendship by drawing my attention to my error. Should I thank you for that? Truth will cease to exist in this world if friends do not fulfill their duty of cautioning one another.

I hope you have received the telegram I have sent to you. It is good if you are able to act accordingly. It hurts me that hundreds of workers are unemployed. It also pains me that we are not allowed to hear their case. Therefore please do not waste a single minute. I do not have a copy of the letter to the Umpire. Has he been given fifteen days’ time limit? Whatever it may be, please request the Umpire on behalf of us both that he should give the decision as early as possible even within that time limit.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4200

\(^1\) Vide the preceding item.
255. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

December 26, 1936

CHI. MIRA,

Your two letters before me. You have to live down the hottest tempers if you are to express ahimsa in your life. It makes no difference whether the temper is directed towards you personally or towards your wards or dear friends. They, Balwantisinha and Munnalal, would not have been with me if they were perfect men or very nearly so.

May reach there 30th inst.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6370. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9836.

256. MESSAGE TO STUDENTS¹

FAIZPUR,
[December 26, 1936]²

What new message can I give you at the age of 68? And where is the use of my giving you a message if you pass a resolution there of assassinating me or burning my effigy? Assassinating the body of course does not matter, for out of my ashes a thousand Gandhis will arise. But what if you assassinate or burn the principles I have lived for?

Harijan, 16-1-1937

257. HINDU CODE OF CONDUCT

I have preserved the following letter³ for the past seven months.

I have been keeping the letter suppressed in the belief that it would be better if I got some learned scholar to reply to it instead of doing so myself. Shri Anandshankarbhai has at my request taken the ¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The message was in response to a request from the secretary of a students’ conference.

² Mahadev Desai says the message was given the day before Gandhiji made his “great speech on the cult of the Charkha”, which was on December 27.
³ Not translated here. The correspondent had written to say that it was better to teach Harijans how to observe Hindu religion in day-to-day life than to give them lectures on culture work in hand now. However, the book which will result will not solve the above question in the manner desired by the correspondent. It is my hope that he will glean the required information from the book. I am putting forward something of that sort here; because I have spent years working amongst Harijans. My experience, therefore, may be useful to other workers like the correspondent.

I do not talk to Harijans about the basic tenets of Hinduism. If they had separate temples I would certainly visit them. I would jest with the priest there. Ordinarily, the poor man is very ignorant. This does not mean that a caste Hindu priest knows more. But why should the latter listen to me? A Harijan priest would regard me as a great man and lend me an ear at least. It is a different thing if he lets my words go out through the other ear. I would say the following to a band of Harijans: So far, we have spurned you; we did not even look at you, we did not share your joys and sorrows. Let me now tell you what our religion expects of us.

1. If we are not in the habit of waking up before dawn, we should form it.

2. There are many persons who start smoking immediately on waking up, others, little better, make the whole house aware of their having woken up by talking profanities. Instead of doing this, one should take the name of God before leaving the bed and thank Him for the night having passed safely.

3. On leaving the bed we should immediately awaken our children and then, sitting in a place which is not frequented by people, we should clean our teeth with babul or some other twig. We should use either salt or powdered charcoal which we must keep ready at home to clean our teeth and with the halves of the twig we should scrape the tongue and rinse the mouth well.

We should sprinkle water over our eyes and remove mucus if there is any. Having done that we must wash our face, nose, ears, etc., carefully and wipe these with a clean cloth.

4. If one has to evacuate one's bowels and that particular village has no latrine, or if there is one, but one does not like to use it, this function should be performed in a remote place which people do not frequent. The excreta should be properly covered with earth and the organs concerned should be properly cleansed with water. As both the excretory organs throw out waste, these should be properly cleansed and the waste material eliminated. Thereafter the hands should be washed with water and earth, and the water-pot should also be cleaned well.

5. While performing this daily routine one should either hum Ramdhun or some devotional song. If one does not know any of these, one should merely keep repeating the name of Rama.

6. It would be daylight by the time one returns home. Other members of the family will also have performed their natural functions as mentioned above. All should then get together and sing bhajans or kirtans for five minutes to half an hour. So long as one does not know any such thing, one can at least repeat the name of Rama.

7. Thereafter, everyone should set out for work after taking breakfast. Children who do not work should go to school.

8. Before taking the midday meal, everyone should bathe with clean water and scrub the entire body. Dhoti, sari and such other garments should be washed. The poor who do not have the facility of daily change should wear a loin-cloth while bathing. The body should be rubbed and wiped after a bath.

9. In this manner, when night falls while performing one’s daily tasks, God’s name should be uttered after the evening meal and before going to bed and He should be thanked that the day passed without any mishaps.

10. The hands should be washed after every meal and after performing any task which soils the hands. After a meal, one should gargle and rinse one’s mouth.

11. We should realize that God knows our every thought, sees everything we do. Hence no one can deceive Him. How then can we deceive out brothers and sisters who are His creatures? It may well be that these persons are unaware of our deception. If they come to know of the latter, how can we cheat them at all?

12. Hence we should sincerely serve those under whom we work and not deceive them.

13. And, if we do not deceive anyone, how can we commit any theft? Even cheating while weighing goods amounts to theft.

14. We certainly would not like anyone to abuse us or beat us or misbehave with our mother or sisters. Hence we should not abuse anyone, not even our wives and children.

15. Nor should we beat anyone. This includes our wives and children. These persons have to be separately mentioned because many men regard their wives and children as their property. But it is a grave error. In our religion the wife has been regarded the equal of the husband. Hence, she is known as the other half, co-partner in religion, a goddess. Children are not our property. Parents are the protectors of children. Hence, even with them, we should be gentle, tolerant and patient.

16. Just as we should have goodwill towards our wives and children, similarly we should treat our elders and our parents with respect.

17. And, as shown in 14 above, it is obvious that a man should treat another man’s wife as his sister or mother and, similarly, a woman should regard another man as her father or brother.

18. Just as all men are creatures of God, so also animals are His creatures; hence they are also a part of the family. We should therefore be good towards them too. We cannot misuse even mud or stones. Our religion teaches us even such prayer: “Oh! Mother Earth, we walk upon you every day. We depend upon your support. Forgive us for touching you with our feet.” Having said this, we put a pinch of dust upon our heads.

19. And hence we should be kind towards our animals; we should feed them properly; we should certainly not overload them with burdens, we should keep them in clean places; and refrain from beating them.

20. Similarly, we should pluck leaves and cut trees only as much as we must. We should use discretion while doing so. We should not destroy wantonly.

21. So far as possible, we should avoid eating meat. Beef should be totally shunned. Cow-protection occupies a very prominent place in our religion.

22. In accordance with clause 19, all living creatures are our brothers and sisters. Hence, our rishis and munis taught us that we should regard the cow as our mother and should develop friendly relations towards all living beings including non-human creatures. It is in the fitness of things to regard the cow as our mother as she, like the mother, gives us milk. One who gets milk does not require fish or meat. Moreover, the cow provides us with bullocks and even after death gives us leather, manure, fat for carts, etc., and such other things. Hence, we should never kill a cow.

23. And if we may not kill a cow, how can we eat her flesh after her death? No sensible people in the world eat carrion.
24. By becoming an addict, a man renders himself virtually insane; sometimes, he completely loses his senses. Hence liquor, toddy, bhang, ganja, opium and tobacco should be eschewed.

25. Gambling involves deception and the money obtained through it is tainted. Hence we should not gamble.

26. Others are as fond of their religion as we are of ours. Hence we should respect all religions equally. And, therefore we should bear no ill will or have disputes with Muslims, Christians and followers of other faiths.

27. If religion teaches us that all are children of God, there can be no high or low among them and there should not be even the faintest trace of untouchability.

28. Finally, our religion also tells us that anyone who does not earn his living with the sweat of his brow, eats stolen food. Hence, everyone should earn his bread by engaging himself in such manual tasks as farming, or making cloth, etc., and it is for this very reason that each person should produce foodgrains, khadi and such other articles of food and clothing in his own village.

These things which I have often said on different occasions have been put down in written form here. Other clauses may be added to these when the occasion arises bearing in mind the universal elements like truth and non-violence, which are involved in them.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 27-12-1936

258. DUTY TOWARDS CHRISTIAN HARIJANS

A worker in the cause of Harijans has asked me what should be the duty of the Harijan Sevak Sangh towards Christian Harijans. His letter contains many subsidiary questions which need not be reproduced here. This article is intended to answer those very questions.

Ordinarily it may be said that the special duty which the Sangh has taken upon itself and attempts to fulfil towards Hindu Harijans, does not hold good in case of those who have become Christians. However, the goodwill that one human being should have towards another should also be shown towards Christian Harijans. This rule applies to people of all faiths. We cannot be displeased with a Harijan because he calls himself a Christian. However, if he is in receipt of a scholarship or any such special assistance from the Sangh, that should be discontinued. But if, despite having become a Christian, he is in a Harijan school and wishes to continue in it, he cannot be turned out. Perhaps he may be asked to pay his fees. He cannot be given the usual free clothes, etc., as the Sangh’s funds are meant for Hindu Harijans only. Hindus, other than Harijans, can be admitted to Harijan schools, but they cannot join them without paying fees. The same rule should apply to those who have become Christians.

Christian Harijans should not be offered temptations to embrace Hinduism again. However, if a person wishes to return to his own faith we should not prevent him from doing so.

But if Christian Harijans ask for facilities such as the use of wells or medical help during illness, it is our common dharma to render such service. However, even in these instances assistance cannot be given from Harijan funds. But facilities should be provided for these persons to draw water from wells which are used by Hindu Harijans. Sangh workers should provide Christian Harijans also the services of a doctor or worker who renders free service to Hindu Harijans. It is their dharma to do so.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu, 27-12-1936_

259. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

_TILAKNAGAR,
December 27, 1936_

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your letter. I have to go to Travancore on the 10th. Kanti arrived the day before yesterday. I had a three minutes’ talk with him last night. You must reach Segaon on the 3rd.

I am in a great hurry.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 370
This speech was scheduled for 8.30. I am sorry that it is being delivered so late at 9.15. But there was no alternative. People have turned up here in such large numbers and as our exhibition has only screens of unseasoned bamboo for walls, if everyone makes a rush for it they would collapse. Hence, arrangements had to be made to protect things and the organizers took some time in doing this. They were not prepared for such an onrush. You will feel that there has been a trick in putting my speech on the programme. This was deliberate. If for no other reason, people would come to hear me and give two annas for the exhibition. While doing so if they by accident or mistake purchase some khadi and have a glimpse of rural art, they will earn some merit without any particular effort and so will I.

You must have seen that the whole of Tilaknagar is like an exhibition. The credit for this goes to Shri Nandalal Bose. It was he who decided that the plan for both the exhibition and the Congress should be the same. Only a paltry sum has been spent in doing so. I do not know of any Congress session which has been organized at such a low cost. Of course, in my opinion, some expenses have been unnecessarily incurred, but, then, is this not the first Congress to be held in a village? A fair amount had to be spent in obtaining land. But we have done something which will encourage us to hold the future sessions of the Congress in villages. You can see the crowd is increasing. There are many volunteers, but they seem to get lost in the crowd. There are so many persons who have to be fed that it has become difficult to make arrangements for them.

I am going to say nothing new today. The cult of the spinning-wheel is 18 years old. I said in 1918 that we could win swaraj through the spinning-wheel. My faith in the ability of the spinning-wheel is as bright today as when I first declared it in 1918. It has become richer for the experience and experiment of all these years.

---

1 This is taken from the Gujarati version published in Harijanbandhu. What follows is reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s report in Harijan, “A Restatement of Faith”. The report was revised by Gandhiji.
But you should know the implications of the wheel or khadi, its product. It is not enough that one wears khadi on ceremonial occasions or even wears it to the exclusion of all other cloth if he surrounds himself with videshi in everything else. Khadi means the truest swadeshi spirit, identification with the starving millions.

Let there be no mistake about my conception of swaraj. It is complete independence of alien control and complete economic independence. So at one end you have political independence, at the other the economic. It has two other ends. One of them is moral and social, the corresponding end is dharma, i.e., religion in the highest sense of the term. It includes Hinduism, Islam, Christianity, etc., but is superior to them all. You may recognize it by the name of Truth, not the honesty of expediency but the living Truth that pervades everything and will survive all destruction and all transformation. Moral and social uplift may be recognized by the term we are used to, i.e., non-violence. Let us call this the square of swaraj, which will be out of shape if any of its angles is untrue. In the language of the Congress we cannot achieve this political and economic freedom without truth and non-violence, in concrete terms without a living faith in God and hence moral and social elevation.

