I have often said that if khadi is a sound economic proposition it is also a science and a romance. I believe there is a book called The Romance of Cotton wherein the origin of cotton has been traced and an attempt made to show how its discovery altered the course of civilization. Everything can be turned into a science or a romance if there is a scientific or a romantic spirit behind it. Some people scoff at khadi and betray signs of impatience or disgust when one talks of hand-spinning. But it ceases to be an object of disgust or ridicule immediately you attribute to it the power of removing India-wide idleness, unemployment and consequent pauperism. It need not be, as a matter of fact, a panacea for the three ills. To be absorbingly interesting, the mere honest attributing of the power is enough. But you cannot attribute that potency to khadi and pursue it, as some do, in the manner of an ignorant needy artisan who gins, cards, spins or weaves because he must for his bread. A believer in its potency will pursue it in a deliberate, wise, methodical manner and in a scientific spirit, taking nothing for granted, testing every proposition, checking facts and figures, undaunted by defeats, unelated by petty successes, never satisfied till the goal is reached. The late Maganlal Gandhi had a living faith in the potency of khadi. It was for him a thrilling romance. And he wrote the elements of the science of khadi. No detail was too trifling for him, no scheme was too big for him. Richard Gregg had and has the same fire in him. He has given it a universal meaning. His Economics of Khaddar is an original contribution to the movement. He recognizes the spinning-wheel as the symbol par excellence of non-violence. It may or may not be all that. But their belief gave Maganlal Gandhi and gives Richard Gregg all the joy and pleasure derivable from any fascination theme. A science to be science must afford the fullest scope for satisfying the hunger of body, mind and soul. Sceptics have wondered how khadi can afford such satisfaction or, in other words, what I mean when I use the expression “Science of Khadi”. I cannot better answer the question than by copying below the questions framed by me hurriedly for a khadi worker who offered to be examined by me. The questions were not framed in their logical sequence nor were they exhaustive. They admit of rearrangement and addition. But I reproduce a translation made for me by a friend from the original in Hindi.
PART I

1. How much cotton is produced in India and where? Name the varieties. How much remains in India, how much is spun by hand, how much goes to England and other lands?

2. (a) What quantity of cloth is manufactured in Indian mills? How much of it is used in India and how much is exported?
   (b) Of the above how much is manufactured from swadeshi mill yarn and how much from foreign mill yarn?
   (c) How much cloth is imported?
   (d) What quantity of khadi is produced in India?
   Note: Give your answers in square yards and in terms of money.

3. Discuss the merits and demerits of the three kinds of cloth above mentioned.

4. Some say khadi is dear, coarse and not lasting. Give your answers to these complaints, and where there is foundation for any of them offer your solution.

5. In the (A.I.S.A) khadi work how many spinners are engaged? How much have they earned during all these years? Give the number of mill spinners and their total annual earnings.

6. (a) How is the work of the A.I.S.A. carried on? How much is spent by them in administration?
   (b) What staff is employed in the running of a swadeshi mill, and what proportion of wages do such persons get in comparison with the mill hands?

7. (a) What place in your opinion does clothing occupy in the necessaries of life?
   (b) Name the chief necessaries of life and give their proportionate percentages.

8. If everyone in India gave up wearing mill-made cloth, whether foreign or Indian, how much money would remain in India and to whom would it go?

9. What does India export in place of the cloth she imports? What loss, if any, does India sustain through this exchange?

10. What percentage of the population is able to buy cloth?

11. What is the percentage of those who have the leisure to make their own cloth? And how?
12. “Khadi will establish perfect economic balance.” Is this statement really correct? Give reasons for your answer.

13. If khadi became universal, what effect would this have on trade, occupation and transport, and in what manner?

14. Assuming that for another 50 years khadi does not become universal, what is likely to be the effect on the economic condition of our people?

PART II

1. Give a description of current Indian spinning-wheels. Which is the best amongst them? Give drawings of any four spinning-wheels and the correct measurement of each constituent part. State the species of wood employed, the length and the girth of the spindle and the thickness of the mal.

2. Compare the current charkhas with the Yeravda wheel in the matter of speed, cost and general advantages.

3. How would you ascertain the variety of cotton, the strength of the yarn, and the count of spun yarn?

4. Of what count and strength is the yarn you spin? What is your speed on the takli and the wheel? Which wheel do you generally use?

5. How much cloth does a man and a woman require respectively for his or her clothing? How much yarn is required for making the same, and how much time is necessary for spinning it?

6. How much yarn is required to clothe one family? How much cotton is needed to produce the above? How much land is required for growing the necessary amount of cotton?

(A family consists of a father, mother and three children—one girl and two boys, 7, 5 and 3 years old.)

7. Compare the current carding-bow with the new ones. How much do you card per hour? How can you judge whether the cotton is properly carded or not? How long does it take you to make one pound of slivers? How many slivers do you make from one tola of cotton?

8. How much cotton can you gin in one hour? Compare ginning by hand with ginning by machine, giving the respective merits and demerits of either process. Describe and give a drawing of the current hand-ginning machine.

9. Give the length of the yarn of 20 counts required to weave one yard of cloth 36 inches wide. How many hands are required to weave the same?

10. Compare the pit loom with the shuttle loom.

_Harijan_, 16-1-1937
FOR KHADI ORGANIZATIONS

The year 1936 is just over and all khadi organizations would do well to examine promptly and carefully the results of the year’s work and submit their statements to the A.I.S.A. office. I have asked the latter to produce a brief but full report of the work of the Association during the last year, particularly with reference to the working of the new scheme of increased spinning wages. Such a report can be had only if all the branches and the various organizations affiliated to the Association readily co-operate and send without delay accurate particulars regarding work done and results achieved by them to the Central Office. The plans and programme for the current year have to be prepared at once, and for this, too, full information regarding the previous year’s working is indispensable. I hope therefore that khadi organizations will realize the urgency and supply all available information to the A.I.S.A. office at the earliest moment. Let them remember that time is of the essence in this matter.

SPINNERS’ WAGES

The council of the A.I.S.A. has decided that the A.I.S.A. branches and its certified organizations should give spinning wages on the basis of a scale sufficient to enable the spinner to have, besides minimum clothing requirements, adequate nutritive diet for eight hours’ efficient work. The various branches and organizations have, in accordance with this decision, fixed suitable standards of spinning rates which are calculated to enable the spinner to earn a daily wage of Rs. 2 to 2½. This wage is, however, related to efficient work and can be actually earned only if the requisite standard of output and quality of yarn is attained by the spinner. The standard fixed, though high, is not difficult to attain, but it must be admitted that at the present time only a small percentage of the spinners has come up to it, partly because of the crudeness of the spinning-wheels and slivers they use and partly because of their lack of skill. The real objective of the scheme is, however, not merely to lay down a reasonable scale for wage basis but to enable the bulk of the spinners to actually earn the same. It, therefore, becomes the duty of all workers engaged in production activity to do all that they can to help the spinners to attain the requisite skill besides securing satisfactory wheels and slivers so as to ensure the actual earning of the desired wage by them. It is hoped the khadi workers will not rest content until the majority of the spinners on their registers actually earn the amount aimed at. Let them also realize that the higher scale is not the highest aimed at. The real aim in terms of present values is to ensure eight annas for eight hours’ attentive and skilled spinning. That may be a far-off event. But it will never come unless very early ten pice become as natural as three are today. Let it be also remembered that in the new scale the increase is roughly distributed half-and-half between the effort of the spinner and the rise given by the A.I.S.A.

AN IMPORTANT CORRECTION

I know there are readers of Harijan who study many articles that appear from time to time in Harijan. The weekly is not published for providing momentary amusement or pleasure for the reader. It is designed to be a serious contribution to the Harijan cause in the widest sense of the term. It therefore often contains writings of more than transitory value. Hence serious errors need to be corrected. Such an error was detected in the Harijan of the 9th inst. at page 382, 2nd column, line 2. Read ‘sub-human’ for ‘human’.

Harijan, 16-1-1937

323. MESSAGE TO BAHUJAN-VIHAR BUDDHA MANDIR, BOMBAY

[January 16, 1937]

I regard this opening as a part of the Hindu revival movement that is going on in our midst. It is fortunate that so learned a scholar as Prof. Dharmanand Kosambi is to be the priest and teacher in charge.

The Bombay Chronicle, 27-1-1937

1 Vide “Right to Live”, 9-1-1937
2 From the newspaper report, which says that this was written from Quillon. Gandhiji was in Quillon on this date.
3 Of the Bahujan-Vihar Buddha Mandir at Poibavdi, Parel; vide also “Letter to B. G. Kher”, 24-8-1936
324. SPEECH AT SHIVAGIRI MATH, VARAKALLA

January 16, 1937

It gives me very great pleasure to be in your midst for the third time. The first time I was here, I had the pleasure of paying my respects to your Guru, the great Swami.¹ You have invited me to study his work in your midst. Well, I did so as fervently as I could even on the first occasion I was here. I had long and serious discussions with him over matters of common interest, and I had no difficulty in agreeing with him on many subjects of which we spoke. I had discussions also at that time with his first and learned disciples. After his lamented death, his disciples sent me many things including a collection of the Swami’s sayings. I studied them with the respect that the work of such a great man demanded.

You are quite right in saying that every time I have come here I have taken away something for myself. I admit that I have no title whatsoever to the title of “Mahatma”. That title has often embarrassed me, sometimes it has stunk in my nostrils. This has happened whenever with the name of ‘Mahatma’ on their lips people have done something unworthy. I have no new religion to give, no new truth to expound. My humble role is that of a scavenger both literally and spiritually. I know the outward art of cleaning the streets, commodes and latrines, and I am endeavouring to the extent of my ability to clean my inside also, so that I may become a faithful interpreter of the truth as I may see it.

Of course I had many things in common with the teachings of the Swami. I do believe that there is only one religion in the world, but I also believe that although it is one mighty tree, it has many branches. I tried to explain this thing to the Swami as I recollect even today. And even as all the branches take their sap from one source, even so all religions derive their essence from one fountain-source. Of course there can be only one God if there is one religion, and God who is one complete whole cannot have many branches. But He is invisible and indefinable and, one might literally say that He has as many names as there are human beings on earth. No matter by what name we describe Him, He is the same without a second and if we are all children of the same Creator, naturally there cannot be any caste amongst us. We are one brotherhood and sisterhood, and there cannot be any distinction of high and low amongst us. There are no savarnas and avarnas, or all are savarnas or all are avarnas.

¹ Narayanguru Swami

But each one of us has his or her occupation cut out for himself or herself. This occupation is not caste, but it is known in Hinduism as varna, which has nothing in common with caste as we understand it today. Caste is a man-made institution only, fit to be destroyed, but varna is a divine law. We may disregard it to our harm, and we will profit by it if we follow it. A carpenter, a blacksmith, a mason, a scavenger, a bricklayer, a teacher, a soldier—these have different occupations, but none is high and none is low among them. And if we begin to overlap one another, we create a sankara (confusion) of all varnas. Therefore immediately you take away the sting of distinction from different varnas, it becomes not only a law, but it gives us an opportunity of doing what we are particularly fitted for. That is what Hinduism teaches us. That is my interpretation of all true religions. That is my interpretation of Hinduism pure and undefiled. So far as I understood the great Swami, he did not dissent from the view I have just expounded to you.

You have tickled me by inviting me to come and settle down here. The temptation is really great. This is one of the pleasantest spots in India and the weather here is magnificent. I know that if I should come here I should be surrounded by friends who would provide me with all my needs. But the path of life, if taken religiously, is strait and narrow. It has been described as sharp as the edge of a sword. You cannot look this side or that side without stumbling into an abyss. And the Gita says that better by far is the religion which is cut out for you than one for which you are not born. Therefore, although the temptation you have held forth is very great, I must resist it just now.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 168-71.

325. SPEECH AT PARIPALLI

January 16, 1937

It gives me great pleasure to be in your midst. I see from your address, which I have already read, that many of you have walked nearly 22 miles to come to this meeting. I am sorry that it was not possible for the managers of this tour to enable me to go to your places in the hills.
I have heard something of the great work that is being done by Sjt. Raman Pillai among the hill tribes of Kadakal and Paripalli. Evidently from his hoary beard he appears to be as old as I, if not older. But from the energy with which he addressed this meeting, I thought he was a young old man. It gives me great joy to know that in him you have an indefatigable worker, guide and friend. I am glad to find that several activities are being conducted for your benefit. You are right in saying that this Proclamation is epoch-making and glorious. It is like a gift suddenly come into the possession of a man who is not fit to receive it. The suddenness of it shows that it is something for which neither you nor I were prepared. Not that what has been given was not due to us. But the deprivation of many long years seemed to make us unfit to receive the gift when it came. But what I have been witnessing round me shows that you were fit for the gift, and having got the gift it appears you were never deprived of it. For I know that wherever I have visited temples—where there were Harijans and non-Harijans—I failed to see any distinction between the two. The demeanour and attitude of the Harijans seemed to be as if they were to the manner born. They were spotlessly clean and their attitude of reverence left nothing to be desired. There was among all these men and women a dignity that was truly captivating.

But we should be making a serious mistake if we thought that nothing now remains to be done. The present gives the promise of a bright future if we take the full advantage of the opportunities given to us by reason of the Proclamation. I do hope that many savarna Hindu workers will come forward to carry the message of the Proclamation to the avarnas, to take them out of their huts, accustom them to going to the temples, and explain to them the implications of the Proclamation. For sceptics and heretics the temples have no meaning, but for one who has believed in temples there is no mistaking the fact that constant temple-going changes the whole outlook on life of temple-goers. May this be realized among all these so-called avarnas.

_The Epic of Travancore_, pp. 172-3.
326. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

QUILON,
January 16, 1937

CHI. BRAJKISAN,

I have your letter. You did indeed commit an error. It has done no good either to Damodar or to Vishwanath. Its doing you any good was of course out of the question. But telling you this will not undo the error, nor will your giving up salt, which in any case has no bearing upon this error arising from attachment. I have already told you that the allowance you receive is for your maintenance and is not to be spent for the satisfaction of your personal cravings. And that if anything is left over it should be spent for public service. I have no hopes of Damodar or Vishwanath. What you now propose to do is the right thing. Sell the books and such other things and repay the debt. If the amount thus obtained is insufficient you may earn some by your own labour; otherwise be patient. Your best repentance will be to make sure that you do not ever again make the same mistake and are careful in everything.

I return you the letter. Mother, I hope, is well.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I shall probably return to Wardha on the 24th.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2456

327. SPEECH AT QUILON

January 16, 1937

I am deeply grateful to you for having waived your undoubted right of reading your address.¹ You have been good enough to save your time and my time. I am no stranger to this place. I have many a happy recollection of my stay here. When I came here last it was thought a presumption for an avarna to enter a temple, but now I have come to share with you your rejoicing over the Proclamation. It is a brave, generous and gracious act and it combines the enthusiasm of the young Maharaja with the wisdom and courage of Her Highness the Maharani, his mother. As you may be aware, I had the pleasure and privilege of waiting upon them in their palace and renewing their acquaintance. The Maharani’s queenly heart was full of joy over the manner in which the avarnas and the savarnas had received the Proclamation, and I saw the young Maharaja nodding his assent to everything that his gracious mother was saying to him. And every lover of the State, from one end of India to the other, has testified to the fact that the Proclamation lacks nothing in completeness. By a stroke of the pen, it opens all State temples to all those who call themselves Hindus without the slightest reservation. As I have said so often, such an act could not be prompted by any purely worldly considerations. There must have been the spirit of God inspiring both the wise mother and the brave son.

¹ The address was presented by K. S. Parameswara Pillay, Chairman of the Municipal Council.

As I have been going from temple to temple and looking at beaming faces of perhaps tens of thousands of men and women, mingling together without the slightest distinction, I confess I have not been able to restrain my joy at the sight. I have called it a great religious revival that is going on in Travancore. That religious revival began some years ago, but we had no visible sign, no visible demonstration of it. But this Proclamation is a visible demonstration of the revival which he who runs may read. To me it is a great sign of purification of our ancient faith. I have held for now close on half a century that untouchability is the greatest blot on Hinduism, and therefore you can only imagine—I cannot describe it fully—my joy over the Proclamation. I congratulate all the Travancorians on this signal gift which you have received from your Prince. I only hope that you, who have begun so well, will also end well, till the light that has been lit in Travancore will spread throughout Bharatvarsha. The Maharani and the Maharaja and the Dewan have done their duty. They can do no more. But if this light is to spread throughout India, it will be purely as a result of your response to the Proclamation. You have to understand the implications of this great act and your response must not be purely formal, but must come from the bottom of your heart and then, and not till then, will be manifested the great change of heart for which I have been pining all these years and for which I have always been fervently praying.

Let me for a few moments consider what Hinduism consists of, what it is that has fired so many saints about whom we have historical record. Why has it contributed so many philosophers to the world? What is it in Hinduism that has so enthused its devotees for centuries? Did they see untouchability in Hinduism and still enthuse over it? In the midst of my struggle against untouchability I have been asked by several workers as to the essence of Hinduism. We have no simple *Kalema*¹, they said, that we find in Islam, nor have we 3.16 *St. John*² of the Bible. Have we or have we not something that will answer the demands of the most philosophic among the Hindus or the most matter-of-fact among them? Some have said, and not without good reason, that the Gayatri answers that purpose. I have perhaps recited the Gayatri mantra thousands of times, having understood the meaning of it. But still it seems to me that it did not answer the whole of my aspirations. Then as you are aware I have, for years past, been swearing by the Bhagavad Gita, and have said that it answers all my difficulties and has been my Kamadhenu, the Cow of plenty, my guide, my open sesame, at hundreds of moments of doubt and difficulty. I cannot recall a single occasion when it has failed me. But it is not a book that I can place before the whole of this audience. It requires a prayerful study before the Kamadhenu yields the rich milk she holds in her udder.

But I have fixed upon the mantra that I am going to recite to you, as containing the whole essence of Hinduism. Many of you, I think, know the Ishopanishad. I read it years ago with translation and commentary. I learnt it by heart in Yeravda Jail. But it did not then captivate me as it has done during the past few months, and I have now come to the final conclusion that if all the Upanishads and all the other scriptures happened all of a sudden to be reduced to ashes and if only the first verse in the Ishopanishad were left intact in the memory of Hindus, Hinduism would live for ever.

Now this mantra divides itself in four parts. The first part is.

> ईश्वरर्वभूतं सवऽविश्वं जगत्य जगत्।

It means, as I would translate: All this that we see in this great Universe is pervaded by God. Then come the second and third parts which read together, as I read them:

> तेष स्वरूपान्तः पुण्यतः।

I divide these into two and translate them thus: Renounce it and enjoy it. There is another rendering which means the same thing, though: Enjoy what He gives you. Even so you can divide it into two parts. Then follows the final and most important part:

> मा गृहः कस्त्वस्वेद्वदनय— which means: Do not covet anybody’s wealth or possession. All the other mantras of that ancient Upanishad are a commentary or an attempt to give us the full meaning of the first mantra. As I read the mantra in the light of the Gita or the Gita in the

---

¹ “There is no God but Allah and Mohammed is His Prophet.”

² “For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.”

298 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
light of the mantra I find that the Gita is a commentary on this mantra. It seems to me to satisfy the cravings of the socialist and the communist, of the philosopher and the economist. I venture to suggest to all who do not belong to the Hindu faith that it satisfies their cravings also. And if it is true—and I hold it to be true—you need not take anything in Hinduism which is inconsistent with or contrary to the meaning of this mantra. What more can a man in the street want to learn than this that the one God and Creator and Master of all that lives pervades the Universe?

The three other parts of the mantra follow directly from the first. If you believe that God pervades everything that He has created, you must believe that you cannot enjoy anything that is not given by Him. And seeing that He is the Creator of His numberless children, it follows that you cannot covet anybody’s possession. If you think that you are one of His numerous creatures, it behoves you to renounce everything and lay it at His feet. That means that the act of renunciation of everything is not a mere physical renunciation but represents a second or new birth. It is a deliberate act, not done in ignorance. It is therefore a regeneration. And then, since he who holds the body must eat and drink and clothe himself, he must naturally seek all that he needs from Him. And he gets it as a natural reward of that renunciation. As if this was not enough, the mantra closes with this magnificent thought: Do not covet anybody’s possession. The moment you carry out these precepts you become a wise citizen of the world, living at peace with all that lives. It satisfies one’s highest aspirations on this earth and hereafter. No doubt it will not satisfy the aspirations of him who does not believe in God and His undisputed sovereignty. It is no idle thing that the Maharaja of Travancore is called Padmanabhadas. It is a great thought. We know that God Himself has taken the title of Dasanudas—servant of servants. If all the princes would call themselves servants of God, they would be correctly describing themselves, but they cannot be servants of God unless they are servants of the people. And if zamindars and monied men and all who have possessions would treat themselves as trustees and perform the act of renunciation that I have described, this world would indeed be a blessed world to live in.

I must not labour the meaning of this mantra any longer. I know that many of you here are learned men. My knowledge of Sanskrit is poor and I am a man of the street having no pretensions to learning, but what little I have read and what little has commended itself to me I have assimilated. I suggest to you that this mantra has nothing abstruse in it. Anybody can understand its meaning and follow it out in daily life. Therefore I want to suggest to the whole of this audience that they should carry the whole of this mantra in Malayalam to every home and help everyone to shape their lives in accordance with this mantra; and I make bold to say that having done so they may, without reading any other scriptures, call themselves Hindus. Disputes and differences arise when you begin to read big tomes and discuss interpretations of varying dictums contained in them. But now that, in virtue of this Proclamation, the distinction between high and low is abolished in Travancore, and there are no avarnas and savarnas, you will see that this mantra will satisfy all your wants. You will model your conduct in the spirit of this mantra and you will not find it difficult to live in the spirit of this Proclamation. I am saying this with a full sense of my responsibility. It is for you the people of Travancore to make or unmake this act of the great king. The opportunity for serving one’s faith or one’s fellowmen does not easily occur. That opportunity has come to you all of a sudden. May God grant you the measure of understanding that is necessary to live up to the spirit of this Proclamation.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 174-80.

328. COW-PROTECTION OR COW-SLAUGHTER

We find that many of the things we do are contrary to our beliefs or our religion. We believe that we should speak the truth, yet we practise untruth; we believe that we should not indulge in immoral activities but we do indulge in them; we believe that we should refrain from violence, yet we practise it at every moment; we believe that we should win swaraj, yet do much which is contrary to this belief. We do not even do khadi work which will promote swaraj. The human race would perish if it always acted against its beliefs in all matters. Innumerable persons thoughtlessly do what should not be done. The foregoing describes the plight of those who have formed the habit of thinking.

Failure to serve the cow is an instance of conduct contrary to religion. Every Hindu believes that it is his special dharma to serve the cow. But only a handful of Hindus will be found to observe the basic rules of goseva. Many persons believe that they have done their duty once they have put a couple of pice into the cow-protection fund. These thoughts came to my mind while reading a letter written by Shri Purushottam Narhar Joshi who calls himself a “gosevak”. Shri Joshi is not only the head of the State goshala of Bhavnagar but also takes interest in cattle development. His letter runs as follows.

Who will not believe while reading this letter that cowslaughter is being practised under the guise of cow-protection? We do not become murderers only when we commit actual murder with a knife. We commit murder even when we watch someone else being murdered and do not attempt to prevent it even though it is within our power to do so. Many of the suggestions made by the gosevak Shri Joshi can be put into practice anywhere in India. His letter is mainly addressed to Kathiawar and particularly the ruling princes there, as they can easily take up this work. Every State can set up one or more dairies, keep good stud bulls for the benefit of the people, castrate each and every male calf, supply good cows to whosoever needs them, provide facilities for training in animal husbandry, maintain pastures within their own States and prevent the cruel slaughter of buffalo-bulls which is being practised.

I shall take up later the suggestions which Shri Joshi has made about the activities of the Goseva Sangh.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu_, 17-1-1937

329. SPEECH AT THATHARAMPALLI

_January 17, 1937_

As a matter of fact I am ill able to speak to you this morning. Ever since my arrival in Travancore I have been suffering from a bad cold and I am afraid I cannot give you a considered speech. I am glad Hindi is making steady progress. I wish everyone knowing English will hold it a crying shame not to be able to speak Hindi as well as English. I tell you it will not take as many years as the study of English does. One reason why it is easier than English is that it has a vocabulary which is common to Malayalam and, even like geographical and climatic conditions, the religious conditions of this great country make all tongues of India in many respects common. The sound of different languages does not strike as strange to our ears. When I hear Kannada, Tamil, Malayalam, Oriya or Bengali, I assure you my ears do not notice any foreign element in that sound and although I do not know these languages I can very often gather the drift because of the common words in these languages. Now if I were to read this Hindi address to you, I am sure you will notice that many words in it are common to Malayalam. Addressing a meeting in Bangalore, I showed that the majority of words in Hindi were quite common to Kannada.

---

1 Not translated here. The correspondent had said that though cows played a very important part in the national life of India, they were neglected. Because of poor breeding bullocks were unsuitable for draught purposes. He had suggested that the Goseva Sangh should draw up a plan for improving the condition and breed of cows.

Now I have not said all these things in order to worry you for nothing. From an all-India point of view, it is a foregone conclusion that you must know Hindi. But it has something to do with the Proclamation also. If the savarnas are to give effect to the Proclamation, they must be blood-brothers with the avarnas, and for that you must spread yourselves amongst avarnas. And if there is any spirituality in you, it will overflow in many directions. I had a Pulaya girl coming to me this morning with a petition in her hand. She was a very good specimen of humanity, but she presented her petition in bad English. She wanted some help for her English studies. The person who wrote the petition for her had misrepresented things, but I could not ascertain the correct position from her as she could neither talk Hindi nor English. I have of course handed over her petition to the local Harijan Sevak Sangh. But if this girl had been taught Hindi, I am sure she would have been able to talk to me fluently. I must tell you that a girl of thirteen should be able to call herself an Indian, not merely a Travancorian. Had she known Hindi, she would have been able to travel from one end of India to another without much difficulty. Now fly with me on the wings of your imagination to the Hindukush. What would happen to the girl there? She would be as much at home in Kashmir as here. Here is the point I am trying to make. Supposing you have understood the point of my remark and decided to go about amongst avarnas, you will teach them not English but Hindi, and thereby you will enrich yourselves and enrich the boys and girls you will take up, and you will broaden your outlook and theirs, and not commit the atrocious blunder of giving them a modicum of bad English, but straight away you will give them the treasures hidden in Tulsidas. For believe me the Proclamation can become a dead letter not through any fault of the Maharaja but through sins of omissions and commissions on your part.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 1818-3.
330. SPEECH AT HARIPAD

January 17, 1937

At this meeting I would love to detain you for a few minutes on the message of Hinduism I gave to the meeting in Quilon last night. I ventured at that meeting to say that the whole of Hinduism could be summed up in the first verse of Ishopanishad. I suggested then that if all other Hindu scriptures happened to be reduced to ashes and to go out of the memory of men and if only that one verse were to abide with us, the destruction would be no loss. Hinduism would even then remain with us. The original Sanskrit of the mantra is perhaps as easy as anybody learning Sanskrit could possibly wish. This Upanishad enjoys the reputation of being part of the original Vedas. It is the shortest Upanishad known to us. But, as I have said, if we had only the first verse of that Upanishad remaining with us, it would be enough to supply all our wants. Let me repeat that mantra in my faulty Sanskrit pronunciation:

अंशेशावतारमिद्वं सर्वं भोजिन्तं जस्तु
तेन त्यक्तं पुनर्वा न गृह्यं: कस्मशिविद्यनं।

Those who know a little bit of Sanskrit will find that there is nothing abstruse there that you find in other Vedic mantras, and its meaning is simply this: All that there is in this Universe, great or small, including the tiniest atom, is pervaded by God, known as Creator or Lord. Isha means the Ruler, and He who is the Creator naturally by very right becomes the Ruler, too. And here in this verse the seer has chosen no other epithet for the Deity but that of the Ruler, and he has excepted nothing from His jurisdiction. He says everything that we see is pervaded by the Deity, and from that naturally the other parts of the mantra follow. Thus he says: Renounce everything, i.e., everything that is on this Universe, the whole of the Universe, and not only this tiny globe of ours, renounce it. He asks us to renounce it as we are such insignificant atoms that if we had any idea of possession it would seem ludicrous. And then, says the rishi, the reward of renunciation is पुनर्जीवं i.e., enjoyment of all you need. But there is a meaning about the word ‘enjoy’—you might as well say use, eat, etc.,—but it means that you may not take more than is necessary for your growth. Therefore this enjoyment or use is limited by two conditions. One is the act of renunciation or, as the author of the Bhagavata would say, enjoy in the spirit अत्र कृपाएवनस्तु सहबन्. And every day in the morning everyone who believes in Bhagavata Dharma has to dedicate his thoughts, words thoughts, words and deeds to Krishna, and not until he has performed that daily act of renunciation or dedication has he the right of touching anything or drinking even a cup of water. And when a man has performed that act of renunciation and dedication, he derives from that act the right of eating, drinking, clothing, and housing himself to the extent necessary for his daily life. Therefore take it as you like, either in the sense that the enjoyment or use is the reward or renunciation, or that the renunciation is the condition of enjoyment, renunciation is essential for our very existence, for our soul. And as if that condition given in the mantra was incomplete, the rishi hastened to complete it by adding: ‘Do not covet what belongs to another’. Now I suggest to you that the whole of the philosophy or religion found in any part of the world is contained in this mantra, and it excludes everything contrary to it. According to the canons of interpretation, anything that is inconsistent with Shruti—and the Ishopanishad is a Shruti—is to be rejected altogether.

Now I should like to apply this mantra our own condition in virtue of the Proclamation. Whilst I have unstintingly associated myself with your rejoicings over this great Proclamation and in tendering my thanks and congratulations to His Highness, Her Highness and their Dewan, in terms of this mantra I am obliged also to say that this Proclamation is a tardy carrying out of the behest contained in this verse of the Ishopanishad that I have recited. Only yesterday we were unfit to call ourselves Hindus. For if all that there is in the Universe is pervaded by God, that is to say, if the Brahmin and the Bhangi, the learned man and the scavenger, the Ezhava and the Pariah, no matter what caste they belong to—if all these are pervaded by Lord God, in the light of this mantra, there is none that is low, all are absolutely equal, equal because all are the creatures of that Creator. And this is not a philosophical thing to be dished out to Brahmins or Kshatriyas, but it enunciates an eternal truth which admits of no reduction, no dilution. Therefore the Maharaja himself and the Maharani are not one whit superior to the lowliest being in Travancore. We are all creatures and servants of one God. If the Maharaja is the first among equals, as he is, he is so not by right of overlordship but by right of service. And therefore how nice, how noble it is that that very Maharaja is called ‘Padmanabhadas’. It is a proud title and I congratulate those who bestowed that title on the

1 The source has “palliation”.

304 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Maharaja of Travancore. Therefore when I told you that the Maharaja or the Maharani were not one whit superior to any one of us I told you what was the actual truth accepted by their Highnesses themselves. And if that is so, how can anyone here dare to arrogate superiority to himself or herself over any other human being? I tell you, therefore, that if the mantra holds good, if there is any man or woman here who believes that the temples are defiled by those called avarnas, that person I declare would be guilty of a grave sin. I tell you that the Proclamation has purified our temples of the taint that had attached to them.

I would like the mantra I have recited to be enshrined in the hearts of all our men and women and children, and if this contains, as I hold, the essence of Hinduism, it should be inscribed on the portals of every temple. Don’t you then think that we should be belying that mantra at every step if we excluded anyone from those temples? Therefore if you will prove yourselves deserving of the gracious Proclamation and if you will be loyal to yourselves and to those who preside over your destinies, you will carry out the letter and spirit of this Proclamation I regard it as such a great spiritual act that it ought to remove scepticism from the hearts of sceptics or doubt from the hearts of those who doubted the truth of Hinduism or religion itself. Rightly understood this Proclamation should dispel the ignorant atheism of so called atheists. From the date of the Proclamation the Travancore temples, which, as I once said, were not abodes of God, have become abodes of God, since no one who used to be regarded as untouchable is any more to be excluded from them. I therefore hope and pray that throughout Travancore there may be no man or woman who will abstain from going to the temples for the reason that they have been opened to those who were regarded as Pariahs of society.

_Harijan_, 30-1-1937

331. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

HARIPAD, January 17, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I had your letter yesterday too. I am glad you are comparatively at peace with yourself. It will come if you will make an honest attempt. I have not understood your reference to pretension about personal service. But I shall know when we meet.
The tour is going on quite well.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6375. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9841

332. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

January 17, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM,¹

I reach there (D.V.) by the Express 22nd morning and pass the day at Kodambakam catching a train for Guntur in the evening.

I would like you during the day, if it is at all possible, to show Kanu the way of playing on the vina. And if it is easily purchasable and not costly, I would like to buy one for K. You can best guide me in this matter.

The tour is progressing well. I hope Father is keeping good health.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

333. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

January 17, 1937

CHI. MANUDI,

I got your letter. I understand what you tell me. I remember you often. I very much wanted to take you with me, but I felt that it would not be right to do so. You must be getting letters from Nimu. I want to reach there on the 24th. Let us see what happens. There it is cold; here it is terribly hot.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a Gujarati: C.W. 1563. courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

¹ The superscription and the subscription in this letter are in Hindi.
334. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

January 17, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

There is no letter from you. You must have impressed Mirabehn. It is an easy task. There seems to have been some confusion regarding fruit. The reply to this I shall get when I reach there, which I expect to do on the 24th. Let us see what happens.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8360. Also C.W. 7005. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

335. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

January 17, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

Half an hour’s trip in a boat has become protracted into one of three or four hours. I am therefore writing this on whatever paper I could lay my hands on. When would I get again so much time to write to you if I insist on using hand-made paper?

Saraswati went about with me for three days. We spent one afternoon at Ramachandran’s father’s place. I have talked over the matter with Saraswati and Ramachandran. We have fully discussed about Santiniketan. Ramachandran is not at present willing to send Saraswati to Santiniketan and he never was. If Saraswati had continued in the Mahila Ashram, then after her course there was finished he would have agreed to send her to Santiniketan. Now Ramachandran wishes that she should not go anywhere till she has finished her matriculation. He told me that Saraswati was no more keen about Santiniketan. I told both of them that if they desired that she should go to Santiniketan, I would not oppose the plan.

Ba desired that the betrothal should take place while I was here. But Ramachandran and I felt that so long as you two were staying apart and occupied with your studies, there was no need for betrothal. The idea, therefore, has been dropped for the present. I see from what Ramachandran said and from my talk with Saraswati that though she is not very intelligent, she is not likely to weaken in her resolve regarding you. The attitude of Ramachandren’s parents is the same. I had a talk with Saraswati’s father also and saw that he was no more opposed to the proposal. I had asked Mahadev also to talk with him. He has already done so. He will write to you. He did tell me one thing, however, that you were sensitive about every little thing, take offence even when there is no cause for any offence and hurt those who love you.

It is my complaint against you that you don’t take care of your health. I repeatedly advise you that you should not study at the cost of your health. Do study as much as you can but remember that good health is the first condition of happiness.

Please write to me so that I get your letter on the 24th at Wardha. I expect to reach there on that day.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7312. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

336. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA
January 17, 1937

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

I hope you are free of the ailment. You must not have even a single boil.

The cows here are even smaller than our cows and their milk yield is also very poor.

Rest from the Harijan Sevak.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1889

337. LETTER TO LAKSHMIDAS ASAR
TRAVANCORE,
January 18, 1937

CHI. LAKSHMIDAS,

Hand over Anandi’s and Puratan’s letters to them. I believe that everything will be all right. Send Anandi to reach Wardha on the 24th. It will not matter if I reach there a day late. Durga is there in Maganwadi. A letter for Velanbehn also is enclosed.

Blessings from
BAPU

338. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

January 18, 1937

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I am writing this letter at 9.30 p.m. while crossing one of the numerous creeks in Travancore. Half an hour’s trip has proved to be one of three hours. Let us see when we reach our destination. As we are not carrying hand-made paper with us, I am using this. If I don’t write now, I don’t know when again I shall be able to. My companions are Rajkumari, Prabhavati, Mahadev, Pyarelal and Kanaiyo. This is a real pilgrimage. I never visited as many temples as I am doing now. Besides, the devotion with which I visit them was not there before. The throwing open of hundreds of temples to Harijans after the launching of the temple-entry agitation for Harijans is no ordinary event. You will read about all this in both Harijan and Harijanbandhu. I am hoping to reach Wardha on 24th.

I hope your affairs are going on well. Sushila, you must have recovered completely and must have found out the cause of the miscarriage. I hope Sita also is well.

Here comes the place where we land and this letter-writing must stop for the present.

Here I stop.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4859

339. SPEECH AT SHERTHALAI

January 18, 1937

It is a matter of the greatest pleasure to me to be in your midst this afternoon. It is unnecessary for me now to say that I associate myself entirely in the expression of gratefulness to the Maharaja of Travancore. There can be no doubt that but for his solicitude for the faith of his ancestors and but for the wise guidance of Her Highness the Maharani and the able assistance of Sachivottama, Sir C.P. Ramaswami Aiyar, we should not have seen this Proclamation. But I

---

1 The occasion was the Proclamation celebration organized by the S.N.D.P. Yogam, the principal Ezhava organization. would like to repeat to you what I have said on other occasions: that if the hand that traced the signature to the Proclamation was that of the Maharaja, the spirit which moved the hand to sign it was that of God.
In spite of the brave guidance of his wise mother, the youthful ruler of Travancore might well have quailed before taking the unprecedented step of removing, by one stroke of the pen, untouchability which was double-distilled in Travancore. But whilst many things are impossible for mere man, nothing is impossible for God. And in pursuance of the divine voice within, the Maharaja bravely took up the pen and signed the Proclamation which was drafted for him by the Sachivottama. I would like you to look on the Proclamation as a divine gift and therefore respond to it in the spirit in which it has been given to you.

My interpretation of the Proclamation is that it removes the agelong, and yet irreligious, distinction of high and low. There is before God, whose creatures we are all, absolute equality of all. It is man who in his arrogance has disturbed the even justice of his great Deity. The Maharaja has now removed the taint of untouchability and declared once for all to all his subjects that all have equal rights in the matter of temple-entry, and it follows that if they have equality in the matter of temple-entry, they should have equality in all other matters of life.
And as I have begun to say for the last two or three days, the Proclamation is wholly consistent with the essence of Hinduism which is very briefly, but equally brilliantly, given in the first mantra of Ishopanishad. I commend that Upanishad, or at least its first mantra, to the attention of every one of you here. I will give you only a free translation of that mantra. It means this: God the Ruler and Creator pervades everything that is in the Universe down to the tiniest atom.
There is nothing, without a single exception, where God is not. And naturally therefrom follows what the seer has said in the other part of this mantra, viz., dedicate all at the feet of the Almighty or, in the language of the Gita, renounce everything. But renunciation cannot, must not, mean suicide. Therefore, the rishi or the seer says in the same breath: renounce or dedicate and then use or enjoy. But he felt that he had still not given the whole essence so that even a small child could understand it. Therefore, he wound up by saying: “Do not covet anybody’s riches”. Therefore your use and enjoyment is limited in two ways. The first condition is that we should consider nothing, not even our bodies, as our own, because we have got to dedicate or surrender everything to God the Ruler. The second condition is that we must not steal what belongs to others. That does not mean that we will not, merely physically, help ourselves to what belongs to our neighbours, but that we will not even cast hungry eyes on it. If we really want to enjoy the things we eat or the clothes we wear or the houses we live in, we must make up our minds definitely that the things are not more than we need for our sustenance and for the praise of our Maker. Then as creatures or children of God we realize that what we eat or clothe ourselves with or live in, does not belong to us but to God. And this advice is not given to a few chosen creatures of God, but to everyone in the world. You will see that the dominant part of the mantra is that every atom is pervaded by God. Therefore, the advice as to the renunciation or dedication or surrender is given to all His creatures. It is, therefore, not as if it was a command given to a few people, but the enunciation of a universal law or universal truth. Just imagine if all of us were to live faithfully in accordance with the great law of our being, what a happy world it would be in which we should be living. Then there would be no mutual jealousies, no mutual strife. And those who are blessed, if I might say so, with certain possessions would constitute themselves trustees for such of those as might want them. In virtue of the law that I have endeavoured to explain to you, those who have much possession will use it only to the extent of their own limited requirements. And evidently because the tradition among the Maharajas of Travancore is that they are to constitute themselves servants of Padmanabha, the practice that is in vogue today is that the Maharaja goes to the temple and dedicates himself to the Deity and as His agent and viceroy takes definite instructions to conduct his affairs from day to day. It is perfectly true that these instructions are not given and taken as from man to man, but that even as I suggested to you, it was the spirit of God which moved the Maharaja to take this action. Similarly if he goes to the temple for instructions in a spirit of prayer and humility, he clothes himself with the spirit of God. I do not want, therefore, to deceive myself or you into a false belief or superstition. Far be it from me to suggest that the Maharaja is an infallible being or that he never commits any error of judgment. I do not know what errors of judgment he has committed if any, but assuming that he is a mortal being and, like any one of us, liable to commit errors of judgment, the fact is that he has got to live up to this mantra, and, as it is recognized in the blue blood of Travancore, that tradition requires the Maharaja from day to day to perform this act of dedication, and to the extent that he does so his acts must become infallible. Whatever may be the fact about the acts of the Maharaja, I have used the thing as an illustration to show how this law operates with us in India. Consciously or unconsciously, however imperfectly, it must express itself in our acts and our lives. Your temple-going means that and nothing else or nothing less. If you approach the temples in that spirit, you will renew yourselves day by day as you go to the temples. And hitherto a large part of the Hindus who were deprived of the opportunities of daily surrender and dedication will get that opportunity. The Proclamation has not removed this very great and serious discrepancy or defect.

You have done right in rejoicing over this Proclamation. It was undoubtedly your duty to tender your loyal congratulations to Their Highnesses, but that is merely the beginning of your response to the Proclamation. You must now realize the fullest significance and implication of this Proclamation. You have to make a spiritual use of the opportunity given to you, and I assure you if you realize the deep spirituality of this Proclamation everything else will follow from it as day follows night. The winter of your despair is over, the spring of your hope is now in front of you, and if you will really blossom forth and fully enjoy the fruits of the Proclamation, you will not sit idle but you will live up to the meaning I have given you of the first mantra of Ishopanishad, and what is equally important is that you will take the message of hope to those who do not even realize what the Proclamation means. Heaven knows there may be thousands who do not realize this. It is your duty to take the message to those less fortunate than you are. Whatever you may have done in the past, I do hope you will not commit the fatal mistake of making any distinction between Ezhava and Pulaya, but you will resolutely make up your minds to think and act in such a manner that you will raise them to the same common platform.

I want you to believe me when I tell you that the essence of Hinduism is contained in the single mantra which I have given you. I want you to believe me when I tell you that anything that is inconsistent with the meaning of that mantra is not Hinduism. It does not matter in the least what other things inconsistent with the mantra are to be found in what is known as Hinduism. I suggest to you that if you believe in this mantra, it ought to satisfy your highest aspirations.

The last time when I passed through Cochin and Travancore I had the pleasure of meeting several Ezhava friends. Many of them were very bitter against Hinduism and Hindus. They took pride in describing themselves as atheists and not Hindus. They were prepared to burn the books which passed under the name of Hindu scriptures. I know that this Proclamation has steadied those unbelievers. I sympathized with them at that moment as those who discussed with me will bear testimony. They could not help being bitter and atheistic when they believed that it was the hand of the savarna that was held against the reform. They were bound to take the savarna belief and conduct as a correct expression of the true Hindu belief, but now they know that the savarna’s heart is changed. Therefore in passing through so many places in Travancore I have found no opposition among savarnas. I have met during this tour tens of thousands of people and I have not known any distinction being made between man and man. If these crowds contained thousands of erstwhile untouchables they also contained thousands of so-called savarnas. But assume for one moment that the savarna’s heart is not changed. Our religion ought to be totally independent of the conduct of other people towards us. For its source is derived from God within, and if we will be true to our God, we will never forsake the faith we derive from Him. With God as our Guide, Master; Ruler in everything that we do, we may defy the whole world’s opposition and stick to our faith. And I dare say that the mantra whose meaning I have given you is calculated to satisfy the highest aspiration of any being on earth. May it satisfy your aspiration also and may God give you the strength to live up to it. I thank you.

_The Epic of Travancore_, pp. 189-95

340. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, VAIKOM

January 18, 1937

I suppose you can better imagine than I can describe my joy for being a second time in your midst and under such happy auspices as you all know. Only a few years ago one had to struggle hard to get the roads leading to the great temple thrown open to avarna Hindus. Good Madhavan, assisted by Krishnaswami of revered memory and by Kelappan, laid the foundation of that struggle. It is a matter of deep sorrow to me—as it must be to you—that neither Madhavan nor Krishnaswami is here to share your rejoicings.

---

1 The meeting was held in the Satyagraha Ashram ground. According to Mahadev Desai, over twenty-five thousand people attended.

Now I am on a pilgrimage, as I have called the present tour of Travancore. Throughout the whole course of my life I do not remember having entered so many temples as I have during these few days of pilgrimage, and only an hour more and I shall have the privilege of entering the forbidding-looking walls, as they then were, which surround the great temple of this place. And all these good things have come to pass because the Maharaja and the Maharani resolved to carry out the sacred resolve under the inspiration of Padmanabhaswami. But the Proclamation can be rendered fully ineffective if the savarnas and avarnas of Travancore do not make an adequate response to this Proclamation. It is not enough that the savarnas and the avarnas continue to go to the temples just as they are doing now. Hitherto people have gone to the temples more by way of formality than from conviction. They had not reasoned out for themselves why they needed to go to the temples. Largely throughout India the temples have been popular more with women than men, and they have gone there in order to ask some boon of the God residing in those temples. But now if you have rightly understood the Proclamation and all it means, I expect much more from you than a mere formal going to the temples. In my opinion the Proclamation is a call to purification addressed to every Hindu in Travancore, whether savarna or avarna. It was the savarnas who for a thousand years—maybe several thousand years—had deprived their own fellow-religionists of the right of worshipping the same God in the same manner that they worshipped. And in order to justify such an atrocious injustice—no matter for what causes—a whole class of human beings were held as untouchables. Now that the sinful distinction has been abolished by a stroke of the pen, in order that you may render some reparation to avarna Hindus you have got to adopt some measure to let them know that you are no longer the superior beings that you have claimed to be all these years. Therefore I would expect all savarnas to take the glorious message of liberation to every avarna home. It can be done very easily and without much effort on your part. Only one condition is indispensable. You should believe from the bottom of your heart in the necessity of the Proclamation and every Hindu—savarna and avarna, man and woman—should make it his or her individual work to get hold of some avarnas, to take to them the message of the Proclamation and take them to the temples. And since the spiritual regeneration of an individual or a nation must include all the departments of life—economic, religious, social,—uplift in those departments is bound to follow. You will be vastly mistaken if you labour under the delusion that all these things are going to be done by the Proclamation.

I think that the Maharaja’s and the Maharani’s task is finished, so far as untouchability is concerned, by issuing this Proclamation. That there would be financial aid by the State for the education of these classes is a foregone conclusion. But that can never bring about the regeneration that I am picturing to myself. That requires a hearty and willing co-operation of the savarna Hindus as a class. You can therefore understand my sorrow when I heard—I do not know with what truth—that some women and even men were hesitating to enter the temple which they used to do regularly. In order to disabuse such doubters, if there are any here, of their doubts, I want to quote one historical fact that took place when I was here in connection with the Vaikom Satyagraha. Some of you may remember that I had more than one serious discussion with the Shastris who were then residing within the temple precincts, and who were attached, if I remember rightly, to the temple in some shape or other. I am trying to give you as correct a version of that discussion as I can recall at the present moment. In support of the proposition that even roads leading to the temples were barred against avarna Hindus although they were not barred against non-Hindus, they produced a book called Shankara Smriti. I had never heard of such a Smriti before I came to Vaikom and heard it quoted. You will be astonished to find that when I had that Smriti translated for me, I could not find in it any authority for closing the roads. But I grant that it was enough for them that they believed that the Shankara Smriti supported their contention. Then, as I was negotiating through the then Commissioner of Police and with the Senior Maharani, I just asked the question that supposing result of the negotiations the Maharani issued orders to open the roads to the avarna Hindus, what would be their attitude to them? Then without the slightest hesitation they said: ‘Oh! that is a different thing altogether; a Hindu Prince or Princess has every right to issue an order which has the authority of a Smriti!’ They said that was implied in Hinduism as Hindu kings are repositories of Hindu faith and they have every right to issue orders which are not inconsistent with Shruti. I asked them whether the same thing applied to the opening of the temples. They said, ‘Most decidedly.’ Let me tell you that these shastris were not the only shastris that gave this reply. I asked the same question to shastris in Cochin and Tamilnad and they gave the same answer. As a matter of fact that is the historical evolution of Smritis and for that matter of the eighteen Puranas. They were all produced or inspired in response to the want of those times. They do not always express eternal verities. The eternal verity is summed up in one verse of the Ishopanishad as I have been saying. And without fear of contradiction I am here to say that every believer in this verse is wholly a Hindu, and if he acts up to what is taught by this mantra he will find his freedom here and hereafter. I know no other road or better road to happiness than is contained in this first mantra of Ishopanishad. And if a Hindu Prince, in conformity with the implications and teaching of this mantra, issued a Proclamation, such as has been issued by the Maharaja of Travancore, it would carry such authority. And I invite those who know anything of the Ishopanishad to tell me whether this Proclamation is in any way inconsistent with this mantra. If they will make a prayerful search within and examine it, they will find that the Proclamation is a tardy fulfilment of its requirements. Therefore with all the earnestness that I can command I want to ask every doubter—man and woman—to throw away those doubts and heartily respond to the Proclamation. I must not take this theme any further, as I want to introduce another subject. I shall conclude this part by hoping that the Proclamation will have your hearty, not lukewarm, support and that you will carry it out in letter and spirit.

And now I want to take you all on the wings of your imagination to Cochin. I have come to the borders of Cochin, as far as it was possible, and I understand on the other side of the waters at a distance of less than ten miles lies Cochin. I suppose the last time I came to Vaikom I came through Cochin. But since I am not going to Cochin, I may permit myself to refer to Cochin which is so intimately connected with Travancore. Conditions in both the States are identical and the practices and usages in the two States are the same. I understand that the Maharaja of Cochin has even some rights and privileges with regard to the Vaikom temple. I must confess to you that I am impatient to see that the Cochin Maharaja follows in the footsteps of the Maharaja of Travancore. I have no desire whatsoever to embarrass His Highness. I am myself an old man—awaiting any day the warrant of Yamaraja. The Maharaja is older than I by six years. I assure you that whilst I am overjoyed over the Proclamation and the celebrations in Travancore, I am oppressed by the responsibility which touches every savarna Hindu—not that it devolves any the less on the devoted heads of avarna Hindus. Only just now what I want to be done has got to be done, and can only be done, by the savarna Hindus. I want you to adopt a respectful and prayerful attitude towards the old Maharaja of Cochin. But with due regard to his age and rank, we should be false to the faith we hold in common with him, we should be false to truth, if we did not convey to him our deepest wishes. I claim to have understood the tenets of Hinduism and for an unbroken period of 50 years followed them as far as an imperfect being like me can. And when I have repeated from every platform that untouchability is a blot on Hinduism I have weighed every word of it and I have based my opposition to untouchability on the Hindu Shastras and nothing else. Therefore I venture to convey to the Maharaja of Cochin that what the Maharaja of Travancore guided by his mother has done is no new-fangled venture of a youthful sovereign. I verily believe that when all else about Travancore is forgotten, this one act of the Maharaja will be remembered by future generations with gratitude. I hold that this Proclamation must not begin and end with the border of Travancore.

Then let me give you a little tip. I want you to be at Cochin in imagination. That means that your conduct should affect the decision of the Maharaja of Cochin. How can this be done? By prayerful and religious spirit, as expressed in your own individual conduct, you can influence His Highness. I do not suggest sending petitions to the Maharaja of Cochin. Petitions may be submitted by the people of Cochin, but you the people of Travancore can do something better. Old men are never moved from their purpose by appeals to the intellect. I tell you there are many young men after me to convert me to their views, and they find that they cannot easily take me with them. But the hearts of old men become increasingly responsive with age and so whenever young men or young women want me to do anything they have to get round not my intellect or reason but my heart. So also must it happen to the old Maharaja of Cochin, and you can touch his heart, not through any newspaper propaganda, but by becoming better Hindus under the liberties granted by the Proclamation, by showing that you savarna Hindus have not lost a title of your religious fervour, nor have the temples a title of the sanctity attached to them by the readmission of avarnas to them.

1 God of Death

I have so often said, and certainly held the belief, that our temples were losing their sanctity by reason of our criminal neglect of our untouchable brethren. If you realize your responsibility under the Proclamation, you will at once think with me that you cannot be indifferent to what temples mean to you and whether you go there or no. And when the best of you continue to go to the temples and see to it that temples undergo a process of regeneration and the life of avarnas becomes purified, no Maharaja can help being moved by such a spectacle. I tell you if you have really understood the spirit of the Proclamation, the silent revolution that the Hindu life will undergo in Travancore will be irresistible and will overtake not only Cochin but every corner of Hindustan.

May God grant that even as the foundation of temple-entry in Travancore was laid in this place by humble workers like Madhavan and the late Krishnaswami and Kelappan, may God grant that you people of Vaikom will lay the foundation of the purification of Hinduism, and thus induce the Maharaja of Cochin to open all the temples in his State and thus render an equally great service to Hinduism with the Maharaja of Travancore.

_Harijan_, 6-2-1937

341. INTERVIEW TO A TEMPLE TRUSTEE, VAIKOM

[January 18, 1937]¹

I have not been a temple-goer but now that this liberty has come to me all of a sudden, I feel fascinated, and the divine stillness that surrounded the prayer meeting under the ashvattha tree in the temple yard now stimulates me to find new ways and means for attracting people to temples. My temple-going is not an idle thing. It is a definitely sacred thing that has come to me in my life at an opportune moment.

QUESTION: Would you say anything about the mode of worship?

¹ The trustee in question had earlier opposed the opening of temples to Harijans. Now he had come to express his satisfaction over what had happened.

² Gandhiji was at Vaikom on this date.
ANSWER: I will not criticize it. The new thing has come upon me with a newness which humbles me. I refuse to look at it with the eye of a critic. One thing certainly I have noticed, viz., the want of intelligence and devoutness on the part of priests.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 66-7

342. SPEECH AT ETAMANOOR

January 19, 1937

I am deeply grateful to you for your beautifully-worded Sanskrit address and the gift of the bark tree cloth. I cannot say that I am going to wear this cloth. For one thing it is too dear for me to wear, but it will adorn the museum that we have set up in Maganwadi containing specimens of village crafts.

As I was being taken round the temple and as I approached the central part of the temple, I had a Pulaya boy shown to me, and he boldly mounted up the steps with me. A few months ago, I should not have considered such a thing possible in my lifetime, but what often is impossible for man is easily possible for God to fulfil. And as I said last night and have repeated at several meetings, I see in this Proclamation the spirit of God working through the hand of the Maharaja. As a man, however highly placed he was, he could not have possibly worked the wonders that I see about me in Travancore. If he was a perfect autocrat, heedless of the feeling of his people, he could have issued this Proclamation, but he could by that act no more have touched your hearts than I could have by sending this Proclamation to you. He could not have made tens of thousands of savarnas brush shoulders with the so-called avarnas and go to the temples in a prayerful mood. For this change of heart—for I cannot call this thing by any other name—only God is responsible. Was I not here only a few years ago and did I not see the hardened features of thousands of people whom I could not move from the citadel of untouchability? That citadel at that time seemed to me to be harder than the hardest steel. And had I not a living faith in God, I should have despaired of your hearts ever being touched. But evidently the age of miracles is not gone. And I see today those very hard hearts having melted. I met last night a Nambudiri Shastri, intimately connected with the Vaikom temple, who, as I saw during our conversation, was the old friend with whom I had discussions during the Temple-entry Satyagraha at Vaikom. And I asked him whether he could confirm the conversation between him and me which took place then and which I recalled during my speech last evening. Well, in a few years’ time, that old man’s heart has melted like snow under the Travancore sun, and he and I, instead of finding ourselves in opposite camps, found ourselves last night congratulating the Government upon the Proclamation.

But congratulations are not enough. It would have been monstrous if you had not tendered congratulations to both the Maharaja and the Maharani. It is not enough that on an occasion like this thousands of you gather and without any distinction go to the people. This expression of joy, this meeting of savarnas’ and avarnas’ hearts must not be a matter of momentary enthusiasm. The process must be continued with redoubled vigour so that nobody would have the misfortune of describing Travancore as a land possessing unapproachables, invisibles and what not. The literature dealing with Pulaya and Pariah should be a thing of the past, to be recalled, if it is ever to be recalled, as relics of the past. And I assure you that this Proclamation will fail of its purpose if this change is not brought about in every department of life. The Maharaja and the Maharani have done their task. It is now reserved for you, the savarna men and women of Travancore, to go down to them whom we have persecuted as the outcastes of society, to fraternize with them and own them as members of our families. It must be heart-felt, real, genuine acceptance, without mental reservations, of the Proclamation. It must not be allowed to become a dead letter. It is not meant to be a dead letter. From the heart-to-heart conversations that I had the privilege of having with the Maharani and the Maharaja and the Dewan, I know they want it to be given full effect to. Take this, therefore, as an honest and herculean effort to purify Hinduism. That process of purification is no one man’s concern. It is the individual concern of every one of you here. May God give you enough strength for fulfilling the purpose behind the Proclamation.

_The Epic of Travancore_, pp. 205-7
343. SPEECH AT KUMARANELLOOR ¹

January 19, 1937

There is a special joy that I am experiencing this morning, having come to this temple and having seen what I have seen. I was duly prepared for this upliftment. I was told that this was one of the oldest and most important of private temples, that it was the sole property of the Nambudiris, and that when this temple was declared open, people thought that there remained nothing now to be done in connection with temple-entry. But when I came here and saw what I did see, the joy which was reserved for me was considerably enhanced. Here behind me is the trustee of the temple who took me to the temple with great affection. For this I was not unprepared, because it has been my rare good fortune to experience that personal affection throughout this pilgrimage. But what gladdened my heart was to see that he invited the so-called avarnas to come and enter the gates before he took me. And it did not appear to me an artificial act, but perfectly natural. Nowhere else has it happened like that during these seven days of my pilgrimage. Of course I do not notice the omission anywhere, for the so-called avarnas, or as I call them by the term of endearment ‘Harijans’, mixed freely with the others, and there was nothing more required by way of coaxing them to go into the temples. But it was most striking for me to observe that here our friend the trustee would not be satisfied until he drew the hesitating avarnas and brought them to my notice. I felt then that this was really the proper manner of giving effect to the Proclamation. The Proclamation does not say that the hitherto proud Nambudiris should take avarnas by their arms and give them the place of preference in the temples. Of course I own that the spirit of the Proclamation demands what this friend has done this morning, but then no prince can possibly dictate to the hearts of his people. All responses from the heart must be in their very nature spontaneous, and in this, for him, very natural act of expression of brotherhood I saw a proper fulfilment of the spirit of the Proclamation. My joy was further enhanced by my knowledge that Nambudiris occupy in this State, as in Cochin, a place of pride and privilege. If they even showed secret, sullen opposition to the Proclamation, it could be rendered ineffective.

¹ Delivered on the occasion of the opening to Harijans of a private Nambudiri temple, about two thousand years old, to which Gandhiji was specially invited
But here in this private temple, the stronghold of orthodox Nambudiris, the Proclamation is evidently being carried out both in letter and spirit.

I must here tell you a little secret. I tell you that I was most disinclined to visit Travancore and it required much effort on the part of Sjts. Govindan and Ramachandran to draw me out of Segaon, and at one time it seemed as though all their labours would be in vain. But things happened to melt my heart and I am being led, as a docile man or woman may be led, by the nose by Ramachandran and company. But the heartening experience that I have undergone here tells me that it would have been a stupid act of foolishness on my part if I had not visited Travancore, if only to see this temple and to see Harijans being led into it. Let this be an example to all Nambudiris and other savarnas to follow. That is a very fair illustration of what I mean when I say at so many meetings that the Proclamation is to be carried out in its full effect by the savarnas. You must know that the avarna Hindus, except those who have undergone training, do not know what the Proclamation is and what it means for them. The burden of drawing them out of the ghettos, to which our ignorance and folly have confined them, and letting them see the sunlight which is meant for all, and letting their hearts be warmed up by being led to the temples, lies on the savarnas. Let it not be said of Travancoreans that what Nambudiris who are supposed to be the highest caste in Travancore did, others failed to do. This burden of drawing the avarna brethren and sisters out of their dens depends no less on savarna women than on men. I do hope and pray that all savarna Hindus of Travancore will carry out the Proclamation to the fullest extent and deserve to be called the liberators of Hinduism, if not its saviours.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 208-10.

344. SPEECH AT THIRUVARPPU

January 19, 1937

I am told that this place was the scene of satyagraha and suffering. Whatever sufferings were gone through can be recalled with pleasure, now that the Proclamation has brought delight which the satyagrahis had not expected at the time they were going through suffering. I have no time today to give you a long speech nor do you need a long speech from me. All I had to say, all I could say, has been mostly said already, but this I cannot help saying that if you are to reap the rich fruits of the Proclamation, every one of you individually will have to work for it. This Proclamation ought not to be allowed to remain, as many rules and regulations are allowed to remain in their portfolios. This Proclamation is a charter of freedom to all avarnas and it washes out the sins of savarnas against avarnas. But it can only wash out these sins if the savarnas realize the full significance of the Proclamation. Therefore the savarnas should fraternize with the avarnas, not for demonstration but from their very hearts. You will then find that Travancore will be a place of pilgrimage for all the Hindus of India and it will also be a great landmark in the history of Hinduism. The burden of taking the message of Hinduism to everyone rests on the broad shoulders of savarnas; and remember that you will fail to do so unless your hearts respond to the Proclamation. May God give you the wisdom and strength to do so.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 211-2.

345. INTERVIEW TO BISHOP MOORE, BISHOP ABRAHAM AND OTHERS

January 19, 1937

Bishop Moore received Gandhiji cordially and welcomed the Temple-entry Proclamation as an important event. He inquired if the savarnas and Brahmins also welcomed it, or if there was any opposition on their part.

Gandhiji said he had seen no signs of opposition. He had met several thousands of people, visited several temples, and had found savarnas and avarnas entering the temples in perfect friendliness.

Bishop Abraham asked if the Ezhavas were ready to treat the Depressed Classes of lower castes on terms of equality.

Gandhiji said he could not reply with confidence but he was striving to emphasize that point everywhere, and he hoped that the Proclamation would be carried out in that spirit.

Bishop Moore . . . said that he had heard that Mr. Gandhi was disturbed over reports of Christian missionary work in Travancore, and that he was ready to remove any misunderstanding that it was possible for him to remove.

Gandhiji said that he was indeed surprised at the report of conversions of thousands of people in the Telugu country and in Travancore made in Bishop Pickett’s

---

1 The interview took place at Bishop Moore’s house at Kottayam. The object was to clear up misunderstandings.
speech in England and in a statement of the Church Missionary Society appealing for funds over the signature of Prebendary Cash. He could not understand how responsible Christians could make extravagant statements to the effect that thousands had experienced a spiritual awakening and accepted the Gospel. The Bishop of Dornakal had even stated that those thousands included not only the Depressed Classes but a large number of so-called high-caste Hindus. Gandhiji said he had challenged the truth of these statements in the columns of Harijan and had invited them to prove that he was wrong. He had also met leaders working in Andhra and asked them to make inquiries into the truth of these extravagant statements.

Bishop Moore confessed that he had not read either the appeal for funds or Bishop Pickett’s speech and could not, therefore, express any opinion thereon. He was quite sure, however, that no responsible missionary journal should ever publish statements that were not based on actual facts, and he wanted to assure Mr. Gandhi that no wrong information had ever been supplied from his diocese for which alone he could speak.

During the last year they could record 530 persons as having been baptized into the Anglican faith.

Bishop Abraham said he had been to the Andhra country and had seen with his own eyes that there was a tremendous awakening there even among the middle-class savarnas... he had addressed meetings which were attended by many of the high-caste people.

GANDHI: But that means nothing. Hundreds of students attend meetings addressed by Dr. Stanley Jones, but they cannot be said to seek conversion to Christianity. To say that hundreds attended meetings addressed by Christian preachers is very different from saying that hundreds have accepted the message of Jesus and from making an appeal for money in anticipation of people becoming Christians in large numbers.

Mr. Kuruvilla here put in whether Mr. Gandhi had any objection to their stimulating and responding to the spiritual hunger of people.

Gandhiji said it was wholly irrelevant to the issue.

Bishop Abraham said they were responding to the spiritual hunger of the people. Mr. Gandhi could have no objection to that?

Gandhiji said he could have no objection to responding to spiritual hunger, provided it was genuinely felt and expressed. But the matter was quite irrelevant to the discussion which was entirely about extravagant statements made by responsible people. He said to Bishop Moore that he would furnish him with a copy of the C.M.S. statement and he would like to know what Bishop Moore would have to say regarding it.

Harijan, 13-3-1937

1 Vide “What Is a Miracle?”, 19-12-1936
I am delighted to address for the first time during my pilgrimage a women’s meeting. I should therefore have given you much longer time and tried to make fuller acquaintance of you who have gathered together in such a larger number and where, for the first time, a sister has made her reception speech in Hindi. I thank you both for the welcome and for the Hindi address. I shall rest content with saying a few words on the Proclamation. Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, who will speak to you after I have done, will address herself to women’s problems as you may know that she is the Secretary of the All-India Women’s Conference.

I have often said that untouchability is a great blot on Hinduism and one that threatened the very life of Hinduism. The Proclamation has come in very good time to enable us to wipe out the blot. But by itself it cannot do so. The Maharaja’s work was finished with the Proclamation. It is for you to root out untouchability by carrying the Proclamation into full effect. This work of carrying through the process of purification devolves principally on savarna Hindus. I have often said that it is women alone who can be protectors of religion in as much as they are the custodians of the purity of the people. It is particularly women’s work because the purification of religion is ultimately a matter of the purification of one’s heart. And if the women have realized the true spirit of the Proclamation, they can give better effect to it then men. We have up to now regarded avarnas as untouchables, not only in our homes and our temples, but in our hearts. We have to regard them as our own kith and kin. If, therefore, there is anyone amongst you who thinks that the Maharaja has defiled the Hindu religion and the temples by issuing this Proclamation, she will err against humanity and her Maker. I must tell you that these temples were impure so long as the temple doors were closed against Harijans. This Proclamation has purified them all. None of you will, therefore, cease to go to these temples in the belief that they have been defiled. I hope that you will discard that superstition and fraternize with Harijan women and actively help in raising them to a level of social equality with you.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 213-5

Gandhiji delivered this speech in Hindi
347. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, KOTTAYAM

January 19, 1937

I know that this great assemblage is one of the many signs of rejoicings over the Proclamation which H.H. the Maharaja has given to the people of Travancore. Whilst it was but natural and your duty to tender congratulations to Their Highnesses and the Dewan, it would be wholly wrong if you exhausted your effort with these celebrations. Let your congratulations Their Highnesses be an earnest of your determination to make every effort to make the Proclamation as successful as human effort can make it. As I have suggested at various gatherings, the main burden of successfully working out the Proclamation must fall on the shoulders of those who have been regarded as savarnas. It is they who have to carry the message of liberation and hope to the desolate homes of those who are miscalled avarnas. It is their privilege and their duty to approach the humble huts of the so-called avarna brothers and sisters and take the message to them in a humble and prayerful mood. That would be some measure, however tardy, of reparation for wrongs done to those whom we have suppressed. It is and should be their proud privilege to stoop in order to raise those whom they have helped to sink lower and lower from day to day. So much today for the savarna Hindus.

I know Kottayam is a stronghold of the Christians of Travancore. Christians know there is between them and me an invisible but unbreakable bond. I venture, therefore, to suggest to Indian Christians, whether they are born Christians or have been converted to Christianity, that they too may not stand aside but take part in advancing the cause that the Proclamation implies. And as briefly as possible I propose to tell you what I mean. That document abolishes all distinctions between high and low that reigned supreme in Travancore as in other parts of India. If a human document can raise by a stroke of the pen all avarnas to the status of the savarnas—and this Proclamation does really do so—then the Christians in the State owe a duty to the Hindus which they dare not neglect. If you believe with me, as I know a large body of Christian opinion today does believe, that all the principal religions of the world are true, then you will aid savarna Hindus in the process of penitence and reparation they are expected to go through under the Proclamation.

1 The meeting was held in front of the Krishna temple and was attended by about 1,000 people. The Hindu, 20-1-1937, also carried a report of the speech.
It undoubtedly grieved me when some of the Depressed Classes felt in disgust towards Hinduism like going out of Hinduism and embracing some other faith. It was a matter of equal grief to me to hear of efforts made by people belonging to different faiths to catch, as it were, the Depressed Classes and remove them from the faith to which they have belonged for centuries. If you believe, as I know some do, that Hinduism is nothing but a body of hideous usages and superstitions, that Hinduism is a fraud upon humanity, then you cannot render better service to the avarna and savarna Hindus than by exposing this ‘fraud’. In the estimation of those who so believe, this Proclamation is an act which it would be their duty to resist and to show to the Maharaja that by issuing the Proclamation of liberation he is simply prolonging the agony and giving a new lease of life to a body of superstitions which were bound to die their natural death. But I know many Christians throughout the length and breadth of India do not regard Hinduism as a fraud upon humanity or a body of bad usages and superstitions. A religion which has produced Ramakrishna, Chaitanya, Shankara and Vivekanand cannot be a body of superstitions. As you know, and if you do not know it I want to declare, that I personally hold all principal religions of the world to be not only true but also to be equal.

I have endeavoured to study the Bible with the eyes of a devout Christian and the Koran with the eyes of a devout Mussalman, and I have not hesitated to assimilate whatever I have found to be good in both these scriptures. I have studied other scriptures of the world also. But I have singled these out for the sake of illustration. But, you might well ask, if I declare all these religions to be equally true and equally demanding my respect, what is the meaning of my remaining a Hindu? I shall tell you why. Latterly I have been endeavouring to describe to vast assemblages of men and women I have addressed what I regard as the essence of Hinduism, and I have been suggesting to them one incredibly simple mantra of the Ishopanishad and, as you know, it is one of the Upanishads that enjoy the sanctity of the Vedas. The very first verse of the Ishopanishad means simply this: God pervades everything that is to be found in this universe down to the tiniest atom. The mantra describes God as the Creator, the Ruler and the Lord. The seer to whom this mantra or verse was revealed was not satisfied with the magnificent statement that God was to be found everywhere. But he went further and said: ‘Since God pervades everything nothing belongs to you, not even your own body. God is
And so when a person who calls himself a Hindu goes through the process of regeneration or a second birth, as Christians would call it, he has to perform a dedication or renunciation of all that he has in ignorance called his own property. And then when he has performed this act of dedication or renunciation, he is told that he will win a reward in the shape of God taking good care of what he will require for food, clothing or housing. Therefore the condition of enjoyment or use of the necessaries of life is their dedication or renunciation. And that dedication or renunciation has got to be done from day to day, lest we may in this busy world forget the central fact of life. And to crown all, the seer says: ‘Covet not anybody’s riches.’ I suggest to you that the truth that is embedded in this very short mantra is calculated to satisfy the highest cravings of every human being—whether they have reference to this world or to the next. I have in my search of the scriptures of the world found nothing to add to this mantra. Looking back upon all the little I have read of the scriptures—it is precious little I confess—I feel that everything good in all the scriptures is derived from this mantra. If it is universal brotherhood—not only brotherhood of all human beings, but of all living beings—I find it in this mantra. If it is unshakable faith in the Lord and Master—and all the adjectives you can think of—I find it in this mantra. If it is the idea of complete surrender to God and of the faith that He will supply all that I need, then again I say I find it in this mantra. Since He pervades every fibre of my being and of all of you, I derive from it the doctrine of equality of all creatures on earth and it should satisfy the cravings of all philosophical communists. This mantra tells me that I cannot hold as mine anything that belongs to God, and if my life and that of all who believe in this mantra has to be a life of perfect dedication, it follows that it will have to be a life of continual service of our fellow creatures.

This, I say, is my faith and should be the faith of all who call themselves Hindus. And I venture to suggest to my Christian and Mussalman friends that they will find nothing more in their scriptures if they will search them, and I want the aid of everybody on earth—whether he is a Christian or a Mussalman or what else—to help the Hindus of Travancore to realize the lofty purpose that lies in this mantra. I do not wish to hide from you the fact that I am not unaware of many superstitions that go under the name of Hinduism. I am most painfully conscious of all superstitions that are to be found masquerading as Hinduism and I have no hesitation to call a spade a spade. I have not hesitated to describe untouchability as the greatest of these superstitions. But in spite of them all, I remain a Hindu. For I do not believe that these superstitions form part of Hinduism. The very canons of interpretation laid down by Hinduism teach me that whatever is inconsistent with the truth I have expounded to you and what is hidden in the mantra I have named, must be summarily rejected as not belonging to Hinduism. And I want you non-Hindus to help the so-called savarna Hindus to spread this truth in the midst of those whom they have hitherto regarded as untouchables, unapproachables, invisibles.

I felt that I could not do justice to this great meeting, especially a meeting that is held in a Christian stronghold, unless I was prepared to utter a truth I held dear as life itself. We all consciously or unconsciously pine and strive for peace on earth and goodwill amongst mankind. I am convinced that we shall find neither peace nor goodwill among men and women through strife among men of different religions, through disputation among them. We shall find truth and peace and goodwill if we approach the humblest of mankind in a prayerful spirit. Anyway that is my humble appeal to Christians who may be present in this great meeting. It is a privilege that may not occur again to any of you in your lifetime. As I have said so often elsewhere, whilst the hand that traced the signature on the Proclamation was that of the Maharaja, the spirit that moved him to do so was that of God. Would to God that that spirit might also fire everyone in Travancore to realize the implications of this Proclamation and to fire every one of you to advance the cause that the Proclamation enunciates.

I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the exemplary silence with which you have listened to my speech.

_Harijan_, 30-1-1937
It is the partiality of the President of the Travancore Harijan Sevak Sangh that has made it possible for you to read one of your addresses. I do not wonder at his partiality, because Changanacheri is his place. But then I see that this address is an entrapping address, because if it really represents your views the partiality of the President can be easily excused. This is the very comforting statement that you have made in your address: “Our religion has been purified.” Then you proceed to say: “All social inequalities have been removed. Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man has been established and we are in the happy land of Ramarajya in every sense of the term.” Well, if I was an inhabitant of Changanacheri and this address was read in my name and I had been asked to sign it, I should have to undergo various nights of vigil before I could subscribe to the statements therein. If you had rested content with saying that all these things had been implied in the Proclamation, of which you have spoken in enthusiastic terms, it would have been quite in place and I should have said that you were right in reading all these implications in the Proclamation and that God might help you to live up to those implications. But you have with a due sense of responsibility gone forward to make the bold assertions I have read out to you. I know you have made them in pardonable enthusiasm. But now I would ask you to abide by your statements and prove the validity of the assertions made here by your worthy conduct. I should not wonder if you were to prove equal to the assertions you have made here, because, as you have given me the information, this is a Nambudiri stronghold and this is a private Nambudiri temple that they have generously and whole-heartedly opened to the Harijans. The way to live up to every assertion is by every individual doing these very things in his or her own life, and I tell you that a life of spirituality truly lived is far more infectious than all the microbes put together can prove on this earth. And whereas we dread all these infections and would rather escape them, this is an infection which we would all welcome.

Let me hope and pray that all that you have said in this address may prove true in Travancore, and if it does so, I promise that it will prove true in the whole of India.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 222-3.
349. SPEECH AT THIRUVALLA

January 20, 1937

Lest I should forget them, you have been good enough to remind me of my many virtues. If I had them, really they would have taken care of themselves without your reminding me of them. And I am none the wiser for having been reminded of them. But one thing you have omitted to do which was really necessary. After reminding me of my virtues, you have gone into raptures over the Proclamation but you have failed to tell me what you propose to do with the Proclamation. As I have been telling at every meeting, it is not the Maharaja’s work, it is the work of every man and woman in Travancore to do his or her duty, viz., to go down to the dens of Harijans, pull them out of them and raise them to the same status and level that you occupy in society. Not till then will you have done your duty in terms of the Proclamation.

The Epic of Travancore, p. 225

350. SPEECH AT CHENGANOOR

January 20, 1937

I am grateful to you for the address that you have given to me. Of course it is all very well for you to present me with addresses. They have their value if they are properly coined and presented with the proper spirit behind them. When I say that they should be properly coined, I say that they should express the sentiment you really cherish. They should not contain fulsome praise of those to whom you present the address, but what you have done or are about to do should be stated therein for the information of the person to whom you present the address. And today, as the central theme of our rejoicing is the graceful Proclamation issued by the Maharaja, naturally you will express your aspirations and actions in terms of this Proclamation. And it does not matter in the least whether it is from the little children or from the Hindu public or the Youth League. You have not really drafted your address in that way but that does not matter. I am here to remind you of things that are expected of you

---

1. This was in reply to several addresses presented to Gandhiji at this place.
2. This had been presented to Gandhiji by the Nambudiris of Tazhman Mathan temple.
not only by the Maharaja and the Maharani, but of the things that the whole of India expects you to do. At the present moment the whole of India is really dumbfounded. It does not know whether such a thing could happen in this age. Orthodoxy is shaken to its foundations. It trembles to think of the consequences, not in a spirit of hostility by any means, but it is no doubt filled with suspicion and amazement. It wonders whether untouchability was not after all a sin and a crime against humanity. Now I can tell you what can be a net result of this doubt having entered the orthodox mind. One of the results is bound to follow, and it will wholly depend upon the condition of the savarna Hindus. The doubts of the orthodoxy will be dispelled like the morning mist at sunrise if the orthodoxy can really see that the savarnas of Travancore have washed themselves of the sin of untouchability. On the contrary, if they come to know or feel that you are not playing the game and that you are secretly harbouring untouchability in your hearts, then the orthodoxy will also harden their hearts. You will admit that such a result will be worse than that in which we are. Therefore let not the enthusiasm that I have seen vanish like smoke immediately these celebrations are over. On the contrary let it be said of you, savarna Hindus, that you have harnessed the energy born of this enthusiasm for the purification of Hinduism. And I am flattering myself with the belief that I am leaving with you the golden key for the solution of all the difficulties that may linger in your hearts. And that is to remember the first verse of the Ishopanishad and forget all about other scriptures. You can really drown yourself and be suffocated in the ocean of literature known as the scriptures. They are good for the learned and the wise, for they will humbly approach them, but I am sure that for the ordinary man in the street they are nothing but a burden. It is not I who say these things, it is what those who wrote these scriptures have said. I shall therefore leave this meeting with a free translation of that mantra. It simply means this: “God pervades everything that we see” Therefore it is literally true what the Western science tells us, that Nature abhors a vacuum, for there is nothing on earth where God is not. And if He occupies everything that is, there is nothing for us to occupy. Therefore, the mantra says: “You must renounce everything.” But it does not say: “Renounce everything and perish.” On the contrary it says: “Renounce everything if you want to live.” For that act of renunciation or dedication to God will result in God taking the responsibility of feeding you, of housing you and of clothing you.
And then the mantra closes with this beautiful advice or injunction: “Do not covet anybody’s riches.” That does not mean that you must not take away these addresses from me. But it means that your eyes must be single and pure, otherwise you would be criminals. There never was anything yours nor could there be. That applies to all our organs and if you follow what I say, action in terms of the Proclamation will be easy. If you understand this formula of Hinduism—this distilled wisdom of all the sages that lived—you will go and fraternize with Harijans, pull them out of their dens and raise them to the same social level that you enjoy.

351. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

ARANMULA,

January 20, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I have your two long letters. I understand what you say in them. I do not know that I shall be able to give more time to the village work than I am giving. My life has to be taken with its amazing limitations. It is enough that I live in the village and think out things in terms of the village. I must act as opportunity comes.

I do not mind Harijans working in the kitchen. Of course the attitude towards them has to be progressively as towards members of the same family. I am satisfied that that attitude is there. It only requires growing emphasis.

As to Munnalal he will leave if he is not satisfied with the work as it comes to him. I have to be patient.

I am glad you are quicker than before. I still expect to reach there on 24th.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6376. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9842.
352. SPEECH AT ARANMULA

January 20, 1937

The scene at this meeting is a visible demonstration of the fact that what I am just now doing is nothing but a pilgrimage. There is the river Pampa, there is the temple and here are thousands of people gathered together to rejoice over the Proclamation. Such are the scenes which are witnessed during the progress of pilgrims all over India. But then, if pilgrimages are undoubtedly matters that furnish joy for the soul, they must at the same time continue to remind us that we should purify ourselves continually in order to satisfy our Maker. All the more so because of the gracious Proclamation that His Highness the Maharaja has given us.

I know that here we are all Harijans and non-Harijans united without the slightest distinction. It is well if our hearts are also equally united. But if they are not united and we cherish all kinds of distinctions that have for ages past disfigured Hindu society, we are unworthy of that great Proclamation. Great is the responsibility that lies upon the shoulders of those who hitherto regarded themselves as belonging to the superior castes. The Proclamation invites such people to descend from the pedestal which they have occupied with no credit but with utter discredit to themselves and the faith which they have hopelessly misrepresented. Let me therefore hope and pray that all who have been called savarna Hindus will make the determination to get rid of untouchability from their hearts and make common cause with those whom they have suppressed for ages.

I must, as the pilgrimage is about to finish, put before you for your consideration and assimilation the Ishopanishad which I have been doing for the last four or five days. Let the mantra be your guide and your inspiration in everything you do. Its meaning can be understood by even a little child and it is this: God pervades the tiniest atom in this mighty universe, and seeing that He is the sole Ruler and indispensable Master of everything that can be conceived and that there is in this universe, we are called upon to dedicate everything to Him. In our ignorance we have fancied that so many things belong to us and that we possess them to the exclusion of everybody else. So long as we entertain such a belief, we are not really Hindus, though being born of Hindu parents we may call ourselves Hindus. Therefore, to be truly, deliberately and consciously Hindus, we have got to act according to this key mantra of all Upanishads and the whole of...
Hinduism and renounce everything, even our body, and all that we hold near and dear to us, and dedicate it at the feet of God. Then the mantra says if you do this, but not otherwise, God will give you your daily bread, a house to live in and clothes to cover your limbs with. And it proceeds further by saying that since God is all powerful and nothing is impossible for Him and since you have surrendered everything to Him, He is not going to neglect you. And hence you shall not covet anything that belongs to others, even a needle.

Now you can easily understand that in the presence of God, the Ruler of the Universe, who pervades everything—even those whom we have called the lowest of the low—all are equal. So you will see how necessary it was for His Highness to issue this Proclamation, if he was to make good his title to be called a Hindu prince.

Now as I leave you I would like to leave this mantra with you, and if anybody challenges you and says anything in the name of Hinduism which is contrary to this mantra, you can tell him that you know everything about Hinduism and everything contrary to it is not Hinduism.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 229-31

353. SPEECH AT ELANTHOOR

January 20, 1937

This is a typical village. I tender you my congratulations for having of your own initiative got rid of untouchability even before the issue of the Proclamation. The Proclamation now sets the seal of approval upon your work and makes your work acceptable to the whole of Travancore. Now if your village has been as advanced as you claim it to be in this address, I would expect marvellous results in virtue of this Proclamation. And I would tell you what I would expect you to do. It will not satisfy me—it ought not to satisfy you—that isolated Hindus calling themselves savarnas mix with those whom they call avarnas. I would now expect not only you, but the whole village, and all the surrounding villages, to forget all distinctions between Ezhavas, Pulayas, Parihas and others, and that even in your hearts you do not harbour any such distinction. If you will do this, I will also expect that there will be no Harijans perishing for want of food or clothing or for want of opportunities for education. I would expect your schools to be attended by Harijans as much as by non-Harijans. I hope you will bring about this result in no time.

If this Proclamation has, as if by magic, changed the hearts of the so-called sawarnas, then you will not measure the progress of the so-called Harijans—socially, morally, economically—in driblets. But the progress will be so phenomenal that it will be noticed by any observer in the way. In my opinion that is the implication of the Proclamation and nothing else. May I hope that you will live up to this implication?

_The Epic of Travancore_, pp. 232-3

354. SPEECH AT PANDALAM

January 20, 1937

Many glorious meetings I have had in Travancore have now accustomed me to meetings, however large they may be, and to what I may call pin-drop silence. It is a unique phenomenon that I have witnessed in this pilgrimage of mine. I have a vivid and happy recollection of meetings addressed in Travancore during my three previous visits. I well remember they were very orderly and gave me great satisfaction. But somehow or other this being in my opinion a purely religious pilgrimage of a humble penitent, I have been in need of perfect silence and I have been amply rewarded for my prayers.

At Kottayam I saw before me about this time last evening a vast assemblage of men and women whose number no one could calculate. It was a sea of human faces. I simply approached it in fear and trembling, because there was unfortunately no microphone arrangement there. The organizers had tried their best to make the arrangement, but they had failed. And yet, you will be pleased to learn from me that in that meeting, which was nearly ten times as large as this, there was wonderful silence for an hour or more. I was amazed at this absolutely unexpected silence and patience of thousands of men and women at this vast meeting. I am not mentioning these facts in order to satisfy idle curiosity or fill in the idle moments. I mention this in order to emphasize the fact that these meetings have a religious character, and I hope I am not wrong to infer from the behaviour of these vast crowds that they were fired within, perhaps unconsciously, by a religious spirit. Whatever may have been the cause of this divine silence that you have given me, I know that for me there can be no other meaning.

---

1 A report of the speech also appeared in Harijan, 6-2-1937.

I have regarded this, Proclamation as an act of Divinity, though outwardly it is the act of a great prince. Any man, if possible even braver than the young Maharaja and his wise mother, would have quailed if he had reasoned out the pros and cons of a Proclamation of this character, and yet it was this young Maharaja who signed the Proclamation which was complete for the purpose for which it was intended. And therefore it is that I have often said that though it was his hand that put the signature to the Proclamation, the spirit behind it was that of God working through the Maharaja. Having, therefore, looked at the Proclamation in that light and having approached this pilgrimage in fear and trembling, I have pined for the opening out of your hearts. I have not made a conscious effort to make any appeal to your reason, but I have made a conscious effort to make an appeal to your hearts and penetrate them, and unless I have deluded myself I fancy that I have made some approaches to your hearts. Whether I have done so or not, I want to repeat what I have said at the previous meetings: that the burden of carrying out the Proclamation in letter and in spirit rests principally on savarna Hindus. And the implication is emphatically this, that the savarna Hindus have to forget their wrong understanding of the message of Hinduism and the distinctions that they have up to now drawn between themselves and the avarna Hindus. The Proclamation emphatically means that untouchability, unapproachability and unseeability are all relics of the past and that those Hindus who have arrogated superiority for themselves will forget that they were superior human beings and will remember that they are the children of the same God and that all savarnas and avarnas are equal. The Proclamation is addressed to every Hindu, and every one of you is expected to show that he has understood it and he has to carry it out in his day-to-day dealings with those whom he has hitherto regarded as Pariahs of society. I do not propose to carry on this appeal to the savarna Hindus any further tonight.

The Maharaja had nothing to do beyond issuing the Proclamation. It was cent per cent truthful in so far as one would want to know his opinion in regard to untouchability. So far as I can see, there is nothing to amplify the Proclamation. Therefore, in your presence I propose to address a few words to His Highness, Her Highness and to their advisers.
Great as this Proclamation is and great as is its religious merit, greater still is the responsibility that His Highness has taken upon his shoulders, and also that of his advisers. Whilst without the effort of every savarna Hindu the Proclamation can undoubtedly be rendered ineffective, I must also say that the Proclamation will not have its full effect unless it is backed in an ample measure by State action. So far as I can see the Proclamation demands State activities in all departments of life. Of these I propose to take the religious first; because from it must follow activities in all the other departments. Temples have been matters of indifference, except to women, who have no capital save divine faith, and to men who from many mixed motives have been going to them. They have been neglected by what may be called the intelligentsia. The result has been that they have almost ceased to be repositories of Hinduism and have ceased to impart spiritual power to those who have followed the faith. They have ceased to shed unmistakeable spiritual fragrance in and about and around them. Then I venture to suggest that it is the duty of the State or of the Maharaja—if there is any distinction between the two, for he is the custodian of the vast majority of Hindu temples—that he should see to it that the temples are renovated spiritually and have the authority and sanctity that they used undoubtedly to have at one time. And I believe that it can only be done if they are in charge of priests who know what they have to do, who know something of the sanctity of them and of the duties to which they are called. In other words, they should not be ignorant people following their calling for a livelihood but they should be men who are proud of their privilege of bringing the message of God to temple-goers, showing by their own conduct and their life that these temples are abodes of Divinity.

Then there should be the correct kind of instruction given in these temples. The Harijans will be taken by the hand by someone in charge of temples and they will be told what they are expected to gain by temple-worship. This means undoubtedly, according to modern thought, a revolution in the upkeep and conduct of these temples. But the Proclamation itself is nothing short of a revolutionary document and if that revolution is to touch, as it ought to touch, the lives of all Hindus, naturally temples have to be abodes of the living God and not abodes of a mere mass of gold or other metals worked into figures. Then I should expect a history of these temples, understandable by the common folk, to be distributed free or at a cheap price to all who want to know what these temples are. That means a training school for training the right kind of teachers who will be entrusted with the religious training of the people. If some such thing does not happen, I fear that the purpose of the Proclamation, viz., to expect and to induce lakhs and lakhs of Harijans to go to these temples in a religious spirit, will fail.

So much for the religious department. Then I take the economic. The economic life of the Harijans has got to be lifted out of its miserable state. I venture to think that by a judicious and thoughtful working out of the programme, it can be prosecuted in a short time and with a limited financial outlay, in such a manner that Harijans may be easily able to hold their own by being taught to turn an honest chakram. Nor can the State now dare neglect the mental training—I mean literary—of these people. I know to my cost that today it is very difficult to carry on a connected conversation with Pulayas and Pariahs so that you can get a ready response even about simple facts of life.

Similarly, the State has to raise the social status of these people. They should be invited to all State occasions and functions, as for instance Durbars. They must not be allowed to feel that these functions are a sealed book to them, and that they should have to have another agitation before they can attain a social status entitling them to be invited or allowed to take part in those functions. But if the Proclamation bears the meaning I have given to it, then the social uplift of the Harijans has to come as if by magic, as the religious status of going to the temples has come.

In my humble opinion, in suggesting this fourfold programme of the uplift of the Harijans in the State I have not suggested any programme beyond the capacity or resources of a State like Travancore.

But having addressed these few words to the State in all humility, I want to come back to you. The State may resolve to do all these things, but its resolution will not mean the coming in of manpower in order to carry out all these things. And if, from the few words I have addressed to Their Highnesses and their advisers, you think that after all it is Their Highnesses who have to do everything and you have to do nothing, then I am afraid that my labours will have gone in vain. The requisite manpower has got to be supplied by you, and as a man of experience I will tell you that manpower cannot come by offers of money. Thus, for instance, men who are capable of taking the management of temples cannot be had by offering scholarships of hundreds of rupees. For such people have got to be fired by a religious spirit, by love of their own work, and should therefore be ready to work for a bare maintenance. It should be their proud privilege to take this training and to fit themselves for this highest task in life. Similarly, unless the State gets men required for giving Harijans educational training, the State can do nothing.

After all, there is a world of meaning about the title that the Maharajas of Travancore have adopted for themselves, viz., Padmanabhadas. They pride themselves in calling themselves servants of God, but that means that they are also servants of their people. So, as I said at one of these meetings, the Maharajas are not the first lords among the people of Travancore, but they are the first servants among the people who are also servants. But the first servants of the people will fare badly unless they are ably assisted by the people who are their fellow servants. Therefore the meaning of His Highness the Maharaja going to the temple every day and taking instructions as to his daily duties from Shri Padmanabhaswami means nothing less than that he should be assisted by his people for their own good—spiritual, religious, social, economic.

_The Epic of Travancore_, pp. 234-40

355. SPEECH AT KOTTARAKARA

_January 21, 1937_

It is a matter of great joy to be invited to open this private temple. Our friend Sjt. K.M.M. Narayan Nambudiripad deserves the very best congratulations from me, and I hope you will associate yourselves with me in giving him congratulations for following the great example of His Highness the Maharaja. Thereby he is simply living up to the best traditions of Hinduism. He is, therefore, by opening this and seventeen other temples belonging to him, rendering a distinct service in the process of purification of Hinduism. I have great pleasure in declaring the temple open.

_The Epic of Travancore_, p. 241
356. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, KOTTARAKARA

January 21, 1937

This is the very last stage of my pilgrimage in Travancore. I said elsewhere that I came here with great hesitation, equal reluctance, and in fear and trembling; and but for the very pressing and urgent wire of Sjt. Govindan you would not have seen me in your midst today. The telegrams were sent under the joint signatures of Sjt. Govindan and Sjt. Ramachandran. But Ramachandran being a child of Sabarmati, I might not have listened to him; but I dreaded the signature of an ex-judge of Travancore and, more than that, a leader of the Ezhavas. And so at last very reluctantly I capitulated; but having done so, I am free to confess that I am very glad that I capitulated. I am taking away with me spiritual treasures of which I had not dreamt before. Your magnificent temples were as much closed against me, by a voluntary effort on my part, as they were against the tallest amongst the Ezhavas, Pulayas and Pariahs, who were until the other day despised by the savarna Hindus. But having found the doors of these temples flung open by the very generous act of His Highness, I entered them with the same joy that must have been felt by the thousands of Ezhavas, Pulayas and Pariahs who must have gone to these temples since the Proclamation. After having entered responsible life, I cannot say that I ever was a habitual temple-goer. But the possibility for spiritual growth by entering these temples in a spiritual and devotional mood has dawned upon me, as it never before had, after all these visits to these temples in a devotional and prayerful mood. But, of course, one needs a proper attitude of mind before one can derive the highest consolation and spiritual joy from visiting these temples. As it is, I have just now come from having performed the opening ceremony of a private temple belonging to Sjt. K.M.M. Narayan Nambudiripad. The ceremony of opening this temple was equal to opening his other temples in Travancore, and I derived the keenest joy in the privilege to open this temple. I have opened several temples before now, but I cannot say that I had such joy in opening those temples. I had missed in those temples the presence of God. There seemed to me to be a kind of artificiality about the opening of those temples. Here, on the contrary, wherever I have gone, I have seen a spontaneity that I was not prepared for. Nor was I prepared for thousands of people waiting for my entry in these temples. No doubt they had come in order to see what must have been to them a zoological specimen. But I am quite certain that that was not the sole motive in thousands of them coming here and standing in silent and absolutely devotional mood. A scoffer and a sceptic might be easily misled in saying that all this is a figment of my imagination, and has no correspondence to reality. But if such is really the case, I am here to tell you that the whole of my life and growth are due to such figments of imagination and it would be true at least to say of me that I have needed these figments for my growth. And after all imagination is not such a despicable thing that you can neglect it altogether in mundane affairs of life.

Whatever it may be, I leave this word with you that if you will translate the Proclamation that His Highness the Maharaja, guided by Padmanabhaswami, has given you, you will have to identify yourselves completely with all and abolish the distinctions of high and low, savarnas and avarnas; and in order to assist you to do so, I want to translate for you the verse I have been putting before the people for the last four or five days. The meaning of that verse is this: God the Ruler, our Master and Lord, pervades everything in the universe down to the tiniest atom. It means that He is not merely in your heart or my heart but he is literally and absolutely in every one of the innumerable pores of our skin and the hair of our head. And, therefore, He is nearer to you and to me than our dearest ones. Then the first essential of Hinduism is that we realize the truth of this magnificent statement as we realize that we are sitting here and you are listening to me.
Having realized the truth, the seer proceeds to say that since God is so near to us and dominates all our actions, we must voluntarily renounce and dedicate at His feet all that we have regarded as our own. But even after that act of conscious and deliberate dedication and renunciation, we shall want to eat, clothe ourselves and house ourselves, and so the seer says you can only after this dedication use these necessaries of life as if they were given to you by God Himself. That requires the same trust, the same faith and the same love that a child without reasoning it out for himself has for his parents. He never reasons out for himself that it is all well with them and for him so long as his parents are there and so long as they continue to anticipate and supply his wants. Our parents are as much mortal as we ourselves, and therefore it is infinitely more logical and necessary for us that we should have as much faith in God to anticipate and supply our wants.
And having told us these three things, the seer proceeds to warn us against coveting anybody’s possessions. Now you will see that if we believe in this mantra—and every Hindu is bound to believe in it—there would be no distinctions like those which have been sapping the very foundations of Hinduism and Hindu society.

Now you can also at once realize why temples are and must be an integral part of our lives. We are so easily forgetful of our obligations that we have to renew our vows of loyalty to God, renew our renunciation and dedication from day to day. These temples are the visible symbols of God’s power and authority. They are, therefore, truly called the houses of God, the houses of prayer. We go there in a prayerful mood and perform, first thing in the morning after ablutions, the act of dedication and surrender. Scoffers and sceptics may say that all these are figments of imagination, that we are imagining God in the images we see. I will say to these scoffers that it is so. I am not ashamed of confessing that imagination is a powerful factor in life. The temple is not a house of God for, say, my cow, although the cow is as much my fellow-being as any human being. But God has not blessed the cow with imagination, and her presence in the temple has no effect on her, but my presence has a well-defined effect, because I have imagined that the particular temple contains the presence of God.

Therefore, I would love to leave this mantra with you and tell you that whatever is inconsistent with this mantra you must summarily reject as not Hinduism, and having assimilated all that there is in this mantra, you need not worry about other books that pass by the name of Hindu scriptures. Far be it from me to suggest that all else is absolutely worthless or harmful. There are undoubtedly worthless things that are current as Hindu Shastras, but there are also priceless treasures hidden in these books. But you and I have not the time to study them and even if you had the time, I would utter a word of caution to the effect that if a study of the scriptures confuses your mind, it would be well to leave them alone and derive your comfort from this mantra to the exclusion of everything else.

And now with a brief reference to my happy experience in Travancore and courteous performance of the obligation that a visitor owes to his hosts, I shall close the proceedings.

I and the whole of my company owe a deep debt of gratitude to the organizers of this pilgrimage who left no-stone unturned to make it as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. I am deeply grateful to Their Highnesses and to Sachivottama Sir C.P. Ramaswami...
Aiyar for having extended to me and to my party the hospitality of the State. Naturally this hospitality made my passage through Travancore—and it has been such a rush—free of difficulties and afforded me comforts which otherwise I should not have received. But more than to these high personages and the managers of this pilgrimage, our thanks are due to those who were in actual charge of my day-to-day programme. For instance, the chauffeurs of the three cars that were placed at our disposal were unremitting in their attention, and I am happy to tell you that they did their work without a single untoward accident. They willingly did their work, never minding whether it was night or day. And so also did the cooks, for whom, I assure you, it was a laborious task to prepare our meals from stage to stage. We were never at one place for more than 24 hours. Almost invariably the breakfast had to be taken at one place, the lunch at another place and the dinner at a third place. But these cooks were ever ready for the tasks allotted to them. And there was the officer in charge of these who accompanied us from Trivandrum and supervised everything. He has been equally unremitting in his attention and studiously courteous. But for the hearty co-operation of all these friends whom I have named, we could not have negotiated this pilgrimage without anyone of us getting ill.

And then I may not omit the Tahsildars at every place who were ready to render every assistance required. My thanks are due to every one of them and to others whom I may have inadvertently omitted to mention.

I am just reminded that I had neglected that necessary limb of the law, I mean the Police. The Police have not acted after the proverbial manner to which we are accustomed in India. They really acted in the most gentlemanly manner for which the Police in England are celebrated throughout the world. Whatever Englishmen may be here in India, the English Police constable in England is really a gentleman. I understand that every morning when he is sent out on duty, he is required to repeat the formula that he is not a master but a servant of the people. He has to deal courteously with innumerable people with whom he has to come in daily contact and he may not handle even criminals roughly. And as English law, like all law, requires that no man should be considered guilty unless he is so adjudged by law, the Police in England are taught to be courteous even to people who may be found guilty of murder and caught red-handed. And so you understand what high praise I am bestowing on the Police here when I say that they behaved in the same gentlemanly manner as they behave in London. Naturally, therefore, they are entitled to the same thanks that I have given to the others I mentioned before.

Lastly, I would thank you, the present audience, and ask you not to forget that the carrying out of the Proclamation rests with every one of you individually.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 241-8

357. SUMMARY OF SPEECHES AT PRAYER MEETING IN TEMPLES

[January 12/21, 1937]

I suppose it is true of temples in India—in the South as well as in the North—that there are courtyards attached to them where bhajan parties give their bhajans and teachers give their discourses. But what I propose to do here and what I have been doing for some days is somewhat different from what I have described to you.

Ever since my return to India we have had, in our Ashram and wherever I have gone, prayers about this time every evening, and I have been so very much enthused over my pilgrimage that I had been longing to have my prayers under the shadow of your grand temples. So I enquired of the trustees whether I could have a prayer meeting under the shadow of the presiding deity of the temple which I am visiting for the first time in my life. The permission was readily given and I am grateful to the trustees for it.

I shall now explain to you the various part of the prayer we have every evening. I am going to commence by reciting the first verse of the Ishopanishad which I have been explaining at various meetings. I must give you the gist of the verse which I consider to be the bedrock of Hinduism without which Hinduism is nothing and with which Hinduism need not be anything else. God the Creator and Ruler pervades every atom, ever so tiny, in the universe, and therefore seeing that it is all God’s and God pervades everything, we have to surrender

---

1 Mahadev Desai says: “Whenever we happened to be near a temple in the evening, we used to have our evening prayer in the temple precincts. Gandhiji explained everywhere in brief the meaning of various parts of the prayer. This is what he said at these prayer meetings.”

2 Gandhiji was in Travancore from January 12 to January 21.
everything and renounce everything in His favour and eat or enjoy or use just what He gives from day to day. The verse closes by saying: “Do not covet anybody’s riches.” There is nothing so satisfying and beautiful in all the scriptures of the world as this mantra and it enunciates a universal truth applicable to all.

This will be followed by a recitation of the 19 last verses of the second chapter of the Bhagavad Gita. They tell us what we should do to become good Hindus, how we should behave towards one another and towards ourselves.

Then since all cannot understand Sanskrit we have a simple bhajan or hymn from one of our saints who devised this beautiful medium to convey to us the essence of Hinduism. We draw our bhajans from the exhaustless stores of Kabir, Tulsidas, Surdas, Nanak, Mirabai, Tyagaraja, Tukaram, and other saints of India.

But there are others who cannot understand even these simple bhajans, and so to direct their attention Godward we simply repeat the name of Rama.

And then since our recent penetration into the villages we have readings from Tulsidas’s Ramayana which is one of the gems of our religious literature. It is known to millions of villagers in North India, and its music is such that even listening to its chant will uplift you.

Now I hope you will follow the prayer somewhat intelligently.

The Epic of Travancore, pp. 249-51

358. INTERVIEW TO “THE HINDU”

MADRAS,
January 22, 1937

This visit to Travancore has been in every sense of the term a pilgrimage for me. The Harijan tour of Orissa, which in part I made on foot, I did describe as a pilgrimage. But it was not a pilgrimage in the orthodox sense of the term, except perhaps in the language of Nandana. Has it not been said that he walked miles in order to see God face to face in the temple of his imagination, while knowing that the temple doors would be shut in his face? The difference, however, is that he succeeded in being admitted to the temple, whereas in Orissa, I failed hopelessly.
To Travancore I went in the spirit of an orthodox pilgrim knowing beforehand that the very temples that were closed to me because they were closed to fellow Harijans, were open for me and them. In this sense this was the very first pilgrimage I had ever undertaken in my life. Though before I decided not to visit temples that were closed to Harijans, I visited some temples, it was not as a pilgrim. It was part of the tour or tours undertaken for other purposes, for instance khadi and Khilafat. But this was definitely to visit numerous temples in Travancore. And I must say that my most sanguine expectations were more than realized.

The so-called savarnas and the so-called avarnas mingled without distinction, in their thousands, everywhere I went. They entered the numerous temples without let or hindrance. The officiating priests conducted their service and distributed flowers, sandal paste and prasadam without the slightest hesitation. I saw no sullenness in their faces. The whole scene seemed to me to be a spontaneous response to the Proclamation and a recognition of the fact that it was meeting a long-felt want. I had the fear that Harijans would not flock to the temples as they did. I had also the fear that this long deprivation might have made them indifferent to temple worship, nay, indifferent to religion itself. Evidently it was not so. They must have felt the craving, consciously or unconsciously, for the worship of which they were deprived, when the other Hindus, called savarnas, were not. So it appeared to me that they came into their own naturally; and, therefore, there was no difficulty about their knowing what a devotional spirit was or how they should worship.

I know thousands came to the temples, and lined the roads leading to them. The silence that they observed was exemplary and worthy of the sacredness of the occasion. This moved me to my innermost depths and I could not help giving vent to some of the expressions that I did in my speeches. They came, all of them, out of the feeling in my heart. I was called to the many meetings fully unprepared. There was no time left by the organizers for me to think out what I should say. When, therefore, I said that though the hand that traced the signature to the Proclamation was that of the young Maharaja, the spirit behind was that of God, I meant it literally.

I can only hope that this great step taken by the Maharaja, under the wise guidance of his mother and the advice of his Dewan, will be followed up by Cochin and the other Indian States and even in British India. I was therefore delighted to read in The Hindu of yesterday that Professor K. Sundararaman, who is known to be a sanatanist, has suggested that there should be enabling legislation in British India, empowering trustees, wherever they think it desirable and necessary, to open temples under their charge to the so-called untouchables, precisely on the same terms as they are open today to other Hindus.

The sooner such legislation is brought about, the better it is for Hinduism and for Hindus. What is happening in Travancore is likely to happen in all the other parts of India, because Hindu nature in Travancore cannot be different from Hindu nature elsewhere. After all, only a few months ago, nobody was prepared for the great event in Travancore. As a matter of fact, it was thought then that Travancore would not give the lead as it has bravely done; but that it would be the last to throw open its mighty temples to Harijans. But the-unexpected has happened; and that constitutes a miracle of modern times. Travancore has shown the way and it would be a great pity if it is not followed, as I have suggested, by the other Indian States, and by British India, as Prof. Sundararaman has suggested.

The Hindu representative desired Gandhiji to say a word to the orthodox.

Of course, orthodox opinion can do a great deal. I see that some meetings have been held in Tamil Nad, disapproving of the Proclamation. I hope, however, that this disapproval is no proof of general disapproval by the orthodoxy. They ought to recognize the time spirit. No true religion can tolerate distinctions between man and man. The sooner, therefore, the orthodox people recognize the necessity of a change, the better it would be for the faith of which they regard themselves as special custodians. I hope, therefore, that they will follow the lead given by Prof. Sundararaman.

Replying to a question regarding the State action he desired to be taken, following the Proclamation, in the directions he mentioned in his speech at Pandalam, Gandhiji remarked:

It is not an ambitious programme. I have not the least doubt it can be easily worked. Only there must be the will.

The Hindu, 22-1-1937
359. SPEECH AT HARIJAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL, KODAMBakkAM

January 22, 1937

Gandhiji said that he was glad to remain in their midst even for a few hours. If they were wise and prudent, they ought to keep the premises of the institution spick and span. He saw a number of cobwebs in the roofing and also pits in the compound. The residential students should see that these defects were removed. The management was paying a heavy rent of Rs. 40 per mensem for the building and if the students made a wise use of the place, they could get that amount out of it. Another thing he noticed was that there was no spinning and weaving. If they took to spinning and weaving, say, at least, for an hour a day, it would doubly benefit them. They could make their own cloth and sell also the extra cloth woven by them. Those who were in control of this institution should consider whether it was practicable to adopt his suggestion. He would like the inmates to remember the two things he had mentioned.

The Hindu, 23-1-1937

360. SPEECH AT KODAMBakkAM

January 22, 1937

While I was in Travancore, offering prayers in the presence of huge assemblies, pin-drop silence prevailed. A divine silence pervaded the atmosphere. But here, even in this small assembly, there is not that silence. I do not think that the devotion I saw at Travancore was due to a fit of enthusiasm. If you here have , on a modest scale, that kind of religious spirit which is now in Travancore, you will also see the same silence pervading devotional meetings here. I hope you will remember it. If Hinduism in the future is to live as one of the great religions on earth, a religious revival such as the one in Travancore has got to be brought about throughout the length and breadth of India. I invite you to reason out the pros and cons of it by your individual conduct.

I shall now say a few words about the prayer recited. The first recital was of the last nineteen verses of the second chapter of the Bhagavad Gita. These verses are being sung at evening prayers because they are reminders to every Hindu of how he should conduct himself on earth. The second part of the prayer is a bhajan from old saints, which is for those who do not understand Sanskrit. Since there are millions in this country who cannot even recite bhajans, our forefathers have discovered a method which is a mere recital of the name of God whom you recognize as Rama, Krishna or by thousands of other names. Then the last thing is a recitation from Tulsidas’s Ramayana. This is a later introduction; since the village movement has been started, it has been found necessary to take some such thing to the villagers. Tulsidas’s Ramayana is known to millions of Indians north of the Vindhya Range. I regard this Ramayana as one of the richest spiritual treasures that humanity possesses. Its music is lofty and its language equally lofty.

Some sort of evening prayer before retiring to bed is necessary. Just as we require food for the body, so also we require, in the shape of prayers, food for the soul, for we know and recognize that there is something besides our body. If you try prayer for some time sincerely, you will discover with me that whereas you may go without bodily food for some time, even with profit, you may not desire to go without the spiritual food. If prayers are offered both in the morning and evening, you will soon find that a time will come when you will be disgusted if you omit to offer prayers.

In conclusion, Gandhiji appealed to the gathering to give donations to the Harijan Institute which was doing useful work for the Harijans.

Small cash, jewels, watches and fountain pens were offered. Gandhiji humorously asked Srimati Lakshmi, daughter of Mr. Satyamurti, “What are you going to give?” She immediately took out a pair of gold bangles from her hands and gave them to Gandhiji.

The Hindu, 23-1-1937

361. INTERVIEW TO AN EGYPTIAN

[January 22, 1937]¹

Question: What do you think of communism? Do you think it would be good for India?

Answer: Communism of the Russian type, that is communism which is imposed on a people, would be repugnant to India. I believe in non-violent communism.

Q. But communism in Russia is against private property. Do you want private property?

¹ Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”

² According to Mahadev Desai the interview took place when Gandhiji was preparing to go to bed because he was to get up at 3 o’clock the next morning to visit the cyclone-affected areas. This he did on January 23.
A. If communism came without any violence, it would be welcome. For then no property would be held by anybody except on behalf of the people and for the people. The millionaire may have his millions, but he will hold them for the people. The State could take charge of them whenever they would need them for the common cause.

Q. Is there any difference of opinion between you and Jawaharlal in respect of socialism?

A. There is, but it is a difference in emphasis. He perhaps puts an emphasis on the result, whereas I put on the means. Perhaps according to him I am putting over-emphasis on non-violence, whereas he, though he believes in non-violence, would want to have socialism by other means if it was impossible to have it by non-violence. Of course my emphasis on non-violence becomes one of principle. Even if I was assured that we could have independence by means of violence, I shall refuse to have it. It won’t be real independence.

Q. But do you think the English will leave India to you and go back peacefully as a result of your non-violent agitation?

A. I do think so.

Q. What is the basis of your belief?

A. I base my faith in God and His justice.

Q. You are more Christian than we so-called Christians. I will write these words down in block letters.

A. You must, otherwise God would not be God of Love but God of violence.

_Harijan_, 13-2-1937

362. LETTER TO PYARELAL

January 23, 1937

CHI. PYARELAL,

I passed quite a few days considering whether I should write to you or talk to you. I am merely putting on a brave front. My fear of you does not allow me to do anything. But lest I should repent later I am overcoming my fear of writing to you.

Why am I afraid? Is it because you have always been scared of me? But you had no reason to do so, while I have every reason to fear you. Must you still torment me? Have some pity on me.

Why do you not believe that even man’s actions are prompted by the will of God? Who has been unfair to you, the world or God? Why should you fight against God? Suicide is an affront to God.

Dispel my fear if you can. Allow me to sit in peace and work. I would be satisfied even if you only made rotis for me. I would be content even if you just remained before my eyes. Why should you believe that only what you think is knowledge?

What should I write? I am always praying to God that He may grant you good sense and I may not lose you!

Blessings from

AN UNHAPPY FATHER

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

363. SPEECH IN AN ANDHRA VILLAGE

[January 23, 1937]

I want you to be strictly honest with me and tell me how many of you have suffered and how many have not. I have worked on many an occasion in distressed areas, e.g., in Bihar, where the distress was infinitely greater than here, but even there cent per cent people had not suffered. If several thousands had suffered, several hundreds had escaped. Now I would ask such of you as have actually suffered to raise their hands. I am glad, and I know that those who have suffered would not come to attend these meetings. I should have to go to them. Then please make the beginning, and those of you who have not suffered please pay for the sufferers as much as you can.

Harijan, 13-2-1937

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Mahadev Desai says: “Gandhiji was invited . . . to give a day for the cyclone area. Gandhiji could not resist the request . . . and he hurried through 129 miles from Nidubrol to Bezwada, taking on his way places like Chirala, Bapatla, Vetapalem, Gollapalem, Timmasundaram, Paruchuru, Chilkaluripeta and Guntur, making collections.”

2 According to Gandhi—1915-1948, Gandhiji was in Andhra on this date.

3 Very few hands were raised.
364. SPEECH IN AN ANDHRA VILLAGE

[January 23, 1937]

I have been wandering from 6.30 through the cyclone area, but I cannot say that I have seen much. If I really wanted to see the cyclone area, I should not have gone about like a lord in a car but should have walked through it. But I had only a few hours and there is no time left for anything like a study of the situation. The only thing I can do, having come here, is to say a word of comfort. I know that my voice cannot reach the Government. I have no influence with them, nor have I any with those in charge of affairs here. But I can certainly say that though everyone else may forsake you, God never forsakes people in distress. When I studied Tamil many years ago I came across a proverb which I cannot forget. This is it: Tikkattravannukku Daivametunai, which means, ‘for those who are helpless, God is the help.’ But it should not remain merely on our lips, it should enter our hearts, and then no matter how many cyclones we have, we shall rejoice within. That also does not mean that you will be lazy. A man who has faith in God works twenty-four hours, for He has given us hands and feet. And if we use them, He will give us food and clothing too. So you must not expect me to weep with you. My function is to make those who weep forget their sorrow and smile. And I know you know how to smile. But those only can smile well who know how to labour with their hands and feet for others and, especially in a place like this, those can smile who divide their good fortune with others. If the powers that be give us help, we shall receive it gratefully, but if it does not come, we will not commit suicide or swear at them, nor become misanthropes instead of philanthropes. You must therefore be cheerful and help your less fortunate brethren. I am coming from a place where a gentleman has given away six acres of land for Harijans. Those who are wealthy will, I hope, follow his example.

Harijan, 13-2-1937

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
365. SPEECH AT GUNTUR

[January 23, 1937]

I cannot estimate the actual extent of the damage, but I may say that I have seen many a house utterly destroyed, more houses where the roofs had been blown off, many huts remain utterly uninhabitable even after three months. Mighty trees have been bent from their roots and there were innumerable fields from which crops were swept away. It seems to me that the relief granted by Government and sent to the Committee by the public was wholly inadequate to this emergency. At Vinayashramam, when it was quite dark, hundreds of men and women were eager to see me and when I started my mission of begging, there was not a man or woman that did not pay. Some sisters gave away their jewels. I have no influence with Government. I can only make an appeal to them, if my voice can reach them.

Harijan, 13-2-1937, also The Hindu, 25-1-1937

366. SPEECH AT BEZWADA

[January 23, 1937]

Mahatmaji, at the outset, referred to the heavy damage done to a portion of the Guntur District by the recent cyclone and regretted that he had no time to narrate his experiences of his tour in that affected area. When Guntur was affected, people in Andhradesha thought that the whole of Andhradesha was afflicted and so there was not sufficient contribution to the Cyclone Relief Fund. Proceeding he said:

I hold it is not true. I commenced collecting subscriptions even at Vinayashramam and other affected areas. In God’s dispensation, even in the most affected areas, there are some who escaped affliction and can contribute to the relief of the distressed. Necessarily people from the unaffected areas also came to see me. As it is usual in Andhradesha they contributed liberally. I have been rushing through space and so I had no time to count the collections. Many ladies gave away their jewels. I can say I have collected roughly Rs. 1,500. If I had more time, I would have collected more money. Because several weeks have passed by, do not think no further relief is necessary. Some of the vast damages are irreparable. There are some humble

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Gandhiji spoke in English and the speech was translated into Telugu.
huts which require adequate and immediate relief. For want of sufficient funds, they are still left in the same state. Some are roofless and some wall-less. If money comes, they will be repaired. I want you to give at this meeting as much as possible. Even afterwards, continue sending liberal contributions to the Cyclone Relief Fund. Let it not be said of the people in Andhradesha that homes were destroyed, crops were swept away, trees were uprooted, men and cattle killed, and yet no person in Andhradesha lifted his finger to organize relief. Because a part has been affected, let no one say that the whole of the province has been affected. It is altogether wrong to expect that Bombay would relieve the distress. People in Bombay will not see the havoc. You can see it within a few miles of you. You must do all in your power before you look to any other province for help.

_Harijan_, 13-2-1937, also _The Hindu_, 25-1-1937

367. CONUNDRUMS

A friend has addressed me the following conundrums:

(1) If temples are thrown open to the Harijans, there is danger of their next insisting on being admitted to all the parts where the priest is admitted, only because they satisfy the test of personal cleanliness.

(2) Your statement that God does not reside in temples where Harijans are not admitted seems to me to be a one-sided and therefore misleading statement. In my opinion it is as untrue to say that God is not in temples where Harijans are not admitted as that God is to be found only in temples and not outside. It challenged, as it were, the omnipresence of God. He is everywhere; there is no place where He is not.

(3) Then, you say that Hinduism must perish if untouchability lives. But Hinduism has continued to exist all these years in spite of the institution of untouchability, and there is no reason why it should be otherwise now or in future. Nor should you forget that it is Hinduism with its much-abused institution of untouchability that, on your own admission, has in the past brought you spiritual peace and consolation.

Now, for my reply. A man of faith may not shrink from his present duties or deviate from the right path for fear of possible difficulties in the future. The only thing for us, therefore, is to proceed by implicitly accepting absolute equality between ourselves and the harijans and to give them the same credit for reasonableness as we claim for ourselves. All past experience goes to show that they do not resent such restrictions as are reasonable and apply equally to the savarna Hindus, but they naturally do not and cannot be expected to appreciate and accept ex-cathedra usages that discriminate between savarnas and avarnas, and between the different groups among the avarnas themselves, as these smack of invidiousness and offend against reason.

---

1 The Gujarati original of this was published in _Harijanbandhu_, 24-1-1937. This translation is by Pyarelal.

(2) True, the statement that God does not dwell in temples from which Harijans are excluded is one-sided and therefore true in a certain and limited sense only. But does that not apply to human speech itself? But we have not on that account condemned or discarded the use of human speech. With all its imperfections as a vehicle for the expression of truth, we must rely on it for all practical purposes, or it would spell an end of all human intercourse. Tulsidas has made Rama say in his Ramayana that God dwells only in the hearts of the good and the pure, not of those who are wicked or evil-minded. Now this statement, again, is only partly true. But still more untrue and mischievous in its pragmatic effect would be its reverse, viz, that God dwells in the hearts of the wicked and evil-minded too and actuates them in their evil deeds, though as a strictly scientific statement of truth it would be perhaps nearer the mark. In a strictly scientific sense God is at the bottom of both good and evil. He directs the assassin’s dagger no less than the surgeon’s knife. But for all that good and evil are, for human purposes, from each other distinct and incompatible, being symbolical of light and darkness, God and Satan, Ahriman and Ormuzd respectively. My statement, therefore, that where Harijans are excluded there God is not, must stand.

(3) My correspondent’s argument here altogether lacks point. The slow disintegration of Hinduism one can see even today taking place under our very nose, mainly and principally in consequence of the curse of untouchability. Anyone who has eyes can see it. A moribund, life-in-death sort of existence should not be mistaken for life; in fact it is more distressing than death itself. If a person like me can today derive spiritual force and consolation from Hinduism, it is because I have never regarded untouchability as an integral part of Hinduism. It may perhaps be objected that the term ‘disintegration of Hinduism’ which I have used is misleading since disintegration of Hindu society need not necessarily mean the disintegration of Hindu religion. The objection is based on a fallacy and is only partly valid. In mundane sense a faith can have no existence apart from its votaries. It may personally console me even if I can bear witness to my faith as its sole surviving representative; but of what avail would it be to those millions who fell away from it?

_Harijan_, 20-2-1937

368. _HARIJAN ASHRAMS IN KATHIAWAR_

My help is expected in raising of funds for these Ashrams. I am sorry to say that my plight is as pitiable as that of the man who having once burnt his tongue with milk, blows even on buttermilk before drinking it. This does not mean that no one should help those ashrams. I can no longer request people or write to them as I did in the past. I do not have the courage to do so. But those who have been supporting such ashrams should make inquiries for their own satisfaction and continue to help them if they are satisfied. It has never happened with regard to any institution in the world that all the workers have turned out good. This should not stop all the public activities. If some workers have proved to be false coin, there are others who have been carrying on their work in keeping with moral principles and have brought credit to their institutions. The work of Harijan welfare will go on and it should go on. All that is necessary is that the organizers who have so far depended on me should give up all hopes of me. I am alive today, but may not be tomorrow. How long can one trust one’s physical frame? Hence the organizers should consider my pitiable condition and, relying on themselves, bring credit to the institutions to which they belong. Those who are engaged in Harijan welfare activities or any other service should never give up faith or their work.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu_, 24-1-1937
369. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

[January 24], 1937

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUL SALAAM,

We reached here today. Kanti went to Poona taking Saraswati with him. He will come to Bombay with her. Paparamma had been to Bangalore but could not come here.

Sharma has met you. If you wish to come and see Saraswati you may.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 597

370. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 25, 1937

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

You did not write to me probably because I was touring. We returned yesterday. Write and tell me how you are. Come if you wish. Don’t feel hesitant. I got a letter from Madam Wadia. She has acknowledged the letter. Prabha is with me. Saraswati is fine.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 373

371. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

January 25, 1937

CHI. LILI,

I have had no letters from you recently. We returned from the tour yesterday. I had a letter from Nanavati from which I learnt that your brother could not be said to have improved yet. You will have got my last letter. I hope you are following the suggestions I made in it.

1 The date is illegible in the source. However, Gandhiji arrived in Segaon on January 24, from where the letter is obviously written.
Tell Nanavati if he is there that I didn’t reply to him since he told me he would be reaching there about the 25th. Have you taken your little pair of scissors with you or left it here?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9354. Also C.W. 6629. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

372.LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

SEGAON, WARDHA,

January 25, 1937

BHAII GHANSHYAMDAS,

I had been hesitating to go to Travancore but it was good I did. God knows what the others got but I for one got more than money. You will find an account in Harijan. Double it and you will have an idea of what I mean.

I saw the Maharaja and the Maharani. The interview was good. We talked fully and frankly. Such unprecedented awakening among Harijans, and of such a nature, would not have been possible in any other way.

My belief is getting stronger that the branches can get from the centre not funds but moral support and prestige. If they are not satisfied with this they may well close down or work independently. In that eventuality we may do what we can through the agency. Those branches should be regarded useless that cannot collect funds to meet their expenditure. I feel no necessity for waiting for a year in this respect. Whatever changes in Harijan Nivas are contemplated need not be put off for a year. Why not reduce the unnecessary expenses from now? But of course Thakkar Bapa’s assent is required and Malkani too must be consulted.

I am trying to draw Dinkar and have already sent a letter to him.

The correspondence with Parameshwari is still continuing. I am awaiting one more letter from him and shall write to you further when I receive it. I have now agreed that he may be authorized to form a new institution and that he may do what he wants so long as our work goes on. The condition solely is that he should be able to carry on with the funds available and without seeking loans.
It will be good if you can come over for a few days when you can find some time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8028. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

373. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

January 26, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I got your letter. It does not become you to say that you should like to go Rasik’s way. If you believe that you are taking due care of your health, I would have nothing to say.

I thought you were joking when you said that you wished to fly to Paparamma. On the subject being mentioned casually, Prabhavati told me that you really wanted to fly to Trivandrum. If this is true, then it is something I don’t like. The aeroplane is not for the poor or for a man who is patient. You probably know that I don’t like even cars, though I do use them when I can’t help it. This may be described as a weakness of mine. Moreover, where is the plane fare to come from? If any friend offers to pay it, I wouldn’t like you to accept it, nor even if Paparamma sends it. I can’t stand your becoming a beggar. But this is my philosophy. You need not ask for my permission to fly in a plane. You are free and I should like you to act freely. It would be a different thing if you deferred to my views voluntarily and with faith. Your freedom will not be compromised thereby. But I shouldn’t like it if you did something to please me or out of fear of me. That will not be for your good. I would rather that you acted upon only those ideas of mine which you can readily accept. How can you help it if you can’t like my ideas? If I were to find fault with you for that, I myself would be guilty of a wrong. You may, therefore, do as you please as regards flying to Trivandrum.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7313. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi
374. TELEGRAM TO VITHALDAS KOTHARI

WARDHAGANI,
January 27, 1937

VITHALDAS KOTHARI
GUJARAT VIDYAPITH, AHMEDABAD

SEND IMMEDIATELY.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 7699

375. LETTER TO H.S.L. POLAK

January 27, 1937

MY DEAR HENRY,

Owing to the pilgrimage to Travancore, it has not been possible for me to write to you earlier. Your question is whether I retain the same opinion as I did at the R.T.C. of 1931. I said then and repeat now that so far as I am concerned, if Dominion Status were offered in terms of the States of Westminister, i.e., the right to secede at will, I would unhesitatingly accept it.

Yours sincerely,

BHAI

The Hindu, 1-2-1937

376. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 31, 1937

CHI. NIMU,

I got Ramdas’s letter at the same time as yours. Probably you also got one. Even so, I am sending on to you the letter I have received.

Kanu is enjoying himself. He takes full advantage of the tricycle. Plays football, too. Daily accompanies me on my walks. Drinks plenty of milk these days. Gets enough fruit as well. Eats rotli

1 Puratan Buch, a khadi worker
2 In the course of a talk at Segaon in early January Polak had asked Gandhiji what he meant by “complete independence”. He then requested Gandhiji to give it in writing.
made of bran. Heartily relishes milk and fruit. You have not the slightest cause to worry about him. Nanavati teaches him. Lilavati teaches him arithmetic. Even apart from this, he learns something or other from everybody.

I got a letter from Mr. Kallenbach written on his way.

My previous letter had remained at Maganwadi through oversight. Kanaiyo tells me that it was posted only the day before yesterday. Such things happen sometimes. There is no reason to believe that my blood-pressure has particularly shot up. I need rest and that I am more or less taking. I should like to send you over to Rajkot. You have told me that you would be ready to go wherever I send you, whether it is Madras, Delhi or Prayag. Or, stay in the Mahila Ashram here. Do not get confused by all these questions. I have asked them only so that it might be easier for me to think and decide.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

377. LETTER TO K.M. MUNSHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 27, 1937

BHAI MUNSHI,

My right hand is disabled and it would take more time to write with the left. Today I can’t spare that much time.

I didn’t write anything to Rajaji. The newspapers are nowadays cultivating very efficiently the art of telling lies. When Mahadev and I first read the news about Rajaji contesting the election, we just laughed at it. I was taken aback by the news about my consent. Rajaji did explain to me in Madras why he had come to that decision. I am not ready to believe that his candidature is necessarily for the good. Since I have respect for his decisions, I do hope that this decision of his will benefit the country. But my mind is not ready at present to go further than this.

I will welcome it if you can spare me in regard to the late Narasinhrao. I have already conveyed to his family members my homage to his sacred memory. I had great respect for him and it was increasing day by day. I admired his faith in God. He had made a very pleasing translation of “Lead Kindly Light” at my request. It was the cause of the personal bond between us.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7611. Courtesy: K.M. Munshi

378. LETTER TO C.A. AIYAMUTHU

January 28, 1937

DEAR AIYAMUTHU,

Shankerlal Banker has sent me a copy of your letter which I consider hysterical. I had given you some credit for possessing a sense of humour but I see I was thoroughly mistaken. Chelaswami must have been particularly dense seeing that he could not appreciate the very delicate compliment which I really paid you when he told me that he was not Aiyamuthu. The compliment was this. You did not consider it necessary to rush up to Faizpur¹ and abandon your post of duty in Tirupur. All the while I was talking to Chelaswami I was smiling and cracking jokes. So I said, as far as I can recollect, something like this. ‘Why should Aiyamuthu come here? He sends you here and himself loafs about in Tirupur’. Chelaswami’s denseness I can excuse but I cannot excuse yours. Surely you should have at once said to Chelaswami: ‘You do not understand what Bapu meant. He liked my restraint in not going to Faizpur’. Now tell me if you understand this letter and whether it helps you out of your agony? And do you now understand what the poets all over the world have said, viz., that a man is the maker of his own happiness and misery.

Yours,

BAPU

SJT. C.A. AIYAMUTHU

A.I.S.A. KHADI DEPOT

TIRUPUR, S. INDIA

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

¹ For the Congress session, from December 22 to 29, 1936
379. LETTER TO TARADEVI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 28, 1937

CHI. TARA,

You are a lazy girl and you advance the excuse that your aunt has forbidden you to write. Are you ashamed of asking forgiveness for not writing till today?

And when you do write you have nothing to say except that you are preparing for class X. Let us see what you are going to write in your next letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. TARABEHN
MAHILA VIDYALAYA
GANGA PRASAD ROAD
LUCKNOW

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

380. LETTER TO KALIDAS NAG

January 29, 1937

DEAR KALIDAS NAG,

I have your letter written on the boat taking you to Honolulu. I have no inspiring message to give to anybody if non-violence is not its own message. But I can state my own experience of nearly fifty years of practice that there is no force known to mankind which is equal to non-violence. It cannot, however, be learnt through books. It has got to be lived.

You ask me to mention books. For the reason just stated it is difficult to single out books purely dedicated to an exposition of non-violence. Richard Gregg’s Power of Non-violence may be studied with advantage. Tolstoy’s later writings are also aids to a contemplation of non-violence.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SIT. KALIDAS NAG
C/O THE UNIVERSITY OF HAWAII
HONOLULU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

381. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 29, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

What have you been doing? Have you asked Trivediji for Rs. 100? Devdas is deeply pained. Is it right for you to ask for money in this manner without his permission? What was your promise to me? What has happened to it? What do you want Rs. 100 for? Won’t you open your heart to me? I feel much worried about you. Won’t you free me from my worry and fear? Please reply immediately and write to Devdas also.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7314. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

382. A CHRISTIAN LETTER

Rajkumari Amrit Kaur was with me during the Travancore pilgrimage. Though she could not enter the temples, she followed the pilgrimage in all other respects. She has felt moved by what she observed during the pilgrimage, and has placed in my hands the following letter¹ which I dare not withhold from the reader:

. . . I am of opinion that the missionary with the best intention in the world—for we must credit him with honesty of purpose—has wronged Indian Christians in more ways than one. Many converts here have been denationalized, e.g., even their names have been changed in many instances

¹ Only extracts have been reproduced here.
To those of Europeans; they have been told that there is no true light to be found in the religion of their forefathers. The ancient scriptures of their ancestors are a closed book to them. . . . At the same time, while there has been no conscious effort to purge the Indian Church of the taint of untouchability that exists within its own doors, the untouchability that exists in Hinduism has been exploited to the extent of so-called Christianity of the Depressed Classes. I say ‘so-called Christianity’ advisedly, because I know that not one of these poor people to whom I have spoken—and I have spoken to many—has been able to tell me anything of the spiritual implications of his change of faith. That he is equally ignorant of the faith of his forefathers and has been sadly neglected by his own community does not seem to me to be ample or any reason for transplanting him to an alien soil where he can find no root. . . .

Your utterances during your pilgrimage of penitence in Travancore have been a great joy. In particular do I rejoice in your special message to the Christian community at Kottayam. In admitting once again the equality of all religions you have given Christians much food for thought, and I hope and pray that this will be the beginning of an era of self-purification for them no less than for the members of the Hindu fold. Are we not all Hindus in as much as we are the children of Hind? Is there not room for Jesus in Hinduism? There must be. I cannot believe that any who seek to worship God in spirit and in truth are outside the pale of any of the great religions which draw their inspiration from Him who is the fountain-head of all Truth. I am sure I am not the only Indian born in the Christian faith who holds these views, but I feel that if the teaching and example of Jesus are to enrich the life of our country, Indian Christians must turn the searchlight inwards and seek to serve in that spirit of humility and tolerance which is the essence of all true religion and without which there can be no unity and no peace and goodwill on earth.

Will you not help the Indian Christian to realize his mission? You can, because you have drawn inspiration from Jesus’ undying teachings as embodied in the Sermon on the Mount. We assuredly stand in need of guidance.

Owing to her close contact with me there was hesitation on my part over the publication. But the knowledge that she has very imperfectly voiced what other Christian friends have told me has overcome my hesitation. But I do not feel competent to guide Indian Christians. I can, however, appeal to them as I did at Kottayam and as I have done before then through these columns. I am on safer ground in responding to the Rajkumari’s belief that there is in Hinduism room enough for Jesus, as there is for Mahomed, Zoroaster and

---

1 Vide “Speech at Public Meeting, Kottayam”, 19-1-1937
Moses. For me the different religions are beautiful flowers from the same garden, or they are branches of the same majestic tree. Therefore they are equally true, though being received and interpreted through human instruments equally imperfect.

It is impossible for me to reconcile myself to the idea of conversion after the style that goes on in India and elsewhere today. It is an error which is perhaps the greatest impediment to the world’s progress towards peace. ‘Warring creeds’ is a blasphemous expression. And it fitly describes the state of things in India, the mother as I believe her to be of religion or religions. If she is truly the mother, the motherhood is on trial. Why should a Christian want to convert a Hindu to Christianity and vice versa? Why should he not be satisfied if the Hindu is a good or godly man? If the morals of a man are a matter of no concern, the form of worship in a particular manner in a church, a mosque or a temple is an empty formula, it may even be a hindrance to individual or social growth, and insistence on a particular form or repetition of a credo may be a potent cause of violent quarrels leading to bloodshed and ending in utter disbelief in religion, i.e., God Himself.

_Harijan_, 30-1-1937

383. WANT OF THOROUGHNESS

There is in Travancore an association called The All-Kerala Young Folks’ League. Its ambitious motto is ‘We serve’. They have also a ‘League of Pity’ as a branch activity. For want of time, during the nine days’ rush in Travancore, for a personal discussion, the members sent me a letter from which I cull the following:

Boys and girls are encouraged to learn some handicrafts by which they can earn some money. We are quite glad to tell you that many of our boys have taken to spinning as one of their hobbies. As beginners in this field, we have also several problems to be solved and difficulties to be encompassed. The one thing that is troubling us much regarding the spinning of yarn is its disposal. We submit that the yarn produced by our boys and girls is of a low type and cannot find a good market. But the difficulty even for the good type of yarn is that we cannot sell even that to our advantage. And hence many of our members have begun to drop the hobby. We shall be grateful if you please tell us of some method to dispose of it. A portion of the money thus earned by the members is given to the poor.
On every Onam day all our members, regardless of caste or creed, collect together to celebrate our Goodwill Day. On that day, they burn in public a devil’s form made of straw to represent untouchability, the day’s programme closing with a common dinner.

The League has a very ambitious programme and a high sounding motto. It seems to me that they will neither serve themselves nor society unless they are thorough in whatever they take up. In trying to be thorough they may have to cut out some or even many activities. If such be the case, they should not hesitate to do so. They seek my advice on spinning as they rightly think I, as the author of the movement, should be able to guide them. They call it one of their hobbies. But even hobbies need to be thoroughly cultivated if they are to yield the greatest amount of enjoyment. They are mistaken in thinking that good yarn has no market. If they produce strong and even yarn of 8 counts, it will have a market in Nagercoil. I suggest a better use, however, of their yarn. They should add weaving to their hobby of spinning. If they will do so, the coarse yarn which the beginners will turn out can be woven into tape, nevar, asana, carpets, etc., and the fine into dhotis for men and women. They need not seek a market for such wares. For they will hardly produce enough for their own personal use. If they will specialize in this one hobby, they will sufficiently live up to their motto of service and many young men will most certainly earn a living if they become whole-time workers.

The League has 7,000 members. They make a nucleus of true co-operative society. They can run a store or stores which will sell articles manufactured by the members, and they will be mainly only such articles as the members themselves will require. Khadi can assuredly come first in any such co-operative activity. And Travancore or rather the whole of Kerala is a place where khadi can easily become universal, for the Kerala people, both men and women, have the simplest dress of all India and it is all white. Even the border is a late innovation. But let the League members remember that spinning includes all the anterior processes beginning with picking of cotton, disengaging it from pods, cleaning, ginning and carding it and turning it into slivers. If they are all well done, they are fascinating occupations giving exercise both to the body and the mind. If they will turn to spinning in the spirit of scientists, let them read the article ‘What Is Khadi Science?’ in Harijan of the 16th inst.

Harijan, 30-1-1937

1 Vide “What is Khadi Science”, 16-1-1937

368 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
384. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 30, 1937

CHI. SUSHILA,

You have been shouldering heavy responsibility. May God help you. But God will help you only if you help yourself. If your health is not good nor Sita’s, how long can you keep yourself up? If your health improves you can take up a lot of work. But you do not observe self-control. How did you have the miscarriage? You two are not children. One’s life should become reflective. One should acquire control over the senses. Why should the senses drag us? Is there anything more shameful than that? If you exercise control over your food and your personal habits, then your body will become healthy and both of you will be happy. And you will be able to handle a lot of Manilal’s work.

Instead of making Sita a doll, you should start giving her training in domestic chores right from now. If your own life is methodical, she will automatically learn a great deal. Sita and you should take both types of Kuhne baths. You must take to walking for exercise. In diet, you should take fruit and things made from whole wheat flour, drink fresh milk and eat green vegetables in moderate quantities. If you get fresh milk, there is not much need for ghee. You can make such changes in this as experience may suggest.

Do not feel unhappy about Shanti. Be content with whatever service anyone renders. If we do not fail in our duty we shall be able to overcome all obstacles.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I won’t write a separate letter to Manilal now. I wanted to write one but I have no time.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4860
A Mussalman friend had addressed me a long letter of which the following is the gist: *

1 I turned a vegetarian several years ago, being struck by the iniquitous cruelty of slaughtering God’s dumb creatures to provide meat for our tables. Ever since then I have completely abjured the taking of meat though meat-eating is allowed by Islam. But I have not been able to induce my children to abjure meat-eating likewise, with the result that I have still to procure meat for them from the bazaar. Sometimes, however, I am troubled by a doubt whether this is not all wrong. Would I remain a silent witness, if my children took to theft and murder, for instance?

2 What I have said with regard to meat also holds good in respect of tea, betel leaf, soda water, lemonade, etc.

3 I belong to the trader class and hence am quite conversant with the various shadowy tricks and devices that are in vogue among this class, e.g., how to exploit the inexperience and weakness of the buyer in order to palm off upon him goods that are utterly worthless, charging prices not according to the cost or to any fixed principle but according to what an unwary customer can be made to fork out and so on. For years I have felt an innate repugnance against all this which Mrs. Besant once described as “white loot”. But I feel utterly helpless. . . .

4 You regard Mahomed as a Prophet of God and hold him in high regard. You have even publicly spoken of him in the highest terms. I have heard and even seen reports in cold print to the effect that you have studied the Koran itself. All this, I must confess, has puzzled me. I am at a loss to understand how a person like you, with all your passion for truth and justice, who has never failed to gloss over a single fault in Hinduism or to repudiate as unauthentic the numerous corruptions that masquerade under it, can holus-bolus accept all that is in the Koran. I am not aware of your ever having called into question or denounced any iniquitous injunction of Islam. Against some of these I learnt to revolt when I was scarcely 18 or 20 years old and time has since only strengthened that first feeling.

I have tried as far as was possible to retain the language of the original, taking liberty only to soften a few expressions here and there, but have otherwise scrupulously kept the sense intact. To come to the various points mentioned by my correspondent. He deserves to be congratulated on his giving up meat-eating and on the various other disciplines that he has cultivated. But he may not impose the same on his unwilling or half-willing relations or dependents. Let him try to touch their hearts and reason by the means of persuasion at his command; but anything more than that before the desired conversion has come about would be compulsion and therefore unjustifiable. It would obviously be too much for him to expect the members of his family all of a sudden to break with a life-long habit that has never been regarded as contrary to Islam, which is almost universal among the Mussalmans today and till yesterday was followed by the friend in question himself. Let him not forget the long years of strenuous introspection and struggle which he took before he arrived at his decision. To require now his dependents to adopt that decision at a stroke would only betray impatience on his part. The golden rule to be observed always in this connection is that you can never be too severe in dealing with yourself but you must be deliberately liberal in judging others. For, experience has shown that no matter how severe we may try to be with regard to ourselves, we shall, in the result, still be found to have acted partially towards ourselves, for the simple reason that our unconscious bias always prepossesses us in our favour and seldom allows the test to be carried beyond our capacity for endurance. But in the case of others we do not know their weaknesses and limitations, which are known only to God who alone can read our hearts. There is therefore always a danger, with all our desire to be liberal, of our being betrayed into a hollow harshness and intolerance when we proceed to apply our personal standards to others; and paradoxical though it may sound, the more liberal, the more patient, the more considerate we are in such cases, the quicker the results are likely to be; they will certainly be more permanent and lasting.

---

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Harijanbandhu, 31-1-1937. The translation is by Pyarelal.
2 Only extracts have been reproduced here.

The analogy between meat-eating and theft or murder drawn by the correspondent in question is altogether untenable. Theft and murder, unlike meat-eating, are universally held to be crimes and are heavily punishable under the law. But even so one may not, in the hypothetical case cited above, try to wean dependents and relations from their career of theft and murder through compulsion. My correspondent must, therefore, try to convert members of his household to his view by patient argument alone, tempered by love, and pending their conversion, cultivate an attitude of the broadest tolerance and forbearance towards them.
To proceed to the next question. I do not hold dishonest practices in business to be warranted or excusable. The principle of unconditional honesty is as binding in this as in any other field of life, and it is up to a business man never to compromise his principle no matter what it may cost him. In the end, of course, honesty pays, though that can hardly be a consideration for observing it. One has a perfect right to fix and regulate the scale of prices that he shall charge from a particular set of customers, but it must be done according to a clear fixed principle and not out of mere opportunism or immoral expediency. There should be in it no room for fraud, sharp practice or finesse, to bamboozle the simple, unsuspecting customer.

Now for Islam. I stand by every word that I have written in that connection. I have nowhere said that I believe literally in every word of the Koran, or for the matter of that of any scripture in the world. But it is no business of mine to criticize the scriptures of other faiths or to point out their defects. It is and should be, however, my privilege to proclaim and practise the truths that there may be in them. I may not, therefore, criticize, or condemn things in the Koran or the life of the Prophet that I cannot understand. But I welcome every opportunity to express my admiration for such aspects of his life as I have been able to appreciate and understand. As for things that present difficulties, I am content to see them through the eyes of devout Mussalman friends, while I try to understand them with the help of the writings of eminent Muslim expounders of Islam. It is only through such a reverential approach to faiths other than mine that I can realize the principle of equality of all religions. But it is both my right and duty to point out the defects in Hinduism in order to purify it and to keep it pure. But when non-Hindu critics set about criticizing Hinduism and cataloguing its faults they only blazon their own ignorance of Hinduism and their incapacity to regard it from the Hindu viewpoint. It distorts their vision and vitiates their judgement. Thus my own experience of the non-Hindu critics of Hinduism brings home to me my limitations and teaches me to be wary of launching on a criticism of Islam or Christianity and their founders.

_Harijan_, 13-3-1937
386. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

January 31, 1937

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I cannot write with the right hand. I will therefore write only a few lines. How could I get the time to write during the journey?

Why do you send your letters by express delivery?

It was such a long letter and yet there was no substance to it. When will you learn to write letters?

The trip to Belgaum will probably be fixed in the middle of April. Let it be when it will. I should advise you to come over here and tell me whatever you wish to. If you have nothing to do for your brothers there, do come.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 388

387. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

SEGAON, WARDHA,

January 31, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

I got your letter. I will discuss Vinoba’s opinion with him. I have not been able to understand it.

The Goseva Sangh can take over the Goshala of Dhulia without assuming financial responsibility for it. But the present trustees of Dhulia would not like it.

When are you leaving for the Kathiawar tour?

I think the opinion that you have expressed to Rameshwar regarding ghee is perfectly correct.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9104
388. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON,
February 1, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I got your letter. Take Rs. 15 from Ramdas. Prabhavati will stay on for this month at any rate. You may come.

I am very much afraid of you. You are very touchy. Even Paparamma is afraid of you, to say nothing of Saraswati. Ramachandran is the only one who is not afraid of you. But you do not spare him either. I absolutely did not understand the meaning of your letters. You may read any meaning in my letters that you like.

I do not at all like the transaction with Kunvarjibhai. Please bear in mind that we always go down in the eyes of those from whom we borrow money. But there is no question of going down in the eyes of one’s parents. We may, therefore, take from them whatever they can give and be satisfied. But my yardstick seems to you too big. Does it not? Big or small, know that that is the only right yardstick for human beings. It is not a yardstick for gods. Instead of dismissing me as a superhuman being, if you coolly weigh what I am writing in the scales of your reason, it will assuredly do you good. When you read and remember it for examination, it is called memory. Perhaps it can be cultivated. But reason can only be developed by discriminating between good and bad.

Prabhavati is sleeping. But why need I detain the letter? I am, therefore, sending it for being posted. I myself have sealed it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7315. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi
389. LETTER TO GOKULBHAI

February 1, 1937

BHAI GOKULBHAI,

I have your letter about Surajbehn and also the note about Faizpur.

I have much to say about the kitchen. I believe that the work will become very easy if it is entrusted to persons who have the experience of running large messes. They too form a part of the nation. It is our duty to encourage them and train them. They have many shortcomings. Their talent should on no account be ignored. I think it is easy to supervise a hundred catering experts and get work from them than to train a thousand volunteers for the kitchen. And that is good for the nation as a whole.

It is true that caterers should be highly efficient. I shall be happy if they can serve food to five thousand persons at a time and manage it efficiently. I do not think it is an impossible task. We do arrange feasts for nine communities. Even then it requires training to manage it efficiently. The work becomes easy when there is a division of labour. Sikhs’ langars are also worth giving thought to. You seem to aspire to become the kitchen expert. There is nothing wrong in that. Wasn’t cooking one of the many accomplishments of Nala? So you may become an expert.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

390. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

February 2, 1937

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I got your letter. Chitre’s goodness is beyond doubt. But his goodness is now eating him away. His sacrifice has become purely egoistic. There should be detachment and knowledge even behind sacrifice. One sees neither in Chitre at present. I have tried very hard to bring him round but have failed completely. Perhaps the best service to him may be not to interfere with him in anything he does but give him whatever help he may ask for. Perhaps he will learn from experience. Through egoistic fasts, etc., he has made his mind blank and his body weak. He has, therefore, remained fit for nothing. If he takes to socialism and can remain cheerful, even then it will be all right. I am writing a letter to him and sending it with this. Give it to him. Please do not worry as you have been doing. God is there to look after all. He makes some people foolish and some wise. His ways are inscrutable. Our dharma is simple. We should do the duty that has come to us unsought and not worry about the result. We need not carry the burden of the world’s woes on our heads nor lose our balance of mind at the sight of its pomp. We should not give pain to anybody nor harbour ill will towards anybody. We should not grab anybody’s property and should keep our hands clean. If we live thus, we have done our duty. We can then say like king Janaka: “What does it matter if the city is in flames?”

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 392. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

391. LETTER TO BRIMOHAN
February 2, 1937

Bhai Brijmohan,

I had answered by wire your letter and wire. Since I have a little time I write you a few words.

Do go abroad but don’t be too eager. Do earn money but not for yourself, only for the poor. People generally give for the poor from whatever is left after spending on their luxuries. Justice lies in earning money for the poor first and then for ourselves. Those who have the talent for earning money should certainly make use of it. But the entire earning should be spent in the service of the people. I know all your brothers have such an inclination. May it grow still more—that is my desire and my blessing. May God bless you.

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
392. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON,
February 3, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

What would be everybody’s fate if you were to get a third eye! At present only a few like me get burnt by the fire of your two eyes. What would happen if you were to get a third?

It was good that I sealed the letter about the Rs. 15 while Prabha was asleep. If I hadn’t done that you would definitely have thought that I had sent you Rs. 15 as fine. But why should you demand a fine? It was another Kantilal Gandhi that Trivedi saw. Thus everybody got a reason to smile after a time of sorrow. But what is the difference between Kunvarji and Trivedi? If Devdas were to know about Kunvarji, how would he feel? I haven’t written to him. If, however, I have been able to convince you rationally you should not borrow a single pie from anybody without Devdas’s permission. Nor should you spend more than necessary. I have no doubt that this will be for your good. You have only two persons from whom to ask for anything, and they are Devdas and myself.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7316. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

393. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

February 3, 1937

RESPECTED BROTHER,

I am sure you could not be grieving over the death of my sister-in-law. Only one who has earned great merit meets such a death. I only felt happy when I got the telegram.

Salutations of
MOHANDAS

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

1 Vide “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi”, 1-2-1937
2 Vide “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi”, 29-1-1937
394. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI
February 3, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

Your description is excellent. That day of death was indeed a day of celebration. Here also Krishna and Kanaiyo behaved very well.

I hope the school is going on all right.
How is Purushottam? How is Vijaya?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8514. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

395. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA
February 3, 1937

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

You have been well saved. If self-control does not come easily to you, you may marry. You must practise restraint over food.

It is very necessary to make slivers with your own hands. You should do it.

What can you gain by further studies? You can readily obtain a teaching job provided you do not require a high salary. Will you be satisfied with Rs. 75 a month?

You must now compose yourself.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4278; also S.G. 55

1 Of the addressee’s mother; vide the preceding item.
2 Krishnadas Gandhi, son of Chhaganlal Gandhi
3 Addresser’s sons
4 ibid
5 Purushottam Gandhi’s wife
396. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

SEGGAON,
February 4, 1937

CHI. LILA,

It is surprising that you did not receive the letter that I wrote to you from here. I have definitely written one. I looked into my diary also. I wrote the letter on the 25th, i.e., on the next day after my arrival in Segaon. Please inquire now. After reading this letter Mahadev also will inquire at Maganwadi.

Do stay on as long as necessary. When you come I will treat you as a newcomer. All that I want you to do is that while you are there you should strictly follow the rules of this place. Take every step after careful thinking. The prayer must not be missed, nor should spinning be omitted. Only indigenous paper should be used. I am glad that Dr. Yodh holds out the fullest hope and is confident. If he recovers, Damayanti will be free, from worry. If you fix a particular day of the week for writing to me, you will be able to write regularly. It would be an excellent thing to fix a definite time for every activity and the practice saves time and the strain of thinking. My right hand needs rest. On Monday, it has to be used for Harijan work. I write a little with my left hand but it consumes more time. I, therefore, dictate Gujarati and English letters whenever I can get hold of somebody.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a phptostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9355. Also C.W. 6630. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

397. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

February 4, 1937

CHI. SUSHILA, MANILAL,

How is it that you suffer miscarriages so often? Both of you should think over this. This is a matter in which no one else’s wisdom can help you. Those who lead a thoughtful life and are filled with devotion to God, always succeed in finding the right path for themselves. I only wish that you should not become an invalid.
You did not have much hope for Shanti from the very beginning. You got his services so long as he owed you a debt from his previous life.

You will have to wind up everything there if you do not succeed in finding anyone to take up your work. Isn’t that so?

I hope Sita is better now. Accustom her to hip-baths and friction-baths. Haven’t I already written to you about her food? Milk, whole-wheat flour in very small quantities, green vegetables like gourd, bitter gourd, amaranth lettuce, etc. I see that it is better to eat onions and garlic uncooked. Starchy foods like potatoes, etc., should be eaten sparingly or excluded altogether. Among fruits, pineapple, oranges, mosambis, grapes and similar juicy fruits.

I remembered both of you in Faizpur. The Congress session in a village was a great success. Manu is with me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4861.

398. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKAR MEHTA
February 4, 1937

BHAI PRABHASHANKAR,

As I was touring Travancore, I have been much in arrears with my correspondence. Moreover, my hand needs rest nowadays and so I cannot write readily. Nor am I able to dictate letters whenever I wish to. It seems that you are not taking necessary treatment for your health. A disease should be put down the moment its symptoms appear. What can I do regarding the suggestions you have made? Where is the need to advise the teeth to be considerate to the tongue? Champa is your daughter. Ratilal is your son-in-law and so he also is like a son to you. Moreover, Ratilal is a cripple, so to say. He is, therefore, in no position to oppose you in whatever you do. I regard it as your goodness that you consult me. But Nanalal is near you, and you have been consulting him. That is enough.

I understand about Balwant. One cannot expect much improvement in his mother’s health at this age. However, I see in many instances that old age can be made bearable by following nature-cure remedies and making necessary changes in diet. A diet like a child’s suits best in old age.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8767
399. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

February 4, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

I had asked Vinoba about Rameshwardas’s letter.¹ He has replied that it is a clear mistake on Rameshwardas’s part. He will write to the latter.

How is Titus working? He has asked for a certificate from me. He wants a job somewhere. Of course he says that his dairy is doing very well but that he doesn’t get any experience about cattle. I have asked him of what use a certificate from me in a technical matter can be.

How many girls are there? What does the expenditure on education, food, etc., come to?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9105

400. LETTER TO PANNALAL JHAVERI

SEVAGRAM,

[Thursday] February 4, 1937

CHI. PANNALAL,

I have your letter. I will certainly write. You will remember I had quoted the doctor’s opinion about milk. But what can one do when someone has a strong preference for buffalo milk and ghee?

If ghee is in demand you must separate milk first and sell the separated milk at a very low price. You must bring out pamphlets pointing out its qualities. That milk can be sold at a very low price among the working classes and the poor. It can also be turned into curds. Many delicacies can be prepared from it. Many things can be devised in times of difficulty. The primary thing is to persuade the people that it is their duty not to use buffalo milk and have only cow’s milk. Once they are convinced, we shall have found a key to solve whatever difficulties may arise and however insurmountable they may seem.

I shall await your letter regarding the new charkha.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Manavtana Prahari—Pannalal Jhaveri, p. 33

¹ Vide “Letter to Narahari D. Parikh”, 31-1-1937
401. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

Unrevised
SEGAON,
February 5, 1937

CHI. PREMA,

My right hand needs rest and it takes time to write with the left hand. How can I spare that much time? The burden of work has increased considerably and so I dictate most of the things I have to write. On Mondays I make full use of my right hand.

The amanuenses are Vijaya and Manu, and also sometimes Prabhavati. Probably you do not know Vijaya. She is a Patel woman and hails from Bardoli. She has, so to say, forced herself on us, for we had made a firm rule not to make any fresh admission. Vijaya prevailed upon us to break that rule. She put her case in such a manner that I could not send her away. So far I have not regretted admitting her. She goes on doing her work silently and makes up for Lilavati’s absence.

Shankarrao must be all right now. I have asked Haribhau Phatak to give me news about his health. But I think you will be able to give detailed news.

I had told Patwardhan that he could come whenever he wished. But, then, don’t the hills seem beautiful only from a distance, as they say?

You seem to be going through a fairly severe test. It is at once easy and difficult to put more money in villagers’ pockets. If they follow our advice, we can, without any capital or with a minimum of it, double the earnings of all villages. I am not including in this the money earned from villages by those who exploit the villagers. If, however, they do not follow our advice, that is, refuse to do the work suggested by us or to learn the crafts we try to teach them, it is not only difficult but impossible to increase their earnings. Another big difficulty is this. Only a handful of workers are willing to go to villages, and they, too, are inexperienced. Their bodies are not accustomed to the hardships of village life. They don’t know the villagers’ nature and are ignorant of their needs. They cannot use their hands or their intelligence. The knowledge acquired by them in schools and colleges is of little use to them. In these circumstances we have to be patient. We should have faith in ourselves. If the villagers possess sound health, even without Government help we can improve the economic condition of villages considerably, say, to the extent of 50 per cent. I mention 50 per cent as the minimum. My belief is that we can improve it to the extent of 90 per cent. Improvement in physical health, social reform and moral uplift, these are the three main things. They require no Government help at all.

If we get a little Government help only in economic improvement, our task would be very much easier. But in the absence of progress in respect of the foregoing three things, Government help will be of little use. If, therefore, you become a real expert in the science of khadi and refuse to leave the village despite all temptations, you will realize from first-hand experience the truth of all that I have said above.

You are not doing right in not insisting on cow’s milk. Whenever you go out, you can carry with you ghee and pendas made from cow’s milk. The pendas should be without sugar, i.e., made from mava only. If you wish, you may eat jaggery with it. This keeps down the expense and fully meets one’s requirement of milk. Instead of eating dry pendas you can turn them into powder and mix them in warm water to make milk. Such milk lacks only vitamins, but absence of vitamins from the diet for a few days does no harm.

Narmada is Narmada Rana. This whole episode is a pitiable one. It is perfectly easy to understand that everybody cannot observe life-long brahmacharya. Those who cannot curb their physical senses may by all means marry. But I cannot tolerate secret indulgence. Man falls through such secret indulgence for no restraints are observed then. I have no prejudice at all against grihasthashrama. It is a necessary state, and a beautiful one. But, being an ashrama, it has dharma at its heart. Grihasthadharma is a fine thing, but self-indulgence is reprehensible. My opposition is solely to self-indulgence.

Jamnalal’s question to you was perfectly right. He wanted to know your point of view as a woman. Whatever Vinoba, I or others may say, it is very necessary to know what a mature and pure woman feels. And ultimately the real contribution has to be made by the woman. The burden of demonstrating the importance and necessity of brahmacharya should not be on man alone. Till now it has been mostly shouldered by him, and in consequence it has become his right. This has earned a bad name for Brahmacharya. What is more, though it should have been easy to observe, it has proved so difficult that most people find it impossible to observe. In this, too, I blame mostly man. He has done his best to keep woman his inferior. Flattery and brute force have played an equal part in this. Be that as it may, one half of man’s body became and has remained weak. The result has been that man has failed in most of his endeavours, as he deserved to do. There is some awakening among women now. But at present it is assuming a perverted form. Man has been indulging her whims and feeding her ego under the pretext of respecting her freedom and woman has taken freedom to mean self-indulgence. Let those men and women who can save themselves from this do so. Save yourself.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10388. Also C.W. 6827. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

402. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

February 5, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

My right hand needs rest. I must keep it fit for Monday. I, therefore, give it rest on the other days.

You are ruthlessly tyrannizing over your body. But who can call a Sardar to account or restrain him? If you impair your health, you will have to hear quite a few things from me. So much by way of a preface.

Chandrashanker¹ writes to Mahadev and says that you didn’t like my letter² to Polak. I had no option but to give him a letter. I had to give a reply. If he wanted a letter, I couldn’t but give it. I didn’t know that he would immediately publish it. But no harm has been done by its publication. Even if some harm results, it can only be temporary, for the publication of what is true can never do any real harm.

Chandrashanker’s letter also mentions the conversation with . . .³ The report was certainly reprehensible. But I am not responsible for it.

¹ Chandrashanker Shukla
² Vide “Telegram to Vithaldas Kothari”, 27-1-1937
³ The name is omitted in the source
He did exactly the opposite of what I had told him. I had plainly declined to express any opinion and had advised him to complain to you. I also explained to him that I had no right to intervene in the matter. In the end I dictated a general principle. He has done no harm in publishing that, of course. What are we to do when somebody thus publishes a false report? As soon as I saw the report, I wrote a strong letter of protest to him. But the man is shameless. He has not even acknowledged the letter.

Do you wish that I should issue contradiction? If I do so, he will be ruined. If you want, you may tell anybody that I had categorically refused to intervene.

When are you coming this way?
Where do you wish the Congress to be held? The preparations must start from now on.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 198-9

403. WHAT IS NON-VIOLENCE?

MY DEAR MAHATMAJI,

As you were fully engaged with the Congress affairs these past few weeks, I did not before now acknowledge your postcard which you kindly wrote in reply to my query about ‘non-violence in word’ nor thanked you for your courtesy in discussing at length the point at issue in the Harijan of December 19th. I have carefully read and weighed your argument, but I cannot help believing that you were not non-violent in the words you used with reference to the missionaries in general who have been working, and working so nobly, for the good of our motherland for the past hundred years.

You say: ‘The essence of violence is that there must be a violent intention behind a thought, word or act, i.e., an intention to do harm to the opponent so called’. I don’t think you are right here. Take, for instance, a father smacking the face of his unruly and intractable child for some offence or other. No one could for a moment believe that there was ‘a violent intention behind’ that act of the father or that he had ‘an intention to do harm’ to his own child. Nevertheless that smacking of the child was an act of violence,

1 Vide “What is Non-violence?”, 19-12-1936
pure and simple, because it hurt the child’s face. Similarly, when a man uses words against his ‘opponent so called’ which are likely to hurt his feelings or, as you put it, wound his susceptibilities, then quite regardless of his non-violent intention behind his word, he has been violent in word simply because he has hurt his so-called opponent’s feelings, just as the father hurt his child’s face in the instance given. You say further on: ‘The acid test of non-violence is that one thinks, speaks and acts non-violently even when there is the gravest provocation to be violent.’ Here again I do not agree with you. The acid test of non-violence is that one thinks, speaks and acts in a manner so as not to hurt ‘the opponent so called’ in body, mind or spirit, even when there is the gravest provocation to be violent. It is true where you say: ‘If non-violence of thought is to be evolved in individuals or societies or nations, truth has to be told, however harsh or unpopular it may appear to be for the moment.’ But it is not true that harsh truth must be told in harsh words, when a gentler mode of expressing the same ideas might have, with a little more patience, self-control and goodwill, been used against the party opposing. In that discussion how strong in contrast stood Mr. Andrews’ gentler mode of arguing to the harsh mode of your expression! In this harshness which you, Mahatmaji, with your habitual and exemplary calm, patience and self-control might have easily avoided, lay, I repeat, your ‘violence in word’ against the missionaries in general.

With my best wishes for your health and strength,

As always yours,

A. S. WADIA

POONA
Jan. 10, 1937

PS.

You are at liberty to print this letter in my name in the Harijan, if you so wish.

I gladly publish the foregoing. But I profoundly differ from the view presented by Shri Wadia. The smacking of a boy, if it is not done out of anger and impatience, is most decidedly not violence as when he is, say, bitten by a snake and it is necessary to keep him awake or as when a youngster in high fever was running amuck and came to his senses only after he was severely smacked. It caused hurt, but he would most assuredly have died if he had not been smacked. Every surgeon causes hurt, but he is every time not only not violent but benevolent and receives thanks and heavy fees for causing hurt, sometimes very serious indeed. He does not conform to Shri Wadia’s definition, he does wholly conform to mine. According to my learned correspondent, Jesus Christ was hopelessly violent when he called some people of his times ‘a generation of vipers’. His phrases and his actions so hurt his generation that they compassed his death. And if truth can be harsh, as the writer admits it can be, what is the gentle way of uttering it so that you can render it proof against your opponent’s wrath? If a man utters a downright lie or commits a daylight robbery or a murder, am I to call this brother of mine, as he most assuredly is, a liar or a thief or a murderer, or am I to use Churchillian language and say ‘he perambulates round the suburbs of veracity,’ or ‘he helps himself to the goods that do not belong to him without perhaps any intention of stealing,’ or, ‘he spills innocent blood, though perhaps he does not want to kill?’ And if I were to use such circumlocutory speech, is there the slightest guarantee that I shall never hurt the party of whom I may be speaking? Harsh truth may be uttered courteously and gently, but the words would read hard. To be truthful you must call a liar a liar—a harsh word perhaps, but the use is inevitable. In the instance to which Shri Wadia has taken exception, I have no sense of repentance.

I suggest to my friend that like many good people he has allowed his judgment to be warped by the nobility of the actions of missionaries in that they have founded schools, hospitals and the like. Whereas, giving the fullest due for their philanthropic activities, my sober judgment tells me that the lustre of their deeds is diminished by the motive of proselytizing that lies behind them. I may be wrong in my estimate of religious conduct and proselytizing itself. That does not make my characterization in any sense violent.

Therefore I am not going to subscribe to Shri Wadia’s judgment or his comparison of Deenabandhu Andrews at my expense in matters of non-violence. And if he really believes that I am gifted with ‘habitual and exemplary calm, patience and self-control’, I want to assure him that on the occasion referred to I had not lost any of the virtues he imputes to me. This is not to say that I never lose self-control. I do indeed, and those are occasions of my shame. If Shri Wadia has had no occasion to observe them it is because of the hard training I have given myself of exercising self-control in public life and especially in respect of those who regard me as their enemy. But I cannot say the same of my private life. Those who are nearest me do alas! know how impatient I can be with them, even to the extent of behaving like a wild bear let loose. I know that even with them I must not lose patience. They very generously suffer me for they are quite sure that I mean no ill to them but am their best friend and guide. Their certificate, however, is of little worth to me. It has never deceived me. I know that I would be a better man and their better guide if I could regard them with sufficient detachment and not take it amiss when, in my opinion, they fall short of the standard they have themselves accepted for their daily conduct. But the detachment prescribed by the Gita is the hardest thing to achieve, and yet it is so absolutely necessary for perfect peace for the vision of both the little self and the greatest Self.

_Harijan, 6-2-1937_

404. KHADI IN ANDHRADESH

Whilst I was taking the meeting on the 23rd January last at Guntur, the following letter from Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya was put in my hands:

> Your programme in Andhradesh is so short and so congested that I do not feel justified in obtruding myself upon your notice to the detriment of others’ chances. But I am tempted to request you to make a pointed reference if possible in your Bezwada speech in regard to the position of khaddar in Andhradesh where some of the certified producers are taking advantage of the increase in prices without observing the conditions essential to such increase. But both the certified and A.I.S.A. sales have fallen on account of competition of the uncertified producers who are obviously at an advantage, even granting that they sell pure khaddar. A manifesto has been drafted and is being influentially signed by friends representing all shades of opinion in Andhra, a copy of which is enclosed. In one word the sales have gone down in certified shops, and the public may therefore be warned by you against the purchase of uncertified cloth; and the new definition of khaddar as ‘hand-spun and hand-woven cloth prepared on the increased wage’ may be given publicity once again. I may add that while most of the certified people are being decertified on account of lapses, a few have sought decertification voluntarily for the obvious advantages it brings under the present conditions, and that is a lesson by itself to us that their sales not only do not suffer but improve by decertification. So it is the public that must cultivate the right judgment in the matter.

There was no time to refer to it at the meeting and I would not mix up khadi work with an appeal for funds for cyclone relief. I did not therefore refer to it even in my subsequent speech at Bezwada. The subject matter of the letter is nevertheless very important. Andhra has possibilities not open to any other province. It has an innate skill which the other provinces do not possess. But some Andhra merchants, as elsewhere, are greedy and for a paltry coppers would injure even khadi, the mainstay of the villagers, the staff of Daridranarayana and the indispensable friend of the widow. What is worse, however, is want of co-operation among even the tallest khadi workers. Among the causes of Andhra’s fall in the matter of khadi I had a painful eye-opener at Vinaya Ashram. Everybody in Andhradesh knows my partiality for Sitarama Sastry and my regard for Deshabhakta Venkatappayya. The former is the disciple of the latter. Deshabhakta’s word is law for Sitarama Sastry. Both are all the emotion in which Andhra seems to have specialized. But Venkata-ppayya is a weak guru—generous and forgiving to a fault. My partiality for Sitarama Sastry kept me in ignorance of what in my opinion was an unpardonable omission in a khadi-lover and representative of the A.I.S.A. On reaching Vinaya Ashram in the dark hours of the morning of 23rd ultimo, I asked for a wheel and was shocked to discover that they had 19 wheels which were out of order and not in use. They had a Yeravda-Chakra which was produced but which was also out of order, though not wholly unworkable. They had no carding-bow. And to my dismay I found that no one knew carding in Vinaya Ashram and that those who span did so with slivers purchased in the market. My heart wept. I gave vent to my feeling of grief and disppointment. I quoted in bitterness, ‘if the salt loseth its savour, wherewith shall it be salted?’ Poor Sitarama Sastry was dumb. Tears trickled down Venkatappayya’s cheeks. And during our rush in motor-cars Venkatappayya promised to repair the blunder in two months’ time, and said in tones of confidence that Sastry would prepare himself in the manner I expected and that the Vinaya Ashram would hum with the sweet sound of the charkha and the carding bow. Sitarama Sastry was present and he vowed to redeem the promise of his chief.

To err—even grievously—is human. But it is human only if there is a determination to mend the error and not to repeat it. The error will be forgotten if the promise is fully redeemed. And I know both these friends too well to fear that it will not be redeemed.

Now the reader will realize why khadi has not made the progress it should have. It has made progress worthy of note because it has innate virtue. But it cannot cover every village unless the agents of the A.I.S.A. fulfill the expectations they know they have to fulfil. They must know at least the elements of the science of khadi in terms of the questions I published the other day. Much more searching questions have to be answered by a master of the science of khadi.

Let not any reader run away with the idea that I have strayed from the simple subject matter of Dr. Pattabhi’s letter. That is merely a symptom of the disease whose root cause I have ventured to bring to light. When Vinaya Ashram installs the wheel as the central sun in its fulness, uncertified dealers will for the very shame cease to stab Daridranarayana in the back by hampering the experiment of giving the lowest-paid workers, the spinners, their due.

_Harijan, 6-2-1937_

405. LETTER TO RAMDAS

_SEGAON, WARDHA,
February 6, 1937_

_BHAI RAMDAS._

I got your letter. The report is very good and useful. Is there a copy of it? Because I want to keep this. If there is not I shall have another copy made. I need you for two or three days for the road-building work in Segaon. Come when you can spare the time but let me know of it in advance.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a phorostat of the Hindi: G.N. 8589. Also C.W. 7006. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

406. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

_February 6, 1937_

_CHI. CHIMANLAL._

I got your letter. Sharda has reached an age when, unless she offers her sincere co-operation, she cannot improve. In my opinion, at present her only duty is to build up good health. For that she should give up study. This does not mean that she should read nothing. She may by all means read something that she will enjoy reading. But she should feel no strain at all in that. She should stop reading the moment she feels tired. She should read nothing regularly but should do physical labour daily. She should take slow walks in the open air at regular hours. She should have hip-baths and friction-baths. She should do slow pranayama. There is no harm at all in having hip-baths in the condition that you have described, provided that at the time of taking the bath she does not feel cold. After leaving the tub she should do light exercise and pour warm water over the body. The whole body should be massaged daily. She should take sun-bath, without any clothes on. This can be easily done in any open place. An enclosure can be made by hanging mats all round to ensure privacy. If sun-bath is taken on a sand-covered ground like what we have in a gymnasium, she can take the bath even rolling on the ground. This treatment involves no expense. All that is necessary is to have faith and to spare the necessary time. If there is no faith, the treatment may become a burden and cause strain on the mind. An asthmatic person can never afford strain. Nerves play a very important part in causing asthma. If Sharda’s diet does not include milk and butter, she should get sufficient ghee. She may eat fenugreek leaves, amarnath, mustard leaves, dabho and other green leaves, uncooked ripe tomatoes, gourd, brinjals, pumpkin, etc. These things should be steam-cooked. No condiment should be used not even oil or ghee for frying. Ghee or butter may be added afterwards. She should eat some juicy fruit if available. She may eat fresh garlic crushed and mixed with vegetables. Let her start with half a tola. It must not be cooked at all. She may eat onions also, either cooked or raw. Both will benefit her.

You may ask about anything else if you want to.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 20

407. MILL-WORKERS AND MILL-OWNERS

Some of the points of dispute which arose between the mill-owners and mill-workers of Ahmedabad, were referred for arbitration and its result has been announced. Both the parties deserve to be congratulated on their having agreed to refer the issue to arbitration in this manner. And the mill-owners also on having accepted the Award. The Umpire also deserves to be congratulated on having given his Award along with many arguments merely out of a spirit of service without charging any fee. All of us hope that all disputes arising between the two parties will always be speedily resolved through arbitration. It is clear enough for everyone to understand that by accepting the Award of the Umpire both the parties, as also the industry on which the prosperity of Ahmedabad depends, have gained.

But my object in writing this article is not to examine the situation in the past or to praise the principal parties concerned. My object is to find means by which future security could be ensured. I have hinted at these means in clause 16 of my Award. I quote it below along with the clause that follows:

XVI. At this stage I would like to restate the principles that for the good of both parties I have presented to them as a result of my close and unbroken contact with the industry for a period of 18 years in the capacity of Arbitrator.

(a) No cut should be made till the mills have ceased to make any profit and are obliged to fall back upon their capital for continuing the industry.

(b) There should be no cut till the wages have reached the level adequate for maintenance. It is impossible to conceive a time when the workmen have begun to regard the industry as if it were their own property and they would then be prepared to help it out of a crisis by taking the barest maintenance consisting of a dry crust and working day and night. That would be a voluntary arrangement. Such cases are irrelevant to the present consideration.

(c) There should be a common understanding as to what should be included in determining a living wage.

(d) The consideration of the deterioration in individual mills cannot form part of a case for a cut in wages of labour in general.

(e) It is vital to the well-being of the industry that workmen should be regarded as equals with the shareholders and that they have therefore every right to possess an accurate knowledge of the transactions of the mills.

(f) There should be a register of all available mill-hands acceptable to both the parties and the custom of taking labour through any other than the T.L.A. should be stopped.

XVII. I have not presented these principles in the belief that they will be acceptable either to my brother Arbitrator or to the mill-owners or even to the workmen. These have not guided my decision in the present case but I am convinced that without the acceptance of these principles the industry i.e., the owners and the workmen are in danger.
The Umpire has described these principles as idealistic and incapable of being implemented.¹ He did not have to pass judgment on those points. I had merely jotted them down in my Award for my own satisfaction and with the object that they might prove useful to both parties in future. Hence, it is possible that the Umpire has not given serious thought to them. And as I have a reputation for being an idealist, a dreamer and an unpractical person, the Umpire did not fully examine these principles, as he was not bound to do, and it is likely that he did not approve of them because of the unfavourable impression he had of the person who had put them forward.

I must accept the allegation that I make my ideal the standard by which to judge others. But I must also say that I am no enemy of what is practical. My life has been spent, and is still being spent, in putting the ideal into practice. I believe that I have achieved some success in my effort. I entreat the two parties and the readers to forget me and examine the principles which I have put forward independently.

The Umpire has strongly recommended that mill-owners should speedily take a decision regarding the scale of wages applicable to all mills and with the same speed frame a scheme whereby an increase or decrease in wages can be effected automatically. In my humble opinion, while trying to implement these two points speedily, the assistance of the principles suggested by me in one form or another will become indispensable. In addition to the principles put forward by me, others no doubt will have to be thought out. Nevertheless a consideration of the principles suggested by me is necessary.

The first point that has to be settled in the scheme for automatic decrease or increase in wages is the lowest point in wage reduction. While deciding this one factor, all my six points will have to be taken into consideration. It may well not be accepted that a wage-cut can be made only when mills have ceased to make any profit; but a ceiling on profits should definitely be laid down. In giving a practicable shape to this there is no escape from making absence of profit, that is to say, the ideal, our standard. (16 A)

¹ The Umpire’s Award said “Even while I do homage to their idealistic and humanitarian spirit, they are, I think, inconsistent with the hard realities of economic production for profit and survival by competition in an open market. (History of Wage Adjustments in the Ahmedabad Industry, Vol. IV, p. 24)
Before fixing a standard for wage-cut it is necessary to decide what should be called a living wage. (16 B)

If a consideration of the living wage is regarded as essential, it is absolutely necessary to consider what are the items to be included in it. (16 C)

While considering a cut in the wages of the entire body of workers a consideration of the plight of any individual mill necessarily becomes irrelevant. (16 D)

In order that workers may be able to accept the demands of the mill-owners they should have the right to know about the detailed working of the mill. (16 E)

And, in order that workers may willingly accept a cut in wages and to reassure them, it will become absolutely necessary to keep a register of all possible labourers. (16 F)

The Mill-owners’ Association will have to gain greater control over the mills than it enjoys at present if the principle of arbitration is to become permanent. It will collapse if the individuals ignore the Mill-owners’ Association while pursuing their own interests alone. Similarly, if workers pursue their own interest and violate the rules of the Labour Association the principle of arbitration will cease to operate. In order to prevent such an eventuality uniform scales of pay should be introduced everywhere. If, while doing so, a particular mill is put to a strain, the other mill should get together and compensate it. Similarly, whenever it is found that workers have to suffer, those among them who stand to gain should compensate the loss to those who would be adversely affected. I am also of the opinion that the practice of having different scales of wages for labourers working in different departments should be abolished and uniform wages should be accepted for all labourers. I know that this may seem to be an impossible task, but a further consideration will show that the need for this will become obvious if the united strength of labourers is to be made invincible. Why should anyone working the power-loom for sixty hours get Rs. 30, while a person looking after the spindle for the same number of hours gets Rs. 13? It should not be proper to conclude that the former has to work more than the latter. If is not also fitting for one labourer to say that he has to use more intelligence than another. So long as such discrepancies exist, jealousies are bound to be there and, as long as there is jealousy, there can be no true unity. This problem, at root, is of some educational value to labourers and to society as a whole. In my view, the key to socialism lies in equal pay for equal work. Everyone’s basic needs are more or less the same. The larger part of the world will always consist of labourers, hence the only way for their uplift is to accept the principle of equal wages. There is no other way but to do so. It is likely that all this may appear to be the talk of someone who lives in a dream world. But unless workers make such dreams come true, their real authority, which is only a dream today, will always remain so.

Yes, there is one exception. If workers wish to establish their authority with the use of arms, that is, through force, it may appear to be possible. This article is based on the assumption that the workers of Ahmedabad have given up violence on principle. But, for the moment, let us, assume that the working class is even prepared to use force. My contention is that there is every likelihood of a struggle taking place amongst them as soon as they get power. Be that as it may, because I am a worshipper of non-violence alone, I can wield my pen only to uphold non-violent means. My mind cannot even conceive of the triumph of any other means. Hence, I shall have betrayed the workers if I do not put before them for their consideration what has been uppermost in my mind while reflecting upon their plight during the past three or four months. If workers cannot digest these important changes all at once, let them move step by step. But they must set it as their aim that there should be the same scale of wages for all workers.

This much is sufficient for today.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 7-2-1937

408. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

SEGAON, WARDHA
February 7, 1937

BHAJ KHAMBHATTA.

I got your letter. Your wishes regarding the money and the ring will be respected. It is not proper that you don’t write. Even two lines on a postcard would be enough for me.

I do keep myself informed about you. It would be better, however, if I had at least one postcard regularly from you once in a fortnight or a month.

VOL. 70 : 21 OCTOBER, 1936 - 24 BEBRUARY, 1937

395
When I was in Poona, I got the news about the set-back in your health. You have tried a good many remedies. But now I would advise you to go and consult Gaurishankar, who is a Government servant living in Santa Cruz and who practises nature cure with a purely philanthropic motive. Go to him and tell him your trouble. If he takes up your case, follow his advice. Mahadev will give his address with this and also enclose a letter to him.

Please don’t send me any money by putting yourself to inconvenience. If, however, you save money beyond your need, you are welcome to send it all.

May you both prosper.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7559. Also C.W. 5034. Courtesy: Tehmina Kambhatta

409. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

February 7, 1937

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS.

The right hand demands rest, so I write with it only on Mondays. On the other days I dictate letters, as writing with the left hand is rather time-consuming.

Parameshwari has drafted and sent a proposal which is in accordance with the opinion I have come to form regarding his future. If you have no objection please sign it and send it to me. No one knows what it will come to in the end. But this provides a good opportunity for Parameshwari to prove his mettle and he should have such opportunity. Jamanalalji’s signature has already been obtained.

Parnerkar must have reached there by now. I shall recall Pandya whenever you want me to. Why should we delay any cuts in expenditure that may be considered necessary in respect of the Harijan [Sevak Sangh] central office? Of course we shall not be able to do anything that Thakkar Bapa does not approve of. If in connection with all this you consider it proper to come to Wardha on your way to Delhi, please do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8033. Courtesy: G.D. Birla
410. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

February 7, 1937

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

I have your letter.

The cow has arrived,¹ An account will be maintained. You must follow the doctor’s instructions.

The question of your leaving Segaon does not arise. Your illness is not incurable, nor is it likely to be a prolonged one. Why should you become so discouraged in only two or three days? Your letter smacks of lack of faith. You have a few boils, you do not even give yourself full treatment and you become frightened that they will never go. What is this? You must have the conviction that you are going to get well, and that quickly, and that in order to get well you will scrupulously obey the doctor’s or the vaidya’s advice in so far as you have no conscientious objection to it. You should not become a prey to gloomy thoughts. Why should you worry about carrying out my decision? It is of no great significance.² Supposing I keep an ailing person in Segaon so as to nurse him. It surely is not going to harm me in any way. Your concern should be only to get well and then soon to come and look after the cows. Your concern should be, also, your hot temper.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1891

411. LETTER TO SHANMUKHAM CHETTY

February 8, 1937

MY DEAR SHANMUKHAM,

Your addressing me familiarly revives old memories and old flavours. I reciprocate.

I like your frank letter. What I expect you to do is to pull your weight in the right direction. The reform must not be confined to the borders of Travancore. You can do a great deal to avoid the subtle persecution that must be going on there of the Nambudiris who have dared to accept the Travancore Proclamation.¹

¹ The cow had been sent by the addressee from Wardha.
² Gandhiji had earlier said that only those who were perfectly fit would be allowed to live in Segaon.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

412. LETTER TO BHARATAN KUMARAPPA

February 8, 1937

MY DEAR BHARATAN,

I have just read your note². It is good so far as it goes. It is going in just as it is. Read my article³ in the current issue and offer your comments if any or write more.

Love to you both.

From a photostat: G.N. 3592

413. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

SEGAON,

February 9, 1937

CHI. LILA,

I got your letter. It was good to hear that your brother’s health was improving fast. When he is permitted to leave Bombay, I would prefer Matheran to Rajkot if he is quite fit then to go out for walks. The water at Matheran contains iron and is, therefore, supposed to be heavy. But it is very good for those who can take walks. The climate of course is good. But Matheran is not a good place if one has to remain in bed. From the point of view of expenses, there is no doubt that Rajkot is cheaper than Matheran.

As regards eating, there is only one way for you: you should ponder over the eleven vows every morning and evening. That means ¹ The addressee was Dewan of Cochin and had written to Gandhiji that there was no persecution in Cochin.

² Presumably this was Kumarappa’s contribution published in Harijan, 20-3-1937, under the title “The Coming National Week”
³ Presumably “Khadi in Andhra Desh”; vide Khadi in Andhradesh”, 6-2-1937 you tell God, with the world as your witness, that you ceaselessly strive to keep them. These vows include the vow of non-indulgence of the palate. You and I, therefore, and all others who regularly ponder on that vow cannot eat a single morsel for gratifying the palate. We can eat merely to sustain the body and keep it alive.

The sole reason for the exclusion of condiments from our food is the vow of non-indulgence of the palate.

One can eat even chillies as medicine. But one cannot take even salt for the pleasure of the palate. If you keep pondering over the meaning of these vows and live accordingly, you will earn the merit of living here no matter where you are staying. On the contrary, even if you live here and go on repeating the vows in words but do not strive constantly to keep them, you will only be deceiving yourself by living here. It will not, therefore, be proper if, having gone there for service, you become negligent in keeping the vows.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9356. Also C.W. 6631. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

414. LETTER TO NATHUBHAI

February 9, 1937

BHAI NATHUBHAI,

I got both your letters. I am replying\(^1\) to the first question in Harijanbandhu. Please see it. Very few persons would be interested in the other questions, and so I am replying to them here.

The vegetarians may keep meat-eating animals, but they should not procure meat for them, e.g., the cat and the dog. Both are carnivorous, but we do not procure meat for them.

I know the Jain belief. I knew the ideas of Raichandbhai, but I am convinced that they are not consistent with the ethics of ahimsa. From the point of view of ahimsa, uncooked things should be considered sufficient for the needs of the body. Drying, pickling and cooking are forms of violent possessiveness and should, therefore, be eschewed. I see no meaning in the distinction that is made between tubers and other vegetables. In Jain literature ahimsa has been confined only to a discussion of what should be eaten and what should not be eaten. This, in my view, is a travesty of ahimsa. I have seen non-vegetarians who are the very images of compassion and hence I consider them to be votaries of ahimsa in spite of their being non-vegetarians. I have also seen people who, although avoiding green vegetables, etc., gratify their palate in all sorts of ways and are full of cruelty. I believe that they are a disgrace to dharma. I also believe that had Raichandbhai not died prematurely, he would have fully endorsed what I am saying here now. To say that a fast is broken by cleaning the teeth or by taking a bath is, in my opinion, sheer ignorance. Those who are completely free from passions and are living in uninhabited forests, wearing no clothes and eating only fruit, etc., yielded by the trees, who meditate on God and roam about, for them it might not matter if they did not clean the teeth or take bath because leaves of neem trees are both their food and their means of cleaning the teeth. Earth and sun rays are their bath. It would be sheer ignorance to apply this, during a fast, to persons who are full of evil emotions, hold all kinds of possessions and whose every pore emits foul smell.

\(^{1}\) Vide “My Notes”, sub-title “Wrong Thinking”

As in curds, there are countless bacteria in milk also, a far greater number of them than in plants, tubers, etc. To distinguish among vegetables as some that may be eaten and others that must be avoided, and at the same time to take milk, etc., freely, is like stealing an anvil and giving a needle in alms.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6248

415. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

February 9, 1937

Bhai Krishnachandra,

I have your letter. What I wrote was correct. I have not consulted anyone so far but my feeling is that you can be accommodated in the high school here. You can be useful for teaching Hindi, English or Mathematics. Or you can be given some other work, such as would justify Rs. 75 a month being paid to you. It is also possible that I may not be able to fix you at Wardha. Then I can find some other place. But I can make enquiries only when I know that you are ready. But please understand that Rs. 75 is the beginning and the end of it. The start can be lower but Rs. 75 is as high as you can go. Your asking for more would lead to your degradation. Think well and tell me if I should start working in this direction? Once you have accepted a position, I will not take a ‘no’ from you afterwards. If you have any terms and conditions to propose, write to me clearly. Only then shall I try to do something. You should obtain the carding-bow.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4279. also S.G. 56

416. LETTER TO KRAUSE

SEGAON, WARDHA,
February 11, 1937

MY DEAR KRAUSE,

I am ashamed of myself. It will be difficult to forgive myself if you have to leave without our meeting. I would, therefore, ask you if it is at all possible specially to come to Wardha. If you will look at the Railway map you will find that Wardha is a central station. You can go to Calcutta via Wardha. It is the most direct route from Bombay. You can also go from Calcutta to Madras via Wardha though that does become a little indirect. You can also go from Calcutta to Delhi via Wardha.

If you find you simply cannot do it I shall not blame you. It will be my stupidity that will be to blame.

I am glad to receive all the messages that you have brought for me. They revive old memories. If you cannot come you will not forget to write and give me your final impressions. I expect you will be going to Delhi. If you do, you should ask your guides to take you to the Harijan Colony, Kingsway, Delhi. You will meet my youngest son there. But what I want you to see is the work going on in the colony amongst the so-called untouchables.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original: C.W. 10858
417. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

SEGAON,
February 12, 1937

BHAJ KHAMBHATTA,

You should of course not leave Pandit half way. Go to Gaurishankar only if Pandit’s treatment does not suit you. It is certainly our dharma to try, within limits, to cure physical suffering. But it is also our dharma to bear it cheerfully, knowing that all suffering comes only to test us.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA
DE BELVEDERE COURT
CHURCH GATE RECLAMATION
BOMBAY

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6612. Also C.W. 4403. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

418. AHMEDABAD MILL INDUSTRY

Now that the Ahmedabad Mill Industry has tided over the difficulty that had arisen over the mill-owners’ demand for a cut in the wages of labour, it is well to examine the conditions of its stability. The Umpire, Sir Govindrao Madgavkar, deserves the thanks of both the parties for his great labour of love. The public do not know that he undertook the onerous burden without any fees which he might have insisted upon, if he had so chosen. Having entered upon the task he might have lightened it by merely giving his decision without any argument. Instead he has reasoned out his Award and made valuable suggestions for the guidance of both capital and labour.

It is to be hoped that both parties will whole-heartedly act up to the Umpire’s suggestion and work out the Delhi agreement. The Umpire has made it perfectly clear that no cut is possible without fully implementing the Delhi agreement which has also the merit of being turned into an award of the then Umpire, Mr. Patkar, retired High Court Judge. The essential conditions of that agreement are that wages must be standardized for the whole mill industry and that there should be a scheme for automatic adjustment whenever there is a demand for a cut or a rise in the wages. It has been argued on behalf of the mill-owners that neither standardization not automatic adjustment is a practical proposition. The Umpire has rejected that argument. Indeed he could not do otherwise. Surely the parties knew what they were doing when they entered into the agreement at Delhi. They would never have introduced the two clauses if they had thought them to be unworkable. It may be that the parties may not agree to a common scheme. It is for them to refer their differences then to the arbitrators and, the latter failing, to an Umpire. Standardization of wages is a mechanical or arithmetical proposition. It may be that an intermediate stage is necessary before all the mills can be induced to adopt an even scale of wages or labour can in all cases be induced to accept a level which in some cases must mean a large reduction in wages though the whole total remains unaffected. But a scheme of automatic adjustment of wages is undoubtedly a complicated matter. It demands for its fruition a spirit of give and take on both sides. And any such scheme must, in the nature of things, be of a temporary character subject to periodical revision.

No scheme of automatic adjustment is possible without reference to the maxims I have ventured to mention in my Award and which Sir Govindrao has been pleased to dismiss as idealistic. Of course it was no part of his duty as Umpire to examine or refer to them at all. I have myself stated in my Award that the maxims have not guided my decision. But having referred to them at all, the learned Umpire might have shown how or why they were idealistic.

I propose to show that whether they are idealistic or otherwise it is impossible to arrive at a satisfactory scheme of automatic adjustment without reference to them. They must be the measuring rod for action which may and will probably fall short of it. Let me reproduce below a translation of the original which is in Gujarati:

Now take the first maxim. Why should mills desire a cut so long as they have profits? It would be like a man desiring to cut off his feet to ease some derangement of the belly, Do they cut out machinery in order to ensure a certain percentage of profits? Are men and women who may be called living machines less than inert machinery? Is there anything very idealistic in the suggestion that the wages of the operatives, who are at least as much a foundation of the industry as the machinery and buildings, may not be reduced to ensure a minimum of profits? I make bold to say that if the votes of humane shareholders (and I regard the shareholders of mills as humane) were taken, they would summarily reject the proposition that their profits should be preferred to the wages of labour on whom depend their profits.

---

1 Not reproduced here. For the text, vide clauses XVI and XVII of Award in Labour Dispute, 26-12-1936

And if the first maxim must at least be seriously considered, the second about the living wage follows from it. If there can be no cut before profits are on the brink of sinking, it is necessary to know the limit beyond which reduction in wages cannot go. In other words, there must be a decision as to what constitutes a living wage. I am not concerned with the name. Call it the minimum wage, if that expression sounds sweeter. The process is the same. Living wage to my mind is the most accurate description for an irreducible wage.

