Russian fleet reached Singapore. It was also known that the Japanese Navy was not very strong, that is to say, it had fewer battleships than Russia. But in scouting and watchfulness, Japan surpassed all the others. Admiral Togo’s spies were very accurate in their intelligence, and he pounced upon the Russian fleet just when it was most vulnerable. This was no ordinary deed of daring. Such courage is incomparable; but we consider supreme the patience and the cool composure shown by Admiral Togo in achieving his objective. Nothing was done with a view to winning honours or showing off their bravery to the world. Togo had only one objective, viz., to strike at Russia at the opportune moment and at the strategic place. That he has done; and Russia, which only two years ago was considered to be almost invincible, has now very nearly fallen into the hands of Japan. It is said that history has nothing which can bear comparison with this naval battle. England won a great naval victory in the sixteenth century. The “invincible” Spanish Armada was then destroyed in the English Channel, and the British Admiral was triumphant. That too has been considered a very fierce battle; but the Heavens then came to the succour of England. The Spanish Armada was very large, and the Channel narrow. And just as the battle was raging, a strong wind began to blow, which the Armada could not withstand, while it proved favourable to the English fleet.

In the nineteenth century, Nelson scored a great victory off the Cape of Trafalgar and the British Navy won for itself a pre-eminent position; but the powerful steamers we see today did not then exist nor the dangerous weapons of the present age.

Japan did not receive any unexpected help. She had only the firm determination to win, and this determination has proved her true ally. In this war Japan has not known defeat.

What, then, is the secret of this epic heroism? We have repeatedly to ask ourselves this question and find an answer for it. The answer is: unity, patriotism and the resolve to do or die. All the Japanese are animated by the same spirit. No one is considered greater than the other, and there is no rift of any kind between them. They think of nothing else but service to the nation. They have so identified themselves with their motherland that they consider themselves prosperous [only] if they bring prosperity to the country in which they are born, bred, and destined to pass their lives; that, if the country rose, they rose; if she enjoyed political power, they were partners in that power. Such is their patriotism. This unity and patriotic spirit together with a heroic indifference to life [or death] have created an atmosphere in Japan the like of which is nowhere else to be found in the world. Of death, they do not entertain any fear. To die in the service of their country, they have always regarded as wholly good. If, after all, one has to die some day, what does it matter if one dies on the battle-field? There is no certainty that, if one stays home and does not go to the front, one will live longer. And even if one did live very long, what was the good of living as a subjugated people? Reasoning along these lines, the Japanese have become defiant of death. What wonder, then, that those, who thus sacrifice their flesh, blood and bones, should prove invincible on the battle-field?

But how will these thoughts avail us? What have we to learn from them? We do not find the requisite unity even in the minor struggle we are carrying on in South Africa; splits occur every day. Instead of patriotism, we see more of selfishness everywhere. “If only I am saved, it does not matter if the others perish,” is the thought constantly on our mind. Our life is so dear to us that we pass away while we are still fondling it. If we do not achieve good in this world, what hope is there of achieving it in the next? This is the condition most of us are in. Our reading this account of the Japanese War will have been fruitful only if we emulate to some extent at least the example of Japan. We shall gain nothing by mere reading just as parrots do not attain to Heaven by repeating the name of Rama.

266. SPEECH AT NATAL INDIAN CONGRESS MEETING

The following is a report of Gandhiji’s speech at a meeting of the Natal Indian Congress held at Durban under the chairmanship of Haji Mahomed Haji Dada:

June 16, 1905

Mr. Gandhi said: I would advise the members of the Congress to authorise the Secretaries to incur expenditure on the Hoondamal Licence Case, as it is a very strong one; if we do not put up a fight, we shall have to regret it later. We should also send money to help Mr. Madanjit, who is carrying on a commendable agitation on our behalf in India.
It appears some people have misconstrued the speeches I delivered at Johannesburg. I had no intention in those speeches to hurt the susceptibilities of the Mahomedans. We should not discriminate between Hindus and Mahomedans. We know very well what the Japanese have been able to achieve through unity and accord. Though we profess different religions, we should regard ourselves as one in the matter of public work.

267. MEASURES TO ERADICATE PLAGUE IN INDIA

Dr. Turner of Bombay has addressed a long letter to the Government of that Presidency, stating that plague was on the increase from year to year and that the only way to eradicate it was for the people to have themselves inoculated. The Doctor believes that those who are inoculated rarely suffer an attack of the plague. But the great problem is how to persuade people to get themselves inoculated. Dr. Turner says that it is not possible to compel people to do so. It would be indeed very good, if the employers compelled their workers, but that takes time, so that will not do either. Finally Dr. Turner suggests that the Government should insure the life of the inoculated person, and endorse a document to the effect that, if the person dies within a year of the inoculation, they would pay his relatives Rs. 100. The Doctor hopes that this will induce many persons to undergo inoculation. Another doctor suggests instituting a lottery for those who get themselves inoculated. Chits bearing the names of the inoculated should be prepared, lots drawn, and prizes awarded to winners. Thus are these good men struggling in vain to eradicate the plague.

It is possible that some men may be able to save themselves through inoculation. But we see no advantage in this. This remedy of inoculation is just like the means adopted by men, given to the pursuit of pleasure, to escape the consequences of their indulgence. Inoculation does not extirpate the causes of the plague and unless these are removed, no real benefit can accrue. If, by chance, one does get rid of plague, another disease will appear in its place. Just as a tree is not destroyed unless its roots are pulled out, so also the plague will not disappear unless its causes are removed. It is necessary to bring about an improvement in the sanitary habits, morality and the economic condition of the people. I believe that we commit sin by not observing the rules of sanitation. Our moral standard is low, for we neglect our duties. Added to this, there is poverty which brings many miseries in its train. He will be considered a true alleviator of India’s ills, who can think out a remedy for this, and, having discovered it, puts it into practice. Only after these essential remedial steps have been taken will it be proper for us to take other measures to supplement them.

268. INDIA’S MILITARY AID TO ENGLAND

From the figures published in the journal, India, relating to the military aid England receives from India, we learn that a troop of 8,215 soldiers had come to South Africa in 1899; a platoon of 14,371 men was sent out to China, when the Boxer Rebellion broke out in that country; and 3,376 Indian soldiers were sent to Somaliland. These figures are exclusive of those who are stationed in Tibet as also those posted to guard the North-west Frontier.

All I have to say in connection with the above letter is that I am not aware if the facts stated in history books are incorrect. I shall be glad to correct my mistakes, if any. However, the fact whether I am right or wrong need not be emphasised, but the aim with which I presented the facts should be

270. LETTER TO LAW SOCIETY

[JOHANNESBURG,]

June 22, 1905

TO

THE SECRETARY
INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY
CAPE TOWN

SIR,

I intrusted [sic] Mr. E. A. Walters1 of Windsorton, Law Agent, with the collection of an amount due to a client in Johannesburg by a resident of that place or district.

Mr. Walters, so the debtor writes to me, has been paid the full amount due by him, but he has only sent me a part of the debt, and has ignored letters written by me to him during the last twelve months. This matter was placed in his hands about the month of February 1904. In my last letter to him, which I wrote on the 25th May 1905, I informed him that I should bring his action to the notice of your Society if he ignored my communications. Unfortunately, I have not heard from him in reply to that letter also.

I, therefore, bring this matter to your notice for such action as the Society may deem fit to take.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

M. K. GANDHI

If the Tramway Committee has considered this matter, I shall thank you for a reply to my communications herein.

272. LETTER TO PARSEE RUSTOMJEE

[JOHANNESBURG,]
June 23, 1905

PARSEE RUSTOMJEE JIVANJI GHORKHODU, ESQ.
9TH KETWADI LANE
BOMBAY

DEAR SHETH SHRI RUSTOMJEE JIVANJI GHORKHODU,

I went to your firm when I visited Durban last week. Omar Sheth, Kaikhushroo, Abdul Huk and I sat together and went over the accounts. The receipts from rent have diminished considerably. They have gone below £200 and will go down a little further. But that can’t be helped. I met the lady running the Avon Hotel. She said that she would stay on only if the rent was reduced, and I have agreed to do so. In business, too, I do not see much substance. But since Abdul Huk is confident, Omar Sheth’s advice is that some business should be carried on. He has agreed to supervise it himself. I therefore do not see any harm in doing a little business.

I remember what you said about rent. But you should not be in a hurry. Rents are bound to decline in these difficult times; but there is no cause for alarm. Please finish your work there without any hurry. The need for building the house is quite evident; please therefore let there be no interruption in it.

There were no letters from you either here or at Durban. It is necessary to write to the firm at regular intervals.

Please write to me about your health.

Please give my respects to Maji. Get Jal and Sorab to write to me.

273. LETTER TO JALBHAI SORABJI BROS.

[JOHANNESBURG,]
June 23, 1905

TO
MESSRS. JALBHAI SORABJI BROS.
110, FIELD STREET
DURBAN
DEAR SIRS,

I have your letter. I have gone through Mr. Laughton’s account. I think nothing could be said against it professionally. With regard to the bill with reference to Latiwala, you may plead for a reduction seeing that Latiwala has disappeared. I approve of your action regarding the Avon Hotel. Please tell Chhaganlal what the £7/4/- are for, so that he may make the necessary entries in the books. With reference to the Umbilo Road property, if the tenant would not pay more than £6, you may reduce it accordingly.

Yours faithfully,

274. LETTER TO “THE STAR”

[Prior to June 24, 1905]

[TO
THE EDITOR
The Star
JOHANNESBURG]

SIR,

I see that Mr. Loveday has again repeated his statement about the influx of Indians into the Colony, in total disregard of the evidence that he admits having seen after he first gave currency to those statements. Mr. Loveday thinks that the Permit Department does not keep out British Indians, and that non-refugees have been entering the Colony. In the face of the report of the Chief Secretary for Permits, one can only come to the conclusion that Mr. Loveday declines to believe the report. I can only say that even the British Indian refugees find it extremely hard to enter the Colony. I have before me a letter, addressed from the Permit Office to a British Indian, who applied some seven months ago for a permit asking him whether he still requires a permit. The poor refugee being friendless, after having waited months for making good his right as a refugee to enter the Transvaal, has gone back to India, and the letter has been sent to me by the gentleman whose address he gave. Nor is this a solitary instance. Whereas Europeans, whether they are refugees or not, obtain their permits for the asking, the Indian refugees, many of whom have paid the sum of £3 as the price of being allowed to remain in the country during the old regime, have to wait at least two months before they are admitted, and then, too, each applicant has to go through a number of formalities and a good deal of expense before he can enter the Colony. He must call at the Permit Offices in the coast towns for an application form. He has to get it filled in, for which, as a rule, he pays a fee. On receipt by the Permit Office in Johannesburg, letters are sent down to those whose names have been given as references. These letters have to make affidavits on which a half-crown stamp has to be affixed. If the evidence produced as to previous residence is considered satisfactory, a notification is sent to the applicant authorising him to enter the Colony. Nor is this all. He must then proceed to 1 This was reproduced in Indian Opinion under the caption “Refutation of Mr. Loveday’s Inaccuracies”.

320 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Johannesburg, call at the Permit Office and submit himself for cross-examination, and if he satisfies the examining officer, he receives a permanent authority to stay in the Colony. I know cases in which many have been sent back because they were not able to satisfy the examining officer that they were refugees. If, therefore, any one could possibly complain against the Permit Department, it would be the British Indians; and they do not belong to the criminal class mentioned by Mr. Hosken. Mr. Loveday has once again brought up the statistics published by the Mayor of Pietersburg, and yet the Mayor of Pietersburg has not taken up the challenge of the British Indian Association, although it was he who provoked it. I venture to quote from the letter addressed to you by the Chairman of the British Indian Association on the 9th December.

I deny that there are at present 49 Indian traders in Pietersburg. There are only 28 stores owned by Indians within the township, as distinguished from the Location, and of these some are held by the same Indians. Within the township before war, there were at least 23 Indian stores.

The names of all these store-keepers have been given in the same letter. This statement has never been disproved, but Mr. Loveday says the Asiatic Traders’ Commission report that there was only one Indian trader in Pietersburg without a licence before war. This is misleading. I have before me the full report of the Asiatic Traders’ Commission. In the first place, it is an interim report. In the second place, the Commissioners do not pretend to have ascertained the number of Indians who were trading without licences. All that the Commissioners have done is to mention the respective claims placed before them, and they state that there was only one British Indian claim for Pietersburg. They had in all only 233 claims presented to them. That surely does not exhaust the list of Asiatic traders before war. The newspapers also published the information that the British Indian claims were all withdrawn after the ruling that the Commissioners gave as to their authority, and that the British Indians ceased to participate in their deliberations. The Commissioners add that their work was interrupted by the decision of the Supreme Court in the now famous test case about the right of a British Indian to trade freely in the Colony. Knowing, as he must have done, all these facts in connection with the report, it is strange that a responsible politician like Mr. Loveday should allow himself thus to mislead the public by making a statement which cannot be proved. I admit that the Indian population in the Location at Pretoria has increased. Probably, it has increased also in Pietersburg and Potchefstroom. Will he also take note of the fact that the Location in Johannesburg has been wiped out; that there are not at present half the number of the British Indians who used to occupy the old Location; and that, during the last three months, not less than 300 Indians have left Johannesburg? According to the statistics placed before Mr. Conyngham Greene, there were in the Transvaal before the war 15,000 Indians. Not more than 12,000 permits have been issued to them by the Permit Department, and as the number of Indians leaving the Colony is greater than the number that is allowed to enter the Colony, I venture to submit that there are at present in the Colony less than 12,000 Indians. Mr. Loveday adds that indentured Indians of Natal, who have just become free, have gone to Potchefstroom and established themselves, a fact which is resented by the Indians themselves in Potchefstroom. Will the honourable gentleman condescend to give the names of the Indians who have thus entered the Colony? He would certainly then be rendering a great service to his constituents, the anti-Asiatic vigilants. Will he also be pleased to give the names of the Indians who have stated that they are being inundated by Indians from Natal, and if he cannot, will he have the grace to withdraw the serious statements he has made?

I am, etc.,

275. LETTER TO DADABHAI NAOROJI

[Prior to June 24, 1905]

TO
THE HONOURABLE DADABHAI NAOROJI
22 KENNINGTON ROAD
LONDON, S. E.

SIR,

I send herewith copy of Indian Opinion. The leading article shows to what extent it has now become possible under Law 3 of 1885 for the Indians to own land. The Supreme Court decision practically leaves them free, so long as they can get a European friend to become a trustee, to own fixed property. I draw your attention to the fact so that, in any legislation that may be drafted there, it may not be taken for granted that, under Law 3 of 1885, it is impossible for the Indians to own property.

From what has been going on here, it appears that the new legislation to replace Law 3 of 1885 will be as much as possible on the lines of Law 3 of 1885, that is to say, it is not the intention of the Government here to give any greater rights that [those] enjoyed under Law 3 of 1885. Just as, therefore, Mr. Lyttelton has taken up the stand, saying that he would not, in view of the Supreme Court decision, consent to restrict the trading rights of the Indians, so also should he now refuse to sanction any legislation which would restrict an Indian’s rights to own landed property.

The anti-Indian legislation that is at present being considered by the Natal Parliament is dangerously symptomatic. Almost every Gazette contains something about it. Indians are to be brought under the Native Department regarding the holding of fire-arms.

Their occupation of rural land, unless they are owners, is not to be accepted as such for the purpose of levying a land tax.

The Durban Town Council is asking for powers to impose licences on store-holders and bring them within the Dealers’ Licenses Act.

The Municipal Corporations Consolidated Law is intended to deprive the Indian of the municipal franchise.

The latest Bills published in the Natal Government Gazette are intended to bring within the Dealers’ Licenses Act Native Eating House-keepers, and to restrict the scope of Hawkers’ Licenses to the magisterial divisions within which they have been issued (hitherto a licence to hawk outside municipal boundaries entitled the holder to hawk throughout the Colony excepting the municipal areas).

All this legislation is unnecessary and insulting. I, therefore, venture to think that, as stated by Lord Curzon in his Budget speech, it is time that the next step was taken, namely, to suspend indentured Indian immigration to Natal, unless the Natal Government would cease their anti-Indian activity and amend, at any rate, the Dealers’ Licenses Act so as to give the aggrieved party the right to appeal to the Supreme Court.

276 CORRUPTION DURING WAR TIME

It is true that patriotic fervour surges in everyone’s breast during times of war. This fervour is very beneficial. Many a patriot has, under the stimulus of zeal, performed, with only a small army, feats that have astounded the world. While, on the one hand, some people abound with such enthusiasm, hundreds, thousands, nay, lakhs, of lives have, on the other, been lost, ruined or reduced to a state of dependence, through the doings of some selfish people who took advantage of the inability of officials to exercise sufficient control during war. Taking advantage of the chaos, normal persons have added to the prevailing disorder by committing, during war, misdeeds which they will not think of at other times. It seems that the rules of honesty and good conduct are entirely forgotten during times of war. The violation of these rules is more in evidence during a bigger war than a smaller one. For it is said that it is during a crisis that a man’s character is put to the test. It cannot be claimed that he has been put to the test until he has had the chance successfully of committing a crime but remains steadfast in spite of the opportunity. Such steadfastness at a critical time may be found in a handful of men. It is indeed all too rare.

The bigger the war, the bigger the extent of chaos. The fraud and trickery, that were exposed during the Crimean War, and other sundry happenings that have later come to light, are most distressing. During that war, a large stock of boots was purchased and despatched to the front for the use of soldiers, but they all were found to be for the left foot! A large quantity of foodstuff for the army was sent from England; but when it was consumed, instead of helping to feed the army, it proved deleterious being very rotten meat. It was not only merchants who wanted to become millionaires, but even the generals on the front, the politicians who were out to sacrifice a large number of precious lives, and leaders who called themselves benefactors of the state, committed fraud. Large stock of useful medicines sent out for soldiers and officers on their deathbed disappeared mysteriously before reaching the hospitals for which they were bound, and not a trace of them was found. Merchants, the so-called patriotic generals and high Government officials thus went on misappropriating hundreds of useful and valuable articles to fill their pockets at the expense of hundreds of poor soldiers who had gone to the front to fight for their country, leaving their homes and hearths. When a news correspondent sent a full account of this, describing the condition of the army encamped at Sebastapol, the whole nation was so enraged that the ministry in power had to resign. In addition to this, there was a long list of oppressive tyrannies. But all these are insignificant incidents compared to those of the last Boer War. A scrutiny of how contracts, for the supply of provisions, uniforms, etc., to the army, were given and executed during that was has revealed how public money was utterly wasted. This was due solely to the misconduct of the autocratic officials. Contracts were blindly given by the departments concerned to contractors who were their favourites or were known to them and who made a profit of 50 to 500 per cent on some of the goods supplied. Such corruption was not confined to Great Britain alone. The defeat France sustained in 1879 was due to its officers who had become slaves of mammon. For, at the time of that war, the French Government had kept every necessary article ready. Millions and billions had been spent on these arrangements at the very start, but all that expenditure was incurred secretly. All these things was purchased and stored—on paper only. Although money was spent like water, articles of even ordinary military use ran short at the very outset of the war. The reports of the present Russo-Japanese War, too, are astounding. Last April, a million roubles were given to Duke of Sergius to be spent on feeding and clothing the army in Manchuria. This stock was despatched to Manchuria in the month of May; but, instead of reaching there, it got transported directly from Moscow to Danzig, and from thence, goods worth thousands of pounds were sold for a song in Germany. Large sums of money were raised through subscriptions for the benefit of the widows of men and officers killed in the war; but not a farthing of that money reached the poor widows. The bags of sugar despatched to the battle-field were found to contain sand instead of sugar! No trace could be found of millions of roubles that disappeared during the construction of the Trans-Siberian Railway. But this is not all. Innumerable examples have been recorded of the corruption and bribery practised in Russia.

The conduct of the Japanese affords a marked contrast to all this. No merchant or officer in Japan has entertained any thought of exploiting the war situation, with the result that the Japanese army can secure its needs at a very small cost. The report of the Butler Commission on the war in South Africa, which has been published, tells us that the irregularities and corruption that prevailed during that war were in no way less [considerable] than in Russia. The way public money has been spent is very much to be deplored. A major part of this waste was due to incompetent officers, who were inexperienced and untrained. The Commission recommends that the officers deserve to be censured for such serious lapses. The country’s wealth that was collected through heavy taxation was abused without limit, and the officers supposed to be responsible for it connived at it. This has cast a slur on the British administration, which has so for enjoyed a reputation for justice and integrity in public affairs. There was no limit to the chaos, corruption and dishonesty rampant at the time. The report of the Commission, it is expected, will open the eyes of the Government, who will do whatever is still possible in the matter.

WESTMINSTER

DEAR PROFESSOR GOKHALE,

By this time you must be deeply engaged in your mission in England. I have no doubt that you will have a corner in your heart for the British Indians in South Africa. Is it possible for you, on your return to India, to pass through South Africa? If you could do so, and if you would kindly let me have previous notice, suitable arrangements would be made for your stay in the different parts of the country. I suggest your giving one month to South Africa. If you could come, the expenses of your tour in South Africa would be borne by the community. You could land in Cape Town, pass through Kimberley, Bloemfontein, Johannesburg and Pretoria; go to Natal and see Durban, Pietermaritzburg, thence to Delagoa Bay, and thence either by the East Coast visiting Mosambique, Zanzibar, Lamu and Mombasa, or go via Ceylon and take in Mauritius on your way.

I remain,

_Yours truly,_

279. LETTER TO ABDUL HUK AND KA KhUSHROO

[JOHANNESBURG.]
June 27, 1905

MESSRS ABDUL HUK AND KA KhUSHROO

MY DEAR SHRI ABDUL HUK AND KA KhUSHROO,

There is a complaint against you both that you spend most of your time on Sundays playing cards, that you are not courteous to your customers and do not take sufficient care of your master’s business. I do not believe much of this. If you are fond of playing cards, I personally do not wish to prohibit you. I believe you do your master’s work carefully. I cannot persuade myself to believe that you are not courteous. Nevertheless, I consider it proper to convey to you what has come to my ears rather than keep it to myself. If you are really playing cards, I would suggest that it is better to utilise your leisure going outdoors or adding to your knowledge by reading good books. If, however, you must play cards, do so for a short while only. You know Rustomjee Sheth’s nature. He does not like playing cards at all. It will be a nice thing if you give up cards altogether, if only in deferece to his wishes.

Do not speculate at all as to who has given me this information. Also do not be angry with any one for it. But, instead, take it that whosoever has given it has done so with the intention of doing good and reform yourself if there be any drawbacks, or do not worry, confident that you are already doing your duty in regard to such complaints against you.

There is again a letter from Mr. Nuruddin. I think it proper to return the note if there is no claim left on it.

280. LETTER TO “THE STAR”

JOHANNESBURG,
June 27, 1905

TO
THE EDITOR
The Star

SIR,

I trust you will allow me to trespass on your courtesy to enable me to reply to certain statements made by your correspondent at Potchefstroom with reference to a letter I wrote to you on Mr. Loveday’s statements at the Inter-Colonial Council meeting. Your correspondent states that I “regretted the continued stream of Indians, particularly those of the lower class”. I am not aware of having ever expressed any such regret for the simple reason that I have never believed in a continued stream of Indians pouring into Potchefstroom or elsewhere.
I speak with certain knowledge when I deny any such influx at all.
That there has been some increase in the number of Indian traders in Potchefstroom, as well as in other places, is not to be denied, but the increase in the number of white traders is out of all proportion to the increase in the number of Indian traders. In your leaderette on the Krugersdrop meeting, you say that “Pietersburg has undoubtedly been one of the favourite places to which the Asiatic traders have gravitated of late”. This has been shown to be wrong. The fact is that Pietersburg had a fair proportion of Indian traders before the war but there has been no great influx since.

In this connection, may I say that the British Indian community in the Transvaal has never received sufficient credit for the spirit of conciliation and compromise it has throughout shown. Whilst all kinds of impossible remedies are being suggested, the only two infallible tests proposed by the British Indian Association still remain untried. In order to prevent any possibility of the Indians “invading” the country, an Immigration Restrictions Act on the Cape model has been suggested. The Act has been tried not only there, but in Australia, Natal and elsewhere, and has not been found wanting. It is useless to say that there cannot be strict watch on the border. Natal has succeeded in keeping that watch. Many an Indian has found out to his cost that he cannot enter Natal territories through Charlestown or any other inland stations, unless he can prove that he is entitled to enter the Colony under the Immigration Act. To prove that the Indians do not in any way mean to usurp the European trade, they accept municipal control over the licences, in such a manner that any Municipality will have the power either to refuse or to grant a licence to trade, subject in extreme cases to revision by the Supreme Court. It is true that such legislation will not be class legislation, and will be of general application. Does it, however, matter? It can be passed without any bother, if all parties agree upon the main principles, and it will set at rest the unhealthy agitation against the Asiatics that springs up in the Colony from time to time, and settle the minds of the Indians. There is no finality to any legislation under a progressive Government. If, therefore, the two measures above mentioned are, in practice, found not to answer, it will be time to consider what more is necessary.

The Indians need not accept any such compromise, especially in view of Mr. Lyttelton’s emphatic declaration that nothing that they enjoyed before the war would be taken away from them. They certainly enjoyed the rights of free immigration and free trading, and it is exactly [on] these two points that they have offered the above compromise; if only the very un-British Law 3 of 1885, and other harsh and needless regulations, which have nothing to do with the economic conditions, be removed from the Statute-book. Mr. Brodrick has only lately stated that British trade with India is greater than that with Australia, Canada and South Africa put together, and that, therefore, Imperially considered, India occupies a place second only to Great Britain. Will the Colonists continue to subject the inhabitants of that country to constant pin-pricks?

We are told that the Chinese guilds have been successful in bending the American Government. Lord Curzon has already talked of retaliation. It is not possible, then, to realise what India could do if retaliation were seriously taken up? China and America are not under the same flag, whereas South Africa and India are. Would it not be a calamity if there arise permanent estrangement between the local Governments in South Africa and the Indian Government, and if Lord Curzon carries out his threat deliberately uttered in the Imperial Legislative Council at Calcutta? Some such thing is inevitable unless the Colonists see the sweet reasonableness of the compromise above offered.

281. LETTER TO “THE RAND DAILY MAIL”

[JOHANNESBURG,]
June 28, 1905

TO
THE EDITOR
The Rand Daily Mail

SIR,

Perhaps you will allow me to make a few remarks on your leading article in the Daily Mail of the 26th instant anent the Krugersdorp anti-Asiatic meeting.

After admitting that pledges were given before the war by the Home Government regarding the British Indians, you go on to advise them that “they must admit that their competition has driven out many white traders”. With all due respect, I venture to think that you are advising the Indian community to admit what does not exist. There has not yet been given, at any of these meetings, one authentic instance of the white trader having been driven out by Indian competition. This can only be proved by the appointment of a commission to investigate the charge. In the meanwhile, the presumption is wholly in favour of the Indian contention that Indian competition has not “ruined white trade”, or “driven out” any such traders. In the Transvaal itself, as well before the war as now, the white traders have held their own. At the Cape, in spite of the greatest freedom of trade granted to Asiatics, the white trader is largely predominant. In Natal, where there is the largest Indian population, Sir James Hullett only the other day said, in his evidence on oath, that the Indian traders had not seriously affected the white traders. I submit that this competition has been quite healthy, in that it has kept down the prices of the necessaries of life. I am free to admit that the Indian scores by his simplicity of life, but this is more than counterbalanced by the white trader’s knowledge of the English language his superior organising ability, and better facilities for making connections with wholesale houses in Europe.

But, Sir, the Indians are prepared to concede all that can reasonably be expected of them, without having to make the admission you advise them to make. They are prepared, in place of Law 3 of 1885 and other unnecessarily stringent regulations, to accept municipal control over the licences in general, whereby the local bodies will have the right either to grant or to refuse licences, subject, in special cases, to revision by the Supreme Court.

Their trading rights are the greatest cause of irritation, and this can be allayed without the slightest difficulty, and without loss of time, by accepting the compromise above suggested.

You seem to think that the Indians now here “have certain moral claims which will have to be dealt with by fresh legislation”. This is not in accord with facts. They have a moral claim, certainly, to be placed on an equality with the Europeans, so far as the rights of trade, ownership of property and locomotion are concerned, but they have, today, a legal right to trade and live where they like, as has been laid down by the Supreme Court, and it is not capable of being restrictively dealt with by fresh legislation, as has been said, both by Mr. Lyttelton and Mr. Brodrick; and yet, in order to conciliate public opinion, the Indian community is prepared to accept a restriction on trade, on general and non-racial lines, under the proviso above mentioned.

Yours, etc.,
M. K. GANDHI

DURBAN

DEAR MR. NAZAR,

I enclose herewith draft for £108 with statement showing what it covers. I epitomize as following:
The other claims have not yet been received. Suramsamy’s Power of Attorney I have not yet been able to trace, nor Verasamy’s. Vandithumu’s Power of Attorney has been sent to the Commission, but they are not able to trace this claim. Can you say how much the man received before, and then, if you could, I should be able to secure that claim.

I notice in the Natal Government Gazette received to-day a Bill to amend the Immigration Act of 1903. This ought to appear in this week’s Opinion, but I am afraid that it will not. I think that it is your clear duty to see the Gazette the day it is received by you, and send anything that may be therein of importance to Phoenix. It does not look at all nice that Natal matters should appear a fortnight after they happen. Have you also borne it in mind that we have to send a memorial to the [Colonial1] Secretary as soon as the several Bills, about which we [have] petitioned, become Acts, or are accepted in their final [stages by] the Legislative Council? For that information I must rely upon you entirely.

Yours sincerely.

My clerk, Mr. Polak,¹ tells me that each time he has called on you regarding this matter, you have insulted him. This is painfully surprising as this would be the last thing I should expect from you. DEAR SHETH PARSEE RUSTOMJEE, Received your letter dated 20th May. I am returning herewith the two letters sent by you. I have written to Kaikhushroo and Abdul Huk² without mentioning your name or the writer’s. It will take a day or two to receive their reply. You need not attach much importance to that letter. You will be able to judge better from the accounts and figures you receive. Please let me know if you find them defective. Anyway have no anxiety about the shop. Be at ease and complete the work you have begun.

Let me know what steps you have taken in regard to the children’s education.

I am glad to know that you have kept up your walks and baths. Perhaps you take the children also with you.

You have given a good report in the issue of the Jame-Jamshed you have sent me. The account given about me was not necessary. I can do public work better without getting publicity in this way. You know my thoughts on the subject.

A heavy bill\(^1\) has been received from Mr. Laughton regarding Latiwala. I cannot intervene in that matter. I have, therefore, written to the store that they should see Mr. Laughton and plead for a reduction.

Give my respects to Maji. Let me know the names of people whom you have met.

Your letter to hand. The panchas\(^2\) have charged no fees. I have not billed you for all the work I did for Mr. Ismail Kaji. But the fee of 30 guineas includes the charges for letters written in connection with making the settlement, the consultations held with you as well as with Mr. Kaji, the preparation of documents for presentation to the panchas, the presentation of the case before the panchas and the work done later for the panchas. I have not debited the fees for all these items separately but have charged the minimum amount I considered reasonable. Nevertheless, should you so desire, I shall prepare a detailed bill and send it to you. I cannot say what it will come to, because

DEAR SHEH HAJI HABIB,

I forgot to reply to you in connection with Ismail Amod. What can be done until Mr. Lang agrees to the matter regarding him? I have told him that I shall write to him when something definite emerges. I think you need not be in a hurry about it. If a bond is found to be immediately necessary, you can get it prepared without producing the promissory note.

An insurance man will insure the property. He will send his agent to inspect the building and will insure it only if it is passed by the latter, not otherwise. We shall have to bear the travelling expenses, to and fro, of the agent sent by him.

I shall be grateful if you will send me some money against my bill. I am badly in need. I shall be thankful if you can get Mr. Habib Motan, too, to send some. All my money has gone to Phoenix and is still going there.

287. NATAL LEGISLATION

There are four Bills published in the Natal Government Gazette Extraordinary, dated the 21st June, all of which are more or less objectionable. The first is to amend the laws relating to liquor licences and other licences in their application to the province of Zulu land. In this Bill, which is very largely aimed at British Indians, a hawker is to be called upon to take out a licence from month to month, and this applies even to hawkers in goods not imported, although for the latter there is no licensing fee required. The fee for a hawker's licence to trade in imported goods is to be £1 per month. Moreover, licences under Act 18 of 1897 are not to be granted unless with the approval of the Colonial Secretary, whose decision is to be absolutely final, and “from whose decision there shall be no appeal to any court of law or authority”.

VOL. 4 : 23 MAY, 1904 - 4 NOVEMBER, 1905 335

Another Bill dealing with British Indians is the one to impose a tax upon unoccupied rural lands. This is a reproduction of the Bill with which we have already dealt\(^1\) and in which land is to be deemed unoccupied unless the owner or some European has continuously resided thereon for at least nine of the twelve months reckoned from January to December in each year.

The third Bill is the one to provide for the licensing of private Locations. A private Location is defined therein to mean “any number of huts or dwellings occupied by Natives or Asiatics on any private lands or any piece of Crown land in process of alienation”. Thus, by a stroke of the pen, every piece of ground which may be occupied by Indians is to be turned into a private Location, and the landlord of the place on which the private Location is established is to take out a licence in respect of which he has to pay 10/-\(^2\) per year per hut or dwelling. Licence fee is not to be paid in respect of any huts occupied by Asiatics or Native employees. The net result of this would be that every room occupied by an Indian, unless he is the owner or in the employ of the owner, shall be liable to an annual tax of 10/-, to say nothing of the insult which is implied in calling the Asiatics' habitations “Locations”.

The fourth Bill is to impose a tax on occupied dwelling-houses. This is of general application, and probably the framers of the Bill had not in their minds British Indians at all; but in the end the Bill will tell far more heavily against Indians than any other class of the community. The Bill contemplates the levy of a tax of £1-10 on every house valued at under £750. The tax rises to £20 for a dwelling-house exceeding £4,000 in value, and the word “dwelling-house” means a house or a part of a house used as a dwelling and including domesticservants’ quarters, stables, out-buildings and other buildings forming the adjuncts of a dwelling-house, in so far as they serve the residential purposes of the house, and this tax has to be paid not by the owners, but by the occupier. Therefore, every occupier of a room even if it is worth only £50 will have to pay an annual tax of £1-10. There are many rooms which are made of wood and iron for which, probably, only five shillings per month is paid. The Government proposes to add a monthly half-a-crown to such rental. To say the least of it, there should have been some free limit under which the tax should not be levied. As it is, the Bill is open to very serious objection. These Bills are a sample of the activity of the new ministry.¹ We feel constrained to say that the stamp of inexperience is to be seen on every one of them. Every true citizen must sympathise with the Government in their efforts to bring the Colony out of its difficult pecuniary position; but the means adopted by them to raise revenue are almost without precedent in modern times, except during war time, and are opposed to sound economic principles. We hope that, for the sake of the fair name and fame of the Colony, these Bills will receive short shrift at the hands of the Assembly and the Council.

\(^1\) Vide “Anti-Indian Legislation in Natal”, 20-5-1905

\(^2\) Shillings

288. MR. BRODRICK² AND BRITISH INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL

Sir Mancherji³ has drawn from Mr. Brodrick an important reply on the status of British Indians in the Transvaal. The member for Bethnal Green pressed for some solution of the Indian question, and Mr. Brodrick has stated emphatically that nothing of what the Indians enjoyed before the war would be taken away from them; that every pressure that could be brought to bear on the Transvaal was being brought, but that it was difficult to interfere with a self-governing Colony dealing with the immigration of such people as it may consider to be undesirable. The first statement made by Mr. Brodrick ¹Headed by C. J. Smythe.

²St. John Brodrick, Secretary of State for India, 1903-5
³Sir Mancherjee Merwanjee Bhownaggree (1851-1933). Indian Barrister settled in England; Member of Parliament and of the British Committee of the Indian National Congress.
can only mean that it is the intention of the Imperial Government to see that Indians are not deprived of such rights as they may have enjoyed during the Boer regime. Such intention is not at present being carried out. To take only one instance: there was no restriction on the immigration of British Indians. At present, as these columns have shown repeatedly, no new Indians are being allowed to enter Transvaal territory, and the old residents are only allowed to enter in small numbers, and after they have undergone tedious, inconvenient and expensive formalities. That pressure is being brought by the Imperial we know and appreciate. We question, however, whether the pressure is commensurate with the gravity of the situation. For the third statement made by the Right Honourable Gentleman gives rise to many a misgiving. It betrays a feeling of helplessness. The Transvaal is not yet a self-governing Colony, but, by implication, Mr. Brodrick has considered it as such. Mr. Brodrick does not deny the promises referred to by Sir Mancherji; nor can it be denied that, when the promises were made, the responsible ministers knew what was coming. They knew that there was to be only one conclusion to the war, and that after the declaration of peace self-government was bound to come. It, therefore, means that the Home Government are now prepared, in their eagerness to conciliate the Transvaal European opinion, even to recede from their promises. It is apposite here to inquire why, so soon as peace was declared, the promises made to the Indians were not immediately fulfilled; also, why, even now, as suggested by Sir William Wedderburn, so long as the Transvaal has not received actual self-government, the Home Government do not repeal the old restrictions on the British Indians, and thus throw on the Council that would be elected, under complete self-government, the onus of repealing such legislation and proving the necessity for it.

About the same time that Mr. Brodrick made the above statement, in a different place, but still as Secretary of State for India, he informed his audience that India had the first claim on their consideration, next only to Great Britain itself, in that the trade of Great Britain with India was larger than that done with Canada, Australia and South Africa combined. Had the interests of British

1 It became one in 1906.
2 Distinguished member of the Indian Civil Service, later connected with the Indian National Congress.
Indians in the Transvaal been considered in such a spirit on the conclusion of war, when Lord Milner\(^1\) put his pen through scores of old Transvaal Ordinances which were not consistent with British principles, he would not have hesitated to do likewise in connection with the anti-Indian legislation. Nor was it a matter of oversight; for immediately the country was opened up, British Indians approached Lord Milner for a cancellation of the anti-Indian laws. If that step had been taken, nothing would have been heard, probably, of anti Indian agitation to-day; nor, in our opinion, is it yet too late to put into practice the theory propounded by Mr. Brodrick.

Indian Opinion, 1-7-1905

289. LORD SELBORNE\(^2\) AND SELF-GOVERNMENT

In view of what we have already said with reference to Mr. Brodrick’s statement,\(^3\) it is interesting to examine the definition of self-government given by Lord Selborne to a deputation that waited on him last week in the Orange River Colony, in order to request the grant of self-government to that Colony. His Excellency has thus defined that > within the British Empire responsible government means, in strictly local affairs, absolute independence; it means absolute local independence so long as that independence does not encroach on the general harmony of the British Empire, or infringe any of those principles on which it is founded, or any of those imperial considerations which bind it together.

This is a definition worthy of a distinguished representative of the King Emperor, and it is in accord with the professions repeatedly made by the Imperial Colonial Secretaries. The question, then, is whether the disabilities which British Indians suffer in the Transvaal do not encroach on the general harmony of the British Empire, or infringe any of those Imperial considerations which bind it together. The question is self answered. Let us hope that His Excellency, when he is called upon to deal with the Indian question, will apply the definition given by him, and remove the present anomaly.

290. DISCRIMINATION IN PUBLIC SERVICES

Lord Curzon\(^1\) has frequently declared that, in making public appointments, he made no discrimination between the white and the Coloured. On one occasion, he burst out with vehemence saying that Indians had no reason to complain in the matter of appointments. Moreover, he published a statement with figures to prove that quite a number of appointments were given to Indians. But the statement was misleading, for he had cleverly included in it many Indians drawing a salary of Rs. 75. The Hon. Mr. Gokhale\(^2\) has exposed this hollow pretence.\(^3\) He has shown that those who receive high salaries are almost all Europeans and that all the newly created posts have gone to them.

291. MAXIM GORKY\(^4\)

A comparison can be made, up to a point, between the people of Russia and our own. Just as we are poor, the Russian people are also poor. We have no voice in conducting the affairs of State and have to pay taxes without demur; the same is true of the Russians also. Seeing such oppression, some Russians do come out bravely against it from time to time. Some time ago, there was a rebellion in Russia and one of the chief participants was Maxim Gorky. This man was brought up in extreme poverty. At first he served as an apprentice to a shoemaker, who discharged him. Afterwards he served as a soldier for some time. While in the army, he evinced a desire for education, but being poor could not get himself admitted to any good school. He then served under a lawyer and finally worked as a hawker at a baker’s. All this time he continued educating himself through his own efforts. The very first book he wrote in 1892 was so excellent that he soon became famous. Thereafter, he wrote many things, all of them with a single purpose, viz., to stir up the people against the tyrannies they were labouring under, to warn the authorities and to render public service, in so far as this was possible. Without caring to make

292. THE CHINESE AND THE INDIANS IN SINGAPORE

Singapore can be said to be as near to the Chinese as it is to us. In that Colony an Indian has all the facilities a Chinese has. Despite this, our people there cannot hold their own against the Chinese. Many Chinese are in Government service, in the Public Works Department or are contractors, and are all very well off. Some even own motor cars. The number of Chinese who entered Singapore territory was 200,947 in 1900, 178,778 in 1901, 207,156 in 1902 and 220,321 in 1903; while the number of Indians who migrated there was 21,000 a year, most of them from Madras. This shows how much is yet to be achieved by our people in the matter of emigration to, and settling in, foreign territories. It is a shame that we cannot keep abreast of the Chinese.

293. LETTER TO HIGH COMMISSIONER’S SECRETARY

JOHANNESBURG

_July 1, 1905_

TO
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY
TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE HIGH COMMISSIONER
JOHANNESBURG

SIR,

I have the honour to enclose herewith copies of communications exchanged between the Government of the Orange River Colony and my Association, in connection with the bye-laws from time to time

1*Vide “Letter to Colonial Secretary”, 11-4-1905 to which the Government had replied that no legislation for the restriction of the powers of municipalities in the Colony was contemplated.*
sanctioned by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Colony, regarding Coloured persons. My Association ventures to draw His Excellency’s attention to the fact that no fresh legislation has been asked for in my letter. In the humble opinion of my Association, the powers already possessed by the Lieutenant-Governor enable him to veto bye-laws which are contrary to British traditions and to the Letters Patent. My Association is informed that such legislation as the municipalities have been allowed to pass would have to be reserved for His Majesty’s assent, if it were passed by the Legislative Council. My Association also ventures to think that the last paragraph of the letter, written by the Acting Colonial Secretary, is a complete justification for the complaint made by my Association, for, if the question raised is of no practical importance as there are so few British Indians, it cannot be of practical importance to pass legislation of the character referred to in my communication. While it is of no use in the Colony, it wounds, unnecessarily, the feelings of the British Indian community in South Africa, and my Association, therefore, ventures to trust that His Excellency will be graciously pleased to inquire into the bye-laws that have been passed and sanctioned for the various municipalities in the Orange River Colony, and grant the necessary relief.

I have the honour to remain,

Sr,

295. ORANGE RIVER COLONY LEGISLATION

We publish two important communications in this issue on the status of British Indians in the Orange River Colony. The one is a short and belated reply from the Colonial Secretary of that Colony to the protest of the British Indian Association at Johannesburg, against the anti-Asiatic municipal legislation that has been sanctioned by the Lieutenant-Governor from time to time by the municipalities of the Orange River Colony. The second letter is from Mr H. R. Fox-Bourne the Secretary of the Aborigines Protection Society, addressed to Mr. Lyttelton. The two communications are a contrast The Colonial Secretary writes saying that the Government are not contemplating any legislation with a view to restricting the powers of local government at present enjoyed by municipalities in the Orange River Colony. This, in our opinion, is purely begging the question. The British Indian Association has never asked for any legislation to restrict the powers, because the veto is already vested in the Lieutenant-Governor. No bye-laws are of any force unless sanctioned by the Lieutenant-Governor, and we know of no statute, even for the Orange River Colony, which compels the Lieutenant-Governor to sanction any bye-laws that the municipalities may pass. On the contrary, the instructions issued to His Excellency are that he is not to sanction any colour legislation; and one would suppose that, if he may not do that in respect of laws applying to the whole of the Colony, he cannot also do so in respect of laws applying to a particular municipality in that Colony. The reason given by the Colonial Secretary is sarcastic. He says: “As there are so few British Indians in the Colony, I think you will agree that the question raised by you is not of great practical importance”. The word practical is underlined in the letter. What is the meaning? It simply shows that the gates of the Orange River Colony are for ever to remain barred against the British Indian, and also that, if he ever entered the Colony, he would do so in the face of all the restrictive powers, and if he protests, he would be told that such laws could not be repealed. ‘Too late’ will be flung in his face. May we not ask the Colonial Secretary why, as there are so few British Indians in the Orange River Colony, the wanton insult is offered at all? Is it practical statesmanship to wound the feelings of a whole nation, even when there is not an iota of justification for it? Surely the municipalities of the Orange River Colony could not be so unreasonable as not to listen to expostulations from the Lieutenant-Governor on a matter which, on the Colonial Secretary’s own showing, is of no importance to them, unless they delight in heaping unnecessary insults on a community which has never done them any harm. But we would not pursue the examination of the letter any further. We are glad that the British Indian Association has already moved in the matter, and approached the High Commissioner.

In pleasant contrast to the letter we find Mr. Fox-Bourne’s communication to the Colonial Secretary. We invite the attention of all South African Imperialists to this important communication, which we have copied from our contemporary, India. Much has been often said in South Africa against the Aborigines Protection Society. We hope, however, that the South African Press and South African readers will treat each act on its own merits, and not condemn, by reason of pre-conceived prejudice, anything that may emanate from the Aborigines Protection Society, which, after all, counts among its members some of the noblest of Britons. Mr. Fox-Bourne has also assurances to be fulfilled in this matter. He has reminded the Colonial Secretary that, before the war, in reply to his Society’s representations, certain promises were given. He, therefore, “ventures to hope that no time will be lost in fulfilling those assurances”, and he is “encouraged in the hope, at any rate as regarding Coloured persons who are British subjects and not uncivilised, by remarks made by Lord Milner”. The Imperial Government have a hard nut to crack. They have either to adopt the advice of Sir Arthur Lawley1 and boldly commit a breach of their promises, or to fulfil them in accordance with British traditions.

1 Former High Commissioner in the Transvaal
296. THE CHINESE AND ABUSIVE LANGUAGE

A deputation on behalf of whites from the Transvaal mines waited upon Lord Selborne on July 1, and prayed for protection for the whites against Chinese labourers. It stated that the whites did not behave badly towards the Chinese; that, since thirty or forty Chinese worked under a white supervisor, it was not difficult for the Chinese to take his life in the event of a riot; that the Chinese frequently insulted their white boss by using foul language and making indecent gestures; and that the language they used was so foul that it was impossible for the deputation to reproduce it. They said that a white man would not take such an insult lying down. In his reply, Lord Selborne said that there had been only twenty cases of assault by the Chinese until then, though the Chinese labour numbered 40,000; that their complaint about the language was without substance, for the white himself used abusive language and set a bad example. It was harmful to the whites themselves to indulge in drink and indecent behaviour in the presence of the Chinese. If one uses abusive words while addressing persons utterly ignorant of the language, they pick them up parrot-like, and it is then very difficult to mend matters. Moreover, he said, the whiteness of the whites should not be limited to their skin only but should permeate within also, that is, they should have the art of inducing respect, obedience and awe in others by their own exemplary conduct. Then only could they be called white in reality. In brief, he held the whites themselves responsible for the ugly behaviour of the Chinese, and indicated the need of winning the Chinese over by their own good behaviour. Several other difficulties also were placed by the deputationists before Lord Selborne, who promised to give adequate attention to them.

297. SALT TAX IN INDIA

DR. HUTCHINSON’S STRONG CRITICISM

The tax levied on salt in India has always been a subject of criticism. This time it has been criticised by the well-known Dr. Hutchinson, who says that it is a great shame for the British Government in India to continue it, while a similar tax previously in force in Japan has been abolished. The tax should be immediately abolished. Salt is an essential article in our dietary. It could be said that to a certain extent, the increasing incidence of leprosy in India was due to the salt tax. Dr. Hutchinson considers the salt tax a barbarous practice, which ill becomes the British Government.

298. LETTER TO DADA OSMAN

[JOHANNESBURG, ]
July 8, 1905

DEAR SHETH DADA OSMAN,

I have your letter. I see that it is absolutely necessary for you to go to Vryheid. I am afraid you will be able to do nothing without making the necessary arrangements there. I can do precious little, sitting here. In case a fine is imposed, I cannot advise you to have the shop kept open in your absence.

A lot will depend on Hoondamal’s appeal. Please see that all possible care is taken in the matter of that appeal. Let me know who will appear at the appeal. If it is won, you will be able to reopen your shop. Meanwhile it might be profitable to see the Town Clerk and other officials.

I do not see any cause for worry if Abdulla Sheth does not give the accounts. All hope of Dada Sheth’s getting more money has already been given up, so that there is no cause for worry at all.

DEAR SIR,

Re: Ismail & Lucas

I have purposely delayed sending you cheque for this bill in the hope of being able some time to wait upon you with a view to getting a reduction. Owing to pressure of work, however, I have not been able to get out of the office. All that Said Ismail had was this claim. To him, therefore, the loss of £1,300 and payment of costs are a very great loss. May I, therefore, ask you to make a substantial reduction in your account? I approached Mr. Leonard and he was good enough to grant a reduction.

JOHANNESBURG,

July 13, 1905

TO
THE HONOURABLE THE COLONIAL SECRETARY
PRETORIA
SIR,

On behalf of my Association, I am respectfully to protest against clause 3 of the draft Ordinance to “generally amend the Municipal statutes” of the Colony, as published in a supplement to the Government Gazette dated the 7th inst.

My Association ventures to submit that the giving of the control of Asiatic Bazaars to the Town Councils is premature and calculated to prejudice the status of British Indians in the Colony in view of the fact that the whole question of anti-Asiatic legislation is now under consideration by the local Government as also by the Imperial Government. Law 3 of 1885 contemplates government control, and seeing that the municipalities in the Transvaal are swayed very largely by colour prejudice, my Association humbly thinks that it would be an injustice to British Indians to give over control of Asiatic Bazaars to the municipalities or local boards.

My Association, therefore, trusts that the Government will be pleased to withdraw the clause in question, and allow the matter to remain in abeyance until the whole question of the status of British

Re: Estate Abdul Karim Deceased

I regret that I have only just broken the back of the document left by you with me for translation. There are still 24 closely written sides to be translated. I need hardly say that this will be a most expensive translation. The amount of work already put in is over £2, and by the time I have finished, it will be quite £12. However, from what I have already read, it appears that my agents at Porbandar had to go by a most circuitous route to get a certified copy, the reason being the changes of the law which prevent any but the interested parties within the jurisdiction of the court getting certified copies. However, if you wish me to continue the translation, I will do so, and it will take me quite a week before I can let you have the whole of it, as under my present engagements it would not be possible for me to devote two full days to it, which is the necessary time for the work. I am in a position to devote only a little time from day to day.

Re: Indian Travelling on the Tram-cars

I have now slept over our conversation herein, and have also compared notes with my client. If a definite assurance can be given to the effect that facilities will be provided for Indian[s] travelling on the new tram-cars, my client will refrain from testing his right in a law court, but if it cannot, it appears very advisable that the issue should be definitely decided now. My personal experience has been that, where an absence of certain rights has been assumed without reason, rearrangement has, as a rule, proceeded upon such assumption, and what was once an open question has upon rearrangement been definitely decided against the granting of such right or rights. I venture, therefore, to think that the proposal above made is quite reasonable.

306. THE CAPE IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION ACT

We publish in another column the text of a letter received by the Chairman of the British Indian League at Cape Town from the Colonial Secretary’s Office, in reply to representations of the League on the working of the Cape Immigration Act. The Colonial Secretary brushes aside in a single sentence the request made by the League as to the recognition of the Indian languages. We hope that the British Indian League will not leave the question at that. With reference to the interpretation of the term “domicile”, the reply is most unsatisfactory. It is not every Indian who can show possession of immovable property, or presence of wife and children in the Colony. If such an interpretation is insisted upon, it cannot but cause unnecessary hardship, in spite of the intention of the Colonial Secretary not to do so. A man may leave his business at the Cape, pay a temporary visit to India, and find himself for ever shut out of the Cape, because his wife and children are not in the Colony, or he does not own immovable property. It would then simply mean ruin to the poor store-keeper who, under a false sense of security, may have gone to India, leaving his business in temporary charge of his manager. Nor is this illustration an imaginary one, for we understand that cases of such Indians having been refused re-entrance have actually happened. The least, therefore, that Colonel Crewe\(^1\) could do to satisfy the requirements of justice is to recognise the rights of those who may have left business or employment in the country to re-enter. It will then be possible for them to talk of an exercise of leniency, for, in the definition given by him, so far there has been no leniency but a very strict application of the law; and then only will it be possible for the British Indian League to recognise the reasonable attitude of the Government. For the present, we think, with the greatest deference, that it is unjust, unreasonable and calculated to impose very serious hardship on the British Indians residing in the Cape Colony.

307. MR. WACHA AND INDIANS

Mr. Wacha, the genial Joint Secretary of the National Congress, has written to us a letter which is full of encouragement, hope and suggestion. We reproduce the main portion of it in another column. He has given a parallel case which is of some importance in the controversy that is going on in South Africa over the status of British Indians. “The settlers,” says Mr. Wacha, on your side, seem to have forgotten how merchants and traders themselves used to complain in the bitterest terms of the East India Co., which, up till the Act of 1833, interdicted them from trading in India. Those who came were styled ‘interlopers’, but the interlopers were persevering and earnest, and we know that they succeeded. Earnestness and perseverance are also the keynote to the situation in South Africa. We have far greater justice on our side than they of 1833. British Indians have a threefold right to have their status made good in South Africa. The Proclamation of 1858, no matter what may be said to the contrary, guarantees them full British subject rights. They have shown themselves to be industrious, sober, law-abiding and honest in South Africa, and, as has been often admitted, they have been very useful in developing its resources. They have also had promises of fair and equal treatment, especially regarding their civil rights in South Africa, from responsible ministers.

308. HOUSE TAX IN NATAL

Popular feeling is growing against the House Tax Bill published in the Natal Government Gazette. A public meeting was held on the night of the 10th instant in Maritzburg to consider the Bill, and a meeting was also held in Durban on Thursday evening. A large number of people has signed various petitions protesting against the Bill. The proposed house tax has become even more irksome than the poll-tax. The measures proposed are very defective and the Bill is objectionable even if passed as a temporary measure. If introduced, this tax would be regarded more equitable than the poll-tax as a permanent levy. The poll-tax cannot be tolerated for ever, though it is true that it is levied in some countries. In view of the public feeling against the house tax, it should either be modified or dropped altogether, so that the feeling against the poll-tax may not be intensified.

309. JAPAN’S PREPARATION FOR PEACE

THE CAPTURE OF SOUTHELIAN ISLAND

The Japanese have captured the Southelian Island from the Russians and landed their troops there. This island is 670 miles long, and 20 to 150 miles broad. Its area is 24,550 square miles, that is, more extensive than that of Kathiawad. The southern part of the island was in the possession of Japan till the year 1875, but was later passed on to Russia in exchange for the Kuril Islands. In that island, there are many kerosene wells, and coal also is found in abundance. The negotiations for peace now in progress have been very greatly influenced by the capture of such a big island by Japan. The Times says that no other event during the war has hit the Russians so severely. This event has proved that Russia is quite incapable of defending her boundaries. It is not yet fifty years since this island came into the hands of the Russians. She had taken possession of it through political machinations and Japan had to suffer a lot on that account. But for this great war, the island would have continued to be in Russian hands. Japan had had her eye on the island for a long time, and it is believed that this timely victory will strengthen the Japanese position in the peace negotiations at Washington. By the time the Peace Committee is in session, we might possibly hear of Marshal Oyama having dealt a severe blow to the Russian General, Linewich. The Japanese army declines to suspend hostilities for a short spell of truce, but intends to wage furious war and force Russia into concluding a lasting peace. And they will show that there is no alternative for Russia but to sign a peace treaty. They confidently declare that the Russian emissaries of peace will ultimately have to accept Japan’s terms.

MY DEAR SHETH OMAR HAJI AMOD ZAVERI,

Your letter to hand. I am returning herewith both the letters of Sheth Haji Ismail¹. I do not at all like the way he has written them. I can see from it that it will be difficult to exercise control over his expenditure. If the expenses there come to as much as the rent, you have to consider what is to be done about it.

If the business here does not yield profit enough to meet the expenditure at Porbandar, it will amount to consuming the capital. I believe it will be necessary to remit £100 a month for the present to Porbandar in order to obviate further bitterness. I am writing to Sheth Haji Ismail today.²

DEAR SHETH HAJI ISMAIL HAJI ABOOBAKER,

I have received a letter from Omar Sheth in which he says that this expenditure is too much. I have also read your last two letters. I think they lack in the requisite courtesy. Omar Sheth is your uncle; therefore the letters from your end should be full of courtesy as only befits your noble family.

What Omar Sheth says about expenses deserves to be carefully considered. There is a world of difference between the time when Omar Sheth visited England and the present. The rents have gone down by half and will go down still further. The expenses here are met from the rents received, so that the time has come when you have to live on capital. I think your estate is such that it should never be necessary for you to live on your capital. Even millionaires who fell back on their capital have run through it. My earnest advice to you, therefore, is that you should be very careful in spending money on your household. I believe some of the expenditure can be reduced. Please take good care of your health. 313. LETTER TO “THE DAILY EXPRESS”

Johannesburg,
[After July 17, 1905]

TO
THE EDITOR
The Daily Express
SIR,

I trust you will allow me to reply to your correspondent who, under the elegant pseudonym of “Sinkramsam”, has attacked British Indians through your columns in your issue of the 17th instant. There is a homely Indian saying that you can take a horse to a watercourse but cannot compel him to drink the water. So also those who shut their eyes to facts placed before them are not to be disabused of their misconceptions. Your correspondent, I very much fear, belongs to that category. For his information, however, I ask again the question, if there were only thirteen Indian (not “coolie”, as your correspondent would have it) “store-keepers, traders and hawkers” before the war, how is it that the challenge issued by the Chairman of the British Indian Association has not been taken up by Mr. Kleinenberg\(^1\)? Remember that the names of these store-keepers have been supplied to the Press. I note that your correspondent has gone one better, in that he makes bold to say that the number thirteen includes store-keepers, traders and hawkers. Unfortunately for him, he has chosen a fatal number, and I am prepared to deposit with you the sum of £100 to be forfeited to any anti-Indian Association your correspondent may name if I fail to prove to the satisfaction of two arbitrators, one to be chosen by him and the other by me, with power to them to appoint an umpire, that there were more than twice the number of store-keepers, traders and hawkers mentioned by your correspondent prior to the war in the town of Pietersburg; provided that he forfeits to the British Indian Association an equal sum in the event of the award being in my favour. So much for Sinkramsam’s figures.

As to the charge that the Native is being fleeced by British Indians, I can only refer your correspondent to Sir James Hulett’s testimony\(^2\) before the Native Affairs Commission as to which is the greater evil-doer, the European or the Indian. With reference to the other charges made by your correspondent, and based on “information” supplied to him, I can only say that sensible people will rate them at their true value. If there is any nefarious trade done by Indians, and he has received the information, surely the remedy is in his own hands, and if the question of trading licences is not yet settled once and for all, it is because Sinkramsam and his coadjutors would not accept the very reasonable compromise suggested by British Indians, whereby the control of new licences would be handed to the Town Councillors to be elected largely by Sinkramsam and his friends. You, Sir, have some experience of the British Indian question as it was prior to the war. You have experience of British Indians also. You have adopted an independent attitude in journalism. you do not wish racial hatred between the component parts of the British Empire to grow. It must be within your knowledge that some of the facts stated by your correspondent are untrue. Will you not be carrying out your mission by correcting what are undoubtedly palpable mis-statements? Indians want only a fair field and no favour. DEAR CAPT. FOWLE,

I notice that the detectives are still going round in search [of] permitless Indians. In their search, they examined 16-year-old boys also. They are staying in the Colony, especially the one I have written to you about, on your assurance. They are, Sir, from their appearance, under 16 years or were certainly of that age when they arrived. The only defect is that they have not their parents here, but are either orphans and under their natural guardians, or are being brought up by their relations who take the position of parents. I hope, therefore, that you will be good enough to instruct the detectives not to touch these boys while the matter is being fixed up.

I remain,
Yours truly,

318. MR. BRODRICK’S BUDGET

There are features in the Budget statement made by the Secretary of State for India to the House of Commons on the motion that the House should go into committee on the East India Revenue accounts. It is a happy augury that Mr. Brodrick has presented his statement almost for the first time, within recent times, during the middle of the session instead of, as usual, at the end, when the Indian Secretary goes through the farce of addressing empty benches. The departure, too, has been deliberate. “Discussion,” said Mr. Brodrick, “at this earlier period is more likely to lead to useful criticism and efficient administration”. He hoped, too, that the precedent would be followed, whether in future he was the holder of the high office or an honourable member from the Opposition benches. Mr. Brodrick took occasion to show most clearly the extent of the services rendered to the Empire by much-maligned India, and both the services he laid so much stress upon are such as to command attention and appreciation in South Africa.

Of the one hundred and forty-three million pounds of trade in 1902 and 1903, sixty-two million pounds was trade directly with Great Britain. Of the trade of last year, one hundred and seventy-four million, seven hundred and forty-eight thousand pounds, seventy-seven million pounds was directly to and from Great Britain. That is not an inconsiderable item in the trade of Great Britain, and if we compare these figures, as some people from different points of view are now occupied in comparing the trade of the Colonies with the trade of India, I could point out that the exports from the United Kingdom to India in 1902, which were thirty-three million five hundred thousand pounds, were equal to the exports to Canada, the British Colonies, and North America, and to Australia, and last year those exports, which had grown to forty million pounds, equalled the whole of the exports from this country to Australia, to Canada and to Cape Colony combined.

There was no difficulty in Mr. Brodrick’s drawing the natural deduction. He, therefore, went on:

I trust I shall carry every member of this House with me when I say that the trade of India with the United Kingdom tends continually to increase. The stake of the United Kingdom in the trade of India and the stake of India in the trade of the United Kingdom are such that we are entitled to claim a first place for India in all the discussions that may take place as regards trade within the Empire.

Another statement that Mr. Brodrick made was with reference to the defences of the Empire. India forms a training ground for seventy-five thousand British troops and a breeding ground for one hundred and forty thousand British Indian troops which are held at the disposal of the Empire in any emergency. The whole cost is borne by India, representing an expense of twenty-and-a-half millions out of a revenue of eighty-two millions. Distinguished generals from Lord Roberts downwards have testified to the efficacy of the services of the Indian Army. Sir George White and his army gave a striking illustration of this preparedness during the Boer War. These are all facts pregnant with meaning. They ought to be studied and pondered by South African politicians; and, after they have done so, we respectfully suggest to them that they should ask themselves the question whether it would pay, even from a purely selfish standpoint, to continuously treat the inhabitants of India as complete aliens undeserving of any consideration whatsoever at their hands.

319. ASIATIC BAZAARS IN THE TRANSVAAL

A recent issue of the Transvaal Government Gazette contains a Draft Ordinance which has the following amongst other clauses:

(1) The Council may, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor, set apart, maintain, and carry on bazaars or other areas exclusively for occupation by Asiatics, and control and supervise the same in accordance with Regulations made from time to time by the Lieutenant-Governor, and may lease the land and any buildings or other erections thereon to Asiatics upon such terms and at such rents as may be prescribed from time to time by such Regulations aforesaid.

(2) The sites of any bazaars or other places pointed out under the provisions of Law 3 of 1885 or any amendment thereof may be transferred by the Lieutenant-Governor to any Council of a Municipality, subject to existing leases thereover, and every such transfer shall be free of transfer stamp duty, and registration or other charges, and any such-bazaar or site so transferred shall be deemed to be a bazaar or area set apart under sub-section (I) of this section.

(3) The provisions of section two of this Ordinance shall, mutatis mutandis, apply for the purpose of enabling a Council to close such bazaars and areas and lay out other land suitable for the same.

(4) The term ‘Council’ in this section shall include a Council of a Municipality whether constituted under the Municipal Corporations

VOL. 4 23 MAY, 1904 - 4 NOVEMBER, 1905 363
Ordinance, 1903, the Municipal Corporations Amendment Ordinance, 1904, or under any special law.

The British Indian Association at Johannesburg has lost no time in protesting against the contemplated transfer of the control of the Bazaars to the municipalities. The objections to such transference are, in our opinion, unanswerable. The whole of the Asiatic question is still pending, and is the subject of correspondence between the Imperial Government and the local Government. Law 3 of 1885, as both the Parties have stated, is only a stopgap to be swept away as soon as possible. Any legislation, therefore, based on that law and amplifying the restrictions is inconsistent with the attitude of openness which the local Governments are bound to maintain. If not, what becomes of Mr. Lyttelton’s statement that at least the status quo ante bellum would be kept up? Moreover, the prejudices of the town councils and local boards of the Transvaal are very strong on the colour question. They do not hesitate to proclaim them from house-tops, and some of the councils and boards would even go so far as to use violence, if they could. Under the circumstances, whilst there is a position of uncertainty as to the future, it seems strange that the Transvaal Government should bring in legislation as if Law 3 of 1885 were never to be erased from the Statute-book.

320. A SECRET CONCLAVE

Our contemporary, the Transvaal Leader, publishes a message from its Pretoria Correspondent to the effect that His Excellency Sir Arthur Lawley granted a private interview to the leaders of the anti-Asiatic Convention, among whom were present Messrs Loveday and Bourke. The Leader’s correspondent also states that the interview was prolonged and that the interviewers left Sir Arthur with complete satisfaction. The curtain is then drawn over what actually took place. Lord Selborne, when he met the Boer leaders and members of the Responsible Association, adopted a different attitude. He invited the Press, and saw to it that the proceedings were made public. Why, then, should there be so much secrecy about Asiatic affairs? If the interviewers sought it does it mean that they are afraid of broad daylight being shed upon their doings and their statements; and if Sir Arthur courted privacy, we respectfully ask what was the motive? Was it that he anticipated the wildest statements from Mr. Loveday and was anxious to hide his shame? British Indians court fullest publicity as to whatever may have to be said against them or for them. They have nothing to fear, exaggerating nothing and minimising nothing, and having absolute justice on their side. Let us, therefore, hope that there may yet be an opportunity given to British Indians in the Transvaal of at any rate, examining statements made by the interviewers to His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor behind their backs.

321. INDIANS IN KRUGERSDORP

The Town Council of Krugersdorp has received the doctor’s report after the meeting about Indians was held there.¹ The doctor says that the houses of Indians are found to be mostly unclean; that they spit all around; that their lavatories are very dirty and water collects on the floor and never dries; and that they sit and sleep on the counters, etc. We know that much of this is untrue, and it is now up to the Indians in Krugersdorp to obtain another report to counter all this. Nevertheless, we will have to assent to these accusations to some extent. Nobody can deny that we spit any and everywhere and allow the lavatories to remain dirty. Our people are generally disinclined to cleaning lavatories themselves. We feel it necessary to overcome this. It is an established fact that many diseases spread through lavatories. It is very easy to keep them clean. One should spread dry dust or ashes into the bucket every time after use, wash the wooden planks with a disinfectant liquid and wipe them clean. If done regularly, this does not take much time and the cause for this antipathy disappears.

The matter of spiting also needs to be thought about. Everything considered, it is very necessary to cultivate the habit of spitting into a handkerchief or a spittoon, instead of all over the house or shop.

322. INDIAN HOTELS IN THE TRANSVAAL

No laws have so far been enacted in respect of Indian hotels in the Transvaal. Licences are taken out for Kaffir eating-houses and European hotels. Chinese hotels came to be opened when the number of Chinese increased in the Transvaal. No licences are necessary for them. But the Chinese, apprehending trouble in the future, applied of their own accord to the Government for licences. The latter replied that no licences were necessary. The Chinese believed that no hotel could be opened without a licence, and, therefore, applied to the Government saying that a licensing law should be enacted. A Bill on the subject has now been published in the Government Gazette, which shows how one has to suffer the results of one’s actions. The Indian hotel-keepers will now have to take out licences. It is not even possible to oppose the Bill. All Indian innkeepers in the Transvaal should, therefore, take heed. We believe that licences will be granted only if the premises are quite clean.

323. JOSEPH MAZZINI

A REMARKABLE CAREER

Italy as a nation came into existence recently. Before 1870 Italy comprised a number of small principalities, each with its petty chief. Before 1870, she was like the India or Kathiawad of today. Though the people spoke the same language and had the same character, they all owed allegiance to different petty states. Today Italy is an independent European country and her people are regarded as a distinct nation. All this can be said to be the achievement of one man. And his name—Joseph Mazzini. Joseph Mazzini was born in Genoa on June 22, 1805. He was a man of such sterling character, so good-natured and so patriotic, that great preparations are being made throughout Europe to commemorate the centenary of his birth. For, although he dedicated his whole life to the service of Italy, he was so broadminded that he could be regarded a citizen of every country. It was his constant yearning that every nation should become great and live in unity.

The original has “What is wrought by the hand hits the heart”,
Even at the early age of thirteen, Mazzini showed great intelligence. In spite of great scholarship that he evidenced, he gave up his books out of patriotism and undertook the study of law, and began using his legal knowledge gratuitously to help the poor. Then he joined a secret organization which was working for the unification of Italy. When the Italian chiefs learnt of this, they put him into prison. While still in prison, he continued to advance his plans for freeing his country. At last he had to leave Italy. He went to Marseilles and lived there. The Italian princes, however, using their influence, had him banished from that city. Though obliged to fly from place to place, he did not lose heart and kept on sending his writings secretly to Italy, which gradually influenced the minds of the people. He suffered a lot in the process. He had to run about in disguise to evade spies. Even his life was frequently in danger, but he did not care. At last he went to England in 1837. He did not suffer so much there but had to live in extreme poverty. In England he came into contact with the great leaders of that country and sought their aid.

In 1848 Mazzini returned with Garibaldi to Italy, and set up the self-governing State of Italy. But it did not last long, thanks to the activities of crafty persons and though Mazzini had to flee the country once again, his influence did not fade. The seed of unity that he had sown endured and, though Mazzini remained in banishment, Italy became a single united kingdom in 1870. Victor Emmanuel became its king. Mazzini was gratified to see his country thus united. But as he was not permitted to enter the country, he used to go there in disguise. Once when the police went to arrest him, he opened the door for them as if he were an usher and gave them the slip.

This great man died on March, 1873. His foes had now become his friends. People had come to recognise his true worth. Eighty thousand people joined his funeral procession. He was buried at the highest spot in Genoa. Today Italy and the whole of Europe worship this man. In Italy he is considered one of the greatest of men. He was a pious and religious man, ever free from selfishness and pride. Poverty was for him an ornament. The sufferings of others he regarded as his own. There are very few instances in the world where a single man has brought about the uplift of his country by his strength of mind and his extreme devotion during his own lifetime. Such was the unique Mazzini.

324. IMPORTANT SUGGESTIONS FOR INDIANS GOING TO THE TRANSVAAL

Indians are now-a-days being subjected to very great severity in the matter of permits in the Transvaal. Many persons who were staying on false permits have been deported. Some, whose permits did not bear their thumb-impressions, have been sentenced to imprisonment for six weeks. It is probable that many more persons will be subjected to hardships. It is also believed that Permit Officers will visit different villages for investigation. It is therefore necessary that those who hold false permits should immediately leave the Transvaal. They should not under any circumstances make use of false permits; otherwise they will have to suffer imprisonment.

So far boys under sixteen and women were allowed to enter without a permit; but since the scrutiny of permits started, greater strictness is being exercised on the border. Boys under sixteen not accompanied by their fathers and women not accompanied by their husbands are being detained for want of permits. A woman proceeding to the Transvaal was made to detrain at Volksrust as she was not accompanied by her husband. Indians entering the Transvaal should therefore bear the following things in mind:

1. one should not enter with a false Permit;
2. unless accompanied by their husbands, women should not enter without a permit;
3. boys, even if under sixteen, will be able to enter without a permit only when accompanied by their fathers.

DEAR SIR,

You may recollect that Messrs Anandlal A. Gandhi and Abhechand A. Gandhi were insured through me. Their policies are numbered, respectively, 3369009 and 3369004. I understand that the premium on these policies has not been paid for some time. Will you kindly let me know if it is possible to revive these policies, and if so under what conditions, and whether, if the holders do not wish to revive them, they can have a refund of any of the premiums already paid?

326. INDIANS IN KRUGERSDORP

The Krugersdorp Town Council has sent a representation to the Government that a law should be enacted for the compulsory removal of Indians to Locations. The Transvaal Government have replied saying that nothing can be done at present as the matter was still the subject of correspondence between them and the Imperial Government. It appears from this that the controversy between Mr. Lyttelton and Sir Arthur Lawley is still going on. Sir Arthur wants laws enacted that would apply to Indians alone. The outcome is not likely to be known before the next year. Meanwhile, we hope Indians in Krugersdorp will keep their houses clean and tidy.

327. TRANSVAAL PERMITS

We have already reproduced from the Transvaal Government Gazette the list of permits bearing certain numbers that have been cancelled. Some people have interpreted it to mean that even the holders of genuine permits bearing the said numbers have to quit and that their permits are rendered invalid. This is a mistaken view. Those whose permits are genuine and bear their thumb-impressions need not be alarmed at all; their permits are not cancelled, though their names may have been published in the Government Gazette. This applies to the registers also.

328. THE INNER STORY OF THE BALTIC FLEET

Admiral Rozhdzhestvensky's letter addressed to the Czar setting forth all Acts about the defeat sustained by the Baltic Fleet makes sad reading. Though the letter is written by a defeated Admiral, no one will take the reasons he has mentioned therein as excuses to explain his defeat. The secret facts, now revealed, clearly show that the crushing defeat sustained by the Fleet was only to be expected. The ablest of the world’s naval officers used to say that the Baltic Fleet would teach the Japanese the lesson of their lives. They made this forecast because the men-of-war in the Fleet were gigantic, they were very well equipped with armaments, and could move very swiftly. They carried the best artillery of the latest type, and their admirals were considered very capable. But, as Admiral Rozhdzhestvensky says, the greatness of the Fleet existed on paper only. In his letter to the Czar, he says that, thanks to the corruption in the administration, not only was the building of the ships disgraceful, but they were not in fact properly equipped with the necessary armaments, etc. The guns were incapable of discharging shots as desired; enough coal could not be stored in the hulk; the speed of the ships was falsely praised; the engines always made a creaking noise as if in a ramshackle condition; two-thirds of the sailors were unfit for their jobs; the gunners had no sense of duty; and the worst of it all was that, after leaving

2 Rear-Admiral Rozhdzhestvensky, Commander of the Baltic Fleet
Madagascar, all the men on board became rebellious. When such a fleet joins battle, defeat can be the only result. The letter gives a graphic account of what happened after they left Formosa. The Admiral was already aware of this condition of his Fleet; and the fact that he undertook to fight under these circumstances and showed such bravery is sufficient testimony to his loyalty.

329. INDENTURED INDIANS IN NATAL

Mr. James A. Polkinghorne has issued his yearly report ending 31st December last. As a contemporary states, the report is belated, as are most of the Government reports in Natal; consequently, there is no doubt there is not the same interest taken in them that would be if they were issued promptly. The present report is a document of more than ordinary interest in that it throws a good deal of light on the working of the Immigration Law as to re-indenture and poll-tax. It gives also a more accurate census of the indentured Indian population than hitherto. The information given by the Protector is an “eye-opener”. The Indian population has increased very considerably during the past three years. Between 1876 and 1896, it was 31,712, in 1902, it was 78,004, at the end of 1904, it was 87,980, showing an increase in two years of nearly 10,000; and yet the Protector states in another place that he has not been able to supply the full number applied for in 1902, namely, 19,000. The demand for such labour is so great that it has been necessary to refuse fresh applications altogether. The reason for this large increase is obvious. This class of labour is very popular and is daily growing in popularity in the Colony. The men who come out give great satisfaction, and the bread and butter of thousands of Colonist depends very largely upon a steady inflow of indentured labour from India. The moral, too, is obvious. The noise that we find here about the Indian being an undesirable citizen is largely hypocritical or selfish. We had a striking corroboration of the deduction to be made from the above figures in the observation recently made by His Excellency the Governor of Natal at the time of the opening of the Agricultural Show, when he stated that the Indian agriculturist was indispensable for the development of the coast lands of Natal.

The Protector is very much dissatisfied with the working of the Law as to the poll-tax and re-indenture. He states that the Law is very much evaded, and that it has failed in inducing the time-expired Indian to return to India. Many of those who have remained have succeeded in escaping the poll-tax. Last year, 888 men and 345 women completed their indenture under the new Law. Out of this number, only 137 men and 32 women offered themselves for re-indenture. 201 men and 58 women returned to India, 375 men and 146 women paid the tax, and 170 men and 105 women were at the time of drawing up the report unaccounted for. Nor is this to be wondered at. The poll-tax is never at any time a satisfactory mode of raising revenue. It has not been a deterrent to settlement in the Colony. The framers of the act never expected any such result. It constitutes a source of irritation to the indentured Indian. It levies from them unjustifiable contribution and constitutes a blot on the fair name of Natal. What is more, it is imposed on men whose services are considered, as has been already shown, to be indispensable to the welfare of the Colony.

330. WHY DID JAPAN WIN?

The reply given by Baron Komura to a question from the Press representatives in New York wanting to know the cause of Japan’s victory deserves to be inscribed in one’s mind. One reason he gave was that Japan’s demand was just; the second was that she was united; there was no corruption either among the officers or the people; every one did his duty; the Japanese were not indolent; they did not shirk work; and they lived in great simplicity. Thanks to this simplicity, they were able to hold their own against the Russians. As their needs by way of clothing and food were few, these could be transported to the soldiers in fewer vehicles. Consequently, it was not very difficult for the Japanese to transport large numbers of men over long distances.

What was asked for in jest came-in very handy. As you know, Mr. Omar and Mr. Dada Osman were with me, and we all made our evening meal of them. Then again, there was an accident. An engine had been derailed, and at midnight all the passengers had to change trains. The result was that from midnight the train was running three hours late. The meals were not, therefore, provided at the usual stations, and the sandwiches were appreciated under those circumstances, not only by me, but by my other companions in the train, who, although Europeans, liked them very much. So tasty they were. The basket, therefore, before it reached Johannesburg, was half empty. Once more, then, I thank Mrs. Abdul Kadir for her kindness.

Mr. Abdul Gani has shown me the guarantee taken by the bank. I think it is totally uncalled for. In my opinion the deed of dissolution does not in the slightest degree affect the bank’s security. I do not understand the reason for altering the bond. However, seeing that all the transfers have to be newly made, it does not much matter. I hope you will hurry the matter forward. There should be no difficulty about taking out Mr. Mahomed Ebrahim’s name, because even if he does not consent, the order of court will be quite enough. I understand that it is the desire of all parties to advertise the dissolution in the Gazette. I think it is as well. I, therefore, send a draft advertisement. If you approve of it, it can be signed by all the five partners and advertised in the Gazette there, the Gazette here, and a daily newspaper there and a daily newspaper here. I enclose also draft letter to be written to your London agents.

I was pleased beyond measure at the extreme prudence and calmness with which you approached the conferences we had there, and it is my earnest hope and prayer that both the businesses may flourish and that all of you may remain in perfect harmony. I would also ask you to be extremely cautious about your undertakings, though in the long run the future of South Africa is assured. We will have to go through yet worse times, and those who realize this fact will come out best in the end. MESSRS PEARKS LTD.

DEAR SIRS,

Re: Jagannath

In this matter the case was heard this morning. Two witnesses gave evidence to the effect that 1 lb. of butter was asked for and a pat, like the one shown by Mr. Levy to me, was given to the inspector, and after the money had passed, the inspector weighed the pat, and while he was weighing, the accused pointed to the inscription on the pat. This was clearly an offence under the law, but the Magistrate held that the accused was quite innocent in the matter and, therefore, imposed a penalty of £1 only. This was the best I could do under the circumstances. It seems that there was a similar case last week in Court. It also came out in the evidence that the inscription on the pat sold was very illegible. Unless, therefore, there is a very much bolder inscription written on all sides of the label, I am afraid that the retailers would run the risk of being fined and fined very heavily because the ordinary penalty is £20 for selling pats of the above description to a customer to a demand for 1 lb. weight. I, therefore, [think that there] should be better inscription, or that all your customers should be told that each time they sell these pats, they should say that the weight is not guaranteed in any way.

I debit you with £3/3/- in the matter.

Yours faithfully,

341. FALLING INTO LINE

Thanks to the action of the Rand Pioneers, the Church Council of Johannesburg has awakened to a sense of their duty. A deputation representing the Council has waited on Lord Selborne on the question of the Native land tenure in the Transvaal to urge upon His Excellency the desirability of not tampering with the rights of the Natives as they existed before the war. The Attorney-General of the Transvaal has shown how the Native was free to own land in the Transvaal before the war. He was able even to cite an instance when the late President Kruger\textsuperscript{1} informed certain petitioners, who wanted to curtail the rights of the Natives regarding land, that he could not comply with their request. It is true that the Natives were not, in practice, allowed to have their titles registered in their own names, but as the Attorney-General has clearly shown, the registration of a Native title in the name of the Commissioner for Native Affairs did not clothe that official with any discretionary power. He was bound to take transfer in his name in trust for a Native and was equally bound to take in any other Native as a cestui que trust at the instance of the original holder. In reply to the clamour of the anti-Native agitators led by Sir George Farrar,\textsuperscript{2} Sir Richard Solomon has, much against his own inclinations, promised to introduce legislation to legalise the practice of registration of Native titles in favour of the Commissioner for Native Affairs. Against this, the Rand Pioneers have again commenced an agitation. They insist on the Native Commissioner having the power to refuse to act as trustee. If the request were granted, it would undoubtedly take away from the right of the Native to hold land as it existed before the war.

It is against agitation of this nature that the Church Council has raised its voice. The deputation led by Mr. Hosken made it clear to Lord Selborne that the treatment the Coloured races have been receiving in the Transvaal since British occupation is worse than before. He and his fellow-members also showed that the war was justified in the opinion of many because they considered it a war of emancipation. The Rev. Mr. Philips said that he went at his own expense to England to preach the crusade because he could not bear the hardships that were inflicted under the Boer regime on the Coloured races. But the reverend gentleman now found that these races were no better off under the British rule.

Lord Selborne’s reply was as was to be expected. He had not sufficiently studied the question. He could not, therefore, pronounce an opinion. But His Excellency added:

If in any respect the British administration is unjust to the Native, civilised or uncivilised, it is a blot and a stain on our administration, and one which I feel personally as an implication of disgrace.

These are the words spoken by one who is the ruler of the Transvaal. May His Excellency have sufficient courage and strength to initiate the policy he has thus boldly enunciated!

The interview is not without significance for the British Indians. What the deputation submitted to His Excellency applies equally to them. And the policy laid down by Lord Selborne is the policy applicable to all British subjects. It is a matter for congratulation that in Lord Selborne the Transvaal has a Governor and South Africa a High Commissioner who is determined to hold the scales evenly between conflicting interests.

342. THE NEW LAWS OF NATAL

The proposal of the Natal Parliament to enact laws on Locations and the levy of a tax on land has miscarried owing to the rejection by the Legislative Council of both these Bills, along with the Bill to levy a tax on the Kaffirs. Therefore, for the time being at least, our apprehensions about Locations have been allayed. Though we cannot say that these Bills have been thrown out because of our petition, there is no doubt that it has had some effect. The lesson we have to learn from this is that any efforts that we might make are bound to bring some measure of success.

343. NATIVES’ RIGHTS TO HOLD LAND IN THE TRANSVAAL

The Supreme Court of the Transvaal has always given the benefit of the law to Coloured persons that is, it metes out even-handed justice without fear of the whites, regarding them and Coloured persons equal in the eyes of the law. There is in Roodepoort a church belonging to the Kaffirs. In deciding an application to transfer it to the names of its trustees, the High Court\(^1\) has ruled that land can in that way be transferred to the name of a Native; the law does not prohibit such transfer of land. It appears from this case that the mosques situated in Pretoria, Heidelberg and other places can be registered in the name of their trustees. This question deserves to be considered by the communities of Pretoria and other places.

344. TREATY BETWEEN ENGLAND AND JAPAN

As the time for reviewing the treaty between England and Japan draws near, it is being discussed in English political circles. A peace treaty, to hold good for five years, was signed between the two countries on January 30, 1902. But, if by the end of the fourth year, no notice to terminate the treaty was given by either party, the treaty would continue to be in force even beyond the five years, and thereafter the party desiring to end the treaty would have to give a year’s notice. Moreover, if at the end of the treaty period either of the parties was engaged in war, the treaty would remain effective till peace was restored.

Moreover, if either party had to go to war against a third power, the other contracting party should strive to prevent any other power from joining it. And if any such power rendered help to the party opposing either of the signatories to the treaty, the other signatory should rush to the help of the former.

If, therefore, a notice in accordance with the above terms to end the treaty is not served by either party by January 30, next year, it will remain operative beyond five years. If on the contrary such a notice is served in the meanwhile and Japan’s war with Russia continues, the treaty would remain in force till the end of the war, even if the period of the treaty as originally stipulated had come to an end.

This treaty has proved very advantageous to both England and Japan. As a matter of fact, the whole world can be said to have benefited from it. For, if a third power had entered the war to help Russia, England would have been obliged to go to the aid of Japan, and this would have obviously disturbed world peace. There is, therefore, every reason to hope that this treaty will continue further.

345. LETTER TO TAYOB HAJI KHAN MAHOMED & CO.

[JOHANNESBURG,]
August 12, 1905

SHETH SHRI TAYOB HAJI KHAN MAHOMED & CO.,

I am in receipt of your letter. It is no longer possible to write to the High Commissioner. The only thing that remains to be done is to proceed to England. Or it may be possible if some trouble occurs here again. Please meet the Mayor of your place and find out what he has to say in the matter. I cannot advise you to write to England immediately; for, if Tayob Sheth comes here, the real fight will have to be put up here. With each passing day, it will become more and more difficult. It will be better if you send a cable as follows:

High Commissioner declines interfere claim. Strongly advise you come.

Tayob Sheth will not require a permit, so you have not to worry about that.

[JOHANNESBURG,]
August 14, 1905

DEAR MR. SECRETARY,

Your letters remind me of the speeches\(^1\) I delivered. I had promised to send you the dates of The Star issues. The four lectures have appeared in The Star issues, dated March 10, 18 and 29. I am ready to send those speeches to any place and invite comments. I have read over these lectures in English again and I must say that there is not a single hard word about any religion.

I have expressed appreciation of every religion and pointed out the distinctive merit of each. There was not the least intention even in my dream of hurting anybody. Nevertheless, some people have been offended, for which I am really sorry. And I would like to assuage their minds, if I can do so somehow or the other. If you want any further explanation, please do write to me.

347. LETTER TO CHIEF SECRETARY FOR PERMITS

[JOHANNESBURG,]
August 15, 1905

TO
THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR PERMITS
P. O. BOX 1199
JOHANNESBURG

SIR,

I send the bearer, John Soukal, for his permit and registration. The documents in his possession, in my humble opinion, show conclusively that the bearer was in the Colony on the 31st day of May 1902 and has been ever since. The details that he gives with reference to his registration show, I think also, that he must have been registered under the Boer Government. A man of his class certainly could not escape registration, especially living in the country for such a long time as the bearer undoubtedly seems to have done. He tells me that he has no acquaintances in Johannesburg at present who could certify to his having taken out the registration under the Boer Government. The man seems to me to be very poor. I, therefore, trust that you will be pleased to issue him the permit, as also fresh registration, notwithstanding the fact that as usual he is not in a position to produce affidavit regarding previous payment of £3. The case seems to me to be perfectly bona fide and deserving of consideration.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

349. WILL INDIA WAKE UP?

Lord Curzon has long been considering the partitioning of Bengal into two parts and merging one of them in Assam. In justification of the proposed measure, it is argued that Bengal is too large for one Governor to administer. As against this, it is pointed out that Assam is a small province with a very small population and, that it adjoins Bengal. It is therefore the intention of His Excellency the Governor-General to merge a part of Bengal in Assam. On the other side, the people of Bengal argue that the Bengalis are quite distinct from the Assamese; they are highly educated, and they have been living together for generations. It would therefore be an act of grave injustice to separate and thus weaken them and tag large numbers of them on to Assam. A lot of discussion has already taken place over this matter, and a few days ago Mr. Brodrick declared that he had approved Lord Curzon’s proposal. Since this news reached India, meetings have been held in almost every village of Bengal. People of all communities have been participating in them. Even Chinese merchants seem to have taken part. These meetings are said to have been so impressive that long telegraphic reports have reached far-off South Africa. Resolutions challenging the Government were, for the first time it would appear, moved at these meetings. It appears to have been suggested in the course of the speeches that, if the Government did not take heed, Indian merchants should stop all trade with Great Britain. We must admit that our people have learnt these tactics from China. But if the people really act accordingly, there would be nothing surprising if our troubles came to a speedy end. For, if this is done, Great Britain will be put to great loss; and the Government can have no means of dealing with it. They cannot compel the people to carry on trade. The method is very straight and simple. But will our people in Bengal maintain the requisite unity? Will the merchants suffer for the good of the country? If we can answer both these questions in the affirmative, India can be said to have truly woken up.

350. SIR MANCHERJI AND MR. Lyttelton

Last year, the Legislative Council passed a resolution requesting Mr. Lyttelton to appoint a commission to go into the grievances of the Indians in the Transvaal. Sir Mancherji had written saying that he approved of the idea of appointing a commission. A question was again asked about this [in Parliament] by that honourable gentleman, to which Mr. Lyttelton replied that the matter was still under discussion. From this it appears that the Transvaal Government is still carrying on a controversy with Mr. Lyttelton and that there is no agreement between them. Mr. Lyttelton wants that immigration laws should be enacted on the lines of those in Natal while Sir Arthur Lawley wants those laws which would apply to Indians alone.

There are many reasons why the British should be ruling over us and why we are in such a deplorable condition. One of the reasons is that in modern times the British seem to have produced a larger number than we of brave and pious men and women of high principles. Nevertheless we believe that we are bound to benefit from a knowledge and constant contemplation of the lives of such devout men and women, and we therefore propose to give the stories of their lives from time to time. We hope that the readers of this journal will read their lives and follow them in practice and thus encourage us. We have suggested earlier that each one of our subscribers should maintain a file of \textit{Indian Opinion}. We remind them of it on this occasion.

Mrs. Elizabeth Fry lived in England a century ago. She was a very religious-minded lady and it was her constant concern to help mitigate the sufferings of man. Though herself a chronic invalid she did not care; she was not to be daunted by personal suffering. There is a prison called the Newgate Prison in England where, a hundred years ago, men and women prisoners were huddled together somehow and lived quite uncared for. They were in an extremely bad state. Crime among them, instead of diminishing, was on the increase. Their life was more like that of cattle. Consequently, the condition of Newgate prisoners who were released after their sentences became very pitiable. This misery, the good Elizabeth could not bear to see. Her heart was deeply grieved, and she dedicated her life to the amelioration of their condition. Having obtained permission of the authorities, she began helping, in particular, the women prisoners, whom she used to comfort. But she did not stop here. By her writings and personal effort she got a number of reforms introduced through the authorities. As a result of her efforts the condition of prisoners improved much. But this she considered quite inadequate. In those days, prisoners used to be deported to Australia. They were subjected to great harassment while on board ships. Even the honour of women prisoners was not safe. Elizabeth saw that all her good work was being undone on board the ships while the prisoners were being thus transported. To remedy this evil, she visited the ships at great personal inconvenience. At last she succeeded in putting an end to the sufferings of prisoners on the ships. Further, she effected some improvement in the miserable condition of the prisoners in Australia; and a law was accordingly passed to the effect that prisoners, on reaching Australia, were to be passed on to others for service after being trained there for six months. While thus sharing in the sufferings of many unfortunate persons, this good lady forgot her own suffering, and breathed her last, praying to God.

352. THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION\(^1\): A SUGGESTION

South Africa has had the unique honour of welcoming on its own soil this body of illustrious scientists. The British Association for the Advancement of Science is an institution of which the Empire may well feel proud. It was a happy idea that prompted the South African Association to invite their prototype to visit this sub-continent. The results are likely to be far-reaching. Not only will something be done for the main object of the Association—viz., the popularisation of science—but the visit will help to secure a more important result in drawing together South Africa and Britain, and the Colonies with one another. This is the third time that the Association has met outside the British Isles; and, in view of the importance of these visits and the cordiality with which the members have been received, it is not likely to be the last. We look forward to the day when the Association will meet in India. Such a visit would, we believe, be greatly to the advantage not only of India, but the Association itself.

We venture to make one humble suggestion. We have said that these external visits will do much to draw together the widely separated portions of the King’s dominions; and in order that the Association may be everywhere recognised for what it really is—namely, one of the very greatest assets of the Empire—we would like to see the title amended to “THE BRITISH EMPIRE ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE”.

353. LORD CURZON

The inevitable has happened and Lord Curzon is no more an Indian Viceroy. It is an irony of fate that when he seemed to be irremovable, he had to go under circumstances the most humiliating. A Viceroy to whom prestige was everything and who relied greatly on it for success in many things he undertook has been obliged to leave India without a vestige of it remaining. That such a fate should be brought about by the discredit of a War Minister adds point to the degradation Lord Curzon has had to undergo. It would almost appear to be an answer to the prayer of the suffering millions who were groaning under his autocratic rule.

We think that, in all he did, Lord Curzon was actuated by good intentions. He undoubtedly believed that he was doing good to the people of India in spite of themselves, in forcing down their throats what he was pleased to term reforms. No Viceroy excited on the threshold of his career the expectations that Lord Curzon did. His speeches led the Indians to believe that he would out-Ripon Ripon\(^1\) in his treatment of Indian problems. In his minute on the behaviour of the British soldiers, he even translated his promises into deeds. His reduction of the salt tax and his advocacy of the cause of British Indians in South Africa will always stand to his credit. But when full allowance has been made for these things, the net result is such that he has succeeded in earning the dislike of the people at the end of his career, in the same measure that he began with their goodwill. Even though the cause of his resignation is unfortunate in that it betokens the triumph of military autocracy over civilian rule, we can quite imagine that today in thousands of Indian homes there must be a time of joy and thanksgiving for what will be considered, not without reason, a good deliverance.

The career of Lord Curzon makes it very risky to base any expectations upon the new Viceroy; and it would be perhaps far safer to expect nothing if we would be blessed; but in Lord Minto, the Viceroy-designate, India will have a nobleman not unknown to it, as he belongs to an illustrious family which has already given a Viceroy to India. His Colonial experience may be of inestimable advantage in

Indian administration; and, if the traditions of Colonial Governorship, which are always strictly constitutional, are kept up in India, that portion of King Edward’s Empire may look forward to a peaceful and sympathetic rule for the next five years. Heaven grant that it may be so. Famine once again threatens to overtake the land; plague still continues to exact its toll; poverty daily undermines millions of families: only broadest sympathy and kindliness to the governed can help them in this dreadful trinity of evils.

354. PROFESSOR PARMANAND

Professor Parmanand, the distinguished scholar from the Anglo-Vedic College, has been in our midst now for a few weeks. He has delivered interesting discourses to crowded audiences. His mission seems to be to advance the teachings of the Arya Samaj, which is a body that has done most useful and practical work, apart from its religious doctrines. It has produced earnest patriots, a band of self-sacrificing teachers, and it has also done noble work in connection with the terrible earthquake that took place in India a few months back. The Professor who belongs to such a body of workers has a right to expect a warm welcome from Indians in South Africa. Indeed, we cannot have in our midst too many Indians of attainments and culture.

The question, however, remains as to what we shall make of such men and what they will make of us. We confess that we are not yet ripe for a vigorous missionary enterprise on religious lines. The soil is hardly ready for such work. Not that each religion may not have its own exponent and custodian. The Arya Samaj does not represent any established orthodox religion of India. It takes nothing away from its credit when we mention that it is still a cult struggling for existence and catering for converts. It represents a reformation of Hinduism. We feel that Indians in South Africa are not ready to receive any doctrines of reformation. The needs of the Indians, so far as internal work is concerned, consist of education and as much of it of the right kind as can be had. We have always admitted that there is room for improvement in the Indian household. This is not to be attained without education of the hundreds of Indian youths who are almost totally neglected in this sub-continent. The best thing we venture to think that Professor Parmanand can do is to turn his attention to this phase of the question. It is a most practical and effective mode of exhibiting the strength, the purity and the usefulness of the Samaj he represents. We believe that to sufficiently educate Indian children in South Africa through paid teachers is well-nigh impossible. We want teachers of the highest qualifications, experience and culture even for primary education.

We venture to present these views to Professor Parmanand, and through him to the Arya Samaj and other like bodies in India, no matter of what denomination or religion, for their earnest consideration.

355. THE WORLD’S RELIGION

The time has now passed when the followers of one religion can stand and say, ours is the only true religion and all others are false. The growing spirit of toleration towards all religions is a happy augury of the future. An article appeared recently in the columns of The Christian World, a London religious weekly, over the signature of “J.B.”, one of that journal’s regular contributors, on this question, extracts from which I intend to quote.

The writer, in a most liberal and generous spirit, reviews the question from the Christian standpoint, and shews how the world’s religions are linked one with the other, each having characteristics common to all others. The appearance of such an article in the Christian Press is worth noting, and shews that it is moving with the times. A few years back, such an article would have been classed as heretical teaching, and its author denounced as a traitor to the cause.

After remarking upon the new spirit which was changing the attitude of Christians to other religions, and pointing out how, a few years ago, the idea prevailed of the Christian religion standing out [as] the only true religion amongst a multitude of false ones, he goes on to say:

> There has been an immense revulsion, and one of the features of it is the discovery, so vastly surprising to the average man, that the doctrine he was brought up on was not the earlier Christian teaching at all. The noblest of the old apologists thought very differently, he finds, of the outside races and faiths, from what he had been led to imagine. He hears of Justin Martyr, standing so close to the apostolic age, who regards the wisdom of Socrates as inspired by the ‘Word’; of Origen, and Gregory of Nyssa, whose teaching is of 1This was published as “Specially Contributed”. the entire race of man as under the Divine tutorship; of Lactantius maintaining that belief in Providence was the common property of all religions...

...The finer Christian minds have, in fact, in every age gone more or less along this line. It needed only that men should come into contact with these outside races, whether in their literature or face to face, to realise at once that the ‘impassable gulf’ theory between one religion and another was false to life and to the soul...

...Religion, by a hundred different names and forms, has been dropping the one seed into the human heart, opening the one truth as the mind was able to receive it.

“J.B.” points out that many of the Christian institutions and doctrines were born of the knowledge of other religions. Many of the symbols are relics of ancient days.

How marvellous, too, in this connection, is that ancient cult of Mithras in Persia, where, as M. Cumont says: ‘Like the Christians, the followers of Mithras lived in closely united societies, calling one another father and brother; like the Christians, they practised baptism, communion and confirmation; taught an authoritative morality, preached continence, chastity and self-denial, believed in the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the dead’.

It is not surprising that the writer should claim for the Christian religion the premier position, but it is gratifying to find such a broadminded attitude taken up by Christian writers and the Christian Press.

To Europeans and Indians working together for the common good, this has a special significance. India, with its ancient religions, has much to give, and the bond of unity between us can best be fostered by a wholehearted sympathy and appreciation of each other’s form of religion. A greater toleration on this important question would mean a wider charity in our everyday relations, and the existing misunderstandings would be swept away. Is it not also a fact that between Mahomedan and Hindu there is a great need for this toleratation? Sometimes one is inclined to think it is even greater than between East and West. Let not strife and tumult destroy the harmony between Indians themselves. A house divided against itself must fall, so let me urge the necessity for perfect unity and brotherliness between all sections of the Indian community.

Indian Opinion, 26-8-1905
356. RUSSIA’S NEW CONSTITUTION

The Czar of Russia has given effect to his promise to his people regarding the introduction of a constitution based on the elective principle. From the cables received in South Africa regarding its clauses, it appears that it resembles very little the more democratic constitutions of modern times, which give wider powers to the people. It is also very doubtful if even this constitution will be given full effect to. Under this constitution the power of making laws is apparently vested in an elected body. Despite all these terms and clauses, however, the Czar has kept his sovereign authority intact. This has given the constitution a strange appearance. It makes imperative the assent of the Czar to whatever laws are passed by the elected National Council. Nobody believes that this Council will be able to exercise any check on the Czar’s power. Nevertheless, it cannot be denied that the new constitution is a step which will enable the people to make greater efforts in the future.

357. ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Last week we gave a life-sketch of Elizabeth Fry. This time we give an account of the life of a former American President.

It is believed that the greatest and the noblest man of the last century was Abraham Lincoln. He was born in America in 1809 of very poor parents. He received very little education until he was fifteen years old. He could hardly read or write and earned his meagre living, wandering from place to place.

At last he thought of bettering his lot. There being no steamers or other means of transport in those days, he voyaged through the big rivers on a country raft made of wooden planks and visited the various towns in America. At one place he got the job of a shop assistant. He was then twenty years old. Once he had a job it occurred to him that he might study further. Thereupon, he bought a few books and began to study them by himself. Meanwhile one of his relatives thought that Abraham might be able to do better if he studied law; and he apprenticed him to a lawyer, with whom Abraham worked with great diligence and studied books. He showed such ability that his superiors were much pleased with him. He too felt that he was now in a position to serve the people among whom he was born. No sooner had the thought occurred to him than he decided, in accordance with American practice, to stand for election to the Senate. His first pamphlet fully revealed his special qualities. He put up a strong fight; but he met with defeat as he was yet an unknown man, while his opponent was well known. But the defeat only whetted his zeal.

His fervour became more intense. Only a person who has a clear picture in his mind of the America of those days, can properly appreciate Lincoln’s virtues and his services. From north to south, America was at this time a camp of slaves. Nobody saw anything wrong in openly selling Negroes and keeping them in slavery. The high and the low, the rich and the poor saw nothing strange in owning slaves. No one thought it was wrong to do so. Religious minded men, priests and the like saw nothing amiss and did not protest against the system of slavery being kept up. Some even encouraged it, and all of them thought that slavery also was a divine dispensation and that the Negroes were born to it. Few could then see that the slave trade was very wicked and irreligious. And even those who did, preferred to remain silent, being unable to assert themselves. There were some who were content to play a minor role in the amelioration of the condition of slaves. Even today our hair stands on end to hear the accounts of the atrocities inflicted on slaves. They were tied up and beaten; they were forced to work, they were branded and handcuffed. And all this was not done just to one person but to all of them. It may be said without fear of contradiction that Lincoln alone, of all men, made and put into execution his resolution to change the ideas of men, ideas which were indelibly carved on their minds, to wage war against those hundreds of thousands of men who depended for their living on the system and to set free the slaves from bondage. He was so tender by nature, his faith in God was so great, and his compassion so deep that he began to convert the minds of men through his speeches and writings as well as by the example of his own life. Eventually there came into existence two parties in America: one headed by Lincoln, another by his opponents; and a big civil war broke out; but Lincoln remained undaunted. By this time he had risen so high up the ladder that he was already the President. The war went on for many years, but Lincoln abolished slavery from the whole of North America by 1858-9. The bonds of the slaves were broken, and wherever Lincoln’s name was mentioned, he was hailed as a great emancipator of men in distress. The language of the powerful speeches he delivered during these stormy days is so sublime that they rank very high in English literature.

Although he had achieved such eminence Lincoln remained full of humility. He always believed that a powerful nation or individual ought to use that power to remove the miseries of the poor and the weak, not to crush them. Though America was his motherland and he was an American, he regarded the whole world as his native land. Just when he was at the height of his glory, and despite the fact that he was such a good man, some wicked men felt that he had ruined many people by abolishing slavery. So when it was known for certain that Lincoln was going to visit a theatre, a plot was hatched to assassinate him. Even the players at the theatre had been seduced, and a leading actor had undertaken to shoot him. As Lincoln was sitting in his special box, the despicable fellow entered it, closed the door after him and shot at Lincoln. The good man fell dead. The people who witnessed this dreadful deed tore the assassin to pieces before he could be taken to a law court. In this tragic manner occurred the death of the greatest President of America. It may safely be said that Lincoln sacrificed his life in order to put an end to the sufferings of others. But Lincoln can be said to be still alive; for the changes he made in the American Constitution are still in force. And Lincoln’s name will be known as long as America endures. It will thus be seen that Lincoln has become immortal, for his greatness consisted not in his talent or his wealth, but in his innate goodness. A nation that has such good qualities as Lincoln’s is bound to rise.

THE GOVERNOR OF THE ORANGE RIVER COLONY
SIR,

I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 18th inst., numbered P.S. 15/05, in reply to the submission by my Association of the 1st July last,1 regarding certain Municipal Bye-laws affecting Coloured persons in the Orange River Colony.

My Association respectfully submits that, if there are no British Indians in the Location, it is a wanton insult offered to the British Indian community to apply the Location Regulations to it, especially as my Association is still not without hope that some day relief will be granted to the British Indians in the matter of immigration to that Colony. My Association cannot understand why the Location Bye-laws, which are meant to deal with the Natives of the country, should be made applicable by an artificial definition to British Indians.

My Association has not raised any objection to a regulation for the compulsory registration of Native servants, but my Association is respectfully of the opinion that the bracketing of British Indians with the Natives of South Africa is in principle wrong and unjust. I am, therefore, directed humbly to request relief in the matter.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ABDUL GANI,
CHAIRMAN

359. LETTER TO CHIEF SECRETARY FOR PERMITS

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION

P. O. Box 6522,
JOHANNESBURG,
September 1, 1905

TO

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR PERMITS

P. O. BOX 1199

JOHANNESBURG

SIR,

My Association has been informed that a new rule has been introduced in the Permit Office whereby British Indian refugees are required to furnish two European references instead of any two known references, as hitherto. My Association submits that the proposed rule is, first, an insult to the British Indian community in that it implies want of faith in Indian testimony, and secondly, is impracticable in that there are few Indians who are known to the European residents by name. Store-keepers, assistants, salesmen and domestic servants in the employ of British Indians rarely come into contact with Europeans, and to expect them to produce European references would be tantamount to rejection of their application for a permit. Thirdly, it would put a premium on perjury, as it is quite conceivable that a few unscrupulous Indians will not find it difficult to find a few unscrupulous Europeans who would be prepared to perjure themselves for a consideration.

My Association, therefore, submits that the only safeguard is to be found in the respectability of references, irrespective of race or colour. Even then it is quite likely that some cases of perjury would happen, but that would be purely a matter for action against those who would lend themselves to such practices. One or two successful prosecutions would certainly do away with them. At the same time, my Association draws your attention to the fact that such questionable practices in the face of enormous temptations have been comparatively rare in connection with the permits. It is indisputable that there were over 15,000 British Indian male adults resident in the Transvaal before War. Only about 12,000 appear on your register. It is reasonable, therefore, to presume that most of the men who have received their permits are pre-War residents of the Transvaal.
My Association respectfully trusts that the rule will be withdrawn, and that the refugees who are now awaiting permission to return will have their applications granted without delay, as, in accordance with the information in possession of my Association, they are suffering very severe inconvenience and loss.

I have & c.,

ABDUL GANI,

360. THE KAFFIRS OF NATAL

Some members of the British Association in England\(^1\) are at present visiting South Africa. They are all scientists, and possess great knowledge. This is the first event of its kind in South Africa. A few days ago, when they were in Natal, the Hon’ble Mr. Marshall Campbell took them to his residence at Mount Edgecombe. Here these people were shown two things. Firstly, they were shown what the savage Negroes were like, and also their dances, etc. They were thereafter introduced to educated Kaffirs. Addressing them Mr. Dubey, their leader, made a very impressive speech.

This Mr. Dubey is a Negro of whom one should know. He has acquired through his own labours over 300 acres of land near Phoenix. There he imparts education to his brethren, teaching them various trades and crafts and preparing them for the battle of life.

In the course of his eloquent speech Mr. Dubey said that the contempt with which the Kaffirs were regarded was unjustified. The educated among them were better than the uneducated ones, for they worked more, and since they had higher standards of life, they offered more custom to the merchants. It was unfair to burden the Negroes with taxes; also it was like cutting down the very branch one was sitting on. The Kaffirs understood and performed their duties better than the whites. They worked hard and without them the whites could not carry on for a moment. They made loyal subjects, and Natal was the land of their birth. For them there was no country other than South Africa; and to deprive them of their rights over lands, etc., was like banishing them from their home.

Mr. Dubey’s speech produced a very good impression on the whites, and he suggested to them that, if they sympathised with the Negroes, they might help him to start a smithy on his farm. The members of the British Association subscribed £60 on the spot and presented the sum to him. The Hon’ble Mr. Marshall Campbell also made a speech on the occasion praising the Kaffirs in Natal and pointed out that they were good and useful and that the ill-will shown to them was due to misunderstanding and was wrong.

361. COUNT TOLSTOY

It is believed that, in the western world at any rate, there is no man so talented, learned and as ascetic as Count Tolstoy. Though he is now nearly eighty years old, he is quite healthy, industrious and mentally alert.

Tolstoy was born of a noble family in Russia. His parents had enormous wealth, which he inherited. He is himself a Russian nobleman, and has, in his youth, rendered very good service to his country by fighting gallantly in the Crimean War. In those days, like the other noblemen of his time, he used to enjoy all the pleasures of the world, kept mistresses, drank and was strongly addicted to smoking. However, when he saw the carnage and bloodshed during the war, his mind brimmed over with compassion. His ideas changed; he began a study of his own religion and read the Bible. He read the life of Jesus Christ which made a deep impression on his mind. Not satisfied with the then current Russian translation of the Bible, he studied Hebrew, the language in which it was originally written, and continued his researches into the Bible. It was also about this time that he discovered in himself a great talent for writing. He wrote a very effective book on the evil consequences of war. His fame spread throughout Europe. To improve the morals of the people he wrote several novels which can be equalled by few books in Europe. The views expressed by him in all these books were so very advanced that the Russian clergy were displeased with him, and he was excommunicated. Disregarding all this, he kept up his efforts and began to propagate his ideas. His writings had a great effect on his own mind. He gave up his wealth and took to a life of poverty. He has lived like a peasant for many years now and earns his needs by his own labour. He has given up all his vices, eats very simple food and has it in him no longer to hurt any living being by thought, word or deed. He spends all his time in good works and prayer. He believes that:

1. In this world men should not accumulate wealth;
2. no matter how much evil a person does to us, we should always do good to him. Such is the Commandment of God, and also His law;
3. no one should take part in fighting;
4. it is sinful to wield political power, as it leads to many of the evils in the world;
5. man is born to do his duty to his Creator; he should therefore pay more attention to his duties than to his rights;
6. agriculture is the true occupation of man. It is therefore contrary to divine law to establish large cities, to employ hundreds of thousands for minding machines in factories so that a few can wallow in riches by exploiting the helplessness and poverty of the many.

These views he has very beautifully supported by examples from various religions and other old texts. There are today thousands of men in Europe who have adopted Tolstoy’s way of life. They have given up all their worldly goods and taken to a very simple life.

Tolstoy is still writing with great energy. Though himself a Russian, he has written many strong and bitter things against Russia concerning the Russo-Japanese War. He has addressed a very pungent and effective letter to the Czar in regard to the war. Selfish officers view him with bitterness, but they, and even the Czar, fear and respect him. Such is the power of his goodness and godly living that millions of peasants are ever ready to carry out his wish no sooner than it is spoken.

362. THE RISE OF JAPAN

The world over, all eyes are turned today towards Japan. Everyone admires that country’s bravery and sagacity. Count Okuma, a former Minister of Japan, has written an article in the North American Review, wherein he says that the present greatness of Japan is the result of reforms carried out over the centuries. She had remained backward in the eyes of the world simply because of her defective system of education. Japan found that she could not possibly keep foreigners out of the country. She therefore thought of sending out her sons to foreign lands for learning the various sciences and arts. The patriotism shown by her in this regard saved the country’s prestige. She introduced the best educational methods from foreign lands. She also introduced compulsory education for boys and girls. At the same time, she did not fail to attend to crafts and industry. She employed foreign experts until her own young men and women had completed their training.

When the educational scheme came into full operation, the Mikado issued an order to be read out in every school. It ran: “May you, our subjects, be devoted to your parents; be loving towards your brothers and sisters; live in peace and amity with your husband or wife; be straightforward in your conduct; be increasingly good and helpful to others; develop your virtues and intellect; bring credit to your country by benevolent deeds; honour the laws in accordance with the Constitution and, when occasion demands, throw yourself into public service and show your valour.” Speaking in New York, Baron Keneko said that this was the foundation of Japan’s greatness.

For soldiers and sailors also the following seven instructions were issued:

1. Be straightforward and loyal, and stay clear of untruth;
2. respect your superiors, be loyal to your comrades, and eschew arrogance and injustice;
3. obey the orders of your superiors without hesitation;
4. be courageous and brave, and give up unmanliness and cowardice;
5. do not boast of cruel deeds of daring; do not insult or quarrel with others;
6. be virtuous and thrifty; avoid extravagance;
7. preserve your self-respect, and guard against barbarity and niggardliness.

These orders of the Japanese Emperor have promoted virtue in the people, the army and the officials and welded all of them into a united nation. The greatness of Japan today owes much to the above orders.

363. LETTER TO MINISTER OF EDUCATION

DURBAN,

September 5, 1905

TO

THE HON. THE MINISTER OF EDUCATION

SIR,

We, the parents or guardians of Indian children studying in the Higher Grade Indian School,\(^1\) beg respectfully to submit the following for your consideration and relief.

We have come to know that it is the intention of the Government to change the Higher Grade Indian School at Durban into a school for Coloured children generally, and to observe no distinction as to girls and boys.

We humbly submit that the decision to open the school for all Coloured children is unjust to the Indian community, and is a departure from the assurance given by the then Minister of Education, as also Sir Albert Hime and Mr. Robert Russell, that the school will be reserved for Indian children only. It was established when the Government decided not to admit Indian children to the general schools in the Colony,\(^2\) and we understand that even then a question was raised as to establishing a school for all Coloured children, but after mature consideration the Government decided to give a school to the Indian children alone, and it was on that account that it was given the name it bears today. Moreover, the term Coloured children is an elastic term. Everyone knows the meaning of the expression British Indian, but there is no fixed meaning for the term Coloured person, and seeing that the Government have adopted a policy of making distinctions, it is only fair that British Indians should have in the largest town in the Colony a school reserved for them. The Superintendent of Education, the other day, was pleased to say that the Indian parents did not object in the other places in Natal to such a mixture. We respectfully submit, however, that it is hardly fair to draw an analogy from the small townships of Natal. It is Durban which contains the largest free and well-to-do Indian population, and it is, therefore, only natural that the difficulty about such matters would be felt keenly in Durban.

As to the question of non-separation of girls and boys, we can only say, as parents having had considerable experience, and speaking for Indian sentiment, that the decision is calculated to give rise to such legitimate complaint. There are not only practical serious objections to such a course being followed, but in many instances there is also the religious sentiment to be considered, and we doubt not that the Government will be pleased to give full consideration to such sentiments.

In conclusion, therefore, we hope that the instructions regarding the two matters referred to would be withdrawn, and that the Government would be pleased to carry out the assurance given to the Indian community when the Higher Grade Indian School was established.

We have the honour to remain, & c.,

364. THE TERMS OF PEACE

Japan has acted generously in waiving more or less two of the conditions for peace which she had announced. Firstly, she would make no claims in lieu of war expenses, except that Russia should pay £12,00,000 to Japan towards the cost of keeping Russian prisoners and treating the wounded. Secondly, the Southelian Island should be divided equally between the two countries. Whereas the terms have spread jubilation among the Russians, they have caused much dissatisfaction among the Japanese, which shows no signs of abatement. The latest cablegrams show that the emissaries of both the countries are eager to return home, as soon as the terms are finalized and the treaty signed. Not only do the Japanese envoys not expect a warm welcome home, but are afraid that the people will look on them with angry eyes.

1 Peace was signed at Portsmouth (U.S.A.) on September 5, 1905.
In his reply to a question by a Member of Parliament on the above subject, Mr. Lyttelton had promised to make an inquiry and to put an end to the flogging. The description of how the Chinese are flogged, given by The Daily Express of Johannesburg, makes pitiful reading. We give below a summary of the same. The correspondent says that the facts given by him have been either personally witnessed by him, or are supported by the evidence of those who had ordered thousands of men to be flogged. On an average 42 Chinese were flogged in a Johannesburg mine every day, not excluding even Sundays, towards the beginning of this year. In the first instance, the Overseer complained against an offending miner, who was then taken to the office of the Compound Manager; the latter, in accordance with the nature of the offence, ordered ten, fifteen or twenty strokes to be administered. Then two Chinese policemen took him about fifteen steps away; the offender stopped at the policeman’s word of command, took off his trousers and other clothes, and lay with face to the ground; one of the policemen held down the legs of the offender and the other his head, then the executor of the punishment beat him mildly or violently, according to orders, on his back with a wooden stick three feet long and with a flat end three inches broad. If in the meanwhile, the man made the slightest movement, unable to bear the pain, another pressed him down with his foot on his back, and the number of strokes ordered was completed. In some of the mines, the whip is used instead of the stick¹, and its strokes are so severe that they cause the flesh to swell and cut the skin. When Mr. Cook was Manager at the Norsedippe mines, he used to order any Chinaman, who failed to do 36 inches of drilling, to be punished. His method of punishment was even more cruel than the one described above. That gentleman ordered the use of stout sticks and the blows to be given on the back of the thighs where they were most unbearable; the full number of blows was inflicted even if blood streamed out from the wounds. Sometimes the injury was so severe that the poor Chinaman had to be sent to a hospital. One Mr. Place was later appointed to replace the cruel Mr. Cook. Being considered rather a gentleman among thieves, he ordered Bubber batons to be used instead of sticks. After some time the Mine Directors, finding that the average monthly output did not come up to their expectation, ordered Mr. Place to use more force. On his refusing to do so, he was obliged to resign. On the matter being discussed in the House of Commons, it was ordered that some other mode of punishment should replace flogging. Thereupon, Mr. Place, who had experience of conditions in China, introduced a practice that is prevalent there. He had the offending Chinaman stripped, then had him tied with his pigtail to a flag-pole standing in the compound, and made him stand there for two to three hours, however biting the cold or scorching the sun. Then Mr. Place ordered other Chinamen to make faces at the offender. Another method of punishment was to tie a thin rope to the offender’s left hand; the rope was then passed through a ring in such a way that the man was suspended with his toe just touching the ground and kept thus for two to three hours. At some places, again, the poor miners were handcuffed and tied to a beam placed two feet above the ground and kept in that position for a couple of hours in such a way that no movement was possible. The new punishment was like falling from the frying-pan into the fire. When punishment by flogging was discussed in the House of Commons, the cruel mine officers had stopped the flogging; but everyone forgot to mention that a more cruel form of punishment had been substituted.

By exposing this matter, Mr. Peckmann, the Editor of The Daily Express, has earned the unspoken blessings of hundreds of Chinese. If all this is true,—and there is no reason to disbelieve it,—what answer will the Mine Directors give their Creator? Small wonder it will be if they are ruined as a result of the curses of the poor labourers in South Africa. Was it for this that the British waged war and conquered the Transvaal?

366. FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE

We have in an earlier issue of the journal published an account of the career of the benevolent lady, Elizabeth Fry. Just as she brought about an improvement in the condition of prisoners and devoted her life to their service, so also Florence Nightingale sacrificed herself in the service of the men in the army. When the great Crimean War broke out in 1851, the British Government was as usual not alive to the situation. There was no preparation. And just as in the Boer War, so in the Crimean War, too, they committed blunders in the beginning and suffered a crushing defeat. Fifty years ago, the various facilities for nursing the wounded which are available today did not exist. People did not come out to render aid in large numbers as they do now. Surgery was not as efficacious then as it is today. There were in those days very few men who considered it an act of mercy and merit to succour the wounded. It was at such a time that this lady, Florence Nightingale, came upon the scene and did good work worthy of an angel descended from heaven. She was heart-stricken to learn of the sufferings of the soldiers. Born of a noble and rich family, she gave up her life of ease and comfort and set out to nurse the wounded and the ailing, followed by many other ladies. She left her home on October 21, 1854. She rendered strenuous service in the battle of Inkerman. At that time there were neither beds nor other amenities for the wounded. There were 10,000 wounded under the charge of this single woman. The death rate among the wounded which was 42 per cent. before she arrived, immediately came down to 31 per cent., and ultimately to 5 per cent. This was miraculous, but can be easily visualized. If bleeding could be stopped, the wounds bandaged and the requisite diet given, the lives of many thousands would doubtless be saved. The only thing necessary was kindness and nursing, which Miss Nightingale provided. It is said that she did an amount of work which big and strong men were unable to do. She used to work nearly twenty hours, day and night. When the women working under her went to sleep, she, lamp in hand, went out alone at midnight to the patients’ bedside, comforted them, and herself gave them whatever food and other things were necessary. She was not afraid of going even to the battle-front, and did not know what fear was. She feared only God. Knowing that one has to die some day or other, she readily bore whatever hardships were necessary in order to alleviate the sufferings of others.

This lady remained single all her life, which she spent in such good work. It is said that, when she died, thousands of soldiers wept bitterly like little children, as though they had lost their own mother.

No wonder that a country where such women are born is prosperous. That England rules over a wide empire is due not to the country’s military strength, but to the meritorious deeds of such men and women.

367. THE LATE MISS MANNING¹

The latest number of India brings the sad news of the death of Miss Manning, the energetic Secretary of the National Indian Association, which owes its vitality to this noble lady’s self-sacrificing work. She was a true friend of young Indians who went to England for study. Her house was ever open to receive them. Her guidance was always at their disposal. Her soirees had become an annual feature, and they brought together Anglo-Indians and Indians and thus promoted mutual goodwill. She was quite unassuming, and as India states, she avoided rather than sought public recognition. Her death is a distinct loss to the ever-increasing number of young Indians who visit England year after year for study or otherwise. We refer our readers to our London Letter for further information about this lady.

Lord Curzon is not pleased with the appointment, by His Highness the Gaekwad, of Mr. Dutt⁶ as his Minister. He has therefore, as The Bengalee reports, issued a confidential circular to all the Indian princes to the effect that, if any of them wanted to employ persons who had resigned from the Indian Civil Service, he should obtain the previous sanction of the Government. This appears to be one of Lord Curzon’s last battles.

A severe earthquake rocked Calabria\(^1\) in Italy a few days ago rendering thousands of people homeless and pitifully crying for aid. The King of Italy has donated £4,000 for relief. The numbers of those either dead or seriously injured are 300 at Parghelly, 200 at Geplo, and 2,000 at Martereno. The big quake was followed by another mild one after two or three days. The people are panic-stricken and are running about from place to place, and some are even leaving the country. It is estimated that the injured and the dead total 5,000. The earthquake of 1857 which involved a larger area took a toll of about ten thousand lives. Calabria has frequently had such calamities. During the 75 years preceding 1857, the total loss of life was 1,11,000, giving an annual average of 1,500 lives. There have been several earthquakes in Calabria during the last fifty years, but none of them caused so much damage as the present one. Many villages have been wiped out, and about a hundred thousand people have been rendered homeless. The government of the country is trying its utmost to give them all possible help.

372. THE CHINESE AND THE INDIANS : A COMPARISON

There are many Chinese living in Johannesburg. They cannot be said to be economically better off than the Indians. Many of them are merely artisans. A few days ago I had the occasion to observe how they lived. On seeing their way of life and comparing it with our own, I felt very sad.

They have founded the Chinese Association for public work, and for this purpose, they maintain a spacious hall. It is a strong structure built of brick and is kept clean and tidy. They meet the expenses for its maintenance by sub-letting the large plot of land they have taken out on lease. Since the Chinese have no facilities for lodging, they have started a Cantonese Club, which serves as a meeting place, a lodge and also as a library. They have acquired for the Club land on a long lease and have built on it a pucca one-storeyed building. There they all live in great cleanliness and do not stint themselves in the matter of living space; and seen within and from outside, it would look like some good European Club. They have in it separate rooms marked drawing, dining, meeting, committee room and the Secretary’s room and the library, and do not use any room except for the purpose for which it is intended. Other rooms adjoining these are let out as bedrooms. It is such a fine and clean place that any Chinese gentleman visiting the town can be put up there. The entrance fee is £5, and the annual subscription varies according to the members’ profession. The club has about 150 members who meet every Sunday and amuse themselves with games. The members can avail themselves of club facilities on week days also.

We have nothing similar to boast of. In no city Of South Africa have we a place of our own where an Indian visitor can be put up. Our hospitality is no doubt excellent, but it is bound to be limited. If we had something like a club, it could be used in a variety of ways. It would be very profitable if people could spend their leisure hours at such a public place instead of in one another’s homes: no single person is taxed thereby; friendship grows; and our prestige, too, is enhanced. The rules of cleanliness also can be better observed. There is no doubt that this activity is quite essential and can be carried on without much cost.

It is up to us to take a lesson from the club founded by the

373. ISHWARCHANDRA VIDYASAGAR

We have already given in these columns brief biographical sketches of a few good men and women of Europe. The purpose of these sketches is to enlighten our readers and to enable them to make their own lives fruitful by emulating these men and women.

The strong movement that is being carried on in Bengal to boycott British goods is of no mean significance. Such a movement has been possible there because education is more widespread and the people in Bengal are more alert than in other parts of India. Sir Henry Cotton has remarked that Bengal holds sway from Calcutta to Peshawar. It is necessary to know the reasons for this.

There is no gainsaying the fact that a nation’s rise or fall depends upon its great men. The people who produce good men cannot but be influenced by them. The main reason for the special distinction that we find in Bengal is that many great men were born there during the last century. Beginning with Rammohan Roy\(^1\), one heroic figure after another has raised Bengal to a position higher than that of the other provinces. It can be said that Ishwarchandra Vidyasagar was the greatest among them. “Vidyasagar”, which means an ocean of learning, was an honorific of Ishwarchandra, conferred on him by the pundits of Calcutta for his profound Sanskrit learning. But Ishwarchandra was not an ocean of learning only; he was an ocean of compassion, of generosity, as well as of many other virtues. He was a Hindu, and a Brahmin too. But to him, Brahmin and Sudra, Hindu and Muslim, were all alike. In any good deeds that he performed, he made no distinction between high and low. When his professor had an attack of cholera, he himself nursed him. As the professor was poor, Ishwarchandra called in the doctors at his own cost and himself attended to the patient’s toilet.

\(^1\) (1774-1833), A great social and religious reformer, founder of the Brahmo Samaj, supported abolition of Sati and worked hard for the spread of education.
He used to buy luchi\(^1\) and curds and feed the poor Muslims at his own cost, in Chandranagar\(^2\), and helped with money those who needed it. If he saw a cripple or any one in distress by the roadside, he took him to his own house and nursed him personally. He felt grief at other people’s sorrows and joy at their joys.

Himself he led a very simple life. His dress consisted of a coarse dhoti, a shawl of a similar kind to cover his body, and slippers. In that dress he used to call on Governors, and in the same dress he greeted the poor. He was really a fakir, a sannyasi or a yogi. It behoves us all to reflect on his life.

Ishwarchandra was born of poor parents in a small village in the Midnapur taluka\(^3\). His mother was a very saintly woman, and many of her virtues were inherited by Ishwarchandra. Even in those days, his father knew some English, and decided to give his son a better education. Ishwarchandra began his schooling at the age of five. At the age of eight, he had to walk sixty miles to Calcutta to join a Sanskrit college. He had such a prodigious memory that he learnt the English numerals by looking at the figures on the milestones while walking along the road. At sixteen he became well versed in Sanskrit, and was appointed a Sanskrit teacher. Rising step by step, he at last became the Principal of the College where he had studied. The Government held him in great respect. But, being of an independent nature, he could not adjust himself to the Director of Public Instruction and resigned his post. Sir Frederick Halliday, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, sent for him and requested him to withdraw his resignation, but Ishwarchandra flatly declined.

His nobility and humanity had their true blossoming after he had given up his job. He saw that Bengali was a very good language, but appeared poor for want of fresh contributions. He, therefore, began writing books in Bengali. He produced very powerful books, and it is mainly due to Vidyasagar that the Bengali language is at present in full bloom and has spread throughout India.

But he also realised that merely writing books was not enough; and so he founded schools. It was Vidyasagar who founded the Metropolitan College in Calcutta. It is staffed entirely by Indians.

Considering that elementary education was quite as necessary as higher education, he started primary schools for the poor. This was a stupendous task in which he needed government help. The Lieutenant-Governor assured him that the Government would bear the cost; but the Viceroy, Lord Ellenborough, was opposed to this and the bills preferred by Vidyasagar were not passed. The Lieutenant-Governor was very sorry and suggested that Ishwarchandra might file a suit against him. Brave Ishwarchandra replied: “Sir, I have never gone to a court of law to get justice for myself. How, then, is it possible for me to proceed against you?” At that time other European gentlemen who used to help Ishwarchandra in his work rendered him good financial aid. Not being very rich himself, he often ran into debt by helping others out of their difficulties; nevertheless, when a proposal was made to raise a public subscription for him, he turned it down.

He did not rest satisfied with thus putting higher and elementary education on a sound footing. He saw that, without the education of girls, the education of boys alone would not be enough. He found out a verse from Manu which said that the education of women was a duty. Pressing it into service, he wrote a book on the subject and, in collaboration with Mr. Bethune founded the Bethune College for imparting education to women. But it was more difficult to get women to go to college than to found it. As he lived a saintly life and was very learned, he was respected by all. So he met prominent people and persuaded them to send their womenfolk to the College; and thus, their daughters began to attend the College. Today there are in that College many well-known and talented women of sterling character, so much so that they can by themselves carry on its administration.

Still not satisfied, he started schools imparting elementary education to small girls. Here food, clothing and books were supplied free of charge. Consequently, one can see today thousands of educated women in Calcutta.

To meet the need for teachers he started a Teacher’s Training College.

Seeing the very pitiable condition of Hindu widows, he advocated the remarriage of widows; he wrote books and made speeches on the subject. The Brahmins of Bengal opposed him, but he did not care. People threatened to kill him, but he went on undaunted. He got the Government to pass a law legalizing remarriage of widows. He persuaded many men and arranged the remarriage of daughters of prominent men widowed in childhood. He encouraged his own son to marry a poor widow.

1 Governor-General of India, 1842-4
The kulin or high-born Brahmins were given to taking a number of wives. They were not ashamed of marrying as many as twenty of them. Ishwarchandra wept to see the sufferings of such women; and he carried on his effort till the end of his life to eradicate this wicked custom.

When he saw thousands of poor people in Burdwan suffering from malaria, he maintained a doctor at his own cost and personally distributed medicines among them. He went to the houses of the poor and gave them the necessary help. In this way he worked ceaselessly for two years, secured government help and called for more doctors.

In the course of this work, he saw the necessity of a knowledge of medicine. So he studied homeopathy, attained proficiency in it, and began to prescribe medicines to the sick. He did not mind travelling long distances in order to help the poor.

He was equally a stalwart in helping big princes out of their difficulties. If any of them had injustice done to him or was reduced to poverty, Ishwarchandra used to help him with his influence, knowledge and money, and mitigate his distress.

While he was engaged in these activities, Vidyasagar passed away in 1890, at the age of seventy. There have been few in this world like him. It is said that had Ishwarchandra been born among a European people, an imposing column, like the one raised by the British for Nelson, would have been erected as a memorial to him. However, a column to honour Ishwarchandra already stands in the hearts of the great and the small, the rich and the poor of Bengal.

It will now be clear to us how Bengal provides an example for the other parts of India to follow.

374. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO LT.-GOVERNOR

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION

BOX NO. 6522,
JOHANNESBURG,
September 16, 1905

TO
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY
TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE LT.-GOVERNOR PRETORIA

SIR,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, No. LG 97/3, making certain enquiries about a letter addressed by me to the Chief Secretary for Permits on the 1st day of September current.

The writer of this letter has been in the Colony since 1883 with but brief interruptions, and has been in very close touch with the Indian community whom he has had the honour to represent now for over twelve years, and the first proof, therefore, that is respectfully submitted in support of the statement that there were over 15,000 British Indian male adults resident in the Transvaal before War is the writer’s own experience.

My Association further submits the following in support of the statement:

1. In the year 1899, the British Agent submitted to His Majesty’s Government a report giving roughly the British population, and the figures were published in the newspapers. To the best of the writer’s recollection as to the British Indians, the figures given were 15,000.

2. In the year 1895, a petition was presented to His Majesty’s Secretary of State for the Colonies by British Indians in the Transvaal which is published in a Blue-Book on the grievances of the British Indians in South Africa. A rough estimate was made of the British Indian population in the Transvaal at the time and, in accordance with it, there were at least 5,000 adult male Indians, but those who were in South Africa between 1895 and 1899 know that the largest increase in the Indian population of the Transvaal took place between 1895 and 1899. The increase was considered to be so alarming that the late President Kruger was urged by some of the present anti-Indian agitators to take steps, but happily, so far as Indian immigration was concerned, the late President turned a deaf ear to any such suggestion. It was in 1896 that India was visited by the plague followed by two successive famines of extraordinary dimensions. The largest known exodus from India took place during that time. The steamers Courland, Naderi, Hooseni, and Crescent were specially run between Bombay and South African ports, each having on board per voyage over 400 Indians bound for South Africa. Most of these, it was then a matter of common knowledge, found their way to the Transvaal.

3. It was in the early part of 1897 that the Natal Immigration Act, was passed. In the December of 1896, the Durban Demonstration¹ took place in connection with the Courland and the Naderi which brought together over 800 passengers of whom in that month alone 500 went to the Transvaal. Each of these steamers made four trips per year, and, if they brought for the Transvaal without allowing for domiciled Indians only 300 per trip, there would be a yearly increase of 4,800 Indians between the four steamers alone, not to take into consideration Indians brought from the other parts of India by the Kings Line and the British Indian Steam Navigation Co. The facts as to the number of passengers per these steamers can easily be verified by reference to the steamship companies or the Port Authorities in Natal.

The writer’s opinion is supported by that of other British Indians who are very old residents of the Transvaal.

4. As to the opposite view, if reference is made to the public statements that have been made by what may be termed the anti-Indian party, it is difficult to speak of its representations with moderation. In almost every material particular, the allegations made by the members of that party have been over and over again challenged and even disproved, and yet they have not scrupled to reiterate them and to inflame the prejudices of the people against British Indians. To take only three instances. Certain figures were given by them regarding the number of traders in Pietersburg before War and after War. Both these Statements have been challenged. Names of the persons trading before War have been produced, and yet the original statement has been reiterated. They have said that it was impossible for British Indians before War to enter the Transvaal and not be registered. My Association has no hesitation in saying that the statement is entirely devoid of truth. Hardly one-third of the people who entered this country were actually registered, and they were only those who had to take out trade licences and even then the number did not necessarily include partners. My Association is in a position to prove from unimpeachable testimony that there were British Indians in the Transvaal before War who never paid the registration fee. Some of them are well known and can be identified by respectable European merchants.

The third statement that has been made is with reference to the alleged Indian exodus to Potchefstroom from Natal. Those that have made this statement can know nothing of the conditions of the working of the Naval laws regarding indentured labourers, and the statement has been made to the effect that it is men drawn from this class who have crowded into Potchefstroom. The detractors of Indians have, so far as my Association is aware, never yet succeeded in introducing any proof in support of the many statements they have made, and have never taken into account the great fact that it was Johannesburg which, before War, supported the largest Indian population, and it is from Johannesburg that the Indians have now radiated into other parts of the Colony. The trade in Johannesburg before War, so far as the Indians were concerned, as it was confined to the Dutch and the Natives, was very fair. Both the Dutch and Native trade at present stands at its lowest ebb. The result is that many traders who found it impossible to eke out a living in Johannesburg have now established in the different parts of the Transvaal. The Johannesburg Location supported a large number of Indian landlords. These have not only been impoverished, but have been obliged to leave Johannesburg and go to other parts of the Colony. If the original condition of Johannesburg was resumed and security of tenure re-assured to the British Indians which they enjoyed before War, most of the Indian population, which is dispersed over the different areas in the Colony, would again gravitate to Johannesburg and the anti-Indian gentlemen would have the satisfaction of knowing that the Indians have certainly disappeared from the many townships.

My Association will be pleased, if an enquiry were to be held, to adduce proof to verify every word of the statements made above. As the Chief Secretary for Permits has forwarded my letter of the 1st September to His Excellency for direction, may I venture to express the hope that what appeared to my Association to be impossible rules, as to European references, will be withdrawn without delay. While all kinds of unsupportable statements are being made with reference to British Indians, innocent and honest men have to suffer much inconvenience and loss without any fault of their own, a hardship which they were never obliged to undergo when they were under a flag not their own.

CHAIRMAN,

375. THE HOONDAMIL CASE AGAIN

The Supreme Court had another opportunity of deciding upon a point arising out of the Dealers’ Licenses Act of Natal. This time it was a review of the decision, some time ago published in these columns, of the Town Council of Durban, confirming that of the Licensing Officer, who refused to register the transfer of Mr. Hoondamal’s licence from Grey Street to West Street. The judgment given by the learned Chief Justice is most disappointing. It may be in accordance with law but certainly not with justice or equity. The obvious answer to this is that judges have to interpret and not to make law, but we respectfully think that it must be a serious state of law if it does not provide a remedy for an admitted evil. The Licensing Officer has extensive powers with reference to granting of licences to trade in the Colony. The learned Chief Justice said that, under the law, he was not to exercise judicial discretion. It, therefore, amounts to this, that the Licensing Officer may, in order to spite a personal enemy, decline to grant him his licence, and the Courts would be powerless to intervene. The dividing line between political animus and personal enmity, so far as such cases are concerned, is very narrow. The Dealers’ Licenses Act is an administrative enactment. It is not a political law, in any sense of the term. In not granting the licence to Mr. Hoondamal, the Licensing Officer has been undoubtedly guided by political animus against the class to which the appellant belongs.

1 Vide “Hoondamal’s Licence”, 15-10-1904
Indeed, he has said so in his reason, which is that it was not advisable to grant further licences to Asiatics in West Street. However, the mischief is done. The highest tribunal in the country has felt itself powerless to correct the evil. Every Indian licence is at stake; and if there is to be any relief secured, British Indian merchants must gird up their loins, rise to the occasion, and carry on ceaseless warfare until the disgraceful Act is blotted out of the Statute-book. Representations must be made to the Government, to the local Parliament, and to the Colonial Secretary, inviting their attention to the matter. If the local Parliament, whose members, in the words of the late Sir John Robinson, are trustees for the unrepresented British Indians, would not listen, the India Office, which is the paramount trustee for the millions of India, should intervene and induce Natal to grant the very small measure of justice to which Indians are entitled. The late Mr. Harry Escombe, at the time of introducing the Bill, said that the success of the measure would depend upon the moderation with which the powers given under the Act were used, and that, if the local authorities failed to exercise their powers moderately, they might have to be taken away. The Act has been in operation for over eight years, and no one can deny it has been capriciously enforced on many an occasion, and it has always hung like Damocles’ sword over the heads of the Indian merchants in the Colony. It is time that the sword was removed, and that the sufferers were permitted to feel that they are under British constitutional rule and not under Russian autocracy.

376. MR. GOCH AND INDIANS

Mr. George Goch, the Mayor of Johannesburg, let himself go, as the phrase goes, at the meeting recently held in Potchefstroom under the auspices of the Transvaal Progressive Association. He spoke, not as simple Mr. Goch holding independent views, but as a representative of the Progressive Association, and as one bound to express the official views, whether they coincided with his own conscientious opinions or not. Mr. Goch, in 1903, was among the few who raised their voices in favour of British Indians, at the deliberations of the Johannesburg Municipality. He then considered Asiatic competition to be quite healthy. He considered the British Indian as a desirable citizen, because he was industrious, thrifty and law-abiding. Mr. Goch, the Mayor of Johannesburg, does not hesitate to retail the falsehoods that were set in motion by Mr. Loveday and his friends. He does not scruple to vilify British Indians. He sees in them a danger to the white community, whereas only a short time ago he considered them to be a strength to any community in which they were placed. To him, Asians are, to-day, totally different in their social conditions, whom it is not fair to allow to compete against the white traders, because they could not compete against each other. The Asians have very little sense of the burden of citizenship in the country. They avoid all the necessary burdens and duties which the white people have to undertake, and consequently, says Mr. Goch, triumphantly, it is not fair to pit the white trader against the Asiatic and to allow the white trader to go to the wall because there is some far-fetched sentiment (to which, by the way, he himself succumbed in 1903) that, because the Asiatic is a British subject from another section of the Empire, he has the right to their sympathy.

Mr. Goch has not told us what constitutes the burden of citizenship. If it consists in giving public entertainments, if it consists in opening champagne bottles, we must confess that the poor Asiatic has very little sense of such burden; but if it means a readiness to comply with the laws of the country, to pay one’s taxes, to earn one’s livelihood by the sweat of one’s brow instead of becoming a public charge, to conform to the social laws relating to morality, to assist in defending one’s country of domicile, no matter how or in what humble capacity, then we have no hesitation in saying that the Indian has well discharged the burden of citizenship. We are afraid, however, that there is no arguing with people who would wilfully mislead. Mr. Goch knows all that we have been saying about the Indian, but expediency, an eagerness to snatch votes, required from him a change of front. Mr. Goch’s example shows to what pass public life has come under modern conditions. The gods must be pleased at any cost. Nothing is too sacred to be sacrificed in order to appease them, and if this is to be the outcome of popular government, the time is not far distant when it will stink in the nostrils, and become a byword for hypocrisy and insincerity.

377. INDIANS IN THE O. R. C.

We publish in another column the correspondence\(^1\) between Lord Selborne and the British Indian Association at Johannesburg with reference to the status of British Indians in the Orange River Colony. Lord Selborne’s reply is extremely courteous, but equally disappointing. In spite of His Excellency’s anxiety and desire to soothe British Indians, he has been undoubtedly led away by the reports from the local officials who have smartly succeeded in confusing the real issue. The British Indian Association naturally protested against Indians being classed with all sorts of Coloured people, including the Natives of South Africa. It resented the application of regulations aimed at the Natives of the soil to the Indians who may go to the Colony. The injustice is all the more serious because, in practice, very few Indians are affected, as the application of such legislation to them is not called for by the circumstances of the case. The utility of the registration of servants has never been questioned. The regulations that have been reproduced in these columns from time to time have been shown to be restrictive of the personal liberty and insulting to those affected by them. It was of such legislation that the British Indian Association has rightly complained. What does it get in return? An illustration, shown from Ceylon, to justify registration of servants, which has never been questioned! The Association, in its concluding reply,\(^1\) has also very properly drawn Lord Selborne’s attention to the fact that British Indians do expect in the near future to have the right to enter the Orange River Colony, and if the expectation is justly entertained, restrictive legislation in anticipation is open to exception. The matter is one that calls for immediate action, and we hope that Lord Selborne will be pleased to see that justice is done to British Indians who have now settled in the Orange River Colony, or who may have to go there in the future.

378. THE FIRST COLONIAL-BORN INDIAN BARRISTER

We extend a hearty welcome to Mr. Bernard Gabriel, who has just returned a full-fledged barrister from England. Under ordinary circumstances, it would be no cause to specially notice a lad becoming a barrister, but the event in which we are now interested is very significant. Mr. Gabriel comes of Indian parents who are among the earliest settlers in the Colony and who are drawn from the indentured class. It reflects the highest credit on them that they and their elder sons sacrificed almost all they had in order to give their youngest son a sound education. It speaks well for their public spirit and parental love. They have raised the poor Indians, who for their livelihood have to serve under indenture, in the estimation of all right-thinking men. Mr. Bernard Gabriel has also shown that, under the circumstances, the children of poor Indians are capable of attaining to a high degree of proficiency, and we think that the Colonists, too, ought to take pride in the event. There is another aspect. Whilst, as an Indian, Mr. Bernard Gabriel has every right to congratulate himself on being a barrister in legal education, he has to recognise the fact that his career is only commencing. He has to consider himself as trustee for his fellow young men in the same walk of life, and it is his example which, if well set, will induce other parents to send their children to England to finish their education. He has adopted an honourable profession, but if it be used as a means for amassing wealth, there may be failure staring him in the face. If his attainments are placed at the service of the community, they will grow more and more. We hope, therefore, that Mr. Gabriel has brought with him a real knowledge of the traditions of his profession, and that in all he does he will be prudent, calm, humble and patriotic.

---

1 An address couched in similar terms was presented to Bernard Gabriel on September 19 at a meeting of Durban Indians in the Congress Hall (Indian Opinion,, 23-9-1905). Though Gandhiji does not appear to have been present and is not among the signatories, it is not unlikely that he had a hand in drafting the address, which contains the following sentence: “We have no doubt but that the interest and betterment of your countrymen, and the advocacy of their cause in South Africa will have your warm support, and that your influence for their well-being will ever be used on their behalf.”
379. PERMIT REGULATIONS IN THE TRANSVAAL

STRONG REPRESENTATION BY BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION

Recently the Permit Office has introduced a regulation to the effect that persons seeking permits can get them only on furnishing the names of two Europeans for reference. This is outrageous. The Association has made a strong representation against it. It has been stated therein that there could be very few cases where a European would know Indians by name. The making of such a regulation only means that the Government does not intend to allow any more Indians to enter the Transvaal. This regulation will, moreover, encourage fraudulent practices; for many dishonest Europeans will come forward who will not hesitate to take a false oath for the sake of money. So far only 12,000 Indians have entered the Transvaal. Before the war their number was 15,000. Hence there is reason to believe that 3,000 more of the former residents are still to return. They are suffering many hardships, and it is the duty of the Government to admit them without delay. The permit Officer had forwarded the petition to H. E. the Lieutenant-Governor, who wanted to know the grounds on which it had been stated that there were 15,000 Indians before the war. In its reply the Association has submitted the following grounds:

1. the personal experience of the President, Mr. Abdul Gani;
2. the personal experience of other early Indian residents;
3. the Report of the British Agent before the war in which the Indian population was shown to be about 15,000;
4. the population in 1895 was stated as 5,000.

It would not be surprising if those who entered the Transvaal between 1895 and 1899 were to number 10,000. Thousands of men left India, because of the plague in 1896 and the severe famine in 1897-8. Again stringent-laws were enacted in Natal in 1897. All this resulted in many Indians entering the Transvaal. Though there was at that time alien rule in the Transvaal, Indians could freely enter the country. The late Mr. Kruger did not listen to the suggestion that this be stopped. At the time, four steamships, the Naderi, the Courland, the Hooseni, and the Crescent used to ply between Bombay and South Africa, and each of them brought hundreds of Indians to South Africa. Each of the steamers made four trips a year, and calculating at the rate of three hundred passengers per trip, the sixteen trips in a year must have resulted in the immigration of 4,800 Indians.

Besides laying this evidence before the Government, the Association has also shown the statements of Mr. Loveday and others to be quite untrue and has made an appeal to the Government to pay no attention to them and immediately admit the poor Indians that still remain stranded outside.

380. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
September 23, 1905

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

Your letter to hand. What you write bout Kitchin is astounding. You have nothing to do with his temperament. He is not your boss. You can certainly reply to what he says without losing your temper. You are both equals, and can discuss matters as such. When I say, “You should tolerate him whatever he might say”, it does not mean that you should not reply; it only means that you should not get excited while opposing his statements. I know the West incident. There the mistake was mine. I had asked him to go to Kitchin; but I forget the fact that the venerable Mr. Kitchin cannot tolerate anybody’s presence. This is his shortcoming which we should ignore.

I have made it quite clear to you that I do not care in the least even if Kitchin or any other person goes away. The press will not close down on that account. My ultimate reliance is on you and West. The press is not going to close down so long as you two are there. It in spite of this you entertain any doubt, I would call that a weakness in you.

Though the expenditure on the electric lights, etc., in the press is not going to be incurred without reference to me, you may declare in the meeting that it cannot be done without reference to me, I have agreed to sanction £40 for it at the most. I have not given permission for the construction of an office in Kitchin’s house at the expense of the press. I do not mind giving him a telephone.

You may give money to Mannering.

1 Member, Transvaal Legislative Council, Vide Vol. IV, pp. 207-8.
You should speak to Kalabhai\textsuperscript{1}. I have no idea how much money has been given to him. But he has most probably drawn Rs.500 from Revashankarbai. I shall write again to Kalabhai about the work, if you want me to do so. You should not be diffident in such matter. I shall write to Shri Revashankarbai.

Hemchand\textsuperscript{2} is not to be dispensed with. Ramnath also is not to be relieved without the matter being given serious thought.

\textbf{MOHANDAS}

\[\text{[PS.]}\]

I have received the telegram regarding Gokuldas. I wonder if he has brought his permit with him or left it with Kalyandas. If Suleman Ismail wants the bill for the money, the receipt of which we have acknowledged, do send it to him.

\textbf{381. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI}

\textit{JOHANNESBURG, September 27, 1905}

\textbf{MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,}

I have received your letter. There is a letter from Hemchand today saying that a notice dispensing with his services has been served on him. I have thereupon sent a telegram asking that he be not discharged. I do not relish the idea of discharging even Ramnath. But if he can be posted with Chi. Jayashanker, you may do so. I am not at all inclined to discharge Hemchand for no fault of his. I intend to make some special use of him. I have already informed you that I have written to Kitchin about this.

I have written a letter\textsuperscript{3} to Virji today reprimanding him. I have written to Kalabhai asking him to pay up the money by the end of the year.

Hemchand, it appears, does not get my letters. I am enclosing herewith a letter for him which you may read and then pass on to him. Let me know whether you receive the letters sent to the Grey Street address or not.

As he has asked for it, I have written to you to send Suleman

\textsuperscript{1} Gokuldas alias Kalabhai, son of Permanand, a cousin of Gandhiji
\textsuperscript{2} A relative of Shrimad Rajachandra
\textsuperscript{3} Not available
Ismail the bill for the amount we have acknowledged in the paper. If after that, he does not pay, we shall write it off.

I do not think I shall be able to train Gokuldas for Gujarati in two months. He seems to be very weak in Gujarati.

You have arranged Manilal’s time-table very well. Since he likes working on the land, ask him to do some work around the house. The main thing is to clear the big plot of land and water the plants. He will get to know more by himself if he looks after the trees. What is he learning? I shall write to you about his English composing. It will be all right for the present if he takes training in Gujarati.

I see that your mind has weakened a little. The real need is for you to stay here with me for a few months, which, however, does not seem to be possible. It is not enough that you are firm about staying on in the press. I have already shown you conclusively as in a mathematical problem that the press won’t break down. You had agreed with me in that, and now you write that the circumstances are unbearable and precarious. This is exactly what I consider a sign of weakness. You have not been able to consider—or did you have the time to do so—that our duty is in regard to the press, what your own duty is or how to deal with the workers; and your weakness is brought out by the adverse circumstances. I consider it a good thing that this has happened; but it can be so considered only if you understand the purport of it. I cannot explain all this in a letter. But this much I do say that: (1) the press will not break down so long as even a single man is entirely devoted to it; (2) I do not see anything better for you or the others than the press; (3) however bitter a man might be, he is sure to come round if we bestow upon him pure love in thought, word and deed; (4) but, whether he comes round or not, our duty is to follow the same course without misgivings. I believe it will be better if you train Hemchand and free yourself a little. And I want you to do so.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

382. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,

September 29, 1905

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

Orchard writes to me saying that you gave Ram directly an order for binding a book, and he complains that, if he is the foreman, this was irregular. He also states the book is not well bound. I have written to him saying that if you have done so, the giving of the order directly is irregular, but that you could not possibly have meant any offence to him or to break the rules, and I have also asked him to have a man-to-man conversation with you. I should, therefore, like you to have a chat with him and let me know also what this is about. It is quite true that all the orders should be delivered to him and not to the different men directly. Please send a copy of Indian Opinion to Karsondas¹, Ranavav², comp[limentary].

383. PETITION TO COLONIAL SECRETARY, TRANSVAAL

[Before September 30, 1905]

TO
THE HONOURABLE THE COLONIAL SECRETARY
PRETORIA
THE PETITION OF HOLDERS OF STANDS IN THE MALAY LOCATION, JOHANNESBURG, BEING MALAY AND OTHER SUBJECTS OF THE CROWN
HUBLY SHEWETH,

That your petitioners have been resident in what is Known as the Malay Location in Johannesburg for a number of years.

The Malay Location was established about the year 1893.

Your petitioners have held stands in the Location as monthly tenants for a number of years, but they have never been hitherto disturbed in their occupation.

Many of your petitioners have built very substantial premises of burnt-brick. Others have wood and iron buildings, but the majority of them are, in your petitioners’ estimation, more or less expensive structures.

Some time before the year 1899 an attempt was made by the late Boer Government to dispossess your petitioners and to remove them to some other site, but through the intervention of the then British Agent, the attempt was frustrated.

Your petitioners often approached the then British Agent during the Boer regime for a fixed tenure of tile stands in their possession but they were not able to secure relief although the fullest sympathy was expressed with your petitioners.

Your petitioners are law-abiding British subjects. They have always observed the sanitary regulations and there never has been any complaint made either with reference to the quality of their residences or their mode of living.

The want of definiteness about their holdings very considerably hampers your petitioners.

Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that the Government will be pleased to allow your petitioners to have some fixed tenure of the stands in the Malay Location, and for this act of justice and mercy your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall for ever pray.

384. LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITY IN THE TRANSVAAL

Although Sir Richard-Solomon, the Attorney-General for the Transvaal, stated that no contentious legislation would be introduced during the present session of the Transvaal Legislative Council, the latest Government Gazette to hand gives a list of ordinances passed by the dying Council, some of which are without doubt highly contentious, if, that is to say, the feelings of those whom they are intended to affect are of any consequence. There is, for instance, the Municipal Amending Ordinance which gives any Town Council in the Transvaal the power “with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor to close any Locations for Natives established or laid out by it or under its control”, provided that the Lieutenant-Governor may, before giving his approval to the closing of such Location, require the Council to lay out other land suitable for a Location. It makes further provision for compensation to be paid to the Natives for the value of their huts, etc. Section 10 gives the Council the power to set apart and maintain Asiatic Bazaars, and it makes the provision with reference to Native Locations above referred to applicable to the Asiatic Bazaars, which means that there is only this distinction between the two, namely, that, whereas Natives may be compelled to reside in the Location, Asiatics may not be compelled to remove to the Locations, which are euphemistically described as Bazaars. This legislation regarding Asiatic Bazaars arises from the struggle of the Pretoria Municipality for obtaining control over the Asiatic Bazaars at Pretoria. In theory, there may be no difference between governmental and municipal control; but, in practice, it will very largely depend upon the temper of the municipality that may happen to be in authority. Instead, therefore, of there being a continuity of policy regarding Bazaars, there will now be differences in accordance with the fancy of each municipality. It is very difficult to know why such legislation has been passed during the last days of the existing Council, in view of the fact that the whole of the Asiatic question is still a matter of correspondence between the Home Government and the Transvaal Government. Many more important and pressing matters have been naturally held in abeyance, in view of the establishment next year of an elective Council. The amending ordinances, however, authorise the municipalities to impose licences for tea-rooms or eating-houses which may be used exclusively by Asiatics. For this, we believe the Asiatics in the Transvaal have to thank some Chinese store-keepers, who, in their eagerness to open Chinese eating-houses and not knowing that licences were not required for them, petitioned the Government to let them have facilities for opening such eating-houses. The Government have met the petitioners with what they deserve, and all Asiatic boarding-housekeepers will now have the pleasure of having municipal control over even small Asiatic refreshment rooms. Municipal control, for the sake of sanitation, we can quite understand and even welcome; but the imposing of licences over businesses which we apprehend are hardly lucrative, so far as British Indians are concerned, is simply preposterous. But British Indians are Asiatics; therefore, if there must be eating-house licences imposed for the catering of 45,000 Chinamen, the Transvaal Government argue there must also be licences imposed for eating-houses for 12,000 Indians. It did not occur to them that Indian eating-houses are very rare, as the custom of the community does not as a rule require them. Indeed, they are so few that hitherto they have not been even noticed.

There is, again, the Revenue Licence Ordinance which requires hawkers and pedlars to take out certificates from magistrates, Justices of the Peace, or Police Officers before being entitled to a licence, exception being made in favour of those who may be already in possession of their licences, provided that these fortunate men, within fourteen days before the expiry of their licences, hand them to the Revenue Officers within their districts.

The Johannesburg Land Ordinance makes it lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor to grant to the Councils of the Municipality of Johannesburg in such manner and on such conditions as it may deem advisable and subject to all servitudes at present subsisting therein in favour of any person the land described in schedule ‘attached to the ordinance’.

Among the lands thus dealt with is the Malay Location in Johannesburg. This Location has been in existence for the last twelve years or more. There has never been any objection raised to it either on account of the habits of the inhabitants or its situation. The inhabitants, under a sense of security fostered by the different British Agents who represented the Government before the war, have built substantial houses. The tenure, however, from a legal standpoint is only a monthly tenancy. What, then, are the inhabitants to receive as compensation, assuming that they will be removed? We cannot but here recall the invidious distinction that has been drawn between one portion of Vrededorp and the other portion, for the whole of the Malay Location is part of Vrededorp. That portion which is inhabited by the old indigentburghers has received most favourable treatment at the hands of the Government. As our readers must have seen from these columns, they are not only not to be dispossessed but they are to have their monthly tenure converted into long leases. Why should not the same facility be given to the inhabitants of the Malay Location? It will be for the latter to see to their rights being properly safeguarded. These are only a few samples of legislation which has been termed non-contentious. It has in some shape or other dealt with the rights of the Coloured people who have no choice whatsoever in their government.

The following appears in the Cape _Government Gazette_ for the 19th September, 1905:

In the event of a ‘Prohibited Immigrant’ having entered this Colony in contravention of the Act, it shall be lawful, after due enquiry into the facts by the Magistrate of the District in which Prohibited Immigrants shall have been found, to order such Immigrant to be detained and accommodated in such place as the Minister may from time to time direct, pending the removal of such Immigrant from within the territorial limits of the Colony, and where such Immigrant is in possession of sufficient means, the whole or the part of the cost of such removal to such port or other place as the Minister may direct shall be borne by such Immigrant.

The provision is very drastic. The Restriction Act has been passed in the supposed interests of the Colony. It is quite conceivable that a man may unwittingly enter it in contravention of the Act. It is hardly just, then, if he is found to be in possession of just enough to pay the cost of his removal to make him bear the burden. Although ignorance of law is in theory held to be no excuse, there are, perhaps, cases in which in practice ignorance is a valid plea. There is already in the Act a clause requiring the masters of all steamers that may bring Prohibited Immigrants to take them back. If a Prohibited Immigrant enter the Colony, it shows also lack of supervision on the part of the authorities, and it seems hardly fair that an innocent man should be punished, either because there is not complete supervision at the Cape, or because the masters of vessels have been careless in selecting passengers. We, therefore, trust that the British Indians at the Cape, whom the new Rule is likely to affect most, will take the necessary steps to have the Rule amended.

386. THE CHINESE AND THE AMERICANS

The loss already sustained by the United States on account of the boycott of American goods by the Chinese is estimated at £5,000,000. This has led the American traders and merchants to urge their Government to abolish the anti-Chinese laws\(^1\). To counter this move, the working classes there have held large meetings and passed resolutions demanding that the anti-Chinese laws should not be repealed, whatever the loss they might cause to the traders. Thus, on the one hand, there is a split between the traders and the working classes in America, and on the other, the cablegrams received from China show that the Chinese boycott is gathering strength. This resolution by the Chinese is sought to be applied to all the places where anti-Chinese laws are in force. Moreover, it is also said that the feeling against the whites has become so strong in China that fears are being entertained about the safety of those residing in the interior. It is difficult to say what all this agitation will lead to.

The great advances said to have been made in the nineteenth century are now being put to the test in the twentieth. And it would appear that the present century might witness great upheavals. In all this commotion one thing stands out clear, namely, that where there is unity, there alone is strength, and also victory. This deserves to be carefully borne in mind by every Indian. The Chinese, though weak, appear to have become strong on account of their unity, thereby bearing out the truth of the Gujarati verse, “Thus do ants when united take the life of a fierce snake”.

387. MOVEMENT TO ENCOURAGE INDUSTRY IN NATAL

COMMISSION APPOINTED BY GOVERNOR

The current issue of the Government Gazette announces the appointment of a Commission to recommend measures that should be adopted so that goods consumed in Natal may be manufactured locally and to suggest changes, if any, that should be made in customs levies to encourage the use of goods thus produced. The members of the Commission are: Mr. Moore, the Commissioner; Dr. Gubbins; Mr. Ernest Act; Mr. James King; Mr. George Pane; Mr. Saunders; and Mr. MacAllisker. We believe it would be a very good thing if our merchants gave evidence before this Commission. There are many things that can be produced in Natal and about which experienced merchants can be of help.

388. SCHOOLS IN NATAL

THE REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION

In his Annual Report, Mr. Mudie, Superintendent of Education in Natal, states that sufficient attention is not being paid to the cleanliness of children in the schools for Indians and other Coloured people. This comment by Mr. Mudie deserves careful consideration. Though Mr. Mudie is not one of our well-wishers, we ought to ponder over our shortcomings when he points them out to us. Parents should give enough attention to this matter. Though we may not ourselves observe rules of cleanliness, it is very essential to teach them to our children. If they learn to follow them, much improvement is likely to result in the course of a generation. The following points about children should be borne in mind:

(1) Their teeth should be clean. They should be made to rinse them every morning and again before retiring at night.

(2) Their hair should be clean. It should be cut short and washed and brushed every day. No oil need be used.

(3) Their nails should be clean, clipped from time to time and always washed clean.

(4) Their clothes and shoes, however simple, should be neat and tidy.
(5) Their satchels and books, too, should be clean likewise. They should handle books with clean hands.

We need hardly add that it will accrue to the benefit of the children if these rules are kept in mind and they are made to follow them.

389. INTIMATION TO RESIDENTS OF JOHANNESBURG

We find from the Johannesburg newspapers that the season for epidemic fever has set in there. The Municipality has issued a public notice that those who keep their latrines unclean will be prosecuted. The local rules require that after a person has used a latrine, he should spread dry dust, ashes or some disinfectant powder over the faeces so as to cover them over completely. The latrine should not be wet or smelly. Any default in this respect is punishable with a fine up to £5. This is a very good rule. Ashes or dry dust can be had free of charge. We earnestly appeal to our readers to keep a tin filled with dust in the latrine and cover the faeces with dust or ashes.

390. GEORGE WASHINGTON

THE FIRST PRESIDENT OF AMERICA

Students of English must have read in their text books about one George who one day cut off, for the fun of it, a berry plant that was dear to his father. When he saw the fate of the plant, his father asked the boy about it. George replied: “Father, I wouldn’t tell a lie. I cut the plant.” When the father, who questioned him in an angry tone, heard this straight reply from George who had tears in his eyes, he was pleased and forgave him. George was then a mere child.

The boy, on whose mind devotion to truth was thus firmly imprinted, became at fifty-five the first President of America, which is today the admiration of the world. When he was elected to the presidency, the American people offered to crown him king, but he simply rejected the proposal.

George Washington was born in a wealthy family in the city of Westmoreland in Virginia on February 22, 1732. Little is known about the first sixteen years of his life. Until then he had read little. Later, he was appointed manager of some estate. While on this job, he gave proof of his intelligence and courage so much so that, at twenty-three, he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Virginian army.

At this time North America was under British rule, and quarrels were going on between England and the American people. The people in America did not like certain taxes imposed on them by England. There were other matters also that troubled the Americans. Consequently, the feelings between the people of America and those of England ran high and resulted in war. The English armies were trained and well equipped, while the Americans were simple, rustic folk. They were not conversant with the use of arms. They were not accustomed to working in the disciplined manner of an army and suffering hardships. Washington was called upon to control such men and exact work from them, so that America could become independent and free from the British yoke. The people made him Commander-in-Chief. Washington protested: “I do not deserve this honour, but since you are pleased to appoint me to the post, I accept it in an honorary capacity with a view to serving the people.” This was no mere formal sentiment, for he sincerely believed that he was not sufficiently capable and wrote in similar terms to his personal friends. But once the responsibility was entrusted to him, he braved all dangers, worked day and night, and so impressed the people that they began to act upon his word even before it was spoken and faced any danger they were asked to. The result was that the English armies were defeated, and America became independent. And once the task was accomplished, Washington relinquished his post. But the people had found in him a gem which they would not part with. So, when the American Republic was founded in 1787, George Washington was elected its first President. Even when he assumed this high office, he never thought of using it to gain selfish ends. At the end of a war, it always happens that false patriots come forward to fill their pockets. But all such people had to live in awe of Washington. In 1792-3 Washington was elected President for a second time. During his term of office, he showed the same courage and bravery that he had displayed in war in introducing land reforms, in keeping the people united and in enhancing the country’s reputation. A writer has said: “Washington was first in war, as well as first in peace, and occupied the first place in the hearts of his countrymen!” When he was pressed to accept the Presidency for a third term, he refused the offer and went to live on his estate.

This heroic person died of a sudden illness on December 14, 1799. He was very tall; his height, it is said, was six feet three inches. No one in his time had such massive arms. He was always humble and kind. The high position to which America has risen today is due to his patriotism. The name of Washington will live as long as America lives. May India too produce such heroes.

391. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Johannesburg, September 30, 1905

My dear Chhaganlal,

Anandlal writes that it has been decided to hire an office in Mercury Lane. If this is so, it should not be done. I feel it is essential that I should be consulted before such changes are introduced. There is no harm, I believe, if the new office is located either in Grey Street or in Field Street.