By political independence I do not mean an imitation of the British House of Commons, or the Soviet rule of Russia or the Fascist rule of Italy or the Nazi rule of Germany. They have systems suited to their genius. We must have ours suited to ours. What that can be is more than I can tell. I have described it as Ramarajya i.e., sovereignty of the people based on pure moral authority. The Congress constitutions of Nagpur and Bombay for which I am mainly responsible are an attempt to achieve this type of swaraj.

Then take economic independence. It is not a product of industrialization of the modern or the Western type. Indian economic independence means to me the economic uplift of every individual, male and female, by his or her own conscious effort. Under that system all men and women will have enough clothing—not the mere loin-cloth, but what we understand by the term necessary articles of clothing and enough food including milk and butter which are today denied to millions.

This brings me to socialism. Real socialism has been handed down to us by our ancestors who taught: “All land belongs to Gopal, where then is the boundary line? Man is the maker of the line and he can therefore unmake it.” Gopal literally means shepherd; it also

---

1 सभी भूमि गोपाल की कहीं अत्रक कहां?
   जाके नमो अत्रक है, तोहे अत्रक रहा ।

232 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
means God. In modern language it means the State, i.e., the people. That the land today does not belong to the people is too true. But the fault is not in the teaching. It is in us who have not lived up to it.

I have no doubt that we can make as good an approach to it as is possible for any nation, not excluding Russia, and that without violence. The most effective substitute for violent dispossession is the wheel with all its implications. Land and all property is his who will work it. Unfortunately the workers are or have been kept ignorant of this simple fact.

Let us now see how India came to be utterly impoverished. History tells us that the East India Company ruined the cotton manufacture and by all kinds of means made her dependent upon Lancashire for her cloth, the next great necessity of man. It is still the largest item of import. It thus created a huge army of partially unemployed men and women counted in millions and gave them no other employment in return. With the destruction of hand-ginning, carding, spinning and weaving to a certain extent, perished the other industries of India’s villages. Continuous unemployment has induced in the people a kind of laziness which is most depressing. Thus whilst the alien rule is undoubtedly responsible for the growing pauperism of the people, we are more responsible for it. If the middle-class people, who betrayed their trust and bartered away the economic independence of India for a mess of pottage, would now realize their error and take the message of the wheel to the villagers and induce them to shed their laziness and work at the wheel, we can ameliorate the condition of the people to a great extent. It would be a terrible thing if laziness replaces industry and despair triumphs over hope.

The parliamentary programme is in the air. It has come to stay and rightly. But it cannot bring us independence. Its function is strictly limited though quite necessary. Its success will prevent the Government from claiming that Ordinance rule or any measure restricting our progress to the goal was sanctioned by popular representatives. Hence the necessity for voters voting for the Congress candidates who dare not vote for unpopular measures without being liable to Congress discipline. The success of that programme may also bring some relief in individual cases such as the release of Shri Subhas Bose or the detenus. But that is not independence, political or economic.

Then look at it in another way. Only a limited number of men and women can become members of legislatures, say 1,500. How many from this audience can become legislators? And just now no more than 3\(\times\)1/2 crores can vote for these 1,500 members. What about the remaining 31\(\times\)1/2 crores? In our conception of swaraj they are the real masters and the 3\(\times\)1/2 crores are the former’s servants who in their turn are masters of the 1,500. Thus the latter are doubly servants, if they will be true to their trust.

But the 31\(\times\)1/2 crores have also a trust to discharge towards themselves and the nation of which they as individuals are but tiny parts. And if they remain lazy, know nothing of swaraj and how to win it, they will themselves become slaves of the 1,500 legislators. For my argument the 3\(\times\)1/2 crores of voters here belong to the same category as the 31\(\times\)1/2 crores. For if they do not become industrious and wise, they will be so many pawns in the hands of 1,500 players, it is of little consequence whether they are Congressmen or otherwise. If the voters wake up only to register their votes every three years or more and then go off to sleep, their servants will become their masters.

The only way I know to prevent such a catastrophe is for the 35 crores to be industrious and wise. This they can only be if they will take up the spinning-wheel and the other village industries. They will not take to them unintelligently. I can tell you from experience that the effort means adult education of the correct type and requires possession of patience, moral fibre and a scientific and practical knowledge of the industry the worker seeks to introduce in the village of his choice.

In such a scheme the spinning-wheel becomes its centre. If you call it the solar system, the wheel becomes the golden disc and the industries the planets revolving round it in obedience to the inviolable law of the systems. When the sun lost its illuminating power by the action of the East India Company, the planets lost their power and became invisible or almost so. The sun is being reinstated in his past status now and the planets are regaining their motion in exact proportion to the strength of the sun.

Now perhaps you will understand the meaning and the message of the charkha. I said in 1920 that if the Congress truly and successfully worked the programme laid down in 1920 including the fourfold constructive programme of khadi, communal unity, prohibition of intoxicants and removal by Hindus of untouchability, the attainment of swaraj within a year was a certainty. I am neither sorry for nor ashamed of having made that declaration. I would like to repeat that declaration before you today. Whenever the fourfold programme is achieved in its fulness, you can have swaraj for the asking. For you will then have attained the power to take it. Just think for a moment where the charkha stands today in your faith or action. Is the mutual secret assassination of Bombay a sign of communal unity? Where is total prohibition? Have the Hindus rid themselves of untouchability root and branch? One swallow does not make a summer. Travancore’s great Proclamation may be the beginning of the end, but it is not the end. If we remove the untouchability of Harijans, but treat Mussalmans or others as such, we have not removed the blot. “All land belongs to God” has a deeper meaning. Like the earth we, of it, also belong to God, and hence we must all feel like one and not erect boundary walls and issue prohibition decrees against one another.

This is the non-violent way in action. If we could fulfil this programme, there would be no need to offer civil disobedience, there would certainly be no need to do violence. Thirty five crores of people conscious of their numerical strength as one man would be ashamed of doing violence to 70,000 white men in India, no matter how capable they are of dealing destruction and administering poison gas to millions in a moment. The charkha understood intelligently can spin not only economic salvation but can also revolutionize our minds and hearts and demonstrate to us that the non-violent approach to swaraj is the safest and the easiest. Though the progress may seem slow, it will prove quickest in the long run.

Believe me if Jawaharlal is not in jail today, it is not because he is afraid of it. He is quite capable of walking into prison doors as of mounting the gallows with a smile on his lips. I do not think I have lost the power or faith in the efficacy of such suffering. But there is no issue for it today as far as I can see. But what I feel is that all that suffering can be avoided if by united faith and will we achieve the constructive programme. If we can, I promise that we won’t need to struggle with or against the British nation, but Lord Linlithgow will come to us and own that he was mistaken in his disbelief of our non-violence and truth and will undertake on behalf of his nation to abide by our decisions. Whether he does or not, I am working towards that and no other. “All belong to God”.

Harijanbandhu, 3-1-1937, and Harijan, 2-1-1937
Mahatma Gandhi said that he expected that they would be tired by this time. He himself had nothing much to say. What he had to say he had already said in the morning at the exhibition. He did not want to repeat it. He was happy to see such a big assembly there, because the responsibility of bringing the Congress to a village was his. When the Reception Committee authorities came to him he told them certain things. He told them to throw the responsibility on God and start work. There had been several criticisms against the step taken in holding the Congress in a village.

Several newspapers had criticized it and had dwelt upon the shortcomings. The Reception Committee did not have sufficient money. Nevertheless they all saw that the Congress here was the same as before. In fact the village Congress had turned out to be a bigger one than previous Congresses. He had told the Reception Committee to be prepared for the needs of one lakh of people. During the flag salutation this morning alone, according to the estimate of some, two lakhs of people were present. Allowing for differences of estimate, he was sure there must have been at least one lakh of people. Such a large influx of people had made the Reception authorities fear whether they would be able to meet their needs.

Proceeding, Gandhiji paid a compliment to the 'Bhangis' and said that there were people among those who came to Faizpur who did what they should not do in the interests of sanitation. They no doubt had a hospital, but it was not big enough for a large number of people to be treated at once. He had in fact suggested that the Reception Committee should now ask people to begin to leave. He felt, however, that they should hereafter continue to hold the Congress in a village. They should take a vow there and then not to hold the Congress in towns in future. The drawbacks that they saw there could easily be obviated. There was no doubt in his mind that it would be very easy to hold the Congress in a village. By doing so the amount they spent could be considerably economized. But according to him even that amount was big enough.

He had wanted the Faizpur session to be completed within Rs. 5,000 but that was found to be not possible. They did not get sufficient support and they had to pay a big rent for ground. His idea was that no rent should be paid for the ground on which the Congress was held. The Reception Committee were also compelled to hold the Congress in Khandesh because they could not have got the same number of volunteers elsewhere. However, in spite of the impediments, the Reception Committee had carried on their work and though there was rain, they did not lose heart. If they really wanted to go into the villages and take the message of the Congress to the villagers they should take a vow to hold all future Congresses in villages.

Mahatma Gandhi said that villagers also would have to understand what the people who wanted to get swaraj wanted them to do. The President and the Socialists were saying: “You merely sleep after paying four annas. Mere payment of four annas does not show that you are real Congressmen.”
Preparations for the Congress are not over in a day but they take a number of months. They have to go round and get things ready. This sort of connection that has been established should be continued all the year through. If you want this you must take a vow that you will hold future Congresses in villages.

The decision of the Constituent Assembly can be taken only when you have swaraj at your door. You can call a Constituent Assembly when you have got full strength. It cannot meet in Delhi but in the remotest village. Swaraj can be got only by increasing our strength on all sides. If we increase that strength, we can see swaraj coming soon. What I asked you to do in 1920 still remains unaccomplished—charkha, prohibition and removal of untouchability. If you leave these things unaccomplished, hear an old man saying: You will have lost swaraj.

The Bombay Chronicle, 28-12-1936

262. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

December 28, 1936

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

If you finish today, as I hope you will, you will perhaps let me go away tomorrow after midday.

If you have appreciated my suggestion about holding the Congress in villages hereafter, I would like you to ask the Congress to revert to the old rule of holding it in between February and March. The sufferings of the thousands in wintry weather should be avoided if possible. Parliamentarians should fit in with this arrangement. There is no reason why, if the Congress secures a majority in the legislatures, they should not have vacation as they have during Xmas, Easter, etc. I have told Sarup' that land somewhere must be secured soon and then house-to-house collections started for Kamala memorial.

Love.

BAPU

1 Vijayalakshmi Pandit
263. LETTER TO AMTUSALAAM

TILAKNAGAR,
December 28, 1936

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

After I wrote to you and before commencing silence, I had a little further talk with Kanti. His health cannot be said to be bad. You pray for him. But forget about seeing him. Whatever he had to get from you he has got.

You can come to Segaon on the 1st instead of the 3rd. Intimate the date to Mahadev so that the carriage may take you straight to Segaon from the station. If you want, you may stop at Maganwadi to see Kumarappa. You cannot go to Travancore with me. We shall think about the future at Segaon.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 371

264. MESSAGE TO RASHTRA BHASHA SAMMELAN, FAIZPUR

December 28, 1936

I am sorry that it being my day of silence I may not speak today. I have no doubt in my mind that we must have a common language for intercommunication throughout India. And I have also no doubt that that language can only be Hindi, i.e., Hindustani. It is the language that is understood by the Hindus and Muslims alike in northern India. English can never take its place.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 10995

---

1 The date is from The Bombay Chronicle, 30-12-1936, which also published the message.
265. TALK TO CONGRESS WORKERS

[December 29, 1936]

I know the ordeals through which you have had to pass. Whether I congratulate you or not is going to make not the slightest difference. You all worked not for praise or reward but for the love of it, and such people do not need any congratulation. And how dare I congratulate those who are my peers in the service of the country? But I would ask of you one thing. I would ask every one of you to make a note of your experiences, especially the difficulties you had to contend against, and pass it on to Sardar Vallabhbhai and me. You must give me a detailed account of the way in which you gathered your material, the expenses, and your own failures and successes. They should prove very useful for future guidance. Sjt. Nandalal Bose ought to teach us a little of his art. You are all pioneers in this great experiment and your genius for organization has made it a success. This is a distinct step towards the attainment of swaraj by non-violent means, and it is a great thing that Maharashtra has led the way.