And the acceptance of the principle of a living wage implies an examination of what may be included in it. Should intoxicants form part, should tobacco be included, may milk or ghee or gur be excluded? These are no visionary things. They touch the very existence of labour. Its efficiency depends very largely upon the right kind of living. And the greater the efficiency, the greater the possibility of enhanced profits.

Maxim (d) is self-evident and accepted by the arbitrators as well as the Umpire.

Who can deny the reasonableness of the statement (Maxim c) that workmen should be regarded as equal owners with the shareholders? If conflict between capital and labour is to be avoided, as I believe it can and must be, labour should have the same status and dignity as capital. Why should a million rupees put together be more than a million men or women put together? Are they not infinitely more than metal, white or yellow? Or should holders of metal always assume that labour cannot be organized and put together as metal can? For the past eighteen years, consciously or unconsciously, capital and labour have acted in Ahmedabad on the assumption that there is no inherent conflict between the two. It is true that peace between the two has been precarious. But it has been so because the parties have not recognized the full validity of the maxims as the conditions of an abiding peace.

If then labourers are co-equal owners, their organization should have the same access to the transactions of mills as the shareholders.
Indeed there can be no confidence on the part of labour if material information is withheld from it.

The last maxim admits of no weakening. If the Labour Union is regarded as a desirable organization as much as is the mill-owners’, and is not merely tolerated as a necessary evil, it follows that there should be an agreed register of available hands and that the mill-owners should not accept or engage any person outside the Labour Union.

Thus it seems to me that the maxims are not visionary, but on examination they are found to be absolutely essential to the healthy existence or growth of the great industry in whose interest they have been humbly suggested.

It need not be stated that the list submitted is by no means exhaustive. I must suggest some more, when I am able to revert to the question.

_Harijan_, 13-2-1937

419. LETTER TO RANI VIDYAVATI

_SEGAON, WARDHA,
February 12, 1937_

CHI. VIDYA,

Your letter dated 16-1-37 reached my hands only three days ago. You are of course aware that I had been touring in Travancore.

What should I write now? I have already written to Dr. Roy. He will of course admit you. Why do you insist on a letter written in my own hand? These days my right hand needs rest. Writing with the left hand takes time.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library
420. A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION

The following was received just after I had finished the Travancore pilgrimage:

The letter is from a retired principal of a college and deserves attention. I have already drawn attention to the many implications of the Proclamation. But I have not touched in that connection the question of inter-dining. My views in the matter are well known. Restrictions on inter-dining have no vital connection with varnadharma. They were, in my opinion, hygienic rules in origin. Given a proper conformity with the rules of cleanliness there should be no scruple about dining with anybody. And training Harijan boys and girls as members of a family ensures cleanliness and raises their status and removes in the safest manner the insane caste restrictions on inter-dining. I fully agree with the writer of the letter quoted that equality all along the line is implied in the Proclamation. The young Maharaja has given the lead. Will the people of Travancore follow it in all its implications?

Harijan, 13-2-1937

421. WHAT KHADI WORKERS SHOULD KNOW

In previous article I have tried to explain what should be covered by the science of khadi. In my opinion it should be made obligatory on every khadi worker engaged in any of the production centres of the A.I.S.A. to know the elements of this science. Sjt. Lakshmidas is a khadi lover and one of the most careful students of the science of khadi that we have. But I would not call even him a master of the science. In the course of a letter which he addressed me in November 1935, he laid down what he considered to be the minimum test which every khadi worker ought to satisfy. The test is reproduced below:

(1) The worker should know how to distinguish between superior and inferior grades of cotton, cotton-seed and lint.

---

1 Not reproduced here. The correspondent had suggested that to make the Proclamation a real success people should introduce inter-dining and also employ poor Harijans as cooks and domestic servants.

2 Translated by Pyarelal from the original in Gujarati
(2) He should be able to fix in position the rolling pin of a hand-ginning machine and to make the necessary correction and adjustment to make it exactly fit with the fixed roller, when the former happens to be bent or of unequal thickness.

(3) He should be able to fit up a carding-bow and to prepare the gut and the hide piece for the shoulder-blade.

(4) He should be able to show a ginning speed of five pounds an hour on a hand-ginning machine over a period of four hours.

(5) He must show a carding speed of ten tolas of cotton wool per hour, excluding the time required for making slivers.

(6) He must know the construction of every type of spinning-wheel and how to assemble it. He must be able to straighten a spindle gone out of shape and to prepare the mal and the daman the cross bands of the motor wheel.

(7) He must be able to maintain a spinning speed of 300 rounds (400 yards) of yarn of 20's, with a tensile strength of over 80% and evenness 95% in a four hours’ test.

(8) He should know the Andhra process of spinning and must be able to spin 200 rounds of 70’s to 80’, strength 80% and evenness 95% during a two hours’ test.

(9) He should know the construction of a pit loom as well as a fly-shuttle loom and be able to prepare together the reeds, the healds and the sizing brush.

(10) He should be able to weave khadi of 50” width on a fly shuttle loom from yarn of 20’s and to make all necessary adjustments to produce at least five different kinds of border designs for saris.

(11) The speed of weaving should come up to one square yard in an hour from yarn of 20’s.

(12) He should know all about the growing of different varieties of cotton and should be able to get hand-gins, carding-bows, spinning-wheels, looms and their accessories locally prepared, preferably out of local material. This would involve a knowledge of:

(a) Rainfall, its extent and distribution over different parts of the year, and a knowledge of manures and the nature of the soil.

(b) Different kinds of wood and of calculations relating to measurement.

(c) A workable knowledge of drawing for the above-mentioned needs.

(13) A knowledge of carpentry sufficient for repairing the various machines.

It is not quite easy to fulfil this test. But given sufficient earnestness and a measure of diligence, anyone who has had a fair education in this should be able to satisfy Sjt. Lakshmidas’s test. That would, however, still leave uncovered the commercial aspect of the science of khadi. That is covered by the questions drawn up by me. The syllabus prepared by Sjt. Lakshmidas is calculated to cover the technical side. One must be an adept in both these fields before he can be said to be versed in the elements of the science of khadi. I shall feel thankful if such khadi workers as may happen to read this article, and can satisfy the technical or the commercial test or both, will send me their full names and addresses. Similarly those who are eager to qualify themselves in the elementary science of khadi should also communicate with me. Unluckily today we have no suitable textbooks that could be used to impart the required knowledge. The only available book that somewhat answers the purpose is that of late Sjt. Maganlal Gandhi. But even that book is now out of date owing to the advance that the science of khadi has made since that book was written. A revised edition of that book is therefore urgently needed. That can come about only if we have lovers of khadi who would devote themselves to the revision and have the leisure for the work.

Harijan, 13-2-1937

422. LETTER TO SARLADEVI

February 13, 1937

CHI. SARLA,

I had got your letter. I am late in replying. Won’t you forgive me for it? In fact there is nothing in your letter which calls for a reply. But I think I ought to reply. Since you yourself have become a devi¹, need I suffix ‘devi’ to your name? How old are you? How do you spend your time, or waste it? Don’t be shocked to see this sheet ragged [at the edges]. Such paper is made by the poor nowadays. It is not made with machines. Do you keep the poor in your thoughts?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6640. Also C.W. 4289

423. LETTER TO SURESH SINGH

February 13, 1937

Bhai Suresh Singh,

I have your letter. Come over whenever you feel like it. I hope that everything is proceeding smoothly and there is no discord in the family.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 8690

¹ Goddess
424. MY NOTES

THE PROBLEM IN REVERSE

A Hindu gentleman having read my reply\(^1\) to a Muslim gentleman’s letter in the Harijanbandhu of 31-1-1937 writes to say.\(^2\)

I feel that the reply to this question is contained in what I had written previously. In that case, the Muslim gentleman had introduced a new custom and consequently had to put up with the orthodoxy of his relations. In this case, people wish to give up their existing tradition and eat meat. A vegetarian Hindu is by no means bound to encourage them. It depends on each individual as to how far he is prepared to abandon existing tradition in such matters. Those who regard giving up meat as a part of religion are likely to find it intolerable if other members of the family eat meat. We should follow ahimsa dharma or the religion of love in all our conduct. There should be no anger towards those who give up their religion, they should be won over through love alone. How this may be done, is to be considered in each particular case.

WRONG THINKING

A co-worker committed an error in a fit of rage. I explained to him that it was a grave error and that he should atone for it by apologizing to the person he had wronged. He admitted his fault and also the need for apologizing but he told me that he was not worthy of what I had asked him to do, that he had not risen so high and was not capable of doing so at one stroke. After that, this co-worker, saw his mistake. He is a mature and balanced person. The object of writing this is merely to show that like this co-worker many of us are given to erroneous thinking. To apologize for an offence which has already been committed is even less than paying back a debt without any interest. It can be compared to a promise to repay a debt, as an offence already committed is not wiped out by an apology; but it does imply a promise not to commit such an offence in the future. No debtor to this day has argued that he is not fit to repay his debts. It

---

\(^1\) Vide “Need for Tolerance”, 13-3-1937

\(^2\) The letter has not been translated here. The correspondent had stated that Gandhiji’s reply to the Muslim gentleman might be in conformity with Islam but it was not in conformity with Hinduism. He had asked whether it was proper for a vegetarian to buy meat for his family members.
may happen that at that moment he does not have a sufficient sum to repay his debts. However, it would provoke laughter if a debtor argued that he was unworthy of repaying his debts. This may even be regarded as impudence. But in moral matters, very often people deceive themselves. Impatience and subtle pride lie at the root of this. If this were not the case, how could we fail to see something which is as clear as daylight? We do not have the capacity to do many things. And there is no room for any effort if, because of this want of ability, we regard ourselves as unfit for that task. Hence no one should consider himself unworthy of doing any good work. No one should doubt that repeated efforts are certain to make us capable of doing it.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 14-2-1937

425. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
February 14, 1937

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your letter.

Whatever Valji may do, you cannot come out of Saurashtra in the manner suggested by you. I can understand your resorting to satyagraha just to oppose the Foreigners’ Act, after giving the Government a sufficiently long notice, though I wouldn’t approve even of that.

I do not think you will have to wait long now. After the new constitution starts functioning, the Government will probably find it difficult to keep such notices in force. Meanwhile, you should write to the persons named by you and ask them what their aim is in disobeying the law. If I could write to them, I should be glad to do so, for that might lead to an opportunity for a pure fight and the Foreigners’ Act might even go. But it is outside my present sphere of work to collect material for such a fight. However, if you have learnt anything from me, you can form an intelligent and firm plan on these few words of mine. Nineteen persons can do a lot.

The views which you have expressed are a sign of cowardice. It does not befit a satyagrahi to think of quietly disobeying a law out of desperation and submitting to imprisonment or other consequences which might follow. The line, “Bathe and wash yourself and dress your hair, for the time has come to go to live with the beloved one”, holds true of all satyagrahis. When a satyagrahi goes to battle, he does so after full preparation and with beating of drums, for he goes to jail as he would go to live in a palace. To be merely ready to suffer the punishment if caught is not the right attitude for a satyagrahi to adopt. Even thieves and dacoits do that. Everyone who follows the way of violence risks his life when he embarks on his venture. Is not being confined to Kathiawar a form of imprisonment? If you are weary of such imprisonment, how would you bear banishment to the Andamans? But I will not dwell further on this subject. If I were to go on writing about it, I have so much to say that I would fill pages.

Your letter has opened not a small window but a big door in my brain, from which can pour out a flood of thoughts. But, however unwillingly, I must shut that door.

I am giving rest to my right hand these days, and so dictate the letters. On Mondays I cannot do without using the right hand. I can write with the left, but at present I cannot spare the time that this would require.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5542

426. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

February 14, 1937

BHAI BALWANTSINHA,

There is no reason for you to be overwrought. It is good you have placed yourself under the doctor’s care. You are bound to be cured. Only do not give up patience. Doctors, vaidyas and hakims all make mistakes. The system precluding any possibility of mistake is nature cure. But very few people have the faith to carry it on and there are very few experienced practitioners.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1892
427. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

SEGON, WARDHA,
February 15, 1937

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I feel ashamed that I am not able to write to you. I do remember that I have to write but can’t because of the pressure of work. I will be more careful hereafter, even if it is only two lines that I can write, as is the case today. But please be content since there are long letters from Ba and Manu.

Krause has arrived. Probably he will be going back without seeing me because of two day’s delay on my part. He got my letter late. I have a long letter from him. I have suggested that he should see Devdas.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4862

428. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

February 15, 1937

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

How angry you can get! Such rage and such rudeness at a remark from an ignorant and idle boy! You have broken all the vows! What do you know of my conversation with Prabhu Dayal? Shall I laugh or weep over your letter or be angry in return? Your letter is one to be wept over but I shall not weep. To give way to anger would be a sin and a bad example. I shall therefore laugh over this folly of yours. If you are tired you may certainly leave Segaon. But you should first come over with Prabhu Dayal and let me explain what happened. You may then do what you like. You need not come today. Come when you are all right. Consider as taboo the food prepared by Prabhu Dayal. Ask Chanchal.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1893

¹ Prabhu Dayal, who used to prepare the addressee’s meals, mentioned this to Gandhiji and Gandhiji expressed disapproval. The conversation was conveyed in a garbled version to the addressee.

² Wife of Jhaverbhai Patel, a worker at Maganwadi
429. LETTER TO DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA
February 16, 1937

DEAR DR. GOPICHAND,

Surely there is nothing intrinsically wrong in seeking election to Legislative Councils or Assemblies. Therefore, if there were any sin in your having done so it could only be if you felt that it was wrong to do so. Not because I had said so but because you had come to that conclusion independently. No *prayashchitta*¹ is necessary beyond this obvious thing that in terms of the constitution you should retire from the A.I.V.I.A. That retirement will be severely felt at least by me. But your not doing so will be still more terrible. You will still do whatever you can for the Association, guiding whoever may be the agent of the Association. I know that this will not be the same thing as your being an active member but it will be the next best thing to do. You cannot be both a parliamentarian and an active worker in the cause of village uplift. A good parliamentarian’s work is cut out for him—he too can make himself busy all day long if he is conscientious and wants to become an efficient parliamentarian.

Of course our personal relations will remain unaffected no matter what happens. In my opinion you have undoubtedly erred but you have erred in what you considered was a good cause. And the cause was good, only not for you because of your previous, definite and unequivocal commitment.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA
MACHHIHATAN
LAHORE

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

430. LETTER TO GOSIBEHN CAPTAIN
February 16, 1937

I have your letter about Jajuji. You cannot be more sorry than I am about the resignation. I like him immensely. He is one of the most selfless men I have known and he is a most conscientious worker—absolutely reliable. He would never handle a thing which he cannot do. But he and Kumarappa cannot hit it off. They are temperamental and their method of work is different and Kumarappa finds it very hard to get on with him. Kumarappa too has the qualities that Jajuji possesses. We cannot do without either. Jajuji still remains a member of the Board. I thought, therefore, that the best way of dealing with the difficult situation that has arisen was to accept Jajuji’s resignation but, of course, it is for the Board to decide. If there is any other way of dealing with the difficulty that way should be adopted. When the meeting takes place we shall consider all the ways and means.

¹ Atonement

I will send you as much gur as I can when I know of someone going to Bombay. You don’t want to incur railway charges. I shall probably get Duncan to take it to you. He is a new member of the family and I am sure you will like him when you meet him. He has come all the way from England to see me. Chhotelal tells me you took away one Karad chakki some time ago. If that is so, you don’t want another. If you do, let me know. There will be no difficulty about getting money from the Birlas.

BAPU

SHRI GOSHIBEN CAPTAIN
GANDHI SEVA SENA
ADENWALLA BUILDING
NEW QUEEN’S ROAD
BOMBAY

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

431. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

SEGAON,
February 16, 1937

CHI. LILA.

I got your letter. After you have become used to writing with a reed pen you wouldn’t like the steel nib. The latter became popular merely because of people’s laziness, for it does not need to be mended whereas the reed pen frequently does. Besides, the steel nib probably seems cheaper, though a reed pen must prove cheaper if used carefully. Moreover, mending a reed pen is an art by itself; and a steel nib can never write as beautifully as a reed pen. It is difficult to write Indian scripts with the steel nib, which is made for the Western scripts. Of course I do not mean to say that steel nibs that can write the Indian scripts cannot be made. So much for the steel nib philosophy!
Mahabaleshwar is certainly better than Matheran. But perhaps it may be too cold for Dwarkadas1. If he can go to Mahabaleshwar, then why shouldn’t he go to Panchgani? If Panchgani is convenient to him, it may suit him better. Deolali and Lonavla are also not bad.

If you don’t observe restraint in eating, your health is bound to suffer.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9357. Also C.W. 6632. courtesy: Lilavati Asar

432. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

February 16, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

I got your letter. Is the enclosed summary based on your letter all right? Would you like to add anything? Revise the summary and send it back.

I am enclosing another letter also. The writer’s full name is Nanubhai Desai. He had given his address in his previous letter. He has forgotten to give it in this. Nanavati knows him. He has given the address of Ramanlal Engineer who stays near Ellis Bridge. Puratan would probably know him since he is working among the Harijans. Ask him. My purpose in sending his letter to you is this: I have advised him to get married. He says he is ready to marry even a Harijan girl. Perhaps he may be a suitable match for Dudhabhai’s Mani. Please inquire about it. That is, call him to you and have a talk with him. Ask him about his family. And if you find everything all right, do what may be necessary. Write to Nanubhai and tell him that because he didn’t give his address in his second letter I couldn’t write to him direct. I was going to advise him to go to you in any case. Write to him or tell him that I had torn up his previous letter after replying to it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9106.

1 Addressee’s brother
433. LETTER TO SURENDRA

February 16, 1937

CHI. SURENDRA,

When I said ‘yatra’ I meant a pilgrimage. Otherwise I would have used the word ‘musafari’\(^1\). We are trying to include in the morning prayer, not the whole Upanishad, but certainly the first verse. Tena tyaktena\(^2\) is more pregnant with meaning. “Left over from yajna”\(^3\) can be derived from it. Tena tyaktena can bear two meanings: one, that which is given by God, and two, that one must renounce everything. But when one has renounced everything, what is left over? However, life must go on and so we have “bhunjitha”\(^4\). That is to say that one must partake, like a medicine, of what God has given. And this applies not only to the food that we must eat but to all the needs of body, mind and soul that we must satisfy.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

434. LETTER TO BALWANTRAI K. THAKORE

February 16, 1937

BHAISHRI BALWANTRAI

I received your letter as well as the poem. Perhaps you do not know that my understanding of modern poetry is very limited. So I cannot easily understand the kind of poems you write. That you went over it again and meticulously rectified the mistakes shows your love for me. But on whom do you shower such love? Of what value is music to a deaf man? I will try to read the poem once again with the help of your notes and try to understand it.

The other thing is certainly my subject. The verses quoted by Shri Wadia are not appropriate. What he wants is impossible. You did not see this. And the only meaning which can be deduced from what you quote is that truth should not be told in a pleasant manner. It may not be a violation of truth to call the father the husband of the mother. But it is certainly a violation of social usage. Accordingly the truth

\(^1\) Travelling
\(^2\) “By that renounced”; Ishopanishad, 1
\(^3\) Bhagavad Gita, III. 13
\(^4\) “Thou shouldst enjoy.”

THE COLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
spoken in this way cannot be called truth. One would cease to speak the truth if one stretched the meaning in this way.

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

435. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

February 16, 1937

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

Yesterday I laughed at your letter but I could not forget it and now it hurts. I had never thought you capable of such fury. I sent a message through Jhaverbhai. You will have acted upon it. Chanchalbehn will be cooking for you; you will accept it with humility.

Do what the doctor says and get well soon. You may do what you like after you are well. I am beginning to feel that anger is the cause of your weakness. Anger burns none except the person who succumbs to it. In one moment you have harmed yourself by listening to the words of a worthless child. You have also harmed Prabhu Dayal by taking his words literally.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1894

436. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI

SEGAON,

February 16, 1937

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

What did you tell Balvantsinha? You did not even follow what I told you. When you advanced the excuse that you could not give full time to paper-making because you had to serve Balvantsinha, you made a grievous blunder. You only added fuel to the fire of his anger. Were you not told that even after giving six hours to your work you could do anything else you wanted to, even cook for Balvantsinha?

Now I am left with no alternative but to give you railway fare and tell you to go home. You are not fit to do honest labour. You cannot distinguish between truth and untruth. Do not harass me further by insisting on living in Wardha. Go away tomorrow if possible. I have explained everything to Kanu. He will pay you the money. There is no need to see me. You may write to me if you wish after going home. You will not be able to achieve anything till you start being earnest in doing physical labour, till you begin to learn to speak less, stop speaking and writing without cause and learn to tell the truth. Hence it will be very good if after going home you do these three things well.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11682

437. LETTER TO DILKHUSH B. DIWANJI

SEGAON,

February 17, 1937

Bhai Dilkhush,

I am happy to have your letter. You should certainly make an effort. Better still, write a small book. If you want you can consult me. I will certainly give you guidance. You may make some alterations in my questions. I put down the questions as they occurred to me. So there is scope for amplifying them and arranging them more systematically. Maybe you will like to leave out carpentry and weaving sections for the time being. Proceed as follows: history of cotton, varieties of cotton, how to recognize them, when and how to collect them, shelling of the pods, uses of the shells, ginning-wheel, description of its parts, methods of ginning. Similarly about carding, sliver-making and spinning. If you follow this order the work will be easy. If you have written anything as a specimen, send it to me. I will go through it. I will make suggestions if they are called for. Do not write anything unless you can do so from personal experience. I have seen some books written without personal experience and I have found that they are not at all useful. So make use of whatever you read only after testing it in practice. This however applies only to the actual working. There are certain things which we cannot learn by experience. In such cases our duty is to find out how reliable the writer is. It is good there are so few writers on the subject, so there is not much choice.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

_Motana Man, p. 72_
438. LETTER TO SOHANLAL OBEROI

February 17, 1937

BHAI SOHANLAL,

Telling lies is not less of a sin than lechery. But one who is a libertine in secret is guilty of three sins: he falls himself, he brings about another’s fall, and he also lies.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6864

439. LETTER TO MARIE ROMAIN ROLLAND

SEGAON, WARDHA,

February 18, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

My son sent me your letter to him in which you have asked for my autograph for the purpose of selling it in aid of the stricken women and children of Spain. While that unhappy people has my whole-hearted sympathy I am not sending you my autograph. I am not convinced of the right of employing such means for obtaining money for a good cause. People should subscribe willingly for such without expecting any return.

My affection to you both.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 10587. Courtesy: Madeleine Rolland

440. LETTER TO SHIVPRASAD GUPTA

February 18, 1937

I am an idealist. I am also a practical man. I have no enmity toward foreign countries but I cannot harm my country for their sake. I first began using Indian dates in South Africa and kept up the practice on my return to India. But I found that the preference was meaningless. And what a number of calendars we have! One in Bengal, three in Maharashtra, your own yet another, one in Bihar, one observed by the Arya Samaj, Hijrj for the Mussalmans. I should have so many panchangs¹ with me; only then can I possibly be impartial towards the people of other provinces. Alongside I have to take note of the western calendar. Under the circumstances I gave up the use of the Indian calendar and it has resulted in no harm to anyone; in fact I have only benefited. I have no resentment towards protagonists like you of the solar calendar though not to be resentful is indeed difficult. If I resent your partiality I should return your letter and supplement the date Magh 24 with the Christian year. Love holds me back from such impertinence. The Gregorian calendar is not solely English, it is used far and wide in the West. We do adopt many things Western, many of them are harmful while some are beneficial. As for the Gregorian calendar, if it is not of benefit, it is not harmful either.

1 A khadi worker of the Punjab

Now for the second question. You believe in Ekantvad while I believe in Anekantvad. If I am granted Dominion Status along with the right to secede from the Empire whenever I choose to do so, then the heart of an Ekantvadi like yourself will certainly undergo a change. But the day when we shall be thus blessed is in the distant future. For the present we are only the sufferers. But take it that as soon as India gets Dominion Status the word Ramrajya will go. When the authority comes to be vested in Indians the occasion will spark off internecine strife. You will want the capital in Kashi while I shall favour Segaon. But the day is far too distant, why need we quarrel about it now?

Disregard my views and improve your health with the help of asanas and concentration upon Ramanama. Rest assured that the sacrifices made by Indians will not go in vain because of my shortcomings; neither will your imprisonment prove fruitless.

[From Hindi]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

441. LETTER TO HANUMAN PRASAD PODDAR

February 18, 1937

Your letter is a sign of your love. As for death, it is a companion of birth and very faithful one. It never fails. Why should one worship

¹ Almanacs
God only when nearing death? What I regard as worship goes on every moment.

The best worship of God is to serve God’s creation in a spirit of devotion to Him. Today it has to be tuned to tena tyaktena bhunjitha.

Why do you wish that your dream may prove false? Even if I live to be a hundred it will seem too short to my friends. Then what does today or tomorrow matter? And as for worship, let us ever be doing it, both the young like you and the old like me.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[From Hindi]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

---

442. LETTER TO RABINDRANATH TAGORE

_SEGAON, WARDHA_,
_February 19, 1937_

DEAR GURUDEV,

I got your letter of the 10th instant five days ago. Your trust in me and affection for me are there to be seen in every line but what about my amazing limitations? My shoulders are too weak to bear the burden you wish to impose upon me. My regard to you pulls me in one direction, my reason in the opposite, and it would be folly on my part to surrender reason to emotion in a question like the one that faces me. I know that if I undertake the trust I would not need to go into details of administration but it does imply capacity for financing the Institution and what I heard two days ago has deepened my reluctance for I understand that in spite of your promise to me in Delhi you are about to go to Ahmedabad on a begging expedition. I was grieved and I would ask you on bended knees to forgo the expedition if it is really decided upon. And in any case I would beg of you to recall my appointment as one of the Trustees.

With love and reverence,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 4646

---

1. The addressee had dreamt that Gandhiji had not long to live and that he should be told to spend the remaining days in the worship of God.
2. Visvabharati
3. _Vide_ “Letter to Rabindranath Tagore”, 27-3-1936
4. _Vide_ also “Letter to Rabindranath Tagore”, 2-3-1937
443. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

February 19, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

You surely know that I did not refuse merely out of courtesy. Hence it is altogether wrong for you to take the blame on yourself. It was but proper for you at that time not to press me. I enjoyed myself thoroughly that night. I did not get nervous when I discovered that I had lost the way. I realized the error in just five minutes. There was a sudden change in the landscape and so I stopped the car and got down. I looked around me on all sides and enjoyed the pleasure of solitude that chance had given me. Looking round, I observed the changed position of the stars and retraced my way. I hardly took ten minutes to find the point where I had taken the wrong turn.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11518

444. LETTER TO CHITRE

February 19, 1937

CHI. CHITRE,

You will get much peace of mind if you concentrate on the last lines of the mantra. You should be satisfied with what God gives you. Do not forsake what he has given you. Do not envy others what they have or do not have. That is the meaning of the last line. Wealth does not mean money and riches. One man’s wealth is scholarship, another’s is physical health while that of a third is sacrifice. Do not feel envious of all these things. That is to say, you should not feel disturbed by others’ intelligence, efficiency, sacrifice etc. You should never think about it. We should sacrifice what we can without any difficulty and feel happy about it. But you are doing just the opposite. You are angry because others are not doing anything.

You go on asking yourself—why isn’t the Travancore Maharaja a great saint? Why isn’t an immoral person pure? Why do the zamindars not become sensible? Why do the poor not occupy palaces? To think in this manner is contrary to the mantra. The popular meaning of the mantra is: Let the world do what it wants. Watch it. Whatever you do, do it in the name of God and only as much as He allows you to do. Take as much as He allows you to take and be happy.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

422
445. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

February 19, 1937

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

If you are prepared even in July, write to me. I shall certainly do what I can then.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4280

446. SO-CALLED INCONSISTENCIES

I have some very persistent correspondents who put posers before me. Here is a specimen letter from one such correspondent:

Whenever economic troubles arise and whenever questions have been put to you on the economic relations of capital and labour, you have put forth the theory of trusteeship which has always puzzled me. You want the rich to hold all their property in trust for the poor and expend it for their benefit. If I ask you whether this is possible, you will tell me that my question arises from a belief in the essential selfishness of human nature and that your theory is based on the essential goodness of human nature. However, in the political sphere, you do not hold such views without at the same time losing your faith in the fundamental goodness of human nature. The British claim the same trusteeship for their domination of India. But you have lost faith in the British Empire long ago, and today there is no greater enemy to it than you. Is it consistent to have one law for the political world and another for the economic world? Or, do you mean to say that you have not lost faith in capitalism and capitalists just as you have lost faith in British Imperialism and the British? For your trusteeship theory sounds very much like the Divine Right theory of kings which has been exploded long ago. When one man, who was allowed to hold political power in trust for all the others and who derived it from them, misused it, people revolted against it and democracy was born. Similarly now, when a few, who ought to hold the economic power in trust for the others from whom they derive it, use it for their own self-aggrandisement and to the detriment of the rest, the inevitable result is the deprivation of the few of the means of economic power by the many, i.e., the birth of socialism.
Hitherto violence was the only recognized means to attain anything good or bad. When violence is employed even with a view to achieve good, it brings evil in its train and compromises the good achieved. Now I take it that your definite contribution to the world lies in your having successfully demonstrated the efficacy of another means, namely, non-violence, which is superior to violence and does not poison human relations. Therefore my fondest hope is that you should fight and end the present economic order non-violently and help to create a new one.

Secondly, you may answer another question agitating my mind. In 1930 when you launched your Satyagraha campaign, you declared that the fight was a fight to the finish and you would either return victorious or your dead body would float on the waters of the sea. Even in your subsequent statements you emphasized this and called upon all Indians to fight determinedly. Now, though you have reserved the right to civil disobedience to yourself, you have abandoned the fight against the Government. At the present moment you are devoting yourself heart and soul to the infusing of life into and raising the standard of the Indian village. I do not know whether you consider this phase of your activity as fight against the Government. The A.I.V.I.A is divorced from all politics, and therefore your activity in the promotion of the objects of the A.I.V.I.A cannot be called a part of the political fight to win political freedom for our country. Or do you think there can be gaps, intervening periods of lull in a fight called a fight to the finish? If so, why did you differentiate the fight of 1930 from that of 1920 and call the former a fight to the finish?

To take the first part, I see no inconsistency in my treatment of capitalism or imperialism. My correspondent has been led into a confusion of thought. I have not talked or thought of what kings, imperialists or capitalists claim and have claimed. I have talked and written of how capital may be treated. And then it is one thing to make a claim and another to live up to it. Not everyone like me (say) who claims to be a servant of the people becomes that by the mere assertion. And yet all would appreciate persons like me if we were found to be living up to our claim. Similarly would all rejoice if a capitalist were to divest himself of exclusive ownership and declare himself to be in possession as a trustee for the people. It is highly probable that my advice will not be accepted and my dream will not be realized. But who can guarantee that the socialists’ dream will be realized? Socialism was not born with the discovery of the misuse of capital by capitalists. As I have contended, socialism, even communism, is explicit in the first verse of Ishopanishad. What is true is that when some reformers lost faith in the method of conversion, the technique of what is known as scientific socialism was born. I am engaged in solving the same problem that faces scientific socialists. It is true, however, that my approach is always and only through unadulterated non-violence. It may fail. If it does, it will be because of my ignorance of the technique of non-violence. I may be a bad exponent of the doctrine in which my faith is daily increasing. The A.I.S.A. and the A.I.V.I.A. are organizations through which the technique of non-violence is being tested on an all-India scale. They are special autonomous bodies created by the Congress for the purpose of enabling me to conduct my experiments without being fatted by the vicissitudes of policy to which a wholly democratic body like the Congress is always liable. Trusteeship, as I conceive it, has yet to prove its worth. It is an attempt to secure the best use of property for the people by competent hands.

Now for the second part of the letter. I do not divide life into water-tight compartments. The life of a nation like that of individuals is an indivisible whole. My retirement from the Congress or political life so called does not mean the slightest diminution in my yearning for India’s complete independence; nor is civil disobedience any distinct process of non-violence. It is one of the many non-violent processes which are in no way inconsistent with one another. What I have to do is to give a clear demonstration of non-violence in all my actions. I claim to be conducting my experiment in a scientific spirit. In the garden of non-violence are many plants. They are all from the same parent. They may not be all used simultaneously. Some are less powerful than others. All are harmless. But they have to be handled skilfully. I am applying such skill to their use as God has given me. But because I use one plant rather than another at any time, it does not follow that I give up the fight. It is a fight to the finish. Defeat has no place in the dictionary of non-violence.

Harijan, 20-2-1937
447. AND THOU TOO!

An advocate from Tamil Nad writes:\footnote{Only extracts are reproduced here.}

... I write this letter to you since we want you to advise us on a problem which vitally affects us and which is in all respects like the Harijan problem—the problem of pollution. ...

... The Bar Association of this place is nearly 100 strong. All members of the Association are Brahmins except for three, of whom one is a Christian. ... The members pay a monthly subscription and the Association is maintained from the subscriptions. The Association maintains a water pot for drinking purposes which is kept in a room. ... On account of this there was an uproar in the Association and the Brahmin members objected to our taking water from the pot kept in the room on the sentimental ground of pollution. ...

I am writing this to you so that you can give us the lead and valuable advice for us to follow, lest we should err. ...

This is an old letter. Probably the Bar Association referred to by my correspondent has settled the differences in an honourable manner. But I know the evil persists in many places. What is true of bar associations is equally true of schools and colleges. I have no manner of doubt that the setting up of such a bar in public schools and associations is a usurpation wholly indefensible, and I should be surprised if it is not also illegal. Those who have prejudices such as the correspondent describes may make their own individual arrangements but cannot deprive fellow members and fellow-students of the right of using common property in a manner common to all.

Harijan, 20-2-1937

448. OUR VILLAGES

A young man who is trying to live in a village and earn his livelihood has sent me a pathetic letter. He does not know much English. I am therefore giving the letter below in an abridged form:

Three years ago when I was 20 years old I came to this village after spending 15 years in a town. My domestic circumstances did not allow me to have college education. The work you have taken up for village revival has encouraged me to pursue village life. I have some land. My village has a population of nearly 2,500. After close contact with this village I find the following among more than three-fourths of the people:

(1) Party feelings and quarrels,
(2) Jealousy,
(3) Illiteracy,
(4) Wickedness,
(5) Disunion,
(6) Carelessness,
(7) Lack of manners,
(8) Adherence to the old meaningless customs,
(9) Cruelty.

This is an out-of-the-way place. No great man has ever visited such remote villages. The company of great ones is essential for advancement. So I am afraid to live in this village. Shall I leave this village? If not, what guidance will you give me?

Though no doubt there is exaggeration in the picture drawn by the young correspondent, his statement may be generally accepted. The reason for the tragic state is not far to seek. Villages have suffered long from neglect by those who have had the benefit of education. They have chosen the city life. The village movement is an attempt to establish healthy contact with the villages by inducing those who are fired with the spirit of service to settle in them and find self-expression in the service of villagers. The defects noticed by the correspondent are not inherent in village life. Those who have settled in villages in the spirit of service are not dismayed by the difficulties facing them. They knew before they went that they would have to contend against many difficulties including even sullenness on the part of villagers. Only those, therefore, who have faith in themselves and in their mission will serve the villagers and influence their lives. A true life lived amongst the people is in itself an object-lesson that must produce its own effect upon immediate surroundings. The difficulty with the young man is, perhaps, that he has gone to the village merely to earn a living without the spirit of service behind it. I admit that village life does not offer attractions to those who go there in search of money. Without the incentive of service village life would jar after the novelty has worn out. No young man having gone to a village may abandon the pursuit on the slightest contact with difficulty.
Patient effort will show that villagers are not very different from city-dwellers and that they will respond to kindliness and attention. It is no doubt true that one does not have in the villages the opportunity of contact with the great ones of the land. With the growth of village mentality the leaders will find it necessary to tour in the villages and establish a living touch with them. Moreover, the companionship of the great and the good is available to all through the works of saints like Chaitanya, Ramakrishna, Tulsidas, Kabir, Nanak, Dadu, Tukaram, Tiruvalluvar, and others too numerous to mention though equally known and pious. The difficulty is to get the mind tuned to the reception of permanent values. If it is modern thought—political, social, economical, scientific—that is meant, it is possible to procure literature that will satisfy curiosity. I admit, however, that one does not find such as easily as one finds religious literature. Saints wrote and spoke for the masses. The vogue for translating modern thought to the masses in an acceptable manner has not yet quite set in. But it must come in time. I would, therefore, advise young men like my correspondent not to give in but persist in their effort and by their presence make the villages more livable and lovable. That they will do by serving the villages in a manner acceptable to the villagers. Everyone can make the beginning by making the villages cleaner by their own labour and removing illiteracy to the extent of their ability. And if their lives are clean, methodical and industrious, there is no doubt that the infection will spread in the villages in which they may be working.

_Harijan_, 20-2-1937

449. _DUTY OF A HARIJAN SEVAK_¹

A Harijan Sevak writes:²

It is not impossible to say when the reformers irritate people and when they dispel their misapprehension. By a single act or word alone it is possible to cause irritation as well as to dispel misapprehension. It should be left to each individual to make his own decision regarding this. This much can be said with certainty, that we should do nothing

¹ This appeared under “Notes”.
² The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had said that while reformers readily accepted food and drink from Harijans in public they did not do so in their homes for fear that doing so might irritate people.
with a view to irritating anyone; and at the same time we must certainly endeavour to dispel any misapprehension. When the work of reform has become a second nature with one, the question of wanting to irritate anyone does not arise. For who can give up his own nature? And when action or word becomes natural no one will feel irritated by it. Therefore, the proper thing would be for the reformer to pursue his duty as duty, and not with any other motive. By doing so, misapprehension will be dispelled automatically.

[From Hindi]
Harijan Sevak, 20-2-1937.

450. HARIJANS AND OTHERS

A correspondent writes:

It certainly is necessary. If in all Harijan schools the caste-Hindu boys are admitted in large numbers there is certainly a danger of Harijan boys being deprived of education. Therefore some fees must be collected from every caste-Hindu boy. It is possible that caste-Hindu boys are also poor like Harijan boys. If that is the case, then the Bihar Harijan Sevak Sangh should hold consultations with the Bihar Vidyapith and ask the Vidyapith to bear the expense of all the caste-Hindu boys attending the schools. The Vidyapith’s field is unrestricted whereas the Harijan Sevak Sangh’s is restricted and it should be so. Therefore it would be wrong for the Harijan Sevak Sangh to impart free education to caste-Hindu boys, while in the case of the Vidyapith it may be a duty.

[From Hindi]
Harijan Sevak, 20-2-1937

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had complained that in Bihar a certain Harijan school had more non-Harijan boys than Harijan boys because the school charged no fee. The policy of the Harijan Sevak Sangh, he had pointed out, was to charge fees from non-Harijan boys and had asked if it was necessary further to clarify the point.
451. LETTER TO K. B. JOSHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
February 20, 1937

MY DEAR JOSHI,

Having read the correspondence between you and Mahadev Desai I took charge of it myself—hence the delay in acknowledging your letter. I see that you are labouring under a sense of injustice and irritation. Let me give you my assurance that no one has the slightest intention of giving you any cause for offence. Jajuji and Kumarappa have appreciated your co-operation and the benefit you have given the A.I.V.I.A. of your expert knowledge and guidance. Of course I know that you undertook to come and organize the paper department at my instance and request. I know your worth and I do not want to lose your services so patriotically given. I know, too, that in our country we have very few experts. Of these those who will give their free service for the benefit of the villagers can be counted on one’s finger-tips and you are one of them. It will not do for you, therefore, to be offended. Do please, therefore come as soon as you can spare the time and I will personally see to it that every cause of offence is removed. With your assistance I want the paper department to be put in a first-class condition. I know that this is not so at present.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]

I like the specimen of the sugar you have made from date palm and I want your [help] in developing this village industry also.

From a photostat: G.N. 2762

452. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

[February 20, 1937]

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

Your letters keep coming. Poor Lakha² is disconsolate while waiting for you. Still you must remain there till the doctor discharges

¹ The date has been supplied by the addressee.
² A calf
you. We shall manage somehow or other. The construction work on Mirabehn’s hut has been started.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi G.N. 1890

453. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

February 20, 1937

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

I sent a few lines in the morning. I could have written more had I detained Kumarappa’s car which did not seem proper and writing with the left hand is an extremely slow business.

Impatience will only delay the cure, it is possible only through patience. The civil surgeon says that impurity in your blood is not recent but of a long standing, which makes treatment prolonged. What are you doing there? How do you pass your time and what is the diet? A cheerful spirit is a great contributing factor towards recovery. A student of the Gita should be content whatever be his lot. This is said in Chapter XII.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1895

454. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

February 20, 1937

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

Have patience, I shall write to the surgeon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1868
455. MY NOTES

INNOCENT HUMOUR

Last year, Shri Kishorelal Mashruwala had gone on a tour of Bihar on behalf of the Gandhi Seva Sangh. He had also visited the Santhal Paragana. Generally the people there are very poor. It can be said that they are largely untouched by modern civilization. During his tour of the Paragana Kishorelal happened to go to a village. The headman of the village, although illiterate, knew his work well. Shri Kishorelal writes about him as follows:

Though he is illiterate, he told me his tale in a very touching manner. It did not appear that he was repeating someone else’s words. I found in this headman the naive humour which is characteristic of villagers. He said: “We have only one difficulty: when there is famine in our parts, the crops die, the cattle die, human beings die, well-water dies but revenue and interest—these two never die. This is our only sorrow.”

Man cannot survive without humour. Moreover, people in the villages do not have the means to kill time which city-dwellers have. I do not believe that these are necessary. Wherever things are well-planned, there is no need to kill time. Man hardly has time enough to spare. He has sufficient time just to carry out his duties. Instead, we waste a great deal of time and, as a result, suffer starvation. Human beings do not get worn out through work. It is by working that man remains fresh and makes progress in every direction. He gets worn out through worry, by doing that which should not be done and by wasting time. That headman was capable of laughing despite bitter experiences because he would not have been idle in his own work. His humour may be taken as a sign of the joy he could feel in the midst of difficulties.

SELF-SUFFICIENCY IN CLOTH

In the very same letter, Shri Kishorelal writes as follows about other Santhals:¹

What has been made possible with these simple Santhals should be possible at any place if the effort is made. Despite this, self-sufficiency in cloth has made little progress in our society. It is the task of the khadi worker to find out its causes. How could self-sufficiency be attained in the above mentioned village? Was it there even before khadi activity started? Was it done through the inspiration of some workers? How much khadi do they use? What is the count of the khadi which they make? What is their speed in spinning and carding? What are their tools like and what other activities do they pursue? Answers to these and similar questions should be obtained with regard to this village. If we have this information we shall know why self-sufficiency has not been achieved elsewhere. Whatever the conditions in this village may be, it is my confirmed belief that we can certainly succeed in such work if we can produce experts in the science of khadi for there is no flaw to be seen in the idea of self-sufficiency. And it is a historical fact that at one time India was self-sufficient in cloth.

¹ The letter is not translated here. Mashruwala had stated that the Manjhi Santhals of Hazaribagh district were the only industrious people he found in Bihar. They were truly self-sufficient in the matter of clothing.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu, 21-2-1937_

456. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

_February 21, 1937_

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

Your letter.

Although I do not see any reason why honey or dates should cause boils you may consult the doctor. The reasons were the lack or insufficiency of milk and green vegetables, excess of wheat and, above all, your fiery temper.

Knowledge of English is not required of village workers though knowledge of any language is of course good; but I do not think this was the idea behind your question.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1896
457. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

SEGAON,

February 22, 1937

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

Another cow is certainly needed provided it is a good one. The doctor says that you should be cured soon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1897

458. LETTER TO D.B. KALELKAR

SEGAON,

February 23, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

I am sending a letter with this. Get in touch with the writer. He is so careless that he does not even give his address. But the man is good at his work and wholly engrossed in it. You can address your letter to him at Reverend Lodge, Nelson Square, Nagpur. If you can borrow from someone a small text-book of geography, one of history, a map, a text-book of geometry and one Sanskrit teacher either in Marathi or Hindi, please send them to me. I want them as help for teaching Kanu.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10897

459. LETTER TO TARABEHN N. MASHRUWALA

February 23, 1937

CHI. TARI,

I got your letter after many days. I was pleased. I am glad that you have gone to take a vaid’s treatment. I want your body to get strong somehow. I find it simply intolerable that you should be so unsteady in mind and practically useless for anything. I am hoping to take much work from you. Fulfil that hope of mine. I give rest to my right hand on days other than Mondays, and dictate most of the Gujarati Letters to Manu or Vijaya.

_Blessings from BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6700. Also C.W. 4345, Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala

460. LETTER TO BALWANTSINHA

February 23, 1937

CHI. BALWANTSINHA,

You must have got my letter of yesterday and your fever must have abated by now. No need to get panicicky. Patience will make everything come right. Yes, the _bhajan_ 1 is certainly worth pondering over. A mosquito-net should be used if the mosquitoes are proving bothersome.

_Blessings from BAPU_

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1898

461. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

February 24, 1937

MY DEAR ANAND,

The hardness of my heart is only apparent. I would not apply hair oil to a wound from which Kanu was suffering. He howled. I was unbending. I was cruel, the boy [had] enough! But in truth I was kind. What is the use of my calling you here without cause? Your agony is mental. Brothers and sisters often live apart and are happy. Husband and wife do likewise when a joint life becomes an impossibility. Even Vidya’s illness is no cause for grief. You must therefore learn to be brave and cheerful in the face of domestic or other affliction. I do hope Vidya will become well. A cooler climate after April will no doubt be necessary.

1 A Hindi _bhajan_ starting with “Whosoever is so fortunate as to meet Rama”
I hope this pencil hand will be readable.
Love to you both.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

462. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU

WARDHA,
February 24, 1937

DEAR PLAYMATE,

When are you going to be fit for play? It is a shame for you to be bedridden so often. Not enough for me that you can laugh at your illness. Love.

BAPU

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

463. LETTER TO VIDYA A. HINGORANI

SEGAON,
February 24, 1937

CHI. VIDYA,

Do not give way to despair because of your illness. Illness is sent only to test us. You have to be patient. God will help you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani
APPENDIX

TRAVANCORE TEMPLE-ENTRY RULES

The following rules and regulations on temple-entry have been issued over the sign manual of H.H. the Maharaja of Travancore:

Whereas we have by Proclamation issued under date November 12 declared, ordained and commanded that, subject to rules and conditions that we may impose, no restriction shall be placed on any Hindu entering and worshipping at temples controlled by us and our Government, we are hereby pleased to enact the following rules:

1. The expression ‘temple’ occurring in these rules shall include not only the temple and sub-shrines but also mandapams and other buildings as well as tanks or wells appurtenant to the temple.

2. The expression ‘Chief Officer of the Devaswom’ occurring in these rules shall mean the officer in charge of the Devaswom. It shall also include every officer superior to him and having jurisdiction when such superior officer exercises the powers of the Chief Officer of the Devaswom.

3. In order that the customs and usages obtaining in the several temples under the control of His Highness the Maharaja and the Government in regard to the Poojas (service), Nivedyams (offerings), Vazhivadus (gifts) the Nithy-anidhanam, Masavisesham, Attavisesham (special ceremonies), Utsavam (festival), and other ordinary and special ceremonies and rituals shall continue to be observed as heretofore, it shall be competent to the Chief Officer of the Devaswom to give, consistently with the objects of the Proclamation, such directions as may be necessary from time to time for regulating the time of entry and worship or limiting the number of those who may enter for worship at a time or maintaining such special customs and usages as are applicable to certain individuals and communities for specific purposes.

4. The permission to enter temples shall not be exercised so as to empower entrance into the Srikoil (sanctum sanctorum), Thidapally (kitchen), and other portions of the temple where specific restrictions even now exist in regard to all persons except those who are allowed to use those portions by custom.

5. All worshippers are bound to conform to the directions given by the Chief Officer of the Devaswom in regard to the carrying out of the objects of the Proclamation and these Rules and in regard to places which have to be reserved for the time being for the proper conduct of the rituals in the temple or observances such as the feeding of persons as heretofore conducted.

6. The classes of persons mentioned hereunder shall not enter within the compound walls of a temple, or its premises in case there is no compound wall:
(a) Persons who are not Hindus; (b) persons under pollution arising out of birth or death in their families; (c) women at such time during which they are not by custom and usage allowed to enter temples; (d) drunken or disorderly persons; (e) persons suffering from any loathsome or contagious disease; (f) persons of unsound mind except when taken for worship under proper control and with the sanction of the Chief Officer of the Devaswom concerned; and (g) professional beggars.

7. No person shall enter into any temple premises unless he wears clean clothes of such materials and in such manner as may be customary. The directions of the Chief Officer of the Devaswom concerned shall prevail until set aside by a higher authority. None shall be allowed to enter temple premises with any footwear, except those who are allowed to do so by custom and usage obtaining in the temple.

8. No person shall, within the temple and premises, spit, chew betel, tobacco or any similar article or smoke or carry with him any article for smoking, or take with him fish, eggs, meat, flesh, toddy, arrack or other intoxicants or any other article or animal inappropriate according to custom and usage to be introduced into the temple.

9. No person shall enter the Belikkalpura (the hall in which the main altar-stone is installed), Valiambalam, (central shrine), Nalambalam, (the halls on four sides) or the Elamathil which in some temples takes the place of a Nalambalam, with any coat, shirt, vest or such other garment, except women who may wear their usual dress. No head-dress shall be worn except by those who are allowed to do so by custom and usage obtaining in the temple. No one shall take therein any cloth, umbrella, kerosene-light or other article inappropriate to be introduced into such places by custom or usage. In temples where the above restrictions obtain even in regard to entering within the compound walls, the same shall be observed.

10. (1) No one shall enter the portions of a temple specified in the last preceding rule without having, in accordance with custom and usage, bathed, and without the customary caste-mark and without wearing clean clothes of such material and in such manner as may be customary in the temple concerned.

(2) No one except a Hindu shall enter a tank appurtenant to a temple, and every person permitted to enter a tank shall obey such directions as may be given by the Chief Officer of the Devaswom concerned. The direction of the Chief Officer of the Devaswom shall prevail until set aside by a higher authority.

(3) Tanks reserved for the exclusive use of particular functionaries of the temple shall continue to be so reserved.

11. Restrictions as to entry and worship, which according to usage and custom apply to all communities alike, shall continue to apply.

12. No one shall interrupt the worship in a temple by loud conversation or other demonstration which would derogate from the solemnity and the proper atmosphere of the temple.

13. It shall not be lawful to any person to use the temple buildings and premises for purposes not connected with or arising from worship, usages and observances of such temples.
14. No one shall do any act which would tend to derogate from the purity and cleanliness of the temple and its premises.

15. If any doubt arises in regard to the applicability of, or conformity to, any of these provisions, the decision of the Chief Officer of the Devaswom concerned shall prevail until set aside by a higher authority.

16. It shall be lawful for the Chief Officer of the Dewaswom concerned to direct that any person who contravenes or is suspected or believed by the Chief Officer of the Devaswom to have contravened any of the provisions of these rules, or disobeys any lawful direction given to him, shall remove himself from the temple and, in case such person does not so remove himself, to cause him to be removed from the temple. In case he resists such removal, or in case when asked to give his name and address he refuses to do so or gives information which is not believed to be true, he shall be liable to be arrested and removed by any Police Officer not below the rank of a Head Constable, and to be dealt with as if he had been arrested under Section 38 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

17. If any person contravenes any of the provisions of these rules, or disobeys any direction lawfully given in pursuance thereof, and thereby renders necessary any purificatory ceremonies, according to the customs and usages of the temple, such person shall be liable to pay the cost of the necessary purificatory ceremonies at the approved rates, and the same shall be recoverable from him as arrears of public or land revenue or otherwise. A person thus contravening or disobeying shall, besides being subject to any penalty to which he may be liable under any other law, be also punishable on conviction by a Magistrate with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months or with fine or with both.

18. No prosecution under these rules shall lie except on a complaint by a Gazetted Officer having jurisdiction in respect of the temple.

19. No action shall lie against any Devaswom Officer or other public servant who bona fide does any act in pursuance of these rules, and no action in a Criminal Court shall lie without sanction of Government.

20. In case of any doubt or dispute regarding the interpretation or the carrying out of any provisions of these rules, the decision of the Dewan thereon shall be final.

21. In cases of emergencies and unforeseen difficulties that may arise in carrying out the provisions and objects of the Proclamation or of these rules, the Dewan shall be competent to pass such orders as he may deem fit.

_Harijan_, 5-12-1936
1. INTERVIEW TO DR. CRANE

[February 25, 1937]

GANDHIJI: I shall certainly give you my reaction to Christianity. Even when I was 18 I came in touch with good Christians in London. Before that I had come in touch with what I used then to call ‘beef and beer-bottle Christianity’, for these were regarded as the indispensable criteria of a man becoming a Christian, with also a third thing, namely, adoption of a European style of dress. Those Christians were parodying St. Paul’s teaching—‘Call thou nothing unclean’. I went to London, therefore, with that prejudice against Christianity. I came across good Christians there who placed the Bible in my hands. Then I met numerous Christians in South Africa, and I have since grown to this belief that Christianity is as good and as true a religion as my own. For a time I struggled with the question, ‘which was the true religion out of those I know? But ultimately I came to the deliberate conviction that there was no such thing as only one true religion, every other being false. There is no religion that is absolutely perfect. All are equally imperfect or more or less perfect, hence the conclusion that Christianity is as good and true as my own religion. But so also about Islam or Zoroastrianism or Judaism.

I therefore do not take as literally true the text that Jesus is the only begotten Son of God. God cannot be the exclusive father and I cannot ascribe exclusive divinity to Jesus. He is as divine as Krishna or Rama or Mahomed or Zoroaster. Similarly I do not regard every word of the Bible as the inspired word of God even as I do not regard every word of the Vedas or the Koran as inspired. The sum total of each of these books is certainly inspired, but I miss that inspiration in many of the things taken individually. The Bible is as much a book of religion with me as the Gita and the Koran.

Therefore I am not interested in weaning you from Christianity and making you a Hindu, and I would not relish your designs upon 1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Dr. Crane was a clergyman from America, who had given up active service in the midst of World War I in disgust for its violence. He wanted to know Gandhiji’s attitude towards Christianity and also religion in general.

---

2 From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary

3 St. John, III 16
me, if you had any, to convert me to Christianity! I would also dispute your claim that Christianity is the only true religion. It is also a true religion, a noble religion, and along with other religions it has contributed to raise the moral height of mankind. But it has yet to make a greater contribution. After all what are 2,000 years in the life of a religion? Just now Christianity comes to yearning mankind in a tainted form. Fancy Bishops supporting slaughter in the name of Christianity.

DR. CRANE: But, when you say that all religions are true, what do you do when there are conflicting counsels?

G. I have no difficulty in hitting upon the truth, because I go by certain fundamental maxims. Truth is superior to everything and I reject what conflicts with it. Similarly that which is in conflict with non-violence should be rejected. And on matters which can be reasoned out, that which conflicts with Reason must also be rejected.

DR. C. In matters which can be reasoned out?

G. Yes, there are subjects where Reason cannot take us far and we have to accept things on faith. Faith then does not contradict Reason but transcends it. Faith is a kind of sixth sense which works in cases which are without the purview of Reason. Well then, given these three criteria, I can have no difficulty in examining all claims made on behalf of religion. Thus to believe that Jesus is the only begotten son of God is to me against Reason, for God can't marry and beget children. The word ‘son’ there can only be used in a figurative sense. In that sense everyone who stands in the position of Jesus is a begotten son of God. If a man is spiritually miles ahead of us we may say that he is in a special sense the son of God, though we are all children of God. We repudiate the relationship in our lives, whereas his life is a witness to that relationship.

DR. C. Then you will recognize degrees of divinity. Would you not say that Jesus was the most divine?

G. No, for the simple reason that we have no data. Historically we have more data about Mahomed than anyone else because he was more recent in time. For Jesus there are less data and still less for Buddha, Rama and Krishna; and when we know so little about them, is it not preposterous to say that one of them was more divine than another? In fact even if there were a great deal of data available, no judge should shoulder the burden of sifting all the evidence, if only for the reason that it requires a highly spiritual person to guage the degree of divinity, of the subjects he examines. To say that Jesus was 99 per cent divine, and Mahomed 50 per cent, and Krishna 10 per cent, is to arrogate to oneself a function which really does not belong to man.

DR. C. But, let us take a debatable point. Supposing I was debating between whether violence is justified or not. Mahomedanism would say one thing, Christianity another.

G. Then I must decide with the help of the tests I have suggested.

DR. C. But does not Mahomed prescribe the use of the sword in certain circumstances?

G. I suppose most Muslims will agree. But I read religion in a different way. Khan Saheb Abdul Ghaffar Khan derives his belief in non-violence from the Koran, and the Bishop of London derives his belief in violence from the Bible. I derive my belief in non-violence from the Gita. Whereas there are others who read violence in it. But if the worst came of the worst and if I came to the conclusion that the Koran teaches violence, I would still reject violence, but I would not therefore say that the Bible is superior to the Koran or that Mahomed is inferior to Jesus. It is not my function to judge Mahomed and Jesus. It is enough that my non-violence is independent of the sanction of scriptures. But the fact remains that religious books have a hold upon mankind which other books have not. They have made a greater impression on me than Mark Twain or, to take a more appropriate instance, Emerson. Emerson was a thinker. Jesus and Mahomed were through and through men of action in a sense Emerson would never be. Their power was derived from their faith in God.

DR. C. I will take a concrete instance now to show what I mean. I was terribly shocked on Monday. I counted 37 cows slain on the streets by Muslims in the name of religion, and in offence to the Hindu sentiment. I asked the Hindu friend who travelled with me why the Muslims did so. He said it was part of their religion. ‘Is it part of their spiritual growth?’ I asked him. He said it was. I met a Mussalman who said, ‘We both please God and ourselves’. Now here was a Mussalman revelling in a thing that outrages you and me too. Do you think all this is counter to the Koran?

G. I do indeed¹. Just as many Hindu practices, e.g., untouchability—are no part of Hindu religion, I say that cow-slaughter is no part of Islam. But I do not wrestle with the Muslims who believe that it is part of Islam.

¹ Here Gandhiji referred the interviewer to the article “Need for Tolerance”, 13-3-1937
DR. C. What do you say to the attempts to convert?

G. I strongly resent these overtures to utterly ignorant men. I can perhaps understand overtures made to me, as indeed they are being made. For they can reason with me and I can reason with them. But I certainly resent the overtures made to Harijans. When a Christian preacher goes and says to a Harijan that Jesus was the only begotten son of God, he will give him a blank stare. Then he holds out all kinds of inducements which debase Christianity.

DR. C. Would you say a Harijan is not capable of reason?

G. He is. For instance, if you try to take work out of him without payment, he will not give it. He also has a sense of ethical values. But when you ask him to understand theological beliefs and categories he will not understand anything. I could not do so even when I was 17 and had a fair share of education and training. The orthodox Hindus have so horribly neglected the Harijan that it is astonishing how he adheres to the Hindu faith. Now I say it is outrageous for others to shake his faith.

DR. C. What about a man who says he is commanded by God to do violence?

G. There you would not put another God before him. You need not disturb his religion, but you will disturb his reason.

DR. C. But take Hitler. He says he is carrying out God’s behest in persecuting the Jews and killing his opponents.

G. You will not pit one word of God against another word of God. But you will have to bear down his reason. For him you will have to produce a miracle which you will do when Christians will learn the art of dying without killing in defence of what they hold dearer then religion. But we can go on arguing like this endlessly. And then I may tell you that you are talking against time.

And with this Gandhiji looked at the watch.

DR. C. Just one question, then. Would you say then that your religion is a synthesis of all religions?

G. Yes, if you will. But I would call that synthesis Hinduism, and for you the synthesis will be Christianity. If I did not do so, you would always be patronizing me, as many Christians do now, saying, ‘How nice it would be if Gandhi accepted Christianity,’ and Muslims would be doing the same, saying, ‘How nice it would be if Gandhi accepted Islam!’ That immediately puts a barrier between you and me. Do you see that?
Dr. C. I do. Just one last question. In your Hinduism do you basically include the caste system?

G. I do not. Hinduism does not believe in caste. I would obliterate it at once. But I believe in varnadharma, which is the law of life. I believe that some people are born to teach and some to defend and some to engage in trade and agriculture and some to do manual labour, so much so that these occupations become hereditary. The law of varna is nothing but the law of conservation of energy. Why should my son not be a scavengar if I am one?

Dr. C. Indeed? Do you go so far?

G. I do, because I hold a scavenger’s profession in no way inferior to a clergymen’s.

Dr. C. I grant that, but should Lincoln have been a wood-chopper rather than President of the U.S.A.?

G. But why should not a wood-chopper be a President of the United States? Gladstone used to chop wood.

Dr. C. But he did not accept it as his calling.

G. He would not have been worse off if he had done so. What I mean is, one born a scavenger must earn his livelihood by being a scavenger, and then do whatever else he likes. For a scavenger is as worthy of his hire as a lawyer or your President. That, according to me, is Hinduism. There is no better communism on earth, and I have illustrated it with one verse from the Upanishads which means: God pervades all—animate and inanimate. Therefore renounce all and dedicate it to God and then live. The right of living is thus derived from renunciation. It does not say, ‘When all do their part of the work I too will do it’. It says, ‘Don’t bother about others, do your job first and leave the rest to Him’. Varnadharma acts even as the law of gravitation. I cannot cancel it or its working by trying to jump higher and higher day by day till gravitation ceases to work. That effort will be vain. So is the effort to jump over one another. The law of varna is the antithesis of competition which kills.

Harijan, 6-3-1937

2. LETTER TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

SEGAON,
February 26, 1937

CHI. KAMALNAYAN,

I got your letter. You are getting more and more involved and here everybody is talking of calling you back soon. Your father-in-law wants it to be early. So does Jankibehn. Father also is practically of the same view. I am neutral, though I don’t believe that you will bring home much from there. But I wouldn’t approve of calling you back so long as you are eager to continue there. If you wish to take up business, you should give up your desire for a degree. What will you do after becoming a barrister? Or a graduate? As I understand you, you wish to earn money. You do not wish to live on Father’s money or to become a sannyasi. If I am right, business is the proper field for you to undertake. If you agree with this, give up the desire to be a barrister or to get a degree. Your English must have improved sufficiently by now. If, however, you are keen on a degree and on going to Oxford or Cambridge, you may see Deenbandhu Andrews. Those whom I know at Oxford and Cambridge, I know through him. Please, therefore, see him. He will make the necessary arrangement for you. He lives at Cambridge. You know him, of course, but I am writing to him all the same. He will, therefore, remember when you write to him. His address is: Master’s Lodge, Pembroke College, Cambridge. Do whatever you do after full deliberation. Keep writing to me. You do seem to be a little lazy about writing.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3055

3. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

_February 26, 1937_

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

Your letter. What I meant was that if nothing is settled about you till then, you should do in July whatever you want to do. I shall also help you to the best of my ability. I hardly know anything about Ramana Maharshi. Whatever I know is only at second hand.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4281. Also S.G. 57

4. OUR CATTLE WEALTH

This is being written on Bakr-Id day—a day of rejoicing for Mussalmans and grief for Hindus. It is day of grief for Hindus because their Mussalman brethren slaughter cows for sacrifice though they know that the cow is an object of worship and veneration for Hindus. Though I hold the cow as much in veneration as any Hindu and am responsible for bringing into being the— in my opinion— only scientific society for effectively protecting the cow, I have never sympathized with the Hindu grief and the implied anger against Mussalmans on Bakr-Id. The latter are undoubtedly foolish and obstinate in that they slaughter the cow and needlessly wound Hindu susceptibility. For there is no religious obligation on the part of Mussalmans to kill the cow on Bakr-Id or any other day. I have heard some Mussalmans arguing that Hindus by their worship of the cow make it obligatory on them to kill the cow. This borders on compulsion. But if the Mussalman is foolish and obstinate, the Hindu is criminally ignorant and indirectly becomes party to the slaughter of the cow by the Mussalman. For cows are sold by Hindus as a rule. Hindu grief and anger are uncalled for. Hindu ignorance is responsible for many more deaths of cows than the deaths caused by the Mussalmans’ slaughter of the cow for one day in the year. Be it noted that Hindus are apparently quite reconciled to cow-slaughter on days other than Bakr-Id.

I have in my possession startling authentic figures showing the annual slaughter of cattle and deaths from natural causes. According to the livestock census of 1935 about 80 per cent die naturally and 20 per cent are slaughtered. The percentage of natural death, however, varies according to locality. Where grazing conditions are good and cultivation careful, natural deaths fall as low as 7 per cent, and in famine zones they rise to 30 per cent. In the Bombay Presidency (British) it is estimated that there were, in 1935, 74.5 lakhs of cattle. Of these 9 lakhs died naturally against 2 lakhs by slaughter, i.e., 12 per cent against 3 per cent. In 1935 in British India, including Bengal and Bihar and Orissa, there were over eight crores of cows against just under three crores of buffaloes. Comparison between the census of 1935 and 1930 shows that buffalo wealth is on the increase three times that of the cow.

Now it is common knowledge that the cow is generally owned by Hindus. If they removed their unpardonable ignorance, they could easily prevent many deaths from natural causes. I reproduce immediately below this note two extracts¹ showing why so many cattle die annually and what can and should be done to prevent this tremendous waste of wealth. Time was when the number of cows was the measure of man’s wealth. Today the cows are a drag on a man’s possessions. It is almost like depreciation of currency. The only difference is that prevention of depreciation of cattle or rather cow currency is possible by internal effort. The effort is threefold:

¹ These are not reproduced here.

1. No waste of energy over persuading Mussalmans to give up cow-slaughter, whether for sacrifice or food. They must be put on their own honour.

2. Exclusive concentration on improvement of the cow and therefore giving up of buffalo milk and ghee.

3. Exclusive use of dead cattle hide and free use other than for food of all the parts of carcasses, and improvement in tanning.

The material for improvement is ready at hand in the numerous pinjarapoles and goshalas covering the whole land. The only thing needful is to remove certain prejudices and to conduct these institutions on sound scientific lines.

_Harijan_, 27-2-1937

5. VISIBLE AND INVISIBLE VICES

A khadi-worker writes:

It is good question. There should be no comparison of vices. As for me, I look upon untruth as the root cause of all sins. No institution which tolerates untruth can serve the community or survive for long. But when a man resorts to untruthfulness, it assumes various forms. It is a kind of immorality. Untruth rarely parades itself in naked form. An immoral person commits three sins. He is guilty of untruthfulness because he hides his misbehaviour. The misbehaviour itself is a sin. And thirdly, it demoralizes the other person with whom he misbehaves.

All other vices which the correspondent has mentioned are abstract. We can neither see them nor catch them. They can be discussed only when they become manifest in action. Then only is it possible to think of remedies for them. Suppose a man hates another. As long as that hatred does not lead to some action, the hatred cannot be criticized nor can the jealous person be improved. But when that 1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had asked whether vices like untruth, jealousy and hatred were not more harmful than sexual lapses.

---

hatred causes any harm to another, then it can be condemned and the person deserves punishment. The fact is, sexual immorality is given a long rope in the social as well as the legal code, although it causes great harm to society. The thief gets stringent punishment and the poor fellow is almost ostracized by society. But the fashionable debauchee moves freely and goes scot-free. The law turns a blind eye to him. I am convinced that an institution pledged to the service of millions should have no room for debauchees, just as it has no place for thives and rowdies.

[From Hindi]

_Harijan Sevak, 27-2-1937_

6. WHY SHOULD THREE ANNAS BE PAID?

I am discussing here a difficulty which I am faced with in Segaon in trying to put into practice to some extent the ideas which I had expressed regarding the rate of wages earned by women spinners for yarn spun by them. I engage in, or permit, as little discussion as possible on the experiments which I am carrying on in Segaon and the hopes which I am entertaining because my experiments are still at a preliminary stage. I neither show definite results nor see any myself. I regard myself as an extremely cautious worker. I work out each task in a scientific spirit. A devotee of truth cannot function in any other way. While working in that manner, I feel it would be thought improper for me to write anything at this stage about my experiments in Segaon. But there can be nothing improper in saying what I have been unable to accomplish to this day.

Now, in my opinion, anyone who puts in one hour of diligent work should get one anna. So that a woman who spins skilfully for an hour should also be paid one anna. I have been unable to make any experienced person put this into effect; and that is as it should be. If crores of Indians start earning an anna an hour, India would become an economically prosperous country. Today, the average annual income of an Indian is fifty to sixty rupees; this is not the minimum income. If instead, the minimum income becomes one hundred and eighty rupees no one would starve.

However, in Segaon, to this day, I have not been able to pay three annas for eight hours’ work to any unemployed person. In Segaon the rate for a man is three annas and for a woman five to six pice. Children of fifteen or sixteen earn something in between. If I could have my way, I would see to it that women are paid the same wages as men. But I have been unable to do even this little bit. And I have been unable to pay, or make others pay, the same rate to the unemployed as is paid to labourers in Segaon. This is because the rate I have mentioned applies to those who do not ordinarily remain unemployed. What I desire is the capacity to pay three annas for eight hours’ labour to whosoever comes in search of work. I have not been able to achieve that or make much progress. I cannot accept that I alone am to blame for this. Partly no doubt my own failing is responsible. But it is for this reason that I have proved for myself and others like me the necessity for living in village. It is not true that a few months’ stay in the villages enables one to solve all its problems. I have never imagined it can. One can have a grasp of rural problems and find solutions for them only when one stays in a village like a true villager from three to five years. Here I have merely noted the difficulties experienced in paying even the unemployed the wage of three annas. At the root of this difficulty I see our inveterate idleness.

The unemployed are so indifferent that if entrusted with some work of which they have no experience, they are not even prepared to consider it. They have formed the habit of agreeing to everything, so they will nod their heads in assent to any suggestion but will do nothing beyond that. However, by mentioning these difficulties I have by no means expressed my despondency. I have expressed my sympathy towards other colleagues who experience similar difficulty. Idleness which has persisted for years cannot be got rid of all at once. Patience is what is required. We do not wish to give three annas or even more for eight hours’ work by way of a gift, but we wish to create conditions where people can earn this amount. In trying to achieve this lies the education and the test of social workers as well as villagers.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu, 28-2-1937_

7. DEFINITION OF POVERTY

While discussing the question of providing work to the poor living in villages, a gentleman writes to say:

You had once said that those who engaged labourers to plough their fields could not be called poor. But that is not enough. Can it be said that those who do not suffer from want of food and clothing and do not have to incur debts are not poor?
This question may be answered in the affirmative as well as in the negative. If we consider the matter from the standpoint of health, few persons in the Indian climate suffer from want of clothes. This is because innumerable persons can do with loincloths, and it may be said that it does not harm the health. But even persons said to belong to the middle class do not get a proper diet from the nutritional standpoint. Except for a few wealthy people, all others are unable to get sufficient milk, ghee, vegetables and fruit. They may well afford a drop of dirty milk adulterated with water, and a small quantity of vegetables, but they never get fruit. And because of the want of these three things, crores of people in India, including those of the middle class, can never maintain good health. Hence, if we examine the matter from the standpoint of health, the number of poor people increases greatly. This however is not the standpoint of the correspondent. For him the question of poverty has arisen in the context of the problem of a minimum wage.

My definition of poverty, if considered from that standpoint would run as follows: Those who, despite working the whole day, cannot earn even three annas are all poor, because the correspondent has before him only the problem of providing work to the unemployed in the villages. Although this is an imperfect definition, it is of importance to workers. The reason being that if poverty is considered from the standpoint of health, etc., all villagers and many city-dwellers also would be regarded as poor—and actually, they are so. But such a definition confuses the workers.

This does not mean that such persons should not be served. The village-worker is constantly faced with problems of sanitation, health and economic betterment. He is constantly faced with problems of how people should get pure milk and butter-milk in their own villages, how they can obtain vegetables and fruit, how those who do not get sufficient coverings for the winter can do so. And his skill lies in solving these. But no one can solve all problems at once. It is for this very reason that I have given a working definition of poverty so that everyone can realize that it is their dharma to serve the maximum number of poor people and make a beginning in that direction.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 28-2-1937
8. LETTER TO MOOLSHANKAR NAUTAMLAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
February 28, 1937

Bhai Moolshankar,

You did very well indeed in writing to me.

I see no necessity for you to do anything which would hurt your parents’ feelings. It is only when parents push the children into an obviously immoral course of action that the latter are entitled to disregard them. There is nothing of the sort in your case. In many matters your parents are ready to go along with you. You can do a lot of service even while doing business. The ability to earn an honest cowrie is not easy to acquire. Even doing that is a form of service and also tests one’s intelligence. For the present, therefore, continue patiently to do what you are doing.

Continue to write to me whenever necessary. If you feel you must come and see me, you may do so.

Blessings from

Mohandas

9. LETTER TO SAMPURNANAND

[February, 1937]¹

How is it that the majority of you Socialists keep such bad health?² Narendra Dev is a chronic sufferer from asthma, Meherally³ is down with heart trouble, Jayaprakash is ill and now you, who seemed to be the healthiest of the lot, are also confined to bed. Evidently none of you can look after himself. Come to Wardha for some time and stay with me. I promise to send you back fully cured.

Memories and Reflections, p. 97

¹ This was written after the results of the first election under the Act of 1935 were out in February 1937.
² The addressee had been suffering from jaundice.
³ Yusuf Meherally
10. MESSAGE TO INTERNATIONAL PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS

[Before March 1, 1937]

WISH PARLIAMENT SUCCESS. WISH IT COULD DO SOME CONSTRUCTIVE WORK.

_The Religions of the World_, p 80

11. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

SEGAON, March 1, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM,

I have your letter. What is this—first you are lazy about writing to me and then you apologize. We should apologize only if in spite of our best efforts we fail to do anything. Yes, it is a different thing if you were not able to write because of measles. Hope Mother is well now. I do intend to come to Madras for the conference. We shall meet then. Kanu tries to play on the vina occasionally.

_Blessings from_ BAPU

From the Hindi original. Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

12. LETTER TO RABINDRANATH TAGORE

SEGAON, WARDHA, March 2, 1937

DEAR GURUDEV,

Your letter\(^1\) has caused me much distress. That a letter\(^3\) which was written out of love and reverence should have been so misunderstood is a revelation. There was no question of suspicion and, therefore, no question of misjudging you. I simply put before you my meaning of trusteeship. I have been trustee before now of several institutions and I have worn myself out to see that they were properly financed. Acceptance of the burden by me of Visvabharati could \(^{1}\) This met for 8 days at Calcutta from March 1, 1937, as part of Sri Ramakrishna Paramhansa’s first birth-centenary celebrations.

\(^{2}\) This is not traceable.

\(^{3}\) Vide “Letter to Rabindranath Tagore”, 19-2-1937 mean nothing to me unless it at least meant that I would be able to discharge the financial burden. As to the breach of promise, I thought myself to be so near you that I could dare playfully to accuse you of a contemplated breach of promise. My motive was absolutely plain. I wanted, somehow or other, to wean you from any further beggingexpedition—a phrase which you and I used often enough in Delhi. Of course I know your religion and all India is proud of it. Let us have as much of it as you can give but never with the burden hanging over your head of collecting money for Visvabharati against the expression of yourself before the public.

I hope this letter will undo the grief that has been caused to you by my previous letter.

With love and reverence,

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 8749.

13. LETTER TO KRAUSE

SEGAON, WARDHA, C.P.,
March 2, 1937

MY DEAR KRAUSE,

You are kind—giving me so many letters. I shall never forgive myself for my letter to you in Bombay not being in time. I see that you cannot come to Wardha. I shall await your fuller letter giving me your impressions. I will not discuss the preliminary opinion that you have given about the situation here. I hope you will have a pleasant voyage.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: C.W.10859

14. LETTER TO NAVINCHANDRA N. DESAI

March 2, 1937

CHI. NAVIN.

I got your letter. You seem to be doing good work. May you succeed in your effort. The boys and girls always have my blessings.
Guard their character. May they ever grow in body, mind and sprit.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2171
15. LETTER TO TARABEHN N. MASHRUWALA

SEGAON,
March 2, 1937

CHI. TARI,

You never adhere to your dates. Nine times you yourself fail to stick to them and the tenth time Providence prevents you. Thinking that you must certainly have left for Ahmednagar, I wrote to you there. Perhaps the letter will reach you after wandering from place to place, for now your going to Ammednagar is uncertain and even after going there who knows for how many days you will stay there. Bachu must have recovered.

Blessings from

BAPU

Form a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6701. Also C.W. 4346. Courtesy: Kanubhai N. Mashruwala

16. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA

March 2, 1937

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I got your letter. You should do whatever little service comes naturally to you and be satisfied. Let [the mind] wander if it will. If you do not worry unduly, in course of time it will calm down or the body will fall. About the body, whether one’s own or another’s, beyond a limit one should not worry.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gjarati: C.W. 393. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

17. LETTER TO SHARDABEHN C. SHAH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
March 2, 1937

CHI. SHARDA,

Received your letter.

There is no reason at all to be scared of hip-baths. The secret is that you should not feel cold while sitting in the tub and the body should be sufficiently warm after coming out of the tub. For this, you should bring warmth to the body either by walking or by covering yourself up in bed or by pouring over yourself a few mugs of hot water after the hip-bath.
Friction-bath can be taken. The bather should perch on a stool, with the private parts kept away from the edge of the stool. They should then be rubbed with a piece of cloth repeatedly soaked in the tub-water. This is what is called friction-bath. The idea behind it is as follows: there is a complex of nerves at the opening of the organ. The effect on them spreads throughout the body with lightning speed. This effect is quite the opposite of that produced by masturbation and other bad habits. And this checks many diseases and cures many others.

Garlic should not be chewed. It should be ground and mixed with vegetables like a sauce. Some people take it with curds. If you can get fresh garlic it is better than dry garlic. If sweet limes and oranges are available no other fruits are required. If you can get good palm gur, you can carry on well with it. You must get good milk. A person like you cannot stay where good milk is not available. Garlic never gives a cold, rather it cures a cold.

I can say without hesitation that the increase in Chimanlal’s weight is due to his taking earth treatment.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9972. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

18. LETTER TO D.B. KALELkar

[Before March 3, 1937]

You are going to the Dharma sabha—the Parliament of Religions. It is associated with the holy name of Shri Ramakrishna. I do hope that the Sabha will do something that will give a lead and will guide the followers of all faiths. What will the Parliament say in respect of all the religions? Are all the religions equal as we hold or is there any one particular religion which is in the sole possession of truth, the rest being either untrue or a mixture of truth and error as

---

1 The original is not clear here.
2 The original, which was in Hindi, is not traceable.
3 This was quoted by the addressee in his presidential speech delivered on 3-3-1937 at the Fourth Session of the International Parliament of Religions held at Calcutta.
4 Vide footnote 4, “Message to International Parliament of Religions”, 1-3-1937 many believe? The opinion of the Parliament in such matters must prove helpful guidance for us.

_The Religions of the World_, p. 123

19. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
March 3, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. I also read your statement. As is your wont, you have made it brief and simple. No sentence in it could be omitted.

If Chi. Kamu asks you for money, give it to her. I will of course write to her.

Chi. Radha barely writes to me once in a year. I don’t know anything regarding her scholarship. For the present go on sending her what you have been doing. If I feel the urge, I will write to her some time.

I don’t know anything regarding Keshu’s betrothal. Do you want me to keep that in mind, or do you want to know whether I am aware that you know about it?

Chi. Mira is living with me in Segaon. She teaches spinning and carding to five or six children in the village. She will most probably write to you today.

Chi. Balkoba’s health is, one may say, fairly good. I meet him every day.

I don’t like it at all that Chi. Purushottam keeps bad health. He must make a determined effort to improve it, within the limits voluntarily accepted by him. In the matter of improving one’s health, lethargy is a sin. The human body is both a _Kurukshetra_ and a _dharmakshetra_. In so far as it is a _dharmakshetra_, it is one’s duty to keep it in good shape.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

20. INTERVIEW TO AN EGYPTIAN DEPUTATION

March 3, 1937

“It was impossible to come to India and go away without seeing you”, they said to Gandhiji, to which Gandhiji jokingly said:

And yet you come here at the fag end of your visit.

With Gandhiji the only topic they discussed was that of cementing the relation between India and Egypt.

GANDHIJI: I should heartily welcome the co-operation.

SHEIKH IBRAHIM EL GIBALI: We hope the day will not be far off when India regains her past glory and revives her ancient civilization. We have many things in common, climate, colour, food, and we are orientals. The time has come for us to come closer together.

PROF. HABIB AHMED: We have discovered it is not good for both the countries to rely on their older generations. They should rely more on the younger generations. Our youths should go to India and yours should come to Egypt as sportmen.

G: Not only may we have an exchange and a mixing together in the field of sport but we should have it in the field of education. We should invite professors from Egypt and you should invite those from India, so that we may develop cultural contacts.

SHEIKH IBRAHIM EL GIBALI: This end can be attained if there is an intellectual fusion of blood between both countries.

G: That is true, and to reach some kind of solution I would suggest your making a public declaration of this kind. I make an offer. If you kindly send an Egyptian lad of intelligence and resourcefulness, we will welcome him and adopt him here. You will see the maker of this place, Jamnalal Bajaj. There is not a public institution here which does not owe its existence to him. He has had no college education, but he has a heart of gold and he has lavishly given of his gold for the welfare of the country. He has a school here where he has Hindu and Mussalman boys. There is provision there for Urdu teaching for Mussalman boys. He has secured a Principal who is an ideal teacher. So if you will send a promising lad, we will adopt him here and he will be like a seed which will grow into a mighty tree. Then there is the Jamia Millia in Delhi where there are fine men like Dr. Zakir Husain, Prof. Mujeeb; and you can exchange boys and professors with the Jamia. Make our boys Egyptian and we will make 1 Extracted from Mahadev Dasai’s “Weekly Letter”. The deputation was from Al Azaar University and included among others Sheikh Ibrahim El Gibali as its leader and Prof. Habib Ahmed and Prof. Salah Eldin.

---

yours Indian. Our different religions should not matter. If you will respect our religion and we respect yours, there should be no bar to a healthy development of these relations. Identity of hearts is what is wanted, and if that is there everything will follow.

_Harijan_, 13-3-1937

21. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

_March 4, 1937_

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I hope you had a comfortable journey and reached there safely. Throw off all burden from your mind and get better quickly. I will not let anybody do any washing in your tub. At present it is kept in my room and I have reserved it for my use. If, therefore, I don’t need the bigger one, it will remain in my room. There was a letter from Saraswati addressed to you. It is enclosed.

_Blessings from_¹

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 374

22. LETTER TO SURENDRÁ B. MASHRUWALA

SEGÁON, WARDHA

_March 4, 1937_

CHI. SURENDRÁ,

I am having consultations about the date of your marriage. I gather that you desire the marriage to take place in proper style. You are even thinking of a gathering of friends. If that is so, please let me know your reason. One reason I have understood. You feel that all of us elders have enjoyed celebrations of marriages in our time and now we are out to stop persons like you from doing that, and you ask why. This is a pure misconception. If, according to our custom, we regard marriage as a festive occasion, a person can enjoy the celebration only once. Now as regards myself, I may tell you that whatever happened when I was only twelve years of age. My parents did not ask for my consent in regard to anything. If anybody had enjoyed the celebrations, it was they and the other relatives. I am not aware of having enjoyed the occasion. Whatever fun I may have had at that time was much in the same way as children enjoy play. I had no sense at all of the responsibility of the occasion. This is how I enjoyed the celebration. I do not know anything of Kishorelal. You need not, therefore, envy my enjoyment. What I wish is that on the day fixed you should come alone. I will get all the religious ceremonies performed and, after they are over, you may take away Manu on the very same day. If you want to have a gathering of friends, you may have one at Akola or Bombay. I have no zest at all for such things. I am not talking about renunciation but only about common duty. Nowadays some thinkers have elevated sensual enjoyment to the position of a dharma. I have not been able to accept this view. In my opinion marriage is a means of observing self-control. It is desirable that men and women should have only one connection and not many. This is their duty. Marriage should be for service, not for self-indulgence. The relationship of man and woman is only for progeny and should have no other purpose. This is the ideal. Certainly one cannot say that this ideal is wrong simply because it cannot be attained. But if it is right, it is one’s duty to follow it in practice to the best of one’s ability. And if such is indeed one’s duty, then the marriage ceremony should be made as religious, quiet and austere as possible. If you understand this, then you and Manu should look upon marriage as a new birth and should enter it with a sense of duty. Do not regard marriage as a festive occasion but enter the householder’s estate with the blessings of elders and with full understanding of the meaning of marriage.

¹ The subscription is in Urdu.

If you have understood this, you will give up insisting on inviting anybody. If I can I will stop even Nanabhai, Neelkanth and others from coming and wasting money on travelling. Notwithstanding these views of mine, however, I do not wish to hurt you. You may, therefore, unhesitatingly let me know whatever you desire.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

Manu has read this letter and agrees with me.

From Gujarati: C.W. 1564. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

23. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

_March 4, 1937_

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

You must have reached there safely. I do feel a little worried about your health. If you carry out my suggestions, the fits of giddiness will certainly disappear. Do put mud-packs on the stomach and the head. They are bound to benefit you. Don’t feel the slightest hesitation or shame about eating onions and garlic. There is a letter from Saraswati addressed to you which I am sending with this.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3488

24. LETTER TO SARASWATI

March 4, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

I had your letter after a long interval. What subjects are you studying? I want all the details, such as how far you have progressed in mathematics. By now that subject, too, you must be finding interesting.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6155. Also C.W. 3424. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

25. LETTER TO RAJARAM R. BHOLE

SEGAON, WARDHA,
March 5, 1937

DEAR RAJARAM,

I was glad to have your letter and to notice that you stood the strain of the election campaign without any physical ill effect. I hope that you will make the wisest use of the position you have obtained.

Yours sincerely,

SHRI RAJARAM BHOLE
MINERVA THEATRE
POONA

From the original: R. R. Bhole Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
26. LETTER TO VITHAL L. PHADKE

SEGHAON, WARDHA,
March 5, 1937

CHI. MAMA,

I got your letter. I have studied the plan. I once again remembered the original ashram at Godhra. After spending Rs. 3,000, how many untouchables will you have uplifted? I cannot understand your scheme. I was under the impression that you would spend at the most Rs. 1,000. Your plan is suitable not for a temple but for a prince’s court or palace. But what can I say when a donor like Sardar is ready to satisfy you? But if I got Rs. 3,000, I would spend out of it not more than Rs. 1,000 on a hut for myself, fencing and the temple, and spend the rest in the service of the Harijans in other ways. Kaka has gone to Calcutta. I am sending your plan first to Vinoba and then to Kishorelal. At the earliest I could have replied yesterday, but that could not be done.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3838

27. DISCUSSION WITH R. R. KEITHAHN

[March 5, 1937]

Mr. Keithahn... was not quite sure what was at the back of Gandhiji’s mind when he said that all religions were not only true but equal. Scientifically, he felt, it was hardly correct to say that all religions are equal. People would make comparisons between animists and theists. “I would say,” said Mr. Keithahn, “it is no use comparing religions. They are different ways. Do you think we can explain the thing in different terms?

GANDHIJI: You are right when you say that it is impossible to compare them. But the deduction from it is that they are equal. All men are born free and equal, but one is much stronger or weaker than another physically and mentally. Therefore superficially there is no equality between the two. But there is an essential equality: in our nakedness. God is not going to think of me as Gandhi and you as Keithahn. And what are we in this mighty universe? We are less than atoms, and as between atoms there is no use asking which is smaller and which is bigger. Inherently we are equal. The differences of race and skin and of mind and body and of climate and nation are transitory. In the same way essentially all religions are equal. If you read the Koran, you must read it with the eye of the Muslim; if you read the Bible, you must read it with the eye of the Christian; if you read the Gita, you must read it with the eye of a Hindu. Where is the use of scanning details and then holding up a religion to ridicule? Take the very first chapter of Genesis or of Matthew. We read a long pedigree and then at the end we are told that Jesus was born of a virgin. You come up against a blind wall. But I must read it all with the eye of a Christian.

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. R.R. Keithahn was an American missionary.
2 From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary

K. Then even in our Bible, there is the question of Moses and Jesus. We must hold them to be equal.

G. Yes. All prophets are equal. It is a horizontal plane.

K. If we think in terms of Einstein’s relativity all are equal. But I cannot happily express that equality.

G. This is why I say they are equally true and equally imperfect. The finer the line you draw, the nearer it approaches Euclid’s true straight line, but it never is true straight line. The tree of religion is the same, there is not that physical equality between the branches. They are all growing, and the person who belongs to the growing branch must not gloat over it and say, ‘Mine is the superior one’. None is superior, none is inferior, to the other.

Harijan, 13-3-1937

28. DISCUSSION WITH A ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIEST

[March 5, 1937]

A Roman Catholic Father who saw Gandhiji the other day asked how Gandhiji proposed to break the caste.

Gandhiji: It is already breaking. All it requires is education, and under the education that is being imparted for some time it is breaking. But by education I do not mean literary education but

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”
2 From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary
thespread of true knowledge. Caste has no religious basis, but it is certainly regarded as bound up with religion, though it is not derived from the scriptures. Untouchability is the last word on caste, and as soon as untouchability goes, caste goes. The outcaste has been all over the world. In Europe the Jews were outcastes and confined to the ghettos where life was much worse than in the untouchables’ quarters. The degradation to which the outcastes in India are reduced is bad enough, but what one knew of ghettos from Israel Zangwill’s works, which years ago I read at the instance of a friend, was something blood-curdling. Such a thing cannot happen in India, because of the non-violence of a sort that we are practising. However, though we have no ghettos, there is nothing to choose between them and untouchability. Take untouchability out and the fabric of caste is destroyed.

And here Gandhiji explained the distinction between caste and varna, which was not only a law for the Hindus but a universal law, to which we confirm, with or without knowledge, and if we do not, we do so at our peril. Caste had been the best target for missionaries to assail Hinduism with, and rightly, but caste in the sense of varna and trade guilds, as Sir W. W. Hunter described it, will live forever.

CATHOLIC FATHER: If Hinduism became monotheistic, Christianity and Hinduism can serve India in co-operation.

G. I would love to see the co-operation happen, but it cannot if the present-day Christian mission persist in holding up Hinduism to ridicule and saying that no one can go to Heaven unless he renounces and denounces Hinduism. But I can conceive a good Christian, silently working away, and shedding the sweet aroma of his life on Hindu communities, like the rose which does not need any speech to spread its fragrance but spreads it because it must. Even so a truly spiritual life. Then surely there would be peace on earth and goodwill among men. But not so long as there is militant or ‘muscular’ Christianity. This is not to be found in the Bible, but you find it in Germany and other countries.

R.C.F. But if Indians begin to believe in one God and give up idolatry, don’t you think the whole difficulty will be solved?

G. Will the Christians be satisfied with it? Are they all united?

r. c .f. Of course all the Christian sects are not united.

1 A member of the Viceroy’s Council, he directed the statistical survey of Indian Empire (1869-81), whose reports were later condensed in The Imperial Gazetteer of India.
G. Then you are asking only a theoretical question. And may I ask you, is there any amalgamation between Islam and Christianity, though both are said to believe in one God? If these two have not amalgamated, there is less hope of amalgamation of Christians and Hindus along the lines you suggest. I have my own solution, but the first instance I dispute the description that Hindus believe in many gods and are idolators. They do say there are many gods, but they also declare unmistakably that there is One God, God of gods. It is therefore not proper to suggest that Hindus believe in many gods. They certainly believe in many worlds. Just as there is a world inhabited by men and another by beasts, so also is there one inhabited by superior beings called gods, whom we do not see but who nevertheless exist. The whole mischief is created by the English rendering of the words _deva_ or _devta_ for which you have not found a better term than ‘god’. But _god_ is _Ishwara_, _Devadhideva_, God of gods. So you see it is the word ‘god’, used to describe different divine beings, that has given rise to such confusion. I believe that I am a thorough Hindu but I never believe in many gods. Never even in my childhood did I hold that belief, and no one ever taught me to do so.

As for idol-worship, you cannot do without it in some form or other. Why does a Mussalman give his life for defending a mosque which he calls a house of God? And why does a Christian go to a church and when he is required to take an oath swear by the Bible? Not that I see any objection to it. And what is it if not idolatry to give untold riches for building mosques and tombs? And what do the Roman Catholics do when they kneel before Virgin Mary and before saints—quite imaginary figures in stone or painted on canvas or glass?

R. C. F. But I keep my mother’s photo and kiss it in veneration of her. But I do not worship it, nor do I worship saints. When I worship God, I acknowledge Him as Creator and greater than any human being.

G. Even so, it is not the stone we worship but it is God we worship in images of stone or metal however crude they may be.

R. C. F. But villagers worship stones as God.

G. No, I tell you they do not worship anything that is less than God. When you kneel before Virgin Mary and ask for her intercession, what do you do? You ask to establish contact with God through her. Even so a Hindu seeks to establish contact with God through a stone image. I can understand your asking for the Virgin’s intercession. Why are Mussalmans filled with awe and exultation when they enter a mosque? Why, is not the whole universe a mosque? And what about the magnificent canopy of heaven that spreads over you? Is it any less than a mosque? But I understand and sympathize with the Muslims. It is their way of approach to God. The Hindus have their own way of approach to the same Eternal Being.
Our media of approach are different, but that does not make Him different.

R. C. F. But the Catholics believe that God revealed to them the true way.

G. But why do you say that the will of God is expressed only in one book called the Bible and not in others? Why do you circumscribe the power of God?

R. C. F. But Jesus proved that he had received the word of God through miracles.

G. But that is Mahomed’s claim too. If you accept Christian testimony you must accept Muslim testimony and Hindu testimony too.

R. C. F. But Mahomed said he could not do miracles.

G. No. He did not want to prove the existence of God by miracles. But he claimed to receive messages from God.

R. C. F. We are glad the Congress has had a great success. But what about its veering round to communism?

G. Has it? I do not see it. But if it does, and if it is not the Russian model, I do not mind it. For what does communism mean in the last analysis? It means a classless society—an ideal that is worth striving for. Only I part company with it when force is called to aid for achieving it. We are all born equal, but we have all these centuries resisted the will of God. The idea of inequality, of ‘high and low’ is an evil, but I do not believe in eradicating evil from the human breast at the point of the bayonet. The human breast does not lend itself to that means.

R. C. F. When Hinduism comes to power, will it not make a united front against Christianity? There are all the signs of Hinduism coming to power. And if it happens here, as it is happening in Spain, Indian Christians will be despised and persecuted and swept off.

G. It is an impossible picture. There is no such thing as Hindu rule, there will be no such thing. How can anyone eradicate a population of seven million Christians? And that presupposes the destruction of Mussalmans too! Let me tell you that no Hindu in his wildest imagination ever thought of this. Will the world tolerate any such thing? If Hinduism ever sought to do it, it would be committing suicide. But I tell you that has never been the desire of the Hindus. Hinduism was well able to destroy the first Christians that came. Why did it not do anything of the kind? Travancore is a brilliant example of toleration. I was asked while I was there to see the most ancient church where St. Thomas is said to have planted the first Cross. Why should he have been allowed to plant it?

R. C. F. But in St. Francis Xavier's time there came a time when Christians were persecuted. But I do not know history and my information may be incorrect. But what makes me afraid is what I actually saw and heard in Japan. There I heard in a public speech a responsible man saying, 'Buddhism is the religion of Japan, we must consolidate it, all other religions should be destroyed.

G. Well, well, no Hindu dreams of such a thing. Even if he dreamt it, it would be impossible.

But now the Father revealed his bugbear—Arya Samaj!

G. I agree that the Arya Samaj represents a type of militant Hinduism, but they never believed in the cult of the sword. The worst thing they are capable of is to ask you to become a Hindu if you went and spoke on their platform!

R. C. F. But I have heard Arya Samajists say that Christianity is a Western religion, and as everything that comes from the West is to be discarded, Christianity must also be discarded.

G. I have never heard of the talk of Christianity being blotted out of India. The Arya Samaj is a community that asks its followers to go to the ends of the earth to preach Arya Dharma, but they have not yet done so. It has a firm foothold in the Punjab. Arya supremacy in the sense you dread is an inconceivable thing. The Hindus are really not the major community if you put the rest together. But why should I prolong the discussion? It is not a practical proposition at all.

_Harijan_, 13-3-1937

---

1 St. Francis Xavier was in India during 1541-45.
29. AS OTHER SEE US

Here is a letter¹ which has been lying on my file for some time:

Your attitude towards religious conversion and particularly the hope you entertain for the Depressed Classes within the fold of Hinduism, overlooks the prevalent practices of Hinduism as it exists in India today...

Any religion is judged by its fruits. Here is a contrast. Take the case of the Christian religion, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant. The funds that are collected from the rich and poor are carefully accounted for and repaid in the form of medical and educational service. Religious worship is open to all alike. The number of schools, colleges, dispensaries, hospitals and orphanges admirably served by their religious institution bear eloquent testimony to the quality of faith that is in them. It is not a theology and philosophy which they possess but the self-sacrificing service which they render in abundant measure towards all that is a contrast to the service rendered by the temples and mutts. What are the uses of the wealth of temples and mutts? Are not these weapons of superstition and oppression? The heads of these mutts live princely lives with vast endowments, . . . I am informed that there are regular lawyers to collect dues and serve the interests of these religious heads, swamis and gurus. This state of affairs is an oppression worse than popery in its worst days. Not merely the accumulated wealth and the annual collections, which in all these mutts must amount to several crores, are never properly accounted for, but this gigantic system of ghastly exploitation continues to be supported by the most intellectual leaders of the people as if Hindu society will break up by questioning it. This is practical Hinduism. Why should there be any surprise that the Depressed Classes alone should revolt against a system which denies them equal rights to worship the Deity but keeps them also in perpetual social excommunication? Why is it that no one ventures to question the priestly oppression, this draining away annually the wealth of the people without any service whatever? . . .

. . . It is exploitation by religious heads that has crushed the people, and the money-lender and the State combined have finished the process. It is not more work and harder work, and the variety of cottage industries that these half-dead half-living masses require, but more vocational schools and dispensaries, maternity and child welfare centres and better food. . . . If the State is not moved very easily by your Herculean endeavours, Hinduism requires a far more drastic purge as it has been established some thousands of years longer than this alien Government. . . .

¹ Only extracts are reproduced here.

Bishops and priests of the Christian religion, in spite of the fierce criticism levelled against them in this land and every other country, render humanitarian service unequalled by any other class of human beings who follow any other faith or no faith, and are approachable to all people. . .

It is good to see ourselves as others see us. Try as we may, we are never able to know ourselves fully as we are, especially the evil side of us. This we can do only if we are not angry with our critics but will take in good part whatever they might have to say. Anyway, I propose to examine the foregoing criticism as dispassionately as I can. The grave limitations of Hinduism as it is seen today in practice must be admitted. Many mutts and their administration are undoubtedly a disgrace to Hinduism. The money that is poured into some of them does not return to the worshippers in the form of service. This state of things must be ended or mended.

Humanitarian work done by Christian missions must also be admitted.

But these admissions of mine must not be interpreted to mean endorsement of the deductions of the writer. Economic and educational relief is required by most poor Indians in common with Harijans. But the latter suffer from special disabilities. It is not a question of what disabilities they resent. It is the duty of the so-called superior Hindus to break the chains that bind the Harijans even though they may hug them. The admission by the writer of the sublimity of Hinduism as expounded by Vivekanand and Radhakrishanan should have led to his discovery of its percolation down to the masses. I make bold to say that in spite of the crudeness which one sees among the villagers, class considered, in all that is good in human nature they compare favourably with any villagers in the world. This testimony is borne out by the majority of travellers who from the times of Huen Tsang down to the present times have recorded their impressions. The innate culture that the villagers of India show, the art which one sees in the homes of the poor, the restraint with which the villagers conduct themselves, are surely due to the religion that has bound them together from time immemorial.

In his zeal to belittle Hinduism, the writer ignores the broad fact that Hinduism has produced a race of reformers who have successfully combated prejudices, superstitions and abuses. Without any drum-beating Hinduism has devised a system of relief of the poor which has been the envy of many foreign admirers. I myself feel that it leaves much to be desired. It has its evil side. But from the philanthropic standpoint it has wholly justified itself. It is not the Indian habit to advertise charities through printed reports and the like. But he who runs may see the free kitchens and free medical relief given along indigenous lines.

The writer belittles village work. It betrays gross ignorance. If the mutts and the revenue offices were extinguished and free schools were opened, the people would not be cured of their inertia. Mutts must be reformed, the revenue system must be overhauled, free primary schools must be established in every village. But starvation will not disappear because people pay no revenue and mutts are destroyed and schools spring up in every village. The greatest education in the villages consists in the villagers being taught or induced to work methodically and profitably all the year round whether it be on the land or at industries connected with the villages.

Lastly, my correspondent seems to resent acceptance by us of humanitarian services by missionaries. Will he have an agitation led against these missionary institutions? Why should they have non-Christian aid? They are established with the view of weaning Indians from their ancestral faith even as expounded by Vivekanand and Radhakrishnan. Let them isolate the institutions from the double purpose. It will be time enough then to expect non-Christian aid. The critic must be aware of the fact that even as it is some of these institutions do get non-Christian aid. My point is that there should be no complaint if they do not receive such aid so long as they have an aim which is repugnant to the non-Christian sentiment.

_Harijan_, 6-3-1937

30. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,

March 6, 1937

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your letter today, Saturday. You seem to have reached there quite in time. Amtul’s wife was saved miraculously... You have asked me to suggest a name for the girl. But what do I know about that. I can only think of “Amina” or “Fatima”. It is the aunt’s

---

1 Wife of addressee’s brother, Wahid Khan
2 Omission as in the source prerogative to name a baby and you are the aunt. It is for you, therefore, to choose the name. You have suggested that I should write to Amtul, but you have not given me even her full name. Please, therefore, show the following to her.

“I congratulate you on both you and your daughter having been saved by God. But Amtul Salaam tells me that you had wanted a boy. I know that many women have such a wish. But it is not a proper wish. Why should we give so much importance to whether it is a boy or a girl? We should be happy with whatever God sends us. May God give you both a long life”.

You may certainly write to Maulana Saheb whatever you wish and obtain any fatwa that you like. I only wish to see you at peace with yourself anyhow.

I have had a talk with Kanu. He says that he had no wish whatever to give up his present work. If he had not been engrossed in the Ramayana work, he would have liked to do khadi work with you. But he feels that he would be violating his pledge if he gave up the work to which he has dedicated himself. If, therefore, you want Kanu’s help in khadi work, you can have it only in Wardha.

Now that you have got work of your liking there, your health must improve. But you are bound to continue to be ill so long as your mind is not at peace.

Blessings to Rashid and your sister-in-law.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 375

31. LETTER TO SHARDABEHN C. SHAH

SEGAON,
March 6, 1937

CHI. SHARDA.

You had completely forgotten me. But it is nice to receive your letter even after so many months. I believe that I will be able to render you considerable help in improving your health if you keep on writing to me.

¹ Abul Kalam Azad
² Addressee’s brother
³ Hosa Rashid, Rashid’s wife
Read carefully the letter I have written to Chimanlal1. If you follow those instructions I have absolutely no doubt that your body will become like copper. Have you heard the saying that the first happiness is good health?

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9973. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

32. HOW TO BEGIN

My invitation in these columns some time back to such khadi workers as may be anxious to become adepts in the various processes relating to the production of Khadi,1 has evoked a wide response and I have already received several communications on the subject. The object of the following remarks is to set forth a few practical hints for the guidance of these friends.

The first essential condition for anyone who wants to become master of any subject is to have a living faith in it. He must next have the eagerness to learn and readiness to make the necessary sacrifice for its sake. Books, teachers and other accessories of education are of course necessary in a more or less degree, but passion for knowledge and eagerness to learn are the most essential of all. Given these, the other things will follow of themselves. I would therefore suggest to these intending students of the khadi science that they can at once make a beginning by finding out what processes relative to khadi production are being carried out in their immediate neighbourhood and picking up all the useful information with regard to them available there. The main task that faces a student of the khadi science today is collation and co-ordination of personal experience. A number of different processes relating to the production of khadi are today in vogue in different parts of the country. But there is no single person today who fully knows all of them. And yet complete, detailed knowledge of all these different processes is necessary before the science of khadi can be developed. The task is obviously beyond the compass of a single individual. But if there are a number of persons

---

1 Vide “Letter to Chimanlal N. Shah”, 6-2-1937
2 The Gujarati original of this was published in the _Harijanbandhu_, 7-3-1937. The translation is by Pyarelal.
3 Vide “What Khadi Workers Should Know”, 13-2-1937 who are truly fired by a scientific spirit of research and they apply themselves to the task in a systematic manner, they will, by pooling their talents and experience, be able to evolve a living, growing science of khadi in a short time. But before they can do that, they will need to have themselves collectively mastered all the processes of khadi production that are in vogue in the country today.

To take a concrete instance, several varieties of khadi are produced in different parts of Andhra today, employing different methods of carding. Now any khadi worker in Andhra who is anxious to acquire the science of khadi can begin by mastering all these various methods. For this he need not quit his province. Let him by way of a start pick up the process which is current in his immediate neighbourhood. A scientific study of carding would, of course, include a knowledge of the construction of the carding-bow on the part of the student. He would further need to know the materials from which the gut string and other component parts of a carding-bow are made and how; what exactly the length of a carding-bow should be in order to yield the best results, and the effects of departure from the standard length; where precisely the stroke on the bow-string should be delivered and the reason why, and so on in respect of a host of other questions about which even the best of our professional carders today know little and care even less. Similarly, with regard to cotton a worker who takes up a study of carding as a science would need to know all about the different varieties of cotton; the length, strength and fineness of their respective fibres, the various processes through which it has to pass before it reaches his hands; where it is grown; what is the yield per acre and the total money value of the crop; what is the extent of the area under cotton; what was the crop grown there previously which has been displaced, or was the area under question lying fallow before; what difference it would make to the cultivator if another crop were substituted in place of cotton; etc. Thus his practical experience will be illumined by scientific knowledge and give him such a firm grip of his subject and an insight into its intricacies that to master the other processes of carding prevailing in different parts of Andhra will become comparatively an easy thing for him and take but little time. If, further, he keeps regular notes of his experiments and experiences, they will in time take the place of an authoritative treatise on the science of carding.

It will be thus seen that no khadi worker need leave his field of work in order to learn the science of khadi. If he is fired by the spirit of inquiry and has patience and capacity for concentrated application in a sufficient measure, he will, by applying himself to an intensive study of the processes for which his neighbourhood offers special facilities, not only become a specialist in those particular processes but also gradually widen the scope of his knowledge so as to deserve the name science.

Harijan, 10-4-1937

33. LETTER TO K.M. MUNSHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

March 7, 1937

BHAI MUNISHI,

I got your letter. Please do stay with me in Delhi.

I have understood your view. These ministries have made our task difficult everywhere. Our ability, spirit of self-sacrifice and selflessness are going to be put to a severe test. Let us see what happens. We shall discuss the problem in Delhi. I shall reach there on the 15th morning.

I hope both of you are well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7612. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

34. LETTER TO VIDYA A. HINGORANI

March 7, 1937

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. Only a few days ago I had written a long letter to Anand. Whatever the circumstances we should live peacefully.

Tell Mahadev he is talking of binding me, but when he comes here will he allow himself to be bound?

What treatment are you undergoing nowadays? Is it giving you any relief or not? Write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi: Coutesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani
35. LETTER TO RANI VIDYAVATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
March 7, 1937

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. Since Dr. Roy knows you now, why do you need a letter from me at all? Write to him introducing yourself and go when he is agreeable. Write to me if there is no reply from Dr. Roy. I am confident that he will answer your letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

36. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

Unrevised

SEGAON, WARDHA,
March 8, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I have an excuse for writing to you. You have left a small blue bottle. It contains a white powder resembling epsom salt. What is it? I do hope you had no trouble in the train. The moral is no onion, no sweet potatoes, a fair quanity of garlic. Bowels ought no to be loose. Hip and friction sitz baths and garlic ought to set the bowels right and eradicate eczema. You must take at least 3 lb. of milk per day. Try unboiled fresh milk twice a day. It must be taken whilst it is yet warm from the udder.

Your place is vacant and looks dismal. Fancy doing without one’s Secretary ever at your side! But such is life, everything fleeting, only God is, nothing else is.

ईशाबािपम् इलिम् सेवम् यत् कितन जलवायम् जात।
तेन यथाच्छेद भुज्जीया भा गृहः कस्यश्रिबत् भनम् ॥

I have written it breaking up the sandhi.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Forgot to give you Hindi Anasaktiyoga. I am writing to Delhi.¹

From the original: C.W. 3764. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6920

¹ Vide “Letter to Viyogi Hari”, infra.
37. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

March 8, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I duly received your letter yesterday. Why have you given no description of the journey? If you don’t worry, your health is bound to remain good. Take hip-baths. Eat garlic. Procure fresh milk. Take ghee and butter in sufficient quantity. And eat whatever fruit you can get. Rajkumari left this morning. She was reluctant to go. She will stay for four days in Delhi. Amul Salaam has gone to Indore. She left on Tuesday. The house has becomes empty now. Khan Saheb also is not here. And there is plenty of milk. Everybody is fine. Bhansali is still in hospital. He is better now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3492

38. LETTER TO VIYOGI HARI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

March 8, 1937

BHAII VIYOGI HARI,

Anasaktiyoga in Hindi should be available at the Sasta Sahitya Mandal. If it is available there or anywhere else, do arrange to send a copy of it to Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, care of Mr. Fielden, 4, Bhagwandas Road, New Delhi. We reach Delhi on Monday.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1096

39. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

March 9, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I got your letter. It would be best to write immediately about things I ought to know. I will leave here for Delhi on Sunday. I don’t think I shall have much time to talk with Devdas. The whole day I shall be busy meeting people. You can certainly study in Mysore also. The climate is undoubtedly good and Mysore has a university of its own.
I understand about the railway. Amtul Salaam has gone to Indore.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7317. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

40. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
March 10, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

Herewith Bishop Moore’s\textsuperscript{1} letter and copy of my reply\textsuperscript{2}. Please return after perusal. If you have read the appeal\textsuperscript{3} and you do not agree with the Bishop’s reading, you should pass on to him your own interpretation.

Your wire gave me great joy.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3765. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6921

41. LETTER TO TILAKAM

March 10, 1937

MY DEAR TILAKAM,

I was glad to hear from you at last. Whatever others do or do not do, we do believe in ahimsa and have to persevere in the sure hope that it will triumph in the end. Mathuradas Trikumji will certainly see you and properly guide you also. You do not need any other introduction to him beyond this letter. You can tell him that you were with me at Kingsley Hall in London, that you were in the Sabarmati for some time and that you are still in touch with me.

\textsuperscript{1} Of Travancore
\textsuperscript{2} This is not traceable.
\textsuperscript{3} Of the Church Missionary Society; vide “Interview to Bishop Moore, Bishop Abraham and Others”, 19-1-1937
Mirabehn is living with me in Segaon and so is Pyarelal. Devdas is in Delhi.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. TILAKAM
THE BOMBAY INDUSTRIAL CO-OP. BANK LTD.
188 MASJID BUNDER ROAD
BOMBAY

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

42. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

March 10, 1937

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your letter. I am replying to it as soon as I got it. I will reach Delhi on the 15th and will have to stay there, it seems, up to the 18th. Perhaps it may be a day longer. Yes, you are right in believing that you need not go to Rajkot now.

Pilani is far away from Delhi and is not on the way to Delhi either. But you can certainly go there whenever you wish to.

You yourself had written to me saying that you wished to ask for a fatwa from Maulana Saheb. I was very glad to learn that Amtul keeps good health. The stiches also must have been removed now, and the baby must be fine, too.

Rajkumari also has left, and so we are very few here now. Harjivan also left today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 376

43. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Unrevised

SEGGAON,

March 11, 1937

CHI. NARANADAS,

You of course read what I have been writing about khadi these days. And you have also read Maganlal’s book\(^1\). Will you, taking that book as your guide or according to any other plan you like, write something on the science of khadi? For a historical account, you will need literature on the subject. If you don’t have it or have no time to read it, please see if you can write a book giving an account of the work being done now and giving information about all the processes from cotton onwards.

\(^1\) Vanat Shastra, Part I

You must have read my questionnaire and Lakshmidas’s article. We must have a book giving all that information.

Kamu writes that she has now started going to school.

I read your printed programme. I didn’t like it as well as I did your statement. The portion in dialogue form is certainly excellent, but it can’t be said to have been artistically interwoven with the rest. That, however, is a minor defect. I notice spelling mistakes too. The Vidyapith dictionary is an authority for us. I don’t know if it contains the words peen, reeban, chipia, etc. If it, you should look them up. Now the dictionary does not at all give the word pin. In English the vowel is short and we should spell the word accordingly. I went through the rules about spelling and there also it is stated that words borrowed from foreign languages should be spelt in conformity with their spellings in those languages. Moreover, the word peen has a definite meaning in Gujarati. The dictionary explains it as “thick”, “wellfed”, “rounded”. At first sight I didn’t get the meaning of peen, but I made it out as I proceeded further. In the dialogue you have spelt the word as cheepeeo. It should be cheepio. It is followed in the same sentence by reeban'. In English the word is pronounced as “riban” and that is how it should be spelt according to the rule given in the dictionary. The word is not given in the dictionary, though there is no harm in using it all the same. You will find many more of similar other spelling mistakes.

I see no poetry in the bhajan or song “He is the witless man”. The language jars on the ear and the thought also is none too pleasant. The very first syllable augurs ill. There is no such word as murakh. The word is moorakh. The thought in the line “feeds the foreigner lovingly” is indicative of ill will. It does not befit a follower of non-violence. And if a foreigner is hungry, why should not one feed him lovingly? Of course the meaning in the author’s mind is different, but the reader is not concerned with the meaning in an author’s mind if it is not expressed in his language. In the phrase, deshana dukkhne tane, the syllable “na”, should be nasalized. The expression “to serve the stones of unemployment” lacks moderation. The metaphor also is not happy. The thought in “The fine noose of the craze for fancifulness” is touched with bitterness. A noose cannot be described as “fine”, nor can it be said that the word “fine” has been used ironically. The word greeva is not in keeping with the author’s attempt to use rustic language. The spelling januni is incorrect. The word is janani. But I will not go on with this criticism. Go through the second part from this point of view. I felt the whole poem crabbed and unpleasant. The other song also didn’t interest me. I have not read it carefully, though. But Vidhatara did catch my eye. Nanavati suggests that it must have been a misprint. The author must have written Vidhatra. If that is correct, please note that the dictionary gives no word like Vidhatra. It gives Vidhata and Vidhatri. A poet has no right to alter spellings of words without sufficient reason.

---

1 Ribbon

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8516. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

44. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

March 11, 1937

CHI. JETHALAL,

You were writing something on khadi. What happened to that? How is your work going on? What is the situation about leather?

A gentleman by name Keshavlal who lives in Bombay writes, “Jethalal’s daughter Indu died after an illness of twenty-two days”. He has not given any address. Can you throw some light on this?

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9860. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat

45. LETTER TO VITHAL L. PHADKE

SEGAON,
March 12, 1937

CHI. MAMA,

It is very strange that you saw anger in my letter¹. Maybe mere admonition is considered anger, but if no admonition is given there is also the fear that a person may not wake up. There is certainly an art

¹ Vide “Letter to Vithal L. Phadke”, 5-3-1937 of merely expressing one’s opinion in pleasing language without admonition, but I have not been able to acquire that art. I know this also, that it is an aspect of ahimsa. If I saw the letter written to you I would certainly be able to know whether there was ahimsa or only himsa in it. I do not know Vinoba’s and Kishorelal’s views. I have certainly not met them. I do not remember to have sent a copy of my letter to them. Be that as it may, even after reading Raiji’s letter, I stick to my views. I believe that one should not yield to the temptation of solving a problem. Such external standards as cannot be followed by many had better be abandoned. The letter to Raiji is enclosed.¹

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3839

46. LETTER TO RAIJI

_March 12, 1937_

BHAI RAIJI,

I got your letter. It was good that you wrote. I could not agree with your argument. The idea of serving many aims in planning the construction of temples does not appeal to me. In my opinion, good lies in implementing all these ideas gradually. How can a person whom we would not like to keep in our house be permitted to stay in a temple? A temple should never be allowed to be a shelter for vagabonds. Only holy men are a worthy sight in a temple compound. If you brothers cherish the idea of making the temple God’s abode, then it is desirable that you do not transform it into a place of self-seeking. If your ideas are carried out, God will suffocate in that place although it may be called a temple. I would personally wish that you should never copy the failings of the Hindus who consider themselves as belonging to the upper castes. I may remind you that Bhangi friends twice took an oath before me that they would give up drinking and twice broke it. But I too am made of ordinary clay as you are. So we need not put a high value on the knowledge that you may be able to gain from me, but, if you desire to make the temple a true abode of God, then do not make it a shelter for persons of doubtful worth and a place for storing utensils of use to the community. Instead, the moment the temple is opened you should take before the deity installed inside a pledge to abjure drink, and cling to it; then although the temple may have taken only Rs. 5 to build instead of Rs. 5,000, it will still become a shrine of pilgrimage. I should like the place where Mama stays to be such a holy place, and a temple like that cannot be built by spending money. Now do what you and Mamasahub think proper.

¹ Vide the following item.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3840

47. THE COW

The cow is an object of worship and veneration to millions in India. I count myself among them. The cow-shed in Segaon is in front of me. I cannot escape its inmates even if I would. And when I was arguing the question of the masses of Harijans with Christian friends, I said, ‘The majority of Harijans can no more understand the presentation of Christianity than my cows.’ This comparision shocked my friends so much that the shock has travelled to America and I have begun to receive letters from America telling me how my comparision is being used to discredit me and my claim to serve Harijans. The critics seem to say, ‘You can have little regard for Harijans if you compare them to the cow.’

Nevertheless I am unrepentant. My American credit will be little worth if it can be demolished on the very first shock however trivial it might be. But I hold that my comparison was as innocuous as it was appropriate. It was innocuous because of the unique place the cow occupies in India. It was appropriate because in the matter of understanding the presentation of Christianity the ordinary Harijan can no more take it in than the cow. That the dullest Harijan can be trained to understand it in course of time, whereas the cow never can, is irrelevant for the simple reason that the discussion related to the present condition, not to future possibility. My point would be better understood if I extend the comparision and say that my five-year old grandson or my sixty-eight-year old wife can no more understand the presentation than my cow, though both my wife and my grandson are objects of tender care and attention. I could say of myself that I can no more read the Chinese alphabet today than my worshipful cow.
The truth of this last statement is not in any way altered by the fact that if someone began to teach my cow and me the difficult alphabet, I should beat the cow hollow, if the poor venerable mother ever consented to enter the competition. Let my critics and credulous friends understand that apart from the comparison, I stand on unassailable ground when I assert that it is a travesty of religion to seek to uproot from the Harijans’ simple minds such faith as they have in their ancestral religion and to transfer their allegiance to another, even though that other may be as good as and equal to the original in quality. Though all soils have the same predominant characteristics, we know that the same seeds do not fare equally well in all soils. I have some excellent tree cotton seeds which thrive excellently in certain parts of Bengal. But Mirabehn has not succeeded as yet in getting the same result from the same seeds in the Varoda soil. But I should be unable to subscribe to the formula, if the attempt was made to advance it, that the Varoda soil is inferior to the Bengal soil. But my fear is that though Christian friends nowadays do not say or admit that Hindu religion is untrue, they must harbour in their breasts the belief that Hinduism is an error and that Christianity as they believe it is the only true religion. Without some such thing it is not possible to understand, much less to appreciate, the C.M.S. appeal from which I reproduced in these columns some revealing extracts the other day.\(^1\) One could understand the attack on untouchability and many other errors that have crept into Hindu life. And if they would help us to get rid of the admitted abuses and purify our religion, they would do helpful constructive work which would be gratefully accepted. But so far as one can understand the present effort, it is to uproot Hinduism from the very foundation and replace it by another faith. It is like an attempt to destroy a house which though badly in want of repair appears to the dweller quite decent and habitable. No wonder he welcomes those who show him how to repair it and even offer to do so themselves. But he would most decidedly resist those who sought to destroy the house that had served well him and his ancestors for ages, unless he, the dweller, was convinced that the house was beyond repair and unfit for human habitation. If the Christian world entertains that opinion about the Hindu house, ‘Parliament of Religions’ and ‘International Fellowship’ are empty phrases. For both the terms presuppose

\(^1\) Vide “A Christian Letter”, 30-1-1937
equality of status, a common platform. There cannot be a common platform as between inferiors and superiors, or the enlightened and the unenlightened, the regenerate and the unregenerate, the high-born and the low-born, the caste man and the outcaste. My comparison may be defective, may even sound offensive. My reasoning may be unsound. But my proposition stands.

_Harijan_, 13-3-1937

48. ANDREWS ON TRAVANCORE

Deenbandhu Andrews writes:

The arrival of each new number of _Harijan_ is one of the exciting events of the week in my old college rooms at Cambridge, where I have been busy lecturing this term: but this morning the paper exceeded my highest expectation. For it told me of the wonderful visit to Travancore, and the joy of the Harijans as they entered the temples freely to meet you and take part in the prayers which you conducted within the temple walls. Many years ago, I had gone down into Travancore at your request—both to Vaikom, where I witnessed the great Satyagraha struggle, and also to Kottayam. Outside Kottayam, in the country district, multitudes of the _avarnas_ had come to meet me and to receive your message. At one place, nearly two thousand had collected. Their misery and suffering haunted me afterwards and I could not think of anything else. Again, at Vaikom where I stayed with the Satyagrahis, I saw once more the misery and suffering of those who were prevented from going on the road outside the temple. On that occasion, I went and pleaded with the Nambudiri Brahmins, but in vain. Now it was wonderful beyond measure to read how that old Satyagraha struggle, with all its bravery and endurance, had at last found its completion! For not merely the roads but the temple itself had been entered by the _svarnas_ and _avarnas_ together! What I now long to hear is this, that some at least of Nambudiri Brahmins, who have so truly sought to undo the harm done in the past, may also be led to offer to these Harijans, whom they have thus welcomed as brothers, a brotherly wage for the full work which they perform. Only in that brotherly way can the victory become complete.

From all I hear, the Proclamation is being worked so effectively that the economic salvation which Deenbandhu wants to hear of is bound to come and that sooner than one may expect. For, addressing a meeting of Pulayas, Pariahs and others on the 1st instant at Trivandrum, the Dewan Sir C.P. Ramaswami Aiyar is reported to have said:

The Maharaja regarded the Temple-entry Proclamation not as an end in itself, but as the first step in the rehabilitation of the State. What was needed was educational upliftment, economic upliftment and social integration. For this, the co-operation of the Ruler and the people was necessary. Out of consideration for the class of people who were being lifted up, it had been decided to omit the word ‘depressed’ from Government documents and publications. He ventured to say the time would come when the Depressed Classes would forget that name.

_Harijan, 13-3-1937_

49. MARRIED BRAHMACHARYA

A friend writes:

I have long since held with you that self-control is the only sovereign method for attaining birth-control. That the sexual act is meant for procreation only, and apart from it, in any shape or form, would amount to unnatural gratification of lust, needs no proof. But sometimes this brings one up against a grave dilemma. Supposing that the sexual act, once or twice, fails to lead to conception, what is one to do then? Where is one to draw the limit? It is hard finally to give up all hope of begetting offspring. On the other hand, unlimited indulgence in the sexual act must result in the man being drained of all vitality. Again, should such a person be told to regard his failure to beget progeny on the first or the second chance, as a mark of adverse fate and on that score to abstain from having any further intercourse thereafter? But that would require an exceptional degree of self-possession and spiritual strength on the part of the person concerned. Instances of people begetting progeny in their declining years after repeated failure during the years of manhood and youth are by no means either unknown or rare. That makes the observance of complete abstinence still more difficult, and the position becomes further complicated when the parties happen to be otherwise healthy and free from any physical defect.

I admit the difficulty, but the difficulty is inherent in the problem itself. The road to any progress is strewn with such difficulties and the story of man’s ascent in the scale of evolution is co-extensive with the history of the successful overcoming of these difficulties. Take the story of the attempts to conquer the Himalayas. The higher you go the steeper becomes the climb, the more difficult the ascent, so much so that its highest peak still remains unvanquished. The enterprise has already exacted a heavy toll of sacrifice. Yet every year sees fresh attempts made only to end in failure like their predecessors. All that has, however, failed to damp the spirit of the explorers. If that is the case with the conquest of the Himalayas, what about the conquest of self, which is a harder job by far, even as the reward is richer? The scaling of the Himalayas can, at best, give a temporary feeling of elation and triumph. But the reward of the conquest of self is a spiritual bliss that knows no waning and grows ever more and more. It is a well-known maxim of the science of brahmacharya that insemination in the case of a man who has properly kept the rules of brahmacharya cannot, ought not to, fail to lead to conception. And this is just as it should be. When a man has completely conquered his animality, involuntary incontinence becomes impossible, and the desire for sexual gratification for its own sake ceases altogether. Sexual union then takes place only when there is a desire for offspring. This is the meaning of what has been described as ‘married brahmacharya’. In other words, a person who obeys this rule, though leading a married life, attains the same state as, and is equal in merit to, one who completely abstains from the sexual act, which is only a means for procreation, never for self-indulgence. In practice, it is true, this ideal is seen to be rarely realized in its completeness. But in shaping our ideals we cannot think in terms of our weaknesses or the possible lapses. The present tendency, however, is to take a complete swing round, and the protagonists of contraceptives have almost set up self-indulgence as their ideal. Self-indulgence obviously can never be an ideal. There can be no limit to the practice of an ideal. But unlimited self-indulgence, as everybody would admit, can only result in certain destruction of the individual or the race concerned. Hence self-control alone can be our ideal, and it has been so regarded from the earliest times. Therefore we have to explore the means of its attainment, not to circumvent it.

1 The Hindi original of this was published in _Harijan Sevak_, 13-3-1937. The translation is by Pyarelal.

It has become my settled conviction that most of the difficulties that are experienced in connection with the practice of brahmacharya are due to our ignorance about its laws and would of themselves disappear if we discovered them. Let us, for instance, examine the poser propounded by our correspondent in the ideal light. In the ideal state, in the first place, such a contingency will never arise, because in a normally healthy couple, who have from their childhood upward observed the rules of brahmacharya, sexual union can never prove infertile. In practice, however, anomalies do arise. The only rule that can be laid down in such instances is that coitus may be permitted once at the end of the monthly period till conception is established. If its object is achieved it must be adjured forthwith, for mere sensual gratification should never be its object. It is my faith based on my experience that bodily and mental health increases in the same ratio as bodily and mental chastity. Nor is it to be wondered at. A substance that is capable of producing such a wondrous being as man, cannot but be transmuted into matchless energy and strength. Anyone can test for himself the truth of this observation of the Shastras for himself by personal experience. And the rule holds good in respect of woman no less than man. The real difficulty, however, is that we vainly expect to be free from outward manifestations of lust, while harbouring it in our minds, with the result that physically and mentally we become utter wrecks, and our lives, in the words of the Gita become a living lie or hypocrisy personified.

_Harijan_, 20-3-1937

50. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,

_March 13, 1937_

REBEL DEAR,

Your two letters were destroyed as soon as I finished reading them. I am glad you have kept well. If you have that tape measure by any chance, you will send it to Delhi.

You will tell me all about Shummy after you reach Jullundur. Of course I shall see Fielden. R. is with me.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3766. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6922.

---

1 Ramachandran; _vide_ “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 8-1-1937
51. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

March 13, 1937

DEAR KU,

Here are two letters from Dr. G¹. There is no provision for leave for such purposes as he mentions. We should accept the resignation. I hope to drop in for a moment in Maganwadi.

Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10113

52. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJUMDAR

SEGAON,

March 13, 1937

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

I got your letter. The description of the Harijan school at Edarpura appears to be good but I refrain from publishing it. There have been instances in the past when, after a favourable description about a school or an institution was received and published, our subsequent experience of it was bitter. Either we do not have the courage to publish such experience or it seems improper to do so. If, however, one occasionally comes across a description like the one you have given, one may derive what joy one can from it and then forget about it. One would then be saved from the kind of embarrassing situation mentioned above. If it is a really good school, it will surely go on progressing. Such a school cares for no praise. I have not seen many reasons to hope that because of our description of a school others will immediately copy its example. However, I have not made it a rule in my mind that such descriptions should never be published. Whenever, therefore, you feel it very necessary to publish a particular description, please write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3956

¹ Dr. Gopichand Bhargava
53. THE PROBLEM OF THE HANDLOOM

The following figures represent the aggregate out-turn of handlooms using both indigenous and foreign mill yarn up to 1934:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>YEAR</th>
<th>AVERAGE OUT-TURN OF CLOTH IN HUNDRED THOUSAND YARDS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1911-14</td>
<td>.. 101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921-24</td>
<td>.. 117</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925-28</td>
<td>.. 124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>.. 134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>.. 134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>.. 140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>.. 172</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>.. 170</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

It is difficult to say how far these figures are reliable. But I think it may safely be assumed that if they err at all it is on the side of understatement. The actual production of the handlooms is probably higher. We ought to be able to convert all these handlooms to the use of hand-spun yarn, but we are powerless to do that today. Our charkha yarn today is neither of sufficient strength nor is it produced in sufficient quantity. So long as we cannot produce hand-spun yarn that will stand comparison with the mill yarn in strength and uniformity, the handloom weaver will refuse to handle it and for very good reason too. In the first place, the employment of weak and uneven yarn reduces the quantity of cloth that he can turn out in a given time and thus affects his earning capacity. Secondly, the handloom weaver today has specialized more or less in higher lines of production while our output of hand-spun yarn of fine count is extremely meagre and that too is confined mostly to Andhra. The solution of the difficulty involves a complete mastery of the khadi science. But I am not asking anybody to tackle this problem today. It can for the present wait. There are a number of other problems which will have to be successfully tackled before we can cope with the question of the handloom. Only let it be borne in mind that this problem will have to be successfully tackled before the dream of universalizing khadi is realized.

---

The original Gujarati was published in Harijanbandhu, 14-3-1937. The translation is by Pyarelal.

_Harijan_, 17-4-1937

54. NOTES

[On or after _March 14, 1937_]

Review of the activities in the non-Hindi speaking provinces over the past few years.

The importance of this work for the Sammelan.

Special features of the Hindi _prachar_ work in the south and how it differs from similar work in the other non-Hindi provinces.

Oneness of Hindi and Urdu. Appeal to the scholars on both sides not to widen the differences between the two.

Admitting the scientific quality of the Devnagari script, an appeal to Hindu scholars to study the Persian script and to Muslim scholars to study Devnagari as a duty.

A review of the work being done in Wardha.

Keeping in view that work, an outline of the coming years’ programme and the budget for it.

The outline incorporates the suggestions made by Rajaji and others.

I have only enumerated the topics. They can be discussed further.

[From Hindi]

_Panchaven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad_, p. 380

---

1 Gandhiji had prepared these notes for the presidential speech to be delivered by Jamnalal Bajaj at the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan to be held at Madras.

2 Jamnalal Bajaj has noted in his diary under the date 14-3-1937 that he discussed the subject with Gandhiji. The writing of the notes presumably followed this discussion.
55. CABLE TO AGATHA HARRISON

DELHI,
March 15, 1937

AGATHA HARRISON
2, CRANBOURNE COURT
ALBERT BRIDGE ROAD
LONDON

WHATEVER HAPPENS BREACH BETWEEN US IMPOSSIBLE.

GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 1503

56. TELEGRAM TO D. B. KALELKAR

March 15, 1937

KAKA KALELKAR
HARIJAN HOSTEL
WARDHA

GO MADRAS. HELP HARIHAR SHARMA.2

BAPU
JAMNALAL

From a photostat: G.N. 10898

57. LETTER TO J.C. KUMARAPPA

KINGSWAY, DELHI,
March 15, 1937

MY DEAR KU.,

You will please bear in mind that we have to deliver to Radhakrishna Bajaj one pukka maund of cow’s ghee before 25th April. The ghee must be well made. Ghee-making is an art by itself. [You must]3 ensure quality.

1 Congressmen; vide also “Cable to Agatha Harrison”, 27-3-1937
2 Also called Anna
3 The source here is faded.
The weather . . . I must not forget to tell you that Fischer told me he could easily look at the butter-making.

I expect to return at the . . . Sunday.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10114

58. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

HARIJAN NIWAS,
KINGSWAY, DELHI,
March 15, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

The weather here is superb just now. It always is during March and part of April.

Hope you will win Vijiya’s heart. I shall never be able to give you a better girl. And you must not pamper Kandu and the other boys. They are done for if they develop the tender skin that you and I have the misfortune to possess. The water incident stuck me in the throat.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

This was written on the date given but could not be posted before. Your letter is in. May not leave before Sunday.

From the original: C.W. 6377. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9843

1 A few words are illegible here.
2 A few words are illegible here.
3 Vijay N. Patel; vide also the following item.
4 In Bapu’s Letters to Mira, Mirabehn explains them as “Harijan village boys”.

52 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
59. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL.

March 15, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

You wish to win the heart of Mirabehn. Take her company as virtuous, good and saintly. Overlook other people’s short-comings and see their virtues. Here is a verse from Tulsidas:

God has made the world full of living and non-living things, of virtue and vices,

The good, like the swan, take the milk of virtue and leave out the water of vice.

If you do not understand the meaning, look it up in “Balkand” or ask Nanavati.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7063. Also C.W. 4555. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

60. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

DELHI,

March 15, 1937

CHI. AMRITLAL,

We have to send to Radhakrishna one pukka maund of jaggery before 25th April. It should be securely packed and should be of good quality, i.e., such as will not become too soft. Jaggery which is likely to become so, we ourselves should use. Send the quantity to him in instalments as and when it is ready.

Take care of your health in whatever you do.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10728
61. EXTRACT FROM A.I.C.C. RESOLUTION

DELI,

March 16, 1937

The A. I. C. C. endorses and confirms the resolutions of the Working Committee passed at Wardha on February 27 and 28, 1937, on the extra-parliamentary activities of Congress members of the Legislatures, mass contact and the Congress policy in the Legislatures and calls upon all Congressmen in the Legislatures and outside to work in accordance with the directions contained in them. And on the pending question of office-acceptance and in pursuance of the policy summed up in the foregoing paragraph, the A. I. C. C. authorizes and permits the acceptance of the Ministerial offices in Provinces where the Congress commands majority in the Legislature; provided that Ministerships shall not be accepted unless the Leader of the Congress Party in the Legislature is satisfied and is able to state publicly that as long as he and his Cabinet act within the Constitution, the Governor will not use his special powers of interference or set aside the advice of Ministers.

The Hindustan Times, 17-3-1937

62. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

DELI,

March 17, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

This must be a newsletter only. I twice attempted yesterday and Monday to write to you but failed. This I am writing just after prayer. You are right. The tape measure was in the tin box. Nothing escaped your notice. Mahadev has gone to Calcutta to see Subhas Chandra Bose. He went yesterday. I sent him because Jamnalal Bajaj won’t let me go before Sunday. We are only Pyarelal, Mahadev and self.

Of course you need not trouble to write to Bishop Moore.

---

1 Gandhiji says that he was “the sole author of the office-acceptance clause of the Congress resolution”. Vide “Statement to the Press”, 30-3-1937, also “Interview to the Press”, 19-3-1937 For the text of the resolution passed in Delhi, and the background, vide Appendix Resolution Passed at A.I.C.C. Meeting, Delhi”, 16-3-1937.

2 He was released from jail on March 17.
Yes, the missionary letter is in keeping with the general belief. But nothing beats Dornakal\textsuperscript{1}.

I hope you will continue steady progress.

A parcel of Hindi books was sent to you yesterday. Village note-paper has been given to R. I do not think anything else now remains to be done. You have yet to get the steam apparatus.

If you can add cream and butter to your diet so much the better, but no forcible feeding. It must be assimilated.

I am keeping well, taking more milk.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Love to Pierre\textsuperscript{2}. I hope he got my message that he can have a free passage.

From the original: C.W. 3767. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6923

63. LETTER TO DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA

DELHI,
March 17, 1937

DEAR DR. GOPICHAND,

You will come when you like and not mind waiting if I cannot have you in at once. I am a slave of circumstances controlled by the President.

Yours

BAPU

DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA
LAJPATRAI BHAVAN
LAHORE, PUNJAB

From the original: Dr. Gopichand Bhargava Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

\textsuperscript{1} also “Interview to Bishop Moore, Bishop Abraham and Others”, 19-1-1937

\textsuperscript{2} Pierre Ceresole, a Swiss Pacifist, President, International Voluntary Service. He had come to India for helping relief work in Bihar.
64. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

March 17, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have written to Ba, but it is you who will have to prepare the thing. You will have always to give to Kanu\(^1\) the bread which he will take with him and eat in the evening. If it is necessary to prepare something else also, do it yourself. Keep an account of each minute of yours. If possible, form the habit of getting up at 4 o’clock without fail. Then in the afternoon, you must have an hour’s nap. Attend to your studies carefully.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9584. Also C.W. 6556. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

65. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

[March 17, 1937]\(^2\)

CHI. MANUDI\(^3\),

I have no time to write to you. Study with care and improve your handwriting. Tell Kanam\(^4\) that I understand that they could not secure a football there. I will bring one from here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9584. Also C.W. 6556. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

66. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

March 17, 1937

CHI. VALJI,

Please get Mota’s\(^5\) nostrils operated upon and also his tonsils. There is no harm in doing that. Let me know the result.

I will reach Wardha on the 22nd and Madras on the 26th.

---

\(^1\) Also called ‘Kanaiyo’; son of Narandas Gandhi
\(^2\) In the source, this and the preceding item appear on the same sheet.
\(^3\) Youngest daughter of Harilal Gandhi
\(^4\) Also called ‘Kano’; son of Ramdas Gandhi
\(^5\) Mahendra V. Desai, addressee’s eldest son
I have gone through your Bharati. It does seem enjoyable. But I do not fully understand the aim. Should we give to children descriptions of things which are beyond human experience without explaining them?

Would even grown-ups understand? I am reading the Rama-yana. I cannot raise any objection. I can barely get time to read it in the ‘library’ or at such other times.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI VALJI DESAI
SHRI MAGANLAL UDANI'S HOUSE
PARVATI MANSION, GRANT ROAD
BOMBAY 7

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7478. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

67. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

DELHI,
March 17, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

How impatient you are! I did write to you. Is it still my fault that you got the letter late? Yes, I could not write last Monday. I got both your letters. The description is very good. Only Mahadev and Pyarelal are accompanying me. We are all very well. Mahadev left yesterday to see Subhas Babu. He will return here. We shall leave Delhi on Sunday. As regards my address here, the particulars you give are enough. We have to reach Madras on the 26th. We shall have to stay there for three days. My address there will be: C/o Hindi Prachar Office, Thyagarajanagar, Madras. Most probably Ba will accompany us to Madras.

If you eat well and do not worry, you will get all right. I will certainly have a talk with Mridu¹. She has come to stay here. But how can you come away from there when you wish? Can’t you come to an understanding with Jayaprakash about that? Doesn’t he expect your help for some time? That would of course be the proper course. About the pay I will see.

¹ Mridula Sarabhai
Amtul Salaam is here and Jawaharlal also. There is quite a big crowd here this time and it is likely to increase.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3494

68. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

DELHI,

March 19, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

You want me to give you news. But you have not armed me with your pen. You can write away for hours and still find more to write. I can’t carry on for minutes, if I have to do mere chatting. Here goes the morning prayer bell. If you think that the first relevant portion of the London letter may be published, copy it and send. Sardar Datar Singh met me day before yesterday and we talked about his dairy. You should go and see it. He has one in Lahore now. There is no likelihood of my seeing the Governor-General. I leave on Sunday, possibly tomorrow. All seems to have ended well at the A. I. C. C. But there have been little storms which have not made me quite happy¹. They make one think.

Mahadev returns today or rather tonight. He had an hour with Subhas Chandra Bose, evidently after his release. I am glad Mahadev went in time to greet him as a free man. But who knows whether he is now free or he was freer when he was a prisoner. Your description of the Manganwal village is very hopeful. Of course everywhere the difficulty is about workers. They have to be found or prepared locally. Importation is not possible for nowhere is there a plethora of supply.

I have got to stop now for there are visitors surrounding me.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3768. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6924

¹ For Gandhiji’s view, vide “Speech at Gandhi Seva Sangh Meeting, Hudli-III”, 20-4-1937.
69. INTERVIEW TO THE PRESS

DELHI,
March 19, 1937

Asked for his comments on the resolution¹ of the A. I. C. C., Gandhiji said:

This is not now within my province. I being now aloof from the day-to-day activities of the Congress, it is not for me to forecast how the resolution would work out in the actualities of provincial politics. My interest at present is confined to that of tendering advice and assisting in drafting².

Denying very firmly any intention to make office-acceptance virtually impossible, he said:

The resolution is a downright honest resolution, without the slightest mental reservation but it must be read as an indivisible whole. If Governors want Congressmen to take office, I can see nothing in the resolution to make it even awkward to them to give the fullest satisfaction to the Congress leaders in their representative Provinces—this of course within the very limited sphere in which Provincial Governors have discretion—and the resolution has asked for nothing more. Any leader summoned by the Governor in terms of the Act to form his Cabinet will naturally use the Congress resolution by way of illustration and he will ask for an assurance in cases covered by the resolution.

Asked if he would indicate some of the details of the plan of work of Congress Ministries, Gandhiji said that that could be best done by those who were likely to be in office themselves.

The Hindustan Times, 20-3-1937

70. ENFORCED WIDOWHOOD

Pyarelal has unearthed the following instructive extract on the suttee and widowhood from the treatise on universal history by Diodorus the Sicilian who lived in the age of Julius Caesar.

Now it was an ancient law among the Indians that when young men and maidens were minded to wed they did not marry according to the judgment of the parents, but by mutual consent. But when espousals were made between persons of immature age, mistakes of judgment were of frequent occurrence, and when both sides repented their union, many of the women became depraved, and through incontinence fell in love with other men, and when at last they wished to leave the husbands they had first chosen, but could not in decency do so openly, they got rid of them by poison, a means of destroying life which they could readily procure in their country which produces in great quantity and variety drugs of fatal potency, some of which cause death if merely introduced as powder into food and drink. But when this nefarious practice had become quite prevalent, and many lives had been sacrificed, and when it was found that the punishment of the guilty had no effect in deterring other wives from their career of iniquity, they passed a law ordaining that a wife, unless she was pregnant or had already borne children, should be burned along with the deceased husband, and that if she did not choose to obey the law she should remain a widow to the end of her life, and be for ever excommunicated from the sacrifices and other solemnities as being an impious person.

¹ Vide Appendix Resolution Passed at A.I.C.C. Meeting, Delhi”, 16-3-1937.
² Vide “Extract from A. I. C. C. Resolution”, 16-3-1937

If these extracts give a faithful account of the origin of the two inhuman customs, we have reason to thank Heavens for the suppression of the suttee by law imposed upon us. No outside imposition can cure Hindu society of the enforced widowhood of girls who don’t even know what marriage is. The reform can come first by the force of enlightened public opinion among Hindus, secondly by parents recognizing the duty of marrying their girl widows. This they can do, where the girls’ consent is lacking, by educating their minds to the correctness of their marrying. Naturally this refers to girls under age. Where the so-called widows have grown to maturity and they do not desire to marry, nothing is necessary save to tell them that they are free to marry precisely as if they were maidens unmarried. It is difficult to break the chains of prisoners who hug them, mistaking them as ornaments, as girls and even grown-up women do regard their silver or golden chains and rings as ornaments.

_Harijan_, 20-3-1937

71. AN ILLUSION

I received this letter last November. But owing to pressure of work I could not write anything up till now. The writer is a scholar of 1 Not translated here. The correspondent had said that caste Hindus ill-treated Harijans because they were poor and suggested that unless their economic conditions were improved, anti-untouchability activities would bear no fruit.

Lahore. It is surprising that he should be labouring under such a grave misapprehension. Perhaps the recent miracle of Travancore has removed his misapprehension. Still there are many people who harbour such misconceptions. So, it would be better to reply to his letter.

In Travancore the Harijans behind the strong movement for temple-entry were not wanting in money. Their leader was, and still is, Shri Govindan, an ex-judge of Travancore. Money brought them no peace. Temple-entry has brought them peace; we witness it for ourselves. They are very pleased with the Maharaja and Maharani. Even if the Maharaja had bestowed half his kingdom on them, it would not have achieved what temple-entry has achieved. This miracle shows that man values many things more than wealth. Man sacrifices his all for self-respect. People have suffered many hardships in the cause of religion, and have even embraced death for it.

When Hindus observe untouchability towards non-Hindus, there is certainly hatred in it. But as the non-Hindus are strong, they do not feel it as much as the Harijans do, who in spite of belonging to the same religion are considered untouchables.

It is also not right to say that there are restrictions in the matter of eating and drinking even among the four castes. The difference between this and untouchability is like that between an elephant and an ant. Untouchables are outcastes. However rich they may be, if they do anything outside their custom they are flogged. It is my firm belief that Hindus alone are responsible for the grievances of the Harijans. They have made injustice their dharma. To describe their problem as an economic one is tantamount to denying their present situation.

From the way this correspondent writes it appears that though he is a Hindu, he keeps himself a little outside the Hindu society. There are no Brahmins who are hated by Rajputs or any other caste Hindus. On the other hand, we find that a Brahmin or any other caste Hindu is worshipped even by the rich if he embraces poverty.

In the end, even after having read the correspondent’s letter with due care and courtesy, I do not regret anything I have said or done regarding untouchability.

[From Hindi]

_Harijan Sevak_, 20-3-1937
72. INTERVIEW TO PANDIT INDRA

March 20, 1937

Although I am a prisoner of Jawaharlal and I am bound by his orders, at present I am concentrating my attention on village work and that too in Segaon.

Thus reported Mahatma Gandhi to Pandit Indra, Chairman of the Reception Committee of the Congress Convention\(^1\), and others who had gone to request him to attend today’s session of the Convention. Gandhiji added:

I have chosen one particular course of action and cannot think of anything else. At present, my mind moves in that direction. When I am able to present something before you, I shall come without your asking. There is meaning in my sitting in the village. My hopes are brightening.

When requested to address a meeting of villagers here, Gandhiji replied:

My eyes are on Segaon now.

The Hindu, 21-3-1937

73. KHADI WORK IN A SCHOOL

A national school was founded in Rajkot sixteen years ago chiefly through the efforts of the late Shri Revashankar Jagjivan Jhaveri and with the help of Shri Jamnadas Gandhi. Last month, its sixteenth anniversary was celebrated under the chairmanship of Shri Narahari Parikh. There are three sections in that school—the Vinay, the Kumar and the Bal Mandir. In all, 190 students—110 boys and 80 girls—are studying there. I quote below a paragraph from Shri Narandas Gandhi’s statement that deserves attention.

It is a matter for rejoicing that interest can be created in this way in khadi amongst girls and boys. It is significant to note that cotton too is grown in the school, that a dairy is run and foodstuff necessary

---

\(^1\) Of the newly elected Congress members of the Legislatures and other A. I. C. members which met in Delhi on March 19 and 20 to administer to the legislators an oath of national independence and allegiance to the Indian people, prior to their taking of the oath in the form in vogue avowing loyalty to the British Sovereign

\(^2\) Not translated here. The statement amongst other things, explained that children at the Vidyalaya showed a keen interest in khadi. The Vidyalay a conducted classes to teach sewing, weaving, farming and dairying, besides running a provision store.
for a balanced diet also prepared there. If these activities are properly developed and the boys and girls are taught in the skills needed for them in a manner which they would understand, their minds would truly develop. It is an illusion to believe that a child’s intellect develops by cramming it with facts which have no relevance to his life.
These may well provide entertainment to the intellect, they cannot develop it, because their intellect will not be able to discriminate. But whenever a boy or a girl has to perform some activity and that activity is not taught to him in a mechanical fashion but the reason behind each activity is explained, in such cases the child’s intellect develops readily, he acquires self-awareness, self-respect and self-reliance.

[From Gujarati]
Harajanbandhu, 21-3-1937

74. ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

[DELHI,
On or before March 22, 1937]

Question: It is all right that you teach us tailoring and high-class shoe-making. But that is not what our villagers want. We must learn something that our villagers need.

Answer: You are partly right and partly wrong. The villagers may not need these things, but the city people need them. Why should they not depend on you rather than others for these things? If thereby a living contact can be established between the cities and the villages, it will be very good. You have got to teach the villagers whatever you learn here.

Q. If we are to do tanning and scavenging which are the occupations of our forefathers and which have kept us untouchables for centuries, how are you going to destroy untouchability?

1 This is extracted from “Weekly Letter” by Mahadev Desai, who had reported that Gandhiji spent half an hour with the inmates of the Harijan Industrial Home in Harijan Colony, where he was staying. After some friendly talk with the boys they were “invited to put questions”. Mahadev Desai had also explained that the Home, which had about 33 boys, imparted training in tailoring, shoe-making and carpentry, in addition to teaching Hindi and arithmetic. They lived “a clean, healthy corporate life doing cooking, washing, sweeping, grinding, etc., by turns. . . and scavenging of neighbouring villages every Sunday morning”.

2 Gandhiji left Delhi for Wardha on March 22.
A. Not by asking you to give up the occupation of your forefathers but by doing it ourselves. Don’t you know that I am a master-scavenger? But nobody treats me as an untouchable. Why should they then treat you as an untouchable? And if they treated you as a touchable only after you give up professions which are so useful to the community, where is the merit? Untouchability will not be removed that way. For then they will treat as untouchables those who will next do these unclean tasks. Untouchability cannot be destroyed that way. It can be destroyed by the so-called untouchables also doing the unclean tasks, and by impressing on the orthodox that however unclean those tasks, they are as honourable as any other and more useful than many.

_Harijan, 27-3-1937_

75. _DISCUSSION WITH LEADERS OF JAMAT-UL-ULEMA-I-HIND_

DELHI,

[On or before March 22, 1937]¹

With regard to the first question¹, Gandhiji said that he would give his attention to that. Reverting to the second question he said:

There is no cause dearer to my life than the cause of Hindu-Muslim unity and since, I have taken up this cause I have staked my life on several occasions on this issue. All those Muslim leaders who come in closer touch with me know that I have this object every moment in my eye and every minute a fire is kindling in my heart.

Mahatmaji, however, told the Jamiat leaders that he had been pondering over fresh avenues of real Hindu-Muslim unity. Mahatmaji thought that the present situation when the Congress has been returned in a majority in elections in most of the Provinces might help in this task.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 29-3-1937_

¹ Gandhiji left Delhi for Wardha on March 22.
² The deputationists invited Gandhiji’s attention to the statements of Congress leaders which created difficulties in the way of Muslims joining the Congress and fighting for India’s freedom. They also suggested establishing a separate institution for creating a better understanding among the different communities of India on the lines of All-India Spinners’ Association and Harijan Sevak Sangh.
³ ibid
MY DEAR REBEL,

It is 4.30 a.m. now. Your love letters to hand. I do not like your pain in the toe. Why do you want dal or ghee in cooking vegetables? Both are quite unnecessary, I am sure. And where is the difficulty in having local earth bandage? Are you taking enough soda? One who knows more about the baths than I do tells me that sitz-baths are far more effective than the hip. Therefore you must not omit them unless you find that they hurt. I hope the books have reached you. The parcel was given to R. to be sent to you.

No, I did not see the paper, nor have I received payment. I shall see what is possible about your parcel of hand-made paper.

Of course you should belong to All-India Spinners’ Association and take much more interest than you have done in the wheel. Though all has ended well it has cost me much but not more than was warranted by the occasion. Jawaharlal rose to the highest height when he apologized to the Committee\(^1\) for his speech before the Convention\(^2\). The apology has brought him nearer to the Committee than anything else he has done during these anxious days. Let us see what happens. Thank God that He can and does override our petty plans.

We were not allowed to leave yesterday. We go today and leave Wardha for Madras on 25th. Address is: Hindi Prachar Office, Thyagarayanagar, Madras. We return to Segaon on 31st at latest, I hope.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Don’t send the other copy of Granth Sahib. Pierre must tell me in time when he wants to sail. Raksha has just come in and paid for the paper.

From the original: C.W. 3769. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6925

---

\(^1\) Congress Working Committee which met in Delhi from March 15 to 22
\(^2\) Vide footnote on p. 11.
77. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

March 22, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

It is Monday today, and morning just now. Thinking that I may not get time after the day has advanced, I am writing a few lines just now. I got your note.

Jayaprakash has not come to take away the Jaggery. I haven’t seen him at all for three days.

Mridu has just left me. I haven’t talked about the matter with her. The main point, however, I have already discussed. Am I right in believing that your staying there will also depend on your state of mind? It seems to me that much will depend on Jayaprakash’s wish. Once you settle down in the new place, the road will be clear. When can you leave that place?

We are now leaving this evening. We have to reach Madras on the 26th and return to Wardha on the 31st, leaving Madras on the 30th.

You must procure a tub for hip-bath. If possible, take friction-bath. A tub doesn’t seem necessary for that. You will find out from experience. Do you get hand-ground flour? Do you have a carding-bow there? Can’t anybody near you be persuaded to spin and card? Harilal came and saw me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3495

78. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

DELHI,

March 22, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

It seems you are having your share of sorrows. Mridula usually gives me the news, happy or sad, of the family. Whenever she meets me she generally informs me of things at that end. It is my hope that whatever happens, you will not lose your peace of mind and watch with patience whatever happens and do whatever you can with determination.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11146. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation
79. LETTER TO K. B. KEVALRAMANI

March 22, 1937

DEAR KEVALRAMANI,

I had anticipated you had rebuked Vidya for her coming and Anand for bringing her. Vidya had promised to rest and not to try to come to see whilst I was in Delhi. But I saw that she needed to come to me. I share with you the honour of being parent both to Vidya and Anand. I could see that she would have fared worse if she could not have come to me. You were right in asking her not to venture out to Delhi, and she was right in satisfying her soul-hunger. I do hope you did not find her any the worse for her coming to Delhi.

SHRI K. B. KEVALRAMANI, S.D.O.
CANAL COLONY
FEROZEPUR (PUNJAB)

Yours,

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

80. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

March 22, 1937

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

Parameshwari Prasad¹ says that he is prepared to hand over the possession of the farm, etc., even today. He will sign the necessary documents and he can leave the farm four or five days later.

M. K. GANDHI

From Hindi: C.W. 8029. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

¹ He was in charge of the addressee’s dairy farm.
81. TELEGRAM TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

WARDHAGANJ,
March 25, 1937

BABU RAJENDRA PRASAD
SADAQUAT ASHRAM
PATNA

NOTHING SHORT PRESCRIBED ASSURANCE CAN ANSWER.

BAPU

Dr. Rajendra Prasad : Correspondence and Select Documents, Vol. 1, p. 33

82. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON,
March 25, 1937

CHI. KANTI¹,

I could not write to you earlier. I had a talk with Devdas. If you wish to go to Mysore, you may do so. If the expenses increase by your going there, Devdas will earn the money or raise it. It is, therefore, not necessary for you to join Wilson [College, Bombay] for want of money or Devdas’s consent. You may go to Trivandrum if you like. If you get a cargo ship and desire to go by it, there is no objection. It is certainly good to travel thus. Devdas will bear the expense of the voyage, but if he does not, then you may ask me for it. It would not be proper to take it from me if he can bear it.

I know Devdas could not see you. On my asking him he told me that he had tried to see you but could not. He did not send for you because his programme was uncertain. One should not mind such things. And in any case one should never be suspicious. You may take from Nimu or Ramdas whatever money you immediately need. We, i.e., Ba, Manu, Kanu (Junior), Mahadev, Pyarelal and I are leaving for Madras today. We shall be there for three days, and shall be back on the 31st. It has almost been decided to have Manu’s wedding² in Hudli.

¹ Son of Harilal Gandhi
² With Surendra Mashruwala on April 18; vide “Advice to Newly-married Couples”, 18-4-1937.
Did you cancel your proposed trip to Rajkot? Do you wish to have Amtul Salaam with you? She thinks that you do, but Devdas’s impression and mine is that you do not. If that is the case, please write to her frankly. She is making herself needlessly unhappy. She was with me in Delhi as long as I was there.

My language need not be considered mathematical just because I use mathematical terms. But if it is as exact as mathematics, that is, if its successive steps in reasoning are logical and exact, it may be described as mathematical. If my language has that quality, it is because of my worship of truth.

One who wants to learn only a subject of intellectual study can very well do so from a person without character, and such a person may certainly be intelligent also. For instance, a craftsman without character may be highly proficient in his craft. But the highest intelligence or craftsmanship without good character can never do good to the world or serve it. The effect of such service will be temporary. That is why the Gita says: “Worship me and I will give you intelligence and whatever else you need”. “Worship me” means ‘serve me–my creation’.

After writing these sheets I went to the ‘library’ and after returning I am now drinking milk and am dictating this while doing so. I had taken your letter to the ‘library’, just to see whether I had omitted to reply to any point. I am replying in brief to what has been left out. A self-controlled man should be busy in service for all the twenty-four hours. If it is merely doing anything even a demon can do it. This is in the character of a Ravana. But such a person cannot be regarded as a self-controlled man. Activity is threefold: of body, mind and soul. In pure service there is a combination of the three.

I do know that it is not an easy task to interpret ahimsa in mathematical language. I am trying to do that. And what is true of ahimsa is also true of all other things, e.g., spinning, village industries, etc. But perhaps you will understand all this on your own if you start reading the three journals1. I am expecting from you work of that level. I have torn up your letter. Nothing from it will pass to Delhi. If you decide to go to Trivandrum, and if you do not take a ship and if you can free yourself from there, then why not join us in Madras?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7318. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

1 Harijan, Harijan Sevak and Harijanbandhu
83. SPEECH AT DAKSHIN BHARAT HINDI PRACHAR SABHA, MADRAS

March 26, 1937

Mahatmaji expressed his intention to speak in Hindi and . . . said:

It is not my purpose to hear my own voice. I would like that you should all hear it and, what is more important, understand it; for otherwise there can be neither pleasure nor profit in speaking. So kindly raise your hands, those who understand me–partially or fully.

A good number of hands went up.

And now those who cannot understand me, please put up your hands.

Gandhiji looked round at those with lifted hands and seeing Mr. G. A. Natesan among them cried out:

Shame, shame!

“It is a shame,”Mr. Natesan agreed and added, “and I am very sorry indeed.” Gandhiji at once took the opportunity to impress upon those present the need for learning Hindi:

You understand on whom I have just now cried shame. It is my good old friend, Mr. Natesan. Of course, I would not take that liberty with others. I have known him since 1915 when I came here from South Africa and he and I understand each other. He is a great publisher and editor. He has also brought out translations of great Sanskrit works. He has enthusiasm and youthfulness for such work. But what has he done in regard to Hindi? He may say, ‘Oh I am old.’ Perhaps, he is, in body. But let not the mind get old. Let it go on adding to its store of knowledge. For, one whose mind has not become old can do great good to himself and to his fellowmen.

There are still some persons–happily, they are very few–who seem to consider it a sin to look upon Hindi-Hindustani as the national language and a greater sin to study it. I can say from my experience that those who recognize the place of Hindi as the national language will take to its study with enthusiasm and earnestness, whether it be their mother tongue or not. Otherwise, they may not be able to contribute to its growth as the national language. Hindi cannot take the place of the different provincial languages nor is that the aim of Hindi prachar. On the other hand, the spread of the national language will accelerate the growth of the provincial languages and vice versa. A strong and virile national language requires healthy development of the provincial languages. If the latter be weak and anaemic, how can the former at all grow?¹

1 Gandhiji presided over the convocation of the Sabha.

Gujarati, I said to myself, cannot be the language. Not more than a thirtieth part of the people of the country speaks it. How am I to find Tulsi Ramayana therein? What about Marathi, then, I wondered. I love Marathi. I claim among the Marathi-speaking people some staunch co-workers. I know the Maharastrians’ efficiency, capacity for self-sacrifice, and their learning. And yet I did not think Marathi—the language that Lokamanya Tilak wielded so wonderfully well—could be our rashtrabhasha. When I was thus reasoning this out, let me tell you that I did not know the actual number of people speaking Hindi, and yet I instinctively felt that only Hindi could take that place, and no other. Did I not appreciate Bengali? I did, and I thought highly of it as the language of Chaitanya, Ram Mohun Roy, Ramakrishna, Vivekananda and Rabindranath Tagore. And yet I felt that we could not make even Bengali the language of inter-provincial intercourse.

I was convinced long ago, and my conviction has grown stronger since from experience, that if any Indian language can ever become India’s national language—and some one must become the national language if Indians are to become a nation—that language was only Hindi, and I have always directed my efforts in its cause.

No doubt, in the South we are up against a great problem in this matter. But we cannot see how a language of the South, Tamil or Telugu or any other, can serve as the national language. I honestly tried to learn Telugu and Tamil. Indeed there was a time when I could speak in Tamil quite as well as I am now speaking Hindi. I had sufficient material when I was in South Africa to assist me in this, because I had to work in the midst of Tamils. but I must confess, to my regret and shame, that I have not kept up touch with it and have forgotten what little I knew of that language. I am not wholly responsible for it. The blame for it rests partly on my Tamil friends. I have taken a girl² from Tamil Nad into my household as my daughter-in-law. But instead of compelling me to keep touch with Tamil, she has learnt Hindi and Gujarati and speaks and writes in

¹ Vide also “Speech at Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, Madras-II”, 28-3-1937
² Lakshmi, Devdas Gandhi’s wife, daughter of C. Rajagopalachari
Hindi. What can I do? How can I hope to refresh my knowledge of Tamil when Tamilians let me down in this manner?

Nor is my Hindi particularly good. My friends behind, who are all proficient in Hindi, laugh at my Hindi pronunciation and grammar. I know both are erratic for I have not studied either. It will do for my purpose if I am able to express my thoughts so as to be understood. If I attempt to be grammatical, I am afraid the results will not be very complimentary to me. I must, on this occasion, express my regret at the absence of any book to help Hindi-speaking people to learn Tamil. If they want to learn Tamil, they have to do it through English. We have not shown the zeal in this cause which some Western Missionaries have evinced. I would appeal to Tamils and also my North Indian friends to remedy this defect. I am thankful to my South Indian friends for the enthusiasm they have shown in learning Hindi but I must say it is not sufficient. It is a unique event that the session of the All-India Sahitya Sammelan is being held in Madras, where Tamil is the chief language. Tamil, of all the Dravidian languages, has borrowed least from Sanskrit. This, no doubt, is a handicap to Tamilians in learning Hindi. But still they have striven to learn the language.¹

I certainly congratulate you on what you have achieved. But I should be satisfied only when distinguished people like my friend G. A. Natesan, member of the Council of State, give half an hour each day to the study of Hindi. Let him not plead old age. If he is not too old to edit the Indian Review, if he is not too old to study Sanskrit and issue Sanskrit publications one after another, if he is not too old to go to the Council of State, why should he be too old to learn Hindi?

What I mean to say is this. Up till now only the middleclass people have taken up the study of Hindi. When will our distinguished leaders take it up? When will the Advocate-General find half an hour to leave his briefs aside and devote it to Hindi? I want men and women among the most distinguished of the South to study Hindi.

The Hindu, 27-3-1937, and Harijan, 3-4-1937

¹ What follows is from Harijan.
84. SHAMEFUL IF TRUE

A correspondent in British Malabar writes:¹

I desire you kindly to comment on the following incident which has agitated me considerably. A public procession was organized by the Congress workers of our village on the eve of the General Elections to the Assembly. A Harijan boy of the place wished to go along with the procession. But the organizers requested him to keep away, mildly saying to him, ‘Of course, as you know, we are in full sympathy with you. But the procession has to go through by-lanes along which you people are not generally allowed. Then again, we fear that the orthodox may make this a plea for voting against the Congress. We, therefore, consider it prudent that you do not accompany us.’ The poor boy returned with a heavy heart. . . .

This ill-treatment of the noble Harijan lad, if the report is true, deserves severe condemnation, and victory at elections or in other matters is not worth anything if it is bought with the suppression of Harijan liberty. The prohibition against Harijans making use of the roads in the place mentioned is an illegal act and ought not to be tolerated for a single day. Workers should reason with the objectors, and if they do not listen, a test case should be made by taking a few Harijans through the prohibited streets. One would have thought that in Malabar at least such things as are described by the correspondent would not happen.

Harijan, 27-3-1937

85. A VOICE IN THE WILDERNESS

Just lately I read a review of your conference² with Mrs. Sanger, the birth-control advocate. I was so deeply moved that I am writing you to express my appreciation for your stand. God bless you for your courage . . .

I realize it will take centuries to educate the public to higher ideals, but there is no time like the present to begin. I fear she mistakes passion for love, for love is of the spirit and never born of lust.

¹ Only an extract is reproduced here.
² Vide “Interview to Margaret Sanger”, 3/4-12-1935
Dr. Alexis Carrel agrees with you, in that sex control is not harmful except to those who feed their passions and are already unbalanced. Mrs. Sanger is wrong in saying that most doctors believe abstinence is harmful. I find many leading doctors and scientists belonging to the American Social Hygiene Association hold that control is beneficial.

You are doing a noble work. . . . You are one of the few who have this higher spiritual viewpoint on the sex question. . . .

Let us keep up the good work so that youth may know the truth, for the hope of the future is in their hands.

I add a quotation from one of my talks to boys: “. . . Creation—physical, mental and spiritual—is joy and life. If you are merely seeking the sensations of the flesh with no thought of creating, or even trying to avoid the aim of creation you are perverting nature and killing your spiritual powers. . . .”

I know this is like a prophet crying in the wilderness, but I am convinced of the truth of it, and I can but point the way.

This is one of the letters which I occasionally get from America in condemnation of the use of contraceptives. Current literature that India imports weekly from the Far West would have us believe that in America none but idiots and imbeciles oppose the use of this modern method of deliverance from the bondage of the superstition which imprisons the body and crushes it by denying it its supreme enjoyment. That literature produces as much momentary intoxication as the act which it teaches and incites us to perform without incurring the risk of its ordinary result. I do not put before the readers of Harijan merely letters of individual condemnation received from the West. They have their use for me as a seeker but very little for the general reader. This letter, however, from a teacher of boys with thirty years’ experience behind him has a definite value. It should serve as a guide for Indian teachers and the public—men and women—who are carried away by the overwhelming tide. The use of contraceptives is infinitely more tempting than the whisky bottle. But it is not more lawful than the sparkling liquid for its fatal temptation. Nor can opposition to the use of either be given up in despair because their use seems to be growing. If the opponents have faith in their mission, it has to be pursued. A voice in the wilderness has a potency which voices uttered in the midst of ‘the madding crowd’ lack. For the voice in the wilderness has meditation, deliberation and unquenchable faith behind it, whilst the babel of voices has generally nothing but the backing of the experience of personal enjoyment or the false and sentimental pity for the unwanted children and their suffering mothers. Argument of personal experience has as much weight as an act of a drunkard. The argument of pity is a trap into which it is dangerous to fall. Sufferings of unwanted children and of equally unwanted motherhood are punishments or warnings devised by beneficent nature. Disregard of the law of discipline and restraint is suicide. Ours is a state of probation. If we refuse to bear the yoke of discipline we court failure like cowards, we avoid battle and give up the only joy of living.

1 Only extracts are reproduced here.

_Harijan_, 27-3-1937

86. THE MEANING OF IT

I have a wire from Gwalior saying that the notice board in Mahakaleshwar temple in Ujjain, prohibiting the entry into it of Harijans and those who may be associating with or working with them, has been withdrawn by the Maharaja. Before one can pronounce an opinion on the notice it is necessary to know its full meaning. If the prohibition is not withdrawn but only the offending notice board is, the withdrawal brings no relief to the insulted Harijans and their caste associates. It may even bring punishment to the unwary who seeing the notice board withdrawn may venture to enter the temple. If it means withdrawal of the prohibition itself, one would expect a notification to that effect. And if the prohibition is withdrawn from one temple, why not from all State-owned temples of which I am informed there are nearly fifty in Gwalior State? I hope, therefore, that the State authorities will clear the point and tell the public what the withdrawal of the notice board means.

Indeed there seems to be a timidity on the part of the Princes and their advisers on this matter of doing elementary justice to the poorest and the neediest of their people, and that, too, in a matter which has first-class religious value but which costs them nothing materially. The most striking example of Travancore should have shown them that if they threw open their temples to Harijans there would be no resentment. But it may be that the Princes are afraid of the middle-class Hindus with whom they come in daily contact and that they are not concerned about the silent sufferers—the bulk of the poorest—whether they be Harijans or others. Save for a few Princes who may be counted on the fingers of one’s hands the vast majority have themselves no religious scruples about untouchability. Must the Hindu Princes who are supposed to be custodians of the faith, as is shown by the titles they assume, continue to neglect this obvious duty of throwing open their temples to Harijans? I drew attention the other day to the title of the Maharaja of Travancore. Now I learn from D. B. Har Bilas Sarda that the Maharajas of Oodeypore are entitled Diwans inasmuch as they are ministers of the deity of their clan, and that whenever they visit their temples in Oodeypore they officiate like priests for the deity. I would therefore respectfully urge the Princes and their advisers boldly and unequivocally to throw open the temples in their respective States and prove themselves worthy trustees of their faith.

Harijan, 27-3-1937

87. NATTAR-HARIJAN AGREEMENT

The following has been received from Shri L. N. Gopalaswami, Secretary, Tamil Nad Harijan Sevak Sangh:

I am very glad to communicate to you the very good news regarding the settlement of troubles between a big section of the Nattars called the ‘Tennilai Nattars’ and the Harijans of that locality.

The following is the true translation of the agreement entered into between the heads of both the parties:

‘COPY OF THE AGREEMENT DATED FEBRUARY 24, 1937

We, the Harijans and Nattars of Tennilai Nadu, have in the presence of Smt. Kamala Sivasubramaniam, Secretary, Harijan Sevak Sangh, Karaikudi, today resolved to forget and forgive all the differences in the past between the two communities. In token thereof we have set our hand to the conditions of the agreement referred to below:

1. The Harijans will not be forced to do labour. They are at perfect liberty to take wages for the work they do and refuse to do work for those who do not pay.

2. Wearing of dress: The Harijans are entitled to use shirts and upper clothes as they like, and the women all kinds of ornaments as they please. But on the car-day festival of Kandadevi and Eluvancottah, the males will not wear shirts as the chief Nattars themselves do not do so.

3. The Harijans can build any type of houses they please according to their wishes and capacities.

Vide “Speech at Thiruvattar”, 14-1-1937

Now called Udaipur
(Signed)

Harijans: Nattars:

VEMBAN           P. N. KARUPPAIAH AMBALAN
KALIAN           C. KARUPPIAH AMBALAN
S. RAMASWAMI     P. CHIDAMBARA AMBALAN
S. PARANCHODHI PILLAI'

This is indeed good news, and those who brought about the agreement deserve congratulations. One may hope also that the terms will be strictly observed by the Nattars. But it is humiliating to find that a portion of Indian humanity cannot wear the dress or ornaments they like and receive wages for their labour except by the grace of another supposed to be superior to them but in reality no better than the first.

_Harijan, 27-3-1937_

88. CABLE TO AGATHA HARRISON

MADRAS,

March 27, 1937

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>OBSTINACY</th>
<th>REFUSING</th>
<th>ASSURANCES</th>
<th>WILL</th>
<th>SURELY</th>
<th>RESULT</th>
<th>DEADLOCK</th>
<th>BREACH</th>
<th>CONGRESS</th>
<th>RANKS</th>
<th>IMPOSSIBLE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 1504

89. SPEECH AT BHARATIYA SAHITYA PARISHAD MADRAS-I

March 27, 1937

The Mahamahopadhyaya’s speech has whetted my appetite for a study of Tamil, which neither age nor desire would deter me from undertaking, but only the want of time makes difficult. The object of this conference is to collect gems from all provincial literatures and to make them available through Hindi. For this purpose I would make an appeal to you. Of course everyone must know his own language thoroughly well, and he should also know the great literature of other Indian languages through Hindi. But it is also the object of this conference to stimulate in our people the desire to know languages of other provinces, e.g., Gujaratis should know Tamil, Bengalis should know Gujarati and so on. And I tell you from experience that it is not at all difficult to pick up another Indian language. But to this end a common script is quite essential. It is not difficult to achieve in Tamil Nad. For look at this simple fact: over 90 per cent of our people are illiterate. We have to start with a clean slate with them. Why should we not start making them literate by means of a common script? In Europe they have tried the experiment of a common script quite successfully. Some people even go the length of saying that we might adopt the Roman script from Europe. After a good deal of controversy there is a consensus of opinion that the common script can be Devnagari and none else. Urdu is claimed as a rival, but I think neither Urdu nor Roman has the perfection and phonetic capacity of Devnagari. Please remember that I say nothing against your languages. Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam, Kannada must be there and will be there. But why not teach the illiterate in these parts these languages through the Devnagari script? In the interest of the national unity we desire to achieve, the adoption of Devnagari as a common script is so essential. Here it is a question of just shedding our provincialism and narrowness, there are no difficulties at all. Not that I do not like Tamil or Urdu scripts. I know both. But service of the motherland, to which all my life is being given and without which life would be insupportable for me, has taught me that we should try to lift unnecessary burdens off our people. The burden of knowing many scripts is unnecessary and easily avoidable. I would appeal to men of letters of all provinces to resolve their differences on this point and be agreed on this matter of prime importance. Then and then only can the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad be a success.

1 The speech is extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.

VOL.71: 25 FEBRUARY, 1937- 5 JULY, 1935

Then you have to think of ways and means for carrying on our work. Hans is now defunct.¹ Its founder was Premchandji who is no more. Unfortunately Premchandji did not leave anyone to take his place. Indeed, there was none that could adequately fill his place, for he was an unrivalled writer. But that was not the reason for the stopping of the Hans. It ceased even when he was alive. Its cessation was due—it was a pity—to the paucity of the number of men who sympathized with or took sufficient interest in the method of work adopted by the journal. All the articles there were drawn from different provincial languages and were written in the Nagari script. If you accept the ideal of a common script, it would be your duty to earnestly work for this objective of the Parishad.

¹The rest of the paragraph is from The Hindu.

Kakasaheb has told you that he is issuing periodical booklets now, but the whole thing cannot yet be said to have caught on. I want you to shed your apathy and lend a helping hand. You must remember that the whole work falls on the shoulders of the chief workers of the Sammelan. Our work suffers not for want of funds, but for want of workers. We want them from every province. Kakasaheb said that we had limited the number of our governing body to 50 members, but that does not mean that it does not want more workers.

Today our literature is in the interest of the few, i.e., of the few literates. Even among the literates there would be few who are really interested in literature.

Our country lives in the villages, but we have not gone to the villages to do the country’s work. What I saw in Segaon is to be seen in every Indian village. You will be surprised that out of about six hundred villagers in Segaon, not two can read good literature. Every day a gentleman goes to the village to read out to them the day’s news from the dailies. But it is with great hardship that he is able to get two villagers to listen to him. You can very well understand from this what a stupendous task it must be to carry good literature to their door. It is the aim of the Parishad to remove that defect. I am not mad after any particular script, but I want you to take a considered and dispassionate view of the question. I appeal to you to give this Parishad as much assistance as you can.

Kakasaheb has told you the kind of literature to which we have limited ourselves. I am not fond of literature for its own sake, I do not make a fetish of literacy either. Literacy must be one of the many means for intellectual development, but we have had in the past intellectual giants who were unlettered. That is why we have confined ourselves only to literature of the cleanest and healthiest kind. How can we have this, unless we have your hearty co-operation and unless you are prepared to select suitable literature in your respective languages?

_Harijan, 3-4-1937, and The Hindu, 27-3-1937_

---

1 This paragraph is from _The Hindu_.

VOL.71: 25 FEBRUARY, 1937- 5 JULY, 1935
90. LONG LIVE KHADI

Shri Kakubhai writes to say from Bombay:¹

This increase may be regarded as fairly satisfactory. There is no reason to be pleased at the daily sale of khadi worth Rs. 1,000 in the biggest khadi bhandar in the country, and that too, in a city like Bombay. For me the sale of khadi is the best thermometer for measuring India’s peaceful progress. The reader should also bear in mind that this Rs. 1,000 includes orders which have been received from outside also. How many shops are there in Bombay which sell mill-cloth both foreign and Indian? What is their daily sale? And how many khadi shops are there? We shall have to hang our heads in shame if these figures are compared. Despite this, we can derive satisfaction from the fact that khadi worth Rs. 1,000 is being sold and, this time, an increase in sale has been recorded.

Shri Kakubhai cannot give any reason for the increase in sale. I found from my conversation with Shri Vithaldas Jerajani that this sale was in no way connected with the enthusiasm about the Legislative Assembly. Had it been the case, the increase would have amounted to not one, but many thousands. Hence, there is some other reason behind it. I presume that people have increasingly begun to understand the significance of khadi, and those who wear khadi are satisfied by the higher rate paid to women spinners and thus their enthusiasm for wearing it has increased. If my guess is correct, it is something that should encourage khadi workers. I have found out something of practical significance. The softness and durability of khadi have increased to a considerable extent ever since the rate for spinning has been increased and the work of women spinners is being supervised. The reason for this is obvious. And that too is something that should encourage us. If readers of Harijanbandhu can throw some light on this, they should write to me.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 28-3-1937

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had given details to show that the sale of khadi had increased notwithstanding the rise in prices. He had expressed the hope that it would increase further.
91. SPEECH AT BHARATIYA SAHITYA PARISHAD, MADRAS-II

[March 28, 1937]

If the Congress went on as usual while we passed resolutions in support of Hindi as the common language, our work would be painfully slow. This resolution appeals to the Congress to exclude the use of English as a language of inter-provincial communication. English, it says, should not be allowed to take either the place of the provincial languages or of Hindi. If English had not ousted the languages of the people, the provincial languages would have been wonderfully rich today. If England had adopted French as the language of her national deliberations we should have had no English literature today. French was the language there after the Norman conquest. But then the tide turned in favour of ‘English-undefiled’. That created the great English literature we know. What Yakub Hussain Saheb said was quite right. The Mussalman contact had a great influence on our culture and civilization, so much so that there were men like the late Pandit Ajodhyanath who were perfect scholars in Persian and Arabic. If they had given to their mother tongue all the time that they gave to the study of Arabic and Persian, the mother tongue would have made great progress. Then English came to occupy the unnatural position it does until this day. University professors can wax eloquent in English but will not be able to express their thoughts in their own mother tongue. Sir C. V. Raman’s researches are all contained in his papers in English. They are a sealed book to those who do not know English. But look at the position in

---

1 The speech is extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. Before Gandhiji’s speech the Parishad had passed a resolution, drafted by C. Rajagopalachari, which read: “This Conference appeals to the Working Committee of the Indian National Congress to resolve not to use English in future in the proceedings of the Congress, the A. I. C. C. and the Working Committee and to use Hindi-Hindustani instead; provided that those who are not able to express themselves fully in Hindi-Hindustani may use English. If a member who is unable to express himself in Hindi-Hindustani desires to speak in his provincial language, he may do so, and arrangements may be made for translating such a speech into Hindi-Hindustani. If any person finds it necessary on any occasion to speak in English to make himself understood by any section of the audience, he may do so with the permission of the Chairman.”

2 Gandhi 1915-1948: A Detailed Chronology
Russia. Even before the Revolution they resolved to have all their textbooks (including scientific) in Russian. That really prepared the way for Lenin's Revolution. We cannot establish real mass contacts until the Congress decides to have all its deliberations in Hindi and of its provincial organizations in the provincial languages.

The resolution becomes as much a business of the Bharatiya Parishad as of the Sammelan, for the Bharatiya Parishad is intended to advance the cause of the provincial languages, and if the Congress does not adopt the resolution its object will be to that extent frustrated.

It is not that I am making a fetish of language. It is not that I would refuse to have swaraj if I could have it at the cost of our language, as indeed I should refuse to have it at the cost of Truth and Non-violence. But I insist so much on the language because it is a powerful means of achieving national unity, and the more firmly it is established the broader based will be our unity.

Don't be alarmed at my proposal of everyone learning Hindi plus a language of other provinces, besides his mother tongue. Languages are easily learnt. Max Muller knew 14 languages; and I know a German girl who knew 11 languages when she came here five years ago and now knows two or three Indian languages. But you have created before your mind's eye a bugbear and somehow feel that you cannot express yourselves in Hindi. It is our mental laziness that we have made no progress in spite of Hindustani being adopted in our Congress constitution these 12 years.

Yakub Hussain Saheb asked me why I insisted so much on 'Hindi-Hindustani' and was not content with having simple 'Hindustani' as the common language. I must take you through the genesis of the whole thing. It was as early as 1918 that as President of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan I suggested to the Hindi-speaking world to broaden their definition of Hindi to include Urdu. When I presided over the Sammelan once again in 1935 I had the word Hindi properly defined as a language that was spoken both by Hindus and Mussalmans and written in Devnagari or Urdu script. My object in doing so was to include in Hindi the high-flown Urdu of Maulana Shibli and the high-flown Hindi of Pandit Shyamsunderdas. Then came the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, also an off-shoot of the Sammelan. At my suggestion the name Hindi-Hindustani was adopted in the place of Hindi. Abdul Huq Saheb stoutly opposed me there. I could not accept his suggestion. I should have done violence to myself and to the Sammelan if I had given up the word ‘Hindi’ which was the word of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan and which I had persuaded them to define so as to include Urdu. We must remember that the word Hindi is not of Hindu coinage, it was coined after the Muslim advent to describe the language which Hindus of the North spoke and studied. So many Mussalman writers of note have described their language as Hindi. And why now this quarrel over words when Hindi is defined to include the variations spoken and written by Hindus and Mussalmans?

---

1 Vide "Statement of Transvaal Indian Case", 16-7-1909

Than there is another factor to be considered. So far as South Indian languages are concerned it is only Hindi with a large number of Sanskrit words that can appeal to them, for they are already familiar with a certain number of Sanskrit words and the Sanskrit sound. When the two—Hindi and Hindustani or Urdu—amalgamate and really become the all-India language, daily augmented by the introduction of provincial words, we shall have a vocabulary richer even than the English vocabulary. I hope you now understand why I insist on Hindi-Hindustani.

And then I would give a tip to such of you as dread the advent of Hindi-Hindustani as the only language of the Congress. Invest in a Hindi daily or a good book, read aloud part of it regularly even for five minutes, select passages from well-known Hindi writings and speeches and repeat them to yourselves, for correct intonation, make a point of learning a few Hindi words every day, and I assure you that such regular practice will be enough to enable you to express yourselves well in Hindi-Hindustani in six months’ time and without putting an undue strain on your memory.

_Harijan,_ 3-4-1937
Representative: As the reputed co-author of the resolution of the A. I. C. C. on office-acceptance, can you throw some light on the position as it has emerged today?

GANDHIJI: It is definite that I am not saying anything about politics. That must be understood.

R. Are you aware that an opinion has been expressed that each side has but tried to put the other in the wrong and that that opinion seems to be held by responsible public men?

G. I do not know about it. I have not yet seen this evening’s papers.

The interviewer had to switch on to other topics and he sought Gandhiji’s views on the progress of Hindi in South India with particular reference to the resolution adopted by the All-India Sahitya Sammelan that day urging the exclusive use of Hindi in Congress deliberations.

G. The progress made in the matter of Hindi is comparatively speaking good. Whereas some years back there was hardly anybody who knew Hindi, today there is a big establishment looking after the training in Hindi of several thousands of boys and girls and men and women. That is a sign of progress. But I cannot say I am satisfied with the response from all the four Provinces of the South so far as the leaders of public opinion are concerned. I very much fear they have not taken up the study of Hindi seriously so as to be able to carry on conversation in Hindi or to understand what is going on in the Hindi Press or to be able to speak to the multitude in northern Provinces. It is therefore a happy thing that for the first time in the history of a southern Province, the Hindi Sammelan was invited and had its sittings in Madras.

I hope and believe the prejudice that Hindi was intended to supplant the provincial languages has by this time been set at rest. Indeed the effort of the Sammelan is to strengthen the provincial

---

1 The interview was granted to its representative “immediately after Gandhiji’s evening prayers”.
2 Vide “Extract from A.I.C.C. Resolution”, 16-3-1937
3 Vide footnote 1, “Speech at Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, Madras- II languages also. If the provincial languages are not strong, Hindi as a language of inter-provincial intercourse would not be able to thrive. Love of Hindi as the rashtrabhasha must go hand in hand with love of provincial languages.

It was indeed a great thing that with unanimous consent, this resolution asking the Working Committee of the Congress to stop the use of English in all-India proceedings has been passed. I have no doubt that English has enjoyed a status and importance in public affairs which it should never have enjoyed. He who runs can see that this usurpation by English of the place that belongs to Hindi or Hindustani has to that extent delayed the progress of Hindi and also of the vernaculars. It is not a very flattering admission on our part that the riches and discoveries of physical sciences cannot be accurately described in the provincial languages or in Hindi. I am convinced that it is sheer laziness on our part which makes us say so. These two conferences, the Sammelan and the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, will have rendered a useful service if the eyes of leaders of opinion in the South are opened to this obvious fact.

R. If, as you say, the fear that the spread of Hindi may be prejudicial to the growth of provincial languages is dying down, is not the suggestion for the adoption of a common script for all Indian languages likely to be a disturbing factor?

G. That is a question very well put. It should be most unfortunate if the suggestion that we should have a common script for the provincial languages disturbs in any way the provincial mind that it is an attempt directly or indirectly to undermine the importance of provincial languages. I can say without fear of contradiction that nothing was farther from my thoughts than that by the adoption of a common script the chances of provincial languages should be reduced. On the other hand, a common script would remove a great difficulty from the path of persons wanting to learn languages of India other than their own and would thereby facilitate the study of those languages. My observation was based on personal experience and that of the experience of co-workers.

We are an illiterate nation, illiterate in the sense that hardly seven per cent of the people of India can trace their own alphabet. What are you going to do to the other ninety or ninety-three per cent? Should the seven or ten per cent of literates, because they are associated with a particular form of script and because they have associated the provincial sound with those signs, impose those signs on the ninety or ninetythree per cent and make it difficult for them to learn other provincial languages? A little care for the illiterate masses and a little thought about all India should convince the seven per cent of provincial literates of the necessity of adopting a common script. Has the adoption of a common script in Europe prevented the growth of different European languages in any shape or form?

Conversation then turned on the rural uplift work which was being carried on in Segaon village and Gandhiji sat up and said:

You can talk to me freely of it. You can talk to me of khadi, the Charkha, basket-making and paper-making.

R. Had paper-making made great progress in your Segaon reconstruction scheme?

G. If I get a contract for paper from newspapers, I hope to be able to supply their requirements, though I am not just now competing with the paper mills. For, were I to enter into that competition just now, I must needs neglect the anti-malaria work.

Speaking of malaria, Gandhiji said that preventive measures and diet were the most important items in anti-malaria work. Administration of quinine, he said, was of no avail unless food was given to the people at the same time. Gandhiji added:

I have got to give them milk or buttermilk in all cases without exception and advise the adoption of a diet which would enable them to survive the disease. I am convinced that diet is more important than drugs and good food better than constant drugging.

An interesting piece of information which Gandhiji gave out in this connection was that he had hardly taken drugs except on two occasions.

R. Would you suggest a six-month plan for Congress members of the Legislatures on these lines of rural work as the Legislatures, apparently, will have a holiday for the period?

G. Jawaharlal can prescribe one.

Gandhiji then answered a few questions about khadi. At first, he said, he was inclined to think that enthusiasm for it had abated. But the monthly increases in the sales of khadi made him hesitate to pronounce any opinion that love of khadi had abated. It was certainly true, he said, that whereas formerly “a forest of khadi caps” was visible, one did not see such demonstrations now. That, however, was no test of the real love of khadi. Gandhiji added:

I do notice this happy result of the increase in the wages of spinners that it has not affected the demand for khadi, as some workers feared it might affect and I should be surprised if, at a date not very distant, we do not adopt a further rise in the spinners’ wages.
Whilst therefore Gandhiji had absolutely no sense of despair about the progress of khadi, he could not, he said, conceal from himself or from the Press and the public his desire for much greater progress than what made so far. Conceived as a supplementary occupation for the millions of underfed villagers of India, Gandhiji said:

Khadi should command the sympathy and support of town-dwellers and others who required a certain amount of clothing for covering themselves.

_The Hindu, 29-3-1937_

93. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

MADRAS,

_March 30, 1937_

Having brooded over the refusal of the Governors to give the assurances asked for by invited Congress leaders in the Majority Provinces, I feel that I must give my opinion on the situation that has arisen in the country. I have had three cables from London shown to me asking for my opinion. Friends in Madras too have pressed for its publication. Though it is departure from my self-imposed rule, I can no longer withstand the pressure especially as I am the sole author of the office-acceptance clause of the Congress resolution^1^ and the originator of the idea of attaching a condition to office-acceptance.

My desire was not to lay down any impossible condition. On the contrary, I wanted to devise a condition that could be easily accepted by the Governors. There was no intention whatsoever to lay down a condition whose acceptance would mean any the slightest abrogation of the Constitution. Congressmen were well aware that they could not and would not ask for any such amendment. The Congress policy was and is not to secure an amendment, but an absolute ending of the Constitution which nobody likes. Congressmen were and are also aware that they could not end it by mere acceptance of office, even conditional. The object of that section of the Congress which believed in office-acceptance was, pending the creation, by means consistent with the Congress creed of non-violence, of a situation that would transfer all power to the people, to work the offices so as to strengthen the Congress which has been shown predominantly to represent mass opinion. I felt that this object could not be secured unless there was a gentlemanly understanding between the Governors and their Congress Ministers that they would not exercise their special powers of interference so long as the Ministers acted within the Constitution. Not to do so would be to court an almost immediate deadlock after entering upon office. I felt that honesty demanded that understanding.

---

^1^ Vide “Extract from A.I.C.C. Resolution”, 16-3-1937

It is common cause that the Governors have discretionary powers. Surely there was nothing extra-constitutional in their saying that they would not exercise their discretion against Ministers carrying on constitutional activities. It may be remembered that the understanding was not to touch the numerous other safeguards over which the Governors had no power. A strong party with the decisive backing of the electorate could not be expected to put itself in the precarious position of being in dread of interference at the will of the Governors. The question may be put in another way. Should the Governors be courteous to the Ministers or discourteous? I hold that it would be distinctly discourteous if they interfered with their Ministers in matters over which law gave the latter full control and with which the Governors were under no legal obligation to interfere. A self-respecting Minister conscious of an absolute majority at his back could not but demand the assurance of non-interference. Have I not heard Sir Samuel Hoare and other Ministers saying in so many words that ordinarily the Governors would not use their admittedly large powers of interference? I claim that the Congress formula has asked for nothing more.

It has been claimed on behalf of the British Government that the Act gives autonomy to the Provinces. If that is so, it is not the Governors but the Ministers who are during their period of office responsible for the wise administration of their Provinces. Responsible Ministers sensible of their duty could not submit to interference in the pursuance of their daily duty. It does therefore appear to me that once more the British Government has broken to the heart what it has promised to the ear. I doubt not that they can and will impose their will on the people till the latter develop enough strength from within to resist it, but that cannot be called working provincial autonomy.

By flouting the majority obtained through the machinery of their creation, they have in plain language ended the autonomy which they claim the Constitution has given to the Provinces. The rule

---

1 Secretary of State for Home Affairs
therefore will now be the rule of the sword, not of the pen, nor of the indisputable majority. Anyway that is the only interpretation which with all the goodwill in the world, I can put upon Government action. For I believe in the cent per cent honesty of my formula whose acceptance might have prevented a crisis and resulted in a natural, orderly and peaceful transference of power from the bureaucracy to the largest and fullest democracy known to the world.