You may place Ramnath under Jayashanker’s charge, that is, of course, if he is willing to go. Jayashanker must now be experiencing difficulty in carrying on his business. Mansukhbhai is likely to come here. I have a long letter from him, he appears to be very anxious to come. He is only awaiting the permission of his parents.

I am enclosing the letter received from Klerksdorp. We have not received any money at all from there. In which issue have you acknowledged that money? I remember, as I write this, that an amount from Krugersdorp was at first acknowledged as a whole but, on my suggestion, contributions were later acknowledged individually. It is possible that some confusion has crept in.

I received your letter in the afternoon.

As regards the office, I still think it is not proper to shift it to Mercury Lane.

Send me any letter that you may have received from Krugersdorp. All the moneys that came to me have been acknowledged.

I am enclosing Sumar Latif’s letter, which you may return to me after writing whatever you like on it.

392. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,

October 2, 1905

DEAR MR. CHHAGANLAL,

Mr. Kitchin writes to me that at one of your meetings it was unanimously decided to dismiss Hemchand. When Hemchand wrote to me he had received notice of dismissal, I immediately assured him that the notice would be withdrawn, and I entered into correspondence with both Messrs Kitchin and Chhaganlal.2 When Hemchand’s services were retained, I had a chat with him and I told him that he would be trained in the Press, and that, so long as he behaved and worked well, he should consider himself a permanent fixture. Hemchand I know well, his people I know better. I consider him to be a good and valuable hand who, if the press had to undergo serious difficulties, would stick to it.

Apart, however, from all that, when I heard of Hemchand’s dismissal, I felt that my pledge was at stake. It was for that reason that I gave him the assurance I have done.

May I now ask you to ratify my assurance and revoke your decision as to his dismissal in the light of what I am now telling you? For the future, I think that in all such matters I would appreciate the Please read the above letter. I have written a similar letter to others. Kitchin has, it seems, made much of the matter. I have sent him too a telegram. If you find it necessary to be present at the meeting, you may do so.

Lachhiram is not getting the paper still. Let me know to which address you send it.

October 5, 1905

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

Your letter to hand. Please send me my office letterheads and blank continuation sheets. Add “Telegrams: ‘Gandhi’ ” to it. I have got the name registered. Get this done immediately.

Regarding a house for Anandlal, I was under the impression that he wanted to take Abhechand’s house. If he wants to build a new house altogether, I would advise against incurring any expenditure for the present. I am writing to him accordingly.

I see no alternative to getting the house colour-washed for Mr. Bean.

Take full work from Hemchand. Please write to me from time to time how he is doing. Changes like recruitment, dismissal, etc., must not be made without my approval. I have already taken action in regard to this. We need not worry if Orchard and Sam are angry.

Mansukhlal will come here merely for a change for the present. If he comes at all, I shall have him with me for some time to give him bath [treatment], etc. He will then go and stay there for some time.

Kalabhai has written to me saying that he will give £3 every month. Write in the paper about Vasant Pandit. We do not know what is happening.

Why do you say the £20 given to Anandlal is a waste of money? If it was so, you should have told Anandlal. From your last letter I understand that Anandlal wanted you to give him £30 for making purchases in town and that he had given up the idea of buying from Tongaat.

396. COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN INDIA

Whilst every attempt is being made in South Africa to discourage Indian education, signs are not wanting to show that in India itself the desire for education has taken deep root in the hearts of the people, and that, before many years are out, we may even find compulsory education adopted in the advanced parts of India. Macaulay penned the famous Education Minute in 1836. It was then that Indian education received its real impetus, and yet “in the census of 1901, it was found that only one in ten of the female population were literate”. Mr. H. D. Kantavala, the Director of Public Instruction in the State of Baroda, contributes a very valuable paper to East and West for August. According to our authority, the number of students of all grades in 1901 was 3,268,726, and the expenditure incurred on the education of these students was less than two crores of rupees, that is, one-and-a-third million pounds. Of this amount, a little over one-fourth was spent on primary education. The expenditure on education represents 1.5 per cent. of the total revenue of Government. It is admitted that primary education has not received sufficient attention in India, and the main reason is that the Government of India has found it impossible to spend more owing to lack of funds. We will not at present go into the question of why money has not been available for further development of education, but we may say that the matter no longer remains absolutely in the hands of the Government.

Those who have appreciated the sweets of education are eager that their less fortunate brethren should have a share. The Corporation of Bombay has lately passed a resolution approving of the system of compulsory education. His Highness the Maharaja Gaekwar has taken a practical step, and it is the experiment that is now being tried in Baroda in compulsory education that Mr. Kantavala has largely dealt with in his paper. It was in 1892 that His Highness expressed his intention to introduce compulsory education in some portions of his territories and Mr. Kantavala was entrusted with this responsibility. He laid down the following principles for his own guidance.

1 Thomas Babington Macaulay, (1800-59 President of the General Committee of Public Instruction and Law Member of the Executive Council of the Governor-General, wrote his Minute on February 2, 1835 in favour of introducing English education in India. Till this issue was decided as between opposite schools of thought, the Government could not launch a unified scheme of education in India.

1. Before applying the compulsory law to a place, the Government should provide it with means of education.
2. The law of compulsion should be made applicable to both sexes.
3. The age of compulsion should be from seven to twelve in the case of boys, and seven to ten in the case of girls.
4. The course of study should be elementary.
5. Compulsory attendance should not exceed 100 days in the year.
6. The defaulters should not be dealt with criminally but only civilly, and be subject to a fine recoverable only by a civil process.

With characteristic energy, and undaunted by serious difficulties of a complex nature, Mr. Kantavala selected a group of ten villages, the most backward in the State (as it was the Gaekwar's intention to see the working of the system at its worst), and enforced the principles above laid down. Several interviews which the Director of Education had with headmen, how he lived down all opposition, how he brought round to his way of thinking the recalcitrant spirits, are all very interesting incidents. We would, however, state the result only in the writer's own language:

It was thus that I was able to introduce compulsory education in the most backward part of the Baroda State within a very short time. I had to pay special attention for months in order to work out the scheme successfully. By the end of the year, almost all children within the age of compulsion, that is, over 99 per cent. entered school, a result which, even in England and other advanced countries, is not achieved. The successful working of the measure induced His Highness to extend compulsory education by taking up fresh groups of ten villages at a time. Compulsory education in the Amreli Taluka has stood the test of more than a dozen years, showing always that nearly cent. per cent. of the children attend the school, and that people have never raised any complaint of a serious nature against it. His Highness has recently sanctioned a scheme for applying to two parts of his territories the law of compulsory education to those children whose parents have a certain annual income.
This is a remarkable achievement, and yet it is only a little germ, when we consider the illiterate millions in India. No one can foretell to what stature the germ will grow in course of time. The experiment is not without its lesson to us in South Africa. It is but right that we should expect the different governments to provide suitable education for Indian children. It is the duty of those Indians who are better situated and who see the advantages of education to see that, if the governments in South Africa will not help them, they themselves make suitable provision for the education of Indian children.

397. THE G. O. M. OF INDIA

Our Indian exchanges bring news with reference to the meetings held to commemorate the eighty-first birthday of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, the Grand Old Man of India, on the 4th September last. Public meetings were held all over India. The services rendered by Mr. Naoroji to India, in our humble opinion, are far greater than the services rendered by England’s Grand Old Man to England. Mr. Naoroji’s work has been pioneer work, and when he commenced it, few indeed were his helpers. The self-sacrificing devotion with which he has pushed forward the cause of India, in season and out of season, has hardly any parallel in India; and it is no wonder that he stands unequalled by any one in the estimation of millions of his countrymen. The spectacle of an old man of over eighty years wooing a British constituency, not for the sake of glory or honours, but in order that he may serve India the more, is most pathetic and magnificent. If the electors of North Lambeth send Mr. Naoroji to the new Parliament, they will have done themselves a unique honour. We echo the prayers that were offered by the millions in India for long life and health to Mr. Naoroji.

398. THE INSULT TO SIR MANCHERJI

It is with great regret that we notice the insult that has been offered to Sir Mancherji Bhownaggree at Calcutta recently. Because he differed from the [common] opinion on the Partition of Bengal, he was burnt in effigy on College Square. Sir Mancherji may surely hold his own opinion, even though it is seldom allowed nowadays to individual members of that temple of freedom—the British House of Commons. To offer such flagrant insult to a member of that assembly, who has proved his zeal in the cause of India, is unwise; nay, it is stupid. Indians may not always see eye to eye with Sir Mancherji, but they cannot fail to acknowledge that he is ever loyal to his native India and that he has always her interests at heart. Indians in South Africa will especially feel this insult; for he has proved himself a true friend to the unrepresented thousands here. Indians will do very wrong to value a man according to the power of his invective and the bitterness of his denunciation of Britain’s perfidy. The more moderate opinions of a man like Sir Mancherji have far greater weight than the extravagances of hot-headed Radicals. It is the conviction of calm reasoning alone that will get the full measure of justice for India; and for this reason Sir Mancherji is, of all men, the least deserving of the ingratitude of his fellow-countrymen.

399. THE BOYCOTT

From cables and Indian papers recently to hand, it is evident that the boycott movement in Bengal is not destined to fizzle out in an inglorious fashion. Though there appears to be a deal of mob-law in preventing persons from buying British goods, the movement is so general as to show that it results from deep feeling on the part of the people. Whatever may be the result of the present agitation against the Partition, the effect of the boycott will be productive of only good to India. It has resulted in a wonderful stimulation of native industries which, we trust, will grow more and more. It is a result unlooked for, but not the less eminently desirable. The great need of India is that national characteristics should be fostered and improved. If the resolve to use only Indian goods, so far as possible, be maintained, it will be no small help in developing the national spirit.

400. DR. BARNARDO

The news of Dr. Barnardo’s death last month has been cabled throughout the world. Our readers must be eager to know who this Dr. Barnardo was. We are, therefore, giving this time in these columns an account of the worthy doctor’s life.

Dr. Barnardo was regarded as the father of orphans and waifs. In his early years the doctor felt deeply depressed whenever he happened to see an orphan. But he had then no means of helping them. Although he was poor, the idea occurred to him that he should undertake to bring up orphans and thus earn his own livelihood.

As the Gujarati saying, ‘giving a needle in charity after stealing an anvil’, goes, we want first to earn plenty of money and then spend it on some good cause. The entire lives of many are spent in the process of amassing wealth. Some others forget their original resolution when they have earned enough, yet others, when they have amassed money, do not know how to use it properly, waste it on all sorts of things and feel satisfied that they have spent it well. Never having been benevolent, they cannot use the money properly.

The intelligent Dr. Barnardo had seen all this. So he told himself: “My heart is pure; those who trust me and give me money will also realise that I too must support myself with it. At the same time, if I undertake to shelter and bring up orphans, I shall earn their blessings and the people, too, will see that I have no intention of making money for myself.” With these thoughts in his mind, the brave doctor plunged into the work, and opened the first Home for orphan-waifs at Steveny-Causeway in London. People at first opposed him, many saying that he had only found a fine way of making money by deceiving the public. Dr. Barnardo, however, was not to be discouraged. He collected money from those who trusted him. By and by, more and more children began to flock to his Home. Instead of becoming vagabonds, they became studious, honest and industrious and secured employment. All the children thus brought up served as good publicity for Dr. Barnardo’s Home. They saw that Dr. Barnardo looked after them better than their own parents would have done. The doctor founded more such Homes, till at last he established a colony. for orphans in a wood, six miles away from London. There he put up fine buildings, churches, etc., and the place has now become so famous that many people visit it and feel they are on a pilgrimage; and in course of time similar homes have been founded in many parts of the world. Dr. Barnardo himself brought up in this way during his lifetime 55,000 homeless children. There were some wicked parents who took unfair advantage of the facility provided by the doctor. They quietly left their children at night in Dr. Barnardo’s backyard and went away. Undaunted, the doctor brought them up with care and returned them to their parents when they claimed them. Every year, in the big Albert Hall in London, a fair is held in which the children from these Homes take part and thousands of people pay to visit it. It has come to be known after the doctor’s death that he had insured his life for £70,000. He has enjoined in his will that all this money should be spent on the maintenance of the Homes founded by him.

Such was this great man, Dr. Barnardo. He was pious and very kind. Though acts like insuring one’s life, etc., do not accord well with our idea of religion, it was according to Western practice wise on the part of the doctor to have done what he did.

Dr. Barnardo has provided us, during the present age, a very good example of what a poor man could accomplish by dint of enthusiasm and kindness.

401. AN. INDIAN POET

By his English translations of the poems of Hali, Mr. Ward has made the poet widely known. It is said that there is no other poet who can equal him. His full name is Maulvi Sayed Altaf Hussain Ansari. He was born in Panipat, near Delhi. Most of his poems are in Urdu, though he has written quite a lot in Persian also. The poem he wrote on the occasion of the Jubilee of 1887 was so excellent that it resounded throughout North India. His works do not concern themselves with the pleasures of life, but with such useful themes as the duty of Muslims in the present age, the way both Hindus and Muslims should acquit themselves, and the way to know God. Sheth Abdul Kadar of Lahore tells us how during their school days he and his mates used to read Hali’s poems, how they read them also when they were grown up, and sang them at community gatherings. He further tells us that they listen to them even now at their *anjumans*¹, and seldom feel tired of reading and hearing them again and again. He has written in very eloquent language of the life of the great poet Sheikh Saadi². Writing about the work of the poet Hali, Prof. Morrison says: “What this poor poet has done unaided for the community far surpasses what the wealthy Muslims have done with their money.” In appreciation of the services rendered by the poet to the community, the Government have conferred on him the title of Shams-ul-Ulema. We are sorry we do not have with us his Urdu poems, but we recommend that our readers obtain and read them.

1The Golden Jubilee of Queen Victoria’s reign

402. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,

October 7, 1905

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

Your letter to hand. It is good that you have shifted the office. Please go on appealing repeatedly to maintain cleanliness in regard to plague. Let me know where Hemchand stays. There seems to be some misunderstanding between us regarding him. But I consider it my fault because I gave you no details. You will learn more from my letter to West. Let me know if Hemchand gives you complete satisfaction in his work. Where is Ramnath? Have you entrusted him to Jayashanker or not? Jayashanker is very short of men. Send the Opinion to the enclosed address. I shall collect the subscription from here. Debit it to my account.

Will not the shifting of the office to Mercury Lane affect our Indian clientele? Did Sheth Abdul Cadir say anything? Why did you not find a place for the office in Field Street or Grey Street?

I am sending the Gujarati material today. I shall send more tomorrow.

Blessings from

403. ADDRESS TO LORD SELBORNE¹

[POTCHEFSTROOM, Before October 9, 1905]

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY

We, the undersigned, representing British Indians residing in Potchefstroom, hereby extend to Your Excellency a hearty and loyal welcome to this historic city.

We venture to hope that you will carry with you pleasant recollections of your stay among the people of Potchefstroom.

The difficulties that we labour under in Potchefstroom are common to British Indians all over the Transvaal. A charge has been laid against British Indians in Potchefstroom as to their mode of life and the manner in which their business premises are kept. We would venture respectfully to invite Your Excellency’s inspection of the premises and form your own conclusions about them. We are most anxious, so far as it is possible, to conform to local customs, and to conciliate popular sentiment. All we ask for is freedom of locomotion, trade, residence, and ownership of property under such general sanitary and other regular general regulations as may be necessary without introducing class legislation.

We approach Your Excellency with all confidence that we will receive justice at your hands.

We beg you to convey sentiments of our attachment to Their Most Gracious Majesties the King-Emperor and the Queen-Empress.

S. D. ROBERT,
PRESIDENT,
E. H. GETTA,
E. M. PATEL,
M. E. NABABHAY,
HAJEE OMAR,
A. E. GOGAT,
A. M. CASSIM,

¹ The address was presented on behalf of the Potchefstroom Indian Association. Similar addresses were presented at Rustenburg, Klerksdorp and Krugersdorp. Vide “Lord Selborne on Trek”, Indian Opinion, 14-10-1905.

² By the Potchefstroom Vigilants Association

³ This is evidently a slip and should read: “We would venture respectfully to invite Your Excellency to have an inspection of the premises and form your own conclusions about them.”
MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY.

Did we not know that what has been called the anti-Asiatic Vigilance Society is to make representations to Your Excellency with reference to the British Indians, so far as regards Potchefstroom, we would not have given any trouble whatsoever to Your Excellency, especially as we are aware that Your Excellency is to meet very shortly a deputation of the British Indian Association at Johannesburg.

Mr. Loveday it was who stated that Potchefstroom was being inundated with indentured Indians from Natal. To this we beg to give an emphatic contradiction. Some of us know the Natal laws, and we know that it is next to impossible for an indentured Indian to escape. In any case not a single instance has been brought forward to prove the statement above referred to.

Another statement was made by the Mayor of Johannesburg when he was here. He is reported to have said that, whereas there were nineteen licences issued to Asiatics before the war, now there were ninety-six traders’ licences and thirty-seven hawkers’ licences. This statement, so far as traders are concerned, is not true. We supplied before the war a list of British Indian traders in the town of Potchefstroom to the British Agent, and there were twenty-two British Indian stores in the town of Potchefstroom, as distinguished from the district. We have a true copy of the list that was sent to the British Agent, and we are to-day in a position, not only to give the names, but to locate each of the store-keepers. Seeing that Mr. Goch mentions ninety-six traders’ licences in connection with the nineteen before the war, we take it that he refers to ninety-six traders’ licences for the town of Potchefstroom. If so, this is grossly untrue. There are only twenty-four British Indian stores in this town at the present day. We state this with a full sense of responsibility and knowledge, and we challenge our detractors to prove the contrary.

A third statement that has been made against us in Potchefstroom is with reference to the so-called insanitary condition of our dwellings and shops. These, indeed, speak for themselves, but when the charge was made, we took the opportunity of showing our places to the District Surgeon of Potchefstroom, and the following is the report that he gave:

In going through the various premises, I am pleased to say I was greatly impressed with the general condition of each place I visited, both internally as well as externally. Taking all things into consideration, the backyards are all perfectly clean and sanitary. I saw no accumulation of rubbish, this I understand being carried away daily by the contractor. The bucket system is enforced as in other parts of the town, which is also attended to by the Sanitary Department, and I can find no fault from what I saw. There appears to me to be no overcrowding as regards sleeping accommodation. At the back of each business premises, in addition, I noticed a kind of mess room capable of seating about five to eight persons, and each has its own kitchen; these are also well kept.

We mention these things to show under what disadvantages we have to labour, and what misrepresentations are made against us. We have no hesitation in saying that the whole of the anti-Asiatic agitation is due to trade jealousy. Nothing can be further from our wish than to enter into an unfair competition with the white store-keepers.

Much has been said against our mode of life. We are proud to think that we are sober and simple in our habits, and if thereby we have an advantage over the rival white traders, we hardly think that it should be brought up against us in order to traduce and degrade us. It is totally forgotten, in this connection, by those who denounce us, that the white traders have other advantages which we cannot dream of having, namely, their European connection, their knowledge of the English language, and their better organising powers. Moreover, we are able to carry on our trade only because of the goodwill of the poor whites, and our ability to please the poorest class of customers; also, we have the support of wholesale European houses. It has been said that our competition resulted in many European shops being closed. We deny this. In the first instance, some of the shops that have been closed were not shops with which we could possibly enter into competition, for instance, hairdressers and others. Some general goods stores have undoubtedly closed, but to connect their closing with Asiatic competition would be [as] unfair as to connect the closing of several Asiatic shops with European competition in this town. There is trade depression all over South Africa, and it has only resulted in getting rid of overtrading that was indulged in soon after the war, based, as it was, on high expectations which have never been fulfilled.

May we also, in this connection, state that much of the agitation against us is kept up not by bona-fide British subjects but by aliens who can have very little indeed to complain of against us. The policy adopted to drive us out of the township is a policy of irritation and insults which, though petty in themselves, are galling enough to be very much felt by us.

Without the slightest occasion, we are now served at special counters in the Post Office. We are debarred from having a breath of fresh air in a park which is called a “public” park, and which is kept up from rates which we are called upon to pay in common with other citizens. We mention these instances to draw Your Excellency’s attention to the awkward position in which we are placed without any fault of ours. No opportunity is missed of degrading us and humiliating us. We do not wish to burden Your Excellency with such other instances. We have a right, we submit, to expect the British Government to protect us from such humiliation, and insure for us that freedom to which, as loyal British subjects, we are entitled wherever the Union Jack flies.

We beg to thank Your Excellency for giving us a patient hearing, and in conclusion hope that, as a result of Your Excellency’s visit to this township, there will be an amelioration in our condition.

405. LORD SELBORNE AND INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL

His Excellency the High Commissioner has made, during his tour in the Transvaal, two very important speeches on the status of the British Indians in that Colony. His speech at Potchefstroom, which will be found in another column, is the more important. Lord Selborne has shown therein that, during his short stay, he has studied the question. He holds the honour of the Government very dear to him, and recognises the fact that there were promises made to British Indians before the war which have to be carried out. His Lordship, weare further glad to notice, interprets the Indians’ Proclamation\(^1\) as an assurance of the rights of Indians as full British subjects all the world over. For all this, and a great deal more, we are truly thankful to His Excellency. When there is such an evident desire to hold the scales evenly between conflicting interests, there is every ground for hope that, in the near future, a solution will be found for this difficult problem which will be generally accepted.

One thing, however, that Lord Selborne is reported to have promised, fills us with disquiet. These are the reported words:

No Indians who were not here before the war will be admitted into the country till you have your own parliament, and by your own representatives you can express your own opinion. I give you that assurance as your Governor and your High Commissioner.

We are sure that His Excellency could not have, at the time of making the promise, measured the full consequence of its operation. His Excellency is anxious to draw the distinction between Indians already settled in the country and those who may come hereafter. He impressed upon his audience the necessity of giving fair treatment to the old Indian settlers. Now the fact that Indian merchants must draw upon India for confidential clerks, managers, and other trustworthy servants has only to be mentioned to convey conviction. It is well-nigh impossible for them to continue to do business with any degree of safety without such facilities. Are we, then, to understand that, unless the incoming Transvaal Parliament chooses to do otherwise, Indian businesses are to be starved into surrender for want of reliable men?

His Excellency says again that it is not practical statesmanship to allow Indians to compete with white men without restriction. We have often discussed this proposition in these columns, and we think we have shown how hollow it is. For that which is true in it has been admitted by the Indians, and that which is not true arises only from pure trade jealousy. The soundness of the Indian position must be apparent to any but the most prejudiced man, when it is explained that, with proper safeguards, new Indian licences may be granted only at the option of the local boards, which consist largely of traders. But the anti-Asiatic agitators, who are bent on driving every Indian out of the Colony, will not be satisfied until they succeed in making his life totally unbearable. It is against attempts such as these that the Indians have a right to expect Lord Selborne to protect them.

\(^1\)The Queen’s Proclamation of 1858
406. THE VISIT OF LORD SELBORNE

Today Lord Selborne arrives in Durban, having spent most of the week in Natal. In common with the rest of the community, we most heartily give our humble Welcome. Lord Selborne has been in South Africa only a short while, but already he has gained the confidence of all sections of the people that he will do his duty to everyone without Ear or favour. In many ways, His Excellency will find Natal different from the sister-Colonies. Natal presents some interesting problems for study, in that it has a large Native population with a comparatively small white population, which is dependent for the chief industries under As control upon a large indentured Indian population. The presence of the latter has naturally attracted to the Colony Indians of the trading class. We trust that, during his short stay, Hi Excellency be able to give stay of hi valuable time to a study of the British Indians in Natal who form by common consent one of the most loyal and law-abiding sections of Hi Majesty’s subjects. And we hope with the rest of the community that His Excellency and family will enjoy their visit to the Garden Colony and carry with them pleasant recollections.

407. THE BUBONIC PLAGUE

Plague has come to stay. It is the annual messenger which, year after year, comes as a warning against darkness, filth and overcrowding. Wherever it has once appeared, it has hitherto unfailingly reappeared with more or less regularity. News has arrived that it has travelled as far as Chinde. From there to Durban is not a far cry. It, therefore, behoves every good citizen to take the necessary precautions to ward off the Send. There should be no disguising of the fact that Indians are more susceptible to the ravages of plague than other communities, even as are the whites more liable to catch typhoid fever than the Indians. The latter, therefore, have to be doubly careful. All the surroundings of dwelling-houses and business premises should be kept perfectly clean. People should get as much light, sun and air as possible, and all suspected cases should be promptly reported to the authorities. These few simple precautions would be far more effective than a large expenditure, or, rather, waste of money, after the disease has once made its appearance. Leaders of the Indian community have in this respect a clear duty to perform. Every educated Indian has a unique privilege: he can become a missionary in hygiene and sanitation.

408. THE SALT TAX

A rumour is afloat that, to commemorate the visit of the Prince of Wales to India next November as well as to pacify the Indian people, the salt tax is entirely to be abolished. Every Indian sincerely hopes that this is well founded and will prove true.

409. SIR HENRY LAWRENCE

This great man was born in Ceylon on June 28, 1806. As he was born in the city of Matara¹, in jest, his mother called him “the Jewel of Matara”, and he proved to be a real jewel indeed. In 1823 he went to Calcutta, where he got employment in the Bengal Artillery. The first responsible work entrusted to him was during the First Burmese War². While discharging his duty during that war, he fell ill and had to go to England where, instead of passing his time in sports and amusements, he devoted it to study. He returned to India in 1830, and rejoined his battalion. He then studied Hindustani and Persian. He spent all his free time in solitude. One of his reasons for doing so was that he wanted to save as much money as possible for his mother. In the meanwhile, he was appointed to a very important and responsible post, where he fully utilized the knowledge he had acquired during his illness in England. The work entrusted to him was that of carrying out a survey in the North-West Province for the purpose of levying taxes from the people there. The real merits of Lawrence came to be known then. Though a soldier, he had a very tender and merciful heart. The survey work brought him into close contact with the poor, and this enabled him to understand the feelings and the manners and customs of the people. He became one of them and mixed freely with them. As he was very hard-working and persevering, the idlers under him hated him. He did not hesitate to use compulsion against shirkers. Once it happened that one of the survey officers committed a blunder, to rectify which Lawrence ordered him to visit the place again. As the place was ten miles away, the surveyor hesitated to go. He was thereupon sent there in a litter. But despite this the man obstinately refused to work. So Lawrence made him sit on a mango tree, and posted two guards below with drawn swords. When the surveyor felt very thirsty and hungry, he begged pardon of Lawrence, agreed to do the work, and sought his permission to get down. After this the man shed this obstinate habit and began to do very good work under Lawrence.

We have heard that in the days of old, a brother was often ready to die for a brother, a friend for a friend, a mother for a son, sons for parents and a wife for her husband. But Lawrence acted in this manner in modern times. His elder brother had been taken prisoner in the Afghan War, and was released on parole for a few days by the Pathan Chief. He was bound to return after the period of parole was over. Considering that his brother’s services were more useful, Lawrence offered to take his place in the prison. Although the brother refused to agree to the proposal, Lawrence as good as did it.

While Lawrence was serving as ambassador in Nepal, his kind-hearted wife spent her days in good works. At that time the two together erected, at their own expense, a big building at the foot of the Himalayas for bringing up and educating the sons of European soldiers. Similar institutions have since been built all over India, and all of them have been called Lawrence Asylums. In the Sikh War of 1846 Lawrence showed great valour. He readily complied with the orders to join active service within twenty-four hours, leaving his ailing wife behind. After the War, he did very good work as Her Majesty’s representative in Lahore, for which knighthood was conferred upon him. When in 1849 it was proposed to annex the Punjab, Lawrence alone opposed it and stood up to a Governor-General of the calibre of Lord Dalhousie. Though he did not succeed, the Governor-General had so much confidence in him that he entrusted the main responsibility for work in the Punjab to him. For he had earlier come into very close contact with the Sikhs who greatly loved and admired him. It is because of this that the Punjab was pacified.

But the greatest service rendered by Lawrence was during the Mutiny of 1857. By that time his health had broken down and he had already been sanctioned leave. But on the outbreak of the Mutiny, he at once proceeded to Lucknow instead of availing himself of the sanctioned leave. 927 Europeans and 765 Indian sepoys were involved in the Siege of Lucknow. Lawrence worked day and night and exacted work from the besieged men also. He sat on in his barracks, indifferent to cannon fire. On July 2, 1857, he was struck by a splinter from a cannon shot. The doctors told him that the wound was fatal and that he would not live more than forty-eight hours. In spite of the unbearable pain, he kept on giving orders. He breathed his last on July 4, praying: “Oh God! keep my heart pure. Thou alone art great. This world of Thine will certainly be pure some day. I am but a child, but it is through Thy strength that I can become strong. Always teach me meekness, justice, good-will and peace. I seek not the thoughts of men. Thou art my Judge; do Thou teach me Thy thoughts, for I fear Thee.” He loved Indians greatly. He condemned the atrocities that were perpetrated at the time of the Mutiny and believed that every Englishman was a trustee for India. As trustees, the English were not to loot India, but to make the people prosperous, to teach them self-government and to make over the country to the Indian people in a prosperous state. The English people have progressed because men like Lawrence are born amongst them.

\textbf{411. ANOTHER LICENSING CASE}

Mr. Dada Osman\(^2\), who has been in Natal for the last 15 years or more, is a landed proprietor who settled in Vryheid as a general merchant during the time of the Republican Government. He was allowed to trade in Vryheid unfettered up to the outbreak of hostilities, and now, after a single-handed struggle against the British power for over three years, finds himself face to face with ruin. And Dada Osman is a British subject! If a foreigner were to ask why a British subject should have British machinery put into operation against him in order to deprive him of his civic rights, he not being a criminal, the answer would be—such is the British Constitution. If it is very often strong to protect, it is also often powerless to defend against a palpable injustice. It is unbelievable that a man who has been lawfully trading for a long time should be deprived of the right of continuing his trade at the bidding of half-a-dozen of his competitors, who, being too cowardly to meet him in open competition, take advantage of temporary power placed in their hands to traduce their rival and ruin him. Yet that is what has happened in the present case. The Dealers’ Licenses Act of Natal, to which copious reference has been made in these columns,\(^3\) places at the mercy of Local Boards,

THE EVILS OF SMOKING

The Government of South Australia has noticed that smoking, besides consuming a lot of money, badly undermines the health of the people. More harm is done by cigarettes than by cigars, for the former, being smaller and cheaper, are consumed in excess. The Government therefore propose to introduce a Bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

The evil habit of smoking cigarettes has nowadays become very widespread among us, both young and old. This is sheer imitation of the English. Formerly, people were no doubt in the habit of smoking bidis or country cigarettes, but they used to keep it within limits. They felt ashamed of smoking any and everywhere. They did it at specific times and that, too, in privacy. It was considered lack of decency to smoke publicly in the streets at all hours of the day, and people rarely smoked outside their homes. Hence the saying about tobacco, that it spoils “a corner [in the house] of one who chews it, the whole house of one who smokes it, and the clothes of one who sniffs it”. But the English today never mind smoking anywhere and everywhere, and we

In Mr. Dada Osman’s case, there is not a shred of justification for the action of the Vryheid Board. He was the only Indian merchant in that township. His was not an application for a new licence. His business premises were kept in an exceptionally satisfactory condition. But because he wears a brown skin, the white members of the Board have closed his store without compensation, and, moreover, have rejected his solicitors’ application for permission to keep his store open whilst he is trying to secure relief from a higher power. This is not a case of the Vryheid Local Board vs. Dada Osman. It is a case of white British subjects and white foreigners against the British Indian community. It is in that light that every Indian merchant has to look at the case; and it is in the same light that Mr. Lyttelton will have to examine it.

413. RAJA SIR T. MADHAV RAO

Sir T. Madhav Rao was born in 1828 in the city of Kumbakonam. His father, Shri R. Langa Rao, had been the Dewan of Travancore, and his uncle, Rai R. Venkat Rao, had been the Dewan as well as Revenue Commissioner of Travancore. Sir Madhav Rao had spent his childhood and received his education in Madras. He studied at Presidency College [Madras] under Mr. Powell. Madhav Rao was a hard-working student, and was proficient in Mathematics and Science. He had learnt astronomy while sitting on the stairs of Mr. Powell’s house, and he made a microscope and a telescope from bamboo with his own hands.

Unwilling to part with such an intelligent student, Mr. Powell appointed him Professor of Mathematics and Physics under himself. Later, Madhav Rao got a good post in the office of the Accountant-General, and after some time, on being invited to work as a tutor to the princes of Travancore, he accepted the offer. This was how he entered, for the first time, the service of a Native State. The princes in his charge became good students, and their career as rulers also proved to be very successful. After working as a tutor for four years, he was given the responsible post of an assistant to the Dewan. He was later appointed Deputy Dewan, in which post he earned a good name. The State had been in a very bad condition. The late Mr. J. Bruce Norton has said of him: “He was a great scholar and a political administrator. In the short space of a year he established peace in the land. To everyone he meted out justice without fear or favour. He greatly reduced theft, treachery and deceit.”

The Dewan of Travancore was a very weak man, and the Maharaja too was ill-informed. He did not know how the administration was going on, and the officers of the State too had become debased and corrupt. Their salary, moreover, was very low and sometimes fell into arrears for months. The loan advanced by the British Government had not yet been repaid, and the treasury was...

empty. The taxes being heavy, trade was in a very bad state and the people were reduced to utter poverty. This caught the attention of Lord Dalhousie\(^1\) who resolved to take over the administration of the State on behalf of the British Government and proceeded to Octacamund with a view to annexing the State to Madras Presidency. At this time, the Maharaja appointed Madhav Rao to the post of Dewan and he successfully pleaded with the British Government to give him seven years’ time to improve the State administration. In this way, at the early age of 30, by dint of personal effort and honesty, Madhav Rao attained a distinguished position. The notable event of his career as Dewan pertained to the State revenues. The State finances were in a bad way when he took charge as Dewan. He abolished the excessive land revenue and other taxes imposed in the past as they were harmful to the prosperity of the people. He also abolished the system of monopoly for revenue collection. He met the deficit in the annual revenues by levying an export duty of 15 per cent. on all goods. As the State went on prospering, he gradually reduced the rate of this duty and brought it down to 5 per cent. Next he abolished the monopoly in tobacco also and permitted State subjects to buy it directly from outside, replacing the former system of Government first buying it at its own risk from the contractors and then selling it to the people. The tariff burden being thus made light, imports received much encouragement. He then removed many other petty taxes and cesses as they did not yield much revenue and were also harmful to the prosperity of the merchants. He reduced, at one stroke, the very heavy land tax in a certain village. In 1865, on behalf of Travancore, he entered into a trade agreement with the British Government and the Government of Cochin, as a result of which the customs duty on goods imported from British Indian and Cochin territories was abolished for the most part.

In appreciation of his able administration the British Government conferred upon him the title of K.C.S.I. When this title was ceremoniously conferred upon him before a large gathering in Madras, Lord Napier spoke highly of him. In 1872, Madhav Rao resigned his post. During his tenure he established an orderly government in place of misrule, and thereby ensured security of life and property for the subjects. He constructed huge and massive buildings, thus giving encouragement to the artisans. He had many works of public utility executed and promoted agriculture by reducing land revenue. But for Madhav Rao, the State of Travancore would have been lost to the Maharaja. Madhav Rao did for Travancore what Pericles did for Athens and Oliver Cromwell for England. He was offered a seat in the Imperial Legislative Council, but did not accept it.

A little later Maharaja Tukojirao Holkar of Indore requested the British Government to give him an able Dewan. When the Government offered the services of Madhav Rao, the Maharaja accepted them for a period of two years. The most noteworthy work he did there was the formulation of the Indore Penal Code. During the two years he held office, he did many good things for the people and raised the State to prosperity.

About this time Malhar Rao Gaekwar of Baroda had been deposed for maladministration of the State, and the offer was made to Madhav Rao of the post of Administrator of the State, which he accepted. Baroda was then in a very perilous condition. Treachery, murder and rioting were rampant everywhere. There was discord among the people, life and property were unsafe, and a strong man was needed to restore peace and order. The monopoly of collecting State revenues was vested in big Sardars. Money-lenders tyrannized over the people with the aid of the police. The State was brimming over with intrigue and conspiracy, and there was no end of lawlessness. But Sir Madhav Rao was not discouraged. He conducted the administration ably. Troublesome intriguers were banished from the State. The Sardars and the Sahukars were deprived of their monopolies, and the State revenue was placed on a sound footing. The land revenue sepoys were withdrawn and assigned civil duties. The courts of law were reorganised to ensure justice. Libraries were opened. Efficient men were called in from Bombay and Madras and the standards of the services raised. The narrow lanes in Baroda were demolished and burnt down so that beautiful buildings could take their place. Gardens were laid out and a museum was constructed. In this way, he went on for years without any respite, introducing one reform after another. In 1882 the British Government conferred upon him the title of Raja. In appreciation of his services the Maharaja Gaekwar gave him a gift of three lakhs of rupees. From then on he lived in retirement as a private citizen. Even during his retirement he did public work whenever the occasion demanded. He devoted a great deal of attention to education and pleaded for women’s education. He was in correspondence with Prince Bismarck of Germany. His career was considered illustrious not only in India, but in Europe also. India has known few such administrators. This illustrious son of India breathed his last on April 4, 1891, at the age of 62.

Professor Parmanand, M.A., etc.

Johannesburg

Dear Sir,

We, the undersigned, on behalf of the Reception Committee, hereby extend to you a hearty welcome to Johannesburg.

You, Sir, belong to a band of self-sacrificing workers whom the Arya Samaj has given to India. You, in common with your fellow-workers, have given your lifetime to the cause of Religion and Education. We, therefore, feel honoured in honouring you.

We hope that your brief visit to South Africa will result in the Arya Samaj deciding to send some self-sacrificing educationists to work among the Indians in South Africa. Proper education is one of the greatest wants of the Indian community in South Africa.

We hope that you will enjoy your stay among us and carry with you pleasant recollections.

We remain, dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,

415. HISTORY OF THE PLAGUE IN JOHANNESBURG

The long-promised report of the bubonic plague that broke out in Johannesburg last year is now published. It is a bulky volume covering one hundred and three pages, and containing many charts giving a graphic report of the epidemic. Dr. Pakes, the author of the report has given an immense amount of labour to the work, and has presented to the public a very learned disquisition. The most interesting part of the report must necessarily be the origin of the plague, and while, if the premises laid down by Dr. Pakes were correct, the conclusions drawn by him would be justified we fear that many of his most important premises are totally incorrect.

It is, perhaps, extremely unfortunate that a proper judicial inquiry was not made as to the origin of the plague before so much valuable time and money were spent over the report. In giving the startling reason that Dr. Pakes has done, he has run counter to the findings of the Vienna Commission, as also the Commission that was appointed by the Natal Government when the plague first broke out in Natal as also, indeed, to the cablegram that was received by the late Mr. Escombe from the Indian Government. Dr. Pakes contends that “the origin of the first cases was the plague-infected rice imported from Bombay”. The authorities we have just quoted came to the conclusion that rice was not a carrier of plague infection. Amongst the premises that have led Dr. Pakes to his conclusion are that the first cases were those of store-keepers, that the Indian store-keepers were importing rice from Bombay in December 1903, that they said very definitely “this rice contained rat-droppings”, and that no special precautions were taken at Bombay to prevent the export of probably and possibly infected rice.

Now, unfortunately for Dr. Pakes’ theory, all these premises are without foundation. The very first mistake that has been committed in drawing up the report is to accept only the official date of the outbreak, and to ignore the whole of the previously known history. It was then contended, indeed proved beyond doubt, that plague had existed in Johannesburg before the 18th March. In spite of the correspondence that was brought to the notice of the plague authorities in their official capacity, Dr. Pakes has seen fit to ignore the whole of it in his report. He has also ignored the case of the late Dr. Marais, which points unmistakably to the existence of the plague long before he himself succumbed to it. The theory, therefore, that the plague started with store-keepers falls to the ground. Nay, more, the two names given by Dr. Pakes as those of store-keepers were not those of store-keepers at all, as we happen to know. The first cases, taking the outbreak as from the 18th March, were amongst the labourers who came from the mines.

We should very much like to know where the information, that rice was being imported from Bombay, comes from. As a rule, rice is not imported from Bombay but from Calcutta, and, even when it does come from Bombay, the bags are made up in Calcutta. It is a serious reflection upon the Indian Government to state that no special precautions are taken at Bombay to prevent the export of probably and possibly infected rice. Those who know anything of Indian travelling know that precautions taken at Bombay are very severe. Therefore, all the material premises leading to the conclusion that Dr. Pakes has arrived at are not, in our opinion, capable of being proved. How is it, again, that Johannesburg had remained free from the plague in spite of rice having been imported by Indians before also? For it is not to be contended that rice was for the first time introduced into Johannesburg in 1904. What the real cause of the epidemic was will probably never be known, but so long as it is not found, so long will measures to prevent an outbreak fail. We do not suggest that there will be a recurrence in Johannesburg, for the plague epidemic, in an altitude so high as that of Johannesburg, is hardly possible, except under the most aggravating circumstances. In spite of his usual fairness, we fear that Dr. Pakes has failed to do justice in entirely ignoring the Herculean efforts that were made by the Indian community to prevent an outbreak of plague by placing at the disposal of the authorities all the information of suspected cases, as also warning them of the state of the Location after it passed into the hands of the Municipality. We feel that Dr. Pakes has shirked the real issue by giving extracts from the evidence of Dr. Porter before the Insanitary Area Commission in his work as to the then state of the Indian Location. The measures that were taken to eradicate the outbreak are all accurately described in the report in question, and they reflect very high credit on the worthy Doctor and his assistants. The manner in which the Location and the Johannesburg Market were dealt with was worthy of very high praise, and it was no doubt due to the energetic action taken by Dr. Pakes and his able assistant, Dr. Mackenzie, that the disease was so promptly stamped out.

416. A CORRECTION

_The Potchefstroom Budget_ has noticed our remarks on Lord Selborne’s speech wherein His Excellency has promised in his official capacity that no Indians except those who were here before the war will be admitted into the Transvaal until the introduction of representative government. Our contemporary says:

This is a new phase of the ‘grievances’, and is evidently the initiation of a policy which will do much to alienate the sympathy that has been extended to the Indians already here by the moderate section of the white population. If they are wise they will refrain, in their own interests, from forcing us to believe that, after all, their ultimate aim is to make the Transvaal a dumping ground for thousands of Indian subjects. _Indian Opinion_ talks glibly about an attempt to drive every Indian out of the Colony. As far as the Potchefstroom policy is concerned, this is absolutely untrue, because it has been amply proved that the desire of the people of this district is to show the utmost consideration to the Indians holding vested rights by reason of their old established businesses. When, however, we are asked to tolerate an importation that will tend only to perpetuate an undoubted evil, the spirit of moderation will, we fear, be eliminated.

We are quite at a loss to perceive how the importation of a few necessary clerks can be “making the Transvaal a dumping ground for thousands of Indian subjects”, but it is perhaps too much to expect the _Budget_ to view the Asiatic question with even a modicum of common sense. The justice of our remarks is, surely, self-evident. The entire shutting out of new Indians would mean the ultimate driving out of most Indians from that Colony; and, however desirable such a consummation may be to a section of the Transvaal population, we can scarcely be expected to view the matter in quite the same light. We make bold to say that there is absolutely nothing in our remarks to justify the inference above mentioned. We have never advocated that the Transvaal should be made a dumping ground for Indians. But we do maintain that, if elementary justice is to be done, Indians already residing in the Transvaal ought to be allowed to draw upon India for a necessary supply of clerks and such assistants, whether they are old residents of the Transvaal or not. These men can only number a very few per year. Our contemporary may not know that such facility is given even in the self-governing Colonies of the Cape and Natal, where also there are restriction laws. We have no hesitation in saying that to deny the right of Indian merchants to depend upon India for necessary skilled assistance is undoubtedly to contemplate slow starvation of the already resident Indian population. The position we have laid down is by no means novel. We refer the Budget to Lord Milner’s despatch wherein he has most clearly laid down that Indians of education, means and ability should not be prevented from entering the Transvaal, whether they be new immigrants or not.

417. THE NELSON CENTENARY : A LESSON

Horatio Nelson was the name that last week resounded from one end of the Empire to the other. The celebrations that took place on the 21st day of this month suggest very serious reflections, and to the Indian mind they should vividly show the secret of Britain’s success. Max Müller has acknowledged in his writings that in Indian philosophy the meaning of life is summed up in four letters spelt—DUTY. Probably at the present day such a meaning of life is not apparent in the conduct of the average Indian. A contemplation of Lord Nelson’s life, then, presents in a most striking manner an illustration of duty lived from first to last.

The historic signal “England expects that every man will do his duty” is enshrined in the British heart. The signal was sanctified by the unflinching performance of its author, and has been hallowed by a century of its translation into deeds. The measure of England’s success is the measure of her people’s acceptance of Nelson’s signal in the conduct of their own lives. If the sun never sets on the Empire, of which Nelson was one of the founders, it is because her sons have hitherto followed the path of duty.

Nelson is worshipped today as no other man is worshipped in the Empire, not because he was a naval hero, not because he was a man who never received an answer to his question as to what fear was, but because he was a living embodiment of duty. To him his country was first—he himself was last. He fought because that was his duty. No wonder that his men followed where he led them. He it was who made England Mistress of the Seas. But he was much more. There was no self-interest in his service. His patriotism was of the purest type.

In a continent like South Africa, where there are constant deflections from the straight path shown by Nelson, it is well to remind ourselves of a life like his. It ought to sober down prejudices.
It ought to set us all thinking more of our responsibility than of our rights. To the Indian especially, if the somewhat disagreeable life in South Africa embitters him against the Englishman who judges him harshly, the events of the past week should reassure him that they are still countrymen of Nelson’s, and that they cannot quite forsake the path of duty so long as they cherish Horatio Nelson’s memory.
Herein there is reason for hope and an incentive to love Britain in spite of the faults of Britshers.

418. DEALERS’ LICENSES ACT

Last week we related the sad story of the hardships and indignities showered on Mr. Dada Osman. It is necessary to consider from time to time how to protect ourselves against such a downpour.
The whites have fully girded up their loins. No wonder if the tyranny let loose in Vryheid today is repeated in another village tomorrow. No Indian trader can for a moment confidently say that his licence will be renewed from year to year. We have shown elsewhere how influential white men like Dr. Campbell have been doggedly pursuing us with cudgels in their hands. If we sit back at such a time, we shall be washed away by the flood. To wake up when it is too late would be like digging a well after the house has caught fire. The Indian traders, whether big or small, should immediately make it public whenever they encounter any difficulty in obtaining their licences. It is the duty of the Congress to appoint a special Licences Committee to investigate cases in which traders are deprived of their licences. It should be the duty of such a Committee to go from village to village and record such cases. We believe that this journal reaches and is read in every village. We can cope with the work properly only if the following details are sent to us regarding persons who have been unable to get

1 Vide “Another Licensing Case”, 21-10-1905
2 Dr. S. G. Campbell, a leader of the Europeans in Natal their licences:

1. the name of the person who has been refused a licence;
2. the place for which the licence was sought;
3. whether or not the person carried on trade before;
4. if he did, where;
5. whether the shop is owned by him or taken out on rent;
6. whether the structure is built of brick or tin: if possible, a pencil sketch should be attached;
7. the amount of the capital declared;
8. the arrangements for keeping account books;
9. whether there are any white merchants’ shops in the vicinity, if there are, how distant;
10. the number of Indian traders in the village;
11. the reason given by the Licensing Officer for refusing a licence;
12. whether an appeal was preferred to the Local Board against the decision of the Licensing Officer;
13. all relevant originals or copies of documents, such as the application, the reply received, etc. to be enclosed;
14. if any certificates from well-known Europeans are available, these also should be sent;
15. all these documents should be sent in an envelope addressed to the Gujarati Editor, Indian Opinion, Phoenix, with the superscription “Regarding Licences” in a corner, in Gujarati.

If well-known people carefully send the above information from various places, we believe much good will come out of it. This work can be very easily done without money or labour. We intend to use the information in our English columns as well as in our communications to the Government in the matter.

419. BRAVE BENGAL

Bengal seems to have truly woken up this time. News is received every week that the more the Government is adamant on partitioning Bengal, the more determined the Bengalis are in their opposition. On the very day\(^1\) the Government installed with great pomp and ceremony the new Governor at Dacca, the Bengalis observed hartal\(^2\) in Calcutta and held a mammoth meeting attended by 100,000 men and laid the foundation stone of the Federation Hall, thus demonstrating their solidarity. The movement to buy and use only swadeshi goods is rapidly gathering strength.

420. OUR DUTY

It has come to our knowledge that some Indians are offended by our article on the plague. We are sorry, but not surprised. We should rather be complimented on drawing attention to the subject, but we are being blamed because we do not hesitate to mention others’ faults. Thanks to the plague, many villages in India have been laid waste, numerous families entirely wiped out, and people are running in fright from one place to another. Wherever there has been plague outside India, our people have largely been responsible for importing it, and its quick eradication from those parts has been due to the fact that the task of combating it is generally in the hands of other people. What is the duty of the Press, that is, our duty, on such an occasion? We could easily win the applause of the people by suppressing their faults. But we would fail utterly in our duty if we did so. Our duty is to serve the people. While championing their rights, if we happen to observe any of their shortcomings, we must bring these to their notice. If instead of doing so we went on flattering them, we would be playing the part of an enemy. As we said at the very outset, we shall boldly defend our people if our opponents speak ill of them; but at the same time, if we notice any shortcomings in our people, we shall fearlessly expose them to the public gaze and urge their removal. Who will do this if we don’t? We have never cherished, nor do we do so now, the idea of doing anything simply to please others. It is our duty to administer the bitter pill. It is quite obvious that, when plague breaks out amongst us, it clearly leads to loss of life; more than that, it means a blow to the whole community. We must not forget how the entire community was affected when plague broke out in Durban,

2 General strike
The easiest way to deal with plague is to notify a case as soon as it occurs. When plague broke out in Bombay for the first time in 1896, neither the people nor the doctors did anything to suppress it. If the necessary steps had been taken in time, it is possible that hundreds of thousands of lives that were lost might have been saved. Plague can be rooted out even now if people are properly educated in this matter. There are certain reasons why this has not been possible in India. The people there are poor and ignorant, but here they are not. The people who travel five thousand miles, live amidst unfriendly folk and earn their bread cannot by any means be considered ignorant. If, living in this country, we do not learn how to deal with this contagious disease, we have only our obstinacy to thank. It is, we believe, the supreme duty of those who are in a position to offer guidance in such matters to enlighten people and lead them along the right path. We say this without the least fear; for whatever we have written so far will have been in vain if we try to flatter our readers out of fear. We have been repeatedly telling people to stick to their resolve, to remain courteous under all circumstances, and to discharge their duties courageously. We are publishing the biographical sketches of brave men and women like Sir Henry Lawrence and Elizabeth Fry and exhorting our readers to follow the examples of those heroic souls. In the end, we appeal to all our readers to take our writings in the spirit in which they are written. It is possible that we might unwittingly commit mistakes in the course of our public service. We shall be grateful if those who notice any such draw our attention to them.

421. AUSTRALIA AND JAPAN

The Government of Australia seem to have realized the strength of Japan. A Government communique recently issued says that students and traders from Japan, going on a tour of that country, will be freely admitted. They have also declared their intention so to amend their Immigration Law as not to hurt the feelings of Japan. This might benefit Indians too. So far and wide have the roots of Japanese victory spread that we cannot now visualize all the fruit it will put forth. The people of the East seem to be waking up from their lethargy.

422. AN ABLE INDIAN

The Daily Mail, a well-known English paper, has narrated a story of great loyalty shown by an Indian in India. He was a surveyor named Khan Bahadur Mohiuddin. It fell to his lot in 1903 to survey arid waste land in Rajputana. He had with him four messengers, four assistant surveyors and two camels. Once, travelling at night, they found their water-bag burst and all the water drained. The messengers advised return, but brave Mohiuddin was not the man to turn back. He sent one of the messengers in search of water, which was fetched but was found to be exceedingly brackish. Marching on they came upon some water which, however, soon gave out. The Khan Bahadur had by then become absorbed in deep thought. The camel-drivers were tied to the camels, and the animals allowed to go as they pleased, for meanwhile the men had fainted, owing to thirst. At last they came to a watering-place and regained consciousness. When in search of water thus, Mohiuddin strayed from his men, and ultimately, lost his life while doing his duty. However, infected with his enthusiasm, the men bravely completed the task. We rarely come across examples of such bravery and devotion to duty. The Khan Bahadur’s body was given an honourable burial and his companions, who survived him, were handsomely rewarded by the Government.

423. HOW ENGLAND WON

“What is fear? I’ve never seen it.” The boy who asked this question of his grandmother has made England a world power.

We must often wonder why the British rule over us. Perhaps we often look upon them with hatred. We feel how nice it would be if India were independent.

An answer to such questions and aspirations was had last week.

Horatio Nelson died on October 21, 1805. His death centenary was celebrated on the 21st of this month wherever the Union Jack flies. He was born on September 29, 1758. This means that at the time of his death he was only 47. Few men in the world have done what Nelson did while yet so young; rare was the daring he showed and the tasks he performed. Togo\textsuperscript{1} is said to have done something similar for Japan. But his victories being very recent, their consequences are not yet apparent. Our minds are not yet calm, and we cannot therefore appreciate them correctly.

“What is fear?” Nelson asked the question of his grandmother when he was hardly twelve. The grandmother could give no reply, and all his life he knew no fear. At twelve he began going out to sea and doing brave deeds such as few men could do.

In 1789 the Revolution broke out in France. Napoleon Bonaparte came to the fore. He was determined to conquer all Europe. And he would have done it too, it is said, but for Nelson. In fact England alone remained unconquered. Napoleon told his Captains: “Hold the English Channel clear for me only for six hours, and I will conquer England.” But Nelson foiled his hopes. A fierce battle ensued between the French and the English navies. In the three great engagements that took place, Nelson successively lost an arm, an eye and, finally, his life.

The biggest of these was the Battle of Trafalgar.\textsuperscript{2} If England sustained a defeat this time, she would lose prestige. Nelson was well aware of this and had made the necessary preparations. The officers and men under him all but worshipped him. There was not a danger that he had not himself braved. When in the Battle of the Nile\textsuperscript{3} he lost an arm, Nelson busied himself with caring for the wounded utterly regardless of his own pain. So daring was he. He was determined not to own defeat as long as a single British sailor was alive. His army was inspired by the same spirit. In his flagship, The Invincible, he roared like a lion. The crucial battle was fought on October 19. Nelson unfurled his flag and sent round the word: “England expects every man will do his duty.” A French ship and Nelson’s ship fell upon each other; there was a torrent of cannon fire; Nelson was wounded. He had himself carried to his cabin. He covered his badges, etc., with his hands so that no one should know that it was Nelson who had been wounded. The battle continued. In spite of unbearable pain, he went on issuing orders. He was informed that the French were losing one ship after another and England was winning. Thus, doing his duty, he breathed his last with the words: “Thank God! I have done my duty”.

\textsuperscript{1} Admiral leading the Japanese fleet that defeated the Russians in the Russo-Japanese War, 1905. Vide “Japan and Russia”, 10-6-1905
\textsuperscript{2} In which the French fleet was destroyed and Nelson killed, 1805
\textsuperscript{3} 1798, when Nelson defeated the French

Since then the English navy has remained supreme. Napoleon’s hopes were shattered, and the English grew in strength. Though no more, Nelson is immortal. All his deeds and sayings are deeply engraved in the hearts of the English people, and even today they sing his praise. During the celebrations last week, it seemed as if Nelson had risen from his grave after a hundred years.

It is no wonder that a nation that produces such heroes and cherishes their memory with such care, rises high and enjoys prosperity.

We should not envy the nation, but emulate its example. Those who have faith in God recognize that the British do not rule over India without His will. This too is a divine law that those who rule do so because of the good deeds they have done before. Let us therefore emulate them in their deeds so that our aspirations may be fulfilled.

Let us be as courageous as Nelson and like him know what our duty is. Let us also be patriotic like the nation to which Nelson belonged. Let us forget all thoughts of ‘I a Hindu, you a Muslim;’ or ‘I a Gujarati, you a Madrasi.’ Let us sink “I” and “mine” in a common Indian nationality. We shall be free only when a large number of our people are determined to swim or sink together. How can we walk without a staff so long as we are lame?

424. THE EVILS OF TEA

The Southwark Council in England has had an inquiry made into the benefits or otherwise of tea. We give below some of the notable facts collected.

The Chinese began taking tea in the ninth century and have done so ever since. Tea was first introduced into England in 1660. By the eighteenth century it had spread all over the country, and at the turn of that century, twenty million pounds of tea were imported into England every year. In the first decade of the nineteenth century, the per-capita annual consumption of tea in England was a pound and a half, but during the last decade, the consumption has increased so much that it now comes to six pounds.

The first to raise his voice against tea was the famous John Wesley. He was a very great religious preacher. He was subject to fits of giddiness; but he did not suspect that it was due to tea, because everyone thought it wholly beneficial. Once, all of a sudden, he swooned and fell down and then resolved to give up tea; his giddiness ceased. Sir Andrew Clarke, a famous doctor, has said that tea weakens the nerves. Thousands of women in England, it is reported, have been suffering for years; they have headaches, they have cramps in their legs and suffer from giddiness—all this is mainly ascribed to the tea habit. The officer in charge of the Southwark inquiry says that tea becomes all the more injurious if it is boiled. It is best of course to do without it; but if the habit cannot be given up, the best way of making tea is to pour boiling water over the tea leaves, and immediately pour it out into a cup. The brew should not at all be red, it should rather be the colour of hay.

Among us the custom of taking tea is of recent origin. In India, there is no need for it, but if, in imitation of the whites, people do want to have some drink, they should instead drink coffee or cocoa which are less harmful.

425. SIR THOMAS MUNRO

Sir Thomas Munro was born at Glasgow in the month of May, 1761. In 1780, he took service under the East India Company at Madras. At that time, the condition of the British in India was very precarious. Hyder Ali was preparing to oust them. The English employees of the Company were quarrelling among themselves. At this juncture, Munro rendered valuable service.

After he had been engaged for five years in military campaigns, he took up a civil post. He was appointed in the Revenue Department in Berhampur Taluk. Like Sir Henry Lawrence, he also took full advantage of this opportunity, and lived among the people. He was available to them at all times. He used to go out for walks with them, and listened to the long tales of the poor peasants, their joys and sorrows. He used to talk with the people unaccompanied by any clerk or peon, and lived a very simple life. In one of his letters, he says: “Today I made my porridge from wheat flour instead of oat meal, and tomorrow also, I do not think I shall take anything besides
I am at present continuously touring village after village, fixing the land revenue to be collected from the ryots. I cannot think of doing anything else. I do not get even an hour’s respite for personal work. Even as I am writing this, there are a dozen persons sitting beside me. They started coming in at seven in the morning. It is now twelve.” In this way, Munro worked for seven years in the districts, pleased the people and at the same time put Government revenue on a sound basis. It was now that he was entrusted with an even more responsible job. He was placed in charge of the Kanara Taluk. Though the climate of the place was very bad, he worked without any respite for 26 months out of a sense of duty. Every day he spent as many as ten hours listening to the people’s grievances. He says how, living in a small tent, in the midst of the people, he could win their hearts more easily than by living in a fine bungalow by the seaside, and how they were becoming loyal subjects. His bed consisted of a bamboo cot, a mattress and a pillow. As soon as he got up in the morning, he came out and was occupied in talking to the groups of people that were always there waiting for him. After breakfast, he issued instructions to the men under him and attended to the correspondence. Then he went to the office. He had tiffin at five in the afternoon, and again he resumed work at eight o’clock, the discussions, at times, going on till midnight. After he had dispensed peace and happiness to the people in the Kanara Taluk, he was given a more important post in the Nizam’s territory. The people there had been reduced to utter poverty by famines in previous years. Brigandage and robbery were rampant, and bad characters had become all powerful. By his courage and determination Munro raised the state to prosperity.

Having served thus for twenty-seven years, Munro went home on leave. In England he got married. He returned to India as Chairman of the Commission appointed to inquire into the working of the Judicial Department of Madras Presidency. He gave effective expression to his sympathy for the Indians, and recommended that they should be appointed to higher posts in the Judicial Department. The work of the Commission was interrupted by the Maratha War of 1817, in which he became absorbed. Though the army under him was untrained and inadequate, it was wholly loyal to him, thanks to his popularity with the people. Munro became so engrossed in the War, and underwent so much physical strain that his health broke down, and on the termination of the war in 1819, he went back to England. In 1820 he was knighted and again came out to India as Governor of Madras. He held this post till the very end of his life. Even when he was Governor, he worked as hard and lived as simply as before. He went out for walks alone and saw any one who sought an interview. Whenever there was an opportunity, he appointed or promoted Indians to responsible posts. This kind-hearted Governor died of cholera in 1827. He was never motivated by self interest. He was always keen on finding out what his duty was and how he could discharge it. He had boundless love for Indians. He fully deserved the title “Friend of the Ryot”. There have been such simple and kind-hearted Englishmen in the past, and some are to be found even now. That is why, despite many blemishes, the star of British rule keeps on shining bright.

426. A PAINFUL DISCOVERY

The Prisons Reform Commission gives rise to many misgivings as to the condition of indentured Indians on some of the estates in Natal. At Verulam recently, according to a Reuter telegram published in the Transvaal Leader, evidence was given by gaol officials to the effect that it is customary with certain estates employing large numbers of Indians to get their coolies, when ill, convicted of some minor offence in order that they may be cured of their sickness at the expense of the Government and returned fit for work. Had such a charge been made by an outsider, he would undoubtedly have been hooted out of court, so inhuman and unbelievable does it appear at first sight. We ourselves are loth to credit it but those who have given the testimony must have spoken with a full sense of responsibility, and we may assume that they have rather understated than overstated facts. The matter is too serious to be left where it is. And it is a serious thing also that the public of Natal should get the first news of so grave an allegation from outside its borders. We believe the Natal Press has been wholly silent on this matter, though The Natal Mercury noticed in an editorial note the shocking state of the Verulam gaol. We must be content to wait the usual length of time for the publication of the Report before we can know exactly what the evidence was.

We have said we cannot bring ourselves to believe that the charge can be generally sustained, but while thinking it somewhat improbable, we cannot forget the hideous things that were brought to light by a Commission on the treatment of indentured Indians in British Guiana about forty years ago. Then, things far more inhuman and unbelievable were proved to have occurred, and not in isolated instances. The treatment of sick Indians especially was peculiarly bad, and that in spite of excellent laws for their protection. This can be to some extent understood when it is remembered that a sick indentured Indian is a dead weight on his employer. It is to be hoped that the estate-owners will themselves insist on a thorough investigation for the sake of their fair name. It is not right that the misdeeds of one or two—if the charge be proven—should reflect on others whose aim it is to treat their indentured and helpless employees not only with justice but with something more.

427. DIVIDE AND RULE

The title of this article is a maxim as old as the hills, and the policy underlying the maxim was enunciated by a British statesman in connection with British rule in India. The cablegram from India that has appeared lately in the newspapers brings the aphorism vividly home to us. It is said that twenty thousand Mahomedans at Dacca, the capital of the new province partitioned from Bengal, assembled together and offered prayers of thanksgiving to the Almighty for the partition, and their consequent deliverance from Hindu oppression. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that the movement could possibly be spontaneous. It is absurd on the face of it. Assuming that there was any oppression on the part of the Hindus, relief could be obtained without partition, because the might of the British power was there to protect one community against another. It is, therefore, we consider, a response to the very powerful agitation that has been set up in Bengal against partition. The boycott has spread with an intensity never known before. It has permeated classes as well as masses, and, if it is nursed long enough, it bids fair to weld together all the communities in Bengal, not excluding the Mahomedans. Those, therefore, who believe in the maxim above quoted, naturally wanted an antidote and they have found it amongst a few Mahomedans in Dacca. It is short-sighted statesmanship to contemplate the government of millions of human beings on the principle of setting one class against another. We know that such a suggestion would be vehemently repudiated, and we know also that pure British statesmanship would revolt against the idea. At the same time, the policy itself is deep rooted, has been followed before with temporary effect, and the tamasha\(^1\) in Dacca is but a continuation of it. If the Anglo-Indian administrators, who have really built up the Indian Empire, and who depended for its continuance on the goodwill of the people, were to rise from their graves today, they, in our opinion, would be the first to encourage the boycott agitation, at the same time, conciliating public opinion, which has become so excited. What can be more natural than for the people to wish to clothe themselves, to feed themselves, and to supply their luxuries out of home-grown products and home manufactures? We see such movements worked out more extensively in many Colonies. It is a legitimate and healthy growth amongst the people, not in the slightest degree inconsistent with a feeling of loyalty to the British Crown. It is only a fulfilment of the prophecy uttered by Macaulay in connection with India.

But, if the rulers of India will not see the reasonableness of the movement, why should not the Indians? It is true that, to a certain extent, the introduction of British rule was possible by reason of internal dissensions but it is the peculiar province, as also the privilege, of Great Britain to bring together the two great communities in India, and to leave to them an heritage for which she would receive not only the gratitude of the millions in India, but the unstinted admiration of the whole world. It behoves, then, both communities to seize the opportunity offered to them, and to sink material\(^2\) jealousies and dissensions for their common good. Better far, that two brothers should suffer at the hands of each other, than that a third party should step into the breach and gain an advantage over them. We would ask those who see these lines, no matter who they be, to join with us in the prayer that the present agitation in Bengal, which has in it the germs of the unification of the different communities, may grow in strength, and that the people of Dacca or elsewhere, whether Hindus or Mahomedans, may have the good sense to refrain from doing anything that may mar the glorious possibilities that are opened up to the people of India.

428. DADA OSMAN’S APPEAL

The Vryheid Herald, after quoting our remarks on this appeal¹, goes on to say that it is not a question of whether

Dada Osman is entitled to a licence. It is a question of whether he is entitled to trade in any part of the town. Although Dada Osman held a licence for a few years, it did not give him a vested right to remain in the town for ever. Prior to 1886, when a number of Indians entered the Transvaal, they were granted licences on condition that they only traded in locations and in places allotted to them by the Government, and this was only a question of whether Dada Osman should go into a location.

Our contemporary then goes on to say that this is not a question of white and brown. Our remarks have been called an error. Unfortunately for our contemporary, we have to use the same expression for its remarks quoted above. The question whether Mr. Dada Osman was entitled to a licence or to trade is beside the issue, and a distinction has been drawn without any difference. The fact is that the decision of the Board ruins Mr. Dada Osman, and this was the burden of our remarks. That the applicant had no “vested right” in the legal sense of the term shows the strength of our contention that the British constitution, at times, is so full of weaknesses that it enthrones injustice and strengthens it, as in this case. To an ordinary man, the deprivation of a man’s right to trade without any compensation, after he has been so engaged for several years, is very much akin to robbery, which is miscalled law when it is done under cover of a statute. We join issue with our contemporary when it says that it is only a question of whether Dada Osman should go into a Location. We venture to inform our contemporary that Law 3 of 1885, dealing with Locations, has been interpreted by the Supreme Court of the Transvaal to mean that it does not require British Indians to trade in Locations. In the Transvaal, an Indian has the right to trade anywhere he chooses, and he can demand a licence against tender of money. Vryheid has taken over the Transvaal laws including the Indian laws, and it has to abide by them. Had it not been, therefore, for the Dealers’ Licences Act of Natal, Mr. Dada Osman would today be trading in the town of Vryheid. It is the Licences Act which has been put into operation against him, and which has enabled the rival traders thus to set aside all ideas of justice and to ruin a poor man because, we repeat, “he wears a brown skin”. Did not the Licensing Officer also give as his reason for refusal that he did not want to see the conditions of Dundee reproduced in Vryheid? In other words, he did not wish to see so many Asiatic traders in the town of Vryheid as there were in the town of Dundee.

429. LORD METCALFE

LIBERATOR OF THE INDIAN PRESS

“The right to rule belongs to the ruler only if he works for the happiness of the ruled.” Charles Theophilus Metcalfe, who uttered these words and acted up to them, was born in Calcutta on January 30, 1785. After receiving an indifferent sort of education in England he gave up his studies at the early age of fifteen and came to Calcutta the following year. In those days the East India Company was very strict in selecting its employees, and inexperienced youths without proper education were not admitted to its service. Metcalfe was therefore obliged to enter the college at Calcutta. Thus, after receiving education for some time, Metcalfe was appointed to a subordinate post. At nineteen, he became Head Clerk to General Lake. General Lake and the officers under him were annoyed to find the young man in the civil department. Metcalfe took the hint and made up his mind to prove his valour in war. He took the lead in storming the fort of Digi and put in such excellent work that General Lake became greatly pleased with him. Three years later Metcalfe was assigned a very responsible piece of work. The French were conspiring with Maharaja Ranjit Singh in the Punjab. Metcalfe was entrusted with the task of thwarting their designs and it was through his efforts that a treaty was signed between the British Government and Ranjit Singh. Lord Minto was so pleased with Metcalfe’s achievement that he appointed him Resident in Delhi when he was only twenty-six.

Here he began to interest himself in public welfare. He placed the landholders’ rights on a firm basis. This is what he wrote about it:

> The settlement of land revenue should be fixed for a long period, so that the landlords can make large profits and feel grateful to us. In place of the fear that their land might be taken away from them any time, we should create in them the confidence that nobody would deprive them of their land. If we do so, the people will be pleased, and will begin to consider our rule beneficial and in their own interest. There are some who fear that, if people become free and independent, British rule will be in danger. Even granting that this is probable, how can we deprive the ryots of their rights? How can liberal rulers attach any weight to such an argument? The kingdom of man is controlled by the kingdom of God. The Almighty can bestow a kingdom in a moment and take it back in another. Man’s ingenuity avails not before His command. The duty of the rulers, therefore, is only to advance the well-being of their subjects. If we but discharge this duty, our Indian subjects will be grateful to us, and the world will for ever sing our praises. What if in future a rebellion should break out as a result of such a policy? Well, if out of the base fear of a future danger we should oppress the subjects, we shall deserve the attacks that may be made against us. And, when we are driven to such a position, the world will scorn us, will spit upon us and call us all sorts of names.

Sympathizing with the ryots in their woes, young Metcalfe wrote such noble words. Metcalfe was later appointed Resident at the Nizam’s Court. The Nizam’s Government was at that time in great financial difficulty. Some crafty but powerful Englishmen had lent him large sums on interest. Metcalfe was much pained to learn of this. Without caring for what the Governor-General might think, he did his duty and got rid of the crafty men. In 1827 Metcalfe became a member of the Viceroy’s Executive Council at Calcutta. The good Lord William Bentinck was the Viceroy then. When Bentinck was obliged for reasons of health to proceed suddenly to England, Metcalfe was appointed in his place as Acting Governor-General. At this time he did the greatest deed of his life. He enacted the famous law giving freedom to the Indian Press, which displeased his masters—the Board of Directors. But Metcalfe did not care. When prominent Englishmen opposed him, he made the following reply:

If the argument of my opponents be that the spread of knowledge may be harmful to our rule in India, I say that, whatever be the consequences, it is our duty to educate the people. If British rule can be preserved only by keeping the people in ignorance, our rule then would be a curse on the country and ought to come to an end. But I personally think that we have much more to fear if the people remain ignorant. The spread of knowledge, I hope, will remove their superstitions, will enable them to appreciate the benefits of our government, will promote the goodwill between the rulers and the ruled and will eliminate the differences and disunity amongst the Indians themselves. We, however, do not know what the will of the Almighty is in respect of the future of India. Our duty clearly is to execute the work entrusted to us for the good of the people.

Metcalfe, thereafter, was appointed Governor-General of Canada. There he fell seriously ill, but disregarding his illness went on doing his duty till the last. He was a deeply religious man. Having served the Queen loyally and won the love of the people, he died in 1840.

Indian Opinion, 4-11-1905
MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

Your letter to hand. I am returning the letter addressed to Revashankar. I shall ask Abhechand to take the papers back. He has gone to Pretoria.

You have done well in writing about Kitchin. Your argument is not wrong. The facilities we have provided him are, generally speaking, too many. The money is being paid to him not for his proficiency but because of my folly; and because there was no other way of correcting my mistake. I did allow him to leave; but he pleaded with me that he was not in a position to do any other work, since he could not start work afresh in Johannesburg. Indubitably, he did wind up the big business he had. Under these circumstances, I could not bring myself to discharge him. So the best way I could find was to give him as much in salary as would meet his normal expenses. However, either of us is free to terminate the arrangement by giving a month’s notice. It means that, if the condition of the press gets worse and it does not show any income, I can dispense with his services at a month’s notice. Even if the condition improves, there is no stipulation about paying him more than £10, nor is it necessary. There is, therefore, no reason to believe that he will always draw the same salary. We need not suppose that he and Polak will not be able to pull on together when the latter comes. If they cannot, Kitchin will have to leave. Polak will take at least two and a half years to go to Phoenix; it is, therefore, unnecessary for the present to think of that far-off eventuality. I envisage the possibility of a great change in our condition during that period. There was no other alternative when we gave Kitchin a house and land. His heart is in Phoenix. He no doubt likes the life there. Please do not hesitate when you have to do something for him. We have to take into consideration the virtues of a man; we cannot bother ourselves about his drawbacks. We have to be satisfied if, by putting ourselves out, others can be made happy or can benefit. There is no difficulty in giving two acres of land to any of you who wants it, that is, yourself, West, Bean or Anandlal. I think I have already explained this to you. Polak also has asked for two acres. This much I believe: if Kitchin stays, his nature will change and he will do his work well. If, on the other hand, his nature does not improve, he will give in of his own accord. Do ask for further clarification, if you need it. Always write to me unhesitatingly.

Gokuldas is good by nature; but he has become very selfish and narrow-minded because of his upbringing in the country. He seems to be prejudiced against you. In spite of my repeated attempts to persuade him I find that the idea that “maternal uncle is crazy” is deep-rooted in his mind due to the arrogant impetuosity of youth. His mind is set more on making money. We have to be very careful and see that his leanings become pure. You may watch him and guide him. I believe he will put in hard work. He will not take anything from the press at present; at the same time, he will not work the whole day. I have told him that he is still a student and has to behave accordingly. He will, therefore, work for some time in the press, some time on the land and the rest he will devote to studies. It is necessary for him to have a good knowledge of Gujarati, English and Tamil. I have asked him to start with composing Tamil matter in the press. I shall write a letter about this to Pillay also. You may come, if possible, during Christmas, after Gokuldas arrives there and has become conversant with the work.

How is West doing the job-work? Does he feel uncomfortable or is he cheerful? Who are doing the composing work for the newspaper? How does Virji behave? Write to me about everybody there. How is Bean doing? What is the position of the books now? How about Anandlal? I have written to him also about Gokuldas. I still feel that it will be better if you three brothers live together. But if there is even the least possibility of bitterness resulting from doing so, you have not to act on my suggestions. Gokuldas, of course, will stay with you.

Is Orchard still there in the house or has he left?

I have sent the Tamil material, but I find that there will be some difficulty for me in the matter. I saw that the man who did the translation has very little knowledge of the language. He felt very diffident and said that it would be better if I did not entrust the work to him. It will be quite enough if Gokuldas and Pillay understand it even after a strenuous effort. Gokuldas has learnt a little. The English matter that I send from here will merely have to be translated there. Consult Pillay about this. Who has written for this week’s issue?

Does Hemchand give you satisfaction or not? Does he go out for the collection of dues? Train him well.

What has happened to Ramnath? I had written a letter to Ajodha.

Has Jayashanker been able to procure any assistant or does he have the same difficulty still? Give Bean whatever miscellaneous things he wants. Send Moon’s report when you get it. Who is to sow the land that has been ploughed? Does the leakage in the roof continue or has it stopped?

Let me know if the shifting of the office to Mercury Lane has affected the flow of work. Do the whites come in greater numbers?

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

Govindji says that he is not getting the paper regularly.

I sent more Gujarati matter yesterday.

Do see what is written on the back of the first four sheets also.

BRITISH INDIANS, TRANSVAAL, TENDER TO HIS GRACIOUS MAJESTY HUMBLE CONGRATULATIONS ON HIS SIXTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY.

3. LONG LIVE THE KING-EMPEROR

Thursday, the 9th instant, was the sixty-fifth birthday of His Majesty the King-Emperor. Loyal congratulations were offered from all parts of his vast dominions. No monarch of modern times has commanded the admiration and love of his subjects as King Edward has. When he ascended the throne, his position was a most difficult one, since he had to succeed Victoria the Good; but, during the short space that he has occupied his supreme position, he has carried out the traditions left by that noble lady, and has shown that, even in a country constitutionally governed, the King has many opportunities of serving his subjects, in a way possible only to one who, like His Majesty, combines a real appreciation of the dignity of his exalted station with a more than ordinary ability. By his sound judgment and tact, he has materially assisted in promoting the world’s peace, and the prosperity of the British Empire. He has endeared himself to his subjects the world over because, being lord of all, he has made himself the servant of all. In the whole history of the world, no throne has been so firmly established in the hearts of the people as that of the King-Emperor today. That he may live long to add lustre to that throne is the earnest prayer of British Indians, the humblest of his subjects but not the least in loyalty and devotion.

4. AN INDIAN DELEGATION TO ENGLAND

The general election for the Imperial Parliament is now pending. It may come upon us any day. Mr. Chamberlain has expressed his opinion that the sooner it comes, the better. The most interesting feature to an Indian is the delegation that has gone to England, on behalf of India, to plead the Indian cause before the British electorate. Some knowledge about those who compose the delegation and its purpose may not be out of place even for our European readers in South Africa.

The Honourable Professor Gokhale and Mr. Lajpat Rai\(^1\) are in London as the delegates sent by the National Congress, and towering above the two is Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, the Grand Old Man of India. He is not sent specially, but he is there living a life of self-imposed exile, a life of self-sacrifice extending over an unbroken period of half a century. Of him, Mr. Gokhale has said:

> What a life it has been! Its sweet purity, its simplicity, its gentle forbearance, its noble self-denial, its abounding love, its strenuous pursuit of high aims—as one contemplates these one feels as though one stood in a high presence. Surely there must be hope for a people that could produce such a man, even if, as Mr. Ranade\(^2\) once said, he be only one in three hundred millions.

Such is the towering personality of Dadabhai, who is always in London to counsel Indian patriots and guide them by his advice.

In Mr. Gokhale, yet quite young, is centred the hope of India. He has won many laurels, and has many more to win. Young as he is, he has made for himself a name in the Imperial Legislative Council at Calcutta. Even those who differ from him have to acknowledge his patriotism and earnest eloquence. He is not to be matched in mastery of figures, and he has sanctified a life of love by a free gift of his services to the Fergusson College at Poona for twenty years.

Mr. Lajpat Rai, from the Punjab, is no less noble in mind. He is the recognised leader of the Punjab. He has been devoting his earnings and his energy to the promotion of the work of the Arya Samaj, which has been recently made familiar to our readers. 1

Hardly had he finished the self-imposed work of relieving the distress in the Kangra District, owing to the terrible earthquake, than, at the call of duty, he left for England. As the Honourable Mr. Gokhale could not join him in England in time, he went over to America, and popularized traditions of India to the great American people. This is what the Boston Transcript says of him:

It is not many weeks since Colonel Young husband declared in London that, in all that relates to the spiritual and intellectual life, we Anglo-Saxons are to sit as learners at the feet of the Hindus and other Orientals. They have for ages cultivated, and still cultivate, as the highest and most important of human interests, that which we leave to an hour or so of quiet once a week in a church. The handsome and accomplished young Hindu, Mr. Rai...how magnificent is the beauty and vitality of a high-class Hindu...the delegate from the Indian National Congress, who spoke twice here this week, is on his way to England.

Such leaders, then, are at present in England to plead for India. They are there to tell the British electorate that India needs better representation and better service at the hands of the rulers. In the words of Mr. Schwann, M. P., the delegates are charged with the task of voicing the hopes, the fears, the aspirations, and the desires for reform of the Indian people. There was a desire among the Indian people for better education, for a land settlement varying with the varying needs of different parts of India, and for more self-government, because the people whom Mr. Gokhale represented thought that many of the Indian people were quite qualified to take part in their own government.

The delegation and many other things, which are at present happening in India, are unmistakable signs of the times. The Colonial statesmen may not misinterpret them or ignore them. If they would seek the protection of the British flag, they must count upon India as an integral part of the Empire, and, as such, entitled to every consideration. It will very largely depend upon the spirit that guides British, Colonial and Indian statesmen, whether the Empire is to remain firmly knit together, or whether it is to suffer disintegration owing to conflicting interests.

5. IMMIGRATION ACT OF NATAL

We draw the attention of Mr. Harry Smith, the Principal Immigration Restriction Officer, to a free translation we have given in another column of hardships that Indian passengers are alleged to have had to undergo on board the s. s. Somali. If the allegations are at all true, they show a very serious state of affairs. The passenger who has made the complaint which is before us has signed it, and he was severely cross-examined before we decided to take it and give it publication. We are aware that Mr. Harry Smith is just as eager as we are to avoid any unnecessary hardships to the passengers who may be affected by the Immigration Act. We, therefore, feel certain that we have only to draw his attention to this complaint to insure a thorough investigation. We might mention that this is not the first occasion on which we have received complaints of this nature, but hitherto we have not thought fit to publish them or to do anything more than suggest to the complainants to forward their complaints to the proper quarters; but the facts that have come to us this time have been so well and earnestly put that we consider it to be our duty to draw public attention to them. We shall be happy to give an equally prominent publication to anything that the Immigration authorities may have to say either in contradiction, explanation, or justification.

6. RED TAPE

The Natal Mercury has rendered a public service in publishing correspondencen which throws a great deal of light on the working of the Immigration Restriction Act. It appears that a well-educated Indian, Mr. E. Vaz, was, on the 30th September last, on going to see a friend off by one of the German steamers, prevented from going to the steamer. The friend also, whom Mr. Vaz was to see off, although he produced his second-class ticket, was not allowed to board the steamer. Both of them were, it is complained, roughly handled by the constable on duty. Mr. Vaz thereupon wrote to the Superintendent of Water Police, who told him that the constable was carrying out his instructions. He then approached the Colonial Office, and the Colonial Office, too, returned the same stereotyped answer, adding that instructions were from the Immigration Restriction Department. Mr. Vaz then applied to the Principal Immigration Restriction Officer, who put the finishing touch by declining to inform Mr. Vaz of the instructions, saying: “I do not feel called upon to answer inquiries from outside as to inter-departmental arrangements.” Rough treatment is not denied.

The action of the constable is throughout upheld, and when the public want to know what regulations there are which they have to obey, they are told it is not their business! This is a new method of administration. Hitherto, the people who have to obey laws have been acquainted with the nature of such laws, but now the Government has decided that the Immigration Department is to work its regulations in secrecy, and to expect the public, who are affected thereby, to guess what they are likely to be and obey them. We mention the Government specially, because Mr. Harry Smith has evidently written under inspiration. So far as we know, he has never withheld information from the public. What advantage the Government wishes to gain by keeping its precious regulations secret we do not know, but we do know that the action of the constable was undoubtedly illegal, and the attempt made by the Government to bolster up an illegality by withholding information from the complainant is, to say the least of it, highly un-British.

We congratulate our contemporary on having given publicity to what is nothing short of a scandal, and, what is more, for dealing with it strongly in an editorial note.

7. RUSSIA AND INDIA

The present unrest in Russia has a great lesson for us. The Czar of Russia today wields the most autocratic power in the world. The people of Russia suffer numerous hardships. The poor are crushed by the weight of taxes; the soldiers put down the people, who have to submit to all the whims of the Czar. Intoxicated with power, the officers do not care for the welfare of the people. Their only function, they think, is to add to their own power and wealth. Entirely against people’s will, the Czar declared war against Japan, causing a river of blood of Russian soldiers to flow. The wealth acquired by the sweat of thousands of labourers was thrown into the sea of Japan.

1 Czar Nicholas II, (1868-1918), came to the throne in 1894.

The Russian people have suffered all this for years, but they have now reached the limit of their patience. They have struggled hard to end this tyranny, but in vain. They rose in rebellion and killed the Czars, but they could not secure justice. This time they have found another remedy which, though very simple, is more powerful than rebellion and murder. The Russian workers and all the other servants declared a general strike and stopped all work. They left their jobs and informed the Czar that, unless justice was done, they would not resume work. What was there even the Czar could do against this? It was quite impossible to exact work from people by force. It is not within the power of even the Czar of Russia to force strikers to return at the point of the bayonet. The Czar has therefore proclaimed to the people that they will be granted a share in government and that he will not make any laws without their consent. It is difficult to say what the ultimate result of this will be; but even if the Czar does not keep his word, it will not prove that the course adopted by the people was wrong. It will only show that the people were not firm enough in applying the remedy. For even the most powerful cannot rule without the co-operation of the ruled. If the Russian people succeed, this revolution in Russia will be regarded as the greatest victory, the greatest event of the present century.

In the caption to this article we have put Russia and India together. We have therefore to justify it by showing how India is concerned with the events in Russia. There is much similarity between the governance of India and that of Russia. The power of the Viceroy is no way less than that of the Czar. Just as the people of Russia pay taxes, so also do we; just as the Russian taxpayer has no control over the use of the money thus raised, so also the Indians have none; as in Russia, so in India, the military is all-powerful. The only difference is that the power of the state is rather more brusquely exercised in Russia than in India. We, too, can resort to the Russian remedy against tyranny. The movement in Bengal for the use of swadeshi goods is much like the Russian movement. Our shackles will break this very day, if the people of India become united and patient, love their country, and think of the well-being of their motherland disregarding their self-interest. The governance of India is possible only because there exist people who serve. We also can show the same strength that the Russian people have done.

8. SIR T. MUTTUSWAMI AIYER, K. C. I. E.

Sir T. Muttuswami Aiyar was born in a poor family at Tanjore on January 28, 1832. Having lost his father at a very early age, Muttuswami had to earn his own living. He therefore took up the job of a village clerk on one rupee a month. This went on till 1846. During this time, a gentleman named Muttuswami Naicker was struck by the boy’s intelligence and industry. Once it happened that Naicker received news of the river embankment near a village having given way. He sent for his clerk, but the latter being absent, the boy Muttuswami answered the call. Asked by Naicker to make inquiries about the mishap, Muttuswami went round the whole place and brought all the news. Mr. Naicker did not quite believe him, but, being in a hurry, he passed on the boy’s report. Later, Mr. Naicker was much pleased to know that the facts collected by Muttuswami were quite accurate.

Not being satisfied with the kind of life he was leading, Muttuswami resolved to rise higher and started going to school whenever he could find the time. Mr. Naicker, who noticed this, kept him for 18 months in a Mission school at Negapatam, and then sent him to a High School in Madras. He also gave him a letter of recommendation to Raja Sir T. Madhav Rao. Muttuswami made daily progress in his studies. Mr. Powell, who was then the Headmaster of the School, saw Muttuswami’s merit, and gave him special attention. In 1854, Muttuswami wrote an English essay, which won him a prize of Rs. 500. After he had finished his studies at the High School, he was appointed a teacher on Rs. 60 a month. He rose by stages till he became a responsible education officer. The Government had meanwhile instituted an examination for the Pleader’s Sanad. Muttuswami prepared for the examination, and stood first in it. In those days the judges used to go on tour from time to time in order to inspect the work of the munsiffs. Once Judge Beauchamp went there on a surprise visit. He was so pleased to see Muttuswami’s work that he remarked, “Muttuswami deserves to take a seat by my side”. Muttuswami’s ability proved to be so outstanding that he was later appointed a Magistrate in Madras. Judge Holloway was much pleased with him. He advised him to pursue his legal studies further, and he did so. As an aid to this study, he learnt German also. He had a very independent mind. An Indian once lodged a complaint against a High Court judge, charging him with assault. Muttuswami, without any hesitation, issued a summons to the judge. The Chief Magistrate suggested that the judge need not be obliged to appear in person. But Muttuswami paid no heed. The judge had to appear before him and was fined Rs. 3. Later, Muttuswami became a judge of the Small Causes Court. In 1878, he was awarded a C. I. E. and made a High Court judge. He was the first Indian to be appointed to that office. His judgments were so sound and carried such authority that to this day, it is said, they can hold their own against those of the best English judges. The famous Mr. Whitley Stokes says that he has seen few judgments that can compare with those of Muttuswami Aiyar and Syed Mahmud. His work was so exceptional in every way that he was made Chief Justice in 1893. Worn out by hard work, Muttuswami died in 1895.

Not only was Sir Muttuswami foremost in the field of law, he also took the greatest possible interest in promoting the welfare of the Indian people. From time to time he spoke on such subjects as child marriage, widow re-marriage and foreign travel, and encouraged reformers. He was very kind and simple, always wore swadeshi clothes and was a sincere devotee of God. His bright career lent lustre to the entire Presidency of Madras.

9. AN INDIAN VOLUNTEER CORPS

Last week we reproduced, from _The Natal Witness_, some questions and answers at a political meeting in Newcastle with reference to the liability of Indians to serve during the time of war.

Mr. Thorold urged that some arrangement should be made whereby the Arabs and Indians should be called upon to assist in case of the calling out of the first line of defence. It would be manifestly unfair to allow the Arabs to sit in their stores and to do business while the Europeans were fighting at the front.
Had Mr. Thorold known the inner working of the Government, he would not have made the remarks attributed to him. The Government simply do not wish to give the Indians an opportunity of showing that they are as capable, as any other community, of taking their share in the defence of the Colony. At the time of the Boer War, it will be remembered, the Indians volunteered to do any work that might be entrusted to them, and it was with the greatest difficulty that they could get their services accepted even for ambulance work. General Buller has certified as to what kind of work the Natal Indian Volunteer Ambulance Corps did. If the Government only realised what reserve force is being wasted, they would make use of it and give Indians the opportunity of a thorough training for actual warfare. There is, too, on the Statute-book, a law for the purpose, which has been allowed to fall into desuetude from sheer prejudice. We believe a very fine volunteer corps could be formed from Colonial-born Indians that would be second to none in Natal in smartness and efficiency, not only in peace but in actual service also.

10. TREATMENT OF INDIANS AT THE POINT

We referred last week to the ill-treatment to which some of the Indian passengers on board the Somali are said to have been submitted on their arrival in the Natal harbour. We have received corroboration of the fact from another correspondent, who writes to us in Gujarati, to the following effect:

Those who did not have the Transvaal permits, but were Transvaal refugees, and those who did not possess the Natal passes, were put to much inconvenience. They were locked up for three days in the steamer-hold. They were not able to provide themselves with any food. The third day Mr. Hassim Juma, a merchant of Durban, engaged a solicitor and was successful in getting about five [persons] landed. When Mr. Hassim Juma himself went to deposit bail, it was not accepted. It was only after the intervention of a solicitor that, with great difficulty, they were landed. The passengers who were not able to land at Delagoa Bay were also kept under lock, and were not allowed to cook their food.

We draw Mr. Harry Smith's attention to the above version. If it be true, it is too painful for words, and if it be true that visiting passes were only allowed on the intervention of a legal gentleman, it is very evident that something is rotten in the state of Denmark. As it is, the poor Indians have, in order to make their claims good, either for residing or remaining temporarily in the Colony, to undergo a great deal of trouble and expense. We do not complain of a reasonable enforcement of the Immigration Restriction Act, but we do think that those who are entitled to land in the Colony, or those who should be given every facility for passing through Natal to a neighbouring Colony, ought not to be put to the expense of having to engage a solicitor for mere matters of form.

1 Vide “Indian Ambulance corps”, 13-12-1899
2 Vide “Immigration Act of Natal”, 11-11-1905

11. JOHANNESBURG LOCATION

The Johannesburg Town Council has resolved that the Kaffirs living near the Malay Location will be shifted to Klipspruit on the first of April next year. Now Klipspruit is thirteen miles away from Johannesburg We wonder how the Kaffirs will manage to live at such a distance. The Council also contemplates opening an Indian Bazaar near the Kaffir Location at Klipspruit and expects to do this as soon as it gets the necessary powers to do so.

A move to acquire the Malay Location is already afoot. This should forewarn the Indians. The best course is for all Indians to arrange for adequate accommodation within Johannesburg itself. We believe, however, that it will take the Council some time yet to acquire the Malay Location, and that there is no likelihood of any new legislation affecting Indians being passed before June next.

12. INSTRUCTIONS REGARDING PERMITS TO TRANSVAAL INDIANS

We learn that the applicants for permits are no longer required—as they were for some time past—to furnish names of Europeans for reference. It is now enough—as it used to be formerly—to mention only Indians as witnesses. Hitherto the Indian witnesses were not called in for verification, but henceforth they will be required to tender oral evidence. We would, therefore, urge that great care should be taken in submitting names.

Regarding permits to children also, a clarification appears to have been made. According to this, permits will be issued to those under 16 years whose parents are in the Transvaal. Printed forms prescribed for this purpose will have to be filled in by the father or the guardian.

13. JAPAN AND THE BRITISH COLONIES

The British Government finds itself in an embarrassing position in its relations with Japan. It has entered into a treaty with Japan, and has recognized Japan as a major power. The treaty shows that Japan has the same status as England. The English regard Admiral Togo as an equal of Nelson. They welcome and honour all Japanese subjects visiting England.

While this is the situation in England, the New Zealand Premier, Mr. Seddon, says that his country is not at all concerned with the treaty between England and Japan and that he will not allow any Japanese subject to enter New Zealand.

In Western Australia, there are the same rigorous laws against Japanese subjects as against other Asiatic peoples. This has hurt Japan’s feelings. The Japanese Ambassador has sent a note, demanding repeal of these laws. The Colonial Secretary, Mr. Lyttelton, has written to the Australian Government that the laws should be changed. The West Australia Minister has replied saying that the laws would be so amended that they do not hurt Japan’s dignity, but that in effect they would remain unaltered. This means that the same bitter pill will now be administered to Japan with a coating of sugar.

What will England do in these circumstances? If the Colonies go on acting in contravention of the policy of England, the latter will either have to give up the Colonies or allow herself to be dragged along and change her own policy.

What applies to Japan applies equally to India also. All the more so, because India, being a part of the British Empire, has a better claim.

14. THE CAPE IMMIGRATION LAW

The Cape Immigration Law is becoming increasingly rigorous. Hitherto restrictions had been in force only against people coming by sea. They will henceforward apply to any one entering through the Transvaal as well. The Cape Gazette publishes Regulations to the effect that a person going to the Cape through the Transvaal should possess evidence of Cape domicile. If he fails to establish his right to enter the Cape, he will be deported and will have to pay the Cape Government the cost thereof. The Cape authorities have therefore notified that those wanting to go to the Cape should first obtain passes. One has to face many difficulties in getting such passes in the Cape, for it is very difficult to establish one’s Cape domicile if one has no land or children in the Colony. In fact, such a man does not get a pass at all.

It is very necessary that the British Indian League should take action in the matter; otherwise, the Cape persecution will go on increasing daily. The Cape offers facilities for putting up a fight such as no other Colony does. These, we trust, the British Indian League will put to the best use.

15. MOUNTSTUART ELPHINSTONE

The Elphinstones are a well-known family in Scotland. Towards the end of the eighteenth century, a scion of this family, Mountstuart Elphinstone, landed at Calcutta as an employee of the East India Company, at the early age of sixteen. Political disturbances were frequent in India. The country was in the grip of one such in 1796. Vazir Ali, the deposed Nawab of Ayodhya, was under surveillance at Benares. He attacked the Benares Residency. The English judge of Benares defended himself with a spear until relief arrived. Elphinstone, who was there at the time, also bravely defended himself. In 1800, there was trouble near Poona, and Elphinstone was posted there. By this time, he had acquired a good knowledge of languages, and had pleased General Wellesley by his valour in war. He was then appointed Resident at Nagpur, where he pursued his studies further. In 1809, Elphinstone was deputed to the court of the Amir of Kabul. And since that time the British have been pampering the Amir out of fear. Obsessed with the fear of an attack on India through Kabul, the British Government spent money like water to ward off an imaginary danger. It was because of the same

fear that Elphinstone was sent to Kabul to enter into an agreement with the Amir. But he had to return empty-handed. Anyone else in Elphinstone’s place would not have taken interest in a task not assigned to him, and he could not have been found fault with. The work that a man does out of love for it, without caring for reward, is generally of a superior quality than that done merely for wages. Such was the case with Elphinstone. What did it matter if he could not checkmate the Amir of Kabul? He utilized his time in other ways while in Afghanistan. He gathered plenty of information regarding places and people there and made it available for the benefit of the British. And though he had to return unsuccessful from Afghanistan, his reputation was enhanced. In 1811, Elphinstone was appointed Resident at Poona. At the time the Pindaris were harassing the poor people; the Scindia, the Holkar and others were eager to attack the British. The Peshwa of Poona was with the British, but he was very weak. Trimbakji, his agent, was an intriguer. He had been imprisoned against the Peshwa’s will for his atrocious misdeeds. He escaped from prison and went into hiding. Elphinstone came to know that the Peshwa himself was conspiring against the British. Though his means of defence were meagre, Elphinstone was not unnerved. Even when he came to know of the developments, he remained serene and unperturbed and no one knew of the preparations he was making. At last, the Peshwa launched an open attack. His army fell on the British camp, but was routed by Elphinstone with a handful of his men. Meanwhile, General Smith had come to his rescue. Peshwa Bajirao was completely defeated, and the British annexed Poona and pensioned off Bajirao. The famous Canning described Elphinstone’s gallantry at the time in these words: ‘Elphinstone is a civil officer. We do not expect our civil servants to show courage in war. Our fighting men are always at their command. But Elphinstone has proved during the war with the Peshwa that he is a soldier who would shine among our soldiers. That he is foremost in civil work is known to all.’

After the war with Bajirao was over, Elphinstone had the more difficult task of governing the people. The English rulers of the time cherished very kind feelings for the people. Before introducing new laws, they used to consider the kind of administration the people were accustomed to and what laws would satisfy them. Elphinstone, too, did the same. He took care to see that the ancient Maratha families were preserved, and their jagirs kept intact. With this end in view, he created the State of Satara for the descendants of Shivaji, which pleased the Marathas very much. He tried to ascertain popular feeling and took care not to hurt it.

This man of gentle qualities was appointed Governor of Bombay in 1819, and he captured the hearts of the people. He gave his best attention to education. He may be regarded as the first to realize that the foremost duty of the British Government in India was to educate the people. The present Elphinstone College in Bombay was founded in memory of this popular Governor. He introduced many reforms in the Judicial Department also. Thus, he ruled over Bombay for eight years as Governor. When he relinquished charge of his post, every community did him great honour. He spent the rest of his life in England, where he wrote a history of India, a work admired to this day. He was twice offered the Governor-Generalship of India, but on both occasions he declined it for reasons of health. This great man died at the age of 81, on December 21, 1859.

17. THE POLL-TAX

It would be unwise for us to give publicity to the complaints that have come to us from hundreds of Indians in connection with the imposition of the poll-tax. Personally, we consider that every good citizen should share the troubles that the Colony is passing through, and one of the best and most practical methods of doing so is to contribute specially to the Colonial revenue. The Government has seen fit to pass the poll-tax measure, and everyone, no matter to what community he belongs, should bow to it and pay the toll with what cheerfulness he can. It is not a matter for mathematical calculation and of considering the question of poor people having to pay the same as the rich man. A poll-tax has always been an unpopular measure and, in its incidence, it falls very heavily upon the poorest members of the community. It is by no means a new thing or a new experience in South Africa, but was an annual contribution exacted in the Transvaal, though not very rigorously, even when the country was at the height of its prosperity.

1 Sir Arthur Lawley was appointed Governor of Madras on November

In a time of depression such as the present, when work is scarce and ready money scarcer, it is no small thing for a poor working man with a wife and family to give even a single sovereign in one lump sum. It is obviously the poorer classes only that feel the burden of a poll-tax. There are thousands of Indians to whom the sum of one pound is no small matter. Take, for instance, the case of those who have just become free from indenture, and have chosen to settle in the Colony. As the price for permission to remain in the Colony, they, including their children, have to pay an annual tax of £3 each, and they would now be called upon to pay an additional £1. On the face of it, therefore, to exact contribution from such men would be highly unjust. The position of many small Indian farmers would be almost the same. They have to toil hard and long for their daily bread. To dignify them by the name farmers is, in fact, totally wrong, for, as a matter of fact, they are labourers pure and simple. It has often [been] argued that the Indian does not contribute sufficiently to the revenue of the Colony. Those who have said so have advanced the argument in a thoughtless manner. No country in the world taxes labour, for labour itself is a contribution of the very best kind. It is upon labour that the prosperity of a country depends.

There is no doubt that the poll-tax is calculated mostly to affect the natives of the soil and Indians. Our Transvaal contemporaries have seen the point without any difficulty. The Europeans have been brought in order to give the measure an appearance of being general legislation, but we have no desire to look at it from that point of view. The measure has been passed, and though we cannot congratulate the Government upon it any more than it can congratulate itself, we all have to bow to the decision. At the same time, we commend to the earnest attention of the authorities and the public generally the special article on the poll-tax published in this issue.¹

But whatever may have been the intentions of the legislators, it is not for us to complain, though, in our opinion, this conception of the measure, as also the facts we have shown above, prove unmistakably that the Government will have to use a large amount of discretion in excusing from payment those who really cannot afford to pay. For that reason, it is very necessary that the rules already published for collecting the tax should be revised, and the collectors given the authority, at their discretion, to excuse the poorest in the community from payment. The collecting of such a tax is, undoubtedly, a matter of mutual understanding between the Government and the communities affected thereby; otherwise, as one of the expressive Native speakers said at the meeting recently held by the Chief Magistrate, “The Government will have to line the roads of the Colony with gaols for the accommodation of the defaulters.”

18. MR. HARRY SMITH AND INDIANS

We published last week a letter from the Immigration Restriction Officer in reply to our editorial note† on the alleged ill-treatment of Indian passengers on board the Somali.

We are thankful to Mr. Smith for having given a prompt reply, but we must confess that it is disappointing. Evidently, the facts stated by our correspondent, and supported by another correspondent, are, in the main, true. Mr. Smith has divided our correspondent’s complaints under six heads, three of which relate to arrangements on board the steamer, for which Mr. Smith refuses to accept any responsibility whatsoever, saying that it is the shipping company that is responsible as carriers. Technically, Mr. Smith is, no doubt, right, but as the Principal Officer responsible for the proper conduct of all who are affected by the Immigration Restriction Act, we venture to think that it is not possible for him thus to slur over what are, undoubtedly, hardships arising out of the enforcement of the Act. Indeed, if the argument advanced by Mr. Smith were to hold good, he might disclaim liability with reference to treatment under the other heads also, for he is certainly not required, according to the letter of the law, to see that the passengers, who may be cooped up by the steamship company in the hold, get proper food or are allowed to communicate with those on shore, because communications with the ship will be controlled by the shipowners; but, Mr. Smith has not seen fit to take up such an untenable position. The complaint has to be taken as a whole and treated as such, and, again it has to be treated, not in a cold-blooded manner, but in the humane, sympathetic spirit which we have almost invariably found in Mr. Smith. The letter, therefore, has come to us as a shock. We miss therein the humanity of the man, and find the cold-bloodedness of a calculating head of a department, which is not to be ruffled by any amount of human suffering. Law or no law, we claim from an official of Mr. Harry Smith’s temperament a large measure of liberal treatment. Assuming, then, that the truth of the complaint is borne out, is it not possible for the Immigration Department to come to an understanding with the shipping companies (and such things have been done before now, in spite of their being unnecessary, according to the strict letter of law), whereby the inconvenience can be mitigated, if not entirely removed? After all, the passengers placed in the hold were mere suspects, many of them probably had the right to land in the Colony. Many of them had the right to receive a safe passage through the Colony, and the Immigration Department was, therefore, intimately connected with their proper treatment whilst their cases awaited examination. There would have been nothing extraordinary if the passengers had been kept under surveillance in a different manner. Why, again, were they refused visiting passes on their asking, and had [they] to get the intervention of a lawyer? A merciful working of the law, we are free to admit, may entail a little more expense, exercise of extra patience and waste of valuable time, but we think that all this expenditure will be small, compared to the comfort which would thereby be secured for the passengers.

There is also a question raised, as a side issue, in Mr. Smith’s letter, which requires prompt attention. There are evidently some departmental instructions given to the under-officials, of which the public have no knowledge. It would tend to a smooth working of the law, if the public were acquainted with these instructions, seeing that they are intimately related to them.

With reference to the last paragraph of Mr. Smith’s letter, that the Immigration and Police Officers are as much amenable to law as anyone else, it is obvious that the average poor Indian immigrant can scarcely be expected to take these cases to court. The point is that it should be some one’s duty to protect them against insult or unfair treatment. The sensitiveness of many Indians [is] affected by the Act we admit, but we are not surprised at it. That it sometimes unconsciously leads them into a kind of exaggeration is also probably true, but men placed in the same position that the Indians are in South Africa, have been known to go much further than the Indians have ever done or are likely to do. An officer who has continuously to discharge an irksome duty of restraining natural liberty is likely, by habit, to attribute as a vice that which is merely a most natural result of the working of the human mind under galling restraints, and it is as well even for the most discerning men to bear this in mind, if even a fair measure of justice is to be given to a people placed in the peculiar condition in which the Indians are.

_Indian Opinion, 25-11-1905_

19. BADRUDDIN TYABJI

Badruddin Tyabji’s is a famous name throughout India, particularly in the Bombay Presidency where he is known to all. He revealed his ability at a very early age and was a very good student at school. His career as a student was so bright that his elders decided to send him to England. Sir Pherozeshah and Badruddin were of the same age and were contemporaries at school.

Mr. Badruddin was perhaps the first Indian from the Bombay Presidency to go to England. He excelled in studies, won many laurels in England and then returned to Bombay. He earned a great reputation as an able barrister and was always compared to great English barristers. He successfully fought cases in which he had to confront the famous barristers Enstey and Inverarity. During the period of his practice at the Bar, there was hardly a big case in which he was not engaged by one or the other party. With his power of oratory and legal acumen, he pleased the judges and won over the members of the jury. He went many times to Kathiawar to fight big State cases, most of which he won. His greatest case was perhaps the defence of Nawabzada Nasuralla Khan. The Collector of Surat, Mr. Lely, had charged the Nawabzada with having offered him a bribe of Rs. 10,000. Mr. Lely gave very strong evidence in the case. Mr. Slater, the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay, gave a harsh judgement, sentencing the Nawabzada to six months’ imprisonment. Mr. Badruddin, who was engaged in the appeal against this judgement, argued the law points so ably that Justice Parson quashed the sentence pronounced on the Nawabzada by the lower court and passed severe strictures against Mr. Lely. Mr. Badruddin had, no doubt, won many cases before, but his fame spread all the more with this victory, which saved a member of a noble family from confinement and disgrace. Some time later the Government of Bombay offered Mr. Badruddin a seat on the High Court Bench, which he accepted. Though the judges’ monthly salary was Rs. 3,750, Justice Badruddin was certainly a loser. His income from legal practice was, it is said, about Rs. 100,000 a year. His work as a judge is considered to be of a very high order. His judgments show independence of mind and give satisfaction to all the lawyers as well as the parties.

Just as Justice Tyabji has earned a name in scholarship and the legal profession, so has he won fame in public life too. He has done much for the spread of education in India, particularly among Muslims. He always encourages the education of women. His wife and daughters are all well educated. He has taken an active part in the politics of the country and has done much work in collaboration with Justice Ranade. He was a prominent worker of the Indian National Congress, and has also presided over it.¹ His presidential address was so good that it still ranks as one of the best speeches. Though he is now sitting on the Bench, he is as patriotic as ever. He takes interest in educational matters. By nature he is kind and humble. His knowledge of Hindustani is as profound as his knowledge of English. Few in the Bombay Presidency can match him in Urdu oratory.

20. DEPUTATION: TO LORD SELBORNE

Before presenting a statement on the position of British Indians in the Transvaal, Gandhiji addressed His Excellency as follows:

[JOHANNESBURG,]

November, 29, 1905

Before beginning to deal with the subject matter of this deputation, I have to tender our respectful thanks to Your Excellency for having spared the time amidst the many calls upon it to receive this deputation. As Your Excellency has personally interested yourself in every question submitted to you, it was felt that we should, instead of simply sending memorials, seek the opportunity of expressing our sentiments and feelings in a more tangible manner.

Before I deal with the statement I am to hand to Your Excellency, I have been asked to mention two matters that have occurred during your recent tour through the Transvaal. Your Excellency is reported to have said at Potchefstroom that “no non-refugee British Indians would be allowed to enter the Colony

until the Representative Assembly has considered the question next year”. If the report is correct, it would, as I hope to show this afternoon, be a very grave injustice to the vested rights of the Indian community. At Ermelo, Your Excellency is reported to have used the expression “coolie store-keepers”. This expression has given very great offence to the British Indians in the Colony, but the British Indian Association has assured them that the expression has probably not been used by Your Excellency, or, if it has, Your Excellency is incapable of giving thereby any intentional offence to British Indian store-keepers. The use of the word “coolie” has caused a great deal of mischief in Natal. At one time, it became so serious that the then

Justice Sir Walter Wragg had to intervene, and to put down the use of that expression in connection with any but indentured Indians, it having been even imported into the Court of Justice. As Your Excellency may be aware, it means “labourer” or “porter”. Used, therefore, in connection with traders, it is not only offensive, but a contradiction in terms.

THE PEACE PRESERVATION ORDINANCE

Coming to the statement that the British Indian Association is submitting to Your Excellency, I would take first the Peace Preservation Ordinance. Soon after the Transvaal became part of the British Dominions, the services rendered during the war by the dhooly-bearers that came with Sir George White, and those rendered by the Indian Ambulance Corps in Natal, were on many people’s lips. Sir George White spoke in glowing terms of the heroism of Prabhu Singh who, perched up in a tree, never once failed to ring the gong as a notice to the inhabitants each time the Boer gun was fired from the Umbulwana Hill. General Buller’s despatches, 1 praising the work of the Corps, were just out, and the administration was in the hands of the military officers who knew the Indians. The first batch of refugees, therefore, who were waiting at the ports, entered the country without any difficulty, but the civilian population became alarmed, and called for the restriction of the entry of even the refugees. The result was that the country was dotted with Asiatic offices, and from that time up to today, the Indian community has known no rest; whereas aliens, in every sense of the term, as a rule got their permits at the ports on application there and then, the Indian, even though a refugee, had to write to the supervisors of Asiatics, who had to refer the applications to the Colonial Office before permits were issued. The process took a very long time, from two to six months, and even one year and more, and then, too, the Colonial Office had laid down a rule that only so many permits should be issued to British Indian refugees per week. The result of this mode of operation was that corruption became rampant, and there grew up a gang of permit-agents who simply fleeced innocent refugees; and it was a matter of notoriety that each refugee who wanted to enter the Transvaal had to spend from £15 to £30 and more. The matter came to the notice of the British Indian Association, repeated representations were made, and ultimately the Asiatic offices were wiped out. The mode of granting permits was, however, unfortunately still kept up, and the Chief Secretary for Permits has been always subject to instructions from the Colonial Office. Thus, the Peace Preservation Ordinance, which was intended to apply to dangerous characters and political offenders, under the influence of the Colonial Office, had become an Indian Immigration Restriction law, as it remains to this day. Under the present regime, too, therefore, it is a most difficult matter for even bona-fide refugees to get permits and it is only in rare cases that it is possible to get them, except after a delay of months. Everyone, no matter what his status may be, has to make an application on a special form, give two references, and put his thumb-impression upon the form. The matter is then investigated, and the permit is granted. As if this were not enough, owing to the charges made by Mr. Loveday and his friends, the Chief Secretary for Permits received instructions to insist on European references. This was tantamount to the denial of the right of British Indian refugees to enter the country. It would be hard to find twenty Indians who would be known to respectable Europeans by name as well as appearance. The British Indian Association had to correspond with the Government and, in the meantime, the issue of permits was suspended, and it has been only lately realised that the insisting upon European references was a serious injustice.

THE ENTRY OF CHILDREN

But still the difficulties, apart from the necessity for European references, are there. Male children, under 16 years of age, are now called upon to take out permits before they can enter the Colony, so that it has been not an uncommon experience for little children of 10 years of age and under to be torn away from their parents at the border towns. Why such a rule has been imposed we fail to understand. THE HIGH COMMISSIONER: Have you ever known a case where the parents have stated beforehand that they have children and which children have been refused permission to come in?
MR. GANDHI: Yes; and the parents have been obliged to make affidavits before the children have been allowed to come in.

If the parents have the right to enter, so far as I am aware, every civilised country has admitted the right of minor children also to enter with them and, in any case, children under 16 years, if they cannot prove that their parents are dead or that their parents have been resident in the Transvaal before the war, are not allowed to enter or remain in the Colony. This is a very serious matter. As Your Excellency is aware, the “joint-family” system prevails all over India. Brothers and sisters and their children live under the same roof from generation to generation, and the eldest member in the family is nominally, as well as in reality, the supporter and the bread-earner. There is, therefore, nothing unusual in Indians bringing the children of their relatives into the country, and it is submitted that it will be a very serious injustice if such children, who have hitherto been left unmolested, are either deported from the Colony or are prevented from entering the Colony. The Government, again, intend to require the female relatives of resident Indians also to be registered in the same manner as the males. The British Indian Association has sent an emphatic protest against any such measure, and has even submitted that it would be prepared to fight the question in a court of law, as, according to the advice given to it, wives of resident Indians are not required to take out registration certificates and pay £3.

THE ENTRY OF SPECIAL CLERKS, ETC.

No new permits are granted by the Government, no matter how necessary it may be in certain cases. We were all extremely pleased to read in the papers Your Excellency’s emphatic declaration that the vested interests of the Indians who are already settled in the country should not be disturbed or touched. There are merchants who have constantly to draw upon India for confidential clerks, in order to enable them to carry on their business. It is not easy to pick out reliable men from the resident population. That is the experience of merchants all over, and belonging to all communities. If, therefore, new Indians are absolutely shut out of the country until the establishment of Representative Government, it will seriously interfere with these vested interests; and, in any case, it is difficult to see why men of attainments and education, whether they be refugees or not, should not be able to have their permits on application. And in spite of all these hardships, our anti-Indian friends are never tired of saying the country is flooded with British Indians who were never in the Transvaal. They have made a point of saying that every Indian who was before in the country was registered. I hardly think it is necessary for me to dilate upon this matter, as Your Excellency has been told that all the facts with reference to this charge are wrong, but I may be pardoned for是指 that Your Excellency to a case that happened in 1893. Shire and Dumat were large contractors of labour. They brought into the country at one time 800 Indian labourers. How many more they brought I do not know. The then State Attorney insisted that they should take out registration certificates and pay £3 each. Shire and Dumat tested the matter in the High Court, and the then Chief Justice Kotze held that these men were not, in terms of the law, called upon to pay £3, as they did not enter for “purposes of trade”, and that he could not help the Government, even if the men, after the contract was over, subsequently remained in the country. That is only one instance, which cannot be gainsaid, in which hundreds of Indians remained in the country without paying £3 each. The British Indian Association has always submitted, and that from personal experience, that hundreds of Indians, who did not take out trade licences, remained in the country without ever registering themselves and paying £3.

BAZAARS AND LOCATIONS

Coming to Law 3 of 1885, it has been often urged that Indians, after the establishment of British government in this country, have received relief with reference to trade licences. Nothing, however, can be further from the truth. Before the war, we were able to trade anywhere we liked, as against tender of payment of licence money. The long arm of the British Government was then strong enough to protect us, and up to the very eve of the war, in spite of the constant threats of the then Government to prosecute British Indians who were trading, no action was taken; It is true that now, owing to the decision of the Supreme Court, Indian trade is unfettered, but that is in spite of the Government. Up to the very last moment the Government declined to come to the rescue, and a notice was published called the “Bazaars Notice” which stated that, after a certain date, every Indian, who did not hold a licence to trade at the outbreak of war outside Locations, would be expected not only to remove to Locations, but to trade there also. After the notice was published, Locations were established in almost every town, and when every effort to get justice at the hands of the Government was exhausted, as a last resort, it was decided to test the matter in a court of law. The whole of the Government machinery was then set in motion against us. Before the war a similar case was fought, and the British Government aided the Indians to seek an interpretation of the law, which we have now received from the present Supreme Court. After the establishment of the British Government, all these forces were against us. It is a cruel irony of fate, and there is no use disguising the fact that we have felt it most keenly; and this, I may state, as has now transpired, in spite of the fact that the then Attorney-General told the Government that the interpretation they sought to place upon the law was bad, that if it went to the Supreme Court the matter would be decided in favour of British Indians. If, therefore, British Indians have not been sent to Locations and are free to trade anywhere they like and to live where they like—as I say, it is because it is notwithstanding the intentions of the Government to the contrary.1 In every instance, Law 3 of 1885 has been, so far as the Indians are concerned, most strictly interpreted against us, and we have not been allowed advantage of any loop-holes that are left in it in our favour. For instance, British Indians are not debarred from owning landed property in “streets, wards, or locations that may be set apart” by the Government. The Government have resolutely declined to consider the words “streets and wards” and have simply clung to the word Locations; and these Locations, too, have been established miles away. We have pleaded hard saying that the Government have the power to give us the right to ownership of land in streets and wards, that they should make use of that power in our favour, but the plea has been in vain. Even land which is being used for religious purposes, the Government would not transfer in the names of the Trustees, as in Johannesburg, Heidelberg, Pretoria and Potchefstroom, although the Mosque premises are good in every respect from a sanitary standpoint. It is time, we therefore submit, that some relief was granted to us while new legislation is under consideration.

CLASS LEGISLATION

As to the new legislation to replace Law 3 of 1885, the dispatch drawn by Sir Arthur Lawley has caused us a very great deal of pain. It insists on legislation affecting British Indians or Asians, as such. It also insists on the principle of compulsory segregation, both of which are in conflict with the repeated assurances given to British Indians. Sir Arthur Lawley, I wish to say with the greatest deference, has allowed himself to be led astray by what he saw in Natal. Natal has been held up as an example of what the Transvaal would be, but the responsible politicians in Natal have always admitted that Indians have been the saving of the Colony. Sir James Hulett2 stated before the Native Affairs Commission that the

---

1 This should perhaps read: ‘I say it is not because of, it is notwithstanding, the in tensions of the Government to the contrary.’

2 Vide “Sir J.L. Hulett and Indian Traders”, 24-9-1903
Indian, even as a trader, was a desirable citizen, and formed a better link between the white wholesale merchant and the Native. Sir Arthur Lawley had also stated that, even if promises were made to British Indians, they were made in ignorance of the facts as they now are and, therefore, it would be a greater duty to break them than to carry them out. With the greatest deference, I venture to submit that this is a wrong view to take of the promises. We are not dealing with promises that were made fifty years ago, though we undoubtedly rely upon the Proclamation of 1858 as our “Magna Charta”. That Proclamation has been re-affirmed more than once. Viceroy after Viceroy has stated emphatically that it was a promise [to be?] acted upon. At the conference of the Colonial Premiers, Mr. Chamberlain laid down the same doctrine and told the Premiers that no legislation affecting British Indians as such would be countenanced by Her late Majesty’s Government, that it would be putting an affront quite unnecessarily on millions of the loyal subjects of the Crown, and that, therefore, the legislation that was passed could only be of a general character. It was for that reason that the first Immigration Restriction Act of Australia was vetoed. It was for the same reason that the first Natal Franchise Act was vetoed, and it was for the same reason that the Colony of Natal, after submitting a draft Bill applicable to Asiatics as such, had to draft another measure. These are matters not of years gone by but of recent years. It cannot be said that there are today any new facts that have come to light to change all this. Indeed, even immediately before the war, declarations were made by ministers that one of the reasons [for the war] was to protect the rights of British Indians. Last, but not least, Your Excellency, too, gave expression to similar sentiments on the eve of the war. Though, therefore, the manner in which Sir Arthur Lawley has approached the question is, in our humble opinion, very unjust and inconsistent with the British traditions, we, in order to show that we wish to co-operate with the white Colonists, have submitted that, even though no such law existed before, there may now be an Immigration Act after the basis of the Cape or Natal, except that, as to the educational test, the great Indian languages should be recognised and that the already established British Indian merchants should have facilities afforded to them for importing temporarily men whom they may require in their businesses. That will at once do away with the fear of what has been termed an Asiatic invasion. We have also submitted that with reference to trade licences which have caused so much grumbling, the power should be given to the Local Boards or Town Councils to regulate the issue of any new licences subject to the control of the Supreme Court. All the existing licences should be taken out of the operation of any such statute, because they represent vested interests. We feel that, if these two measures were passed and Law 3 of 1885 were repealed, some measure, and only some measure, of justice would be done to Indians. We submit that we ought to have perfect freedom of owning landed property and of living where we like under the general municipal regulations as to sanitation and appearance of buildings, and, during the time that the legislation is being formed, the Peace Preservation Ordinance should be regulated in accordance with the spirit of such regulation and liberal interpretation should be placed upon Law 3 of 1885. It seems to me to be foreign to the nature of the British Constitution as I have been taught from my childhood, and it is difficult for my countrymen to understand that, under the British flag which protects aliens, its own subjects should be debared from holding a foot of landed property so long as good use is made of it. Under the conditions, therefore, submitted by the Association, it ought to be possible for the Government to free the Statute-book of the Colony from legislation that, necessarily, insults British Indians. I do not wish to touch on such questions as foot-path regulations when we have to consider the question of bread and butter and life and death. What we want is not political power; but we do wish to live side by side with other British subjects in peace and amity and with dignity and self-respect. We, therefore, feel that the moment His Majesty’s Government decide to pass legislation differentiating between class and class, there would be an end to that freedom which we have learned to cherish as a priceless heritage of living under the British Crown.

THE STATEMENT

There are, besides laws affecting Coloured people and, therefore, British Indians, the Peace Preservation Ordinance and Law 3 of 1885 as amended in 1886.

The Peace Preservation Ordinance, as its name implies, although framed to keep out of the Colony dangerous characters, is being used mainly to prevent British Indians from entering the Transvaal.

The working of the law has always been harsh and oppressive—and this in spite of the desire of the Chief Secretary for Permits that it should not be so. He has to receive instructions from the Colonial Office, so that the harsh working is due, not to the chief officer in charge of the Department, but to the system under which it is being worked.

(a) There are still hundreds of refugees waiting to come.

1 This was published in the Indian Opinion of December 2, 1905, while the foregoing, the address by Gandhiji, appeared on December 9.
(b) Boys, with their parents or without, are required to take out permits.

(c) Men with old £3 registrations, coming into the country without permits, are, though refugees, being sent away and required to make formal application.

(d) Even wives of Transvaal residents are expected to take out permits if they are alone, and to pay £3 registration, whether with or without their husbands. (Correspondence is now going on between the Government and the British Indian Association on the point.)

(e) Children under 16, if it cannot be proved that their parents are dead, or are residents of the Transvaal, are being sent away, or are refused permits, in spite of the fact that they may be supported by their relatives who are their guardians, and who are residing in the Transvaal.

(f) No non-refugee British Indians are allowed to enter the Colony, no matter what their station may be in life. (The last prohibition causes serious inconvenience to the established merchants, who, by reason thereof, are prevented from drawing upon India for confidential managers or clerks.)

LAW 3 OF 1885

In spite of the declarations of Her late Majesty’s ministers, and assurances of relief after the establishment of civil government, this law remains on the Statute-book and is being fully enforced, though many laws, which were considered to be in conflict with the British constitution, were repealed as soon as British authority was proclaimed in the Transvaal. Law 3 of 1885 is insulting to British Indians and was accepted totally under a misapprehension. It imposes the following restrictions on Indians.

(a) It prevents them from enjoying burgher rights.

(b) It prohibits ownership of fixed property, except in streets, wards, or Locations set apart for the residence of Indians.

(c) It contemplates compulsory segregation in Locations of British Indians for purposes of sanitation.

And (d) it imposes a levy of £3 on every Indian who may enter the Colony for purposes of trade or the like.
It is respectfully submitted, on behalf of the British Indian Association, that the Peace Preservation Ordinance should be so administered that

(a) it should facilitate the entry of all refugees without delay;
(b) children under 16 should be exempt from any restriction whatsoever, if they have their parents or supporters with them;
(c) female relatives of British Indians should be entirely free from interference or restriction as to the rights of entry; and
(d) a limited number of Indians though not refugees, should, on the application of resident traders who may satisfy the Permit Officer that they require the services of such men, be granted permits for residence during the period of their contract of service; and
(e) Indians with educational attainments should be allowed to enter the Colony on application.

Both Law 3 of 1885 and the Peace Preservation Ordinance, and all other colour legislation affecting British Indians, should be repealed so soon as possible and they should be assured as to

(a) their right to own landed property;
(b) [their right] to live where they like, subject to the general sanitary laws of the Colony;
(c) exemption from any special payment; and
(d) generally, freedom from special legislation and enjoyment of civil rights and liberty in the same manner and to the same extent as the other Colonists.

Though the British Indian Association does not share the fear of the European inhabitants that an unrestricted immigration from India will swamp the latter, as an earnest of its intention to work in harmony with them and to conciliate them, it has all along submitted that

(a) the Peace Preservation Ordinance should be replaced by an immigration law of a general character, on the Cape or the Natal basis, provided that the educational test recognise the great Indian languages, and that power be given to the Government to grant residential permits to such men as may be required for the wants of Indians who may be themselves already established in businesses;
(b) a Dealers’ Licences Law of a general character may be passed, applicable to all sections of the community, whereby the Town Councils or Local Boards could control the issue of new trade licences, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court to review the decisions of such councils or local boards. Under such a law, whilst the then existing licences would be fully protected, except when the premises licensed are not kept in a sanitary condition; all new applicants would have to be approved of by the Town Councils or the Local Boards, so that the increase of licences would be largely dependent upon the bodies above named.

21. RETRENCHMENT AND THE POLL-TAX

At a meeting of the Durban Town Council on Tuesday last, the Mayor reported having interviewed the heads of all the municipal departments employing Native and Indian labour, and discussed with them the reduction of all Native and Indian wages by an amount equal to 10 per cent. of the monthly wage. This has been approved by the Council and comes into force as from the 10th November.

It seems evident that neither the Council nor the heads of the departments have considered the additional misery that this measure will mean to those unfortunate men affected by it. Practically all the free Indians employed by the Corporation come from the indentured class, and these have to pay an annual tax of £3 for the privilege of being a “free” British subject in a British Colony, and beyond this (a very large drain on a poor man) there is to be a further annual tax of £1. How these men are to bear this additional burden and pay their taxes, perhaps the authorities know. The least we can say is that this method of retrenchment reflects no credit on the humanity of the Council, and that the moment for putting it into force is singularly inopportune.

At the same meeting, the Council decided to raise the salary of the Borough Electrical Engineer’s assistant to £400 per annum. This method of retrenchment applies to the Colony as a whole. In this connection, we may quote our vigilant contemporary, Trade and Transport:

The Gazette has not yet stated that among the Civil Servants chosen by Government to help the Colony out of a financial slough by an acceptance of a reduction in pay, there was one who point-blank declined to do so, and that in consequence the Government, instead of insisting, yielded to this individual’s unwillingness to share with his fellows a common burden, and even went so far as to give him a substantial increase of salary instead, the excuse for such magnanimity being certain alleged conspicuous services rendered in connection with an undertaking quite beyond the sphere of duties properly belonging to the favoured one’s special department.

If the Durban Town Council had retrenched by adequately reducing first of all the high salaries of those heads of departments who have been willing to see the Natives and Indians reduced, the paltry £ 3,000 per annum, saved by taxing their very poorest employees, could easily have been made up. At the worst, it would have been a hardship felt by but few, instead of, as now, by many. But it is the old story: For, whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

22. SIR ARTHUR LAWLEY AS GOVERNOR OF MADRAS

We congratulate Sir Arthur Lawley on his appointment as Governor of Madras. It is a distinction well deserved by His Excellency. Sir Arthur is always kindly, courteous, and solicitous for the welfare of those whose interests are entrusted to him. His views about Indians are strange, and we have been often obliged to comment upon many inaccuracies into which he has been led in considering this question, but we have always believed that these views have been honestly held. Moreover, wrongly though we consider it to be so, Sir Arthur has believed that, in upholding the anti-Indian policy, he would best serve the interests of the European inhabitants of the Transvaal. The mere fact, however, that Sir Arthur has been led to hold such views, owing to his extreme anxiety to serve the European interests in the Transvaal, may be his strength in Madras, for his kindliness, his courtesy, his sympathy and his anxiety have now to be transferred to the millions of Indians over whose destiny he is to preside for the next five years. Sir Arthur Lawley is to fill the place vacated by Lord Ampthill, who has endeared himself to the people of the Madras Presidency. We hope that Sir Arthur will continue the traditions he inherits.

23. INDIAN VOLUNTEERING

Our note on the subject of Indian volunteering, we are glad to notice, has been warmly taken up by The Natal Witness, and some correspondence has appeared on the subject. We hope, now that the matter has been taken up by the Press, that it will not be allowed to die out without an expression of opinion from the Government as to its policy. Law No. 25 of 1875 was specially passed to increase “the maximum strength of the Volunteer Force in the Colony by adding thereto a force of Indian Immigrants Volunteer Infantry”. Under the Law, the Governor is authorised “to accept, with the consent of the employer, the services of any Indian Immigrants who may be willing to be formed into a Volunteer Corps”. The limit of the strength of the force was, in those days confined to one thousand three hundred men. Any planter could raise such a corps, and, subject to the approval of the Governor, be appointed Captain of the same. A capitation grant of twenty shillings per man is made for every efficient volunteer and no volunteer shall count as efficient who shall not attend a minimum of twelve days’ drill of four hours per diem, or twenty-four days’ drill of two hours per diem, or forty eight days’ drill of one hour per diem in each year, and no drill shall count which is not of an hour’s duration.

Provision is made also for compensation to any member of the Indian Immigrants Volunteer Force whilst engaged in actual military service, should he be wounded or otherwise seriously injured, and for pensions to the widows and children left in Natal of any such volunteer killed in action, or who shall die of wounds received while so engaged. Here, then, if the Government only wanted the Indian immigrant to take his share in the defence of the Colony, which he has before now shown himself to be quite willing to do, there is legal machinery ready made for it.

24. INDIANS IN DURBAN CORPORATION SERVICE

We hear that the salary of the Indians serving in the Durban Corporation has been reduced by two shillings per month. This news, if true, is to be very much regretted. We do not understand why this is being done. We, moreover learn that the salaries of the whites remain what they are. We shall return to this subject after we have more definite information about it.

25. MODERN CIVILIZATION

The Black Hole of Calcutta is considered unique in history. But there occurred recently at Stanger a tragedy which has outdone the earlier one of Calcutta. Last week 200 prisoners were kept in the Local Government Jail which has room for fifty only. The result was that the whole jail was stinking abominably and it was difficult to enter it. The prisoners were suffocating and most uncomfortable. Is this civilization?

26. ATTACK ON YELLOW SKIN

A white colonist of New Zealand abhorred the Chinese so much that he shot one dead in broad daylight, and reported himself at the police station. He was arrested and prosecuted. The jury took him for a mad man and recommended that he should not be sentenced to death. But the man shouted protesting that he had not committed the murder in a fit of insanity. He believed the Chinese caused the white population much harm. He had therefore committed the murder to give the Chinese a warning. He was ready to hang for it.

27. IMMIGRATION ACT OF NATAL

Mr. Harry Smith writes to say that our complaint regarding the hardships the passengers aboard s.s. Somali had to undergo is quite true. But instead of admitting his own fault, he holds the shipping company responsible for them and adds, that some passengers undergo hardships which are of their own making. We have already given in our English columns last week a detailed reply to all this.

1 An enclosed place, about 20 feet square, where, in 1756, by an order of Nawab Sirajud-daula, 146 persons were reportedly kept for a night, of whom 123 died. This “incident”, is now considered to have been the fabrication of some official of the East India Company.

Mr. Smith cannot disclaim responsibility for sufferings arising from the application of the Immigration Act. It is the duty of Mr. Smith to see that no hardship is suffered by the passengers who are not allowed to land.

28. THE HEROIC SONG OF BENGAL

Every Western nation has its national anthem. They sing it on important occasions. The British anthem, God Save the King, is well known. The Englishman is inspired with heroism when he sings it. Germany, too, has its famous anthem. La Marseillaise of France is of such a high order that the French go into ecstasies when it is sung. Having realized this, Bankim Chandra, the Bengali poet, thought of composing a song for the Bengali people. The song, Bande Mataram, composed by him has become very popular throughout Bengal. Mammoth meetings have been held in Bengal in connection with the swadeshi movement where millions of people gathered together and sang Bankim's song. The song, it is said, has proved so popular that it has come to be our national anthem. It is nobler in sentiment and sweeter than the songs of other nations. While other anthems contain sentiments that are derogatory to others, Bande Mataram is quite free from such faults. Its only aim is to arouse in us a sense of patriotism. It regards India as the mother and sings her praises. The poet attributes to Mother India all the good qualities one finds in one's own mother. Just as we worship our mother, so is this song a passionate prayer to India. The words used are mostly Sanskrit, but easy to understand. The language, though Bengali, is simple enough for everyone to understand. The song is of such a high order that we print it in the Gujarati script below¹, and in the Devanagari script in the Hindi columns.

29. LORD SELBORNE AND BRITISH INDIANS

Elsewhere will be found a report of the interview\(^1\) that a deputation, on behalf of the British Indian Association of the Transvaal, had with Lord Selborne, on Wednesday, the 29th ultimo.

The British Indian Association has done well in placing the position so fully before Lord Selborne. It could not but have struck His Excellency, as it strikes us, that the case put before him on behalf of British Indians in the Transvaal is extremely moderate and reasonable. In fact, His Excellency admitted the “extreme reasonableness” of the statement that any restrictions, to be effective, must be such as are, in the strictest sense only, necessary. Examined from that standpoint, two things stand out prominently in the statement submitted to His Excellency by the deputation. The Indians recognise the existence of prejudice against them in the Transvaal and also recognise that it is largely due to a fear (whether that be unreasonable or reasonable, it is not necessary to inquire into for present purposes) of unfair competition on the part of Indian traders and undue influx of Indians into the country, and they propose to meet both objections in a manner that cannot but commend itself to all who are not blinded to a sense of justice by overpowering prejudice. If legislation restricting immigration on general lines were passed, on the Cape or Natal basis, with a proviso in favour of Indian languages, as an education test, it should meet all reasonable requirements. With a spirit of self-sacrifice, not to be ordinarily expected, the British Indian Association has gone further, and has suggested that control over all new trade licences shall be given to the Local Boards or Town Councils, subject to revision by the Supreme Court of the Colony. Here, then, is what ought to be an acceptable olive-branch offered to the anti-Indian agitators in the Transvaal. They are the men who cry out against Indian licences, and they are the men who either elect municipal representatives or are themselves such representatives. The Indian trading community relies so much upon their sense of justice and fair play that it does not hesitate to entrust its future to them. More it cannot be expected to do; and if anything more is done, it in spite of such advances, class legislation be deliberately undertaken, the whole of the “extreme reasonableness” will have been in vain, and, as said by the deputation, there will be an end to that freedom which Indians had learned to cherish as the priceless heritage gained to them by living under the British flag. The working of the Peace

\(^1\) Vide “Deputation to Lord Selborne”, 29-11-1905
Preservation Ordinance will come to many as a painful surprise. Though Lord Selborne held silence over the points that were brought to his notice, we cannot but think that His Excellency must have regarded some of them with strong disapproval. That children under sixteen years should be expected to carry permits with them, or that they should be deported, if their parents be not residents of the Transvaal, and that Indian females should be required to take out registration certificates, is a most discreditable thing. Regulations such as these savour very much of Russian methods, and for the fair name and fame of the Empire, of whose interests Lord Selborne is such a worthy custodian, we hope that he will, as he has promised, go into the matter thoroughly, and give Indians the satisfaction that right and justice demands.

30. EXTRACT FROM LETTER TO DADABHAI NAOROJI

[JOHANNESBURG,]

December 11, 1905

This week’s Indian Opinion will give a full report of the deputation that has waited on behalf of the British Indian Association on Lord Selborne.

The issues raised and discussed are, in my humble opinion, very important and the most important of all is the one regarding the doctrine of class legislation laid down by Sir Arthur Lawley and the opposition to it by the British Indian Association. Sir Arthur Lawley’s suggestions are meant to conciliate the European prejudice and so is the proposal of the British Indian Association. If anything, the proposition of the latter meets the European view more completely than Sir Arthur Lawley’s suggestion. It is difficult to understand why he has laid so much stress upon the differences between class and class, but if that doctrine is accepted, there will be no end to restrictions upon British Indians in South Africa. It is, therefore, a most important point. The reserve with which Lord Selborne dealt with matters urged by the British Indian Association shows that Mr. Lyttelton has not yet yielded to Sir Arthur’s proposals.

31. THE IMMIGRATION ACT AT THE CAPE

We reproduce in another column a very important test case on the Immigration Act at the Cape. The British Indians at the Cape will have to be very careful as to how the Act is being worked. One Narotam Lalu, who has been a resident for nine years in Natal, was prevented from entering the Cape on the ground that he was not domiciled in South Africa. His claim to previous domicile was rejected, although he held a domicile certificate from Natal, because he did not have his wife and children with him, or in South Africa. The authorities at the Cape have instructed their officials that, unless applicants show that they possess immovable property in South Africa, or have their families in South Africa, their claims are to be rejected. Mr. Justice Maasdorp has given a fairly full judgment. He lays down that the requirement as to the presence of wife and children in South Africa, although it is a very great fact in support of domicile, is not absolutely essential. The learned judge has also laid down that a certificate of domicile from Natal is no proof of former domicile, because that is a question for a judge or some judicial authority to decide. The net effect of the judgment is that Indians who can prove long residence in South Africa and an intention of remaining in South Africa will be able to establish their claim to domicile. This is so far satisfactory, but they will not be able, as was very reasonably supposed, to enter the Cape without any trouble on production of a certificate of domicile from Natal. Now the law of the Cape recognises domicile in any part of South Africa, and in the interests of a just administration of the law it is very necessary that documents given by the Natal Government should be recognised at the Cape also, otherwise it would lead to endless complications and troubles. As counsel for the applicant stated, the law as to domicile is practically the same in Natal as at the Cape. There is, therefore, absolutely no reason why certificates of domicile granted in Natal, which, as everyone knows, are issued after very careful scrutiny, should not be accepted for the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope.

32. THE C. S. A. R. AND PASSENGER TRAFFIC

In the Transvaal Government Gazette for the 8th instant is published a Bye-law for regulating passenger traffic on the Central South African Railways. The Bye-law is a result of the investigation carried out by Lord Selborne on the complaint of the Rand Pioneers, as also the Coloured people’s deputation that waited on His Excellency some months ago. The Bye-law is purely impersonal, and, on the face of it, seems to be perfectly inoffensive. It states that passengers are to conform to any instructions given by the station-master, guard or other official authorities for the purposes, as to the compartment in which they shall travel or the seats they are to occupy, and no person shall remain in any compartment or seat if requested by such official to vacate the same. If the circumstances necessitate any passenger having to travel in a compartment of inferior class to that for which he holds a ticket, the difference in the fare shall be refunded by the Railway Department, on application to the Traffic Manager.

Refusal to comply with the Bye-law carried with it a penalty not exceeding 40s. or seven days’ imprisonment. The Railway authorities have always possessed these powers, but the Bye-law emphasizes the fact. In its practical effect, it means that Coloured passengers may have to travel in an inferior compartment to that for which they may hold tickets. Whether it will be mischievous in its working or not will very largely depend upon those who will be authorised to regulate traffic, and a very great measure of tact will have to be exercised if inconvenience and rough treatment are to be avoided.

33. THE LONDON INDIAN SOCIETY AND PROF. GOKHALE

Within a short time of his arrival in England, the whole country has been resounding with the speeches of Prof. Gokhale. The London Indian Society gave a dinner in honour of Prof. Gokhale and Dadabhai, the Grand Old Man of India. We give below the gist of Prof. Gokhale’s speech delivered on the occasion, as it is very instructive and deserves careful study. The main point it emphasizes is the spread of education in India. We have already written on the subject in our English Section. We hold that, even in South Africa, we shall not be happy without education. Education is the most potent means to happiness in the modern age. Prof. Gokhale has given 20 years of his life to the Fergusson College for a mere pittance, and is even now serving the country, without trying to amass wealth for himself. Even the monthly income of Rs. 1,000 which he gets as a member of the Imperial Legislative Council, he does not use for himself, but for the country. In the course of his speech, he said:

Twenty years ago, when I left the University and began to take an interest in public questions, the National Congress was held for the first time and you (Mr. Bonnerji) were called upon to take the chair on that occasion. Since that time down to the present day you have been active in the service of the country; and even today, though unwell, you are attending this gathering. The country can never forget the great services rendered by you. I have no wish to make any lengthy speech this evening. What can I say on the Indian question in the presence of two such veteran leaders of our cause as Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji and Mr. Bonnerji? But I cannot help saying a few words to emphasize the lesson we can learn from the speech of Mr. Dadabhai. He has spoken with that over-mastering force of conviction which comes from a life-long and strenuous exertion on behalf of his countrymen. He is the one man in India who is entitled to speak in the terms in which he has addressed us. We of the younger generation have no right to speak as he has spoken.

You all know our present condition. I would say that it might deteriorate still further. We must rely mainly upon ourselves. If our aspirations are ever to be fulfilled, we must realize the solemn responsibility which such aspirations impose on us. It is no use merely analysing the difficulties of the situation, and then sitting still with folded hands. It is for the younger generation to plunge into the struggle. We need not be afraid though dark clouds threaten us. It is really when times are dark that good men and true are tested. There can be but one issue to this struggle, if only we are true to ourselves. We have to take a lesson from the events happening in Japan and Russia. I think the time has now come when a number of our young men should give up everything in life in order to serve their country. If all of us are absorbed in our own pursuits, and look after our own interest mostly, we have no right to find fault with others if the condition of the country does not improve. The prime necessity of the country today is education. By education I do not mean the mere rudiments of primary education, but a knowledge of our rights, and along with them of our responsibilities and our duties. It is not enough that such education is spread among a handful of us; it has to be spread amongst the crores of our people. How is this to be done? We cannot expect this education to be given to the masses by our rulers. For that we have ourselves to be ready and devote time to it. The number of young men coming forward should steadily increase. We shall have truly honoured Dadabhai if we learn this lesson from his life. It is no use simply praising his numerous virtues—his humility, his simplicity, his earnestness, his sacrifice, his selflessness and his tireless hope—we should try to emulate them. It should be our aspiration to die for the sake of our country. If a sufficient number of young men come forward to dedicate their lives to the service of the country, no power on earth can keep us back. Only then will the dark clouds hovering over us be dispelled. Only then shall we succeed, India will march forward, our pettiness disappear, our glory shine throughout the world, and the destiny of which we are dreaming today be realized.

34. TRANSVAAL PERMITS

Great changes are taking place in the procedure for issuing permits to Indians. Lord Selborne has ordered that the entire control of the Permit Office in Johannesburg be made over to the Colonial Office. This seems to have been largely due to the efforts of the deputation. Improvement or deterioration in the condition of Indians will now depend on the manner in which the change is made. We believe it will improve, though we may have to suffer some hardship for the time being.

JOHANNESBURG,

December 21, 1905

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter as also your telegram. If Hemchand is incapacitated or dismissed¹ you may use Gokuldas unless, according to my strong recommendation, he goes over to the Tamil desk, in which case I could send Kalyandas.

The excursion ticket is very cheap. I am trying to get your permit and you shall have it by the time you are ready. I am very glad you have finally decided to come over.

I have received from Mr. Hormusji Edulji² from Delagoa Bay a draft for £3/7/6. He tells me that he would like to have a receipt from the Press directly. You may, therefore, send him a receipt for the amount, which covers his advertisement and subscription. He also tells me that he has not been receiving his Paper lately. Please see to this.

You say you have sent me a box of peaches. I may say that I have not yet received it.

Virji will be leaving at the end of the month. Please pay him his salary and pay him also his deck passage and something for food on board. I do not know what is the usual thing. You need not haggle about it but you may see him. Let him have all that on the last day of this month.

Yours sincerely,

36. LETTER TO HIGH COMMISSIONER’S SECRETARY

JOHANNESBURG,
December 22, 1905

SIR,

I have the honour to draw His Excellency’s attention to two Draft Ordinances that appeared in the Orange River Colony Government Gazette dated the 15th instant, namely, Draft Ordinances “to amend the Laws relating to Passes” and “to regulate and control the procuring and engaging of coloured people to do work or labour within or beyond the borders of the Orange River Colony”.

My Association does not wish to deal with the details of the two measures, but my Association ventures to draw His Excellency’s attention to the fact that both of them apply to British Indians also as being included in the definition of the term “Coloured people”. In practice, none of the Ordinances would apply to British Indians. My Association, therefore, considers that the insult that is implied in the definition is totally unwarranted.

My Association will, therefore, feel deeply grateful if His Excellency could intervene on behalf of British Indians and free the Ordinance from the objectionable definition, which, while it does no good to the Colony, is highly offensive to British Indians.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ABDUL GANI
CHAIRMAN,

37. THE HARVEST

The harvest is indeed rich, but the labourers are few. There are many things that await workers, and every one of these things is most essential to be done. If, however, we had a choice to make amongst the many things as to what should receive precedence, education among Indians would be the first.

We are now in the midst of the Christmas holidays. The year will soon be closed upon us. To many British Indians who read these words it is, or it ought to be, a season of deep spiritual awakening, for, to Christians, the Christmas season is a season of holiness. We are, therefore, anxious to touch the most responsive chords in the hearts of the Indian youths who are born and bred in South Africa, and to whom South Africa is their home. Those that have received any education owe it to their parents, many of whom were, perhaps, without any knowledge of letters. What should the latter do in their turn for those of their countrymen who are in need of education and culture, and all that is implied in these two words? We have already remarked upon the fact that the education of Indian youths is very much neglected. What little is being done is being done by missionary enterprise, partially supported by the Governments in South Africa. There is not a single school of importance, on which we can lay our hands, which is carried on entirely by Indian enterprise. This is one of those departments in which, while we have always a right to look to the Government to give the lead, it is possible to help ourselves. Nor is it a matter merely of money. The First thing needful is a sufficient number of self-sacrificing young men who would devote themselves to educational work as a labour of love. That seems to us to be an indispensable condition. The Roman Catholics produced the best teachers in the European world because the teachers accept and expect no payment. Burmese children receive,

1 Vide “Compulsory Education in India”, 7-10-1905
according to Burmese notions, a full education, because the teachers are volunteers. The same rule was followed in ancient India, and even today the village schoolmaster is a poor man. The Fergusson College, of which Professors Gokhale and Paranjape are such brilliant stars,¹ is an instance of a revival of the same after the modern style. Nothing short of an introduction of that type in South Africa would ever solve the whole Indian question. The duty, therefore, before the young Indians in South Africa is simple and clear. The work before them is not a work of a day or few months, but it is a work of years; nor is it a work which can be done without strenuous labour. They have not only to be content with poverty, but they have to train themselves for the vocation. There is no royal road to the goal, but no one need on this account be disheartened. Even if one young man took it into his head to devote his lifetime to the uplifting of Indian children, he could do it. Though co-operation and riches will always be of very great assistance, teaching is a department of work in which one teacher alone can be a host in himself. None need, therefore, wait for others to take up the work. And there is no calling so sacred. As a Sanskrit verse says:

Kingship and learning are never equal:
A King is worshipped in his own kingdom,
But a learned man throughout the world.
Again:
Riches are spent by use; but learning is increased by it.

While we are making this appeal to the Indian youths, we would draw their attention to the glowing words addressed by Professor Gokhale to the London Indian Society on the occasion of the reception given to Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji and himself. After placing vividly before his hearers the noble example of the Grand old Man of India, he says:

Let us not forget that great events are happening around us and if we want to play our part in the world’s history, we must show ourselves worthy of playing that part. I think the time has come now when a number of our young men should give up everything in life for the sake of serving their country. The magnitude of the task before us imperatively demands this. If all of us are absorbed in our own pursuits and look mainly after our own individual interests and leave the country to look after herself, we have no right to complain if things do not move faster than they do. Unless education is spread largely in our country—by education, I do not mean the mere rudiments of primary education but a knowledge of our rights, of what is due to us, of the responsibility which goes with such rights—unless this education is spread largely among the masses of the people, our hopes are likely to remain mere hopes for an indefinite period. Therefore, the only solution of the difficulty is that we should understand the necessity—the supreme necessity—of such education, and those of us who are qualified to spread it must recognise our duty and go forward and undertake the task. I think at the present day no work can be more truly patriotic than this. This is the responsibility which the words of our great and venerable leader impose upon us, and I venture to think that the country has a right now to expect that a certain proportion—small [as] it may be at the beginning but steadily increasing—of our young men will respond whole-heatedly to this call of duty. If this is realised, however dark the outlook at times may be, success must ultimately crown our efforts, for our numbers are so large that no power on earth can stay our forward march if only we do not ourselves falter.

There is nothing in these words of Professor Gokhale’s, who, be it remembered, has tested in his own life for twenty years the truth he has inculcated, that does not apply to us in South Africa. Will anyone rise to the occasion? The harvest to be reaped is rich and plentiful.

_Indian Opinion, 23-12-1905_

38. THE N. G. R. AND INDIANS

We have received a complaint, signed by three Indians, which we reproduce in the Gujarati columns, regarding unnecessary inconvenience to which Indian passengers, it is evident, are put at some stations on the Natal Government Railways. Our correspondents say:

We hope you will bring to the notice of the authorities our complaint as to our grievances. On the 13th December, our friend, Mr. Valli Arif, was leaving by the four o’clock mail train. We intended to go to the platform at the Central Station to see him off, but the constable at the platform, in a rough manner, prevented us from going. On our asking him to explain why we were being prevented, he abruptly said he would not let us go.

Our correspondents continue in the same strain. We are free to admit that there may be occasions when it may not be possible to admit an unlimited number of friends to see passengers off, but we are sure the Railway management would agree with us when we say that the public are entitled to a considerate reply and explanation, whenever occasion arises to prevent them from going on to the platform. We trust that the authorities will inquire into the matter, and prevent a repetition of the treatment complained of by our correspondents.

39. INDIAN TRADERS AT THE CAPE

Last week our Cape Correspondent dealt with the question of Indian traders. We need hardly inform our readers that special correspondents do not necessarily represent the views or the policy of this journal. As a rule, we make it a point to give all sides of the question. There would have been no occasion for emphasizing this fact, had it not been that our Cape Correspondent has dealt with the question of Indian traders at length. We hold that the petty Indian traders have been of benefit to the Colony, and we share the view recently expressed by Sir James Hulett, and some years ago by Sir Walter Wragg, the late Sir Henry Binns and others, that they consider the petty Indian trader is a much better man than his fellow-trader of the same class, and that he supplies a much-felt want. Any restriction, therefore, on his liberty would be a very serious injustice to him, and it should be the duty of the Indians at the Cape to fight strenuously against any attempt that may be made in that direction.

Indian Opinion, 23-12-1905

40. AGREEMENT BETWEEN HINDUS AND MUSLIMS

We publish elsewhere¹ a letter addressed to us by Mr. Haji Habib on the subject. If what he writes about the Karachi Traders’ Association is true,² we are sorry about it. We, also, hold that the Hindus, being the majority community, should act with greater humility. We also agree with Mr. Haji Habib, when he says that the rights demanded by the Indian National Congress would have been gained long ago if there had been unity among the Hindus and the Muslims.

There is no doubt that the leaders of both the communities should meet together and come to some kind of agreement on such matters. We see signs which indicate that such an agreement will shortly follow.

We must, however, reiterate what we have said before, viz.,

whatever be the point of dispute between the two communities, no third party should be brought in to settle it. It is easier to put up with a quarrel between two brothers; but it is intolerable that an outsider should step in and deprive both of what they have. Everyone of us should feel that way. As Mr. Rasool¹ has pointed out, a third party intervening in a quarrel is not likely to do either any good.

41. WONDERFUL IS THE WAY OF GOD²

AN INTERESTING STORY

A variety of pamphlets and booklets are published throughout Europe about Christmas time in which many noteworthy facts often appear. The well-known Mr. Stead has published a pamphlet in England, in which he has a life sketch of Count Tolstoy. We have already introduced Count Tolstoy to our readers in these columns.³ Though a millionaire, he lives an extremely austere life. There are very few men as learned as he in the world. He has written books to show how man’s life can be reformed; and, with the same object in view, has written some short stories also. We give below the translation of one of these, having the above title and considered one of his best. We invite our readers to give us their opinion about it. If they find it interesting and benefit from it, we shall publish more such stories from Tolstoy. It is said that the main incidents in the story actually occurred.

42. A RETROSPECT

Each year at this period it has been our practice to take stock of the position of Indian affairs in South Africa, which justifies the existence of this journal, and to better which is its main purpose.

We wish it was in our power to present to our readers a cheering balance-sheet, but such cannot be, in the nature of the circumstances. It is for the Indian to toil, suffer and wait, and we cannot report that he has been able, during the past year, to throw off any of his burdens. Whether we look at Natal, the Transvaal, the Cape, or the Orange River Colony, it is not possible to recall anything that may be considered in the light of an achievement. The record we have to present is a record of prevention of further losses. The strength of the community has been spent in repelling encroachments.

In Natal, as if Indians had not had enough of trouble from man, Nature herself has proved unkind. The disastrous flood claimed the largest number of victims from the Indian community. The total number of deaths due to that calamity will, perhaps, never be known. It, however, showed what Indians were capable of doing. Practically the whole of the relief work was undertaken, and efficiently performed, by the leaders of the community.

In civil matters—political liberty the Indian in Natal has not as of old, the Dealers’ Licences Act continues to be the greatest source of trouble. The two cases of Messrs Hoondamal1 and Dada Osman2 stand out prominently in this connection. They show most clearly the precarious position that every Indian merchant holds in Natal.

The Municipal Laws Consolidation Bill deprives the Indian of the municipal franchise. The Poll-tax measure, though applicable to all, is calculated most seriously to affect the Indian. The Immigration Restriction Act is being very rigorously enforced, and, as our columns have borne witness lately, the lot of an Indian passenger coming by the steamers from India is by no means enviable.

At the Cape, the Government has been strengthening its grip upon Indians by putting a wrong interpretation upon the restrictive clauses of the Immigration Act. The term “domicile” has been interpreted so as to exclude even Indian traders of old standing. Happily, the Supreme Court has come to the rescue, and has made it possible for such men to re-enter the Colony or to remain there.

1 Vide “Hoondamal’s Licence”, 15-10-1904; 26-11-1904 & “The Hoondamal Licence Again”, 17-12-1904
2 Vide “Dada Osman’s Case”, 14-9-1898
In the Transvaal, where the chief struggle is going on, the position is as indecisive as it was last year. Lord Selborne has not been able to give the Indian deputation that waited on him any definite answer, though he has promised to redress the grievances regarding the operation of the Peace Preservation Ordinance.

As for the Orange River Colony, Lord Selborne’s reply, given some months ago to a representation from the British Indian Association, shows that that Colony is not yet to open its gates to Indians, no matter who they may be.

In its communal life, however, the Indian population has shown distinct signs of progress. There is an anxiety to work in greater harmony; an anxiety to give the Indian youth a better education. In the person of Mr. Bernard Gabriel, we have the first Colonial-born Indian to have received a liberal education, and to have returned a barrister from England. The community has a right to expect him to give a good account of himself.

The visit of Professor Parmanand and the welcome given to him are an indication of the desire of the community to have in its midst more Indians of culture and education. It is to be hoped that, in the near future, this will be translated into action, and that there will be a concentrated effort to supply from within the educational needs of the community.

The retrospect is gloomy enough, and yet it is not without relieving features. Attempts to degrade the community by establishing the principle of compulsory segregation, although often renewed, have hitherto failed. There has been, on the part of the Press, greater willingness to ventilate Indian grievances. The question of Indian volunteering, first started by us, has been favourably received by it.

The revelations regarding the condition of indentured Indians, before the Prisons Commission in Natal, have received some publicity from the Natal Press, and though these are incidents which, by themselves, signify very little, they unmistakably point to the fact that the community has to proceed along the lines laid down by it when the struggle first commenced, namely, to continue it with reasonableness, as acknowledged by Lord Selborne, with patience, and yet with persistence.

Indian Opinion, 30-12-1905

43. THE ORANGE RIVER COLONY

We wish to call the attention of the responsible authorities to certain draft Ordinances that are published in the Orange River Colony Government Gazette for the 15th December, 1905, and to certain Town Regulations. The first Ordinance is entitled “to amend the Laws relating to Passes”, and it requires every male Coloured person to hold a pass for a certain period, renewable from time to time. Another Ordinance is “to regulate and control the procuring and engaging of coloured people to do work or labour within or beyond the borders of the Orange River Colony”. The method, according to which the framers of the Ordinance would “procure” Coloured labour, is by licensing labour agents, who may employ “runners or messengers to procure, ply, or seek for coloured labourers”. The messengers are to hold 5/- permits. There are sections governing the issue of licences to such labour agents, and the usual safeguard against abuse of such licences or misrepresentations by labour agents. It has, we suppose, become a recognised thing in South Africa for such labour agents to be appointed for “inducing Kaffirs to work”. Some call such a system a gentle coaxing; others call it a modified form of forced labour. We cannot question the policy that has been sanctioned for a long time, and its criticism does not lie within our domain. Unfortunately, the term “Coloured person” is, in the Orange River Colony, interpreted invariably to mean “all coloured persons, who, in accordance with laws or customs, are called Coloured persons, or are treated as such, of whatsoever race or nationality they may be”. It, therefore, includes Asians, Malays and others. Both the above-mentioned Ordinances on that account are open to very serious objections, and we cannot understand why the studied insult implied should be irritatingly kept up. Lord Selborne, in his reply to the British Indian Association, has admitted that there are very few Asians in the Orange River Colony. Why, then, should the offensive definition be maintained? If it is, in practice, inoperative, the only reason for its existence can be for the wanton pleasure of the inhabitants of the Orange River Colony, who wish to triumph over this implied degradation of the Asiatic races. It is these gentlemen who were pleased, in the Republican days, to describe Indians as those who considered their women as soulless, and as being a people known for the loathsome diseases from which they suffered. Must the authorities continue to feed the flame of such unreasoning, ignorant prejudice? We have referred to Town Regulations, and we find the old story repeated for the Municipalities of Dewetsdorp and Brandford—both of them townships bearing glorious names. These Regulations are of the same type as those which we have reproduced often in these columns. They are framed to control the movement of Coloured people, even the possession by them of cattle, horses, mules, sheep or goats! No Coloured man “may run on the Town Commonage more than four cattle, horses, or mules, and eight sheep or goats, for which he shall pay monthly 1/- per head for large stock, and three pence per head for sheep or goats”. No Coloured inhabitant of the Location may have a stranger coming to him without notice being given to the Town Clerk, nor may an entertainment or a gathering be held without such permission. He may not walk even within the Location after eleven o’clock at night, “except for urgent reasons”. We have said enough to revive our readers’ recollections of similar by-laws for other townships. Are these by-laws, we ask once more, necessary for the protection of the predominant race, so far as British Indians are concerned?

Indian Opinion, 30-12-1905

44. DISUNITY AND RIOTS IN THE HEIDELBERG COMMUNITY

The Muslim community in Heidelberg has for some time past been divided over the question of the local mosque, and this has led to the formation of two factions. Though the dispute was taken to a law court, where it was decided, unity in the community has not been restored.

This is a matter for great sorrow. That a quarrel regarding a mosque should be taken to a court of law is, we believe, in itself a thing to be ashamed of. But it is worse when the dispute continues even after it has been to the court. We are not going to adjudge who is at fault. We would only say to both the parties that such a quarrel is a stain on the whole community. We in this country are closely watched by all. It would be, we believe, a disservice to ourselves if we expose our faults in public under such circumstances. We still hope the members of both the parties will take thought and end the dispute. We give below a translation of a Special Correspondent’s report published in the Transvaal Leader of the 23rd instant, which will show how serious the matter is:
Our Heidelberg Correspondent has sent us a telegram regarding the serious developments among the Arabs there. Fortunately, the damage is not so great as was apprehended, though the dispute was serious. The peace of a quiet town like Heidelberg was disturbed at noon as a result of the misbehaviour of the Arabs. The quarrel started at a meeting of the trustees of the mosque held in the court building. At last, it became so serious that the police had to be called in to prevent bloodshed. The news having spread through the town, many onlookers collected in the Market Square to see the murderous rioting. Mr. Coutsey and Mr. Gisso tried hard to quieten the parties, but those responsible for the breach of the peace would not be mollified. For a time, the situation appeared very serious. Sticks and brickbats were freely used. The meeting became a pandemonium. It is impossible to imagine what would have happened, had not the police arrived in time. An Arab’s head was broken. The police thereupon cleared the room of all the men. Before the might of the police the excited Arabs scattered like straw before the wind. For a time it appeared that the police intervention had put an end to the strife. But on coming out, the Arabs started rioting again; and all efforts to quench the conflagration were in vain. One can only guess how the rioting started. But the matter must have been serious, for our Correspondent says that the conflagration has not yet subsided. The police still remain posted near the Town Hall. There is thus no cause for fear. The quarrel is confined to the Arabs only and the white population need not be alarmed. Both the parties say, however, that they will fight it out in the open. All was quiet last night, but the quarrel has not subsided and the danger of further disturbances persists.

Who will not feel ashamed to read this? We have to hang our head from shame even while translating this. We hope the Heidelberg people will realize their folly, feel ashamed of themselves and return to normal.

45. EDUCATION AMONG THE KAFFIRS

A journal, named \textit{Invo}, is published in the Cape Colony for the benefit of the Kaffirs. Mr. Tengo Jababun, a Kaffir, who is its proprietor, seems to be striving for the advancement of his community. In the context of the discussion that is at present going on about the spread of education among the Kaffirs, Mr. Tengo Jababun is actively working for the founding of a huge college for Natives in South Africa. The object of his tour is twofold: firstly, to collect a big fund for the college, and secondly, to obtain signatures on a petition emphasizing the need for such a college and requesting the Government for assistance.

Mr. Tengo Jababun interviewed the Editor of the \textit{Transvaal Leader} who has published his statement in full. Mr. Tengo hopes to raise £ 50,000 from among the Kaffirs and to get 2,00,000 signatures from them for his petition.

Mr. Tengo hopes to acquire the present Government school for Kaffirs and the adjoining site at Lovedale and there build a big institution for imparting higher education to the Kaffirs.

Out of the 836 Kaffirs from Lovedale who passed the Cape University examinations during 1886-1900, 13 boys passed the Matriculation Examination. In all, 768 Kaffir teachers have been trained by the Lovedale Institute. During this period, the Kaffirs in Lovedale paid £ 63,734 towards fees and other expenses.

46. AWAKENING IN CHINA

It appears that Japan’s victory has led to a greater stir in China than one might suppose. The people there have begun to think of re-organizing their army on a sound basis. Seven students belonging to the Royal family have recently gone to London for training in armament factories. A few others have proceeded to Germany to be trained in the manufacture of Krupp guns.

47. LETTER TO HIGH COMMISSIONER’S SECRETARY

JOHANNESBURG,
January 3 1906

TO
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY
TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR SOUTH AFRICA
JOHANNESBURG

SIR,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 20th ultimo with reference to certain Draft Ordinances published in a recent issue of the Government Gazette for the Orange River Colony.

I venture to invite His Excellency’s attention to the fact that it is not stated in my letter of the 22nd ultimo that the Ordinances referred to do not apply to British Indians. The contention of my Association is that the Ordinances in question do apply to British Indians in theory but they do not in practice, and it is for that very reason, that the definitions [are] taken from the old law that my Association submits it is an unnecessary insult to the Indian community to retain the definitions. A continuous inclusion of British Indians in the term “coloured persons”, as it is understood in the Orange River Colony and other parts of South Africa, has resulted in very serious injustice being done to them. My Association, therefore, humbly ventures to think that in all new legislation at any rate the definition should be amended so as to avoid the offence which the community, represented by my Association, feels so keenly. Moreover, I would venture to invite His Excellency’s attention to the fact that there is already on the Statute-book of the Orange River Colony special legislation affecting Asiatics and, therefore, British Indians.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Yours obedient servant,

ABDUL GANI
CHAIRMAN,

48. LETTER TO M. H. NAZAR

[JOHANNESBURG,]
January 5, 1906

DEAR MR. NAZAR,

I have been discussing with Chhaganlal the question of Tamil and Hindi editing. I see that Pillay must go. There is nobody to replace him. The more I think, the more I feel that we ought for the present to do away both with Tamil and Hindi. We do not give the right stuff. We are not in a position to do so. I know there are drawbacks, but I do feel that we have to put up with these drawbacks because the advantages to be gained by dropping Tamil and Hindi are many. So long as we make a definite statement that it is our intention, as soon as we have a proper staff, to resume Tamil and Hindi, I do not think we need be afraid. I am doing all I can to prepare for the Tamil work myself. Maganlal and Gokuldas will also do likewise, but until then I think that it is very necessary to drop both. Tamil will have to be dropped in any case; Hindi may therefore go with it. I shall thank you to let me have your opinion as soon as possible.