Harijan, 9-1-1937

266. TALK TO CONGRESS VOLUNTEERS

[December 29, 1936]

You are all mute servants, and you have earned the praise of everyone who has come here. I have been told that you were always quick to carry out orders, never to issue them, that you did not hesitate to do what are supposed to be meanest jobs. But that is the great merit of Maharashtra which has a very great number of selfless workers who have kept before themselves not the ideal to lead but to serve. If Tilak Maharaj taught us that swaraj is our birth-right, he also taught us that selfless service is the key to win it. Selfless service may have been in existence before Tilak Maharaj came, but he it was who systematized it. He began public life by pledging himself to work on a mere pittance, and ever since Maharashtra has had a galaxy of workers who have been content to work on a pittance. They do not need Rs. 75 or \[1\] This and the two items that follow have been extracted from Mahadev Desai’s account “The Week at Faizpur-II”.

\[2\] Mahatma Gandhi left Faizpur on this date.
100 a month like, for instance, workers in Gujarat, but Rs. 15 a month suffices for them. In some cases contact with Gujarat has spoilt them, but in the majority of cases they are still unspoilt. The credit for the noble way in which you volunteers have acquitted yourselves, therefore, belongs to the well-known workers who have set a great example. They are the pride and the honour of Maharashtra. May you all follow in their footsteps.

_Harijan, 9-1-1937_

267. TALK TO CONGRESS VOLUNTEERS

_[December 29, 1936]_

Why should I congratulate you? You should thank me that I gave you this opportunity to atone for our sins. And congratulations too you will deserve when you fulfil the whole task. It is a noble profession, and one which our graduates and educated men might well turn to in order to earn their living. We have to reduce the thing to a science and to prepare treatises on sanitation. The ordinary Bhangi cannot do this. It is only educated Bhangis who can do this, and only those who will dedicate themselves to this work. That will also mean the end of untouchability which is as bad amongst the untouchables themselves as between them and the so-called touchables. Do not forget what you have learnt here. I would ask you to make it your duty wherever you are and wherever you go to be ministers of cleanliness. You did creditable work, but you might have done better. What about the villages in our vicinity like Faizpur, Khiroda and Savda? They are as filthy as ever. The Congress in future will have to be a permanently civilizing influence so far at least as sanitation is concerned, in the whole of the area where it is held. ‘Bhangi’ will then not be a name to be disliked or tolerated, but to be coveted. For ‘Bhangi’ will no more mean the doer of a dirty job, but a purifier and a disinfecter, a preventor of disease and epidemics.

_Harijan, 9-1-1937_

---

1 These were the voluntary Bhangis who had taken charge of the sanitation and scavenging department.
268. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

December 30, 1936

CHI. MAHADEV.

Send the enclosed telegram to Ramachandran. Give all the details to Raja.

Send me fruit if you have received any. Write to Anna that for the time being the visit to Travancore has been cancelled, so he should continue to send here the fruit received from Ambujam.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11514

269. LETTER TO GIJUBhai BADHEKA

December 31, 1936

BHAI GIJUBHAI,

I have your letter. It will not be published. You write “I do not like parents to impose their wishes on the children and I would not prevent the children from behaving in the way they like”. Will you call . . . children? Will the parents give their own . . . to children? If the children want to eat like gluttons or eat the things which are not worth eating or feel like jumping into the well or . . . with the guests and want or actually ask for . . .? Would you not disapprove of such activities? Ramdas still has such desires and I prevent him from satisfying them.

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

270. LETTER TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

[1936]

BHAI RAJENDRA BABU,

I had a little discussion with Khan Saheb last night. The result is

1 Omissions as in the source
2 ibid
3 ibid
4 ibid
5 As placed in the source

VOL. 70 : 21 OCTOBER, 1936 - 24 FEBRUARY, 1937 241
the enclosed resolution'. Read it. If you like it, tell Khan Saheb. I had told him that I would draft and send something. If any changes are thought necessary they should be made.

I have instructed Khan Saheb that he should not make public speeches. Please instruct Jawaharlal too accordingly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: Rajendra Prasad Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

271. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 1, 1937

BHAISHRI KASTURBHAI,

I have your letter and a copy of your Award. Gulzarilal writes that Motilal Hirabhai Mill has come to an agreement with the Labour Association. Shouldn’t we, therefore, withdraw its case from the Umpire? Please do so. If you send me the English translation of my Award, I will go through it. Meanwhile, if I get time, I myself will do the translation and send it. We will send whichever is ready earlier. If possible I will send it today, for while I am writing this it occurs to me that the translation should be sent to him without delay.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4201

272. DISCUSSION WITH KRZENSKI

[January 2, 1937]1

GANDHIE: Do you therefore say that other religions are untrue?2

KRZENSKI: If others are convinced that their religions are true they are saved.

1 Not available
2 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Krzenski was a Polish professor of philosophy.
3 From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary
4 Krzenski had said that according to him Catholicism was the only true religion.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
G. Therefore you will say that everyone would be saved even through untruth.

For you say that if a man really and sincerely believes in what is as a matter of fact untruth, he is saved. Would you not also hold, therefore, that your own way may be untrue but that you are convinced that it is true and therefore you will be saved?

K. But I have studied all religions and have found that mine is the only true religion.

G. But so have others studied other religions. What about them? Well, I go further and tell you that religion is one and it has several branches which are all equal.

K. I accept that no religion lacks divine inspiration but all have not the same truth, because all have not the same light.

G. It is an essentially untrue position to take, for a seeker after truth, that he alone is in absolute possession of truth. What is happening to the poor astronomers today? They are changing their position every day, and there are scientists who impeach even Einstein’s latest theory.

K. No. But I have examined the arguments in favour of other religions.

G. But it is an intellectual examination. You require different scales to weigh spiritual truths. Either we are all untrue—quite a logical position to take—but since truth does not come out of untruth it is better to say that we all have truth but not the complete truth. For God reveals His truth to instruments that are imperfect. Raindrops of purest distilled water become diluted or polluted as soon as they come in contact with mother earth. My submission is that your position is arrogant. But I suggest to you a better position. Accept all religions as equal, for all have the same root and the same laws of growth.

K. It is necessary to examine every religion philosophically and find out which is more harmonious, more perfect.

G. That presupposes that all religions are in watertight compartments. That is wrong. They are always growing. Let us not limit God’s function. He may reveal Himself in a thousand ways and a thousand times.
Now the professor switched on to the next question, viz., that of fighting materialism.

G. It is no use trying to fight these forces without giving up the idea of conversion, which I assure you is the deadliest poison that ever sapped the fountain of truth.

K. But I have a great respect for your religion.

G. Not enough. I had that feeling myself one day, but I found that it was not enough. Unless I accept the position that all religions are equal, and I have as much regard for other religions as I have for my own, I would not be able to live in the boiling war around me. Any make-believe combination of spiritual forces is doomed to failure if this fundamental position is not accepted. I read and get all my inspiration from the Gita. But I also read the Bible and the Koran to enrich my own religion. I incorporate all that is good in other religions.

K. That is your goodwill.

G. That is not enough.

K. But I have great respect for you.

G. Not enough. If I were to join the Catholic Church you would have greater respect for me.

K. Oh yes, if you became a Catholic you would be as great as St. Francis.

G. But not otherwise? A Hindu cannot be a St. Francis? Poor Hindu!

K. But may I take your photograph?

G. No, surely you don’t care for materialism! And it is all materialism, isn’t it?

_Harijan_, 16-1-1937
273. LETTER TO LIONEL FIELDEN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 3, 1937

DEAR FIELDEN,

I welcome the confidence you have given me. My sympathies are with you in your troubles. But you have to take them philosophically if you must stick to the post even though it be to the good of the country. Any attack on your personal character is a vile thing. But every society has its share of blackmailers. These you should laugh at. Then there are the critics. You must not expect informed criticism. Very few write for the public good; most write for money. Then there is the third class who don’t come to you as you would have them do. They don’t in spite of themselves. Those who know you would like to avail themselves of the facilities you may give them, but they know that the harm done by such co-operation will be greater than the good intended. Take Rajkumari herself. Even she could go only a certain distance and no further. You must not grieve over this but take it as inevitable in the circumstances surrounding us.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Incidents of Gandhi’s Life, p. 51

274. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

January 3, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I wish I could have gone with you to Ajanta.

Before I received your letter, I had spoken strongly to Khan Saheb and urged him to send Mehrtaj to Vakil’s school. But he was adamant. He does not want her to go to a mixed school. I spoke to Mehrtaj too. She is undoubtedly restless. But Khan Saheb is sanguine and believes that Mehrtaj will recover her usual cheerfulness.

1 Extracted from the addressee’s article “You Must Not Grieve”. The letter, he says, was in response to a sort of “last appeal” against attacks on him from the Government of India, the Congress and the Press.

2 The addressee was the Director-General of the All India Radio.
I do hope you will take care of yourself and not wear yourself out.

I had a brief talk with Sarup over the memorial\(^1\). I am sure that before anything else, at least the ground must be acquired. There need be no insistence on having the plot you described to me or another near Anand Bhawan.

Love.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

275. LETTER TO SARASWATI

January 3, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,\(^2\)

Your letter. It seems I have not to come to Tr\(^3\). Just yet at any rate. Kanti could hardly come even if I have to go there. He was with me for three days at Faizpur.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6158. Also C.W. 3431. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

276. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI

January 3, 1937

BHAISHRI KASTURBHAI,

I have your letter. There are some errors in the translation that you have sent, and considerable liberty has been taken with the second part. If a copy can be got ready, you will get it with this letter.

The Umpire should not be given the trouble of coming here in his present delicate state of health. I will, therefore, keep myself ready to go to Poona. While sending him the translation of my Award, I have asked him to give the dates convenient to him\(^4\). Which dates will suit you? I have been delaying my going to Travancore. I can now cancel that programme and go to Poona on the 7th.

\(^1\) Kamala Nehru Memorial
\(^2\) This and the subscription are in Hindi.
\(^3\) Travancore; vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 30-12-1936
\(^4\) This letter is not traceable.
You will probably get this letter on the 5th. It will be good if you send me a wire immediately you get it.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4202

277. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 3, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Enclosed are letters to Madgavkar and Kasturbhai. Send a copy of the translation to each of them. Keep one copy for me. Send one to Shankerlal. A letter' to him is also enclosed.

Agatha and Polak have not arrived till now, that is, 4 o’clock.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I read the letters; but personally I feel that we should not go.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11515

278. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTH

SEGANON
January 3, 1937

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

Mahadevbhai says you keep falling ill and have again fallen ill. Nobody met me at Faizpur. Your staying here is of no use. You must now go back to your village. You will be given your train fare. You can write to me from home. You must go today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11680

1 This is not traceable.
279. LETTER TO THE HONY. SECRETARY, ALIGARH UNIVERSITY UNION

January 4, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

In spite of our differences in post-Khilafat days, I have nothing but pleasant memories of my association with Maulana Mohamed Ali whom I miss on so many difficult occasions. You cannot celebrate the ‘Mohamed Ali Day’ better than by all of you resolving to establish heart unity with Hindus. Brotherhood which Islam teaches is a mockery if it excludes people belonging to the other faiths.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

THE HONY. SECRETARY
MUSLIM UNIVERSITY UNION
ALIGARH, U.P.

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

280. LETTER TO G.V. GURJALE

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 4, 1937

MY DEAR GURJALE,

I strongly advise you to take up some occupation and earn your bread and doing so keep one or two Harijan boys. Give up all ambitious schemes. Would you care to go to the Kodambakam Harijan Institute?

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1386

281. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

CHI. MAHADEV,

My memory is daily getting more confused. I did have a vague recollection that I had written to Duncan, but I dictated a letter to him since his letter was lying in the file. It was good that you remembered.
My memory has gone but my laxity has not. I could have saved time and paper and myself from shame if I had noted down on the letter itself while replying to Duncan. “Crooked are all the limbs of a camel; how can they be kept hidden, do what one will?”

Akte, with a straight face denied four or five times his boorish conduct. But afterwards he felt remorse, confessed everything and repented of his conduct very much. However, he stuck to what he had said regarding Buva. The witness that he had produced also boldly stuck to his statement before Buva. My suspicion against Buva is deepening. He seems to be a very strange man. The letter to Pingle and the papers to be forwarded to him which I sent with Rajkumari will throw more light. But it is enough that you know. Don’t spend time in reading the papers. You can tell all this to J.

Agatha didn’t speak at all yesterday. Polak asked one or two questions in public. The rest of the time was spent on titbits. Fortunately Polak and others came very late: at 4.30. You haven’t, therefore, missed anything. Polak’s talk was private and as such it cannot be reported. I am going to make you laugh when we meet. Dinkar’s talk means a speech. I will tell you about that also some time. Agatha has come today. But she can’t even look at me. Tomorrow she will come for a talk. You also may come and spend the day here. Durga and Bablo also may come if they want to.

BAPU

[PS.]

Send today’s mail with Rajkumari.
Write to Burbage and tell him that I have referred to his letter in Harijan. Send him a copy also.