_The Hindu_, 30-3-1937

94. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

ON THE TRAIN,

_March 30, 1937_

MY DEAR IDIOT,

This is being written in the moving train. You must have had the letter I asked Mahadev to write to you. In Madras I had no time for anything but the work before me. And I worked to the breaking point. The reason was a discovery of great impurity in the Secretary of the Sabha–Pandit Harihar Sharma.

Ammu Swaminathan was not in Madras.

You did well in sending me the wire about your foot for your letter was alarming. I hope you are now completely free. You should discover the cause of it.

Yes, I would like you to give up even the spoonful of dal and equally give up vegetable or anything cooked or fried in ghee or oil. I know you do not touch oil. Do take raw onion with raw garlic, tomatoes and some green leaf. Increase the quantity of milk. If you have a good cow, once during the day try raw milk.

I evidently forgot to send you Dinshaw Mehta’s address. It is Dr. Dinshaw Mehta, Healthatorium, near City Station, Poona City. Did you ever get from him the steaming kettle? I have asked him to send it to you per V. P. P. Jullundur City address.

Heat has commenced in these parts. But it is not unbearable as yet. Mira says they had a bad storm in my absence. Wardha weather seems to have changed.

Your Hindi attempt was good. With the Hindi Sammelan Ambujam¹ had got up a Mahila Parishad. Ba was nominally President.

¹ Daughter of S. Srinivasa Iyengar
As A’s address was short, I send you a copy of it. It would be good exercise for you. It has a few mistakes which you should be able to detect.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3770. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6926

95. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

ON THE TRAIN,
March 30, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I have your letter. I am writing this in a train that is carrying me to Wardha. Amtul Salaam has gone to her home in Patiala. Navin had come to Madras. Paparamma had also come. But Saraswati could not. The work in Madras was quite heavy. Do you know Kamalabai of Madras who was doing publicity work? She is here. Anna has fallen with her. So for the time being she has to give up publicity work. Most probably she and Gomatibehn will stay with me. I will test her then. A man falls if he is a little careless. You don’t have to think much about staying with Mridula. When you get sufficient self-confidence to be able to work in Bihar independently, you can take up such work. If you have such self-confidence now, you needn’t go to Mridula. There is, thus, nothing to worry about. If one does the work that comes to one unsought, without worrying about things and with single-minded attention, one is bound to be at peace with oneself.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3496

1 Padmavathi, sister of G. Ramachandran
2 Harihar Sharma
3 Vide also “Hindi Prachar and Purity”, 3-4-1937

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
96. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

March 31, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

Still on the train. I wrote yesterday but forgot to tell you that when I saw the cartoon I felt what you felt. The joke was quite innocent. Only a suspicious mind could find a sinister purpose behind the cartoon. But the suspicion is there and has to be taken account of. Therefore you were wholly right in drawing Devdas’s attention to the cartoon.

Yesterday’s letter was posted in the train without late fee. Mahadev thinks that therefore it will be delivered to you a day later. This is being posted with the late fee. You will tell me if this reaches you earlier.

Hope the toe is in order and you are having your walks. No dal at all and no ghee in cooking vegetables, no fried things, as much milk as you can possibly take, raw onion and raw garlic.

Dr. Dinshaw Mehta, Nature Cure, 6 Toddiwala Road, near City Station, Poona City.

That is Mehta’s address. The latter part is a summary of yesterday’s letter.

Love

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3771. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6927

1 Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 30-3-1937
2 Published in The Hindustan Times, 22-3-1937, while Devdas Gandhi was its Managing Director. The cartoon by Shankar which caricatured a biblical saying from First Epistle of St. John, Chapter I, verse 3, referred to Sri Prakasa’s speech in Legislative Assembly debate on the Finance Bill. Sri Prakasa who described the Finance Member, J. P. Grigg, as “the God of Capitalism and Imperialism” was shown to be praying to the ‘trinity’ J. C. Nixon, Finance Secretary, J. P. Grigg and J. B. Taylor, Governor of Reserve Bank of India in the following words:

“To the Glory of our Lord J. C.
For the Love of Grigg and
The Fellowship of Holy Taylor.—Amen”
97. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
April 1, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I got your two letters, one yesterday and one today. Of course the Punjab khadi work must be put right. You should go into it thoroughly and let me know the result of your enquiry.

The Hindi books have to be paid for. I am glad you and Vasumati¹ like the selection. Will you write to Brijkishan Chandiwala, Katra Khushalrai, Delhi, for the bill? I got them through him but examined them personally. I told you, you need not keep them all but keep what you and V. like. What about Pierre?

Why should you not drive out and walk barefoot on soft ground? You must have exercise in the fresh air. Bare-foot walking will do good to the toe. Of course if you had been with me the toe would have been set right without difficulty. Quackery is a good thing at times.

I do not know why Mira says the weather here is bad. Of course it has rained here outside the season. I am well. Weight 114.

Love

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3772. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6928

98. LETTER TO MOOLCHAND AGRAWAL

April 1, 1937

BHAI MOOLCHANDJI,

I do remember having quoted quite a number of sayings from Satyarth Prakash but I do not desire any public discussion now. Even when I wrote them, it resulted in considerable harm and the Arya Samaj suffered some injustice. If you send me a copy of Satyarth Prakash, I shall certainly be able to extract the remarks in support of my contention. My opinion has undergone no change. Still it does in no way imply that my reverence for Swami Dayanand has lessened, only it is not blind.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 763

¹ Vasumati Pandit, daughter in-law of Navalram Pandya, a Gujarati writer
99. LET T ER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWAL A

April 1, 1937

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I got your letter yesterday on my return from Madras. It is unworthy of you to hold that I discourage you from joining me because of your faults: moreover, it is unjust to me. I have forbidden you from coming simply because I think living with me would be an idle waste of time. But if you have no peace otherwise, you may certainly come here and stay as long as you deem it fit. What would happen if your health suffered? Even this point may be overlooked for the time being. This much then for your living with me.

Now for your predicament. I think you should get married. There is no grave error attached to marrying; every widower does it, which is certainly better than continually harbouring lustful thoughts.

It is difficult to pronounce any opinion on wealth. I would only say this much that even the earning of wealth can be a mode of service, and in that too some ethical restraints must be observed and the prescribed rule should be applied to money-making and the wealth should be as far as possible used for the benefit of society.

Your anguish increases as you try to work beyond your strength. Ethics should not be misinterpreted in any way. The rest on meeting you. Your letter is being returned.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2455

100. LET T ER TO AMTUSSALAAM

April 1, 1937

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUL SALAAM,

I write this letter in Urdu for I know that you find my Urdu letters less difficult to decipher. I have your letter. Convey the following to your brother’s wife: “Although I know you people only through Amtul Salaam, she has made me so well acquainted with you that I feel as if you were my relatives. How good it was that Amtul reached there in time! I hope you are better now. May God grant you a quick recovery.”

The food you give to her is quite good. She should be given greens too. Give her hip-baths. I had a letter from Kanti. He is to go to Mysore. For the time being he will be in Rajkot. He will go to Mysore at the end of April. Possibly he might go to Trivandrum for a few days. Devdas has permitted him. Manu’s marriage will take place in Segaon and Kanti is bound to come there then. I leave here on the 14th instant returning on the 25th. You may come over whenever it suits you. I am very glad to learn that you are keeping well. When you are perfectly fit I shall be able to extract work from you to my heart’s content. I returned yesterday from Madras. There was a lot of work there this time.

1 She was ailing in Indore.

VOL.71: 25 FEBRUARY, 1937-5 JULY, 1937 93

Let your brother’s wife have abdominal mud-packs at night; they ought to benefit her a great deal. Papamma came to Madras but Saraswati could not come. She is happy, though. I shall not read this again.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Urdu: G.N. 377

101. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

SEGAON, April 2, 1937

BAPA,

You did very very well in writing to me. Your letter came to me as a surprise. I had a talk with Malkani, though Ghanshyamdas had asked me not to tell him, and suggested to him to be ready to leave Harijan Niwas. I then informed Ghanshyamdas. Of course I made it clear that I did not find Malkani’s work altogether useless, but that there would be no difficulty at all in removing him. He then said he was himself doubtful but he would see and think over it. I am sending your letter to him. I am not insisting at all [on keeping him]. You also may discuss the matter with him.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1175
102. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

April 2, 1937

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

What is this! I do not in the least insist on keeping Malkani. If his leaving brings greater benefit to the Harijan Niwas it is our duty promptly to remove him from there. Hence whatever is good may be done.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 8030. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

103. HINDI PRACHAR AND PURITY

On the 26th ultimo there was the convocation of the Hindi Prachar University for giving certificates to those young men and women who had passed its final examination. I was invited to present the certificates to the graduates. They had to take a threefold vow which pledged them to the spread of Hindi-Hindustani, service of the motherland and personal purity for the good name of the University. I drew the special attention of the graduates to the last two parts of the pledge. The authors of the pledge, however, had a special intention in inserting the clauses about service and personal purity. They were evidently of opinion that if the young men and women who passed through the institution spread Hindi in the spirit of service, and if their personal purity was assured, these two factors would enhance the prestige of the graduates and they would themselves be the best advertising media for popularizing Hindi-Hindustani. I therefore reminded them of the pledge that they had just taken. In order to enforce my argument, I quoted to the graduates the instance of the reported fall of a Hindi teacher who had already damaged the cause of Hindi prachar. When I referred to this report I had little thought of what was in store for me.

For the morning following I had a letter placed in my hands giving detailed information of the fall from purity of Pandit Harihar

1 Vide “Speech at Dakshin Bharat Hindi Prachar Sabha, Madras”, 26-3-1937
Sharma, the prime author of the pledge and the Secretary of the Sabha. He is also a member of the Satyagraha Ashram from its foundation. He and his wife qualified themselves for Hindi prachar work. He has been for years the soul of the Hindi movement in the South. At the Ashram he was held in high esteem. He was easily among those who were always regarded above suspicion, above reproach. I could not therefore believe the letter. I spoke to him the next morning; and though he resisted the imputation for a while, the concealment became too unbearable for him and he confessed everything. According to the Ashram code he gave me permission to refer to the sin in public. I at once broke the news to the executive. They were unprepared for the stunning news. Pandit Sharma tendered resignation on the ground of the fall. The executive will have accepted the resignation and the administration will have been overhauled. Kakasaheb stayed in Madras to advise the executive of the Hindi Prachar Sabha.

But for me the matter does not end there. It may be thought that events like this do not need publicity. Those who think so evidently do not know the full facts. The institution with which I am intimately connected have to deal with masses of mankind, both men and women. They work through hundreds of volunteers. These have no authority but the moral. The volunteer workers inspire confidence because purity of personal life is assumed about them. Their influence will wane immediately they lose credit for purity. Publicity has never harmed the institutions or the persons involved in sin.

It behoves the workers throughout India to learn the lesson from Pandit Sharma’s fall that they must be ever watchful of themselves and not be found napping and unready to resist when the enemy assails them. This remark applies perhaps with greater force to Hindi teachers in the South than to others. There is no purdah there. Girls there have been found to be more interested in Hindi than boys. Teachers by reason of their very occupation exercise over their pupils a moral authority which disarms suspicion and creates a confidence which would ordinarily be wanting.

Indeed a suggestion has already been made to the effect that in order to be fool-proof the Hindi Prachar Sabha should stop private tuition of girls altogether. I have not been able to subscribe to the view. Lapses will take place no matter how careful one is. There cannot, therefore, be overcarefulness. But to stop private tuition of girls is to admit moral bankruptcy. There is no warrant for panic. So far as I know, the Hindi teachers in general have done their work without blemish in the matter of personal purity. I have not suppressed from the public any proved lapses. We may not invite temptations nor may we shut ourselves in iron cages in order to avoid them altogether. We must be prepared to face them when they come uninvited. Sharma fell because he invited temptation. He trusted himself too much.

1 Vide also “Letter to Prabhavati”, 30-3-1937

Let the public that is interested in Hindi prachar work not be curious about the future of Pandit Sharma or about the details of his error. He will be with me whilst he is reforming himself. His disappearance from the organization does not mean the close of a career of service. Indeed if this fall has taught him the lesson of his life, he will have lost nothing nor Hindi prachar a worker of his calibre. To err is human, to own up one’s error and to so act as to be proof against it is manly. Let us hope that he has the manly quality necessary for the task and pray that he may become a better servant for the fall. Some of the saints of the world had been notorious sinners.

_Harijan_, 3-4-1937

104. AN UNFORTUNATE DOCUMENT

Fourteen highly educated Indian Christians occupying important social positions have issued a joint manifesto setting forth their views on the missionary work among Harijans. The document has been published in the Indian Press. I was disinclined to publish it in Harijan, as after having read it more than once I could not bring myself to say anything in its favour and I felt that a critical review of it might serve no useful purpose. But I understand that my criticism is expected and will be welcomed no matter how candid and strong it may be.

The reader will find the manifesto published in full in this issue. The heading ' is also the authors’. They seem to have fallen between two stools in their attempt to sit on both. They have tried to reconcile the irreconcilable. If one section of Christians has been aggressively open and militant, the other represented by the authors of the manifesto is courteously patronizing. They would not be aggressive for the sake of expedience. The purpose of the manifesto is not to condemn unequivocally the method of converting the illiterate and the ignorant but to assert the right of preaching the Gospel to the millions of Harijans. The key to the manifesto is contained in paragraphs 7 and 8. This is what one reads in paragraph 7:

Men and women individually and in family or village groups will continue to seek the fellowship of the Christian Church. That is the real movement of the Spirit of God. And no power on earth can stem that tide. It will be the duty of the Christian Church in India to receive such seekers after the truth as it is in Jesus Christ and provide for them instruction and spiritual nurture. The Church will cling to its right to receive such people into itself from whatever religious group they may come. It will cling to the further right to go about in these days of irreligion and materialism to awaken spiritual hunger in all.

These few sentences are striking instance of how the wish becomes father to the thought. It is an unconscious process but not on that account less open to criticism. Men and women do not seek the fellowship of the Christian Church. Poor Harijans are no better than the others. I wish they had real spiritual hunger. Such as it is, they satisfy by visits to the temples, however crude they may be. When the missionary of another religion goes to them, he goes like any vendor of goods. He has no special spiritual merit that will distinguish him from those to whom he goes. He does, however, possess material goods which he promises to those who will come to his fold. Then mark, the duty of the Christian Church in India turns into a right. Now when duty-becomes a right it ceases to be a duty. Performance of a duty requires one quality—that of suffering and introspection. Exercise of a right requires a quality that gives the power to impose one’s will upon the resister through sanctions devised by the claimant or the law whose aid he invokes in the exercise of his right. I have the duty of paying my debt, but I have no right to thrust the owed coppers (say) into the pocket of an unwilling creditor. The duty of taking spiritual message is performed by the messenger becoming a fit vehicle by prayer and fasting. Conceived as a right, it may easily become an imposition on unwilling parties.

Thus the manifesto, undoubtedly designed to allay suspicion and soothe the ruffled feelings of Hindus, in my opinion, fails to accomplish its purpose. On the contrary, it leaves a bad taste in the mouth. I venture to suggest to the authors that they need to re-examine their position in the light of my remarks. Let them recognize the fundamental difference between rights and duties. In the spiritual sphere, there is no such thing as a right.

_Harijan, 3-4-1937_

105. OBSTACLES IN THE WAY OF A GOSEVAK

The secretary of a goshala writes:¶

It is my firm belief that by making good use of the hide of a dead animal religion is not violated, nor should sanatanist Hindus feel offended over this. Yes, it is certainly a lapse of religion if full use of the hide of a dead animal is not made because it increases cow-slaughter. The price of a cow decreases day by day and so cows are easily sold and taken straight to slaughter-houses. If we consider goseva as an inseparable part of Hindu religion, we can neither look down upon the tanners’ profession nor consider them untouchable. The cow dies solely from our ignorance. Dharma cannot be protected by merely talking about it; that can be done only by understanding the meaning of the Shastras and by practising it. I have written several times that if the goshalas in India know their duty and adhere to it faithfully, then cow-slaughter can be done away with and cow’s milk will be easily available to everyone. There is no exaggeration of any kind in this statement. Almost all cows are owned by Hindus. If they adhere to their dharma and refrain from selling cows which is the cause of cow-slaughter, there can be no cow-slaughter. Let every goshala become an ideal dairy, that is, self-reliant, and let experts on dairying and animal husbandry work in it. A self-reliant goshala must prosper from day to day. It can also make proper use of the hides of the dead cattle. This amounts to saying that with the increase in cattle wealth, our knowledge will also grow; and this will be a great help to us in reducing unemployment in the country. Even if one goshala will accomplish this task, other goshalas will follow it.

[From Hindi]

_Harijan Sevak, 3-4-1937_

¶ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had said that till then the practice of the goshala was to give away dead cattle without any charge. However, in that year they had had the hides removed and sold, which had resulted in great dissatisfaction among orthodox Hindus.
106. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

(SEGAON,)
April 3, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I hope you are following my prescription about your toe. Local earth bandage should also be applied.

Of course you won’t sign the big book¹, if it degrades you in your own estimation. The A. I. V. I. A. meeting accepted Jajuji’s² resignation and did not appoint anyone else. Kumarappa did not shine at the meeting. But it is all right. The things will shape themselves.

Here it is like monsoon.

Love

TYRANT

[PS.]

You have not replied to Kishorelal’s letter.

From the original: C.W. 3773. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6929

107. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

(SEGAON,)
April 3, 1937

MY DEAR KU.,

I have glanced through the report. I have removed the paragraph about bread-making. It is trivial. Otherwise it is readable though it still does not answer the picture I drew of an ideal report. But that can only happen in the next [report].

I return, too, Shah’s note. As soon as you are ready, you will let me have your note. I shall announce that none is fit enough for the prize, if such is your joint finding.³

From a photostat: G.N. 10115

¹ The reference, presumably, is to the report on the Punjab khadi work.
² Shrikrishnadas Jaju
³ Vide “Prize Essay on Barter System”, 26-8-1935 K. T. Shah, V. L. Mehta and J. C. Kumarappa, the board of examiners, found that none of the three essays that were received fulfilled the conditions laid down. Vide also “Essays on Barter System”, 1-5-1937.
108. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

April 3, 1937

MY DEAR KU.,

I have seen both Bhagwandas and Shankerrao. I have not yet reached the bottom. Shankerrao is not of the School. He is Choudhury’s find. Bhagwandas won’t go just yet. He assured me he won’t go without my permission.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10116

109. LETTER TO KOTWAL

SEGAON,
April 4, 1937

BHAI KOTWAL,

I had received your letter. Your eyes must have been completely cured.

There was nothing in the Bharatiya [Sahitya] Parishad\(^1\) to make it a success. One may, therefore, console oneself as one likes.

I shall see what you do after your eyes are completely cured. Let alone an order by me, if you can remember to have yielded to any request of mine, tell me when you did so. I do not recollect any such instance.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3600

110. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKAR H. PAREKH

April 4, 1937

BHAI PRABHASHANKAR,

As I myself was not in a position to do anything, I had sent your letter to Bhai Nanalal\(^2\). There was, therefore, no need for me to write anything. It is not at all true that your position is like that of a nut

\(^1\) Held at Madras on March 27 and 28, 1937; \textit{vide} “Speech at Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, Madras- I”, 27-3-1937 and “Speech at Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, Madras-II”, 28-3-1937

\(^2\) Nanalal Kalidas Jasani held in a nut-cracker. Or if it is, then as a nut renders more service by letting itself be held in a nut-cracker, so let the case be with you.

_Vandemataram from_

M. K. GANDHI

SHRI PRABHASHANKAR HARCHANDBHAI DERASHERI RAJKOT (KATHIWAR)

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8768

111. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

_April 4, 1937_

BHAI MUNSHI,

What happened to the committee appointed by the Gujarat Sahitya Parishad to revise its constitution? The matter should be finalized. The Governors say that the condition demanded by Congress leaders is not in conformity with the Reforms Act. Have you examined what legal validity their objection has? If you feel that what the Governors say is right, then you will have to convince me. If you think that the Governors could have accepted the Congress condition without violating the Act, you ought to publish that opinion under the signatures of some good lawyers there. Please attend to this urgently.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 7613. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

112. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

_April 4, 1937_

CHI. JETHALAL,

I have received your well-composed letter. You seem to have got properly involved in the ghee trade. Do not let that business ruin you. It is good that you have begun with butter. Ultimately you will have to begin with milk and I have no objection if you do so. I have to some extent even put into practice what I am thinking at present. You will know more when I can implement all the ideas. If you are coming to Hudli you can ask me further. I take it you will be coming.
If you cannot get money from anywhere to meet the expenses of the case, write to me for it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 9861. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat

113. LETTER TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

[April] 4, 1937

Bhai Rajendra Prasad,

I have your letter. What has been done regarding Hindi-Hindustani has been well done. A start should certainly be made towards putting into effect the statement that has been issued. The suggestion about a conference is good but in the atmosphere that prevails I have some doubt about its success. But what can one do about it? Success is bound to come sooner or later if we make the effort. So you must continue your endeavours as and when you find the opportunity.

There is no cause for worry on account of my health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 9881. Courtesy: Rajendra Prasad

114. SILENCE-DAY NOTE TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

[Before April 5, 1937]

I still maintain my objection to Kamaladevi. You can have Mridula instead if you want two women. There must be other women in the A.I.C.C. Maulana would remain if pressed. I would like Jamnalalji to be spared. But that is a matter between you, Rajen Babu and him. I do not mind too many from U.P. You can’t help it. I take it you will discuss the list with those whom you want to retain. I can’t think of anyone else or anything else.

1 The letter appears to have been written after the meeting of the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad at Madras; vide “Speech at Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, Madras- I”, 27-3-1937 and “Speech at Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, Madras- II”, 28-3-1937

2 From the reference to Gandhiji’s objection to Kamaladevi Chattopadhyaya’s inclusion, presumably in the Congress Working Committee formed by the addressee in 1937. This is corroborated by the contents of Gandhiji letter of 5-4-1937 to the addressee wherein he mentions this note; vide “Letter To Jawaharlal Nehru”, 5-4-1937
I think I told you that I used to like her. Her ability is unquestioned. But I have known things which have worried me about her. I should unhesitatingly take Sarup. But I can understand the delicacy. Satyavati deserves the place apart from her fanaticism which makes her sometimes a dangerous ally. You may show my objection to Kamaladevi if you know her sufficiently. For I do not say this behind her back. I believe she knows my opinion. It hurts me to hold that opinion, but how can I help myself?

Therefore let not my opinion weigh with you unduly. If those whom you want do not object, you should have her. Of course I am partial to Mridula. But Satyavati has a longer record of service and has from a public point of view a better right. Mridula is a brick so far as work and loyalty are concerned. She will be the youngest member, if the choice falls on her. If I had to make the selection of course the choice will be Satyavati almost for the reasons that make you exclude Sarup.

From the original: Gandhi-Nehru Papers, Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

115. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
April 5, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your letter. Mahadev has gone to his step-mother about his sister’s marriage. He returns tomorrow.

Mahadev had a very long chat with Subhas Chandra Bose who was looking none too well. Have you not written to him after he became free?

Your Hindi writing is excellent. Never mind the speed, it will come by practice. You should persevere as you have begun.

I am stupid at remembering things. You will now have to bear the burden of my forgetfulness. “Bear ye one another’s burdens.”

All the accommodation here is proving too small for those whom I must take. Vasumati is here, Bal² is coming and Amtul will soon follow.

Yes Kanu was with me in Madras and will be with me when I go to Belgaum. Manu will be married in Belgaum. My address there

¹Vijayalakshmi Pandit
²Bal Kalelkar, son of D. B. Kalelkar. would be: Hudli, District Belgaum, which I reach on 15th, latest 16th. I leave here 13th, latest 14th.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3774. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6930

116. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

April 5, 1937

MY DEAR AGATHA,

I write after ages as it were. Even this is being written against time. But I have not starved you for the news you should know. I have used the cable.¹

Herewith two enclosures. They may be of use.

I do not mind the Governors not having done the thing. But it has been done in such a shabby manner! And the toy ministries² What a lie! Almost without exception the Anglo-Indian Press had welcomed the resolution³. What has happened now to change their attitude? The dishonesty of their argument is transparent. It has acerbated almost every Indian whose opinion counts. Bhulabhai’s is a lawyer’s opinion. This autonomy is still-born. But the teachers of the world teach us to pray when human effort proves vain. I believe in them and therefore do not lose hope but am praying. Jawaharlal is on a sick-bed.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1496

¹ Vide “Cable to Agatha Harrison”, 15-3-1937 and Cable to Agatha Harrison”, 27-3-1937
² As the Governors had refused to give the “assurances”, the majority party in the six Provinces had declined the invitation to form Government and as a result the Governors formed interim ministries with the help of non-Congress members.
³ Of March 16; vide “Extract from A.I.C.C. Resolution
117. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

Unrevised

April 5, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

Why should you become ill? Having become ill, why will you not give yourself rest? I thought you were going to steal away somewhere after Indu came. Please give my love to her when she arrives. I must send her a line with this.

Now about your grouse. Somehow or other everything I say and even perhaps do jars on you. Silence was impossible. I thought in the context the words courtesy and discourtesy came out all right. Yours is the first note of complaint from the Congress side about the statement\(^1\). I could not help myself if the complaint was universal. I am glad you have written. You must bear with me till my understanding becomes clear or your fears are dispelled. I apprehend no harm from my statement. Is there anything at the back of your mind that I do not understand?

Kamaladevi travelled with us from Wardha to Madras. She was coming from Delhi. She came to my compartment twice and had long chats. At last she wanted to know why Sarojini Devi was excluded\(^2\), why Laxmipati was being kept away by Rajaji, why Anasuyabai was excluded, and so on. I then told her of my part in her exclusion, and told her almost all that [I] could remember of the note I wrote for you on that silent Monday. Of course, I told her I had no hand in Sarojini’s exclusion at first or inclusion after. I told her also that Rajaji, so far as I knew, had nothing to do with L’s exclusion. I thought you should know this.

I hope this will find you fully restored. You don’t say anything about Mother.

Love.

BAPU

Also A bunch of Old Letters, pp. 223-4.

---

\(^1\) Vide “Statement to the Press”, 30-3-1937

\(^2\) From the Congress Working Committee
118. LETTER TO INDIRA NEHRU

April 5, 1937

CHI. INDU,

You must have grown quite plump by now. Write to me. You will certainly see me, won’t you? May God grant you long life—a sevika you already are.

Blessing from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: Gandhi-Indira Gandhi Correspondence. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

119. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

April 5, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

What a disappointing letter? What is wrong with you? Why should you be unhappy. Why need you worry? How can one have one’s way in everything? Dharma requires us to go on doing cheerfully whatever service we get an opportunity of doing without seeking it. What then will be happiness and misery? Is there anything in this world which can be done with any security? When life itself is short and extremely uncertain, what can we say of our activities? Only dharma abides; it is imperishable because it is related to the atman. And dharma lies in truth and ahimsa. Whatever we do while following it is proper. And what if, in doing it, we get daily something new to do or have to wander from place to place every day? What difference does it make whether we have a broom in our hand or a pen? We should be content with whatever comes to us unsought. We should bring credit to whatever work we do. Stay there as long as Father desires. Go to Sitab Diyara if you think it necessary and to Ahmedabad when Jayaprakash permits you to do so. Who would force you to stay on if you did not feel happy there?

I have written to Poona regarding Harijan. Vasumati arrived yesterday. She will stay for some time. Amtul is at Rajpura. Khan Saheb has come. Bal will come the day after tomorrow. Manu will be married at Belgaum. I have to reach Belgaum on the 15th or the 16th.
[Address:] Hudli, Belgaum District.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3490

120. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

April 5, 1937

BAPA,

Here is a telegram from Ghanshyamdas. What is this? Whatever it is, get it clarified. Probably Ghanshyamdas has already done so.

You are transferring the responsibility regarding Bharuch to me,\(^1\) but I do not mind. I am not the person who will feel ashamed of anything. I do not know, though, what I shall be able to do. I will have to consider how far my intervention would be proper.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1176

121. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

April 5, 1937

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

It is not as if I did not understand what you said. I have only given you the natural solutions.\(^2\) If marrying and money-making seem more painful and you are not indulging in self-delusion, you have to bear the mental conflict. Lasting peace can be attained only by satsang. You should not live as a recluse. There are two kinds of satsang: one the company of good men and second the reading and study of good books and conducting oneself on the pattern enjoined therein.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2454

---

\(^1\) The addressee had been appointed an arbitrator consequent upon a strike by the sanitary workers of Bharuch Municipality; vide also letters to Vallabhbhai Patel of June 19, 1937, and July 22, 1937.

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Brijkrishna Chandiwala”, 1-4-1937
122. LETTER TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

April 5, 1937

BHAI RAJENDRA BABU,

The Harijan brethren have evinced great courage and sacrifice.¹ I cannot adequately congratulate them. On my part I feel that all that has happened has happened for the good. How has it affected our people?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 9879. Courtesy: Rajendra Prasad

123. LETTER TO BAHLOL KHAN

[Before April 6, 1937]

Do not fear I can ever oppose Urdu. Of course I know not how and in what other way I can help or work for its progress. But I think the very fact that I am not opposing it is enough—I don’t think I could do anything more beyond that.

The Bombay Chronicle, 6-4-1937

124. TELEGRAM TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

WARDHAGANI,
April 6, 1937

RAJENDRA PRASAD
SADAQUAT ASHRAM, PATNA

WIRED BARDOLOI AS FOLLOWS: ADVICE CONGRESSMEN ABSTAIN UNDER WRITTEN PROTEST BY LEADER AFTER CONSULTATION CONGRESS MEMBERS SINCE CONGRESS ENTERED ASSEMBLY EXPOSE FUTILITY CONSTITUTION AND SINCE PROVINCES WHERE CONGRESS HAD MAJORITY IT HAS BEEN FLOUTED. CONGRESS MEMBERS MUST DECLINE ATTEND FORMAL FUNCTIONS WHERE NO EFFECTIVE OPPOSITION COULD BE SHOWN WITHOUT UNBECOMING DEMONSTRATION.

Dr. Rajendra Prasad: Correspondence and Select Documents, Vol. 1, p. 36

¹ According to Mahadev Desai (Harijan 17-5-1937), Jagjivan Ram and Raghunandan Ram had refused to accept office in the Bihar Ministry formed by Mahommed Yunus, leader of Independent Muslim Party.
125. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
April 6, 1937

BHAIHSHI MUNSHI,

The performance of the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad was nothing to be proud of. And how could it be that you, the father of the Parishad, did not attend? I was only in the background and Kaka was busy at that very time with many other things. In these circumstances, I feel that it is nothing but sinful to propose a big scheme. Personally I would be ready to wind up the Parishad even on my own responsibility. Or we should remain satisfied with whatever we three can achieve with our own sincere efforts.

I did not at all blame you for not being able to come to Madras.

Do invite suggestions regarding the constitution of Gujarat Sahitya Parishad. Have you received any from those for whose satisfaction the committee is formed? It would be better to announce a date for the meeting of the committee.2

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7614. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

126. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON,
April 7, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I got your letter. I am replying to you at the Rajkot address. Paparamma was not in a position to go to Belgaum. Ramchandran is quite ill. He had an attack of pleurisy. He is better now but is taking rest. His nerves also have become weak. He did not permit Saraswati to come because he is still afraid that her studies may be disturbed.

It is surprising that your thumb is still not cured. Did you try mud treatment? If the thumb is bandaged while writing, you will find

1 The first Akhil Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad, held at Nagpur, on April 21 and 25, 1936, was a result of the efforts of the addressee and D. B. Kalelkar.
2 Vide also letter to the addressee,”Letter to K. M. Munshi”, 4-4-1937 it much easier to write. I myself had tried a mud bandage as help in writing with the tired thumb, and I had been able to continue working.

Manu has spared you and so it will not be necessary for you to come to Belgaum just for the sake of the wedding. But you probably know that Ba herself is coming there. If, therefore, your stay there for a few days is likely to satisfy your aunts, you can come to Belgaum. And from there you can go to Mysore. If it can be arranged this way, you can be present at the wedding and, after the function at Belgaum is over, you can go to Mysore.

Devdas’s letter is all right. I do not remember to have used the word ‘strong’, though I cannot say, either, that I didn’t use it. Even if I did, what is the harm? Even if your desire is no more than a simple wish, there is no harm in satisfying it. Going to Mysore should depend on your own will. It should be enough if Devdas gives his consent. If you do not wish, why should you go? I am firm in my view. I personally prefer Mysore to Bombay, both from the point of view of the climate and of peace of mind. I do not know whether education there will be of the standard of Wilson College. But according to me that depends more on the student. I have come across many dullards educated in Wilson College and very intelligent Mysoreans who have never gone out of Mysore. But the best course is that you should go to Mysore and see things for yourself and then decide as you like.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7319. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

127. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

April 7, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter just now. How can I console you? Why are you frightened? Can you see anybody who has no worries? Everybody has some trouble or other. Is even Jayaprakash at peace? Is Jawaharlal? Or Rajendra Babu? What more worries have you than they? Whether you stay with Father or with in-laws or with me, everywhere you have to do service, haven’t you? If you think that their cases are different in that they invite worries voluntarily, then even that is not proper. They also have to submit to others’ wishes. We are all dependent on others even as much as we are independent. In fact you are very fortunate. Stop worrying now. As for going to Mridula, do as Jayaprakash says. If he permits you, then go. Don’t go if he says no.
I understand as regards Patna. Go to Siwan soon. But if you find that your duty requires you to stay in Patna, then do so and remain calm. From Anna’s fall, we should only learn to remain vigilant. Amtul’s address is: Judge Wahid Saheb, Rajpura, Patiala State.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3497

128. LETTER TO BHUJANGILAL CHHAYA

April 7, 1937

CHU. BHUJANGILAL,

I have your letter and also the copy of your letter to Chandulalbhai. You are very ambitious. If you wish to be successful you must improve your handwriting. One who makes an effort and is careful even about very small matters will remain so about bigger things also. But the belief that one who is careless about little things can be careful about bigger things is a fallacy.

You are a worshipper of non-violence. Politeness is an integral part of non-violence because impoliteness causes pain, politeness does not. A boy who addresses his mother as his father’s wife is telling the truth but as his language is rude it is violent and is frowned upon in good society.

If you really approve of my way of working, you should be well versed in the science of khadi. You should know what is goseva and put it into practice and daily serve the so-called untouchables. If you do these and such other things in which I am engaged, you will clearly see your path.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

129. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

April 9, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

You are struggling bravely to set things right with the A. I. S. A. branch there. No one can be sent from here to put things straight. You should have Bhatia also in front of you and then advise Gopichand. I see no other way. You must not strain yourself in the attempt to undo the tangle.
Your Hindi is going forward by leaps and bounds. I see that very soon you will write correct and chaste Hindi. The few sentences you have written are really perfect and the hand-writing is equally good.

Tell me, do you read and understand Japji¹ in the original? If so I would like you to translate literally one verse every day. I am using both the translations you left for me. None satisfies my taste. This work ought not to take you more than five minutes daily, i.e., if you know Japji thoroughly. If you do not, you need not trouble yourself about it.

What you tell me about the Tanning Institute is interesting. If they have a prospectus, send it on to me.

It is decided that we leave on 14th for Belgaum. The station is Suldhal.

Khan Saheb will go with us. Manu will be married there on 18th.

Have you tried my remedy for the toe?

I do hope this writing will not fade before it reaches you. I have added too much water.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3600. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6409

130. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

April 9, 1937

DEAR AGATHA,

Of course you should be absolutely frank. That is the only way you will serve. Of course you will have the fullest information from here.

The situation is undoubtedly dangerous. Lord Zetland’s speech² will be bitterly resented. But you may depend upon my doing

¹ A Sikh prayer book
² In the House of Lords, Lord Zetland, Secretary of State for India, in answer to Lord Lothian, who was member of the Round Table Conference and who had been associated with the framing of the Act of 1935, had inter alia said: “Under Section 52 of the Act, certain obligations are imposed on the Governors (among them being the obligation to safeguard the legitimate interests of the minorities). . . . Governors could not give, within the framework of the Constitution, the assurance which was asked of them, and that Mr. Gandhi is in error in assuming they could.” (A Decade of Indo-British Relations, 1937-47, p. 33) “Mr. Gandhi’s statement dated March 30 [vide pp. 36-8], was so astonishing that it appeared to be explicable only on the everything possible to prevent a crisis. But the speech invites a crisis. Mr. Heath\(^1\) has sent a cable advising interview with the Viceroy. Lord Z’s speech seems to bar the Government. And in any case it has to be with Jawaharlal. I have shown in my statement the only possible way out.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1497

\[131. \text{LETTER TO RABINDRANATH TAGORE}\]

\[April 9, 1937\]

DEAR GURUDEV,

I have just received your letter of 5th instant. Had I not to go to Belgaum on the very date you will have opening ceremony\(^2\), I would most certainly have come not only for the ceremony but also to see you and Santiniketan which I have not seen now for years. As it is I shall be with you in spirit when Jawaharlal will be performing the ceremony. May the Chinese Hall be a symbol of living contact between China and India.

The letter you wrote to me over that momentary misunderstanding lies in my jacket as a treasure.\(^3\) It brought tears of joy to my eyes. It was so worthy of you.

With love and respects,

\[Yours,\]

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 4647. Also Twenty Years of the Visva-Bharati Cheena Bhawana, 1937-1957, p. 16

\(^1\) Carl Heath, a British Quaker, President of Indian Conciliation Group, London

\(^2\) On April 14, of the ‘Cheena Bhavana’, a research department of Visva-Bharti

\(^3\) Vide “Letter to Rabindranath Tagore”, 2-3-1937
132. LETTER TO TAN YUN SHAN

[April 9, 1937]

DEAR FRIEND,

Many thanks for your letter. I have written to Gurudev expressing my sorrow over my utter inability to attend the function. Yes, indeed, we want cultural contact between the two nations. Yours is a worthy effort. May it bring fruit.

Yours sincerely,

Twenty Years of the Visva-Bharati Cheena Bhavana; 1937-1957, p. 16

133. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

April 9, 1937

BHAI MUNSHI,

You finished the job very quickly and did it very well. I made the best use of it immediately yesterday and will do so again in future.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI KANAIYALAL M. MUNSHI
26 RIDGE ROAD
BOMBAY

From Gujarati: C.W. 7615. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

134. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

April 9, 1937

BHAI MUNSHI,

I had no intention at all of rebuking you. But about the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad when we meet. From the 16th to the 22nd I shall be in Hudli near Belgaum. On the 24th I shall be back at Wardha. We can meet thereafter. You may, if you like, fix a meeting of the committee then. I am returning U. Joshi’s letter. We want to convene a meeting of the committee without laying down any conditions. Ask the members what dates will suit them. I have to leave this place on the 14th.

1 From the reference to the letter to Rabindranath Tagore; vide the preceding item.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7616. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

135. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

April 9, 1937

BHAI BAPA,

Your explanatory letter is incomplete. Where was the room for misunderstanding? As desired by you,² I had sent to Ghanshyamdas your letter regarding him. You say that he was not as much pained as you had thought. He writes that not only was he not pained at all but that you two held the same view. Thus Ghanshyamdas’s letter would suggest that a mountain ought not to have been made out of a molehill. Moreover you say, “Please forgive me if you have been pained in regard to this matter.” Suppose, being a votary of the Gita, I have not been pained at all, still should not one who has made a mountain out of a molehill apologize? This is for your entertainment, as also by way of philosophy.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1177

136. LETTER TO SARASWATI

April 9, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

I have your letter. You have become very lazy. Did you not promise to write regularly? You have not kept the promise. I am getting your letter corrected and returning it. Understand all the errors well and rectify them. Paparamma came and I was happy to meet her though I was unhappy that you could not come. But I got over the disappointment on understanding the reason for your not coming.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6156. Also C.W. 3429. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

¹ Umashankar Joshi, Gujarati poet and man of letters
² Vide “Letter to Amritlal V. Thakkar”, 2-4-1937
During our morning and evening walks, Khan Saheb Abdul Ghaffar Khan and I often talk on matters of common interest. Having travelled in the Frontier territories as far as Kabul and beyond and knowing the Frontier tribes well, he often describes to me the habits and customs of these simple folk. He tells me that these tribesmen who are untouched by the so-called civilization live principally on maize and barley, bread and lentils supplemented at times by buttermilk. They get meat but rarely. The only way I could account for their well-known hardiness was their open-air life and invigorating climate. Khan Saheb promptly added:

That is not enough. The secret of their strength lies in their chaste lives. They marry, both men and women, after full maturity. Unfaithfulness, adultery or unmarried love are practically unknown. Union out of wedlock is punishable by death. The injured party has the right to take the life of the wrongdoer.

If this chastity is so universal as Khan Saheb describes it, it furnishes us in India a lesson that we should take to heart. I suggested to Khan Saheb that if the fine physique of the tribesmen was largely due to their continence, there must be perfect co-operation between the mind and the body. For, if the mind hankered after satisfaction of the flesh and the body resisted, there must be tremendous waste of vital energy, leaving the body thoroughly exhausted. Khan Saheb agreed that that was a fair deduction and that, so far as he was able to judge, he felt that the tribesmen were so habituated to continence outside marriage that young men and women never seemed to desire sexual satisfaction outside marriage. Khan Saheb also told me that the women in the tribal areas never observed the purdah, there was no false prudery there, the women were fearless, roamed about anywhere freely, were well able to take care of themselves and defend their honour without seeking or needing male protection.

Khan Saheb, however, admits that this continence not being based on reason or enlightened faith breaks down when these men and women of the hills come in contact with civilized or soft life where departure from the custom carries no punishment and public opinion looks upon unfaithfulness and adultery with more or less indifference. This opens up reflections which I must not discuss just now. My purpose in writing this just now is to seek corroboration and further light from those who know these tribesmen, as Khan Saheb does, and to suggest to young men and women of the plains that observance of continence, if it is really natural to the tribesmen, as Khan Saheb thinks it is, should be equally natural to us, if only we... would inhabit our thought world with the right kind of thoughts and deal summarily with the intruders. Indeed, if the right kind settle down in sufficiently large numbers, the intruders will be crowded out no doubt. The process requires courage. But self-restraint never accrues to the faint-hearted. It is the beautiful fruit of watchfulness and ceaseless effort in the form of prayer and fasting. The prayer is not vain repetition nor fasting mere starvation of the body. Prayer has to come from the heart which knows God by faith, and fasting is abstinence from evil or injurious thought, activity or food. Starvation of the body when the mind thinks of a multiplicity of dishes is worse than useless.

_Harijan_, 10-4-1937

138. _KHADI IN SWADESHI EXHIBITIONS_

In all other parts of India where swadeshi exhibitions permitting mill-cloth are held the A. I. S. A. has as a rule refused to exhibit khadi. And the rule has answered the purpose for which it was framed. From U.P., however, the pressure has come to relax the rule. But I have hitherto resisted the temptation. U.P. khadi workers made a special reference for their guidance. They are almost all Congressmen no less ardent than the others, but they have dedicated themselves to the Congress service through its constructive and the most difficult programme, khadi. Appreciating their difficulty I referred the question to Shri Jawaharlal Nehru for his opinion. I have received the following reply\(^1\) from him:

I have your letter of the 5th March enquiring about khadi at exhibitions. This matter has been repeatedly discussed by us in the course of the past year ever since my return from Europe. . . .

The question you have put is not easy to answer. The average khadi worker seems to be of opinion that khadi should not be exhibited if mill-cloth is allowed there. Other Congress workers are usually of a contrary opinion on the ground that at such exhibitions there is usually a good sale of khadi. Obviously the opinion of the khadi worker, who is presumed to be an expert at his job and who is anxious to push khadi, should be almost final. I would therefore hesitate to give my decision against him unless I succeed in convincing him. I imagine that from a certain long-distance view it is better even to incur some loss now so as to avoid producing any confusion in the public mind as to what khadi is and what it is not. This can only be done by adherence to the present policy of banning certified khadi sales in such exhibitions.

\(^1\) Only extracts are reproduced here.

At the same time, I find that uncertified khadi is sold at such exhibitions and plenty of people patronize it. There are quite large numbers of people as you know who are not particularly keen on buying certified khadi, but who are prepared to do so if it comes their way. The point is: are we to cater for the people in any especial measure, or are we to concentrate on holding fast to those who desire to use pure khadi only? This question has not only its business side but its psychological side. Khadi has on the one hand built up a firm foundation for itself, and there is a body of men in the country who must have pure khadi whatever the cost or the trouble. At the same time khadi does not spread as rapidly as it might among other classes who only occasionally patronize it. For khadi workers the object should be to develop the khadi habit in the latter. That habit comes largely from appeals, to the mind or heart and partly from sheer habit. Ordinarily speaking, it would be a good thing to have as many casual purchasers as possible so that they may get used to buying and wearing khadi and thus develop the real habit. The present policy to some extent keeps away this casual purchaser and thus reduces the field from which regular khadi buyers might be drawn. . . .

Therefore, if you want my final opinion, I cannot give it very definitely, and because of my not being definite I must respect the opinions of others who are working for khadi. I am, however, inclined to think that it might be preferable to allow khadi to be exhibited and sold in these exhibitions under certain conditions which would prevent as far as possible (1) something else being mistaken for khadi and the distinction between khadi and mill-cloth being clearly preserved (2) the exclusion of partly foreign stuffs from the exhibition.

In the absence of final opinion which he is unable to give, he would respect the opinions of others who are working for khadi. He is, however, “inclined to think that it might be preferable to allow khadi to be exhibited and sold in these exhibitions.” My own experience, however, tells me that it is dangerous to befog the mass mind by putting khadi in juxtaposition with the gaudy mill-made cloth. It is very like putting human beings side by side with robots. Human beings may be worsted in the competition if they allow themselves to be compared to robots. Even so will khadi fare, in comparison with mill-made cloth. The planes of the two are different. The aims are opposite. Khadi gives work to all, mill-cloth gives work to some and deprives many of honest labour. Khadi serves the masses, mill-cloth is intended to serve the classes. Khadi serves labour, mill-cloth exploits it. My experience is backed by that of the khadi workers throughout India. I hope therefore that with Shri Jawaharlal Nehru the Congressmen of U.P. will respect the experience and the policy of the A. I. S. A. in preference to their own opinion, if it be against that of the A. I. S. A.

_Harijan_, 10-4-1937

139. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

WARDHA,

_April 10, 1937_

I have read Lord Lothian’s appeal\(^1\) to me with the respect it deserves. I have a vivid recollection of the talks with him among other friends. The provincial autonomy then pictured was a real stuff unlike what the present Constitution is supposed to give. Lord Zetland’s elaborate statement\(^2\) confirms my view and hardens the universal suspicion of the British statement’s intentions. So long as they wish to bolster up imperialistic designs, India, which the Congress represents, will never reconcile itself to them. I believe in friendship with Britain, not with imperialistic exploitation.

I am free to confess ignorance of the Government of India Act and a greater ignorance of the Select Committee’s Report. My advice to the Congress to adopt my resolution on a conditional acceptance of office was based on an assurance of lawyers among Congressmen that the Governors could give the required assurance without an infringement of the Act.\(^3\) I do not, therefore, need even Sir Samuel Hoare’s past declarations to support me. If, therefore, he disclaims having ever made the statement which I aver having heard him make, I accept his disclaimer without argument. The dismal fact stares India in the face that British statement imposed an Act on India against her declared wishes and then instead of leaving its interpretation to impartial tribunals impose their own upon her and call this transaction autonomy. Lawyers, Mussalman, Parsi and Hindu, whom the Government have hitherto honoured with their patronage, declared that the Governors can without an infringement give the required assurance. I regard the British statesmen’s interpretation as non-judicial, arbitrary and interested.

---

\(^{1}\) The references is to Lord Lothian’s letter to The Times; _vide_ Appendix “Lord Lothian’s Letter to The Times”, after 16-3-1937.

\(^{2}\) _Vide_ footnote 1, “Letter to Agatha Harrison”, 9-4-1937

\(^{3}\) _Vide_ also the following item.
At the same time I recognize that other lawyers give an interpretation favourable to the British Government. Therefore I invite them to appoint an arbitration tribunal of three judges of whom one will be appointed by the Congress, another by the British Government with power to the two to appoint a third to decide whether it is competent for the Governors to give the required assurance described by me. And since the legality of the present Ministries has been questioned, I would refer that question also to the proposed tribunal. There is precedent for such a course. If they would accept my proposal I would advise the Congress to do likewise.

I mean every word of my previous statement\(^1\). I want right to prevail. There is here no question of diplomacy with India. It is a question of life and death. Office will be accepted if only progress towards her goal is accepted, not otherwise. It, therefore, pains me to find Lord Zetland playing upon the old familiar tune of divide and rule. The Congress cannot exist for two days if it disregards the interests of minorities. It cannot bring about mass rule by dividing India into factions. The Congress Ministries, if they ever come into existence, will dig their own graves without the Governors’ safeguards the moment they trample upon the rights of the minorities or resort to injustice otherwise. I regret to have to say it but, to be true, I must say that Lord Zetland’s speech is that of one who is conscious of his sword rather than of his right. His Lordship is again misleading when he says that the Congress wants to be treated as a privileged body. It does not. Anyone representing a most decisive majority like the Congress would want the gentlemanly assurance that the Congress has asked for.

The Hindustan Times, 11-4-1937

140. CABLE TO AGATHA HARRISON

WARDHAGANI, April 10, 1937

AGATHA HARRISON
CARE KALOPH
LONDON

MY STATEMENT\(^2\) GIVEN AFTER GREATEST DELIBERATION IN STRICTEST TERMS NON-VIOLENCE. SEE NO CAUSE WITHDRAW

\(^1\) Vide “Statement to the Press”, 30-3-1937
\(^2\) Vide the preceding item.
141. INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT OR DISSIPATION?

During my recent wanderings in Travancore and Madras I found that most of the students and ‘intellectuals’ who came into touch with me were an instance of intellectual dissipation rather than intellectual development. The fault lies in the modern system of education which encourages this vicious tendency, misdirects the mind, and thereby hinders its development instead of helping it. My experiments in Segaon have only confirmed this impression. But they are as yet too incomplete to be cited as evidence. The views on education that I am now going to set forth have been held by me right from the time of the founding of the Phoenix settlement in South Africa in the year 1904.

I hold that true education of intellect can only come through a proper exercise and training of the bodily organs, e.g., hands, feet, eyes, ears, nose, etc. In other words, an intelligent use of the bodily organs in a child provides the best and quickest way of developing his intellect. But unless the development of the mind and body goes hand in hand with a corresponding awakening of the soul, the former alone would prove to be a poor lop-sided affair. By spiritual training I mean education of the heart. A proper and all-round development of the mind, therefore, can take place only when it proceeds pari passu with the education of the physical and spiritual faculties of the child. They constitute an indivisible whole. According to this theory, therefore, it would be a gross fallacy to suppose that they can be developed piecemeal or independently of one another.

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Harijanbandhu, 11-4-1937. This is a translation by Pyarelal.
The baneful effects of absence of proper co-ordination and harmony among the various faculties of body, mind and soul respectively are obvious. They are all around us; only we have lost perception of them owing to our present perverse associations. Take the case of our village folk. From their childhood upward they toil and labour in their fields from morning till night like their cattle in the midst of whom they live. Their existence is a weary, endless round of mechanical drudgery unrelieved by a spark of intelligence or higher graces of life. Deprived of all scope for developing their mind and soul, they have sunk to the level of the beast. Life to them is a sorry bungle which they muddle through anyhow. On the other hand what goes by the name of education in our schools and colleges in the cities today is in reality only intellectual dissipation. Intellectual training is there looked upon as something altogether unrelated to manual or physical work. But since the body must have some sort of physical exercise to keep it in health, they vainly try to attain that end by means of an artificial and otherwise barren system of physical culture which would be ridiculous beyond words if the result was not so tragic. The young man who emerges from this system can in no way compete in physical endurance with an ordinary labourer. The slightest physical exertion gives him headache; a mild exposure to the sun is enough to cause him giddiness. And what is more, all this is looked upon as quite natural. As for the faculties of the heart, they are simply allowed to run to seed or to grow anyhow in a wild undisciplined manner. The result is moral and spiritual anarchy. And it is regarded as something laudable!

As against this, take the case of a child in whom the education of the heart is attended to from the very beginning. Supposing he is set to some useful occupation like spinning, carpentry, agriculture, etc., for his education and in that connection is given a thorough, comprehensive knowledge relating to the theory of the various operations that he is to perform and the use and construction of the tools that he would be wielding. He would not only develop a fine, healthy body but also a sound, vigorous intellect that is not merely academic but is firmly rooted in and is tested from day-to-day by experience. His intellectual education would include a knowledge of mathematics and the various sciences that are useful for an intelligent and efficient exercise of his avocation. If to this is added literature by way of recreation, it would give him a perfect, well-balanced, all-round education in which the intellect, the body and the spirit have all full play and develop together into a natural, harmonious whole. Man is neither mere intellect nor the gross animal body, nor the heart or soul alone. A proper and harmonious combination of all the three is required for the making of the whole man and constitutes the true economics of education. To say that this kind of education can only be given after we have attained our independence would, I am afraid, be like putting the cart before the horse. The advent of independence would be incredibly hastened if we could educate millions of our people through an intelligent exercise of their respective vocations like this and teach them that they live for the common good of all.

_Harijan_, 8-5-1937

142. MESSAGE TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF AMERICA

WARDHA,

_April 12, 1937_

You ask me to give you a special message for the readers of your 1,300 American newspapers, whom you serve. I would like Americans first of all to know my limitations and our internal politics. They should know that I am not even a primary member of the Congress. Whatever influence I possess is purely moral. Congressmen recognize in me the author of purely non-violent action and its technique and, therefore, so long as the Congress retains its creed of truth and non-violence, Congressmen are likely to be guided by my advice whenever it has anything to do, directly or indirectly, with non-violent action, but those who can speak with authority are the President of the Congress i.e., Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, and the Working Committee, i.e., the Congress Cabinet. I function purely as a humble adviser.

For me the present issue is not political, but moral. It is a fight between truth and untruth; non-violence and violence and right and might; for I hold that Lord Zetland could not have uttered the speech he did, unless he was conscious of the might of the sword behind him.

It seems as if British statesmen are repenting of even the limited electorate they have created in India. If they were not, they ought to have bowed to the will of the majority as represented by their elected leaders. Surely, it is violence to impose nominated Ministries on the electorate of their creation.

The crisis is of their own making. It is presumption on their part to interpret Acts of their Parliament. Their jurisprudence has taught us that no man can take the law into his own hands, not even the king. Evidently, the maxim does not apply to the British Ministers. Proof of the pudding is in the eating.

I have offered an honourable way out. Let a judicial tribunal of joint creation give the interpretation. It will be time for them to plead incompetence when the tribunal finds in favour of their interpretation. Till then Congress demand for assurances must be held valid.

I must repeat that the latest gesture is one of the sword not of goodwill; certainly not of democratic obedience to the will of a democratic majority.

The Bombay Chronicle, 15-4-1937
143. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
April 12, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I shall see if I can give something to Manu on your behalf. If I fail you may send something made of khadi of Punjab make, nothing expensive.

The envelopes you left are still unexhausted. They will last till your return. But the lot you have sent will be welcome. Khan Saheb, his son Wali, Ba, Manu, little Kanu, big Kanu, Mahadev, Durga¹, Nirmala² the bride, Bablo³ and Balvantsinha will accompany me. Bal also, he is Kakasaheb’s son.

The weather everywhere seems extraordinary, we had a fierce storm here. The mango crop is all but ruined, and I am afraid of the seasonal rains holding out.

Your Hindi letters are daily improving. If you continue the practice, you will acquire good speed when you come.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3775. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6931

144. LETTER TO CHANDAN PAREKH

April 12, 1937

CHI CHANDAN,

Chi. Shankar⁴ has sent me your letter to him. I see that the . . . ⁵ affair still troubles you. The one per cent that I have reserved is not to be dismissed as of no consequence. Open your heart and write frankly about whatever you are harbouring in it. If you mean to, you can do much. I wish that either you should be proved completely truthful, or that you should purify your heart thoroughly. You are

¹ Wife of Mahadev Desai
² Sister of Mahadev Desai
³ Son of Mahadev Desai
⁴ Satish D. Kalelkar, addressee’s fiance
⁵ The name has been omitted perfectly right in saying that one who admits one’s faults arises. I wish you well.

Blessings from

BAPU

---

From Gujarati: C.W. 942. Courtesy: Satish D. Kalekar

145. LETTER TO TARADEVI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

April 12, 1937

CHI. TARA,

Let us see when you come with Mother. What is the result of your examination? In how many more examinations do you have to appear? I receive letters from Mother.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI TARA KUMARI
MAHILA VIDYALAYA
LUCKNOW, U. P.

From the Hindi original : Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

146. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

April 13, 1937

CHI. AMTU SALAAM,

I got both your letters today, just now. Kanu got the letter of the 5th the day before yesterday. Yesterday he didn’t come. He got the letter of the 9th yesterday.

If you want to come to Belgaum, you may. Most probably I will stay there till the 21st. I will return here latest by the 24th.

Kanti will come from Rajkot. Probably he will go back to Rajkot. Then he will go to Mysore and from there to Trivandrum. There is thus no question of Saraswati’s coming to Belgaum.

You are out and out a fool. I didn’t write to Kanti. He wrote on his own. You are needlessly suspicious that I don’t trust you.

We will discuss your future when we meet. About the land also, we will decide then. The wedding is fixed for the 18th.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 379.
147. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
April 13, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter. I did not have any talk about you with Jayaparaksh. He had no time, nor had I. I only inquired about your health. That was enough. Mridula keeps on inquiring about you. I suppose you are not likely to go to Ahmedabad now. Or will you? Won’t you most probably have to stay now with Father in Srinagar? You ask for my orders. What orders can I give you? You should do there what you think to be your duty. You may come here only when it is convenient. How much will you have to worry about Sitab Diara now?

Amtul Salaam will be coming shortly now. Take care of your health. Mirabehn has arrived. It is good that she has come. Kanti is at Bangalore. Address: C/o Y. M. C. A., Bangalore City.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3498

148. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

April 13, 1937

CHI. HARIBHAU,

I have your letter. You have made a big change as regards hipbath. Really useful changes can be made by the patient himself, with the help of Kuhne’s and Just’s books. Nature-cure remedies are not like ordinary drugs. A patient can say that a particular drug does not suit him, but only the vaidya who is treating him can say which one is likely to suit. In nature cure, on the other hand, the patient himself knows which remedies benefit him and, after he has submitted himself to several restrictions, can himself decide as to what kind of remedies to employ and in what measures. The reason is that the guide can never know as well as the patient can, the changes that take place in the latter’s body. Do make whatever changes seem necessary. But keep me informed, as you did this time. I certainly wish that if no definite change is clearly visible this month, then you may spend a day in Delhi. Saraswati Gadodia owes her job to this remedy. Her guru is a kind maulvi. The only attraction for going to Delhi is that you can have the benefit of the advice of both. I carefully went through Bhandari’s book for five minutes. I was not attracted by it. What I want is Indian equivalents for technical terms, not definitions. A definition of a motor-car can be given, but I heard it described as air-car only in Champaran. I cannot, therefore, give my opinion all at once. If you or somebody else tells me its special merits, then only can I express an opinion. There was a telegram from Bhandari to which I have not been able to reply, since I did not have a dictionary. Please convey this to him so that I need not write to him.

What you have written about surgery is quite correct.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 6085. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyaya

149. DISCUSSION WITH MISSIONARY

[Before April 14, 1937]

MISSIONARY: I have been following your comments on the statement regarding mass movement made by the Indian Christians. I wonder if those who made the statement were thinking of anything in the nature of a legal right. It is, I think, a moral right they claim here rather than a legal one.

GANDHIJI: My criticism would apply even if they had used the word ‘moral right’. But it is clear that they mean a legal right, because for one thing there is no such thing as a moral right, and secondly because in the very next para of the manifesto, in which they have referred to the Karachi Resolution on Fundamental Rights, they make it clear that they mean by ‘right’ legal right. A moral right, if there is any such thing, does not need any asserting and defending.

The main purpose of the manifesto was to check the agitation that is going on in certain quarters. I admit that if it was meant to be a protest, it was not properly drafted.

That is why I have called it “an unfortunate document” And is there anything like a moral right? Give me an illustration.

Have I not a moral right to speak?

1 This is extracted from “Weekly Letter” by Mahadev Desai, who had reported: “An Indian Christian missionary had a long talk with Gandhiji the other day during which he put to Gandhiji questions arising from Gandhiji’s recent criticism of a joint manifesto issued by several influential Indian Christians.” Vide “An Unfortunate Document”, 3-4-1937

2 Gandhiji left Wardha for Hudli on April 14, 1937.

3 Vide “Resolution on Fundamental Rights and Economic Changes”, 31-3-1931
It is not a moral right, but a legal right. There is no right but is legal. Divorced from legality moral right is a misnomer. And therefore you either enforce a right or fight for it. Whereas nobody asserts one’s duty. He humbly performs it. I shall take an illustration. You are here. You feel like preaching to me the Gospel. I deny the right and ask you to go away. If you regard praying for me a duty, you will quietly go away and pray for me. But if you claim the right to preach to me, you will call the police and appeal to them for preventing my obstructing you. That leads to a clash. But your duty no one dare question. You perform it here or elsewhere, and if your prayers to God to change my heart are genuine, God will change my heart. What Christianity, according to my interpretation of it, expects you to do is to pray to God to change my heart. Duty is a debt. Right belongs to a creditor, and it would be a funny thing indeed if a devout Christian claimed to be a creditor!

You have objected to Christian propaganda on the ground that Harijans are illiterate and ignorant. What would you say of propaganda amongst non-Harijans? I have the same objection, because the vast mass of people of India would not understand the pros and cons of Christianity better than a cow. I repeat this simile in spite of the fact that it has been objected to. When I say I do not understand logarithms any better than my cow, I do not mean any insult to my intelligence. In matters of theology the non-Harijan masses can understand no better than Harijans. I would take you to Segaon and show you that there is no distinction, so far as capacity to understand such things is concerned, between Harijans and non-harijans. Try to preach the principles of Christianity to my wife. She can understand them no better than my cow. I can, because of the training that I have had.

But we do not preach any theology. We simply talk of the life of Christ and tell them what a comfort His life and teaching have been to us. He has been our guide, we say, and ask others also to accept Him as their guide.

Oh yes, you do say that. But when you say I must accept Jesus in preference to Ramakrishna Paramahamsa, you will have to go into deep waters. That is why I say, let your life speak to us, even as the rose needs no speech but simply spreads its perfume. Even the blind who do not see the rose perceive its fragrance. That is the secret of the Gospel of the rose. But the Gospel that Jesus preached is more subtle and fragrant than the Gospel of the rose. If the rose needs no agent, much less does the Gospel of Christ need any agent.

But then your objection is to the commercial aspect of the Christian propaganda. Every true Christian will agree that no baits should be offered.
But what else is Christianity as it is preached nowadays? Not unless you isolate the proselytizing aspect from your educational and medical institutions are they any worth. Why should students attending Mission schools and colleges be compelled or even expected to attend Bible classes? If they must understand the message of Jesus, why not also of Buddha, Zoroaster and Mahomed? Why should the bait of education be offered for giving education [sic]?

That was the old way, not the modern way.

I can cite to you any number of modern examples. Is not the Bishop of Dornakal a modern? And what else is his open letter to the Depressed Classes of India? It is full of baits.

He represents a type of Christianity which I do not approve. But where there is no compulsion to attend the Bible classes, and only education is given, what objection is there to educational institutions run by Missions?

There is a subtle kind of propaganda when you expect students to attend Bible classes.

As regards hospitals, I think philanthropy without the dynamic[s] of some religious teaching will not tell.

Then you commercialize your gift, for at the back of your mind is the feeling that because of your service some day the recipient of the gift will accept Christ. Why should not your service be its own reward?

But leave alone these. I think I can cite instances of exceptionally fine people who attract people to them by the example of their lives.

I too can cite such instances. Andrews is one such. But they are exceptions.

But then you must judge Christianity by its best representatives, and not the worst.

I am not judging Christianity as a religion. I am talking of the way Christianity is being propagated, and you cannot judge it by exceptions, even as you may not judge the British system of Government by some fine specimens of Englishmen. No, let us think of the bulk of your people who preach the Gospel. Do they spread the perfume of their lives? That is to me the sole criterion. All I want them to do is to live Christian lives, not to annotate them. I have come to this view after laborious and prayerful search, and I am glad to say that there is a growing body of Christians who accept my view.

Then, I should be obliged to hear from you your attitude to the personality of Jesus.
I have often made it clear. I regard Jesus as a great teacher of humanity, but I do not regard him as the only begotten son of God. That epithet in its material interpretation is quite unacceptable. Metaphorically we are all begotten sons of God, but for each of us there may be different begotten son of God in a special sense. Thus for me Chaitanya may be the only begotten son of God.

But don’t you believe in the perfection of human nature, and don’t you believe that Jesus had attained perfection?

I believe in the perfectability of human nature. Jesus came as near to perfection as possible. To say that he was perfect is to deny God’s superiority to man. And then in this matter I have a theory of my own. Being necessarily limited by the bonds of flesh, we can attain perfection only after dissolution of the body. Therefore God alone is absolutely perfect. When he descends to earth, He of His own accord limits Himself. Jesus died on the Cross because he was limited by the flesh. I do not need either the prophecies or the miracles to establish Jesus’s greatness as a teacher. Nothing can be more miraculous than the three years of his ministry. There is no miracle in the story of the multitude being fed on a handful of loaves. A magician can create that illusion. But woe worth the day on which a magician would be hailed as the Saviour of humanity. As for Jesus raising the dead to life, well, I doubt if the men he raised were really dead. I raised a relative’s child from supposed death to life, but that was because the child was not dead, and but for my presence there she might have been cremated. But I saw that life was not extinct. I gave her an enema and she was restored to life. There was no miracle about it. I do not deny that Jesus had certain psychic powers and he was undoubtedly filled with the love of humanity. But he brought to life not people who were dead but who were believed to be dead. The laws of Nature are changeless, unchangeable, and there are no miracles in the sense of infringement or interruption of Nature’s laws. But we limited beings fancy all kind of things and impute our limitations to God. We may copy God, but not He us. We may not divide Time for Him, Time for Him is eternity. For us there is past, present and future. And what is human life of a hundred years but less than a mere speck in the eternity of Time?

_Harijan_ 17-4-1937
150. CABLE TO “THE TIMES”

WARDHA,
[April 14, 1937]

I HAVE CAREFULLY READ “THE TIMES” COMMENT ON MY STATEMENT. IT SEEMS A BIG QUESTION WHEN IT INVITES THE CONGRESS TO TEST THE BONA FIDES BY TAKING OFFICE UNCONDITIONALLY. MY ADVICE TO THE CONGRESS HAS ALWAYS BEEN THAT OFFICE-ACCEPTANCE WOULD BE A FATAL BLUNDER WITHOUT A PREVIOUS UNDERSTANDING REGARDING SAFEGUARDS WHICH ARE WITHIN THE GOVERNORS’ DISCRETION. IN THE TEETH OF FIRST-CLASS LEGAL OPINION TO THE CONTRARY I REGARD LORD ZETLAND’S INTERPRETATION UNACCEPTABLE. A REFUSAL TO SUBMIT HIS INTERPRETATION TO EXAMINATION BY A LEGAL TRIBUNAL WILL RAISE THE STRONG PRESUMPTION THAT THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT HAD NO INTENTION OF DEALING FAIRLY BY THE MAJORITY PARTY WHOSE ADVANCED PROGRAMME THEY DISLIKE. I PREFER AN HONOURABLE DEADLOCK TO DISHONOURABLE DAILY SCENES BETWEEN CONGRESSMEN AND GOVERNORS. FOR IN THE SENSE THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT MEAN THE WORKING OF THE ACT BY THE CONGRESS SEEMS IMPOSSIBLE. IT IS THEREFORE FOR THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT TO SHOW THE CONGRESS BY EVERY MEANS OPEN WITHIN THEIR CONSTITUTION THAT THE CONGRESS CAN ADVANCE TOWARDS ITS GOAL EVEN BY TAKING OFFICE. I WISH EVERYONE CONCERNED WOULD BELIEVE ME THAT WITH ME THERE IS NO QUESTION WHATSOEVER OF FALSE PRESTIGE. MY FUNCTION IS THAT OF A MEDIATOR BETWEEN THE CONGRESS AND THE GOVERNMENT, WHICH UNLIKE MANY CONGRESSMEN, I BELIEVE TO BE CAPABLE OF BEING CONVERTED UNDER MORAL PRESSURE, AS IT IS OF BEING COERCED UNDER PHYSICAL PRESSURE. AFTER THE ABOVE HAD BEEN PREPARED A TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY OF LORD

1 From Mahatma, “A Well-Deserved Victory”, 14-5-1904
2 Vide “Statement to the Press”, 10-4-1937
LOTHIAN’S RECENT LETTER \(^1\) TO “THE TIMES” WAS PLACED IN MY HANDS. HIS ARGUMENT IS BASED ON AN ASSUMED POSITION TO WHICH INDIA IS AN UTTER STRANGER. ONE SEES NOT THE SLIGHTEST REGARD FOR THE MAJORITY VIEW. I REGRET THEREFORE HIS LETTER CALLS FOR NO ALTERATION IN MY OPINION AS STATED ABOVE.

The Hindustan Times, 16-4-1937

151. CABLE TO “THE TIMES”

On or before April 15, 1937 \(^2\)

LORD LOTHIAN’S SUGGESTION TO REFER DISPUTES TO THE ELECTORATE IS SOUND IF IT CAN BE PROVED WORKABLE AND NOT PROHIBITIVELY EXPENSIVE. THE PRECEDENT I HAD IN MIND OF ARBITRATION WAS THAT OF THE REFERENCE BY THE TRANSVAAL AND THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT ON THE GRIEVANCES OF BRITISH INDIANS IN TERMS OF THE TRANSVAAL LAW 3 OF 1885 TO THE THEN CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE ORANGE FREE STATE AS THE SOLE ARBITRATOR. IN THE CALCUTTA “STATESMAN” SUGGESTION \(^3\) AS TO GOVERNORS INVITING CONGRESS TO GO AHEAD WITH THE PROGRAMME OUTLINED

\(^1\) In this, Lord Lothian had said: “. . . If . . the Governors could constitutionally give the assurance which the Congress Committee asks for, would not the minority in each Province protest vehemently against their giving this promise and would not such an undertaking conflict with the basic principle of constitutional democracy, namely, that neither the party in a majority nor the Governor should be able to exercise arbitrary power without appeal to anybody?

“. . . The discretion which a Governor has to exercise is whether his special responsibility will better be discharged by accepting or rejecting the advice of his Ministry when attempts at agreement have failed. His decision, as all past history shows, largely depends on whether the majority in the Legislature is united and resolute and whether it can count on the support of the electorate in the event of a dissolution. . .” (The Hindustan Times, 14-4-1937).

\(^2\) This cable was reported under the date-line; “London, April 15”.

\(^3\) In its issue dated April 10, which read: “The Congress put before the electors the definite statement that the safeguards and special powers in the present Act make it absolutely impossible for a Congress majority to put through its social programme for dealing with poverty and unemployment. . . If the Act is really such that there is the slightest difficulty in the Governors’ telling Congress leaders that there is nothing to prevent them going ahead with the programme outlined in the election manifesto, then we have to admit that we too have been mistaken about the Act.”
THE CONGRESS ELECTION MANIFESTO\(^1\) WOULD GO A LONG WAY TO SATISFY ME IF THE MANIFESTO BE REGARDED AS MERELY ILLUSTRATIVE. IT SHOULD, HOWEVER, BE UNDERSTOOD THAT ALL MY STATEMENTS ARE PURELY PERSONAL TO ME AND MADE WITHOUT CONSULTATION WITH FRIENDS AND ASSOCIATES.

_The Hindustan Times, 17-4-1937_

152. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

April 15, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

If you steady your mind, you can do much. Steadiness will come only if you do everything after careful thinking.

I have no time just now to write to anybody else. Keep an account of every minute.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]
Mahadev tells me that Dwarkadas has had a relapse. My purpose in telling you this is to suggest that you also may go there if you feel concerned.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9358. Also C.W. 6633. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

153. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA\(^2\)

KALYAN,
April 15, 1937

Interviewed by the Associated Press as regards Lord Lothians’ letter\(^3\) to the London Times, Mahatma Gandhi said that he had nothing to add to what he already stated in his cable\(^4\) to the London Times (which Reuter had cabled to India). He added, however, that if he had anything to say further he would do so at Poona.

\(^1\) Adopted by the A. I. C. C. in Bombay on August 22, 1936, the manifesto aimed at Complete Independence and a Constituent Assembly. For the extracts from the manifesto, _vide_ Appendix “Extracts from the Congress Election Manifesto”, 22-8-1936.

\(^2\) Gandhiji accompanied by Kasturba, Mahadev Desai and others passed through Kalyan en route to Hudli. According to Gandhi 1915-1948—A Detailed Chronology, Gandhiji “alighted at Kalyan and drove to Parnakutir”.

\(^3\) Vide “Cable to “The Times”, 14-4-1937

\(^4\) _ibid_
On his attention being drawn to the cable from South Africa about the withdrawal of the anti-Asiatic Bill from the South African Parliament, Mahatma Gandhi said that he wanted to study the cable before he expressed any opinion.

The interviewer referred to Mr. Rajagopalachari’s statement, in which he said that Mahatma Gandhi was “in the thick of it” and, before Mahatma Gandhi could be asked whether this meant his coming back to the Congress, Gandhiji forestalled the interviewer and said:

It means nothing more nothing less than what it says. I am in the thick of it. I am not rejoining the Congress at present if that is what you mean.

_The Hindustan Times, 16-4-1937_

---

154. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

POONA CITY,
April 15, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I got your last letter yesterday as I was leaving Wardha. I am glad you were able to go to the villages. It is certainly good news that the surrounding villages are voluntarily taking village reform. No good work but spreads like the perfume of a rose.

You will take the additional man carefully. Please do not take more work than you can without ruining your body.

Love.

ROBBER

[PS.]

We leave tonight for Belgaum.

From the original: C.W. 3601. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6401

---

155. INTERVIEW TO ASOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

POONA,
April 15, 1937

I have no set schemes. I respond to the situation as it arises.

Regarding the future course of action Gandhiji said there was nothing to add to the former statements as nothing fresh had occured.

Later when he was shown the statement of the Madras leader, Mahatma Gandhi after a cursory persual opined that it needed careful study before he could give his opinion on it. He added that he would do so as early as possible tomorrow after carefully going through it. All he would say was that the suggestion contained in the statement, which had the backing of all communities, needed great consideration.

A large crowd turned out at the station for darshan and Mahatma Gandhi taking the opportunity started collecting funds for Harijans.

The Hindustan Times, 17-4-1937

156. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING, HUDLI-I

April 16, 1937

BROTHERS AND SISTERS,

Please speak up if my voice does not reach you. I shall speak a little louder. I have agreed to say a few words before the President starts the discussion. During the next six days I shall try to participate in the meetings as much as I can.

One thing I wish to mention right at the outset. When I arrived in the morning, someone remarked that if the Faizpur Congress was Jawaharlal’s, the Hudli Congress was going to be Gandhi’s. It was conveyed to me by the President or someone else. I know it was said in jest. But it pained me that such a thing should be said even in jest. It is a sin to imagine even in jest that there can be any rivalry between Jawaharlal and me, or the Congress and the Gandhi Seva Sangh. The Gandhi Seva Sangh is not opposed to the Congress. It is meant to serve the Congress. How could the Sangh be opposed to the Congress when it was conceived in order to carry out the constructive programme of the Congress? But I would go even further. The Congress represents the millions. The Sangh represents us. The members of the Sangh are either their own representatives or the representatives of truth and non-violence. You can say that the whole world should be the representative of truth and non-violence. But that is a different matter. The members of the Sangh would, under the present situation, represent only themselves. But do we not want to be the representatives of the millions as well? And it is the Congress which is pledged to be the voice of the suffering millions. How, then, can there be any opposition between us and the Congress? I would go to the extent of saying that the Sangh can have rivalry with none at all. Let no one suggest even in jest that there can possibly be any rivalry between the Sangh and the Congress. For, it would be an untruth. And it is forbidden to speak an untruth even in jest. Anyone who hears it must promptly stop it. I wish to give you a warning. Surely, we do not intend to indulge in a fight with anyone. We cannot even talk in such terms.

---

1 A report of this speech appeared in Harijan Sevak, 1-5-1937.

Another thing which I wish to suggest is whether it would not be better to change the name of the Gandhi Seva Sangh. You have associated my name with the Sangh. This does not mean that my field of operation is limited only to this. I wish to make the whole of India my field of activity. I have suggested a way and you have accepted it. But it is not good for us to worship an individual. Only an ideal or a principle can be worshipped. You have agreed to carry out the programme I placed before the country in 1920. Only that part of it which you have assimilated and digested belongs to you. My faith in that programme is brighter than ever. But will you abandon the programme if I say that my faith in it has dwindled? You cannot give it up even if I do so. You should not become my worshippers. You can worship truth and non-violence. When you have accepted a thing, it belongs to you independently. And only what independently belongs to you can be really yours. Like food, only what you have assimilated would serve you any purpose. When we accept someone’s ideas but do not digest them, absorb them intellectually but not emotionally and do not translate them into practice, it is a kind of indigestion. It is an intellectual luxury. Ill-digested ideas are much worse than ill-digested food. There is a cure for ill-digested food; but ill-digested ideas harm the spirit and there is no cure for it. It is right that I should help you. You have right to pick up a quarrel with me if I say anything which is contrary to what I said in 1920. You must consider independently whether I have improved upon those ideas or allowed them to degenerate. Let me tell you that day by day I am marching ahead in the direction of progress and the application of my principles covers a wider field. You will have to judge if I am progressing in the right direction. You cannot do so if you do not exercise your power of independent judgment. The world will ridicule you if you keep on sticking to my name. But there is another and graver danger. I have a fear that the Sangh may degenerate into a sect. If such a thing is possible while I am still alive, what may not happen when I am gone? Whenever a difficult situation arises, you would refer to my writings in Young India and Harijan and swear by them to support your own argument. It would be proper to cremate all my writings with my body. I am not saying this out of any sense of modesty. Have I not already said that the world is not going to lose anything even if all our Vedas are destroyed and only the first mantra of Ishopanishad survives? And what purpose would be served even by that mantra if we do not understand it and follow it in our actions?
Whatever I have said or written is useful only to the extent that it can help you in understanding and digesting the principles of truth and non-violence. Hence you must give a serious thought to what I am saying today.

My faith in truth and non-violence becomes stronger every day. And as I go on applying these principles to my life, I go on making progress, and with that my ideas acquire a fresh quality. This does not mean that I am disorganized and my mind is not steady, or that my intellect is becoming shaky. I claim that my intellect has not lost its sharpness even though I have aged. It is not as if I was making thoughtless statements. My intellect continues to grow and in the matter of truth and non-violence it comes face to face with new things every day. And I find new light in them. I find new meanings in them every day. Hence, I continue to give new suggestions to the organizations like the Spinners’ Association, Harijan Sevak Sangh, Village Industries Association etc. This means that these organizations and their organizers are very much alive. And like a tree they will go on acquiring a changing quality assuming ever new forms. Their merit is that they should grow and progress. They would meet their downfall if they do not do so. I for one do not feel at all that I am going down. I want you to march with me in the direction of progress.

I am not keen to know what would happen when I am dead. My only desire is that the Sangh should always grow like a tree. If you worship the ideals—not me—you should remove my name from the name of the Sangh. You should not be so much attached to my name. You must measure each action of yours with the yardstick of truth and non-violence. If you make this your yardstick, you will be able to deliberate on all problems without any fear even after I am gone. All of you who have come here should always be fully awake. You are going to face problems which will demand from you a fresh outlook. I hope that with the light of truth you will be able to do so.

[From Hindi]

Gandhi Seva Sanghke Tritiya Varshik Adhiveshan (Hudli, Karnatak) ka Vivaran, pp. 8-10

157. SPINNERS’ WAGES

The Council of the A. I. S. A. passed the following important resolutions at its meeting at Wardha on the 23rd and 24th ultimo:

1 The resolutions are not reproduced here.
When the scheme was inaugurated many workers had grave doubts about its success. They had thought that the consequent rise in the price of khadi will adversely affect the sales. Experience has dispelled the fears and the Council is anxious to take a further step forward, if it can at all be taken, at an early date. Whilst, therefore, there need be no haste about taking the further step, workers may not be lazy about it either. They should know that the goal is eight annas per day of eight hours. We have only nominally reached three annas which are evenly distributed between increase and efficiency. The efficiency earnings do not directly affect the sale price. If anything, the efficiency of spinners improves the quality of khadi. The direct increase in the wages undoubtedly raises the prices, but its burden is broken by the improvement in quality. Then the increase is so judiciously regulated as to affect the poorest buyer not at all or very slightly. I have no manner of doubt that if only the workers will themselves be more efficient, more vigilant and more faithful, they will hasten the day when spinners can easily earn eight annas per day of eight hours’ work without involving a phenomenal rise in the sale price. More scientific knowledge must improve the capacity of hand-gins, carding-bows and spinning-wheels. Greater observation of spinners’ work must result in their being more skilled and more efficient. Greater grasp of administrative detail and greater faithfulness must mean a substantial decrease in overhead charges. In other words, our ignorance of the science of khadi is at the bottom of our present inability to reach the goal of eight annas per day. The resolution is intended as a spur to effort. God helps only the ever-watchful.

_Harijan_, 17-4-1937

158. BAD IF TRUE

Shri P. O. Philip of the National Christian Council has received the following complaint from Travancore:

Many thanks for your letter. I am consoled by the fact that the Mahatma will use his influence in removing the ill-feeling of the caste Hindus in Travancore towards Christians and the Depressed Class converts. Last week, while my evangelist Jacob was returning from a Church in North Travancore after the baptism of eight Pariahs, he was stopped by a Hindu Excise (Government) peon and was seriously assaulted. One of his eyes is injured by the blows. The peon said the evangelist had no business to teach and prepare people for baptism after the Temple-entry Proclamation. I have written about this to the The Madras Mail and the Manorama, but my note has not appeared... in the papers. Will you please give publicity to the hideous act? Such acts are not isolated ones, but are perpetrated with the knowledge of influential caste Hindus who want to suppress if possible the progress of Christianity. You may forward a copy of this note to Mr. Gandhi. Communal hatred is on the increase after the Temple-entry Proclamation!

A similar complaint was received by me a few weeks ago through the same source. I have forwarded the papers to the Travancore Harijan Sevak Sangh for investigation. Meantime I have the foregoing. The brief postcard contains most serious allegations. The writer claims that

1. the acts are not isolated;
2. they are perpetrated with the knowledge of influential caste Hindus;
3. caste Hindus want to suppress if possible the progress of Christianity;
4. communal hatred is on the increase after the Temple-entry Proclamation.

Now these statements ought not to be lightly made. I advise the writer to furnish proofs to the Harijan Sevak Sangh who, I promise, will thoroughly investigate the whole complaint. The Sangh has a retired High Court judge as its President and a most conscientious and cultured man as its Secretary. I myself will have no hesitation in denouncing the slightest departure by caste Hindus from the strictest non-violence. It is difficult for me to see why communal hatred should be on the increase because of the Temple-entry Proclamation. Certainly I observed none during my recent tour in Travancore. And in so far as specific charges of molestation are concerned I would advise Shri Philip’s correspondent to file complaints in the local courts. I may mention that I received complaints of a contrary nature from caste Hindus alleging that Harijans living in or near Christian cheris were molested by Christians. I refused to publish the statements and referred the writers to the local courts. I would have likewise treated the foregoing postcard but for the very serious allegations contained in it. They could only be dealt with publicly and by a public investigation.

Harijan, 17-4-1937

159. A. I. V. I. A. TRAINING SCHOOL

This school has gone through several vicissitudes because of the inexperience of the management. The A. I. V. I. A. has to cut its way as it proceeds through an unbeaten track. A year’s experience and experimenting have made the management less ambitious. The teachers themselves are training themselves through experimenting. And when the next terms commences, there will be greater preparedness than hitherto. Here is the unambitious but more realistic prospectus of the school:

The academic year of the All-India Village Industries Association Training School for Village Workers will begin from 1st July 1937. . .

1. Hindi will be the medium of instruction.

2. The course will be as far as may be for a period of 12 months, of which two months will have to be spent in village-uplift centres for practical study. In the first 10 months training in the following industries, together with some theoretical knowledge for village work, will be given:

   1. Paddy-husking and grinding
   2. Paper-making
   3. Oil-pressing by ghani
   4. Date-palm gur making
   5. Bee-keeping

   Students will have to select one of the above industries and devote six hours every day to it.

3. Students will be examined at the end of the year and, if found necessary, the course may be prolonged.

4. Applicants for admission should not be less than 18 years of age and should possess a healthy body. On arrival, such of those as the School Committee requires will undergo preliminary examination and will be expected to pass a test equal to what is known as the Vernacular Middle Course, and may be rejected if they do not possess adequate knowledge. They should have a working knowledge of Hindi, should be habitual wearers of khadi and should be prepared to do manual work such as sanitary service, kitchen work and spinning, and such other work as may be required under the discipline of the School. . . .

Let the applicants study the prospectus carefully. Those who are disinclined to do manual labour and apply themselves to the practical learning of the industry of their choice will be disappointed. Those who appreciated the necessity of mastering the industries mentioned will find ample scope for their talents.

_Harijan_, 17-4-1937

---

1 Only extracts are reproduced here.
160. FOR STUDENTS

Though this letter was received about the end of February last, I am able to deal with it only now. It raises issues of great importance, each demanding large enough space for two columns of Harijan. But I must be brief.

The very difficulties the student raises, though serious in their setting, are of his own making. The very mention of them must show the falsity of his position and of the educational system in our country. It turns education into a purely commercial product to be converted into money. For me education has a much nobler purpose. Let the student count himself as one among millions and he will discover that millions of young men and women of his age cannot fulfil the conditions which he will have his degree to do. Why should he make himself responsible for the maintenance of all the relatives he mentions? Why should the grown-up ones, if of sound body, not labour for their maintenance? It is wrong to have many drones to one busy bee—though a male.

The remedy lies in his unlearning many things. He must revise his ideas of education. His sisters ought not to repeat the expensive education that he had. They can develop their intelligence through learning some handicraft in a scientific manner. The moment they do so, they have development of the mind side by side with that of the body. And if they will learn to regard themselves as servants of humanity rather than its exploiters, they will have development of the heart, i.e., the soul as well. And they will become equal earners of bread with their brother.

I might as well discuss here his sister’s marriage to which reference has been made in the letter. I do not know what is meant by marriage taking place ‘sooner rather than later’. In no case need it take place before they are 20 years old. It is no use thinking so many years in advance. And if he will revise the whole scheme of life, he will have the sisters to choose their partners and the ceremony need never cost more than five rupees each, if that. I have been present at several such ceremonies. And the husbands or their elders have been graduates in fair circumstances.

1 The letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent said that Gandhiji had not done justice to “a student” in his reply; vide “Notes”, sub-title “A Student’s Difficulty”, 9-1-1937 He also asked for a “detailed, practical and comprehensive solution” to some of his personal problems.
It is pathetic to find the student so helpless as not to know how and where to have spinning lessons. Let him make a diligent search in Lucknow and he will find that there are young men enough to teach him. But he need not confine himself to spinning, though it too is fast becoming a full-time occupation able to give a village-minded man or woman his or her livelihood. I hope I have said here sufficient to enable him to dot the i’s and cross the t’s.

And now for contraceptives. Even here, the difficulty is imaginary. He is wrong in underrating his wife’s intelligence. I have no doubt whatsoever that if she is the ordinary type of womanhood, she will readily respond to his self-restraint. Let him be true to himself and ask himself whether he has enough of it himself. All the evidence in my possession goes to show that it is man who lacks the power of self-restraint more than woman. But there is no need for belittling his own inability to exercise restraint. He must manfully face the prospect of a large family and discover the best means of supporting them. He must know that against the millions who are strangers to the use of contraceptives, there are possibly a few thousand who use them. The millions are in no dread of having to breed their children though the latter may not all be wanted. I suggest that it is cowardly to refuse to face the consequences of one’s acts. Persons who use contraceptives will never learn the virtue of self-restraint. They will not need it. Self-indulgence with contraceptives may prevent the coming of children but will sap the vitality of both men ad women—perhaps more of men than of women. It is unmanly to refuse battle with the devil. Let my correspondent resolve upon self-restraint as the only sure and honourable method of avoiding unwanted children. What though he and his fail in the effort a hundred times? Joy is in the battle. The result comes by the grace of God.

Harijan, 17-4-1937

161. ‘OUR PARTIAL SIGHT’

The reader will remember Rajkumari Amrit Kaur’s letter1 to me published in these columns some weeks ago. She received on it, some time ago, a letter from an English friend. She sent it to me to read. It contained so much that was good that I asked for permission to publish the relevant portion. This she readily gave and copied it for me. Here are the passages:

1 Vide “A Christian Letter”, 30-1-1937
I have been meaning to write to you ever since I read in Harijan your fine letter to Mr. Gandhi. I want to tell you how very much I feel with you about what you said with regard to missionary work and to thank you for saying it in your own way to a man like Mahatma Ji. When I was in India, first as a very undeveloped girl thrust into a C. M. S. atmosphere, very many years ago, I felt that the approach of the missionaries to the people of India was all wrong and I had lonely times of being up against the whole system and yet not exactly being able to formulate my idea or talk to others with any chance of being understood. I was also set wondering if we as British people had any right to be ruling India, and I remember expressing this in those early days and being firmly dealt with! But ever since those days as my thought life has developed I have been getting to feel that fundamentally the whole position of the British in India was wrong and that the missionaries as a whole were sharing in the superiority complex of those who ruled. I am regarded, I know, as a real black sheep in missionary circles. So I can thoroughly sympathize with criticism that I am sure you have met with from those quarters! But what you said needed saying by someone who was a Christian and who yet saw a different way of sharing her faith with others. And it makes all the difference when someone like you who is known and has a position in the country says these things.

We sing in our Churches in England that grand hymn, whose words I expect you know, written by that inspired blind poet George Matheson:

Gather us in; we worship only thee
In varied names we stretch a common hand;
In diverse forms a common soul we see;
In many ships we seek one spirit land;
Gather us in.
Each sees one colour in Thy rainbow light,
Each looks upon one tint and calls it heaven,
Thou art the fulness of OUR partial sight;
We are not perfect till we find the seven;
Gather us in.

Anyway it is a step beyond ‘From Green Land’s icy Mountains’! But I sometimes wonder if the people here who sing this realize its implications.

Harijan, 17-4-1937
162. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

HUDLI, SULDHAL P.O.,
April 17, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letter.

It is now just before morning prayer time. The night was quite cool. I slept on the beautiful soft ground. Gosibehn and Perin are here. Khan Saheb of course.

If we are to re-introduce village articles after being used to the Western style, we shall have to be patient and inventive. That the pen requires constant dipping is a good point. It lessens fatigue. That the fountain-pen saves time is not an unmixed blessing. The village pen and ink undoubtedly admit of improvement. That can only come when you and I use these things.

The rule to which you took objection has been altered so as to answer your objection.

There was a dispute between Transvaal and British Governments. The matter was referred to arbitration by the Governments.

Love.

Yours,
ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3602. Courtesy Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6411

163. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

April 17, 1937

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

I have not written to you at all recently. I wrote to the Hindu Mission. We should investigate. If the Christians are holding out inducements to win over Harijans, nothing more need be done beyond publishing the facts. It is of course our duty to remove the hardships the Harijans may be suffering.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3958. Also C.W. 143. Courtesy: Parikshitlal L. Majmudar
164. LETTER TO HASANALI SHAMJI

April 17, 1937

I received your letter. The questions you have asked can be raised more or less about all [religions]. I am just telling you my impression after reading the whole biography of the Prophet. If I start looking for imperfections and faults, I can find many but while doing so a man begins to despair and there is no reason to despair.

I left out about the hearing of the inner voice because while replying I did not have your letter before me. One who wants to hear the inner voice should observe five yamas\(^2\). The rules laid down for the observance of yamas should be adhered to and in order to do that one should devote as much time as possible to the repetition of His name so that it becomes as orderly as natural as breathing and the repetition should become as the beating of our heart. We do not hear our heartbeats but the heart goes on beating. Similarly the repetition of His name should go on. I have written on the subject many times in my articles.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

165. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING, HUDLI-II

April 17, 1937

BROTHERS AND SISTERS,

At the outset I wish to say a few things which are not relevant to the subject under discussion. Dr. Batra is here. I had requested him to give a helping hand in the sanitation arrangements. He told me a few things which I want to tell you about.

First, the soil here is sandy. For washing we need alkali in more or less degree. Sand contains no alkali. It is to be found only in earth. Therefore earth is our soap. We cannot wash our hands as effectively with sand as with earth. We should remember that there should either be earth placed in heaps outside latrins or members should use soap to wash their hands.

\(^1\) The addressee had been repeatedly writing to Gandhiji about the shortcomings of Islam.

\(^2\) According to Patanjali’s Yogasutra, these are: ahimsa (non-violence), satya (truth), asteya (non-stealing), brahmacharya (celibacy) and aparigraha (non-possession).
Second, it has been noticed that some people put their soiled utensils into the drums filled with water. This is bad for health and bad according to tradition.

Third, those who serve are sometimes seen to serve liquids with their hands instead of with ladles. We should always serve liquids with a spoon or a ladle. Devotees of Truth should pay attention to small things. If they do not, they are lazy and laziness is a form of violence.

Now take the subject under consideration. It is a good thing that this discussion is taking place. I have myself been confused and I am still not very clear. I do not wholly agree with what Gangadharrao\(^1\) and Acharya Bhagwat have said: It is of course correct that a man cannot go by his own opinion in everything. Where we are not sure of the correctness of our opinion we should consult our elders. The consultation is necessary. But it is not so here. I myself wanted to know your opinion as to whether we should go into Legislatures. This is not something which we should decide for all time. I know that my opposition to going into Legislatures has not considerably softened. But there has been no loss of principle here. And where there is no loss of principle involved I like to know what people’s wishes are. I am a worshipper of Truth and I am also a servant of the people. I am affected by the atmosphere. My response is generally in conformity with the atmosphere. What I said at Patna was correct for the time. What I said at Faizpur was also correct. I keep myself equipped for meeting the needs of the season. If it rains I use an umbrella, if it is cold I can wrap myself in woollens and in summer there is muslin which is light as air or some such thing to cover me. People have agreed that this is right. There has been no change in my ideas. But I express them in keeping with the prevailing wind.

Now I take the question Kakasaheb has posed. He asks whether I am the same man who had advocated non-co-operation from 1920 to 1922 or whether I have changed. My answer is that I am the same man. If I was a non-co-operator then, I am a non-co-operator now. But the fact is that even at that time I was in reality a co-operator. A British magistrate had told me that, though I showed myself as a non-co-operator, at heart I sought co-operation I told him that he was right. Non-co-operation is not something I have accepted for all time. When I find that India can advance through co-operation, I will accept co-operation. Following my 21\textsuperscript{st} fast I had said in a statement that co-operation was my religion and that I would die for co-operation provided I got it with honour.

---

\(^1\) Gangadharrao Deshpande, also known as ‘Karnataka Kesari’

Today We are going into the Legislatures not to give but to take co-operation. The atmosphere today is changed. We will have to seek remedies to suit the change in the atmosphere. I must refer here to something Premabehn said\textsuperscript{2} yesterday. Whether she said it in jest or as sacrasm does not matter. But I cannot understand what kind of jest it was. It was no occasion for jest. I could only conclude that she said it out of her experience. If that was so, it is not right. My own experience is the opposite. I have not become what I am in the sense it has been suggested. Truth came to me when I was yet an infant. Ahimsa came to me when I was eighteen. My intellect was not mature then. Even today I do not pride myself on my intellect. At school the teachers did not consider me a very bright boy. They knew I was a good boy, but not a bright boy. I never knew first class and second class. I barely passed. I was a dull boy. I could not even speak properly. Even when I went to South Africa I went on as a clerk. I did not go anywhere, like Pherozeshah Mehta, charging a thousand rupees as day’s fee. I was to get £ 150 annually. My knowledge of rules and regulations was nil. I am not a learned man. I am a worshipper of Truth. In South Africa I found myself in the midst of Muslims. Mohammed I know only as a name. About Muslims I knew nothing. I told them the story of Harishchandra. Even this absurdity influenced them a great deal. Much later I took to politics. But the groundwork had been laid much before. When I saw that in the interests of Truth and non-violence I had to take part in politics I did so. But my experience is that my influence among people is not because of my political work. This is hundred per cent true. If at Saswad the experience is different, I do not know. But this has been my experience all along. I went to Champaran also at the request of \textsuperscript{2} She had spoken on the question of members of the Gandhi Seva Sangh standing for election to the Legislative Councils. On Gandhiji’s explaining to her that her thoughts were immature, she had resolved not to make any public speech for a year. \textit{Vide} also “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”., 13-5-1937.

\textsuperscript{1} From May 8 to 29 1933

Brijkrishore Babu. I had merely seen him. People also knew him only as a lawyer. He had not even heard of the Congress. I told them all not even to mention the Congress. Rajendra Babu never even dreamt of bringing him into the Congress. This occurred to me later. Even today there are thousands in India who have no need of swaraj. Take Segaon itself, where I live. It is in Maharashtra and people in Maharashtra are very political-minded. But even they don’t ask for swaraj. I do not mention Congress to them, because they will not understand it. They understand the question of untouchability and they also oppose untouchability. To women I talk about the charkha, about children. If I speak to them about the Legislatures they may ask me if I would bring them a couple of bags of foodgrains from there. What is the condition of India as a whole today? The talk of bread is all that the people understand. They have no use for politics. I have led campaigns in all parts of India, but never in the name of the Congress. Nowhere have I worked in that fashion. Today in Champaran people in their thousands talk about the Congress. It is the fruit of those six months of work in the course of which the Congress was not so much as mentioned. They respect the Congress because they consider these gentlemen their well-wishers.

There may be some amongst you, too, who think that Truth and non-violence will advance only through politics. I must tell them very clearly that Truth and non-violence are not dependent on anything. They are independent forces. If you want to be the worshippers of what Khan Saheb calls Allah, what I call Rama and Christian call Christ or God, you may do so. If you don’t wish so, no harm is done to Him. If God is independent of you and me, He does not need politics. He does not need you and me. There are millions who are in quest of Him. Very few have had a glimpse of Him. I myself have been worshipping him for the last fifty years. In Him I find daily new strength, new things. If today I find it necessary to argue with you it means that I have not been able to imbibe all these things to the extent I should have. What is moral strength? Ramanama is the same thing for all. But when one man utters the name it makes an impact. Another’s uttering makes none. What is the reason? The reason is that one has merged oneself in it. Another plays upon it as one might on a sitar or a violin. A parrot also utters Ramanama, but it does not touch its heart. It cannot understand its significance. I am not a worshipper of small things. Can a man who has been saying that no man is his guru, who has accepted no living person as his guru, be a worshipper of something that depends on politics? Truth and non-violence are precious commodities. They are neutral; they are unique things and the articles needed for their worship are also unique. Let Premabehn not forget all this.

1 Father of Prabhavati

Jamnalalji has said that if we go into the Legislatures today we cannot pursue Truth and non-violence. He has uttered something of great import. I don’t agree with it. If Truth and non-violence cannot be pursued, then democracy also cannot be practised, for in that case it will be against Truth and non-violence. If you believe in democracy we shall have to work for the good of the millions. To do good to the millions we cannot all of us assemble in one place. We shall have to elect a few representatives. If they are true servants of the people, if they are true democrats, they will, with a pure heart, try to understand the wishes of the people and will voice them. When in 1920 the question arose of amending the objective of the Congress and Bipin Chandra Pal suggested democratic swaraj in place of swaraj, I opposed it because when I analyse swaraj I find that without democracy there can be no swaraj. What Pal intended was implied in the word swaraj itself. In swaraj, too, the Legislatures will retain more or less their present structure, though it is possible there may be some change in the external form. Let us sit as we are sitting here instead of in chairs and palaces. About one-third of the people who should have the right to vote have acquired the franchise. After some time the number of voters may reach 120 million. It is no small thing that today 30 million people can vote. Thousands of our workers have approached them and this had never been done before. The Congress message has spread more widely. It is not a small thing. I had been thinking whether it is right for members of the Gandhi Seva Sangh to carry this message. I told those who asked me that there was no harm in doing so. So long as there is room in the Congress for Truth and non-violence, so long as it does not say good-bye to the programme of 1920, we shall continue to be an organ of the Congress. We are not an institutions created under the Congress. We are a voluntary organization. The All-India Spinners’ Association, and All-India Village Industries Association are organization created by the Congress. But Gandhi Seva Sangh is not created by the Congress. It came into existence in 1923 to save the programme of 1920 at a time when I was undergoing six years’ imprisonment and when there was no talk of my being released. Even if the Congress gives up constructive programme tomorrow, the Sangh will not cease to exist. It will carry on that programme. Constructive programme is the permanent programme of Gandhi Seva Sangh. If it gives it up it will cease to be. In 1923 Motilalji and other leaders had taken the Councils programme in hand. It was not for us to quarrel with them. We also had to keep intact this real programme of the Congress because I know that if the Congress gives up the programme of 1920, it will be destroyed. What else could we have done in such a situation? Today also I say that there is no other programme besides this. But constructive programme is not like Truth and non-violence valid for all time. Take the charkha. If you go to the North Pole or to the Himalayan peaks or to Tibet, the talk of cotton won’t do. Still I say that the constructive programme is for the good of our millions. Legislatures are only for a few. But the constructive programme is for all. Therefore it is right for me to stay with the thirty crores who stand apart from the three crore. Only a few will go, can go, into the Legislatures. I have told people who have written to me asking my advice not to get themselves into this. But they did the very opposite saying they couldn’t help it. Sardar took away forcibly even those people whom we wanted to keep. The example of Dr. Gopichand of the Punjab is before you. The same thing happened with others. Sardar was responsible for this betrayal. I had to say that what he had done was right. If he had not done it he would have been defeated at any rate in Gujarat. If I had told Rajaji not to go, he would not have gone. But if today I am asked, I shall say that what he did was right. The matter has an interesting history. Rajaji asked my opinion, but after going, not before. He considered it his duty to go and he went. I said I did not like it. But he did the right thing. Much work has been done in Madras. The workers there are members of the Spinners’ Association. Most of the work was done through them.
Today Rajagopalachari has left. Tomorrow if I ask Sardar Vallabhbhai, Rajendra Babu or Jamnalalji, they may also leave. But then our Sangh will be reduced into a small band.

We want that everyone should become a member of the Sangh. But the question before me today is, if we stop everyone who is with us from going into the Conuncils, will it not harm our own work? For where will the Congress find men? And members of the Gandhi Seva Sangh did just this. I feel that they have done their duty. If they had not done so the Congress would not have been victorious in the same degree as it is. The Sangh is of no importance as compared with the Congress. The Congress is of the millions. We cannot leave it. It has accepted this programme on a permanent basis. It is not that they have accepted it under duress. The thing is clear before us. We cannot give it up. Those who go into the Legislatures today do not go into Government’s Legislatures. They go into their own Legislatures. What I have said is the truth. We have become the representatives of the people. Formerly only the representatives of the Government or of a handful of people went into the Legislatures. The representatives of the people have laid down their condition before the Government. If Truth and non-violence have to be practised in Legislatures, who will do so if not you? We have to increase the strength of the Congress. You may ask, well, why in that case have I gone out of the Congress? If I have gone out of the Congress, it is in order to be able to serve it better. So long as the Congress needs my services I shall continue to render them. I do not feel any disappointment. I have not gone to settle in Segaon out of any frustration. Whatever little strength I have is for the Congress. The Congress is mine. The ideas I am placing before you have been influenced by the opinions of you all. In brief, what I wish to say is that we have to find a place for this programme. But the restriction is that we shall continue our own work till then. If our leader, Kishorelal—not Vallabhbhai—orders us, we shall go into the Councils also.

Dharmadhikari asks whether as satyagrahis we can enter institutions opposed to us to voice our opposition there. Yes, why shouldn’t we? But you must always remember the limits of satyagraha. We shall not go to betray or to offer violence. It may even be our duty to go in order to offer our open opposition. But here this is not the question. Legislatures are not institutions opposed to us. I like Legislatures. They are mine. The Governor has been made the head. But the institution is mine. The Governor of Orissa knows this. With the help of Legislatures I wish to destroy this system. We are going into the Legislatures to gain strength. We are not going into the Legislatures to paralyse them. We go even to our enemy in order to change his heart. Supposing there is a meeting of drunkards and it invites us to go and speak on the evils of drinking. We shall certainly go. Someone may say they may burn us. Well, what of it? We shall die. What is important is why we go. Do we go to advance Truth or to obstruct it? Let us go into the Legislatures to pursue Truth. After all the Legislatures are ours. Aren’t they? The majority there is ours. Now that we have an opportunity to accept the challenge, shall we stay out? When we can openly go into the arena to meet our enemy, why shouldn’t we? We do not go to beg, but to sap the enemy’s strength. Have we spent five lakhs or seven lakhs of rupees for nothing? Today we have had to spend all this money. When the Congress has risen in people’s esteem we will not have to spend even a cowrie. We boast of a constructive programme. I have been shouting in the pages of Harijan, how many charkha graduates are there? How many graduates for removal of untouchability? The answer is zero. Had conditions been different, the question of spending anything would never have arisen. We have to mobilize all our energies in order to serve. We have to march fully observing Truth and non-violence. We must always be armed with the two weapons of fearlessness and discipline. We will have to use them in Parliament. Carlyle once said that members of the House of Commons had not much need of common sense. This is bound to be so where there is democracy. The main thing a discipline. Obey your leader and ply your taklis there in silence. We need just such men. They need no legal or constitutional knowledge. Why should we not go into our own house? It is true everyone cannot go. Still everyone has to vote. I do not agree with Appa. Everybody has to be a primary voter. You may ask me why I have not become a voter. That is for a different reason. Not that I have not been given the right to vote, only I did not want to be a voter. My position is different and it is valid only for myself. The members of the Sangh are votaries of Truth. He whom the Gandhi Seva Sangh orders to go will go. The question is not of individuals. It is not a question of temptation of self-interest. He who goes there out of greed or self-interest will be or betraying not only the Gandhi Seva Sangh but also Truth. He who thinks of the charkha all the 24 hours can do so in the Legislatures also. He does not have to exercise his mind there. He has merely to raise his band at a signal from his leader. It is not a predicament. It is our dharma. We are the servants of Daridranarayana. We shall go there as servants and if the Congress gives the call. If we can form ministeries on our own conditions, then we have found the way to swaraj. If such men go into the Legislatures, we shall not meet with defeat even in one of the eleven provinces. If the Congress does not call us we should remain where we are. This is not a question of superior or inferior. The constructive programme and this programme are both equal.\

VOL.71: 25 FEBRUARY, 1937-5 JULY, 1937

As regards the oath of allegiance, I should ask no one to go there who has a conscientious objection to the oath. It is not a religious oath, so far as I understand the constitution, and it is wholly consistent with the demand for immediate and concrete independence.

[From Hindi]

Gandhi Seva Sanghke Tritiya Varshik Adhiveshan (Hudli, Karnatak) ka Vivaran pp. 24-30

166. SACRIFICE OF RAS

At the instance of Sardar, Shrimati Bhaktibehn\(^1\) Shri Ashabhai, Shri Ravishankar\(^2\), who is the priest of the Dharalas and the Baraiyas, and Shri Ravjibhai\(^3\) approached me on behalf of the Kaira district. Sardar also happened to be present. These representatives had heard that I was inclined to hold the Congress session in the Bardoli taluk. I had read the report of the enquiry committee. After a long and friendly discussion, I think I was able to persuade the representatives to shift the venue of the Congress session to the Bardoli taluk. I had only one strong argument to support me. Kaira is a strong district. No one is ignorant of the sacrifice made by Ras. I also believe that Ras would do credit to whatever task it takes upon itself. However, when other districts or taluks wish to compete, it is the dharma of the strong competitor to withdraw in favour of the weak. I suggested such a sacrifice to the representatives, and they accepted my proposal. When Darbar Saheb heard of this decision, he was annoyed and he wrote to me an affectionate but strongly worded letter in which he justified by many arguments the worthiness of the Kaira district.

I would give only one reply to those who hold such a view: If you wish to add to the strength of the Congress, i.e., of Gujarat, will you allow those who are weak to become strong, or allow those who are strong to become even more so? Ras has become more famous for its strength in the already strong Kaira district. Hence the above

---

1. What follows is from Harijan, 1-5-1937
2. Bhaktiba, wife of Darbar Gopaldas Desai
3. Ravishankar Vyas, popularly known as Ravishankar Maharaj
4. Raojibhai Patel was my first and final reply to the supporters of Ras. Many other things were discussed in the mean time because, where many side-issues have to be considered, a single consideration does not make a person act; there are many factors—palpable and less palpable—that must be considered.

In whichever village of Gujarat the Congress is held, all Gujaratis have to work for it on the understanding that it is being held in Gujarat taken as a whole. The most important task at the annual session of the Congress should be to make the exhibition impressive.
It is an indispensable part of the session. We increase our efficiency by organizing a beautiful exhibition; hundreds of thousands of persons get valuable training; the entire rural area becomes revitalized as our primary purpose is to encourage cottage industries. Hence I hope that Gujaratis will forget that the Congress is to be held in the Bardoli taluk and keep reminding themselves that it is to be held in Gujarat and use all their energies in consolidating the constructive work of the Congress.

Gujarat is backward in many matters. In one matter it lags behind all other Provinces—in abolishing untouchability. The caste discrimination which is practised here is not seen in any other Provinces. That kind of discrimination should be totally done away with. Gujarat also falls behind other Provinces in so far as the production of khadi is concerned. In fact Bardoli had taken the pledge that within six months the spinning-wheel would ply in every home and no other cloth but khadi would be used there and untouchability would be totally wiped out. Will Bardoli and the entire people of Gujarat start making preparation from today so that khadi would be really introduced? Hundreds of thousands of rupees are spent by Gujarat in the name of goseva but does anybody know the value of mother cow? How much cow’s milk is produced? And how much difficulty is experienced in selling what little is produced! It is Sardar’s pledge to supply cow’s milk to everyone at the Congress session. If that pledge is to be kept, Bardoli taluk should start collecting cows right now and an exhibition of cows and bullocks, the like of which has never been seen, should be held at the time of the Congress session. Moreover, Surat district is notorious for drinking. If the evil is totally given up in that district before the Congress session, that would be a very creditable achievement. Women can play an important role in all these tasks. Will they do so? Will the Patidars, the Dharalas, Baraiyas, Thakores, whatever you call them, plunge into the tasks I have mentioned, looking upon the holding of the Congress in Bardoli taluk as if it was being held in the Kaira district or in Ras itself? The sacrifice of Ras is great; so is its renown. If, despite the Congress not being held there, Ras makes its own handsome contribution, it will add to its own prestige and to that extent strengthen itself also.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 18-4-1937

167. ADVICE TO NEWLY MARRIED COUPLES

HUDDL,
[April 18, 1937]

You must know that I do not believe in ceremonies, except to the extent that they awaken in us a sense of duty. I have had that attitude of mind ever since I began to think for myself. The mantras you have repeated and the vows you have taken were all in Sanskrit, but they were all translated for you. We had the Sanskrit text because I know that the Sanskrit word has a power under the influence of which one would love to come.

One of the wishes expressed by the husband during the ceremony is that the bride may be the mother of a good and healthy son. The wish did not shock me. It does not mean that procreation is obligatory but means that if progeny is wanted, marriage performed in a strictly religious spirit is essential. He who does not want a child need not marry at all. Marriage for the satisfaction of sexual appetite is no marriage. It is Vyabhichara—concupiscence. Today’s ceremony, therefore, means that the sexual act is permitted only when there is a clear desire by both for a child. The whole conception is sacred. The act has therefore to be performed prayerfully. It is not preceded by the usual courtship designed to provide sexual excitement and pleasure. Such union may only be once in a lifetime, if no other child is desired. Those who are not morally and physically healthy have no business to unite, and if they do, it is vyabhichara—concupiscence. You must unlearn the lesson, if you have learnt it before, that marriage is for the satisfaction of animal appetite. It is a superstition. The whole ceremony is performed in the presence of the sacred fire. Let the fire make ashes of all the lust in you.

I would also ask you to disabuse yourselves of another

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”. The newly married couples were Manu and Surendra Mashruwala, and Nirmala and Ishwardas. The weddings took place on the same day. “All outward show and ceremony was eschewed, no invitations to friends or relations were issued . . .” Gandhiji addressed his remarks to the parties privately.

2 From Gandhi—1915-1948 superstition which is rampant nowadays. It is being said that restraint and abstinence are wrong and free satisfaction of the sexual appetite and free love is the most natural thing. There was never a more ruinous superstition. You may be incapable of attaining the ideal, your flesh may be weak, but do not therefore lower the ideal, do not make irreligion your religion. In your weak moments remember what I am telling you. The remembrance of this solemn occasion may well steady and restrain you. The very purpose of marriage is restraint and sublimation of the sexual passion. If there is any other purpose, marriage is no consecration, but marriage for other purposes besides having progeny.

You are being united in marriage as friends and equals. If the husband is called swamin, the wife is swamini—each master of the other, each helpmate of the other, each co-operating with the other in the performance of life’s tasks and duties. To you boys I would say that if you are gifted with better intellects and richer emotions, infect the girls with them. Be their true teachers and guides, help them and guide them, but never hinder them or misguide them. Let there be complete harmony of thought and word and deed between you, may you have no secrets from each other, may you be one in soul.

Don’t be hypocrites, don’t break your health in the vain effort of performing what may be impossible for you. Restraint never ruins one’s health. What ruins one’s health is not restraint but outward suppression. A really self-restrained person grows every day from strength to strength and from peace to more peace. The very first step in self-restraint is the restraint of thoughts. Understand your limitations and do only as much as you can. I have placed the ideal before you—the right angle. Try as best as you can to attain the right angle. But if you fail, there is no cause for grief or shame. I have simply explained to you that marriage is consecration, a new birth, even as the sacred thread ceremony is a consecration and a new birth.
Let not what I have told you alarm you or weaken you. Always aim at complete harmony of thought and word and deed. Always aim at purifying your thoughts and everything will be well. There is nothing more potent than thought. Deed follows word and word follows thought. The world is the result of a mighty thought, and where the thought is mighty and pure the result is always mighty and pure. I want you to go hence armed with the armour of a noble ideal, and I assure you no temptation can harm you, no impurity can touch you.

Remember the various ceremonies that have been explained to you. Look at the simple-looking ceremony of madhuparka. The whole world is full of madhu—sweet nectar or honey—if only you will partake of it after the rest of the world has taken its share of it. It means enjoyment by means of renunciation.

QUESTION: But if there is no desire for progeny, should there be no marriage?

ANSWER: Certainly not. I do not believe in Platonic marriages. In certain rare cases men are known to have married women to protect the latter and not for any physical union at all. But those cases are very rare indeed. You must read all that I have written on pure married life. What I read in the Mahabharata is daily growing upon me. Vyasa is described therein as having performed niyoga. He is not described as beautiful, but he was the reverse of it. His form is represented as terrible, he made no amorous gestures, but he smeared his whole body with ghee before he performed the union. He performed the act not for lust but for procreation. The desire for a child is perfectly natural, and once the desire is satisfied there should be no union.

Nurturing carnal desires is a transgression of the law. The desire for progeny is a natural desire. In woman, one finds that there is a desire to become a mother. That desire is not the same as sexual desire. Anyone who wishes to become a mother, once she has had sexual intercourse, will have no further desire for it. She will keep thinking only of her child, she will make efforts to see that her child is healthy, free from any diseases and is born with the best possible sanskaras. This natural rule is practised among animals as well. The reason why lustfulness is increasing in the world is that no one is aware of this kind of marriage.

This pure dharma is not difficult to practise. Just as even dry roti arouses the interest of anyone who is hungry, similarly, the practice of dharma, self-control, also becomes interesting. Anyone who practises self-restraint finds it easy to develop his other senses. Manu calls the first son alone dharmaja, all the rest are kamaja (born out of desire). Our Shastras have been written from experience, not for the sake of writing. The practice of seemingly difficult rules (laws) would become easy if we keep purifying our thoughts and practising these.

That gives in a nutshell the law of sexual relations. And what is God but the Law? And to obey God is to perform the Law. Remember that you were thrice asked to repeat: “I will not transgress the Law in any respect.” Even if we had a handful of men and women prepared to abide by the Law, we should have a race of men and women stalwart and true.

Remember that I really came to enjoy my married life after I

---

1 The two paragraphs which follow are translated from Harijanbandhu.

2 Inherited innate tendencies ceased to look at Ba sexually. I took the vow of abstinence when I was in the prime of youth and health, when I was young enough to enjoy married life in the accepted sense of the term. I saw in a flash that I was born, as we all are, for a sacred mission. I did not know this when I was married. But on coming to my senses I felt that I must see that the marriage subserved the mission for which I was born. Then indeed did I realize true dharma. True happiness came into our lives only after the vow was taken.¹

That dharma of restraint can only be practised when all the things which nurture sexual desires are renounced, when sharing the same bed as well as suggestive gestures are eschewed. I realized all this when I became awakened. If the satisfying of sexual desires is not the purpose of marriage, what then is its purpose? I realized that public service was the answer to this question and I was also able to convince Ba of this. Although she is illiterate she stood beside me in all that I did and became the object of praise, not because of me but in her ownright. She may look frail but at the age of sixty-nine she can keep toiling day and night. If, however, we had given in to sexual craving, what would have been our plight?

And yet I woke up late in the sense that I had lived the married life for some years. You are lucky enough to be aroused in good time. Circumstances when I was married were as unpropitious as they could be. For you they are as propitious as they could be. There was one thing though that I possessed and that carried me through. It was the armour of truth. That protected me and saved me. Truth has been the very foundation of my life. Brahmacharya and ahimsa were born later out of truth. Whatever, therefore, you do, be true to yourselves and to the world. Hide not your thoughts. If it is shameful to reveal them, it is more shameful to think them.

_Harijan_, 24-4-1937, and _Harijanbandhu_, 25-4-1937

168. SPEECH AT THREAD CEREMONY HUDLI

[April 18, 1937]²

Do you know that from today you have become _dwijas_? What does the word _dwija_ mean? It means twice-born. Today you have taken a new birth, so you have acquired knowledge today of which you were ignorant so far. The _shastri_ has told you that you are now worthy of studying the Vedas. That, of course, you will do, but the

---

¹ The paragraph which follows is translated from _Harijanbandhu_
² From _Gandhi—1915-1948_
³ Brother and son of Mahadev Desai fuller meaning of “studying of the Vedas” is a life in conformity with dharma. So far your life was devoid of the consciousness of dharma and adharmā but now you have acquired that consciousness. During a famine, the sage Vishwamitra stole meat out of hunger. Having done that, he had to perform many ceremonies before eating it. No meal can be taken without taking a bath and performing the sandhyā. Hence he began these ceremonies. But, while in the middle of these activities, he realized how low he had fallen! He had committed theft merely to appease his stomach, and that too of meat. He who was satisfied with fruit and vegetables and had reached the vanaprastha stage of his life had coveted meat! These thoughts made him aware of his dharma. He took the piece of meat back to the butcher from whom he had stolen it and begged forgiveness. The latter was embarrassed at the sage seeking his forgiveness and said, “King among sages, this shop is yours, satisfy your hunger as much as you wish.” This made a deep impression on the sage. He told the butcher that as from that day the latter was his guru. There follows a long conversation between the two which is narrated in the Mahabharata. However, it is irrelevant for your purpose. I narrated this story to you so that you would get an idea of what religious life is like. You have already taken a vow to keep your thoughts pure for twelve years and study while observing brahmacharya, but as from today you have begun thinking from the standpoint of dharma. You should not make the mistakes you have been making in the past as you have a new birth now. And, before you do anything you shall ask yourself whether what you are doing is right or wrong. The sacred thread is useful from this standpoint. Otherwise, there is no need to believe that dwija means a Brahmin. A Brahmin is one who has awareness of Brahman. If, after receiving the sacred thread, we do not take a new birth, if we do not begin a life in accordance with dharma, it makes little difference whether we wear it or not. I do not ask anyone to wear the sacred thread, as it has become a mere outward ceremony. But those who wish to imbibe consciousness of dharma from the ceremony may well wear the sacred thread.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 25-4-1937
169. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

KUMRI ASHRAM, BELGAUM DISTRICT,
April 19, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I hope you got my letter[s] from Poona and Hudli. From the night of 17th we have been having continuous rain. The camp was not constructed for rains. We have been obliged to shift where there is cover. Therefore we are overcrowded. And yet there is no sign of rain stopping.

It is a pity Munnalal should have fever again. I hope you are having the papers and the post regularly.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]
The wedding\(^1\) went off well.

From the original: C.W. 6378. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9844

170. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

April 19, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

Your bundle of saris has been safely conveyed. I hope you have been helping Mirabehn as much as you can. If you understand the reason behind every process, then you may be sure that your intellect will develop with surprising speed. Tell Vasumatibehn that I am not writing to her today. I hope she has been taking hip-baths regularly and taking milk without the cream. Here it has been raining since the 17th evening. Everything has been upset. Now only the discussions regarding the work of the Sangh which had been planned are going on.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7064. Also C.W. 4556. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

\(^1\) Of Manu Gandhi with Surendra Mashruwala; vide “Advice to Newly Married Coupies”, 18-4-1937

162 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
171. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

April 19, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

You have again fallen ill. How is that? You ought not to [impair] your health . . . You must give up . . . for a long time. That means you should not take wheat. Fruit . . . Live on milk, curds . . . You can eat dates. Do not overexert yourself. Go to bed at 9 p.m. Drink boiled water. You must learn the art of not falling ill.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8588. Also C.W. 7008. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

172. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

April 19, 1937

CHI. LILA,

Dwarkadas seems to have committed some mistake in the diet. I would prefer that he should go to Rajkot. But it would be equally good if he came to Wardha. In any case it would be definitely good for him to leave Bombay. Possibly he may not get at Wardha the facilities he will have at Rajkot. Your bread was altogether ill-baked. Nobody could eat it. Everybody had to throw it away. You will learn in time by keeping on trying like this, but one should draw a lesson from every error. A mango tree does not bear fruit in a short time. Haste will not pay in learning cooking.

We shall reach on the 24th.

Here it has been raining all the time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9585. Also C.W. 6557. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

1 The original is damaged at several places.
173. LETTER TO C. RAJGOPALACHARI

HUDLI, April 20, 1937

DEAR C. R.,

Personally I think it is better to ignore Rajah’s letter. But you may take notice of it, if you think it necessary in the public interest. No time for more as the bell for attending morning prayer has gone.

Love.

BAPU

SHRI C. RAJGOPALACHARI

49 FAZALULLAH ROAD.

TYAGARAYA NAGAR

MADRAS

From a photostat: G.N. 2061

174. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING, HUDLI-III

April 20, 1937

For today you may consider me the President. For I shall have to do most of the talking particularly on the subject of Kishorelal’s intended resignation. He insists on resigning as President. I do not like it. I had no suspicion at all of his intention to resign. There is something in it which is contrary to dharma. He came to see me in the morning. That is why I have been late by a few minutes. In the course of our talk I asked him a few questions. From his answers I could only conclude that what he intends to do is contrary to dharma. It is impossible of course that Kishorelal should deliberately do anything which is contrary to dharma. He is a godfearing man. But even godfearing men sometimes do things, albeit unknowingly, which are contrary to dharma. I say this from my own experience as well as that of others. The intention always is to pursue dharma. The effect is violation of it. If Kishorelal persists in his intention to resign there is going to be a violation of dharma. I can cite many instances of the kind, only I do not wish to take up your time. I did not of course wish to press Kishorelal. I did question him thoroughly. From his own answers I could see that his resignation would bring no good either to the Sangh or to him personally. He himself is the best judge of his dharma. I cannot presume to judge for him. My duty is merely to help him in what he may consider his dharma. I would have done so in such a situation. But he was not able to say definitely that that was his dharma.

1 Kishorelal Mashruwala

Gomati was with him. I have respect for her intelligence. I inquired from her. She could not say much, except that Kishorelal had been distressed during the last two days. In my opinion this was not a sufficient reason. It would not justify my telling Kishorelal to do as he contemplated. Then I sent for Nathji. He is very intimate with Kishorelal. Kishorelal has great respect for him. I knew that in case of doubt Kishorelal would seek his advice. I also know him well. I asked him. I saw that he was inclined to agree with me. He told me he would have a talk with Kishorelal. I had no intention of making use of Nathji’s influence with him. If both Kishorelal and Gomati clearly felt that it was Kishorelal’s dharma to resign I would ask you to let him go. But Nathji told me that he could not say anything in the matter and that I should order Kishorelal. Well, generally I do not like to order even children. But sometimes I order even old men. I agreed to do so. I told Kishorelal that he could not leave at this juncture. It will not distress Kishorelal to obey because he is conscious of dharma. He has agreed.

I have told you this because you must know. It is now for you and for me to remove the doubt that assails him. We are votaries of truth and non-violence. None of course can boast of fully pursuing truth and non-violence. To boast of any such thing would be conceit. But while we may not boast we have a right to try. Kishorelal fears we are giving up truth and non-violence. The parliamentary programme has created an enthusiasm amongst us. We have come to feel that swaraj will be more quickly obtained through that programme. Therefore the question of the means employed ceases to be considered. The brute in man is awakened. I concede that this possibility is there in our accepting the programme. And it is of course agreed that there is a good deal of the brute in man. Externally God has made us quite different from animals—for instance, we have hands which animals do not have. But the inner distinction is of much greater importance. A sign of this inner distinction is man’s ability to judge between the essential and the inessential. The brute in us will show itself in any case. May be, in the Councils programme there are greater chances for the brute to manifest itself. But we have been born as men, which will be justified if we subdue the beast. We have to bring out through our conduct the distinction between us and the animals. In this lies our humanness. It is not godliness. I know the Councils programme is such that we may indulge in abusing the British. We may deliver harsh-worded speeches. There is a lot of room for conceit, too. We have to keep away from all this. So we have to have a man who has an awareness of this. That is why we made Kishorelal our President. Gandhi Seva Sangh’s work cannot be carried on with money. If it could, we would have proposed Jamnalalji as our President and he would have agreed. But he told us to look for a fitter person and withdrew. If Jamnalalji collects a crore of rupees for the Sangh it will not benefit the Sangh, it will only harm it. Kishorelal does not have a pice he can call his own. He was considered fit to be the President.

1 Kedarnath Kulkarni

Kishorelal’s argument is that the parliamentary programme is full of temptations. But is that any reason why we should keep away from it? Should we not face the temptations? Kishorelal answers that so far we have remained untouched by temptations, that even today we look upon the things with suspicion. Then there are a number of important things to do. Under the circumstances, why should we unnecessarily take upon ourselves this botheration? I say you are going at my instance. The responsibility is mine. So far we have not gone. But can anyone say our hearts, too, were untouched? From the point of view of truth and non-violence, it can be dharma to accept something that we had earlier rejected. Our dharma is not one-sided. So much for Kishorelal’s doubts. Then he also says that the language of the resolutions of the Congress these days does not give expression to truth. This charge, too, is one-sided. He who proposes a resolution expresses his thoughts. The resolutions of the Congress also express the truth as the Congress sees it. We smell untruth in them. The resolution says that we are going into the Councils to wreck the Constitution. How can we show consideration for what we intend to destroy? Before 1920 the feeling was: why look towards a thing which we do not wish to accept?

Kishorelal feels that so far we had kept the flow of water blocked and that now we are breaking the dyke, which must release the water. So long we had talked of boycotting Councils, schools, courts, etc., and of destroying them. Today we are speaking a different language. There are others also who share this feeling. All this is being said with reference to the manifesto of the Congress. How can we consider the language of the manifesto? The manifesto is not that of Jawaharlal alone. Vallabhbhai, Rajendra Babu and I have our share in it. I have not forgotten it. I read it over two or three times. It is not contradicted by the Congress resolution concerning acceptance.
of office. The practical part of that resolution has been drafted by me. Jawaharlal thought that it was not in conformity with the remaining three-fourths of the resolution and with the manifesto. He interprets the manifesto in one way, I in another. I see nothing wrong in it. The language is open to two different interpretations; of this there is no doubt. But a satyagrahi can use language which may be interpreted in two different ways. Truth, as I know it, does not demand that the words a satyagrahi utters should have only one meaning. What he says may have not two but several different meanings. The condition merely is that the meaning should not be hidden, words should not be used for deception and should be necessary [to convey the meaning]. The intention in using the language should not be to hide truth. When we frankly speak a language admitting two interpretations, we are not giving up truth. Sometimes it also happens that we intend only one meaning but those who hear us read two meanings in what we say. Here also truth is not violated. An outstanding instance is the Vedas. The Gita also has two meanings: one spiritual, the other material. There are also various other meanings. We cannot say the language of Tulsidas has only one meaning. So many meanings are read in his language that poor Tulsidas would never have imagined. But this does not prove either the authors or their commentators false. The language of the servant of truth does not always yield only one meaning.

There is nothing to fear if in the same resolution Jawaharlal reads one meaning and I another. I have told him that his own interpretation may not necessarily be true. I had a discussion with him on the subject of office acceptance. The resolution was an independent document. Jawaharlal’s contention was that it was not in conformity with the background of the manifesto. I told him that if he so desired I could make it conform to it. For when I say that I shall wreck the Constitution I mean I shall wreck it through non-violence. Please remember this condition of mine. I can bring about freedom by remaining inside it. If we have courage and independence of spirit, we can wreck the Constitution through non-violence. Jawaharlal does not think it is possible though he would of course be happy if this could be done. He mistrusts the human race a little. He says we would not be able to do anything there. He therefore places his faith in class struggle. This is the fundamental difference between him and me.

I say capital is insentient but the capitalist is not so. It is possible to change his heart. He says this has never happened before. He quotes instances from history in support of his contention. I hear what he says. But my contention is, if it is not possible through non-violence to do what has not been done so far, which is the other power with which it can be done? If it cannot be done, then non-violence loses all significance. Never till I die can I accept this—provided of course I retain my ideas till I die. Today it is my firm conviction that non-violence will triumph. Even if we are all defeated non-violence will still triumph. I shall continue to say it until my last moment. Personally I would want to change the heart of the Government also. That is why we are going into the Councils. If I accept office it will be to gain swaraj. If we cannot secure office no harm will be done. I loose nothing. In either case I win. He who considers it improper to accept office with a view to wrecking the Constitution will naturally not accept office. But if we come pledging ourselves to truth, non-violence, fearlessness and unselfishness and accept Ministerships on our own conditions, we can win the battle of swaraj and establish a constitution of our own making in place of the present one. Jawaharlal does not think so. There is no point in hiding the fact that he holds opinions which are different from mine.

\[1 \text{ Vide Appendix “Extracts from the Congress Election Manifesto”, 22-8-1936.}\]

Obviously Rajendra Babu, Vallabhbhai, Rajaji and others are inclined in one way, Jawaharlal in another. Nevertheless we are all working together. It is certainly a matter of wonder. But it is a necessity. After all we have to live in the world. We have to work with patriots holding views different from our own. Therefore we have to work in a spirit of co-operation and compromise. For this we shall have to take the initiative. There is no doubt that Jawaharlal is inclined to be rash. He says harsh things. Sometimes he calls people names. But he knows the worth of his colleagues. He understands discipline and restraint. Jawaharlal works with his colleagues in the belief that one day he will convert them to his view and he hopes that his contact with them will one day change their opinions. Three ideologies have thus been in conflict in the Congress. Even when I was in the Working Committee there was this conflict between two or three ideologies. I purposely made Vithalbhai the secretary. Even so the drafting of the resolutions always had to be done by me. They always admitted of two interpretations. I saw no objection to this because I have to carry the others with me. Truth and non-violence are the creed of the Congress. Still no one has accepted them as their creed. Those who have accepted them as a creed belong to this Sangh. Having admitted that we have so far pursued truth and non-violence, Kishorelal asks, supposing we adopt policies in future which would mean giving up of truth and non-violence in practice, then? I say to him, “In that case your leaving the Sangh will not help. In that case you will have to wind up the Sangh, you will have to bury it. You must then say that neither you nor anyone else can run the Sangh.”

He asks me, “Who is he to say this.” I tell him that it is his right. He is the chief of the Sangh. It is therefore also his duty. If the members of the Sangh practise untruth and violence, he will then have to say that it should be wound up. Others may persist in continuing the Sangh. But in that case it will have ceased to be a body wedded to truth and non-violence. I do not say this without deliberation. I have thought a good deal over the matter. I have ordered Kishorelal to continue at his post. He has agreed to stay and he is not sorry for it. This tale now ends here.

Let me now explain the policy we have adopted on the Councils question. The resolution does not mean that all of you are now free to go to the Councils. We have only one programme— the constructive programme. Swaraj depends only upon this. You have to devote yourself only to this. I do not even dream, no one ever does, that we can secure swaraj through Legislative Assemblies. But if we can promote the constructive programme even with the help of Legislative Assemblies, why should we not do so? We shall certainly further the constructive programme through these bodies. We shall also work outside. Then we shall certainly secure swaraj.

Jawaharlal believes that we can fight the Government there. Fight we certainly can and fight we may. But we shall not sacrifice truth and non-violence even one whit. We have to prepare for civil disobedience. Jawaharlal also says that we have to prepare for civil disobedience. But he does not consider non-violence the only means. To him non-violence is not the supreme dharma. If for the sake of the freedom of India he feels compelled to cut the throats of Englishmen, he will not hesitate. But he will do it openly, not in a clandestine manner.

This is not my policy. I have given the sovereign place to non-violence. Swaraj coming through violence will be no swaraj for me. I shall therefore never agree to it. You also share my view. To Jawaharlal violence may well not be dispensable, but if swaraj could be gained through non-violence he would be happy. He, therefore, co-operates with me in my experiments. We are adopting a new policy. We are going into the Councils to strengthen the old policy. We are there to break the walls. What will happen if, in the name of the three crores of voters, other people go into the Councils and say that they do not want the charkha? I say that you have to go to Councils to further the cause of the charkha. You go there as the representatives of the people. You will say that the charkha had been going on even before.
It is true, but it has been going on without thought. If we had plied the charkha knowing its implications, we should have secured swaraj by now, and it would not have been necessary for us to go to the Councils. Let us ply the charkha with knowledge. I again affirm what I had said in 1920 that if we ply the charkha with knowledge, swaraj is in our hands. You will say that I make statements which have no meanings. I do say things which have many meanings. Here, too, the charkha has to be given a wide interpretation. I still say that if the whole country plies the charkha with deliberation we shall not have so much as to mention the Councils. Today that is not so.

Today we must come into close contact with the representatives of the three crores of voters. We must take from them as much as we can. Why should we not? It does not mean that all of us should go to the Councils or that all those who wish to go should be permitted to do so. We shall inquire fully into the merits of each case. We shall also need a parliamentary committee. It must have both Rajendra Babu and Vallabhbhai on it. This means that we are not opening the doors of the Legislatures for all the members of the Sangh. Nor are we opening the doors of the Sangh. We are opening the doors of the Legislatures only for those who have pledged themselves to the constructive programme and without whom the Congress risks losing seats. Let us leave Kishorelal to decide the matter. No one else can decide this.

If tomorrow Satyamurti asks me if I would admit him into the Sangh, I shall say no. My relations with Satyamurti are excellent. Sometimes out of consideration for me he lets his daughter ply a charkha. But he does not believe in the charkha and he cannot be a member of the Sangh, however much help he may render us. This is by way of an instance. This shows that we have not opened our doors to everyone. We have opened the doors for our own people. Supposing we want that Jethalal should not go, shall we give up the Anantpur seat? If Dr. Khare says that he has to be sent, I may say that he is an uncouth person, that he does not know anything beyond the charkha, cannot even speak properly. But if nevertheless Dr. Khare insists on Jethalal being sent, I shall say to Jethalal: ‘Please go and ply your charkha there. At least one votary of Charkha was found necessary there. I am glad of it. If everyone going there believes in the charkha, the effectiveness of the charkha will increase.’

Let us therefore try and see that everyone going there should be a votary of the charkha. But we must not appease the people. We must not flatter them. Such people have gone. Sardar tells me that if Dr. Gopichand had not gone, we would have lost the seat. There have been several such people. If it has not been the case everywhere it is a matter of shame. If everywhere we can send representatives of the charkha and the villagers, we should do so. You will become really capable when you develop for your work a thousand times the love that you feel for it today. Then you will not go on your own but under popular pressure. If you have a socialist rival he will withdraw in your favour. Only then is there any point in your going. If the socialist has a chance of going and he does not see any need for you to go, you should let him.

I do not wish to cause mutual quarrels. I am one who left the Congress in order to avoid quarrels. When I was in the Congress I said I wanted Kelkar. I had sufficient faith in my own skill to feel that he would do the least harm if he worked with me. I want that it should be made impossible for anyone else to go except those who have faith in the charkha. If Vallabhbhai gives up the charkha, he will no longer remain the Sardar of Gujarat. And if in that case he fights the election on his own and wins, it would be a matter of shame for the Sangh, it would be a matter of shame for Bardoli, a matter of shame for Gujarat. It would also be a matter of shame for us. Whom then shall we send? One is told that the charkhawalas have no intellect. This is true to some extent. If we ply the charkha like automatons, it is no discipline.

There is the story of Ekalavya in the Mahabharata. Think over it. It is not mere poetry. There is truth in it. Clay is not sentient and an image has no strength, but for Ekalavya, the image of Dronacharya was not clay. He saw in it Guru Dronacharya himself. How could his indomitable faith fail? If we have such a faith in the charkha, it can become for us a living image. We can then put into it all our resolve. The charkha is for us a symbol of ahimsa. The real thing here is not the image, but our attitude towards it. In one sense the world is real, in another God alone is the one thing real. Both are true in different ways. If we can see God in our symbol it represents truth for us. Non-violence is not for fools. We will have to use our intelligence. Non-violence has place both for knowledge and action, that is, both for the intellect and the organs of the body. Today these are used for the destruction of non-violence. What we want is that these should become hand-maidens of non-violence. Only when we make the organs of our body hand-maidens of non-violence will they acquire strength. If non-violence cannot be effective in this field, where else can it be so? I shall not leave any field out of fear. If I leave any field fearing that non-violence will be of no use, then there can be no such thing as non-violence. And what field shall I give up? My body will continue to function, the organs of the body will continue to be active. I do not wish to commit suicide. I shall not block my ears and my nose. What then shall I do? There is only one way open to me and that is to make all the limbs of my body hand-maidens of non-violence.

The other method was tried by Kishorelal. That was many years ago. He went into solitude to discipline himself. When a train whistled past, it broke his solitude. One day when I went to him on my usual visit, he told me that the whistling of the train troubled him and that he was thinking of plugging his ears with cottonwool or rubber. I told him to try that method also. But it was only an external aid. He was not able to concentrate on God, so he heard the sound of the whistle. Kishorelal himself saw this and so when the next day I told him to put cottonwool or rubber into his ears he said that that was no longer necessary. We have ears but they are not for misuse. The same is true of the other organs. The organs are there to sustain the body. Our mouth eats to nourish the body. If we eat for the pleasure of the palate we shall not be pursuing non-violence.

Even if someone forcibly sends us to the Councils we shall have our own views. Kishorelal fears once we go there we shall forget all our ideas. I share his fear. But why should I shirk because of it? If you do not have a living faith in the charkha and the rest of the constructive programme of the Congress, the fears of Kishorelal will prove true. But I have faith in you. If I did not have it, I would not have come here. Why should I distrust you? I have frankly told you everything. There is here no departure from policy. Last evening the language used was different but that is the way with language. Language acquires lucidity in the course of work. There is no doubt that harmony of thought, word and deed is the sign of truth. But ideas advance and language is left behind. I wondered why I was not able to convince Kishorelal. My language was vague. I listened to the discussion and my ideas became clear. But the language did not become clear. When I meditate after giving thought to a matter my language becomes clearer and clearer each day. But I have not yet had time for this.

In accepting the Councils programme we are not getting away from non-violence. In taking this step, I am making you advance two steps in the direction of non-violence. If you can understand them and act accordingly you shall during this year make progress such as you have never been able to make before. The time has come when India must choose either this way or that. It seems to me that at this juncture you cannot keep yourselves shut up in a room. It is yet to be shown whether as a nation we are moving towards truth and non-violence or not. It would be cowardice for you to turn away from three crores of voters. Even if we have truth and non-violence on our tongues and something else in our hearts, what I have said will bear fruit. If you are not hypocrites you will go to the Assemblies with full faith in non-violence and advance towards the goal. If you prove to be hypocrites it will not distress me. It would do us good if hypocrisy is exposed. When life leaves the body we burn it, even though it be that of a person as dear as a father, and we cast the ashes in the Ganga. If the soul of the Sangh, which is truth and non-violence, leaves it, it will be the duty of Kishorelal to consign it to the flames. The Sangh will get vigour only if it is a living thing. If even today it has no life in it we are all hypocrites and it will be no use for the Sangh to continue to exist.

Shastris tell me that truth and non-violence are subtle things. They ask how one can form organizations out of abstract things. I assert that truth and non-violence can be organized. If non-violence cannot be organized, it is not a dharma. If there is anything special about me, it is only this, that I am organizing truth and non-violence. Otherwise they will cease to be the eternal verities that they are to me. To me truth and non-violence are not unreal things and if they cannot become our collective dharma they are false. What I want to do and want to die after doing, is to organize non-violence. And if it is not valid in every field it is false. I assert that in every walk of life, non-violence has its use. I speak the language of the Jains. They say that the rule should admit of no exception. This is also the language of geometry. A right angle must have 90 degrees. If there is any sphere of life in which non-violence is ineffective it is false. Please remember this. If you all take the opposite path and give up the charkha and non-violence, I will say that you never had faith in truth and non-violence. Believe it that though it may be without your knowing it, you were all votaries of violence., I do not condemn you. You have come to the Sangh after careful thought and in the name of truth. Remember that truth and non-violence are not for hermits. These eternal principles apply in courts, legislatures and other spheres of human endeavour. Your faith is going to be put to a severe test. Do not run away in fright.

You are being given today a difficult question paper. Neither you nor I know whether you will pass or not. Even so, why should I fear ? I do not want to render you impotent and stupid. Truth and non-violence are not for the stupid. Why cannot Kanti, Bal, Tansukh' and others develop their minds by plying the charkha? Why do they have to go the the college ? If those of us who ply the charkha cannot show the intelligence that Kanti, Bal and Tansukh do, I shall say that we should also go to colleges. But in truth in Kanti and others there has not been a development of the intellect, only a play of intellect.

1 Tansukh Bhatt
The inquiry into our pursuit of truth and non-violence makes for development of the intellect. If they do not, then either they or we are false. Since it is impossible for truth and non-violence to be false, we ourselves are proved to be false.

The whole of the constructive programme is a research into us. I continue to ply the charkha. I am now 69 years of age. Therefore it cannot be said that my intellect is not developing. What I am saying, I say deliberately and in full command of myself. Bal, Kanti and Tansukh are not developing their intellects by going to colleges. You may say that even those who work do not develop their intellects. The reason is that they work like automatons. My intellect will continue to develop till the moment I die. The charkha is also the prop for my intellect but it does not stray into wrong paths. I have no time to see, hear or read pleasurable things. I discover Daridranarayana through the charkha and have vision of God. This is the way my intellect has been developing and will continue to develop all my life. The testing of a man is not complete till he dies. If at the moment of death a man’s intellect does not retain its brilliance I will say that he has not succeeded.

There is no rule that the intellect of those who ply the charkha cannot shine. Only you should do it intelligently. If you work as a carpenter, you must develop the science of carpentry. Today I am formulating some stiff questions for the science of the charkha.
Because it absorbs all my faculties when I am immersed in the charkha I am in a state of bliss. I am not yet able to say where the limits of the constructive programme lie. The instance of the clay image shows only this. In the constructive programme we have all-round development. The charkha is a mantra. When I see those who ply the charkha discouraged, I am baffled. Why is it that they are lacking in spiritual development?

What I am telling you concerns eternal truth, because I am able to experience it. If I have gone to settle in Segaon it is not because I feel frustrated. When the call comes I will even say that I shall not budge from Segaon. I do not work there like a machine. Truth and non-violence develop the body, the intellect and the spirit. If there is not all-round development of all our faculties through truth and nonviolence we are hypocrites. What service I have rendered ever since 1920 has been only through the charkha, though Hindu-Muslim unity and through the campaign for eradication of untouchability. I have always said that these reflect truth and non-violence. These were the shortest path to their discovery.
Going into Legislatures is also a means towards approaching truth and non-violence. Otherwise Parliament for us is taboo. That can be the only reason and there is no other for any interest we may have in the Councils programme. Truth and non-violence are ends as well as means. If good and truthful men go into the Legislatures, those institutions can also become an effective means to furthering truth and non-violence. If this does not happen the failure will be ours and not theirs. It will only mean that our intellects have not developed. So much for the Councils programme.

Now I take Balubhai’s question. The substance of the questions is whether we should go to the villages to serve or for political awakening. I find it somewhat strange that after seventeen years of effort in furtherance of this programme such a question should be asked. To me there is no political education apart from the constructive programme. Our aim is merely the propagation of the charkha and such other things. This does not mean that we do not wish to give the villagers political education. But there is no such thing as political education by itself. We should keep in touch with them without harbouring any motive. We have to develop their strength. I go to them with the programme of eradication of untouchability and the like and give them education. Political education is just that. If I do something apart from this and go the the villagers seeking votes, I shall be doing exactly what we blame the missionaries for doing. I shall never talk to them about what is to my interest even if it should be intimately connected with the politics of the country. Constructive programme is thus in itself a political education. This is what I did in South Africa. There also the question before me was not of numbers. I never talked to the so-called coolies about politics. I did not organize them from any political motive. The question of the £ 3 tax came later.

The organization came in useful for the satyagraha battle later. During that battle I saw God face to face many times, so many times that even if I were a dunce I should not forget it. I had not hoped that the organization I was building would bring such large results. This is the way I conducted political education in South Africa. It was not the whole of South Africa, only the Transvaal. What I want to show is that the way I carried on the work of political education was by rendering silent, selfless service. The people among whom I worked came of their own accord and began to shout ‘Long live the Congress’. If the prestige that the South African Indian Congress today enjoys is not the result of political education, what else can it be? Hertzog is saying the same thing today.

I continued this policy on my return to India from South Africa. I worked in the Kheda district but did not so much as mention the Congress. I talked solely of land revenue. I worked among the labourers and did not mention the Congress. In Champaran again I did not work in the name of the Congress. My colleagues and I belonged to the Congress and that was enough, but when you go to Champaran today what do you see? Is the Congress anywhere else as strong today as it is in Champaran? On the strength of Champaran, Rajendra Babu rules Bihar today. But even today I would not talk about the Congress there. Knowledge is to be given where there is curiosity. Today they do not even have bread. What shall I gain by talking to them of things outside Champaran? What shall I gain by teaching them geography, or history, or politics? What shall I gain by talking to them about the problems of the whole country? Considering all things, I have come to the conclusion that we cannot give political education by trying to give such education. I have showed you through various instances what may be called real political education. Political education is not something apart.

In 1920 I made boycott an essential part of the political programme. I said: “Forget parliament, forget law courts, forget even educational institutions.” People started saying that this man who has undertaken such terrible work is quite ridiculous. In 1920 I made the charkha the centre of politics. I made it a weapon for a battle. In Bardoli also it was made an essential part of civil disobedience. That is why the condition was laid down that the whole of Bardoli should adopt khadi inside of six months. This was the language of the Congress at that time. Vithalbhai cajoled me. But what shall I say of my shame? What shall I say of Sardar’s shame? Even today Bardoli has not fulfilled the condition of the charkha. Prohibition has not been achieved nor has untouchability been eradicated. Today I would not launch a campaign on the strength of Bardoli. But this is my way of political education. If the Congress tries some other method it will not succeed. I am not saying this out of pride. It only shows how unshakable is my faith. If the Congress does not have faith in these things, why does it not give them up? I say with all the force I can command that if these things are bad or useless they should not be accepted out of consideration for Gandhi.

Balubhai has passed M.A., L.L.B., but that does not mean that he remembers what he read of politics. And he is not the only one. We, all of us, educated people, have proved ineffective in giving political education to the people. Our English education has made us useless. The heritage left by out forefathers has been squandered. But

1 Vithalbhai J. Patel
I must tell you that it is only through these things that political education can be carried on. It is not something separate. If it is our conviction that the charkha in itself constitutes political education we shall not get tired or accept defeat. If socialists come let them. They are my friends. They do not quarrel with me and I do not wish to quarrel with them. They want to conduct political education by a different method. Their means and mine differ. But our goal is the same. I put the same programme before them, too. I also say that all land belongs to God. But merely on the basis of this the socialists cannot claim all land as their property. I cannot today advocate talking away land from those who own it. I too want that we should all be possessors of Jamnalalji’s wealth, but all the 30 crores of our people, not I alone. All land belongs to God, that is, to the people. But doesn’t this mean that Jamnalalji’s land should be partitioned in 30 crores little bits? How are these 30 crores to become owners of the land? Who should make them owners or make themselves the owners on their behalf is the question. Someone has to come forward as their representative. Therefore if Jamnalalji becomes our trustee and remembers that this wealth belongs to 30 crores of people, what is the harm? He has given me all the Sevagram land. But I cannot take it, for I am a fool. I do not understand these things. His manager understands them better than I. Today I take all the profit, he takes all the loss. If you want to make use of the wealth of rich men like Jamnalalji and Rameshwardas Birla, make use of my talent. I cannot derive much profit from the Segaon property because I have neither men nor the intelligence. I do not want even a cowrie from outside Segaon. I have all the means; only I have been slack. Today if I build a house he has to pay for it. This is hundred per cent true. I grab as much as I can digest. What more can I ask from any rich man? Come, I invite you to go to some other village of Jamnalalji and settle there in the way I have settled in Seagon. But the man should be one approved by me and willing to carry out my programme. This however is an entirely different matter. My subject was the charkha.

There was a time when C. P. Ramaswamy Aiyar thought that the charkha was a political weapon. Mohammed Ali called it our gun, Khadilkar cited a verse from the Gita.¹

“Here no effort undertaken is lost, no disaster befalls.” Even better than this is the second half: “Even a little of this righteous course delivers one from great fear.”

I do not regret my friendship with Mohammed Ali. He was an honest and godfearing man. He used to say what he considered moral and true at that time. Yet he also said that in the path of God it is permissible for us to take up the sword and even to utter falsehoods. But people of all religions say this. Among Christians also there is no restriction. The sanatanists say it openly, and even cite a verse from Manusmriti as authority, that uttering of untruth is permissible for saving a cow, when talking to women and on such occasions as marriage, etc. Even adharma becomes established in the name of dharma. But it shows the majesty of dharma. Sanatanists tell me that I am a heretic, that I know nothing of dharma and adharma, that my truth is more harmful than untruth. This shows how far adharma can go in the name of dharma.

¹ Bhagavad Gita, II. 40

It is true that we go to the villages to impart political education to the people. But as I am trying to say, the way of political education is the furthering of constructive programme. We should not even utter the word ‘political’ among the people. The same applies to dharma. We should not even mention the word ‘dharma’. Tell them simply to clean their lavatories well and to bathe. But dharma is beyond their comprehension. This is not a result of their inferiority but of our littleness. I hesitate to talk to them about truth and non-violence. We have kept them suppressed. I can only talk to them about the way they should conduct themselves. How can I speak to them about brahmacharya. They cannot even pronounce the word. When they pronounce it as *bharamchar*¹ and cannot even understand it, it is bharamchar for them. I want to understand their morals. I want to win their confidence. If one of them comes to me and says he has relations with his sister-in-law how can I condemn him? The sin is on our heads. I want to teach them bit by bit without mentioning truth and non-violence. I know no other way.

If we want non-violent swaraj it can come only thus and here no one can oppose us, whether it be England or America. The question that Balubhai now asks was answered by me 17 years ago. In 1920 everyone was mad about the charkha—Motilalji, Mohammed Ali, Shaukat Ali, Abbas Tyabji and others. Everyone had started spinning. Everyone thought that nothing was to be gained through Parliament. Today I have become much more tolerant, so that I can even permit people going into Parliament. This is a well-tried method of giving political education. This is the way people can be trained. If Segaon tomorrow becomes self-sufficient, if people keep the village clean, do not covet even a pie of another’s, what more will be lacking for their freedom? They will say: ‘Who is Jamnalal Sheth? We till the land and it is ours. The land was there before Jamnalalji was born. We shall not be frightened. We shall not resort to hooliganism. If Jamnalalji’s manager comes we shall not assault him. We shall simply remove him from our land.’ These things will have to be taught to them. Granted that people are the real owners of the land. But how am I to get it accepted? There are only two ways. Force and persuasion. The way of persuasion is the way of dharma. If you cannot adopt it, then what Kishorelal says is true. Then the socialists will prove that they had been in the right. Then I shall have to tell you to follow them. They also stand for the good of the people. If they cannot influence the people it would be a matter of shame to me. But you came into the field of service before they did. You have also worked very hard. If you cannot influence people it would be a matter of greater shame to me.

¹ Pursuing confusion

But how is this to be done? Merely repeating ‘constructive programme’ like a parrot will not do. Your programme is more vigorous than that of the Spinners’ Association. In the Spinners’ Association there are some people who fulfil the tasks allotted to them. But among you there are those who have intelligently and thoughtfully developed it into a science. The spheres of work of the Spinners’ Association and the Village Industries Association are limited. The same is true of bodies like Goseva Sangh. Your sphere of work is wider. The Gandhi Seva Sangh is a large organization. It is not a rival of the Congress. The Congress too is a large organization. But it has been built by the people. It reflects the strength as well as the weakness of the people. But your organization is voluntary. It is a coming together of those who have undertaken to fulfil the entire programme issuing from truth and non-violence. It is a mighty tree of which Spinners’ Association and Village Industries Association are branches. The Sangh is indicative of your strength. Or should I say the power of truth and non-violence will find expression through it? Jamnalalji may well have built it up, but it is not his organization. He himself became only an ordinary member and said that he would never become an office-bearer. This shows not only his humility but also his wisdom.

We want to bring about an all-round advancement of India through what we call constructive work. There are various organizations which have taken up each a separate item of the programme. Your work should be an example to them. Today one cannot say it is. We must, therefore, very clearly declare that our work is constructive work and that we are going into Parliament for furthering that work.

If what I have said has not satisfied you entirely, the reason can only be that I have not been able to couch my language in legalistic phraseology. But it is clearer than day before yesterday. My language is imperfect. The language of one who is himself imperfect must be imperfect, too. If after 17 years of explaining I have not been able to explain myself, then I am imperfect and so are you who cannot understand. Thakkar has sent me a letter. It is an interesting letter worth reading out. I have not the time but I must read out to you just one sentence from this letter. He says: “Last year I had to be in Dhulia itself and I may have to live there in future, too, but my faith in village work has not diminished one jot and no desire has arisen in me for life in a city.”

The workers who have not wholly given up the love for city life have had their faith in the charkha somewhat slackened. This gives rise to doubts. To me the charkha is everything. I am living in a village and devote most of my time to the charkha. About political matters I merely offer advice and then forget about it. I do my writing for the constructive programme and for it I work. I do not despair though the members of the Gandhi Seva Sangh have not been doing their work with full awakening. The charkha work does not end with giving women two pice or two annas. If through the charkha we cannot develop our minds, then we should let it go. It is my faith that the charkha will bring us swaraj. Kishorelal seems to fear that you have accepted the charkha for my sake and that you will give it up when I am no more. He therefore wants to keep you away from temptations.

Even if I should be the only one with faith in the charkha, I shall be proud to die working for it. My pride while plying the charkha or serving the Harijans will be pardonable. After all we have to commune with God through some means or other. Why not then through the charkha? You may say that I have worked for the charkha or that the charkha has worked for me. If the devotee is the slave of God, God also is the slave of the devotee’s slave. It is in this sense I am speaking to you. If we cannot create an atmosphere in which the charkha can bring about the development of the mind, Kanti and Bal have no alternative but to go to the college. They do not have the originality of Ekalavaya. If you understand what I am trying to say, there will be no reason for you to be in two minds. The main thing is concentration—one-pointedness of attention. Kishorelal prepared his speech with such concentration as if it was meant for the entire world. I was witness to it. To him the Sangh is the whole world. He also prepared a summary of it for your convenience. He works without attachment. He is another Yudhishthira, which I am not. I shall be happy if I can acquire the strength of even a Bhima or an Arjuna. People call me a karmayogi. I do not know whether I am a karmayogi.
or any other yogi, but I cannot live without work—this I know. When something sinks into my heart, I cannot be at peace till I have put it into practice. People may say I am mad in saying that I wish to die with the charkha in my hand. I do not wish to die holding a string of beads. For concentration the charkha is my beads. God appears to me in thousands of forms. Sometimes I see him in the charkha, sometimes in Hindu-Muslim unity, sometimes in the eradication of untouchability. I move as my feeling draws me. When I wish to enter a room in an institution, I do so and I feel there the presence of God. In the Gita God has said that He looks to the well-being of those who worship Him. You must be firm in this faith if you have understood me.

[From Hindi]

Gandhi Seva Sanghke Tritya Varshik Adhiveshan (Hudli, Karnatak) ka Vivaran, pp. 54-67

175. SPEECH AT GANDHI SEVA SANGH MEETING, HUDLI-IV

HUDLI,
April 20, 1937

Let me now come to Mama’s proposal. The proposal is:

Since it is the aim of the Sangh to look upon the constructive programme of the Indian National Congress as a dharma and make it a success, in a programme like the removal of untouchability it is the duty of the members of the Sangh to come into direct contact with sweepers and other Harijan brethren and convince them as well as others that they make no distinctions in their treatment of the Harijans. Let them give a place to Harijans in their homes, receive Harijans in the same way as they would receive others, seek opportunities to eat with them. Let them keep some Harijan members in their houses, bring up some Harijan children, go to the Harijan colonies and serve them in various ways and lovingly participate in their work and prove thereby that none of the jobs the Harijans have to do is lowly.

VALLABHBHAI PATEL: This proposal justifies the fear of the sanatanists.

From removal of untouchability you want to proceed step by step to intermarriage. (Laughter)

GANDHIJI: For ordinary people, removal of untouchability is sufficient. But, for you, mere touch is not enough. You must continue to proceed further. Your field of progress is unlimited. Ordinary people can look up only to the sky. But scientists claim that they can look through the whole expanse of the milky way. It is not known if something exists beyond that. But truth pierces through the sky and reaches beyond. We have to imbibe truth in our lives. We find that under the guise of truth, untruth is being respected by people. It is the aim of religion to strengthen the idea of brotherhood, to minimize the unnatural distinctions between man and man. But today, in the very name of religion, the Harijans are being treated with contempt. I have already said that untruth, by itself, is powerless, it is dependent. It can never stand on its own without the support of truth. But I wish to point out to you that if untruth can succeed so much in the name of truth, how much more would truth itself succeed? Who can measure the extent of its success?

For us, who are the members of the Sangh, there should be no place for any unjust distinctions in our hearts. It may seem strange, but as far as I am concerned, such a feeling of distinction disappeared from the day I ate a bit of mutton with a Muslim boy.1 Eating mutton was and is a bad thing. But this small thing saved me from something else as well. By tasting a little mutton I realized that there was nothing particularly to rave about it. That saved me in England and I did not betray my mother. I have not spoken to the millions about inter-dining and intermarriage. We do not have inter-dining and intermarriage even with Brahmins. My mother, while observing some pious vows, would not take food even from my hands. The Hindu masses still follow quite a few restrictive practices in the matter of inter-dining and intermarriage. Even I have followed certain restrictions in this regard. That is the reason why I have not spoken to the masses about these.

But if I suggest to you that you should go to the extent of inter-dining and intermarrying with Harijans I would not be violating truth. Let me talk to you on a religious point. I am talking about religion as a matter of day-to-day practice. It is not something related to any particular occasion. You have really not much control in the matter of intermarriage. You should certainly not bring compulsion on your children in this matter. Inter-dining is a different matter. If your mother says that it is irreligion, you must tell her that you would take the food cooked by her as well as the food cooked by an untouchable, and it would not matter that you were forsaken by her on that account. You cannot compel your mother or even your wife. We must have two separate establishments in such a situation. If we cannot exercise force over them, we cannot do it over religion either. In other words, we cannot coerce our own sons. Our mothers and wives may well consider it their duty to forsake us. Let us stay apart without being enemies of each other. In such a situation I would treat them more affectionately. I would try not to hurt their feelings. But at the same time I would not hurt the feelings of Harijans in order to please them. Only truth and Hinduism can teach me this. For me, religion, truth and Hinduism are inter-changeable terms. If there is an element of untruth in Hinduism, I cannot accept that particular aspect of Hinduism as religion. If, on this account, the entire Hindu community forsakes me and I am left all alone, I would still proclaim that I am not alone, they who forsake me are alone. For, truth is on my side. And truth is God Himself...

1 Vide “An Autobiography”, sub-title “A Tragedy”

I would accept the hospitality even from a leper. But the manner of acceptance would be different. I would tell him affectionately that he should allow me to cook the food and fetch the water. As far as I am personally concerned, for the sake of love, I would even take the food and the water offered by a leper if he really insists. I would be even willing to die for his love. But the whole world cannot accept his hospitality in this spirit. Hence, I too would accept it in the same manner that the entire society can accept. I followed the same principle in the case of Parachure Shastri. But that is a different case. We should not confuse disease with the issue of untouchability. They are two absolutely different problems. The question relating to the sweeper is altogether different from the question relating to the leper. We have an opportunity of teaching the sweeper habits of cleanliness if we come in greater contact with him. And, is it not also true that if any sweeper invites me or you for a meal he would himself be concerned about washing himself clean and donning clean clothes and offer us cleanly prepared food?

Please do not confuse the issue of poverty with this. The problem of poverty is economic, whereas the problem of abolition of untouchability is religious or spiritual. My religion will not be destroyed if I do not solve the problem of poverty of a poor peasant. But if I allow the untouchability to persist even in the case of a wealthy Harijan, my religion will cease to exist. That is the reason why the beginning of an act of service should be only with the Harijan.

Then Gandhiji moved the following resolution pertaining to goseva.

Economic and moral uplift of India is one of the aims of the Sangh and the protection of our cows is non-violence in its concrete form and it implies economic benefits to millions of people. That is why the attention of the members of the Sangh is being drawn towards goseva. It is the duty of

---

1 Someone had interposed that Harijans would have to be careful about cleanliness if others were to eat with them, for one could not accept hospitality from a leper.
the members of the Sangh to study animal husbandry as much as possible and try their utmost to protect our cows. The least they can do is to use cow’s milk and its products instead of buffalo’s milk, etc., as far as possible, and make cow’s milk and its products popular.

I am not laying any particular stress on this resolution today. If there is doubt in your mind and you wish to discuss it, we may as well abandon it. For, this is a novel thing. Its language is distinct from that of the Congress. The things Kishorelal mentioned in the course of his introductory speech are easy no doubt; but they cannot provide enough work. As the issue in this form concerns none but the Hindus, I did not bring this proposal before the Congress. This is an inseparable part of Hinduism. The sanatanists consider my way of goseva as a thing to be shunned and partonize goseva organizations. But this is their gross ignorance. I have described the popular practice of goseva as the devouring of cows. And, I have still not withdrawn my words. People are terribly angry with me on this account. But, even if they sever my head, I would say only what is truth. Our religion exhorts us first to protect the cow and then the Brahmin. Cow-protection is an inseparable part of our religion. But today we do not protect, but rather devour our cows. We should lay down our lives for the sake of the cow. But today we are allowing the cow to die for us. Hinduism generally regards suicide as a sin. But in certain situations, our religion not only permits but also exhorts us to resort to suicide. In view of this, we must kill ourselves if it is necessary in order to save the cow.

All that this resolution lays down is that the members of the Sangh should insist on using only cow’s milk and ghee. It is not a question of taking a vow. Insisting on cow’s milk means that if it is necessary to take buffalo’s milk or ghee to save life, it should be taken. But if it is a vow, it leaves no such scope. If you wish, instead of saying “insist on using” you may say “as far as possible use” which would soften both the language and the sentiment. Tomorrow if I go to Dhotre’s house, I would insist and I must. I would do the same everywhere. For me “as far as possible” is a meaningless phrase.

VALLABHBHAI PATEL: One who is ill or has to be always travelling, cannot even insist.

GANDHJI: In such a situation, insistence would include taking buffalo’s milk or ghee. Saying “as far as possible” is a different thing. It commits you to nothing. I look at it from the point of view of religion. And for me, service of religion and service of the country mean the same thing.

That is the responsibility of persons like Jamnalalji. I have got a ready-made plan for cow’s ghee. Why can’t they throw away a couple of lakhs in that experiment?

Discussing the next annual meeting of the Sangh and invitations from Bengal, U.P. and Utkal for this Gandhiji said:

I am particularly partial to Orissa. We can also expect to raise larger funds there than at Hudli. But, in my view, it would not be proper to give travelling expenses. The members must attend the convention at their own expense. As for those who cannot spend their own money, Gopa Babu can collect the necessary sums to be given to them on the recommendation of the office. And, if even he cannot make such an arrangement, those members should not be invited. But under no circumstances should the Sangh give travelling expenses. Gopa Babu has agreed to all the conditions. There is one more reason. The Congress has done the least amount of work in Orissa. It is a miracle that the Congress has won a majority there. Only one of the Congress candidates was defeated there, and even that on my account. He was such a naive person that it was good for the Congress that he was defeated. The poor Oriyas are considered to be slack people. When they are giving an invitation, we must forget about Bihar and Bengal. I had followed the same principle in deciding in favour of Gujarat for the Congress. It was a tussle between Ras and Bardoli. I said that Ras had a stronger case and should give in. Hence the partiality to Bardoli even at the cost of hurting Ras.

[From Hindi]
Gandhi Seva Sanghke Tritiya Varshik Adhiveshan (Hudli, Karnatak)ka Vivaran, pp. 67-71

176. LETTER TO K.M. MUNSHI
HUDLI,
April 21, 1937

BHAJ MUNSHI,

Do come on the 25th. If the meeting of the Working Committee is to be held in Prayag and I have to go there, you will know. Then do not come. As yet I have received no information.\(^2\)

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7617. Courtesy: K.M. Munshi

---

1 Someone had observed that cow’s ghee was too expensive.

2 In the postscript, Chandrashanker Shukla had added that a telegram was since received to say that the meeting of the Working Committee was to be held at Allahabad on the 26th and that Gandhiji would reach Poona on the 22nd, Wardha on 23rd and Allahabad on 25th night, and that he would not be at Wardha on the 25th.
177. LETTER TO DR. JAWAHARLAL

NEAR HUDLI (BELGAUM),
April 21, 1937

MY DEAR DR. JAWAHARLAL,

Thank you very much for your detailed letter of the 14th. You are right in thinking that the recent attack of influenza had something to do with the extinction of life in the child. I suppose she will have to stay there for about a fortnight before she is in a condition to travel. How is it that there is no kitchen attached to the maternity hospital? Please remember me to Mrs. Jawaharlal who I hope is steadily improving.

Yours sincerely,

DR. JAWAHARLAL, M.L.A.
SWAROOP SADAN
CAWNPORE

From a copy: Pyrelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

178. INTERVIEW TO “THE HINDU “

POONA,
April 22, 1937

CORRESPONDENT: You say you do not seek any the slightest abrogation of the Government of India Act. Do you not thereby mean that you do not want an immediate amendment but that you contemplate it at some time?

GANDHIJI: That is wholly a mistaken view. I want no amendment whatsoever, immediate or distant. For the Congress insists, so do I, on the complete repeal of the Act so that it might be substituted at the earliest possible moment by an Act of the people themselves. What I want, before Congressmen accept office, is an assurance which I still hold is within the power of the Governors to give, that they will not interfere with the day-to-day administration of the Province. For, under the Act, it is not they but the Ministers who are responsible for the administration of the Province within the sphere prescribed by the

1 The special correspondent had reported: “In the last two or three days, I have had the privilege of fairly long conversations on the political situation with Mahatma Gandhi. My purpose was to try and clarify and, if possible, to determine the precise scope of the assurances demanded of the Governors by the leaders of the Congress in the six Provinces where the Congress has been returned in a majority in the last elections. The final interview which I had this morning on reaching Poona, and of which a report is given below, sums up the present position of the Congress in this matter.”
Act. All talk, therefore, of the constitutional inability of the Governors to give an assurance baffles me and makes me suspect the motives of the British politicians who have the working of the Act within their power.

Do you mean that under no circumstances whatsoever can a Governor interfere if an emergency of a grave nature in his opinion arises?

That is a fair question. I certainly do not mean any such thing. I can conceive of the possibility of a Minister making a stupid blunder, so as to harm the people in whose name he is acting. The Governor’s duty will then be plain. He would reason with the Ministers and if the Ministers do not listen, he will dismiss the Cabinet. The assurance contemplates non-interference, not non-dismissal. But dismissal when there is a clear majority in the Assembly would mean dissolution and fresh election. That will always be open to the Governor to precipitate, as it would be open to the Provincial Cabinet to do. But such a crisis cannot occur from day to day. What, therefore, I want is an absolutely honourable understanding which is incapable of a double interpretation by honourable parties.

May I then take it that you would not mind such assurances being given even in Provinces where the Congress is not in a majority?

So far as I am concerned, not only would I not mind it as a confirmed democrat, I would not have for the Congress what may not be given to other parties where they enjoy a clear majority.

I take it you are aware of the special responsibilities of the Governors.

I am afraid I must confess my ignorance.

May I then tell you that they are responsible when there is a grave menace to peace and tranquillity or to the legitimate rights of the minorities or to Service rights, Indian States, etc.?

But if the Governors are responsible, Ministers who are worth their salt are surely still more responsible for peace and tranquillity, for the actual protection of the rights of the minorities, rights of the States—if by States is meant the people of the States as well as the Princes. I cannot imagine rights of Princes against the people within their jurisdiction. And even in all these, the pity of it is that the so-called autonomy has been boiled down so much by statute that the Governor’s discretion is extremely limited. There is one thing, however, if I were a Congress Minister I would not be willingly responsible for, as I would be for other things you have mentioned—I mean the rights of the Services. By that one guarantee, in my opinion, the framers of the Act have reduced autonomy to a farce. But under the assurance I have contemplated, I have not envisaged a reduction of those rights which are guaranteed by the Act itself. While the Act remains in force the Congress Ministers will take office knowing well the handicap under which they will labour from the very commencement of their career. I nevertheless feel that, if the assurance contemplated by the Congress resolution is given, the Ministers can, in spite of the handicap, so consolidate their position that they can, even acting within the Constitution, compel the repeal of the Act and hasten the day of the meeting of the Constituent Assembly whose Act will be accepted by the British people—unless they want to govern India by the naked sword.

The Hindu, 22-4-1937

179. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

POONA,
April 22, 1937

When interviewed by the “Associated Press” regarding the Madras leaders’ appeal to the Congress and the Government for solving the present impasse, Mahatma Gandhi said:

I read it with respectful attention and so far as I am concerned I hope I have made my position so clear as to leave no room for any misunderstanding. I have also shown now, according to my interpretation, that the offic-acceptance resolution is so eminently reasonable. Therefore, their appeal needs an answer more from the Government than from me.

The Hindustan Times, 23-4-1937

180. INTERVIEW TO THE PRESS

April 22, 1937

Having been buried in out-of-the-way Kumri all these days, I had not seen the papers that you have kindly shown me. It is very difficult for me to believe that the Maharaja of Cochin has passed the orders described in the cutting before me. I can understand his and his family members’ discontinuing worship in the Koodalmanikkam Temple, but I cannot understand the order that clearly interferes with the rights of the Maharaja of Travancore and the rights of priests who would be presumed to know religion as much as the Maharaja of Cochin himself. And if it is true that the savarna Hindus who have visited Travancore temples are prohibited from entering the Cochin

\[1\] This appeared under the title “Irreligious”.

\[2\] Vide Appendix “Koodalmanikkam Temple Controversy”, 22-5-1937.
temples and having access to wells, etc., apart from its being unworkable it is unsurpassed in irreligiousness. I cannot understand how Sir Shanmukham Chetty could have failed to dissuade the Maharaja from the action which seems to me to be indefensible even from the point of view of staunch sanatanists. I can only hope that the reports in the papers fail to give the correct version of the situation; and in any case I hope that better counsels will prevail in Cochin.

_Harijan_, 24-4-1937

181. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

_SEGAON, WARDHA,
April 23, 1937_

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letters before me. Returned this morning. This will go to Simla.

I have the prospectus, etc. That letter was over-weight and carried a fine of two annas.

It is so hot that we are melting. I am in no mood to write at length.

Yes, I leave for Allahabad on 25th and return on 29th.

The weather this time has been cruel in so many parts of India.
What is this eczema again? Do you mean the same patches?

Love.

Yours,

ROBBIE

From the original: C.W. 3776. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6932

182. CURSE OF DRINK

A sister writes:

On going to the village, I was more than grieved to hear of the havoc drink is working among these people. Some of the women were in tears. What can they do? There is not a woman who would not like to banish alcohol for all time from out midst. It is the cause of so much domestic misery, poverty, ruined health and physique. As usual it is the woman who has to bear the burden of this self-indulgence on the part of man. What can I advise the women to do? It is so hard to face anger and even cruelty. How I wish the leaders in this Province would concentrate on the removal of this evil rather than expend time, energy and brain on the injustice of the Communal Award. We are so apt to neglect the things that really matter for such trivialities as would settle themselves if the moral stature of our people were raised. Can’t you write an appeal to the people on the question of drink? It is sad to see these people literally going to perdition because of the curse.

My appeal to those who drink will be vain. It must be. They never read Harijan. If they do, they do so to scoff. They can have no interest in being informed of the evil of the drink habit. They hug the very evil. But I would like to remind this sister, and through her all the women of India, that at the time of the Dandi march the women of India did listen to my advice and made the fight against drink and the plying of the wheel their speciality. Let the writer recall the fact that thousands of women fearlessly surrounded drink-shops and often successfully appealed to the addicts to give up the habit. In the prosecution of their self-imposed mission they put up with the abuses of the addicts and sometimes even assaults by them. Hundreds went to gaol for the crime of picketing drink-shops. Their zealous work produced a marvellous effect all over the country. But unfortunately with the cessation of civil disobedience, and even before the cessation, the work slackened. Into the reasons for the slackening I need not go. But the work still awaits workers. The women’s pledge remains unfulfilled. It was not taken for a definite period only. It could not be fulfilled until prohibition was proclaimed throughout India. The women’s was the nobler part. Theirs was to bring about prohibition by emptying drink-shops by an appeal to the best in man. Could they have continued the work, their gentleness combined with earnestness would most assuredly have weaned the drunkard from his habit.

But nothing is lost. The women can still organize the campaign. If the wives of those of whom the writer writes are in earnest, they can surely convert their husbands. Women do not know what influence for good they can exert on their husbands. They wield it unconsciously no doubt, but that is not enough. They must have that consciousness, and the consciousness will give them the strength and show them the way to deal with their partners. The pity of it is that most wives do not interest themselves in their husbands’ doings. They think they have no right to do so. It never occurs to them that it is their duty to become guardians of their husbands’ character, as it is the latter’s to be guardians of their wives’ character. And yet what can be plainer than that husband and wife are equal sharers of each other’s virtues and vices? But who but a woman can effectively awaken the wives to a sense of their power and duty? This is but a part of the women’s movement against drink.
There must be enough women with proper equipment to study the statistics of drink, the causes that induce the habit and the remedies against it. They must learn the lesson from the past and realize that mere appeals to the addicts to give up drink cannot produce lasting effects. The habit has to be regarded as a disease and treated as such. In other words, some women have to become research students and carry on researches in a variety of ways. In every branch of reform constant study giving one a mastery over one’s subject is necessary. Ignorance is at the root of failures, partial or complete, of all reform movements whose merits are admitted. For every project masquerading under the name of reform is not necessarily worthy of bring so designated.

_Harijan_, 24-4-1937

183. THE CAUSE OF IT

A Bangalore correspondent asks:

You say that a married couple may have sexual union only when there is a mutual desire for a child and on no other account. Please let me know why one should wish for a child at all. Many people wish for children without fully realizing the responsibilities of parenthood, and many more wish for children fully knowing that they are incapable of discharging the responsibilities of a parent. Many persons who are physically and mentally unfit for parenthood wish for children. Don’t you think that it is wrong for these persons to procreate?

I would like to know the motive behind the desire for children. Many people wish for children to bequeath their possessions and to break the monotony of their life. A few people wish for a male child lest the gates of Heaven would not be opened for them. Are not these people wrong in wishing for a child?

It is good to seek causes for things. But it is not always possible to discover them. The desire for children is universal. But I do not know any convincing cause, if to see oneself perpetuated through one’s descendants is not a sufficient and convincing cause. My proposition, however, is not vitiated if the cause I give for the desire is not found sufficiently convincing. The desire is there. It seems to be natural. I am not sorry for having been born. It cannot be unlawful for me to see the best in me reproduced. Anyway till I see evil in procreation itself and till I see that the sexual act for mere pleasure is justifiable, I must hold that the sexual act is justified only where there is desire for children. I understand that this was so clear to the makers of _Smritis_ that Manu described only the first-born as children born of dharma and the rest of kama—lust. The more thought I give to the subject as dispassionately as is possible, the more convinced I feel about the correctness of the position I have taken and am enforcing. It is becoming clearer to me that the difficulty lies in our ignorance of the subject with which needless secrecy is being associated. Our thought is clouded. We dread to face consequences. We resort to half measures as if they were perfect or final and thus render them most difficult of execution. If our thoughts were clear, if we became sure of our ground, our speech and action would be firm.

Thus if I am sure that every morsel of food I take is for building and sustaining the body, I shall never desire to take food for the pleasure of the palate. I shall further realize that if I have any desire to eat things because they are tasty, and apart from hunger or the thought of sustaining the body, it is a token of disease and I should seek to cure myself of it and not satisfy it as if it was lawful or healthy. Even so if I am quite clear that the sexual act, apart from the unquestioned desire for progeny, is unlawful and detrimental to the body, mind and soul, surely resistance to the desire will become easy—far easier than when I am not clear whether the gratification of mere desire is or is not lawful and beneficial. If I am quite clear about the unlawfulness of the desire, I shall treat it as if it were a disease and repel its attacks with all my vigour. I shall feel the stronger for the resistance. They are wrong, even untruthful, who claim that they do not like the act but are helpless and therefore resistance leaves them weak and defeated. If all such people were to examine themselves, they would discover that their thoughts deceive them. Their thoughts cherish the desire and their speech is a false interpreter of their thoughts. If on the other hand the speech is a true interpreter of the thoughts there can be no such thing as weakness. Defeat there may be. Weakness never.

The correspondent’s objection to procreation by unhealthy parents is perfectly valid. They can have or should have no desire for progeny. They are deceiving themselves and the world if they say that they perform the sexual act for progeny. In an examination of any subject truthfulness is always assumed. Desire for progeny must not be feigned in order to cover the pleasure of sexual union.

Harijan, 24-4-1937
184. TELEGRAM TO HASRAT MOHANI
MAGANWADI, WARDHA,
April 24, 1937
MAULANA HASRAT MAHANI
CAWNPORE
JUST READ ABOUT BEGUM MOHANI’S DEATH CONDOLENCES.
GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

185. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
April 24, 1937
MY DEAR REBEL,
How did you fare in your fight about the extraordinary step ordering change in the report¹. Really these things are enough to make one lose patience. But then these incidents test our faith in ahimsa. And there must be an innocent, non-violent gentle as opposed to noxious, violent, ungentle way of dealing with such difficulties.
What answer did you get, if any, from Devdas about that cartoon² in which a Biblical verse was caricatured.
Did I tell you yesterday I was returning from Allahabad on 29th at the latest?
Love.
ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3777. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G. N. 6933

186. LETTER TO J.C. KUMARAPPA
April 24, 1937
MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,
You will do with the Amalner man what you think best. You will take him if he is of use.
I understand what you say about Shah’s note.³
Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10117

¹ Vide “Letter to J. C. Kumarappa”, 3-4-1937
² Vide footnote 2, “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 31-3-1937
³ Vide “Letter to J. C. Kumarappa.”, 3-4-1937
187. LETTER TO MESSRS PAYRE & CO.

April 24, 1937

GENTLEMEN,

I have your letter for which I thank you. I have been travelling to inaccessible places, hence the delay in acknowledging your letter. If you will forward the one lakh of rupees, I will forward the amounts to institutions that I may select. Meantime, if the cheque for one lakh is received by me I shall bank it and send you proper receipts from the institutions concerned as the money is disbursed from time to time. If however, the amount is held by you it should begin to bear interest not less than the current bank rates from the time that I can be considered responsible for its distribution. So far as half the amount is concerned there would be no difficulty. As for the other half I am entering into correspondence with the Jeeva Daya Mandal.

Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

MESSRS PAYRE & CO.
Solicitors and Notaries Public
Bombay

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

188. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI A. MEHTA

April 24, 1937

BHAI BHAGWANJI,

I got both your letters only yesterday. I returned from a tour of the villages yesterday and saw your letters. You did very well indeed in writing to me but if I cannot make use of your letters, how can I solve the matter? I advise you to call both Nanalal and Prabhashankar1 and guide them properly, shedding all fear. There was a time when Prabhashankar used to treat your advice as sacred word, and that lightened my burden, too. Your letters throw a new light on the situation. You should now put this business on the right lines as Ratilal’s lawyer, friend of the Mehta family and lover of justice. I shall be able to do very little from here. Think over this. Ratilal and Champa2, both are completely under the influence of Prabhashankar. They will do exactly as he desires. To Ratilal he is in the place of a father. Irrespective of what we consider to be right, how

1 Prabhashankar Harchandbhai Parekh, father-in-law of Ratilal, the eldest son of Dr. Pranjivandas Mehta
2 Ratilal’s wife can we shake Ratilal’s and Champa’s faith in what they believe to be right? Please think over all these factors and then guide me. If you are unable to do anything besides writing to me, then please permit me to make use of your letters or write to me a letter such as I can use. I do not wish to take any step till I have your reply to this letter.

Vandemataram from
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5832. Also C.W. 3055. Courtesy: Bhagwanji A. Mehta

189. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 24, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I had got your letter. I had a talk with Shankerlal1 at Hudli about Jaisukhlal. Shankerlal says that there is no connection between the charge against him and his being relieved. But he is of the opinion that there is not sufficient work in Kathiawar to justify payment of Rs. 75 to Jaisukhlal and that his work would not be worth that much anywhere else either. Jaisukhlal has not mastered the art of running a store, or of producing khadi, nor that of working in a spirit of co-operation with others. But he has no doubt at all regarding Jaisukhlal’s integrity. If this statement of Shankerlal is correct, then no injustice is done to Jaisukhlal. If you do not agree with Shankerlal’s explanation, then you may employ him in the work you are doing for the spread of khadi. Take from him such work as will enable him to earn Rs. 75 or something more if he can. You can do this and, if he has the ability to earn Rs. 75 through khadi work, may help him to develop in.

I myself am observing the extremely suspicious nature of Jaisukhlal and it has caused me much pain. He sees Chhaganlal Joshi at the back of all his misfortunes, while I myself have been able to see no such thing in any matter. I know Chhaganlal’s merits and defects very well. I have even lived with him. I have seen in him no such failing that he would be after a man and do him ill just out of spite. His opinions are very often baseless. I also know that he lacks the capacity to cite evidence in support of his views.

I have not informed you till now and on inquiring I find that Kanaiyo also has not done so. He was fairly ill during the Hudli trip. Either from over-exertion or for some other reason, he had got fever.

1 Shankerlal Banker
He had got it as soon as we arrived there and it came down after four days. But he did not suffer in the least. The treatment also was the best possible. It consisted in his drinking as much water as he could—he took hot water with lime-juice and salt, then he was put on water mixed with honey, and then he was given fruit and then milk. He is still on milk and fruit. He used to get good sleep. It can practically be said that he did not require any nursing. He was not given any special comfort apart from a cot. He was given no privacy at all, nor was there any such facility.

Today he has come riding five miles on bicycle of his own free will. There was no necessity for him to come for the sake of any work. But once he feels well he cannot sit idle. And I do not stop him from exerting himself within the limits of his strength. The matter was not at all worth writing to you about. There was no cause for worry. We had an experienced doctor with us but even his help was not taken. He did wish to give some medicine, but I emphatically forbade any medicine.

Kanaiyo also has great faith in fasting as of course I too have. This time a special feature of my treatment was that I did not try enema at all. It could have been given with some special arrangement, but he used to pass stools in the normal course. I, therefore, did not insist on giving him enema. He did not suffer in the least; no doubt it was thanks to his fast and also to the purity of his life.

At the time of giving away Manu and Nirmala, he had insisted on attending, and had joined in singing “Vaishnava jana”. Kanti also arrived exactly on the day of kanyadan. Manu was therefore very happy, although she spared Kanti, having persuaded herself to be content with Kanu’s presence.

How is Kumi’s work going on? If she gets her daughter admitted in the National School, exempt her from payment of fees.

Blessings from

BAPU

1 Giving away of the bride.
190. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

April 24, 1937

CHI. SHARDA,

Received your letter. Nothing is permanent. Stick to the treatment so long as you feel that it is doing you no harm. Both of you must take onions and garlic. It is my opinion that nature-cure, if intelligently taken up, is bound to benefit. Write to me in detail about the treatment you are taking and about your diet.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9975. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

191. LETTER TO CHANDRANI SACHAR

April 24, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

Thanks for your cheque for Rs. 500. A well can be constructed for Rs. 500 and even Rs. 1,500. We have to bore a well in the Thana district, which will cost Rs. 1,200. If you can, please send the balance, too, otherwise your money can of course be utilized for some other place.

Vandemataram from
M. K. GANDHI

SHRIMATI CHANDRANI SACHAR
C/O SHRI J. S. SACHAR
NAYA BAZAR, DELHI

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4090.

192. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI

SEGAON,
April 24, 1937

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

Again there is a complaint that you do not do full work. What is this? Give me an account of your work.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11685

1 Daughter of Chimanlal N. Shah, an Ashram inmate.
INTERVIEW TO THE PRESS

NAGPUR,

April 25, 1937

Q. Do you think that there is any real anxiety on the part of the Britishers to establish a contact between the Viceroy and the spokesman of the Indian National Congress?

A. I do not think there is any.

Will you of your own accord seek an opportunity to meet the Viceroy?

No.

Will you go if the initiative comes from the Viceroy?

I have no status. The only party to be invited is the President of the Congress.

Will you be satisfied if the Viceroy gives you the necessary assurances and asks you not to press for assurances from provincial Governors?

Do you not think that if the Congress does not accept office, the minority Ministries will win over the electorate by their ameliorative measures?

I should not be surprised.

The Hitavada, 28-4-1937

---

1. The correspondent had reported: “Mahatma Gandhi passed through Nagpur on Sunday, 25-4-1937, by the Grand Trunk Express. He was accompanied by Mr. Mahadev Desai. Huddled up in a third-class crowded compartment sat the Mahatma, with files and books piled about him. His secretariat was with him and even in the train typing was being done. One wonders if it was not a new formula for the Working Committee. On the arrival of the train a set of questions was handed in to Mahatmaji to which he wrote his replies.”

2. The reporter had explained: “In view of his reply to the previous question Gandhiji gave no reply to this question.”

3. In “Interview to Associated Press of India”, 26-4-1937, Gandhiji said that this answer was reported “just the contrary to what I meant.”
194. INTERVIEW TO THE PRESS

NAGPUR, [April 25, 1937]

Q. Would you be satisfied with the assurance from the Governors on the lines given by Sir Samuel Hoare and quoted by you?

A. I would be satisfied with the assurance with a definition of the word ‘ordinarily’ which everybody can understand.

Will you kindly give me your own definition of the word ‘ordinarily’?

A. Definition has really to come from those who want to introduce the adverb. I have not introduced the word ‘ordinarily’ in the Congress resolution. Congress meaning is quite clear. For, it asked for an assurance in connection with a definite programme. If that programme and everything similar to that programme is pursued by the Congress there should be no interference on the part of the Governor. If in the opinion of the Governors the worst happens as Lord Lothian has suggested, the Governors can dismiss the Cabinet, dissolve the Assemblies and appeal to the electorate to find out whom the electorate will support. If the Congress aim is to create deadlocks, what point is there in asking for any assurance from the Governors? As I have already said and as I have read the Congress resolution, the aim of the Congress is not to create deadlocks, but its aim undoubtedly is to make Congress position so irresistible as to replace the present Act, which nobody likes, by an Act which will represent the will of the masses. This will be brought about by constitutional means permissible under the Act itself. And if the Congress by force of its majority and by skill of Congress Ministers advances its own constitutional position to such a pitch that the British Ministers cannot possibly resist it except by force of arms, surely there can be nothing to grumble at.

You have said that the Congress wanted non-interference not non-dismissal. Will you please explain the difference between the two?

As a gentleman I cannot possibly ask for a promise that the Cabinet may never be dismissed. But I can ask that there should be no

---

1 Gandhiji gave the answers to questions submitted to him by the correspondents of The Times of India, Bombay, and News Chronicle, London.
2 On his way to Allahabad Gandhiji passed through Nagpur on this date.
3 Vide “Statement to the Press”, 30-3-1937
4 Vide “Extract From A.I.C.C. Resolution”, 16-3-1937; also “Interview to The Bombay Chronicle”, 30-4-1937 interference in the day-to-day administration. I do not want the Cabinet to be in a position of having to resign on the slightest pretext; for honourable resignation there must be honourable cause that anybody could see. If I have no assurance of non-interference the Governor may submit his Ministers to pinpricks which they would feel but which may not give them understandable cause to take to the public in justifying resignation. I would never put the Congress Cabinet in such embarrassing and humiliating position. The same thing would apply to the Governors. They would look incredibly foolish if on the slightest pretext they dismissed the Cabinet. Therefore, if Governors are gentlemen and want to preserve the honour of the nation whom they represent they will think fifty times before dismissing the Cabinet. I want to put them in that position so that there shall be no pinpricks from the Governors as all Ministers who worked under the Montford reforms have testified. Their position was made unbearable and humiliating and yet they were unable to resign, perhaps they would not. I do not know which was the case.

_The Hitavada, 28-4-1937_

195. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

ALLAHABAD,
April 26, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your note awaited me as I reached Allahabad. Jawaharlal looks very much pulled down, looks almost an old man. His voice is feeble. Enough to make one weep to see him so pale. Indu is quite nice though she looks the same fragile thing she was before. Old Mrs. Nehru is bed-ridden though better than she was a few days ago. Subhas has arrived but I have not yet seen him. It is presently to strike 12 when I break silence.

Subhas sees me at 1 p.m. The Working Committee sits at 2.30 p.m. I leave here on 28th and reach Wardha 29th. The weather seems to have been abnormal everywhere. It is very hot here. Mahadev, Pyarelal and Radhakrishna are with me.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3778. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6934.
196. LETTER TO LAKSHMI NARAYAN

ON THE TRAIN,
April 26, 1937

BHAI LAKSHMI NARAYAN,

Moral degradation is absolutely inexcusable.

There could be different legal opinions in the matter of zone ticket, etc.

Propagation of Hindi has definitely suffered on account of Pandit Sharma’s downfall.