Yours sincerely,

49. THE OUTLOOK

We gave, last week, a retrospect of the Indian position in South Africa during the year that has just closed. We propose this week to dive into the future, and to ascertain whether there is any possibility of a better hope. We are inclined to think there is. First, because the Indian cause is just, and every just cause is its own strength. It can, therefore, only be spoiled by the Indians themselves giving way to despair and consequently lethargy. Secondly, although Lord Selborne has not given any definite clue to his policy regarding Indians, his desire to serve conscientiously all the subjects of the King-Emperor gives very good ground for the hope that when actual legislation in the Transvaal is passed, he will have given it a shape that will at least remove the present intolerable uncertainty, and do away with the

1 Vide “A Retrospect”, 30-12-1905
wanton degradation that the present Asiatic laws in the Transvaal imply. If such a position be secured in the Transvaal, seeing that it gives the lead to the other colonies in South Africa, it may not be unreasonable to suppose that, to a certain extent, the condition of Indians will improve in the other parts of South Africa also. But, above all we have a right to expect a change for the better from the new Government at Home. Mr. John Morley is the custodian of the interests of the millions of the inhabitants of India. There is every reason to think that the Government will outlive the impending general election, and will have a good working majority in the House of Commons. Mr. John Morley has not hitherto worked half-heartedly in anything he has taken up. His sympathies for the weaker party are well known. A moderate appeal to him, therefore, on behalf of Indians in South Africa cannot fail to obtain a good hearing. No matter how sacred may be the independence of self-governing colonies, he is not without remedy against oppression by the stronger over the weaker party. There is, too, ground for the hope that Lord Elgin will not give away the position of British Indians. But most important of all must always remain the efforts of the Indian community from within. We have pointed to extraneous circumstances to show that the position of British Indians in South Africa is not entirely cheerless, but self-help alone can be the primary cause for any amelioration in that position. No Colonial Secretary, no Indian Secretary, no High Commissioner, however sympathetically inclined or desirous he may be to help, can do any substantial good, unless they have the hearty co-operation of the Indians themselves. They must show utility of purpose, co-operation and strenuousness in fighting their own battles. Our Gujarati columns have shown that the people all over South Africa are desirous of attaining to a larger measure of these attributes. We have received ample encouragement for greater effort from what is at present going on in Bengal. The Indians in that Presidency are, under circumstances the most adverse, exhibiting an unprecedented spirit of co-operation, self-sacrifice and patience. Professor Gokhale and Lala Lajpat Rai have shown, during their campaign in England, what even two earnest workers can do for a cause. How can Indians in South Africa, then, do otherwise than march boldly with the progressive current which is today impelling the Indian nation onward to its goal?

50. THE STATUS OF BRITISH INDIANS

As anticipated by us, the Indian National Congress did its duty towards Indians in South Africa, by passing a resolution, at its recent sitting at Banaras on the subject of the treatment of British Indians in this sub-continent, praying, as a means of extorting relief, for the suspension of the supply of indentured labour to Natal, until the “most Colony sees its way to redress[ing] the existing intolerable disabilities and recognises Indians as equally [sic] members of the Empire. We heartily congratulate Congress on thus once again publicly drawing attention to the subject, and supporting Lord Curzon’s policy in this matter as declared by him in his last Budget speech at Simla.

Those who have kept themselves informed of affairs in India will have noticed that, specially since 1897, the entire Indian population, Anglo-Indian as well as Indian and the whole Indian Press, English and vernacular, have voiced persistently the sentiments to which the Congress resolution gives expression. Unfortunately, the system of government in India is such as to give very few opportunities for the responsible officers to publicly announce their opinions on public matters, however serious they may be; and the natural result is that it is very difficult to know them. It is for this reason, chiefly, that we find members of both Houses in England putting questions to the Secretary of State for India, and thus obtaining glimpses of what may be in the mind of the Government of India; and Indians in South Africa owe no little gratitude to such champions of their cause as the East India Association, Sir M. M. Bhownaggree, Sir Wm. Wedderburn and Sir Chas. Dilke, who by onstant correspondence and timely questions have occasionally succeeded in eliciting something of the opinion of the Indian Government in the matter of the position of British Indians in the Colonies. Our readers cannot have forgotten the several meetings of the East India Association, held specially to discuss this subject, when speakers disclosed what had passed between them and the Secretaries for India and the Colonies, individually; but proper light was only thrown on the ideas of the Government of India in this matter when an influential deputation waited on Lord George Hamilton\(^1\), and His Lordship gave a frank reply. Since then, vigorous efforts have continued to be made, with the result that Lord Curzon deemed it politic to take the Indian public into his confidence, and seized the last Budget speech as an opportunity for breaking the seal of secrecy (which, for reasons best known to itself, the Natal Government still very zealously guards) by publicly declaring the attitude and policy of his Government in the matter, and thus satisfying the millions under his care that he and his advisers were fully alive to the serious-ness of the situation, and that they would leave no stone unturned to secure justice for the tens of thousands of His Imperial Majesty’s “loyal and beloved” subjects, who have emigrated to the Colonies with the view of bettering their material condition within the Empire.

Lord Curzon then said in the course of a weighty pronouncement:

We have informed the Natal Government that we reserve to ourselves the fullest liberty to take at any time such measures in regard to emigration to that Colony as we may think necessary in order to secure proper treatment for our Indian settlers; and we have recently again declined to take any step towards facilitating the emigration of labourers under indenture until the Natal authorities substantially modify their attitude.

But there is one point about this matter—and that the chief one—which has not been sufficiently emphasised. It would seem that the treatment of British Indians in South Africa has not been raised above the arena of mere bargaining, and the rights of Indians as British subjects, apart from the special services in the terms of their indenture, appear to be ignored so far as possible by the Natal Government, and not adequately insisted on by the Government of India. Lord Curzon recognised that the need of indentured labour “might prove a powerful lever in our hands in securing better treatment for Indians generally in South Africa”; but, as we have said, this would be extorting relief and not securing it on high Imperial grounds. It would seem that were the supply of indentured labour to be stopped, the Government of India would feel itself powerless to protect its own subjects in South Africa. The position of British Indians would be a truly sorry one if that were so. But such a thing would be too anomalous under the British flag. We have now in Mr. John Morley, the new Secretary for India, a sympathetic, honest and most capable man, and in Lord Elgin, the Colonial Secretary, a statesman of broad views and large experience, who has himself been Viceroy of India. When it is remembered that Lord Minto, the present Viceroy, was

\(^1\) Secretary of State for India, 1895-1903
Governor-General of Canada, it may reasonably be hoped that the question of the status of British Indians will be definitely and satisfactorily settled in the near future.

51. INDIANS IN THE O. R. C.

Lord Selborne has sent the British Indian Association a prompt and courteous reply to its representation, protesting against the definition of the term “coloured person” in certain draft ordinances recently published in the O. R. C. Government Gazette. We venture to think that Lord Selborne has misread the representation of the Association, which has not stated that “none of the ordinances referred to would apply to British Indians”. It has said that, “in practice”, they will not apply. The two statements are quite different. His Excellency has, moreover, justified the definition of “coloured person” on the ground that it is a legacy from the old Government. But British Indians object to the definition for that very reason. Their position is this. The ordinances will not in practice apply to them. The Boer Government insulted the Indians by classing them with the Kaffirs. Now there is no occasion to perpetuate a needless insult. The argument seems to be unanswerable. It is a pity that His Excellency, in spite of his wish not to offend, has not seen his way to grant the very reasonable request of the Association.

Sunday, January 14, 1906

*BHAISHRI MOHANLAL,

I got your letter and the notice served on you. You have sent the notice by Mr. Glelanberg. In the letter you refer to a summons, but you have not sent a copy. I don’t know what I can say from here. Of course you will have to put up a defence there. I think you must win in this case. I could have been more definite if you had sent the summons. If your translation of the Gujarati into English is correct, the gentleman will be able to do nothing to you. If the case is not likely to come up on the 16th, it will be better for you to come over here with the papers. I too have heard that some Muslims have been trying to create difficulties, but you need not be anxious because of that. It is necessary to have patience. If you, on your part, show no

I got the summons. Judging from it, I believe no harm can come to you. I don’t think it will be proper to involve me in this matter; I will come, though, if you have any fears. If the matter can be settled out of court, there will be no harm; in fact it will be better.

Let me know to what date the case is adjourned and also inform me about the outcome. I shall send Chi. Chhaganlal if possible. Just now, he is busy collecting dues here.

21-24 COURT CHAMBERS,
Johannesburg,
January 18, 1906

BHAII MOHANLAL,

I have your letter. If you insist, I will go, but I would advise you not to call me. At present, it will be better to keep me out of a dispute which has taken on a communal colour, be it only the slightest. Even if you call me, I shall not be able to appear in Court on your behalf in case I am required to give evidence about the books [of account] in Gujarati. I feel, therefore, that you should engage a local pleader. If he applies for the Gujarati and the English books to be sent to me for inspection and for a commission to be sent here to take my evidence, it will be possible for me to give evidence from here. It will be enough for you to prove that you had to write out the accounts from entries in Gujarati and that you have done this with accuracy. Even if you have made a mistake somewhere, he will have to prove that that has resulted in a loss to him and only then will he be entitled to damages. This is all very difficult, but, if the local pleader is even moderately capable, you will come to no harm at all. You may get in touch with a pleader there and see what he says. Come up here after wards and then we shall consider if it is necessary for me to go there. However, I leave everything to you.

55. PAYMENT OF THE POLL-TAX

The Poll-Tax, as was to be expected, does not seem to be paid with much enthusiasm, judging by the meagre response to date. The trouble will begin towards the end of next month. The authorities will not have an easy task in discriminating between those who can pay and those who cannot. But one thing, at all events, seems clear: the Government appear determined to squeeze blood out of stones. Some time ago, an Indian approached the Colonial Secretary, asking if Government would be prepared to extend the time of payment in the case of those who were dependent upon their meagre crops to provide the necessary sovereign, and received a reply that they were not prepared to do so, but suggesting that such people could raise a loan on the security of their crops. One would have thought that, in a civilised country, a man who was living such a hand-to-mouth existence that he had no money left after planting his crops would not be expected to pay the tax. But such a sorry condition appears to the authorities to be comparative affluence. There is evidently something very rotten in a State that has to descend to such depths as these. The authorities might have gone a step further and suggested that the poorest man could raise the money to pay the tax by mortgaging his body for dissection purposes. But we might point out that, according to section 14(4) of the Act, any person who shall prove that he is unable through poverty to pay the tax shall be excused therefrom for the time being, but this excuse shall not prevent a subsequent prosecution or action if such person shall afterwards become able to pay the tax and fails to do so.

It appears, therefore, that persons so placed as the correspondent referred to can plead poverty and pay the tax later from the proceeds of their crops. There will be no need whatever to go the length of raising a loan on the growing crop (and paying usurious interest), since the Act provides for this very contingency.

56. MANSUKHLAL HIRALAL NAZAR

It was in the dark days of December, 1896, that Mansukhlal Hiralal Nazar landed in Durban, a perfect stranger. He intended to live a quiet life, but a patriot of his type was not able to sit still when he saw his countrymen needing the help of a guiding hand during those trying times. The Durban Demonstration² was then brewing. Meetings were held in the Town Hall to protest against the immigration of Indians. The Indian passengers on board the Naderi and the Courland were threatened with dire results if they attempted to land on the shores of Natal. It was then that Mr. Nazar arrived on the scene, and was hailed as a deliverer by the Indian community. Not a soul knew who he was, but his magnetic personality and the authoritative manner in which he spoke about the duty of the people at the time attracted the leaders to him immediately, and it is difficult to say what the Indian community would have done had Mr. Nazar not arrived at the time. He remained closely closeted with Mr. Laughton, who was acting as counsel for the community, and I have it from Mr. Laughton’s own lips that Mr. Nazar’s assistance and his suggestions at the time proved to him of the utmost value. From that day to the date of his death, Mr. Nazar placed the public cause before his own; his dream of leading a private life was never realised, and though people were never allowed to know it, for the cause of his countrymen Mr. Nazar has died a pauper. For days together he used to live away from Durban, in a secluded home in Sydenham, existing on nothing but a little milk and a few biscuits, and time alone will show the nature and value of the unostentatious services rendered by Mr. Nazar.

He was born in the early sixties, and belonged to a family of noble traditions and to one of the most cultured castes in India, namely, the Kayastha division. As is shown by his family name, the Nazars, in the early days, must have served the Mogul emperors as trusted officials. The late Mr. Hiralal Nazar, the father of the subject of this memoir, was one of the earliest products of English education in the Western presidency, and was a tried servant of the Government.

⁴ Bombay
He was a civil engineer, and, by his ability and strength of character, inspired so much confidence, that the Government allowed him to possess a knowledge of the secret defences in the fortress at Bombay. Mr. Nazar was very nearly related to the late Justice Nanabhai Haridas. He was educated in Bombay, and having passed his matriculation examination with distinction, he prosecuted his further studies at the Elphinstone College at Bombay. As a rule, he was easily first in his class, and gave promise of a brilliant career, but being of a restless turn of mind, he never finished his studies. He imbibed from Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji and the other Indian patriotic giants of the time the idea of using his life for the service of his country, and he was, therefore, instrumental in establishing an Under graduates’ Association which vied with the older established Graduates’ Association, under the brilliant chairmanship of Sir Pherozeshah Mehta. Memorials that were drafted by Mr. Nazar and presented to the Government about University Reform showed Mr. Nazar’s brilliant penmanship and his political turn of mind. He also studied for four years at the Grant Medical College, and was thereby able to receive a fair amount of knowledge of medicine which was very useful to him in after-life. Mr. Nazar did not wish to accept any service, and belonging to the Hon. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji’s school of thought, he considered that the salvation of India must come both from within and from without, and that education was not to be used as a means for obtaining position nor was it to be divorced from commerce. He and his talented brothers, therefore, set out for England, and threw themselves into the commercial strife with great energy, but Mr. Nazar was always a politician first and everything else afterwards. He, therefore, continued his public work in London. He identified himself with many useful institutions, and was elected a delegate to the Oriental Congress that was held in Christiania. He came into contact with the late Professor Max Muller and many other Orientalists, and by his accurate knowledge of Oriental literature, commanded their admiration. But Mr. Nazar was also something more. He was a journalist of a very high type. He used, at one time, to be very intimately connected with the Advocate of India to which he contributed not a little, free of charge. He used to correspond with many well-known news-papers in India as if he was preparing for a similar career in Natal. Not having succeeded so well as he wished to in his commercial affairs in Europe, all over which he had travelled more than once, he migrated to South Africa. The story of his work in

---

1 Prominent Indian Congressman;
2 Oslo, Norway
Natal, which he made his home, is soon told. Instead of developing his commercial work, he threw himself heart and soul into public work. In 1897, he was sent to England as a special delegate to voice the grievances of the British Indians. There he met the late Sir William Wilson Hunter, Sir Lepel Griffin, the Hon. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, Sir Mancherji Bhownaggree, and many other public men. Sir William Hunter was so struck with Mr. Nazar’s ability and moderation that he devoted a special article in the columns of The Times mentioning Mr. Nazar’s work. The late Lord Northbrook, Lord Reay and other Anglo-Indians gave him a patient hearing, and as a result of his work, the East India Association took up the cause of British Indians most warmly. I do not wish to lay stress on Mr. Nazar’s work in that direction. I wish to raise no discordant note. His most imperishable work was all done behind the scenes, and it consisted in nourishing the tender plant of mutual understanding between the two communities in South Africa. He served as a link between the two. He was a politician of a high order. There was nothing of the agitator about him. His work was all quiet. He interpreted the best traits of each community to the other. Whilst he advocated strongly the rights of his countrymen, in season and out of season, he placed before the latter their responsibilities, and always counselled prudence and patience. He was pre-eminently a friend of the poor. The poorest class of Indians found in him a faithful adviser and friend. When the Natal Indian Ambulance Corps’ was raised, everybody advised him, because of the heart disease from which he then suffered, that it was not necessary for him to take an active part in the work of the Corps, but he would not listen, and volunteered his services as a member, and it was there that he used his knowledge of medicine to good purpose.

Without him this journal would never have come into being. In the initial stages of its struggle, Mr. Nazar took up almost the whole of the editorial burden, and if it is known for its moderate policy and sound views, the fact is due, to a very large extent, to the part that Mr. Nazar played in connection with it.

An Indian reading this account will understand thoroughly what Mr. Nazar was, when I state that he was a real Yogin, a cosmopolitan Hindu, knowing no distinction as to caste or creed, recognising no religious differences. His one solace in life was the Bhagvad Gita, the “Song Celestial”. He was imbued with its philosophy. He knew the Sanskrit text almost by heart, and the writer of this memoir is personally aware that amid his sorest trials—and he had his full share of them—he was in a position to preserve fairly perfect equanimity under the inspiration of that teaching. To an orthodox Hindu, some of his ways would appear to be strange, but Mr. Nazar was undoubtedly a strange mixture. It is not the writer’s purpose to scrutinise the character of the dead man. Indians will have to search far and wide before they will be able to find Mr. Nazar’s equal. He disdained praise and never wanted any, and whether he was blamed or praised, he never allowed his public work to be affected. We do not stumble upon such selfless workers anywhere and everywhere. They are few among all communities. Time alone will show what the Indian community and, shall I say even the European community, has lost in Mr. Nazar.

57. BLACK AND WHITE MEN

Under the above heading, Mr. H. W. Massingham contributes a powerful article to The Daily News of the 5th inst., dealing with the attitude adopted by the white community in South Africa towards the Coloured races. Mr. Massingham, with that humanitarianism that we are accustomed to attach to his name, has traversed every popular fallacy on the Colour question, and has done the Coloured community of South Africa an extremely great service. We have no fault whatever to find with his method of dealing with the subject, but we would point out the inaccuracies that appear in the portion of his article wherein he refers to the question of British Indians in the Transvaal. Mr. Massingham is apparently of the opinion that Law 3 of 1885 does not forbid them to hold land. In this contention, of course, he is quite wrong. Mr. Massingham commits the further error of supposing that Indians are “still allowed a share of the town foot-paths”. This is technically incorrect, for, by reason of a well-known judicial decision, no Indian has the right to use any municipal foot-path, and may, at the will of the first policeman, be curtly ordered into the middle of the road. These errors, however, do not diminish the value of Mr. Massingham’s timely protest against the supercilious sneer that has become so unfortunate a convention in

58. SIR DAVID HUNTER

It is with pleasure that we note Sir David Hunter intends to continue to make Natal his home, and that he has expressed his willingness to put his own wishes aside and entertain the idea of entering Parliament when he returns from his tour, should his fellow-citizens ask him to do so. That they will request him to represent them is certain, for, on all hands, Sir David's special fitness for parliamentary service is acknowledged. Although the Indian residents of Natal will have no vote in his election, their voice will none the less be raised to support him. Indians owe much to Sir David, for, in his position as General Manager of the Natal Government Railways, they have always found him not merely courteous but always considerate also. It is chiefly [due] to his sense of justice that Indians have the ordinary conveniences on the railways, instead of being compelled to travel only in a third-class compartment, as was desired by many people in the Colony; and, if their treatment by some of the railway officers is not all that it might be, it is not the fault of Sir David. He has also taken an active and practical interest in Indian education. Sir David is a fine type of the British gentleman, and the Colony has only honoured itself in honouring him. We wish Sir David a pleasant voyage, a pleasant tour, and a speedy return.

We regret to announce that we are compelled to suspend our Tamil and Hindi columns for the time being. We have struggled against great difficulties in keeping on these sections, owing to the difficulty in securing the permanent services of the necessary editors and compositors. We have been painfully aware of the fact that for some time past our Tamil and Hindi columns have not been kept up to the level we desire. We are, therefore, reluctantly obliged to take this course until such time as the members of our staff, who are training for the work, are ready and able to do justice to the two great languages.

February 9, 1906

TO
THE COLONIAL SECRETARY
PRETORIA
SIR,

My Association has been informed from various sources that, after the change of the Permit Office,² the following innovations have been made, without any warning to the Indian community, whether through my Association or otherwise.

1st. The age of minority of children who may wish to enter this country has been reduced from under sixteen to under twelve.

2nd. Affidavits of guardians are not accepted; that is to say, only those whose parents are residents of the Transvaal are allowed to come.

3rd. Witnesses for refugees outside Pretoria are now being examined by Resident Magistrates in the various districts, with the result that the applications of many refugees have, for the present, been indefinitely hung up.

My Association respectfully protests against the Indian community being thus taken unawares with reference to the above innovations. My Association has, as a rule, been at least kept informed of any contemplated changes, and, in some cases, the Government have been good enough to even consult my Association. It has come to my Association, therefore, as a disagreeable surprise that serious changes affecting the Indian community have been made in the Permit Regulations, without any notice whatsoever, and then, too, the Indian community is allowed to know these things only through actual instances.

As to the innovations themselves, it is submitted on behalf of my Association that they are calculated to do very serious harm to the community. It is difficult to understand why the age of minority has been still further reduced. My Association invites your attention to the fact that nowhere else in the British dominions have children under sixteen been prevented from entering British dominions where their parents have been allowed the right of entry. It is a matter of the gravest importance to the Indian community that the domiciled Indians should be able to bring in their children without any difficulty. Why a child of thirteen years or fifteen years should, for instance, be prohibited from joining his parents, and receiving, say, his education under them, it is difficult to understand. My Association further draws your attention to the fact that the rule does not apply to the non-Asiatic communities in the Transvaal.

As to the second innovation, hitherto orphans have been allowed to join their guardians. Under the new rule, such children will be prevented from entering the Transvaal. My Association need hardly point out that such a rule cannot but cause very great hardship.

As regards the third innovation, if the Resident Magistrates are to carry on investigations, it will cause almost interminable delay. There are refugees whose applications have been pending even for the last nine months, and if all such applications are to be referred to Resident Magistrates in the various districts, enormous delay will be caused. Moreover, there will be no continuity of procedure as to the evidence to be taken, if each town is treated separately.

My Association further submits that, when witnesses reside outside Pretoria, it will expedite matters considerably, and secure uniformity of procedure, if the same official were to be appointed for the examination of witnesses throughout.

My Association further begs to point out that it is necessary, in the interests of Justice, that there should be a periodical visit by an official to attend to those requiring permits in Johannesburg, seeing that nearly seventy-five per cent. of the refugees are destined for Johannesburg or the surrounding districts. Whilst the central offices may remain in Pretoria, the mechanical work of issuing permits and taking thumb impressions should, in the humble opinion of my Association, so far as the Johannesburg refugees are concerned, be done in Johannesburg.
Nothing has yet been known with reference to the question of whether Indian women are or are not to hold separate permits.

My Association submits that the matters referred to herein are of very vital importance, and trusts that they will receive the attention they deserve. I respectfully request an early reply.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ABDUL GANI
CHAIRMAN,

62. LETTER TO TOWN CLERK

JOHANNESBURG,
February 10, 1906

TO
THE TOWN CLERK
JOHANNESBURG

sir,

The attention of my Association has been drawn to certain recommendations made by the Manager of the Johannesburg Tramway system, for adoption by the Town Council, as regards the use of the electric tram cars by the Coloured people. My Association ventures to think that, in making these recommendations, the Manager has taken no note of the sentiments of the Coloured community or rather the British Indian community, with which my Association is concerned. My Association feels that the recommendations are scarcely meant to supply the want of British Indians. If Coloured servants may use the roofs of the tram-cars when they accompany their masters, it is very difficult to see why other Coloured people may not use them. The suggestion to run special tram-cars is hardly feasible, as the Coloured community will not then be able to have the same kind of service as the European community. The recommendation that trailer cars should be attached to the ordinary cars, for the use of Coloured people as well as for carrying parcels, is, in the humble opinion of my Association, highly insulting. My Association submits that British Indians are entitled to the same facilities as any other community in Johannesburg, I with reference to the use of the tram-cars. At the same time, my Association fully recognises the prevalent prejudice and, therefore, suggests that the inner portion of the tram-cars may be reserved for Europeans only. That would leave the roofs free to the other communities. Indeed, there is no reason why compartments may not be made even in the inner portions of the tram cars, but failing that, my Association trusts that the suggestion above made will be accepted by the Town Council. I am to place on record that, as the position stands at present, Coloured people are by law perfectly free to make use of the municipal tram-cars. It is only their forbearance which prevents them from making use of the cars.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ABDUL GANI
CHAIRMAN,

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION

The following are the recommendations of the General Manager above referred to:

1. That Coloured people should be allowed to travel on the same cars as white persons when they are domestic servants and are with their master or mistress, and that they be required to sit only on the top of the car and occupy the back seats arranged at the head of each staircase, viz., on the four seats at each end. To be charged ordinary fares.

2. That, where traffic is sufficient on any route to pay to run special cars for Coloured people, arrangements be made for Asiatics to occupy the inside of the cars and Kaffirs the outside, or vice versa. This to be experimented with on the Fordsburg and Newtown lines.

3. Should it be found later that the Coloured traffic is not sufficient to enable special cars to be run at a profit, experiments be made with single deck trailer cars coupled on to ordinary cars, and that this trailer type of car and also ordinary cars used for Coloured people be used for the parcels delivery business, which it is proposed to inaugurate at a later date.

63. LORD SELBORNE ON CHRISTIANS AND MAHOMEDANS

Lord Selborne is reported to have said at a Church meeting recently:

It seems to me that men of our race forget two things, and they are thereby often accused of caring much less about religion than they really do.
They are too careless about those observances which mark their religion, and they are too shy to let it be known, publicly, on which side they stand. It has often happened to me that a friend of mine travelling in the East has been struck with the Mahomedan, who, wherever he is at a certain time of the day, will spread out his carpet and kneel down and pray; and he has argued from that that the Mahomedan is a much better man than the Christian. The conclusion is not borne out by facts. The probability was that the Mahomedan was a much worse man than most Christians; but he grasped one fact, which we are too apt to forget: that if a man wants to have an influence in the world he must not be afraid of public opinion, and he must not hesitate to let it be known on which side he stands.

If His Excellency has been correctly reported, we fear he has been guilty of a grave indiscretion. “The probability was that the Mahomedan was a much worse man than most Christians” is not a statement that should be made by the King-Emperor’s representative in speaking of the King-Emperor’s Mahomedan subjects. Owing to his position, His Excellency has not the same liberty of speech that can be claimed by lesser mortals, and a remark of this nature coming from him is calculated to cause pain to many followers of the Prophet. But indiscretion is not characteristic of Lord Selborne’s public utterances, and it is only fair to point out that he may have been badly reported, and that, instead of saying, “The probability was”, he may have said, “It was possible” In the latter case, the remark would be quite unexceptionable. Up to the present, however, we have not heard that His Excellency has corrected the statement.

64. BRITISH INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL

Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji has added to the debt of gratitude we owe him by his thoughtfulness on our behalf at a moment when one would scarcely expect that he would have any leisure to devote to our affairs. Yet we are reminded by the re-publication, in the number of India to hand by the last mail, of a letter addressed in duplicate to the Secretaries of State for India and the Colonies, commenting upon the deputation on behalf of the British Indian Association that waited upon Lord Selborne some time since, that the watchdog of India has been on the alert in the interests of British Indians in South Africa, even in the midst of the fierce fight of an election. Mr. Dadabhai had not waited to communicate with the two Secretaries of State until the declaration of the polls, but had devoted some portion of the extremely little leisure that was permitted him to emphasising the reasonableness of the attitude adopted by the British Indian Association. It is useless for us to endeavour to manifest our appreciation of the efforts of India’s noblest patriot on behalf of his countrymen, but we would urge upon Indians in South Africa their immediate duty of endeavouring to aid Mr. Dadabhai’s work by remedying the defects in their own organisation and developing still further that spirit of enterprise and solidarity without which all his work must prove abortive.

65. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
February 13, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I sent you some time ago Miss Neufliess’ name as a paid subscriber. Please register her name as a subscriber if it is not already registered. Her post office box is 5889, Johannesburg. She ought to receive all the back numbers as from the first of January.

Manji N. Ghelani writes to me saying that he has not received for the current year numbers two and three. He has been receiving his papers regularly of late. You should therefore send him numbers two and three and let me know that you have done so. His box is 110, Pretoria.

Please change Mr. Ritch’s address at London to 41 Springfield Road, St. John’s Wood, London.

Let me know who have not paid regarding the sale of Mr. Nazar’s goods.¹

Should such changes be notified to you in future, or shall I write to Hemchand about them? I am anxious to take much of such mechanical work from your shoulders, but I want to do it cautiously. If these instructions have to pass ultimately to Hemchand, it would then cause a saving to send them directly to him. Your immediate main work is to look after the Gujarati editing and to put the books straight as soon as possible, prepare the balance-sheet and find out the cost of each building. Please let me know how far you have progressed with reference to the straightening of the books, bringing the cash book up to date and finding out the cost of the buildings.

I sent you yesterday a corrected copy of the current number of Indian Opinion. I would like you to note all the corrections carefully and avoid them in future. We ought to make the Gujarati portion totally exceptional, and if in order to do that you must concentrate your energy for a month or so to the exclusion of everything else except book-keeping, you may do so. I notice Gujarati is only seven pages. Why so? How much can Gokuldas now do of the Gujarati composition? Is he working steadily? Ask him to write to me.

With reference to your suggestion about paying £2/10 to Mr. Madanjit, we ought to pay all that and more if he kept in touch with us. It is impossible to pay anything unless he would do so. That he is working away in India I can well understand, but his work must be reproduced in the Opinion. I told him distinctly that he would be expected to help the Paper. If he will not, I do not think that we are at all called upon to give anything to him. He has not written to me. Two letters appear to have been sent from Pretoria yesterday. Please print them.\(^2\)

Yours sincerely,

67. LETTER TO ACTING CHIEF TRAFFIC MANAGER

JOHANNESBURG,
February 14, 1906

[TO]
The Acting Chief Traffic Manager
JOHANNESBURG

SIR,

Mr. M. M. Moosajee has handed to my Association copies of the correspondence between your Department and himself in connection with the train leaving Johannesburg at 8.30.

You have informed Mr. Moosajee that “Coloured passengers are not permitted to travel by the 8.39 [sic] train from Pretoria to Johannesburg”, and I suppose vice versa.

This information comes to my Association as a very disagreeable surprise. To the Indian business community, the prohibition would be a deprivation which would seriously interfere with their movements. To the Indian community in general, it is in the highest degree insulting.

My Association cannot escape the conclusion that this method of pandering to local prejudice on the part of a great administration would result in making the position of Coloured people thoroughly intolerable. My Association will be obliged if you will kindly let me know whether it is the intention, and if so, will kindly refer me to the law or regulation under which the prohibition has been imposed. Incidentally, I may be allowed to remark that the manner in which such prohibitive rules are, from time to time, made without any warning or notice to the portion of the community concerned is extremely irritating and inconvenient. My Association thinks that British Indians are at least entitled to know beforehand regulations that may be framed with reference to them.

I request an early reply.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

68. A REPLY TO “THE LEADER”

Johannesburg,

February 16, 1906

TO

The editor

The Leader

SIR,

I take the liberty of offering a few remarks on your leaderette concerning the letter of my Association addressed to the Town Clerk,1 on the question of the use of the tram-cars by my countrymen. You have written in anger and have used threats. I cannot do either, but will venture to place some facts before you for your acceptance or refutation:

1 Vide “Letter to Town Clerk”, 10-2-1906

(1) My Association never contended that all Indians should be allowed to make use of the tram-cars. The right is claimed only for those who are well and cleanly dressed.

(2) Whatever may be the position in India, I need hardly demonstrate to you that no man is born a “coolie”, and that the only test, so far as the use of the tram-cars is concerned, can be the personal appearance of the passengers.

(3) Does it not appear to you a little preposterous to raise the question of equality between the two races on the tramway question?

(4) My Association has emphatically disclaimed any intention to seek the contact of any unwilling Europeans, even with the most cultured Indians, and has, therefore, suggested that the inner portion of the cars may be reserved exclusively for Europeans. The roofs of the cars, it is contended, may, without infringing upon the sacred doctrine of “inequality”, be legitimately used by Indians who are properly dressed.

(5) The point made by my Association about forbearance is quite logical. “The will of the people”, so far as it has been reduced to law, as my Association has been advised, leaves it open to Indians to claim the right of riding on the tram-cars. The claim, therefore, as it is legal, can hardly be considered to be “absurd”.

In this connection, may I ask you a few questions? Is it logical for the white people in the Transvaal, as soon as they go to Cape Town or Natal, to ride side by side with Coloured people? Is it logical that Coloured servants who may not belong to “the higher castes”, whatever that phrase may mean, should ride on the tram-cars? Is it logical, as Mr. Soutter said at the Town Council meeting, that white men who drive in dog-carts should sit next to their Coloured drivers?

My Association takes its stand upon the policy outlined by Mr. Chamberlain before the Conference of Colonial Premiers¹ at the time of the Diamond Jubilee. The Right Hon. Gentleman said:

> We also ask to bear in mind the traditions of the Empire, which makes no distinction in favour of or against race or colour, and to exclude, by reason of their colour or by reason of their race, all Her Majesty’s Indian subjects, or even all Asiatics, would be an act so offensive to those peoples, that it would be most painful to Her Majesty to have to sanction it.... It is not because a man is of a different colour from ours that he is necessarily an undesirable immigrant, but it is because he is dirty, or he is immoral, or he is a pauper, or he has some other objection which can be defined in an Act of Parliament, and by which exclusion can be managed with regard to all those whom you really desire to exclude.

69. TRANSVAAL INDIANS AND PERMITS

The lot of the British Indian in the Transvaal is undoubtedly very uncertain and very unhappy. The letter we reproduce in another column, addressed by the Chairman of the British Indian Association to the Colonial Secretary of the Transvaal, is painful reading. The permit regulations in connection with Indians have been changed from time to time, much to their inconvenience. The latest instance, however, is in the nature of a “surprise-packet”. The regulations referred to in the letter in question, according to Mr. Abdul Gani, have been sprung upon the community without any notice, and these regulations are, if the information given to Mr. Abdul Gani be true, applicable to all Indians. The result will be that those who have arrived in South Africa, without notice of any such regulations, will be adversely affected. Natal may afford them no protection, nor may the Cape. They will have come with the deliberate intention of entering the Transvaal, and if the regulations in question are to be enforced, and are to have retrospective effect, they will cause illness, trouble, expense, and worry to the persons concerned. The least that one expects in a British colony, or any British dominion, is that laws are framed with due deliberation and after fair warning. Even the self-governing colonies of the Cape or Natal, when they passed the Immigration Restriction Laws, gave fair warning to the people concerned, and then, after the legislation was passed, it was not rigorously enforced immediately. They gave the steamship companies, and the community affected thereby, time to study the legislation in its actual working. The Cape authorities have only just given notice of their intention to fully enforce the laws, that is to say, two years after they were passed. In the Transvaal, they evidently believe in “rushing” things. The Peace Preservation Ordinance is a

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Colonial Secretary”, 9-2-1906
relic of the martial law period and, therefore, gives arbitrary authority to the Government. The use of such authority, during the period of war, is often justifiable, but when there is peace in the Transvaal, to invoke the assistance of that Ordinance against an inoffensive community, in the manner described in the letter to which we have referred, savours very much of Russian methods rather than of methods that are associated with the British Constitution. When we come to examine the regulations themselves, they are without doubt very irksome. The age of minority for children seems to have been suddenly reduced to under twelve years, and henceforth orphans, whose relatives may be settled in the Transvaal, will not be allowed to enter the Transvaal at all. Moreover, in the regulations, instead of the same official examining the witnesses who may be produced in support of the claim of a refugee, the authority to do so will be relegated to magistrates in the various districts, and all refugees, even after investigation is completed, will have to go to Pretoria in order to perform the mechanical act of receiving their permits. His Excellency Lord Selborne said only the other day to the Indian deputation that all restrictive regulations had to be reasonable in order to be acceptable and effective. Can such regulations as these, by any conceivable stretch of the imagination, be held to be reasonable?

Indian Opinion, 17-2-1906

70. JOHANNESBURG TRAMS AND INDIANS

Elsewhere will be found printed a letter addressed to the Town Clerk,1 Johannesburg, by the Chairman of the British Indian Association at Johannesburg, with reference to the proposed regulations for the use of the electric tram-cars by Coloured people.
We have no hesitation in endorsing Mr. Abdul Gani’s plea. The recommendations made by the General Manager are very arbitrary, and the fact that they have been withdrawn temporarily need not lull Indians into a false sense of security, for they have been withdrawn, not because the Town Council is actuated by any greater regard for Indians than the General Manager, but because the time, so it is said, is not ripe, as the tram-cars are not to run for some time. The use of the public tram-cars in Johannesburg, as elsewhere, is a question, not merely of sentiment, but of pecuniary importance. Indian businessmen, and other Coloured people, have as great a right to public conveyances as any other community of Johannesburg. They form part of the body politic; they are called upon to bear the burdens of citizenship by way of payment of taxation, etc., and the Johannesburg municipality finds it difficult to deprive them of the right of using the municipal tram-cars. Any regulations that may be passed will have to be sanctioned by the Lieutenant-Governor; and let us hope that, should the regulations, to which we have drawn public attention, be ever sent to His Excellency, he will have no hesitation in exercising his right of veto.

71. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[Johannesburg,]

Saturday, February 17, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I am sending some Gujarati material today. And the rest will be posted tomorrow. In so far as it is possible, I shall send the “Johannesburg Letter” every week. It will be desirable to assign it the same place [every week]. You should divide the Gujarati pages into sections and see that, as far as possible, a particular type of material always appears in the same place.

Do spend a day every week visiting some outside town, so that you can also send in a despatch about that place. Do not fail to write me a detailed letter every week. How is Hemchand doing?

Please correct all the Gujarati material carefully. Make sure that the notices about the estates appearing in the Natal Gazette are never missed.

Let me know how much Gujarati type you have ordered. How many more pages can we have with that? We must get type enough to be able to have 12 pages next year. Send me a list of types if more is required on this account so that an order can be placed.

I hope you have read the letter about Mr. Brian Gabriel. It will be better, I believe, if he comes.

Please bear in mind what I said regarding Urdu. Do not do any composing work if it hurts your eyes.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 4310
MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I sent some matter yesterday and am sending more today. In the “Johannesburg Letter” that I sent, insert a separate heading beginning from “It is learnt from Reuter’s cables...”. I shall give as much as I can every week under “Reuter’s Telegrams” and you too may add to it. I shall make the “Johannesburg Letter” a separate item and shall include in it mostly local news. I have asked for such news-letters from other places also. It was as well that I did not write to Hemchand. Make the best use of him there. I shall also write to him. You needs must have a man of understanding to assist you. Don’t mind it even if Hemchand makes some mistakes, but go on putting the responsibility for the work on him. When we are overburdened, we should consider the relative priority of our various duties and try to do the most we can. Everything will become easy if you look at things this way. Now the first thing for you to do is to improve the Gujarati Section; this, of course, is your duty. The second, accounts; this has also to be attended to by you. The third is the collection of dues; the fourth is job-work, and the fifth Gujarati cases, which had better stop for the time being. Of course, you should always keep these in mind. You might drop Urdu for the present. You must give some of your time to your own land. You should not go out for more than two days for collecting dues or for anything else. You should not bother about the income just now. You should think of other things only after the books have been put in order. It will be all right if you devote Thursday to the reading of proofs and Tuesday and Wednesday exclusively to general reading and to writing Gujarati. It will be enough if you go to town on Monday and Friday or Saturday. Don’t worry if you can’t visit the outlying places at present. It won’t matter if you translate less from other newspapers. The main thing to do is to give all the important news about Natal, and this I do not find at present. It will become all right when local news begins to appear. I shall go on sending news about this place and translations from the newspapers. More skill will be called for in laying out the matter. It will perhaps do if you devote Wednesday alone to reading. Oh no, I forget; Monday would be better, for, while the types are being distributed on Monday, you can be ready with the matter. Do not become unnerved if there are many things to do. You have done well to clear your position before all your colleagues. Even a mother does not give without being asked. They will, if you ask them.

I see that it is necessary to clear the Press land, and that with our own hands. It will be nice if half an hour is given to this job, though it may be after the Press work is over. If the others do not give of their time, you brothers at least will. Hemchand will help, and I shall write to him. West also will help. You may talk to Sam even now and convince him. Bean will understand only in course of time. I feel this work should start immediately.

I still firmly hold that it is good that we have given up job-work, and that it was right for you to have stayed on in the Press. Now that there is no worry about the job-work, there won’t be any need for some one to sit in the office. I believe it would be better, in so far as it is possible, to have Indians working with us instead of Kaffirs. However, you may do what you think proper. In this matter you need not depend on my judgment. I shall speak to Mr. Isaac.

What you say about Mr. Brian is exactly what I have in mind. He should do composing for the present when he does come. Do talk to Anandlal about your difficulties and get his assistance and sympathy. You may take his advice also, so that he will be pleased. Keep your mind open.

If Kalabhai has not yet got a room, arrange for him to have one immediately.

I shall find out about the advertisement that has been withdrawn.

I shall enquire about your slippers, etc., tomorrow (Monday). Entrust to Hemchand the disposal of post coming in from outside. Tell Virasami that I have not received the order so far. I shall send it as soon as I receive it.

I have nothing more to add. Have more heart-to-heart talks with West. Since the two of you alone understand the scheme better than the others, you have to be in perfect agreement first. Get Anandlal to mix with you as much as possible. Try to persuade Sam; and win over Mr. Bean gradually. He likes me, but does not understand the scheme. He is a good man and has therefore stuck to his post. His mind is more on the money because he lacks in real simplicity. Yet he won’t go after money at any price. He will do better Town. In any case I am writing to them. Kindly dispose of later on. Do write me a letter every week, giving full expression to your thoughts.

MOHANDAS
It will not be possible for me to go there this month.

73. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
February 19, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I am returning herewith the letters addressed to the Editor. From the remarks I have made on them, you will see what I want. Please send Vali Mahomed Hala’s letter about himself to Porbandar; write to him to say that a letter like that cannot be published in the Opinion and that you have sent it to the Director at Porbandar. It is needless to send me all the letters. Send only those about which you are doubtful.

It will suffice to observe the following rules in most cases:

(1) we should as a rule publish all letters against us, for instance, those of Habib Motan and Haji Habib;
(2) we should be chary of long harangues;
(3) we should consider who the correspondent is. If we feel that his contribution must be accepted, it should be abridged, if lengthy;
(4) we should take letters giving local news.

The reason why I asked you to print letters about the barber controversy¹ is that it is of interest to the people of Dundee. It won’t be proper to close the correspondence abruptly.

Blessings from

M OHANDAS

74. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
February 21, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

Received your letter. I have not, however, received the railway note. We should not mind it if we lose the advertisements from Cape the remaining belongings of Mr. Nazar in consultation with Motilal. I am writing about it to Bhatt and Adamji Sheth also. It will be better for you, as I see it, to reserve Wednesday at Phoenix for reading for the Opinion. If you do so, you will be able to read [other things] up to Wednesday. If, while reading, you come across anything worthy of note, put it down on a piece of paper. Start reading newspapers and writing [for Indian Opinion] only on Wednesday. It will be convenient, I feel, if you divide your time in this way. It will be well if you can set apart Monday or Tuesday and Saturday for going to town and other places. You will save a lot of time if, on days other than Wednesday and Thursday, you make it a rule not to read anything especially for the Opinion except my articles. How are you getting on with the account books?

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

[PS.]

I shall most probably send your shoes and clothes today through Sheth Abdul Gani. It will be better if Hemchand stays either with you or with Anandlal.

STATEMENT REGARDING BRITISH INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL AND THE ORANGE RIVER COLONY

JOHANNESBURG,
February 22, 1906

Now that the new Government has been established, the Letters Patent have been withdrawn, and a new Constitution is being drawn up, both with [regard to] the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony, it seems to me imperatively necessary to place the Indian question

1 This statement was sent by Gandhiji to Dadabhai Naoroji, who forwarded a copy to the Secretary of State for India on March 20.
It is felt that the ordinary clauses about the right of veto being reserved for the Crown, and any class legislation being reserved for Royal sanction, are not enough. Seeing that there is intense prejudice against Coloured people, almost bordering on mania, these time-honoured clauses, which are only on the rarest occasions put into operation, can never meet the case. If responsible Government is granted without due regard for the protection of British Indians, their position under it would be infinitely worse than it is today.

Experience of Natal shows that disfranchisement of a class in a community enjoying self-government means its complete effacement. Only those members are elected who would represent the feeling of the electors. Some effective representation must, therefore, be granted to British Indians, or the civil rights of the resident Indian population should be otherwise fully protected.

The position in the Transvaal is becoming daily worse. Permit restrictions are applied only to Indians and are exceedingly irksome, as will appear from the pages of Indian Opinion.

The Railway administration have now begun to prohibit Coloured people from making use of certain train services entirely. It can easily be imagined what it must mean to British Indian traders who require to use the trains constantly. Johannesburg is a place of big distances. There has just been established an electric tram service. Coloured people, who can ill afford cab fares, are practically prohibited from using these tram-cars.

These are not sentimental matters but are such as to affect the British Indian community vitally. Unless a firm stand is taken up by the Home Government, at the rate at which things are now going, what little Indians enjoyed under Boer rule will be lost. The prohibition against ownership of land, special registration fee of £3, foot-path regulation, etc., still continue to disfigure the Statute-book of the Transvaal.

As to the Orange River Colony, the old law prohibiting the entry of any Indians, except such as accept domestic service, is still prevalent, and by-laws are being framed all over that Colony further restricting the movements of those who may be in that Colony.
MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have a letter from Mr. Kitchin in reply to a note I sent to him last week. He has resigned and he will retire from the editorial department at the end of next month. I have written to Mr. Bean a letter which I suppose you will read. I would like you all the same to keep yourself in touch with Mr. Kitchin because there is a great deal to learn from him. I have asked for his permission that I should show his letter to you all to read and if I can, you shall have it.

Mr. Omar is here. He tells me that there are some subscribers from Mabeli near Delagoa Bay who do not get papers regularly but they get many copies of it all at once. Do you know why?

Please put down the following subscribers as new ones. Messrs Ebrahim Abdoola & Co., Box 28, Delagoa Bay, Mr. Abdul Gani Moosa, Amreli, Kathiawar, India. My impression was that the firstnamed firm were subscribers already but Mr. Omar tells me that they are not. Both these subscriptions will be paid to you by Mr. Omar when he returns to Durban.

I have heard from Mr. Gool of Capetown. He wants me to send him the Capetown list so that he can collect [monies due]. Please let me have the names of the subscribers with their addresses and names of the advertisers with the amounts that are owing.

I have received from you a batch of correspondence which I shall examine and forward on Saturday.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

77. THE KING’S SPEECH

Perhaps within the memory of living men, the King’s Speech has never been looked forward to with so much anxiety or expectation, according to the persons concerned, as that which was delivered during the current week by King Edward at the opening of the Imperial Parliament, and there is no doubt that it is a pronouncement of far-reaching importance. The anxiety of those who fear the Liberal policy will be deepened, and the expectations of those who had hoped much of the liberals will, so far as promises are concerned, be satisfied.

India will be disappointed. The only mention there is to be found about India is that the papers in connection with the army administration will be published. There is no reference to the partition of Bengal; none, if the cablegram sent gives a full summary, regarding famine; but we have every reason to believe that, with a Radical Premier1 at the helm, and with a statesman of Mr. John Morley’s ability at the head of the India Office, India will not be altogether neglected.

The subject, however, of immediate importance to us is how far the withdrawal of the Letters Patent and the proposed immediate grant of Responsible Government, both to the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony, will affect the position of British Indians in those parts of South Africa. The Constitution, it is but fair to assume, to be drafted by the Liberal Ministers, will be as favourable as possible to the white settlers. It cannot be otherwise. They will be given fullest possible control over their internal affairs. The same Liberal principles should also dictate a policy of full protection for the rights of weaker parties, and the first consideration, therefore, we take it, should be given to the question of Indian representation. Under a fully representative government, to leave the Indians totally unrepresented will be to hand them over to the tender care of legislators, who will have no mercy for them, because they will have no interest in the welfare of their proteges. The result of non-representation, in spite of the late Sir John Robinson’s eloquent plea2, that under such a system every member would be a member for Indians, has been very unfavourable in Natal. If the constitution that will be drafted leaves the Indians out of consideration, there will be an end to all expectation of justice ever being received in the two Colonies mentioned. There is a wave of agitation hostile to Indian interests passing through the Transvaal. The Orange River Colony simply shuts its gates in the faces of Indians, and if the control of legislation regarding them is given over to responsible legislators in the respective Colonies, all the difficulties that are now being experienced by Indians will be accentuated. There will be reserved in the two constitutions the time-honoured veto, and the clause regarding non-European races; but in practice these reservations have proved very ineffective, as British Ministers have always felt reluctant to advise His Majesty to exercise the veto. Under the circumstances, if Indians are to be considered as a part of the Empire, equally important as the other races, we consider it to be imperatively necessary that their claims, as indeed also those of the other weaker races, should be specifically guarded.

1 Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Prime Minister of England, 1905-8
2 Vide “The Plague”, 9-7-1903

78. BRITISH INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL

The lot of the British Indian is by no means enviable. He is being hemmed in on all sides by restrictions of the most galling nature. If he is a domiciled resident of the Transvaal and wishes to enter this country, he is met with disappointment at every step, and he is in a position to make good his claim only if he has an abundance of patience and money. Before he can get a permit to reside in the country, he is driven about from pillar to post. He has to submit to a most searching investigation, and his word is accounted for nothing, so that he has to supplement it by evidence of witnesses and of documents, before he can set his foot upon the sacred soil of the Transvaal. If he happens to have his wife with him, he is called upon to prove that he is her husband. If he has his children with him, no matter how young they may be, they must have separate permits, and he must prove that he is their father. If his children are not under twelve, they cannot accompany him on any account whatsoever. These are the preliminaries an Indian has to undergo before he is allowed to re-enter the Transvaal, which is his place of adoption. What does he find after he reaches the country?

The report of the Johannesburg Town Council meeting, in connection with the electric tram-cars, shows clearly what is in store for him. If he were a servant of a white master, he would be allowed to make use of the tram-cars, otherwise he is not to be allowed to make use of the ordinary cars. The speeches made at the Town Council meeting make very fine reading, but they are also very painful. On a matter of simple convenience for travelling, the whole of the question of equality of races was raised by several speakers. If a Coloured man makes any attempt to get justice, the cry is immediately raised that he wants to claim equality with the white men in the Transvaal. The position is simply ludicrous. Here is a vigorous community in Johannesburg. It is full of enterprise, pluck, and resource. When it comes to a question of colour, it loses all sense of proportion, and scents danger where there is none. The people of Johannesburg are afraid that their predominance and superiority will be in danger if Coloured people travel on the same cars with themselves. This reminds us of the scare of a mutiny that used to exist when Lord Ellenborough was the Governor-General of India. In those times, if the slightest thing occurred, there was immediately an uproar and nervousness; so much so, that in one of his graphic despatches, His Excellency said that, if the soldiers heard the rustle of leaves or the chirping of a beetle, they became frightened. The condition of some people in Johannesburg is not very far removed from that description of the soldiers in the early forties by Lord Ellenborough. In vain did Mr.
Mackie Niven and his five supporters plead for a small measure of justice. His argument about the financial aspect of the question was set aside and, by a majority of sixteen to six, the Town Council decided to perpetuate the wrong that the General Manager of the Tramways, in his recommendations, had done to the Coloured community. One of the speakers said that the Coloured people paid no rates or taxes, and that, therefore, they had no right to use the tram-cars. Such is the knowledge of which the enlightened city of Johannesburg gets the benefit from its Town Councillors. The Councillor in question conveniently forgot that Indians do live in houses in Johannesburg for which they have to pay rents as well as taxes. We may take the liberty of informing him that nearly 4,000 Coloured people, who live in the Malay Location, have to pay more than the ordinary rates and taxes in connection with the Stands occupied by them. The difference between them and the other residents of Johannesburg is that, as against such payments, they do not get the same service as the others, as anyone who has walked through the streets of the Malay Location can testify. The newly returned domiciled Indian to the Transvaal [sic], on his arrival, will find not only that he cannot make use of the tram-cars, but that he cannot even travel by any train he chooses, for the railway administration debars Coloured people from making use of some of the public trains. We print in another column the correspondence that has passed between the Acting Chief Traffic Manager and the Chairman of the British Indian Association, where-from it appears that the railway administration has notified to the station masters that they are not to allow Indian and other Coloured passengers to make use of certain trains running between Johannesburg and Pretoria.

1 Vide “Letter to Town Clerk”, 10-2-1906
2 Vide “Letter to Acting Chief Traffic Manager”, 24-2-1906
Mr. Abdul Gani has sent a strong protest to the railway administration, and we can only hope that this newest method of subjecting the Indian to indignity will be stopped. But the question is not merely one of indignity. To businessmen, it is one of serious inconvenience and loss. Thus, colour animosity has assumed a new form, in that it adds financial injury to social insult.

79. A RESTRICTION WAVE

It seems that, all the world over, different States are pursuing a policy of restriction. Thirty years ago, the then President of the American Republic laid down the doctrine that everyone was welcome to America, and that on his putting his foot on American soil, he became a citizen. Today, America follows a different policy. Even England has considered it necessary to restrict immigration of aliens, and we read, in the cablegrams in the daily newspapers, that several Jews, who fled from Russian oppression, were only the other day prevented from entering England, and that one of them said that, rather than return to Russia, to avoid which he had spent his last penny, he would kill himself. The Natal Government Gazette of the 13th inst. published a translation of an Order by the German South-West African Protectorate. Under it "immigration into the German South-West African Protectorate may be prohibited by the competent authorities", if an immigrant is, amongst other things, a Coloured man; there are the other usual prohibitive clauses. Thus, the colour problem is making itself felt in one way or another throughout Africa. It is useful to recall, in this connection, the fact that it was the German Emperor who, some time ago, gave currency to the idea that in the victory of Japan lay the germs of an attempt to secure yellow predominance. Though it is still accepted in certain quarters on the Continent, the general notion is that the German Emperor was indiscreet in having made such an utterance, and that there was no such fear. At the same time, if there is to be war against colour as such on the part of the great European nations, it is impossible to say that Japan, at any rate, will always sit still under the open insult offered to her citizens. It would be illogical for Europe to accept Japan as a first-class power and at the same time treat her inhabitants as if they

80. A PERMIT PILORY

We hear and read so much about the difficulties that are placed in the way of the poor refugees getting their permits to enter the Transvaal, that we have decided from next week to open a column under the above heading, wherein we shall be pleased to publish the names of all those British Indian refugees whose applications are more than two months old, and who are still without their permits. Not that we consider two months to be at all a reasonable time required for consideration of such applications, but as we hear that there are many applications which are over six months old, we have decided to choose the greater evil, and give it publicity. Comparatively, applications two months old may, at present, be considered normal, but as for older applications, we have no hesitation in saying that their very age shows an utter want of regard on the part of the authorities for the interests of the refugees. We would, therefore, ask all those who are suffering from the vagaries of the permit administration in the Transvaal to help themselves by supplying us with their names, addresses, and the dates of their applications. We do not say that all these men are _bona-fide_ refugees, but we do say that they are all entitled to a definite, clear answer, so that they may not have to remain in a state of suspense. In some cases, we understand, they are holders of registration certificates issued to them under the old Dutch Government. They are now exiles from their own adopted land. Lord Selborne has made two promises, one to the white community, namely, that no non-refugee Indian will be allowed to settle in the Transvaal. This promise is being religiously observed. The other promise was made by His Excellency to the Indian community, namely, that all applications of the refugees will receive the earliest attention, and that they will receive full facilities for entering the country. If the information at our disposal be correct, the latter promise has still to be redeemed. We hope that our readers will help us to clear up a situation that has become intolerable.

81. TAMIL FOR THE LONDON MATRICULATION

We have received a reply from the Secretary of the External Registrar of the University of London, with reference to the petition of the Tamil inhabitants of the Colony, requesting that Tamil may be accepted as one of the foreign languages as an optional subject for the matriculation examination of that University. Although the Joint Councils have not been able to make any recommendation to the Senate with reference to the matter, we do not think that it is one that need be dropped. Ancient bodies, like the University of London, are very difficult to move, but if the Tamil communities all over the world will persist in their efforts, we have no doubt that, ultimately, the Tamil language, which has a splendid literature, and which is the Italian of India, will be included in the London matriculation curriculum. We give the reply of the University in another column.¹

83. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

February 26, 1906

TRAMWAY CASE

The tramway has become nowadays a subject of much discussion among the Indians of Johannesburg. Many Indians live at Fordsburg, and there is an electric tram service between that place and the Market Square. The people, therefore, naturally ask why Indians should not be allowed to use the tram. The authorities too find it difficult to prevent the Coloured people from using the tram-car. The proposals put forward by the Johannesburg Committee have been brushed aside, and tram-cars with the label saying that they are open to use by Coloured people are now being run. On the one hand, the whites say that they have an aversion to travelling with Indians, while, on the other, one finds many whites sitting with Coloured people in tram-cars with the above label. Arrangements are in progress to file a test case in this regard in the name of Mr. Coovadia. With a view to making a test case, Mr. Coovadia accompanied by Mr. MacIntyre boarded a tram-car without the above label. He was allowed to travel in that one; but, as he was boarding another, the conductor told him that he could have a seat only if he was a servant of Mr. MacIntyre; but that he would not be allowed to do so as a private gentleman. The matter is being discussed in the Press also. Mr. Daruwala addressed a letter to The Star, to which a white gentleman wrote a perverse reply. To this Mr. Daruwala has sent a good rejoinder. Moreover, two other whites have written on the subject, one supporting and the other opposing Mr. Daruwala.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT FOR THE TRANSVAAL

The British whites have been agitated over the news that the Transvaal would shortly get responsible government. For it is feared that responsible government will mean greater power for the Dutch, which will adversely affect the mining interests. However, the building activity in Johannesburg, which continues unabated, shows that the people here are not discouraged and are still clinging to the country in the hope that they will prosper. Trade is very sluggish and will become yet more sluggish. Formerly, the Kaffirs and the Dutch made

1 These despatches were published regularly in Indian Opinion as from its Johannesburg correspondent.
2 A Scottish theosophist clerk articled to Gandhiji many money transactions every Saturday. The Dutch are now reduced to poverty and the Kaffirs do not now spend as freely as before.

REPRESENTATION TO LORD SELBORNE

The British Indian Association has addressed Lord Selborne on permits, the tramway and the railway. To this he has replied personally over his own signature, saying that he would write again after a full inquiry into all the three questions. It is to be hoped that Lord Selborne will do something to redress these grievances.

MALAY LOCATION

The condition of the Malay Location has become disgraceful. The place is full of filth. People stint and huddle together in single rooms. The latrines and the courtyards stink badly. Plague is sure to break out under these conditions, if it should rain continuously for a long time. The matter needs to be seriously considered by thoughtful men. It would not be enough for people to keep their own houses clean, but they should persuade others also to do likewise. If they do not, they will not only lose the Malay Location as they did the Indian Location, but they will be required to go and live in Klipspruit, thirteen miles away. It is no use expecting that the authorities will take special care to keep the Location clean. If anything, it is in their interest that our houses remain as unclean as possible, so that they can accuse us of uncleanness and have us removed.

NEW MOSQUE AT JOHANNESBURG

For many years now there has been only one mosque in Johannesburg for Indian Muslims. But the Surati Memons have raised a large fund and bought a piece of land in their locality, where preparations are going on for building another mosque.

TRAM-CARS

Dr. Krause, a member of the Town Council here, met his voters recently and told them that he would, if he could, prevent Indians and other Coloureds from using the tram-cars; but that was not legally possible, and so he could not oppose their using the trams.

84. ADDRESS TO ABDUL KADIR

DURBAN,

[February 28, 1906]

We the members of the Natal Indian Congress cannot allow the occasion of your impending departure for India to pass without placing on record our sense of regard for the work you have done during your presidency of the Congress for the Indian community.

You succeeded a President, who, by his energy, had done a great deal of work for the Congress, and we have no hesitation in saying that the mantle fell worthily on your shoulders. You have contributed not a little to the financial stability which the Congress at present enjoys. During your presidency we have fought many a political battle, and we have found you always a willing leader amidst all the troubles. You have presided over the deliberation[s] of the Congress meeting[s] always with tact and prudence, and you have always responded, in your capacity as leader of the community, to the many calls on your purse.

As you are now going to India to enjoy well-earned rest, we wish you and yours may have a happy and successful sojourn in the land of our birth. And we hope that you will soon be amongst us again and resume your work for the good of our community.

85. SPEECH AT FAREWELL TO ABDUL KADIR

The following is a report of Gandhiji’s speech made after the address had been presented to Abdul Kadir:

DURBAN,

[February 28, 1906]

Mr. M. K. Gandhi addressed the meeting first in English and afterwards in Gujarati. He referred to Mr. Abdul Kadir as a man who had done a great deal for the Indian community in Natal. He had, perhaps, a better knowledge of Mr. Abdul Kadir in political affairs than many of those present that evening. The presidency of the Congress had previously been held by men of worth and ability, who had done

1 The address, which was enclosed in a silver casket, was read out by Adamji Miankhan at a meeting of the Natal Indian Congress, held to bid farewell to the retiring President on the eve of his departure for India. A similar address was presented to him on behalf of the Higher Grade Indian School, Durban.
excellent work for the community, and it was no easy matter to follow in such footsteps, but he had no hesitation in saying that the mantle had fallen on worthy shoulders. Mr. Abdul Kadir had worked hard to place the Congress on a sound financial footing, and it was largely due to his exertions that they had succeeded so well.

Mr. Gandhi called to mind an incident in this connection. When Mr. Abdul Kadir and other members of the Congress were collecting funds, a call was made at Tongaat, where one of his countrymen shewed reluctance to subscribe, but Mr. Abdul Kadir was not to be beaten; so he and the others slept on sacks spread on the ground and waited patiently until the morning, when they were rewarded by the “surrender” of the “enemy”.

Such was the character of their guest. Whenever there had been need for action, Mr. Abdul Kadir had been found willing to give his time and attention. He wished him and his family an enjoyable visit to India and a safe return.

86. THE ROYAL VISIT

We extend a hearty welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia. It is worthy of note that three members of the Royal Family are abroad, two paying visits to His Majesty’s dominions and a third to a country in alliance with England. The future King and Queen of England are touring through India, and by their kind and sweet dispositions are winning the affection of the Indian people. Prince Arthur is drawing tighter the bond of friendship between Great Britain and Japan. And our own Royal visitors are by their usual tactfulness endearing themselves to the South Africans. To have permitted the three members of the Royal Family, almost simultaneously, to leave England, shows the regard that Their Majesties have for the welfare of the Empire over which they so worthily preside. It is a happy sign for its future that the superb qualities of the late Queen Victoria have descended to her children. May they live long to carry out the traditions of the Empire is our prayer to the Almighty Father of us all.

87. INDIANS AND RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT

The Transvaal would receive the fullest and most complete form of Responsible Government; therefore, the competence of the Transvaal to decide whether it would allow Chinese labour on the mines and farms and exercise control over the industry generally was indisputable; but it was essential that it should not inherit the present Ordinance. It would be impolitic and disrespectful to insert in the new Constitution any disability that would seem to suggest that we expect the Transvaal to act contrary to our notions of fight, but it was proposed, under the power that was reserved in the Constitution of every self-government Colony, to instruct the Governor that any measure dealing with imported labour must be reserved for the consideration and assent of the Imperial Parliament. Legislation corresponding to the present Ordinance might be vetoed, though he did not anticipate such a contingency.

These are the expressions used by Mr. Asquith during the Chinese debate, and they place the position of the Home Government regarding a question analogous to the Indian question in a nutshell. The Chinese Labour Ordinance is in conflict with the Imperial traditions; so is the Indian legislation, only the latter is much more objectionable and easier to do away with, in that it is an inheritance from the Dutch Government, whereas the former is a creation of the now defunct British Government, yet there is no hesitation, on the part of the Liberal Chancellor of the Exchequer, in saying that it should not be left to the incoming Responsible Government in the Transvaal as a legacy. It then, “the fullest and most complete form of Responsible Government” is to be granted to the Transvaal, it follows that a clean slate should be presented to it, so far as anti-Asiatic legislation is concerned. As Sir William Wedderburn most clearly put it to Mr. Chamberlain two years ago, it is the duty of the Imperial Government to do away with such measures of the Dutch Government as contributed to provoke the war, and then leave it open to the Transvaalers to bring in any legislation they choose for the consideration of the Home Government. Unless the suggestion be adopted, the only other manner in which the Indian position can be saved is to insert a protective clause in the new Constitution, in addition to the general clause as to the right of veto. To do so would, in the words of Mr. Asquith, be impolitic and disrespectful, as it would be suggestive of a charge against the Transvaal of wishing to “act contrary to” Imperial “notions of right”. If a policy of \textit{laissez-faire}\\ be followed regarding this question by the Imperial Government, and anti-Indian legislation be not repealed before the grant of Responsible Government, it would be quite competent for the latter to refuse to blot out what the Crown Government dared not touch.

It is better, even at the risk of repetition, to examine the Indian position. Indians have always asked for the repeal of Law 3 of 1885 and other laws and by-laws which are specifically aimed at Asiatics, but they have always qualified this demand by an emphatic declaration that they do not wish to flood the country, as it has been said, with Indians, nor do they wish to usurp the trade, especially the Kaffir trade, from the whites. They have asked for a fair field and no favour. To show their bona fides, they have accepted the principle of restrictive legislation of a general character. An Immigration Restriction Act, on the lines adopted by the Cape or Natal, so long as it recognises the principal Indian languages, and leaves it open to import men necessary for the conduct of existing businesses, will completely meet the case, so far as the entry of new men is concerned. With reference to trade, Indians have suggested that control over new trade licences should be given to the local bodies, their decisions to be subject to review by the Supreme Court. This is the farthest limit to which restriction can be legitimately carried. It is trade jealousy and the spectre of an Indian invasion that are at the bottom of anti-Asiatic agitation. These two “dangers” being removed, there can be no justification for any further curtailment of the liberty of the Indian, or for subjecting him to “unnecessary affront”. It would certainly be inconsistent with British notions of right to continue to deprive Indians of the right to own landed property, to move about freely, and otherwise to treat them as helots.

88. INDIAN TRADERS AT THE CAPE

We gladly make room for our Cape correspondent’s letter, in reply to our remarks on his strictures on the petty Indian traders at the Cape, published in these columns some time ago. We certainly think that the testimony of Sir James Hullett’s is as applicable to the Cape as it is to Natal. The Indian is just the same there as in Natal, and if his trade has benefited Natal generally, it cannot be otherwise at the Cape, where the material conditions are of a similar nature. But the chief point we have all along urged is that many of the charges brought against Indian traders by their detractors cannot be sustained. We have never advocated the policy of flooding any part of South Africa with Indian or any other traders, but we do believe that it is a question capable of adjustment, without restrictive legislation. It would certainly help to[wards] a solution, if our correspondent could prepare a comparative statement of the European and the Indian traders in the various districts of the Cape Colony. From the information at our disposal, we think that the latter are in a hopeless minority.

1 Vide “Memorial to Colonial Secretary”, 3-9-1904

89. INDIAN TRAVELLERS ON THE C. S. A. R.¹

A correspondent writes to us in the Gujarati columns that by the train that left Johannesburg for Durban on the evening of the 26th February last, he saw seven Indian passengers, including an Indian lady, accommodated in a single second class compartment. He states further that an eighth passenger was added at Germiston, much to the discomfort of the other passengers. An ordinary second class compartment is hardly capable of holding more than six Passengers for a night journey—we understand that the passengers travelling by the night trains are entitled, for long journeys, to sleeping accommodation. Our correspondent does not state whether there was an unusual rush on the occasion alluded to by him. But be that as it may, we cannot help questioning the propriety of herding together so many passengers when one of them happens to belong to the opposite sex. Even an Indian lady is entitled to some consideration in such matters. The Indian public have a right to expect the accommodation they pay for. It will be a mockery to give them second or first class facilities in name only and deny them in reality. We draw the attention of the railway authorities to the complaint made by our correspondent and we do not doubt that they will take the necessary steps to avoid a recurrence of such complaints.

Indian Opinion, 3-3-1906

90. WARNING TO INDIANS PASSING THROUGH MIDDELBURG

We learn that the permits of the Indian passengers proceeding through Middelburg station are being invariably checked. This is not generally done at stations other than those on the Transvaal border. However, it is being done at Middelburg. We shall publish further information on this matter if we receive it from our readers at Middelburg. Meanwhile, the above fact should be borne in mind by passengers going to Middelburg. [From Gujarati]

91. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

March 3, 1906

TRAM CASE

By the time this letter appears in print, the tram test case¹ will have been decided. After some difficulty, the Crown counsel has admitted the affidavit made by Mr. Coovadia, and issued a summons to the conductor who prevented him from boarding the tram-car. The case will come up for hearing on March 7. Meanwhile, the controversy about the tram service is still going on in the Press. A white gentleman has sent an insolent reply to Mr. Daruwala, saying that the whites would never allow the Coloured people to sit with them in the trams. Others have also written to say that, if the Coloured people were allowed to use the trams, it would be to admit their equality with the whites. A couple of persons have been gratuitously writing to the Press in this fashion. Meanwhile, the whites use without aversion the tram-cars that are especially run for the Coloured people. Such is the city’s charm!

CHINESE LABOUR

At present all the people here are exercised over the question whether the Chinese would be allowed to stay on or be driven out. Cablegrams from England show that orders have been issued by the Government to send back those Chinese who are not satisfied with their lot in the Colony. This has created a panic among the miners and they have tightened their purse-strings, with the result that all trade has now become slack. Moreover, the Kaffir rebellion in Natal has had its effect on the Kaffirs here. There is, therefore, no hope² left from any quarter.

DEPUTATION TO COLONIAL SECRETARY

A deputation in connection with permits for the Indians will wait upon the Colonial Secretary. It is expected that some relief will certainly be forthcoming. An officer is likely to be stationed at Johannesburg to issue permits, etc.

Mr. Chamney, Protector of Asiatics, has arrived and assumed charge of his office.

The Lieutenant-Governor has agreed to receive a deputation on the subject of the Malay Location. It will shortly wait upon him.

LORD SELBORNE

Lord Selborne has returned from Masseroo, where nearly 2,000 Basuto Kaffirs had gathered to greet him. These Africans are a very intelligent people. They have their own Parliament, which they call Pitso. The shorthand reporter attached to the Pitso is a Basuto, who has taken down a report of the speech made by Lord Selborne.

92. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,

Sunday, [March 4, 1906]

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

Do not fail in the slightest degree in doing your duty. It is absolutely necessary to bring the accounts up to date. The balance-sheet should be made up. You should take Mr. Bean’s help in correspondence; associate Hemchand with Gujarati. It is not at all necessary to keep him in Durban. I shan’t be able to send Kalyandas for the present. Most likely Brian Gabriel will come. It will be good if he does. The shortage of men we are experiencing will then cease. You alone know best how to lighten your burden. It will be enough if you go to Durban only for a day [in the week]. The main work is the collection of outstandings.

You should have the same arrangement in the Gujarati section as you have in the English. The leading article should come first, followed by the smaller leaders. After that should come the translations of articles on important subjects, etc., followed by letters like the “Johannesburg Letter” and last of all, Reuter’s Telegrams.

The article on the Kaffir rebellion which you had placed first ought not to be there; it should have appeared in the news section. As I have entrusted the question of the Kaffir rebellion to you, I do not pay any attention to it. But you should study the subject well. If you make notes, you will be able to give a column or more of the latest news on Thursday. In accordance with the above arrangement, “The Natal Indian Congress” will be the leading article this time.

We should give the Gujarati “contents” at the end.
Discontinue the advertisement from Haji Suleman Shah Mahomed as we are not going to get it. Reduce Mr. Gool’s to half. He has made a special request about it as his condition is not sound at present. I see that many advertisements from Cape Town will be discontinued. But I am not worried in the least by that. We shall get others. I am persevering in my efforts.

Mr. Isaac will arrive there during this month. Please keep a table and a chair for him in our office.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

[PS.]
I have not translated Mr. A. Cadir’s speech assuming that you would do it, which please do.

93. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
March 5, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have read your letter to Kalyandas. I understand that R. Peerkhan does not want you to execute any of the orders as they are all overdue. Please let me know what Transvaal orders are still unexecuted. Let me know also which orders require revision in quotation because of the job having to be done outside and let me know the difference in prices.

Miss Neufliess met me last evening and told me that she got her Indian Opinion for the first week with the back numbers and now she is not getting any at all. I have sent a wire with reference to the order, you will recollect, I sent to you for an Indian restaurant-keeper. I told you also that I made a promise to the man that he should receive his notices on or before to-day. He, therefore, came over to-day and inquired. I see you did not mention the matter when I was in Phoenix and I did not see any letter from you either addressed to the office. I think I told you in my letter that, if you could not execute the order within the time, you were not to have done it. Please let me know, if you have not already telegraphed to me, what is to be done. I shall be sending you to-day a Theatrical order. The Company is to play next Wednesday. They will naturally require the handbills and the programmes before that time. If, therefore, it is impossible for you to accept the order, you should wire to me before taking it up. I am most anxious to fulfil promises that have been once made.

Yours sincerely,

94. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Johannesburg,
March 5, 1906

My dear Chhaganlal,

Mr. Gool writes to me saying he is waiting for the list of Capetown subscribers and advertisers. If it is not sent, I hope you will send it without delay.

Mr. Dada Osman will want from you the names of the leading newspapers in England, India and South Africa. You may ask Hemchand to prepare a list of the papers to whom we send Indian Opinion, and give it to Mr. Dada Osman.

In taking job work, please be most particular that you do not take any orders from strangers unless cash is paid down. There should be no hesitation in refusing. The only people for whom we should accept orders on credit should be regular customers of known standing who are also supporters of the Paper. There should be no indecision about it.

I notice Mr. Omar’s article about Delagoa Bay has not appeared. I take it, it will appear this week. I sent another article from his pen yesterday. That, of course, should be reserved for next week.

I notice you have not announced the report of the Abdul Cadir meeting and a translation of the address will be given in this week’s issue. However, I take it that you are going to do it.

Yours sincerely,

95. LETTER TO A. J. BEAN

JOHANNESBURG,
March 5, 1906

DEAR MR. BEAN,

I think Brian Gabriel will join at the end of the month. He has sent me the enclosed sketch of alterations he would like to have made to the house occupied by Orchard. Will you kindly go into them and let me know what the alterations mean in money? Please let me know whether there are bath-room, water-closet and tank in that house. Are the walls of that house ceiled? I am leaving this purposely to you so as not to bother Chhaganlal as he complained of overwork. I shall thank you to let me have a reply to this, if possible per return. I hope you are considering my letter and will let me have a favourable reply.

Kuhne’s book was to have gone on Saturday. It is now being posted to-day.

96. LETTER TO A. J. BEAN

JOHANNESBURG,
March 7, 1906

DEAR MR. BEAN,

I have your letter about Mr. Mannering. I am sorry that he feels unsettled on account of the conversation with him. I intended to talk to him when I was there, but I hadn’t the time. When I went to the Press, I was incapable [sic]. I have been thinking over the alleged understanding I gave to all. The circumstances were these, so far as I can recall them. I was talking about Pillay or somebody at that time. I did say that nobody, because he taught or did anything, need feel that he was to go as soon as he finished it, that everybody should consider himself absolutely safe in the Press, so long of course as the Press was not actually starved. I do not know whether Mr. Mannering was at that time on the pay basis or whether he was a schemer, but the assurance was not given after Mr. Mannering left the scheme and returned again. I believe that when he was taken over I told Chhaganlal—the letter must be in his possession—that if Mr. Mannering was taken back, he should do so on a monthly basis. I may not be correct, but such is my impression. In any case, I certainly never had the intention of giving any assurance that everybody, that is to say, those who did not belong to the scheme, was to consider himself safe under all circumstances, and at the salary he was getting. All I wanted to convey was that there was not the slightest intention of driving anyone out when others were raised to take his place. To that opinion I adhere even now. I do not know what Mr. Mannering intends doing, but so far as I am concerned, I am quite willing that he should remain on at £8 per month, at least up to the end of this year. I know that you think that he should get a higher wage, and if the schemers agree, I have not the slightest objection; also if the schemers consent to it, you may treat this letter as binding on me and Mr. Mannering may rest assured that no matter what changes my personal opinions may undergo, he should consider himself a fixture, at least up to the end of this year. I am writing to Mr. Mannering also separately in the matter.2

97. LETTER TO CHHAMANLAL GANDHI

[Before March 9, 1906]

CHHAGANLAL,

Things there have not quite settled down yet. Turn your stay in Phoenix to the best account. You have submitted long enough to what others say; now you should open your mouth. Put to Sam² again and again the arguments I used to advance. Ask Bean³ to be frank and talk things over with him. Encourage West⁴ and see that you three brothers⁵ work in such spirit and have such understanding among yourselves that you make only the best impression on others. Whatever is to be done about Hemchand, do immediately. Call him to Phoenix, if that is best. Observe how Rama and Rajkumar behave. Encourage them too. I am convinced that the resolution that has been adopted is the right one. The case containing Mr. Polak’s books did not arrive, after all. There has been some misunderstanding. I am writing again to Sheth Rustomjee’s⁶ people. If you go to town, please inquire.

MY DEAR CHHAMANLAL,

You asked me to send a list of those who have not paid regarding Mr. Nazar’s estate. Did you not make a list of the whole thing? I don’t know what £15/5 represent. I have an impression that you told me you had made out all the bills. If you haven’t a list, I would be able to send you one, but would not know who had paid and who had not. You are to collect undoubtedly from Thanu Maharaj. You need not bother Bhatt, Subhab, but there will be at least that dividend to be paid to them. From Mr. Miankhan you should collect. I return the paper.

I have not received the correspondence you refer to in your Gujarati letter received to-day. I have now received it.\footnote{This sentence is added in Gandhiji’s own hand.}

I shall write to Osman Amod.

Of course, we do not want to make extracts from the Islam Gazette. I received your telegram saying that you will be able to do the Theatrical job. I should have been quite content if it had not been done. All I would want you to be careful about is having made a promise to keep it. I may send you work from here without knowing whether you will be able to do it or not, but you have always the right not to do it if you can’t.

If you cannot get satisfaction from Osman Amod, you should refuse to accept work. Make the position perfectly clear to him that we have to pay for work done outside in hard cash. We have to do nothing in fear. We want to please in a reasonable manner only and if we fail to please, the blame won’t be ours. All, therefore, we have to do is to put ourselves to inconvenience for others, be always courteous, and to suffer when necessary. Further than that we are not called upon to go.

I have not yet received Coovadia and Patel’s letter[s], but as soon as I do, I shall reject them but will give you a note in reply to their correspondence.

We cannot, and we do not want, to ask the Congress or the British Indian Association to defray the expense of complimentary copies.

It is a pity that we have no cable from Maganlal.

We do not wish at this stage to give Mr. Dowd Mahomed’s photograph, but you should give Mr. Abdul Cadir’s, even if it is next week.

You have sent me no bill for the restaurant except the handbills. My instructions were to send me the bill also. Please let me have it. You should be always careful to send bills whenever you execute orders. I was to have received cash against delivery. How can I if I have not got the bill from you[?]

Yours sincerely,

99. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL, GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
March 9, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

Your letter to hand. I follow what you say about Mr. Bean. You have done the right thing in not passing on the letter to Sam. I always want to know your views on such matters. I do not wish to importune Mr. Bean overmuch. I wrote my last letter² to him yesterday and I will write no more. To Mr. Kitchin also I have written clearly.³ I feel for him somewhat because he will have, as he says, to upset all his arrangements. He has spent a lot and I rather felt that he would not go away from Phoenix. Hence the feeling that it will be good if he stays. Nevertheless, I have no intention of pressing him overmuch. You had better give up trying to persuade Mr. Bean now. You should act only on those among my suggestions which appeal to you as reasonable. I always assume this, when I communicate to you, without reservation, my thoughts as they occur to me.

Now that you are keeping all the account books yourself, I should like to know how it has affected the work. I desire that the accounts be got ready immediately.

Brian Gabriel writes that he will arrive there by the end of this month.

I think it will be difficult to send Kalyandas there at present. I already carry a big burden and it will become heavier, if I send him away. It is, moreover, doubtful whether he will stay there cheerfully or not. I shall, however, send him, if possible, during the winter for a time.

100. FRAGMENT OF A LETTER

[After March 9, 1906]

. . . I have written asking to be sent local news. If you receive anything from him, publish it as ‘From Our Correspondent’. Certainly do the necessary editing. The cases containing the books have been received. But the one containing Mr. Polak’s books has not arrived. I cannot understand why. They write from Rustomjee Sheth’s that it has been dispatched. A solitary book was received: I wonder if they mean that.

Despite there being no job work who on the paper is hard up? I can understand about the Gujarati section. All the same, in this matter follow for the time being any practice that works.

If you feel that I should write to Hemchand, let me know. I will then write further.

I understand about the kitchen door.

Let me know how much Gujarati Gokaldas does.

101. LETTER TO COLONIAL SECRETARY

[PS.]
Heidelberg, etc. . . .

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 4679

TO
MARITZBURG,

SIR,

The Committee of the Natal Indian Congress has read with pain and anxiety Government Notice No. 150 published in the Natal Government Gazette dated the 27th ultimo, imposing certain fees in connection with various passes and certificates issued under the Immigration Restriction Act No. 30 of 1903 as amended by Act 3 of 1906. Our Committee ventures respectfully but strongly to protest against the tariff of fees mentioned in the Notice.

It is submitted that the fees amount to a tax on British Indians who are entitled to remain in the Colony or to pass through it.

It is well known that the Act is enforced very largely, if not entirely against British Indians. The various passes and certificates issued there under are granted more in the interest of those who desire their enforcement than of those to whom the provisions are applied.

Our Committee, with the greatest deference, thinks that the fees sought to be imposed are extortionate.

Our Committee reminds the Government of the fact that, during the lifetime of the late Right Honourable Harry Escombe, an attempt was made to impose a fee of £1 for visitors’ passes. A respectful representation was sent thereupon protesting against the imposition and the late Right Honourable Gentleman immediately withdrew the Notice regarding the imposition.

At that time the Certificate of Domicile was free from the £1 fee.

Our Committee, moreover, draws your attention to the fact that British Indians who may be residing in the inland colonies are at least entitled to a passage through Natal without having to pay a charge of £1 for the privilege of passing through the Colony.

Indeed, even from a selfish standpoint, the fact that such Indians bring to the Natal Government Railways a certain amount of revenue should weigh with the Government in not imposing a prohibitive fee.

Act 3 of 1906 contemplates a reasonable charge of £1. My Committee submits that a charge of £1 for a visiting or embarkation pass or a Certificate of Domicile can never be considered reasonable, and if the wife of a domiciled British Indian is entitled to remain in the Colony or to enter it, and if an Indian who can satisfy the educational test is also, as of right, entitled to enter the Colony, it seems, in the humble opinion of our Committee, not only hard but insulting that either the wife of a domiciled Indian or an educated Indian himself should have to pay what is after all a tax of 5/- for not being a prohibited immigrant within the meaning of the Act.

Our Committee does not understand the term transit pass.

Our Committee ventures to trust that the Government will be pleased to withdraw the Notice and allow the charges hitherto imposed to stand.

Our Committee hopes that your early attention will be given to the complaint as the matter is rather urgent.

We have the honour to remain,
Sir,

your obedient servants,
O. H. A. JOHARI

Indian Opinion, 10-3-1906

102. “INFLUX OF ASIATICS”

The Congress of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of South Africa, that met in Durban last week, has again passed a resolution about Indians. Mr. E. F. Bourke, of Pretoria, moved that this Congress of Chambers of Commerce of South Africa views with alarm the increasingly detrimental effect upon the commerce of the whole of South Africa because of the continual influx of Asiatics, and desires to express its conviction that it is imperative, in the interests of the white population of South Africa, that concerted action should be taken by the various Governments with the least possible delay.

Mr. G. Mitchell moved that the word “continual” be omitted, and the resolution was passed without it. A resolution of this nature, passed by an important body like the Congress of the Associated Chambers, ought to carry weight, and it is to be feared that, although the resolution is without foundation in fact, it will be used as an authoritative expression of opinion on the part of the Chambers of Commerce in South Africa.

If the resolution were examined calmly, it would be found that the influx of Asiatics could not detrimentally affect the commerce of the whole of South Africa, for Indian immigrants would, after all, be consumers, no matter how humble they may be; but we imagine that the framers of the resolution intended to say that the increase of Indian traders, due to the influx of Indians, had such an effect. Although both the question of influx and that of Indian trade have been fully examined in these columns more than once, we propose again to deal with them in order to show how ill-informed the speakers were as to the true position. So far as the Cape Colony and Natal are concerned, there is, as the Immigration Office records show from day to day, a most effective barrier set against Indian immigration, and the manner of enforcing the restrictions is daily being made more irksome. From the letter¹ we reproduce in another column from Professor Parmanand, it will appear that the Immigration Officers are no respecters of persons. The learned Professor, whose fame and name preceded him, was subjected to an educational test before he was allowed to set foot on the ground at Port Elizabeth. Could severity go any further?

The Orange River Colony does not come into the calculation at all, as nobody has ever suggested that there is any Indian population or Indian trade worthy of the name in that Colony, and yet we find the resolution applying to the whole of South Africa.

With reference to the Transvaal, Lord Selborne, as well as other Government officials, has more than once stated, in emphatic terms, that no non-refugee British Indians are being allowed to enter the Transvaal. Our permit pillory² will bear witness to this.

One of the speakers said that the fact of the Advisory Boards having been appointed showed that an influx was going on. May we inform him that the Boards have been established, not because an influx has been going on, but in answer to the agitation that was set up by certain interested parties in the Transvaal, and in total disregard of the feelings and convenience of Indian refugees. The Boards could not act any more effectively than the permit officers hitherto done. The same speaker went on to say that he could “give evidence that the Government knew of certain Asiatics coming in unlawfully”. Either the statement is true, or it is untrue. If it be true, it is a duty the speaker owes to the Government, as well as to the Indian public, that he should give detailed information with names; if it be untrue, as an honourable man he should withdraw it. Serious statements of that nature, without any facts to support them, made before a public body like the Congress of Associated Chambers of Commerce, cannot be allowed to pass unchallenged, and we state emphatically that there has been no such unlawful influx of Indians into the Transvaal, as has been suggested by the speaker. We would here draw the attention of the public to the fact that the British Indian Association at Johannesburg invited public enquiry into the matter, which the Government did not grant, as the Government was fully convinced that there was no such influx. With reference to the so-called increase in Indian trade in Natal, there is a most effective and tyrannical check actually exercised over Indian licences. As the members of the Congress must have known, the Natal Dealers’ Licenses Act places every Indian trader absolutely at the mercy of the Licensing Officer. They must also have known that two respectable Indians¹, traders of long standing, have been wantonly deprived of their licences, although they were, as a matter of fact, not even competing with Europeans in their trade.

In the Transvaal, the position is no better, if only because the Indian population of the Transvaal is not so large as the Indian population of Natal, and also because even refugees find it difficult to enter that Colony. At the same time, we are free to admit that the decision of the Supreme Court in the test case has undoubtedly, to a certain extent though not in any appreciable degree, increased the number of Indian licences, but Indians have showed their extreme moderation by suggesting that, as against repeal of Law 3 of 1885 and all class legislation, they would be prepared to accept the principle of control over new trade licences by the municipal bodies. It is worthy of note that, of the eight speakers who are reported to have taken part in the debate on the resolution, there were only two from Cape Town, and they did not appear to have brought forward any facts or figures to show that Indian trade was in any way affecting European trade. Thus, examined from every point of view, the resolution is totally unnecessary, and certainly not based upon facts. The only real remedy which lies at their door, the people of the Transvaal have hitherto declined to accept. It is also worthy of note that, out of the eight speakers, there were five from the Transvaal; and evidently the resolution was passed, not in the interests, as it has been said in the body of it, of South Africa generally, but in the interests of the Transvaal only.

Indian Opinion, 10-3-1906

103. A CONTRAST

We have drawn attention to Professor Parmanand’s hardships, whilst he was passing through the Cape Colony, in our remarks on the proceedings of the Congress of Associated Chambers of Commerce.1 Professor Parmanand, it would appear, was unnecessarily subjected to the indignity of an examination, before he was allowed to land at East London.

A letter from Mr. Omar Haji Amod Johari, which we publish in another column,2 shows what even the most respectable Indians have to undergo in South Africa. Mr. Johari is a leader among Indians in South Africa. He represents the well-known firm of E. Aboobaker Amod & Bros., of Natal. He is a cultured Indian, and has travelled in Europe and America. All this was of no consequence to the permit officer at Volksrust, who, not being satisfied with having examined his permit, had the effrontery to ask Mr. Johari to put his thumb-impress on his book. We confess that we fail to see the reason for this procedure. Well may Mr. Johari ask whether he is to be treated as a criminal, without being guilty of any offence, save that of wearing a brown skin.

And yet, when it was a Japanese subject who was treated rudely only the other day, a howl of public indignation went up throughout South Africa, and our contemporary, The Transvaal Leader, in an angry editorial, after having severely censured the authorities for the delay in granting a permit to Mr. Nomura and for subjecting him to the offensive process of giving his thumb-impression, offered a public apology to the gentleman on behalf of the people of the Transvaal.

We believe that Mr. Nomura was entitled to the apology. But we cannot help contrasting the attitude of the public towards that incident, and the incidents to which we are now drawing attention. We fear that there will not be even so much as one feeble voice raised in favour of Professor Parmanand or Mr. Johari. The moral is obvious. Mr. Nomura belonged to an independent nation in alliance with Great Britain. Messrs Parmanand and Johari are only British Indians, after all. But a little reflection should show that a British subject is deserving of at least as much solicitude on the part of the public, and that persistence in such a policy as this to which we draw attention cannot but lead eventually to the disruption of the Empire.

India Opinion 10-3-1906

104. A CRYING SHAME

The Natal Government Gazette for the 27th February last contains a notice under the Immigration Restriction Act. It seeks to impose sundry fees for the various documents which people, who are affected by it, have to take out. A nominal fee we do not mind, though we question the legality of even a trivial charge. But the notice in question is nothing short of a shameful attempt to replenish the empty treasury of Natal. A certificate of domicile, a visiting pass or an embarkation pass are to cost £1 each. A certificate of ability to pass the educational test, a wife’s exemption certificate and a transit pass (whatever the latter may mean) are to cost five shillings each. Thus, although an Indian may be entitled by law to enter Natal or to remain in this Colony, he cannot henceforth do so without paying a price for it.

An imposition of the above kind was attempted in 1897, but the late Rt. Hon. H. Escombe\(^1\) saw the reasonableness of the protest of the Natal Indian Congress against it, and withdrew the tax immediately.

It does not appear to have struck the authors of this notice that, in seeking to exact the high fees from the Indians, they will not necessarily decrease the deficit of the Colony. An Indian living in the Transvaal wishes to return to India. He can only do so by going through the Cape, Durban or Delagoa Bay. The Durban route is the most popular. The Indian passenger traffic is no mean thing. It behoves the Natal Government to take care that, in trying to exact an additional pound from an Indian, they do not kill the goose that lays the golden egg of Trans-Natalian Indian passenger traffic. So much for an appeal to selfishness.

On the ground of justice, the case is overwhelmingly in favour of the Indian. The Immigration Act is supposed to apply to all, irrespective of nationality. In effect, it is enforced chiefly, if not solely, against Indians. The charges sought to be imposed by the notice, therefore, constitute special taxation on the Indian community. We sympathise with the Government in their financial embarrassment, but

\(^1\) Sir Harry Escombe, (1838-99), leading advocate of the Natal Supreme Court, sometime Attorney-General, and Prime Minister of Natal, 1897 can scarcely approve of the method they have adopted of filling the State coffers.

Indian Opinion, 10-3-1906

105. A POLL-TAX GRIEVANCE

Our Gujarati columns show that much irritation is caused to Indian payers of the poll-tax, owing to the alleged difference between the treatment of European and Indian payers. One of the aggrieved parties states:

When a European goes to pay the poll-tax, he does not have to stop even five minutes, whereas an Indian has to devote practically the whole day, before the money is taken from him and he is dispensed with.

If it be true that the intending Indian tax-payers have to pass very nearly a day before they can pay the tax and get the receipt, there is something very bad about the arrangements made by the Government, and the attention of the authorities is drawn to the complaint.

106. INDIAN PASSENGERS BY THE GERMAN EAST AFRICA LINE

More than one correspondent draws attention, through our Gujarati columns, to the inconvenience that was felt by the passengers on board the steamer Somali during her last voyage to Durban. One of them writes:

On board the Somali, which left on the 20th January, passengers had to undergo many difficulties about cooking, etc. The crew on board were totally careless as to the comfort of the passengers, and the Captain, on the complaints being taken to him, did not listen.

We draw the attention of the Agents of the German East Africa Line to the allegations above made. We shall be pleased to publish any explanation that they may have to give. In any case, we trust that full investigation will be made; and in view of the fact that Indians give very considerable support to the line, even a policy of selfishness will dictate consideration towards Indian passengers.

107. THE NATAL INDIAN CONGRESS

Great changes have come about in the set-up of the Natal Indian Congress. After having occupied the presidential chair of the Congress for eight years, Mr. Abdul Kadir has left for India. May his wishes be fulfilled, and may he return here safely! The Indian community has conferred on him great honour, which he amply deserves. In honouring him, the community has honoured itself. A number of speakers rightly emphasized the philanthropy of Mr. Abdul Kadir. Mr. Abdul Kadir maintained the dignity of the Chair with solemnity and modesty. He did much to put the Congress on a firm footing. Whatever honour is done him must, therefore, be deemed inadequate.

With the departure of Mr. Abdul Kadir, Mr. Adamji Mian Khan relinquished the office of Joint Honorary Secretary. Mr. Adamji is one of the very few educated persons among businessmen in the Indian community. He has been serving the Congress ever since its inception. In 1896, when the condition of our people was very critical, Mr. Adamji worked with great zeal, tact and humility. During his tenure of office, there was great enthusiasm among the members of the Congress. Mr. Adamji was mainly responsible for collecting £1,000 during that brief period. Moreover, he took the same keen interest in political matters also. When the residents of Durban staged a demonstration against the steamers, Courland and Naderi, Mr. Adamji acted with patience and firmness. Later when the late Mr. Nazar and Mr. Khan relinquished their office as Congress Secretaries, Mr. Adamji Mian Khan was elected Joint Secretary along with Mr. Omar Haji Amod Zaveri. Since then, he served the Congress, along with Mr. Zaveri, until last week. The reasons why Mr. Adamji resigned are, first, his indifferent health and, secondly, his desire to give Surati brethren an opportunity of holding office. We regret Mr. Adamji Mian Khan’s ill health and pray to the Almighty that he may soon be restored to health. The second reason which has led Mr. Adamji to resign his office does him greater credit. The well-being of his country has always been the uppermost thought in his mind.

Mr. Dowd Mahomed has succeeded Mr. Abdul Kadir as President, and Mr. Mahomed Cassim Anglia has taken the place of Mr. Adamji. The largely attended meeting at the Congress Hall

\[1\] Vide “Address to Abdul Kadir”, 28-2-1906
\[2\] On January 13, 1897. Vide “Memorial to Secretary of State for the Colonies”, 15-3-1897 greeted them with loud acclamation. In the trading community here, the Suratis preponderate, and it is in the fitness of things that two Surati gentlemen should be elected simultaneously to these high offices. It will indeed be difficult to maintain the traditions built up by such able men as Mr. Abdul Kadir and Mr. Adamji, but we expect that both the [newly elected] gentlemen will play their part ably.

Mr. Dowd Mahomed has been a leading member of the Congress from the beginning. He has rendered good service to the Congress. He was the first to be elected an office-bearer of that body. His ability known to all. He has many virtues, and if he employs them all in the service of the Congress, he will, we are sure, bring great credit to the Congress.

Mr. Mahomed Cassim Anglia is an educated gentleman and has experience of political work. And though he has not so far taken an active part in Congress activities, he is quite qualified to hold the Secretary’s post. At present, great enthusiasm prevails among Congress members. We are confident that Mr. Dowd Mahomed, as also Mr. Omar Haji Amod Zaveri and Mr. Mahomed Cassim Anglia, will take advantage of this enthusiasm and carry on Congress work successfully.

For a long time now, no funds have been collected for the Congress. It is necessary to undertake certain political activities, which can be easily done if some effort is put in. Like the new Ministry in England, the Congress, too, has got a new executive body. This coincidence is such that we can justly expect some good to come out of it.

108. A FRESH MOVE TO SEPARATE VRYHEID FROM NATAL

The Dutch are greatly heartened by the Liberal Ministry coming to office in England, for they believe that they will now get whatever they demand. When Vryheid was taken out of the Transvaal and merged in Natal, they objected to it, although without success. Now they have again resolved to submit a mass petition. They do not like the Natal laws, and want to remain with the Transvaal. Indians will benefit much if Vryheid is merged in the Transvaal. At present the oppressive laws of both the Transvaal and Natal apply to them and they do not have the benefit of the good laws of either.

109. MR. JOHN MORLEY AND INDIA

Mr. John Morley has spoken on the Indian question. Replying to Mr. Roberts, he said that the partition of Bengal had already been accomplished. It was impolitic to have offended people over the matter of fixing boundaries. There was no need, however, to make changes in what had already been done. It was necessary that the agitation that had disturbed the administration should now subside. The time for granting the people a share in the government of the country had not yet come.

These words of Mr. Morley are disappointing. They mean that the people of Bengal will not get justice. Of course, if Mr. Morley had been at the helm of affairs at the time, the partition would not have come about. From this it appears that the hope that Mr. Morley would act boldly and fearlessly and do what was necessary has been belied. In effect, therefore, for the duration of his career, it is only when new laws are enacted that attention will be paid to the feelings of the Indian people. Moreover, his statement that our people are not fit to take part in the governance of the country might be construed to mean that we are not yet fit for self-government. At the same time, it would not be proper to infer from a statement of this kind that India would not receive any benefits from Mr. Morley. However, Mr. Morley’s views are similar to those of the average Anglo-Indian; and they are likely to change only if we put in the requisite effort. It will be futile to hope that he would exert himself in our favour as he did for Ireland.

110. NEW REGULATIONS FOR DOMICILE PASSES, ETC., IN NATAL

It would be a very bad thing if these taxes were to continue. We hope that the Natal Indian Congress will immediately take up this matter.

A similar proposal to levy taxes was made by the late Mr. Harry Escombe, but it was withdrawn as a result of a strong representation made by the Congress.

Natal has been impoverished; the Government is, therefore, making desperate efforts to collect money from all possible sources. It has adopted this new tax device. But this in effect has defeated its purpose.’ For Indian residents in the Transvaal who wish to sail home, the shorter route lies through Natal. If such persons go via Natal, the Government will stand to gain in its railway revenue. If, alternatively, they go via Delagoa Bay, the Natal Government is likely to suffer a corresponding loss. We are sure that, if these penal taxes continue, Indian travellers will boycott the Natal railway and travel through Delagoa Bay.

The Natal Government has no right at all to levy such a tax. This law is being enforced for the benefit of the Natal public. If, therefore, the burden of the levy is to fall on any group, it should be on the whites. And if an Indian wishes to visit Natal for a short period, the Natal Government is bound to assist rather than penalize him.

TRAM TEST CASE

The tram test case was heard by Magistrate Kar last Wednesday. The plaintiff, Mr. Coovadia, was represented by Mr. Gandhi, and the respondent by Mr. Hile, the Town Council advocate. The Crown Counsel, Mr. Blaine, appeared on behalf of the Government. He conducted the case well without discriminating between the white and the Coloured. During his examination, Mr. Coovadia deposed that the respondent forbade him to travel by the tram and asked him to use the tram reserved for the Coloureds; the case was, therefore, brought to court. On the Counsel for the Town Council admitting the said facts, it was not considered necessary to record Mr. MacIntyre’s evidence. The respondent argued that he had orders from the Town Council not to admit Indians or other Coloured persons into the tram unless they were servants accompanying their white masters, and that he had accordingly refused admission to the plaintiff. In his address to the court, Mr. Blaine said that, according to the bye-laws of the Johannesburg Tramway, Indians were entitled to travel by any tram-car, and that the respondent was, therefore, guilty.

In his address, Mr. Hile admitted that the tramway bye-laws did not prohibit Indians from travelling by any tram-car. But there was a regulation, introduced by the Sanitary Committee [of the Town Council] during the Boer regime, which made it an offence for any Coloured person to use a tram, a bus or a cab reserved for the whites. By virtue of that regulation, still unrepealed, an Indian could be refused a seat in a tram. To this Mr. Blaine replied that the said regulation was no longer applicable and that Indians were entitled, by virtue of the bye-law passed by the Council, to travel in the tram. Mr. Kar has deferred judgment in the case till Monday. If it is announced on Monday, I shall communicate it.

According to news subsequently received, we have won the tram case and the Municipality has preferred an appeal.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT FOR THE TRANSVAAL

The agitation for responsible government is still continuing in Johannesburg. The Boer People’s Committee and the leaders of the Responsible and Progressive Parties met at the residence of Sir George Farrar with the object of arriving at a unanimity of views. What transpired at the meeting is not so far known; but it is believed that they could not reach an agreement and dispersed without taking a decision.

Meanwhile, a huge movement is in progress here. It has been decided to send a deputation of whites to England and a mass petition to King-Emperor Edward, to which thousands of signatures are being obtained. The demand of the signatories is that, in any future constitution [for the Transvaal], there should be provision for equal rights to all voters and the number of members to be elected should be proportionate to the strength of the voting population.

The object of this petition is to increase the power of the British [in public affairs], for the Boer population is smaller than the British.
The Boers, on the other hand, demand that the members be elected according to the villages. If this is granted, the Boers, being more numerous in the villages, would gain in power. In other words, they would regain, through responsible government, what they lost through the war. This tussle is well matched and sustained, because neither party is inferior to the other in perseverance and effort. The Boers command considerable influence with the Liberal Ministry. Let us hope that, in this struggle between two great powers, the poor Coloured people will not be crushed out. Who will listen to the shrill pipe while the drums beat loudly?

112. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Sunday, 3 a.m., [On or after March 11, 1906]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I sent some articles yesterday. I am sending some more with Dalal. The rest I am writing now. If possible, I will despatch them by the evening mail. I will send them by book-post. Let me know when you receive them. Last week I posted them on Sunday but I see from your letter that you had not received them by the morning of Tuesday. I do not understand this delay. I cannot find time except on Saturdays and Sundays. So I want that you should get the Sunday mail on time. I am looking for a remedy from this end.

It will be good if Mr. Bean is given a warm send-off and presented an address. All of you should get together and present him a short address. On the last day, you should dine with him. All this will be in order. Go to see him off. Discuss this with Mr. West.

Blessings from

113. “LEGALIZED ROBBERY”

We publish in another column a special report of a case that was argued on Monday last before the Supreme Court of the Transvaal. Our correspondent has called it “legalized robbery” and we have no hesitation in adopting the title for this note. Law 3 of 1885 has formed the subject-matter of many complaints on the part of the British Indian Association, but we cannot think of any case so cruel or harsh and so unjust as the one reported by our correspondent. A law under which such a glaring wrong can be perpetrated must, to say the least of it, be utterly inhuman. Mr. Leonard, in his eloquent address, evidently thought of the inhumanity of the law when he asked the judges to put a humane interpretation upon it, and if possible to give the unfortunate victims justice. The late Mr. Aboobaker Amod was one of the first Indian settlers in South Africa. He was one of the foremost Indian merchants, and held very considerable landed property in Natal and in other parts of South Africa. He was respected, and very properly so, both by Europeans and the Indians of his time. He was cultured in every sense of the term. He held some landed property in the Transvaal. He made a will bequeathing it to his brother and his son, both of whom are well known and well educated. It has now become possible to rob the heirs of what has been left to them by the testator, and in spite of their wishes to the contrary, the judges of the Supreme Court of the Transvaal were unable to right the wrong. It is hardly possible to get a purer or a more independent bench of judges than the people of the Transvaal have in their Supreme Court. They are not carried away by the slightest prejudice, and we have known them to have given fearless decisions before now. The cause was represented by the ablest lawyer in South Africa, who put his whole heart into it, and yet the judges have not been able, as they virtually admitted, to do justice. The cause is not far to seek. Law 3 of 1885 was passed by a legislature that had no regard for the feelings of British Indians, or, for that matter, any Coloured people. It was manifestly un-British and in breach of all the known rules of civilisation. It was an item of discussion at the Bloemfontein Conference that preceded the Boer War, and when the late President

3 Held in 1899 when Lord Milner, Governor of the Cape, and Paul Kruger, President of the Transvaal, discussed, among other things, the controversial subject of franchise for non-Dutch white settlers in the Transvaal.
Kruger seemed to yield the point of the franchise, Lord Milner it was who sent a cablegram to Mr. Chamberlain, “What about the Coloured men?” Such was his solicitude for them before War, but with the times, His Lordship’s views changed. One would have thought that amongst the first acts of his administration would be repeal of this hateful Law, but His Lordship temporized. British Indians approached him, and he put them off until it became impossible for him to purge the Statute-book of Law 3 of 1885, because of the agitation of the white inhabitants of the Transvaal; and up to this day, it remains in force in the Transvaal as a mark of indelible disgrace for the British administration in the Transvaal over which His Excellency presided. Is the Liberal Government going to perpetuate the terrible wrong under which British Indians are labouring?

114. THE POLL-TAX

A correspondent from Ladysmith writes in the Gujarati columns:

In the Government Gazette dated the 28th February, there is a notice about the poll-tax which states that those, other than Natives, who do not pay the tax before that day, shall be liable to a penalty. This has caused terror amongst the Indians. Those living in the town of Ladysmith have already paid the tax, but the poor Indians, who have just emerged from their indenture and who are living on farms and in distant places, cannot realise the thing, and have not been able to pay the poll-tax. These men have to be informed. The sergeant-in-charge receives the poll-tax, gives them a receipt, and then takes them before the Magistrate and the men are fined. If they do not pay the fine, they have to go to gaol. An instance happened in my presence. An Indian named Motai was living five to seven miles from Ladysmith. He was informed by a friend that he should pay the tax. He, therefore, mortgaged his ear-rings for one pound, at an interest of half-a-crown per month, and paid the tax. He got the receipt and was taken to the Magistrate. He was fined ten shillings. Where is he to get the money from? He had a pass. He has left it in the Court and has promised to bring the fine. . . . Up till now, nearly twelve to fifteen men have been fined.

We bring the above to the notice of the Government. If the information given by our correspondent be true, it reflects the greatest discredit on those who are concerned with the collection of the poll-tax. To make the poor people not only pay the tax, but when they come to pay it, to impose on them a fine seems to us to be the height of injustice. The penalty clause, we should imagine, is applicable, not to those who pay the tax willingly, but to those who want to avoid payment. The daily newspapers report that Indians have been paying the tax with the greatest despatch. As our correspondent points out, it is cruel to expect those who are living in out-of-the-way places to go to the paying-booths before the advertised time and pay the money. We have no doubt that many of them do not know anything about their liability, and if, as our correspondent points out, it is true that the men have to be informed, it is only reasonable to expect the Government to instruct their officers to take the money from those who may pay, and not arrest the men, and have them fined for an alleged contravention of the poll-tax act. We have trust enough in the humanity of the Government to feel that they will stop the injustice that is being perpetrated in the name of law.

_Indian Opinion, 17-3-1906_

115. A PLEA FOR INDIAN VOLUNTEERING.

The Natal Native trouble
1 is dragging on a slow existence. There can be no doubt that the imposition of the poll-tax is itself the immediate cause, though probably the trouble has been brewing for a long time. Whosoever the mistake may be, report has it that it is costing the Colony two thousand pounds per day. The white colonists are trying to cope with it, and many citizen-soldiers have taken up arms. Today, perhaps, no further assistance is necessary, but this trouble ought to suggest reflections to the Government, as also to every thinking colonist. There is a population of over one hundred thousand Indians in Natal. It has been proved that they can do very efficient work in time of war. The suspicion that they were worthless in emergencies has been dispelled. In the face of these incontrovertible facts, is it prudent for the Government to allow a source of strength, which always lies at its disposal, to run to waste? Our contemporary, _The Natal Witness_, has recently written a very thoughtful editorial on the Indian question, and has shown that, some day or other, the question of Indian representation must be seriously taken up by the colonists. We agree with the view, though Indians do not aspire to any political power in the Colony. All they require is a guarantee of full civil rights under the general laws of the Colony. This should be the birthright of every British subject living in a British territory. Refusal to accept anybody as an immigrant is, in certain circumstances, justifiable, but imposition of disabilities upon well-behaved and physically sound immigrants can never be justified either on economic or political grounds. Whilst, therefore, the question of Indian representation is undoubtedly very important, we consider that the question of Indian volunteering is more important because it is more practicable. There is, it is nowadays fully recognised, work in the field which does not require the bearing of arms, but which is just as useful and quite as honourable as the shouldering of a rifle. If the Government, instead of neglecting Indians, were to employ them for volunteering work, they would add appreciably to the utility of the Militia, and would always be able in times of trouble to rely upon Indians giving a good account of themselves. The Government, we doubt not, recognise that it is impossible for them to drive Indians out of the country. Why not, then, make the best of the material at hand, and convert a hitherto neglected community into a permanent and most valuable asset of the State?

116. AN INTER-STATE NATIVE COLLEGE

A considerable amount of enthusiasm has been evoked by the movement that was initiated some months ago by Mr. Tengo Jabavu, Editor of Imvo, with the object of creating an Inter-State Native College with the present Lovedale Institute as its nucleus. Both Mr. Jabavu and Mr. K. A. Hobart Houghton, organising secretary of the movement, have been touring South Africa, their purpose being the threefold one of enlisting the sympathetic co-operation of the various South African Governments, creating a healthy Native opinion on the subject by means of careful explanation and illustration, and, perhaps, most important of all, the collection of funds to enable serious work to be commenced in the near future. We have already in these columns drawn attention to the excellent and instructive programme carried out by Mr. Booker T. Washington at the Tuskegee Institute in America.¹ It is proposed to develop the work to be undertaken by the new College on the same lines of industrial training as in the American Institute. All this can do nothing but good, and it is not to be wondered at that an awakening people, like the great Native races of South Africa, are moved by something that has been described as being very much akin to religious fervour. To them undoubtedly the work must be sanctified and hallowed, for it opens up a means to advancement of thought and gives a great impetus to spiritual development. The enormous sum of £50,000 is in contemplation of collection [sic] from the Natives, apart altogether from subsidies from the various States and the different religious bodies interested. British Indians in South Africa have much to learn from this example of self-sacrifice. If the Natives of South Africa, with all their financial disabilities and social disadvantages, are capable of putting forth this local effort, is it not incumbent upon the British Indian community to take the lesson to heart, and press forward the matter of educational facilities with far greater energy and enthusiasm than have been used hitherto? Reformation, in matters educational, has to come from within, and we would urge that aspect of the question most earnestly upon our readers.

117. SIR WILLIAM GATACRE

We regret to note the death of Major-General Sir William Gatacre in Egypt from fever following on sunstroke. Sir William had a peculiar claim upon the gratitude of British Indians. He was the Chairman of the first Plague Committee formed at Bombay, and by his tactful and delicate handling of most difficult matters, practically all friction and bitterness were avoided. He was a striking example of what is best in the Anglo-Indian character, represented so excellently by such gallant and courteous exponents of British rule as Mountstuart Elphinstone, Munro, Tod, Sleeman, Forbes, Lawrence, and many another. Whilst Britain can produce noble gentlemen of the calibre of the late Sir William Gatacre, there is yet room for hope that India will receive that sympathetic treatment at the hands of her rulers of which she stands so much in need.

118. UNDER-POPULATION IN AUSTRALIA

The whites in Australia are jealous of any one landing on the island. They do not admit even men of their own race. Of Coloured peoples they are sworn enemies. The result is that north Australia has only 820 white inhabitants. That is, for every seven hundred square miles, there is only one white man. A man cannot eat the land; and if there are not enough men on the land, it remains barren and must be regarded as useless wealth. The people of Australia are now waking up to reality. President Roosevelt¹ has written to the Australian people that they would do themselves harm by keeping their country under-populated. Mr. Richard Arthur, a Member of Parliament, is of the opinion that, as Asia and Australia are neighbours, Asians should be allowed to settle in Australia. As such ideas spread, one may expect that Indians will eventually be able to settle in Australia.

119. DISABILITIES OF TRANSVAAL INDIANS

DEPUTATION TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY

Last Saturday, the 10th instant, an Indian deputation waited upon the Assistant Colonial Secretary. It comprised Mr. Abdul Gani, Mr. Haji Habib and Mr. Gandhi. Mr. Chamney and Mr. Burgess were present. The meeting lasted from 11-15 a. m. to 1 p. m. The following were the demands made by the deputation.

1. It takes a great deal of time to obtain permits. It should not take so long; permits should be issued promptly.

2. Great hardship is caused because applications have now to be forwarded to the Magistrate for investigation. This does not take place, and they lie unattended to.

3. The same official should visit the different places to make the investigation, so that it is done uniformly and the matter disposed of quickly. The local people may, if they want, raise objections, but the decisions should be available quickly.

4. Those who are in possession of old registration certificates should not be required to produce witnesses; permits should be issued to them as soon as they have given explanations about their registration certificates.

5. Permits should not be necessary for women, for they at any late do not compete with the whites. It is very insulting to subject women to scrutiny. The number of Indian women in the Transvaal is very small, and they are all here with their menfolk. There is no reason, therefore, to doubt their bona fides.

6. It is outrageous to demand, at the border, both the permit and the registration certificate. Permit-holders should be

² This was published as “Specially Contributed”.

VOL. 5 : 6 NOVEMBER, 1905 - 3 NOVEMBER, 1906 127
immediately allowed to pass as also those who produce only the registration certificate.

7. The practice of taking thumb-impressions of permit-holders at the border is needlessly humiliating.

8. The regulation that boys under twelve years of age can enter only if their parents are in the Transvaal is oppressive. From the beginning, all boys under sixteen have been entering the Transvaal and they should, therefore, be allowed now also. Even if changes are to be made in the regulation, those boys who have already come in should be granted permits without fuss. Adequate notice must be given of the new regulation. As for children who have lost their parents, their relations should be regarded as their guardians.

9. Those who have lost their permits should be granted either certificates or some other proof. If these persons wish to go to India, they should invariably be equipped with some document of this kind. Without it they experience difficulties in coming back. If the Government have any doubts regarding their bona fides, the certificates may be delivered to them at the harbour. If, in the Transvaal, one loses a permit, one suffers much inconvenience in obtaining licences, etc.

10. Temporary permits should be issued for the asking. People must have full freedom to come and go for business purposes.

11. An officer should visit Johannesburg once a week in order to issue permits. People should be liable to no more than the minimum of inconvenience; for most of these people have no need to go to Pretoria except for the sake of a permit.

12. The issue of tickets [to Indians] for the train leaving at 8-30 a.m. from Johannesburg or Pretoria has been discontinued. This is quite wrong. It is hoped that immediate redress will be granted in this regard.

13. It is clearly improper to seat both men and women, and more particularly to crowd them in a single compartment as is done now.

14. As for the trams in Pretoria, Mr. Moore had said that a clarification would be issued. A change in the present arrangement is necessary. The whites should not object to Indians occupying the last one or two benches.

15. The right to travel by tram should be granted, even if the decision in the test case at Johannesburg should prove unfavourable.¹

16. The ousting of the Kaffirs from the Bazaar at Pretoria is wrong; for, whatever the law, Indians have for many years now earned rentals from Kaffir tenants. It behoves the Government to ensured that Indians do not suffer any loss on this account.

In his reply to the above demands, Mr. Curtis² said that he would place all the facts before Mr. Duncan. He was not in a position to give any decision on the spot. It was not the intention of the Government to put Indians to hardship. All possible redress would be granted. Very likely, magistrates would be asked to scrutinize refugee applications within a fortnight. If they did not do so within that period, the Protector would give the decision. He felt that women ought to pay £3. To this the deputation answered that, if the Government were of this view, they were prepared to go to court.

Mr. Curtis said that it would be a great convenience if all the ten finger-prints were given on the permit.

The deputation flatly refused to agree to this. In the end, Mr. Curtis promised to give his decision on all the points as soon as possible and the deputation took leave of him after thanking him.

120. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

March 17, 1906

FIRE AT JOHANNESBURG

This week there was a very big fire here in Rissik Street, in which much valuable material for manufacturing motor cars, etc., was destroyed. The loss is estimated at about £30,000. The landlord has been hard hit because the loss was not fully covered by insurance.

PERMITS

The hardships on account of permits have increased. The Protector now refuses to issue even temporary ones. Two such cases have occurred recently. A merchant from Howick who wanted a temporary permit has received a flat refusal from the Protector.

1 Vide "Johannesburg Letter", 26-2-1906 / 10-3-1906
2 Lionel Curtis, Assistant Colonial Secretary
Similarly, a permit has been refused to a nephew\(^1\) of the well-known Mr. Manga of Delagoa Bay. The matter is still being pursued, but it would appear a tough fight will have to be put up over permits.

Meanwhile, the Indian population of Johannesburg is being depleted day by day. As opportunities of earning money decrease, the people are obliged to leave.

CHINESE LABOUR

The mining magnates here are worried and upset by the recent news that the immigration of Chinese labour is to be prohibited. This in turn has caused great disappointment among the people. It is difficult to say what the future of this city will be.

Owing to these circumstances, starvation has increased. Many are out of employment and see no way to earn their daily bread.

VICARIOUS LIABILITY

An interesting suit was recently heard in the law court here. Dr. Kincaid Smith’s motor car was being driven by his chauffeur and an engineer, named Mr. Clark Dacurtey\(^2\), was at the time riding his bicycle. Dr. Smith’s chauffeur turned the car slightly in from his side of the road and collided with Mr. Dacurtey’s bicycle, knocking him down. He was hurt and had to be removed to hospital. Dr. Smith was not in the car when the accident occurred. Mr. Dacurtey filed a suit in the High Court here claiming £2,000 as damages. Justice Bristow, giving judgment, awarded £750 to Mr. Dacurtey; but while doing so, the honourable judge remarked that, though Dr. Smith himself was not at fault, he had to suffer vicariously for the fault of his employee. People ought to be very careful while employing a person. If the servant commits a fault resulting in injury to a third party, the damage has to be made good by the employer. Had the offence been committed by Dr. Smith’s servant while he was not going on his master’s business, Dr. Smith would not have been obliged to pay.

This case has a lesson for persons engaging servants, especially chauffeurs, who often make mistakes either through insolence or lack of sufficient ability, and for this the masters have to suffer.

121. LETTER TO DADABHAI NAOROJI

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION

25 & 26 COURT CHAMBERS,
RISSIK STREET,
JOHANNESBURG,
March 19, 1906

TO
THE HON. DADABHAI NAOROJI
22 KENNINGTON ROAD
LONDON ENGLAND

[SIR,]

I beg to invite your attention to the issue of Indian Opinion of the 10th March, containing a protest addressed to the Natal Government by the Natal Indian Congress regarding the imposition of prohibitive fees for certificates and passes that are granted under the Immigration Restriction Act.

I need hardly say that the imposition is a totally unjust exaction for which there is not the slightest justification.

Another serious blow to the Indian community in South Africa has been given in the Transvaal. You will see from the issue of Indian Opinion of the 17th March a case heard before the Supreme Court of the Transvaal under Law 3 of 1885. A full report of the case and comments thereon appear in the Opinion. Both the matters require urgent attention.

I remain,
Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

122. THE EARLY CLOSING ACT OF NATAL

The effects of the Early Closing Act are now beginning to be felt. We have never held that an Early Closing Act would not be justifiable under any circumstances. On the contrary, we conceive that a well-thought-out measure would always be of great benefit to the community at large; but the present Act has been framed without sufficient consideration for the consumers, or for the small retail traders. The result has been to cause much inconvenience to poor householders and a very great loss to the small traders. The only persons that could possibly benefit are large retail houses. We entirely endorse the remarks made by The Natal Mercury representative when he says that the small trader is gradually being swamped by the large houses, the number of which can be counted on one's fingers. It would be a misfortune, indeed, if legislation of this type is allowed to force good colonists to the wall and deprive them of an honest livelihood.

The remedy suggested is suspension of the Act. Experience has shown that the shops ought to be allowed to keep open later than half-past Eve, and that Saturday closing is a serious mistake. The Natal Witness has taken up, in connection with this matter, a somewhat spiteful attitude. It concludes some remarks on the subject by saying it is a well-known fact that the Arab and Indian merchants in the town have been hard hit. Let the Europeans bear this well in mind.

Our contemporary urges the Europeans not to agitate against the Act, on the sole ground of its having adversely affected Indian trade. In its haste to see the Indian injured, The Witness has entirely forgotten that, in injuring the Indian, the small white traders, who alone can feel the competition of Indian traders, will not only be injured, but will be wiped out entirely, for whilst the frugal habits of the Indian may enable him to tide over the difficulty, the white petty traders, who notoriously fail to save, will be entirely helpless.

The real remedy is not to kill the small white retailer, so that the Indian will be hit but in having reasonable closing hours for both European and Indian traders, so that they may get a chance of earning a living after the large retail houses have closed. The latter will always be obliged to close much earlier than the small retailers. The Witness, by having taken a prejudiced view of the situation, has also fallen into the error of supposing that the saving of expenses of electric light to the shopkeepers is any gain. We give The Witness the credit for understanding that no shopkeeper would pay for the electric current, if he could not more than make up for the expense by the profits he would gain from the trade he would be doing during those hours.

123. THE COLOURED PEOPLE’S PETITION

We have been favoured with a copy of the petition of Coloured British subjects “resident in the Colonies of the Cape of Good Hope, the Transvaal, and the Orange River Colony” addressed to the King-Emperor.

It seems that the petition is being widely circulated, and signatures are being taken of all the Coloured people in the three Colonies named. The petition is non-Indian in character, although British Indians, being Coloured people, are very largely affected by it. We consider that it was a wise policy, on the part of British Indians throughout South Africa, to have kept themselves apart and distinct from the other Coloured communities in this country. It is true that British Indians and other Coloured people have much in common regarding their grievances, but they have little in common regarding the points of view from which each section can urge its claim. Whereas British Indians may, and do effectively, use the Proclamation of 1858 in support of their claims, the other Coloured people are not in a position to do so; and whilst some sections of the Coloured people can claim full rights as to property and movement in the Orange River Colony, British Indians have no footing whatsoever. Similarly, in the Transvaal, many sections of other Coloured people are capable of owning landed property, but British Indians are debarred from doing so under Law 3 of 1885. Whilst, therefore, the Indian and non-Indian sections of the Coloured communities should, and do, remain apart, and have their separate organisations, there is no doubt that each can give strength to the other in urging their common rights. Hence we have no hesitation in welcoming the document before us. We must congratulate the framers of the petition on having confined themselves to the barest facts. It has always appeared to us that the case for the Coloured people in South Africa is so overwhelmingly strong and just that a statement of facts in connection with it is more eloquent than any other form of pleading. The petition has left many things unsaid, but the deductions to be drawn from the statements made therein are plain enough. The petitioners have shown clearly that, in one part of South Africa, namely, in the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, they have enjoyed the franchise ever since the commencement of representative institutions, and they show also that, even in 1892, when there was a revision of the Franchise Act, there was no alteration made imposing disqualification on colour; and, as a result, there are, at the present day, at the Cape, 14,000 qualified Coloured voters on the register. The petitioners go on to say that they have looked upon the possession of that right as an inducement to obtain the necessary property and education test, and have, they humbly submit, exercised that right with dignity and propriety, and in the interests of the whole community without respect of creed or colour.

But, they add, as soon as they migrate either to the Orange River Colony or the Transvaal Colony, they and their descendants come under the ban of disqualification on the ground of colour. The petitioners have rightly made the franchise the greatest plank in their programme, because, in their own language, deprived of these rights, Your Majesty’s coloured subjects are deprived also, to a great extent, of the means of publicly ventilating, and obtaining redress by constitutional means, of any grievances that they may suffer from, and those grievances are not such as can be rectified by recourse to a court of law.

The truth of this statement can be verified from scores of illustrations. In a country enjoying popular institutions, it is a bad day for those who have no voice in the choice of popular representatives; and through no fault of theirs or of their representatives, the disfranchised gradually go under, because under self-government, self-interest becomes predominant. British Indians have, in order that they may never be misunderstood, made it clear that they do not aspire to any political power, but they have found to their cost that, in Natal as elsewhere, as they have no voice in the election of popular representatives, their civil liberty has suffered very considerably. The Coloured petition is a weighty document. It is being numerously signed, and it is to be hoped that its prayer will receive the attention and consideration which it undoubtedly deserves. The Liberal Ministers have more than once avowed their desire to help the weaker members of the Empire. In granting the Constitution to the new Colonies, they have an unfettered discretion and a unique opportunity of putting their principles into practice.

_Indian Opinion_, 24-3-1906
124. THE COLOURED PEOPLE’S PETITION

We print in this issue a report of the meeting held by the Coloured people at Pretoria. We also publish a translation of the petition submitted by them. We use the term “Coloured people” because, if translated as “black people”, it would include the Kaffirs also. There were no Kaffirs present at the meeting. It mainly consisted of the people known as “Cape boys”. And there were those who had a white father or mother. Some Malays also joined it.

This Association of Coloured People does not include Indians who have always kept aloof from that body. We believe that the Indian community has been wise in doing so. For, though the hardships suffered by those people and the Indians are almost of the same kind, the remedies are not identical. It is therefore proper that the two should fight out their cases, each in their own appropriate way. We can cite the Proclamation of 1857 in our favour, which the Coloured people cannot. They can use the powerful argument that they are the children of the soil. They can also argue that their way of life is entirely European. We can petition the Secretary of State for India, whereas they cannot. They belong largely to the Christian community and can therefore avail themselves of the help of their priests. Such help is not available to us. The Coloured people have evidently started a big struggle; hence the need for these comments.

In their meeting at Pretoria, they transgressed the limits of propriety and used insulting language about Lord Milner, and this has been severely criticised by The Times of Natal. The President of the meeting declared that, just as the Boers lost their kingdom by committing outrages against the Coloured people, even so the British would lose theirs if the atrocities continued, implying thereby that the Coloured people would rise against them. But then they have not the strength even to confront the whites. A man should always measure his strength before embarking on a task.

The petition prepared by the Coloured people is very good. They have stated all the facts necessary and nothing besides. Their facts are so eloquent that it is hardly necessary to adduce any argument in support. They have shown that they have so far enjoyed full rights in the Cape Colony, and ask why they should not have the same rights in the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony.

1 Gandhiji has transliterated the term in Gujarati.
2 Evidently a slip for 1858
To canvass support for their petition, they propose to send Dr. Abdurahman1 to England. This is a very desirable and necessary move. It is necessary for every community to do all that is possible to make its grievances heard. It is necessary to send one or two persons to England. It is to be seen what comes out of this movement of the Coloured people. They are striving so hard that, most likely, their efforts will yield some fruit. And if their grievances are redressed, the benefit will accrue to the Indians also.

We should also attempt something similar to what they are doing.

125. A WORD TO THE MUSLIM COMMUNITY IN HEIDELBERG

We have published a number of letters on the dissensions persisting in the Muslim community in Heidelberg. We have allowed both sides to state their points of view fully. To publish further correspondence on the subject will serve only to keep the quarrel alive. We shall therefore stop publishing such letters from next week.

The letters already published indicate that possibly both sides are more or less in the wrong. We do not propose to dwell on this. Whosoever be the fault, we can see that the quarrel is over a petty matter, and it continues primarily because of the obstinacy on both sides. We appeal to both the parties to remove the causes of dissension and live together in peace and amity. It is the duty of their leaders to see this done. In this country we have so many hardships to suffer that they should not be aggravated by internal dissensions and difficulties. If people learn to give and take and be patient, the quarrel will soon come to an end. We earnestly hope therefore that the leaders of the two sides will come together, remove the discord within the Heidelberg community and restore unity.

126. SMALLPOX IN THE CAPE

News has been received from the Cape that smallpox has started amongst the non-whites there. The Cape leaders should investigate the matter and take effective measures. It is easy to deal with smallpox by following a few rules. The danger of the infection spreading can largely be avoided by segregating the patient in a separate room and carefully nursing him there. Nothing is to be gained by concealing such diseases; for, ultimately, it is the community in which such cases occur that has to suffer.

127. PLAGUE IN SYDNEY

News received by cablegram states that five cases of plague have occurred in Sydney. Another cablegram during the week mentions two cases on board a steamer, and adds that these were among the Coloured people. Sydney is doubtless far away, but experience shows that, whenever cases of plague occur outside India, they occur simultaneously in many places. Moreover, in a country where they are always looking hard for plague cases to be used as an argument against us, it is necessary for us to act warily. We have often pointed out that the main causes of plague are uncleanness and impure air. We should therefore bear in mind the following instructions: houses should be kept clean; no filth should be allowed to accumulate in latrines; each time faeces should be covered over with ashes or sand; floors should be washed clean with disinfectant liquids; plenty of fresh air and light should be freely let into the house; and simple food should be eaten regularly. One need not entertain any fear if one follows these directions.

March 28, 1906

Sheth Shri Hajee Ismail Hajee Aboobaker Jhaveri,

I got your cables. The deed was received today, duly registered. No pains have been spared. However, we could not succeed in retaining the property in the name of the late Sheth Aboobaker or his heirs. In my opinion, we had no option but to take the step we did.¹ I don’t think there is any risk to you in what has been done. It is true that the property is not in your name, but it is yours all the same. That is the deed. The will is to that effect and, to make things doubly sure, we have also secured a bond to the same effect. You have, therefore, no need to worry at all. One copy of the deed, signed by you, will have to be given to the Registrar. Sheth is sending it for your signature.

I am hopeful that the property may yet be transferred to your name. We are moving in the matter. A representation has been sent to England. We were not in a position to challenge the law in the Privy Council but I am corresponding on a political level. Whether or no they amend the law in other respects, efforts are being made for provision of legal authority for the transfer of this property to your name. Meanwhile, it remains yours to all intents and purposes. Its enjoyment rests with you. Also, the rent which it yields will be wholly yours.

I hope you are keeping fit.

130. PETITION TO LORD ELGIN

DURBAN,
March 30, 1906

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF ELGIN
HIS MAJESTY’S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES
LONDON

THE PETITION OF DADA OSMAN OF VRYHEID, IN THE COLONY OF NATAL,

HUMBLY SHEWETH THAT

1. Your petitioner is a British Indian subject.
2. Your petitioner has been domiciled in South Africa for the last 24 years.
3. Your petitioner opened business in Vryheid in the year 1896 as a General Dealer at what was then known as the Indian Location.
4. Your petitioner has built premises thereon estimated at £300.
5. Several attempts were made by the late Boer Government to remove your petitioner from the said premises on to a place which was to be fixed as a new Location, but owing to the intervention of the British Government, your petitioner was able to continue his business.

in the said premises.

6. Your petitioner always traded in Vryheid under a licence properly issued to him.

7. Your petitioner had a stock of soft goods and groceries valued at about £3,000.

8. Such was your petitioner’s position when Vryheid was annexed to Natal.

9. The terms of annexation provide for the retention of Law 3 of 1885, as amended in 1886, which is known as the anti-Asiatic Law of the Transvaal.

10. According to the interpretation put upon the Law by the Supreme Court of the Transvaal, British Indians are not restricted to any area as to their trade, and are free to take out trade licences in the same manner as other British subjects.

11. The Vryheid Local Board, however, refused to renew your petitioner’s licence in respect of the premises above mentioned, and offered to allow your petitioner to trade in Vryheid if he removed to a new site fixed by the Board at a Location.

12. The said site is far away from Vryheid and totally unsuitable for trade.

13. It is impossible for your petitioner to carry on his business in a place which is away from the business portions of the town.

14. Your petitioner has built up an excellent goodwill in connection with his said premises.

15. Your petitioner made many attempts to get a renewal of his licence which was refused.

16. The Local Board, in order to prevent your petitioner from trading on the said premises, enforced a Natal Law, 18 of 1897, entitled the Dealers’ Licenses Act.

17. Your petitioner is, therefore, subject to twofold restrictions—namely, the Transvaal Law, as also the Natal Law—which make the position of British Indians in Vryheid worse than in the Transvaal, or in other parts of Natal.

18. In accordance with Act 18 of 1897, your petitioner had to apply for his licence to the Licensing Officer, who is also the Town Clerk, and who, therefore, takes his instructions from the Local Board.

19. The Licensing Officer refused to grant a renewal.

20. Your petitioner, therefore, appealed to the Local Board in terms of the Law.

1 Vide “The Judgment in the Test Case”, 16-5-1904
21. The Local Board, which mainly consists of rival traders and members prejudiced against your petitioner, has confirmed the decision of the Licensing Officer.

22. The following are the reasons given by the Licensing Officer for his refusal:

1. The Licensing Officer has no power to issue licences for premises on the Town Lands, and far less for such Town Lands as have not been formerly leased by the Local Board.

2. I refused the Licence in the second place because by issuing the same I would act in direct opposition to Government Notice No. 191, Government Gazette, of the 14th March, 1905, and the laws thereunder proclaimed to be in force in the Northern Districts, which distinctly prohibit the issuing of licences to Indians, except in Locations.

3. I refused the Licence because in so doing I acted in the best interests and with the expressed feelings of the whole community, with the exception, perhaps, of the applicant’s Attorney.

This will more fully appear from copy of the record hereto attached.

23. The first reason given by the Licensing Officer is entirely misleading in that your petitioner has been refused a licence to trade anywhere except in Locations.

24. The second reason is also bad in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the Transvaal above referred to.

25. The third reason is the only real reason, that is to say, that your petitioner is a British Indian.

26. There is no appeal under the said Act 18 of 1897 to the Supreme Court of the Colony, the decision of the Local Board being considered final.

27. Your petitioner approached the Local Board for reasons for its decision, and the Local Board has decided not to give any reasons for its decision, as will appear from the correspondence between your petitioner’s Solicitor and the Town Clerk, copy whereof is hereto attached.

28. Your petitioner then applied for temporary permission to carry on trade, pending further proceedings by your petitioner for obtaining relief. The Local Board has declined to grant the application.

29. Your petitioner has been advised that he is without any legal relief against the action of the Local Board.

30. Your petitioner has, therefore, been obliged to close his store, and has thrown upon him the whole of his stock, book debts and his servants.

31. Your petitioner respectfully submits that the action of the Local Board is high-handed, unjust and arbitrary, in that by its action in refusing to renew your petitioner’s licence without any fault of his and without any compensation, your petitioner has been deprived of the means of livelihood, so far as the Board is concerned.

32. Your petitioner further submits that the manifest injury he has sustained ought not under the British Constitution to remain without a remedy.

33. Your petitioner, therefore, prays that His Majesty’s Government will be pleased to intervene on his behalf and, in such a manner as to them may appear meet, would secure relief for your petitioner.

And for this act of justice and mercy, your petitioner shall as in duty bound for ever pray, etc.

Dated at Durban, this 30th day of March 1906.

131. THE EARLY CLOSING ACT

A mountain is being made out of a molehill by some writers in the Natal Press on the Early Closing Act. Many of them chuckle with delight that at last they are in a position to hurt the Indian trader. Our contemporary, The Natal Advertiser, thinks with us that the Early Closing Act is not likely to detrimentally affect the Indian community, without more seriously affecting petty white traders. Had it stopped there, we should have nothing to say, but it goes on to suggest that a mass meeting should be called in the Town Hall, both of traders and working men, to consider this subject, and to devise some means for putting an effective check on this Asiatic immigration and competition. If this were done, we have no doubt that the real facts of the situation would come out in a way that would astonish some people and lead to some really effective and useful action being taken. This, we think, is no matter for playing with; it is a matter of self-preservation, a matter of real life and death to the white people of all classes in Natal.

We propose calmly to consider the suggestion.

We have no objection to a mass meeting being held in the Town Hall; but will it attain the object desired by our contemporary? Have the masses ever entered into a calm discussion of any subject? A mass meeting can only give strength to a movement which is based on facts, but it never sifts and finds true facts. It is guided often by invective and appeals to passions. Mass meetings, therefore, become dangerous when they are called upon to deal with a situation which has not been ascertained. We will accept the premise that the question is one of “self-preservation and of real life and death to the white people”. Facts, therefore, have to be found and effective action taken thereon. Now, one fact is absolutely clear, namely, that the Indian trader is entirely at the mercy of the Licensing Officer and Local Boards. Another fact, too, is quite clear, that in several cases Licensing Officers and Local Boards have acted in a most arbitrary and high-handed manner. A third fact is that Mr. Harry Smith is watching with ever increasing vigilance the entry of every Indian immigrant into the Colony, and not an Indian is allowed to enter, either through the port or through the land border of the Colony, unless he can prove former domicile. What more can be required? If it is a question of the working of these two laws, then certainly a mass meeting will not serve the purpose. A commission of enquiry is the only remedy, and we would welcome it with open arms. If it be really felt by the European population in Natal that the Indian trader is flourishing, that he is competing unfairly and that the stringent laws are not being stringently enforced, a small committee of impartial men would soon bring out the facts, and if they proved the existence of any such situation as feared by our contemporary, it would then be time enough to call a mass meeting to give point to the findings of such a commission of enquiry.

132. THE BULWARK OF JUSTICE

A very important case has just been heard before the Circuit Court in Potchefstroom. An attempt was made by two Europeans to levy blackmail on an Indian merchant in Potchefstroom. The method adopted was to take him to the wife of one of them, and there to charge him with an attempted rape. The conspiracy was all but successful. The blackmailers received £300 by cheque from the terrified Indian, but fortunately for the latter, he immediately sought legal help. His lawyer advised him to stop payment of the cheque and lodge information with the police. This was promptly done. The men were arrested and so was the woman. The result was a sensational case before Justice Wessels, and the Indian’s reputation was made good. The charge of blackmail was proved, and the two male prisoners were sentenced to three years, imprisonment with hard labour. There was no supporting evidence for the Indian’s story with reference to the blackmail; as against him, there were the two Dutch prisoners, who emphatically said that he was attempting to rape the female prisoner. The Indian stoutly denied it and said that he was inveigled into the house and then falsely charged.

That, under such difficult circumstances an Indian has been able to get justice is a matter for universal congratulation, as it is of very great satisfaction to British Indians. Once more it has been proved, in a most striking manner, that the fount of British justice, when it is a matter of the High Court, is the purest possible. A long line of fearless and impartial judges has handed down traditions which have become an inherent part of the British Constitution, and we have no hesitation in saying that one of the greatest secrets of the success of the Empire is its ability to deal out even-handed justice. A case such as the one we have referred to makes up for many a defect in the legal administration in the various British possessions. It serves as a beacon-light to tell Indians, and all those who may suffer from temporary disabilities and consequent irritation, that they need not be without hope, so long as the fierce sun of pure justice beats on the chill surface of broken promises.

Justice Wessels in his summing-up not only dealt with the case itself but felt called upon to deal generally with the right of the meanest British Subject to have a full and fair hearing. “It was a painful thing,” said His Lordship, (we quote the report in the Potchefstroom Budget) to hear in this country—he had heard it in that Court that when they had a conflict of evidence between a white man and a black man, they ought to accept the testimony of the white man. That was a fallacy, an untruth. He thought the jury would act very wrongly if they accepted the testimony of the white man against the black that day. The liberties and property of the black man should be respected to the utmost of their power. There would be nothing more fatal than that they should, when they had the interests of the white and black man to deal with, for one moment swerve from their sense of justice. The black man in this country must have as true justice meted out to him as the white man among the highest in the land. That was a maxim they must keep before them, and not, because the prosecutor was a black man, let the prisoners off.

Every true lover of the Empire must feel deeply grateful to Justice Wessels for having so nobly vindicated British justice.

133. INDIAN VOLUNTEERING

Mr. Watt, the Minister of Defence, has been “letting himself go” at a recent meeting which was held in connection with the militia. In reply to a question:

Do the Government propose to make Arabs, in possession of stores in various parts of the Colony, join the militia reserves, and if so, will they provide them with rifles?

the answer, we are told, which Mr. Watt gave, drew forth a round of applause. “I am pleased,” he is reported to have said, to say that the militia is composed entirely of Europeans. I should be sorry indeed if I should have to depend for the defence of myself and family on Arabs, but the Government, I am glad to say, has power in time of war to turn out all the Coloured population—Indians, Natives and Arabs—for any service which may be necessary.

The following further question was then put:

Does the Government recognise that when the Europeans are called out, the Arabs will obtain the trade in all districts? What do they propose doing in regard to this?

Mr. Watt’s reply was in keeping with the first:

That is a matter in which I think the leaders should have a voice. If I were a leader, I should advise the Government to regulate the opening and closing times of shops. I should see that Europeans were not treated worse than Arabs, and I should see that the Arabs had their share of the work, if not in carrying rifles, in digging trenches.

We have no doubt that, as Defence Minister, Mr. Watt knows that digging of trenches is just as necessary in warfare as the shouldering of a rifle. If, then, he would not depend for his own and his family’s defence on Arabs, why will he have the latter to dig trenches? Either work, we have it from the late Mr. Harry Escombe, who, too, was a Minister of Defence, is equally honourable. Whether Mr. Watt, on reconsideration, would have himself or the Colony defended by Arabs and Indians or not, by the work of digging trenches or other work, how does he expect them to do any work in connection with warfare unless previous training is given? Even the camp-followers in an army require proper discipline, otherwise they are, instead of being a help, a positive nuisance. But we despair of having either common sense or justice at the hands of a Minister who so far forgets himself as to offer an unwarranted insult to a whole class of inoffensive people.

In contradistinction to the attitude shown on various occasions by the Minister of Defence—whose business it is as a Minister, we might remark, to put his personal prejudices in his pocket — we welcome an editorial in The Natal Advertiser of the other day, which we reprint elsewhere. Our contemporary rightly gives Indians and Coloured people the credit due to them. It also points out that Section 83 of the Militia Act states that no ordinary member of a Coloured contingent shall be armed with weapons of precision, unless such contingents are called out to operate against [persons] other than Europeans. Now it is evident that, in the unfortunate event of such a state of affairs arising as to necessitate the arming of an Indian contingent, the arms would be useless in the hands of inexperienced men. Why will not the authorities adopt the suggestion we made some time ago,¹ and raise a volunteer corps from amongst Indians? We feel sure the Colonial-born Indians especially — Natal’s own children equally with the whites — would give a good account of themselves. Why do not the Colonists insist on these, at all events, being given a chance to prove their mettle?

134. THE TRANSVAAL CONSTITUTION

The Home Government have lost no time in appointing the much-talked-of Committee of Inquiry on Transvaal affairs. Two of the members, Sir West Ridgeway² and Lord Sandhurst³, are men with Indian experience. The scope of the inquiry is to be limited to finding out a basis for the new Constitution. The Government do not⁴ “find it possible to form a Constitution without information, and this it hopes to obtain from you”. The Commissioners are to take into their consideration, amongst other things, “community or diversity of interests”, and political and social conditions; and though it is difficult to state whether the scope of the inquiry includes an examination of the question of Coloured franchise, it is to be hoped that the Commissioners will have full power to advise upon that difficult and delicate subject. Events that are happening in the Transvaal and elsewhere show the force of the remarks made in these columns, that, in the absence of any other remedy for the protection of Indian rights, Indian representation seems to be necessary.

135. INDIAN LABOUR FOR THE TRANSVAAL MINES

The Transvaal papers are full of cablegrams regarding the proposed negotiations with the Government of India for the supply of Indian labour. We are glad that the Anglo-Indians in England are hostile to the movement for two reasons; first, that there will be very great mortality amongst the Indian miners, and secondly, because Indian mine-labourers are all required for mining enterprise in India itself. It will be remembered that, when Lord Miner asked Lord Curzon to let him have ten thousand Indians for the railway works, Lord Curzon declined to give the assistance unless the grievances of British Indians resident in the Transvaal were redressed.¹ This was two years ago. The position of British Indians in the Transvaal is no better today than it was at the time Lord Curzon declined to come to the rescue. There are, therefore, three good reasons why Indian labour should not be made available for the mines in the Transvaal. We think that, in any case, the bartering of the liberty of Indian labourers for the removal of the disabilities of British Indian settlers in the Transvaal would not be a creditable act and would create a very bad precedent. Each in our opinion, ought to be treated on its own merits. We have no doubt that British Indians in the Transvaal would decline to receive greater freedom if it involved unjust and unnatural restrictions on the liberty of their poorer countrymen. We also feel that the introduction of thousands of Indian mine-labourers into the Transvaal would render more complicated a situation which is already fraught with many difficulties. We, therefore, trust that both Mr. Morley and Lord Minto will firmly oppose any proposal to assist the Transvaal at the expense of the interests of their wards.

136. INDIANS AT THE CAPE

The Cape Government Gazette of the 16th March contains a Bill to amend the Cape Immigration Restriction Act of 1902. The Bill is decidedly a retrograde step, so far as British Indians are concerned. The Act of 1902 was conceived in secrecy and sprung upon the public in indecent haste, so much so that many members of the Cape Assembly protested against its being rushed through the House. However, the Act was passed. Now, by the Bill in question, it is proposed to amend it. British Indians who approached the Govern ment were almost assured that the latter would take an early opportunity of altering the Act in the direction suggested by them, and that they would probably ask the House to recognise the great Indian languages for the educational test, and make suitable provision for the entry of domestic servants and others for the benefit of those that were already settled in that Colony. Instead, however, of any such improvement being made in the Act, the Bill is calculated to place still further restrictions on the liberty of British Indians. That it is of general application does not take away from its deadly effect on the Indians at whom it is mainly aimed. There is no definition of an immigrant in the present Act. The common law definition, therefore, that an immigrant is one who enters to settle in the country, is applicable under it, and therefore, by inference, the Act leaves it free for the Minister to grant visitors’ passes, and to allow Indians and others, who may enter the Colony for a temporary visit, to do so unmolested. The Bill in question changes all this, and defines an immigrant to “mean and include any person who, arriving [from] without this Colony, enters or claims to enter from land or sea”. We imagine that, in such a definition, which is quite artificial, there will be no room left for provision being made to enable mere visitors to pass through or sojourn in the Colony. Another important difference the Bill makes is that, whereas the Act of 1902 excepts from its operation persons domiciled in South Africa, the Bill excepts only those who “prove to the satisfaction of the Minister that they are domiciled in the Colony, and that they do not come under sub-sections c, e, and f of the preceding section”. The restriction, therefore, is much more severe, and will put endless obstacles in the way of British Indians entering the Colony. The question of domicile is now to be left in the hands of the Minister, instead of being left to the interpretation of the Supreme Court. Only a few days ago, we commented upon a case that happened at the Cape where an Indian was able, because he could approach the Supreme Court, to make good his claim to a domicile in South Africa. Had the poor man been left to the mercy of the Minister, he would have received short shrift. Then, again, domicile under the Bill is to be restricted only to the Cape Colony. Those, therefore, who are still in the Transvaal or Natal will be unable to enter that Colony. We trust the British Indian League of Cape Town will take the matter up, and see that proper relief is granted.

137. DEATH OF MISS BISSICKS

It is our painful duty to announce the death of Miss A. M. Bissicks of Johannesburg on Monday last after an operation. Miss Bissicks was an accomplished English lady. She took a leading part in the vegetarian movement at Johannesburg, and was a prominent member of the Theosophical Society. In many ways she had much sympathy with Indians, and her death will be greatly regretted.

Indian Opinion, 31-3-1906

138. PERMIT HARDSHIPS IN THE TRANSVAAL

We hear that the hardships caused by the problem of permits in the Transvaal are increasing daily. The issuing of temporary permits now seems to have been stopped altogether. Mr. Suliman Manga, the nephew of Mr. Ismail Manga, who arrived recently in Durban from England, applied for a temporary permit for proceeding through the Transvaal to Delagoa Bay, but his application was rejected by the Colonial Secretary, and Mr. Suliman Manga had to take the sea route. This is no small injustice.

Mr. Nomura of Japan had difficulty in obtaining a temporary permit, and he shook up the whole of the Transvaal because of it. Mr. Suliman Manga, being a British subject, had a greater right than Mr. Nomura. His education also gives him a better claim. Yet he was not permitted to pass through the Transvaal.

This is only an instance of the present hardships. But if all the reports we hear are correct, the promise made by Lord Selborne is being honoured only in the breach.

The claimants have been awarded £95,00,000, of which £50,00,000 goes to the burghers of the Orange River Colony, £20,00,000 to British subjects and others, and the rest in favour of the burghers of the Transvaal and Vryheid.

140. NEW COMMITTEE OF BRITISH M. PS. FOR INDIAN AFFAIRS

Sir William Wedderburn misses no opportunity of doing India a good turn. The latest issue of India shows that he held a meeting and organized a parliamentary committee for India. Some years ago, there existed a committee, which, however, became practically defunct during the last Parliament. Members of Parliament who are well-wishers of India have joined this Committee, and it is a very powerful one. Some very eminent Members of Parliament, such as Sir Henry Cotton, Mr Herbert Roberts, Mr. Pickersgill and Mr. O’Donnell have joined it and they believe that India will get justice at the hands of the new Parliament. For all this we are beholden to Sir William Wedderburn.

St. Stephen’s Club in London is very old and famous; Sir George Birdwood was a well-known member. He has served for many years in India and has always been a friend of the Indian. Sir George proposed the name of a very famous Indian for membership of the Club. But as the other members objected to the proposal, Sir George resigned his membership. Congratulations to Sir George! It is thanks to such Anglo-Indians that Indians have tolerated British rule.

142. DONATION BY CADBURY BROS.

HOW TO TREAT EMPLOYEES

The firm of Cadbury Brothers, of Cadbury Cocoa fame, is well known throughout the world. From small beginnings they have built up a huge concern. They are now the proprietors of the Daily News of London and belong to the baker sect. They have always spent a portion of their profits on improving the conditions of their employees. They have raised a fund of £60,000 to pay the pensions of their employees, of whom they have a large number, many of them very old and loyal. Where there is such appreciation of labour, small wonder that the workers should consider their master’s work as their own and do it with care and diligence.

143. JOHANNESBURY LETTER

DR. ABDURAHMAN’S ADDRESS

A large meeting of the Coloured people was held in the Milner Hall on March 21. Dr. Abdurahman, who is the President of the African Political Organization as well as a member of the Cape Town Municipality, had especially come here to attend it. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Daniel, and the hall was packed, about 500 men attending. Some Indians too were present, including Mr. Abdul Gani, Mr. Omar Haji Amod Zaveri, Mr. Haji Ojer Ally, Mr. Gandhi and others.

The following were the main points of Dr. Abdurahman’s speech.

PURPOSE OF MEETING

“We have foregathered here today with a view to petitioning His Majesty about our rights. The petition has already been drawn up and signatures of all the Coloured people are being obtained. When we in the Cape learnt of the hardships suffered by you in the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony, we thought that we should do the best we could for you. That would be in our interest as well. For, if your rights are whittled down, the same may well happen to us in the Cape to.

OUR GRIEVANCES

“The Coloured people in the Transvaal and the Orange River
Colony have to suffer many deprivations. But the most important among them is that they do not have franchise and have been divested of many civil rights. If we continue in a state of slavery, our condition is bound to deteriorate from day to day. There is no difference between taxing people without their consent and stealing their money. If therefore the Coloured people do not possess the right to franchise, no taxes should be levied on them.

THE REMEDY

“The best way to end these hardships is now to petition the King Emperor. We have done all we could here in South Africa. A new ministry has come into power in England, and hopes of these grievances being remedied have been aroused. If we start putting forth our best efforts, we shall doubtless obtain our rights gradually.

“We are worthy of these rights. The greatest hero of the South African War was Esau who sacrificed his life out of loyalty to the British. When the majority of the Boers opposed the British Government, the Coloured people remained single-mindedly loyal. In the Cape, the Coloured people have the right of franchise just as the whites have and they have never misused it. If it is true that the war, as British officials have claimed, was fought for our sake, then there should be no oppression practised against us.

A DIFFICULTY

“Our position is strong, and we should, therefore, by and large, acquire these rights. But there appears to be an obstacle in the way. When the peace treaty with the Dutch was signed, it was agreed that the Natives should not be granted the right to vote before responsible government had been established. Everything hinges on the interpretation of the word ‘Native’. If all those who are born in South Africa are to be regarded as Natives, the whites born there should also come under that category. But no one would interpret the term thus. The word ‘Native’ has but one meaning everywhere, viz., one whose mother and father are both Kaffirs. If this interpretation is correct, we are not covered at all by the treaty with the Dutch. This small lacuna in the treaty we owe to Lord Milner. However, in the meeting at Bloemfontein, Lord Milner posed the question, ‘Even if everybody’s claims are met, what about the Coloured people?’ We too wish to ask the same question.”

RESOLUTIONS AT THE MEETING

After this speech, two resolutions were passed: one adopting the draft of the Coloured People’s Petition, and the other deputing Dr. Abdurahman to act as our spokesman before Lord Selborne.
After the two resolutions were passed, God Save the King was sung, and the meeting dispersed.

144. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

March 31, 1906

DR. ABDURAHMAN

Dr. Abdurahman has left for the Cape after spending eleven days in this Colony. He had interviews with Sir Richard Solomon and General Smuts at Pretoria. He interviewed Lord Selborne at Johannesburg on March 30. He placed before His Excellency the grievances of the Cape Coloured people residing in the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony. The substance of Lord Selborne's reply was that he was unable to do anything for the present. He would render all possible help when the new constitution came to be framed. He was very polite, and favourably disposed. But it is doubtful whether he will be here when the new constitution is drafted.

Many Coloured people from the Cape were present at Bloemfontein station to see Dr. Abdurahman off.

TRAMWAY CASE

The Town Council had given notice of appeal against the Magistrate’s judgement in the tramway test case which was decided in our favour.† But their lawyer has announced that the Council do not now wish to prefer an appeal. However, it appears that the Indians will be allowed to travel in the trams only after yet another case has been fought and won, for the Town Council believe that their point of view was not argued fully in the former instance. I am afraid therefore that our people will have to wait for some more time.

SCRUTINY OF HOUSES

Dr. Porter has been conducting a rigorous inspection of houses. Even in a locality like Dorenfontein, a building belonging to a white has been sealed and he has been obliged to have his house demolished. Landlords of Indian houses, wherever these are in a bad condition, should therefore be wary.

CHINESE LABOUR

The excitement over the question of Chinese labour is still

† Vide “Johannesburg Letter”, 10-3-1906
continuing. The miners are ill at ease, with the result that trade is becoming slacker every day and, at least for another year, trade will continue to drift much the same way.

Hundreds of white workmen, masons, painters and others are idle. Of the 500 railway workers at Bloemfontein, only 300 remain, and 150 of these have been served with notices by the Government terminating their services.

Two Indians have been arrested for entering the Colony without permits or with forged ones. Their cases will be heard on April 9. Meanwhile both of them have been released on bail.

145. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
April, 6, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. Am I to understand from your letter that you received the Gujarati matter from me only on Wednesday? If so, there must be something terribly wrong, for I took very special precautions that the matter written on Sunday was posted before four o’clock. The matter written on Saturday was posted in due time. I have asked you to send me the envelopes bearing the dates, so that I may have the matter investigated here.

Why should there be any difficulty in giving quotations for full-page, half-page and quarter-page advertisements? I do not think the rate depends upon the quantity of type to be used. When a man hires so much space, we are bound to give him all he can require within that space, so long as we can put it in reasonably, so that it should not be difficult to give quotations for space. As soon as you give the quotation, it is possible to get a very good advertisement from Cape Town. Please therefore do not delay the matter.

I am anxiously awaiting your decision regarding Mrs. MacDonald.

I am glad Maganlal is getting better. He should not overwork himself. If therefore he feels very weak, he should stay away yet for a day or two, for, if he has a relapse, he will feel infinitely worse and weaker than before.

I have already told you not to print the letter from Mr. Bhayat. I returned the letter last week with instructions endorsed on the letter not to print it. I am now destroying Mr. Bhayat’s letter you have sent me.

I cannot think who R. K. Naidoo is. You may try to get the money through Lawrence. I have already told you that you may in your discretion issue letters of demand against those who continually neglect payment.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

146. LETTER TO COLONIAL SECRETARY

DURBAN, [Before April 7, 1906]

TO
THE HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY
PIETERMARITZBURG

SIR,

We have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 24th ult., dealing with the subject-matter of our letter of the 10th ult.1 in an exhaustive manner for which the Committee of our Congress is obliged to you.

Our Committee freely admits that the passes and certificates referred to in our letter are intended for facilitating the movements of those who hold such passes.

The submission of our Committee is that such passes are issued for the satisfaction of those who desire the enforcement of the Act.

Our Committee contends that, although the immigration of certain persons affected by the Act is prohibited, their passage or their temporary sojourn in the Colony is not. Although there is no obligation on the part of those who are entitled to remain in the Colony to take out domicile certificates, etc., the stringency with which the Act is being enforced renders it absolutely necessary that British Indians should hold them.

1 Vide “Letter to Colonial Secretary”, Before 10-3-1906
Our Committee is aware that most of the visiting passes are taken out by Indians in the Transvaal. This is natural, as there is so much inter-trade between the two Colonies.

Our Committee is of the humble opinion that every facility should be given to Transvaal Indians by issuing visiting passes. Both visiting and embarkation passes, as to which a prohibitive fee has been imposed, are a source of considerable revenue to the railways. The whole of this question was raised during the late Mr. Escombe’s administration when similar fees were imposed and, subsequently, on representations by our Committee, withdrawn.

Our Committee feels that the charge for wives’ passes, as also the embarkation and visitors’ passes, is a very serious thing and, therefore, requests reconsideration.

We have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servants,

O. H. AMOD JOHARI

147. LETTER TO THE “LEADER”

WHEN IS AN INDIAN NOT AN INDIAN?

[JOHANNESBURG]
Before April 7, 1906]

[TO
THE EDITOR
TheLeader
JOHANNESBURG
SIR.]

Some time ago, you were pleased to offer to Mr. Nomura, a Japanese subject, a public apology, because the Chief Secretary for Permits had refused to grant to the gentleman a temporary permit. May I enlist your sympathy on behalf of a British subject?

1 This undated letter was published in the Leader of April 7 under the heading “Distinction without Difference”.

156 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Mr. Suliman Manga, I understood, was a British Indian. He is studying for the bar. He has returned from England to pay a visit to his relatives in Delagoa Bay. I was instructed to apply for a permit for Mr. Manga, enabling him to pass through the Transvaal on his way to Delagoa Bay from Durban. The Government declined to grant the permit, and have hitherto declined to give reasons for their decision. I had the honour to represent Mr. Nomura. His status was undoubtedly high; Mr. Manga’s is, if possible, higher. He is the son of a very well-known Indian merchant in Delagoa Bay, and is himself a member of the Middle Temple. Yet, considered as a British Indian, he could not pass through the Transvaal.

I have now discovered that I was mistaken in thinking that Mr. Manga was a British Indian. On his reaching Delagoa Bay by sea, he made another fruitless attempt to obtain a permit through the Government, but they would not alter their decision. He was born in Portuguese India, and he, therefore, claimed the rights of a Portuguese subject. As such, he approached the Secretary to the Government at Delagoa Bay, on whose intervention he has obtained a temporary permit to enter the Transvaal. Mr. Manga, a Portuguese subject, has won; Mr. Manga, a British subject, has been disgraced. Such is the reward that the British Indian community gets at the hands of the Government for its extraordinary patience and forbearance.

Yours, etc.,

M. K. ANDHI

148. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
April 7, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have received the parcel through Mr. Bean. I wish you would make use of Hemchand and instruct him to write to me on official matters. It is very necessary that I should be kept informed. I am quite aware of the pressure under which you are labouring, but it is for you to relieve the pressure by taking advantage of the help that may be at your disposal. Surely you can even ask Gokuldas to drop me a line. All the matter I send ought to be acknowledged, so that in the event of miscarriage I may send more if in time. I am most anxious to learn

1 Vide “The Transvaal Permit Ordinance”, 14-4-1906 and “Letter to William Wedderburn”, 12-4-1906 your views about Mrs. MacDonald. They can be expressed also through Hemchand or Gokuldas or Anandlal. There are so many details to be attended to by me which I cannot without information from you. Motilal writes to me saying that there is a new arrival from Bombay. His name is Dhoribhai. He says he knows the press work well. He offers his services at £4 per month and free lodgings. It is worth while knowing him, if you think that there is pressure. Whatever happens, three things are absolutely necessary:

1. Books must be kept up to date;
2. The paper must not be starved;
3. You should not be over-worked.

Neglect any of these things and there will be a catastrophe. One result of your trying to do too much is disregard of official correspondence. For instance, you should have quoted the rates immediately. I would therefore like you to consider this carefully and put the matter right. It is for this reason that I have suggested Mrs. MacDonald. She is a most excellent worker, methodical and in industry quite a match for you or Mr. West, and I have no doubt that she will be able to keep the books. I shall probably be there next week. I want to take my ticket before the Easter holidays are over, but I am anxious to decide about Mrs. MacDonald before I go there, so that, if necessary, I can bring her with me. I am sending some Gujarati matter today and I hope it will be received by you on Monday. If both you and Mr. West and others can come to some decision, I should appreciate a telegram from you in this matter. You should consult Anandlal, Maganlal and Sam. If you get the Weekly Star or the Weekly Leader or the Weekly Rand Daily Mail in exchange, please pass [it] on to Mr. Isaac.

Yours sincerely,

149. THE HAVEN OF REFUGE

Amid all the turmoil that South Africa is passing through, the Court of the different Colonies have been standing out as places of safety. We had the pleasure of reproducing Mr. Justice Wessels’ summing-up in an Indian case; in this issue we give, from the Transvaal Leader, Mr. Justice Mason’s judgment in a Chinese case. As it is the Transvaal which is at present suffering from the most arbitrary laws, it is there that the judges are called upon to exercise their traditional independence to protect the liberty of the subject.

A Chinese policeman in the employ of the Foreign Labour Department, having proved troublesome, was, it appears, without any warrant, arrested, handcuffed, and lodged in a cell at the instance of the Superintendent of the Foreign Labour Department, and under a section of the Chinese Labour Ordinance, ordered to be repatriated.
Before the unfortunate policeman was sent away to Durban, he was prevented from receiving legal assistance or from seeing his friends, and had it not been for the fact that he was able, surreptitiously and behind the back of the Superintendent, to sign a power of attorney appointing solicitors, he would probably have gone away to China without relief and without being heard. Whether the policeman was a dangerous character or not is quite beside the point. We do not enter into the merits of the case. The Acts we have stated above are admitted.

The Superintendent of the Foreign Labour Department was informed that the solicitors who were retained by the man were going to apply to the Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus, and yet, before the writ was issued, the man was safely sent away to Durban.
The Superintendent was, however, called upon to appear before the Supreme Court and to produce the policeman. At the hearing, which took place on the 30th day of March before Mr. Justice Mason in Pretoria, an attempt was again made to frustrate the application by the Superintendent stating that it was physically impossible for him toproduce the policeman, owing to the Chinese Labour Ordinance preventing any Chinaman from entering the country without a licence, and owing to such licences having been stopped.

The matter was argued by Mr. Smuts, on behalf of the Chinaman, and Mr. Justice Mason, in delivering judgment, strongly depreciated the action of the Superintendent.

One of the most serious features of the case was that, in substance and in fact, the Superintendent of Foreign Labour had brought to bear a tyrannical exercise of power in preventing any one from having access to the Chinese Sergeant.
He regarded that as a very serious thing indeed. He thought the only way of preventing a person being illegally done away with and illegally treated was to uphold to the fullest extent the right of every person to have any of his friends to see him who chose to go. . . . His action had the effect of defeating

1 Vide “The Bulwark of Justice”, 31-3-1906
any such action, and he did wrong in sending the coolie out of the Colony with a notice, like that served by the solicitors, hanging over his head.

The learned Judge has made an order for the production of the man, and has ordered the Superintendent to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court by deporting the Chinaman from the Colony when he knew that an application was to be made for his protection before the Court. He also ordered that Mr. Jamieson1 should pay all the costs, as between attorney and client, of the application, and added that “he made that order chiefly because of, what he has called before, ‘the tyrannical exercise of power in preventing any person from having access to the applicant’ ”.

Here is an official, on the one hand, enjoying a very influential position, and, on the other hand, a humble policeman, and yet the policeman has been able to make good his right of being heard before the highest tribunal of justice in the Transvaal. The Superintendent himself must feel proud of an institution which thus protects the liberty of the meanest subject under the Crown; for what has happened to the Chinaman at his hands, it is quite conceivable, may happen to the Superintendent at the hands of those who may be superior to him. It may be a mere error of judgment on Mr. Jamieson’s part, but it is better that he should suffer rather than that the liberty of the subject should remain without vindication.

150. THE INDENTURE TAX

We took from The Times of Natal, last week, a report of a prosecution, under the Immigration Law of the Colony, for recovering the annual tax of £3. On looking through The Natal Witness, we find that the prosecution was not only against himself, but also against his wife. The only manner provided by law of recovering the tax is “by summary process by any clerk of the peace or other officer appointed to get in such licence money”. In the process, it appears the personal jewellery of the Indian woman has been taken, under order of Court, by the prosecuting sergeant as security. She has been given three months within which to pay the tax, under pain of her jewellery being sold if the tax is not paid within the period. Both the magistrate and the prosecuting sergeant have been considerate, and yet the grievous hardship that indentured Indians, who become free, have to suffer, by reason of the imposition, has been clearly brought out by the prosecution. So long as the poor woman has a bit of jewellery or other personal effects about her, she will be called upon to pay the money, whether she was earning anything or not, and whether she can otherwise afford it or not. This is the reward that the indentured Indians get after five years’ service in Natal!

151. POLITICAL TURMOIL IN NATAL

Important events, the effects of which will not be forgotten for many years, took place in Natal last week. As a result of these, Natal has gained in stature. The cause of self-government has triumphed; but the British Empire has received a set-back.

The Kaffirs in Natal rose in revolt against the poll-tax. Sergeants Hunt and Armstrong\(^1\) were killed in the revolt; martial law was declared in Natal and the Kaffirs were severely dealt with. Some Kaffirs were prosecuted under the martial law, and twelve of them were condemned to death and blown up at the mouth of a cannon. The Kaffirs from neighbouring areas and their Chief were invited to witness the execution, which was to take place on March 29.

Meanwhile, Lord Elgin sent a cablegram from England to the Governor of Natal, asking him to suspend the execution of the sentence. The executive councillors of the Natal Government resented this and tendered their resignations to the Governor. The Governor asked them to wait until a further communication was received from Lord Elgin, and to this they agreed.