I will break my silence late at 9.45. If, therefore, the students wish to have a talk with me, they can do so only tomorrow.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11516

282. NOTE OF INTRODUCTION TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

SEGAON, January 4, 1937

Shri Narahari Dwarkadas Parikh is one of the inmates of the Satyagraha Ashram. At present he is Registrar of the Gujarat Vidyapith and manager of the Harijan Ashram. He is also Secretary of the Goseva Sangh. He is going on a tour of Kathiawar to discuss with the States there suggestions for the preservation and improvement of the cow and her progeny. I hope that the States and their officers will listen to his suggestions and will implement them to the extent possible. That will prevent in some measure the destruction of the cattle wealth that is taking place today.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9103

283. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

January 4, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

The note¹ you asked for is enclosed. Isn’t this what you wanted? That booklet is lying on the shelf here unused.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9102

284. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

January 4, 1937

BHAI BAPA,

I have been eager to go to Travancore, but I am not enthusiastic about it any more. I am convinced that C.P.² does not want my presence there. In reply to a straight question by me, he tells me that their work there is going on very well, that they don’t need anybody’s help, but that if I still want to go I shall be welcome and should wire him when I start. The agitation in Cochin goes on. Rajaji says I must not go there. My going there at such a juncture is likely to harm the cause. All the same I have asked the Dewan to send me a telegram. If it comes, I will go. I have also written to Ramachandran to consult Rajaji. Do you wish anything more than this? I will read the book you have sent. I will try to find Rajaji’s article.

Meanwhile the talks I am conducting are going on. If we have the spirit in us, everything will be well. If we have lost our spirit, then it is better for us to be destroyed. I console myself thus and go on doing my duty to the best of my ability without worrying about the result.

Vandemataram from

BAPU

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² C. P. Ramaswamy Iyer, Dewan of Travancore
[PS.]
While I write this Amtul Salaam is sewing, seated beside me.
From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1174.

285. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI

January 4, 1937

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

If your health does not permit you to go, you may do so when it improves.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11689

286. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[January 6, 1937]¹

CHI. MAHADEV.

Amtul Salaam is going there. She is leaving with us and going to Bombay. These days I am inundated with news about people’s impurity. Send a telegram to Madgavkar as follows:

“Thanks. Reaching Tomorrow.”² Mention the time also. Send a similar one to Premililabehn. Then one to Dewan, Morvi: “Hear Maharaja seriously ill. Hope he is recovering—Gandhi.”³

More when we meet.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11561

¹ Gandhiji reached Poona on January 7 to meet G.D. Madgavkar, the Umpire in the Ahmedabad Mills wage dispute.
² The drafts of the telegrams are in English.
³ Ibid
287. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

PARNAKUTI, POONA,
January 8, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

You are straining every nerve to deserve the title. What a scene on Thursday over a most trifling thing! And that too after assuring me that you were indifferent to such things. However, let the past be buried.

This is merely to inform you that Ramachandran wires you and Khan Saheb could go with me. I do not want to bank on that wire. I expect confirmation from C.P.

I hope you had a good journey and that you have no trouble. Do please observe the dietetic rules.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Please remember me to Mrs. Swaminathan.

SHRI RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
C/O SHRI AMMU SWAMINATHAN
GILCHRIST GARDENS
CHETPUT
MADRAS

From the original: C.W. 3762. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6918

288. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

January 8, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM,¹

I am reaching Madras from Poona on Monday evening. I am supposed to drive straight to Mambalam. Of course you and Janammal will be there. Hope Father is well and you are at peace with yourself.

¹ The superscription and subscription are in Hindi.
Love.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

289. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS

January 8, 1937

BHAISHRI PURUSHOTTAM

You may continue to write in English by all means, but permit me to write in Gujarati. Teach your assistant to read my handwriting. I don’t want you to waste your time in doing so. Just as you are conscious of the value of my time, I am conscious of that of yours. I also know that my handwriting is not easy to read.

How can I disregard your request? But you know that I don’t accept any responsibility in a casual manner. I agree to be the president of a meeting only when I have control over its proceedings and have faith in it. Perhaps you do not know how much I contributed to the formation of the Association’ and to carrying on through it the agitation against the indenture system. Probably Natarajan is acquainted with the history of it. Vaze was not there at that time.

I am aware of the great injustice about to be done to the Zanzibar Indians. But that injustice cannot be prevented by one meeting or by my presiding over it. Before that I myself should do something. I should enter into correspondence with the Government, study the Binder Report, see a representative of Zanzibar if there is any here. Our people there are divided just as they are here and are selfish and lethargic. If we cannot get them to do any work, then also we will not succeed. How can all this be done? Where am I to find the necessary time? “Better one’s own duty, bereft of merit, than another’s well-performed; better death in the discharge of one’s duty, another’s duty is fraught with danger.” For me at present the work about overseas Indians is another’s duty. Why do you involve me in it? Nothing will be achieved by my becoming the president. Please don’t dismiss my argument as advanced by an impractical man. If you find it convincing I ask you to spare me if you can. Then I shall not be guilty of disregarding your request.

1 British Indian Association of the Transvaal.
2 Bhagavad Gita, III. 35

If, however, you cannot swallow my argument, send me the Binder Report and explain to me whatever you feel it is necessary to explain. If there is anybody who knows all the facts send him to explain them to me. If you can spare the time and wish to come, you may do so. I have to leave this place for Travancore on the 10th evening. You will get this tomorrow, that is, Saturday. If you or your representative can come the same day, I can give one hour in the evening. Perhaps even on Sunday I may be able to give one hour. It depends on Sir Govindrao how much time I can spare on Sunday.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

[From Gujarati]
Sir Purushottamdas Thakurdas Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

290. RIGHT TO LIVE

A correspondent from Greenville, S.C., U.S.A., writes enclosing a clipping from an American newspaper:¹

The clipping contains an account of my illness of last year and ends.

The recently powerful spokesman, Gandhi, flying in the face of all modern scientific knowledge and ignoring the tremendous number of human beings slain by such small insects, is reported as having stated in The Times of India, June 1935: “We have no right to take the lives of mosquitoes, flies, lice, rats or fleas. They have as much right to live as we.”

I am afraid my correspondent cannot have the pleasure of espousing my cause in the manner he proposes. For I did make the statement attributed to me, though I qualified it by saying that in the present state of modern ignorance, and especially my own ignorance, I did countenance campaigns of killing rats, fleas, mosquitoes and the like. But I do believe that all God’s creatures have the right to live as much as we have. Instead of prescribing the killing of the so-called ¹ The letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent had expressed his disbelief in the newspaper report of Gandhiji’s views concerning killing of flies and mosquitoes and said if Gandhiji would disavow “such nonsense” he would have the disavowal placed in all the newspapers of America.

injurious fellow-creatures of ours as a duty, if men of knowledge had devoted their gift to discovering ways of dealing with them otherwise than by killing them, we would be living in a world befitting our status as men—animals endowed with reason and the power of choosing between good and evil, right and wrong, violence and non-violence, truth and untruth. I prefer to be called a coward or a fool or worse, to denying for the sake of being considered a wise man what I believe to be a fundamental truth of life. Marvellous as the progress of physical sciences undoubtedly is, it only humbles us and enables us to know that we know hardly anything of the mysteries of Nature. In the spiritual realm, we make little or no progress. The physical has overwhelmed the spiritual in us. We hardly like to own the latter’s existence. And yet the question of killing and non-killing, of man’s relation to his human fellow creatures, belongs to the spiritual realm. Its proper solution will surely revolutionize our thoughts, speech and action. Both my intellect and heart refuse to believe that the so-called noxious life has been created for destruction by man. God is good and wise. A good and wise God cannot be so bad and so unwise as to create to no purpose. It is more conducive to reason to own our ignorance and assume that every form of life has a useful purpose which we must patiently strive to discover. I verily believe that man’s habit of killing man on the slightest pretext has darkened his reason and he gives himself liberties with other life which he would shudder to take if he really believed that God is a God of Love and Mercy. Anyway, though for fear of death I may kill tigers, snakes, fleas, mosquitoes and the like, I ever pray for illumination that will shed all fear of death and, thus refusing to take life know the better way for “Taught by the Power that pities me

I learn to pity them.”

_Harijan, 9-1-1937_

291. HOW TO UTILIZE ELECTIONS

It was stated in Faizpur during the Congress Week that there are nearly 3 1/2 crores of voters who will vote for candidates for the provincial legislatures. Harijan workers can utilize the occasion of the elections for educating the voters on the question of untouchability

---

1 This should be “sub-human”; _vide_ “Notes” sub-title “An Important Correction”, 16-1-1937 and of committing the candidates definitely to one side or the other. They can be asked for instance these questions:

Are you in favour of complete removal of untouchability? Are you in favour of removing the legal bar on the grounds of custom and legislation permitting temple authorities to open temples to Harijans where savarna Hindu opinion is ripe for the step? Are you in favour of enforcing the common law in the matter of Harijans freely using public wells, schools, and the like?

A correspondent writes to say that there is a conspiracy of silence among candidates on this question. If there is, it can be broken by energetic Harijan workers simply putting at voters’ meetings questions like those I have suggested. Enlightened voters interested in the purification of Hinduism can do a great deal to educate and mould public opinion in this matter. It is a pity that the question of untouchability can at all become an issue between rival candidates or between candidates and electors. But pity or no pity, we have to face the facts as they are today.

_Harijan_, 9-1-1937

292. ‘A HUMBLES VILLAGER OF BIRBHUM’

‘A Humble Villager of Birbhum’ living in Santiniketan sends me through Deenabandhu Andrews the following questions:

1. What is an ideal Indian village in your esteemed opinion and how far is it practicable to reconstruct a village on the basis of an ‘Ideal Village’ in the present social and political situation of India?
2. Which of the village problems should a worker try to solve first of all and how should he proceed?
3. What should be the special theme of village exhibitions and museums in a miniature form? How should such exhibitions be best utilized for the reconstruction of villages?

1. An ideal Indian village will be so constructed as to lend itself to perfect sanitation. It will have cottages with sufficient light and ventilation built of a material obtainable within a radius of five miles of it. The cottages will have courtyards enabling householders to plant vegetables for domestic use and to house their cattle. The village lanes and streets will be free of all avoidable dust. It will have wells according to its needs and accessible to all. It will have houses of worship for all; also a common meeting place, a village common for grazing its cattle, a co-operative dairy, primary and secondary schools in which industrial education will be the central fact, and it will have panchayats for settling disputes. It will produce its own grains, vegetables and fruit, and its own khadi. This is roughly my idea of a model village. In the present circumstances its cottages will remain what they are with slight improvements. Given a good zamindar, where there is one, or co-operation among the people, almost the whole of the programme other than model cottages can be worked out at an expenditure within the means of the villagers including the zamindar or zamindars, without Government assistance. With that assistance there is no limit to the possibility of village reconstruction. But my task just now is to discover what the villagers can do to help themselves if they have mutual co-operation and contribute voluntary labour for the common good. I am convinced that they can, under intelligent guidance, double the village income as distinguished from individual income. There are in our villages inexhaustible resources not for commercial purposes in every case but certainly for local purposes in almost every case. The greatest tragedy is the hopeless unwillingness of the villagers to better their lot.

2. The very first problem the village worker will solve is its sanitation. It is the most neglected of all the problems that baffle workers and that undermine physical well-being and breed disease. If the worker became a voluntary Bhangi, he would begin by collecting night-soil and turning it into manure and sweeping village streets. He will tell people how and where they should perform daily functions and speak to them on the value of sanitation and the great injury caused by the neglect. The worker will continue to do the work whether the villagers listen to him or no.

3. The spinning-wheel should be the central theme of all such village exhibitions and the industries suited to the particular locality should revolve round it. An exhibition thus arranged would naturally become an object-lesson for the villagers and an educational treat when it is accompanied by demonstrations, lectures and leaflets.

Harijan, 9-1-1937
THE COW AND THE HARIJAN

In my conversations with Dr. Mott, at one stage of it I said, “Would you preach the Gospel to a cow? Well, some of the untouchables are worse than cows in understanding. I mean they no more distinguish between the relative merits of Islam and Hinduism and Christianity than a cow.” Some Missionary friends have taken exception to the analogy. I have no remorse about the propriety of the analogy. There could be no offence meant to Harijans because the cow is a sacred animal. I worship her as I worship my mother. Both are givers of milk. And so far as understanding is concerned I do maintain that there are, be it said to the discredit of superior-class Hindus, thousands of Harijans who can no more understand the merits and demerits of different religions than a cow. That after a long course of training Harijans can have their intelligence developed in a manner a cow’s cannot, is irrelevant to the present discussion.

A STUDENT’S DIFFICULTY

A student asks:

What should a matriculate or an undergraduate who is unfortunately father of two or three children do in order to procure a living wage, and what should he do when he is forced to marry against his will and before even the age of twenty-five?