Inscrutable are the ways of God.

[Adoption of] Hindi-Hindustani should never lead to spoiling of the language. It is indeed true that deliberate omission of non-Sanskrit words, such as Persian, etc. makes the language chaste.

Yours,
M. K. GANDHI

SHRI LAKSHMI NARAYAN
BHARATIYA VISHARAD
HINDI VIDYAPITH
DEOGHAR, BIHAR

From the Hindi original : Courtesy : Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

197. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

April 26, 1937

Interviewed regarding the editorial comments of The Times and The Manchester Guardian on his Poona statement¹, Gandhiji said:

So far as I am concerned, any bridging the gulf has to come from the Government side. It is to be hoped therefore that representative papers like The Times and The Manchester Guardian will influence the British Government rather than seek to influence me or the Working Committee. The latter will take care of itself and speak for itself.

I have made my position absolutely clear. It is for the

¹ Pandit Harihar Sharma
² Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 30-4-1937, “Hindi Prachar and Purity”, 3-4-1937 and “Letter to Prabhavati”, 7-4-1937
³ Vide “Interview to “The Hindu”, 22-4-1937
Government to decide whether they have meant provincial autonomy by the Constitution they have framed or they have meant sometimes the reverse of Autonomy. But to the man in the street who knows nothing of legal quibbles or even of the Constitution that is the only question.

With reference to Press report from Nagpur stating that to a question whether he thought, if the Congress did not accept office, the minority Ministries would win over the electorate by their ameliorative measures, Mr. Gandhi was reported to have said, “I should not be surprised,” Mr. Gandhi says:

Whoever is the party concerned for the Nagpur telegram, he has reported just the contrary of what I meant or at least what I intended to mean. My answer was that I should be surprised if minority Ministries would win over the electorate by their ameliorative measures in case Congress did not accept office. A slip of paper containing questions was handed to me through the crowd into the railway compartment which was none too empty. I hurriedly wrote out the answer in pencil. If the reporter maintains that I wrote the word ‘not’, I would very much like to see the original.

_The Hindu, 27-4-1937._

198. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

ALLAHABAD,
April 27, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I got your postcard and letter about Lali here.

It is settled that we leave here tomorrow evening reaching Wardha in the evening 29th. You may expect me in Segaon about 8 p.m. or thereabouts.

The weather is very hot here but quite cool on the terrace at night.

Hope you understood what I said during the morning walk. But I do not want to blame you for what you can’t alter in a moment.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 6379. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9845

---

1 Vide “Interview to the Press”, 25-4-1937
199. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

April 27, 1937

CHI. LILA,

Your disorderliness must go. It will go by and by. Talk less and think more. Do everything patiently. There should have been a washer in my spinning-wheel but I did not find it. You mislaid it while removing the yarn. This is just an example.

You must have sent the ghee to Radhakrishna.

Stop worrying about Dwarkadas. If you are keen on going, you may go.

I hope you are keeping a diary,

Blessings from

BAPU

200. TELEGRAM TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

ALLAHABAD,

April 30, 1937

SETH JAMNALALJI

WARDHA

REGRET INABILITY PERSONALLY BLESS BRIDE\textsuperscript{1} BRIDEGROOM\textsuperscript{2} PLEASE APOLOGIZE RAMESHWARDA. REACHING SATURDAY NOON. INFORM MAGANWADI SEGAON.

BAPU

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 185

201. INTERVIEW TO “THE BOMBAY CHRONICLE”\textsuperscript{3}

April 30, 1937

Questioned whether he still adhered to the view that if Governors gave assurance to the effect that “ordinarily” they would not interfere with constitutional activities of the Congress Ministers, the Congress would accept office, Gandhiji said, \textsuperscript{1} Laxmi, daughter of Janakidevi Bajaj’s brother, Purushottamdas Jajodiya.

\textsuperscript{2} Shriram, son of Rameshwardas Poddar of Dhulia.
\textsuperscript{3} Gandhiji gave the interview in the train \textit{en route} to Wardha.
in this matter his position should be properly understood. Gandhiji did not think that mere addition of the word ‘ordinarily’ to the formula would satisfy him or the Congress. Such assurance would be acceptable to him only if the qualifying word was “properly interpreted to our satisfaction”. Gandhiji further declared:

We should know the meaning of ‘ordinarily’ beforehand. ¹

Our correspondent then drew Gandhiji’s attention to Prof. Keith’s latest constitutional pronouncement published in today’s Leader and asked him about the Congress position vis-a-vis Governor’s special powers.

Gandhiji smiled and said it was stale news and he had read it already in some paper yesterday.

As I read Professor Keith’s statement I saw that he entirely endorsed the Congress position that the Congress does not seek any abrogation of the Act.

Asked whether it would not be unconstitutional for the Congress Ministry to attempt to trample over the legitimate rights of the minorities, Gandhiji declared that it would not only be unconstitutional but “suicidal”.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 1-5-1937_

---

202. HARIJANS ON BEGAR

The newspapers have given publicity to the threat of certain Harijans in certain villages to transfer their allegiance to the Christian Missions seeking to wean them from Hinduism under promise of better treatment, and especially freedom from _begar_ to which they are subjected by _savarna_ Hindus. It seems that representatives of the Hindu Mission and of the Harijan Sevak Sangh visited the aggrieved Harijans and got the _savarna_ Hindus to promise better treatment. The storm has abated for the time being. I do not know what would have been the gain to the Missions concerned if the Harijans had gone over to their fold and how far the Harijans could have been claimed as _bona fide_ converts. This I know that such proselytizing efforts demoralize society, create suspicions and bitterness and retard the all-round progress of society. If, instead of wanting the so-called conversion as the price of better treatment, Christian Missions co-operated with Harijan sevaks in their effort to ease the burdens of Harijans, their help would be welcomed and the evolution of society would be hastened.

But I write this more to awaken _savarna_ conscience than to

---

¹ _Vide also “Interview to the Press”, 25-4-1937_
² A. B. Keith, a constitutional lawyer of England.
³ Forced labour without any wages.
criticize the Mission methods brought to light. The system of forced labour exacted by petty land-owners from Harijans and other classes called backward is almost universal in India. The petty landlords are mostly Hindus. Harijans and others can legally resist forced labour. They are slowly but surely being awakened to a sense of their rights. They are numerous enough to enforce them. But all grace will be gone when savarna Hindus impotently resign themselves to their merited fate. Better surely by far if they will recognize their duty of regarding Harijans as blood-brothers, entitled to the respect that belongs to man and to receive due payment for services voluntarily performed.

It is the privilege of Harijan savaks, no matter to what organization they belong, to befriend Harijans to study their condition in detail, to approach savarna Hindus and show them as gently as possible what their duty is towards those whom they have treated as outcasts of society and deprived even of legal rights.

From the papers before me I further find that in Ode and some other villages in Gujarat the savarna Hindus take from Harijans who dispose of their dead cattle half the hide. This is unlike the usual practice of allowing the Harijans to own the dead cattle they remove. In some cases Harijans not only retain the dead cattle they remove, but receive a payment for the labour of removing carcasses. The matter demands more investigation and fair adjustment. If Harijans were better treated and if savarna Hindus had no horror of dead cattle and had no superstitious laws of pollution, they would learn the art of flaying the dead cattle and turning every part of the carcasses into wealth, both to the benefit of themselves and the Harijans whom they may invite to help them in the process of disposing of their dead cattle.

_Harijan, 1-5-1937_

203. ESSAYS ON BARTER SYSTEM

Reader will remember that a prize of Rs. 500 was announced for the best essay recommending a barter system. The terms were also given. The time for sending the essays having elapsed, the Board of Examiners entered upon their task and have reported that none of the essays fulfil the conditions laid down. The following is their report¹.

The prize has not been withdrawn by the donor. The examiners, Prof. K.T. Shah, Shri Vaikunth Mehta and Prof. J.C.

¹ This is not reproduced here; _vide_ also “Letter to J. C. Kumarappa”, 3-4-1937
Kumarappa, have kindly signified their readiness to examine any further essays that may be sent. I would, however, advise competitors, if any are willing, to strictly conform to the requirements laid down by the examiners. It is clear from their note and it is but natural that no essay will pass muster unless it reaches the level expected by them, and none will reach that level unless writers are industrious enough to study the necessary literature on the subject and build on their study an original thesis. It may be that the prize is not sufficiently tempting for such an effort. If that is so, I can only say that those who write for the mere monetary value of prizes hardly ever realize the expectations of donors. Without love of subject itself, high merit is not to be expected in difficult competitions like the one about the system of barter. The time for handing in the essays is fixed as 31st December, 1937. All essays should be addressed to Prof. J.C. Kumarappa, Maganwadi, Wardha. No further extension of time will be given, and if no effort succeeds the prize will be finally withdrawn.

_Harijan, 1-5-1937_

204. A MORAL DILEMMA

A friend writes:

About two and a half years ago this city was convulsed by a social tragedy. A Vaishya gentleman had a sixteen-year old daughter. She had a maternal uncle aged twenty-one years studying in college in the same city. The two fell secretly in love with each other. The girl is said to have become pregnant. When the true state of affairs at last became known, the lovers committed suicide by taking poison. The girl died immediately but the boy died a couple of days afterwards in the hospital . . . . At the time when the storm was at its height and nobody had a kind word to say about the deceased unfortunate lovers, I shocked everybody by expressing my opinion that under the afore-mentioned circumstances the young lovers ought to have been allowed to have their way. But mine remained a voice in the wilderness. What is your opinion in the matter?

I have deliberately kept back the name of the correspondent and the place at the request of the writer as he did not want old sores to be reopened by a revival of an old controversy. All the same I feel that a public discussion of this delicate topic is necessary. In my opinion such marriages as are interdicted in a particulars society cannot be recongnized all at once or at the will of an individual. Nor has society

---

1 The Hindi original of this was published in _Harijan Sevak_, 1-5-1937. This appeared as “abridged by Pyarelal”.
2 Only extracts are reproduced here.
or relatives of parties concerned any right to impose their will upon and forcibly curtail the liberty of action of the young people who may want to contract such marriages. In the instance cited by the correspondent both the parties had fully attained maturity. They could well think for themselves. No one had a right forcibly to prevent them from marrying each other if they wanted to. Society could at the most refuse to recognize the marriage, but it was the height of tyranny to drive them to suicide. Marriage taboos are not universal and are largely based on social usage.¹

These alliances are not taboo in every society. The Christian, Muslim, Parsi and other communities do not observe this taboo. It is not even taboo in all Hindu varnas. The same varna has different customs in different Provinces. Among the so-called high caste Brahmans of the South, such alliances are not only not tabooed, but on the contrary are considered commendable.²

The usage varies from Province to Province and as between different divisions. This does not mean that the youth may ride roughshod over all established social customs and inhibitions. Before they decide to do so, they must convert public opinion to their side. In the meantime, the individuals concerned ought patiently to bide their time, or, if they cannot do that calmly and quietly, to face the consequences of social ostracism.

At the same time it is equally the duty of society not to take up a heartless, step-motherly attitude towards those who might disregard or break the established conventions. In the instance described by my correspondent the guilt of driving the young couple to suicide certainly rests on the shoulders of society if the version that is before me in correct.

_Harijan_, 29-5-1937

205. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,

_May 1, 1937_

BIBI JAN ALIAS MY DAUGHTER AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your letter as soon as I returned. You seem to be doing excellent work. If you can preserve good health even while doing so, by all means stay on. I am enclosing a bank-note for Rs. 50. Kanti is still at Rajkot. He is not going to Trivandrum. It appears certain,

¹ The following paragraph is translated from _Harijan Sevak_, 1-5-1937.
² Vide also “My Mistake”, 6-6-1937.
however, that he will go to Mysore. I have no time just now to write more. We returned from Allahabad today.

Your belief that Hindu men and women stood in the way of your serving Harijans is not correct. In any case, don’t worry. You should first get well and serve wherever you can do so quietly. If you can do good work living on your own farm, by all means do it. If you need still more money, send for it.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am leaving for Gujarat on the 9th.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 380

206. KATHIWAR COWS.

Shri Narahari Parikh, Secretary of the Goseva Sangh, has sent me a brief description of his tour in some Kathiawar States which he undertook for examining the cattle wealth there. I hope to publish it in Harijanbandhu, in two instalments. The following [item in this issue] is the first of these.¹ There was a time when Kathiawar cows were highly praised. That variety still exists but it is gradually disappearing. This wealth, which is being destroyed, may still be saved and fresh additions made to it if the rulers of Kathiawar and their officials put in the effort. There is room for improvement in all industries. Each one of these could be made more paying. But this possibility is perhaps the greatest in animal husbandry. Knowledge, diligence and patience are all that is required. According to our present knowledge, it is even claimed that the health of the human race is especially dependent upon our cattle wealth, i.e., on cow’s milk. India is a country where one expects the cows to be of the highest quality. But they are of the poorest quality and are at present a burden on the land.

Shri Purushottam Joshi of the Bhavnagar institution, who is an expert in animal husbandry, suggests the following three ways of looking after cows:

1. Vagrant bulls should be castrated and used as bullocks.
2. Good pedigree bulls should be kept in every village and these should be well cared for.
3. Every farmer should have his own cow.

¹ The articles, which appeared under the title “Cow-protection in Kathiawar”, are not translated here. The second instalment appeared in the issue dated May 9.
All the States in Kathiwar can readily do this without incurring any loss. But the reader should now read the statement made by Shri Narahari Parikh.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 2-5-1937

207. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

May 2, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your letter awaited me yesterday when I reached Wardha.

Allahabad was a taxing time. There was no wrangling. But the discussions in which I had to engage was a strain. The heat was terrible. The nights on the terrace delightful. Jawaharlal was pale and weak. He must have sailed for Burma by now. The trip will do him good. I have asked him to take no less than a month. After it he, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad and I are to meet for a few days.

You should write to Prabhavati, if you have not already. Her address is: C/o Brij Kishore Prasad, Srinagar, Sewan, Bihar.

The heat is growing here. It is not trying for me. But I have to go to Gujarat for 20 days to fix up Gujarat Affairs. My address will be Tithal, Bulsar, B.B. & C.I. Railway. Tithal is on the sea. On 10th and 11th I am in Bardoli. I leave here on 9th and reach Bulsar on 12th.

I could not get anything to give to Manu on your behalf. So you have to think of something inexpensive and useful.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3779. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6935
208. LETTER TO P.G. MATHEW

May 2, 1937

MY DEAR MATHEW,

I returned yesterday. I leave here on Sunday, 9th. If you desire to come during the time, you may.

Yours,

BAPU

PROF. P. MATHEW
LEONARD COLLEGE
JUBBULPORE

From a photostat: G.N. 1542

209. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

May 2, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I was eagerly waiting for your letter. I found two letters yesterday on returning from Allahabad. If you don’t write your address and as a result don’t receive my letters, is it my fault? I had written to you at Patna C/o The Searchlight since I had forgotten your residential address there. Thereafter I went to Allahabad. I waited for your letter but didn’t get any. And I also thought I would write to you after returning to Wardha. Now, tell me, who is to blame for this? Certainly not you, but am I to blame, either? Please remember this, that you should give your complete address in every letter.

I have already given you Rajkumari’s address. Here it is again: Shri Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, Manorville, Simla.

As Jawaharlal was not well, the meeting was arranged at Allahabad. I would have been happy if you could have come there.

How is your health? Is the pressure of work heavy? What do you eat? Vasumati is here. Amtul is in her hometown. She is getting a well dug there.

I shall have to go to Gujarat on the 9th, Bardoli on 10th and 11th, Tithal, Bulsar, B.B. & C.I. Railway between 12th and 30th.

I am all right.

When are you going to Ahmedabad?
Any news about Jayaprakash?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3499
210. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

Regarding the mill affairs, ethics demand that the labourers should be told that unless they behave properly the mill will remain closed and no new recruits will be made. You can work with fresh labour only when the old lot vacate the quarters without giving trouble. I think this way is not only ethical but also economic. Do question further if this does not cover the whole problem. I go to Bardoli on the 9th and shall reach Tithal (Bulsar) on the 12th. The Working Committee of the Harijan Sevak Sangh can meet at Tithal.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 8031. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

211. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

May 4, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your letters are before me. It is hot here but I do not feel it much. The nights are cool.

I quite agree with you that Lionel¹ should give up the present job and do what he can in England. I wish you could persuade him to give up the job and go back to England.

Shummy² is right about his fear of infection. You may not expose your dear ones to risks which they and their parents will not willingly run.

I am glad you have resumed Sanskrit study. You won’t give up Hindi on any account.

I have already told you about my movements. Departure 9th 10 p.m., Bardoli, 10-11, Tithal, Bulsar, 12 to 30 May.

Mira has been down again with fever. She can’t live without me. So she accompanies me this time and I suppose will insist everytime I

¹ Lionel Fielden, first Director-General, All India Radio; vide also “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 21-9-1937, and “Letter to Lionel Fielden”, 3-1-1937
² Addressee’s brother, Lt. Col. Kanwar Shumshere Singh, a retired surgeon go out. It is no use my striving against it any more than I did against her coming back to Segaon.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3780. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6936

212. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

May 4, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

Where do you intend to take me? Wherever you take me, you will have to look after a big crowd. I won’t be able to dissuade anybody from joining. I personally don’t mind, but we must consider the convenience of the owner of the bungalow in which we are lodged. Mirabehn has already served notice. She will accompany me wherever I go this time. I myself don’t think that I need sea air. You may certainly keep me in Bardoli for as long as you wish, or in Surat, if you like. If, you don’t mind a big crowd accompanying me, please don’t think that I am objecting to it, though of course I do feel very hesitant about it. Here is the list as at this moment:

Ba, Kano, Mira, Pyarelal, Mahadev, Radhakrishna, Kanu, Manoharlal, Sharda.

I hope you are taking rest.

Blessings from

BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL

DR. KANUGA’S BUNGALOW

ELLIS BRIDGE, AHMEDABAD

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 200

213. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 4, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. I have written to Jaisukhlal. Probably he will settle down where he is. If he studies the science of gosva and helps in increasing cow-wealth in Porbandar State, he will have done much. He can do khadi work, too, simultaneously. Guide him as well as you can.

1 Bhulabhai J. Desai

212 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Kanaiyo is all right now. For some time he was very eager to spend a few days with you, but the desire has weakened now, though it is still there. Let him, therefore, go there. When would you like him to come? He wishes that Purushottam and Vijaya should be there when he goes.

I had understood the reference correctly as regards the fees to be paid by Kumi’s daughter. It is but befitting that she should follow in the footsteps of her mother.

Amtul Salaam is in Patiala State. Lilavati is keeping quite well. Her lethargy is well known.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8518. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

214. LETTER TO MANUBEHN S. MASHRUWALA

May 4, 1937

CHI. MANUDI,

I got your letter. Letters from Manilal and Sushila are enclosed. All of you please read them and send them to Kishorelal.

I will send you the sitar, as also the pair of shoes meant for Surendra.

I hope you are doing well. Take care of your health. Observe restraint in eating. Don’t forget spinning and prayer.

Ba misses you, of course. If you want to know about myself, I am also sailing in the same boat. But I will be satisfied if you write regularly.

I shall be going to Gujarat on the 9th and will spend the whole month there. We shall reach Tithal on the 12th, where we shall spend about a fortnight.

Blessings to both from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1565. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala
215. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

May 4, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I have your letter. Your programme is good. The earlier you reach Bangalore, the better will it be from the point of view of the weather.

It is good that you learnt from Bali the history about your mother. It is not an ordinary history. And Chanchi was the most modest among all the sisters. She had the strength to live creditably in any condition.

I wrote to Amul Salaam only two days ago and told her that she might by all means stay in her town. I doubted whether she would be happy there. But I see that she will experience no difficulty in staying anywhere there because of her father’s influence. Moreover I learnt an extraordinary thing about her that she rides. But since I have permitted her she might not stay. Let us now see what she does. I have not seen Saraswati’s letter addressed to you. Surendra and Manu are likely to come tomorrow. I will make enquiries. There was a letter from Paparamma¹, which I had asked them to send to you. The letter was opened through oversight. I could not understand who this Khan² was. After that I saw Paparamma’s signature and understood.

If someone can show you, see the houses where we stayed at Rajkot. One house was near the fort and the other was at some distance in the mhad³. Perhaps it might have been demolished by now. It had caught fire.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am going to Bardoli on the 9th and to Tithal on the 12th.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7320. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

---

¹ Padmavati, mother of Saraswati
² In the source this name is written in Roman script.
³ A group of houses approached through a common gate separating them from the rest of the locality.
216. LETTER TO BENARSIDAS CHATURVEDI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

May 5, 1937

BHAI BENARSIDAS,

The purpose of the tour of Mauritius, etc., is quite different from the purpose behind the tour of Sumatra and other countries. Burma, Sumatra, Java, Siam, etc., have some connection with Eastern culture and it seems natural enough for them to have links with Indian languages. It does not of course imply that they will all learn Hindi, yet one need not be surprised if some of them do study it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2559

217. LETTER TO CARL HEATH

SEGAON, WARDHA,

May 6, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I have been too overwhelmed with work to answer your letters and your cable though they have all been attended to. I know that Agatha Harrison has been keeping you in touch with things as they are shaping here.1 Everything that is possible to bring about peace is being done but it is not an easy job. My special contribution, therefore, is negative. The Congress leaders have, in my opinion, been acting with the greatest restraint in the face of grave provocation. I should have no hesitation in seeking an interview with Lord Linlithgow under ordinary circumstances but at the present juncture, if I made any such attempt, it would be wrong. For, the right person to interview the Viceroy is naturally Jawaharlal Nehru. But he has no faith whatsoever in seeking such interviews because he thinks that nothing good can come out of them. Nevertheless if he was invited he would certainly go. I am myself considering ways and means of ending the deadlock in an honourable manner. And if I can find it in me to approach any of the responsible people, you may depend upon my not standing on dignity.

1 Vide “Letter to Agatha Harisson”, 9-4-1937

VOL.71: 25 FEBRUARY, 1937- 5 JULY, 1937 215
I prized your letter written by you to me just before your departure for England. I wanted to send you a line before embarkation but it was not possible and I was sorry. But that letter revealed to me with what care you had been labouring during your stay in India to bring about a better atmosphere.

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

CARL HEATH, ESQ.
WHITE WINGS.
MANORWAY
GUILDFORD

From a phototat: G.N. 1030

218. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

May 6, 1937

MY DEAR C.R.,

I have gone through your statement¹. It is quite good and effective. We might let the thing ripen. I have sent a statement² for publication. You will see it if it is published. I hope you are organizing constructive work. I hope you are keeping well.

Love.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2062

219. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

May 6, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM,

Harihar Sharma is here and so is Kamala, and now appears on the scene Kamala’s husband. I am confounded. Lakshmanrao, the husband, says he served as Father’s chauffeur and that you know him well. I want you to tell me all you know about him, his adoptive

¹ According to Jagdish Saran Sharma’s chronology, India Since the advent of the British, on May 16 “C. Rajagopalachari, in a Press statement, explained the Congress viewpoint regarding the suggestion that there was no serious difference between a Ministry’s resignation and dismissal.”

² Presumably, of May 12, 1937; vide “Statement to the Press”, 12-5-1937 mother and Kamala.. There is a mystery hanging over this affair which I cannot unravel without further light. Throw, therefore, what you can on the problem.

I hope your studies are going on and that you are all keeping perfectly well.

I leave here for Gujarat on 9th instant. But you should write Care Maganwadi, Wardha.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Do you know if Lakshmanrao drank or gambled? How did you find him as a man?

From a photostat: C.W. 9611. Courtesy: S. Ambujammal

220. LETTER TO MANUBEHN S. MASHRUWALA

May 6, 1937

CHI. MANUDI,

If my stars are unfavourable, what can you do? I had already written a letter to you before you could demand one. Just then I got the letter informing me that both of you were coming here. I, therefore, kept back my letter. Now you have cancelled your coming here altogether. I am, therefore, posting that letter.

We shall pass through Akola on the 9th on our way to Bardoli. We shall be there at about 1 o’clock. At that time somebody should collect the sitar and the pair of shoes, or the station-master may be requested to take charge of both. If you are ready on that day, you also should come along. And we shall take the sitar with us if you so desire. Since you are coming to Tithal, I think we had better take it with us. We shall be going to Tithal on the 12th or the 13th.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1566. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala
221. LETTER TO DEMODAR

May 6, 1937

CHI. DAMODAR,

I have sent Rs. 1,000 to Gangabisan. Send it to Thakkar Bapa at Harijan Nivas, Delhi, for Harijan.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3074

222. LETTER TO M. SATYANARAYANA

May 6, 1937

BHAJ SATYANARAYANA,

I have shown your scheme to Anna also. His views are enclosed.

What you have written about Punjabi in the first paragraph does not seem to be correct. For, if Punjabi is quite similar to Hindi, are not Bengali, Oriya, Assamese and Sindhi also very much like Hindi? But at the same time it can be said that Hindustani and Urdu are also as much in use as Punjabi in the Punjab. So whatever work is to be done there should be carried on only through local people. It is for this reason that just as no activity is carried on by the Hindi Prachar Samiti in the United Provinces, there should be none in the Punjab also. You must keep in mind that we do not propagate Hindi where Urdu is spoken. We consider Urdu speaking people as Hindi speaking ones. As for the rest of the scheme my view is that all the activities should be self-sufficient.

Let me give you one more idea. I am of the opinion that we have attempted nothing original in our method of teaching, i.e., we have hardly made any efforts for making the learning of Hindi easy and interesting as has been done in the case of English. Who amongst us can tell how many days it takes to teach Hindi, or in how many days the script may be taught? We have not evolved a model self-teaching primer in any of the Indian languages. Some little effort has been made in Tamil, etc., but I see nothing original, nothing extraordinary in it. If we can do something on these lines the spread of Hindi will be greatly expedited and lakhs of rupees saved. We do have a good many teachers in the South because of the Dakshin Bharat [Hindi] Prachar [Sabha] but do we have someone who can take up this kind of task? I think that such an experiment must find a place in one of our schemes.

1 Of the Dakshin Bharat Hindi Prachar Sabha

218 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Blessings from

From the Hindi original: Rashtrabhasha Prachar Samiti Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Also G.N. 10993

---

223. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

WARDHA,

May 6, 1937

Q. I take it that you had much to do with the latest resolution of the Working Committee on office-acceptance. If so, is there any truth in the suggestion that you have yielded to the left-wingers?

A. As a matter of fact there were no left-wingers and right-wingers this time. The only question discussed was about the form the resolution had to take.

Do you not see that there is very little difference between Mr. Butler’s statement and the Working Committee’s resolution?

If that is so, why is there the slightest difficulty about Mr. Butler’s instructing the Governors to offer office to the Congress leaders in terms of the Congress Resolution?

---

1 Passed at Allahabad on April 28, which read: "The past record of the British Government as well as its present attitude show that without the specific assurances as required by the Congress, popular Ministers will be unable to function properly and without irritating interference. The assurances do not contemplate abrogation of the right of the Governor to dismiss the Ministry or dissolve the provincial Assembly when serious differences of opinion arise between the Governor and his Ministers. But this Committee has grave objection to Ministers having to submit to interference by the Governor with the alternative of themselves having to resign their office instead of the Governors taking the responsibility of dismissing them."

2 Under-Secretary of State for India; addressing the House of Commons on April 26, he said: “His Majesty’s Government have no intention of countenancing the use of special powers for purposes other than those for which Parliament intended them. It is certainly not their intention that the Governors, by a narrow or legalistic interpretation of their own responsibilities should trench upon the wide powers which it was the purpose of Parliament to place in the hands of Ministers and which it is desired they should use in furtherance of the programmes they have advocated.”
Leaving Lord Zetland’s speech\(^1\) aside for the moment, what is the discourtesy you detect in Mr. Butler’s statement?

I have never known a great party, commanding a majority that the Congress does, having such a thing as office thrown at it, and its leaders treated as if they were petitioners. If they were Ministers would they have to send applications to the Governors for interviews and run the risk of their applications being summarily rejected? I had thought that in autonomy the Ministers got the audience of their Governors for the asking and often the Governors had to give in to the Ministers where the latter had felt displeased or offended. The British Government know that the Congress is out for complete independence. It seems to me that the British Cabinet resent this attitude of Congress. If so, they should plainly tell the Congress and the world that they will not tolerate complete independence and should cease to play with the word ‘autonomy’. If on the other hand they do not mind natural evolution of India to its destiny, whatever it may be, they must treat the Congress with the consideration its position demands and disarm suspicion that, owing to their speech and action, is deepening.

_The Hitavada, 7-5-1937_

224. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA\(^2\)

\[^{[After May 6, 1937]}\]

So far as the tone is concerned, it is an undoubted improvement upon his last speech on the subject. But I fear it is no contribution to the removal of the deadlock.

The last resolution of the Working Committee is the clearest possible annotation of the All-India Congress Committee’s resolution, in accordance with which assurances were asked for. Now the world knows what was meant. Surely, it is no strain upon the Constitution Act for the Governors to give the assurance that whenever a situation

\(^{1}\) Of April 8, in reply to Lord Lothian, it read: “The demand made of the Governors was one which without amendment of the Constitution they could not possibly accept . . . I would add that even if the Constitution admitted a pledge of this kind being given, the giving of it would have involved a grave breach of faith with

\(^{2}\) The giving of it would have involved a grave breach of faith with the minorities and others in India . . . Opinions might differ as to the extent and necessity for such safeguards but it could not be doubted that the minorities in India themselves attached the utmost importance to them.”

\(^{3}\) The interview was on Lord Zetland’s address to the House of Lords on May 6; _vide_ Appendix “Lord Zetland’s Speech”, 6-5-1937.

\(^{4}\) _Ibid_
is created which to them appears intolerable, they will take upon their shoulders the responsibility of dismissing the Ministers which they have the right to do, instead of expecting them to resign or submit to the Governor’s wishes.

Citing the performances of Ministries formed by Governors in the face of universal opposition does not improve matters but strengthens suspicion. In my opinion, the Congress is in earnest and wants to make a serious effort, if it takes office to make a substantial advance by that method towards its unequivocal goal of complete independence in so far as it is constitutionally possible to make that advance.

The Indian Annual Register, 1937, Vol. I, p. 258

225. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA
May 7, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

Give the accompanying letter to Kamu. The letter to which it is a reply is also enclosed. If you take from her all the work she can do what would be your assessment of its value at the market rate? You need not consider whether your school can bear the burden.

You have read in *Harijan*¹ about Anna. Kamalabai, the person with whom he fell, is here at present. She says that she is repenting now. I have myself brought Anna here. I think he is repenting. I am not sure about Kamalabai. She says that she has felt so deeply that she is not likely to commit a similar mistake again. It does not seem desirable to keep both of them at Segaon. I think it will be for Anna’s good to keep him with me. I, therefore, feel inclined to put Kamalabai under your care. I will bear the expenses on her account. You may give her any work you like. She has some ability. Her mother tongue is Kannada and she is a Hindi teacher. She is ready to learn whatever other work we may teach her. She can teach sewing, etc. If you feel hesitant, please let me know. Send me a wire if you are ready to take her under your care. We start from here on the 9th. 10, 11 and 12 at Bardoli, and after the 12th in Tithal, near Bulsar. Send the wire to Bardoli. [I shall be accompanied by] Ba, Mira, Pyarelal, Kano, Mahadev, Radhakrishna, Kanaiyo. Manu may join at Akola. Sharda also will come there. There will be one or two more.

Blessings from

BAPU

¹ Dated April 3, 1937; vide “Hindi Prachar and Purity”, 3-4-1937
COCHIN-TRAVANCORE

My worst fears have come true and Cochin and Travancore are at war with each other. The pity of it is that the war is over a matter of vital interest to Hinduism and therefore to the whole of India. It is a war between light and darkness. I am loath to think that the population of Cochin is behind the Cochin Maharaja's action. He may regulate worship in the Cochin temples under his jurisdiction in any manner he likes. But even the most orthodox Hinduism would hardly permit him to regulate the private conduct of the visitors to the Cochin temples. In no temple in India where Harijans are not permitted to worship are trustees authorized to scrutinize the actions of savarna Hindus who are entitled as a matter of right to visit the temples.

In Cochin the Maharaja has interfered in respect of a temple over which he has no exclusive control. The Maharaja of Travancore, too, possesses substantial right over the temples in question. The Cochin order is clearly an interference with that right. If Travancore has sinned, it is no concern of Cochin. The Cochin order is an interference with the right of private judgment.

In this crisis the duty of the public seems to me to be clear. Meetings should be held all over the country condemning the Cochin orders and asking for their withdrawal. The most orthodox Hindus can surely join such protest meetings even though they may not be in favour of throwing open all temples to Harijans. Seeing that the Cochin public is directly interested in the action of its Maharaja, they may lead the agitation. The pundits of India should dispassionately examine the orders and express their unbiased opinion. I am inclined to think that the Travancore Durbar may well invite the opinion of pundits on the single question of the religious propriety of the Cochin order and undertake to abide by their opinion. In other words, Travancore may well offer to abide by the verdict of an arbitration tribunal consisting of unbiased pundits who will be universally accepted as such. The opinion of an assembly of such pundits would be the nearest approach to an arbitration tribunal. For, whilst the 1 Koodalmanikkam Temple; for details of the controversy, vide Appendix "Koodalmanikkam Temple Controversy", 22-5-1937; vide also the following item and "Cochin untouchability", 5-6-1937.

Travancore Durbar had a perfect right to open to Harijans the temples within their sole jurisdiction and ownership and without reference to the opinion of pundits, it would hardly be right to propound a new Smriti in respect of temples where there is joint jurisdiction. The Harijan cause must be always and everywhere above suspicion. Travancore’s glorious action is capable of standing meticulous scrutiny on the ground of moral correctness.

_Harijan, 8-5-1937_

227. THE COCHIN TEMPLE-ENTRY BAN

Since the foregoing¹ was written the following was received from Shri C.K. Parameswaran Pillai, President, Kerala Harijan Sevak Sangh...²

In a letter to _The Madras Mail_ from somebody from Ernakulam, dated the 20th April, 1937, it is stated that considerable resentment is felt here at the criticisms in Travancore of the Cochin Government’s order regarding the Koodalmanikkam Temple at Irinjalakuda, and the vast majority of the Hindus in the State support the Government’s action.... Again on the 23rd April _The Madras Mail’s_ own correspondent wrote to that paper that “leading citizens of Irinjalakuda support the Cochin Government’s declaration that the temple was defiled by the participation in its ceremonies of tantris who had officiated in temples to which avarnas were admitted....”

The Cochin Legislative Council has been passing resolutions year after year recommending to Government the abolition of untouchability. Resolutions were also passed at public meetings on several occasions in support of temple-entry for Harijans. Having reasons, therefore, to doubt the correctness of the statement in _The Madras Mail_, I went to Ernakulam on the 25th April accompanied by Sjt. M. Govindan, B.A.,B.L., retired Judge and the President of the Trivandrum District Committee of the Harijan Sevak Sangh, to study the real situation of affairs in Cochin. I interviewed several important persons including the Thachudaya Kaimal, the administrator of the Koodalmanikkam Temple, and the Prisident of the S.N.D.P. Yogam. I am now in a position, to say definitely that there is no foundation for the statement in _The Madras Mail_ that the majority of the people of Cochin support the action of the Cochin Government in excommunicating the tantris. _The Hindu_ of the 23rd April has published two

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² Only extracts from Parameswaran Pillai’s letter, reporting his interview to the Associated Press of India after a study tour of Cochin, are reproduced here.
From the social and moral standpoint the action of the Cochin Government is unjustifiable and inconsistent. The dharmashastras clearly lay down that anybody who takes a sea voyage—even a person who remains in the sea for three consecutive days—becomes a patita. It was for this reason that Professor (now Sir) Ramunny Menon was ostracized by the Cochin Government and prohibited from entering into Cochin temples. A few years later when the Cochin Maharaja’s son returned from England after his education, the rule was abrogated and admission was given to all Englandreturned men to temples. The Cochin temples became polluted then, and the Travancore Government might have taken such steps against the Nedumpally Nambudiripad at that time which the Cochin Government have now taken.

If in fact we apply strictly the rules of the dharmashastras to the present day, the savarna Hindus will all have to be treated as patitas and they cannot enter the temples there. But in these progressive days no reasonable Government will think of doing such an unreasonable thing. I hope, therefore, that the Cochin Government will reconsider their order and withdraw the same. The Dewan, Sir R. K. Shanmukham Chetty, is a cultured man of modern views and a supporter of the Justice Party. I have no doubt that he will do what is proper and restore public confidence in his administration.

Harijan, 8-5-1937

228. SELF INFLECTED UNTOUCHABILITY

The letter is printed to show the freshness with which this grand old man of Bengal approaches great problems. The first letter referred to in the foregoing was inadvertently destroyed. Happily the reader has the gist of it in this. Shri Hara Dayal Nag says, truly, that if the temple untouchability is not destroyed, the temples have to be; and if temples go, with them must disappear Hinduism as we know it.

Harijan, 8-5-1937

---

1 The letter from Hara Dayal Nag is not reproduced here.
MY DEAR REBEL,

This is being written on paper prepared by Prabhu Dayal. He has brought a fair lot of paper and has been showing it to me with great pride. I thought therefore that I should let you see his handiwork. This is not the best specimen but it was a convenient size for me to cut.

Well, normal men are just as good and as bad as normal women. You have been known to have behaved just as badly as if not worse than Lionel. And I see from your letter to Mira that you do not give me any news about your health thus leaving me to infer that you are keeping quite well. But now I understand you are not keeping extra well. Why should I not know all this? And you have been taking medicines too! You must let me know accurately what the matter is with you.

Balkrishna¹ is just as you left him. I thought I had told you as much.

I am glad you are giving so much time to Sanskrit. Your Hindi writing is a trifle too large but you are erring on the safe side; when the hand has settled you will soon begin to write the natural size.

I have not had a bill from Mehta. He was given the full address. But an evil fate hangs about your address which no one but I would write correctly. I hope you had to pay nothing extra. I hope it will be of use. You should write to Dinsha Mehta to send you the bill for the kettle.

Love.

From the original: C.W. 3781. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6937

¹ Balkrishna Bhave, Vinoba Bhave’s younger brother.
230. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

MAY 8, 1937

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I have your letter. I am now going to Gujarat and shall reach Tithal on the 12th'. The best thing would be to obtain a full account from the gentleman and forward it to me. After reading it, I shall, if I think it necessary, send for him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2453

231. LETTER TO SARASWATI

MAY 8, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

I had your letters but could not reply for lack of time. You seem to be paying good attention to your studies. If it is a fact, tell me in detail how far you have progressed during this period. How is Ramachandran? What headway have you made in music? When do you expect to visit us again? These days it is quite hot here though the nights are still cool, which reduces the discomfort caused by the heat.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI SARASWATI
C/O G. RAMACHANDRAN
HARIJAN SEVAK SANGH
THAIKAD, TRIVANDRUM

232. DUTIES OF GANDHI SEVA SANGH

Kumri is a small village, about seventeen miles from Belgaum. Shri Gangadharrao has built an ashram there. The annual meeting of the Gandhi Seva Sangh was to have been held in Hudli but the rain-god intervened and the members of the Sangh ran from the pandal and took shelter under the roof of the weaving-school of the Kumri

1 The source has “13th”, a slip.
Ashram. After a great deal of discussion, some important resolutions were passed there, of which the following are the most noteworthy. I give these\(^1\) in the original Hindi language.

The Hindi is so simple that no reader will need a translation. Despite this, if anyone fails to understand them, he should get them translated by someone who knows Hindi.

As regards the first [three] resolutions, it would be sufficient to say that the changes made have been introduced with a view to the expansion of constructive work. These are not made as alternatives or additions to constructive work. The object of the permission\(^2\) is merely to assist it. If this objective is not clearly understood, the fears of Shri Kishorelal may perhaps prove true. The Sangh exists for the very purpose of keeping constructive work alive, for making it interesting and for spreading it from Kashmir to Cape Comorin and from Karachi to Dibrugarh. This is because constructive work has been regarded as the mark of truth and non-violence. For its success contact has to be established with three crores of voters. In order to make this contact effective, if some members of the Gandhi Seva Sangh have to enter Legislatures, it becomes a clear duty of the Sangh to make provision for it.

The fourth resolution is almost self-evident. No matter how many wells and ponds are added, they will prove useful. They increase the country’s wealth and, moreover, wells, ponds and such other water-reservoiirs constructed by the Sangh, will of course be open to all Harijans. Hence if these are built at appropriate sites, they will provide water to innumerable thirsty Harijans and the donors as well as the Sangh will earn the blessings of the beneficiaries. Hence, those who wish to do so should send contributions, without a second thought, to the Sangh for the purpose of digging wells for Harijans.

The fifth resolution is an all-embracing one. The assumption behind it is that village welfare work begins with the service of Bhangis, i.e., with village sanitation. How this can be done is explained in the resolution. It is worth noting that the task of providing medicines and running schools has not been considered essential. There is no mention in the resolution of spinning and such other crafts. The implication is that these things will have to be done, but the

---

1 Not translated here. The resolution dealt with the constructive programme through charkha, wells for drinking water, use and propagation of Hindi, eradication of untouchability, and cow-protection.

2 For Sangh members to stand for election to the Legislative Assembly with the approval of the Working Committee; vide also “Speech at Gandhi Seva Sangh Meeting, Hudli-III”, 20-4-1937 stress is laid on what one has to start with. This is because the aim of the resolution is to remove the fear entertained by some members of being boycotted while doing the work of sanitation.

In the sixth resolution the propagation of Hindi has been advocated and the methods indicated. As long as leaders feel it infra dig to appear for an examination in Hindi, others will not be very enthusiastic about it. So long as public institutions do not carry on their business in Hindi or so long as Hindi translations are not made available where the use of English is found indispensable, Hindi cannot be propagated on a large scale. Here Hindi includes Hindustani. There is no distinction between the two from the point of view of the Sangh.

The Sangh has through the seventh resolution demonstrated its zeal for national education, but the national Vidyapiths have been entrusted with the task, and that is as it should be.

By the eighth resolution, the meaning of the abolition of untouchability from the standpoint of the Sangh has been clarified.
The limits which have been accepted by the Harijan Sevak Sangh for crores of persons so far as the abolition of untouchability is concerned, are in no way sufficient for members of the Sangh who regard truth and non-violence from my standpoint. So long as there are restrictions as regards inter-dining and intermarriage, untouchability is bound to survive to some extent. It is necessary for members of the Sangh to give up these restrictions. Anyone who sincerely serves Harijans cannot possibly observe such restrictions.

Although the ninth resolution is not related to the constructive work of the Congress, it is closely connected with the economic condition of India. Crores of rupees are lost because of our indifference towards our cattle wealth. The struggle between the cow and the buffalo on the one hand and between cattle and man on the other can continue only to the detriment of all the three. This is because if cows are allowed to perish, buffaloes are bound to follow suit and drag human beings behind. The latter will survive if cows do, but buffaloes have either to return to their original wild state or continue to survive in a very small number. The Sangh has pointed out the easy, straight and consequently inexpensive way of escaping such an untimely death; and that is to insist upon using cow’s milk and nothing but cow’s milk and its products. This objective will probably be achieved without much difficulty if an all-out effort is made. The appeal to study the cow problem scientifically has been made with a view to justifying what has been said in the above resolution about cattle wealth and helping those engaged in goseva propaganda.¹

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 9-5-1937

233. MESSAGE TO INTER-RELIGIOUS STUDENTS’ CONFERENCE ²

WARDHA, MAY 9, 1937

The thing I would like to say in the forthcoming Inter-Religious Students’ Conference is that before they enter upon their deliberations the students assembled should realize that they meet on a common platform where all the religions represented by the students are treated with equal respect. If they approach their task with mental reservations there will be no heart-fellowship.
The Hindu, 17-5-1937

234. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

SEGAON, MAY 9, 1937

BHAI HARIBHAU,

I have read your letter. I was indeed happy that the day before yesterday night you went on foot. But I was also afraid that perhaps you would get exhausted. Please do not exert yourself beyond your strength—physically or mentally. Powerful people very often get away with misdeeds and so we cannot hope to convince anybody if we criticize such conduct for there is considerable truth in the popular maxim. That is why even Tulsidas wrote: “The powerful are never guilty.” But the big may do whatever they like; how does that concern us? What reply can we give to those who take cover behind the misdeeds of big people to hide their own?

¹ Vide also “Speech at Gandhi Seva Sangh Meeting, Hudli- IV”, 20-4-1937
² The conference was held at Alwaye on May 15. The message was read out by the President of the Session.
I have read your article. I have not been able to spare the time to study it carefully and ponder over the matter. I have made a correction at one place. Please see it. The correction explains itself. I hope to reach Wardha at about half past seven.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 6086. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyaya

235. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

BHUVAVAL,
MAY 10, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

It pains me very much that there is no harmony among you all at Segaon. Lilavati’s shortcomings are numerous but she has as many virtues. Either she should win you over or you have to win her over. Please think over this.

Introduce order in your work. Find out customers for separated milk. Please regard that as your field.

I have talked over everything with Chiranjilal. Jamnalalji also was present. The secretary also was present, and so were the new Diwan and Shri Jewlekar. Please keep me informed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8587. Also C.W. 7009. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

236. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

MAY 10, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

I certainly felt unhappy for not bringing you with me. But I am sure that your good lay in not coming.

You have been a little hasty in forming your opinion about Lilavati. She is proud and is prone to anger, but has no malice at all. You have to learn much from everybody. One should see the virtues of all and not their shortcomings. Please remember the couplet...

1 Vide “The Marrage Ideal”, 5-6-1937

If you don’t follow the meaning of this, please learn it from Anna. Master the secret of serving everybody silently.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7065. Also C.W. 4557. Courtesy:
Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

237. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

MAY 10, 1937

CHI. AMRITLAL.

I have told Anna to supervise Mirabehn’s work like spinning, etc. She is not yet proficient in that work. Please, therefore, explain to her as much as you can. But don’t tax yourself.

Everybody should spare half an hour for goseva. Develop the children’s intelligence by making them spin on the takli. Teach them the new method of turning the takli.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Look after Kamaladevi. Anna is the oldest inmate of the Ashram. Have full trust in him. He has committed a serious error. But I hope that he will learn from it and will cast out the evil from himself.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10729

238. LETTER TO BALVANTSINHA

MAY 10, 1937

CHI. BALVANTSINHA.

We had a good talk together. You have to learn the art of living with others. Look to the good qualities of Lilavati and others and overlook the bad ones. I hope you have started your yajna of goseva.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1899

1 Here in the source, Gandhiji again quotes the verse from Ramacharitamanas, Balkand; vide "Letter to Amritlal T. Nanavati", 15-3-1937
239. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

BARDOLI,

MAY 10, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

Do you still receive every three months or six months the remittance on Mirabehn's account? If so, what is the amount? How much in all must you have received?

You must have got my letter regarding Kamalabai. Manu has joined me from Akola. I, therefore, have a big enough crowd accompanying me. One or two more may still join. Kanaiyo of course is in the party, together with his dilruba. Manu has brought her sitar.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

We reach Tithal on the 12th. Address your reply there.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8520. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

240. LETTER TO ANnapurna

MAY 10, 1937

May all your aspirations that you told me of today be realized and may you prove a selfless servant of the people.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9423

241. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

BHUSAVAL,

MAY 10, 1937

CHI. LILA,

If you patiently follow my instructions, all your frailties will disappear. Give up your pride and talk gently to everyone. You do know the meaning of the word anna, don't you? It means brother. As you know, Anna¹ is forty-five years old. Consider him your elder brother and take his help whenever necessary. I am writing this letter from Bhusaval where I have to wait for a train.

Manu² and Vijayalakshmi joined us at Akola. Manu has left behind her sitar there. Now, if anyone from Jamnalalji’s house is going to Bombay, send the sitar with him or with Surendra³. Surendra is going to Bombay. He will leave Akola today. Be absolutely calm. I hope you are not too tired.

_Blessings from_ BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

242. _DISCUSSION WITH WORKERS⁴_

BARDOLI,

[MAY 11, 1937] ⁵

CONGRESS WORKER: But it is 11 miles from the Railway Station, and you have said that the place should not be more than seven miles from the Station. Sydla is two furlongs and Afwa only two miles.

GANDHIJI: If I said seven miles, I meant seventy. At any rate that should be our aim. We have ultimately to reach the villages which are considered inaccessible today. And where else can you have this vast supply of water and so much open space for the thousands of people we are going to have, as also for the numerous cows we shall need for

¹ Harihar Sharma
² Wife of Surendra Mashruwala
³ Surendra Mashruwala
⁴ Some Congress workers who disapproved of Haripura ('town of God') as the Congress venue, met Gandhiji at Swaraj Ashram. This is extracted from the "Weekly Letter" by Mahadev Desai, who had reported: "We spent two days in Bardoli . . . Ever since we have decided to hold the Congress in villages, the selection of the venue . . . becomes an additional problem . . . There are several villages in Bardoli taluka that have made themselves famous during recent years by their sacrifice and suffering . . . But Gandhiji showed them that we could not afford to go by that consideration alone. The place selected should be in the heart of villages and it should have natural advantages . . . Haripura, therefore, which is beautifully situated on the river Tapti, with vast stretches of unarable land right on its bank easily captured Gandhiji's heart."
⁵ From The Hindu, 13-5-1937 and 19-5-1937

VOL.71: 25 FEBRUARY, 1937 - 5 JULY, 1935
them? And then what a charming name is Haripura! Hari meaning God.

It will be frightfully expensive, everything having to be carried ten miles by motor-lorries and buses. It is not in the centre of the taluk, as are other places, and the village people will be hard put to it in going from one end of the taluk to the other.

Why should we fight shy of the distances and why should we have motor-lorries? We have any number of bullock carts in the taluk.

If we have the Congress at Afwa, we can have water from Bardoli at little expense. The ginning companies would readily oblige us with their engines for electricity and something like Rs. 15,000 would be saved.

That means that we should always have our Congress in the vicinity of towns and cities! Why should we not do without electricity? And while people from Surat and the neighbouring villages will flock to Afwa near Bardoli, what about the Raniparaj people—the hill people—whom we want to acquaint somewhat with the Congress?

You must not be swayed by my argument unless it appeals to your reason and experience.

_Harijan_ 22-5-1937

---

243. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

ON WAY TO TITHAL,

MAY 12, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

It was in Bardoli I got your letter. I do not blame you, but is it not our misfortune, both yours and mine? Otherwise how could a letter sent to you C/o Searchlight go astray? But take a lesson from this, that I don’t forget to write to you. I reply to you as soon as I receive your letter.¹

I didn’t have the courage to send for you at Allahabad.

Sardar believes that Jayaprakash is sure to be released today. It is good indeed that he has started learning Urdu. Nobody can doubt his capacity for hard work.

I understand about Father. He is getting old, too. Free him completely from the burden of work. He will listen to you.

We shall be staying in Tithal up to the 31st. Then I shall go to Segaon and I wish to stay there till the Congress session.

My diet is the same that you saw. The weight is nearly 112

¹_Vide also “Letter to Prabhavati”, 2-5-1937_ which can certainly be described as good. Tithal is right on the sea-coast, so it will be sufficiently cool. We shall reach there at about 3 o'clock today. Just now we are in Navsari. Manilal Kothari is very ill and we have come here to see him.

The party in Tithal will be: Ba, Kano, Manu, Mahadev, Pyarelal, Mirabehn, Kanaiyo, Radhakishan, Manohar (Shankerlal's sister's son)
Sardar and Manibehn. Some others also may come.

I understand about you. I see that you will go to Mridula only when you can be free from there. I suppose you will come and see me before going.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3500

244. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

TITHAL (BULSAR),
MAY 12, 1937

I am surprised at my remarks\(^1\) being misunderstood. I still maintain that whilst Lord Zetland's statement is agreeably worded, it does not remove the deadlock in the sense that it gives no specific answer to the specific Congress demand, namely, that the method in which the Governors will use their powers of interference whenever they fear an emergency would be that of dismissal of the Ministry rather than expecting the Ministry to resign or submit to the Governor's wishes. I hold that this is perfectly constitutional and equally honourable for both parties. The Governors will reason with their Ministers. The Ministers would be bound courteously to listen to what they say. But if reason fails to carry conviction the only proper course for both parties would be for the Governors to dismiss such Ministers and dissolve the Assembly or take whatever measures may be open to them constitutionally.

The Hindu, 13-5-1937

\(^1\) The Editor of The Hindu, referring to the "Interview to Associated Press of India", pp. 175-6, had sent the following telegram to Gandhiji: "Your observation 'I fear it is no contribution to removal of deadlock' misunderstood in local official quarters as refusal to recognize valuable admissions by Lord Zetland in favour of Congress demand. Request removal misapprehension."
245. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

TITHAL, BULSAR,

MAY 12, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

I met Naranbhai\(^1\). Sardar also was present. We had a long talk. His love for you is boundless. When I talked about Manubhai\(^2\) he started crying. He said: "If she wants to marry only with our consent, why does she bring up Manubhai's name every time? We will never be pleased with that marriage. She has taken a pledge to remain unmarried. Let her keep it. But if at all she wants to marry, then there are two or three good young men in our community; she may select one of them." This is the substance of what he said. I pacified him. I told him that you were not bent upon marrying him. If you at all marry, I said, you would marry Manubhai, but that if your parents would not gladly give you their blessings you would be prepared to remain unmarried. I also told him that you certainly wished that they should not press you to marry anybody else. Sardar also spoke in favour of Manubhai. He said that now in this age girls should be given some freedom; after having educated them we should not expect that they should always obey our wishes. But all this had no effect on Naranbhai. I have assured him that I would not marry you off to Manubhai secretly.

Now my advice is that if you wish you may send this letter to Manubhai. Even if you don't do that, you may, if you think it proper, write to him and tell him that your marriage is likely to be delayed and may not even come off. I am sure you would not wish to marry after the death of your parents. Both of you should wish that they may live long. It would be a different matter if your patience, your blameless conduct and Manubhai's purity should melt their hearts. But I do not think that in this case anything except time and the conduct of you both can have any effect. If occasion arises I would certainly be ready to say more. But I shall not have the courage to hurt them. Sardar is going to try.

I see that Manubhai has become impatient. He should have patience.

You must have got my last letter\(^3\). I hope you have again

---

\(^1\) Addressee's father
\(^2\) Manubhai Pancholi, one of the founder-members of Lokbharati, Sanosara
\(^3\) Vide "Letter to Vijay N. Patel", 10-5-1937 become friendly with Lilavati.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I do not see my penknife with two blades which used to be kept on my inkstand. Please keep it safe if it is left behind there. If it is not found, it will have to be given up as lost.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7066. Also C.W. 4558. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

246. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 12, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

Only today I got your letter. We reached here just today. Bal has come. Tomorrow he will leave for that side.

You have been travelling a good deal and also gathering a lot of experience. Did you carefully see the old family houses in Porbandar? Each and every room has a history.

I didn't know at all that Navin was there. You may by all means stay in Bangalore. Both Places are the same to me. Ramachandran's company, too, will be a good thing. Perhaps you will get more experience in Bangalore. Devdas says that your letters to him are very short. Write in detail. Describe your daily programme also.

Harilal has again become unbalanced. He has again written a letter to the newspapers saying all kinds of things. He has left the Swami with whom he was staying. It is difficult to say what he will do now. I have put my trust in God. He may do as He wills.

I am accompanied by Ba, Kano, Manu, Kanaiyo, Mahadev, Pyarilal and Radhakishan. Sharda (Chimanlal's) is expected to come. You may come whenever you wish. There is enough room here. I am getting good experience of Bachu. I am convinced that the intellect can be fully developed while learning different crafts. This is not to forbid literary studies, but only to say that the intellect can be best developed through crafts. Literary studies then become a very easy task and take their proper place. At present literature has merely become a means of self-indulgence and we are suffering the consequences of that.

1 G. Ramachandran

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7321. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

247. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 12, 1937

CHI. LILA,

I waited for your letter today but it did not come. You must be calm. If milk is in short supply its consumption should be regulated. Let children have as much of it as they want. You must also talk to Khandu and others. He should have no objection to milk coming in.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I hope you are getting post and newspapers regularly there.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy. Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

248. TELEGRAM TO NANDALAL BOSE

BULSAR
MAY 13, 1937

NANDALAL BOSE
SANTINIKETAN
COULD YOU COME EARLY INSPECT SITE NEXT CONGRESS AND ADVISE REGARDING PLAN ETC?
INFORM DATE. REACH BARDOLI VIA BHUSAVAL.

GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9825
MY DEAR IDIOT.

Your two letters of 7th and 11th respectively have just come in. We arrived here yesterday 3 p.m.

Whether four days’ gap is too long or not is a matter of opinion. I certainly missed your letter in Bardoli as also here yesterday. But you are always excused. I do not want your letters at the cost of your health or your work. But I want them when you can give them to me without strain and stress.

Your letter to the Municipality is good. If no relief is immediately given, you should certainly expose the Municipality. Why not write to Lady Linlithgow? Invite her to visit the quarters.

I am not going to issue a certificate of merit until you possess excellent health. And you can do it, if you will be carefree and take plenty of milk, juicy fruit and salads. What is the quantity of milk you take now?

I do not believe in your reserving things to be told to me when we meet. You either forget them or the things are too stale to bear telling or there is no time.

When you have a hailstorm, why can’t you say "God knows best?” If He does not, who does? When we have what we call magnificent weather, why should we thank God, and why not when there is uncomfortable hailstorm? I can understand not thanking at all. But we do, whether we say it in so many words or not, every time we feel pleased. To be pleased is to express thanks by action.

Here comes the meal and I must stop.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]
The Hindi letter is first class.

From the original: C.W. 3603. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6412
250. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

MAY 13, 1937

MY DEAR GHANSHYAMADASI,

Your letter about Cochin awaits a reply. We may not make light of the matter. It is serious enough in Bapu's opinion, and will need a considerable amount of propaganda. But it is clear that we may not finance it. This sort of spoon feeding cannot last long. However Bapu thinks you may ask Parameswaran Pillai to submit you a detailed budget. We can then examine it and be in a better position to decide. We shall expect you here on the 20th.

Yours affectionately,

MAHADEV

Birla Papers. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

251. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 13, 1937

CHI. PREMA,

Only today I got your letter and I am replying to it immediately. Your previous letter is still lying in my file. But let me dispose of this. I will see about the other later.

Tell Sushila that, if all of you had come here, I could have accommodated you but wouldn’t have been able to give you the privacy you had there. Nor the cold of that place, if your description of it is correct. Here we do feel the heat.

I don’t know if injustice has been done to Nariman. Why should it be assumed that the leader of Bombay should become the leader of the whole Presidency? And can anybody misguide or coerce all the representatives of three Provinces? If injustice has been done, why do all those representatives, who are still alive, put up with it? I, therefore, don't understand this talk about injustice. I don't even

---

1 In his letter dated May 7 to Mahadev Desai, the addressee had written: "Parameswaran Pillai wants financial help for carrying on propaganda work. I don't know how Bapu thinks about it, but personally I should not like to give undue importance to Cochin order. Perhaps thereby we would not help the cause."

2 K.F. Nariman, President, Bombay Provincial Congress Committee, who was defeated in the Bombay Legislature leadership election, had charged Vallabhbhai Patel with bringing about his defeat. This led to a prolonged controversy which was finally settled by arbitrators, who declared Vallabhbhai Patel free from blame.
understand what Sardar is believed to have done. I felt that the whole agitation was got up. But if I don't understand this matter properly, you may reason with me and convince me. I have no antipathy to Nariman. My attitude has nothing to do with the charges which have been levelled against him. The truth or falsehood of these charges can be inquired into whenever Nariman wishes. I learnt only today that he is your friend. I have expressed my opinion in a perfectly objective spirit.

I was pained to read about . . . ¹ I have published only what both of them told me and that, too, because she wanted me to publish it. It seems to me that . . . ² makes no distinction between truth and falsehood. You may show her this.

I had written to Dev. I have received his reply. I did not write immediately.

I was glad to learn that the work in Saswad has not been given up. I believe in the saying, "Not to embark upon a thing in the first instance." If you take up any other work now, cling to it.

It would have been better if you four had asked me to give you an appointment. I accept your argument that I wouldn't have been able to say much without knowing the position at Saswad. You are also right in saying that this is only the beginning of my experience of village life, and that, therefore, all of us are equal in that respect. Even so, my ideas have an element of originality in them, and the power behind them comes from ahimsa. I think, therefore, that all four of you would have learnt something from me.

I like your effort to learn the art of thinking for I had found your speech at Hudli lacking in thought. Your ideas there seemed to me like so much smoke emitted by your brain. They were not outpourings of the heart. I wanted to spare some time and discuss them with you and convince you, as clearly as two and two make four, that there was no real thinking behind them. But you left in a great hurry and so I did not get any opportunity. Since I was in no hurry to prove to you your lack of thought, I didn't hold you back. I was sure that you yourself would sooner or later see this deficiency in you. And now I see your admission of it in this very letter of yours. It is understandable that you do not see this deficiency in the ideas you expressed at Hudli. But if you really learn how to think, you are

¹ The names have been omitted.
² ibid
³ Vide footnote 2, “Speech at Gandhi Seva Sangh Meeting Hudli-II”, 17-4-1937 bound to see the deficiency in those ideas.

I, therefore, like you having given up the thought of asking for my views regarding principles. I will like it better still if you resolve to make no speeches till you have mastered the art of thinking, and you will acquire the art the sooner if you make no speeches.

Blessing to you all

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10389. Also C.W. 6828. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

252. LETTER TO MРИDULA SARABHAI

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 13, 1937

CHI. MРИDULA,

We arrived here yesterday afternoon. Now you come as soon as you can. Both of us are waiting for you.

Mummy I hope is well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11203. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

253. LETTER TO MOTILAL ROY

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 14, 1937

DEAR MOTI BABU,

Arun Chandra Dutt has my blessings and so his partner. I assume that this celibacy means freedom from every form of sexual contact, mental or physical, and that they are husband and wife only in name and are truly partners in service.

I hope you are keeping fit.

Yours,

M.K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 11049
254. LETTER TO G.D. BIRLA

MAY 14, 1937

MY DEAR GHANSHYAMDASJI,

I have your full letter of the 10th with the enclosure. Bapu read both the letter and the enclosure and said you are wrong in thinking—as you seem to do with The Statesman—that he is now making an additional demand. He has made Government's work definitely easier by making the Congress demand free from ambiguity and no one can now say as Lord Zetland has done that if an assurance were given it would lead to endless discussions about interpretation and allegations of breach of faith. If the bare assurance that Bapu has now reduced the Congress demand to is granted, there will be no questions of interpretation and no fear of breach of faith. I am surprised that you do not see this.

You seem to have read more meaning in my sentence than I had meant. I meant to say that if the speech had been made two months ago it would have gone a long way in bringing about an understanding. That is to say, from that statement to the assurance asked for by Bapu would have been a very easy step. He has publicly recognized the conciliatory tone in which the speech was couched, but it leaves him enough loophole to say that he meant nothing more than is laid down in the Government of India Act. They must be prepared to face the fact that a new convention is being asked for by the party commanding the biggest majority in the country and it must be given.

Lord Lothian's letter contains nothing new. He wrote a much longer letter to Bapu on similar lines.

But more when we meet.

Your affectionately,

MAHADEV

Birla Papers. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

1 In his letter dated May 13, the addressee referring to the leading article in The Statesman had written: "It appears that an impression is gaining ground that there is something more subtle at the bottom of the simple utterances of Bapu than what could be read in the language itself."
2 In his speech at the House of Lords; vide Appendix IV.
3 Vide "Interview to Associated Press of India", 6-5-1937; also "Statement to the Press", 12-5-1937
4 In his letter dated May 10, the addressee had written: "When I read Bapu's interview (vide "Interview to Associated Press of India", 6-5-1937), on Zetland's speech, I felt that either I had misunderstood Bapu all along or perhaps his attitude has recently been stiffened . . . You also say that 'had he, viz., Zetland, said this right in the beginning, there would have been no impasse.' That shows that there is nothing wrong with the speech itself . . . it was delivered at a wrong moment."
5 This was an enclosure to the addressee's letter dated May 10 to Mahadev Desai.
255. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

MAY 14, 1937

[CHI. LILA] VATI,

You insisted on walking . . . . Anna writes and says that . . . considerably. Even then you walked with me. What happened was only . . . For this must have . . . your heart. You must have received my previous letters.

Give Anna Rs. 13 and Kamalabai the fare up to Rajkot plus Rs. 2. If she is ready to go to Rajkot, please prepare for her whatever she wants for tiffin. The fare to Rajkot comes to about Rs. 13.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9586. Also C.W. 6558. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

256. THE CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAMME

The Working Committee has emphasized the necessity of the members of the Legislatures and other workers taking the constructive programme of 1920 to the three crore villagers between whom and their representatives a direct contact has been established. The representatives may if they choose neglect them, or give them some paltry or even substantial relief from financial burdens; but they cannot give them self-confidence, dignity and the power of continuously bettering their own position unless they will interest them in the fourfold constructive programme i.e., universal production and use of khadi through universal hand-spinning, Hindu-Muslim or rather communal unity, promotion of total prohibition by propaganda among those who are addicted to the drink habit, and removal by Hindus of untouchability root and branch.

It was announced in 1920 and 1921 from a thousand platforms that attainment of swaraj by the non-violent method was impossible without these four things. I hold that it is not less true today.

It is one thing to improve the economic condition of the masses by State regulation of taxation, and wholly another for them to feel that they have bettered their condition by their own sole personal effort. Now this they can only do through hand-spinning and other village handicrafts.

Similarly it is one thing to regulate communal conduct by means of pacts between leaders, voluntary or imposed by the State; it is wholly different for the masses to respect one another’s religious and outward observances. This cannot be done unless the legislators and workers would go out among the villagers and teach them mutual toleration.

1 The original is damaged at several places.

Again it is one thing to impose, as we must, prohibition by law, and another to sustain it by willing obedience to it. It is a defeatist, arm-chair mentality which says that it cannot work without an expensive and elaborate system of espionage. Surely if the workers went out to the villagers and demonstrated the evil of drink wherever it is prevalent, and if research scholars found out the causes of alcoholism and proper knowledge was imparted to the people, prohibition should not only prove inexpensive but profitable. This is a work essentially for women to handle.

Lastly, we may banish by statute, as we must, the evil consequences of untouchability. But we cannot have real independence unless people banish the touch me not spirit from their hearts. The masses cannot act as one man or with one mind unless they eradicate untouchability from their hearts.

Thus this and the three other items are a matter of true mass education. And it has become imperatively necessary now that three crores of men and women have rightly or wrongly power put into their hands. However hedged in it is, Congressmen and others who want the suffrages of these voters have it in their hands either to educate the three crores of mankind along the right lines or the wrong. It would be the wrong line to neglect them altogether in matters which most vitally concern them.

_Harijan_, 15-5-1937

257. WHOSE IS THE BLAME?

With reference to my note¹ in _Harijan_ of 17th April, 1937, about the alleged ill-treatment of Christians by Hindus, I have received two letters. One is from Shri C.K. Parameswaran Pillai, President of the Kerala Harijan Sevak Sangh, and the other from Dr. M.E. Naidoo of Nagercoil. Shri Pillai writes:

I read in the _Harijan_ your statement regarding the complaint made by Father Petro about the interference of an Excise peon with some new converts to Christianity. As soon as I returned from Madras I wrote to this priest for detailed information regarding the incidents referred to in his card. Having received no reply from him I sent a reminder yesterday. If he gives me sufficient materials, I will enquire into the matter and make a report.

¹ Vide “Bad if True”, 17-4-1937

Dr. Naidoo writes a long letter sending me countercomplaints. He cites 12 cases of disturbances by Christians during the last two years. They are taken from his periodical reports made to the kerala provincial Harijan Sevak Sangh. I take the following extracts from his letter.

Of course the counter-complaints cannot disapprove the charges brought by Father Petro. I hope, therefore, that he will reply to Shri Shri Pillai’s letter and enable him to deal with or refute the charges brought by him. It is the duty of the Harijan Sevak Sangh to promote harmony between Harijans and others with whom they come in daily contact. It is equally its duty to protect Harijans from ill-treatment as also to protect others from being molested by them.

_Harijan_, 15-5-1937

258. THE MARRIAGE IDEAL:

A FRIEND WRITES:

In the current issue of _Harijan Sevak_ in your article entitled “A Moral Dilemma” you have observed, “Many marriage taboos appear to have grown out of social customs. They are nowhere seen to rest on any vital, moral or religious principle.” My own instinct based upon my experience tells me that probably these taboos were promulgated out of eugenic considerations. It is a well-known principle of the science of eugenics that the issue resulting from the crossing of exogamous elements is eugenically fitter than the product of endogamous unions. That is the reason why in Hinduism _sagotra_ (सगोत्र) and _sapinda_ (सपिंद) marriage are interdicted. On the other hand if we admit social custom with all its kaleidoscopic variety and change to be sole reason for these taboos, we are left with no strong reason why marriages between paternal uncle and niece, or for the matter of that between brother and sister, should absolutely be tabooed. If, as you say, the begetting of progeny be the only legitimate object of marriage then the choice of partners would become purely a question of eugenic harmony. Are all other considerations to be ruled

---

1 Not reproduced here
2 The Hindi original of this appeared in _Harijan Sevak_, 15-5-1937, of which this is a “slightly abridged” translation by Pyarelal.
3 Only extracts from the letter written by Haribhau Upadhyaya are reproduced here.
4 _Vide_ “A Moral Dilemma”, 29-5-1937
5 In Pyarelal’s translation, however, this reads: “Marriage taboos are not universal and are largely based on social usage.” out of court as relatively unimportant? If not, what should be their order of precedence? I would set it down as follows:
1. mutual attraction or love;
2. eugenic fitness;
3. approval and consent of the respective families concerned; and consideration for the interest of the social order to which one belongs;
4. spiritual development.

What do you say to it? . . .

I entirely agree with you that a married person who confines the sex act strictly to the purpose of procreation should be regarded as a brahmachari. I also hold with you that in the case of a married couple who have practised the rule of purity and self-control before and after marriage a single act of union must lead to conception. In support of your first point there is in our Shastras the celebrated story of Vishwamitra and Arundhati, the wife of Vasishtha who in spite of her one hundred sons was greeted by Vishwamitra as a perfect brahmacharini, whose command even the elements were bound to obey because her connubial relations with her husband were purely directed to the attainment and discharge of the function of motherhood. But I doubt whether even the Hindu Shastras would support your ideal of having only one offspring irrespective of whether it is male or female. It seems to me, therefore, that if you liberalize your ideal of married life so as to include the begetting of one male offspring in addition to the possible female ones, it would go a long way towards satisfying many married couples.

I do not know what the scientific basis for the various taboos in respect of marriage relationships is. But it seems to me clear that a social custom or usage that helps the practice of virtue and self-control should have the sanctity of a moral law. If it is eugenic considerations that are at the root of interdiction of marriages between brother and sister, then they ought to apply equally to cousin-marriages. A safe rule of conduct, therefore, would be as a rule to respect such taboos where they exist in a marriage enumerated by my correspondent. But I would change their order of importance and put 'love' last in the list. By giving it the first place, the other conditions are liable to be overshadowed by it altogether and rendered more or less nugatory. Therefore, spiritual development ought to be given the first place in the choice for marriage. Service should come next, family considerations and the interest of the social order should have the third place, and mutual attraction or 'love' the fourth and the last place. This means that 'love' alone, where the other four conditions are not fulfilled, should not be held as a valid reason for marriage. At the same time, marriage where there is no love should equally be ruled out even though all the other conditions are fully complied with. I should score out the condition of eugenic fitness, because the begetting of offspring being the central purpose of marriage, eugenic fitness cannot be treated merely as a condition, it is the sine qua non of marriage.

Hindu Shastras certainly show a marked bias in favour of the male offspring. But this originated at a time when physical warfare was the order of the day and adequate man-power was a sine qua non of success in the struggle for existence. The number of sons that a man had was therefore then looked upon as a mark of virility and strength and to facilitate the begetting of numerous offspring even polygamy was sanctioned and encouraged. But if we regard marriage as a sacrament, there is room in it only for one offspring, and that is why in our Shastras the first offspring, described as धर्मजा [dharmaja], i.e., 'duty-born', all subsequent issues being referred to as कमाजा [kamaja], i.e., 'lust-born'. I make no distinction between son and daughter. Such distinction is in my opinion invidious and wrong. The birth of a son or a daughter should be welcome alike.

The story of Vishwamitra and Vasishtha is good as an illustration of the principle that the sexual act performed solely for the purpose of begetting offspring is not inconsistent with the highest ideal of brahmacharya. But the whole of that story need not be taken literally. Sexual intercourse for the purpose of carnal satisfaction is reversion to animality, and it should therefore be man's endeavour to rise above it. But failure to do so as between husband and wife cannot be regarded as a sin or a matter of obloquy. Millions in this world eat for the satisfaction of their palate; similarly millions of the husbands and wives indulge in the sex act for their carnal satisfaction and will continue to do so and also pay the inexorable penalty in the shape of numberless ills with which nature visits all violations of its order. The ideal of absolute brahmacharya or of married brahmacharya is for those who aspire to a spiritual or higher life; it is the sine qua non of such life.

Harijan, 5-6-1937

259. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

TITHAL, BULSAR,

MAY 15, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your note and the cutting. Of course you will miss your Hindi lesson or Sanskrit when you are tired or busy. These things ought never to be a tax on you. They must be your recreation. You will master these languages better and mentally and physically flourish under recreative work. And on no account may you omit your daily walks.

The cutting you send is out of the ordinary. The writer is concerned about my soul more than about the loss of Harijans to the so-called Christianity.

Sardar has ensured perfect quiet for me. He does not allow visitors to come near me. This leaves me free to attend to correspondence with fair regularity.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3604. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N.: 6413

260. LETTER TO S. AMBUIJAMMAL

MAY 15, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM,

You have sent me a full and businesslike letter. Lakshmanrao went as he came. He answered your description completely. He was quite docile.

Kamala gave birth to a still-born son. She was put in a maternity hospital at my instance in Cawnpore. She will now be sent to Rajkot where Narandas Gandhi, the Ashram Manager, will take charge of her. She has made lavish promises of exemplary behaviour. Harihar Sharma will be in Segaon. I do not just now need your assistance unless you and Mrs. Rangachari wish to contribute anything towards her maintenance. If she proves worthy she will earn her living. Meanwhile there is no difficulty about supporting her. You need not therefore go out of your way to send me anything.

Whenever your translation of [the] Ramayana comes out it must be first class and flawless. I do not want anything inferior from your pen.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
261. LETTER TO NANDALAL BOSE
MAY 15, 1937

DEAR NANDA BABU,

You cannot afford to have indifferent health. I hope, therefore, that you will be soon restored. I would not think of risking any damage to your health although your presence may be urgently needed. But I understand what you mean. As soon as the site is finally chosen, I hope to send you topographical details and the draft plan that may be prepared. Sardar Patel is inviting Mhatre and Ramdas, both of whom you know, to select the site and prepare the sketch plan.

I am in Tithal till the 30th instant.

Yours sincerely,
M.K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9826

262. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL
TITHAL, MAY 15, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

I got your letter. Certainly Lilavati is proud but she has no malice in her. One who has malice stings. Lilavati speaks out on the instant whatever she feelbut harbours no ill will afterwards. Anybody who has malice cannot tolerate the happiness of others and will never hesitate to harm him or her when an opportunity occurs. I have not seen Lilavati ever doing this. To speak sarcastically is not a sign of malice. It is just a way of speaking with some. It is a fact that she looks up to very few with respect. But that is only a sign of pride. One who is eager to have good relations with others should keep silent and serve them as much as possible. You have less thinking power and have, therefore, less capacity for weighing things. You should therefore, practise writing and expressing your thoughts clearly so that you may learn to think clearly. And you must study some book of deep wisdom. Such a book is the Ramayana or the Gita. You have very straightforward nature and a strong moral character, and they

1 Vide also “Letter to Nandalal Bose”, 13-5-1937
2 Baburao D. Mhatre, an architect of Bombay create a good impression about you. Your welfare is assured.

You are experiencing burning heat there. Here because we are just facing the sea we get cool and gentle breezes.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7067. Also C.W. 4559. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

263. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

MAY 15, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I am very glad that you wrote the long letter. It will be enough for me if you and Lilavati only adjust yourselves to each other. It was certainly good that all the pent-up feelings came out that day.

I followed what you have written about Mirabehn. If she had no shortcomings at all, she would be a saint. We should only see everybody's virtues. Is there anybody who has no shortcomings? We should not, therefore, even think about them. If we look at people's shortcomings only, we would be sure to go mad and be left alone in the world.

I understand about Chiranjilal. If we bear in mind that we are servants, then anyone being a leader should not hurt us. We may not submit to anybody's order for our selfish interest, but for the sake of service we may make ourselves slaves of the whole world.

If you feel that Nanavati's¹ health is deteriorating, please find out the cause.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8586. Also C.W. 7010. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

¹ Amritlal T. Nanavati
264. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

MAY 15, 1937

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I got your letter. Take whatever rest may be necessary to recoup your health. If you have to give up any work, then do so. Cling to hip-baths. It is good that you have started sucking sugar-cane.

You are in no way responsible for Lilavati’s suffering. Nor need you spare half an hour for her. She herself is the cause of her suffering. It is true that she feels lonely there. Give her as much love as you can.

Anna is a very experienced man. I had heard all that he had to say. I have requested him to console Lilavati. He can do it. Wait and see what he can do.

Two books pertaining to khadi are with Anna (with Mirabehn). The rest you will get from the library at either Nalwadi or the Mahila Ashram.

If Nanubhai and the worker from Khadi Karyalaya come, I will see them.

About the jaggery from dates, please write to Radhakisan. He had offered to purchase it. Write to Gosibehn₁, too. I have written to her.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10730

265. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

TEETHAL, VALSAD,

MAY 15, 1937

CHI. RAMDAS,

I have your letter. Kano could not have been as happy anywhere else as he is here. The sea almost intoxicates him with joy. Everyday, I take him into the water² and all of us walk in the water. Not only is there no danger whatever in this but it is also an excellent thing to do from the point of view of one’s health. Sardar and others also do the same.

₁ Gosibehn Captain
₂ Teethal is on the western sea-coast of Gujarat.
I will count it your good fortune if you succeed in inducing Jamnadas to pay you your salary. May I now assume that you have settled down?

I understand what you say about Bangalore. What you say is of course true. One should be satisfied, as you say, with that much for public service. One should not feel embarrassed in asking to be paid enough for subsistence in return. You may stay where you think you will be happy. How can I help if my brain refuses to think in any other way? It just did not occur to me that the conditions which did not suit you in Wardha or Bombay would also not suit you in Bangalore.

I do not fully grasp what you say about Nimu. You may send her over here whenever you wish. I have not been able to decide where ultimately to send her to stay. I would certainly not consign her to just any kind of place. If, however, you send her over to me, you must not then worry about her. Why should both of us bear the same burden of worry? Do whatever you decide to do after the fullest deliberation by both of you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

266. LETTER TO BALVANTSINHA

MAY 15, 1937

CHI. BALVANTSINHA,

The book on goshala has been located. It will come to hand.
Your yajna of goseva must be progressing well.

KANU
On behalf of Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1900

267. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 15, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

Did I not tell you that it was a good sign that there were no letters from Bhai? In today’s post there is a letter to Manu from Vijaya saying that you have fallen ill—that you have a stomach-ache. I have warned you that you must immediately stop eating wheat preparations and live entirely on milk, fruit and vegetables. You may well take less of milk. Maybe milk has caused the stomach-ache. Juicy fruits are the least harmful. It will be good if you apply mud-pack to the stomach at night. I wish you not to be lazy and do as I suggest.

Pyarelal makes perfect bread. It is baked hard but I have no difficulty in eating the top and the middle portions. It keeps fresh for four days. The loaves are of uniform quality.

I understand about Bhanu Bapa.

Anna had given faithful details about your situation. It does not matter that you had to pay the price for the work that you managed to do. Do not force yourself to attend the morning prayers.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

268. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

MAY 15, 1937

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I had your letter and a separate one from Deka. Deka’s letter along with my reply is enclosed herewith. Deka has written something about the socialists. Did you, too, understand the matter in the same way?

I am awaiting your letter regarding the Narela Ashram. I hope your health is all right.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2452

---

1 Vijaya N. Patel
2 K.C. Deka, Assamese labour worker in Delhi
269. LETTER TO SARASWATI

MAY 15, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

You ought to write your letters only in ink. We are all living with the Sardar at a seaside village called Tithal, a hundred miles from Bombay. Ba, Manu, Kanu, Mirabehn and others are here. Kanti, too, will come down for a few days.

Why doesn't Amma spin these days? We can do without food but never without spinning. It is a great yajna. Does not Amma know this? It is imperative that activities like spinning, carding, etc., should be a daily feature in your home.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6160. Also C.W. 3433. Courtesy:
Kantilal Gandhi

270. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

MAY 15, 1937

It is unfortunate that His Excellency has walked round instead of walking straight to the resolution of the Working Committee. If he has only to repeat what he said to Mr. Kher, leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party of the Presidency, there is evidently no advance upon the old position and if the Belgaum speech is a paraphrase of Lord Zetland's recent speech the situation is certainly no better and it is possibly worse.

The Hindu, 15-5-1937

1 Addressee's mother

2 On May 14, in his speech at Belgaum, Lord Brabourne, Governor of Bombay, had said: “The special responsibilities placed on the Governor by Parliament deal with matters on which it was hoped that no conflict would arise between a Governor and his Ministers . . . The taking of office means hard work and the assumption of responsibility, but without these no country can govern itself; an attitude of mere negation leads nowhere and avails nothing . . . My Ministers, whatever their political outlook, can rely not only on this understanding and sympathy but also on my doing everything in my power to avoid a situation occurring in which conflict of opinion would arise between us in the sphere of responsibilities.”

3 Of May 6, 1937; vide Appendix IV.
271. THE REED v. THE FOUNTAIN-PEN

I am tempted to share with the reader the following letter received by Mahadev Desai:

Some time back in an article entitled “Wanted Rural-mindedness”, you recommended, as a step in that direction, the adoption of the reedpen in the place of the fountain-pen. I was struck by your argument, and after reading Bapu's interpretation of the A. I. V. I. A. membership pledge¹, I laid aside my fountain-pen and took to the reed, nine months back. I was not altogether unused to the reed-pen. . . .After a month of baffling experience, however, I was again forced to return to the fountain-pen a sadder and a wiser man. The reasons which compelled the change were as follows:

1. It took three hours to copy out matter, using a reed-pen, that could be done with the fountain-pen in one hour and a half. . .

2. It took at least from a quarter of an hour to three quarters of an hour to mend one reed-pen by means of an indigenous village knife. . . .

3. The fountain-pen enables you to make short jottings and entries, so indispensable in the course of village work, while standing, or while you are on the move. When I reverted to the use of the reed-pen, I invariably found that my diary-writing and maintenance of other daily records and registers fell heavily into arrears. . . .

Surely, it is no part of the policy of the A.I.V.I.A. to slave-drive its workers to the very limit of their capacity . . .

At the same time it would be unconscionable to go on using the fountain-pen in the teeth of the clear injunction of the A.I.V.I.A. . . .

As I write this another argument occurs to me. Perhaps you will find it to be specious as the preceding ones. Bapu welcomes the Singer machine as an aid to the tailor's needle; why should he not extend the same welcome to other domestic tools and appliances that are no less helpful to the individual householder . . . . The A.I.V.I.A. does not oppose the use of the plough, the spinning-wheel and the fly shuttle loom in the place respectively of the hoe, the takli and the old-fashioned simple pit loom by the cultivator if he feels so inclined. Why stop at that and interdict the use, further, of more advanced and efficient appliances of a like nature? Is not your insistence on the use of the inefficient and fragile reed-pen in the place of a metal nib of a piece with asking people in this age of iron and electricity to discard.

¹ The Gujarati original of this appeared in Harijanbandhu, 16-5-1937. This is a translation by Pyarelal.
² Only excerpts from the letter written by Prabudas Gandhi are reproduced here.
³ Vide “London”, 23-7-1909 and “Letter to Lord’ Amphthill”, 5-8-1909 all iron instruments and revert to primitive stone ones instead? You have applied yourself to the task of improving village tools. I would like you to suggest the nature and extent of the improvements which you would like to see effected.

The above letter is written partly in jest, partly in earnest and partly as a dialectical exercise for its own sake in which the writer obviously luxuriates. His whole argument boils down to this that modern appliances are capable of more speed than their earlier prototypes. If the consideration of speed were ruled out, there would hardly be left anything from his argument for me to answer. But the village movement, as I conceive it, does not discount speed or efficiency of production. Our village folk need all the efficiency that we can give them and more. The A.I.V.I.A. is doing its level best to increase the speed of production consistently with its ideal and self-imposed limits. Already the speed of the takli has been-increased beyond the wildest expectations of its protagonists. But this was achieved without the slightest sacrifice of the principle of rural-mindedness. More, I claim that the marvellous ingenuity and skill which rendered this possible could only spring from a village brain.
The limiting principle that was kept in view in effecting improvement in the speed of the takli, the spinning-wheel and other domestic tools should hold good in respect of the writing pen too. The rush and hurry of the town have no place in the village. The village-dweller has not to work under high pressure or to speed about from place to place in motor cars and trams like the city dwellers. All this work is done by the easier and more natural modes of locomotion. Similarly the fountain-pen can have no place in his economy. I might, perhaps, reluctantly go so far as to admit the steel nib as a compromise, but that is all. The steel nib in my opinion has spelt the death of the calligraphist's art the mending of a reed-pen was itself an art. It called into play the artistic skill and the personality of the scribe that was reflected in the characters which he traced. All that has gone with the advent of the steel pen. But the steel pen has not done even half the mischief that the fountain-pen is doing. The introduction of the fountain-pen in the village, to me, marks the beginning of the end of the existence of the village as such and its slow metamorphosis into the city.

The analogy of the Singer machine v. the tailor's needle adduced by the writer is misleading. The Singer machine was intended to supplement the work of the needle. It was never intended to be introduced into every hut and home. The purpose which it was calculated to serve and which it has actually served is to increase the speed of the individual needle to such an extent as to make hand-stitching a profitable whole-time avocation for the needy, unemployed of the cities. The fountain-pen has rendered an analogous service to the art of stenography, and as such it can certainly claim a place as a useful adjunct of city life.

The argument that I have used in connection with the fountain-pen applies mutatis mutandis to the other points raised by the correspondent in question. Clearly it is not possible to lay down hard and fast rules in all such cases. Let everybody strive to cultivate and practise the principle of rural-mindedness as best as he or she can.
Only let the worker from the city who goes out to work in the villages take care that he does not turn the heads and confuse the intelligence of the simple-minded village folk, whom ostensibly he is anxious to serve but whose requirements and standards of values and utility are altogether different from that of the city-dweller.

_Harijan,_ 5-6-1937

272. LETTER TO MRIDULA SHRABHAI

TITHAL,
_MAY 16, 1937_

CHI. MRIDULA,

I have your letter. Come as soon as you can. I cannot off-hand think of any woman’s name. But can you not postpone the matter till you come here?

One name has occurred to me while writing this. But I shall not let you have it now. If you cannot hold on and if you cannot check your curiosity then write to me and I shall let you have it. Otherwise, I shall tell you when you come. You may guess if you can.

Blessings from

BAPU

MRIDULABEHN SARABHAI
SHAHIBAUGH
AHMEDABAD (B. B. & C. RLY.)

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11204. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

273. MESSAGE ON OPENING OF ANNAKSHETRA

_MAY 16, 1937_

I congratulate the Thakore Saheb of Lathi on his throwing open the Annakshetra temple to Harijans. I wish the ceremony will be completed without any obstacle. I hope the public will accept with grace the Thakore Saheb's generous gesture and the Harijans will make their lives purer by taking advantage of this privilege.

As regards Thakore Saheb Gandhiji wrote:

I congratulate you for having decided to throw open your Annakshetra to the harijans. I hope that untouchability will be completely eradicated from your State.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 23-5-1937

274. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

TTITAL, BULSAR,
MAY 16, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I had duly received your wire. I have now written to Segaon. The exact date will be fixed there. Either they will inform you direct or I shall inform you.

The reason behind my enquiry regarding Mirabehn's money was that I feel inclined to spend a part of the sum in Europe.

The trunk of papers which was lost has still not been traced.

I have provisionally decided in my mind that, when I leave this place, Kanaiyo will leave for Rajkot.

I understand about Vijaya.

I am enclosing a letter from Prema.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8521. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

275. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

MAY 16, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

You have started thinking on the right lines. Continue to write to me as much as you wish. The two difficulties which you have mentioned are real, but only in the sense that they may hinder creation of family spirit. However, I am sorry that the inmates at Segaon do not regard the world as one family. For a devoted servant of the people such a feeling is essential. Those in whom it is born are seen behaving with a family spirit wherever they go, although the other people might be utter strangers to them and all of them might have different spheres of activity. Moreover, family spirit does not require mutual co-operation. Among members of the same family, some may be so straightforward by nature that they live in harmony with other members of the family who are curt. There is truth in your complaint that Segaon has become a dharmashala. But what can I do? I feel helpless. Although I keep off many, there are some whom I simply cannot. But I do hope that we shall succeed in cultivating a family spirit in Segaon. If we do not succeed, then it is certain that we will be able to achieve nothing at Segaon. I will, of course, be vigilant myself and also keep a watch on all others. But the result will depend on the joint efforts of us all.

1 Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 10-5-1937

I had thought that you did not worry about Kanchan¹, but now I see that I was mistaken. There is no cause at all for worry. Let her do what she can while staying in the Mahila Ashram. Why need you worry?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8585. Also C.W. 7011. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

276. LETTER TO VIDYA A. HINGORANI
MAY 16, 1937

CHI. VIDYA,

Got a letter from you after a long time. One should not fall ill. And if one falls ill, one should not grieve. Sun-bath should be taken daily. So also friction-bath. Apply mud-pack on the stomach at night. Do not take anything except milk and water. Do write to me. It is good that you have sent away Mahadev². Now he can certainly live away from you. Tell Anand, however poor his Hindi may be, he should try to write in Hindi. You should encourage him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

¹ Addressee's wife
² Addressee's son
277. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

MAY 17, 1937

MY DEAR AGATHA,

Your letter has just come. And I hasten to answer.

Could I be more definite than when I said if Mr. Butler and Lord Zetland meant what the papers made out they did, why not straightway give the assurances in terms of the (Congress) resolution? I have now gone a step further and said in so many words that when there is an emergency dismiss the Ministers.

The Bombay Governor's speech¹, as I read it, is a denial of what Lord Zetland is supposed to have yielded in his recent speech². You must have seen the text.

And why is my remark on complete independence a knotty point? Is it not in the Congress creed? Is it not in the very resolution which was shown to the Governors and to which they raised no objection?

Perhaps you do not know the difficulties we have to combat here. It is impossible to have mental reservations when you have millions of mankind to deal with, especially when you are training them not for an armed rebellion but for a peaceful revolution as yet unknown to history. I want you therefore not to be agitated over what the diplomats say there or here. Your and my first and last care is to hold on to the anchor at all costs but say nothing in anger, nothing equivocal, nothing short of the whole truth and then leave the result to the unseen and uncanny Power that over-rules all our pet decisions at Its own sweet will.

No more, for the postal time is up.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1499

278. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 17, 1937

MY DEAR C.R.,

I did not like the last line of your letter to Ghanshyamdas. If what I am doing does not carry conviction to you, you should strive with me and resist me. For it is you who have to bear the brunt, not I. And if you act merely as an advocate—no matter how brilliant—but without conviction the battle will be lost. I write not a line without deep conviction. Zetland gave me some hope, Bombay\(^1\) has shattered it if what he says is what Zetland meant. But my conviction about the rightness of our position grows with their double-dealing. I would far rather cancel our resolution and accept office without any condition than accepting office under the delusion that Zetland's speech with Butler's annotation was a near enough response to our resolution. Of course my conviction abides that unconditional acceptance would be fatal. The other would be still more so. The only honourable course therefore is to remain as we are till we get what we want and in the manner we want it. But if all this sounds hopelessly unreal to you, you should resist me for my sake and what is more for the sake of the cause.

¹ Vide footnote 1, “Interview to Associated Press of India”, 15-5-1937
² Vide Appendix “Lord Zetland’s Speech”, 6-5-1937.

Hope Laxmi and you are doing well
Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2063

279. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

MAY 17, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

I had a very long letter from Manubhai. He has given the whole history. For you there is nothing new in it. You must have got my letters.

Please let me know your [daily] programme.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7068. Also C.W. 4560. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

\(^1\) The reference is to the Bombay Governor's speech at Belgaum. \textit{Vide} also the preceding item.
280. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR
MAY 17, 1937

CHI. LILA,

There is a letter from Anna today in which again I read about your keeping bad health. You should leave off eating wheat, etc., for a few months. For a few days you should give up even milk. Put mud-packs on the abdomen and take hip-baths. Take as much rest as you wish but improve your health anyhow. Why don’t you listen to me in such a simple matter?

I hope you do not worry about anything now and have made friends with all. Never mind if you cannot attend prayers. Sleep well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9360. Also C.W. 6635. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

281. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI
MAY 17, 1937

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I hear from Anna and Munnalal that you are not keeping well. That ought not to be. Make whatever changes in your diet you think might help. Reduce your work. If this does not help, then go to some cool place. If you think it desirable to go to Malad, you may come back when the rains start. If your health is good, I will get plenty of work out of you. If you keep weak, I will hesitate to entrust any work to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10731
282. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 17, 1937

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

Yes, if you cannot give full time to paper-making because of any heat, then give five hours. Your health should not suffer on any account.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11681

283. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

TITHAL BULSAR,
MAY 18, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Your letter. Yes, the sea breezes are fine. I wish you were here to share them. We walk through the sea water every morning and evening. It is a bracing walk. Kanu the little one enjoys it most. We are almost 25 strong now. And presently we shall perhaps double the record. Tithal is a little village. It has only a few bungalows. We are in Bhulabhai's. He has hired another to take in the overflow. He bears all the expenses. I expect to leave this on 30th. I do not mind the Seagon heat. I must not absent myself for any length of time.

I am glad you were able to make a collection from the Club for Harijans. Of course, the principal portion should go to the Harijans and khadi. But I know you cannot, may not, force the pace.

This suppuration of the toe I do not like. Nevertheless, it is good that the poison is coming out. Are you having the hip-baths? What about the friction-baths? I wish you could master them and do them correctly. Are you continuing garlic? What about onion? No fried things I hope. And about dal1? Even a spoonful is poison for you. Purest milk and butter if needed with green vegetables and juicy fruit is your food. What is the quantity of milk?

Have you written to Balkrishna?

Love.

From the original: C.W. 3782. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6938

1 The source has "dholl".

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
284. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH
MAY 18, 1937

CHIMANLAL,

I have been meaning to write to you all these days but in the mean time I got your letter today. Sharda is fine. For the present she seems to be happy. If she can stay with me cheerfully, I am ready to relieve you of your responsibility regarding her. I will fix her up where and when I think proper. She will stay with me, of course, till she recoups her health. I will give her whatever treatment I deem fit. Just now she says she is quite ready to stay with me. She also says that both you and Shakaribehn\(^1\) are ready to entrust her to me. She had not told me that she was suffering from leucorrhoea. She felt shy. It seems to have become chronic. But I think it can be cured. It will take time though. I also understand about her marriage. I have been thinking about the matter ever since she told me about it. But marriage is out of the question till her health improves. I would favour marrying her outside the caste and, if possible, even outside the Province. But that remains to be seen. Sharda herself is ready for this and she says that both of you also will be ready. So much about Babu\(^2\).

Now regarding you two. Babu is 20; but in some matters she is wiser than her age. She seems to be much concerned for you both. You have–Shakariben has–Rs. 3,000 and it is on that that you live at present. I do not mind that. You need not worry even after that amount is spent. You ought not to care so much for possessions. But since you have the money, let it remain. I would not mind if, despite your having that money, you earn more somewhere by honest means. But so long as you have it, it would be more becoming of you both to do public work without accepting anything. But this is my personal view. If it does not appeal to you, you may certainly follow another path.

Babu also told me that Vijapur did not suit you and that you wished to go somewhere else. When I mentioned Rajkot, she said that that was the last place you would like to go to. The reason, that the estrangement between Narandas and you still persists, pains me. Being inmates of the Ashram, you two should be more than blood-brothers to each other. You ought to overcome your mutual antipathy. I am sure that there is no deeper cause behind it. You both have no personal interest to serve. Why this enmity, then? Hence, whatever disagreement you have must be one of principles only. Why be afraid

\(^1\) Addressee's wife
\(^2\) Sharda, addressee's daughter of such disagreement? If you wish, I may go deeper into the cause of this disagreement. Whether you go to Rajkot or not, your antipathy to each other must end.

Babu says further that you prefer your own place. I think nothing would be better than that, if you could settle down there. If you stay there, the expenditure also would be less and you could serve the village more easily. If, therefore, you can decide to stay in your village, you should do so.

If you wish, you may come and see me after the 25th. I shall leave this place for Wardha on the 30th. Don't worry at all about Babu.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 21

285. TELEGRAM TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

[After May 18, 1937]

NO MEMBER OF THE CONGRESS PARTY IN MADRAS LEGISLATURE HAS SOUGHT PERMISSION TO ACCEPT OFFICE.

GANDHI

The Bombay Chronicle, 23-5-1937

286. TELEGRAM TO BABURAO D. MHATRE

BULSAR,
MAY 19, 1937

MHATRE
ARCHITECT
BOMBAY MUTUAL BUILDING
HORNY ROAD, BOMBAY
PLEASE COME PLANNING NEXT CONGRESS CAMP. WIRE BULSAR.

GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 9832. Courtesy: Baburao D. Mhatre

1 This was in reply to the addressee's letter dated May 18 inquiring whether any Congress member had written to Gandhiji seeking "permission to accept office on the basis of Lord Zetland's statement and pleading for a change of policy in this respect".
2 ibid.
287. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

MAY 19, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

This is just to send you a sample of the lace now being manufactured in Andhra out of hand-spun yarn. The price is Re. 0-3-6 per yard. Do you, i.e., your customers, need any? Is it up to the mark? There is some for sale in the Bombay Depot.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3783. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6939

288. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

MAY 19, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have only today learnt of your vow of silence. I can find no fault with it if the vow has been taken with understanding. But if it is done out of anger, give it up.

Munnalal¹ and Anna write that you have a mind to pay a visit to Nagpur, but that you are refraining from asking me because you think I would not approve. You do not have to ask me at all. I have already given you permission to go to Nagpur or Bombay, wherever you want. I would like you to live in a place where you can remain cheerful and where you can make all-round progress. If I say that I would not like your going to Nagpur or Bombay I only mean that if I were in your place I would not go there. But this view has no value if it does not go well with you. Hence, instead of your staying on in a suffocating place, I would really wish that you should go to either Nagpur or Bombay and come back refreshed. Come only after you are well. Ultimately, your good lies only in your hands, not mine. I am now counting the days of my coming there. It is not as if I had anything special to do here and Sardar had no purpose in keeping me here beyond making me enjoy the sea air. I did have some work at Bardoli. But then that some work does crop up wherever I may be is a different matter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

¹ Munnalal G. Shah
289. LETTER TO N.N. GODBOLE

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 20, 1937

DEAR DR. GODBOLE,

I have now gone through your book carefully. It is good so far as it goes. Its price is prohibitive. You have gone beyond the scope of the book which its title suggests but the chapters are scrappy. Thus your examination of vegetarian and non-vegetarian foods reproduces authorities quoted in vegetarian literature and contains nothing original. I should expect an original contribution from an Indian scholar. Then the chapter on breeding and feeding is very superficial. Dairy experts tell me that breeding is the only thing. Feeding is said to produce little impression on the milk yield. I miss a chapter on comparison between buffalo and cow. Can both be supported? Which is the more economical animal? As you may be aware, separated milk is being widely recommended by Dr. Aykroyd¹. But I do not find in your book enough instruction as to the ways in which it can be used. I am myself making experiments within the limits of a villager and had hoped to find assistance in your book. Nor have you examined the indigenous methods of using milk.

Your sincerely,

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

290. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

MAY 20, 1937

BELOVED DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,²

I got your letter only this morning. Whose fault is it if I get your letters late and then in spite of my replying by return of post you also got my letters late? You yourself had asked for permission to live in a village, which I gave. What more could you do than riding, serving Harijans, lightening the burden of the poor and helping in digging wells? So I readily consented. But I would certainly like it even if you went to the frontier and did something similar. I had to leave for Allahabad suddenly, for since Jawaharlal was ill the Working Committee could not be held anywhere else and they required my presence.

At Sardar’s insistence, I am staying in a village called Tithal on the sea coast near Bulsar. I am accompanied by Ba, Mirabehn and others. I expect to return to Wardha on the 1st.

¹ Dr. W.R. Aykroyd, Director of the Nutrition Research Laboratories
² The superscription is in Urdu.

Why should asthma and cough trouble you even in such a dry climate as you have there? I hope you will have recovered by the time you get this letter, since I got your letters long ago.

It appears that Kanti will stay in Bangalore. He will have better facilities for study there.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 381

291. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI A. MEHTA

MAY 20, 1937

Bhai Bhagwanji,

It has been left to my discretion to send the accompanying letter. My duty, of course, seems to be to send it.

Vandemataram from
M.K. Gandhi

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5833. Also C.W. 3056. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

292. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

MAY 20, 1937

Chii. Vijaya,

I got your letter. The weather here is, of course, comparatively cool. But it is not favourable for work. Here I am having more sleep. I just like to go on sleeping. All the same the heat of Segaon is certainly not here. You, however, should keep yourself cool with wet clothes.

You did well in sending my letter to Manubhai. The spiritual benefit of not coming with me here was evident, for it was also your duty to stay there. There was pleasure and fun of a sort in coming with me. And one who can deny oneself even such innocent pleasures certainly advances one's spiritual welfare. You no doubt have strength of mind. You have added to it by not coming. Do you see this?

It is good that you and Indu go with Anna and hear the Gita. You do well too in helping in milking the cow.

The penknife could not be traced here, which means that it is lost.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: 7069. Also C.W. 4561. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi
293. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

MAY 20, 1937

CHI. LILA,

You may be 30 years old but to me you are still a child and will remain so. If you have patience everything will be all right. Everything would be all right if only you settled down. Nothing else is needed. Do you understand that one who wants to become orderly must have no pride in oneself? The orderliness that I want is both external and internal.

I have written about not sending The Times [of India]. I understand regarding your silence.

Radhakrishna ought not to return the ghee. He may buy some more, but should not return what he has.

Improve your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9361. Also C.W. 6636. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

294. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

MAY 20, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I got your letter. I am arranging about Harijanbandhu, etc. I do not understand why you do not get them.

Do not mind if milk is sold for two paise a seer. It is certainly a good thing that anyhow people get it Who are the customers? Do people other than Harijans buy it? Lately your letters have been mirroring your mind quite well. I like that.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8584. Also C.W. 7012. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

295. LETTER TO HARIPRASAD

MAY 20, 1937

BHAI HARIPRASAD,

You did will in writing to me. I am thinking how to make the exhibition at the forthcoming Congress as good as it can be. Please make any suggestions you wish to. Do have a talk with Sardar.
Ramjibhai always tries his best to do well any work in which he takes interest. I am therefore not surprised to learn that you liked his school and his garden.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4139

296. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI
MAY 20, 1937

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I continue to receive complaints about your health. Vijaya writes and tells me that you have been losing weight. Vasumati writes and says that you are not keeping good health. You yourself must find out the cause. You are not nursing any trouble in your heart, are you? Write to me in detail.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10732

297. LETTER TO KAPILRAI H. PAREKH
MAY 20, 1937

BHAI KAPILRAI,

It is good that you wrote. I am sending the letter itself to Jamnalalji. I will forward to you the reply that I receive from him. Perhaps he may even write to you direct.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI KAPILRAI PAREKH
SUNNY SIDE
BLOCK NO. 1, PLOT 253
MATUNGA, G.I.P., BOMBAY

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9730. Courtesy: Kapilrai H. Parekh
298. LETTER TO BHAGATRAM TOSHNIWAL

[AS AT] SEGAON, WARDHA,
MAY 20, 1937

BHAI BHAGATRAM,

Your letter is quite pertinent. One who believes in ahimsa dharma will not countenance the construction of a slaughter-house.¹

M.K. GANDHI

[From Hindi]
Gandhi ji aur Rajasthan, p. 308

299. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 21, 1937

CHI. ANAND,

At last I have a letter from you in Hindi. Your writing is good. It can be improved.

I feel sorry for Vidya. But we have to be patient in everything. I have sent you a telegram. Do take Vidya to a hill-station

What is the matter with Jairamdas? Why does he not write?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: C. W. 11066. Courtesy: Anand T. Hingorani

300. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 21, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I got your letter. The value of your letters will be proved if they bring about perfect sweetness in your relations with Balvantsinha, Lilavati and others. Think less, speak less and write less, but work more and cultivate unity of thought, speech, writing and action. I have kept aside the letters that call for replies. I shall take them up if I can.

¹ The addressee had asked Gandhiji to issue an appeal against the huge slaughter-house proposed to be put up in Lahore.
Otherwise we shall talk over things there. At present the pressure of work here has become very heavy.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8583. Also C.W. 7013. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

301. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

MAY 21, 1937

CHI. LILA,

I got your letter. I know that you are getting impatient. But I have become helpless. I am hoping to reach there on the 11th. The fruits of patience are sweet. You have come to suffer for the sake of service and not to enjoy yourself. "Those who plunge feel the highest bliss, but the onlookers burn with envy." Dhruva is believed to have suffered unbearable tribulations with a smile on his face. Joan of Arc entered the fire with a smiling face. This is a historical story. Do not some women even today jump into a pyre cheerfully in a frenzy of excitement? This is the only great lesson that is to be learnt from me. What else have I to teach?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9362. Also C.W. 6637 Courtesy: Llilavati Asar

302. LETTER TO K.B. MENON

[Before May 22, 1937]

You tell me that the Conference on civil liberties will be held in London on June 5. Whatever tends to preserve the civil liberties, no matter where, must command the sympathy and support of all sane people.

The Hindu, 22-5-1937

1 Segaon
2 Under the joint auspices of the National Council for Civil Liberties in England and the India League
The reader will find elsewhere an authentic and exhaustive note on the Koodalmanikkam controversy prepared by Shri G. Ramachandran, Secretary of the Kerala Harijan Sevak Sangh. The note is authentic in the sense that it is based purely on official records. Add to this note the following from the Kerala Harijan Sevak Sangh's office in Trivandrum:

In the issue of Harijan of 8th May in the article, "Cochin-Travancore" by Mahatmaji, in paragraph three, the following sentences are found:

"The pundits of India should dispassionately examine the orders and express their unbiased opinion. I am inclined to think that the Travancore Durbar may well invite the opinion of pundits on the single question of the religious propriety of the Cochin order and undertake to abide by their opinion. In other words, Travancore may well offer to abide by the verdict of an arbitration tribunal consisting of unbiased pundits who will be universally accepted as such. The opinion of an assembly of such pundits would be the nearest approach to an arbitration tribunal. For, whilst the Travancore Durbar had a perfect right to open to Harijans the temples within their sole jurisdiction and ownership and without reference to the opinion of pundits, it would hardly be right to propound a new Smriti in respect of temples where there is joint jurisdiction."

I am herewith forwarding a true copy of a judgment of the Chief Court of Cochin which discusses the Kaimal's position with regard to the Koodalmanikkam Temple. This judgment shows the Kaimal to be the supreme spiritual authority in all matters connected with that Temple, and therefore the opinion of the pundits in this instance seems to be unnecessary.

These enable the reader to form his own judgment as to the propriety or otherwise of the action of the Cochin Durbar. If the note and the Cochin Court judgment are to be trusted, evidently the Cochin Durbar's action was wholly wrong. This is not to say that the Kaimal's action was right in the religious sense. But if it was not, the only course open to the Cochin Durbar was to reason with the Kaimal, not Kaimal, not to force his hands as was done. The Kaimal evidently becomes the supreme and final authority on spiritual matters after his appointment by the Travancore Durbar. Like the king he can do no wrong. But even he may not long resist the opinion of his peers. And the only way the Cochin Durbar or anyone else can influence the

---

1 Vide Appendix "Koodalmanikkam Temple Controversy", 22-5-1937.
2 Vide "Cochin-Travancore", 8-5-1937
Kaimal’s judgment is, I presume, by evoking the opinion of pundits learned in spiritual matters. And legally speaking even their opinion has no binding effect on the Kaimal.

_Harijan_, 22-5-1937

304. RELIGIOUS OATH AND NON-RELIGIOUS

Shri Shivaprasad Gupta, the great philanthropist of Benares, writes:

After hearing the _Harijan_ of May 1st read to me, I have been pondering over the note “Gandhi Seva Sangh and Legislatures”. I reread it today, I also read the Weekly Letter, but I could not give rest to the surging thought rising in my mind.

The last paragraph of the note reads: “It is not a religious oath, so far as I understand the Constitution, and it is wholly consistent with the demand for immediate and concrete independence.” The following are the questions that arise in my mind:

1. Are oaths of several and different kinds?
2. Can an oath taken in the name of God, or in the alternative form where one has to affirm solemnly, be classed in two categories, “religious oath and non-religious oath”?
3. What is the governing idea behind a non-religious oath?
4. How can an oath of allegiance to the person of a king be consistent with “the demand for immediate and concrete independence”? This demand, at least to me, means depriving the same sovereign of his sovereignty.

I would very much like your answer to these pertinent questions.

My answer to the first and the second questions is ‘Yes’. The answer to the other two questions may be gathered from what follows.

An oath may be taken in the name of God and yet may not be styled religious. An oath that a witness takes in a court of law is a legal not a religious oath, breach of which would carry legal consequences. An oath taken by Members of Parliament may be called a constitutional not a religious oath, breach of which may involve mundane consequences. Breach of a religious oath carries no legal consequences, but in the opinion of the taker does carry divine punishment. This does not mean that any of the three varieties of oaths is less binding than the others on a conscientious man. A conscientious witness will tell the truth, not for fear of the legal consequence, but he will do so in every case. The legislator’s oath has an interpretation in terms of the Constitution which prescribes the oath. The interpretation may be given in the Constitution itself or may grow up by usage. So far as I understand the British Constitution, the oath of allegiance simply means that the legislator will in pushing forward his policy or point conform to the Constitution. I hold that it is open to the legislator consistently with his oath under the British Constitution to adopt measures in the Legislature for complete independence. That to my mind is the saving grace of the British Constitution. I fancy that the members of the Union Parliament of South Africa take substantially the same oath as the members in India, but it is open to that Parliament today to declare complete independence without any violation of the oath of allegiance. It is because I have a profound conviction that the British Constitution in theory permits of the fulfilment of the highest ambition of an individual or the nation of which he is a member that I advised the Working Committee to accept my formula for office-acceptance. And it is in the same conviction that I am struggling to get the British Government to respond to it. I am painfully conscious that they would prolong the agony to the breaking point. But I know that if we have faith and grit we shall win at every point and reach our goal without shedding a drop of blood. The British people apply the same laws to the game of politics that they apply to the game of football which I believe is their invention. They give no quarter to the opponent and ask for none. The fundamental difference in our case is that we have abjured the use of arms. This has confounded them. They do not believe our protestations. They do not mind our agitation for complete independence so long as we keep it within the constitutional limit. What else can the legislators do or are they to do inside their Assemblies? They may not take there pistols in their pockets. That would be a flagrant breach of the oath and also the law. Shri Shivaprasad Gupta need not worry himself over the propriety of the oath by Congressmen. If the agitation for complete independence was inconsistent with the oath, surely the British Government themselves would have raised that preliminary objection even to the candidature of Congressmen.

---

1 Vide “Sacrifice of Ras”, 18-4-1937

_Harijan, 22-5-1937_
305. LETTER TO M.A. JINNAH

TITHAL,
MAY 22, 1937

DEAR SHRI JINNAH,

Mr. Kher¹ has given me your message. I wish I could do something, but I am utterly helpless. My faith in unity² is as bright as ever; only I see no daylight out of the impenetrable darkness and, in such distress, I cry out to God for light.

Your sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

¹ B.G. Kher, who had been elected leader of the Congress Party in the Bombay Legislature.
² Hindu-Muslim unity

306. LETTER TO N.S. HARDIKER

MAY 22, 1937

DEAR DR. HARDIKER,

I got your letter³ yesterday. My opinion is that you should confer with the Provincial Committee there and on its agreeing you should take possession subject to the protest that the Seva Dal for whose work the building was constructed still remains under the ban. Before you consult the Committee it might be as well to ascertain from the Government whether the delivery of the buildings is to mean the lifting of the ban on the Dal. By the time the possessions is taken, ³ In his letter dated May 19, the addressee, Organizing Secretary of Hindustani Seva Dal, had sought Gandhiji's advice on taking over the Seva Dal building at Bagalkot. The building and other movable property used as training camp for the Seva Dal volunteers were attached by the Government in 1932. The property which belonged to A.I.C.C. was transferred to Karnataka Provincial Congress Committee in 1931, after Seva Dal's recognition as a subordinate body of the Congress. The addressee was doubtful of the use of the building as the ban on Seva Dal had not yet been lifted.

Jawaharlal will have returned and he will decide what use to make of the buildings.¹

I hope you are throughly restored to health.

Yours sincerely,
M.K. GANDHI

From the original: N. S. Hardiker Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

307. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

TITHAL, BULSAR,
MAY 22, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter. Don't ruin your health. It is good that you paid a visit to Hazaribagh. Sardar took it for granted that prisoners sentenced to short terms would be released.

I didn't send for you at Allahabad because I thought Jayaprakash might not like it. I would not like to displease him unnecessarily. I consider it my duty to respect his wishes as far as possible.

It is quite proper that you should stay with Father as long as you can. You will certainly be a great help to him. You should give him courage and tell him that he should not at all worry. You should also try to understand why he keeps worrying.

Why have they called you to Sitab Diara? Is Sitab Diara hotter or cooler? In which of the two places can you have greater facility regarding vegetables? Manu has now gone to Rajkot. In Segaon, only Vasumati, Vijaya, Lilavati, Nanavati, Munnalal and Balvantsinha are left now. It is quite hot there.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
We shall leave this place on the 30th.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3502

¹ In his reply dated June 14, the addressee said that according to the Bombay Government the ban was "still in force". He also added that he had been authorized by the Council of K.P.C.C. "to take delivery of the building" as required by A.I.C.C. However, in his letter dated July 6, the addressee informed Gandhiji of his reluctance to take over the building which were found to be in bad shape. He had accordingly communicated to the Inspector: "...unless full and due repairs are carried out by the Government, I cannot take charge of the said property ..." Vide also "Letter to N.S. Hardiker", 13-7-1937,
308. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

MAY 22, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

Please pay Chi. Kamu Rs. 30 from this month, i.e., from the 1st. If you can debit part of the sum to the school, do so. Debit the rest to my account.

Kamalabai doesn't seem to have recovered completely. She has expressed a desire to stay on till I return to Segaon and I have agreed.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8522. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

309. SPEECH AT TITHAL

MAY 22, 1937

If we want to impart education best suited to the needs of villagers, we should take the Vidyapith to the villages. We should convert it into a training school in order that we might be able to give practical training to teachers in terms of the needs of villagers. You cannot instruct the teachers in the needs of villagers through a training school in a city. Nor can you so interest them in the condition of villages. To interest city-dwellers in villages and make them live in them is no easy task. I am finding daily confirmation of this in Segaon. I cannot give the assurance that our year's stay in Segaon has

---

1 This is extracted from "Weekly Letter" By Mahadev Desai, who had reported: "The convener of the small conference of the teachers in Gujarat national schools which met at Tithal on the 22nd May had sent to the invitees a questionnaire which speaks for itself: 1. What is the education best suited to the needs of our villages and most beneficial to them? 2. How to combat mass illiteracy and ignorance? 3. Is literacy indispensable for intellectual growth? Is the system of starting instruction with teaching the alphabet and reading and writing prejudicial to intellectual growth? 4. The need of making vocational training the pivot of all instruction. 5. The future of the present national schools. 6. The possibility of imparting all education through the mother tongue of the children. 7. In what essentials of national education are existing schools lacking? 8. The necessity of making Hindi-Hindustani compulsory in the early years of primary and secondary education." On Gandhiji being invited to give his views on these points, he made observations giving individual examples. I epitomize them below leaving out the latter, which while they were interesting to the few friends to whom he spoke are of little use to the general reader." made of us villagers or that we have become one with them for common good.

Then as to primary education my confirmed opinion is that the commencement of training by teaching the alphabet and reading and writing hampers their intellectual growth. I would not teach them the alphabet till they have had an elementary knowledge of history, geography, mental arithmetic and the art (say) of spinning. Through these three I should develop their intelligence. Question may be asked how intelligence can be developed through the takli or the spinning-wheel. It can be, to a marvellous degree, if it is not taught merely mechanically. When you tell a child the reason for each process, when you explain the mechanism of the takli or the wheel, when you give him the history of cotton and its connection with civilization itself and take him to the village field where it is grown, and teach him to count the rounds he spins and the method of finding the evenness and strength of his yarn, you hold his interest and simultaneously train his hands, his eyes and his mind. I should give six months to this preliminary training. The child is probably now ready for learning how to read the alphabet, and when he is able to do so rapidly, he is ready to learn simple drawing, and when he has leant to draw geometrical figures and the figures of birds, etc., he will draw, not scrawl, the figures of the alphabet. I can recall the days of my childhood when I was being taught the alphabet. I know what a drag it was. Nobody cared why my intellect was rusting. I consider writing as a fine art. We kill it by imposing the alphabet on little children and making it the beginning of learning. Thus we do violence to the art of writing and stunt the growth of the child when we seek to teach him the alphabet before its time.

Indeed in my opinion what we have reason to deplore and be ashamed of is not so much illiteracy as ignorance. Therefore adult education, too, should have an intensive programme of driving out ignorance through carefully selected teachers with an equally carefully selected syllabus according to which they would educate the adult villager's mind. This is not to say that I would not give them a knowledge of the alphabet. I value it too much to despise or even belittle its merit as a vehicle of education. I appreciate Prof. Laubach's immense labours in the way of making the alphabet easy and Prof. Bhagwat's great and practical contribution in the same direction. Indeed I have invited the latter to come to Segaon whenever he chooses and try his art on the men, women and even children of Segaon.

As to the necessity and value of regarding the teaching of village handicrafts as the pivot and centre of education I have no manner of doubt. The method adopted in the institutions in India, I do not call education, i.e., drawing out the best in man, but a debauchery of the mind. It informs the mind anyhow, whereas the method of training the mind through village handicrafts from the very beginning as the central fact would promote the real, disciplined development of the mind resulting in conservation of the intellectual energy and indirectly also the spiritual. Here, too, I must not be understood to belittle fine arts. But I would not misplace them. Matter misplaced has been rightly described as dirt. In proof of what I am saying, I can only cite the tons of worthless and even indecent literature that is pouring in upon us with the result which he who runs may see.

_Harijan, 5-4-1937_

310. REGISTER OF CUSTOMERS

Shri Jerajani writes to say:¹

This suggestion is worth considering, and if a register of customers is maintained at each centre, it is likely to prove useful. The only doubt may be regarding its feasibility. I would regard it as practical if a complete list could be compiled speedily and at little additional cost. A list of workmen poses no difficulties. And, ordinarily it may be said that those workmen who are once registered continue to work for good. But customers keep changing every day. It cannot be said with certainty that the individual who purchases khadi worth one anna today is bound to come back for more. However, if the list is to be complete, even such a customer's name must be recorded. What is its utility? If a list is to be compiled, should it consist only of customers of a certain kind? In order that such a list should prove useful, it should be maintained in alphabetical order. If this is attempted, it will necessarily entail some expenses. Should a list then be made of those who give a certain yearly subscription? If this be the case, what benefit do they get out of it? As I have no experience in this matter, I can only frame such questions. Shri Jerajani's suggestion has been published here in order to invite discussion.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu, 23-5-1937_

¹ The correspondent, whose letter is not translated here, had said that a register of customers with their full names and addresses would prove useful.
311. VERY OLD QUESTIONS

I have received a letter. Its substance is as follows:

Our country does not manufacture any dyes. But the khadi sold in our country comes in many coloured prints. Obviously the dyes used could only be foreign. I cannot understand how we can tolerate it. India can certainly manufacture its own dyes. Why then foreign chemical dyes on a sacred thing like khadi? For patriotic reasons khadi is of course best for wearing for Indians but why shouldn’t it be as fine as muslin? There was a time when India used to produce muslin for the entire world.

All these three questions were discussed at length when Navajivan was first started. Ordinarily such questions are not raised these days. As the correspondent desires that replies should be given only through the columns of the Harijanbandhu, I give these here.

Ever since I accepted khadi as the focal-point of swadeshi in the year 1918, I have been repeatedly saying that we should keep the pledge of swadeshi not because we hate what is foreign but because the welfare of the country is rooted in swadeshi. Hence we should certainly accept those foreign products which we cannot produce immediately, which are needed by the country and the introduction of which would not harm the country in any way. Everyone can think of examples of such foreign goods. Regarding the propagation of khadi, the question of using [foreign] dyes arose at the very outset. The Spinners’ Association did not exist at that time. I had given the opinion that wherever indigenous dyes were not available, there should be no bar to using foreign ones. But the utmost effort should be made for producing the best possible indigenous dyes. The same policy continues even now. Experiments with indigenous dyes are being made and they are being used whenever it is convenient to do so. The needs of those who would not use foreign dyes are met by white khadi. The propaganda for khadi is not for its own sake, nor is it unthinking. The following is the trend of thought behind the khadi shastra. If Indians use nothing but khadi, crores of women spinners, carders, washermen, dyers and such other persons could get a livelihood; and crores of rupees will remain in the country and go into the pockets of half-starved and wholly or partially unemployed.
villagers. The Spinners’ Association by investing a negligible amount of capital has to date put almost three and a half crores of rupees into the pockets of such artisans. Had these earnings gone to a hundred or two or even ten or twenty thousand persons in cities, it would have been announced by the beating of drums. But no one is surprised because this amount has found its way without any fanfare, into the homes of hundreds of thousands of starving villagers. But I regard it as a minor miracle. No one is deprived of his livelihood by the use of foreign dyes, no new industry is prevented from coming up because of this and khadi has been given an impetus. I do believe that chemical dyes can be made in India but that is a distinct and independent industry. However, it is the dharma of the wealthy to take up that venture. Such risks are beyond the scope of a khadi worker.

Even today mill-like khadi is produced in sufficient quantity to meet the demand. Even the patolas of Patan are available today if anyone wished to wear them. But there are few such generous persons who would pay the price. If anyone expects that the same quality of khadi should be available at a price comparable to mill-made mull, I would tell him that it is impossible, and it should be impossible, to have hand-made mull without the use of force against the workmen.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 23-5-1937

312. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

TITHAL, BULSAR,
May 23, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I am overwhelmingly busy just now. Wish I had the time to describe the interesting events. This is just to acknowledge your letter. Your reconstruction circular letter is good. I have not even been able to study it so carefully as to enable me to offer helpful suggestions.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3784. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6940

---

1 Rich silk
313. LETTER TO STUDENTS OF VALLABH VIDYALAYA

May 23, 1937

CHILDREN OF THE VALLABH VIDYALAYA,

Live up to the name your school bears.

M. K. GANDHI

[From Gujarati]

Jivandwara Shiksham, Preface; also Bapuni Ashrami Kelavani, p. 81

314. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

May 24, 1937

BHAI VITHALDAS,

Please send on credit as much lace as you have or as much as you feel inclined to send to the following address. Most probably all will be sold. If any of it is not sold, it will be returned. If it is not much, wouldn’t you send it by post parcel? The address is this: Shri Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, Manorville, Simla.

I understand about Harjivan¹. We may inquire at Calcutta, and ask what they would pay, etc.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Wasn’t a tailor to come for stitching clothes for Mr. Kallenbach?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9793

315. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

TITHAL, BULSAR,

May 24, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I have written to Jerajani, A.I.S.A. Khadi Depot, Kalbadevi, Bombay, asking him to send you the lace for sale or return. You should send him your specimen or your criticism which he can understand.

¹ Harjivan Kotak, a khadi worker; vide also “A Letter”, 30-5-1937
² Vide the preceding item.
You should similarly send your opinion to the Gandhi Seva Sena.

Poor Tofa! In spite of your references to him in every letter, I have not even thought of him. My apologies to you and him. In spite of my regarding dogs and human beings as equal, I cannot feel the same in respect of illness of dogs as of men. But I hope for your sake that he is fully restored. The moral from this domestic illness may be that you cannot serve man and dogs at the same time and therefore dogs should not be kept as pets. Hard lines, but there it is. You cannot divide your loyalty between two.

The pin’s head may be far more dangerous than an open sore into which you can thrust your finger. Therefore don’t disregard it.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3605. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6414

316. LETTER TO MANUBEHN S. MASHRUWALA

May 24, 1937

CHI. MANUDI,

I got your letter with pranams from Surendra. How can I say now whether you should stay there or elsewhere and for how long? It is for you and Surendra to decide that. Wherever you stay, observe the rules [of the Ashram]. Whatever the temptations or pressure, don’t break the rules you have accepted for yourself. Both of you should daily recite the 12th chapter Of Bhagwad Gita attentively and ponder over it. By now you both must have learnt it by heart. You should be methodical in everything. Do nothing in haste. For two days we were quite crowded. Today it is practically empty here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2668. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

1 Of Bhagwad Gita
317. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

May 24, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

Your letter calls for a long reply. But nowadays there is such great pressure of work here that I could not get time to write a long reply. You should keep on writing, so that your thoughts may become clear. I shall then be able to understand you and guide you better. But I will say one thing here. My inability to visit Segaon more often has certainly pained me. My only consolation was that the cause was not my laziness but inability to get away from other jobs. But this is not to deny or extenuate my failure. I did not mean that we have not been able to do anything at all. But whatever we have done cannot be said to be of much value. I am not saying this by way of fault-finding. But we must think about the future. You are, of course, doing that. I expect I will learn more about the fast hereafter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8581. Also C.W. 7014. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

318. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

May 24, 1937

BAPA,

If Jamnalalji agrees, you may hold the Harijan Sevak Sangh meeting in Wardha in July.

I got just now the note about the financial condition of the Sangh. Reading it today is, of course, out of the question. Recently we have had a meeting of nationalist teachers here, and so letters have piled up. I cannot promise to send you my comments before the 28th.

Viyogi Hari writes and tells me that the Harijan Sevak continues to remain short of funds and asks what should now be done. I had a talk with Ghanshyamdas. He is unable to decide. Can you? If

1 Hariprasad Dwivedi, well-known Hindi poet and writer; Editor, Harijan Sevak nobody does anything and the shortage of funds continues, then you know my opinion—close down.

BAPU

SHRI THAKKAR BAPA
HARIJAN NIVAS
KINGSWAY, DELHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1178

319. LETTER TO NATHUBHAI N. PAREKH

May 24, 1937

BHAII NATHUBHAI,

Kanti has given me your letter and it was only after reading it that I came to know about your vanapravesh\(^1\). When I wander, the letters also wander after me. Your letter could not come into my hands till now. All the letters cannot reach me on the very day they arrive. It is good that you have completed 50 years. Take everything that one may from this stage of life and march on. Jayanti\(^2\) also came and saw me. Indu\(^3\) is staying with me at Segaon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6249

320. TELEGRAM TO CHHOTELAL JAIN

BULSAR,

May 25, 1937

CHHOTELAL
MAGANWADI
WARDHA

REGRET DEPARTURE POSTPONED TENTH JUNE. INFORM SEGAON.
VASUMATI CAN GO MALAD OR COME HERE ON WAY SABARMATI.
KAMALABAI SHOULD COME HERE VIA BARDOLI WAY RAJKOT.
NANAVATI SHOULD GO MALAD FOR HEALTH IF NECESSARY.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10733

\(^1\) Or vanaprastha; literally means “the life of a forest-dweller”. Here the word denotes completion of 50 years of life.

\(^2\) Sons of the addressee

\(^3\) ibid

VOL.71: 25 FEBRUARY, 1937 -5 JULY, 1937  287
321. LETTERS TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

TITHAL, BULSAR,
May 25, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

You have thinned down nowadays. Don’t let that happen. Why are you lazy in writing letters?

Manubhai has started writing to me. Nanabhai1 also was here. I had a talk with him also. I think Nanabhai approves of your self-restraint. He will, therefore, pacify Manubhai.

I was sorry that my return there had been postponed by eleven days. Wherever I am, there is always some work to do. But my real work is there.

Please tell Balvantsinha that I got his letter. There is nothing special in it which calls for reply. I am, therefore, saving my time to that extent today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7070. Also C.W. 4562. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

322. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

May 25, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

God’s will be done. Sardar will not permit me to leave this place till the 10th June. My heart is there. The heat there seems pleasant to me and the cool breeze here seems hot, for I know that my right place is there. Today also I am not replying to your [earlier] letter, because there is no time and the pressure of work is heavy. I cannot be very happy that you are going to start eating wheat. You should pass two to three months without eating wheat, i.e., without starch. Not eating wheat is likely to do you no harm, and the benefit is obvious.

I have sent a wire2 today. It must have been sent to you by Chhotelalji. I, therefore, don’t write about that here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8582. Also C.W. 7015. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

1 Nrisinhaprasad Kalidas Bhatt of Dakshinamurti, Bhavnagar
323. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

May 25, 1937

CHI. NANAVATI,

It is not right that I have had no letter from you at all. I have written many letters to you. Do not pity me needlessly. If you are not keeping good health, then have a change of air. I am upset because my return there has been postponed. I was holding my patience thinking that I would positively return there on the 1st. I have already sent a wire.¹

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10734

324. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

TITHAL

May 25, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI

I shall be coming there on the 12th instead of on the 1st. It will of course be nice if you can maintain good health and remain cheerful there. But if you cannot do so, the correct thing would be to go to your brother in Bombay. Munnalal writes that you have lost weight. It is not good that the stomach-ache persists. You did well in going to Nagpur.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

325. LETTER TO A. B. LATTHE

TITHAL, BULSAR,

May 26, 1937

DEAR MR. LATTHE,

It was good of you to write to me. My later statements do not in any shape or form alter my position. The formula about dismissal was enunciated in answer to the question as to how I would envisage interference by the Governors, since I admit that circumstances could be conceived when interference would be necessary, if the clause defining special powers of Governors was not abrogated. I then said that I did not contemplate an irremovable Ministry except by an adverse vote of the House, but that I contemplated also dismissal by Governors when a difference arose between them and their Ministers, which could not be got over by any reasoning. I preferred dismissal to voluntary resignation because I wanted the burden of dismissal to rest on Governor’s shoulders. That would check or minimize opposition pinpricks and make the working of offices by a party which is frankly opposed to the Act and the British Imperial system tolerably smooth. Now, if the difference between dismissal and what Lord Zetland has offered is very little, surely it is up to the Government to make up the difference rather than for the Congress to yield. To show that my original position is not [at] all altered, I would be entirely satisfied if assurances were given as was contemplated by the resolution of the A. I. C. C. The latest resolution of the Working Committee is but an interpretation of the A. I. C. C. resolution, not an advance or improvement on it. I hope that this letter clears up all the points raised in your letter; but if there is anything more, please do not hesitate to write to me.

Yours sincerely,

From a copy: C.W. 7982. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

326. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 26, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

Kamalabai returned there rather suddenly. Give the accompanying letter to her. You may take from her whatever work you like, within her capacity. If she serves as she has promised to do, she will certainly be able to do much work. You need not hesitate to ask her any question.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I shall be staying here up to the 10th. Shouldn’t, therefore, Kanu also leave on the 10th?

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8523. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
327. LETTER BHUJANGILAL CHHAYA

May 26, 1937

CHI. BHUJANGILAL,

You did very well in accepting Chandubhai’s daughter. Your Father will be certainly happy over this.

I saw no fault in your conduct towards Manu. How could you help if you came to like her? You put the proposal before me in a manner befitting a young man. I don’t think that you violated propriety in any way by doing so. Had I thought that your father would be pleased, I would have certainly suggested your name to Manu and she would have accepted my proposal. But, thinking that it would be impossible to obtain Father’s blessings, you suppressed your desire and thereby enhanced yours and the Chhaya family’s reputation. You may make any use of this letter that you like.

It is time to think what work you should take up in future. We shall do that when we meet.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am here till the 10th of June.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2600

328. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

May 26, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

What do we know? Rama didn’t know that he would have to go to the forest. Send Amtul Salaam. We will not give insulin and still cure diabetes. We will see about the tonsils. What a fuss I had made!

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11521
329. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

May 26, 1937

CHI. NANAVATI,

I got your letter after a long time. Nimu has been here for the last five days. For the present she will stay here. Nothing is decided about the future. If you have made up your mind to spend the whole summer in Segaon, then reduce your work and sleep at least for ten hours daily, full eight hours at night and full two hours during the day, either at one stretch or piecemeal. The weight must remain constant. The cause of the pain is obviously weakness. I hope you are taking hip-baths regularly. Take more milk if you can. Don’t care even for bread.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.] The time during which I intended to write the other letters was taken up by Gangabehn Jhaveri.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10735

330. LETTER TO BALVANTSINHA

May 26, 1937

CHI. BALVANTSINHA,

I had your letter. I shall enquire from Munnalal about milk. Your argument seems to be quite correct. I will not turn you out or anyone else. But I will not stop those who go away of their own accord. I shall extract from everyone as much work as possible. Although all are engaged in something or other, according to me it is still not sufficient. “Never to give up even at the cost of life” is also one of my mottos. To dismiss everyone after having permitted them to stay would be to admit defeat and prove oneself a fool. I don’t mind looking a fool as I already am one but this will certainly be painful. So how can I stand discomfiture?

Today Kishorelalbhai and Gomatibehn left for Bombay.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1901
331. INSTRUCTIONS TO SPINNERS

[After May 26, 1937]

Revered Bapuji’s instructions are that if the thread snaps while spinning it should be joined rather than thrown away. It will lessen the wastage. The best thing would be to spin in such a way that there would be no occasion for joining. Usually the thread snaps only because of its unevenness. There will not be any wastage if as soon as the thread becomes thinner than usual, the sliver is broken off and put along with the thin thread and spun again. Professional spinners follow this method.

At Bapuji’s instance,
NANAVATI

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 10736

332. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

TITHAL, BULSAR,
May 27, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,
One part of your letter has been dealt with by Mahadev.
Jawaharla’s letter to Ammu is inoffensive. It won’t do for women to have tender skin. His viewpoint should be appreciated. You were right in not circulating the letter. It may be read, if necessary, at some meeting where you can watch and correct misunderstanding. But just as it is necessary to understand his viewpoint, it is also necessary for you to recognize your limitations. You stand midway between two forces. You will therefore never become a democratic organization.² Perhaps your title is a misnomer. You may retain it but define your limitations. This theme can be further considered when we meet in July. (Is it not?) I hope the pin-head has closed from the bottom. I am hoping that you will meet Kallenbach. You will love him.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3785. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6941

¹ In the Gandhi Smarak Nidhi Sangrahalya, tis is placed after “Letter to Amritlal T.Nanavati”, ² The reference is to All-India Women’s Conference.
333. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

May 27, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

You have given your daily programme in sufficient detail. It is fine. It is through selfishness that you are grieving over grandmother’s death. Her house had become dilapidated. Should she, even then, continue to stay in it merely for serving others? Why should you envy her if she goes to live in a new house? Just because we do not know the meaning of death, through our selfishness we grieve over it. If you understand this simple truth, then you will give up crying.

I have had two letters from Manubhai. I have preserved them for you. I intended to show them to you when I return there. But if you have lost patience, then let me know and I shall send them immediately by return of post. I have presumed that you are not impatient in such matters. I, therefore, did not send them immediately when they were received and today also I am not sending them. Now I will do as you wish. I hope you have regained your normal health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7071. Also C.W. 4563. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

334. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

May 27, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

I cannot cope with your letters. I go on replying as replies to your questions occur to me. You have not at all been at fault in reminding me that I have hardly been able to go to the town. Your motive was pure. You have yourself understood my helplessness and thereby proved the justice of your criticism.

What does Balvantsinha write about milk? I think that he should be given as much separated milk for the cows as he needs. What could be your reason for refusing? It is certainly good that the he-goat was saved. But I cannot accept, without knowing more facts, that your intention of going on a fast was true satyagraha. Sometimes satyagraha seems to fail and duragraha seems to succeed. Still satyagraha remains satyagraha and duragraha remains duragraha. In other words, we can judge nothing from the results. The counsel “You have no right to the fruit” should always be kept in mind.

The relations with Jamnalalji and his house [at Segaon] should be no obstacle. It all depends on the manner in which we use them. We do hope that we shall always use them for a good purpose.

The meaning you have given of the Gita verse will do for you personally, but it assumes belief in the Divine incarnation of Krishna. “People cannot recognize me because I am in the form of a human being.” This statement is taken to refer to Krishna in human form and not to the God hidden in all beings. One is free to believe this. The ultimate result of both the meanings is the same.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8580. Also C.W. 7016. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

335. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

May 27, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

Your letter is nice. Have I not given you freedom? But I would like it if you kept yourself bound voluntarily. You are, however, entrusting your welfare to me. But do I know my own? However, I value your faith. Even if I make mistakes in guiding you, still because of your faith your welfare is assured.

I have already written to Munnalal regarding separated milk. I think Balvantsinha ought to be given milk. But you should ask Munnalal and understand his reason.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9363. Also C.W. 6638. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

1 Obduracy
2 Bhagavad Gita, II. 47 and IX. 11
3 ibid
4 Vide “Letter to Vijaya N. Patel”, 10-5-1937
336. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

May 27, 1937

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

Don’t worry about Sharda. Her shyness will disappear. She has gained two pounds. She remains cheerful. If I am to choose a husband for her, in all probability he would be from some other Province. What about Manilal and Sushila who live far away in Phoenix? What meaning has far and near in this age? Please, therefore, overcome Shakaribehn’s groundless objection.

The ill-feeling between Narandas and you must end. I will write to him. If you suspect breach of trust in regard to your brother’s money, you should quietly return it at the earliest opportunity. In doing that you need not consider what my or anybody’s opinion would be. A thing is certainly a sin for him to whom it appears so and he should wash it off as soon as possible.

You may use the remaining amount. For the future, both of you should have trust in God.

There is no doubt that it would be better to select a village in British territory than one in an Indian State.

Boiled onions act as a laxative. There will be no harm in eating a little of it raw while eating the rest boiled. You must take bhajis1 such as tandalja, etc., boiled. That is bound to stop bleeding.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 22

337. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 27, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I send with this the material portion of a letter from Chimanlal for you to read and think over. Since he wishes to leave Vijapur, I casually suggested why he shouldn’t go to Rajkot. Sharda replied to the question saying that that was the last place he would go to. This reminded me of the ill-feeling between you two. On my asking whether that was the only reason, she said, “Yes”. I thereupon, wrote2 to Chimanlal admonishing him why two old inmates of the Ashram, whose relation should be closer than that of two brothers, should harbour such ill-feeling? The accompanying letter is his reply to my

1 Leafy vegetables
2 Vide the preceding item.
questions. Previously, too, I had tried to know the cause of this ill-feeling. I think you had written to me and given some explanation.
But I have forgotten all that. Please, therefore, explain your point of view now.

Kamalabai must have arrived there.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8524. Courtesy:
Narandas Gandhi

338. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

May 27, 1937

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I got your long letter. I have read it carefully. Deka also met me. I think he is a nice young man. There seems to be nothing wrong in what he has written and what he believes. So there is no need to harp on it. If he himself comes to work among the labourers, he would like to work in the labour office for a minimum of three months. Your need at present appears to be urgent as Raghunandan requires assistance in the Press. But in my opinion you should let Deka gain full experience. He will then be more useful.

Satyavati’s case is pitiable. She mentions her weaknesses; what are they precisely? The help granted to her for her convalescence is quite proper. But it is difficult to say how far you are qualified to guide her. Know that it all depends on your self-confidence. I am quite partial to her, but she is as wilful as she is courageous. It will be for her own good if she listens to you. I return her letters. I hope Mother is all right.

I am here till June 10.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2451
339. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

TITHAL, BULSAR,
May 28, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. I was not concerned with Kamu’s deserts, but only with her need. I do believe that she can afford to pay from her own resources. But I couldn’t persuade her to do so. I didn’t like to enter into an argument with her and, therefore, decided to pay her Rs. 30. I didn’t know about Rs. 10. You read the figure as 30 correctly. If you know who pays her Rs. 10, let me know. I will write to Kamu.

I have already written to you concerning. . . . 'Kusum' seems to have taken a vow of silence towards me. Does she keep good health?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8525. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

340. LATHI’S EXAMPLE

The reader will find a fair notice in Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter” of the opening to Harijans of its important temple by the ruler of Lathi State. The event is of great value to Kathiawar. And Thakoresaheb Prahladsinghiji deserves the congratulations of all lovers of Hinduism and humanity. Published reports show that there was not a murmur against the act and that the savarna Hindus partook in the proceedings without any reserve. I draw from this the same inference I drew from the Travancore Proclamation. For the people religious proclamations of a ruler have the sanction of Smritis. I am unable on any other basis to account for the unanimous welcome extended to the generous action of the Thakoresaheb of Lathi. I have bitter experiences of the obstinacy of the savarnas of Lathi. They would not come to the Harijan quarters. There was difficulty in getting medical attendance for a Harijan woman who was dying of

1 The name has been omitted.
2 Daughter of Vrajlal Gandhi
pneumonia. There were distinctions observed at the State dispensary. It must be said in passing that these disabilities were not peculiar to Lathi, they were common to all parts of Kathiawar and outside it in Gujarat. Indeed in some vital matters untouchability is worse in Gujarat than elsewhere and worst in Kathiawar. Nor do I imagine that with the opening of the temple in Lathi all the disabilities have disappeared in practice. Nevertheless in the ready co-operation of the savarna Hindus in the worthy action of the Thakoresaheb of Lathi, as in Travancore, one finds a quick solution of the untouchability problem. For if my reasoning is sound, the other Indian chiefs have but to copy the examples of Travancore and Lathi and untouchability will lose its sharp edge, even though it may not die out altogether in the States of India. And if it does on that large scale, British India cannot but be affected by the phenomenon. One fails to see, why the princes move so slowly in this matter which is one of life and death to a large portion of Hindu humanity. Would that the princes recognized their obvious duty of purging Hinduism of the virus of untouchability and took timely action.

The Thakoresaheb of Lathi is reported to have said in his address that as soon as he gets suitable priests and teachers he would like to open more temples and cover them with schools for all classes of children. I would suggest to him the same remedy I put before the authorities in Travancore. A small training school should be opened in Lathi for giving practical training in conducting services and schools in temples. There is no reason why both the offices should not be combined in one person. A school master has as much need to be pure in heart as a priest and vice versa. Nor need a priest be ignorant of the art of teaching. At the present moment the most deplorable thing is that the temple priests are as a rule ignorant men often devoid of character. The training course need not be long—not beyond six months. If the salary offered is attractive, the school should draw well-read youths of character beyond reproach. My suggestion no doubt implies that the reform of Lathi has its root in spirituality.

_Harijan_, 29-5-1937
MY DEAR IDIOT,

I have already told you I leave here 10th June, reach Segaon 12th June, not to leave it (D.V.) till the meeting of the Haripura Congress. So I expect you in July and thereafter you will take your seconds, minutes or hours whatever you can get and have advice, guidance, and orders at your wish!

Yes, Kumarappa does feel that his interpretation was right and mine wholly wrong and misleading and when he told me that Bahadurji had agreed with him, I told him I must have his opinion in writing. He said he would get it. I do not know what happened after. I still maintain that he has no legal sense. But what does that matter? He has good sense, he is a faithful worker. I would therefore be pleased if he proves to be right in his interpretation. I shall then have to blow out my legal brain which people thought I had.

Your pin-head is an eternal pin-prick for me. You must not neglect it. You must worry Shummy’s life out of him and get it right, your preoccupations notwithstanding.

Your dal is also a pin-head. I speak not from prejudice but experience. You cannot judge results from what ordinarily healthy men can eat seemingly without harm. I tell you a tea-spoonful of dal has been known to upset delicate stomachs and yours is extra delicate. You do get enough protein from your milk and chapati when you take enough. I wish you would consult Menkel, the food specialist. I am not sure of the spelling of his name.

I would be sorry if you miss meeting Kallenbach. He has no desire to see anything in India. He has come just to be with me as long as he can. He is not sure how long he can stay. Although he has become a big architect and his firm has four branches employing 35 architects, he remains in his personal life just as simple as when I left him in 1914.

I hope you have the lace from Bombay.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3786. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6942

1 Dr. Menkel of the Seventh Day Adventist Mission; the source has “Menckem”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
CHI. PREMA.

I shall not probably be able to reply to the whole of your letter. I will try, though. I have certainly issued no order forbidding you to make speeches. And even if I have issued any, I withdraw it. I wish to order no one. What can I have to say if your views change? You will follow your nature, as everybody should do.¹

The fact that pure love doesn’t care for touch certainly doesn’t mean that all touch is impure. I had pure love for my mother, but I used to massage her legs when they ached. There was no impurity in that touch. Touch prompted by lust is evil. I would, therefore, say that anybody who says that pure love is impossible without touch doesn’t know what pure love is.

I still do not understand what you wish to suggest regarding Nariman. Who did him injustice and how? At least for the sake of truth you should come out frankly with what you have in mind. I find it intolerable that there should be a difference of opinion between us in a matter like this. If you are convinced that injustice has been done to Nariman, you should prove that to me, for, though unwillingly, I had to interest myself in the affair. I have, moreover, assured Nariman that I shall be ready to study his case whenever he wishes. But whether or not he comes, your duty is clear.

What you have assumed regarding . . .² is not correct. The evidence which you have got is of no value. Before believing in such a thing you should ask the person concerned. I don’t wish to suggest that no such untruth has been practised. But the matter should be carefully investigated. If somebody tells me that Prema did a certain thing, should I believe it without asking you whether it is correct?

Maybe what you said at Hudli came from your heart. But what you said in your speech was different from what you say now. Will you admit this much? Be that as it may, I have told you that my experience was different from your reasoning. You are certainly

¹ Vide also “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 13-5-1937
² The name has been omitted.
entitled to attach more importance to your reasoning than to my experience. But what should I do?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10390. Also C.W. 6829. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

343. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

May 29, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

I got your letter. Did I say that when I wrote a letter to anybody in Segaon, there would always be a letter for you, too, along with it? If I have said that, you should regard it as impossible. For, sometimes I may have to write only two lines to somebody, and I cannot decide in advance that I must write to you even when I have hardly time for that. But it has certainly been the case that I have written the largest number of letters to you and not a single week has passed without my dictating one to you. I think there has never been a gap of more than two days. You can find out the number from the diary.

It will certainly be good if you can stay without ruining your health. I don’t feel the heat as much as the others do. Perhaps it is because I keep moving about and do not have to sit near the stove. So how can I feel the heat? But now it is decided. I am fixed up here till the 10th. Whether or not it is hot there after the 10th, we shall, God willing, meet on the 12th.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9364. Also C.W. 6639. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

344. A LETTER

May 30, 1937

Shri Harjivan Kotak has been taken away from the All-India Spinners’ Association Kashmir depot at my instance principally for reasons wholly unconnected with his conduct of the depot. So far as I know he has never acted in his conduct of the depot in any manner that would reflect on his honesty. His business capacity and his industry have never been questioned. And but for his unfortunate illness he would have joined any business and had more than can be paid in a wholly philanthropic organization like the A. I. S. A.

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

345. LETTER TO BALVANTSINHA

TITHAL,
May 30, 1937

CHI. BALVANTSINHA,

A verandah may certainly be added to the front side of the cow-shed if it does not cost much.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1902

346. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

TITHAL, BULSAR,
May 31, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT.

Your two letters remain unanswered. I am glad the dog is better but the pin-point still remains active. Can’t you get some doctor to find out the cause?

You want Jawaharlal’s letter back.¹ Did you ask for it in your first letter? I destroyed it after replying as it was clearly a type copy. The original must be in existence with Ammu. I should be sorry if the original is also destroyed. It cannot be. In future always mark “to be returned” when you want any writing returned.

You should teach men a lesson in punctuality by your leaving punctually even as you reach punctually. Did I tell you of an English friend beginning his meeting exactly at the advertised time, though the audience consisted of only one man or woman—I forget which?

It is not unlikely that Kallenbach would be in Segaon in July when you come.

¹ Vide “Instructions to Spinners”, 26-5-1937
Did I not tell you I was leaving here on 10th morning? Letters may come here till 9th June.

Love.

Tyrant

From the original: C.W. 3606. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6415

347. LETTER TO VAIKUNTHLAL L. MEHTA

May 31, 1937

Bhai Vaikunthbhai,

Do come on Wednesday evening with the friend’s message.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1364

348. TELEGRAM TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

Bulsar,

June 1, 1937

Anand Hingorani
Shikapuri Colony
Karachi

Vidya should go get well.

Bapu

From a copy: C.W. 11068. Courtesy: Anand T. Hingorani

349. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 1, 1937

Chi. Narandas,

I got your letter. I understand what you say regarding Chimanlal. I am sending your note to him. What else but a misunderstanding can there be behind this? I have deliberately placed Kamala’s burden on you. I don’t believe anybody else to be capable of shouldering it. Read my letter to her. Decide for yourself in regard to anything she demands and inform me after taking necessary action, so that if I have any comment to make I may do so. Ask me immediately where you have a doubt. After knowing all the details from her, give her permission to write letters where you think it proper. Keep every minute of hers occupied. She may study, sew, teach, spin, sweep, card—do everything that her strength permits. Point out to her any defect that you may observe in her.

As regards Kamu I hear that the payment of Rs. 10 will be stopped from this month.

There was a wire from Vijaya¹ from Chorwad: “Send Kanubhai.” I have replied: “Wishes to stay here till tenth. Why do you send for him earlier?”

What you wrote regarding Kishorelalbhai’s speech didn’t seem to me to call for a reply. Personally I see nothing objectionable in the suggestion regarding the addition of cotton-seed as a form of subscription for the Goseva Sangh, nor can we find fault with anybody who may spin the whole quantity at a time rather than a little daily. It is possible that this will nullify our object in requiring everybody to pay subscription in the same form or some other object as well. We need not think that Kishorelal has committed any error because the way he looks at the matter differs from ours in accepting yarn as a form of subscription.

I don’t see anything to criticize in what he has said regarding equal respect for all religions. If we see an error in any religion why shouldn’t we point it out when occasion demands? That we must make sure that the occasion is proper, is a different matter. If you have read any other meaning, let me know.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8526. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

350. INTERVIEW TO “THE TIMES OF INDIA”

TITHAL,

June 1, 1937

I am very anxious that Congressmen should take office—but only if Government show their willingness to conciliate the Congress.

If, as has been said, Lord Zetland has conceded all but the question of dismissal, the Congress asks Government to come a little way to meet it. The conciliatory moves so far have come from the

¹ Vijaya Gandhi, addressee’s daughter-in-law
The only obstacle, so far as can at present be seen, is the Congress demand that in the event of serious disagreement between a Governor and his Congress Ministers, the Governor should dismiss them. I personally would be satisfied, however, if the Governor gave an undertaking that in such a case he would demand his Ministers’ resignation.

Mr. Gandhi refused to agree that it was a small matter for the Congress, because his idea was to make the Governor think fifty times before he took the responsibility of dismissing his Ministers. In other words, Mr. Gandhi wished to “take advantage of the ordinary human virtue—it may be weakness—of not wishing to look a fool”. Congress critics had said that this demand was merely a trifle. [Mr. Gandhi asked:]

If it is so, why not give the Congress the trifle?

In any case, Mr. Gandhi affirmed, the object of the Congress demand was to test the sincerity of British Government. Did they want the Congress in office, or did they not? In South Africa, Britain meticulously conciliated the Boer. In India, however, such a gesture was lacking. Indeed all the moves towards solving the impasse had come from the Congress.

Now the Congress did not demand any legal change. But it was being talked at instead of being talked to. It would appear that British statesmen and the provincial Governors were addressing the world and not the Congress. In fact, they might be accused of attempting as ever to discredit and isolate the Congress.

If Congressmen took office, they would be doing so with a full sense of their responsibility. Therefore, unless the Government recognized its policy of wrecking the Act and achieving independence by constitutional means as perfectly legitimate, they would not welcome the rule of the Congress majority.

Mr. Gandhi did not see any constitutional obstacle or impropriety in the Viceroy taking steps in an attempt to end the deadlock. It was known that the Viceroy had conferred with provincial Governors before they summoned the Congress leaders. Surely, then, there was no obstacle to his asking the Congress President to meet him. [Mr. Gandhi said:]

I do not say that this is necessary. It is enough if the Congress demand in accordance with the Allahabad resolution’ is complied with.

If Government would not make a gesture, the deadlock must continue. The result might in the end be the application of Section 93, that is, the suspension of the

1 Vide footnote 1, “Interview to Associated Press of India”, 6-5-1937 democratic portion of the new Constitution. Mr. Gandhi was prepared for that and its possible consequences. He preferred open oppression under a state of autocracy to veiled oppression of, and interference with, Congress Ministers. Though he was ready to face it, oppression was the last thing he desired. It would increase the existing bitterness and hatred between Britain and India. He himself would die in an effort to prevent the tragedy, but there must come a time when his effort would be fruitless. Mr. Gandhi concluded:

Nobody has yet said that the present Congress condition for accepting office is unconstitutional. The Congress had gone as far as it could, consistent with self-esteem and with its avowed object. The next move must come from the Government, if they really want the Congress to take office.

The Times of India, 2-6-1937

351. A TESTIMONIAL

[AS AT SEGGAON, WARDHA (INDIA),
June 2, 1937]

Mr. P. N. Joshi, Superintendent, Bhavnagar Durbar dairy, has been studying the cattle problem in India for the last 14 years, and has done some work towards the improvement of the indigenous breed of cows in Kathiawar. Bhavnagar State is sending him to Denmark and the U.S.A. to study genetics and animal husbandry, so that his knowledge may be used for the betterment of the cattle wealth in this country. I shall be grateful for any facilities or guidance that may be given to Mr. Joshi in the countries he is visiting for the first time in his life.

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

352. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

[TITHAL, BULSAR, June 2, 1937]

MY DEAR IDIOT,

Congratulations. What a splinter!¹ So, my anxiety was justified and so is your idiocy. You won’t repeat the folly of disregarding pinpoints. I hope when this reaches you, you would have recovered completely.

¹ In Letters to Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, the addressee explains: “I got a splinter in my foot while walking with Gandhiji in Sevagram. It remained inside for weeks and at last came out itself—a fairly large one—and I sent it to him to see!”
I understand your question about violence. Good results do not justify violence and they do not nullify the evil that violence works. It is not always possible to lay one’s hands on the evil that violence works. Thus it is not possible to weigh the evil wrought by hanging a murderer, though we may heave a sigh of relief when he is put out. Faith would be meaningless, if we were able always to account for everything. Have I understood your question correctly?

Love.

ROBBE

From the original: C.W. 3607. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6416

353. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR N. MORARJEE

June 2, 1937

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

May you live long and do great service. The sun of hope dwells not outside but within oneself. Search for it there, and you will surely find it. Tell Mother\(^1\) and Gokibehn\(^2\) that I think of them often. Blessings to Sumati\(^3\) and Mani.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4801. Courtesy: Shantikumar N. Morarjee

354. LETTER TO KAPILRAI H. PAREKH

June 2, 1937

BHAJ KAPILRAI,

I got your postcard. I forwarded to you yesterday the reply received from Jamnalalji. But as I wrote a wrong address on it by oversight, it will go astray. I learnt about this just now. Here is the gist of that letter: A very experienced and capable expert is in charge at the main place. If, therefore, you are willing to accept a post under

\(^1\) Grandmother, paternal aunt and wife of the addressee
\(^2\) ibid
\(^3\) ibid
him, you should see Seth Keshav Devji Nevatia at Bachchharaj & Co., 395 Kalabadevi Road.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI KAPILRAI HARIVALLABH PAREKH
“SITA SADAN”, ROOM NO. 8
LAKHAMI NAPPU ROAD, MATUNGA (BOMBAY)

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9731. Courtesy: Kapilrai H. Parekh

355. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

TITHAL,
[June] 2, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

So you didn’t send the letter with Indu? You are counting the days, aren’t you? The date has now been advanced from the 12th to the 11th. There is no chance of its being brought earlier. Ba will stay back in Maroli. Kanu will go to Rajkot. So all of us who came from there will not return, but in their place we shall bring some others with us. They are Khan Saheb2, Mehrtaj3, Lali4 and Mr. Kallenbach. See, therefore, that you look fresh and dignified. If you go on losing weight, you won’t be able to cope with the cooking.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9587. Also CW. 6559. Courtesy:
Lilavati Asar

1 Gandhiji was at Tithal in June 1937. The source, however, has “July” in this and the following two items.
2 Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, his daughter and son
3 ibid
4 ibid
356. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

TITHAL,

[June] 2, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

Indu has given me your letters. After reading them, I wonder whether to laugh, weep or be angry and I was inclined to do these things in that order and I finally decided not to do any of them. I could not follow what Indu told me orally, nor have I been able to judge whose fault it must have been.

I hope to reach there on the 11th instead of the 12th. I shall listen to the story when I come there. Or perhaps by that time the cloud might have cleared. Therefore I wish to say nothing about the discord. Do what you can to settle it among yourselves. You have written to me saying that I have thrust on you the burden of winning over Lilavati, Balvantsinha and others. If I had put on you the burden of village service for which you and others are in Segaon, you would have been able to carry it. But this very distinction that you have made is not proper. We have resolved that village service is not different from overcoming anger, etc. The equation would be: To win over Lilavati and others is to overcoming anger and that is equal to serving the villages. But so long as you regard them as two separate things, they will remain so from your point of view. I have, however, solved this problem, too. As I have already told you and Balvantsinha, you can have separate arrangements for your meals, etc. You will have to deal only with me. You should spend all your time in the service chosen by you. After careful thinking, you rejected the suggestion. And I also see that you were right in doing so. Nobody has ever been able to serve by living in this manner. We are not born independent. From conception to death we are and will remain dependent on others. But I will not go into all this philosophy here. We will discuss it when we meet and find time.

You don’t have to think what your duty should have been as regards that goat. If it was simply obstinacy on your part. It is good if you can save even one goat by changing people’s ideas. But if you save a million goats without their approval, it is of no value. If at all it has any, it is almost nil. In fact you should apologize to the people

---

1 Vide footnote I above and tell them: ‘My duty was to explain to you your dharma and not threaten you with a fast. I, therefore, apologize to you for having held out such a threat. Though I will not go on a fast to stop you, still I will continue to tell you that it is an evil custom. And will go on trying to prove that with arguments.’

I didn’t follow anything regarding Balvantrai. I will be able to do so only when I go over there.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8578. Also C.W. 7018. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

357. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL N. SHAH

TITHAL,
[June] 2, 1937

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

From your letter I sent to Narandas the portion concerning him. He has replied to it. What do you say about it? I have not shown that letter to Sharda. It is likely that being of sharp intellect she may start brooding and become sentimental and even start worrying. If I let her read it, I would even have to enter into discussion with her, and that is bound to have an adverse effect on her health. All this is not necessary. You should, therefore, send your reply directly to me, so that she may not have to get involved in this matter at all.

I see from Narandas’s letter that there is nothing but a simple difference of opinion. And if it is only a case of honest difference of opinion, there is no reason for unhappiness or anger. If you give a reasoned reply meeting every point, send back Narandas’s letter to me so as to enable me to think over the matter, for I might have forgotten the contents of Narandas’s letter by the time I get your reply.

Sharda is keeping good health. She takes long walks and eats well. On Sunday she weighted 80 lb. I consider it a good sign.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.G. 23

1 Vide footnote 1,"Letter to Lilavati Asar", 2-6-1937
358. LETTER TO BALVANTSINHA

June 2, 1937

CHI. BALVANTSINHA,

I hope you are well. All the people there write to me to have no worry on their account and to stay on in Tithal as long as I wish to. And yet they all—or rather many of them—create causes for worry and pass them on to me. But I refuse to worry any more. I will not leave this place before the 10th instant, though I shall certainly try to leave on the 10th and expect to reach there on the 11th morning. And then I shall listen to the various problems, viz., water, milk, the bullock, the cow, the well, the farm and Munnalal’s fast and give my decision on everything.

Is this all right?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1903

359. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

June 2, 1937

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Perhaps you know Giriraj1. He was in the Sabarmati Ashram and has two children. His address is as follows:

Vidyashram, 157 Cloth Market, Delhi.

He has a teaching certificate and is willing to do any work like teaching, office work, sales or anything else. His requirement is Rs. 35 per month. Meet him and send me your impression. See if you need him for any kind of job.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2450

1 Giriraj Kishore Bhatnagar
360. LETTER TO M. R. MASANI

TITHAL, BULSAR,
June 3, 1937

MY DEAR MASANI,

Your letter is superfluous. I have never known you to be disrespectful to anybody. In the speech referred to there was no disrespect. I am surprised Patwardhan thought I had said anything to resent the manner of your speech. My remark was directed to the matter. I instanced your speech as an act of indiscipline. You should not have criticized the action of leaders in pursuance of a mode of action decided upon by the A. I. C. C. I still hold that you were wrong.

I hope you had nice time in Almora.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 4886. Courtesy: M. R. Masani. Also G.N. 4128

361. LETTER TO P. KODANDA RAO

June 3, 1937

MY DEAR KODANDA RAO¹,

Welcome. I hope you have benefited in every way by your long absence. I am not going to Bombay. Come here or come to Segaon after 10th instant.

Yours,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 6284

362. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

June 3, 1937

CHI. MUNNALAL,

Today I am trying to answer several letters of yours. Try to analyse and understand the reasons why you worry about Kanchan. She is now well settled and studies as much as she can. She couldn’t be in a better place than where she is at present. What then is the point in worrying about her? Is it that you wish to live with her? If that is so, there is no real cause for your worry. It is simply a question of your desire. If you are trying to curb that desire, we should consider whether you ought to do so.

¹ 1890-1975; educationist, author and social worker; member of Servants of India Society from 1927 to 1958

The villagers live on jowar and besan. You will never be able to copy them in that. One should know one’s limitations. Hence, the reasoning behind your decision to resume solid food is wrong. Whether from the economic or the moral point of view, which is economical in the long run for you—to eat solid food and fall ill or live on milk which is costlier and work regularly?

There is only one golden key in being able to live a true life. One should plunge into whatever work of service comes to one unsought, surrendering everything to Shri Krishna, and being wholly engrossed in the work. Even the thoughts in one’s mind should be about how to complete the task and not whether the work is proper or not.

That we have employed a Bhangi and are building a road is certainly a form of service. We are in a position to make people spend money in this way. If we don’t use our advantage we would prove ourselves fools. And, besides, the money is given by the zamindar. That we thus make him take interest in the village, though it be indirectly, is no small thing. We need not postpone the cleaning of a village and wait for the village people themselves to start doing something. If we can melt the heart of the zamindar in every village, our task would be made very much easier. However, we have to keep in view all the limbs of society and the limits of each would be the limits of our strength.

My wish to live alone in Segaon did not mean that it was not possible to enlarge the field of service so long as other people lived there. I only wanted to see what one man could do, to see for my own sake whether I could carry on the work by myself. The plan could not be carried out and others joined me. I must then use their services and they should give them.

The relations with Jamnalalji should not be allowed to become an obstacle. If they make us soft and comfort-loving, we would fall off like dried leaves, and that deservedly. If we think of nothing but service every hour of the day and strive to remain pure, people will understand us even though a multi-millionaire may be living with us.

1 Gram flour
I see from your letters that you spend most of your time in dreaming, and that prevents your work from shining out. Your motive is pure, but you start running before you have learnt to walk and even while running you dream of flying. The result is that you not only do not run or fly but cannot even walk. During your illness you could somehow carry on your work, but can you be satisfied with that?

I have now answered all your letters. I kept the letters in front of me and went on consulting them. I am sure you do not want me to reply sentence by sentence. The foregoing replies will help you to resolve all your difficulties. I would, however, advise you to stop thinking in this manner altogether and to complete fully whatever task you have undertaken. If you do so, all your problems will solve themselves by and by without any effort on your part and you will be filled with such happiness as you have never known before.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8579. Also C.W. 7017. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

363. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

TITHAL,
June 3, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. I have given you freedom to write anything you want. I would only appreciate frankness and then alone shall I be able to help you.

You rightly jest about Tithal. If I have to stay at Tithal for a longer period, do suggest Tithal instead of Bombay. When you suggested coming out of the scorching heat of Segaon, did you not mean that you would come only when the weather became cool? There was indeed another simpler reason for not giving preference to Tithal. But if you want to have any more argument on that point, do so on Friday.

It is good news that Nanavati has been gaining weight. I am not writing to him separately.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar
364. TELEGRAM TO BHARTAN KUMARAPPA

June 4, 1937

MAY YOUR UNION PROVE HAPPY AND FRUITFUL FOR COUNTRY. LOVE.

BAPU

The Hindu, 4-6-1937

365. TELEGRAM TO NARANDAS GANDHI

BULSAR, June 4, 1937

NARANDAS GANDHI
OPPOSITE MIDDLE SCHOOL
RAJKOT

GOD BE THANKED. HE LIVED WELL DIED WELL. NO SORROW.

BAPU

From a microfilm. M.M.U./II

366. LETTER TO EDMOND AND YVONNE PRIVAT

TITHAL, BULSAR, June 4, 1937

MY DEAR ANAND AND BHAKTI,

It was a delight to hear from you after such a long time. Harijan tells you weekly something of my movement. Just now I am at a littlesea-side place drawn there by Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel. Mira, Mahadev and Pyrelal are with me. We are leaving here for Wardha on the 10th. Khan Saheb Abdul Ghaffar Khan and Mr. Kallenbach, a South African friend who has just come merely to see me, are also with me. Of course, I shall be delighted to see Prof. Bovet when he

1 The addressee’s marriage to Sita Devi, daughter of David Devadoss, was solemnized at the Kodaikanal English Church.
2 Khushalchand Gandhi, father of the addressee
3 A member of New Education Fellowship Delegation, he, along with two other members, Prof. Davies and Dr. Zilliacus, attended the Educational Conference at Wardha on October 22 and 23 and commended Gandhiji’s scheme.
comes here in October. But I do not know that I shall be able to write the preface which you want from me for his book. However, I look forward to meet him and I shall see what can be done.

With love to both of you,

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2340

367. LETTER TO B. S. GOPALRAO

June 4, 1937

MY DEAR GOPALRAO,

I have your letter. I should like to know what more you can show in Rajahmundry, if your experiment is the same as what you recommended to me during that unfortunate meeting\(^1\) of ours, when I was tempted there and then to try your experiment which I did strictly according to your instructions. I feel convinced that mankind has not yet discovered a complete substitute for milk. I am also clear that farinaceous and nitrogenous foods ought not to be taken uncooked nor starchy vegetables such as potatoes.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. B. S. GOPALRAO
HYDRO CHROMOPATHIC RESEARCH AND NATURE-CURE ACADEMY
RAJAHMUNDY

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

368. LETTER TO P. K. CHENGAMMAL

June 4, 1937

DEAR CHENGAMMAL,

I have your letter as also your son’s. If and when Gopalan comes to India, I shall see what can be done for him. If he has not left already let him know that life in India is difficult and the climate also may not be agreeable to those who have been born and bred in South Africa. If, however, Gopalan can lead a simple life and can

\(^1\) In 1929; vide “Food Faddists”, 13-6-1937, “Raw v. Cooked Food”, 16-6-1929 and “Letter to Satis Chandra Das Gupta”, 8-7-1929 Vide also “Letter to Devdas Gandhi”, 11-5-1932 accommodate himself to Indian manners and customs, he will have no difficulty.

Yours sincerely,

SH. P. K. CHENGAMMAL
19 DAWIS STREET
DOORN JOUTEIN
JOHANNESBURG
SOUTH AFRICA

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

369. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI A. MEHTA

June 4, 1937

Bhai Bhagwanji,

How can I help it if you, though a lawyer, see the thing in an altogether wrong light and then are displeased with my actions? I can only put up with your displeasure. Please note that in none of the cases mentioned by you was I appointed an arbitrator. Should I have asked to be made one? It is possible that, if I ask for it, Devchandbhai, Narbheram and Prabhashankar would appoint me. But should I on that account become a judge? It is only in some exceptional cases that I agree to become an arbitrator, and whenever I have done so I have given clearcut decisions. But it is outside my field to be an arbitrator. My special field is to find a solution by persuading the parties. But I do not always succeed in such efforts and, moreover, I have to take considerable pains. You should have compassion for me and not put before me complicated cases. I would have to spare a lot of time for them. How can I manage that? Hence I can only put up with your [harsh] opinion.

Vandemataram from

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5834. Also C.W. 3057. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
370. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

June 4, 1937

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

I had your letter. In this condition what can you do by staying there? How much can you do even for the spread of the charkha? One wonders whether your living there is the right thing from the point of view of service. Think carefully about this and let me know.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6550

371. COCHIN UNTOUCHABILITY

A Cochin correspondent writes:

I have just gone through your article2 “Cochin-Travancore” in the Harijan, dated May 8, 1937. I find that you have, perhaps unwittingly, done a distinct disservice to the cause of truth.

The controversy about the Koodalmanikkam Temple can in no sense be regarded as a war between light and darkness; at any rate, there is not the slightest intention among the people of Cochin to hug darkness as a virtue in itself, worth putting up a fight for.

You seem to be labouring under a misapprehension when you say that “even the most orthodox Hinduism would hardly permit him (the Cochin Maharaja) to regulate the private conduct of the visitors to the Cochin temples. In no temple in India where Harijans are not permitted to worship are trustees authorized to scrutinize the actions of savarna Hindus who are entitled, as a matter of right, to visit the temples.” So far as the Cochin Government are concerned, they have not sought to regulate the “private conduct” of visitors to Cochin temples. They have also not sought to exercise any scrutiny into the actions of savarna Hindus who are entitled, as a matter of right, to visit the temples.

What they have done is simply to declare as polluted, so far as Cochin temples are concerned, the tantris who have performed religious worship in the temples of Travancore thrown open to avarnas. There is no sort of ban

1 In Nepal
2 Vide “Cochin-Travancore”, 8-5-1937
imposed on entry into Cochin temples of savarna Hindus who have worshipped in Travancore temples.

Even this ban on tantris was imposed by Cochin not because of any spite or malice against a sister State, but solely at the instance of the vaideekans and vadhyars who, from time immemorial, have been recognized and acknowledged as spiritual directors in such matters.

You observe that “in Cochin the Maharaja has interfered in respect of a temple over which he has no exclusive control. The Maharaja of Travancore, too, possesses substantial rights over the temple in question. The Cochin order is clearly an interference with that right.”

History, tradition, usage, custom—all these point to the fact that, while the right of the Maharaja of Travancore in respect of the Koodalmanikkam Temple begins and ends with the nomination of a Thachudaya Kaimal, the Maharaja of Cochin has always exercised, as President of the Yogakkars, enormous powers with regard to its affairs, both spiritual and secular. The very fact that the present Kaimal, when the recent troubles arose, solicited advice and guidance from the Maharaja of Cochin shows conclusively enough that the “substantial rights” alleged to be possessed by Travancore do not include, at any rate, the right to have a voice in the adjudication of spiritual affairs relating to the temple.

It may interest you, in this connection, to know that in a recent speech at Thiruvalla, Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar, the Dewan of Travancore, admitted that the Travancore Government had no complaint whatever to make in regard to what has happened in the Koodalmanikkam Temple. Is this not a proof that Travancore itself does not find any fault with the attitude of Cochin?

Your suggestion that the opinion of pundits might be invited on the issues involved is certainly one that ought to commend itself to all. But how do you justify, I wonder, your appeal in the same breath to the people of Cochin to hold protest meetings against the order of the Maharaja and lead an agitation for throwing open all temples to Harijans? Why not wait till the pundits give their opinion at least?

Whilst the Travancore Durbar had a perfect right to open to Harijans the temples within their sole jurisdiction and ownership and without reference to the opinion of pundits, it would hardly be right to propound a new Smriti in respect of temples where there is joint jurisdiction. The Harijan cause must be always and everywhere above suspicion.

This is a perfectly sensible position to take up, and we in Cochin would certainly be glad if no attempt is made in Travancore “to propound a new Smriti in respect of temples where there is joint jurisdiction”.

I gladly publish this letter. The order reffered to of the Maharaja of Cochin reads as follows:

The Maharaja of Cochin is of opinion that proper purificatory ceremonies should be performed in the Koodalmanikkam Temple without any delay. His Highness considers that the temples has been polluted by entry into and participating in ceremonies by persons who have officiated in other temples where the entry of avarnas has been allowed. The Maharaja of Cochin has now definitely ordered that any person who has taken part in the conduct of ceremonies in temples which have been polluted by the entry of avarnas thereby becomes polluted and loses the right to enter temples in Cochin until proper prayashchittams are performed. Such persons are prohibited from entering temples, touching tanks and wells until they perform the required purificatory ceremonies.

My note was based upon a summary of the order above quoted. There is no mention in it of tantris. And are not tantris savarna Hindus? My contention was and is that savarna Hindus because they visit or officiate in temples visited by Harijans do not become Harijans. But I did err in thinking that the order applied to all savarna Hindus who had visited Travancore temples, whereas it is restricted to those who officiated at Travancore temples. Whilst, therefore, I gladly admit the error as to quantity, my argument remains unaffected. The Maharaja has surely extended the doctrine of untouchability by regarding savarnas as untouchables because they did not believe in untouchability.

But the authentic and exhaustive note1 since published in Harijan disposes of most of the contentions of my correspondent. For, according to that note neither the Maharaja of Cochin nor of Travancore has any jurisdiction over the administration of the Koodalmanikkam Temple. When, therefore, Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar said that Travancore had no complaint, he merely stated the legal position. The only party who has the right and whose duty it is to complain is the Thachudaya Kaimal. And one may hope that he will not rest content till he has secured complete freedom from interference with his exclusive right to regulate the admission of worshippers and officiating tantris.

The correspondent has surely confused the issue by suggesting that my advice to the Hindus of Cochin to agitate for the throwing open of temples to Harijans is inconsistent with my proposal to refer to pundits the question of the legality of declaring, as the Cochin Maharaja’s order does, savarna Hindus as untouchables. And now that it is known that the Maharaja had no right to issue the order he did, the proposed reference becomes unnecessary except as an academic proposition.

Harijan, 5-6-1937

1 Vide Appendix “Koodalnanikkam Temple Controversy”, 22-5-1937.
372. SHAMEFUL IF TRUE

Thakkar Bapa sends me the following statement which he received during his recent tour in the Nizam’s Dominions:

About six months ago an event which took place at Karepally, Warangal District, Nizam’s Dominions, describes the methods adopted by the Christian missionaries to make conversions of Hindus and especially Harijans. Some days previous to the appointed date, the village teachers sent out news of the coming event into all the surrounding villages and made sure that the people of all castes of Hindus and especially Harijans were present on the occasion in large numbers. Then the pastor arrived at the place bringing with him a girl, about 12 years old, who he said would cure all that were presented to her of all sorts of diseases and also show them the real path of realization of God.

The pastor then stood and said addressing those present: “You believe in gods who are dead and gone. Your Rama was born, behaved and acted like an ordinary mortal and then died. So was the case with Krishna also, who had many more vices to his credit. Here is before you a person who is the very incarnation of Christ. Christ is in her now, which fact you can verify yourself by being cured of your diseases at the mere touch of her hands. Why believe in gods who are past and no more effective? You should all believe in and follow the path of Jesus Christ who was born to Virgin Mary, preached the Gospel which leads to salvation, died outwardly but rose again on the third day to redeem the sinning millions of the world.”

A subscription of one anna per head and two annas for a metal cross were charged. They were told that unless they wore the cross at all times and believed in the truth and efficacy of Christianity, there would not be any good effect in the case of diseased patients.

This happened on two occasions. On the third occasion, the Secretary of the District Committee and friends visited them and told them that they could preach their religion as they wanted to, but they should not wound the feelings of the people by repeating unpleasant things which were not true. The local police then stopped the proceedings fearing there might be breach of peace in the place.

If it is true, it stands self-condemned. I would like the Mission concerned to investigate the complaint and throw light on it.

Harijan, 5-6-1937
373. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

TITHAL, BULSAR,

June 3[5]1 1937

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA.

I have liked your letter. It is indeed true that my statements contain several implications. Therefore, the meaning that you have read is possible. But the statement also implies the other meaning that you have suggested. Truth need not be made bitter. Nor need it be embellished. If one person wounds another with a sword and a witness describes the incident, such description by itself is not bitter, though the consequences of the testimony may be bitter for the assailant. But that doesn’t make truth itself bitter. If, however, the description of the assault was full of exaggerations, we might say that truth had been made bitter. After saying this, I may add that if I had to make a choice, I would certainly prefer bitter truth to untruth agreeably. If, in trying to change bitter into agreeable language, you are likely to kill truth, you had better stick to bitter language.

You have always been unlucky in the matter of helpers. You have never had a really good man. But you have got a good helper in Sushila. I wonder how you could have managed to pull on if you didn’t have her. Even from the point of view of self-interest, therefore, Sushila must improve her health with good food, exercise and water treatment.

Mr. Kallenbach has at last arrived. He is fine. For the present he is here. Tithal may be described as a small village about six or seven furlongs from the sea-coast. We are staying in that village. We are leaving on the 10th and shall reach Segaon on the 11th.

I have just got a letter from Harilal. I am enclosing it as a sample.

I have gone through the Phoenix Trust. There is no need to make any changes in it. But if you have any suggestion to make, it can perhaps be carried out. So it is you who should draft something and send it to me, instead of my drafting anything. I had a talk with 1 From the postscript it is clear that this letter was completed by Gandhiji after he had received Narandas Gandhi’s letter about Khushalchand Gandhi’s death; vide the following two items.

---

Kallenbach. He says that there is no need to make any changes in the trust-deed or to increase the number of trustees.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]
A copy of an account of Khushalbhai’s beautiful death is enclosed.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4863

374. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

TIRTHAL,
June 5, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

Yesterday I got a telegram from Narandas informing me about Khushalbhai’s death. Today I also got a beautiful letter from him. I am sending a copy with this. Show it to all the others there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9365, Also C.W. 6640. Courtesy:
Lilavati Asar

375. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

June 5, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

You must have received my wire\(^1\) in reply to yours. I got your wonderfully beautiful letter today—not a sentence more or less than needed. You are a man of boundless good fortune. I had discovered before your birth the special bond of love that bound your father closest among all the cousins to me. But you had the good fortune to be by his side when the end came, while I remained here, though this was of course but as it should have been. How could I have, yielding to my love, gone there to be by his side? It was your dharma to be by his side and you, therefore, took my place. You did perfectly right in not forcing medicine into his mouth or permitting them to give him injections during the last hour to enable him to take a few more

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 4-7-1937

324 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
breaths. We have learnt much from his life. May we, likewise, learn much from his death.

I suppose Kamala is getting along quite well. I hope Jamna\(^1\) is perfectly calm. Kanaiyo is of course calm.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8528. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

376. LETTER TO MANUBEHN S. MASHRUWALA

TITHAL,

June 5, 1937

CHI. MANUDI,

I got your letter. You haven’t used your brains properly. Why do you think that it was your aunt who tempted you or that only Surendra could tempt you? As soon as you were separated from me, you entered a vast field of temptations. You are a very credulous, simple-hearted and weak girl. All of us are so to some degree. That is why we voluntarily raise a hedge in the form of rules round ourselves for our protection. I think you have put up a few such hedges. I wish, and beg of you, that you should never cross them, no matter who tempts you, whether aunt or husband, mother, father or uncle, or an utter stranger.

We are leaving this place on the 10th.

Have you followed my letter? Your sitar and shoes have been sent to Bombay with Vasumati.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1561. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

---

377. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

June 5, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

Now that you have become mature, I need not write to you. And also because I am busy. Besides you have now started driving the carts

---

\(^1\) Addresssee’s wife that carry loads of manures, and have thus become a real Kanban'. And a Kanban does not need any letters. Still, since you want it here is one.

It is good that you get your letters revised by others. That will help you to make your thoughts clear if they are confused. The words left out by you [and supplied in the revision] will make your meaning clear.

How jealous of you that while all of you experience heat you don’t want me to do that! I have made up my mind to return on the 11th. Generally it does not rain so early in Wardha and hence I will have some experience of the heat there.

Since even those who hadn’t eaten food from our kitchen had vomiting, we should look for its cause in something other than the food. Probably it is water. Put some potassium permanganate in the well. Store boiled water as before and use it. It is also possible that the people had eaten more than they could digest in the excessive heat and that had caused the vomiting. We can find other such reasons also if we think about the matter carefully. For that, however, I will have to examine things on the spot. I postpone that till I return there.

You have done well in closing the night-school for the present. If we attempt more than we can manage, we may do more harm than good.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7072. Also C.W. 4564. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

378. MY MISTAKE

In the issue of Harijanbandhu dated 16th May, I have said in an article entitled “A Moral Dilemma”¹, that amongst South Indian Brahmins the marriage of a maternal uncle to his niece is permissible, and so, too amongst Parsis and Muslims. Professor Balvantrai Thakore³ has, in an interesting letter, corrected this error of mine. He points out that amongst the Brahmins of the South the children of a brother and sister are permitted to marry, but not a girl and her maternal uncle. Poet Chaman informs us that such an alliance is prohibited amongst Muslims. I am grateful to both these gentlemen for the correction. I was actually aware of such an alliance between the

¹ Feminine of Kanabi, name of a community of peasant farmers
² Vide “A Moral Dilemma”, 29-5-1937
³ Balvantrai Kalyanrai Thakore, Gujarati Poet and man of letters children of a brother and sister. And I regard it as unpardonable on my part to have come to the conclusion and to have made a categorical statement that an alliance would be permissible between a girl and her maternal uncle. I should have realized that in these matters presumptions such as mine have no place. If I presumed, I should have indicated the uncertainly. However, I categorically asserted something for which I had no actual evidence as if I had it. And, as a result, my fidelity to truth has been blemished. For this lapse I must beg forgiveness from readers. They will be generous and forgive me, but my conscience will not forgive me so easily. From this mistake I learnt the lesson that one has to exercise great care before coming to certain conclusions. I shall henceforth try to be more careful to avoid such mistakes.¹

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 6-6-1937

379. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

TITHAL,
June, 6, 1937

CHI. JAMNALAL.

About. . . .² I feel confused in mind. I am in correspondence with him. But at the moment I am inclined to say this. Just as you don’t need my opinion when deciding whether or no to give something to many others who may approach you for help, so also please assume that you don’t need it in this case, too, and do what you think is proper. If you must have my opinion, then you will have to wait for some time.

I hope that you are able to get some rest, do a lot of walking and observe the necessary restrictions on food.

We are leaving this place on the morning of the 10th or the evening of the 9th instant. If you travel by this route, we can go together. But do what is convenient to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2984

¹ Vide also “My Notes”, 27-6-1937.
² The name has been omitted.
380. LETTER TO LALJI PARMAR
June 6, 1937

BHAI LALJI,

I have your letter. I also went through the letter signed by the Bhangi brothers. If you have faith only in me and Jawaharlal and not in the other officials, it will be very difficult for us to work. I myself am not in the Congress and whatever we can do can be done only through Congressmen. I understand that the Chairman of the Municipality wants to fully implement Bapa’s award. Chandubhai of course is there. Parikshitlal¹ is busy with the same, day and night. You can get help from all of them. But if you do not trust any of them, how can you get help? I shall leave for Wardha on the 10th. Anyone of you can come over before that. You will be able to see me and Sardar also. I especially advise you not to ask for help after taking a hasty step. You had better seek advice before taking the step.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

381. LETTER TO RUSTOM CAMA
June 6, 1937

BHAI RUSTOM CAMA,

Just as the gramophone goes on playing once we wind it up, the heart also with every breath would go on repeating the name of Rama once we wind it up. The heart would remain pure because of it just as the body stays pure because of the circulation of blood. This repetition of Ramanama should continue even while working or sleeping. The test of it is that we do not get a single impure thought. Only then can we say that the soul is progressing.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

382. LETTER TO RAJENDRA PRASAD
June 6, 1937

BHAI RAJENDRA BABU,

I have your letter. My views on Hindi-Urdu clear. There must be a protest against the circular. But first meet Mr. Yunus². Consult

¹ Parikshitlal Majmudar
² Vide “Hindi v. Urdu”, 3-7-1937.
³ Mohammed Yunus, leader of the Independent Muslim Party group in the Bihar Legislature. He formed the Government after the Congress Party had rejected the Governor’s invitation.
Dr. Mahmud. See other prominent Muslims too. Obtain a pronouncement from Maulana Abul Kalam Azad. It would be necessary to take Jawaharlal’s opinion, too, in this matter. Were the Hindu members of the Bihar cabinet in agreement with this circular? If so, why? Has any reason been given in the circular?

Have you read my interview that appeared in The Times of India regarding the acceptance of office? My views are stated there. However, we may tone down our conditions, but if even then they are not accepted, we should refuse to form Ministries. This is my firm opinion but it may be overlooked if the opinion and experience of the leaders of the six Provinces differ from mine.

I hope you are well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 9880. Courtesy: Rajendra Prasad

MY DEAR REBEL, IDIOT AND WHAT NOT,

Your letter of 3rd not traced. It has evidently miscarried. But yours of 4th gives an indication of what was in that of the 3rd so far as the Sammelan is concerned. The matter is being dealt with in Harijan.

Am glad there is no oozing. You know now how sinful suppression is. If you had told me, the splinter would have been out in Segaon if it was there that it entered the toe, as it must have. Call thou nothing mean or trifling!

Do you know anything about two Englishmen stealthily removing the Congress flag flying over the Khadi Depot of Simla?

Let us not anticipate my whereabouts when the Sammelan meets in Simla. You know that I shall want to come if I can.

---

1 Vide “Interview to “The Times of India”, 1-6-1937
2 Madras, the United Provinces, the Central Provinces, Bihar, Orissa and Bombay
3 Vide ”Notes” sub-title “Not a Political Organization

VOL.71: 25 FEBRUARY, 1937 -5 JULY, 1937  329
Did I tell you I have a very good Gujarati translation with notes of \textit{Japji} together with the original text? It is a shame if there is no such thing in Hindi. But you won’t make a search now. The Gujarati translation meets my wants entirely.

Love.

ROBBER

[PS.]

Leave here 10th early morning, reach Wardha 11th about 7 a.m.

From the original: C.W. 3608. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6417

\textbf{384. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL}

\textit{June 7, 1937}

CHI. AMBUJAM,

You have kept me waiting for your reply. But better late than never.

Yes, Gomati\textsuperscript{1} may be helped from the Sabha, if she gives work to the Sabha, not otherwise. You should induce her to work. She can . . . .\textsuperscript{3}

Kamala is in Rajkot. She seems to be happy.

I will inquire about the merits of translation of the \textit{Ramayana}.

It will be nice also if there was a Hindi translation of Kamban’s \textit{Ramayana}. I am told that it is a work of original beauty. . . .\textsuperscript{3}

[PS.]

Your letter is undated, . . . .\textsuperscript{4} incomplete. Your last. . . . unfinished.

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

\textbf{385. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI}

\textit{June 7, 1937}

CHI. PRABHA,

This time you made me wait long enough, but never mind. Pressure of work may cause such delay occasionally. If you get time,

\begin{itemize}
  \item [1] Wife of Kishorelal Mashruwala
  \item [2] The source is damaged at these places.
  \item [3] \textit{ibid}
  \item [4] \textit{ibid}
  \item [5] \textit{ibid}
\end{itemize}
don’t forget to put in some reading. And you must not in any case neglect spinning. It is indeed very good that you are able to serve Father. How far is Sitab Diara from Srinagar? Isn’t it right on the banks of the Ganga? How is it hot even then? Why don’t you grow some greens and other vegetables in the garden? There must be some open land around the bungalow.

Vasumati is here. She will now go to Rajkot. Ba will stay in Maroli at present. In Segaon, therefore, in addition to those who are already there, there will be Babu (Sharda), Kallenbach, Mehrtaj, Lali, Khan Saheb, Lila, Vijaya, Munnalal, Balvantsinha and Anna. Nanavati of course is already there. We shall start from here at 3 in the morning of the 10th and shall reach Wardha at 7 a.m. on the 11th.

Tithal is beautifully cool indeed. A cool and gentle breeze blows all the time. Most of us sleep in the open under the sky. There is no dew. If you could have come here, I would have helped you to increase your weight and the quantity of milk, too.

I hope you are getting Harijanbandhu, etc.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3501

386. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

TITHAL,
June 8, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

The letter of 3rd came in today with that of 6th. Mahadev is inquiring.

Mira has been well and yet she gets fever now and then. She is ready to go to a hill station. I forget what you had said about her coming to you. My impression is that you had finally said ‘No’; she has an impression that you might have said ‘Yes’. If you feel like taking her, you must see Shummy and let him decide. She is an easy guest in a well-ordered home. But that is nothing. You must decide without the slightest reserve. Your ‘No’ won’t be misunderstood.

You will see what I have said in Harijan. If that is not enough you will tell me.

1 Presumably, about the Hindi Sahiya Sammelan; vide “Interview to “The Times of India”, 1-6-1937
You may have political sense. I have none. But I claim the non-violent sense to which you from the camphorated area must be a stranger! My solution is in furtherance of non-violence. That has been my policy and it has served me well. I seem to possess the requisite acumen when I am assiduously accused of lacking it. How else can they belittle my proposal? But am I not a free lance? Congress can repudiate the suggestion, refuse office altogether or retrace its step and accept it unconditionally.

You should write to Vithaldas about the lace. It is made in Andhra. Send him specimens of what you would like.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

You may wire me about Mira at Wardha.

From the original: C.W. 3787. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6943

387. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

June 8, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. You are worrying needlessly. It is your right to accept others’ service so long as you remain ill. To take tea is not such a great crime that you should leave the Ashram on that account. It is only for more important reasons that one should leave the Ashram. It would be a different thing, of course, if you yourself don’t like staying there. As long as you are sincerely trying to observe the principal vows, there is no need at all for you to run away.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9366. Also C.W. 6614. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

---

1 Amrit Kaur explains: “This was a joke between him and me. I come from Kapurthala and Gandhiji maintained that kapur was a misnomer for kafur which means camphor.”

2 Vide “Interview to The Times of India”, 1-6-1937
388. LETTER TO J. B. KRIPALANI

TITHAL,
June 9, 1937

DEAR PROFESSOR,

Sardar has handed me your letter of 31st ultimo for reply.
I entirely agree with you that the Congress has to think out a policy and give the lead on the reported kidnappings. We must first of all be sure of the facts and therefore have an impartial inquiry. The burden must be thrown on the Frontier Congressmen of tracing and bringing back by such influence as they may possess on tribesmen the kidnapped girls. If the kidnappings are purely political, why do they kidnap only girls? If they are instigated by the Government, we must have some proof for the statement.

Whilst we may have resolutions on the Government Frontier policy we must express our disapproval of the kidnappings and appeal to the tribesmen and enunciate our policy for the guidance of Congressmen generally and of Frontier Congressmen, in particular.¹

Yours,

389. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

June 9, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

Though you didn’t get a first, you got very near it. Your preparation was very inadequate and hence I think that your achievement is creditable.