As soon as the full story became known, a wave of excitement swept over the whole of South Africa. The Press protested vehemently, arguing that the constitution of self-governing Natal was violated by Lord Elgin’s intervention. They said that, as Natal was a self-governing Colony, the Imperial Government could not interfere in its administration. Congratulations were showered from every side on the executive councillors for having resigned. Meetings were held at many places, and speeches made against the Imperial Government.

The Imperial Government believed that, since they had helped Natal to put down the rebellion, it was their duty to see that justice was done to the Kaffirs; and hence they saw nothing improper in asking the Natal Government to put off execution of the sentence. But South Africa became excited, the arguments of the Imperial Government proved unavailing, and Lord Elgin had to bow down before Natal opinion.

\(^1\) Sub-Inspector Hunt and Trooper Armstrong of the Natal Police
Lord Elgin has written to the Governor that, on inquiry, it was found that justice had been done in the case of the Kaffirs, that the Imperial Government did not now wish to interfere in the administration by the executive councillors of Natal, and that they could do what they deemed proper. Lord Elgin has, however, put the entire blame on the Governor. He further says that no intervention by the Imperial Government would have taken place if the Governor had supplied all the facts of the case at the outset. Twelve lives have been taken for two. The twelve Kaffirs were blown to death at the mouth of a cannon on Monday.

During all this excitement, only one man kept a cool head, and that was Mr. Morcum. At a meeting in Maritzburg, he declared that Lord Elgin’s move was quite proper. It was a matter of saving human life, and there was no need for the executive to resign. Hunt and Armstrong were killed before martial law was declared; and hence the Kaffirs ought to have been tried by the Supreme Court. The whole meeting was against him, and though they hissed and hooted at him, the brave Mr. Morcum had his way.

What is the outcome of all this? That some Kaffirs were killed will soon be forgotten. We cannot say for certain whether or not they have received justice. But wherever self-government has been granted, a people become overweening. They will take undue liberties, and the Imperial Government will hesitate to intervene. It will seldom do so, for, as the saying goes, a man once bitten by a serpent dreads even a length of rope. It is only the Coloured people who stand to lose by this. They have no vote. Where they have it they cannot use it effectively, so that the Colonial authority will place greater restrictions on them, and they alone will get justice who ingratiate themselves with it. Great changes are likely to take place in South Africa during the coming years. The Indians and other Coloured people have much to ponder and they must act with circumspection.

152. THE LAND ACT IN THE TRANSVAAL

AN IMPORTANT LAW SUIT

In the Transvaal, there was only one plot of land outside the Location registered in the name of an Indian, the well-known Sheth Abubaker Amod, who is no more. The land was in Church Street in Pretoria. The late Mr. Abubaker bought it in June 1885, and the sale-deed was presented at the Registrar’s office on June 12, 1885.
The anti-Indian Act came into force on June 17. There were some difficulties in getting the deed registered. The British Agent intervened, and it was only after a special letter was written by the State Attorney that the Registrar registered the documents on June 26. Mr. Abubaker died in 1888. Until now, the possession and enjoyment of the land has vested in the heirs or trustees of the late Mr. Abubaker. According to law, the disposal of a man’s estate on his death should be through the Government. This estate has not, however, been dealt with in this manner, and the land has remained untransferred to the heirs. When the land fell vacant in 1905, it was decided to let it out on a long lease for building a house on it. Now, according to the Transvaal laws, every long lease has to be registered at the Registrar’s office. Hence steps had to be taken to have the land transferred to the names of the heirs, for, under the law, land could not remain in the name of a deceased person. The heirs being Indians, the Registrar refused to transfer the land to them. Thereupon an appeal was filed against the Registrar before a civil judge. The Registrar put forward two reasons for not transferring the land to the heirs. First, the land was registered after Act 3 of 1885 had been passed; and since that Law prohibited Indians from holding land in their names, the sale-deed executed in favour of the late Mr. Abubaker was void and should therefore be cancelled. Secondly, even if it was conceded that the sale-deed in favour of Mr. Abubaker was legally valid, his heirs, being Indians, could not hold the land in their own names under the Act of 1885. Justice Fox who heard the appeal accepted the Registrar’s second plea, and dismissed the case. An appeal against this decision was preferred to the Supreme Court on behalf of the heirs. Barristers Leonard and Gregorowski were engaged by the heirs, on whose behalf they represented that, if the Supreme Court did not order the land to be transferred to the names of the heirs, they should at least pass orders for the registration of the 21-year lease and allow meanwhile the original deed to remain in the name of the late Mr. Abubaker. Mr. Leonard advanced strong arguments and the judges expressed much sympathy, but regretted that they were helpless to do justice by the heirs. The judges admitted that the Act of 1885 itself was very bad, and if they wanted justice in spite of that law, they could get it only from Parliament. In view of this judgment, the only remedy left to the heirs to save the land for the time being was to get it transferred to some white person and themselves retain physical possession. This step they have taken and their enjoyment of the property will not therefore be hampered in any way. However, the fact that, according to the judgment of the Supreme Court, the land cannot be transferred to the heirs’ names is bound to make them feel oppressed. The only thing that remains to be done is to carry on a political struggle through Parliament. We know that they will do so. The judgment in this case makes it quite clear that even the judges admit that the Act of 1885 is oppressive. Sir Henry Cotton has asked a question about this in the Imperial Parliament. We shall await the outcome.

153. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

April 7, 1906

PERMITS

Permit difficulties are increasing and people get no relief. The applications of refugees lie unattended to. Regulations go on changing continuously. Now fuel has been added to the fire. Mr. Suliman Manga, who is a relative of Mr. Ismail Manga, the well-known merchant of Delagoa Bay and is reading for the bar in England, came here recently to visit his relatives. He got down at Durban, and wanted to proceed to Delagoa Bay via the Transvaal. Mr. Gandhi applied for a temporary permit on his behalf, but the Colonial Secretary refused it. Mr. Manga waited for a few days at Durban, and then proceeded to Delagoa Bay by sea. From there, he applied again, [this time] himself, but got a reply in the negative. So far, the matter was dealt with on the assumption that Mr. Manga was a British subject. Mr. Manga, who came seized with the British spirit [of freedom], was not the sort of person who would sit back. Taking advantage of the fact that he was born at Daman¹ and was therefore a Portuguese subject, he approached the Secretary to the Government in Delagoa Bay and applied for a permit. Thereupon the Secretary immediately wrote to the British Consul, who issued the necessary permit without delay. This shows that, had Mr. Manga been a British subject, he could not have set foot on the golden land of the Transvaal; but he could do so at once by virtue of his being a Portuguese subject.

Mr. Manga spent a day at Johannesburg and has returned to Delagoa Bay. The Association² has written to the Government about this anomaly. It has written also to Lord Selborne, who, while acknowledging receipt of the letter, says that he is inquiring into the matter. Mr. Gandhi has also written a letter to the Transvaal Leader.¹ It is possible that the gross injustice done in Mr. Suliman Manga’s case may open the eyes of the indolent British Government. When a permit was refused to Mr. Nomura, a Japanese subject, a wave of excitement passed over the whole of the Transvaal.² But is there none to care for a British subject in a similar plight?

RAILWAY HARDSHIPS

Mr. Mahomed Surati, the well-known merchant of Aliwal North³, was in Johannesburg for two days. He was much inconvenienced during his train journey from Germiston. He was insulted and removed from the first-class compartment, which he was occupying, to another carriage. He was not aware that, in the Transvaal, there were separate carriages for non-whites. Though there was no white passenger in the compartment he was occupying, he was harassed by the guard. He has therefore lodged a complaint with the railway authorities.

A deputation of the British Indian Association met the General Manager of Railways in connection with the prohibition of Indian passengers from travelling by the 8.30 train leaving Pretoria for Johannesburg as also that from Johannesburg to Pretoria. The General Manager suggested that the Indian community would do well not to press the point as the train was reserved for whites only. The General Manager is not, however, in a position legally to justify his point of view. The deputation replied that the Indian community could not possibly go back on their position as the Indians needed the amenity as much as the whites did. The position is likely to become clear in about ten days.

THE TRAM CASE

The Johannesburg tram case has not yet been decided. Our people are not allowed to travel by the trams; hence a fresh test case has been filed. Mr. Coovadia was refused a place in the tram as he was about to board one. He has therefore again made an affidavit, and the date for the hearing of the case will be fixed in a couple of days.

FILTH IN THE LOCATION

This week Dr. Porter and his company came down upon the Indians residing in the Malay Location. Many of them were arrested as there was much overcrowding. In this matter as well as in keeping the house, compound and latrines clean, our people are very negligent. The consequences have to be borne by the whole community. Our troubles will not end so long as we do not make lasting improvements in these matters. And if meanwhile plague or other epidemics or infectious diseases should break out, we will have to put up with endless trouble. It would appear that our people have forgotten the experience of the plague in 1904.\footnote{Vide “letter to Dr. Porter”, 9-4-1904, “A Lesson from the Plague”, 30-4-1904 & “The Plague”, 25-2-1905.}

The Enthusiasm of the Whites

In a very short time, 35,000 signatures have been obtained, and many more are being collected for the petition of the whites addressed to the King-Emperor on the proposed constitution. We should become affected by this new enthusiasm that is abroad. We would enjoy a different in status this country if we are infected with this enthusiasm rather than the spirit of discord.

157. LETTER TO WILLIAM WEDDERBURN

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION
25 & 26 COURT CHAMBERS,
RISSIK STREET,
JOHANNESBURG,
April 12, 1906

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN
PALACE CHAMBERS
LONDON

SIR,

The position in the Transvaal of British Indians is getting day by day more insecure and harassing. I need only recapitulate what is happening and appeal for active work.

Whilst it is true that the Home Government will be slow to interfere with the Crown Colony of the Transvaal, I take it there must be a limit to this policy of non-intervention. There is a Peace Preservation Ordinance in the Transvaal under which the immigration of British Indians is restricted in a most high-handed manner.

(a) The Ordinance was intended to preserve the peace [and], therefore, to keep out rebels and others who were ill disposed towards

1 This seems to be a circular letter. A copy of it was sent to Dadabhai Naoroji who, omitting the last paragraph, forwarded it in the form of a statement to the Secretary of State for the Colonies on May 8, 1906.
the British Government, but it is today being, in fact, solely used to restrict British Indian immigration.

(b) The British Indian Association has accepted the position that non-refugee British Indians who do not possess educational attainments may be kept out.

(c) As a matter of fact, even refugees who were in the Colony before the war and who had paid £3 as a price for permission to reside in the Colony are now being prevented from entering, except under most difficult circumstances.

(d) Such men have to wait in the coast towns for months before the permit officer would issue them a permit.

(e) A most vexing examination is carried on and then they are called upon to put their thumb- impressions and to undergo other unnecessary severities before they get a permit to enter the country.

(f) Their wives, too, are often required to produce documents before they are allowed to enter the Transvaal.

(g) Their children over eleven years are totally prevented from accompanying them.

(h) Children under twelve of such refugees are made to take out permits before they can come. Just recently, a boy under six years was torn away from his father and detained at Volksrust because he did not hold a separate permit, in spite of the fact that the registration certificate of the father mentioned that he had two boys.

(i) Only three months ago, boys under sixteen, if they had their parents, or if their parents were dead and they were with their guardians in the Transvaal domiciled, were free to enter the Transvaal. Now, as mentioned above, all of a sudden a new regulation has been sprung upon the Indian community and boys who are under twelve only are allowed to enter. The result is that many boys under sixteen who have arrived in South Africa after considerable expense have, instead of joining their parents who are domiciled in the Transvaal, to return to India.

(j) About three months ago, temporary permits for Indians, who wished to pass through the Transvaal on their way to other parts of South Africa or intended to do some business, were granted fairly freely; now such permits are issued after the greatest scrutiny. Mr. Suliman Manga,¹ the son of a well-known Indian merchant of Delagoa Bay, who is studying at present in England for the Bar, recently returned from England to pay a visit to his relatives in Delagoa Bay. He landed at Durban, applied for a permit to enable him to pass through the Transvaal on his way to Delagoa Bay and the permit was refused. His case was considered as if he was a British Indian. He went to Delagoa Bay, therefore, by sea. There he attempted again through the Transvaal Government to receive a temporary permit as he intended to see Pretoria and Johannesburg but his application was refused. He, therefore, thought that he, having been born in Portuguese India, should approach the Portuguese Government. He did so and a permit was immediately issued to him. It comes, therefore, to this that a British Indian, no matter what his status may be, cannot even pass through the Transvaal and have safe conduct, but if an Indian belongs to a foreign power, he gets a permit for the asking.

(k) From the above, it follows that Indians of attainments are unable to get a permit to settle in the Transvaal, that is to say, the Peace Preservation Ordinance is so administered that, whereas before war any Indian was free to enter the Transvaal, now an Indian who can enter by reason of his being able to pass the educational test of the self-governing Colony of the Cape or Natal is debarred from entering the Crown Colony of the Transvaal. Here, there is no question of the British Government having inherited pre-war legislation, but it is a question of deliberate[ly] pressing into service an ordinance passed just after martial law and which ordinance had no connection with British Indians.

Under Law 3 of 1885, the British Indian heirs of the late Mr. Aboobaker Amod, one of the Indian pioneer settlers of South Africa, have been prevented from having the property left to them registered in their names.¹ Such is the working of the law regarding ownership of and by Indians. It should be noticed that Natives of the Transvaal, as is quite proper, are free to own landed property anywhere they choose. The Cape Coloured people are also free to hold immovable property in the Transvaal. The ban is placed only upon Asiatics.

Before war, Indians were not debarred from making use of any train service in the Transvaal. Now the Railway Board has issued notices to the station masters not to issue tickets to British Indians and Coloured people for an express train service between Pretoria and Johannesburg,² thus causing serious inconvenience to Indian businessmen. It is highly probable that relief will be ultimately granted, but this notice shows which way the tendency of the Government lies.

In Johannesburg, as in Pretoria, British Indians and Coloured

¹ Vide “Legalized Robbery”, 17-3-1906
² Vide “Letter to Acting Chief Traffic Manager”, 14-2-1906 people are unable to make use of the municipal tram cars.\(^1\)

In Natal, the position is briefly as follows: The Dealers’ Licenses Act causes the greatest amount of mischief. Mr. Dada Osman, a British Indian merchant of very long standing, had his store in Vryheid before war when it was part of the Transvaal, [and] he traded there unfettered. When Vryheid was incorporated with Natal, the anti-Asiatic laws were also taken over, so that in Vryheid there is Law 3 of 1885 in force as also the Natal Dealers’ Licenses Act. Acting thereunder, Mr. Dada Osman’s licence has been taken away from him and his Vryheid business has been totally ruined.\(^2\) Another case of equally severe hardship has happened in the Ladysmith district. There, one Cassim Mahomed has been trading on a farm for some time. Last year, his servant committed a breach of Sunday Trading Law. He sold a piece of soap and sugar to traps who were sent by an adjoining store-keeper. The owner himself, it was proved, was absent. This year, because of this offence, his licence has not been renewed.\(^3\) The Appellate Board upheld the decision of the Licensing Officer, saying he acted on the principle they had laid down in a case about a white man. This, however, is not true. The white man in question was known to have allowed his sub-tenants to traffic in liquor sold to Natives and was convicted of selling opium on his premises. No contravention of law was made in comparison with the studied breach of regulations of the above description by the white man and the technical breach of Sunday Trading Law [sic].

The third case is that of Mr. Hoondamal, to whom a transfer of his licence from one place to another in Durban was refused.\(^4\) These three are only illustrations showing what has been done under the Dealers’ Licenses Act in scores of cases. Mr. Chamberlain made representations to the Natal Government in connection with the hardship under the law. The result was that the Natal Government issued instructions that the law was not to be rigorously enforced, otherwise it would be altered. It is not possible to give cases of greater hardship than those quoted above. All that is claimed by British Indians is that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over the decisions of the Licensing Officers and the Licensing Boards, which consist mainly of traders, should be restored.

Under the Immigration Restriction Act, rules have been now framed whereby a fee of £1 is imposed for the issue of a domicile certificate to each domiciled Indian who is entitled to it as a matter of right. A similar fee is imposed for visitors’ passes,\(^1\) that is, for Indians who want to pay a visit to Natal as also for embarkation passes, that is, for authority for Indians to pass through Natal to catch a steamer for India. This is an indirect method of taxation and causes very much inconvenience and loss to poor Indians.

I venture to think that these matters should be placed continually before the Colonial and Indian Secretaries by the Indian Parliamentary Committee.

_I beg to remain,_

_Yours faithfully,_

158. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

JOHANNESBURG,

April 13, 1906

CAUTION TO INDIAN LAND-OWNERS IN TRANSVAAL

I have come across a very important case which concerns the vast majority of Indians who own land in the Transvaal. A certain Indian holds land in the name of a White. He has secured no bond from the latter, who is practically on the verge of insolvency. It has now become extremely difficult to save this land. The White himself is eager enough to help. He has no right over the land but, since there is no bond against it, there is every danger of his creditors swallowing it up. If a bond had been secured from the White in time, no such contingency would have arisen. After this case, it is imperative that every Indian who holds land in the name of a White should secure a bond against it, however trustworthy the White may be; otherwise he will run the risk of being put to a severe loss.

PERMIT CASE

There has been a noteworthy permit case in the magistrate’s court here. I stated in a previous letter that two Indians had been arrested.\(^2\) One of them was charged with having entered without a permit. The magistrate gave notice to the first Indian to leave within... seven days and dismissed the case against the second on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, since the application the Indian had made for a permit was made in Durban, and for some other reasons.

Mr. Gunvantrai Desai and many other Indians have left Johannesburg for India.

The deputation about the Malay Location which was to wait on Sir Richard Solomon has done so. I hope to be able to give more information about this next week.¹

160. A HARD CASE

We gave last week a resume of a licensing appeal case heard in Ladysmith on the 30th March last. An Indian trader has been trading within Klip River Division on a farm called Wittekleifontein for the last three years. Latterly, a European firm, by name Burdett & Co. has opened a store near his. The firm has amongst its partners, so it would appear from a report in The Natal Witness, Sergeant Batterberg, who is the Prosecutor for the Division. During his absence, the Indian trader’s store-assistant was trapped by the police and convicted of Sunday trading. He sold a bit of soap and some sugar. The store-keeper, on his return, finding that his assistant had been guilty of trading on Sunday, dismissed him. When the time came for renewal, Messrs Burdett & Co. lodged their objection with the Licensing Officer against the Indian store-keeper’s getting a renewal of his licence, on the ground that he had committed a breach of the Sunday law. The Licensing Officer upheld this objection, and the licence was refused. Against this decision, the poor Indian store-keeper appealed to the Licensing Board, but in spite of the eloquent defence of his counsel, the appeal was dismissed, and the Board, in giving judgment, said that they did so because of a breach by the store-keeper’s assistant of the Sunday regulations, and they supported their decision by quoting a similar case where they [had] refused the application for a licence made by a European.¹ We think, however, that the European case quoted by the Board could have no bearing on the present case, as some of the ingredients were wanting. Here, the Indian store-keeper himself has not committed the crime. He repaired the mischief in the only manner that was possible for him, and, after all, it is patent to any layman that the whole of the objection has been raised by a rival firm of store-keepers who are interested in removing the Indian store-keeper. The fact, too, that the firm contains, as its partner, the Public Prosecutor in Ladysmith, who conducted the prosecution against the Indian’s store-man, is not without serious significance. It is indeed a pity that the Board did not allow the objection raised by the appellant’s counsel that Burdett & Co. had no locus standi before the Board, and we cannot help thinking that the Board have, by their decision, encouraged opposition of the kind raised in the case in question. The deprivation of a licence is altogether a disproportionate penalty imposed on a man for a breach of a statutory provision by his servant, who had already been punished for the same offence. But this case merely illustrates how unjust and oppressive the Dealers’ Licenses Act of Natal is. The Ladysmith case supports the argument advanced in Dada Osman’s petition. Unless the right of appeal to the Supreme Court is restored, there is no possibility of any justice being done under the Dealers’ Licenses Act.

¹ Vide “The Ladysmith Licensing Board”, 21-4-1906

161. THE TRANSVAAL PERMIT ORDINANCE

The Peace Preservation Ordinance, passed at a time when, as its name implies, peace within the Transvaal borders was in danger, has hung over the heads of British Indians like Damocles’ sword, ready to descend upon them at any moment. The latest instance is brought to our readers’ notice by our Transvaal correspondent. It appears that Mr. Suliman Manga, the son of a very well-known Indian in Delagoa Bay, has been studying for the Bar for some years in England, and has been admitted as a member of the Middle Temple. He has just arrived from England to pay a visit to his relatives in Delagoa Bay. On his landing at Durban, he intended to pass through the Transvaal on his way to Delagoa Bay. He instructed a solicitor in Johannesburg to apply for his permit. The solicitor, Mr. Gandhi, seems to have assumed that he was a British Indian, and proceeded with the application. After a few days’ delay, he received a reply saying that his client could not be granted a temporary permit. He then applied to the Colonial Secretary and received the same answer. No reasons were given for the refusal. Mr. Manga then took a steamer to Delagoa Bay. Young, enthusiastic, and freshly returned from England, he could not brook rejection of his application. During his brief stay, he wanted to see the capital of the Transvaal, and the centre of the gold-mining activity. He, therefore, again applied to the port Protector of Asiatics, who could only confirm the reply given to his solicitor. Mr. Manga, being in fact a Portuguese subject, then appealed to his own Government, who soon procured relief for their subject, and Mr. Manga entered the Transvaal on a temporary permit granted to him by His Majesty’s British Consul-General.

This is an instance of a most glaring abuse of arbitrary powers vested in the hands of the Government. We may here recall the parallel case of Mr. Nomura, a Japanese subject. This gentleman, in order to dispose of his wares in the Transvaal, applied for a temporary permit, which the Chief Secretary for Permits declined to

1 Vide “Petition to Lord Elgin”, 30-3-1906.
2 Vide “Letter to the Leader”, Before 7-4-1906 grant. He evidently reasoned to himself that, if a British subject could not get similar facilities, he could not grant it to Mr. Nomura. The case was publicly discussed, and the Transvaal Leader offered a public apology to Mr. Nomura. The High Commissioner immediately ordered the Chief Secretary for Permits to issue a permit to Mr. Nomura, and it was delivered to him personally at his residence in Durban.

Mr. Manga’s case is much stronger than Mr. Nomura’s. As it was first put before the Colonial Secretary, it was a case of a British subject and a student asking for permission merely to pass through the Transvaal. He had no business to transact in the Colony, and, therefore, he could not come into competition with anybody. We question whether the most rabid member of the anti-Asiatic Convention could ever have contemplated rejection of an application like Mr. Manga’s, and yet so long as Mr. Manga was considered as a British subject, and so long as there was no intervention on the part of any foreign government, his case was not considered worthy of attention by the Transvaal Government.

So soon, however, as it is known that Mr. Manga happens to be a Portuguese subject, he gets a permit. The net result of this case is that, at the hands of the present Government in the Transvaal, there is to be no justice for British Indians. The latter may be insulted, they may be put to all kinds of inconvenience, their applications may be summarily rejected, they may not be given reasons for arbitrary decisions of the Government, even though bona-fide refugees, it may take months before their claims can be considered for re-entry into the Transvaal, their very means of livelihood may be allowed to depend on the absolute discretion of the Government. Yet we have Lord Selborne’s assurance that it is not his desire that Indians should be treated in a harsh manner, or that regulations under the Peace Preservation Ordinance should in any way be unreasonable. The community has every right, therefore, to appeal to Lord Selborne for some measure of justice being meted out to it.

162. A LICENSING PETITION

Our readers will recall the facts in connection with the licence of a British Indian in Vryheid. Mr. Dada Osman, the Indian merchant concerned, having failed to obtain the justice to which he was entitled, owing to the state of the Dealers’ Licenses Act, has now approached His Majesty’s Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies,¹ and has forwarded to us a copy of the petition for review. The petition is a colourless statement of facts, but it shows most clearly that underlying it is the general question as to the operation of the Dealers’ Licenses Act. Unless it is erased from the Statute-book of the Colony, there will be no rest for British Indian traders. It is not fair to them, and it is less fair to the licensing officers, that arbitrary powers should be placed in the latter’s hands. We do not ask for indiscriminate trading rights, but we do contend that every trading application should be treated on its merits, and where no reasons, save those of prejudice, can be adduced against such application, it should be granted. The case before us is aggravated, because the petitioner labours under a double-barrelled disability, for, in Vryheid, he, being a British Indian, labours under all the disabilities of the Natal laws, without getting any of the advantages, as Law 3 of 1885 of the Transvaal has also been retained, in spite of the incorporation of Vryheid with Natal. The condition is as anomalous as it possibly could be, and it is to be hoped that Lord Elgin will secure substantial justice for his petitioner.

The question of interference with the domestic affairs of the Colony will naturally be raised. The principle of non-interference can hardly stand, in the case of those who are totally unrepresented in a Colony governed under representative institutions. Natal enjoys self-government, on the tacit assumption that it is capable of governing itself. There is little self-government exercised, when one class of subjects living in the Colony are meted out scant justice. Self-government means self-control; if privileges are granted, responsibilities must be assumed also, and if these privileges are enjoyed to the fullest extent, without discharge of the responsibilities, the power that gave them surely has the right to see to it that those responsibilities are properly discharged.

163. A LICENSING CIRCULAR

A Gujarati correspondent draws our attention to some rules said to have been framed by the Government for the guidance of traders’ licenses officers. The latter are, so our correspondent states, instructed henceforth, in issuing licenses to Indians, to take their finger-prints and signatures on counterfoils of the licences granted. This, we understand, has been done in order to establish identity. If our information be correct, the preliminary question that occurs to us is, why have Indians alone been singled out for this further disability? Where is the occasion for establishing identity? Does it mean that the Natal Government do not desire that the Indian businesses may be continued after the withdrawal of their present owners? Do they, in other words, mean to convey to the Licensing Officers that Indian businesses are to become extinct with their owners? If so, it means that, sooner or later, every Indian must be compelled to sell off, instead of disposing of his business as a going concern. And why should the Government interfere with the administration of the law in such a one-sided manner? If the Licensing Officers are to exercise their own discretion, unfettered by any considerations save those of justice, how can the Government restrict their discretion by issuing circulars such as the one we are now considering? The position under the Licensing Law is becoming more and more unbearable, and unless some relief can be granted by the Home Government, it is merely a question of time as to when British Indian traders in Natal will have to close their businesses entirely.

164. THE NATAL REBELLION

The twelve Kaffirs sentenced to capital punishment have been shot dead.¹ The Colonists of Natal are pleased. Mr. Smythe’s prestige has been vindicated. The Imperial Government have had to climb down. Mm Churchill made a very good speech in this connection. He showed that the Imperial Government were entitled to an explanation from Natal. For, if the Kaffirs did not remain under proper control, the Imperial Government were bound to send an expeditionary force. Incidents that followed, like Mr. Smythe’s resignation, are to be ascribed solely to the speeches made by Mr. Chamberlain’s partisans and to the fact that all the newspapers in South Africa are controlled.

¹ Vide “Political Turmoil in Natal”, 7-4-1906
by that party. Mr. Churchill pointed out that, if Mr. Smythe’s act should become a precedent, the good feeling between England and the Colonies would not endure.

While Mr. Churchill was speaking thus, the third chapter of this woeful tale was being written. Though twelve Kaffirs were put to death, the rebellion, instead of being quelled, has gathered strength. Bambata, the Kaffir Chief, was deposed and another installed in his place, because the behaviour of the former was not satisfactory. Seizing the right opportunity, Bambata kidnapped the new Chief and rose in revolt. And the disturbance continues in Grey Town. The region in which Bambata is operating as an outlaw is in difficult terrain full of bushes and trees, where the Kaffirs can remain in hiding for long periods. To find them out and force a fight is a difficult job.

The small party of soldiers that was on Bambata’s trail included the Englishmen who had shot the twelve Kaffirs. Bambata and his men encircled the party and, though they fought very bravely, the soldiers were defeated in the end and managed to escape with great difficulty. Some of them were killed. The dead included those who had shot the twelve Kaffirs. Such is the law of God. The executioners met their death within two days.

At the time of writing, Bambata is at large. Meanwhile, his followers go on increasing. There is no knowing how all this will end.

What is our duty during these calamitous times in the Colony? It is not for us to say whether the revolt of the Kaffirs is justified or not. We are in Natal by virtue of British power. Our very existence depends upon it. It is therefore our duty to render whatever help we can. There was a discussion in the Press as to what part the Indian community would play in the event of an actual war. We have already declared in the English columns of this journal that the Indian community is ready to play its part; and we believe what we did during the Boer War should also be done now. That is, if the Government so desires, we should raise an ambulance corps. We should also agree to become permanent volunteers, if the Government is prepared to give us the requisite training.

Such a step would be considered proper, even if we viewed it from the standpoint of our own interests. The case of the twelve Kaffirs shows us that whatever justice we may seek is to be had ultimately from the local Government. The first step in trying to get it is to do our own duty. The common people in this country keep themselves in readiness for war. We, too, should contribute our share.

165. A THREAT TO HAWKERS

The Durban Town Council has passed a resolution calling upon the Licensing Officer not to issue fresh licences to hawkers, and to reduce, as far as practicable, the number of licences already in force, because shop-keepers are adversely affected by the hawkers’ trade. Hitherto the Town Council issued confidential instructions to the Licensing Officer; now it has openly told him what to do. This means that the Town Council arrogates to itself the functions of both the lower and the appellate courts.

Moreover, this order means that, no matter what inconveniences the people may have to suffer, the interests of the shop-keepers must be safeguarded. Some relief can be had only if a very strong struggle is put up against such a regulation.

166. THE LADYSMITH LICENSING BOARD

We have already dealt with what has appeared to us to be a case of very great injustice done to an inoffensive Indian trader. ¹ We have since been placed in possession of fuller information regarding the case of Mackillican referred to by the appellate court in support of its decision. We have a true copy of the original record of that case placed before us. From it we find that the reasons for refusing to renew the licence of Mackillican were overwhelmingly strong. They are:

1. Because a native man and woman were convicted on the 19th October, 1903, for selling liquor without a licence in a shed—a building on applicant’s premises which were only licensed as a retail store. No less than three large casks of beer were found in the shed. The applicant must have been cognisant of the carrying on of this illicit traffic.

2. Because the applicant was convicted on the 15th day of January, 1904 of selling opium at the same premises on the 7th day of November, 1903; this trade had been carried on for some time causing severe mental depression and other injuries to the Indians at the Elandslaagte mine, besides being a constant cause of worry to the Manager, till he found out the source of the evil that was being wrought on his servants.

Thus, the applicant was indirectly guilty of poisoning Natives with liquor sold illicitly and of stupefying Indian miners by selling them opium in contravention of the law. In each case, the fault was the applicant’s own. It is a prostitution of terms to compare this case with the Indian case and use it as a precedent for depriving the latter of his licence. It would have been more dignified and more honest on the part of the Board to have taken its stand on the true ground for refusal—that is, of colour.

We have been placed in possession, too, of some of the certificates produced by the applicant in support of his application. One of the principal merchants of Durban, writing to the Licensing Officer, states: “We consider him to be a very respectable, reliable, and straightforward Indian, and quite fitted to hold a licence in your district.” Thus, while the personal character of Mackillican undoubtedly unfitted him to hold a trading licence, that of the Indian is irreproachable. What has happened to the poor Indian in Ladysmith is probably not an uncommon experience for Indians in Natal. We trust, therefore, that the Natal Indian Congress, which is ever watchful of the interests of the Indian community, will not fail to bring the matter to the notice of the Government and secure justice.

167. TRANSVAAL PERMITS

We reproduce elsewhere the remarks of our contemporary, The Rand Daily Mail, on the Manga case to which we have drawn attention in these columns.¹ Our contemporary’s remarks are strong, but thoroughly deserved. We congratulate the writer on the courage of his convictions. Our correspondent at Johannesburg mentions another case in his “Jottings”, which points to a state of affairs which, if continued, bids fair to make it impossible for even British Indian refugees to get redress. Our correspondent refers to the case of a British Indian refugee of position having been refused his permit, in spite of the fact that the applicant produced evidence of respectable Europeans to prove previous residence. This is the first case, so far as we are aware, of a refugee having been definitely refused permission to re-enter. What is more aggravating still is the fact that the Russian

¹ Vide “The Transvaal Permit Ordinance”, 14-4-1906 method of secrecy has lately been adopted regarding the administration of the Permit Ordinance, so far as Indians are concerned. Our correspondent states that, as in the case of Mr. Manga, so in this, the Permit Officer has declined to give the reasons for his refusal. So that, henceforth, British Indians will be kept out of the Transvaal without their being informed why.

Nor is this all. A correspondent in the Gujarati columns invites our attention to a case where a six-year-old infant was torn away from his parent at Volksrust, because the infant held no permit! We understand that the unfortunate father’s registration contained a reference to his having two boys.

We beg to draw Lord Selborne’s attention to the seriousness of the Indian position. It is high time that His Excellency’s words were translated into deeds. We yield to no one in our desire to respect reasonable prejudice. We have, therefore, approved of the desirability of regulating the immigration of Asiatics who have not previously resided in the Transvaal. But the way in which the authorities at Pretoria are going about to please the anti-Asiatic party means a totally different proposition. And they are much mistaken if they think that Indians will allow vested rights to be trampled under foot without at any rate a serious effort to obtain redress.

168. THE DURBAN TOWN COUNCIL AND INDIANS

The Licensing Committee of the Durban Town Council has, The Natal Mercury reports, “expressed the wish that the Licensing Officers grant no new hawkers’ licences, and curtail as much as possible existing hawkers’ licences, since traders of this class interfere with the legitimate trade of shop-keepers”. This recommendation of the Licensing Committee is the aftermath of decisions on the Dealers’ Licenses Act. The judgment in the case of Dada Osman,¹ and other judgments in cases arising out of that Act, have emboldened the town councils in their policy of repression. From half-concealed suggestions to Licensing Officers, they have now proceeded to open instructions to them. It will, therefore, be a question of the town councils instructing their officers to give a judgment on licensing applications, and then sitting in appeal on what will be after all their own judgments. They will thus reduce the Licenses Act to a mere farce. Moreover, the instructions we have referred to above show clearly that, in administering the Dealers’ Licenses Act, attention is paid, not to the general community, but to the store-keepers alone. As their trade is likely to be interfered with, no new hawkers’ licences are to be issued, and existing licences are to be curtailed. That they supply a want, and that they are a boon to the householders who receive what they want at their doors is of no consequence to the town councils, so long as a privileged class can be raised up. Exception may be taken to our argument in that the instructions of the Licensing Committee are general, but so is our argument. It applies both to hawkers who are Europeans and those who are Indians, but as a matter of fact, the brunt of such a policy will have to be borne mainly by Indians, as hawking is their speciality, and most of the hawkers in Durban are Indians. We are, nevertheless, inclined to welcome these excesses in the administration of the law, because they will bring in their train their own doom.

169. TRAVELLING DIFFICULTY ON THE C. S. A. R.

A correspondent writes to us from Klerksdorp, in the Gujarati columns, recounting the difficulties that the Indian passengers have to undergo on the trains between Klerksdorp and Johannesburg. Our correspondent complains that Indian passengers, no matter to what class they may belong, are not allowed a seat on the trains unless they have compartments attached to them having the labels “coloured” or “reserved”. Our correspondent adds that, as a result of the action of the authorities, very few Indian passengers travel with any degree of comfort. All the trains do not have the labels, and if, therefore, an Indian passenger misses a particular train and wishes to take another having no reserved seats, he very often cannot do so. The only condition, our correspondent urges, of travelling by such a train is that the passengers have to remain standing in the corridor the whole of the time. This is no small matter, as the journey occupies over eight hours. If what our correspondent complains of be true, it is evident that the comfort of the Coloured travellers does not receive sufficient consideration.

170. VESUVIUS

Vesuvius in Italy is active and emitting lava; this is a reminder to us of Nature’s power and a warning not to take life for granted even for a moment. The recent accident in the Courier mines in France where many men were buried alive also brought home the same truth to us. In the latter case, one could find fault with the engineers and persuade oneself that the men would not have lost their lives if certain precautions had been taken. The same thing cannot, however, be said of the volcanic eruption. We do not want to expatiate further on this subject. It is futile to hope that men who have come all the way from far-away India can fully realise the significance of this line of thought; but we want particularly to draw the readers’ attention to the courage shown by a scientist while the volcano was still active. In the vicinity of the volcano, there is a meteorological station where Professor Metusi lives. The station is in great danger of being destroyed any moment by the lava from the volcano. However, Professor Metusi has not abandoned his post and keeps sending information to Naples about the volcano. It is a matter of no ordinary courage thus to stay amidst danger. No one has forced him to stay at the danger spot. Nothing can be said in his reproach if, like thousands of other men, he leaves the place to save his life. Yet he has refused to leave. When many Indians too of this calibre are born in India or South Africa, we shall cease to suffer as at present.

171. INDIAN DEPUTATION TO ENGLAND

Last week we published the resolution passed by the Natal Indian Congress. It is highly creditable to the Congress officials that the Congress Hall was fully packed and people showed great enthusiasm. At present, a new Liberal Ministry is in power [in the United Kingdom], and it is eminently desirable that we go and place before it an account of our grievances. But we feel that the deputation had better leave after the visit of the Commission that is due to come. Moreover, if a deputation is to go, we strongly feel that it should be composed of at least three members so that it will carry weight with and be listened to by the Cabinet. Such tasks, however, cannot be accomplished without money. Help from many quarters will be needed and money has to be spent generously. Something can be achieved only if Indians from all over South Africa lend a helping hand.

172. INSTRUCTIONS TO INDIANS COMING TO NATAL BY STEAMER

We often find that Indian passengers entitled to land at Durban are greatly discommoded while doing so. In order that some at any rate of these difficulties may be avoided, we make the following suggestions.

There should be no difficulty at all about the entry of the wife whose husband is according to law a resident of Natal; but the Immigration Officer allows a woman to land only after she has produced legal proof of her marriage to a resident. Hence the man should make an affidavit and get it endorsed by the Immigration Officer in advance. This will enable his wife to disembark soon after the steamer arrives.

The same procedure should be followed in the case of children. The father making the affidavit should remember that the son or the daughter must be under sixteen years of age. It is not enough that the parent swears an affidavit that the age of his son or daughter is below sixteen. For it is up to the Immigration Officer to accept or reject the statement about age. A difficulty may therefore arise if the son or daughter appears to be over sixteen, the affidavit notwithstanding. Moreover, if the person is married, he or she, though under sixteen, is not entitled to land by virtue of the title of his or her parents.

If a resident of Natal himself wants to disembark but does not hold a domicile pass, he too has to put up with inconvenience. Strong evidence has to be produced before the officer well in advance. Nevertheless, there is one way by which such a person can land immediately: he should deposit £100 as security and after landing; produce the requisite evidence, or he should take out a £10 visiting pass and then do likewise. If £100 are deposited, one is not required to pay the fee of £1 to the Government. But, according to the new regulation, one has to pay that fee to take out a £10 visiting pass.

DEPUTATION REGARDING MALAY LOCATION

As I promised last week, I give here an account of the deputation that waited upon Sir Richard Solomon concerning the Malay Location.

Mr. Haji Ojer Ali saw Sir Richard and presented the following facts before him.

When land was allotted by the Boer Government to the Malay people, they developed it. On their applying for permission to construct buildings on it, the Government allowed them to do so unconditionally. Consequently many well-built houses of burnt brick have sprung up in the Malay Location. Moreover, the residents have effected lasting improvements in the land, and the population has increased. When the site for the Malay Location was fixed, the white population in the surrounding area was also increasing, but they did not raise any objection at the time. And though the improvement of the land by the residents of the Location has been going on for years, nothing has been done to give them security of tenure. An Ordinance was promulgated last September vesting the ownership of the Location in the Johannesburg Municipality. On the other hand, the Government intends to confer definite rights on the Dutch residents of Vrededorp. Handing over the Malay Location to the Municipality is likely therefore to prejudice the interests of the residents in the Location.

If rights are granted to the Dutch, they should be granted equally to the Stand-holders of the Malay Location, who have always been loyal subjects. If a permanent lease is granted to the people of the Malay Location, it can be safely assumed that they will improve the land further and construct even more elegant buildings.

In reply to this representation, Sir Richard has promised to go into the whole matter fully and write later in detail. He has shown much sympathy, but it appears that the Government is nowadays plentiful in that commodity. Even Mr. Winston Churchill has expressed much sympathy. What the worthy knight will actually do, he alone knows.

The situation regarding permits continues as before. There has

1 Acting Lieutenant-Governor of the Transvaal been very severe criticism of [the handling of] Mr. Manga’s case, in a local paper, The Rand Daily Mail. It has two leading articles on the subject. They may have some effect on the Permit Office in course of time.

174. “INDIAN OPINION”

A meeting of Durban Indian was held at Mr. Omar Haji Amod Zaveri’s residence on Monday, to consider the future of Indian Opinion. Mr. Abdulla Haji Amod Zaveri was in the chair. On being requested to place the position of the journal before the meeting, Gandhiji spoke as follows.

DURBAN,

April 23, 1906

Indian Opinion has been published for some years now. It was founded by Mr. Madanjit, who struggled hard to make it a success and put his all into it. When the paper was started, the extent of the financial liability was not fully realised. Later on, it was found that much more money was needed to run the paper. The total deficit could not be covered even after the £1,600 received by me as fees in the cases against the Johannesburg Corporation was handed over.1 Every month there was a deficit of £75, which was beyond my means to meet. We had therefore to think of running the paper on different lines. It was decided to shift the Press to some place outside the city where the workers would lead a very simple life.2 For this step no responsibility attaches to Mr. Madanjit. He was afraid that the paper would not come out under the proposed arrangement and therefore dissociated himself from it, leaving the responsibility solely to me. However, since Mr. Madanjit had started the paper for selfless reasons and since after his return to India he is still serving the country like a true patriot, his name has been retained as printer and publisher.

The paper has been published for some time past according to this arrangement; but I find that we have reached a stage when, if we do not make special efforts, we shall incur deficits and not have enough to pay even the bare monthly allowance to the workers who take only £3 a month. When I took charge of the paper, the number of subscribers was 887 and the advertisements had greatly decreased. I am confident that I shall somehow continue to bring out the English section, at any rate as long as some of the Press workers hold on. But I have never believed that the Indian community will not accord the venture any support I, therefore, still hope that the paper will get all the help it needs.

1 Vide Autobiography, Part IV, Chap. XIII.
2 The Press was shifted to Phoenix in December, 1904.

The objects of the journal are threefold: first, to make our grievances known to the Government, to the whites here in South Africa and in England and to people in India; secondly, to tell our people of their own shortcomings and to exhort them to overcome these and, thirdly—and this is perhaps the principal object—to eliminate the distinctions as between Hindus and Mahomedans and also those among Gujaratis, Tamilians and Calcuttawallas prevalent here. The British rulers in India, it would appear, follow a different policy. They do not desire that we should come together and become united. Here in South Africa, these groups are small in numbers. We are all confronted with the same disabilities. We are moreover free from certain restrictions from which our people suffer in India. We can therefore easily essay an experiment in achieving unity. It is the aim of this journal to inculcate these ideals in the minds of our people and strengthen the community. It is necessary to secure the assistance of all thoughtful Indians to this end. I believe that many things can be achieved if this journal receives adequate support. I think that those among us who are educated and can afford to pay should subscribe to it. There are at least 20,000 Gujaratis living in South Africa. It would not be too much to expect 25 per cent. of this number to become subscribers. As for educated Indians, it is not enough that they become subscribers themselves. They should try their utmost to help in the fulfilment of the aims of the journal. They can persuade others to do so. The journal is a great instrument of education. It is necessary for every Indian to look upon the journal as belonging to him, not as something mine.

175. TO YOUNG MUSLIMS

A meeting of the Young Men’s Mahomedan Association was held at the Natal Indian Congress Hall, Durban, with Mr. Peeran Mahomed in the chair. Mr. M. C. Anglia made some suggestions regarding the name of the Association and asked Gandhiji for advice on this. He also suggested that the drafting of a constitution for the Association be entrusted to Gandhiji. Speaking on the occasion, Gandhiji said:

DURBAN

April 24, 1906

If the aim of this Association is to spread education, to promote morality and to introduce other reforms in the community, the name “Young Men’s Mahomedan Association” would be proper. The Young Men’s Christian Association is famous the world over. It has many prominent persons to encourage it. This Association can also work in the same way.

176. SPEECH AT CONGRESS MEETING

A meeting of the Natal Indian Congress was held in the Congress Hall, Durban to consider the advisability of raising an Indian ambulance corps to help the Government during the Zulu rebellion. Dawad Mahomed, Chairman of the Congress, presided. This speech by Gandhiji is extracted from a press report of the meeting at which others also spoke.

DURBAN,

April 24, 1906

Mr. Gandhi referred to the part that the Indians had taken during the Boer war. He said that the meeting was not concerned with the general question of Indian volunteering. He thought that the Government were neglecting a plain duty to the Colony in not utilizing the defensive force they had at their disposal in the Indian community. Mr. Watt had stated that he would not be defended by an Indian and at the same time said that he would use the Indian for digging trenches. We had the late Mr. Escombe’s word for it that the digging of trenches and the nursing of the wounded were just as honourable and necessary as the shouldering of a rifle. But they had nothing to do that evening with Mr. Watt’s views. They had to consider whether they should, during the present crisis, offer to the Government their assistance, however humble it might be. It was true they were labouring under disabilities and they were irritated. Opinions, too, may differ as to the cause of the Native revolt. But it was their duty not to be prejudiced by any such thoughts. If they claimed rights of citizenship, they were bound to take their natural share in the responsibilities that such rights carried with them. It was, therefore, their duty to assist in averting the danger that threatened the Colony. The Indians had done good work during the Boer war. It was recognised by General Buller, and the speaker advised that a similar offer should be made to the Government this time also.

Mr. Advocate Gabriel then moved the following resolution:

This Meeting of British Indians, assembled under the auspices of the Natal Indian Congress, hereby authorises the Chairman to send an offer to the Government, in connection with the Native rising, of the same nature as during the Boer war.

Mr. Lazarus Gabriel asked whether those who might vote for the resolution bound themselves to offer their services. Mr. Gandhi said such was not the meaning of the resolution. But every member who voted for it would be bound to assist in making the movement a success. It was for the members present to form a corps, should the Government be pleased to accept the offer.

177. LETTER TO COLONIAL SECRETARY

DURBAN, April 25, 1906

TO
PIETERMARITZBURG

SIR,

At a meeting of British Indians held on the 24th instant at the Congress Hall in Grey Street under the auspices of the Natal Indian Congress, and attended by over two hundred and fifty British Indians, the enclosed resolution proposed by Mr. Bernard Gabriel, Barrister-at-law, and seconded by Mr. Ismail Cora of the firm of Messrs. B. Ebrahim Ismail & Co., was carried unanimously.

I have the honour to draw the attention of the Government that, on the occasion alluded to in the resolution, several British Indians offered their services and they were accepted as leaders of ambulance parties. In the opinion of the Natal Indian Congress, it is possible to raise, similar corps, should it be necessary for the present crisis. The Congress trusts that the Government will be pleased to accept the offer. I may state that at the close of the meeting about forth British Indians handed in their names for ambulance or any such work for which they may be considered fit.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

DAWAD MAHOMED

178. INTERVIEW TO “THE NATAL MERCURY”

It was decided by a committee appointed by the Natal Indian Congress that a deputation be sent to the Imperial Government to place before them the grievances of British Indians. Gandhiji, Ismail Cora and representatives of the Transvaal and the Cape were to form the deputation. The following is an extract from a report of The Natal Mercury representative who interviewed Gandhiji.

[Before April 26, 1906]

Mr. Gandhi, on being interviewed on the subject, said that the deputation would probably leave within the next two months. The Transvaal and Cape had not as yet replied. Their intention was to place before the Home Government the grievances of British Indians throughout South Africa, and to endeavour to obtain reasonable redress. They would also represent the disabilities under which British Indians laboured. No formal programme had been drawn up, but they would remain here until they saw the movements of the Commission¹, which left on the 7th inst. If necessary, he would appear before that Commission.

The Natal Mercury, 26-4-1906

179. AN INDIAN OFFER

The meeting held under the auspices of the Natal Indian Congress the other day is to be congratulated on having passed a resolution offering the services of Indians in connection with the Native revolt.² The offer is a complete answer to the many ¹ Presumably, the Constitution Committee headed by Sir West Ridgeway set up by the British Government to look into, among other things, the question of granting responsible government to the Transvaal. correspondents in the local Press, who have been worrying themselves over the prospect, should the rebellion spread, of having to defend themselves and also Indians in the Colony. Those Indians who packed the Congress Hall last Tuesday evening have shown that they possess the faculty of discrimination in an eminent degree, and that they are capable of forgetting personal grievances when the common good of the body politic, of which they form a part, is concerned. We trust that the Government will see their way to accept the offer, and give the Indian community the chance once more of proving its worth.

But whether the offer is accepted or not, it shows most clearly the importance of the Government turning to good account the Indian willingness to take its share in the defence of the Colony by giving Indians a proper previous training. We have more than once pointed out the criminal folly of not utilizing the admirable material the Indian community offers for additional defensive purposes. If it is not possible to turn the present Indian population out of the Colony, it is surely elementary wisdom to give it an adequate military training. There is an expressive Indian proverb that you cannot start digging a well when a fire breaks out. Nor can you suddenly develop the Indians, however willing and capable they may be, into an efficient corps of even “trench-diggers”. Will Mr. Watt and his fellow-ministers wake up to a sense of their duty in the matter?

180. THE NATAL SHOPS ACT

Our contemporary, _The Natal Advertiser_, has given prominence to a lengthy contribution from the Secretaries of the Natal Stores Employees’ Association on the Shops Act. In it the Secretaries have endeavoured to justify the Act by attempting to show that it has injured Asiatic trade. Whether it has injured that trade or not, we do not propose to discuss. We have accepted the principle underlying the Act. We believe it is right that the opening and the closing hours of shops should be State-regulated. But we cannot help thinking that the actual hours fixed by the statute are inconvenient in every respect. In fixing them, no account has been taken of the public who support the traders. To close the shops on Saturday afternoons is the height of absurdity. But all this is by the way. We believe that the Act will require early amending before it becomes workable.

It is, however, the irresponsible manner in which the responsible

1 _Vide “Indian Volunteering”, 31-3-1906_ officers of the Association have dealt with the Indian traders that appears to us to call for some remarks. The Secretaries state that, before the Act, the Indian traders kept their shops open for 103 hours per week, as against 53 hours after the passing of the Act. There is no authority produced for the sweeping statement. It is inherently incorrect. The 103 hours per week mean 17 hours and ten minutes per day. Now, if we assume that the Indian store-keeper (not requiring, of course, any food and not attending to the toilet) opened his store at 6 a.m., he would not close, in order to have over 17 hours, until after 11.10 p.m. We should be glad to be furnished with the names of Indian traders who kept open during the pre-Act days between 6 a.m. and 11.10 p.m. We have heard of Irish members of the House of Commons tirelessly sitting out whole nights in the House, satisfying their hunger on a bit of kola-nut. But we have not heard of any Indian traders, with their employees, springing out of their beds (if they may be credited with having any) and hastening to their shops at 6 a.m., and standing behind the counter up to 11.10 p.m. We have heard many exaggerated accounts about Indians, but this one from the Natal Stores Employees’ Association must certainly take the palm. We are prepared, however, to admit that some Indian store-keepers did keep open longer than they do now, but we are also prepared to show, if proof were needed, that European traders of the same type sinned equally, if not much worse.

Almost on a par with the above exaggeration are the other statements made by the Secretaries. We ask them to study their facts before they rush into print and they will, we assure them, find that the Indian trader is not as vile, after all, as they make him appear.

181. FINANCIAL POSITION OF THIS JOURNAL

Our readers may feel pleased to see that this journal is growing day by day. In the beginning we used to publish only four pages of Gujarati. Later, we made them five, and, after discontinuing the Tamil and Hindi sections, eight. This week we print twelve pages. It will be easily realised that such expansion means increased expenditure. And we cannot advance further without encouragement. The account of the meeting,¹ held at Mr. Omar Haji Amod Zaveri’s place, will give some idea of the present financial position of the journal. We believe it is the duty of every Indian to help. All persons connected with the journal are such that they can earn their livelihood by other means.

¹ Vide “Indian Opinion”, 23-4-1906
That they continue with the journal despite this is due, we believe, to the spark of patriotism that they keep alive in their hearts. And if enough support from the community is forthcoming, the journal can render even greater service. We wish therefore to suggest to our subscribers that, if each one of them enlists another, the number of subscribers will double in no time. We can assure them that any addition to the income of the journal will all be used for improving it.

182. APPEAL TO YOUNG INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Various associations of Indian youth are nowadays being formed in South Africa. They indicate an improvement in our condition. While a Young Men’s Mahomedan Society has come into being in Durban, Sanatan Dharma Sabhas have been founded in Johannesburg and other towns. This is a matter for satisfaction. But we feel it necessary to sound a note of warning to both kinds of bodies.

It is a confirmed law of nature that an association of persons can grow and endure only if their minds are free from prejudice and all of them seek their good in the good of the association.

Every country depends a great deal on its young men and women. Old men with their set habits of thought cannot readjust their opinions as necessary. They cling to old ideas. Every community, however, has undoubtedly need of such men, for they help to contain the restless enthusiasm of youth within limits. While they have their uses, they have their disadvantages also, since they often hesitate to do things which needs must be done. This may be thought becoming in them; but it is helpful to have good young men coming forward, for it is they alone who can venture to experiment. It is therefore as necessary for us to encourage these associations as to caution them against over-enthusiasm.

The members of these youth organizations will be able to achieve many great things, if they work with sincerity and with the sole intention of doing the right thing by their country. For instance, there is much insanitation among us. Mr. Peeran Mahomed has already commented on this subject at a Congress meeting. Our young men can do much to remedy this laxity by making house-to-house visits and politely persuading people. Some poor Indians are given to drinking, and their wives have also fallen victims to the habit. Our young men can do much, if they take up the very important work of redeeming them. We should like here to ask our Gujarati readers not to assume that they may not do this kind of work among the Madrasis given to drinking. We may add that the drinking habit is spreading among some Gujarati Hindus also. Whether Hindus or Muslims, all of us can help in reclaiming them.

Moreover, it is necessary for such youth organizations to be more mindful of the needs of education. There is a dearth of education even among our youth. We do not consider mere literacy to be education. We ought to have some knowledge of world history, the constitutions of various countries and other related subjects. We can learn from history how other nations have progressed. We can emulate them in the matter of their burning patriotism. Youth organizations can do many such things; indeed, it is their duty to do so. We do hope that these associations will fulfill their obligations by taking on such benevolent functions, earn people’s gratitude, and take their due share in meeting the difficulties that are our lot in this country.

183. THE MEETING AT MOMBASA

There seems to be no end to India’s misery. Wherever the Indian goes, the whites there are against him. Where there is no danger from the whites, there are internal quarrels. If we are free from these, we are caught by the plague. And if we escape these three calamities, famine is there at our heels.

These thoughts come to mind as we read the account of the meeting of our brethren at Mombasa, published elsewhere in this issue. The whites cast their greedy eyes on the fertile territory of Nairobi, near Mombasa. They tried to drive the Indians out of the place or to stop them from entering the territory. They seem to have succeeded in the attempt. Following this, our people held a big meeting and are preparing to resist the whites. So great was their enthusiasm that, within half an hour, they succeeded in collecting Rs. 20,000 and have further undertaken to raise Rs. 400 a month for calling in a lawyer to help.

We are witness to much unhappiness in this country, but as against that, we are also becoming united. If our hardships should thus lead to unity, we might as well welcome them for the time being. If we unite and put up a fight in every part of the world, our problems will ease, they will soon be forgotten and we shall become one unified community.

The Chairman of the meeting said in his address that we in South Africa enjoyed equal rights with the whites. If Mr. Jivanji does at all know of this journal, he must be aware of our privations. We are sorry to have to tell him that our political condition here is worse than that of our brethren in Mombasa. If an Indian in Natal can acquire land, he has other hardships to face; and preparations are afoot to deprive him even of the right to hold land. In the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony, land cannot be owned by an Indian to this day.

184. THE NATAL REBELLION AND AID TO NATAL

Bambata is still at large, and it is reported that he has 300 men with him. Many speeches have been made on the armed encounters with him. The Natal cabinet has declared that it will not seek aid from England. Telegrams have been received which mention a large meeting held at Johannesburg and say that the people there are prepared to render all aid to Natal. All this means that the strength and the independence of Natal will increase. It was right and proper of the Indian community to have gone to the help of the Government at such a time. Had they not made the offer, a slur would have been put on our good name for ever. Those who have enlisted themselves for war have indeed shown great courage and enthusiasm. Most of them are Colonial-born. It is a matter of satisfaction to us that they have joined the other Indians and it is the duty of the leaders to encourage them to go forward.

185. STIR IN CHINA

The Times correspondent says that the Chinese are taking greater liberties every day and are attacking the whites. Chinese newspapers publish very inflammatory articles, and in this they are being assisted by Japanese journalists. The speeches made by men of the Liberal Party on the subject of Chinese labour in the Transvaal Mines have had a very bad effect on the Chinese who have become all the more enraged against the whites.

186. EVILS OF TOBACCO

An article by the renowned Dr. Cortez of Paris has appeared in the latest number of The Indian Review, wherein he mentions many evils of tobacco. The more important among them are that digestion is impaired and eyesight badly affected. It leads to loss of memory and disables one from developing high moral virtues. Moreover, it has now been found that even hearing is affected. The doctor has conclusively shown that irregular action of the nerves governing the sense of hearing is to be ascribed to tobacco.

187. THE FATE OF SAN FRANCISCO

Owing to the earthquake, this city has been laid waste for the most part. The princes of yesterday have become paupers today. Many wealthy people have been left without shelter or clothes to wear. On this occasion of Nature’s wrath, the millionaires and the penniless have been reduced to the same level. Even the distinction between white and black has disappeared. There is great scarcity of food in the city. Even bread is hard to get. A violinist who was living in a palatial building is roaming the streets, violin in hand, almost naked.

Notwithstanding this catastrophe, as the latest cablegrams show, the people in the city have started reconstructing it and making it as splendid as ever. Consequently, steel is in very great demand.

188. REPLY TO YOUNG MEN’S MAHOMEDAN SOCIETY

This report was received while I was away at Phoenix. Since the Secretary desired that it should be published in full, I have passed on

This was a report in Indian Opinion covering the proceedings of the two meetings of the Young Men’s Mahomedan Society, Durban, held on April 16 and 24. Some speakers at these meetings had complained, among other things, that articles of interest to Muslims, reports of the activities of their Society, their subscription lists and letters to the Press, etc., were not published in Indian Opinion in full or given adequate publicity. This would not have happened, they pointed out, had they had a paper of their own. Gandhiji’s statement is in reply to this criticism.
the whole of it for publication. But I have a word to say to my young friends. Reports should always be such as to enable people to learn something from them. I see nothing of the kind in the above report.

I accept the criticism levelled against me in all humility, and do not in the least hesitate to print it. I have nowhere said—nor indeed can I say—that the Muslims were converted from among bhangis and the like. I have not offended the feelings of the whites either; rather, I spoke in their favour. However, if I have committed an error in anything that I said, I have already requested my brethren to forgive me.¹

I have allowed all the letters written against me or this journal to be published while I disallowed the letters to the Editor written in my defence. But I must add that writings likely to encourage dissension in the community will never be published. I shall always be glad if another Gujarati journal or other printing presses are started. To render public service is the only aim of this journal. It will be a matter for pride for the men running this Press, if others come forward and compete in rendering such service.

The lists acknowledging receipts of contributions to the Hindu Crematorium Fund were published against payment in Indian Opinion. So also were contributions to the Dabhel Madresa Fund. This journal is being published under such difficult conditions that all Indians are expected to render it maximum help. All the space in it is so valuable that whatever matter is printed in it free of cost should be such as to educate and enlighten.

In brief, my only request to my young friends is that they ought to display enthusiasm for public work. This journal is for the service of the entire Indian community. If they help it, they will be deemed to have done their duty. Their help will lend strength to the journal, which in turn will redound to the community.

I hope my friends will not take offence at what I have written and will construe it aright. My purpose in writing this is also to serve.

189. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
April 30, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I am sending more Gujarati [matter] to-day. I intended to send some this morning but I was not able to post it as Kalyandas came to the office late and I wanted to get on with the office work. I hope, however, all the matter will be in good time.

I am leaving for Pretoria at 11.30. I, therefore, cannot write much.

Kalyandas will leave on Wednesday morning and not on Tuesday. He is anxious to pass a day here. He will, therefore, be with you on Thursday. You may send the Kaffir boy to meet him and take his things by the afternoon train. All of you, I know, will be engaged on Thursday over the paper.

Let Gokuldas start on Friday, if possible. He can leave by the 4.30 train, if he can be spared and take the mail train. Of course, he should take a single ticket. If he cannot leave on Friday, he must leave without fail on Saturday so as to be here on Sunday, but please try to send him on Friday as I shall be very much rushed.

Kalyandas should immediately take up the town work. You should get an annual second class pass for him. If he has to leave in the meantime, as you said, we can get a refund. For the present, your whole attention should be entirely devoted to the books.

I hope to write more fully in the train today or at the house tonight.

I am glad you have shaken off the fever.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

190. NATAL LAND BILL

The Parliament of Natal will have before it a measure of far-reaching importance for consideration in the shape of the Land Clause Bill. It is the second attempt of the Natal Government to pass the measure through Parliament. The clause of the greatest importance to the Indian community is that which restricts the meaning of beneficial occupation, so far as tenant’s occupation is concerned, to European occupation only. Thus, land that may be occupied by Indian tenants would be considered to be non-beneficial occupation, and will be subject, on that account, to heavy taxation. It has been universally admitted that, whatever may be the faults of the Indian, he is not lazy; he is a born tiller of the soil. He is, by common consent, considered to have reclaimed some of the worst soil in the Colony. He has turned dense bush into gardens, and has made it possible, by his productive capacity, to bring garden produce within easy reach of the poor householder in Natal. Is his very virtue to be singled out for taxation? Will the Government thereby promote European occupation? We doubt it. And if our doubt be reasonable, we are safe in saying that the Government will be pursuing a dog-in-the-manger policy, by persisting in retaining the definition, above alluded to, of the expression “beneficial occupation”. It is not by Acts such as thin that the Government will be able to solve the Indian question in Natal. It behoves the ministers and the leaders of public opinion to reflect seriously and calmly on the whole question and deal with it in a statesmanlike manner, instead of by the recent spasmodic anti-Indian legislation.

191. CAPE DEALERS’ LICENCES

The Cape Government Gazette of the 20th April contains the text of a Bill to regulate the trade of a general dealer. We have no hesitation in welcoming the measure. Granted that some restriction of an indiscriminate issue of trade licenses is necessary, the Bill before us is free from reproach. It safeguards vested rights, and provides reasonable precautions against any injustice being done to applicants for new licence”. It gives the power ultimately to the people themselves to say whether they will have among them a new trader or not. The Bill, whilst it protects existing traders against undue competition, gives fair facilities for new enterprise. It avoids all the faults of the Natal Dealers’ Licenses Act, and secures all that the Natal Act could ever achieve consistently with regard for vested rights. We hope that the Natal Government will copy the measure and free the Statute-book of the Colony from legislation that has been condemned by all thoughtful men, and that has caused intense irritation amongst a portion of His Majesty’s subjects.

192. BRITAIN, TURKEY AND EGYPT

The latest cablegrams show that the ill-feeling between the British and the Turkish Governments has further increased. The whole trouble is about the Egyptian boundary which still remains undefined. The first clash occurred near Akaba. Following this, the Turkish army marched on Taba Yama in the Sinai district with a view to taking possession of it. The British Government thereupon sent a communication to their Ambassador, Sir Nicholas O’Connor, asking him to lodge a strong protest with the Turkish Government and urge them to withdraw their army from Taba. The Turkish Government took no notice, and was, on the other hand, encouraged by the German Emperor to flout the British Government’s wishes. Now the Turkish army is building a fort at Akaba and apparently preparing for war. In retaliation, the British Government have started strengthening their garrison in Egypt. Moreover, the British Government fear that the Egyptians too are on the side of the Turkish Government. If these differences between the British and Turkish Governments should lead to war, it would be the first of its kind. It does not seem likely that the Turkish Government will retract. A cablegram received by _The Witness_ shows that the border posts erected near Rafa have been demolished by the Turkish army.

[From Gujarati]

_Indian Opinion, 5-5-1906_

1 Taba was occupied by the Turkish forces ostensibly to protect the Turkish Railway between Damascus and Mecca. Eventually, a new demarcation of the frontier between Rafa and Akaba was agreed upon.
193. OUR DUTY

A correspondent who has signed himself “Ajax” has addressed a letter to The Advertiser. We print a translation elsewhere in this issue. The letter deserves to be pondered over by all Indians. It is intended to stir up public feeling against us. All of it is written in an ironical manner, the purport being that Indians are useless in times of war.

We should give this accusation earnest thought. In sending an offer of help to the Natal Government we took the right step. Because of this, we can face others with some measure of confidence. But that is not enough. We should strive harder with a view to playing [a more direct] part in times of war. Under the Militia Law, enlisting is compulsory for whites when war breaks out. If we can also prove our willingness and ability to fight, our disabilities may possibly disappear. But whether these are removed or not, we Indians in South Africa ought to hold ourselves in readiness to share in the adversity that might befall Natal or any other part of South Africa. If we fail to do so, we shall be found wanting to that extent.

There is rumour of a revolt in Swaziland. The Natal Government has ordered huge quantities of ammunition. All this goes to show that the Natal rebellion will last many more days. And if it spreads further, it might affect the whole of South Africa. This time help from the Transvaal has already reached Natal.¹ The Cape has promised aid, and an offer has been made by England also. If we keep aloof at such a time, it is bound to create a bad impression about us. It is necessary for every Indian to consider this matter very seriously.

[From Gujarati]

194. THE EXAMPLE OF MOMBASA

Two more issues of the newspaper published in Mombasa have been received, which show that the Indians there are determined to do all that is necessary to secure their rights. Their example deserves to be followed by us all. We wish the Indians of Mombasa success.

From the subsequent issues of the paper, one learns that the apparent misunderstanding at the meeting about South Africa was due really to incorrect reporting.

The Indians there know quite well that we in South Africa do not enjoy the same rights as the whites do. But the more important thing one finds is what the Editor of the journal himself points out. He says that there is no unity among the Indians and that they will not succeed in securing their rights as long as it is not achieved. There are many factions amongst them. If the Commissioner wants any information about the whites, he can immediately find a white person to speak for all of them; but when the Commissioner desires to know anything about Indians, he has to invite half a dozen men of different communities. This is indeed unfortunate, if true. As we all come from the same country, we should forget that we belong to different communities. So long as we do not bear this in mind, we can never be rid of our hardships.

195. WORKMEN’S LIVING HABITS

Nowadays, there is an increasing appreciation among enlightened men of the need for open air. Where large cities have come into being, labourers have to work cooped up in factories the whole day. As the price of urban land is high, factory buildings are not spacious enough, and the tenements of labourers are also very small. This invariably results in a steady deterioration of their health. Dr. Newman of Hinsborough in London has shown that the death rate per thousand is 38 in areas where too many people live huddled together in one room, but where the same number live in two rooms, the death rate is 22; where the same number of people share three rooms, it is 11 and where they have the use of four rooms, the death rate is only 5. There is nothing surprising in this. A man can do without food for several days and live a day altogether without waters but it is impossible to carry on without air even for a minute. If a thing that is so very vital to life is not pure, the result cannot but be deleterious. It was for these considerations that large manufacturers like Cadbury Brothers and Lever Brothers, who have always been very mindful of the welfare of their workers have shifted their factories to open places outside cities. They have built very good quarters for their workers with all the attendant amenities, such as gardens and libraries; although they have spent all this money, they have flourished in their business. A similar movement has spread all over England in the wake of this example.

1 Vide “The Meeting at Mombasa”, 28-4-1906
This matter deserves consideration by Indian leaders. We suffer much because we do not realise the value of pure air, and this again is a strong reason why diseases like plague spread among us.

196. INDIAN MERCHANTS’ CHAMBER

In our last issue, we published Mr. Omar Haji Amod Zaveri’s letter on this subject. It deserves careful consideration. Every Indian who knows the conditions in South Africa can understand how much influence the British Chamber of Commerce wields. Had Indians taken part in the activities of British chambers from the beginning, the condition of the Indian trader would be different today. Numerous reforms could have been effected through them. We know that, when Indian traders first came to South Africa, Englishmen used to invite them to join their Chamber. Now the situation is such that we would be rejected if we sought admission.

Mr. Omar Zaveri now puts forward the idea that, if we cannot secure admission to the British Chamber, we can start one of our own. If it is started and our traders work for it diligently and introduce such reforms as are necessary, and if all of them act according to its advice, it will be able to achieve a good many things. The British chambers command great influence because their authority is accepted by all traders. If we cannot bring about such a state of affairs, it will make no difference whether or not we set up a Chamber. If therefore experienced and public-spirited Indian merchants meet together, consider the matter seriously and found a chamber of Indian merchants, we stand to gain. And it will be considered a good step taken to better the lot of Indian merchants.

THE MALAY LOCATION

I have already reported that the deputation regarding the Malay Location waited upon the Lieutenant-Governor. The latter has sent his reply, saying that a part of the Malay Location will be taken over

1 Vide “Johannesbuurg Letter”, 21-4-1906
by the Railway authorities and the rest by the Johannesburg Municipality; that they will pay compensation to owners for buildings in the Location taken over by them, and that the Colonial Secretary will set up another Location for the displaced tenants. This reply means nothing. This outcome was anticipated even before the deputation waited on the Lieutenant-Governor. It does not appear that, for the present, the local Government will render any kind of justice.

HARDSHIPS ON THE RAILWAY

The Chairman and the Secretary of the British Indian Association saw Mr. Price, the General Manager, regarding the prohibition of Indian and other Coloured passengers from travelling by the 8-30 [a.m.] and 4-40 p.m. trains from Johannesburg to Pretoria and the morning train leaving Pretoria at 8-30 for Johannesburg. The interview lasted about an hour. Mr. Price argued that the feeling among the whites ran rather high then and it would not be desirable for the Indians to press the point further. Finally, he gave the assurance that, if an Indian had to travel by any of these trains for any urgent piece of work, the station master would, on request, arrange for him to travel with the guard. Mr. Price, however, suggested that, for the present, as few Indians as possible should travel by these three trains. He said that such restriction would not continue for long. A recent case that has a bearing on this subject deserves notice. A Coloured man was travelling in a second-class carriage with a white woman sitting beside him. Mr. Bowcker, a white, noticed this, and his blood boiled at the sight. He asked the Coloured man to vacate his seat, but the latter merely produced his ticket. But Mr. Bowcker was not satisfied and spoke to the guard who refused to intervene. Mr. Bowcker thereupon brought other white passengers to the carriage and threatened to evict the Coloured man. The helpless guard was forced to throw him out. It is not here possible to apportion blame to any official. Such difficulties are bound to occur as long as the whites continue to behave excitedly over this question.

The following is a translation of what another white writes in The Transvaal Leader under the title “Coolie Traveller”.

Mr. Bowcker deserves the gratitude of the whites for what he has written about the Coloured man. Some time ago, I was travelling from Potchefstroom to Park. There were also two ‘coolies’ in the train. It is true that they were in another compartment; but that does not lessen the evil. For a white will have to sit in that compartment after they leave. Moreover, the two ‘coolies’ wiped their hands with the towels kept there. The same would have to be used by the white also. And I am sure no decent white would want to use the cup or the towel used by a ‘coolie’. Surely, it behoves the Railway authorities to show some consideration for the public.
One comes across such correspondents in many papers. The only thing Indians could do on such occasions is to be patient.

MR. RITCH AND MESSRS GEORGE AND JAMES GODFREY

Cablegrams received by the local Press say that Mr. Ritch has passed his examination in England; and so have Messrs George and James Godfrey. The two brothers will shortly return, having qualified as Barristers.

THE CONDITION OF THE CHINESE

The Imperial Government is pressing for early publication of notices for the repatriation of the Chinese mine-workers at Government cost, if the latter find this work distasteful. The mine-owners, on the other hand, say that they will not put up the notices in their compounds. A serious dispute is likely to arise if the mine-owners decide to flout the Government.

THE TRAM CASE

The tram test case is not over yet. The case of Mr. Coovadia will be heard again before the Magistrate. The Crown Counsel had the hearing fixed for Saturday, the 12th.

THE CONSTITUTION COMMITTEE

The Commission headed by Sir Joseph West Ridgeway has arrived in the Transvaal. It is at present sitting in Pretoria. The British Indian Association has inquired whether the Commission will record such evidence as the Association may place before it regarding the condition of Indians. If the Commission agrees, it will be possible to present the whole case before it.

198. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,
May 5, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I am surprised you did not receive the Johannesburg letter this week. I certainly sent it. I have a list of all the articles I sent. I should check it as soon as I receive Indian Opinion, and then let you know. If it is at all possible to let me have Gujarati copy as well as English copy in advance on Fridays, it will be very much better, as I should then receive them on Sunday mornings and make use [of them]. You have sent me many cuttings. I am dealing with them in Gujarati but some of them really should have been dealt with this week and if they have, I should not have to write on them at all. That I could do on Sundays if I got an advance copy. You may also in sending your copies mark there whether you have dealt with it in the current issue or not. I do hope Gokuldas left yesterday. I can then prepare him for the work on Monday, but as there is no telegram, I fear that he has not left. I would like you to tell me whether Mr. Isaac has dealt with the matters you entrusted to him. I want you to remind me about the list of Mr. Nazar’s effects next week. As I am destroying your letter, I may forget all about it. You should do the work of general supervision as to the other matters and devote the balance of your time entirely to the books. I wish you to promise to yourself as to the time when you will have the balance-sheet ready.

Kalyandas ought to be a tower of strength to you. If he is willing to stay with you he may do so, but I think that if he remains with Hemchand, he will exert a better influence on him. He will not very often take his luncheon in Phoenix. All, therefore, he will have is one meal in the evening. He may as well have that separate but you may all decide otherwise, if you choose to. I am glad you are attending to the improvements of your ground. It is most necessary work, and I would like you, now that you will be freer, to devote your time to it methodically. There should not be a weed within your two acres. I will write to Sam about the garden.¹ I return the cutting on gardening you have sent me. You should keep it and let others read it. You should read other books also on gardening. I think there is a little book with Mr. West.² You should learn to lead in such matters. I shall write to Mohanlal about a weekly letter. I spoke to Vyas also. I do not think it is necessary at present to offer to send them the Opinion free of charge. Let them feel that it is their duty to write these letters.

I have not yet recovered the money from the theatre people. You should not, therefore, execute the job until I have done so.

Apropos of the Johannesburg letter, may it not have been received by Anandlal directly, because I believe the first batch of my Gujarati writing I addressed to Anandlal...

From a photostat of the original: S.N. 4356

¹ This letter, if written, is not available.
² On this, Mr. West writes: “I think that the book referred to was written by one Du Casse, a man of great practical experience in Natal who had a lovely garden at Hillary, not far from Durban. Many of our fruits and ornamental trees planted at Phoenix come from his nurseries. The title of the book I cannot remember. The publishers, I think, were P. Davis & Son, Pietermaritzburg. . . .”
³ The letter is incomplete.
199. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Sunday, [May 6, 1906]

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

There is something I have to write to you about but have no time today. You have to occupy yourself wholly with the books for the present. I am sending herewith the Gujarati matter. Go through it yourself, and after showing it to Harilal Thakar, pass it on to Anandlal. At the moment I do not have the time to write him a letter. I shall address the matter that I write to-night directly to him. Please take care that nothing incorrect is printed in Gujarati. You may keep an eye on it, but put the whole burden of it on Mr. Thakar. I shall write asking him to show all the Gujarati material to you. But you are not to spend much time over it at present. I collected twenty more names by Friday, which I shall send you tomorrow. Subscriptions from six of them have already been received. Kalyandas will leave on Tuesday morning, arriving there on Wednesday evening. It will do if either you or some one else meets him at Phoenix on Wednesday evening. Entrust all the Durban work to him. It will be enough if you go [to Durban] once a fortnight with the editor’s ticket. It is necessary that you concentrate mostly on books.

Send Gokuldas as soon as you can. Else on Saturday.

Blessings from

200. LETTER TO LORD SELBORNE

[JOHANNESBURG,
Before May 12, 1906]

SIR,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 30th ultimo, No. 15/4/1906. My Association ventures to think that the complaint forwarded to His Excellency has not received that investigation which the circumstances required. As to the dilatoriness, my Association will watch the working of the new department. In the meanwhile, attention is respectfully drawn to the fact that applications have been pending for months, and it is difficult for my Association to reconcile such a lapse of time with any regard for the convenience of the applicants.

With reference to the case of Mr. Suliman Manga, my Association has ascertained the full facts, and my Association thinks that the information given to His Excellency is by no means complete. There was absolutely no mis-statement of material facts in connection with the application. The application was made through Mr. Gandhi, who, my Association understands, was instructed by a friend of the Mangas'. The ground for the application was not that Mr. Manga wanted to visit his uncle, but that he wanted to pass through the Transvaal on his way to Delagoa Bay. A reply was received on the 14th March rejecting the application for a temporary permit. The variation as to the description of the relative only took place after rejection of the application. In reply to the letter in question, Mr. Gandhi wrote to the Permit Officer expressing his surprise and there described the uncle as father, which, as he explains, was written without his having referred to the previous letter. In any case, there was no question of misleading, as the variation in the description of relationship was so palpable that it could only be accounted as a mistake. As a matter of fact, as it now transpires, Mr. Manga had neither a father nor an uncle in Delagoa Bay, but he had a cousin, and for that matter there was a further discrepancy that Mr. Manga was described as a British Indian, whereas he happened to be a Portuguese Indian. All this arose as instructions were given by a friend of the Mangas' who did not know them intimately. But none of these facts had any direct bearing on the application. In the second letter, information was given to the effect that Mr. Manga was a student from England. A later development of the case showed the painful fact that Mr. Manga, considered as a British Indian, was unable to secure what he got for the asking when it became known that he was a Portuguese subject. The case of Mr. Suliman Manga is, in the humble opinion of my Association, very important as showing the difficult position in which the British Indian community is placed in the Transvaal. The reason, too, given for the refusal was denied to my Association. My Association became aware of it for the first time through your letter. The foregoing statement of facts shows that the reason for refusal could not have been the variation in the description of the relative in Delagoa Bay, because when the decision was announced, the slip as to the uncle being described as father had not occurred. My Association ventures to submit that there should be sufficient latitude granted in connection with temporary permits, or what may be termed visitors’ passes, and that in any case applicants should have reasons given to them as to why their applications have been rejected. My Association has obtained copies of the correspondence in the matter which I take the liberty to enclose herewith.\(^1\)

Regarding the age limit for the introduction of male Asiatic minors, my Association respectfully submits that the reduction of the age limit would hardly cure the abuses referred to in the letter under reply. Those who intend to practise deception will continue to do so whether the age limit is sixteen or twelve. Abuses under legislation restrictive of human liberty are inevitable, but my Association respectfully submits that the abuses have by no means been extensive, and they have always been avoidable. May I further venture to state that the reduction of age limit is a punishment awarded to the innocent for the crimes of the guilty persons.

With reference to all persons irrespective of age or sex being required to obtain permits, my Association takes it that it only refers to British Indians or Asiatics, for it is within the knowledge of my Association that many European children and ladies have entered the country without any permits at all. My Association ventures to submit that the requiring of wives, and children five years of age, or, as it has been said, infants-in-arms, to carry permits is hardly called for and is calculated to create a great deal of irritation. My Association, therefore, once more respectfully requests His Excellency’s sympathetic intervention.

\textbf{201. INDIAN VOLUNTEERING}

Correspondence has appeared in \textit{The Natal Advertiser} on the offer of the Indian community, in connection with the Native rebellion, which ordinarily we should not feel justified in noticing. As, however, the subject discussed by the correspondents of our contemporary is of such vital importance both to the Indian community and to the Colony, we make no apology for dealing with the points raised by them. We have no concern with the reckless abuse

\(^1\) Not reproduced here indulged in by some of the correspondents.

One of them has satirically suggested that Indians, so that they may not run away, should be placed in the front-line, and that then the fight between them and the Natives will be a sight for the gods. We propose to take the correspondent seriously, and venture to suggest that, if such a course were adopted, it would be undoubtedly the very best that could happen to the Indians. If they be cowardly, they will deserve the fate that will overtake them; if they be brave, nothing can be better than for brave men to be in the front-line. But the pity of it is that the Government, and the European Colonists who have dictated the policy to the Government, have not taken the elementary precaution of giving the necessary discipline and instruction to the Indians. It is, therefore, a matter of physical impossibility to expect Indians to do any work with the rifle; or, for that matter, to do any work in connection with war with much efficiency. The Indian Ambulance Corps, at the time of the late war, did excellent work, without the necessary instruction and discipline, only because the Indian leaders who joined the Corps had previously been instructed and prepared under Dr. Booth.

Another correspondent has suggested that Indians should not be armed, because if they were, they would sell their arms to the Natives. This is a suggestion which is made wickedly, and without any foundation in fact. Indians have never been armed; it is, therefore, sheer folly to say that, if they were, they would act in a particular direction. It has also been suggested that the offer has been made to gain cheap applause, and also to gain something not made apparent in the proceedings of the Congress meeting. The first statement is slanderous, and the best way to disprove the stricture is for these correspondents to make the Government accept the offer, and to see whether the response is adequate or not. The second statement is difficult to understand. If it is intended to convey the impression that Indians, by serving during war time, hope to obtain a redress of their wrongs, the statement is true, and no Indian should be ashamed of such a motive. What can be better and more praise worthy than that Indians, by standing shoulder to shoulder with their fellow-Colonists in the present trouble, should show that they are not unworthy of the ordinary rights of citizenship which they have been claiming all these years? But it is equally true also that the offer has been made unconditionally, as a matter of simple duty, and irrespective of whether there is any redress of the grievances granted or not. We, therefore, consider it to be the special aim of every Colonist to support the Indian community in the offer it has made, and thereby to show prudence and foresight, for it cannot be seriously argued that there is any wisdom or statesmanship in blindly refusing to make use of, for purposes of war, one hundred thousand Indians who are perfectly loyal, and who are capable of good training.

202. INDIAN PERMITS

Lord Selborne has now replied to the representations of the British Indian Association on the working of the Permit Ordinance. The Association has sent in a further representation, traversing some of the facts and arguments contained in His Excellency’s reply. We cannot help saying that Lord Selborne’s reply is most disappointing. The Manga case has been fully dealt with by the Association in its reply. We need not, therefore, comment any further upon the curious reason given for refusing Mr. Manga’s application for a permit.

It is evident, from Lord Selborne’s letter, that the age limit has been reduced arbitrarily from sixteen to twelve, for, as the Association has pointed out, evasion of the regulations by some people could be no ground for reduction of the age limit. But where utter want of regard for the feelings of Indians has been shown is in connection with separate permits being required for wives accompanying their husbands. This is an innovation which has absolutely no justification for it. The anti-Asiatic party has never said one word regarding the influx of Indian women. There are, as is well known, very few Indian women in the Transvaal, and they do not in any way compete in trade. Their work is confined solely to looking after their households. We must, therefore, frankly confess that we were not prepared for the reply that Lord Selborne has given regarding separate permits for wives. Is it a new discovery that “all persons in the Transvaal, irrespective of age or sex, are required under the Peace Preservation Ordinance to obtain permits”? If it is not, why have Indian women not been called upon hitherto to produce any permits? Why have Indian children been exempted until recently from having to carry any permits?

And, as the Association points out, the Peace Preservation Ordinance is not by any means universally applied, in that European ladies and children under sixteen years are free from having to obtain or carry permits when travelling with their husbands or parents; nor has His Excellency taken any note of peculiar Indian susceptibilities regarding Indian womanhood. We have no hesitation in saying that

1 _Vide “Letter to Lord Selborne”, Before 21-5-1906_
the regulation is unreasonable, insulting, and totally uncalled for. If it is enforced, it will create irritation which will be difficult to allay. It is strange, indeed, that, with the innovations introduced, His Excellency can conclude his letter by saying that the permit work is being done with “as much consideration for the convenience of the applicants as is possible under all circumstances”. Not until the age limit has been restored, not until Indian women are rendered free from unwarranted insult, not until Indian refugees can have their applications considered immediately on their receipt, can, in our humble opinion, His Excellency say, with any show of justice, that the Permit regulations are enforced with any degree of reasonableness. We can quite understand the difficulties in the way of the officers who have to administer the law, but if they are short-handed, it is the duty of the Government to supplement the staff, so as not to delay consideration of the applications. Such an increase in the staff can only be temporary, for there must, some time or other, be an end to the applications from refugees. It is the congestion of work in the Office which has to be dealt with. Why cannot that congestion be removed by employing extra men?

203. THE COLOURED PEOPLE’S PETITION

The Coloured People’s Vigilance Committee has prepared a petition, for submission to the House of Commons, in connection with the new Constitution to be granted to the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony. The public are not informed whether the petition is in continuation of that addressed to King Edward VII by the African Political Organization, or whether it is a distinct and separate movement. In any case, both the petitions represent practically the same interests. The only difference is that, whereas the petition to the King deals with Coloured people as distinguished from the Natives, the present petition seems to include the Natives. There is no doubt that, ultimately, the policy enunciated by the late Mr. Rhodes’ will have to be accepted by South Africa, if there is to be federation, and if it is to continue to remain under the British flag. We, however, question whether, in view of what Mr. Churchill has \(^2\) Cecil Rhodes, Prime Minister of Cape Colony, 1890-6. His policy was to unite the Dutch and the British in a self-governing South African Federation which will extend gradually to cover Native territories. He also believed in self-government within the Empire.

so often said, it will be at all possible to grant the prayer of the petitioners, though either petition cannot help [sic] but do good, as they will have paved the way for a discussion of the subject so soon as the Parliaments of the two Colonies meet under Responsible Government.

204. HOME RULE FOR INDIA

Mr. Parekh, the Vice-President of the Indian Home Rule Society, delivered a speech at Newcastle in England to the effect that home rule should be granted to India. He said that India should be given complete independence and that Englishmen should leave the country. The present policy was good for neither the rulers nor the ruled. That policy sometimes vitiated the character of the persons going out to serve in India. It is said that the administration of India is carried on under the direction and control of Parliament; but in reality the authority of Parliament was so limited as to be almost negligible. Since Parliament had no time to listen to the grievances of India’s millions, the bureaucracy there exercised its powers arbitrarily. If home rule was granted, the condition of the people would certainly improve.

The reason why famines continually recur in India is not that there is not enough grain in the country. Where there is scarcity of grain, it is often confined only to particular parts of the country. The reason for countrywide famines, however, is quite different. Grain there is, but the people have not the means of buying it. India suffers from starvation because there is dearth not of grain, but of purchasing power. The Government there does not do its duty by its subjects; and the claim that British rule promotes the common weal has become a sheer pretence and mockery. In the name of justice and for the good of humanity, India must be given home rule.

205. THE CHINESE CAN RETURN

The mine-owners in the Transvaal caused a furore over the notice which the Government intends to put up regarding permission to the Chinese to go back to their country. A public meeting was convened at Boksburg on the 8th instant, and it was demanded of the Government that they should not give the Chinese money to return... home. Similar resolutions were passed, at a meeting in the Market Square, by the Rand Pioneers and the Krugersdorp Chamber of Commerce.

One mine-owner prevented a Government official from putting up the notice on his premises, and filed a test case in the Transvaal High Court. While delivering judgment, the Chief Justice stated that the Government had every right to put up such a notice. The plaintiff’s suit was dismissed with costs; and circulars have been issued asking managers of mines to assist Government officials in putting up the notice in every compound occupied by the Chinese.

206. NATAL SHOPS ACT

The Natal Store Employees’ Association published a long statement in The Advertiser concerning the Act that has been passed regarding the closing time of shops in Natal. We gave a summary of it. We wrote strongly against it in our English section\(^1\) and the Secretary of the Association has replied to that. Apart from showering abuse, he has nothing in particular to say. It is a good thing, he says, that Indians have been forced to submit to the Act, and that they have suffered so much in consequence. There is no doubts he adds, that Indians used to keep the shops open up to 11 in the evening. He is still not able, however, to give any proof of this.

We have again commented\(^2\) on this in the English section above and asked the Secretary to produce evidence in support of his charge.

RICHARD SOLOMON AND LORD SELBORNE ARE TAKING A KEEN INTEREST IN THIS CASE. HARDSHIPS ON THE RAILWAY

The local Chamber of Commerce has protested against the power given to Railway guards to shift passengers about from one compartment to another. As a regulation to that effect will apply to all, the Chamber’s protest will cover Indians automatically. All this has arisen from a minor inconvenience caused to a white passenger. Vehement speeches were made at the Chamber meeting also.

A few days ago, while Mr. Ahmed Surtie of Aliwal North was travelling from Germiston to Park Station, the guard put him to needless trouble. Mr. Surtie complained to the Railway authorities, who replied saying that the guard had been reprimanded. I have already mentioned the interview which the Chairman and the Secretary of the British Indian Association had with the General Manager. Construing our conciliatory attitude as a sign of weakness and taking advantage of it, the General Manager has now gone a step further and says that Indians or other Coloured passengers should not attempt to travel even by the train leaving Pretoria at five o’clock in the afternoon. The Association has expressed its inability to agree to the imposition of this handicap, for, as the five o’clock train is convenient to them, Indians will not give up their right to use it.

THE COMMISSION MEETINGS

The Ridgeway Commission held three meetings at Johannesburg, at which the Progressive Party and the Rand Pioneers-gave evidence. Major Barnett has written to the British Indian Association to say that the Commission will record their evidence when they visit Johannesburg next. Mr. Daniel, too, is trying to get a hearing for his testimony on behalf of the Coloured People’s Association.

UNCLEANLINESS AMONG INDIANS

At the corner of Pioneer and Park Roads in Fordsburg, there is a fruit and vegetable shop owned by an Indian. He was accused of sleeping in the same room where he kept foodstuffs. Giving evidence, the constable said that he saw fruit, bread and vegetable stored in the room in which the accused and another man were sleeping. Furthermore, there was also a bitch with a litter of eight pups in the same room behind a curtain. The shop stank badly. The Court sentenced the store-keeper to a fine of £5 or imprisonment for three weeks. A white showed me the report of the case published in The Star and said, “It is such men as these that do harm to the cause of your countrymen. How can you defend such a man?” I had no defence to offer. I could only hide my face in shame, while taking the newspaper from him.

1 Vide “Johannesburg Letter”, 5-5-1906

THE TRANSVAAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL

The Transvaal Legislative Council will meet on the 25th. The items on its agenda must be important, for this is probably its last session. A new Council is likely to come into existence next year.

THE CHINESE POSTERS

The mine-owners had approached the Supreme Court contesting the order which required a poster to be put up within every mine-compound to say that the cost of returning Chinese indentured labour to their country will be paid. Despite Mr. Leonard’s best efforts in their behalf, the Supreme Court has once again shown its independence and sense of justice. Chief Justice Sir Joyce Rossiness, delivering judgment, said that the Government has full authority to put up such a notice in the mine premises. The Court has dismissed the application of mine-owners with cost, and a notice in Chinese has been put up at every mine. The effect of this now remains to be seen. Some people think that many Chinese will avail themselves of this opportunity and return to their country. Others believe that the notice will have no effect at all. If the number leaving is large, the mine-owners will be very badly affected. Some of them are threatening to close down their mines.

209. AN ASIATIC POLICY

The well-known writer L. E. N. has now finished his able articles contributed to The Rand Daily Mail on Asiatics in the Colonies. He has suggested the following measures for dealing with the question:

1. Keep out masses of Asiatics as permanent residents, as far as possible, at all costs.

2. If indentured labour is needed, insist on repatriation on expiration of contract.

3. Fair, even generous, treatment to those Asiatics who have, under the conditions of the old days, become part of the population of the country.

4. No irritating restrictions on the movements of the temporary visitor or traveller. L. E. N. winds up by saying:

   With such a policy there must be no vexatious restrictions to insult the educated man—things more irritating and harmful than the regulation which quietly keeps out thousands of the poorer class. The cultured traveller of the Eastern world ought not to have to submit to treatment which is not even meted out to a pauper immigrant on a New York quay; he should not have to consent to having his thumb-impressions taken like a criminal or to be threatened, as the extremists of the Transvaal threatened him, with instant removal to a location.

   With a presentment such as this we can heartily agree except in one particular. In fact the policy sketched out by L. E. N. is one that has been accepted by the Indian community. The exception, however, that we have in mind is a very serious one. If indentured labour be introduced from India, whether for the Rand mines or for the plantations of Natal, it should not be subject to the repatriation clause. Had such labour not been introduced, probably the Indian question would never have arisen in South Africa, but if it be considered absolutely essential to the prosperity of any portion of South Africa that indentured Indian labour should be introduced, it is only fair that, after the men have been so introduced, and, in the words of the late Mr. Escombe, have given the best five years of their lives, they should be free to settle in the country and reap the reward of their services by following any honest occupation they may choose. Even the late Sir William Wilson Hunter, who was known for his extreme moderation, and who was always credited with being able to take a sane view of things, did not hesitate to consider the state of indentured labour as “one perilously near slavery”. The least, therefore, that such men are entitled to is freedom of residence in the country which they have served so well. We think, therefore, that L. E. N. would have added greater weight to his contributions had he treated the question of free Indian immigration on its own merits, because such immigration is a matter of Imperial policy, whereas the question of indentured labour is a matter of contract and bargain.

Considerations that guide the examination of the one question do not necessarily apply to that of the other; in South Africa, where both the Transvaal and Natal are largely dependent upon indentured labour, either from India or other parts of Asia, it is extremely necessary to bear this distinction in mind.

210. MOVE FOR SHOP-CLOSING HOURS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Everyone knows that a law requiring shops to be closed at a given hour has already been enacted in Natal. We said earlier that a similar Bill was to be brought before the Cape Legislature. Now comes news from Johannesburg that a like move is afoot in the Transvaal too. There was a meeting of leading Europeans at the Masonic Temple, presided over by Sir George Farrar, and the Mayor of Johannesburg was present. The meeting passed a resolution to say that a law should be enacted requiring shops to be closed at a given hour. Indian merchants should take a hint from this. It would behove us to act of our own accord before a law is passed enjoining us to do so. The store-managers of Natal are trying to show that, in closing shops after being compelled by law to do so, we are doing nothing extraordinary. This is true to some extent. When Indian merchants in Potchefstroom decided to close shops at regular hours, we congratulated them. Our agent, however, informs us that they have reverted to their earlier practice. We are sorry if this is true. We would strongly urge upon the Indian merchants in Potchefstroom as also those in other places that they reach an understanding with white merchants in the matter of closing shops before a law is enacted.

[From Gujarati]

211. POTCHEFSTROOM AND KLERKSDORP

There is at present a trade depression in Potchefstroom. The discrimination that Indians there have to suffer relates in particular to using cabs and visiting public gardens. It is difficult for an Indian to hire a cab readily. There is little chance of securing legal redress in the matter. For when an incident of this nature occurred earlier, the Potchefstroom Municipality framed a bye-law, which is now in force. The remedy about the use of gardens lies in the hands of the Indians themselves. We cannot be legally debarred from visiting the public gardens; and we can institute a case even in a Magistrate’s court and seek redress.

The agreement arrived at by the Indians in Potchefstroom after negotiations with the British traders, regarding the closing of shops at the same time as whites, appears to have been broken. This is not at all proper. The agreement should have been implemented in the same way in which it was negotiated. It should not happen that, because the whites are not fair in their dealings with us, we should also fail to do the right thing.

As between Klerksdorp and Potchefstroom, the Indian stores in the former town excel those in the latter. The Klerksdorp stores are built better and their facades, too, are more pleasing. There is no reason why the same cannot be done in Potchefstroom. Both at Klerksdorp and Potchefstroom, the Indian stores were mostly found to be quite comparable to those of the Europeans in elegance and in other respects; but the backyards and living conditions need improvement. The tenements in the yard should, however, be cleaner and more spacious; and the bathrooms, etc., should also be kept clean.

212. OUR SHORTCOMINGS

The lack of cleanliness among Indians, to which our Johannesburg Correspondent refers, deserves to be pondered over by all of us. If one glances at the newspapers of the last twenty years, one will find that the most serious accusation against Indians has all along been about their uncleanness. In so far as the whites have exaggerated this charge, we have given suitable replies. The case which our Johannesburg Correspondent mentions should, however, put us to shame. That the same room should be used for sleeping and keeping vegetables, bread, etc., is reprehensible. We have nothing to say against the fine imposed by the court. Neither can we say that the offence was unwittingly committed. We want repeatedly to draw the attention of the Indians in South Africa to such incidents. The remedy for this kind of evil should lie in our own hands. It is not enough that we do not commit such offences ourselves; it is our duty to persuade our neighbours, our acquaintances and others whom we can influence to eschew such faults. It would not be thought improper if we appointed committees to bring about reforms in the matter. We believe that this should be the main function of the associations that have been recently founded. We specially invite the attention of the Mahomedan Association and the Hindu Sanatan Dharma Sabha to these matters. Our big merchants, who are the true leaders of the community, can effect many improvements in this respect. To begin with, they can clean up the backyards of their stores and, by so doing, influence the small traders and hawkers.

1 This article was based “On a Visit by Our Special Representative”.

It will not be wrong to say that we have brought upon ourselves certain of these stringent regulations; and if we do not wake up now, late as it is, we shall only meet with greater severity. While talking among ourselves, we compare our position with that of the Jews and say that, though they live in a more slovenly fashion, they do not have to suffer the same inconveniences as we do. This is only a half-truth, and a half-truth is always misleading. There is no doubt that the living habits of poor Jews are worse than ours. But when money comes into their hands, they can make very good use of it. Instead of hoarding wealth, they put it to appropriate use. In Durban, in Johannesburg or in Cape Town, wherever we look, it is quite obvious that the Jews who have made money know how best to spend it; that their houses are very tidy and elegant, and that their standards of life are high. They mix easily with other Europeans and by doing so, they have been able to make so much money that, in Johannesburg, they wield as much influence as the rulers themselves. The richest persons in the world are to be found among the Jews.

It is characteristic of human nature to discover in others the faults which are in oneself, and thus to feel complacent in the belief that others share one’s defects. Men of discernment who are patriotic, and who are moved by the valour of others, should entertain good thoughts, should consider the merits and not the demerits of others, and should try to follow their example and persuade others to do likewise.

213. “THE RAND DAILY MAIL” ON INDIANS

For some weeks past, a writer who signs himself ‘L. E. N.’ has been writing a series of articles on the condition of Indians for The Daily Mail of Johannesburg in South Africa. The concluding article of the series appeared last week. In it the writer has expressed the following views.

1. In so far as it is possible, Asiatics should not henceforth be allowed into South Africa.

2. If Asiatic labour be found necessary, it should be provided for in the contract with them that they would be repatriated to their native country, India or whatever it be.

3. Generous treatment may be given to those Asiatics who have already settled in the country.

4. No restrictions should be imposed on Indians who wish to come on a short visit.

The writer is an influential person and has written in the same strain in several other papers also. One may generally accept all his views excepting that relating to the compulsory repatriation of labour imported under indenture, and, as a matter of fact, we have been making similar demands for some time past.

214. INSTRUCTIONS REGARDING PERMITS FOR CHILDREN

Permits are not at present granted to children under sixteen, but the British Indian Association is active in the matter. In all probability those who are above 12 but under 16 years and have already entered South Africa will not have any difficulty. We therefore request those persons, whose children above the age of 12 are stranded in any of the ports in South Africa, to let us have their names, addresses and other details so that we can send these to the proper quarters.

215. THE QUESTION OF REPATRIATING THE CHINESE

We had earlier told our readers that the British Government had taken up the matter of repatriating the Chinese and that they were also prepared to bear the cost of doing so.¹ This has led to much excitement in the Transvaal, and the white mine-owners are planning, among other things, to send a deputation to England to prevent Chinese repatriation. General Botha has written to the Government saying that the Chinese not only did not desist from acts of violence against Boer farmers but were, in fact, becoming more cruel. The question arises as to how long these outrages will continue. If the Government of the Transvaal and the mine-owners could not stop this outrageous conduct by the Chinese, the Boers would complain to the British Government about it. He further says that, if the Government did not give a satisfactory reply, the Boers would send a deputation to the British Government in order to appeal to them to arrange the repatriation of the Chinese.

216. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

[After May 18, 1906]²

TRAM TEST CASE

The case filed by Mr. Ebrahim Saleji Coovadia against the Johannesburg municipality was heard last Friday the 18th by Mr. Cross, the Magistrate. In his deposition, Mr. Coovadia stated that he was the Treasurer of the British Indian Association and that, when, on April 7, he attempted to board an electric tram, the conductor refused to admit him. The conductor deposed on behalf of the municipality, and with his testimony, the presentation of the municipal case was over. On this occasion, the municipality was represented by Barrister Feetham. On behalf of Mr. Coovadia, Mr. Gandhi was present to brief and assist Mr. Blaine, the Defence[?] Counsel. Arguing the case for the municipality, Mr. Feetham said that, at the time of the outbreak of smallpox in 1897, the Boer Government had issued certain regulations. Under these regulations, Coloured persons could not travel with whites in a tram-car unless they were servants of the latter. As the regulations were then still in force, Indians could not be allowed to travel by trams. The Magistrate, Mr. Cross, did not admit the argument and found that Mr. Coovadia had the right to use the tram under the regulations framed by the municipality in the matter and sentenced the conductor to pay a fine of 5s., or undergo imprisonment for a day in default. The conductor immediately paid the fine.

During the case, it transpired that the Town Council, with a view to thwarting the Indian case, had stated, while taking out a licence, that the trams were for the exclusive use of the whites; and Mr. Feetham was all flushed with triumph when he produced the licence before the court. But, as the Gujarati proverb goes, he who digs a pit for others falls into it himself; the Town Council committed a blunder in producing the licence. For it was found to have been issued four days after the date on which Mr. Coovadia had attempted to board the tram; and Mr. Feetham had to hang his head from shame when he realized the mistake.

Press reporters were present to cover the case, and a fairly full report has appeared in all the local papers. But though the success of the Indians was thus complete, the Town Council has wrested the fruits of victory from their hands. The joy at the court decision on Friday was marred by the regulation issued by the Johannesburg municipality and published in the Government Gazette on Saturday. It simply states that the regulations framed by the municipality in the matter of the tramway have been repealed. There is nothing apparently objectionable in such a regulation; but its legal implications are as follows.

Our plea was that, as the tram regulations of the Johannesburg municipality came after the smallpox regulations, the latter, which were not in consonance with the said municipal regulations, stood abrogated. But the argument of the municipality appears to be that, since the new regulations have now been repealed, the old ones about smallpox come into force again.

This is a clear case of betrayal. This means that we shall have to put up a fresh struggle beginning all over again—which will be both very troublesome and costly. But it has to be undertaken if the Indian community does not want to submit to this defeat.

There is a member of the Town Council named Mr. Lane who asked the Chairman of the Tramways Committee some questions yesterday and wanted to know the expense to which the Town Council put the citizens by fighting law suits of this nature. He also suggested that, if the Council at all cared for its prestige, it should no longer harass Indians.

Lord Selborne’s Reply about Permits

Lord Selborne has replied to the second communication of the British Indian Association. The reply is both brusque and arrogant. Itsays that he is for the present unable to do anything further in the matter of permits. This means that it would be obligatory even for women to take out permits. However, I believe the Indian community will not yield to such a law and His Lordship’s views regarding Indians will not be allowed to prevail.

Malay Location

The owners of the Stands in the Malay Location have decided to send a deputation to Lord Selborne regarding the authority granted to the Town Council to acquire the Location.

The Commission from England

The Indian deputation will appear before the Commission at 3-15 p.m. on Tuesday, the 22nd. An account of what happens there will, if possible, be sent in time for this issue.

Tuesday, May 22, 1906

The Indian Deputation Before the Constitution Committee

The Indian deputation appeared before the Constitution Committee today. It included Mr. Abdul Gani (Chairman), Mr. Haji Ojer Ali, Mr. Ebrahim Saleji Coovadia (Johannesburg), Mr. Ismail Patel (Klerksdorp), Mr. Ibrahim Khota (Heidelberg), Mr. Ibrahim Jasaat (Standerton), Mr. E. M. Patel (Potchefstroom) and Mr. M. K. Gandhi. A telegram was received from Mr. Haji Habib saying that he was prevented from joining the deputation at the last minute owing to pressure of work.

A statement prepared by the deputationists was submitted to the Commission and was hurriedly gone through by the Chairman of that body. He then asked some questions pertaining to it and further invited the delegates to raise any more points if any of them wanted to. In response to this Haji Ojer Ali said that the Indians were more particular about their general rights as British Indians than about the right of franchise; that they were not allowed even to use the trams and had to suffer frequent humiliation.

On the Chairman’s wanting to know more about the problem, Mr. Gandhi gave a full account of the difficulties relating to the use of trams and added that there was another difficulty which caused greater harassment to the Indians: they were not only denied the right to purchase land, but they could not hold it in their own names even for religious purposes. Constant difficulties were experienced in the matter of transferring such lands in Pretoria, Johannesburg, Heidelberg and other places. It was a gross injustice to seek to place Indians in the same class as the Kaffirs. There were a number of laws in the Transvaal in which the term “Native” did not cover the Indian.

After this, the Chairman of the Commission asked the deputationists to send to the Secretary in writing all the details about the problems of trams as also whatever additional information they wanted to give, so that the Commission might consider them. The deputation then withdrew.

Lord Sandhurst, who was formerly Governor of Bombay, then came out and made casual inquiries about Bombay, etc., adding that he liked Bombay very much and would like to go there again.

Next week I shall send the statement submitted to the Commission.

217. LETTER TO “TRANSVAAL LEADER”

Johannesburg, May 21, 1906

TO

The Editor

Transvaal Leader

[JOHANNESBURG]

SIR,

May I say with reference to your leader on the tram-car case, brought at the instance of the British Indian Association, that the magistrate’s decision does not “throw open the trams to Coloured persons of every grade”. For instance, it does not throw open the cars to the Natives, and it leaves untouched the regulation which enables conductors to reject passengers who are drunken, ill-dressed or otherwise objectionable. So that when you say that your “remarks are directed to the matter in its broadest aspects”, you give away the case for the Council. For nobody has ever contended that the cars should be usable by all without distinction.

1 This was published under the caption “Tram Case”.
But, Sir, the Town Council, by a method which is the reverse of honourable, has deprived the Indians of the fruits of their victory. For, in the current number of the Government Gazette, there appears a by-law which repeals the Traffic By-laws regarding tram-cars. This means that the tram-cars are now to run without any regulations to control the traffic on them. But it means too that now it will not be possible for a British Indian to claim to ride in the municipal cars under the general by-laws. And, I expect, the municipality will contend that the repeal revives the smallpox regulations of the old Government which the magistrate held to be not applicable in the face of the by-laws now repealed. Britishers are rightly proud of the fact that they never hit below the belt. With great deference, it appears to me, as it would, I hope, to every other ratepayer, that the Town Council, in adopting the above procedure, has departed from that proud tradition.

Consequent upon the Town Council’s action then, for the timebeing, your fear as to the tram-cars being used by “Coloured persons of every grade” are groundless, apart from the facts submitted by me. I, however, ask you whether you approve of the means adopted by the Town Council to achieve its purpose.

I am, etc.,

M. K. GANDHI

218. EMPIRE DAY

On Thursday last, throughout the Empire, the birthday of the late Queen-Empress was celebrated. As the years roll on, the memory of that noble lady remains as fresh as ever. Her interest in India and its people was intense, and in return, she received the whole-hearted affection of India’s millions. Her late Majesty showed her interest in and toleration for the religions of India, when she had the whole of the Proclamation of 1858 re-written, because of an unwarranted reference to the power the Government possessed of undermining native religions and customs. In her letter to Lord Derby1, the Queen wrote:

Such a document should breathe feelings of generosity, benevolence, and religious toleration, and point out the privileges which the Indians will receive in being placed on an equality with the subjects of the British Crown, and the prosperity following in the train of civilization.

1 Edward Stanley Derby, (1799-1869), Prime Minister of England, 1852, 1856 and 1866
These were the principles on which the Empire’s foundation was laid. Expansion of trade and the acquisition of territory are not the only things true Imperialists aim at. There is a greater and a nobler ideal to work for: that of producing, as John Ruskin puts it, “as many as possible full-breathed, bright-eyed, and happy-hearted human creatures”. We would place this ideal before our South African public men, and ask them to put away the feelings of race hatred and colour distinction. The great British Empire has not risen to its present proud position by methods of oppression, nor is it possible to hold that position by unfair treatment of its loyal subjects. British Indians have always been most devoted to their Sovereign, and the Empire has lost nothing by including them among its subjects. India is a vast storehouse of wealth to Great Britain, whilst thousands of its inhabitants are dying of starvation with scarcely a murmur. We venture to suggest that, if there were more of Queen Victoria’s spirit of enlightenment put into the affairs of the Empire, we should be worthier followers of so great an Empire-builder.

219. A RAILWAY GRIEVANCE ON THE N. G. R.

A correspondent writes a letter to us in Gujarati, of which the following is a translation:

By the train that left Durban at 6 p.m. on the 1st of May, 1906, an Indian gentleman, by name Mr. Kundanlal Shivlal Maharaj, took a second-class ticket for Ennersdale from Estcourt. He occupied a seat in a reserved compartment. But there being many second-class white passengers, Mr. Kundanlal was forced by the Station Master to leave his compartment, and go to a third-class one.

Our correspondent adds that this matter has been already brought by the aggrieved passenger to the notice of the General Manager. We hope that the complaint will be thoroughly investigated. There appears to be no reason to justify the alleged action of the Station Master at Estcourt.

220. THE NATAL LAND ACT

We are likely to be saved incidentally because of the whites this year as we were last year. We earlier published the news that, among the new Bills to be introduced in the Natal Parliament, one would

1 Natal Government Railways relate to a new tax on land. That Bill was introduced, but, during examination by Committee, it was rejected. Mr. Rethman, a member of Parliament, moved that it should be rejected saying that, if it were passed, it would mean great loss to the people living beyond the Railway limits. The motion was passed, and the Natal Government sustained a defeat. This has created a situation in which the Ministry should normally resign; but they have not done so and have stayed on in office. However, the Land Tax Bill will remain in abeyance for the present. What will happen next remains to be seen, though there is reason to hope that the Bill will not be passed during the current session.

221. A SIGN OF CHINESE AWAKENING

There is an island to the east of China named Weihaiwei. This island was given by the Chinese Government to the British Government on certain conditions, one of them being that the whites could occupy the island as long as Port Arthur was in Russian possession. Now, since Russia has been obliged to vacate Port Arthur, as a result of the Russo-Japanese War, China has asked Britain to quit Weihaiwei. China refuses to pay the large expenditure incurred by Great Britain on the island. There is a likelihood of serious trouble arising out of this situation which may involve the Governments of China, Germany1 and England.

222. THE YELLOW PERIL

We have already published the news that some Japanese people are on a visit to Australia. Though they are treated with all courtesy, inwardly the Australian feeling appears to be anti-Japanese. It is said on the strength of a cablegram from Melbourne that the Australians rejected the invitation from the Japanese Naval Officer to visit a fighter vessel, for, according to the former Defence Minister of Australia, they could not trust the Japanese. The Minister fears that Japan might some day try to take possession of Australia. It appears from the leading journals of Australia that this view is held by many people there.

223. WEALTHY AMERICANS

It is well known that America has a large number of wealthy persons. Generally speaking, the people of Europe are found to be foremost in amassing fortunes. With the help of new inventions and technology, the people of Europe see to it that the world market does not go out of their hands. Despite this, it would not be wrong to say that Europe lags far behind America in the race for wealth. There are, of course, some reasons for this. The people there are caught in the spell of money more than the Europeans, and it has been found that, once large quantities of wealth accumulate, they tend to go on increasing. This becomes understandable if a long-range view is taken. Now, some of these Americans have grown so inordinately rich—so we learn from a speech by President Roosevelt, the Head of the United States—that it will not be improper to enact a law enabling the State to limit this acquisition of wealth. He said that one might not think it wrong for a man to own one or two million pounds; but that hoarded fortunes have so exceeded this volume and so spread in extent that there is a large number of Americans who have a hundred times this sum. These multi-millionaires, President Roosevelt has found, might some day influence State authority. With the power of their money they can influence, as they deem fit, such institutions of the State as courts of justice, and elections to a municipality or the Senate. Such a development, it is felt, will be dangerous, and limiting by law the accumulation of wealth is contemplated. An individual may not hold more than £10,000,000 and whatever he may have in excess, he must distribute as he likes among his relatives and others. These thoughts of President Roosevelt have greatly perturbed American multi-millionaires.

224. CHANGES IN THE CONDITION OF CHINA

It cannot be gainsaid that civilization is spreading day by day. Few can be ignorant of the effect produced on India by European civilization. This march of civilization has received a new impetus from the progress made by Japan, which has attracted the attention of the whole world. Wherever we go, we hear Japan being discussed. It is clear that in the circumstances, European civilization should influence China, a neighbour of Japan.

This civilization is burgeoning everywhere in China. On the one hand, thanks to the Japanese living in China, the attention of the people is drawn to education; on the other, hundreds of young Chinese go to foreign countries to learn the various arts and sciences. Some Chinese students have gone to Japan for all kinds of study, and others have gone as far as America for the same purpose. These students not only acquire proficiency in the arts and sciences, but the noteworthy thing is that they also bring home with them new ideas from America, Japan and Europe. The spirit of freedom blowing through those lands has thoroughly permeated their youthful blood. These students return home and lend their energies to promoting the progress of China.

By holding meetings and making speeches at various places, they have begun to impress their ideas upon people’s minds. They start new journals and send out men in all directions to propagate their ideas. Thus, they educate the people in a number of ways and sow the seeds of freedom and ideas of reform in their minds. Neither do they appear to have left political reform out of their list. They are carrying on an agitation to keep foreigners out of their country, and this has set the white nations a-thinking. That the boycott of American goods is spreading with more or less success in some parts of the country is also due to these new ideas. In this agitation, some Japanese, too, are taking a leading part.

It is natural that everyone who desires the growth of civilization should welcome these signs of progress. Yet, there are some Europeans who say that this enthusiasm has exceeded the limits of propriety and is likely to lead the people astray, and that it should therefore be kept under restraint. With this end in view, a writer has suggested that the Chinese Government should be persuaded to bring under control, and if possible eliminate, those journals which spread undesirable ideas and incite people to harmful acts.

225. THE PRINCE OF WALES’ VISIT TO INDIA

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and his Consort have returned to England after their visit to India. A very big reception was held in London to welcome them. The speech made by the Prince on the occasion deserves to be noted. He expressed his thanks to the people of India and praised their loyalty. Concluding, he said:

I believe that, if we show more sympathy for the people while carrying on the administration of India, it will be easy to rule that country, and I am sure that we shall be amply rewarded. Every Briton going to India can help to bring about better understanding between that country and England, and spread goodwill and a feeling of brotherhood.

It is necessary to understand the true significance of this speech. It shows us that the Prince has a kind heart and much sympathy for Indians. He has noticed the hardships we are made to suffer and, since he cannot directly intervene in matters of administration, he has no more than hinted that the Indian officials in India should think twice before resorting to any harsh measures in dealing with Indians. Mr. John Morley, Secretary of State for India, has endorsed the Prince’s speech. We have reason, therefore, to hope that some relief will soon be forthcoming to the people of India.

226. DISCRIMINATION AGAINST INDIANS IN BASUTOLAND

227. CHINESE LABOURERS

We mentioned earlier that General Botha had addressed a letter to the Transvaal Government regarding the outrageous behaviour of Chinese labourers towards Boer farmers.\(^1\) Thanking him for the letter, Sir Richard Solomon has expressed his regret for the cruel deeds of the Chinese. He has promised to ask the mine-owners to ensure that the Chinese are unable to obtain explosive materials, and that every effort will be made to improve the conduct of the Chinese. He sincerely hopes that atrocities of this kind will cease when the recommendations regarding stricter regulation of the working conditions of the Chinese are implemented.

228. THE SHOPS CLOSING ACT

In the Natal Parliament, Mr. Rethman moved an amendment to the Shops Closing Act, enabling the rural areas to fix any day of their choice for a half-holiday. To this, the Natal Government replied that no changes in the Act were contemplated for at least a year. From this, it would appear that a change of some kind in the law would ultimately be effected.

229. THE NATAL SMALLPOX ACT

We have earlier reproduced the provisions of this Act in this journal. We have also mentioned the protest of the whites against the stringency of the Act. This matter has attracted much attention and is being widely discussed.

The opponents of vaccination say that it cannot be asserted that, by getting oneself vaccinated against smallpox, one will become absolutely immune to the disease. Not only this, vaccination has often done harm also. Instances are known of small children who were found to have contracted syphilis after vaccination. Besides, one strange instance was cited of a child who, because of vaccination, did not at all grow physically for several years. On the strength of several such examples, the opponents of the Vaccination Act say that they cannot believe that any benefit is to be had from vaccination. They therefore desire that a “conscience clause” be added to the provisions of the Act to say that the Smallpox Act will not apply to persons who declare on oath before a magistrate that they conscientiously object to vaccination. There is such a provision in the British law also. The whites are holding meetings and carrying on heated discussions to secure the adoption of a similar clause here. As a result of all this, the clause may be added.

Looking at the matter from the Indian standpoint—quite apart from whether vaccination does good or harm—one fact is certain that, if the proposed clause is not added, some Indians may have to suffer some ill-treatment.

230. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

May 26, 1906

LORD SELBORNE’S REPLY REGARDING PERMITS

To the communication that the British Indian Association had again addressed him, Lord Selborne has replied saying that for the present he has nothing more to add to his previous answer. This means that women will have to take out permits and that only children under twelve will be able to enter.

THE REMEDY

This reply will cause much disappointment. However, women need not take out separate permits but the struggle about children should continue.

THE REQUEST OF THE BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION

The Association has addressed a letter to Mr. Chamney, the Registrar, demanding that permission should at least be granted to the boys who are twelve years old and are waiting at various ports to enter the Transvaal. The Association says that the number of such boys is not likely to exceed a hundred.

AN IMPORTANT PERMIT CASE

While official pressure is thus being exerted against us, the law is in our favour. There is a boy under 12, named Adam Ebrahim, whose father is at Johannesburg. He has come with a “Letter of Notification”. He has not yet got a permit. He has not been to Pretoria. Meanwhile, he was charged with failure to take out a £3 register and the case was heard by Mr. Cross yesterday. Mr. Gandhi, who appeared on behalf of the boy, pleaded that it was not necessary for children to take out such a register in any case not for a person who did not himself carry on a trade. The Magistrate admitted the plea and dismissed the case.

THE CONSEQUENCE OF THE CASE

If no appeal is preferred against the Magistrate’s decision, it will mean that, for boys who are already in the Transvaal, there will be no difficulty in remaining there even without a permit or a register. Really speaking, the decision in the case does not give a ruling about permits; but it can be so construed by implication. It may perhaps be necessary to have a test case about permits for children.

THE TRAM CASE

The discussion on the matter is still going on. The Town Council has not yet answered the question put to it by Mr. Lane. Mr. Gandhi has addressed a letter on the subject to the Leader to the following effect.¹

You say that the Magistrate’s decision is unsatisfactory, because it would enable a person, however unclean, to travel by a tram and that even the Kaffirs would be able to do so. But the Magistrate’s decision is quite different. The Court has declared that the Kaffirs have no legal right to travel by the trams. And, according to tram regulations, those in an unclean dress or in a drunken state are prohibited from boarding a tram. Thanks to the Court’s decision, only clean Indians or Coloured people other than Kaffirs can now travel by the trams.

But even this victory that we have achieved has been snatched away from us by the Council in an indecent manner. For, while the Magistrate gave his decision on Friday, on Saturday appeared the news in the Government Gazette that the Town Council had withdrawn the tram regulations. This means that an Indian will no more be able to file a suit under the bye-laws; and the Council may perhaps be under the impression that the Smallpox Act of 1897 will now apply to Indians.

It has been a common belief that the British people never stab any one in the back. But I feel—and other tax-payers must also feel the same—that the Town Council has stabbed the Indian community in the back. You express sorrow at the decision in the case; but, even apart from the instances mentioned by me, there is nothing to be sorry for, at least for the present. But do you approve of the crooked way in which the Council has brought about this result?

Now commences the third stage of the tram case.

RAILWAY HARDSHIPS

Disabilities on the railways have ever been troubling us. As I said earlier, the General Manager had written to say that Coloured people might not travel even by the 5-5 afternoon train from Pretoria to Johannesburg. To the Association’s protest against this, the General Manager has now replied saying that the restrictions against the non-whites with regard to that train will be relaxed. The same relaxation has now been asked for in regard to the train leaving Johannesburg at 4-30 in the afternoon. Even if a favourable reply to this is received, the prohibition against travelling by the morning train between Pretoria and Johannesburg will continue for the present.

THE DEPUTATION TO ENGLAND

Letters were addressed to Sir William Wedderburn and other well-wishers of ours, inquiring whether or not we should send a deputation to England. Sir William has sent a cablegram in reply, asking us to wait till his letter reaches us. We expect to get the letter by June 15.

AN INDIAN MURDERED

Today’s papers report the murder of an Asiatic, named Hyder, last night by an unknown person near Cleveland Station. He seems to have been stabbed with a dagger. It is not known who committed the crime and why. The papers report that Hyder was poor and in search of employment.

NEW LOCATION FOR KAFFIRS

Preparations are being made to transfer the Kaffirs quickly to Klipspruit. The municipality has even framed the regulations in that regard. It is, however, reported that the Kaffirs, instead of going to the Location, continue to stay on with their masters in the town, though some of them have acquired land in the Location.

NEW LAW FOR THE MUNICIPALITY

The Johannesburg municipality wants a new law to be passed during the current session of the legislature. It has asked for, among other things, authority to provide for Asiatic Bazaars also.

231. LETTER TO LAKSHMIDAS GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,

May 27, 1906

RESPECTED BROTHER,

I have your letter of the 17th April. I do not know what to say. You are prejudiced against me. There is no remedy against prejudice. I am helpless. I can only reply to your letter in full.

1. I have no idea of separating from you.
2. I claim nothing there.
3. I do not claim anything as mine.
4. All that I have is being utilized for public purposes.
5. It is available to relations who devote themselves to public work.
6. I could have satisfied your desire for money if I had not dedicated my all for public use.

I have never said that I have done much for brothers or other relations. I gave them all that I could save; and this I have mentioned not out of pride, and only to friends.

Rest assured that I will cheerfully assume the burden of supporting the family in case you pass on before me. You need have no fear on that score.

I am not now in a position to send you money as you desire. It is well if Harilal is married; it is also well if he is not. For the present at any rate I have ceased to think of him as a son.

I am willing to go to India to attend Mani’s wedding if at all possible. But I cannot give you any idea of my present condition. I am so hard pressed for time that I scarcely know what to do. Please cable the date of marriage, so that if possible I might hold myself in readiness to go.

I might perhaps inform you that I am in debt to Revashankarbhai.

1 The letter was translated from Gujarati by V. G. Desai who tells us that it was revised by Gandhiji himself.
You may repudiate me, but still I will be to you what I have always been.

I do not remember that I expressed a desire to separate from you when I was there. But even if I did, my mind is now quite clear, my aspirations are higher and I have no desire for worldly enjoyments of any type whatever.

I am engaged in my present activities as I look upon them as essential to life. If I have to face death while thus engaged, I shall face it with equanimity. I am now a stranger to fear.

I like those who are pure in heart. Young Kalyandas, Jagmohandas’s son, is like Prahlad in spirit. He is therefore dearer to me than one who is a son because so born.

232. STATEMENT PRESENTED TO CONSTITUTION COMMITTEE

[JOHANNESBURG, May 29, 1906]

WHITE PREDOMINANCE

(1) The British Indian Association has always admitted the principle of white predominance and has, therefore, no desire to press, on behalf of the community it represents, for any political rights for the sake of them. But past experience shows that in a Colony enjoying self-government, communities that have no voice in the choice of representatives have been very largely neglected.

HISTORY OF BOER ANTI-INDIAN LEGISLATION

(2) There is in the Transvaal, at the present moment, an estimated population of over 12,000 British Indians. Before war, the adult Indian population was 15,000.

(3) The first Indian settlers found their way into the Transvaal in the early eighties.

(4) They were then free from restrictions of any kind whatsoever.

(5) But by their successful enterprise, they aroused the jealousy of white traders and soon there sprang up an anti-Indian agitation

1 This along with the addenda was presented to the Constitution Committee. Vide “Johannesburg Letter”, After 18-5-1906 initiated by chambers of commerce wherein the British element was predominant.

(6) As a result, the Government of the late President Kruger approached Her late Majesty’s Government for permission to pass legislation restrictive of the liberty of British Indians. They proposed to interpret the term, “Natives”, occurring in the London Convention, to include Asiatics.

(7) This contention Her Majesty’s advisers rejected but they were not unwilling, for “sanitary reasons”, to sanction legislation restricting Asiatics as to their residence to Bazaars or Locations with the proviso that British Indians of the trader class should be left entirely free.

(8) As a result of these negotiations, Law 3 of 1885 as amended in 1886 was passed.

(9) Immediately it became known, a strong protest went up from British Indians.

(10) It was then realized that the Law was, contrary to the expectations of Her late Majesty’s Government, sought to be enforced against all British Indians.

(11) Then followed a series of strong representations by Her late Majesty’s Government, addressed to the late Boer Government, culminating in the matter being submitted to the arbitration of the then Chief Justice of the Orange River Colony.

(12) Between 1885 and 1895, therefore, the Law 3 of 1885 practically remained a dead letter, although the Boer Government always threatened to enforce it.

(13) The award of the arbitrator did not define the legal position. But it left the question of interpretation of Law 3 of 1885 to the Courts of the late Republic.

(14) British Indians again appealed to the British Government for protection.

(15) Mr. Chamberlain, whilst he declined to disturb the award, did not abandon the case for the Indian subjects of Her late Majesty. In his dispatch dated the 4th September 1895, he stated:

In conclusion, I would say, that whilst desirous loyally to abide by the award, and to allow it to close the legal and international question in dispute between the two Governments, I reserve to myself the liberty later on to make friendly representations to the South African Republic as to the traders, and possibly to invite the Government to consider whether, when once its legal position has been made good, it would not be wise to review the situation from a new point of view, and decide whether it would not be better in the interests of its own burghers to treat the Indians more generously, and to free itself from even the appearance of countenancing a trade jealousy which, I have some reason to believe, does not emanate from the governing class in the Republic.

This was in 1895.

(16) Owing, then, to such representations, which continued up to the time of the war, the Law in question was never effectively enforced, and Indians traded and lived where they liked, in spite of the prohibition contemplated by it.

(17) But an enforcement of the Law being imminent in 1899, it was, among other things, a subject for discussion at the Bloemfontein Conference, which preceded the war. The subject was considered so important by Lord Milner that, when the question of franchise to the Uitlanders seemed to admit of a settlement, Lord Milner cabled that the question of the status of coloured British subjects was still outstanding.

(18) Lord Lansdowne declared that it was a contributory cause of war.

(19) At the close of the war, and at the time of the Vereeniging compact, His Majesty’s Government informed the Boer representatives that the status of Coloured persons should be the same in the two Colonies as at the Cape.

THE POSITION TODAY

(20) But today the position is worse than before war.

(21) The Progressive party, from which at least Indians as fellow-loyalists and fellow-sufferers before war may claim a fair measure of justice, has stated it as an item of its programme that the liberty of British Indians should be specifically restricted. If its desires were carried out, the position, bad as it is today, would be much worse then.

(22) From the Dutch party, it is now impossible to expect any measure of reasonableness.

(23) Under Responsible Government, then, British Indians and others similarly situated, unless they are specially protected, stand practically little chance of justice being done to them.

REMEDY

(24) It would, therefore, seem that the granting of the franchise to British Indians would be the most natural means of protecting their interests.

(25) It has been urged that the treaty of Vereeniging precludes the possibility of any such provision being made.

(26) But it is respectfully submitted that the term “Natives”, whatever else it may mean, can never include British Indians.

(27) The Statute-book of the Colony is replete with laws which deal with the “Natives”, but which admittedly do not apply to Asiatics or British Indians.

(28) The fact that Law 3 of 1885 deals specially with Asiatics and does not apply to the “Natives” shows, too, that the Transvaal laws have almost invariably distinguished between “Natives” and “Asiatics”.

(29) Indeed, whereas Natives can, owing to the meaning that the term has borne, hold landed property in the Transvaal, Asiatics cannot.

(30) Thus, therefore, so far as the Vereeniging compact is concerned, there appears to be no justification whatever for depriving the Indians of the franchise.

(31) But the Committee of the British Indian Association is well aware of the almost unanimous hostility of white races against provision being made in the Constitution for a grant of the franchise to British Indians.

(32) If, therefore, such a grant be considered impossible, it is absolutely essential that, apart from the orthodox reservatory clause as to the power of veto over all class legislation, there should be a special clause which shall be a living reality, and which, instead of being exercised only on the rarest occasions, should ensure the fullest protection to the British Indian settlers as to their right to own landed property, freedom of movement, and freedom of trade, subject to such safeguards of a general nature as may be considered necessary, and are made applicable to all, irrespective of race or colour.

(33) Then, and only then, will it be possible, apart from the inherent right that every British subject should have to ordinary civil rights in British dominions, for His Majesty’s advisers to redeem the promises specifically made to British Indians as to their status in the Transvaal.

(34) Much of what has been stated above applies to the position of British Indians in the Orange River Colony.

(35) There the Indian has no rights, save as a domestic servant. An elaborate anti-Asiatic law deprives him of practically all civil liberty.

APPENDIX A

For authorities in support of the facts cited in the foregoing statement, the Deputation beg to refer the Constitution Committee to the following:

2. Transvaal Green Book, No. 2 of 1894.
5. Laws and Volksraad Resolutions, & c., relating to “Natives and Coolies” (a separate Government publication).

APPENDIX B

The following is a comparison of the position of British Indians in the Transvaal under Boer and under British rule.

registration fees from Indian women and require them to take out permits.

(3) Landed property could be held in the names of Europeans.

(4) Indians held 99 years’ lease for landed property in Location or bazaar in Johannesburg.

(5) No separate inquisitorial Asiatic Department.

(6) Many harsh legislative restrictions allowed to remain inoperative owing largely to British intervention.

(3) The law against Asiatics holding real property strictly enforced, even in cases where land is required for religious purposes.

(4) These leases have been expropriated under the Insanitary Area Commissioner’s Report, without the owners receiving equal title elsewhere in Johannesburg in a suitable position.

(5) Office of Registrar of Asiatics established; is arbitrary in procedure and delays the settlement of individual applications, permits, etc.

(6) Inoperative Boer enactments brought into force, and rendered more stringent by Ordinances or Executive Orders, and British Indians offensively classed in legislation with Kaffirs, savages, and semi-civilised races.

The following addendum was prepared at the instance of the Constitution Committee.

CIVIL DISABILITIES

I. The Commissioners seem to be under the impression that British Indians have full rights in the Transvaal.

II. Unfortunately, as will appear from the schedule attached to the statement, British Indians have very few civil rights; we venture to recapitulate the civil disabilities:

NO OWNERSHIP OF LAND

III. (1) British Indians cannot own landed property, including even long leases, except in Locations or streets set apart for them.

(2) There are no streets set apart, but there are Locations far away from town, like the Continental Ghettos. And in these, too, except in one or two places, Indians are only monthly squatters. In Pretoria and Potchefstroom alone do they receive twenty-one years’ leases. In Germiston, they have even received notices not to receive any tenants on their Stands. The notice reads as follows:

You are hereby notified that you are not permitted to sublet rooms to natives or others. Such subletting to any person is a breach of the contract under which you are allowed to hold a stand, and renders you liable to have your stand permit cancelled, and yourself expelled from this location.

3) So much is this prohibition carried out in practice that Indians are unable to have their mosques transferred in the names of Indian trustees.

Registration Fee

(4) Indians have to pay a registration fee of £3 on arrival in this country. The Government has now threatened even to require women and children to take out registration certificates.

Foot-Paths and Tramways

(5) Indians in Pretoria and Johannesburg are prohibited by law from walking on the foot-paths. They, however, do make use of them on sufferance. An attempt was only recently made to prevent them from using the foot-paths.

(6) Indians are not allowed to make use of the tram-cars in Pretoria.

(7) They are prevented in Johannesburg from riding in the ordinary cars but special trailer cars are occasionally run for Coloured people.

(8) It was contended on behalf of the Indians that, under the ordinary by-laws, they could insist on riding in the tram-cars. The Town Council opposed the contention on the ground that certain smallpox regulations that were promulgated by the late Dutch Government in 1897 were still in force. The matter was twice tested before the Magistrate at Johannesburg and, each time, the Town Council lost. It has, therefore now met the Indians by cancelling, the by-laws regulating the traffic on the tram-cars. In order to gain its end, the Town Council is now running the Municipal cars without any by-laws whatsoever. Whether under the common law Indians will be able now to make good their right or not is an open question.

It is worthy of note that the above-mentioned cancelling by-law was surreptitiously published in the following manner:

Prior to the 9th May, 1906, in accordance with Section 22 of Proclamation 16 of 1901, a notice had been published in a newspaper circulating in the Municipality, setting forth the general purport of these proposed amendments and stating that they were open to inspection at the office of the Council.

On the 9th inst., a meeting of the Town Council was held. The notice was apparently advertised in such a manner as to render it almost a matter of impossibility for parties concerned to challenge the proposed amendments, owing chiefly to the fact that no report of them had appeared in the ordinary columns of the newspapers, and to the further fact that, as will be seen, the proposal came through the Works Committee, instead of the Tramways and Lighting Committee, which would ordinarily concern itself with Tramways Regulations as it has done in the past.

On the occasion of the aforesaid Council meeting, the Works Committee brought forward the proposed amendment on the following pretext:

Since the Tramway System was taken over by the Municipal Council, the Traffic Bye-laws applicable to tram-cars are no longer required as they were only intended for application to private tram-cars. It is proposed, therefore, that the Bye-laws should be amended accordingly.

The proposals were submitted at the end of a long agenda, when even the most vigilant Councillor might have been lulled into a sense of security, especially in view of the seemingly innocuous nature of the preamble and passed without comment. A notice appeared in the Government Gazette of the 18th inst., adopting the proposed cancelling bye-law, and giving it the force of law. The whole matter, therefore, was settled practically behind the backs of the British Indians within a period of nine days, for all practical purposes, without warning.

(9) Attempt is now being made to expropriate what is known as the Malay Location in Johannesburg, which has a large Indian population, and to send the Indians to a place thirteen miles away from Johannesburg.

PERMIT ORDINANCE

(10) Whereas formerly Indians were free to immigrate into the Transvaal, at present the Peace Preservation Ordinance, which is purely a political law, is being wrested from its legitimate purpose to prevent Indians from entering the Transvaal. Not only are new Indians being prevented from entering the country, but the following exceptional hardships are imposed on all residents of the Transvaal:

(a) There are no published regulations regarding the administration of the Ordinance.

(b) It changes according to the whims or prejudices of the officials administering it. The following is, therefore, the practice in vogue today:

(i) Indians, who were in the Transvaal before war and who paid £3 for registration, are prevented from returning, unless they can prove absolutely that they left on the outbreak of hostilities.
(ii) Those who are allowed to enter the Transvaal have to put their thumb-impressions upon their applications, as also upon their permits, and they are required to put them each time they enter the Transvaal. This is applicable to all Indians without regard to their position and without regard to the fact whether they can sign their names in English or not. An England-returned Indian gentleman, who speaks English well, and who is a very well-known merchant, was twice obliged to put his thumb-impression.

(iii) Wives and children under twelve years of such Indians are now required to take out separate permits.

(iv) Children, twelve years old or over, of such Indians are not allowed to join or accompany their parents.

(v) Indian merchants are not allowed to import any trustworthy clerks or managers, unless the latter are themselves such as fall within the first clause hereinbefore referred to.

(vi) Even those who are allowed to enter have to wait for months before they are permitted to enter the country.

(vii) Even temporary permits are refused to Indians of respectability. Mr. Suliman Manga, who is studying for the bar in London, wishing to pass through the Transvaal on his way to Delagoa Bay, was refused a permit when his case was considered as of a British subject. When it became known that he was a Portuguese subject, for fear, evidently, of international complications, he was granted a temporary permit.

(viii) Such is the terrible position of British Indians who are resident in the Transvaal. It is growing daily worse, and unless the Imperial Government is willing and ready to protect them, the ultimate result can only be slow extinction.

WHAT EUROPEANS WILL DO.

(11) The following facts will shew what the Europeans of the Transvaal will do, if they are left to themselves:

(a) The National Convention, which specially met to consider the Asiatic question, passed the following resolutions:

(1st) That having regard to the preponderance of the native races in this country, the difficulties surrounding the settlement of native policy, the necessity for protecting the existing European population and encouraging further European immigration, this Convention affirms the principle that Asiatic immigration should be prohibited except under the provisions of the Labour Importation Ordinance.

(2nd) That this Convention, having regard to the importance of arriving at a permanent and conclusive settlement of the whole question and preventing any further attempts to reopen the matter, recommends that the Government be invited to take into consideration the advisability of removing into bazaars all Asiatic traders, compensation being provided for such as may have vested interests which have been legally acquired prior to the war.

(3rd) That this Convention, recognising the grave danger resulting from the continued issue of trading licences to Asiatics permitting trade outside bazaars, requests the Government to take immediate steps to pass the necessary legal enactments to prevent any further issue of such licences and that with regard to the appointment of any proposed Commission to deal with the Asiatic question, this Convention urges upon the Government the necessity for including therein men, other than officials, with a thorough knowledge of existing conditions in South Africa.

(4th) That this Convention affirms its opinion that all Asiatics should be required to reside in bazaars.

(b) The following is the declared policy of the Progressive party:

The restriction of immigration of Asiatics into the Transvaal, except in the case of indentured labourers who are subject to repatriation at the expiration of their contract, and the regulation of Asiatic trading licences.

(c) The people of Potchefstroom once met together, created a disturbance, and even broke the windows of Indian stores.

(d) The Europeans of Boksburg wish to remove Indians from their present Location, which they occupied before war, to a site far away from town where trade is utterly impossible, and they have more than once threatened to use physical force should an Indian attempt to open a store outside the Location.

PAST EXPERIENCE—A PARALLEL

(12) In the main statement, the Deputation have urged that past experience shows that the deprivation of the franchise and the orthodox power of veto have been totally inadequate to protect Indians.

(13) We will venture now to give instances:

In Natal, after the grant of Responsible Government, Indians were virtually deprived of the franchise. The late Sir John Robinson, in supporting the Bill, said that, by disfranchising Indians, every member of the Natal Parliament became a trustee for Indians.¹

Soon after the Bill became an Act of Parliament the trust was thus discharged:

(a) An annual poll-tax of £3 was imposed on all indentured Indians, who entered after its promulgation, to be payable on the termination of their indentures, unless they returned to India or re-indentured themselves.

(b) An Immigration Restriction Act was passed prohibiting all who did not possess a knowledge of one of the European languages from entering Natal unless they were formerly domiciled in the Colony.

(c) A Dealers’ Licenses Act was passed with absolute powers to the Town Councils or Licensing Boards to control trade licences. It ousts the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Ostensibly applying to all traders, it is enforced only against Indians. And under it, no Indian, however, well established, is ever secure as to his license from year’s end to year’s end.

Against all this legislation, the Imperial Government has felt powerless to protect British Indians.

THE UNIQUE POSITION IN THE TRANSVAAL AND THE ORANGE RIVER COLONY

(14) Whether Indians are granted the franchise under the Constitution or not, a special clause protecting vested interests is absolutely necessary.

(15) No Colony on the eve of receiving self-government has presented the features that the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies present.

(16) All the causes for which the war took place have not been removed. Anti-Indian legislation of the Transvaal was one of the causes.

(17) Promise made by the Home Government that Indians and other Coloured people in the two Colonies should be treated the same way as those at the Cape has not yet been redeemed.

(18) Negotiations were actually pending between the Home Government and the Local Governments as to the removal of the disabilities of British Indians when His Majesty’s new Ministers decided to grant Responsible Government to the two Colonies, and the negotiations have, therefore, been suspended or dropped altogether.

¹ Vide “The Plague”, 9-7-1903
(19) The position at the Cape is that Indians have equal rights with the Europeans, i.e.,

(a) They have the same franchise rights as the Europeans.
(b) They are under the same Immigration Restriction Act as the Europeans.
(c) They have equal rights with the latter to hold landed property and to trade.
(d) They have full freedom of locomotion from place to place. Dated at Johannesburg this 29th day of May 1906.

233. INDIAN PASSENGERS

Of late our Gujarati correspondence columns have been full of complaints from Indian deck-passengers who so largely patronise the steamers of the German East Africa Company. Our correspondents have complained of over-crowding, insufficient sanitary arrangements, and general want of consideration for deck-passengers. Some of them state that the passengers are very much inconvenienced whenever the steamers touch any port. They are then without any cover, and are called upon to shift their luggage. We draw the attention of the local agents of the Company to these complaints. In many respects, we are aware that a certain amount of inconvenience is inseparable from the mode of travelling that the poor Indian passengers are compelled to select. It is impossible to expect much from accommodation on deck. At the same time, it is a notorious fact that the deck-passenger traffic is the most lucrative and least troublesome. It, therefore, behoves the Company’s managers to ensure as much comfort as is possible in the circumstances for the deck-passengers, if only for mercenary reasons.

234. A PERMIT CASE

Our Johannesburg correspondent reports a case tried the other day before Mr. Cross at the Johannesburg Court. One Adam Ebrahim, a lad under twelve years, was brought before the Magistrate for being in the Transvaal without a registration certificate.

The form of prosecution was somewhat novel, for hitherto all such cases were tried under the Peace Preservation Ordinance. Whilst escape under it was less easy, there was no penalty in the nature of a fine or imprisonment, whereas a conviction under Law 3 of 1885 renders the accused liable to a fine of not more than £100 or not more than six months’ imprisonment, with or without hard labour. Happily, counsel for the accused had no difficulty in showing that the boy was not liable to pay the registration fee on entering the Transvaal.

Thus, the more galling the shackles imposed by the Government upon the Indian, the heavier, it would appear, is the liberating blow delivered by the judicial hammer. The Judiciary protects what the Executive would gladly destroy. Will Lord Selborne still say that the administration of the Law, which has now been demonstrated to be illegal, is reasonable and is being carried on with due consideration for those affected by it?

235. THE LATE DR. SATHIANADHAN

We regret to have to chronicle the news of the death of the late Professor Sathianadhan of Madras. Our exchanges from India are full of appreciation of the deceased Professor’s work. Dr. Sathianadhan died in harness, and in the prime of life. Brilliant as his career was, it was a life full of much greater promise.

The deceased gentleman was an M. A., LL. B. of Madras University, and [a] very conscientious convert to Christianity. He was respected by all classes for his sterling qualities both of the head and of heart, and so much enjoyed the confidence of the Government, that he was appointed to officiate as Deputy Director of Public Instruction. The death of such an Indian removes from Indian society a figure it can ill afford to lose. We beg to tender to the family of the deceased gentleman our respectful sympathy in their loss, which is indeed a national loss.

236. IMMIGRATION LAW IN THE CAPE

It appears from what our Cape correspondent reports that there will no longer be any difficulties for Indians on a temporary visit to the Cape. There has so far been in the Cape no provision for temporary visits such as exists in Natal.

However, according to our correspondent, the amendments to the Immigration Act that have come up for consideration before the present Parliament will cause much hardship. As we have said earlier, under the new Act, if it is passed, the authority to decide as to who has acquired domicile will pass from a court to an executive officer. If this happens, it will be a very serious matter. Moreover, it is at present possible for a man to enter the Cape if he has South African domicile; but under the new Act, just as in Natal, only a Cape resident will be able to enter the Cape. The British Indian League ought to resist both these changes. We hope the members of the League will move in the matter immediately.

237. SIR HENRY COTTON AND INDIANS

Our readers will see from an extract we print from India how Sir Henry Cotton, at one time Commissioner of Assam, is putting up a great fight for us in Parliament, and for this we are all grateful to him. We must inform our readers on this occasion that the working force behind Sir Henry Cotton is the British Committee of the [Indian National] Congress. Sir Henry tables those questions that are prepared by the Committee, and the leading members of the British Committee are Sir William Wedderburn and Dadabhai Naoroji, the Grand Old Man of India. We are therefore under a deep obligation to that Committee also.

238. THE NATAL REBELLION

We publish elsewhere a translation of a letter an old Colonist has addressed to The Times of Natal. The substance of it is that the Indians are not able to go to the battle-field, but that they can assist the men at the front with the requisite amenities. It is necessary that Indians help in the way they did when a fund was started at the time of the Boer War. It will be good to collect some money and send it to the Government or to some Fund that might have been started. We shall then be considered to have done our duty to that extent. We hope the leaders of the community will take up this matter.

239. A NEW SAN FRANCISCO

It is certainly not for the first time that the reader is reminded of the proverb, “God can do what He wills within the instant.” History furnishes many examples of a pauper becoming wealthy and a wealthy man turning pauper in a moment. But this rule is not confined to individuals. The rule, “from the palace to the hovel”, and vice versa can apply equally to a whole city or country. The recent San Francisco earthquake is a case in point. Three hundred thousand persons—why, even more— were in a moment rendered homeless! Thousands, who were used to living in comfort and the luxury of big palaces and did not have to tell day from night, were left without even a rickety hut. Spacious and well-furnished mansions and beautiful streets, razed to the ground in a movement and reduced to a heap of dust, have paid their obeisance to Time. A barren desert has spread over the site once covered by gardens and villas. Countless men have been deprived of shelter and food in the twinkling of an eye. Who, having seen this, would not wonder at the mysterious ways of God? By far the more astonishing fact is, however, quite a different one. True bravery consists in standing erect and boldly in the face of the cruel blow dealt by such a fearful catastrophe. This colossal task has been undertaken by the people of San Francisco. Well known for its perseverance and industry, the American nation is out to prove its mettle. The task of reconstructing a new and more splendid San Francisco without the aid of the outside world and in the face of divine wrath has begun. Plans are being drawn up to add to the world’s beauty by recreating a more beautiful San Francisco. Huge structures are being erected for bringing a new celestial city into being. Thousands of workmen have been invited from distant lands. The quantity of steel ordered for the purpose is so large that it might lead to a boom in the country’s iron market. Plans are being drawn up to construct a new dock of the latest style, the like of which will be found only in a few parts of the world. The streets are so planned that they will further add to the charm of the new city. The people there are thus fully prepared to meet this natural calamity in a variety of ways. With the help of electric power generated from waterfalls, human intelligence has been able to run railway trains and factories thousands of miles away. It has been able to produce ships and balloons voyaging across the high seas and reaching the highest regions of the sky. It is also conducting experiments to communicate with men on other planets of the Universe. But the selfsame intelligence cannot feel the tremors within the bowels of the earth and is unable to prevent the occurrence of earthquakes. This, indeed, is a matter for sorrow, but it should certainly gladden our hearts to see how man faces such shocks with courage.

241. LETTER TO PRINCIPAL MEDICAL OFFICER

DURBAN,
June 2, 1906

TO
THE PRINCIPAL MEDICAL OFFICER
PIETERMARITZBURG
sir,

The Natal Indian Congress has received from the Government a communication accepting the offer of an Indian Ambulance Corps.

As a preliminary trial, the Government state that the Corps should consist of 20 stretcher-bearers. Our Committee has the honour to inform you that 20 men will be at your disposal at the time and place that you may be pleased to advise. We take it that you will make the necessary arrangements for equipment, uniform and transport.

The Government have informed our Committee that the pay of the Corps will be one shilling and six pence per day per man. When the offer was made, it was the intention of the community represented by the Congress to pay the men. Our Committee, therefore, trusts that the Government will be pleased to allow the Indian community to pay their men. At the same time, we beg to submit that it is not possible to raise the Corps on a salary of less than one pound per week, which sum, we are instructed to say, the Indian community is willing to pay as long as the services of the Corps are required.

We beg further to add that most of the men, whilst in every respect willing to work, are untrained, for no fault of their own, for the purpose of an Ambulance Corps.

We have the honour to remain,
Sir,
Your obedient servants,

242. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

June 6, 1906

THE STORY OF THE TRAM CASE

The tram case has taken a new turn. A keen tussle is going on between the Town Council and the Indians. Neither side would accept defeat.

While, on the one hand, the Town Council abolished the tramway regulations on the excuse that none were necessary, a committee of the Council has, on the other, framed new ones. From information received from confidential sources, I learn that Mr. Duncan1 attended the Committee meeting. The Committee expressed the opinion that there should be a provision in the Regulations forbidding Indians from travelling in tram-cars; that they might, if they so desired, use separate trams; and that only Indians with special permits could travel by all the trams. Mr. Duncan, it is said, opposed this view of the Committee, saying that, just as the Indian community had remained patient in the matter of the railway, so they would remain patient in the matter of the tramway too, if some concessions were granted. If further harassment were caused, they would be provoked and the result would be far from desirable. The Committee’s work of framing Regulations is still going on. In a few days, when these are published, we shall know more about them.

The Town Council has thus been active in the matter. Meanwhile, the Indian community has taken a step forward. Mr. Abdul Gani, the Chairman of the British Indian Association, and Mr. Polak, the present English Editor of this journal, got into a tram. The conductor refused to allow Mr. Abdul Gani to sit, but he said that he would not get off the tram unless forced to do so. The conductor called in the police, who also got the same reply. At last, the Tram Inspector arrived and spoke politely to Mr. Gani. As a result of the talk, it was decided that Mr. Abdul Gani would be prosecuted on a charge of having obstructed the tram-car. Mr. Abdul Gani and Mr. Polak agreed to this and got down. When this was reported to the Town Council by the Inspector, the Town Clerk immediately wrote a note to Gani and Polak requesting them to see him. He told them that the Indians had done enough, and that they should not further harass the Council; that the Regulations in the matter would be published in a few days; and that, if the Indians did not approve of them, they might challenge them. The Town Clerk requested them to spare the Council for the time being.

1 Colonial Secretary

THE DEPUTATION TO ENGLAND

A second cablegram regarding a deputation to England has been received from Sir William Wedderburn. Though the Committee working for us in England is not very hopeful of success, it suggests that Mr. Gandhi alone may be sent to England by the same steamer by which the Constitution Committee will sail. The Committee is likely to leave for England towards the beginning of July. The Committee of the Association met on the night of Wednesday last to consider the membership of the deputation. It passed a resolution calling for a meeting of all the Indians in Johannesburg and appealing for funds. It further decided that Mr. Haji Habib, the Secretary of the Pretoria Committee, and Mr. Haji Ojer Ali might be sent, besides Mr. Gandhi, if sufficient funds could be raised. I have already written that this meeting will be held at 2 p.m. in the West End Hall.

MINERS’ DEMANDS

The Miners’ deputation, which waited on the Committee, demanded that Indians should in future be denied entry into the Colony, and that further issue of trade and other licences to them should be stopped.

PERMIT HARDSHIPS

Tired of the permit problems, the Association has now taken the last step. It has written to the Government saying that, if the difficulties regarding permits were not now ended, the Association would file cases to test the four following principles:

1. Those who can prove having made a payment of £3 to the Boer Government should be allowed to enter without permits;
2. children under sixteen of parents who are themselves entitled to enter should be allowed in, and that without a permit;
3. wives of those who are entitled to enter should be allowed in without a permit; and, lastly,
4. instead of the current practice of arbitrarily issuing permits to whomsoever the Government wishes, there should be clear and definite regulations to determine those eligible for permits.

The Association has issued instructions that, if the Government does not give a satisfactory reply in this matter, test cases should be instituted on all the said points.

243. LETTER TO DADABHAI NAOROJI

DURBAN,
NATAL,
June 8, 1906

TO
THE HON’BLE DADABHAI NAOROJI KENNINGTON ROAD
LONDON
DEAR SIR,

I had your last cablegram suggesting that I should go to England alone by same steamer as the commissioners.

I was making preparations accordingly, when a communication was received from the Natal Government accepting the offer of the Indian community to form an “Indian Stretcher-Bearer Corps”. I am, therefore, expecting to leave for the front any day.

Under the circumstances, we have all decided that the formation of the Corps is far more important than a visit to England. It is recognised that I should be with the Corps, at least in the initial stages. It is evident that the Natal Government intend to test the capability of the Indians for ambulance work.

I fear, therefore, for the present, I should abandon any idea of going to England.

We here, therefore, hope that the Committee that is looking after Indian interests in South Africa will take the necessary steps to place the position before the Government.

You will have seen the statement placed before the Constitution Committee on behalf of the British Indians in the Transvaal. It represents all that could be said in the matter. The statement appears in Indian Opinion for the 2nd instant.

I remain,
Yours faithfully,
M. K. GANDHI

244. INDIANS AND THE NATIVE UNREST

The Government have at last accepted the offer of the Indian community, and put it upon its mettle. By way of experiment, they want a corps of twenty stretcher-bearers. The Natal Indian Congress has sent in a prompt reply. We think the Congress has done well in offering to defray the wages of the bearers, so long as the corps remains in the experimental stage.

The acceptance by the Government synchronizes with the amendment of the Fire-Arms Act, providing for the supply of arms to Indians, and the statement made by Mr. Maydon to the effect that the Government intended to give Indians an opportunity of taking their share in the defence of the Colony.

Indians have now a splendid opportunity for showing that they are capable of appreciating the duties of citizenship. At the same time, the fact of the corps being raised is nothing to be unduly proud of. Twenty Indians, or even two hundred, going to the front is a flea-bite. The Indian sacrifice will rightly be considered infinitesimal. But it is the principle involved which marks the importance of the event. The Government have, by accepting the offer, shown their goodwill. And if Indians come successfully through the ordeal, the possibilities for the future are very great. Should they be assigned a permanent part in the Militia, there will remain no ground for the European complaint that Europeans alone have to bear the brunt of Colonial defence, and Indians will cease to feel that, in not being allowed to participate in it, they are slighted.

245. SOLDIERS’ FUND

The Durban Women’s Association has started a special fund for the soldiers who have gone to the front to fight the Kaffirs. All leading men have contributed to the Fund and some Indian names are seen among the contributors. It is our advice that more Indians, traders and others, should subscribe to the Fund. We mentioned last time how a correspondent had advised us to raise such a fund in Maritzburg. He says that, since we cannot bear our full share of the burden in the war, it is better that we help in this manner.

1 Vide “Letter to Colonial Secretary”, 2-6-1906
The soldiers’ life is a hard one. The salary and allowances that the Government pay them are not always enough. Those, therefore, who do not go to the front should, in order to express their sympathy, raise a fund for the purpose of sending the soldiers fruits, tobacco, warm clothing and other things that they might need. It is our duty to subscribe to such a fund.

246. INDIAN POSITION IN NATAL

[Before June 13, 1906]

Two things cause the greatest trouble to the Indian community in Natal. The first is the Dealers’ Licenses Act.

When this Act was passed, the late Sir Henry Binns strongly protested against it, saying that it was an un-British measure, and that the ousting of the ordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was a dangerous principle. Experience has shown the justness of these prophetic words. The administration of the Act was, in its initial stages, marked by an excess of zeal in restricting British Indian trade. The Licensing Officer at Newcastle refused to renew all Indian licences, that is, nine in number. It was after very great expense and trouble that six of them were renewed. As a result, and owing to pressure from the Colonial Office, the Government issued a warning to the licensing authorities that, unless they administered the Act with prudence and moderation and respected existing licences, the Government might be obliged to amend the law, and restore the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The circular letter served its purpose for a time. It could do no more. Three typical cases have since happened to show how harsh has been the administration.

1. Mr. Hoondamal, who has been trading in the Colony for some time, wished to change premises, and to remove from Grey Street to West Street. The shop was absolutely free from objection from a sanitary standpoint. It belonged to an Indian landlord, and it was in a block of buildings which have been devoted to Indian traders.

1 This was published in The Natal Mercury of 13-6-1906. That paper had suggested that Indians should “set down their grievances concisely in writing for the benefit of the public, who would then be in a better position to form an opinion”. The statement was later reproduced in Indian Opinion

2 Vide “Indian Licences: Need for Vigilance —I” 18-2-1905
for several years. Mr. Hoondamal had a fancyware business, and dealt in Oriental silks and other fancy goods. He did not come into competition with any European. His shop was kept in a scrupulously clean condition, but the transfer from one premises to another was rejected by the Town Council.

2. Mr. Dada Osman had been in trade in Vryheid for several years before the war. The place he was trading in was considered a Location or a Bazaar during the Boer regime after Vryheid was annexed to Natal the Licensing Board refused to renew his licence, unless he would go to another Location far away from town, where it was impossible for him to do any business at all. Mr. Dada Osman’s business in Vryheid has, therefore, proved a very serious loss to him. In this case, as also in the previous case, many certificates from Europeans of good standing were produced to show the respectability of the applicants. It should be remembered that Mr. Dada Osman’s was the only Indian store in Vryheid. To add to the misery of the position, the anti-Asiatic laws of the Transvaal have been taken over bodily for this district of Natal. A British Indian, therefore, staying in Vryheid, not only has to undergo the disabilities that the Natal laws imposed on him, but has added to them the disabilities that the Transvaal laws have created for him.

3. Mr. Cassim Mahomed has been trading for three years on a farm near Ladysmith. For some time his was the only store. Recently, a European firm, by name Burdett & Co., have opened a store near by. Mr. Cassim Mahomed’s servant, in his absence, was trapped and charged with a breach of the law as to Sunday trading, the servant having sold to the traps a piece of soap and a little sugar. Armed with this conviction, Messrs Burdett & Co. opposed Mr. Cassim Mahomed’s application for a renewal of his licence. The Licensing Officer listened to their objections, and refused to renew the licence. There was an appeal to the Board, which confirmed the decision of the Licensing Officer. The court said that it was not guided by any prejudice; it proposed to treat Mr. Cassim Mahomed as it had treated a certain European. This was incorrect. This European was himself convicted of having sold opium, in contravention of the law, to the Indians working at the mines in his neighbourhood, and other allegations were made against him. There is an ocean of difference between the technical breach of the Sunday Law by the servant of Mr. Cassim Mahomed and the breach of the opium law of the Colony by the European personally. Mr. Cassim Mahomed, too, produced excellent references from European firms of good standing.

In all the above-named three cases, there is not an iota of reason for depriving the applicants of their licences, and thereby, perhaps, their means of livelihood. They were all vested interests, but the popular Boards, in our opinion, did not hesitate to trample under foot all sense of justice and right. Had the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court been reserved, such gross injustice would never have been possible. It is possible to understand objections to traders whose premises are insanitary or even ugly, to traders who cannot produce any intelligible record of their transactions or have been known to have deceived their creditors. One could also understand a great deal of hesitation in granting new licences to Indian traders in view of popular feeling and prejudice, but it is hard to justify treatment meted out to cases like the foregoing. A study of the Cape Bill, recently published, in connection with this matter would be very appropriate, and would throw a great deal of light on the question. No reasonable exception could be taken to that measure, and yet it would do all that the Natal Act was intended to do, without doing violence to British traditions, or even the elementary ideas of right and wrong.

A further difficulty has now been introduced by reason of a circular issued by the Government to the licensing authorities, to the effect that for Indian applications they are to take thumb-impressions on the counterfoils of the licences issued, in order to establish identity. Why such a distinction against Indians should be made it is difficult to understand, except on the supposition that the Government intend that, as soon as the present Indian holders have retired from business or died, the business should be sold, not as a going concern, but outright. What this means to a trader can be better imagined than described.

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION ACT

Under this Act, latterly, the Government have framed rules imposing fees which are simply extortionate. Any Indian who is domiciled in Natal, and wants to return to Natal, as a rule takes with him some documentary proof and the Government grant him a certificate of domicile on sufficient proof being given. Hitherto, the nominal charge of 2s. 6d. has been made, but it has now been raised to £1. Similarly, facilities are afforded to those who wish to enter the Colony for a temporary visit, or who, belonging to the inland States, wish to pass through Natal on their way to India. These are called visitors’ or embarkation passes, and were naturally issued till recently without any fee, but on a deposit of £10, to be refunded on leaving the

VOL. 5 : 6 NOVEMBER, 1905 - 3 NOVEMBER, 1906 261
Colony. A fee of £1 has now been imposed on these passes also. The imposition is extraordinary. British Indians not only contribute to the railway revenue by passing through Natal, but have now to pay for the privilege of doing so a fee of £1. The same argument applies to visitors. One would consider that, seeing that the law restricts immigration, and not temporary sojourn, of people, the expenses of ensuring the return of those who wish to temporarily remain in the Colony should be borne by the general treasury. The Government, however, have taken a different view. They consider that a man who visits Natal temporarily may also be dealt with under the Immigration Restriction Act, and that, therefore, when he is allowed to visit the Colony, it is a privilege that is extended to him. For such a contention there is no support in law. Cases have occurred where British Indians in Johannesburg have taken out embarkation passes, for which they have paid £1. They have been obliged to change their minds, and to indefinitely postpone their visit to India, and yet they have been obliged to forfeit the fee of £1 paid for their embarkation passes, although they have never used them, and when the time comes for them to go to India, they would have to take [out] other embarkation passes, and pay the fee again. The above fees, therefore, could only be interpreted as an attempt to indirectly tax British Indians.

248. LORD SELBORNE

Lord Selborne made a significant speech while laying the foundation-stone of the new Town Hall at Germiston. The speech consists of advice on morality and politics. Addressed as it is to the whites, it is perhaps of less direct interest to us from a political standpoint. But from the moral point of view, Lord Selborne’s words deserve to be pondered over. Accordingly, we summarise the speech below:

The Municipalities exercise a necessary influence on the lives of us whites, who are politically very active. They are the schools which prepare men for the administration of the State. It is there that the seeds of the freedom of a people are sown and nurtured. The British prefer a harsh but self-governing political system to a mild alien rule. At all times and everywhere, the Municipalities have been the chief forum of public opinion. The Municipality serves as a training-ground not only for its members but also for the electorate and for others who discuss [public affairs]. The electors should never forget how to offer legitimate criticism. This is a region in which engaging storms blow. Storms are of two kinds: actual storms and the metaphorical ones in politics. One who preserves one’s equanimity during an actual storm can be said to have a cool and collected temperament. In the same way, one who remains unperturbed during a political storm is considered a man of firm convictions. I should consider a person reliable who sticks to his own way of life in fair weather and foul. A man should prove that he is absolutely firm in his principles regardless of whether or not people interpret his words or actions aright.

249. MR. SEDDON

Mr. Seddon', the Prime Minister of New Zealand, died at the age of sixty-one without having suffered any illness. He was an able English statesman. For a long time he was the President of New Zealand to which office he was elected; he earned a good name for himself and succeeded in bringing prosperity to the land entrusted to his care. He was in the front rank of Colonial statesmen. Though ever trying to increase the power of the Colonies by disregarding the Imperial Government, he was always considered fit to play a leading role in British Imperial Councils and Committees since his attitude was never really harmful to the interests of the British Empire.

At the Jubilee Colonial and Coronation Conferences, he proved to be the foremost among the Colonial Prime Ministers. The death of such a statesman will be mourned in every part of the British Empire. His Majesty King Edward has sent a message of condolence to the people of New Zealand. The Natal Government has also sent a similar message, which bears testimony to his popularity.

In accordance with the efforts made by Captain Dray,\(^1\) leader of Ward IV, to raise subscriptions from Indian merchants resident in the above ward, for the supply of uniforms to such members of the patrol for the said ward as may be too poor to afford the uniform themselves, we have much pleasure in informing you that we have now collected subscriptions larger than the estimate made by Captain Dray, as you will see from the list herewith enclosed. The amount required was £70. 15. 0, and the amount subscribed is £86. 7. 0.

We beg to hand you herewith the sum of £50.0.0 cash to be used as above. Should you require more, we would send you the balance.

We shall feel obliged if you will kindly let us have for the information of the subscribers a list of those that may be so supplied with uniforms.

We would also like to add that the uniforms, should they be bought, should remain the property of Ward IV.

In conclusion, we beg to record our thanks to Captain Dray for enabling us to show our appreciation in ever so slight a manner of those townsfolk who have come forward for the defence of the persons and property of their fellow-residents in Ward IV.

251. LETTER TO G. K. GOKHALE

STANGER LAAGER,
June 22, 1906

DEAR PROF. GOKHALE,

I am writing this from the military laager at Stanger.¹ The Indian Stretcher-Bearer Corps received orders yesterday to march. The work before the Corps this time is of a more difficult type. In any case, it was absolutely necessary for me to accompany the Corps if it was to be formed at all. The question of my coming to England must, therefore, remain in abeyance.

I am very thankful for your long letter and the suggestions made by you.

I suppose we shall know in time the result of your interviews² with Mr. Morley. You will put a finishing touch to your brilliant work, if you could on your way pass through South Africa. That I know is a selfish view, but I may be pardoned for taking such a view, seeing that all my work at present seems to be connected with South Africa alone.