The simplest answer that occurs to me is that a student who does not know how to support his wife and children or who marries against his will has studied to no purpose. But that is past history for him. The perplexed student deserves a helpful answer. He does not say what is his requirement. If he does not pitch it high because he is a matriculate and will put himself on a level with the ordinary labourer, he should have no difficulty in earning a livelihood. His intelligence should help his hands and feet and enable him to do better than the labourer who has not had the opportunity of developing his intelligence. This is not to say that a labourer who has never learnt English is devoid of intelligence. Unfortunately labour has never been helped to develop the mind, and those who pass through schools do have their minds opened even though under a handicap not to be found in any other part of the world. Even this mental equipment is counter-balanced by false notions of dignity inculcated during school and college days. And so students think that they can earn their living only at the desk. The inquirer has therefore to realize the dignity of labour and seek the maintenance of himself and his family in that field.

\(^1\) Vide “Discussion with John R. Mott”, 13/14-11-1936

And there is no reason why his wife should not add to the family income by utilizing her spare hours. Similarly if the children are at all able to do any work, they too should be inspanned for productive work. The utterly false idea that intelligence can be developed only through book-reading should give place to the truth that the quickest development of the mind can be achieved by artisan’s work being learnt in a scientific manner. True development of the mind commences immediately the apprentice is taught at every step why a particular manipulation of the hand or a tool is required. The problem of the unemployment of students can be solved without difficulty if they will rank themselves among the common labourers.

As for marriage against one’s will, all I can say is that students should develop sufficient strength of purpose to resist any marriage that is sought to be forced on them. Students should learn the art of standing alone and resisting in every legitimate manner any attempt to force them to do anything against their will much more so to marry against their will.

_Harijan, 9-1-1937_

294. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

POONA,

_January 9, 1937_

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Yesterday I received another wire from R.¹ saying you and K.² should not accompany me. But I do still expect to hear directly from C.P. saying “yes”. However, we must be ready for either event.

The weather here is good—but not so bracing as at Segaon.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3763. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6919

¹ Ramachandran; _vide_ “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 8-1-1937

² Khan Saheb; _vide_ “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 8-1-1937
295. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

January 9, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I must rest the right hand. No time left here for much writing. I hope you are now quite well and happy in mind. There was a basket of fruit lying in Maganwadi when I reached there. You must have received it. Anyway you will see to it that you, Balkrishna and others who need fruit have a regular supply.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Has Kanu taken up spinning?

From the original: C.W. 6372. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9838.

296. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

January 9, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

This time you will have to get a certificate from Mirabehn. Supervise the scavenging work. Take Mirabehn with you. Wash her clothes, etc., when necessary.

I am not writing a separate letter to Balwantsinha.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8590. Also C.W. 7007. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

297. LETTER TO JAI SINGH

[Before January 10, 1937]¹

If Sikhism is a part of Hindu culture, as I believe it is, what is the meaning of change of faith and name? If Sikhism is not part and product of Hinduism you are simply creating a conflict among the Harijans without achieving any noble purpose.

The Bombay Chronicle, 12-1-1937

¹ The report in the source is dated January 10.
298. INTERVIEW TO PROF. MAYS

[Before January 10, 1937]¹

GANDHIJI: Passive resistance is a misnomer for non-violent resistance. It is much more active than violent resistance. It is direct, ceaseless, but three-fourths invisible and only one-fourth visible. In its visibility it seems to be ineffective, e.g., the spinning-wheel which I have called the symbol of non-violence. In its visibility it appears ineffective, but it is really intensely active and most effective in ultimate result. This knowledge enables me to detect flaws in the way in which the votaries of non-violence are doing their spinning. I ask for more vigilance and more untiredness. Non-violence is an intensely active force when properly understood and used. A violent man’s activity is most visible while it lasts. But it is always transitory. What can be more visible than the Abyssinians done to death by Italians? There it was lesser violence pitted against much greater. But if the Abyssinians had retired from the field and allowed themselves to be slaughtered, their seeming inactivity would have been much more effective though not for the moment visible. Hitler and Mussolini on the one hand and Stalin on the other are able to show the immediate effectiveness of violence. But it will be as transitory as that of Jhenghis’s slaughter. But the effects of Buddha’s non-violent action persist and are likely to grow with age. And the more it is practised, the more effective and inexhaustible it becomes, and ultimately the whole world stands agape and exclaims, ‘a miracle has happened’. All miracles are due to the silent and effective working of invisible forces. Non-violence is the most invisible and the most effective.

PROF. MAYS: I have no doubt in my mind about the superiority of non-violence but the thing that bothers me is about its exercise on a large scale, the difficulty of so disciplining the mass mind on the point of love. It is easier to discipline individuals. What should be the strategy when they break out? Do we retreat or do we go on?

GANDHIJI: I have had that experience in the course of our movement here. People do not gain the training by preaching. Non-

¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “A Discourse on Non-violence”. Prof. Mays was an American Negro who had come to India along with Dr. Tobias to attend the World’s Meeting of the Committees of Y.M.C.A.

² According to Mahadev Desai, this interview took place before the meeting with Dr. Tobias; vide “Interview to Dr. Tobias”, 10-1-1937 violence cannot be preached. It has to be practised. The practice of violence can be taught to people by outward symbols. You shoot at boards, then at targets, then at beasts. Then you are passed as an expert in the art of destruction. The non-violent man has no outward weapon and, therefore, not only his speech but his action also seems ineffective. I may say all kinds of sweet words to you without meaning them. On the other hand I may have real love in me and yet my outward expression may be forbidding. Then outwardly my action in both cases may be the same and yet the effect may be different. For the effect of our action is often more potent when it is not patently known. Thus the unconscious effect you are making on me I may never know. It is, nevertheless, infinitely greater than the conscious effect. In violence there is nothing invisible. Non-violence, on the other hand, is three-fourths invisible, so the effect is in the inverse ratio to its invisibility. Non-violence, when it becomes active, travels with extraordinary velocity, and then it becomes a miracle. So the mass mind is affected first unconsciously, then consciously. When it becomes consciously affected there is demonstrable victory. In my own experience, when people seemed to be weakening there was no consciousness of defeat in me. Thus I was fuller of hope in the efficacy of non-violence after the renunciation of Civil Disobedience in 1922, and today I continue to be in the same hopeful mood. It is not a mere emotional thing. Supposing I saw no signs of dawn coming I should not lose faith. Everything has to come in its proper time.

I have discussions here with my co-workers about the scavenging work we are doing. ‘Why can’t we do it after swaraj? they say. ‘We may do it better after swaraj’. I say to them, ‘No. The reform has to come today, it must not wait for swaraj; in fact the right type of swaraj will come only out of such work.’ Now I cannot show you, as perhaps I cannot show some of my co-workers, the connection between swaraj and scavenging. If I have to win swaraj non-violently I must discipline my people. The maimed and the blind and the leprous cannot join the army of violence. There is also an age-limit for serving in the army. For a non-violent struggle there is no age-limit; the blind and the maimed and the bed-ridden may serve, and not only men but women also. When the spirit of non-violence pervades the people and actually begins to work, its effect is visible to all.

But now comes your poser. There are people, you say, who do not believe in non-violence as you do. Are you to sit quiet? The friends ask: ‘If not now, when will you act?’ I say in reply: “I may not succeed in my lifetime, but my faith that victory can only come through non-violence is stronger than ever. When I spoke on the cult of the spinning-wheel at Faizpur, a newspaper correspondent imputed astuteness to me. Nothing could be further from my mind. When I came to Segaon I was told the people might not co-operate and might even boycott me. I said: ‘That may be. But this is the way non-violence works. If I go to a village which is still farther off, the experiment may work better. This thing has come in my search after the technique of non-violence. And each day that passes makes my faith brighter. I have come here to bring that faith to fruition and to die in the process if that is God’s will. Non-violence to be worth anything has to work in the face of hostile forces. But there may be action in inaction. And action may be worse than inaction.

PROF. MAYS: Is it ever possible to administer violence in a spirit of love?

G. No. Never. I shall give you an illustration from my own experiment. A calf was lame and had developed terrible sores; he could not eat and breathed with difficulty. After three days’ argument with myself and my co-workers I put an end to its life.¹ Now that action was non-violent because it was wholly unselfish, inasmuch as the sole purpose was to achieve the calf’s relief from pain. Some people have called this an act of violence. I have called it a surgical operation. I should do exactly the same thing with my child, if he were in the same predicament. My point is that non-violence as the supreme law of our being ceases to be such the moment you talk of exceptions.

PROF. MAYS: How is a minority to act against an overwhelming majority?

G. I would say that a minority can do much more in the way of non-violence then a majority. I had an English friend called Symonds. He used to say: ‘I am with you so long as you are in a minority. After you are in a majority we are quits.’ I had less diffidence in handling my minority in South Africa than I had here in handling a majority. But it would be wholly wrong therefore to say that non-violence is a weapon of the weak. The use of non-violence requires greater bravery than that of violence. When Daniel defied the laws of the Meads and Persians, his action was non-violent.

¹ For a fuller account of the episode, vide “The Fiery Ordeal”, 4-10-1928
PROF. MAYS: Should the thought of consequences that might accrue to the enemy as a result of your non-violence at all constrain you?

G. Certainly. You may have to suspend your movement as I did in South Africa when the Government was faced with the revolt of European labour. The latter asked me to make common cause with them. I said ‘no’.

PROF. MAYS: And non-violence will never rebound on you, whereas violence will be self-destructed?

G. Yes. Violence must beget violence. But let me tell you that here too my argument has been countered by a great man who said: ‘Look at the history on non-violence. Jesus died on the Cross, but his followers shed blood.’ This proves nothing. We have no data before us to pass judgement. We do not know the whole of the life of Jesus. The followers perhaps had not imbibed fully the message of non-violence. But I must warn you against carrying the impression with you that mine is the final word on non-violence. I know my own limitations. I am but a humble seeker after truth. And all I claim is that every experiment of mine has deepened my faith in non-violence as the greatest force at the disposal of mankind. Its use is not restricted to individuals merely but it can be practised on a mass scale.

_Harijan_, 20-3-1937

299. THE NEXT CONGRESS SESSION

Perhaps at the moment it is too early and not proper to write anything about the next Congress session. This, however, holds good only if one wishes to write about political matters; that is because politics is constantly changing. But I wish to write about the manner in which a rural session of the Congress should be held. That is a subject which may be discussed at any time, and preparations should begin from today.

There is no doubt that the success of the Faizpur Congress has surpassed everyone’s expectations. Despite this, the unavoidable drawbacks from which it suffered should and can be remedied in the future. No one can be held responsible for some of the things which were found at Faizpur. No one had expected people would come in such large numbers. At no other session of the Congress were volunteers made to work as hard as at this session. Hence, it may be said that at Faizpur, the ship of the Congress had to be steered through an uncharted sea. I give below a few improvements which I feel are necessary as a result of my experiences at Faizpur.
1. It does not matter how small the village is. It should not be more than seven miles from the nearest railway station.

2. The necessary site should be obtained free.

3. The village must co-operate.

4. The soil should not be black as at Faizpur, but sandy, capable of soaking up water quickly.

5. Water should be provided in sufficient quantity and at various places.

6. There should be an adequate number of latrines and urinals at various convenient spots.

7. At various places, posters in Gujarati, Hindi, Tamil, Telugu, Urdu and other languages, written in a bold hand, should be put up, saying: “Please use for latrines and urinals only the places provided”. The roads should bear names or numbers, preferably the latter. Bhangi volunteers should be in attendance on all the roads. They should have a map of the Congress Nagar and should constantly guide the visitors. They should also have brooms, buckets and small shovels. If anyone urinates or defecates outside the urinals or latrines these volunteers should warn him, and remove the filth immediately and dispose of it. A Bhangi should be in attendance at each urinal and latrine, whose duty should be to clean these up after they have been used. Buckets and shovels made of tin may serve the purpose. These are inexpensive and may be used even later. If shovels are shaped like winnows they would be cheap and easy to use.

8. There must be a good and well-built hospital attached to the Congress Nagar. It is necessary that it should have walls of unbaked bricks and a tiled roof. It should accommodate at least twenty beds with a separate wing for women.

9. There should not be one but several kitchens. Things should become much easier if selected cooks are engaged. It would facilitate matters to have blocks which would accommodate a hundred persons each for meals. There should be separate charges for those who have their meals in the blocks and those who prefer to carry their meals away. The menu should be simple and such as to suit all the provinces. It is necessary to abandon the temptation to serve meals to a large number of people in one place. Everyone must have his meal served in his own utensils. It is never possible to make arrangements for serving thousands of people at any one place at the same time.
10. At Faizpur, it was practically impossible to procure cow’s milk and cow’s ghee. I think that even from the economic point of view, at Congress gatherings, if not elsewhere, we must make it a rule to use only cow’s milk. It is no simple matter to provide cow’s milk to thousands of persons. This task can be accomplished if preparations are taken in hand right from today.