Khushalbhai’s death was such as fully became him. He passed away with his mind fixed on God till the end. Since today is the last day here, I will write no more.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7323. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

¹ A statement was issued by Jawaharlal Nehru on June 22, vide also “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 25-6-1937.
390. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

June 9, 1937

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I have your letter. There is no need to bother much about Giriraj.¹

I shall reach Segaon the day after tommorow and plan at any rate to stay there till the Congress session.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2449

391. SPEECH ON COW-PROTECTION, TITHAL²

[Before June 10, 1937]³

The pity is that most of our cow-protection associations will keep cows and buffaloes both and try to run them and make them paying concerns by selling buffaloes milk. The cow, they think, is uneconomic, not knowing that if the cow was exclusively taken care of, and all attention concentrated on increasing her yield of milk, in making her a good breeder, and on making use of every bit of her carcass after she is dead, she would be more than an economic proposition. If someone could convince me that both the cow and the buffalo could be protected, without our having to feed on them or slaughtering them. I should be only too willing to include both in my scheme. The fact, however, is that the buffalo, apart from her milk, is an uneconomic animal. Except in a few wet regions of India the buffalo is useless for agricultural purposes, and so we either starve or kill the male progeny. Some of the best known dairies priding themselves on the wonderful milk-yield of their cows have been found to be doing away with the male calves. We have to make them good milkers and good mothers of fine plough-bullocks. It is no use saying that there is no demand for cow’s milk. If we refused to supply any other milk, and if we ensured a supply of the richest and purest and safest milk, everyone would enlist himself as our regular customer.

¹ Vide “Letter to Brijkrishna Chandiwal”, 2-6-1937
² This is extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter”.
³ Gandhiji left Tithal for Wardha on June 10; vide the two preceding items, also “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 7-6-1937

334 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
But the first thing is to eliminate the buffalo. It is like the exclusive emphasis on khadi. You cannot promote khadi by dividing your attention between khadi and mill-cloth. But we have not given the necessary attention to her feed and her upkeep. Show the best results and I tell you you will not have to complain of lack of patronage. Why is there such a mad run on a certain company’s shares? Because people know that it is going to be a highly paying concern. If you could make people believe that yours also would be a paying concern, they would rush to offer their patronage to you. Concentrate on one. Take a city like Bombay, take a census of the children, enlist the names of people who will buy only cow’s milk for their children, and make your dairy an exclusive cow’s milk supplier for children. Don’t you know how they popularize an article like tea? They distribute free packets of tea, they run free tea-houses. You can do likewise and popularize cow’s milk. Your ambition should be to cater to the needs of the whole of Bombay. There is a demand for cow’s milk in a city like Calcutta. The best Haryana breed are imported to Calcutta, but as soon as the cows go dry they go to the butcher. The result is that the Haryana cow is getting scarce in the Punjab. No, the cow need not go to the butcher at all. She will have more than paid for her upkeep for her dry years by her rich yield of milk and progeny, and after death, she would fetch the same value as she did when alive. The cow can either be protected by the State or by those who are really religiously inclined. The State we may leave aside for the moment, it is the religiously inclined who should rise to the occasion and bring to bear knowledge and industry to the task. Humanitarianism without knowledge is futile and may even be harmful.

_Harijan_, 19-6-1937

392. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

WARDHA,
June 11, 1937

MY DEAR C. R.,

If the talk between us about Zetland and company had to be brought out there is nothing to be said against the presentation of the manner of it. Of course, you should not mind what Rafi says. I do, however, feel that your position is different from mine. I can speak and write as an intermediary from a detached point of view; you could not do so. I can be repudiated with safety; you cannot be.
I had your letter drawing my attention to a portion of Ghanshyamdas’s letter. I had observed it before but it did not make any appeal to me. Of course, there is force in his argument. But from my standpoint it is irrelevant. I want a sign from them before I take office, and I regard that sign as indispensable. Therefore, for me acceptance continues to be a fatal blunder till our condition, whatever it may be, is satisfied. The fact, therefore, that my condition may be demonstrably childish or meaningless does not affect my position.

What was this incident about asking for your ticket?
What do you say to the latest from Zetland?
I hope Laxmi is doing well.
Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G. N. 2064

393. LETTER TO H. RUNHAM BROWN

June 11, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I wish I could join you during the conference days. But you certainly have my good wishes. The success of your conference means the success of peace and the establishment of a warless because a hateless kingdom.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

H. RUNHAM BROWN, ESQ.
11 ABBEY ROAD
ENFIELD (MIDDLESEX)
ENGLAND

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 In his letter dated May 26 to Mahadev Desai, G. D. Birla had written: “While I admit that we can get a lot more in dismissal than in resignation, I feel that even dismissal is not an interference-proof thing. . . . Everyone says it will be a great mistake not to accept Ministry after Zetland’s speech . . . . I therefore still hold the same opinion that it will be a great mistake to break after Lord Zetland’s speech which in my opinion meets the point . . . . I think it my duty to say this because perhaps Bapu may reconsider the situation.”
394. LETTER TO DANIEL OLIVER

June 11, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter of the 20th May last. I have no message to give except this that there is no deliverance for any people on this earth or for all the people of this earth except through truth and non-violence in every walk of life without any exceptions. And this is based on an unbroken experience extending practically over half a century.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DANIEL OLIVER, ESQ.
HAMMANA
LEBANON, SYRIA

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

395. LETTER TO ABBAS K. VARTEJI

SEGAON,
June 11, 1937

CHI. ABBAS,

I got your letter. I am not happy that you had to leave Narandasbhai. But it is good that you have started working.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6313
396. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

SEGAON,
[On or after] June [11]’, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM,

I got your letter and the fruit too. Some apples had been pilfered during transit in the railway. The basket should be packed properly. Next time you happen to send me fruit do send sour limes. Good ones are not available here. The Wardha sunshine is hot and strong.

I have already written¹ about Gomati.

Blessings from
BAPU

397. NOTES

NOT A POLITICAL ORGANIZATION

As lovers of Hindi know the next session of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan is to take place in Simla. A correspondent who is working in Simla writes to say that there is a suspicion that the Sammelan is a political organization with anti-Muslim tendencies. Having been twice its President, I can unhesitatingly say that it is a purely non-political organization. It has Rajas and Maharajas as its patrons. It has numerous non-Congressmen who are identified with it. Rajas and Maharajas often attend the sessions. His Highness the Maharaja of Baroda has been one of its Presidents. So far as I know it has no anti-Muslim tendencies. I could not have presided if I had suspected any. I hope by anti-Muslim is not meant anti-Urdu. Many use anti-Urdu and anti-Muslim as synonymous terms. But that is a superstition. Urdu is the common language of many Hindus and Mussalmans in the Punjab, Delhi and Kashmir. It is also significant that at the session of the Sammelan held in Indore in 1935 it defined Hindi to mean that ¹ The original is damaged and the date is illegible. Gandhiji arrived in Segaon on June 11.

² Vide “Letter to S. Ambujammal”, 7-6-1937 language which Hindus and Muslims of the North spoke and wrote either in Devanagari or Persian script. I hope, therefore, that even if anti-Muslim has been used in the sense of anti-Urdu, the suspicion to which my correspondent refers will be dispelled and that the work of preparations for the session of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan to be held in Simla will proceed without any suspicion about its object or attitude.

THE SOCIAL BAIT

A friend who has had occasion to study the work of the Salvation Army sends me the following interesting note:

The Salvation Army is essentially a religious body with ‘aggressive evangelism’ as its main characteristic. The social work the Army does has from the first been regarded by the Army leaders as an organized warfare against social evils in order to clear the way for evangelization.’ This is from the Encyclopaedia Britannica (14th edition). It further says that ‘It was realized that the physical and the environmental condition of many of the people, especially in great cities, made it extremely difficult for them to apprehend the spiritual message which the Army had to deliver. Therefore various social activities arose, diverse in character but all actuated by the same purpose’, and General Booth himself in one of his letters to his son has said that ‘the social works is the bait, but it is salvation that is the hook that lands the fish.’

The object and the work of this Mission according to its Founder is ‘to seek the conversion of the neglected crowds of people who are living without God and without hope, and to gather those so converted into Christian Fellowship.’ It is also stated in the Salvation Army Year Book for 1937 that ‘upon Salvationists everywhere was urged the importance of personal evangelism—that each one was responsible before God for the salvation of others. Personal touch, personal conversation, personal effort, it was pointed out, was of paramount importance nay, was the duty of every wearer of our uniform.’ Thus ‘Every Soldier a Soul-winner’ became and remains an inspiring slogan.

Of course what is true of the Army is more or less true of all Christian Missions. Their social work is undertaken not for its own sake but as an aid to the salvation of those who receive social service. The history of India would have been written differently if the Christians had come to India to live their lives in our midst and permeate ours with their aroma if there was any. There would then have been mutual goodwill and utter absence of suspicion. But say some of them, “If what you say had held good with Jesus there would have been no Christians.” To answer this would land me in a controversy in which I have no desire to engage. But I may be permitted to say that Jesus preached not a new religion but a new life. He called men to repentance. It was he who said, “Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.”

Harijan, 12-6-1937

398. HARIJANS

But as for Harijans themselves, I certainly do not agree that they are stupid, or unintelligent, or lacking in religious sense. They are not even unsophisticated. If we tried to use the high pressure methods of which you accuse us, I assure you, we would get no results among them. To me they are just nice people very much like myself and my brothers and sisters and friends. To be sure, they are oppressed and illiterate, even unkempt, but they are thoughtful, spiritual-minded, generous, kindly; in character they seem to me above, rather than below, the average of mankind. I like them better than savarana—but that is my bad taste, perhaps.

Still, I cannot figure out how you can live among them and hold such a superficial attitude towards them. The only explanation that comes to my mind is that you either do not know them or you are insincere. The latter is unworthy of attention. But the former might be true—for we sometimes know least those who live in the same house with us. Harijans do have strong self-protective complex that is hard to get past. A reserve past which they will not readily let an outsider come. They may be in awe of your ‘Mahatmaship’ (as we all are, a little) or it may be because they think you are a reincarnation of Rama (as they do think). Maybe you begin by trying to ‘uplift’ them—it seems to be against human nature to appreciate being ‘uplifted’. Maybe you still unconsciously have a little ‘high-caste’ attitude—savarana Christians have that trouble sometimes. It may be your city outlook. Whatever it is, you are not seeing them as I see them.

I admit I have certain advantages. I myself am a villager, so can enter into their life of farming, gardening, raising chickens, pigs, goats, cows. As a nurse I could help them in sickness and teach them how to have better health. I was an ‘untouchable’ to savarana Hindus, as they were, and was glad to be allowed to get water out of a decent cattle trough rather than the tanks the pigs and buffaloes wallowed in, when I toured in the villages. So I wasn’t an outsider to their life—not even a ‘visitor’. I was, as they said, a ‘relative’, one of themselves. It naturally followed that we would love and respect each other and that we would trust each other spiritually. Our spiritual communion was always on terms of equality. I received as much from them as I gave—maybe more. At least I can testify that some of the deepest spiritual thinking, the most exquisite spiritual attainment, that I have ever known, I have seen in the souls of Depressed-Class Hindus—and I don’t mean exceptional, educated ones, I mean illiterate villagers. But would I have seen it if I had been haggling them to become Christians? I assure you I would not!

1 St. Matthew, vii. 21

Occasionally for information I asked one who was thoroughly familiar with Christian doctrine, what he thought of it, pro and con, and he answered me as readily and frankly as if I had asked whether to feed an ox oil cake or jowari and why.

To be sure they talk politics and economics, but it is only the spiritual interest that holds them till midnight, brings them back at dawn, and in the hot noonday with the plea, ‘If you knew how we want to hear that God loves us, you wouldn’t want to rest.’

If you cannot meet that need, you cannot hold the Depressed Classes—if you can meet it you will hold them. For that is what they are asking—yes, and Shudras, too, and even some merchants and Brahmins.

This is an extract from a long letter received from an American sister who has lived for years in India as a Missionary. I heartily endorse the last statement in the extract. Of course, if I cannot meet their spiritual needs, I cannot hold the Harijans. But I am not so stupid as to think that I or any single person can supply the spiritual needs of his neighbour. Spiritual needs cannot be supplied through the intellect or through the stomach even as the needs of the body cannot be supplied through the spirit. One can paraphrase the famous saying of Jesus and say “Render unto the body that which is its, and unto the spirit that which is its.” And the only way I can supply my neighbour’s spiritual needs is by living the life of the spirit without even exchanging a word with him. The life of the spirit will translate itself into acts of love for my neighbour. Therefore I have not a shadow of doubt that Hinduism will (and rightly) lose Harijans if the so-called caste Hindus will not love Harijans—the outcaste Hindus—even as themselves. If they will just do that and nothing else, Hinduism is safe and so are Harijans and they. If they will not, they and Hinduism will surely perish. The so-called high-caste Hindus may spend millions for Harijans, but if they do not do the one thing needful, i.e., regard the Harijans as their spiritual equals, the material aid will stink in their nostrils and will be and deserve to be thrown away as so much waste.

---

1 In reply to Gandhiji’s article “The Cow”; vide “The Cow”, 13-3-1937

But to admit that Harijans have the same spiritual need as the rest of us, is not to say that they would understand the intellectual presentation of Christianity as much as I would, for instance. I put them on the same level as my own wife. Her spiritual needs are no less than mine, but she would no more understand the presentation of Christianity than any ordinary Harijan would. The reason is obvious. We came together practically as children. My studies went on in spite of marriage. She never attended a school before marriage. I neglected her educational training. Presentation, with a view to conversion, of a faith other than one’s own, can only necessarily be through an appeal to the intellect or the stomach or both. I do maintain in spite of the extract I have quoted that the vast mass of Harijans, and for that matter Indian humanity, cannot understand the presentation of Christianity, and that generally speaking their conversion wherever it has taken place has not been a spiritual act in any sense of the term. They are conversions for convenience. And I have had overwhelming corroboration of the truth during my frequent and extensive wanderings.

The writer has no warrant for suggesting that I do not know or love Harijans sufficiently because I attribute to Harijans inability to receive Christian teachings. My attitude is not ‘superficial’ as she will have it to be. Whatever it is, it is based on deep experience and observation dependent not on day’s or even a year’s contact, but on close contact for years with tens of thousands of India’s masses, not as a superior being but feeling as one of them. But she is wholly right when she says, ‘whatever it is, you are not seeing them as I see them.’ They are my kith and kin, breathing the same air, living the same life, having the same faith, the same aspirations, and the same earth sustaining us in life as it will in death! And for her?

Harijan, 12-6-1937

399. HARIJAN QUARTERS IN JAMSHEDPUR

I commend the foregoing reasoned and reasonable statement to the attention of the Tatas. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. In spite of all its sanitary condition, if the Harijan quarters remain neglected, as they appear to be, Jamshedpur runs the risk of having nasty eruptions of diseases born of insanitation. Proper sanitation is impossible in hovels. To provide decent quarters of the most useful servants of society is the soundest investment in which there is always gain and never any loss. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the reform suggested by Vindhyeshwari Babu will be taken in hand without delay.

1 By V. P. Varma, not reproduced here.

_Harijan_, 12-6-1937

400. LETTER TO RAMESHWARI NEHRU

_Segaon, Wardha_,

_June 12, 1937_

DEAR SISTER,

I have your letter. I want to give you all the consolation I can. Do come over in July.¹ We both shall talk over the matter.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

401. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

_June 12, 1937_

DEAR BROTHER ANAND,

Bapuji has got your and Vidya’s letters of June 9, 1937. For lack of time he could not write himself.

He says if you feel it unavoidable you can certainly write any particular part of your letter in English, but since you have started writing in Hindi you should continue it. You should increase the practice of Hindi. Even if you find it difficult to express any thoughts, you should not care much. And as a last resort there is always the freedom to write in English.

Now [Bapuji] will write only if there is anything to write about after getting more news about Vidya.

_Yours_,

_PYARELAL_

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

¹ The punctuation in the original seems to be faulty, and sentence reads: “Do come over both of you in July, we shall talk over the matter.”
402. SPEECH TO VILLAGERS, SEGAON

June 12, 1937

You must know that this work is for your own benefit, and not for the benefit of the malguzar. He had never even thought of this. But you will not keep your promise and I have come to express my pain to you. You must remember that this is a recurring task. Every year the road will have to be renewed and stone will have to be supplied by you. If you do not co-operate with me, all the labour that we have put in this year will be wasted. This year the profits from the village have not been equal to the tasks we have undertaken, and it was never my purpose to draw upon Jamnalalji’s other income for the purposes of this village. I shall therefore have to find the expense from the donations I receive for Segaon work. You will therefore understand the gravity of the breach of promise. I therefore appeal to those of you who have not kept their promises to cart the stones to the other road. I shall ask Jamnalalji to pay for the stones and use the proceeds for the welfare of Segaon.

But I am told that you are indifferent to all that is happening, that you do not care whether you have the road here or not. I ask you to put your heads together and decide whether you should co-operate with us or not. I do not refer to untouchability. There is no untouchability involved in this work, nor in the revival of your handicrafts. If you co-operate, I can assure you that your income will easily be doubled. Then there is the question of sanitation. I cannot make your village neat and clean and sweet-smelling without your co-operation. We have engaged a scavenger here. We pay for his service, but it is for you to keep your streets and lanes clean. We have

---

1 This is extracted from “Weekly Letter” by Mahadev Desai, who had reported: “When I was there last Saturday I found him addressing a little meeting of the villagers. There were very few women, but there was a good attendance of men. The occasion was the making of a road through the village to Gandhiji’s quarters, and meeting a road that ran to Wardha. The Wardha road is being built at Jamnalalji’s cost. The village road was proposed by the villagers themselves. They had given a written undertaking signed by no less than 70 people, each of whom had agreed to bring cartloads of stone for three days, the other expenses to be met by Gandhiji, at whose disposal Jamnalalji had placed all the profits accruing to him from the village, for the public good of the village. But when the work was actually begun the workers were hard put to it in persuading the signatories to keep their pledge. From 15 to 20 people had kept their promise. The rest had not. But Gandhiji could not break his pledge. He saw the thing through. He explained the whole situation to the villagers.”
quantities of human manure stored up here, but I am told that you would not give your carts on hire to cart this manure. Nowhere do we come across such apathy on the part of the people. Peasants everywhere in India and the world handle manure and turn it to good account.¹

_Harijan_, 19-6-1937.

---

403. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGAON, WARDHA,

_June 13, 1937_

CHI. MIRA,

I hope you had no difficulty in reaching Dalhousie² and that you were met at the respective stations. How I wish you would be thoroughly restored and return with the body thoroughly renewed. You won’t overstrain yourself in your anxiety to get well soon.

No more today.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6380. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9846

---

404. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,

_June 13, 1937_

MY DEAR REBEL,

Your letter.

I have no doubt that the _Harijan_ article³ will be copied elsewhere. It ought to give satisfaction. But as I have said, [if] anything more is required, you will let me know. The Muslim distrust

¹ Mahadev Desai had concluded the report: “The old Patel, the leader of the village, said that what Gandhiji had said was all right, and he was grateful and happy that Gandhiji was in their midst. But two things they could not do. Untouchability they could not possibly give up and they could not cart human manure. In all other matters he would promise their co-operation.”

² Mirabehn explains: “I had gone to Dalhousie where Bapu had sent me on account of bad health. I stayed at the house of Dr. and Mrs. Dharmavir where Subhas Babu was also staying at that time.”

³ Vide “Notes” sub-title “Not A Political Organization”, 12-6-1937 and consequent opposition is difficult to remove. But if anyone can do it you are the person. You must therefore study the whole question so thoroughly as to be able to answer every objection. Whatever you cannot answer, you will pass on to me and I shall deal with it. I am afraid this writing is too faint to decipher. If it is, you will let me know. I would like you even to return the letter so that I can have the lesson imprinted on my memory. The ink was too thick. I added water. It has served my purpose but I doubt if the writing won't fade by the time this reaches you.

We came in yesterday¹, early morning and reached Segaon 7.30 a.m. It is fairly hot here still. The rain is keeping off.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: c.W. 3788. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6944

405. LETTER TO N.V. RAGHAVAN

June 13, 1937

DEAR RAGHAVAN,

You are keeping me regularly posted with the doings of the Sabha. I have carefully read your letter to the members about the difficulty you are finding in coping with the responsibility that Rajagopalachari has thrust on you. Having put your hands to the plough, I would like you to hold on to it till you find a firmer hand yourself. Rajagopalachari when he mentioned your name was most enthusiastic about you and all I have since heard confirms what he told me. Is it not your experience that those who are most wanted for a particular cause have already several causes which they have to serve? Such is the paucity of true workers all the world over. But it is much more felt in our country. I, therefore, hope that you will not think of giving up what you have taken up without finding an efficient substitute.

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

SHRI N.V. RAGHAVAN
DAKSHINA BHARAT HINDI PRACHAR SABHA
MADRAS

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelel

¹ Evidently a slip; Gandhiji reached Wardha on June 11.
406. TELEGRAM TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

WARDHAGANI,
June 14, 1937

JWAHARRARLAL
CARE DOCTOR BIDHAN ROY WELLINGTON STREET
CALCUTTA

I HOPE YOU INDU WELL. COME WITH HER AND MAULANA DURING LAST WEEK WEATHER COOLING. LOVE.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

407. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

June 14, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

Having just got your letter, this is just to tell you I understand and appreciate your 'No'. I had expected it. Mira went yesterday to Dalhousie, having got Subhas's wire. Why should you worry about explaining the 'No' to me? Must every 'yes' and every 'no' need explaining? Love that demands such explanations must be sorry stuff. Mine never is. It can stand many "no's" so long as there is a 'yes' interspersed.

No nonsense now. Time flies.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3609. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6418.

1 Regarding Mirabehn's visit; vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 8-6-1937
408. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 14, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

Herewith Andrews's letter. Can't cheer those who won't be cheered. I am positive that you have no cause to feel depressed. You will feel depressed even when you do the right thing, if so doing you are likely to wound somebody's susceptibility. How are you to cheer such stupid people? Are they to be told to do the wrong thing in order to escape depression? Read Chapter 6 of the \textit{Gita} or \textit{Japji}. You will find in the latter many passages to dispel your depression which is a form of ignorance.

I suppose Jawaharlal wrote to me at the same time that he wrote to you. For in his letter to me also he alludes to his sore throat, etc. He is likely to be with me during the last week of the month.

Love.

ROBBERS

From the original: C.W. 3610. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6419

409. LETTER TO G. RAMACHANDRAN

June 14, 1937

MY DEAR RAMACHANDRAN,

Nothing from you for a long time. Saraswati said the weather was hot there. Is it cool enough for Amtul Salaam to come? She is anxious to go there as soon as she can.

How are you? What about . . . \(^1\) How is Saraswati faring?

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6703

\(^1\) Some words are illegible in the source.
410. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

June 14, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Enclosed are a cheque for Rs. 90 and a bank note for Rs. 100. Amtul Salaam says that with these sums, the amount in her name goes up to Rs. 690. If that is correct, Rs. 600 is to be kept as fixed deposit and Rs. 90 is to be credited to her account. Despatch the accompanying wire. You must have despatched the wire to Subhas. Send some envelopes.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11522

411. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

June 14, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

Your letter of the 9th I got today, the 14th. I have already written to you. I have also noted down the date. I see that our letters have crossed.

Yes, I arrived on the 11th. I had to stay for ten days more at Tithal. With me here are Amtul Salaam and Sharda. Ba and Kano are in Maroli. Kanu is in Rajkot. Take care of your health.

You have to look after both the elders. Do the best you can. Do not lose courage. Go on doing what you can.

It is good that Jayaprakash is profiting from his imprisonments.

You must be reading a good deal about Shri Kallenbach who is here. You won't be able to see him. I am afraid you will not be able to go to Ahmedabad now. Kanti has gone to Bangalore. He will study there. You probably get letters from him. I will not write any more today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3491
412. LETTER TO SARASWATI

June 14, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

I have your letter.

Study hard, spin well. Spinning is a must for Paparamma, too.
You must ply the carding-bow.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6703. Also C.W. 4449. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

413. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 15, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I imagine your having just reached or just reaching Dalhousie1. Subhas Babu has given ample instructions regarding the route, expenses and timings. It is a perfect letter. Raizada Hansraj wired offering to take you in. But I have wired, you would be with Subhas Babu. And with the latter you would get good medical aid. I shall expect a wire today from you.

The heat is still oppressive here. I have dropped bread altogether.

Here is Rajkumari's letter.2

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6381. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9847

---

1 Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 13-6-1937
2 Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 14-6-1937
414. LETTER TO GLADYS OWEN

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 15, 1937

DEAR GLADYS,

Your letter is touching. I know that like the good people at Sat-Tal many are praying unknown to me.

I am glad Celia also is having a little bit of cool air with you. My love to both of you and regards to all at the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

MISS GLADYS OWEN

THE ASHRAM

SAT-TAL

Via BHIM TAL

From a photostat: C.W. 11280: Courtesy: Dr. Priyamvada Mathur

---

415. LETTER TO MANUBEHN S. MASHRUWALA

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 15, 1937

CHI. MANUDI,

You seem to be a tyrant. Is it that I am supposed to have written only if the letter carries your address and is written with my own hand? It was good, however, that you understood my meaning. Surendra met me in Bardoli and, therefore, I could have a long talk with him. I explained my meaning to him also.

I hope you keep fine health. Do you study? Let me know your daily programme.

Amtul Salaam is here. Mirabehn has gone to a hill-station because of her illness. Ba and Kano are still in Maroli.

Khan Saheb is expected the day after tomorrow. Mehrtaj and Lali also will be coming.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostato of the Gujarati: C.W. 1568. Courtesy: Manubehn S. Mashruwala

---

1 The addressee was a teacher in the Theosophical Society School in Banaras.
416. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

June 15, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I got your letter just now. The description of the lady is interesting. Amtul Salaam is sitting beside me, fan in hand, while I am writing this. Mirabehn has gone to Dalhousie Hill in the Punjab. She couldn't get rid of her fever.

Your asking for exemption from fees does not seem proper. It was not proper either, that the lawyer should have been fined. If you can carry on without staying in a hostel, it would be worth while to save that expense. I had understood from what you said that you would stay with Ramji and thus save boarding and lodging expenses. If, however, you think that staying in a hostel will be of great benefit to you, never mind the expense. You did well in giving Devdas all the details. You cannot by any means be but in the category of the poor. Only those who have none to support them can be called poor. How much was the lawyer fined?

Take care of your health. Even when you don't get time to write, you should drop a postcard at least once in a week. But if you can write a letter as long as 50 postcards every week, then that is what you should do. Because of the rains the sultriness persists.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photosat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7322. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

417. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

June 15, 1937

CHI. KANAIYO,

I got your letter written during the journey. I understand the state of your mind. I am not going to bind you in any way. You may think over the matter afresh and do as you think proper.

Bhansalibhai has resumed coming here from yesterday. He has resumed taking milk since yesterday. Walking does not tire him. The wound has not yet completely healed. Mirabehn left yesterday for a hill-station.

I got Narandas's letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

1 Jaikrishna Bhansali
418. LETTER TO NATHUBHAI N. PAREKH

June 15, 1937

BHAI NATHUBHAI,

The period of vanapravesh will last up to 58.¹ In these many years you can do a lot. When a man enters the forest he is bound to make friends with trees, leaves, birds and animals. He would attain fearlessness, be acquainted with Nature, would live in the midst of men and animals and know what man's place in the world is and, by the time he emerges from the forest, would have gathered such knowledge which would be helpful to himself and which would enable him to guide his neighbours. We have to create such a forest in our heart. If physical desires lose their keenness and we become inward-looking, we shall have gained much.

You have done a bit of research to discover my mistake. I have also had letters from four or five other Gujarati friends from the South in that regard. Indu stayed for quite some time with me and we talked at length on many things. He is still a child. He is not yet aware of his responsibilities. But he does have some good qualities. He has great regard for Kanti. He wishes to share in lightening the burden that has fallen on you. Hence I hope that he will do something. Now he will be staying under the direct care of Kanti. Everything, therefore, will be well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photosate of the Gujarati: G.N. 6250

419. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

SEGAON,

June 16, 1937

BHAI JETHALAL,

I have your letter. Now observe the 30th July but instead of the 30th you can observe the 31st because July has thirty-one days. Do send the book of Vinoba. I suppose the Mobile Weaving School of Travancore must be mentioned only in the pages of his book; I somehow could find no trace of it there. There is no explanation for my going to Gujarat. Of course, I was expected to go there for two or three days to inspect the site for the Congress. But then I also have no reason for not going either. I may say that Sardar's keen insistence dragged me. But this is not real defence. If sardar's insistence can persuade me to do something wrong, his other importunities may persuade me to commit greater wrongs. In spite of knowing all this I could not withstand his insistence.

¹ Vide “Letter to Nathubhai N. Parekh”, 24-5-1937

VOL.71 : 25 FEBRUARY, 1937- 5 JULY, 1937 353

Now about cow's ghee. I charge Rs. 3 per seer or even two and a half. I charge according to the cost. I am able to get this much because there are people like Jamnalalji and I am able to insist on their using cow's ghee prepared in Wardha. But I shall not be able to carry on this Rs. 3 per seer business for long. Your ghee of course cannot be sold even free of cost because we cannot accept an agency for buffalo's ghee. Moreover your ghee is adulterated. It is my firm belief that this business of yours is wrong. As you do not abide by the regulations of the Goseva Sangh, you do not get any help from them and therefore make adulterated ghee at home. Naturally it fetches lower price in the market. Nowadays ghee made out of pure buffalo's milk fetches a good price in the market. Ghee made from pure cow's milk fetches a lower price. So if at the moment you make no distinction between the cow and the buffalo, you should engage yourself in making ghee only out of buffalo's milk. You will surely succeed in it. I can understand that it will not give you mental satisfaction. But if you derive any mental satisfaction from mixing cow's milk with buffalo's, it is a false satisfaction. Hence it is my sincere advice that you should either make ghee out of pure cow's milk and sell it at the normal rate or, failing that, find some other occupation which would be beneficial to the villages. Obtain from the public whatever cannot be met by the income from the business.

But this after all is my opinion. There is no absolute rule that you have to follow my advice in such matters. Of course I would never insist. So think over my argument and do only what you think proper. Kishorelalbhai will of course read this, and, if possible, Vinoba, too. I shall try to send their opinions along with this.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9862. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat
420. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 17, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I had your letter yesterday. Third-class travelling is safe only with me. However, it is well that you reached Dalhousie\(^1\) safely. Today’s post might bring another letter from you though there is not much chance. I hope you have all my letters. Only yesterday I could not send you anything. Dr. Dharmavir's wire of safe arrival was duly received. I am sure you will be restored there.

No rain here yet. The first cool night was experienced last night. It has become sultry again during the day.

Kallenbach is still on spare diet. He has added a few khaskhas and 8 oz. of dahi to his mangoes.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6382. Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9848

421. A LETTER

MAGANWADI, WARDHA,

June 17, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I welcome your letter. I must admit that the decision, after meeting in Delhi and thereafter, I had forgotten. But the recollection does not affect what I said\(^2\) at Hudli. My charge was against those who had come to induce me to preside at the meeting in Belgaum. I was most disinclined knowing well that my programme would not be popular nor my method of work. But Gangadharrao whom I knew very well bore down my opposition and assured me that Mr. Chikodi and others would whole-heartedly work out the scheme. Gangadharrao himself admits that he failed. He could not even personally confine himself to cow's milk, nor Mr. Chikodi who was to be active worker in the movement. As I said the collapse of the

---

1. The source has "Delhi", evidently a slip.
2. Vide “Speech at Gandhi Seva Sangh Meeting, Hudli- IV”, 20-4-1937 resolution of the big body was tragic, through no fault of anybody. But my fault was in not sufficiently realizing that my method of working out the cow-protection programme would not be popular and that I would have to show results by experimenting. That experiment is still going on. Tanning at Ahmedabad did not succeed, because the so-called experts were not really experts. But as it always existed in my imagination it has taken shape in Wardha and Bengal. In Wardha the experiment is being conducted under my direct supervision and in Bengal under the supervision of one of my colleagues. I can still show no striking results because the experiment is novel and difficult. This programme is not any part of the village movement, although it can be. It is being worked out independently as part of the scheme not of village improvement but of cow-protection. My point remains that those who invited me in Belgaum to take up the cow-protection work were previously in that field and should not have given it up because I failed or seemed to fail.

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

422. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

June 17, 1937

CHI. KANAIYO,

It seems you have taken the account book [by mistake]. I suppose the information as to the amounts given by different people will be there in that book. If so, please send the book to Mahadev by registered post. Or send a note showing the amounts credited into the accounts of the persons concerned.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

How is the heat there? It is quite hot over here.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II
423. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

[June 17, 1937]¹

CHI. VASUMATI,

You must have reached there. Let me see now, how you build up your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

424. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

SEGAON,
June 17, 1937

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

I have your letter. What a life! But I have nothing to say as long as you derive satisfaction by living there. Write to me whenever you find an opportunity. Give me an account of your activity.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6551

425. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA,
June 18, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I have not kept you without letter two days running. Sometimes I have written two days running. As you must have seen I have declined to make any statement on the office issue. The Times of India interview² was exhaustive and the last word so far as I am concerned. Now the Working Committee has to have its say.

Your Hindi writing is getting scarce. But I don't grumble. You have your hands more than full. I therefore satisfy myself with what I get.

¹ In the source this letter appears below "Letter to Kanu Gandhi", the preceding item.
² Vide “Interview to “The Times of India” “, 1-6-1937
Khan Saheb, Mehr[taj[ and Lali came in yesterday.\(^1\)

ROBBER

[PS.]

Still steaming.

Love.

From the original: C.W. 3789. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6945

426. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

June 18, 1937

CHI. JAMNALAL.

If Khan Saheb is willing he may, of course, go. Send a telegram to Biyani\(^2\) saying that he should not force Khan Saheb to make any speech. If he goes, what about Mehrtaj and Lali? They were to arrive here tomorrow?

It is good that Kamal has reached there.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2986

427. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

June 18, 1937

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA.

It is surprising that you do not notice the unity of thought between my current writings and what I wrote in _Anasaktiyoga\(^3\)_ . We creatures are not all _dharmaja_ progeny, but _kamaja_. Let us suppose that a man in full control of his passion desires progeny and a suitable mate, too, who desires progeny only from him and is not moved by passion. Their son would be _dharmaja_. But this does not imply that none among their ancestors were _kamaja_\(^4\). Thus what I mean is that

---

\(^1\) In "Letter to Mirabehn", 19-6-1937, however, Gandhiji says that they came on the 19th. Vide also the following item.

\(^2\) Brijlal Biyani, President, Vidarbha Congress Committee; vide also "Letter to Jamnalal Bajaj", 19-6-1937

\(^3\) Vide "Anasaktiyoga" sub-title "The Message of the "Gita"

\(^4\) The sentence is obscure in the Hindi text and Gandhiji replaced it by another sentence in the letter dated July 2.
though we are full of imperfections we should make an effort at any rate to rid ourselves of them.

I cannot say from personal experience whether it is possible or not to procreate dharmaja offspring but I do hold that the remark in the Adiparva of Mahabharata regarding Vyasji stems from experience.¹ It is possible that it is only a poetic fancy and not an actual experience. But this takes away nothing from my argument because if a couple come together not moved by passion but only for the sake of progeny, their brahmacharya is in no was lessened. But there can be only one single offspring of this kind. This is a description of the ideal state. And we must try to reach it to the extent we can.

Procreation is no obligatory duty, but the desire for it is no sin either. Thus marriage is impermissible for one who has no wish for progeny, i.e., satisfaction of passion should never be the ground for marriage. Married people should follow their duty keeping this ideal in view.

Write to me when all your efforts for securing a job have failed. Please bear in mind that I have no idea what resources I may have then. And in case you have to come here you should settle down contentedly because you should not limit your services on the basis of the amount of salary you may get.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4282

428. HOW THEY CONVERT

Thakkar Bapa had his attention drawn to the so-called conversion to Christianity in Shahabad District. He thereupon called for a report on the statements made to him. The following is the report made by the local Harijan Sevak Sangh:

In the district of Shahbad, about 40 years ago, a Methodist Episcopal Christian Mission was established at Arrah. Through its efforts a large number of Harijans, numbering about three thousand, were converted to Christianity up to the year 1931. . . . Last year a Roman Catholic Mission appeared on the scene. Since then, the activities of both the Missions have increased . . . . Enquiry has revealed that they have been successful in getting some new Christian converts from the Rabidas (Chamar) community amongst whom their activities are mainly confined. Roughly their method of work may be described as follows:

¹ Vide “Advice to Newly Married Couples”, 18-4-1937
² Only excerpts are reproduced here.

After having visited the village and created familiarity with the Harijans they at once start a school and put it in charge of a Harijan teacher who either himself is an influential man or related to such a one. Whenever they come to learn that some tension or actual litigation is going on between the Harijans and other villagers they at once seize the opportunity to take up the side of the poor Harijans and help them with money and advice. They are thus hailed as saviours and conversion follows as if to repay the obligation.

As their work is scattered throughout the thana in the remotest villages, the present enquiry could not be exhaustive . . . . The one remarkable feature of these recent conversions is that they take place en masse. Whenever a village Harijan leader accepts the new faith almost all belonging to his clan follow him . . . . In all cases of conversions new or old, not a single instance can be found in which the acceptance of the new faith was due to any religious conviction . . . The reasons, therefore, of conversions may be roughly described as economic or socioeconomic. Generally, the Harijans have to submit to a number of unjust exactions and to suffer from humiliating treatment which are now resented by them . . . Those of the new and the old who are still continuing as nominal Christians are willing to return to Hinduism if their grievances are removed. Their grievances as disclosed during the enquiry are briefly indicated below:

1. They are forced to labour for their maliks and other caste Hindus of their villages at about half or even less wages than they would get for the same kind of labour in other villages.

2. They are forced to labour for their maliks and other caste-Hindu villgers on occasions of marriages and deaths in their families on almost no wages.

3. They are charged six annas per year per family as mutharfa (house rent).

4. They have to pay Re. 1, Rs. 2 and Rs. 3 or Rs. 4 for the hide of every dead cow, bullock or buffalo respectively to their owners if they fail to deliver a corresponding number of pairs of shoes to them.

5. Their wives are paid only four annas for a male or two annas for a female child born in the house of the caste-Hindu villagers where they have to work as midwives during confinement, and even these payments are not regularly made.

6. They are forced to work for their maliks and caste-Hindu villgers even at the sacrifice of their own agricultural needs or when they are ill or engaged in their social or religious functions.
7. The levy of the Chowkidari tax on them is generally excessive.
8. They are not allowed to draw water from wells used by caste Hindus.
9. They are not allowed to enter temples nor are Brahmin priests available to recite religious kathas at their houses.

If what is said in the report about the conversions be true, it is from my standpoint reprehensible. Such superficial conversions can only give rise to suspicion and strife. But if a missionary body or individuals choose to follow the methods described in the report, nothing can be done to prevent them. It is therefore much more profitable to turn the searchlight inward and to discover our own defects. Fortunately the report enables us to do so. Nine causes are enumerated to show why Harijans are induced to leave the Hindu fold. Seven are purely economic, one is social, and one is purely religious. Thus they are reduced economically, degraded socially and boycotted from religious participation. The wonder is not that they leave Hinduism; the wonder is that they have not done so for so long and that so few leave their ancestral faith even when they do. The moral is obvious. Let us make every discovery, such as the one made in Shahabad, an occasion for greater self-purification, greater dedication to the harijan cause, greater identification with the Harijans. It should result in the local Sangh collecting more workers than it has for doing on the one hand service among the Harijans and on the other propaganda among the so-called caste Hindus, not in the shape of reviling them but showing them that religion does not warrant the treatment that is meted out to Harijans by them.

_Harijan_, 19-6-1937

429. KHADI AT HARIPURA

Sjt. Dastane is anxious that something striking should happen at Haripura so as to make khadi much more popular than it is. There are other workers who no doubt anticipate great things from Haripura about khadi. Bardoli’s promise to be wholly self-sustained about khadi made in 1921 still remains unredeemed. Painful to tell, Bardoli like other places falls back on Wardha for its cheap and well-coloured khadi. The khadi method excludes concentration. Wardha is in no need of outside patronage. And if it began to rely on it, it would harm itself and khadi in the long run. The secret of success in khadi is for each taluk or at least district to produce and use its own khadi.
But Sjt. Dastane says, though the Working Committee has re-emphasized the fourfold programme of 1920, there is hardly an M.L.A. who talks about it to his constituency. And if the khadi-lovers, too, do not show application or orginality, khadi has a poor chance of becoming universal. There is force in what Sjt. Dastane says. But things are not quite as bad as he perhaps imagines. In Nalwadi, Vinoba is practically concentrating the whole of his attention on khadi. He is making experiments to see whether the minimum of three annas per day of eight hours for spinners is an easily realizable proposition. It bids fair to succeed. There is a boy 16 year old who is a villager of quite the ordinary type. He is earning four annas per day. If the average villager has a sufficient ocular demonstration of the possibility of earning three annas per day, and if he or she knows that there is an organization that will take in all the standard yarn that can be produced, there will be a spontaneous response. Now this kind of very solid work does not admit of haste or a spectacular display. Then there is one great difficulty in the way. The spinners, weavers and other artisans engaged in khadi production are expected to use khadi for their own wear. This means popular education in the economics of khadi, a change in the mentality of the poor artisans who do not know anything of why they are so helpless and poor and still less of how they can help themselves to get rid of their ignorance and poverty. The spread of such education means again a large number of workers possessing love of khadi and an adequate knowledge of the economics and the technique of khadi.

Thus there are very natural difficulties to be overcome in the attempt to make khadi universal. Let Sjt. Dastane and others who feel like him about khadi make a deep study of the science and make their own experiments if they have any original contribution to make or pursue the beaten track and give to the work their exclusive attention.

Harijan, 19-6-1937

430. MAN’S INHUMANITY

Not many people know what is phooka. Still fewer know that there is an association in Calcutta called the Anti-phooka Association. Its patrons are Maharajadhiraja Sir Bijoy Chand Mahatab Bahadur and Justice Sir L. W. J. Costello. Its president is Shri Ramkumar Bangar. The office is at 65 Pathuriaghata Street. The Secretary thus describes the process of phooka:

I have to inform you that the atrocities of phooka are perpetrated on each milch animal twice daily. The four legs of the animal are tied to four strong posts and two men hold the animal so tightly that she cannot make any movement of her limbs whatsoever. A bamboo rod or pipe, 22 inches long and 8 inches in circumference, is then forcibly pushed into the generative organ of the animal, and then one man begins to blow air into the uterus, causing it to be fully distended thereby. This inflammation causes extra pressure on the glands which helps the milkman to extract the last drop of milk. The milking also is indescribably cruel, and it is continued to the great pain of the animal till blood comes out of the udder. Sometimes a few drops of the blood get mixed up with the milk. Unable to make any movements, the animal silently bears this inhuman torture and her great pain is manifested only by the copious perspiration and tears that flow down her body and cheeks. This is repeated twice daily and the animal invariably swoons after each operation.

It is difficult to conceive anything more torturing or revolting than the process described by the Secretary. From the proceedings of a meeting of the Association it appears that the practice results in the sterility of the cows and she-buffaloes subjected to the torture. They are therefore transferred to butchers after they cease to yield milk even in spite of phooka.

The Association undertakes the prosecution of the torturers. It engages plain-clothes detectives to discover the culprits. The activity of the Association is good as far as it goes. But it does not appear to me to go far enough. Punishment of a few criminals won't stop the inhumanity. It is necessary to carry on propaganda among the offenders and educate them to understand the evils of the system. Of course the surest way of dealing with the evil is for the Corporation to take charge of the whole of the milk supply of Calcutta and change the gwalas into its paid servants. They would then not be open to temptation as they are now. They will be under sanitary supervision. Milking will be done under proper control. The citizens will have a guarantee of having pure milk for their money. And there is not the slightest reason why the milk supply department should not be self-supporting. The citizens will gladly pay an extra pie, if an increase in the selling price becomes necessary. Of course the milk supply has to become a monopoly of a municipality undertaking the enterprise, even as the postal stamp is a monopoly of the State.

Harijan, 19-6-1937

431. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 19, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter has just come. I hope the mountain air will set you right. Here is note for Dr. Dharmavir. My love to Subhas Babu to whom I have no time to write separately.

You will be grieved to know that yesterday the rain set in but destroyed the earth-work near the creek bridge, nearly destroyed the houses on either side. If the rain had continued for five minutes longer the houses would have gone. Now I am considering what to do.

Khan Saheb and Mehrtaj came in today.¹

No more time to say more.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6383. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9849

432. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

June 19, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

It was good that the thorn came out. The case is exactly like what had happened to Rajkumari.² When the doctors were at their wit's end, Nature became a doctor. I read about the Bharuch affair. Such falsehoods will go on. What other attitude could you have adopted towards a worker like Dinkarrai³? I can now attend the Working Committee meeting only between the 26th and the 29th. That is

¹ Vide also “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 18-6-1937
² According to the source, Vallabhbhai Patel had suffered for a fortnight from a thorn which had pierced his foot while he was taking a stroll with Gandhiji on Tithal seaside.
³ Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 2-6-1937
⁴ Dinkarrai Desai, President of Bharuch Municipality, whose sanitary workers had gone on strike; vide “Letter to Amritlal V. Thakkar”, 5-4-1937 sufficient time. There is no doubt that the earlier the committee meets the better.

364 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Kishorelal keeps indifferent health and so has not been able to come and meet me. I had called on him for a few minutes on the day of my arrival. He was to come to Segaon but has not been able to do so owing to his illness.

I hope you are keeping well otherwise.

Blessings from

BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL
PURUSHOTTAM BUILDING
OPPOSITE OPERA HOUSE
NEW QUEENS ROAD
BOMBAY 4

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 201

433. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAI

June 19, 1937

CHI. JAMNALAL.

Despatch this wire: "Khan Saheb not enthusiastic on his own. If need his presence urgent come and discuss with him. Gandhi."

Send this reply if it seems proper to you. I do not wish to send it as an order.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2987

434. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 20, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL.

Your two letters before me. There is nothing wrong with the village ink. The wrong is with me. I am too lazy to attend to the laws

1 This telegram is in English. It was meant for Brijlal Biyani. Vide also “Letter to Jamnalal Bajai”, 18-6-1937 governing the use of village ink. I won’t shake off my laziness by reverting to the use of the lazy city ink. I can do so, if ever, by persisting in the use of village ink and by people like you pulling me up when my letters are too faint to be deciphered.

Mira is happy in Dalhousie. She is charmed with the eternal snows which she sees daily. And Dr. Dharmavir and Subhas are very attentive to her. And you are right when you say she won’t feel too crowded there. You should write to her.

It is good news you give me of some of the Harijan hovels being destroyed and new houses being built for them.¹

Most probably the Working Committee will meet here next week. There is no question this time of going to Allahabad.

Who recommended the three pamphlets? Do you know anything of them? You should plead for me with those who would want me to read books. No time.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 6311. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6420

435. LETTER TO J.C. KUMARAPPA

June 20, 1937

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

Here is Vasta’s letter to you and mine to him. I hope you have sent him the thing he has asked for. Please post my letter with yours which I expect you are writing.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10118

¹ Probably as a result of the addressee’s representation to the municipal authorities; vide “Telegram to Nandlal Bose”, 13-5-1937
436. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

June 20, 1937

Bhai Khambhatta,

At long last I received your diary. Ailments that cannot be cured by any remedies have got to be endured, and God has given you sufficient strength for that.

Blessings to you both from

BAPU

SHRI BEHRAM KHAMBHATTA
BELVEDERE COURT
CHURCHGATE RAILWAY STATION
FORT, BOMBAY

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6613. Also C.W. 4404. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

437. LETTER TO KALYANJI V. MEHTA

June 20, 1937

Bhai Kalyanji,

I got your letter. If possible take Ba to Manilal once. If possible try and make Kanam spin on the takli regularly. He had started that here. But the practice was given up later.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2714

438. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 21, 1937

My dear rebel.

So you have fairly won your victory. But you will have to pursue the matter to the end, lest the Municipality goes to sleep.¹

¹ Vide “Letter to J. C. Kumarappa”, 20-6-1937
You are right. Subhas ought not to leave Dalhousie in a hurry. He should be thoroughly restored for the task in front of him. I am sorry I forgot to tell you that Jamnalalji came in here on 6th and will be with the exception of three or four days when he has to go to Calcutta for his son's marriage in Calcutta. He goes on 29th.

You should write to Mira when you get two minutes.

Why won't you consult Menchen or Menkel about your food? You must get rid of your indigestion. I can't guide you much from a distance. Therefore you need some local assistance for the proper selection of your menu.

The Working Committee meets on 4th or 5th July in Wardha. It must decide the office issue finally.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3790. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6946

439. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 21, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I have just had your second letter from Dalhousie. I had not expected any magical performance in Dalhousie. But you will recover there completely by patience. Do not insist on your way if doctor advises otherwise, of course barring vows. But there are no vows except the abstention from meats and wines.

No rain here to speak of. The weather has cooled a bit. Ba is expected to return by 24th. Khan Saheb and Mehtaj are flourishing. Kallenbach must take the steamer on 7th July. But he promises to return in December and stay three months.

Balvantsinha has a mania for building. The cowshed is complete but the huge yard is taking up time and space and money. Let us see. Parnerkar is here and will stay.

Remember me to the hosts.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6385. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9851

1 The source has Menken; vide also “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 29-5-1937
2 An agriculture expert; Secretary, Goseva Sangh. In his book Bapuki Chhayamen (p. 179) Balvantsinha explains: “Parnerkerji had shifted from Dhulia to Sevagram (on a permanent basis) where he was entrusted with the work of agriculture.”
440. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

June 21, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter of the 16th. I have been regularly writing to you.

Lose yourself in whatever service comes to you unasked and be satisfied.

Amtul Salaam is still here, and so are Khan Saheb and Mehrtaj. I have already written to you about Babu-Sharda. Now Sushila's friend, Dr. Soundaram¹, has come for two days. She plays beautifully on the vina. Ba may come about the 24th. Parnerkar also has come to stay here. A good deal of construction work is going on. You will find many new things when you come.

Write to Mirabein. Her address C/o Dr. Dharmavir, Dalhousie, Punjab.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have just seen your Harijanbandhu. It has been returned from Patna. Why don't you inform Poona about changes in your address? Please let me know whether or not you get it now.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3489

441. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

June 21, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

I have read your letter and Jawahar's reply. It seems Nariman will fall into the pit he is digging himself. Let us wait and see what steps he takes next. We needn't do anything in a hurry. The matter is bound to come up at the Working Committee. It is certainly meeting after a long interval, but that can't be helped. Let events take their own course. I had a long letter\textsuperscript{1} from Lothian, but I have not yet been able to read it. I hope you are well enough now to move about.

¹ Wife of G. Ramchandran; vide “Letter to Kanu Gandhi”, 24-6-1937

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

\begin{flushright}
[From Gujarati]

\textit{Bapuna Patro—2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine.} p. 202
\end{flushright}

\textit{BAPU}

\section*{442. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI}

\textit{June 21, 1937}

\textsc{Chi. Manilal and Sushila,}

I got Manilal's letter. Kallenbach will leave this place on July 7. I hope that he will come back in December. Here he lives just like one of us. He wears only a dhoti, but sometimes a shirt also. He has purchased a lot of khadi and got some dresses made. This time he is not at all inclined to go anywhere for sight-seeing. Next time when he comes I will send him to visit the Taj, etc.

In Segaon, where there was only one hut, several houses have come up now. There seems to be no end to the construction work. The number of residents also is increasing.

Ba, with Kano, is at Maroli with Mithubehn. She is expected to return in a few days now.

Lakshmi has given birth to a son in Madras. Both of them are well. This time she didn't suffer much. Kanti has gone to Bangalore to study in a college. Kishorelal is keeping indifferent health.

Let me know if the handwriting in this letter is rather faint. It is written with pure indigenous ink.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

\begin{flushright}
From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4864
\end{flushright}

\textsuperscript{1} Mahadev Desai had sent a copy of this to Mirabehn on June 25. In his forwarding letter (C.W. 6386), he says: "A long letter from Lothian has come again appealing to Bapu to advise the Congress to take up offices. This is a much more argumentative letter, but it is on the lines of the Viceroy's speech. How they think alike!" For the Viceroy's speech. \textit{vide Appendix “Viceroy’s Speech”}, 21-6-1937.
443. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM K. JERAJANI

June 21, 1937

Bhai Kakubhai,

The blanket that I have sent you is a hand-woven one from Scotland. It is said that even the wool is hand spun. The beauty of it lies in the composition of different colours. The purpose in sending it to you is that you may try and make use of the design in Kashmir or some other place. Otherwise preserve it as a sample. I had forgotten to write about this. I am glad you reminded me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 10832. Courtesy: Purushottam K. Jerajani

444. LETTER TO JAWAHarlAL NEHRU

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 22, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

You letter has just reached me. Though three days might prove too few, they would be better than nothing. It is a pity Indu can't come with you. I had thought that the operation that she had for tonsils many years ago was the last. I take it this would be as simple as the previous one.

Love to you all.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

445. LETTER TO J.C. KUMARAPPA

June 22, 1937

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

I have read your essay on democracy and your speech on conversion. Both are good but you must work out your individualistic cultural democracy. The charge against Hinduism is that it is too individualistic. I have thought it to be a baseless charge. But you seem to have some other idea. My own opinion is that Hinduism has made the greatest research in that line but simply failed to carry out its discoveries in practice and therefore seemed to be individualistic, i.e., selfish.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10119

446. LETTER TO BABURAO D. MHATRE
June 22, 1937

DEAR MR. MHATRE,

I am glad of your report which will be very helpful in regulating traffic and in repairing, if it is possible, the bad roads. I am passing on your report to the Sardar.

Yours sincerely,

From a copy: C.W. 9827. Courtesy: Baburao D. Mhatre

447. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA
June 22, 1937

The Associated Press special correspondent greeted Mahatma Gandhi early this morning today at his hut in Segaon village with a copy of Viceroy's message to India. Mahatma Gandhi who was having discussions with Seth Jamnalal Bajaj and other workers asked the correspondent to wait for a few minutes. In 15 minutes Mahatma Gandhi called in the correspondent, handed back the Viceroy's statement which was sent to him earlier by the correspondent and asked him to read it aloud for the benefit of himself and others present. Gandhiji attentively listened while the correspondent read the entire message slowly. At the conclusion of reading, Mahatma Gandhi asked the correspondent:

Now, what do you want?

On being told that his reactions on the statement were wanted, Mahatma Gandhi shrugged his shoulders and beckoned to the correspondent to take down.

1 On the site for the 51st Congress Session at Haripura; vide also p. 220.
I have listened to the Viceroy's statement most attentively, but I am sorry that I cannot make any statement. The Working Committee will finally decide on July 5 on the grave issue that is before the country and I hope that no Congressman will want to anticipate the decision of the Working Committee and offer criticism.

The conversation then turned to the Segaon village and village folk. Mahatma Gandhi said that the village had considerably improved and that there were better cows in the village than elsewhere in Wardha. People were healthy and they had plenty of fresh air even more than he because they were bold people, not sophisticated.

_The Hitavada, 29-6-1937_

448. LETTER TO ATULANAND CHAKRABARTY

SEGAON (WARDHA)

_June 23, 1937_

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. It is unfortunate but it is true that I have not been able to appreciate the utility of your method as a contribution to the communal tangle. That does not mean that there is no value in cultural contact. I think it has great value. But I am more than doubtful as to the possibility of organizing such contact. I do not know if I have expressed myself clearly. Rabindranath has, of all the men of the world, perhaps, made the largest contribution in that direction. But it has not been through any organization. His writings have compelled attention. I should be delighted if your writings serve the same purpose. But then you do not need my certificate or anybody else's, even as the Poet does not. I wonder if I have made my position clear. I, somehow or other, feel that yours is a different position. Maybe that I have not understood it and, therefore, I have been indifferent to it. I would be satisfied if I can make you believe that my indifference is not due to cussedness or even to want of study of your thought expressed by you. The moment I begin to appreciate your method you will find me advertising it in my own humble way. But you seem to be paralysed without my advertisement and this hurts me. Why should you need my advertisement? Surely the names you have gathered round yourself are far better judges of your work than I ever can be.

It is easy enough now to answer your questions.

The solid work for villages that I have in mind is the work such as the Spinners' Association is doing among thousand of artisans irrespective of their caste or creed. I hope to publish statistics showing the number of artisans with whom the Spinners' Association has established contact—not political but purely economic. Of course, anyone who has faith in such kind of contact can work for it if he has the desire to learn the technique.

This work is necessarily confined to the villages because the bulk of these artisans are to be found in the villages and these are the people who are in need of the assistance of the kind we are offering.

The third and the fourth question are answered in the foregoing paragraphs.

The fifth question is answered in the preliminary paragraph.

You do not seem to have kept a copy of your letter. I am, therefore, returning your letter in order to enable you to see if I have covered all your questions. If I have not, you should tell me and I shall make another endeavour to answer your questions.

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 1476. Courtesy: A.K. Sen

449. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI A. MEHTA

June 23, 1937

BHAI BHAGWANJI,

It was good that you visited Vadavashram near Khambhat. I can never feel hurt by anything you write. How can there be any objection to your letting me know whatever you think? As long as you are alive, how is it possible that the good name and reputation of Karsanji Mulchand would be lost? How can I explain that I had spared no effort in writing to Bhai Narbheram about you? I may not have told you that I had also entered into correspondence with Prof. Thakore regarding the matter. If I didn't do so, the reason must have been that there was nothing important in it. But I had tried my level best. I was not in a position to arbitrate in the dispute between you two. I had neither the necessary material nor the time.

You have now sent a letter for Devchandbhai. I do not know what I shall be able to do in that regard. I am sending that letter to Devchandbhai. I shall let you know if I get a reply from him. And if I can do anything in the matter, I certainly will.

Vandemataram from

M.K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5835. Also C.W. 3058. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
DEAR LORD LOTHIAN,

My deepest thanks for your long letter\(^1\). I appreciate the patient effort you are making to convince me of the correctness of your advice. With much of what you say I wholly agree. The question of office-acceptance will now be finally decided at the forthcoming meeting of the Working Committee of the Congress. The Viceroy has just said\(^2\) the last word about the Government's attitude. I admit that it is an improvement upon the first speech\(^3\) on the situation by Lord Zetland.

Whatever the decision of the Working Committee may be—and you will have known it before this reaches you—what I would like to write upon is the fundamental difference between the colonies and India. So far as I know, the colonists were armed and knew the use of arms. The vast majority of thirty millions of voters here are unarmed, do not know the use of arms and perhaps would not like to be armed even if they were left absolutely free to do so—such is Indian culture. Though, therefore, I have pinned my faith to working along constitutional lines, I have, as every Indian has, either to think out a programme whereby every adult can be trained in the use of arms or find a substitute. At my instance, the Congress has for the last eighteen years attempted to experiment with the substitute called non-violent non-co-operation, civil resistance, etc. For myself I have rejected the idea of achieving freedom by the use of arms in the last resort and I have accepted as its final substitute the use of non-violence in every shape and form. The use of arms is not an unexplored field, that of non-violence has possibilities of infinite exploration. Hence my eagerness to discover a formula whereby, consistently with the Congress creed of complete independence, office-acceptance may be possible. But I must confess that I have not the faith that you have in the possibility of the existing Act to expand into an instrument of complete freedom. On the contrary, I believe in common with the vast majority of educated Indians that it is incapable of giving India what it wants and the sooner it is replaced by something of Indian design the better.

\(^1\) Vide footnote on “Letter to Manilal and Sushila Gandhi”, 21-6-1937
\(^2\) Vide Appendix “Viceroy’s Speech”, 21-6-1937.
\(^3\) Vide Appendix “Lord Zetland’s Speech”, 6-5-1937.
Of course, the Act does contemplate militarization of India at a snail's pace and therefore it is not so repugnant to those overwhelming numbers of Indians who want India to develop military power as it is to me who would if I could take India along a wholly different route.

Now, if you think that my reasoning is erroneous and that it is possible for India to attain her full height without the back-ground of either military training or of non-violent training, you should come to India during next autumn if only to teach me. In any case, if the Congress decides upon office-acceptance it will be the beginning of real difficulty in one way and your coming is likely to be helpful. If the Congress decides otherwise, you will perhaps yourself feel impelled to come here in order that you might not leave a single stone unturned to avert a calamity which it would be if the rule of the sword replaces the rule of the electorate, that is, democracy, however, incipient it might be.

Yours sincerely,

From a copy: C.W. 6386 a. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9852

451. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

June 24, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I got your letter. I read also your letter to Mahadev. The latter I consider an excellent letter. You have been able to describe very vividly the struggle going on in your heart. Your decision is of course good. If you have determination, and indeed you have it, any college will be good for you. But compared to Bombay, Bangalore is superior because there you will have more freedom. The fact that the Principal has sent his son to Bombay counts little with me, for in doing so he has merely put a higher value on Bombay degrees. For you such value has, and I think should have, secondary importance.

It is not the university that brings credit to a brilliant student but the latter that brings credit to a university. There is a small village in England named Louth. Tennyson was a pupil in that school and because of that even today the teachers of that school take great pride in it. In the same way you should bring glory to the college in Bangalore. What pains me particularly when I see people going to England or the West is that those who seek prestige for themselves by going to the West gain none, but, of course, they certainly raise the value of Western degrees. One can understand that those who seek prestige do not gain any, for many who hold Western degrees remain unemployed. But anyone who has ability, whether he holds a degree from the East or from the West, does acquire prestige. The late Dr. Tribhovandas was only an L.M.&S. He used to charge Rs. 1,000 a day as fee. He was unrivalled both as physician and surgeon. And in the art of restoring a nose that had been cut off, he has had no equal anywhere in the world. The chief reason was that at that time dacoits had made it a custom to cut the noses of high officials. Had Tribhovandas been diffident he would have called in some English doctor in such cases. But being courageous he held the knife and the needle in his own hands and restored the noses in all or almost all cases. If a man is honest, he is sure to become proficient through experience. I have written all this to strengthen you in your decision, for people will continue to put before you all sorts of arguments that might persuade you to revise your decision. Your aim is to acquire knowledge. It is not as if after getting a degree one need gain no further knowledge. It is possible that real knowledge is acquired only after getting a degree because that has been the experience of most people. Regarding your lodging and boarding make whatever arrangement you think will suit you from the point of view of health and studies.

I did get Saraswati’s letter and had also replied to her. It is likely that the reply might have been delayed.

There is one sentence in your letter, "Some of the manners of the people over here seem very uncivilized." Who are those people?

Ba, Kanu and Kusum Desai are expected here the day after tomorrow.

It is cool now. The first rains of the season have not been satisfactory.

Most probably Amtul Salaam will have a tonsillitis operation the day after tomorrow.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7324. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi
452. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

June 24, 1937

CHI. KANAIYO,

I got your letter. I will wait for you after the time limit you have fixed.

A sister from Madras had come here the day before yesterday and left the same day. Pyarelal says that you know her. Her name is Soundaram. She had also brought her vina, which was worth Rs. 150. The chief reason of its high value was its decoration. Without the decoration it would be worth only Rs. 80. But what I like most was her mastery in playing on the vina. She sang, too, to the accompaniment of the vina. Her voice is sweet. During all that time I remembered you. She said she would come again some other time.

You have not followed my questions about book-keeping. That only means that you have not understood the technical terms of book-keeping. So to that extent you probably do not know book-keeping. Show that letter to Narandas. If he does not understand my terms, then I will have to admit that I do not know the technical language of book-keeping and, therefore, could not use it correctly. Narandas knows book-keeping thoroughly well. I learnt just enough of it for my legal practice, with my own effort, and it is possible, therefore, that I do not know the technical terms as well as an expert in book-keeping. In short, what I had asked from you was a summary, or ‘abstract’ as it is called in English, of the different accounts in the ledger. If neither the register nor the abstracts are available here, we cannot know what the credit or debit balances are in the different accounts. And such occasions are bound to arise when it becomes necessary to know the figures. Do complete the accounts. While you are there, try to perfect your knowledge of book-keeping.

Similarly you may increase your knowledge of music as much as you wish to. You are doing well in planning to go to Chorwad a little earlier.

Amtul Salaam’s amount has been received. I see that you go to bed at 11. I consider it too late. Everybody should form the habit of going to bed by 10. But you should of course follow the convenience of others there.
I was very glad to learn that Purushottam was keeping good health.

Ba will most probably come the day after tomorrow. At present the house here is full. Jamnalal's bungalow having been completed, everybody is accommodated comfortably.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II

453. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

June 24, 1937

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Enclosed is Deka's letter. I wrote to you immediately after meeting him. You must have got that letter¹. Convey your decision to him. My idea was that you can call Deka for mazdoor seva² whenever you want to. If you send for him for sundry other tasks mazdoor seva will suffer. Deka himself holds that if he has to go to Delhi, and he would like to do so, he has to have some training at the Mazdoor Sangh. Now the course has to be decided between you and Deka. I remember having written to you on these lines.

I hope you are keeping well. You were to write about the Narela Ashram; do write when you can find time.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a phototat of the Hindi: G.N. 2448

454. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGAON, WARDHA,

June 25, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I am glad you are better. Here is Dr. Dharmavir's letter. If he thinks that sleeping in the open there is injurious, you should not insist on sleeping outside. It is well to do as he says. The liver, the

¹ Vide “Letter to Brijkrishna Chandiwala”, 15-5-1937
² Labour welfare work spleen and the glands should be dealt with and set right. What is your food now? Do you get good fruit and vegetables? Have you got rid of the cold?

Ba returns tomorrow. We are a growing family.
Govind¹ has gone to Kakasaheb. He wanted some such thing.
This is being written just before the morning prayer.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6377. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9853

455. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

June 25, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I return Sultan Ahmed's letter². It is good. I do not think it is possible to change the name of the Sammelan³. I got the definition put right with difficulty. It is the spirit that needs to be changed and not the name which is ancient. I hope you will not commit yourself to anything that may embarrass you or the officials of the Sammelan. Have you read any of the annual addresses of the Sammelan Presidents? Do, if you get the time.

No more today as this is being written just after the morning prayer for parnerker to take it to Wardha.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original; C.W. 3791. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6947

¹ A boy from Sevagram whom Mirabehn was training for Gandhiji's service
² In his letter to the addressee Sultan Ahmed had written that while Gandhiji was trying to propagate the common language spoken in the North, both the Muslims and the Hindus were trying to introduce into it difficult words and phrases from Arabic and Sanskrit creating another communal problem.
³ Hindi Sahitya Sammelan
456. LETTER O JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

June 25, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

Just received your statement on the Frontier policy. Khan Saheb and I have read it. I like it very well. I wonder if the Spanish bombing and the British are exactly alike. How has the extent of the British damage been known? What has been the ostensible reason given for the British bombing? Don't smile or be angry that I do not know these things so well as you do. I can learn very little from the little I see of the newspapers. But don't trouble to answer my questions. I shall follow the reactions to your statement. Maybe these will throw some light. And in any case you will fill in the gaps when we meet. I hope the Maulana will come. But even if he cannot I would like you to hold on to the date. Let us have the three quiet days.

Hope Indu is well.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Khan Saheb wants you to see the enclosed.

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

457. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

June 25, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter just now. Why do you worry? You will have done your duty if you go on nursing to the best of your ability. Our life is not in our hands. Tell Harshubabu on my behalf that he should not worry about the body but meditate on Rama. He will do as He wills. I will be satisfied if I have a postcard from time to time.

Ba will come on the 30th. Shantabehn1 who was at Khedi has arrived. She will stay here. After some time she will leave for England.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3503

1 An Englishwoman who was working in the office of Gramodyog Sangh at Maganwadi. Vide also the following two items.
458. LETTER TO RAMESHWARADAS BIRLA

June 25, 1937

Bhai Rameshwadas,

I got your letter. As regards the money I have had the intimation from Bachharaj and Co. Almost a lakh will go to the Village Industries Association. What you give for my personal expenses is of course additional.

I used to obtain through Braj Mohan passages in cargo-boats for the European workers bound for England. He is not there at present. Whom should I write to in Calcutta? Or will you yourself enquire if an Englishwoman can be accommodated in one of the cargo-boats?

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 8032. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

459. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR N. MORARJEE

June 25, 1937

Chh. Shantikumar,

An English woman worker is to be sent to England to her mother. Do you have in mind any cargo-boat or any ordinary boat in which she can be sent as soon as possible? What will be the fare? Ghanshyamdas had sent two women in a cargo-boat free of charge. He is not here. Still, I have inquired through Rameshwardas. He may not have any resources at the moment or may have none at all. Hence I am troubling you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4726. Courtesy: Shantikumar N. Morarjee

460. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

June 25, 1937

Chh. Mahadev,

All right. I will not go there to see Amtul Salaam. Your presence will be enough. I am not scared. I wanted to come merely for my satisfaction. Let me know the result immediately.

1 Vide the preceding item.
Bablo has written a beautiful letter. I will write to him afterwards.
Will you please detain Bachu for Amtul Salaam?

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
If you need more help, shall I send someone from here? Prepare the envelopes for the letters to Shantikumar and Rameshwar there.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11523

461. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

June 25, 1937

BELOVED DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,1

I got your note. Mahadev tells me that the doctor would get nervous if I were to go there. So I will not go. I am not worried. Be brave. If necessary I will go over and see you after the operation. Please send me a report yourself. The letter from Kanti is being dispatched today. Read it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 382

462. LETTER TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

June 25, 1937

CHI. KAMALNAYAN,

Mr. Kallenbach has been bothering me to let him send you a gift at the time of your marriage. He wants to spend more than Rs. 100, and spoke of £ 25. I would not hear of it. He then asked me what he should give. I suggested books. "Which books?", he asked. I couldn't decide. Tell me what books you would like to have?

Reply by return of post.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3056

1 The superscription is in Urdu.
463. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 25, 1937

CHI. SUMANGAL,

Your condition is pathetic. I have no grouse against your literary pursuits but they should be secondary to physical labour. Tolstoy says that his mind became pure only after he started doing eight hours of physical work every day and only then did his writing become pure. Your case is the reverse of this. You appear to have no interest at all in doing physical labour. That is why I have been dissuading you from joining me. You do not need to fast. You must be at a place where there is some activity or other going on. Only when you have worked hard and have tired yourself out physically should you pursue literary activity if at all.

Please consider this and write to me. If in the end we decide to have you here, the work here will be regarding the charkha, No salary.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

464. UNFORTUNATE BUT INDISPENSABLE

The Secretary of the local Harijan Sevak Sangh of Jamshedpur applied to a lady among others for a subscription and he received the following reply:

It is some time since your letter of 5th February appealing for funds was received by me.

I appreciate the good work your Association is doing at Jamshedpur, but, on principle, I cannot bring myself to send any subscription to any Association that calls itself 'Harijan' just because of the interpretation put upon that word in this country.

I am convinced that as long as any member of a society is classified by a name that savours of inferiority, that section of society will never be raised. I would abolish from our vocabulary the words 'Harijan', 'Depressed Class', and all such other appellations of the same meaning, which are used to distinguish people who should never be separately described from their fellow beings.

The objection raised by the lady is not new. The adoption of the name 'Harijan' was not a matter of choice, it was one of compulsion.
So long as the suppressed classes exist, it will be necessary to have some designation for them. Thus Indians in South Africa were popularly distinguished from the rest as 'cooilies' or 'sammies'. This was resented by them. Protests were made with more or less effect not against a distinguished name but against a name which in itself carried reproach and signified inferiority. So ultimately they came to be classified as Indians as they should have been from the beginning. Even thus were untouchables called by various names denoting reproach and inferiority. The Government officers have devised names such as 'depressed', 'backward'. Now they are known as 'scheduled classes'. For the reformers, the name 'Harijan' was suggested by someone who belonged to the suppressed classes. And that name has been adopted by the Harijan Sevak Sangh, being in its meaning absolutely free from reproach and even fitting in the sense that the despised of man are the dear ones of God, which is what 'Harijan means. What, therefore, is possible and is being done is to remove the last trace of inferiority, but it is not possible to do away with a special name for those whose inferiority is abolished even from the hearts of caste Hindus, so long as the necessity for knowing the liberated ones from the rest exists. I hope, therefore, that the objecting lady will recognize the inevitability of a separate designation for the suppressed class, but appreciate the fact that the word chosen by the Sangh has absolutely no reproach about it, and therefore give her subscription and become an active helper in a cause than which none can be found worthier.

Harijan, 26-6-1937

465. ARE THERE DIFFERENT OATHS?

On reading my article on 'Religious Oath and Non-religious', a Quaker friend wrote to a common friend who has passed on the letter to me. I copy the letter below:

"It appears to me that Mr. Gandhi is dealing with two quite distinct questions in this article. I wholly agree with his answer to one of them as, with due respect, I wholly disagree with the other . . . . I agree wholly with him that a Congressman need not worry over the propriety of the oath.

2. But the Mahatma's subtle mind is too much for me when he draws distinctions between religious and non-religious oaths. At any rate we simple

1 Vide "Religious Oath and Non-Religious", 22-5-1937
2 Only extracts are reproduced here."
Quakers look at it thus: Religion is man’s search for God, and his reference of all life to the life of God. An affirmation, or promise, to tell the truth and do the truth, is a reference of the self back to the life of God, for Truth is a part of God’s essential nature. Therefore all such promises are religious acts. The Quakers object to oaths, because they claim to be religious people, that is, people who fear God, and intend to observe the truth without swearing in the name of God. As you know, after a long struggle and much suffering they obtained the right to affirm instead of swearing. But affirmation or oath, both are for us religious acts; unless by religion one means something apart from the most part of life. I should not agree that a Court of Law or a Parliament was something apart from religion for a religious man. . . . We, Quakers, are clear that all life is religious for the religious man, and have no particular use for a segregated ‘religion’ . . . .

Cuttings from two Indian newspapers criticizing the article have also been sent to me.

What I find after reading the letter and the cuttings is that it is very difficult for me to make myself fully intelligible especially when I write on anything out of the way. The only thing for me is to endeavour to elucidate my point so long as there is anything to elucidate.

I can see no subtlety about my argument. But I see the clearest possible distinction between the oath or affirmation that a person takes before a court of law, a legislature and before his God perhaps daily at the time of rising and retiring. They have different functions, different incidences.

The Quaker friend in my opinion surrenders the whole position when he agrees with me in my interpretation of the legislative or constitutional oath. His quarrel is purely over my designation of oaths. If my designation is faulty, I would accept any other which succinctly shows the distinction I have pointed out and which the friend accepts by implication.

The mere linguistic meaning of the legislative oath is wholly different from the meaning that the law and tradition have given to it. One not knowing the law and the tradition will certainly have the objection that Shri Shivprasad Gupta has raised. Mere grammatical or linguistic meaning of a sentence divorced from its context and history has often been found erroneous and sometimes positively mischievous. Therefore, knowing the context of the legislative oath, I had no hesitation in saying that there was not the slightest strain on or violation of truth when I suggested that a Congressman could, consistently with his creed of complete independence and his resolution of wrecking the Constitution Act, take the oath required by law shortly described by me as legislative.

And here again my statement must be interpreted in its context and historical perspective. A Congressman entering the Legislature will strive for gaining complete independence working within the law, and so will he try to wreck the Act working within the law. If he can work for its amendment, he can quite properly work for its repeal, i.e., wrecking. Indeed his deadlocks also will be within the law. And he won't be frightened or hang his head low if his opponent twits him by saying that he is after all working the Constitution. He will not, must not, care so long as he knows his mind, hides nothing and is downright honest in all his dealings.

Of course I agree with the Quaker friend that for a religiously or spiritually minded man religion or rather religious attitude pervades all his thoughts, words and acts.

But having said this I must adhere to my statement that for the multitudinous purposes of life we find it necessary to distinguish our activities as social, political, mercantile, religious, etc. These divisions can be extended almost to infinity. But the seeker of God will apply his godly attitude even to his sports if he finds time for them.

_Harijan_, 26-6-1937

466. _LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR_

_June 26, 1937_

I forgot to write to you about one thing. You referred to Devdas's third child. I agree with you that he should stop now. I must not write, you can, perhaps, must. I have no doubt he knows. I do not know who is greater sinner. They passionately love each other. And then love expresses itself in the painful fashion. I suppose they cannot help themselves. I know what an effort it is to exercise self-restraint when physical love is let loose. Duty separated us for long intervals. That gave me time for thinking and disciplining myself. After the appearance of Devdas I had fairly conquered the animal in me. Intense public activity of an exacting nature cast upon me a burden which I could not carry at the same time as making additions to the family. Thus did nature help me. And my greatest good luck was that in Ba I had a companion who never tempted me, so far as I can recall. Such is not the case with the present generation. I do not know that it was better in my generation. Ba is perhaps an exceptional woman. So you see I have boundless charity for Devdas. And yet how I wish the terrible burden on Lakshmi could be removed. Devdas and Lakshmi almost make out a case for the use of contraceptives. And yet I know that it will be a fatal conclusion to draw from this hard case. If they cannot restrain themselves Lakshmi must suffer. Now you have all the data, if you have self-confidence enough, to write to Devdas.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai's Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

467. LETTER TO C.A. TULPULE

SEGAON (WARDHA),
June 26, 1937

MY DEAR TULPULE,

You are quite correct in writing to me as you have done. Other friends also have been writing to me and letters such as yours will help me to gauge public opinion. For, it is one thing for me to hold a theoretical opinion, another thing to base it on practical experience.

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

SHRI C.A. TULPULE, M.L.A.
TILAK ROAD
POONA

From the original: C.W. 2897. Courtesy: C.A. Tulpule

468. LETTER TO T. S. SUBRAHMANYAN

June 26, 1937

MY DEAR SUBRAHMANYAN,

If it is the inner voice that has spoken to you the conclusion you have come to is undoubtedly right and you will feel daily stronger, no matter what pecuniary or other difficulties you might have to face. My hope is that you will lose yourself to the uttermost in the activities which are born out of a contemplation of and are sure signs of ahimsa, i.e., khadi and other village industries, temperance, Harijan service, communal unity, etc. These must be pursued in a scientific spirit. And when they are so pursued they tax all our energies. At the same time they give the keenest satisfaction and draw out the very best in us.

yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

SHRI T. S. SUBRAHMANYAN
PLEADER
BELLARY

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
469. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

June 26, 1937

BELOVED DAUGHTER AMTUL SALAAM.¹

I hope you passed the night peacefully. Though I am here my mind is there with you. Don’t exert yourself to write to me. Send an oral message if you wish.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 383

470. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

June 26, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

Read this letter and let me have your guidance.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7694

471. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

June 26, 1937

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your letter. I have written to Ramjibhai. If what you say is correct, it is painful. But if the sentiments you have expressed in your letter to him are mere politeness, they do not become a satyagrahi. A satyagrahi’s language is bound to be extremely courteous, but that courtesy is also full of truth. You say: “Seeing your step, new khadi workers like me in Kathiawar lose heart. If you still think over the matter and change your opinion, please do so and reassure workers like me.” You cannot be called a new khadi worker at all. And a khadi worker like you would not lose courage because of a co-worker’s fall but would become more firm, would dedicate himself more whole-heartedly and cultivate greater efficiency. But if you have really lost courage because of Ramjibhai’s giving up of khadi work, what you say is the bare truth. In that case, however, both you and I will have to think where you stand. For there are bound to be a good many hurdles in our khadi and other activities and, if our faith does not spring from within but is dependent on others, all our activities will fail. There must be a few whose faith would be more immovable even than the Himalayas and would remain steadfast till death. What a lecture I have given you on the beautiful letter you wrote to Ramjibhai!

¹ The superscription is in Urdu in the source.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

472. A GREAT EXPERIMENT

The Ahmedabad Labour Union has of late started a great experiment which is likely to prove of great interest and importance to all labour organizations. The essence of the experiment consists in training its members to a supplementary occupation in addition to their principal occupation in the mills so that in the event of a lock-out, strike or loss of employment otherwise, they would always have something to fall back upon instead of being faced with the prospect of starvation. A mill-hand’s life is ever full of vicissitudes. Thrift and economy no doubt provide a sort of remedy and it would be criminal to neglect them. But the savings thus made cannot carry one far, seeing that the vast bulk of our mill labourers are always struggling on the margin of bare subsistence. Moreover it would never do for a working man during strike or unemployment to rest idly at home. There is nothing more injurious to his morale and self-respect than enforced idleness. The working class will never feel secure or develop a sense of self-assurance and strength unless its members are armed with an unfailing subsidiary means of subsistence to serve as a second string to their bow in a crisis.

The idea of a subsidiary occupation for the mill-hands was first conceived by me during the eventful twenty-three days’ strike of the Ahmedabad mill hands in the year 1918. It occurred to me then that if the strike was to be successful the mill-hands must have an occupation that would maintain them wholly or partly. They must not rely upon doles. During the strike many of them were employed on unskilled labour. It was then that I mooted my suggestion to teach mill-hands a subsidiary occupation. But my suggestion remained a dead letter till the next strike came. A sort of a beginning was made then. But it was difficult to bring into being all of a sudden an effective organization for teaching subsidiary occupations. With the end of the second strike died also the effort to find and teach suitable occupations.

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Harijanbandhu, 27-6-1937. This is a translation by Pyarelal.

An organized and systematic effort is now being made by the Labour Union in that direction. Mill-hands are being taught to select occupations which they can practise in their leisure hours at home and which would give them substantial relief in times of unemployment. These are ginning, cleaning, carding and spinning of cotton, weaving, tailoring, soap and paper making, type-setting, etc.

I hold that a working knowledge of a variety of occupations is to the working class what metal is to the capitalist. A labourer’s skill is his capital. Just as the capitalist cannot make his capital fructify without the co-operation of labour, even so the working man cannot make his labour fructify without the co-operation of capital. And if both labour and capital have the gift of intelligence equally developed in them and have confidence in their capacity to secure a fair deal, each at the hands of the other, they would get to respect and appreciate each other as equal partners in a common enterprise. They need not regard each other as inherently irreconcilable antagonists. But the difficulty is that whilst today capital is organized and seems to be securely entrenched, labour is not. The intelligence of the working man is cramped by this soulless, mechanical occupation which leaves him little scope or chance to develop his mind. It has prevented him from realizing the power and full dignity of his status. He has been taught to believe that his wages have to be dictated by capitalists instead of his demanding his own terms. Let him only be organized along right lines and have his intelligence quickened, let him learn a variety of occupations, and he will be able to go about with his head erect and never be afraid of being without means of sustenance.

It is the grossest of superstitions for the working man to believe that he is helpless before the employers. The effort of the Labour Union in Ahmedabad is to dispel this superstition in a concrete manner. Its experiment, therefore, ought to be welcomed by all concerned. Success will depend on an inflexible determination on the part of the Labour Union to follow up the good beginning that has been made, with unflagging perseverance. It must have the right sort of instructors who can arouse among the workers an intelligent interest in their work. A handicraft plied merely mechanically can be as cramping to the mind and soul as any other pursuit taken up mechanically. An unintelligent effort is like a corpse from which the spirit has departed.

_Harijan_, 3-7-1937

473. MY NOTES

IS IT THEN NO MISTAKE?

Many people seem to have been hurt on reading my note entitled “My Mistake”. Of course readers of _Harijanbandhu_ are all Gujaratis. But Gujaratis are scattered in all Provinces and among them those who are alert know the customs and practices of the people in whose midst they live. I have received letters from such persons residing in places as far off as Malabar, Tamilnadu, Andhradesh and Karnataka. All of them write that my presumption was correct. In all these Provinces, amongst Hindus both high and low so-called, not only do marriages take place between a maternal uncle and his niece (sister’s daughter) but these marriages are highly esteemed in most cases. One correspondent asked for a lawyer’s opinion. The lawyer wrote back that not only are such marriages customary in the South, but that they are also clearly sanctioned by law.

Thus, although the correction made by Professor Thakore does not to a certain extent hold good, the manner in which I drew my conclusion was nevertheless faulty. The fact that what I had presumed happens to be true with regard to Hindu society, may be regarded as an accident. From the fact that the children of a brother and sister are permitted to marry, I had no right to conclude that a girl could marry her maternal uncle. Hence Professor Thakore has indeed done me a service.

I can understand the love of the gentlemen who have written to me having regard for my prestige. I thank them for having informed me and I also compliment them for ascertaining the customs and practices of the Provinces in which they happen to reside.

Because such marriages are acceptable in the South, no one should conclude that the attempt to make them acceptable in places where they are prohibited, will be welcomed. The field for marriages is so wide that where it is prohibited among relatives, there is hardly

\[1 \text{ Vide “My Mistake”, 6-6-1937} \] any need for going against the prohibition. The reforms which Hindu society needs are those concerning the breaking of inter-caste barriers. These restrictions are truly detrimental to social progress.
Hence it would be a real reform to permit inter-provincial and inter-caste marriages.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 27-6-1937

474. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 27, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

It is a mere sluit which collects and discharges rain water. It therefore fills as rapidly as it discharges. there was hardly 1/2 inch rain, not violent either. But it was enough to fill the sluit rapidly. You know the sluit. It is like a belt round Segaon village. The idea was to bridge it. The bridge was made but the rushing water destroyed the earth-work in front of and behind the bridge. The water might easily have destroyed Khandu’s and Prahlad’s houses if the rain had continued¹. Therefore at considerable expense the sluit is reduced to its original state. But there is no rain worth speaking about. And Bombay had already 30 inches!

Ba returns tomorrow. Spinning by the women has restarted. Govind has gone to Kakasaheb at his own instance.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6388. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G. N. 9854.

¹ The source has “contained”.
475. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI
SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 27, 1937

CHI. ANAND, VIDYA,

I have your letter.

Vidya must quietly stay there, whether she gets well or not. You cannot find a better place than Bhowali. It is good for the child also. Both of you should study the Ramayana and understand it properly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: C. W. 11067. Courtesy: Anand T. Hingorani

476. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

JUNE 27, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

You have mentioned some letter. I don’t remember it. If you had asked any question in it, please repeat it. It can be said that now you have sufficient experience of Kanaiyo. If you have been able to form any opinion, please let me know. What is his state of mind? Please write whatever you would like to say about him so that it may be of help to me.

Write to me in detail about your experience of Kamala, too.

Your letter about khadi was very good.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8529. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

477. LETTER TO MANUBEHN S. MASHRUWALA
SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 27, 1937

CHI. MANUDI.

I had your letter. You should find time for reading and practising on the sitar. Ba and Kano are coming tomorrow. Khan Saheb and Mehrtaj were occupying Ba’s room. Kusum Desai also is coming. Now the house will be full. You had rain there but here we have had none.

Blessings to you all from
BAPU

SHRI MANUBEHN
C/O VORA HARIDAS VAKHATCHAND
BEHIND HIGH SCHOOL.
RAJKOT C.S., KATHIAR

478. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

June 27, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

A fruit famine has now overtaken us here. Today Mohanlal has been asked to send some particular fruit. We have run out of dates. Do you receive boxes of dates regularly? What can I give to Khan Saheb? Have you written about honey? If not, write at once and tell them to send it promptly. Did you write to Kaleshwar Rao? I had asked for chikoo and sweet and sour lemon from that place.

Yes, let somebody go at 4.30 to receive Ba. If she does not arrive by that train, then she will come by the next train.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

A temperature chart of Balkrishna is enclosed. Show it to Amtul Salaam and send whatever medicine she gives. He has enough to last only for today. Send back the chart also.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11524
479. LETTER TO MIRZA ISMAIL
WARDHAGANI,
June 28, 1937

DEAR SIR MIRZA,

I appreciate your letter¹. I must not anticipate the Working Committee’s decision. I know it will tax all its Patriotic spirit. I am in letter and in spirit praying for God’s guidance during those days.

My kindest regards to you, Lady Mirza, Hamayun and the rest of the family.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 2180. Also from a copy: G.A. Natesan Papers.
Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

480. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI
June 28, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Yesterday we had some visitors here. They had brought 112 mangoes from the bazaar in Wardha. They were excellent. The price was one and a half rupees for 120. After they had left 112 mangoes, Chhotelal brought some more. Today apples and rose-apples have arrived, and so I shall be able to pull on for some time now.

Send two dozen sour lemons with Janba.²

Ba may stay on for today if she wants, but it would be better that she returns while the sky is clear. However, she may do as she pleases.

Congratulations to Kusum. Khan Saheb is having fever. Tell Ba that Khan Saheb and Mehrta have been allotted her room. Has she any objection? Khan Saheb is impatient to shift. He may have even shifted to Mira Kutir. I am passing your article after revising it.³ A copy

¹ The letter, dated June 26, read “... I believe that it would be a great disservice to the country and a great disservice to itself, if Congress were to refuse the invitation extended to it in such cordial terms by the Viceroy. It is by accepting office and working, that is, by taking charge of the machinery that Congress can achieve its purpose more rapidly and satisfactorily....

² An errand-boy of the Ashram at Wardha

³ Vide “Interview to Capt. Strunk”, 3-7-1937 should be sent to Captain. I am sending two more in addition. The rest by noon with Janba.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11525.

481. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[June 28, 1937]

CHI. MAHADEV,

Come tomorrow. It would be better if Ba comes tomorrow but she may do as she likes. Khan Saheb has vacated the room. I am sending the articles. Buy English water-proof. There are other ways no doubt, but don’t bother about them. Enclosed is a letter for Kamalnayan. Go and see him off. Is there no other mail today?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. N. 11520

482. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
June 29, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

your drawing is good. Do continue the practice. It would be good recreation for you.

Dr. Dharmavir again warns me that you should hasten slowly. He is confident of effecting a radical cure.

Ba has just come in with Kusum Desai and Kanam. She has a little bit of a fracture in her left foot.

The rains set in properly yesterday. The weather is now quite cool. Wind is blowing strong.

Khan Saheb occupies your hut. He has a little fever. Balvantsinha and Parnerker have gone to buy cows. Three will presently go dry.

1 Vide the following item.
2 Vide the preceding item.
3 The addressee used to send small sketches along with her letters to Gandhiji.
My goat is giving very little milk. So we have to procure a goat, too. Thus the family grows all round.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6389. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G. N. 9855.

483. LETTER TO BHARATAN KUMARAPPA

June 29, 1937

MY DEAR BHARATAN,

I had a chat with Fischer about Rao the dairyman. Others have also talked to me. Parnerkar went to him to give him instructions and examine the ghee. Rao seems to be no worker. He talks too much and nonsense. If he is what Fischer and others describe him to be, he should be sent away.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10120

484. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

June 29, 1937

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

I have your letter. I do not think it is necessary for you to leave the work there as long as you are mentally satisfied and also something is accomplished. I have suggested your leaving Nepal only when you are no longer interested in the work there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 6552

1 Vide “Letter to Tulsi Maher”, 4-6-1937
MY DEAR IDIOT,

I knew Menckel\(^1\) was a crank but did not know that he was a fool. Of course you are bound to report to me any irregularity in your health even though I may be able to do nothing. Garlic should never induce loose stools. Dal or some protein or starch food is at bottom.

Do you know Dharmavir? What do you think of him? I quite see that I must not pile any new work on you even though it be a letter to be written to anyone.

Are you not an idiot? You have said nothing new in suggesting that the common language may be written in either script, Devanagari or Persian. You will read my credo\(^2\) in Harijan. But the name Hindi will never be changed. You might as well change your own name to please people! Hindi is the original name. It is the utmost one can do to adopt Hindustani violence in the air and this demand for the change of name not by an individual but by an institution is violence which ought not to be submitted to. There is no logic or reason in it. How can I ask an old literary association\(^3\) to change its name without an overwhelmingly just cause? Do you see the point?

Parkinson’s letter is good.

The rains have set in properly now. Ba came in yesterday bringing in Kusum—an old Ashram inmate. The weather is alternately cool and warm. When you come do bring your mosquito net, though there are not more than the usual number. I do not want you to run any avoidable risk.

Love.

ROBBERS

[PS.]

I have told Balkrishna that you have a teacher for Sanskrit,

From the original: C.W. 3792. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6948

\(^1\) The source has “Mencken”.
\(^2\) Vide “Hindi v. Urdu”, 3-7-1937
\(^3\) Hindi Sahitya Sammelan; vide also “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 25-6-1937
486. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

June 30, 1937

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

I send herewith a postcard from Bhai Soni Balji Talsi. I have not followed what he wants to say in it. I have replied to him that he can get no money from here. He should not give up his profession. If he gets any spare time after doing his work, he may give some of it to service and do what you ask him to do.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4027

487. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

June 30, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

The doctor’s explanation seems satisfactory. What weight need we attach to Shankar’s allegations? He has always been like that. You do not seem to have read the letter I wrote to him. I have severely reprimanded him, though I have not written all that you said. I will write that, too. Write to Shantikumar and tell him that I will decide now. You can send for a flask from Bombay. How can you get an exactly similar One? The goat seems to be proving a costly affair. I am in a fix. I am sending the letters.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Since you also would be writing to Kakalbhai, I am not closing the envelope. Received Gokulbhai’s postcard. I forgot to tell you. Write to him and tell him that he can certainly fix for the 10th.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11526
488. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGAON WARDHA,
June 30, 1937

CHI. NIMU,

I got your letter last evening. I am not thinking about you just now. I have no doubt at all in my mind about the rightness of Ramdas going to S.A. I can think of no other way of helping him to build up his body. The state of things you describe is dangerous. He should not in any circumstances miss this opportunity of going to S.A. rather than be bed-ridden here. If he can build up his body into a fine state, everything else will get all right. Your duty is to reassure him. If you remain undecided, he will not be able to go anywhere in peace of mind. There is nothing more to say for the moment. Kanam is doing fine as if he had not left the place at all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

489. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

June, 1937

CHI. JAMNALAL,

If you have agreed to pay Rs. 1,000 towards Harjivan's expenses, then please send it by wire. The following is the answer on behalf of the Sangh:

“Writing thousand cover travelling. Regret inability advance loan.”

I understand that you have not given him any assurance about the loan. So I do not see any need for you giving it.

I am sending back Shankar's letter addressed to you. It is good to send him books.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am sending Harjivan's also.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2985
490. TELEGRAM TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

WARDHA,
July 2, 1937

MATHURADAS
CARE STOCKS
BOMBAY

RAMDAS DECIDES GO SOUTH AFRICA. TAKE TWO SECOND-CLASS BERTHS. IF POSSIBLE SECURE JOINT CABIN.

BAPU

From the original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

491. LETTER TO KRISHNACHANDRA

SEGAON,
July 2, 1937

CHI. KRISHNACHANDRA,

The doubt you have raised is extremely pertinent. I cannot say now how I could dictate such a meaningless sentence. Read it as follows: "But it should never be taken that the ancestors of an adharmaja were all dharmaja themselves or that his future progeny will all be dharmaja."

There is no harm in learning and practising hatha yoga for the sake of physical health, but all the instructors are not fully well-versed in it. It has also been my experience that those who do not know the science and techniques of hatha yoga can even cause harm. Moreover, everyone is not capable of performing each and every asana. All this simply means that you must use your discretion in the matter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4283. Also S.G. 59

1 With Herman Kallenbach, a friend from Gandhiji’s South African days, who was on a visit to India at this time to see Gandhiji; vide also “Letter to Mirabehn”, 5-7-1937 to “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi”, 5-7-1937
2 Vide “Letter to Krishnachandra”, 18-6-1937
492. DISCUSSION WITH AN AMERICAN

SEGAON,

[Before July 3, 1937]

GANDHIJI: It involved intensive education, not in the three Rs, but in changed ways of thinking and changed ways of life. To bring about that change in the people's mentality is a Herculean task. But it is such because the way is the non-violent way, the way of persuasion. This method is any day slower than the method of compulsion, but it is also surer and stabler.

AMERICAN: But would it in any way help if the British were to retire? Would you have been better if the British had retired 150 years ago?

I have no doubt. We should begin anew and without at least the political handicap. You talk of the pax Britannica. I do not deny that they have introduced education of a sort, have built schools and colleges, and built an unrivalled railway system. But our difficulty is this, that whereas elsewhere all these things have made the countries prosperous, they have brought about an opposite result here. Not only the wealth of the land but even our intelligence has been drained away. The very life-hope is gone. I will not say that a miracle would happen the moment the British retire. Only we shall begin our history anew. India will then have her destiny in her own hands. And mind you we do not want the British to go, if they will stay as friends and voluntary co-operators.

But why, if they don't want this rule, do they tolerate it? Why is a united will lacking?

There are numerous causes which I cannot go into now. All have their share in it, but the root cause is perhaps indefinable. The will is actively absent today, though indefinitely it is there.

Have the Government reserved to themselves power to overrule the people's will because they think that India is incapable of self-government?

1 This is extracted from "Weekly Letter" by Mahadev Desai, who had reported: "A youthful American was full of questions about the poverty of India, the meaning and reach of the village industries revival programme and the implications of the British rule in India. To one accustomed to quick results, the village reconstruction programme is bound to look a tame affair. But Gandhiji does not hesitate to tell all such people as he does our own people, that the programme is a Herculean task and takes a Herculean resolve to achieve it."
I do not think so, nor do I suspect that even the British think so. If they did so, they would not have drawn up this Constitution. No, it is an honest effort to make Provinces autonomous. Otherwise why should they arm an electorate of 30 millions with the power to vote? The honest effort is, however, vitiated by the fact that simultaneous effort is being made to maintain the British connection practically by force. And this they do for exploiting India.

_Harijan_ 3-7-1937

493. INTERVIEW TO CAPT. STRUNK

_Segoan,_

[Before July 3, 1937]

_GANDHIJI:_ What we mean by independence is that we will not live on the sufferance of any people on earth and that there is a big party in India which will die in vindicating this position. But we will not die killing, though we might be killed. It is a novel experiment, I know. Herr Hitler, I know, does not accept the position of human dignity being maintained without the use of force. Many of us feel that it is possible to achieve independence by non-violent means. It would be a bad day for the whole world if we had to wade through blood. If India gains her freedom by a clash of arms, it will indefinitely postpone the day of real peace for the world. History is a record of perpetual wars, but we are trying to make new history, and I say this as I represent the national mind so far as non-violence is concerned. I have reasoned out the doctrine of the sword, I have worked out its possibilities and come to the conclusion that man's destiny is to replace the law of the jungle with the law of conscious love. The aspiration for independence is the aspiration that fires all nations in Europe. But that independence does not exclude voluntary partnership. Imperialistic ambition is inconsistent with partnership.

Capt. Strunk had heard vaguely about Gandhiji's view on machines, and Western civilization, Western medicine, etc. He wanted to know them at first hand.

1_This is extracted from "Weekly Letter" by Mahadev Desai, who had reported: "Capt. Strunk, representative of the official daily newspaper in Germany and a member of Hitler's staff, visited Segaon with a view to investigate conditions in India. He wanted to know the content of independence and how far people of India seriously meant it."_
G. I have said that we cannot accept Western models holusbolus. I do not believe in mechanization of India. I think that rural reconstruction is possible!

STRUNK: Are you likely to change these views after you have gained your objective of independence?

G. No. These views represent my permanent convictions. But my opposition to machinery, railways, etc., does not mean that as soon as we are independent we should uproot all of them. They will be used for the benefit of the nation instead of the strategic military purpose they are principally meant to fulfil today.

S. Sometimes you direct your speech against Western sanitation and Western surgery. What is your future plan with regard to India?

G. I am glad you have asked the question. I have said nothing with regard to Western sanitation. In fact I derived my idea of rural sanitation from Poore, an English doctor, and I have copied it here. But I have spoken against Western medicine which I have called the concentrated essence of black magic. My view springs out of my non-violence, for my soul rebels against vivisection. You do not know that I had very nearly taken the medical line when in order to respect the wishes of my dead father I took up law. But in South Africa I again thought of medicine. When I was told I should have to do vivisection, my soul rebelled against it. Why should, I said, have to practise cruelty on lower animals which I would never practise upon myself? But I do not despise all medical treatment. I know that we can learn a lot from the West about safe maternity and the care of infants. Our children are born anyhow and most of our women are ignorant of the science of bringing up children. Here we can learn a good deal from the West.

But the West attaches an exaggerated importance to prolonging man's earthly existence. Until the man's last moment on earth you go on drugging him even by injecting. That, I think, is inconsistent with the recklessness with which they will shed their lives in war. Though I am opposed to war, there is no doubt that war induces reckless courage. Well, without ever having to engage in a war I want to learn from you the art of throwing away my life for a noble cause. But I do not want that excessive desire of living that Western medicine seems to encourage in man even at the cost of tenderness for subhuman life. However, I like the emphasis the Western medical science places upon prevention of disease.
S. There is so much over-production of intelligence in India and so much educated unemployment. Could not this army of educated young men be utilized by being sent to the villages?

G. That movement has commenced. But it is only in its infancy. And then there is no over-production of intelligence but over-production of degrees. The brain power has not at all increased, only the art of memorizing has been stimulated, and these degrees can't be carted to the villages. Only the brains, if there are any left, can be used. This reading for degrees has deprived us of initiative. It makes us unfit to go to the villages. The mechanical university study deprives us of the desire for originality; years of memorizing causes a fatigue of the mind that makes most of us fit for clerical work. Nevertheless the village movement has come to stay.

As Capt. Strunk prepared to leave, Gandhiji introduced him to Mr. Kallenbach.

G. Here is a live Jew and a German Jew, if you please. He was a hot pro-German during the War.

Capt. Strunk was surprised to see a German Jew sitting there barebodied and in a khadi dhoti.

G. Then I should like to understand from you why the Jews are being persecuted in Germany.

Capt. Strunk tried to explain. So many Jews had taken part during the War and Germany had nothing to say against them. It is the Jews who overran Germany after the War, who ousted Germans from their jobs, and who "guided" the fight against Hitler that were not being tolerated.

S. I personally think we have just overdone it. That's the mistake revolutions always do. Oh, there is such a lot of hate in Europe. And it has reached its climax in Spain. It is cruel, heartless, stupid, inhuman--this Spanish War. It can't be compared with any other war.

_Harijan, 3-7-1937_

494. HINDI v. URDU

A correspondent says a great deal is being written against me in the Urdu Press in regard to my attitude towards Urdu. They even go so far to suggest that though I speak about Hindu-Muslim unity I am the most communally minded of all the Hindus.
I have no desire to defend myself against the suggestion referred to by my correspondent. My life must be my credentials on my attitude regarding the Hindu-Muslim question.

But the Hindi-Urdu question is an evergreen. Though I have expressed my views often enough on this question, they will bear repetition. I shall simply enunciate my belief without advancing any argument in support.

I believe that

1. Hindi, Hindustani and Urdu are words denoting the same language spoken in the North by Hindus and Mussalmans and written in either Devanagari or Persian script;
2. Hindi was the name for this language used both by Hindus and Mussalmans before the word Urdu came to be used;
3. the word Hindustani also came to be used later (the date unknown to me) to denote the same speech;
4. both Hindus and Mussalmans should try to speak the language as understood by the vast mass of the people in the North;
5. at the same time many Hindus and many Mussalmans will persist in using Sanskrit words and Persian or Arabic words respectively and exclusively. This we shall have to bear so long as mutual distrust and aloofness continue. Those Hindus who care to know a certain class of Mussalmans will study Urdu written in Persian script, and similarly those Mussalmans who care to know a certain class of Hindu thought will study Hindi written in Devanagari script;
6. ultimately when our hearts have become one and we all are proud of India as our country, rather than our Provinces, and shall know and practise different religions as derived from one common source, as we know and relish different fruits of the same tree, we shall reach a common language with a common script whilst we shall retain provincial languages for provincial use;
7. the attempt to force one script or one form of Hindi on any Province or district or people is detrimental to the best interest of the country;
8. the common language question should be viewed apart from the religious differences;
9. Roman script cannot and should not be the common script of India. The rivalry can only be between Persian and Devanagari. Apart from its intrinsic merit the latter should be the common script for all India because most of the provincial scripts have their origin in Devanagari and it is for them by far the easiest to learn. At the same time no attempt whatsoever should be made to foist it upon Mussalmans and for that matter on those others who do not know it.

10. I served the cause of Urdu, if it may be distinguished from Hindi, when at Indore\(^1\) the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan at my instance accepted the definition given in Clause I, and when at Nagpur\(^2\) at my instance the Bharatiya Sahitya Parishad accepted the definition and called the common language of inter-provincial intercourse Hindi or Hindustani, thus giving fullest scope to both Mussalmans and Hindus to identify themselves with the effort to enrich the common language and to interpret the best provincial thought in that language.

_Harijan_, 3-7-1937

495. A PLEA FOR THE VILLAGE CART

Shri Ishverbhai S. Amin of Baroda sends me a long note on animal power v. machine power. From it I copy the following relevant portion:\(^3\).

Animal power is not costlier than machine power in fields or short distance work and hence can compete with the latter in most cases. The present-day tendency is towards discarding animal power in preference to machine power.

Take for example a bullock-driven cart, costing Rs. 100 and Rs. 200 for the bullocks. The bullocks can drive the cart at least 15 miles per day with a load of 16 Bengal maunds on rough sandy village roads. This service will cost\(\ldots\) in total Rs. 1/6 per day., A one ton motor-lorry will cost for 15 miles \(\ldots\) Rs. 2/12, i. e., Rs 1/6 per cartload of 16 Bengal maunds \(\ldots\). A motor-lorry may compete when it has to carry loads at a stretch for a long distance on a good metal road, where bullock carts seem too slow and uneconomical\(\ldots\). It is the slowness only which goes against the bullocks cart\(\ldots\). If a farmer has his own cart and travels in it, he has not to spend anything in the form of ready money but uses the produce of his own field in producing power by feeding bullocks. Really grass and grain should be looked upon by the farmer as his petrol, and the cart the motor-lorry, and bullocks the engine converting grass into power. The machine will neither consume grass nor will it yield manure,

---

\(^1\) In April 1935.
\(^2\) In April 1936.
\(^3\) Only extracts are reproduced here.
an article of vast importance. Then the villager has to have his bullocks; in any case he has his grass. And if he has a cart, he is maintaining the village carpenter and the blacksmith; and if he is keeping a cow, he is maintaining a hydrogenation plant converting vegetable oil into solid butter or ghee and also at the same time a bullock-manufacturing machine—thus serving a twofold purpose.

The invasion of the motor-lorry may or may not succeed. It would be wisdom if intelligent workers will study the pros and cons and definitely guide the villagers. Shri Ishverbhai’s note should provoke the thought of all village workers in the direction indicated in it. Harijan, 3-7-1937

496. WHAT SHOULD BE DONE?

The letter, notice and application quoted below1 are well worth reading.

I have omitted names and addresses. The correspondent who has written this letter is devoted to ahimsa. This question is pertinent. One who resists the oppressor is, to some extent, saved; but one who has no strength to resist gets beaten. What should a devotee of ahimsa do in such circumstances? Should the oppressed be advised to hit back or at least take the matter to the court? Both these proceedings are lawful. The law allows a person to defend himself if he is illegally assaulted. He of course has the right to go to the court.

But a devotee of ahimsa will not give such advice. He believes that tit for tat is not the true way of ending oppression in the world. The world has hitherto followed this path; but it has not reduced oppression-only its forms may have changed.

As devotee of ahimsa will advise the oppressed to resort to non-co-operation. No one can be compelled to slave for another. Hence those Harijans who are oppressed should learn to quit the oppressors’ lands. The questions naturally arises: Where should they go after quitting these lands? It is the duty of a Harijan sevak to find some work or other for such helpless Harijans. This should not be difficult. The path of ahimsa is no doubt difficult, but its ultimate result is permanent and beneficial to both. The world has been returning blow for a blow, but it has neither enhanced happiness not removed injustice and oppression. My experience tells me that the only way to remove these is ahimsa.

---

1 Not reproduced here. They described the harassment of Harijan labourers by landlords in villages. The correspondent had asked whether the labourers should be advised to retaliate.
What I have said is the ultimate remedy. But after deciding that blow is no answer for blow and before advising non-co-operation, the non-violent worker will approach the landlords and endeavour to explain to them their duty. It may well be that the landlords may melt a little. Public opinion can be roused against such oppression when the oppressor becomes stubborn and refuses to listen to anyone; then the best remedy is non-co-operation, that is, getting on without him.

It need not be feared that when oppressed Chamars resort to non-co-operation the other castes would join hands with the oppressor. At the moment the question is only of the oppressed. If others do join hands, they too can be taught the lesson of non-co-operation.

[From Hindi]
Harijan Sevak, 3-7-1937

497. TELEGRAM TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJII
WARDHAGANJ,
July 3, 1937

MATHURADAS
CARE STOCKS
BOMBAY

KALLENBACH CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION VACCINATION. HAS NEVER BEEN VACCINATED EXCEPT DURING SCHOOL DAYS. INQUIRE WHETHER DEPOSITED RETURN PASSAGE OR SOME OTHER CONDITION WILL FREE HIM FROM COMPULSORY VACCINATION.

BAPU

From the original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

498. HOLIDAYS

Students have always the problem of how to spend their school vacations. Shri Narnadas Gandhi’s letter quoted below1 tells us how some students of the Rajkot National School spent their vacation.

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had recounted how two students spun 200 hanks during their vacation lasting 62 days. Ten students and one teacher lived a very simple life working amongst six villages near Rajkot. In this group, there were two Harijan boys and one Khoja boy and the response from the
I would look upon this programme as a commendable one. In this way students gained practical knowledge and developed their intellect, as the work they did seems to have been done intelligently and with keen zest. Very often during vacations students spend huge sums on railway fares and travel to distant places and return empty-handed. It will be no small gain if they come to know the villages and the villagers in their own neighbourhood, serve them and carry out propaganda for the charkha and sanitation.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu_, 4-7-1937

499. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

SEGAON,

_July 4, 1937_

CHI. PARIKSHITLAL,

I got your letter regarding the Bhangi brethren. It was good that you wrote. The responsibility of interpreting Thakkar Bapa’s award is going to fall on me. I will see what I can do.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3963. Also C.W. 145. Courtesy: Parikshitlal L. Majmudar

500. LETTER TO MAHADEV DASAI

_July 4, 1937_

CHI. MAHADEV,

I send herewith an article which is ready. Bhansalibhai will stay there for some time. Do take rest. I will manage the things here. The rest [of the material] is getting ready. It will not be necessary to get another copy of the article on toddy since it is from Gujarati and, therefore, _Harijan Sevak_ will not need one.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11528.

villagers was very encouraging. The spinning campaign, in which students did commendable work, was also successful. The expenses incurred during the trip were met by the students themselves out of their earnings through sale of khadi. As a result of this camp, three Harijan boys and one Khoja boy had decided to stay in the school.

1 Vide also “Letter to Vallabhbhai Patel”, 22-7-1937.

501. LETTER TO GULABCHAND JAIN

July 4, 1937

BHAI GULABCHAND,

I have your letter as well as a copy of the correspondence. I have no idea what I can do in this matter. We should be content with whatever can be accomplished by a pure agitation conducted locally.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 7743

502. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGAON,
July 5, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

You will understand absence of letters from me during these days.1 Your drawings I like very well. Hope you are flourishing.

Kallenbach went to Wardha in the morning. Ramdas is accompanying him to South Africa. They embark on Wednesday. Kandu and four or five others come from Varoda to spin. They are being paid by Nalwadi2 according to the Nalwadi scale. They are happy. So you see the seed sown by you has sprouted and may bear ample fruit. No more today.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6390. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9856.

503. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

July 5, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I have no time. But I dare not leave you alone. Therefore this is just to acknowledge your letters. Pyarelal must have written to you. I shall try to send you a wire3 as you desire.

1 Gandhiji was busy with the Congress Working Committee meeting.
2 Nalwadi Ashram of Vinoba Bhave.
3 Vide “Telegram to Amrit Kaur”, 7-7-1937
If the spot near the ear shows signs of oozing, you should give it steam and try ice, if you won’t take the trouble of having an earth bandage. You should bring the steaming apparatus with you when you come. Mine is not with me just now.

Hope your play will go off well if only for the Harijan cause.
Jawaharlal is looking better and cheerful. We had good two days.

Ramdas goes with Kallenbach to South Africa, Kallenbach paying all the expenses. He has plenty of money and my relations with him warrant my accepting his offer.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3793. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6949

504. LETTER TO PREMA BEHN KANTAK

July 5, 1937

CHI. PREMA,

This is just to tell you that a copy of Gitai¹ has been sent by the earlier post. You must have received it. The rest when I get time.

Blessings from
BAPU

505. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

July 5, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

Nowadays I am not regular in correspondence and hence your letter has remained unanswered. But I will write a few lines today at any rate.

I suppose Bal himself must have written to you about his having settled in Karachi.

Kallenbach left for Bombay today. He will sail for South Africa on Wednesday. Ramdas is going with him. These days his health has deteriorated still further. He can hardly eat anything. He, therefore,

¹ Vinoba Bhave’s metrical rendering in Marathi of the Bhagavad Gita agreed to go to South Africa. Kallenbach will come again in November or December for three months. He may stay even longer.
He lived in utmost simplicity till the very last day.

Yesterday Segaon became almost empty. That is, Khan Saheb and Mehrtaj left, and now Kallenbach also has left.

Kusumbehn Desai is here. Amtul Salaam was to be operated upon for tonsillitis. But as there was sugar in the urine, the surgeon postponed the operation. Let us see what happens now. Most probably she will go to Trivandrum after the meeting of the Working Committee.

I hope you are getting on well. Is the food all right? The classes also must have started. I suppose they are starting today.

Did I write to you that there was a crack in Ba’s leg bone?¹ She is confined to bed. There is no fever or any other complication.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

---

506. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 5, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

My comment was not about what you wrote regarding Maulana, but was about the quotation from Maulana’s statement. What you have given is all right, but in such matters that is not enough. It would be a different thing if he himself asked for it to be published. The best course for us is to keep silent.

What you say about Evelyn Underhill is correct.² Today I have sent you ample material, so there is no need for you to overexert yourself.

¹ Vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 28-6-1937
² “In order that the students may learn the proper way to understand and appreciate a religion other than their own”, the addressee had quoted in his “Weekly Letter” for _Harijan_, 10-7-1937, the following from E. Underhill’s book _Worship:_
“All worship was to him sacred, since he believed that in its most degraded forms, among the most ignorant and foolish of worshippers, there has yet been some true
A short article by me is enclosed.
I have had to detain jamba for a letter or two. What else could I do?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11529.

507. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

July 5, 1937

CHI. Manilal-sushila,

I got your letter. This will be carried by Ramdas. You two brothers may discuss the problem and do what you think best. I want to see Ramdas’s physique as strong as it was before. Today I have no time to write more. And where is the need, when two persons are going there just after meeting me?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4865.

Vide “Instructive Figures” 10-7-1937

1 Kallenbach and Ramdas Gandhi.
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

RESOLUTION PASSED AT A.I.C.C. MEETING, DELHI

March 16, 1937

The All-India Congress Committee records its high appreciation of the magnificent response of the country to the call of the Congress during the recent elections and the approval by the electorate of the Congress policy and programme. The Congress entered these elections with its objective of independence and its total rejection of the new Constitution; and the demand for a Constituent Assembly to frame India’s Constitution. The declared Congress policy was to combat the new Act and end it. The electorate has, in an overwhelming majority, set its seal of approval on this policy and programme, and the new Act, therefore, stands condemned and utterly rejected by the people through the self-same democratic process which has been invoked by the British Government, and the people have further declared that they desire to frame their own constitution, based on national independence, through the medium of a Constituent Assembly elected by adult franchise. This Committee, therefore, demands on behalf of the people of India that the new Constitution be withdrawn.

In the event of the British Government still persisting with the new Constitution in defiance of the declared will of the people, the All-India Congress Committee desire to impress upon all Congress members of the Legislatures that their work inside and outside the Legislatures must be based on the fundamental Congress policy of combating the new Constitution and seeking to end it, a policy on the basis of which they sought the suffrage of the electorate and won their overwhelming victory in elections. That policy must inevitably lead to deadlocks with the British Government and bring out still further the inherent antagonism between British Imperialism and Indian Nationalism and expose the autocratic nature of the new Constitution.

THE BACKGROUND

While the British Governments’ reform as proposed in the Government of India Act (1935) had been totally rejected by the Bombay Congress session, at the Working Committee meeting held at Allahabad in April, 1936, the members differed widely in their views on the subject of office-acceptance. In the absence of a consensus, it was decided to review the matter after the elections in February, 1937. When the results of the elections were announced, the Congress had the majority of seats in five Provinces, namely, Madras, the United Provinces, the Central Provinces, Bihar and Orissa. It was the biggest single Party in four Provinces,

1 Vide “Letter to Amritlal T. Nanavati”, 15-3-1937 and “Interview to the Press”, 19-3-1937
2 This was followed by the clause on office-acceptance.
namely, Bombay, Bengal, Assam and North-West Frontier Province. In the Legislative Assemblies of Sind and the Punjab, the Congress was in a minority. The following extract from the The History of the Indian National Congress, shows the Party position in various Assemblies:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>PROVINCE</th>
<th>TOTAL NO. OF SEATS IN THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY</th>
<th>SEATS WON BY THE CONGRESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Madras</td>
<td>215</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bihar</td>
<td>152</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bengal</td>
<td>250</td>
<td>54</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C. P.</td>
<td>112</td>
<td>70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bombay</td>
<td>175</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U. P.</td>
<td>228</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Punjab</td>
<td>175</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N.W.F.P</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sind</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assam</td>
<td>108</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Orissa</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The following is extracted from the resolution passed by the Tamil Nadu Congress Committee in Madras on March 10, 1937:

“The Tamil Nadu Congress Committee is convinced on good grounds that the people of this Province, who have expressed their unqualified confidence in the Congress leadership, are strongly and definitely in favour of the Congress Party accepting ministerial responsibilities with a view to carrying out the policy of the Congress and the programme laid down in the Congress manifesto, and that they will be extremely disappointed if any other decision is adopted.

“The Provincial Congress Committee is of the opinion that accepting the ministerial offices by the Congress in Legislatures will strengthen the Congress Party and develop the sanctions necessary for achieving the Congress goal, by creating the psychology of confidence between the masses and the forces of repression that have been hitherto employed against them by the bureaucracy . . .

“The Provincial Congress Committee therefore is clearly of the opinion that in all the Provinces where Congressmen are in majorities in Provincial Legislatures, so as to enable them to function as stable Ministries without having to depend upon doubtful non-Congress groups, the Congressmen should accept ministerial offices on behalf of the Party.”

In his speech on the A.I.C.C. resolution, C. Rajagopalachari said:

“. . . Let us not distrust each other. Do not think we are hankering after jobs . . . When they went to the Governor they had to tell him what they proposed to do and ask him if he would use his special powers. If the Governor refused to give an answer, they would come back. If he said he would use them, then also as self-respecting men they would come back; but if he said he would not use them, they would take his words at their face value. If later he broke those words, they could come out . . .”

Jawaharlal Nehru said that “though he also continued the opposition . . . he eventually agreed again in deference to the wishes of Mahatma Gandhi and with a view to keeping up solidarity, which, in his view, was essential to fight the new Constitution.”

The A.I.C.C. then “took up consideration of the draft of the oath which every Congress Legislator will be required to take affirming allegiance to Congress and the country on the first day of the National Convention Session.” The draft, prepared by Jawaharlal Nehru and revised by Gandhiji, read:

“I, Member of this All-India Convention, pledge myself to the service of India and to work in the Legislatures and outside for the independence of India and the ending of the exploitation and poverty of her people.

“I pledge myself to work under the discipline of the Congress for the furtherance of Congress ideals and objectives to the end that India may be free and independent and her millions freed from the heavy burdens they suffer from.”

Pattabhi Sitaramayya explains thus the question of “assurances”:

“Apart from the question of the academic and theoretical issues involved in this affair, it would be just as well to study in detail the significance of the demands made by the Congress that the Governors shall not use their special powers of interference or set aside the advice of Ministers in regard to the constitutional activities. These special powers relate to certain groups, interests and areas. The groups are the minorities, the interests are the vested interests of the British and the areas are the excluded and the semi-excluded areas in British India, and the Indian States. By this demand it is meant that the Governors should only act like the Governors in the Provinces of Australia (Section 51). They should not have the power to dismiss Ministers at their pleasure, that the salaries should be fixed as desired by the leader of the House (Section 50), that they should not preside over the Council of Ministers, that they should not interfere or make Ordinances (Section 55-88), or Acts on grounds of menace to peace and tranquillity, that they had nothing to do with the appointment of Advocate-General (Section 56), or with the making of the police rules:

(Section 57) with violent crimes
( " 59) with the framing of rules of business allocating the duties of Ministers
( " 62) dissolving the Assembly
( " 74) introduction of Bills
( " 75) assenting to Bills

418 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
The statement seems to be based on a complete misunderstanding of the way in which the system of responsible government works in practice and of paragraphs 7 and 8 of the Instrument of Instructions to Governors. Responsible government has been the method by which the Canadian and Australian Federation and South Africa and New Zealand each have attained full national self-government by constitutional means, often in the early days against the opposition both of Governors and the British Government. In every case the Governor or Governor-General was endowed with veto powers and other responsibilities of his own.

I venture to assert that in no case has a Ministry possessed of a majority in the Legislature asked, and that it certainly never received, any assurance that the Governor would not use his special powers. Yet these powers and responsibilities in the hands of Governors have not prevented steady advance to full self-government.

That is because the issue turns not so much on the legal power as on the responsibility—that responsibility, Mr. Gandhi once told me himself, was India’s first need to exercise.

I do not think, therefore, that Mr. Gandhi had hitherto any legitimate ground for saying that the British Government flouted the majority or failed to give effect to the principle of provincial autonomy.

1 Vide “Statement to the Press”, 10-4-1937
2 Vide “Statement to the Press”, 30-3-1937
Governors simply acted in the manner always contemplated at the Round Table Conference and repeatedly proclaimed by Ministers as being the ordinary practice under the system of responsible Government.

I am sure that British public opinion hopes and expects that majorities returned by the new electorate will take over responsibility under the Constitution for the Government of their Provinces. If Congress leaders take the course ordinarily adopted under responsible government and, without asking for assurances, accept office, formulate their practical proposals of reform, pass them into law and advise the Governor that they will find themselves endowed with both power and responsibility for the Government of their Provinces, I am sure Mr. Gandhi will find by following this step that he will have taken a tremendous step towards that transference of power from the bureaucracy to the largest and fullest democracy known in the world which he hopes to bring about.

_The Indian Annual Register_, 1937, Vol. I p. 244

APPENDIX III

EXTRACTS FROM THE CONGRESS ELECTION MANIFESTO

_August 22, 1936_

For more than fifty years the Indian National Congress has laboured for the freedom of India, and ever, as its strength grew and it came to represent more and more the nationalist urge of the Indian people and their desire to put an end to exploitation by British Imperialism, it came into conflict with the ruling power. During the recent years the Congress has led great movements for national freedom and has sought to develop sanctions whereby such freedom can be achieved by peaceful mass action and the disciplined sacrifice and suffering of the Indian people. To the lead of the Congress the Indian people have responded in an abundant measure and thus confirmed their inherent right to freedom. That struggle for freedom still continues and must continue till India is free and independent.

These years have seen the development of an economic crisis in India and the world which has led to a progressive deterioration in the condition of all classes of our people. The poverty-stricken masses are today in the grip of an even more abject poverty and destitution, and this growing disease urgently and insistently demands a radical remedy. Poverty and unemployment have long been the lot of our peasantry and industrial workers; today they cover and crush other classes also—the artisan, the trader, the small merchant, the middle-class intelligentsia. For the vast millions of our countrymen the problem of achieving national independence has become an urgent one, for only independence can give us the power to solve our economic and social problems and end the exploitation of our masses.

---

1 Vide “Letter to Lilavati Asar”, 15-4-1937 and “Speech at Gandhi Seva Sangh Meeting, Hundli- III”, 20-4-1937

The growth of the national movement and the economic crisis have resulted in the intense repression of the Indian people and the suppression of civil liberties, and the British Government has sought to strengthen the imperialist bonds that envelop India and to perpetuate the domination and exploitation of the Indian people by enacting the Government of India Act of 1935.

In the international sphere crisis follows crisis in an ever-deepening degree and world-war hangs over the horizon. The Lucknow Congress called the attention of the nation to this grave situation in India and the world, and declared its opposition to the participation of India in an imperialist war and its firm resolve to continue the struggle for the independence of India.

The Congress rejected in its entirety the Constitution imposed upon India by the new Act and declared that no constitution imposed by outside authority and no constitution which curtails the sovereignty of the people of India, and does not recognize their right to shape and control fully their political and economic future, can be accepted. Such a constitution, in its opinion, must be based on the independence of India as a nation and it can only be framed by a Constituent Assembly.

The Congress has always laid stress on the development of the strength of the people and the forging of sanctions to enforce the people's will. To this end it has carried on activities outside the Legislatures. The Congress holds that real strength comes from thus organizing and serving the masses.

Adhering to this policy and objective, but in view of the present situation and in order to prevent the operation of forces calculated to strengthen alien domination and exploitation, the Congress decides to contest seats in the coming elections for the provincial Legislatures. But the purpose of sending Congressmen to the Legislatures under the new Act is not to co-operate in any way with the Act but to combat it and seek to end it. It is to carry out, in so far as is possible, the Congress policy of rejection of the Act, and to resist British imperialism in its attempts to strengthen its hold on India and its exploitation of the Indian people. In the opinion of the Congress, activity in the Legislatures should be such as to help in the work outside, in the strengthening of the people, and in the development of the sanctions which are essential to freedom.

The new Legislatures, hedged and circumscribed by safeguards and special powers for the protection of British and other vested interests, cannot yield substantial benefits, and they are totally incapable of solving the vital problems of poverty and unemployment. But they may well be used by British imperialism for its own purposes to the disadvantage and injury of the Indian people. The Congress representatives will seek to resist this, and to take all possible steps to end the various regulations, Ordinances and Acts which oppress the Indian people and smother their will to freedom. They will work for the establishment of civil liberty, for the release of political prisoners and detenus, and to repair the wrongs done to the peasantry and to public institutions in the course of national struggle.

The Congress realizes that independence cannot be achieved through these Legislatures, nor can the problem of poverty and unemployment be effectively tackled by them. Nevertheless the Congress places its general programme before the people of India so that they may know what it stands for and what it will try to achieve, whenever it has the power to do so . . .

Pending the formulation of a fuller programme, the Congress reiterates its declaration made at Karachi—that it stands for a reform of the system of land tenure and rent and an equitable adjustment of the burden on agricultural land, giving immediate relief to the smaller peasantry by a substantial reduction of agricultural rent and revenue now paid by them and exempting uneconomic holdings from payment of rent and revenue. . . .

The communal decision, which forms part of the new Act, has led to much controversy and the Congress attitude towards it has been misunderstood by some people. The rejection in its entirety of the new Act by the Congress inevitably involves the rejection of the communal decision. Even apart from the Act as a whole the communal decision is wholly unacceptable as being inconsistent with independence and the principle of democracy. . . .

The Congress therefore, holds that the right way to deal with the situation created by the communal decision is to intensify our struggle for independence and, at the same time, to seek a common basis for an agreed solution which helps to strengthen the unity of India. . . .

The question of accepting Ministers or not in the new Legislatures was postponed for a decision by the Lucknow Congress. The A.I.C.C. is of opinion that it will be desirable for this decision to be taken after the elections. What- ever the decision on this question might be, it must be remembered that, in any event, the Congress stands for the rejection of the new Act, and for no co-operation in its working. The object remains the same—the ending of the Act. With a view to this end every endeavour will be made to prevent the introduction and functioning of the federal part of the scheme, which is intended to perpetuate the domination of imperialist interests and the feudal interests of the States over the whole country and prevent all progress towards freedom. It must be borne in mind that the new provincial Assemblies will form the electorate for the proposed federal central Legislature and the composition of those provincial Legislatures will materially affect the fate of the federal Constitution. . . .

With this great and inspiring goal before us, for which so many men and women of India have suffered and sacrificed their all under the banner of the Congress, and for which today thousands of our countrymen are suffering silently and with brave endurance, we call upon our people with full hope and confidence to rally to the cause of the Congress, of India, of freedom.

APPENDIX IV

LORD ZETLAND’S SPEECH

May 6, 1937

If a quasi-legal formula could be devised to regulate the varied and changing relationships between the Governor and his Ministry, it would have been embodied in the Act. It was just because there was no such formula that it was emphasized again and again in the course of the discussions preceding the Bill that it would be the spirit in which the Constitution was worked that would be of the first importance for its success. It is here that such unfortunate misunderstandings have arisen. In some quarters a great deal more has been read into that part of the Act which imposes certain obligations upon a Governor that it actually contains.

In its most recent pronouncement, the Congress declared that the past record and the present attitude of the British Government showed that without the assurances demanded a popular Ministry would be exposed to constant irritating interference. This differs so profoundly from the picture of a popular Ministry functioning under the Act as I have always seen it that it is perhaps desirable that I should describe the working of the Constitution in Indian Provinces as I always contemplated it. Since I was a member not only of the Select Committee, but the Round Table Conference, I may claim to know something of the intentions of those who framed the measure and the spirit in which it was conceived.

First let it not be supposed that the field of Government may be divided into two parts in which the Governor and Ministry operate separately at the risk of clashes between them. The essence of the new Constitution is that the initiative and responsibility for the whole Government of the Province, though in form vested in the Governor, passes to the Ministry as soon as it takes office. It will be the Governor’s duty to help Ministers in their task in every way, particularly by his political experience or administrative knowledge.

The reserved powers of which so much has been made by the Congress will not normally be in operation; indeed they only come into the picture if he considers that the carefully limited special responsibilities laid upon him by the Act and impressed upon him by the Instrument of Instructions are involved, but even if the question of their use does arise—here is emphasized the spirit in which it was intended that the Constitution should be worked—it would be altogether wrong to assume that a Governor would immediately set himself in open opposition to his Ministry.

That is the last thing in the world that I should either expect or desire. A Governor whose advice and support has been valuable to a Ministry in the conduct of its own affairs will surely be able to lay his own difficulties before them the moment he sees a risk that he and his Ministers may not see eye to eye in a matter for which special responsibility has been laid upon him by parliament. Just as Ministers can count upon the assistance of the Governor in their difficulties, so could he in his turn rely upon receiving the sympathetic consideration of his Ministers for a difficulty in his own position which, maybe, could be met by some modification of their proposals that would not materially affect the Ministry’s programme.

In any case a discussion of the matter between men working together for a common purpose is likely at least to secure that points of difference between them are narrowed. It will then be for each having regard to the interests of the Province as a whole to consider whether the points of difference so narrowed and defined justify a break in a fruitful relationship. It would doubtless be too much to hope that occasions will never arise in which neither side can with good conscience give way. But if my picture of the working of Government under the Act is true and if the relations between the Governor and his Ministry are those of partners in a common enterprise, there can be no possible question of the Governors interfering constantly and embarrassingly in the responsibilities and work of the Ministries.

It is certainly not the intention that Governors by a narrow or legalistic interpretation of their own responsibilities should trench upon the wide power which it was the purpose of parliament to place in the hands of Ministries and which it is our desire they should use in the furtherance of the programmes which they advocated. In the working of the Constitution as far as it at present is possible to judge, I find happy confirmation of the picture as I have always seen it.

Both in the Provinces in which Ministries are working with majorities in the Legislatures and those in which minority Ministries are functioning, a bold programme has been drawn up as far as I know without the smallest attempt on the part of any Governor to interfere.

Is it too much to hope that those who have so far hesitated to accept responsibilities of office from a mistaken sense of fear lest they should be unduly hampered in their tasks will derive reassurance and encouragement from the object-lesson provided by the actual working of the Constitution in their midst? I need hardly say that I hope devoutly and in all sincerity that it may be so.

_The Bombay Chronicle_, 7-5-1937
APPENDIX V

KOODALMANIKKAM TEMPLE CONTROVERSY

At Irinjalakuda in the Cochin State there is an ancient and important Hindu temple known as the Koodalmanikkam Devaswom. The Devaswom owns extensive lands in Travancore, Cochin and Malabar. The management of the affairs of the Temple, both spiritual and temporal, is vested in a person who is designated the Thachudaya Kaimal which literally means the Chief of Lord, who owns the building (Temple). This person is appointed by His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore in exercise of His Highness’s immemorial right recognized and confirmed by the treaties between Travancore and Cochin in 1761, 1765 and 1805.

The nomination and consecration of the Kaimal are no mere secular acts but are attended with elaborate ceremonies which have deep religious significance and are relevant in indicating the status of the Kaimal in relation to the Temple. . . . By virtue of the nomination and consecration ceremonies, the nominee, who was originally a Nair by birth, becomes clothed with the spiritual dignity and status of the highest Brahmin, and his spiritual eminence is considered superior even to that of His Highness the Maharaja of Cochin. For according to tradition even his Highness the Maharaja of Cochin has to touch the pole of the Kaimal’s palanquin just when the Kaimal enters it to be taken in procession round the Temple. He assumes the name of the deity and is called Manikkam Keralan and manages the spiritual and temporal affairs of the Devaswom. When he dies purificatory ceremonies are performed in the Temple and Brahmins perform the cremation ceremony; and sraddham for the dead Kaimal is performed in the Temple. The idea is that with the consecration the Kaimal becomes the visible representative of the presiding deity.

With the death of a former Kaimal in 1850, disputes arose as to the right of the Maharaja of Travancore to appoint the successor. The contention was put forward by Cochin that the Kaimal had no right of management of the Temple and that the right to nominate the Kaimal could be exercised by Travancore only when the Temple building itself stood in need of repair. Travancore repudiated this plea and asserted the right of the Maharaja of Travancore to appoint a Kaimal to be in management of the spiritual and temporal affairs of the Temple whenever that office fell vacant. The matter was referred to arbitration; and after protracted enquiry, the Abritrator Mr. J.C. Hannyngton decided that Cochin’s contentions were untenable, that the Travancore nominee had entire management and control of the whole of the Temple concerns and its endowments. . . . The Kaimal was then appointed and duly consecrated, but Cochin again contested before its own local courts the right of the Kaimal to institute suits on behalf of the Devaswom or to collect the rents and profits independently of the Yogakkars, who, it was alleged, were still the owners of the Temple. . . . Travancore contended that the Kaimal was the supreme spiritual and temporal authority of the Koodalmanikkam Temple and had the sole right of management of all affairs concerning the Temple and that the status and powers of the Kaimal did not depend on the pronouncement of the Municipal Courts of Cochin.

1Vide pp. 142, 177 and 228. Only extracts are reproduced here.

The Madras Government accepted the contentions of the Travancore Government. The Resident was directed to advise the Cochin Durbar to restore to the Kaimal by legislation or proclamation the powers of which he had been found to have been deprived by the judicial decisions in Cochin. The Cochin Durbar took the matter in appeal before the Secretary of State who confirmed the decision of the Madras Government.

Meanwhile, the Kaimal who was then in office died and another Kaimal had to be appointed. The States could not agree as to the best method of providing such control and eventually, after long-pending negotiations, it was agreed that the British Resident might be constituted as the Controlling Authority with reference specially to the management of the properties and incomes belonging to the Devaswom.

A scheme of management was accordingly drawn up and agreed to by all the parties concerned in which the spiritual authority of the Kaimal as “the chief religious authority to clear all doubts in connection with the internal management of the temple” was expressly affirmed and provision was made whereby (a) the Kaimal was not to exceed a certain scale of personal expenditure prescribed for him, (b) the Kaimal had to keep correct accounts of all receipts and expenditure and submit financial statements, as audited, to the Governments of Travancore and Cochin and to the Controlling Authority, (c) the Kaimal was subject to be removed by the Controlling Authority, from the management of the Devaswom properties and incomes if, on enquiry in the manner prescribed in the scheme, the Kaimal was found guilty of mismanagement and misconduct which rendered his further continuance in control of the Temple undesirable. The only right of the Yogakkars recognized in the scheme was that the annual accounts should be read out from the Temple to the Yogakkars on a prescribed day of every year.

This, in brief, is the present position of the Kaimal; and the Kaimal now in office functions under the provisions of the scheme outlined above. It will thus be clear that after a dispute which lasted for over seventy years the status and functions of the Kaimal, both spiritual and temporal, were finally settled when the proclamation and scheme of management were promulgated in 1917. Everything was calm and smooth until some time after the Travancore Temple-entry Proclamation.

There was no question that the Kaimal was not the supreme spiritual authority to regulate and settle all matters of a religious nature. But when tantris who had officiated in Travancore temples entered and officiated in the Koodalmanikkm Temple, Cochin revived the contention as to the Yogakkar’s right to control the Kaimal’s action in regard to religious practices and to issue directions to him. On representations made by some of them, His Highness the Maharaja of Cochin declared on the 15th April that the Temple was polluted because a tantri who officiated in a Travancore temple which was open to avarnas had officiated in the Koodalmanikkm Temple, and that purificatory ceremony in the Temple was necessary before the utsavam festival could commence. The vazhivadoos or offerings of the Cochin Maharaja were also ordered to be withdrawn until further orders. On the 17th April, the Resident issued directions to the Kaimal asking the latter to follow the instructions issued by the Maharaja of Cochin. The Kaimal obeyed the directions of the Resident. Encouraged obviously by the action of the Resident, the Cochin Government again issued orders to the Kaimal to prohibit the entry into the Temple or the tank of all persons who had participated in ceremonies in Travancore temples, unless they performed prayaschittam. The Kaimal protested against the action of the Cochin Maharaja and complained about the scope of the Resident’s orders.

Travancore had no concern with the action taken by the Cochin Government with respect to the subjects of the Cochin State and was merely interested in preserving the authority which the Kaimal assumed when he was invested with that office on nomination by His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore. According to Travancore, the only authority competent to declare whether under the circumstances there was pollution or not and whether purificatory ceremony was required or not was the Kaimal as the spiritual head of the Devaswom—a position affirmed even in the scheme promulgated by the Cochin Maharaja with the consent of Travancore and the British Government. Any order passed by the Maharaja of Cochin or the Resident without reference to the Kaimal and opposed to his (Kaimal’s) own declaration would be ineffective and without jurisdiction.

The Resident has subsequently made his position clear as is evident from the interviews given by him to the Press. The direction given by him to the Kaimal did not purport to be an interference with the exercise of the discretion vested in the Kaimal in religious matters but were intended to maintain status quo mainly as precautionary measure to preserve law and order.

According to Travancore, the powers of the Resident as Controlling Authority are limited to those expressly specified in the Scheme and no proper occasion had arisen for the intervention of the Resident either as Controlling Authority or as representative of the Paramount Power, for, in either capacity, the Resident had no jurisdiction in giving directions on religious matters solely within the cognizance of the Kaimal. If there was any apprehension of breaches of the peace, there is nothing to show that the Cochin Government could not have dealt with the situation adequately. The Kaimal himself has stated in an interview that even without the Resident’s intervention the Utsavam festival would have passed off peacefully, and that this would have been possible even though some of the sanatanist tantris had non-co-operated.

The Kaimal has subsequently exercised his discretion and declared that in the circumstances stated there was no pollution whatever. Travancore contends that this declaration finally settles the controversy and that the Resident having substantially upheld the discretionary authority of the Kaimal in spiritual matters Travancore has no more any reason to complain.

It may be of interest to note that even in the not distant past there have been instances when ancient religious customs and usages have been departed from in Cochin on the ground that they were unreasonable. Men who had cropped their hair and men who had crossed the sea had no admission into temples in Cochin. But the prohibition does not now exist. The ground on which, in the present case, the Maharaja of Cochin declared in favour of pollution, is not sanctioned by the Shastras or by usage.

_Harijan_, 22-5-1937.
1. SPEECH AT WORKING COMMITTEE MEETING, WARDHA

July 6, 1937

It is stated that at the outset Mahatmaji referred to the misgivings entertained by a not inconsiderable section of the Congressmen that his other Press statements issued prior to that in connection with the constitutional deadlock had, in effect, tended to whittle down the stand so far taken by the Congress. By a thorough analysis of his several statements Mahatmaji was able to satisfy the members of the Committee that they were simply meant to clarify the Congress position, which was being constantly misunderstood and misinterpreted by high officials here and in England.

Mahatmaji then explained to the Committee the alternative course of action open to them in the circumstances confronting the Congress at present. It is understood Gandhiji made no secret of the fact that he had not found in Lord Linlithgow’s message the assurance which he had in mind when he inserted the assurance clause in the A.I.C.C. resolution at Delhi. With the Governor’s special powers of interference thus left intact, Gandhiji apprehended that frictions were very likely to occur, sooner rather than later, as it would prove difficult to prevent the overlapping of the sphere of the Governor's special powers and the normal field of activities of Ministers. Accordingly, the fear was expressed that, despite the wishes sincerely expressed by Lord Zetland and Lord Linlithgow, the new Constitution might not in actual practice be worked for long by the Congress Ministers in furtherance of the Congress objective.

Without committing himself to any definite opinion Mahatmaji is stated to have admitted that there was some force in the argument of those who maintained that the Congress should utilize the office of ministerships in the six majority Provinces with a view to generating strength in the masses of the country so that, when the final breakdown of the Constitution came—as it was bound to come—this newly developed mass strength and enthusiasm may be harnessed to good account, should the Congress find it necessary to launch upon any mass movement in the future.

In conclusion, Gandhiji is reported to have expressed himself as being in complete agreement with Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru's opinion that there must be no lowering of the Congress flag whether the Congress representatives are in office or out of it.

The Hindu, 7-7-1937

---

1 Vide "Viceroy’s speech", 21-6-1937
2 Vide "Extract from A.I.C.C. Resolution", 16-3-1937
2. CONGRESS WORKING COMMITTEE RESOLUTION

WARDHA,
July 7. 1937

The All-India Congress Committee, at its meeting held in Delhi on March 18\(^2\) 1937, passed a resolution affirming the basic Congress policy in regard to the new constitution and laying down the programme to be followed inside and outside the Legislatures by Congress members of such Legislatures. It further directed that in pursuance of that policy permission should be given for congressmen to accept office in provinces where the Congress commanded a majority in the Legislature, and the leader of the Congress Party was satisfied and could state publicly that the Governor would not use his special powers of interference or set aside the advice of Ministers in regard to their constitutional activities. In accordance with these directions, the leaders of Congress party who were invited by Governors to form ministries, asked for the necessary assurances. These not having been given, the leaders expressed their inability to undertake the formation of Ministries. But since the meeting of the Working Committee on April 28 last, Lord Zetland, Lord Stanley and Viceroy have made declarations\(^3\) on this issue on behalf of the British Government. The Working Committee has carefully considered these declarations and is of opinion that though they exhibit a desire to make an approach to the Congress demand they fall short of the assurances demanded in terms of the A.I.C.C. resolution as interpreted by the Working Committee resolution\(^4\) of April 28. Again the Working Committee is unable to subscribe to the doctrine or partnership propounded in some of the aforesaid declarations. The proper description of the existing relationship between the British Government and the people of India is that of the exploiter and the exploited, and hence they have a different outlook upon almost everything of vital importance. The Committee feels however that the situation created as the result of the circumstances and events that have

\(^1\) This was drafted by Gandhiji. The date-line is reproduced from The Hitavada, 9-7-1937.

\(^2\) Actually on March 16; vide “Extract from A.I.C.C. Resolution”, 16-3-1937

\(^3\) For Lord Zetland's and the Viceroy's speeches, vide “Viceroy’s speech”, 21-6-1937

\(^4\) Passed at Allahabad; vide footnote 1, “Interview to Associated Press of India”, 6-5-1937 since occurred, warrants the belief that it will not be easy for the Governors to use their special powers. The Committee has moreover considered the views of Congress members of the Legislatures and of Congressmen generally.

The Committee has therefore come to the conclusion and resolves that Congressmen be permitted to accept office where they may be invited thereto. But it desires to make it clear that office is to be accepted and utilized for the purpose of working in accordance with lines laid down in the Congress election manifesto and to further in every possible way the Congress policy of combating the new Act on the one hand and of prosecuting the constructive programme on the other.

The Working Committee is confident that it has the support and backing of the A.I.C.C. in this decision and that this resolution is in furtherance of the general policy laid down by the Congress and the A.I.C.C. The Committee would have welcomed the opportunity of taking the direction of the A.I.C.C. in this matter but it is of opinion that delay in taking a decision at this stage would be injurious to the country's interests and would create confusion in the public mind at a time when prompt and decisive action is necessary.

Congress Bulletin No. 5, July 1937. Also Home Department, Political Branch, File No. 4/15/37. Courtesy: National Archives of India

3. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHAGANI,
July 7, 1937

RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
SIMLA.

YES.\(^1\) LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3794. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6950

\(^1\) The addressee has noted on the telegram: "Yes—acceptance of office by Congress".
4. SPEECH AT RASHTRABHASHA ADHYAPAN MANDIR,
WARDHA

July 7, 1937

Rajendra Babu has lightened my task by saying that the pracharaks should be men of character. It goes without saying that those who have not the literary qualifications would not do, but it is necessary to bear in mind that even literary qualifications would be of no use where the essential qualification of character was wanting.

They will have to master the Hindi language as defined by Indore Sahitya Sammelan, i.e., the language spoken by the Hindus and Mussalmans of North India and written in Devanagari or Persian script. Mastery of this language will mean mastery not only of the easy Hindi-Hindustani spoken by the masses but also of the high flown Hindi full of Sanskrit words and the high-flown Urdu full of Persian and Arabic words. Without a knowledge of these, mastery of the language would be incomplete even as one could not claim to be master of the English language without a knowledge of the English of Chaucer, Swift and Johnson, or mastery of the Sanskrit language without a knowledge of the Sanskrit of Valmiki and Kalidas.

But I should be prepared to put up with their ignorance of Devanagari or Persian scripts, or ignorance of Hindi grammar, but I should not tolerate for a moment lack of character. We do not need such men here and, if there is anyone among the candidates who is not likely to stand the test, let him leave betimes. The work they are called to is no easy thing. There is a strong body of English-knowing people who say that English alone can be the lingua franca of India. There are the pundits of Benares and Allahabad and the alims of Delhi and Lucknow who want a Sanskritized Hindi and Persianized Urdu. The third group we have to contend against is that which has raised the cry of 'provincial languages in danger'.

Mere learning cannot successfully grapple with these forces. It is the work not of learned men, but of fakirs-men of incorruptible character and with no axe to grind. If you are found wanting in this respect and the people amongst whom you are working were to lay

---

1 The speech is extracted from “Weekly Letter” by Mahadev Desai, who had reported its “verbatim” translation. The date-line is reproduced from The Hindu 8-7-1937.
rough hands on you, I should not blame them. They are not pledged to ahimsa.

Nor is money going to help us much. You know, I agreed to preside over the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan at Indore in 1935 on condition that the Reception Committee should collect Rs. 1,00,000 for Hindi prachar in South India in particular and other non-Hindi Provinces in general. I was loath to accept the invitation, but Jamnalalji stood surety for the Reception Committee. The Committee failed to collect the amount, in fact it collected then practically nothing at all. But in the year following about Rs. 22,000 were collected. Jamnalalji has now contributed Rs. 25,000 from his own pocket, and he has secured a promise of Rs. 75,000 from the charities of the late Kamalapatji of Kanpur. There is thus no lack of money. But what can money do? Wardha was just a cotton centre with a few ginning factories. It is Jamnalalji’s ambition to turn it into a cultural centre and a centre of national activities. He has, therefore, helped in bringing into being Mahila Ashram, a high school, Hindi Prachar Samiti, the present training school, the weaving school, the Village Workers’ Training School, a tannery and so on. But more than these institutions, more than money, we want character. That is what I have come this morning to ask you to contribute to this work.

_Harijan_, 17-7-1937

5. INTERVIEW TO “THE HINDU”

_July 8, 1937_

GAUDHIJI: You have come to waylay me, you highway man!

CORRESPONDENT: Are you giving any message to the Congress on the morrow of the inauguration of the new policy of trying office?

G. The Congress Working Committee’s resolution is comprehensive. It contains the message and programme to be followed by the Congressmen and the country.

Asked how he, the author of the demand for assurance, reconciled the stand taken in Delhi with the decision reached yesterday, Gandhiji again said:

The resolution has dealt with it. I have nothing to add to it.

1 The correspondent had reported that he met Gandhiji “early in the morning, at 5.30, half way down from Segaon to Wardha.”
When I drew his attention to the fact that he was completing his year of seclusion in the village, Gandhiji said:

Segaon has an irresistible attraction for me and I feel inclined to stay there indefinitely.

I referred to the European situation, the armament race and the war menace and asked whether he, the apostle of non-violence, would not come out of his retirement in the village and spread the message of non-violence over the world and thus do a service to humanity.

It is all so soothing to hear but I am not big enough for that task. You are taking me beyond my depth.

The rest of the walk was devoted to talk about fast walking. Gandhiji remarked on the ease and facility with which the average villagers covered the long distances in fair weather or foul.

_The Hindu, 8-7-1937_

6. MEANING OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL OATH

Shri Kishorelal Mashruwala writes:

I am afraid that Gandhiji's position with regard to the constitutional oath has not been properly understood. Of course, one ought not to make a distinction between a legal oath and a moral oath. But there can be a distinction between a legal oath and a religious oath. By the latter, Gandhiji appears to mean an oath taken in the name of God and framed by [the taker] himself or by his religious teachers or scriptures. If it is framed by himself, he knows the exact implications of that oath, and he is bound by his own interpretation of it only, and not of anyone else. Whether he has fulfilled it or not is a question between himself and his conscience or God. If it has been framed by his religious teachers or scriptures, he is expected to have accepted their interpretation of its implications and is fully discharged if they exonerate him. If a person who does not accept those teachers or scriptures avers on a mere reading of the language of the oath that the oath has been broken, his opinion does not count.

A legal oath is one which is framed not by himself but by the Legislature to which he is, _de facto_, subject. The exact implication of that oath is no more than what the Legislature has decided to give it. In case of doubt as to its exact meaning, the proper authorities to adjudicate upon the meaning are the Legislature itself, the Court of Law having jurisdiction in the matter, and subject to appeal to them eminent lawyers. A person who perfectly fulfils the oath in the light of such interpretation is discharged not only legally but also morally.

---

1 _Vide_ “Are There Different Oaths”, 26-6-1937

A good deal of confusion seems to have arisen by importing into the oath of allegiance implications assigned to it not by the framers or their authorized interpreters but by the layman. Perhaps the layman's interpretation is not without its history. Nevertheless it cannot be accepted as authoritative. The layman's meaning of the oath of allegiance appears to be an attitude of devotional attachment to the person of the King to such a high pitch that the pledger would be willing to die for him. He seems also to hold that the oath once taken becomes binding upon him for life. According to eminent constitutional lawyers, I am given to understand, both these assumptions are wrong. According to them the oath simply means that as long as the pledger is subject to the oath (i.e., is a member of the institution which has framed the oath), he shall not rise in arms against the King, or be a party to his death, except through constitutional process. Through constitutional process, even that is allowable. Through constitutional process, it is open to the proper Legislature to amend or repeal the oath altogether; it is possible to dethrone the King and even to order his execution. But if the Legislature does not agree to it, no legislator who has taken the oath can resort to violence against the King, except after ceasing to be a member of that body.

A person pledged to Truth and Non-violence (as a member of the Gandhi Seva Sangh) is assumed not to harbour any violent intention to the King under any circumstances. There is, therefore, no moral difficulty in his case to take the oath of allegiance as interpreted above. There is nothing to prevent him from aiming at complete independence, if he means to achieve it— as long as he is in the Legislature—through constitutional means and, in case he means to resort to other means, to do so after resigning his seat. His oath is not intended to bind him to it when he ceases to be a member. There is nothing again, according to lawyers, requiring a member not to harbour intentions of bringing about a constitutional revolution, even violent, if the Legislature will agree. These means are not open to the members of the Sangh, not because they are members of the Legislature but because of their membership of the Sangh. Thus there is no conflict between the legal and the moral aspect as assumed.

I heartily endorse this presentation of my meaning of the distinction drawn by me between legal and religious oaths. But a friend who saw the foregoing note is not yet satisfied. He says, whatever be the meaning the authors of an oath may give to it, the taker of it should be the final judge of its meaning, and must therefore be at liberty to take or not to take the oath. Whilst he is at liberty to do what he likes, the arbitrary meaning he may give contrary to the meaning given to it by its very author will be held utterly indefensible.

_Harijan_, 10-7-1937

7. INSTRUCTIVE FIGURES

In the course of a conversation with Dr. Syed Mahmud I happened to mention that the All-India Spinners’ Association had on its register a large number of Muslim spinners, weavers and carders. I was speaking from a general knowledge of the working of the Association. This was a few months ago. But as there never was any intention to keep a communal register or even to find out the caste or religion of those engaged in the different processes regarding manufacture of khadi, figures took some time to prepare. The actual figures generally correspond to the impression I gave to Dr. Mahmud.
They will be found published on p. 171 in this issue.¹

This is what I call living contact with the masses irrespective of caste or creed. If the workers are true to their salt, the contact must be of an abiding nature. It should result also in an indissoluble bond between Hindus and Mussalmans of the villages of India. Hitherto they have not worked knowingly and voluntarily under the aegis of one agency and for a common purpose. There is every possibility of a conscious union of hearts between them being achieved. It should be much easier under the new scheme in which the interest of the artisans is held to be predominant. Since the new orientation the contact has become far more real than it ever was. For the spinners—and they are by far the largest majority among the artisans served by the Associations—are regularly instructed. Every individual spinner receives personal attention and is taught to use better tools in a better manner. Their wages are in many cases trebled, even quadrupled. It is difficult to forecast the result of this new scheme, both to the individual workers and the nation at large. One result is obvious.
These artisans have ceased to be the exploited class. Presently they will be conscious controllers of the A.I.S.A. as they are today its prime, though unconscious, shareholders.

_Harijan_, 10-7-1937

¹ The figures are not reproduced here.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
8. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 10, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I have apparently neglected you these few days. I hope you had my wire. I wonder whether the news preceded the wire. For you it should be enough that I did not forget it. Jawaharlal was more than good throughout. His innate nobility asserted itself every time a difficulty cropped up. He is truly a warrior, sans peur et sans reproche. The more I see him, the more I love him. I had long chats with him and the Maulana. It will be most difficult to replace him next year.

Rameshwari is here and will be with me probably to the end of the month. She occupies Jamnalal's guest house. No more today.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3795. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6951

9. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

July 10, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I had long chats with Maulana Saheb yesterday. If he is to be consulted in the choice of Muslim Ministers in the Provinces, I think it is better to make the public announcement to the effect. The Maulana agrees. If you think that the Working Committee should be consulted, I would suggest consultation by wire.

I expect you will write on the Hindi-Urdu topic at an early date.²

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

¹ Vide “Telegram to amrit Kaur”,7-7-1937
² Jawaharlal Nehru wrote an essay entitled "The Question of Languages" for the Congress Political and Economic Studies Series. For extracts from it and Gandhiji's Foreword, dated August 3, 1937.
10. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 10, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I have not been able to write to you lately. Your letters and sketches have been coming in regularly. I have sent them on to Nandlal Babu for his opinion. You shall know it when it comes.

I am glad Dr. Sen is coming there. You will discuss your health with him and invite him to come to Segaon if he ever wishes to do so.

Rameshwari Nehru is here and is likely to stay for the month.

I do not need to say anything about the Working Committee meeting.

I am glad the doctor has allowed you to go to the simple diet. The nuts are not for you.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6391. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9857

11. LETTER TO NIRMLA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 10, 1937

CHI. NIMU,

Ramdas must have left. You have done well to ask him to go. As for the result, it is in God’s hands alone. From the letter I have from him, it appears that you wish to settle down there only. He also says in his letter that Navanit will not be willing to bear the expenses of your living there. So let me know how much I will have to send you every month. I will make arrangements accordingly. If you wish

1 Nandalal Bose, in his letter (C.W. 6393) dated July 22 to Pyarelal, had said: “I was very much interested to look through Mirabehn’s sketches. Please tell Bapuji that they show marks of real artistic insight, specially one of them –‘Clear after rain–early morning’. Art, like other creative activities, is a very jealous mistress and must be pursued with genuine, disinterested devotion. If used as an amusement or recreation for one’s enforced leisure hours, it will not yield its full beauty and significance. I hope Mirabehn will keep up her interest.”

2 Ramdas left for South Africa with Hermann Kallenbach on July 7, 1937; vide “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi”, 5-7-1937 to come over here, that can certainly be done, or if you wish to settle down somewhere else, that also can be arranged. Ramdas worries about your health, too. What can I do to help him from this distance? It is in your hands. Reply immediately.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

12. LETTER TO INDIRA NEHRU

July 10, 1937

CHI. INDU,

Whatever you may be to others, I find you a lazy-bone. Kamala was never forgetful! Jawaharlal gave me news of you. Why are you still so delicate in health? You must build up your physique. I was hoping that you would come over here. Write to me in detail.

How is Mummy1? Where is Sarup2?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: Gandhiji-Indira Gandhi Correspondence. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

13. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 11, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I answer your idiotic question with a counter-question: "Are all in the camphorated area dishonest"

Haven't seen your letter to Ba.

What a stupid thing to ask whether you would be 'one too many'. Would you ask that of Shummy [when] going to Manorville or will you go there as of right? Well, your six feet by two at the foot of my chatai3 is always there. And friend Nabibux4 lies anywhere.

---

1 Addressees' grandmother, Swaraup Rani
2 Addressee's aunt, Vijayalakshmi Pandit
3 Mat
4 A faithful attendant of the addressee's father. He became her servant after her fathers' death.

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY, 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 11
Your Hindi letter to B. was perfect. And here you will make rapid progress.
No more today.
Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Madalasa was married today to Shriman whom you know. He is a most cultured young man. The more I see him the more he grows on me. He is in Nayakam's High School here. Do write to her and him, too, if you can recall him. You should write to Jamnalal also. You may send her a gift, nothing expensive. Better to get something in the khaddar line.

Kanu returned today. He is waiting for the post.

You write well in Hindi. Your grammar is perhaps more accurate than mine. Here we will try to treat the patch near your ear.
Can you read this much?

BAPU

[PPS.]

Congress History in Hindi is obtainable from Hindustan Times, Delhi.

From the original: C.W. 4234. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 7867

14. LETTER TO BUDDHA GAYA DEFENCE LEAGUE

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 11, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your long letter. I have read it most carefully. I can conceive the possibility of one who is without malice, without anger, who has behind him a long record of service, whose every act is actuated by love, and who is saturated with the spirit of the Buddha sitting motionless near the entrance till the temple passes to those to

1 E. W. Aryanayakam of Ceylon, Principal, Marwari High School
2 In the source, the following two paragraphs and the subscription are written in Hindi.
3 History of the Indian National Congress by Pattabhi Sitaramayya whom it should rightly belong. But such is not your scheme. Nor have you such a person in view so far as I am aware. Nor have you done the spade work which alone can warrant the supreme step. Therefore, however much I may be in sympathy with you, I fear I cannot endorse the movement adumbrated by you in your letter.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Dr. Rajendra Prasad: Correspondence and Select Documents, Vol. 1

15. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

July 11, 1937

Bhai Vallabhbhai,

You needn't worry about Nariman at all. The storm will pass.
After I receive Nariman's reply to you, I will write more.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro–2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 203

16. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

Segaon,

July 11, 1937

Chi. Nimu,

Yesterday itself I had kept my reply ready but there was some delay in posting. Meanwhile I received your second letter and I have met Chitaliabhai also.

It is not worth spending so many years for learning nursing. Moreover, a married woman cannot do this job well. Housekeeping and nursing cannot go together. One should give all the twenty-four hours to nursing. So my advice is, you had better master English, Hindi and needlework. This you can do either in Bombay or here.¹

This much [was dictated] in a hurry. Whatever I may write, you may do as you please.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ In the source, what follows is in Gandhiji's hand.
17. LETTER TO H.L. SHARMA

July 11, 1937

CHI. SHARMA,

I got your letter. Do send me your book1. I shall try to read it. Your work must be getting on well. I have an impression that your earlier letter contained nothing to call for a reply. Amtul Salaam is here.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]

18. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGАОН,

July 12, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I have your long letter. You must not worry about coming here. You should become proof against the visitations of malaria or other illnesses. It is pouring cats and dogs. Of course I am thinking out all kinds of things for villages. But you should also think out things.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.] Shanta is here. She goes to her mother in a week or so. She is in need of Shanta's presence. Remember me to Dr. Sen.

From the original: C.W. 6392. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9858

19. LETTER TO A. KALESWARA RAO

July 12, 1937

MY DEAR KALESWARA RAO,

It is good of you to send me fruits without sending me bills. I appreciate the thought underlying your gift. But you do make it difficult for me to send regular calls. Anyway, please stop the chikus. The majority contain maggots.

1 The reference is to "Loose Leaves from a Socialist's Diary", a typed copy of the addressee's diary which he had maintained during his study tour abroad.

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

SRI. A. KALESWARA RAO
BEZWADA

From a photostat: C.W. 9203. Also G.N. 9246

20. LETTER TO J.C. KUMARAPPA

July 12, 1937

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

Mahadev tells me, Sita\(^1\) has come. Hope she is well. He also tells me, you may not come till the weather clears. If so what about Rao? All the accounts I receive go to show that he is no credit to us. He seems to be incurring losses. Please investigate.\(^2\)

Read the enclosed essay and tell me if it is worth publishing in Harijan.

The summary of your address at Bezawada\(^3\) will appear in due course.

You should think how we may guide our . . . Ministers in the matter of village improvement.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10121

21. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

July 12, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I got Jayaprakash's telegram yesterday. Both of you are brave in this respect. It is really better for an ailing man to die rather than go

\(^1\) Wife of Bharatan Kumarappa
\(^2\) Vide also "Letter to Bharatan Kumarappa", and letter to the addressee,
\(^3\) Now called Vijayawada. The addressee's speech at the tenth anniversary celebration of the Khaddar Samasthanam appeared under the title "Advantages of Barter" in Harijan, 24-7-1937.
\(^4\) The source is illegible here.
on suffering. From that point of view, I was in a way glad that Father was released. I had even felt when I got your letter that it would be difficult for him to recover from that illness. Let me know your future plans. Explain this to Jayaprakash. Of course, I am writing a brief letter to him.

Rameshwaribehn Nehru has arrived here. She will stay here for some time. Amtul Salaam has left for Trivandrum. One cannot say her health is good. Kanu has returned from Rajkot. Kusum Desai is here at present.

Blessings from

BAPU

---

22. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

July 12, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I had your letter. The statement of expenditure is faultless. I have nothing to say regarding the expenses. Amtul Salaam has gone to Trivandrum with Rajaji. She will stay with Lakshmi for a day or two. I am all admiration for her capacity for self-sacrifice. She may want to see you on her way back from Trivandrum. I have decided to give her permission to do so. I hope you don't have any objection. I will not let her disturb your studies. She is pining for you. She thinks only about the service she should render and about you. She has no other thought except these.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7326. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

23. LETTER TO N.S. HARDIKAR

SEGAON (WARDHA),

July 13, 1937

DEAR DR. HARDIKER,

My own opinion is that now that there will be a Congress Ministry in the Bombay Presidency it may be well not to publish

---

1 Harsu Dayal, addressee's father-in-law anything. But in this too, it will be better for you to be guided by what Jawaharlal may say.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DR. N. S. HARDIKER
HUBLI
(KARNATAK)

From the original: N.S. Hardiker Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

24. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

July 13, 1937

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I got your letter. I was only joking regarding Vasumati. I had asked her, "Why did you run away?" But I couldn't spare the time to force her to reply. I could gather from her letters that your temperaments didn't agree. If I had asked her more, she would have given details. But why should I do that? After asking her, I would have had to write to you. All of us have lived together for quite a long time. Nobody has lost anything. Everybody gave his or her best to the others. I, therefore, blame nobody for Vasumati's leaving Bochasan. Everybody can overcome his or her nature only up to a certain limit. That is why at one place the Gita says, "Practise self-control," but elsewhere it says, "What will self-control avail?" Rubber also can be stretched only up to a certain point. If stretched further, it will snap. Let all of us, therefore, practise self-control according to our capacity and keep advancing. Kusum is fine. Let me know when something about Manju's [marriage] is settled.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-6: G.S. Gangabehrmne, p. 95

---

1 In his letter dated July 6, the addressee had asked Gandhiji whether he could publish details about the difficulties in taking over the Seva Dal building from the Government; vide also “Letter to N. S. Hardiker”, 22-5-1937

2 Granddaughter of the addressee
25. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 13, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

Kanu has reached here safely. I feel as if he had never left. Send me your impression of him.

I will have to study the letters regarding Chimanlal again. They are lying with me. But I get no time whatever to take them up. There is no hurry of course.

Read the letter to Chhaganlal and pass it on to him. If you can detain him, certainly do so. I will of course like it.

It is a good thing that you are giving training to the teachers in Harijan schools. I hope you know that there is a difference between teaching a subject as a science and teaching it as a trade. To teachers it should be taught only as science.

Vijaya's daughter 1 must be fine.

The State should of course have no right to inspect a private school. But under despotism where is the question of having or not having a right? If, therefore, any officer comes for inspection, show him everything. But ascertain on what authority he comes. We don't wish to make an issue of the thing just now. Keep me informed. If possible, register your protest.

I see no objection to the use of the numeral 68. If anybody's birthday deserves to be celebrated, use of the number of his years is natural. Will I be completing the 68th year on Bhadarva Vad 12 and entering the 69th, or completing the 67th and entering the 68th? I get confused.

It has started raining here in right earnest. The sky has not cleared for four days.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am not writing separately to Jamna. Lilavati tells me that you have several copies of the annotated Gorakhpur edition of the Gita. If so, give one to Kamalabai.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8530. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Aruna Gandhi, addressee's grand daughter
26. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 13, 1937

CHI. SUMANGAL,

I have both your letters. The question is not of your being paid a salary here. The food is indifferent. The accommodation is short. It rains a great deal. Milk can be had in plenty and it is pure. Getting fruit is uncertain. You should bring with you a thali, a lota, two bowls, a tumbler, a spoon, a knife, a mattress, a durrie, a pillow, a blanket, an umbrella and a lantern. You will certainly have an hour every day for pursuit of literature. If you feel like it you may go and visit your parents before coming here. The rains end in September, but there is no hitch from my side.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

27. TELEGRAM TO T.S. SHRIPAL

July 14, 1937

SHRI T.S. SHRIPAL
ORGANIZER AND LECTURER
SOUTH INDIAN HUMANITARIAN LEAGUE
132 MINT ROAD, MADRAS I

SACRIFICE OF ANIMALS IN THE NAME OF RELIGION IS REMNANT OF BARBARISM.

GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 9874
28. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 14, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I return Dagmers' letter. I do not think the rice-eating parts of India suffer because they eat rice but because they are too poor to add to the staple what those in the North do. Whether they were better off hundreds of years [ago] is a certainty, if we grant that they had greater facilities for buying the necessary articles than now. But as there were no statistics kept in the old days, our conclusions will be based on more or less guess.

Shriman will be an ideal husband for her'. She is herself perfectly delighted with the choice.

Every time you notice solvenliness or irregularities about our institutions, you should bring these things to the notice of the responsible men. Then only will you be able to cope with the national evil. You should give your impressions and views about Khadi Bhandars to Shankerlal Banker, Ahmedabad, and tell him, too, of your plans for the Simla Bhandar in particular, i.e., if you have the leisure. The leisure you can have, if you give up what is less useful, if not useless.

If I were you, I would not worry over Muslim co-operation in the Hindi work. They will if we are true and have no designs that they suspect.

Love.

Yours,

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3796. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6952

1 Madalasa; vide also “Letter to Vallabhbhai Patel”, 11-7-1937
29. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

July 14, 1937

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

I sent you herewith a letter from Nalin. He was the most energetic complainant. Jhaverbhai backs him. Chhotalal considers Rao to be an utter misfit. Fischer considers him to be a thorough discredit. As you know, I was prepossessed in his favour. But I can't disregard the strong statements that all these workers make. Parnerkar has no opinion about his ability. His good report in Andhra is about his athletics and nothing else so far as I know. I have just seen Pandit Harihar Sharma, and he tells me that he was working some years ago under him as Hindi pracharak and he had to be dismissed for inattention to duty and even dishonesty. He tells me he is energetic when he wants to be but he can't be constant. However, all these things are to serve as a warning.¹

I hope your sister is now free from fever.
I am in no hurry about Ministers.
Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10122

30. LETTER TO K.F. NARIMAN

July 14, 1937

MY DEAR NARIMAN,

I have just seen your latest statement. It surprises and pains me. I do not know who advised you to drop the inquiry. What you dropped was inquiry by the Working Committee because in your own language you thought it could not deal impartially with a matter which involved its own members. I therefore told you, I had the Sardar's assurance that you could have an impartial inquiry even without any reference to the Working Committee because your complaint was not against the committee as such but against its particular member. If the member consented, the Committee could not object to the inquiry. Now you have come out with a different version altogether. Do you not see the discrepancy?

¹Vide also “Letter to J. C. Kumarappa”, 12-7-1937

Then, again, you seem to resent the Sardar's statement\(^1\). As it happens he issued it on my strong advice. I thought that it was due to the public and due to you also for that matter. He is now pinned to emphatic statements. If you dispute them and you have evidence, it is plain sailing for you. Indeed, you left on me the impression that when you took the Sardar for a drive, you did seek his help. And, if I am rightly informed, you sought the help of others also. What was wrong in it if you did? In your first statement in reply to the Sardar's you have almost made the admission. Nevertheless if you accuse the Sardar of lying, naturally, it is up to you to prove your case. Remember, you are the accuser or the plaintiff. Therefore, draw up your complaint or plaint carefully and let me have the name or names of the tribunal.

I would strongly advise you not to rush to the Press. Let an agreed tribunal to decide on an agreed reference be appointed and a brief statement to the Press might be made afterwards.

_Yours sincerely_,

---

31. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

_July 14, 1937_

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

If you had any doubt or fear regarding Maulana, you should not have sent the wire about him. I felt that we would be saved from a good many difficulties by doing that. I still believe that we stand to gain by your step. You probably remember that I had given the same caution to Jawaharlal.\(^2\) And I myself had put the burden of issuing a notice on him. If I throw out a suggestion which finds no echo in your heart, you must not act on it. I have written\(^3\) to Nariman. A copy of the letter is enclosed. There is no need for you to issue any

---

1. Vide “Vallabhai Patel’s Statement”, 9-7-1937
2. Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 10-7-1937
3. Vide the preceding item.
statement now. I am hopeful that this business will end well. How long can a thing which has no foundation go on?

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna parto–2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 203-4

32. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

July 14, 1937

CHI. AMTUL,

I have your letter. Yes, you can certainly come back to me whenever you wish to if you are not happy at Trivandrum. Tell Ramachandran in detail about your pain. There are a few good vaidyas there. You may even consult them if you think fit. There is also a Homeopathic mission. But the real cause of your trouble is your own mind. You may come here sooner if your feel uneasy there though I believe that Paparamma and others will be so loving towards you that you will be quite at peace for a few weeks at least.

Kanti’s letter is enclosed.

Ba’s foot is improving. How crazy you are! You could certainly have sat with Rajaji in the inter compartment to have a chat. But that is now past.

Maintain an account of all the expenditure. There is no letter from Bari or Baqui

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 384

1 The addressee travelled to Madras by the same train as Rajaji but she had only a third-class ticket.

2 Brothers of the addressee

3 ibid
33. DRAFT TELEGRAM TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

[Before July 15, 1937]¹

SHRI RAJAGOPALACHARI
SENATE HOUSE
MADRAS
PRIVATE. DEEPEST PRAYER HAS BEEN THE SPRING ON WHICH I HAVE DRAWN FOR GUIDING COMMITTEE.² YOU KNOW HOW MY HOPE IS CENTERED ON YOU. MAY GOD BLESS YOUR EFFORT. DON'T PUBLISH THIS. HAVE NO RIGHT TO SEND MESSAGE MEMBERS. YOU MUST ASK JAWAHARLAL. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal. Also In the Shadow of the Mahatma, p. 233

34. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

Unrevised

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 15, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

Today is the election day. I am watching.

But this I write to tell you that I have begun to write on the function of Congress Ministries and allied topics'. I hesitated but I saw that it was my duty to write, when I felt so keenly. I wish I could send you an advance copy of my article for Harijan. Mahadev will see this. If he has a copy he will send it. When you see it, you will please tell me if I may continue to write so. I do not want to interfere with your handling of the whole situation. For, I want the maximum from you for the country. I would be doing distinct harm, if my writing disturbed you.

I hope you got my letter⁴ about the Maulana.

Love.

BAPU

¹ In his letter dated July 16 to G. D. Birla, Mahadev Desai explains: “C.R. asked for Bapu’s blessings to be wired to him and his colleagues when they were all sworn in as Ministers.” According to India Since the Advent of the British, Rajagopalachari formed the Congress Ministry in Madras on July 15, 1937.

² Congress Working Committee

³ Vide "Congress Ministries", 17-7-1937; also "The Fundamental Difference", 24-7-1937.

⁴ Vide “Letter to Amirt Kaur”, 10-7-1937

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
35. LETTER TO K.F. NARIMAN

July 15, 1937

MY DEAR NARIMAN,

You have sent me an extraordinary letter. Either you are in a state of confusion, or your friends are. So far as I can recollect, you accepted the Working Committee's decision as final regarding the telegram. As to your other charges you had no evidence then in your possession. Your letters showed no evidence and therefore the Working Committee could neither decide for itself except to decide against you nor could give you a committee. How can you say you closed the matter though in your letter you reserved to yourself the right to ask for a committee when you had framed your charge-sheet? So far as I can see the matter can only be closed by leading against Sardar Vallabhbhai all the evidence you have in your possession or by making a clear admission that you have nothing against him. Can you not see that the Working Committee's decision so far as it goes is wholly against you? If you regard its verdict as final, then can you sit still when unbounded vilification of the Sardar is going on in front of you, and to which, in your letters, you have allowed yourself to be a party up to a certain extent?

You will be committing no breach of faith with me if you were to publish the whole of the conversation between you and me, if you will let me have beforehand what you will publish.

There are other inaccuracies in your letter which I need not go into. Let me be however clear about one point. So long as you feel that the Sardar has dealt with you unfairly in any shape or form, or that he has done anything ungentlemanly, it is your bounden duty to accept his offer. You owe it to yourself and to a colleague, who emphatically maintains that he has never done or meant any harm to

1 Dated July 14, which read: "I am being charged for defying and attempting to circumvent the Working Committee Resolution at Delhi and Wardha by demanding an independent tribunal. . . . In the . . . conversation I had with you, I had made it clear that I could accept such a tribunal only if the Working Committee sanctioned it . . . . Before the Working Committee too, I made my position clear that I did not want . . . an independent tribunal . . . if the Working Committee did not sanction . . . I further made it clear to the Secretary that the tribunal should only make a report . . . to the Working Committee who should . . . pronounce verdict . . . . But in view of the definite adverse view of all the members I did not intend to pursue the matter further . . . . Vide also “Letter to K. F. Nariman”, 14-7-1937 you and has not been guilty of dishonourable conduct directly or indirectly. If you do not pursue the tribunal you repeatedly told me you wanted, or drop it without unreservedly withdrawing your charge against the Sardar, you will be committing a grave blunder. Your colleagues of the Working Committee will certainly come to the conclusion that you were simply guided by your own suspicion though you had nothing whatsoever to sustain it. And you would confirm the impression that the Sardar has carried with him about your conduct at the Bombay election, and which he so frankly told you during that drive.

Yours sincerely,

36. LETTER TO N. C. KELKAR

July 15, 1937

DEAR MR. KELKAR,

Deo has sent me the enclosed cutting containing a report of your speech.\(^1\) He wants me to reply\(^2\) to certain allegation about me in that report. Before I do so I should like to have your confirmation of the report. For, I know, how often public speeches are misreported, sometimes consciously, sometimes unconsciously.

I hope you are in possession of the best of health.

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 3121. Courtesy: Kashinath N. Kelkar

---

\(^1\) Shankarrao Deo, President, Maharashtra Provincial Congress Committee, in his letter dated July 14 had brought to the notice of Gandhiji a report that had appeared in the issue of Dnyanprakash, 10-7-1937. The report said that N.C. Kelkar, speaking at a meeting in Poona at the Tilak Smarak Mandir, had alleged that Gandhiji had refused to sign on the application for the release of Savarkar; that Gandhiji's attitude towards Maharashtrians, including great leaders like Tilak was not friendly and that Gandhiji's readiness for office-acceptance was not consistent with his earlier stand.

\(^2\) Vide "Letter to Shankarrao Deo", 20-7-1937.
37. LETTER TO SHANKARRAO DEO

July 15, 1937

MY DEAR DEO,

I have your letter enclosing a newspaper cutting1. I have forwarded the cutting to Mr. Kelkar for confirmation. As soon as I receive his reply, you will hear further from me.

I hope your progress towards complete recovery is continuing.

Yours sincerely,

The Bombay Chronicle, 27-7-1937

38. A LETTER

July 15, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

1. Shri Mahadev Desai has sent me your letter.

2. Zoroastrian puggree. Christian hat and red fez can be made and have been made of khaddar.

3. Even as an absolute definition of God is impossible, so is that of truth impossible. When I can evolve an absolute definition of truth, truth will cease to be my God.

4. You are justified in doubting my love for humanity. Just likely that it might be solved after my death.

5. If all the flowers in a garden were endowed with wisdom, I suppose it will be quite consistent for each flower to retain its personality whilst recognizing the basic unity of all flowers.

6. I have not sufficient originality in me to show a new way of life. Nor does the conceived way of life give me any dissatisfaction. I would feel supermely happy if I could live up to it in its fulness.

Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 Vide the preceding item
39. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

July 15, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

I read your letters regarding Nariman. I am not in the least getting frightened. According to me there is no need for you to say anything now. I have started writing to Nariman. When the time for making a public statement comes, I will certainly do so. It is not at all surprising that not a single newspaper is on your side. After all, what kind of newspapers are these? Why should we get elated if they take our side?

I am sure you will be able to deal with Munshi and Bhulabhai. The thing is beyond me. If Gilder joins, it will be excellent of course.

If you don't get a reply from Maulana even after you have sent him a wire, two courses are open to you: to appoint whosoever seems the fittest to you, or to declare publicly that anybody selected by Maulana will be appointed. We know Maulana's tardiness. But the problem about a Muslim secretary is a difficult one. I think we can escape the difficulty only by putting the thing publicly in . . . s' hands. Why don't you wire to Jawaharlal that he should either send Maulana's consent or make an alternative suggestion?

You have been sending away your brothers too soon. They will reserve places for us somewhere. When God decided that our work in this world is done, he will take us away in the twinkling of an eye.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro–2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 204-5

1 The name is omitted in the source.
2 The reference is to the death of the addressee's eldest brother Somabhai. Speaker Vithalbhai, another brother, had died on October 22, 1933.
40. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 15, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

If you don't need the typewriter there for the present, please send it here. I will ask Shanta to type on it while she is here. Kanu also is ready to learn it. I hope he will start eating properly. For some time now he has developed aversion to food. If you wish, I may arrange temporarily or permanently to send someone from here who will carry the mail from here and bring it from there. I will experience no difficulty in sparing a person from here.

Durga's case is not simple. One should inhale steam when having cold. One should also fast occasionally. Why shouldn't she come and stay here for a few days? Nirmala also should come, so that I may not be put to any trouble. I will merely suggest remedies after examining her. I am sure that Durga can be completely cured. I don't mean to say that it can be done only through my remedies.

What is Kumarappa's difficulty? Shall I write? The flow of water must stop. If he cannot stop it, you may call in an expert at our cost and get it done. There must be somebody from the municipal builders. If I am allowed I will write. I am confident that I will be able to manage the athlete's case.

Let Raojibhai carry Suryabala's letter. I have already given him Harivadan's. If this is not possible, send Suryabala's letter by post.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11530

41. LETTER TO D.B. KALELKAR

July 15, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

Your letter to Raghavan is good. I would shorten it. The central point of Raghavan's argument was that it was considered to be a subordinate body. Your argument, therefore, that it was a misunderstanding and the remark about it being unfortunate are out of place.
Is it quite correct to say that the institutions are independent of each other? I think Madras enjoys Dominion status.

Your letter has been already posted. This is for the future. Why "Maratha"?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7692

42. LETTER TO HARIVADAN

July 15, 1937

Bhai Harivadan,

I can look upon your marriage with Rohini from only one angle. Though you two have entered grihasthashrama, I hope you will strengthen your present spirit of service and make your marriage an ideal for others to follow. You two have such capacity. May God grant both of you long life and bless your noble aspirations with success. I am not writing separately to Rohini.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2650

43. LETTER TO DAHYALAL JANI

July 15, 1937

Chh. Dahiyalal,

I am writing this letter with a heavy heart. Devsharmaji¹ has sent one of your letters. The other one he had torn up. Your letter is full of untruths. I am sending it back to you so that you can see for yourself. You seem to have mentioned only Jani in it. You have thus started with an untruth. If you had from the beginning wished to join a renowned institution like the Kangri, why did you not go there straightaway? In your description of Ishver Ramji's 'hesitant policy', you have unnecessarily maligned the institution in which you stayed. The letter which he has written to me on his own is in a different vein altogether.

¹ Principal of Gurukul Kangri
Your first sentence suggests excessive respect while what you really feel is helplessness.

Look at your totalling in the third sentence: 75+5=100! Is this dreaming?

You had resolved in my presence to preserve humility. It has been established that you do not have sufficient knowledge. What a big claim you make in your fourth sentence? “I will be able to teach English, science, etc., according to the latest method.” Can you justify this claim? The sentence thereafter is equally insufferable. In all the institutions that you have mentioned you say, “and that too in the capacity of a Principal”. Is not this the limit of deliberate lying? Have you merit enough to say, “You will be fully satisfied with my work and it will also bring you credit”?

See the shabbiness of the whole letter. The handwriting is all a mess.

What impatience! The word “immediately” occurs thrice.

Devasharma has a royal heart. He was almost ready to take you. Even now, if I urge him, he would do so. I would throw a letter like this from a stranger into the waste-paper basket. Your letter itself proves your unfitness. Where did you pass the three examinations which qualify you as a teacher? [You say,] “One runs up to your Ashram just to purify oneself by living on the holy land.” All right, run on! I feel more pain in writing this letter than you will in reading it. I have absolutely no time to write such a long letter, but I could not control my pen. You address me as "father" and describe yourself as my son. Is not there hypocrisy even in this? However, I will not disown you. But you will have to help me. Go to Sabarmati on the 20th, a changed man. You will not get such an opportunity again. Iff, however, you don’t wish to go, you are free.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

1 In the source, the quotations are in Hindi.
MY DEAR MALKANI,

Why don’t you steal in a note in The Hindustan Times advertising your wares or write to The Hindustan Times a letter to be published in the correspondents’ column, complaining of public apathy and telling the public what attractive things can be had there? Secondly, Why don’t you have a list of the things you have for sale and post the same to likely addresses in Delhi? You are bound to get some orders. Thirdly, you can engage a hawker who can hawk about your things on commission. Fourthly, sometimes you can pay visits to friends yourself and get their orders. If you just learn enough of the tailoring and shoemaking technique, you can take measurements yourself.

Shrimati Rameshwari Nehru is sporting a pair of slippers or some such thing from your colony. They have given her blisters all over. Now, your department has to turn out first-class articles if you are to command a large custom.

Then you mention the trouble about getting workers in the Provinces to interest themselves more than they are doing. Of course this is a universal complaint. We are not slaves without deserving our slavery.

Then, about the boys themselves, why should you not so arrange your departments as to absorb all the boys in the colony. Then they would be earning a decent livelihood and you will produce master tailors, master shoemakers, etc.

I am surprised that you, as a teacher, can feel lazy and say, you have’t enough to do. With eighteen children for whose welfare you are wholly responsible and to whom you are both father and mother, I should have thought that you had more than you could manage. Can you imagine a widowed father having eighteen children to care for feeling lazy and with time hanging heavy over him? That sentence in your letter is a disturbing sentence. You know what I mean.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 926

1 The addressee was the Superintendent of the Harijan Udyogshala, Delhi, where tailoring, shoemaking, carpentry, etc, were taught.
45. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 16, 1937

You are hard on poor Sen. Surely there are meat-eaters who are as good brahmacharis and as abstemious as any vegetarians. The physical effect of milk is the same almost as of flesh [or] meat. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of Roman Catholic monks and nuns are not to be beaten in their self-restraint in everything. Purity of personal life is not a monopoly of vegetarians not kindness. Do you know vegetarians who know not what self-restraint is, no kindness to human or sub-human life? Who can be more cruel to man and beast than some vegetarian husbands, fathers and cattleowners? We must not make a fetish of our vegetarianism and be intolerant. Let us not attribute more virtue to vegetarianism than it can carry. And so long as we must take milk, it is wrong to call ourselves vegetarians or non-flesh eaters. Distinction there is, but ir is not the restriction which you seem to think there is. It is only real godliness that alters the whole course of life.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary: Narayan Desai

46. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 16, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV.

Bhansali has returned and is already a familiar face by now. The assistant doctor applied caustic to the wound and dressed it. He also added that the trouble must have come on partly because he does not eat rotlis. It is absolutely necessary now that he should see Balkrishna. Bhansali can see him even after two days when he goes there again. It will be better, of course, if he comes over here to see him. If Bhansali goes to Wardha, he should do so after fixing the time in advance, so that he might not miss the Civil Surgeon.

I don’t know how I can persuade Durga. At present we have engaged a maidservant for washing clothes. Gradually such arrangements are being made here. She may stay here for a few days and, if she doesn’t feel at ease, may go back. There are no restrictions of any kind whatever. If she comes, she may bring [the typewriter]¹ from there. But if the material is being typed there, nothing need be sent here. Has Kanu started?

\[ \text{Blessings from} \]
\[ \text{BAPU} \]

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11531.

47. LETTER TO PURATAN J. BUCH

July 16, 1937

CHI. PURATAN,

Only two lines today. Fulfil your wishes at the time of the Congress.

\[ \text{Blessings from} \]
\[ \text{BAPU} \]

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9172

48. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[ Before July 17, 1937]²

Radhakrishna should have been removed altogether, shouldn’t he? But I don’t know much in this matter. You know him [better].

This time I have removed from your article the portion in which you have replied to Syed. For the present let them say what they wish. We should go on writing what we ourselves think proper. Please, therefore, go through the extract I have given from Tandonji’s letter. I have also supplied an extract for Harijan from Pattabhi’s speech. I have inserted that, too, in your article. If you do not like it, you may remove it. It can be said that I have written a political article³ for Harijan this time. Go through it If you don’t approve of it, you can wait. And if you find it all right, an advance copy may be supplied to

¹ Vide also “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 15-7-1937 and “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 17-7-1937
² The date is inferred from the reference to Purushottamdas Tandon’s letter to Ashraf on Hindi-Urdy controversy and Pattabhi Sitaramayya's speech at Harijan Conference, Berhampur, which appeared in Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter” in Harijan, 17-7-1937.
³ Vide the following item: also “The Fundamental Difference”. 24-7-1937.
the press. I cannot make up my mind. How can I possibly get time to talk to Kanu today?

Both Shambhudayal and Janba should take plenty of quinine. They should not eat chapatis. At the most they may take milk, jaggery and fruit if available. I will attend to the receipts, etc., tomorrow. I can’t detain Kanu today.

I don’t think Nariman’s reply calls for a rejoinder. There is nothing in it to suggest that he is on the war path. He seems to have calmed down. But who knows?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11527

49. CONGRESS MINISTRIES

Since the Working Committee and other Congressmen have allowed themselves to be influenced by my opinion on the office issue, it is perhaps due to the public for me to explain my conception of office-acceptance and what is possible to do in terms of the Congress election manifesto. I need offer no apology for crossing the self-imposed limit in the conduct of Harijan. The reason is obvious. The Government of India Act is universally regarded as wholly unsatisfactory for achieving India’s freedom. But it is possible to construe it as an attempt, however limited and feeble, to replace the rule of the sword by the rule of the majority. The creation of the big electorate of three crores of men and women and the placing of wide powers in their hands cannot be described by any other name. Underlying it is the hope that what has been imposed upon us we shall get to like, i.e., we shall really regard our exploitation as a blessing in the end. The hope may be frustrated if the representatives of the thirty million voters have a faith of their own and are intelligent enough to use the powers (including the holding of offices) placed in their hands for the purpose of thwarting the assumed intention of the framers of the Act. And this can be easily done by lawfully using the Act in a manner not expected by them and by refraining from using it in the way intended by them.

Thus the Ministries may enforce immediate prohibition by making education self-supporting instead of paying for it from the liquor revenue. This may appear a startling proposition, but I hold it perfectly feasible and eminently reasonable. The jails may be turned into reformatories and workshops. They should be self-supporting and educational instead of being spending and punitive departments. In accordance with the Irwin-Gandhi Pact, of which only the Salt Clause remains still alive, salt should be free for the poor man, but it is not; it can now be free in Congress Provinces at least. All purchases of cloth should be in khadi. The attention should now be devoted more to the villages and the peasantry than to the cities. These are but illustrations taken at random. They are perfectly lawful, and yet not one of them has as yet even been attempted.

Then the personal behaviour of Ministers. How will Congress Ministers discharge themselves? Their Chief, the President of the Congress, travels third class. Will they travel first? The President is satisfied with a coarse khadi dhoti, Kurta and waistcoat. Will the Ministers require the Western style and expenditure on Western scale? Congressmen have for the past seventeen years disciplined themselves in rigorous simplicity. The nation will expect the Ministers to introduce simplicity in the administration of their Provinces. They will not be ashamed of it, they will be proud of it. We are the poorest nation on earth, many millions living in semi-starvation. Its representatives dare not live in a style and manner out of all correspondence with their electors. The Englishmen coming as conquerors and rulers set up a standard of living which took no account whatsoever of the helpless conquered. If the Ministers will simply refrain from copying the Governors and the secured Civil Service, they will have shown the marked contrast that exists between the Congress mentality and theirs. Truly there can be no partnership between them and us even as there can be none between a giant and a dwarf.

Lest Congressmen should think that they have a monopoly of simplicity and that they erred in 1920 in doing away with the trousers and the chair, let me cite the examples of Aboobaker and Omar. Rama and Krishna are prehistoric names. I may not use these names as examples. History tells us of Pratap and Shivaji living in uttermost simplicity. But opinion may be divided as to what they did when they had power. There is no division of opinion about the Prophet, Aboobaker and Omar. They had the riches of the world at their feet. It will be difficult to find a historical parallel to match their rigorous life. Omar would not brook the idea of his lieutenants in distant provinces using anything but coarse cloth and coarse flour. The Congress Ministers, if they will retain the simplicity and economy they have inherited since 1920, will save thousands of rupees, will give hope to the poor and probably change the tone of the Services. It is hardly necessary for me to point out that simplicity does not mean shoddiness. There is a beauty and an art in simplicity which he who runs may see. It does not require money to be neat, clean and dignified. Pomp and pageantry are often synonymous with vulgarity.

This unostentatious work must be the prelude to demonstrating the utter insufficiency of the Act to meet the wishes of the people and the determination to end it.

The English Press has been at pains to divide India into Hindu and Muslim. The Congress majority Provinces have been dubbed Hindu, the other five Muslim. That this is demonstrably false has not worried them. My great hope is that the Ministers in the six Provinces will so manage them as to disarm all suspicion. They will show their Muslim colleagues that they know no distinction between Hindu, Muslim, Christian or Sikh or Parsi. Nor will they know any distinction between high-caste and low-caste Hindus. They will demonstrate in every action of theirs that with them all are the sons of the soil among whom there is no one low and no one high. Poverty and climate are common to all without distinction. The major problems are identical for all of them. And whilst, so far as we can judge from actions, the goal of the English system is wholly different from ours, the men and women representing the two goals belong to the same human family. They will now be thrown together as they never have been before. If the human reading that I have given to the Act is correct, the two parties meet together, each with its own history, background and goal, to convert one another. Corporations are wooden and soulless but not those who work them or use them. If the Englishmen or Anglicized Indians can but see the Indian which is the Congress viewpoint, the battle is won by the Congress and complete independence will come to us without shedding a drop of blood. This is what I call the non-violent approach. It may be foolish, visionary, impractical; nevertheless it is best that Congressmen, other Indians and Englishmen should know it. This office acceptance is not intended to work the Act anyhow. In the prosecution by the Congress of its goal of complete independence, it is a serious attempt on the one hand to avoid a bloody revolution and on the other to avoid mass civil disobedience on a scale hitherto not attempted. May God bless it.