I am,

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

252. AN IMPORTANT PERMIT CASE

Justice has again been vindicated, and the excesses of the Asiatic Permit Department in the Transvaal have received a salutary check at the hands of the presiding Magistrate at Volksrust. From the summary furnished by our Johannesburg correspondent of the case in question, it would appear that Mr. E. M. Bhyat, brother of Mr. A. M. Bhyat, of Heidelberg, a well-known Indian merchant, was refused a permit to

¹ A town 45 miles to the north-east of Durban
² Gokhale, who had presided over the Congress Session at Banaras in December 1905, was at this time in England and met Mr. Morley several times in connection with, the Partition of Bengal, proposals for reform and Indian problems generally.
re-enter the Transvaal, although he proved that he was an old resident of that Colony and had paid three pounds to the Dutch Government as the price of settlement in the Transvaal. Mr Bhyat’s application had received very influential European support. He was to go to the Transvaal in order to replace his brother, who found it necessary to go to India for reasons of health. In spite of such proof, Mr. Bhyat could not get a permit, the reason alleged being that he, having left the Transvaal some time before the outbreak of war, could not be termed a refugee. The case went to Lord Selborne through the British Indian Association, but His Excellency declined to grant relief. It is a matter of painful surprise to us that the High Commissioner should have denied justice in a case of such importance. Indians have a right to complain that His Excellency did not show for the Indian community that reasonable regard to which he said some time ago it was rightly titled.

Exasperated by the refusal, Mr. Bhyat appealed to the law court of the Colony, whose decision was entirely in Mr. Bhyat’s favour. The Magisterial interpretation of the Peace Preservation Ordinance means that those Indians who have paid three pounds to the old Government are free to enter the Transvaal without permits, on proof of such payment.

The case shows once more how hard it is for an Indian to get justice from the Government in the Transvaal. Ever since the establishment of British authority in that Colony, Indians have been obliged to struggle against it for their right to exist in that portion of the British Empire. They have more than once been obliged to extort from an unwilling administration a measure of justice by the help of the law courts of the Colony. Lord Selborne was inclined to resent the complaint of the British Indian Association that the Government opposed the Indian community in the licence test case. Perhaps there was some ground for resentment, as there was a decided case of the Republican High Court to which the present Government felt bound to give effect. In the present case, there was no such precedent. The Peace Preservation Ordinance is a creation of the British Government.
It has been wrested from its proper sphere in order to restrict Indian immigration. It was within the power of the Government to grant relief, of its own motion, without being troubled with any precedents.
And yet an Indian merchant has had to undergo much expense and worry, and has been compelled to resort to the law courts of the Colony before he could receive even the elements of equitable treatment. We wonder how Lord Selborne will justify this latest action of the executive authority in the Transvaal.

Indian Opinion, 23-6-1906

253. INDIAN VOLUNTEERS

Much discussion has been carried on in this journal regarding whether or not the Indians should participate in the war. The Government has agreed to accept a corps of twenty stretcher-bearers, and the Congress has got that number together. This has produced a very favourable impression on the minds of prominent whites. Some leading members of the community have, because of this, formed the opinion that we must have innate ability for such work; and they advise us that we should accordingly ask for a permanent place in the Volunteer Corps.

Between this proposal and the Stretcher-Bearer Corps that has already been raised, there is much difference. The Stretcher-Bearer Corps is to last only a few days. Its work will be only to carry the wounded, and it will be disbanded when such work is no longer necessary. These men are not allowed to bear arms. The move for a Volunteer Corps is quite different and much more important. That Corps will be a permanent body; its members will be issued weapons, and they will receive military training every year at stated times. For the present they will not have any fighting to do. Wars are not fought all the time. A war breaks out, roughly speaking, once in twenty years. It is now more than twenty years since the last Kaffir rebellion broke out. There is, therefore, absolutely no risk in joining the Volunteer Corps. It can be looked upon as a kind of annual picnic. The person joining it gets enough exercise and thus keeps his body in good trim and improves his health. One who enlists as a volunteer is much respected. People love him and praise him, calling him a civilian soldier.

If the Indians are given such a status, we believe it would be a very good thing. It is likely to bring in some political advantage. Whether or not any advantage is to be derived, there is no doubt that it is our duty to enlist. Hundreds of leading whites enlist themselves and take pride in doing so. Under the prevailing law, it is open to the Government to enlist compulsorily. We ought to obey the laws designed for the defence of the country we live in. Therefore, considering the matter from any point, it is clear that, if we are able to join the Volunteer Corps, the reproach against us would be lived
For fifteen years now the whites have accused the Indians that, if it came to giving one’s life in defence of Natal, they would desert their posts of duty and flee home. We cannot meet this charge with a written rejoinder. There is but one way of disproving it—the way of action. The time to act appears to have come now. But how is it to be done? Not by making volunteers out of the poor labourers freed from their indentures. It is the duty of the trading community to take part in the movement themselves. Many men can be trained up even if each shop offers only one man. Trade will not suffer. The condition of those who join will improve. They will gain in strength and energy and will be deemed to have done their duty as citizens.

It is sheer superstition to believe, as some appear to do, that there is greater risk to life in going to the battle-field or preparing for it. Next week we intend to adduce examples in support of this.¹

Meanwhile, we are placing these thoughts before the leaders of the community and we hope that they will receive due consideration.

254. THE CASE OF SULIMAN MANGA

We have already published in our English columns a full account of the case relating to a permit for Mr. Suliman Manga.² Sir Henry Cotton asked a question in the House of Commons based on this information. Mr. Churchill³ in reply stated that a prompt inquiry would be made into the matter. Both the question and the answer are very important. It remains to be seen what reply Lord Selborne can give now. Probably the relief that one can hope for in permit problems will largely depend on his answer.

Mr. Churchill’s reply that an inquiry would be made gives us adequate grounds to hope that the Home Government will not entirely disown responsibility.

Mr. Omar Haji Amjad Johari and Mr. Mahomed Cassim Anglia, the Joint Honorary Secretaries of the Congress, have received from the Government a reply to their letter offering to pay the salary of the members of the Stretcher-Bearer Corps. The Government have accepted the offer.

Mrs Nanji and Mrs Gabriel have together prepared Red Cross badges for the members of the Corps. These badges are worn on the left arm and identify those who are engaged exclusively in attending to the wounded. These badges cannot be very important in the Kaffir rebellion; but among European nations there is a convention that arms cannot be used against persons wearing such badges.

257. AN IMPORTANT TENANCY CASE

The Supreme Court of Natal recently decided an important case on the notice to be given to a tenant on a monthly tenure. The common understanding is that it is sufficient to give a tenant a month’s notice beginning from any date of the month, and that he in turn, can give a similar notice and vacate the premises. This seems to be the interpretation accepted among some lawyers too. But the Supreme Court has decided that the notice should be given on the same date on which the tenancy began. For example, if the tenant took possession on the 6th of a certain month, he can give the necessary month’s notice on the 6th of any month or earlier, but the notice will only take effect from the 6th of the succeeding month. The landlord also is, for his part, bound to give similar notice.

258. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

MR. BHAYAT’S PERMIT CASE

Just as there was a permit case in respect of Mr. Suliman Manga, so a case has now been decided concerning Ebrahim Bhayat. Mr. Manga, though fully and clearly entitled to a temporary permit, was not given one by the Permit Officer; he secured it at last from Delagoa Bay. Mr. Ebrahim Bhayat was an old resident of the Transvaal and knew a number of prominent whites; and his application was supported by many of them. Even so, he was refused a permit on the ground that it was not during the war that he had left the Transvaal but a year earlier. This was the limit of oppression. As it was absolutely essential for Mr. Bhayat to go to the Transvaal in connection with his brother’s business, he decided to go to court. Mr. Benson’s opinion had been obtained, and Mr. Lichtenstein appeared in the case at Volksrust. Mr. Bhayat’s defence was as follows:

1. Mr. Ebrahim Bhayat was an old resident of the Transvaal
2. He had paid £3 to the Dutch Government, and had by that payment purchased the right of permanent residence.
3. By virtue of the London Convention such men were entitled to stay permanently.¹
4. Furthermore, since Mr. Bhayat’s marriage had been solemnized in the Transvaal, he should be regarded a permanent resident of the Colony.

The Permit Act could not be enforced in the face of these arguments; and the Magistrate decided that such persons needed no permits to enter the Transvaal.

This is a very good decision, and the Permit Office has met with a crushing defeat. We shall await the defence Lord Selborne can muster in reply.

As a result of this decision, those Indians who were formerly

residents of the Transvaal and hold a Dutch registration certificate will be able to enter without a permit. This will obviate many inconveniences met with by those applying for permits.

I must, however, point out that there is a confusion in this case. The good gentleman that the Volksrust Magistrate is, he has interpreted the law very sympathetically and in our favour. There are many eminent barristers who are of the opinion that it is necessary even for those who possess registration certificates to take out permits; and, undoubtedly, there are many difficulties in doing so. However, the Government cannot go in appeal against the Magistrate’s decision; and as long as the Indians make out their case carefully and strongly, they should have no trouble at all. It will perhaps be easier for them to come through Volksrust than through Komatipoort, for there is no reason to suppose that all magistrates will give a similar decision. The matter cannot be taken as finally settled as long as the Supreme Court has not given its decision. It should also be remembered that this is not a case that can be taken to the Supreme Court.

New Act for JOHANNESBURG MUNICIPALITY

The Johannesburg Municipality intends to get a new law passed concerning its own powers during the present session of the legislature. It seeks further enabling powers to declare an area a Location or Bazaar, and to refuse a licence to those who are otherwise entitled to it on such grounds as the unsatisfactory condition of the building or the applicant being guilty of some offence. Persons dissatisfied with the decision of the Municipality would be able to prefer an appeal before a Magistrate. It does not seem possible to oppose either of these two points. However, the power to fix a site for a Location or a Bazaar does not authorize the Municipality to force people to shift there.

LORD SELBORNE

It appears from the local newspapers that a movement is afoot to recall Lord Selborne from South Africa. Members of the Radical Party believe that Lord Selborne does not carry out the policy of the Liberal Party in full measure.

259. SHOULD INDIANS VOLUNTEER OR NOT?

We commented on this subject in our last issue.1 Towards the end of that article, we had said that most of us held back only because of fear. There is, however, no cause whatever for fear, as should be evident from the examples we propose to give for the benefit of those who believe that we should be ever ready to participate in war if we want to live happily and respectably in Natal, in South Africa or, for that matter, in any part of the British Empire. The Crimean War caused heavy casualties; yet it has been estimated that fewer men died from bayonet or bullet wounds in that war than through sheer carelessness or perverse living. It was calculated that, on an average, more men died of fever and other diseases during the attack on Ladysmith than by Boer bullets. The experience in every war has been similar.

Moreover, those who can take care of themselves and lead regular lives while at the front can live in health and happiness. The training such men receive cannot be had elsewhere, that is, if they do not go to the front only to prove their valour or quench their thirst for blood. A man going to the battle-front has to train himself to endure severe hardships. He is obliged to cultivate the habit of living in comradeship with large numbers of men. He easily learns to make do with simple food. He is required to keep regular hours. He forms the habit of obeying his superior’s orders promptly and without argument. He also learns to discipline the movement of his limbs. And he has also to learn how to live in limited space according to the maxims of health. Instances are known of unruly and wayward men who went to the front and returned reformed and able fully to control both their mind and body.

For the Indian community, going to the battle-field should be an easy matter; for, whether Muslims or Hindus, we are men with profound faith in God. We have a greater sense of duty, and it should therefore be easier for us to volunteer. We are not overcome by fear when hundreds of thousands of men die of famine or plague in our country. What is more, when we are told of our duty, we continue to be indifferent, keep our houses dirty, lie hugging our hoarded wealth. Thus, we live a wretched life acquiescing in a long, tormented process ending in death. Why, then, should we fear the death that may perhaps overtake us on the battle-field? We have to learn much from what the whites are doing in Natal. There is hardly any family from which someone has not gone to fight the Kaffir rebels. Following their example, we should steel our hearts and take courage. Now is the time when the leading whites want us to take this step; if we let go this opportunity, we shall repent later. We therefore urge all Indian leaders to do their duty to the best of their ability.

1 Vide “Indian Volunteers”, 23-06-1906

260. EXTRACT FROM LETTER TO DADABHAI NAOROJI

June 30, 1906

Under separate cover, I am sending you marked copy of Indian Opinion, wherein will be found copy of correspondence from Lord Elgin to the Governor of the Colony of Natal on the subject of the Municipal Corporations Consolidation Bill. I would bring to your notice the resolution arrived at by the Municipalities Association at its recent meeting, held to consider Lord Elgin’s despatch, to the effect that no alteration should be made in the definition of “Coloured Persons”. This decision leaves the Indian community in the same danger of insult and degradation as before, and it is to be hoped that the Secretary of State for India and the Indian Government will insist upon the carrying out of the suggestion proffered by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Moreover, I would point out that Lord Elgin omits all reference to the Clause of the Bill disfranchising all those who are not in possession of the parliamentary franchise. It will doubtless be within your recollection that the Indian community of Natal acquiesced in the disfranchisement of all Indians who were not at that time on the Parliamentary Voters Roll at the urgent desire of the late Mr. Harry Escombe, on the distinct understanding that such disfranchisement was not to be carried to any greater lengths. I need not do more than remind you that British Indians in Natal, if such Municipal disfranchisement takes place, will be in a worse position than they would be in India, where, of course, such representative institutions are enjoyed by them. In view of the action of some of the Municipalities, as reported on various occasions in the columns of Indian Opinion, in making invidious, arbitrary distinctions between British Indians and Europeans, it is obvious that a grave injustice will be inflicted upon the British Indian community in Natal, unless steps

261. INDIAN STRETCHER-BEARER CORPS

[Before July 19, 1906]

COMPOSITION OF THE CORPS

This Corps, which has been formed at the instance of the Natal Government by way of experiment, in connection with the operations against the Natives, consists of twenty² Indians whose names are as fellows:

M. K. Gandhi (Sgt.-Major), U. M. Shelat (Sgt.), H. I. Joshi (Sgt.), S. B. Medhi (Sgt.), Parbhu Hari (Corporal), Khan Mahomed, Jamaludin, Mahomed, Sheikh Madar, Sheik Dada Mia, Mahomed Essop, Puti Naiken, Appasamy, Kitama, Kupusamy, Bomaya, Kunji, Ajodhyasing.

According to religion, the Corps is composed of six Mahomedans and fourteen Hindus. Geographically, there are five belonging to the Bombay Presidency, twelve to the Presidency of Madras, two to the Punjab, and one to the Presidency of Bengal. It may be added that one of the twelve Madrasis is Colonial-born.

According to status, thirteen men have been, at one time or [an]other, under indenture in Natal, and are now working as free men, in the capacity of gardeners, domestic servants, etc. Two of them are engine-drivers by profession, one [is] a goldsmith, three are agents and book-keepers, having received higher education in India, and one is a barrister.

It is now well known that the Government has provided uniforms and rations, and the Natal Indian Congress pays the salaries.

AT THE FRONT

On the 22nd June, this Corps entrained for Stanger by the early train and joined the B. M. R. column under Colonel Arnott, who was in laager at Stanger. After discussion with the regimental Sgt-Major, Colonel Arnott gave orders that the Corps was to receive European rations, and rice and dholl, with curry-powder, in lieu of meat. For the information of readers of this journal, the scale per man per day is appended:

¹ This was the first of the two despatches sent by Gandhiji and published in Indian Opinion as “From Our Special Correspondent at the Front”

² Actually only 18 are listed.

As there was no medical officer attached to Colonel Arnott’s column, the Colonel authorized the issue of a small quantity of medicine of immediate necessity, and a supply of bandages. Seeing us with Red Cross bandages, application was made the same day by several troopers who had either suffered slight accidental injuries or were suffering from malarial fever. The medicine, therefore, came in very handy, and one portion of the Corps’ work commenced at the laager.

The night of the 22nd was passed in laager, and all of us had to sleep in the open. One blanket supplied to each of us was not enough protection against cold, and the overcoats, furnished from the Comforts Fund opened by the Indian community, were very much appreciated. After breakfast on the 23rd June, the whole column moved forward, the Durban Reserves, the Indian Corps, and an escort bringing up the rear.

We had to march with the whole of our kit on, and as the experience was new to most of us, and as the marching was mostly up hill, it was severely felt by some. On the way, we passed by Sir James Hulett’s garden, and the troops were permitted to help themselves liberally to the luscious naartjes, with which the trees in the garden were weighted. After three cheers for the donor for the timely gift, the column moved forward and laagered about a mile beyond the estate. On the 24th, at 6-30 a.m., the march commenced. We were allowed on this occasion to put our kit onto the waggons—a great relief. The columns encamped at Otimati, a hill in a beautiful valley. Just near us ran a sparkling stream. The column was not intended to go as far as Mapumulo, but was to operate from the Otimati camp. The Corps had, however, instructions to proceed with the first convoy to Mapumulo. On the 25th June, therefore, we were in a state of uncertainty as to our fate, but hardly had our luncheon been half cooked, when orders were received that we should march to Mapumulo with some waggons that were leaving for that place. We had therefore to leave our food, pack up kit, and march, which we did within a quarter of an hour of the receipt of the orders. We reached Mapumulo at about 5 p.m. and reported ourselves to Captain Howden, the P. M. O. at that place. Captain Howden treated the Corps very nicely, and Corporal Little, who was to look after it, busied himself with providing us with tents, etc., up to 10 p.m. We were given one bell tent, and five patrol tents, which after three nights in the open were more or less a luxury, though, to most of us, a very necessary one. Colonel Sparks, too, came and inquired about us.

262. INDIAN STRETCHER-BEARER CORPS

[Before July 19, 1906]

Fatigue Duties

On the 26th our task was allotted to us. Nine of us were to form a fatigue party to accompany the tank-waggon, which brought water from an adjoining stream. Some of us were detained to disinfect the whole camp, under the superintendence of Dr. Savage, the District Surgeon for Mapumulo, and from three to four of us were to dress the wounds on the backs of several Native rebels, who had received lashes. One of us assisted at entering up the daily roll of patients treated by Captain Howden. The stretcher-bearing work, however, had yet to come. Some of the above work was partially interrupted or suspended as a helio-message was received to forward a stretcher party to Otimati in connection with operations that were to be undertaken by the B. M. R. column at Thring’s Post. Early on the morning of the 27th, therefore, one-half of the Corps, with two stretchers under Sgt.-Major Gandhi and Sgt. Joshi proceeded to Otimati, where instructions were received to take a stretcher to carry one of the troopers who was dazed. Fortunately, the trooper had recovered before the party reached Thring’s Post. But by an unfortunate accident, another trooper, by name Forder, had received a bullet-wound in the thigh from a co-trooper. He, however, pluckily rode to the camp. The stretcher party had to assist Mr. Stokes, of the N. M. C., in treating the wounded trooper, and others, who had received slight injuries through accidents or otherwise, requiring medical help. On the 28th, the stretcher party at Otimati were to take to Mapumulo Private Sutton of the Durban Reserves, whose toe was crushed under a waggon wheel, and Trooper Forder. The latter had to be carried on a stretcher, as his wound was very delicate. The work of carrying Trooper Forder proved to be much heavier than we had thought. The energy of all the available men had to be taxed to the utmost in carrying the wounded men, especially as it meant going uphill all the way. As we were nearing Mapumulo, the Captain of our escort sent word that, if it could be managed, Forder should be placed in the ambulance waggon, as the Natives about the hill might wrongly consider that the rebels had succeeded in wounding at least one of our men. Trooper Forder, on hearing the message, gladly volunteered to go into the waggon. And the fatigued bearers were equally glad to be relieved of the necessity of having to carry their charge up the very steep hill near Mapumulo. With this brief interruption, then, the whole Corps resumed its former work, with which it had commenced, and continued to do so till the morning of the 3rd July, a day that will ever remain memorable to the members of the Corps.

1 This was the second and final despatch sent by Gandhiji from the front.

HEAVY WORK

At 9 p.m. on the 2nd July, the Corps was ordered to follow a combined column at 2-30 a.m. the next morning which was to operate in the Umvoti Valley. We had to take two days’ rations with us, our blankets, and five stretchers. We did so, and the march commenced at 3 a.m. on the 3rd. There were no waggons with the column, and, with the exception of the infantry, which had gone forward before, all were mounted men whom we had to follow. Men in the rear were to guard us. We were all unarmed. But as the troops galloped away in front of us and we followed them, we were quickly out-distanced. However, we marched on, trying, as far as possible, to overtake the column, but it was a hopeless task. There was, therefore, as a rule, considerable distance between the rear-guard and ourselves. At daybreak, the movement of the troops became naturally more rapid, and the distance between them and us began to increase. However, there was no prospect before us except that of running after the troops or of being assegai’d by the rebels. Probably we had a narrow escape. At 7 o’clock troops were operating at some distance from us. As we were struggling along, we met a Kaffir who did not wear the loyal badge. He was armed with an assegai and was hiding himself. However, we safely rejoined the troops on the further hill, whilst they were sweeping with their carbines the bushes below. Thus, we had to perform what seemed to be a never-ending march. We had to cross and re-cross the Umvoti River, an operation that was difficult enough, seeing that we were obliged to take off our heavy boots and putties. One of the men narrowly escaped what might have been a very serious accident, and he only crossed the stream less his putties and with a bleeding toe. However, he marched bravely on with the rest of us. Towards evening, the column retired to a rise near the valley and pitched the camp.
"DEAD TIRED"

All of us were dead tired, and it was a stroke of good luck that there were no casualties or accidents on our side. Had there been any, it is difficult to say how we would have discharged ourselves in carrying the wounded in such a fatigued condition, though the writer of these notes fully believes that, actuated as the Corps mainly was by a sense of duty, God would have given it sufficient strength to perform any such work. Anyhow, such was the answer given to the laughing troopers, who, half in pity and half in ridicule, inquired, as we were struggling along, what we should do if we had actually to carry some wounded. On the morning of the 4th, we were split up into two parties to accompany the two divisions of the column which were to operate in two different parts. The march had still to be without real protection. All this was inevitable in the nature of things. One party, however, had an easier day. Whilst it must have covered no less than 25 miles the previous day, on the 4th it could not have been more than 12 miles, but the other party, under Sgt. Shelat, had an equally trying time on that day. The result was that most of us were footsore, and it was about as much as we could do on the 5th to carry ourselves decently to Mapumulo, a distance of nearly 15 miles. Of course, the whole column was in a state of practical starvation, as, in the expectation of having only one night on the veld, everyone had taken two days’ rations only. And so we had all to return to Mapumulo.

WEARY AND FOOTSORE

Our surprise can be better imagined than described, when reaching Mapumulo, where we had expected a day’s rest, we were ordered to march to Thring’s Post the day following and shift our own camp there. It was a physical impossibility for about nine or ten of us, and the Sgt.-Major informed the P. M. O. that, unless transport was provided for such as were totally unfit to walk, it would be impossible to resume the march the following day. The matter was placed before Colonel Sparks, who said that footsore bearers could go in an empty wagon that was going to Thring’s Post, and thus we were able to undertake the journey to Thring’s Post on the 6th July. There, we were attached to Captain Pearson, who treated us with every consideration. Transport that was provided for the footsore bearers put us on our feet again, and we were able to respond to the call of duty on the morning of the 8th. Orders were received on Saturday evening that we should follow with our stretchers the guns that were to leave for the Tugela Valley at 3 a.m. the following day. Compared to the work done in the Umvoti Valley, our task was easy, and the march could not have covered more than 16 miles. We returned to camp the same day.

DOING THE IMPOSSIBLE

At 2-30 a.m. on the 10th, we had to proceed to the Otimati Valley with the infantry, and though the work was very difficult, we had by this time become more or less seasoned. We had to take two days’ rations with us; the path lay through what would ordinarily be an inaccessible valley. It was impossible for any ambulance to go down, and in parts we had to descend steep precipices. Troopers had to lead their horses, and the route was so long that we never seemed to reach the bottom. However, at about 12 o’clock we finished the day’s journey, with no Kaffirs to fight. But an incident happened on the way down the valley which was calculated to test our ability to do stretcher-bearing work. A Kaffir, being a friendly boy, who was guiding a private of the D. L. I., was shot by him, under the belief, it is said, that the Native was misleading him. The Native was badly wounded, and required carrying, which was entrusted to us. Orders were given that we were to take him the same day to Mapumulo, and we were given four friendly Natives to help us, as also to guide us. Three of them, however, as soon as the troops were out of sight, deserted us, and the fourth, though he remained with us, declined flatly to go with us to Mapumulo, as he feared that, without an escort, we might be cut to pieces by the enemy. Fortunately, the troops were yet within reach. The Sergeant-Major, therefore, reported the matter to the proper officer, and fresh orders were given that the wounded Kaffir should be taken the next day, and that in the meanwhile we should nurse and feed him. The whole of the troops encamped for the night in the valley, and the following day we resumed our march with our precious charge, with orders to go to Mapumulo. We were given about 20 Kaffir levies to help us. They did so with much difficulty over part of the way, and then, too, because Doctor Savage happened to be with us. The Natives in our hands proved to be most unreliable and obstinate. Without constant attention, they would as soon have dropped the wounded man as not, and they seemed to bestow no care on their suffering countryman.

INDIAN RESOURCEFULNESS

However, the Indian bearers carried him to Mapumulo in splendid style. All our resourcefulness was put to the test during the march. After we had finished the most difficult part of our journey along a narrow and steep pathway, the Japanese stretcher on which we were carrying the patient, who was very bulky, gave way, fortunately without hurting him. The railway stretcher, on which he was first carried, had already broken under his weight. What were we to do? Luckily, we had skilled men among us. We temporarily mended the railway stretcher, and took our charge safely to Mapumulo, reaching there about 4 p.m., a distance probably of over 15 miles.

After a day’s rest in Mapumulo, we returned, on the 13th, to Thring’s Post, only to retrace our steps on the 14th to a spot near Mapumulo, where we are encamped for the present. With the capture of Messini and his fellow-chief, the rebellion seems to be over, and we are now resting, expecting orders every day to be disbanded. Thus, since the 3rd day of July, our Corps has accompanied all the important operations; and at the end of them, the writer of these notes is able to confidently assert that the little band is capable of performing any work that may be entrusted to it, and that can be done by any other such Corps.

263. SPEECH AT RECEPTION TO AMBULANCE CORPS

_The Natal Indian Congress gave a reception to the Indian Stretcher-Bearer Corps which was disbanded on July 19, after six weeks at the front. Tributes were paid to the work of the Corps, to which Gandhiji replied. The following is an extract from a report of the proceedings._

_DURBAN, July 20, 1906_

Thanking the organization on behalf of the Corps, Mr. Gandhi said that what the Corps had done was only its duty. If the Indians really wanted to show their appreciation of the work of the Corps, they should try through the Government to have a permanent Corps set up and should also exert themselves to improve their physique in order to qualify for admission. He said that if, for any reason, the traders could not enlist, other educated Indians as well as the servants and clerks of traders could easily do so. From experience gained during the fighting, he could say that the whites treated the Indians very cordially, and distinctions based on colour had ceased to exist. If a larger Indian Corps was formed on a permanent footing, such fellow-feeling would increase, and it was likely that in the process white prejudice against Indians might altogether disappear. He therefore very strongly recommended the formation of such a Corps.

264. STATEMENT ON THE DIAMOND JUBILEE LIBRARY

At a meeting of the Natal Indian Congress held in the Congress Hall it was decided, among other things, to present silver medals to members of the Stretcher-Bearer Corps. The question of the management of the Diamond Jubilee Library also came up for discussion. Gandhiji made the following statement, which is an extract from the report of the proceedings.

DURBAN,

July 23, 1906

The Diamond Jubilee Library was started to mark the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Victoria’s rule. The ownership of the Library was vested in a special committee, which was also entrusted with its management, and the books were kept in the Congress Hall.¹ As the Lallubhai Library is not functioning at the moment, I saw the President of the Library, Mr. Ravishankar Bhatt, about bringing the books back to the Congress Hall, and he has agreed to return them. I have still to see one or two other gentlemen in this connection, and after securing their consent, the requisite transport will be sent to fetch the books.

265. TRANSVAAL PERMITS

In view of the recent decisions² of the Supreme Court of the Transvaal on the Peace Preservation Ordinance, it is necessary still further to examine the legal position created by those decisions. The dismissal by the Supreme Court of the application by the Attorney-General for a review of the Bhyat case leaves the question raised in that case undecided. Whilst, therefore, the Magistrate at Volksrust is bound by his own decision, and to recognise the Dutch Registration Certificates as equivalent to permits, we have no pronouncement from the Supreme Court endorsing the magisterial view. And in the face of the contention raised by the Attorney-General, the state of the law is one of painful uncertainty to the Indian refugees. Other magistrates may unconsciously attach weight to the argument advanced on behalf of the Crown. It may then come to pass that an Indian holding the Dutch certificate may safely re-enter the Transvaal through Volksrust, and another equally qualified, passing through, say, Komatipoort, may be prevented from so doing. Not even the most violent anti-Asiatic would, we presume, be able to justify such a deplorable state of things. The Supreme Court decision on the registration law bears out the whole contention of the Indian community. Can Lord Selborne still claim for the Transvaal administration a reasonable spirit in the enforcement of the Peace Preservation Ordinance and Law 3 of 1885? We trust that the ever-vigilant British Indian Association will invite His Excellency’s answer to the query.

266. LETTER TO W. WEDDERBURN

Johannesburg,

July 30, 1906

Sir William Wedderburn, Baronet
84-5 Palace Chambers
London, England

Dear Sir,

I have just returned from the front. Although I cannot now be of any use in connection with the Report of the Constitution Committee, it is still the opinion of the British Indian Association that I should proceed to England accompanied by one or two merchants, not necessarily to influence the letters patent that will be granted but to place the British Indian position personally before the authorities. I shall, therefore, be obliged if you will kindly let me know by cable whether such a deputation is likely to be of any use whatsoever. If it is considered unnecessary, the word “needless” would explain the meaning. If you think that a deputation such as the above should proceed, please cable “yes”. I do not know whether the end of September or October will be a suitable time.

I remain,

Yours truly,

268. LETTER TO PRINCIPAL MEDICAL OFFICER

[JOHANNESBURG,
July 31, 1906]

TO
COL. J. HYSLOP
PRINCIPAL MEDICAL OFFICER
NATAL MILITIA
PIETERMARITZBURG
NATAL.

SIR,

The Indian Stretcher-Bearer Corps was disbanded on the 19th inst., and the Corps reached Durban on the 20th.

The Corps was called upon to do the work of disinfecting the camp at Mapumulo, of dressing injuries and wounds, and of marching with the troops and doing stretcher work. Most of the bearers accompanied the troops during the operations at the Tugela, the Otimati and the Umvoti Valleys. In my humble opinion, the men did the work willingly and skilfully. The object of the Natal Indian Congress, in offering to form the Corps, was to show that Indians recognized their responsibilities as settlers in Natal, and to induce the Government to utilise Indians as a permanent portion of the Natal Militia. I venture to think that my countrymen are essentially fit for ambulance and hospital work. Trooper Forder, whom we carried from Otimati, had, in addition to being carried, to be nursed by us, and he was so satisfied that he sought me out specially on his recovery to express his appreciation of the men’s work.

The Corps consisted of some skilled English-educated Indians, as also of Indians of the labourer type, but all of them were intelligent workers, and capable in civil life of earning much more than what would be paid to them by the Indian community. As the community was anxious that its offer should be accepted, in order to avoid any difficulty, the men were induced to accept only one shilling and six pence per day, which they gladly did; but, in my opinion, it is not possible to get intelligent men for less than £1 per week.

1 In his reply, Col. Hyslop, acknowledging Gandhiji’s letter as of this date, conveyed the Militia Commander’s thanks to the members of the Ambulance Corps and expressed his own appreciation “of the very valuable services afforded to the Medical Department of the Militia, not only as stretcher-bearers, but also in connection with the more important work of sanitation”.

VOL. 5: 6 NOVEMBER, 1905 - 3 NOVEMBER, 1906 285
I also think that those who may be called leaders of stretcher parties should receive five shillings per day.

Members of the Corps were all untrained and untried men; they were called upon, too, to do responsible and independent work, and to face danger unarmed. If the Government would form a permanent Ambulance Corps, I think that special training is absolutely necessary, and that they should all be armed for self-protection.

As one who has been intimately connected with the Indian community for the last thirteen years, I have ventured to place the above views before you for your consideration.

[ Yours faithfully. ]

M. K. GANDHI

269. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

THE DEPUTATION TO ENGLAND

[ Before August 4, 1906 ]

A meeting of the Committee of the British Indian Association was held last Friday, the 27th. Messrs Abdul Gani, Essop Mian, Coovadia, Mahomed Shahbuddin, Gulam Saheb, Mahomed Hoosain, Bhikhubhai; also Messrs Haji Habib and Amod Tayob of Pretoria, Messrs Amod Bhayat of Heidelberg and Omar Haji Amod Zaveri of Durban were present among others.

It was decided, after some discussion, that it was still necessary to send a deputation to England, as we were concerned more with the laws that would be enacted in the Transvaal after the Constitution had come into effect than with the Report of the Constitution Committee. On a proposal made by Haji Habib, it was resolved to ask for a grant of £250 out of the £1,000 sanctioned by the Natal Indian Congress towards the expenses of the deputation. Each member could draw up to £6120 as expenses, and the rest of the amount might be used to defray the expenses of the deputation as a whole. Furthermore, the Congress might avail itself of any aid received from the Cape. The Secretary has been asked to write a letter to that effect. If two persons go on deputations the expenses would be about £500. The Committee is of the opinion that the deputation should include Mr. Gandhi and a member from the trading class to represent the Transvaal. It has been decided to call for subscriptions at every place; the names of the members who should visit different places for the purpose have also been drawn up. The Secretary has been asked to write letters to various places, and these have actually reached all the principal towns in the Transvaal. If therefore the requisite amount is raised; if the Natal Indian Congress agrees to contribute from it up to £250 towards expenses; and if no instructions to the contrary are received from England, the deputation will, in all probability, leave in September.

WAR CLAIMS

I append herewith the list of war claimants that has been published in the Transvaal Gazette. It is necessary to draw the readers’ attention to it, for the sums shown therein, if not claimed, will lapse at the end of the current year.

THE RETURN OF T.M.R.

The contingent which was despatched from here to reinforce the units engaged in suppressing the Native revolt, namely, the Transvaal Mounted Rifles, has now returned. It was received with much pomp and eclat by the people of the Transvaal. Big meetings were held in its honour and grand banquets given. The celebrations still continue. Reuter messages about the discharge of the Indian Stretcher-Bearer Corps and the good work done by it have appeared in the local papers.

270. SECRET JUSTICE

Our Johannesburg Correspondent last week drew pointed attention to Mr. Loveday’s approval of the work of the Permit Department regarding Asiatics, and his endorsement of the appointment of an inspecting officer at the coast. There is much more behind this incident than appears on the surface. The public have no knowledge of the fact that there are what are practically secret advisory boards, which control the action of the Registrar of Asiatics who has charge of the issue of permits. For all practical purposes, therefore, the Registrar, although nominally the responsible officer for issuing permits, is merely an agent of the advisory boards, mechanically following their directions. Evidently, Mr. Loveday is the chief of these advisory boards, without being publicly appointed by the Government. Hence the innumerable difficulties placed in the way of British Indians, who have a bona-fide right to re-enter the Transvaal.

We do not object to the greatest strictness being exercised in connection with applications of refugees, but we do emphatically object to the secrecy that shrouds the doings of these advisory boards.
We are not aware that the parties who are immediately interested are heard before the boards or allowed to be represented. The boards alone know what evidence they take and what evidence they consider sufficient for establishing claims on the part of British Indians to re-enter the Colony. Under a system such as this, favouritism—it may be quite unconscious—must exist. Bitter complaints reach us from all sides as to the rejection of claims that are easily provable. Boys of tender years are kept out of the Colony by these boards, which have been arbitrarily armed with powers to decide upon the applications of British Indian refugees.

It is a strange method of dealing out justice to entrust avowed partisans with the duty of judging their opponents or persons whom they have hitherto traduced in unmeasured terms. The least that the Transvaal Administration owes to British Indians is that they should be able to know their position definitely. Severest rules of procedure, if well defined and well understood, would be preferable to the hole-and-corner enquiry that is now being held as to British Indian permits. No Indian can today feel safe that he can re-enter the Transvaal without difficulty, on production of evidence of his prior residence. The conditions which the Transvaal Administration has created for the unfortunate British Indian refugees are most unsatisfactory, and discreditable in the extreme. It has gone very much further than Natal or Cape Colony, where, no matter what the restrictions are on immigration, everyone knows the legal position, and everyone is capable of asserting it in a Court of Law. It is a state of things which it is the duty of every lover of justice and fairplay to see ended.

271. MR. BYTE’S WILL

We published in our last issue a brief account of the late Mr.
Byte’s will¹ which deserves to be taken note of by rich Indians.

¹ A Gujarati news item in Indian Opinion, dated July 28, 1906, said that, under
Mr. Byte earned millions of pounds in South Africa, and gave away the best part of that fortune to that country. Being an alien and having earned his name and fortune under the aegis of the British flag, he has provided for the widespread spending of a considerable part of his fortune in England as well. He has thus directed that his millions be used for deserving causes. The major portion of his legacy is to be spent on education. He has donated hundreds of acres of land in Johannesburg where a huge educational centre is to be set up; it is due exclusively to his munificence that the University of the Transvaal has come into existence. Such generosity has been an important factor in the progress of the whites. They know how to make money and also how best to spend it. We are backward in both respects, particularly in spending money aright. Even when we spend it, we do so indiscriminately, and largely for selfish ends or on personal pleasures.

To take the example of South Africa, there are few among us who have spent their money on the proper education of Indian children. It behoves us therefore to bear in mind such examples as Mr. Byte’s. It is our prime duty to provide all the necessary means for the education of Indian children in South Africa. Our second duty is towards women’s education. As long as our women do not realise their duty as mothers, the Indian people are bound to remain backward. And, thirdly, it is the duty of all gainfully employed, adult Indians to find some time at night to receive education. To do all this, money is needed. If Indians would come forward to emulate Mr. Byte, these things could easily be done. It is quite proper that we demand rights in South Africa and it is unjust that we should be denied those rights. We must, however, admit that we do not deserve them fully. It takes two to make a quarrel, and had we been without faults, we would not suffer in this land the hardships that we do.

Indian Opinion, 4-8-1906

Mr. Byte’s will, £1,200,000 had been donated for improving transport and communications in South Africa, £200,000 for founding a University in Johannesburg, £20,000 for education in the Transvaal, £15,000 for education at Kimberley and £15,000 for education in the Cape Colony.
272. EGYPT AND NATAL—A COMPARISON

IS THIS CIVILIZATION?

A controversy is going on in England about what the Natal army did during the Kaffir rebellion. The people there believe that the whites of Natal perpetrated great atrocities on the Kaffirs. In reply to such critics, The Star has pointed to the doings of the Imperial army in Egypt. Those among the Egyptian rebels who had been captured were ordered to be flogged. The flogging was continued to the limits of the victims’ endurance; it took place in public and was watched by thousands of people. Those sentenced to death were also hanged at the same time. While those sentenced to death were hanging, the flogging of the others was taken up. While the sentences were being executed, the relatives of the victims cried and wept until many of them swooned. If this be true, there is no reason why there should be such an outcry in England against the Natal outrage.

THE ELGIN CONSTITUTION

The resolution to grant a new Constitution to the Transvaal and the details that have been published regarding it are at present a subject of public discussion. There is, of course, a good deal of difference between the Constitution awarded last year by Mr. Lyttelton and the one now proposed by Lord Elgin.

According to the Lyttelton Constitution, the governance of the country was to continue in the hands of the British bureaucracy. According to Lord Elgin’s, it will be carried on by the party which has a majority of elected members [in the Legislature]. This is the main difference between the two. The Lyttelton Constitution envisaged representative government, that is, a government consisting of men who understand the wishes of the people, while the Elgin Constitution proposes responsible government, wherein the executive will be responsible to elected members; so that the latter can, if they will, remove it from power. In Ceylon and Mauritius, there is representative government, Natal and the Cape Colony have responsible government.

Another great difference is that Lord Elgin’s Constitution places the Boers in a position in which they can form a government. Thus either the Boers or the British can come to power in the Transvaal, as indeed they can in the Cape. The Constitution has not yet been drafted, but Mr. Churchill has said that this would soon be done. The drafting will take about three weeks, and the Parliament elected under the new Constitution is not likely to meet before January.

PLACE OF INDIANS

What will be our position under the new set-up? It is a very difficult question to answer. Nothing definite can be learnt from reports of Mr. Churchill’s speech cabled here. Our situation could not be worse. In any case, it is certain that, whatever new laws are made, they will not be enacted before January next.

NATAL AND THE TRANSVAAL

The unification of Natal and the Transvaal is being discussed. Some men of experience and influence favour this course of action. A gentleman named Mr. Soutter has expressed his views on the subject in The Daily Mail. He says that, if the two are united, the “Indian Policy” of Natal will have to be revised. The Editor of The Daily Mail thinks that it will be very difficult for Natal to merge in other States so long as it imports indentured labour.

THE STATE OF SOUTH AFRICA

Underlying all the thoughts in people’s minds is the poverty of South Africa. At present, trade is slack and land prices are very low. People are desperately looking around to see how matters can be improved. But all things considered, one is driven to the conclusion that, for another two years, there can be no hope of any appreciable change. According to what economists call natural laws and men of faith, the will of God, it appears that conditions change from moment to moment. He who rises must fall. This is true of a country as well. In the vicissitudes of life, South Africa has seen good days, and now it is her turn to go through bad ones. She has not yet passed through even two lean years. Sometimes it takes three, five or even seven years for a change to set in. If this is true, it will take at least another year and a half for present conditions to change. In the meanwhile, those who are patient and live within their means will win through. The rest will be washed away with the tide.

A Discussion in the Legislature about Asiatics

In the Legislative Council today, Mr. Duncan gave the following information:¹

When the Council meets again, the Government proposes to introduce a Bill for the registration of Asiatics. That legislation would be in fulfilment of the policy of the Imperial Government with regard to Asiatics in this Colony: first, to afford just and fair treatment to those Asiatics who are already here and settled in this country; and secondly, to leave to the responsible government the question whether or not to allow new Asiatics to enter the country, and if they are to be allowed, under what restrictions. That is the policy the present Government has been attempting to carry out with the approval of the Imperial Government, and in doing so, it has had to rely upon the law passed by the Boer Government as well as the permit law² of the present Government. Experience has shown that these laws are not adequate to prevent the Asiatics from entering the Colony; for doubtless many Asiatics who had no title to enter the Colony have entered it on false evidence. Those who have never been in the Transvaal before have made false declarations in order to come in. The law regarding registration is vague; whenever a serious attempt was made to apply it, it led to litigation in the courts. We have therefore to accomplish two things: give fair and just treatment to those who were here before the war; and prevent an influx of Asiatics into this country before a responsible government is established. We should therefore get all the Asiatics now resident in the Transvaal registered afresh. They should take out [fresh] registration certificates, so that nobody may question their bona fides. Simultaneously, it is proposed to remove certain disabilities under which these Asiatics labour. No material changes in the law regarding ownership of land are envisaged. But it is proposed to enact a law which will enable Asiatics to hold the land on which their places of worship are built; again, the heirs of those who held land before the passing of Law 3 of 1885 will be enabled to inherit it. Furthermore, it is also proposed to make certain modifications in the existing permit law which will enable Asiatics to visit the country temporarily.

The statement is so important and disturbing that the Committee of the British Indian Association proposes to take immediate action on it. It is very doubtful now if the deputation can proceed to England in

THE DEPUTATION

The deputation to England has for the present been postponed as a result of Mr. Duncan’s statement, which I sent last week. Some persons were under the impression that the deputation was to visit England only in connection with the Report of the Constitution Committee, and that, since the nature of the Constitution to be granted to the Transvaal had been decided upon, there was no longer any point in sending the deputation.

This is a mistaken view. For, in the matter of the Constitution, there was little that the deputation could have done. Whatever laws are contemplated will be enacted later [that is, after the Constitution comes into force]. Even now we can approach the Imperial Government and represent before them our case regarding those laws. The deputation can therefore go to England to some advantage only so long as the Transvaal Parliament has not met and it is not known what new laws are going to be enacted. So far I have referred to the Transvaal only; but if and when the deputation does go, it will be its duty to take up the entire South African problem. This can be done whenever it may be that the deputation visits England. Moreover, if our case is put before our sympathisers who are already working on our behalf, they will understand it the better and will be better able to lend us active support. Furthermore, we would then get help from all parties. The Congress Committee, the East India Association and other bodies are agitating on our behalf. If all of them could be brought together and a committee formed, it would help us a great deal. It is thus clear that the deputation, if sent, is bound to have some effect.

Mr. Duncan’s statement, as I have pointed out, has served to discourage the idea of sending a deputation. A communication in the matter had already reached England last week. The Rend Daily Mail

1 This date seems to have been retained from the previous issue through oversight. This despatch must have been written after that date.
2 Vide “Johannesburg Letter”, 11-8-1906
3 British Committee of the Indian National Congress has published a letter from Mr. Gandhi on the subject. The British Indian Association has asked for a copy of the Bill referred to by Mr. Duncan. And as soon as it is received, petitions will be despatched. The situation is very serious; and we can save ourselves from this fresh attack only if we put up a tough fight.

As for the permits, on the one hand, new anti-Indian Acts are being drafted and, on the other, severity in dealing with Indians is increasing. Mr. Burgess has been inspecting the ports, and, as the rumour goes, many men have been obliged to return. One does not get a permit even after much inconvenience. It would seem that one can get a permit only if Mr. Loveday chooses to grant one. The issue of a registration certificate to children has been stopped; but in that case children should be free to enter. A question has been raised on this matter. Mr. Lichtenstein has written to the Colonial Secretary in strong terms pointing out some instances that serve clearly to illustrate the inconveniences encountered at the Permit Office. I give below some of these instances.

(1) When a letter was addressed to the Registrar regarding Shaikh Daud on June 21, he was informed that the decision would be arrived at when the Advisory Board met, but that it was not certain when the Board would meet. On July 10, he received a communication on the same subject saying that his application had been forwarded to the Advisory Board.

(2) On an application being made about a minor son of Hafejee Musa, the Registrar demanded proof of his age, etc. The evidence was produced on June 21. A reply was received on June 26, which said that the matter would be investigated in Natal.

(3) A permit was refused to Sakoor Nanjee despite the evidence of a disinterested physician and of the District Surgeon of Pretoria that he was only 16 years old.

(4) Though medical evidence has been produced to prove that Ebrahim Amod is only 12 years old, the Permit Office insists that the boy’s age is 16.

Mr. Lichtenstein has cited 14 such examples. It remains to be seen what kind of a reply he will receive.

between Pretoria and Johannesburg, by which Indians are either not allowed to travel at all or are made to sit in the guard’s compartment. In deference to the General Manager’s wishes, the Association temporarily agreed to the restriction relating to the 8-30 morning trains both ways. The General Manager wants such restriction to apply to the 5-30 train in the evening as well. The Association has refused to agree and, consequently, the matter is still under discussion.

275. LETTER TO DADABHAI NAOROJI

JOHANNESBURG,
August 6, 1906

THE HON’BLE D. NAOROJI
DEAR SIR,

The Colonial Secretary, Mr. Duncan, has made a statement in the Legislative Council of which I send you copy herewith.

The statement is most extraordinary, and if legislation is introduced based on it, frightful injustice will be done to the Indian community. There is not a vestige of justice and Air treatment about the proposed legislation. Robbed of the soft words which clothe it, it means that every Indian in the Colony will have to be now registered for the third time without the slightest excuse. Land is to be registered in the names of Indian trustees for religious purposes, but this is no gain whatsoever as the Supreme Court has decided that such land can be registered in spite of Law 3 of 1885. The only relief that is to be granted is in one individual case about which I have already written to you, namely, that of the estate of the late Aboobaker Amod, and if that relief is granted, it is not a question of just and fair treatment but it is a question of simple duty to be discharged by the British

1 This letter as well as the one dated August 13 (p. 393) seems to have been addressed to Dadabhai Naoroji and some others, including the editor of India. The notings on the two letters, presumably by Dadabhai Naoroji, show that both of them were replied to on September 6, 1906 and that he deleted the last seven words of the first paragraph and the last two paragraphs of the first letter, added to it the last two paragraphs of the second and forwarded it to Mr. Morley and Lord Elgin, as we are informed by India in its prefatory note to the statement which it published as “from a well-informed correspondent”. Except for a few verbal changes, this is the same as the one sent by Dadabhai Naoroji to the two Secretaries of State.

2 Vide “Letter to Dadabhai Naoroji”, 19-3-1906
Government towards an individual British subject.

If the proposed legislation is passed, the position of the British Indian will, as a matter of fact, be much worse than it is now. It should not be forgotten that the £3 registration is not an annual tax. Those who are in the Colony have paid the £3 and, under Law 3 of 1885, they cannot be called upon to pay over again. The proposed remission is, therefore, totally meaningless, for it is not to apply to newcomers, who are to be barred entirely until the coming Responsible Government chooses to pass an immigration law which may impose very severe restrictions. The question of granting visiting permits is also, I have no hesitation in saying, a blind, because such permits can be legally granted even under the existing law. That they are not granted where they ought to be is a discredit attached to the Government from which it cannot free itself by passing new legislation. I very much fear that the real situation is not understood by the Imperial Government, and that the local Government has evidently convinced the Imperial Government that, by passing legislation in the direction sketched by Mr. Duncan, they would be really granting concessions.

I have said before that, under the proposed legislation, the position would be much worse. I say so because I know that endless mischief is likely to be caused by new legislation. Indians were registered during the [rule of the] Dutch Government; registration then was simple. They were again registered after British rule was established; registration was then much more complex, and respectable Indians have been called upon to put their thumb-impressions. The third registration, if it comes at all, will, it is needless to say, be stricter still. All this because a few Indians who were not resident before war have stolen into the Colony and if they have done so, it is owing to the corrupt officials who were in charge at one time of the Permit Department. The matter had become so serious that, on the initiative taken by the British Indian Association, these officials were arrested and criminally tried. They were discharged by an indulgent jury but the Government was so satisfied of their guilt, that both these officials were discharged.

I hope, therefore, that unless some substantial justice can be done to British Indians before Responsible Government is granted, and unless the British Government will, in accordance with pre-war promises, put them, in its own words, on the same footing as British Indians at the Cape, it will be infinitely better that Law 3 of 1885 remained as it was and that the whole question was considered by Responsible Government.
Of course, all these remarks will still leave it free to the Government to do justice in the case of the late Aboobaker Amod with which, after all, the British Indian community as a whole is not concerned.

The unforeseen situation having arisen here, the question of a deputation proceeding from South Africa must remain in abeyance, as all the energy will have to be concentrated upon preventing this latest proposal to perpetrate an injustice on the British Indians in the Transvaal.

I venture to think that a personal interview with the Secretary of State for India as also the Secretary of State for the Colonies is necessary.

I remain,
Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

276. LETTER TO “THE RAND DAILY MAIL”

[JOHANNESBURG,
Before August 9, 1906]

[TO
THE EDITOR
The Rand Daily Mail]

SIR,

I trust you will permit me to offer a few remarks on your leading article regarding the Asiatic legislation foreshadowed by Mr.
Duncan in what I would venture to term his extraordinary statement.
In his brief pronouncement he thrice told his hearers that it was the desire of the Government to accord to the resident Asiatic population.
“Just and fair treatment” and that it was for that reason that the legislation described by him was to be introduced, on the Legislative Council reassembling.

² This was reproduced in Indian Opinion, 11-8-1906.
You have considered that the Ordinance to be passed will mean generous treatment of the resident Asiatic population.

I very much fear that there is absolutely no generosity about the proposed legislation, but that it will fall very far short of even “just and fair treatment”. Re-registration is certainly not part of such treatment, and it is perfectly meaningless. Every Indian who has entered the Colony is supposed to have been registered for the most part for the second time. The second registration was, in reality, a concession to the Permit Department, which was at the time very much appreciated. A third registration is not a remedy for the evil of alleged fraudulent entrance of Asiatics into the Colony. It is easy enough to examine the present registration certificates of the resident Asiatic population, and to prosecute those who are without them. The British Indian Association has denied the charge of any wholesale fraudulent entrance. There will always be a few people prepared to break laws, no matter how stringently devised and how well enforced. To brand as criminals a whole community—for that is what re-registration implies—is hardly “just” or “fair”.

But Mr. Duncan says, in consideration for a fresh registration, he would give four things to the Asiatics, namely: (1) abolition of the £3 tax; (2) permission to the Asiatics to hold land for religious purposes; (3) permission for those Asiatics who held land before Law 3 of 1885 came into force to transmit same to their heirs; (4) authority to issue temporary permits to Asiatic visitors.

Now the first concession is, shall I say, a mere blind. It should be remembered that it applies to those only who are resident in the Colony, or perhaps to those who, being pre-war residents of the Transvaal, have a right to re-enter. The resident population has already paid the £3 and the majority of those who are still outside the Colony have also done likewise. There is no warrant in the existing legislation to charge the £3 fee twice. It is not an annual tax, but it is a fee that has to be paid once for all under Law 3 of 1885 by Asiatics who wish to settle in the Colony.

Nor is there any merit about the proposed authority to be given for holding land for religious purposes because it is possible to do so under the existing law. The Superior Courts have decided that Coloured persons can, as a corporate body, hold land for religious purposes.

The third grant would have been a concession, if it was applicable to any large body of Asiatics. Mr. Duncan well knows that there is only one such piece of land. It would be a performance of simple duty to allow the heirs to hold their two-fifths of an erf in the Transvaal, and in any case, in doing so, it is not the community that will receive justice but an individual.

The fourth, of course, is again no concession. Mr. Nomura and Mr. Manga suffered not because there was no authority to issue temporary permits, but because there was a disinclination to exercise the authority. The difficulty, therefore, lies not in the law but in its administration.

I hope I have thus clearly shown that there is no question of “just and fair treatment” of the resident Asiatic population behind the forecast given by the Colonial Secretary on Saturday last. On the contrary, Damocles has again raised his sword [sic] over the heads of the poor Asians who, because of their belief in the sanctity of the British subject idea, have ventured to migrate to the Transvaal. There is no trace in Mr. Duncan’s statement of the fulfilment of the promises made before the war and, even after it, by Lord Milner and other representatives of the Crown.

And if I may repeat what I have already said, what is it that British Indians (to distinguish them from other Asians) want? They accept the doctrine of the Transvaal having the right to regulate immigration, and they—although such was not the case during the Dutch Government—are quite willing that restrictions after the Cape or the Australian Immigration Law applying to British subjects may be imposed on them; but as against that, they claim that those British Indians, who have settled in the country, ought to have full civil liberty, namely, the right to move about freely, the right to own land subject to such general restrictions as may be imposed to provide against speculative acquisition, and the right to trade subject again to such municipal restriction as may be deemed advisable in the interests of sanitation and of fair trade. It will be only when this elementary right of the British Indian is recognised, and not till then, that it will be possible for any representative of the Crown to say that British Indians are receiving “just and fair treatment”.

Remember, there is no attempt in the above statement to claim any political rights. British Indians only ask for what can easily be given, even by those who believe in the gospel of a white South Africa, if, that is to say, South Africa, to paraphrase Lord Selborne’s words, is to be white not only in the exterior but also in the interior.

Yours, etc.,

M. K. GANDHI

The Rand Daily Mail, 9-8-1906
277. “FAIR AND JUST TREATMENT”

On the adjournment of the Legislative Council of the Transvaal on Saturday last, the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Duncan, made an important statement on the proposed Asiatic legislation. In the course of his statement, which occupies only half a column of the Transvaal Leader, Mr. Duncan has thrice repeated that Asiatics resident in the Transvaal are entitled to “fair and just treatment”. The honourable gentleman then proceeds to expound his meaning of such treatment. We have never seen a pronouncement so misleading as Mr. Duncan’s and we can only hope that he is himself labouring under a mistaken view of the Law 3 of 1885, and has therefore come to the conclusion that, by the legislation he foreshadowed on Saturday last, he is really granting substantial relief. We will now proceed to shew that, instead of the legislation in question granting any relief at all to the Asiatic community settled in the Transvaal, it will simply cause intense irritation, and probably take away from the community what it already possesses.

Mr. Duncan has promised four things:

(1) Fresh registration of all Asiatics in the Colony.
(2) Abolition of the £3 registration fee.
(3) Permission to the Asiatic religious communities to hold land for religious purposes.
(4) Permission to the heirs of those Asiatics, who held land before the Law 3 of 1885 was passed, to get the same transferred in their own names.

The first proposal is most mischievous and most dangerous, and it is because the Government wishes to push it through that the last three are to be given as a sop, although even the first has been so cleverly put by Mr. Duncan as to give the impression that it is to be undertaken in the interests of the Asiatic community.

Let us go back to the past. Indians who held registration certificates from the Dutch Government were not called upon by law to take out any fresh registration certificates, but in order to have the same system applicable to all, when Lord Milner decided to enforce the Law 3 of 1885 as to the £3 fee, on representations made by the then Chief Secretary for Permits, British Indians consented to have fresh registration certificates on which were to be impressed thumb-prints. This procedure has since been uniformly followed. Let it be remembered that it was admitted by the Chief Secretary for Permits, acting under legal advice, that there was no legal obligation on the part of the Indian community to take out fresh registration certificates. When, therefore, the British Indian Association consented to the proposal, it was naturally gratefully appreciated.

The hardships that the community had to undergo, when fresh registration took place, are still vivid in the minds of many Indians. They have not forgotten that they were practically pulled out of their houses in the early hours of the morning. Mr. Duncan now says that this registration is useless. Why, we do not know. It is therefore proposed to register the whole of the Asiatics [sic] over again, as if they were criminals. Mr. Duncan says that many Asiatics—one could wish he had discriminated between Asiatics and Asiatics, and said whether in his remarks he referred to British Indians, or Chinese, or other Asiatics—who had not previously resided in the Transvaal, entered the Colony under false declarations. We grant, for the sake of argument, that this is so. How is fresh registration to remedy the evil, and why should the majority of innocent men suffer because of the guilty few?

And may we here remind Mr. Duncan that, if some Asiatics have so entered the Colony, they have done so because of the corruption that was at one time rampant in one of the Chief Asiatic Offices. But, as a matter of fact, the British Indian Association has stoutly denied the charge that an appreciable number of Asiatics have entered the Colony under false declarations. In any case, it is a matter for judicial enquiry, and the Peace Preservation Ordinance is clear enough to meet cases of such description.

The second concession is again no concession at all. We hope Mr. Duncan is not thinking of the registration fee as if it were an annual charge. It is a fee only to be paid once. All Indians who are resident in the Colony, and who are by law required to pay the registration fee, have already paid it. Wherein, then, does the remission come into play? It certainly does not apply to the future new immigrants, because the door is to be completely barred against them until it is opened by the Responsible Government, under such conditions as it chooses to lay down. The abolition of the £3 fee, therefore, is totally meaningless.

Dealing with this subject, Mr. Duncan was pleased to say that the registration law proved a failure each time an attempt was made to seriously administer it. This is hardly correct. It has undoubtedly proved a failure when the Government has attempted to import into the law a meaning which the late Dutch Government never intended to give it. The law requires registration of those Asiatics who intend to settle in the Transvaal for purposes of trade or otherwise. The local Government wanted to go further, and wished to register Indians, whether they were children or wives, or whether they wanted to trade or not. In this attempt, the Supreme Court has frustrated the Government. Is the law, therefore, vague and uncertain? The answer, from any unbiased person, would be an emphatic “No”. It is uncertain only to those partisans who wish to impose on Indians disabilities which the late President Kruger and his Government never even dreamed of.

The third concession is that relating to land held for religious purposes. The Witwatersrand High Court has laid it down that such land can be held by any Coloured persons, and as a matter of fact, British Indians have now ceased to trouble the Government for any such permission, and are preparing to have Mosque properties in the Transvaal duly registered in the names of Indian trustees. They, therefore, do not require any authority or protection from the Government. Thus, here again there is absolutely no concession given to the Asiatics.

The fourth is undoubtedly a concession, but it does not affect the Asiatic community as such. It is meant to give relief in only one individual case. There is only one piece of property in the Transvaal that was held by an Indian before Law 3 of 1885 came into force—two-thirds\(^1\) of an erf in extent—and if relief is granted in that case, and the property is allowed to be held by the heirs, it will be a case of the British Government performing its simple duty to an individual British subject. To dignify such a proposal by the name of a concession to the Asiatic community is to offer an insult to its intelligence.

So far, therefore, as Law 3 of 1885 is concerned, its repeal in the manner foreshadowed by Mr. Duncan is totally unnecessary, and will give rise to endless difficulties, from which perhaps British Indians are at present free.

Regarding the Peace Preservation Ordinance, Mr. Duncan mentioned that provision would be made for permits being granted to visitors. This again is, we would say with deference, a mere blind. Hitherto, no provision has been found necessary for granting such permits. It is true that the Government have raised difficulties in granting them, and it is, on that account, the greater discredit to them. They cannot free themselves from it by now sweetly talking of providing for temporary permits, which the law has ever allowed them to grant, but which, from fear of anti-Indian agitators, they have hitherto declined to do.

Mr. Duncan, again, says that the policy defined in his statement has been the policy of the Imperial Government, as also the local Government. This is hardly consistent with facts, because the policy of Lord Milner was that, even before the Responsible Government was granted, Asiatic legislation should be brought into line with British traditions, and Indians, who were either qualified by education or other attainments, should be placed on an equality with the other subjects of the Crown in the Transvaal. Such also was the policy laid down in Mr. Lyttelton’s dispatch. Mr. Duncan’s statement, therefore, is a distinct retrogression from what was intended either by Lord Milner or, later on, by Mr. Lyttelton.

We ask whether the thrice-repeated declaration of “fair and just treatment” has any foundation in fact, or is it that, in Lord Lytton’s words, “promises given to the ear are to be broken in practice”, and that the effect of Mr. Duncan’s declaration is to be exhausted in mere words?

278. SPEECH AT HAMIDIYA ISLAMIC SOCIETY

A meeting of Indians was held in the 17th Street Hall in the Malay Location, under the auspices of the Hamidiya Islamic Society of Johannesburg, then recently formed. Abdul Gani and Gandhiji, President and Honorary Secretary respectively of the British Indian Association, were among the invitees. On being requested by the President of the Society to address the gathering on the Political condition of the Transvaal Indians, Gandhiji made a speech, of which the following is a brief report:

JOHANNESBURG,
August 12, 1906

Mr. Gandhi, at the outset, thanked the Hamidiya Islamic Society and expressed his pleasure at the formation of this body. He regretted the controversy that was going on among the people over the question whether the Society had been formed in opposition to the British Indian Association. He declared that this impression was absolutely incorrect and added that, on the contrary, the new Society would serve to strengthen the British Indian Association and the two would help each other in future.

Speaking on the present political condition of Indians in the Transvaal Mr. Gandhi cited Mr. Duncan’s statement and explained at length how the situation was very serious. Pointing out the need for organizing a strong protest against this statement, he advised that the deputation to England be postponed. Adverting to the weak financial position of the British Indian Association, Mr. Gandhi called upon all those present to contribute to its funds. He also expressed the hope that the formation of such societies would greatly help the Muslims, who were backward in education, and appealed to them to do their best to overcome this disadvantage.

279. LETTER TO DADABHAI NAOROJI

P. O. BOX 968,

JOHANNESBURG,

August 13, 1906

DEAR SIR,

The current issue of Indian Opinion gives fullest information about the proposed change by Mr. Duncan in the Law 3 of 1885. Portions of Mr. Lyttelton’s and Lord Milner’s despatches and the full text of Law 3 of 1885 are also given.

It will be seen at a glance that Mr. Duncan is very much restricting the scope of the despatches in his proposed legislation. Neither Mr. Lyttelton nor Lord Milner have sic even mentioned anything about re-registration, and both of them have laid down that better-class Indians should, at least have full rights, so that for Mr. Duncan to state that he is carrying out the intentions of the Imperial Government is wide of the mark unless the Liberal ministers have veered round entirely and propose still farther to curtail the liberty of the British Indians than what the Conservative ministry was prepared to do.

I certainly think that while the Transvaal is under Crown Colony Government the Imperial Government should pass equitable legislation even though it may be as Lord Milner puts it “by using official majority and then throw the burden on the Responsible

DURBAN,

August 13, 1906

His Excellency the Right Honourable the Earl of Elgin, P.C., &c.

His Majesty’s Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies

London, England

Humbly sheweth that

Your Petitioners beg to draw Your Excellency’s attention to the Municipal Corporations Consolidation Bill passed recently by the Natal Parliament.

Your Petitioners have noticed with thankfulness Your Excellency’s despatch endorsing some of the objections raised by the Indian community to the Bill in question.

Your Petitioners, however, feel aggrieved that one of the objections raised against the Bill by your Petitioners has not been considered by Your Excellency, namely, the proposed disfranchisement of British Indians as voters at municipal elections.

When the Bill was under consideration by the Natal Parliament, the Indian community presented a petition embodying its objections to the Bill, copy of which is hereto attached for Your Excellency’s information.

British Indians resident in Natal feel that, if they are deprived of the municipal franchise, it will be a very serious grievance and will be a departure from the declaration of the responsible statesmen of Natal at the time the measure disfranchising Indians as to the Parliamentary vote was passed. It was then recognised that, if India did not possess

1 This is the date on the printed petition, which does not bear the names of the signatories, but Indian Opinion, 18-8-1906, in which this is reproduced, gives it as August 15.

parliamentary institutions, it certainly enjoyed municipal institutions, and that there were in India thousands of municipal voters.

No legitimate ground has been urged in favour of the contemplated disfranchisement. Indians do not aspire to any political power in the Colony of Natal, but they naturally resent interference with municipal liberty when they pay the same rates as the other ratepayers.

It has often been said that the Indian population in Natal is, for practical purposes, composed only of Indians of the indentured class. It is respectfully urged that such a statement would be hardly fair, in that there is at present in Natal a population of free Indians, who have paid their own passage-money, numbering about fifteen thousand, of whom the largest portion is to be found in Durban. These men belong to a very respectable class, and are mostly merchants and those connected with mercantile business. Some of them are even highly educated in the English language.

Your Petitioners humbly submit that to disfranchise such a class of people would be to subject them to uncalled-for degradation.

Your Petitioners, therefore, respectfully pray that Your Excellency will be pleased to favourably consider the subject matter of the petition and grant such relief as may be meet and proper.

And for this act of justice and mercy, your Petitioners, as in duty bound, shall for ever pray, etc., etc.

Dated at Durban this 13th day of August, Nineteen Hundred and Six.

MY DEAR SHETH SHRI HAJI ISMAIL HAJI ABOOBAKER,

Now there seems to be very solid ground for hoping that, within a short time, the land in Pretoria will be transferred to the names of both of you! Since Omar Sheth has already written to you of this, I need not dilate upon it.

I have always complained to Omar Sheth about the expenses there. These are hard times now in South Africa, and they are likely to become harder still. The prices of land have gone down by 66 per cent., and it would be no matter for surprise if they fell still further. The rent you used to get has decreased by a half and will further decrease. Even a well-furnished shop on the first floor in a place like West Street remains untenanted. If, in such bad times, you do not reduce your household and other expenditure, whatever property you have will be eroded. As it is, you are living, so to speak, on capital. That we are making some profit in trade is, however, a matter for satisfaction. But, then, that profit consists of stocks and of arrears collected from clients. The actual profit from trade cannot be reckoned precisely unless the final accounts are made up and goods converted into cash. I must say that Omar Sheth is living a very simple life. The house he lives in does not become a man of your status and reputation. The food is likewise simple. Besides, he is at present staying with me and living a more than usually austere life. I am sometimes pained at this, but allow things to continue in the hope that he will ultimately benefit by it. For example, last evening he only had bread, butter, papad and cocoa for dinner, and walked with me three-and-a-half miles before turning in for the night. I do not mean to suggest that you yourself should go to these lengths; but I do wish to say that your monthly expenses should not exceed £25. People will criticise you for cutting down on expenses, but such critics are really no friends at all, for they will not help you to run your household. It is therefore the duty of those who realize their condition to think of the hard times and live accordingly. What more shall I say? I write in this strain because I wish well of you.

I hope you are all right.

The document pertaining to the sale deed which you have signed and sent here does not bear the signature of a witness. I am therefore returning it to you for getting it witnessed. Please return it after getting it signed by a witness and attested by the Political Agent under his seal and signature.

282. INDIA FOR INDIANS

This today is the cry of thousands of voices in India. No one can say that India is today the home of a single people, but all of us wish it were. To bring this about, patriotic Indians have been suggesting all manner of remedies that occur to them. Among such Indians is the editor of the Indian World—a well-known monthly published from Calcutta. He says that India will not become a single nation until most of the people in the various parts of the country speak a common language. Though English-speaking people are found in the different regions, their number is as yet small and will always remain so, for the main reason that, since it is a foreign language and a difficult one at that, the common people will not be able to learn it. There is therefore little likelihood of India achieving nationhood through that language. For this purpose, Indians will have to choose one of the Indian languages. There are, of course, many Indians who can speak Gujarati, Bengali, Tamil and other languages; but there is hardly any chance of any of these spreading throughout the country. One language remains, namely, Hindustani, which is spoken by North Indians. Derived as it is from Sanskrit and Persian, it suits Hindus and Muslims alike. Moreover, since the fakirs and the sanyasis both speak it, they help to propagate it throughout the land. Many Englishmen too study it. It is thus spoken over an extensive area. The language itself is very sweet, polite and spirited. Many books have been, and are still being, written in it. The editor of the Indian World therefore suggests that it should be taught in every school in India in addition to the mother tongue. Parents too should inculcate the habit of speaking Hindustani to their children from their formative years. Only then can India truly become a nation.

283. JOHANNESBURG LETTER
August 18, 1906

MR. Bhabha’s Case

In deference to the counsel’s unfavourable opinion, the appeal in Mr. Mahomed Suliman Bhabha’s permit case, which was decided at Volksrust, has been withdrawn. On the advice of his counsel, Mr. Bhabha refused to leave the Transvaal within the notified time and was therefore prosecuted again. It was argued that the order passed by him could not prevent Mr. Bhabha from staying on in the Transvaal, as he had the right to enter the territory. But the Magistrate did not accept this plea and sentenced Mr. Bhabha to a month’s simple imprisonment, the minimum laid down. Mr. Bhabha has now appealed again, and it is believed that he will win.

IMPORTANT JUDGMENT IN LAND SUIT

This week, Sir William Smith has given an important decision on a petition presented to him. The well-known Sheth Mahomed Kasim Camroodeen of Johannesburg, whose entire land stood in the name of the late Mr. Chamberlain, wanted, on the latter’s death, to get it transferred to the name of another European. On the Registrar’s refusal to do so, the Sheth approached the court for an order of transfer. To begin with, Mr. Justice Smith himself raised an objection saying that the consent of the heir was necessary. It was argued before Mr. Justice Smith that the heir had no claim on the land. His Worship admitted the plea and issued orders for the transfer of the land to the name of the other European. It will be seen from this that, if proper precautions are taken in keeping the land in the name of a European, the true owner does not have to suffer in any way.

THE MALAY LOCATION

On behalf of the Location Committee, an application was made to the Town Council concerning the Malay Location. The Town Council, in its reply, says that the Location will not be allowed to continue on its present site, that long-term leases will not be granted to the residents, but that leases would instead be offered to them at Klipspruit. The Committee has decided to challenge this reply [in a court of law].

284. THE LATE MR. W. C. BONNERJEE

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Womesh Chunder Bonnerjee, one of the greatest Indian patriots of modern times. The late Mr. Bonnerjee belonged to what may be called the Naoroji school of patriots, who devoted their time and talents to their country’s good.
Mr. Bonnerjee was one of the foremost barristers in Bengal, and at a very early stage of his career rose to fame by his forensic eloquence and legal acumen. The unusual influence he thereby gained was used for the benefit of his country. The deceased was one of the founders of the Indian National Congress, of which he was the first President, and which he served up to the last day of his life, using his purse freely for the public cause.

Mr. Bonnerjee had an abundant faith in western education, of which he was so fine a product. He, therefore, bought a house in Croydon, where he passed half his time looking after the education of his children, with the result that the deceased statesman’s sons and daughters have received a liberal education, of which they have been making, like their father, a public use.

A life, such as Mr. Bonnerjee’s, teaches many a lesson to the present generation of Indian youth, and the best tribute that any Indian can render to the memory of the deceased is to copy his example. We tender to the late Mr. Bonnerjee’s family our respectful sympathy. Their loss is also India’s.

285. A PLEA FOR DISTINCTION

The Johannesburg Star has lately had a very severe leader on “Coloured Hooliganism”. The reflections of the leader-writer arose out of the recent riots which have taken place in Cape Town. Our contemporary has taken care to distinguish the “Coloured people” from the Malays and others who are also universally labelled “Coloured”. But there can be no doubt that, to the average newspaper reader, the term “Coloured people” has meant Malays, British Indians and all other Asiatics. The very distinction drawn by The Star presupposes such a confusion in the public mind.

The result of classing Asiatics and others as “Coloured people” has caused a great deal of undeserved injustice to the British Indians in South Africa. The most glaring instance is that given by Mr. Winston Churchill. The deprivation of the franchise from the British Indians has been justified by the Colonial Under-Secretary, on the ground that the Dutch understood the term “Natives”, that is, in this instance, “Coloured people”, to mean natives of any non-European country. Lord Milner, we know, has protested against any such use, or rather abuse, of the term, but his protest has not availed to protect them from the above mentioned injustice.

There are, at present, in the Statute-books of the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony, laws which apply to British Indians, because, according to usage, the term “Coloured people” is applied to British Indians, although, from the nature of the legislation, one would consider it totally unnecessary to apply it to British Indians, who suffer doubly. They labour under disabilities imposed upon “Coloured people” as also because they are Asiatics. Thus, the illicit gold law and the foot-path regulations of the Transvaal apply to them, because they are “Coloured people”, and the Law 3 of 1885 applies to them as Asiatics. Their position, therefore, is actually worse than that of the “Coloured people” who are not Asiatics.

We think, in the illustrations given above, we have shown sufficiently clearly that, if justice is to be done to the British Indians, they should be no longer classed with the “Coloured people”. And this we say without wishing to make any odious comparisons. “Coloured people” and British Indians have different points of attack in their struggle for freedom of existence. They have to secure justice through different channels and it were well if the Government and the publicists were to recognise the importance of distinguishing between the two.

286. THE CONDITION OF THE HINDU CREMATION GROUND

Mr. Daugherty has written us a letter on the condition of the Hindu cremation ground, to which we invite the attention of the Durban Indians. If its condition is really such as Mr. Daugherty describes, it is a shame and a disgrace to the Hindu community. It is the duty of every Hindu to keep the ground tidy. By failing to do so, we not only violate the law of the land and the rules of sanitation, but the maxim that in such matters we human beings should have a sense of delicacy. We have in fact received more letters about the condition of the cremation ground. We have not published them as they are caustic and indulge in personal criticism. But we would earnestly remind every Hindu that, whatever our differences in other matters, death should evoke in us nothing but tender and solemn sentiments. And if it cannot, that will be thought a grave shortcoming of ours, as everyone will readily agree.

287. THE SITUATION IN PERSIA

The Shah of Persia recently announced that a National Council would be convened to save the country from insolvency. This almost bankrupt condition to which Persia has been reduced is mainly due to the Shah’s own extravagance. The people of the country have been so very disaffected with the present regime that at the beginning of this year hundreds of merchants and mullahs left Teheran and went abroad. The Shah was alarmed and promised to convene an elected council of mullahs, merchants and landlords; but the serious financial crisis that has arisen cannot be so easily resolved. The present Shah Muzaffaruddin has brought Persia to this sorry pass over a period of ten years. The country’s entire revenue is at his disposal. The former Shahs were able to accumulate private fortunes, and the present Shah inherited some two million pounds. It is estimated that not only all this private wealth but the country’s annual revenue of a million and a half pounds has been squandered. The country is daily being thus impoverished. The main source of revenue is the working classes. Immense wealth has been dissipated during the last three or four years on visits to Europe and on pomp in the palace. Describing the straits in which Persia finds herself, The Rand Daily Mail of Johannesburg says that we should be vigilant and ensure that Russia does not exploit this crisis in Persia to her advantage, since no Englishman will be happy to see Russia gaining a foothold in the neighbourhood of India.

288. LETTER TO COLONIAL SECRETARY

JOHANNESBURG,
August 25, 1906

TO
THE HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY
PRETORIA
SIR,

I have the honour, on behalf of the British Indian Association, to enter its respectful protest against the Draft Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance published in the Government Gazette dated the 22nd instant.

In the humble opinion of my Association, the Draft Ordinance in question is calculated to provoke the bitterest irritation among the Indian community and to wound its susceptibilities to an extent which it is difficult to measure.

The Draft, it is respectfully submitted, is a complete reversal of solemn promises repeatedly made by British administrators, and is in contravention of the despatches of Mr. Lyttelton and Lord Milner.

The Draft gives to the British Indians in the Transvaal absolutely nothing, and takes away from them much, and that too in a manner which, to use Mr. Chamberlain’s words, “puts an unnecessary affront” upon British Indian settlers in the Transvaal.

My Association respectfully urges that, if the object of the Draft Ordinance is to remove from the Colony any British Indians who may not be residing in it by lawful authority, an inspection of the documents at present possessed by them would absolutely meet the case without hurting the feelings of British Indians and without causing to the Colony a heavy expense which the machinery proposed by the Draft Ordinance must necessarily do.

My Association has no hesitation in saying that the Draft under discussion shews unmistakably the power possessed by a strong party over helpless men who have done nothing to offend the former and it shews a desire to wield that power with the greatest rigour and in total disregard of the feelings of the helpless victims. This would appear to be strong language, but, examining it from the British Indian standpoint, the language used represents the honest convictions of those British Indians who have studied the Ordinance.

My Association draws the earnest attention of the Government to the following among other most objectionable features of the Draft Ordinance:

(a) Section 2 sets the seal of approval on the part of the British Government on the insulting and false definition of the term “Asiatic” given by Law 3 of 1885, which ignorantly includes “the so-called Coolies, Arabs, Malays, and Mahomedan subjects of the Turkish Dominion”. Such a definition is degrading to the Asiatics, in that it takes note only of coolies and perpetuates the use of the term as applied to all the inhabitants of Asia. The definition is false because there are hardly any Arabs and Mahomedan subjects of the Turkish Dominion, and does grave injustice to the Malays who have never yet been molested under Law 3 of 1885 and who have not suffered the misfortune in common with British Indians of being classed as competitors in trade with the Europeans.

(b) While the Draft subjects to innumerable pinpricks every Asiatic resident in the Colony, it leaves the position of the pre-war residents of the Transvaal who have not yet returned to the Colony as indefinite, as vague and as painful as heretofore.

(c) It takes no note whatsoever of the elaborate registration carried on by Captain Hamilton Fowle. It may be here mentioned that the registration carried out by Captain Fowle was arranged in consultation with the Indian community, which, courteously and gracefully bowing to the advice given by Lord Milner, consented to the registration although, as was acknowledged, there was no legal sanction for it so far as those who had already paid the £3 to the old Government were concerned. Of this, and all such voluntary acts of the community, the Draft Ordinance makes no acknowledgement.

(d) Section 3 deliberately narrows even the advantages enjoyed by the Indian community under the Peace Preservation Ordinance. As the Government is well aware, there is a magisterial decision to the effect that possession of old Dutch registration certificates by a British Indian entitles him to enter the Colony without any further permit. The effect of the decision would be nullified by sub-section 2 of Section 3.

(e) Whereas under Law 3 of 1885 and under the recent decision of the Supreme Court, only male adults who intend to settle in the Transvaal for purposes of trade are required to undergo registration, the present Ordinance would compel every Indian, male and female, over the age of eight to be registered. If the apprehension of my Association is correct, the Law will needlessly violate female modesty, as it is understood by millions of British Indians, and would ride roughshod over sentiments cherished dearly for ages by the community represented by my Association. This law of registration, if it is carried into effect, would mean that His Majesty’s Government condemned every Indian as a criminal. So far as my Association is aware, such a law is unknown within British Dominions so far as the free Indian population is concerned.

(f) The so-called remission of the £3 fee is tantamount, in the humble opinion of my Association, to adding insult to injury, in that, almost all the Asiatics at present residing in the Colony are registered and have paid £3, in many cases twice over.

(g) Sub-section 4 of Section 17, authorising the Lieutenant-Governor to exempt a British Indian holder of a temporary permit from the provisions of the Liquor Licensing Ordinance, is an instance of another added insult to injury. My Association is not aware of any self-respecting Indian who would want the precious exemption.

It is possible to enumerate still further objectionable features of the proposed Ordinance, but my Association trusts that sufficient has been given above to shew what the Ordinance means to British Indians.

My Association will be pardoned for stating that the relief sought to be given by Section 21 is not recognised by the Indian community as such. If the Government chooses to perform a simple duty towards a British subject by allowing him to own his inheritance, it is no relief to the community in general. As to permitting fixed property to be held by British Indians for religious uses, my Association is advised that no provision is necessary in view of a decision given by the Witwatersrand High Court in a case recently adjudicated.

Responsible Government will soon be established in the Colony. My Association, therefore, respectfully urges that, if the Government does not intend to grant any real and substantial relief in accordance with the oft-plighted word of British administrators, Law 3 of 1885 may be allowed to remain undisturbed, and the Responsible Government may be left to deal with the whole position in consultation with the Imperial Government.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ABDUL GANI
CHAIRMAN,
BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION

289. LONG LIVE THE GRAND OLD MAN

The fourth of September will be the eighty-second birthday of the Honourable Dadabhai Naoroji, the veteran patriot of India, who is its “Grand Old Man” as not even the late Mr. Gladstone was of England. The spectacle of Mr. Naoroji tirelessly fighting India’s battles, hoping against hope, living a life of self-imposed exile and of incessant energy that would do credit to a youth of twenty-five, is magnificent, ennobling and inspiring. No one can, with any justification, talk of India as in its decline when it produces even one such life as Mr. Naoroji’s. To him, India’s service is the breath of life. It is his religion and it is his one occupation. He has dedicated his all to India as no one else has. We cannot but think that it is his intense love and devotion to the cause which enable him to bear his years so lightly as he has done. Shall we say it is also a result of divine pleasure over so much pure sacrifice of self? To us in South Africa, a life such as this teaches many a lesson and we can render no greater homage and offer no more sincere prayer for yet more divine pleasure to be bestowed upon the Grand Old Man than by endeavouring to copy the life that Mr. Naoroji has placed before all India. We feel certain, in fact we know, that nothing will give him greater pleasure than to know that we cherish his life’s work and that we want to follow in his footsteps, and that even after the grave has closed over him, he will live in our memories and in our deeds. Those that are connected with this journal have in many of their trials been uplifted by the remembrance of this one name. Indeed, the enterprise has been possible only because of the great example set by the noblest Indian patriot living. Our heartfelt prayer goes to the Almighty for a long life to the Grand Old Man of India.

Indian Opinion, 1-9-1906

Abominable!

Abominable is a very strong adjective to use in respect of any act, and yet we can find, even after calmly considering it, no other term equally fitting to characterise the Draft Asiatic Ordinance published in the Transvaal Government Gazette Extraordinary dated the 22nd inst. This is in compliance with Mr. Duncan’s forecast given at the time of the adjournment of the Legislative Council of the Transvaal. The worst fears of the Indian community of the Transvaal have been realised by the Bill under discussion. It is in violation of many a sacred promise made to the unfortunate Indians residing in that Colony. It sets at nought the British principle of justice and fairplay, and it tramples upon the ordinary ideas of right and wrong as they have been known to mankind for ages past. We give in another column the strongly-worded protest of the British Indian Association but the language used in it is none too strong even for an official document. The Ordinance goes much further than we had anticipated from Mr. Duncan’s language. It unsettles the Indian mind as no other measure in South Africa has ever done before. It threatens to invade the sanctity of home life. Before it, Law 3 of 1885 pales into utter insignificance. The most pitiful part of it consists in the fact that what the Boer Government did in ignorance of facts and without meaning to do much harm and in respect of persons not its own subjects, the British Government is doing with the fullest knowledge of facts with the deliberate intention of injuring the Indian community and in respect of British subjects. In its method, the present Government intends to surpass the Boer Government and it would now bring under the clutches of the law those who were outside it under the Dutch rule, namely, women, children and non-traders. We are much pained to notice that our contemporary, the Johannesburg Star, welcomes the measure and actually gloats over its stringency. It betrays ignorance of the existing law and, therefore, deals with generalities, dignifying by the name of `concession” that which the Indian community interprets as an insult. In The Star language, exemption from the Liquor Licensing Ordinance vouchsafed to “distinguished Asiatic visitors” is a “sensible modification”. Such language in a paper edited by an ex-private secretary of an ex-High Commissioner for South Africa leaves little hope of justice being done by the present local Government. Asiatic law is to be amended not in order to fulfil promises given to the Indian community before and after war, but it is being introduced in order to conciliate Messrs Loveday and Company who have been practically dictating the Asiatic policy. Will the Home Government silently allow the proposed injustice to be perpetrated even while the Transvaal is a Crown Colony? If the local Government has not the courage to do justice, it will be for it a safe escape out of doing wanton injustice to accept the proposal of the British Indian Association and to allow Law 3 of 1885 to remain as it is, pending introduction of Responsible Government.

291. COLONIAL INDIANS, NOTE!

Herr Adolph Stein speaks as follows of the trials of the German soldier:

The lack of railways (in South-West Africa) has made it impossible for bigger supplies to be taken to the front and the troops have been on short rations since the beginning of the campaign which has now continued for two years and a half. The men have been without bread and salt for months together and there have been times when they have lived on the flesh of mules. These mules which were intended to drag the artillery had to be slaughtered to supply the starving soldiers with rations. The men have frequently fought or marched for forty hours without a drop of water or other beverage. Their uniforms are torn to shreds and have been replaced by all sorts of Odds and ends of clothing, giving the troops a shabby appearance. Their shoes are worn out and have been replaced by sandals made from the hides of slaughtered oxen. Notwithstanding all these hardships, the troops have performed their duty without flinching.

There is a world of meaning to be read into these sentences by Indians in South Africa and particularly those who have been born and bred in this sub-continent. It must be remembered that these soldiers are, some of them, drawn from men ordinarily engaged in civil occupation. No country has become great without its inhabitants undergoing hardships and self-sacrifice. We often talk of the disabilities of British Indians in South Africa and we have a right to complain about them and to seek redress, but, as an esteemed friend wrote in these columns a few months ago, salvation of British Indians will ultimately have to come from within, and that will only be done when the rising generation of Indians recognise their communal duty and are prepared to undergo trials and difficulties even as German soldiers are now doing in South-West Africa.

292. THE CAPE LICENCES ACT

From the Cape Government Gazette of the 21st inst., we notice that the Cape Licences Bill has become an Act of Parliament and henceforth Indian traders, as indeed all other traders, will come under its operation. The Bill has undergone so many alterations that it is no longer possible to detect the original measure in the Act. In some respects it is undoubtedly harsh. The right of appeal to the Supreme Court has not been definitely taken away, but it is a moot question whether the decision that may be given by the Licensing Boards will be capable of being reviewed by the Supreme Court. Moreover, the safeguard that was left to intending applicants by the original Bill, by way of securing the consent of a majority of rate-payers, has been taken away. At the same time, the requirement as to the books being kept in English has been removed. We, however, never attached any importance to the clause; it was harmless, and we may here point out that, although there is nothing stated as to the keeping of books, it will be quite proper for the Municipal authorities to decline to grant licences if the applicants could not shew to their satisfaction that they are able to keep an intelligible record of their transactions. We have always recognised as legitimate a well-regulated control over trading licences. We, therefore, think that the Act should receive a fair trial. Much will, however, depend upon the manner in which the Licensing Boards will use their newly acquired powers. In the words of the late Mr. Escombe, we trust that, having received “a giant’s strength”, they will not use it as giants, but temper justice with mercy.

P. O. BOX 6522, JOHANNESBURG, August 27, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I am sending you three leading articles to-night; that about Dadabhai\(^1\) will of course occupy the first place, the second should be that about Johannesburg\(^2\) and the third, the Colonial-born Indians,

Note'. I am too exhausted to give you more although I have a lot to write upon, nor have I the time, but I may be able to send an article or two to-morrow. They will reach you on Thursday. It is now nearly five o'clock; I shall try to give you some Gujarati, at least an article about Dadabhai. If possible, give Dadabhai’s photograph as a supplement next week. Brian Gabriel has got the negative; he should do it free of charge. The block must be well printed. I was almost about to telegraph to you about the supplement but I think we do not want to hurry. It will come in very nicely next week. I am giving another article on the Cape Act herewith, so that you have 4.

Yours sincerely,

JOHANNESBURG,
August 28, 1906

THE DRAFT ASIATIC ORDINANCE WHICH HAS BEEN PUBLISHED CONTRAVENES ALL PAST PROMISES, AND IS WORSE THAN THE EXISTING LAW, WHICH WAS TAKEN FROM THE BOER REGIME. IT SHOCKS INDIAN SENTIMENT BY REQUIRING WOMEN, AND CHILDREN OVER EIGHT YEARS, TO REGISTER. INDIANS, WHO HAVE ALREADY BEEN TWICE REQUIRED BY LAW TO REGISTER, REGISTERED THE LAST TIME VOLUNTARILY TO PLEASE LORD MILNER. THIS THIRD REGISTRATION IS BOTH UNNECESSARY AND OPPRESSIVE. INDIANS PREFER A CONTINUANCE OF THE OLD LAW TO SUBMITTING TO THE WANTON INDIGNITY WHICH THE PROPOSED ORDINANCE CONTEMPLATES. THE CHARGE OF UNLAWFUL ENTRY IS DENIED, AND A COMMISSION OF ENQUIRY IS REQUESTED.

295. KODAMA, THE HERO OF JAPAN

General Kodama died suddenly last month in Tokyo without suffering any illness. He was born in the Samurai or Kshatriya class of Japan, and was naturally therefore an able soldier. He was moreover a well-known strategist. By his death the Japanese army has suffered a great loss.

Kodama joined the Japanese army in 1872, where his ability quickly attracted notice and he rose rapidly, becoming Lieutenant-Colonel in 1880. He became General in 1904. During the last Russo-Japanese War, he was Marshal Oyama’s chief lieutenant. True to the nature of the Japanese people, he remained very patient and serene in war and was never impetuous. When, in the bloody battle of Layoyang, the Russian army made a fierce charge on the Japanese, he was at breakfast. As the Russians were marching towards General Kodama’s camp; his men, concerned for the safety of their General, requested him to shift to another place. He replied that this he could never do, adding that, if his soldiers came to know he had left the front-line, they might waver and lose heart. It was therefore better for him to remain where he was. This brave conduct of the leader gave the soldiers courage and enabled them to repel the Russian attack.

In build and appearance, General Kodama resembled an Englishman. Sixteen years ago, he was sent to Europe by the Japanese Government to study western techniques of warfare. He gave proof of his proficiency during the last Chinese War. In appreciation of his services in that war, the Mikado made him a Baron. He was considered a capable man in Japan and it was expected that he would one day become Prime Minister. He was 53 when he died.

296. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,

September 1, 1906

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have your exhaustive letter, also your telegram regarding Harilal. I am sorry about the permit, but it cannot be helped. I have read your remarks to Mr. Polak; he laughed over them and says you should have spoken to him when he was there. Mr. Medh’ himself wants only a temporary job so that if you want him only for a time he will be quite willing and I am quite agreeable that you should have assistance. I certainly feel that you want some one to help you. Otherwise, what I am afraid of is that you will break down or that you will leave something undone which ought to be done now, especially the books. But if you have Mr. Medh only temporarily it will be very bad to offer him only £3. You should offer him £4 per month and if he makes himself thoroughly efficient, for the second month he should have £5. You will want him for about six months I think, even after Mr. West’s return. Although I should be sending Gujarati matter from here, the political movements going on make my position very uncertain. I might have to go to England or I might have to go to gaol. I have informed Mr. Duncan, whom I met today, that, in the event of the legislation going through, I would be the first one to go to gaol rather than be registered or pay the fine. I believe the people here, too, are determined, but I should naturally take the lead in a matter of this kind. If that happens, it means incarceration perhaps for three months. You must, therefore, make your preparations to carry on the work efficiently without relying on me. I have the account against Mr. Osman Latief in my mind; I think I will be able to recover the amount some time or other. You can print Suliman Amod’s books in 200 pages or 100 whichever suits you better. The theatrical handbills were received yesterday afternoon. Could you not have sent them by post instead of by parcel? I am really delighted with Harilal’s taking a deck passage and managing everything himself. The papers re-directed by you have been received. I am very sorry indeed to hear of the death of Thakarshi. It is wonderful how young men are taken off so quickly; I believe I have found out reasons for the phenomenon but if I were to discuss them my voice would be a voice in the wilderness. You should furnish Osman Amod with an estimate of the cost. I have written to Motilal and I shall deal with it in the Gujarati columns. It is ridiculous for him to complain about it especially against you. I hope you have pruned down considerably Shelat’s contributions; you need not insert any of his contributions without showing them to me as I have told him I would not put them in unless I found them to be suitable. You should tell Messrs Woods & Son that we are debarred from circulating their handbills through the paper. I will write to Mr. Dada Osman about the advertisement. I received the proof sent by you at the same time as the paper.

Yours sincerely,

297. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

September 3, 1906

THE INTERVIEW WITH MR. DUNCAN

On Mr. Duncan expressing a desire to meet the Indian deputation regarding the Asiatic Act, Messrs Abdul Gani, Essop Mian, Hajee Ojer Ally, Peter Moonlight and Gandhi, who were deputed by the Committee of the British Indian Association for this purpose, went to Pretoria last Saturday; there they were joined by Mr. Haji Habib on behalf of the Pretoria Committee. Mr. Duncan saw them at 11 a.m. Before writing further on the subject, I must say that their troubles began even as they got into the morning train that leaves at 8-30. Mr. Chamney, who had agreed to make all the arrangements at the station, had for his part no doubt done so. But neither the station master nor the conductor knew anything about them. The latter became obstructive, arguing that they had come without previous notice. Finally, however, the members were accommodated in a second-class compartment up to Germiston, whence they were able to have a first-class carriage. There ensued a long discussion with Mr. Duncan. The deputation told him that the Asiatic Act would be unacceptable to the Indian community under any circumstances and that re-registration would simply not take place. It was tyrannical that, in response to the community’s plea for relief, the Government should attempt to enforce a harsher law. It was unthinkable that women and children should be registered. Registration was not necessary during the Dutch regime, and besides, the practice does not obtain elsewhere in British territory. The deputation presented a detailed account of permit problems. Messrs Haji Ojer Ally and Haji Habib spoke in impassioned terms about them. Mr. Duncan told them that the Government would consider all the points and send a reply. In answer to the question about the Malays, Mr. Duncan said that the Act of 1885 had at no time applied to them, and that the Government would therefore consider whether to extend the Act to them or not, although, strictly speaking, it should.

Mr. Essop Mian, who wanted to say something on his own, was asked to seek a separate interview, as Mr. Duncan had to attend another meeting.

299. CRIMINAL

We have already described the Asiatic Draft Ordinance of the Transvaal Government as abominable. A closer examination of the Ordinance and the complaints we have received about it require the use of an even stronger epithet regarding the proposed action of the Government. It will be a crime against humanity if it is persisted in.

324 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
There are, to-day, not more than 13,000 Indians all told, including women and children, in the Transvaal. Women and children do not possess any documents authorising them to enter the country because the permit regulations do not require them. They are, however, not lawful residents of the Transvaal, according to the definition given to permits by the Ordinance. Will they, then, be banished from the Colony and torn from their husbands, or parents, as the case may be? Perhaps not. All the same, power is given to the department concerned with the administration of the Ordinance to subject women and children to indignities, and even to banish them. Immemorial experience shews that arbitrary power left in the hands of the best possible men tends to lower their humanity and makes them, very often in spite of themselves, do things which, under other circumstances of greater responsibility, they would not have done. The Christian Teacher, whose tenets the Government of the Transvaal, we suppose, professes to follow, only uttered simple truth when He decried temptation.

Nor is this all. The effect of the Ordinance will be to impugn the validity of every permit and registration certificate issued before the date of the Ordinance, that is to say, every holder of these documents will have to appear before the Registrar of Asiatics and satisfy that official that he is the lawful holder. Indians in the Transvaal know what this means; they will be subjected to all kinds of unnecessary and often insulting questions, and they will have to undergo a very strict examination before they receive a third certificate. And what is the reason for all this? Why, [it is] that some few Indians, whose moral sensibilities have been blunted by official folly and needless severity, have entered the Colony of the Transvaal without authority.

The only apparent reason for this Ordinance is to cover hopeless incompetence in the administration of the present laws, which, we maintain, are sufficient to meet all cases of fraudulent entrance. There is, in the Peace Preservation Ordinance, a clause which enables officials appointed thereunder to inspect permits, and non-production of same renders persons inspected liable to be arrested and ultimately deported from the Colony. Failure to leave the Colony carries with it a very heavy penalty. We hold that these clauses, wisely employed, would soon shew how far the statements of the anti-Asiatic agitators are borne out. It is curious that, instead of employing this efficient instrument at its disposal, the Government has devised degrading legislation in order to find out whether there are any persons who have surreptitiously entered the Colony.

A correspondent, of nineteen years’ standing in the Transvaal, has asked a pertinent question in the Gujarati columns which we translate in another place in this issue, asking what is the difference between Russian rule and British rule a la Transvaal. The difference, in our opinion, lies in the fact that, whereas, in Russia, when it suits the authorities, they do not hesitate to murder people openly and directly, in the Transvaal, because the authorities wish to do away with Indians, but cannot do so openly and honestly, instead of resorting to the direct method of murdering them or banishing them from the Colony, they intend to kill them by inches. They would devise means which exasperate even the mild Indian into leaving the country of his own accord or adopting means which serve the same purpose. And so the authorities are able unctuously to declare: “We are not guilty of the civil murder of these men—they left of their own accord.” We present this thought to the Government for its earnest consideration, and ask it now, whilst there is yet time, to withdraw from an utterly false position.

300. THE GRAND OLD MAN

The various associations in South Africa have simply done their duty by forwarding congratulatory messages to the Honourable Dadabhai Naoroji on his eighty-second birthday.¹ This birthday anniversary has become a day of national rejoicing throughout India, and Indian life in South Africa seems to us to be incomplete without a reproduction, on however humble a scale, of what has been going on in India for years in connection with the birthday anniversary of the one man who is enshrined in the hearts of millions of Indians as is no other man at the present day. These voluntary offerings must be a matter of very great solace to the aged patriot, and it cannot but further the work that he has been doing so ungrudgingly for over half a century. We hope that, having commenced it, Indians in South Africa will make the sending of these messages an annual feature, and hope that they will be privileged, for many years to come, to be able to commemorate the day. We publish with this issue a supplement, containing a portrait of the Hon. Dadabhai Naoroji.

Indian Opinion, 8-9-1906

¹ Vide “Congratulations to Dadabhai Naoroji”, 4-9-1906
Mr. Essop Mian recently compared [conditions under] British rule in the Transvaal with the state of affairs prevailing in Russia. Such a comparison is indeed worth making. Just as the Russian people are tyrannised over by government officials, so are Indians in the Transvaal. People are openly assaulted and killed in Russia. Under British rule, the harm inflicted on the people is, as in the case of a rat-bite, not immediately noticeable, but it may be said that the ultimate effect is just as bad.

It is interesting to compare the reactions of the Russian people to tyranny with our own reaction to it. Under British rule, we draft petitions, carry on a struggle through the Press, and seek justice from the King. All this is perfectly proper. It is necessary, and it also brings us some relief. But is there anything else that we should do? And, can we do it? We shall think of these questions later. For the present, let us see what Russia is doing. The people there, both rich and poor, do not send petitions and stop there. The oppression there is such that it has given rise to a number of anarchists. They believe that all rulers are oppressive, and the State should therefore be done away with. To achieve this end, people in Russia kill the officials openly as well as secretly. In this, however, they are making a mistake. Such thoughtless adventures only serve to keep the minds of both the rulers and the ruled in a state of constant tension. All the same, it is admitted on all hands that men taking such risks must be brave and patriotic.

Even young girls set out on such adventures and court risks. A book was recently published about the lives of young women who have thus made themselves immortal. Knowing that death is certain, these fearless girls, actuated by patriotism and a spirit of self-sacrifice, take the lives of those whom they believe to be the enemies of the country, and themselves meet an agonising death at the hands of officials. Facing such risks, they serve their country selflessly. It will be no wonder if such a country succeeds in achieving freedom from tyranny. The only reason why it has not become free immediately is that such patriotism is misdirected, as we have pointed out before, and results in bloodshed. In consequence, these people cannot, according to divine law, obtain any immediate benefit.

Do our people display patriotism of this order? We have regretfully to say “No”. No one can be blamed, for we have not yet been trained for this. We are children in political matters. We do not understand the principle that the public good is also one’s own good. But the time has now come for us to outgrow this state of mind. We need not, however, resort to violence. Neither need we set out on adventures, risking our lives. We must, however, submit our bodies to pain, and the new Transvaal Ordinance offers an excellent opportunity. The Ordinance represents the limit of oppression. It is not for us to punish those who made that Ordinance. If we did that, we would be as much at fault as the Russians. Indians are a meek people, and we wish they will always remain so. What, then, should we do? The answer to this question has been given by the Indian deputation to Mr. Duncan. They have told him that if, disregarding our attempts at gentle persuasion, the Government enforces the Ordinance, Indians will not abide by it; they will not [re-]register themselves, nor will they pay fines; they will rather go to gaol. We believe that, if the Indians in the Transvaal firmly stick to this resolution, they will at once be free of their shackles. The gaol will then be like a palace to them. Instead of being a disgrace, going to gaol will enhance their prestige. And the Government, for its part, will realize that it cannot with impunity go on humiliating Indians. What we do not do, besides addressing petitions—though we ought to do it—is that we will not sacrifice our bodily comforts. We give ourselves over to physical pleasures and cannot give them up. It is our duty to make some sacrifice for the sake of others. We do not realize that there is real beauty in this: that it is thus that we please God and do our true duty. The resolution about the deputation [to England] is an excellent step. We hope that the Indians will not miss this golden opportunity and that every one of them in South Africa will support it.

1 Vide Indian Opinion, 8-9-1906.

302. FALSE PERMITS IN THE TRANSVAAL

We have received a letter about false permits which we think it is unnecessary to publish. The writer says that some Indians try to enter the Transvaal with false permits, and innocent men have to suffer in consequence. Those who make the attempt are, of course, sentenced. Some time ago, eight Indians at Barberton were fined £30 and obliged to return. Though, in our view, the fine was unmerited, we do believe that it is necessary for every Indian to act with caution. The more our people misuse permits, the more they will add to our woes. We are sorry for those who cannot enter the Transvaal; we sympathise with them. But, so long as the law is against them, they have to remain patient. We must always bear in mind that, in the process of securing one’s own interest, one ought not to harm others. We hope every reader will learn a lesson from the Barberton cases.

We commented in a previous issue on the condition of the Hindu cremation ground. Some persons have construed our comments as intended to find fault with the management. We have gone through the article again, but are unable to read in it any such intention. However, to preclude any possible misunderstanding, we hereby declare that we have not, in the article, held the management guilty of any fault. As far as we know, they have been doing their best to keep the cremation ground clean and in good condition.

307. SPEECH ON THE “BLACK ACT”

At a meeting of some leading Indians held to consider the draft Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, Gandhiji explained its full implications. It shocked them as it had shocked Gandhiji. All present then resolved to hold a public meeting and consider and adopt measures to fight the “Black Act”.

The following is Gandhiji’s own reconstruction of the speech which, like the one at the mass meeting on September 11, (vide pp. 419-22), brings out the importance he attached to defiance of an unjust law.

[JOHANNESBURG, Before September 9, 1906]

This is a very serious crisis. If the Ordinance were passed and if we acquiesced in it, it would be imitated all over South Africa. As it seems to me, it is designed to strike at the very root of our existence in South Africa. It is not the last step, but the first step with a view to hound us out of the country. We are therefore responsible for the safety, not only of the ten or fifteen thousand Indians in the Transvaal but of the entire Indian community in South Africa. Again, if we fully understand all the implications of this legislation, we shall find that India’s honour is in our keeping. For the Ordinance seeks to humiliate not only ourselves but also the motherland. The humiliation consists in the degradation of innocent men. No one will take it upon himself to say that we have done anything to deserve such legislation. We are innocent, and insult offered to a single innocent member of a nation is tantamount to insulting the nation as a whole. It will not, therefore, do to be hasty, impatient or angry. That cannot save us from this onslaught. But God will come to our help, if we calmly think out and carry out in time measures of resistance, presenting a united front and bearing the hardship, which such resistance brings in its train.

308. SPEECH AT HAMIDIYA ISLAMIC SOCIETY

At a meeting of the Hamidiya Islamic Society, Gandhiji explained the political situation in the Transvaal. The following is an extract from a report of the proceedings:

1 The report in the Indian Opinion has the caption, “Call to Action”.

VOL. 5 : 6 NOVEMBER, 1905 - 3 NOVEMBER, 1906 331
JOHANNESBURG,
September 9, 1906

We have received a reply to our cable to the Colonial Secretary. (Mr. Gandhi here read out the reply.) I have also cabled to London according to instructions. There is now no alternative to sending a deputation, because an intolerable and wicked law is being forced upon us; and we must not put up with it. As it is, our plight in the Transvaal is very bad, and now comes this vicious Draft Ordinance. My advice, therefore, is that we should not seek fresh registration.

Let the accusation of breaking the law fall on us. Let us cheerfully suffer imprisonment. There is nothing wrong in that. The distinctive virtue of the British is bravery. If therefore we also unite and offer resistance with courage and firmness, I am sure there is nothing that the Government can do. Even the half-castes and Kaffirs, who are less advanced than we, have resisted the Government. The pass law applies to them as well, but they do not take out passes.

I do not want to say more. I would only advise you not to register yourselves again. If the Government sends us to gaol, I shall be the first to court imprisonment. And if any Indian is put to trouble because of his refusal to register afresh in accordance with the Draft Ordinance, I will appear in his case free of charge.

On Tuesday next, we are holding a mass meeting, and I expect you all to close your business on that day and attend it.

Having explained all this at length, Mr. Gandhi made a few suggestions for collecting funds quickly, appointing a new committee to look after the funds and publishing the accounts every month.

Indian Opinion, 22-9-1906

309. THE MASS MEETING

A mass meeting of British Indians was held to protest against the draft Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance. Abdul Gani, Chairman, British Indian Association, presided. Several speakers opposed the Ordinance and called for non compliance in case it became law. The following is a report of Gandhiji’s speech:

1 This is not available.
2 Vide “Cable to Secretary of State for Colonies”, 8-9-1906
JOHANNESBURG,

September 11, 1906

Mr. M. K. Gandhi, (Johannesburg), Hony. Secretary of the British Indian Association, then addressed the meeting. He pointed out that by some critics it might be thought that there was a defect in the chain of reasoning as outlined by their resolutions, because they asked for redress of their grievances, and then went on immediately to threaten to go to gaol if their prayer was not granted. He contended, however, that there was no real flaw in the chain, because they were not holding out a threat. It was merely a question of one ounce of practice which was worth whole tons of speeches and writings. He had thought the matter over seriously and earnestly before he had given his opinion upon the step they should take, and he felt that it was their bounden duty to adopt the course laid down if their prayer was not granted. He contended that every adjective used that day was justified for the occasion, and said that if he could find a stronger adjective he would use it. He had studied the whole of the anti-Asiatic legislation throughout South Africa; but he never, in the whole course of his experience, came across anything like this present Ordinance. Even the legislation of the O.R.C., drastic as it was, was far superior to that now introduced here, which was so bad that no self-respecting Indian could live under it. He admitted that the responsibility for the serious step he had taken was upon his shoulders, and he took the responsibility in its entirety. He felt he had done the right thing in advising them to take this step as loyal British subjects. In all their action in this respect they were full of loyalty. No shadow of disloyalty could rest upon them. Some people might say that they were foolish, and he would say that their action was foolish if he had not full confidence in his fellow-countrymen. But he knew them; he knew that he could trust them, and he knew also that, when occasion required an heroic step to be taken,—he knew that every man among them would take it. (Loud Cheers.)

Indian Opinion, 22-9-1906

At the meeting, Haji Habib proposed that they should take a solemn oath to oppose the Ordinance. Explaining the implications of the suggestion, Gandhiji made a speech, which he recapitulates in Satyagraha in South Africa:

I wish to explain to this meeting that there is a vast difference between this resolution and every other resolution we have passed up to date and that there is a wide divergence also in the manner of making it. It is a very grave resolution we are making, as our existence in South Africa depends upon our fully observing it. The manner of making the resolution suggested by our friend is as much of a novelty as of a solemnity. I did not come to the meeting with a view to getting the resolution passed in that manner, which redounds to the credit of Sheth Haji Habib as well as it [sic] lays a burden of responsibility upon him. I tender my congratulations to him. I deeply appreciate his suggestion, but if you adopt it you too will share his responsibility. You must understand what is this responsibility, and as an adviser and servant of the community, it is my duty fully to explain it to you.

We all believe in one and the same God, the differences of nomenclature in Hinduism and Islam notwithstanding. To pledge ourselves or to take an oath in the name of that God or with Him as witness is not something to be trifled with. If having taken such an oath we violate our pledge we are guilty before God and man. Personally I hold that a man, who deliberately and intelligently takes a pledge and then breaks it, forfeits his manhood. And just as a copper coin treated with mercury not only becomes valueless when found out but also makes its owner liable to punishment, in the same way a man who lightly pledges his word and then breaks it becomes a man of straw and fits himself for punishment here as well as hereafter. Sheth Haji Habib is proposing to administer an oath of such a serious character. There is no one in this meeting who can be classed as an infant or as wanting in understanding. You are all well advanced in age and have seen the world; many of you are delegates and have discharged responsibilities in a greater or lesser measure. No one present, therefore, can ever hope to excuse himself by saying that he did not know what he was about when he took the oath.

I know that pledges and vows are, and should be, taken on rare occasions. A man who takes a vow every now and then is sure to stumble. But if I can imagine a crisis in the history of the Indian community of South Africa when it would be in the fitness of things to take pledges, that crisis is surely now. There is wisdom in taking serious steps with great caution and hesitation. But caution and hesitation have their limits, which we have now passed. The Government has taken leave of all sense of decency. We would only be betraying our unworthiness and cowardice, if we cannot stake our all in the face of the conflagration which envelopes us and sit watching it with folded hands. There is no doubt, therefore, that the present is a proper occasion for taking pledges. But every one of us must think out for himself if he has the will and the ability to pledge himself. Resolutions of this nature cannot be passed by a majority vote. Only those who take a pledge can be bound by it. This pledge must not be taken with a view to produce an effect on outsiders. No one should trouble to consider what impression it might have upon the local Government, the Imperial Government, or the Government of India. Every one must only search his own heart, and if the inner voice assures him that he has the requisite strength to carry him through, then only should he pledge himself and then only would his pledge bear fruit.

A few words now as to the consequences. Hoping for the best, we may say that, if a majority of the Indians pledge themselves to resistance and if all who take the pledge prove true to themselves, the Ordinance may not even be passed and, if passed, may be soon repealed. It may be that we may not be called upon to suffer at all. But if on the one hand one who takes a pledge must be a robust optimist, on the other hand he must be prepared for the worst. It is therefore that I would give you an idea of the worst that might happen to us in the present struggle. Imagine that all of us present here numbering 3,000 at the most pledge ourselves. Imagine again that the remaining 10,000 Indians take no such pledge. We will only provoke ridicule in the beginning. Again, it is quite possible that in spite of the present warning some or many of those who pledge themselves might weaken at the very first trial. We might have to go to gaol, where we might be insulted. We might have to go hungry and suffer extreme heat or cold. Hard labour might be imposed upon us. We might be flogged by rude warders. We might be fined heavily and our property might be attached and held up to auction if there are only a few resisters left. Opulent today, we might be reduced to abject poverty tomorrow. We might be deported. Suffering from starvation and similar hardships in gaol, some of us might fall ill and even die. In short, therefore, it is not at all impossible that we might have to endure every hardship that we can imagine, and wisdom lies in pledging ourselves on the understanding that we shall have to suffer all that and worse. If someone asks me when and how the struggle may end, I may say that, if the entire community manfully stands the test, the end will be near. If many of us fall back under storm and stress, the struggle will be prolonged. But I can boldly declare, and with certainty, that so long as there is even a handful of men true to their pledge, there can only be one end to the struggle, and that is victory.

A word about my personal responsibility. If I am warning you of the risks attendant upon the pledge, I am at the same time inviting you to pledge yourselves, and I am fully conscious of my responsibility in the matter. It is possible that a majority of those present here might take the pledge in a fit of enthusiasm or indignation but might weaken under the ordeal, and only a handful might be left to face the final test. Even then there is only one course open to the like of me, to die but not to submit to the law. It is quite unlikely but even if every one else flinched leaving me alone to face the music, I am confident that I would never violate my pledge. Please do not misunderstand me. I am not saying this out of vanity, but I wish to put you, especially the leaders upon the platform, on your guard. I wish respectfully to suggest it to you that, if you have not the will or the ability to stand firm even when you are perfectly isolated, you must not only not take the pledge yourselves, but you must declare your opposition before the resolution is put to the meeting and before its members begin to take pledges and you must not make yourselves parties to the resolution. Although we are going to take the pledge in a body, no one should imagine that default on the part of one or many can absolve the rest from their obligation. Every one should fully realize his responsibility, then only pledge himself independently of others and understand that he himself must be true to his pledge even unto death, no matter what others do.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED AT THE MEETING

RESOLUTION I

This mass meeting of British Indians here assembled, respectfully urges the Honourable the President and Members of the Legislative Council of the Transvaal not to pass the Draft Asiatic Ordinance to amend Law No. 3 of 1885, now before that Honourable House, in view of the facts that:

1. It is, so far as the Indian community of the Transvaal is concerned, a highly contentious measure.
2. It subjects the British Indian community of the Transvaal to degradation and insult totally undeserved by its past history.
3. The present machinery is sufficient for checking the alleged influx of Asiatics.
4. The statements as to the alleged influx are denied by the British Indian community.
5. If the Honourable House is not satisfied with the denial, this meeting invites [an] open, judicial, and British enquiry into the question of the alleged influx.

RESOLUTION II

This mass meeting of British Indians here assembled respectf-

1 In accordance with Resolution V, copies of Resolutions II, III and IV were sent to the Secretary of State for India through the Governor of the Transvaal, who was also requested to telegraph their substance to the Viceroy of India. Vide "The Mass Meeting", 11-9-1906 and Cd. 3308 issued in February 1907.
ully protests against the Draft Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance now being considered by the Legislative Council of the Transvaal, and humbly requests the local Government and the Imperial Authorities to withdraw the Draft Ordinance, for the reasons that:

1. It is manifestly in conflict with the past declarations of His Majesty’s representatives.
2. It recognises no distinction between British and alien Asians.
3. It reduces British Indians to a status lower than that of the aboriginal races of South Africa and the Coloured people.
4. It renders the position of British Indians in the Transvaal much worse than under Law 3 of 1885, and, therefore, than under the Boer regime.
5. It sets up a system of passes and espionage unknown in any other British territory.
6. It brands the communities to which it is applied as criminals or suspects.
7. The alleged influx of unauthorised British Indians into the Transvaal is denied.
8. If such denial is not accepted, a judicial, open and British enquiry should be instituted before such drastic and uncalled for legislation is enforced.
9. The measure is otherwise un-British and unduly restricts the liberty of inoffensive British subjects and constitutes a compulsory invitation to British Indians in the Transvaal to leave the country.
10. This meeting further and especially requests the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India to suspend the Royal sanction and to receive a deputation on behalf of the British Indian community of the Transvaal in connection with this Draft Ordinance.

RESOLUTION III

This meeting hereby appoints a delegation with power from the Committee of the British Indian Association to add to its membership or to change its personnel, to proceed to England and to lay before the Imperial Authorities the complaint of the British Indian community of the Transvaal regarding the Draft Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance.
RESOLUTION IV

In the event of the Legislative Council, the local Government, and the Imperial Authorities rejecting the humble prayer of the British Indian community of the Transvaal in connection with the Draft Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, this mass meeting of British Indians here assembled solemnly and regretfully resolves that, rather than submit to the galling, tyrannous, and un-British requirements laid down in the above Draft Ordinance, every British Indian in the Transvaal shall submit himself to imprisonment and shall continue so to do until it shall please His Most Gracious Majesty the King-Emperor to grant relief.

RESOLUTION V

This meeting desires the Chairman to forward copy of the first resolution to the Honourable the President and Members of the Legislative Council, and copies of all the resolutions to the Honourable the Colonial Secretary, to His Excellency the Acting Lieutenant-Governor, and to His Excellency the High Commissioner, and to request His Excellency the High Commissioner to cable the text of resolutions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 to the Imperial Authorities.

310. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

September 11, 1906

A mammoth meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. Abdul Gani, at two o’clock on Tuesday afternoon at the Empire Theatre, in connection with the agitation at present going on in the Transvaal against the Asiatic law. About three thousand Indians attended. An invitation was sent to the Colonial Secretary, who sent Mr. Chamney.

In the course of his speech, Mr. Abdul Gani made the following points:

We in the Transvaal have never had to face such critical times before. On this occasion, we have to put in a mighty effort. I do not want to make a long speech; there is much work for us to do. At the time of the Boer War, Lord Selborne said that the need to protect the rights of Indians was one of the causes of the War. For, under the Union Jack, no one should suffer any disability; all must have equal rights.

1 Draft Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance
Again, at a meeting of Jews held a few days ago, he said that it was the duty of the British Government to redress the grievances of alien peoples as well. There should be no restrictions, he said, on living, no prohibition of acquisition of land in the British Empire. We have a right to ask how such speeches of Lord Selborne can be reconciled with the oppressive law directed against us.

We have already represented to the Government how drastic and offensive the law is. But, today, I want to read out to you Mr. Gregorowski’s opinion on the subject. He writes:

The act is far more severe than the Dutch Law. There is not a single provision in it that is favourable to the Indians. The act makes the position of the Indian worse than that of the Kaffir. Not every Kaffir is required to carry a pass on him; but now every Indian will have to do so. Educated Kaffirs are exempt from such restrictive laws. But the Indian, whatever his education and standing, will have to carry a pass. The pass, it seems to us, will be like the one carried by prisoners, etc. Whatever loop-holes there existed in the Law [3] of 1885 have been closed in this Act. While Kaffirs can own land, Indians cannot. It does not seem probable that the Liberal Government will approve such a law.

What we have been saying is by no means more strongly worded than what Mr. Gregorowski has said.

Now that a serious situation has arisen, we should think about what we ought to do if the Imperial Government does not heed our grievances. Today some resolutions will be placed before you. According to one of them, we shall resolve to send a deputation to England, of which I need say no more. But there is only one very important resolution for today. What shall we do if we fail to secure relief? We have patiently endured the hardships, which have continued unmitigated. But the further disability proposed by this law is insufferable. We therefore want to resolve that, if the Imperial Government too intends to heap more oppressions on us, we will rather go to gaol than put up with it. It always happens that one hits upon the true remedy only when one goes through extreme suffering, and it is our duty firmly to resolve to defy the law and go to gaol. There is nothing to be ashamed of in going to gaol. And I pray to God to give us the strength and the good sense to adhere to our determination.

This is for us the time for deeds, not words. We have to act boldly; and in doing so, we have to be humble and non-violent. We should not speak or listen to any bitter words.

After the President’s speech, the following resolutions were passed.
RESOLUTION I

This mass meeting respectfully urges the Legislative Council not to pass the Asiatic Ordinance in view of the fact that

(1) it is, according to the Indian community, a highly objectionable measure;
(2) it subjects the Indian community to degradation and insult without any cause whatever;
(3) if it is supposed that Indians enter the Transvaal without permits, there is adequate provision in the existing law to prevent them from so doing;
(4) the Indian community denies the allegation that there is any large influx of permitless Indians into the Transvaal;
(5) if the Legislative Council disbelieves these statements, the Indian community demands that a judicial inquiry, which accords with British practice, be held.

RESOLUTION II

This mass meeting respectfully protests against the Asiatic Ordinance and humbly requests the local and the Imperial Governments to withdraw the Draft Ordinance for the following reasons:

(1) it is manifestly in conflict with the past declarations of His Majesty;
(2) it recognises no distinction between British Indians and other Asiatics;
(3) it reduces British Indians to a status lower than that of the Kaffirs and other Coloured persons;
(4) it renders the position of Indians much worse than it was under the Boer regime;
(5) it sets up a system of passes unknown in any other Colony;
(6) in effect, it brands all persons of the Indian community as criminals;
(7) the Indian community denies the alleged influx of unauthorised Indians into the Transvaal;
(8) if this denial is unacceptable, the Indian community demands that a judicial inquiry which is in conformity with the British system be held;
(9) the measure is otherwise unjust, restricts the liberty of the Indian community and is calculated to oust the community through ill treatment.

(10) Furthermore, this meeting requests in particular the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India to recommend the withholding of Royal sanction (until after the Indian deputation has waited upon them).

RESOLUTION III

This meeting hereby authorizes the British Indian Association to send a deputation to England in order to put the grievances of the Indian community before the Imperial Government.

RESOLUTION IV

Should the Legislative Council, the local and the Imperial Governments reject the humble prayer of the Indian community against the Asiatic Ordinance, every Indian present at this meeting solemnly and sincerely resolves that, rather than submit to this tyrannical law and abide by its un-British provisions, he will prefer to go to gaol and will continue to do so until it pleases His Majesty the King-Emperor to grant relief.

RESOLUTION V

This meeting authorizes the Chairman to forward the first resolution to the Legislative Council and all the other resolutions to His Excellency the High Commissioner and through him to the Imperial Government by cable.

POSITION OF THE LAW TILL TUESDAY EVENING

I am unable to send reports of the other speakers or their speeches for the current issue. To be brief, the meeting was attended by representatives from Pietersburg, Klerksdorp, Krugersdorp, Pretoria and all other important places. The fear was widely shared that the law might have already received the approval of the Imperial Government. On this point, however, Sir Richard Solomon assures us that the law will not be enforced as long as it has not been sent to England and approved. There is thus still scope for the deputation to visit England, and for sending petitions, etc. Moreover, the law has been so amended that it will not apply to children under sixteen. That is to say, such children entering the Transvaal will not be prosecuted. Another amending clause has, however, been added according to which anyone who smuggles in a child of another as his own will be prosecuted and sentenced. Not only that, but his permit and registration certificate will be cancelled, and he will be deported.

313. REPLY TO “THE RAND DAILY MAIL”

[Johannesburg,
September 12, 1906]

[THE EDITOR]
The Rand Daily Mail
SIR,

You have accused me in your leading article of the confusion of the issues in connection with the British Indian mass meeting held yesterday. I fear, however, that it is rather on your side than on mine. The point that I, and every other speaker, made was perfectly clear.

Here is what I stated, as reported in your paper:

They did not ask to bring the 350 millions into this country, but they said that those who had entered the country were entitled to the same protection and

\footnote{Vide “The Mass Meeting”, 11-9-1906} rights and privileges as all the Europeans who had come in.

While the meeting earnestly pleaded for a reasonable treatment of the resident British Indian population, you, Sir, shall I say, deliberately have confused the issue by dragging in all Asiatics, British and otherwise, and by raising the question of immigration. How can we raise any such question when it is a matter of life and death for the handful of British Indians that are in the Transvaal? In order to accentuate my point, I did indeed say that, if aliens, not always of a desirable character, could enter the Transvaal freely and without permits, and enjoy all the privileges, it was reasonable that Indians, who are accepted as British subjects, should have a prior right.

You again talk of a suspicious disinclination to descend to details! There was no occasion for it as they are embodied in the British Indian protest which you have already published. No amount of amending the Ordinance as to details can make it acceptable when the very principle of it is bad, namely, to ask every Indian without exception to carry a pass under a system of identification applied only to criminals. We would be unworthy sons of India if, mild as we are, we submitted to the contemplated degradation.

[Yours, etc.,
M. K. GANDHI]

314. LETTER TO “THE STAR”

[JOHANNESBURG,
Before September 14, 1906]

TO
THE EDITOR
THE STAR
SIR,

You have been good enough, in your leading article on the British Indian protest regarding the Asiatic Draft Ordinance, to give advice to the British Indian Association which, in your opinion, is not very “judiciously” led.

It is a trite saying that “our neighbours always know best what is good for us,” and I have no doubt that, on the principle, your opinion, that the British Indian community is badly led, is also correct. However, for the present, I am more concerned with the attitude you have taken up regarding the British Indian protest than with your judgement about the leaders of the Association.
You think that the community has no case whatever against the new Ordinance, because it is purely a matter of fresh registration and that it imposes no fresh disabilities on any class of His Majesty's subjects. I join issue on both the points. Just as the administration of the Peace Preservation Ordinance has been distorted in order to prohibit Indian immigration, so also the scope of Law 3 of 1885 has been distorted by the new Ordinance to meet a demand that was never made during the Dutch regime. The Dutch law was aimed at the traders. It policy was not to restrict immigration, but to penalise the immigrants who wanted to trade, and it was for that reason that, originally, it fixed a registration fee of £25, which was reduced to £3 on the intervention of the British Government.

The present Ordinance, which is supposed merely to amend Law 3 of 1885, and therefore, to continue its scope and not entirely change it, as a matter of fact, provides for a system of identification which, in its operation, cannot but be most galling to those who have to submit to it. Re-registration does not mean taking a census of the Indian population, but it means the following:

Every Indian resident in the Colony has to carry with him a registration certificate containing degrading identification particulars. He has to have his new-born child provisionally registered, giving such particulars as to identification as may be required by the regulation to be framed by the Lieutenant-Governor. He has to take out a registration for children above the age of eight years with similar conditions as to identification.

All this is absolutely new and never contemplated by Law 3 of 1885. And yet you have no hesitation in saying that the Ordinancedoes not impose any disability on the resident Indian population.

Let me assure you that the policy of passive resistance is not a brutum fulmen. It is simply a resolve on the part of my countrymen to decline to submit to conditions that are quite unbearable, and if, as suggested by you, it provokes “a movement of their wholesale expulsion as an expensive nuisance”, it will be a great relief. That it will be a new departure in the British policy, of course, does not matter to the new school of Imperialists, of whom you are, undoubtedly, a leading light. My countrymen have remained long enough in the background—not discreetly, as you suggest, but rather indiscreetly.

1 This is in response to the following editorial observation made by The Star.

“The suggestion of a policy of passive resistance is either a brutum fulmen or based on a very hazy notion of the value of that policy in the English educational controversy.”

315. THE NEW TRANSVAAL BILL

The resolutions unanimously passed by the mass meeting of Indians appear in the Johannesburg Letter\(^1\). Our correspondent says that the meeting was attended by representatives from all over the Transvaal. We congratulate them on foregathering to pass the resolutions unanimously, and wish them complete success in their endeavours. We believe that the Government will be obliged to withdraw the Bill if this movement is continued with unity. The Draft Ordinance has gone through two readings in the legislature. A special amendment places women outside the purview of the Act. The Bill was presented for its third reading, when the telegram received from the British Indian Association was read out; and after some discussion—during which certain amendments were put forward—it was decided to put off consideration until the final report on the Bill was ready. If, as our correspondent asks, the Imperial Government should give its assent meanwhile and the Bill become law, what should Indians do? In that case, we hope and pray that God may give them the strength and tenacity to adhere to the Fourth Resolution passed unanimously at the mass meeting till the grievances are redre

316. STATEMENT ON DRAFT ASIATIC ORDINANCE

[Before September 17, 1906]

It is much worse than was expected would be the case. If the Bill is passed, it will constitute a breach of the promises made hitherto. Instead of giving relief it is calculated to give the greatest irritation, and that, too, without the slightest justification.

Law 3 of 1885 as it stands is infinitely superior to the present Ordinance; for, under the latter, women, children, and adults who do not enter the country for purposes of trade will be liable to be registered, although they are free under the former. The remission of £3 merely adds insult to injury, for all those who have been registered have already paid the £3. It must not be forgotten that this measure, if it passes, will necessitate a third registration; and why? Simply because some [anti-]Asiatic agitators have said that many Indians have entered the country without authority. The British Indian Association has repudiated the suggestion as applied to the community in general. Assuming, however, that a large body of people have so entered, the evil can be obviated by inspecting the permits already issued.

The Johannesburg Star states, evidently with authority, that the method of identification now to be adopted will be very severe. The Indian community has quite gratuitously, and in order to conciliate Lord Milner, allowed the authorities to take thumb-impressions. How much further the Government intends to go, and what further indignity it wishes to impose, it is not possible to conjecture.

I need not go further into the matter at this stage. Much fuller information will be found in the next issue of Indian Opinion to which I beg to draw your attention.

From Mr. Duncan’s statement, it would appear that the Imperial Government has already sanctioned the principle of the proposed legislation. If so, I can only say that they have not given any consideration to the matter. They have not studied the past despatches, which promised a great deal. Throughout these despatches, no mention is made of registration of the community as if it were merely composed of criminals. The Draft Ordinance draws no distinction between British Asiatics and others. In one of the Sections, you will notice exemption promised at the discretion of the Government from the Liquor Ordinance to holders of temporary permits. The Section is a wanton insult to the community. No self-respecting Indian will ever claim any such exemption. It is most galling to think that in British territories if Prince Ranjitsinghjee wanted to enter the Transvaal he should have to apply for a permit, and then, in order that he might have a glass of beer, he should have to apply cringingly to the Government for exemption from the Liquor Ordinance. Is this the way in which the most Liberal Government that the Empire has seen for years will protect weak and helpless members thereof?

[JOHANNESBURG.]

September 19, 19062

[SIR.]

I trust for the sake of elementary justice you will give publicity to the following facts, and even comment, if you think, as I do, that those facts bring to light a shocking state of affairs in the Colony.

An Indian woman named Punia was travelling with her husband from Durban to Johannesburg on the 14th inst. by the Kaffir mail. Her husband held a permit and registration certificate, which mentioned his wife. The wife was, however, arrested and detained at Volksrust for being without a permit. The poor husband had also, therefore, to stay. Both passed the night in the lock-up. Next morning the wife was tried. She had to stand in the dock like a common felon. The arresting constable gave the following evidence:

My instructions are to arrest all Indians entering this Colony without permits—no matter whether male or female, minors or adults. There is no age limit. These instructions apply even when women and children accompany their husbands and parents. It is of no account for the registration certificate to mention a wife.

It transpired, in the course of evidence, that, according to the husband’s testimony, the wife was with him during and after the war in the Transvaal. The Magistrate held that he had no option but to order the wife to leave the Colony before 7 p.m. the same day, as she held no permit. The wife, however, under counsel’s advice, proceeded to Johannesburg in defiance of the order of expulsion. She was, therefore, arrested at Germiston. The last has not yet been heard of the case.

But the future development has nothing to do with the point I wish to make. It is this: May the Government, in the name of the people of the Transvaal, thus set up a reign of terror for British Indian women and children? It was admitted at the trial that this was not an isolated case. Remember that, according to the authorised and printed permit regulations, wives and children under 16 years accompanying their husbands or parents are not required to take out permits. Are Indian women now to go to the Permit Office, and, after a process of exhausting and exasperating examination, to take out their permits? And what of babes in arms? This is no tale from the Arabian Nights. Infants hardly able to crawl have been detained at Volksrust. Do even Messrs Loveday and Company require all this? Do you?

Your own Durban correspondent has sent you what purports to be an explanation of my letter to the Press regarding Punia, who was

1 This was re-published in Indian Opinion, 29-9-1906.
2 Apropos of Gandhiji’s “Letter to the Press”, 19-9-1906, The Natal Mercury, 21-9-1906, published the following explanation of the Punia case:
   “The detention of an Indian woman at Volksrust by the Transvaal authorities, which forms the subject of Mr. M. K. Gandhi’s protest in The Rand Daily Mail, and published in the Natal papers yesterday, is clearly an incident upon which the wrong construction has been placed. The impression received from Mr. Gandhi’s letter is that the intercepting of an Asiatic female, who presents herself at the border without a permit, is unprecedented, and the Transvaal Government’s instructions to the police have been characterised as ‘War on Women’, but this is entirely denied by the immigration authorities in Durban. The Transvaal regulations require, it is explained, that every Asiatic immigrant, whether adult or child, male or female, shall possess a permit before they are allowed to enter the Colony, a man bringing his wife with him, having, in addition, to prove that he is married to the woman. The case is somewhat different in Natal where a woman, accompanying her husband, is not required to produce a separate permit. The man, however, has to furnish convincing evidence as to the woman being actually his wife, and not only has he to bring with him a certificate to that effect, but the matter is subjected to close individual investigation. As a rule, a description of the woman is entered upon the man’s registration certificate, so that, as a substitute for her own individual pass, she may be readily identified, but it appears that this is sometimes omitted in the case of Mohammedan women, whose religion obliges them to go about with their faces veiled. It is seldom or never that the local immigration officials insist upon these women’s veils being removed, every consideration being shown, wherever possible, to the immigrants’ religious prejudices.
   “The Transvaal, which has for some time been carrying out a policy of recently arrested at Volksrust for being without a permit, although shewas in the company of her husband. "The reason," your correspondent says, "of altering the Transvaal regulations was that women are being taken in as wives by Indians already living in the Colony, who were nothing of the kind, but often of indifferent character". I can only use one expression to fit the wicked libel on Indian womanhood, namely, that it is an infamous lie. You should publish the name of the immigration official who is said to have given this precious reason. I challenge him to publish the name of even one such woman. I have no hesitation in saying that I am not aware during the whole course of the very considerable experience I have of the administration of the Peace Preservation Ordinance of a single Indian woman of indifferent character having entered the Colony in the manner suggested by your correspondent. I have asked for official information, which shall be placed at the disposal of your readers. In the meanwhile, is it not somewhat strange that the explanation about Transvaal regulations should have to travel all the way from Durban?

320. THE LATE JUSTICE BUDRUDDIN TYEBJI

India has, of late, been losing the best of her sons. We had only the other day to record the death of late [sic] Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee. Vigorous Asiatic exclusion, makes the entry of coloured immigrants into their territory a matter of much greater difficulty; and this supplies the reason for women being required to carry permits as well as the men. At one time women and children were admitted without passes, owing to the clause in the Ordinance merely specifying 'Asiatics', but this has since been amended to include females as well as males. It was found that women were being brought in ostensibly as the wives of Indians already living in the Colony, who were nothing of the kind, but persons of indifferent character, and the Transvaal authorities now insist upon women taking out permits, because, without that precaution, they feel that the men could bring in an indefinite number of women by simply stating they were married to them.

"At any rate, the woman who was stopped at Volksrust was no detached instance of the Transvaal authorities’ activity in restricting unauthorised immigration, and, from the information which is obtainable locally, it certainly appears that the comment of one of the Transvaal papers as to the Government making war on women is justified only by the view that may be taken of the Transvaal’s new laws,"

1 Vide "Letter to Leader", 22-9-1906 ; 27--9-1906
2 Vide "The Late Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee", 25-8-1906
We have now to chronicle the death of an equally distinguished patriot in the person of Mr. Justice Budruddin Tyebji. Like the late Mr. Bonnerjee, Mr. Budruddin Tyebji belonged to the Naoroji school.

He was one of the earliest barristers from the Bombay side, having been called to the Bar in 1867. He was the first Indian to be enrolled as an advocate in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay. The late Mr. Budruddin Tyebji, by his industry and ability, soon rose to the top of his profession. He was one of the promoters of the National Congress and was its third President. His knowledge of Urdu was unrivalled, and he shone equally as an orator, whether as an English or as an Urdu speaker. He was held in high estimation as a Judge of the Bombay High Court and his decisions were considered to be always sound and just. His activity as to social reform among his co-religionists was most praiseworthy, and he was an undaunted champion of female education. Not only did he push it among the Mahomedans by his speeches, but he illustrated it in his own family. His own daughters have all received first-class university education.

We tender our respectful condolences to the late Mr. Tyebji’s family.

321. THE TRANSVAAL INDIAN PROTEST

The great Indian meeting held in the old Empire Theatre has already begun to bear fruit. The Rand Daily Mail has ridiculed the meeting by setting up a false comparison between the Bengal partition agitation and the movement against the Draft Ordinance of the Transvaal, which culminated in the great demonstration recently held in Johannesburg. The ridicule shows that the importance of the meeting was felt. The Star has gone into hysterics over the meeting. It incites South Africans to inaugurate an agitation for physical expulsion of the Indians from the Transvaal by way of answer to the British Indian resolve to offer passive resistance to the Ordinance.

Neither The Daily Mail nor The Star has taken the trouble to study or understand the Ordinance. To them it is a harmless process of registration. If the Ordinance had been given its proper title, namely, an ‘ordinance for the identification of suspects or criminals’, instead of being misdescribed as a registration ordinance, perhaps our contemporaries would have realized its horror. It is not necessary, as The Daily Mail puts it, to impute to the Government any studied desire to subject Indians to unnecessary indignity. The Ordinance speaks for itself. Let it be understood that Indians already hold registration certificates giving particulars, including thumb-prints, in order to identify the holders with the certificates. The new Ordinance now provides for a process of identification to be hereafter devised by regulations subject to change from time to time.

_The Star_, which seems to enjoy official confidence, informs us that the new system of identification will be drastic enough to ensure detection of abuse or misuse of certificates. Even without the information given by _The Star_, it is only reasonable to suppose that the new system must be stricter than the present one, as Mr. Duncan, with a self-assurance that is astounding, has declared that the present system is inadequate. We have reason to believe that Mr. Duncan, up to the eve of the first reading of the Ordinance, was not aware of the system in vogue. This, however, is by the way, and quite in keeping with the general ignorance and indifference displayed about Indian matters in the Transvaal.

The first registration under the British regime was a voluntary act by the Indian community. This self-effacing courtesy has been misinterpreted by the Government as a docility of nature that would stand any strain and any indignity. If _The Star_ thinks that the Indian is born to suffer any ignominy, a meeting such as the one that has agitated our contemporary, was necessary, if only to disabuse it of the idea.

Neither the ridicule of _The Daily Mail_ nor the wild threats of _The Star_ need turn the Transvaal Indians from their solemn undertaking. Threats were only to be expected and so was ridicule. We shall no doubt have much more of both before the struggle is ended. The information we continue to receive from different centres in the Transvaal goes to show that the determination to carry out the historic resolution is as keen as ever. May God help our suffering countrymen in their trial.

322. TRANSVAAL PERMIT ORDINANCE

In another place, we print the full text of the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of _Rex v. Bhabha_. It will be remembered that, some time ago, Mr. E. M. Bhyat entered the Transvaal on the strength of possession by him of an old Dutch registration certificate. The Magistrate at Volksrust decided that such a certificate was a formal authorisation to reside in the Transvaal, in terms of the Peace Preservation Ordinance. This case was brought in review at the instance of the Attorney-General, but the Supreme Court dismissed the application for review, and the point raised in Mr. Bhyat’s case remained undecided.¹

The same point was brought before the Supreme Court in the case we have mentioned above, and this time there was no difficulty in getting a judicial decision from the highest tribunal of justice in the Transvaal. The decision has gone against the British Indian contention, nor are we surprised at it, but the Supreme Court has decided the main point raised in this case in favour of the appellant, namely, that an expulsion order granted by a Magistrate at the investigation of an application for exemption from having to hold a permit does not prevent the Magistrate from reconsidering his decision on further evidence being brought before him. However, as the Court held that the Magistrate’s judgment in Mr. Bhabha’s case was right though based on wrong premises, the result was that the sentence of civil imprisonment passed by the Magistrate was reluctantly confirmed by the Bench, though the Supreme Court expressed a great deal of sympathy with the appellant. The Chief Justice suggested that the Crown should remit the sentence, as the case was in the nature of a test case, and both the Chief Justice and Justice Mason thought that Mr. Bhabha, being in possession of the old Dutch certificate, should have a permit issued to him. The Lieutenant-Governor has exercised the prerogative of mercy and remitted the sentence passed on Mr. Bhabha, and it is highly probable that Mr. Bhabha will be allowed to remain undisturbed in the Transvaal. So far, therefore, as the individual is concerned, at last justice will have been done.

But this case has important bearings on the Indian position. It shows that there is something very seriously wrong with the administration of the Peace Preservation Ordinance. We have the solemn word of Lord Selborne, given to the British Indian deputation at Middelburg, that all pre-war Indian residents of the Transvaal shall be allowed to enter the country.² We have the assurance of the Colonial Secretary that such residents have a right to enter the country, and yet, we find that Mr. Bhabha had a very great deal of difficulty about entering the Transvaal. There are many such cases in which, in spite of proof of registration certificates, men are still without their permits. May we not then hope that Lord Selborne’s assurance will be translated into practice, and such men who have waited long enough at the coast will be permitted to re-enter the Transvaal?

² Lord Selborne gave this assurance when an address was presented to him at Middelburg on September 4; vide Indian Opinion, 8-9-1906.

Indian Opinion, 22-9-1906

323. DIFFICULTIES OF INDIAN WOMEN IN THE TRANSVAAL

The permit difficulties of women continue unabated in the Transvaal. We give details of one such case in our English columns. Mangare and his wife, Punia, were both travelling to the Transvaal on September 14. The Police Inspector at Volksrust forced the wife to detrain as she did not have a separate permit. Mangare produced his own permit and registration certificate. And though the wife’s name was also mentioned in the register, she was not allowed to proceed. So the husband and the wife both got off the train and had to stay in the lock-up. When the case was heard on the 15th, the Police Officer deposed that his orders were to arrest permitless women and children whether or not they were accompanied by their husbands or parents and whatever the age of the children. The evidence also revealed that the wife was in the Transvaal on May 31, 1902. Nevertheless, on the ground that the woman did not come forward to give evidence, the Magistrate ordered her to leave the Colony before seven o’clock that very evening. Thus are wives separated from husbands and children from parents under this Government. It is necessary for us to take effective measures in this matter. We hope this case will, if necessary, be taken to the Supreme Court. We believe that it is a thousand times better for men to suffer imprisonment than to submit to such a law.

324. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

THE MASS MEETING IN THE TRANSVAAL

The Rand Daily Mail says that no meeting has ever taken place in the Transvaal like the one held by the Indians in the Empire Theatre. The Theatre was packed, at least three thousand persons attending. Many people could not get in for want of room. The shopkeepers and hawkers had all closed business at ten in the morning. Though the Theatre gates were due to be opened at two, people began collecting from eleven onwards and the Theatre had to be opened at twelve. By 1.30 there was no room for anyone to enter the spacious Theatre. Though such a large number of persons had assembled, there was no untoward incident, and quiet prevailed everywhere. The people sat or stood patiently, waiting for the proceedings to start. Such a meeting and such enthusiasm have never before been seen among Indians.

Though all this shows the extent of oppression to which Indians are subjected, it must be admitted that much of the credit for holding such a meeting goes to the Hamidiya Islamic Society. The Society’s Hall was thrown open to all, Hindus and Muslims alike. For a week past, meetings had been held there during which all the leading Indians held consultations. Very often, the meetings continued till midnight. Younger associations in South Africa would do well to follow the example of the Hamidiya Society.

The meeting was attended by representatives from a number of places. Telegrams or letters expressing sympathy and agreement with the aims of the meeting were received from Middelburg, Standerton, Klerksdorp and other places. Both the Colonial Secretary and Mr. Chamney were invited; Mr. Chamney attended and sat to the right of the President. In addition, white gentlemen like Mr. Lichtenstein, a lawyer from Pretoria, Mr. Israelstram, Mr. Littmann Landsberg and Mr. Stuart Campbell’s manager were present. Reporters from all the three newspapers also came.

The President, Mr. Abdul Gani, began his speech exactly at three o’clock. Everyone felt that Mr. Abdul Gani was at his best. His speech in excellent Hindustani was brief and eloquent. His narration of the facts was quite moderate, yet forceful. His voice was loud and so audible everywhere. His speech was received with acclamation. When he spoke of gaol-going, the audience shouted in one voice,

1 This despatch was entitled “A Special Report”.
“We shall go to gaol, but will not register ourselves again.”

The English version of Mr. Gani’s speech was read out by Dr. Godfrey.

MR. NANALAL SHAH

The task of moving the First Resolution was entrusted to Mr. Nanalal Valji Shah, who spoke in English. We summarize his speech below:

We have met today for very serious business. Mr. Duncan has said that the new law is necessary, because the registers already issued are such as can be sold, and with these, others who do not have the right come in. Now let us take the example of a bank. Suppose a bank finds that some forged notes bearing its name have passed into currency, will it cancel all the notes? Mr. Duncan tells us that because our registers are faked, he will give fresh ones in exchange. What a law this is! But I assert that the registers are not counterfeit.

Producing his own register Mr. Shah declared, “This register contains my name, my wife’s name, my caste, my profession, my height, my age,” and slamming the paper on the table, he added:

It bears even my thumb-impression. Is all this not enough? How can anyone else use this register? Does the Government want now to brand us on our foreheads? I will never return my register. Neither will I be registered again. I prefer going to gaol, and I will go there.

(Applause.)

Mr. C. K. T. Naidoo seconded Mr. Shah and explained the matter to the Tamil-speaking people in their language.

MR. ABDUL RAHMAN

Mr. Abdul Rahman rose to move the Second Resolution. In his brief speech he said that we suffered greater oppression under the British regime than under the Boers. As Sir Henry Cotton had put it, while the Boer Government flogged us, the British Government was scourging us with scorpion stings.

DR. GODFREY

Supporting Mr. Abdul Rahman, Dr. Godfrey said:

The tall promises made to us by Lord Milner, Lord Roberts and

---

1 In the Gujarati, Gandhiji has used “register” for “registration certificates”.
2 The original has “to second”.
3 At the twentieth session of the Indian National Congress held at Bombay in 1904, he said, “In dealing with Indian Colonists their [the British rulers’] little finger has been thicker than Mr. Kruger’s loins, and where he had chastised with whips, they have chastised with scorpions.”
Mr. Chamberlain have proved worthless. (‘Shame!’)

The Doctor produced a photograph of the late Queen-Empress that had been distributed by the Indian community among its schoolboys in Durban,¹ and said:

We worship this Queen, whose Proclamation has been set at naught by the Transvaal Government. Whereas under the Union Jack we should get equal rights, liberty and justice, we have instead slavery, injustice and denial of our rights. I do not at all agree that there has been an influx of Indians without permits or with false ones. I defy Mr. Loveday and his company to contradict me if they have the courage. We are not going to submit to such oppression. We shall go to gaol rather than do so. Let no one imagine that we shall run away in fear. If the bill is passed, we will storm the courts and say, ‘Arrest us’. (Applause.)

Mr. Getta of Potchefstroom spoke in Gujarati and supported the Second Resolution.

MR. ESSOP MIAN

The task of moving the Third Resolution fell to Mr. Essop Mian, who said:

British rule in the Transvaal is worse than the regime in Russia. I myself went to Pretoria to wait on Mr. Duncan, who made many promises, but has fulfilled none of them and has betrayed us. It is necessary for us to send a deputation to England. We shall raise an outcry there, but if the Imperial Government does not listen to us, we shall go to gaol. I have been in the Transvaal for nineteen years, but never before have I seen such oppression as during the last three years.

MR. E. S. COOVADIA

Seconding this Resolution, Mr. Ebrahim Salejee Coovadia made the following speech:

The chairman and others have already spoken on the Draft Asiatic Ordinance, so that little remains for me to say about it. This much is certain: wherever the subjects of a State are free from tyranny, they are happy and both the rulers and the ruled are relaxed. The late Boer Government, at the instigation of these same British friends, enacted oppressive laws before the war; being rather kindly disposed towards us, that Government did not, however, enforce them. Thanks to their kindness, we were quite happy until the war with the British broke out. Now that our [British] Government had won control of the Colony, we

¹ Vide “To Heads of Indian Schools”, 19-3-1901 and illustration facing “Letter to Colonial Secretary”, 9-2-1906 were hoping that we would gain all the rights, since the Government had also given us assurances to that effect, but unfortunately, what we see today is quite the opposite, and they are enacting insufferable laws against us. It is, of course, our duty to submit to all the reasonable laws that the Government may make in the public interest. But such is not the case. Since the present Government assumed power in the Colony, they have placed, upon us in particular, one severe restriction after another. All these we have suffered so far, but now we have had our fill. Just as a river in spate can take in no more and overflows its banks, so also can we no longer stomach oppressive laws. We should therefore take strong measures against the Draft Ordinance, though we are told that the law is designed for our benefit as we are British subjects. To this I would only answer, ‘By these laws, you are not making of us British raiyat, but maiyat.’ I therefore support the resolution moved by Mr. Essop Mian to send a deputation as soon as possible to England and to put up a stiff resistance.

Mr. A. E. Wania of Krugersdorp supported the resolution, and Mr. Manilal Desai of Pretoria spoke in favour of it.

THE GAOL RESOLUTION

Even as Mr. Hajee Habib rose to speak, the audience greeted him with cheers. His speech was so caustic and impassioned that even those who did not know Gujarati said they could follow its purport.
Now and then, Mr. Hajee Habib used English anecdotes. The audience was greatly roused by his speech of which the following is a summary:

The Fourth Resolution is the most important of all. Everything depends upon it. There is no disgrace in going to gaol; rather it is an honour. Only a few people knew of Mr. Tilak before he went to gaol; today the whole world knows him. We are not going to get justice at the hands of the British Government. It kills us with sweet words; we should not be deceived. They offer us sympathy, but we ask for justice, not sympathy. The British are ever willing to advise others. They are always ready to appease the Christian peoples. Take the case of Turkey. The British do not hesitate to bully Turkey, and that not in order to secure the interests of their own subjects. Again in this country, the doors are open to the whites and Christians, even if they be foreign nationals. In their view, the whites are descended from Heaven and we, they think, have come from the other place. This Bill is most objectionable. If it is passed, I solemnly declare that I will never get myself registered again and will be the first to go to gaol.
(Applause.) I recommend the same course to you all. Are you all

1 “Not subjects but corpses” prepared to take the oath? (The Assembly stood up to a man and said, ‘Yes, we will go to gaol!’) Only by so doing shall we succeed. We tried this method in the days of the Boer Government also. Some 40 of our men were once arrested for trading without licences. I advised them to go to gaol and not to seek release on bail. Accordingly, they all remained there without offering bail. I immediately approached the British Agent, who approved of our action and ultimately secured justice for us. Now that a British Government is in power, the time has come for us to go to gaol, and go we will.

As he repeated the last phrase thrice, the meeting greeted his resolve with applause.

Mr. Hajee Ojer Ally

When Mr. Hajee Ojer Ally stood up to second the Fourth Resolution, the whole Theatre resounded with prolonged cheers which took some time to subside. Then Mr. Ally made a thundering speech in English, which is summarised below:

The resolution I stand here to second is not an ordinary one, and it enjoins a great responsibility on us. I am the father of eleven children, but I am prepared to take up the responsibility. Like Mr. Hajee Habib, I, too, shall refuse to register myself and prefer to go to gaol and deem it an honour. The Government have betrayed us. In answer to our petition, they said that the matter was under consideration and that they would give us a definite reply. They said the same thing to the deputation. Despite this, two days later, they brought the Bill before the Legislative Council, and within four days, had it passed. (‘Shame!’) The Bill originally envisaged registration of women also. But, owing to the efforts of the Hamidiya Society, that provision was dropped.

Producing a Union Jack, he went on:

Since my childhood, I have been told that, under this Union Jack, I shall always find protection. That is exactly what we now ask for. On the occasion of the Delhi Durbar, His Majesty King-Emperor Edward declared that he would give us our rights and preserve our status just as Her Majesty Queen Victoria had done. Does not that promise extend to the Transvaal also? We, the Indians resident here, demand that we be allowed to live in peace and happiness. In fact, we should have more rights than the non-British whites. They complain, because a few of us might have entered the Colony without permits. I make bold to say that, if only the Government would send three constables with me, I shall forthwith have a thousand permitless whites arrested. For the last 25 years, I have been in South Africa. In the Cape I exercised the right to vote and other rights as well. Nowhere except here in the Transvaal have I seen such oppression of our people. And the Transvaal is still a Crown Colony. When it was under the Boers, the British whites came to me for my signature to their petition. Now they are against us. We will not take up rifles as they did but like them we shall go to gaol. (Applause.)

Mr. Moonlight Mudaliar then supported the Resolution in a Tamil speech.

Seconding the Resolution, Dr. Godfrey said:
Just as India is the crown of the British Empire, so shall we, by going to Johannesburg gaol, become its most cherished possession. We won’t wait for the police to come and arrest us.

Mr. Aswat, who spoke in support, appealed to those present to write and tell their people at home that they were all getting ready to go to gaol.

Mr. A. E. Chhotabhai of Krugersdorp supported the Resolution in a Gujarati speech, saying that the people of the town were prepared to go to gaol rather than register themselves.

Mr. Omarji Saheb also supported the Resolution.

Mr. Tar Mahomed Tayob of Pietersburg declared that the people there were ready to go to gaol but would not register themselves.

Mr. Imam Abdul Kadir also supported the Resolution.

In supporting the Resolution, Jemadar Nawabkhan said that he had served the Government in the War. He would now prefer gaol to the humiliation of registration.

Mr. Gandhi said that the responsibility for advising them to go to gaol was his. The step was grave, but unavoidable. In doing so, they did not hold out a threat, but showed that the time for action—over and above making speeches and submitting petitions—had arrived. When people passed a resolution, it was their duty to adhere to it. And if they did that, success was bound to be theirs.

Thereafter, the whole assembly stood up and passed, amid acclamation, the resolution about going to gaol.

Mr. Bhikubhai D. Malia moved the Fifth Resolution, and made a brief speech. Mr. Jusab Haji Vali of Pietersburg seconded it.

The business of the meeting was over at 5.30 p.m. Mr. Chamney then rose with the Chairman’s permission and expressed his thanks for having been invited to the meeting.

Mr. Laishansai proposed a vote of thanks to the Chair, adding that he had never seen such a meeting before and hoped that the Liberal Ministry [in England] would do them justice. Mr. Israelstram,

\[1\] The contrast appears to be between the British in South Africa who fought the Boers and Britons like Hampden and Bunyan who went to gaol.
who seconded the vote, expressed sympathy for the Indian cause and appealed to the audience to continue the struggle.

The meeting dispersed at five minutes to six. Three cheers were called for King-Emperor Edward, and God Save The King was sung.

For Indians, this meeting will for ever remain memorable.

[JOHANNESBURG]

September 29, 1906

THE EDITOR
LEADER
SIR,

I have promised, in my letter dated the 21st instant\(^1\) regarding the treatment of the Indian woman, Punia, to let you have any official reply I might receive. The following is the text of a telegram I addressed to the Registrar of Asiatics:

_L leader publishes statement that reason for requiring women take out separate permits is that women are taken in as wives by Indians in Colony though they were not wives but were often of indifferent character. Will you please wire whether your office believes in above charge. I wish to publish your reply._

The Registrar has returned the following reply:

_With reference your telegram 21st inst., no such statement as that alluded to in your message was made by any officer in the service of this department._

_In justice to the community that has been so cruelly libelled by your correspondent at Durban, I trust that you will publish the name of the official who is supposed to have given the information referred to by your correspondent, or ask him to withdraw the statement made_

In response to Gandhiji’s letter, Transvaal Leader, 9-10-1906, published the following apology:

“With reference to the statements published some days back concerning the grant of permits to British Indian subjects to enter the Transvaal Colony, and the allegation that women who were styled wives were ‘frequently of indifferent character’, The Natal Mercury of Monday last has the following: ‘Mr. M. K. Gandhi has written to us from Johannesburg concerning an article which appeared in our issue of the 21st ult., in which the detention of an Indian woman, named Punia, at Volksrust, for being without a permit, was dealt with. Mr. Gandhi is displeased with certain contents of the article, which he views as casting an unjustified aspersion upon Indian women in the Transvaal. We applied to what quarters were available in Durban for information upon the incident, but it will be obvious that here in Natal the same facilities—such as those open to Mr. Gandhi, for instance—for obtaining full intelligence as to the Transvaal affairs do not exist as in Johannesburg, where Mr. Gandhi resides, and any unfounded or exaggerated statement is mainly attributable to that cause. It is emphatically denied by Mr. Gandhi that Indians domiciled in the Transvaal are seeking to gain admittance to the Transvaal of women of indifferent character, passing them off as their wives, and to prove this he has made enquiries in official and other quarters, and denial was the result. The statement must, therefore, be withdrawn as being one that is not in accordance with ascertained facts. It is well that the public should know this, and further, that Mr. Gandhi assures us that he does not know of a single such case.’

“Similar statements were published in this journal upon the authority of our Durban Correspondent, and conceivably derived from the same source, and it is therefore only fair that equal publicity should be given to the retraction.”

official in your department is responsible for the reason that is alleged to have been given to the Durban correspondent of the Leader by an immigration official, namely, that Indians in the Transvaal have taken in, as their wives, Indian women of indifferent character.

I may state that I addressed a similar enquiry to the Registrar of Asiatics at Pretoria and he has repudiated the statement.¹

327. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

September 25, 1906

For the Indian community in the Transvaal the last week was full of restlessness, like that of a delirious patient tossing from side to side. Just when the deputation was to leave and all preparations had been finally made, came the bomb-shell—a letter from Lord Selborne which, as is now known, was full of ambiguities. It caused a split. Everybody took it that the Bill for re-registration had become law. It was therefore decided that the deputation should not sail. This was the state of affairs till Tuesday noon. In the afternoon on that day, a telephone message was received from the High Commissioner saying that Lord Elgin’s approval did not mean that formal sanction had been given to the law. This again led to a new course of action. The same night some Indians met together, called on Mr. Haji Ojer Ally, obtained his consent, and considered recommending that the Indian community send him alone as a one-man deputation. On Wednesday that idea was put into execution; but it was shown last week to every Indian how and when man is rendered powerless. Messrs Gregorowski and Lichtenstein were of the emphatic opinion that it was absolutely essential to include Mr. Gandhi in the deputation, and that the deputation should certainly be sent. The Indian community in Pretoria, on the other hand, emphasized the need of Mr. Gandhi remaining in the Transvaal, lest through fear or temptation people should waver and take out new registration certificates. Strongly-worded telegrams were received from Natal to say that it was quite necessary to send the deputation as decided earlier. A meeting was therefore held on Friday, and it was unanimously decided that both Mr. Ally and Mr. Gandhi should go. The consensus of opinion was that Mr. Abdul Gani should also go.

¹ Vide “Letter to Leader”, 22-9-1906 but the idea had to be reluctantly given up as there were strong reasons why he could not go. Before agreeing to go, Mr. Gandhi got the leading men to give a written undertaking that, notwithstanding difficulties that might arise, they would adhere to the Fourth Resolution. This document will be published next week.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM LORD SELBORNE

About the time this decision was taken, another letter was received from Lord Selborne. Clarifying the situation further, he said that the new Ordinance would be despatched that week to England, and that the Royal assent, if given at all, would naturally be after it had reached there. Under the circumstances, there was no cause for apprehension. It is likely that the Royal assent will not be given and the Bill cannot become law before the deputation returns.

DEPUTATION EXPENSES

The Committee has sanctioned up to £900 towards the expenses of the deputation of which £300 have been sanctioned for Mr. Ally for his domestic and other expenses. Mr. Ally has indicated that he will, if necessary, spend a portion of this sum on public work in England. The remaining £600 will be spent on the deputation, and a detailed statement of expenses will be submitted to the Committee.

MEMBERS OF THE DEPUTATION

Of one of the members of the deputation, Mr. Gandhi, it is needless to write here. The other, Mr. Haji Ojer Ally was born in 1853 in Mauritius, where he had his education. He started work in 1868 and took up the job of a printer in the office of the Commercial Gazette.
In 1873 he got employed as a clerk in a wharf, and joined the firm of Messrs Charles Jacob and Son as a shipping clerk in 1876. He then got on a pilgrimage to Mecca and became a Haji. In 1884 he landed at Cape Town and set up business as a manufacturer of aerated water. He began doing public work in 1885. The Government proposed to remove the Malay cemetery to a place far away from town. The Malays opposed the move and a disturbance was feared.
Mr. Ally then intervened. A settlement was effected and a nearer site fixed for the cemetery. In Cape Town, Mr. Ally was a voter both for Parliament and the Municipality and always took a prominent part in the elections. In 1892 he went to Kimberley and other places, where he was elected Chairman of the Coloured Peoples’ Organization. He took a leading part in the movement against the Franchise Law Amendment Act of the Cape, when a petition signed by 22,000 Coloured people was sent to London. After 1892 Mr. Ally went to Johannesburg and settled there. Mr. Ally interviewed the British Agent and other public men in the Transvaal in connection with the condition of British Indians there. He is the founder of the Hamidiya Islamic Society and is at present its President. The Society is doing excellent work. As is well known, it has a large membership and its work is being carried on with great enthusiasm. Mr. Ally has a large family; he is the father of eleven children whom he has been giving a good education.1

September 27, 1906

We, the undersigned, propose that Mr. Abdul Gani or, in his

We give the assurance that we shall do our utmost to see that these in writing your views as to whether a country or Colony has the right to restrict by legislation the entrance into its territory of a particular race or class of people, even though the would-be immigrants are subjects of the same Crown?

“If as you stated to me, your views on this subject have been misunderstood, it would be desirable to correct such a misapprehension, and I shall be glad if, when writing, you would give me the permission to make use of your reply, if I consider it

333. ON TRIAL

We are enabled to publish copies of communications from Lord Selborne addressed to the British Indian Association, in connection with the new Asiatic Ordinance of the Transvaal. One of them states that Lord Elgin has already approved of the Ordinance, and that His Excellency does not consider that any useful purpose is likely to be served by sending the proposed deputation to England.

We offer our sincere congratulations to the British Indians in the Transvaal on the decision of Lord Elgin. The decision reflects no credit on a liberal Secretary of State for the Colonies, especially when one realizes that the Secretary of State for the Colonies has, at one time, occupied the Viceregal throne in India. But Lord Selborne has told us that out of evil very often cometh good, and if the British Indian community is true to itself, good will most assuredly result from the momentous decision of Lord Elgin. His Excellency has clothed with life the historic fourth resolution of the great meeting, held in the now extinct Empire Theatre in Johannesburg. That resolution will be the touchstone by which the national and self-respecting spirit of Indians in the Transvaal is to be tested. Lord Elgin, evidently under the inspiration of Lord Selborne, has accepted the Indian challenge. On one side has now to be ranged brute force; on the other, simple passive resistance. British Indians have a just cause; it will become infinitely juster and more sanctified by their putting into force the fourth resolution and declining, in spite of Lord Elgin’s approval of the Ordinance, to submit to its galling conditions, and to the “serious and wanton injustice” which the Ordinance contemplates. We have no hesitation in very respectfully repeating the last expression, although Lord Selborne, in one of his letters, does not agree that the Ordinance inflicts any such injustice. We must accept His Excellency’s assurance that the Ordinance is not in conflict with the views expressed by His Excellency from time to time. He alone knew with what mental reservations he uttered the lofty

1 Gandhiji’s eldest son
2 Vide “The Mass Meeting”, 11-9-1906
sentiments before the Zionist meeting, and spoke of the trusteeship on the eve of the Boer war.

Similarly, we beg leave to take exception to His Excellency’s judgement as to the Ordinance; it is those who have to submit to it that are at all capable of knowing whether it is just or otherwise. Lord Selborne’s reply to the British Indian protest bristles with points which can be argued from a British Indian standpoint, but enough of argument has already been devoted to the controversy. It is now time, not for argument, but for action.

The first of January will be, for millions of His Majesty’s subjects, a day of gladsome prospect. To British Indians in the Transvaal likewise, it will be a similar day, though not in the same sense. They must marshal their forces and conserve their energy. They will need to be ready to face the inevitable on that eventful day. The community is now on its trial. Let us hope it will emerge scatheless. By its action will be judged Indian character, if not throughout the world, certainly in South Africa. In having passed the historic resolution, the meeting has undertaken a trust which British Indians in the Transvaal must discharge, come what may.

334. THE PUNIA CASE

Our contemporary, The Rand Daily Mail, by its spirited advocacy of the unfortunate British Indian woman, Punia, has given the matter a prominence which is thoroughly deserved by the circumstances of the case.\(^1\) Indeed, it would appear that Mr. Gandhi

\(^1\) The Rand Daily Mail, while publishing the “Letter to the Press”, 19-11-1906 wrote: “The harshness complained of touches the British Indian community in a particularly tender spot. No nation is more careful of the women of its race than the mass of people of India. No one in the Transvaal desires to create friction and make an admittedly difficult problem still more difficult by stirring up bad feeling over such a delicate matter. We feel that the white people will demand an investigation and an explanation of the Punia affair as strongly as Mr. Gandhi. There is a fixed determination to prevent an influx of Asiatics, but the government has received no mandate from the people to make war on women.” has understated the gravity of the situation, in that he omitted to mention what is, perhaps, the most unpleasant feature of an unfortunate affair, namely, that the woman was made to give her ten finger-prints at the Charge Office in Volksrust, and was obliged to do so again at Germiston. The facts being undisputed, a discreditable attempt has been made to justify the regulations referred to by Constable McGregor who arrested the woman, and we are grieved to find that The Natal Mercury has lent itself, we have no doubt unconsciously, to such an attempt. The Transvaal Leader had the substance of the paragraph in The Natal Mercury telegraphed to it, to which Mr. Gandhi has sent a reply\textsuperscript{1} repudiating the vile charge made against Indian women, and characterising it as an infamous lie. He then wired to the Registrar of Asiatics, who has promptly replied to the effect that no such statement as published in the papers had been made by any official connected with his department. The Natal Mercury, which is always fair, will, we hope, in this case, publish the name of the official who made the statement attributed to him or withdraw the libel.