11. Flour, rice, etc., must be ground and pounded in the Congress Nagar itself.

12. The Faizpur exhibition, to my mind, was the best held so far. Its success was clearly evident and yet there is scope for improvement.

These are the principal points which occur to me at the moment. Two changes seem to be necessary. Under the new constitution, the Working Committee and the A.I.C.C. meet before the Congress session. Taking advantage of this, other meetings are also held before the opening session of the Congress. This is not proper. It puts an unnecessary burden on the Reception Committee and lengthens the period of the session from three to ten days. Either all meetings before the Congress session should be stopped or preparations should be made beforehand for a rush of people lasting ten days.

And if the Congress is to meet in a village only, it should not meet in December. There is very little substance in the plea that the Congress session must be held towards the end of December because railway fare concessions are available during Christmas week and the Assembly has a holiday. There is a much stronger case for holding the Congress session after the winter is over, for it suits the convenience of the lakhs of people who attend it. I feel that the inconvenience suffered by people in winter, farmers being busy with the harvest in December and the difficulty of getting a large area of open ground on account of the standing crops are three difficulties which cancel out the two advantages. I believe that the number of persons who came to Faizpur on foot from surrounding areas far exceeded the number who spent money on railway fare to come there. Religious fairs such as Kumbh, Magh, etc., are not regulated by such considerations as railway fare concessions. Regardless of whether these are available or not, these fairs are held at the appointed time and are attended by millions. The Congress session should not be a lesser attraction than these.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 10-1-1937
300. VAGUE LANGUAGE

A gentleman who is a careful reader of Harijanbandhu likes my article “Hindu Code of Conduct”1 in its issue of December 27, but he is not satisfied with clause 14 therein. That clause is as follows:

We certainly would not like anyone to abuse us or beat us or misbehave with our mother or sisters. Hence, we should not abuse anyone, not even our wives and children.

Many of the clauses of this article are interrelated. Clause 14 has a bearing on clauses 15, 16 and 17. If read along with these clauses the implication of clause 14 becomes clear. Despite this, I must admit that one is likely to get confused if one reads clause 14 by itself. I regard its language as vague and inelegant. On rereading it I find that its clarity of meaning is lost because I have overburdened it. Clauses 15, 16 and 17 have been written to clarify what is contained in clause 14. In order to relieve the burden on clause 14 and for the sake of clarity of thought and language, I write clauses 14, 15 and 17 as follows. There is no scope for improvement in clause 16.

14. If anyone abused us or beat us, we would not like it. Why then should we abuse others or beat them?

15. We cannot abuse our wives and children if we do not abuse others. Many men regard their wives and children as their property. This is a grave error. In our religion, the wife has been regarded as the equal of the husband. It is for this reason that she is known as ardhangini and also as sahadharmini. She is addressed as devi.2 Parents are the protectors of the children. Hence they should be gentle, tolerant, and patient towards them also.

17. We shall not tolerate anyone misbehaving with our wife or mother or sister. How then can we misbehave with anyone else’s wife? To cast a lustful glance at a woman, to pass obscene remarks about her, to touch her with wicked intention—all this would be regarded as misconduct. All women except one’s wife are one’s mothers and sisters.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 10-1-1937

---

1 Vide “Hindu Code of Conduct”, 27-12-1936

2 Goddess
301. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

POONA,
January 10, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

Your two letters came together. They were enough to make me weep. How can I console you? If you cannot have your peace there you can certainly go to Varoda or Wardha and pass the few days usefully. I have no other Manager to appoint. I have to be satisfied with Munnalal so long as I consider him to be a clean man. The noise is there in my absence but no more than is observable in an Indian home. You can remedy these things, if you can be calm within and treat these noises as also abuses to be remedied. We do not become impatient over ravings of maniacs. For we treat them as diseases to be tolerated till they are remedied. Why can’t you treat the aberrations of the Segaon home in exactly the same light?

I am, I hope, not leaving Segaon again quite so soon. Belgaum is there. But that is in April.

I hope your foot is all right. If not you should go to Wardha and show it to the C.S. The post should be sent for daily.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6371. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9837

302. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

January 10, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Hakimji is arriving there today. His remedies are not inhuman, but are such as the poor can afford and tolerate. I would advise you to consult him for Durga. We may not carry out his treatment if we don’t want to. The remedies prescribed by Mehta and Gaurishankar are royal. This is a hakim for the poor and a godly man. I am training him and don’t intend to let him go away soon.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11517
303. INTERVIEW TO DR. TOBIAS

[January 10, 1937]

DR. TOBIAS: Your doctrine of non-violence has profoundly influenced my life. Do you believe in it as strongly as ever?

GANDHIJI: I do indeed. My faith in it is growing.

Negroes in U.S.A. —12 million—are struggling to obtain such fundamental rights as freedom from mob violence, unrestricted use of the ballot, freedom from segregation, etc. Have you, out of your struggle in India, a word of advice and encouragement to give us?

I had to contend against some such thing, though on a much smaller scale, in South Africa. The difficulties are not yet over. All I can say is that there is no other way than the way of non-violence, a way, however, not of the weak and ignorant but of the strong and wise.

Travancore indicates that your full identification with the untouchables is bearing fruit. Do you think Travancore’s example will be followed by other States in the near future?

I shall be surprised if it is not.

What word shall I give my Negro brethren as to the outlook for the future?

With right which is on their side and the choice of non-violence as their only weapon, if they will make it such, a bright future is assured.

Harijan, 20-3-1937

304. LETTER TO MUTHULAKSHMI REDDY

January 11, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

I am writing this in a moving train. I am taking no part or interest in the elections. But I agree with you that women should be treated on a par with men. I go further, where they are equal in ability

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “A Discourse on Non-violence”. Dr. Tobias, an American Negro, had come to India to attend the World’s Meeting of the Committees of the Y.M.C.A. As the interview took place on a silence day, Gandhiji gave written answers.

2 The date is from the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary.

3 The reference is to the Proclamation throwing open all State temples to Harijans.

4 The first general elections to the Provincial Assemblies under the Government of India Act, 1935, were scheduled for February 1937. they should be preferred. I do not know what has happened in your case but you are in safe hands. Both Pandit Jawaharlal and Sardar Patel would not be party to favouritism. Unconscious injustice is sometimes inevitable in human institutions.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

305. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

ON WAY TO MADRAS,
January 11, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

Since I am writing to Gokulbhai,¹ I felt like writing to you also. Prabhavati says that to save stamps and for other reasons you will practically stop writing to me now. What is this? You seem to have become careless as ever about your health. I think you are making a great mistake in doing this. Even if you make great progress in your study but ruin your health in the process, what profit will you derive from such study?

Do continue to write to me regularly and in detail. I will expect a letter from you in Trivandrum. I may have to spend nine days in Travancore.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7311. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

306. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS

ON WAY TO MADRAS,
January 11, 1937

BHAISHRI PURUSHOTTAMDAS,

I had a talk with Vaze and read the papers. He agreed that I should not involve myself in this business and has undertaken to plead with you and to leave me out. I hope that he has succeeded. To prepare myself for this task, I should read many other papers and do some other preparatory work too. How can I manage it? Where is the time? If I take up that task I must change the direction of my activities

¹ This letter to Gokulbhai is not traceable.
altogether. According to my nature I cannot approach such work in any other manner. I hope you will understand this and willingly leave me out of it. I would really like to help in this work but I am completely helpless.¹

I am writing this in a moving train.

Vandematram from

MOHANDAS

[From Gujarati]

Sir Purushottamdas Thakurdas Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

307. LETTER TO INDU N. PAREKH

ON WAY TO TRIVANDRUM,
January 11, 1937

CHI. INDU,

I remember only your last letter. I can reply to it only now, in a moving train. Of course you have my blessings on your birthday. I do see your restlessness. Everything will be all right if you do not fall into bad company and if you stick to your study. Do not conceal your thoughts and desires and do nothing secretly. Your mind will then automatically become steady.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6255

308. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

ON THE TRAIN,
January 12, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I am writing this on the train taking me to Trivandrum. I have been brooding over your two letters. I was inclined to send you a wire yesterday and also today. But I restrained myself. I hope to hear from you on reaching Travancore. I hope your foot is all right and that so is your mental condition. I do not want to argue with you. I therefore simply pray for you. How I wish God will give you peace and joy not to be affected by any event however untoward it may appear to be. Prabhavati joined me at Poona and Rajkumari at Madras.

¹ Vide also “Letter to Purushottamdas Thakurdas”, 8-1-1937

Love.

BAPU

From the Original: C.W. 6373. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9839

309. SPEECH AT CIVIC RECEPTION, TRIVANDRUM

January 12, 1937

As you have in your address very properly said, this is not my first visit to Travancore or its capital Trivandrum. Every time I have come to Travancore, I have come almost as a crusader trying to wean savarna Hindus from the curse of untouchability. I have had many occasions to address savarna Hindus and avarna Hindus, miscalled untouchables or depressed classes, also on this subject. This time, however, I have come as a humble pilgrim to tender my congratulations to H.H. the Maharaja and his good mother Her Highness the Maharani and his able Dewan. With the co-operation of this trinity, if I might so describe the distinguished persons, the great Proclamation has been a settled fact and has now been working with success. The temples have been sealed to me so far, perhaps voluntarily, and I do not know that if I had made the attempt to enter them I should not have been thrown out of them. But even if I had the liberty, having made common cause with the Harijans I could not avail myself of it. But now that the doors have been flung open to the Harijans also, I shall for the first time take the opportunity of entering your beautiful temple. I take your address as a token of your goodwill. I shall have several occasions to speak on the great act of the Maharaja, and I shall therefore refrain from making anything like a speech here.

This Proclamation throws a tremendous responsibility on the people of Travancore. Rajas and Maharajas can make good laws, but they cannot make the people give proper effect to them. Even tyrants cannot control the hearts of those over whom they hold sway. It all depends on your hearts to give proper effect to the Proclamation. I would ask you to go to the temples not as curiosity-mongers, but in a proper prayerful spirit. If savarnas go there with mental reservations, the Proclamation will not be properly carried out. Let the 1 A mammoth meeting of the citizens welcomed Gandhiji at the Trivandrum station, where the City Municipality presented him with an address of welcome.

Proclamation proclaim the fact that henceforth in Travancore there is no distinction between savarnas and avarnas, touchables and untouchables. Having said this much, I do not propose to tax your patience any more. I do hope that your good wishes will fit me for my pilgrimage through Travancore. I thank you.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 144-6.

310. SPEECH AT DAKSHINA BHARAT HINDI PRACHAR SABHA, TRIVANDRUM

January 13, 1937

I am glad to have been asked to distribute the certificates and prizes to those who have passed the examination. I do not know whether you will follow even my simple Hindi. I see that some of those who have received their certificates today do not follow it. But that is nothing to be ashamed of. Not living in the midst of a Hindi-speaking public, it is quite natural that you should find it difficult to follow spoken Hindi. What is gratifying is that you are taking some pains over learning Hindi in this Southernmost part of India. But please remember that your objective is not to win certificates but to obtain a working knowledge of Hindi. A certificate can but stimulate you to further effort, in order that you may be induced to put up a serious endeavour for an ever-increasing knowledge of Hindi. The first thing that you have to bear in mind is that you belong to India, that India is as much your motherland as of those whose mother tongue is Hindi. You have therefore to think of your country not as extending up to a part of the Arabian sea in the west and to the Ghats on the east but to the Hindukush in the north, Karachi in the west and Assam in the east. If you went to those remote parts of your country where other languages are spoken, what would you speak there but Hindi? You will not find many people capable of understanding English. The temple priest in the great Ananthapadmanabha temple here was speaking perfect Hindi this morning when I was shown over by him through the precincts of that vast temple. His Hindi was certainly more flawless than mine and he made me forget for a moment that I was in Travancore. The uppermost feeling in my mind is not that I am a Gujarati but that I belong to the whole of India.
I would appeal to H.H. the Maharaja and Her Highness the Maharani to promote the development of Hindi studies in Travancore and encourage those who are going in for the study of Hindi. Let the objective of Travancore be to make every literate man and woman here Hindi-knowing.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 147-8

311. SPEECH AT EZHAVAS’ MEETING, TRIVANDRUM

January 13, 1937

I wish I were able to speak to you in your own mother tongue. I am sorry that I have not yet been able to learn the very musical language that you speak, and it is a matter of equal sorrow to me that you do not understand the national language of India—Hindi-Hindustani. Therefore we have to fall back on the cumbrous process of translation. But it is inevitable if I am at all to reach your hearts somewhat. I assure you I do not want to make here an idle speech, nor am I fond of hearing my own voice. I know that silence is often better than speech. But I know also from experience that there are occasions when speech becomes a necessity, and probably this is one of those occasions.