_Harijan_, 17-7-1937

50. NOTE ON RENTIA JAYANTI CELEBRATION

_SEGAOON, WARDHA_,

_Friday, July 17, 1937_

In the first year two, in the second 16 and in the third 20 lakhs¹—I count this excellent progress. What is possible for Rajkot is possible for all other cities. If the khadi infection spreads everywhere, “swaraj through yarn” will soon become a fact. I may say that my faith in khadi has, if anything, grown stronger today than what it was twenty years ago. At any rate it has not diminished.

_MOHANDAS GANDHI_

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8532. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

51. A LETTER²

_July 17, 1937_

One answer to all your doubts and questions is this. One is said to fall, i.e., completely rely, on Ramanama when one does so through the heart. If you think that you have not attained success, the only inference is that your prayer does not come from the heart, it comes only from the lips. That does not mean that you are not sincere but it does mean that your prayer has some connection with the result that you want to attain and since as a good Hindu you believe in prayer, you think you are complying with all the requirements when you utter the prayer with your lips. Utterance with the lips is no doubt necessary, but in order to perceive the efficacy of prayer it has to find its place in the heart. The only way to test the question whether it has permeated the heart is by finding whether there is real peace of mind. For answer to prayer does not mean that you should get what you

¹ This was a note appended to a pamphlet by Narandas Gandhi in connection with the birthday celebration of Gandhiji. These celebrations were known as _Rentia Jayanti_, spinning-wheel anniversary. _Vide_ also “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 17-7-1937

² Of yards of yarn.

³ According to the source this was addressed “to a Sindhi”.

38 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
want but it means that you become free from all anxiety and become indifferent as to whether you get the thing prayed for or not.

The illustration that I can give from life is that whenever I have been assailed in difficult situations by anxiety or doubts they have been dispelled by prayer, and peace has taken the place of depression.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Dasai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Dasai

52. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

July 17, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM,¹

Your letter and fruit have come. Fruit this time has been most welcome because it was needed badly. I can’t get good oranges or musambis in Bombay. And I need them for patients or some patients. You may therefore send me such musambis whenever you can. Our understanding is that they must be reasonably cheap. I suppose I could get almost any fruit if I do not count the cost. But that must not be. I did take the musambis but I dared not take more than two when there were others in greater need.

I must not say more now.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 9612. Courtesy: S. Ambujammal

53. LETTER TO AGATHA HARRISON

July 17, 1937

MY DEAR AGATHA,

I hope this office-acceptance has removed your anxiety. Ours on the other hand has increased. Both are on their trial. You will watch the pages of Harijan.

Herewith the letter for Lord Halifax.

You must take a little rest now.

Love.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1502

¹ The superscription is in Devanagari.
54. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

July 17, 1937

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

Herewith bulletin which reads quite well. I suggest the addition of one sentence.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10123

55. LETTER TO GURDIAL MULLICK

July 17, 1937

MY DEAR GURDIAL,

My heart goes out to you. Our faith proves itself only when it stands firm when unpenetrable darkness surrounds. “God is the strength of the weak” or “So long as the elephant relied on his own strength he could not succeed”\(^1\). These are bits from life lived. And what is death ‘but a sleep and a forgetting’? What though all the dearest and the nearest died at a stroke? “It is good that the snare is broken, now I will get nearer to God,”\(^4\) sang the bhakta, Narasinha Mehta. But I write like a Job’s comforter. Your peace must come from within. Bhajans, even vocal repetition of Ramanama, may prove unavailing. Faith overflowing demands no vocal demonstration. It is enough if the heart grasps the reality. If God is too vague, Truth surely is not. And Truth is God. Have faith in It and It will reveal Itself. God is with you.

Yours,

---

\(^1\) Vide, “A.I.V.I.A. Bulletin”, 7-8-1937.
\(^2\) These two sentences are in Hindi in the source.
\(^3\) ibid
\(^4\) This sentence is in Gujarati in the source.
MY DEAR NARIMAN,

Sir Govindrao' has sent me a copy of his letter to you. In the covering letter he gives me an extract from your letter to him. From you letters to the Working Committee and from your letter to Sir Govindrao I see that, in your excitement, which has become chronic with you, you have lost even your legal acumen. The more I think of this wretched quarrel, the clearer I am becoming that your grievance is wholly imaginary and that, by allowing the agitation to continue, you are harming yourself and the public interest. I would strongly advise you to take legal advice, and frame your indictment in a proper manner which anybody can understand. I wholly endorse Sir Govindrao's remark that your charge is too vague for any lawyer or judge to understand or decide upon.

In your reference, you are bound to refer to the charge of Sardar Vaallabhbhai having secretly poisoned the minds of the voters directly or indirectly in connection with the election of the leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party. How I wish that you could see that you have made mountain out of a molehill. Assuming that you were utterly innocent of the defeat of the Congress candidate at the Bombay election of 1934, and yet the Sardar persisted in believing that you were not innocent, and actuated the voters against you, how can you make that a cause of serious grievance? These things will happen in public life. Do we not often suspect the bona fides even of our companions and act upon those suspicions? In your letter to Sir Govindrao, you say that your claims were defeated because of the allegations against you. Has a public worker any claim to anything? Had Jawaharlal any claim to the Presidentship of the Congress? He may even try his level best to get elected, but why should he brood over his defeat? Would he be justified in making that a cause of grievance against those who were responsible for his defeat? And yet is it not this that you are doing, or is there anything more?

But Sardar Vallabhabahi has generously come forward to submit to an inquiry into your charge. You resent this offer and make that an additional grievance. What he believes about you he has

1 Justice Govindrao Madgaonkar of Bombay High court
frankly told you and he undertakes to give the grounds of his belief to any impartial judge. He tells you and the public that he never asked anyone to vote against you, and challenges you to prove the contrary. What more can he do? That you have failed to be elected is surely nobody’s fault, not even yours. Bombay is not the Bombay Presidency. If you have the ambition of leading Maharashtra, Karnataka and Gujarat, the field is still open to you. The golden way is through utterly selfless service, surely, not through a baseless and hysterical agitation for which you must be held responsible.

The target of this agitation remains unharmed. The Sardar has no parliamentary ambition. He has no ambition for leadership either. Nature has endowed him with certain qualities and he uses them. You won’t find him going to the Press and complaining if he loses hold on the populace. Therefore, why won’t you see and realize that in the end you will be the only loser? Therefore, take the inquiry and let the judge or judges go into the whole matter, and if you do not want it, then bravely and honourably declare that you had not weighed and valued things properly, and that now you see quite clearly that Sardar Vallabhbhai had nothing to do with your defeat. For, that is so far as I can see, the whole of your allegation. I think I told you in the course of our conversation that if you convince me that Sardar had poisoned the minds of the voters against you, I for one would cease to have the intimate public connection that I have with him. He has told me repeatedly what he has said in his statement¹ which, as I say, was made at my instance.

You will regard this letter as coming from a friend who wishes well to you.

Yours sincerely,

¹ Vide “Livery of Freedom”, 31-7-1937
57. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

WARDHA,
July 17, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

You are needlessly making yourself unhappy or getting angry. It was but proper that your statement regarding the Nariman affair should have been issued immediately. What more can we expect from members of the Working Committee beside the resolution it has passed? If malicious attacks continue to be made, what can we do about them? And who but Nariman will suffer in the end? Yes, I can see that a lot of people will suffer if we submit to rowdyism. But neither you nor anybody else is likely to submit to it. I am enclosing a copy of my letter to Nariman and a copy of Sir Govindrao’s.

Don’t lose patience or your peace of mind.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

58. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 17, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. Your programme for the annual birth day celebration is becoming quite strenuous. It seems all right to me. Why don’t you prepare in this connection a small booklet, something like “Khadishastra Praveshika”? Something of that sort needs to be done. My note is given below the pamphlet.

I am arranging to send Rameshwari Nehru to Rajkot. I shall be able to let you know in a few days whether or not she will go. She is

---

1 Dated March 17, 1937, which read: “Had the Working Committee found any reason to believe that the election had been influenced by improper conduct on the part of anybody or that the [election] was made under any undue pressure from Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel as alleged, it would have certainly ordered fresh election.” (The Bombay Chronicle, 3-11-1937).

2 Vide the preceding item.

3 Vide “Note on Rentia Jayanti Celebration”, 17-7-1937
the wife of the Accountant-General of the Postal Department of the Punjab and daughter of Raja Narendranath. She is a very efficient lady. She had toured Travancore during the Harijan agitation there and was a member of the Sarda Committee. She is a learned lady.

I am sending with this a letter from Prema.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Can I now use your services if I require them for work outside?

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8531. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

59. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 17, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV.

I had written to you, without consulting her, that Shanta would be typing. I had a long talk with her yesterday, during which this matter also was discussed. She said she would like to go herself and do the typing there and spend a day with you. I liked this very much. She will, therefore, walk the distance on Monday morning. She will reach there at about 8 a.m. Give her lunch there. She keeps indifferent health. Please, therefore, don’t give her too many rotlis or too much bread. Give her milk, curds, jaggery, vegetable and some fruit. You may give her a slice of bread or a khakhri, unless she herself asks for more. And also talk to her a little. She is unhappy these days. That is why I engaged her in a talk while walking yesterday.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11532.

1 Vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 15-7-1937
60. LETTER TO SARASWATI

July 17, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

I have your letter. Look after Amtul Salaam well and learn Hindi and Urdu from her. Will Paparamma never write to me? Ba is improving. Do you ever write to Lakshmi? A soon as you become a good student you will be permitted to come to me.

Consult Amtul Salaam if you find it difficult to read and follow this letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

61. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

July 17, 1937

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I have had your first letter from Trivandrum. I have already written to you. Have good rest but follow the doctor’s instructions regarding diet. Give up worrying and do not insist on washing your own clothes, and so on. Accept humbly whatever services you require.

Ba is getting better. Kusum and Lilavati have by turns the duty of fanning me. From today Ba, too has started doing something or other.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 385.

62. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

July 18, 1937

DEAR KUMARAPPA,

Sankaran Nair was in the Maganwadi school and he was ailing. Expenses were incurred for medical attendance, medicine and food. For these there is a bill outstanding. He is now in the tannery. He has got Rs. 10 from Ramachandran. He says he should be excused the rest of the payment. What do you say?

BAPU

From a photostat: G. N. 10124

63. LETTER TO KANU GANDHI

July 18, 1937

CHI. KANU,

If it is necessary for you to cook your meals there, you may certainly do so. However, if you can arrange your programme as before, that will not be necessary. In any case don’t be careless about food. We will talk further when you go over here. Learn typing as quickly as possible.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II.

64. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,

July 18, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Did you get a copy of Nariman’s letter? For since I had given you no time the day before yesterday, I thought I might send you one. Shanta will go there today. Keep her as long as she wishes and get full work out of her.¹

I will try to send the post from here by 2 o’clock.

I have gone through The Sentinel.

You may send back Shanta when you think proper. She seems to me to be as pure as a pearl. She has the passport.

I don’t mind your having kept back the letter to Anandpriya, though it was not necessary to do so. My method of handling such matters is different. Now we will think about the subject only after we have heard from Vallabhbhai. Let the doctor fetch the instrument for measuring blood-pressure. Let him examine mine. I have made no changes in your article.

¹ Vide also “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 17-7-1937

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11533

65. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

July 18, 1937

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS.

I read all your letters with good care. I had no time to write nor had I any inclination. What could I write? The situation was changing and developing every moment. It did not seem proper to write anything in such circumstances. It was imperative to write to others so that their replies could weigh with me as far as possible. I cannot specify the impression your letters made on me. But I can assert that the letters received from there did not influence me as much as happenings here. It may be said that my condition was like that of a woman in labour. She cannot give expression to all the turmoil taking place within her. Now we know all that happened. Let me state this much that whatever Jawaharlal said and did in the Working Committee was marvellous. Even otherwise he held a high place in my esteem but now he has risen still higher. The beauty of it is that it is so in spite of our continuing difference of opinion.

The real difficulty starts now. It is good that the future depends upon our strength, truth, courage, firmness, hard work and duty. What you are doing is right. Let the authorities there understand that there is no ‘padding’ in the decision of the Working Committee. Every word is significant and everything will be acted upon. After all, what has been done has been done in the name of God, with the utmost faith in Him. I hope you are well. Remain so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 7984. Courtesy : G.D. Birla

1 “Weekly Letter” published in Harijan 24-7-1937.
66. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SEGAON,

July 19, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

The suggestion to fix the salary at Rs. 500 is worth thinking over seriously. I can’t understand house-rent allowance in addition to Rs. 500 and the distinction between Personal Assistant and Secretary. But if you hold different views, please let me know.

You must be observing that I am attending to Nariman. You should now leave everything to me. I am in no hurry to make a public statement. Don’t get upset.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

DAHYABHAI,

Forward this letter immediately to Father wherever he is.

[From Gujarati]

67. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[July 19, 1937]

CHI. MAHADEV,

Send a copy each of this to Raja, Rajendra Babu, Govind Vallabh, Khare, Kher and Vishvanathdas. Let Jawahar and

---

1 The Congress Working Committee meeting held at Wardha from March 15 to 22 had passed the following resolution: “Apart from free provision to be made by the State for residence and conveyance, the salaries of Ministers, Speakers and Advocate-Generals shall not exceed Rs. 500 per month, as laid down in the Karachi Resolution on Fundamental Rights and Economic Programme.” For the Karachi Resolution,

2 From the S.N. Register

3 C.Rajagopalachari, Premier of Madras

4 Govind Vallabh Pant, Premier of the United Provinces

5 Dr. N. B. Kher, Premier of the Central Provinces

6 B.G. Kher, Premier of Bombay.

7 The Premier of Orissa
Vallabhbhai also get a copy each. Tell them that it is an advance copy. If they wish to get it cancelled by sending a wire. You may, however, send the article¹ to Poona assuming that it will not be cancelled. If any of them wishes to send a wire after Wednesday, he should do so directly to Chandrashanker² at Poona. Give them the Poona address.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11541

68. LETTER TO WANDA DYNOWSKA

SEGHAON, WARDHA,
July 20, 1937

DEAR UMA,

I was glad to have your descriptive letter. I hope you are keeping sound health during your wandering. You will come when you like and stay in Segaon as long as you feel happy.

Love

BAPU

SHRI UMADEVI
C/O SHRI M. FRYDMAN
MYORE ROAD, BANGALORE CITY

69. LETTER TO MAURICE FRYDMAN

July 20, 1937

DEAR FRYDMAN³,

So you have taken sannyasa. Were you not a sannyasi even when you came to Segaon? But I understand what you mean. May God fulfil your aim of utterly selfless service of the most downtrodden. Come whenever the spirit moves you.

Love

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1199. Also C.W. 5095. Courtesy: Wanda Dynowska

¹ Vide “The Fundamental Difference”, 24-7-1937
² Chandrashanker Shukla who was editing Harijanbandhu.
³ A Polish engineer who had visited Segaon on June 25, 1936
MY DEAR DEO,

I have now heard from Shri Kelkar. He has forgotten to return the cutting which I had sent him.1 I, therefore send my reply from memory.

About Shri Savarkar, I did refuse to sign the memorial for, as I told those who came to me, it was wholly unnecessary as Shri Savarkar was bound to be released after the coming into force of the new Act, no matter who the Ministers were. And that is what has happened. The Savarkar Brothers, at least, know that whatever the differences between us as to certain fundamentals, I could never contemplate with equanimity their incarceration.

Perhaps, Dr. Savarkar2 will bear me out when I say that I did whatever was in my power after my own way to secure their release. And the barrister will perhaps recall the pleasant relations that existed between us when we met for the first time in London and how, when nobody was forthcoming, I presided at the meeting that was held in his honour in London.

As to my relations with the late Lokamanya Tilak, our differences were well known and yet we were on the friendliest terms. After all, you, Gangadharrao Deshpande and others who know me would perhaps testify that I yield to no one in my regard to Lokamanya for his burning patriotism, his fearlessness, his magnetic personality and his great learning.

As to office acceptance, I have not retraced my steps. I have no repentance for the advice I gave in 1920 to boycott the Legislatures. I have not a shadow of doubt that the abstention of the Congress deprived them of the false halo of glory which they had acquired. In now strongly advising the Congress to send its representatives to the Legislatures and even to accept office I have responded to the wholly new circumstances that have since come into being. I have never made a fetish of foolish consistency.

1 Vide “Letter to Shankarrao Deo”, 15-7-1937
2 Brother of V. D. Savarkar
Whilst you are at liberty to publish this letter, my personal inclination is that I should suffer in silence the cruel misinterpretation that Shri Kelkar has given of my motives and attitude.

The Bombay Chronicle. 27-7-1937

71. LETTER TO J.C. KUMARAPPA

July 20, 1937

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

I ought to have talked to you about Bhagwandas of Kalpi. I told him not to return unless I wrote to him. Do you want him? He seems to be no good as a teacher. Please tell me what you will have me to do. Meanwhile I am telling him not to come in answer to a letter just received.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10125.

72. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

July 20, 1937

CHI. PREMA,

How useless? I got your letter of the 16th today, the 20th, at 11. It is ekadashi today. How can I send my blessings so that they should reach you on the dashami? You must have got my previous letter. What shall I say to you? You have my blessings, of course. Continue to grow and be victorious.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10392. Also C.W. 6831. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

---

1 The addressee’s birthday was on July 17, 1937, the 10th day (dashami) of the bright half of Ashadha.

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY, 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 51
73. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

July 20, 1937

CHI. MANILAL-SUSHILA.

I sent one letter for you with Mr. Kallenbach. I didn’t have your letters before me when I wrote it. If what you write about Omar Sheth is true, it is a sad chapter of his life. If you think it would be proper for me to write about the matter. I might do so. Do you wish that I should write?

Ramdas has not gone there of his own accord. I urged him to go. He didn’t keep good health here in spite of all his efforts, and so Nimu suggested that I should send him to South Africa. I accordingly made the suggestion to him. The expenses were borne by Mr. Kallenbach. I have even told Ramdas that if he wishes he might stay there as long as it might be necessary just for the sake of his health. Let us see what happens now. Sita’s letter was a good one. That doesn’t mean, however, that she should forget Gujarati.

If Sushila, or both of you, can come over, I would be happy. But certainly not at the cost of the work there. Now that Ramdas has gone there, you may think what can be done.

About the Phoenix Trust, Mr. Kallenbach will explain. He himself intends to come here again in November.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4866

74. LETTER TO SITA GANDHI

July 20, 1937

CHI. SITA.

Your English letter was very good indeed. Won’t you write an equally good one in Gujarati? Or is it that you don’t know at all how to write Gujarati? Whatever that be, now that you have started, keep

1 Omar Zaveri of Pretoria
2 Addressee’s daughter; vide also the following item.
writing to me from time to time. You can also describe the things you are doing there.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 4867

75. LETTER TO L. R. DACHA

July 20, 1937

BHAI DACHA,

Mahadevbhai has given me your letter. Deviji also had spoken to me. Malkaniji is not likely to show partiality to anybody. He is a dedicated worker who serves in a spirit of self-sacrifice. Now serve there with a quiet mind.

Blessings from
M. K. GANDHI

SHRI L. R. DACHA
SOCIAL WORKER
3229 LINGAMPALLY
HYDERABAD

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 4743. Courtesy: L. R. Dacha

76. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

July 20, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

I got your note only yesterday. It was undated. It must have been written before you got my letter.

I am enclosing my opinion for Tandonji’s benefit
I have not yet been able to read today’s article.

I have forgotten what it was about Sholapur. You may reply at any rate. Let the thing take its own course. I can’t recollect anything.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 7703

1Vide also the preceding item.
77. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 20, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending today a good deal of material for Harijan. If you have not sent a wire to Kher, send one as follows—and if you have already sent, send a revision: “Received yours and Guzarilal’s letter. His objection seems unsurmountable. Take all assistance from him. Suggest keeping office vacant taking labour portfolio yourself. Bapu.”

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Prepare an envelope for Kallenbach there. I don’t remember the address.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. N. 11534

78. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 20, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Herewith the mail. From your note I can’t decide what should be done at the moment. We shall see later. As I have already sent [most of] the material today, it was not possible to send this early. I could have sent two articles by 1 o’clock. But Kanu told me that the papers for Harijan would be sent later in the evening. I, therefore, went on writing till 3 p.m.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. N. 11535

1 In the source, the telegram is in English.
79. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 21, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I read both your letters. You were keeping in touch with Amtul Salaam even in Bombay. I have seen in your letters, too, that you are still clinging to her. But I don’t think there is anything wrong in that. In the beginning, of course, you made a mistake in showering thoughtless love on her, but there was no impurity even in that. You shouldn’t, therefore, completely break off your relation with her. But there is no need at all for you to let her come to Bangalore, not even by way of atonement. There is a no need for any atonement. You are right in saying that she is a child. My advice now is that you yourself should write directly to her and tell her that I had asked your opinion; and that it was foolishness on your part to have shown such excessive love. You may tell her that her coming to Bangalore would not benefit either of you in any way, that on the contrary it would upset you, etc. Write a fairly long and affectionate letter. I will manage the rest. Don’t worry about her being hurt. Keep writing to her, but only postcards. Don’t mind expense on a postcard every week. She has asked me to send her your letters to me. I will not send to the one about her, but will send the other one in which you have described your discussion with the Christian. I will use my discretion every time. I will thus satisfy her. Try to bear with her having gone to Trivandrum. Your admiration for her had its root in a beautiful sentiment. Her sacrifice is beyond description. Poor girl, she lacks intelligence and has bad health. If her health improves and she gets strong, I hope to take much work from her. Don’t cut her off completely, but don’t think from this, either, that deep in my heart I want you to permit her to go to Bangalore. I fully endorse your decision on that point. I am sending this reply by return of post.¹

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7327. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

¹Vide also “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 27-7-1937
80. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 22, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

Maulana Saheb stopped for a day in Wardha and we had a long chat. He showed me the draft agreement between Muslim League members of the Assembly and the Congress members.¹ I thought it was a good document. But he told me that whilst you liked it, Tandonji did not. I have written to the latter about it as the Maulana suggested I should. What is the objection?

The Rs. 500 salary with big house and car allowances is being severely criticized.² The more I think of it, the more I dislike this extravagant beginning. I talked about this, too, to the Maulana.

How is Indu?

Love.

BAPU

81. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

July 22, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

A word seems to be missing in Thakkar Bapa’s award.³ Have you gone through it? If the missing words don’t affect the sense, I think that according to Bapa’s award the Municipality is bound to retain 185 men. However, I am awaiting Dinkarrao’s letter. Let him get the award interpreted by a lawyer and send the interpretation to me. There is no question of my being liberal. But if the award means that 185 men should be retained, how can we at all do anything else? I should like you to read the award when you get the time. I am sending a copy with this. I will not hurry you, but you, too, should avoid needless delay.

¹ Vide also letter to the addressee, “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 10-7-1937
² Vide also “Letter to Vallabhbhai Patel”, 19-7-1937
³ Vide “Letter to Amritlal V. Thakkar”, 5-4-1937
Has the Nariman issue quietened down?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

It will be enough if you read only the portions underlined by me on pages 6 and 10 of the award. Think over this. The Municipality will have to pay Rs. 160 more by way of salaries. If, however, it retrenches 25 persons, it will have a net saving of 25 x 11=275-160=115. Is this the meaning of Bapa’s decision? If he has not fixed the number anywhere, wouldn’t this be the result?

[From Gujarati]

82. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

July 22, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

I read Shankar’s letter in my present none too good health. I send with this my reply to it and the copy sent by Bal. Send the letter to Bal. You, of course, should read my letters.

I don’t feel inclined to involve you in this matter. But if...¹ is really what Shankar believes he is, it is necessary from every point of view to know the truth.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 7696

83. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHAGANI,

July 23, 1937

RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
SUMMER HILL
SIMLA
AWAITING YOU MONDAY. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3797. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6953

¹ The name has been omitted.
84. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

SEGAON,
July 23, 1937

BELOVED DAUGHTER.¹

I got your letter. For the present stay on there. Complete one month. We will think afterwards. You can stitch clothes for Harijans.
There is enough to do there. But do only as much as you can stand.

If Saraswati really wishes to come and Ramachandran also approves of it, I should certainly like her to come. She can gain practical experience here. If Ramachandran agrees, let me know what she wishes.

I have written to Bari about the Rs. 1,000 and told him that if he intends to give the sum he should give it unconditionally.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 386.

85. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

July 23, 1937

I got your letter. You know my opinion about you. You never undertake any task beyond your capacity, and as you are straightforward you bring credit to whatever you undertake. But in the sphere of what is known as politics, it is not the fittest men who are appointed to do particular jobs. No leader can satisfy that criterion.
You should realize this and bear with what is happening. I would expect even more from you. You shouldn’t even think about such things. One may accept whatever is offered to one, provided it is within one’s capacity, and never grieve over something not being offered. When one has no other aim except service, where is the room for ambition? And you are all out for service. But since you have been overcome by ignorance, listen to me. You have reached your present position through sheer merit. And the service you are doing now is not small in any way. You may become a Mayor and enter the
All-India field if you can through worthy efforts. For becoming a ¹ The superscription and the subscription are in Urdu.

Minister, as the saying goes, his berries will be sold who knows how to shout. God knows why, but all over the world people pine for such positions. Since from among the many candidates only a few can be selected, does it not follow that only those will be selected who have to included? However, let your candidature be made known in a polite way. Please understand the meaning of the word “polite” here. One must observe the utmost delicacy when suggesting oneself as a candidate in such a matter. If the limit is crossed, one will invite humiliation. The best claim to candidature, of course, is silent service and unrivalled fitness. Calm down. Don’t take the matter to heart.

[From Gujarati]
Bapuni Prasadi, pp. 165-6.

86. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 23, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Rajkumari is arriving on Monday by the 11.35 train. Read the accompanying letter. I believe Jamnalalji will not be there at the time. You will, of course, go to receive her. Do what is needed. She will stay for two days.

I have talked to Anna about Devraj1. He will write to him. I am not very hopeful.

Shankerlal may come tomorrow at 8, or whenever he wishes to come.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. N. 11537

87. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

July 23, 1937

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

Come when you can. September is also a good time. I will tell Shankerlal about the shawl.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32814

1 Gandhiji’s typist.
88. LETTER TO SARASWATI

July 23, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

I have your letter. Yes, you may certainly come over here if Ramachandran, Paparamma, Father and Kanti approve of it. On my part, I shall love to have you here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6162. Also C.W. 3435. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

89. THE FUNDAMENTAL DIFFERENCE

It is necessary to contemplate for a moment the fundamental difference between the old and the new order. In order fully to realize it we must try to forget for the moment the crushing limitations of the Act. Seeing that the Congress has gone to the farthest limit and has accepted office, let every Congressman note the power it has taken. Whereas formerly the Ministers were amenable to the control of the Governors, now they are under the control of the Congress. They are responsible to the Congress. They owe their status to the Congress. The Governors and the Civil Service though irremovable are yet answerable to the Ministers. The Ministers have effective control over them up to a point. That point enables them to consolidate the power of the Congress, i.e., the people. The Ministers have the whip-hand so long as they act within the four corners of the Act, no matter how distasteful their actions may be to the Governors. It will be found upon examination that so long as the people remain non-violent, the Congress Ministers have enough freedom of action for national growth.

For effective use of this power, the people have to give hearty co-operation to the Congress and their Ministers. If the latter do wrong or they neglect their duty, it is open to any person to complain to the Secretary of the A.I.C.C. and seek redress. But no one may take the law into his own hands.

\[\text{Vide also "Letter to Amtussalaam", 23-7-1937}\]
Congressmen should also realize that there is no other political party in the field to question the authority of the Congress. For the other parties have never penetrated the villages. And that is not a work which can be done in a day. So far therefore, as I can see a vast opportunity is at the disposal of the Ministers in terms of the Congress objective of Complete Independence, if only they are honest, selfless, industrious, vigilant and solicitous for the true welfare of the starving millions. No doubt, there is great validity in the argument that the Act has left the Ministers no money to spend for the nation-building departments. But this is largely an illusion. I believe with Sir Daniel Hamilton that labour, and not metal, is real money. Paper backed by labour is as good as, if not better than, paper backed by gold. Here are the sentiments of an English financier\(^1\) who has held high office in India:

The worst legacy we have left to India is a high-grade Service. What has been done cannot be undone. I should now start something independent. Whatever is being done today with ‘money motive’ should in future be based on ‘service motive’. Why should teachers and doctors be paid high salaries? Why cannot most of the work be done on a co-operative basis? Why should you worry about capital when there are seven hundred million hands to toil? If things are done on a co-operative basis, which in other words is modified socialism, money would not be needed, at least not in large quantity.

I find this verified in little Segaon. The four hundred adults of Segaon can easily put ten thousand rupees annually into their pockets if only they would work as I ask them. But they won’t. They lack co-operation, they do not know the art of intelligent labour, they refuse to learn anything new. Untouchability blocks the way. If someone presented them with one lakh of rupees, they would not turn it to account. They are not responsible for this state of affairs. We the middle class are. What is true of Segaon is true of other villages. They will respond by patient effort as they are responding in Segaon though ever so slowly. The State, however, can do much in this direction with out having to spend a single pie extra. The State officials can be utilized for serving the people instead of harassing them. The villagers may not be coerced into doing anything. They can be educated to do things which enrich them morally, mentally, physically and economically.

_Harijan_, 24-7-1937

\(^1\) Sir George Schuster
90. A KHADI JOURNAL

For the past four years monthly journal has been issued in Wardha called Maharashtra Khadi Patrika. It has from month to month registered the progress of khadi in Maharashtra. It has hitherto been issued in Marathi. But its usefulness and the inclusion of Mahakoshal in the sphere of the Maharashtra Branch of the A.I.S.A. have necessitated conversion of the journal into Hindi. The first number is before me. The journal is a record of the great progress khadi has made under the very able guidance of Shri Jajuji assisted as he is by a devoted band of workers. The price of the journal is only Re. 1 per year, a single copy being 1½ as. It has no advertisements. It has no padding. It contains an unvarnished and faithful account of the progress of khadi within the jurisdiction of the Maharashtra Branch. The work touches the social and economic life of the people who are engaged in it. For the week, I wish to draw attention to a great experiment the branch is making in enabling spinning to yield a wage equal to any in the villages. Three annas per day was the minimum accepted provisionally and in the transition stage instead of eight annas minimum I have aimed at. If the buying public were to give intelligent and patriotic help, the objective can be achieved sooner than expected. The present experiment is one of increasing wages by inducing the spinners to do their own carding. The result has been most gratifying. Sixteen workers spun for two weeks slivers carded for them and after being taught carding for one month they spun their own slivers. The result was that in the place of 161 chhatanks, they spun in the same period 198, the average count increased from 14 to 18, the test from 55 to 59, their earnings from Rs. 12-4-0 to Rs. 24-0-3. This is a striking example of how with intelligence and application earnings can even be doubled.

_Harijan_, 24-7-1937

---

1 One-sixteenth of a seer
91. LETTER TO K.M. MUNSHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 24, 1937

Bhai Munshi,

I got your letter. How can you expect any mercy from me? I can't approve of your princely salaries and additional princely house-rent allowances and conveyance allowances. Moreover, you will draw your salary at one rate and your secretary at another and lower rate, though both of you are guests of the same family. Why such distinctions under the Congress flag? When Vijayaraghavachari was President, Motilalji was secretary. If we were paying salaries, would we have paid less to Motilalji? To me this is like a fly in the very first morsel.

Take care of your health. Don't let there be unpleasantness among yourselves. Overcome co-workers' anger with forbearance.

Blessings to you both from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7618. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

92. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

[On or after July 24, 1937]¹

My dear Jawaharlal,

Your letter.

I liked your statement about salaries. Apart from my convenience I do think that Wardha is the best and the quietest place for W[orking] C[ommittee] meetings.

I am in constant correspondence with Nariman². His latest is a marvellous piece of impudence. You will see my two last letters to him. M. will send you copies.³ If he does not accept my proposal, I ¹From the reference to the addressee’s “statement about salaries”, presumably of public servants, which was issued on July 24, 1937; vide Selected Works of Jawaharlal Nehru, Vol. 8, pp. 284-6.

²K. F. Nariman, President, Bombay Provincial Congress Committee.

³Vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 2-8-1937
shall issue my statement'. Therein I propose to tell him that you could have no objection to publishing the whole of the correspondence between the W. C. and him. You too will have to make a statement. Yours may follow mine if the latter becomes inevitable.

I am trying to find time for writing about Essay on Hindi.²

Love.

BAPU

From the original Gandhi-Nehru Papers. Courtesy Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

93. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 24/25, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

I have been handling the Nariman affair according to my lights. You should now forget all about the matter. Ignore all attacks. Surely you don't care for fame, do you? And you don't have to get your son or daughter married. "Let him malign who will, let another bow and let still another say what he will."

Now about Anandpriya.¹ I don't mean anything more than that in such matters your approach differs from mine. Who can say which approach is better? We can't compare them even on the basis of the results. Even if my approach does not produce the desired result or produces a seemingly contrary result, I wouldn't give it up. Nor would you give up yours. This is a matter of the heart. Isn't it but natural that everybody should follow his own? I don't expect him to improve through my letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Now this. My health is good. I only need a little rest which I am taking.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11560

¹ Vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 2-8-1937
² Jawaharlal Nehru wrote an essay entitled “The Question of Languages” for the Congress Political and Economic Studies Series. For extracts from it and Gandhiji’s foreword dated August 3, 1937,
³ Vide ”Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 18-7-1937
94. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 25, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I got the post at 3.15. Janba had come earlier but had not brought the post. Now do what you can. I will comply with your request that I should observe silence. I feel much better.

Read my letter to Shanta. Think over it and cancel the passage if you wish. Personally that is what I desire. I would of course agree. . .

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11538

95. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 26, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

If Shanta ultimately decides to stay on, look after her needs. Make her proficient in the daily chores. See that she does not exert herself beyond her strength. Let her have sufficient fruit. Make her sit with you for meals. Fix a salary for her. See that she goes out for regular walks.

Give Kanu plenty of work. Let him learn typing. Give him English typing to do. Take work from Chhotelal, too.

Get the money soon. The present stock will run out in a few days.

I am bringing Balkrishna here today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11539

1 A word is illegible in the source.
96. LETTER TO M.N. ROY

SEGAON, WARDHA,

July 27, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I entirely agree with you that every Congressman should fearlessly express the opinion he holds after due deliberation. You ask me how you can best serve the Congress. Since you are new to the organization, I should say you would serve it best by mute service.

Yours sincerely,

SHRI M. N. ROY
"INDEPENDENT INDIA"
BOMBAY 4

97. LETTER TO LORD LINLITHGOW

July 27, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your kind letter. I had for some time intended to ask for an appointment to discuss the possibility of lifting the ban on Khan Saheb Abdul Ghaffar Khan's entry into the Frontier Province and of my visiting that Province. Of course there is no bar against me but I had no intention of going there except with the approval of the authorities.

Your letter is therefore doubly welcome. I assume that there would be no objection to my discussing these two points at our meeting. I shall gladly report myself at Viceroy's House, New Delhi, on 4th August next at 11.30 a.m.

I remain,

Yours sincerely,

M.K. GANDHI

From a Copy: C.W. 7889. Courtesy: G.D. Birla. Also In the Shadow of the Mahatma, pp. 235-6

1 In his Letter dated July 23, the addressee had invited Gandhiji to meet him at Delhi. After his Assam tour, the Viceroy was passing through Delhi en route to Simla.
98. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

July 27, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I have not been able to overtake your letters. Appointments and Harijan writing overwhelm me. Here is Nanda Babu's opinion¹.

Balkrishna was brought here this morning. He has been having fever. He has decided traces in his right lung. Dr. Batra who is just now living with me suggested his being brought here. He cheerfully consented and is now housed in Jamnalalji’s new cottage. It is quite fine.

Rajkumari came in today. She goes back on 28th and returns on 6th. Rameshwari is still here. So every inch of space is occupied.

I hope you are making steady progress.

After all Shanta is not going. Her mother having learnt of her preparations sends an airmail letter saying she is not wanted by her. Therefore the passage is being cancelled. She is helping Mahadev and she is a very great help to him, Radhakisan having gone for good.

Love to you and Subhas.

BAPU

[PS.]

Remember me to the Dharmavirs.

From the original: C.W. 6394. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9860

99. LETTER TO K.F. NARIMAN

July 27, 1937

MY DEAR NARIMAN,

I got your letter yesterday. I write the reply today, but too late for today's post.

If you trust me, here is my suggestion. Let there be a definite reference drawn by you. I shall show it to the Sardar; and, if he approves, I shall ask Sir Govindrao to take evidence on it and give his decision. The inquiry should be private. I feel that the charge of Sardar having influenced the voters is inevitable. For it he did not use

¹ Vide footnote 2, “Letter to Mirabehn”, 10-7-1937 his opinion of you against your election. There will be nothing for any judge to go upon so, whilst Sardar will have to give grounds for his opinion, you will have to prove that he used his opinion to influence the voters.

As for agitation, I see that you do not disapprove of it. In my opinion it amounts to coercion. Is there any obligation on the part of any leader to take a particular colleague into his Cabinet? Whatever the public may say or do, I tell you that you are estranging your real friends from you by your permitting the agitation to continue as it is doing. If you have accepted the Working Committee's judgment, you have to say so and acquit the Sardar of any complicity. If you have not, and I think you have not, you have to prove your charge against the Sardar. But when he offers to appear before a judge of joint choice, you are in honour bound to stop the agitation which hurts you .
and you only. Please do not think me prejudiced against you because I write to you frankly. My frankness is a test of my good wishes.

I daily receive letters asking me to intervene and give my opinion in public. I am referring my correspondents to you telling them that so far as I am concerned, they have access to all my letters to you. But I do not wish to say anything to the Press at this stage unless you want me.

I hope my letter is clear to you.

You have chosen an unfortunate illustration in Dr. Rajan's case.
He carried on or continued no agitation. He meekly submitted to the adverst verdict.

Yours, etc.,

100. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

July 27, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have been at this since morning. I have not slept for more than half an hour since five. I have just finished revising the article and have completed it. I, therefore, couldn't send Janba earlier. I see that on Mondays the typing should be done here. We must have two typewriters.
I can’t attend to the other work today. Send the following wire to Rajaji:

Premier Rajagopalachari, Madras. Suggest referring Meherally’s speech to President for instructions. Bapu.

Rajkumari is here just now.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. N. 11540.

101. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

_July 27, 1937_

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I got your letter today and Kanti’s, too. I had asked him if he would approve of your going there and also informed him that I was forwarding his letters to you. He writes that he would not like your going to Bangalore, and he does not wish his letters to be passed on to you. He says: “She may well pray that I may yet again develop filial love towards her but this is not the case. I bear no more love towards her than what I bear towards the other womenfolk of the Ashram.” Hence I will not be able to let you go there, though I had wanted you to do so on your way back to the Ashram. Do not take Kanti’s decision to heart. I shall convey to you the news of his wellbeing. By all means go to Bombay if necessary, for Baqui. It might even be necessary to go in order to look after Mother. It is possible that your short stay there might prove helpful to your brothers. Do stay there for at least a month.²

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostate of the Hindi: G.N. 387

1 Vide “Letter to Sampurnanand”, 27-7-1937
2 Vide also “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi,”, 21-7-1937
102. LETTER TO SAMPURNANAND

July 27, 1937

BHAI SAMPURNANAND,

I had taken your book¹ to Tithal, and had started reading it there. I finished it last Saturday, i.e., on July 24. I used to read it whenever I had a few minutes to spare. I have read it carefully from cover to cover. I liked the book, the language is sweet but it might also be regarded a bit difficult for those totally unacquainted with Sanskrit. The glossary of English-Hindi and Hindi-English equivalents given at the end is useful for the student. It is laudable that arguments in favour of socialism have been put forward without any disparagement of others.

I have no difficulty in accepting almost all the principles of socialism propounded in the book. I have also read with care the book² by Jayaprakash. Can there possibly be any difference between his interpretation and yours? Neither in your book nor in his do I find a clear idea how the ultimate revolution in India will be brought about. This I could not understand even after discussing it with many others. Only the day before yesterday a report of Meherally’s Madras speech came into my hands and I went through it³. It explains fully what the socialists are doing. The object is to start a revolt in every sphere. But a revolt has never been possible without violence. In your book, however, I find nothing of the kind. Have we or have not we acquired strength through peaceful ways such as the civil disobedience or non-violent non-co-operation carried on since 1920?

You say that the principles of socialism cannot be fully implemented until we have State power. Supposing, you ask, a powerful land-owner turned a complete socialist, could he well and truly act upon his principles? Assuming that he had no punitive power, could an Indian raja who was a socialist be able to implement socialism? I recollect your having written that socialism cannot be practised in its entirety until the whole world turns socialist. Does this imply that even if we gain complete independence socialism will not

¹ Samajvad.
² Why Socialism?
³ Vide also “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 27-7-1937., and “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 30-7-1937 be fully or almost fully implemented? I hope you have understood my point. The purpose behind this question is only to ascertain how far it would be possible for me to accept the socialist principles and the means of their implementation.

You may reply to this letter at your leisure. I am in no hurry.

Yours,
M. K. GANDHI

103. A SILENCE-DAY NOTE

[Before July 28, 1937]¹

Surely I can’t do such a thing myself? I explain all the steps. We hold frequent discussions. What more can I do? He can part from me and do what he likes, but under my supervision he can only in this manner. I know that at present we are making the minimum use of his services but in this lies self-control on our part and his part and this self-control is a test of our faith that morality is inextricably linked with our outward activity.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 7693

104. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

[Before July 28, 1937]²

CHI. KANTI,

Read this letter and preserve it. I have accepted Devdas’s demand. If now any additional expenses are incurred for you, I will see about them. Send the account also to me. Write a pleasant letter to Devdas. He must be relieved of worry. I have not decided where I will get the money from.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 10230. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

¹ The source bears a note to the effect that this was filed on July 28, 1937.
² The date is inferred from the contents and the subsequent letter to the addressee; vide “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi”
105. LETTER TO K. F. NARIMAN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 29, 1937

MY DEAR NARIMAN,

I have just seen your letter to the Press.1 You are strange. You won’t wait even whilst you are in correspondence with me. Your letter compels a public statement from me. I want to avoid it if I can.

The Working Committee has never refused to give you a tribunal. It has told you to frame your charge-sheet before it can decide whether to give it or not. But, if you like, I am willing to ask the President to give you a tribunal even before you have framed your charge-sheet. If you do not want me to do so, shall I make a statement of my impressions that have been made upon me throughout this sad episode? Please wire your reply2.

I may state that Sardar is here. He is quite willing to join me in asking the President to give you an independent tribunal.

Yours sincerely,

106. EXTRACT FROM LETTER TO K. F. NARIMAN

[After July 29, 1937]3

If you do not want an enquiry, please say so without any mental reservation. To say that others are pressing you to drop the matter has no meaning. I do not like your statement at all. You do not appear to realize the harm you are doing. I am as anxious to safeguard your interests as I am of the Sardar’s. If the Sardar is my lieutenant, so are you. The only difference is that he does not allow himself to be

1 Nariman had issued a statement on July 28.
2 In Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, Vol. II. P. 239, Narahari Parikh explains: “In reply to this Nariman said that he found himself in a most difficult position. Great pressure was being brought to bear on him not to pursue the matter further, and even those whom he approached as arbitrators in this matter also advised him similarly.” For Gandhiji’s rejoinder, vide the following item.
3 According to the source, this letter was written after Gandhiji had received the addressee’s reply to his letter dated July 29; vide the preceding item.
prejudiced against me whenever I differ from him or show him his mistakes. You, however, are impatient when I point out your mistakes. All the members of the Working Committee are surely not your enemies. Nevertheless you seem to nurse some grievance against them all. Finally, and in spite of your distrust, I would like you to believe me when I say that I am acting in this matter solely as your well-wisher and friend.

_Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, Vol. II, p. 239._

107. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

_SEGAON, WARDHA,
July [28/1] 30, 1937_

CHI. KANTI,

I got your letter. I have written\(^1\) to Amtul Salaam as desired by you. She will certainly be very much hurt, but she ought to know your state of mind. I will also not send her your letters.

You will not have to ask anything from Devdas. I will look after it. You won't have to send even the account to Devdas.

I have had no letter from Prabhavati for the last 15 days. Probably she doesn't write because of the death of her father-in-law.

Rajkumari is here. Kanu has already returned. Radhakrishna has left for good. But, as we have Shantabehn in his place, the work is being looked after.

I wrote the above in three instalments spread over three days, for after writing a few lines before the morning prayer I could hardly get time during the day to write more.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7328. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

---

\(^1\) From the last paragraph

\(^2\) Vide”Letter to Amtussalaam”, 27-7-1937
108. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SEGAON, WARDHA,
July 30, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I hope Mahadev told you yesterday in addition to acknowledging your essay on Hindi\(^{1}\) that the Viceroy had invited me to Delhi on the 4th for no special reason but merely to have the pleasure of meeting him. I replied\(^{2}\) saying that he had anticipated me for I wanted to seek an interview with him about the ban on Khan Saheb and my desire to visit the Frontier. I am accordingly reaching Delhi on the 4th. The appointment is for 11.30. Therefore, I hope to be able to leave the same day, returning to Segaon on the 5th.

But this letter is to send you a copy of Zakir's letter in reply to my letter giving my reaction to the recent riot in Bombay and the wretched Hindi-Urdu controversy. I thought that I should share with you this considered letter.

I do not regard the Jhansi election as a rout. It is an honourable defeat, giving rise to the hope that if we plod away we can effectively take the Congress message to the Mussalmans. But I still abide by my opinion that the mere taking of the message unaccompanied by substantial work in the villages won't answer our purpose in the end. But it all depends upon the way in which we want to generate power.

Meherally's speech in Madras is an eye-opener for me. I wonder how far he represents the general socialistic view. Rajaji has sent me a cutting containing his speech. I hope he has sent a copy to you also. I call it a bad speech of which you should take notice. This is going contrary to the Congress policy as I read it.

There is also Roy's speech at Madras. I take it, you get all such cuttings. Nevertheless, for ready reference I enclose the cuttings which Pyarelal has made for me. Roy has been writing to me, too. You should see his latest letter. It will go with this if I have not destroyed it. What is your reaction to his attitude? As I have already told you I find it difficult to understand him.\(^{3}\)

\(^{1}\) Vide footnote 1, “Letter to Mirabehn”, 10-7-1937
\(^{2}\) Vide “Letter to Lord Linlithgow”, 27-7-1937
\(^{3}\) Vide also “Letter to M.N. Roy”, 27-7-1937
Your calling khadi 'livery of freedom' will live as long as we speak the English language in India. It needs a first-class poet to translate into Hindi the whole of the thought behind that enchanting phrase. For me it is not merely poetry but it enunciates a great truth whose full significance we have yet to grasp.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Though the paragraph about Roy's speech follows the one about Meherally's it is not to suggest that it is on a par with M's.

109. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

July 30, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

I wanted to show this to you, but forgot. It would be better if you yourself replied to it. Or send for him in person. After you have done with the letter, send it to Rajaji with your remarks.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapune Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 208

110. LETTER TO D.B. KALELKAR

July 30, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

I have gone through what you sent with Vora. Nothing else occurs to me. Clause 11 should come at the end, or Clause 21 should replace Clause 11 and the latter should become Clause 12. You will understand this change as soon as you read the draft. I am sending herewith an essay by Jawaharlal on Hindi. If you can go through it today, please do so and send your suggestions. Jawaharlal has asked

1 Jawaharlal Nehru used this phrase in his appeal to the country to celebrate August 1 as 'Ministry Day'; vide “Livery of Freedom”, 31-7-1937 for my comments. I should send them immediately. If you are very busy and cannot send any suggestions, don't worry. It will suffice if I get them before you leave tomorrow.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7702

111. CRITICISM ANSWERED

My article on Congress Ministries has attracted attention and evoked criticism. The latter demands an answer.

How can total prohibition be brought about immediately if at all? By 'immediately' I mean an immediate planned declaration bringing about total prohibition not later than three years from 14th July 1937, the date of the taking of office by the first Congress Ministry. I imagine that it is quite possible to bring it about in two years. But not being aware of administrative difficulties I put down three years. I count loss of this revenue as of no account whatsoever. Prohibition will remain a far cry, if the Congress is to count the cost in a matter of first-class national importance.

Let it be remembered that this drink and drugs revenue is a form of extremely degrading taxation. All taxation to be healthy must return tenfold to the tax-payer in the form of necessary services. Excise makes people pay for their own corruption–moral, mental and physical. It falls like a dead weight on those who are least able to bear it. The revenue is largely derived, I believe, from industrial labour which together with field labour the Congress almost exclusively represents.

The loss of revenue is only apparent. Removal of this degrading tax enables the drinkers, i.e., the tax-payer to earn and spend better. Apart, therefore, from the tremendous gain, it means a substantial economic gain to the nation.

I put this prohibition in the forefront because its result is immediate; Congressmen and especially women have bled for it; national prestige will rise in a manner it cannot by any single act that I can conceive, and the other five Provinces are highly likely to follow

1 Vide "Congress Ministries", 17-7-1937
The Mussalman non-Congress Prime Ministers are equally interested in seeing India sober rather than drunk.

The cry of great expenditure in preventing illicit distillation is thoughtless where it is not hypocritical. India is not America. The American example is a hindrance rather than a help to us. In America drinking carries no shame with it. It is the fashion there to drink. It reflects the greatest credit on the determined minority in America that by sheer force of its moral weight it was able to carry through the prohibition measure however shortlived it was. I do not regard that experiment to have been a failure. I do not despair of America once more returning to it with still greater fervour and better experience in dealing with it. It may be that if India carries out prohibition it will hasten the advent of prohibition in America. In no part of the world is prohibition as easy to carry out as in India for with us it is only a minority that drinks. Drinking is generally considered disrespectful. And there are millions, I believe, who have never known what drink is.

But why should prevention of illicit distillation cost any more than prevention of other crimes? I should make illicit distillation heavily punishable and think no more about it. Some of it will go on perhaps till doomsday as thieving will. I would not set up a special agency to pry into illicit distilleries. But I would punish anyone found drunk though not disorderly (in the legal sense) in streets or other public places with a substantial fine or alternatively with indeterminate imprisonment to end when the erring one has earned his or her keep.

This however, is the negative part. Voluntary organizations especially manned by women will work in the labour areas. They will visit those who are addicted to drink and try to wean them from the habit. Employers of labour will be expected by law to provide cheap, healthy refreshment, reading and entertainment rooms where the working men can go and find shelter, knowledge, health-giving food and drink and innocent fun.

Thus prohibition means a type of adult education of the nation and not merely a closing down of grog shops.

Prohibition should begin by preventing any new shop from being licensed and closing some that are in danger of becoming a nuisance to the public. How far the latter is possible without having to pay heavy compensation I do not know. In any case, generally, licences that lapse should not be renewed. No new shops should be opened on any account. Whatever immediately is possible in law should be done without a moment's thought so far as the revenue is concerned.

But what is the meaning or extent of total prohibition? Total prohibition is prohibition against sales of intoxicating drinks and drugs, except under medical prescription by a practitioner licensed for the purpose and to be purchasable only at Government depots maintained therefor. Foreign liquors in prescribed quantity may be imported for the use of Europeans who cannot or will not do without their drink. These will also be sold in bottles in select areas and under authorized certificates. Hotels and restaurants will cease to sell intoxicating drinks.

But what about relief to the peasantry which is oppressed by excessive taxation, rack-renting, illegal exactions, indebtedness which can never be fully discharged, illiteracy, superstition and disease, peculiarly due to pauperism? Of course it comes first in terms of numbers and economic distress. But the relief of the peasantry is an elaborate programme and does not admit of wholesale treatment. And no Congress Ministry that does not handle this universal problem can exist for ten days. Every Congressman is instinctively interested, if largely academically, in this problem. He has inherited the legacy from the birth of the Congress. The distress of the peasantry may be said to be the raison d'etre of the Congress. There was and is no fear of this subject being neglected. I fear the same cannot be said of prohibition. It became an integral part of the Congress programme only in 1920. In my opinion, the Congress, now that it is in power, will put itself morally right only by once for all courageously and drastically dealing with this devastating evil.

How to solve the problem of education is the problem unfortunately mixed up with the disappearance of the drink revenues. No doubt there are ways and means of raising fresh taxation. Professors Shah and Khambhatta have shown that even this poor country is capable of raising fresh taxation. Riches have not yet been sufficiently taxed. In this of all countries in the world possession of inordinate wealth by individuals should be held as a crime against Indian humanity. Therefore the maximum limit of taxation of riches beyond a certain margin can never be reached. In England, I understand, they have already gone as far as 70% of the earnings beyond a prescribed figure. There is no reason why India should not go to a much higher figure. Why should there not be death duties?
Those sons of millionaires who are of age and yet inherit their parents' wealth, are losers for the very inheritance. The nation thus becomes a double loser. For the inheritance should rightly belong to the nation. And the nation loses again in that the full faculties of the heirs are not drawn out, being crushed under the load of riches. That death duties cannot be imposed by provincial Governments does not affect my argument.

But as a nation we are so backward in education that we cannot hope to fulfil our obligations to the nation in this respect in a given time during this generation, if the programme is to depend on money. I have therefore made bold, even at the risk of losing all reputation for constructive ability, to suggest that education should be self-supporting. By education I mean an all-round drawing out of the best in child and man—body, mind and spirit. Literacy is not the end of education nor even the beginning. It is only one of the means whereby man and woman can be educated. Literacy in itself is no education. I would therefore begin the child's education by teaching it a useful handicraft and enabling it to produce from the moment it begins its training. Thus every school can be made self-supporting, the condition being that the State takes over the manufactures of these schools.

I hold that the highest development of the mind and the soul is possible under such a system of education. Only every handicraft has to be taught not merely mechanically as is done today but scientifically, i.e., the child should know the why and the wherefore of every process. I am not writing this without some confidence, because it has the backing of experience. This method is being adopted more or less completely wherever spinning is being taught to workers. I have myself taught sandal-making and even spinning on these lines with good results. This method does not exclude a knowledge of history and such general information by word of mouth. One imparts ten times as much in this manner as by reading and writing. The signs of the alphabet may be taught later when the pupil has learnt to distinguish wheat from chaff and when he has somewhat developed his or her tastes. This is a revolutionary proposal but it saves immense labour and enables a student to acquire in one year what he may take much longer learn. This means all-round economy. Of course the pupil learns mathematics whilst he is learning his handicraft.
I attach the greatest importance to primary education which according to my conception should be equal to the present matriculation less English. If all the collegians were all of a sudden to forget their knowledge, the loss sustained by the sudden lapse of the memory of say a few lacs of collegians would be as nothing compared to the loss that the nation has sustained and is sustaining through the ocean of darkness that surrounds three hundred millions. The measure of illiteracy is no adequate measure of the prevailing ignorance among the millions of villagers.

I would revolutionize college education and relate it to national necessities. There would be degrees for mechanical and other engineers. They would be attached to the different industries which should pay for the training of the graduates they need. Thus the Tatas would be expected to run a college for training engineers under the supervision of the State, the mill associations would run among them a college for training graduates whom they need. Similarly for the other industries that may be named. Commerce will have its college. There remain arts, medicine and agriculture. Several private arts colleges are today self-supporting. The State would, therefore, cease to run its own. Medical colleges would be attached to certified hospitals. As they are popular among monied men they may be expected by voluntary contributions to support medical colleges. And agricultural colleges to be worthy of the name must be self-supporting. I have a painful experience of some agricultural graduates. Their knowledge is superficial. They lack practical experience. But if they had their apprenticeship on farms which are self-sustained and answer the requirements of the country, they would not have to gain experience after getting their degrees and at the expense of their employers.

This is not a fanciful picture. If we would but shed our mental laziness, it would appear to be an eminently reasonable and practical solution of the problem of education that faces the Congress Ministers and therefore the Congress. If the declarations recently made on behalf of the British Government mean what they sound to the ear, the Ministers have the organizing and organized ability of the Civil Service at their disposal to execute their policy. The Services have learnt the art of reducing to practice the policies laid down for them even by capricious Governors and Viceroy's. Let the Ministers lay down a well-conceived but determined policy, and let the Services redeem the promise made on their behalf and prove worthy of the salt they eat.
There remains the question of teachers. I like Prof. K.T. Shah's idea expressed in his article elsewhere of conscription being applied to men and women of learning.¹ The may be conscripted to give a number of years, say, five, to the teaching for which they may be qualified, on a salary not exceeding their maintenance on a scale in keeping with the economic level of the country. The very high salaries that the teachers and professors in the higher branches demand must go. The village teacher has to be replaced by more competent ones.

My Suggestion to turn jails into reformatories to make them self-supporting has not excited much criticism. Only one remark I have noticed. If they turn out marketable goods, I am told, they will unfairly compete with the open market. There is no substance in the remark. But I anticipated it in 1922 when I was a prisoner in Yeravda. I discussed my plan with the then Home Member, the then Inspector-General of Prisons, and two Superintendents who were in charge of the prison in succession. Not one of them cavilled at my suggestion. The then Home Member was even enthusiastic about it and wanted me to put my scheme in writing, if he could obtain the permission from the Governor. But His Excellency would not hear of a prisoner making suggestions regarding jail administration! And so my scheme never saw the light of day. But the author believes in its soundness today just as much as when he first made it. This was the plan: All industries that were not paying should be stopped. All the jails should be turned into hand-spinning and hand-weaving institutions. They should include (wherever possible) cotton-growing to producing the finest cloth. I suggest that almost every facility for this purpose already exists in the prison. Only the will has to be there. Prisoners must be treated as defectives, not criminals to be looked down upon. Warders should cease to be terrors of the prisoners, but the jail officials should be their friends and instructors”. The only one indispensable condition is that the State should buy all the khadi that may be turned out by the prisons at cost price. And if there is a surplus, the public may get it at a trifling higher price to cover the expense of running a sales depot. If my suggestion is adopted, the jails will be linked to the villages and they will spread to them the message of khadi and discharged prisoners may become model citizens of the State.

¹ Vide also the following item.
I am reminded that salt being a Central subject, the poor Ministers cannot do anything. I should be painfully surprised if they cannot. The Central Government has to operate in provincial territories. Provincial Governments are bound to protect people within their jurisdiction against being dealt with unjustly even by the Centre. And the Governors are bound to back the protests of their Ministers against unjust dealings with the people of their respective Provinces. If the Ministers are on the alert, there should be no difficulty in the poor villagers helping themselves to the salt without undue interference on behalf of the Central authority. I have no fear of such undue interference.

In conclusion, I should like to add that whatever I have said about prohibition, education and jails is presented merely for the consideration of Congress Ministers and the interested public. I may not withhold from the public the views which–however strange, visionary or unpractical they may appear to critics–I have held tenaciously for long.

_Harijan_, 31-7-1937

112. PROF. K.T. SHAH’S SUGGESTIONS

Prof. K.T. Shah was requested by me to offer his comments on my article¹ on Congress Ministries. He writes in reply² as follows.

_Harijan_, 31-7-1937

---

¹ Vide “Congress Ministries”, 17-7-1937
² This is not reproduced here. Prof. Shah had approved of Gandhiji’s programme and had suggested measures to compensate the loss of revenue. One of his suggestions was an appeal "to the Services for a voluntary surrender of their excess of salaries and allowances above a prescribed maximum".
113. LETTER TO J.C. KUMARAPPA

SEGAON,

July 31, 1937

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

Your memorandum to the Ministers is good so far as it goes.\(^1\)
The article reads all right but Hindi is not up to the mark. Whose is it?Yes, register it. I understand it costs nothing. I leave for Delhi on 3rd and hope to return on 5th, 6th at the latest. Hope Sita continues to like her new life and surroundings.

Love to you all.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10126

114. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

July 31, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

I got your letter. I would like you to examine Venilal Buch's demand on Navajivan Karyalaya and settle it. I think for the sake of propriety you should get the consent of the trustees. The best thing, therefore, would perhaps be that you yourself should call on Jivanji\(^2\) and get his consent, so that I might be relieved of that burden.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9107

---

\(^1\) Vide also “Letter to J. C. Kumarappa”, 12-7-1937
\(^2\) Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Manager, Navajivan Press
115. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHA,
August 1, 1937

RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
SIMLA WEST
IF REGRET FOR FIRING EXPRESSED AND OTHER RELIEF MENTIONED BY YOU GRANTED NO INQUIRY NEEDED. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3798. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6954

116. LETTER TO K. F. NARIMAN

Your attitude is most bewildering. Before I issue my statement I make this offer. I am prepared to go through the whole of your charges and if I feel convinced that you have been unjustly dealt with by the Sardar, I shall unhesitatingly say so and do everything humanly possible to undo the mischief. If, on the other hand, I find against you and you are not satisfied with my findings, I shall request Bahadurji or Sir Govindrao Madgaonkar to go through the recorded evidence and review my findings. All these proceedings need not be public so far as I am concerned. If the findings are against you, you should have an opportunity of tendering an apology and making a full and frank confession of your weakness and the wrong done to the public, the Sardar and other colleagues. But if you want the proceedings to be public, I do not mind. You need not even know what is being done. I had no desire to be in this affair at all. But you wanted me to intercede. Many friends, including Mr. Bharucha, have been pressing me to do likewise. I may not now sit still. I hope you will understand my anxiety to see that full justice is done to you and avoid everything that may possibly harm you without cause. If you desire an enquiry by me, please send me your charge-sheet and a precis of your evidence. I would send it to the Sardar and any other colleagues against whom you have any grievance and after having had his and their reply, I shall call for such evidence as may be required, if any. These proceedings need not take more than a week.

You need not concern yourself with what the Working Committee or your friends may think, they need not be informed of this procedure.

Let me add that the information which has so far reached me does not substantiate your stand.

117. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SEGON,
August 1, 1937

Bhai Vallabhbhai,

Now I can send you a wire only tomorrow, is it not? If possible Mahadev will send it [today]. I can’t issue my statement immediately. It will be issued only at the appropriate time. Read my letter of yesterday. I can’t decide whether it would be proper to 1 On receiving this letter, Nariman sent a telegram to Gandhiji saying: “Strongly object publication one-sided impression. Desire to explain other side. Letter follows.” In the letter which followed he said: “I find that in the last few letters you have been constantly threatening me with the publication of your conclusions. Am I not entitled to know what you think before you make it public? . . . I am confident that I shall be able to satisfy you on all points and remove any misunderstanding if only I am given an opportunity to do so. If, in spite of this request of mine, you decide to publish your views of this episode, I shall consider myself free also to give my explanation in public. . . .” Even before he received this letter, Gandhiji informed Nariman on August 2 that he and Bahadurji were prepared to arbitrate on the two issues connected with the election of 1934 and the election of the leader of the Congress Party in the Bombay Legislature in 1937, and asked Nariman if this proposal was acceptable to him. To this Nariman replied telegraphically on August 4: “Accept your and Bahadurji’s judgement on both issues.” On the 6th of August, however, Nariman asked Gandhiji’s help on a few points. He suggested that lest his acceptance of this arbitral tribunal against a decision of the Working Committee might be interpreted to mean that he was disloyal to it, Gandhiji should obtain the approval of the Congress President to the proposed procedure. He asked further that all his witnesses should be protected against harassment of any kind; without such an assurance, an independent enquiry and the task of ascertaining the truth would be rendered impossible.

For Gandhiji’s reply, vide “Letter to K. F. Nariman”, 8-8-1937; vide also “Statement to the Press”, 13-8-1937

2 On the Nariman controversy; vide “Statement to the Press”, 13-8-1937 publish the whole correspondence. It is not a question of permission, but one of propriety from our point of view.

Blessings from
BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL
PURUSHOTTAM BUILDING
OPP. OPERA HOUSE
BOMBAY 4

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhai, p. 209

118 LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

August 1, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

The Simla-dweller and you have praised the reed with a fountain-pen and a typewriter! I have added a paragraph to your article.

If Shanta¹ can fit herself into the set-up, I don’t think we shall need Devraj, provided you take work from Chhotelal also. But now we shall think over all this on the train on Tuesday. Now Kanu is not going there today. He will go tomorrow.

Blessings from
BAPU

PS.

You may send a wire to Vallabhbhai as follows: “Statement not yet. Am considering propriety publishing correspondence.”²

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11542

¹ An Englishwoman
² The draft is in English.
119. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

SEGAON,
August 2, 1937

MY DEAR C. R.¹,

Here is an interesting cutting for you. Harijan is becoming a weekly letter to the Congress Ministers. You should therefore ask Ramanathan² to put before you such things that you should read. You must not wear yourself out.

I do hope you won’t pay the Members for twelve months. I should regard [as enough] Rs. 2 per day whilst the Assembly is sitting plus 3rd class travelling and actual out-of-pocket for coolies and tonga not exceeding Rs. 2. But you know best. Do read the leading article³ in the current Harijan. Let Lakshmi⁴ write for you. I don’t expect you to write to me yourself. Am off to see the Viceroy on his invitation, the cause is the mere pleasure of meeting.

Love.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 206

120. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

August 2, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I think it would be better if you come over today. I suppose Dastane⁵ will come by car, as also Rajkumari. As soon as the mail

¹ Premier of Madras
² Minister for Public Information in the Government of Madras
³ Vide “Criticism Answered”, 31-7-1937
⁴ Addressee’s daughter, Devdas Gandhi’s wife
⁵ Vasudev Vitthal Dastane comes tell Shanta to forward it with either of them. A wire is enclosed.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Did you discuss with Shambhu Dayal who is responsible for his support, etc.?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11543

121. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

August 2, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I devote all my time these days to writing letters. I am sending one article with this. Another which I have begun may go tomorrow. If somebody goes there in the evening, I will send it with him. Otherwise I shall myself bring it tomorrow morning. If somebody brings the evening post and returns the same day he may take the article with him. Doctor is there and will return in the evening. He can bring the mail. He will be coming by car. Perhaps I will send the article with the car.

Blessings from
BAPU

PS.

I am sending with this [copies of] my letters to Nariman. Send a copy to Jawaharlal. Send the following wire:

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11544

122. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

August 2, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

I had a talk with Swami. Will Venilal accept whatever decision you give after going through the account books and examining any other evidence that he might produce? Frame the reference and get 1 Ross Masood had passed away; vide “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 2-8-1937.

the signatures of both on it. After that take the plaint and evidence in writing. You may then fix a hearing if necessary. This will save time and help us to determine what is just. Let me have your reactions to my article¹ on education.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9108

123. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

SEGAON,
August 2, 1937

CHI. MATHURADAS.

Does haste ever pay? I am doing whatever is possible. Letters are being sent to Nariman. When the time comes, I will issue a statement if it is necessary.² I am also in correspondence with Jawaharlal.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

124. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

August 2, 1937

DEAR DAUGHTER AMTUSSALAAM,³

Only now I read in the newspaper that Ross Masood died in Bhopal. I have sent a telegram⁴. The same Ross Masood, isn’t he? I can understand how you must be feeling. Have faith in God, have courage. All of us have to face death, some may die today, some

¹ Vide “Criticism Answered”, 31-7-1937
² For Gandhiji’s statement to the Press, vide “Statement to the Press”, 13-8-1937
³ The superscription is in Urdu.
tomorrow. How many have passed away and how many will in future!

Blessings to Saraswati¹ and Paparamma².

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 389

125. FOREWORD TO “THE QUESTION OF LANGUAGES”

August 3, 1937

I have very carefully gone through Jawaharlal Nehru’s essay¹ on the Hindi-Urdu question. The question has latterly become an unfortunate controversy. There is no valid reason for the ugly turn it has taken. Be that as it may, Jawaharlal’s essay is a valuable contribution to a proper elucidation of the whole subject considered from the national and purely educational point of view. His constructive suggestions, if they are widely accepted by persons concerned, should put an end to the controversy which has taken a communal turn. The suggestions are exhaustive and eminently reasonable.⁴

M. K. GANDHI

126. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

ON THE TRAIN,
August 3, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I am writing this on the train taking us to Delhi. Herewith is my Foreword or whatever it may be called. I could not give you anything elaborate.

You have “perhaps”⁵ before Pushtu and Punjabi. I suggest your removing the adverb. Khan Saheb for instance will never give up

¹ G. Ramachandran’s sister’s daughter, Kanti Gandhi’s fiancee
² G. Ramachandran’s sister
³ For the suggestions made therein, vide” The Question Of Languages”, 21-8-1937 ; also “Hindi-Urdu”, 21-8-1937.
⁴ Vide also the following item.
⁵ This was changed to read “to some extent”; vide “The Question Of Languages”, 21-8-1937.

THE COOLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Pushtu. I believe it is written in some script, I forget which. And Punjabi? The Sikhs will die for Punjabi written in Gurmukhi. There is no elegance about that script. But I understand that it was specially invented like Sindhi to isolate the Sikhs from the other Hindus. Whether such was the case or not, it seems to me impossible at present to persuade the Sikhs to give up Gurmukhi. You have suggested a common script to be evolved out of the four Southern languages. It seems to me to be as easy for them to substitute Devanagari as a mixture of the four. From a practical standpoint, the four do not admit of an invented mixture. I would, therefore, suggest your confining yourself to the general recommendation that wherever possible the provincial languages which have vital connection with Sanskrit, if they are not off-shoots from it, should adopt revised Devanagari. You may know that this propaganda is going on.

Then, if you think like me, you should not hesitate to express the hope that as Hindus and Muslims are one day bound to be one at heart, they will also, who speak Hindustani, adopt one script, i. e., Devanagari, because of its being more scientific and being akin to the great provincial scripts of the languages descended from Sanskrit.

If you adopt my suggestions in part or in toto you will have no difficulty in laying your finger on the spots requiring the necessary changes. I had intended to do so myself in order to save your time. But I must not put that strain on my system just now.

I take it that my endorsement of your suggestions does not mean that I must ask the Hindi Sammelan to give up the use of the word Hindi. I am sure, that cannot be your meaning. I have taken it to the farthest limit possible as far as I can think.

If you cannot accept my suggestions, it would be better for the sake of accuracy to add the following sentence to the ‘Foreword’: ‘At any rate I have no hesitation in heartily endorsing them in a general way.’

I hope Indu’s₁ operation will go off well.

Love.

BAPU

Also A Bunch of Old Letters, pp. 238-9

₁Indira, addressee’s daughter
127. LETTER TO ATULANANADA CHAKRABARTY

August 3, 1937

DEAR ATULANANADA,

I hope your daughter is well and wholly out of danger. I have gone through your articles carefully. I still do not see light. It seems to me that no culture league will answer the purpose you and I have in view. ¹ It has got to be done by individuals who have a living faith and who would work with missionary zeal. Try again, if I have not seen what you see in your proposal. I shall be patient and attentive. I want to help if I can see my way clear.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

The Life of Mahatma Gandhi, p. 366

128. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIIDYA

ON THE TRAIN,

August 3, 1937

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I am going to Delhi at the Viceroy’s invitation and am writing this letter on the train. You say in your letter that you are prepared to get Manju married in another caste. Is Manju also willing? Would you accept an alliance if a suitable partner is available from any part of the country? It is certainly necessary to do so. The barriers ought to be broken. When the whole country is ours, why should we keep ourselves confined to one community or province or region? Pleasure should not be the end of marriage; there should be some sanctity about it and it should be entered into as a matter of dharma. All other barriers should be disregarded.

It is difficult to say when Kusum will settle down to something steady. She makes many plans but is not able to carry out any of them. Guide her as much as you can. By all means draw her there if you can. Ask Manju to write to me. Bachu², one may say, has had a ¹ The addressee had proposed a culture league “to bring Hindus and Muslims together”.

² Bachubhai Bhimji Ramdas, addressee’s brother’s son.
new life. I have been acquiring more and more cows.

If at any time you are keen on paying a visit here, do come. The season following the rains is pleasant.

I hope your work is winning appreciation.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]
_Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 96_

129. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

ON THE TRAIN,
August 3, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

Anyone who knows all the processes from the [growing of] cotton to weaving should be able to write an introduction to the science of khadi¹ in two or at the most seven days.

1. Cultivation of cotton, its varieties, yield of crops in the different regions and the use of each variety
2. Plucking, cleaning and ginning of cotton-pods
3. Carding, preparation of slivers
4. Spinning
5. Weaving

The booklet would give a description of the machines with illustrations, arithmetical calculations, improvements up to date, etc. From among the persons whose names you suggest, Mahadev or Mirabehn are more likely to take up the work. But nobody can surpass Rameshwari Devi². She is a woman of powerful personality. She knows excellent Hindi. She has an insight into all our activities. She belongs to well-known families both on her husband’s and her father’s sides. After you have availed yourself of her services in Rajkot, take her on a short tour of Kathiawar. She will give considerable impetus to khadi and Harijan work. I cannot send anyone better. Still, if you want me to make some other arrangement, I will do so. I would certainly not send anybody in whom you may have no faith. She was with me for a month and is just now with me in a third-class compartment. She has a house in Delhi and also one in Lahore. She is going to Delhi today and I also am going there for a day. I have been invited by the Viceroy for an informal meeting. It was she whom I had sent to Travancore for Harijan work. You must have read in Harijan my article on education. You have to demonstrate its practicability.

¹ Vide “Speech at Village Industries Exhibition”, 25-3-1938
² Rameshwari Nehru

If you feel that your services can be utilized best in the primary department only, I don’t wish to shift you. I shall be more than satisfied if you popularize khadi and uproot untouchability all over Kathiawar. If you can achieve that, you will set an example to the whole country. I have no plan for any work for you outside Kathiawar. I had asked you just to make sure whether I could call you in case I needed somebody.

I feel better. I need a little rest, which I am taking. I am looking after Kanu'. He is passing through a difficult stage. At his age we also must have felt the same. But he is an obedient boy and will, therefore, become steady by and by. Most probably he will settle down with me in Segaon. I am trying to adjust myself to him as far as possible.

Lilavati gave me your letter. I for my part have permitted her, but I don’t think she will go. She doesn’t wish to leave my side. However, at times she does feel restless. Her condition also is somewhat similar to Kanaiyo’s.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I shall return to Wardha on the 5th or the 6th. You must have seen Kamala’s request for Rs. 5 for her mother. What do you think of it?

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II Also C.W. 8533. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Addressee’s son
130. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ON THE TRAIN,
August 3, 1937

CHI. MATHURADAS,

Give this to Andrews. You must have received my letter of yesterday.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

131. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

ON THE TRAIN,
August 4, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I am nearing Delhi. Mahadev and Pyarelal [are] with me. Hope to take the return train today, if not, tomorrow for certain.

I hope Akash will suit you equally well.

I never knew that both the Dharmavirs spun.

Did I tell you that Shanta did not go to England, her mother having practically stopped her? She is very happy with Mahadev and very helpful to him.

Balwantsinha has brought two more cows. We need still more.

Balkrishna' is flourishing in Segaon. He eats freely under Dr. Batra's coaxing. He is on Kepler's malt cod-liver oil. I thought I should relax the rule about fish oils, as there were so many other restrictions. He is fast putting on weight of which he had lost much.

Rameshwari Devi is with me 3rd class, returning to Delhi. I hope you will return proof against malaria. So far as I am concerned I do not mind how long you are there, so long as you keep fit and renew your body. I am sorry about Subhas. The enclosed for him.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6395. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9361

1 Balkrishna Bhave
MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I am stupid. On receiving your letter I searched my file and behold! I found the cutting containing Meherally’s speech. I referred to his, not Masani’s speech.¹

This is being written in a terribly jolting train taking me back to Wardha. It is now 10.30 p.m. I woke up from sleep, thought of the speech and began the search. Yesterday’s compartment was better.

I saw the Viceroy. You will have seen the communique². It correctly summarizes the interview. There were other incidental things which Kripalani will mention to you when he meets you. One thing I may mention here. He might invite you as he invited me. I told him that if the invitation was sent, you were not likely to refuse it. Was I right?

I am sorry for having inflicted Roy’s speeches on you.³ But I think you were bound to read them. However I am in no hurry to have your opinion on them. You may take your time unless you have already read them.

I note that you are having the operation for Indu in Bombay.

Love.

BAPU

---

¹ Vide “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 30-7-1937
² Issued after the interview on August 4, it read: “... The Viceroy listened with interest to Mr. Gandhi’s views on the matters in question and undertook to intimate them to the Governor of the North-West Frontier Province. The interview was entirely general and personal in character, the principal subject of discussion being rural uplift and improvement of the conditions of the peasantry.”
³ Vide “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 30-7-1937
133. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

August 6, 1937

MY DEAR C. R.,

What nonsense! Why should you feel sorry or disappointed because I hold certain views about salaries? I do not at all resent your not enforcing them. I have said, my views need not be accepted if found unworkable. We all marvel at the way you are managing things there. You have approached your task with faith and religious zeal. You must not feel the slightest disappointment. You know my deepest feeling. Then why should you worry? I hope you will be able to spare yourself for 17th. My prayers and best wishes are with you always.

The talk with the Viceroy was formal though quite friendly.

Devdas was looking well.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2066

134. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

August 6, 1937

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I have your letter. I at once sent a telegram to Amtul at Bhopal. I have already written about Kanti. I think it is better for you to come back as you have already stayed there for a month. Ramachandran writes to say that he does not want Saraswati to go anywhere for three years. He wants her to complete her studies. In that case it would be best to leave her there. I have received no letters from Bari or Baqui.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am keeping well. I returned from Delhi only yesterday.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 390

1 Vide “Congress Ministries”, 17-7-1937
2 For the meeting of the Congress Working Committee which was to be held at Wardha from August 14 to 17
3 Addressee’s niece, widow of Ross Masood
4 Harilal Gandhi’s son
The thought-world of khadi workers had undergone a revolution since the objective of khadi became the steady improvement of the artisans engaged in its production rather than its supply at as cheap rates as possible. The fact that the increase in the wages has not much, if at all, affected the public has given a confidence to the workers which they had not when the policy was revolutionized. The workers are beginning to realize that they have to touch every department of the lives of the artisans and try to bring about an all-round improvement in their lot. Thus one reads with joy the following in the Maharashtra khadi Patrika noticed the other day in these columns:¹

In Korutala khadi workers are using the paper prepared by the local paper makers and are inducing local artisans to make twine from flax which is locally grown.

Many artisans have the bad habit of spitting fairly often just where they are sitting. Eighty-two such have been supplied with small earthen spittoons for use.

The manager of a zamindar in Metpally has been induced to stop begar.

In Tendur the weavers have been induced to adopt measures to prevent incurring debts. Thus they have reduced marriage expenses to Rs. 30 as the maximum, stopped feasts at the time of the first shave, stopped drinking on ceremonial occasions, caste dinners on deaths. Measures have been adopted to induce the womenfolk to use khadi saris (cheap patterns have been devised for the purpose), to save the increase in the artisans’ income against a rainy day.

In Savli a substantial rise has been given to those who will not incur debts and will card and spin one seer of not less than twenty counts of yarn of eighty per cent strength in one month. Thus the following speaks for itself:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>COUNT</th>
<th>CURRENT RATE</th>
<th>INCREASED RATE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Rs.</td>
<td>As.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

¹ Vide "A Khadi Journal", 24-7-1937
This new rate enables the workers to make four annas per day of eight hours.

In Sindevahi they have agreed to open a co-operative store.

I have given but a condensation of the original in Hindi which I commend to the diligent student of the working of the new objective.

_Harijan, 7-8-1937_

136. NOT A PRIZE

I have been receiving several letters from different provinces protesting against the exclusion of their or their friends’ names from ministries and asking me to intervene. I do not think there is a single province from which such complaints have not been received.
In some such letters dire results including communal riots have been threatened, if the excluded person’s claims are not considered.

In the first instance let me say that I have not intervened in any single case in the selection of ministers. I have no right, having completely withdrawn from the Congress, to intervene in such matters, even if I had the wish which I have not. My participation in Congress affairs is confined to tendering advice on the issues involved in office-acceptance and on the policies to be pursued in the prosecution of our march to the goal of Complete Independence.

But it seems to me that my numerous correspondents who have been writing voluminously think that ministries are prizes for past services and that certain Congressmen can demand their inclusion. I venture to suggest to them that ministries are avenues to service which those who are called to it should render cheerfully and to the best of their ability. There can therefore never be a scramble for these offices. It would be decidedly wrong to create ministries for the sake of conciliating interests. If I were a Prime Minister and I was pestered with such claims, I should tell my electors to choose another leader. These offices have to be held lightly, not tightly. They are or should be crowns of thorns never of renown. Offices have been taken in order to see if they enable us to quicken the pace at which we are moving towards our goal. It would be tragic if self-seekers or misguided zealots were allowed to impede the progress by imposing themselves on Prime Ministers. If it was necessary to have assurances from those who have ultimately to clothe ministers with authority, it is doubly necessary to have assurances of understanding, of loyalty beyond suspicion and of willing obedience to discipline. The grim fight in which the country is engaged cannot be won if Congressmen do not show in their conduct a sufficient measure of selflessness, discipline and faith in the means enunciated by the Congress for the attainment of the goal.

Thanks to the Karachi resolution\(^1\), ministerships under the Congress aegis have no pecuniary attraction. I must say in parenthesis that considering Rs. 500 as if it was the minimum instead of the maximum was a mistake. Rs. 500 was the last limit. Had we not got used to the excessive scale of salaries imposed upon the country, we would have regarded Rs. 500 to be excessive. The Congress scale has been generally, for the past seventeen years at least, Rs. 75 per month. In its three great constructive all-India departments, national education, khadi and village industries, the authorized scale has been Rs. 75. These departments contain men who are good enough, so far as ability is concerned, any day to be ministers. They have distinguished educationists, lawyers, chemists and merchants, who if they were so minded, could easily command over Rs. 500 per month. Why should the fact of becoming a minister make the great difference we see? But the die is perhaps cast. My remarks represent my personal opinion. I have too high a regard for the Prime Ministers to question their judgment and wisdom. No doubt they thought that this was the best in the circumstances facing them. The point I wish to make, in answer to my correspondents, is that these offices have not been taken in view of the emoluments they offer.

And then they have to be given to those only in the party who are best able to discharge the duty to which they are called.

And, lastly, the acid test is that the choice must commend itself to the members of the party to whom the Prime Ministers owe their nomination. No Prime Minister can for one moment impose a man or woman of his choice on the party. He is Chief because he enjoys the full confidence of his party as to ability, knowledge of persons, and the other qualities that mark out one for leadership.

\textit{Harijan,} 7-8-1937

\(^1\text{Vide “Resolution on Fundamental rights and Economic changes”, 31-3-1937}\)
137. A. I. V. I. A. BULLETIN

The A. I. V. I. A. has issued its first bulletin. After describing the various activities conducted in Maganwadi, the Headquarters at Wardha, it ends:

There is a great deal of slackness on the part of members and agents in submitting their reports. Members are reminded that according to our rules no report is received from a member for three consecutive quarters, his membership will lapse. We regret to say that in accordance with this rule the membership of several has lapsed. The reason for such slackness is probably that members think that it is not worthwhile reporting unless there is something noteworthy to mention. . . . Their work is in the nature of routine, and once they have reported they think that so long as they have not done anything new they need not report. This again is a mistake. It is quite essential for the proper working of the Association and for exchange of experiences through the medium of this bulletin that members and agents should carry on their work in close touch with the Central Office and keep it duly informed of their activities by means of full and regular reports. . . .

Harijan, 7-8-1 937

138. TEMPLE-ENTRY

It looks very much as if the whole of Malabar, the citadel of untouchability, is going to lead the way, as Travancore has done already, in the matter of temple-entry. I draw attention to the two brief statements given below. One is by the Cochin Temple-entry Committee and the other by the Malabar Harijan Sevak Sangh, both promising an energetic propaganda organizing the so-called savarna and so-called avarna opinion in favour of opening all public temples to the avarnas precisely on the same terms as they are for the savarnas. If there is an unimpeachable pronouncement of such opinion, no State nor trustees can long resist such opinion. The Malabar Committee has rightly laid stress on the necessity of legislation removing all doubt as to the right of trustees to open to 1 Only excerpts from the All-India Village Industries Association’s bulletin are reproduced here.

2 Not reproduced here
avarnas temples under their charge, especially if it can be proved that the large body of savarna opinion is in favour of such an opening. Let us hope that the Committees will receive the enthusiastic public support which the great cause merits and demands.

_Harijan, 7-8-1937_

139. TELEGRAM TO AMTUSALAAM

_WARDHAGANI, August 7, 1937_

AMTUL SALAAM
HARIJAN SEVAK SANGH
TRIVANDRUM
BETTER COME HERE NOW. RAMACHANDRAN UNWILLING SEND SARASWATI TILL HER EDUCATION FINISHED.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 404

140. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

_SEGAON, August 7, 1937_

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

For Sita’s sake I would say let us not leave her as Editor just yet. She should be better known than she is among our own circle. Mere possession of literary merit is not enough for our purpose. Our readers should know her as a co-worker. Do you not agree?

The Education Minister, C. P., comes, sees me on Tuesday at 2.30 p.m. and the Excise Minister at 5 p.m. I think you, Bharatan, Sita, if she is well, Jajuji, Nayakam and Kaka should be present. Will you inform them all?

Love to you—the trio.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10127

1 Ravishankar Shukla
2 P. B. Gole
3 Shrikrishnadas Jaju
4 E. W. Aryanayakam
141. LETTER TO KANCHAN M. SHAH

SEGAON,
August 7, 1937

CHI. KANCHAN,

Do come over tomorrow (Sunday) morning and have lunch here. If you can’t come early, come after 1 p.m. But do come.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8293. Also C.W. 7020. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

142. LETTER TO JAMUBHAI DANI

[Before August 8, 1937]

SHRI DANI,

I have your letter. I have not received the report about the Bhangis. But as soon as I get it I will go through it and write something if it calls for comment.¹

If the public life of Kathiawar is in a mess, it only means that the people are the same but the leaders are either useless or selfish or unprincipled or all this at the same time. It is observed at some places that life continues as before in different spheres and some workers go on working away in silence without others knowing about it. Are there any such workers in Kathiawar? Try to find this out honestly and with a view to service. Whether you do it as a member of the Sangh or as an individual, do it in a worthy manner.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 8-8-1937

143. WORKERS OF KATHIAWAR

A gathering of some workers of Kathiawar was held some time ago in Bhavnagar. After a great deal of discussion, a resolution was passed, at the instance of Shri Nanabhai, that they should do social work under my guidance and be governed by the restrictions imposed by me. Some of these gentlemen were to come to me to discuss the matter. On receiving their letter, I tried to prevent their coming by writing to them that their journey would perhaps be in vain as they would get from me advice only on what I regard as constructive work. However, this failed to convince them and, Shri Jagjivandas, Balwantrai, Fulchand, Dhebarbhai and Vajubhai came over. At the end of a discussion lasting two hours it was decided that I should write the substance of my advice in Harijanbandhu. I agreed to comply with this request.

¹ Vide the following item.

The first discussion was about the letter I had written to Shri Dani. I had been told that in that letter I had done grave injustice to the workers of Kathiawar by calling them useless, selfish, or unprincipled or all this at the same time. In my reply I had stated that I was not in the habit of writing such crude letters and I asked for a copy of my letter. In reply to this letter the above gentlemen came in person and produced the original letter, which runs as follows.

I said that those who took this letter to be censorious could be regarded as ignorant of Gujarati. Its meaning is clear. If public life in Kathiawar is actually in such a mess as described by Shri Dani, public servants must be guilty of one of the three or all the three shortcomings. These gentlemen agreed that my letter could not be construed in any other way.

With reference to this they inquired whether anyone had sent me names of persons who had acted in a manner not befitting Kathiawaris? I replied that I had published the names which had been sent to me and regarding whom I believed the allegations to be true.

The following points were then discussed:

1. Gandhiji to guide
2. [Kathiawar] Political Conference
3. The Prajamandal and the Conference
4. The restrictions and the injustices in the States
5. Organizing labour to improve their conditions
6. Constructive work like khadi, service of Harijans, etc.
7. Whether these activities should be carried on independently or under one organization.

1 Balwantrai Mehta
2 Fulchand Kasturchand Shah
3 U. N. Dhebar
4 Vajubhai Shukla
5 For the text, vide the preceding item
6 ibid
Regarding my guidance, I declared that I could not shoulder the burden. I have neither the capacity nor the inclination to guide anyone from a distance, hence they should write off my name. If my advice is sought in a particular matter, I have always been giving it, and I regard it as my dharma to do so. In my opinion, Kathiawaris should appoint a leader from amongst persons living there and, such a leader should be reappointed every year. This would give them self-confidence and make them self-reliant. The belief, whether true or otherwise, that Kathiawaris cannot accept for long any leader selected from amongst themselves, will also be dispelled.

While discussing other activities, I gave the opinion that if I had my way, I would engage everyone in khadi work, service of Harijans and village industries. Even if everyone was to be engaged in this manner, many more workers would be needed than are at present available. But those who do not find that kind of service congenial should select whatever field they preferred and put their heart and soul into it. Having once made the choice one should not go on changing one’s field of work. If a session of the Political Conference must be called, it should be called keeping in view the restrictions imposed by me in Bhavnagar and in accordance with the practice established in Porbandar. It must not be held outside the boundaries of Indian States. If permission is granted only in a single State it could be held there year after year. It could be held in Amreli\(^1\), but it would be preferable to hold it in a State in Kathiawar.

There should be a Prajamandal in each State.

Everyone should render to the best of his ability whatever service he can to these bodies.

Within the limits imposed by me, the Political Conference cannot freely discuss such questions as injustices practised in different States, etc. This does not imply that these cannot be discussed anywhere. The people of a particular State may certainly discuss those questions, they should try and get justice in those particular matters, for it is their dharma to do so. Thus, in whichever States restrictive orders are issued or injustices perpetrated, they could be freely discussed there. Only truth and non-violence should be the restraining principles in these cases. Whatever is said should be hundred per cent true; it should be free from exaggeration and discourtesy. We should not hold out threats about anything which we are not capable of doing. We have to tolerate many things in this world because we are

\(^1\) A town in Kathiawar which however formed part of the Baroda State
In order to improve its condition labour must get organized. Everyone knows that I prefer the policy which has been adopted by Shrimati Anasuyabehn in Ahmedabad. I have not adopted the principle of organizing labour for political purposes. They may take interest in politics as all citizens should. But politics should not be the motive in forming an organization. People should form organizations having regard to their vocations and their special circumstances. We already have in the Congress an organization to deal with political issues and to train men for the work. It has to protect the political rights of labourers in the same way as it has to protect those of others. As a matter of fact, the political rights of labourers are not and should not be opposed to those of others. This means that the work of the Congress safeguards [the interests of] and represents all. It is my experience that if labour unions are politically motivated, there is an unnecessary rivalry between [political] workers, labourers become pawns in their game and, as a result, labourers have to suffer and the unions get a bad name. Labour may also perhaps eye with suspicion those who come claiming to be their friends. Those who form labour unions in order to improve their conditions should also be adept in the art of doing so. If anyone without ability tries to form a union because he wants to, it cannot be done.

Amongst all these activities, I would give the highest place to khadi, eradication of untouchability, service of Harijans, village industries and prohibition. If this cannot be done, I believe that other activities are not worthwhile. The belief that constructive work can be carried on only if supported by other activities is, in my opinion, born out of ignorance. It is my opinion that the strength that can be generated by firm and determined adherence to constructive activity is far superior to the strength gained by any other type of work. I know that ordinarily no one is interested in these constructive activities. I can think of two reasons for this. One reason is that these activities bring one into contact with the villages. Our workers have been brought up in cities, they have been educated in English schools and colleges, hence they have little interest in the life of rural people. They do not regard themselves as fit only for living in villages and are ignorant of the art of mixing with the villagers. The other reason is our idleness and the ignorance born of it. Khadi and such other constructive work demand constant vigilance, effort, study and diligence. We are not prepared to render these; and later, when we cannot create interest in these great tasks, rather than blame ourselves we conclude that such work is dull. I regard this as a serious shortcoming and have, therefore, come to the conclusion that so long as we do not do credit to these tasks, our other tasks will not be wholly successful. And it is for this reason that, even after so many years, I give the utmost importance to these tasks. Now the last question. If all the activities are being managed by the same body, this may well continue. I see no harm in each activity being carried on wholly independently. Even if these are being carried on under the same authority, each should become self-sufficient, and people should be allowed to be absorbed in the particular sphere which they have chosen.

---

1 Anasuyabehn Sarabhai

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 8-8-1937

144. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 8, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I forgot to cover one point in your letter referring to Meherally’s speech. I mean Rajaji’s communique releasing the summer school prisoners. I had read it before receiving your letter. But it did not offend me. I suppose because you approved of the action of the students of the summer school and I could not defend it any way whatsoever.¹ I think that it was necessary to draw attention to the fact that the release did not mean approval of this breach or the offence which in law it was. I fear that often when the Congress is in power it will use language which its predecessors have used and yet the motive behind will be different.

I hope you will have a nice time in Bombay over the operation. You will wire when it is over.

Love.

BAPU

¹ For Jawaharlal Nehru’s statement on Kottapatam Summer School, vide “The Kottapatam Summer School”.

VOL. 72: 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 107
If Nariman comes to you please grant him the permission to have the inquiry. I am sorry you will be bothered about this affair in Bombay. Mahadev will tell you what I have been doing.

BAPU

[PS.]

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

145. LETTER TO K. F. NARIMAN

WARDHA, August 8, 1937

MY DEAR NARIMAN,

Your letter came in only today. I am not going to trouble Mr. B. before I have all your evidence. I shall consult him only if my finding is against you and you don’t agree with it. There should be no delay. Surely your evidence must be all ready. Of course, I shall go into the allegations against you regarding the election of 1934. Have I not made that clear? As to the witnesses’ names being kept secret, you must leave that to me.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

146. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

August 8, 1937

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

All illness should be regarded as misconduct punishable under the I.P.C.! I do hope you will recover soon. If you cannot come I shall reconcile myself to the absence of your bulky contribution to the debate.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10128

1 D. N. Bahadurji

THE COLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
147. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON,
August 8, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

I am not wrong in calling you a tyrant. You were a tyrant to Amtul Salaam when you idolized her. Now that that idolization has changed into a kind of repulsion, you are again being a tyrant to her. Ramachandran had been pressing her—so were Paparamma and Saraswati—and he had sent a wire. That is why she went. She is having some peace there. Now you wish that I should call her away from there. I, therefore, wrote a letter\textsuperscript{1} to her asking her to return and even sent a wire\textsuperscript{2}. I haven’t told her that it was at your instance that I asked her to come away. I have given no reason at all. If necessary, I will tell her when she comes. I have not said all this to reproach you. I have only drawn your attention to your proneness to extremes. I have willingly called her back. What about Saraswati? She has been pleading to be permitted to come here. Ramachandran wishes that she should not come for three years. What do you yourself wish?

I am returning the statement of accounts. It is excellent. Don’t economize at the slightest risk to your health.

I had been to Delhi for a day. I returned the same day. The Viceroy had nothing particular to discuss. He just wished to get acquainted with me. I on my part wished to talk to him about Khan Saheb, which I did.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textbf{BAPU}

[PS.]

My health is good. I do wish to live till you pass out and attain proficiency and get married. But is the thread of life ever in our hands?

\textbf{BAPU}

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7329. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

\textsuperscript{1} Vide ”Letter to Amtussalaam”, 6-8-1937
\textsuperscript{2} Vide ”Telegram to Amtussalaam”, 7-8-1937
148. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

August 8, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I think I will have to send you to Dhulia for a day. Get ready soon. I am returning your article with this. I have deleted the paragraph about khadi. Try to understand the reason. If you can’t, ask me when I am free.

I don’t know when I shall be able to reply to the letters. Send the correspondence regarding Nariman to Jawahar. Or make a short summary of it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11545

149. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 9, 1937

CHI. MIRA,

I have your disturbing letter. You need not stop there even till 24th if your mind is not there. It is distinctly harmful for you to be there, if you can’t be happy there but will stay there because it is a duty imposed from without. You have tried that again and again and failed each time. Therefore you must follow your will no matter where it leads you to. You will learn only by making mistakes, if mistakes there must be through following your will. To paraphrase the alcoholic saying, I would rather find you always in error than find you correct only under compulsion. You can grow through error, never through compulsion. Therefore please feel absolutely free to anticipate the date (24th) fixed by you and so far as I am concerned come in reply to this letter. I shan’t feel unhappy. On the contrary, I shall feel happy in the thought that you would exercise unrestricted freedom¹.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 6396. Courtesy: Mirabein. Also G.N. 9862

¹ In Bapu’s Letters to Mira, Mirabein explains: “The old struggle was again overcoming me, and I returned to Sevagram.”
150. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

August 9, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending with this an article' by Kishorelal which has been abridged. It was abridged by Rajkumari. She seems to have done a fine Job of it. However, have a glance at it. And if anything of importance is left out, insert it. I think it will be better if you return the original to Kishorelal. A quotation remains to be copied from it. Please see that it is done. For this at least you will require the original. I will send my article with Janba or whoever comes. I shall be ready at 2.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I hope the ulcer is better now.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11546

151. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,

August 9, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Herewith my article. A fair copy is enclosed along with the original. You can straightaway send the fair copy to Poona today. I suppose you don’t need anything more.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11547

1“The Problem of National Funds” which appeared in Harijan, 14-8-1937
152. LETTER TO JAYANTI N. PAREKH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 9, 1937

CHI. JAYANTI,

I got your letter. Give the accompanying letter¹ to Dinkar if he is feeling better. Public workers ought not to fall ill.

I don’t understand what you say regarding the reform of the Provincial Committee. Send me a copy of the rules. I am making inquiries, of course.

I am very glad indeed that you three brothers² have come together.

How I wish Indu would settle down to something.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6264

153. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTH

SEVAGRAM,
August 9, 1937

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

I have you letter. Authoritative opinion of course can always be had from the Congress Office at Allahabad. My personal opinion is that Committees should not be formed till there is provision in the Constitution for use of khadi. But my personal opinion has no weight.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 11684

¹This is not available.
²The addressee, Indu and Kanti
154. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 10, 1937

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your long letter. I will see how the problem can be solved. When we lack either time or space, we have to leave some things aside even though they may be important.

Please tell Vimu' that in her letter to me she was unwilling to promise 25,000 rounds in the spinning yajna and had asked my advice. But in the printed list of names with me, I see 51,000 against her name. Is 51 a misprint for 15? If it is not, how did she get the courage to raise 25,000 to twice as much, or to treble the 17,000 which she had intended? If she had the courage to do that, why couldn’t she quadruple 17,000 and make it 68,000? If “scoffer-friends” then looked upon her as an idolator, she should pay no attention to them. On the contrary, she should welcome their blessings. Spinning 68,000 rounds in 68 days would be no great achievement for a girl like Vimu. According to the calculations here, 1000 rounds a day would require less than three hours, for the average speed is taken to be 400 rounds an hour. Even if, however, the work takes four hours, I wouldn’t regard that as too strenuous for her. Moreover, anyone who does this job with zest and enthusiasm would learn to get absorbed in the work on hand and automatically acquire the ability to do a great many other things.

Narandas is hesitating to undertake the preparation of the manual [of the science of khadi] though there is not the slightest reason for such hesitation. If, however, you join him in preparing the booklet, I think it can immediately be done. Anyone who has complete mastery of most of the processes will find it easy to give a methodical description of them and of the equipment required. If you have not read any literature on the history of the subject, you should read it up. If at least one booklet, covering all aspects of the subject, is brought out systematically, it would be easy to do further work in the field in future. Think over this . . .

It was good indeed that you came and stayed here, though it was

---

1 Vimala, the addressee’s daughter
2 Omission as in the source but for a few days. If you can plan a ten to fifteen days’ programme for Rameshwari Devi, counting from the day of her arrival, I think that would be more than enough. You will be able to use her services to get a lot of Harijan and khadi work done. She is a very capable, mature, thoughtful and experienced lady, and is full of noble aspirations. You of course have seen her here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5543

155. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 10, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. There can be no cause at all for worrying about Kanaiyo. What is necessary is to take care of him, to guide him, to understand the thousands of fancies that catch his mind, and to pacify him. Besides this, nothing more is necessary, for his mind is not devious. He is not secretive, doesn’t wish to conceal anything and has faith in those whom he regards as his elders. It is, therefore, not at all difficult to guide him. One thing, of course, is true. If he is not given work which he can do and if nobody takes interest in him, he does feel lost. At present I have heaps of work to do. There is so much typing to be done that it leaves him exhausted and so many copies to be made that his fingers get cramps. And this is apart from spinning. I have also asked him to study Hindi and English, for which he has an expert teacher in Pyarelal. He gets his fill listening to the sweet music of Nanavati and, as he does so, tries to pick up as much as he can. Moreover all sorts of people visit me, from whom also he learns as much as he can. He is therefore not likely to feel at any time that he is rusting without work or that nobody takes interest in him. Please, therefore, have no worries on his account. Till he himself wishes to go there, you or Jamna¹ should not tempt him. There will be no difficulty then.

Lilavati, through her own thoughtlessness, is laid down with pain in the ribs. I am dictating this letter reclining against her body as against a pillow. She is listening and tells me that she neither desires nor has the courage to go to Rajkot or anywhere else. Please, therefore, forget her altogether for the present. When she herself wishes to go there, I shall not stop her. Narottam’s\textsuperscript{1} death is as much a matter for rejoicing as for grief. Such death would bring glory to any youth, for those who enter the jaws of death at such a tender age after having made holy resolutions are bound to attain bliss. And even though dead, he lives through his example. Read this to his father when you offer my condolences to him, and also congratulate him on having had such a son.

¹ Addressee’s wife

I have sent the article\textsuperscript{2} sent by you for Harijanbandhu after some slight revision.

Read the letter to Chhaganlal and then pass it on to him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8535. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

156. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

August 10, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter.

If you find it impossible to write the Khadishastra Praveshika, you may give up the idea. But the fact that your brain doesn’t work on this subject may perhaps be indicative of some deficiency in you.

I was not satisfied with the few lines that Jayantilal wrote. I got the impression that he had forced himself to write. The discussion with you doesn’t seem to have given him a new light. That is, [he believes that] spinning and the other activities are conducted not as a means of intellectual development but only as training in crafts side by side with intellectual training. I hope you understand the difference between the two. If a carpenter teaches me his craft and I learn it mechanically, my hand will be able to use the carpenter’s tools but there will hardly be \textsuperscript{1} A student of the national school at Rajkot who died of typhoid. He had resolved to spin one lakh rounds of yarn.

\textsuperscript{2} On Rentia Baras celebrations in National School, Rajkot, published in Harijanbandhu, 15-8-1937
any intellectual development. If, however, an expert on carpentry teaches me the craft, my intellect also will develop fully in the process. That is, I shall not only be a good carpenter but will also become an engineer, for while teaching me carpentry the teacher will have improved and embellished my language. He will have taught me the history of wood and, while explaining where and how wood is grown, will have taught me geography. He will also have taught me a little about agriculture and will have likewise taught me to make illustrations of my tools. While teaching me the economics of carpentry, he will have taught me arithmetic and geometry. All this will make up a course of some seven years. Maybe you do not link up spinning and the other crafts which you are teaching with intellectual development. Perhaps you consider knowledge of the alphabet and reading as the only means of such development. If this is not so, the writing of the Praveshika should be an easy job for you. I know that I have not previously explained these thoughts in the manner in which I have explained them in this letter. But I have been explaining in Harijan the ideas which are coming to me these days, and this idea is the first and foremost of them all. I have hitherto also said that there should be training in crafts along with training of the intellect and that such training should occupy the primary place in a scheme of national education. What I am now saying is that an important means of intellectual training should be craft-training. I feel that talents are being wasted and the fact that thousands of young people who leave schools are good for nothing except clerkships is indicative not of intellectual development but of intellectual waste. True education is that which trains all the three abilities, spiritual, intellectual and economic, simultaneously. No boy on leaving school should have to ask himself: “What shall I do now?” His education should be a kind of insurance guaranteeing him a livelihood. I have dictated all this for you to think over. If you have followed what I have said, you will have to examine the art of spinning from a new point of view and also devise a new method of teaching it. Please read again from this point of view my recent articles¹ in Harijan.

Shankaran’s is a painful case. I am of course writing to him.

¹ Vide “A Great Experiment”, 3-7-1937 and “Criticism Answered”, 31-7-1937
You needn’t do anything at present.

I will make some arrangement from here for Kamala’s mother.

How is Kumi?

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]

I have not been able to revise any portion.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8534. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

157. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
_August 10, 1937_

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

This note will be given to you by Syed Saheb of the Siasat. He had four letters of recommendation from Dr. Satyapal\(^1\). One of them is for you. I told him that I could do nothing and advised him to approach you, assuring him that you would carefully listen to his case and, if you were convinced, you might use your good offices to help him. You may now hear everything and do what is necessary.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

_SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL_
_PURUSHOTTAM BUILDING_
_OPP. OPERA HOUSE, BOMBAY 4_

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro- 2: Sardar Vallabhbhai_, p. 209

---

\(^1\) A prominent leader of the Punjab
158. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[About August 10, 1937]

CHI. MAHADEV,

Write a strong letter to that German. We should ask him to issue a public apology. It will be enough if he corrects his statement.

I don’t intend to send you to Dhulia before Wednesday at any rate and I shall do so only if you are willing to go. When we meet tomorrow we will spare two minutes to discuss this too.

Herewith draft of a wire to Bharucha:

“Bharucha, Mahendra Mansion, Fort, Bombay. Come Wednesday nine morning half hour. Whole day engaged otherwise. Gandhi.”

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Today I can send for Harijan only the material that is ready. I think I will be able to send tomorrow material for about two columns or so.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11548

159. TELEGRAM TO AMTUSSALAAM

WARDHAGANI,
August 11, 1937

AMTUL SALAAM,
CARE “HARIJAN”
TRIVANDRUM
STAY WHILE YOU ARE HAPPY AND TAKING TREATMENT.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 405

1From the S.N. Register
160. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[August 11, 1937]¹

CHI. MAHADEV,

Janba hasn’t come yet. But I am sending whatever is ready. Mohanlal’s cheque also is enclosed. Credit the money to the account for Harijan work.

Bhansali² must have arrived there. I have sent some material with him, too. Send [the enclosed to] Amtul Salaam.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11549

161. LETTER TO G. V. MAVALANKAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 11, 1937

BHAISHRI MAVALANKAR,

I got your letter. You have indeed been entrusted with a great responsibility³. But I am sure you will be able to do full Justice to it and will prove yourself worthy of the honour.

Do please continue as one of the Trustees of the Harijan Ashram for the present. Perhaps your effectiveness in begging will increase. Is it not better that I should go on writing what seems right to me? But how can I expect you to do more than what all of you can accept out of the suggestions I make?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1247

¹From the reference to the telegram to Amtussalaam which was enclosed with this letter; vide the preceding item.
²Jayakrishnadas Prabhusadas Bhansali
³As Speaker of the Bombay Legislative Assembly
162. DISCUSSION WITH D. K. MEHTA\(^1\) AND P. B. GOLE

SEGAGON,
August 11/12, 1937

It is understood that the discussions centred round land revenue and excise policies. It was pointed out to Gandhiji that the policy of flat reduction in land revenue was undesirable, inasmuch as there were areas which had been heavily assessed and needed immediate help, while in some areas the land revenue was so low that it would not be advisable to reduce it any further.

As regards the excise policy, it is understood that Gandhiji impressed on the Ministers that in all the six Congress Provinces the policy in this matter should be uniform and total prohibition should be the goal of the Congress Ministries. This goal should have to be achieved within the lifetimes of the present Ministries. The loss in revenue would be made good by drastic retrenchments, and, if need be, the Congress Ministers should be prepared to face fresh taxation measures.

_The Hitavada_, 13-8-1937

163. STATEMENT ON INTERVIEW WITH THE VICEROY\(^2\)

August 12, 1937

I have read what are described as startling disclosures of the Delhi interview in _The Bombay Sentinel\(^3\)_ . It is from beginning to end a figment of imagination, pure and simple.

The interview, as stated in the Viceroy’s letter, was without any purpose beyond that of establishing courteous contact on his part. Therefore, I studiously refrained from referring to any matter outside of lifting the ban on Khan Saheb’s entry into his own Province, and an understanding of Government’s wishes regarding my desire to visit that Province.

[The] other conversation was more or less of a general character. The word ‘Federation’ was not even mentioned at the interview.

_The Hindu_, 13-8-1937

---

1 Minister for Finance, C. P.
2 Gandhiji had met the Viceroy on August 4; vide “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 4-8-1937
3 Dated 10-8-1937
164. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 12, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. Since I wrote to you only the day before yesterday, I have no special reason for writing this. But there is one point. You have written about Rs. 5 to 10 for Kamalabai. Her request is for Rs. 5 only. We have, therefore, to send only that much. How to remit the sum is for you to decide. No expense should be incurred in remitting it. Jivanlal’s firm has an office in Madras too. You can make an arrangement with them and pay the money in Rajkot. If you cannot make such an arrangement, let me know. Ask Kamalabai where the money should be remitted.

Kanaiyo has now settled down to work with me. He says: “Now I am absolutely free from worry.” There is no need at all for you to worry about him.

Lilavati’s health will continue as it has been for some time. It will come round by and by.

When was the last remittance on account of Mirabehn received? There seems to have been some irregularity.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8536. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

165. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI A. MEHTA

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 12, 1937,

BHAI BHAGWANJI,

What a sad description of your family affairs you have given! In spite of this, if you alone can practise perfect self-sacrifice I am sure you will be able to repair the broken ship.

You need never apologize to me. It will always remain my wish that your family, that is, the whole Karsanji family, should prosper and regain the illustrious name that it once had, and that you should be the means of bringing it about.

Vandemataram from
M. K. GANDHI

BHAGWANJI ANUPCHAND, VAKIL, B.A., LL.B.
RAIKOT SADAR
KATHIAWAR

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5836. Also C.W. 3059. Courtesy Narandas Gandhi

166. LETTER TO R. S. NIMBKar

[Before August 13, 1937]

So far as I am concerned, I would not create deadlocks but would cheerfully face them when they are forced upon me. I do not work the Act, when I work so as to end it. It would be foolish of me, having entered the Legislature, not to take all advantage I can of it, consolidate my position and strengthen it.

Mr. Gandhi informs Mr. Nimbkar that the points raised by him are for the Working Committee to deal with and he takes it they are already before the Committee.

The Hindu, 13-8-1937

167. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

WARDHA,
August 13, 1937

I have seen what seems to be a distorted version of the part I have played in the Nariman episode. The virulent agitation that has gathered round it has caused me deep distress. I cannot do better than quote from my letter, dated August 1, to Mr. Nariman: Since that date, further correspondence between him and me has taken place. A

1 A communist labour leader, who had written “drawing Mr. Gandhi’s attention to the non-release of all politicals and the necessity for labour legislation and the creation of deadlocks after some time.”

2 The letter appeared under the date-line “Bombay, August 13”

3 The extract is not reproduced here; for the full text of the letter, vide “Letter to K. F. Nariman.”
telegram received from him today tells me that he will be ready with his evidence in both cases in five days. I shall lose no time whatsoever in applying myself to the task I have undertaken. I have not as yet worried Bahadurji in this matter, but if my findings are adverse to Mr. Nariman and he is not satisfied with them, I shall immediately request Bahadurji to review the evidence produced before me and my findings.

It has been suggested that what I have done now might have been done when the unfortunate controversy first burst forth. I am not free at this stage to publish the whole of the correspondence that has taken place between him and me. But I can say I have been always willing, as he has admitted himself, that he should have an independent inquiry if he desired it. Therefore, whatever has taken place, has not been due to my indifference or unwillingness to help. If I have been hitherto silent, my silence has been solely in the interest of Mr. Nariman as could be amply borne out by the correspondence referred to above.

I would appeal to the Bombay Press to stop the agitation altogether and ask the public to suspend judgment till the findings are in their possession.¹

The Hindu, 14-8-1937

168. LETTER TO VITHALDAS V. JERAJANI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 13, 1937

BHAI VITHALDAS,

I got your three letters. I don’t remember Raj Kumari to have made the criticism you mention regarding lace. It is 4 a.m. just now. She is asleep. I will ask her later. Her complaint to me is always regarding the khadi section in the Panjab. I have therefore received no complaint against your department.

¹ In Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, “Circular Letter”, 2-4-1897, Narahari Parikh explains: “on 14th of August, Shri Nariman requested Gandhiji, telegraphically, for permission to issue a statement in reply. Gandhiji, of course, had no objection, though he advised against it in Nariman’s own interest. Nariman, in a long letter dated August 15, expressed surprise that the demand for an apology to the Sardar and public, etc., from him should have been made by Gandhiji, for it seemed to him irrelevant and uncalled for. He knew he had nothing to apologize for and no confession to make.”
I still feel that I did right in exempting Gosibehn’. The case of this embroidery work is similar to our use of foreign thread for stitching clothes. If she charges Rs. 2 for an article made of khadi worth eight annas, the additional Rs. 2 are not spent on foreign thread but are paid to the women workers for their art. It is for this reason that I have exempted Gosibehn. This exemption does not in any way militate against the restrictions we have laid down, for as you admit we are still not able to supply exactly the same kind of thread that these women use. I therefore feel that by refusing the exemption we would harm the cause of khadi. We ought not to grudge the use of foreign things which harm nobody but, on the contrary, definitely benefit the country.

I don’t advise you to join the Swadeshi Store, but you may give such help as you can from outside. If they have faith in your ability, they should accept your advice and stock only khadi by way of cloth.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9794

169. LETTER TO DR. FRITZ MICHAELIS

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 13, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. Here are answers to your questions of which, I hope, you have kept a copy.

Handicraft experts would be expected to live with us like ourselves and work side by side with us giving us the benefit of their labour and their experience.

We would adopt such European methods and tools which we need, consistently with our poverty. There is no question of independent workshops being established. We are villagers. A village containing not more than 1000 souls all told. No experts are required who cannot work without capital.

India’s villages require to be revivified. Land is parcelled out in holdings, often even less than one acre. The idea, therefore, is to turn

1Gosibehn Captain, Dadabhoy Naoroji’s granddaughter

124 THE COOLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
waste into wealth. Hence talent that is expensive or that can only express itself in bignesses will not serve my purpose. I want the use of that talent which can see the universe in an atom and, therefore, relates itself to and is rooted in the earth from which we have sprung, on which we are living, to which we have to return. Anyone, therefore, who comes from the West has got to be capable of living the life of the poor. Therefore he must [be] able-bodied and be prepared to live the life of the poorest in the land.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DR. FRITZ MICHAELIS
P. O. BOX NO. 1345
HAIFA

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

170. LETTER TO E. K. PALIA

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 13, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Not knowing anything of transactions relating to land, I cannot be interested in your scheme.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SHRI E. K. PALIA
6/7 CUBBON ROAD
BANGALORE

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
171. LETTER TO M. MARGUERITE WIY

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 13, 1937

DEAR MARGARET,

I was delighted to hear from you. Here is a letter for Maria Sevenich which please send to her.

Love.

BAPU

M. MARGUERITE WIY
LAGER OESCHINENSEE B.
SWITZERLAND

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

172. LETTER TO MARIA SEVENICH

SAGAON WARDHA
[August 13, 1937]¹

DEAR FRIEND,

I have Margaret’s translation of your letter. It is good that you have written so freely. Let me correct one opinion in it. You say I have had the experience of being not successful and that I had retired for some time from political work. In the dictionary of a seeker of truth there is no such thing as being “not successful”. He is or should be an irrepressible optimist because of his immovable faith in the ultimate victory of Truth which is God. And, I have not retired, temporarily or permanently, from political work for I recognize no watertight compartments. What I have done is to retire from the Congress and Congress politics—and that I have done to serve the Congress and the politics of the country better than before. For the rest I await your promised letter.

Love.

BAPU

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

¹ This and the letter to M. Marguerite Wiy, the preceding item, are written on the same sheet.
173. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

SEGAON WARDHA
[August 13, 1937]

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

The opinion is a feather in your cap. That does not mean that I accept the reasoning. But it must stand till there is another opinion from a senior. For me it is unnecessary. I accept Mangaldas’s interpretation. The opinion must be circulated among the members [and you should say] that it was obtained at my instance and that it was being circulated too at my instance. I am glad you are free from fever. I am in Wardha tomorrow for the Working Committee. This will be in your hands tomorrow. Therefore ‘tomorrow’ will be ‘today’ for you.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10129

174. LETTER TO GOKULDAS

WARDHA,
August 13, 1937

BHAI GOKULDAS,

It is the right and duty of the subjects to complain to the State against the menace of leopards and wild pigs. One should be polite and reasonable in whatever one does.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

1 The date, which is faded in the source, is confirmed from the reference to “the Working Committee” which met at Wardha from August 14 to 17.

2 To amend the constitution of the All-India Village Industries Association so as to make provision for a President
175. LETTER TO SARLA

August 13, 1937

CHI. SARLA,

I got your letter. You are a wise girl. You have understood why I don’t send for you here. Persevere and complete the training under Nayee Talim. Become an expert in it. You must be reading in the newspapers about things here. I have managed to write this under great pressure of work just now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8769. Also C.W. 1042. Courtesy: Champabehn R. Mehta

176. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

SEGAON,

August 13, 1937

CHI. MANI,

The car should wait for me tomorrow morning 7.30 near the railway crossing. I expect to reach there about that time.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Please send the accompanying note1 to Chhotelal just now or in the morning. Inform Mahadev so that he may put up to me whatever work he wants to.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11550

1This is not available.
177. NOTES

UNSEEMLINESS IS INDISCIPLINE

The Daily Press reports that at the opening of the C. P. Assembly session the gallery which was packed to overflowing made an unseemly demonstration against Shri Raghavendra Rao. Those who packed the gallery were presumably Congressmen or those who sympathized with the Congress. I suppose there will be parties even after we have Complete Independence of our make. It will go hard with us if the parties will not tolerate one another or show towards one another ordinary courtesy. And the Congress which claims to represent the whole nation can ill afford to be intolerant towards its political opponents or others. If it is, and it is, the only all-India body, it represents all interests. It represents even Shri Raghavendra Rao who was at one time a respected member of the Congress organization. It may be that the votes in the constituency for which he stood were tampered with. If they were, the law would look after it. But he must be presumed to be honest till he is proved guilty. And even if he is proved guilty, the guilt will be no warrant for unseemly demonstration against him. Intolerance, discourtesy, harshness are not only against Congress discipline and code of honour, they are taboo in all good society and are surely contrary to the spirit of democracy.

Harijan, 14-8-1937

178. AGAINST AHIMSA AND TRUTH?

A friend writes:

The following sentence in your article “Criticism Answered” (31st July) seems to me to offend against the spirit of truth and non-violence as also against good logic.

“Foreign liquors in prescribed quantity may be imported for the use of Europeans who cannot or will not do without their drink.”

The Congress Governments must feel as much concerned for the welfare of the European community within their provinces as for the Indian

1 The ex-Premier
2 Only extracts from the letter are reproduced here.
3 Vide “Criticism Answered”, 31-7-1937
THE COOLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

I assume that the Congressmen, as prohibitionists, are agreed that drink is as bad for the European as for the Indian. In that case the mere whim of the drinker cannot count. If drink is to be allowed to the European—although it is bad for him—because he “cannot or will not do without it”, the Japanese, the Americans and several other foreigners in India may seek the same permission; and if they are to be allowed to continue their evil habit on that ground, why should an Indian in his own country be not allowed to ruin himself in the same way?...

If anyone is to be permitted to take (not take to) alcohol, it must be entirely on medical or some other universally applicable ground. There cannot be under the Congress regime a discriminatory legislation for or against a community...

A foreigner residing in India for a period only ought not to be exempt from the same obligation. Thus, even for those who feel that total abstinence is not absolutely necessary, it must be obligatory to give up drink during their stay in India if the nation has declared itself against it. They must be deemed to reside in India on the understanding that they will respect the laws, customs and rules of decent conduct of the people amongst whom they have come to reside.

I have no difficulty generally in following and often adopting this writer’s criticism. But I must confess that though I have read the letter three times, I have failed to understand the argument.

Why is the proposed exemption against the spirit of ahimsa or truth? I fail to see even the bad logic the writer sees in it. In dealing with living entities, the dry syllogistic method leads not only to bad logic but sometimes to fatal logic. For if you miss even a tiny factor—and you never have control over all the factors that enter into dealings with human beings—your conclusion is likely to be wrong. Therefore you never reach the final truth, you only reach an approximation, and that too if you are extra careful in your dealings. Indeed it was my regard for ahimsa and truth that made me think of exempting Europeans. For I am unable to lay down a universal law for all human beings and for all climes that drink is an evil. I can well regard it as a necessity in the frigid zone. I would therefore be chary of imposing prohibition against Europeans who not only do not regard measured quantities of alcohol at each meal an evil but consider it a necessity. Drink is not regarded as a vice in European society as it is generally in India. I would therefore, even from the point of view of courtesy (a phase of ahimsa), leave it to their honour to respect the usage of the... country of their adoption. I would gladly accept the logic of allowing other nationals, if the necessity is proved, the modified freedom the Europeans will enjoy. Indeed it might be necessary to bring in a large number of Indians too under the medical certificate clause. For me the drink question is one of dealing with a growing social evil against which the State is bound to provide whilst it has got the opportunity. The aim is patent. We want to wean the labouring population and the Harijans from the curse. It is a gigantic problem, and the best resources of all social workers, especially women, will be taxed to the utmost before the drink habit goes. The prohibition I have adumbrated is but the beginning (undoubtedly indispensable) of the reform. We cannot reach the drinker so long as he has the drink shop near his door to tempt him. One might not as well prevent an ailing child, nay man, from touching sweets so long as he does not remove the open box in front of them. Whilst on this question, I would like to answer an argument advanced in one of the newspaper cuttings which good friends send me that Shri C. Rajagopalachari in his zeal for this reform has brushed aside the question of the unemployment of the tappers who will be thrown out of work. I do not know what he has in mind for them. Shri Gajanan, who is becoming an expert in making palm gur, tells me that in the Southern Presidency there are tappers engaged in the nefarious trade. He further suggests that the tapping need not stop at all. Only what they will tap under the prohibition regime will be sweet toddy which will be converted into gur instead of fiery liquid. Indeed I learn that in Andhradesh the tappers do not sell the palm juice they extract, but they convert it into gur which they sell to the arrack manufacturers who make arrack out of this gur. In such cases nothing need be done except for the State to take over this gur at a reasonable agreed price. From what I know of the tappers, they are not likely to lose anything by the impending prohibition, and the poor will get a rich but cheap food in the shape of good pure gur instead of a liquid which harms both body and soul.

_Harijan_, 14-8-1937

---

1 Jaggery
179. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 14, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

I am enclosing a letter from Nimu. Only Maganbhai¹ and you can answer her questions. The question regarding her staying in the Ashram will have to be answered by you. I suppose the question regarding the Vidyapith will have to be answered for the present by Maganbhai. If he is here, I will show him this letter before posting it to you. Neither you nor Maganbhai need do anything which is found inconvenient.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9109

180. RENTIA BARAS

I feel—and I should feel—hesitant to write about my own birthday. Readers should know that I would have forgotten it altogether if people in India had not kept reminding me of it. I had to recollect my date of birth only on my joining the school and again when I went to become a barrister. However, I do not recall my parents having customarily celebrated either my birthday or that of any of my brothers. I have not celebrated the birthday of my parents or my sons. At one time, I used to keep a record of their birthdays but even that record was lost when like the [proverbial] cat we changed houses more than seven times. I do not know why I have never been interested in birthdays. But ever since my birthday was first celebrated with pomp in India, I made it known as Rentia Baras. With reference to this occasion which is to be celebrated this year also by the National School of Rajkot, Shri Chhaganlal Joshi writes as follows:² If all Kathiawaris, whether living in Kathiawar or outside, do their part, the amount of Rs. 15,000, which Shri Chhaganlal expects to raise, is a very small sum in my opinion. I would regard no amount big enough where khadi propaganda and Harijan work are concerned. Propagation of khadi means a clear increase in national wealth. With an insignificant capital, the Spinners’ Association has to date distributed three crore rupees amongst the poor, that is to say that khadi worth a minimum of rupees four crores was produced and, of these three crores found their way to the villages. Similarly, Harijan service should also be regarded as charity which earns immediate merit for the donor, as it is a form of atonement. And charity thus given yields immeasurable fruit. Those who are aware of this will contribute to the Daridranarayana fund not in a miserly fashion but in handfuls. But why in the National School at Rajkot alone and why not elsewhere? This should be regarded as a relevant question. I can only say that the scheme drawn up by Shri Narandas Gandhi to celebrate this occasion strikes me as unique. Whatever is collected by means of it is managed by a prosperous organization. It has been found that the routine programme which has been in operation for three years has been steadily expanding. Hence, I can unreservedly request devotees of khadi and Harijans to contribute their utmost to this fund. Those who contribute to this fund should realize that persons contributing to the yajna in the form of yarn are certainly giving more than those who pay money, as the former pay with wealth produced by their own labour. Those who give money only transfer it to the charity-box, they do not produce new wealth, though of course they help to produce more.

¹ Maganbhai Prabhudas Desai
² The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had requested Gandhiji to write in Hanjanbandhu about Narandas Gandhi’s scheme to celebrate Rentia Baras.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 15-8-1937
181. MY NOTES

‘PLAIT DEED’

The Secretary of the Gujarat Harijan Sevak Sangh, Shri Parikshitlal Majmudar, writes: ‘If this is true, it is clearly a case of crime and it is necessary for the State to promptly stop it. Workers of the Sangh should make further inquiries. Are there documents to be signed in such cases, or are the commitments merely verbal? How many persons are engaged in such practices and where do they live? How many such cases have come to light?

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 15-8-1937

182. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

August [15]2, 1937

CHI. MANI,

Kevalram’s letter was among those you returned. I knew that the first part of the telegram was missing. I am sending both with this. Mirabehn is coming today any time between 6 and 8 by the train from Delhi. Rajkumari is arriving tomorrow morning from Bombay.

Blessings from

BAPU

MANIBEHN PATEL
PURUSHOTTAM BUILDING
OPP. OPERA HOUSE, BOMBAY

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Patelne, p. 119

1 The letter is not translated here. Parikshitlal Majmudar had called upon the State of Baroda to prohibit the practice among Harijans of Mehsana Division of mortgaging their womenfolk’s plaits to money-lenders who as a result of this deed enjoyed full rights over the women.

2 The source has “26”. From the reference to Mirabehn’s expected arrival that day it is evident that this was written on August 15; vide “Letter to Amtussalaam”, 16-8-1937. Amrit Kaur was already with Gandhiji on August 23; vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 23-8-1937
183. LETTER TO M. VISVESVARAYYA

[After August 15, 1937]

DEAR SIR VISVESVARAYYA,

You know the havoc wrought by the floods in Orissa. I have advised the Chief Minister Shri Vishwanath Das to approach you for advice and guidance. I have no doubt that you would give him such assistance as it may be in your power to give.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9836. Courtesy: Government of Mysore

184. LETTER TO VICEROY

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 16, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

You are aware of the havoc wrought in Orissa by the recent floods. Its Chief Minister was yesterday describing to me the area of destruction. I have long held the opinion that these annual disasters can be prevented by regulating the direction of the floods. I wonder if you could send any friendly engineer to advise the Orissa Government on the best way of dealing with the floods.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

H. E. THE VICEROY

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

1 This was displayed at the Mysore Pavilion of the Gandhi Darshan Exhibition held in Delhi in 1969-70.

2 The letter appears to have been written after the Chief Minister of Orissa met Gandhiji on August 15, 1937; vide the following item.

185. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

August 16, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am sending with this two articles at any rate. Kanu has typed the Hindi one. The other is getting ready. You seem to be very sensitive indeed. I only described to you what I saw. What happened yesterday was worth seeing. How could I possibly be displeased by your remaining present? But I sensed the atmosphere. You did quite right of course in not coming yesterday. More when we meet.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11551

186. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 16, 1937

CHI. MRIDULA,

Three of your letters are lying with me. Since you were not in any hurry I have taken my time answering them. I did right, didn’t I? You ask me to write to the Majoor Mahajan, but I do not see the need. You did well to write again. You have not mentioned anything in your second letter about the legal proceedings against you. Who is Premlila Mehta? In my view such writings are calculated to rouse sexual passion. But how can they be stopped? Such is today’s education. That is how lives are shaped. The Vikas Griha seems to be developing well. Now your second letter. There must be laws about women. Do write to Bhulabhai. It must also be investigated whether or not some laws can be made in the provinces. There is little hope that anyone in the Assembly would study the question. If a good lawyer having some free time studies this problem and frames the Bill, then an agitation can be started on that basis. We shall discuss this when you come here. How much can be written in a letter? Prabha is plunged in a sea of sorrow. She lost her father-in-law and now she has gone to nurse her father. She has to act on other people’s orders.

1 Bhulabhai J. Desai
Please write to Jayaprakash. I am afraid prabha will not be able to reach there in time. But whenever she comes, she can be of great use to you.

I hope Mummy is fully recovered. Love to you and brothers and sisters.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11205. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

187. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

August 16, 1937

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

I have your letter. You must have received my wire allowing you to remain there as long as necessary. It will be a great thing for me if you get well. My consideration was only on behalf of Amtul Masood and Mother. As for the rest, what I wrote to Ramachandran should hold good. You should return only when he permits. Mirabehn arrived yesterday. She has not gained much in health. Kanti writes that he will have nothing to do with you as long as you are attached to him. And when you have become disinterested there will be no problem at all.

I have one more letter from you today. You need not be in a hurry to return. Prolong your stay if you are improving.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 391
188. TELEGRAM TO RABINDRANATH TAGORE

[On or after August 16, 1937]

GURUDEV
SANTINIKETAN
PRAY DEPEND UPON MY DOING UTMOST END ANDAMAN CRISIS. LOVE.

GANDHI

From the original: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

189. LETTER TO SARASWATI

August 17, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

I have your letter. Kanti does not wish you to come to me till your final examinations are over. Ramachandran also wishes the same. Hence, get through the examination soon and then come over.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6163. Also C.W. 3436. Courtesy: Kan-tilal Gandhi

---

1 This was in reply to the addressee's telegram dated August 16, 1937, which read: “Have wired Andaman prisoners give up hunger strike. Their lives must be saved. Hope you and Jawaharlal will also exert your influence.”

2 ibid

3 On July 24, 1937, about 225 political prisoners in the Andamans Central Prison had gone on hunger-strike. One of their demands was general release of all political prisoners and repeal of all repressive laws. But the Government of India had decided not to consider any of their demands unless they gave up the strike. Vide also “Telegram to Viceroy”, 27-8-1937, and “Telegram to Andamans Prisoners”, 30-8-1937
190. LETTER TO SAMPURNANAND
SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 17, 1937

DEAR SAMPURNANAND,

I had assumed that you were always in good health and physically robust. Narendra Dev is very ill, Jayaprakash is so-so and you are suffering from jaundice and palpitation.

In Gujarat, Dinkar is perpetually ill. Meherally\(^1\) has of course always been weak. I do not know about Masani’s\(^2\) condition. I really feel that I should open a nature-cure clinic for persons like you, and give up all other work. You surely know that I am a nature-cure fiend. Hence you should get well if only to avoid provoking the madness in me. Your letter throws ample light on my question.\(^3\) Nothing further remains to be asked. But the letter raises many other questions, which we shall talk over when we meet. However, let me say one thing. It does not seem correct to say that we can never approach our objective by means of compromise. Of course, the reason for compromise should not be our weakness. Do write the other book you have in mind. I for one like your style.\(^4\)

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the Hindi original: Sampurnanand Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

191. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA
SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 18, 1937

BHAJ GHANSHYAMDAS,

I have your letter. I have carefully gone through it. I feel that there is nothing for me or the Congress to say in this matter. That is to say that none of you should take any step having regard to my

\(^1\) Yusuf Meherally
\(^2\) M. R. Masani
\(^3\) Vide “Letter to Sampurnanand”, 27-7-1937
\(^4\) Gandhiji had just finished reading the addresssee’s book Samajvad.

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 139
approval or disapproval, as your viewpoint and mine are quite different. The stand I took in Lancashire during the Round Table Conference\(^1\) still holds good, for I cannot see any economic agreement independent of political issues. The fact that you people are members of the Pact Committee only means that you no longer have the right to raise political issues. Hence treating this issue as totally independent you must concentrate only on its own merits or otherwise. And what can I say about either? My opinion would most probably coincide with yours. Moreover, I believe that it is your duty to adopt this course. If necessary, you may say that in spite of that being your opinion on the merits and demerits, it need not be given much weight. Since the Congress is the only popular institution, it is necessary that whatever agreement is reached should have the seal of the Congress. And that agreement should be considered binding. This would prove your integrity and sense of justice.

I am dictating this letter after the morning prayers. Your trip to Zurich must have proved beneficial.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 7990. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

192. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

SEGAON,

August 19, 1937

MY DEAR C. R.,

I was intensely dissatisfied with myself that we could not have a heart-to-heart chat. But that did not matter. That you take no rest during the day has alarmed me. It is wrong if not sinful. There is no merit in overdoing anything. The world won’t go wrong if you took an hour’s rest during the day. You must listen unless you want to precipitate a collapse. There is something rotten in the State of Denmark if the simplest thing like an hour’s rest cannot be taken with perfect safety to the State. Please listen.

Love

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2060

193. LETTER TO BHARATAN KUMARAPPA

August 19, 1937

DEAR BHARATAN,

I have your note about Rao¹. I got it during my walk at 7 a.m. This reply will go when Chhotelal leaves. You can come either at 1 o’clock or at 4 p.m. today. Between 2 and 4 I am fixed up. I hope you have taken all the papers and cash from Rao. I should like to see him if he could be induced to come.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 3593

194. LETTER TO LAKSHMI GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 19, 1937

CHI. LAKSHMI,

I am writing to you after many days or rather weeks. But I keep receiving news of you and the children. I write this letter because of Anna². For, on enquiring about his activities, I learn he works without break from morning till eleven at night. This causes me great anxiety. I have also remonstrated³ a bit with him. There is no dharma in working like this. In fact I consider it a fault. How long can anyone carry on in this fashion? How will he manage if he himself falls ill? To create all the conditions for illness, yet hope to escape it is to expect the impossible. Therefore I expect that you, your brothers and sisters will all collectively stop him and will not allow him at any cost to overwork like this. If all of you, brothers and sisters, make up your mind, you will surely succeed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2014

¹ Vide also “Letter to J. C. Kumarappa”, 14-7-1937
² C. Rajagopalachari
³ Vide “Letter to C. Rajagopalachari”, 19-8-1937
Mr. K. F. Nariman has sent me a statement containing his case against Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel and others. In it he wants me to invite witnesses and give them certain assurances. This I gladly do hereby. I would like all those members of the Assembly and the Council who took part in the election of the leader for the Congress Party and those who were influencing votes to send me their statements of what they know, especially whether they voted in the manner they did at the instigation of Sardar Vallabhbhai directly or indirectly, and also their reasons for voting. It is said that the election being unanimous there was no voting. Even so, I would like members who were present at the election to write to me, if they will, as to why they did not express their dissent. I would also like those who took part in influencing the decisions of the electors to write to me whether they acted at the instigation or advice of the Sardar and whether, as a matter of fact, they used his name in speaking to the electors and, if they did, whether they did so with his knowledge and consent.

There is another class of witnesses as to the part Mr. Nariman played in 1934 at the election of members from Bombay for the Central Assembly. I would ask those who can to throw light on the charge of betrayal of trust or improper conduct brought against Mr. Nariman. It has been stated to me that the truth might be stifled for fear of victimization by the Sardar. I do not visualize how the Sardar can victimize. But I can give this assurance that in the event of the Sardar being found guilty of such conduct I should cut off the intimate contact I enjoy with him. If there are witnesses who wish to write to me in confidence I shall respect their confidence, but they should know that if their statements are such as need corroboration or contradiction by the Sardar or parties whom they may mention, their statements will have no weight with me if I could not show them—not necessarily the names—to the parties concerned. Any evidence that any party may wish to give in the two matters mentioned above should reach me not later than the 31st instant addressed Maganwadi, Wardha, and marked “Confidential: about Shri Nariman”. The statements should be written in clear hand without argument or embellishment and should be relevant to matters referred to by me.

1 In Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, Narahari Parikh explains: “Nariman . . . issued a statement on the 17th of August. In this he stated that he was not prepared to apologize and that an assurance of protection should be given to all the witnesses. He followed up the public statement by a letter to Gandhiji urging that as the President of the Parliamentary Committee, Sardar Patel enjoyed large and arbitrary powers and many witnesses who were members of the Legislature were afraid of incurring his displeasure. It was essential, therefore, and in the interest of truth, that assurance of complete protection should be given to the witnesses.”

The Bombay Chronicle, 21-8-1937

196. LETTER ON MAHADEV DESAI

August 20, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Haven’t I invited all this heavy labour myself? How shall I find time to read these essays on Nariman and education? Would it not be proper to send the accompanying statement\(^1\) to the Associated Press by wire? Do as you please. I understand what you say about the fruit.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11552

197. LETTER TO HARIHAR SHARMA

August 20, 1937

CHI. ANNA,

I have your letter. There was no need for you to feel sorry. It was imperative to give expression to the shock I received at the station. It would have been betrayal of friendship if I had not done so. Had I entertained suspicion before this I would have dealt with it. When you had intended to leave after obtaining my permission you ought to have handed over charge to somebody. No calamity would have befallen if I had not given permission. This is evident as you saw how it affected me and what I had to do suddenly since you did not hand over charge. And that too as soon as I got down at the station.

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

\(^1\) Vide the preceding item
198. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 20, 1937

CHI. SUMANGAL,
I see nothing wrong in the decision you have taken. May your efforts bear fruit. Keep me posted with news of your progress.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

199. LETTER TO RANI VIDYAVATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 20, 1937

CHI. VIDYA,
I am dictating replies to the letters lying before me. Among them I find your letter too. I am not quite sure if I have replied to this letter.

Tara is a cheat. She is also somewhat lazy. Once in a while she writes to me, even makes promises and subsequently forgets everything. Congratulation’s on Virendra having started wearing khadi. If you live carefully and work within the limits of your capacity, your health will be all right.

It is of course good that Tara is studying again. There is no reason for being disheartened if one has failed. Students study to acquire knowledge, not for passing examination. Examinations are a kind of measuring-rod. When students fail, they study more and increase their knowledge. This is not bad at all.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original : Rani Vidyavati papers. Courtesy : Gandhi National Museum and Library
GANDHIJI: The cruellest irony of the new reforms lies in the fact that we are left with nothing but the liquor revenue to fall back upon in order to give our children education. That is the educational puzzle but it should not baffle us. We have to solve it and the solution must not involve the compromise of our ideal of prohibition, cost whatever else it may. It must be shameful and humiliating to think that unless we got the drink revenue, our children would be starved of their education. But if it comes to it, we should prefer it as a lesser evil. If only we will refuse to be obsessed by the figures and by the supposed necessity of giving our children the exact kind of education that they get today, the problem should not baffle us.

QUESTION: Then would you really abolish what is called secondary education and give the whole education up to matriculation in the village schools?

A. Certainly. What is your secondary education but compelling the poor boys to learn in a foreign language in seven years what they should learn in the course of a couple of years in their own mother tongue? If you can but make up your minds to free the children from the incubus of learning their subjects in a foreign tongue, and if you teach them to use their hands and feet profitably, the educational puzzle is solved. You can sacrifice without compunction the whole of the drink revenue. But you must resolve to sacrifice this revenue first, and think of the ways and means about education later. Make the beginning by taking the big step.

Q. But would just the mere declaration of prohibition mean prohibition? May it not be that we may sacrifice the revenue without touching the curse of drink, not to talk of abolishing it?

A. The declaration does not mean that you will thereafter sit still. You will impress everyone into your service. In fact the whole staff is there—the staff of excise inspectors, their superior officers, and the whole of their subordinate staff. You will tell them that they will serve on no other terms but those of working for total abolition of drink. You will convert every grog-shop into a recreation centre. You will

---

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “The Education Puzzle” concentrate on places where opportunities for getting drunk are greatest. You will ask the mill-owners and factory-owners to provide light refreshment stalls, you will provide there refreshing drinks for them like sugar-cane juice, games for them, lantern shows for them, and make them feel that they are like you. Impress everyone, without exception, into your service. The village school-master and the other official should be all prohibition workers.

Q. Very good. But in many places you will find the village Patel and others joining the drinking folk in their drunken revels. What about them?

A. Every one of your school children will be a prohibition worker. Ministers will be going up and down the country visiting the grog shops-turned-recreation-centres, have their cup of refreshing drink with the common folk and make these houses fashionable. Don’t be deterred by the thought that prohibition failed in America. Remember that the stupendous experiment was tried there, where drinking is not looked upon as a vice, where millions usually drink. Here drink is held reprehensible by all religions, and it is not the millions who drink but individuals who drink.

_Harijan_ 21-8-1937

---

201. HINDI-URDU

From the valuable essay¹ written by Shri Jawaharlal Nehru, being No. 6 of the Congress Political and Economical Studies Series, I copy his following seventeen main suggestions:²

Of course the reader should procure the pamphlet for himself and study it with the care it deserves. It is obtainable at the A. I. C. C. office, Swaraj Bhawan, Allahabad, at the price of 4 annas plus one anna postage.

_Harijan_ 21-8-1937

---

¹ For Gandhiji’s Foreword, vide “Foreword to “The Question of Languages”, 3-8-1936
² Vide “The question of Languages”, 21-8-1937
NOTES

NOT INSTRUMENT OF INSTRUCTIONS

What I have been recently writing in connection with the constructive programme before the Congress Ministries has been described by some newspapers as “Instrument of Instructions”. No one but the President of the Congress and the Working Committee has any power to issue instructions to the Congress Ministries. Mine is a very humble note. I can only advise on matters about which I may claim special knowledge or experience. My articles have a value only to the extent that they appeal to the reason of those to whom they are addressed. Though I enjoy the confidence of the Working Committee, the views I may express here need not be taken to represent its views or even those of any of its groups. Indeed the public should know that in several matters I do not represent the views of many individual members. Therefore, whatever I may say in these columns should be taken to be purely personal to me and in no way representative of the Working Committee. But in matters relating to the struggle for swaraj through non-violent action. I do claim special qualifications. For me office-acceptance has a special meaning even in terms of the Congress manifesto and resolutions. It would be wrong if I did not put before the Ministers and the public my meaning of office-acceptance. But it may not always be the official Congress view, it may not be the view of Congressmen in general. My position and limitations being made clear, there need be no embarrassment to the Ministers or me. I should feel cramped if my writings were presumed to bear the imprimatur of the official or even the non-official Congress view.

Harijan, 21-8-1937

THE IMPLICATIONS

I have not hesitated to express my opinion that the salaries that the Congress Ministers have voted for themselves are much too high for the standard that govern us in this the poorest country in the world. In the hurried note that Prof. K. T. Shah has sent me and which the reader will find elsewhere, India’s average annual per capita income will be found to be £4 against £50 of Great Britain. Unfortunately for us we have to bear yet a while the burden of the British inheritance, and in spite of the best effort we fail to achieve the ideal standard. The salaries and the allowances are now a settled fact. The question now is, will the Ministers, their secretaries and the Members work so hard as to deserve the emoluments they will receive? Will the Members become whole-time workers for the nation and give a faithful account of the services they may render? Let us not make the mistake of imagining that the things are what we wish them to be or what they should be. And it is not enough that the Ministers live simply and work hard. They have to see to it that the departments they control also respond. Thus justice should become cheap and expeditious. Today it is the luxury of the rich and the joy of the gambler. The police should be friends of the people instead of being their dread. Education should be so revolutionized as to answer the wants of the poorest villager instead of answering those of an imperial exploiter. All those who were imprisoned for political offences even of a violent nature will shortly find themselves free if the Ministers can give them the freedom. This is a phenomenon not to be looked at lightly. Does it mean passport to violence? Certainly not in terms of the Congress creed of non-violence. The Congress abhors individual violence in a far more real sense than the Government it replaces. It seeks to meet the violence of individuals not with the organized violence called punishment but with non-violence in the shape of friendly approach to the erring individuals and through the cultivation of sound public opinion against any form of violence. Its methods are preventive, not punitive. In other words, the Congress will rule not through the police backed by the military but through its moral authority based upon the greatest goodwill of the people. It will rule not in virtue of authority derived from a superior armed power but in virtue of the service of the people whom it seeks to represent in every one of its actions. Ban- on all prohibited literature is being removed. Now some of the books banned will be found, I suppose, to inculcate violence and spread obscenity, or hatred among different classes or sects. The Congress rule does not mean licence to violence or obscenity or fomenting of hatred. Again the Congress will rely upon the unstinted support of enlightened public opinion in dealing with objectionable literature. The Ministers who may find violence, hatred or obscenity spreading in their provinces will look to the Congress organizations and ultimately the Working Committee for active and efficient help before they resort to the processes of the criminal law and all it means. Indeed the triumph of the Congress will be measured by the success it achieves in rendering the police and the military practically idle. And it will fail utterly if it has to face crises that render the use of the police and the military inevitable. The best and the only effective way to wreck the existing Constitution is for the Congress to prove conclusively that it can rule without the aid of the military and with the least possible assistance of the police who may well have some new and friendly designation given to them as a correspondent suggests.

Harijan, 21-8-1937

204. LETTER TO VERRIER ELWIN

Unrevised

Segaon, Wardha,
August 21, 1937

MY DEAR VERRIER,

Your letter to Jamnalalji and now the fuller letter to Bapa make distressful reading. God has saved you for greater service. You must not give way to dejection. Dejection is the measure of one’s want of faith. You say in Bapa’s letter: “I have lost most of my Christian or religious faith. How can a just and good God allow these sufferings of the poor?” Are you not judging God? Who are we to say why He allows certain things? There would be little play for faith, if we could reason out every act of God. We would then be co-equal with Him. I understand the persecution to which you have been subjected.¹ But that is the moment of your trial. Your faith must be immovable like the Himalayas. They will suffer decay, but not so your faith, if it is worth anything. No, no, it won’t do. You must cheer up. No more of idle sorrow!

Thakkar Bapa in his covering letter to Mahadev says Elwin thinks Bapu is displeased with him. What is this libel on you by him, or by you on me? I have differed from you. That you know. You have never given me cause for displeasure. My love can stand many trials. But you have not put it through any. It burns as bright as ever. Take of it a cartload and distribute it to Shamrao² and others.

BAPU

From a copy. Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

¹ Perhaps the reference is to the addressee’s conflict with the Church authorities.

² Shamrao Hivale, addressee’s co-worker
205. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

August 21, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Where is the book that Prema writes about? I don’t remember to have received it. I have entered silence at 6 this evening. Silence always suits me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]
Send over Verrier’s letter.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11553

206. LETTER TO JAYANTI N. PAREKH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 22, 1937

CHI. JAYANTI,

I have your letter. The years pass for all, old and young. The wheel of time never stops moving even for a moment. All of you were but little children yesterday. Now you are all children no more. I have to make an effort to remember this. May your aspirations be fulfilled and your life be spent in relieving the sufferings of the hungry and other afflicted people. Why don’t you write directly to Sardar drawing his attention to the unusual changes about which you have written in your letter to me? Are you afraid that he will not pay attention to you? If you have any such doubt, dispel it. I hope Dinkar is getting stronger.

It would be very good if Indu’s mind becomes steady.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6265

1 On brahmacharya, by Premabehn Kantak; vide also “Letter to Premabehn Kantak”, 25-8-1937
207. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 22, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

I send with this a letter from Jayanti addressed to me. I replied to him saying that it would be better if he wrote directly to you instead of writing to me. I think it is best that you yourself should reply to the accompanying letter. I am getting papers from Nariman. I am not sending copies to you. I will of course send copies of papers which you ought to get. Don’t worry about my health. I am taking proper rest and will now increase the period.

Blessings from

BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL
POONA

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, p. 210

208. LETTER TO MULSHANKER NAUTAMAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 23, 1937

CHI. MULSHANKER,

I do not seem to have received your letter of the 19th March. It is certainly good that you are doing the work with your whole heart in it. Please keep it up. This is what I believe to be dharma regarding marriage. Parents cannot force their children to marry, or to marry a particular person. While making their choice, the son or the daughter should listen with the utmost respect to their parents’ advice, but need not marry anybody whom their heart does not accept. At the same time they should not form an alliance which would displease their parents. I see no harm in restraining the desire for marriage as long as one can preserve self-control. But one must not deceive oneself in any way. When the time for courting imprisonment comes again, those who have in them a strong spirit of self-sacrifice will have a right to do so. In this one should try to obtain the blessings of one’s elders. But I can imagine cases in which it would be one’s dharma to make such self-sacrifice even if the elders refuse their blessings. One can decide only after examining the circumstances in each case.

1 Vide the preceding item.

I think I have answered all your questions. If anything is left out, please ask me again.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2585. Also C.W. 9464. Courtesy: Mulshanker Nautamlal

209. _LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI_

_SEGAON,_

_August 23, 1937_

CHI. MAHDEV.

Leaving aside important letters, I went on writing for _Harijan_. I have just finished the last article at 3.25. I have not been able to revise any of them. They have been revised by Rajkumari. Please go through them. I got as many of the articles typed as I could but the ones written after two couldn’t of course be typed. I suggest that if there is no time you should send them as they are. However, if there is time and you get some copies made, send me one. All the copies of the articles which have been typed are being sent to you. Send me one copy [of each] if you can spare them. Today I cannot send anything more.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11554
210. MESSAGE TO TRAVANCORE WOMEN’S CONFERENCE, QUILON

[Before August 24, 1937]

How I wish Travancore women will play their part in purifying religion by removing from their heart untouchability and all it means and by taking their due share in the prohibition campaign now commenced.

The Hindu, 25-8-1937

211. LETTER TO G. A. NATESAN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 24, 1937

MY DEAR NATESAN,

Many thanks for your letter and cutting. What you have done is wholly worthy of you. You differed honestly, you have revised your view openly. As to education you will see the use I have made of your letter in the forthcoming issue of Harijan.3

I am under strict order to take rest if I am to escape serious consequences. Please therefore wait for me to overtake reading your Sanskrit abridgments4.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 2237

---

1 The conference concluded on August 24, expressing “its profound gratitude to the Maharaja and Maharani for issuing the Temple-entry Proclamation and resolved to form an All-Kerala Hindu Women’s Conference.”

2 ibid

3 Vide “Notes”, sub-title, “Needless Fear”, 28-8-1937

4 Of the Ramayana, the Mahabharata, etc.
212. LETTER TO G. CUNNINGHAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 24, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter of the 17th instant. Evidently I did not quite understand what H. E. the Viceroy said to me about trans-Frontier. I understood him to mean that he could not think of permitting me to cross the border. And I accepted what I understood to be the Viceroy’s decision adding that I did not lose the hope that, when I have inspired sufficient confidence as to my integrity and ability, I could safely be permitted to cross the Frontier. But that is irrelevant to this letter. I would like to know the implication of “leaving all affairs connected with the tribes severely alone” during my visit. Not that I have the slightest desire to meddle in trans-Frontier affairs. My intention is, as it was when I first broached the subject to Lord Irwin, as Lord Halifax then was, to know the Frontier Pathan in his own home, to make the acquaintance of Khudai Khidmatgars, to ascertain for myself how far their claim to be utterly non-violent could be sustained and how I could promote the general welfare of the Pathans which is dear to the heart of Khan Saheb Abdul Ghaffar Khan. He puts implicit reliance upon my judgment as I put on his transparency and trustworthiness. But I suppose it is inevitable that people will come to me to talk about trans-Frontier affairs. Am I not to listen to their narratives and even give my opinion if I were asked to express it and could form one on what they might tell me? If I succeed in visiting the Frontier Province, I should certainly feel sorry if I had to leave it without having the pleasure of renewing the acquaintance we made during the time you were at Delhi. I await your further letter about the Khan Saheb’s question.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]

I just read in the papers the ban has been lifted. I am grateful.

H. E. THE GOVERNOR
N.W.F.P.

From a copy: C.W. 7991. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

1 Vide “Letter from G. Cunnigham”, 17-8-1937
2 In March 1931; vide “Letter to Dr. William H. Tandy”, 20-10-1937
213. LETTER TO MANGALDAS PAKVASA

SEGON, WARDHA,
August 24, 1937

Bhai Mangaldas,

Kumarappa tells me that you have given up earning money for good and have resolved to devote the rest of your life to service. May you remain loyal to your noble resolve! Such self-sacrifices are certainly needed. I suppose our forefathers must have had a similar motive in entering the vanaprastha\(^1\).

I hope to receive an exhaustive note from you regarding the Nariman affair. After all you were the President.

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4678. Courtesy: Mangaldas Pakvasa

214. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

SEGON, WARDHA,
August 25, 1937

Chh. Prema,

You must have heard about my ill-health. I have been ordered minimum mental exertion and maximum rest. Since both the brain and the right hand demand complete rest, I will content myself with writing what you want immediately. I did tie your raksha\(^2\) which I received in time. I have completely re-written the reply to your question.\(^3\) The old replies are not incorrect, but being incomplete they may lend themselves to misinterpretation. I am returning them. Cancel them. See that they are not published at all. If the new reply is useful, you may publish it. I have preserved your letters and will reply to

\(^1\) The third stage in one’s life when one retired to the forest leaving behind all worldly connections

\(^2\) A thread tied on Shravana Shukla 15 by a sister to the wrist of her brother or a person regarded as such implying that he would protect her

\(^3\) The addressee had written a novel based on a discussion Gandhiji had with a friend about the case of a married professor aspiring to observe brahmacharya. The addressee included Gandhiji’s answer in her novel, a Gujarati translation of which appeared under the title \textit{Kama ane Kamini}.
them when I am all right. You may even receive my reply sooner if I am permitted to dictate. There is no cause for worry about me. However, I have to be extremely careful.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

QUESTION: A professor who is married wants to observe _brahmacharya_. The wife doesn’t agree. What is the professor friend’s dharma in these circumstances?

ANSWER: This question could have arisen only if the idea of observing _brahmacharya_ came to the husband after marriage. What I mean by marriage as a part of dharma is that intercourse between husband and wife is resorted to only when they desire children, and never for sex-gratification. Those who do not look upon marriage as a holy bond will of course respect each other’s wishes. Intercourse without the consent of the other party is nothing but rape.

Let us now deal with the above mentioned question. In a case in which it is only the husband who wishes to observe _brahmacharya_ but the wife does not, if the husband has become completely free from passion, that is, has, in the language of the _Gita_, Ch. II, v. 59, realized the Supreme, intercourse will be physically impossible. The wife will realize the husband’s condition and her passion will subside. But the question refers to a man’s striving for _brahmacharya_. A husband or wife can strive for any aim which was not present in the minds of both at the time of marriage, only with the consent of the other partner. In other words, a husband cannot take the vow of _brahmacharya_ without the consent of his wife. Of course everybody should try to practise ordinary self-control. When either party is aroused, generally the other party also is agreeable or becomes so after a little persuasion. When this does not happen, bitterness results. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion, from the experiences of many people and after careful reflection over them, that practice of self-control depends on mutual consent. I should therefore say that the question is defective. Where _brahmacharya_ has become a natural condition, the question does not arise. And it has no room when passion is present and the person only wants to strive for _brahmacharya_.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10393. Also C.W. 6832. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak
215. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 25, 1937

Bhai Ghanshyamdas,

What can I write? My mind can work in one direction only. I do not know how I can be of help. What opinion can I form on a matter I know nothing about? Hence I would only suggest that you do what is in the interest of India irrespective of the opinion of Congressmen. Rest assured that the Congress will have to accept what is for the country’s good. And its prestige will suffer in rejecting it. The Congress has no other capital except its prestige which in turn depends upon the following of the poor millions. Thus the welfare of India means simply the economic, intellectual and moral welfare of its millions. I have said nothing new but at times such pronouncements of principle are most effective when made by a friend. One can say my health is quite good. A little weakness is there but it will disappear. There is no need for a change. But it will automatically be brought about if the trip to the Frontier Province materializes. For one thing the climate there is good and fruit, etc., are available in plenty.

You must be building up your health. The operation must have been of considerable help.

Blessings from

Bapu

From the Hindi original: C.W. 7983. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

216. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 26, 1937

My dear C. R.,

I wonder if you have a moment to think of Hindi Prachar Sabha. Raghavan is anxious about its financial condition. He seems to have no faith in the South and expects money from the North. The latter is a broken reed. Jamnalalji thinks that other provinces have been neglected. Do you think you can raise anything on your side? I do not expect you to give muck time to this work but I am just putting you in mind of it. I hope you have begun to give yourself an hour’s rest during the day. That is a duty you may not neglect.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2067

217. LETTER TO EDITH HUNTER

SEGAON, WARDHA, C. P.,
August 26, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

Here is my message. You can do with it what you like.

Attainment of world peace is impossible except for greater scientific precision, greater travail of the soul, greater patience and greater resources than required for the invention and consolidation of the means of mutual slaughter. It cannot be attained by a mere muster-roll signed by millions of mankind desiring peace. But it can, if there is a science of peace, as I hold there is, by a few devoting themselves to the discovery of the means. Their effort being from within will not be showy but then it will not need a single farthing.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

MRS. EDITH HUNTER
SECRETARY, FRIENDS OF INDIA SOCIETY
47 VICTORIA STREET
LONDON S.W. 1

From a photostat: G.N. 1534. Also Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 In his postscript to this letter Mahadev Desai writes: “Bapu’s own condition is giving us no little anxiety. The pressure, as examined by Dr. Gilder, was 200/120, and the outward symptoms too are not at all happy He is trying to give himself rest. But is there any rest for him?”
218. LETTER TO CHANDAN PAREKH

SEGAON,
August 26, 1937

CHI. CHANDAN,

I have your frank letter. I have no further questions to ask now. You say that I should send that letter to Shankar\(^1\) and not show it to anybody except Kakasaheb. Why? If we have got rid of a weakness of which we have been guilty, we shouldn’t mind the whole world knowing about it. And why need we feel ashamed about it, either? Moreover, you wish to serve women. You wish to save girls from the clutches of . . . \(^2\), for you believe that associating with him does them very great harm. How can you succeed in this unless you make public his misbehaviour with you? From every point of view, therefore, you should have no objection to your letter being read by any person. This does not mean, of course, that a letter like this should be shown to all. But I should be free to show it to anybody to whom I may think it necessary to show. Unless I make appropriate use of your letter, I can make no progress in my inquiry either. I will, therefore, keep a copy and send the original to Shankar.

If you want to be strong enough to see this matter through, you will need to have strength of heart. You will have to get some facts from your girl friends who have any knowledge of this matter. If any of them is willing to write to me, encourage her to do so. If the whole thing happened exactly as you have described, you have nothing to feel ashamed about. The fault was wholly . . . ’s, for, as you say, was it not he who aroused passion in you? While gratifying his guilty desires, he made you take interest in his actions. Am I right? Continue to write to me without any constraint. I am sending a copy of your letter to Nanabhai\(^3\) at any rate. I hope you will not be displeased by that. If I don’t send a copy to him, my inquiry cannot proceed. I hope your studies are progressing very well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 943. Courtesy: Satish D. Kalelkar

\(^1\) Shankar alias Satish Kalelkar, addressee’s fiance
\(^2\) The name has been omitted.
\(^3\) Nrisimhaprasad Kalidas Bhatt
219. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

August 26, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

The mail was received just now. Today all the articles have been typed here, and therefore you should have no difficulty. I leave to you the fate of the letters to be posted. Shivprasad is a wonderful man! Who is Kale, and who is Shridhar? I am not able to understand anything. Shivprasad must make a careful inquiry. Ask Ku[sum] and Chhotelal if either of them knows. How did he get those replies?

You must have received the mail sent in the morning. Keep taking enough fruit. About Nariman, let us see what happens.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11555

220. TELEGRAM TO VICEROY

August 27, 1937

IF HUNGER-STRIKE ANDAMANS STILL ON COULD YOU PLEASE WIRE FOLLOWING TO STRIKERS. QUOTE. I VENTURE ADD MY ADVICE TO GURUDEV TAGORE’S¹ AND WORKING COMMITTEE’S² TO ABANDON STRIKE RELYING UPON US ALL TRYING BEST SECURE RELIEF FOR YOU. IT WOULD BE GRACEFUL ON YOUR PART YIELD TO NATIONWIDE REQUEST. YOU WILL HELP ME PERSONALLY IF I COULD GET ASSURANCE THAT THOSE WHO BELIEVED IN TERRORIST METHODS NO LONGER BELIEVE IN THEM AND THAT THEY HAVE COME TO BELIEVE IN NON-VIOLENCE AS THE BEST METHOD. I ASK THIS BECAUSE SOME LEADERS SAY DETENUS HAVE ABJURED TERRORISM BUT OPINION

¹ Vide “Telegram to Rabindranath Tagore”, 16-8-1937
² Vide “Congress Working Committee Resolution on Andamans Prisoners”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
221. LETTER TO R. GANAPADHARAN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 27, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter of the 10th inst.

Marriage is not an affair in which one person can dispose of his girls or boys against their will. My boy married Shri Rajagopala-chari’s daughter because they fell in love with each other in perfectly honourable manner and the couple had our blessings. I would be glad to think that you could also be similarly matched. I have absolutely no prejudices, but no third party can bring about such matches.

I see nothing unhygienic in a person carrying a moustache or a shikha or both. I cannot give any reason for this age-long custom but I do not believe in setting aside customs for which I can give no valid reason but which are not repugnant to my moral or sanitary sense.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

R. GANGADHARAN
THOPPIKAVILAKOM
VAKKOM, P. O. ANJUTENGU, TRAVANCORE

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 To this, the Viceroy’s reply of even date read: “Many thanks for your message which I am having repeated to the hunger-strikers that they should telegraph reply to you.” The telegram dated August 28 from Andamans read: “Your message was personally delivered by me this morning, August 28, to the hunger-strikers who asked for time to discuss the question of calling off the strike and are still deliberating at 7 p.m. Hope to send further report tomorrow.” On August 29, Gandhiji received the following telegram: “Hunger-strike suspended unconditionally late last night by an overwhelming majority who broke their fast. Only seven remaining on hunger-strike.” For Gandhiji’s reply, vide “Telegram to Andamans Prisoners”, 30-8-1937
222. LETTER TO ZAKIR HUSAIN

SEGAON,
August 27, 1937

MY DEAR ZAKIR,

I got your letter only yesterday. I therefore sent a wire to Rajendra Babu asking him to attend the Conference and seek out Maulvi Abdul Haq Saheb. It is tragic that Nagpur should have so upset him. I have not yet traced the reason for his displeasure. I am glad you have sent Mujeeb to Patna. You will please tell me what happens there.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

ZAKIR HUSAIN
JAMIA MILLIA
DELHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

223. LETTER TO M. SUBRAHMANYA RAJU

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 27, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter of 12th August. Of course it is possible to revive peaceful picketing and to reconstitute district temperance committees. Both these things will, I have no doubt, take place if it becomes necessary.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SYT. M. S. RAJU
SECRETARY, VILLAGE CONGRESS COMMITTEE
KARVATNAGAR
CHITTOOR

From the original: G.N. 11518

1 Prof. Mohammed Mujeeb, Vice-Chancellor, Jamia Millia Islamia, Delhi
224. LETTER TO KASHI GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 27, 1937

CHI. KASHI,

You seem to be getting along quite well there. Do not in the least hesitate to stay there as long as necessary. Amba, Prabhudas and the children are bound to benefit. I at any rate have certainly liked your decision that the delivery also should take place there. Things are going on well here. I hope you yourself are keeping well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33096

225. LETTER TO RAGHAVDAS

SEGAON,
August 27, 1937

BHAIRAGHAVDAS,

What you say regarding machines is worth considering. I see that, as it is; the hand-operated grinding-stones are going out of use. It is even difficult to procure one. Even so, think over the matter and write to me. How many machines are operating in the U. P. and Gorakhpur? Find out if one can get as much flour as one needs if the use of machines is discontinued. Also consider whether, if the use of smaller machines is stopped, the tons of white flour prepared in Bombay and other places will not find its way into the villages. The flour of the smaller machines is much better.

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 The letters are in a different hand but the subscription in both is by Gandhiji.
226. LETTER TO RAMDAS GULATI

August 27, 1937

Bhai Ramdas,

I have your letter. The work has increased . . . I have told Om about matters here. I am writing to Shankerlal about the Exhibition. Probably he will himself come over and attend to everything. According to me the expense seems to be so great that the villagers cannot hold a session like this. This will not be a village Congress. The idea of a Congress in a village is that all the expenses are kept within two to three thousand rupees. Will not the expense on water supply also be a waste once the session is over? Isn’t there any way by which we can avoid all this expense? I feel that a Congress session for so many people will cost less in a city. If this is true, there is something wrong somewhere.

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

227. DISCUSSION ON PROHIBITION

[Before August 28, 1937]

Gandhiji: If we can achieve prohibition within the next three years, and if we can demonstrate to the world that we can do without the military in the provinces, we shall have raised India’s name to a height that it had never reached before and to which no nation has yet reached. The task of making people sober is a task of the most vital importance and no amount of energy devoted to it is likely to be wasted. It will at once be a kind of true adult education and [a means] of improving the taxable capacity of the citizen.

[Question:] What are the most effective agencies for the creation of a sober India?

G. I have said already that the existing excise force may be used to advantage. Up to now they had no belief in the Government’s bona

1 The architect in charge of construction work at the Haripura Congress; vide “Letter to Vallabhbhai Patel”, 26-9-1937.
2 Some words are illegible in the source.
3 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s “A Stupendous Task”, under “Notes”
fides to achieve prohibition at even a distant date. They now know well enough that the Congress will not rest in peace and will not let others rest in peace until it has achieved prohibition, and they will gladly fall into line with the new policy and programme. But the voluntary agencies will be more effective. There are our professors and teachers, and students of colleges. They may well be called upon to devote a couple of hours each day to the task. They should go to the areas frequented by the drinkers, associate with them, speak to them and reason with them and do peaceful picketing of an educative character. I look to the medical profession to put their heads together to find out why people drink, how they can be weaned from drink, find out effective, wholesome and healthful substitutes of drink. Then there are our sisters. They did great work during the non-co-operation days. They should be organized again to revive the work under better auspices now. Whilst their presence will be a sure deterrent, they will have few difficulties in the way. Before, the police looked indifferently on, and even helped the ruffians in the days gone by. Now, women can count on their help in their holy crusade. Then there are the temperance associations. Most of them have been up to now inert and inactive. We should now ask them to pull themselves together and engage actively in the crusade. We might well have a Prohibition League under which all these agencies may work in a regular and systematic manner. The revenue drawn from excise may rightly be used for the prohibition campaign. That will be no forbidden use of tainted money, but something like turning a channel of foul water into the holy Ganges and making it pure.

Above all, find out the plague spots, concentrate your forces on them. Have meetings of the liquor contractors and liquor dealers, teach them how to turn an honest penny by converting their liquor booths into recreation centres. I have already described how these places may be turned into centres of harmless recreation and even of educative amusement.

_Harijan, 28-8-1937_

---

1 Vide “Discussion on Prohibition”, 21-8-1937
228. NOTES

DANGEROUS EVEN IN FRIGID ZONE

Apropos of my remark that alcohol might be required in a frigid zone, a friend sends me the following interesting paragraph from Liquor Control by G. E. G. Catlin who while discussing the apparent warming effect of alcohol says:

A simple mechanical consideration should, however, warn us against a misinterpretation of these results. The body temperature has not been changed but the warmer blood has been sent to the surface where, if it is chilled, it returns to reduce the temperature of the whole system. In cases where there is serious need of protection against cold, alcohol is not only useless but dangerous. Fridtjof Nansen\(^2\) stated that ‘my experience leads me to take a decided stand against the use of stimulants and narcotics of all sorts’ in Arctic journeys—in the case of alcohol owing to the increased risk of death by freezing.

We in India, however, do not need such testimony. We have no excuse apparent or real for taking alcoholic drinks in our temperate zone where the sun gives us all the warmth we need.

NEEDLESS FEAR

A Liberal friend\(^3\) after highly appreciating the Congress programme of prohibition within three years thus expresses his fear about education:

The educational programme of the Congress seems to be causing some uneasiness. There is a fear that it may result in blocking the progress of higher education. I hope that till a well-considered scheme is adumbrated and sufficient notice given of the changes proposed, no precipitate step should be taken, at any rate without giving an opportunity to the public to discuss the Congress proposals fully.

The fear is wholly needless. The Working Committee has laid down no general policy. The Congress, except for being responsible for the existence of many national educational institutions, e.g., the Kashi Vidyapith, Jamia Millia, Tilak Vidyapith, Bihar Vidyapith, Gujarat Vidyapith and the like, has made no general announcement. What I have written is my personal contribution to the discussion.

---

\(^1\) Vide “Against Ahimsa and Truth”, 14-8-1937
\(^2\) (1861-1930); Norwegian Polar explorer, who was awarded Nobel Prize in 1922
\(^3\) G. A. Natesan; vide “Letter to G. A. Natesan”, 24-8-1937
Indeed I feel most strongly about the vast injury that the existing system of education has done to the youth of the country and to the languages and general culture of India. I hold my views strongly. But I do not claim to have converted Congressmen in general. What then can be said of those educationists who are outside even the Congress atmosphere and who dominate the Universities of India? It is no easy task to convert them. My friend and those who share his fear may rest assured that the advice given by Shri Shastriar will be taken to heart by those concerned and no serious step will be taken without due consideration and consultation with the persons whose advice is of value in matters educational. I may add that I am already in correspondence with many educationists and am already receiving valuable opinions which I am happy to be able to say are in general agreement with my scheme.

WHAT ABOUT LITERACY?

I have received many opinions on the ideas I have been propounding in these columns on education. I may be able to reproduce the most important of them in these columns. For the moment I wish to answer a grievance a learned correspondent has made of the neglect of literacy of which he imagines I have been guilty. There is nothing in what I have written to warrant such a belief. For have I not contended that the children in the schools of my conception will receive every instruction through the handicrafts they may be taught? That includes literacy. In my scheme of things the hand will handle tools before it draws or traces the writing. The eyes will read the pictures of letters and words as they will know other things in life, the ears will catch the names and meanings of things and sentences. The whole training will be natural, responsive, and therefore the quickest and the cheapest in the land. The children of my school will therefore read much more quickly than they will write. And when they write they will not produce daubs as I do even now (thanks to my teachers), but they will trace correct letters even as they will trace correct figures of the objects they may see. If the schools of my conception ever come into being, I make bold to say that they will vie with the most advanced schools in quickness, so far as reading is concerned, and even writing if it is common ground that the writing must be correct and not incorrect as now is in the vast majority of cases. The children of the Segaon school may be said to be writing in accordance with the orthodox standard; they spoil slate and paper according to my standard.

Harijan, 28-8-1937
229. THE GREATEST ACT

In as much as prohibition has been one of the chief planks of the Congress since the inauguration of the non-cooperation movement in 1920, and thousands of men and women have had to suffer imprisonment and physical injury in furtherance of this cause, the Working Committee is of opinion that it is incumbent upon the Congress Ministries to work for this end. The Committee expects them to bring about total prohibition in their respective provinces within three years. The Working Committee appeals to the Ministries in other provinces, and to the Indian States also, to adopt this programme of moral and social uplift of the people.

I regard this resolution as the greatest act of the Working Committee at any time of its chequered career. The cry of prohibition has been always fashionable. In 1920 it became one of the chief constructive items of the Congress. The Congress, therefore, could not but go in for total prohibition immediately it came into power in any part of India. The Ministers had to have the courage to sacrifice nearly Rs. eleven crores of revenue in the six provinces. The Working Committee has taken the risk for the sake of redeeming its pledge and conserving the moral and the material welfare of those who are addicted to intoxicants and narcotics. It is my fervent hope that the five provinces which have non-Congress majorities will not hesitate to follow the example of the six provinces. It is less difficult for them than for the six provinces to achieve prohibition. And is it too much to expect the States to fall in with British India?

I know that many are sceptical about prohibition being achieved. They think that the financial lure will be too strong for them to resist. They argue that the addicts will procure their drinks and drugs anyhow, and that when the Ministers discover that prohibition means mere loss of revenue without any appreciable diminution in the consumption, though illicit, of drinks and drugs, they will revert to the tainted revenue and the then state will be worse than the present.

I do not share any such fear. I believe there is the requisite moral momentum in the nation to achieve the noble end. If prohibition is to be a reality, we shall begin to see the end not with the end of the three years but inside of six months. And when the reality dawns upon India, those provinces or States that have lagged behind

---

1 Which met at Wardha from August 14 to 17, 1937 are bound to bow to the inevitable.

We have the right, therefore, to expect the sympathy and support not only of all the parties in India including the Europeans but the best mind of the whole world in this, perhaps the greatest moral movement of the century.

If, then, prohibition is to mean a great moral awakening in India, the closing of liquor shops should merely mean the indispensable beginning of the movement ending in the complete weaning from drink and narcotics of those poor people and some rich people whom the habit has ruined, body and soul. Such a consummation cannot be brought about by mere State effort. At the risk of repetition of what is stated by Mahadev Desai in his notes, let me summarize what should, in my opinion, be the comprehensive programme:

(1) A drink-drug map showing the locality of liquor and opium shops in each province.

(2) Closing them as liquor shops on the expiry of the licences.

(3) Immediate earmarking of liquor revenue, whilst it is still being received, exclusively for the purpose of prohibition.

(4) Conversion, wherever possible, of the liquor shops into refreshment and recreation rooms in the hope that the original visitors will continue to use them, liquor contractors being themselves persuaded to conduct them if they will.

(5) Employment of the existing excise staff for detection of illicit distillation and drinking.

(6) Appeal to the educational institutions to devote a part of the time of teachers and students to temperance work.

(7) Appeal to the women to organize visits to the persons given to the drink and opium habits.

(8) Negotiation with the neighbouring States to undertake simultaneous prohibition.

(9) Engaging the voluntary or, if necessary, paid assistance of the medical profession for suggesting non-alcoholic drinks and other substitutes for intoxicants and methods of weaning the addicts from their habit.

(10) Revival of the activities of temperance associations in support of the campaign against drink.

(11) Requiring employers of labour to open and maintain, under first-class management, refreshment, recreation and educational rooms for the use of their employees.

(12) Toddy-tappers to be used for drawing sweet toddy for sale, as such, or conversion into gur. I understand that the process of collecting sweet toddy for drinking, as such, or for making gur is different from the one for fermenting toddy.

So much for the campaign against drink and drugs.

Now as to how to make up for the loss of revenue in some provinces to the extent of one-third. I have unhesitatingly suggested cutting out the educational budget for which purpose mainly the excise revenue is used. I still maintain that education can be made self-supporting. With this I must deal elsewhere.¹ It cannot be made so in a day even if the possibility of its being made self-supporting is accepted. Existing obligations have to be met. Therefore, fresh sources of revenue have to be tapped. Death duties, tax on tobacco including bidis, have already been given as some suggestions. If these are considered impossible of immediate accomplishment, short-term loans may be devised to tide over the deficit; and if even that fails, the Central Government should be approached to curtail the military budget and give the provinces the proportionate grant. The demand would be irresistible especially if it is demonstrated by the Provincial Governments that they do not need the military, at any rate for their internal peace and tranquillity.

_Harijan_, 28-8-1937

230. “SUFFICIENTLY ACQUAINTED”

A professor writes:

You have suggested that even if an M. L. A. can express himself in English it is open to him to declare that he is not ‘sufficiently’ acquainted with it and thus enable the Speaker, who is of course not expected to question his _bona fides_, to allow him to speak in Hindustani. I have read your remarks² with the greatest care but have not been able to see how a person having a scrupulous regard for truth can take this course, much less how you can suggest it. Section 85 obviously refers to persons who find themselves unable to express their meaning in English well enough to make it intelligible to those who know English and not to those who do not know it. There can be no question of ‘sufficient’ acquaintance with English for making oneself intelligible to the latter. The wording is too clear to permit any other interpretation, and in face of it for anybody to declare himself insufficienly acquainted with English simply because there are some fellow Members who do not understand English, looks like mere casuistry. In U.P. they have got out of the difficulty by interpreting the words, ‘unacquainted or not sufficiently acquainted with the English language’ to mean less acquainted with the English language than with Hindi. But I think the question of comparative acquaintance is also ruled out by the context. I agree that the Section is highly obnoxious and must go. If you suggested that it should be deliberately disobeyed, it would be a perfectly straightforward course and there could be no objection at least of the conscientious type. As it is, however, you must have some justification for the course you have suggested, which I have been unable to see. There must be others in the same position and we shall all benefit if you elucidate the point in the Harijan.

¹ Vide “Self-supporting Education”, 11-9-1937
² The reference is to Mahadev Desai’s interpretation of Section 85 of the Government of India Act of 1935; _vide_ Appendix V.

“Sufficient” can only have a relative meaning, not absolute. Even an M. A. may not have “sufficient acquaintance” with English for the purpose before him. Thus an M. A. from U. P. will surely not have sufficient knowledge of English to make himself understood by Hindustani-speaking matriculates. My teachers had often to speak in Gujarati in order to make themselves understood to the class they were teaching. The reason was that they, most of them graduates, had to struggle through their English to make themselves intelligible to their class. Speaking in Gujarati they became fluent, and our eyes sparkled as we drank in the wisdom they distilled into us. If I was Speaker of an Assembly, I would certainly allow a most polished speaker in English to speak in Hindustani if he believed that he did not know sufficient English for the audience before him. It is not a question of grammar or fluency. It is a question of intelligibility. To give any other meaning to the Section would be to frustrate its very object. An ungrammatical English speech would amount to sufficient acquaintance with English if the audience could only understand English and no other language. Such things have often happened during my numerous tours in India. The meaning given in these columns is an honest attempt to deal with a difficult situation. My well-known partiality for the Indian languages for India had nothing to do with the interpretation. If I could not have honestly subscribed to the interpretation which Mahadev Desai’s ingenious brain conceived, I would certainly not have allowed it to go in and would have gladly advised a battle with the Government for a just and workable interpretation of the phrase “sufficiently acquainted”. No doubt the proper course is to have the Section amended as the Punjab Premier has already suggested.

Harijan, 28-8-1937
231. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

SEGAON,
August 28, 1937

MY DEAR KU,

I wonder if Rao has left Maganwadi. Particulars have been pouring in upon me about his dishonest ways. Pandit Hrishikesh Sharma walked with me today—he seems to know him most, he says he has cheated every institution to which he has gone; he has spent extravagantly; he has quarrelled everywhere and nowhere has he earned a good name, and he instances Madras, Andhra, Benares, Punjab and other places I cannot remember. He tells me he is not a man to be trusted—his confession too has to be taken with a grain of salt. I think you should find out how his defalcations which went on for long remained undetected.

Love,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10131

232. LETTER TO ATULANAND CHAKRABARTY

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 28, 1937

DEAR ATULANAND,

I have your letter. I am glad your daughter is wholly out of danger. May she be found better still when this reaches you.

I have very carefully gone through your article “Not by Politics Alone”. I still cannot visualize the “League”, much less its ramifications. Your article drives me to what I suggested before. It resolves itself—and quite properly—into spreading your message through your book, other writings and through your speeches. The sale of your book would be simply a bye-product and may incidentally give you maintenance money. You seem to be a man with a mission. The “League” of your imagination may come into being later when people recognize your mission. If you form a “League” now, you are in for a disaster. You will be enmeshed in humdrum

1 Vide “Letter to Atulanand Chakrabarty”, 23-6-1937

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
work and feel cramped and would want to bite your way through the meshes of your own creation. You can see from what I am telling you that there is no lack of interest in you on my part. Only I cannot yet see eye to eye with you. It may be that there is something which I have not yet understood. If such is the case you will continue to strive with me until you make me see the thing as you see it. I know I am, at times, very dense. You will have to be patient with me. I am going to unearth your book that you gave me and if I succeed I shall try to read it. Before, I merely glanced through the pages.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 1477. Courtesy: A. K. Sen

233. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

SEGGAON,
August 28, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

Nimu (Ramdas’s) has come here. I have encouraged her to learn Hindi, so that she may become qualified to spread knowledge of Hindi among women and may also, within limits, earn a living through that work. She will need some knowledge of English, too, for my plan for her is that she should go to the South. She has now become eager to learn Hindi as soon as possible. I also suggested Allahabad to her for that purpose, for she will hear nothing but Hindi there. But when she got ready to go to Allahabad, I was in a fix. Where in Allahabad? I, therefore, decided to send her to Vidyavati of the Kanya Gurukul at Dehradun. But as soon as I started thinking about the matter last night, I felt I might ask your opinion too. Would you prefer that she should be taught here? Or would you like some other arrangement? Give me your considered opinion.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7704
234. UNDER SHADOW OF LYNCH LAW

The following is a free translation of a letter of Shri Narahari Parikh on the conditions of Harijans in Kheda District.

If this is a correct picture of the actual state of things, it should not be beyond the power of the Kheda District Congress Committee to cope with it.

_Harijan_, 4-9-1937

235. A SUPERSTITION

There is no limit to superstitions in Kathiawar. One such superstition concerns the taboo on the castration of calves. It is found particularly in Kathiawar. Peasants cannot earn their livelihood without oxen. Hence they would buy oxen, allowing their own calves to wander about or die or let them be led to the slaughter-house, and consider this as their dharma. Such superstitions can be wiped out only when the rulers and the intelligent section of the public work against them whole-heartedly. A policy of punishment is perhaps pardonable in such instances. Such a policy, when aimed at public welfare and not meant as punishment for its own sake, should be carefully devised. Depriving the owners of their calves if they refuse to get them castrated may be the best punishment, and it may be accompanied by the condition that the owner could have his calf back provided he pays the charge of castrating it and the cost of keeping it. If the fees for castration and the daily expense are fixed in advance, the public would not be handicapped and even a superstitious man would feel satisfied that the sin of castration is committed not by him but by the State. The State must have a team of workers who would do the necessary propaganda about it, and it should be their job to remove such superstitions. I would consider such a thing part of education, for, what value can knowledge have if it is not used for ending wrong practices among people?

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu_, 29-8-1937

---

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in _Harijanbandhu_, 29-8-1937.
2 Not reproduced here. Narahari Parikh had written about the Harijans of Kheda District who could not get their children admitted to public schools.
236. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 29, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

If you have been able to draw up Rameshwari’s programme, send it to me. When should she reach there, by which train and for how many days will you want her there?

I read the few lines written by Jayantilal.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8537: Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

237. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 29, 1937

BHAJ JETHALAL,

I have your two letters. I keep writing something or other about the cow. Write to me when you have ghee made from cow’s milk ready for sale. It is not difficult to sell your ghee but there are a few easy methods you must learn. Just now if you come over to Segaon you can be trained. You should visit a few places in order to learn this. There is a machine in Segaon, too, and it is operated every day. You have to make the ghee yourself. You must collect only milk. You should be able to judge which cows would yield milk. You should know about the bulls. You ought to know something about all this. I will tell Parnerkar¹, who is here, to write something on this and send it to you. There is no alternative to buying a machine. I think I shall be able to do something about what you wrote regarding forced labour, etc.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 9863. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat

¹ Yashwant Mahadev Parnerkar, a dairy expert
238. TELEGRAM TO ANDAMANS PRISONERS

August 30, 1937

THANKS TELEGRAM. GLAD ALL BUT SEVEN BROKEN FAST. DO SEVEN GIVE REASONS FOR CONTINUING FAST? I PLEAD WITH THEM NOT PERSIST ALLOWING COUNTRY CHANCE SEEK RELIEF. WILL DETENUS NOT ANSWER MY QUESTION ABOUT NON-VIOLENCE?"

GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 7796. Courtesy: G. D. Birla. Also Congress Bulletin, No. 6, September 1937; File No. 4/15/37 Home, Political. Courtesy: National Archives of India

239. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

[August 31, 1937]

I gladly release the messages¹ that passed between the Andamans prisoners and me. In view of the prisoners’ noble response to my appeal for a declaration of their present attitude on terrorist methods, let us hope that all of them will be unconditionally discharged. I have appealed to the proper quarters for relief, in which I am sure the whole country will join.

The Hindu, 1-9-1937

¹ At 7 p.m. on the same day, Gandhi received the following reply from the prisoners: “Touched by nationwide appeal and your message. We suspend hunger-strike on assurance that the whole country has taken up our demands and because we are confidently hoping that within a reasonable period of time you will succeed in getting all our demands fulfilled. We are glad you have given us the opportunity to express our firm opinion on terrorism. We feel honoured to inform you and through you the nation that those of us who ever believed terrorism do not hold to it any more and are convinced of its futility as a political weapon or creed. We declare that it definitely retards rather than advances the cause of our country.”

² Mahadev Desai released the correspondence to the Press on this date.

³ Vide “Telegram to Viceroy”, 27-8-1937, and the preceding item.
240. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKAR PATTANI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
August 31, 1937

SUNA BHAISHRI,

I got your letter last evening. I am sending a wire today about your coming here or sending Nrisinhprasad. If you can, please do come. You do not seem to have improved in spite of such a long tour. There is no cause for worry about me. The hand and the brain need plenty of rest, which I am giving them. How can your coming here or sending someone be any trouble to me? Can a friend ever cause inconvenience? I used to receive your cables. They didn’t call for a reply.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 5952. Also C.W. 3269. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani

241. TELEGRAM TO PRABHASHANKAR PATTANI

WARDHAGANI,
August 31, 1937

SIR PRABHASHANKAR
BHAVNAGAR

YOUR LETTER. SEND NARSINHPRAVAD. BETTER COME YOURSELF.

GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 5953. Also C.W. 3270. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani

1 Vide the following item.
242. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

SEGON,
September 1, 1937

MY DEAR KU.,

Of course nothing is required to be done before the meeting of the Association about the President.¹

Have you considered Shankar Lal’s suggestion that the meeting be held on the 23rd instead of the 16th inst.

I understand what you say about Rao. If missing Chhotelal is not found when you get this letter, apply your ingenuity and see whether you can find a way of tracing him.

If you have not done so already I suggest your collecting specimens of all hand-made paper that is produced in India and their present prices.

If Joshi can come here on Saturday at 3 p.m., it will be convenient for me but if the morning is more convenient you can bring him at 8 a.m.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10132

243. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

September 1, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

“Let neither joy nor grief affect you, for both are with the body born.” Considering all the circumstances, I feel that Chhotelal has not committed suicide but has run away somewhere. But who can say for certain what has happened? Do you expect to go over there in the car? What help can I give in the search for a man who is missing? I would definitely go there for the sake of anybody who was ill. If Chhotelal is found, then also I would go there to twist his ears. If, therefore, any discussion is called for, please come yourself. If none is needed, then you too should save your time. If Chhotelal is not found or no information about him is received by the time you get this letter, ¹ Shrikrishnadas Jaju had resigned from the Presidentship of the All India Village Industries Association.

then report at the police station. Inquire at Bhaiya’s place. I won’t be surprised if Chhotelal comes here. Make sure that his body is not in the well.

There is no need for any special search.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11568

244. LETTER TO P. G. MATHEW

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 1, 1937

MY DEAR MATHEW,

Whether I write “love” or do not makes no difference in my attitude towards you. It all depends under what pressure I write letters. There is no royal road to becoming moral. You do so by prayer and penance and by living for the service of humanity. When you do that you have no time to become immoral. Of course, marriage is the ordinary thing for all. I overcame the impulse to the extent I have done simply because the impulse for service was greater than the sexual impulse. I do not know how many people who are associated with me are pure—nor have I any desire to pry into their lives. I assume their purity until their impurity obtrudes itself upon my gaze. A celibate is wedded to his work with which he has fallen in love. If you see any difference between the two states I must accept defeat.

Love.

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
245. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September I, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM. ¹

I enclose herewith the name and address of Kamala’s mother. I would like you to send her or pay her on my behalf Rs. 10, being Rs. 5 p. m. as from her daughter. This Rs. 10 will, therefore, be for two months. I am asking you to undertake this commission so as to avoid the trouble of having to send an M. O. per month. To send it through you means the saving of some expense also. But you must be prepared to receive this amount from me. I propose to send it to you in a lump sum. If this mission of sending the money to Kamala’s mother proves in any way embarrassing to you inasmuch as you do not wish to have any relations with her, you will not hesitate to tell me so. In that case I shall make other arrangements. There is no immediate hurry.

I had the usual basket of fruit. You will take care not to send anything expensive and no fruit that is not grown in the South—for other fruit is cheapest when imported from Delhi. I hope Father ² is keeping good health and you yourself are well and cheerful.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Here is the address: Sri Lakshmi Ammal, 29 M. P. Koi1 Street, Mylapore, Madras.

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ The superscription is in Hindi.
² S. Srinivasa Iyengar
246. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

SEGON, WARDHA,
September 1, 1937

Bhai Jethalal,

The accompanying letters were written on the same day on which I had the postcard written [to you]. They are, however, being dispatched two days later since I had not been able to read them whereas the postcard was ready.

You will please acquaint yourself, within a month, with all those subjects that Bhai Parnerkar has listed under the different heads. This will simplify your task. I would therefore advise you to cheerfully accept one month. I believe this will satisfy you. I stipulate one month at the most.

Blessings from

Bapu

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9864. Courtesy: Narayan J. Sampat

247. A SILENT CO-WORKER GONE

[September 1, 1937]

The inmates of the Satyagraha Ashram of Sabarmati are today a scattered family, joined together only by their common vow of silent service. No one, perhaps, with the exception of the late Shri Maganlal Gandhi, personified so nearly this self-effacing ideal as Shri Chhotelal Jain whose death, through suicide, has just stunned me. I have not adequate language to describe his insatiable capacity for silent service. He dreaded publicity and loved to live and serve unknown. In fact it may be said of him that his right hand did not know what his left hand was doing. I do not remember his ever visiting his relations or being visited by them. He never even mentioned them to anyone. At the time of writing I do not even know their names or whereabouts.

I have the good luck to have a band of co-workers who are to me as my hands and feet. Without their willing and loyal cooperation I should feel utterly helpless. Prominent among these was Chhotelal.

1 The original in Gujarati of which this is an adaptation by Pyarelal appeared in Harijanbandhu, 5-9-1937.
He had a versatile and powerful intelligence which shirked no task however difficult. He was a born linguist. Rajputana being his home, Hindi was his mother tongue, but he knew Gujarati, Marathi, Bengali, Tamil, Sanskrit and English as well. He knew the Urdu script. I have seldom seen anybody with such aptitude for quickly mastering a new language or a new task. He was one of the foundation members of the Sabarmati Ashram. He went through the whole range of Ashram activities with natural ease, and hardly touched anything that he did not adorn. Thus he felt equally at home whether he was engaged in kitchen work, conservancy, spinning or weaving, accounts, or translation work, or correspondence. He had an equal share with the late Maganlal in the writing of Vanatshastra1.

The riskier a job the more it was welcomed by Chhotelal, and once he took it up, he knew no rest till he had seen it through. He threw himself, with the indefatigable energy which was his characteristic, into any task that he took up, and at the end of it he would still be fresh and ready for the next. The words weariness and fatigue were not in his dictionary. To render service only, never to receive any, was the passion of his life. When the All-India Village Industries Association was started at Wardha, it was Chhotelal who first learnt and then introduced the art of ghani2 in Maganwadi. It was he who introduced the wooden hand-mill for rice-husking. Again, it was he who started bee-culture there. Today I feel disconsolate and crippled by his loss. And I am sure, if we could only know it, the same must be the feeling of the bees whom he had gathered and was looking after with a mother’s care. I do not know who else will look after them with the loving care of Chhotelal. For, Chhotelal had literally become apiculture-mad. In the course of his quest he had contracted paratyphoid fever which had a fatal ending. He had been bed-ridden for hardly six or seven days, but the very thought of being a helpless charge upon others evidently ate into him, and on Tuesday night, the 31st of August, leaving everybody asleep, he put an end to his life by throwing himself into the Maganwadi well. The corpse was recovered from the well today, Wednesday, at 4 p.m. and even as I pen these lines at Segaon, at 8 p.m., his body is being cremated at Wardha. I have not the heart to rebuke Chhotelal for his suicide. He was no coward. He was guilty of no unworthy deed. He could laugh at

---

1 A Gujarati treatise on the science of weaving
2 Oil-press
suffering. I cannot account for this self-immolation except on the supposition that he could no longer brook to be nursed. No doubt that is a sign of subtle pride. But there it was. He was not conscious of it.