If the working of the Permit Ordinance was as well known to the public generally as it is to us, they would have realised the full significance of the Punia case, and the cruel wrong that has been inflicted not only on the woman in question, but on the whole of the Indian community. The evidence given by the constable in this painful case was, we have reason to believe, the first authoritative pronouncement regarding British Indian women having to take out permits, even when they may be in the company of their husbands.
The husband of Punia stated emphatically that he knew nothing about a permit being required for his wife, but we will assume that the husband was aware that a separate permit was necessary. It is still a legitimate question why Indian women should require any permits at all. The printed instructions issued by the Chief Secretary for Permits lay down that wives of husbands holding permits are not required to take [out] permits apart from their husbands, nor are children under sixteen years apart from their parents. If such be the case, why should separate instructions be issued for Indian wives, seeing that they, too, are governed by the same Permit Ordinance?

Even if definite instructions were to be issued in writing regarding Indian women, we consider that it would be the paramount duty of British Indians to refrain from taking out any such permits for Indian women, and to protect them from the insult and degradation that attend the taking out of these permits. Are Indian women to make \textsuperscript{1} Vide “Letter to Leader”, 22-11-1906 separate applications, put down their thumb-impressions, go half-a-dozen times to Justices of the Peace in order to make declarations required by the Asiatic Office, and to make affidavits that they are the wives of their husbands—perchance, also, to prove that they are refugees, for is it not the rule of the Asiatic Office not to grant permits to any but British Indian refugees? Suppose, further, that the application of a wife is delayed or refused, is the husband, who is holder of a legitimate permit, to remain out of the Colony until after the application of his wife is granted, or, to remain out of the Colony entirely, in the event of a refusal of the application on behalf of the wife? There never has been any reproach against Indian womanhood in South Africa except now, for the first time, in the sinful imagination of an anonymous immigration official. But even if a few miserable specimens of Indian humanity were to introduce into the Colony women of indifferent character, will that be any justification for submitting wives of hundreds of honest Indian settlers in Johannesburg to the painful processes required to be undergone by the Permit Office? If the authorities persist in the instructions said to have been issued, we have no hesitation in saying that they will be playing with fire, and they may give rise to a state of things for which they, and other South Africans, may have reason to be extremely sorry.

We can emphatically re-echo the sentiments of the leader-writer of The Rand Daily Mail that harshness of the kind that poor Punia had to undergo touches British Indian sentiment on its tenderest part. We think that our contemporary has rendered a public service in drawing pointed attention to this case. We hope that the authorities will issue definite instructions countermanding the orders referred to by Constable McGregor, and give those instructions as wide a publicity as possible.

Indian Opinion, 29-9-1906

335. TRANSVAAL PERMIT ORDINANCE

On the 15th inst., one Hafeji Moosa and his son, Mahomed Hafeji Moosa, were tried before the Magistrate at Volksrust under the Peace Preservation Ordinance; the father for having abetted his son (who was acknowledged to be under eleven years) in entering the Transvaal under a permit obtained by improper means, and the son with the offence of having entered the Colony on a permit obtained by improper means. Evidence was given to the effect that the father and son travelled together on the 5th July and passed through Volksrust. They were examined there. The father produced his permit and the son is alleged to have produced a permit issued in the name of one Bhaima. The inspecting constable was unable to say that the boy produced the permit in question. The boy’s thumb-imprints were taken, sent to Pretoria, and as they did not tally with the thumb-imprints on the counterfoil of the permit issued to Bhaima, both the father and son were arrested at Potchefstroom. It further came out, in the evidence of Mr. Cody, Chief Clerk in the office of the Registrar of Asiatics, that the instructions from the Permit Office were to arrest all British Indians, whether male or female, of whatever age, in the case of wives, whether [or not] they were in the company of their husbands, and in the case of children, whether [or not] they were in the company of their parents, unless they could produce separate permits. Both the father and son denied that the son had entered on the permit issued to Bhaima. The Magistrate discharged the father, but found the son guilty, and sentenced him to pay a fine of £50 or suffer imprisonment without hard labour for three months. Appeal has been noted. The case is considered to be of considerable importance, in that a boy of tender years, travelling with his father, has been sentenced so heavily, in spite of the fact that Magistrates are guided in the punishment of juvenile offenders by special powers given to them to administer cuts.

336. INDIANS IN DELAGOA BAY

The fear of an attack on the rights of Indians increases as more and more Englishmen crowd into Delagoa Bay. According to our correspondent, a movement is afoot in that place to drive Indians into Locations. It also appears that the Indians there will offer strong resistance. Our correspondent adds that an Association has been formed to fight the measure. We hope the Association will do its work with vigilance. It is very gratifying that, at this juncture, there is in Delagoa Bay a gentleman like Mr. Kothari. He is a lawyer of the Bombay High Court and a patriot. He has made good use of his stay in Delagoa Bay. He has studied Portuguese, which, we believe, will stand him in good stead in serving the country. Wherever there are educated Indians, it should be their duty to use their education in the service of their motherland.

Indian Opinion, 29-9-1906
337. A WARNING

The report of an Indian case, published by the Town Council in the Krugersdorp Standard dated September 1, is regrettable, and puts the Indian community to shame. A leading Indian of the place did not effect the necessary improvements to his premises despite a notice requiring him to do so. His bedroom had a ceiling only of cloth; the lavatory floor was not proof against the seeping of dirty water; and the lavatory was used although it had no bucket. Since the notice was ignored, the Town Council ordered proceedings to be instituted against him, with results so far unknown to us. But that those who are considered leading Indians should keep their premises in the condition described here makes us hang our heads in shame. One of the many charges the whites make against Indians is that of uncleanliness. Such cases only prove the charge, and the outcome cannot but be unfavourable when these are found among moneyed and respectable Indians. All Indians will, we hope, learn a lesson from this case and keep their premises clean. No one can deny that the state of our houses is not all that it should be. It is clear that we should be all the more cautious in matters where our shortcomings are only too apparent.

338. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

A WHIP

The huge meeting at the Empire Theatre is over. (The Theatre has [since] been gutted by fire.)¹ Three thousand men mustered together; they applauded; evinced enthusiasm; it was all very impressive. But all this seems to have vanished like a dream! All the men present in that theatre had resolved that a deputation must be sent to England. They had declared that there would be no difficulty in collecting the necessary funds. Your correspondent, who had full faith in the people had taken it for granted that men speaking such words could raise six to seven thousand pounds in a day. But I am sorry to have to say that Mr. Gulam Mahomed, the Treasurer, has not yet received even a thousand pounds towards the fund for sending a deputation and fighting the Asiatic Ordinance. Men who have collected money are not willing to part with it on the pretext that others are not doing so. A telegram from a certain place says that the collection is yet to be made. News received from another says that remittances would be made only after a certain Sheth has made his contribution. A message from a third town says that they do not mean to send anything because a certain community is not contributing. Thus, for a variety of reasons, money is not forthcoming. No one can say that a proper organization has not been set up for the management of the Fund. A committee consisting of about 25 leaders of different communities has been formed. Not a single cheque will be issued without the sanction of the committee. Four persons have to sign a cheque, and it is obligatory for the committee to publish detailed accounts every month. Thus, on the one side, our hardships are unlimited; on the other, we have with great care appointed a committee of management. What could be more shameful in these circumstances than to be unable to raise the necessary funds? This is a testing time for every Indian; and if we are found wanting, we shall suffer a heavy penalty. Not only shall we be reduced to a sorry plight, but even our heirs shall taste the fruit of our sin. Not only has the money not been collected, but even the membership of the deputation has not been decided on.

Mr. Bhabha’s Case

An account has been given already of Mr. Bhabha’s case up to the stage where it was taken to the Supreme Court. As recommended by the judges, the sentence passed on Mr. Bhabha has been remitted, and he has now got the permit and the register enabling him to stay in the Transvaal. Three or four other Indians who had come in relying on Mr. Bhayat’s case have also got their permits. One cannot say what will happen to the other Indians with old registers who are still outside the Colony. It is possible that the delay which was there before will not occur now.

Heavy Sentence On Minor Child

A permit case against Mr. Hafeji Moosa of Potchefstroom and his eleven-year-old son, Mahomed, was heard at Volksrust on September 15. The charge against Mr. Moosa was that he had secured the entry of his son with a false permit, and the charge against his son was that he had entered the Colony with such a permit.

In his evidence, the constable who had examined the father and son could not say that he had seen the son. But it was established in the evidence that the son’s thumb-impressions had been taken.
magistrate found the father not guilty, and sentenced the son to a fine of £50 or three months’ simple imprisonment. Such a heavy penalty on a mere child is dreadful. Had the magistrate looked into the matter more thoughtfully, he would have seen that a mere boy could not be given such a sentence. An appeal has been preferred to the Supreme Court, and, it is expected, the boy will be let off.

MR. QUINN AND THE INDIANS

Mr. Quinn, the Mayor of Johannesburg and Chairman of the Chamber of Trade, says in his monthly report that the passing of the Asiatic Ordinance is a proper step. According to him the unauthorised influx of Indians into the Transvaal justifies the Ordinance. It is not possible for the Europeans to compete with the Asiatics in [lowering] living standards. If it is thought that the law is strict, the fault was that of the Asiatics themselves. Referring to what Mr. Niven had said about the case of Punia¹, viz., that it could not be the view of the Chamber of Trade that women should be subjected to such hardships, Mr. Quinn said that it was their own fault, since they entered the Colony though they knew they would not be allowed in without a permit.

339. THE TRANSVAAL ORDINANCE

ASSENT OF IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT: DEPUTATION POSTPONED

The saying, “Man proposes and God disposes”,² has proved true in the case of the Transvaal Indians.

LORD ELGIN’S REPLY

The deputation which was to proceed to England to represent our grievances [to the authorities there] was scheduled to sail on Monday, October 1; but owing to some obstacle, its departure has been postponed by a week. Just as arrangements were being made for booking the passages of delegates by steamer and letters were despatched to all the places to say that the deputation would leave on Monday, a communication³ was received from Lord Selborne on

¹ Vide “Difficulties of Indian Women in the Transvaal”, 22-9-1906

² The saying in Gujarati literally means, ‘Tasks begun by us remain unfinished; only God’s will be done.’

³ The letter was dated September 24, 1906. This as well as the translation of Lord Selborne’s letter on “The Transvaal Ordinance”, 29-9-1906 has been collated with the English texts of the relevant letters.
Tuesday morning. It said:

Lord Elgin desires Lord Selborne to inform you that though the former is aware that the new legislation does not effect all the improvements in the condition of the Indians which His Majesty’s Government would desire, he has approved it as removing some of the hardships to which Asiatics are subject and goes as far as is possible on the eve of responsible government. Lord Elgin adds that, while delegates from the Transvaal, if sent, will be given every opportunity for stating their views, he does not consider that any useful purpose is likely to be served by sending the deputation.

MEANING OF THE LETTER

The implication of the letter is that Lord Elgin asks us not to send a deputation. It is obvious that there is nothing to be gained by the deputation going to England after the Ordinance has been passed. The other implication is that, since the Indian community has made a show of strength and has resolved to oppose the Ordinance, it should be suppressed. This is the way of the British: to look at accretions of strength with a stern eye and to dash them to the ground. Lord Selborne must have advised Lord Elgin that, if the deputation went to England and if he received it, the Indian community would be led to entertain hopes of the Ordinance being dropped and that the community would meanwhile go on gathering strength. It would therefore be advisable to nip in the bud their growing strength. Acting presumably on such advice, Lord Elgin has approved the Ordinance without listening to what the deputation has to say.

This has ever been the way of the British with a subject people. They have succeeded in it for the most part, since a conquered and subdued people is brave only in words, and shrinks back at the time of action.

OUR DUTY

Let us consider what the duty of the Indian community now is. Our resolve to resist the Ordinance can give strength; it can also take it away. If the Indian community firmly adheres to the Resolution, not only will it rise in the esteem of the people in the Transvaal and put an end to its many troubles, but the beneficent effect will be seen all over South Africa, and hundreds of men in the land of our birth will gain from it. If, on the other hand, the Resolution were not acted upon, those who took the pledge would lose face; the whole community would be disgraced; our petitions would in future carry no weight and our plight would become worse than at present. The whites would moreover laugh at us. They would spit upon us, spurn us and call us cowards. Never shall we be regarded as a united people.
NO ACHIEVEMENT WITHOUT ADVENTURE

Such risk is always there in great undertakings. In trade entailing great risks, if there is profit, it is immense, and if there is loss, it reduces one to utter poverty. As our poets¹ have said, it was through adventure that Alexander became an Emperor; it was through adventure that Columbus discovered America; nothing is achieved without adventure. Themselves an adventurous people, the British admire only those who are adventurous. It is therefore the clear duty of every Indian not to take out [a register] again, but to go to gaol and stand firm on the pledge taken at the Empire Theatre.

SECOND LETTER FROM LORD SELBORNE

Another letter has been received from Lord Selborne, which gives added force to our advice. The earlier letter which we have already cited in translation was written by Lord Selborne on behalf of Lord Elgin. Let us now see what His Excellency has to say for himself:

From the argument which your Association puts forward, it seems that you have not grasped the real significance of the new law, which merely provides for the verification of existing documents . . . and for the substitution of more complete, authentic documents such as will relieve Asiatics from the inconveniences to which they are liable under the present system. If there is to be a system of registration, which will fulfil its purpose and prevent a general influx of Asiatics into the country, pending the establishment of responsible government, it must be complete and thorough.

With regard to the definition of Asiatics and the position of pre-war Indian residents, the Ordinance does not disturb the existing conditions. The provision for exemption from the liquor law had no special reference to British Indians. It is intended to apply to individual Asiatics in respect of whom the present provisions of the law are an anomaly. The Ordinance will apply to males only.

Lord Selborne cannot agree that the Draft Ordinance will be an act of serious wanton injustice directed against the Indian community or that it is in conflict with the views expressed by His Excellency from time to time.

This reply shows that Lord Selborne has not taken the trouble to acquaint himself with the Ordinance thoroughly or to understand the present situation. Where there is so much ignorance, our duty can only be this: to act up to the Fourth Resolution about gaol-going. The Government will then immediately see that, unless there were genuine difficulties, a thousand men would not court imprisonment.

¹ The reference is to Narmadashanker, a Gujarati poet.
NEED FOR FUNDS

But just as it is necessary to go to gaol, it is also necessary to raise a fund. The expenses now will be greater than if the deputation had gone to England. Without money it will be impossible to do things like sending telegrams about men sentenced to imprisonment, and providing for their families when they are in gaol. Moreover, it cannot be said that the struggle will be over in a couple of days. Money is therefore absolutely necessary. It has been shown earlier how our people lag behind in such matters. It is absolutely essential for us to remain thoroughly vigilant and wholly united.¹

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION REGRETS LORD ELGIN’S APPROVAL OF ASIATIC ORDINANCE. IN ITS HUMBLE OPINION APPROVAL DUE TO MISUNDERSTANDING OF ORDINANCE. ASSOCIATION HAS THEREFORE WITH GREAT DEFERENCE DECIDED TO SEND MESSRS GANDHI AND ALLY AS DEPUTATION TO LAY BEFORE IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT INDIA N’S

STOP PRESS NEWS

“It will be seen from the foregoing that now there is no need for the Deputation to be sent. But the latest cablegram we have received says that the assent of the Imperial Government to the Ordinance has not been given and that it will take about five weeks to get it. A perusal of letters cited above shows that there has been some confusion in interpreting them. More clarification is likely to be available next week.”

² This was forwarded to the Secretary of State for the Colonies on October 2 by the Transvaal Governor at the request of the British Indian Association.

³ The Deputation left for Cape Town on October 1, on its way to England. This telegram, evidently, was sent a day before. The deputation carried the following credentials from the British Indian Association: “This is to certify that M. K. Gandhi, Esq., Honorary Secretary of the British Indian Association and Haji Ojer Ally, Esq., President of the Hamidiya Islamic Society, have been elected delegates to proceed to London, and submit to the Imperial Authorities the Indian view of the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, as also to interview friends in England of British Indians in South Africa.”
341. SPEECH AT FAREWELL MEETING

A meeting of the British Indian Association was held to bid farewell to the members of the deputation proceeding to London. The following is a brief summary of Gandhiji’s reply to the speech of the Chairman, Abdul Gani.

JOHANNESBURG,
September 30, 1906

Mr. Gandhi pointed out that he was only going in view of the solemn promises of the leaders and their followers under no circumstances to comply with the requirements of the new Ordinance.

342. HAJI OJEER ALLY

Mr. Haji Ojeer Ally was born on the 23rd November, 1853, in the island of Mauritius, and received his education at the Government schools there. In 1864, he started work as a printer at the Commercial Gazette Offices, and in 1868, he was employed as wharf-clerk with...
Messrs P. Adam & Co. He was for some time assistant shipping clerk with Messrs Joshua Bros. and, later, was also shipping clerk to another firm. In 1883, as behoves every good Mahomedan, he visited Mecca and became a Haji. He came to South Africa in 1884, landing at Cape Town, where he commenced business on his own account as a mineral water manufacturer. Ever since that time he has taken an active part in the politics of the country and endeavoured to ameliorate the condition of the Coloured people, more especially his co-religionists, the Malays and his fellow-countrymen, the British Indians. He helped to quell a Malay disturbance that took place by reason of the Cape Government having fixed a Malay cemetery very far away from the town, and it was mainly through his efforts that a site was ultimately selected which satisfied the Malay community.

During his stay in Cape Town, Mr. Ally was both a parliamentary and municipal voter. In 1892, he was elected Chairman of the Coloured Peoples’ Organization, and took a leading part in connection with the Franchise Law Amendment. A petition signed by 22,000 Coloured people was promoted and sent to London. Later, Mr. Ally migrated to Johannesburg, where, too, he has been taking an active part with reference to the position of British Indians in the Transvaal. Before the war, he interviewed the prominent Boer officials, as also the British Agents, and did a great deal to secure relief.

Mr. Ally is the founder and President of the Hamidiya Islamic Society; which has been doing excellent and useful work among the Mahomedans of Johannesburg, and which was chiefly instrumental in organising the Mass Meeting at the Empire Theatre. The Society is in a flourishing condition, and has a membership of several hundred Mahomedans.

Mr. Ally, although not a finished speaker, has a very good command of the English language, has a fine voice, and is often very eloquent. He is married to a Malay lady and is the father of eleven children. He holds liberal views regarding female education and has been endeavouring, in spite of the handicap of colour, to give a good education to his daughters.

343. DIVINE WRATH ON HONG KONG

While the news of how a beautiful city like San Francisco was suddenly reduced to dust and thousands of men were buried alive in a trice is still green in our memory, a similar earthquake has occurred in Chile and lakhs of people in Valparaiso and other places have been rendered homeless and obliged to wander about without food. Hardly is that woeful tale over when there comes a cry from Asia that its children are no less unfortunate than those of America. Last week there appeared the news of a cyclone in the sea near Hong Kong to the south of China. Several ships and steamers were driven ashore and some completely wrecked. Small craft and fishing-boats sank and thousands of precious lives were lost. As the sea-rushed into the harbour, rivers began to flow through the city streets and the people in distress struggled hard to save themselves by means of boats. It is said that about fifty steamers and ships were engulfed in the storm. Traces have been found of only a few of the 600 fishing-boats that were out on a cruise. At least 10,000 men lost their lives. All this happened within a couple of hours. Thoughtful persons will be grieved to know this. Stories told in text books of God making or unmaking a universe in a moment, we now see enacted before our very eyes. Inscrutable are the ways of God. Man has always some lesson to learn from His dispensations. While such an event is fresh in the mind, the virtuous have promptings from their inner selves, “Good man, take to the true path. We know not when Death will overtake us. Do good deeds then and make provision for your journey hence.” The same event warns the erring: “You fool, cast off your pride and walk in fear of God.
For Death might swallow you in no time.”

344. THE DUTY OF TRANSVAAL INDIANS

Since we give elsewhere a full account of the Transvaal situation, it is needless for us to say anything more about it here. The present time is so critical that even Indians outside the Transvaal have become alarmed. All of them feel that the step taken by the Indians in the Transvaal is very difficult and arduous. It will justify itself only if it succeeds. The Resolution passed by Indians is, and at the same time is not, unique. We consider it unique, because nowhere else in the world have Indians so far resolved, as they have done now, to go to gaol rather than submit to a law. On the other hand, we do not consider it unique because a number of similar instances are found [in history].
When we are dissatisfied with anything, we often resort to hartal. In India we often consider it our duty to do so, in order to obtain redress of our grievances, particularly in the Native States. The hartal only means that we do not approve of a certain measure taken by the ruler.
This tradition of resisting a law has been in vogue among us from very early days, when the English people were in a barbarous state. Thus, really speaking, the Resolution passed by the Transvaal Indians is nothing extraordinary and there is no reason why we should feel nervous.

Moreover, such examples are to be found even in South Africa. When President Kruger proposed to remove the Indians from the Malay Location and send them to the Tobianski Farm, Mr. Emrys Evans, the British Agent, gave Indians the specific advice that they should on no account submit to President Kruger’s order. Hence, despite police investigations and detectives entering their homes, the people remained firm, and they won.

When there were difficulties about licences, the Indians carried on their business in the towns fearlessly without licences, did not bow to the Boer Government, and succeeded. That Government tried hard to send us to the Locations, but failed.

Subsequent to the war too, instances are found. When Lord Milner brandished the sword of the Bazaar Notice against the Indians, the people for once were scared, but later they thought over the matter and finally decided not to go to the Location. The summons that had already been issued at Potchefstroom had to be withdrawn. The Indian people refused to accept the passes bearing their photographs that Mr. Moore had issued, and the Regulation had to be withdrawn.

We can easily find such examples among other communities too. The Pass Law applies to Hottentots, but they oppose it and do not take out passes and the Government is powerless to do anything. A house tax is levied on the Kaffirs of Natal; but some of the Zulu tribes do not pay the tax at all. It is an open secret that the Government does not collect the tax from them.

All these instances show that there is no cause for us to be afraid at all. However, there is some difference between the instances quoted above and the Resolution of the Indian community. In all these instances no community as a whole had passed any resolution. Further, though the people chose not to submit to the laws in question, they had not decided on how to meet the consequences and bring the issue to a final conclusion. For example, when the Hottentots are arrested for not taking out passes, some of them pay the fine and some go to gaol. The Transvaal Indians are determined to go to gaol rather than take out a new Register. Two other alternatives are open to them—either to pay the fine or to leave the Colony. After giving serious thought to both, the Indian community has discarded them. And herein lie its uniqueness, its beauty and its strength. If we pay the fine, it will be just the thing the Government wants. If we leave the Colony, the whites will rejoice, clap their hands and wave their flags. We will do neither of these things, for it would be ignominious and cowardly to do either. Going to gaol is a unique step, a sacred act, and only by doing so can the Indian community maintain its honour. What does it matter if, in doing so, we lose our trade? If a fire destroys their houses and goods, traders accept it calmly and, being courageous, start their business afresh and earn their livelihood. No one who has hands and feet and possesses ability and intelligence has need, at any rate in this country, to starve. What if a hundred or more lose their all and become paupers in serving the community or the country? The English honour only those who make such sacrifice. Their shining glory has spread just because great heroes have been and are still born among them. Such were Wat Tyler, John Hampden, John Bunyan and others. They laid the foundations of England’s political supremacy. Who they were and what they did we shall tell some other time. But we shall continue to be in our present abject condition till we follow their example. The Indian community has a good opportunity today of proving its mettle. We hope that it will not let it slip, but will rush to the field, plunge in whole-heartedly and fight to the last. There was a time in India when the mother refused to look at the face of a son who returned vanquished from the battle-field. We pray to God that every Indian in the Transvaal will remember that time.

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION HAS READ WITH REGRET VREDEPORP STANDS ORDINANCE PUBLISHED IN GOVERNMENT GAZETTE. RESTRICTIONS AS TO TRANSFER LEASES TO AND RESIDENCE OF ASIATICS VREDEPORP UNJUST. REQUEST STAY ROYAL SANCTION PENDING RECEIPT

1. Vide “Tyler, Hampden and Bunyan”, 20-10-1906

2. This was sent to the Transvaal Governor who cabled it to the Secretary of State for the Colonies at the request of the British Indian Association. The cable was presumably drafted by Gandhiji after the publication of the Vrededorp Stands Ordinance in the Government Gazette on September 28, before his departure for England on October 1. It was perhaps despatched by the British Indian Association later.

346. PETITION TO LORD ELGIN

JOHANNESBURG,
October 8, 1906

HIS EXCELLENCY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF ELGIN
HIS MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES
LONDON

The Petition of Abdul Ganie, in his capacity as Chairman of the British Indian Association of the Transvaal, Humbly Sheweth:

That the British Indian Association of the Transvaal respectfully approaches Your Lordship with reference to the Vrededorp Stands Ordinance of 1906 published in the Transvaal Government Gazette dated the 28th September.

(2) The Ordinance) your Petitioner notices, is not to take effect “unless and until the Governor shall proclaim in the Gazette that it is His Majesty’s pleasure not to disallow the same”.

Your petitioner, therefore, ventured to send Your Lordship a cable requesting that the Royal pleasure may not be declared until the Association had the opportunity of making its submission to Your Lordship.

(3) The Association respectfully protests against sections 5, 8 and 9 of the second schedule to the Ordinance above named.

(4) The sections in question are as follows:

5. This lease shall not be transferable to any coloured person and if registered in the name of any such person this lease shall ipso facto cease and determine.

8. Neither the said stand nor any part thereof nor any building thereon shall be sub-let to any coloured person or Asiatic. Upon any breach of this condition the Council may forthwith by notice in writing given in the manner provided in Clause Four terminate this lease.

9. The Lessee shall not permit any coloured person or Asiatic other than the servant bona fide of some white person for the time being residing on the said stand to reside thereon or to occupy the same or any part thereof. If any coloured person or Asiatic other than such servant as aforesaid is at any time found residing on the said stand or occupying the same or any part thereof the Council may give notice to the Lessee in the manner provided in Clause Four requiring him to cause such person to cease to reside thereon or to occupy the same or any part thereof within a period of three weeks from the date of such notice and if at any time after the expiration of such period such person shall be found residing thereon or occupying the same or any part thereof, the Council may forthwith by notice to the Lessee given in the manner aforesaid terminate this lease.

(5) Thus, in effect, the Ordinance prohibits the residence of British Indians except as domestic servants.

(6) Such prohibition will create a fresh disability against British Indians.

(7) In the humble opinion of the Association, there is no justification for the contemplated restriction.

(8) The Association, moreover, draws Your Lordship’s attention to the fact that British Indians have, for years past, held stands within the area affected by the Ordinance, from the original grantees—the burghers of Vrededorp.

(9) Some British Indians have erected substantial structures on such stands, and some are at present either residing on the stands leased by them or carrying on trade.

(10) If the clauses objected to are sanctioned, all such persons as are here in before referred to and have acquired vested rights will be adversely affected and some of them ruined in business.

(11) The Association ventures to point out that, when the Vrededorp Commission sat some time ago to report upon the Draft Ordinance, objection to any such clauses as are before referred to was submitted to the Commission on behalf of British Indians.

(12) The Association draws Your Lordship’s attention to the further fact that the area affected by the Ordinance is contiguous to the Malay Location, which contains a large Asiatic, and principally British Indian, population. The relations between the inhabitants of Vrededorp and the Malay Location have always been satisfactory.

(13) The Association feels that, if the clauses referred to are approved by Your Lordship, the acceptance will form a precedent for other bodies, and may lead to the ultimate reduction of British Indians.
to the status of menials and their compulsory removal to Locations.

(14) Your petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that the Ordinance in question will be disallowed, or such other relief will be granted as to Your Lordship may seem meet.

And for this act of justice and mercy your petitioner shall for ever pray, etc., etc.

Dated at Johannesburg this 8th day of October, 1906.

347. THE DEPUTATION’S VOYAGE—I

[S. S. ARMADALE CASTLE,
Before October 11, 1906]

Readers of Indian Opinion are aware of the election of the deputation to England with regard to the new Asiatic Ordinance and of the difficulties experienced in that connection. From the very beginning the people had decided that the deputation should consist of three men, viz., Messrs Abdul Gani, Ally and Gandhi; but at the last moment Mr. Abdul Gani withdrew and Messrs Ally and Gandhi had to go without him.

INITIAL DIFFICULTY

On Friday, September 28, a definite resolution was passed that the two members mentioned above should go. It was decided that they should sail by the s.s. Armadale Castle, and their passages were booked on Saturday, September 29. The delegates were to leave by the Cape Mail on Monday, October 1, and the tickets for that train were also purchased; but an hour later word was received from the Station Master that the deputation could not go by the Cape Mail, but only by the train leaving at 9 p.m. This meant that the deputation, being thus unable to travel by the Cape Mail, would miss the Armadale Castle and hence be delayed by a week. Mr. Gandhi immediately spoke to the General Manager over the ‘phone and explained to him how necessary it was for them to leave by the Cape Mail. The General Manager could not understand the Station Master’s objection and told Mr. Gandhi that he would make inquiries and then telephone the result to him. After an hour, a message was received saying that the Station Master had made a mistake and that there would be no difficulty in the deputation travelling by the Cape Mail

ON THE TRAIN

The deputation boarded the train at 6-15 p.m. Certain persons, as previously decided, had come to the station to see the deputation off. They were Messrs Abdul Gani, Essop Mian, Coovadia, Omarji, Shahbuddin, Fancy, Bhikhubhai and others. Mr. Bhikhubhai had brought a coconut and other things. The members of the deputation shook hands with everyone before taking leave.

MR. HAJI OJER ALLY’S HEALTH

Mr. Haji Ojer Ally was feeling exhausted owing to over-work during many days and he was ill and restless. He has rheumatism and, even when the deputation was being discussed, he was afraid of being troubled by it on the way. The fear came true on the train itself. Pain started in the joints. I pressed and massaged his joints and did whatever I could. But that gave no lasting relief. Mr. Ally took the food he had brought with him and also some coffee. He had no appetite for anything else. I went to the Saloon for meals, and took boiled potatoes and peas with bread. I also took the fruit and nuts Mr. Bhikhubhai had given us. I tin did my writing. Mr. Ally went to bed at ten. I retired at midnight after finishing my writing work. Mr. Ally spent a restless night. When he got up on Tuesday morning, he had a very severe pain, also slight fever and bronchitis.

ARRANGEMENTS ON THE CAPE MAIL

Amenities on the Cape Mail are almost the same as on a steamer. Food is served from the morning onwards. There is provision even for bathing. The passengers can have a shower-bath. Only first-class passengers can travel by this train.

IN CAPE TOWN

The train reached Cape Town at two o’clock on Wednesday. Messrs Yusuf Hamid Gool, Amod Gool, Lachhiram and Abdul Kadar had come to the station to receive us. Ma Yusuf Hamid Gool had arranged for our meal at his place. We took it and left at 4-45. All these gentlemen also came to the steamer to see us off.

“THE ARMADALE CASTLE”

This steamer is one of the biggest among those belonging to the Union Castle Line. Its tonnage is 12,973 and As horse-power 12,500. It is 590’ 6” long, 64’ 6” broad and 42’ 3” high. It has

1 The coconut is an auspicious symbol.
accommodation for 320 first-class, 225 second-class and 280 third-class passengers. For each of the classes there is a very large and beautiful dining-hall. It has excellent arrangements for ventilation. There are books to read and a separate reading-room for each class. The bathing arrangements are very good; and one can have as much hot and cold water as one wants. The lavatories are kept very clean, and there is a notice saying that passengers should not leave the seat dirty. The first and the second classes have four sections each. We hold first-class tickets for the third section and had each to pay £79-15-0.

CATERING ARRANGEMENTS

Catering arrangements in these steamers are such that it would appear that the passengers had nothing to do but eat the whole day. At six in the morning, the bearer brings coffee, bread and fruit. At 8-30 one has breakfast in the Saloon, and some ten different items are served. At eleven tea and biscuits are served on deck. Again at 1 p.m. lunch begins to be served in the Saloon; this again has ten to fifteen items. At four in the afternoon again, tea, biscuits, bread, etc.; at six o’clock dinner in the Saloon and at nine or later, tea, coffee, biscuits, cheese, etc., as the passengers choose. All this is covered by the steamer fare. In addition, the passengers can have wine, etc. between meals or at meal time for which they have of course to pay. One seldom comes across passengers who do not take alcoholic drinks.

PASSENGERS

Among fellow-passengers, there are three well-known men who must be mentioned. One is the Acting Lieutenant-Governor of the Transvaal, Sir Richard Solomon, accompanied by Lady Solomon. He is going especially to see Lord Elgin. Another is Sir David Gill, the famous astronomer of South Africa, and the third is Sir John Buchanan, a Judge of the Cape Supreme Court. Lord Wolmer is also with us.

In the next instalment, I shall describe Mr. Ally’s state of health, the way Mr. Ally and I spend our time, and the arrangements we have made for our meals. Meanwhile, lest anyone should be anxious, I may say here straightaway that Mr. Ally’s health has improved and, as I write this, he is enjoying himself on the deck.

[From Gujarati]

Indian Opinion, 10-11-1906
I said in my first article that Mr. Ally’s health had not improved when we boarded the steamer. He was obliged to stay in bed. For two clays he took the pills he had brought with him and got me to rub in soap liniment. This seemed to result in some improvement, but the pain did not stop altogether. On the third day, the doctor was consulted, and he gave him Phenacetin, a medicine inducing perspiration. That loosened the joints, and on the fourth day, Mr. Ally could leave his bed, but he was not yet completely cured. I then recommended to him Dr. Kuhne’s treatment. Accordingly, Mr. Ally now takes hot and cold baths and does without the morning meal. Formerly he used to have coffee on getting up, and porridge, coffee and fruit at breakfast. He has stopped all this, now has his first meal at 1 p.m. and has given up all medicines. It is now (October 11) three days since he began this treatment. As a result, Mr. Ally feels better. He is hungry at 1 p.m., and constipation and indigestion do not trouble him now. He does not even smoke till 1 p.m. And though his health cannot yet be said to have returned to normal, his rheumatism is certainly under control; and he has little difficulty in moving his limbs. His food is simple. At one, he takes fish and potatoes, pudding and coffee, and ginger ale. He has a cup of tea at four in the afternoon and at 6:30 p.m., fish, green vegetables, ginger ale; pudding and coffee. He does not seem to feel the need for anything more. If the reader is curious to know what I eat, I may say that, for three days, I had three meals a day. But finding these unnecessary, I now take milk, bread, potatoes, soda water or ginger ale, stewed fruit and cream at 1 p.m., cocoa at four and potatoes, boiled vegetables, stewed fruit and soda water or ginger ale at 6:30 in the evening. I do not eat bread, raw fruit and nuts for the only reason that a loose molar has been hurting me. I feel quite satisfied with this diet and can do a lot of work. The main reason for this is, I think, that the stomach has rest till 1 p.m. and finds this food satisfying and sufficient. Some of these items are outside my usual menu. Yet, the fact that I keep fit shows that food, on an empty stomach, never does harm.

Mr. Ally is reading Justice Amir Ali’s Spirit of Islam and Washington Irving’s Mahomet and His Successors. I am studying Tamil, and reading Forbes’s Rasamala or A History of Gujarat, and the Alien Immigration Report. Now that Madeira is approaching, I have started writing my despatch for the Opinion. We have very little contact with other passengers. Occasionally a few words are exchanged with Sir Richard Solomon. There are with us the Chinese Consul, his nine-year-old daughter, and Mr. James of the Chinese Deputation [going to England] in connection with the Asiatic Act. The Chinese Consul wears official uniform. By nature he is sociable, pleasing in his manner and intelligent. Having had a good English education, his daughter enjoys herself and also amuses the passengers who are quite free with her.

GENERAL ATMOSPHERE ABOARD STEAMER

Other passengers spend the day in much merriment. Sports have been going on for the last week. Subscriptions were collected for awarding prizes, and we had to part with a guinea each. Among the games are deck cricket, ring tennis, egg-and-spoon race, etc. The sports will be over on the 12th and prizes distributed on the 14th. At night the passengers dance, and the band plays twice a day. Even Sir Richard Solomon takes part in the sports. The chief reason why we have not been able to participate in them is Mr. Ally’s poor health and my own studies. There are no sports on Sundays. There is a “Church” gathering in the Saloon where prayers are offered according to Christian custom.

THOUGHTS ARISING FROM THIS

When I see all this I often ask myself why it is that the English rule. I am reminded of a poem by the Gujarati poet Narmadashanker¹:

- The Englishman rules,
- The country is under his heel,
- The native remains subdued;
- Look at their bodies, brother,
- He is full five cubits tall,
- A host in himself, match for five hundred.

As I observe all this, I find that the Englishman is not only full five cubits tall, a host in himself, match for five hundred but is capable in every other way. When he chooses to enjoy wealth and power, he excels in doing it and he makes the best of poverty, too. He alone knows how to give orders; and he knows too how to take them. In his behaviour he is great with the great and small with the small. He knows how to earn money and he alone knows how to spend it. He knows how to converse and move in company. He lives in the knowledge that his happiness depends on the happiness of others. The [English]man I observed during the war seems to be an altogether different person now. Then he did all his work himself, trekked over long distances and felt happy with dry bread. Here on board the ship he does not do any work. He presses a button, and an attendant stands before him. He must have nice dishes of all kinds to eat. Every day he puts on a new dress. All this becomes him, but he does not lose his balance. Like the sea, he can contain all within himself. Though, generally speaking, he has little sense of religion, yet living in society, he is disciplined and observes sabbath. Why indeed should such a people not rule?

The steamer is as big as a small town. There must be about a thousand persons on board, but there is no noise, no disorder. Everyone is absorbed in his or her own work. Only the waves make music and remind us of their ceaseless motion. More in my third instalment.

349. A WORD ABOUT THE NEW MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE

We publish elsewhere in this issue the Regulations giving certain powers to the Johannesburg Municipality. There is nothing to be said against the Regulations. They apply to all and can be considered necessary to maintain the health of the larger part of the city and for other similar reasons. In regard to many of them, we have got to struggle against ourselves. If we do not keep our compounds clean and have to suffer in consequence, we cannot find fault with others. It can be clearly seen from the Regulations that, if we do not observe the rules of cleanliness, we shall have to face many difficulties. If we do not take precautions, we shall have to suffer the consequences of our own doings. Our licences will be taken away, and we shall be left repenting and helpless. One who is surrounded by enemies has to be very vigilant. As the local phrase has it he has to live in a laager. Such is our condition. In cleanliness and other matters we have to compete with the whites. That stage has not yet come. But if we wake up from our slumber, give up our indolence, shed some of our greed and persist in our efforts, we can in no time drive away the evil of uncleanliness from our midst. We have been perpetually tormented by the malignant tumour of uncleanliness which eats into our vitals. Just as when a tumour is opened, we feel pain at first but relief later, so the tumour of uncleanliness must be opened. That should be the work of the Hamidiya, Hindu and other Societies, not only in the Transvaal, but in the other places as well. Will they wake up?

350. CONFLAGRATION ALL ROUND

A lot of discussion is nowadays going on about the Asiatic question among public bodies in South Africa. In such discussions, Indians are held up to blame on the slightest pretext. Among the fault-finders, the foremost are the Chambers of Commerce. At a meeting of the Chambers of Commerce held in Delagoa Bay, a suggestion was made that Indians should be removed to a Location. We have referred to this matter earlier. Recently a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce took place at Maritzburg, at which opinions about Indian traders were expressed. In his address the Chairman said that there had been an increase in the number of Coloured traders and a decrease in that of white traders. In saying this, the Chairman, Mr. Griffin, does not seem to have bothered about the correctness of his figures. Before asserting that the increase in the number of Indian traders was alarming, he should have offered precise proof of the increase. Mr. Griffin further stated that in the rural areas Indians were so well established that they could send a representative of their own to the [local] board. This statement, too, is as baseless as the earlier one. But supposing it is true, what is wrong about it? Do not the Indian traders contribute to the prosperity of the country? They require protection quite as much as the European traders. In the course of his speech, Mr. Griffin also blurted out that the Shops [Early Closing] Act had proved to be a weapon for crushing the Indians with. Such talk betrays the fact that the Act is aimed at Indians only. But the funny part of it is that, though the law was made to crush the Indians, the whites say that the Indians flourish in spite of it. If this is true, there must be some innate merit in the Indian. What then is to be gained by wasting time in finding fault with the Indian instead of learning from him?

352. THE DEPUTATION’S VOYAGE—III

[S. S. ARMADALE CASTLE, Before October 20, 1906]

MORE REFLECTIONS

Writing about the voyage, we have reflected why the English prosper. I am aware that, as every shield has two sides, so has the Englishman’s way of life. It should not be our business to examine the reverse side. Just as a swan, as the saying goes, separates milk from water and drinks only the former, so must we learn to recognize our rulers’ virtues, which alone we should follow. Continuing this train of thought, we noticed that people on the boat did not merely enjoy themselves all day long. Those who had work to do did it as if it was the most natural thing to do, without fuss. On this steamer there are passengers who are always reading. They read not for pleasure, but because it is necessary. As soon as their reading is over, they join others in sport and merriment. The crew discharge their duties punctually to the minute. Looking at the vanities around them, they do not forget their station in life. Envying none, they remain absorbed in their work. We Indians, too, behave in much the same way, and in certain respects excel them. But if we take an overall view, the balance-sheet will show more to the Englishman’s credit. We do not possess the ability to build steamers like the one we are sailing in. Even if we can build one, we have not the ability to operate it. We cannot match their record in public sanitation. We rarely present the spectacle of a number of men working together without noise. Their mode of life is such that they can save much time, and in the modern age to save time is to gain money. On the steamer there is a printing press. Programmes and menus are printed every day. Typewriters are used for routine work. Most of the cooking is done with machines. Thus, cleanliness is maintained and time saved. All this is necessary for the way they wish to live and do live. Viewing things in this manner we should conclude, without looking at their faults or envying them, that they deserve all they have, and for the most part it is necessary to behave as they do. This is not the place to consider how we can set about doing this. Here I have put my thoughts before the reader as they occurred to me during the voyage.

STEAMERS SPEED AND THE WEATHER

A steamer belonging to this Line generally travels fast. On an average we cover about 370 miles a day. The weather was cold during the first four days, but as we proceeded it began to warm up. At present we are near the Equator, and it is very hot; in these parts this heat is normal. It will continue to be hot for another five or six days. We do not feel this extreme heat because of the many cooling devices on the steamer. In portholes there are arrangements to let in air so that it remains cool throughout the night. Changes are also made in the food to suit passengers’ tastes. Every passenger is provided with a fan.

A TALK WITH SIR RICHARD SOLOMON

We had a talk with Sir Richard Solomon as we were approaching Madeira. After we had discussed the whole question he said that he would consider the idea of appointing a Commission at some future date. His information was that the Indian community had engaged agents at every port to instruct the immigrants about the geography of the Transvaal and help them to enter, and that many men had entered in this manner. This would mean that the whole Indian community was deceitful and that the new law had been enacted to punish it. The next day, Sir Richard advised Mr. Ally to accept the new Act, which leads one to infer that Sir Richard has given up the idea of appointing a Commission. The reason for this, I think, is that he aspires to be the Prime Minister under Responsible Government, and that his ambition would probably be thwarted if he accepted our plea and appointed a Commission. He would therefore do nothing for us.

353. SOME QUESTIONS

Many questions have been asked about the new Transvaal Ordinance. We give below the important ones along with their replies.

QUESTIONS

1. How is one to disobey the law?
2. What defence can one offer for doing so?
3. May one seek release on bail or not?
4. What is the likely sentence?
5. Will they arrest the hawkers first or the others?
6. How will it affect the traders?
7. What will happen to licences next year?
8. What shall we do if nothing is gained even by going to gaol?
9. And if some take out new Registers?
10. What is the harm in taking out a Register?

ANSWERS

1. Many people believe that all Indians have to appear on January 1 at a Court or at the gate of a gaol and say, “We do not want to take out a Register. Arrest us.” Resistance cannot be offered in this way. Even if all people thus present themselves, the Government will not arrest them. Whether to arrest or not depends on the will of the Government. They definitely want and expect most of the people to take out new Registers before January 1. The Government will be in a fix what to do if, no Indian has, by that date, taken out a Register. It is probable that they might seek the opinion of the leaders. Whether they do so or not, the [British Indian] Association will have to write to them intimating that no one from the community will take out the Register and that, if they intend prosecuting the offender, it will be proper for them to proceed against the leaders. The Government may or may not pay heed to the letter. When one or more men are arrested for not taking out Registers, Mr. Gandhi is bound to defend them, as he has promised. There will be no other defence. He will narrate the history of the matter and plead that the real culprit is not the person not taking out the Register, but that either Mr. Gandhi or the Association must be deemed guilty, for it was on their advice that people refrained from taking them out. Then, Mr. Gandhi may perhaps be arrested for inciting the people, or the arrested persons may be fined or sentenced to short terms of imprisonment. As paying the fine is out of the question, the only alternative will be to go to gaol. Reports of these cases and of others that may be instituted will be cabled to the whole world.

2. There is to be no legal defence other than the one described above. If perchance the Prosecutor commits a mistake in law, advantage may no doubt be taken of it.

3. When we have already passed a resolution to go to gaol, there can be no question of release on bail. No disgrace attaches to this kind of imprisonment.

4. The sentence generally will be either fine or imprisonment in lieu of fine, or both, and further imprisonment in lieu of a fine. In no case is the fine to be paid. No sentence can be passed under which a man can be seized by the arm and turned out. Even after serving his sentence, if a man does not take out a new Register, he is again guilty and therefore the Government can, if it chooses, keep all these persons in gaol for all time.

5. It is not possible to say who will be arrested first.

6. It is not likely that all traders will have to go to gaol. If perchance such a thing should happen, it would be nothing to worry about. In that case, the shop should be closed or may be entrusted to a reliable white. It is hardly likely that the Government will go to these lengths. However, one must not assume that certain things will never happen.

7. According to the new Act, those who do not take out the new Registers are not entitled to licences. If licences are not issued, the fee for them may be tendered and the business continued. Even if prosecuted for trading without a licence, one should not pay the fine, but serve the gaol sentence.

8. Such a question cannot arise. When going to gaol is in itself a gain, further questioning is useless. What could be worse than giving one’s finger-prints and disgracing oneself? How can we do that which we consider disgraceful? Surely, we are not going to commit theft because others do so. When Hampden refused to pay Ship Money, he did not argue in this strain.

9. If some persons take out the new Register, they will lose their good name and earn the contempt of the Indian community.

10. The disadvantage in taking out the new Register is that our condition will thereby become worse than that of the Kaffirs. The question does not arise here whether men without permits gain or lose by taking out or not taking out the Register. By taking out Registers we shall disgrace ourselves. There is as much objection to taking out Registers as to disgracing ourselves. For those who cannot stand a gaol sentence, the better course will be to leave the Transvaal. It is, of course, cowardly to leave the land, but it is even more cowardly to take out a new Register.

354. A RAY OF HOPE

There have not been two opinions on how for the Resolutions of the mass meeting will produce results. As for Resolutions 3 and 4, what will happen still remains to be seen. Their fruit is a long time away yet; and this depends upon the determination of the Indian community. Nothing but good can come of adhering staunchly to Resolution 4. However, who can say that it has not already begun to have effect? At one time it was thought that Resolution 3, about the sending of the deputation, might be dropped. Recent Press messages show that we did very well in sending the deputation in time. Our Johannesburg Correspondent says that the Secretary of State has sent a cablegram to Lord Selborne asking him to inform the British Indian Association that sanction to the Asiatic Act will not be accorded before the representation of the Indian deputation has been heard. This by itself shows that Resolution 3 has served its purpose. Among the reasons that prompted the Secretary of State to attach weight to Indian protests, the impact of Resolution 4 may be considered to be the primary one. Lord Elgin’s cablegram proves the usefulness of Resolution 3 and also shows the impact of Resolution 4. Whether the deputation succeeds or not, this much is established that the Imperial Government has taken some notice of the Transvaal Indians. In these circumstances, the deputation will be able to do really good work. If Resolution 4 has begun to tell in such a short time, can it fail to have effect in England and elsewhere once it is actually put into execution?

355. TYLER, HAMPDEN AND BUNYAN

We have, on an earlier occasion, cited the examples of these three men.1 The chains that bind us would certainly snap even if a single person from amongst us did in South Africa a hundredth part of what these men did for their country.

1 Vide “The Duty of Transvaal Indians”, 6-10-1906

398 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Wat Tyler lived in the twelfth century. Once the King of England imposed a heavy tax on farmers. The tax was unjust, and Tyler resolved not to pay it. Many farmers joined him. An army was sent against Tyler and his men. Tyler was killed, but the burden of tax on the farmers was ultimately removed. This event gave the people an awareness of their strength, further results of which were seen during the seventeenth century.

At that time, King Charles was the ruler of England and he wanted to wage wars in foreign lands. As his treasury had become empty, he imposed Ship Money. Hampden, a rich gentleman of great prestige, saw that, if Ship Money were paid, the King’s demands would go on increasing and the people would suffer. He therefore refused to pay the tax, and many joined him in this. Though some of them agreed to pay the tax, Hampden remained firm and was prosecuted. The judges sentenced him, declaring that he had committed a crime in not paying the tax. Despite the sentence, Hampden did not pay the tax. Hampden and his companions went to gaol and the people congratulated them. Like them, the people too remained firm. Many did not pay the tax and there was a great revolt. The King became nervous and the whole matter was reconsidered. It was realized that thousands of people could not be sent to gaol. He therefore got the earlier judgment reversed by other judges and Hampden was set free. The seed of the struggle for freedom that he sowed grew into a mighty tree. As a result of the struggle he put up, Cromwell emerged and England acquired real power and the people were given a large share in the governance of the country. Hampden died fighting for his country; he remains immortal.

John Bunyan was a saintly man. His only interest was prayer to God. He saw the terrible religious oppression prevailing at the time, that is, in the seventeenth century. He did not think it proper to do the bidding of the Bishops. He hearkened only to the call of God. Parted from his wife and children, he remained in Bedford Prison for twelve years. There he wrote the most beautiful book\(^1\) in the English language. Today hundreds of thousands of men derive solace by reading it. It is written in such simple language that children and grown-ups alike can read it with joy. The place where Bunyan was imprisoned has now become a place of pilgrimage for the English. Bunyan himself suffered, but he freed his people from suffering and sorrow. It is because of saintly persons like Bunyan that people in England today enjoy freedom in matters of religion.

\(^1\) Wat Tyler lived in the fourteenth century.
\(^2\) The Pilgrim’s Progress
A people that has produced such a trinity—why should it not enjoy self-rule? If these men suffered so much hardship, it would not be too much for the Transvaal Indians to go to gaol or to suffer some loss in trade. If they do not, they will earn a bad name. If they do, their chains will break.

356. INTERVIEW TO “THE TRIBUNE”

The Deputation consisting of Gandhiji and Ally arrived in England on October 20, 1906. Interviewed on board ship at Southampton by a representative of The Tribune, Gandhiji said:

[SOUTHAMPTON, October 20, 1906]

We think that the position has not been properly placed before Lord Elgin. An amendment Ordinance concerning Asiatics was recently passed by the Transvaal Government.

The law against which we are to make our submission to Lord Elgin is intended to make every Indian now settled in the Transvaal carry a pass, just as the Kaffirs\(^1\) are required to do. The Indian passes, however, will be much more rigorous and severe. It is supposed that every pass will bear ten finger impressions of the holder. All Indians in the Transvaal, no matter what their status may be, will have to submit to this, whether they can read and write English or any other European language.

The reason for introducing this law is, as the Colonial Secretary has stated, that there is an influx of Indians into the Transvaal. The British Indian community has always denied this charge, and has invited a commission of inquiry to investigate it. The number of Indians in the Transvaal, according to the permits, is 13,000, and by the census returns, 10,000. I may point out that they suffer from many other disabilities. They cannot hold landed property except in Locations or wards that may be set apart for their residence. They cannot ride in tram-cars in Johannesburg or Pretoria, and there are difficulties even in railway travelling. There are regulations which, though not at present in force, are still on the statute-book, preventing British Indians, together with other Asiatics, from walking on the foot-paths. This applies especially to Johannesburg and Pretoria.

The new Ordinance contains a clause to the effect that it shall not come into operation until His Majesty has signified his pleasure not to disallow it. We wish to get it disallowed. At the same time, recognizing the prejudice that there is against colour in the Transvaal, we have always accepted the principle of restriction of further immigration under well-defined regulations which should not be harsh and savour of class legislation. Our experience has invariably been that, wherever there has been class legislation, it has been far more difficult to secure relief than if there have been laws of general application, as, for instance, at the Cape and Natal.

All we claim is fair and honourable treatment for British Indians residing in the Transvaal. This has been often promised by the British Government. In fact, as Lord Lansdowne stated, the disabilities of British Indians in the Transvaal were one of the causes of the late war.

The Tribune, 22-10-1906

357. INTERVIEW TO “THE MORNING LEADER”

[October 20, 1906]

Mr. Gandhi, in a conversation [at Waterloo station] with a representative of The Morning Leader, asserted that, so far from the war having brought relief to the Indians, these British subjects were now worse off than they were under Boer rule.

The only things the Boers did were to deprive the British Indians of burgher rights and landownership, and to pass the Law [3] of 1885 under which those of them desiring to settle as traders in the country had to be registered and pay a fee of £3. Under the British regime, although a Kaffir may hold land, we are still debarred from the privilege, except in Locations or wards specially set apart for us, the idea being to reproduce the system of the Jewish ghettos.

ADDED DISABILITIES

But other disabilities have been added. There are, for example, difficulties as to travelling in trams. In Johannesburg British Indians are only allowed to ride in trailer cars. In Pretoria they are not allowed to travel on trams at all. It is, however, more particularly in connection with the question of registration that we feel aggrieved. Under the Boers, the immigration of British Indians was absolutely free and unrestricted. But today, not only are Indians prevented from entering the country, but even old settlers find it difficult to regain admission.

It is true that, under Law 3 of 1885 passed by the Boers, Indians settling in the country for purposes of trade had to register themselves. But the Legislative Council has now carried an amending law—a law which the British Indians assert, is worse than the law which it seeks to amend. It is in connection with this new piece of legislation that the Deputation has come to London.

HARDSHIPS OF THE PASS

By virtue of that Ordinance, not only traders, but every Indian now resident in the Transvaal, must be registered and carry a pass (like the Kaffirs). This pass is euphemistically called a certificate of registration. I must point out that this measure has been introduced in spite of the fact that Indians in the country are already in possession of permits which authorize them to reside there, while they also hold registration certificates for which they have each paid £3.

When Great Britain took possession of the Transvaal, the Indians, on the advice of Lord Milner, exchanged their Boer registration for English registration, and even submitted to their thumb marks being impressed on their registration certificates. This certificate, by the way, also contained particulars as to the age, height, and family of the person who carried it. In reality it was an identification certificate.

“UNAUTHORIZED” IMMIGRATION

And now the new Ordinance enacts yet another registration.

The reason given is that there has been a large unauthorized immigration of Indians into the Transvaal, and it is proposed, by means of the new Ordinance, to ascertain who they are. But this object could just as well be attained by inspecting the registration certificate now held. As a matter of fact, the Indians stoutly deny that there is any unauthorized influx on a wholesale scale, as the Government asserts, and they have asked for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the question.

The amending law will require a much stricter identification than under the old system. As the Assistant Colonial Secretary (Mr. Curtis) said, the Indian, no matter what his status, will have to have ten finger impressions on his certificate (instead of the thumb-impression only). Failure to register will carry with it very severe penalties. Not only will the adult male population have to be registered, but also children of parents domiciled in the Transvaal, and even infants in arms.
The Indian community recognize the prejudice against colour in the Transvaal, and have, therefore, accepted the principle of restriction of British Indian immigration—but on such terms as are not humiliating, and do not interfere with the liberty of those already settled in the country. This can be easily done by passing legislation after the Natal or Cape style. Legislation of this character ought to be general, and applicable to all. Throughout the self-governing colonies, hitherto, special class legislation has been vetoed by the home Government. An attempt made by Natal to pass legislation specially affecting Asiatics was disallowed by Mr. Chamberlain; and we have come here to try and induce Lord Elgin to withhold the royal sanction to the amending law, and to appoint a commission to inquire into the allegation as to the Indian influx.

Mr. Gandhi states that the Indians are greatly stirred over the matter, and are prepared to go to gaol rather than submit.

358. LETTER TO “THE TIMES”

TO
THE EDITOR
THE TIMES
[London]
October 22, 1906

SIR,

I have seen the cablegram in your issue of to-day’s date from your Johannesburg correspondent in connection with the British Indian Deputation that has arrived from the Transvaal to wait upon the Imperial authorities regarding the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance of the Transvaal.

I trust that, in fairness, you will allow us to correct certain misstatements made by your correspondent. He says: “The present Ordinance provides for the complete registration of all Asiatics in such a way that personation, in which the Asiatic is a past master, would be made impossible.” We deny that there has been any personation, and we venture to state emphatically that the existing registration certificates held by British Indians entirely prevent personation. These certificates contain the names of the holders and their wives, number of children, their age, height, and their thumb imprints. Whenever an attempt has been made to personate, the culprit has been promptly brought to justice.

1 This was published “in substance” in The Times, 25-10-1906. The letter was reproduced in full in Indian Opinion, 24-11-1906.

Your correspondent states that the present Ordinance will give a full title to Asiatics already domiciled, and that it will extend greater privileges to them. They have the full title to residence already, unless it is to be snatch[ed] from them by fresh legislation. They hold permits authorizing them to enter and remain in the Colony of the Transvaal, also registration certificates above mentioned, which were taken out by them as a voluntary act on the advice of Lord Milner who at the time assured them that those registration certificates were final and complete.

That Asiatics will be absolved from the obnoxious registration fee is a preposterous statement as they have already paid it, either to the Boer Government or to the British. They will not be given a title to their land and mosques, as your correspondent suggests. He is thinking of the Draft Ordinance which contained a clause authorizing the Government to give the British Indians a title to their mosques or places of worship but not to their land apart from mosque premises. But this clause does not now find place in the Ordinance as passed by the Legislative Council, nor was it necessary, because the Supreme Court of the Transvaal has decided that, in spite of Law 3 of 1885, Indians, acting as a religious corporation, can hold fixed property for religious purposes. British Indians in their wildest dreams have never claimed the right of free immigration into the Transvaal. They recognize the several prejudices against any such immigration, and have therefore accepted the principle of restriction in vogue at the Cape, Natal and other British Colonies.

The British Indians of the Transvaal respectfully but firmly oppose the Ordinance because it imposes wanton, uncalled for and unjust degradation upon them. It reduces them to a level lower than the Kaffirs. It sets up a system of passes and identification applicable only to criminals. Is it right that every Indian, irrespective of status, should be called upon to carry a pass containing impressions of all his digits, to be produced to every policeman who may choose to ask for it? Is it right that babies in arms should be taken to an officer called the Registrar of Asiatics, to give him particulars of identification in respect of the baby and to have it provisionally registered[?] Whereas Law 3 of 1885 requires registration of traders only and registration certificates under it are merely a receipt for £3, the present law requires registration of the above kind of every male Indian in the Colony.

The statement that the first undersigned has been the principal agent through whom Indians obtained permits to enter the Transvaal, and that he has in the past established a large business on this footing, is false. The large number of Indian refugees had already entered the Transvaal at the time the first undersigned was required to settle there.¹

It is hardly necessary to deal with the personal element introduced by your correspondent. It is felt that the British Indian community has been much misrepresented and misunderstood.

Any influx of Asiatics into the Transvaal on a wholesale basis has been all denied by the British Indian community, whose position to-day is infinitely worse than it was under the Boer regime. The community has asked for an enquiry into the alleged influx of Asiatics on a large scale.² We assert that the vast majority of the 13,000 British Indians of the Transvaal are in possession of lawful permits and certificates. If there are any without the necessary documents, the Peace Preservation Ordinance is strong enough and severe enough to expel such people from the country. Successful prosecutions have often taken place in connection with such men.

It will therefore be seen that the British Indian community is prepared to meet in a perfectly fair spirit [the fear]³ as to undue influx or undue competition in trade; but it claims for the resident Indian population the ordinary rights of citizenship, namely, freedom to hold landed property, freedom of locomotion and freedom of trade under general regulations, without class distinction.

We are, etc.,

360. “INTERVIEW TO “SOUTH AFRICA””

[Hotel Cecil,
London,
October 25, 1906]

[REPORTER:] Will you please give me your views on this question which has brought you so many thousand miles, Mr. Gandhi?

[GANDHIL:] With pleasure, I had better begin at the beginning. If you please.

Well, Mr. H. O. Ally, the Chairman of the Hamidiya Islamic Society, and myself have come over as an appointed Deputation from the British Indian Association of the Transvaal in virtue of the resolution passed by the great Indian mass meeting held at the Old Empire Theatre in Johannesburg last month.

And your object?

Our object is to place before the authorities here what we consider to be a true statement of the facts with a view to securing a disallowance of the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance of the Transvaal.

You consider, then, that the information so far available to the Colonial Secretary and the Secretary of State for India is inadequate?

That is so. I notice that you, as well as the London Times, have been misinformed regarding the Ordinance and the objection to it.

In what respect, may I ask?

For instance, it has been supposed that there is a very great unauthorized influx, [in] to the Transvaal, of British Indians, and that this influx is actually countenanced by the British Indian community as a body.

Then are those suppositions incorrect?

Yes. If those two statements were at all true, there would be some excuse for what is, after all, panic legislation; but the British Indian community has repeatedly denied the alleged unauthorized influx.

I take it that you agree with those denials, Mr. Gandhi?

Certainly. I claim personally to have a very wide experience of the working of the Permit Department, and I have no hesitation in saying that there is absolutely no unauthorized influx of British 1 This appeared in South Africa, 27-10-1906, and was reproduced in Indian Opinion.

Indians [in] to the Colony, except [in] isolated cases; and those cases can be most effectively dealt with even under the present Peace Preservation Ordinance and Law No. 3 of 1885.

AS THE LAW STANDS AT PRESENT

Indeed, successful prosecutions have taken place in connection with any Indians who have tried to enter the Colony, either without permits, or on permits not belonging to them. Such persons can usually be detected by comparing the thumb-impressions of those who may present permits or registration certificates with the thumb imprints on those documents.

And if they do not agree, a prosecution follows?

Yes. If the thumb-impressions do not tally, the unlawful holders of such documents are liable to very heavy penalties. If an Indian is found in the Colony without a permit, he has either to leave the Transvaal on a summary notice, under pain of imprisonment, or to show that he belongs to one of the exempted classes mentioned in the Peace Preservation Ordinance. So you will see that the present machinery is absolutely complete. It therefore came to me as a painful surprise when I read a long cablegram in The Times last Monday to the effect that there was an unauthorized influx of British Indians [in]to the Transvaal, and that there was a great deal of personation going on which it was difficult to detect.

You complain, I believe, of injustice being done in some cases even under the present laws?

Undoubtedly. Even under the present laws, a great deal of terrible injustice has been inflicted, as, for instance, in the case of the Indian woman Punia,¹ which aroused general sympathy throughout the Transvaal. In that case, as is now well known, an Indian woman was torn away from her husband who held a proper permit.

But was not that rather an exceptional case?

By no means. In another case a child under eleven years of age was taken away from his parent because he was supposed to have come into the Transvaal on a permit not his own.²

What happened eventually?

A cablegram has now been received, stating that the Supreme Court has held the conviction of the child to be wholly bad, and has expressed the opinion that such prosecutions were calculated to bring

¹ Vide “Letter to the Press”, 19-11-1906
² Vide “Transvaal Permit Ordinance”, 29-9-1906 ridicule and contempt upon the administration of the law.¹

Scope of New Ordinance

If, therefore, the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance now before Lord Elgin is passed, one can easily understand how much more difficult the position of British Indians in the Transvaal is likely to be.

Does it represent, then, such very exceptional legislation?

Indeed it does. The new Ordinance goes much further than anything I have seen in the legislation of any of the British Colonies.

But in what does the head and front of its offending consist?

I will tell you. It is most humiliating, in that it will require every Indian, irrespective of status, to put down the impression of his ten digits, and such a pass will have to be produced to every policeman who cares to demand it. All Indians, including children, will have to be registered in this manner, or, as it is called in the case of infants under eight years of age, provisionally registered.

And this is quite a new provision?

Yes. All this used not to be so under the Dutch regime, and we could always rely upon British protection whenever there was anything harsh or unjust in the administration of Law No. 3 of 1885.

But this Ordinance only amends the former Law?

No; it is a mistake to call the new Ordinance an amending ordinance, because its scope is entirely different from that of Law No. 3 of 1885. The latter penalises Indian traders to the extent only of one single payment of £3, whilst the former entirely restricts the immigration of British Indians.

Then do you take strong objection to that restriction?

No, with the restriction we do not quarrel, but the manner of it is, as I have shown, most humiliating and totally uncalled for.

The restriction itself, then, is not the bone of contention?

It is like this. We recognize the prejudice that exists in the Transvaal against British Indians and men of colour generally. We have, therefore, accepted the principle of restriction on the Cape or the Natal basis. After profound consideration, that has been the line of legislation adopted for all the colonies which have to face similar problems.

An Enlightened Indian View

There is not the slightest reason, why the Transvaal should be allowed to go any further than the other Colonies, or why the people of the Transvaal themselves should wish for any further powers, unless they intend—which I for one do not believe—to drive the Indians already in the country out of the Colony.

¹ Vide “British Indians in the Transvaal”, 8-11-1906

Has there not been considerable agitation against the Indian trader

We hear often of trade competition by British Indians, certainly, but I personally consider that new traders’ licences may be regulated by the Town Councils or Licensing Boards, somewhat after the fashion of the Cape Dealers’ Act; only such legislation, in order to be just, ought to be of general application, and not class legislation. You will therefore see that the British Indian community is perfectly willing to satisfy all reasonable objections raised to its presence, but, after that has been done, I think that all fair-minded men must admit that those at least who are [already] resident in the Colony should have freedom to move about, freedom to own landed property, and freedom to trade under the regulations I have referred to. I cannot conceive what exception any South African can take to a programme such as this.

Then the statement you have just made may be taken as embodying the case for the British Indians in the Transvaal, Mr. Gandhi?

Yes it is because we believe that there is a great deal of misunderstanding and exaggeration about our position that Mr. Ally and I have travelled all the Way from South Africa to endeavour to place our case fairly before the authorities. We are anxious to reconcile local opinions as much as possible.

You have not yet been received by Lord Elgin?

Not yet; but all arrangements are being made, and we hope to see him in a few days. We should like the Deputation to be led and introduced by a number of British Members of Parliament and other prominent men who sympathize with the British Indians of the Transvaal on this question; and I thank South Africa from my heart for allowing me to give expression to our views in its columns.

DEAR MR POLAK,

You will consider it perhaps funny that I have not yet looked you up.

Many thanks for sending the typist. Miss Lawson¹ is her name. She and I have commenced to know each other, and we are getting on very nicely. Unfortunately I had decided to take on Mr. Simmonds of South Africa, who was Private Secretary to Sir George Farrar², and whom I knew very well. I shall therefore reluctantly have to part with Miss Lawson next Saturday.

I want to discuss with you the question you incidentally raised while we were walking to your hospitable home. If therefore you should not be otherwise engaged, will you lunch with me tomorrow, and call here some time between one and two? If I have not returned from my calls, I shall ask you kindly to wait either in the Hall or in my room until my return.

Yours truly,

October 25, 1906

DEAR MR. GOOL,

Your father has asked me particularly to see you before I return to Johannesburg. My arrangements do not allow of my paying friendly calls at present, and lest I may be too much engaged during the whole of my stay, may I ask you to give me a call at the above address between 9 and 9.30 in the morning, any day. The day is occupied with paying visits, and I am never sure when I am in. I hope you are getting on well.

I waited for you on Wednesday at lunch time, thinking you would turn up. I am sorry you did not. I take it some engagement kept you away. I return the handkerchief you kindly lent me. Perhaps you will be able to meet me some other time. Mr. Lew was to have sent me a representative of the Chinese Embassy. I have to draw up a letter to the Foreign Office in connection with it. 368. LETTER TO SIR GEORGE BIRDWOOD

Hotel Cecil,
London,
October 25, 1906

Dear Sir,

I am much obliged to you for your telegram in reply to my wire regarding the Indian Deputation. I have been in constant touch with Sir Muncherji, and am writing to him again, and have no doubt that he will approve of the idea of your becoming spokesman. I may mention that I approached Sir Lepel Griffin, but somehow, although he is in full sympathy with our views, he will not lead. Before, however, the deputation goes forth, Mr. Ally and I are anxious to pay our respects to you and to place the position before you. I hope, therefore, that there will be an appointment in your letter following your telegram. If not, I shall thank you to give me one.

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

October 25, 1906

MY DEAR RITCH

I had a very long chat with Sir Muncherji, and am to have another again. Will you please come up to the City tomorrow? You need not necessarily see me, as I may be away, except between 9 and 9.30 but I would like you to look up office rooms in Victoria Street or some such neighbourhood. I see that the main difficulty will prove to be with our finances in working the committee, especially for South African work. Sir Muncherji has promised to work whole-heartedly. He seems to feel most keenly about the question, and there is a great deal of organizing still to be done so that something may be definitely fixed before I go. I hope Mr. Cohen is better; he should certainly be sent to a hospital. You should see him some time tomorrow, either before or after you have finished your round.

TO
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY TO

SIR,

Mr H. O. Ally and I, appointed by the British Indian

Association of the Transvaal as a Deputation to wait upon Your Lordship in connection with the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance of the Transvaal, published in the Transvaal Government Gazette on the 28th day of September, 1906, arrived on Saturday last, and I have the honour to report our arrival.

My co-Delegate and I shall have the honour to avail ourselves of the permission graciously granted by His Lordship to wait upon him in connection with the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance of the Transvaal. Several gentlemen who have interested themselves in the British Indian question in South Africa will probably introduce the Deputation to His Lordship, and they will in due course request an appointment.

I have the honour to remain,

LONDON,
October 25, 1906

DEAR SIR MUNCHERJEE

At the time I telegraphed1 to you, I telegraphed to Sir George Birdwood2 also asking him whether he will lead the deputation. He sends a telegram which I am sure you will appreciate. He says: “Yes, if Sir Muncherji approves I will attend and speak.” I have now written to him telling him that I have no doubt you will. Will you kindly write to Sir George Birdwood whatever you deem fit, and let me know.

It is strange that Sir Lepel, although he has always sympathized, would not join the deputation. I believe it is because of his not being in harmony with the other proposed members of the deputation.

I have not yet heard from Mr. Ameer Ali. I have, therefore,

October 26, 1906

DEAR MR. POLAK,

I am sending you all the cuttings that I consider to be useful. If I can find the time, I shall translate¹ the substance of the fight of the women suffragists for the Guzerati ³ columns, but if I do not, let Chhaganlal translate them, and make an effective use of these valuable cuttings. I have asked Mr. Mukerji\(^1\) also to deal with the matter in his London Letter. Of course all the cuttings I am sending you are not necessarily to be used for Indian Opinion. Some of them you would like to see yourself—that is why I am sending them.

I have not allowed myself a moment’s rest ever since my landing here. Work commenced on Saturday immediately on landing.

I gave an interview to The Tribune\(^2\) man on board, and to The Morning Leader\(^3\) man, whom your father had brought with him, at the station immediately I got on to the platform. Soon after having my meal, Mr. Ally and I went over to the London Indian Society and paid our respects to the Grand Old Man, and made with him appointments for seeing Sir William\(^4\) and Sir Henry\(^5\). I have not gone to bed before one o’clock, except on Wednesday night: interviewing people takes up a lot of time. So far as I have progressed, it seems that Sir George Birdwood, supported by Sir Muncherji, Sir Henry Cotton and others, will introduce us to Lord Elgin. It will therefore be a very good movement. Mr. Ameer Ali has telegraphed to me saying he also would join in introducing the Deputation. Lord Elgin will therefore know what an influential backing we have and that the Conservative, the Liberal, the Anglo-Indian and the Mahomedan opinion is all solid in our favour.

I have received your cable. It was extended by me for the columns of India. I hope it represents correctly what I received in your cablegram. It was not very clear. I send you a copy of the cablegram as received by me. You will see for yourself whether it is a correct copy. I hardly think it is. You should have given me the necessary stops.

As soon as the date of the Deputation is fixed, I shall cable you and shall include a few words regarding Mr. Abdool Gani. I may, however, state that I made absolutely no such statement as was attributed to me by Mr. Murray. I did not tell him that the second bond should be lodged with the Bank; on the contrary, I told him that we should use the second bond for raising a loan. The whole

\(^1\) Gandhiji had asked him to send regular despatches for Indian Opinion, especially selected news items and comments from The Times; vide “Letter to J. C. Mukerji”, 27-10-1906 conversation took place through the ‘phone. You may, therefore, assure Mr. Abdool Gani that there was no such binding statement made by me.

I now come to the most important part of my letter. I think that it is quite possible to have here a very strong committee solely devoted to the affairs of British Indians in South Africa. Sir Muncherji is very enthusiastic. Sir William has approved of the suggestion. The way is therefore paved. Ritch’s hands will be free. No matter whether the Deputation succeeds or not, its work must be continued, and there is not the slightest doubt that we will have legislation as soon as Responsible Government is established. We will then be able to avoid a Deputation, which will be almost [un]necessary if we have an effective working committee. We would not only then do more through it than through a temporary deputation, but would do it at perhaps one-tenth of the cost of a deputation; but if it requires the proper man, it requires funds also. I think that at the most—or perhaps at the least—have not yet all the figures before me—we would want to spend £25 per month. The committee will probably last two years. Anyhow we shall guarantee a year’s expenses, viz., £300. We would not be able to take up offices cheaply on less than a year’s lease. We would have to pay something to Ritch, as he cannot be expected in the present state of his finances to do the work gratis. After he returns to South Africa, it is my intention to offer the post to your father, if he will take it. I am going to discuss it today with him at luncheon time. Please therefore call a meeting of the Association British Indian Committee¹ and place the whole position before them. If they agree, let me have a cable saying, Yes. At the same time you should have funds ready. Do not send me the affirmative cable unless you get the funds there in your possession, or unless you feel absolutely certain of getting them. Mr. Ally entirely approves of the idea; probably he will be writing.

I passed last Sunday with your people. Nothing surprised me, as you had prepared me for everything; otherwise to meet your sisters and your brilliant father would have been a most agreeable surprise. Both the sisters are really most lovable, and if I was unmarried, or young, or believed in mixed marriage, you know what I would have done! As it is, I told them that if I had made their acquaintance in 1888 (for not doing which they took me severely to task) I should have adopted them as daughters, from which proposition your father violently dissented. Your mother was very hospitable. Professor Parmanand² was with me. He has made himself one of the family.

¹ Committee of the British Indian Association
² Vide “Letter to Revashankar Jhaveri”, 18-7-1905
Your mother is suffering from a very severe attack of indigestion. I mildly proposed an extended Jewish fast. I am afraid the proposal won’t wash, however it has gone in for what it is worth. I pushed in the claim for earth-bandages also, and by the time I have done with them, I might be able to make some impression. Anyhow she said she was quite open to conviction. The soup, let me tell you, was all prepared by your father. He told me he passed a considerable time in thinking out all the ingredients, etc., etc. I have not been able to go and see Milly’s sister. I see that I have more work before me than I bargained for, and have not a moment to spare to pay friendly calls. I have, however, written to her asking her to give me an appointment for an evening. The reply is due some time today. I will not leave before seeing her.

You will not be surprised to learn that this is being dictated to our friend Mr. Simmonds. I sent the cable about our arrival, as Mr. Ally was anxious that I should. He has promised to do so to Mrs. Ally.

Since the above was in type I have seen your father. He thinks that £300 per year will not be sufficient. Of course his ideas are necessarily large. At the same time they are entitled to every respect, as he has local knowledge and experience. If, therefore, you can push through the proposal for £500, it will be better. We should simply spend what is absolutely necessary. At the same time, if authority is given for spending more, I know that the money will not be wasted. I have now seen Mr. Scott, and, you will be pleased to hear, Mr. J. M. Robertson. Your father took me to Mr. Scott, who is his personal friend, and it was at the House of Commons that Mr. Robertson happened to come in, and we were introduced to him by Mr. Scott. Both gentlemen have interested themselves in the question. Mr. Scott suggested that I should address a number of members of the House of Commons, and Mr. Scott and Mr. Robertson are going to see about it. A similar suggestion has been made by Mr. Mackarness also. Let us see what happens. This now brings me up to date. I need not now say anything more. Carefully go through all the cuttings I am sending you: they are worth reading. My kind regards to all. I have not the time to write separately to any one else. As it is, this portion of my letter is being dictated at five minutes to eight. I am to see your people again on Sunday.

Will you please send this letter to Mr. West so that I may not have to repeat in my letter to him what I have said in this letter? I do not think the personal matters I have touched upon need prevent this letter going to him. I am not sending you a copy of the full text of our letter to *The Times*¹ as you will see it reproduced in India. You will see something in the current issue of India about the election of Mr. Naoroji to the Presidentship of the Congress. You need not deal with the matter in the paper. I have no time to go into the reasons. Had it been necessary I would have dealt with it from here. You may reproduce two notes from India without any comment, regarding the treatment of indentured Indians on board the Umfuli.

DEAR MR. WEST

Ever since Saturday last I have not had breathing time, and except for one night I have not been able to go to bed before one o’clock in the morning. I have written a very long letter to Polak,² and have asked him to send it on to you for perusal. Please read it yourself and show it to Chhaganlal. It will give you in full detail everything about my movements. As this is being typed at 8.30 p.m. you will excuse me for not giving you a long letter. I see that I shall be busy up to the end of my stay here. Under the circumstances it is hardly possible to cut myself away from London for full one day. I have, therefore, asked Miss Pywell³ to see me in London by appointment, and have offered, if you will let me, to defray her expenses. I am only hoping that she will come. I have had a chat with Mr. Mukerji about

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I have not a moment to spare. It is now 8.30 p.m. and I have not touched the Gujarati letter. If I can, I want to give you one leading article and one correspondence letter in continuation of what I have sent you already from the Armadale. I shall do what I can: the rest you must learn from my long letter to Mr. Polak, which I have asked him to send there. Mr. West is bringing his sister there. I think it is a wise step. She appeared to be simple and willing. We do want some English ladies there. Do please make the best use possible of her. Let your wife and other ladies mix freely with her, and let her feel that there is no distance between her and us, and make her as comfortable as possible. Let the ladies learn all that is to be learnt from her and give her all that can possibly be given to her in the way of teaching. Each party has very strong points for the other to imbibe. I do hope all the womenfolk go to the Press, especially on Saturdays. Let there be a real effort in that direction. I hope to place the London correspondence on a very strong footing before I come away.

DEAR SIR,

I beg to report that Sir Lepel Griffin has declined to lead the deputation that is to introduce the Indian Deputation from South Africa. I waited on Sir William and Mr. Naoroji this morning with the news. When I received an answer in the negative from Sir Lepel, not knowing all the local circumstances, I immediately telegraphed to Sir George Birdwood, \(^1\) thinking he being a neutral man would be the next best person, asking him whether he would join the deputation and be the spokesman. He telegraphed saying he would if Sir Muncherji agreed. Sir William thought that I had done a rash act in asking Sir George Birdwood to be the spokesman, as the proposition might not be acceptable to the other members of the deputation. I realized my mistake too late. Sir William and Mr. Naoroji think that Sir Muncherji, who has been uniformly and zealously working in connection with the matter of the British Indians in South Africa, should be asked to be the spokesman, but they suggested that I was to secure your permission before I moved further. I, therefore, went to the House of Commons to see you, but a constable informed me that you were not in the House. I now write this asking you kindly to wire me whether you approve of the proposal that Sir Muncherji should be the spokesman.

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

if I do drop in, it is not likely to be before 7 or 8 o’clock. You need

379. LETTER TO PROFESSOR PARMANAND

HOTEL CECIL,
LONDON,
October 26, 1906

DEAR PROFESSOR PARMANAND,

I had a chat with Ratnam² when he was here with my luggage.
Ever since that I have been thinking of him during spare moments. To me every one from South Africa is a valuable asset and to be converted into a still more valuable asset by proper nursing. I think that, even from a material standpoint, Ratnam’s life is being very much wasted. His preliminary education being very poor, he will find it hard to battle in his profession; more so in South Africa where he will have to live down a great deal of prejudice. I know of no practitioner in South Africa with so little equipment as he will have at the time he is finished.

It is not enough that he will know English perhaps fairly well; he must have, in my opinion, a good grounding in mathematics. The leader of the South African Bar considers that a knowledge of French, Latin and Dutch (especially Latin) is almost indispensable for success

¹ G. J. Adam; vide “Interview to Reuter”, 27-10-1906
² Ruthnam Pather, who was studying for the Bar at the Bar. Some scientific training also is necessary; otherwise Ratnam will find himself very greatly handicapped when his opponents make use of scientific expressions, or the Court does so. Also, if ever he is going to dedicate his knowledge of law to the good of his country and does not wish to use it commercially, he must have a knowledge of some technical art as a means of living. He is young enough to do all these things. Above all, he must have discipline, even severe discipline. I, therefore, suggested to him that he should attend a school here and go through a regular matriculation course, and even if a pass is beyond him, the same grounding at the school will do him good. As you are looking after him, I thought I should tell you what I have already told him. He said he would consult you and let me know.

380. LETTER TO H. O. ALLY

HOTEL CECIL,
LONDON,
October 26, 1906

DEAR MR. ALLY

I have just heard through the telephone that you passed a very bad night. I am exceedingly sorry and I wonder what the cause of it could be. I am superstitious enough to say it was due to the cigar. As a matter of fact, I told George¹, as we were walking, that, while the progress was imminent, it might be retarded by even one puff of the deadly cigar—such is my strong conviction regarding nicotine. I have seen much suffering from it. However, I may be mistaken. If so, please pardon. All I want is to find you hale and hearty. I was delighted to see you chatting away so hilariously last night. I was, therefore, very much pained to hear through the nurse that you had passed a bad night.

I shall send George as soon as he comes. I have given the nurse a message for you to which I may receive a reply later on, but I put it down in writing also. I might have mentioned it there but I forgot.

I have been discussing with Sir Muncherji and Sir William

Wedderburn the advisability of establishing a permanent committee for British Indians in South Africa. Perhaps you recollect that you made the suggestion long ago. I think that our work could be usefully continued if such a permanent committee composed of people representing all shades of opinion is established, say, for one or two years. I am, therefore, most anxious that such a committee be formed. We could then perhaps afford a second deputation.

I have written to Mr. Polak about it and asked him to reply, yes or no.¹

Will you kindly let me know your opinion on the matter and, if you agree with me, please write this evening confirming my opinion.

I have already given an account of our voyage up to the time we were about to reach Madeira.

MADEIRA

We reached Madeira on the morning of Tuesday, October 16. Generally all passengers land at Madeira and go for a stroll, and we too went ashore. This island is very beautiful. Situated upon a hill, Madeira is inhabited, tier upon tier up to a height of 2,500 feet. There is greenery all round, with hardly an uncultivated patch. All over the island the paths are paved, and no wheeled carriages are used, only sledgelike barrows, drawn along the way. These barrows go down the slopes at great speed but without the least danger. The barrow is so light that a man can carry it on his head. The island is in the possession of the Portuguese and is inhabited entirely by them. No Indian was to be seen. The view of the island is lovely and charming.

ARRIVAL IN LONDON

On the morning of the 20th, we reached Southampton Docks where we were met by Mr. West and his sister. From here one has to take a train [to London]. A reporter of The Tribune, a well-known paper, came to see us on board the steamer. We told him all the facts. He published the whole account in his paper on Monday. The train reached Waterloo Station at 12.30, Messrs Ritch, Godfrey and Joseph Royeppen met us at the station and Mr. Henry Polak’s father had also come there with a reporter of The Morning Leader. We gave him the story. The report published by The Morning Leader on Monday was much better than that in The Tribune. Thus, our work began even before we reached London. We went to India House, as Mr. Ritch had made arrangements for our stay there. There is not enough space this time for an account of India House. I propose to give one the next time. We ate our meal and left forthwith for the meeting of the London Indian Society, where we had the good fortune of meeting Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji. He welcomed us, and a visit to him again on Monday was fixed. We spent the whole of Sunday meeting Indian youths and Mr. Polak and at night met Pandit Shyamji Krishnavarma.¹ Our conversation went on till one in the morning.

MONDAY TO FRIDAY

I do not get a moment’s leisure here. As I write this it is 11 p.m. We have had interviews with Sir Muncherji, Sir William Wedderburn, Sir Henry Cotton, Mr. Cotton, Mr. Hall, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Arathoon,² Mr. Scott and other gentlemen. Our idea is to have men of different parties here to accompany and introduce us to Lord Elgin to plead for us and to give us their full support. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, Sir Muncherji Bhownaggree, Mr. Harold Cox, Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Sir George Birdwood are already with us. Very probably the interview will take place next week. We have informed Lord Elgin of our arrival and his acknowledgement too has been received.

"THE TIMES" CORRESPONDENT

The Times correspondent in the Transvaal, as if by previous arrangement, cabled just on Monday to his paper saying that many Indians had entered the Colony. If they continued to enter in this way, the whites would have to leave bag and baggage. As the new act gave the Indians the right to hold land and other rights, it was hoped that Lord Elgin would give his assent to it. If he did not, the whites would be very much offended. Again, the correspondent hoped that Sir Richard Solomon would fully champion the cause of the whites in regard to the act. Moreover, he added, Mr. Gandhi, a member of the Deputation, was a clever lawyer, who was responsible for the entry of Indians into the Transvaal and who had made much money thereby. Such a cablegram was despatched from there to throw dust into the eyes of people here. The same day, we sent The Times a reply³ from which important paragraphs were published on Thursday. The whole reply was published in India on Friday. In our reply we had said that, even if any Indians entered without permits, their number was very small, that the Government had even now the authority to expel them and that the new law was oppressive. No Indian wants that the whole of India should migrate to South Africa. Nor does anyone wish that the whites should be deprived of all their trade. In proof of our bona fides we are prepared to accept laws on the lines of those at the Cape or

383. DEEDS BETTER THAN WORDS

[October 26, 1906]

Two things are now being widely discussed in England. One relates to the decision of the soap manufacturers who, like their American opposite numbers, have combined and resolved to increase the price of soap. The dealers in soap and the public naturally did not relish the decision. But they did not approach the Government for help; neither did they appeal to the manufacturers; but they resorted to direct action. They notified the manufacturers that they would not buy their soap even if it meant a great loss to them. The result was that Lever Brothers, of Sunlight Soap fame, who used till now to have fifteen ounces of soap in their one-pound cake, will henceforth give the full sixteen. The lesson from this is that deeds are better than words. The action of the dealers proved more fruitful than mere words.

The second example illustrating this saying is more remarkable. It is the movement in England for women’s right to vote, which the Government is unwilling to concede. The women therefore go to the House of Commons and harass the Members. They have sent petitions, written letters, delivered speeches and tried many other means. Last Wednesday, they went to the House of Commons as soon as it opened and demanded the right to vote; they caused some damage also, for which they were prosecuted and sentenced to furnish a security of £5 each. On their refusing to do so, they were sentenced to imprisonment, and they are now in gaol. Most of the women have got three months. All of them come from respectable families and some are very well educated. One of these is the daughter of the late Mr. Cobden who was highly respected by the people. She is serving her term in gaol. Another is the wife of Mr. Lawrence. A third is an LL.B. On the very day these women went to gaol there was a huge meeting here in support of the resolve adopted by the brave ladies, and a sum of £650 was collected on the spot. Mr. Lawrence announced that he would pay £10 a day as long as his wife was in gaol. Some persons regard these women as insane; the police use force against them; the magistrate looks upon them with a stern eye. Cobden’s brave daughter said, “I shall never obey any law in the making of which I have no hand; I will not accept the authority of the court executing those laws; if you send me to gaol, I will go there, but I shall on no account pay a fine. I will not furnish any security either.” It is no wonder that a people which produces such daughters and mothers should hold the sceptre. Today the whole country is laughing at them, and they have only a few people on their side. But undaunted, these women work on steadfast in their cause. They are bound to succeed and gain the franchise, for the simple reason that deeds are better than words. Even those who laughed at them would be left wondering. If even women display such courage, will the Transvaal Indians fail in their duty and be afraid of gaol? Or would they rather consider the gaol a palace and readily go there? When that time comes, India’s bonds will snap of themselves.

We have sent petitions; made speeches; and we shall continue to do so. But we shall gain our object only if we have the kind of strength we have spoken of. People do not have much faith in articles and speeches. Anyone can do that, they call for no courage. Deeds after all better than words. All other things are unavailing, and no one is afraid of them. The only way therefore is to sacrifice oneself and take the plunge. We have much to do yet, no doubt of that.

432 | THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Mr. Ameer Ali and a few others, including myself, have been approached by the Indian Deputation that has arrived from the Transvaal. The Indian Delegates have asked us to lead the Deputation as most of us have always taken an interest in the question affecting British Indians in South Africa.

I have been asked to become spokesman by those who have consented to take part in the deputation, and as I have studied the question perhaps more thoroughly than the others, I have accepted the position.

May I then, on behalf of the Committee, ask you to appoint a time for receiving the Delegates from the Transvaal, accompanied by the Committee.

385. INTERVIEW TO REUTER

[October 27, 1906]

Mr. Gandhi, speaking to Reuter’s representative, said:

We have come to protest against the new Transvaal Asiatic Ordinance, which is humiliating for the British Indians, all of whom will have to carry a pass bearing thumb-prints and other marks of identification. The object of the new Ordinance is to prevent unauthorized Indians from entering the Transvaal. We hope to convince the Imperial Government that this is effectually done by the existing Permit Ordinance, which is very strictly applied.

386. LETTER TO H. O. ALLY

Hotel Cecil,
London,
October 27, 1906

Dear Mr. Ally,

George has seen me after his interview with you, and also Dr. Oldfield. I am delighted that what I feared was a relapse was, after all, a blessing in disguise. I am delighted also that, when he saw you, you were looking hale and hearty. When I think of it, I do feel that our stay here would have been incomplete without George. Who [else] would have been the link between us? The idea you have suggested about a gathering has been uppermost in my mind. As you may imagine, I have not been at all idle. I have been seeing people here and there. A suggestion has already been made that there should be a meeting in the House of Commons which should be addressed by both of us. I do want you to be present at these gatherings, unless adverse circumstances prevent it. I would not think of addressing these gatherings without you. I know full well the value of your presence as also of your speech. The interview with Lord Elgin is not likely to come off before the week after next, that is to say, not for the next 8 or 9 days. I have just returned from a visit to Sir Muncherji and Sir George Birdwood. The latter paid a friendly call at the Hotel and enquired about you. I am only sorry that you are not with me during these visits; you would have seen a great deal of the public men here, and obtained an insight into the working of British institutions. However, I believe sufficiently in predestination, and I, therefore, take comfort in the thought that even in your absence from these meetings there may be some good lurking. It may be that, when you suddenly appear to address a gathering, you would lend a charm to it which would not have been possible if you had seen the members individually, but whenever there is a public function, even though it may be inconvenient, you shall always attend. There are likely to be two such gatherings. Mr. Polak is trying to have a gathering by an educational society. I beseech you to keep yourself religiously away from cigars. Certainly, have as much as you like of the hubble-bubble. Follow Dr. Oldfield’s instructions implicitly. I am certain that no other doctor could restore you to health with the same amount of despatch as Dr. Oldfield. I feel, therefore, that you are in the safest hands. I sent you a budget of letters today, and a copy of Indian Opinion, South Africa has certainly given the very best interview possible, and you will see how the Editor has veered round to a moderate expression in his editorial columns. You might not have seen his violent articles 3 or 4 weeks ago. The editorial this morning was, therefore, quite refreshing reading. Please command me if you want anything more, and do not hesitate to send any suggestions you wish to send.

1 Vide “Letter to G. J. Adam”, 26-10-1906 and the following item.

I did not ring off this morning after you told me you were well.

It was the silly girl at the exchange who did it. I then tried to have the connection restored, but failed, and then gave it up, because I wanted to be ready to meet Reuter’s agent. I had a long chat with him at the Hotel. He saw immediately that the Ordinance was practically useless and tyrannical. These are, of course, mere words, but who knows, they may do good in the end.

October 27, 1906

MY DEAR OLDFIELD,

I told you that I wanted to write to you about my sorrows.¹ I think I mentioned that, when I was in Bombay, I had lost my sense of smell; as the doctor put it, I am supposed to be suffering from chronic ozæna. I have chronic catarrh. Of course, I do not know whether you have made a speciality of throat diseases. If not, and you think it is worth while, you can put me on to a specialist again. I think it was when I was carrying on a fruit-and-nut diet experiment that I damaged my teeth. I believed that I had permanently damaged two molars and I thought that I was going to lose one of them on board. I certainly tried hard to pull one out but I did not succeed. Would you see them or do you want me to go to a dentist? If so, please give me a reliable name.

Friends though we are, if you are going to attend to either of the two complaints, you must do so professionally if only because whatever you receive, I know, goes to a humanitarian purpose.

If you will see me professionally, kindly give me an appointment, but you may name more than one time, so that I can make my selection. I have to interview so many people that it is not possible for me to make definite appointments. Mr. Ally telephoned

DEAR MR. MUKERJI,

I forgot to tell you one thing, and I thought of it only as I was looking through The Times for Indian Opinion. I see that there is always enough matter in The Times to be sent for Indian Opinion. Although you may send your correspondence on Friday nights, I think you should send from The Times the latest news and Parliamentary reports on Saturdays and post them, if necessary, up to the last moment at the General Post Office. That is the only way, I think, you will be able to make your correspondence effective and up to date. While Parliament is sitting, I now notice that you can send a great deal from The Times on the Indian and cognate questions, as for instance, the Natives, the Chinese, etc. The Times evidently gives a very full report. You are then in advance of India, and you keep up with the South African papers, which, as I have told you, are thoroughly up to date. I reduce this suggestion to writing now lest I may forget it.

I ventured to call on Your Lordship yesterday, without appointment, with a view to paying my respects and placing before Your Lordship the position of British Indians in the Transvaal. Together with Mr. Hajee Ojer Ally, I have arrived from the Transvaal as a Deputation appointed to wait on Lord Elgin and Mr. Morley in connection with the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance recently passed by the Transvaal Legislative Council. Sir Charles Dilke¹, Mr. Naoroji, Sir Muncherji, Sir George Birdwood, Sir Henry Cotton, Mr. Ameer Ali, and a few other gentlemen who have taken an interest in British Indian matters in the Transvaal have kindly consented to introduce the Deputation to Lord Elgin and thus extend to our mission the weight of their influence. An appointment will probably be given by Lord Elgin for next week. May I know whether you will be pleased to join the introducing deputation. In any case, both Mr. Ally and I will be greatly obliged if Your Lordship will allow us the opportunity of placing before you the position of British Indians in

October 30, 1906

TO
THE RIGHT HON’BLE THE EARL OF ELGIN
HIS MAJESTY’S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES
LONDON

MY LORD,

I enclose herewith copy of a Petition from the British Indian Association of the Transvaal regarding the Vrededorp Stands Ordinance of 1906 passed by the Legislative Council of the Transvaal. I understand from the Acting Honorary Secretary of the British Indian Association of the Transvaal that the Petition was forwarded through Lord Selborne to you the same week that a copy was sent to me, and that a cablegram too was sent through the Governor by the British Indian Association requesting that the Ordinance might not be sanctioned until the Petition was in your hands.

I venture to think that the Association has a very strong and just case. It is quite plain that this Ordinance, if sanctioned, will prevent British Indians even from holding leases of landed property, which they have hitherto been allowed to hold under Law 3 of 1885. Thus then, on the eve of the Colony receiving Responsible Government, it would appear that the present Ordinance, instead of at least maintaining the status quo, will render the position of British Indians worse in respect of holding land, as it has been in other respects, than before the war. I trust, therefore, that you will see your way to advise His Majesty to disallow the Ordinance.

In view of the arrival of the British Indian Deputation from the Transvaal and their mission, coupled with the fact of the passing of the Ordinance which is the subject matter of this communication, I think

Mr. Ally and I trust that you will be kind enough to make it convenient to attend at the Colonial Office at 2.30 p.m. on Thursday the 8th November so that there may be a short conference between the members of the introducing deputation. Sir Lepel Griffin has now consented to head the deputation and to introduce Mr. Ally and me.

I hope shortly to be able to let you have a copy of the Representation to be submitted to Lord Elgin previous to the reception of the deputation, which will form the basis for the deputation to work upon.

I remain,
Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

407. REPRESENTATION TO LORD ELGIN²

[Hotel Cecil, London.]

October 31, 1906

TO

The Right Hon’ble The Earl of Elgin
His Majesty’s Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies
Colonial Office
London

MY LORD,

APPOINTMENT OF DELEGATES

1. We, the undersigned, have been appointed by the British Indian Association of the Transvaal to lay before you the views of the Indian community of the Transvaal regarding the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance of the Transvaal Legislative Council published in the Transvaal Government Gazette dated the 28th day of September, 1906. At a mass meeting of British Indians, numbering nearly 3,000 British Indian residents of the Transvaal, held at the old

The Collected Works of Mahatma Gandhi
Empire Theatre in Johannesburg on the 11th day of September, 1906, it was among other things resolved to send a Deputation to attend on Your Lordship. The selection of the delegates was left to the Committee of the Association and, as said before, we were selected by the Committee.

WHO ARE THE DELEGATES?

2. The first undersigned is the Honorary Secretary of the Association, was one of the organizers of the Natal Indian Volunteer Ambulance Corps formed at the time of the Boer War, and was the organizer and in charge of the Indian Stretcher-Bearer Corps formed under the auspices of the Natal Indian Congress in connection with the recent Native rebellion of Natal. He is a Barrister of the Inner Temple and has since 1903 practised as a solicitor in Johannesburg.

3. The second undersigned is a merchant by profession, and besides being a member of the British Indian Association, is the founder and Chairman of the Hamidia Islamic Society of Johannesburg.

4. Both the undersigned are old settlers of South Africa; the first undersigned settled in South Africa in 1893 and is father of four children, all of whom are in South Africa. The second undersigned has settled in South Africa for the last twenty-three years and is the father of eleven children all born in South Africa.

INDIAN POPULATION OF THE TRANSVAAL

5. The present Indian population of the Transvaal is about 13,000 according to permit returns, and over 10,000 according to census returns, as against a white population of over 280,000. The Indians of the Transvaal are merchants, traders, their assistants, hawkers and domestic servants—the great majority being merchants or hawkers.

LAW 3 OF 1885

6. Law 3 [of] 1885 as amended in 1886 is applicable to Asiatics, including “coolies, Malays, Arabs, and Mahomedan subjects of the Turkish Empire”, and as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the Transvaal,

   (1) confines as to residence those who come under it to locations or streets set specially apart for them, for a breach of which provision there is no sanction provided in the law and which is therefore nugatory in effect,

   (2) deprives them of burgher rights,

   (3) deprives them of right of ownership of fixed property except in locations and streets before referred to,

Vide “Letter to Private Secretary to Lord Elgin”, 25-10-1906
(4) and requires those who may settle in the Transvaal for purposes of trade or otherwise to pay a fee of £3 and be registered within eight days of their arrival. (The Law as interpreted by the courts does not require re-registration of children of such settlers, their wives and those who are not traders.)

7. The above Law is not restrictive of immigration but it is meant to penalize traders to the extent of £3. During the Boer regime it formed the subject of representations by the British Government and was therefore never then strictly enforced. For its administration there was no separate department of the State, and registration merely consisted in passing to the payer a receipt for £3.

UNDER THE BRITISH REGIME

8. After the advent of British rule, contrary to promises and expectations, separate Asiatic Offices were established. The Peace Preservation Ordinance, which was admittedly a measure calculated to safeguard the State from dangerous characters, was misapplied to restrict Indian immigration, and under it permits were only granted to British Indians on the recommendation of the officers in charge. This practice gave rise to much abuse and corruption. These officers accepted bribes on a wholesale system, and Indian refugees who had a right to immediate return to the Transvaal had difficulty in doing so, and were often obliged to pay as much as £30. This was brought to the notice of the local Government more than once by the British Indian Association, with the result ultimately that two officials were criminally tried, and although the jury discharged them for want of evidence, they were dismissed from Government service. The Asiatic Offices were then abolished and the granting of permits was transferred, as it should have been, to the Chief Secretary for Permits.¹ Though under this regime permits to British Indians were granted only sparingly and after a great deal of delay and searching examination, there was no corruption. In the meanwhile an official was appointed under the designation of Protector of Asiatics in the Colonial Department.

INDIANS REGISTERED

9. While the Permit Department was under the Chief Secretary for Permits, Lord Milner thought fit to enforce Law 3 of 1885 rigorously, and appointed the Permit Secretary to be Registrar of Asiatics. The British Indian Association respectfully protested against the step,² but although it was not obligatory on the British Indians who had paid £3 to the Boer Government to re-register, on the urgent

---

¹ Vide “Deputation to Lord Selborne”, 29-11-1905
² Vide “The British Indian Association and Lord Milner”, 11-6-1903 advice of Lord Milner they allowed themselves to be re-registered.
These certificates contain names of holders, their wives, number of children, the age of the holders, their distinctive marks and thumb-prints.

10. The following was the assurance given by Lord Milner at the time the advice was offered:

I think that registration is a protection to them. To that registration there is attached a £3 tax. It is only asked for once. Those who have paid it to the old Government have only to prove that they have done so and they have not to pay it again. Again, once on the register, their position is established and no further registration is necessary, nor is a fresh permit required. That registration gives you a right to be here and a right to come and go.

11. At the present day, save women and children, almost every Indian in the Transvaal is in possession of a permit bearing the holder’s name, place of birth, occupation, last address, his signature and as a rule thumb-impression and in most if not all cases, registration certificates above described. If, therefore, there are any Indians in the Transvaal who are without permits and do not fall within the exemption clauses of the Peace Preservation Ordinance, they are unauthorized residents and liable to be expelled under that Ordinance. Those who cannot produce permits have the burden thrown on them of proving that they come within the exemption clauses. If they do not obey expulsion orders, they are liable to suffer imprisonment. The Peace Preservation Ordinance moreover makes it a criminal offence to obtain a permit by fraudulent representations, or to abet one in so obtaining a permit, or to enter on a permit obtained by fraud.

PRESENT MACHINERY FOR DETECTION OF UNAUTHORIZED ENTRY COMPLETE

12. Thus the machinery for punishing unauthorized Indian residents in the Transvaal is complete and effective. And by its voluntary act above referred to, the Indian community has furnished the authorities with complete means of identification of a double character. Those Indians who have tried to enter on permits belonging to other Indians have been heavily punished. Many such cases are on record.

13. There would appear therefore to be no occasion for any further measure of law to prevent fraud, or impersonation, or unauthorized entry. Under the present permit regulations, according to the testimony given by an official,

¹ Vide “The British Indian Association and Lord Milner”, 11-6-1903 women, whether they accompany their husbands or not, [and]
(2) children of whatever age, even infants, whether in company of their parents or not, are required to produce permits. Cases have happened where tender children five years old have been torn away from their parents, and wives from their husbands, although the fathers or the husbands accompanying the children or wives have produced permits.

14. Old residents of the Transvaal who have paid £3 as the price of their residence experience a delay of months before they receive their permits, and that after an investigation which is over-severe in character and carried on secretly, and by boards which sit at their leisure to conduct their examination.

NEW ORDINANCE

15. On the top of all these disabilities has come like a thunderbolt upon the Indian community the amending Ordinance. It sets up a humiliating system of passes to be carried by every Indian resident in the Transvaal. It establishes a system of identification which may vary from time to time. The Assistant Colonial Secretary informed a deputation of Indians that the imprints of all the digits should be required and passes containing such imprints should be produced by the holders to every police official who may wish to challenge the Indians. The permits and registration certificates, obtained after a great deal of trouble, are to be surrendered in exchange for the new certificates. We may state that, in order to carry out the above registration, people were dragged from their rooms in the early morning and subjected to much hard treatment.

ITS REAL NATURE

16. The Ordinance in fact is not one for registration but for identification, of a type applied to the worst criminals. So far as we are aware such a law is unknown in any of the British Colonies. It is hardly an amendment of the Law 3 of 1885, because its scope is admittedly totally different from that of the latter.

17. The amending law condemns every permit unless the holder of it can prove it to be not tainted with fraud. It leaves the children of parents, though the latter may be in possession of bona-fide permits, to the tender mercy of the officer in charge of its administration. It is class legislation of the worst type. While it is calculated to submit the Indians to intense irritation and humiliation, it gives absolutely nothing.

THE SO-CALLED RELIEF

18. For the remission of £3 fee is superfluous, as every adult male Indian and in many cases even children at present resident in the Transvaal have already paid it. According to the statement by the Transvaal Colonial Secretary, no Indians who are not pre-war residents of the Transvaal will be allowed to enter the Colony until the Responsible Government has considered the question of immigration. And as the present Indian residents have already paid the £3, and as the pre-war residents who have still to re-enter have also mostly paid the £3 to the Dutch Government, the remission of the £3 payment is no concession at all.

19. The authority for temporary permits is also not required as they have been granted at the discretion of the authorities under the Peace Preservation Ordinance.

20. The relief as to the supply of liquor is, so far as it may be applicable to Indians, a direct insult.

21. The relief to the heirs of those Indians who may have held fixed property before the date of Law 3 of 1885 is individual in character and is meant only to affect one small piece of land in the Transvaal.

22. The Ordinance therefore is in no way a relief or protection to the Indian community.

Comparison

23. We cannot lay too much stress on the fact that the amending Ordinance, while it leaves untouched all the disabilities of Law 3 of 1885, makes the position of British Indians much worse than under Law 3 of 1885, as will appear more clearly from the following comparison:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>UNDER LAW 3 OF 1885</th>
<th>UNDER NEW ORDINANCE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. Traders only were required to pay £3 and take out receipts.</td>
<td>All male Indians (they have already paid £3) are now to take out certificates of registration.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. No particulars of identification had to be furnished.</td>
<td>Most humiliating particulars of identification are to be furnished.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. Registration was not in restriction of immigration.</td>
<td>This registration is essentially for restricting immigration.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. Children of registered parents were not required to register.</td>
<td>Children of registered parents must all be registered:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(a) Children under eight years to be provisionally registered, and parents to furnish means of identification. (A baby eight days old will have to give ten digit prints and be carried to the registering officer.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
(b) Children over eight years must be separately registered, subject to the same requirement as to identification.

(c) If the children are not so registered after they attain the age of 16 years, they are liable to expulsion under severe penalty unless they get themselves registered.

(d) Any Asiatic without authority bringing into the Colony a child under 16 years is liable to a severe penalty and cancellation of his registration and to expulsion. (This probably applies to parents bringing their babies in arms and certainly to lawfully resident Asians bringing the baby of another resident Asiatic.)

(e) Any Asiatic employing (even ignorantly!) such a child is liable to like penalties.

(f) Failure on the part of parent or guardian to make application under (a) and (b) renders him liable to a fine of £100 or 3 months’ imprisonment.

5. Failure to register never carried with it expulsion. Failure to register carries with it expulsion although the Asiatic in question be in possession of permit and registration, and therefore doubly a lawful resident of the Transvaal, even according to the amending Ordinance. Thus by a stroke of the pen the present title to residence is to be rendered of no effect and value. In other words,
6. Malays were subject to registration under Law 3 of 1885. Malays are exempt from the operation of the new Ordinance.

7. Law 3 of 1885 was a law passed by an ignorant Government, and was under promise of total repeal by the British Government. The present Ordinance has been passed deliberately by an enlightened Government in possession of full knowledge of the history of India and its civilization.

8. Responsible Government could not use Law 3 of 1885 as a precedent for class legislation. Responsible Government would be perfectly justified in using this Ordinance as a precedent for class legislation.

9. Law 3 of 1885 was passed by a Government in respect of people not its own subjects. The present Ordinance has been passed by a Government belonging to the same Imperial fold as the Indians.

10. There could be no question of exemption as registration was not humiliating. The present Ordinance reduces Indians to a lower level than the Kaffirs:

(a) because Kaffirs who carry passes do not have to supply humiliating identification particulars contemplated by the Ordinance,

(b) Kaffirs having reached a certain status are exempted from liability to carry passes, whereas Indians, no matter what status they may enjoy or how well educated they may be, must be registered and carry passes.

REASONS FOR THE NEW ORDINANCE

24. We learn that the reasons for passing the Ordinance are that:

(a) the local Government wishes to stop the alleged large, unauthorized influx of Indians, against whom there is a great deal of prejudice on the part of the white residents of the Transvaal;

(b) the local Government believes that there is on the part of the Indian community an organized attempt to flood the country with British Indians without authority.

25. It is not denied that there are Indians who attempt to enter the Transvaal without authority. To meet such cases the present laws are, as shown above, amply sufficient. A large unauthorized influx has been repeatedly denied by the Indians, and never proved. The allegation as to an organized attempt by the community is a pure fabrication.

LOCAL PREJUDICE

26. The prejudice on the part of many white men, especially of the petty trading class, is admitted. We would at the same time respectfully state that the general body of white people are indifferent. The Indian trader and the hawker—the former relying on the support of wholesale European houses and the latter on the white households of all descriptions—would not be able to exist in the Transvaal but for such support. The petition presented on behalf of Indians by Mr. Hosken and other representatives of leading houses bears out this contention.

REMEDY FOR MEETING THE PREJUDICE

27. But recognizing the prejudice, the Indian community has all along accepted the principle of restriction of immigration along the Cape or Natal line, subject to permission to import assistants and servants, and since it is the traders who arouse hostility and jealousy, the community has also accepted the principle of control and regulation of new trade licences by municipal bodies, their decisions being subject in gross cases to review by the Supreme Court. These two enactments, if adopted, would dispel all fear of an inordinate influx of Asians, or their competition in trade. But any such legislation should, by repealing Law 3 of 1885, restore to the resident Indian population the right of ownership of fixed property and freedom of movement and locomotion.

28. Legislation of the above-mentioned type, being applicable to all, would obviate gross abuse of authority, which experience has shown always takes place wherever there is class legislation specially applicable to weaker races. It will moreover continue the policy laid down by Mr. Chamberlain at the Conference of the Colonial Premiers and since re-affirmed by him in practice. It was that policy which dictated a veto of the first Disfranchising Bill of the Natal Legislative Assembly and the Immigration Restriction Draft Bill specially

2 Vide”A brief Chronicle of South Africa”; &.”Speech at Publim Meeting, Bombay”, 26-9-1896
3 ibid
applied to Asiatics and submitted by the late Mr. Harry Escombe'. Such non-class legislation can be effectively passed now. It will then place before the incoming Responsible Government the Imperial idea of restrictive legislation and throw on it the burden of showing the necessity for any further restrictions.

29. If, however, such a step be not practicable at present, the whole question should, in the humble opinion of the Deputation, be left over until the newly formed Transvaal legislature under the new constitution has met.

A COMMISSION AS AN ALTERNATIVE

30. In the meanwhile, the least that is due to the Indian community is the appointment of a strong and impartial commission to investigate the allegations as to the unauthorized entry of British Indians into the Transvaal, and to report upon the administration of the Peace Preservation Ordinance as affecting British Indians, and also to report upon the adequacy or otherwise of the present laws to meet unlawful entry of Indians, and generally upon the legislation affecting British Indians. If those who have been making the allegations are sincere, the deliberations of the commission need not take a long time.

BRITISH INDIANS AS APART FROM OTHER ASIATICS

31. The Deputation has been specially directed to secure an insistence on the consideration of the question affecting British Indians as such, instead of their being mixed up with non-British Asiatics. Special promises have been made to British Indians, both in India and outside it, even in connection with the Transvaal laws. It may not be considered too much on the part of the Indians to ask for a proper fulfilment of such promises.

32. Above all, the integrity of the community is at stake. The amending Ordinance is a punitive measure. It has been brought in to meet the alleged organized attempt of the community to introduce into the Transvaal unauthorized Indians. If His Majesty’s Government sanctions such a measure, it will be party to a wholesale condemnation of the Indian community, without any proof whatsoever having been

MY DEAR GEORGE,

Here is your Representation1. I believe it will be most effective. I have been thinking over the printing expenses; I think it will be more hallowed if the signatories bore the expenses. I have to render to the Association an account of every penny that is spent, and I hate the idea of even thinking that such a personal appeal has to be paid for. It takes away so much from the reality of the thing. The cost will be trifling. I can bear it myself; Mr. Ally has offered to bear it; but none of these things will meet the case. You must—five or six of you—divide it amongst you. You will understand the thing: it is the principle I want to inculcate here: it is a matter of very little moment, but you ought to be able to face anybody and say you have borne the expense, because you have felt. The Representation as drawn up by me will not cost more than £2, if that.

There should be no time lost in sending this out. I would like you and the others who will join with you to [go to] the House of Commons yourselves and make a personal canvass in our interests and a personal appeal in distributing the pamphlets, and similarly to go to the different Editors. If they do not receive you it does not matter: they cannot do the cause any harm, and if they do receive you,

May I ask you to lunch with me tomorrow, if you are free, when we may have a further chat about the question that has brought the Deputation here. I still feel that a great deal can be done by a quiet chat, because there is much misunderstanding as to the Indian position. If you can kindly come, please telephone or wire.

In the meantime I can only tell you that I am working under greater pressure than in Johannesburg. I went to bed last night at 3.30 in the morning.

The Chinese Deputation is being pushed. I am in touch with them. I have forwarded a Representation1 to be sent in by the Chinese Minister.

As to your coming here every day and returning in the afternoon, we will discuss that when we meet.

I chanced to meet Sir Richard Solomon2 at the House of Commons tonight and had a brief chat with him. He was very nice about the whole thing. He enquired about you.

Sir Muncherji is strongly of the opinion that there should be a permanent committee.3 I have, therefore, in order that it may be established while we are here, cabled today for sanction.4

415. DRAFT FOR CHINESE AMBASSADOR

[After October 31, 1906]

FROM HIS EXCELLENCY THE ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY OF HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR OF CHINA
LONDON
HIS EXCELLENCY SIR EDWARD GREY HIS BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS
SIR.

I beg to forward herewith a true translation of a Petition received by me from the free Chinese subjects resident in the Transvaal in connection with their grievances in that Colony, and particularly with reference to an Ordinance called “The Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance” numbered 29 and passed by the Legislative Council of that Colony. I granted audience to Mr. L. M. James, the delegate who has been specially deputed by the Chinese subjects aforementioned to present in person the Petition above referred to, and to place before me their case.

It appears to me that, if the statements made in the Petition are correct, and from investigation made by me and from what I have learnt through the Chinese Consul-General for South Africa I have no doubt as to the truth of these statements, the Chinese subjects have a very real grievance.

I am aware that the objectionable features referred to in paragraph 7 of the Petition do not appear in the Ordinance itself, but I am informed that it is the intention of the Transvaal Government to

1 This representation was drafted by Gandhiji; vide “Letter to Yuk Lin Lew” 26-10-1906 and “Letter to H. O. Ally”, 31-10-1906 pass regulations requiring finger-impressions and other particulars of identification, which the Petitioners would properly resent. Apart, however, from any such regulations the Ordinance in question undoubtedly appears to be open to very serious objections, and exposes Chinese subjects to unnecessary hardships, inconvenience and degradation.

I invite your attention to the fact that the most amicable relations exist between His Majesty King Edward VII and the Emperor of China, and that British subjects are entitled to the most-favoured-nation treatment throughout the Chinese Empire. I therefore trust that Your Excellency will deem it fit to secure for the Chinese subjects in the Transvaal proper treatment to which I apprehend, as subjects of an independent nation in alliance with Great Britain, they are entitled.

I have the honour to remain,
Your Excellency's obedient servant.

416. INTERVIEW TO “SOUTH AFRICA”

[LONDON, November 1, 1906]

In conversation with a representative of South Africa, Mr. Advocate Gandhi... stated that the Natal Indian Congress had passed a resolution sympathizing with the objects of the Deputation, similar to the one recently adopted by the British Indians at the Cape.

[GANDHI:] While on the subject of Natal, I may mention that I have received a cablegram asking me to place before the authorities here the questions arising out of the Bill to be introduced in the Natal legislature by Mr. Ralph Tatham.

[REPORTER:] What are the main objections to that measure from the Indian point of view?

[GANDHI:] Well, the net result of that Bill, supposing it becomes law—which I cannot for a moment conceive—will be to deprive hundreds of Indian traders of their means of livelihood. It will mean the sweeping away of vested rights by a stroke of the pen. In Durban there are only about 250 Indian voters out of a List of 7,000, and in

1 Published in South Africa, 3-11-1906 and republished in Indian Opinion, 15-12-1906
Maritzburg, about 31 out of nearly 3,000, and all those Indian voters are not by any means merchant traders. Some of them are professional men, and at present many of them are not in Natal at all, so that the Bill, if passed into law, will make a clean sweep of the Indian traders both in Durban and Maritzburg. Moreover, the Voters’ Roll, so far as Indians are concerned, is now a closed book for any future Indians because of the Franchise Act, which prevents all those who do not come from countries possessing Parliamentary institutions being placed on the Roll.

But the matter of licences is in the hands of the licensing authorities at present?

Yes, that is so, and it makes the reason for bringing in such a Bill as this all the more inconceivable to me. The present Dealers’ Licenses Act of Natal leaves [it] at the discretion of the licensing officers either to grant licenses or to refuse them.

And that discretion, I presume, is used fairly?

On the contrary, the licensing officers have exercised that discretion sometimes in a most high-handed manner, without any relief being obtainable from the Supreme Court.

Can you mention a specific instance, Mr. Gandhi?

Certainly I can. In Vryheid the only Indian merchant, Dada Osman, was deprived of his licence to trade, although he was trading on his own ground, and had been doing so for a long time during the Boer regime.¹ Had Vryheid remained part of the Transvaal, Mr. Dada Osman would have been trading to-day; but as Vryheid has been taken over by Natal, subject to the anti-Asiatic laws of the Transvaal, there are two sets of laws in operation there against Indians, of which the Natal law is the more drastic, so far as the licensing of Indian traders is concerned.

How does that affect Mr. Osman?

The result is that, in virtue of the Transvaal law, he cannot hold landed property in Vryheid; whilst in virtue of the Natal law, he is at the mercy of the licensing officer for his trade. He has therefore been obliged to quit the district altogether.

Is not that an isolated case, resulting from the particular circumstances at Vryheid?

Not so. The licensing officer in Durban refused to transfer the license of a well-known Indian silk merchant from one place of business to another, although the merchant referred to has been in business for a very long time, and his store was in no way in competition with European trade. It seems to me in fact, that Mr. Tatham’s Bill is quite uncalled for, and is really an attempt to drive the Indians out of Natal altogether.

But you know there is a strong prejudice growing against the Indian community in Natal?

I fail to see why there should be any such feeling. Natal has incurred a threefold obligation in favour of Indians. One is that it owes its prosperity to the existence of indentured Indian labour; the second is that it was the Natal Indians who raised an Ambulance Corps of over 1,000 Indians at the time of the Boer War, whose work was specially mentioned in General Buller’s despatches, and the third is that, during the recent native rebellion, the Indians, recognizing their duty as citizens, irrespective altogether of their political opinions, offered the Government services of an Indian Stretcher-bearer Corps, whose work was highly appreciated by Sir Henry McCallum.

Reverting for a moment to the question of the Transvaal Ordinance, our representative pointed out to Mr. Gandhi that the enactment contained no provisions necessitating the identification of Indians by means of digital impressions.

That is so. But Mr. Lionel Curtis, who was then Assistant Colonial Secretary for Urban Affairs in the Transvaal, told a British Indian deputation about three months ago that it was the Government’s intention to establish a system of identification under which all Indians would be required to put down on their passes the impressions of their ten fingers, a provision which the Deputation naturally very strongly protest against.

But there is no such provision in the Ordinance?

No; but the Ordinance provides that the Lieutenant-Governor may from time to time make regulations under it, prescribing, amongst other things, the means of identification to be furnished by Indians. It is also laid down in the Ordinance that police officers shall have the right not only to demand from all Asiatics over the age of 16 years production of their passes, but to insist on their furnishing such means of identification as may be prescribed by the regulations, which, according to Mr. Curtis’s declaration, means finger-impressions. Such a system is not in force, so far as I am aware, in any part of the world, at any rate with regard to British Indians. It does not apply even to the indentured Indians in Natal.

HOTEL CECIL,

LONDON,

November 1, 1906

DEAR SIR,

Mr. Ally and I have arrived from South Africa as a Deputation on behalf of the British Indians of the Transvaal to wait upon Lord Elgin, and later on Mr. Morley, in connection with the recently passed Asiatic Ordinance of the Legislative Council of the Transvaal. Mr. Ally and I have been endeavouring to induce gentlemen who have sympathized with the British Indians in South Africa and who have at all studied the question to lead us. The gentlemen as per list1 enclosed have already consented to join the Deputation, and Sir Lepel Griffin has been asked and has consented, to head-it. Mr. Ally and I shall be very much obliged if you could see your way, as you have often spoken in the House on the British Indian question in South Africa, to also lend the Deputation the weight of your influence by your presence. In any case we shall be obliged if you will favour us with an interview so that we may place the position before you. The date fixed by Lord Elgin to receive the Deputation is Thursday the 8th instant at 3 p.m. at the Colonial Office.

On behalf of Mr. Ally and myself,

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

November 1, 1906

DEAR SIR,

I thrice attempted to see you at the House, and sent my card, but I have not been fortunate enough to meet you. I enclose herewith a letter given to me by Sir William Wedderburn. Sir Henry Cotton has sent me a message that you have consented to join the deputation, for which both Mr. Ally and I are extremely obliged to you. If you could kindly give me an appointment, I shall wait upon you at the time given by you and place the position before you. Lord Elgin has fixed Thursday the 8th instant at 3 o’clock to receive the Deputation at the Colonial Office. Sir Lepel Griffin has been asked, and has consented, to head the deputation.

Both he and I are anxious to pay our respects to you and to place the position before you before the Deputation waits on Lord Elgin. If, therefore, you can give an appointment some time

HOTEL CECIL,
[London,]
November 2, 1906

DEAR MR. POLAK,

I send you by book-post 25 copies of the Representation, presented to Lord Elgin by us as the basis for discussion at the interview which comes off on the 8th. It is not to be printed, because most of the points raised therein will be found in the memorials presented there. You may deal with it generally if you like, though it will be stale by the time it reaches you. You may, however, let friends have copies.

I am sending you only a short note this mail. I have not the energy to give you more. It is now 10.45. I am sending you a few cuttings also.

I expect a reply to my cablegram¹ and hope you have encountered no difficulty in getting them to agree. Mr. Ally is with me completely. I have asked for only £300, and it is possible to manage with that amount with close attention to economy, but if more could be voted more work could be got through. Sir Muncherji is very enthusiastic.

Please ascertain from Miss Neufliess Miss Taylor’s address, and forward it to Mr. Bissicks. His address is 83, Commercial Road, Blackfriars, E.C.

444. JUVENILE SMOKING

We have drawn the attention of our readers more than once to the fact that the habit of smoking bidis or cigars is harmful.¹ Now we have yet another occasion to refer to it. A law has been enacted in the Victoria Province of Australia to check the evil habit; under this law none below sixteen may smoke. A shopkeeper found selling or giving a bidi to a boy below that age may be fined 20 shillings for the first offence and 40 shillings for the second; if he is caught a third time, his licence may be cancelled for five years. It is not for the first time in the history of the world that such strict measures have been adopted for the prevention of smoking. Such laws are in force in some civilized countries like Japan and Germany and, nearer home, the Cape Colony. A short time ago, a similar bill was introduced in Natal also. But the usefulness of a juvenile smoking bill is not recognized in a land where enthusiasm is misused for getting rich by ruining others and, if possible, driving them out. Tobacco does nothing but harm. It weakens body and mind. It is obvious that its harmful effect is felt all the more in youth. In certain places, religion forbids the use of tobacco, and it is true that many Indians do not smoke for that reason. But in some places the habit is so firmly rooted that we feel no hesitation in writing against it again and again.

445. REPRESENTATION TO LORD ELGIN

COMMON ROOM,
LINCOLN’S INN, W.C.
November 3, 1906

TO
THE RIGHT HON’BLE THE EARL OF ELGIN
HIS MAJESTY’S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES
LONDON

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR LORDSHIP,

We, the undersigned British Indians domiciled in South Africa, have read with a great deal of pain and anxiety the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance of the Transvaal, and we have naturally followed with great interest the movements of the British Indian Deputation that has arrived from the Transvaal.

We are all students from South Africa, four of us studying for the Bar, and one of us studying medicine, and while we cannot but sympathize with the struggles of our countrymen in the Transvaal for liberty, our chief anxiety is regarding ourselves and persons placed in a position similar to our own, and we venture respectfully to approach your Lordship to explain our position in the light of the new Ordinance.

We are all of us either born or brought up in South Africa, and to us South Africa is more our home than India. Even our mother tongue is English, our parents having brought us up to speak that language from our infancy. Three of us are Christians, one a Mahommmedan, and one a Hindoo.

According to the information received by us, and in accordance with the personal knowledge of the first undersigned, the effect of the Peace Preservation Ordinance of the Transvaal, the declaration made by Lord Selborne to the White Leagues of the Transvaal, and the present Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance which has brought the Indian Deputation to wait on your Lordship (with the exception of the first undersigned, who has lived in the Transvaal and who was practising as a sworn Translator and Interpreter in the English and

1 This is the final form of the representation which Gandhiji drafted. Vide footnote to “Letter to G. Godfrey’s, 31-10-1906 and “Circular Letter”, 2-11-1906 The representation was reproduced in Indian Opinion, 8-12 1906.

484 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Hindustani languages of the Honourable the Supreme Court of the Transvaal, and who came into very close contact with the Asiatic Department), all of us would be unable to proceed to the Transvaal because we are not pre-war residents of the Transvaal. The net result of this disability would be that, although the certificates we would receive on our being called to the Bar, or on our receiving the Medical Diploma, which [sic] would entitle us to carry on our professions in any part of the British Dominions on the production of those certificates and of evidence of good character, our diplomas or certificates would be valueless, so far as the Transvaal is concerned. We would moreover on the one hand be able, although being without the Transvaal border, on application to receive from the Court or from the Medical Society a license to carry on our profession, but we would be debarred from making use thereof by reason of the want of a permit to enter the Transvaal.

Most of us, and many others born in South Africa and elsewhere, and equally well educated, would be required to submit to registration, and to produce a permit to any policeman who may demand to see it and to be marched off to the police station, or to the Criminal Investigation Department office to furnish means of identification in order to show that we are lawful possessors of those passes. We would also, we apprehend, be liable to be called upon to furnish means of identification at the time of taking out the passes in question, and be called upon to give the imprints of our ten digits and any other particulars that may be required under regulations to be framed by the Lieutenant Governor.

Having lived in England, and having breathed its free atmosphere, and having received every consideration from Englishmen in this country, your Lordship will easily appreciate the anxiety the prospect of the above Ordinance engenders. We are here being nurtured in the teachings of Bentham, Austin, and other English writers whose names are a watchword for liberty and independence, and we could hardly believe that anything of the kind referred to above would possibly be applicable to us. We would not have troubled your Lordship with this representation if it was a matter affecting and ending only with ourselves, but we are aware that the desire on the part of the Indians to give a good education to their children is daily growing. There are to-day Indians in South Africa occupying a status similar to our own. We therefore think, it is but right that we should bring to the notice of your Lordship and, through this humble representation, to the attention of every public man in the Empire the intensity of the feeling aroused by the present status of British Indians.
in the Transvaal. We therefore humbly pray and hope that your Lordship will be able to grant us, and those similarly placed as we are, the protection that we venture to believe we are entitled to.

We beg to remain,

Your Lordship’s humble and obedient servants,

449. LETTER TO A. CARTWRIGHT

[Hotel Cecil,

November 3, 1906

DEAR SIR,

A Mrs. Reide called on me today. She seemed to be very ill. I was unable to follow all she said, and as she appeared very nervous I did not put any questions to her. She gave me your name, and showed me some paper also bearing your name. I believe she needs some assistance. If you know of her case, or if you have interested yourself in her case, I shall thank you to let me know something about it.

I am much obliged to you for your letter regarding the Indian Deputation from the Transvaal. If you cannot possibly come, I venture to hope that you will be good enough to send on Wednesday a letter of sympathy which could be read to Lord Elgin.

From a photostat of the typewritten office copy: S. N. 4478
As I promised in my last despatch, I now write about Mr. Shyamji Krishnavarma and India House. Mr. Shyamji Krishnavarma is a barrister from Bombay, and a son-in-law of Mr. Chhabildas Bhansali. As his knowledge of Sanskrit was of a very high order, the late Prof. Monier Williams took him to Oxford where, because of his ability, he was made a professor and earned a lot of money.

Meanwhile he studied law and was called to the bar, took a degree at Oxford and studied Greek, Latin and other languages. When he returned to India, he took with him £2,000 which he had saved—a thing which, it is said, no other Indian had done before. In India he served as Dewan in Ajmer and other States. Later, his ideas changed and he decided to spend his earnings for the benefit of the country. With this end in view he came to England and settled here. He lives on the land which he has purchased. Though he can afford to live in comfort, he lives in poverty. He dresses simply and lives like an ascetic. His mission is service to his country. The idea underlying his service is that there should be complete swaraj for India and that the British should quit the country, handing over power to Indians. If they do not do so, the Indians should refuse them all help so that they become unable to carry on the administration and are forced to leave. He holds that unless this is done the people of India will never be happy. Everything else will follow swaraj.

In order to seek support for these views and win people over to his faith, he has founded India House at his own cost. Any Indian student is allowed to stay there against a very small weekly payment. All Indians, whether Hindus, Muslims or others, can and do stay there. The expenses of some students are borne by Shyamji himself. There is full freedom for everyone in the matter of food and drink. Being

1 This and the previous instalment, “The Deputation's Voyage-IV”, 26-10-1906, appeared together in the same issue of Indian Opinion. As this was, however, written later and meant to be a separate despatch, it is here printed separately in its proper sequence.

2 Ajmer was British territory, not a Native State. Gandhi seems to have mistaken it for Udaipur where Krishnavarma was Dewan.
situated in fine surroundings, the place has a very good atmosphere. On the first day of our arrival, both Mr. Ally and I went to stay at India House, and we were very well looked after. But as our work requires our getting in touch with important people and as India House is rather remote, we have been obliged to come and live at this Hotel at great expense.

EXPENSES IN ENGLAND

I had believed a man could live here on £1 a day, but my estimate has proved wrong. Here a bed-sitting-room costs 12s 6d a day, with extra charge for a bath. These charges are for a single person. For reasons of health, Mr. Ally sleeps in Dr. Oldfield’s home. If one eats at the Hotel, a meal costs as much as 5s. We therefore eat at a vegetarian restaurant. We have a meal at the Hotel only when we ask an acquaintance over or invite an important person to lunch or dinner. Today, for instance, we had Mr. James, the Chinese delegate, and a Chinese lawyer. Mr. Ritch was also with us. The bill for a single meal came to £1.11s. At the vegetarian restaurant a meal hardly costs more than 1s 6d for a person. And as Mr. Godfrey or some other assistant is always with us, the cost for a meal comes to three to four shillings. As all the important persons live at distant places, we have to spend a great deal on transport. We go sometimes by train, sometimes by bus and often by cab. There is hardly time for walking. In spite of all this hurrying, we cannot see more than two persons a day. Often at the House of Commons we have to wait an hour before we can see a Member. However, we hope to be able to keep the expenses within the limits set by the Committee.

INSUFFICIENT TIME

We had intended to stay here for a month. But from experience I see that there would be work enough for us to do if we were to stay six months and that it would not all be fruitless. We find many people coming forward who sympathize with our cause and are ready to work for it.

INTERVIEW WITH LORD ELGIN

The meeting with Lord Elgin has been fixed for November 8, when Sir Lepel Griffin, Lord Stanley, Sir Muncherji Bhownaggree, Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, Sir Henry Cotton, Mr. Thornton, Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, Mr. Harold Cox, Sir George Birdwood and Sir Charles Dilke will join us. Sir Lepel Griffin will act as the leader. A petition setting out the facts in brief has been printed and sent today to Lord Elgin. As it consists mostly of the arguments we have been advancing there, I do not give its translation here.
PRESS COMMENTS

Interviews [with the Press] have been published in South Africa, The Morning Leader and The Tribune. South Africa, which used to be bitterly critical, has now written somewhat in our favour. Our letter to The Times has been published in substance. Notice has been taken of it in other papers also.

MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Efforts are being made to bring together some Members of the House of Commons so that they may hear us and pass a resolution expressing sympathy with our cause. In this matter we have received great assistance from Mr. Polak’s father and Mr. Ritch. I cannot say more just yet. Efforts are also being made to arrange an interview with Lord George Hamilton, former Secretary of State for India, which most likely will materialize. Whatever happens, I at any rate expect to return before January 1. Mr. Ally has sought an interview with the Turkish Ambassador. A reply is expected on Monday.

NEED FOR A PERMANENT COMMITTEE

Sir Muncherji has been working hard in our behalf. He and some others are of the opinion that, for a few years at least, it is necessary to have a standing committee here. Even if Lord Elgin rejects the Ordinance, it is certain that, when the Transvaal gets self-government, new laws will be enacted, and some vigilant work will have to be put in here. Unless there is a person who gives all his time to a single cause, it is difficult to carry on public work in this city. Many may express sympathy, but if work is to be got out of them, they must be supplied with prepared material. Only then can they do something, for they have many other matters to attend to. The expenses for a committee of this kind may come to at least £300 a year. It can be formed only if the Transvaal Indian community undertakes to find the money. It will need an office, for which more than £50 a year will be required. Mr. Ritch has now done his final examination and as long as he is here, he can do a lot for us. He should be given an allowance of at least £10 a month. He is a poor man. Otherwise, he is so good that he would work for us free of charge. Thus, £170 will be spent on the office and the Secretary. The furniture is expected to cost £30. The remaining £100 to be spent on house rent, conveyance, printing, dinners, etc., is a small amount. But I believe that, with this expenditure, much can be accomplished here. Such committees for big causes are to be found all over London. We find that a Committee of the Chinese League is already functioning here. As the committee can be formed only while we are here and as the work is urgent, a cablegram has been sent to South Africa. Natal and the Cape can both join in this. As there is not much to do for the Cape Indians just now and as their leaders have been passing through hard times, we have not suggested collection of any funds from the Cape. Many prominent Britishers have agreed to work on this committee, if it is formed.

BRAVE WOMEN

A vigorous movement is going on here for securing the franchise for women. When the Government showed willingness to grant special treatment in gaol to the brave daughter of the late Mr. Cobden, she replied, ‘No matter how I suffer, I shall seek no favour from you. I am in gaol for my own and my sisters’ rights, and I will live like a common prisoner till the franchise is granted.’ Such words have stirred up public feeling in their favour, and the papers which used to ridicule them before have stopped doing so. Every Indian in the Transvaal should take to heart the example of these brave women.

1. CIRCULAR FOR MEETING AT HOUSE OF COMMONS

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
November 5, 1906

DEAR SIR,

A meeting of the Liberal, Labour and Nationalist Members of this House will take place at 6 p.m. on Wednesday next, the 7th inst. in the Grand Committee Room, to hear the British Indian Deputation that has arrived from the Transvaal, in connection with the Ordinance passed by the Legislative Council of that Colony, termed the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, and to pass a resolution.

In the opinion of the Delegates, the Ordinance reduces the British Indian settlers of the Transvaal to a position much worse than they occupied under the Boer regime and even than that of the Kaffirs.

They contend that the Ordinance in question is in contravention of promises repeatedly made by British Ministers and in conflict with British traditions.

The undersigned trust that you will be good enough to attend the meeting.

1 The address at the top would suggest that the letter was from Dadabhai Naoroji, but this copy was found among Gandhiji’s papers. Gandhiji’s letter to him dated November 17 (vide “Letter to Dadabhai Naoroji”, 17-11-1906) shows that, during the Deputation’s stay in England, Mr. Naoroji sent all papers received from South Africa to Gandhiji who returned them offering comment and explanation and sometimes suggesting courses of action. It is thus very likely that Gandhiji drafted the letter because of his ready familiarity with the South African situation.

We are now sending your name to Lord Elgin as a member of the deputation. As you know, the deputation will meet Lord Elgin on Thursday next at 3 p.m. at the Colonial Office. All the members of the deputation have been requested to attend at the Colonial Office at 2.30 p.m., so that a short conference may be held. Sir Lepel Griffin will head the deputation. I beg to enclose herewith a list of the members forming the deputation, as also a copy of the Representation to Lord Elgin which will form the basis of submission to him on Thursday, and copy of the precis of the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance.

I hope you have received the Circular issued by several members of the House of Commons, convening a meeting of the Liberal, Nationalist, and Labour Members of Parliament. I venture to trust that you will find time to attend the meeting. If possible, Mr. Ally and I will take an opportunity of sending in a card to you at the House, so that we may be able to place the position before you more fully than we could at the conference on Thursday.

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DEFINITION: The term “Asiatic” shall mean any such person as is described in Article 1 of Law [3] of 1885.

The term “Asiatic” under Law 3 of 1885 includes the so-called coolies, Arabs, Malays, Mohammedan subjects of the Turkish Dominions.

This Ordinance however excepts the Malays from its operation.

Registration: Section 3 requires every lawfully resident Asiatic in the Transvaal to be registered, for which no charges shall be made, and in accordance with the section, an Asiatic lawfully resident is one who has received, or may receive, a permanent permit to enter and reside in the Transvaal, unless such permit is fraudulently obtained, or any Asiatic resident and actually in the Transvaal on the 31st day of May 1902.

SECTION 4: Requires every such Asiatic to make an application for registration, such application to be made in the case of children under 16 years of age by their parents or guardians.

SECTION 5: Lays down that, if the application for registration is refused, the applicant shall be directed to leave the Colony, under the process described in the section.

SECTION 6: Says that any Asiatic who is the guardian of any Asiatic child under the age of eight years shall upon making application for registration on his own behalf supply such particulars and furnish such means of identification in respect of such child as may be prescribed by regulation, and if such guardian is himself registered, the particulars aforesaid which he has supplied shall be provisionally noted on the Register, and such guardian shall within one year make application for registration on such child’s behalf at the office of the Resident Magistrate of the district in which he himself resides.

The section then proceeds to lay down the procedure for the separate registration of such child after he has attained the age of eight years.

This was prepared by Gandhiji to apprise sympathizers, particularly members of the introducing deputation, of the real scope and nature of the Ordinance.
SECTION 7: Deals further with the registration of children.

SECTION 8: Provides that any person who shall fail to make application for registration . . . either on his own behalf or as guardian shall be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding One Hundred Pounds, and in default of payment to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding three months.

SECTION 9: Provides that every Asiatic of the age of 16 years and upwards entering or residing in the Transvaal shall upon demand made upon him by any member of the Police Force lawfully established in this Colony, or any other person authorized thereto by the Colonial Secretary, produce the certificate of registration of which he is the lawful holder, and shall also on like demand supply such means of identification as may be prescribed by regulation.

In the case of children under 16 years, the guardians or parents have to produce a certificate and supply particulars of identification.

SECTION 10: Makes certificates of registration conclusive evidence as to the right of the lawful holder to remain in the Colony. (N.B. To-day every Asiatic in possession of his permit has such right by law.)

SECTION 11 & 12: Lay down the procedure for lost certificates.

SECTION 13: Provides that no Asiatic shall obtain a license to trade without production of certificate of registration.

SECTION 14: Makes the Registrar practically the arbiter as to the age of an Asiatic.

SECTION 15: Exempts declarations made for the purposes of the Ordinance from stamp duty.

SECTION 16: Imposes a fine of £500 or in default imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years, or both fine and imprisonment, for the following acts:

(1) Any fraudulent or false statement or incitement to make such statement in connection with registration.

(2) Forgery of registration certificate.

1 For the form of this certificate, vide appendix.
(3) Use of such certificate by a person not the lawful holder.
(4) Incitement to any person to use such certificate.

SECTION 17: Authorizes the issue of temporary permits, and authorizes the Lieutenant-Governor at his discretion to order that any Asiatic in possession of a temporary permit “shall not during the currency of such permit be deemed to be a Coloured person for the purpose of the provision of the Liquor Ordinance”.

SECTION 18: Gives the Lieutenant-Governor power to frame regulations under the Ordinance.

SECTION 19: Generally provides that any Asiatic failing to comply with any requirement of the Ordinance shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £100, or in default to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding three months.

The other Sections provide a heavy penalty for any Asiatic bringing without a permit a child under 16 years of age into the Colony, and among other things cancels [sic] such person’s permit and certificate of registration, and renders him liable to expulsion, and makes it lawful for the heirs of the late Aboo Baker Ahmed to hold a piece of land bought by the late Aboo Baker Ahmed before 1885, and left under his will to the heirs.1

DEAR SIR,

I thank you for your note. It will give Mr. Ally and me very great pleasure to have you for breakfast on Friday at 9 o’clock. I do not know whether the interview with Lord Elgin is open to the Members, but as many enquiries have been made I am asking his Private Secretary. However, will it not perhaps be as well for you to enquire at the Colonial Office? I have suggested this to Mr. Brown. I very much value your advice about the meeting being public. I entirely agree with you in thinking that we have everything to gain by all our movements being open to the public, so just, I feel, is our cause. If however the meeting is not public, I should be at the Hotel immediately after the interview and if it is not inconvenient to you, you may await me at the Hotel after this. I do not think the interview is likely to last beyond half past five. Would you care to attend the meeting of the Members of the House of Commons tomorrow at 6 p.m. in the Grand Committee Room² I think I sent you a copy of the Circular Letter¹ yesterday. I apologize for the incorrect spelling of your name in the Circular Letter.¹ You will readily excuse the mistake when I inform you that I received instructions from Mr. Scott at 8 p.m. on Monday, and that I had to have these Circular Letters printed and posted the same night. 23. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO LORD ELGIN

[Hotel Cecil, London,]
November 7, 1906

The Private Secretary to
The Right Hon’ble The Earl of Elgin
His Majesty’s Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies
Colonial Office
London

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 6th instant, with reference to my request for an interview with Lord Elgin on the position of British Indians in Natal. I have no desire to open the whole position, but if His Lordship would be graciously pleased to grant me an interview, I shall be able to show the inner working of the Natal legislation. I was privileged to come into very close contact with the late Sir John Robinson1 and the late Mr. Harry Escombe, who were the joint authors of the Immigration Restriction Act and the Dealers’ Licenses Act. These two, and especially the latter, are the cause of very great and constant irritation. Very serious injustice, in my humble opinion, has often been done in the administration of the Licenses Act.

I invite His Lordship’s attention to the fact that even after the Act was passed, there was a confidential despatch from Mr. Chamberlain to the Natal Ministry as to the operation of the Act. The despatch was partly published, and it stated that unless the municipal bodies exercised the arbitrary powers given to them in virtue of the Licenses Act in a reasonable manner, it might become necessary to amend the Act. I am aware that His Lordship’s intervention as to these Acts can only be diplomatic, and it is such intervention I would like to invoke. The object of the interview is to the best of my ability to place the position so before His Lordship as to enlist His Lordship’s active intervention so far as it may be consistent with the traditional policy of the Colonial Office. The new Bill introduced by Mr. Ralph Tatham in the Legislative Assembly makes it all the more imperative for me to approach His Lordship.

I regret exceedingly that the Authority referred to in my letter was not enclosed with it: it was an oversight, for which I beg to be excused. I have now sent it through Mr. Ritch, the Secretary to the Transvaal Deputation. As I have not kept a copy of the Authority, may I ask you to let me have one.

I have the honour to remain,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

M. K. GANDHI

26. MEETING AT HOUSE OF COMMONS

A meeting of more than a hundred Members of the House of Commons, drawn from the Liberal, Labour and Nationalist Parties, was addressed by Gandhiji and Mr. Ally in the Grand Committee Room of the House.

LONDON,
November 7, 1906]

...Mr. Gandhi said that in 1885 British Indians were described in documents

1 Several members spoke. Sir Henry Cotton, the Chairman of the meeting, said that, under this Ordinance, British Indians were placed under the surveillance of the police in a manner which could not be differentiated from the treatment given in England to prisoners who were released from jail. Mr. Ally appealed in the name of Christianity and humanity for the support of British Members of Parliament in freeing Indians from a degrading law. Sir Charles Dilke said that it was notorious that there was a great jealousy of Indians because they made such admirable shopkeepers and medical men. Mr. Joseph Walton, Mr. Harold Cox and Mr. Higham supported a proposal to sign a memorial to the Prime Minister regarding the status of British Indians in the Transvaal. Sir Henry Cotton summed up the feelings of the meeting by saying that the question had become one of Imperial importance and had thus been taken out of the realm of party politics. A resolution supporting the objectives of the Deputation was then unanimously adopted. which passed between the Republican Government and the British Government as ‘filthy vermin and persons without souls’. They were then under great disabilities; they could not hold landed property, except in Locations that might be set apart for them for sanitary purposes, and they were required to register themselves and pay a fee to the Transvaal Government. Lord Derby tried to mitigate their grievances, and Mr. Chamberlain afterwards wrote a strong despatch to the Boer Government about British Indians, whom he described as honourable men and an asset of great importance to the Transvaal. The result of this was that British Indians went about the country as free citizens, and there was absolutely no restriction upon their movements. Recently a new Ordinance had been passed and British Indian subjects were classed with Asiatics and were treated in a most degrading manner....

27. DRAFT PETITION TO LORD ELGIN

LONDON

[Before November 8, 1906]

TO

THE RIGHT HON’BLE THE EARL OF ELGIN

HIS MAJESTY’S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES

COLONIAL OFFICE

LONDON

THE PETITION OF THE UNDERSIGNED, RESIDING IN THE UNITED KINGDOM, REPRESENTING WHOLESALE HOUSES IN SOUTH AFRICA

HUMBLY SHEWETH

That your Petitioners are all London wholesale Shipping Firms and Merchants, having branches in, or in connection with, South Africa.

Most of your Petitioners have come into direct contact with British Indian Merchants in South Africa, including the Transvaal.

From their experience of British Indian Merchants in the Transvaal your Petitioners are in a position to state that the British Indian Merchants in the Transvaal are on the whole an honest and honourable body of men, and their connection with them has always been of a most satisfactory nature.

---

1 The petition was clearly drafted by Gandhiji. It was enclosed with the “Letter to S. Hollick”, of 8-11-1906.

In your Petitioners’ opinion their presence in the Transvaal is a distinct gain to the Transvaal community in general. At the very least their presence there tends to the distinct benefit of the Transvaal community by reducing the cost of living expenses to those who can least afford to pay the exorbitantly high prices and profits demanded by the European firms.

Your Petitioners have read the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, and in your Petitioners’ opinion the Ordinance will submit British Indians in the Transvaal to totally unnecessary indignity and hardship.

Your Petitioners desire to associate themselves entirely with the sentiments expressed in the Memorial submitted to His Excellency the Governor of the Transvaal by Mr. William Hosken and other notable European residents in the Transvaal in the month of April, 1903.¹

In your Petitioners’ humble opinion, while it is desirable that immigration of British Indians should be regulated in order to allay popular prejudice, they think that it should be along the Cape or Natal lines, and should not savour of class distinction.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that Your Lordship will be pleased to advise His Majesty to disallow the Ordinance above mentioned, or to grant such relief as will adequately protect the British Indians who have settled in the Transvaal.

And for this act of justice and mercy, your Petitioners shall ever pray, etc.

28. BRITISH INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL²

November 8, 1906

By the time this is in print Lord Elgin will have received what may be described as a very strong deputation representing all manner of opinion, and including well-known Members of Parliament and ¹ Vide “Letter to Lieutenant-Governor”, 1-5-1903, enclosure.

² This statement shows direct knowledge of happenings both in the Transvaal and England; it was moreover found among Gandhiji’s papers. These facts would suggest that the statement was drafted by him.
Anglo-Indians of great experience. It is remarkable how the Delegates from the Transvaal have received support and sympathy from all quarters. A most striking illustration perhaps was afforded by the meeting of the Liberal, Labour, and Nationalist Members of the House of Commons at the Grand Committee Room on Wednesday last under the chairmanship of Sir Henry Cotton, the Member for Nottingham East. The attendance was fully one hundred. The Members gave the Delegates a very sympathetic hearing, and many of them showed their active sympathy by making short speeches for or questioning the Delegates. A resolution supporting the objects of the Delegation was unanimously adopted. One of the Members even wanted to know why the Conservative Members had not been invited to the meeting. Sir Charles Dilke, who has consistently championed the cause of British Indians in South Africa, immediately interposed that it was an oversight and that this was a question in which they could certainly secure Conservative co-operation. They and the Liberal Parliament always joined the the Conservatives in securing redress for their Indian fellow-subjects in South Africa.

Mr. Scott, who was the organizer of the meeting, remarked that the only reason why the Circular Letter was confined to the Liberal, Labour, and Nationalist Members was that the Government that was being approached by the Delegates was a Liberal Government, and it was considered only right that the meeting should take the form it did. At the same time they would undoubtedly ask for and be willing to secure the co-operation of Conservative Members.

Sir Henry Cotton added that on the deputation were represented very staunch Conservatives.

These proceedings take the question out of party politics, and as Sir Charles Dilke has often said, it becomes a question of Imperial importance. These proceedings ought to strengthen the hands of Lord Elgin and encourage him to veto the Ordinance, or at least to appoint a commission on which the Delegates lay so much stress.

The Representation submitted to Lord Elgin exhaustively deals with the facts of the case, and shows clearly how unnecessary the legislation is, and how much harder it is than Law 3 of 1885. It is undoubtedly not an amendment, but a new law, making class distinctions of a very offensive nature. The prayer of the Delegates is very reasonable. They ask Lord Elgin to sanction legislation along the Cape or Natal line[s], leaving it open to British Indian settlers to import assistants and such other men as may be required for attention to their businesses. If such legislation be passed it would remove all fear of an unrestricted Asiatic influx. There would then be no necessity for the espionage contemplated by the Ordinance.

1 Vide “Circular for Meeting at House of Commons”, 5-11-1906.

That the lot of the British Indians is hard enough without any such legislation is shown by a recent prosecution of an Asiatic child under eleven years of age for entering the Colony of the Transvaal in the company of his father. We cannot do better than quote the words of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Transvaal who quashed the conviction of the child:

The conviction is wholly bad. Here is a child of between ten and eleven years of age, charged not with an ordinary Common-Law offence, but with the offence of entering the Transvaal by means of a permit improperly obtained. It does appear—at any rate, there is evidence on the record to show—that the thumb-mark of this infant was pressed on a permit belonging to someone else. But this child was not doli capax at all. The child was put into the box, and said he did not know what a permit was, and had never seen one; and I dare say he was speaking the truth. There can be no doubt that the conviction cannot be sustained for one moment.

The administrative order, of course, still remains. The Magistrate has seriously ordered this infant to leave the Transvaal at the expiration of the term of imprisonment, or upon a certain date, whichever happens sooner. If the child does not go away—and I do not suppose he can go away unless someone takes him—he will then, possibly, be brought up before the Magistrate as a criminal. But I trust that course will not be taken by the authorities. I cannot understand why this case was taken up at all. It is a very important matter. This child is an Indian; but the same would apply to any white child (not one of the exempted classes under the Ordinance) entering the Transvaal; and if it applies to a child of eleven, why not to a child in arms! Surely it was never intended that such an administrative order should be made, in circumstances of this kind. This legislation is sufficiently open to criticism without that. If there is anything which can bring the administration of such a law into ridicule and contempt it is administration conducted on the lines of this case. I trust we shall hear nothing more about the administrative order.

1 Mahomed Hafeji Moosa; Vide “Transvaal Permit Ordinance”, 29-9-1906.

We had only the other day an example of what The Rand Daily Mail described as “War on Women”. In the above case, we have an instance of what Indian Opinion describes to be “War on Infants”. Cases such as these call for prompt amelioration, and not for greater severity. The doctrine of relying on men on the spot will be carried to ridiculous extremes if Lord Elgin does not heed the representations made to him on behalf of British Indians in the Transvaal.

Very strong support is given to the delegation by a personal appeal of five British Indians addressed to Lord Elgin in connection with the Ordinance. They are all students from South Africa studying for the Bar or for Medicine, born or brought up in South Africa, and in their words, “South Africa is more our home than India. Even our mother tongue is English, our parents having brought us up to speak that language from our infancy. Three of us are Christians, one a Mahomedan, and one a Hindoo.” Are these men, after they have become barristers or doctors, on their return to South Africa, to be debarred from entering the Transvaal, or are they to carry “tickets of leave” as Sir Henry Cotton described the passes to be issued under the new Ordinance? If such legislation is to be the vogue in the Colonies, it would be a mercy not to allow the British Indians to receive a liberal education in England at all, because a memory of the good times passed by them in England would only enhance the sting of humiliation to be undergone by them in Colonies which are British only in name and un-British in conduct.

30. MEMORIAL TO LORD ELGIN

[LONDON,
November 8, 1906]²

MY LORD,

Mr. Ally, my colleague, and I have to tender our respectful thanks to Your Lordship for receiving this Deputation. The task before Mr. Ally and myself is, I know, exceedingly delicate and difficult, supported though we are by friends who have always helped us in our troubles, and representing different schools of politics, and who have come to give us the weight of their influence at considerable trouble to themselves, especially on a day like this.

Your Lordship is aware that there was a great Indian Mass Meeting held at which resolutions were adopted. The text of these resolutions was cabled to Your Lordship³ and in reply Your Lordship was pleased to send a cablegram informing the British Indian Association that Your Lordship had approved of the draft Ordinance in

² This was presented when the Deputation met Lord Elgin on November 8, 1906.

³ The only cable available on the subject does not contain the text of the resolutions but only requests the withholding of Imperial sanction to the Ordinance. Vide “Cable to Secretary of State for Colonies”, 8-9-1906 and “Cable to Viceroy of India”, 8-9-1906.

⁴ For a summary, vide “The Transvaal Ordinance”, 29-9-1906. that it gave some measure of relief to British Indians. We, who are on the spot and to whom the Ordinance applies, think, with the greatest defence, that, instead of granting relief, it imposes on British Indians in the Transvaal hardships to which, so far as I am aware, there is no parallel in Colonial legislation. The Ordinance assumes that every Indian is capable of passing his permit to someone else so that he may unlawfully enter the Colony. It, therefore, violates the time-honoured maxim that every one is to be presumed to be innocent until he is found to be guilty. This Ordinance condemns every Indian as guilty and leaves no room for him even to show that he is innocent. It has been called an amendment of Law 3 of 1885. With the greatest respect
I submit that it is no amendment whatsoever of the Law, but that it is a totally new Ordinance accentuating colour prejudice in the most offensive manner. The system of passes that the Ordinance introduces is unknown, so far as British Indians are concerned, in any other part of the British Dominions, and it undoubtedly reduces Indians to a level lower than that of the Kaffirs. The reason for such legislation is said to be that there is a large unauthorized influx of British Indians and that the British Indian community or the British Indian Association are making an attempt to introduce without authority a large number of Indians into the Colony; in other words, that the community is engaged in a criminal breach of the Peace Preservation Ordinance, and that it is in order to prevent such an attempt that the Ordinance has been passed. It is, therefore, a measure of punishment.
One often hears of punitive measures being adopted in connection with communities some members of which have committed grave political crimes or severe breaches of the Common Law of the country. In this instance, the whole community is to be punished in a degrading manner for a crime against a statute restrictive of the liberty of the subject which is misapplied to British Indians, and a crime which the community has stoutly repudiated.

Such, in the humble opinion of the Indian community, is the Ordinance about which we are approaching Your Lordship. There are three things which are stated to be introduced into the Ordinance in the nature of relief to the British Indians—the remission of the £3 fee; but we have shown that there is no remission at all, as all who are at present in the Transvaal have paid the £3. The second is the authority which is given to the Government by the Ordinance to issue temporary permits, but this again is no relief because it is superfluous.
Such authority has always existed and been exercised at the discretion of the Government: there are today British Indians holding temporary permits.

There is again the relief to holders of temporary permits from the operation of the Liquor Ordinance. That relief the British Indians never asked for, and so far as it is applicable to them, it is interpreted as a wanton insult.

There is one thing that the Ordinance undoubtedly rectifies, and that is by restoring [it] to the heirs of the late Aboo Baker Ahmed who held land in his own name before 1885. This is individual in character, and I have no doubt that if the price the heirs have to pay for getting land which is theirs by right be the degradation of the whole Indian community of the Transvaal, I am sure that even the heirs themselves would not care to pay it, and the community will certainly never feel in any way thankful for such relief. It will be a most surprising thing if, after repeated promises and pledges, an Ordinance of this nature is countenanced by Your Lordship. I shall venture to quote extracts’ from Mr. Chamberlain’s despatches, also from those of Lord Milner and Mr. Lyttelton, to show what they intended to do after the war....

It is common knowledge that before the War the British Government used every effort possible that Law 3 of 1885 should be repealed. The condition today is changed, but we had hoped that it would change for the better, seeing that there is no foreign government to deal with, but our own Government. Unhappily, we are now in the position of strangers in what may be called our own land. We have always endeavoured to conciliate prejudice and with that view we have made suggestions which have been adopted in the self-governing Colonies. Failing, however, the adoption of these suggestions, we have asked that a commission of enquiry may be appointed. This is the time honoured British custom. Whenever a new step has been taken, a royal commission has preceded it. The latest instance, perhaps, is that of the Aliens Act in the United Kingdom. Before any steps were taken, a commission investigated the charges made against the aliens, and into the question of the adequacy of the existing laws, and into the question as to what new laws were necessary. We have asked for a similar commission regarding the British Indians in the Transvaal. We believe that we are entitled to this, in view of the very grave charges I have referred to. We have been asking all these years for bread, but we have received stones in the shape of this Ordinance. We have therefore every reason to hope that Your Lordship will not countenance the legislation above described.

32. DEPUTATION TO LORD ELGIN

CONFIDENTIAL

Thursday, November 8, 1906

Proceedings at a Deputation to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Elgin on British Indian Subjects in South Africa

The deputation consisted of the following gentlemen:

Lord Stanley of Alderley
Mr. H. O. Ally
Mr. Gandhi } Delegates from [the] Transvaal
Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I.
Mr. J. D. Rees, C.I.E., M.P.
Sir George Birdwood, K.C.S.I.
Sir Henry Cotton, K.C.S.I., M.P.
Mr. Naoroji
Sir M. Bhownaggree, K.C.I.E.
Mr. Ameer Ali
Mr. Harold Cox, M.P.
Mr. Thornton, C.S.I.

The Earl of Elgin: I should just like to say, gentlemen, that I made this interview a private one because I thought, from experience of other meetings of the same sort, we should be better able to discuss the matter friendly across the table without the presence of public reporters; at the same time, I am quite aware that the deputation wish to go into matters of some detail, and therefore I have made arrangements for a note to be taken so that anything which may be said shall be on record.

Then I should like to say one other word. I recognize among the deputation some of those with whom I have had the pleasure of working in India, and I hope they have explained to the deputation, if it was necessary, that my sentiments would all be in favour of doing anything I could for the interests of British Indians. (‘Hear! Hear!’)

Sir Lepel Griffin: My Lord, what you have just said makes my duty in introducing the Delegates more easy. We are very much obliged to your Lordship for admitting this deputation of men who are all known to you as gentlemen connected with India, who have been most of them in India themselves, and are all interested in India, and we are very glad, without any question of party feeling—because all sides are represented in this deputation—to introduce to you the Delegates from South Africa: Mr. Gandhi, who is, as your Lordship is aware, a barrister of the Inner Temple and a man who, in the late Boer war and in the late rising in Natal, has done most excellent work for the country in organizing ambulance corps and in other ways—he practises now in Johannesburg—and Mr. Ally, his colleague, who is the representative of the Mohammedan part of the Indian community in the Transvaal, a merchant of very good position and the founder, and I believe the Chairman, of the Islamic Association in the Transvaal. To those gentlemen I propose to leave any details of the Ordinance which has now been passed and which we are about to ask His Majesty’s Government to veto. But I would like to say a few words in explaining the matter now before the Colonial Office, and I shall take up the time of your Lordship only for a few minutes.

I have been asked to present this deputation principally, I fancy, because I happen to be the Chairman of the Council of the East India Association, of which your Lordship is a distinguished Vice-President, but the question which the East India Association has so often urged upon successive Colonial Secretaries and Secretaries for India and Viceroy’s of India is not directly concerned in our presence here today.
The bed-rock, as your Lordship is aware, of the East India Association's protests [is] that all well-conducted, loyal, and industrious British subjects, whatever their race or colour, should receive equal rights in all Colonies of the British Empire; that is the bed-rock of justice which has always been refused in the past, but on which the East India Association, which is represented largely here today, begs to continue to rely and from which it must continue to make its protest. That, my Lord, is not precisely the question which this deputation desires to put forward this afternoon; they are not making any of those large claims which we have before made; they only ask that a certain Ordinance applying to the Transvaal alone may not receive the sanction of His Majesty’s Government.

A few words only are necessary on this point. During the Boer Government the British Indians were treated with considerable harshness, but their immigration into the Transvaal was not prohibited, and with the exception of a fee for a licence for adult traders, they were not interfered with. But their position was an exceedingly uncomfortable one, and many protests were raised which, we understood, when the country fell into the hands of the English, would be redressed. So far from being redressed, their position is made worse and the rules for registration and identification were made exceedingly more rigorous. The Ordinance which has now been passed makes, whatever people in South Africa may choose to say, their position infinitely worse and more degrading. It may be said that in the Transvaal these rules are for the benefit of the Indians, but the toad under the harrow knows where the harrow grips him, and the Indians in the Transvaal consider that the new regulations of this Ordinance are a grievance and an insult which is almost too grievous to be borne; and I for one most strongly support their claim and their protest.

Under this Ordinance every one in the Transvaal is exposed to the most rigorous investigation; the impressions of his fingers are to be recorded on every pass; no one is allowed in—man, woman or child—without registration of so rigorous a character that has been unheard of in any civilized country within my recollection. Under this regulation every Indian in the Transvaal, whether an adult male, whether a woman, or whether a child, and even babes in arms will be obliged to be registered under such conditions as ordinarily apply only to convicts in a civilized country; and evasion or ignorance or even forgetfulness on this point is punished by crushing fines, by imprisonment with hard labour, by expulsion, and by ruin. You, my Lord, who have been Viceroy of India, and whose sympathy is with the country, must know that legislation of this sort is unheard of under the British flag; indeed, today in Europe, I may say without any exaggeration, that, with the exception of the Russian legislation against the Jews, there is no legislation comparable to this on the continent of Europe; and in England, if we wanted a similar case, we should have to go back to the time of the Plantagenets.

And against whom is this legislation directed? Against the most orderly, honourable, industrious, temperate race in the world, people of our own stock and blood, with whom our own language has as a sister-language been connected. There is no occasion, in the presence of people connected with India, who know its history, to say what the Indian community is today; it is almost an insult to refer to it.

And by whom is this legislation instigated? I am told, and I believe it, that it is not by the best part of the British community in the Transvaal, who are, I believe, in favour of giving all reasonable privileges to British Indian subjects; it is by the alien foreign population in the Transvaal who are perhaps to some extent inconvenienced by Indian traders who are so very much more temperate and industrious than themselves. It does not come from the English. The legislation is prompted, and the prejudice against the Indians is encouraged, by the aliens, by Russian Jews, by Syrians, by German Jews, by every class of aliens, the very off-scourings of the international sewers of Europe. The English residents, against whom I do not wish to say one word of criticism, are a part, in my mind, of the Transvaal, but the Transvaal is only a Colony by conquest, not by settlement, and it is the aliens who are opposed to this honourable Indian community.
My Lord, I do not wish to take up more of your time, but what I wish to say is that today we ask you, as representing His Majesty’s Government, and as we know your sympathies are with the Indians, over whom you have ruled with so much distinction, to procure the vetoing of this Ordinance. No large questions are brought before you today by this deputation. They are not asking for political rights; they are not asking for gratitude for their great and devoted services in the Transvaal war where so many of them lost their lives in their devotion to England, doing as courageous work as any one of the members of the armies which were sent by England, by Australia, or by Canada. Those services have not been recognized; on the contrary, they have been ignored and further burdens have been placed upon them. We ask for nothing today except the merest barest justice. We ask that the whips which the Boers have inflicted upon us may not be changed into scorpions wielded by the British Government.

I would say in conclusion that we hope everything from the present Government, and for this reason, that the grievances of the Chinese have received the utmost sympathy at the hands of the Government, but, so far as this deputation is concerned, the Chinese and other alien nations do not count. We ask not for the Chinese, but for our own fellow-subjects, and we ask that justice, if not generosity, may be dealt out to them and that your Lordship will save them from insult and oppression.