I thank you very much for having asked me to preside over this celebrations meeting. I thank you also for presenting me with this address. You have already tendered your hearty congratulations to His Highness the Maharaja and Maharani and Sachivottama Sir C.P. Ramaswami Iyer. I want to associate myself fully with the expression of your joy and congratulations. The joy is written on the numerous faces of this assembly over the restoration of a right which was taken away from you, no one knows how many years ago. You have done well also in tracing the historical sequence of the agitation for opening all the temples to the avarnas Hindus in Travancore, and I again associate myself with you in the praise you have bestowed upon His Holiness the late Narayananaguru Swami and also upon that brave soul Madhavan. You will also let me recall in this connection two names—I mean the late Krishnaswami who at the time of the Vykom Satyagraha used to lead the prayer in his own inimitable manner with recitations of verses from Gita Govinda. Though a staunch Brahmin and lover of his religion, he made common cause with all the avarnas. And I may not forget also one who is still in our midst—Sjt. Kelappan Nair.
These brave men laid the foundation of the thing we see today in our midst.

But I think that we may not forget the orthodoxy which has come to our assistance at this hour, and in this connection I suppose I may not omit to mention the Namboodiri orthodox people whom I had found to my great regret very difficult to convert to the obvious truth. If they and the other orthodox people had not recognized the spirit of the times, it might be that they would have rendered the task of their Highnesses well nigh impossible or, at least, ineffective.

In this connection let me recall also a meeting I had with the Senior Maharani years ago. That meeting took place when the Vykom Satyagraha was going on, and I appealed to her, with all the earnestness at my command, to come to the assistance of all those who were fighting a forlorn battle, to issue a new Smriti and to declare all the temples open. She and her husband, who was present at the interview, expressed their sympathy with this movement. They both welcomed the movement that was going on in Travancore for the liberation of avarnas. But they felt burdened with the responsibility of a great State and told me that the time had not come for taking that great step. She than thought that it was still necessary to sound savarna opinion and to convert it to the reform. Several years have passed by since that interview. Thanks be to God that you did not remain idle during all these years, and but for the sustained efforts on your part to arouse both avarna and savarna public opinion, even the Maharaja with all the goodwill in the world would have found it impossible to issue the Proclamation. I hope that the Senior Maharani is today rejoicing over the great change that has come over Travancore and over the fact that the Proclamation is being welcomed by all and sundry—both avarnas and savarnas. I am hoping also that with the incoming of this great change over the State of Travancore the savarna Hindus are as enthusiastic in visiting temples as the avarna Hindus. I want to tell all savarnas, men and women, who have from day to day gone to these temples in search of blessings and in the hope that their prayers will be answered; I want to assure them that the temples have gained in efficacy and not lost one whit from the efficacy they enjoyed. Our Shastras teach us—I am not giving you any new truth—that efficacy lies in our hearts, not in stone however well carved it may be, and I do hope that your faith will not fail you because a large part of your co-religionists have had an ancient right restored to them of offering their prayers in the same manner and on the same conditions as you have offered them.

I would like to mention one sorrow that has oppressed me ever since I came here. I have wondered why you have called this celebration Ezhava Temple-entry Proclamation Celebrations. I wonder if presently we shall have All-Travancore Pulaya and Pariah Celebrations! I know and I grant that Ezhavas are a great and growing and important community in Travancore, but have I not seen the Pulayas and Pariahs of Travancore? When I have met them I have not been able to stare them straight in their faces. I have felt deeply humiliated. I shall never forget the sight of an old Pulaya man shaking with fear, as he was brought to me, and as he tried to hand me a sheet of paper which had been put into his hands. He was brought to me in Cochin as I was passing through the crowds in the streets. I was told that he held in his hand an address to be given me on behalf of the Pulayas. His withered hands, as they were shaking, could not deliver that address in my hands. There was no lustre in his eyes. I do not know that I saw even a ray of hope in those deep sunken eyes. He did not know what he was being called upon to do. I do not know that he could understand the choice Malayalam which the Namboodiri volunteer was speaking. I seized the situation at a glance. I hung my head in shame and sorrow, and I felt it my duty to snatch that precious paper from his hands. Why is he not a member of today’s Celebration Committee? I know that he is nameless. Most probably he is dead. If he is alive perhaps he does not know what is happening in Travancore today. And also I asked myself whether you members of this Celebration Committee, you members of this vast gathering, do or do not represent such men. And I must tell you with all respect and humility that if this vast assembly does not represent these Pulayas, then I am certain that there is no place in your midst for me. If this is a purely religious movement, if this is a purely religious revival, if it has no taint of base ‘self’ in it, then you will be denying yourselves and nullifying the effect of this great Proclamation if you do not represent the lowest and the least in our midst.

You heard with what force Sir C.P. Ramaswami Iyer spoke to this meeting. The Maharaja has given you a Smriti, but it is for you to carry it out and breathe life into it, and you will hopelessly fail to do that unless you rise to the occasion and see to it that this religious spirit pervades the whole of Travancore—both avarnas and savarnas. I tell you if you approach this great step, each with his own mental reservation, and not give effect to it whole-heartedly, you will find this Proclamation a nine days’ wonder. Therefore I want you to understand, whilst you are properly rejoicing over this Proclamation and celebrating it with the joy and zeal that I see on your faces, that you will not be doing your duty if you do not realize your responsibility to the whole of the community that had been so far excluded.

I see that you are now getting restless. I do not propose to keep you longer than is absolutely necessary. I am speaking to you from the fulness of my heart, and when heart is speaking to hearts, it expects to find a lodgment in those hearts. I do not want to keep you more than perhaps ten minutes now. I shall try to omit many of the things I wanted to say this evening, and shall seek another occasion for doing so.

I must mention what I saw at the great Padmanabha Temple. It will perhaps best illustrate what I am saying about the pure and spiritual revival. In the days of my youth I went to so many temples with the faith and devotion with which my parents had fired me. But of late years I have not been visiting temples, and ever since I have been engaged in anti-untouchability work I have refrained from going to temples unless they were open to everyone called untouchable. So what I saw this morning at the temple dawned upon me with the same newness with which it must have dawned upon so many avara Hindu who must have gone to the temple after the Proclamation. In imagination my mind travelled back to the prehistoric centuries when they began to convey the message of God in stone and metal. I saw quite clearly that the priest who was interpreting each figure in his own choice Hindi did not want to tell me that each of those figures was God. But without giving me that particular interpretation he made me realize that these temples were so many bridges between the Unseen, Invisible and Indefinable God and ourselves who are infinitesimal drops in the Infinite Ocean. We the human family are not all philosophers. We are of the earth very earthy, and we are not satisfied with contemplating the Invisible God. Somehow or other we want something which we can touch, something which we can see, something before which we can kneel down. It does not matter whether it is a book, or an empty stone building, or a stone building, inhabited by numerous figures. A book will satisfy some, an empty building will satisfy some others, and many others will not be satisfied unless they see something inhabiting these empty buildings. Then I ask you to approach these temples not as if they represented a body of superstitions. If you will approach these temples with faith in them, you will know each time you visit them you will come away from them purified, and with your faith more and more in the living God.

Anyway, I have looked upon this Proclamation as a pure religious act. I have regarded this visit to Travancore in the spirit of a pilgrimage, and I am going to these temples as an untouchable suddenly made touchable. If all of you will approach this Proclamation in this spirit, you will abolish all distinctions between savarnas and avarnas as also all those distinctions which unfortunately still exist between avarnas and avarnas. Finally you will not be satisfied until you have lifted up your brothers and sisters who are supposed to be the least and the lowest, to heights which you have attained yourselves. True spiritual regeneration must include economic uplift and the removal of ignorance and everything that goes to retard human progress.

May God enable you to realize to the full the possibilities that are embedded in this Proclamation of the Maharaja. I thank you for giving me this patient hearing.

Harijan, 23-1-1937

312. SPEECH AT NEYATTINKARAI

January 14, 1937

I thank you for the three addresses you have read or partially read here. I wish there was time to listen to all the addresses in full. I have read the Hindi address in full and the second, which is really a report of the Harijan work, I promise to read in full. Needless to say that I associate myself with you in your congratulations to the trinity responsible for the Proclamation over which Travancore is rejoicing, and I congratulate the savarnas of this place who unanimously and heartily endorsed the Proclamation. Of course, it is open to the savarnas and avarnas to make the gracious Proclamation perfectly useless—the savarnas may be sullenly discontented and not purity their hearts of untouchability, and the avarnas can make it perfectly ineffective by misunderstanding the grace of the Proclamation and by not going to temples in the right spirit. The Maharaja, the Maharani

---

1 The date is from The Bombay Chronicle, 16-1-1937.
not going to temples in the right spirit. The Maharaja, the Maharani and the Dewan have done their duty by issuing the Proclamation which has no reservation, mental or otherwise, behind it; and if both savarnas and avarnas prove by their real religious conduct that they were worthy of this high act of State, believe me Travancore will go down in history as the saviour of Hindu religion which was in danger of perishing. For I have seen nothing during these long years of struggle against untouchability to modify my opinion that if untouchability lives Hinduism dies. I wish I could infect all of you with the same belief and in every one of your acts you would show that the taint of untouchability has been removed from your hearts.

_The Epic of Travancore_, pp. 161-2

313. SPEECH AT VENGANOOR

January 14, 1937

It gives me great pleasure to be in your midst and greater pleasure still to realize under what auspices I am touring Travancore today. I have in mind the great Proclamation that has practically removed untouchability from Travancore. I say “practically removed” because the Proclamation cannot do everything, although it has worked wonders. To remove untouchability root and branch from this soil and, for that matter, from India, rests with you and me.

In Ayyan Kali, whom you half in jest and half in endearment call the Pulaya Rajah, you have an indefatigable worker. I understand that under his leadership you have been making steady progress and I have no doubt that this gracious Proclamation will quicken the progress you are making. I must not keep you or keep myself long as I have a heavy day in front of me. If I had the time, I would love to pass a whole day with you and know many of you intimately. As it is, I have to be satisfied with having seen your beaming faces and making such acquaintances as I can within the few minutes I have in your midst. I would like to leave just one thought with you before I go. I hope you will make a wise and religious use of this opportunity to go to the temples. It depends upon our mental condition whether we gain something or do not gain anything by going to the temples. We have to approach these temples in a humble penitent mood. They are so many houses of God. Of course God resides in every human form, indeed in every particle of His creation, in everything that is on this earth. But since we very fallible mortals do not appreciate the fact that God is everywhere, we impute special sanctity to temples and think that God resides there. And so when we approach these temples we must cleanse our bodies, our minds and our hearts, and we should enter them in a prayerful mood and ask God to make us purer men and purer women for having entered their portals. And if you will take this advice of an old man, this physical deliverance that you have secured will be a deliverance of the soul.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 157-8

314. SPEECH AT TECKLAI

January 14, 1937

I thank you for the addresses, but I must remind you that they should be brief, to the point and written either in Hindi or in Malayalam. Surely an address written in English cannot be understood by large masses of people whom we want to serve. If they were written in Hindi, they could catch at least a few words common to both Hindi and Malayalam. You will perhaps say that just as the masses do not understand English, neither do they understand Hindi. But I tell you it does not come to the same thing. Those who are innocent of English surely can pick up a few words of Hindi. And then why should you enclose these addresses in hideous frames? How am I to take all these home? The glass is sure to be damaged, as indeed this one has been damaged and it has thus become a dangerous article to carry.