His name figured in the Delhi Conspiracy Case of 1915. He was acquitted. He had told me he did not desire acquittal. A casual reading of some of my writings gave a new turn to his life and outlook. He studied my activities in South Africa, and from a violent revolutionary became a votary of ahimsa. He shed his cult of violence as completely and naturally as a snake does its outworn skin, but he could never completely control the proneness to anger and pride that were deeply ingrained in his nature. Did he expiate with his life for these?

By his death (he was 42') he has left me heavily in his debt. I had entertained high hopes of him. I could not tolerate any imperfection in him and so he had often to bear the brunt of my impatience as, perhaps, only one or two besides him have borne. But he never complained, never even winced. Had I any right to put him through this fire as I used to? I had hoped one day to discharge my debt towards him by offering him as a sacrifice at the altar of Hindu-Muslim unity, untouchability or cow-protection. To my mind these are some of the altars in the great yajna of the swaraj of my dream. And Chhotelal was in the front rank of the few who, to my knowledge, had the strength and capacity to claim this privilege.

The country needs an army of silent warriors like him. The achievement of swaraj, which to me is synonymous with Ramaraj, is no joke. Let these few glimpses of Chhotelal’s life serve as an inspiration in our striving for India’s freedom.

_Harijan_, 11-9-1937

248. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

_September 3, 1937_

Still the right hand rests. Your good wire has come. I am better.

_BAPU_

From the original: C.W. 3799. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6955

---

1 _Harijanbandhu_ has “45”.

2 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
249. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,

September 3, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Today we all waited eagerly for the car for a long time. We expected it every moment. But it didn’t turn up. At last I thought that perhaps you might have forgotten about it because I could tell you only at the last minute when you were leaving. But it doesn’t matter. Now either send or bring, a cart or a car tomorrow. If you are arranging for a cart, then it would be better if it comes empty.

Gosibehn wants to reach Wardha today at two o’clock in the afternoon. The car, therefore, should be sent for her. Just now the doctor and Chimanlal have come in the cart. The cart will take the doctor back to Wardha. If, therefore, the car has to come again in the afternoon, it will be hard on the bullocks. I am writing to Damodar about this. He will, therefore, make the arrangements for today. You needn’t do anything about it. I have written this in order that if you or anybody else wishes to come here, you may ascertain from the bungalow the time when the car will be leaving so that you can get a lift.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

It is 10.30 [a.m.]. I am going for my bath. I am detaining your man. I shall write and send you a reply after my meal.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11569

1 The postscript was dictated to Kanu Gandhi.

2 Shahji

3 Vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 3-9-1937

184 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
250. TELEGRAM TO HOME SECRETARY, GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

WARDHA,
September 3, 1937

HOME SIMLA

THANKS YOUR TELEGRAM WHICH DESPATCHED YESTERDAY TWO-THIRTY WAS RECEIVED AFTER SEVEN TODAY. PLEASE WIRE SEVEN PRISONERS. QUOTE. DEEPLY APPRECIATE MESSAGE WHICH IS HELPING ME GREATLY ACHIEVE COMMON OBJECT. I PERSONALLY ACCEPT YOUR INTERPRETATION OF ‘RELIEF’ AND PROMISE TO WORK FOR FULL FRUITION WITH ACTIVE COOPERATION OF PRISONER FRIENDS. URGE YOU, THEREFORE, ABANDON FAST AND SEND ME HAPPY NEWS.

UNQUOTE.

GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 7797a. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

1 Dated September 2, 1937, which read: “The seven prisoners are continuing hunger-strike send you following message. Begins: Thanks for your telegram regarding terrorism. We declared it will harm rather than help the cause of country. We take this opportunity to convey through you our appeal to all sufferers in jails and detention camps, and to all organizations if there be any who still believe to attain independence of India through terrorism, to give it up, once for all. We further request you to clarify what you mean by ‘relief’. We think after Government inaugurating provincial autonomy, relief can only mean release of all political prisoners, detenus, State prisoners, interners, removal of ban on exiles and repeal of all repressive laws. If we get assurance from you on these questions, we can suspend hunger-strike. Ends. Telegram therein mentioned is your message of August 27th. Your message of August 30th had not by then been delivered.” For Gandhiji’s telegrams dated August 27 and 30, vide “Telegram to Viceroy” and Telegram to Anandmans Prisoners. For the telegrams dated September 8 and 11, vide ‘A Telegram’, 8-9-1937 and “A Telegram”, 11-9-1937
251. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,
September 3, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

When I received your letter it was time for me to take my bath. I am, therefore, writing this after finishing the daily morning routine. Shahji has had his meal here.

The mistake which occurred about the car today is bound to occur occasionally. It was good that today’s trip was not so important. I assume that the car will definitely come tomorrow. Send a wire to Devdas when Nimu entrains.

The wire to be sent to the Home [Secretary] is on the back of his telegram. Since all the wires are with you, preserve this also there. Please send [me] a copy of this correspondence.

For the present preserve Chhotelal’s ashes in a box. I am not at all inclined to send them as far as the Ganga, nor to have them immersed even in the liver Paunar. But I don’t wish that they should be thrown away either. Ba says that his father may, perhaps, wish to have them immersed. This seems likely. From that point of view also, it is better to preserve the ashes in a box.

Rameshwarr is a very straightforward man. What does he say about the two persons from Dhulia? Ask Ganga to go over to Wardha. I was not at all satisfied with Khanchand’s letter. Report to Kishorelal what you have heard.

It is good news indeed that Bablo took an enema. The bowels may become loose even through fear. You did well of course in sending the letters sealed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11563

1 Nirmala, wife of Ramdas Gandhi
2 Vide the preceding item.
3 Rameshwardas Poddar
4 Kishorelal Mashruwala
5 Narayan, addressee’s son
252. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

SEGAON, WARDHA,

September 3, 1937

Bhai Behramji,

I got both your letters, and also the bank-notes for Rs. 1,000, being Rs. 500 from Behn Dinbai Khan and Rs. 500 from you. I shall send Behn Dinbai Khan’s amount to Verrier Elwin for constructing wells for the Gonds and use your amount for Harijans. I will not publish your or Dinbai’s name. Please thank Dinbai on my behalf.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7560. Also C.W. 5035. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

253. NOTES

APPEAL TO DISCHARGED PRISONERS

My congratulations to the Congress Ministries who are discharging prisoners who had been condemned for proved violence done from political motives, and also the discharged prisoners. Personally I draw no distinction between violence done from a private motive or from a political motive. The effect on the sufferers does not vary with the motive of the authors of violence. But as an out and out believer in non-violence I do not believe in the system of punishments for crimes, whether private or public. Therefore, I should welcome an extension of the principle which guides the Ministers in discharging prisoners; but I am aware that they do not share my extreme views on non-violence. Their reason, therefore, for discharging the prisoners condemned for violence is not the same as I would apply. They have been guided, naturally and rightly, by the purely political motive, viz., to establish contact with those who have hitherto believed in the efficacy of a species of violence for the attainment of India’s freedom. They want to wean these men from violence and harness their energy for the Congress method of non-violence. If my reading of the Congress method is correct, the large public demonstration that took place on the discharge of Kakori prisoners was, to say the least, a political mistake. Did the thousands of demonstrators approve of the acts said to have been committed by these prisoners, let me hope, in mistaken zeal? If they did, they have evidently not understood the Congress method; what is more, they have embarrassed the Ministry and made more difficult the task of giving the fullest liberty to the people in their Provinces. We ought to learn to take such ministerial acts as in the natural course and, therefore, with calmness. Kakori prisoners are no fools. They are able, intelligent men, with unyielding love of their country. They and all such prisoners will pave the way for the liberty of others, if they use their liberty to help Congress Ministers by their exemplary conduct and by proving themselves true Congressmen, taking their full share in strengthening the Congress organization by silent and selfless service. For they should know that Congress Ministers seem to be having their own way in many matters because they have inspired the respective Governors with confidence in their ability to handle efficiently all the departments under their charge, especially that of law and order, without the intervention of the police and military. The moment they lose their credit in this respect and are obliged to fall back on these two so-called limbs of the law, the confidence will be weakened and their authority all but gone. Whilst power, superimposed, always needs the help of police and military, power generated from within should have little or no use for them.

Gambling and Vice

In the provinces where the Congress has a majority, all kinds of hopes have been raised. Some are legitimate and will, no doubt, be fulfilled. Some others cannot be. Thus the people who indulge in gambling, which unfortunately is ever on the increase in the Bombay Presidency, think that gambling will be legalized and surreptitious dens that cover Bombay will be no longer required. I am not quite sure that even if gambling is legalized on a universal scale, as it is already in a restricted manner, there will be no illegal dens. Thus it has been suggested that the Turf Club, which has the monopoly of gambling on the racecourse, should be allowed to open an additional entrance to make it easier for poor people to gamble. The bait offered is a larger revenue. A similar suggestion has been made for the regulation and licensing of brothels. The argument advanced, as in all such cases, is that the vice will continue whether it is legalized or not and, therefore, it is better to legalize it and make it safe for those who visit the brothels. Let me hope that the Ministers will not fall into this trap. The proper method of dealing with brothels is for the women to carry on a double propaganda, (a) amongst women who sell their honour for a livelihood and (b) amongst men whom they must shame into behaving better towards their sisters whom they ignorantly or insolently call the weaker sex. I remember years and years ago in the early nineties when the brave Salvation Army people, at the risk of their own lives, used to carry on picketing at the corners of notorious streets of Bombay which were filled with houses of ill fame. There is no reason why some such thing should not be organized on a large scale. As for gambling on the racecourse, it is, so far as I am aware, an importation, like many other importations, from the West, and if I had my way [I] would withdraw the protection of the law that gambling on the racecourse enjoys even to the extent it does. The Congress programme being one of self-purification, as is stated in so many words in the resolution of 1920, the Congress can have nothing to do with income derived from any vice. The Ministers will, therefore, use the authority that they have obtained for educating public opinion in the right direction and for stopping gambling in high quarters. It is useless to hope that the unwary public will not copy the bad manners of the so-called high-placed people. I have heard it argued that horse-racing is necessary for breeding good horses. There may be truth in this. Is it not possible to have horse-racing without gambling, or is gambling also an aid to the good breeding of horses?

_Harijan_, 4-9-1937

254. MY MEANING OF OFFICE-ACCEPTANCE

Shri Shankerrao Deo\(^2\) writes:

In your note “Not Instrument of Instructions”\(^3\) in the last _Harijan_, you say in the second paragraph, “For me office-acceptance has a special meaning even in the terms of the Congress manifesto and resolutions. It would be wrong if I did not put before the Ministers and the public my meaning of office-acceptance.” As I have understood you, you are for office-acceptance for serving the masses and consolidating the Congress position through constructive programme. But I think you should explain in greater detail your meaning of office-acceptance.

\(^1\) Vide “Congress Resolution on Non-Co-Operation”

\(^2\) President, Maharashtra Provincial Congress Committee

\(^3\) Vide “Notes”, sub-title “Not Instrument of Instructions”
Rightly or wrongly, since 1920 the Congress-minded millions have firmly held the view that the British domination of India has been on the whole a curse. It has been as much sustained by British arms as it has been through the legislatures, distribution of titles, the law-courts, the educational institutions, the financial policy and the like. The Congress came to the conclusion that the guns should not be feared, but that the organized violence of which the British guns were a naked emblem should be met by the organized non-violence of the people, and the legislatures and the rest by non-co-operating with them. There was a strong and effective, positive side to the foregoing plan of non-co-operation, which became known as the constructive programme. The nation succeeded to the exact extent of its success in the programme of action laid down in 1920.

Now this policy has never changed; not even the terms have been revoked by the Congress. In my opinion all the resolutions since passed by the Congress are not a repudiation but a fulfilment of the original, so long as the mentality behind all of them remains the same as in 1920.

The corner-stone of the policy of 1920 was organized national non-violence. The British system was wooden, even Satanic; not so the men and women behind the system. Our non-violence, therefore, meant that we were out to convert the administrators of the system, not to destroy them; the conversion may or may not be willing. If, notwithstanding their desire to the contrary, they saw that their guns and everything they had created for the consolidation of their authority were useless because of our non-use of them, they could not do otherwise than bow to the inevitable and either retire from the scene, or remain on our terms, i.e., as friends to co-operate with us, not as rulers to impose their will upon us.

If Congressmen have entered the legislatures and have accepted office with that mentality, and if the British administrators tolerate Congress Ministries indefinitely, the Congress will be on a fair way to wreck the Act¹ and to achieve complete independence. For an indefinite prolongation of the Ministries on the terms mentioned by me means an ever-increasing power of the Congress till it becomes irresistible and is able to have its way all along the line. The first indispensable condition of the attainment of such a consummation means willing exercise of non-violence by the whole mass of the people. That means perfect communal co-operation and friendship, the eradication of untouchability, willing restraint of the addicts to the drink and opium habits, the social enfranchisement of women, the progressive amelioration of the toiling millions in the villages, free and compulsory primary education—not in name as it is today, but in reality, as I have ventured to adumbrate—the gradual eradication of superstitions of proved harmfulness through adult mass education, a complete overhauling of the system of higher education so as to answer the wants of the millions instead of the few middle class people, a radical change in the legal machinery so as to make justice pure and inexpensive, conversion of jails into reformatories in which detention would be not a course of punishment but a complete course of the education of those miscalled convicts but who are in fact temporarily deranged. This is not conceived as a terribly long plan of action. Every one of the items suggested by me can be put into motion today, without let or hindrance, if we have the will. I had not studied the Act when I advised office-acceptance. I have since been studying Provincial Autonomy by Prof. K. T. Shah. It is an energetic but true indictment of the Act from the orthodox standpoint. But the three months’ self-denial of the Congress has changed the atmosphere. I see nothing in the Act to prevent the Congress Ministers from undertaking the programme suggested by me. The special powers and safeguards come into play only when there is violence in the country, or a clash between minorities and the so-called majority community, which is another word for violence. I detect in the Act a profound distrust of the nation’s capacity to rule itself running through every Section and an inevitable desire to perpetuate British rule, but at the same time a bold experiment of wooing the masses to the British side, and, failing that, a resignation to their will to reject British domination. The Congress has gone in to convert these missionaries. And I have not a shadow of doubt that if the Congress is true to the spirit of non-violence, non-co-operation and self-purification, it will succeed in its mission.

¹ Government of India Act of 1935

_Harijan_, 4-9-1937
A friend writes:

In accordance with President Jawaharlal’s instructions Cawnpore observed the 1st of August as a National Flag Day and national flags were flown from all parts of the city. But these flags were manufactured anyhow by the individuals concerned according to their whims without any regard . . . to uniformity of size, shape or colour. . . . Some of the flags had the figure of the spinning-wheel printed on them; in others it was conspicuous by its absence. Today, after the lapse of a fortnight, most of these flags present a sorry spectacle. . . . I would, therefore, suggest that arrangements should be made to see that only flags of standard sizes, shape and colour are manufactured. . . .

It seems to me that this can be effectively done only by bringing the manufacture and sale of national flags under a centralized control. . . .

If the facts are as described by my correspondent, it calls for serious thought. We have been using this flag for the last seventeen years. A national flag would lose all its value if it did not strictly conform to the standard laid down. Even in the matter of ordinary articles we like to satisfy ourselves as to their size, shape, colour, etc., before we go in for them. How much more so must it be, then, with our national flag for which we are pledged to live and die? The national flag symbolizes a nation’s self-respect and dignity its ideals and aspirations. It must, therefore, be capable of easy identification like coins. Only the strictest conformity to the standard specifications can invest it with the desired sanctity. It should hurt our sense of national pride and self-respect to use a flag that is slipshod or slovenly made. How can a flag that is a mere clout and is dyed anyhow evoke the feelings of deep reverence that one associates with a national flag? I am, therefore, in entire agreement with my correspondent that our national flag should be strictly standardized. And this can be best done by having its manufacture centralized as coins are in mint. In my opinion the All-India Spinners’ Association, working under the guidance of the All-India Congress Committee, would be the fittest

---

1 The Hindi original appeared in Harijan Sevak, 11-9-1937.
2 Only extracts are reproduced here.
3 This sentence is from Harijan Sevak.
agency for this purpose. The collaboration of the two bodies would provide the surest guarantee of strict conformity to the standard specifications as to its size, shape, colour, etc.

_Harijan, 4-9-1937, and Harijan Sevak, 11-9-1937_

256. LETTER TO PYARELAL

September 4, 1937

CHI. PYARELAL,

You fasted yesterday and you are fasting today also. For what reason? Is it because of Yoga’s engagement?\(^1\) If that be so it is not right. I do not interfere because I think you do everything after proper consideration. I wanted to talk to you after I had the news about Yoga. But where was the time? My health too did not permit it. There is no strength at all to talk. I am dieting because of my illness.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

257. LETTER TO SARASWATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 4, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

Your letter. Amtul Salaam has arrived and has given me all the news. Now you have to concentrate on your studies and complete them. After that you can come over as and when you please. But all this is two years away. Let us see what God wills. Write to me regularly. Amazing that the sick ones here should go to Travancore, but what about all the sick persons in Travancore itself? If there are such expert vaidyas in Travancore who can cure even leprosy, why then should there be any sick people there at all? Are you taught in your school answers to such questions?

Amtul Salaam enquired if I had sent you blessings on your birthday. I do not remember distinctly. If I have been remiss you may now have them fourfold and with sood. Sood means vyaja\(^1\). You will learn at least one of the two words or even both.

\(^1\) Yoga was betrothed to Ramachandra J. Soman.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 6164. Also C.W. 3437. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

258. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

SEGAON, WARDHA,

September 4, 1937

CHI. SHARMA,

I have your letter. Amtul Salaam has arrived here. It was almost impossible for you to accompany Ramdas as he himself left with Kallenbach. Let us see what happens now... Tell me what kind of patients you admit. Is fruit available there? And vegetables? Can you get cow’s milk?

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, p. 264

259. MY NOTES

HARIPURA CONGRESS RECEPTION COMMITTEE

That Darbar Saheb\(^3\) has been chosen President, that three women have been made Vice-Presidents, that a woman has been appointed commander of women volunteers—all these are auspicious signs. Again the Reception Committee has a good number of members. The work has begun on schedule. If all the members have been chosen for actual ‘work and not for mere names’ sake; the forthcoming

\(^1\) Interest

\(^2\) Omission as in the source

\(^3\) Darbar Gopaldas, ex-ruler of Dhasa, who had been deposed during the non-co-operation days
Congress ought to prove the most successful and the simplest held so far. Often it so happens that everything goes well without any effort and not because of elaborate arrangements. The hand of God is sure to be there in a great task such as the Congress and even possible human failures are got over. The forthcoming Congress should be so organized from now on that there should be no error which human endeavour can avoid and everything should come off as planned.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 5-9-1937

260. LETTER TO GLADYS OWEN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 5, 1937

MY DEAR GLADYS,

I like your idea of throwing yourself heart and soul into the Chinese movement. But I do not know how I can give the lead. No external power can guide you. The direction and the strength have to come from within.

I have just heard from Muriel. She too wants me to do something for China. I must confess that I am fairly groping. China wants to give battle to Japan on her own ground. And in this kind of business I am totally at sea. I do not know how the message of non-violence can be delivered to China as I do not know how it can be delivered to Spain. My theatre of action is, therefore, only India. If India imbibes the message through and through, then there is hope for whole world. If India does not, so far as I can see, a world catastrophe cannot be prevented.

Love

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10571

1 Muriel Lester
261. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 6, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

No more than a few words. Your telegrams duly came in and so your letter. The last was destroyed as soon as read.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3800. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6956

262. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
September 7, 1937

I may occasionally write in Hindi also, may I not? I am improving day by day, and I sleep a great deal.

BAPU

From the Hindi original: C.W. 3801. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6957

263. LETTER TO PYARELAL

September 7, 1937

CHI. PYARELAL.

What can I write to you? I dare not send for you. I am scared of you. Everyone is. Your mother is scared, your sister is scared, your brother is scared and even Mahadev is scared. Ba says she cannot bring herself to speak to you at all. The girls are also unhappy and keep enquiring. I might not have been scared but now I have no courage left. In the morning I could not bear your silence, your appearance and then your mutterings. Every fibre of my being became filled with tension.

I do not find enlightenment or peace in your letter. If it is not ill

1 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
will or anger you have against Panditji\(^1\), what is it? You are being grossly unfair to him. Everyone can see your weakness. Even for the sake of thinking calmly you need to eat. In the present condition, it is impossible to have any conversation with you. If you have even an ounce of pity and wisdom, have patience, eat and help me in my work. I have so many ideas, but so long as your fast continues I am helpless.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy : Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

264. TELEGRAM TO DESHBANDHU GUPTA\(^2\)

[Before September 8, 1937]\(^3\)

I AM CERTAINLY OPPOSED TO THE LAHORE ABATTOIR\(^4\) AS I AM TO ALL SLAUGHTER-HOUSES. IF MUSSALMANS ALSO JOIN THE LAHORE ONE WILL NOT BE BUILT.

The Hindustan Times 8-9-1937

265. A TELEGRAM\(^5\)

September 8, 1937

REFERENCE MY MESSAGE\(^6\) ADDRESSED TO SEVEN PRISONERS AWAITING ANXIOUSLY THEIR REPLY. IS HUNGER-STRIKE STILL CONTINUING? IF IT IS, PLEASE TELL THEM MY ENDEAVOUR BEING FRUSTRATED TILL THEY BREAK FAST.\(^7\)

The Bombay Chronicle, 16-9-1937

---

\(^1\) Narayan Moreshwar Khare

\(^2\) An M. L. A. from the Punjab

\(^3\) The report is date-lined “New Delhi, Wednesday”. Wednesday fell on September 8.

\(^4\) In the Cantonment area

\(^5\) This was addressed to the Andamans authorities at Port Blair.

\(^6\) Dated September 3, 1937; vide “Telegram to Home Secretary Government of India”, 3-9-1937

\(^7\) In reply the authorities telegraphed: “Your telegram delivered yesterday to hunger-strikers who although appreciating your acceptance of their interpretation of ‘relief’ decline to suspend strike.”
266. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

WARDHAGANI,
September 8, 1937

RAJKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
SUMMER HILL
JAMNALALJI PRESS STATEMENT OVERDRAWN.¹ REALLY BETTER THAN YOU LEFT. PRESSURE 160/105. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3803. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6959

267. LETTER TO VICEROY

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 8, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your frank and exhaustive reply to my telegraphic solicitation. I will not try to combat the position taken up by you which I understand.

The incompleteness you see in the prisoners’ reply² to my request had not escaped me, but I was very much struck by the frank and unequivocal manner in which they gave me satisfaction so far as terrorist methods are concerned. I shall not despair of enlisting your active co-operation in the pursuit of my mission of procuring a lasting and honourable understanding with the class of patriots whom the Andaman friends represent.

Yours sincerely

M. K. GANDHI

HIS EXCELLENCY
THE VICEROY

From a copy: C.W. 7798. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

¹ Vide footnote 1, “Note to Amrit Kaur”, 8-9-1937
² Vide footnote 4, “Telegram to Home Secretary, Government of India”, 3-9-1937

198 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
268. LETTER TO G. CUNNINGHAM

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 8, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. I understand what you expect of me. I hope not to disappoint you for the simple reason that I want to accumulate more credit than I possess with the powers that be, so that I can trade upon it with them on better terms.

At the present moment I am trying to rest under medical orders, and I have asked my friend the Khan Saheb not to hurry to call me to the Frontier.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR
N. W. F. P.

From a copy: C.W. 7798a. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

269. LETTER TO M. V. SRINIVASAN

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 8, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I hope that your conference will be a success, and that it will be marked by a whole-hearted endorsement of the programme of complete prohibition. Also that it will supply a large enough number of volunteers who will offer their services for carrying on the campaign amongst those who are to be weaned from the drink habit by loving care and attention.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

CHAIRMAN
RECEPTION COMMITTEE
SECOND POLITICAL CONFERENCE
TIRUCHENGODU TALUK
PALLPALAYAM, (via) ERODE

From a photostat: G.N. 99

1 Presumably in reply to Gandhiji’s dated August 24; vide “Letter to G. Cunningham”, 24-8-1937
270. LETTER TO D. B. BARVE

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 8, 1937

I thank you for your letter and your suggestions. I shall think of all of them in my talks with the Ministers in charge of Village Industries.

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: B. G. Kher Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

271. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

SEGAON,
September 8, 1937

CHI. LILAVATI,

Well, you have ceased to be Lila and become Lilavati. If you don’t follow what this means, ask Mahadev. It will do you no good if you go away without my permission. By all means leave if you wish to. But not in anger like this. I am hoping that you will return here before the evening. Bring with you half a maund or a maund of dates. Have a frank talk with me and then do what you like.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9367. Also C.W. 6642. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

---

1 Business Manager, U.P. Government Arts and Crafts Emporium, Lucknow

2 The addressee who felt that Indian handicrafts had great potential value in foreign markets had suggested a co-ordinated effort on the following lines: “To organize the supply centres by keeping ready the raw materials to be provided to artisans; to supply the designs in demand in various foreign markets; to distribute the goods through the canvassing agents in India and abroad; to find finances from the State for supporting these industries; all the provinces to join in the effort; to exchange the goods of different provinces and States and thus find new markets; to produce the goods on mass scale and to get the same facilities from the foreign countries for Indian handicrafts which they enjoy in India for their goods”.

200

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
272. LETTER TO J. P. BHANSALI

SEGAON,
September 8, 1937

CHI. BHANSALI,

Don’t even dream of going away. You must not leave. Your cave is here and so is your cremation-ground. Most probably Lilavati will return today. If not today, certainly within a few days. Please write a note to her and give it to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8357. Also C.W. 7021. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

273. NOTE TO AMRIT KAUR

September 8, 1937

Only time for love today.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3802. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6958

274. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
September 8, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

This is being written after the evening walk. No cause for any worry about me. You must not be shocked to learn that I am taking that specialist’s ampules. He has given me full details. It is a simple herb treated with the sun’s rays. He says it has never failed to give lasting relief. It can do no harm. Of course it deprives me of one food

---

1 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee which inter alia read: “Bapu sent you a reassuring wire this morning, and this is just to add a few words. He really is much better today. The tiredness to which Jamnalalji refers in his Press message is the end of the tiredness of which you saw the beginning. It was these interviews and Chhotelal’s death all one on top of another. Now rest and plenty of sleep have made a wonderful difference.” substance. But that does not matter. It would be wrong not to try this drug.

Khan Saheb’s letter is worthy of him.

I am glad you are taking ice and steam. You must add the earth bandage. What had Shummy to say to your health? I would like his opinion. Tell him this with my love.

I understand what S. and J. have to say about Charlie. You should not only regulate his food whilst he is with you but you should also draw his attention to his weakness.

I was looking at that note on education. Do you still want me to study it and give you my opinion on it?

Mira is getting on. She is doing some writing work. A[mul] Salaam is fairly happy just now. Sharda is flourishing. Lilavati has left in a huff because I lost my temper with her. I can become an ass. Sometimes I doubt the reality of my ahimsa. Why can I not curb my temper for ever? If my ahimsa is worth anything, surely it ought to resist all temptation and provocation. Please don’t defend me but go for me. If Lilavati is lost to me, I shall be largely to blame. She is too good not to return to me. If she does, the credit will be hers.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]
J. is due tomorrow.

From the original: C.W. 3805. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6961

1 Since 1915 Gandhiji had been observing a vow of restricting his meals to five substances of food; vide “An Autobiography”, sub-title “Lakshman Jhula”
2 The addressee’s brother, Kunwar Shamshere Singh, a retired surgeon
3 C. F. Andrews was convalescing in Simla after a serious illness.
4 Daughter of Chimanlal N. Shah
275. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[September 8, 1937]¹

CHI. MAHADEV,

Send half a maund, or even one maund, of dates with anybody who is available. We should get three dozen mosambis and two dozen bananas daily.

I send with this a wire for Rajkumari. The one to Andrews must have been dispatched. The wire received from the seven prisoners does not seem to have been given to the Press. If possible give it now together with my reply to it. I am afraid we have delayed it rather too long. I have kept copies of the wires. Have the wire of these seven prisoners and my reply been released?

A painful incident took place this morning. Lilavati has always been a lazy girl. She is careless, suffers from no end of pride and can bear nothing. The incident was trivial. Nanavati drew her attention to her carelessness, which she couldn’t bear. Nanavati reported the incident to me. I was busy with my own work and was trying to avoid having to take notice of it. I had said a few words half jokingly, when the lady sailed in. She emphasized each sentence as she spoke, and that at the top of her voice. I asked her to speak calmly. But she wouldn’t listen. She then started saying silly things. And so I said, raising my voice, “There is no door here—the only one there is open. If you can’t stand it, you may leave.” I had lost my senses while I said this and so barked even louder than she. She has now left. Where else would she go, except to the temple of Mahadev? She must have, therefore, come to you. If she realizes that she has been cruel to me, shame her into returning here. If she doesn’t realize the gravity of her misbehaviour, she may do as she pleases. She has no place in the Harijan Ashram. She shouldn’t be sent there. You may, if you wish, take her under your charge. . . .²

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11567

² The letter is incomplete.
276. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[After September 8, 1937]¹

CHI. MAHADEV,

Do send back Lilavati. She must have gone to the doctor, since a visit was due today.

I had nothing private to speak to you. But it was good that you saved your time. It was not Lilavati’s fault, but mine, that you had to give some of your time for her. Had I remained silent she wouldn’t have had to leave this place. It was your fault that you lost your sleep, for in such cases you should remain undisturbed.

Kanu junior² has fallen ill today after a long interval.

I am sending the signatures.

Let Ishwardas come. But he should not stay on here at present.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11565

277. LETTER TO RANI Vidyavati

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 9, 1937

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. I have instructed the Charkha Sangh office to send the charkha, the spindle, etc., by railway freight. You will get the things in a few days.

I hope you are in good health.

Blessings from
BAPU

RANI VIDYAVATI
BARUA KOTHI
SANDILA
DISTRICT HARDOI (U. P.)

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

¹ It is evident from the text that the letter was written after the preceding item.
² Kanam, son of Ramdas Gandhi
278. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 10, 1937

CHI. NIMU,

I got your letter yesterday. Replying immediately would have meant my delaying the posting of the other letters. I therefore put off writing to this morning. I am glad I dictated the Gurukul’s correct address. I will await a letter from you after you have settled down there. Do not be lazy in writing. Kano had forgotten you quite soon, or at any rate seemed to have done so. One cannot say anything certain about him. About constipation, follow what Saraswati has suggested to you. I have of course heard from many that one should not take milk with bread, but so far I have not acted upon it. But at any rate you should try to put it into practice and see whether doing so helps. Inquire how much fruit, milk, vegetables, flour etc., cost there. Do they buy flour in the market, or do they have a flour mill? Are there any girls of Sumi’s age? Do they run any industry? Do they have music? Did you leave Delhi the same day or after staying for a day or two? Nothing more in particular.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

279. DISCUSSION WITH EDUCATIONISTS

[Before September 11, 1937]

[GANDHI:] It is by making the children return to the State a part of what they receive from it that I propose to make education self-supporting. I should combine into one what you call now the primary education and [the] secondary or high-school education. It is my conviction that our children get nothing more in the high schools than a half-baked knowledge of English, besides a superficial knowledge of mathematics and history and geography some of which they had learnt in their own language in the primary classes. If you cut out English from the curriculum altogether, without cutting out the subjects you teach, you can make the children go through the whole course in seven years, instead of eleven, besides giving them manual work whereby they can make a fair return to the State. Manual work will have to be the very centre of the whole thing. I am told that Messrs Abbot¹ and Wood recognize the value of manual work as an important part of rural education. I am glad to be supported by reputed educationists. But I do not suppose they place on manual work the kind of emphasis I place. For I say that the development of the mind should come through manual training. The manual training will not consist in producing articles for a school museum, or toys which have no value. It should produce marketable articles. The children will not do this as children used to do under the whip in the early days of the factories. They will do it because it entertains them and stimulates their intellect.

1 Extracted from Mahadev Desai’s article “The Meaning of Manual Work”. Ravishanker Shukla, Education Minister, C. P., met Gandhiji with his educational experts including the Director of Education, Owen, and De Silva. They wanted to understand from Gandhiji his idea of the revolution he intended to bring about in the system of education.

[DE SILVA:] But whilst I accept the proposition that we must teach through creative work, how can we expect an immature child to compete with a mature individual?

The child will not compete with the mature individual. The State will take over the articles and find a market for them. Teach them to make things suitable for the requirements. Take mats for instance. What they do at home as tedious labour they will do here intelligently. The tremendous problem will become easy when the education you give will become both self-supporting and self-acting.

But before we can give them this kind of education, we shall have to wipe out the present generation of teachers.

No. There is no intermediate stage. You must make a start and prepare the teachers whilst you go through the process.²

_Harijan,_ 11-9-1937

¹ Claude Colleer Abbot, an English educationist
² Later, Gandhiji requested the visitors to discuss the subject at length with Aryanayakam, Bharatan, Kumarappa and D. B. Kalelkar.
280. ARE CHRISTIANS AGAINST PROHIBITION?

Having received protests from Christian correspondents against prohibition, I asked Mahadev Desai to write to a few representative Christian friends to ascertain their views on the question. Here are two answers. Shri P. O. Phillip, Indian Secretary of the National Christian Council of India, writes:¹

I am not surprised to hear that a number of Christian friends are writing to you to say that ‘the policy of prohibition trenches upon their privilege to drink’. I may not be far wrong in thinking that most of the correspondents who write to you in that strain are Roman Catholics or those brought up in Anglo-Catholic traditions. . . . There is . . . no social or religious disapproval among Roman Catholics in India in regard to drinking in moderation as there is among Muslims and higher caste Hindus. Among Protestant Christians the attitude toward drink is different.

. . . The use of alcoholic drink even in moderation is looked upon with social and religious disapprobation among Protestant Christian communities.

Among Roman Catholics also there is awakening to the evils of drink. While the authorities of the Catholic Church may officially maintain that there is nothing wrong in drinking in moderation, they cannot shut their eyes to the moral and economic ruin that drink is causing among their people. . . .

As a Christian Indian I rejoice that the Congress Ministries have placed prohibition in the very forefront of their programme. In the past, few British and American missionaries lent support to the anti-drink campaign of the Congress, under the mistaken notion that it was adopted only to harass the British Government and not from a genuine desire for reform. Unfortunately Indian Christians also took their cue from the missionaries and generally kept aloof from the movement. But the sincerity of the leaders of the Congress in advocating prohibition is beyond question. . . .

. . . The poorer classes in the villages, including Christians, need protection more than any other group of people from the temptations of drink now placed before them. Indian villages will have new life and prosperity when drink is abolished. The Christian Indian community along with other communities stands to gain immensely by this measure.

. . . Christian Indians who love India and care for the real welfare of the rural masses cannot but rejoice at the prospect of prohibition in the six Provinces\(^1\). They should not have any difficulty in wholeheartedly co-operating with their fellow-countrymen in making prohibition a complete success.

¹ Only extracts from the letter are reproduced here.

And Rev. A. Ralla Ram, General Secretary of the Student Christian Movement of India, Burma and Ceylon, writes:

I give my full support to the objective of the Congress to bring about complete prohibition in the country and that those who are asking that we should be satisfied with temperance should not be listened to. In my opinion the Europeans who come to this country should fall in with our aspirations, and I am afraid that if we should respect their feelings in this matter, we shall leave a loophole for many others.

As I have said before\(^2\) it is for Europeans to make the choice. I know how difficult it is for them to give up a habit of a lifetime, considered respectable. But if they will fall in with the great national reform, the incentive should prove strong enough to wean them from the habit. Anyway, even if in the end exemption within well-defined limits has to be given, let us hope that they will be graceful enough to taboo alcohol from their parties and banquets. Exemption will be, if there is to be, a concession to a lifelong habit and not to a weakness or to an extravagance.

Harijan, 11-9-1937

281. NOTES

A WELCOME MOVE

The joint statement issued by Moulvi Abdul Haq Saheb and Shri Rajendra Prasad over the Hindi-Urdu controversy leads one to hope that the controversy will now end and those who are interested in the evolution of an inter-provincial speech will be able to discuss the question on its merits and discover a plan of joint action. Here is the statement:

We had an opportunity, on the occasion of the meeting of the Bihar Urdu Committee at Patna on 28-8-37, to discuss the problem of the Hindustani language with each other and with some other friends. We were anxious to

---

\(^1\) Congress Ministries were formed in Bombay, Madras, the United Provinces, Bihar, the Central Provinces and Orissa.

\(^2\) Vide “Against Ahimsa and Truth?”. Also “Citicism Answered” remove the misunderstandings which have been unfortunately created in connection with the Urdu-Hindi-Hindustani controversy. We are glad to be able to say that as a result of our discussions ranging over various aspects of this problem, we found ourselves in substantial agreement about various points raised. We are agreed that Hindustani should be the common language of India and should be written in both the Urdu and [the] Nagari characters which should be recognized for all official and educational purposes. By ‘Hindustani’ we mean the largest common factor of the languages spoken in Northern India, and we believe that common usage should be the criterion for the selection and inclusion of words in its vocabulary. We are further of opinion that the fullest opportunities for development should be vouchsafed both to Urdu and Hindi and [the] literary languages. We suggest that an attempt should be made to compile, through the co-operation of Urdu and Hindi scholars, a basic vocabulary of Hindustani words.

In order to devise practical measures for the compilation of such a vocabulary as well as for settling various outstanding problems like the selection of technical terms, we suggest that a small representative committee, consisting of influential advocates of Urdu and Hindi who believe in the desirability of bringing the two languages nearer and of promoting the development of the Hindustani language and thereby creating goodwill amongst the speakers of the two languages, should be convened at an early date.

Let us hope that the authors of the statement will take prompt steps to have the basic vocabulary of Hindustani words acceptable to all parties, and that the small committee they have in view will be set up forthwith for this work and for “settling various outstanding problems”. I would put emphasis on the smallness of the committee if promptness is to be ensured.

MUSIC IN SCHOOLS

Pandit Khare\(^1\) of Gandharva Mahavidyalaya, who has dedicated his life to the spread of pure music among boys and girls, reports the great progress being made in Ahmedabad in particular and Gujarat in general, and he decries the fact that the education authorities do not seem to countenance the introduction of music in the curricula of education. In the Pandit’s opinion, based upon wide experience, it should form part of the syllabus of primary education. I heartily endorse the proposition. The modulation of the voice is as necessary

---

\(^1\) Narayan Moreshwar Khare as the training of the hand. Physical drill, handicrafts, drawing and music should go hand in hand in order to draw the best out of the boys and girls and create in them a real interest in their tuition.

That this means a revolution in the system of training is admitted. If the future citizens of the State are to build a sure foundation for life’s work, these four things are necessary. One has only to visit any primary school to have a striking demonstration of slovenliness, disorderliness and discordant speech. I have no doubt, therefore, that when the Education Ministers in the several provinces recast the system of education and make it answer the requirements of the country, they will not omit the essentials to which I have drawn attention. My plan of primary education certainly comprises these things which easily become possible the moment you remove from the children’s shoulders the burden of having to master a difficult foreign language.

Of course, we have not the staff of teachers who can cope with the new method. But that difficulty applies to every new venture. The existing staff of teachers, if they are willing to learn, should be given the opportunity of doing so, and should also have the immediate prospect of a substantial increase in their salaries if they will learn the necessary subjects. It is unthinkable that for all the new subjects that are to become part of primary education separate teachers should be provided. That would be a most expensive method and so wholly unnecessary. It may be that some of the primary school teachers are so ill-equipped that they cannot learn the new subjects within a short time. But a boy who has studied up to the matriculation standard should not take more than three months to learn the elements of music, drawing, physical drill and a handicraft. If he acquires a working knowledge of these, he will be able always to add to it while he is teaching. This presupposes, no doubt, eagerness and zeal on the part of the teachers to make themselves progressively fit for the task of national regeneration.

A MONSTROUS IMPOSITION

In a note¹ in Harijanbandhu, recently, I reproduced a note from a correspondent saying that there were money-lenders in and around Sidhpur in the Gaekwar territories who lent money at exorbitant rates of interest and exacted security for due payment of capital and interest. The money-lenders, among other things, had a lien on the young girls of the borrowers. The result of this shameful imposition

¹ Vide “My Notes” sub-title “Platt deed”
has been that sometimes parents have been obliged to part with their girls when they have not been able to pay interest ranging from 100 per cent upwards. I understand that some workers have brought this thing to the notice of the district officers of Sidhpur, but nothing seems to have been visibly done in the matter. If the facts are as stated by my correspondent— and there seems to be no cause to disbelieve him—the matter demands immediate redress.

_Harijan, 11-9-1937_

282. SELF-SUPPORTING EDUCATION

Dr. A. Lakshmipathi writes:

I have seen some institutions conducted by missionaries, where the schools are worked only in the mornings, the evenings being spent either in agricultural operations or in some handicraft work for which the students are paid some wages according to the quality and quantity of work done by them. In this way, the institution is made more or less self-supporting, and the students do not feel like fish out of water when they leave the school, as they have learnt to do some work enabling them to earn at least their livelihood. I have noticed that the atmosphere in which such schools are conducted is quite different from the dull routine of the stereotyped schools of the Education Department. The boys look more healthy and happy in the idea that they have turned out some useful work, and are physically of a better build. These schools are closed for a short period in the agricultural seasons when all their energy is required for field work. Even in cities, such of the boys as have an aptitude may be employed in trades and professions, thereby enabling them to find a diversion. One meal may also be provided at school for those boys who are in need, or for all who wish to partake of the same in an interval of half an hour during the morning classes. Poor boys may thus be persuaded to run to the school with pleasure and their parents may also encourage them to go to school regularly.

If this scheme of half-day school be adopted, the services of some of these teachers may be utilized for promoting adult education in the villages without any extra payment for such services. The building and other apparatus may also be useful in the same way.

I have seen the Minister for Education, Madras, and presented a letter stating that the deterioration of health of the present generation is mainly due to unsuitable hours of education at schools. I am of opinion that all schools and colleges should work only in the morning, i.e., between 6 and 11 a.m.
study of four hours at school must be quite enough. The afternoon should be spent at home, and the evening should be devoted to games and physical development. Some of the boys may employ themselves in earning their livelihood, and some may help their parents in their business. The students will be more in touch with their parents, which is essential for development of any vocational calling and hereditary aptitude.

If we realize that body-building is nation-building, the proposed change, though apparently revolutionary, is according to Indian customs and climate, and it would be welcome to most people.

Of Dr. Lakshmipathi’s suggestion for restricting school hours to mornings, I do not wish to say much save to commend it to the educational authorities. As to the more or less self-supporting institutions, they could not do anything else if they were to pay their way partly or wholly and make something of their pupils. Yet my suggestion has shocked some educationists because they have known no other method. The very idea of education being self-supporting seems to them to rob education of all value. They see in the suggestion a mercenary motive. I have, however, just been reading a monograph on a Jewish effort in matters educational. In it the writer speaks thus of the vocational training imparted in the Jewish schools:

> So they find the labour of their hands to be worthy in itself. It is made lighter by intellectual activity, it is ennobled by the patriotic ideal which it serves.

Given the right kind of teachers, our children will be taught the dignity of labour and learn to regard it as an integral part and a means of their intellectual growth, and to realize that it is patriotic to pay for their training through their labour. The core of my suggestion is that handicrafts are to be taught, not merely for productive work, but for developing the intellect of the pupils. Surely, if the State takes charge of the children between seven and fourteen, and trains their bodies and minds through productive labour, the public schools must be frauds and teachers idiots if they cannot become self-supporting.

Supposing that every boy and girl works, not as a machine but as an intelligent unit, taking interest in the corporate work done under expert guidance, the corporate labour should be, say, after the first year of the course, worth one anna per hour. Thus for twenty-six working days of four hours per day, each child will have earned Rs. 6-8-0 per month. The only question is whether millions of children can be so profitably employed. We should be intellectual bankrupts if we cannot direct the energy of our children so as to get from them, after a year’s training, one anna worth of marketable labour per hour. I know that nowhere in India do villagers earn so much as one anna per hour in the villages. That is because we have reconciled ourselves to the intense disparity between the haves and the have-nots, and because the city people have, perhaps unwittingly, joined in the British exploitation of the village.

_Harijan, 11-9-1937_

283. A TELEGRAM

September 11, 1937

THANKS WIRE. PLEASE TELL STRIKERS DEEPLY HURT AT YOUR REFUSAL TO SUSPEND STRIKE. YOUR TELEGRAM SEEMED TO ASSURE ME OF SUSPENSION IF I ACCEPTED YOUR INTERPRETATION OF TERM ‘RELIEF’. PLEASE END NATIONAL ANXIETY BY SUSPENDING STRIKE AND GIVE WORKERS LIKE ME THE OPPORTUNITY OF SECURING RELIEF.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 16-9-1937_

284. LETTER TO ATULANAND CHAKRABARTY

Segaon, Wardha, September 11, 1937

MY DEAR ATULANAND,

I am glad you realize, at least partly, the soundness of my suggestion. If the League has to come into being it will do so in the natural course. Even if you sent me some time ago a copy of your pamphlet on women, please send me another, so that I may look at it. Tell me, also, what your monthly minimum expenses are. If you are to fulfil your self-imposed mission, I know that you will have to learn the art of making the two ends meet. And there are two royal roads to this consummation. One is to reduce one’s wants to a minimum, and the

---

1. This was sent to the Andamans authorities at Port Blair.
4. The hunger-strikers, however, declined to suspend their strike.
5. Vide “Letter to Atulanand Chakrabarty”, 28-8-1937

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 213
second is so to arrange one’s affairs as never to run into debt. There is no third way which is at once straight and dignified. And nothing can be royal that is undignified.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. Gandhi

From a photostat: C.W. 1478. Courtesy: A. K. Sen

285. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 12, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

Just now I am not able to write to you myself. What is this you are doing? You are making yourself needlessly unhappy. I can’t understand anything. Amtul Salaam would never have gone to Trivandrum if you had forbidden her. No sooner did you ask me to call her back than I acted. But I was not ready to call her back at the risk of displeasing everybody, Ramachandran, Saraswati and Paparamma, and interrupting the improvement in her health. Had I known—which I now do—how sensitive you are even now, I would have incurred all these risks and called her back. But how was I to know that you, who show yourself off as a very brave person, are in fact so weak-hearted that you would fall ill to the point of being bed-ridden merely by imagining things? When I talked to her under some pretext, she immediately agreed that not only would she never write to you but she would not write to Saraswati or anybody else and would never in future even so much as talk of going to Trivandrum. What more can she do? Why so much hatred? I see no blemish in her. She doesn’t ask for anybody’s service but goes on silently serving others. Why then do you hate her so much? Wake up, pull yourself together, leave this profound darkness and come out into the light. How can one cure suffering that has no basis at all? I have already sent you a wire and am awaiting a reply.

1 Here follows a postscript in Mahadev Desai’s hand which reads: “Please send a copy of your book also. The copy you gave to Gandhiji has been evidently given to the Vidyapith Library.”

2 G. Ramachandran
I am improving. I need rest.
I am returning herewith the account-sheet.
I got Ramachandran’s wire.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7330. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

286. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

September 12, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I got your letter. Your address keeps changing, like a big man’s. One day you are at Sitab Diara, another day at Siwan, then at Patna and then God knows where. You don’t stick to one place for any length of time. Where should I then address my letters? I write to the address given by you last, but by that time you have already left the place and the letter doesn’t reach you. What is the way out?

My health is all right. I am weak, of course. I must have plenty of mental rest, as also physical. The latter I always have, but mental rest is sometimes disturbed. I find it a problem to manage people. But I do it somehow.

One can’t say that Ba’s leg is completely all right.

Everything else is normal. Should I conclude from your letter that you don’t intend to come here in the near future?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3505
287. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 12, 1937

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. The question is a little vexing. If no doctor can be found to work with you what can you do alone? I think in that case you should not persist. By all means do what you can without straining yourself. As for me I find such . . .¹ suggestion frightful.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original : Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

288. INTERVIEW TO WILLIAM B. BENTON²

[Before September 13, 1937]

Motioning to a varnished box about half the size of an orange crate six feet in front of him, Gandhiji said:

You’d better sit over there.

I ask him some questions about Indian politics, about the victorious Congress party’s policies.

This isn’t the time for such questions. I have work to do here, I can’t take myself from it to answer them. You should ask these questions of the political leaders. Of course, I wouldn’t say that I don’t know anything about politics. But I have no time for such questions now.

Many feel that any form of co-operation is a mistake. Others disagree, feeling that perhaps our objectives can best be achieved by giving ground now and then. Both groups are sincere.

We have just won a great victory and this brings us a big responsibility. We had literally no opposition. This is what counts. This result didn’t surprise me, but it is a fine thing for others to see. It shows the world our strength.

¹ A word is illegible here.
² An American journalist
We talk then about American public opinion, its attitude toward India.

American opinion is of great importance to us and by our deeds we hope to win it.

Gandhiji agreed that British foreign policy is often influenced by American opinion. He is aware that England tries in many devious ways to mould it.

We cannot compete for American attention on the same terms with the English. We do not try, our methods must be different methods. We make no conscious effort to influence American opinion. I believe that the American is emotionally sympathetic to our cause, but he is profoundly ignorant of the real facts and of our real problem. When the time is right the American will learn the truth by what we do.

It’s a prevalent idea in America, that India requires England for defence. Without the English, would there be civil and religious disturbances? As the Congress party is successful in driving the English out of power in India, will India fall a prey to someone else? Or, for that matter, how will Congress deal with the native Princes right here at home?

These are gross superstitions. They have been propagated for years. Stories and many of such dangers are hopelessly exaggerated. I know that many English people sincerely believe them; there you have the power of such ideas oft repeated.

As to the native States, they’ll fall in line when India comes into her own.

A subject close to Gandhi’s heart, one of which he will talk freely, is his great movement to improve the lot of the Indian villager or farmer... Experiments are constantly being made, designed to develop new ways to Progress the villager’s lot. The Mahatma told me:

Progress is slow, but you must remember that our work is new. We started with nothing but faith. Only faith. Today knowledge is added.

He breaks into his well-known toothless smile.

You might add a third ingredient—give us part of the money you make when you sell your story.

You think if faith plus knowledge are potent, faith plus knowledge plus capital are more so.

Yes. Yes.

He cackles and rocks in a full laugh.

Have you ever seen an American movie or heard American jazz? These are our two most famous exports.

No, no, I haven’t.
He laughs again.
There’s a good story for you. Do what you can with it. I’ve never been to a moving picture.

Hasn’t one ever been brought to you, I query. He laughs again.
No, I have never seen one.

As I leave Gandhi . . . I produce a sheet of paper made in Wardha which I had purchased for one anna. I ask the Mahatma if he will sign it.

No. He smiles shyly and turns his head. Then he sees my paper and giggles cheerfully.
No, even that does not tempt me\(^1\).

The Hindustan Times, 13-9-1937

---

289. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
September 13, 1937

Can’t give anything more today than my love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3806. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6962

---

290. TELEGRAM TO SURENDRANATH MOITRA

[Before September 14, 1937]

I AM IN CONSTANT TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH THE AUTHORITIES AND THE PRISONERS.

The Hindu, 15-9-1937

---

\(^1\) The report first appeared in The New York Times.

\(^2\) This is a postscript to Mirabeen’s letter to the addressee.

\(^3\) In reply to the addressee’s telegram requesting Gandhiji to intervene again to end the hunger-strike of the remaining seven Andamans prisoners.

\(^4\) The report appeared under the date-line Calcutta, September 14°.
291. TELEGRAM TO NILRATAN SARKAR

WARDHA,
September 14, 1937

DR. NILRATAN SARKAR
SANTINIKETAN

THANK GOD. MANY HEARTS SILENTLY PRAYING GURUDEV’S
SPEEDY RECOVERY. EXPECT DAILY WIRES.

GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 9877

292. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 14, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I send with this a letter written by Manu' on behalf of Gokibehn'. I have understood it to mean that it is proposed to raise the rent by one rupee as electricity charge. I understand whatever is received is paid by Behcharlal on behalf of Doctor or in memory of him. I have not interfered with this arrangement. Please make inquiries, if I am right. If the increase of Re. 1 is justified, tell Behcharlal accordingly. If my impression is not correct, let me know ho Gokibehn’s monthly expenses are met. Tell her that I acted as soon as I got the letter. Inform her about my health.

Blessings from

BAPU

1 Daughter of Harilal Gandhi
2 Raliatbehn, Gandhiji’s sister
293. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

September 15, 1937

I held back these telegrams in the hope of being able to announce the cheerful news that seven prisoners had broken the fast on my acceptance of their meeting of the word ‘relief’. I am sorry that I have failed in my attempt. I can only hope that those who may be special friends of these prisoners will persuade them to break the fast which alone can give the public time to consolidate its effort to secure the very relief for which they are giving up their precious lives.

I would also appeal to the authorities, whoever they may be, to relent and discharge the prisoners, if they will not give up their fast, even as I was discharged and left to my own resources when I would not give up my fast in 1933.

The Bombay Chronicle, 16-9-1937

294. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 15, 1937

MY DEAR AMRIT,

Bapu has given me many messages for you today.

1. He wants you to move amongst the high-class Sikhs and awaken their interest in the Prohibition campaign. Those who drink should be weaned of it, and especially the women should be roused to draw up a resolution.

I would like a declaration from notable Sikhs.

2. C. F. A. should eat exactly what the doctor says. Probably his condition is one which can actually be harmed by fruit, etc. But now, of course, he may [have] passed that stage. It should depend on what the doctor says. That C. F. A. eats meat is open knowledge to Bapu.

3. Bapu entirely agrees with you that C. F. A. should not think about answering Miss Mayo’s book. It is not needed either in India or the West. An

In May 1933

This and the subscription have been added by Gandhiji.

The source has “be”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
entirely independent book would be the only way of touching the matter.¹

4. There is no likelihood of Bapu going to the Frontier before October. It depends on when and what Khan Saheb² writes.

5. It is very good news that the Simla Khadi Bhandar has, become self-supporting.

6. Bapu will look at your brass bucket, and if it is suitable, he will use it himself.

7. Your fan is put away. There are plenty more here. Yours will be kept for you to use when you return.

8. Bapu’s right hand is quite usable, but he feels the more rest he can give it the better. And this, he points out, has the advantage of giving him enforced rest from too much writing.

9. Bapu thinks your Hindi letters have much improved, and they are not too big now.

10. Balkoba³ is slowly improving. He is able to take his full diet, and he has put on 1 lb. weight.

   Bapu’s health is certainly improving. He is taking more of the medicine, as it suits him and helps to reduce the b. p. The weather is excellent.

   Much love.

   MIRA

   Love.

   BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3807. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6963

¹ In the summer of 1938 C. F. Andrews completed The True India, his reply to Catherine Mayo’s Mother India.

² Abdul Ghaffar Khan

³ Balkrishna, younger brother of Vinoba Bhave
295. LETTER TO MANHARRAM MEHTA

September 15, 1937

Bhai Manharram,

I have been familiar with folk-theatre troupes and minstrels and bards right from my childhood days and I have been fascinated by them ever since. But we have dubbed the poor fellows as lowly and discredited them. In course of time even they have come to regard [themselves as such]. I like the idea very much but how it can be implemented is a matter to be decided by a person like you.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

296. LETTER TO CHANDRASHANKAR

September 15, 1937

Bhai Chandrashankar,

Certainly I too lay stress on spinning and especially on the takli. My experience confirms my belief that in India there is nothing so small, so cheap, so artistic, so useful and so beautiful [as the takli].

It is also my claim that except for the English language, all other subjects being taught in India today can be taught through craft within the same amount of time. In spite of all the assurances you may be able to give, if the parents start at the very mention of the word ‘craft’, if they [shudder] to hear the word takli and will not send their children if you pay them a stipend of eight annas or four annas instead of a rupee and a half, I should, if I were you, close down the school and follow some other vocation. A true teacher would teach on his own terms, not on the terms laid down by parents [who] understand nothing in the matter of education.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1 A few words are illegible.
2 ibid
3 Illegible in the source
4 ibid
297. LETTER TO NARASINHBHAI

September 15, 1937

BHAJNARASINHBHAI,

Very little money has been received for the Kamala Memorial Fund. The largest amount was collected in the course of Jawaharlal’s tour. But that did not come in the name of poor Kamala. We might as well say that it came in the name of her husband. What has happened to Kamala is something that happens to saintly women who pass into the last sleep without being a burden to others. This is how the idea of the Kamala Memorial originated. She had taken over the case of the Prayag Congress Hospital. She collected funds for the hospital till her death. The hospital could be maintained only because of her efforts. After her death it was about to be closed down. And so, a few persons like me who knew her well decided that the hospital should be kept going. The easiest way to do it was to make it the Kamala Memorial. Jawaharlal donated half of his small estate for the purpose. Now how can this amount of some 2 lakhs be spent without a violation of morality? Moreover, those who have given the money have done it knowing this. Hence we should regard it as our duty to use the money only for the hospital at Prayag. And, if we cannot see that what the women of Prayag gain is gained by all of us does it not mean that we do not belong to India but only to our own province? Let us follow the words of the Gita that whatever is dedicated to God in a spirit of service reaches God. And this dedication is for the sake of India, through the Kamala Memorial. Hence, remove every other thought from your mind.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

298. LETTER TO DR. DHANJI SHAW

September 15, 1937

BHAJDHANJI SHAW,

I thank you for your letter. Your letter indicates that there is a dearth of khadi workers. There are plenty like you who wear khadi. Real khadi workers are those who make and wear khadi and persuade others to wear it. The khadi programme would never work if everyone only wore khadi and no one produced it, just as Zoroaster’s commands would not be effective if there were many to recite the Avesta but none to follow it in practice. Hence I suggest that wherever you find people not wearing khadi, make an effort to have them wear it.

DR. M. DHANJI SHAW, OCU LIST
EDYOUR
P. O. MANDYA (Mysore)

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

299. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 15, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT

I am obliged to speak to you just now through Mira.

I have gone through your reply. It is quite good and quite firm, just like you. Your weakness is only for friends. I shall be interested to know the reply. What is the reason for changing the name? Is it because the money is to come from the memorial fund? I hope you made sure that your objection had valid ground for it.

Nabibuksh’ is almost due now. Give my love to him.

It is strange you do not get good earth there.

Do you take enough sleep? It is nearing the curfew, therefore good night and love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3808. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6964

300. TELEGRAM TO NILRATAN SARKAR

[On or before September 17, 1937]

GOD IS GREAT AND MERCIFUL. GREAT COMFORT TO FIND YOU BY GURUDEV’S BEDSIDE. PLEASE CONTINUE DAILY WIRES TILL COMPLETE DISCHARGE.

The Hindu, 17-9-1937

1 Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 15-9-1937
2 Addressee’s servant
3 The report is date-lined “Santiniketan, September 17”.
301. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
September 17, 1937

No more today.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3809. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6965

---

302. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 17, 1937

CHI. JAMNALAL,

Seeing how many members of the [Village] Industries Association had come here yesterday, I felt ashamed and even distressed. For such work I should myself go there. That would save expense and other things, too. My health wouldn’t suffer in any way by my travelling this far. On the other hand, I feel much hurt by not going there and dragging everybody here. Please, therefore, send me a car or cart, whichever is available, in time so that I may reach there at 1.45 at the latest. Get everybody to meet at your bungalow. But if the meeting is not possible in the bungalow, by all means arrange it in Maganwadi. Dispose of the simple, straightforward business relating to the Charkha Sangh yourself, and as much as possible even of the complicated work, so that we may be able to discuss only the most important matters.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2988

---

¹ This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
303. DISCUSSION WITH AN EDUCATIONIST

[Before September 18, 1937]

[GANDHI] sounded a warning against the assumption that the idea of self-supporting education sprang from the necessity of achieving total prohibition as soon as possible.

Both are independent necessities. You have to start with the conviction that total prohibition has to be achieved, revenue or no revenue, education or no education. Similarly, you have to start with the conviction that looking to the needs of the villages of India our rural education ought to be made self-supporting if it is to be compulsory.

[THE EDUCATIONIST:] I have the first conviction deep down in me. Prohibition to me is an end in itself, and I regard it as a great education in itself. I should, therefore, sacrifice education altogether to make prohibition a success. But the other conviction is lacking. I cannot yet believe that education can be made self-supporting.

There, too, I want you to start with the conviction. The ways and means will come as you begin to work it out. I regret that I woke up to the necessity of this at this very late age. Otherwise I should have made the experiment myself. Even now, God willing, I shall do what I can to show that it can be self-supporting. But my time has been taken up by other things all these years, equally important perhaps, but it is this stay in Segaon that brought the conviction home to me. We have up to now concentrated on stuffing children’s minds with all kinds of information, without ever thinking of stimulating and developing them. Let us now cry a halt and concentrate on educating the child properly through manual work, not as a side activity, but as the prime means of intellectual training.

I see that too. But why should it also support the school?

That will be the test of its value. The child at the age of 14, that is after finishing a seven years’ course, should be discharged as an earning unit. Even now the poor people’s children automatically lend a helping hand to their parents—the feeling at the back of their minds being, what shall my parents eat and what should they give me to eat if I do not also work with them? That is an education in itself. Even so the State takes charge of the child at seven and returns it to the family as an earning unit. You impart education and simultaneously cut at

---

1 Reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Talks on Self-supporting Education”
the root of unemployment. You have to train the boys in one occupation or another. Round this special occupation you will train up his mind, his body, his handwriting, his artistic sense, and so on. He will be master of the craft he learns.

But supposing a boy takes up the art and science of making khadi. Do you think it must occupy him all the seven years to master the craft?

Yes. It must, if he will not learn it mechanically. Why do we give years to the study of history or to the study of languages? Is a craft any the less important than these subjects which have been up to now given an artificial importance?

But as you have been mainly thinking of spinning and weaving, evidently you are thinking of making of these schools so many weaving schools. A child may have no aptitude for weaving and may have it for something else.

Quite so. Then we will teach him some other craft. But you must know that one school will not teach many crafts. The idea is that we should have one teacher for twenty-five boys, and you may have as many classes or schools of twenty-five boys as you have teachers available, and have each of these schools specializing in a separate craft—carpentry, smithy, tanning or shoe-making. Only you must bear in mind the fact that you develop the child’s mind through each of these crafts. And I would emphasize one more thing. You must forget the cities and concentrate on the villages. They are an ocean. The cities are a mere drop in the ocean. That is why you cannot think of subjects like brick-making. If they must be civil and mechanical engineers, they will after the seven years’ course go to the special colleges meant for these higher and specialized courses. And let me emphasize one more fact. We are apt to think lightly of the village crafts because we have divorced educational from manual training. Manual work has been regarded as something inferior, and owing to the wretched distortion of the varna we came to regard spinners and weavers and carpenters and shoe-makers as belonging to the inferior castes and the proletariat. We have had no Cromptons¹ and Hargreaves² because of this vicious system of considering the crafts as something inferior divorced from the skilled. If they had been regarded as callings having an independent status of their own equal

¹ Samuel Crompton, inventor of the spinning mule, and William Crompton and his son George Crompton, inventors of improved weaving loom
² James Hargreaves, inventor of the spinning-jenny to the status that learning enjoyed, we should have had great inventors from among our craftsmen. Of course the ‘spinning-jenny’ led on to the discovery of water-power and other things which made the mill displace the labour of thousands of people. That was, in my view, a monstrosity. We will by concentrating on the villages see that the inventive skill that an intensive learning of the craft will stimulate will subserve the needs of the villager as a whole.

_Harijan_, 18-9-1937

304. FOR MONKEYS

I have before me nearly fifty letters from America asking me to do what I can to prevent the export of Macacus Rhesus monkeys from India to America for purposes of vivisection. Some of these letters are from humanitarian and anti-vivisection societies. They send interesting literature containing harrowing details and pictures of vivisection and opinions of eminent medical men against the utility of the cruel practice. A typical letter enclosed a picture of St. Francis of Assisi for whom birds and beasts were as brothers and sisters. The reader will appreciate the following prayer of the saint:

Lord, make me an instrument of your peace; where there is hatred, let me sow love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light; and where there is sadness, joy.

O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood, as to understand; to be loved, as to love; for it is in giving that we receive; it is in pardoning that we are pardoned, and it is in dying that we art born to eternal life.

My sympathies are wholly with my correspondents. If I had the power I would not send a single monkey abroad for vivisection or slaughter. My advice to my correspondents is that they should promote representations to the Government of India which, if they are well supported are, bound to be listened to by them. The other way obviously is a strong public agitation in India against the practice of sending monkeys abroad. Of this, so far as I can see, there is not much prospect. The public hardly know that there is any export of monkeys. And I do not know how to prevent private persons from carrying on what must be to them a lucrative trade. All, therefore, that I can do is to express the pious wish that India will be no party to what is undoubtedly an inhuman practice. It would be wrong to subject the lower creation to living death even if it could be proved that it contributed something to the alleviation of human suffering. Surely, it can never be an end in itself justifying adoption of inhumanities involved in vivisection. Rather, the end is for the human family not to sacrifice tenderness, even though the practice of that virtue should involve continuation of human suffering or even an increase in it. I suggest that tenderness for others and other life itself promotes alleviation in that it makes pain bearable.

Harijan, 18-9-1937

305. THE SOCIAL SIDE OF PROHIBITION

This excellent article\(^1\) should be studied by every Excise Minister who would make his prohibition policy a success. Every liquor-shop should be turned into a refreshment club. The money is there: the excise revenue during the transition period.

Harijan 18-9-1937

306. FOR MINISTERS OF EDUCATION

A schoolmaster in a southern high school sends me the following extracts\(^2\) showing some of the disabilities of students:

M. E. R. 99. No pupil convicted in a court of law for disloyal activities should be admitted into a school without the previous sanction of Government. No manager or member of the staff or of the establishment shall be permitted to take part in political agitation directed against the authority of Government or to inculcate opinions tending to excite feelings of political disloyalty or disaffection; and the pupil should not be permitted to attend political meetings or to engage in any form of political agitation.

100. In the event of such misconduct being persisted in and encouraged or permitted by the masters or the managing authorities, the Director may, after due warning, withdraw recognition from the offending school or withdraw the grant-in-aid or withhold the privilege of competing for Government

---

\(^1\) In the article, not reproduced here, John Barnabas had discussed how various circumstances—social and financial—drive an average man to drink and suggested that prohibition could be launched in an intelligent manner by providing to the labourer some substitutes such as entertainment and refreshment.

\(^2\) Only excerpts from which are reproduced here scholarships and receiving Government scholarships.

101. If the public utterances of a schoolmaster are of such a character as to endanger the orderly development of the boys under his charge by introducing into their immature minds doctrines subversive of their respect for authority and calculated to impair their usefulness as citizens and to hinder their advancement in after-life, or if he is found to have personally conducted his pupils to a political meeting or to have deliberately encouraged their attendance at such a meeting, his proceedings may be held to constitute a dereliction of duty and may be visited with disciplinary action.

79. No books (other than books for religious instruction) not authorized by Government shall be used in any case. Government reserve to themselves the right to forbid or to prescribe the use of any book or books in schools.

80. (Insists on all children being vaccinated. Though a dead letter in practice, it should surely be cancelled.)

Other circulars still in force forbid the hoisting of the National Flag on recognized schools and discourage the exhibition of photographs of national leaders in classrooms, and penalize schools where students express national views in answering papers at public examinations. . . .

Most of these should be removed without a moment’s delay. The students’ minds must not be caged nor for that matter those of the teachers. The teachers can only point to their pupils what they or the State considers is the best way. Having done so they have no right to curb their pupils’ thoughts and feelings. This does not mean that they are not to be subject to any discipline. No school can be run without it. But discipline has nothing to do with artificial restraint upon the students’ all-round growth. This is impossible where they are subjected to espionage. The fact is that hitherto they have been in an atmosphere subtly anti-national where it has not been openly that. This should now be dispelled. The students should know that the cultivation of nationalism is not a crime but a virtue.

_Harijan_, 18-9-1937
307. SELF-SUPPORTING SCHOOLS

The main cause of India’s economic decay is that her workers begin life too early. . . . The immature mind put to industrial apprenticeship gets dwarfed and fossilized; and there is no grasp of the economic significance of work. Anybody can exploit such a worker. . . . When I visited the Ceylon plantations what harrowed me most was the existence of child-labour. . . . Even in a country like Ceylon where the population is inadequate to exploit natural resources, child-labour is indefensible; much more so is it in India where the employment of children may mean the unemployment of adults.

Let us not delude ourselves into believing that self-supporting workshop schools manufacturing and marketing goods will impart education. In actual practice it will be nothing but legalized child-labour. . . . I cannot agree with the editor of the Harijan that mathematics can be studied by calculating how much yarn would be needed for a piece, and science and geography by observing the growth and improvement of strains of cotton. . . . The training of the eye, ear and hand is absolutely necessary, and manual labour must be made compulsory in all schools; but we must not forget that what is called the training of the hand is really a training of the brain. If a school aims at education, it must give up all ideas of producing standardized goods for sale. It must give a variety of raw materials and machines for children to experiment with and spoil. Waste is inevitable. A careful study of Sjt. Parikh’s figures in the current issue of the Harijan shows that even when a school has specialized in one occupation and has trained grown-up children, waste is considerable. A vocational school, like a college of science, is a place for experimenting and wasting resources. A country like India with limited resources must start as few as necessary. . . .

That we can force the pace and make the boy learn in two years what he now learns in seven is a curious illusion. . . . A child cannot, and should not, try to learn at eight what he can learn only at 16. The foreign language is not the cause of delay, nor are we giving as much extra time to it as people imagine. . . .

. . . Let us not demand that schools should produce not only men but also goods.

To sum up, it is bad economy to adopt a short-sighted policy which will make the schools solvent and the nation bankrupt.

‘A PROFESSOR’
This is from a Professor in a well-known University. There is a signed covering letter to it but the article is unsigned. I therefore refrain from giving the writer’s name. After all the reader is concerned with the matter, not its author. This article is a striking case of preconceived notions blurring one’s vision. The writer has not taken the trouble to understand my plan. He condemns himself when he likens the boys in the schools of my imagination to the boys on the semi-slave plantations of Ceylon. He forgets that the boys on the plantations are not treated as students. Their labour is no part of their training. In the schools I advocate boys have all that boys learn in high schools less English but plus drill, music, drawing and, of course, a vocation. To call these schools factories amounts to an obstinate refusal to appreciate a series of facts. It is very like a man refusing to read the description of a human being and calling him a monkey because he has seen no other animal but a monkey, and because the description in some particulars, but only in some, answers that of monkeys. The Professor would have been on safe ground if he had cautioned the public against expecting all that I have claimed for the proposal. The caution would however be unnecessary because I have uttered it myself.

I admit that my proposal is novel. But novelty is no crime. I admit that it has not much experience behind it. But what experience my associates and I have encourages me to think that the plan, if worked faithfully, will succeed. The nation can lose nothing by trying the experiment even if it fails. And the gain will be immense if the experiment succeeds even partially. In no other way can primary education be made free, compulsory and effective. The present primary education is admittedly a snare and delusion.

Shri Narahari Parikh’s figures have been written in order to support the plan to the extent they can. They are not conclusive. They are encouraging. They supply good data to an enthusiast. Seven years are not an integral part of my plan. It may be that more time will be required to reach the intellectual level aimed at by me. The nation won’t lose anything whatsoever by a prolongation of the period of instruction. The integral parts of the scheme are.

(1) Taken as a whole a vocation or vocations are the best medium for the all-round development of a boy or a girl, and therefore all syllabus should be woven round vocational training.

(2) Primary education thus conceived as a whole is bound to

\(^1\) Only extracts from which are reproduced here be self-supporting even though for the first or even the second year’s course it may not be wholly so. Primary education here means as described above.

The Professor questions the possibility of giving arithmetical and other training through vocations. Here he speaks without experience. I can speak from experience. I had no difficulty in giving at the Tolstoy Farm (Transvaal) all-round development to the boys and girls for whose training I was directly responsible. The central fact there was vocational training for nearly eight hours. They had one or, at the most, two hours of book learning. The vocations were digging, cooking, scavenging, sandal-making, simple carpentry, and messenger work. The ages of the children ranged from six to sixteen. That experiment has been since much enriched.

_Harijan_, 18-9-1937

308. INHUMANITY IN DELHI

Things seem to move slowly in Delhi, where the poor are concerned. The sweepers’ quarters in Delhi were the worst of any I had seen. I do not know that they are much better today. Thakkar Bapa now draws attention to the serious grievances of stone-breakers. The poor men are cheated of the price of their labour, and mean advantage is taken of their ignorance and poverty by the heartless contractors. It is high time for the public of Delhi to wake up and remedy the evil. If the contractors will not behave themselves, the public should support a general strike by the stone-breakers and find for them some suitable occupation whilst the strike lasts. No doubt before this last step is taken there would be parleys with the contractors.

_Harijan_, 18-9-1937

---

1 Vide “An Autobiography” sub-title “As Schoolmaster”
2 The article is not reproduced here.
309. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGON, WARDHA,

September 18, 1937

CHI. NIMU,

Received your second letter. What does Punditji teach you when he comes? Does he give you reading and writing work? How do you find the climate there? How much money is left with you now? Ask for some whenever you need it. Perhaps it will be better if I send you the money direct. If you can find any work there, do take it up. Be of as much use as you can. You must have made friends with everyone there as you are a sociable type. I hope Sumitra¹ does not make a nuisance of herself. It is a very good sign that the Principal himself teaches you English. Tell Vidyavati about your constipation also.

Kanam is enjoying himself. Gosibehn² and Perinbehn³ are at present here. He gets on well with them. Gosibehn tells him stories. And if he is told stories he needs nothing else. His real education consists of stories, football and kite-flying. The regular lessons of course go on. But if he does not find these as interesting as stories, I consider it a shortcoming on the part of the teacher. But it is true, is it not, that the teacher can only impart what he himself possesses?

How old are the seniormost girls there? Is it that they have admitted you as an exception?

Are there any women teachers or only men teachers?

The place is famous for its guavas and berries. Try them both by turns as medicine. Perhaps they might cure your constipation. As far as possible, listen to Saraswatibehn’s advice.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ Addressee’s eldest daughter
² Gosibehn Captain and Perinbehn Captain, granddaughters of Dadabhai Naoroji
³ ibid
310. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

September 18, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Lilavati’s illness seems to be getting somewhat prolonged. Low fever persists. Having an iron constitution, she continues to move about. I have, therefore, put restrictions on her. Even in food she is made to observe fairly severe restrictions. Let the doctor bring his apparatus to examine her when he comes. A patch is visible not only on the tonsils but also on the right side. I suppose it will remain even after the tonsils are removed. So there must be some treatment for the patch adjacent to the tonsils. Please write to Chhotalal about this complaint. He should write if he can think of something. And also write to him about Amtul Salaam and tell him that she has asthma and cough. And she has constipation too. He should suggest something for her also, if he can. As for treatment, she has been treated by a homoeopath and a vaid’s treatment is still going on. But there has been no definite improvement. One can only say that she is pulling on.

Write [to Chhotalal] about me and tell him that as advised I am taking two doses of the powder daily for four days. Today is the fourth day. From tomorrow I shall take one dose daily for five days. Find out if he has any suggestion to make regarding food after that. You may also tell him that my diet has decreased after his treatment was started. The quantity of milk has decreased to practically a half of what it was. I cannot eat bread either. Before the treatment was started I used to eat wheat in a fairly good quantity in the form of bread and golpapdi. I have lost the ability to digest that. I don’t mind this, but Chhotalal should know about it.

I got the mail sent by you. I am surrounded at the moment by four or five persons. Get well soon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11566

1 A sweetmeat
311. LETTER TO TARADEVI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

September 18, 1937

CHI. TARA,

You can write a letter in a beautiful hand while lying in bed. Let us see how you are going to work after completing your studies.

Blessings from

BAPU

TARA KUMARI
MAHILA VIDYALAYA
LUCKNOW, U. P.

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

312. THE USE AND ABUSE OF TODDY

A Parsi correspondent from Ahmedabad has addressed me a long letter of which the following is the gist:

I am not a liquor dealer myself, nor do I drink, though I have found half an ounce of toddy, taken judiciously in illness, to have wonderfully curative properties. But then, it befuddles me and I have to discontinue its use. Since 1896 when I became a vegetarian I have not taken meat. I am sixty-five and therefore can claim to speak with some experience. I have not a shadow of doubt that prohibition will add to the health and longevity of the working people as a whole. But I am afraid that what will be saved from liquor will be swallowed up by cinemas, theatres and vice, besides encouraging idleness and surreptitious illicit distillation. Toddy, on the other hand, has a number of valuable uses which I note below:

(1) Fresh toddy is a healthy, non-intoxicating beverage, though under the heat of the sun it quickly ferments and develops alcoholic properties.

(2) Taken medicinally it acts as a refrigerant and cures the system of excess of heat.

(3) Toddy is used as leaven to raise the flour for making bread, biscuits and pastries.

(4) It cures constipation and promotes bowel action.

(5) From toddy we get vinegar which is used in pickles and as a

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Harijanbandhu, 19-9-1937.
Unfortunately it is becoming increasingly difficult to obtain pure, unadulterated toddy. What is generally sold is a thin, poisonous mixture adulterated with water, saccharine, opium and other narcotics which act as a slow poison on the system. The toddy-dealer, who is generally impecunious and harassed by the exactions of the Excise Department, is driven to make both ends meet by defrauding the consumer. In my opinion, what is really needed is to exempt toddy from the licensing system, and make it possible to provide pure stuff to the consumer in sealed bottles at the rate of two pice per bottle.

To enforce prohibition in respect of toddy, while leaving tobacco, ganja, opium and other narcotics free, would be tantamount to favouring Hindu licensees of these narcotics at the expense of Parsi vendors of toddy, and is bound to make a bad impression. The evil of juvenile smoking is daily becoming worse in our country. The result is a devitalized manhood and a fearful increase in the cases of tuberculosis, etc. The economic bill that the nation has to pay annually for this vice of tobacco-smoking works out at a staggering figure. If we take the cases of tobacco-smoking in our country to be one in three, and two pice worth of cigarettes as the average daily consumption of smoke for each smoker, then twelve crore smokers would, in a year, blow away 138 crores of rupees among them in this pleasant vice! By enforcing prohibition against tobacco-smoking the whole of this amount could be saved and the problem of financing primary education for the nation be automatically solved; the national health would distinctly gain; and the daily desecration of the Atash deva1 at the hands of millions of smokers be stopped. At the same time the abolition of licensed toddy shops in the cities would cause the townspeople to go to the villages for fresh-drawn toddy and help to put some money into the pockets of the needy village-folk. Perhaps you know that in certain parts of the Surat District the date-palm is the only stay of the poor as the sub-soil water is too brackish to support any other cultivation. The necessity of journeying to the villages to obtain toddy will also serve as an automatic check on the consumption of toddy and effectively reduce the evil of drunkenness that is becoming more and more rampant in all the big cities.

Other Parsi correspondents too have written to me in the same strain. I must confess that it did surprise me somewhat at first that all such arguments against prohibition should emanate invariably from

---

1 Fire-god of the Zoroastrians
Parsi brains. But it may be that this is due to the fact that, owing to the special relations which the Parsis have with me, they freely speak out their mind, while others, who think similarly about prohibition, feel constrained and hold back their feelings. Let me assure my Parsi friends that I value this mark of confidence on their part as a rare privilege, which I hope I have tried to deserve.

Coming now to the arguments advanced by my correspondent, it will be seen that such of them as are valid do not apply to the plan of prohibition that I have adumbrated. Prohibition will certainly not affect the sale of toddy for bona fide medicinal purposes. Only, as in the case of other drugs so in the case of toddy, the intending purchaser will be required to produce a certificate issued not by the patient concerned to himself, but by a duly qualified doctor. My correspondent may feel competent to act as his own physician, but an average patient cannot safely be left to prescribe for himself. The proposed restriction in respect of medicinal toddy is thus conceived in the patient’s own interest.

It is hardly necessary for me here to examine all the claims on behalf of toddy advanced by my correspondent. Suffice it to say that I have already admitted the immense economic value of the toddy-palm. I have nothing whatever against the use of toddy juice as such. My sole objection is to fermented toddy which has alcoholic properties like any other spirituous liquor whether made from sugarcane, grape or apples. I have myself freely partaken, and made others partake, of sweet toddy gur\(^1\) and its sherbet. Nor is there any duty on the tapping of sweet toddy for gur-making. I am planning to tap 250 palms here at Segaon in the coming season for sweet toddy and, God willing, I hope to get some of the finest gur and sugar from it. The deeper I dive into this question of sweet toddy, the more I find that, owing to the disrepute into which it has fallen by its evil association with liquor manufacture, its proper use has never been inculcated upon our people.\(^2\) The grapes of the Madeira island in the Atlantic Ocean, which is under Portuguese rule, meet with the same fate. There are vines in every courtyard and wine is distilled in every home. Hence in this place ‘grape’ means ‘wine’. The term has acquired such a noxious connotation that in our language it has become a common expression and we employ the word ‘madira’\(^3\) to denote liquor. Today hassimilarly become accursed. I also played no

---

\(^1\) Jaggery
\(^2\) The rest of the paragraph is translated from the Gujarati in Harijanbandhu.
\(^3\) Here Gandhiji is giving a fanciful etymology of the word which, in fact, is derived from the base mada meaning ‘intoxication’.
small part in condemning it in the last Satyagraha. The above-mentioned gentleman can rest assured that now I am atoning for it by helping people to a true knowledge of toddy and by keeping the intoxicating principle away from it. May I in all sincerity suggest that the Parsi community can render a great service to itself and the Province of Bombay by renouncing the liquor trade and doing its bit for the redemption of the much-wronged toddy-palm. Is it not also a happy augury that the cause of prohibition in the Bombay Presidency has for its helmsman and guide a celebrated Parsi doctor?

I hope it will now be sufficiently clear to my esteemed correspondent, and others who might be inclined to think like him, that the prohibition move which I am sponsoring is not calculated to injure Parsi interests or for the matter of that any legitimate interests.
It is directed as much against opium, ganja, charas and every narcotic as it is against liquor-drinking and, what is more, as I have already shown, it does not affect the legitimate use of the toddy-palm in which the Parsis as a community are especially interested. It does certainly aim at a crusade against the perversion of its legitimate use, in the form of manufacture and consumption of a fiery liquor. And, in this holy crusade, my venerable Parsi correspondent seems to be at one with me.

_Harijan_, 9-10-1937, and _Harijanbandhu_, 19-9-1937

313. TO NATIONAL TEACHERS

To the teachers who are conducting national schools I would suggest that if they are convinced by my recent writings on primary education, they should try to put my ideas into practice. They should maintain a proper record and keep me informed about their experiences. Those who are willing to conduct a school on the lines suggested by me, those who are not engaged for the time being or those who are willing to give up their present vocation and run a school, should write to me.

It is my belief that a craft which immediately suggests itself for making primary schools self-sufficient is spinning and allied processes. This includes all the processes from picking cotton to

---

1 Salt Satyagraha of 1930.
2 Vide “Self-Supporting Education”, also “Congress Ministries”, 17-7-1937
weaving intricate designs into khadi. The wages should be calculated at a minimum of half an anna per hour. Of the five working hours in the school day four hours should be devoted to manual work and one hour to instruction in the science of the craft taught in the school and the teaching of other subjects that cannot be taken up as part of the craft taught. While teaching the crafts, subjects like history, geography and arithmetic would be partially or wholly covered. Language and grammar as part of it, and also correct pronunciation would be naturally included. For the teacher will treat the craft as a vehicle of all such knowledge and will teach the children correct speech and in so doing would incidentally impart knowledge of grammar. Children must learn the process of counting right from the beginning. Hence, the first beginning will have to be made with arithmetic. Neatness would of course not be a separate subject. Children ought to be neat in everything they do. They will begin it by coming to school neat and tidy. Hence, for the present I cannot think of any subject which the children cannot be taught side by side with their vocational training.

It is of course my idea that just as the subjects to be taught have not been considered separately but as interconnected and originating from a single source, I also think that there would be a single teacher. There should be no separate teachers for different subjects but only one teacher. There could be separate teachers for the different forms. That is to say, there would be seven teachers if there are seven forms and one teacher would not have more than 25 children. If education is compulsory, I would consider it necessary to have separate classes for boys and girls from the very beginning. For ultimately they will not have to be trained in the same vocations. Hence, I believe that it would be more convenient to have separate classes from the very start.

It may be possible to make some modifications in this method and in the working hours, number of teachers and distribution of subjects; but the school of my conception can be conducted only by regarding as inviolable the principles which each school must follow. Right now, the pursuit of these principles may not have shown any results; but any minister who wishes to start on such a system of education must have faith in these principles. And this faith, based as it is on reason, should not be blind but rational. The two principles are: (1) The vehicle of education should be some vocation or craft which would be useful in the village. (2) Education, on the whole, should be self-supporting. It may be not completely self-supporting for a year or two in the beginning; but income and expenditure should be balanced at the end of seven years. There is scope for increasing or decreasing these seven years that I have posited for this kind of education.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 19-9-1937

314. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGGAON,
September 19, 1937

I had hoped to write to you myself today but sleep made it impossible. Her Ex.’s letter is diplomatic, plausible, yours straight.

What about the ice?

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3810. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6966

315. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGGAON, WARDHA,
September 19, 1937

CHI. NIMU,

Your letter about Usha\(^2\) alarms me. We call illness corporal punishment. How appropriate is this expression! Because such a body deserves the punishment. Don’t be impatient now. Do not worry. Busy yourself with your work. Really speaking you have never lived the life of a student. You had your lessons in your childhood but that was not real student life. When one willingly devotes oneself to something, one is said to be living for it. As for instance life for the sake of service, life for the sake of learning, life for the sake of enjoyment, life for the sake of [amassing] wealth. In these cases service, learning, enjoyment and wealth become the only purpose of life. And other things are sacrificed for their sake. From this point of view, since you have taken up student life you ought to forget about

---

\(^1\) This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.

\(^2\) Addressee’s youngest daughter
Usha for the time being, as also Sarita', Ramdas and me. Only studies should not be forgotten. This is called the yoga of non-attachment. You have accepted student's life for one year. So forget all other things.

I shall find out about Usha and also write to Sarita. I am not sending a wire today because it is a Sunday. I shall send a wire tomorrow. I shall also write to Navanit. Like Ramdas who cannot rush to Usha’s side from South Africa, you also cannot run from where you are. Life and death are in the hands of God. If Usha is destined to live long she will recover soon. If you wish and if Sarita agrees, I am prepared to take charge of Usha. Ba of course is here. Amtul Salaam is also here. If she gets such an opportunity to serve, she will consider it a godsend. I am writing this after getting her consent. About the treatments also I am writing to Sarita as much as I know. Even if you yourself were there, what more could you have done in addition to the treatment she is receiving today? If I ask her to come to me it does not mean that she will be served better here. But certainly there is the thought that better medical consultation can be available here than at Lakhtar. Any other advice can also be more readily available here and I also know fairly well about a number of such diseases. . . .

From a copy of the Gujarati: Nirmala Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

316. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
September 20, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I have written with the right hand with a vengeance. In ten minutes more the prayer commences and the silence breaks. Then no more of right hand writing till next Monday.

Nothing more about me than what M.\(^1\) has told you.

I hope you had a good meeting with the women. You can’t desert the rich. You have to do the best you can with them. You must have inexhaustible patience.

Tell Charlie, he must keep to regular hours and simplicity for

---

1 Addressee’s mother
2 Omission as in the source
3 Mirabehn food. It won’t do to have another attack, if he is to shoulder the burden of Palestine. It is wrong for him to write for money. It is one thing to accept small gifts for work done without the monetary motive behind it. But to write for gain seems to me to be quite wrong. It would be a different thing if he as a schoolmaster was writing school-books. That labour merits its hire. But not an original work say like the Indian Fight for Freedom or the Life of Jesus.1

You are silent about your eczema.

Poor Sharda may have duodenal ulcer. But she is all right and quite brave. Her father, who has come here, is on his back with fever. Lilavati is on the mend. Ba is better though still limping. Balkrishna is the same as before. Batra is in the Punjab.

The medicine I am taking is no patent. It is a well-known bazaar root irradiated. If I may take the neem leaf or bark, what is wrong with another bitter root? There is as much harm in this root as there is in the castor seed. Therefore don’t take fright over my drug. I am careful.

My love to Nabi Bux. He should return by this time.

The weather has suddenly become warm. We might have a downpour.

We had a good meeting of A. I. S. A. and A. I. V. I. A.

The Urdu numerals are handy. Thoughtful Rebel as ever! I shall ask for more when I have mastered this much. It will be treasured as I have treasured your list of equivalent Hindi names for tools.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3612. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6421

317. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,

September 20, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

On the envelope you have written “Please send to Dahyabhai Sumitra”. I was puzzled. Then I thought that you must have forgotten to cross out one. I am sending the envelope back. Please look at it. This is just by way of fun.

Your notes should be brief. For instance, you could have

1 Which C. F. Andrews was engaged in writing towards the end of his life, but did not complete shortened the one about Gulzarilal as also the others. Today I have done nothing but this. You will be able to see it. If we don’t follow this method, then no matter how many pages we fill we shall not be able to include all the topics. As the topics increase in number our ability to condense them should also increase a great deal.

Chan.’s extracts cannot be published. I am sending them back. The first part is all right. But it is of no use to us. We have to prepare literature pertaining to our country. The items in the second part have been collected without understanding. Our problem is definitely not how to bring about prohibition by raising the tax. We simply don’t want any revenue from that source. I had to accept Shah’s matter because he did agree partly at least.

I think that there is a Hindi translation of *Anandamath*¹. It is possible that there is a good Gujarati translation also. If there is one, please procure a copy.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

Please return Chandy’s article. Have you omitted from it M. [C.] Rajah’s name? I wish to make some other changes too.

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11570

318. LETTER TO E. M. S. NAMBOODIRIPAD²

_Segaon, Wardha,, September 21, 1937_

MY DEAR NAMBOODIRIPAD,

I have your letter. It is right that you have written to the Premier, but before doing so you should have written to the police authorities and gone step by step. Don’t expect that from top to bottom the Permanent Service has become angelic. And why do you say you cannot condemn even bad actions of Congress Ministries? I think it is not only a right, but a duty for any Congressmen to openly criticize acts of Congress officials, no matter however highly placed they may be. The criticism has got to be courteous and well-informed.

---

¹ A Bengali novel by Bankimchandra Chattopadhyaya which contains the poem Vandemataram

² The addressee, Joint-Secretary of the All-India Congress Socialist Party and Organizing Secretary of the Kerala Provincial Congress Committee, had drawn Gandhiji’s attention to the search carried on by the police for a proscribed book.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. E. M. S. NAMBOODIRIPAD
POST CHERUKARA, via SHoranur
S. MALABAR

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

319. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

September 21, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Please have a talk with R. But [before that] ask Appa. If R. is impotent, G. cannot but know about it. Then she should not live with him, nor should she be harassed. R. must have taken treatment. However, if medicines always worked, why do we have so many advertisements about them? But ascertain all the facts. Go and find out what G. has done and what the atmosphere there is like.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11571

320. LETTER TO PRABHUDAYAL VIDYARTHI

SEVAGRAM,
September 21, 1937

CHI. PRABHUDAYAL,

Come whenever you like. Stay the whole day and learn to make rotis.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi : G. N. 11683

1 The name has been omitted.
2 Not clear in the source
3 The name has been omitted.
321. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

SEGON, WARDHA,
September 22, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

Since I have the opportunity I am dictating these few lines. These days, it is not Mridu but Anasuyabehn who acts as my postman from Shahibag. Hence I am well posted with news of the family. I was distressed to hear about your illness. I wondered why God has not granted health to one whom He has granted all the comforts. Then I remembered this line from Narasinh: “Do not be affected by happiness or misery. They are ever with the body.” I hope you are improving. You have done well to send away the children to study instead of detaining them. There is no need at all to answer this letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11147. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

322. LETTER TO RABINDRANATH TAGORE

SEGON, WARDHA,
September 23, 1937

DEAR GURUDEV,

Your precious letter is before me. You have anticipated me. I wanted to write as soon as Sir Nilratan sent me his last reassuring wire. But my right hand needs rest. I did not want to dictate. The left hand works slow. This is merely to show you what love some of us bear towards you. I verily believe that the silent prayers from the hearts of your admirers have been heard and you are still with us. You are not a mere singer of the world. Your living word is a guide and an inspiration to thousands. May you be spared for many a long year yet to come.

With deep love,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 4649
323. MESSAGE TO KARNATAKA UNIFICATION LEAGUE, BELGAUM

[Before September 24, 1937]

The creation of Karnataka as a separate province cannot be resisted on merits. Therefore, whoever brings a resolution to that effect should be welcomed by the Congress Ministry and the difficulties of its immediate execution should be frankly pointed out. The Congress Ministry can take the wind out of the Opposition’s sails by announcing its policy, means and ways.1

The Hindu, 24-9-1937

324. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,

September 24, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM.2

Here is a letter from one who calls himself the maternal uncle of Kamalabai. I have told the writer that Kamalabai’s process of purification should not on any account be interrupted, and that this is necessary in the interest of herself as well as the family.

The patient is there; you will see her and guide me. No money is to be paid till I write to you. I am making steady progress.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

1 At Gandhiji’s instance a copy of this message was sent to the Bombay Ministry. It had been proposed to introduce in the Bombay Assembly a resolution for a separate Karnataka province.

2 The supercription is in Devanagari.
MY DEAR REBEL.

This is merely for the pleasure of writing to you. Shummy is hopelessly wrong. You must write daily if you can but never at the sacrifice of your rest or work.

Verrier\(^1\) is here today. I shall speak to him and do the needful.

The seven prisoners have suspended their fast.

Why won’t you say in writing what you want to say so badly when we meet? But you will please yourself. I am not curious like some I know.

You should get the commitment\(^2\) of noted Sikhs even though their word carries no weight with the Sikhs.

Sufficient for the day.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3811. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6967

326. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

SEGAON,WARDHA,

September 24, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI.

Your letter to Dudabhai\(^3\) seemed all right and I have, therefore, sent it on. And I have advised that he should send Jivantika to her husband’s place. Nothing more need be done in this matter.

I understand about the anonymous note of threat. We should know what Raojibhai says. I have talked over everything with Dinkar. He himself offered to have a talk with you and report to you the substance of our talk. I, therefore, did not write to you anything. The long and short of it is that he would give his services as long as the Congress work goes on. He will accept whatever we give him to meet his expenses. His needs are fairly numerous. I, therefore, would advise that he should be paid Rs. 100. Sometimes he may save a little from it and sometimes he will spend the whole amount. I have told him that

---

\(^1\) Verrier Elwin

\(^2\) Vide “Statement to the Press”, 15-9-1937

\(^3\) Dudabhai Dafda
he could be given the facilities to set up an establishment there. He will have to pay the rent.

Dahyalal has arrived. For the present he has been given sanitation work and spinning.

I was very happy to learn that ghee is being made from cow’s milk. Test every instalment. There is every chance of the ghee going rancid if the butter is underboiled. In making ghee out of cow’s milk more care has to be taken than in making it out of buffalo’s milk.

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9110

327. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKAR PATTANI

SEGGAON, WARDHA,
September 24, 1937

SUNA BHAISHRI,

I have a faint impression that I wrote to you about prohibition in Bhavnagar. But I don’t find a note about it anywhere. However, as often happens these days, I might have only thought of writing and then imagined that I had actually written. I write very little with my own hand, and that too with the left. It is possible, therefore, that if there was nobody with me when I wished to write, the intention was not carried out. This is just by way of preface.

What are the implications of the prohibition which is in force in Bhavnagar? For how long has it been in force? What is the result? Is the loss in revenue through prohibition made good through the improved condition of the people? I won’t be perturbed if the result has been contrary to my expectations. Nor would I be surprised if the result has been according to my expectations, for any other result is impossible where the constructive work which should accompany prohibition is carried out. It will be enough if you entrust this job to any officer of your Excise Department and he writes to me. I certainly don’t want this matter to weigh on your mind.

Vandematram from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5954. Also C.W. 3271. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 249
Floods, famines and pestilences have become part of the natural life of India. Famines and floods take place almost all the world over, but their effects are largely overcome in countries which have financial and other resources. But in India, where poverty reaches the point of starvation, the effects of floods and famines are not only not overcome but are felt with double force, and pestilences are ever with us through the same cause. But the gravest defect of India’s pauperism is that we have come to regard these visitations with resignation which is none the less brutal because it is unconscious. To illustrate my point I single out the case of Orissa because of the appeal issued by the Minister of Revenue and Public Works in his capacity as Chairman of the Orissa Flood Relief Committee. In him, a member of the Congress Ministry, Government and the Congress combine. But in a covering letter he tells me that the response to the appeal has been nothing worth mentioning. The Orissa Governor, in his address at the inaugural meeting of the Flood Relief Fund, says: “As it was graphically put to me, on the night of the 6th August 30,000 people in this town, Cuttack, were sleeping or trying to sleep ten feet below the river level.” Cuttack is an insignificant place compared to Bombay. It is not one-tenth the size of that city. Imagine what would happen to Bombay if there was a river passing by it, and floods put three lakhs of people in the predicament in which the people of Cuttack found themselves on the night of the sixth of August! Fifteen hundred square miles in the districts of Cuttack and Puri have been affected by floods. But the recurrence of such floods annually in many parts of India has made popular conscience blunt even in a place so cosmopolitan as Bombay which has never failed to respond to the cry of distress no matter from what corner of India it has come. If my pen moves any person to respond to the appeal, let him or her send whatever he or she can. There are various charities in Bombay. I venture to suggest that they can take consolidated action by making a joint inquiry into all such cases that may come under their notice and can then make proportionate contributions in accordance with the funds at their disposal. If this suggestion is adopted, no distress need go unheard because of want of proper championship. At present, it will be admitted there is no method in the distribution of these great charities. This suggestion is, however, for the future. For the time being, following the proverb ‘he gives twice who quickly gives’, let those who feel impelled give without waiting for any joint action.

A word, however, to the Ministers. Whatever donations they may receive will give only partial relief. They ought, therefore, to do two things: first, adopt means and measures to make people, who may be affected, learn the art of helping themselves by engaging in any productive occupation. Bihar took up spinning and the like. Orissa may take up other occupations if people will not look at the spinning-wheel. The chief thing is to learn the dignity of labour. Let the Ministers put off their kurta for a little time daily, and work as common labourers, so as to give an impetus to others who may be in need of labour and what labour brings. Secondly, they should make a proper effort to harness engineering skill so as to guide into healthy channels the course of the rushing waters during the monsoons.

Harrijan, 25-9-1937

329. NOT IMPRacticABLE

Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh is a great social reformer, a man of letters and a politician. Whatever, therefore, he writes commands attention. He has contributed an article on total prohibition to The Times of India. Having read it with the care his writings demand from me, I must confess that I left the article with a sigh. How could such a reformer accept defeat on grounds that do not bear examination? His only argument seems to be: ‘There is bound to be illicit distillation and secret drinking, therefore do not attempt prohibition.’ In the Punjab there was local option but nobody applied it. “Therefore,” he says, “my conclusion is that prohibition by compulsion will fail, and provinces will lose revenue which they need for rural reconstruction.” By linking prohibition to revenue the Sardar has precipitately given up his case and contradicted himself. For in the fourth paragraph of his article he says: “I expressly declared that considerations of revenue would not weigh with me in carrying out a policy of controlling drink.” Thank God Congress Ministries have cut their way through the revenue snare by debarring themselves from the use of liquor revenue. Once the loophole is left, the temptation to make use of this immoral gain will be too irresistible, for nobody denies the difficulty of making the drunkard sober in a moment. Old Ministers, with whom I used to plead for prohibition, did not put forth the plea of impracticability. But they pleaded inability to forgo the rich revenue received from the traffic. They wanted it for education.
education paid for by a questionable source of revenue worth having? Has it intrinsic merit? Has India got her money’s worth from those who have received the education of the type that the schools and colleges of India provide?

Thieving will abide till doomsday. Must it therefore be licensed? Is thieving of the mind less criminal than thieving of matter? Illicit distillation to an extent will no doubt go on. Its quantity will be the measure of the Government’s effort assisted by a vigilant public in the shape of continuous and sympathetic treatment of the drinker and the opium-eater. Moral elevation demands a price no less than material or physical elevation. But my submission is that this constructive effort is doomed to failure if it is not preceded by total prohibition. So long as the State not only permits but provides facilities for the addict to satisfy his craving, the reformer has little chance of success. Gipsy Smith was a powerful temperance preacher. It was a feature of his huge gatherings that several people took the vow of total abstinence under the spell of his song and precept. But I say from my experience of South Africa that the majority of the poor addicts could not resist the temptation to enter the palatial bars that faced them, no matter where they wandered, in the principal thoroughfares of cities or the wayside inns when they strayed away from cities. State prohibition is not the end of this great temperance reform but it is the indispensable beginning of it.

Of local option the less said the better. Was there ever opposition to the closing of these dens of vice? Option has a place where a whole population wants to drink.

God willing, prohibition has come to stay. Whatever other contribution may or may not be made by the Congress, it will go down to history in letters of gold that the Congress pledged itself to prohibition in 1920, and redeemed the pledge at the very first opportunity without counting the cost. I doubt not that the other provinces will follow. I invite Sardar Jogendra Singh not to caution the Congress against the much-needed reform, but to throw in his full weight in favour of it in his own province and among the stalwart Sikhs.

_Harijan, 25-9-1937_
330. FOUR QUESTIONS

A correspondent asks the following four questions:

1. Hindus who once renounced their faith for some reason or other and joined Islam or Christianity sincerely repent and want to come back. Should we re-convert them or not? You may take the instance of your own son Harilal.1

2. Lakhs of the Depressed Class people in South India, as you know, have joined Christianity wholesale. Some of them, since the Travancore Durbar Declaration2 and the popularity of the Harijan movement, feel it worthwhile to re-adopt their ancestral faith. What would you advise about them?

3. A Hindu was made to join another faith for certain material considerations. After some time he feels disillusioned and comes and knocks at our door. Shall we welcome him or not?

4. Young Hindu boys and girls are often taken hold of by Christian missionaries and converted. At some places Muslims are also making use of their orphanages for this purpose. What should we do, when these boys and girls, either alone or with their guardians, approach us for shuddhi?

These, or such questions, have been asked and answered before now in these columns in some shape or other. I do not need to answer each separately. In my opinion they are not examples of real heart conversion. If a person, through fear, compulsion, starvation or for material gain or consideration, goes over to another faith, it is a misnomer to call it conversion. Most cases of mass conversion, of which we have heard so much during the past two years, have been to my mind false coin. Real conversion springs from the heart and at the prompting of God, not of a stranger. The voice of God can always be distinguished from the voice of man. The hypothetical cases coined by my correspondent are, so far as I can see, not cases of conversion. I would, therefore, unhesitatingly re-admit to the Hindu fold all such repentants without ado, certainly without any shuddhi. Shuddhi is not applicable to such cases. And, as I believe in the equality of all the great religions of the earth, I regard no man as polluted because he

---

1 Vide “Letter to P. M. Naidu”, 3-3-1936 and “Letter to Ramdas Gandhi”, 30-5-1936 also “Letter to H. L. Sharma”, 1-6-1936

2 Vide “An Example for Hindu Princes and Their Advisers”, 16-11-1936 has forsaken the branch on which he was sitting and gone over to another of the same tree. If he comes back to the original branch, he deserves to be welcomed and not told that he had committed a sin by reason of his having forsaken the family to which he belonged. In so far as he may be deemed to have erred, he has sufficiently purged himself of it when he repents of the error and retraces his step.

Harijan, 25-9-1937

331. NOTES

An Appeal

I know that there are many teachers who more or less believe in the method of primary education I have been advocating. I know, too, that some are carrying on experiments in giving such training through some vocation. There are again those who are inclined in that direction but circumstances beyond their control have taken them away from the teaching profession. Now that Congress Ministries seem to favour the plan I have outlined, it is necessary to have the names of those who would give their services to the experiment. Will such friends send me their names, qualifications, salaries they would want, and their conditions if any?

Legalized Prostitution

Dr. Muthulakshmi Reddi furnishes one more proof of the very high expectations formed of Congress Ministries. People have a right to form such expectations. Even opponents of the Congress have admitted that they are standing the test well. The Congress Ministries seem to be vying with one another in adopting ameliorative measures so as to make their administrations respond to the real Indian environment. Dr. Muthulakshmi has issued a public appeal to the Madras Ministry to pass her bill which puts a stop to the immoral custom of dedicating devadasis to a life of shame. I have not examined the bill. But the idea behind is so sound that it is a wonder that it has not yet found a place in the Statute-book of the Southern Presidency. I wholly agree with Dr. Muthulakshmi that the reform is as urgent as prohibition. She recalls the fact that the present Premier spoke out

1 A social worker of Madras
2 Literally, servants of God; women dedicated to temples
3 C. Rajagopalachari
many years ago in strong terms against the evil practice. I know that he is no less eager now that he has some power to deal with it legally. And I hope with her that before many months have passed the devadasi system will cease to have legal sanction.

USES OF “MAHURA”

A correspondent writes a long letter about mahura flowers, and desires that all restrictions on the use of mahura flowers, other than that for distillation, should be removed. As an out and out prohibitionist I have no hesitation in endorsing the proposal. The whole conception of prohibition is not penal but educative. As soon as State recognition of intoxicating drinks and drugs, and licensed shops for the sale thereof, is withdrawn, the way of education becomes clear. Penal enactments under the prohibition law will have to be of a character wholly different from those that have hitherto been in vogue. People will be trusted, therefore, if my scheme is accepted, to make the right use of mahura, and not prevented from using it altogether from fear of wrong use. Therefore, under the prohibition law, there will be no check on the right use of mahura, as there will be none on the right use of toddy. The following are some of the uses of mahura flowers, mahura oil and mahura wood, which I copy from the letter:

1. Fresh mahura flowers are sweet to eat.
2. A variety of tasteful preparations are made out of dried mahura flowers. These preparations serve as sweets to the poor people.
3. Decoction of mahura flowers is very effective in removing chronic constipation.
4. The oil from the seed called dolia is used as food. It is the poor man’s ghee.
5. Mahura flowers are regarded as tonic for both men and cattle.
6. In times of scarcity and famine, which are very frequent in Kheda, mahura flowers go a long way in saving the poor from complete starvation.
7. Dolia oil is specially favoured in the preparation of washing-soap.
8. Mahura wood is used as fuel and timber.

Harijan, 25-9-1937

1 The source has “tasteful”
332. LETTER TO SARASWATI

SEGAON,
September 25, 1937

CHI. SARASWATI,

Your letter. You are not to worry at all. Do exactly what Kanti suggests. There is no need to write to Amtul Salaam; she is here with me. She will be happy if only she knows that all is well with you two.

Come here only when you have Mamaji’s and Kanti’s consent. Till then you should devote yourself solely to your studies. Keep your mind steady.

Kanti’s letters must have now started coming in.

Your observations on the hospitals are true enough. No one is bothered about anyone else. True ahimsa is to regard those who are not related to us as our kinsmen and to serve them; this alone is [true] compassion.

I am keeping well and so is Ba.

Nimu has gone to Dehra Dun to study Hindi and English.

Lakshmi is still in Madras.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6165. Also C.W. 3438. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

333. PRIMARY EDUCATION IN BOMBAY

In discussing the question of primary education I have hither to deliberately confined myself to the villages, as it is in the villages that the bulk of India’s population resides. To tackle successfully the question of the villages is to solve the problem for the cities also. But a friend interested in the question of primary education in the city of Bombay puts the following poser:

The Congress Ministry is just now preoccupied with the question of financing primary education. The cry to make primary education self-supporting is in the air. It would, therefore, be worthwhile to examine as to how and to what extent this can be done in the case of a city like Bombay. The annual budget of the Bombay Corporation for education is said to be somewhere between 35 and 36 lakhs of rupees. But this amount would have to be

1 G. Ramachandran
2 The Gujarati original appeared in Harijanbandhu, 26-9-1937.
augmented by several lakhs of rupees before the scheme of introducing compulsory primary education in Bombay can be realized. At present over twenty lakhs of rupees are annually spent on teachers’ salaries, while another four lakhs go as rent. This gives an average of Rs. 40 to 42 for each student. Can a student earn this amount in the course of his vocational training? And if not, then, how can primary education be made self-supporting?

I have no doubt in my mind that the city of Bombay and its children would only stand to gain by adopting a vocational basis for primary education.¹ Children brought up in cities can learn poems by heart and recite them like parrots. They can dance, mimic and make gestures, beat the drum, march in a line, answer questions about History and Geography and will know a little Arithmetic; but they will not be able to go beyond this. I forget one thing. They will surely be acquainted with a little English too? But if they are asked to repair a chair or mend a torn dress they will not be able to do it. Such helpless children as our city-bred ones I have seen nowhere in my wanderings in South Africa and England. At present all that these children can show at the end of their primary education course is not worth much and certainly not calculated to fit them for citizenship.

I have no hesitation in recommending the adoption of a vocational basis for primary education for cities. It would enable the better part, if not the whole, of the 35 lakhs of the present expenditure on primary education in Bombay to be saved. Taking, for the sake of convenience, Rs. 40 to be the annual expense of giving primary education to a child in Bombay, it would mean that 87,500 children in all are at present receiving education out of the educational grant of the Bombay Corporation. Now, taking the population of Bombay to be ten lakhs, the total number of children of the school-going age ought to be at least one lakh and a half. This means that no less than 62,000 children of school-going age in the city of Bombay are at present going without primary education. If we take away 6,000 out of this figure as the number of children who are possibly receiving their education privately in their homes, it would still leave 56,000 children for whom primary education has still got to be provided. At the present scale of expenditure this would require a sum of Rs. 22,40,000 which, so far as I can see, is hardly likely to be forthcoming on this side of doomsday.

¹ The paragraph, except for the last sentence, which is from Harijan, is translated from the Gujarati in Harijanbandhu.
I am a firm believer in the principle of free and compulsory primary education for India. I also hold that we shall realize this only by teaching the children a useful vocation and utilizing it as a means for cultivating their mental, physical and spiritual faculties. Let no one consider these economic calculations in connection with education as sordid, or out of place. There is nothing essentially sordid about economic calculations. True economics never militates against the highest ethical standard just as all true ethics to be worth its name must at the same time be also good economics. An economics that inculcates mammon worship and enables the strong to amass wealth at the expense of the weak, is a false and dismal science. It spells death. True economics, on the other hand, stands for social justice, it promotes the good of all equally, including the weakest, and is indispensable for decent life. I therefore make bold to suggest that Bombay would be setting a noble example for the whole country to follow if, by teaching its children a useful industry, it can make primary education pay its way. Supposing a student works at a vocation for four hours a day, then taking the number of working days in a month to be 25 and the rate of remuneration two pice per hour, he or she would be earning Rs. 3-2-0 per month for the school. The vocational exercise will keep the mind of the student fresh and alert while providing at the same time a means for drawing out his or her intellect. This does not mean that the child would begin to pay 2 pice per hour from the commencement. But he will pay during the whole period of seven years at the rate of 2 pice per hour.

It is a gross superstition to think that this sort of vocational exercise will make education dull, or cramp the child’s mind. Some of my happiest recollections are of the bright and joyful faces of children while they were receiving vocational instruction under competent teachers. As against this, I have also known the most fascinating of subjects boring children, when taught in the wrong way by an incompetent instructor. But it may be asked where from are we going to get capable instructors of the kind that we require? My reply is that necessity is the mother of invention. Once we realize the necessity for reorientation of our educational policy, the means for giving effect to it will be found without much difficulty. I am sure that, for a fraction of the time and expense incurred on the present educational system and the staff to man it, we could easily train all the manual instructors that we should require for our work. It ought to be possible for a committee of educational experts of Bombay, if they are in earnest, to draw up a scheme of primary education on the lines suggested by me and to put it into operation without loss of time. Only they must have a living faith in it as I have. Such faith can only grow from within; it cannot be acquired vicariously. Nothing great in this world was ever accomplished without a living faith.

What kinds of vocations are the fittest for being taught to children in urban schools? There is no hard and fast rule about it. But my reply is clear. I want to resuscitate the villages of India. Today our villages have become a mere appendage to the cities. They exist, as it were, to be exploited by the latter and depend on the latter’s sufferance. This is unnatural. It is only when the cities realize the duty of making an adequate return to the villages for the strength and sustenance which they derive from them, instead of selfishly exploiting them, that a healthy and moral relationship between the two will spring up, and if the city children are to play their part in this great and noble work of social reconstruction, the vocations through which they are to receive their education ought to be directly related to the requirements of the villages. So far as I can see, the various processes of cotton manufacture from ginning and cleaning of cotton to the spinning of yarn answer this test as nothing else does. Even today cotton is grown in the villages and is ginned and spun and converted into cloth in the cities. But the chain of processes which cotton undergoes in the mills from the beginning to the end constitutes a huge tragedy of waste in men, materials and mechanical power.

My plan to impart primary education through the medium of village handicrafts like spinning and carding, etc., is thus conceived as the spearhead of a silent social revolution fraught with the most far-reaching consequence. It will provide a healthy and moral basis of relationship between the city and the village and thus go a long way towards eradicating some of the worst evils of the present social insecurity and poisoned relationship between the classes. It will check the progressive decay of our villages and lay the foundation of a juster social order in which there is no unnatural division between the ‘haves’ and have-nots’ and everybody is assured of a living wage and the right to freedom. And all this would be accomplished without the horrors of a bloody class war or a colossal capital expenditure such as would be involved in the mechanization of a vast continent like India. Nor would it entail a helpless dependence on foreign imported machinery or technical skill. Lastly, by obviating the necessity for highly specialized talent, it would place the destiny of the masses, as it were, in their own hands. But who will bell the cat? Will the city folk listen to me at all? Or, will mine remain a mere cry in the wilderness? Replies to these and similar questions will depend more on lovers of education like my correspondent living in cities than on me.

_Harijan_, 9-1-1937

334. _MY NOTES_

NEED FOR SOCIAL EFFORT

A gentleman writes:¹

It may be said that such a belief² is prevalent among almost all Hindus. One need not find out the source of it. I do not know it. In this age when men and women are supposed to have and should have equal rights they should be rated equally. Why should there be such jubilation at the birth of a son? And why should there be sorrow when a daughter is born? Both of them have an equal right to live. The world can go on only with the existence of both. But a belief which has taken deep roots from ancient times cannot be suddenly wiped out by one or more individuals writing against it. Only when knowledge that enables us to distinguish between good and bad spreads in Hindu society and when women are truly respected will the incidents mentioned by this gentleman from Kutch be averted. Today both husband and wife agree to a second marriage when the first has produced only daughters. It would not be proper to say in this case that sexual desire alone prevails; only a certain kind of sentiment holds sway. And the sentiment cannot be suddenly wished away. Considerable social effort is needed to bring about the change.

[From Gujarati]

_Harijanbandhu_, 26-9-1937

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had drawn Gandhiji’s attention to the marriage of a 55-year-old khadi worker, who had once been praised in _Harijanbandhu_, with a 20-year-old widow, ostensibly for the sake of a son.

² In the superiority of the male over the female issue
DEAR ATITKAR,

Morally and legally, in the Congress sense, there is nothing wrong in your asking for and receiving Government grants now, but I quite agree with you that it would be better if you did not.

From the views I have been recently propounding about education you will deduce that I would not multiply Universities if they are to be a burden on the Government. But I would grant a charter for the asking if the Government is called upon to create a separate examining University, for such a body is more than self-supporting from the examination fees it charges. In any event, those who seek a charter for a new University have to calculate upon the University being self-supporting. Colleges and even schools, if the latter are also taken under University wings, would naturally have to conform to the syllabus and other regulations framed by the University. Thus you will be entitled to have a charter for the Lokamanya University if you can see your way to making the University self-supporting—in other words, that is, if you think you can find sufficient students to appear for your examinations.

Under my conception there will be colleges for every conceivable art and craft, and, therefore, I would not mind any number of Universities on these terms.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. ATITKAR
TILAK MEMORIAL VIDYAPITH
POONA

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
DEAR DOCTOR GOPICHAND,

I have your letter. I am sorry for the belated reply, but you know the cause. I do not at all know whether I shall be able to tour the Punjab on my way to the North West Frontier. I rather think not, for the forward journey should be uninterrupted; there may be some possibility on return. So far as Jamnalalji is concerned, let his tour be treated on merits, invite him separately. He should be able to negotiate it after the AICC meeting. As to the Parliamentary work, regard being had to the facts mentioned by you, my inclination is to advise you to withdraw altogether.¹ But whatever you do has to be done in a detached manner. Therefore my advice is that you should put the whole case before Jawaharlal and be solely guided by him. Offer unconditional resignation. If he does not approve of it, send him the statement you would like to make, and then do as he directs. That is the only straight and constitutional course, and no other. Do not hark back upon the past mistakes. You have sufficiently urged yourself by repentance. The next step has to be considered on its own merits.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

¹ The addressee had complained about the attitude of Dr. Satyapal and other Congress leaders towards him and asked Gandhiji whether he should withdraw from Congress activity and issue a statement explaining his stand in the face of criticism of him and his work in the Congress.
BHAJ VALLABHBHAI,

I do get your letters and read them. It is a great surprise to me how you could stand the strain of five days of touring. When two devoted workers come together, it becomes hard for both. Sometimes two weak persons can easily work together. And even a strong man will have some pity for his weak companion, and the two, therefore, can work together. But you two were like two tigers neither of whom would yield to the other. Your joint tour, therefore, must have been interesting to watch. Very well. Since you have contributed your share towards the Kamala Memorial, what does it matter? The amount collected also was quite satisfactory, considering the times. Did the (Ahmedabad) mill-owners pay handsomely?

I understand what you say about the Kathiawar Parishad. Forget the Nariman episode. You have entrusted your problem to me and I have passed it on to Bahadurji. He is a hard worker. He spares time regularly every day and reads every paper and makes notes. He will take two weeks for just reading all the papers. He spares time from the pile of cases with him and reads the papers as if this also was one of his cases. Don’t mind the delay, therefore, and let things take their own course.

Don’t read the attacks in the newspapers at all. Read the accompanying letter and return it. Where did you deliver such a speech?

If the Congress session becomes expensive, according to me it will only signify our [moral] bankruptcy. I see our doom in the abundance of our resources. Such glory will be borrowed glory. It will not bring out of the volunteers’ hard labour. Please don’t read in this any reflection on you. I am only foreseeing our future. It is a pathetic picture of our condition. I have already written, five or six

---

1 The addressee and Jawaharlal Nehru had toured Gujarat together in connection with the Kamala Nehru Memorial Fund.
3 D. N. Bahadurji
4 Complaining that the addressee during a speech at Mandvi had alleged that the citizens of Bombay were supplied sewage water days ago, a letter to Ramdas expressing these views but in a different manner. Whatever happens, please don’t interpret this letter to mean that you should take no interest in that work and let it suffer. Go on with it according to your lights and as best as you can. All this I have dictated because I have sat down to dictate this letter specially to you.

Mahadev has been sent to Dhulia. . . .

I started dictating this letter in connection with the Durbar case. What I have dictated above was only by way of preface. Don’t put up a Congress town. Make it a village so that the village arts can be poured into it. But art requires talent and heart, never money. Don’t, therefore, permit anybody to spend even a pie on decoration. I think that in the confectionery shops and tea-stalls, we can permit the use of only cow’s ghee and cow’s milk. In other words, the owners should buy their stores from us or under our supervision, and to help us meet the expenditure on such supervision we should issue licences against payment of a fee. But I do believe that we should provide facilities for such shops and stalls. Only, they should abide by our rules.

And now about Durbar. We must get his village restored not for his sake but for the sake of our honour. In exchange for Dhasa he has acquired Kaira as his capital. Nobody knew the Durbar of Dhasa, but everybody knows the Durbar of Kaira. Raojibhai’s letter, therefore, has had no effect on me. On the contrary, it makes me angry. But in my old age now I must not yield to anger. And moreover he is far away. I, therefore, restrain my anger. We are likely to worry, and do worry, about Dhasa more than he is likely to do. Besides, he worries because of his friendship with Durbar. We should have had to worry about Durbar even if he had not been a friend and was only a national worker. If we did not, nobody would have cared for us in the Congress. All this, however, is mere prattle. From the information that Raojibhai has given, it seems we should start taking steps immediately. I had thought that we would start after the new Ministry has had some breathing time. I feel now that you as President of the Gujarat Congress Committee or the Secretary of the Committee should write to the Premier suggesting that for the sake of the prestige of the Congress he should take up Durbar’s case and advise the Governor to

---

1 Omission as in the source
2 Raojibhai Manibhai Patel
3 B. G. Kher recommend the return of Dhasa to him. I think the request will be granted and that I shall not have to do anything in the matter.

Blessings from

BAPU

SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL
SWARAJYA ASHRAM
BARDOLI

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 210-4

338. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 27, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL

O, Thou of little faith! Thine letters are all destroyed without being read by anybody except when there is something which I want to share with someone. This has happened but once since your deserting your corner near the tool-box.

Never mind what people say about J.¹ or your partiality for him.
We must tolerate our neighbours’ mannerisms, if we would love them as we would have them to love us. Who is there without his or her mannerisms, then let him or her throw the first stone. Are you? Do you know any? I know none including my poor or big self.

It would be a red-letter day when, though late in life, you marry khadi. When you do, you will find that all your other loves will be satisfied through khadi. Undivided love is² the meaning and secret of marriage. All else is prostitution, idolatry. Gods are many but God is one. Enough of sermonizing.

A separate note for Charlie.

I have already told S.³ he must not go to Calcutta or take up active duty before he is thoroughly fit. Even when he is, he can’t replace J. who has his unconsumable energy and single mindedness.

You will come off all right in Nagpur.

¹ Jawaharlal Nehru
² The source has “in”
³ Subhas Chandra Bose
Yes, I do think the medicine has done good and so do the doctors.

Herewith Mira’s letter of yesterday. It could not go yesterday through my stupid forgetfulness—measure of little love? Love never forgets.

Enough for the day.

Love.

ROPPER, TYRANT & CO.

From the original: C.W. 3613. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6422

339. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 27, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

Today is the day [of the week]1 for using the right hand. You are bound to miss Narottam there, as I do Chhotelal every minute. If the enthusiasm with which all of you worked on the occasion of the Rentia Baras endures, that will be a memorial to Narottam and the day will have been properly celebrated.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8539. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

340. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,
September 27, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV.

All the matter is not ready. I am sending as much as is ready. It has been revised.

I could not send back Janba earlier than now. Mirabehn has done the revision quite carefully. Send over to Chandrashanker [whatever you can] and postpone for tomorrow the matter for [Harijan] Sevak and [Harijan]bandhu. In that case you will have a copy for revision and the post will be dispatched in time. However, do what you think convenient. A letter\(^1\) I have written to Gurudev and two copies of it are enclosed.

1 Vide “Letter to Kantilal Gandhi”, 29-9-1937

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11572

---

341. LETTER TO G. V. GURJALE

SEGAON, WARDHA,

September 28, 1937

MY DEAR GURJALE,

I had better not address you by your titular name. It does not yet come to me naturally. I think that you have made a sweeping statement about tea. Are you able to prove the economic ruin of thousands of families? I know something of the evils of the tea and coffee habit. I have written also against it. But I am not able to endorse your condemnation. There can be no comparison between alcohol and tea and coffee. The latter will damage health when indulged into excess. But alcohol cannot be taken in measured quantities, except medicinally. And it ruins body, mind and soul. I would advise you, therefore, to throw yourself heart and soul into the weaning of the addict from his drinks and drugs, and not to raise other issues, however important they may be on their own merits.

Do the letter-head and the adoption of the sannyasi name show that you are now at peace with yourself, flourishing and in possession of the Truth to your satisfaction?

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

SWAMI NIRMALANANDA BHIKSHU
GANDHI MISSION SOCIETY
KRIPA ASHRAM, GANDHI KUPPAM
TIRUVENNAINALLUR P. O., S. INDIA\(^2\)

From a photostat: G.N. 1401. Also Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Rabindranath Tagore”, 23-9-1937

\(^2\) The address is from the Pyarelal Papers copy.
BHAJI SUBEDAR,

I shall not tire of your letters. But please do not be displeased if I do not publish your notes. I preserve some of the notes for myself, but I can place before the public only what appeals to me. Do you agree?

Koyaji’s article¹ is not likely to sway me, for, I take an altogether different stand in these two matters. With regard to prohibition and the creation of alternative sources of revenue to make up for the excise that will be lost, I would recommend that you make a close study of the Bill presented in Madras. If you have any suggestions to make with regard to the Bill, you can write to me. I shall send your suggestions on to Rajaji. I do not think anyone else has given as much thought to the problem of drinking from this point of view as we two have done. If there are any such persons I do not know of them.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

¹ Extracts from J. C. Koyaji’s article appeared in Harijan, 2-10-1937, along with comments by Mahadev Desai under the title “An Economist and His Figures”.
343. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

SEGON,
September 28, 1937

CHI. MATHURADAS,

If we think of the Congress policy in regard to franchise, all men and women aged 21 or 18 years should have a right to vote. But I see no harm if for some reason we have to adopt a middle course. I do not see any particular justice or merit in granting voting right only to the literate persons. But as I pen this reply it occurs to me that I should discuss this issue in Harijanbandhu, so that you may have a detailed reply and I may not have to deal with the same thing twice. I do feel strongly in matters like these. My views are based on experience. So it will be as well if, through you, I can let the public know. Hence only this much on the question. You will have read in H. B. my reply to your letter about education. Let me know if you have any comments.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

344. A LETTER

September 28, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

You had a right to offer criticism in the matter of the Gujarat Vidyapith. Moreover, I like criticism. I accept the three points you have made. But I would not agree with you in believing that the Vidyapith has failed. The Gujarat Vidyapith and other national institutions have contributed to the struggle which other universities have not done. That was not merely because these universities belonged to the Government but because the students and teachers of these universities had a different mental attitude. Nevertheless, had the things mentioned by you not been present, the national universities

1 For Gandhiji’s article on the subject, vide “Illiterates v. Literates would have contributed much more. But we shall think about it when we meet. These things are closely related to the subject under discussion. What I am stating now cannot be stated in the same manner at a meeting of the University.
2 ibid

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

345. LETTER TO LAKSHMIDAS

September 29, 1937

BHAI LAKSHMIDAS,

I have your letter. I like your frankness. It is good that you wrote to Vallabhbhai. You should write to him. Were you present during the speech?

It is very good indeed that you are corresponding with Kishorelalbhai.

The thing compared cannot be identical in every respect with the thing to which it is compared. When the preceptor, etc., are likened to the father it does not mean that they are in every respect similar to the father. Kishorelalbhai could only mean that if the Sardar is like a father to the Gujaratis, they should regard him as such wherever they may be. It is a different question whether he has, in reality, the requisite qualities to be regarded as such.

What I have written implies only this: that we must weigh every word we may utter or write.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

346. LETTER TO YUSUF MEHERALY

September 29, 1937

BHAI MEHERALY,

It is only right that the Shop Assistants’ Conference should be founded by Seth Jamnalalji who has turned many a shop-assistant into masters of firms. There is no doubt that they have to work long hours. All they should remember is that they would not attain their objectives by following the war-path but by remaining calm, truthful and firm.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
347. LETTER TO SHANKARLAL

September 29, 1937

Bhai Shankarlal,

Your letter contains a question to which you expect an answer from me. You ask me how it is possible in practice to be tolerant and continue to bear with faults even when they are quite evident. You have yourself said and written that you are able to see countless faults in yourself every day. And yet, how very tolerant you are to yourself! I see countless faults in me every day and yet there is no limit to my tolerance of myself. If I am not tolerant of myself in spite of seeing my faults, I would have to fast every day and think of all sorts of expiations and finally go the way of Chhotelal!

But I do none of these things. I believe that my tolerance is not misplaced. That is why I learnt to be tolerant of others in spite of seeing their faults. But I have not yet attained the ideal state because I must be at least as tolerant of others as I am of myself if not more. I have not been able to be so. However, I find that I want to proceed in that direction and I know I am doing it. But even as I proceed I regard faults as faults indeed. With these two things my own strength grows as it should indeed. I had my first lesson in this training from my parents. They were tolerant of me even when they saw my faults. I used to worship my parents. But it cannot be said that I could not see their faults. I was quite tolerant of them because of my devotion to them. The same attitude then continued towards my brothers and other relatives. My family continued to grow. But the attitude remained unchanged. So there is always a certain measure of tolerance in me.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

---

1 Chhotelal Jain, who had committed suicide; vide “A Silent Co-worker Gone”, “A Silent Co-Worker Gone”, 1-9-1937
348. LETTER TO BHAGWANDAS

September 29, 1937

BHAI BHAGWANDAS,

. . I also dislike an unmarried girl marrying a widower. But after a good deal of experience I have come to feel that in the matter of marriage boys and girls will behave in strange ways. Under such circumstances all the zeal of the reformer is rendered futile. A non-violent reformer has no power other than of his own intellect and the strength of his own hands.

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

349. LETTER TO GOPINATH

September 29, 1937

BHAI GOPINATH,

What you write about the law-suit is correct. Filing a suit even over a small amount involves considerable expense. But today there is no provision under which one could be governed only by the rule of the panchayat. Under such circumstances the golden rule is that we should neither lend nor borrow. If you do lend it must be with the idea that you are not going to get your money back. You just have to do it. And if you have to do such a thing you should be clear in your mind that it is charity. It should be remembered that out of the millions those who are required to go to the court are very few. If we can be out of [debt]\(^2\) and mingle with the masses like drops in the ocean, we would not have to bother with law courts.

Now for the profession of vaidyas. In the ancient times vaidyas gave the benefit of their knowledge without charging fees. They did not charge even for the medicines. And generally the medicines too used to be quite inexpensive. The Rajavaidyas and such others used to make their own patent medicines and put up a great show. Today only people of the latter category are left.

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

\(^1\) Omission as in the source

\(^2\) Illegible in the source
350. LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI

SEGAOI, WARDHA,
September 29, 1937

CHI. KANTI,

Have you boycotted me? I wait for your letter every day, but get none. I have carried out all your wishes. What more do you want now? I don’t approve of your silence.

I had meant to write to Nanjappa at the same time that I wrote to you. But I couldn’t do so owing to pressure of work. I don’t write with my right hand on any day except Mondays, and on Mondays the work of Harijan leaves no time for any other work.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati C.W. 7331 Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

351. LETTER TO SYED BASHIR AHMED

[Before September 30, 1937]

I cannot subscribe to your sweeping opinion that a Mussalman who joins the Congress betrays Muslim interests. On the contrary, I hold that Mussalmans who desire complete independence for India cannot do better than join the Congress in its uphill fight for independence. It is an organization that is open to all who care to join it. Do you not see that Mussalmans, if they join it in their thousands, can shape the whole policy of the Congress? There is no proportional representation there. It is a wholly democratic organization without any communal barriers.

Not being in the Congress, I cannot hold myself responsible for everything that the Congress and Congressmen do. But being a firm believer in the Congress objective, I had no hesitation in advising the

1 The addressee, editor of Isha’at-e-Taleem, had enquired: “Would you not agree with me that you want to realize truth by following the right path based on honesty, straightforwardness and ethical soundness? The Congress offers Ministries to Muslims who have been elected on the Muslim League ticket, provided they sign the Congress pledge. Do you want the Muslim members who have sworn their loyalty to the League before their election by God and the Holy Koran to break their sacred oaths?”

2 This and the following item appeared under the date-line “Talegaon, September 30”
Congress to adopt the office-acceptance programme. On questions relating to Mussalmans, the Congress is solely guided by Maulana Abul Kalam Azad. I have no notion of the obligation undertaken by the members of the Muslim League, but I doubt not that the Maulana Saheb has taken every care not to allow the Congress to become a party to a violation of any moral principle by any Muslim.

Generally speaking, I see nothing wrong in a member of a political party transferring his allegiance from one party to another. I do not see what objection you can have to the Congress trying to have within its fold all the Muslims it can have by every honourable means. It seems to me that the Congress will forfeit its title to be called an all-India organization if it does not endeavour to represent Mussalmans and other sections as well as Hindus. That has from the very beginning been the traditional policy and strength of the Congress. I, therefore, fail to see where the slightest departure from truth takes place in the Congress accepting those Mussalmans who favour complete independence for India and who appreciate the means adopted by the Congress as for instance, communal unity, Khadi, prohibition, removal of untouchability and other things recited in the Congress election manifesto

The Congress, 2-10-1937

352. LETTER TO SYED BASHIR AHMED

[Before September 30, 1937]

It amazes me that you fail to see the great merit of the Congress having given dictatorial powers to a single Mussalman in the important matter of choosing Muslim Ministers. Of course, the Maulana can err, but it is irrelevant. But what is great and relevant is the fact that a Mussalman divine has been given powers, which the Congress has not given to any single person.

The Hindu, 2-10-1937

---

1 The draft of which was approved by the A. I. C. C. at its meeting in Bombay on August 22 and 23, 1936; vide "Extracts From the Congress Election Manifesto", 22-8-1936

2 Abul Kalam Azad; vide the preceding item.
353. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
September 30, 1937

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have already replied to your letter about the question of franchise. Remit Rs. 3,600 to the Gandhi Seva Sangh. Kishorelal\(^1\) will then consider the matter in consultation with me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

354. VIEWS ON CONGRESS IN NORTH WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE

[After September 1937]\(^1\)

The C. however understand that the object of the amendment is to secure uniformity of policy and practice among Congressmen in the Province and strict confirmation to discipline. This object can be easily obtained by the P.C.C. passing a by-law whereby any member who commits a breach of the fundamental policy of the Congress or of the observances enjoined by the constitution or any by-laws would be deprived of the right of voting. The P.C.C. may also pass a by-law preventing the formation of any organization by Congressmen except with its consent in writing previously obtained at Congress meetings. The Committee recognize the special difficulties of the Congress in the Frontier Province. Great latitude that is enjoyed by Congressmen in politically advanced provinces is not to be expected in the Frontier Province. Khan A. G. Khan\(^2\) is the acknowledged leader without a rival in the Province. He experiences difficulties in working the Congress in the Province. He is a silent worker. The C. expect Congressmen in the province to help him in the difficult task in front of him.

The organism of Khudai Khidmatgars is Khan Seheb’s own

\(^1\) Kishorelal Mashruwala
\(^2\) Congress Ministry in N.W.F.P. was formed on September 6, 1937. Gandhiji subsequently visited the N. W.F.P. in 1938.
\(^3\) Abdul Ghaffar Khan creation. It is in the nature of a non-violent army of volunteers. Khan Saheb has very appropriately called it Servants of God because his conception of Independent India is an India dedicated to the service of humanity. Though K. has generously placed at the disposal of the Congress the services of this great organization, if it is to retain its efficiency, it must remain under Khan Saheb as Supreme Commander and subject to his sole discipline. It is also necessary that there should be no other organization of volunteers formed by the F. Province Congress Committee.

From a copy: Gandhi-Nehru Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

355. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SEG AON, WARDHA,

October 1, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

So far as I am concerned Pattabhi is a good choice. But I suppose you will have the sense of the members of the Committee.

I don’t know whether you will find time to attend the Educational Conference that is being held in Wardha, for which the invitation has gone to you. If you can, I would like you to come, but I do not want you to make time for the Conference if more important work requires your presence elsewhere. Undoubtedly it will be a strain for two days, but your presence will be a solace to me if you can come.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

You will find herewith the result of my correspondence with Syed Habib, in the shape of a cheque and letter. I simply rebuked him for getting money from here, there or anywhere, without mentioning the conversation I had with you.

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 Pattabhi Sitaramayya’s name was being considered for Congress Presidentship.
2 On October 22 and 23
356. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
October 1, 1937

No time to write except to send you love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3616. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6425

357. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 1, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I have your letter. You shouldn’t have stopped taking milk. To observe mourning one may give up eating delicacies, but one must eat whatever is essential. If one who has taken the vow of aswada is observing it properly, he would be eating nothing to please the palate and, therefore, would have no need to give up anything. Moreover, if birth and death are the same thing, and indeed they are, why mourn the death of the dear ones? Or why rejoice at their birth? Please, therefore, start taking milk immediately you get this letter. If you wish, you can make use of this letter. Moreover, our duty to the departed consists in taking up and carrying on their work, and that all of you are doing to the best of your abilities. The burden cannot be borne by you alone, even if you wished. And if you give up milk and become weak, your capacity for work will diminish, and one may say that you will to that extent be less able to carry your share of the burden. Reason with yourself thus and resume taking milk and fruit.

Come here when you can stir out. And let it not be so late that I may not be here when you come. Never mind, however, if your coming is delayed by work. We shall meet if and when God wills.

I am not as weak as you suppose. I am able, more or less, to attend to all my usual work. I can eat sufficiently well, too. I do less physical work. We are having two fairly serious patients here these days. There are other minor illnesses, too, from time to time.

---

1 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
2 The addressee’s father-in-law Harsu Dayal had died in July, 1937.
3 Control of the palate
Parnerkar and Chimanlal are in bed. Parnerkar is better and will leave bed in a few days. But Chimanlal’s ship is in mid-sea. He has typhoid. Today is the fourteenth day. The temperature has still not come to normal. That means it will last for 21 days at least. He is being looked after chiefly by Sharda and Bhansalibhai.

One cannot yet say that Ba’s leg is completely healed. Lilavati keeps indifferent health. She will most probably be operated upon tomorrow for tonsils.

Amtul Salaam is, as you know, a permanent patient.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3506

358. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 1, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

Chimanlal is critically ill. Today is the fourteenth day after the attack of typhoid. The temperature has still not come to normal. This means that it will take at least another seven days. He has become extremely weak. But as a patient he preserves wonderful calm. Nobody is put to any trouble, nor is there any fuss. He has had inflamed piles for three days and there is much bleeding. But he suffers everything calmly and shows no impatience. Please inform Shakaribehn\(^1\). I asked him whether he desired her presence. He doesn’t want her to be sent for. She is not needed for nursing either. He is being nursed by Bhansalibhai and Sharda.

Is it true that Shakaribehn will have to leave the Ashram after a month or two for want of accommodation? Is she getting any help?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9111

----

\(^1\) Wife of Chimanlal Shah
359. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

CHI. NARANDAS,

Your programme seems to have succeeded well enough. You got more money, too, than expected and got yarn as well.

I suppose the cotton for the slivers consumed in the spinning done in the school must have been supplied by the school itself. If we calculate the value of the yarn after deducting the cost of the cotton, what would be your estimate of the net gain? If you can supply the figures relating to the number of days and hours of work of each of the notable personalities mentioned by you, please let me have them.

What was the approximate attendance at Rameshwaridevi’s meeting? What impression did you form of her? Did you come into fairly close contact with her?

Of the sum of Rs. 15,000, did you get anything from outside or did you collect the entire sum in Kathiawar? You may certainly reserve Rs. 10,000 for ‘Harijan’ and spend the rest in khadi work.

How old is Vithal who was among those who joined in spinning? Who was the youngest amongst them? Did anyone use the takli for spinning?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8541. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 From the reference to the programme for Rentia Baras which fell on October 1 vide also “Letter to Narandas Gandhi” 27-9-1937
2 The National School, Rajkot under the addressee’s charge, had a special programme for the Rentia Baras celebrations. They devoted a few hours daily, for 68 days, to spinning and produced 28,34,000 yards of yarn, and collected funds for khadi work.
360. A LETTER

[Before October 2, 1937]

I shall try to make something out of the many handicrafts you have suggested. You are so resourceful that you can even shoulder the new undertaking. But a few things are essential before you can do so. You will have to forget your tomes, and start making use of your hands and feet. For this you must set apart part of your busy hours. Take up cotton and takli-spinning and approach them intellectually. I send you Gregg’s and the late Maganlal Gandhi’s book on the subject. Sjt. Gulzarilal Nanda would gladly initiate you into it. But more important than this is for you to launch out into one of the villages in the neighbourhood of the city, study how some of the poor handicraftsmen, basket-makers, rope-makers, etc., make their living. Even their crude handiwork will reveal some art; But with your intelligent perception you will be able to find out that there is much scope for improvement in the method of their work, and you will see how these ignorant folks have gone along the beaten track for years without anyone to show them improved ways. You will also realize that their ignorance is the result of our middle-class ancestors and of you and I having neglected these poor folks, and you will perhaps shed a genuine tear. You will then see what I mean by education through handicrafts. It is likely that the whole thing may have a different reaction on you, and you may want to preserve the status quo. Or perhaps you would reject both the existing and the proposed scheme of things and discover a third thing altogether. That, you may be sure, will not pain me. For my sole purpose is to seek truth by thought, word and deed. That is the thing I am mad about, the thing for which I am living and for which I am hoping to die. That is why I challenge friends like you and invite them to challenge me. If they convince me of the error of my ways, I shall not hesitate to confess my folly.

Harijan, 2-10-1937

1 Translated by Mahadev Desai this appeared under the title “An Open Mind”. Prefacing it he wrote: “An economist friend has been, at Gandhiji’s request, sending him a number of notes on education and prohibition. He approaches the question from the purely economic point of view which would seem to make the educational point of view secondary and not primary as Gandhiji wants it to be.”

2 Richard B. Gregg’s Economics of Khaddar

3 Charkha Shastra
361. LEST WE FORGET

A Harijan sevak reminds me that nowadays Harijans, for whom this weekly was started, have receded into the background and its columns are devoted to all sorts of subjects. He is half right. I have begun to discuss questions which have been hitherto deliberately excluded. The reason for exclusion no longer exists. The contrary is the case now. In the greater part of India the Congress is both in office and power. It is true that the power is limited. But it is limited in terms of Complete Independence, not otherwise. India is one vast prison with high walls of suppression choking her mind and body. But its Superintendent has seen fit to give a large part of the prisoners the power to appoint from among themselves the governing officials with full powers of administration, at any rate enough for growing strong, so long as they recognize that they are still prisoners. Well, they have chosen to take advantage of this freedom in the hope that by never requiring the assistance of his admitted physical superiority they will convince the Superintendent that he is no longer wanted.

Anyway, that being my interpretation of the Government of India Act and the office-acceptance, I must strive to show to the co-workers, who have become Ministers, how in my opinion they can achieve the end. And if I succeed in so doing, the battle against untouchability is almost won.

But I need hardly say that removal of untouchability from the Hindu heart is, like communal unity, an indispensable condition of success through the non-violent action that is implicit in office-acceptance. Therefore Harijan sevaks have to redouble their efforts to touch the caste Hindu heart as well as the Harijan heart. We must constantly remind Hindu orthodoxy of the solemn oath taken at the all-India meeting held in Bombay on the 25th September, 1932, under the presidency of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya. Here is the oath:

This Conference resolves that henceforth, amongst Hindus, no one shall be regarded as untouchable by reason of his birth, and that those who have been so regarded hitherto shall have the same right as other Hindus in regard to the use of public wells, public schools, public roads and all other public institutions. This right shall have statutory recognition at the first opportunity, and shall be one of the earliest acts of the Swaraj Parliament, if it shall not have received such recognition before that time.

1 Vide “Telegram to Dr. Nilaranjan Ray and Dr. B. C. Roy”, 25-9-1932
It is further agreed that it shall be the duty of all Hindu leaders to secure, by every legitimate and peaceful means, an early removal of all social disabilities now imposed by custom upon the so-called untouchable classes, including the bar in respect of admission to temples.

Harijan, 2-10-1937

362. STUDENTS AND STRIKES

A college student of Bangalore writes:

I have read your article\(^1\) in Harijan and I request you to let me know your opinion on students taking part in strikes like Andamans Day, Abattoir Day\(^2\), etc.

Whilst I have pleaded for the removal of restrictions on the speech and movements of students, I am not able to support political strikes or demonstrations. Students should have the greatest freedom of expression and of opinion. They may openly sympathize with any political party they like. But in my opinion they may not have freedom of action whilst they are studying. A student cannot be an active politician and pursue his studies at the same time. It is difficult to draw hard and fast lines at the time of big national upheavals. Then they do not strike or, if the word ‘strike’ can be used in such circumstances, it is a wholesale strike; it is a suspension of studies. Thus what may appear to be an exception is not one in reality.

As a matter of fact the question such as the correspondent has raised should not arise in the Congress Provinces. For there can be no curb which the best mind of the students will not willingly accept. The majority of them are, must be, Congress-minded. They may not do anything that would embarrass the Ministries. If they struck, they would do so because the Ministers wanted them to. But I cannot conceive of Congress Ministers wanting them to strike except when the Congress is no longer in office, and when the Congress declares, maybe, a non-violent active war against the Government of the day. And even then, I should think that to invite students in the first instance to suspend their studies for strikes would be tantamount to a declaration of bankruptcy. If the people in general are with the Congress for any demonstration in the nature of strikes, students will be left alone except as a last resort. During the last war the students were not the first to be called out but they were the last, so far as I recollect, and then only college students.

\(^1\) Vide “For Ministers of Education”

\(^2\) Vide “Telegram to Deshbandhu Gupta”, 8-9-1937

I would like the correspondent to read or re-read my note on a schoolmaster’s letter in the Harijan of 18th September. He will find therein my position regarding the political liberty of students and schoolmasters.

But another correspondent writes in connection with it:

> If we allow paid State officials, teachers and others to participate in politics, it would become a hell. No Government could be carried on if their policies are subjected to debates among Government or other State officials who have to carry them out. Your desire that national hopes, desires and ideas of patriotism should have free play is of course proper. But I fear your article is likely to be misunderstood unless you make your position quite clear.

I had thought that my position was quite clear. Where there is a national Government there is rarely any friction between it and its officials or the students. My note guards itself against all indiscipline. What the schoolmaster resents, and rightly, is espionage and suppression of free thought which has been the rule of the day hitherto. Congress Ministers themselves are of the people and from the people. They have no secrets. They are expected to be in personal touch with every public activity including the student mind. They have at their disposal the whole of the Congress machinery which, as the interpreter of the popular will, is surely more than the law, the police and the military. Those who have not that machinery to back them are spent bullets. For those Ministers who have the Congress at their back, the law, the police and the military may be said to be a useless appendage. And the Congress is nothing if it is not an embodiment of discipline. Therefore with the Congress in power there should be voluntary; not forced, discipline everywhere.

Harijan, 2-10-193
363. DOING, NOT IDLE THINKING

Dr. G. S. Arundale sends me an advance copy of an article he has written for the Orient Illustrated Weekly with the following covering letter:

You have expressed a wish that education should now begin to be real in this country and not artificial as it has been for so many years. As one who has been active in education in India for more than thirty years, I send you an article which is appearing in the Orient Illustrated Weekly. Maybe it represents in some degree your own views. I do feel that there should be a national scheme of education which every National Minister will do his best to express in his particular Province. There has been a good deal of independent tinkering. I feel it is urgent that the note of the great principles should be sounded without delay so that there may be a common bond and a common effort in which public and Government alike shall join.

I take from the article the most important and relevant extracts. After dealing with the question of how to proceed, he says:

I have no space here to suggest the nature of the principles which should underlie national education. But at least so far as both boys and girls are concerned in the school sphere—I hope we shall gradually eliminate the absurd distinctions of ‘school’ and ‘college’—the note throughout must be that of Doing.

However much thought may be stimulated, it is valueless save as it mellows into Doing. The same may be said as regards the emotions and feelings, so dangerously neglected in most modern systems of education. India needs her youth to be workers—workers whose character is such—developed through education—that it naturally becomes translated into work, into practical capacity, into service. India needs young citizens who can do well in whatever department of life to which they may be called by environment and by heredity. Every subject of the curriculum is to the end of right living. Every subject discloses the Law, the Order and the Purpose of Life. Teachers must never forget this as they tend to grow submerged in the hardness of so-called facts. They should remember that in the world of our intelligence there are no facts, but only conventions. It was well said by Sir Arthur Eddington¹ that science has taken the great step forward of moving from certainty to doubt. Our education must, therefore, cause all its ‘facts’ to rest lightly in the minds of its pupils, and use them beyond all else for the development of that character which is the only safe foundation both for individuals and for nations.

¹ Sir Arthur Stanley Eddington, a British astronomer

And once character stirs, the desire to do will intensify, in the directions both of self-support and of self-sacrifice. There will arise the desire to draw as close as possible to the Earth our Mother, to worship her in the ritual of agriculture, and to become as little as may be of a burden to her by simplicity of need and purity of desire. Indeed, I hold that no child of Mother Earth should be unable to draw from her some direct sustenance, and I would have as part of all education some measure of direct contact with her, even in town educational institutions.

We must tear ourselves radically away from those educational conventions which have made education so largely futile today. We must begin, under the existing favourable auspices of the national ministries, a system of real education which is not instruction. We have become imprisoned in the ruts and grooves of out-of-date educational forms and fetishes, and I heartily welcome Gandhiji’s adumbration of an education which is self supporting. I am not quite sure if we shall be able to go quite as far as he suggests. I entirely agree that a young citizen after finishing a seven years’ course “should be discharged as an earning unit”. I myself feel that everyone should, partly through education, become conscious of his creative capacity, for he is a god in the becoming and therefore possesses the supreme attribute of God—the power to create, to do. If this power be not awakened, of what use education? Then indeed is it instruction and not education.

There is as much brain in the hand as there is in the head. For long the intellect in the head has been our God. Intellect has been our tyrant, our dictator. Under the new dispensation it must be one among our many servants, and we must learn to exalt all that makes for simple living, that draws us near to the beautiful simplicities of nature, all that helps me to live with my hands—manual work of all kinds, of the artist, of the artisan, of the agriculturist.

I know I should have lived a happier and more effective life had I so been educated.

What I have been saying as a layman, for the lay reader, Dr. Arundale has said as an educationist, for the educationist, and those who have in their charge the moulding of the youth of the country. I am not surprised at the caution with which he approaches the idea of self-supporting education. For me it is the crux. My one regret is that what I have seen through the glass darkly for the past 40 years I have begun to see no quite clearly under the stress of circumstances.

Having spoken strongly in 1920 against the present system of education, and having now got the opportunity of influencing, however little it may be, Ministers in seven Provinces, who have been fellow-workers and fellow-sufferers in the glorious struggle for freedom of the country, I have felt an irresistible call to make good the charge that the present mode of education is radically wrong from bottom to top. And what I have been struggling to express in these columns very inadequately has come upon me like a flash, and the truth of it is daily growing upon me. I do, therefore, venture to ask the educationists of the country, who have no axes to grind, and who have an open mind, to study the two propositions that I have laid down, without allowing their preconceived and settled notions about the existing mode of education to interfere with the free flow of their reason. I would urge them not to allow my utter ignorance of education, in its technical and orthodox sense, to prejudice them against what I have been saying and writing. Wisdom, it is said, often comes from the mouths of babes and sucklings. It may be a poetic exaggeration, but there is no doubt that sometimes it does come through babes. Experts polish it and give it a scientific shape. I therefore ask for an examination of my propositions purely on merits. Let me restate them here, not as I have previously laid them down in these columns, but in the language that occurs to me as I am dictating these lines:

1. Primary education, extending over a period of 7 years or longer, and covering all the subjects up to the matriculation standard, except English, plus a vocation used as the vehicle for drawing out the minds of boys and girls in all departments of knowledge, should take the place of what passes today under the name of Primary, Middle and High School Education.

2. Such education, taken as a whole, can, and must be, self-supporting; in fact self-support is the acid test of its reality.

_Harijan_, 2-10-1937
The Marwari High School, recently renamed Navabharat Vidya-laya, is celebrating its Silver Jubilee. The management conceived the idea of calling on the occasion a small conference of nationally-minded educationists to discuss the plan of education I have been endeavouring to propound in these columns. The Secretary, Shri Shrimannarayan Agrawal, consulted me as to the desirability of converting such a conference, and asked me to preside if I approved of the idea. I liked both the suggestions. So the conference will be held at Wardha on October 22nd and 23rd. Only those will attend who are invited thereto. If there are any educationists who would like to attend and who have not received invitations, they may apply to the Secretary, giving their names and addresses, and such particulars as would enable the management to decide whether they can afford to issue the invitation. Provision is being made only for a limited number who are deeply interested in the problem and can make a useful contribution to the discussion. The conference is not intended to be at all spectacular. There will be no visitors. It will be a purely business meeting. A limited number of Press tickets will be issued. I advise Pressmen to elect one or two representatives and share the reporting.

I approach the task in confidence but in all humility, with an open mind, and with the will to learn and to revise and correct my views, whenever necessary. The propositions I shall submit to the conference for consideration will be, so far as they occur to me at present, as follows:

1. The present system of education does not meet the requirements of the country in any shape or form. English, having been made the medium of instruction in all the higher branches of learning, has created a permanent bar between the highly educated few and the uneducated many. It has prevented knowledge from percolating to the masses. This excessive importance given to English has cast upon the educated class a burden which has maimed them mentally for life and made them strangers in their own land. Absence of vocational training has made the educated class almost unfit for productive work and harmed them physically. Money spent on primary education is a waste of expenditure inasmuch as what little is taught is soon forgotten and has little or no value in terms of the villages or cities. Such advantage as is gained by the existing system of education is not gained by the chief taxpayer, his children getting the least.

2. The course of primary education should be extended at least to seven years and should include the general knowledge gained up to the matriculation standard less English and plus a substantial vocation.

3. For the all-round development of boys and girls all training should so far as possible be given through a profit-yielding vocation. In other words vocations should serve a double purpose—to enable the pupil to pay for his tuition through the products of his labour and at the same time to develop the whole man or woman in him or her through the vocation learnt at school. Land, buildings and equipment are not intended to be covered by the proceeds of the pupil’s labour. All the processes of cotton, wool and silk, commencing from gathering, cleaning, ginning (in the case of cotton), carding, spinning, dyeing, sizing, warp-making, double-twisting, designing and weaving, embroidery, tailoring, paper-making, cutting, bookbinding, cabinet-making, toy-making, gur-making are undoubtedly occupations that can easily be learnt and handled without much capital outlay. This primary education should equip boys and girls to earn their bread, by the State guaranteeing employment in the vocations learnt or by buying their manufactures at prices fixed by the State.

4. Higher education should be left to private enterprise and for meeting national requirements whether in the various industries, technical arts, belles-lettres or fine arts. The State Universities should be purely examining bodies, self-supporting through the fees charged for examinations. Universities will look after the whole of the field of education and will prepare and approve courses of studies in the various departments of education. No private school should be run without the previous sanction of the respective Universities. University charters should be given liberally to any body of persons of proved worth and integrity, it being always understood that the Universities will not cost the State anything except that it will bear the cost of running a Central Education Department. The foregoing scheme does not absolve the State from running such seminaries as may be required for supplying State needs.

It is claimed that if the whole scheme is accepted, it will solve the question of the greatest concern to the State—training of its youth, its future makers.

_Harijan_, 2-10-1937
365. NOTES

PRAISE FROM THE HIGHEST

Thus runs an A. P. message\(^1\) from Calicut:

In a statement issued today His Holiness Azhvancheri Thampurakkal, who is considered as the highest of the Brahmins in Kerala, says: “The Temple-entry Proclamation issued by His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore has resuscitated Hinduism, without in the least deviating from its essential ideals.” His Holiness considers that the Proclamation will shine resplendent through the ages as the most perfect doctrine of varnashrama dharma.

His Holiness also points out that the Proclamation has rooted out the evils of untouchability, disharmony and inequality among the Hindus, and as such His Holiness welcomes all the principles laid down in the Proclamation. His Holiness is of opinion that it in no way contravenes the Vedic injunctions or Shastric ordinances.

His Holiness Azhvancheri Thampurakkal is the last resort of appeal in caste matters, according to the history of Kerala written by the historian Padmanabha Menon. . . .

I tender my congratulations to His Holiness on his courageously ranging himself on the side of truth and progress. It is to be hoped that if he is “the last resort of appeal in caste matters” his opinion will be respected and adopted by orthodoxy at least in Kerala if not elsewhere.

HARIJAN SERVICE IN SIMLA

There has been in Simla for the past five years the Valmiki (Harijan) Young Men’s Association. Its Honorary Director is Pt. C. V. Viswanathan. Its Honorary Secretary is Lala B. Lachman Singh Sabhotra, himself a Valmiki Harijan. It runs during summer a free night-school open to all communities. Of its twenty-one students, eight are caste Hindus. The school has three Harijan teachers teaching all castes. It has also two caste Hindu and Sikh teachers. The Headmaster is a Harijan. The Association gives free medical relief through honorary physicians. There is also a mutual aid fund. Loans are granted at one pice per rupee interest. This means 18 per cent. I regard this as exorbitant. It should be no more than 6 per cent or at

\(^1\) Only excerpts from which are reproduced here

\(^2\) Vide “An Example for Hindu Princes and Their Advisers”, 16-11-1936 and Appendix.
the most 8 per cent. That would no doubt mean stricter scrutiny in the giving of loans. This would be all to the good. The course of every rupee given should be traced. The Association also supports a reading-room and sometimes poor stranded Harijans are permitted a shakedown of nights on its premises. I wish the Association every success.

FOR ORISSA FLOOD RELIEF

I am glad to be able to say that Sjts. A. B. Pandit and Co.’s cheque for Rs. 500 and Sjt. Manilal Bulakhidas’s cheque for Rs. 100 constitute the first and prompt response to my appeal1 for Orissa Flood Relief. The cheques have been forwarded directly to the Minister Shri Kanungo, at Cuttack.

_Harijan_, 2-10-1937

366. LETTER TO AVANTIKA BAI GOKHALE AND GAURIBAI KHADILKAR2

[About October 2, 1930]3

Your deep affection is a familiar phenomenon. But the affection of countless others whom I have never known keeps me from swerving from the path of duty.

_Harijan_, 9-10-1937

---

1 Vide “Havoc in Orissa”
2 Reproduced from Mahadev Desai “Notes”. The addressees used to send Gandhiji dhotis of self-spun yarn on his birthday every year.
3 _ibid_
A gentleman writes from Bombay:

The present Government has urged the Corporation to widen its franchise. Today it is limited to the adults who pay not less than Rs. 5 rent. It has been recommended that it should be extended to all literates. The question now is what effect this will have on the proposal to have adult franchise for election to the Constituent Assembly. If the Congress members now rest content with literacy franchise, would it not be a violation of the Congress principle? There are some like me who think it expedient for the present to accept the literacy franchise. What is our duty in the circumstances?

In so far as this question is directly related to Congress discipline, I have no right to express an opinion on the subject. My interpretation as a journalist I would not consider more authoritative than the interpretation of the questioner. The opinion of the Congress President would be sufficient and should be binding in this matter. But, let me, as one with long experience, give my opinion too for the sake of the questioner and others like him. Anyone who thinks that he lacks the capacity or the time to take all the steps suggested by the Congress, should, I hold, take without hesitation whatever steps he can in the direction laid down by the Congress. It is his duty to do this and there is no question of any breach of discipline.

Considering the merits of the proposal, I feel that while extending the franchise, it is not at all proper to confine it to literates. It is possible that an educated young man of 21 may not at all be fit to exercise his franchise, whereas, an illiterate man of 50, experienced and sensible, may realize the value of his vote and his vote will have its own significance. It has been daily happening that way. There are many things taken for granted even in the Congress advocacy of adult franchise. I am firmly convinced that the deaf and dumb, known idiots, lunatics, persons indulging in secret crimes and those suffering from incurable diseases cannot enjoy the right to vote even if they have attained the prescribed age.

Moreover, there is no reason to believe that those who have learnt to read and write have achieved something great. I am not prepared to say that those who have not been able so far to get educated are themselves responsible for their ignorance. It is indeed the indifference of the middle-class people that is responsible for the ignorance of the masses. The number of illiterate people in India has remained so large because these people have not discharged their duty. Hence, in my view it is a double crime to give franchise to those who, by the favour of the Government, have become educated and to deny it to those who, because of the Government’s indifference, received no education. It becomes the duty of those in power to arrange for early education of those illiterates who are entitled to exercise their votes. Thus, on the one hand, it would mean atonement for not giving franchise to those who should have had it from the beginning, and, on the other, it would encourage efforts to educate the electorate so that voters can exercise their franchise intelligently.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 3-10-1937

368. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
October 3, 1937

No time,
Love

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3617. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6426

369. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 3, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Chimanlal’s ship may still be said to be in mid-sea. He didn’t sleep the whole night. He kept shivering. His behaviour also has changed considerably. The temperature is all right. It is 98º. I hope the doctor is coming today. If you are not sending him for me, send him for Chimanlal at any rate. The earlier he comes the better. What about Lila?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11574

1 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
370. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

October 3, 1937

CHI. AMTUL SALAAM,

We want to do so many things but God alone knows what is best for us. Now that you have stayed over, it is all right. Come over tomorrow with Lilavati and take the evening train with Jamnalalji or by yourself. You need not leave tonight.

Blessings from

BAPU ¹

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 392

371. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,

October 4, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

It has been impossible for me to write personally during the week. The left hand works slowly, the right must not be used on week days.

Lilavati took one whole day and she deserved it. Poor girl suffered much during and after the operation. Chimanlal’s life is hanging by a thread. He causes the greatest anxiety. Temperature became normal for a few hours for the first time yesterday. But he is very weak. His brain does not work. Parnerkar’s fever is gone. He is gaining strength.

Sir Jogendra Singh has sent me, after reading my article², a sweet letter which I enclose herewith. You may destroy it after reading it.

J.³ insists on my going to Calcutta⁴ and I fear I shall have to go. It might also be well as I should come in touch with the detenus⁵. Your

¹ The subscription is in Urdu.
² Vide “Not Impracticable”
³ Jawaharlal Nehru
⁴ For the Working Committee meeting which was to be held from October 26
⁵ Andamans prisoners; Gandhiji met them on October 30; vide “Talk with Andamans prisoners”, 30-10-1937, and “Statement to the Press” 1-11-1937.
cheque for Orissa has been sent to Cuttack. Your precious parcel containing blanket, seeds and sandals has come in, also your wire. The first blanket has not worn out yet.

Since you want all your letters destroyed immediately on my reading them and they are destroyed I can’t remember the contents that called for answers. So you have to be satisfied with incomplete Monday letters.

Love.

TYRANT

[PS.]

Of course I know what love is woven into the shawl and sewn into the sandals and impressed upon the seeds. I ate your apple today with my made teeth.

From the original: C.W. 3813. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6969

372. LETTER TO PYARELAL

October 4, 1937

CHI. PYARELAL.

Herewith the denture. Let him do what he likes with it. I had kept it on during the whole of the day and the night. I shall expect you tomorrow. But you may stay on if necessary. Return only after settling everything.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 802
373. TELEGRAM TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

WARDHA

RAJENDRA PRASAD
SADAQATASHRAM
PATNA

HOPE YOU ARE WELL AND WILL ATTEND
EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE 22ND 23RD HERE. SAME TIME LABOUR COMMITTEE MEETING CAWNPORE. HOPE CAN POSTPONE SAME.

GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 9878. Courtesy: Rajendra Prasad

374. LETTER TO MUNNALAL G. SHAH

SEGAON,

CHI. MUNNALAL

October 5, 1937

I have been meaning all these days to send for you and have a talk with you, but I could get no time. I shall, therefore, feel easy in my mind only if I write down what I wanted to say. I am eaten up by discontent at not being able to cope with the work here and yet, if I strain myself to do it all, my health which has already been weakened will deteriorate further.

What is the cause of your antipathy to Mirabehn? Why are you not on talking terms with her? I had asked her to examine the children and also to inspect carding, etc. Accordingly she gave me the accompanying note. That must have been six or seven days ago. If there is any exaggeration in it, we may ignore it, but it is bound to contain something useful also. She is always exact and methodical in her work. I should like you to submit to her supervision. If you can’t bear her oral criticism, I would ask her to write it down from time to time and I would pass it on to you. But if you cannot tolerate even her silent supervision, I will stop her doing that also. Are you fully satisfied with your present performance?

Have you anything to say about the school? Are you ready to take charge of it? The residents of the village also are ready to co-operate and to let you work. Do you wish to take any part in this work? Do you have the time for it? Do you have the capacity?

I will be satisfied even if you carry to perfection the work you are doing now. Anyone who attains perfection even in the smallest job can get satisfaction from it.

You may reply to this either orally when you find me free or in writing. From today I have decided to dispose of the work also by writing as I am doing now. I am, therefore, writing to Nanavati and Dahyalal also.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8577. Also C.W. 7022. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

375. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

SEGAON,
October 5, 1937

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I get no time to discuss things. I am, therefore, having recourse to writing. For a long time, I have been wanting to have a discussion with you. But today this and no more. I want to take from you some original work. If it is necessary for you to give up all other activities for that, I would ask you to do so.

The experiment being conducted on Kanam¹ is sure to benefit him. And if it is carried on with proper understanding, it will not only benefit him but benefit you also a good deal and make my task very much easier.

I want you to master the science of weaving from the first to the last step. Now please let me know your own sincere desire.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10737

¹ Son of Ramdas Gandhi

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
376. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

October 6, 1937

Love. Your draft manifesto tomorrow.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3815. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6971

377. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

SEGGAON, WARDHA,

October 6, 1937

CHI. NIMU.

I received your letter. I am sending fifty rupees by money-order. Instead of keeping the amount with you, hand it over to Vidyavati for safe keeping, or give it to the head of the office. In an institution, there is constant danger of money being stolen if one keeps it with oneself. Your study seems to be progressing well. If you cannot get Hindi books there, write to Devdas to send you some. Hindi books are available in Delhi. One cannot expect them here. While learning Hindi, do not fail to give the fullest attention to its grammar. Learning grammar develops one’s understanding. There is little in it to be memorized. Much of it requires only intellectual understanding. And once one’s understanding has developed, learning grammar becomes an interesting work. Grammar is the science of language. It is very easy, and interesting too, to learn the structure of sentences and the etymology of words.

I had a letter from Manilal and Šushila which I am enclosing with this. You will know about Ramdas from that letter. He seems to be quite cheerful there.

I got Umiyashankar’s telegram for the Rentjabaras day. It also refers to Ramdas. I infer from it that Ramdas has gone there too. Umiyashankar says that Ramdas is keeping quite well. You may therefore take this as the latest information about Ramdas’s state of

1 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
2 The letter is in Mahadev Desai’s handwriting.
3 That is, Bhadharva Vad 12, Gandhiji’s birthday according to the Vikram Era followed in Gujarat.

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 297
health. Other letters you may get now may have been written on an earlier date. Ramdevji suggests that you should consult a vaidya for the problem of your health. I am keeping well enough. I cannot say I am perfectly well. The brain easily gets tired. Chimanlal is laid low with typhoid. But the fever is slowly going down now. There is no cause for worry, therefore. This is the third week.

We are quite a few here. Lilavati’s tonsils have been removed. She suffered a good deal. She is still at Maganwadi. She will return here in a day or two. I think it will be quite good if you sit for the examination. That will give you an opportunity to improve your study, extend your reading and will also raise your price. We certainly want our price to be raised.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

378. LETTER TO SUMITRA GANDHI

SEGAON,
October 6, 1937

CHI. SUMI,

It was nice of you to write to me. Do keep writing. Try and make your body very strong. Understand fully what you learn. By now, you must have become friendly with office girls there. Did you feel more comfortable in Bombay, or are you liking it more there?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy : Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

1 The subscription is by Gandhiji.
2 The letter is in Mahadev Desai’s handwriting but the subscription is by Gandhiji
379. LETTER TO VIDYA A. HINGORANI

SEGAON, WARDHA,

October 6, 1937

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. Got one after a long time. Extend your stay at Nainital and be fully restored. Your first duty is to make your body strong.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

380. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

October 6, 1937

CHI. ANAND,

I have your letter. Your handwriting is better than Vidya’s. The Hindi is also good. If you try a little more, you will have a fairly good knowledge of Hindi. In Nainital you should also have enough practice in speaking Hindi. Have some practice also in reading Hindi. Read a Hindi newspaper and the Ramayana. You will be doubly benefited by reading Harijan Sevak.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

381. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

WARDHA,

October 6, 1937

It is impossible for me to send individual thanks to the numerous friends who have sent me telegrams and cables and also letters, from almost all parts of India and the world. I see that the volume is increasing from year to year. I can only hope that it may be possible for my innumerable friends throughout the world to be able to say at the end of the last line of the last chapter of my life that I have never ceased to strive to deserve their affection.

The Hindu, 7-10-1937

382. LETTER TO MADHAVDAS AND KRISHNA KAPADIA

SEGAON, WARDHA,

October 7, 1937

CHI. MADHAVDAS¹ AND KRISHNA².

I got your letters and the garlands. Whether or not I convey my blessings through a letter, you always have them.

Everything here is well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII

383. LETTER TO CHANDAN PAREKH

October 7, 1937

CHI. CHANDU.

I am writing this letter though I have had none from you. You are alone there and in a foreign land where everything is strange. And moreover you have the burden of the . . .³ affair weighing on you. Shankar, therefore, thinks that if I write to you occasionally it may cheer you up. I agree. That he worries so much about you is a good sign for you. But when one has gone so far away from home, why should one need cheering up from anybody? Anybody who goes to a foreign country, thousands of miles away, should have the strength to find peace in his or her own mind. I presume you have that strength. And if you don’t have it, cultivate such peace. God is never away from one who believes in Him. He is nearer to one than even one’s finger-nail, for He dwells in each and every fibre of our being. He is witness to the most secret outpourings of our heart. He does not care whether we believe in Him or not, nor does He care even if we keep away from Him, since He has full control over us.

¹ & ² Kasturba Gandhi’s brother and his wife
³ The name has been omitted.
You need not at all worry about the . . . affair, for you have left that worry to me. I hope that now I shall have no question to ask you. But if there is anything, I will-frankly ask you and you also may reply equally frankly. I hope you are keeping good health. You must be absorbed in your study.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 944. Courtesy: Satish D. Kalelkar

384. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

October 7, 1937

CHI. NARAHARI,

I have your letter.

If we allow confectioner etc., from outside without making it a condition that they will use only cow’s milk or ghee made out of such milk, it will certainly be wrong. We should collect ghee from outside also if possible. If we allow confectioners, etc., we should control their prices. If they have to pay more for milk, etc., we may permit them to charge proportionately higher prices. There cannot be any competition within the camp, of course. People, therefore, are sure to pay whatever reasonable prices we fix. Our major difficulty will perhaps be about non-vegetarian food. I don’t know what was the arrangement in Faizpur\(^1\). Even if supply of meat was not arranged in the camp, it must have been available in Faizpur proper. We have selected a place where what we do not provide will not be available. Please think over this. Discuss this with Sardar also. If, at the time of the Education Conference, you cannot stay on after the session is over, we shall not be able to have any discussion. And on the 25th morning I will have to leave for Calcutta. We shall not, therefore, get any time. Perhaps if you could arrive a day or two earlier, we can have some discussion. I assume that you will be making a fairly substantial contribution to the Conference.

Blessings from

BAPU

SIT. NARAHARI D. PARIKH
HARIDAN ASHRAM
SABARMATI, B. B. & C. I. RLY.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9114

\(^1\) At the Congress Session in December 1936
385. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGON,
October 7, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

That owner of the liquor-booth continues to extract toddy on the strength of his right. Babasaheb’s clerk doesn’t stop him. Do, therefore, write a letter to Nagpur as soon as you get a reply. But in addition you yourself should go and see the District Commissioner or Excise Commissioner and tell him that this manufacture of liquor must stop.

The bulb of the torch has fused. Please get another and send it tomorrow. I assume that the torch itself is all right.

I understand about Lilavati. I will not be anxious till she herself becomes impatient. I shall be content if her health is completely restored.

I hear that Gomati1 is having high fever. Kishorelal2 has cough. Please go and see them if you can. Somebody could be sent from here for help, if need be. You may take Ishvardas’s help. Kishorelal himself will never ask for anything. If you think it necessary, please take the Civil Surgeon with you. I don’t like his having such frequent attacks.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

It would be advisable to tell Vinoba about the hundred rupees.3

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11575

---

1 Gomati and Kishorelal Mashruwala
2 ibid
3 This was added by Kanu Gandhi “on behalf of Bapu”.
I am glad you wrote to me in Hindi. The writing is good perfectly legible, and the language quite good. As I narrowly look at the writing at the time of dictating this, I see that though it is good, and legible, it admits of correction and improvement.

When you can at all get away for a few days, with parents’ full consent and blessings, do not hesitate to come for fear of getting ill here. I have no such fear. You will eat exactly as you like—you will bring your cooker and prepare the food for yourself. I fear you cannot come here before the end of November, for I am likely to be away during November in the Frontier. I need prolonged mental rest much more than physical. I am taking as much as is possible, but I can afford to take more.

I am taxing my mind as to Raghavan’s substitute. I had myself thought of you. You have always been diffident—have always underestimated your ability—but, if you will take courage in both your hands, you will make quite a good Director. Try—if you feel unequal to it you will resign. After all, in difficulties, you will fall back upon me—not merely as your guide but as the official head of the organization. You have sufficient knowledge of Hindi, you like the work, you know most of the work, you are scrupulously conscientious, you have powers of application and are quite capable of exercising independent judgement when you want to. There is, therefore, no cause for diffidence. You must shed false modesty. Therefore, if there is room for you to reconsider, you should do so, and straightaway go and see Rajagopalachari and seek his advice. I do not want you to accept the post, if, for any reason, he does not like my idea.

I had your special basket of fruit. But what I can manage is not the especially expensive fruit that you sent me but oranges and limes. There are never extra good oranges in Wardha, and never the rich limes you get there. And just now I am using here nearly 3 doz. oranges a day and at least 1 doz. limes. So whenever these are cheap

---

1 The superscription is in Hindi.
2 Of the Hindi Prachar Sabha
you may send them. I dread the railage. For the satisfaction of my curiosity let me know what it comes to when you send your next basket.

Mahadev has not told you but the Rs. 50 must have been received.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

387. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

October 8, 1937

Don’t expect love letters from me just now except on Mondays. I thoroughly agree with you about your remarks on culture leagues, etc. Atul knows this.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3816. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6972

388. LETTER TO KHURSHEDBEHN NAOROJI

October 8, 1937

You do not want a reply from me but I cannot restrain myself. You may run away even from those who love you. But what about them? And are you sure that you can create a bar between yourself and your species? You can no more run away from men than you can from your own body. Wherever you go, embodied life will haunt you. Embodied being can only see the Being through embodied life. He is not outside it. Upanishads are fragments of true human experiences. Will you contemplate the Ishopanishad? And what did Jesus mean

\[1\] This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee which \textit{inter alia} conveyed the following from Gandhiji:

i. Nariman’s case is still going on.

ii. Very good that Nabi Baksh is well—Bapu sends him his love.

iii. Bapu wrote to Govinddas and wired to him also that he might come here on 11th or 12th.

\[2\] Dadabhoy Naoroji’s granddaughter
when He said: “You cannot see my Father except through me (embodied life).” oh, do please wake up from your sleep. You may forget me, disown me, I simply cannot forget you, what shall I do?

Love.

BAPU

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

389. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 8, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

I shall have to leave this place on the 25th. I shall perhaps have to be in Calcutta from 26th to 30th. I will return here, of course, but soon after I shall be leaving for the Frontier Province. If, therefore, you can come, do so just now. I don’t know where we shall meet afterwards. Even if you come to Calcutta, what will be the use? I won’t have time there even to look at you.

Chimanlal is better now. He is still in bed, but the temperature has come down to almost normal.

I am better. The pressure of work is fairly heavy.

Amtul Salaam is in Bombay at present. Perhaps she will still be there when you get this. But I can’t say.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3528

390. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

SEGAON,
October 8, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

I forgot to show you the accompanying letters. Shankar’s letter is very sweet. He remembers the past with gratitude. That is sweet of him. Please do remember to give the letter to Bal. He should now arrive there in a day or two.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7705
391. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

SEGAON,
October 8, 1937

CHI. NANAVATI,

I told Mirabehn to note down the many things which she felt called for criticism. The note is enclosed. As a matter of fact, some of them fall within Dahyabhai’s sphere of work and some within Vijaya’s. Perhaps there is nothing at all in this for which you are directly responsible. But because you are the manager, all this should come to you for implementation at any rate. Mirabehn, of course, had suggested that she herself should give it to you. But I disapproved of it. If she were to be dissatisfied with any explanation given by you, I would have to listen to that again. If some of her words hurt you, you might not let them reach my ears but even so the pain would be there. I have adopted this course in order to avoid that dilemma. Many of Mirabehn’s suggestions are useful and worth considering. All of them are indeed good, but there may be an element of exaggeration in some of them for which I would excuse her. I intend to encourage Mirabehn to bring such things to my notice. But she will talk only to me and, therefore, there will be no possibility of any tension arising. I will make whatever suggestion or take whatever steps I wish to on the basis of what she tells me. Please discuss this with Dahyabhai. Show Vijaya whatever concerns her.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10738

392. LETTER TO H. L. SHARMA

SEGAON, WARDHA,
Octobers 8, 1937

CHI. SHARMA,

I am watching your experiments with interest and I wish you success. It seems almost impossible that I may be able to witness them personally but God makes even the impossible possible.

You have given me no facts regarding the Khurja Congress; what can I do in these circumstances? If you send me the facts with the name and address I shall certainly forward the letter to the right quarters.

Blessings from

BAPU

[from Hindi]

Bapuki Chhayamen Mere Jivanke Solah Varsh, p. 268

393. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAMDAS TANDON

SEGAON,

October 8, 1937

DEAR TANDONJI,

I have gone through all your letters. All I had heard was that you had taken a liberal decision with regard to language. I had read nothing at all. I had also seen the brief Press report of your statement at the time you took your seat as Speaker. These days I am able to give hardly five to seven minutes to the newspapers. At times I cannot manage even that much. The burden of work has greatly increased since I placed before you my new ideas about education, and the need for rest is always there. None the less, when Kaka Saheb left with me the treasure sent by you, it became my duty to read it. I liked all of it immensely: your speech as the Speaker, your decision about language and your speech on that subject. Both struck me as being original. It is all to the good that you accepted the position of Speaker.

I also received the telegram concerning me. I had not seen anything else. It was good that you sent the report about it. I deliberately did not answer the telegram. This year there were so many telegrams from all parts of the world that I was astonished and I considered it grace of God. I Sent a brief message of thanks through the Press.¹ I decided not to reply to anyone personally. And what reply could I have given in words? Such abundance of love can only be acknowledged through action. Let us see in what way God uses me as His instrument.²

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: Purushottamdas Tandon Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹ Vide “Statement to the Presss”, 6-10-1937
² This paragraph has already appeared in “Letter to Tondon”.
394. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SAGAON, WARDHA,

[Before October 9, 1937]

BHAJ VALLABHBHAI,

I don’t see any chance of my meeting Jinnah at present. Jawaharlal doesn’t desire it.

It seems I shall have to go to Calcutta. Jawaharlal is very keen that I should go, and so are the Bengal leaders. I have had a letter from Subhas, too. And if I go, I can see the detenus also. We are, therefore, sure to meet during the journey or, if not during the journey, at any rate in Calcutta.

It will be better if you yourself write to Bahadurji regarding the Nariman case and request him to expedite it.

If we cannot gain control over the turbulent wind that is blowing, I am afraid the game will be lost completely. We should try our best to gain that control. If people don’t listen to us, we shall have no option but to leave. A few persons having control at a few points in the present set-up will not serve our purpose. We shall be able to continue to work only if we have control over the whole organization. We will try our best to preserve such control.

I altogether forgot to write to you about Sadananda². He had come to see me. He wanted to resume publication of the paper and organize a news agency. I refused to give him any encouragement in that. I tried to persuade him not to embark on such a futile venture and, whatever he decided, I asked him to leave me out of it. He has agreed to do the latter. He didn’t seem to have repented anything. My view is that it is not worth embarking on the venture of another English newspaper in Bombay.

We must certainly reply to Nimbkar³. I had only meant that I could do nothing on the basis of the newspaper report.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaïne, pp. 215-6

---

¹ According to the source, the letter was written during the first fortnight of October. Vide also “Letter to Vallabh Bhair Patel”, 9-10-1937

² S. Sadananda, Editor, Free Press Journal

³ A communist worker

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
395. GIVE MINISTERS A CHANCE

This is the gist of the conversation of a visitor:

You may not know what Ministers have to go through just now. Congressmen, having abjured office for seventeen years, suddenly find that their own chosen representatives are in possession of powers which they had voluntarily surrendered before. They do not know what to do with these representatives. They smother them with addresses and entertainments and, as often as not, they demand interviews with them as a matter of right and present them with all kinds of suggestions and sometimes even ask for petty favours.

This is the best way to disable the Ministers from doing real service to the country. They are new to their work. A conscientious Minister has no time for receiving addresses and honours, or for making speeches in return for fulsome or deserved praise. Nor have they time for interviewers whom they do not invite, or who they think are not going to help them in their work. In theory, a leader of democracy holds himself at the beck and call of the public. It is but right that he should do so. But he dare not do so at the sacrifice of the duty imposed upon him by the public. Ministers will cut a sorry figure if they do not master, or are not allowed by the public to master, the work entrusted to them. An Education Minister has to have all his wits about him if he is to evolve a policy in keeping with the requirements of the country. An Excise Minister will prove a disastrous failure if he does not attend to the constructive side of prohibition. And so will a Finance Minister who, in spite of the handicap created for him by the [Government of] India Act and in spite of the voluntary surrender of the Excise Revenue, will not balance his budget. It requires a juggler in figures to be able to do so. These are but illustrations. Every ministerial office requires almost the same vigilance, care and study as the three I have mentioned.

It would have been easy for them, if they had simply to read and sign papers put before them by the permanent Service. But it is not easy to study every document and think out and originate new policies. Their gesture of simplicity, necessary as it was as a preliminary, will avail them nothing if they will not show the requisite industry, ability, integrity, impartiality, and an infinite capacity for mastering details. It would be well, therefore, if the public will exercise self-restraint in the matter of giving addresses, seeking interviews or writing to them long epistles.

_Harijan, 9-10-1937_
396. CONDITIONS OF SUCCESS

Bhausaheb Lavate\(^1\) has been honouring me with a visit in the interest of prohibition which is as dear to him as to me. We came to the following conclusions:

1. Strict non-use from now of all Excise Revenue for any but prohibition purposes.

2. Non-renewal of all licences on their expiry and immediate closing of all liquor shops, where there is a clear demand for closing on the part of at least 75% of those who have been visiting these shops.

3. Liquor, whenever it is necessary to sell it, should be sold only through direct Government agency.

4. All existing liquor shops should be, wherever possible, converted into refreshment and recreation rooms.

5. Causes of the habit in typical areas should be carefully investigated and dealt with.

6. Absolutely peaceful, silent and educative picketing by recognized individuals or groups should be undertaken, the object being to establish intimate personal contact with the addicts so as to help them to give up the habit. Personal visits to the addicts in their own homes would be a feature of scientific picketing. Voluntary agency for this work should be invited by the Government and encouraged to do this philanthropic work.

_Harijan_, 9-10-1937

397. TO APPLICANTS FOR PRIMARY EDUCATION TEACHERSHIPS

It is gratifying that I am daily receiving letters in reply to my appeal\(^2\) for teachers who approve of the plan I have been developing from week to week in these columns of Primary Education and who are prepared to work it. I observe from the correspondence that the writers have not grasped the meaning of my appeal. No one will be wanted who does not thoroughly believe in primary education

---

\(^1\) Of Poona

\(^2\) Vide “Notes” 25-9-1937 through a profitable handicraft and who will not or cannot work it for the love of it and for mere maintenance. To all such I suggest that they thoroughly master the art of spinning and of performing all the anterior processes. Meanwhile I am registering all the names. The writers will hear from me in due course of the progress that may be made with the execution of the plan. My appeal is an effort to anticipate the requirements of the seven Provincial Governments, should they feel inclined to endorse and experiment with the plan.

Harijan, 9-10-1937

398. LETTER TO G. V. GURJALE

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 9, 1937

MY DEAR GURJALE,

I appreciate the frankness of the last part of your letter. I am glad you are concentrating the minds of friends on prohibition. I can do nothing about tea and coffee, bad as I know they are, until you give me facts and figures to support your contentions.¹

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

From a photostat: G. N. 1402

399. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 9, 1937

BHAI VALLABHBHAI,

I have just read your reply to Nimbkar. I didn’t like it at all. It displays great intolerance. I think it will be very difficult to prove your accusation against him. And where was the need to say it all?
And the attack on the [Bombay] Chronicle doesn’t become you at all.
“Obvious reasons” are reasons which everybody knows. In the first instance I don’t know that the Chronicle always opposes you. And even if it is true that it does, what can be the obvious reason? What was the point in saying it? I am afraid you have needlessly provoked

¹ Vide “Letter to G. V. Gurjale”, 28-9-1937 opposition.

About Vaikunth (Mehta), Munshi will let you know. Morarji should relieve him from moratorium and co-operative work for three months, and if the Committee’s work is to stop after that he may certainly be included.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
_Bapuna Patro-2 Sardar Vallabhbhaine_, pp. 214-5

400. NOTE TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

[Before October 10, 1937]¹

You certainly did well in coming away earlier. I have been able to keep myself going with the greatest effort. My brain needs plenty of rest. I observe silence and sleep as long as I can and remain calm so that I may not have a breakdown on the 22nd. But please see everything here. Observe the experiment in Nalwadi through my eyes. Have a discussion with Kaka. [Arya]nayakam also has grasped [the idea] well enough. But Vinoba has done it better than anybody else. He writes and says that he finds nothing to object to in my articles. I have sent an extract from his letter for _Harijanbandhu_.² I don’t know whether or not it is printed.

* * *

Vanamala and others were well saved.

* * *

What is the age of the student?

* * *

There would hardly be any children of very tender age in any village school. There are such children in the village, of course, but they do not attend school. Here the parents don’t send such very young children to school. The teachers take no interest in them. It is not my wish that they should not attend school. I am only describing what I have observed.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9112

¹ From the reference to Vinoba’s letter which appeared in _Harijanbandhu_, 10-10-1937

² Vide the following item.
401. TWO ENDORSEMENTS OF EDUCATION THROUGH WORK

Even though Vinoha and I are separated by a distance of only five miles, we hardly meet each other as we are both deep in our own work and as neither is in the best of health. Hence, we decide many matters by correspondence.

I have quoted these ideas\(^1\) from one such letter. I consider these ideas very significant, because I am not aware of anyone else from among my colleagues who has carried out so many experiments in that direction as Vinoba has. The revolutionary increase in the speed of the takli has at its root Vinoba’s inspiration and his untiring labour. He has worked on his charkha and takli for eight to ten hours a day even though he has been managing a big organization. And, right from the beginning he has given this craft an important place in education. Thus, Vinoba is naturally in full agreement with me in making education self-supporting through a craft which I consider to be my original discovery. This, indeed, is a matter of great encouragement for me. I have quoted his opinion here in the hope that it would strengthen the faith of those who know Vinoba and would inspire faith in those who have none now.

Support from Shri Vinoba is not a matter of surprise for me. Nor would it be for readers of Harijanbandhu. On the contrary, if I do not get his support, it should set me thinking. It would be foolish and certainly impudent to venture to convince the nation about a point if I am not able to convince my oldest colleagues about it. I was no doubt pleasantly surprised on receiving Shri Manu Subedar’s letter. I have been corresponding with him on issues like education, prohibition, etc. As a result I have the following letter\(^2\). The reader will be happy to see it. He had sent some suggestions in English along with the letter which I have already published in Harijan\(^3\).

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 10-10-1937

\(^1\) Not translated here. Vinoba Bhave had conveyed his appreciation of Gandhiji’s latest thoughts on education and had further stated that he would not have even the dualistic conception of work and education and he had therefore already started experimenting on the lines of work-education.

\(^2\) Not translated here. The correspondent had supported basic education on financial grounds and suggested that a district-wise survey should be made of locally available raw materials which, along with the necessary implements, should be supplied at the school door.

\(^3\) Dated October 2, 1937, under the title “Useful Hints on Education”
402. MY NOTES

PROHIBITION IN AHMEDABAD

The Government of the Bombay Presidency has taken the welcome decision of introducing total prohibition from the 1st of April. This is no doubt a correct step. As Ahmedabad is one of those fields where this thing has been well tried, this experiment should meet with easy success there. The aim of prohibition is that people may stop taking alcohol. If people do not give up the habit, illicit distillation will go on and the addicts will persist in drinking, and the prohibition law will have failed. Thus, although people cannot be made to give up drinking unless the drinking booths are closed down, the mere closing down of the booths will bring no result unless people are convinced through education of the evils of alcoholism. The largest number of alcoholics in Ahmedabad comes from the working class. The Majoor Mahajan deserves to be congratulated on having undertaken the responsibility of educating the public and on having passed the necessary resolution. If men and women take upon themselves the individual responsibility and carry on this work, it is sure to meet with success. If success is achieved in a centre like Ahmedabad, other parts of India will also be encouraged and they will also learn how success can be achieved.

[From Gujarati]

Harijanbandhu, 10-10-1937

403. LETTER TO SHRIMAN NARAYAN AGRAWAL

SEGAON,

October 10, 1937

CHI. SHRIMAN

Only yesterday I heard that you had been suffering from unabating fever for four days. How come? Is it because you got married? I believed you could never fall ill. What has happened then? I hope to get some good news even today. This is being dictated at 5 a.m. after the morning prayers. Remember, it was at your instance, and with confidence in you that I allowed the Conference\(^1\) to meet and accepted its presidency.

\(^1\) All-India Educational Conference
I had not the strength to shoulder such a great burden but your enthusiasm persuaded me to agree. I hope you will not let me down now. Relax and get well soon. Could it be that the strain of the Conference has told on your health? If it is so, take refuge in Mother Gita and free yourself from attachment and anxiety. After all He alone brings about whatever comes to be.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, pp. 299-300

404. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 10, 1937

You have to wait for my letter till tomorrow.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3817. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6973

405. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 10, 1937

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have your two letters. I am quite clear that Horace\(^2\) ought not to be asked to tear himself away from Olive\(^3\) and come here in the anti-opium cause. Of course prohibition applies to both drinks and drugs. There is no question in the seven Provinces of carrying conviction. The Ministers would know how to deal with the matter. Horace is of much greater use in England than he can be here at the

---

\(^1\) This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
\(^2\) Horace Alexander and his wife who was an invalid
\(^3\) ibid
present moment. What is needed is the moral support of the best mind of the world in this campaign. I do hope you are taking good care of yourself.

Love.

Mohan

[PS.]

Your article¹ is going in.

From a photostat: G.N. 1426

406. LETTER TO AMTUSSALAAM

October 10, 1937

Chi. Am tul Salaam,

Your letter. All are well. Stay on there till the matter is resolved.² Today Vijaya is leaving for home. What can be done? Lilavati has arrived and badly needs rest. Dahyalal has been given charge of the kitchen. Start taking the medicine.

Thousands of blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 393

407. LETTER TO VIJAY N. PATEL

October 10, 1937

Chi. Vijaya,

I could not bear to see your tears. Please return early after obtaining your parents’ blessings. Be careful during the journey. Write to me regularly.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7073. Also C.W. 4565. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

¹ Which appeared in Harijan, 23-10-1937, under the title “Opium Too”.
² The addressee was in Bombay helping her brothers to settle their differences.
408. TELEGRAM TO AMTUSSALAAM

WARDHAGANI,
October 11, 1937

AMTUL SALAAM
CARE EUROTRADE
BOMBAY

YOU NEED NOT STAY FOR OPERATION BUT MAY FOR BROTHERS IF NECESSARY. LOVE.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 406

409. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

Unrevised

SEGAON,
October 11, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

It has been impossible to write to you during the week days in spite of your gentle complaint. I must not use the right hand and the left works laboriously. And I have no time for practice. Every minute must be used to best advantage. If you insist on my tearing your letters as soon as I have read them, you must not expect me to remember your questions for whole seven days and then answer them on Sundays.