It was at your Lordship’s request that this deputation was a small one; it might have been indefinitely extended. This is a test case—a question of going forward or going back. Your Lordship, as a past Viceroy of India, must know that the attention of the whole of India, 300 millions of Indians, is intent today upon the decision which will be given in this test case, and I beg your Lordship to think and to remember that, besides the Indians of Indian birth, against whom the insults of this Ordinance are directed, there are the whole body of Indian officials, to which I and most of the members of this deputation belong, who are insulted with the natives of India. Is it to be supposed that we who have worked with, we who have governed this province of India under your Lordship and under your predecessors and successors, have been governing degraded creatures who are placed lower even than the Zulus and Russian Jews? No, my Lord. We trust to you to do what you can to defend the people whom you have governed so well. And I will beg you to excuse any exciting warmth in my way of speaking, because I assure you that any warmth in my words is very much exceeded by the feeling of shame and resentment which fills my heart at the way in which the British Indians of the Transvaal are treated today by the settlers (I will not call them Colonists) of that country.
Mr. Gandhi: Both Mr. Ally and I are very much obliged to your Lordship for giving us the opportunity of placing the British Indian position before you. Supported though we are by distinguished Anglo-Indian friends and others, I feel that the task before Mr. Ally and myself is very difficult, because your Lordship, in reply to the cablegram* sent to you through Lord Selborne, after the great British Indian mass meeting in Johannesburg, was pleased to inform the British Indian Association, that, although you would be pleased to give us every opportunity of stating our case, no good purpose was likely to be served as your Lordship had approved of the principle of the Ordinance, in that it gave some measure of relief to the British Indian community, though not as much as His Majesty’s Government would desire. We who are the men on the spot and who are affected by the Ordinance in question have ventured to think otherwise. We have felt that this Ordinance does not give us any relief whatsoever. It is a measure which places British Indians in a far worse position than before and makes the lot of the British Indian well-nigh intolerable. Under the Ordinance the British Indian is assumed to be a criminal. If a stranger, not knowing the circumstances of the Transvaal, were to read the Ordinance, he would have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that an Ordinance of that nature which carries so many penalties and wounds the British Indian community on all sides, must only apply to thieves or a gang of robbers. I venture, therefore, to think that, although Sir Lepel Griffin has used strong\(^2\) language in connection with the Ordinance, he has not at all exaggerated, but every word of it is justified. At the same time I beg to state that the Ordinance, as amended, does not apply to British Indian females. The draft Ordinance undoubtedly applied to females also, but owing to the very strong protest made by the British Indian Association, and by Mr. Ally separately as Chairman of the Hamidia Islamic Society, pointing out the great violence that would have been done to female sanctity, if I may say so, the Ordinance was amended so as to take females out of its operation. But it applies to all adult males and even to children, in that the parents or guardians have to take out registration certificates for their children or wards as the case may be.

2 The Original has “strange”.
It is a fundamental maxim of the British law that every one is presumed to be innocent until he is found guilty, but the Ordinance reverses the process, and brands every Indian as guilty, and leaves no room for him to prove his innocence. There is absolutely nothing proved against us and yet every British Indian, no matter what his status is, is to be condemned as guilty and not treated as an innocent man. My Lord, an Ordinance of this nature [it] is not possible for British Indians to reconcile themselves to. I do not know that such an Ordinance is applicable to free British subjects in any part of His Majesty’s Dominions.

Moreover, what the Transvaal thinks today the other Colonies think tomorrow. When Lord Milner sprang his Bazaar Notice’ on British Indians, the whole of South Africa rang with the Bazaar idea. The term “Bazaar” is a misnomer; it has been really applied to Locations where trade is utterly impossible. However, a proposal was seriously made, after a Bazaar Notice, by the then Mayor of Natal¹, Mr. Ellis Browne, that Indians should be relegated to Bazaars. There is not the slightest reason why this Ordinance also, if it ever becomes law, should not be copied by the other parts of South Africa. The position today in Natal is that even indentured Indians are not required to carry passes as contemplated by the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance; nor are there any penalties attached to the non-carrying of passes as are defined in the Ordinance under discussion. We have already shown in our humble representation that no relief has been granted by this Ordinance, because the remission of the £3 fee, referred to by Mr. Duncan, is quite illusory, because all we British Indians resident in the Transvaal who are obliged to pay £3 under Law 3 of 1885, and those who, under Lord Selborne’s promise, are likely to be allowed to re-enter the Transvaal, have paid the £3 already.

The authority to issue temporary permits is also superfluous in that the Government have already exercised the power, and there are today in the Transvaal several Indians in possession of temporary permits. They are liable to be expelled from the Colony on the expiry of their permits.

² Mayor of Durban.
The relief under the Liquor Ordinance\(^1\) is, British Indians feel, a wanton insult. So much was this recognized by the local Government that they immediately assured the Indians that it was not intended for British Indians at all, but for somebody else. We have no connection with anybody else, and we have always endeavoured to show that the British Indians ought to be treated as British subjects, and ought not to be included with the general body of Asiatics with respect to whom there may be a need for some restrictions which ought not to apply to British Indians as British subjects.

There remains one more statement that is in connection with the land owned by the late Aboobaker.\(^2\) That land should belong to the heirs by right, but under the interpretation reluctantly put upon it by the Supreme Court, that it is only individual in character and does not touch the community, the land cannot be transmitted to the heirs. The Ordinance is intended to rectify the error, but, as I had the honour to represent the heirs, I ventured to think that even they would not consent to pay for getting this relief at the price, in the nature of this Ordinance, for British Indians; and certainly the Indian community can never exchange for the relief given to their heirs of the land of Aboobaker an Ordinance of this nature, which requires them to pay so great a price for what is really their own. So that under the Ordinance in that respect again there is absolutely no relief. As I said before, we shall be, under the Ordinance, branded as criminals.

My Lord, the existing regulation is severe enough. I hold in my hands returns from the Court of the Magistrate at Volksrust. Over 150 successful prosecutions of Indians attempting to enter the Transvaal have taken place during the years 1905 and 1906. All these prosecutions, I venture to say, are by no means just. I venture to believe that if these prosecutions were gone into you would see that some of them were absolutely groundless.

So far as the question of identification is concerned the present laws are quite enough. I produce to your Lordship the registration certificate held by me, and it will show how complete it is to establish identification. The present law can hardly be called an amendment. I produce before your Lordship a registration receipt held by my colleague, Mr. Ally, from the Transvaal Government. Your Lordship will see that it is merely a receipt for £3. The registration under the present Ordinance is of a different type. When Lord Milner wished to enforce Law 3 of 1885 he suggested new registration. We protested against it, but on his strong advice, as a voluntary act, we allowed ourselves to be newly registered, and hence the form produced before your Lordship. At the time that registration was undertaken, Lord Milner stated emphatically that it was a measure once for all, and that it would form a complete title to residence by those who held such registration certificates. Is all this now to be undone? Your Lordship is doubtless aware of the Punia case, wherein a poor Indian woman, in company with her husband, was torn away from her husband, and was ordered by the magistrate to leave the country within seven hours. Fortunately, relief was granted in the end, as the matter was taken up in time. A boy under 11 years was also arrested and sentenced to pay a fine of £50 or to go to gaol for three months, and at the end of it to leave the country. In this case again the Supreme Court has been able to grant justice. The conviction was pronounced to be wholly bad, and Sir James Rose-Innes stated that the Administration would bring itself to ridicule and contempt if such a policy was pursued. If the existing legislation is strong enough and severe enough to thus prosecute British Indians, is it not enough to keep out of the Colony British Indians who may attempt fraudulently to enter it?

It has been stated that the reason for passing the Ordinance is that there is an unauthorized influx of British Indians into the Transvaal on a wholesale scale, and that there is an attempt on the part of the Indian community to introduce Indians in such a manner. The last charge has been, times without number, repudiated by the Indian community, and the makers of the charge have been challenged to prove their statement. The first statement has also been denied.

I ought to mention one thing also, that is, the fourth resolution that was passed at the British Indian mass meeting. It was passed by the meeting solemnly, prayerfully, and in all humility, and the whole of that great meeting decided by that resolution that, if this Ordinance ever came to be enforced, and we did not get relief, the British Indians, rather than submit to the great degradation involved in it, would go to gaol; such was the intensity of the feeling aroused by the Ordinance. We have hitherto suffered much in the Transvaal and in other parts of South Africa, but the hardship has been tolerable; we have not considered it necessary to travel 6,000 miles to place the position before the Imperial Government. But the straining point has been reached by the Ordinance, and we felt that we should in all humility exhaust every resource even to the extent of sending a Deputation to wait on your Lordship.

The least, therefore, that in my humble opinion is due to the British Indian community is to appoint a commission as suggested in the humble representation submitted to your Lordship. It is a time-honoured British custom that, whenever an important principle is involved, a commission is appointed before a step is taken. The question of alien immigration into the United Kingdom is a parallel case. Charges somewhat similar to the charges against the Indian community were made against the aliens who entered the United Kingdom. There was also the question of the adequacy of the existing legislation and the necessity for further legislation; all these three points were referred to a commission before any step was taken. I, therefore, venture to think that a commission should be appointed, and the whole question thrashed out before any drastic measures are taken.

I venture, therefore, to hope that your Lordship will see your way to grant this small measure of relief to the British Indian community.

MR. H. O. ALLY: My Lord, we are very much obliged to you for the patient hearing your Lordship is giving to the deputation. Mr. Gandhi has stated the case fully before your Lordship, and I do not wish to add much to what has already been said. I am not a lawyer, but as a layman, and as a resident of old standing in the Transvaal, I do wish to submit to your Lordship that the hardships that the present Ordinance would inflict upon us are unbearable. And I can assure your Lordship that, immediately the Ordinance was introduced into the Legislative Council of the Transvaal, my fellow-countrymen felt, and felt very keenly, to think that such laws can be passed under a British Government. It is what I should never have believed years ago.

Our lot is today infinitely worse than under the Boer regime; we were able to get protection from the British Government during that time. Are we now, under the same Government, to be persecuted?

When aliens of all classes are, at the very moment that the Ordinance is introduced, pouring into the Transvaal, and when they enjoy all the rights and privileges granted to British subjects, my countrymen, who are always to the fore for the defence of the Empire, are suffering these serious disabilities and the disabilities threatened by the Ordinance. Today in India the frontier is guarded by my fellow-countrymen, who shoulder the rifle in defence of the Empire; and it is very grievous that they should have to suffer such misery, and that there should be class legislation against them of this type.

I appeal for justice, and I appeal to your Lordship in the name of the British traditions, that you will be pleased to remove the disability that the Ordinance will place upon us, by vetoing it, or at least by granting a commission. We are loyal British subjects, and as such we are entitled to the fullest protection. We have not asked for, and we do not now ask for, political rights: we are content that the white man should be predominant in the Transvaal; but we do feel that we are entitled to all the other ordinary rights that a British subject should enjoy.

Sir Henry Cotton: I wish to say one word, my Lord, if I may. I am here not only as a retired Indian official, like many distinguished men I see around me, but also as a Member of the present Parliament, and as chairman of a meeting which sat in the Grand Committee Room upstairs in the House of Commons attended by more than 100 members of the Liberal Party. I take this opportunity of saying that I deeply regret that the invitations to attend that meeting were not extended to both sides of the House. (‘Hear! Hear!’) It was an unfortunate oversight which we all regret. But that meeting, I say, was attended by 100 and more Members of the House of Commons, and their feeling was very strong indeed upon this subject; indeed, they went so far as to record a resolution that they sympathized with and supported the prayer of the petitioners. Since that meeting, my Lord, I have been brought in contact with many Members of the House of Commons who were not present at the meeting, gentlemen on both sides of the House. Many gentlemen on the opposite benches have also intimated to me that there is a complete sympathy with the attitude taken up by Messrs Gandhi and Ally on behalf of their fellow-subjects in the Transvaal.

I wish also in associating myself, as I do completely, with the observations which fell from Sir Lepel Griffin, to remind your Lordship that it was Lord Lansdowne, for whom we all have the greatest regard and respect, who, although he is the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords, is at all events, as we know very well, a most liberal-minded statesman, who drew prominent attention in England to the grievances which the British Indians in the Transvaal suffered from under President Kruger’s administration. Nothing, he said, roused so much indignation in his mind or so much anger as the ill-treatment which the British Indians received in South Africa. And he went further even in his speech—it was a speech delivered at Sheffield two or three weeks after the outbreak of the war—for he said that he regarded with grave anxiety the state of feeling which must inevitably exist in India when it was known that the British subjects of India in South Africa were so ill treated and ground down. And he pointed out the imperative duty of the British Government to improve their status and position.

Now, my Lord, that is a pledge which was given by the head of the Opposition in the House of Lords, and I appeal to you, my Lord, as the representative of a Liberal Government, in dealing with this matter in South Africa, that your duty is at least as decisive as [that] Lord Lansdowne claimed for himself a few years ago.

It is true that the people of India do feel this matter very deeply. It is true also that the British Indians in South Africa have greater grievances to complain of now than they had under the Dutch Government; and the climax has been reached in the passing of this Ordinance, of which Messrs Gandhi and Ally here so justly complain. Representing as I do a very influential and large section of the House of Commons and, I believe, the almost unanimous official feeling in India on the subject, I do trust that your Lordship will be able to give this petition your favourable consideration.

SIR M. M. BHOWNAGREE: My Lord, I think the case has been so ably and clearly put before your Lordship that there is not the least occasion for me to go into any details, and if I feel called upon to address your Lordship for a very few minutes, it is simply on account of the interest I took in this question all through my ten and a half years’ career in Parliament. I want to bring to your Lordship’s notice a few points which perhaps may not be within your knowledge.

In complaining of the grievances of British Indian subject in South Africa, I had opportunities of seeing your predecessors, Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Lyttelton, very often on the subject. My activity had taken the form at last of a long printed letter in which I detailed the whole narrative of the facts, and Mr. Lyttelton thereupon assured me that the case had been so fairly put, and the demands made were so reasonable, that he hoped to get some relief. I, on the other hand, knew what the local forces of opposition to a liberal policy on the part of any ministry of the Imperial Government would be, and while I thanked him for his sympathetic answer, I told him it might be necessary to appoint a commission to enquire into the whole subject. Sir George Farrar, who represented the anti British Indian interest[s] in the Transvaal legislature, also happened at the same time, to suggest that the appointment of a commission would ventilate the matter, and might bring some solution of that very difficult problem. Thereupon I addressed Mr. Lyttelton again, accepting Sir George Farrar’s offer, and matters were in that train, and I believe Mr. Lyttelton would have ultimately appointed a commission, but the Government, of which he was a member then, went out of office. Recognizing the very difficult position in which the whole question stands, I now urge that a commission might be appointed pending the report of which this Ordinance might at least be held in abeyance, so that you may have the benefit of judging of the whole question by the report of that commission.

I have only one word to add, my Lord. For five years your Lordship has been the custodian and guardian of Indian interests and the protector of their rights, during a memorable and distinguished viceroyalty. Today—as our leader, Sir Lepel Griffin, has well said—the eyes of all India are focused upon the proceedings which are taking place in this room, and I am only expressing the sentiments of the 300 millions of people of India when I express the hope that your Lordship will, on account of the sympathy which you have shown, and which I believe you are ready to show, and of which, even on our entrance into this room, you assured us, allow no other consideration but that of justice to weigh with you, and will grant the prayer which these gentlemen have come all this long distance here to ask at your hands.

MR. REES: I am not going, my Lord, into the subject of the merits of the case; I think they were amply dealt with by Sir Lepel Griffin; nor am I going to speak of my interest in this subject, which I have often brought before Parliament myself. But when Sir Henry Cotton spoke of the meeting yesterday, I should like to say that it was not only a party meeting, but it was a meeting of part of a party, and that I do depurate with all my heart and soul, in a matter which is of such serious importance, any endeavour to make any subject connected with British India a party subject. I do not think there can be a more serious matter than this very serious one upon which we have come before your Lordship, namely, the unfortunate manner in which our fellow-subjects have been treated in the Transvaal.

MR. HAROLD COX: My Lord, I am in a somewhat different position from most of the gentlemen here, because I am neither an ex-official of the Government of India, nor am I myself Indian by birth, but I did have the honour personally of serving in India for two years under a Native Prince, and I look back to that period of my life with the greatest pleasure. That is one special reason why I am here today. But at the back of my mind the real reason why I am here today is because I am English, and because I think this matter is a disgrace to my country. Our country was pledged when we went to war with the Transvaal to do justice to the British Indians. That justice has not been done, and I contend that it is not possible for the present Government, of which your Lordship is a part, to ride off on the plea that the Transvaal is a self-governing Colony. It is not a self-governing Colony. It is absolutely subject to your authority, and whatever is done by you today, or at any other time, is done not in the name of the Transvaal, but in the name of the English people, and in the name of the English people I protest against any injustice being done to British subjects.

Mr. Naoroji: I do not want to take up your Lordship’s time, and after the able manner in which the whole subject has been laid before you, I would only join in the appeal that has been made to you on behalf of my fellow-subjects under the British flag. If there is one principle more important than another, it is that of the freedom of British subjects under the British flag, and I do hope that the British Government, especially a Liberal Government, will stand upon that basis.

Mr. Ameer Ali: Will your Lordship allow me to make one observation only? Perhaps my recent experience of India is the most recent of all. I venture to say this: that the feeling of India is very strong on this subject of the injury done to British Indians in the Transvaal, and it will be a serious mistake if the subject is put on one side. That is the only matter I want to present to your Lordship.

The Earl of Elgin: In the first place, I would like to say that I entirely accept the position which Mr. Cox put upon me. I am responsible, no doubt, for the advice which is given in this matter and nobody else, and I do not wish to shirk my responsibility. In the second case, I wish also to express my adherence to what was said by Mr. Rees, Sir Henry Cotton and others that I regard this as no party question at all. Sir Henry Cotton quoted from Lord Lansdowne, but I have before me a despatch from the Colonial Secretary of the last Government from which I should like to read one paragraph: ‘His Majesty’s Government cannot believe that the British community in the Transvaal appreciate the true nature of the proposition which some of its members are pressing upon you. They, as Britons, are as jealous of the honour of the British name as ourselves, and even if a material sacrifice were necessary to vindicate that honour, I feel assured they would cheerfully make it. His Majesty’s Government hold that it is derogatory to national honour to impose on resident British subjects disabilities against which we had remonstrated, and to which even the law of the late South African Republic rightly interpreted did not subject them, and they do not doubt that when this is perceived the public opinion of the Colony will not any longer support the demand which has been put forward.’

Sir Henry Cotton: May I ask which Colonial Secretary that was?

The Earl of Elgin: It was from Mr. Lyttelton to yourself, written in 1904. Now, I understand from the gentlemen who have come before me today that we are not here to discuss general sympathies, nor even are we to consider anything further than the rights which the British Indian community possessed in the past. They do not ask at this present moment for an extension of those rights. That limits the matter, as I think you wish it to be limited, to the question of this Ordinance itself.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN: For the present, my Lord. We are going to fight the question hereafter.

THE EARL OF ELGIN: Oh, yes; I am thinking of today, and the answer I have to give.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN: Yes.

THE EARL OF ELGIN: I only make that observation in order that I may be precise in my answer. The question, therefore, is with reference to this Ordinance, and following up the remark I made just now about its being no party question, I hope you will accept it from me that it was no intention of the men at the head of the Transvaal Government—they distinctly stated so to me—that they had no intention whatever in the legislation they brought forward to do otherwise than to improve, rather than to make worse, the condition of the British Indian community. I am not saying that the subject is not perfectly open to your criticisms, but I wish you to accept from me that that was the intention with which this legislation was brought forward.

Now Mr. Gandhi explained that, in some cases, for instance in the case of the poll-tax, this concession, which was supposed to be given under the Ordinance, was illusory. I admit that I think there was something in his statement that most of those who would come under the restriction I have just mentioned would probably have paid the £3. But at the same time, dealing with this as a matter of the status of the British Indians in the Transvaal, I conceive that the Government might quite fairly have held that in removing the imposition of the poll-tax once for all they were, pro tanto, improving the status of the British Indians.

Then with regard to the question of permits or registration, we have seen one of the permits given under the Boer administration. It is merely a receipt for the money. The Boer administration in that respect, as well as in a good many others, was not so accurate as the administration which necessarily with our ideas obtains under the British Government; and, therefore, I am only stating the view which has been put before me; the view of the Government of the Transvaal is this: that as it stood under the rules of the Boer Government which they had inherited, there was great confusion, and there were great administrative difficulties, and that consequently there was a considerable degree of friction, and also there arose considerable delay in the determination of cases of which I see traces in the petition itself. It was for that purpose, as I understand it, that the Government of the Transvaal proposed to substitute the form of registration, but according to their representations to me, there was no intention whatever of making that form of registration in any way more oppressive than the form of permits properly ministered.
And if I may, just for a moment—I do not want to go into all the details—follow this question of thumb marks, I think that thumb marks first came into notice prominently when Sir Henry Cotton and I were associated in the Government of India, under our friend Mr. Henry, who occupies a prominent position in the city now. No doubt the imposition of thumb marks was introduced in that case for the detection of criminals, but I do not know why the imposition of a thumb mark in itself should be a very debasing operation; in fact, as they say, it has always seemed to me a most marvellous thing that they say whey can trace every thumb mark, there might be an advantage over the hieroglyphics which some of us call our signatures. And there is this fact I want just to mention, and to bring to the notice of Mr. Gandhi, that on the permit which he has handed to me, issued under the present Ordinance, there is a thumb mark already imposed under the present Ordinance in just the same way as it will be imposed under the new Ordinance.

MR. GANDHI: Only that that, as I said, is a purely voluntary act done by us on the advice and the instigation of Lord Milner. He asked us to do it.

THE EARL OF ELGIN: Quite so; but still here is a certificate which is an official certificate, and it bears a thumb mark.

LORD STANLEY OF ALDERLEY: It was affixed without prejudice.

THE EARL OF ELGIN: I do not see why it should not be affixed to the registration certificate without prejudice.

SIR M. BHOWNAGREE: Might I explain one thing? Whatever Lord Milner asked British Indians to do was done on the understanding that the whole question of the treatment of the community was the subject of consideration between the Colonial Secretary for the time being and Lord Milner and the local authorities, so that they might have submitted to Lord Milner’s injunction in a respectful way and, as Lord Stanley just now said, without prejudice. But this imposes a sort of distinction between one subject and another in the Transvaal.

THE EARL OF ELGIN: Do not suppose I am taking it further than this; I am only saying here is a document which is at present in use with a thumb mark, and it cannot be called debasing.

MR. GANDHI: It is the ten-finger mark.

THE EARL OF ELGIN: Is it more debasing with ten fingers?

SIR HENRY COTTON: It is only required in the case of criminals.

THE EARL OF ELGIN: I do not want to argue it, but I think there is just that much to be said.

Then there is one matter about registration; that is, that if the system of registration was carried out it would give a final and indefeasible title to those who are registered to their rights in the Transvaal. That is the position of the Transvaal Government on that matter. And as regards the carrying of a pass, and any oppressive use of the power of inspection, I am informed, and I have taken some trouble to ascertain it, that all that would be intended, so far as checking the Ordinance certificate is concerned, is that it would probably be inspected once a year. As regards any other casual demand for it, it would be, as I am told, exactly in the same position as this permit is, which, if I am right, may be demanded from anybody in the Transvaal. This is the position. I do not want to elaborate too much on this subject, I only wish to make this explanation, that those were the sort of reasons which the Government of the Transvaal put before me when they asked my assent to the introduction of the legislation on these grounds, and it is distinctly upon my apprehension that these modifications of the law would, in the long run, be for the benefit, and not for the oppression, of the British Indian community that I gave my assent to the introduction of that legislation.

Now, gentlemen, we are in the position that this is challenged. I think I ought to say, without in any way challenging the authority with which Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Ally come here as the representatives of a large meeting, that I have got telegrams from the Transvaal advising me of the forwarding of a petition from British Indians which they say had been largely signed, in opposition to the views which have been placed before me today; and with regard to the general feeling I have today received two more telegrams, I say two more, because there are a good many others from different municipalities in the country urging the passing of the Ordinance and so on. I cannot, therefore, entirely subscribe to what Sir Lepel Griffin said about the opposition, and the nature of the opposition to this matter. I regret it more than anybody in this room. I suppose there could be found, if not in the records of this office, at any rate, in the records of the India Office, despatches with my signature attached to them, protesting, in as strong language as has been used here, against the restrictions on British citizens, and I do not go back from one single word. But we have to recognize the fact that all over the world there are difficulties arising on the part of white communities, and we have to reckon with them. I do not say that they ought always to succeed; they certainly ought not to succeed in points of detail which would, in any way, involve oppression. But the fact of there being that sentiment has to be borne in mind when we have to deal with matters of this description.

I do not think I have much more to reply to. Reference has been made to the proposition towards the end of the petition, that at any rate there might be a postponement for the examination of the subject by a commission. That, no doubt, is an alternative which might be adopted; but I am not in a position today to say whether that is so or not. Indeed I think you will easily acknowledge that I paid you the best compliment when I did not endeavour to make up my mind until I had seen you, and heard what you have to say. That is my position. I have now heard what Mr.
Gandhi had to say. I hope he has put before me, as fully as he desired, what he has come so far to say. I have heard the other gentlemen who have accompanied him. I will give the best consideration to their representations, and I shall think it my duty to make up my mind with the full responsibility which I have to assume.

M. GANDHI: May I make one statement, my Lord, for one minute? I have listened with the very greatest attention, and with very great obligation, to your Lordship’s statement, but I must submit that the information placed before your Lordship on some points is not accurate, and I am in a position to refute that information by documentary evidence with regard to permits, as your Lordship used the term, in connection with the Ordinance of 1885, but this is not the occasion when I could do it. But if your Lordship will ask us to wait upon you we: will do it. But that just shows that nothing short of a commission would place our position accurately before your Lordship.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN: My Lord, I beg, on behalf of the deputation, to express our best thanks for the exceedingly kind and courteous way in which you have received us, and the patience with which you have listened to what we had to say. We were assured before of your full sympathy in this matter, and knew it perfectly well.

(The deputation then withdrew.)

33. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO LORD ELGIN

[Hotel Cecil,

November 8, 1906

TO
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY TO
THE RIGHT HON’BLE THE EARL OF ELGIN
HIS MAJESTY’S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES
COLONIAL OFFICE
LONDON
SIR,

With reference to the interview that Lord Elgin was pleased to grant us, we beg to enquire whether His Lordship will be pleased to acquaint us with the nature of the cablegram of dissent received from some Indians in the Transvaal by His Lordship, as also with the names of the senders. The information is of a somewhat startling nature and we might, if some further information were given to us, be able to render an explanation.

The Deputation this afternoon was intended more to strengthen His Lordship’s hands in securing for the British Indians in the Transvaal fair and just treatment rather than to place before His Lordship a full statement. As we believe that some of the information received by His Lordship and used by him in his statement is not consistent with the facts, may we request a brief private interview at which it will be possible for us to place the details more fully before him than we could at the Deputation that took place this afternoon.

We have the honour to remain,
Sir,
Your obedient servants,

I thank you for your note. Mr. Ally, my co-Delegate, and I are very much obliged to you for your note of the 5th instant. I fear it will be impossible for us to stay here up to January much as we should like to be able to address a meeting in Liverpool. We are likely to leave, at the latest, on the 24th instant. I am sending this letter on the off chance of its reaching you. If you receive it you will be surprised to know that I am in London. 38. LETTER TO SIR RICHARD SOLOMON

Hotel Cecil,
London,
November 8, 1906

SIR,

We venture to address this informal letter to you on the strength of your having always been a friend of the Coloured people, using the term in its widest sense. Lord Elgin seemed to think, as you also thought, that a commission of enquiry was due to us. We venture respectfully to think that a word of approval from you of the idea of a commission would bring about, from our point of view, the desired result. The Ordinance proceeds on the assumption that every Indian is capable of abusing his permit or registration. From the statement made by Lord Elgin there is, in our humble opinion, no doubt that a great deal of inaccurate information has been placed before him. We think that nothing short of an impartial commission of enquiry can remove all the doubts and misapprehension that exist. May we appeal to you again for this small measure of justice, which it is in your power to grant.

Yours faithfully,

Gentlemen,

I have received, by the last mail from Johannesburg, papers in connection with the action that is now pending in the Witwater-srand High Court. Messrs Bell and Nixon have probably written to you in the matter.

It was agreed between them and me that evidence should be taken of Mr. Dalglish, during my stay in London, before a commissioner to be appointed by us by mutual agreement between us.

I shall be obliged if you will kindly let me know whether evidence can be taken some time next week as I am likely to leave London if not Saturday week, certainly on the Saturday following.

I do not overstate when I say that probably you will be responsible if some measure of success is gained by the Deputation. Immediately Mr. Ally and I went to Sir Lepel Griffin, he told us he had received your note and that he entirely agreed with you that the Deputation should wait on Mr. Morley.¹ He was most sympathetic and enthusiastic and this is no doubt due to you.

I are now sending [a letter²] to ask an appointment with Mr. Morley. Mr. Ally and I had half an hour with Lord George Hamilton who was sympathetic but there was a ring of non possumus about all he said. However, he has told us that he will carefully go through the Ordinance.

November 9, 1906

DEAR MR. POLAK,

I am sending you all the cuttings I can. I will not enumerate them. The interview with Lord Elgin yesterday was exceedingly good. Sir Lepel Griffin spoke very nicely. You may read this letter to the members of the Association. I may be able to let you have the official copy of the proceedings next week. I have applied for it. Sir Muncherji, Mr. Naoroji, Mr. Ameer Ali and Mr. Rees spoke; they were all precise and to the point. The support we have received is beyond expectation. Everybody considers that a stronger deputation on Indian affairs has never yet waited upon the Government. There seems to be every reason for hoping that Lord Elgin will grant a commission and if he does, it will be exceedingly good. We have now asked for an interview with Mr. Morley; that Deputation will also, I believe, be very strongly supported. The meeting of the Members of the House of Commons was very enthusiastic and sympathetic. Some of the Members thought that it was unprecedented! Nobody had expected that over 100 Members would attend. The speakers too at the meeting vied with one another in showing their sympathy.

56

We saw Lord George Hamilton today: he gave us half an hour. He said he felt convinced that an injustice was being done. He has promised to study the Representation to Lord Elgin. There was, however, an attitude of non possumus about him.

We sent you a long cablegram yesterday. The more we see, the more we feel that a permanent committee is absolutely necessary, if the work of the Deputation is not to be frittered away. Sir Muncherji is very emphatic on the point. It is, therefore, vexing that no cablegram has yet been received from you. This is not to blame you. I can quite understand the difficulties you are going through. This is not to blame you. I simply state the fact that delay is dangerous and hope that tomorrow there will be a cablegram from you. I need hardly say that Mr. Ally is in thorough agreement with this view. We are both getting on very nicely.

You will be pleased to learn that Mr. Scott, your father’s friend, played an important part in bringing about the meeting of the Members of the House of Commons and that your father devoted the best part of last Monday to seeing Mr. Scott and others for this meeting. His assistance to me has been very valuable in more ways than one. Your mother has promised to try earth bandages for her neuralgia. I tried to dig up some clean earth from your yard but it was not to be had. Your father was to procure some from elsewhere. I shall know more next Sunday as I am to pass almost the whole of Sunday afternoon with your people: having, however, found out Mrs. Freeth’s address, I shall have to take away 2 hours from them.

I am not sending any article this time; I may write something if the spirit moves me. My outside activity has been so great that there has not been much time left for contemplation: anything, therefore, that I should give you would be purely superficial. You may, however, give an article on the papers regarding the activity of the Deputation which I am sending. Mr. Mukerji will send you some cuttings and you may deal with the Representation by Godfrey and others, as also the House of Commons meeting and the Deputation. As I am dictating this, I now fancy that I may give you a leader¹ on Lord Elgin’s reply to clear away some of the points.

You should not take anything from this letter about the Deputation to work up an article because the proceedings of the deputation are supposed to be [private]². The cablegram sent to Lord Elgin must be shocking!!! I suppose it is Dr. Godfrey. We have asked Lord Elgin to give us the text of the cablegram and the name of the sender. We may then give an explanation.

50. DEPUTATION NOTES - I

HOTEL CECIL,
LONDON,
November 9, 1906

INTERVIEW WITH LORD ELLIGAN

Though in order of time, the interview with Lord Elgin comes last, I shall deal with it first as it is very important. We were accompanied by Sir Lepel Griffin, Lord Stanley of Alderley, Sir Muncherji Bhownaggree, Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, Mr. Syed Ameer Ali, Mr. Harold Cox, Sir, Henry Cotton, Sir George Birdwood, Mr. J. D. Rees, Mr. Thornton and Mr. F. H. Brown. The deputation included members from all the parties. It is said that such a [strong] deputation has never before waited on Lord Elgin. We all presented ourselves before Lord Elgin at 3 p.m. on Thursday.

1 The last paragraph of this item would suggest that this was completed on or after November 10, 1906; Vide “Letter to O. H. A. Johari”, 10-11-1906.
2 F. H. Brown was not in the list, circulated by Gandhiji, of members who were to wait in deputation on Lord Elgin; vide “Deputation to Lord Elgin”, 8-11-1906.
3 The Conservative Party was not represented in the deputation although, according to Sir Henry Cotton the Transvaal Indian Deputation had the “complete sympathy” of individual Conservative Members; vide “Deputation to Lord Elgin”, 8-11-1906.
4 November 8, 1906
Sir Lepel Griffin made a spirited speech and appealed to Lord Elgin to reject the Ordinance. He said that the Ordinance was derogatory to Anglo-Indians. One who read the Ordinance would think that those who ruled over such people must be a worthless lot. The Indians and the British both originated in Central Asia. The Indians were very industrious, intelligent and honest. Those who had seen India would never tolerate the refuse of Europe collected in the Transvaal tyrannizing over the Indians there.

Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Ally spoke after Sir Lepel. Mr. Ally’s voice choked with emotion as he spoke.

Then Sir Henry Cotton made a powerful speech. Quoting Lord Lansdowne, he said that the Members of the House of Commons also wanted that justice be done. While Kruger used the whip, the British Government were scourging us with scorpion stings. Sir Muncherji wanted to know what had happened to the commission which Mr. Lyttelton had promised him. If Lord Elgin could do nothing more, the commission at any rate should be appointed. Mr. Ameer Ali said that he had recently returned from India and that the whole country was unhappy over the sufferings of Indians in South Africa.

Mr. Dadabhai said that the British Government would stand disgraced if the oppression of Indians continued.

Mr. Rees said that this question was an all-party one.

Mr. Cox said that, as an Englishman, he felt ashamed of the disabilities Indians in the Transvaal had to suffer.

In reply, Lord Elgin said that his own sympathy was bound to be with the Indians. He had always wished well of the Indian people. The officials of the Transvaal Government had stated that the Ordinance was not oppressive. It was true in a sense that the remission of the £3 tax afforded, as Mr. Gandhi had pointed out, no relief in fact. However, it was something of a gain that the legal stigma of the £3 tax had been removed. There did not seem to be much objection to the giving of thumb-impressions. It was unlikely that the police would look into the passes every day and harass the people. However, there was no need to emphasize all these matters. Sir Lepel had said that the

1 The British in India were also referred to as Anglo-Indians.
2 The reference is to the people to whom the Ordinance applied, namely, the British Indians.
British whites there were not very hostile to Indians. But there were cablegrams from Krugersdorp and other places which expressed the hope that the Ordinance would receive Royal assent. While he would not say anything about Mr. Gandhi or Mr. Ally, he might tell them that he had received cablegrams from some Indians expressing contrary opinions. He added that all that was by way of information only. He did not regard the demand for a commission as unreasonable. The matter deserved consideration, and he would reply after giving it sufficient thought.

Seeking permission to speak for a minute, Mr. Gandhi said that Lord Elgin’s information was not correct and that, if His Lordship gave them another appointment, the two Delegates would be able to prove this. Whether or not a second meeting materializes, all this clearly shows that the appointment of a commission is absolutely necessary and that such complicated matters can be settled only through a commission.

It is hoped that, as a result of this Deputation, a commission will be appointed.

MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

As we thought it would be very appropriate and helpful if the Members of the House of Commons met and passed a resolution expressing sympathy, we called upon some Members and had a discussion with them. In this matter we sought the help of Mr. Sootie¹ a Member of Parliament who is a friend of Mr. Polak’s father, and the meeting at last took place on Wednesday night. Some half-a-dozen Members jointly issued a circular and invitations. Messrs Gandhi and Ally spoke and then the meeting passed a resolution requesting Lord Elgin to accede to the demand of the Indian Deputation. Many people think that the large meeting of Members of the House of Commons was the first of its kind in recent times. This shows that our cause is being widely discussed.

MEETING WITH AMEER ALI

Both the members of the Deputation had a private interview with Mr. Ameer Ali, during which he expressed much sympathy for our cause and also promised to write on it, if possible, for prominent papers here.

INTERVIEW WITH LORD HAMILTON

Lord George Hamilton heard us patiently for half an hour. It will be recalled that he was at one time the Secretary of State for India. He has agreed to go into the question fully and do his best.

This matter is often discussed in South Africa and other papers. South Africa also published an interview¹ with Mr. Gandhi on Mr. Tatham’s Bill. The correspondent has given a correct report of the interview.

A copy of the petition submitted to Lord Elgin has been sent to every Member of Parliament with a courteous covering letter.

A letter² seeking an interview with Mr. Morley has been despatched today. It will probably materialize next week. The Deputation has still so much work to do that it will be very difficult for it to leave on November 24.

SOUTH AFRICAN STUDENTS IN ENGLAND

A petition has been specially sent to Lord Elgin by these students.³ In it they have asked to know what their own plight would be under the new law; but the petition covers the question of the rights of all the others as well. If Lord Elgin should say that separate laws would be made for those who had gone to England, he would be insulting the others; if, on the other hand, he should say that they would not get the rights, it would be gross injustice.

NATAL QUESTION

The Deputation is not concerned with Natal affairs. However, since Mr. Tatham’s Bill has been published and a cablegram about it has been received here, Mr. Gandhi has asked for a private interview with Lord Elgin.⁴ He has not yet given a definite reply, but has written saying that he will do so next week.

51. LETTER TO S. M. MUNGA

[Hotel Cecil,

November 10, 1906

DEAR MR. MUNGA:

I have your note. I addressed one to you yesterday, not knowing what your movements were.

Mr. Ally and I will be glad to dine with you next Saturday if it is convenient to you. Please let me know the time.

You have not told me how you are getting on, how you like the place, what the people are like and what they charge you, etc. We should like to have all information about the place. Please write to me fully. There is no excuse for you to give me only scrappy information.

52. LETTER TO SIR HENRY COTTON

[Hotel Cecil,
London,]
November 10, 1906

DEAR SIR HENRY,

You may have seen The Times report of the interview. In my opinion whoever gave the information, it was a shameful thing. Sir Lepel was very much annoyed about it, when I saw him yesterday.

Three reporters came to me on Thursday evening, and I replied that I could not possibly give them any information, as Lord Elgin wanted the interview to be treated as strictly private.

Mr. Adam of Reuter’s Agency has just come over to enquire whether any [member] of the deputation could have supplied The \footnote{Not available}

Times with the report. I have assured him that such a thing is not possible.

Sir Lepel is of opinion that the information must have been given by someone in the Colonial Office. Lord Elgin’s speech has been given practically word for word.

Mr. Adam suggests, and I entirely agree, that there should be a question in the House enquiring why it was that The Times was so favoured.

Believe me,

DEAR MR. WEST,

I must still keep you without a long letter and I fear I shall have to do so during the short time I remain here. It seems impossible for me to leave next week; not that I ever thought that there was much chance. I shall probably leave here on the 24th November.

I send you a copy of my letter to Mr. Polak.

I am going to see Miss Pywell tomorrow unless she countermands my letter posted yesterday.

I hope that Mrs. West is getting on nicely, that she is comfortable, and that Mrs. Gandhi received her well.

[Hotell Cecil,

November 10, 1906

MY DEAR OMAR,

I have not the time to write to you in Gujarati. I am dictating this at 9.45 p.m. I have done all I could for the Natal question; I have sought an interview with Lord Elgin. I received a reply on Wednesday saying that I should put down in writing what I had to state: I sent a reply the same day, stating shortly my contention and asking for a private and informal interview.² I have heard again today to the effect that a reply will be sent to me next week. I send you also a copy of South Africa containing an account of the interview with him. Beyond this I cannot go at present; I am too busy giving my attention to the Transvaal. I have, however, sent a cablegram suggesting 2 permanent committee here as I see that a great deal of work could be done with such a committee which should be not a Transvaal Committee but a South African Committee. I think that with careful management it could become a most efficient body.

I sent another cablegram yesterday asking for immediate authority as the committee must be formed while Mr. Ally and I are here. I hope I shall receive some reply tomorrow.

However, Lord Elgin, instead of giving a blank, negative reply, has promised to consider the proposal about the commission. There is therefore some hope yet left.

Sir,

We have the honour to submit for His Lordship’s information a cablegram received from the British Indian Association in Johannesburg, “Have affidavit Godfrey obtained signatures blank paper false pretence using name bias (code word for British Indian Association) signature now withdrawn, cabling Lord Elgin, papers published full report conference”.¹

From this it would appear that the Johannesburg papers have received a report of the proceedings of the Deputation and it is evidently on the strength of the reference therein to cablegram received by His Lordship from Indians in Johannesburg that the British Indian Association has sent the cablegram to His Lordship.

60. LETTER TO “THE TIMES”

HOTEL CECIL,
LONDON,
November 12, 1906

THE EDITOR
THE TIMES
PRINTING HOUSE SQUARE, E.C.

Sir,

By your leading article in The Times of the 10th instant on the British Indian question in the Colonies, you have lifted it from the platform of parochialism to that of Imperialism. For the present, however, we will be thankful if you will allow us to deal with the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance without touching the larger issue discussed by you.

You say:

It does not seem likely or desirable that a measure, which appears to be supported generally by the opinion of the people who are shortly to have power to make their own laws, should be refused the assent of the Crown.

We venture to take exception to your opinion for the following reasons:

1. You admit that upon the merits of the particular controversy aroused by the Ordinance there is “at present hardly evidence

¹ Also quoted in “Letter to Sir Henry Cotton”, 12-11-1906, but the text varies slightly.
² This letter was not published in The Times.
enough to form judgement”.

2. The Ordinance does not affect the broad question of Asiatic Immigration into the Transvaal, but it very materially alters to their prejudice the status of British Indians resident in the Colony.

3. It is not “a purely temporary measure”; for, while it is true that Mr. Duncan stated that it was introduced without prejudice to further legislation, there was no question of the Ordinance itself being “a temporary measure”. In its very nature it is not capable of being temporary, because it is intended to carry out once and for all, so it is said, registration of British Indians in the Transvaal, and to compel them to carry passes, euphemistically called registration certificates.

4. Instead of preserving the status quo and relieving the Asiatic residents from “certain manifest grievances”, it reduces their status and removes not a single grievance.

5. While the prejudice on the part of the general portion of the white community is admitted, the manner of giving effect to it is purely a creation of the Government and the Transvaal community is certainly not privy to the framing of the Ordinance. Its plan is undoubtedly drastic, but honest. If it had its own way, perhaps that portion of it which represents anti-Asiatic agitation will pass legislation involving deportation of Indian residents in the Colony. Such, in effect, it will be remembered, was the resolution passed by the so-called National Convention.

6. That the Transvaal is on the eve of getting Responsible Government is an additional reason why, instead of the British Indian position being prejudiced by the Ordinance in question, it should be so commended to the incoming Government as to bear the Imperial stamp; that is to say, the status of British Indians should be levelled up to that enjoyed by British Indians at the Cape.

7. There is absolutely no proof\(^1\) justifying a dangerous departure from the traditions of Crown Colony Government in the shape of invidious class distinctions.

\(^1\) Of a large unauthorized influx of Indians
8. Involving, as the question does, Imperial considerations of the highest order, the Imperial Government should think twice before sanctioning panic legislation which underlies the Ordinance.

The reasons we have above given for withholding the Royal sanction are also reasons showing why a commission should be appointed to go into the question, and to place such evidence before the public and the Government as is, on your own showing, at present lacking. You, Sir, have rightly said that every Indian returning from the Transvaal to India returns a missionary to sow discontent. We, who have the privilege of representing the community, can state that we have given only the most moderate expression to the sentiments of the thousands who attended the mass meeting referred to by you. It is not possible for us to describe in words the bitterness which animated that meeting regarding the measure. The lower the status of the Indian, the greater would be his hardship under the Ordinance. The well-to-do Indian may by reason of his position be able to escape the grossest forms of oppression which must inevitably flow from the Ordinance. Poor people were, under the registration effected by Lord Milner’s advice, dragged at four o’clock on a cold winter’s morning from their beds in Johannesburg, Heidelberg and Potchefstroom, and marched to the police station, or Asiatic Offices, as the case might be. It is they who under the Ordinance would be hustled by the Kaffir Police at every turn, and not the better-class Indians. They, therefore, feel the treatment more than we do, because to them their hardship is an ever-present reality.

The Indian community has all along contended that there is no unauthorized influx on a wholesale scale, that there is no attempt by the community to countenance any such influx, that the present machinery is absolutely effective to check unauthorized entry and the documents already held by Indians are sufficient for purposes of identification. If these statements are challenged, as they have been challenged, is it not at least in common fairness necessary to appoint a commission of enquiry [?]

DEAR SIR LEPEL,

I am obliged to you for your note. The Times leader is very important and certainly on the whole sympathetic.

May I venture to ask you to write a short letter to The Times emphasizing the question of discontent and the Imperial importance of the question.

I beg to enclose herewith copy of the letter written by Mr. Ally and myself to The Times.

I have been considering with Sir Muncherji the question of forming a permanent committee for the South African Indians. The work of the Deputation will be frittered away if it cannot be continued after its return to South Africa. If a small committee was formed it would be a very great assistance. May we rely upon your cooperation. Mr. Ally and I will be obliged if you will lend your name to the committee. A cable has just been received from Johannesburg sanctioning the formation of such a committee.

sir,

I am obliged to you for the copy of the Minutes of the deputation that waited on His Lordship on Thursday last. I note this copy is marked “Confidential”. His Lordship may have seen the report of the proceedings in The Times. I may state that four reporters

1 None of these is available. However, a letter from Sir Roper Lethbridge who was not a member of the deputation appeared in The Times, 12-11-1906. Sir Roper, who was editor of The Englishman, Calcutta, said that the entire British community in India was in sympathy with the representation of the Transvaal Indians to Lord Elgin.

2 Vide “Draft Letter to The Times”, 13-11-1906. It is dated November 13 and carries corrections in Gandhiji’s hand. Either the note was posted on November 13 or the draft letter was merely dated November 13 for the convenience of Sir Muncherji who was to send it to The Times under his signature.
came to me immediately after the interview and asked me to give them a report of the meeting. I told them that I was pledged by His Lordship to privacy. I was therefore somewhat surprised to find the report in The Times. I approached Sir Lepel Griffin, and he too expressed surprise. I am quite at a loss to understand how The Times secured the information. In view of the fact that a report of the proceedings has appeared in The Times and that it does not represent at all fully the statements submitted to His Lordship on behalf of British Indians, will His Lordship permit me to give a copy of the Minutes to the Press?

65. LETTER TO SIR HENRY COTTON

HOTEL CECIL,

November 12, 1906

DEAR SIR HENRY,

I am obliged to you for your note of the 12th instant. We have received today the following cablegram: “Have affidavits Godfrey obtained signatures blank paper false pretences using name bias (code word for British Indian Association). Signatures now with drawn. Cabling (Lord) Elgin. Papers publish full report conference.” This cablegram means that a full report has been published in Johannesburg and reference has evidently been made to the cablegram referred to by Lord Elgin. Mr. Ally and I know the gentleman well. Personally I can only say that he is a little insane. He is a medical man and has taken his degree at Edinburgh and in measures to be taken against the Ordinance he would go much further than we should. Indeed he even advocated violent measures, that is simply because there is no problem placed before him for solution but he loses his mental balance. There are other matters connected with Dr. Godfrey proving the statement made by me which I need not touch upon at any rate for the present. His two brothers are undergoing legal education here and they have signed the personal representation addressed to Lord Elgin of which they have sent you a copy. They too are enraged at their brother’s conduct and even went so far as to suggest that they should publicly disown his conduct. Mr. Ally and I have, however, told them that such a course is not at all necessary. As you have asked the question, I thought I should place the above information at your disposal.

November 13, 1906

THE EDITOR
THE TIMES
[LONDON]
sir,

All thoughtful men must welcome your weighty leader on the Transvaal British Indian question which has recently come to the fore by reason of the visit of the Indian Deputation from the Transvaal. I have carefully read and re-read your remarks and I must confess that all that you have stated goes conclusively to show that Lord Elgin cannot possibly advise His Majesty to sanction the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance. As Sir Lepel graphically put before Lord Elgin, “The toad under the harrow knows where and whether it is hurt!” The Ordinance which is supposed to relieve British Indians has given rise to the greatest irritation to the Indian community. You will perhaps give me the credit for knowing fairly intimately the British Indian question in South Africa which I have always considered to be one of the first-class magnitude. You, sir, have now very ably shown the Imperial importance of the question.

About a year ago, at a sitting of the Legislative Council of the Transvaal, Sir George Farrar suggested that a commission should be sent to the Transvaal to enquire into the whole position. I immediately accepted the proposition and approached Mr. Lyttelton who, had he been still at the Colonial Office,¹ I doubt not, would have appointed a commission.

In view of the approaching Colonial Conference, it becomes doubly imperative that the Imperial Government should appoint such a commission so that the Conference may have reliable data before it to go upon. There can be no conceivable objection from any quarter to the appointment of such a commission. Not to prejudge the case it will be only reasonable to withhold the Royal sanction for the Ordinance in question, pending the report of any such commission that may be appointed.

I re-echo your opinion regarding the terrible discontent that is being spread by British Indians from South Africa. As you very properly say, it is not a question of political disabilities but one of inability to enjoy the ordinary rights of a British subject or even a human being in a civilized country. If the Colonies persist in their policy of exclusion, they will force on the mother country for solution a very serious problem which the late Sir William Wilson Hunters² used to reiterate in your columns, namely, “Is India to remain a part of the British Dominions or not?” He who runs may read that England will find it difficult to hold India if her people, immediately they migrated to British Colonies, are to be insulted and degraded as if they belonged to barbarous race.

88. LETTER TO “THE TIMES”

[THE EDITOR
THE TIMES
LONDON
SIR,]

Perhaps it is necessary for me to say a word about the “petition” from certain Indians regarding the British Indian Deputation from the Transvaal which was the subject matter of question and answer in Parliament as reported in your issue of yesterday’s date. It is said therein that I do not possess any mandate, that I am a professional agitator and that my advocacy of the Indian cause has resulted in harm being done to the Indians.

\[1\] This was not published in The Times.

The appointment of my colleague and myself was made unanimously at a public meeting. We hold a document to that effect.¹ The mass meeting at Johannesburg which was convened by me as Secretary to the British Indian Association approved of the principle of the Delegation. The first signatory to this “petition” was present at the meeting and spoke strongly in support of all the principal resolutions. He, moreover, offered himself as one of the delegates but was not accepted. The “petition” is signed by two Indians. It is necessary to distinguish the “petition” from a paper purporting to have been signed by 437 Indians and repudiating our mandate. As to this, the following cable was received by the Delegates from Johannesburg on the 10th instant: “Have affidavits Godfrey obtained signatures blank paper false pretences using name bias (code word for the British Indian Association, Transvaal) signatures now with drawn cabling (Lord) Elgin papers publish full report conference.” The foregoing cable was evidently sent on the telegraphic report of the interview sent by the Press correspondents.

The incident does not mean that the two signatories of the “petition” approve of the Asiatic Ordinance. On the contrary, in their opinion evidently I am the mischievous cause of the legislation which they detest as much as the other Indians. Their attitude resolves itself into personal objection to me and not into one of approval of the Ordinance.

As I have been allowed by the Colonial Office to see the “petition”—I know that the expression “professional agitator” means a paid agitator—I may then state that the thirteen years’ service rendered by me to my countrymen has been a labour of love and [a matter of the] keenest pleasure to me.

Opinions may differ as to the usefulness or otherwise of my services. The late Sir John Robinson considered that they were not useless. Mr. William Hosken and others in the Transvaal also encourage me in the work I am trying to do, namely, to cement the relations between the European and the British Indian subjects in South Africa by removing all cause for misunderstanding.

The only reason for tendering this explanation is that the sacred mission which I have come here to discharge may not be prejudiced in the eyes of the public by leaving unchallenged the allegation in question.

I have just been talking to a valued friend¹ about the conversation we had yesterday. He is a missionary belonging to the Arya Samaj of the Punjab. The Samaj is to Hinduism what Protestantism is to Catholicism. The missionary friend is under a vow of poverty and his talents are devoted to the work of education combined with religion. He is an M.A. of Punjab University but in order to increase his usefulness he is staying in London and studying for the London M.A. I suggested to him that, if he could enter a quiet, nice English home, he would be able to see the real culture and beauty of English life which would be of immense use in his work. At the same time he is to live as cheaply as possible. Do you know a home that would take him without pecuniary consideration? Of course he

92. LETTER TO W. T. STEAD

HOTEL CECIL,
LONDON,
November 16, 1906

DEAR SIR,

As you were good enough to show very great sympathy with the cause of British Indians in the Transvaal, may I suggest your using your influence with the Boer leaders in the Transvaal? I feel certain that they did not share the same prejudice against British Indians as against the Kaffir races but as the prejudice against Kaffir races in a strong form was in existence in the Transvaal at the time when the British Indians immigrated there, the latter were immediately lumped together with the Kaffir races and described under the generic term “Coloured people”. Gradually the Boer mind was habituated to this qualification and it refused to recognize the evident and sharp distinctions that undoubtedly exist between British Indians and the Kaffir races in South Africa.

If you were to place this position before them in your own graphic style and show to them that British Indians have an ancient civilization behind them, that they do not aspire to any political power in the Transvaal, that they are a mere handful, i.e., 13,000, and that further immigration can easily be regulated without accentuating class difference, I have no doubt that some at least of the Boer leaders would listen to you and give effect to your suggestions.

The Indian community in the Transvaal will feel deeply grateful to you if you could see your way to influence the Boer mind in the direction I have ventured to suggest to you.

November 16, 1906

DEAR MR. POLAK,

I haven’t a moment to spare for any leading articles or matter. You will see from India a question and answer regarding the Godfrey petition. Is it not a strange irony of fate that, while the doctor is madly doing all he can to injure the cause, his two brothers here are doing and rendering all the assistance in their power to further the cause? Arithmetically, therefore, any evil effect produced by the activity of the one should be neutralized, especially when it is remembered that the activity of the two is in the direction of the right course. Sir Muncherjee has addressed a letter to The Times on it. So have I.¹ I

I may have to cable next week for information.

We meet Mr. Morley on the 22nd. I think the deputation will be strong. Sir Lepel Griffin will head it.

A room has been engaged for the permanent committee at £40 per year. Furniture has been bought for £25. Sir Muncherjee will probably be the chairman. More later.

I am afraid that we cannot leave before the 1st week of next month because the committee will require organizing and there will be some work to be done after the interview with Morley.

We had an exceedingly nice chat with Mr. Stead. He has promised to do all he can. I have therefore suggested to him that he should write to his Boer friends to distinguish between Coloured people belonging to different nationalities. ²

96. INTERVIEW TO “SOUTH AFRICA”²

November 16, 1906

With reference to the “petition” signed by Dr. W. Godfrey and C. M. Pillay, apparently on behalf of 437 other British Indians, who disclaim having given Mr. M. K. Gandhi any mandate to represent them in England, (which formed the subject of a question in the House by Sir Henry Cotton last week) Mr. Gandhi has stated to a representative of South Africa that a cablegram has been received from Johannesburg stating that the signatures of the 437 British Indians mentioned were obtained on blank paper by Dr. Godfrey, using the name of the British Indian Association.

Mr. Gandhi said:

So far as the position of the Ordinance itself is concerned, it is not affected by the petition (which is signed only by Dr. Godfrey and an interpreter named C. M. Pillay), as Dr. Godfrey was the strongest opponent of the Ordinance at the mass meeting held at the old Empire Theatre in September, when it was decided to send a Deputation to England. The only reason I can assign for his action is that he was very much annoyed because he himself was not elected as one of the delegates when the matter came before the committee appointed at that meeting to nominate the representatives to go to London. The petition of Messrs Godfrey and Pillay represents that I am a “professional political agitator”. As to that statement it can only arise from ignorance or wilful misrepresentation, because my services to my fellow-countrymen in South Africa for the last thirteen years have been purely a labour of love, and a matter of the keenest pleasure to me.

Mr. Gandhi, in conclusion, showed a document, dated “Johannesburg, October 1, 1906,” and signed “Abdool Ganie, Chairman, British Indian Association,” certifying that “M. K. Gandhi, Esquire, Honorary Secretary of the British Indian Association, and Hajee Ojer Ally, Esquire, President of the Hamidia Islamic Society, have been elected as Delegates to proceed to London for the purpose of submitting to the Imperial authorities the Indian view of the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, as also to interview friends in England of British Indians in South Africa.”

97. MEETING AT LONDON INDIAN SOCIETY

[After November 16, 1906]

At a well-attended meeting of the London Indian Society, on the 3rd November, at 84 and 85, Palace Chambers, Westminster, the Hon’ble Dadabhai Naoroji in the chair, Mr. James Godfrey of Natal, who is at present keeping his terms for the Bar and has passed his final examination, gave a paper under the above title. Below is given a condensation of the paper:

Since my arrival here, I have had ample opportunities of studying these people and I hope to show you that there are very many valuable lessons to be learnt from them.

Let us examine and analyse them and see what qualities have made them what they are and what are the potent factors which are securing for them the universal triumph which seems to be growing larger and larger every day, and which must command the admiration of even their bitterest enemies. I was led to make this examination myself owing to what I felt were unsatisfactory replies given to me by a large number of our countrymen when leaving this land for home. Invariably I put them the question: “What has England taught

1 This is a report of the meeting held on November 3, and was published in Indian Opinion as “specially contributed”. It was written by Gandhiji; vide “Letter to H. S. L. Polak”, 16-11-1906.

you or what improvements have you in mind to suggest to your people when you return?” And to such questions I received the painful and saddening reply to the effect that they had been too much occupied with their immediate studies and occupations to devote any time to or concern themselves about the people or things surrounding them. As to improvements at home, that is a question which affects local interests and, therefore, must necessarily need local consideration, etc. Now gentlemen, I put it to you that such replies are anything but satisfactory. Whether this be the frame of mind of the majority who go back, I will not take upon myself the responsibility of stating. I hope I shall be told I am mistaken. Be that as it may, the knowledge of the fact of even one of us returning home in this mood of utter indifference and doubt, I feel, amply justifies a reference to the subject in a paper of this kind. The Englishman abroad is one person and the Englishman at home is quite another. In the first case he proves himself to be a veritable tyrant and a despot, but in the second case, i.e., in England, few will say that he is not a desirable person.

From this you will see, therefore, that we actually arrive in this country with more or less prejudiced views and ideas, and apparently some never seem to get beyond that stage, and can never see or appreciate any good in the Englishman. We never seem to realize that we have come all the way from home in order to benefit ourselves and secure that experience and status which it is somewhat difficult for us to secure in our own land. We come, not with the intention of merely qualifying in some particular profession, but of simultaneously gaining that wider experience of the world and its ways which can only be had by travelling in foreign countries. We defeat the very object of our visit to this country if we do not carry away with us some of the multifarious benefits derived by our sojourn here. We want, after our staying here, to go back with the very best that the place can give us... If we don’t, the loss is ours and we are not doing our duty to ourselves, much less to our country.

The success of the Japanese is admitted on all hands to have been due chiefly to their having, for the last 40 years or more, sent out students and specialists for the express purpose of eliciting the best information, learning the newest and latest inventions and carrying back the cream of Europe’s learning, advancement and ideas of progress, all for the benefit of their country. Mark you, they did not only carry this knowledge and ideas back, but they actually applied them with a result and success which have astonished the whole world.

Let us try and reckon up some of their good points only and see if they are worth copying. The bad points we leave aside. Throughout their whole history, we find that they have displayed a remarkable spirit of love for freedom and independence. Did they not have to fight for this bit of land which they now proudly call England? Did they not have both internal and external foes and that through many centuries? The wonderful genius of the race seems to have conspired with the strengthening influence of the place itself in securing a sure, certain and steady progress onward. The great American writer, R. W. Emerson, says: ‘These Saxons are the hands of mankind. They have the taste for toil, a distaste for pleasure or repose and the telescopic appreciation of distant gain. They are the wealth-makers and by dint of mental faculty which has its own conditions and terms. The Saxon works after liking or only for himself and to set him at work and begin to draw his monstrous values out of barren Britain, all dishonour, fret and barrier must be removed and then his energies begin to play.’

We see then that the whole mind of the race, so to say, has been expanding proportionately. They have persevered in it and kept up an even game. The English game appears to be one of main force to main force, the planting of foot to foot, fairplay and open field, a rough tug without trick or dodging. One cannot entertain any reasonable doubt of their ability and energy. Just realize for one moment the nature of the lightly artificial construction of the whole fabric here. The very climate and geography are in themselves matters which are contrary to such conditions as would enhance a natural existence. Bacon says: ‘Rome was a state not subject to paradoxes, but England subsists by antagonisms and contradictions and is a perfect museum of anomalies.’ Is it not true, though it has been humorously said, that ‘no fruits ripen in England but a baked apple’, and, again, is it not equally true that no indigenous animal worth the mention has ever before flourished in this country in comparison with other countries? Yet in spite of these natural difficulties they have, owing to their dogged perseverance, tact, zeal and energy, driven all before them and are now at the top of the tree. There seems to be some secret power which permeates the whole nation and makes for progress. They have pride and affection for their race. Do we not hear everyone of them boasting and priding himself on the fact of his being an Englishman? Does he not flout it to your face at every turn that because he is an Englishman therefore he rules? They have solidarity or responsibility and trust in each other. It has been said of the Englishmen that ‘they embrace their cause with more tenacity than their lives’.

The paper was very well received. Messrs B. J. Wadia, M.A., Parmeshwar Lall, M.A., J. Gowrieshanker, M.A., Nathuram, Dwarka Das and several other gentlemen who took part in the discussion congratulated the lecturer on his broad-mindedness and the ability with which he had written his paper. Some of the speakers thought that Mr. Godfrey had over-drawn the picture in favour of the Englishman, but Mr. Godfrey in his reply, whilst thanking the members for their sympathetic reception, said that he had purposely left out the other side of the Englishman’s character, but he wanted to place before the members of the Society what he considered was best in his character and what was worthy of imitation. A vote of thanks to the lecturer and to the Chair brought the proceedings to a close.

Turkish Empire), Mrs. Hamid Beg, Miss Faizi (who is a scholar of Madras University and who is now training as an educationist), His Excellency Muin-ul-Vizarat (Charge d’Affaires of the Persian Legation), Dr. Pollen and many others.

Mr. M. H. Kidwai, of Lucknow, received the guests.

Mr. Sohraworthy, the retiring Secretary, has had a distinguished career in London. He is a much-travelled man and is the author of Malki Law, as also the Sayings of Mahomed. He has made Pan-Islamism his life work, and in his striking, though somewhat lengthy speech, he clearly showed that the object of Pan-Islamism was to bring together under its fold the different sects of Mahomedans and carry on a peaceful propaganda of the faith of the Prophet with a view to promote universal brotherhood.

This Society, which was originally called the Anjuman-e-Islam, was founded in 1886 in London. On the 23rd of June, 1903, it was renamed the Pan-Islamic Society. Mr. Ameer Ali was at one time President of this body.

The following are the avowed objects of the Society:

(a) To promote the religious, social, moral and intellectual advancement of the Mussulman world.

(b) To afford a centre of social union to Muslims from all parts of the world.

(c) To promote brotherly feelings between Muslims, and to facilitate intercourse between them.

(d) To remove misconceptions prevailing among non-Muslims regarding Islam and Mussulman.

(e) To render legitimate assistance to the best of its ability to any Muslim requiring it in any part of the world.

99. DRAFT QUESTIONS FOR MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

[Before November 17, 1906]

QUESTION I

Has the Right Hon’ble the Colonial Secretary received a petition from Mr. Abdul Ganie, Chairman of the British Indian Association of the Transvaal, regarding the Vrededorp Stands Ordinance published in the Transvaal Government Gazette dated September 28 last? Will His Lordship advise His Majesty, under the power reserved under the Letters Patent, to disallow the Ordinance, in that it imposes on British Indians and other Coloured people a restriction as to holding leases of or remaining in occupation of Stands in Vrededorp?

Is it not a fact that Vrededorp is contiguous to a Location called the Malay Location and inhabited largely by British Indians?

Is it not a fact that British Indians are already in occupation of several Stands in Vrededorp, that some of them have built substantial structures on some Stands and that they are carrying on their trade on such Stands?

Is it not also a fact that many British Indians resided in Vrededorp during the Dutch regime and that there was no objection taken to their presence during that time?

QUESTION II

In view of the foregoing question does it not appear to the Right Hon’ble the Secretary of State for the Colonies necessary that an impartial commission should be appointed to investigate the whole question of the status of British Indians in the Transvaal?

1 These four questions appear to have been drafted by Gandhi for Members of Parliament. The fourth one at any rate was sent to J. D. Rees with the covering letter (p. 181) dated November 17, 1906. The question was put to Churchill on November 22, 1906. Both the question and the answer were reproduced in India, 1-12-1906.
QUESTION III

Is there any precedent for legislation in the British Colonies after the manner of the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance published in the Transvaal Government Gazette dated the 28th September, 1906?

Is it not a fact that in no part of His Majesty’s Dominions are British Indians, occupying the status of British Indians in the Transvaal, made to carry passes contemplated by the said Ordinance?

QUESTION IV

Has the Right Hon’ble the Secretary of State for the Colonies seen the report of an appeal heard by the Supreme Court of the Transvaal on the .... day of.... ' in the matter of Rex v. Mahomed Hafejee Moosa wherein a British Indian lad under eleven years of age, living with his father, was arrested and charged before the Magistrate at Volksrust, found guilty, sentenced to pay a fine of £50 or to undergo imprisonment for a period of three months and to leave the Transvaal after the completion of his term of imprisonment or paying the fine as the case may be?

Is His Lordship aware that the Supreme Court has quashed the conviction and made scathing comments condemning the administration of the Peace Preservation Ordinance regarding the British Indians? What action do the Government intend to take in connection with the matter?

DEAR MR. HALL,

Mr. Naoroji has paid £3.10.0 for a cable he sent to the British Indian Association in Johannesburg in connection with the Asiatic Ordinance. The Acting Secretary of the Association now writes to me that he has received a memo from Mr. Naoroji. Will you kindly refund the amount to Mr. Naoroji out of the funds sent to the Committee for disbursements about the Ordinance. I had intended to speak to you about it when I saw you at Palace Chambers. I have been so much pressed for work that I have not been able to attend at the Palace Chambers as often as I should like to. Last Tuesday we met but the matter quite escaped me.

DEAR MR. NAOROJI,

I have your notes. I had hoped that I would be able to wait on you personally and explain the letters from Mr. Polak. However, I have been so very busy in connection with the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance that I have not been able to do so.

Now that Tatham’s Bill has been rejected by the Natal Assembly, nothing remains to be done for the present.

The petition¹ from Mr. Abdul Ganie you have dealt with already.

I return Mr. Polak’s letters addressed to you for your file.

DEAR SIR,

I thank you for your letter of the 14th instant together with enclosures. The young man\(^1\) for whom I have written to you,\(^2\) is to study for the Matriculation Examination at the same time that he is studying for the Bar. He has already kept some terms. His previous education is very poor and it is necessary for him, if he is to hold his own in future, to go as far as the Matriculation of London University. The young man will stay there, or anywhere he is put, the whole of his time. His previous certificate given to him by the Head Master of the Higher Grade Indian School in Durban is filed with the Steward of Lincoln’s Inn. Would you require production of the certificate or will a certificate from me be considered enough? I may state that he is not a Christian but a Hindoo.

I notice that the current term is half finished; will there be any reduction on that account?

109. DEPUTATION NOTES - II

HOTEL CECIL,
LONDON,
November 17, 1906

INTERVIEWS WITH LEADERS: SYMPATHY AND PROMISE OF HELP

The last week has been very busy. We have had not a moment’s leisure. We saw Mr. Theodore Morison of Aligarh and the well-known Mr. Stead of the Review of Reviews. Mr. Stead has boldly come out to give us all the help he can. He was therefore requested to write to the Boer leaders that they should not consider Indians as being on the same level as Kaffirs.

We also saw Miss Smith, a lady who contributes to the Punjabee and the Amrita Bazar Patrika. Miss Winterbottom, the Secretary of the Union of Ethical Societies, has promised to render all possible help.

We had an interview on Transvaal and Natal matters with the Private Secretary to Lord Elgin. We talked about many things, and we may hope for some satisfactory results. From Mr. Churchill’s reply to Sir Henry Cotton it appears that, for the present at least, the Ordinance will not receive assent.

The Pan-Islamic Society has made a representation to Lord Elgin, saying that the feelings of the Muslim community have been greatly hurt by the application of the Ordinance to Turkish Muslims, while the Christians and the Jews of Turkey have been excluded from its purview. Thus, help is being received from all quarters.

Mr. Ally had an interview with Sir Richard Solomon and because of this too, we have some ground for hope.

DR. GODFREY’S PETITION

There is no rose without thorns. And these hopes have a thorn in the shape of Dr. Godfrey’s petition. I am not depressed on this account. Neither need it hurt our feelings. We should not be angry with Dr. Godfrey. He is a child and lacks understanding. Often he is unaware of his own folly. He deserves pity rather than scorn. Lord Elgin’s secretary showed us his petition, in which he states that the Indian community has given no authority to Messrs Gandhi and Ally. Mr. Gandhi was a paid agitator and had amassed money through that trade. The whites of Durban had beaten him up in 1896 and driven him away. His activities had resulted in great harm and created differences between the whites and the Coloured people. One Mr. Abdool Gani was the Chairman [of the British Indian Association] and he knew nothing [of all this]. Mr. Ally was a rebel who wanted to establish the authority of the Calif in political matters also. The petition bears the signatures of Dr. Godfrey and Mr. C. M. Pillay. They also state that many persons did not sign the petition as they were afraid of the Association. Besides the petition, there is a document which is said to have been signed by 437 Indians. It says that Messrs Gandhi and Ally have no authority to act on behalf of the Indian community. The best part of the petition is now known to the public as Sir Henry Cotton asked a question about it in Parliament. As the question was raised by many, Sir Muncherji has addressed a letter [to The Times] on it, but this has not yet been published. Mr. Gandhi, too, has written one. And the two brothers of Dr. Godfrey who have been actively assisting the Deputation have also written to the Press. When all these letters are published, it is expected that the storm will blow over. It is necessary that all this news be published; it need not, however, cause any nervousness.

ARTICLES IN LONDON “TIMES”

A formidable article appeared last Saturday in The Times. A copy of it was despatched last week. In the article written by Sir Roper Lethbridge also, it is stated that India is very unhappy because of the sufferings of the Indian community.

PERMANENT COMMITTEE

The cablegram sanctioning the setting up of the permanent committee has been received. Accordingly a room has been rented for a year; £40 will have to be paid as rent. Sir Muncherji has helped a lot. He will probably become the chairman of the committee. Furniture worth £25 has been purchased. It is proposed to give a thanksgiving dinner to all the gentlemen who have helped us, and to announce the formation of the committee on that occasion. As the time is short, it remains to be seen how much of all this can be done. Mr. Ritch will work as secretary of the committee. As his financial position is not satisfactory, a nominal sum of £7.10.0 to £10 a month will have to be paid to him. He will give all his time to the committee. He is speaking on the 26th before the East India Association. If possible, I shall give a summary of his speech next week. There is reason to hope that much of our work can be looked after by the committee. It should receive help from all over South Africa. Sir Muncherji has suggested that it may be named South Africa British Indian Vigilance Committee.

To
The Private Secretary of
The Earl of Elgin
Secretary of State for the Colonies
Colonial Office
Downing Street

Dear Sir,

With reference to the interview that Mr. Ally and I had with you and Mr. Just in connection with the “petition” received from Dr. Godfrey and another and the papers said to be signed by 437 Indians and in connection with matters arising out of His Lordship’s reply to the Deputation that waited on him on the 8th day of November, in accordance with your instructions, Mr. Ally and I submit herewith a written statement for submission to His Lordship.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
M. K. Gandhi

Enclosure

[Enclosure]

Statement by the Delegates on Behalf of the British Indians in the Transvaal Regarding the “Petition” from Dr. William Godfrey and Another and Other Matters

“The Petition”

1. The “petition” is signed by Dr. William Godfrey and C. M. Pillay both of whom are personally known to the Delegates.

2. Petitioner William Godfrey is a doctor of Edinburgh University and is practising in Johannesburg.

3. The petitioner C. M. Pillay is an interpreter of no standing. He has been found to be the worse for liquor and may be described as a loafer.

The Collected Works of Mahatma Gandhi
4. So far as the recollection of the Delegates serves rightly, the points made in the “petition” are as follows:

(a) Delegates have no mandate from the general body of Indians.

(b) Mr. Gandhi is a professional agitator who has made money out of his work.

(c) Mr. Gandhi has caused an estrangement between Europeans and Indians and his advocacy has resulted in harm to the community.

(d) He was mobbed at Durban by the European community.

(e) He is proprietor of Indian Opinion.

(f) Mr. Ally is Chairman and founder of a politico-religious body which has as its object recognition of the Sultan as both the spiritual and political head of the Moslems.

(g) A Mr. Abdul Ganie is President of the British Indian Association.

(h) The petitioners have not been able to receive support for their contentions because of the intimidation on the part of the British Indian Association.

5. As to (a), the Delegates enclose herewith letter signed by the Chairman of the British Indian Association. Their election was unanimous. It took place at a meeting of the Association that was largely attended. There was no protest sent to the Association although the election was before the public for a long time.

6. As to (b), Mr. Gandhi has received no remuneration for his public work throughout his thirteen years’ career. He has from time to time contributed to the funds of the Association. The work has been purely a labour of love. His Lordship is further referred to correspondence that took place in The Star of Johannesburg on the 25th October in refutation of a somewhat similar statement made by The Star on the 23rd October.

7. As to (c), Mr. Gandhi is totally unaware of any estrangement having taken place between Europeans and Indians by reason of his advocacy; on the contrary, his supreme effort has been to bring about a reconciliation between the two communities, such being the avowed object of the Natal Indian Congress, of which he was the honorary Secretary and one of the founders, [and] of the British Indian Association of which he is the present Secretary. On this point His Lordship is further referred to the following letter from the late Sir John Robinson, which is one among many received from distinguished residents at the time of his departure for India in 1901:

I beg to thank you for your kind invitation to the meeting at the Congress Hall this evening (October 15, 1901). It would have given me great pleasure to have been present on the occasion of so well-earned a mark of respect to our able and distinguished fellow-citizen, Mr. Gandhi, but unfortunately my state of health prevents my going out at night, and I am for the present debarred from taking part in any public function, so I must ask you to kindly excuse my inability to attend. Not the less heartily do I wish all success to this public recognition of the good work done and the many services rendered to the community by Mr. Gandhi.¹

The chief reason for his having organized the Indian Ambulance Corps at the time of the Boer War and the Indian Stretcher[-Bearer] Corps at the time of the Native Rebellion, was to bring about such [re]conciliation, by showing that British Indians were not unworthy to be citizens of the Empire and were capable of recognizing their obligations if they also insisted on their rights.

8. As to (d), it is true that Mr. Gandhi was mobbed on the 13th January, 1897 on his return from India on a misrepresentation about his advocacy of the Natal Indian cause in India. Public apology was given to him on the 14th and when the whole of the position became known, the late Mr. Escombe invited him to see him and ever since that time he had the privilege of enjoying the late Mr. Escombe’s friendship. The late Mr. Escombe at his request blessed the leaders of the Natal Indian Ambulance Corps and of his own accord gave them a tea party and made a very eulogistic and public-spirited speech on the occasion.² After the mobbing incident, he remained in Durban up to his return to India in 1901.

³ ibid.
9. As to (e), it is true that Mr. Gandhi is the real proprietor of Indian Opinion from which no profits are made and to which he has devoted the whole of his savings. There are two Englishmen associated with him in that work and they and several Indians have, for the sake of the paper, reduced themselves to voluntary pauperism. The paper is being run on Tolstoy’s and Ruskin’s lines. Its publicly declared mission is to bring the two communities together and become an educative medium for the Indian community.

10. As to (f)\(^1\), the terms in which Mr. Abdul Ganie has been spoken of are most derogatory and a product of ignorance. He is the managing partner of one of the most flourishing firms of Indian merchants in South Africa. Mr. Abdul Ganie has been the unchallenged President of the Association since its inception. He is a resident of the Transvaal of 25 years’ standing and has come in contact with most of the British officials including High Commissioners and is very well known and is respected by European merchants of standing.

11. As to (g)\(^2\), Mr. Ally’s whole life in South Africa, that is to say a period of twenty-three years, has been devoted to the service of the Empire. He had the honour of coming in personal touch with Sir Richard Solomon, the late Lord Loch, the late Lord Rosemead, Dr. Jamieson, Sir Gordon Sprigg, Sir James Sievright and the present officials in the Transvaal. He was asked by the Cape Government, at the time of the Malay discontent; regarding the position of a burial ground, to quell the discontent which he was successful in doing and for which he was thanked by the Government. This was in 1885; He has had the honour often to speak—being a voter himself at the Cape—on public platforms in support of the British Party candidate as opposed to Bond candidates. His free services were utilized by the Uitlander Committee for receiving signatures to the petition that was forwarded to the late Queen in connection with the Uitlander grievances.

It is untrue that the Hamidia Islamic Society, of which he is the Founder and President, has as its object recognition of the Sultan as the political head of the Moslem world. It is formed essentially to help poor Moslems, to defray the expenses of the burials of poor Moslems, to do among them the work of social regeneration and to remove their special hardships.

Sir Richard Solomon, whom Mr. Ally saw on Friday last, has kindly consented that his name might be mentioned to His Lordship as guarantee of his intense loyalty and devotion to the Empire, if such be needed.

12. As to (h), the allegation of intimidation is devoid of foundation. Poor people, who would be the greatest sufferers under the Ordinance, do not require the slightest encouragement to make an effort for their deliverance from the impending calamity, for such it undoubtedly is to them.

The Delegates respectfully claim to be the most moderate exponents of the sentiments of over 10,000 Indians in the Colony of the Transvaal. It is not possible to give His Lordship an adequate notion of the bitter feeling engendered by the Ordinance. Many Europeans, including a government official, were present at the great Mass Meeting, which resolved, without a dissentient voice, to send a deputation. The visitors fully realized the depth of feeling to which the community was moved. His Lordship is referred for a description of the meeting to The Star, The Leader and The Rand Daily Mail which published fairly full reports of the meeting.

SUGGESTED EXPLANATION OF PETITIONER’S CONDUCT

13. Dr. Godfrey is a hot-headed youth, without any experience of practical life in the world. He only finished his studies over two years ago. He has never before, except in connection with the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, come forward to do public work. He himself attended the Mass Meeting and spoke on the principal resolutions, including the resolutions condemning the Ordinance, appointing a commission and advocating going to gaol in preference to the submission to the carrying of passes. When the time came for selecting the delegates, he came forward as a candidate but was not selected. He sent a telegram at Cape Town wishing success to Mr. Ally and has given him a note of introduction to his wife’s parents in Edinburgh, which reads as follows:

This is to introduce to you one of our best of friends Mr. H. O. Ally. He is leaving here to fight the Indian cause and after his battles he will no doubt take a trip to Scotland. He will wire by what train he will be coming up and on what date. By religion he is an Islam and as such I will write you in detail as to the modes of their living especially as regards to their food and I hope (after my next week’s letters) you will make him as happy and cheery as you can during his stay in Edinburgh. Don’t forget to let him have a sight of the glorious F. Bridge and our ain little wee lael home at Tynecastle Terrace. John I have no doubt will know Mr. Ally well. It is the same who gave him the confetti before he left.

Yours affectionately,

(signed) WILLIAM

The original is hereto attached for His Lordship’s inspection.

He was for a long time one of Mr. Gandhi’s clients and he was associated with Mr. Gandhi in nursing the plague patients in 1904 and at the time did very valuable work for the relief of the patients. The only way therefore his conduct can be explained is to ascribe it to his hot-headedness. The disappointment in this connection seems to have unhinged his mind. That appears to be the most charitable construction to place upon his conduct, otherwise his strong condemnation of the Ordinance, his strong recommendation to Mr. Ally, would be inconsistent with the despatch of the petition. From the following cablegram received by the Delegates and already sent to His Lordship, it would appear that 437 Indian signatures taken on a separate document have been received on false pretences:

Have affidavits Godfrey obtained signatures blank paper false pretences using name bias (code word for British Indian Association) signatures now withdrawn cabling (Lord) Elgin papers publish full report conference.

14. The Delegates have been obliged painfully and reluctantly to make the above statements, not in the slightest degree with the intention of injuring Dr. Godfrey or his associate and if they have been obliged to say anything regarding themselves, it is from a sense of paramount duty they owe to their countrymen, whose interests they have the honour to represent. As the personal element has been introduced here by the “petition” and in Johannesburg by The Star, it has become necessary to show respectfully to His Lordship that, so far as the personal element is to count in the controversy, the position held by the Delegates, in their humble opinion, would weigh, after the most searching examination in favour of the community. They would very much rather that the whole of the Ordinance were examined on its merits and they would therefore respectfully proceed to dwell upon some of the points that arise from His Lordship’s reply to the Deputation.

1 Vide “Letter to Private Secretary to Lord Elgin”, 12-11-1906.

LORD ELGIN’S REPLY: NO PERMIT UNDER LAW 3 OF 1885

15. His Lordship is under the impression that there were permits under the Law 3 of 1885 during the Boer regime and that the Boer administration was lax in the administration of the permit law. The Delegates respectfully venture to state that the Boer law did not require any permits at all. The receipts given for £3 therefore were not inaccurate. They were not permits authorizing entry or residence. There was no restriction on immigration contemplated by Law 3 of 1885, as the law itself shows. There was therefore no question of identification.

The permits came into vogue only after the introduction of the Peace Preservation Ordinance of the British regime.

This distinction is very material in order to show that the Asiatic Ordinance, now for consideration before His Lordship, is not an amendment but a new law. It does not make accurate that which was inaccurate under the Boer regime. It creates a new disability.

VOLUNTARY THUMB-MARKS

16. It is respectfully submitted that the voluntary act of the Indian community in putting thumb-marks on permits and registration certificates was performed gracefully to please Lord Milner and to avoid legislation compelling such performance. It is therefore hardly fair to use the act as a precedent against the community.

NEW REGISTRATION

17. The statement that new registration will give a final and indefeasible title to those who are registered is again, in the humble opinion of the Delegates, not in consonance with facts. The title of those who hold permits is today indefeasible in law. The new Ordinance would actually cancel that title and not give it. After dispossessing the community of what it already possesses, it will restore a new title of doubtful value circumscribed by galling requirements and penalties. It will, therefore, restore to the community only a part of what will be taken away from it.
INSPECTION

18. Under the new Ordinance, it is possible to carry on a daily inspection. The assurance given to His Lordship, that the inspection will be yearly, is beside the mark. There is no guarantee of the same executive authority remaining in office. The experience of the community almost invariably has been that arbitrary power given to the executive in South Africa has been arbitrarily and almost fully exercised against British Indians. When a restrictive law is passed against a community labouring under popular prejudice, the executive has been powerless to resist popular demand for full enforcement of restrictions. This has happened even with the present executive in respect of Law 3 of 1885 and Peace Preservation Ordinance. So much has this been the case that the Indian community has had to go to the Supreme Court in order to resist the attempt of the executive to read into the above laws meanings they are not ordinarily capable of bearing.

PRAYER

19. It is for the Indian community a matter almost of life and death. It is respectfully urged that the matter can only be properly sifted by a judicial commission. If His Lordship is not satisfied as to the full justice of the Indian contention, it is submitted that the decision should be suspended pending the inquiry of a commission.

141. DEPUTATION TO MORLEY

The following is a report of the interview between Mr. Morley, Secretary of State for India, and the deputation representing British Indians in South Africa:

[LONDON, November 22, 1906]

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN: I have the honour, sir, to head this deputation today in order to present to you two Delegates from South Africa, Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Ally.

I would like to say with reference to Mr. Gandhi and a somewhat silly petition which has been sent from South Africa against him and his mission that this was the work of some mischievous schoolboy, and every one who knows Mr. Gandhi, or has been associated with his work for many years, as I have been, knows his single-hearted devotion to this particular cause and that without any personal motive or any reward. His methods and his motives have been altogether disinterested—to this I can pledge myself.

One thing that I think I may say without presumption is this. No one knows better than you, sir, how strong the feeling of India is on this point. It has been brought before the India Office and the Colonial Office by successive Viceroy's and Indian Secretaries; and Colonial Secretaries themselves have, in reply to the memorials which I have had the honour myself to submit to them, expressed quite as warm sympathy with the grievances of the British Indians in South Africa as Indian Viceroy's or Indian Secretaries at home. That point does not require any elaboration: The position between England and her Colonies seems to me very much like that which is now existing between the Central Government of the United States and the State of California, and that position will become aggravated in many parts of the world. (‘Hear! Hear!’) The difficulty of the case is, of Corsica, exceedingly great. You have two opposite positions, one represented by the clear and somewhat crude position, which nevertheless has a dignified and a worthy basis—that every British subject under the English flag should be free in his person and to carry on everywhere, without interruption, honourably any occupation he may see fit to undertake. (‘Hear! Hear!’) That applies, sir, to the whole Empire, and it is met on the opposite side by the position, which opposes reduction of the wages of labour—so far as white people are concerned, of course, the desire, and the proper desire is that the rate of wages should rise. The introduction of a very industrious, temperate class, who can live on very little, tends to lower the rate of earnings of white people who cannot live on so small a sum. These are the two opposite poles, and they have to be connected peaceably by some bridge which we ask you, sir, to try and build.
And I would also say, sir, that for two reasons you are the one person who can satisfy the claims of this exceedingly complicated case. In the first place, you hold the keys which shut and which unloose as Secretary of State for India.

Let me explain in one word. Take Natal, for example. I have more than once, as Chairman of the East India Association, sent petitions to the Secretary of State for India, urging that no indentured coolies be allowed to go to Natal until the status of their fellow-subjects in South Africa is altered. Natal cannot get on without the Indians, and yet it persecutes them: and it persecuted them in old days much worse than the Transvaal did: and their position is no better now, although Natal requires Indian coolies every year more and more because English colonists cannot do the field work themselves. These are not countries which Englishmen can ever colonize.

That, sir, is all that I think it is necessary to say, but I shall make a final personal appeal to you by saying that the other reason why I think you of all men are the one who can settle this question is that one of the classics you have given to the English people is a work on compromise, in which I have very little doubt that the key to this exceedingly complicated question will be found.

MR. GANDHI: On behalf of my colleague, Mr. Ally and myself, I beg to tender you our respectful thanks for giving to us an opportunity of placing our position before you, sir. But I do not make any apology for trespassing upon your most valuable time, because I think, sir, that we have a right to come to you, our responsible advocate and trustee, whenever we find our interests are in danger. The Asiatic Ordinance was, as Sir Lepel Griffin has said, approved by Lord Elgin, I believe, under a misapprehension. The Ordinance, in my humble opinion, departs from the Colonial policy hitherto followed in connection with Colonial legislation. In my humble opinion it is without any justification whatever in that it draws, with reference to free immigrants, a colour-line against which Colonial Secretaries as well as Indian Secretaries have repeatedly protested, and protested with success. The Ordinance has been described by one of the South African colonists as one which will make us go about the streets with dog’s collars, and an indignant Indian at one of the meetings said that the treatment which would be meted out to us would be that, not of the colonial dog because he is a household pet, but of the Indian dog, which is a vile dog. I know that that was the bitterness of feeling that was engendered throughout the great mass of my community. I cannot help saying, sir, that the feeling that was given vent to by the great meeting at Krugersdorp was fully justified by the experience of British Indians over and over again throughout the Transvaal as well as other parts of South Africa The reasons given for the introduction of the Ordinance have been stated in an inspired article in The Star as well as by Mr. Duncan, viz., that there is an unauthorized influx of Asiatics or British Indians into the Transvaal, and that the British Indian community is countenancing and encouraging such Asiatic influx. I think, sir, that that charge, or both of the charges, can be proved to be absolutely false. When they talk of an unauthorized influx, they mean that the British Indians enter the Transvaal without any permits, evading the police, and entering surreptitiously in defiance of the Peace Preservation Ordinance, which should regulate the entry of all, but which really regulates the entry of British Indians into the Transvaal. The census was taken, and at the time of the census there were found to be 10,000 British Indians as against 12,000 permits, which by itself, in my humble opinion, disposes of the charge of surreptitious entry. If that charge is disposed of, it follows that there cannot be any encouragement on the part of the British Indian community.

1 The reference is to Morley's essay, On Compromise.

There have been during the last two years no less than 150 prosecutions—namely, 150 British Indians have been turned out by force. I do not know whether all these prosecutions were correctly brought, but the fact stands that these Indians were turned out. The Peace Preservation Ordinance has been strong enough to prevent Indian wives from accompanying their husbands; it has been strong enough to prevent Indian children of tender age from entering the Transvaal because they did not hold permits. The legislation that is at present in existence, the Peace Preservation Ordinance, is quite enough to prevent the surreptitious entry of British Indians. Anyhow, both these statements have been repeatedly denied by British Indians, and it is for that reason that we have been asking the local Government to appoint a small commission to inquire whether there has been really any such influx whatever.
I do not think, however, that it is necessary for me to take up a long time; I have sent in a representation to Lord Elgin, which places before him the whole of our position; but I do wish to mention one thing, and that is the colonial feeling. I have been studying the history of restrictive legislation throughout South Africa—at any rate, during the last thirteen years—and I well remember that in 1894 Lord Ripon vetoed the Disenfranchising Bill because it applied to Asiatics alone. Mr. Chamberlain disapproved of a draft bill that was submitted in 1897 in connection with a restriction on British Indians. Mr. Chamberlain then said that he could not allow a colour-line to be drawn in legislation with the object of restricting Asiatic and British immigration, and hence we had the law of 1897. A similar veto was applied without the slightest hesitation with reference to the Asiatic Exclusion Bill in the Australian Parliament. But, sir, in the Transvaal—also only last year, I believe it was, or in 1904—the Legislative Council passed the Native Land Tenure Bill, and I think it was passed without a single dissentient; but there was no hesitation whatsoever on the part of Mr. Lyttelton to veto the Land Tenure Bill. Now, sir, there is a wide distinction between that Bill and the present Ordinance, and I venture to think that there was not, perhaps, held so strong an objection to that legislation as there is to this legislation, because it did not debar the Natives of the Transvaal from holding landed property. It only meant Natives who held landed property; but even that was considered by Mr. Lyttelton as being too strong, and he had no hesitation in vetoing that legislation.

Much has been said with reference to the colonial sentiment against British Indians; I have no hesitation, sir, strange as it may appear, in denying any such sentiment. ‘The proof of the pudding is in the eating.’ The British Indians live in the Transvaal only because they are tolerated by the white colonists there. They may have to go to the British or white landlords for the land; they have to go to the white merchants for their goods, in respect of which they receive six months’ credit. If there was real substantial general opposition against British Indians, I think, sir, that their existence would not be worth a day’s purchase. A meeting was held by the Mayor of Krugersdorp, which was attended by a few white men, who passed a resolution that they would boycott British Indians in connection with land purchase and sale. That boycott did not stand for one single day. There is only one place throughout the Transvaal where they have tried to boycott with success. We think we shall be able to work out our own salvation.
if only the prejudice which is restricted to the petty white storekeepers who are protected by the Government is removed. If this is not done, I can quite understand that our position must become intolerable; but otherwise, I think, sir, that it is possible even now to retain the position that we have in the Transvaal.

Mr. Morley: Are you speaking now, Mr. Gandhi, of the position of those who are already resident in the Transvaal?

Mr. Gandhi: Yes, sir; the Ordinance applies solely to those who are now resident, and those who are to enter the Transvaal under the Peace Preservation Ordinance. I may say with reference to future immigration that my friend, Mr. Ally, will probably deal with that point; and I may parenthetically remark that we have surrendered the whole position, and we have accepted the principle of restriction along the line[s] of the Cape Act, the only Act which, without drawing a colour-line, restricts British Indians from entering the Colonies because of the educational test—a very severe test. But we have thought it wise and prudent that we should accept that position even with reference to trading licenses. We have said that we would be quite willing to have our rights with reference to new trading licenses regulated and controlled by the municipal bodies; only such legislation ought also to apply to all, and not only to British Indians. My experience is that, wherever legislation is applied to a class of people, such legislation has worked very harshly; but when there is general legislation, such relief is possible to obtain. I venture to think, sir, that the Government does not mean to oppress those who are voiceless and voteless. I mention this fact not because we want political power. We have made it clear that, so far as British Indians are concerned, they do not aspire to any political power at all. But if we are to remain voiceless, I do think the Government ought to protect those who are voiceless, and not merely in a haphazard way, but that protection ought to be a real force, and we look to you, sir, as our advocate and trustee, to give us the protection we are entitled to, and to let us feel that we have it. (Applause.)

Mr. Ally: I do not think it will be necessary for me, sir, to address you at length with regard to our mission. Mr. Gandhi has already submitted all the points and the facts. I am simply instructed by my community to place before you especially their position in the Transvaal. They feel—and feel keenly—that the Transvaal administration under the British Government are passing class legislation against them, whereas thousands of aliens of different races, such as Armenians, Syrians, Greeks, Russians, and Polish Jews, are entering the Transvaal without molestation and without any restriction. Our people remember the charter of 1857, as well as the message\(^1\) that the King sent to the Delhi Durbar—to the people—assuring them of their liberties under the British flag; therefore they feel it very keenly that they are oppressed and degraded by the passing of this Ordinance.

I have spoken to you with regard to the aliens. Now the great question is that European feeling—that is, the colonists'—is against us. The colonists have never asked in any shape or in any way to degrade our people in the Transvaal. They have asked for protection against our trade competition, which is very strong against them, and all that they desire, sir, is not to see a great influx of Asiatics into the Transvaal. We have from time to time said to the Government that we in the Transvaal are not desirous of seeing a great influx of Asiatics, and Mr. Duncan himself stated that the Imperial Government, with regard to the responsible government of the Transvaal, would deal with that question as well as with that of immigration. As we are not represented in the Legislative Council, the Imperial Government is our sole protector. Now, just to show you one point how this legislation and this Ordinance were thrust in. There was a clause which was unaffected by the new Ordinance, by which the descendants of the Dutch have been excluded from its operations, and yet no provision has been made for the Indian children born in South Africa, even when born in the Transvaal. Moreover, I personally pointed out to Mr. Duncan that it was unjust if you were to exclude any Asiatics who were born in South Africa, not to exclude the children of Indians. Now, just to show you how unjust it is, even under the Boer Government the Mahommedan subjects of the Sultan of Turkey were also affected by this Ordinance, but not the Christian subjects of the Sultan of Turkey. Now you can see how unjust this Ordinance is to Indians.

I do not think it necessary for me to go to any length, but I would say to you simply this: that the present permits that we hold under the Peace Preservation Act are quite sufficient for identification, and that they can trace any Indians who are in the Transvaal unlawfully without any permission. Therefore there is no necessity for them to pass a new Ordinance, or that we should be subjected to this degradation, as we hold these permits at the present time. We consider that it is directed against us, and we consider it, sir, an indignity. This Ordinance, we consider, is bad in principle, because it would be a precedent to self-governing Colonies. I would just draw your attention, sir, to the fact that, under the responsible government of the Cape Colony, where I was a resident for thirteen years myself, I had the Parliamentary franchise and the right of holding land and property, and also the right of mining, and there even up to the present moment we have got the same rights. Now, under the

\(^1\) King Edward's message of 1903
Crown Colony, legislation has been contemplated directly against Indians. Therefore my Mahommedan community have especially sent me here to put before you the position of the Indians in the Transvaal. We have a just right to claim from our Government the same privileges and the same rights as any other British Subjects, unless the British Government are prepared to consent to the millions of Indians who are outside India having no protection. If the British Government are prepared to say so, then our people would know better than to get out of India in order to get under the British flag in the Colonies. (Applause.)

Mr. H. Cox: I would like to make a very few remarks on this question... The Indian shopkeeper or the Indian trader is more efficient than the white shopkeeper, who, by the way, as Mr. Gandhi said, is generally, or often, not a British subject, but an alien from Southern Europe or Russia. The question, however, that the British Government now has to consider is whether to maintain a system of alien white shopkeepers as against British subjects. That is really the whole point: whether we are virtually to subsidize the alien shopkeeper in the Transvaal and to give him a preferential right to trade; and in connection with that arises the much larger question of the future race destiny of South Africa. From an examination of the statistics of population in South Africa, and especially of the growth of population, I am absolutely convinced that South Africa is not, and never can be, a white man’s land. The blacks are increasing at an enormously greater rate than the whites. It is true that in South Africa the white man can live and breed; but that he cannot engage in labourer’s work is admitted on all sides. So it has been suggested by several people that, because white men will not do manual work, therefore we ought to make special provision to allow them to do shopkeeping work. Now I think that is an intolerable position to take up. It is an injustice to the rest of the population as well as to the Indians who want to engage in this work. Indians are more patient, and succeed better with the Natives. Moreover, a great many of the white people in South Africa welcome these Indian traders, because they find they can get things more cheaply from them. An English lady told me that her husband objected to her dealing with Indian traders, but, nevertheless, she always dealt with them, because she found she got things cheaper.

... After all we have got to defend these Colonies. We pay for and provide the soldiers for the defence of the Transvaal. The position is therefore this: that when the Transvaal was a foreign country we claimed the right to interfere on behalf of our own subjects; now that it is our own Colony, defended by our own troops, we humbly withdraw and dare not oppose their will. If this is so, we may as well altogether abdicate our position as an Imperial race. (‘Hear! Hear!’)
Then it is, in fact, an alien majority, for not only are the white population mainly Boers, but the immigrant whites are largely aliens. Therefore if we assent to this—because I consider this, to a large extent, the turning of the ways—we as Englishmen and on behalf of England assent to this proposition that the larger number of the inhabitants of the British Empire are to be regarded as permanently in a lower category than the minority of the British Empire. That is a very serious proposition for any British Government, and especially a Liberal Government, to assent to. Therefore the particular point I have to submit to you, Mr. Morley—and Sir Lepel Griffin forgot to mention it—is this, that before the present Government sanctions any legislation hostile to British Indians they will send to South Africa a commission to inquire into the whole question and to report to them.

Lord Stanley of Alderley: . . . I may say, personally, that the prayer of the memorial falls very far short of my sense of what the justice of the case requires. I feel that in this matter we are face to face with a difficulty which will grow greater and greater unless we lay hold of some principle. I fear that too many of the speeches have been rather apologetic than challenging the bad principle itself. Now, I wish to call attention to one passage which puts our case very strongly with reference to the attitude we took up towards the Boers in the settlement at the time of the conquest of the Transvaal. I refer to Mr. Chamberlain’s telegram in 1901 which will be found in Colonial Paper 528, page 5. Mr. Chamberlain then telegraphed that the legal position of Coloured people will be similar to that which they hold in the Cape Colony. . . . I do not say for a moment that in the complicated relations of the Crown with its self-governing Colonies we could not dream of interfering with the political arrangements and power[s] of a Colony; but I do feel that, so long as Colonies claim the protection of the British flag and the support of the British Empire, we have a right to expect that they will grant civil rights, leaving the question of political rights to the discretion of the Colonies.

‘Well’ now, perhaps, you may say, ‘how do I propose to enforce this in case of a conflict between the central Government and the Colonies?’ I do not say that you can enforce it. These are the problems of intricate relationship with concurrent rights; and though theoretically the Parliament of this country is supreme, practically nobody dreams of this country’s supremacy in face of action by the Colony. In the first place, I do not believe that you will come to that point with a Colony. But if we can tamper with principle year after year, we encourage a base spirit of race supremacy to assert itself in the Colonies, and you will find it more difficult to tackle it afterwards. . . . I may point out that, if the worst came to the worst, no Colony could complain if exactly the same humiliating restrictions were put upon white colonists going to India as they propose to put upon Indians going to the Colony. If an Australian merchant, for instance, had to live in a particular district, and had to take out a police license, I think many of them would soon realize that the impediments they are putting on other British subjects were not to be borne. I think this is important. No, I think it is intolerable. I think, myself, that, invariably if we go away from principle, we very soon get involved in great difficulties. I do not say that you can quite act up to principle. I think the English Government cannot: but you should bear the principle in mind and get as near as you can to it.

I say, in conclusion, that I cannot quite agree with the satisfaction expressed by Sir Lepel Griffin with the assurance that we had from the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Sympathy is a very good thing but effective acts are much better.

Sir M. M. Bhownageree: . . . if by your influence, the Cabinet or His Majesty’s Government were to be induced to veto this Ordinance, which the Delegates have come all this way to complain about, well and good. But if His Majesty’s Government find that, between the prejudice subsisting on the part of so-called white men in the Colonies and the rights of the Indians, there is a gulf which they cannot bridge over by their own or your influence, then I beg to support the prayer that a commission may be appointed in order to investigate the whole question and put its conclusions before His Majesty’s Government.... I am instructed by the Delegates, and I have the authority almost of the whole of the British Indian community resident in the Transvaal and in Africa generally, to say that they will abide by the findings of such a commission. They feel that six, eight, or a dozen impartial English statesmen sitting round a table and inquiring into a deep grievance like this cannot possibly go wrong...

Sir H. Cotton: . . . The people of India follow what is going on in South Africa most carefully, and they rely, sir, upon you—you who are the custodian of their liberties and their rights, their sole protector in fact in this country—to see that justice is done to them in whatever part of the globe they may settle.

Sir Lepel Griffin: I think, sir, that this will be sufficient.... After all, it is a question of principle, and that should not be given up. Indeed, it has been asserted by this Government so strongly in the question of Chinese labour that I think, if the question were deliberately laid in its true facts before the present House of Commons, that they could, so far as consistency has any meaning, answer it only in one manner.

Mr. Morley: ... There can be no doubt whatever, I take it—everybody of Indian experience with whom I speak on the subject agrees—that the effect upon public opinion in India is, and naturally is, and must be, rather serious. Those people who go to South Africa come back by and by and represent the indignities to which some of them and their kith and kin have been subjected. That in itself stirs up prejudice. Often the population in India—those who reflect—will ask themselves whether it is want of will or want of power in the British Government to which they submit that leaves them exposed to those disadvantages in a newly acquired possession of the British Crown. The irony of the situation of that newly acquired possession has been pointed out by more than one speaker, and I was very glad indeed that my friend, Lord Stanley, read Mr. Chamberlain’s telegram of 1901, and that reference has been made to Lord Lansdowne’s well-known speech at Sheffield in the first week or two of the war. Mr. Chamberlain—to his great honour, be it said—throughout the whole time that he was at the Colonial Office urged with all his force the injustice, the harshness, the indignity of proceedings of this kind...

... It is, I repeat, a great irony that one of the first acts to which the eye of the British Government is directed is an Ordinance which, in effect—say what we like about it—along with other practices and habits of mind, does throw a bar sinister upon many millions of British subjects. (‘Hear! Hear!’)

I am heartily glad, though a responsible Minister is seldom a man who desires an appeal to principle, that Lord Stanley has gone boldly on to that thorny and difficult ground. It is well that we should be reminded that the principles that he alluded to and enforced today have become a little old fashioned; but I share adherence to them entirely with him. (‘Hear! Hear!’) But now we are—at least I am—in a responsible position, and the question is not what we would desire to do if we had a blank sheet of paper before us; but, as Lord Stanley admitted, we are to keep our principle in mind, and come as near to it as we can in practical applications.

But, then, what is the position of the India Office? Remember that the department and the Minister, first and immediately, and in a sense finally, concerned is the Minister for the Colonies...I see at once, and I submit to you, gentlemen, a very serious difficulty in the way of a commission, and that is that we hope by May that responsible government is going to be conferred on the people of the Transvaal. It surely would be a very odd preliminary to putting the reins of government into their hands to send out a commission which, if it is to do anything at all, and, if it is to affect the mind of His Majesty’s Government here, must force His Majesty’s Government to tell the new organized authority that is to be brought into being, what they are or are not to do in this very thorny and difficult field of legislation. Well, I only submit that as my answer to what Mr. Gandhi and Sir M. M. Bhownaggree said. Somebody said, by the way, that a commission would be a solution of the question. Now, I have been a great many years in Parliament, and I wonder what commission ever solved any question. Therefore, I demur to that general proposition, and I demur to the notion of a commission in the present circumstances because it might lead you into immediate collision with this new authority which you have called, or are about to call, into being.

No doubt the position of the Imperial Government towards a Colony such as the Transvaal is going to be, and such as Natal is, is a great paradox. There is no other word for it. But there it is. You have to accept our present system, miscalled an Imperial system. You have to accept that, and you have to recognize this plain fact—and you ought to recognize it—that we cannot dictate to these Colonies. What can we do, and what ought we to do? What I hope is that such gatherings as this Deputation to Lord Elgin and to myself, and perhaps to other Ministers and other persons, will promote this operation. We can plead and argue the case, and press the principles that Lord Stanley has outlined. That is what we can do—whether in the Colonial Conference next year, or in the form of despatches, to Lord Selborne, for instance. That is what we can do: we can bring to bear the weight of British opinion and British influence upon the responsible bodies in the Transvaal.

Sir Lepel Griffin noticed that I indicated a little astonishment when he said that I could fasten or unloose these bonds. There is not a single Viceroy now living who has not tried, and tried pretty hard, to get these arrangements, the new form of which you are complaining of today, modified. What Lord Lansdowne thought of them you have already heard. Lord Elgin told you when you saw him that he had sent any number of despatches to this Office—on the way to the Colonial Office, I presume—making the same protest. Lord Curzon, the last Viceroy, carried on a tremendous battle. (‘Hear! Hear!’) I was this morning turning over his speeches, trying to see what he had said or done, and he gives in one of the speeches—his seventh Budget Speech—an account of his attempted dealings with the Government of Natal—in the year 1903, I think. This is what he says. It is very short, so I venture to read it. ‘We stipulated for the eventual abolition of a tax of £3 a head which had been imposed on such persons for leave to reside; we stipulated for the amendment of an Act placing traders, of however old a standing, under the power of local corporations, who had absolute authority to refuse licenses to trade; we stipulated for the removal of Indians from another Act, under which they were classed with barbarous races; and for the provision of a summary remedy for free Indians, that is to say, Indians who had served their indenture, and had become free Indians, who might be wrongfully arrested on the ground that they were coolies under indenture or prohibited immigrants’. That was Lord Curzon’s position dealing with the Government of Natal in 1903. What did the Government of Natal say? ‘In reply,’ says Lord Curzon, ‘we were given to understand that there was no prospect of obtaining the consent of the local legislature to these conditions, and the negotiations were dropped.’ It would surely be unwise, and I do not think Sir Lepel Griffin would recommend me to put myself (if I had the authority) in a position of that sort, or that I should write to Lord Elgin a communication which would urge him to put himself into the same position with reference to the new Transvaal Government, when it comes into existence as Lord Curzon was placed in by the established Government of Natal...
As I understand from Mr. Gandhi—and I was delighted to hear it, and perhaps a little surprised, but delighted—the feeling on the part of the white colonists towards the Indians who are now, and have been for some time, resident in the Transvaal is not bad, but rather good than otherwise.

MR. GANDHI: The feeling is bad enough, but it is restricted to the petty store-keepers. It is they who agitate, and they who inflame the popular prejudice.

MR. MORLEY: I understand that, but we must, after all, look at this thing fairly. It is not very unnatural that a small white store-keeper should be very happy if he could so far prevail upon the prejudices of the people as to induce those who are in authority to keep out his formidable competitors, because, of course, we know quite well—it is no secret—that it is not merely prejudice of colour; it is not a prejudice of racial inferiority, because that would be absurd when there are, as we know, Indians in the Transvaal, pursuing professions and so forth, who are not only not inferior but greatly superior in many of the elements that make a civilized being to many of those who are not excluded from the Transvaal. (‘Hear! Hear!’)...

...If a foreign power were to impose these disabilities upon fellow-subjects of ours, I think the Foreign Office would be set in motion to represent such a proceeding as an unfriendly act. (‘Hear! Hear!’) It is a disagreeable truth, but we ought to face these things: that there is no doubt we can more effectively remonstrate with foreign powers than we can in some circumstances with our own kinsfolk. (‘Shame!’) But this is carrying me into a very wide field indeed. Lord Stanley, I think, rather tempted me into these speculations. If there is any feeling in India, that, after all, is the only thing that I can do any good by endeavouring to convey. Whatever can be done by way of energetic expression of opinion, of energetic protest, when the time comes, against these harsh and humiliating indignities, you may feel perfectly sure, and they may feel perfectly sure, that this Office will not be at all slack in backing the Colonial Office in any representations that they may wish to make, or possibly even in going a little in front. (‘Hear! Hear!’) Nobody occupying my position could do anything less than promise you, which I do with the greatest sincerity, not only the sympathy of which somebody has spoken today, but as much support as I find myself able to give, now that I am in possession of the general views which you, gentlemen, have so ably laid before me. (Applause.)

SIR LEPHEL GRIFFIN: . . . Mr. Morley, I beg on behalf of the deputation to express our best thanks for the very kind and sympathetic manner in which you have listened to us for so long, and for the answer which you have given to us.

The deputation then withdrew.

THE EDITOR
SOUTH AFRICA
[LONDON]

SIR,

You have laid the British Indian Deputation under deep obligation by your opening your columns for a discussion of the British Indian position in the Transvaal and, in the words of Lord Milner, it is such discussion alone which would bring us nearer to a proper solution. In your leaderette, however, you have done less than justice to the British Indian community by imputing to it a desire for the franchise and for an Asiatic invasion of the Transvaal. May I state that the community has never desired any political power in the Transvaal or an invasion of it by British Indians, and it is for that reason that it has accepted legislation along the Cape or the Natal model, which restricts the immigration of British Indians (except those who enjoy a status) without insulting them. The community has also accepted the principle of the control of all new trade licences, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court, by local boards or municipalities.

The objection to the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance is taken not because the Ordinance is restrictive of immigration, but because it is restrictive of the ordinary civil liberty of the British Indians who are today domiciled in the Transvaal. It is not the present Ordinance which would restrict Indian immigration; as you are aware, the Peace Preservation Ordinance has been misapplied for effecting that purpose.

You say that Indians cannot be treated better than natives of South Africa. Without entering into a discussion of the proposition, may I inform you that they are being treated worse than the Natives, in that, whereas Natives can become owners of landed property in any part of the Transvaal, Indians cannot own it at all.

I am,

Yours etc.,

M. K. GANDHI

143. LETTER TO T. MORISON

[Hotel Cecil,

November 22, 1906

DEAR MR. MORISON,

I now enclose herewith a cutting with marked passages, giving the utterances of Lord Selborne. One was before the war and the other only lately.

I also send you copy of Sir Muncherji’s letter to Mr. Lyttelton, with the passages marked.

That we would be satisfied with legislation along the Cape lines is made, you will notice, quite clear in the Representation to Lord Elgin of which you have a copy and of which if you need I will send you more copies. I hope you have noticed the fundamental objection to the Asiatic Ordinance, namely, that it draws for the first time a colour line and it means a departure from the Colonial tradition. If there was no hesitation last year in vetoing the Native Land Tenure Bill, it passes comprehension why there should be any hesitation about vetoing this Ordinance which is infinitely worse than the Native Tenure Ordinance.

Yours truly,

been able to see to it only after 9.15 p.m. and as I considered it to be useless to telephone to you I am now writing.

I now enclose herewith a list of those who were present at the deputation. Mr. Morley has pledged the deputation to privacy. I, therefore, must not give you anything for publication. We were very well received. Mr. Morley was strong in some parts of his speech but I cannot say that the effect on the whole was encouraging. However, we have to wait and see.

Mr. Ally and I leave definitely on the 1st of next month.

147. DEPUTATION NOTES - III

HOTEL CECIL,
LONDON,
November 23, 1906

This is our last week here. We had hoped to leave on November 24. But we have been obliged to stay on in order to complete the work regarding the Committee and do whatever is necessary after the interview with Mr. Morley. Now we have fixed the date of our departure for December 1.

MORE PROMISES OF HELP

During the current week, we met Lord Milner, Mr. Lyttelton, Lord Reay, Sir Raymond West and others. Everyone has shown much sympathy and offered to work for us. It is not possible to say what the outcome of all this will be.

INTERVIEW WITH SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

The deputation met Mr. Morley, the Secretary of State for India, on Thursday at 12.20 p.m. Those present were Sir Lepel Griffin, Lord Stanley of Alderley, Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Charles Schwann, Sir William Wedderburn, Sir Henry Cotton, Sir Muncherji Bhownaggree, Dr. Rutherford, Mr. Harold Cox, Mr. A. H. Scott, Mr. Lynch, Mr. F. H. Brown, Mr. J. D. Rees, Mr. Thornton, Mr. Arathoon, Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, Mr. T. J. Bennett, Mr. Theodore Morison and Mr. Ritch. Mr. Ameer Ali could not attend owing to illness. Sir Lepel Griffin, Lord Stanley, Mr. Cox and Sir Muncherji spoke at length. Lord Stanley went so far as to demand sweet deeds in place of sweet words. Messrs Ally and Gandhi said whatever was required on the occasion.

MORLEY’S SPEECH

Mr. Morley gave a long reply in which he said:

I am glad to have met the deputation. For I desire to be familiarized fully with the condition of the country for whose administration I am responsible to Parliament. Moreover, the problem placed before me today has a very close bearing on the good government of India. That the feelings of the people of India are excited on account of the disabilities imposed upon Indians in South Africa is a serious matter. Indians returning to their native land from South Africa carry with them the story of the indignities to which they are subjected, and the result is that people are greatly agitated. People in India must be thinking that the Government lack either the will or the power to prevent oppression in South Africa. In either case, it is harmful. I believe the resistance offered by Mr. Chamberlain in 1901, in the interests of Indians, deserves praise. The first thing that has been brought to the notice of the new Government is that a bar sinister has been placed upon Indians in some Colonies. Men in authority do not like to be told about moral principles. But I am glad that Lord Stanley has spoken of moral principles. The views expressed by Lord Stanley may be held by some to be old fashioned, but I for one share them entirely. Unfortunately, we have not a white sheet of paper to write upon. We must face the facts as they are and then act, as far as possible, in accordance with moral principle. Now, let us see what the India Office can do. It has been recognized by Sir Lepel Griffin that the minister primarily concerned is Lord Elgin. Sir Muncherji asks me to demand that a commission be appointed. But a serious difficulty in the way is that in May next the Transvaal will be under responsible government. Now it would be a serious matter if a conflict arises between the [policies of the] new government and 1 In his Gujarati despatches Gandhiji often refers to himself both in the first person and by name.

the commission’s recommendations. I do not believe that such a commission will solve the question. I have been in Parliament for many years but I do not remember any commission which has solved any question. And the question regarding the Transvaal is not likely to be solved by the appointment of a commission. It will quite probably mean a collision with the newly organized government at the very outset of its career. The plain fact is that we cannot dictate to the self-governing colonies. We can plead, we can argue, we can press for the application of our principles. Whether at the Colonial Conference [next year] or in his despatches, Lord Elgin will, doubtless, advance strong arguments and make recommendations. Viceroy after Viceroy has written on the matter. Lord Curzon had written very strongly. He had made many recommendations about Natal but Natal paid no heed to his words. It remains to be seen whether the Transvaal will listen to the requests of Lord Elgin. I am glad to know that there are many whites in the Transvaal who are not against Indians. I can well understand the small white shopkeepers opposing them. I can even understand Indians [already in the country] opposing [further immigration of Indians].¹ But what I cannot understand is the prejudice felt by the whites against mere dark skin. I know that there are in the Transvaal many [Indians] who are superior to the whites. How can these then be tyrannized over? Just as Lord Lansdowne’s feelings were hurt by the treatment meted out to Indians, my blood too boils at their sufferings. But it must be remembered that we cannot remonstrate as effectively with the Colonies as we can with foreign powers. But I have been tempted into a digression by the remarks of Lord Stanley. All I can now say is that it is my duty to do all I can. The India Office will not fail to make strong representations as frequently as may be necessary. I can definitely assure you that I shall not be slack in supporting the Colonial Office and, possibly, going ahead of it.

¹ This statement is not found in the official minutes of Morley's speech; Vide “Deputation to Morley”, 22-11-1906
MORE INTERVIEWS AND SYMPATHY

Though Mr. Morley has made such a strong speech, I do not yet expect that the Ordinance will be refused assent. Strong despatches seem to have been received from the Transvaal. I feel also that the rulers here think in their heart of hearts that we are an inferior race and there is no harm in piling up endless burdens on us. Today we saw Mr. Lyttelton and also Sir Raymond West1, an ex-Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court. They appeared to be of much the same view. They felt much sympathy, but they also indicated that we would get no redress until we acquired strength like the whites. They are afraid of the colonies, not because they are white, but because they are powerful. If this is a true reading of the situation, we should realize that our salvation lies in our own hands.

OUR DELIVERANCE

While we are on this subject, the case of Miss Milne deserves to be noted. Miss Milne, a suffragette, began making a speech in front of the Houses of Parliament. The police attempted to stop her, but she persisted. She was then arrested and prosecuted. The Magistrate sentenced her to pay a fine of 10s or imprisonment for seven days. The brave lady preferred to go to gaol.

This will be our last letter from England. Hence I would appeal to all and say that, just as Miss Milne preferred going to gaol, so must every Transvaal Indian, taking it that the Ordinance will receive Royal assent. There is no doubt that the Fourth Resolution contains the key to the Indians’ deliverance. If the Resolution is acted upon, there should be no anxiety, whether or not the Ordinance receives the assent.

148. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO MORLEY

[Hotel Cecil,
London,]
November 23, 1906

To
The Private Secretary To
The Rt. Hon. John Morley
His Majesty’s Principal Secretary of State for India
The India Office
Downing Street, W.

Dear Sir,

I have seen in The Times what purports to be a report of the proceedings of the deputation that waited on Mr. John Morley yesterday. Several pressmen came to me yesterday and I told them that the proceedings were private and such intimation had appeared in The Daily Mail and The Tribune. I do not know how The Times has been able to get the report. I shall be obliged if you will kindly let me know whether Mr. Morley proposes to enquire as to how The Times has been able to publish the report.

I remain,
Yours faithfully,

My Dear Oldfield,

Will you please enquire whether Mr. Ally’s parcel has been sent? Miss Rosenberg has not brought it at all. Will you also kindly let have the balance of the account against Mr. Ally?

My teeth are more shaky than when you saw them and yet I am afraid that I will not be able to undergo the operation at the hospital either for the teeth or the nose.

150. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO LORD ELGIN

[Hotel Cecil,
London.]
November 24, 1906

TO
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY TO
THE RIGHT HON’BLE THE EARL OF ELGIN
HIS MAJESTY’S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES
DOWNING STREET
LONDON
DEAR SIR,

I have seen Mr. Churchill’s reply on the Vrededorp Stands ordinance in answer to Sir Henry Cotton’s question. In my

1 This letter along with Sir Henry Cotton’s question and Churchill’s answer (footnote 2 below) was reproduced in Indian Opinion, 22-12-1906.

2 On November 22, 1906, Sir Henry Cotton had asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies in the House of Commons whether his attention had been drawn to Clauses 5, 8 and 9 of the Second Schedule of the Vrededorp Stands Ordinance Of 1906, under which the residence of British Indians, other than domestic servants, was prohibited within that area affected by the Ordinance; and whether, looking to the fact that the Ordinance did not come into effect until it had been assented to by the Crown, and that, for several years past, both under the Boer Government and at present, British Indians had been allowed to occupy land within this area under grants given by the burghers of Vrededorp, and were still residing in this area, and had erected substantial structures thereon, the Secretary of State would advise His Majesty to disallow the Ordinance.

Mr. Churchill: My attention has been drawn to the provision referred to. This land was originally granted to poor burghers—that is, to white men only, and on condition of personal occupation. The Ordinance, therefore, merely perpetuates the legal conditions which were in existence before annexation, and in defiance of which certain Indians have, I understand, acquired some Stands and erected tin shanties. I may add that it is very desirable to keep the white and Coloured quarters apart, as the practice of allowing European, Asiatic, and Native families to live side by side in mixed community is fraught with many evils, and is, in Lord Selborne’s opinion, injurious to the social well-being of all three. The whole question is, however, still under consideration.
humble opinion the answer is based on a misapprehension of the real state of affairs.

The act of granting Vrededorp to the poor Dutch burghers for personal occupation was accompanied by occupation of Vrededorp by persons other than the grantees irrespective of race or colour. As for instance, many non-Dutch white people occupied Stands in Vrededorp from the original grantees with the knowledge of the Boer Government.

The Ordinance does not perpetuate the legal conditions which were in existence before annexation, because the legal condition before annexation was that the grantees had only squatters’ rights. The Ordinance now gives to them a permanent tenure with power to them to transfer their leases to whomsoever they choose save and except Asiatics so that the legal condition of personal occupation is now being changed into that of transferable leases.

I venture to protest against the statement that Indians acquired rights in Vrededorp in defiance of legal conditions. They acquired rights in Vrededorp in the same manner that those who were not poor burghers did. Nor is it true that Indians have erected shanties in Vrededorp. In my humble opinion, class considered, what are described as shanties are superior to many of the buildings in Vrededorp.

If the doctrine of the desirability of keeping the white and the Coloured quarters apart is sound, I fear that there will be an end to British Indian residence in the Transvaal with any degree of self-respect. The logical conclusion of such a doctrine will be a system of Locations which can only result in ruination to hundreds of law-abiding and respectable Indians.

One is appalled by the inaccurate information that is placed before His Lordship in connection with matters Indian and it is extremely painful that legislation that is otherwise without the slightest justification is justified on statements that are inaccurate or misleading.

In venturing to offer the above remarks, no reflection is cast on Lord Selborne but it is respectfully submitted that Lord Selborne himself receives misleading information, as is painfully apparent to those who are on the spot and know the inner working of the administration.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

151. LETTER TO C. HAY

[Hotel Cecil, London,]

November 24, 1906

DEAR SIR,

I beg to enclose herewith note of introduction from Sir Muncherji which speaks for itself.

As my co-Delegate, Mr. Ally, and myself have to leave for the Transvaal next Saturday, instead of requesting an appointment, I am taking the liberty of sending the enclosure to you and to say that Mr. Ally and myself will venture to send in our cards at the House of Commons at 2.45 on Monday next on the chance of being able to meet you. If, however, we are unsuccessful in seeing you, may I request a favourable reply as to your sympathy for our mission and your consenting to join the South Africa British Indian Committee?

As you may be aware, we are appealing to all parties and have received support too from them.

I enclose herewith a cutting from The Times giving a report of the interview with Mr. Morley which will further explain the position of British Indians in the Transvaal.

I am addressing similar letters to Sir Edward Sassoon, Major Sir Evans Gordon and Sir William Bull.

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

MY LORD,

Mr. Ally and I are extremely obliged to Your Lordship for having granted us the very sympathetic interview yesterday.

I now enclose herewith copy of the draft constitution of the South Africa British Indian Committee. Those whose names are given in the draft have consented to join the Committee. We are approaching the gentleman mentioned by Your Lordship yesterday.

If you could accept the Presidentship of the Committee, you will place the Indian community in South Africa under deep obligation to Your Lordship.

The draft constitution is being printed and will be circulated among the members, who have already joined, for their approval. Will you kindly therefore be pleased to let me know whether I may include Your Lordship’s name as President of the Committee?

The complimentary breakfast, which Your Lordship has kindly consented to attend, will take place at the Hotel Cecil on Thursday next at 10.30 a.m.

A short conference will be held immediately after the breakfast among the members of the Committee for a mutual interchange of suggestions and for its inauguration.

I beg to remain,

Your Lordship’s obedient servant,

MY DEAR OLDFIELD,

Many thanks for your note. If you can perform the operation at the Hotel without tying me down to the room for the rest of the day or if you can perform it any time after 8 o’clock in the evening so that you would free me for the next day’s work, I should have it and feel greatly relieved. 154. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO MORLEY

[Hotel Cecil, London,]

November 24, 1906

TO
The Private Secretary To
The Rt. Hon. John Morley
The Secretary of State for India
Downing Street
SIR,

We shall be obliged if you will kindly bring the following to Mr. Morley’s notice.

From what Mr. Morley stated yesterday there seems to be an impression that the Right Hon’ble gentleman believes that the Indian “petition” from the Transvaal is in approval of the Ordinance, which is not the case as will appear from the detailed reply\(^1\) the Delegates have submitted to Lord Elgin. We now enclose herewith copy thereof.

With reference to the Royal Commission, what the Delegates have requested is a commission or rather a committee—it may be of local, but independent and impartial men, such as the judges of the Supreme Court or the Chief Magistrate of Johannesburg to enquire into the charges made against the Indian community and which have been used as reasons for passing the Ordinance. In our humble opinion, such a committee can give its report within a month from its formation. The Delegates respectfully submit that either the veto should now be exercised, as in the case of the Native Land Tenure Ordinance, or the Royal sanction should be suspended, pending result of the investigations by the committee or the commission described above.

British Indians in the Transvaal ask for full protection for the resident Indian population and that, in our humble opinion, should be granted to them, irrespective of the Colonial sentiment.

We have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servants,

DEAR SIR,

I am extremely obliged to you for your letter of the 23rd instant.

I venture to send you herewith a breakfast invitation card as also the draft constitution of the South Africa British Indian Committee. If you can join the Committee, your patronage will be valued.

It was an agreeable surprise to me that you were connected with The Englishman of Calcutta. I may state that the late Mr. Saunders rendered the most valuable assistance to me when I was in Calcutta in 1896 and 1901 in connection with British Indians in South Africa; indeed, he even gave me notes of introduction to Sir Charles Turner and others and was largely instrumental in evoking from Lord Curzon a most spirited letter of sympathy regarding the status of British Indians in South Africa.

DEAR SIR,

Mr. Ally and I have taken the liberty of sending you today an invitation card for breakfast on Thursday next at 10.30 at Hotel Cecil as a small token of the gratitude of the Indian community, whom we have the honour to represent, for your valuable support and sympathy. I trust that you will be able to accept the invitation. I am aware that the notice given is very short but as it is imperatively necessary for the Delegates to leave for South Africa next Saturday, we could not give a longer notice.

I beg to enclose herewith, for your suggestions, the draft constitution of the South Africa British Indian Committee which you have kindly joined. After the breakfast is over, it has been suggested that a brief conference should take place in order to consider any suggestions that may be made in connection with the draft.

As the Committee has been formed in obedience to instructions received from South Africa, the Delegates have taken the liberty of approaching Sir Muncherji for acceptance of the Chairmanship of the sub-Committee. We have done so because we feel that, among the friends of the cause in London, no one has studied the Indian question in South Africa so well as Sir Muncherji, he having actively interested himself in the cause for the last 12 years and having made a speciality of this question. Sir Muncherji has very kindly consented to accept the office if it also meets with the approval of the other members of the sub-Committee.

Lord Reay has been approached with a view to the acceptance of the Presidentship of the Committee and if it is at all possible for His Lordship to accept the office, he will do so.

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

160. SPEECH AT EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION

At a meeting of the East India Association at Caxton Hall, London, L. W. Ritch read a paper entitled “The Burden of the British Indians in South Africa”. Gandhiji opened the discussion that

1 For a report, vide “Ritch’s Speech at East India Association”, before 18-12-1906.

. . . Mr. Gandhi said that after what had been said by the lecturer it was unnecessary to say anything further with reference to the object of the mission with which he had been entrusted, but it would be ungrateful on his part if he did not take the opportunity of expressing his deep gratitude to the East India Association and its secretary, Mr. G. W. Arathoon, for the advocacy which the Indian cause in South Africa had received. There was one thing which all should bear in mind, namely, that whatever difficulties they were undergoing in South Africa were being undergone in the name of the English people [sic], more particularly in the Transvaal. The Ordinance which had brought them to England had been introduced in the name of the King.

For the first time in Colonial history, a precedent had been set by a Crown Colony of legislation which branded a class of people simply because they wore a coloured skin. Was India to be retained, or was India to be lost simply because Colonial sentiment had to be consulted? What was the proportion of the white population to the Indian?

Mr. Ritch had said, the Asiatics in the Transvaal were but a drop in the Ocean—13,000 as against 285,000 white men. They were simply struggling for peace, for contentment and self-respect in that Colony. Nearly all of them entered the Colony before the war. Today they were merely asking for the civil rights which ought to be granted to everybody who was a subject under the British Crown, and yet under the Ordinance they were to be treated differently to other British subjects. Was that kind of legislation to be sanctioned in the name of the British nation? (Applause.)...

163. LETTER TO LORD HARRIS

[Hotel Cecil, London,]
November 27, 1906

MY LORD,

Mr. Ally and I have arrived, as perhaps Your Lordship is aware, as a Deputation on behalf of the British Indian community in the Transvaal.

We have waited on Lord Elgin and Mr. Morley who have given sympathetic answers with reference to our mission but we also feel that any representations that they may make in our behalf require to be considerably strengthened. Moreover, the support that we have received from all parties has been exceptionally warm. We are most anxious to make as much use as possible of it in our future struggle. We have further been instructed by the British Indians in South Africa to form a committee, so that the work now being done may be continued.

We enclose herewith copy of the constitution.

We have approached the Right Hon’ble Lord Reay with a view to his acceptance of the Presidentship of the Committee and we believe that, if you could see your way to lend the weight of your influence to the Committee by accepting a Vice-Presidency, he will accept the Presidentship and Your Lordship will lay the Indian community in South Africa under deep obligation to you.

We beg to enclose herewith an invitation card to a complimentary breakfast we are giving on Thursday next at 10.30 a.m. If Your Lordship could honour the occasion by your presence at the breakfast, we would feel deeply grateful. Lord Reay has kindly consented to come a little after the breakfast to attend a short conference that will take place thereafter to discuss the constitution of the Committee.

[Hotel Cecil, London,]
November 27, 1906

Dear Sir Muncherji,

I am obliged for your letter of today’s date. I have written to Lord Harris and the three other gentlemen in accordance with the enclosed copy.¹ The circular letter², of which I sent you a copy, had already gone by the time of the arrival of your letter.

Mr. Brown has since written saying that perhaps it will be better not to send invitations to The Times or any other paper.

I will feel very much obliged if you will kindly come on Thursday at 10.30. I do not think I need trouble you tomorrow. Mr. Winston Churchill has given us an appointment for tomorrow.

You will perhaps be going to the Bank tomorrow to give your signature as President of the sub-Committee and one of the signatories to the cheques and if at that time it is not too much trouble, you will perhaps drop in at the Hotel.

We had a very satisfactory interview with the Editor of The Daily News.

I have not told you all about Mr. Ritch’s capabilities. He has handled many a meeting and has been secretary of more than one organization. He was twenty years ago perhaps what people may call a rabid Socialist. His has been a most chequered career. Today, I do not own a friend who knows me more than he does. He is one of those men who believe in dying for a cause that he [sic] holds dear.

[ENCLOSURE]

OBJECTIONS TO THE VREDedorP STANDS ORDINANCE

1. The Ordinance if sanctioned will be a precedent for the inclusion of class-disqualifying clauses in leases in other townships in Johannesburg or the Transvaal and would therefore go beyond the Law 3 of 1885 in restricting British Indian rights.

2. British Indians with the knowledge of the Boer Government occupied and built upon Stands in Vrededorp just as many other Europeans did who were not the original burghers who received, from the late President Kruger, squatters’ rights on the Stands.

3. Vrededorp is contiguous to the Malay Location, which is inhabited by a very large number of British Indians.

4. The Ordinance does not perpetuate the legal condition that was in existence before the war but it gives permanent rights to the original burghers with the power to sublet. Under this power, Europeans who were not burghers would be able to retain the rights granted to them by the burghers whereas British Indians will be dispossessed without the slightest justification.

5. Premises built by British Indians are not shanties but substantial structures as good as most other buildings.

6. If the Ordinance is sanctioned, it will be the first instance of a recognition by an Imperial Government of the right of a municipality to curtail the residential rights of British Indians in any part of the Transvaal which, under a Supreme Court judgment, British Indians are entitled to. It will indirectly create a system of Locations which otherwise the Imperial Government, it is presumed, would never sanction.

175. SPEECH AT LONDON FAREWELL

The following is a report of Gandhiji’s speech at the farewell breakfast given at Hotel Cecil by the Delegates from the Transvaal to friends and sympathizers:

[Hotel Cecil, London, November 29, 1906]

Sir Muncherji, My Lord and Gentlemen, before I begin to express our thanks for your attendance here and to those gentlemen who have not been able to attend this morning, I shall take the opportunity of reading some of the letters which have been received in connection with the invitations.

The task before my colleagues and myself today is an exceedingly pleasant one—to thank you all who have honoured us by your presence, and also to thank those gentlemen who could not be with us this morning. Mr. Ally and I, when we came to the end of our mission, thought that the least we could do, as representing the 13,000 British Indians in the Transvaal, was to adopt this tangible method of showing our gratitude. The support we have received throughout our stay in England has been very encouraging. We have received it from all parties ever since the beginning of our campaign against the deprivation of our civil rights as citizens in this mighty Empire. We have appealed to all parties, and all parties have invariably extended their help to us. For this we cannot be too grateful, and I think it but right especially to mention the name of the late Sir William Wilson Hunter. As far back as 1893, Sir W. W. Hunter received one of the circulars sent out to him from South Africa, and he it was, I think, who first understood the national importance of this question, and ever since that time down to the date of his death, he was always busy

2 Gandhiji read out letters of good wishes from Sir William Markby, Sir Roper Lethbridge and Sir Charles Schwann. He also mentioned similar letters from Sir Henry Cotton, Sir William Wedderburn, T. J. Bennett, Harold Cox and others.
doing something or other to assist the cause of British Indians in South Africa. In the columns of The Times and otherwise, he always advocated our cause, and I had a letter from Lady Hunter saying that, even at the time of his death, he had a long contribution in preparation in connection with this matter. In 1896, when I was in Calcutta, the late Mr. Saunders also came to the assistance of our cause, as also did The Times of India, which paper has always advocated the cause of the British Indians in South Africa. Coming nearer, the East India Association has helped us, and the British Committee of the Indian National Congress has given us valuable assistance. It is a matter of regret to both Mr. Ally and myself that we have had to issue this invitation just at the time the “Grand Old Man” of India,—Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, is leaving this country for the forthcoming session of the Congress. To him also we owe a debt of gratitude. As I have said, we have appealed to all parties in the House of Commons, and all have helped us. I must not fail to mention especially the name of Mr. Scott, who has helped us most sympathetically and most energetically in connection with our grievances, and now I come to the name of Sir Mancherji Bhownaggree. For the last 12 years, he has persistently and with unflagging zeal been advocating the cause of British Indians in South Africa. All have helped, but Sir Mancherji has made this cause his own. Sir Mancherji has worked as if he were actuated by the same strong convictions and feelings as we ourselves. He has felt as no other man has the national importance of the issues involved. In the House of Commons, outside the House, in his correspondence, he has always helped and counselled us as to how we were to go to work, and words cannot express our gratitude to him for all he has done for us in South Africa. The difficulties in our path have, perhaps, whether this Ordinance be passed or not, only just commenced. We, therefore, hope that the support, which all our friends here have hitherto afforded us, will be maintained, because, even if the Ordinance is disallowed—as there is some hope it will be—there is still a great deal to be done in regard to the general question. There is again the Vrededorp Ordinance. There is, too, the Natal Municipal Corporations Bill. Whatever is done in the Transvaal is likely to be done by the other Colonies. Ours has been a policy of the strictest moderation. We have always claimed that we have been able to enter into the feelings of our opponents (if one may use that term) in South Africa, and although we have examined the whole question from their standpoint and have always endeavoured to convince those who are prejudiced against us of our desire to be moderate, we have still to ask you to extend your support to us in our struggle, and it is for this reason that we have been authorized by the British Indians in South Africa to organize and inaugurate such a committee as will always watch over our interests. The work that has been so well and ably performed here by our supporters will have been frittered away if it be not now concentrated and continued by means of such an organization as this Committee.

As most of you gentlemen have received copies of the circular, I will only recapitulate the objects of the Committee. You will notice that it is merely a provisional draft. These are the ideas as they strike us, and we hope that you will consider them, and help us by your counsels. All whose names are printed on the draft have kindly consented to become members of the Committee, and it now only remains for me to ask you kindly to consider the draft constitution, and to formally inaugurate it, if you think that the step we have ventured to take is acceptable to you. I cannot better illustrate the gravity of the position in which we are placed in the Transvaal than by pointing to the young British Indians who are here today. They are more your hosts than guests. They are Indian students who belong to South Africa, that is to say, South Africa is more their home than India itself. They are studying here, but I have no doubt they are looking forward to their return to South Africa with considerable anxiety and apprehension, because they will have to share the same fate as the thirteen thousand British Indians in the Transvaal, and in fact all the British Indians in South Africa. Here, in England, they will become barristers or doctors, but there, in South Africa, they may not even be able to cross the border of the Transvaal.

of repeating our thanks for your noble and inspiring utterances at the breakfast today? I know that we will have the benefit of your support

MY LORD,

Mr. Ally and I, on our own behalf as well as on behalf of the British Indians of the Transvaal whom we have the honour to represent, beg to express our gratefulness to Your Lordship for your presence at the gathering today and for the interesting speech and message you were pleased to give to us to be carried to the British

We are very grateful for the assurance that Your Lordship; and not be satisfied until it was redressed.

I beg to remain,

[Hotel Cecil, London.]
November 29, 1906

DEAR SIR,

I have your promise that you will let me have an article for Indian Opinion. I still await it. I leave on Saturday by the 11.35 a.m. train. If you can let me have it before, I shall appreciate it; if not, please forward it to me at Box 6522, Johannesburg, and mind you do not fail.

I have read your synopsis of the Chinese grievances. I think it is well drawn [up]. However, it is open to serious objections in one or two cases because you do not know the position thoroughly.

DEAR SIR,

Some time during the month, on my return to the Hotel, I found a card left by you. I kept it in the hope of being able to call on you during my stay here. I however find that it is not possible for me to do so. I therefore now write to apologize.

DEAR MISS LAWSON,

Many thanks for your note. We leave on Saturday. I am delighted you are already in the thick of the fight and that you can speak so hopefully of your work. Both Mr. Ally and I will be interested to learn of your progress from day to day. I have your promise to keep yourself in touch with the British Indian question in South Africa. Have I not? You must secure from Mr. Ritch a copy of the Indian Opinion to read every week.

Many thanks for your note of the 28th instant. I am sorry, much as I should like to do so, that I could not pay you a visit before leaving for South Africa. The Deputation leaves on Saturday next.

182. LETTER TO J. H. POLAK

[HOTEL CECIL,
LONDON,]
November 29, 1906

DEAR MR. POLAK,

After all, I think that Ruthnum should, at least for the present, go to the Van Weenen’s. The Bedford County School won’t have him by reason of his being overage. I have had no time to look up any other institution. He must leave India House at the earliest opportunity. If therefore the Van Weenen’s are prepared still to accept him, will you kindly arrange so that Ruthnum can leave for Westcliffe on Monday? I would like Miss Weenen to give him all the education she is capable of giving him. Perhaps she can also secure a private tutor or admission for him to a school or class in Westcliffe. Under the above proposal, Ruthnum Pather need not take out a railway season ticket as he would be going to town only six days every term. I would like Miss Weenen to treat him as a member of the family, to be perfectly frank and open with him and never to hesitate to point out to Ruthnum his defects either in speech, in manner or in mode of living. He should in short be treated as a very young lad and receive loving supervision. He has in him the making[s] of a very good man if at the impressionable time of his life he receives proper handling.

You may, if you like, pass on this letter to Miss Van Weenen.

I am,
 yours sincerely,

184. LETTER TO THE PRESS

HOTEL CECIL,
STRAND, W.C.,
November 30, 1906

TO
THE EDITOR
THE TIMES
[LOndon]

SIR,

On the eve of the departure of the Indian Deputation from the Transvaal, may we trespass upon your courtesy to allow us to offer our thanks to the many supporters of the British Indian cause who have rendered us their valuable assistance in putting our case before the Imperial Government and the British public. The unfailing courtesy we have experienced from gentlemen representing different shades of opinion, from all parties, and from the Press has been a source of keenest satisfaction to us and has inspired us with a new hope. Our brief stay in London has prevented us from personally waiting on all whom we should have liked to meet. We have, however, received support and sympathy even from them. The lesson we have drawn from the above is that we may rely upon the British sense of fair play and justice and that the cause we have the honour to espouse is absolutely just. May we restate it in a few words We ask for no political power in the Transvaal. We do not strive for unrestricted immigration of British Indians, but we do respectfully and emphatically claim the ordinary rights of citizenship for those who are already in the country namely, freedom of ownership of land, freedom of locomotion, freedom of trade, subject to such requirements as may be necessary in the interests of the community as a whole. In short, the British Indians in the Transvaal claim the right to live in the Transvaal with self-respect and dignity. The Indian community protests against any class distinction being made, and it has exerted itself against the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, because it violates in the most brutal manner the principles above laid down. In our humble opinion we feel that if we cannot secure for our countrymen, whom we have the honour to represent, the above measure of recognition, the term “British Indian” becomes an empty platitude and “Empire” ceases to have any meaning for the British Indian. In coming to England and laying our case before the Home Government, we have no desire to offer violent opposition to the European Colonists in the Transvaal. Ours is wholly a defensive attitude. When the local Government, in the name of the people of the Transvaal, sends to the Imperial Government for assent a piece of offensive legislation to protect and accentuate colour prejudice, we are obliged, in self-defence, to lay before the same Government the Indian side of the question. We are anxious and willing to work out our own salvation by our conduct, and by showing to the Colonists that their interests are also our interests and that our goal is the common advancement of them and us. We cannot do this if we do not get breathing time, by reason of the anti-Indian prejudice of the few being crystallized into and receiving the hallmark of legislation under the King’s Sign Manual.

1 This was sent to other papers also and published in South Africa, 1-12-1906; was later reproduced in India, 7-12-1906, and in Indian Opinion, 29-12-1906, with a few verbal variations.

We are,

185. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO LORD ELGIN

TO
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES
LONDON]

DEAR SIR,

I have been so much over-worked night and day that I have not been able before now to submit my promised statement on Natal to His Lordship. I allowed it to be crowded out as Mr. Tatham’s Bill was rejected by the Natal Parliament.

I have now forwarded to Mr. Ritch, the Secretary of the South Africa British Indian Committee, my statement and asked him to have it typed and then present the original with a typed copy to you for submission to Lord Elgin.

I duly received your letter with enclosures for which I thank you.

Yours faithfully,

1 Vide enclosure.
STATEMENT REGARDING BRITISH INDIAN POSITION IN NATAL

1. I shall venture to deal with only the most important and pressing portion of the question.

THE IMMIGRATION ACT

2. Under this Act an undoubted injustice is done to British Indian merchants in that they are not allowed to import confidential clerks or domestic servants.

3. The result is that a monopoly is created among the few clerks and servants.

4. Nor is it possible to command a large supply of confidential clerks from those who are already domiciled in the Colony.

5. Confidential clerks as a rule and domestic servants invariably lack ability to satisfy the educational test under the Immigration Act.

6. It is not contended that such men should be allowed to possess rights of domicile but it is respectfully submitted that they ought to be allowed to enter the Colony to reside therein temporarily subject to guarantee being given that, at the end of their service with their masters, they should quit the Colony.

DEALERS’ LICENSES ACT

7. This Act has caused and continues to cause the gravest mischief. British Indian merchants are totally at the mercy of the licensing officers whose decisions are not capable of being reviewed by the Supreme Court.

8. Under this Act most respectable Indian merchants of long standing have been deprived of their licences to trade i.e., of their vested rights. This happened in the case of Messrs Dada Osman and Hoondamal.

9. At one time an arbitrary use of their power by the licensing officers created a scandal. Mr. Chamberlain sent a strong despatch and the then ministry in Natal addressed a circular letter to the municipalities of Natal that, unless they exercised reasonably, moderately and with due regard for vested rights, the power given to them, the Act would have to be amended so as to restore the inherent jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

1 This was forwarded by L. W. Ritch to the Private Secretary to Lord Elgin on December 4.

2 Vide “Petition to Natal Governor”, 31-7-1899.
10. It is submitted that the right of the Supreme Court to review the decisions of licensing officers should be restored at the earliest opportunity unless the Indian traders are to lose all they have in the Colony.

11. The late Mr. Escombe in his latter days deplored the deprivation of the right of approaching the Supreme Court in appeal against decisions of licensing officers.

MUNICIPALITIES BILL

12. The attempt to deprive the Indian ratepayers of the right to exercise the municipal franchise is held to be totally unjustifiable and wantonly insulting.

13. It is debatable whether India possesses representative institutions founded on the Parliamentary franchise. But it is not open to question as to the municipal franchise.

14. Both the late Sir John Robinson and the late Mr. Escombe said emphatically that the Indian community ought not to be deprived of the municipal franchise.¹

15. The moral effect of sanctioning such legislation will be very serious and the Indians will be further degraded in the estimation of the Colonists.

CONCLUSION

16. It now only remains for me to add that regarding Natal the remedy is absolutely in the hands of the Imperial Government. [The] prosperity of Natal is dependent on a continuance of indentured labour from India. Natal cannot be allowed to draw upon India for a supply of indentured labour when she refuses to treat the resident Indian population with justice and decency.

186. LETTER TO PROFESSOR GOKHALE

R. M. S. BRITON,
December 3, 1906

DEAR PROF. GOKHALE,

I am on way back to Johannesburg. I wrote to you from London. Sir Muncherji suggests that there should be in India a separate South Africa British Indian Committee in the same way as in London. By this time you probably know all about the London Committee. If a committee were formed in India, I have no doubt all parties would unite. Mr. Bennett told me that Mr. Fraser of The Times [of India] would help willingly. Many members of the Chamber of Commerce too may unite and the Aga Khan will certainly do so. If some such organisation be formed, it will do most effective work.

The importance of the question was fully realized by everyone in London. I am aware that Sir Pherozeshaw does not see eye to eye with us in this matter but I venture to think that he is mistaken. Anyhow if a committee were formed, even if it did not do much good, it could not do harm. In order to have a committee you certainly need some local man with an accurate knowledge of the position in South Africa. As to that I can make no suggestion.

I remain,
Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

187. RITCH’S SPEECH AT EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION

[Before December 18, 1906]
A paper on “The Burden of British Indians in South Africa” was read by Mr. L. W. Ritch at the Caxton Hall on November 26

1 This letter has not been traced.

last, under the auspices of the East India Association. Sir Mun-cherjee Bhownaggree was in the chair. Among those present were Lord Reay, Sir Raymond West, Sir Frederick Tyler, Sir George Birdwood Mr. Cotton, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Brown, Mr. Morison and Mr. Arathoon. Professor Parmanand and Mr. Mukerjee were among the Indians present. The speech described in detail the condition [of Indians] all over South Africa. As most of the points made by Mr. Ritch are already known to the readers of this journal, I shall not summarize the speech here.

After Mr. Ritch had read his paper, the chairman called upon Messrs Gandhi and Ally to speak on the subject. Mr. Gandhi acknowledged with gratitude the help rendered by the East India Association to the cause of British Indians in South Africa and warned the assembly that, if the new act were passed, the responsibility would lie squarely on every Englishman. For, whatever laws were enacted in South Africa they were made in the name of the King Emperor. If therefore the British people were at all inclined to do justice to the three hundred millions in India, they should ensure that the hardships of Indians in the Colonies were ended.

Mr. Ally spoke next and supported Mr. Gandhi’s argument. He pointed out that alien peoples such as Armenians were free to enter the Transvaal, while the Indians were subjected to various kinds of disabilities. This should happen no more.

Sir Raymond West said that, listening to Mr. Ritch’s speech and the information given by the Delegates, he felt ashamed. Was the duty of England over once self-government had been granted to the Colony? If that were so, the term “Imperial race” ceased to have meaning and should no more be used. Self-government for a Colony did not give it the right to trample upon the non-whites. The Indians had a good cause, and with patience they were bound to get their grievances redressed.

Mr. Thornton pleaded strongly for justice being done to Indians in the Transvaal. He said that nothing could be more modest than the demands put forward by them, and they admitted of no dispute.

Mr. Nusserwanjee Cooper, Editor of The Parsee Chronicle, said that he had travelled in British Guiana and had found the Indians there quite happy. They enjoyed all the rights and many of them had risen to high positions. The Indians in South Africa should have the same rights and privileges. That they had to suffer hardships was gross injustice.

Mr. Wise, a planter from Ceylon, took exception to Mr. Ritch’s censure of indentured labour. They went there of their own free will, and it was not for others to say anything about it. Mr. Wise was followed by Mr. Martin Wood, Sir Leslie Probyn and others.

Replying to questions, Mr. Ritch said that, if one had to choose between doing the right thing by the Indians and losing the Colonies, it would be any day better to let the Colonies go. But to deny justice to the Indians would be a matter of shame to the British people.

Winding up the discussion, Sir Muncherji said that he had been thinking of the problem for many years and that he could not stand the hardships imposed upon the Indians in South Africa. Sir Raymond West had counselled patience, but he himself held there was no longer any room for patience. Where was the scope for patience when Indians were actually being deprived of their rights?

Before the meeting dispersed, a resolution expressing sympathy with the British Indians in South Africa was moved by Miss Winterbottom, the Secretary of the Union of Ethical Societies, and was passed. With a vote of thanks to Mr. Ritch, the proceedings came to a close.

188. DEPUTATION NOTES–IV

[Before December 18, 1906]

Their work completed, the Delegates left England by the same mail-ship which carries this letter. In fact, this note is being written on board the steamer.

The last week will abide in our memory for ever. Every moment strengthened our confidence that the mission on which the Delegates went to England would succeed.

SECOND MEETING OF M. P.’S.

After Mr. Morley’s reply, the Members of Parliament became more alert. They thought that, if the Royal assent were given to the Ordinance, England’s prestige would suffer. They therefore decided to hold another meeting. Sir Charles Schwann, Mr. Cox and Mr. Scott busied themselves with this work. They asked us to issue circulars for
The meeting. These were got ready and despatched overnight. The meeting took place on Monday; and the Members resolved to wait upon the Prime Minister and speak to him about the Ordinance. A committee was appointed and it met Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman. The Prime Minister said that he did not approve of the Ordinance, and that he would speak to Lord Elgin on the matter. This provided the first reason for entertaining the hope of which we have spoken.

INTERVIEW WITH CHURCHILL

We met Mr. Winston Churchill at the time fixed by him. He spoke nicely. He asked both of us whether we were not afraid of responsible government in case the Ordinance were refused assent. What if a worse act were to be passed by the new Government? We replied that we could not imagine an act worse than the present Ordinance,¹ and that we had asked for refusal of assent leaving the future to take care of itself. He then asked us to send him a brief note, covering, say, a foolscap sheet, of all that we had to say on this Ordinance, on the Vrededorp Stands Ordinance² and on the question as a whole. He would read and consider it. Mr. Ally then reminded him that he was the same person who had been present at the Point to receive Mr. Churchill on his return from the war². And it was with the same Mr. Churchill that he now pleaded for redress on behalf of the Indian community. Mr. Churchill smiled, patted Mr. Ally on the back and said that he would do all he could. This answer added to our hopes. The brief account asked for by Mr. Churchill has already been sent to him.

INTERVIEW TO “THE DAILY NEWS”

The name of the Editor is Gardiner. When we repeated the whole story for his benefit, he promised to write strongly on the subject, and a poignant article was published the following day.

PARTY TO WELL-WISHERS

The Delegates may be said to have done the last bit of their work on the 29th. They gave a breakfast at Hotel Cecil to the gentlemen who had helped them. At the breakfast, the idea of the Committee was [formally] put forward. A fairly large number of persons was present. Lord Reay made a very good and powerful speech. There were also other effective speeches. But as I intend giving a separate account of the meeting and of the Committee, I shall say nothing more today.

DELEGATES’ FAREWELL LETTER

The Delegates have sent a letter\(^1\) of thanks to the Press. They have said that the Indian community did not want to fight against the Colony, but wished to solve its problems amicably. When a blow was directed against the community, it had to use a shield to ward it off. The community would, as far as possible, act with due deference to the views of the colonists. But at the same time, it would demand that there should be no detraction from the normal rights to which every citizen was entitled.

SEND-OFF

The Delegates left Waterloo station on December 1. Among those present to see them off were Sir Muncherji Bhownaggree, Mr. J. H. Polak, Mr. Ritch, the two Godfrey brothers, Mr. Suliman Manga, Mr. Mukerji, Mrs. Polak, Miss Smith, Mr. Simmonds, Prof. Parmanand and Mr. Ruthnum Pather.

THANKS FOR HELP

The names of those among the public men who helped us have already been mentioned and they have been thanked. But it remains for us to thank those who helped us without any thought of being publicly known. Among them are Mr. Simmonds, Miss Lawson, Mr. George Godfrey, Mr. James Godfrey, Mr. Ritch, Mr. Manilal Mehta, Mr. Adam Gool, Mr. Manga and Mr. Joseph Royeppen. Though Mr. Simmonds and Miss Lawson received payment, they did not work merely as wageearners. They worked late into the night ungrudgingly. The Godfrey brothers were in attendance everyday and assisted us. Gool and Manga, too, came whenever there was need. Similarly, Mr. Ruthnum Pather, who is at present studying in England, used to come and help us. But for all this help, the work of the M.P.’s. could not have been carried out as planned. The number of notices issued to the M.P.’s. alone was about 2,000. Anyone can realize the time that must have been taken in sending these out. It is superfluous to praise Mr. Ritch. His work is well known to the Indian community. Prof. Parmanand also gave us all the help that was needed.

\(^1\) “Letter to the Press”, 30-11-1906.
RITCH'S SPEECH

Mr. Ritch delivered a speech1 before the East India Association. As I give an account of it separately, I do not write about it here.

CABLEGRAM AT MADEIRA

Having finished our work, we left by s. s. Briton. We received two cablegrams when Briton touched Madeira. One was from Mr. Ritch, and the other from Johannesburg. Both said that the Ordinance had been refused assent by Lord Elgin. This was more than we had hoped for. But God's ways are inscrutable. Well-directed efforts yield appropriate fruit. The case of the Indian community was just, and circumstances turned out to be favourable. It is a happy outcome, but we may not exult over it. Much of the struggle still lies ahead. The Indian community has still to do much of its duty. We shall be able to digest our victory only if we prove our worth. Otherwise, it will turn out to be poison. We shall pursue these reflections later.

NATAL STRUGGLE

Lord Elgin has asked for a written statement2 about Natal. This has been sent to him. The result will come to be known in the course of time. The Committee that has been set up is left with the work of striving for Natal and Vrededorp. It will thus have little respite.

[December 23, 1906]

RESOLUTION 2. This meeting of the British Indians of the Transvaal further tenders its thanks to the several friends in England who have helped the Delegates by their active support, and authorizes the Chairman of the British Indian Association and the Acting Chairman of the Hamidia Islamic Society to write to the gentlemen letters of thanks.

RESOLUTION 3. This meeting of the British Indians of the Transvaal further places on record the respectful desire of the Indian community to work in co-operation with the European colonists and to yield to their wishes in all reasonable ways and trust[s] that they will reciprocate the sentiment by helping the Indian settlers in the Transvaal to live in the Colony with self-respect and dignity, and in the enjoyment of those civic rights which all well-behaved citizens under civilized government have the right to possess.

191. SPEECH AT RECEPTION

The following is a brief report of Gandhiji’s speech at a reception given in his honour by Omar Haji Amod Zaveri at his house:

[DURBAN, December 26, 1906]

Mr. Gandhi thanked everyone. He expressed appreciation of the help rendered by Mr. Ally, and added that they should not be overjoyed at the cancellation of the Ordinance. The time had now come for all of them, Hindus and Muslims, to remain united and to carry on a real struggle. He emphasized the need for everyone to remain united in all such activity.

1 On their return to South Africa, Gandhiji and Ally were given a reception by the British Indian Association at the Hamidia Islamic Society Hall on December 23. In reply to the addresses presented to them and to speeches eulogizing their services, Gandhiji and Ally said, according to Indian Opinion, that “their work had only just commenced. They had to show to the European Colonists that the Indian claim was just and reasonable and such as no sober Colonist would take exception to”.

2 This and the following resolution appear to have been drafted by Gandhiji. Earlier, the meeting adopted Resolution I congratulating Gandhiji and Ally on the success of their mission. All the three resolutions were unanimously passed.
192. REPLY TO WELCOME ADDRESS AT VERULAM

On December 29, 1906, the Indian community in Verulam presented an address to Gandhiji and H. O. Ally. Replying to the address on behalf of Ally, who was not present, and himself, Gandhiji said:

December 29, 1906

I thank you for the address of welcome to Mr. Ally and myself. I sympathize with the labourers in their hardships. We did put up a stiff fight when the [£3] tax was imposed on them. It is very difficult now to get any redress in the matter. We cannot do much about work taken on Sundays. As desired by you, I shall convey the message of your address and your thanks to Mr. Ally.

194. A RETROSPECT

It has been our practice, during Christmas every year, to take stock of the position of Indians in South Africa. On this occasion we are glad to be able to inform our readers of the success achieved by the Deputation in the matter of the Transvaal Ordinance, which is the most important event of the year. As desired by Lord Elgin with holding assent to the Ordinance, it is not only the Transvaal Indians

1 The Colonial Office Records show that this was the code word used by Gandhiji as Secretary of the Transvaal British Indian Association. who have benefited, but the entire Indian community in South Africa. The community has gone one step forward. The main reason for withholding sanction was, we believe, saving the Indian community from a stigma which the Ordinance was certain to have put on it. This means that the Imperial Government will not sanction any law that will apply to the Indians but not to the whites. If we are right in assuming this, the Vrededorp Stands Ordinance, which prohibits Indians from holding any leases of Stands in Vrededorp, should also be refused sanction. And the Natal Municipalities Franchise Bill should also be treated likewise. The Natal Mercury has, however, drawn a distinction and based on it the demand that, while the Transvaal is still a Crown Colony and so open to interference from the Imperial Government in its legislation, Natal is a self-governing Colony and that the Imperial Government should not interfere in its affairs. This argument is fallacious; for there is a clause in the Constitution of Natal which requires that all class legislation passed by the Natal parliament should have the approval of the Imperial Government before it becomes law. If therefore this clause is not a mere show-piece but meant really to protect the Indian community, the argument of The Natal Mercury is not valid. There is therefore every reason to expect that the Natal Bill too will be vetoed.

195. OPPRESSION IN THE CAPE

It has come to our notice that, under the Cape Immigration Act, the Cape Indians, while taking out an immigration certificate or permit, furnish their photograph, pay a fee of £1 and, on occasion, give their right and left thumb-impressions as well. We have also come to know that this has gone on for some time past. We are deeply grieved to learn this. It not only makes the Indians hang their heads in shame, but, if not stopped, it will have repercussions elsewhere and will harm the cause of the entire Indian community in South Africa. It is quite easy to remedy this evil. For, as we understand it, it is not done under any properly enacted law; it is the immigration officer who, in consultation with a few Indians, has introduced this system of taking photographs. If, therefore, Indians meet the immigration officer, immediate redress may be possible. We are anxious to learn that effective measures have been taken in this regard without the least delay. At one time the Asiatic Officer had introduced a similar regulation in the Transvaal; but it had to be repealed when the Indian community opposed it.

Moreover, it is found that these certificates will be valid for one year only. There is absolutely no reason why they should be so limited. To a man who has no knowledge of English but is a resident of the Cape, a permanent certificate should be issued stating that he has a right to return to the Cape. We are not prisoners released on parole that our certificates of freedom can be cancelled if we fail to return within a given period. The situation in the Cape is believed to be better than that elsewhere. We appeal to the Cape leaders to keep up that position by their diligence.

196. REPLY TO WELCOME ADDRESS AT DURBAN

A meeting of the Natal Indian Congress was held at Durban on Tuesday, January 1, 1907, to present an address to Gandhiji and H. O. Ally, with Dawad Mahomed in the chair. Gandhiji replied as follows:

[DURBAN, January 1, 1907]

I do not propose to speak at length, as it is already late. Both Mr. Ally and myself are very grateful to you for the kind sentiments you have expressed about us. Unity is our greatest need here. We are sure to obtain our just rights if we stand united and demand them politely but firmly. We could not have achieved anything in England but for the help we received from the people there. We have seen that British rule is essentially just and we can find redress for our grievances through representations. But we should not be elated by our success. Our struggle has just begun. Now it is up to us to retain the [fruits of] victory. We have to explain things to the politicians here. Before I conclude, I would appeal to all of you to do your duty, working actively, with body, mind and wealth, for the good of the community.

197. SPEECH AT DINNER

On Wednesday, January 2, 1907, a dinner was given in honour of Gandhiji and Ally by Messrs M. C. Comroodeen & Co. at their premises in Grey Street, Durban. The Manager of the firm spoke on the occasion and Gandhiji and Ally replied. The following is a combined report of their speeches:

[DURBAN, January 2, 1907]

Messrs Gandhi and Ally each replied, and narrated their work in London. During their stay, short as it was, they came in contact with all classes of men from the humblest politician to the highest, including the Premier, and none of them on hearing the case put in such a reasonable light, grudged them their support, no matter what party he belonged to. To give some idea, the Delegates stated that 5,000 penny stamps were used for their work in London. The Committee that had been formed to watch their affairs was composed of highly influential men, to whom they entrusted their case in South Africa. Strong and sincere promises of help had been given by Members of both the Houses of Parliament, who were convinced of the moderation of their demand, and the conciliatory spirit of their case. When the Ordinance was introduced, it was passed so hurriedly that all the protests were disregarded, and yet they did not seek any outside interference. They took the right course, and the right had prevailed. They had high hopes from the work of the Committee. The great organ of public opinion, The Times, in London, had opened its columns to discuss their case, and when the position was explicitly explained and understood, there was only one reply, and that was that their grievance was just, modest, and reasonable to any right-thinking human being. When they left the English shore, they had strong hopes that redress would not be denied to them: and when, after some days, they reached Madeira they had a cable to say that the Ordinance had been disallowed. The Delegates asked the audience to conform to all their responsibilities as citizens, and they had every hope from British justice. The struggle had only just begun, but they did not despair of the future.

198. REPLY TO MAHOMEDAN ASSOCIATION’S ADDRESS

A well-attended meeting of the Mahomedan Association was held at Durban on Thursday, January 3, 1907, to present an address to Gandhiji and Ally with Osman Ahmed Effendi in the chair. Gandhiji replied as follows:
A number of associations have been founded recently. If they want to, they can do a great deal for the community. The workers in these associations should act as servants of these bodies, not as masters. Only so can real service be rendered. Also we shall gain much strength and influence if the various associations co-operate with one another. Moreover, the suggestion made by Mr. Paul about education really deserves consideration. He also referred to the land in Phoenix. I am glad to say that I do not look upon it as my personal property, but as belonging to the community. I am sorry to state that the Government in India is trying to create disunity among Hindus and Muslims there. It would like to see us divided as it believes that only thus can British rule in India be perpetuated. A cablegram is published in The Advertiser today, which we cannot accept as genuine. It is certainly the Government which sends out these cablegrams and arranges such meetings. Many people want to know the main reason of our success [in London]. It lies in the perfect accord that obtained between Mr. Ally and myself. Never were there any differences between us. We have been successful only because we acted with love and in concert, like father and son. It should be remembered by all that, even though following different religions, we remained united in our struggle. Secondly, truth and justice were on our side. I believe God is always near me. He is never away from me. May you also act in this faith. Believe that God is near you and always follow the truth. This is all I ask of you.

199. SPEECH AT DURBAN RECEPTION

An address was presented to Gandhiji and Ally by the Mahomedan Association at the Indian Theatre in Victoria Street on Thursday, January 3, 1907. In reply to the address and speeches by Dawad Mahomed, Dada Abdulla and others, Gandhiji and Ally spoke. The following is a combined report of their speeches:
The Delegates spoke, each in their turn, on broad politics, further giving the audience a review of their hard work in England. They acknowledged the sterling services and important counsels given to them by Sir M. M. Bhownaggree, who placed his immense influence and long experience at their disposal, as did Mr. Ameer Ali, ex-judge of the Calcutta Supreme Court. The importance of India as a precious possession of the British Empire, with its 300,000,000 people who form a third part of the King-Emperor's subjects, played a great part in their success. The English audience was, at several meetings, asked whether they would allow the South African colonists to ill-treat undeservedly the sons of India, who fought their wars in China, South Africa, Somaliland, Soudan, and the frontiers of India; the people whose loyalty could be gauged by remembering that a handful of white soldiers (about 78,000) was sufficient to guard the 300 millions of fellow-subjects in India, and whether they would like the representatives of the 13,000 British Indians of the Transvaal when they went back to India, to tell their kith and kin that the great Emperor who ruled this vast Empire was unable to save them from undue humiliation in South Africa at the hands of narrow-minded white colonists? The instant reply of the enthusiastic audiences was strongly in the negative.

Messrs Gandhi and Ally convinced the Indian audience that they had returned with a confident conviction from England that any reasonable and just grievance, when laid with moderation before the English rulers at Home, would not go unredressed; and, in conclusion, asked the members of the community to conform to all the laws and by-laws of the Government whether just or unjust, and make themselves good citizens, as in them lay their own salvation. They must convince their white neighbours that their presence in South Africa was not unbenefficial to the Colony, and they must work side by side with European colonists, who should always be honoured as the predominant race.

The Natal Mercury, 8-1-1907

200. REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION

In his annual report recently published, the Superintendent of Education in Natal has said that whatever education is given [to Indians] is provided by the Government at its own expense and that the Indian community does nothing in the matter. The charge is partly, though not entirely, justified. Besides running a Madressa at Umgeni and one or two other private schools, the Indian community makes small occasional contributions towards the education of Indians. Hence we cannot admit the charge of the Superintendent in the form in which he has made it. But it will have to be admitted by every Indian to his shame that the charge is on the whole justified.
Even in the Madressa there is plenty of scope for improvement if only we have the enthusiasm. We are firmly of the view that, just as there should be provision in every Madressa for the teaching of Arabic, so should there be provision for secular or practical education, that is, for the teaching of English and Gujarati or any other Indian language.
Moreover, whatever teaching there is in Arabic is mostly parrot-like; in other words, it is learning by rote without understanding the meaning. On this point, we would advise our Muslim brethren to consider the example of Egypt. There education is imparted in Arabic from childhood, but with comprehension of the meaning, so that all people can speak Arabic and understand what they read from the earliest age. This is also true of other education in the Egyptian Madressa. If this reform is carried out in every Indian Madressa, many Muslim children will receive some education without difficulty. In this matter we cannot but confess that the leaders of the community have remained backward.