One word about the Proclamation which has brought me here. I know that your presence here is a sign that you are sharing the celebrations going on in Travancore. Every one of you should understand the significance of the Proclamation. If all men and women here think or harbour untouchability in their hearts, they have not given effect to the Proclamation. That Proclamation tells you—every man and woman and child—that henceforth there is no untouchability in Travancore, that in the sight of God and man, Nairs and Nambudiris, Ezhavas and Pulayas and Pariahs and what not are all equally children of God. And when they get entrance to the Holy of Holies, naturally all other distinctions fall to the ground. Therefore, those who are better off will take care to see that they will raise those who are worse off economically and socially. And if you have flattered yourselves with the belief that you are savarnas, you should bring the avarnas out of their houses and teach them the art of worship. But I know that even the savarnas have forgotten the art of worship. However, now that the Proclamation has purified the atmosphere, you must learn the art and teach it to the avarnas. I hope and pray that you will do so.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 159-60

315. SPEECH AT THIRUVATTAR

January 14, 1937

I was at this place not many years ago when the forbidding-looking walls of this temple seemed to say, “not yet for you this place.” Nobody had thought some months ago that there would be a Proclamation of H.H. the Maharaja of Travancore and that all temples would be flung open to the untouchables. The sins of past ages have been obliterated by literally a stroke of the pen. Though it was the hand of the Maharaja that traced the signature over the Proclamation, the spirit behind it was that of the Lord Padmanabhaswami. I understood only today the beautiful legend that passes current in Travancore about the Maharaja. As you all know—I suppose every child in Travancore knows—that the Maharajas in Travancore are known as Padmanabhadas. They are so many Viceroy of Padmanabhaswami, and as I understood yesterday the Maharaja has to go from day to day to that temple and receive instructions about the day’s work from Padmanabhaswami. That the thing does not happen as I have described to you as between man and man is true, but the spirit behind the legend is an excellent spirit. It means that the Maharaja may not do anything that is wrong or sinful and has not the stamp of God’s approval. And so, as I said, it is the spirit of God that moved the Maharaja to take the great step he has taken and I wish to congratulate you who are the beneficiaries under the great Proclamation. It is a great act whose significance we are yet too near in time to realize. During my last tour I addressed a gathering outside the forbidding-looking temple walls as they then appeared to me. I regard myself voluntarily as a Pulaya or a Pariah, the lowest amongst the low, a Harijan amongst Harijans. But the Maharaja himself, as I have now learnt, bears the title of Servant of God, i.e., Harijan, and proudly signs himself as such. No doubt he is the first among God’s servants, let us hope by right of service. He is not the first lord among lords and masters. In service there is always open and meritorious competition. It demands no reward, no distinction. Let us look at the Proclamation in this light. Let Nambudiris and other Brahmins and the so-called high-caste people of Travancore rise to the occasion and be voluntarily Harijans amongst Harijans, servants of God, and let all the world know by their action that in virtue of the Proclamation there is none high and none low but all are equal in the eyes of God.

---

1 The date is from The Bombay Chronicle, 16-1-1937.

_The Epic of Travancore_, pp. 163-4

316. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, NAGERCOIL

January 14, 1937

I am not a stranger to Nagercoil and for that matter to the whole of Travancore. You have more than once made me acquainted with the Nagercoil crowds. You have on more than one occasion shown your boundless enthusiasm, if it was only in point of attendance. You do not expect me to give you lengthy replies to the addresses you have been good enough to present to me. Indeed you need not have presented me with any address at all on this occasion. No doubt I have come to share in your rejoicings over the Proclamation. But I have come more as a penitent pilgrim than anything else. And my mind just now is so full of the duty that lies in front of you in virtue of that Proclamation that I cannot divide my attention among other things. Nevertheless I must express my astonishment at getting double addresses from those who are engaged in carrying on Hindi propaganda. I have not been able to find out the reason for this overlapping of energy, but I dare not give time to unravelling this mystery.

Let us consider the duty devolving on those for whom the Proclamation has been designed. You may take this Proclamation as an ordinary act of the State to which for the most part people are indifferent, or you may regard it as an extraordinary act of the State on which the future of Hinduism depends; and if you assimilate the spirit of the Proclamation, the result will be astonishing not only for

---

1 The meeting was attended by no less than 50,000 people. Addresses of welcome were presented to Gandhiji on behalf of the Municipal Council, the Hindi Prachar Sabha, Nanjnad Sambar Sangam and Hindi Prem Sabha.
Travancore but for the whole of India. This untouchability was, and I suppose I must still say is, a weedy growth upon Hinduism, so much so that it threatened to smother the finest flowers of Hinduism. I regard this Proclamation as a very brave attempt—an outstanding attempt—to rid Hinduism of the curse of untouchability, and issuing the Proclamation the Maharaja and his advisers have laid the axe at the root of untouchability. But the Proclamation will be of no use if there is no response on the part of the savarna and avarna Hindus. Ever since my coming to Travancore I have been doing nothing but visiting temples which were until a little while ago forbidden ground to me by my own choice. So long as these temples were barred against the major part of the Hindu population to Travancore, the temples could go on as they liked. The Proclamation is the beginning of the process of purification of Hinduism, and in the process both savarnas and avarnas have to play their due part. It would be a great reflection on savarna Hindus if the untouchables of yesterday were to be left to their own resources. It is therefore absolutely necessary for you and me to find out the place temples have in the growth of Hinduism. You and I have to find out whether a living God resides in these temples. I assure you that our search will be in vain unless we put our hearts into it and apply our minds to it. In all humility I fancy that I know how that search is to be made. But during this hurried tour and hurriedly-got-up meeting, it is not possible to dilate on the search. I must seek some other and better opportunity for making that enquiry. It may be sufficient for the time being if I have succeeded in stimulating your appetite for that search. It will give me great satisfaction if I have succeeded in convincing you that we may not take this Proclamation in the ordinary way. It will be enough if every man and woman realizes his and her duty with reference to the working of this Proclamation. With this thought I propose to leave you to-night.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 165-7

317. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

CAPE COMORIN,

January 15, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I had your two letters received last night at the Cape—the end of the earth. And I had reply by wire to my telegraphic inquiry about you, Shanta and Kumarappa. I hope you showed your foot to the C.S.
I am anxious about it. You have severe cold there and we here melt on the slightest pretext. I hope you are at peace with youself. I am not in favour of your going in for new experiments in charkha-making. The charkha which is the simplest and the best is the cheapest in the long run. But if you want to make the experiment you can make it. The question of money does not weigh with me. It is that of postponing the progress of the boys under training. The highest speed has been attained on the flat thing. The vertical is cumbersome. Remember you are training boys who are unused to any spinning. If I were you, I should make them as fit as they can be on the wheel which has proved its worth as the best all-round charkha.

I must not give much time to correspondence, as I want to devote what I have today to Harijan.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6374. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9840

318. TRAVANCORE PILGRIMAGE

[January 15, 1937]

I am writing this at the Cape in front of the sea where three waters meet and furnish a sight unequalled in the world. For this is no port of call for vessels. Like the goddess the waters around are virgin. The Cape has no population worth the name. The place is therefore eminently fitted for contemplation. This is the third day of the pilgrimage. Having mentally and voluntarily become an untouchable and therefore shunned the temples which were barred against fellow untouchables, I feel like them the joy of the removal of the bar. I approached the great temple in Trivandrum with awe and due veneration. Curiosity had given way to the incoming of something that was to fill the void of years. As I write these lines I am reminded of the peace I felt in the Cathedral in Madras to which Bishop Whitehead had taken me now over twenty years ago. In that Cathedral on the particular morning, so far as I remember, we were the only two persons present. In the Trivandrum Temple there were thousands awaiting the arrival of my party. But there was no noise, no bustle. Untouchables of yesterday were in the silent concourse in perhaps equal numbers. I could not distinguish between the two. All had almost the same marks on their bodies, all had the same kind of garments. Evidently the custom is to have only seamless wear which need not be more than a lungi, never more than a wrapper added to it. The majority, including the priests, were bare-bodied. In the midst of this vast assemblage, I seemed to enjoy the kind of peace I had felt in the Madras Cathedral. And yet the two were quite different. The Madras peace had no background. This the Padmanabha Temple had. And I would not have experienced it if the crowd had been boisterous or at all in a non-spiritual mood. All those bare bodies in spotlessly white lungis standing row upon row in perfectly silent and reverent attitude produced an impression upon me which will endure till life lasts. The entry into the very spacious temple, crowded with images which the guiding priest in his choice Hindi made almost to speak, was no less soul-stirring. Then we reached the great central image. It was all like a day-dream. The knowledge that I was visiting the temple designed specially for the Maharajas of Travancore and that too in the company of the hitherto despised untouchables, heightened the effect which the images and the surroundings had produced upon me. The silence and the attitude of worship have continued at the three temples I visited between Trivandrum and the Cape. And this morning I visited the famous temple at the Cape, dedicated to the Virgin. Accompanied by a large party of Harijans who were singing bhajans, we passed through the street leading to the temple. The street like the temple was forbidden to the untouchables. But now, without any opposition from anywhere, we walked through it and then into the temple as if we had never been prohibited. It is a dream realized in a manner and in a place where the realization seemed almost unthinkable before it was realized elsewhere. “You may have temples opened in the North, but you will never succeed in having them opened in Cochin and Travancore—the citadels of orthodoxy,” I used to be told before. Now one citadel has yielded with rare generosity and grace. The genuineness of the generosity and grace seems to have disarmed all opposition. The legend attached to the acts of the Maharajas of Travancore had perhaps its due share in the conversion of the people. The Maharajas are called ‘Padmanabhadas’, meaning servants of Padmanabha, i.e., God. The Maharajas are supposed to visit the temple every morning (and I understand they do whilst in Trivandrum) and receive instructions for the day’s work from God. The Proclamation is therefore an act of God through His servant the present Maharaja. Whatever may be the cause, the fact of the Proclamation being given effect to by an overwhelming number of savarnas and being availed of by avarnas stands out as a miracle.

1 Gandhiji was at Cape Comorin on this date,
But the very miracle weighs me down with a sense of responsibility which chastens me and affects my elation. If what is going on today is to be consolidated, there must be continued effort by all true Harijan workers for the education of both savarnas and avarnas on the meaning of the Proclamation. But a few months ago it was the fashion on the part of savarnas to say that avarnas did not want temple-entry. It was equally the fashion on the part of some vocal members among the avarnas to say that they did not care for temple-entry and that they cared only for economic uplift. Both mistook the meaning of the anti-untouchability campaign. The Travancore experience has opened their eyes. The right of entering temples abolishes untouchability at a stroke—untouchability that prevented a large section of Hindus from sharing with the rest the privilege of worship in the same manner as the latter. Economic uplift was there. But the best among the avarnas felt the sting of the deprivation. It soured them and angered them against the haughty savarnas. Now all that has changed. The avarnas feel the glow of freedom which they had never felt before.

All this marvellous result may easily be nullified if it is not followed up to its logical conclusion. Before avarnas can forget the past, they must be made conscious of what they have come to. The message of freedom must be carried to the humblest hut. The minds of the Pulayas and the Pariahs should be opened to the implications of the suddenly-acquired freedom. This does not need an elaborate programme of literacy. That must come. But what is needed is immediate human contact. For this an army of volunteer workers of the right type is needed. And just as the message of freedom has to be taken to the avarna huts, so has it to be taken to the savarna homes.

Then there is the question of reform of temples from within. Here I cannot do better than quote from a long letter from a Mussalman friend who believes in Hinduism as much as he believes in Islam:

You will soon be going to Travancore to celebrate the entry of Harijans into the temples thrown open to them. It is indeed a step forward. But what we need most is the restoration of the temples to their pristine purity and sanctity. The ideal thing behind temples is most holy. In the temples of ancient India resided great rishis who imparted divine wisdom. Today the priest sit there barring the way to those who need instruction and help to solve the problems of life. Alas! the priests of all religions are more in need of instruction than the poor masses.

These words are true. Never was the need for temple reform more urgent than today. Fortunately in Travancore the vast majority of temples belong to the State and are under special management. They are kept clean and often undergo improvement and addition. They are never empty. They supply a felt want. If the priests had better education and would be custodians of the spirituality of the people, the temples would be houses both of worship and spiritual instruction as they were before.

_Harijan_, 23-1-1937

319. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

_KANYAKUMARI_
_January 15, 1937_

_CHI. LILA,_

I have your letter. You can stay with Dwarkadas as long as you please. Your staying there does not mean that you should become lazy. Your spinning, reading, praying, etc., should regularly go on. It will not do to start on them afresh when you come to me. And it will not be right if you do not follow rules in eating and drinking.

I would rather that Dwarkadas was not taken to another hospital or another doctor. You are absolutely right in saying that all doctors belong to the same brotherhood. Hence, so long as a patient is willing to stick to the same doctor, it is not right to create doubts in his mind. Even the desire to go to a vaidya should be overcome. Nature cure is another matter. But in my view even for that the time has passed. So there is no need to insist on it. I am also a believer in fate. There is considerable truth in the saying “what fate has decreed cannot be otherwise”. Only such a belief can give us strength for endurance. Human effort has its limitations.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

320. REMARKS IN VISITORS’ BOOK
_January 15, 1937_

I am very happy to have visited this Library. It is my wish that this organization may endure.

_M. K. GANDHI_

From a photostat of the Hindi: C. W. 11013. Courtesy: Swami Vivekananda Library and Reading Room, Kanyakumari 321. WHAT IS KHADI SCIENCE?