Of course I took note of what you wrote about Bhulabhai1 and2, what is more, I wrote to him about the matter, though of course without naming the source of information. I have not heard from him as yet. The reply is overdue. I had heard of the thing before but I could not act upon rumours. Your information was definite.

I am glad Nabibux has returned. My love to him. You must bring him when you come. Your cheque has gone to Delhi. You may expect a formal receipt from them. Not to make mistakes in simple account-keeping does not make one an accountant. Even illiterate Nabibux gives an accurate account of everything he spends. You may take unction to your soul in that you are as good as he is in taking

1 Bhulabhai J. Desai
2 The source has “I” after this.
down contemporaneous expenses and receipts. Faithful clerk ! ! !

It is a mystery how Sir J’s letter\(^1\) was not in your cover. Mira is making a search. Remember she is not a clerk, nor an idiot. Idiots are good at remembering things. Mira can draw mountains and cloud effects. So she disdains to remember trifles like putting things in their places where they should be. But this is poor consolation for you and me. I was most anxious for you to see that very good letter. He is following it up faithfully. I hope it will be traced.

I return you the enclosed duly signed “Bapu” in Hindi. Is that right?

Vijaya was wanted by her parents and I had to send her away. She was most disconsolate and could not restrain her tears.\(^2\) I miss her because she was a most handy girl, always willing, always ready. She wants to return.

A. S. is still in Bombay helping her brothers to settle their differences. She may return any day. Lilavati is almost in harness. Sushila, P[yarelal]’s sister, came in on Saturday bringing fever with her. So she is in Maganwadi. Pyarelal is nursing her. Shriman is down with typhus. I do not know what will happen to the Conference now. It may have to be dropped. He is a rare gem.

On 25th I leave for Calcutta; address care Congress. I expect to be back on 2nd November at the latest and shall await Khan Saheb’s summons. He expects to have me with him during 1st week of November.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3818. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6974

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 4-10-1937 & 12-10-1937

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Vijaya N. Patel”, 10-10-1937
410. LETTER TO SITA GANDHI

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 11, 1937

CHI. SITA¹,

Your handwriting is very beautiful indeed. Write Gujarati also in an equally beautiful hand. Write in both the languages. I hope you will show us your face some day. If you were here Kanam would get company and I would teach you according to the new method. Do you know what this method is? Ask Sushila.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4868

411. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

October 11, 1937

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

Your letters are regular and quite informative. I have no grounds for complaint; you have some. My hands are so full that I missed the last mail. Only today I am snatching the time. I am writing to Ramdas separately at Johannesburg. It is certainly unfortunate that he could not stay with you. But Kallenbach² thought of Ramdas only. His has been military [discipline] always. We should not grieve over it. I understand what you say about the Agent. We have to suffer many such things. If we can remain unaffected by these experiences, we have learnt our dharma and the art of living in this world. The sweet and bitter experiences that you are having there are also common here. They make up the variety of this world. If one gets a bed of roses every day, would one attach any value to it? Hence the great need for religious meditation, reading, and conduct. You may come if you can—both or either of you. It does not matter if you cannot

¹ Daughter of Manilal Gandhi
² Hermann Kallenbach, a German architect who became Gandhiji’s associate in South Africa come. Don’t come at the cost of the work there. A letter for Sita is enclosed.¹ There is no time to give other news. If I had the time, I would fill a volume.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4809

412. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 11, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV.

The matter for Harijan is getting ready. I hope you have been visiting Shriman. I am worried about Sushila. I hear that her fever has still not come down. This means more work for you. And the 22nd and 25th are approaching. Please see that you don’t overexert yourself. Keep Shanta under control. It will be a blow if she spoils her health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11577

413. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 11, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV.

I have not been able to read again the reply to the criticism.² Mira also has not been able to read it. Please go through it carefully. I don’t wish to detain Janba here.

I had enclosed Sir Jogendra’s letter with the letter to Rajkumari. She did not receive it. Did Mira forget it or was it left out there? Please inquire.

Do take me to Shriman.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11576

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² Vide “Some Criticism Answered”, 16-10-1937
414. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

October 11, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

Your letter. You can come and stay. The post is going in a moment. Why worry? I shall leave for Calcutta on the 25th and hope to return on the 1st.

Come soon.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3507

415. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

SEGAON, WARDHA

October 12, 1937

CHI. JAMNALALJI,

I have your letter.

Bahadurji is welcome.

I have learnt about Shriman’s fever. It is a bad one. It seems obstinate. I am hoping to go and see him today. I am dictating this letter after the morning prayer. Because of Shriman’s illness, Mahadev and Kishorelal suggested to me that the Education Conference be postponed. The suggestion appealed to me. The responsibility of accommodating a hundred persons ought not to be on you. I assume that you will foot the bill. I don’t mind that. But if the other people cannot shoulder the burdens of managing such gatherings without your help, I think we ought not to have them at all. Our work in these gatherings will shine only if the others have acquired the ability to manage them. I have, therefore, sent a message to Aryanayakam that he should let the plan for the Conference stand only if he has the necessary self-confidence and ability. Otherwise it had better be postponed. The Conference was Shriman’s idea and I had depended on him alone. As long as he was in normal health I didn’t worry. I had assumed that he would never fall ill. When, therefore, I heard about his illness, I was upset. I have regarded your discovery of Shriman as a wonderful one. He has an unusual mixture of learning, maturity of judgement and humility. Without him the Conference would give me no pleasure. But in accordance with the principle that one should not abandon a task already begun, I have insisted that the Conference be held unless [Arya]nayakam’s self-confidence gives way or you oppose its holding. I would regard your opposition to be well-grounded, for I have faith in your practical sense. You alone can judge best whether, without you and the use of your bungalow, the programme of the Conference can go through successfully. If, therefore, you wish that the Conference should be postponed, please tell me so immediately by wire. I will then postpone it.

I hope you are keeping fit. Savitri must be doing quite well.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad. pp. 190-1

416. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

October 12, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I have your letter. I am trying to come to Calcutta, leaving here on the 25th. You will then tell me all about the ministerial deeds in the Congress Provinces. I do hope that the sore throat and cold were only temporary things, and that you were able to stand the strain in the Punjab. The climate in the Frontier must be very delightful. How I wish you would take things easy for a time at least!

Love.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

417. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

October 12, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

Though there is nothing wrong in Hindus putting emphasis on Devanagari script and a knowledge of Hindi (if it is to be distinguished from highly Persianized Urdu), if you can postpone active work till after the Sammelan it would be wise. This is all a matter of experience, and it is so difficult to advise without sensing the surrounding atmosphere and the local circumstances. Both these I like to see for myself whenever I have to decide a delicate question which depends for its solution on a knowledge of the atmosphere and circumstances. I hope this will be some sort of guide for you. Whatever happens, this is quite clear to me, that every Punjabi should realize that Punjabi and Urdu are his languages; but a Hindu, wherever he is, should know Hindi through the Devanagari script, for the sake of being able to read first-class devotional literature, the like of which is not to be found in any other Provincial speech.

I do not know what the approach of the Hindi Pracharini Sabha is. It may be wholly different from mine. If that is so the decision as to the propriety of carrying on propaganda will be different from what I have given.

How is it that you have found Sardar Jogendra Singh’s letter? For in your letter of yesterday you tell me you had missed it.

This is being dictated after breaking silence. Although I work top-speed, I do not feel any fatigue. It comes from talk. I have just enough strength in the right hand yet to carry on Monday’s work. I wish I could find the time for practising writing with the left hand daily, but I don’t, beyond having the time for tracing my signature to the daily letters.

Love.

ROBBERS

From the original: C.W. 3618. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6427

418. LETTER TO DR. GOPICHAND BHARGAVA

SEGON, WARDHA, October 12, 1937

DEAR DR. GOPICHAND,

I have your letter. I have not forgotten the Andaman Prisoners. Where are they being treated as ‘C’ class Prisoners? So far as I know these class distinctions are gone. These friends should help the Congress Ministers for they have their difficulties. You may give them the assurance that I shall strain every nerve not merely to see that they are well treated but that they are discharged. But I must be able myself to give the assurance in every individual case. Their noble response to me has paved the way, but it ought not to be held as sufficient for full fruition of the common hope. The main reason for my going to Calcutta for the A. I. C. C. is to examine the whole position, and to see what I can do in the matter.¹

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

From the original Dr. Gopichand Bharagava Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

419. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
October 13, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I dictated last night a long letter to you. Now at 4.15 a.m. I begin this about Khurshed. Her letter and yours were destroyed as soon as I read them. Hers is a sad case. She writes differently to me as if she was retiring from the haunts of men. I have written a gentle reply.² Though she writes to me as if I was a stranger, I continue to sign myself Bapu and tell her that though she may desert me, I will not desert her.

I gave one hour to Govinddas.³ His admissions were compromising. I have told him [to] investigate the truth of what has been stated to me against him. You should not allow your favourable opinion to be affected by my unfavourable impressions. More when we meet, if you would remind me.

I hope you threw off your cold long ago. Why should [you] sit with a chill on? You should not be ashamed to sit cross-legged and wrap yourself as we poor villagers do. And then breathe deep when you are cold.

I knew about Palestine schools. K. left a lot of literature about them.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3820. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6976

¹ For Gandhiji’s “Statement to the Press” regarding the Andaman prisoners,
vide “Statement to the Press”, 17-10-1937
² Vide “Letter to Khureshedbehn Naoroji”, 8-10-1937
³ Vide footnote 1, “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 8-10-1937
420. LETTER TO AMRIT KAURI

October 13, 1937

Your remarks on education are quite sound. But you have not fully understood my scheme. I started a letter yesterday\(^2\) at 4 a.m. It is unfinished.

BAPU’S LOVE

From the original: C.W. 3819. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6975

---

421. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

October 13, 1937

CHI. JANKIBEHN,

I have a letter from Acharya Ramdev saying that you must accept the invitation to go to Dehra Dun. I don’t have the date with me. Shriman will get all right, you may rest assured. If you cannot go, send him a wire. It will be better of course if you can go. Is it necessary to consult your lord and master?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2989

---

422. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKAR PATTANI

October 13, 1937

SUJNA BHAISHRI,

It seems that in the State dispensary at Botad the doctors, compounders, etc., practise untouchability while examining Harijans or dispensing medicines to them and treat them with contempt. And if any treatment is required which involves touching them, either it is not given or is given with great reluctance. For instance, if any of them is having discharge from his ear and a syringe has to be used, some wads of cotton are thrown at the man and he is sent away and asked to clean his ear with them. I have received a good many letters in this...

---

\(^1\) This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.

\(^2\) This is evidently a slip. The reference here, it appears, is to the preceding item.
connection. And it seems to me that there is substance in the complaint. I too believe that, when most of its servants also are tainted with the evil of untouchability, the Government cannot do much. However, some improvement in this regard is bound to take place if untouchability is openly and repeatedly disowned by the State authorities in its policies and declarations and through administrative action, and if action is taken against [even] a few persons guilty of practising untouchability. Discrimination in hospitals should be impossible. Just now, I don’t wish to take note of this matter in either Harijanbandhu or Harijan.

I take it that you will attend the forthcoming Education Conference or will send somebody who is interested in the subject.¹

_Vandemataram from_

_MOHANDAS_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5955. Also C.W. 3272. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani

_423. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR_

[After October 13, 1937]²

_MY DEAR REBEL._

You have asked my opinion about Govind Das after having done the mischief. I have bitter experiences about him. He is ambitious, vain, vulgar, crooked and unreliable. His ventures have resulted in losses. This is the opinion of those who have dealings with him. I know him well. He used to be like a son to me. I used to think well of him. But I soon discovered that he was a schemer. Now he rarely comes near me. I am sorry, but such is my experience. I hope you haven’t dropped much.

_Love._

_TYRANT_

_Reminiscences of the Nehru Age, p. 31_

¹ Here follows a postscript by Mahadev Desai acknowledging with thanks the addressee’s letter regarding prohibition.

² From the reference to Govind Das and impressions of him; _vide_ “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 13-10-1937

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
DEAR OLD RENEGADE-BUT HONEST PUPIL,

I knew that you delighted in calling yourself Jaisoorya, but Mahadev was trying to pull my leg by asking me to judge who could the writer be. He knew that with the advance of years my memory was decaying rapidly, and, trading upon that knowledge he challenged me to guess the writer’s identity. I could not till I saw the last sentence, and I asked since when you had become Jaisoorya. Then I thought that my memory was gradually coming back, and I said to myself that when you had come to me at Knightsbridge in that Deputation of self-styled firebrands, you had sent in your name as Jaisoorya. But at that time Mother¹ had prepared me to identify you with the bearded young man with amazing self-assurance.

Your letter shows that you remain the same on the surface, but in spite of your looking down upon old fogies, you have inward regard for them, and know that you can as little do without them as without the very stupid days of your childhood. Therefore, in spite of your profound differences with me, in which you glory, I am not going to disregard your outline. But I am going to study it carefully, and then give you my opinion. But you will be patient with me.

Meanwhile this comes to you with all the good wishes that you and yours may care to have, or be in need of. Cartloads of love to the whole family, including the grey-haired Singer.

Pyarelal is with me, as unchangeable as when you saw him in the Ashram.

OLD MASTER

DR. M. JAI SOORYA, M.D.
Gopal Clinic
Station Road
Hyderabad (Deccan)

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

¹ Sarojini Naidu
425. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

October 14, 1937

Do not worry about me. God is the greatest physician. He guides me. It is well even if He gives me a fatal dose. You did well at your sales.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3821. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6977

426. NOTE ON NARIMAN-SARDAR CASE

[October 14, 1937]¹

Mr. Bahadurji has brought me his judgment on the Nariman-Sardar case which is attached hereto. When I asked, not without much hesitation, to associate himself with me in the task I had taken up in the public interest, he readily agreed to do so.

He had, perhaps, not realized what anxious labour it would cost him to do justice to the task. I do not know what I would have done without his valuable assistance. We read his judgment together and with very slight changes I suggested, and which he readily accepted. The judgment is absolutely his own and arrived at without any previous consultation with me. I concur with his reasoning and finding.

The public will see that the finding is purely judicial. Parties were given every facility to see the evidence, to take copies and were free to have witnesses orally examined and cross-examined. But they did not want any examination or cross-examination nor was it necessary. Though there were over eighty witnesses and the evidence was voluminous, a mass of it was wholly irrelevant to the two issues before us. The greatest latitude was given to Mr. Nariman to bring before me any evidence he had. I sent personal letters to witnesses, whose names he had sent me. Most of the Congress legislators have ¹ This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.

² This note was written while D. N. Bahadurji was at Segaon on the Thursday prior to October 16 which fell on October 14; vide “Self-Supporting Education”
³ In which Bahadurji had arrived at the conclusion that the “charge against K. F. Nariman in respect of the elections in 1934 was proved and the charge made by K. F. Nariman against Vallabhbhai was not proved.”
sent in their statements in answer to my public appeal for evidence.¹

If I had no further duty to discharge, there would be nothing more for me to say. But I must not avoid reference to the things that have been brought to light in the course of the evidence sent to me.

Mr. Nariman has sent to me newspaper cuttings. They have made painful reading. There is no evidence whatsoever to show that the Sardar was actuated by any communal bias. The newspapers, which have made suggestions that there was communal bias behind the rejection of Mr. Nariman, have rendered a great disservice to the Bombay public life and Mr. Nariman, who has himself, I am glad, rejected any such suggestion.

Indeed, Mr. Nariman’s grievances against the Sardar seem to resolve themselves into this: As the Sardar told him on the 3rd of March, he would not and did not exert himself on his behalf. It is plain that when a person of the Sardar’s influence remains passive, his attitude was bound to go against Mr. Nariman, but for that the Sardar could not be held blameworthy. It seems to me Mr. Nariman forgot that the City of Bombay is not the Bombay Presidency. And if he had really the confidence of Maharashtra and Karnataka, the Sardar’s passivity would have availed nothing. Indeed, there is nothing to prevent the legislators even now from inviting Mr. Kher² to resign and electing Mr. Nariman in his place. The suggestion that the Sardar’s overpowering influence would prevent such a change is thoughtless. Ninety men cannot be overawed for a long time by one man, however powerful he may be.

My analysis of the situation is that Mr. Nariman overestimated his hold on the legislators and felt the keenest disappointment over the defeat. His judgment became warped. This is evidenced by his own statements before me. His advisers and the newspaper propaganda kept up the illusion. It is no pleasure to me to have to pen these lines. But I pen them in the hope that his eyes may be opened by the opening out of the agonized heart of one who has been his friend and well-wisher and who was somewhat responsible for his inclusion in the Congress Cabinet.

The Bombay Chronicle, 3-11-1937

¹ Vide “Statement to the Press”, 20-8-1937
² B. G. Kher
427. LETTER TO M. VISVESVARAYYA

SEGAON, WARDHA

October 15, 1937

DEAR SIR M. VISVESVARAYYA,

I thank you for your book. I am keeping it in front of me and I shall read it at the first opportunity. Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to be able to agree with you. I thank you for tackling the Orissa flood problem. Of course, you will take your time.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9837. Courtesy: Government of Mysore

428. LETTER TO DR. N. B. KHARE

October 15, 1937

DEAR DR. KHARE,

I think that General Awari should be warned by the P. C. C. and if he does not listen I have no doubt that there should be a legal prosecution. But if you have any doubt yourself I am no authoritative guide. The only authority is the President or the Working Committee.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

The Hitavada, 2-4-1939

---

1 This was displayed at the Mysore Pavilion of the Gandhi-Darshan Exhibition, held in Delhi in 1969-70.

2 Premier of the Central Provinces
429. LETTER TO JAGANNATH DAS

October 15, 1937

MY DEAR JAGANNATH DAS,

Kakasaheb has passed on to me your letter of 15th September. I got it only on 12th October. It makes very sad reading. There never was any guarantee that more money would be found from the North'. Nevertheless Rs. 5,000 (five thousand) have been transferred to you. Raghavan however was never expected to find the money; he was merely to look after the administration. But I do not at all agree with him that, on that account, he can desert the ship. He can complain, grumble, put the responsibility on you, his colleagues, and expect you to find the sinews of war. You can certainly pester me, pester Jamnalalji and Rajaji also. Because he has taken up a tremendous responsibility, he cannot divest himself of the duty of discharging old obligations. Only a gambler can take up new obligations before he has discharged existing ones, and without thinking how he will discharge old ones. Sri R. C. is not of this type. We would be doing him an injustice if we think that he will plead the new work to evade the old one. Instead of seeing him, write to him. I am writing to him myself. You may show this to him.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 7708

430. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

October 15, 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have made use of your figures. You are doing admirable service to the cause. But remember you have to advance a great deal further. Think over the question whether real intellectual development can be brought about through crafts.

Enclosed is a letter from Kumi2. What do you think about it? If you cannot afford to keep her, certainly don’t. She must not be an

---

1 For the work of Dakshin Bharat Hindi Prachar Sabha; vide “Letter to C. Rajagopalachari”, 26-8-1937
2 Kumibehn T. Maniar, Harilal Gandhi’s wife’s sister obstacle in your efforts for progress. But it seems that I shall have to meet her expenses in any case.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8540. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

431. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

October 15, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

Do talk to Jamnalalji. It will certainly be good if he goes. Will he go? Can he go? When can he go?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7706

432. LETTER TO SARAT CHANDRA BOSE

[Before October 16, 1937]¹

I have your affectionate letter. Of course, God willing, I am coming to Calcutta. I am not yet fit for meetings or discussions. I have a limited amount of energy which I would love to use whilst there for the detenus’ cause, as also for questions that may crop up at the Working Committee meetings. For myself, I shall gladly be under your roof and have you as my guard against too many visitors and unnecessary interviews. You will also please save me from public demonstrations and meetings.

The Hindu, 18-10-1937

¹ The report is date-lined “Kurseong, October 16”.

332 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
433. NOTES

A DONATION TO KHADI

Dr. Pattabhi writes to me as follows:

Mula Lakshmi Narayanaswamigaru of Tadpatri, Anantapur District (Madras Presidency—Andhra), has donated Rs. 5,000 for khadi and also promised to pay up to another Rs. 45,000 as a loan at 3 per cent for work in his district.

I congratulate the donor on his donation and loan. I have no doubt that he could not have better employed his money. Let me hope that the district will receive the full benefit of the donation and the loan, and this will depend upon local workers and local patronage of khadi.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AND PROHIBITION

Mr. F. A. Plair writing from Lahore resents Shri Phillip’s remarks\(^1\) which appeared in these columns recently about Roman Catholics, and contends that prohibition has been preached from time immemorial by the Roman Catholic priests. He concludes his letter by saying, “We all Roman Catholics concur in your prohibition movement and join it heartily.”

_Harijan, 16-10-1937_

434. SOME CRITICISM ANSWERED

A high educational officer who wishes to remain unknown has sent me, through a common friend, an elaborate and considered criticism of my plan of primary education. For want of space I may not reproduce the whole argument here. Nor is there anything new in it. And yet it deserves a reply, if only for the pains the writer has bestowed on his paper.

This is how my suggestions have been paraphrased by the writer:

(i) Primary education should start and end with training in crafts and industries, and that whatever may be necessary by way of general information should come in as auxiliaries in the initial stage, and that formal training through the medium of reading and writing in subjects like History, Geography and Arithmetic [should] come right at the end.

\(^1\) _Vide “Are Christians Against Prohibition”_
(ii) Primary education should be self-supporting from the first, and that this should and could be achieved by the State taking over the finished articles coming from the schools and selling them to the public.

(iii) Primary education should be fully up to the Matriculation standard—less of course English.

(iv) Prof. K. T. Shah’s idea of conscripting young men and women to teach in the primary schools should be fully examined and, if possible, acted upon.¹

The writer at once proceeds to say:

If we analyse the above programme it seems to us that the underlying ideas are in some cases mediaeval, and in some cases based upon assumptions which would not bear examination. Probably No. iii is a very high standard.

It would have been better if, instead of paraphrasing, the writer had quoted my own words. For all the statements in the first paraphrase are wide of the truth. My point is not that the start should be made with crafts and the rest should come in as auxiliaries. On the contrary I have said that the whole of the general education should come through the crafts and simultaneously with their progress. This is wholly different from what the writer imputes to me. I do not know what happened in the Middle Ages. But I do know that the aim in the Middle Ages or any age was never to develop the whole man through crafts. The idea is original. That it may prove to be wrong does not affect the originality. And an original idea does not admit of a frontal attack unless it is tried on a sufficiently large scale. To say a priori that it is impossible is no argument.

Nor have I said that the formal training through the medium of reading and writing should come right at the end. On the contrary the formal training comes in at the very beginning. Indeed it is an integral part of the general equipment. I have indeed said, and I repeat here, that reading may come a little later, and writing may come last. But the whole process has to be finished within the first year, so that at the end of the first year in the school of my imagination a seven-year-old child, boy or girl, will have much more than the general information that any boy or girl has in the present primary school during the first year. He will read correctly and draw correct letters instead of making the daubs that the children generally do at present. The child will also know elementary additions and subtractions and the simple multiplication table. He will have learned all this through and while he has learned a productive craft, say spinning, by choice.

¹ K. T. Shah’s article appeared in Harijan, 31-7-1937.

The second paraphrase is just as unhappy as the first. For what I have claimed is that education through handicrafts should be self-supporting during the sum total of seven years I have assigned for it. I have specifically said that during the first two years it may mean a partial loss.

Mediaeval times may have been bad, but I am not prepared to condemn things simply because they are mediaeval. The spinning-wheel is undoubtedly mediaeval, but seems to have come to stay.
Though the article is the same it has become a symbol of freedom and unity as at one time, after the advent of the East India Company, it had become the symbol of slavery. Modern India has found in it a deeper and truer meaning than our forefathers had dreamt of. Even so, if the handicrafts were once symbols of factory labour, may they now be symbols and vehicles of education in the fullest and truest sense of the term. If the Ministers have enough imagination and courage, they will give the idea a trial in spite of the criticism, undoubtedly well- meant, of high educational officers and others especially when the criticism is based on imaginary premises.

Though the writer has been good enough to assume the possibility of Prof. K. T. Shah’s scheme of conscription being sound, he later on evidently repents of it. For he says:

The idea of conscripting teachers is to our mind an outrage. We should have in schools, where young children assemble, men and women who have voluntarily dedicated their lives to this profession so far as such a dedication is possible in this world, and who will bring sun-shine and zeal. We have made far too many experiments with our young men and women, but this one bids fair in its results to land us in a ruin from which there will be no escape for at least half a century. The whole thing is based on the notion that teaching is one of those arts for which no adequate training is necessary and that everyone is a born teacher. How a man of K. T. Shah’s eminence comes to hold it is inexplicable. The idea is a freak idea bound to be tragic in results if applied.
Again, bow can each and everyone train children in handicrafts, etc.?

Prof. Shah is well able to defend his proposition. But I would like to remind the writer that the existing teachers are not volunteers.
They are hirelings (the word is used in its natural sense) working for their bread and butter. Prof. Shah’s scheme does contemplate possession of patriotism, spirit of sacrifice, a certain amount of culture, and training in a handicraft, before they are taken up. His idea is substantial, quite feasible, and deserves the greatest consideration. If we have to wait till we have born teachers, we shall have to wait till the Judgement Day for them. I submit that teachers will have to be trained on a wholesale scale during the shortest term possible. This cannot be done unless the services of the existing educated young men and women are gently impressed. It will not be unless there is a general willing response from that body. They responded, however feebly, during the civil disobedience campaign. Will they fail to respond to the call for constructive service against maintenance money?

Then the writer asks:

(1) Are we not to allow for a great deal of wastage in raw materials when handled by little boys?
(2) Are the sales to be effected by a central organization? What about the cost of this?
(3) Are the people to be compelled to buy at these stores?
(4) What about the cases of those communities which are at present manufacturing these? What will be the reaction on these?

My answers are:

1. Of course there will be wastage, but there will be even at the end of the first year some gain by each pupil.
2. The State will absorb much of the material for its own requirements.
3. Nobody will be compelled to buy the nation’s children’s manufactures, but the nation is expected to buy with pardonable pride and patriotic pleasure what its children make for its needs.
4. There is hardly any competition in the products of village handicrafts. And care will be taken to manufacture things which do not come into unfair competition with any indigenous manufacturers. Thus khadi, village paper, palm gur and the like have no competitors.

Harijan, 16-10-1937
435. PROHIBITION AND EDUCATION

Mr. J. G. Gilson is the Secretary of the Christian High and Technical School, Balasore, and Director of Industrial Arts and Vocational Education for A. B. B. O. Mission. In sending some valuable literature on 'Rural Sewage Disposal and the Natural Sewage Treatment Process', he writes:

In general I find myself very much in agreement with your conclusions. I was especially pleased with your clear exposition of the fact that manual work, properly conducted, is the best means to intellectual development. I have found it hard to make teachers believe that anything else than textbooks and lectures and cramming for examination can contribute to this end. Your explanation of the point should help to make it clear to everyone. I was also pleased to note that you have appreciated the work done by a number of Mission schools in introducing the handwork curriculum in India.

On the other hand I cannot agree with you that education can, or should, be made self-supporting by the work of the students. . . . If children are kept at such work for 4 hours per day under competent supervision, they can no doubt pay for their keep and perhaps for the supervision as well. But such work has no educational value. It may even become as dulling to the intellect as poring over textbooks and listening to lectures.

In order for the children’s work to have educational value they must be given a variety of work to do, and as soon as they have learned one operation well they must be allowed to go on to something new. . . . But the product of their work will not likely be sufficient to support the school. It may contribute something toward the costs of the school.

But I see no reason why schools should be expected to be self-supporting. The education of the children, and continued education of adults, is a responsibility of the community, and it seems to me that in the present condition of India it should be the first and largest claim upon the public funds.

It is very unfortunate that prohibition and education should have been linked together in the discussions, and that the American experience with prohibition should have been brought into it in a way which shows a lack of understanding of American conditions. . . . If the American example is to be quoted let it be said that in America during the prohibition period there was no shortage of funds for education; indeed the schools were very rapidly improved during the period.

---

1 Only extracts are reproduced here.

Prohibition in America was not a failure in accomplishing an improvement in the condition of the common people, with the possible exception of the big cities where the majority of the people are European-born and where public opinion would not allow the enforcement of the law. The great mass of the American people outside the cities are total abstainers and drinking is looked upon as a social and moral disgrace just as it is in India; or at least it was so until 1933. Already a strong reaction has set in against the excesses of these past four years.

Prohibition failed politically in America because of the political power of the big cities, and because the brewers and others who stood to gain by the sale of liquor were willing to spend millions of dollars in newspaper propaganda, while the mass of the people were quite indifferent to what had ceased to be, for them, a pressing problem. It is the case of the exploitation of the country by the wealthy of the cities. The same problem you have to face in making prohibition a success in India. . . .

I do not wonder at Mr. Gilson’s scepticism about education through an industry being made wholly self-supporting, if it is at the same time to develop the mind of the pupil. This point is dealt with by me in another column. His testimony about American prohibition will be read with interest.

_Harijan_, 16-10-1937

436. IN SUPPORT

I completely agree with, nay, even humbly plead for your suggestion of teaching a child a useful handicraft scientifically and culturally and enabling it to produce from the moment it begins its training. No doubt it is a revolutionary proposal, but I agree with it completely. Its moral, cultural and economic value will be immense to the individual and to the nation. Not only will it promote dignity of labour, but self-reliance and proper-creative values of life. Our aim should be to promote a child’s intellectual, physical, moral and vocational needs. The last will teach the general principles of all the processes of production and at the same time give the child or youth practical training in the use of the simplest tools of all industries. Our ideal

1 Vide the preceding item.
should be a combination of instruction with productive work on the part of the young generation. This means a linking up of manual work with general instruction, and aims at giving a broad idea of the chief branches of industry with which manual work can be co-ordinated. Physical labour combined with an intellectual and moral effort should be our educational outlook. There should be no cleavage between brain work and manual work.

We should include in our system of primary or elementary education:

1. Mother tongue
2. Arithmetic
3. Natural science
4. Social science
5. Geography and history
6. Manual or polytechnical work
7. Physical culture
8. Art and music
9. Hindustani

The only question which, however, arises here is at what age a child’s education should begin. If it be at 5 or 6, can it be possible to start a useful handicraft at that age? What about the expenses in teaching it? It will not be easier and less expensive than spreading literacy. I would start a handicraft at the age of 8 or 10, because the use of implements requires a grasp and steadiness in handling and applying them to the object in view. But primary education must at least begin at the age of five or six. A child cannot be made to wait longer. We must have a ten years’ curricula to take the child to the matriculation standard in addition to the polytechnical training we intend to give it. I am, however, doubtful about the economic value of the products of these children especially in their early stages. They will not be saleable in a country where free trade and advanced fashions prevail and when the products themselves will not be durable or finished ones. If the State were to purchase them or take them in return for the service or aid rendered, what will it do with them? It would be better for the State to spend money directly on the education of children than to adopt this process. Of course the products of advanced boys, say, between 12 and 16 may be made marketable and therefore become an important item of income.

I would rather treat the problem of literacy on a different footing and face boldly the taxation and expenditure necessary for it.

The idea of a useful handicraft can be well developed in the advanced stages of primary (or secondary) education. It should be attempted to be made at least partly self-supporting, and after experience gained, fully self-supporting, if possible, on the basis of the value of its products. Only one danger will have to be guarded against, that cultural education of the body, mind and spirit does not become subordinated completely to the economic motive and economics of the school.

I also agree with your further suggestion of primary education being made equal to the present matriculation standard less English, but plus Hindustani (I would add). It means you include also secondary education in the system of primary education. Your idea is a complete scheme of school education of, say, ten years. I would add in this that it must be imparted through the mother tongue and through no other language. This will liberate the mind of the child and create in it a living interest in the problems of knowledge and life and give it a creative turn and outlook.

I admit here that education was largely self-supporting in mediaeval times, and could be made so in a general way if our social, economic and political organization and outlook were to remain mediaeval, that is, addicted to the old and narrow values of class and caste economy, society and polity. But today in a democratic, national and socialistic conception of life which has pervaded us, it cannot become so. The only organized power of the community with sanctions and resources behind it is the State. Hence it has to undertake this work. The old power groups—caste, class, guild, college, Church—have lost their power, sanction and resources, and do not exist in that larger sense of the old times. People also have no faith in them. All social power has shifted to the political group which is also the economic and social force even in India. Therefore two ideologies, one mediaeval and one modern, one pluralistic and functional, and the other unitary and territorial, cannot work together.

There was no universal education in the past, no democratic unitary State, no national equalitarian outlook.

The idea of conscription for educational service is not now a novel one but is worth following. Let the Congress and its Provincial Ministers in their official capacity appeal to the intelligentsia of the country and call upon all who have the education of the people at heart to rally to the assistance of new Governments for the spread of literacy, culture and education. It will establish a mass contact on a new basis, and not merely on an economic and political basis. It will also serve the higher purposes of awakening, consolidation and organization of mass power and intelligence.

When I first wrote on self-supporting primary education through an industry I had invited educationist fellow-workers to favour me with their opinions. Professor S. V. Puntambekar was among the first, to send me his. He sent me a long reasoned reply. But for want of space I was unable to deal with it earlier. The foregoing is the most relevant portion of his opinion. For the sake of abridgement I have cut out portions dealing with literacy and college education. For at the forthcoming Conference on the 22nd and 23rd instant the main discussion will centre round self-supporting primary education through an industry.

_Harijan,_ 16-10-1937

437. LETTER TO MARGARETE SPIEGEL

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 16, 1937

CHI. AMLA,

Khurshehbhn tells me you were complaining of absence of letters from me. You have never been out of my mind. I have not written because I thought you did not need to hear from me. I knew that you were getting on quite well. But do tell me all about you. Here things are much the same as you left them. Do drop in some time, if you can. Remember me to your mother.

Love.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

Spiegel Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

438. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

October 16, 1937

No invitation from Nagpur’ as yet. You may not prompt it. You will see before this the result of the Nariman case.4

Love.

From the original: C.W. 3822. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6978

1 The subscription is in Gujarati.
2 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
3 For the All-India Women’s Conference
4 Vide “Statement to the Press”, 16-10-1937
439. A LETTER

October 16, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

Thanks. I am well. Only fatigue overtakes me if I speak. I fancy that God does not want me to leave the work to which I feel He has called me. If it is my egoism that won’t let me rest, I shall pay the deserved penalty.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

440. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 16, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

It will be a reflection on my art if you do not succeed. Vinoba, Maganlal, Chhotelal, Panditji, Kaka and Devdas have surpassed me each in his own field. You are still on the first step. Many other names occur to me. My task is to teach the mantra of truth and non-violence. He who assimilates it may soar in his own sphere and I stand apart. You need not write the weekly notes. You must train yourself in the use of your left hand. You will be able to train it more easily than I did. I am returning Prema’s postcard. A cart or car will be required for Perinbehn tomorrow at 1 o’clock.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11578

441. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

WARDHAGANI,

October 16, 1937

I am glad to be able to place before the public the statement made by Mr. K. F. Nariman instead of the considered judgment at which D. N. Bahadurji and I had independently arrived in the Nariman-Sardar case. It was a painful duty that I had undertaken and then at my instance and request, D. N. Bahadurji. But for his most valuable assistance and extraordinary labour he put into the work, I might have with the present state of my health broken down under the

1 Vide “K. F. Nariman’s Statement” burden. The evidence that was produced before me was voluminous. I have read every line of it but Bahadurji to whom I transferred all the papers not only read every line of the bulky papers but took elaborate notes, read the law about the intricate case of the election of 1934 and prepared the said judgment wholly independently of me. It occupies 14 foolscap sheets of close and condensed marshalling of facts and reasoning. He was good enough to come down to Segaon with that judgment and pass the whole of Thursday with me. I then wrote a concurring note. I had hoped that Mr. K. F. Nariman would be with us on that day but he was unable to come. I then suggested that on his return to Bombay, Bahadurji should send for Mr. Nariman to show him his judgment and my concurring note and that if on reading them Mr. K. F. Nariman could out of conviction accept both the judgment and my note and himself make a public statement, we should simply be satisfied with giving copies of our judgment to the parties but withhold it from the public and let Mr. Nariman’s statement take its place. My suggestion commended itself to Bahadurji. On Thursday night, I sent Mr. Mahadev Desai to Bombay with my notes to meet Bahadurji and Mr. Nariman. Mr. Nariman with his counsel went to Bahadurji’s office and read our judgment and I am exceedingly happy to be able to place his statement before the public in the full hope that they and the Press will forget the past bitter and unseemly controversy that had robbed the public activity in Bombay of its usual zest and joy. I congratulate Mr. Nariman upon his thoughtful and wholehearted confession. I owe a debt of deep gratitude to Bahadurji for his having shared labours with me from a high sense of public duty and his unvaried affection for me.

The Hindustan Times, 17-10-1937

442. SELF-SUPPORTING EDUCATION

Government means the Congress Governments in the seven Provinces. But just because the Congress has formed Governments, there is no reason to believe that the attitude of the Congress-minded people would suddenly change. Even though the constructive programme of the Congress has gone on since the great change in 1920 it cannot be said that a lively interest has been created among

1 Vide “Note on Nariman-Sardar Case”, 14-10-1937
Congressmen in this matter. What then can we say about those who are outside the Congress? Even though the constructive programme has not been as popular as the destructive (if one may without impropriety use the adjective “destructive” for a non-violent programme) or negative programme, the Congress has kept it up since 1920. The Congress never dropped that programme and quite a few Congressmen have adopted it. Hence, whatever could be achieved in this field has been achieved only by Congressmen, and progress too can be expected only where Congress Governments have been formed. But just because the Congress has taken up office, those who have faith in the constructive programme should not slaken their efforts. Nor should they become complacent. Now that the Congress has formed Governments, their duty is to be more alert, more industrious, more studious. Only if this happens can the hopes entertained of the Congress Governments be fulfilled. Congress Government means a democratic government responsible to the people. If the people want, they can throw out such a government. It is based on the will and authority of the people. Hence, if Congressmen are keen, they can, and unless they are keen they cannot, get the constructive programme accepted and implemented. The Government has no independent power, i.e., no physical force. The Congress has voluntarily given up that power. The British Government wields that power. When the Congress Government has to resort to the use of the British power, that is, physical force, it should be regarded as the lowering of the tricolour. It should be regarded that, from that day the Congress Government has ceased to be. But if the people do not follow the Congress, that is, the Congress Governments, or if non-violence has not entered their hearts, the Government which today appears glorious will lose its glory tomorrow.

And so, Congressmen who have faith in the constructive programme should wake up. The scheme of education that I have presented is also a substantial part of the constructive programme. It is not my intention to suggest that the Congress has adopted the form I am giving it now. But I am firmly convinced that what I am writing now was implicit in everything I have said or written since 1920 about national schools, and now that the occasion has arisen, it has found prompt expression.

Now, if primary education is to be imparted through a craft, that task can be carried out for the present only by the people who have faith in the spinning-wheel and other village industries. For, on the subject of the charkha, which occupies a central position in cottage industries, the Spinners’ Association has collected considerable information and on other industries the Village Industries Association has been collecting it. Hence, in my view, whatever immediate provisions we can make can only be through the charkha and allied crafts. But all those who have faith in the charkha are not teachers. Every carpenter is no authority on carpentry. One who has no knowledge of the science of the craft cannot impart general education through the craft. And so, only those who are interested in the science of education and have faith in the charkha, etc., can introduce the scheme of primary education which I have suggested. I am reproducing the letter\(^1\) from Shri Dilkhush Diwanji with the idea that it would be useful to such persons.

[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 17-10-1937

443. PASSING AWAY OF A WONDERFUL HARIJAN WORKER\(^2\)

I had known Manilal Kothari even before the Harijan campaign gathered momentum. And from the day I came to know him I had never once noticed in him the faintest trace of a feeling of untouchability. He was always prepared to face the risks that are inevitable while trying to help Harijans. He had a flair almost unique for collecting funds for noble causes. This is no exaggeration. He had many capacities; but he will always be remembered for his ability to collect money for benevolent causes. He had collected large funds for Harijan work, and had offered to collect as much money as I wanted if he recovered. He used to receive requests from all quarters for collecting money. Manilal was a very sensitive man. Any altruistic work would interest him. His eagerness to serve made him plunge into any kind of danger. His death will no doubt be a great loss to his family, and also to Harijans. In many other spheres of service as well his absence will be felt for a long time.

May God grant peace to his soul.
[From Gujarati]
Harijanbandhu, 17-10-1937

---

\(^1\) Not translated here. The correspondent had been running a small craft-based school for the last two years. He whole-heartedly supported Gandhiji’s ideas on education on the basis of his own experience.

\(^2\) This appeared under “My Notes”.

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 345
DEAR FRIEND,

I am glad you are liberally taking passages from C. F. Andrews’s pen in your anthology of devotional literature. For Charlie Andrews is a man of prayer and deep faith. He is a Christian to the marrow, but his Christ is not the Jesus Christ of a narrow sect. His Christ is the Anointed of humanity. He sees Him in Ramakrishna, Chaitanya and many other teachers whom I can name, and who are of other faiths. We in India, who know him, call him Deenabandhu, friend of the afflicted. Our friendship is of long standing; we are like blood-brothers. There are no secrets between us. Charlie is as simple as a child, forgiving and generous to a fault. He is loving and lovable like a woman who is purity personified. In jest I call him half woman and half man—but I mean it.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

KIRBY PAGE, ESQ.
LA HABRA
CALIFORNIA

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

CHI. PRABHA,

They will expect you here at Segaon on the 31st—even if I have not returned. I am sure to return on the 1st or 2nd. I shall not be going to the Frontier without returning to Segaon first.

You have to regain here the weight you have lost. Obtain Jayaprakash’s permission—for staying here. The cold has started here. Bring enough covering for the night, otherwise your blanket which is with me will go back to you. But it is a good deal worn out now. Chimanlal is all right now, though he is still in bed. Pyarelal’s sister, Sushila, is here. Surendra also arrived yesterday. Prema\textsuperscript{1} is coming today. They will all have left when you come.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3508

\textbf{446. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI}

\textsc{Segaon,}

\textit{October 17, 1937}

\textsc{Chi. Mathuradas,}

I cannot swallow what you say in your letter. My conception of Swadeshi is not what you take it to be. I have no hand in bringing in Jairamdas. But I was not shocked at the mention of his name. They wanted someone from the Working Committee. And this is something for which it is good to have an outsider. The same thing had to be done at Kanpur. Our groups are not meant to suffocate us. They must be nurtured and in turn they must nurture others. What should Utkal, Assam or the Frontier Province do?

I should be held responsible for Brelvi. I had insisted on having him. I know his limitations. Who amongst us is without limitations? There should be definitely one Muslim member on such a Committee. And I could find none better than Brelvi. About the exhibition, I shall reply in \textit{Harijan}. That will make things easy for you. Besides, that problem has become rather complicated. Do come on 22nd and 23rd if you can make it. I have asked them to send you an invitation. But you can consider this letter itself an invitation.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textit{BAPU}

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

\textsuperscript{1} Premabehn Kantak
447. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

Wardha,
October 17, 1937

Andamans prisoners may not be forgotten. To remind me that I have made promise to them that I would strain every nerve to secure their release, I have received three letters from three provinces telling me that treatment of prisoners who have been brought from the Andamans is worse than there, that there seems to be no prospect of their early release and that if no release was forthcoming they might have to fall back upon the only weapon open to them, that is, hunger-strike. I hope that they will not resort to hunger-strike so long as they know that the public is not supine about their welfare. For myself I may assure them that I am not sleeping over the matter. And I urge the public and the Press to keep a vigilant eye on this urgent matter. I would appeal to Provincial Governments which have received these prisoners to accord to them the treatment which the country expects them to give. Provincial Governments which are in such matters now responsible to the people may not disregard the popular wish. I expect that in this there is no difference between the Congress and other organizations.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 18-10-1937

448. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

Segaon, Wardha,
October 18, 1937

MY DEAR UNTOUCHABLE,

Some people have the patience to wait for titles till they come to them. You have no patience and therefore your titles are generally well-chosen. Only the first was ill-chosen. Who will call you a rebel? Not I. Idiot, of course. But I forget. That was a title given to you. You willingly accepted it. Untouchable you are, as all of the princely blood are. I wonder what will be the next choice.

Today I am taking it easy. Instead of writing much, I am sleeping. The article I wrote last night.

I do not remember any question remaining unanswered. I am too lazy to pull out a part of a letter I have kept. Rameshwari had a wonderful tour in Kathiawar. Her descriptive letters are all very good. And they are in very readable Hindi. Correspondents speak of her in glowing terms. The tour has almost ended. The Nariman confession you must have seen. The patients are well.

Love.

---

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3823. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6979

449. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,

4.30 p.m., October 18, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

This is the second letter I am writing to you today. This is to congratulate you on your progress in Hindi of which your Hindi letter is ample evidence. You will presently have a chaste style too. You must read Ramayana regularly and perhaps a Hindi newspaper. Never mind the newspaper however. What Shakespeare is to English, Tulsidas is to Hindi. Therefore I should be satisfied if you read Tulsidas only. Of course a good grammar is a necessity.

Yes, do not resist Shummy and stay there as long as he wants you to and keeps happy himself.

You would have more quiet too for your address which should be original, terse and to the point. You must not be discursive. Do not take much time over the past work. But devote yourself to the future programme—bold, universal and constructive. Above all it must be practical and in terms of the villages and yet such as your members can reach. They won’t work in the villages, they can for the villages. Is not this a good letter?

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3619. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6428

---

1 As President at the All-India Women’s Conference, Nagpur
450. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

SEGAON,
October 18, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA.

After your last postcard, there has been nothing from you. Why so? Mridulabehn\(^{1}\) has requisitioned you. I have replied that if you are willing to join I will not dissuade you, but that I won’t force you. Perhaps she has already met you. Premabehn arrived yesterday. The patients have all recovered.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. VIJAYABEHN
C/O NARANBHAI PATEL
VAROD, BARDOLI TALUKA
TAPTI VALLEY RLY.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7074. Also C.W. 4566. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

451. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 18, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV.

I will see about Balwantsinha.

Today I am simply resting. I wish to write more, but it may not be possible. But you won’t be short of matter. Sharda will go there in the conveyance which we have here. Please send her back in the same tomorrow.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11579

\(^{1}\) Mridula Sarabhai
452. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

October 18, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

Do send for all the three.¹ We shall admit them. I also like the suggestion regarding Gopalrao. But what you have written is all right. I am writing to Nayakam.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Accept Vora’s suggestion. I have read about Armstrong² earlier. I shall make use of it.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7707

453. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[After] October [18,]³ 1937

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter.

What will you do about the khadi that has been produced?

Probably you don’t get Nalwadi’s Sevavritta⁴. I am sending a copy today. You will find in it surprising figures about the takli.

I had a letter from Rameshwaribehn. She can write in Hindi. I got the fourth letter yesterday describing her tour [of Saurashtra]. She has described the whole tour, and the entire description is interesting. Nanalal was here. He also praised your work very much. Introduce whatever changes are feasible in accordance with the articles I am currently writing on the subject of education. Do you

¹ A marginal note runs as follows: “Who are these three? Gopalrao is one; who are the other two? Please send the names of all the three to Nayakamji.”

² General Armstrong, founder of Hampton Institute; vide “Speech at Educational Conference-I”, 22-10-1937

³ From the reference to Rameshwari Nehru’s tour; vide “Letter to Amrit Kaur”, 18-10-1937

⁴ Gramsevavritta think there is anything worth taking from them for the Bal Mandir? What is the age-group of the children in the Bal Mandir?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]
I have sent you a wire asking you to come here.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./II. Also C.W. 8542. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

454. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR
October 19, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I observe silence for the most part in order to feel fresh for 22nd and 23rd. And I am using the right hand. So I had better give you a few lines.

Sir J[oginder Singh] is coming nearer as you will see from the enclosed. You may destroy it. I am not writing the foreword. I must not.

The news you give me about Charlie is bad. You will realize still greater limitations in me, if you will make me responsible for all the blemishes in all who come in contact with me, not excluding Idiots, Rebels, Untouchables and what not.

I suppose it is no use your writing to Mahmudabad1. Heaven knows what the upshot is going to be of all this mud-slinging.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3824. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6980

1 Ruler of Mahmudabad

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
455. LETTER TO M. A. JINNAH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 19, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

I carefully went through your speech at Lucknow, and I felt deeply hurt over your misunderstanding of my attitude. My letter was in answer to a specially private message you had sent to me. It represented my deepest feeling. The letter was purely personal. Were you right in using it as you did?

Of course, as I read it, the whole of your speech is a declaration of war. Only I had hoped you would reserve poor me as bridge between the two. I see that you want no bridge. I am sorry. Only it takes two to make a quarrel. You won’t find me one, even if I cannot become a peace-maker.

This is not for publication, unless you desire it. It is written in all good faith and out of an anguished heart.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

The Hindustan Times, 16-6-1938

456. LETTER TO PARIKSHITLAL L. MAJMUDAR

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 19, 1937

BHAI PARIKSHITLAL,

The money collected for the Gidwani Memorial was of course well spent. And I consider it a good omen for the students’ hostel that the inauguration ceremony of the Bhangi Students’ Hostel will be performed by Principal Anandshankar-bhai on the Dhanteras day. I

1 As President at the 25th session of the All-India Muslim League held from October 15 to 18; vide "M.A. Jinnah’s Speech at Lucknow", 15-10-1937
3 Gandhi-Jinnah correspondence was released to the Press on June 15, 1938.
4 For the addressee’s reply, vide “Letter From M. A. Jinnah”, 5-11-1937
5 Anandshankar Bapubhai Dhruv
6 Aso Vad 13 of the Vikram era hope that the citizens of Kheda will make this hostel their own and will go on helping it in every way.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3965

457. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 19, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have read Anandshankarbhais manuscript again. Please glance through the changes I have made. If you have nothing to suggest regarding them, then wrap the thing in strong paper and despatch it by registered book post. The letter\(^1\) is also enclosed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11581

458. LETTER TO THAKOREDAS NANAVATI

October 19, 1937

BHAI THAKOREDAS,

Chi. Amritlal has no visible symptoms of any disease. He works and gets no fever at all. But he does not put on weight. He takes enough of ghee and milk. He has lost a little weight since coming here, but has more energy. There is of course no reason for worry. I have often suggested to him that he should go there but he does not feel inclined at all. I, therefore, do not force him. Thus what Amritlal wrote to you was not incorrect in any way. I do feel, however, that he did not give you all the facts. He should have informed you about his weight, etc. There is no point in concealing such things. Of course, if one has a slight headache one needn’ t write about it. And you don’t expect it, either. Having said all this, I advise you not to worry. There is absolutely no need. Let him follow his own inclination.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10739

\(^1\) This is not available.
DEAR DOCTOR TANDY,

With reference to your hospital scheme, which you were good enough to explain to me today, you tell me that you propose to add family quarters for your patients' families who would desire to supply the patients with food prepared by them.

My experience, in what little hospital work I have done, has shown me that it is a harmful concession to prejudice. For the food cooked by private parties is rarely cooked according to directions. Doting relatives disregard restrictions, pamper patients, and retard recovery where their false affection does not prove fatal to the patients.

I would, therefore, strongly advise you, for the sake of the patients themselves, not to encourage private cooking for patients under your care, even as you would not allow relatives to administer to them drugs of their own choice.

If the patients bring families, they can see the former only at stated times and under proper restrictions.

I know that there are, unfortunately, so called higher castes, who observe untouchability as to food. In my opinion you cannot afford to pander to such prejudice, especially at a time when untouchability is fast dying.

What I hope you will do is to run a strictly vegetarian kitchen for those who would not on any account take flesh, meat or fish.¹

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 4444. Courtesy: Dr. William H. Tandy

¹ A Hindi translation of this, signed by Gandhiji, was also enclosed as he thought it would be more useful to the addressee for showing it to the patients and their relatives.
460. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 20, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Pattani¹ has been most wonderful. I am not sending anything today. Tandy was here. We finished [the job] in half an hour. He seemed to be a very good man. No, I am not sending anything today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11582

461. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,

October 20/21, 1937

MY DEAR REBEL,

I have your note. You can help wanting to be near by being near me during the arranged times and being elsewhere outside those times. What cannot be cured must be endured cheerfully. In cold weather, you must be sufficiently wrapped no matter how unfashionable you look. How about hot water with salt and soda, linseed and the steam?

If you continue to insist on Khurshed being with you she will listen.

I do understand what you say about maidens. I have my own ideas too on the matter. Of that when we meet. I hope you have got rid completely of your cold. Anasuya² and Indumati³ came in today from Ahmedabad and several others.

Love.

ROBBER

[PS.]

Yours of today. You won’t want me in Nagpur for your own sake, if I have no invitation from there. But wait. It will come in its

¹ Prabhashankar Pattani
² Anasuya Sarabhai, a labour leader of Ahmedabad
³ Indumati Chimanlal Sheth own time. Don’t force matters. Yes, Grace Lancaster will come when you are here. But why say “if”? Can there be an “if” if you go to Nagpur?

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3825. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6981

462. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

October 21, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Work only as much as you can. See that you don’t fall ill. Give enough time to the Muslim friends who are coming. I have told Shankerlal also.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11583

463. LETTER TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

[On or before October 22, 1937]

I am trying to keep myself fit for Calcutta. I am praying to God to keep me fit. After I am there, you will have to see that I have no appointments or visits save about the Andamans prisoners and the Working Committee business.

The Hindu, 22-10-1937

464. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

SEGAON, WARDHA,

October 22, 1937

CHI. AMBUJAM.²

How I wish you were here today for the Educational Conference. But this is written for Kamala’s sake. She has no desire to go to Madras for her mother’s sake, but does want me to see to it that her mother does not suffer for want of medical assistance because of her

¹ The report is date-lined “Wardha, October 22”.
² The superscription and subscription are in Hindi.

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 357
poverty. I would like you to see to this by finding out really whether she wants or not. And if she does, you help her to the extent of her want. All this commission I entrust to you in the belief that you will collect from me what you spend. What about the Director of Hindi Prachar? I hope you are all getting on well. I leave for Calcutta on 25th. Returning about 1st November.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the original: Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

465. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

October 22, 1937

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. I have torn it up. There is no possibility at all of my going to the Frontier before the 7th. I hope to return to Wardha on the 1st or the 2nd.

You may, therefore, certainly come over as planned.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3504

466. SPEECH AT EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE-I

October 22, 1937

Gandhiji, after thanking all those who had come in response to the invitations, said whether he was there as Chairman or member, he had invited them in order to listen to their opinion and advice on the propositions he had formulated, especially of those who were opposed to them. He asked for a free, frank and full discussion, as he regretted his inability to meet the friends outside of the pandal for reasons of health.

The propositions, he said, referred both to primary education and college

1 This and the following item are reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s article “The Primary Question”. The Conference was held on the occasion of the Silver Jubilee of Marwari Shiksha Mandal under the presidency of Gandhiji. The morning session was held from 8.30 a.m. to 11.30 a.m.

2 Vide "Questions Befored Educational Conference" education, but they would largely have to address themselves to a consideration of primary education. He had included secondary in primary education because primary education was the only education so called that was available to a very small fraction of the people in our villages, many of which he had seen during his peregrinations since 1915. He was speaking exclusively about the needs of these rural boys and girls, the bulk of whom were illiterate. He had no experience of college education, though he had come in contact with hundreds of college boys, had heart-to-heart chats and correspondence with them, knew their needs, failings and the disease they suffered from. But they might restrict themselves to a consideration of primary education. For, the moment that primary question was solved the secondary one of college education would also be solved.

He was deliberately of opinion that the present system of primary education was not only wasteful but harmful. Most of the boys were lost to the parents and to the occupation to which they were born. They picked up evil habits, affected urban ways, and got a smattering of something which may be anything else but not education. The remedy, he thought, lay in educating them by means of vocational or manual training. He had some experience of it having trained his own sons and the children on the 'Tolstoy Farm in South Africa', belonging to all castes and creeds, who were good, bad and indifferent, through some manual training, e. g., carpentry or shoe-making which he had learnt from Kallenbach who had training in a Trappist monastery. His sons and all these children, he was confident, had lost nothing, though he could not give them an education that either satisfied himself or them, as the time at his disposal was limited and his preoccupations numerous.

The core of his emphasis was not the occupations but education through manual training—all education, of letters, history, geography, mathematics, science, etc., through manual training. It might be objected that in the Middle Ages nothing else was taught. But the occupational training then was far from serving an educational purpose. In this age those born to certain professions had forgotten them, taken to clerical careers, and were lost to the countryside. As a result, go wherever we might, it was impossible to find an efficient carpenter or a smith in an average village. The handicrafts were nearly lost, and the spinning-wheel being neglected was taken to Lancashire where it was developed, thanks to the English genius for developing crafts, to an extent that was to be seen today This he said irrespective of his views on industrialism.

The remedy lay in imparting the whole art and science of a craft through practical training and therethrough imparting education. Teaching of takli-spinning, for instance, presupposed imparting of knowledge of various varieties of cotton,

---

1 Vide "An Autobiography", sub-title "As Schoolmaster"
different soils in different provinces of India, the history of the ruin of the handicraft, its political reasons which would include the history of the British rule in India, knowledge of arithmetic, and so on. He was trying the experiment on his ‘little grandson’ who scarcely felt that he was being taught, for he all the while played and laughed and sang.

He was specially mentioning the takli in order that they might put to him questions about it, and as he had much to do with it, and seen its power and its romance; also because the handicraft of making cloth was the only one which could be universally taught and because the takli required no expense. It had more than proved its worth. The constructive programme, to the extent it had been carried out, had led to the formation of the Congress Ministries in seven provinces, and their success also would depend on the extent to which we carried it out.

He had contemplated a seven years’ course which so far as the takli was concerned would culminate in practical knowledge of weaving (including dyeing, designing, etc.). The custom for all the cloth we could produce was there ready.

He was very keen on finding the expenses of the teacher through the product of the manual work of his pupils, as he was convinced that there was no other way to carry education to crores of our children. We could not wait until we had the necessary revenue, until the Viceroy reduced the military expenditure, and so on. He asked them to remember that this primary education would include the elementary principles of sanitation, hygiene, nutrition, of doing their own work, helping parents at home, etc. The present generation of boys knew no cleanliness, no self-help, and physically were C 3. He would therefore give compulsory physical training through musical drill, etc.

The speaker had been accused of being opposed to literary training. Far from it. He simply wanted to show the way in which it should be given. The self-supporting aspect had also been attacked. Whereas, it was said, we should be expending millions on primary education, we were going to exploit the children. It was also feared that there would be enormous waste. This fear was falsified by experience. As for exploiting or burdening the children, he would ask whether it was burdening the child to save him from a disaster. Takli was a good enough toy to play with. It was no less a toy because it was a productive toy. Even today children helped their parents to a certain extent. The Segaon children knew the details of agriculture better than he, having worked with their parents on the fields. Whilst the child would be encouraged to spin and help his parents, with agricultural jobs, he would also be made to feel that he did not belong only to his parents, but to the village and to the country and that he must make some return to them. That was the only way. He would tell the Ministers that they would make children helpless by doling out education to them. They would make them self-confident and brave by their paying for their own education by their own labour.

1 Presumably, Kanam; vide “Letter to Vidya A. Hingorani”, 6-10-1937
This system was to be common to all—Hindus, Mussalmans, Parsis, Christians. Why did he not lay any stress on religious instruction, he was asked. Because he was teaching them practical religion, the religion of self-help.

The State, continued Gandhiji, was bound to find employment, if they needed it, for all the pupils thus trained. As for teachers, Prof. Shah had suggested the method of conscription. He had demonstrated its value by citing instances from Italy and other lands. If Mussolini could impress the youth of Italy for the service of his country, why should not we? Was it fair to label as slavery the compulsory enlistment of service of our youth for a year or longer before they began their career? The youths had contributed a lot to the success of the movement for freedom during the past 17 years, and the speaker would call upon them to freely give a year of their lives to the service of the nation. Legislation, if it was necessary in this respect, would not be compulsion, as it could not be passed without the consent of the majority of our representatives.

Gandhiji would therefore ask them to say whether this imparting of education through manual training appealed to them. For him to make it self-supporting would be a test of its efficiency. The children ought at the end of seven years be able to pay for their instruction and be earning units.

College education was largely an urban proposition. He would not say that it was an unmitigated failure, as primary education was, but the results were fairly disappointing. Why should anyone of the graduates have to be unemployed?

Takli he had proposed as a concrete instance because Vinoba had the largest amount of practical experience in it, and he was there to answer their objections, if any. Kakasaheb would also be able to tell them something, though his experience was more theoretical than practical. He had especially drawn Gandhiji’s attention to Armstrong’s Education for Life, especially the chapter on “Education of the Hand”. The late Madhusudan Das was a lawyer, but he was convinced that without the use of our hands and feet our brain would be atrophied, and even if it worked it would be the home of Satan. Tolstoy had taught the same lesson through many of his tales. Gandhiji concluded by inviting the attention of the audience to the very fundamentals of his plan of self-supporting primary education:

We have communal quarrels—not that they are peculiar to us. England had also its Wars of the Roses, and today British Imperialism is the enemy of the world. If we want to eliminate communal strife and international strife, we must start with foundations pure and strong by rearing our younger generation on the education I have adumbrated. That plan springs out of non-violence. I suggested it in connection with the nation’s resolve to effect complete prohibition, but I may tell you that even if there was to be no loss of revenue, and our exchequer was full, this education would be a sine qua non if we did not want to urbanize our boys. We have to make them true representatives of our culture, our civilization, of the true genius of our nation. We cannot do so otherwise than by giving them a course of self-supporting primary education. Europe is no example for us. It plans its programmes in terms of violence because it believes in violence. I would be the last to minimize the achievement of Russia, but the whole structure is based on force and violence. If India has resolved to eschew violence, this system of education becomes an integral part of the discipline she has to go through. We are told that England expends millions on education, America also does so but we forget that all that wealth is obtained through exploitation. They have reduced the art of exploitation to a science and might well give their boys the costly education they do. We cannot, will not, think in terms of exploitation, and we have no alternative but this plan of education which is based on non-violence.¹

1 K. T. Shah’s article appeared in Harijan, 31-7-1937.

Harijan, 30-10-1937

467. SPEECH AT EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE-II

October 22, 1937

In the afternoon Gandhiji opened the session² with answering some of the criticisms. Takli was not the only thing, but that was the only thing which could be universalized. There was paper-making, gur-making from palms, and so on. It would be the function of the Ministers to find out what handicraft would suit what school best. He would warn those who were enamoured of the machine that there was every danger of men being turned into machines with the emphasis on the machine. For those who wanted to live under the machine-age his scheme would be useless, but he would also tell them that it would be impossible to keep villagers alive by means of machines. Where there were 300 million living machines, it was idle to think of bringing in new dead machinery. Dr. Zakir Husain was not right when he said that the scheme was educationally sound, irrespective of the ideological background.³ A lady who knew the project method was visiting Gandhiji the other day, and she said that there was a vast difference between the project method and Gandhiji’s scheme. But he would not ask them to accept the scheme without conviction. If our own people acted ¹ This was followed by a discussion in which Zakir Husain, Abdul Huq, Sauda-mini Mehta, K. T. Shah, Tijare, Principal of Khamgaon National School, Bhagwat, Dr. Syed Mahmud, and Balubhai Thakore participated.

² Held from 2.30 p.m. to 5 p.m.
³ Zakir Husain had opened the discussion in the morning with the remarks that he welcomed the proposals as a sound educational proposition no matter whether one believed in urban civilization or rural, violence or non-violence.
on the square, there would be no slaves but perfect artisans produced from these schools. Any labour taken from the children should certainly be worth two pice an hour.

But he warned them against accepting anything out of their regard for him. He was near death’s door and would not dream of thrusting anything down people’s throats. The scheme must be accepted after full and mature consideration so that it may not have to be given up in a little while. He agreed with Prof. Shah that a State was not worth anything which could not provide for its unemployed. But providing doles was not the solution of unemployment. He would provide every one of them with work and give them food if not money. God did not create us to eat, drink and be merry but to earn our bread in the sweat of our brow.¹

_Harijan,_ 30-10-1937

468. CIVIL LIBERTY

Gurudev has given the poetry of Civil Liberty.² It bears reproduction in a weekly journal like _Harijan_, although the statement has gone round the world. The reader will find it in another column. It is a paraphrase of “Work out thine own salvation”³ or “Man is his own enemy and his own friend.”

Civil liberty is not criminal liberty. When law and order are under popular control, the Ministers in charge of the Department cannot hold the portfolio for a day if they act against the popular will. It is true that the Assemblies are not sufficiently representative of the whole people. Nevertheless the suffrage is wide enough to make it representative of the nation in matters of law and order. In seven provinces the Congress rules. It seems to be assumed by some persons that, in these provinces at least, individuals can say and do what they like. But so far as I know the Congress mind, it will not tolerate any such licence. Civil liberty means the fullest liberty to say and do what one likes within the ordinary law of the land. The word ‘ordinary’ has ¹ Among those who spoke after Gandhiji were: Vinoba Bhave, Dr. P. C. Ray, D. B. Kalelkar, K. T. Shah, Deva Sharma, M. S. Hussain, Nana Athayale, N. R. Malkani, Nanabhai Bhatt, B. G. Kher, Subbarayan and Biswanath Das. After the first day’s proceedings the Conference converted itself into a committee to consider the propositions formulated by Gandhiji.

² A message was sent by Rabindranath Tagore to the Conference on Civil Liberty in India held in London on October 17.
³ _Bhagavad Gita_, vi. 5

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 363
been purposely used here. The Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code, not to speak of the Special Powers Legislation, contain provisions which the foreign rulers have enacted for their own safety. These provisions can be easily identified, and must be ruled out of operation. The real test, however, is the interpretation by the Working Committee of the power of the Ministers of Law and Order. Subject, therefore, to the general instructions laid down by the Working Committee for the guidance of Congress Ministers, the Statutory Powers, limited in the manner indicated by me, must be exercised by the Ministers against those who, in the name of civil liberty, preach lawlessness in the popular sense of the term.

It has been suggested that Congress Ministers who are pledged to non-violence cannot resort to legal processes involving punishments. Such is not my view of the non-violence accepted by the Congress. I have personally, not found a way out of punishments and punitive restrictions in all conceivable cases. No doubt punishments have to be non-violent, if such an expression is permissible in this connection. Just as violence has its own technique, known by the military science, which has invented means of destruction unheard of before, non-violence has its own science and technique. Non-violence in politics is a new weapon in the process of evolution. Its vast possibilities are yet unexplored. The exploration can take place only if it is practised on a big scale and in various fields. Congress Ministers, if they have faith in non-violence, will undertake the explorations. But whilst they are doing this, or whether they do so or not, there is no doubt that they cannot ignore incitements to violence and manifestly violent speech, even though they may themselves run the risk of being styled violent. When they are not wanted, the public will only have to signify its disapproval through its representatives. In the absence of definite instructions from the Congress, it would be proper for the Ministers to report, what they consider is violent behaviour of any member of the public, to their own Provincial Congress Committee, or the Working Committee, and seek instructions. If the superior authority does not approve of their recommendations, they may offer to resign. They may not allow things to drift so far as to have to summon the aid of the Military. In my opinion, it would amount to political bankruptcy when any Minister is obliged to fall back on the Military, which does not belong to the people, and which, in any scheme of non-violence, must be ruled out of count for the observance of internal peace.
One interpretation I put upon the India Act is that it is an unconscious challenge to Congressmen to demonstrate the virtue of non-violence and the sincerity of their conviction about it. If the Congress can give such a demonstration, most of the safeguards fall into desuetude, and the Congress can achieve its goal without a violent struggle, and also without civil disobedience. If the Congress has not impregnated the people with the non-violent spirit, it has to become a minority, and remain in opposition, unless it will alter its creed.

_Harijan_, 23-10-1937

469. INDIAN INDUSTRY

The question is often asked: What is an Indian industry? It is asked generally regarding Indian exhibitions. Formerly it used to be claimed that any industry that was conducted in India was an Indian industry. Thus a mill manned by non-domiciled Europeans bringing capital, skilled man-power and machinery from abroad was considered to be an Indian industry even though it could be proved to be harmful to the masses. From that we have travelled a long distance. An industry to be Indian must be demonstrably in the interest of the masses; it must be manned by Indians both skilled and unskilled. Its capital and machinery should be Indian and the labour employed should have a living wage and be comfortably housed, while the welfare of the children of the labourers should be guaranteed by the employers. This is an ideal definition. Only the A. I. S. A. and the A.I.V.I.A. can perhaps barely satisfy that definition. For even these Associations have much leeway to make up. Nevertheless complete conformation to the definition is their immediate goal.

But between that definition and the one that was the vogue even with the Congress before 1920 there are many shades of definitions. The Congress definition has generally been all goods other than mill-cloth manufactured in India. The great mill industry may generally be claimed to be an Indian industry. But, in spite of its ability to compete with Japan and Lancashire, it is an industry that exploits the masses and deepens their poverty in exact proportion to its success over khadi. In the modern craze for wholesale industrialization, my presentation has been questioned, if not brushed aside. It has been contended that the growing poverty of the masses, due to the progress of industrialization, is inevitable, and should therefore be suffered. I do not consider the evil to be inevitable, let alone to be suffered. The A. I. S. A. has successfully demonstrated the possibility of the villages manufacturing the whole of the cloth requirement of India simply by employing the leisure hours of the nation in spinning and the anterior processes. The difficulty lies in weaning the nation from the use of mill-cloth. This is not the place to discuss how it can be done. My purpose in this note was to give my definition of Indian industry in terms of the millions of villagers, and my reasons for that definition. And it should be plain to everyone that national exhibitions should only be for those industries which need public support in every way, not those which are flourishing without the aid of exhibitions and the like, and which organize their own exhibitions.

_Harijan_, 23-10-1937

470. LETTER TO PRANJIVAN

_October 23, 1937_

_Bhai Pranjivan,_

If every school which has functioned for many years looked at its own history, it would find someone or the other [from among its students] who has ultimately risen to fame. So, as far as I am concerned, I would consider such a thing a mere accident. For an old school like yours the real occasion to feel elated would be when it takes measures leading to improvement and makes progress in such a way that it has no parallel in the field. What is there to be proud about accidental achievement?

_Vandemataram from_

_MOHANDAS GANDHI_

[NATIONAL] SCHOOL
RAIKOT

From a copy of the Gujarati: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal
471. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

SEGAON,
October 23, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

I am returning herewith the letters that Kabit should read. He should give in writing whatever reply he wishes to give. You can see that he has attacked Ananda Babu very strongly. If he admits that there has been exaggeration in his attack, he should withdraw the charge and give the same publicity to his withdrawal as he gave to the charge. And if he does not withdraw it, he should be prepared to prove it. Why did he not make these complaints to me? This also should be found out.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7709

472. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

SEGAON, WARDHA,
October 23, 1937

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

Your letter. Keep on writing in this way.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6553

473. LETTER TO BHAGWAN DEVI

October 23, 1937

DEAR SISTER,

The sum of Rs. 1,000 sent by you has been received. It will be utilized for Harijan work. It is the dharma of those whom God has blessed with wealth to give it away regularly keeping back only a minimum amount for the maintenance of their health. A regular

1 G. D. Birla’s sister
2 The superscription is from the copy in Pyarelal Papers.
payment however little is many times more fruitful than large, sporadic gifts. God’s whole creation would have come to a standstill had it not been regulated by its laws.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

474. SPEECH AT EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE

October 23, 1937

Gandhiji in winding up the proceedings said he was grateful to all for having come and co-operated with him. He would look forward to further co-operation as the Conference was but the first of the many they would have to have. Malaviyaji had sent to him a warning telegram, but he could put him at ease by saying that there was nothing final about the Conference as it was a Conference of seekers, and everyone was invited to offer suggestions and criticisms. He had never the idea of carrying through anything by storm. The ideas of national education and prohibition were as old as non-co-operation. But the thing in its present shape came to him under the changed circumstances of the country.

Harijan, 30-10-1937

1 Gandhiji placed before the Conference the resolutions prepared by the Committee for discussion. The following resolutions were passed:

(1) That in the opinion of this Conference free and compulsory education be provided for seven years on a nation-wide scale.
(2) That the medium of instruction be the mother tongue.
(3) That the Conference endorses the proposal made by Mahatma Gandhi that the process of education throughout this period should centre round some form of manual and productive work, and that all the other abilities to be developed or training to be given should, as far as possible, be integrally related to the central handicraft chosen with due regard to the environment of the child.
(4) That the Conference expects that this system of education will be gradually able to cover the remuneration of the teachers.
475. NOTE TO PYARELAL

[After October 24, 1937]

I shall of course send your letter to Kishorelal. Just as he placed his views before you without fear, so must you before him. But you have not touched the main point of his letter at all. However, that does not matter. That you cannot express in Gujarati or Hindi what you can express in English is something to be thought over. It is not merely a question of language.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

476. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

[Before October 25, 1937]

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA.

If you too return to India, who will look after the work there? Is there anyone who will be able to take up the responsibilities of the Editor? Who has been assisting you on the Gujarati side? What religion does Christopher follow? Who was the priest officiating at the marriage ceremony? Have the two remained loyal to their respective religions or do they profess them merely as a form? I ask questions of this kind because a similar case has arisen here. It would be very good if Ramdas can settle down there perma-nently. Devdas is here for two or three days. I shall have to go to Calcu-tta for four or five days to attend the Working Committee meeting. Devdas will accompany me there and then proceed to Madras to fetch Lakshmi, and from there he will go to Delhi via Wardha. How many subscribers do you have? How many of them are Muslims, how many Hindus and how many Christians? Are there any Englishmen among them? Slossburg came

---

1 This note has been written on the reverse side of a letter from the addressee dated October 24, 1937.

2 From the reference to Gandhiji’s proposed visit to Calcutta to attend the Working Committee meeting and saw me. I found him a good man. What about Ritch? Does he keep in touch with you? Andrews is in India at present. He lives in Simla and is very ill.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4763

477. LETTER TO K. F. NARIMAN

_1 WOODBURN PARK,_

_CALCUTTA,_

_October 29, 1937_

MY DEAR NARIMAN,

I read your extraordinary statement made in Mysore with a great degree of pain. I did not write to you till now as I had asked Mahadev to find out from you whether the statement reported in the Press was a correct version of what you had said. He told me yesterday that you had confirmed the Press statement. Do you not realize that it is a gross distortion of facts? Surely, my health had nothing to do with your confession¹, for my work was finished, and my telegram to which evidently you have made reference made mention of my health in connection with your request to postpone decision. In suggesting a confession in place of the judgments, if you felt the truth of them, both Syt. Bahadurji and I had nothing but your own good in view. You were accompanied by your counsel. You even pleaded for some alterations in the draft submitted to you. Your alterations were accepted. Do you remember that you accompanied your confession with the following covering letter?

_BOMBAY,_

_October 15, 1937_

PUJYA GANDHIJI,

I have read the draft sent with Mahadevbhai and with some alterations in the handwriting of Syt. Bahadurji. I have signed it and hence I hope the findings will not be published. I am really sorry and apologize to you for

¹ _Vide K. F. Nariman’s Statement_" having been the cause of so much worry and trouble to you. I hope you will excuse me.

Yours,

K. F. NARIMAN

By your Mysore recantation you have proved yourself utterly unreliable. I need hardly tell you that you were and still are at perfect liberty to publish the judgment of which copies were posted to you on 16th October 1937. I have placed the Working Committee in possession of all the facts, and I am presently handing to the Committee copies of the judgments.

Yours sincerely,

A. I. C. C. File No. 747-a, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

478. INTERVIEW TO POLITICAL SUFFERERS

CALCUTTA, October 29, 1937

Gandhiji is understood to have told the deputation that he had taken up the matter very seriously and was determined to do whatever lay in his power. He added that he had come to Bengal mainly, if not wholly, for this purpose and was even prepared to see the Viceroy on this question. He appealed to the deputation not to do anything which might render a solution of the matter difficult.

The Bombay Chronicle, 30-10-1937

479. NOT TODDY BUT NIRO

Some persons are consciously or unconsciously imputing to me an approval of fermented toddy. I have made it perfectly plain that prohibition affects all intoxicating drinks and drugs without exception. Fermented toddy, therefore, can never be tolerated under any scheme of total prohibition. But what I have said and what I

1 A deputation of political sufferers from Bengal and the Punjab waited on Gandhiji in the evening. The deputation is understood to have urged Gandhiji to make the question of release of political prisoners a major issue before the country and further urged that the Congress Ministries should go to the length of resigning if necessary over the issue in order to bring pressure on Government.
repeat is that sweet unfermented toddy, which is called niro\textsuperscript{1}, should not be prohibited, and that the drinking of it in the place of fermented toddy should be encouraged. How it can be done is for the Prohibition Ministers to determine.

\textit{Harijan}, 30-10-1937

480. SOCIAL SERVICE CONSCRIPT

This valuable thesis\textsuperscript{2} does not mean that it contains the only scheme of conscription for social service. It shows the feasibility of conscription. It points the way to it.

\ldots Usually, conscription has hitherto been used in modern individualist communities for purposes of national defence or imperialist aggression. In this country, we would adopt conscription universally, for men as well as women, not for destructive, but for productive purposes of national service and social reconstruction.

In some countries they allow certain exemptions from such compulsory gratuitous public service, and offer certain compensatory advantages to those who have rendered such service. In this country, too, we may have to use a similar device. To make this new factor in our national economy function effectively and smoothly, we may have to introduce it by stages. But the foundation must be laid immediately.

This Social Service Conscription should commence with educated males of 18-25 years of age. Ancillary organizations of boy or girl volunteers comparable to the British Boy Scouts, or the Italian Ballila, might be set up to support the main force of conscript workers. The proportion of educated males in India is about 1 in every 5, and that of educated women 1 in 50. At the age, however, at which conscription should commence the proportion may be appreciably higher, say, 1 in every 3 males, and 1 in every 10 women. The term ‘educated’ is used in a very liberal, or even charitable sense, since it includes all those who fulfil the merest test of literacy in their own language. \ldots It may be expedient to limit the number of conscripts to those of secondary school-leaving stage. Of the 15 lakhs of such young men available in a province like Bombay, barely 250,000 may be found to satisfy the minimum educational qualification, while less than 100,000 may be found to satisfy the higher qualification suggested above.

We may well begin the experiment with this latter number. These \textsuperscript{1} Also called neera \textsuperscript{2} By K. T. Shah, of which only extracts are reproduced here educated young men of 18 and over must regard the service rendered by them as a sort of personal ten per cent tax, paid in kind, those paying only who have the means to do so, and their superior education being treated as evidence of their ability.

The 100,000 educated young men, with whom the experiment may be commenced in Bombay, for example, would be more than ample for our immediate objective, in the 21,484 villages of that province. Nearly 5 educated conscripts would be available for each village. There may be in addition about 25,000 young women who may supplement the effort later on.

The most urgent and immediate task of social service consists in: (a) liquidation of illiteracy and ignorance; (b) spread of elementary knowledge of health and hygiene; (c) aiding and improving village productive organization and occupation.

One of the most important sections in the Legislation for Conscription would have to define carefully the tasks to be allotted to the workers. No scheme of conscription should be put into effect, until a comprehensive plan of the work to be done has been prepared and approved for each Province. The social service conscripts, mobilized in India on the plan here advocated, would have to be given special training even more than the military conscripts of Europe, since the latter, in their ordinary elementary schooling, generally receive some element of practical training, too, before they join the colours. In India our educational system provides no such advantage for the average youth.

This training organization must be developed in each province out of the existing schools and colleges. The instructors in these institutions, particularly of the higher grade, are by no means overworked, or underpaid. From the highest to the lowest, in every faculty and branch of knowledge, this profession should be indented upon at least to the extent of one hour per day. Such training should be given intensively for 6 months in the one year of the service. Work should be assigned, or distributed, among the conscripts in accordance with the aptitude and previous training of each individual.

Those conscripted in this manner both during training and during the period actually at work will not be paid anything by way of salary. But they must be maintained at public expense, and must be taken from their place of work to their homes, and vice versa, at public expense. This ought not, however, to cost the State such an amount as to be an insupportable burden, nor be out of proportion to the value of the service rendered.

. . . All those who willingly, and without any exemption, render such service, as and when it falls due, must at the time of seeking employment for life, be preferred by all public bodies, and even by private employers on pain of losing such patronage or countenance from the State as is now becoming increasingly common between the State and Industry. The basic legislation for such conscription must clearly provide for such compensation.

... The advantages of conscription need not be detailed at any great length. In the first place, it would solve, in a great measure, the question of the cost of the indispensable and urgent social service we need in this country. At the same time, it would help to inculcate those habits of disciplined work and of concerted action—the so-called team-work—which are indispensable in a community intent upon making up the leeway that India is suffering from. Finally, thanks to such regimentation—the phrase may be used without any fear of misinterpretation—an increasing section of the community will automatically acquire those habits of personal cleanliness and healthful living which most people when left to themselves ignore, and consequently suffer in health, temper and efficiency

_Harijan, 30-10-1937_

481. A STEP FORWARD

A record of the work of the Educational Conference will be found elsewhere.¹ It marks an important stage in the presentation of my plan to the public and the Congress Ministers. It was a happy augury that so many Ministers attended. The objection and criticism centred round the idea of self-support even in the narrow sense I have mentioned. Therefore the Conference has made the very cautious declaration it has. There is no doubt the Conference had to sail on an unchartered sea. There was no complete precedent before it. If the idea is sound, it will work itself out in practice. After all it is for those who have faith in the self-support part to demonstrate it by working schools in accordance with the idea.

There was a remarkable unanimity so far as the question went of imparting full primary education including the secondary course less English through a vocation. The fact that the whole person in the boys and girls has to be developed through a vocation automatically saves the schools from degenerating into factories. For over and above the required degree of proficiency in the vocation in which they are trained, the boys and girls will have to show equal proficiency in the other subjects they will be expected to learn.

¹ Vide “Speech at Educational conference-II”, 22-10-1937

Dr. Zakir Husain’s Committee’s\(^1\) labours will show how the scheme can be worked in practice and what exactly the boys and girls will be expected to know from year to year. Objection has been raised that the Conference’s resolutions\(^2\) were a foregone conclusion. It has no validity. In the nature of things it was impossible to invite educationists at random to pronounce their views all of a sudden on what to them is undoubtedly a revolutionary plan. The invitations had therefore to be restricted to those who as teachers had had at least something to do with vocational training. I had myself no idea that the co-workers in the cause of national education would receive the new idea with sympathy. The wider circle of educationists will undoubtedly be invited to consider the scheme when it comes before the public in a concrete and fuller form through the Zakir Husain Committee. I would request those educationists who may have helpful suggestions to make to send them at once to Shri Aryanayakam, the Convener and Secretary of the Committee at Wardha.

One of the speakers at the Conference emphasized the fact that education of little boys and girls could be more effectively handled by women than men and by mothers rather than maidens. From another standpoint, too, they are in a better position than men to answer Prof. Shah’s conscription scheme. Here is undoubtedly an opportunity for patriotic women with leisure to offer their services to a cause which ranks amongst the noblest of all causes. But if they come forward, they will have to go through a sound preliminary training. Needy women in search of a living will serve no useful purpose by thinking of joining the movement as a career. If they approach the scheme, they should do so in a spirit of pure service and make it a life mission. They will fail and be severely disappointed if they approach it in a selfish spirit. If the cultured women of India will make common cause with the villagers, and that too through their children, they will produce a silent and grand revolution in the village life of India. Will they respond?

\textit{Harijan, 30-10-1937}

---

\(^1\) The Committee, appointed under the Chairmanship of Zakir Husain, was to prepare a planned syllabus on the lines of the resolutions passed at the Conference and submit its report to Gandhiji within a month. . . . Other members of the Committee were: E. W. Aryanayakam, Khwaja Ghulam Saiyidain, Vinoba Bhave, D. B. Kalelkar, Shrikrishnadas Jaju, J. C. Kumarappa, Ashadevi, Kishorelal Mashruwala and K. T. Shah.

\(^2\) \textit{Vide} footnote 1, “Speech at Educational Conference”, 23-10-1937
482. TALK WITH ANDAMANS PRISONERS

[CALCUTTA, October 30, 1937]

When Gandhiji visited the political prisoners in Alipur Jail they were fresh from the Andamans, and were anxious to go back to hunger-strike if they were not released, or rather if Gandhiji declared that he had failed in his mission. But they promised to do nothing until Gandhiji definitely told them that he had failed. What was to be the position now? How long were they to wait? Gandhiji said to them:

There should be no hunger-strike on any account. Though there are circumstances conceivable in which a hunger-strike may be justified, hunger-strike in order to secure release or redress of grievances is wrong. And if you resort to it whilst I am carrying on negotiations, you will clip my wings. But why think of a hunger-strike when you have got me as a good substitute for a hunger-strike? My days are numbered. I am not likely to live long, maybe I may live a year or little more and let me tell you that much of that time is going to be given in order to secure your release. I want to see you discharged before I die. That is the word I am giving to you, and I want you to give me your word that so long as I live to work for you, you will not go on hunger-strike. I cannot have peace or comfort so long as I have not secured your discharge. You have to believe what I say. Man believes and lives. My function is not that of a lawyer but of a humanitarian and a votary of non-violence. Non-violence will not spread so long as you prisoners are kept in prison, and that is why I have staked my life for the mission. No thought, therefore, of hunger-strike please.

_Harijan_, 23-4-1938

---

1 Reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Weekly Letter.”
2 From _The Bombay Chronicle_, 1-11-1937
3 At 5 p.m.
483. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

October 31, 1937

MY DEAR UNTOUCHABLE,

Today I took silence at 12.10 to be ready for the W. C. tomorrow. As I write this I have your letter of 29th. I have not a moment’s rest to even write a word under Mahadev’s letter. I have been generally at the W. C. meetings then [sic].

I have kept as well as possible under the peculiar circumstances. Yes, I have seen the prisoners. I had two hours with them. The release is not going to be a simple or easy affair. I shall leave no stone unturned to secure it. But ‘God disposes’.

I leave for Segaon tomorrow¹ and return here on 11th November to see the Governor² and all whom it may be necessary to see.

No more for the day.

Love.

Tyrant

From the original: C.W. 3826. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6982.

484. LETTER TO NANDALAL BOSE

WOODBURN ROAD,
CALCUTTA,
October 31, 1937

DEAR NAND BABU,

Will you please examine the enclosed³ article and the illustrations which are to accompany the article to be published by the writer in book form? I have been asked to write the foreword. I have no qualifications for it. I am therefore passing on the article to you for your opinion. If in your opinion the article has intrinsic merit, you will please give me your opinion which may be published as the

¹ However, on account of high blood-pressure Gandhiji had to postpone his journey; vide “Telegram to Abdul Ghaffar Khan”, 1-11-1937
² Sir John Anderson
³ Gandhiji here indicates with an asterisk “Separately, not by book post”
Foreword if the authoress desires it.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]

Please address Segaon.

From a copy: C.W. 9838

485. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

November 1, 1937

MY DEAR UNTOUCHABLE,

I penned a few lines yesterday. This is to supplement yesterday’s lines. Yes, the drink manifesto may be published without waiting for more names. I presume however that there will be work at [the] back of it—you won’t do it singlehanded! !

Your speech’ was sent two days ago. As you must have seen, I made some vital amendments. You need not accept them, unless they appeal to you as sound. Your suggestions are all good. But will they be accepted and, if accepted, will they be acted up to? You will know your audience and deal with the programme as you think best.

Anasuya Kale and then Sarojini asked me what day I would attend. S. suggested the last day. I did not object. But you shall decide. All will be weather permitting. My programme is all upset. I have to be back here on 11th to see the Governor. He is not here. I can’t go to Darjeeling in the present state of my health. I have to reach the Frontier Province on 17th and not later than 20th. Khan Saheb wants me there for 20 days. That means that I may not be back in Segaon before 10th December. I am sorry. What will you do? Could you not be in Simla till then, if Simla agrees with you? I have heard that Simla is at its best in the winter months. But you know what your body can stand.

Here I was interrupted and it has continued.

Love.

ROBBER

From the original: C.W. 3827. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6983

1 The Presidential address at the All-India Women’s Conference. It appeared in Harijan, 8-1-1938, under “Notes”, sub-title, “A Remarkable Address”.

378 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

Enclosed herewith is the judgement of the inquiry committee about the two issues raised by Shri Nariman in his correspondence with you and me.\(^1\) I had thought that Shri Nariman’s acceptance of my recommendation to make a confession\(^2\) which was to take the place of the judgement was a fair ending to an inquiry which gave me many an anxious moment. But Shri Nariman’s recantation of the confession which I first saw only in the Press alters the position and reveals the painful state of Shri Nariman’s mind. The recantation contains a patent untruth as pointed out by me in my letter\(^3\) to Shri Nariman which you will find in the enclosure.

I recall the fact that Shri Nariman himself courted the inquiry and deliberately wanted an investigation into the charge made on him by Sardar Vallabhbhai of a grave breach of trust in the matter of the Bombay election in 1934. In his letter addressed to you occurs the following sentence:

If the verdict of such an independent tribunal and enquiry tends to blame me in the slightest degree, then I will willingly submit to any penalty which you or any other authority chooses to impose, but at the same time hoping and expecting that, if the blame is found elsewhere, similar indiscriminating judgment should follow regardless of personalities or personal considerations.

In his letters to me (I have not the copies with me), he went further and said that, if he was found guilty of the Sardar’s charge, he would consider himself to be unworthy of holding any office of trust.

I am of opinion that by his conduct Shri Nariman has proved himself unworthy of holding any position of trust, not only because he has been found guilty of grave breach of trust in 1934 election and has failed to prove the charge brought by him against Sardar Vallab-

\(^1\) Vide “Note on Nariman-Sardar Case”, 14-10-1937
\(^2\) Vide “Statement to the Press”, 16-10-1937, and “K. F. Nariman’s Statement”
\(^3\) Dated October 29, 1937; vide “Letter to K. F. Nariman”, 29-10-1937 hbhai, but by his subsequent conduct as betrayed in the correspondence, and especially by his unfortunate recantation of the confession freely given by him in the presence of his counsel.

Yours sincerely

M. K. GANDHI

SHRI JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

PRESIDENT, A. I. C. C.

A. I. C. C. File No. 747-a, 1937. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

487. NOTE TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

November 1, 1937

I have come to the conclusion that it would be best if all [of you] resigned. Even if the others don’t resign, you should. Jamnalal is sure to resign. Who will be left then? Rajendra Babu? And won’t [it] be bankruptcy? Bhulabhai also will leave. But it will not matter even if he does not. I don’t think that Maulana’s support is necessary. If he does not resign, a time will come when he will be forced to resign. I have observed that Subhas is not at all dependable. However, there is nobody but he who can be the President’. I thought hard last night and again now. Let others do what they like, I am convinced that you should resign. If each does not take care of his own interest nothing will be done and the whole game will be lost.

I will certainly bring up the Nariman issue. But he may not wish to do anything. All the same, let us know what the other members say. What do Deo1 and Patwardhan believe? What is Bhulabhai’s view? What weight can be attached to the opinion of one person alone?

The reasons for resigning are obvious. The Mysore chapter’ and increasing differences of opinion . . . ‘ You should make it clear that you cannot continue in the face of such strong differences in the Committee. Think over the whole thing carefully yourself. Nobody else’s advice will help you in this matter. I see nothing but ignominy in your continuing. It will be well if you can retain control

1 Of the forthcoming Congress session at Haripura
2 Shankarrao Deo
3 Vide “The A. I. C. C.”
4 Omission as in the source of Gujarat, but don’t mind if you lose even that. To let yourself be dragged by the current will be ruinous.

I have suggested that all of you should resign. You should all meet today and decide. The proceedings today were no good. Many other things also have happened which were not proper. He should be completely free to have his own cabinet. It wouldn’t be proper for him to resign himself [instead of you all]. This also should be made clear to him. Rajendra Babu is arriving today. After listening to all this, I feel that all of you should resign. I have no time and no energy. I can barely keep myself alive. You yourself should talk over the matter tonight and decide. With so much untruth having infiltrated, what will you gain by continuing?"

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 217-8

488. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

November 1, 1937

Before leaving Calcutta I should like to tell the public what actually is the position regarding my efforts to secure the relief which I promised the Andamans prisoners I should make with all my heart.

In pursuance of these efforts and by the kind permission of the Bengal Government, I saw the repatriates from the Andamans on October 30. I had spent nearly two hours with them.

I am in correspondence with the Government in the matter and I expect to return to Calcutta on the 11th instant, when I hope to see His Excellency the Governor and, if necessary, subject to the Government’s permission, see both the prisoners and the detenus.

Meanwhile, I trust that the prisoners, wherever they may be, will not make the position difficult by resuming their hunger-strike. I have information that many prisoners are getting restive over the delay I can only give them the assurance that, so far as I am concerned, there shall be no remissness on my part in the effort. So far as the public are concerned, they should know that the public agitation for securing relief continues unabated.

The Statesman, 2-11-1937

\[1\] The text has been collated with the copy from the Manuscript Diary of Mahadev Desai.

\[2\] Vide “Talk with Andamans Prisoners”, 30-10-1937
489. TELEGRAM TO ABDUL GHAFFAR KHAN

On or after November 1, 19371

UNUSUALLY HIGH BLOOD-PRESSURE AND FATIGUE PREVENTED MY GOING TO WARDHA. DOCTORS FORBID THE FRONTIER JOURNEY AND I HAVE INDEFINITELY POSTPONED IT. IT CAUSES ME GREAT SORROW BUT IT IS INEVITABLE AND I MUST FIX SOME OTHER TIME.

The Statesman, 4-11-1937

490. LETTER TO AMINA TYABJI

1 WOODBURN PARK,
CALCUTTA,
November 4, 1937

MY DEAR SISTER,

I have purposely refrained from writing to you up till now because I wanted to have a chat with Maulana Saheb before writing to you. Merely sending you an acknowledgement I held to be unnecessary. I had a long chat with the Maulana. So far as I could see, he agrees with my reading of the Koran apart from traditional and sectarian interpretations. But as he may be the only divine in India to give the liberal and universal interpretation to the Koran, he does not want to come out as a radical reformer and thus impair his influence among the Indian Muslim world. He has therefore himself written to Habib 3 to come to Calcutta with Sohaila 4 whilst I am here. I have therefore telegraphed to Habib 5 to come here. Please believe me when I tell you that I have been always thinking of you, your difficulties and your sorrows ever since the Hamida 6 affair has cropped up. I have acted, will act and am still acting as if the living image of Abbas Saheb was in front of me, as witness of all I am doing. More than that I could not do. I will write to you again as soon as anything further has happened. I am here till at least the ninth. There is nothing to alarm

1 Gandhi’s departure for Wardha was postponed on Monday November 1.
2 Widow of Abbas Tyabji
3 Addressee’s son-in-law and daughter
4 ibid
5 Addressee’s granddaughter
6 Addressee’s daughter anybody about my health. The crisis is over. I am taking full rest. I hope you and Raihana⁴ are keeping well.

Love.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9690

491. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKA

I WOODBURN PARK,
CALCUTTA,
November 5, 1937

CHI. KAKA,

Please read the enclosed letter and give me your guidance. On Monday when half an hour was left for departure the doctor frightened everybody and got frightened himself. At last I had to submit to him and had to stay on. Now till the 8th I shall have to stick to this one floor. Let us see what happens after that. I hope to start from here on the 9th or the 10th.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7689

492. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO RABINDRANATH TAGORE

November 6, 1937

The (Birla) Brothers will, whether with or without the help of friends, provide Rs. 1,000 per month, Rs. 800 being for the school of Indology and Rs. 200 per month for Nandababu’s art school, as long as these departments continue satisfactorily.

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

¹ According to Mahadev Desai, the letter said that Gandhiji was sending Rs. 13,000—Rs. 10,000 for the Kala Bhavan and Rs. 3,000 for three months at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per month.
493. LETTER TO RABINDRANATH TAGORE

CALCUTTA,
November 8, 1937

DEAR GURUDEV,

Your messenger has brought your precious note with receipts.¹ I have done nothing. It is God’s prompting; your labours and prayers have borne fruit. May you have complete rest from worry and toil over the financial difficulties.

I am well, thanks.

Love.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 4648

494. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS²

November 9, 1937

I had nearly two hours’ talk with His Excellency at Barrackpore. Owing to my illness the interview was considerately arranged on the grounds. Naturally the talk was confined to relief to political prisoners and detenus. The public will not expect me to describe the conversations in detail for the sake of the common cause. I would ask the Press and public to be satisfied with my statement that I have placed my point of view to the best of my abilities and that it was fully discussed between His Excellency and myself. I would like the Press not to indulge in conjectures about the conversations which have to be in the nature of things private.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 10-11-1937

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² Gandhiji issued this on his return from Barrackpore after meeting the Governor of Bengal.
495. TELEGRAM TO J. S. PILLAI:

[On or before November 10, 1937]¹

MY WARMEST CONGRATULATIONS ON YOUR ELECTION
TO MAYORALTY WHICH I HAVE NO DOUBT YOU WILL ADORN WITH DISTINCTION.

GANDHI

The Hindu, 11-11-1937

496. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

CALCUTTA,

November 10, 1937

RAIKUMARI AMRIT KAUR
MANORVILLE
SIMLA WEST
STOOD STRAIN WELL. DATE DEPARTURE UNCERTAIN. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 4198. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 7834

497. LETTER TO DILKHUSH B. DIWANJI

SEGAON,

November 11, 1937

Bhai Dilkhush,

I have your letter. I shall go through what you have sent me and I shall write to you if I have anything to say about it. I appreciate your keenness to complete the work. However, it should not be allowed to delay what you can give [now]. Not that I fear any unnecessary delay on your part. But some of my statements can easily be misconstrued, and so I think I should caution you. It sometimes becomes one’s duty to offer a thing which, although incomplete, is a hundred per cent true and proved by experience. No single individual has a complete

¹ The addressee was the first Harijan to be elected Mayor of the Madras Corporation.

² The addressee received the telegram on November 10.
knowledge of all that I include in the science of khadi. But I don’t despair on that account. However, I would certainly be sorry if someone who lacked a systematic knowledge of every branch of this science did not make an effort to acquire such knowledge. Despair I would still not know. Because so long as I have faith in myself, faith in khadi—and am trying, as best I can, to acquire knowledge of this science—why should I despair? This should be the attitude of those who have faith in khadi. Maybe there is not the slightest need to write to you all this. Even so, perhaps my doing so will prove helpful to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Motanan Man, p. 70

498. A NOTE ON PROHIBITION

This is a valuable contribution to the discussion on prohibition. Whilst there are things which cannot be accepted, there are suggestions which are worthy of consideration. The writer adopts the slippery road of gradualness for the sake of revenue. That way lies utter failure. But the suggestion about State monopoly of manufacture and sale of intoxicants and about unfermented toddy is perfectly sound.

Harijan, 13-11-1937

499. THE A. I. C. C.

Congress Ministers have a fourfold responsibility. As an individual a Minister is primarily responsible to his constituents. If he is satisfied that he no longer enjoys their confidence or that he has changed the views for which he was elected, he resigns. Collectively the Ministers are responsible to the majority of the legislators who, by a no-confidence vote or similar means, may any moment drive them out of office. But a Congress Minister owes his position and responsibility to his Provincial Congress Committee and the A. I. C. C. also.

1 An article by a “medical friend” which is not reproduced here
So long as all these four bodies act in co-ordination, Ministers have smooth sailing in the discharge of their duty.

The recent meeting of the A. I. C. C. showed, however, that some of its members were not at all in accord with the Congress Ministries, specially that of C. Rajagopalachari, the Prime Minister of Madras. Healthy, well-informed, balanced criticism is the ozone of public life. A most democratic Minister is likely to go wrong without ceaseless watch from the public. But the resolution moved in the A. I. C. C. criticizing the Congress Ministries, and still more the speeches, were wide of the mark. The critics had not cared to study the facts. They had not before them C. Rajagopalachari’s reply. They knew that he was most eager to come and answer his critics. But severe illness prevented him from coming. The critics owed it to their representative that they should postpone the consideration of the resolution. Let them study and take to heart what Jawaharlal Nehru has said in his elaborate statement on the matter. I am convinced that in their action the critics departed from truth and non-violence. If they had carried the A.I.C.C. with them, the Madras Ministers at least would have resigned, although they seemingly enjoy the full confidence of the majority of the legislators. Surely, that would not have been a desirable result.

Much more offensive, in my opinion, was the Mysore resolution; and the pity of it is that it was carried with practically nobody to speak out for truth. I hold no brief for Mysore. There are many things I would like the Maharaja to reform. But the Congress policy is to give even an opponent his due. In my opinion the Mysore resolution was ultra vires of the resolution of non-interference. This, so far as I am aware, has never been repealed. On merits the A. I. C. C. was not out to deal with the State as a whole. It was dealing only with

---

1. At Calcutta
2. Which read: “This meeting of the A. I. C. C. expresses its emphatic protest against the ruthless policy of repression as indicated by the inauguration of various restrictive and prohibitory orders and political prosecutions launched in the Mysore State and also against the suppression of civil rights and liberties by denying the elementary rights of speech, assemblage and association. This meeting sends its fraternal greetings to the people of Mysore and wishes them all success in their legitimate non-violent struggle and appeals to the people of Indian States and British India to give all support and encouragement to the people of Mysore in their struggle against the State for right of self-determination.”
3. Passed at Lucknow in April 1936 the policy of repression. The resolution did not set forth the correct state of affairs, and the speeches were full of passion and without regard to the facts of the case. The A. I. C. C. should have appointed, if it was so minded, a committee even of one person to ascertain the facts before proceeding to pronounce judgment. The least it can do in such matters, if it has any regard for truth and non-violence, is first to let the Working Committee pronounce its judgment on them and then, if necessary, review them in a judicial manner. I have purposely refrained in the case of either resolution from going into details to prove my submission. I am saving my limited energy and am leaving the matter also to the good sense of the members of the A.I.C.C., which has since 1920 assumed a unique importance and doubly so after the office-acceptance resolution.

_Harijan,_ 13-11-1937

500. _LETTER TO ZAKIR HUSAIN_

1 Woodburn Park, 1
2 Woodburn Park, Calcutta, 1
3 Calcutta, November 14, 1937

MY DEAR ZAKIR,

I wanted to dictate this days ago but could not manage it. The work you did during the two days in Wardha was very good. When you next meet I would like you to give a course of studies for seven years. Without that your report would be incomplete. You should also say how much space would be required and the nature of buildings or building needed for the school, its cost and the material of which the construction is to be made. This need not be elaborate, but should be the groundwork of elaboration. I was sorry not to be with you when you were in Wardha. I specially wanted to meet Khwaja Ghulam Saiyidain. How I wish I would be with you when you come again.

1 Passed on March 16, 1937; vide "Extract From A.I.C.C. Resolution", 16-3-1937 For Jawaharlal Nehru’s reactions to this article, vide Appendix “Letter from Jawaharlal Nehru”, 14-11-1937
2 Zakir Husain Committee’s Report on Basic Education
3 Principal, Teachers’ Training College, Aligarh; later Adviser and Secretary to the Ministry of Education, Government of India.

388 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI when you finish your report. I expect to leave here on Wednesday if my work is for the moment finished.

I am sending a copy of this to Aryanayakam.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

501. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU

CALCUTTA,
November 14, 1937,

MY DEAR LOTUS-BORN,

I was not going to write to you just yet. I have been only dictating the most necessary correspondence. But the imperious singer won’t rest till I promised to let you have a line. For I am told you are visibly growing in years and for us hope in wisdom too. Your birthday is nearing! May it find you full of health, fun and wisdom.

Love.

SLAVE-DRIVER

SHRI PADMAJA NAIDU
GOLDEN THRESHOLD
HYDERABAD DECCAN

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

502. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

November 15, 1937

MY DEAR UNTOUCHABLE,

After a lapse of three days I have two notes from you today. I still do not do any correspondence. Both the hands are weak. I work the right for Harijan articles on Mondays. But I must give you a few lines today.

G.W.¹ we leave here for Wardha on Wednesday returning here, if need be, after the new G’s² taking office.

Nothing is wanted but complete rest to set me up. I hope to get

¹ God willing
² Governor

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 389
it in Segaon. I do not and cannot get it here. The detenu work occupies my thoughts and taxes my mental energy as it must while I am on the scene. That by itself sufficiently disturbs the mental relaxation I want so badly.

I say nothing about the result of my labours. For I do not know. I am not without hope. Do you remember you wanted me not on the opening day but the 2nd or the closing day? It makes no difference to me. Do not translate your address literally. Give a free rendering. You can omit parts and add where necessary. How about the ears and the forehead? How is Nabibux? Has Shummy benefited by the change of Simla?

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3828. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6984

503. LETTER TO NARESPH NATH MOOKERJEE

1 Woodburn Park,
2 Calcutta,
3 November 17, 1937

DEAR FRIEND,

With reference to your letter of the 16th instant, I am quite clear that no Congressman can attend farewell parties to the Governor and officials, no matter where and by whom given, that is, so long as the Congress ban lasts. My interview with His Excellency as also with the Ministers whether at my host’s place or at their ‘place’, was not a social or official function. And what I, having ceased to be even a four-anna member, may do with impunity, Congressmen may not. The instance you have quoted bears no analogy to mine.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 18-11-1937

1 On November 9
2 On November 17
3 On November 16
504. INTERVIEW TO UNITED PRESS

Kharagpur,
November 17, 1937

For the present I have no intention of issuing any Press statement about my discussions with Bengal Ministers.

On being told that the Bengal Government proposed to issue a Press communique on their negotiations with Gandhiji tomorrow, Mahatmaji said:

If on seeing their communique, I feel that any statement is necessary from me, then I may issue one, but that can only be from Wardha.

Gandhiji then informed the United Press that he was coming to Calcutta very soon.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 18-11-1937

505. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

On Way to Wardha,
November 18, 1937

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I fancy I could read the personal letter in your eyes as you were hovering round me that awful Sunday night and silent Monday. The weakness has not yet left me. I need prolonged rest from all mental toil, but that perhaps cannot be had.

This I write to report to you what I have done about the prisoners in Bengal, and to ascertain whether it meets with your approval. The negotiations have been a taxing affair. Before entering upon them I had consulted the two Brothers\(^3\) as to the desirability of securing relief through negotiations. It was possible to be indifferent as to the result and rely upon the growth of public opinion forcing release whenever it was to come. The Brothers were emphatically for negotiations, whilst public agitation continued. I unfolded my plan also and it was after the style of my telegram\(^4\) to the Andamans

---

1. Gandhiji reached Kharagpur Station at 4 p.m. A representative of the United Press approached him in the waiting room.
2. Vide “Statement on Bengal Government’s Communiqué”, 21-11-1937
3. Subhas Chandra Bose and Sarat Chandra Bose prisoners. And so I saw the repatriates', detenus brought back from Deoli and last night the Hijli prisoners. The Ministers have agreed to release what they call ‘village and home domiciled’ detenus almost forthwith, and inside of four months to release those in the detenu camps whom they may consider to be safe. For the rest they will accept my recommendation, if they are not earlier released. My recommendation will depend upon my ascertaining the present belief of the detenus. If I am able to say to the Government that they do not believe in methods of violence for the attainment of independence and that they will pursue such Congress activities as are approved of by the Congress from time to time, they will release them. A declaration of policy might be made any time. I need not go into the details of the conversations with the prisoners in the several prisons and in Hijli camp. I wonder if all this commends itself to you. If you strongly disapprove of it, I would like you to telegraph. Otherwise I shall await your letter.

The strikes in Ahmedabad of which I have no knowledge, except from what I gather from the papers, as also what the papers say about Sholapur,\(^2\) disturbed me. If we cannot control the situation either because a section of the Congressmen would not submit to Congress discipline or because the Congress cannot control the activities of those who are outside the Congress influence, our holding of offices is bound to prove detrimental to the Congress cause.

The ‘Bande Mataram’ controversy has not yet died out. Many Bengalis are sore at heart over the W. C. decision.\(^3\) Subhas told me he was trying to calm the atmosphere.

I expect to have to go back to Bengal soon after the assumption of office by the incoming Governor.

I hope you are keeping well. The paragraph in the newspaper

---

1 On October 30
2 Vide “Storm Signals”
3 Some Muslims having objected to the practice of singing \textit{Vandemataram} in certain legislatures, the Working Committee recommended that “whenever and wherever \textit{Vandemataram} is sung the first two stanzas should be sung, with perfect freedom to the organizers to sing any other song of unobjectionable character, in addition to, or in place of \textit{Vandemataram}” about Sarup' was disturbing. Is her health unequal to the strain she is undergoing?

This is being written as we are nearing Nagpur. We arrive Wardha this evening.

Love.

BAPU

Also A Bunch of old Letters, pp. 247-8

506. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

On The Train to Wardha,
November 18, 1937

CHI. NIMU,

I cannot write myself, and hence I am dictating this letter. I read your letter just now in the train. A student’s dharma is difficult to perform. Even if it seemed selfish at first sight, if the aim was altruistic it could be shown to be not selfish. The student’s case is like that of a brave warrior who may not turn back from the battle field in the face of any obstacle, or a businessman who having gone to a distant land for earning wealth cannot return even though his family might be facing ruin. Here, circumstances are favourable for you to suspend your study. But credit lies in not being tempted by them. This is dharma. Whether or not you should follow it will depend on your strength. If you have understood this dharma and if you have the strength to follow it, forget the outside world and remain where you are. God is the Protector of us all. He takes care of everybody. I, therefore, see no reason for you to yield to moha. Even if Sarita’ invites you, I would advise you to decline to go. But please do not treat my advice as an order. I am only explaining to you what I consider to be dharma in such circumstances. But I don’t insist that you too should regard that as the only true dharma.

I don’t know where my ship is drifting. It is sailing on. The Captain is God. Why, then should I worry where it is going? And I am not worrying. It is bound to disappear some day. If so, why keep count of the days?

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

1 Vijayalakshmi Pandit, addressee’s sister
2 Infatuation
3 Addressee’s mother
507. TEMPLE-ENTRY

The Executive Committee of the Harijan Sevak Sangh has passed the following resolution:

The Executive Committee of the All-India Harijan Sevak Sangh notes with satisfaction the progress of the temple-entry campaign in Malabar district and Cochin State and the growing volume of public support in these places for temple-entry for Harijans, and gives full support to this work. This Committee further requests the Government of Madras and the Government of Cochin to help the rapid emancipation of Harijans by facilitating the declaration of all Hindu temples within their jurisdiction open to the Harijans.

It is hardly right to bracket the two Governments together. The Government of Cochin is a personal Government under a Hindu Prince who owns the temples of Cochin or who is the spiritual head of most of them. It is, therefore, within his right and, in my opinion, it is his duty to open the temples within his jurisdiction to the Harijans precisely as they are open to the so-called savarna Hindus. The appeal addressed to the Cochin Maharaja is, therefore, quite the proper thing.

But the Madras Government is a government responsible to the people of Madras which include all classes and creeds. It cannot, therefore, with any propriety pass legislation like the Cochin Durbar opening to Harijans all the temples within its jurisdiction. The temples can only be opened to Harijans either by the trustees of their own motion or at the instance of the savarna visitors who are in the habit of visiting particular temples. But the Madras Government can and ought to bring in enabling legislation. It has been contended that some judgment of a court of law prevents temples from being opened to Harijans even if all the savarna trustees desire it. At the time of the Guruvayur Temple agitation I had discussed this judgment and expressed my doubt as to its validity and meaning. But it will be remembered that in order to remove any doubts an attempt was made in the Central Legislative Assembly to bring in an enabling bill. The attempt was unsuccessful. But I apprehend that under the new Constitution the Provincial Legislatures have the power to bring in and

---

1 In 1932-33
2 Vide “Statement on Viceroy’s Decision”, 24-1-1933 pass enabling legislation. The Congress Ministries are pledged to remove untouchability in every shape and form. Savarna Hindus were pledged at the time of the Yeravda Pact among many other things to fling open temples to Harijans.¹ At the very first opportunity, therefore, Congress Ministries have to bring in legislation, if it is legally within their power, to abolish untouchability in law and to enable trustees or temple goers to open the temples to Harijans and thus put an end to the age-long curse of untouchability. The Provincial Harijan Sevak Sangh can certainly mobilize savarna Hindu opinion in favour of the step. I observe that Harijans are already moving in the matter and rightly pressing for the opening of temples. I see too that Rao Bahadur M. C. Rajah has a Bill to his credit. I hope that he will keep himself in touch with the Ministers and act in accordance with their advice. For he and they have a common cause to pursue.

_Harijan, 20-11-1937_

__508. STORM SIGNALS__

The Sholapur affair and the labour unrest in Cawnpore and Ahmedabad show how uncertain is the Congress control over forces of disorder. Tribes called criminal cannot be dealt with radically differently from the past practice without ascertaining how they will behave. One difference certainly be made at once. They may not be treated as criminals to be dreaded and shunned, but efforts should be made to brother them and bring them under the national influence. It is said that the red-flag men (Communists) have been at work among the men in the Sholapur settlement. Are they Congressmen? If they are, why are they not found by the side of the Congressmen who are Ministers at the wish of the Congress? If they are not Congressmen, do they seek to destroy the Congress influence and prestige? If they are not Congressmen and do seek to destroy the Congress prestige, why have Congressmen been unable to reach these tribes and make them proof against the blandishments of those who would exploit their traditional violent tendencies, so-called or real?

¹ Vide “Lest we Forget”; also “Resolution at the Hindu Leaders’ Conference, Bombay”, 25-9-1932
Why are we living in Ahmedabad and Cawnpore in perpetual dread of lightning or unauthorized strikes? Is the Congress unable to influence organized labour in the right direction? We may not distrust Government notices issued in the provinces administered by Congress Ministers. It will not do to belittle their notices as we used to treat the irresponsible Government’s notices. If we distrust Congress Ministers or are dissatisfied with them, they can be dismissed without ceremony. But while they are permitted to remain in office, their notices and appeals should receive the full-hearted support of all Congressmen.

On no other condition can the holding of offices by Congressmen be justified. If in spite of honest effort by Congressmen, forces of disorder cannot be brought under control without the assistance of the police and the military, in my opinion acceptance by the Congress of the burden of office loses all force and meaning, and the sooner the Ministers are withdrawn the better it would be for the Congress and its struggle to achieve complete independence.

My hope is that the outbreak in the Sholapur settlement and the labour unrest in Ahmedabad and Cawnpore are symptoms of the exaggerated expectations of radical betterment of the condition of labour and even of the so-called criminal tribes. Then the Congress should have no difficulty in checking disorders. If, on the contrary, they are signs of weakness of Congress control, the whole situation arising out of acceptance of office by Congressmen requires reviewing.

One thing is certain. The Congress organization needs strengthening and purging. On the Congress register there should be, not merely a few lacs of men and women, but every adult male or female above the age of 18, no matter to what faith they belong. And these should be on the register in order to receive a proper training or education in the practice of truth and non-violence in terms of the national struggle. I have always conceived the Congress to be the greatest school of political education for the whole nation. But the Congress is far off from the realization of the ideal. One hears of manipulations of Congress registers, and of bogus names being put in for the purpose of showing numbers. When the registers have been honestly prepared there is no attempt to keep in close touch with the voters.

The question naturally arises: Do we really believe in truth and non-violence, in sustained work and discipline, in the efficacy of the fourfold constructive programme? If we do, sufficient has been achieved to show, during the working of the Congress Ministries for the past few months, that complete independence is much nearer than when offices were accepted. If, however, we are not sure of our own chosen aims, we need not wonder if one fine morning we discover that we had committed a grave blunder in embarking upon office-acceptance. My conscience as a prime mover in the direction of office-acceptance is quite clear. I advised it on the supposition that the Congressmen as a whole were sound not only on the goal but also on the truthful and non-violent means. If we lack that political faith in the means, office-acceptance may prove to be a trap.

_Harijan, 20-11-1937_

509. NOTES

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS AND HARIJANS

Thakkar Bapa sends the following for publication:

(a) The Executive Committee of the Harijan Sevak Sangh urges upon the Congress Provincial Governments to issue declarations of their policies regarding the removal of untouchability of Harijans at an early date.

(b) This Committee further requests Provincial Governments to create special departments and appoint special officers, where they do not already exist, to look after the uplift work of the Harijans in general and particularly to the removal of disabilities with regard to the use of common schools, public wells, tanks and water taps, and help the Harijans in the enjoyment of their civic rights.

(c) Further, this Committee requests the Provincial Governments to draw the attention of Municipal and other local bodies towards the deplorable living and service conditions of sweepers and scavengers employed by them and asks them to give the latter better amenities of life by providing them with better housing, water and lighting facilities and a decent and adequate pay and making their service permanent.

(d) This Committee further draws the attention of the Provincial Governments to clause 9 of the Yeravda Pact of September 1932 which is as follows, and requests them to give effect to the same:

"9. In every province out of the educational grant an adequate sum shall be earmarked for providing educational facilities to members of the Depressed Classes."

Why should the Committee only urge in (a) the Congress Provincial Governments to do their duty? I think the resolution of the Executive Committee of the Harijan Sevak Sangh applies to all the Governments. And where the Governments are supine or indifferent the Opposition should wake them to a sense of their duty.

_Harijan, 20-11-1937_
510. TELEGRAM TO PRABHASHANKAR PATTANI

WARDHAGANI,
November 20, 1937

SIR PRABHASHANKAR PATTANI
NEW DELHI

BLOOD-PRESSURE ERRATIC. EXTREME EXHAUSTION BUT NO ANXIETY.

GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 5956. Also C.W. 3273. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani

511. STATEMENT ON BENGAL GOVERNMENT’S COMMUNIQUE

WARDHA, November 21, 1937

The Government of Bengal deserve congratulations for the decision they have arrived at on the question of detenus. Congressmen will be wrong if they judge the communiqué by Congress measures. The Bengal Ministry are not bound by the Congress election manifesto, nor do they share Congress ideology. Nevertheless, they have travelled along Congress lines to a considerable extent. It would be wrong not to make this admission. Even a political opponent is entitled to credit when this is due. In my opinion the Bengal Cabinet have responded to public opinion in a measure, though not to the extent I had expected.

I would be unfair if I did not mention the fact that H. E. the Governor was helpful in the matter. The Ministers could hardly have carried out their wishes but for the Governor’s co-operation.

I regard the communiqué as an earnest of much more to come. I share the opinion, expressed in the communiqué, that much will depend upon reaction to the Government’s decision by the public and the 1,100 detenus who have been, or will be, released from all restraint. The requirement of supplying change of addresses to the police robs the release order of some of its grace. It betokens a timidity I wish the Government of Bengal had not betrayed.

But much need not be made of what, I hope, is mere formality.

1 Vide “Bengal Government’s Communique”, 18-11-1937
I am sure that a full measure of relief will be forthcoming, if the atmosphere of non-violence is not disturbed, by the step taken by the Government. Even Congress insists on observance of non-violence; indeed, it is its political creed. Congress Ministers know that their existence, as such, depends solely on the observance of non-violence. I hope that the released detenus will so act as to materially help the creation and consolidation of a non-violent atmosphere, on which Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose has justly laid stress in his message on the eve of his departure for Europe for his health.

I hope that the released detenus will be no party to any public demonstration on their behalf and that the public, too, will exercise necessary restraint. I would urge the released men to quietly undertake some public service. The great business houses will, I doubt not, help those who may be in need of employment. Most of the men I met in the jails of Calcutta told me that their sole object in desiring release was to serve the public cause in the manner indicated by the Congress. They, one and all, warned me against entering into any bargain with the Government for securing their discharge. They would not give any undertaking to the Government. The assurance given by them to me should, they said, be regarded as sufficient test of their bona fides.

I told them that I would not be guilty of selling their honour or self-respect for the purchase of their liberty.

The public will recall that, at the very outset of my negotiations, I ascertained from the Andamans prisoners whether I could work on the assumption of their renunciation of violent methods for the attainment of independence. I could not see my way to asking for relief without the ability to give such an assurance, provided of course, that it represented the correct mentality of the prisoners.

I was not able to finish my work in Bengal. It was not possible for me to do more during my time there. I am grateful to the Government of Bengal for the facilities they gave me to see the prisoners and detenus as often as I liked without the presence there of officials. My talks are not yet finished. My Hijli (jail) friends wanted to have two or three days’ talk with me instead of the two hours only which I was able to give them; but then, they saw from my face that I

---

1 Vide “Telegram to Viceroy”, 27-8-1937
2 The rest of the sentence is from Harijan, 27-11-1937.
was ill able to bear the strain of animated discussions. They were most considerate to me. I knew that I took them at a disadvantage for they could not talk to me with the freedom they would have, had I been well. I hope, as soon as my health permits me, to go back to Bengal to see each one of the unreleased detenus and prisoners.

The communique is silent on the question of the Andamans prisoners. I know that the Government draw a broad distinction between convicted prisoners and persons detained without trial.

The distinction is right. There are undoubtedly difficulties in the way. But at this stage I can only say that I have every hope, if all goes well and the public—especially the Bengal public—continues to help me as it has done hitherto, to secure these men’s discharge also.

One statement in the communique is disturbing. It says that the success of the Government’s policy “must, however, depend on the co-operation of the public and the leaders of public opinion in maintaining an atmosphere in which subversive movements will find no encouragement.”

If by “subversive movements” they mean only violent activities, no difficulty arises and no difference of opinion exists. But, if in the phrase they include non-violent activities such as the Congress stands for, including even civil disobedience, the releases already made are a mistake and further releases will become an impossibility. Throughout my conversations with the Ministers I made it quite plain that I could only help in maintaining non-violence.

Non-violence is the only proper and honourable common ground between the Government and the people. Democracy must remain a dream in India without that bed-rock. I hope and believe that by “subversive movements” the Government mean no more than activities which are either themselves violent or which are intended to further violence.

_The Statesman, 22-11-1937_
512. LETTER TO JEHANGIR VAKIL

November 22, 1937

MY DEAR VAKIL,

I was able to read your letter only this morning. I cannot overtake my correspondence in time.

Your love I treasure, of your hate, I know nothing. But even if I had known it, I would not have minded it. How could one help acting according to one’s nature? ‘In Christ’ and ‘in God’ have for years been convertible terms for me. I may not, probably will not, take the word in the same sense as most Christians do. But that matters little.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

513. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Silence Day [November 22, 1937]

CHI. MAHADEV,

I want to see the resolution1 about Mysore passed at Calcutta. This means a little more work for you. I should also like to see a copy of the letter you have written to Jawaharlal.2

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11580

514. LETTER TO PYARELAL

November 22, 1937

CHI. PYARELAL,

What have you done? Leaving me ill and Sushila weeping, you went away! But, then, didn’t I let you? Yes, I did, but I made a condition, too. I shall know in time whether I did well or ill in giving 1 From the reference to the addressee’s letter to Jawaharlal Nehru dated November 19; (a). Silence Day after it fell on November 22.

2 Vide footnote 1, “The A.I.C.C.”
3 For a subsequent letter from the addressee to Jawaharlal Nehru, vide “Letter from Mahadev Desai to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 2-12-1937.
even such conditional permission. At present my worries have increased and Sushila is completely upset.

You have shouted down your mother and your brother, crushed your sister, shouted down Ba yesterday and didn’t spare me, either, when leaving. Do you realize all this?

Do you remember what you said? If I let you go, you said, you would probably not be able to bear the separation and would return and lay your head in my lap. Hasn’t that time come? Don’t you feel these two days of separation as if they were two years? If you feel so, come back in response to this letter and send a wire. Only then can Sushila serve me and I can accept her services.

Do you know that I would consent even to your dreadful step if I could understand your arguments? Won’t you wait till I have recovered or till I am dead? I will seize the first opportunity to discuss the matter with you if I recover from this illness. If you say that now there is nothing to be discussed, it will be like branding a man who has already sustained burns.

Your letter to Ramdas after the death of Chhotelal was not proper. It was unjust. You did not have the patience to read Kishorelal’s letter. You have done him a terrible injustice. You failed in your duty by only reading the introductory part and leaving the rest of the material. Even if the whole world fails to understand you and does you injustice, your dharma is to bear it. “My honour is in your hands, O Lord, protect it.” If you take the unworthy step, you will darken my life for ever. Don’t let this happen to me. Return soon, or if you decide not to return send a wire reassuring me and Sushila. Write a letter, too.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai
515. TELEGRAM TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

WARDHAGANJ,
November 23, 1937

MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
74 WALKESHWAR
BOMBAY HIGH

DISTINCTLY BETTER SINCE YOUR TELEGRAM PYARELAL’S ARRIVAL. PRESSURE TO DAY 194/112. INFORM DOCTORS.

MAHADEV

From the original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

516. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
November 24, 1937

Don’t expect letters from me for the time being.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3830. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6986

517. A FOREWORD

SEGAON, WARDHA,
November 27, 1937

One can at once perceive in Acharya Kripalani’s way of thinking and writing a quality of uniqueness. Anyone who has known him will recognize at once any piece of writing as his and his alone. This is the impression I had while reading this collection.

At a time when all kinds of new ideas are spreading in the country, this collection is likely to be of considerable help to those who want to study them. Acharya Kripalani has shown very convincingly that the programme the Congress adopted in 1920 is as useful now for attaining freedom as it was in 1920.

1 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
2 To Acharya Kripalana Lekho

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938  403
Acharya Kripalani is quite correct in saying that there is no such thing as Gandhism. Insistence on truth is an eternal principle. While contemplating on it the jewel of non-violence was discovered and as a result of the experiments in non-violence emerged the programme of 1920. Trying to attain independence without it is as good as pounding chaff.

M. K. GANDHI

[From Gujarati]

Acharya Kripalanina Lekho

518. LETTER TO K. NAZIMUDDIN

MAGANWADI, WARDHA, (C. P.),
November 28, 1937

DEAR SIR NAZIMUDDIN,

I must thank you for your exhaustive and kind letter of the 24th instant.

I am still bed-ridden. But I must scribble down in pencil a reply which Mahadev Desai will copy for me.

Your confidence in me flatters me, but if it is not extended to those through whom alone I can hope to work with success, the work for which you and I are striving comes to a standstill. I have no power over the detenus or the Bengal public save through the accredited leaders. I can impose nothing on them. I have no other method but that of persuasion. I am in constant correspondence with Shri Sarat Bose in this matter. Without the assistance of the two brothers, I could have done nothing in Bengal. Of course you were right in permitting Bidhan Chandra Roy and Sarojini Devi to visit the Hijli friends. Their visit will help. I may make one thing clear. Any recommendation I may make will be, in so far as the Bengal Government are concerned, on my sole responsibility. I hope therefore that you will please reconsider your decision and allow Shri Sarat Bose on my behalf to visit the Hijli prisoners for the time being.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SIR K. NAZIMUDDIN
HOME MINISTER
WRITERS' BUILDING
CALCUTTA

From a copy: C.W. 7783. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

1 Vide “Letter From K. Nazimuddin”, 24-11-1937
519. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, November 28, 1937

There is a conspiracy ripening to remove me to a seaside place.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3833. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6989

520. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON, November 29, 1937

You must not get ill. How I wish you had full nature cure. Hope the niece is better. I had a personal letter today from the Viceroy of good wishes. You must write daily. Please thank the Maharaja for the fruit. But tell him why foreign fruits when this land of ours has plenty of both fresh and dried fruit.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3834. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6990

521. LETTER TO S. AMBUJAMMAL

SEGAON, viaWARDHA, November 29, 1937

Hope Mother is all right.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]
Ambujammal Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 These are postscripts to Mirabehn’s letters to the addressee.
2 ibid
3 This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
522. LETTER TO NARAHARI D. PARIKH

November 1937

I would use even foreign stuff. Powdered or condensed milk must be available in India. One would only have to spend some money. It is to be seen whether the Reception Committee will be prepared to go that far. I would not at all like anything to be done merely in deference to my wishes. I am alive today but may not be tomorrow. Any suggestion should be acted upon only if it is good and convincing. Try your best. Is it not possible to dry the milk into powder? If we think it our duty to insist on cow’s milk, the milk-powder available outside at a cheaper rate can also be used. These are, of course, only my suggestions. If they readily appeal to you all, you will certainly be able to procure cow’s milk in some form from all parts of the country. I too may try, if you decide I should.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9113

523. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

December 5, 1937

CHI. MAHADEV,

Here are two items. Shah’s later.

Don’t remove Durga straightaway. My fate is uncertain. To avoid any appearance of obstinacy, I am shifting to the sea-coast and taking you also. But who knows whether we shall reach there safe? I advise you to let Durga stay where she is at present. Lilavati is happy there. But in the end we should trust in God. Let His will prevail. And, moreover, what value is to be put upon my judgment in the present circumstances?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11584

---

1 For the Congress session at Haripura
2 At Juhu in Bombay
524. NOTE TO DAMODARDAS MUNDHRA

[On or before December 6, 1937]¹

Please show this slip to Jamnalalji. There is no need to bring the engine. I am prepared to let myself be carried in a chair if I am not permitted to walk across the railway track.

From a photostat of the Gujarati G.N. 3074-a

525. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Silence Day [December 6, 1937]²

CHI. MAHADEV,

I believe that we have somewhere the resolution regarding the Indian States.³ What you have written about Ratne is correct. Please ask Jamnalalji. Perhaps he will remember. Girdhari must have given you the two items which I sent last night.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11585

526. TALK WITH MAHADEV DESAI⁴

December 6, 1937

Gandhiji was averse to leaving Segaon, and as he told me the day we left Wardha,⁵ he would not have left Segaon except to escape the charge of obstinacy.

I am accustomed to cold, and to sleeping under the sky in the severest weather. But if the doctor⁶ insists that the cold is having a detrimental effect on the heart and hence on the blood-pressure, I should listen to what he says, if only to avoid the charge of obstinacy.

Harijan, 18-12-1937

¹ The date of receipt as recorded on the document is December 6, 1937.
² From the reference to “the two items”; vide letter to the addressee dated December 5, 1937.
³ Vide “Letter From Mahadev Desai to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 2-12-1937
⁴ Reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Notes”
⁵ On December 6
⁶ Dr. Jivraj Mehta
527. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT KAUR

Bombay,

December 7, 1937

Rajkumari Amrit Kaur
Jullundur City
Arrived. Well now.

Bapu

From the original: C.W. 3839. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6995

528. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

December 8, 1937

Chh. Lilavati,

Are you still your old self—agitated, restless, overstrung, emotional, sentimental, unsteady, unmethodical? What will you do after I die? I would have brought you with me had it been in my hands. I couldn’t easily leave any of you behind. But my sense of duty made me feel helpless. Write to me. I will get your letter.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9588. Also C.W. 6560. Courtesy Lilavati Asar

529. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

December 8, 1937

Chh. Vijaya,

I understand your suffering. Have patience. Write to me. I will get your letter. Give me all the details. Don’t worry. Learn everything carefully. Take full advantage of Vinoba’s satsang.

The rest on the back.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7075. Also C.W. 4567. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

---

1. Company of or association with the good
2. This is a report by Kanu Gandhi on Gandhiji’s health, especially the blood-pressure.
530. LETTER TO J. P. BHANSALI
December 8, 1937
CHI. BHANSALI,
Spare some time for Sharda for teaching her English. She is such a girl that anything you give her will bear fruit. Though a child, she is mature and wise.
You have realized that all that I told you about spinning is essential for a votary of Truth.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8366. Also C.W. 7023. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

531. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI
December 8, 1937
CHI. AMRITLAL,
I should like you to tell me why you have no peace of mind. What could be the cause? Whatever it may be, you must change. If you wish to go out for some time, when is it to be and for how long? Let me know your weight. Write about whatever other things you have omitted.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10742

532. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH
December 8, 1937
CHI. SHARDA,
You dare not accept defeat. Remain calm. Keep on writing to me in detail. I could not [write] regularly. Only today I have taken up some letters. It would not be so always. Do all your work with scrupulous care.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9977. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala
MY DEAR UNTOUCHABLE,

It is Monday, 7.55. I can’t help giving you a few lines. You are packing for Nagpur¹. You can’t pack me. This pains me. I had hoped against hope that I would be with you to support you. But God had willed it otherwise. You will excuse me. I shall be with you in spirit. I may not send you a message to read or publish. But you don’t want that. It is enough for you to know that during that difficult time I shall be praying for your success. You are not to worry about me. Really I am doing well and obeying the doctors and Jamnalalji. I see the niece’s illness too worries you. Leave everything in His all-powerful hands. How I wish you were with me to watch Dinshaw Mehta’s² massage, etc., and to have his treatment for yourself.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3844. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 7000

534. LETTER TO AMRITLAL T. NANAVATI

December 13, 1937

CHI. AMRITLAL,

I have your letter. I understand. As suggested by you, we shall arrange about your going after I get back there. You will find much worth observing and worth learning at Saoli. But what I want from you is something different and original. Saoli and Nalwadi offer expert knowledge about the crafts. You probably have that in full. What you have to acquire is the art of weaving all other knowledge into the knowledge of the crafts. It can’t be gathered from books. It will have to come out of your heart and your brain. When Vijaya goes to Saoli, you may accompany her.

Your weight must increase. You must not make the least reduction in your milk and ghee so long as you can digest them.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10743

¹ To preside over the All-India Women’s Conference
² Of Poona Healthatorium
535. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

JUHU,

December 13, 1937

CHI. SHARDA,

You must have received my letter and Pyarelal’s. I hope you have understood the point clearly and started the treatment. Why is there no letter from you? I hope you are not in trouble and that everything is going on well. Blessings to all. If Balwantsinha and Parnerkar have come there, ask them to write to me. Rohit must now be playing a lot.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9978. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokha-wala

536. LETTER TO J. P. BHANSALI

December 15, 1937

CHI. BHANSALI,

How can we speak of killing two birds with one stone? We may say that we bring down two fruits with one stone. You may bring down with one stone as many fruits as you like, but don’t keep awake for long hours at the cost of sleep. True yoga is that which strengthens body, mind and soul, all the three. What you say about Sharda is correct. She is a wise girl. Give her as much as you can.

I am improving.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8297. Also C.W. 7024. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah
537. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

December 15, 1937

CHI SHARDA,

Got your letter. I do not wish to play a trick on you by arranging classes for you. And is that possible in any case? Are you such a simple soul that you can be so easily caught? You have to do one thing. You must make your body strong as steel. Looking after the rest is my responsibility. If you have followed everything about Dinshawji’s [treatment], start it. It would not take as much time as you fear. But spare whatever time may be necessary for it. Write to me regularly about the result.

Why do you find the atmosphere dull? Why should your mind be sad? It is your own fault. So many people, the cows and calves, the birds and bees, the shrubs and trees—one would be in blithe spirits with so much of company. They are all your kith and kin—even the trees. Why should you not play with the local children?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9979. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokha-wala

538. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

December 15, 1937

CHI. MRIDU,

I will not object if you can attract Vijaya and I will not interfere. Otherwise she gives good news about Mummy first at Calcutta and then on her way there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11206. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation
539. LETTER TO AMRITLAL V. THAKKAR

JUHU,
December 16, 1937

BAPA,

How can you afford to give way to despair like this? I had told you that even after we got complete independence, we should expect little help from the Government. Should we expect the Government or God to do what ought to be done by every caste Hindu, or, rather, should not every individual do his own duty? All the same, we shall see about the U. P. and Bihar.¹ But we shall deserve no credit if we get help from there. We can earn merit only by getting whatever every caste Hindu can give. I hope, therefore, that you will not slacken your labours in future. You have selected your sphere of service for your whole life. Poona is definitely not for you. You may certainly pay a visit to it every June. Let Ghanshyamdas say what he likes, but the Sangh cannot be wound up.² I am writing this from my sick-bed.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

540. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

JUHU,
December 17, 1937

CHI. LILA,

Do stay with Durga till I come. This is your duty for the present. Even if, therefore, you must go somewhere, you should postpone doing so. But in future also do only what is within your capacity. We may wish to do a good many things, but if we don’t have that much strength we should give in.

I am doing fairly well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9368. Also C.W. 6643. Courtesy: Lilavati Asar

¹ The addressee had complained that the Ministers in U. P. and Bihar were not helping Harijans’ education.

² G. D. Birla had suggested that since the Ministers were there to take up the responsibility of Harijan uplift work, the Harijan Sevak Sangh could be wound up.
541. Letter to Narayan M. Khare

Juhu,
December 17, 1937

Chhi. Panditji,

My blessings to Yoga\(^1\) and Soman\(^2\). May they be happy, live long and by their life add lustre to the Ashram. Tell Yoga that she has dried up after writing to me only one letter. Ask her to shake off her lethargy.

Lakshmibehn\(^3\) must be quite all right now.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4047

542. Letter to Manilal and Sushila Gandhi

December 20, 1937

Chhi. Manilal—Sushila,

Don’t worry about me at all. Don’t believe the newspapers. If there is anything serious, you will no doubt get a cable from here.

What Sushila says is correct. You needn’t thank her for any help she may give. It would be strange if she did not help. We used to sing a bhajan in Phoenix, one line in which ran: “A true lover’s love is that which expects no thanks or return for courtesy shown”. “Vinayni purni” means “thanks or return”. Either of you will be starting soon now.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4869

---

\(^1\) Addresser’s brother’s daughter

\(^2\) Ramachandra J. Soman

\(^3\) Addressee’s wife
543. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

December 20, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

You did well in coming back to Segaon on falling ill. But why did you at all fall ill after leaving Segaon? You must find this out. If you can’t find the cause, you will be unfit to stay outside Segaon. What will you learn from Vinoba’s words? What you learned from his work is what matters. If one could learn from words, wouldn’t I have sent you to some great scholar? After you have recovered, go to Nalwadi, finish the work there soon and come back. Master the art of spinning on the takli and the spinning-wheel with good speed. Master carding, too. Why should you get tired out in eight hours? Have you grown old? Why should you get tired if you sit upright when spinning? The Gita verses are recited there with the purest pronunciation of the words. Probably you don’t hear them recited. I suppose they recite the Marathi Geetai there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7076. Also C.W. 4568. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

544. LETTER TO J.P. BHANSALI

December 20, 1937

CHI. BHANSALI,

There is no doubt at all that in turning to the path of karma you have done the best thing possible. There is no other path at all while we live in the body. We shall be free only if we surrender everything to Lord Krishna. He who clings to Karma is attached to pleasure. He is the true yogi who goes on doing his work as a duty laid on him and as sacrifice, i. e., for the good of others, and remains unconcerned with the fruits of his work.

You may by all means go to Nalwadi for a few days . . . after asking . . . whether you can. Take more of milk if necessary. I am

---

1 Metrical Marathi rendering of the Bhagavad Gita by Vinoba Bhave
2 This is followed by a note which reads: “This should be sent to Segaon.”
3 The source is illegible here.
4 ibid
very glad indeed that you are teaching Sharda.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8295. Also C.W. 7025. Courtesy: Munnalal G. Shah

545. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

December 21, 1937

I have your letter. Don’t believe newspaper reports unless you get a cable from me. If there is anything serious a cable will of course be sent.

What you think about me is not correct. I believe that I am more vigilant than any other leader. This is, as I understand, the straight and simple cause of my blood-pressure. My non-attachment is less than what is meant by the Gita; I am full of feeling. I am always pained by anybody’s suffering. This is as it ought to be. And still I must remain non-attached. I have not yet mastered that art. It will not be non-attachment if I am not affected by others’ sufferings. The Gita asks us to endure cold and heat, joy and sorrow. It doesn’t say [in so many words] that a non-attached person never feels them. If, therefore, you said to me, ‘Bapu, you are not obeying the teaching of Mother Gita’, your charge would be tenable. But, as for physical rest, such as the pampering of the body, etc., I have been taking more than enough. Know that my coming to Juhu is nothing but pampering. There are so many things to be done but I have forsaken them. My reasoning is clear, but I am not exercising it. You should, therefore, stop worrying about me. . . .

If this is done, you two will be able to pay frequent visits here by turns. But the condition is that your health must become fine. You can collect the bills, can do composing and can even write something. One learns to do a thing by doing it. Nimu also will get useful experience there and can help in the work a great deal. Kanam is happy. You will read about all that in Ba’s letter.

[From Gujarati]

From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

1 The source is illegible here.
546. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

JUHU,
December 24, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I think of you as you are about to enter upon your task. May the Inner Light guide you and make your path smooth through all difficulties. I hope you are keeping well. Who is with you? Most probably Jamnalalji will be in Nagpur on 26th. I have no doubt you will invite him. Anyway ask him whether you could come for a few days to Juhu and if he says yes, and if you have not tied yourself down otherwise, do come.

I am expecting a full letter from you in reply to mine. If you want season’s greetings, you have them by the cartloads. You were to be with me during the whole of the month!!! But—

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3620. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6429

547. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

December 27, 1937

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I must send you a line come what may. Of course nothing can come. I hope the weather is cool there and your task made light by your co-workers on the spot. I am with you in spirit all these days. I hope you had my letter¹ awaiting you on your reaching Nagpur. I am having ups and downs. But they don’t worry me. And how is your eczema? The rest from Mira.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3621. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6430

¹ The addressee was to stay at Wardha before leaving for Simla.
² Vide the preceding item.
548. LETTER TO YOGA R. SOMAN

JUHU,
December 29, 1937

CHI. YOGA,

You will learn what is what, now that you are living with your husband. Tea for such a young girl like you! Why do you spoil milk in that manner? If you cannot digest milk, you can add some water to it, or palm-jaggery. And be sure you become proficient in music.

You will be able to learn much from Somanji if you mean to. You are not yet too old to learn. Build up a strong physique. Serve your mother-in-law as well as you can. I shall not be able to write a separate letter to Soman. I am not writing to Panditji either. You will show this to them, won’t you? Has Rambhau\(^1\) reformed himself completely?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4048

549. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

December 29, 1937

CHI. PRABHA,

You seem to be quite a cunning woman. What excuses you offer for not writing! You are like a thief turning round and accusing the police. You went on your own, and now say that you had to leave and, therefore, feel no inclination to write. You had definitely promised me that you would write. You went alone. And even then no letter saying that you had arrived safe! And even if you don’t care about me, what about poor Amtul Salaam? She inquires every day whether there has been a letter from you. She writes to you almost daily and you don’t write even a few lines on a slip of paper in reply! What discourtesy? And what hard-heartedness! Tell me now what punishment you deserve, and in what measure. What do you do about milk there? You did well in going away, of course. About myself Amtul Salaam will write. You are often in the thoughts of us all. Do

\(^{1}\) Narayan M. Khare’s son Ramchandra some reading and writing while you are there and serve Father in every possible way.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Don’t be remiss now in writing to me.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3509

550. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

JUHU,
December 30, 1937

MY DEAR UNTOUCHABLE,

I have just been given your notelet. Can you give me a better diminutive? I did not know till after I had written to you that you had already been shut out. So you are now taking your revenge at my expense. But I understand. You shall certainly come later. I expect you fully at Haripura as I expect myself to be able to go there. You wouldn’t be an idiot, if you had answered my questions about your health. Now you must when you write again.

You will be interested to read the two cuttings herewith. Perhaps you had not seen them before.

About myself I say nothing because Mira keeps you fully informed.

Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3848. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 7004

551. LETTER TO MADELEINE ROLLAND

December 30, 1937

MY DEAR MADELEINE².

I was glad to have your letter. I am getting on as well as may be. And whatever I do and do not do, I suppose I shall live on for a while, if God wants more work from me. His work goes on, we come in only when and to the extent He wants us. Yes, I remember those happy

¹Sister of Romain Rolland

VOL. 72 : 6 JULY 1937 - 20 FEBRUARY, 1938 419
hours with you and the Sage. I wish they could be repeated.

I hope all of you are keeping well in spite of the awful political atmosphere surrounding you. These rapid communications have so reduced this tiny globe that what happens in one part of it reverberates throughout the length and breadth of it.

My love to you both.

BAPU

From a copy: C.W. 10589. Courtesy: Madeleine Rolland

552. LETTER TO VIJAYA N. PATEL

JUHU,

December 30, 1937

CHI. VIJAYA,

I have your letter. It is surprising that spinning on the takli tires you out. Build up your strength so much and so well that you will not get fatigued no matter how long you spin. Find out the reason why you get fatigued. See that you don’t fall ill again. Kanu and others will write about me. Ask Vinoba about yourself. If he and Vallabhb leave perhaps you need not stay on at Nalwadi. Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7077. Also C.W. 4569. Courtesy: Vijayabehn M. Pancholi

553. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

December 30, 1937

CHI. SHARDA,

This is how one should sit. This bath consists of just lying in hot and cold water. The effect of hot and cold [water] alone is important. For this bath even small round tubs would do. But these we do not have. Have you understood it now? It is proper to begin Dinshawji’s treatment only after fully understanding everything. Do you find time to read? Do you keep any accounts? Look after your health. How is the cold there?

Blessings from

BAPU
[PS.]

Tell Balwantsinha that it does not matter if he has suffered an injury. But let him not ignore it now. Let him go to the hospital if necessary. I have no energy to write to Nanavati today.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9980. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

554. CABLE TO EFY ARISTARCHI

[1937]

PRINCESS ARISTARCHI

HOTEL SKOTZKY

FRIEBURG, I.B. (GERMANY)

MATERIAL DISCOMFORT MUST NOT OVERWHELM YOU. YOU MUST REJOICE IN THIS SUFFERING. LOVE.

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

555. CABLE TO C. F. ANDREWS

[1937]

CHARLIE ANDREWS

PEMBROKE COLLEGE

CAMBRIDGE (ENGLAND)

YOUR SUGGESTION IMPROPER.

BAPU

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

1The source places this and the following cable along with the letters of 1937.
556. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

[1937]

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I sent Pyarelal because of my utmost trust in you and love for you. I cannot say if I have acted rightly. It has only added to my anxiety and disturbed Sushila. If you cannot fully trust him you may send him back. What a burden you have taken upon yourself! I had only mentioned it in jest but the reality of it strikes me hard. It is a tremendous task for you not to miss a single meeting. Treat it as your obligation. You may see my letter to Pyarelal if he shows it to you. Whatever be the case send me a wire. Please do not hesitate to send him back at once, Of course if you can trust him you may retain him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

557. DISCUSSION WITH AN ITALIAN PROFESSOR

[1937]

PROFESSOR: If we had in the world a people who practised ahimsa, could they keep themselves free from being slaves of others?

GANDHIJI: If one person can, surely a nation can. No man or group of men can hold any other man or group of other men slaves against their will. The slave-driver will say ‘Do this’ and they will refuse. It is possible to imagine that some day all nations will become sufficiently intelligent to act, even in the mass, as individuals do today.

Gandhiji then drew a vivid picture of the violent road for India, how she might murder and fight, and suffer reprisals, till out of 30 crores only one crore would be left.

---

1 As placed in the source
2 This report by Mirabehn appeared under the title “The way of God or the Way of the Devil” with the following introductory note: “Readers of Harijan will like to share with me the following dialogue between Gandhiji and an Italian Professor which took place in Segaon in 1937. I found it in my notebook as I was turning over old papers. It gives a fuller meaning to his Press message on the world situation.” Vide, “Statement to the Press”, On or before 27-8-1939.
But I decided that that was not the road for me. I rehearsed all these things in my mind, but I said to myself, ‘This is the way of the Devil, not the way of God.’ The thought of those twenty-nine crores of lives sacrificed would ever haunt me. The fact of the one crore of giants, trained in violence, who would have the whole of India to spread themselves in, would give me no satisfaction. I said to myself, ‘I must take the way of non-violence, and take with me even the lepers and the lunatics.’

For, after all, are we not all more or less lepers and more or less mad? If we were all sane, we should be like gods. It is because we have a screw loose that we cannot succeed in being one with God.

_Harijan_, 9-9-1939

558. TALK WITH DOCTORS

[On or before January 7, 1938]

The doctors wanted Gandhiji to continue the stay until the end of January, but a month out of Segaon was the most Gandhiji could give himself. Not that he has regained a condition of health enabling him to resume his normal activities. But as he put it to the doctors in his own unanswerable way:

If I cannot get well out of Segaon, I should prefer to face death in Segaon in the process of giving there to the country the work I think I am specially gifted to give.

_Harijan_, 15-1-1938

559. TALK WITH C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

_January 7, 1938_

“But why should you put so much passion in all your talk?” said C. R. to Gandhiji on the last day of our stay at Juhu. Laughing, Gandhiji said:

Because I have yet to learn the lesson of the _Gita_ to be passionless. There is the desire to see that in whatever I am speaking about, to whomsoever I am speaking, truth—cent per cent truth—is speaking out.

[C. R.] But why can’t you forget all work until you are fully well?

1 This and the following item are reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Notes”. The conversation took place before Gandhiji left Juhu for Segaon on January 7, 1938.

2 _ibid_
[GANDHIJI]: There are things that cannot be given up even at the risk of life. One of them has become the question of the Andamans prisoners and the Bengal detenus.

[C. R.] Then why do you ask me to let others do their work and not to try to mind others’ portfolios? All I say is that I have not acquired the art of controlling my swabhava. ¹

[GANDHIJI:] Even so must I obey the law of my swabhava.

“But why must you devote precious hours to what seems to us to be unimportant people and things?” said another friend.

[GANDHIJI:] They seem to you to be unimportant, not to me. For fifty years I have acted in the same way and I cannot change my spots now.

_Harijan_, 15-1-1938

560. INTERVIEW TO THE PRESS²

_BOMBAY_,

_January 7, 1938_

When asked whether he could stand the Segaon cold in his present delicate state of health, Gandhiji said in his clear silver voice that he was hopeful that Segaon would suit him. Gandhiji admitted that his 32 days’ stay in Juhu had contributed much to his improvement.

Let me get back to Segaon and try that village. If I go down again, I will return to Juhu.

Asked why he could not continue the stay in Juhu for a few more weeks, instead of running a risk in Segaon, the Mahatma nodded his head, raised his hands and said:

Let me see what God has in store for me.

Mahatma Gandhi had a word of appreciation for the Press who had co-operated with him in carrying out the doctors’ instruction regarding complete rest.

Asked to give a message about the Bengal detenus, Mahatma Gandhi said:

No messages, please.

_The Hindu_, 8-1-1938

¹ One’s nature
² At the Victoria Terminus station
MY DEAR REBEL,

Your all letters have been duly received. Only I rarely write nowadays. Yours is the first letter I am writing after five or six days’ abstention from writing. I am well and not well. The B. P. goes down to the ideal figure but jumps up on the slightest pretext. I dare not talk or even listen to any serious conversation.

You shall come on 1st February or 2nd as suits you best and stay as long as you can. I am expected to leave on 7th reaching Haripura on 9th instant. You will go with me. The W. C. meets here on 3rd February.

About 15th Lord Lothian comes to meet me and then perhaps Ghanshyamdas to talk about the Bengal prisoners. This gives you all the information you may need. The weather is quite mild. The temperature is 60-64 during night, 72-76 during day.

You ought to keep well by treating yourself along the lines of naturopathy. I do wish you could have come earlier. However, one has to be thankful for small mercies. But do try to come earlier, if it is at all possible.

Did I tell you that last year’s shawl you gave me has gone to Ba at her own instance. I know you don’t mind that.

Love to you and Shummy.

From the original: C.W. 3622. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6431

562. TALK WITH JAMNALALBAJAJ

January 9, 1938

“But you now know that you cannot put up with more than a certain amount of strain. Why should you invite that strain and let all the people feel that Segaon does not suit you?” said Jamnalalji, on Sunday, the day after our return to Segaon.

[GANDHI:J] It would be wrong to say so. All I want you to do is to co-operate with me when I say to everyone that I must mend or end in Segaon and not go out anywhere else, that no outside doctors should be troubled to come here.

1 Vide “Discussion with Lord Lothian”, 20-1-1938
2 Reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Notes”
But you have often assured us that you are making a conscious effort to live.

I have. But if someone were to tell me, in order to avoid death, to retire to the Himalayas until the end of this year, I should not do so. For I know that death is inevitable, no matter what precautions man deludes himself with. I would like you to appreciate that I am one of the very few among the public men in India who know how to preserve their health. God knows what work to take out of me. He will not permit me to live a moment longer than He needs me for His work.

_Harijan_, 15-1-1938

563. _TELEGRAM TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU_

_January 10, 1938_

_MOTHER LIVED NOBLY HAS DIED NOBLY. SHE WAS A MODEL WIFE WIDOW AND MOTHER. NO SORROW. LET OUR WOMEN COPY HER EXAMPLE. LOVE._

_BAPU_

_The Hindustan Times_, 11-1-1938

564. _LETTER TO KANTILAL GANDHI_

_SEGAOON, January 10, 1938_

_CHI. KANTI,_

Your letters are lying with me. I have read all of them carefully and with interest, for I was waiting for them practically every day. I wanted to write to you even before I received your first letter, but I was held back because I was afraid of you. The fear was that you, who were already angry with me, might get more so if I [inaudiently] wrote something which you didn’t like. Despite this fear, however, I would have decided and summoned up courage to write were it not for my illness. I was happy to see no sign of anger in your letters. But I do believe that it was because of anger that you had abruptly discontinued writing to me. However, as is your wont, after some reflection you overcame your anger and started writing to me as before. Your letters are to me, what the rain is to the _chataka_. In fact, I have never given up hope of you. I am sure that, before I die, you

---

1 A legendary bird supposed to drink only rain drops will again become one with me as you were before. This certainly doesn’t mean that I want you to give up your study and run up to me.
Do complete your study.

You did well in visiting Trivandrum. Saraswati was longing for you. You may come here only when you conveniently can.

The discussion with the teacher was very fine. You certainly have the power of reasoning. What about Tamil, Malayalam and Kannada? It will be quite easy for you to learn these languages.
Amala knows thirteen languages and can even teach some of them.
Max Mueller knew fourteen languages including Latin, Greek, Hebrew and Sanskrit. He could even correspond in Sanskrit. We, on the other hand, try to learn everything through English in order to master that language and as a result get exhausted and become incapable of doing anything else. In itself, knowledge of several languages is as useful as it is interesting and easy to acquire.

I hope you are taking care of your health. I am still not permitted to write letters. I think this is the first long letter I have written after I fell ill. Mahadev will correct me if I am making a mistake in this.

I am gradually improving. I do hope to recover completely.
The only medicine is rest, and I am taking as much of it as I can.

Write to Devdas, as also to Manilal and Ramdas. Manilal or Sushila may be coming.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7332. Courtesy: Kantilal Gandhi

565. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

January 10, 1938

CHI. MAHADEV,

The accompanying article won’t do. Your reply is no reply. Is not the article in Hindi? Your reply also should be in Hindi. The manner of replying should be different, too. There is no hurry about it. We will think it over when we meet. We should also know who has sent you the article. Show it to Kaka. I think the writer is a friend of his.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

An article is enclosed. Send it on if you like it. Otherwise bring it back and discuss it with me.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11586
566. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

January 10, 1938

Don’t worry for me. There is One who worries for you, me, and everybody. Why, then, should we worry at all? And now I am improving, even though slowly. Do not trust the newspapers—except if you can live there peacefully, your health will improve even there. In any case, however, you will be able to earn a plain loaf of bread anywhere. If you become calm you will improve your health even there. Here you would feel embarrassed to eat as much as you wish while there everybody does and can do so. Such is the power of psychological atmosphere. How can one eat one’s fill without a sense of guilt in this poverty-stricken country? There you are far away. In a distant land one should forget things back home and adjust oneself to the surrounding atmosphere. I have not come across any human being who remains unaffected by his surroundings. I for one think there can be no such person. If there is any such person in a million, he must be a vatapi, that is, one who lives only on air. How can such a one permit himself to eat anything else? Does God eat? With what mouth and with what body can He eat? I will write no more, otherwise the doctors will complain. Do not be anxious about Nimu and Kanam. Please have faith that everything possible is being done for everyone. If more is possible, I would certainly do it. But if we attempt anything beyond our capacity, we might violate our dharma and break under the strain.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary. Courtesy: Narayan Desai

567. TELEGRAM TO SECRETARY, PRISONERS’ RELIEF SOCIETY, LAHORE

January 11, 1938

HOPE AGAINST HOPE PRISONERS WILL GIVE UP HUNGER-STRIKE WHILST I AM AILING. THEY DON’T GIVE ME A CHANCE.

The Hindu, 15-1-1938

1 The addressee had informed Gandhiji of the hunger-strike by political prisoners in the Punjab jail.
568. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

January 11, 1938

CHI. MAHADEV,

I did not like even the second article about relief and hence I am sending a fresh one altogether. If you do not need any such article, you may omit it.

I have revised the article¹ about non-violence. It is all right. Discuss the complexities of the subject some time. It is good that you get an opportunity to write on such subjects.

Send a telegram to Jawaharlan. The note about the Bill is all right.² The other thing also is all right. I should have a copy of the Bill.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11587

569. ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

SEGAON,

January 13, 1938

1. Even if Nanabhai himself wishes to leave, I should like to know why. I would never agree to his leaving. What he has is something permanent. Why should he run after what is impermanent?

2. I have no doubts even about you.³ You also cannot leave. I would study even that point⁴ from every possible angle. Even if you were to devote all the 24 hours to the Harijan Ashram, there is so much work that every day there would be something left to be done. However, if you can do other work while looking after the Harijan Ashram, well and good. But as the author of this scheme of education I feel that you can experiment with it and develop it among the boys you have in the Harijan Ashram. I would prefer that.

3. What about your remark that we should regard this work as our own? I have not been able to think about it even after perusing the

¹ Presumably “Training for Non-violence”, published in Harijan, 15-1-1938
² The note on the Bombay Harijan Temple Worship Bill was published in Harijan, 15-1-1938, under the title “A Necessary Measure”.
³ This was addressed to Narahari D. Parikh.
⁴ About running the school while remaining in the Ashram papers you sent to me. We do not have sufficient equipment for that purpose. But I think that Maganbhai\(^1\) should throw some light on the subject if he can. I do not think that we should do something anyhow even if we do not find the equipment we want. Let us avail ourselves of whatever our stray attempts may yield. We would be deceiving ourselves by attempting anything else.

Had it not been for Zakir Husain and [Arya]nayakam, I would have abandoned the implementation of my idea of education. That is in my very nature.

4. Atitkar has volunteered to start the work in Maharashtra. I cannot say how much he would be able to do. But he has shown the courage and offered to do something. Would it look proper if we were not able to do anything in Gujarat? The Government wants us to manage even the Basic Training College.

I have realized that. I would certainly feel ashamed if we did not show the courage and take up the challenge. But it would be disgraceful if we were able to do nothing after taking up the challenge. Hence, it seems to me that, after careful consideration we cannot find someone who has self-confidence and who would also inspire confidence in us, we should keep quiet. Can we not take somebody from Balubhai’s circle? What does Maganbhai say?

5. Maganbhai says that we should train some of the Visharad candidates in the Vidyapith as teachers.

Then let us do that. Let the Premchand Shala’ continue to function as it is functioning now. Let the Government recognize and also finance the experiment in the Vidyapith.

6. When the matter of expenditure was first mentioned to the Sardar he had said that he would manage about the expenses. He was not in favour of asking financial help from the Government.

That would be my view too. But the position is this. The Government is keen to do something and wants to involve the officials in it. Since the Congress has recommended this experiment, every Congress Government must do something about it. Considering the matter from this point of view, how can we go to the Sardar for help? The answer was provided by Maganbhai. If Maganbhai and others feel more confident, let them proceed. Otherwise let us not utilize Government funds. Since it would run as a Government institution, we

\(^1\) Maganbhai P. Desai
\(^2\) Premchand Raichand Training College for primary teachers

430  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
would have Government teachers. And though we should enjoy many facilities, we would not be tied by the Government’s red-tape, because the Government would put no restrictions on us.

7. What should we do about the principle of non-co-operation? Would it be proper to pass a resolution that it should be suspended so long as the Congress Governments are in power?

I think it would be wrong to pass such a resolution. So we shall not suspend it. But if we still regard it as British rule, then it is the Government that is co-operating with us and not we who are co-operating with the Government. In other words, we can co-operate with the Government without modifying the resolution in any way. I had myself drafted that resolution without any hesitation. Even then I had said that if the Government offered its co-operation to us, we should accept it. Maybe that might prove a test for us. It remains to be seen whether thereby we gain or lose strength. At the height of the non-co-operation movement I had told Lord Reading that if he was agreeable to certain conditions I would myself enter the Legislature and yet consider myself a non-co-operator. I had said the same thing in my letter\(^1\) to Lord Irwin. But this time such a question does not arise. To look at the matter that way is looseness of thinking or wrong use of a term. It is a result of our mental lethargy. Has not the Congress Minister issued an order that the Collectors have to work in co-operation with the Congressmen?

8. What do you think of the suggestions of Maganbhai and Vithaldas?

I have not read the suggestions so carefully. From a cursory glance I did not find them disconnected. You have called them stray thoughts. I too read them from that point of view. I have no time at all to subject them to a deep critical study.

9. Maganbhai suggests our joining the movement for Gujarat University and giving it greater impetus.

Wait a bit. We have not started discussing that point. I have not been able to understand Maganbhai’s views about the University. In expressing his view about the matter Naraharibhai would seem to have usurped my own ideas and words. And, if he likes praise, I should say that he has expressed my ideas in better language than I could have done myself. The university of my conception has to evolve itself

\(^1\) Vide “Draft Resolution on Non-Co-Operation”, 30-12-1920

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Lord Irwin”, 2-3-1930 from this type of education. I went to the extent of telling Vallabhbhai that we must wind up whatever is being done in the Vidyapith today and engage all our teachers for this task. Then alone would we do credit to ourselves and to the Vidyapith. I think he was shocked at the moment. But I could not persuade him to think further about it. There were other things to be done. But if I could convince the teachers, I would at once put my idea into practice.

10. What should we do if we have to do something without winding up the present set-up?

It would mean doing something under compulsion. If Maganbhai has suggested any scheme I would think over it and make suggestions if necessary. You, Kishorelalbhai, had pointed out that we were neglecting primary education. Then we also passed a resolution.
We have never been able to implement that resolution fully. We have an opportunity now, because it is our own Government and, moreover, such a good man as Kher is in charge.

11. (About securing a charter for the Vidyapith.)

I see a great danger in it. For, such a step would invite intense jealousy. It would also mean asking the Government to incur great expenditure. I would not be interested in this, as it would mean diversion of funds to ourselves. Our field is service of Daridranarayana. In one way the task is difficult, in another it is easy.
However, I shall certainly not stand in the way. Do I take any interest now in its management or do I meet anyone or know what is happening? As for the Wardha Scheme, I may be said to be its author and so I must devote some of my time to it. I do not consider myself of any importance in the matter of deciding the future of the Vidyapith. My heart is at present wholly in the villages. It is better to let it remain there. If you seek my help in thinking about the Vidyapith, you will be inviting unnecessary knocks because I would only be throwing stones from a distance.

12. Maganbhai says that at present the Gandhian view is accepted by the majority in the Congress but the general public opinion—particularly in the field of education—is against us. Is it proper, under these circumstances, to take advantage of our majority?

This seems to me fundamental from the point of view of satyagraha. The function of satyagraha is to educate public opinion. It is difficult to say at any time whether public opinion is in favour of a satyagrahi. So we give due importance to the question. It seems perfectly all right to me [to take such advantage]. For in so doing, we serve the people. There is no coercion in it.

And if Maganbhai runs only a training college, then there is no difference of opinion left at all. But in that case, should not other things be wound up? It is my impression that Maganbhai does see the problem.

There would be very few—maybe only two or four—students in Maganbhai’s Training College.

Maganbhai does not seem to have a proper idea of a training college. If he has the training college, he would require to do nothing else. I wish all of you to thoroughly study what is happening here. It is not perfect but it is worth studying.

13. Gandhiji indicated by a sign his approval of the Harijan Ashram and the Vadaj School being merged into one and Naraharibhai conducting it on the lines of the Wardha Scheme.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 10738. Courtesy: Gomatibehn K. Mashruwala

570. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

January 14, 1938

I have read the telegraphic summary of the prisoners’ message to me. I have no difficulty in appreciating their reasoning, but my plea for patience is based on a personal but peremptory cause. If, going out of my way, I begin to move actively and undertake even long journeys, the common end may be defeated by my collapse which medical friends regard as a certainty. Therefore, I appeal to the hunger-strikers to suspend their strike and to give the country and especially me a chance to make an effort in the common direction. Let it not be said of them that they were foolhardy or obstinate.

The Hindu, 15-1-1938

1 A few words here have faded out.
2 Which was in reply to the telegram dated January 11; vide “Telegram to Secretary, Prisoners Relief Society, Lahore”, 11-1-1938
571. DISCUSSION WITH EDUCATIONISTS

[Before January 15, 1938]

[DR. ZILLIACUS:] I had been wishing all these years that leaders of opinion ought to turn their attention to education which alone can reconstruct society, and I cannot tell you how grateful I was when I found that you had turned your attention to education. We have studied your scheme and we must assure you of our heartfelt sympathy for its success.

[GANDHIJI:] I am grateful that so many educationists have blessed the scheme. There have been critics also, but when I launched the scheme I did not know that it would appeal to anyone beyond the circle of my co-workers. When I consider the masses of India and the masses situated as they are, I could not think of any other type of education. With them work must precede anything else, and the concern of the educationist is to make that work educative. Let every child feel that he creates something for use and also expands his mind and heart therethrough.

I agree. The great psychologist Dr. Adler, who could not express himself well in English, said: “All that education should do is to put the child on the useful side.”

Harijan, 15-1-1938

572. TALK WITH A FRIEND

[Before January 15, 1938]

[GANDHIJI:] My idea is not merely to teach a particular profession or occupation to the children, but to develop the full man through teaching that occupation. He will not only learn weaving, for instance, but learn why he should weave in a particular fashion and not any other, why he should handle yarn in a particular fashion and no other, why he should himself know spinning and insist on a particular count for a particular kind of weaving. All these things the weaver-boy does not learn at home. The spinning-wheel is to him just what it was a thousand years ago. We make him learn the art of making a most efficient wheel and a loom, not so as to displace other labour but so as to make them more efficient than the existing models. Your suggestion for different schools for different classes—weavers, spinners, carpenters and so on—would not answer my purpose. For I want to bring about an equalization of status. The working classes have all these centuries been isolated and relegated to a lower status. They have been Shudras, and the word has been interpreted to mean an inferior status. I want to allow no differentiation between the sons of a weaver, of an agriculturist and of a schoolmaster.

1 Dr. Zilliacus, Prof. Bovet and Prof. Davies, members of the New Education Fellowship Delegation, had called on Gandhiji.

[THE FRIEND:] But should we not have different time-tables for different boys—I mean seasonal time-tables?

No, we need not have even different hours. The village is a composite whole. The vast majority of the rural population is agricultural. I need not conduct a separate type of school for the ten per cent of the non-agricultural population in India. I do not want to make every one of the boys and girls in the villages of India spinners or weavers, but I want to make of them whole men through whatever occupation they will learn. The village school will be turned into an educative workshop in as economical and efficient a manner as possible.

Therefore the school will not be a glorified workshop producing more or less the conditions of the present-day workshops. The workshop will not teach the children to produce anything and everything of conceivable use. Tobacco, for instance, is a commodity very largely in use throughout the world, it is cultivated in India as a money crop. But its harm to man’s physical and moral fibre is patent. I should not teach in our school workshop bidi-making. It is in this respect that our schools will, I hope, differ radically from schools abroad which claim to give a sort of practical education. I read the other day about a school in England which trains boys to be efficient shop-keepers. England accepts no prohibition and does not look forward to its introduction in the near or distant future. English boys, therefore, have to be trained as workers in liquor-shops too. The English school in question has, therefore, applied for a liquor licence in order to be able to teach its pupils how to handle liquor for its consumers. In the event of a war England may turn its schools into ammunition factories. In a nation with ahimsa for its national policy such a thing should be inconceivable. Our schools will be turned into workshops, but workshops where they will learn things that are necessary for healthy living in accordance with the national ideal.

_Harijan_, 15-1-1938
573. LETTER TO MULK RAJ

SEGAON, WARDHA,
January 15, 1938

BHAJU MULK RAJ,

Please read the enclosed letter¹ and return it. Do you know anything about Lala Girdharilal? If what the enclosed letter says is true, a circular should be sent to the members and Lalaji’s name removed from our rolls. If you agree please circulate this letter among the members for their opinion.

Kindly send me the names and addresses of the members as also the minutes of the next meeting.

Yours,

M.K. GANDHI

From a copy of the Hindi: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

574. TELEGRAM TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

WARDHAGANJ,
January 20, 1938

BABU RAJENDRA PRASAD
ZERADEI [SIWAN]
Via CHAPRA

WHAT IS THIS BLOOD POISONING². WIRE CONDITION.

BAPU

From the original: Dr. Rajendra Prasad Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹ Not available
² Dr. Rajendra Prasad was in fact suffering from severe food poisoning which he had contracted during his tour of Kanpur and Lucknow. Following this illness he was bed-ridden for almost two months.
575. DISCUSSION WITH LORD LOTHIAN

[January 20, 1938]

During his talk on the last day Lord Lothian mentioned Christian Science and asked for Gandhiji’s opinion thereon:

Since man is inseparably related to God in proportion as he recognizes the indissoluble relationship to God he is free from sin and from disease. That is how faith heals. God is Truth and Health and Love.

GANDHIJI: And He is Physician too. I have no quarrel with Christian Science. I said many years ago in Johannesburg that I accept the doctrine in toto, but I do not believe in many Christian Scientists. It is one thing to have an intellectual belief and another thing to have a heart-grasp of the truth. I can quite endorse the statement that all illness is sin, that when a man has even a cough it is due to sin. My blood-pressure is the result of strain and overwork. But why should I have overworked myself? All overwork and hurry is sin. And I know only too well that it was perfectly possible for me to avoid all doctors. What I do not understand about Christian Scientists is that they make altogether too much of physical health and disease.

So long as one recognizes that disease is sin it is all right. Even the Gita says that one has to renounce the fruit of the five senses which is maya. God is Life and Love and Health.

I have put it somewhat differently. God is Truth, for as our scriptures say nothing is but Truth, which is the same thing as God is Life. And then I have said that Truth and Love are faces of the same coin, and Love is the means to find Truth which is the end.

Harijan, 29-1-1938

1 This is reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Notes”.
2 Lord Lothian stayed in Segaon from January 18 to 20.
576. A MESSAGE

SEGAON,

January 20, 1938

My ambition is to see the Congress recognized as the one and only party that can successfully resist the Government and deliver the goods. It is the only party which, from its inception, has represented all minorities.

If the British Government recognize this unique position of the Congress they will not hesitate to postpone inauguration of the Federation till they have satisfied the Congress. It should not be difficult to do so if, before taking in the Princes, elementary rights of the States people are guaranteed and their representation takes place through election. In my opinion a crisis of the first magnitude may be precipitated if Federation is sought to be imposed.

The opposition to the Act will still remain even if the present difficulty is got over in the manner suggested. Peace, humanly speaking, can only be assured when a constitution drawn up by a Constituent Assembly supplants the present Act. Anyway, once the right status of the Congress is fully recognized the rest becomes easy.

This is my personal view which I have not discussed with any of my co-workers.

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 7791. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

---

1 This was written “For Lord Lothian and responsible statesmen only”.
2 As proposed in the Government of India Act, 1935
577. LETTER TO VICEROY

SEGAGON, WARDHA,
January 21, 1938

DEAR FRIEND,

I was much touched by your affectionate letter of good wishes about my health. I delayed acknowledging it till I was a little better. Though I have not crossed the danger zone, I am much better than when your kind note was received.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

H. E. THE VICEROY
NEW DELHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Courtesy: Pyarelal

578. LETTER TO LORD LINLITHGOW

SEGAGON, WARDHA,
January 21, 1938

DEAR FRIEND,

Chander Singh Bhandari, an ex-Havildar Major of the Garhwal Regiment, is a prisoner in the Naini Central Prison, undergoing 14 years’ imprisonment for disobedience of orders to fire at a crowd in Peshawar during the Civil Disobedience campaign of 1930. He has served more than half the sentence. He wrote recently a long letter in Hindi to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru to be passed on to me urging me to try to secure his release which he expected together with the other prisoners discharged by the United Provinces Government. Before troubling you I wanted some information about the prisoner. This appears in the letter and the enclosure received from Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. On receipt of this I wired for reasons for this prisoner not

1 Jawaharlal Nehru, in his letter to Gandhiji dated January 13, 1938, had recommended the case of Chander Singh, especially in view of the fact that, when in 1930 his companions of the Garhwal Regiment were contemplating not only refraining from shooting at their fellow-countrymen but also shooting at their British officers, Chander Singh had dissuaded them from this violent action, stressing the non-violent character of the civil disobedience movement. being discharged by the United Provinces Government. Enclosed is the wire received from the United Provinces Premier. I venture to ask you, if it is at all possible, to secure the discharge of this prisoner. His expectation seems to me to be justified. He can see no distinction between the other discharged United Provinces prisoners and himself.
He was guilty of no violence. It is true that insubordination is held by the military to be a very grave offence. But I feel that there were extenuating circumstances in this case. And in any event if the United Provinces Government enjoy real autonomous powers, their wishes in respect of such cases should be respected.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a microfilm: Lord Linlithgow Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

579. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

January 21, 1938

MY DEAR IDIOT,

I began a fruitarian fast yesterday and I am feeling A 1. I needed it. I want to do it for eight days. But it would depend upon the progress I may make. Therefore don’t you worry. But this is to inform you that I told Lord Lothian yesterday why you had refused to be on the Lady L.’s Tuberculosis Committee. This became necessary as Lady L. had sent through him a message asking me to lend my name to the project. She had also said that the connection of the King Emperor with the project was only temporary. I felt that she knew that I knew your objection. I therefore brought your name, told him that there were no secrets between you and me (was I not wholly right?), that therefore I hoped Lady L. had not taken it amiss that you had taken me in your confidence. I added that the initiative was wholly yours and I only knew of the deed after it was done but that your objections had made a forcible appeal to me. Now you will tell [me] if I have done the right thing. If you are overbusy, you will answer this question when we meet.
I gave your message to Lord Lothian. He said you were the ablest witness his Committee¹ and the other Committee² had to deal with.

More when we meet.
Love.

TYRANT

From the original: C.W. 3623. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6432

580. TELEGRAM TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

WARDHAGANI,
January 22, 1938

BABU RAJENDRA PRASAD
ZERADEI
SIWAN
LISTEN DOCTORS. TAKE FULL REST WITHOUT WORRY.

BAPU

From the original Dr. Rajendra Prasad Papers Courtesy: National Archives of India

581. TELEGRAM TO DR. SARAN

WARDHAGANI,
January 22, 1938

DR. SARAN³
ZERADEI
SIWAN
THANKFUL YOUR WIRE PLEASE SEND DAILY TELEGRAMS.

GANDHI

From the original: Dr Rajendra Prasad Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹ The Franchise Committee of 1932 before which the addressee had given evidence on behalf of Indian women
² The Joint Select Committee of the British Parliament which considered the new Constitution for India
³ One of the two doctors from Patna who had rushed to Zeradei to see Dr. Rajendra Prasad
582. LETTER TO AMRIT KAUR

SEGAON,
January 22, 1938

Expecting you on 31st.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 3624. Courtesy: Amrit Kaur. Also G.N. 6433

583. TELEGRAM TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

[January 23, 1938]¹

WELCOME HOME. GOD GIVE YOU STRENGTH TO BEAR
THE WEIGHT OF JAWAHARLAL’S MANTLE. LOVE.²

The Bombay Chronicle, 26-1-1938

584. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKR

January 23, 1938

CHI. KAKA,

I have your letter. I have not seen the resolution. Please send it to me so that I may make up my mind after reading it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7688

¹This is a postscript to Mirabehn’s letter to the addressee.
²The addressee had arrived at Karachi from London on this date.
³The source further reports: “In a separate telegram Mahatma Gandhi says that he is much better now.”
585. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

January 30, 1938

CHI. MAHADEV,

I am returning your note. I have not been able to revise the note on non-violence. I will attend to it by and by. I hope you remember that Rajkumari is arriving there tomorrow evening. Send her here immediately. For her sake I shall start the silence somewhat earlier today. So you went out for a walk only for one day. This is not proper.

Prabhu Dayal wants to join the Congress. What impression did he make on you? Please ask Kumarappa. How is his performance in the paper department?

Post the accompanying letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11589

586. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

SEGAON,

January 30, 1938

CHI. SHARDA,

I passed two days without writing to you. But today I have got to write. There should have been a letter from you today. You must be happy. You must be keeping well. I hope you are not finding it too cold. I must have your letters regularly and in detail. Did Devdas, Brajkisan and Pyarelal’s mother meet you? Get well soon and come over. I am fine.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Blessings to Saraswatibehn.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9981. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala
587. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

January 31, 1938

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

I take it that as in Lucknow so in Haripura there will be a guide to the exhibition with map, etc. Only it should be much better this time than the last.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Rajkumari comes tonight.

From a photostat: G.N. 10133

588. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SEGAON,

January 31, 1938

CHI. MAHADEV,

The accompanying article of yours is all right. Some addition is still possible. I gave you only the general framework. I could have shortened your other articles but it would have taken a good deal of time. Only if you continue such efforts, can I know whether you are able to digest my ideas. You should, therefore, go on writing even if I reject your articles a hundred times.

If everybody wishes to leave with me, who will be left behind? Whatever the pressure of work, I consider it essential that all three of you should start for a walk at the fixed hour. It is as necessary to spare time for walks as for meals.

Please remember to give Satyamurti’s [letter] to Jawaharlal. Let him see the whole letter. Show it to Jamnalal and others too. I am returning Ghanshyamdas’s also. I have read all the cuttings and am returning them. None, except one, seems bad to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Lancaster may meet me at night.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11588
589. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

SEGAON,
February 1, 1938

CHI. SHARDA,

I have your first letter. You must have showed your swellings to Saraswatibehn. They must have subsided now. Do not be afraid to eat chapatis if you feel hungry. What works wonders is the bath, the earth and the climate of that place. There is a difference between how it works here and how it works there. I have sent you there because I felt it would do you good. I know you will not be tempted by wealth. God is protecting you.

The Lord pervades all that moves in this world. Enjoy it with a feeling of renunciation. Never covet another’s wealth.¹

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9982. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

590. LETTER TO M. A. JINNAH

SEGAON, WARDHA,
February 3, 1938

DEAR MR. JINNAH,

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru told me yesterday that you were complaining to the Maulana Sahib about the absence of any reply from me to your letter² of 5th November in reply to one of 19th October. The letter was received by me when I was pronounced by the doctors to be seriously ill in Calcutta. The letter was shown to me three days after its receipt. Had I thought it necessarily called for a reply, even though I was ill I would have sent one. I have re-read the letter. I still think that there was nothing useful that I could have said in reply. But, in a way, I am glad that you awaited a reply. Here it is.

Mr. Kher told me definitely that he had a private message from you. He delivered it to me when I was alone. I could have sent you a verbal message in reply, but in order to give you a true picture of my mental state I sent you the short note. There was nothing to hide in it.

¹ Ishopanishad, 1
² Vide “Letter from M. A. Jinnah”, 5-11-1937
But I did feel, as I still do, that the way in which you used it came upon me as a painful surprise.

You complain of my silence. The reason for my silence is literally and truly in my note. Believe me, the moment I can do something that can bring the two communities together nothing in the world can prevent me from so doing.

You seem to deny that your speech was a declaration of war, but your latter pronouncements too confirm the first impression. How can I prove what is a matter of feeling? In your speeches I miss the old nationalist. When in 1915 I returned from the self-imposed exile in South Africa, everybody spoke of you as one of the staunchest of nationalists and the hope of both Hindus and Mussalmans. Are you still the same Mr. Jinnah? If you say you are, in spite of your speeches I shall accept your word.

Lastly, you want me to come forward with some proposal. What proposal can I make except to ask you on bended knees to be what I had thought you were. But the proposal to form a basis of unity between the two communities has surely got to come from you.

This is again not for publication but for your eyes. It is the cry of a friend, not of an opponent.¹

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

The Bombay Chronicle, 16-6-1938

591. LETTER TO V. A. SUNDARAM

February 3, 1938

MY DEAR SUNDARAM,

So you have written off 42 years of your life. Why limit your wish 25 more? Why not His will, not your wish? I have glanced through your booklet. But Brunton’s² appreciation is not found in your letter.

I await your full letter about Malaviyaji. I think of him continually.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 3205

¹ For the addressee’s reply, vide “The Kottaoatam Summer School”
² Paul Brunton, author of Search in secret India
592. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI AND FAMILY

February 3, 1938

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA, SITA, ARUN.

Welcome to you all. When are you coming here? Akola is just on the way. Nanabhai is not keeping well. Go to him first; it is like a pilgrimage. We leave for Haripura about the 7th or 8th instant. I take it you will accompany us. I am keeping well enough.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4870

593. LETTER TO RAJARAM R. BHOLE

WARDHA,
February 4, 1938

MY DEAR BHOLE,

Bapu had your earlier letter and also the p. c of the 2nd. He has read no books but he would ask you to get in touch with Shri Aryanayakam (Nawa Bharat Vidyalaya, Wardha) and Dr. Zakir Hussain, Jammia Millia Islamia, Karol Bagh, Delhi, who should be able to advise you competently. You may know that they are the President and Secretary of the Wardha Education Scheme Committee.

Yours sincerely,

MAHDEV DESAI

[PS.]

Bapu asked me to give you the message that he expects you to fulfil all the high expectations he has of you both in the Assembly and on the Committee.

From the original: R. R. Bhole Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

1 Nanabhai I. Mashruwala, Manilal Gandhi’s father-in-law
2 Kasturba also conveyed her blessings along with this.
594. LETTER TO D. B. KALELKAR

February 5, 1938

CHI. KAKA,

Please don’t come today at any rate. Come at 3.00 the day after tomorrow. Do I have to draft the syllabus¹? Or will it be the one you have brought from Aligarh? If it is the latter, I have already seen it. I find it difficult to write the introduction. I wish to leave on the 8th. I shall see if I can give it before that date. I shall sign and send over the Kamath [papers] after I have gone through them. Be sure that you at any rate come over. Kishorelal also may come if his health permits.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7690

595. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

SEGGAON,

February 5, 1938

CHI. SHARDA,

Received your letter. The blood-pressure is somewhat high, but there is no cause for anxiety. There is pressure of work too. We shall leave for Haripura on the 8th. It is well that you have had a waistcoat made for yourself. The body must be kept warm. You must walk a lot. When you write to me at Haripura address the letter to Congress Camp, Haripura.

Do you remain cheerful?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9983. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

¹ Of studies, prepared by the Zakir Husain Committee
596. LETTER TO N. S. HARDIKAR

WARDHA,
February 5, 1938

DEAR MR. HARDIKAR,

Gandhiji has your letter of the 26th January. As we are likely to meet at Haripura very soon, Gandhiji says you had better meet him and have a few minutes from him to discuss the future of the Seva Dal.

Yours sincerely,
MAHADEV DESAI

From the original: N. S. Hardikar Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

597. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

February 6, 1938

CHI. SHARDA,

Received your letter. Now that you have gone there, do not be in a hurry to return unless there is a setback in your health. You must attune your mind to the place where you have to stay. I shall of course continue to write to you from time to time.

What you write about Saraswatibehn is true. But then we should accept whatever good we find wherever we are.

You should not mind or feel shy if you sit long at your meal. You must eat only as much as you can and chew it well. Then there will be no trouble. If the pain does not subside, tell Saraswatidevi about it.

Do visit the sitar class and join it if you like it.

I can say I am keeping quite well—though I have to work hard at the moment. Tell S. D. that I shall answer any questions she asks me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9984. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

1 Chief of the Congress Seva Dal
2 The addressee had “taken possession of the Seva Dal Training Academy buildings at Bagalkot” and had sought Gandhiji’s guidance for further action.
598. DISCUSSION WITH JOHN DE BOER

[On or before February 8, 1938]¹

Dr. John De Boer said the scheme had appealed to him most strongly, because at the back of it was non-violence. His difficulty was why non-violence figured so little on the syllabus.

[GANDHIJI:] The reason why it has appealed to you is quite all right. But the whole syllabus cannot centre round non-violence. It is enough to remember that it emerges from a non-violent brain. But it does not presuppose the acceptance of non-violence by those who accept it. Thus, for instance, all the members of the Committee do not accept non-violence as a creed. Just as a vegetarian need not necessarily be a believer in non-violence—he may be a vegetarian for reasons of health—even so those who accept the scheme need not be all believers in non-violence.

I know some educationists who will have nothing to with the system because it is based on a non-violent philosophy of life.

I know it. But for that matter I know some leading men who would not accept khadi because it is based on my philosophy of life. But how can I help it? Non-violence is certainly in the heart of the scheme, and I can easily demonstrate it, but I know that there will be little enthusiasm for it when I do so. But those who accept the scheme accept the fact that in a land full of millions of hungry people you cannot teach their children by any other method, and that if you can get the thing going the result will be a new economic order. That is quite enough for me, as it is enough for me that Congressmen accept non-violence as a method for obtaining independence, but not as a way of life. If the whole of India accepted non-violence as a creed and a way of life, we should be able to establish a republic immediately.

I see. There is one thing now which I do not understand. I am a socialist, and whilst as a believer in non-violence the scheme appeals to me most, I feel as a socialist that the scheme would cut India adrift from the world, whereas we have to integrate with the whole world, and socialism does it as nothing else does.

I have no difficulty. We do not want to cut adrift from the whole world. We will have a free interchange with all nations, but the present forced interchange has to go. We do not want to be exploited, neither do we want to exploit any other nation. Through the scheme we look forward to making all children producers, and so to change the face of the whole nation, for it will permeate the whole of our social being. But that does not mean that we cut adrift from the whole world. There will be nations that will want to interchange with others because they cannot produce certain things. They will certainly depend on other nations for them, but the nations that will provide for them should not exploit them.

¹ Reproduced from Mahadev Desai’s “Notes”. Dr. John De Boer, incharge of an educational institution in South India, visited Gandhiji at Segaon before the latter’s departure for Haripura on February 8.

² ibid

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

But if you simplify your life to an extent that you need nothing from other countries, you will isolate yourselves from them; whereas I want you to be responsible for America also.

It is by ceasing to exploit and to be exploited that we can be responsible for America. For America will then follow our example and there will be no difficulty in a free interchange between us.

But you want to simplify life and cut out industrialization.

If I could produce all my country’s wants by means of the labour of 30,000 people instead of 30 million I should not mind it, provided that the thirty million are not rendered idle and unemployed. I know that socialists would introduce industrialization to the extent of reducing working hours to one or two in a day, but I do not want it.

They would have leisure.
Leisure to play hockey?
Not only for that but for creative handicrafts for instance.
Creative handicrafts I am asking them to engage in. But they will produce with their hands by working eight hours a day.

You do not of course look forward to a state of society when every house will have a radio and everyone a car. That was President Hoover’s formula. He wanted not one but two radios and two cars.

If we had so many cars there would be very little room left for walking.

I agree. We have about 40,000 deaths by accidents every year and thrice as many cases of people being maimed.

At any rate I am not going to live to see the day when all villages in India will have radios.

Pandit Jawaharlal seems to think in term of the economy of abundance.

I know. But what is abundance? Not the capacity to destroy millions of tons of wheat as you do in America?
Yes, that’s the nemesis of Capitalism. They do not destroy now, but they are being paid for not producing wheat. People indulged in the pastime of throwing eggs at one another because the prices of eggs had gone down.

That is what we do not want. If by abundance you mean everyone having plenty to eat and drink and to clothe himself with, enough to keep his mind trained and educated, I should be satisfied. But I should not like to pack more stuff in my belly than I can digest and more things than I can ever usefully use. But neither do I want poverty, penury, misery, dirt and dust in India.

But Pandit Jawaharlal says in his autobiography you worship Daridranarayana and extol poverty for its own sake.

Gandhiji said with a laugh:

I know.

Harijan, 12-2-1938

599. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

February 8, 1938

CHI. MAHADEV,

Here is the article. I have had a talk with the Japanese and the Bengali gentlemen. The Japanese will accompany us. The Bengali will follow later. He will stay in the Bengal camp. Which letters from Krishnachandra? I shall meet you at the station itself. I shall walk up to the level crossing.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11590

600. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

SEGAON,

February 8, 1938

CHI. SHARDA,

No letters from you for two days. Do not keep me like this without letters from you. We are leaving today. I expect to be back within a fortnight. You must be fit enough to stir about by that time. Remain calm where you are. Do not be dejected. I shall know more about you at Haripura.
You must have received the news of Panditji’s demise. He had gone to Haripura in connection with the Music Convention. There he caught pneumonia and it proved fatal. So transient is our mortal frame.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9985. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

601. SPEECH AT KHADI AND VILLAGE INDUSTRIES EXHIBITION

HARIPURA,
February 10, 1938

Bhai Shankerlal referred to the void created by Panditji’s passing away. It is not surprising that I am pained because Panditji is no more among us.

When I sent the late Maganlal [Gandhi] to Pandit Vishnu Digambar [Paluskar] for acquiring for the newly established Satyagraha Ashram a good music teacher, the old Pandit knew whom he had to recommend. Pandit Khare justified his choice and filled the position to which he was called as no one else could have done. His death is likely to leave an unfillable gap. Few people who have devoted themselves to art are known to have achieved such a unique combination of devotion to art and a pure and blameless life. We have somehow accustomed ourselves to the belief that art is independent of the purity of private life. I can say with all the experience at my command that nothing could be more untrue. As I am nearing the end of my earthly life I can say that purity of life is the highest and truest art. The art of producing good music from a cultivated voice can be achieved by many, but the art of producing that music from the harmony of a pure life is but achieved very rarely. Pandit Khare was one of those rare people who had achieved it in full measure. There has been no occasion when I had the slightest doubt about his purity.

Let Gujarat continue to take the interest in music awakened by the late Panditji. I am hoping that his two children will be worthy of him and I have no doubt that his brave wife will give an example of 1 Narayan Moreshwar Khare died on February 6 at Haripura.

2 Mathuri and Ramachandra
3 Lakshmibehn
what a dedicated life an Indian widow’s can be. As for Panditji, though he died in the prime of his life, anyone would envy him his death which came to him whilst he was working in a sacred place like this, fully conscious that his sands were running out and so went with Ramanama on his lips and with the echoes of the sacred name about him. May Gujarat treasure his sweet memory.

When an exhibition of this kind was first opened at Lucknow1 I had said that our exhibitions should be schools of instruction. Since then we have been progressing successfully towards the ideal and the exhibition I have just now been through and am declaring open is such an annual training school. It is not, as exhibitions of old used to be, a place of entertainment. It is a place of instruction for the hundreds of thousands of those who will be visiting it during the week or two that it will be on. It provides to the poor man who visits it a kind of victual for the next year’s journey. It arms him with knowledge of an occupation which can carry him and his family through for the next year by his working at it for eight hours. It ensures the training in securing an honest livelihood to everyone who will use his or her hands and feet, no matter how ignorant or illiterate he or she may be.

I have spent an hour this morning at the exhibition. Please don’t think for a moment that there should be nothing new in it for one who is the President of the All-India Spinners’ Association and who is guiding the All-India Village Industries Association. Even if you think so, I am not such a simpleton as to entertain the belief. I would like to spend not one hour, but hours there learning something new every moment. But I confess that I should not be able to earn my livelihood from an occupation that I might pick up there. At the present moment I am begging for my livelihood, which perhaps is inevitable for one like me. But I am sure that it is possible for any able-bodied man or woman to choose one of the many industries exhibited here as a means of honest livelihood.

Shankerlal had suggested to me to point out any defects here. It is of course my duty to do so. One act of omission that I have noticed is that we do not preserve in the form of a book whatever we achieve in a year. I think we should preserve in book form pictures and detailed descriptions of new inventions and experiments so that a dynamic and experienced teacher may be able to teach a lot with its

1 On March 28, 1936; vide “Speech at Khadi and Village Industries Exhibition, Lucknow”, 28-3-1936