Apart from the Madressa, there is so little by way of other facilities, and the Indian community has been so careless that we must admit whatever charge is made against us on this count. It does not become us to pass on the blame to others by saying that the Government does nothing for education. It is as much our duty as that of the Government to provide for education. If the Government fails in its duty, that is no reason for us to follow suit. On the contrary, if the Government does nothing for education, the responsibility of the Indian community becomes all the greater. We are therefore constrained to say that the above charge is quite justified.

We know that it is easy to be critical but difficult to suggest remedies and apply them. But we shall be able to take a step forward only if we admit that we have been guilty. Three things are necessary for meeting the problem. The first thing is buildings and equipment.
In this matter, only the well-to-do can do much.

The second thing to be done is that, just as the rich ought to contribute money, so also ought educated Indians to place their education at the disposal of the community, free of charge or all but free of charge. Making money is not the object of education. If the Roman Catholic community is foremost in the world in the matter of education, it is so because it has from the beginning decided that those who are to be engaged in teaching should give their services free, accepting only what is necessary for their maintenance. Besides, they are of mature age and unmarried, so that they are able to devote all their time to the single job of teaching. We may or may not be able to reach that level, but there is no doubt that we ought to take a lesson from their example. Even those who have received but moderate education will do well to think over these suggestions. We shall consider later and in detail in what manner educated people can help, easily and without much trouble.¹

The third remedy lies in the hands of the parents. If among our people the parents had been eager to see their children educated, they would have made the necessary provision somehow, and means would have been found easily enough for the two measures suggested above. But Indian parents are backward in this respect, and to us this is a cause of humiliation. We cannot find a single period in history when an uneducated people has become prosperous. It is not that education has become necessary only in modern times; it has always been so. Only the form has changed. The kind of education, which we cannot do without now, was not absolutely necessary in olden days. We believe that a people without modern education will fall behind in the end; not only that, it would not even be surprising if such a people were destroyed altogether. Be that as it may, it is certain that, whatever struggle we put up for our rights, the condition of Indians will never become what it ought to be as long as we remain backward in education.

201. INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

Many prominent people who formerly used to ignore the Congress took notice of its session this year. The main reason is the great storm that is raging in Bengal at present. Reuter has sent long reports to the newspapers here. This is the first time that the Congress has received such publicity. The session has also produced a great impression this year. The address by the Grand Old Man of India is very forceful and effective. His words deserve to be enshrined in our hearts. The substance of the address is that India will not prosper until we wake up and become united. To put it differently, it means that it lies in our hands to achieve swaraj, to prosper and to preserve the rights we value. On an earlier occasion we mentioned Mr. Asquith’s reply to the women of Great Britain that, if all of them demanded the franchise, it could not but be granted. We must therefore realize that, like us here, people in England too have difficulty in obtaining their rights. There, the people can secure their demands with less difficulty. That this is so is not because they are white, but because they are firmly united in their demands and, if these are rejected, they can create trouble for the rulers. When the South Africa British Indian Committee was formed in England, Dr. Oldfield said that strength and justice were dear to the British people. Under British rule, justice is often not to be had without some show of strength, whether of the pen, of the sword, or of money. For our part we are to use only the strength that comes from unity and truth. That is to say, our bondage in India can cease this day, if all the people unite in their demands and are ready to suffer any hardships that may befall them. These thoughts, which relate to India, will also be useful to us here.

202. TOBACCO

We have written now and again in these columns about the harm done by smoking or chewing tobacco. The evil effects of tobacco, as our realization of them grows, have alarmed many great men. The famous Major-General Baden-Powell\(^1\) of Mafeking, addressing schoolboys in Liverpool, said that many of the world’s best men were non-smokers. Basset, the football player, Grace, the cricketer, Henlane, the great rower, Weston, the walking champion, Tej, the golf star, Taylor, the great hunter, Celloo, the famous hiker, are all of them non-smokers. When Baden-Powell’s stock of tobacco ran out, the soldiers at Mafeking addicted to tobacco became absolutely useless, for they were helpless if they could not smoke. Thus smoking makes of man a slave. In England, it is said, addicts to smoking are quite

\(^1\) (1857-1941); founder of the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides organizations indifferent to those around them. The evil effects of this habit become really very dangerous when it spreads among juveniles. They learn to steal and commit other crimes. They deceive their parents and ruin their health. They become irritable, and by the time they become adults, they lose their strength of mind. The habit of smoking has not spread as much among Indians as among Europeans. However, it will be adding to our many ills if educated Indians lose their sanity and take to smoking.

203. BOOKS TO BE PUBLISHED

We intend to publish translations or summaries of English books which have not yet been translated in India, but which are likely to be of use, more or less, to all Indian readers. Considering that a large section of our readers are Muslims, we are thinking of publishing a translation of the celebrated Mr. Justice Ameer Ali’s book on Islam which came out some time ago. Justice Ameer Ali has given us the permission to translate it. The consent of the publishers is yet to be had. If that also is received and if the idea is favoured by our readers and they are prepared to encourage us, we intend to publish a translation of The Spirit of Islam in book form. We must say that Justice Ameer Ali’s book has won fame throughout the world and deserves to be read by every Muslim, indeed by every Indian. There is much to be learnt from it. We shall gratefully bear in mind any suggestions our readers may have to make. The suggestions, it is requested, should be brief and legibly written.

The above sums must have already been credited to your account in the statements sent to you.

Shri Bhabha of Volksrust tells me that you still continue to send the advertisement bill to him. He has already paid it and the money also has been credited here.

Kalyandas is now busy recovering the dues here. Many subscribers complain that they do not get Indian Opinion regularly. The two enclosed copies were sent in a single wrapper. You will notice that the postal stamp on Desai’s copy has not been defaced. You may remove the stamp and use it. Kalyandas believes that some of our people there pack the copies and stick the wrappers carelessly, and they therefore fall apart and the papers get lost. I am writing to Mr. West also about this. We ought to be very careful. I think it necessary for someone to supervise the work of wrapping. You may discuss this with others there.

I am going to write about the London Letter. I shall write to The Times of India also. We are bound by a contract with Reuter for three months, so we can make an alternative arrangement only at the end of the three months. I am, however, moving in the matter straightaway.

Ask Mania to write to me. Let me know what he reads under your guidance. I sent all the matter I could. Let me know whether or not it was enough. If you have received anything regarding the translation of Justice Ameer Ali’s book, send it on to me.

Blessings from

Mohanandas

205. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[JOHANNESBURG, About January 5, 1907]

[MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,]

I see in the list of subscribers sent by you for collection, the name of K. M. Kagdi, Box 296. I remember having sent the name to you, but he tells me that he never received a single copy. He clears his box everyday, but does not receive any. Will you kindly make enquiries? If we have been sending the paper, collection is easy. If not, we have to drop this collection. You may, however, commence sending the paper from the date of this letter, if it has not been sent before. I have looked through the printed list sent by you, and I did not find the name there earlier.

You should try not to take Manilal from the English desk if possible. It is necessary to give him regular training. There is a great deal of force in Mr. West’s argument with regard to him.

206. SUPERINTENDENT ALEXANDER

Mr. Alexander, till now the [Police] Superintendent of Durban, has left his post. He has received much honour in Durban in recognition of his excellent services. He was very kind to the Indians. To show the appreciation of the Durban Indian community there is, we hear, a move to present him with an address. We would advise that there should be no delay and the matter be taken in hand immediately. We hope that Mr. Donovan, who has been appointed in Mr. Alexander’s place, will continue his policy and deal out justice impartially.

207. REASONABLE SUGGESTION

The Cape Argus of Cape Town, commenting on the Asiatic Ordinance, suggests that the different governments of South Africa should consult with the Indian leaders with a view to finding a solution of the Indian problem in South Africa. It says further that, if this is not done, both Britain and India will probably suffer. This is an important suggestion, made as it is for the first time by an English journal. If proper steps are immediately taken, it is likely to be acted upon. The suggestion shows that the withholding of assent to the Asiatic Ordinance has had a somewhat salutary effect on the mind of the white population all over South Africa. We have discussed this matter in greater detail in our English article, and we hope that some good will come of it.

208. ETHICAL RELIGION-I

INTRODUCTION

We propose, during the next few weeks, to write a series of articles on this subject for readers of Indian Opinion. Hypocrisy has nowadays increased in the world. Whatever a man’s religion, he thinks only of its outward form and fails in his real duty. In our crazy pursuit of wealth, we seldom think of the harm we cause, or are likely

1 The Cape Argus, commenting on the situation created by the suspension of the Transvaal Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, said: “We would have the local Governments everywhere take counsel with the leaders of the Indian community. It should be put to these men that they cannot expect white colonists to stand by and see the very texture of the community quickly transformed by an Indian influx; and that some regulations should be arrived at by which undue hardship on the men who are here could be avoided. It is by some such compromise only that we can avoid conflict, good for neither Briton nor Indian.” Commenting on this in its English editorial columns, Indian Opinion (5-1-1907) described it as “A Wise Suggestion” and argued that “British Indians in South Africa have [always] accepted the principle of restriction of Indian immigration along non-racial lines”.

2 In this and the subsequent seven articles of the same title, Gandhiji summarized, into Gujarati, Ethical religion by William MacIntyre Salter, the founder of the Society for Ethical Culture, Chicago. The book, one of a series issued by the Rationalist Press Association, was published in America in March 1889 and later in England in 1905. In the Gujarati series, Gandhiji summarized only eight of the fifteen chapters. to cause, to others. Women in Europe do not hesitate in the least to wear soft [kid] gloves even though these are made by killing young and tender animals. It is known the world over how Mr. Rockefeller, said to be the richest man in the world, violated many rules of morality in amassing his fortune. It is because such conditions prevail around them that many people in Europe and America have turned against religion. They argue that, if any religion worth the name existed in the world, the inordinate wickedness that is rampant all round would not be there. This is a mistaken view. As it is common for a workman to quarrel with his tools and not try to look for his own faults, so, instead of thinking of the wickedness in themselves, men brand religion itself as humbug and go on acting and living as they please.

Observing this trend and fearing that, if all religions are destroyed, a great calamity may befall the world and people may forsake the moral path altogether, many Americans and Europeans have come forward to try, in a variety of ways, to bring the people back to that path.

A Society\(^1\) has been founded which has shown, after an investigation of all religions, that not only do all of them teach morality but they are based for the most part on ethical principles; that it is one’s duty to obey the laws of ethics whether or not one professes a religion; and that men who would not obey them could do no good either to themselves or to others, in this world or the next. The object of these societies is to influence those who have led to look down upon all religions because of the prevailing hypocrisy. They find out the fundamentals of all religions, discuss and write about the ethical principles common to them and live up to them. This creed they call Ethical Religion. It is not among the aims of these societies to criticize any religion. Men professing all religions can, and do, join these societies. The advantage of such a society is that members adhere to their own faith more strictly and pay greater attention to its moral teaching. They firmly believe that man ought to abide by the laws of morality and that if he does not, it mean an end to all order in the world and ultimate destruction.

Mr Salter, a learned American, has published a book on the subject, which is excellent. Though it does not deal with any religion

\(^{1}\) The Society for Ethical Culture, Chicago as such, it contains teachings of universal application. We shall publish the substance of these teachings every week. All that needs to be said about the author is that he practises whatever he advises others to do. We would only appeal to the reader to try to live up to those moral precepts that appeal to him. Then only may we regard our efforts as having been fruitful.

CHAPTER I

It is the moral nature of man by which he rises to good and noble thoughts. The different sciences show us the world as it is. Ethics tells us what it ought to be. It enables man to know how he should act. Man has two windows to his mind: through one he can see his own self as it is; through the other, he can see what it ought to be. It is our task to analyse and explore the body, the brain and the mind of man separately; but if we stop here, we derive no benefit despite our scientific knowledge. It is necessary to know about the evil effects of injustice, wickedness, vanity and the like, and the disaster they spell where the three are found together. And mere knowledge is not enough, it should be followed by appropriate action. An ethical idea is like an architect’s plan. The plan shows how the building should be constructed; but it becomes useless if the building is not raised accordingly. Similarly, an ethical idea is useless so long as it is not followed by suitable action. There are many who memorize moral precepts and preach sermons, but they neither practise them nor do they mean to do so. There are some who believe that moral principles are not intended to be practised in this world; they are meant for the other world—the world which lies beyond death. A great thinker has said, “If you wish to attain perfection, you must begin from this very day to live according to the laws of morality at any cost.” We need not be scared away by such thoughts; on the contrary we should be glad to live up to them, considering our responsibility in the matter. “Certainly, cousin,” said the gallant Earl of Pembroke, on coming up to the Earl of Derby before Aubercoche and finding the battle already won, “you have neither been courteous nor behaved honour-ably to fight my enemies without waiting for me, seeing that you had sent for me”. Only when there is such readiness to accept moral responsibility will men tread the path of virtue.

God is omnipotent, He is perfect. There are no limits to His mercy, to His goodness and to His justice. If this is so, how can we, His bond slaves, stray at all from the moral path? It is no fault of the ethical principles if one following them should fail. However, those committing a breach of morality have only themselves to blame.

In the path of morality there is no such thing as reward for moral behaviour. If a man does some good deed, he does not do it to win applause, he does it because he must. For him doing good is but a higher kind of food, if one may compare food and goodness. And if someone should give him an opportunity to do a good deed, he would feel grateful just as a starving man would be grateful to the giver of food and bless him.

This ethical religion, of which we have spoken, does not mean the cultivation of gentlemanliness. It does mean that we should become a little more diligent, a little better educated, a little cleaner and neater, etc. All this is no doubt included in it, but it touches only the fringe of ethical religion. Many more things have to be done by man if he would walk along this path; and he has to do them as a matter of duty, knowing them to be a part of his nature, not for gaining any worldly benefit.

209. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

January 8, 1907

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I saw the Secretary of the Hamidia [Islamic Society] again today in connection with its regulations. He lays the blame on you, saying that the proofs were sent after two months! Is this right? He has now promised to return the proofs and the report on Friday.

Don’t forget that you are to send me a list of simple books in Hindi and Tamil.

Approach the men from whom no advertisements have been received, and some others as well. Let me know what happens.

I am also sending some matter.

210. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

January 11, 1907

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I can well understand how you must be working. I know, too, that you cannot leave Phoenix. It is because Kalyandas\(^1\) is so enthusiastic that a long programme has been drawn up for him. All the same, he will be there on the 19th at the latest. I will instruct him to reach on the 18th. He will leave tomorrow. By staying on, he could clear the entire Johannesburg list. I will arrange about Suleman Ismail’s advertisement. Do not take it out for the present.

I am sending a letter from Suleman Essop. It carries my comments. Print only these. The letter is not to be printed. I hope whatever I send is being kept in a separate jacket or in some such manner that it does not get mislaid.

Add the following names as new subscribers. Hemchand will send a credit note when their subscriptions are received here.

Mr. V. Naidoo
Wellington, C.C.
Messrs K. U. Naidoo & Co.
Robertson

Send copies of the last three or four issues to both. But enter them as subscribers from January only. See that everyone who arrives in Phoenix feels at home.

Blessings from
M OHANDAS

[PS.]

Let me know at your convenience the expenditure at Phoenix on my account, and also ask Miss West\(^2\) to give the figure.

211. LETTER TO “THE OUTLOOK”

[JOHANNESBURG
Before January 12, 1907]

[TO
THE EDITOR
THE OUTLOOK
SIR,]

May I congratulate you on having recognized by your exhaustive leader on “British Indians in the Transvaal” in your issue of November 24 the Imperial importance of the question? And may I, at the same time, point out that you have, in justifying the anti-Indian policy of the Europeans, done, no doubt unconsciously, an injustice to British Indians in a twofold manner?

First, in my humble opinion, you have missed the central question. You seem to think that Indians on the one hand demand an open door for an unrestricted influx of their countrymen, and that the white colonists on the other, from an instinct of self-preservation, demand that the door should be tightly closed. Such, however, is not the case. Indians ask for the ordinary civil rights enjoyed by all human beings, except criminals, in any civilized state. They admit the principle of restriction of further immigration of their brethren along the lines even as adopted by Australia, but they say, with Mr. Chamberlain that they may not be restricted solely because they are British Indians. If Imperialism has any meaning, how can any exception be taken to a position such as above? I have no doubt that you, sir, will admit that even a self-governing colony, so long as it chooses to remain a part of the Empire, may not go so far as to degrade and ill-treat those whom it finds settled within its borders on assumption of self-governing powers.

Secondly, you talk of the necessity of sacrifice of a “principle of logic” (as you are pleased to term it) to the principle of “high expediency”. To me, it is not logic so much as morality you would sacrifice on the altar of expediency; but assuming that a logical or a moral principle may be so sacrificed, what is “higher expediency”? It is a wanton wounding of the susceptibilities of a finely strung and highly loyal community like the millions of India, or a firm refusal on the part of the Imperial watchdog sitting, in Lord Milner’s language, on the watch-tower, and sweeping the whole horizon before him to protect an unreasoning and unreasonable colour prejudice.

You incidentally mention the Treaty of Vereeniging. May I draw your attention to the fact that, even if the term “Native” as used there were to include British Indians, it merely suspends a consideration of the granting of the political franchise to the “Natives” until after the establishment of responsible government in the Colony. British Indians have, however, in unmistakable language stated that they do not aspire, at any rate at the present stage, to political power.

212. QUINN’S SPEECH

Mr. Quinn’s speech, as reported by our Johannesburg correspondent, deserves attention. It shows that the white population is altogether in the dark about our conditions. Mr. Quinn believes that (1) the Asiatic Ordinance would have prevented the entry of Indians without permits; (2) there are many Indians who have entered the country without permits; (3) the Transvaal law would also have served to check Indian trade.

All these statements are incorrect. The Transvaal Ordinance which has been disallowed would not have prevented the entry of permitless Indians. The only law that can prevent the entry of such persons is the Peace Preservation Ordinance. Also it is not true that many Indians enter without permits. Recent cases show that people are effectively prevented from doing so. Furthermore, every one knows that the Asiatic Ordinance had no bearing on Indian trade.

All the same, it should be borne in mind that harm is done to the whole Indian community to the extent that some try to enter without permits or with forged ones. Those engaged in such activities should desist from them.

Above all, leading Indians should do all they can to remove this kind of misunderstanding among the white population. A recent example is the incident that occurred in the house of Mr. Dawad Mahomed, which we mention elsewhere.

213. VREDEDORP ORDINANCE

It will be seen from our Johannesburg Letter that the Vrededorp
Ordinance has been passed.¹ Thus there is a danger of Vrededorp Indians having to leave the place. Now that the Ordinance has been passed, the Indian community should realize that there is much work ahead, and that it will have to put up a hard fight. If the Asiatic Ordinance was cancelled, it was only because the matter was widely discussed in England. The same telegram which brought us the news of the passing of the Vrededorp Ordinance also says that our Committee in London is working hard in the matter of the Natal Municipal Bill. It remains to be seen what the result will be. Whatever it be, one thing at least is proved by this: the Committee that we have formed in England should be strengthened and supported energetically. It certainly ought not to be wound up. We invite the attention of every reader to the summary of Mr. Ritch’s first letter published by us. If the Committee continues to work in that manner, there is every chance of our profiting a great deal.

This Ordinance [business] also shows that there is nothing like self-help in any matter whatever. That is, as long as we do not do what needs to be done in South Africa, we cannot hope for complete success. What our duty is in South Africa, we shall consider on another occasion.²

Vrededorp Ordinance.

214. JAPAN AND AMERICA

The quarrel between Japan and America still continues. California has a large Japanese population, which has made much progress by dint of its intelligence and skill. There are many Japanese boys in American schools. The white population there cannot bear this. Japan is putting up a hard fight over this issue. So far, there has been no solution. President Roosevelt is in a difficult situation. On the one hand, a brave people like the Japanese is being insulted. On the other, those among the white population who would not mind America being involved in a war refuse to listen to Roosevelt’s advice and do not allow Japanese boys to enter the schools. It is an impossible situation. America is not in a position even to fight. The Japanese Navy is very much stronger than the American, and only recently it proved its mettle.

In a situation such as this, England too has to weigh matters carefully. While the Japanese are friends of the English, the Americans are their cousins. Whom should England support? It is believed that war can be averted only if England intervenes effectively.

215. JOHANNESBURG, LETTER\(^1\)

QUINN’S SPEECH

A feverish election campaign is going on in the Transvaal in view of the new parliament that is to come into existence. Mr. Quinn is working hard to enter Parliament. Addressing his electorate, he spoke to the following effect:

As a result of the Asiatic Ordinance passed by the Legislative Council some time ago, it has become very difficult for Asiatics to enter without a permit. Those who voted for that Act bore no malice towards the Asiatics. There is no point in saying that they are British subjects. For there are some British subjects with white skins with whom I would have nothing to do.

\(^1\) These despatches were published regularly in Indian Opinion as from its Johannesburg correspondent.
It is in self-defence therefore that we oppose their coming in. Our views in this matter are identical with those expressed by Mr. Chamberlain. The Asiatics who manage to live on a tenth of the money needed by the whites are not justified in expecting to enter and settle here in large numbers. It is not proper that such men should compete with us. It is necessary therefore to take steps to prevent them from doing so. The present position is that, out of the five thousand licences issued at Johannesburg, ten per cent. have gone to the Asiatics—270 to the Indians and 255 to the Chinese. This should not happen. These shops should be closed down and the shopkeepers given compensation. The British Government with held assent to the Asiatic Ordinance because they were not aware either of our real condition or of our feelings in the matter. I do not believe that the British Government intend to do us harm. They have not taken the side of the sufferers, and if they have with held assent to the Ordinance for that reason, they will not hesitate to accord sanction to the Ordinance when the [new] parliament of the Transvaal meets and reenacts it unanimously.

216. ETHICAL RELIGION- II

CHAPTER II: IDEAL MORALITY

The current views of morality are not of a very high order. Some believe that morality is not something quite essential. Others think that there is no relation between religion and morality. But an examination of the world’s religions shows that, without morality, religion cannot subsist. True morality covers religion for the most part. Anyone who observes the laws of morality for their own sake and not for any selfish end can be regarded as religious. There are men in Russia who dedicate their lives to the good of their country. Such men are truly moral. A man like Jeremy Bentham, who discovered many good principles for English legislation, tried very hard to spread education among the English and took a prominent part in improving the condition of prisoners, may be regarded as truly moral.

Besides, it is a rule of ideal morality that it is not enough to follow the trodden path. We ought to follow the path which we know to be true, whether it is familiar or unfamiliar to us. In other words, when we know a particular path to be the right one, we should set out on it without fear. We can progress only if we observe the laws of morality in this way. That is why true morality, true civilization and true progress are always to be found together.

If we examine our desires, we shall see that we do not wish for what we have already. We always value more that which we do not have. But desires are of two kinds: one is the pursuit of mere self-interest. To attempt to fulfil this kind of desire is immoral. The other impels us constantly to improve ourselves and to do good to others. We should never become overweening with any amount of good that we may do. It is not for us to evaluate it, but rather should we have perpetual longing to become better and do more good. True morality consists in our effort to realize such longing.

If we have no home or family of our own, that is nothing to be ashamed of. But if we have a home and abuse it, or own a business and practise fraud, we stray from the path of morality. Morality consists in doing what we ought to do. We can prove the need of morality through a few illustrations. Destruction has been the lot of peoples or families in which the seeds of immorality, such as disunity and untruth, were found. To take an example from trade and business, we do not come across a single person who will say that truth should not be followed. The effect of justice and goodness is not felt from outside; these qualities in here in us. Four hundred years ago, much injustice and untruth prevailed in Europe, so that people could not rest in peace even for a moment. The cause of this state of affairs was that people had no morality. If we take out the essence of all moral laws, we shall find that the attempt to do good to mankind is the highest morality. If we open the treasure-house of morality with this key, we shall find in it all the other principles.

At the end of each of these articles, we print select poems bearing on morality from Gujarati or Urdu poets in the hope that all our readers will benefit from them and will also commit them to memory. We begin with an extract from Mr. Malbari’s book, Adami Ane Teni Duniya.

217. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[Before January 14, 1907]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I don’t get The Mercury at all these days. Send me the back numbers, or cuttings.

As for the matter, I am sending five items today. More tomorrow.

I have sent an article entitled “White Races!” Give a Gujarati translation of it, and also of Sir Charles Dilke’s² speech. You will find it in India.

I have written to Mr. West today asking him to give a photograph of the Amir³ as supplement in the English section. Please attend to that. The thing must be done very soon. The feature⁴ I will write and send.

You have not sent the customs form along with the parcels. Why?

218. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

January 14, 1907

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I sent some matter yesterday. Today, I send something about the Hejaz Railway and an incomplete feature about the Amir. The rest I shall write out tonight. All this must appear this week. I wrote to you earlier about the Amir’s photograph. Let me know how many extra copies sell. What I write tonight will be in your hands on Thursday. That will be in time.

The list of persons in Johannesburg from whom subscriptions have been collected has been misplaced. Ask Kalyandas about it.

About publishing names, please speak to Mr. West yourself and be emphatic about it. He may entrust the work to Mania¹, if he chooses. I will also write. One should sometimes use one’s discretion in matters like these.

Your devoting an hour between 8 and 9 to Manilal will naturally provoke resentment. It looks improper that you should do private work for me during Press hours. It should be enough, therefore, if you can give him any time before 8 in the morning or some time in the evening. It should be left to his luck what he can learn in that time.

I have promised a piano to Mania and that is what stands in the way. If he is agreeable, by all means save the expense for the present.

It was good that an appeal for a band was made. I feel this begging is selfless. If a band is secured, everyone will share in the benefit. I see its need for [every] one of us. I don’t think Mr. West has made any mistake in this matter. It is not necessary to spend much effort on the thing. The loss of one day doesn’t matter. We want ultimately to save time. The men we have are not yet well trained; when they are, all work will proceed apace.

I will give my views about the Hindi [section] after I hear from you again. It is certain, however, that the venture will be possible only if we are assured of subscribers in advance.

There is no objection to giving the market rates in the English section. They would go better, however, in the Gujarati section or in the advertisement columns. The English section is purely political at present; therefore, market rates will appear out of place in it.

I will write about the bill for the Anti-Indian Law Fund after giving some thought to it.

Ismail Mia has agreed to have the advertisement without a block. You may therefore have it so. Perhaps he will pay only for the reduced space.

Give me full particulars about the cuttings that have been left over.

I have written to Beck to say hat I cannot recommend patent medicines to anyone, since most of them seem to have no stuff in them.

Give me more news about Ritch². The poster should be in English too. I will write to Mr. West.

219. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[Before January 16, 1907]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have gone through the latest issue of India. Apart from giving any abstracts from it, if there is anything special worth translating, a translation should be given as a separate article.

There is no letter from you today. I received the telegram. The Shah [of Iran] is not much thought of here. However, there is no harm in giving a photograph, if a good one is available. The Amir is a Sunni and the Muslim community here is also of the same sect, and so they are interested in reading more about him. The Shah is a Shia. I write all this for your information in case you don’t know.

220. AMIR’S NOBILITY

His Majesty the Amir of Afghanistan has shown his nobility within a few days of his arrival in India. This is shown by two Reuter messages received here. When he was inspecting a guard of honour in Delhi, he was offered an umbrella because it was raining. The Amir too preferred to get drenched and refused the umbrella because the soldiers were all exposed to the rain. The second cable says that the Muslims who wished to give a party in the Amir’s honour had arranged for a hundred cows to be slaughtered on the occasion. The Amir suggested that this would probably offend the Hindu sentiment and advised the gentlemen that they might slaughter goats instead. They accepted his advice. It is said that the whole of India was agreeably surprised by the Amir’s gesture. All the more so, as they did not expect His Majesty to show concern for others to the extent that he did. These two incidents show that His Majesty the Amir has a considerate and sincere mind. On both the occasions he thought of the people[’s wishes], thus setting an example for monarchs of the West to learn from. Though the news agencies cannot tell us of more instances of such thoughtful actions of his, one can easily imagine that Amir Habibullah has all the virtues that his name1 connotes.

221. DIFFICULTIES ABOUT LICENCES

In Ladysmith, Tongaat and other places, applications by [Indian] traders for licences have been rejected by the licensing officers and licences refused. At some places they have pointed to lack of cleanliness, or to the account books not being in order, while at others no reasons whatever have been given. Hence the traders have become anxious and wonder what will happen if they do not get their licences. When more precise information is available, next week [perhaps], we shall consider what is to be done.2

222. WOMEN’S EDUCATION

That India is very backward in the education of women is a fact that cannot be denied. But by admitting this, we do not mean to suggest that Indian women fail in their duty. We believe that, as there are in the world few men of any class who can compete with the 1 Habibullah means “beloved of God”.

Indians considered from all points of view, so are there few women anywhere in the world who can compare with Indian women. But this position can no longer be kept up in the present squalid, low and helpless state of India. The modern age is such that it does not allow anyone to remain in the same position. Those who do not want to go forward, or do not do so, must fall behind. In so far as this is true, we can see that Indian men have deliberately kept their women backward. Those who pose as reformers as also other well-to-do Indians, whether Hindu or Muslim, Parsi or Christian, either treat their women as if they were playthings or use them as they fancy for self-indulgence, with the result that they themselves become weak and help only to produce weaklings. And in this way they lead irreligious lives and still say, ‘It is God’s will that prevails.’ If this state of affairs continues, India will remain in its present abominable condition even if she were to secure all her rights from the British Government. In all countries where the people live a decent life, there is no disparity in the condition of men and women. It is easy to see how much the real wealth of India would be attenuated, if one half of her human beings remained ignorant and existed only as playthings of the others.

These thoughts occurred to us while reading an address delivered to French girls by M. Lavis, a great servant of France. Only a few years ago French women were in the same plight in which Indian women are today. French society has now awakened and does not wish to let a half of its body remain inactive. We give below a short summary of M. Lavis’s speech:

Girls, there is much for you to learn. It is your function to use the needle and the scissors. You have to learn how to keep your home tidy. If there is order in the home, its influence will be felt without, and the village or town will reflect the state of the home. You will also have to learn to use money. You will be mothers one day, and your children’s future will depend on you. It is not enough that you learn to read and write. You have to cultivate your minds too. For it is the mother who provides the real training for her child. Just as you ought to develop your minds, so do, whether they are better or worse off than you. That is why must you inform yourself of what is happening around you, what countries there are in the world besides your own, what people there you are taught history and geography.

1 The original has number instead of condition.
Just as there are schools for boys, there ought to be schools for girls also.

It is while thus addressing schoolgirls genially at a large Paris school that M. Lavis indicated in passing the duty of parents. We have a large number of girls and women among Indians in South Africa. It is our definite opinion that they should both have good education. Such education can be easily imparted; but only if we stop dallying with our womenfolk and realize our duty. While imparting education, we have to bear in mind its aims. We would gain nothing if such education were designed for selfish ends. That would be only like changing one’s dress.

223. JAPAN’S GAME

Every one—Indians in particular—has much to learn from Japan. There has been trouble in certain parts of America where Japanese boys are refused admission to schools. Reports in the English Press show that the dispute has not yet ended. The Americans do not wish to give up their stand. Japan, it appears, will not brook dishonour. Some persons believe that America and Japan will soon go to war over this. In that case, some believe that Japan will prove the stronger of the two. Much will depend on the British. At present there subsists amity between Japan and Britain. If the British intervene and help in maintaining peace, then alone, it seems, can bloodshed be averted.

224. ETHICAL RELIGION-III

CHAPTER III: WHAT IS MORAL ACTION?

When can it be said that a particular action is moral? In asking this question, the intention is not to contrast moral with immoral actions, but to consider many of our everyday actions against which nothing can be said from the conventional standpoint and which some regard as moral. Most of our actions are probably non-moral; they do not necessarily involve morality. For the most part we act according to the prevailing conventions. Such conventional behaviour is often necessary. If no such rules are observed, anarchy would be the result, and society—social intercourse—would come to an end. Still the mere observance of custom and usage cannot properly be called morality.

A moral act must be our own act: it must spring from our own will. If we act mechanically, there is no moral content in our act. Such action would be moral, if we think it proper to act like a machine and do so. For in doing so, we use our discrimination. We should bear in mind the distinction between acting mechanically and acting intentionally. It may be moral of a king to pardon a culprit. But the messenger bearing the order of pardon plays only a mechanical part in the king’s moral act. But if the messenger were to bear the king’s order, considering it to be his duty, his action would be a moral one. How can a man understand morality who does not use his own intelligence and power of thought, but lets himself be swept along like a log of wood by a current? Sometimes a man defies convention and acts on his own with a view to [doing] absolute good. Such a great hero was Wendell Phillips. Addressing an assembly of people, he once said, “Till you learn to form your own opinions and express them, I do not care much what you think of me.” Thus when we all care only for what our conscience says, then alone can we be regarded to have stepped on to the moral road. We shall not reach this stage, as long as we do not believe—and experience the belief—that God within us, the God of all, is the ever present witness to all our acts.

It is not enough that an act done by us is in itself good; it should have been done with the intention to do good. That is to say, whether an act is moral or otherwise depends upon the intention of the doer. Two men may have done exactly the same thing; but the act of one may be moral, and that of the other the contrary. Take, for instance, a man who out of great pity feeds the poor and another who does the same, but with the motive of winning prestige or with some such selfish end. Though the action is the same, the act of the one is moral and that of the other non-moral. The reader here ought to remember the distinction between the two words, non-moral and immoral. It may be that we do not always see good results flowing from a moral act. While thinking of morality, all that we need to see is that the act is good and is done with a good intention. The result of an action is not within our control. God alone is the giver of fruit. Historians have called Emperor Alexander “great”. Wherever he went [in the course of his conquests,] he took the Greek language and Greek culture, arts and manners, and today we enjoy the benefits of Greek civilization. But the intention of Alexander behind all this was only conquest and renown. Who can therefore say that his actions were moral? It was all right that he was termed “great”, but moral he cannot be called.

1 (1811-84); American orator, social reformer and abolitionist

These reflections prove that it is not enough for a moral act to have been done with a good intention, but it should have been done without compulsion. There is no morality whatever in my act, if I rise early out of the fear that, if I am late for my office, I may lose my situation. Similarly there is no morality in my living a simple and unpretentious life if I have not the means to live otherwise. But plain, simple living would be moral if, though wealthy, I think of all the want and misery in the world about me—and feel that I ought to live a plain, simple life and not one of ease and luxury. Like wise it is only selfish, and not moral, of an employer to sympathize with his employees or to pay them higher wages lest they leave him. It would be moral if the employer wished well of them and treated them kindly realizing how he owed his prosperity to them. This means that for an act to be moral it has to be free from fear and compulsion. When the peasants rose in revolt and with bloodshot eyes went to King Richard II of England demanding their rights, he granted them the rights under his own seal and signature. But when the danger was over, he forced them to surrender the letters. It would be a mistake for anyone to say that King Richard’s first act was moral and the second immoral. For his first act was done only out of fear and had not an iota of morality about it.

Just as a moral action should be free from fear or compulsion so should there be no self-interest behind it. This is not to say that actions prompted by self-interest are all worthless, but only that to call them moral would detract from the [dignity of the] moral idea. That honesty cannot long endure which is practised in the belief that it is the best policy. As Shakespeare says, love born out of the profit motive is no love.\(^1\)

\(^1\) “Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects that stand
Aloof from the entire point.”

230 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Just as an action prompted by the motive of material gain here on earth is non-moral, so also another done for considerations of comfort and personal happiness in another world is non-moral. That action is moral which is done only for the sake of doing good. A great Christian, St. Francis Xavier, passionately prayed that his mind might always remain pure. For him devotion to God was not for enjoying a higher seat after death. He prayed because it was man’s duty to pray. The great Saint Theresa wished to have a torch in her right hand and a vessel of water in her left, so that with the one she might burn the glories of heaven and with the other extinguish the fires of hell, and men might learn to serve God from love alone—without fear of hell and without temptation of heavenly bliss. To preserve morality thus demands a brave man prepared to face even death. It is cowardice to be true to friends and to break faith with enemies. Those who do good out of fear and haltingly have no moral virtue. Henry Clay, known for his kindliness, sacrificed his convictions to his ambition. Daniel Webster, for all his great intellect and his sense of the heroic and the sublime, once sold his intellectual integrity for a price. By a single mean act he wiped out all his good deeds. This shows how difficult it is to judge the morality of a man’s action because we cannot penetrate the depths of his mind. We have also the answer to the question raised at the outset in this chapter: what is a moral action? Incidentally, we also saw which kind of men could live up to that morality.

225. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

CABLEGRAM TO AMIR

The Hamidia Islamic Society has sent a cable through Lord Selborne conveying greetings to His Majesty the Amir of Afghanistan on the occasion of his visit to India. Lord Selborne’s Secretary has informed Mr. Haji Ojer Ally that the cablegram has been forwarded.

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS

The local Press is busy publishing reports of the election speeches of candidates for the proposed Transvaal parliament. These candidates have been making speeches at one place after another. Declaring their views on Indians, they all state that the parliament should re-enact the Ordinance that has met with the disapproval of the Imperial Government. Some say that every Indian trader should be paid compensation and sent back. Others say that they should be deported without the payment of compensation. None of them, however, understands the exact import of the Ordinance. This is the state of affairs in the Transvaal. Defeat seems probable for the Progressive Party, many of whose members are supporters of the mine-owners or big shareholders. The indications are that the Boers will defeat the others.

SIR RICHARD SOLOMON

Sir Richard Solomon has returned from England. After a brief stay with Lord Selborne, he has gone to Pretoria. When the Press representatives met him at Cape Town, he declined to express any opinion or to give any information. He intends to resign and enter parliament. People are eager to know which party he will join. Some persons are displeased because he has not expressed his opinion, and they accuse him of playing a double game.

PERMITS FOR BOYS

Indian children under sixteen whose parents are in the Transvaal can enter without a permit. But two questions have now been raised in the matter. First, how can these boys, on attaining majority, continue to remain without a permit? Secondly, how can they re-enter on return from a visit to their native country? The Registrar refuses to help and demands to know why a permit should be sought after the Supreme Court has ruled that no permit is necessary for children. It appears the Registrar is only venting his anger. It is true that minor children need no permit. But that does not mean that a permit should not be issued to them as a safeguard when they become majors or go out of the Transvaal. Now there seems to be no remedy other than a petition. For the law does not oblige the Permit Office to issue such permits. The law only says that children need no permits and that they will be protected against harassment from any quarter.

226. _DUTY OF EDUCATED INDIANS_

While commenting on the report of the Superintendent of Education in Natal,¹ we said that we would consider later how educated Indians could help without much trouble to themselves. We do so now.

Among Indians, grown-ups as well as children have much to learn. During the day, most of them are too busy to learn anything. Similarly, educated Indians also are busy at that time. In all big cities of the world, there are large numbers of night schools. We take it that there are some truly educated young Indians who are patriotic and anxious to pass on to others the education that they have themselves had. Such persons can persuade all grown-ups and boys, with whom they come in contact, to learn; and if three or four persons agree to do so, they can decide to gather at one place. Even if only one person is willing, it should still be possible for them to go to his place to teach him.

As things stand, those who wish to learn are as few as those prepared to teach. For anyone who is eager to teach, it is not therefore enough just to be ready to do so. It is also necessary to inspire others with the urge to learn. Some may, we are well aware, think that all this sounds nice on paper, but that it is not so easy to work out. We only wish to say in reply that what we write here is addressed to courageous patriots and that it is moreover based on experience and so ought not to be dismissed as impracticable.

227. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Wednesday, [On or before January 23, 1907]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have not yet answered the points you raised in your letter of the 9th.

I did not follow what Mr. Anglia\(^2\) and Mr. Osman said about advertisements.

I want a list in English, with prices, of Hindi and Tamil books available with Mr. Abdool Haq or Doraisamy. A White wants such books for Indians who work with him, that is, he wants books which Indians of average ability and knowing some Hindi or Tamil can understand. I have promised him a list.

Let me know what happened about the demand for a Hindi section.

I have not yet selected a photograph for the block.

I have great faith in you. I am in no position to give thought to myself. There is much work to be done. We are only a few, and not all of us well up in general knowledge. As I think of all this, I feel inclined to send you immediately to England. I want to know, however, if you have fully grasped the Indian problem here. What do you feel yourself? What encouragement is Maganlal likely to give? What does Anandlal think? All the same I want your opinion immediately whether Thakkar can assume the responsibility for the Gujarati section. I should like you to sail off, —no harm even if it takes four months—provided of course Maganlal agrees to share the financial burden and Miss West picks up the accounts. I leave it to you whether or not to talk to others. You may talk about it only if you think fit. If you yourself feel that you should not go yet, there is no need to pursue the matter further.

In any case from next week pass on the responsibility for translations, etc., in the Gujarati section to Thakkar, so that you may be free for other work. It will suffice if you supervise the general policy of Indian Opinion. I don’t think the last issue was bad. I will let you know after I hear from you as to what was held over. Entrust feature-writing to him, so that you may be free. Of course, if anything improper appears, such as should not have been published, the blame will be yours.

1 From the contents the letter appears to have been written before the one to the addressee, dated January 29, 1907, “Letter to Chhaganlal Gandhi”, 29-1-1907, Wednesday prior to January 29 fell on January 23.

Mr. Medh wants to leave. He has a chance of getting a job in Durban. Relieve him, therefore, on Monday, and pay him the arrears of his salary. Write to me if you think that a substitute will be necessary.

I shall wait for more information about Tongaat. There was a telegram here also.

You will be surprised to know that Mr. Isaac had been to Pretoria. I will take him round here too, and send him to Pretoria once again. Kalyandas told me that he had not received the complete list relating to Pretoria. Send me one again. I sent you the figures yesterday, from which you may understand which amounts to credit and which to debit. I have not looked into them. If there is anything in these figures to which it is worth drawing my attention, please let me know.

What you say about advertisements concerning fish is right. We will not refuse such advertisements if we receive any, but we will not solicit them.

So long as the name has not been changed in the Colonial Office, we must take out the licence in the name of Madanjit. Please do so.

I had received the cutting concerning Jivanji. But what was to be done about it? You gave a summary of it in Gujarati. Have you received Jivanji’s money from Mombasa? If not collect it from Adamji. It will be well to go to the Cape during Easter. I will write to Abdool Gani.

It is impossible for us to bring out the Tamil section just now. Its time will come by and by.

I see no need to write to Mr. Aiyar. Your replying in the negative is sufficient.

Anandlal has sent the list of Gujarati types. I will order them. Haria must have sent the receipt for Kalyandas’s luggage. Stake delivery of it. You should not omit the advertisements from here

228. A MARE’S NEST

   The Natal Advertiser has published what purports to be a report of an Indian meeting held in order to consider certain complaints against the Natal Indian Congress and to form a new body. We notice, from our Johannesburg correspondence, that the contents of the precious report were telegraphed to the Johannesburg Star, in extenso.
It evidently appears as if the wish was father to the thought, and that some “good-natured” people would rather see a quarrel between different sections of the Indian community. We may, therefore, assure these friends that such a quarrel is not possible, because there can be no backbone to it. It is worthy of note that it is not stated in the inspired report where the meeting took place, who convened it, who attended it, and when it was held.

   We have, however, taken the trouble to inquire about it, and we find that some such meeting did take place at a private house. But the whole aspect is changed when the facts are known. The meeting discussed the question of founding a political institution apart from the Congress, but little encouragement was given by the speakers to this proposal, and the weight of opinion did not favour it. We think the following letter, addressed to The Advertiser by Mr. V. Lawrence, Chairman of the meeting, places the matter in its true light:

   Sir, In your second edition of the 17th instant, there appears on page 5 what purports to be the report of a meeting of the Colonial Hindus and Christianized Indians that took place on Tuesday night last, headed “Natal
Hindus, Dissatisfaction with the Natal Indian Congress, Representation Desired”. As chairman of that meeting, I must most emphatically refute many of the statements therein. The object of that meeting was to form a very influential and representative committee to approach the Natal Indian Congress, which is recognized by the Imperial and Colonial Governments as the representative institution of the Indian community in Natal, to make it a more representative body than it is at present. It is not true that it was pointed out during the discussion that the association of the Colonial Indian and Hindu community with the Mohammadan merchants was derogatory to the good opinion of the European section of the country in regard to the former. It was not only the idea, but the first and foremost object of the meeting was, and all the discussion that night was directed to achieve that object, to unite with, and not to dissociate from, the Natal Indian Congress, to obtain redress for the disabilities that are and may be heaped upon the Indian community.

It is not correct that minor matters were then discussed and the meeting broke up without any definite decision being come to. The meeting dispersed after the election of a thoroughly representative committee of all classes of the Indian community to approach the Natal Indian Congress, and I was deputed to interview the President and the Secretaries of the Congress, and ascertain from them what day, time and place will suit the Congress to hear the views of the committee. We have neither desire nor intention to work against either the Congress or the Europeans, but to unite with the Congress in creating a better understanding between the European and Indian communities.

We are glad to notice that the prominent Hindus of Durban met together on Sunday for the purpose of repudiating the statements made in the newspaper report. Mr. Sanghavi, the Chairman of this meeting, said that perfect amity and concord existed between the different sections of the Indian community, irrespective of caste, creed or religion.

If, however, there are any young Indians, besides the person that concocted The Advertiser report, who feel aggrieved at not being able to figure prominently in the work of the Congress, we strongly advise them to steer clear of any movement that would bring about discord between the different sections of the community.

It may be well to examine the origin of the Natal Indian Congress. It was established when a general attack on the Indian community on the part of some European colonists was commenced. The trustees of the Congress include two Hindus, one of them a Tamil gentleman, and on the Congress membership are scores of Hindus and Christians belonging to different presidencies of India. Its objects are all-embracing, and if the attention paid to the Tamil community is to count for anything, it is but simple truth to state that, during the first few years of the Congress existence, it was largely occupied with matters more especially concerning that community. It may also be not amiss to say, in passing, that it was under the aegis of the Congress that the Natal Indian Educational Association was able to thrive and flourish. The Congress Hall was placed free of charge at its disposal. The Congress funds, again, enabled the Diamond Jubilee Library\(^1\), opened chiefly in the interests of Colonial Indians, to be established. If the Indian traders today loom large at the Congress meetings, it is because they are the most in danger; and if they were neglected or allowed themselves to be neglected, who will suffer? Certainly the whole Indian community; for throughout the world it is the commercial class that supplies the sinews of war and even common sense to the community or nation to which it belongs.

229. WILL THERE BE DISSENSION AMONG INDIANS?

The Advertiser has published a report under the heading “The Hindus of Natal” which will perhaps cause concern among some Indians. However, we do not think, there is any need to be agitated. We print a summary of that report elsewhere. The report does not say who attended the meeting or where it was held. Also, we do not find what resolution was passed at the meeting. There is no doubt that this is the work of some disgruntled Indians. It is obvious enough that they will receive help from the Europeans. We have with us a circular notice of that meeting, signed by Messrs Bryan Gabriel, V. Lawrence and A. D. Pillay; and the meeting was held at Mr. A. D. Pillay’s house on the 15th at eight o’clock. No action by us is called for, since there is no reason why any changes should be made in the constitution of the Congress. Moreover, this meeting was merely meant to be a threat, and there can be no question of yielding to such threats and making changes. However, it is the duty of the Congress leaders to adhere to the Congress constitution and to all its rules. Congress members who have not paid their subscription should be made to do so, and annual reports published as before. As for the meeting, it is not necessary to blame either those who convened or those who attended it. It can be seen from [the report of] the meeting of the Hindu Reforms Council held in the Hall and from Mr. V. Lawrence’s letter that the report published in The Advertiser is quite false. The only thing for thoughtful people and the Congress to do is their duty, and then they should not entertain any fear. If this is done, there will be no dissension.

230. NATAL LICENSING ACT

At the beginning of each year Indians in Natal go through a period of acute anxiety. All traders, big and small remain in suspense for they are not sure whether they will get [renewed] licences. This time, it seems, preparations are afoot for greater harassment [of Indians].

LADYSMITH

In Ladysmith notice has been given to all traders that they will not get their licences next year. Some have been refused licences even for the current year for the alleged reason that they do not know how to keep accounts in English.

TONGAAT

In Tongaat licences have been refused to many Indians, the reasons given being lack of cleanliness and the unsatisfactory condition of accounts.

ELSEWHERE

Meetings are held all over the Colony where Europeans pass resolutions to the effect that no licences should be issued to Indian traders. There is no immediate danger, as a result of these resolutions, of licences being withheld in all places. There is no doubt, however, that, if steps are not taken from now on, it will be too late afterwards.

REMEDIAL MEASURES

Let us consider what measures can be taken. It is quite necessary that those who have been refused licences should file appeals with the Licensing Board. Such appeals cost very little. While preferring an appeal, it is necessary to produce evidence regarding account books, the condition of shops, etc. The reason for filing an appeal is that it is the only legal remedy. It must be resorted to before other steps are taken. Moreover, by filing the appeals, it will be possible to prove that the licensing officer and the Licensing Board are a single [authority], not two different ones. Along with the appeal an application should also be made to the local Government, that is, to the Colonial Secretary.

1 Vide the preceding item.

THE CONGRESS

In this matter, it is necessary to know the help that can be expected from the Congress and the expenditure that should be borne by each individual. The Congress will be able to write to the Government. But where it is necessary to file appeals, the residents of the respective towns and places will have to bear the cost.

SOUTH AFRICA BRITISH INDIAN COMMITTEE

As far as we know the Congress has sent a cable to the South Africa British Indian Committee asking it to take the necessary measures in the matter of licences. It will be the duty of the Congress to send additional information to the Committee as soon as the results of the appeals are known. The Committee will probably be able to work better if it is posted with full information. We should also add that, if most people followed the same procedure or acted through the same lawyer, the results would be better. Whether or not this is possible, it is essential that people should inform the Secretaries of the Congress immediately. But even if the people do not send the information, the Congress should not stand still. The Secretaries or other persons on behalf of the Congress should go from place to place collecting information. We should remember that the Europeans work united throughout the Colony and we should act in the same fashion.

FEAR

In this struggle we should have no fear. The Indian who concerns himself only with his own licence unmindful of what happens to others will be thought unmanly and a coward. It will be a great mistake for anyone to obtain a licence by flattery. It must be clearly understood that, if harm is caused by putting one trader against another, the jealous whites will not fail to exploit the situation. Such steps are outside the scope [of our objectives] and in the nature of underhand dealings.

MEASURES CONCERNING OURSELVES

Let us now consider measures in so far as they concern us. In this fight we must know for certain whether or not we are at fault. He who cannot see his own fault is doomed. [On the other hand,] that we may suffer even when there is nothing that can be said against us is contrary to experience. It is our duty to offer resistance by legitimate, constitutional means; it is also our duty to think of our own faults. In relation to the law, we are at fault on three points: (1) lack of cleanliness; (2) the bad state of account books; and (3) the location of residence and shop in the same premises.

LACK OF CLEANLINESS

In regard to lack of cleanliness, we must confess that, though we are not as bad as Europeans make us out to be, the charge is by and large justified. The phrase “lack of cleanliness” covers both the general appearance of the house and one’s personal appearance.

CONDITION OF SHOP

Very often the shop is found to be in a slovenly condition. The backyard is full of slush and dirt. Even the interior of the shop is sometimes dirty, and we are content that our shops should look like hovels. All this must change. It will be wise to give up all hope of carrying on trade anyhow, as we do in India, without giving much thought to the condition of the shop. If we cannot maintain our shop in as good a condition as the Europeans of better standing do, we do not deserve to be in trade. When they see our huts adjoining their well-kept shops, and see the same things being sold in our huts as in theirs, they are bound to feel a grudge against us. Let us not answer by asking if some Europeans do not also keep their shops untidy. No doubt they do, but we must never forget that, if we follow their example, we shall lose our case. We should not be surprised if they even expect more from us, for, after all? we belong to a different community.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE

We should be particular about our personal appearance also. A shopkeeper in rags cannot hold his own in Natal or South Africa. If you become a trader, you must dress according to local custom. It is not necessary to dress in the western fashion. But the dress, if in the Indian style, must be clean and decent. We would warn Indians that it is not proper to wear a dhoti in this country. In Tongaat shopkeepers and their assistants are seen cleaning their teeth and washing their faces in the street outside their shops, just as they do in our own country. It is sheer stupidity to believe that all these things will not prejudice the Europeans. When we make our appearance outside the house, we should always be fully dressed. [Among us] little attention is given to the condition of the turban or cap and the shoes. We assume that, if the head-dress is dirty, it is quite in keeping with custom. As a rule we do not polish our shoes, and some do not wear socks at all, or if at all they do, the socks are in tatters and double down over the shoes. All this must change. There is one key to all this. Personal activities, such as eating and drinking, washing and toilet, should be in private. That is, we should always be in a presentable condition while we are out. Similarly, we cannot attend a court or go out in public, chewing tobacco, betel-leaves or nuts.

ACCOUNT BOOKS

With regard to account books, complaints have appeared in newspapers that the books kept in English are unmethodical and disordered, or that they are false and are intended merely for show. We have to admit to our shame that the charge has some substance in it. Some simple-minded merchants go to the length of getting the books written up at the end of the year. How long can we go on with such patchwork? Indeed, we should wake up. It is not very difficult to keep regular books of account in English. The main reasons for not doing so would appear to be laziness and greed. We should overcome these weaknesses and start the practice of keeping regular accounts.

SHOP AND RESIDENCE IN SAME PREMISES

Many traders set up shop in residential premises. Europeans too do it. In the villages, one cannot help doing this to some extent. Wherever possible, the shop and the place of residence should be separate and at some distance from each other. Even if they have to be near each other, they must be separate. This should not be done merely by putting up a nominal curtain with the intention of deceiving. They should be really kept distinct from each other.

PROMISE

If these three things are attended to, we can promise that the condition of the Indian traders in Natal will improve in a short time, Even if they do not change the law, it will not come into effect. One might ask what should be done to prevent shops being closed and locked up before all these wise precepts could be attended to. It is a pertinent question.

FOR THE BRAVE ONLY

Natal and South Africa are for brave Indians only. It is being proved every day that the coward and the miser are doomed. The answer, then, to the question is this: those merchants whose account books are in order, whose shops are clean and decent, whose dress is becoming and whose place of residence is clean and separate from the shop, will continue to run their shops even if they do not get the licence and lose the appeal. It will be possible to have their cases fought out in England and secure a favourable decision. It is certain that men of courage will be able to do all this.

231. “THE NATAL MERCURY” AND INDIAN TRADERS

The Natal Mercury has come out in favour of Indian traders. The gist of its argument is that those who oppose Indian traders are hypocrites. This means that, though ostensibly they are opposed to Indians, they do in fact have dealings with us. The Mercury also believes that, if the Europeans are really opposed to the Indians, the latter cannot hold out for long. For, says The Mercury, it is only because Europeans sell land to Indians that the latter can buy it, and that it is because Europeans lend them money and buy goods from them that Indians can carry on trade. There is much force in this argument. It was on the basis of this that the Deputation to England argued with Lord Elgin and Mr. Morley that, if the Europeans were really opposed to the Indians, they could boycott the matter. We advise everyone to support the talk of boycott. It will probably bring about a breakdown of law. There are many things which Indians have to fight against, and if the laws made against us break down, we shall be able to cope with other problems on one condition, namely, that we overcome our drawbacks. On that point, we have written at some length already, which readers may please look up.

No one should be afraid of a boycott, for it is such that, if the Europeans start it, we cannot save ourselves in spite of any laws that may be made to protect us. The best thing for us will be to face it out. In Boksburg Europeans have no dealings with us, with the result that no Indian can go there though, under the law, every one has a right to do so. Where the Indian population is well settled, a boycott cannot be effective if we acquit ourselves well.

232. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

SELF-GOVERNMENT IN THE TRANSVAAL

Lord Selborne has been re-appointed Governor of the Transvaal under the new Constitution. The post of Lieutenant-Governor has now been abolished altogether. Those desiring to contest the election to the new parliament will file their nomination papers with the respective magistrates on February 9. People will go to the polls on the 20th.

WHAT IS RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT?

It will not be out of place here to explain the significance of the change now introduced in the Transvaal. In the British Empire, there are three types of territories outside Great Britain, viz., self-governing colonies, Crown colonies and dependencies. India is among the dependencies. Crown colonies include Mauritius, Ceylon, etc. Natal, Canada, Australia, etc., are among the self-governing colonies.

In a Crown colony there is generally a legislative body either elected by the people or nominated by the government. Officials are appointed only by the government, the legislature has no control over them and they are in no way responsible to the members. All laws are regarded as having been enacted by the government.

Self-government is said to have been conferred on a people when power is transferred to it and it acquires the authority to appoint officers, levy taxes and enact laws. The British control over self-governing colonies is very slight. Their legislation requires Royal assent, but if the Crown should refuse the assent, there is always the probability that these countries may declare their independence. Many experienced politicians believe that self-governing colonies will become independent in a few years. Till recently the Transvaal was a Crown Colony, but it has now become self-governing. Under it the members elected by the people can question the doings of the officials; it is therefore also called responsible government.

Election Campaign

The election campaign has gone on for some weeks now. At the meetings sometimes they almost come to blows. Voters at times ask such absurd questions that one wonders whether such an election should be considered a sign of civilization or barbarism. Mr. Hosken is a rich, noble and well-known gentleman of this place. His opponent can in no way be considered his equal. The electors do not seem to have considered whether Mr. Hosken is a man likely to do good or harm to the public. They asked him the question where he obtained his provisions from. One need not be surprised if the fate of Hosken’s election should hang on the answer to this question. The electors are in such a benighted condition. This is only an example of the questions asked. One can cite many more instances.

Law Relating to Non-Whites in Orange River Colony

A Bill, intended to protect the rights of the Coloured people through a white, appointed to represent them, has been published in the Orange River Colony Government Gazette. Many municipalities have, according to Press telegrams received here, opposed the measure. The right which the Government proposed to grant was without any substance. But the white members of the brave municipalities of the Orange River Colony have opposed it as they were afraid that the Coloured people were being accorded a respectable status by the grant of this right, such as it was. It is very disturbing to think what the plight of the Coloured people would be under such men.

Dr. Pereira’s Son

Dr. Pereira, who is working here as a private interpreter, has a son studying in England. He has passed his school examination and got a certificate for being the best behaved among the students. He will shortly proceed to Scotland to study medicine.

Sir Richard Solomon

On Monday Sir Richard Solomon made a speech at a crowded meeting in the Pretoria Town Hall. I cannot give a full account of that speech this time, but intend doing so next week.¹ He has now spoken out his mind. Regarding the Asiatic Ordinance, he gave out that the Imperial Government would give its assent to the Ordinance if it was passed by the new parliament. The only inference to be drawn from this is that the Ordinance will certainly be passed in six or seven months. In that case it is probable that Indians will have yet to go and “enjoy life in the prison-palace”. However, I shall discuss this point further next week.

INTERNAL FEUD

A long telegram from the Durban correspondent of The Star states that a split has occurred in the local Indian community. It adds that the Congress is regarded as belonging to the Muslims, and that the Colonial-born or civilized Indians, being displeased, are thinking of founding a separate body. It is suspected that there must be some white person behind all this. From the wording of the telegram it appears that the writer is anxious to create dissensions among Indians. People in Durban may know more about this.

ASIATIC ORDINANCE

It is clear from the local newspapers that the Asiatic Ordinance of the Transvaal is not dead, but is only in a state of coma. At a meeting in Krugersdorp it was suggested that the matter should be taken up again in the Municipal Association; and as soon as the new government is formed, the Municipal Association should pass and forward a resolution [to demand] that the selfsame Ordinance be passed by the new legislature, and that Lord Elgin should give his assent to it. Such discussions have been going on not only at Krugersdorp, but throughout the Transvaal. The Indian community therefore needs to remain alert. People seem to have gone to sleep, elated by the rejection of the Ordinance; we should be wide awake.

CHAPTER IV: IS THERE A HIGHER LAW?

We constantly pronounce judgements upon the value of actions. Some actions satisfy us and others do not. Whether a certain act is good or bad does not depend upon whether it is beneficial or harmful to us. In judging it, we adopt quite a different standard. We have in our minds certain ideas and on the basis of those we judge the acts of others. Whether any wrong done by one to another affects us or not, we do feel it to be wrong. Sometimes we have a trace of sympathy for the wrongdoer; but despite that sympathy, we feel no hesitation at all in pronouncing his act to be wrong. It may be that at times our judgement is found to be mistaken. We cannot always fathom a man’s motives, and may thus judge him wrongly. Nevertheless, we find no difficulty in judging an act in so far as the intention is known. Even if our personal interests are sometimes served by wrong actions, we do feel inwardly that they are wrong.

Thus it is established that the rightness or wrongness of an act does not depend upon a man’s self-interest. Nor does it depend upon his wishes. There is a difference between morality and sympathy. Out of sympathy for the child we wish to give it a certain thing, but if the thing is harmful to the child, we hold it immoral to give it. It is doubtless good to show sympathy but, unrestricted by moral considerations, it turns into poison.

We see also that moral laws are immutable. Opinions change, but not morality. When our eyes are open, we see the sun; when they are closed, it is not seen. The change here has been in our sense of sight, not in the fact of the sun’s existence. The same holds true of moral laws. It is probable that in a state of ignorance we do not know what is moral; but once the eye of knowledge is opened, there is no difficulty in knowing it. Men rarely care to see single-mindedly the right or wrong of things; often prompted by personal considerations, they mistakenly describe the immoral as moral. The time is yet to come when men, freeing themselves from self-regarding considerations, will concentrate their attention on the ideas of morality alone. Moral culture is still in its mere infancy; it is as science was before the birth of a Bacon or a Darwin. Men were eager to know what the truth was. Instead of inquiring into morality, they have been hitherto engaged in discovering laws of nature—the laws of the earth’s motion, etc. Where do we find the disinterested student of morality, patient and painstaking, who, setting aside his earlier superstitious notions, devotes his life to seeking only the ideal good? When men become as eager to explore the world of moral ideas as they are now to explore the realms of nature, we shall be able to bring together the various conceptions of morality. It is unlikely that, on ideas of morality, there will be the same divergence of opinion as exists among men on matters of science. However, we may not for a time arrive at unanimity of opinion regarding moral laws. This does not, however, mean that it is impossible to distinguish between right and wrong.

We thus see that, independent of and apart from men’s wishes and opinions, there is something like a moral standard which we may call moral law. If there are laws of the state, why may not there be a moral law too? It does not matter if that law is not committed to writing by man, and indeed it need not be. If we grant or hold that the moral law exists, it is incumbent on us to obey it, just as we ought to obey the law of the state. A moral law is distinct from and better than the laws of the state or those of business. One may ask, “How does it matter if I do not obey the laws of business and remain poor? Or if I disobey the laws of the state and incur the ruler’s displeasure?” But it will never do—either for me or anyone else—to say, “What does it matter whether I tell a lie or tell the truth?”

There is thus a great difference between moral laws and temporal laws. For morality dwells in our hearts. Even a man practising immorality would admit that he has been immoral. A wrong can never become right. Even where a people is vile, though men may not observe the moral law, they would make a pretence of doing so; they thus are obliged to admit that moral laws ought to be observed. Such is the greatness of morality. It cares not for custom nor for public opinion. To a moral man, public opinion or custom is binding only so long as it is in harmony with the moral law.

Where does this moral law come from? This law is not laid down by the state, for different laws are found in different states. Many men were opposed to the morality which Socrates observed in his day. Even so the world admits that the morality he observed has remained, and shall remain, morality for ever. Robert Browning says, ‘If ever Satan proclaimed the law of hatred and untruth in the world, even then...
justice, goodness and truth will continue to be divine.”¹ One may conclude from this that the moral law is supreme and divine.

Such a law no people or individual can violate to the end of time. As has been said, even as the dangerous storm ultimately passes, immoral men must meet their destruction.²

No sooner did the cup of sin in Assyria and Babylon become full than it broke. When Rome trod the path of immorality, none of her great men could save her. The ancient Greeks were an accomplished people, still all their art and philosophy could not continue in their immorality for long. The French Revolution was but an insurrection against immorality. The same was the case with America. The good Wendell Phillips used to say that immorality even if enthroned will not endure. This mysterious moral law brings prosperity to the man who observes it: it sustains the family that obeys it, and the community which lives by it ever flourishes. Freedom, peace and happiness are the lot of the nation that lets itself be ruled by this highest law.³

234. HOW TO BUILD A NATION

[Before January 28, 1907]

Mrs. Besant has written an article for the December issue of Indian Review on “Nation—or as we have put it, “How to Build a Nation”—which deserves to be read carefully by all the communities in India are now bent on making India a single nation and improving in the country have put forward their urge well-known people in the country have put forward their ideas on the subject. Mrs. Besant is President of the Theosophical Society and spends six months in India each year and the other six in England. She enjoys the reputation of being one of the world’s great orators and most of her writings, too, are very instructive. As this article by her is serious and thought provoking, we here publish a translation of it.¹

235. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[JOHANNESBURG,]

January 28, 1907

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Your letter to hand.

As a lot of material has been held over, Mrs. Besant’s article² may well be postponed to next week. Whenever you print it, see that all of it appears in one issue. It may conveniently be held over for two weeks. It would be better if the article on the Amir³ were concluded in this issue.

The suggestion about decreasing your burden is quite justified. Do keep Mothoo. You would be quite right if you had already decided to keep him before this reached you.

This is the time for you to give your fullest attention to realizing the dues and to the account books. We must on any account satisfy

² Vide the preceding item.
our customers. If they do not get satisfaction just when they have begun to be interested in what we write, we shan’t be able to keep them on the register. It is [however] as necessary to collect the dues as it is to satisfy our customers. You must therefore give full attention to the books. I realize this quite well.

You will be justified therefore if you have decided to keep Thakkar by offering him an increment. He can be cured of his bad habit if you keep an eye on him.

When will the balance-sheet be ready?

I am returning Sheth Haji Habib’s advertisement about the mosque. I have written to him. I hope you remember that £6.10.0 have already been collected from him. A credit note for the amount has been sent to him.

I am sending you some more material today. Do not hold over anything that is topical.

Even though the expenditure on your visit to England is ultimately to be borne by the Press, I know that the money will have to be found by me now, and this is how I look at the matter.

The Press is growing day by day. Its work will increase as the purity of our objectives is progressively recognized and increases. If this purity is accompanied by skill and ability, we shall be able to do a great deal, provided of course that we do not succumb to greed and self-interest. For this we should lay down that no one among us could draw a monthly allowance of more than £10 or up to any other limit we decide upon. Whatever is left over after these charges have been met, we should use to promote education, health, etc. In order to do this we should ourselves be better educated. I have therefore decided to send a person to England, whom I consider the most steadfast of all. He should go there with the firm resolve that he would not make a single pie for himself from the education he receives, but would pass on all the benefit [of that education] to the Press and would accept and live on what the Press gave him. You appear to me to be the only Indian who has attained to this degree of fitness. I believe you understand the significance of the whole thing and you seem to be the only person who can be depended upon to carry forward the heritage of my thoughts and words. Messrs Polak and West know and understand a lot. There are things which they understand and you don’t. However, it seems on the whole that you understand more than they do. Our ultimate capital is not the money we have, but our courage, our faith, our truthfulness and our ability. If therefore you go to England, your intellect remains unspoiled and you return with your physical and mental powers strengthened, our capital will have appreciated to that extent. I cannot write more as people have again begun to drop in.

236. MADANJIT’S ENTHUSIASM

[Before January 29 1907]

Mr. Madanjit has started, in Rangoon, an English journal entitled United Burma of which we have received the first few issues. His aim in starting the paper is to bring together the Burmese people and seek the redress of their grievances from the Government. Through the paper he also hopes to persuade the Burmese people to take part in the activities of the [Indian National] Congress. This is no doubt a great venture by Mr. Madanjit, to which every one will wish godspeed. From the large number of advertisements which it has been able to secure from Englishmen as well as Indians, it would seem that the paper enjoys a wide patronage. The address of the paper is No. 29, 27th Street, Rangoon; the annual subscription is Rs. 6; the price of a copy is three annas. Mr. Madanjit himself is Editor.

237. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[JOHANNESBURG,]
January 29, 1907

CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. Please read what I have written to West about Hindi and Tamil [columns].

I note what you say about Miss West. Do what you think right. It is not an example to be copied.

I find that the office here has run into a great loss. I do not therefore get a moment’s respite.

Chi. Kalyandas¹ must be at Newcastle today. He has suddenly developed some pain in his hand. However he intends to complete his work. I have wired to him to put off his visit to the other places. I have not yet had any reply. Please take good care of his hand.

I have already written to you about dispensing with Medh’s services.

I am sending today the rest of the article on the Amir (pages 44-73). It is in continuation of the previous instalment. Give it a suitable heading.

238. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[JOHANNESBURG,]

January 29, 1907

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Yours to hand.

I enclose herewith Desai’s letter. If Mothoo has not yet come and if you know Nathalal and consider him suitable for our work, write to Desai. I have written to him asking him to write to you. We must have one person well trained before you leave. It would be nice if this could be Maganlal.²

I have thought of the Bar for you. If you have to say anything about it or suggest something else, do write to me. There is likely to be one difficulty in your going [to study] for the Bar, namely, it will entail an additional expenditure of £150. If we decide that you should study law, you can take the LL.B. degree of London University. Please let me know what you think about all these things.

I received the Pretoria list yesterday and have sent it to Gaurishankar.

I have already written to you to postpone printing Mrs. Besant’s

² Addressee’s brother article. It would not matter if it appeared next week.

I have written earlier about Madanjit too.²

I send herewith the letter about drinking after making corrections; you may print it.³

I am trying to find Urdu poems bearing on Ethical Religion. I have not yet come across any. I hope to send one next week. The first poem you have sent to me does not strike me as appropriate. We want to give poems which do not start a controversy.

I shall be able to send a reply if the letter, about the Colonial Secretary is sent to me. Please send the Act along with the letter.

I am sending a demand draft for £35 in favour of you and West.

It is good that Anandlal⁴ has got started.

I have already written all I had to say about Thakkar. If he goes away, I believe we shall be losing a very good hand. On the whole, I think he is all right; and we shall not be able to get another man as well informed in the near future. However, you may let him go if he does not stay even on £5.

Please let me know where Maganlal bought the type in Bombay, and in what condition it was received here. Also let me know if there would be any objection to our getting the type this time from the Gujarati Foundry.

I came to know from Harilal yesterday that the money had not been paid for the tea we bought from Sanghavi nor was the bill credited to him in our books. Please tell me what you know about this, and pay up the bill for the tea if it has not been already paid.

I have sent Manilal the Sanskrit book he wanted. What does he propose to do with it? Please let me know how he is getting on with his studies, how he is working in the Press, etc.

⁴ A nephew of Gandhiji
MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL.

I have your-letter and the list. We have to publish, on Mr. Adamji Miankhan’s departure, his photograph as a supplement, and we have also to give a brief account of his life. The account I shall send from here. I have asked Mr. Adamji to let us have his photograph. He will send one on to you there. As soon as it arrives, you should have the block made, so that we can make use of it when necessary and may not be rushed.

I should like you to let me have the total of complimentary copies and the total of exchanges we send, dividing [them] into two heads, complimentary copies and exchanges for Natal, and [those for places] outside Natal. The receipts for January are not quite bad. In the expenditure for the month, you have not shown the wages at all. Has the balance-sheet been started?

Who is to form the riddles, before we can think of prizes? Personally, I am of the opinion that we are not yet ripe for branching out in this direction.

What prescription has Dr. Nanji given for Kalyandas, and what reason does he assign for the sores on the hands?

I have duly received your list of advertisers for Johannesburg. They have all consented to pay. Chhotabhai has already paid; you must have received the Credit Note. Please inquire and let me know whether you have or not. The others will pay. You may, therefore, continue the advertisements.

It would be very good if you could collect the £3 from Mrs. Jamieson. I feel that I should refund the £3 to Vyas. Henceforth, you should not give notes of introduction to men in whom you cannot put a reasonable trust.

Do not overwork yourself. What about Mothoo? I have not yet received the Parsee Chronicle or the Patrika. The names of subscribers against which you have put a cross should be retained.

until you hear further from me. The others may be struck off. I will, however, inquire.

I am glad you had the meeting on Sunday. How did the ladies take it? What did they understand? What pains were taken to explain to them what was read? Who gave the explanations? Where was the meeting held? It is a step absolutely in the right direction? and should be continued at any cost.

Yours sincerely

240. INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL

We invite the attention of every Indian to the speech by Sir Richard Solomon translated into Gujarati by our Johannesburg correspondent.¹ When Sir Richard makes a public speech, we should know that it is not for electioneering purposes only. He has just returned from England. He has met officials in the Colonial Office in London, and he is a favourite of theirs. Through him, the Liberal Government desires to unite the Dutch and the English. It is necessary, therefore, to look upon whatever Sir Richard says at this juncture as important.

Sir Richard says that the Asiatic Ordinance will have to be reintroduced in the new parliament, and that the Imperial Government will not reject an act passed by it.

Not only would Sir Richard have such a law passed, but, according to his line of thinking, no new Indian should be allowed to enter and settle in the Transvaal. Sir Richard does not therefore like the Natal or the Cape immigration laws. He would have the Orange River Colony law² enacted in the Transvaal. This means that, if the reins of government were to pass into the hands of Sir Richard, Indians would face very hard times indeed.

What are we to do in this situation? We have only one answer. We have hailed the refusal of assent to the Asiatic Ordinance as a victory. But true victory will come only when we show our strength. It is certain that the Asiatic Ordinance will be re-introduced. When that happens, there should be only one thought in the mind of every Indian: never to accept such a law. And, if it is enforced, he will rather go to gaol than carry a pass like a Kaffir. True victory will be won only when the entire Indian community courageously marches to the gaol—when the time comes—and stays there as if it were a palace.

² Under the law an Indian could enter the Orange River Colony “only as a domestic servant”.

256

Many things have to be done before this can come to pass. We must show that Indians without permits do not enter the Transvaal in large numbers. If any of them try to enter, they must be stopped from doing so. And the whites must be made to realize that their policy of repression is not at all called for.

241. THEODORE MORISON

Mr. Theodore Morison, who is a member of the South Africa British Indian Committee, has now been appointed a member of the India Council by Mr. Morley. Mr. Morison was the Principal of the Aligarh College. On some matters he holds liberal views. He comes of a noble family. This appointment made by Mr. Morley is a novel step. So far, all the members of this Council have invariably been Anglo-Indian officials, but Mr. Morison is not from that class. This must therefore be regarded as a major change made by Mr. Morley in the set-up of the Council.

A cable has been received saying that Sir James Fergusson, a former Governor of Bombay, was killed, having been buried alive in an earthquake in Jamaica. He was buried in Kingston with great honours.

243. NAUSEA

Generally speaking, every person has an aversion to something or the other. To some the sight of blood or pus is nauseating, to others the smell of kerosene. Similarly, an Englishman is averse to certain things. Of these aversions some are desirable, but others are carried too far. None the less, it is a fact that people do have these aversions. Trivial as some of these may seem, we should know what they are. It often happens that, starting from trifles, people go on to big quarrels. Because of trifles the whites sometimes cause havoc. We know of an instance in which a white man kicked an Indian simply because the latter happened to break wind. Once Mr. Miller, a Magistrate of the Amlazi Court, was so sickened at the sight of an Indian witness hiccuping that he could stand it no longer and asked the Indian to stop. Once an Indian and some Europeans were at dinner table. During the meal the Indian started belching. An English lady at the table almost fainted and could not eat at all that day. We can see from these instances how necessary it is for us always to show consideration for the feelings of others. Also, while we live in this country, we should so behave that the whites’ prejudices against us are weakened. With this end in view, we list below some of the causes of their prejudice and appeal to all Indians to overcome them.

SOME DON’TS

1. Avoid, as far as possible, blowing your nose or spitting on swept or paved walks or in the presence of others.

On hygienic grounds also, this rule is worth observing. Doctors say that sometimes serious diseases are caused by contact with the nasal or oral discharge of another. Dr. Murison has said that we often spread tuberculosis through our habit of spitting anywhere. Both these things should be done into a spittoon while at home, and into a handkerchief while out, and, as far as possible, in privacy.

2. One should not belch, hiccup, break wind, or scratch oneself in the presence of others.

These [maxims] are useful for correct social behaviour. By practice one can learn to check one’s instinct to do any of these things.

3. If you want to cough, do so holding your handkerchief against the mouth.

If one’s spittle gets blown on to others, it annoys them and if one has any disease, the spittle carries it to them.

4. Even after a bath, in many men, some dirt remains in the ears or under the nails. It is necessary to pare one’s nails and keep them as well as the ears clean.

5. Those who do not grow a regular beard should, if necessary, shave every day. An unshaven face is a sign of laziness or stinginess.

6. One should not let mucus accumulate in the corners of the eyes. One who allows this to happen is considered slothful and a sleepyhead.

7. Every act of cleaning the body should be done in privacy.

8. The turban or cap and the shoes should be clean. The life of the shoes is prolonged by cleaning and polishing.

9. Those who chew betel-leaf and nut should do so at fixed hours, as with other kinds of food so as to avoid giving the impression that we are eating all the time. Those who chew tobacco have a lot to think about. They disfigure every spot by spitting. Addicts to tobacco, as the Gujarati proverb goes, spoil the corner of the house where they chew tobacco, the whole house if they smoke and their clothes if they take snuff.

These are rules for personal cleanliness. Later we shall write of those relating to the home and its environs.

244. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

SIR RICHARD SOLOMON’S SPEECH

I have already written of Sir Richard Solomon’s election speech¹ at Pretoria on January 21 and said I would give, in translation, his ideas on Coloured persons. I do so today.

Now I come to the question of Asiatics, which is related to that of the Kaffirs. Most of the Asiatics in this territory are Indians who have entered lawfully and secured their rights in a similar fashion. There are also those who have entered by breaking the law. Let them be punished for that. (Applause.)

But the lawful immigrants are entitled to justice as well as to recognition, and they should get them. They should not be deprived of rights lawfully acquired. It is therefore necessary to maintain a complete register of the lawful immigrants. Moreover registration is necessary not only to protect the interests of those who are here by virtue of their legal right, but also to prevent the immigration of those who may in future be prohibited. With this end in view a law was passed by the Legislative Council, but it failed to receive the assent of the Imperial Government, as the Indian community raised unreasonable objections to it. This is quite understandable for the Imperial Government has a great responsibility in relation to India. As long, therefore, as the reins of power in this Colony are in the hands of the Imperial Government, it is clear that they will not assent to such an act.

“PASS LAW AGAIN”

But we can [now] pass a law similar to the previous one. I am sure the Imperial Government will give their consent to a similar bill-passed by a self-governing colony.

OTHER ACTS

Some may ask what should be done about Indian immigration in the future. The English traders in this Colony hold that the Indians, who have a different way of life and who enter into unfair competition with them, should be prohibited from entering and trading in the Transvaal. They are afraid that they will be ruined by the immigration of such men. I sympathize with this line of thinking. Hence I believe that the parliament of this Colony should, as early as possible, enact a measure to restrict Indian immigration. The model for such a law is to be had in the Cape or Natal.

ARE NOT CAPE AND NATAL LAWS ENOUGH?

I have given much thought to this question; and I think that, if we adopt the laws of the Cape Colony and Natal, the immigration of ordinary coolies will discontinue, but the immigration of those whom you really wish to keep out, namely, the traders, will not stop. If, therefore, we adopt the Cape or the Natal Act, we shall have to add to it the further provision that the immigrant Asiatic cannot carry on trade.

SIR RICHARD’S REMEDY

I wish to speak frankly on this question. Personally I would prefer it that Indians were not allowed to come into the Colony at all. A concession may be made in favour of only those coming on a short visit. It is much better not to allow any Indians to come in rather than allow them in and then to suppress them, leading to a clash between the local and the Imperial Governments. I am therefore of the view that we should pass an act similar to the one in force in the Orange River Colony. It was enacted before the Boer War and the Imperial Government did not oppose it. In passing the measure we should provide for the continued stay of lawful immigrants and the protection of the rights acquired by them.

JOHANNESBURG CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The Johannesburg Chamber has issued a statement giving the causes of the starvation now prevalent in Johannesburg. Competition from the Indian trader is mentioned as one of them. In his speech¹ a few months ago, Mr. Quinn had shown that it was no use blaming the Indian trader. But the Chamber’s sole business at present is to rouse public opinion against Indians as much as possible.

INDIANS GOING TO DELAGOA BAY

News having been received of the ill-treatment of Indians going from the Transvaal to Delagoa Bay, an inquiry was made of the Portuguese Consul. In his reply he says that no further disability has been imposed; that, if any regulations were framed recently, they have not been published in the Gazette, and that an Indian going from the Transvaal has no difficulty. The hardship brought to our notice was that Indians from the Transvaal were detained at the border if they did not hold a pass for Delagoa Bay similar to the Natal pass. Further correspondence with the Consul is going on, and another detailed letter from him is expected.

EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION

_The Transvaal Leader_ today publishes a cable from England reporting the annual meeting of the East India Association presided over by Sir Raymond West. A speaker at the meeting pointed out that Indians suffered no hardships in places like Jamaica, because the whites there belonged to good families and were respectable people. In those places a considerable income could be earned by good, capable Indians, free from any bad habits. Commenting on this, Sir Raymond West said that there could be no comparison between Jamaica and South Africa, for the whites in South Africa were hostile to the Indians because they suffered from Indian competition. Sir Raymond concluded by saying that one of the remedies for Indian hardships in South Africa was that every Indian should receive adequate education. Sir Raymond means to suggest that, if we are educated, the displeasure of the whites may lessen, for in that case we should be copying their way of life.

245. ETHICAL RELIGION–V

CHAPTER V: MORALITY AS A RELIGION

The subject of this chapter may strike one as strange. The common idea is that morality and religion are distinct things; still this chapter seeks to consider morality as a religion. Some readers may think the writer guilty of confusion. That reproach may come from two sides—from those who regard religion as more than morality, and from others who think that, where there is morality, there is no need for religion. Yet the author’s intention is to show their close relationship. The societies spreading ethical religion or religious ethics believe in religion through morality.

The common idea, it may be admitted, is that there may be morality without religion and religion without morality. One comes across many men of immoral conduct who claim to be religious in spite of the sinful acts they commit. On the other hand, there are moral men like the late Mr. Bradlaugh, who are proud to call themselves atheists and would run away from the name of religion. Those who hold either of these views are mistaken. Those who hold the first view are not only mistaken, but also dangerous as they practise immorality under the guise of religion. In this chapter, therefore, we shall show that, considered intellectually and scientifically, religion and morality are united and should be so united.

Morality was in the beginning simply the customary conduct of a community, settled ways of acting that men living together naturally fell into. By a natural process the good customs tended to survive and the bad ones to die out, since, if the bad ones did not die out, they would weaken the community and lead to its extinction. Even today we see this process at work. It is neither morality nor religion if people observe good customs more or less unthinkingly. However, most of what passes for morality in the world today consists, as pointed out above, of good customs.

Moreover, men often have a merely superficial idea of religion. Sometimes men believe in religion only as a means to ward off dangers that threaten them. It would be a mistake to dignify actions as religious where they are performed out of a love that springs from fear.

But at long last a time does come when men begin to tread the path of morality consciously, deliberately with a determined will, regardless of gain or loss, of life or death, without turning to look back, ready to sacrifice themselves. Then can they be said to have been permeated with true morality.

How can such morality subsist except with the support of religion? One tells oneself, “If by doing a little harm to another, I can secure my personal interest, why should I not do that little harm?” The profit derived from doing harm is no profit, but a positive loss [to the doer]. How shall this unpalatable dose go down one’s throat? Ostensibly in Germany’s interest, Bismarck perpetrated dreadful deeds. Where then was his education? Where did those maxims of morality disappear which, at other times, he used to mouth before school children? Obviously, a reply to all these questions can be given. The reason why he could not keep up his morality in the face of these difficulties was that his morality was not grounded in religion. So long as the seed of morality is not watered by religion, it cannot sprout. Without water it withers and ultimately perishes. Thus it will be seen that true or ideal morality ought to include true religion. To put the same thought differently, morality cannot be observed without religion. That is to say, morality should be observed as a religion.

Furthermore, it is seen that the rules of morality, laid down in the world’s great religions, are largely the same. The founders of the religions have also explained that morality is the basis of religion. If a foundation is removed, the superstructure falls to the ground; similarly if morality is destroyed, religion which is built on it comes crashing down.

The author adds that there is nothing wrong in calling morality a religion. Dr. Coit in his prayer says, “I shall have no other God except righteousness.” On reflection, we shall realize that God will not help us and answer our impassioned prayer for help, if we utter His name, while having a dagger concealed under our arm. Let us take two men, one who believes in the existence of God, yet breaks all His Commandments; and another who, though not acknowledging God by name, worships Him through his deeds and obeys His laws, recognizing in the divine laws, their Maker. Which of the two men shall we call a man of religion and morality? Without a moment’s thought, one would emphatically reply that the second man alone is to be considered religious and moral.\footnote{1}{Here follows a poem by Behramji Malbari which has not been translated.}

\textit{Johannesburg, February 2, 1907}

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Your letter to hand. I shall write about the firm on Monday.

I am sending herewith the letters you sent to me as well as the communication received by me with my comment on it. Please attend to these carefully.

Your bill for the Anti-I[ndian] Law Fund was quite in order. I am sending it to you today. I have credited the money. Please send me a stamped receipt. Please also prepare a bill for the £5 which I had credited to your account in October for the petition about the Vrededorp Ordinance and send me a receipt as of that date for my file.

I am sending very little material today. I shall send more tomorrow.

Please try to keep Harilal Thakkar as quiet as possible and treat him very kindly. I have a letter from him today. I have replied to it.¹ His mind does not seem to have yet calmed down.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

I have sent Mr. Ritch’s interview² to Mr. West. Please drop the portion I have deleted from it and give its translation in this issue.

247. ADAMJI MIANKHAN

[Before February 5, 1907]¹

Mr. Adamji Miankhan sailed home on the 7th. His services to the Indian community should be an example to all Indian traders. His portrait is published in this issue. Mr. Adamji comes of a noble family. His ancestors carried on a business in brocades and many varieties of cloth. In 1884, when he was eighteen, he came to South Africa along with his brother, Mr. Gulam Hussain, and his father, Mr. Miankhan. He had had some English education which proved very useful.

It was really in 1896-7 that the Indian community had the occasion to benefit from his public services. It was not long after the Congress had been founded, and its first Secretary was to leave for India. The problem then arose of who was to take his place. But thanks to his knowledge of English and his tact and competence, Mr. Adamji was unanimously appointed Acting Secretary. At this time Mr. Abdul Karim Haji Amod Zaveri was the President. Within six months of their assumption of office the funds of the Congress rose from £100 to £1100. The members also in those days were full of enthusiasm. They used to travel long distances in their own carriages to collect funds. And the whole community now enjoys the fruits of the work they did at that time. Most of the credit for this work goes to Mr. Adamji; no society can progress unless its secretary is alert and has drive. But it was in December of 1896 and January of 1897 that Adamji’s tact and ability were clearly seen. At that time the passengers from s.s. Courland and s.s. Naderi had a difficult time in landing at Durban. The whites were opposed to their landing and were determined at all costs to prevent it. The occasion called for great self-restraint, a quick judgement and patience. Mr. Adamji showed all these virtues. He worked day and night, at the cost of his own business, to ward off the looming misery. It was at this time that the late Mr. Nazar came to South Africa and rendered valuable help. However, if Mr. Adamji had not shown that grit and tenacity, the happy ending could never have come about.

From the time of the above crisis until the present day, Mr. Adamji has always done public work to the best of his capacity and has given the benefit of his experience to Mr. Omar Haji Amod Zaveri and Mr. Mahomed Cassim Anglia who are now Joint Secretaries. We pray to God that Mr. Adamji may realize his wishes in his native land and return in good health for public work here; and we wish that other leading Indian citizens will follow Mr. Adamji’s example.

CHAPTER VI: RELIGIOUS MORALITY OR MORAL RELIGION

DARWIN’S VIEWS ON ETHICS

Before summarizing this chapter, it is necessary to give an account first of Darwin himself. Darwin was a great Englishman of the last century who made great scientific discoveries. His memory and his power of observation were amazing. He has written some books which deserve to be read and pondered. With a mass of evidence and arguments, he has shown how man came into being; how he has evolved from a particular kind of monkey. After a large number of experiments and much sifting of evidence, he realized that there was not much difference between the anatomy of man and that of the ape. Whether this conclusion is correct or not has not much to do with ethics. Besides this, Darwin has also shown how ideas of morality affect mankind. And as many scholars have faith in Darwin’s writings, our author has dealt with his views in Chapter VI.

CHAPTER VI

It is noble voluntarily to do what is good and right. The true sign of man’s nobility is the fact that, instead of being driven about like a cloud before the wind, he stands firm and can do, and in fact does, what he deems proper.

Nevertheless, we ought to know the direction in which our environment disposes our instincts. We know that we are not in every way masters of our own life; there are conditions outside of us to which we have to adjust ourselves. For instance, in a country where Himalayan cold prevails, we have to put on adequate clothing, whether we like it or not, in order to keep the body warm. That is, we have to act with prudence.

The question now arises: does the influence of environment lead us to be moral? Or can it be that the forces that surround us are indifferent to morality?

At this point it becomes necessary to consider Darwin’s views. Though Darwin did not write as a moral philosopher, he has shown how close the connection is between morality and environment. Those who think that morality is unimportant and that physical strength and mental capacity are the only things that matter should read Darwin. According to him, there is an instinct of self-preservation in men as in other creatures. He also says that those who survive the struggle for existence may be regarded as successful, that is, those who are unfit tend to extinction, but that the issue of the struggle does not depend on mere physical force.

1 Vide the following item.

Comparing man with the bear or the buffalo, we find that, in physical strength, the bear and the buffalo are superior to him; in a tussle he will surely be worsted. Nonetheless he is their superior by virtue of his intelligence. Similarly we can compare different races of men. In war it is not the side with the largest numbers or with the hardiest soldiers that wins, but the side with the ablest generals and the best strategy, though its soldiers may be fewer or less hardy. In these examples we see the superiority of intelligence.

But Darwin shows further that moral strength is even superior to physical and intellectual strength; and we can see in various ways that a man who has moral qualities lasts longer than one who is devoid of them. Some hold that Darwin taught that strength is enough; that is, those who are physically strong ultimately survive. Superficial thinkers may believe that morality is of no use. But this is not Darwin’s view at all. We find from the evidence of the early history of man that races without morality have completely disappeared. The people of Sodom and Gomorrah were extremely immoral and they are now therefore completely extinct. We can see even today how races without morality are steadily declining.

Let us now take some simple illustrations and see how at least common morality is necessary for sustaining the human race. A peaceful disposition is one element of morality. At first sight it may appear that people with a violent disposition rise in life; but a little reflection will show that, when the sword of violence falls, it may be on one’s own neck. Freedom from bad habits forms another element of morality. Statistics have proved that, at the age of thirty, intemperate persons in England are not likely to live beyond another thirteen or fourteen years, while the teetotaller’s expectation of life is seventy years. Yet another element of morality is chastity. Darwin has shown that profligate persons die early. They have no children, or if they have any, they are weak. The profligate become feeble of mind, and in course of time look like idiots.

If we consider the morals of various communities, we find the same state of affairs. Among the Andaman islanders the husband looks after his wife only until their child is weaned and begins to move about, and he then abandons her. That is, they do not have the quality of altruism, and utter selfishness prevails. The result is that the race is gradually dying out. Darwin shows that the altruistic instinct is present, to some extent, even in animals: timid birds display strength in defending their young. This shows that, if there had been no selflessness among animals, we should have in the world scarcely any life other than grass and poisonous flora. The main distinction between man and other animals is that man is more selfless than the animals. He has sacrificed his life for others in proportion to his strength, that is, for his offspring, for his family, his community and his country.

Darwin clearly shows that moral strength is supreme. The ancient Greeks had greater intelligence than the Europeans of today, but when the former gave up morality, their intelligence became their enemy, and no trace of them remains today. Nations are sustained neither by wealth nor by armies, but by righteousness alone. It is the duty of man to bear this truth in mind and practise altruism, which is the highest form of morality.

249. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

JOHANNESBURG,

February 5, 1907

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I post to you today, with the necessary clarification, the papers you had sent me for my comments. I also send some Gujarati material, which has to be printed in this very issue. What I have written about Adamji Sheth¹ may appear some time later if he is not leaving just yet. I have suggested presenting him with an address. If one is presented to him by the Congress, I expect to get a separate report of

it.\footnote{This address was presented on February 6, 1907 and the function reported in \textit{Indian Opinion}, 9-2-1907.}

It is good that the speeches of the Congress session have appeared in the Gujarati columns of the current issue. The biographical sketch of the Amir ought not to have been postponed so long.

I have not yet been able to get an Urdu poem for “Ethical Religion”. If you come across any there, do insert it. I had hoped to get some Urdu poem today. If you don’t find any, let the thing go without it, but do not insert any that applies to the Hindus alone. There is one song by Pritamdas in \textit{Kavyadohan} beginning with the line, “O man, without caring to know the supreme ideal, you have hankered after your selfish ends only”. You may use it if you approve of it. If you can get Kabir’s \textit{bhajans}, they will be quite unexceptionable.

I hope to have a letter about Kalyandas and about other matters tomorrow.

\textbf{250. LETTER TO TOWN CLERK}

\textit{JOHANNESBURG,}

\textit{February 6, 1907}

\textbf{TO}

\textbf{THE TOWN CLERK}

P. O. BOX 1047

\textbf{JOHANNESBURG}

\textbf{SIR,}

The Committee of the British Indian Association has seen the draft of the by-laws for licensing and regulating Asiatic tea-rooms or eating-houses. My Committee respectfully submits the following for the Council’s consideration, in connection with the by-laws.

It appears that the necessity for the by-laws has arisen on account of the large, indentured Chinese population and the catering for that population which has been undertaken by various persons. But, under the definition of the term, “Asiatic tea-room or eating-house” is evidently included any place where Asiatics are catered for, and it would, therefore, include the small British Indian restaurants which are conducted in Johannesburg. They are very few, and have very few visitors, the British Indian population being all permanently resident, and not requiring any houses for feeding it. My Committee, therefore, ventures to suggest that the definition should not include those of British Indians. At the same time, my Committee has no desire to protect the few small British Indian restaurants in Johannesburg from inspection with regard to sanitation, etc., but, in the humble opinion of my Committee, the ordinary public health by-laws are sufficient for the purpose.

In the humble opinion of my Committee, the procedure laid down for making application for a tea-room or an eating-house licence is cumbersome and costly, and could only be justified if there were large remunerative establishments. The fee fixed for the annual licence, too, in my Committee’s humble opinion, is almost prohibitive, and is greater than the fee charged for either European restaurants or Kaffir eating-houses, the fee for the former being £7.10.0 only and for the latter £5. Moreover, the definition of an “Asiatic eating-house” includes a tea-room. Therefore, whilst a general tea-room carries with it a licence of £3, an Asiatic tea-room will require a licence fee of £10; and the fee of £2 for transfer of licences is, in my Committee’s humble opinion, a heavy charge.

My Committee, therefore, ventures to trust that the Town Council will be pleased to favourably consider the objections herein raised to the proposed by-laws.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ABDOOL GANI
CHAIRMAN,

251. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[JOHANNESBURG,]

February 7, 1907

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Your letter reached me on the 4th.

We are going to get the money for the advertisement of the Mahomedan estate. Please send the bill.

I have received the bills sent by you. I shall now see how much can be realized.

I did understand your suggestion about the riddles. I do not think it proper to introduce the riddles feature so long as we are not in a position to have it regularly and offer prizes ourselves. What can be the object of the man who wants to spend money on this? How long can he be expected to do so? Moreover, we can hardly expect many to take part in the competition. However, you may inquire of your correspondent if he intends paying for the prizes indefinitely. It would be very strange indeed if he wanted to do so. On the other hand, it would not be proper for us to start this feature if he agrees to give prizes once in a while. You may, however, write to me if you have more to say.

I follow what you say about Sanghavi.

Mr. B. P. Ibrahim has not asked us to discontinue the advertisement. I shall ask him about it when he comes. I shall see about the customers whose names you have sent me.

I am still trying to make arrangements for the Hamidia [Society]

I know that Manilal is weak in his arithmetic. Please give him adequate attention.

How much English has the new man studied? Who is he? Is he the son of an indentured labourer?

I shall be able to credit the money payable to Hirji Valji.

Regarding the Anti-Indian Law Fund bill, Hemchand says it was paid in cash here.

As the post will not reach me on Saturday evening, you need not bother about sending me proofs here. It will be enough if you let me know in your letter of Thursday what subjects have already been dealt with. It will enable me to know what topics I need not write about.

About your going to England, I think it is desirable, if you can go immediately. But your going depends mainly on your work there.

(I) When can you be conveniently free?
(2) Who will take care of your work in your absence?
(3) Will Harilal be able to look after the Gujarati columns?

I think the proper time for you to leave for England is when you can get away from the Press. When you think you can do so conveniently, you will first have to discuss it with all your colleagues and then write to me.

That Kalyandas is leaving seems to me a calamity. I think you should as far as possible avoid going to town. Maganlal may go if he has the courage to undertake the work in town. Harilal should look after the Gujarati work and Maganlal should look after the accounts, that is, the original entries should be made by him. If, however, Maganlal cannot cope with the two jobs, and if West cannot do it, then I think your going will have to be put off for the present. You will then be able to leave only after I go there, that is, in the beginning of next year. I may be able to go there towards the end of this year. But if I do not, I can go there only in March next year; and your going will be postponed till then. I am thinking of sending for Kalyandas’s brother [from India]. Perhaps Goko' too might come. But all this is uncertain. You have to consider whether or not you can leave, if Kalyandas is not there and no extra hand has been recruited. Think all this over and let me know. It would be better, I think, if you talked things over with West and wrote to me. What does he feel about it? If your visit to England Materializes, you will be unable to go to India. You may think of going to India on your way back. What you do must depend mainly on your choice.

Though Harilal has agreed to stay, I find some uncertainty in what he writes. Therefore, I wrote to you to treat him in such a manner as to have a steadying influence on his mind.

The poster is found useful here. It may prove useful there too if we can arrange to send a man regularly to town. Do not think any more of discontinuing it. Try to make the best use of the posters now that they have been printed. It is worth trying if Sanghavi, Omar Sheth and others exhibit the posters and also stock copies of Indian Opinion for sale. Ask Adams also. Some people in Maritzburg also might well stock these things. But all this requires time.

It is absolutely necessary to fix a particular amount per month so that nobody draws more. The better course would be to inform me every month how much each one has drawn, so that I can write to those who have [over]drawn. Or you may discuss the matter with Anandlal.

I feel the balance-sheet should now be made ready without delay. If Kalyandas can leave in April, please assign Maganlal mainly to this job and get it done by that time.

Please see what I have written to West yesterday about Sam Sardar’s son who wants to stay there.

Blessings from
MHOHANDAS

[PS.]

In the printed list for Johannesburg which you sent, Mr. Ally’s name is crossed. Why? Please find out and let me know.

Please send the paper to the following address if it is not already going there: Joseph Royeppen, 36, Stapleton Hall Road, Strand Green, N. London.

252. SOUTH AFRICA BRITISH INDIAN COMMITTEE

We publish today in another section an article on the South Africa British Indian Committee. The article shows that the Committee is working hard and will be able to do really effective work, if it receives help from South Africa.

The main thing that we can do is to support it through agitation. The Grand Old Man of India too has given the same advice. It is not enough that we feel the pain; our cry must be loud enough to communicate that pain. Even as a mother, as the saying goes, does not serve [food] unasked, we must know that, unless we agitate at this end, nothing will happen and we shall not be able to avail ourselves of all the help that the Committee can give.

Our position would deteriorate if, having brought the Committee into existence, we failed to support it. For those who help us do so on the [implicit] understanding that we deserve the help. We must support the Committee by providing the funds. We cannot make up the deficit for this year unless we send them the £300 we promised. We should continue to finance the Committee until a solution is found for our problems.

The Committee has to deal with the four following problems: (1) the Natal Municipal Bill; (2) the Natal Licensing Act; (3) the hardships of [Indians in the] Transvaal; and (4) the forthcoming Colonial Conference.

The Colonial Conference is scheduled to meet on April 15, and the Committee will have to busy itself about it with all its energy. As for the other three problems, we have to send them the necessary information. Regarding the two Natal Acts, we feel that we should hold a [protest] meeting and send cables to Lord Elgin and also inform the Committee. It must be borne in mind that such an opportunity, once lost, will never come again.

253. TONGAAT LICENCE

The appeal against the rejection of the Tongaat licence was heard on January 31. A special report of this is given in our English section. It will be seen that, by and large, the Licensing Board has done no injustice. Those whose houses or shops have been certified fit by the doctors are given licences; and orders have been passed that licences be given to persons whose account books are fairly well kept. The result of this appeal provides full confirmation of the warning we had issued.

If we keep our shops and houses clean and maintain our accounts in an irreproachable manner, there will be no fear of our losing the licences. Nobody should be able to point the finger at us. It is not enough that our houses are ordinarily well kept; they should be so clean that no other houses can compare with them. We believe that Dr. Hill gave favourable evidence out of compassion. But we must not depend upon such pity. Nobody should assume that, because we are saved this year, we shall be saved next year also. Our houses, our shops and our books ought to be in proper condition, ready for inspection at any time. If they are, there will be little likelihood of difficulty in obtaining licences.
We earnestly hope that all Indian businessmen will take to heart the lesson learnt in the Tongaat licence case.

254. INDIAN TRADERS IN NATAL

We have written a great deal of the fresh troubles that have come upon the Indian traders in Natal.¹ Yet we cannot think too much about what we are to do in that matter.

Writing in The Times of Natal, one Mr. F. A. Baker says that he once saw a Kaffir painting the front of an Indian shop and goes on to make the following comments:

> I do not know whether the common man notices this > sort of thing. If he did, he would never argue that Indian traders > should not be driven out forcibly. However much we [Whites]patronize Indian traders, they will never patronize a White. They > never drop a coin into the pocket of a White, unless forced to do so. I have seen [White] Government servants, workers and others, > entering Indian shops. But have these traders ever given them > any work? Even when an Indian trader knows of a starving > White, he never helps him. Why should we show pity to such > Indians? If our members of parliament do not pass an Act to > drive out these Indians, we must replace them by others who will carry out our wishes.

From these views expressed by a White we have a lesson to learn:
We must encourage the Whites too. It is a short-sighted policy to employ, through sheer niggardliness, a Kaffir for washing work. If we keep in view the conditions in this country and patronize the Whites, whenever proper and necessary, then every such White will serve as an advertisement for the Indian trader. We do certain things to flatter or please the White merchants; if, instead of doing so, or over and above that, we helped a White, not in order to humour him but for doing him a good turn, that will yield us better results. We believe that to help a needy White is much better in every way than to feed a serpent like Mr. Tatham with milk and be bitten later. It is in the belief that they 26-1-1907 and “The Natal Mercury and Indian Traders”, 26-1-1907. will harm us that we have not hitherto helped poor whites. Even if they do us harm, we shall have no occasion for regret, for we did not help them in the hope of a good turn in exchange.

255. MIDDELBURG LOCATION

The Middelburg Town Council has served a notice on the Indians in the Location in that town to vacate it within three months.
Those who have built houses have been asked to shift them from the site! This would mean that Indians who have lived there for a long time would have to remove the structures and leave without compensation. The Indians in the Location have addressed the British Indian Association on the subject, and an enquiry is being made.

256. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

FOR INDIANS GOING TO DELAGOA BAY

I wrote last week about Indians going to Delagoa Bay.¹ Mr.
Manga who has arrived here from Delagoa Bay met the Portuguese Consul. The Consul has agreed to permit Indians who make an affidavit before him to proceed to Delagoa Bay. To a communication addressed to him, he has sent the following reply:

With reference to your letter dated the 22nd, I have to state that there are no restrictions on foreigners visiting Delagoa Bay.
But those intending to stay in Delagoa Bay have to obtain a permit to do so. If they propose to stay for less than twenty days, they have to intimate to the municipality their addresses and the purpose of the visit. A statement to this effect may be made before me also. Those who do not make such a statement are liable to be penalised; but three days’ grace is usually given for the observance of these regulations.

In view of this, Indians who desire to go to India through Delagoa Bay will meet with no difficulty, if they obtain the requisite permit from the Consul.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN

The election campaign is on. The rival candidates are spending a lot of money to get themselves elected. They have written letters to the electors asking for their votes. Sir Richard Solomon is going all out in his efforts at Pretoria. The result will be known by the 22nd of this month. The Star has called him the “National Scout”.

DR. PORTER

In his recent report to the Johannesburg Town Council on health and sanitation in the city, Dr. Porter has criticized the Indians as follows.

SMALLPOX

Writing about smallpox, Dr. Porter says:
The greatest obstruction is caused by Asiatics and Somalis. The Asiatics resist anyone entering their houses [for purposes of inspection or treatment]. They obstruct the isolation of patients and measures to prevent infection. Whenever a medical examination is attempted, they send the patients into the toilet. It was only after a leading person was fined for an attempt to hide a case of suspected smallpox that they came to their senses. Later such cases came to the knowledge of the authorities without much difficulty, thanks to Mr. Lloyd. A great deal of help was forthcoming from the leaders of the Indian community at the time of the plague.\(^1\)

MALAY LOCATION

There was a population of 4,200 in November 1905 in the Malay Location. Of this number 1,600 were Indians, 970 Malays, 70 Chinese and Japanese, 100 Somalis, etc., 40 Kaffirs, 1,300 Cape Boys and 120 Whites. Reporting on the Location in January 1906, Dr. Stock pointed out that, as there was a possibility of well-water being contaminated through percolation, it was necessary to drain the slop-water [on the surface]. There was danger of smallpox and plague breaking

\(^1\) The original has “municipality”.
\(^2\) The original has smallpox, but the reference here is clearly to plague.
out among the Indians because they concealed their patients. The Chief Medical Officer suggested at first that it would be better if all poor Indians, waiters and the like, were removed from the town to the distant Bazaars. There were no doubt difficulties in doing this, but as the Klipspruit Location had come up, arrangements could be made for Indians to go there. As many Indians did business with the Kaffirs, it was hoped that they would go to Klipspruit.

This, in substance, is Dr. Porter’s report. It contains other important observations besides. But this summary requiresto be pondered over by every Indian. The suggestion about shifting to the Location is still here. And as long as we continue to conceal our patients and neglect the common rules of sanitation through niggardliness or laziness, the threat of [removal to] the Locations will always remain.

ASIATIC EATING-HOUSES

The regulations governing Asiatic eating-houses, framed by the Johannesburg Town Council will come up before the Council in a few days. According to them the annual licensing fee will be £10. These regulations are meant primarily for the Chinese, but Indians too are covered by them. They will have to bear a great loss because the number of people using Indian eating-houses is very small, and they cannot therefore afford to pay the annual fee of £10. The British Indian Association has therefore written to the Council on the matter.¹ Other provisions deal with keeping the premises clean and the procedure for obtaining licences.

TURKEY AND GERMANY

A cable appearing in The Rand Daily Mail shows that a fresh cause of conflict has arisen between Turkey and Germany. As it is not a Reuter cable and may not appear in the newspapers there, I give a translation below:

> It appears that a few days ago Fehim Pasha, the chief of the secret police, detained a German ship carrying a cargo of timber. The reason for this was that its German owners did not offer bribes to the subordinate officers. The German Ambassador was informed of the Pasha’s action and he sent a protest to the Port [authorities]. He further declared that, if the

Pasha did not forthwith hand back the ship, it will be recovered with the help of the German Army for the rights of the German people were inviolable. This warning had the desired effect and the chief of the secret police immediately informed the German company that the ship had been released. Now the Ambassador has written a letter to the Port saying that Fehim Pasha is corrupt, is a free-booter and a notorious thief. Besides casting a slur on the good name of His Majesty the Sultan, he has belittled the Ottoman Government in the eyes of foreigners. The Ambassador further demands that Fehim Pasha should be deprived of his position according to law and should be deported or imprisoned for life.

257. THE DEFEAT OF “THE ADVERTISER”

The meeting of Indian leaders with the editor of The Natal Advertiser has yielded good results. The Natal Advertiser has written at length pointing out the fancied contradictions between our writings, the work done by Messrs Gandhi and Ally and the facts as stated by the leaders of the Indian community. It has further pointed out that even men like Sir Lepel Griffin are prepared to grant all rights to Indians and to allow any number of them to emigrate to South Africa. It is obvious that all this writing is of no value whatever. But instead of acknowledging its defeat, The Advertiser has tried to keep up the facade. Leaving aside The Advertiser article under review, it is easy to see that the paper holds the view that big traders should have no difficulties, that problems arising from the Immigration Act should be solved and a just attitude adopted towards the Indian community. If The Advertiser continues this policy, both the newspapers of Durban will, it may reasonably be expected, be somewhat friendly to the Indian community and not attack it outright. Much good can result if a similar arrangement can be arrived at with the Maritzburg papers also.

1 A deputation of leading Durban Indians met the editor of The Natal Advertiser following a critical editorial by the paper on the Imperial Government's reaction to the British Indian Deputation. This was, however, followed by a more conciliatory article addressed to Indians and entitled “A True Agitation and a False”, which said, “Let us, at all events, understand one another.”
However, we must not assume that nothing remains to be done after what has appeared in The Advertiser. Admittedly, we shall have less to contend with if the newspapers do not write against us. But we have many other enemies like the Press to win over. The whites are not the ones to give up the struggle. For instance, Mr. Arthur Wade has started inciting the Kaffirs; he has appealed to them not to have any dealings with Indian traders. It is true that one or two speeches of this kind will not have much effect. But this speech should be a warning to us to be on the alert.

258. NATAL LICENSING LAW

During the hearing of an appeal about a licence before the Maritzburg Town Council, a member of the Council said that they ought to hesitate before refusing a licence to an Indian who is a British subject. Moreover, the local chamber [of commerce] has passed a resolution to the effect that an Indian should have no difficulty in obtaining a licence if he could prove that he was a British subject. In the four licence cases that were tried in Verulam the charges were that the shops were dirty, that access to the houses was only through the shops or that the shops were also used as dining-rooms. In Potchefstroom, licences were refused on the score of colour alone. All the appeals from Ladysmith and the neighbouring places have been dismissed on the ground that the traders do not know how to keep accounts, that they do not know English at all and that they depend wholly on low-paid employees in these matters. The court refused even to record the evidence of the book-keepers. All this goes to show conclusively that the whites are bent on driving us out of this country. Those who have been refused licences are, as a matter of fact, deprived of their means of livelihood. What are they to do under these circumstances? Are they to starve or trade without a licence? The Government ought to think about this. They had warned the municipalities that, if the powers given to them were not used justly, the same would be withdrawn. If our Congress and the Indian community carry on a determined struggle and bring home to the Government and the world at large the injustice done to Indian traders, we are sure some redress can be secured.

Indian Opinion, 16-2-1907
In this issue we publish a letter concerning licences from Grahamstown in the Cape Colony. This leads one to suspect that a large number of poor hawkers is unable to carry on business for want of licences. Such licences are a source of income to many Indians. We have read the Cape Act and, as far as we know, the Town Councils are bound to issue licences. Legal action therefore can be taken in this matter.

The same difficulties are met with in Natal. The Act itself is very rigorous, but because of the strenuous efforts of Congress officials much harm has been, and will be, prevented. The Congress Secretaries go about from place to place, encouraging the people to take the necessary measures.

The Cape League and the [British Indian] Association should follow this example. It is the duty of these two bodies to enquire into the conditions prevailing in every town. If they make sufficient effort, we believe, redress can be had. It must also be remembered that Natal does not offer the advantages that the Cape does for putting up a fight. It will, therefore, be a matter of shame if the Indian leaders in the Cape do not offer resistance. We are prepared to publish the names and addresses of all those who have not been able to obtain licences in the Cape, and we request all our readers to send us the same.

1 This letter was from a hawker who sought the intervention of the editor of Indian Opinion; he had held a hawker’s licence for several years, which the authorities refused to renew and he was therefore faced with the prospect of starvation.
CHAPTER VII: SOCIAL IDEAL

It is sometimes said that all morality involves social relations. This is well said; for instance, if the judge has a proper sense of justice, men who go to court obtain satisfaction. Similarly love, kindness, generosity and other qualities can be manifested only in relation to others. The force of loyalty can be demonstrated only in our relations with one another. Of patriotism, nothing need be said. Truly speaking, there is no aspect of morality the benefit of which accrues to the practitioner alone. Sometimes it is said that truthfulness and other virtues have nothing to do with the other person and are entirely personal. But we must admit that by telling the truth we prevent harm to another, just as by telling a lie and deceiving a person we do him an injury.

In the same way, when a man disapproves of certain laws or customs and withdraws from society, even then his acts affect society. Such a man lives in a world of ideals. He does not worry that the world of his ideals is not yet born. For him the mere thought that the prevailing standard is not good enough is sufficient to impel him to resist it. He will constantly try to change other people’s way of life to his own. This is how prophets have caused the world’s wheels to change their course.

So long as man remains selfish and does not care for the happiness of others, he is no better than an animal and perhaps worse. His superiority to the animal is seen only when we find him caring for his family. He is still more human, that is, much higher than the animal, when he extends his concept of the family to include his country or community as well. He climbs still higher in the scale when he comes to regard the human race as his family. A man is an animal or imperfect [as a human being] to the extent that he falls behind in his service to humanity. If I feel my wife’s injury or that of my community, yet have no sympathy for anyone outside the circle, it is clear that I do not have any feeling for humanity as such; but I have, simply out of selfishness or a sense of discrimination, a certain feeling for my wife, my children or the community which I hold as my own.

That is to say, we have neither practised nor known ethical religion so long as we do not feel sympathy for every human being. Now we know that the higher morality must be comprehensive; it must embrace all men. Considering our relation to mankind, every man has a claim over us, as it is our duty always to serve him. We should act on the assumption that we have no claim on others. He is merely ignorant who would here argue that the man acting in this manner will be trampled in the world’s scramble. For it is a universal experience that God always saves the man who whole-heartedly devotes himself to the service of others.

According to this moral standard all men are equal. This is not to be interpreted to mean equality of position and function for all. It only means that, if I hold a high place, I also have the ability to shoulder its duties and responsibilities. I should not therefore lose my head and believe that men with smaller responsibilities are my inferiors. Equality depends on the state of our mind, and until our mind reaches that state, we shall remain backward.

According to this moral standard no nation can rule another for selfish ends. It is immoral of the American people to reduce the aborigines to an inferior status and run the government. A civilized race coming into contact with a savage one owes it to the latter to raise it to its own level. The same standard rules that the king is the servant and not the master of his people and that the officers are not there to enjoy power but to make the people happy. If the people in a democratic state are selfish, that state comes to no good.

Moreover, according to this law, the stronger members of a state or community have to protect, not oppress, the weaker ones. Under such a government there can be no starvation; nor can there be excessive accumulation of riches; for we can never be happy while we see our neighbours languishing in misery. The man following this high moral standard will never amass wealth. He who would be moral need not be scared away by the thought that few follow this ideal morality; for he is master of his morality, not of its results. He will be considered guilty if he does not practise morality; but nobody will find fault with him if his immoral behaviour has no consequences for society.

261. JOHANNESBURG LETTER

NEW PARLIAMENT

There has been a great deal of hustle over the new parliament of the Transvaal, which is to have 58 members, 38 of whom will represent the Johannesburg area. The nominations of candidates were filed on Saturday, the 9th. This issue of Indian Opinion will be in the hands of readers by the 16th or the 18th. The election will take place on Wednesday, the 20th. The names of successful candidates will be known on the 21st. It is therefore hoped that these names will be available to our readers in the next issue.

THE PARTIES

In all there are five parties: Progressive (i.e. mine-owners), Hetvolk, (i.e., the Dutch), Nationalist, Independent, and Labour. Only two of these are parties in the real sense. The Nationalist Party, it may be said, has been formed for those who might be scared by the names, Progressive and Hetvolk. It is widely believed that the Hetvolk and Nationalist Parties will fare well and that, between them, they will secure a majority of the seats. Many look upon the Progressive Party with disfavour. The leaders of the Hetvolks are General Botha and General Smuts, those of the Nationalists Sir Richard Solomon and Mr. Wyburg and of the Progressives Sir Percy Fitzpatrick, Sir George Farrar, Mr. Hosken, etc. and others.

The real tussle that is going on is between Sir Richard Solomon and Sir Percy Fitzpatrick. They are both candidates from Pretoria. It is difficult to say which of the two will win. Sir Richard’s views about the Chinese and the Kaffirs having undergone a change, he is being looked upon by many with scorn. He was ready to bring the Chinese into the Colony, but now says that his views in the matter have changed. Formerly, he used to say that the Kaffirs should get their legitimate rights; now he would approve whatever the other members propose to do about them.

An analysis shows that there are 35 Hetvolk, 29 Progressive, 32 Independent, 15 Nationalist and 12 Labour candidates. Five of the Hetvolk candidates have already been elected unopposed.

The Indian community, it appears, stands neither to lose nor to gain whichever party comes to power, for members of both the parties have already expressed themselves against the Indians.

PERMIT OFFICE

An article has been published in The Transvaal Advertiser which clearly appears to have been inspired by the Permit Office. It says that the Indian community causes the Permit Office much trouble, that the failure of the Ordinance to receive assent has increased the work of that office, that Indians enter without permits from hundreds of places, that they bring in their children without permits and employ them in the stores, and that the decisions of the Supreme Court have moreover created numerous obstacles in the working of the existing law. The Advertiser has thus tried to incite the people so as to ensure in advance that the new parliament passes the Ordinance again.
The statements are obviously false. Instead of the Permit Office being put to trouble, it is that office which gives trouble. The hardships caused by the law are increasing instead of decreasing; and the Supreme Court steps in only when the Permit Office transgresses all limits. It is not enough that we know all this. Knowing this, we ought to adopt remedies for these ills. The measures that need to be taken have already been indicated in Indian Opinion. But the greatest, the ultimate, remedy is going to gaol; and so long as that is not forgotten, no harm can befall [us]. The adoption of this remedy will also require a good deal of money. The British Indian Association and all other bodies should take quick and effective measures in this regard.

MIDDELBURG LOCATION

News has now been received from Middelburg about the Location there. Acting on it, the Association has written to the Town Clerk asking him why the notices have been issued. Further action in the matter will be taken after a reply has been received.

COOVADIA’S CASE

Mr. Coovadia, a well-known merchant of Johannesburg, who is the Treasurer of the British Indian Association, was on his way to Johannesburg with his 16-year-old son. The boy was forced to detrain at Volksrust because he did not have a permit. Earlier when a permit was applied for, it was refused, and Captain Fowle had given the assurance that there would be no difficulty at all. Though Mr. Coovadia had this letter with him, the boy was nevertheless asked to detrain. Medical evidence indicated that the boy was eighteen years old, whereupon the Magistrate refused to release him. A written representation was made to Mr. Chamney who declined to intervene. Last Monday, the case came up for hearing at Volksrust, when the Magistrate refused to send it up to Johannesburg for recording evidence. It will now therefore be heard next Monday. In the end, of course, the boy will be let off. But think of the trouble and expense Mr. Coovadia will have to go through before obtaining justice in such a trifling matter! And for want of a permit one has to undergo all this expense. When a well-known man has to suffer these hardships, what about the poor?

1 The original reads: “If a permit had been applied for, it would have been said that it could not be given as the boy was under sixteen years.” Gandhiji, however, mentions earlier that a permit was in fact refused.
REGULATIONS FOR ASIATIC EATING-HOUSES

The British Indian Association has sent a representation¹ against these Regulations to the Town Council. It states that the licence fee for an eating-house should not be as high as £10 and that there was no need for applying these stringent rules to the Indian community as it was small in number.

DR. HEGGER

Dr. Hegger has come here in connection with the election campaign. In a speech he made on Sunday he said that an Indian voter had offered him a large sum, which he had refused. Obviously this is quite untrue. We may hope to hear more of the matter. Mr. Macintyre, who heard this falsehood, has sent a report in English for Indian Opinion.

RAINS

This time there has been abundant rainfall in Johannesburg as indeed in the whole of the Transvaal. For three days it has been raining continuously. Great damage has been caused at Standerton by the heavy rain. The tank in Boksburg is overflowing.

263. WHEN WOMEN ARE MANLY, WILL MEN BE EFFEMINATE?

This question is suggested by some cablegrams received from England last week. While English women do manly deeds, shall we, though men, behave like women? This is no matter for fun, but a grave one indeed. Let us see how.

The women of England have no franchise. They are fighting for it without minding people’s ridicule. A few days ago a procession of eight hundred women marched to the Houses of Parliament. Then the police stopped the crowd, some brave women tried to force their way into the House. These women do not belong to the working class. One of them is a sister of General French\(^1\), and over Sixty years old. Another, Miss Pankhurst, is the daughter of a well-known wealthy Englishman. Both are women of learning. There were many such women in this crowd of eight hundred. Of those who forced their way in, prominent ladies like General French’s sister were arrested and prosecuted. The Magistrate sentenced them to fines ranging from £1 to £2, or to imprisonment for varying periods. Such sentences have been passed on 49 women, and each one of them, instead of paying up the pittance of a fine, has courted imprisonment. The aged sister of General French is also among them. We believe these women have behaved in a manly way.

Now let us look at our own house. Lord Selborne and Sir Richard Solomon say that the Asiatic Ordinance should be [re-]enacted. Perhaps that will be done in a month or two. Will Indians go to gaol if that happens? We think men cry for fear of imprisonment when they are caught while using a false permit, but not while committing the offence. This we regard as unmanly. Now when people are wrongfully treated as criminals and asked to give their finger-prints, will they quietly give them or will they go to gaol? If they give their finger-prints and suffer dishonour, we shall regard them as doubly unmanly. Hence we ask: will Indian men be effeminate? Or will they emulate the manliness shown by English women and, wake up? Will they choose to find happiness in prison taking it to be a palace, or will they submit to oppression when the Transvaal Government starts it? In a few days our mettle will be tested.

264. LADYSMITH LICENCES

To return to the subject of the Ladysmith licences, we should examine how much of the blame lies with us. We have repeatedly written on this matter in our English columns. A question has been asked in the House of Commons on the subject at the instance of the [South Africa British Indian] Committee, but it would be better if we made a search nearer home.

It came out in the course of the judgement on the appeal that the account books had been written up newly or only occasionally and were got written by a man for an annual fee of £8. The Natal Witness has severely criticized these practices and approved the action of the Ladysmith Board. We must think over all this. It is essential to maintain regular accounts. It is unnecessary for every trader to employ a separate accountant; what is necessary is that the accounts must be written up regularly so that no one can say a word against them. It is also possible to have the accounts written by an English accountant or through a lawyer, where a competent Indian accountant is not available. We shall never succeed unless we give up some of our stingy ways.

265. CAPE IMMIGRATION ACT

Cables have appeared in the Press saying that the [Imperial] Government have assented to the new Cape Immigration Act and that it will soon come into force. The main difference is that, while formerly all Indians anywhere in South Africa were allowed to enter the Cape, now only the old Indian residents will be allowed in. There are other changes besides. We believe that the remissness of the Cape Indian leaders is partly responsible for these changes. It was quite likely that, even if there had been a strenuous struggle, the Indians would have lost the case, but then we would at least have done our duty. Again, for a struggle, the Cape offers advantages not found elsewhere. But the Cape Indians do not avail themselves of these advantages.

266. TRADING LAW IN NATAL

We have reliable information that the resolution of the Licensing Board of Ladysmith has alarmed many members of the Durban Chamber of Commerce. In a private meeting of members, many expressed the opinion that the Licensing Act should be repealed. In the end they appointed Messrs Handuz and Butcher to inquire into the matter. Here is an opportunity which we can use to great advantage, if only our leaders will meet prominent members of the Chamber, and particularly the two gentlemen above named, and come to some agreement. What should be done is indicated in an English article in the present issue. We shall publish a Gujarati translation of it in the next issue. Changes in the Act have been suggested from a disinterested point of view, and nobody is bound to agree with them. However, there is no doubt that this is the only course for us to adopt.

267. NATAL MUNICIPAL BILL

We should be grateful to Lord Elgin for moving in the matter of the Natal Municipal Bill. He says that the term “uncivilized” should not be defined so as to include sons of indentured labourers. Moreover he says that it is not legitimate to include Indians among “Coloured persons”, for all sorts of people are covered by the term. The Indian Government feels strongly in the matter and insists that the Indian community should be granted relief. Lord Elgin therefore hopes that the Natal Government will consider the point. In this controversy, it is probable that we shall win, if we do our duty. The Natal Municipal Council has replied that the Bill should remain unchanged.

1 Vide enclosure to “Letter to Private Secretary to Lord Elgin”, 1-12-1906, enclosure
The case of Mr. Coovadia’s son was heard by the Magistrate of Volksrust on Friday the 15th. Mr. Gandhi appeared for Mr. Coovadia. Giving Evidence, Constable MacGregor stated that boys under fourteen were allowed to enter without a permit, that permits were demanded of boys of fourteen and over, and that if they failed to produce them, they were arrested.

Mr. James Codie deposed that one could not say that Captain Fowle’s decisions were always acceptable to the present Registrar. On being shown Captain Fowle’s letter about Mr. Coovadia’s son, he stated that the letter could not be treated as a permit and Mr. Chamney would not consider it as binding. On being severely cross-examined, he admitted that Mr. Chamney should accept everything that had been done by Captain Fowle as Permit Officer. Mr. Amod Saleji Coovadia giving evidence about his nephew’s age said that he was a student at Johannesburg in 1903. Mr. Coovadia corroborated this testimony. Dr. Hick gave evidence about the boy’s age, and Mrs Gandhi produced Captain Fowle’s letters that were with him. The boy himself gave evidence to show that he had some knowledge of English. Here the hearing [of the evidence] was over. The Magistrate then heard the arguments on both sides and acquitted the boy.

After this the cases of four Indians were heard. They were alleged to have entered with other people’s permits. Their names were Kika Parsad, Naga Bhana, Ambu Vallabh Soni and Mirzakhan. Three of them admitted that they had bought permits from others in Bombay on payment of Rs. 90 for each. The fourth man pleaded not guilty. All the four were sentenced to a fine of £40 or four month’s imprisonment.

Mr. Coovadia’s case shows that persons with genuine case sometimes obtain justice, after spending a lot of money. This is so mainly because of the false cases that are taken to the courts. It can be seen from the four cases heard on the same day that those who sell permits only get people into trouble by practising deceit and fraud. Those buying such permits lose their livelihood, are needlessly ruined and cannot live in the Transvaal. By such deeds they do harm to the whole community and are responsible for the enactment of rigorous laws.

ASIATIC BLUE BOOK

Lord Elgin has published in England the complete history of the Asiatic Ordinance. Long cables about it have been received by all the three newspapers here. Among these, Lord Selborne’s statement, in particular, deserves to be noted by the Indian community. He severely criticizes Lord Elgin’s decision. He says that, in granting the Indian plea, Lord Elgin has broken [Lord Selborne’s] promise which he had made at Potchefstroom about not allowing fresh Indian immigrants till responsible government had been set up. This complaint of His Excellency is unjustified. For, the immigration of new Indians apart, even old residents have difficulty in re-entering the Colony and, if they succeed at all, it is after many months. He says further that many Indians continue to enter without permits. Even this statement should be regarded as improper, as the Indian community has repeatedly suggested to Lord Selborne the appointment of an inquiry commission to substantiate this. Lord Seiborne’s bitter remarks only show one thing: the Indian community has to put up a fight not merely against the Whites, but also against the Governor himself who, instead of remaining impartial, has turned against the Indians.

NEW MEMBERS OF LEGISLATURE

Lord Selborne has nominated 15 members to the legislature, of whom 11 are Progressives and four belong to the Hetvolk. They are: Mr. H. Crawford, Mr. L. Curtis, Col W. Daerymple, Mr. G. J. W. Du Toit, Mr. R. Feelpam, Mr. W. Grant, Mr. Max Langermann, Mr. W. A. Martin, Mr. T. A. R. Purchas, Mr. A. S. Raitt, Mr. A. G. Robertson, Mr. P. D. Roux, Mr. J. Roy, Mr. J. E. Van Der Merwe, A. Indian Opinion, 23-2-1907
‘I am responsible for this,’ or ‘This is my duty’: this is a moving and wonderful thought. A mysterious, resounding voice seems to say, ‘To thee, individually, O man, is given this task. Whether defeat or victory, both belong to thee. Thou art what no one else in the world is, for nowhere has nature created two similar objects. Thou hast a duty which no one else in the world can do, and if thou dost not do it that loss will stand debited to thee in the world’s balance-sheet.’

‘What is that duty I owe to myself?’ Someone may quote the verse:

Call not man God, for man is not God,
Yet man is not distinct from God’s glory.

And answer, ‘My duty is to rest secure in the belief that I am a ray of God’s light.’ Another may answer that the duty is to have sympathy and fraternal regard for others. A third may answer that it is to revere parents, care for one’s wife and children, and acquit oneself well with brother, sister or friend. Alongside of all these virtues, it is also a part of my duty to respect myself even as I respect others. As long as I do not understand myself, how shall I understand others? And how shall I respect one whom I do not know? Many hold the view that the obligation of proper conduct arises [only] in relation to others and that, in the absence of contact with others, one may do just as one pleases. He who holds this view does not know what he says. In this world none can, with impunity, act as he pleases.

Let us now see what our duty is to ourselves. Let us take, first, our private habits which are unknown to all but ourselves. We are responsible for them since they affect our character; but this is not all. We are responsible for them also because they affect others. Every person ought to control his own impulses, and keep his soul as well as body clean. ‘Tell me,’ says a great man, ‘what a man’s private habits are and I shall tell you what he is or will be’. We should therefore control all our appetites, so that we do not drink or eat to excess. Else we shall lose our strength and our good name. Worldly success never comes to him who does not abstain from sensual pleasures and does not thus save his body, mind, intellect and soul.

Arguing along these lines and keeping one’s instincts pure, one should further consider how to put them to use. One ought to have a fixed aim in life. If we do not discover our life’s purpose, and keep steadily to the course, we shall be swept along like a rudderless ship on the high seas; we shall falter on the [moral] path. Man’s highest duty in life is to serve mankind and take his share in bettering its condition. This is true worship—true prayer. He is a godly man who does God’s work. Hypocrites and cheats going about invoking God’s name are legion. Because a parrot utters the name of God, no one would call it godly. Contribution to an ideal order of human life is something everyone can aim at. With this aim in view the mother may legitimately rear her child, the lawyer may pursue his profession, the merchant may carry-on his business or trade and the working man may labour. A person with that fixed aim would never deviate from the path of morality, for if he did, he could not fulfil his aim of uplifting mankind.

Let us consider the matter in some detail. We ought constantly to examine whether our way of life tends to improve human life or to worsen it. Thus the merchant should ask himself whether, in transacting a business, he is cheating himself or another. The lawyer and the physician, acting according to this standard, will give more thought to their client or patient than to their fees. The mother in rearing her child would proceed very cautiously lest she should spoil the child out of misguided love or some selfish interest. The worker too would be guided by these considerations and do his duty. The result of all this would be that, if the worker fulfils his function in conformity with the moral ideal, he would be deemed better and higher than the wealthy merchant, physician or lawyer who lives without any discipline. The worker would be the true coin and those selfish men, even though more intelligent or wealthy, would be counterfeit. This further shows that any man, whatever his place in life, has the power to fulfil this aim. A man’s value depends upon his way of life, not his status. One’s way of life is not to be judged by one’s visible outward actions, but by one’s inner leanings. For instance, if of two men, one gives a dollar to a poor person to rid himself of his presence and the other half a dollar but with love and out of compassion for the man, obviously, the one who gave half a dollar is truly moral, while the other who gave a dollar, the sinner.

To sum up, he alone is religious, he alone is happy and he alone is wealthy, who is sincere in himself, bears no malice, exploits no one and always acts with a pure mind. Such men alone can serve mankind. How can a damp matchstick kindle a log of wood? How can a man who does not practise morality teach it to another? How can a sinking man save another from drowning? The man who lives a moral life never raises the question as to how to serve the world, for he is never in doubt. Mathew Arnold says of a friend:

I saw him sensitive in frame,
    I knew his spirits low,
And wished him health, success, and fame—
    I do not wish it now.
For these are all their own reward,
    And leave no good behind:
They try us—oftenest make us hard,
    Less modest, pure, and kind.

Time was when Arnold wished his friend health, success and fame. But he did not so wish now, because his friend’s happiness or misery did not depend on their presence or absence; he therefore only wished that his morality might ever endure. Emerson says, “Adversity is the prosperity of the great.” Both the money and the fame belonging to the base are a misery to them and to the world.¹

because of the war. After that date, those who do not hold a permit will be prosecuted. The notice means in effect that those who possess old registers and are at present in the Transvaal, or those who have other documents but not the yellow permit itself, should get one issued by March 31.

VREDEDORP ORDINANCE

A member of the South Africa British Indian Committee had tabled a question in the House of Commons about the Vrededorp Ordinance. Mr. Winston Churchill said in reply that correspondence was going on with Lord Selborne regarding the compensation to be paid to Indians. This shows that Mr. Ritch has been working for the Committee most energetically; and that its effect is being felt. On receipt of this cable, the British Indian Association held a meeting and resolved to have photographs taken of the Vrededorp Location and publish them in a supplement to Indian Opinion and to send a cable [to England]. In pursuance of this resolution, a long cable¹ has been sent to the Committee saying that Indians own £19,000 worth of property—land, goods, buildings and outstandings—in that Location and that as many as 75 Indians live in it.

ASIATIC EATING-HOUSES

A letter on this subject has been received from the Johannesburg Town Council saying that it will certainly not reduce the annual fee that had already been fixed. The Association has written again.

RAILWAY HARDSHIPS

Letters were addressed to the General Manager of Railways about Mr. Coovadia not being allowed to go to Pretoria by the morning train and about Mr. James, an Indian, who was insulted by the conductor during his journey from Germiston. The reply states that an inquiry is being made.

Bezuideh Hout (HV); Leydenburg—C.T. Rabbi (HV), Mary Coel and Lomer (HV); Middelburg—Clarco (HV), De Wet (HV); Pretoria—J. Rissick (HV), De Erasmus (HV); Standerton—General Botha (HV); Bethal—Grovler (HV); Volksrust—J. A. Jubers (HV); Watterburg—F. Bayers (HV), De Wall (HV); Bloembauff—I. Farrera (HV); Zoutpansburg—Manik (HV) and A. Mantus (HV). Thus of a total of 69 elected, 21 are Progressive, 35 Hetvolk, seven Nationalist, three Labour Party and three Independent.

The election campaign has ended with results that nobody had foreseen. The Dutch have won a victory leaving all the other parties well behind. The most that was hoped for was that the Dutch and the Nationalist Party together might win a majority. This means that in political affairs the Dutch have won back what they lost in the war. There is great excitement over Sir Richard Solomon’s defeat at Pretoria. Sir Richard will not now be able to assume the office of Prime Minister. But it is being said that some elected member will resign his seat and Sir Richard will thus be given an opportunity to enter parliament. If this comes about, it seems probable that Sir Richard will become Minister for Justice. General Botha is likely to be the Prime Minister. That is to say, he will be as good as President. This has greatly elated the hearts of the Dutch. For us there is not much in this either to rejoice or to regret. However, one may hope that the Dutch will do the Indian community some measure of justice. Some of them know the Indian community well. It does not seem likely that they will be wholly unjust. I am writing this on Tuesday, the 26th. However, it would be no matter for surprise if the cabinet were to be formed before this issue of Indian Opinion is out.

271. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

Johannesburg,

February 26, 1907

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I am sending in a separate packet the Hamidia Society’s job. The book is to be the same size as a printed copy of a report I am sending you in the same packet. In addition to the Gujarati rules and their English translation both of which have already been sent, you have to print the enclosed Gujarati matter. The Gujarati matter now enclosed is also to be rendered in English and printed. Will you please let me know the charge for printing 500 copies of the whole job? You need not count the cost of translation and let me know also approximately how many pages the whole thing will occupy. This will be in your hands on Thursday. If you can send me a telegram for 1s, you may let me know the charge by telegram, as I am likely to be there next week and I am anxious while I am here to get either the order or its withdrawal. I raised the question of cost myself, because it seemed to me that the job was rather bulky, and, if a bill was rendered to them, that might appear to them to be too big, [and] they might feel dissatisfied. I thought, therefore, that they should know the true position beforehand. I have got the Gujarati proof for the rules which I am sending in the same packet. You need not proceed with the printing because everything will depend upon the acceptance of our terms. You should keep the Gujarati matter at present with you, for, in the event of the acceptance of our terms, I shall be able to translate it there on my coming.

I am sending something more for Indian Opinion. You have sent me the proof of Messrs Avery’s order. I return it. I wonder if you noticed the glaring blunders in the English portion. I had to telegraph you.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

As regards the article by “The Colonist” which I had asked you to translate, we might add in the Gujarati translation that the ideas expressed in the article are ‘ours’.

It is not necessary to rule the paper for me. The moneys for the Madressa that were posted elsewhere are now properly credited. These and the ones recently received are included in the settlement. Lalbhai’s was received only yesterday. Kalyandas has not sent the customs note.

272. GOGA’S LICENCE

This licence appeal case should give us much food for thought. Mr. Goga deserves congratulations on his success. The Indian community, too, should be pleased. In this matter, The Natal Mercury has commented strongly in our favour. So too has The Times of Natal. The local Government also is helping us. But what is the good of all this? How much did Mr. Goga have to spend to get his right accepted? He had to engage three lawyers, all reputed to be at the top of the profession in Natal. He had a very anxious time before he got his licence. And then, it was not out of a sense of justice that the Town Council gave it to him; but under pressure. For, as soon as the case of Mr. Goga’s licence concluded, there came up the case of a poor Indian, Benne by name. In his case, too, the objection related to the books of account, but the licence was refused. The reason was that Benne could not engage three lawyers and take the matter further. And so he is to have no licence. It only means that those who are very rich can save their licences. But how long can the well-to-do hold out while the poor are ruined? The ate he rich Indians depends upon that of the poor Indian shopkeepers. The subject is being discussed throughout the Colony at present. The Chamber of Commerce intends to work on our side, so that if we put up a good fight, we shall probably succeed in getting the law changed.

With this object in view we, as independent observers, have made some suggestions in the English section. It is necessary for us to organize resistance throughout the Colony along those lines. The Congress is working hard. It should exert itself further, establish contacts with the Chambers and approach other Europeans and important members of parliament in order to bring about a solution.

1. Wylie, K.C., lawyer and legislator, was Goga’s leading counsel. He was “part author of the Dealers’ Licenses Act”, took notable part in suppressing the Zulu rebellion in Natal and argued during the case that “even an Indian was entitled to justice and fair play”.

2. Apart from the expenses on litigation, Russell, an ex-Mayor, extorted—so it transpired during the case —£50 from Goga for restoring his licence to him.
273. CAPE IMMIGRATION ACT

A new Immigration Act has been passed in the Cape, which, in our opinion, is much worse than the one in Natal. For the present, we reproduce here only its worst features. If an Indian not knowing English leaves the Cape without a permit, he cannot return even if he has been a resident. That means that an Indian who does not know English will have to take out a permit each time he goes out and pay a fee of £1. Such a permit will be issued for a limited period only. One cannot therefore have a permanent certificate. Moreover, according to the Gazette in which the Act is published, a person applying for such a certificate will have to produce his photograph and other tokens of identity. The clause requiring a permit is not relaxable because it is a part of the Act, and the Act has already received the assent of Lord Elgin. The matter of the photograph, however, falls within the discretion of the Governor. It is a local regulation, which can be amended from time to time. We would advise the leaders of the Cape to fight out the question of the photograph without losing time. It was a mistake that they allowed the Act to be passed in the first place. But we will regard it as a major crime if the clause requiring a photograph remains. If this practice is established in the Cape, it will have repercussions elsewhere, and offend religious sentiment. We hope the leaders of the Cape will lose no time in taking up this matter. We print elsewhere a translation of the main portions of the Act.

274. “THE MERCURY” AND INDIAN TRADERS

The comments appearing in The Natal Mercury of February 21 on Indian traders deserve to be known and understood. The paper upholds the Indian traders and condemns the Ladysmith Council. But it also shows the kind of rocks the ship of our trade has to steer clear of. The Mercury says that Maritzburg merchants should consider it their good fortune that they have at all been granted licences. Despite notices served on them, they had not kept proper account books. It was only when another notice was served that they did so. The Council was not bound to give notice twice, and without caring for the members of the Labour Party, the Council issued licences out of kindness. We should remember that such kindness is not likely to be repeated. The Whites have already risen in opposition to the issuing of licences in this manner. However, the danger has passed for this year. But if it happens repeatedly, the holder of the licence will lose it and the Congress will not be able to help such a negligent person. Every Indian trader should bear this in mind and devote full attention to the proper maintenance of books and to the cleanliness of his shop and his house.

275. SOUTH AFRICA BRITISH INDIAN COMMITTEE

his Committee has been doing excellent work as the two recent cablegrams show. One of them mentions the steps taken by the Committee in regard to the Ladysmith matter, as a result of which Lord Elgin has sent a strong communication. The notice in which the decision not to issue licences after a year was published has had to be publicly withdrawn. The second cablegram tells us that, though the Vrededorp Ordinance has been passed, the [Imperial] Government is again corresponding with Lord Selborne regarding the compensation to be paid to Indian residents. From this and from Mr. Ritch’s letters which we publish every week, it is clear that much benefit is likely to accrue to us from the appointment of the South Africa Committee.

276. VREDEDORP ORDINANCE

We publish in this issue some photographs bearing on the Ordnance. They will show that what Mr. Churchill has described as shanties are not shanties at all but magnificent buildings. It was necessary to bring out this supplement [of photographs] because with these we could convince Lord Elgin that all the information sent to him from here should not be accepted as true. Especially when the information relates to the Indians, it is hardly ever likely to be true, because the European officials here are found to share the anti-Indian prejudices that the other Whites have. Lord Selborne may have no knowledge of the condition of Indian houses in Vrededorp, and we cannot therefore blame him. It is the officers below who do all the harm.

In this issue we also publish a table which will show that the loss suffered by the Indian community in Vrededorp amounts to £19,000. The table will lend much support to the agitation being conducted in London that Indians should be compensated for this loss.

277. NEW IMMIGRATION ACT IN THE CAPE

The new Immigration Act was published in the Cape Government Gazette of February 15. The following is a translation of the clauses relating to Indians:

PROHIBITED IMMIGRANTS

A person coming under any of the clauses below will be considered a “prohibited immigrant” and will not be allowed to enter: (1) a person who is unable, owing to insufficient education, to write out and sign, in the characters of any European language, an application to the satisfaction of the [Immigration] Officer; (2) a person who has no means of livelihood; (3) a person convicted of he above clauses will not, however, apply to the following immigrants:

1. a person who has rendered satisfactory service in His Majesty’s volunteer forces;
2. the wife, and child under the age of sixteen years, of any person eligible to immigrate into the Colony;
3. persons born in South Africa and persons of European birth domiciled in South Africa;
4. any Asiatic lawfully resident in the Colony and returning to it in accordance with the terms and conditions of a permit taken and authorising him to be absent temporarily.

Examination on Landing

Every person landing at any port in the Colony shall be required to satisfy the Immigration Officer that he is not a prohibited immigrant and that he is exempted from the provisions of the Act. Under this regulation every one who lands in the Cape Colony, save a minor under sixteen and a wife accompanying her husband, will have to fill in a printed form. Those who do not fill in this form or those who, notwithstanding their having filled it in, are found to be [prohibited] immigrants, shall be liable to detention.

However, if a person wants to prove his right of landing, he will be given every reasonable facility to do so.

Temporary Permits

Temporary permits will be issued to those who wish to enter in order to tranship or to reside temporarily in it for a reasonably necessary purpose on payment of a fee of £1 and of a reasonable sum to be deposited as security. The deposit shall be refunded to the holder of the permit if he returns within the period for which the permit is issued. However, if a permit-holder overstays, he will forfeit his deposit and he may be arrested and prosecuted. Any permit-holder who gives a false or misleading address shall be liable to forfeit his permit and to prosecution. The Chief Immigration Officer will have the power to issue a permit for three weeks and the Minister concerned the power to issue one for three months.

Photographic Permits

Asiatics lawfully resident in the Colony can take out these permits. The period for which they are available and the port at which the holder shall disembark on return to the Colony will be stated in these permits. A fee of £1 will be charged for a permit; every permit shall contain a photograph of the holder and such particulars and marks as may be necessary for purposes of identification.

278. HIS MAJESTY AMIR HABIBULLAH AT ALIGARH COLLEGE

His Majesty the Amir visited Aligarh College on January 16, and he was welcomed with great honours. We give here a translation from The Times of India of his address to the students of that College on the occasion.

SHIYA AND SUNNI

You are young. Please listen to me. Some people may have told you that I am a fanatic Sunni. But does it mean that because I am a Sunni I am a fanatic? I shall ask you a question: Will those of you who are Shiyas show greater regard to Hindus than to Sunnis? Never. Will you then believe that I, who am a Sunni, will prefer Hindus to Shiyas? Never. You must have read in the newspapers that, on Bakr-Id, I prevented the killing of cows in Delhi lest it should hurt the feelings of Hindus. If such is my regard for the Hindus, do you believe that I shall have less for the Shiyas? I beg of you to give up from today the notion that I am a fanatic Sunni. In Afghanistan my subjects include sunnis, Shiyas, Hindus and Jews. I allow them all full religious freedom. Do you call this fanaticism? But one thing I must say: I cannot allow Shiyas to show disrespect to the three Khalifas. If people think it fanatical of me to prevent Shiyas from showing such disrespect, well, I am a fanatic.

EDUCATION

Many people have spoken against the Aligarh College. I have therefore come to find out the truth for myself. I am thankful to the Government of India for letting Muslims assemble in such numbers to meet me and for giving me this opportunity to address you. When I questioned the students of Aligarh College today, I was glad to find them well informed on religious matters. I shall therefore be able to silence those who have been speaking against the College.

WESTERN EDUCATION

I would never say that you should not receive western education. On the contrary, I would advise you—and I would say this twice over—to exert yourselves to the utmost to receive that education. But before you do that you must have education in Islam. I have started the Habibia College in Afghanistan. There I have allowed western education to be imparted in order that the students may grow up to be whole Muslims. I found the students whom I examined today to be very well educated in religion.

DONATION TO COLLEGE

I am very sorry that, in view of the heavy expenditure I have to incur on education in my own country, I cannot help the Aligarh College as much as I should like to. For the present, I shall give the College Rs. 500 every month. It is my advice that those whom I examined today should be sent abroad for extensive travel. They will prove successful in the future. In addition to the Rs. 500 a month, I now donate Rs. 20,000 to the College.

WELCOME AT GWALIOR

After being honoured at Aligarh College His Majesty the Amir went to Gwalior where he was received with much pomp and ceremony. He was Maharaja Scindia’s guest and stayed in his palace.

282. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[Before March 9, 1907]¹

[MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,]

I have your two letters. I entirely agree with you. I am glad you have got thirteen pages this time. I am writing to Mr. West to persuade him. I anticipated your objection about the splitting up of letters in Gujarati words. I noticed the defect at Volksrust, where I was yesterday, and then and there wrote to Anandlal.² I sent some Gujarati matter and a lot of English from Volksrust. I hope you received both.

I enclose herewith an order for 1,000 handbills to be printed in Dutch and English. The paper may be any size not less than octavo. The English and Dutch should be as written on the enclosed. You should send 1,000 copies of this to Mr. A. E. M. Gachalia, Box 97, Volksrust. Please, also, put him down as a subscriber for Volksrust. You may already have the name for Pretoria also. I have agreed to charge £1 for 1,000 handbills. Of course, the railage will be extra. When the order is ready, you may send him your bill for £1 and subscription. I He has promised to send you an advertisement also within a week or so. If he does not send it, you may remind me.

I fear you will have to make some alterations in the Hamidia rules. Mr. fancy properly drew my attention to the fact that the English rules were more numerous than the Gujarati. You will, therefore, see the changes made by me. I have struck off from 49 to 53 inclusive; 48 has been replaced by another to read the same as the Gujarati, so, also has No. 22. You will see it more fully in the body of the rules which I am sending. Mr. Fancy has made some necessary corrections in the Gujarati matter also, which, too, you should note. You need not then send any further proof, but simply proceed with the printing. I have not gone through the English word for word, but I take it that there are no mistakes of spelling, etc. The [word,] Press, in Gujarati is printed in inverted type. This, of course, should be corrected. With reference to the closet arrangement for Harilal

¹ It is clear from the reference, towards the end of the letter, to Coovadia’s advertisement, which appeared regularly in Indian Opinion till March 2, 1907 but was then discontinued, that this letter was written before March 9, 1907.
² This letter is not available.
and Dhoribhai, I certainly think that we should dig the trench if we have been doing so for the barrack people. I do not think that we should ask the employees to dig their trenches, unless they would do so of their own accord. I felt exactly the same thing as you have. I then argued it out for myself and gave the decision. At the same time if the barrack people have been digging their own trenches, it simply means that you have to get the structure erected and leave Harilal and Dhoribhai to dig the trench. The thing is that, somehow or other, it has got to be done:

I am writing to Mr. Lachiram. I have not heard from Tongaat regarding Gokaldas. I note what you say about the desk for Harilal. The enclosed household account is correct. .. I strike A. Coovadia’s name off the list of subscribers and his advertisement, as he is broken. I return the letter.

M. K. Desai’s letter with regard to Enavil’s business is not to be printed. As a matter of fact, a copy of the same letter was shown by him to me and I told him that the letter could not go in.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

283. “ULTRA VIRES”

In the Natal Government Gazette for the 19th February last is published a notice which requires appellants under the Dealers’ Licenses Act to deposit a sum of £12.10.0 to cover the travelling expenses of the members of the Board of Council sitting as a Court of Appeal. As it is the unfortunate Indians who have to appeal as a rule, or rather go through the farce of an appeal, this fresh imposition makes their lot harder still and makes attainment of justice prohibitive. We are perilously near to being asked next time to pay the travelling expenses of judges. The rule, however, it seems to us, is clearly ultra vires. The section which authorizes the Government to frame regulations empowers them to regulate procedure and to create fresh burdens of an arbitrary nature. We trust the Natal Indian Congress will promptly protest against this rule and in the meanwhile we can safely say that appellants need not deposit the sum required under the notice in question. Indeed, if we are correctly informed in the recent appeals no such deposits were required or made.

Indian Opinion, 9-3-1907

284. THOSE FINGER-IMPRESSIONS

Our Johannesburg correspondent draws attention to a very serious state of affairs, if true. It appears that, in spite of the disallowance or suspension of the Asiatic Law Amendment Ordinance, the Asiatic Department has been proceeding as if the Ordinance had been allowed. It appears that the authorities have been inspecting permits and registration certificates held by British Indians, and at the same time, taking their ten finger-prints. There appears to be no justification for this high-handed action. We have nothing to say against the examination of permits and registration certificates—indeed, we consider it to be a proper thing, and the only remedy for weeding out of the Colony those British Indians or Asiatics who may have entered it without permits. But examination is one thing, and, under its cover, to call upon British Indians to give their finger-impressions distinctly another. The British Indians have consented to give their thumb-prints as a matter of grace and conciliation. The authorities should be satisfied therewith. Mr. Henry has shown that thumb-prints are, when properly taken, an invaluable test of identification. It is, therefore, a gratuitous insult to offer to the community to take their finger-impressions. We congratulate the British Indian Association on having moved so promptly in the matter. Our correspondent informs us also that the British Indian Association has circularized all the sub-committees warning them against giving finger-impressions, and informing them that there is absolutely no law justifying such a degrading procedure.¹

285. LETTER TO “THE TRANSVAAL LEADER”

[JOHANNESBURG,
March 9, 1907]

[TO
THE EDITOR
THE TRANSVAAL LEADER
JOHANNESBURG
SIR,]

Your leading article entitled “Who Rules This Colony?” appearing in today’s issue contains a strange series of illogical inferences drawn from an analysis of the Blue book recently published on the British Indian question in the Transvaal. One of these specially needs refutation.

You state that those British Indians who are here should not be indiscriminately admitted to those political rights and privileges they do not enjoy in their own country. My Association has several times pointed out in your columns that the British Indian community of the Transvaal has no intention whatever of claiming, and in fact does not claim, any political rights and privileges at all in this Colony. British Indians simply demand the most elementary of civil rights, which is an entirely different matter.

I trust that you will take an early opportunity of correcting the mis-statement of facts above referred to.

[I am, etc.,
ABDUL GANI
CHAIRMAN,
BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION]

Indian Opinion, 16-3-1907

¹ For the substance of the circular, however, Vide “Telegram to Registrar of Asiatics”, 5-3-1907.
We have often had to write about the oppression we suffer at the hands of Englishmen. We are very glad now to have an occasion for speaking well of them while thinking of the coming restoration of Dutch rule in the Transvaal. The defeat of the Dutch in the war proved English tenacity. The British, even when thrown flat on the ground, do not accept defeat, call it a virtue or a failing. Once the war started, they alone knew how to win it.

The British saw, during the war, that the Dutch were not a people to be easily beaten; they too would not accept defeat. In defeat, the Dutch had truly won. Had they not been just a handful, they could never have been defeated. That was the impression they made on the British. Moreover, the British were shrewd enough to see that, in declaring war on the Dutch, they were themselves mainly at fault.

The party which had declared and fought the war was defeated at the last election. The Liberals won and they decided to hand over the reins of Government to the Dutch. As a result, General Botha and his colleagues have formed the Transvaal Ministry. Though they are now British subjects in the Transvaal, they are quite free. They will now be able to take into the public services as many Dutchmen as they wish. The air is thick with talk of helping the poor among the Dutch. And the Dutch language has today gained in prestige by fifty per cent. The Dutch are now to be seen in every town and village as before. They are flushed with enthusiasm and are again in high spirits.

No matter what the Dutch have done to us, we ought to congratulate them, considering that they deserve what they have gained. This [attitude] is an outstanding illustration of English liberality. It is a matter of joy for us that we are associated with such a people.

We have a lesson to learn from this. Why do the Dutch and the British both hate us? We believe the root cause is not the colour of our skin, but our general cowardice, our unmanliness and our pusillanimity. They will begin to respect us the moment we impress upon them that we can stand up to them. There is no need actually to fight, but courage is necessary. If a man kicks us, we take it lying down. He therefore thinks that we deserve nothing better. This is the cowardice in us. There is a kind of courage in receiving a blow without returning it; but we are not speaking of that courage here. We receive kicks passively out of fear.

Making a false show of youthfulness, we waste our manhood in sensual pleasures and abuse our womenfolk. Without understanding the true significance of marriage, we remain blindly absorbed in carnal enjoyment. This is an example of our unmanliness.

In the Cape, we give our photographs [for proving our identity] In Rustenburg and Boksburg, out of fear, we give our finger-prints. Instead of entering the Transvaal openly and boldly, some of us do so wrongfully and surreptitiously. This shows our pusillanimity.

We are well aware that these comments do not apply to all of us. But the whole community has to suffer for such conduct on the part of a few. That is the state we are in, and, we believe, we shall get out of it soon if, instead of finding fault with the British, we realize our own faults. For the British who have today handed over the reins of Government to the Dutch will likewise give us our due.

Indian Opinion, 9-3-1907

287. WARNING TO TRANSVAAL INDIANS

It is shameful of the Rustenburg Indians to have surrendered their freedom by giving their full hand-prints. As the Gujarati proverb says, so long as the axe does not have a wooden handle to it, it cannot cut wood. Rustenburg has served as the handle by starting the giving of finger-prints. If, as a result, the Indian community comes to harm, the blame will be with the Rustenburg Indians. We are glad to find that prompt action has been taken by the British Indian Association. It is well that it has lodged a protest with the Government whose action appears to be totally illegal. It is also a good thing that the Association has addressed letters to the Indian committees in all the towns.

This instance shows that the Transvaal Indians have to act with great caution. Whatever steps are taken now should be taken in concert and in consultation with the Association. Nothing need be done out of fear of the officials. Why, and of whom, should we be afraid? When brave women are fighting for their rights in England, it should not be too much for the Transvaal Indians to fight with common courage.

288. HOME RULE MOVEMENT IN EGYPT

Messages in the papers indicate that an agitation for Home Rule is going on in Egypt. Large meetings are being held and resolutions passed by the Egyptians in order to gain political power by driving out Lord Cromer\(^1\). Writing strongly on the subject, the London Times says that the movement should be suppressed. We do not believe it likely that it can be stopped thus. There are some brave persons among the Egyptians; and education is widespread. If the movement continues long enough, we believe that the British will grant self-government to the Egyptians. In keeping with British traditions it has first to be shown that people who make demands are prepared to die for them. It is not enough to go on making verbal demands. The British follow this rule in their own country and that is how they endure.

289. LICENCE CASE

The Indian licence case of Port Shepstone which has been decided by the Supreme Court appears to be a discomfiture for us. Yet, we need not get into a panic on that account. We can use the case to convince the [Imperial] Government that, under the licensing act, the Indian community can never get justice. Success in Mr. Goga’s case\(^2\) was just fortuitous. The danger will remain so long as courts of law do not deal out pure justice. Mr. Ramsay Collins has shown that the Town Councils are not capable of doing justice. We are not enamoured of the Supreme Court, but we want the right to appeal to that Court only because we know that we can get justice there. If the Europeans oppose this, it only means that they fear justice. In this matter the real campaign is to be waged through the Imperial Government. We are convinced of the need to work for a solution at both levels bearing in mind that we may not succeed. We are of the opinion that, as long as the Imperial Government does not exercise control or exert pressure over the local governments, we shall not succeed, nor can we win their favour. We should bear this in mind and work at both ends.

\(^1\) First Earl of Cromer, (1841-1917); British Comptroller-General in Egypt, 1883-1907

290. JAMES GODFREY

Mr. James Godfrey who went to England for his education has now returned a barrister-at-law. We congratulate him and extend to him a cordial welcome. It is a day of joy for his parents and a proud day for the Indian community.

There will be very few parents in South Africa who have had the courage to take the risks which the Godfreys have taken for their children. They have used all their property to give their sons and daughters a very good education. If other Indian parents were to follow this example in large numbers, the bonds that bind the Indian community would soon break. All of us admit the pressing need for education, but we are slow in acting on the belief.

Though Mr. James Godfrey has finished his academic education, he will start his [real] education only now. Education is just a means. If it is not accompanied by truthfulness, firmness, patience and other virtues, it remains sterile, and sometimes does harm instead of good. The object of education is not to be able to earn money, but to improve oneself and to serve the country. If this object is not realized, it must be taken that the money spent on education has been wasted. We hope Mr. James Godfrey will put his education to good use and pass on the benefit of his learning to the Indian community.

Indian Opinion, 9-3-1907
The authorities seem to have begun the examination of permits in every town. Not only were the permits of Rustenburg Indians examined, but the police made them give their finger-prints also. After the finger-prints had been taken, the Rustenburg Indians referred the matter to the Association and were told that none of them should have given finger-prints. The giving of finger-prints has done no good. It is likely that the authorities will cite this instance of some Indians who gave finger-prints and argue that the Indian community had no objection to giving finger-prints. The British Indian Association has written letters to every town saying that the permits and the registers may both be produced for inspection on demand; that the authorities may be assisted in their work of scrutiny and all information required by them supplied; that thumb-impressions may be given if required, but that any further demand may be unequivocally refused and the Association informed that the authorities demand finger-prints. All Indians must bear these four points in mind.

A telegram has been sent to the Government saying that the people regard it an outrage that finger-prints should have been taken at Rustenburg. The question has been asked on whose orders the prints were taken and whether or not the practice would be discontinued. The Transvaal Indians should take care that they do not get caught in the net that the authorities spread for them.

In reply to the Association’s telegram, the authorities have inquired whether the objection is only to giving the impressions of all the fingers or if it extends to the thumb-impression also. In its reply the Association has stated that, in accordance with the understanding with Lord Milner, it has no objection to Indians giving the thumb-impression for obtaining permits. The Association intends to assist the Government in the scrutiny of permits, but cannot agree about the giving of the ten fingerprints as this needlessly humiliates the Indian community.

TRANVAAL PERMITS

Last week I wrote about the notice regarding persons staying in the Transvaal without permits. In answer to an enquiry by the British Indian Association, Mr. Chamney has replied that those persons in the Transvaal who hold the old Dutch certificates will have permits issued to them up to March 31, and that all those who continue to live in the Transvaal after that date without permits will be prosecuted. From this it is not to be inferred that a permit will necessarily be issued to anyone who holds the Dutch certificate. These persons will have to produce evidence to the effect that the Dutch certificate belongs to the holder, and the holder was in the Transvaal immediately before the outbreak of the war and left the Colony because of it.

Every Indian resident in the Transvaal who possesses such evidence should take out a permit as soon as practicable. But it should be remembered that, unless the applicant is granted a permit, he is not to surrender his register.

TRANVAAL RULERS

General Botha has now completed the formation of his Ministry. He has himself become Prime Minister; General Smuts has become the Colonial Secretary. Mr. De Villiers heads the Departments of Justice and of Mines. Mr. Hull is in charge of the Treasury, Mr. Rissick is the Minister for African Affairs and Mr. E. P. Solomon, the Head of the Public [Works?] Department. Sir Richard Solomon has declined to accept any office. Among the ministers, the Indian community will have to do mostly with Mr. De Villiers and Mr. Smuts. It now remains to be seen what course things will take.

RULES FOR ASIATIC BAZAARS

The current number of the Government Gazette carries regulations governing Locations. It appears that the idea of Locations has not yet been given up. The object in publishing these regulations seems to be to keep alive a separate Asiatic Department anyhow.

Surati mosque, left here on Sunday on his way home. Mr. Amod Saleji took a notable part in the fight against the Ordinance. Dinners were given in his honour by Messrs Mamad Mamdu, M.P. Fancy, Bhanabhai, Essop Mian, Musa Dauji Karim, Gulam Mahomed Kadodia and others. Mr. Fancy presented him with a gold locket and other articles. He was also honoured and garlanded at the Surati mosque on Friday. Mr. Amod Saleji came to South Africa 22 years ago and is now forty-two years old. He is visiting India after ten years. Mr. Saleji is expected to leave Durban Port on March 20. It will take him nearly ten days to reach Durban from Johannesburg as on his way he will stop at many places which he has been invited to visit.

FOR INFORMATION OF BARBERTON INDIANS

The British Indian Association has received a communication from the Government about the Barberton Location. It says that the Location will be made over to the municipality and that a 21-year lease can be taken out from that body.

INCREASE IN SOUTH AFRICA COMMITTEE’S EXPENDITURE

Last Sunday a meeting of the British Indian Association and the Anti-Indian-Law Fund Committee took place at the residence of Haji Ojer Ally. Many members were present. The Committee unanimously resolved to increase to £15 the nominal monthly honorarium that is being paid to Mr. Ritch and to remit an additional sum of £100 for the purpose. It is a fact that there has thus been an addition of £100 to the sum of £300 originally fixed for remission to the Committee. It will be difficult to secure a full-time worker as capable even on a salary of £30. If Mr. Ritch had been well to do, he would not have cared to accept even this honorarium. Every week we hear of his activities.

GENERAL BOTHA

General Botha has been invited by Lord Elgin to attend the Colonial Conference. It is said that, if General Botha accepts the invitation, the British will welcome him heartily.

292. THE MASS MEETING

The Natal Indians met on Monday\(^1\) night in large numbers to consider the question of traders’ licences and the municipal franchise. The meeting seems to have been the largest on record. The Advertiser calls it “a record gathering, both in regard to the size of the audience and its enthusiasm”. Delegates attended from all parts of the Colony and perfect unanimity prevailed. We congratulate the indefatigable Secretaries of the Congress on the admirable manner in which they organized the meeting.

The studiously moderate address of the chairman of the meeting and the array of facts presented by him should disarm all opposition. Nothing could be fairer than the compromise offered by him on the intricate trading question. Indeed Mr. Dawad Mahomed showed that he claimed for the Indian traders nothing more than what the reasonably-minded colonists have admitted they are entitled to at the very least. The first resolution\(^2\) adopted by the meeting put in a concrete form the grievance of the community regarding the Licenses Act. There can be no doubt that nothing less than an amendment of the present Act will satisfactorily meet the difficulty.

The second resolution\(^3\) was the outcome of the recent licensing cases. The contention of the Indian community is that, if with the possession of the municipal franchise by the Indian community, Indians have laboured under gross injustice at the hands of the municipal bodies, how much worse must the position become if the community is deprived of the municipal franchise. The meeting, therefore, emphasized the necessity for protecting British Indian rate-payers of Natal against the attempt to deprive them of the right to elect municipal councillors.

\(^1\) March 11
\(^2\) The first resolution protested against the manner of enforcement of the Dealers’ Licenses Act and requested the intervention of the local and Imperial Governments; it further demanded that the Act should be “so changed as to safeguard vested rights”.
\(^3\) The second resolution requested the Imperial Government to “safeguard the right of British Indian rate-payers to vote at the municipal elections”. The Natal Municipal Bill proposed the disfranchisement of British Indians at municipal elections.
The two resolutions form a complete answer to the Colonial Patriotic Union and show how necessary it is for the heads of the two communities to meet together and evolve a workable compromise. Let us hope that Mr. Poynton, who we believe is a moderate man, will consider our proposal and win the esteem of the colonists by paving the way to a real settlement of the thorny question of Indian immigration and Indian competition.

293. LORD SELBORNE’S DESPATCH

Lord Selborne’s despatch to Lord Elgin on the anti-Asiatic Ordinance of the Transvaal has now been received. We regret to have to say that, in spite of His Excellency’s usual fairness, he has throughout the despatch shown himself as a partisan rather than an unprejudiced administrator and representative of the Sovereign.
